26. This is good for the present distress. The word signifies "necessity, distress, tribulation, and calamity," as it does in Luke xxi. 23; 2 Cor. vi. 4; and xii. 10. In such times, when the people of God had no certain dwelling place, when they were lying at the mercy of their enemies without any protection from the state—the state itself often among the persecutors—he who had a family to care for would find himself in very embarrassed circumstances, as it would be much more easy to provide for his personal safety than to have the care of a wife and children. On this account it was much better for unmarried persons to continue for the present in their celibacy.

27. Art thou bound unto a wife? I.e., married; for the marriage contract was considered in the light of a bond. Seek not to be loosed. Neither regret your circumstances, notwithstanding the present distress, nor seek on this account for a dissolution of the marriage contract. But if you are under no matrimonial engagements, do not for the present enter into any.

28. But and if thou marry. As there is no law against this, even in the present distress, you have not sinned, because there is no law against this; and it is only on account of prudential reasons that I give this advice. And if a virgin marry. Both the man and the woman have equal privileges in this case; either of them may marry without sin. It is probable, as there were many sects and parties in Corinth, that there were among them those who forbade to marry, 1 Tim. iv. 3. Trouble in the flesh. From the simple circumstance of the incumbrance of a family while under persecution, because of the difficulty of providing for its comfort and safety while flying before the face of persecution. But I spare you. The evil is coming, but I will not press upon you the observance of a prudential caution which you might deem too heavy a cross.

29. The time is short. These persecutions and distresses are at the door, and life itself will soon be run out. Even then Nero was plotting those grievous persecutions with which he not only afflicted but devastated the Church of Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. General rules to all Christians to carry themselves with a holy indifference towards the world. Those that had wives must be as though they had none. They know not how soon they shall have none. Those that have children should be as though they had none. Those that are their comfort now may prove their greatest cross. Those that weep must be as though they wept not. Even in sorrow the heart may be joyful, and the end of our grief may be gladness. Those that rejoice should be as though they rejoiced not. Here is not their rest, nor are these things their portion. Those that buy must be as though they possessed not. Buying and possessing should not too much engage our minds. They hinder many people altogether from minding the better part. Those that use this world as not abusing it, v. 31. The world may be used, but must not be abused. It is abused when, instead of being oil to the wheels of our obedience, it is made fuel to lust. We must keep the world out of our hearts, that we may not abuse it when we have it in our hands.

V. Two reasons, v. 29. We have but little time to continue in this world. Therefore do not set your hearts on worldly enjoyments. Do not be overwhelmed with worldly cares and troubles (v. 31). It is not so much a world as the appearance of one. All is show with nothing solid in it; and it is transient show too, and will quickly be gone.

VI. The embarrassment of worldly cares, v. 32. A wise concern about worldly interests is a duty; but to be careful, full of care, is a sin.

II. A state of celibacy was preferable. It is worded with modesty, but delivered with apostolical authority. Ministers do not lose their authority by prudent condescensions. The married state would bring more care and cumber along with it (v. 33, 34), and would therefore make persecution more terrible.

God must be attended upon without distraction, v. 35. But how is this possible when the mind is swallowed up of the cares of this life? This is the general maxim by which the apostle would have Christians govern themselves. In the application of it Christian prudence must direct. The unmarried man and woman mind the things of the Lord, that they may please the Lord, and be holy both in body and spirit, v. 32, 34. Not but the married person may be holy both in body and spirit too. It is the constant care of those in that relation to please each other. At that season, therefore, the apostle advises that those who were single should abstain from marriage. And the very same rule must determine persons for marriage, if in the unmarried state persons are likely to be more distracted in the service of God than if they were married. That condition of life should be chosen by the Christian in which it is most likely he will have the best helps, and the fewest hindrances, in the service of God.

Advice about the disposal of children in marriage. It was in that age reckoned a disgrace for a woman to remain unmarried past a certain number of years. "Now," says the apostle, "if any man thinks he behaves unhandsomely towards his daughter, he may use his pleasure. It is no sin in him to dispose of her to a suitable mate. But if a man has deter-

13:11). He uses the Greek expression which the Lord used in Luke 21:8; Mark 13:33. short—lit., "contracted." it remaineth—The oldest MSS. read, "The time (season) is shortened as to what remains, in order that both they . . ."; i.e., the effect which the shortening of the time ought to have is, "that for the remaining time (henceforth), both they . . . ." The clause, "as to what remains," though in construction belonging to the previous clause, in sense belongs to the following. However, CYPRIAN and Vulgate support English Version. as though they had none—We ought to consider nothing as our own in real or permanent possession. 30. they that weep . . . wept not—(Cf. II Cor. 6:10). they that buy . . . possessed not—(Cf. Isa. 24:1, 2). Christ specifies as the condemning sin of the men of Sodom not merely their open profligacy, but that "they bought, they sold," etc., as men whose all was in this world (Luke 17:28). "Possessed" in the Greek implies a holding fast of a possession; this the Christian will not do, for his "enduring substance" is elsewhere (Heb. 10:34). 31. not abusing it—not abusing it by an overmuch using of it. The meaning of "abusing" here is, not so much perverting, as using it to the full [BENGEL]. We are to use it, not to take our fill of its pursuits as our chief aim (cf. Luke 10:40-42). As the planets while turning on their own axis, yet revolve round the sun; so while we do our part in our own worldly sphere, God is to be the center of all our desires. fashion—the present fleeting form. Cf. Psalm 39:6, "vain show"; Psalm 73:20, "a dream"; James 4:14, "a vapor." passeth away—not merely shall pass away, but is now actually passing away. The image is drawn from a shifting scene in a play represented on the stage (I John 2:17). Paul inculcates not so much the outward denial of earthly things, as the inward spirit whereby the married and the rich, as well as the unmarried and the poor, would be ready to sacrifice all for Christ's sake. 32. without carefulness—I would have you to be not merely "without trouble," but "without distracting cares" (so the Greek). careth—if he uses aright the advantages of his condition.

34. difference also—Not merely the unmarried and the married man differ in their respective duties, but also the wife and the virgin. Indeed a woman undergoes a greater change of condition than a man in contracting marriage.

35. for your own profit—not to display my apostolic authority. not . . . cast a snare upon you—image from throwing a noose over an animal in hunting. Not that by hard injunctions I may entangle you with the fear of committing sin where there is no sin. comely—befitting under present circumstances. attend upon—lit., "assiduously wait on"; sitting down to the duty. Cf. Luke 10:39, Mary; Luke 2: 37, "Anna . . . a widow, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day" (I Tim. 5:5). distraction—the same Greek as "cumbered" (Luke 10:40, Martha).

behaveth . . . uncomely—is not treating his daughter well in leaving her unmarried beyond the flower of her age, and thus debarring her from the lawful gratification of her natural feeling as a marriageable woman. need so require—if the exigencies of the case require it; viz., regard to the feelings and welfare of his daughter. Opposed to "having no ne-

ADAM CLARKE

They that have wives. Let none begin to think of any comfortable settlement for his family; let him sit loose to all earthly concerns, and stand ready prepared to escape for his life or meet death, as the providence of God may permit. The husband will be dragged from the side of his wife to appear before the magistrates and be required to either abjure Christ or die.

30. They that weep. There will shortly be such a complete system of distress and confusion that private sorrows and private joys will be absorbed in the weightier and more oppressive public evils. Yet let every man still continue in his calling; let him buy and sell and traffic as usual, though in a short time, either by the coming persecution or by the levelling hand of death, he that had earthly property will be brought into the same circumstances with him who had none.

31. And they that use this world. Let them who have earthly property or employments discharge conscientiously their duties, from a conviction of the instability of earthly things. Make a right use of everything, and pervert nothing from its use. To use a thing is to employ it properly in order to accomplish the end to which it refers. To abuse a thing signifies to pervert it from that use. Pass through things temporal so as not to lose those which are eternal. For the fashion of this world. The present state or constitution of things; the frame of the world, that is, the world itself. But often the term world is taken to signify the Jewish state and polity; the destruction of this was then at hand, and this the Holy Spirit might then signify to the apostle.

32. Without carefulness. Though all these things will shortly come to pass, yet do not be anxious about them. He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord. He has nothing to do with a family, and therefore can give his whole time to the service of his Maker, having Him alone to please.

33. But he that is married. He has a family to provide for, and his wife to please, as well as to fulfill his duty to God and attend to the concerns of his own soul. The single man has nothing to attend to but what concerns his own salvation; the married man has all this to attend to, and besides to provide for his wife and family, and take care of their eternal interests also.

34. There is a difference also between a wife and a virgin. That is: There is this difference between a married and an unmarried woman. The unmarried . . . careth (only) for the things of the Lord, having no domestic duties to perform. That she may be holy—separated to divine employments, both in body and in spirit. Whereas she that is married careth (also) for the things of the world, how she may please her husband, having many domestic duties to fulfill, her husband being obliged to leave to her the care of the family and all other domestic concerns.

35. This I speak for your own profit. The advices belong to yourselves alone, because of the peculiar circumstances in which you are placed. Nothing spoken here was ever designed to be of general application; it concerned the church at Corinth alone, or churches in similar circumstances. Not that I may cast a snare upon you. Here is a manifest allusion to the retiarius among the Romans, who carried a small casting net, which he endeavored to throw over the head of his adversary and thus entangle him; or to a similar custom among the Persians, who made use of a noose called the camand, which they employed in the same way. The apostle therefore intimates that what he says was not intended absolutely to bind them, but to show them the propriety of following an advice which in the present case would be helpful to them in their religious connections, that they might attend upon the Lord without distraction, which they could not do in times of persecution, when, in addition to their own personal safety, they had a wife and children to care for.

36. Uncomely towards his virgin. Different meanings have been assigned to this verse. I shall mention three of the principal. (1) "In those early times, both among the Hebrews and Christians, the daughters were wholly in the power of the father, so that he might give or not give them in marriage as he chose; and might mined in himself to keep her a virgin with her consent, he does well."

ALBERT BARNES:

37. "Nevertheless." But. The apostle in this verse states some instances where it would not be proper to give a daughter in marriage. The verse is a kind of summing up of all that he had said on the subject.

"That standeth steadfast in his heart." Most commentators have understood this of the father of the virgin, and suppose that it refers to his purpose of keeping her from the marriage connection. The phrase to stand steadfast is opposed to a disposition that is vacillating, unsettled, and denotes a man who has command of himself, who adheres to his purpose, a man who has hitherto adhered to his purpose, and to whose happiness and reputation it is important that he should be known as one who is not vacillating or easily moved.

"Having no necessity." Where there is nothing in her disposition or inclination that would make marriage necessary, or when there is no engagement or obligation that would be violated if she did not marry. "But hath power over his own will." Hath power to do as he pleases; is not bound in the case by another. When there is no engagement, or contract, made in childhood, or promise made in early life that would bind him. Often daughters were espoused or promised when they were very young, and in such a case a man would be bound to adhere to his engagement; and much as he might desire the reverse, and her celibacy, yet he would not have power over his own will or be at liberty to withhold her. "And hath so decreed in his heart." Has so judged, determined, resolved. "That he will keep his virgin." His daughter in an unmarried state. He has power and authority to do it, and if he does it he will not sin. "Doeth well." In either of these cases, he does well. If he has a daughter and chooses to retain her in an unmarried state, he does well or right.

Advice to widows. Death only can annul the bond. Second marriages are not unlawful. She has such a liberty only with a limitation that she marry in the Lord, v. 40. It will be much more for the peace and quiet of such, and give them less hindrance in the service of God, to continue unmarried.

cessity" (vs. 37). let them marry—the daughter and her suitor. 37. steadfast—not to be turned from his purpose by the obloquy of the world. having no necessity—arising from the natural inclinations of the daughter. power over his . . . will—when, owing to his daughter's will not opposing his will, he has power to carry into effect his will or wish. decreed—determined.

38. her—The oldest MSS. have "his own virgin daughter." but—The oldest MSS. have "and."

39. bound by the law—The oldest MSS. omit "by the law." only in the Lord—Let her marry only a Christian (II Cor. 6:14).

40. happier—(vss. 1, 28, 34, 35). I think also—"I also think"; just as you Corinthians and your teachers think much of your opinions, so I also give my opinion by inspiration; so in vs. 25, "my judgment" or opinion. Think does not imply doubt, but often a matter of well-grounded assurance (John 5:39).

bind them to perpetual celibacy if he thought proper; and to this case the apostle alludes. If the father had devoted his daughter to perpetual virginity, and he afterwards found that she had fixed her affections upon a person whom she was strongly inclined to marry, and was now getting past the prime of life; he, seeing from his daughter's circumstances that it would be wrong to force her to continue in her state of celibacy, though he had determined before to keep her single, yet he might in this case alter his purpose without sin, and let her and her suitor marry." (2) "The whole verse and its context speaks of young women dedicated to the service of God, who were called virgins in the primitive Church. And a case is put here, 'that circumstances might occur to render the breach of even a vow of this kind necessary, and so no sin be committed.'" (3) "The apostle does not mean a virgin, but the 'state of virginity' or celibacy, whether in man or woman." This last opinion seems to be the true sense of the apostle.

38. Instead of he that giveth her in marriage, I purpose to read "he who marrieth," which is the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, the Codex Vaticanus, and of some others. His own virgin is added after the above by several very ancient and reputable MSS., but it seems so much like a gloss that Griesbach has not made it even a candidate for a place in the text. "He then who marrieth," though previously intending perpetual virginity, doeth well, as this is agreeable to laws both divine and human; and he "who marrieth not," doeth better, because of the present distress.

39. The wife is bound by the law. This seems to be spoken in answer to some other question of the Corinthians to this effect: "May a woman remarry whose husband is dead, or who has abandoned her?" To which he replies, in general, that as long as her husband is living the law binds her to him alone; but, if the husband die, she is free to remarry, but only in the Lord. That is, she must not marry a heathen nor an irreligious man; and she should not only marry a genuine Christian, but one of her own religious sentiments; for, in reference to domestic peace, much depends on this.

40. But she is happier if she so abide. If she continue in her widowhood because of the present distress. After my judgment. According to the view I have of the subject, which view I take by the light of the divine Spirit, who shows me the tribulations which are coming on the Church. I think . . . I have the Spirit of God. Might be translated, "I am certain that I have the Spirit of God." Ulpian, on Demosthen., Olynth. 1, says, "The word dokein is used by the ancients, not always to express what is doubtful, but often to express what is true and certain." The apostle cannot be understood as expressing any doubt of his being under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, as this would have defeated his object in giving the above advices; for if they were not dictated by the Spirit of God, can it be supposed that, in the face of apparent self-interest and the prevalence of strong passions, they could have been expected to have become rules of conduct to this people? They must have understood him as asserting that he had the direction of the Spirit of God in giving those opinions, else they could not be expected to obey.

Verses 1–3

Things that had been offered to idols. It was a custom among the heathens to make feasts of their sacrifices. These were usually kept in the temple, where the sacrifice was offered (v. 10). What remained, after all, belonged to the priests, who sometimes sold it in the markets. See ch. x. 25. It was accounted a very profane thing among them to eat at their private tables any meat whereof they had not first sacrificed. What should Christians do if anything that had been sacrificed should be set before them? What, if they should be invited to feast with them in their temples?

CHAPTER 8

Vss. 1-13. ON PARTAKING OF MEATS OFFERED TO IDOLS. 1.Though to those knowing that an idol has no existence, the question of eating meats offered to idols (referred to in the letter of the Corinthians, cf. ch. 7:1) might seem unimportant, it is not so with some, and the infirmities of such should be respected. The portions of the victims not offered on the altars belonged partly to the priests, partly to the offerers; and were eaten at feasts in the temples and in private houses and were often sold in the markets; so that Christians were constantly exposed to the temptation of receiving them, which was forbidden (Num. 25:2; Ps. 106:28). The apostles forbade it in their decree issued from Jerusalem (Acts 15, and 21:25); but Paul does not allude here to that decree, as he rests his precepts rather on his own independent apostolic authority. we know

CHAPTER 8

1. As touching things offered unto idols. This was another subject on which the Corinthians had asked the apostle's advice.

MATTHEW HENRY

The Corinthians had an opinion that even this might be done, because they knew an idol was nothing in the world, v. 4. Paul says, "We who abstain know as much of the vanity of idols, and that they are nothing. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth," v. 1. The preference of charity to conceited knowledge. There is no evidence of ignorance more common than a conceit of knowledge. He that knows most best understands his own ignorance. He that imagines himself a knowing man has reason to suspect that he knows nothing aright. Much may be known when nothing is known to any good purpose.

But, adds the apostle, if any man love God, the same is known of God. He shall be approved of God; he will accept him and have pleasure in him. The charitable person is most likely to have God's favour. How much better is it to be approved of God than to have a vain opinion of ourselves!

The vanity of idols. Heathen idols have no divinity in them. They are merely imaginary gods. The gods of the heathen have nothing of real godhead belonging to them; for there is no other God but one. We Christians well know there is but one God. All things are of him, and we, and all things else, are for him. It is the great privilege of us Christians that we know the true God, and true Mediator between God and man.

Verses 7–13

Their inference was not just, namely, that therefore they might go into the idol-temple and feast there with their heathen neighbours. He does not so much insist upon the unlawfulness as the mischief such freedom might do to weaker Christians.

I. Every Christian man, at that time, was not so fully convinced that an idol was nothing. Weak Christians may be ignorant, or have but a confused knowledge of the greatest and plainest truths. So their conscience, being weak, was defiled. They were weak in their understanding, and, while they ate what was sacrificed contracted the guilt of idolatry and so greatly polluted themselves. We should be careful to do nothing that may occasion weak Christians to defile their consciences.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

that we all have knowledge—The Corinthians doubtless had referred to their "knowledge" (viz., of the indifference of meats, as in themselves having no sanctity or pollution). Paul replies, "We are aware that we all have [speaking generally, and so far as Christian theory goes; for in vs. 7 he speaks of some who practically have not] this knowledge." Knowledge puffeth up—when without "love." Here a parenthesis begins; and the main subject is resumed in the same words, vs. 4. "As concerning [touching] therefore the eating . . . ." "Puffing up" is to please self. "Edifying" is to please one's neighbor. Knowledge only says, All things are lawful for me; Love adds, But all things do not edify [BENGEL], (ch. 10:23; Rom. 14:15). edifieth—tends to build up the spiritual temple (ch. 3:9; 6:19). 2. And—omitted in the oldest MSS. The absence of the connecting particle gives an emphatical sententiousness to the style, suitable to the subject. The first step to knowledge is to know our own ignorance. Without love there is only the appearance of knowledge. knoweth—The oldest MSS. read a Greek word implying personal experimental acquaintance, not merely knowledge of a fact, which the Greek of "we know" or are aware (vs. 1) means. as he ought to know—experimentally and in the way of "love." 3. love God—the source of love to our neighbor (I John 4:11, 12, 20; 5:2). the same—lit., "this man"; he who loves, not he who "thinks that he knows," not having "charity" or love (vss. 1, 2). is known of him—is known with the knowledge of approval and is acknowledged by God as His (Ps. 1:6; Gal. 4:9; II Tim. 2:19). Contrast, "I never knew you" (Matt. 7:23). To love God is to know God; and he who thus knows God has been first known by God (cf. ch. 13:12; I Pet. 1:2). 4. As concerning . . . —resuming the subject begun in vs. 1, "As touching . . . ." idol is nothing—has no true being at all, the god it represents is not a living reality. This does not contradict ch. 10:20, which states that they who worship idols, worship devils; for here it is the GODS believed by the worshippers to be represented by the idols which are denied to have any existence, not the devils which really under the idols delude the worshippers. none other God—The oldest MSS. omit the word "other"; which gives a clearer sense. 5. "For even supposing there are (exist) gods so called (II Thess. 2:4), whether in heaven (as the sun, moon, and stars) or in earth (as deified kings, beasts, etc.), as there be (a recognized fact, Deut. 10:17; Ps. 135: 5; 136:2) gods many and lords many." Angels and men in authority are termed gods in Scripture, as exercising a divinely delegated power under God (cf. Exod. 22:9, with vs. 28; Ps. 82:1, 6; John 10:34, 35). 6. to us—believers. of whom—from whom as Creator all things derive their existence. we in him—rather "we for Him," or "unto Him." God the FATHER is the end for whom and for whose glory believers live. In Colossians 1:16 all things are said to be created (not only "by" Christ, but also) "for Him" (CHRIST). So entirely are the Father and Son one (cf. Rom. 11: 36; Heb. 2:10). one Lord—contrasted with the "many lords" of heathendom (vs. 5). by whom—(John 1:3; Heb. 1:2). we by him—as all things are "of" the Father by creation, so they (we believers especially) are restored to Him by the new creation (Col. 1:20; Rev. 21:5). Also, as all things are by Christ by creation, so they (we especially) are restored by Him by the new creation. 7. Howbeit—Though to us who "have knowledge" (vss. 1, 4-6) all meats are indifferent, yet "this knowledge is not in all" in the same degree as we have it. Paul had admitted to the Corinthians that "we all have knowledge" (vs. 1), i.e., so far as Christian theory goes; but practically some have it not in the same degree. with conscience—an ancient reading; but other very old MSS. read "association" or "habit." In either reading the meaning is: Some Gentile Christians, whether from old association of ideas or misdirected conscience, when they ate such meats, ate them with some feeling as if the idol were something real (vs. 4), and had changed the meats by the fact of the consecration into something either holy or else polluted. unto this hour—after they have embraced Christianity; an implied censure, that they are not further advanced by this time in Christian "knowledge." their conscience . . . is defiled—by their eating it "as a thing offered to idols." If they ate it unconscious at the time that it had been offered to idols, there would be no defilement of conscience. But conscious of what it was, and not having such knowledge as other Corinthians boasted of, viz., that an idol is nothing and can therefore neither pollute nor sanctify meats, they by eating them sin against conscience (cf. Rom. 14:15-23). It was on the ground of Christian ex-

ADAM CLARKE

We know that we all have knowledge. I am inclined to think that these are not Paul's words, but a quotation from the letter of the Corinthians to him, and a proof of what the apostle says below, Knowledge puffeth up. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. This knowledge is very nearly allied to pride; it puffeth up the mind with vain conceit, makes those who have it bold and rash, and renders them careless of the consciences of others.

2. He knoweth nothing yet. The person who acts in this rash, unfeeling way, from the general knowledge which he has of the vanity of idolatry and the liberty which the gospel affords from Jewish rites, with all his knowledge does not know this, that though the first and greatest commandment says, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," yet the second is like unto it: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." He then that can torment his neighbors' weak or tender conscience with his food or his conduct does not love him as himself, and therefore knows nothing as he ought to know.

3. But if any man love God, in that way which the commandment requires, which will necessarily beget love to his neighbor, the same is known of him, is approved of God, and acknowledged as His genuine follower.

5. There be that are called gods. There are many images that are supposed to be representations of divinities. But these divinities are nothing, the figments of mere fancy; and these images have no corresponding realities. Whether in heaven or in earth. As the sun, moon, planets, stars, the ocean, rivers, trees, etc. And thus there are, nominally, gods many, and lords many.

6. But to us there is but one God, the Father. Who produced all things, himself uncreated and unoriginated. And we in him, "and we for Him," all intelligent beings having been created for the purpose of manifesting His glory by receiving and reflecting His wisdom, goodness, and truth. And one Lord Jesus. Only one visible Governor of the world and the Church. By whom are all things. Who was the Creator, as He is the Upholder, of the universe. And we by him, being brought to the knowledge of the true God by the revelation of Jesus Christ; for it is the only begotten Son alone that can reveal the Father. The "gods" of whom the apostle speaks were their divinities, or objects of religious worship; the "lords" were the rulers of the world, such as emperors, who were considered next to gods, and some of them were deified. In opposition to those "gods" he places God, the Father, the Fountain of plenitude and being; and in opposition to the "lords" he places Jesus Christ, who made and who governs all things.

7. There is not in every man that knowledge. This is spoken in reference to what is said, v. 4: "We know that an idol is nothing in the world." For some with a conscience of the idol, viz., that it is something, eat it—the flesh that was offered to the idol—as a thing thus offered, considering the feast as a sacred banquet by which they have fellowship with the idol. And their conscience being weak, not properly instructed in divine things, is defiled—he performs what he does as an act of religious worship, and thus his conscience contracts guilt through this idolatry.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He tells them that mere eating and drinking had nothing in them virtuous nor criminal, v. 8. Some of the Corinthians made a merit of their eating what had been offered to idols, and that in their very temples too (v. 10), because it plainly showed that they thought the idols nothing. Eating this food, and forbearing that, have nothing in them to recommend a person to God.

III. He cautions them against abusing their liberty. Even upon the supposition that they had such power, they must be cautious how they use it; it might be a stumbling-block to the weak (v. 9).

We must deny ourselves rather than occasion their stumbling, and endanger their souls (v. 11): Through thy knowledge shall thy weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? If he had such compassion as to die for them, we should have so much compassion for them as to deny ourselves, for their sakes. That man has very little of the spirit of the Redeemer who had rather his brother should perish than himself be abridged of his liberty.

The hurt done to them Christ takes as done to himself, v. 12. Injuries done to Christians are injuries to Christ. Shall we be void of compassion for those to whom Christ has shown so much? Shall we sin against Christ who suffered for us?

IV. His own example (v. 13). We must not rigorously claim our own rights, to the hurt and ruin of a brother's soul, and so to the injury of our Redeemer, who died for him. And, if we must be so careful not to occasion other men's sins, how careful should we be to avoid sin ourselves!

pediency, not to cause a stumbling block to "weak" brethren, that the Jerusalem decree against partaking of such meats (though indifferent in themselves) was passed (Acts 15). Hence he here vindicates it against the Corinthian asserters of an inexpedient liberty. 8. Other old MSS. read, "Neither if we do not eat, are we the better: neither if we eat are we the worse": the language of the eaters who justified their eating thus [LACHMANN]. In English Version Paul admits that "meat neither presents [so the Greek for 'commendeth'] us as commended nor as disapproved before God": it does not affect our standing before God (Rom. 14:6). 9. this liberty of yours—the watchword for lax Corinthians. The very indifference of meats, which I concede, is the reason why ye should "take heed" not to tempt weak brethren to act against their conscience (which constitutes sin, Rom. 14:22, 23).

10. if any man—being weak. which hast knowledge—The very knowledge which thou pridest thyself on (vs. 1), will lead the weak after thy example to do that against his conscience, which thou doest without any scruple of conscience; viz., to eat meats offered to idols. conscience of him which is weak—rather, "His conscience, seeing he is weak" [ALFORD and others]. emboldened—lit., "built up." You ought to have built up your brother in good: but by your example your building him up is the emboldening him to violate his conscience. 11. shall . . . perish—The oldest MSS. read "perisheth." A single act seemingly unimportant may produce everlasting consequences. The weak brother loses his faith, and if he do not recover it, his salvation [BENGEL] (Rom. 14:23). for whom Christ died—and for whose sake we too ought to be willing to die (I John 3:16). And yet professing Christians at Corinth virtually tempted their brethren to their damnation, so far were they from sacrificing aught for their salvation. Note here, that it is no argument against the dogma that Christ died for all, even for those who perish, to say that thus He would have died in vain for many. Scripture is our rule, not our suppositions as to consequences. More is involved in redemption than the salvation of man: the character of God as at once just and loving is vindicated even in the case of the lost for they might have been saved, and so even in their case Christ has not died in vain. So the mercies of God's providence are not in vain, though many abuse them. Even the condemned shall manifest God's love in the great day, in that they too had the offer of God's mercy. It shall be the most awful ingredient in their cup that they might have been saved but would not: Christ died to redeem even them. 12. wound their weak conscience—lit., "smite their conscience, being (as yet) in a weak state." It aggravates the cruelty of the act that it is committed on the weak, just as if one were to strike an invalid. against Christ—on account of the sympathy between Christ and His members (Matt. 25:40; Acts 9:4, 5). 13. meat—Old English for "food" in general. make . . . to offend—Greek, "is a stumbling block to." no flesh—In order to ensure my avoiding flesh offered to idols, I would abstain from all kinds of flesh, in order not to be a stumbling block to my brother.

ADAM CLARKE

8. Meat commendeth us not to God. No such feasts as these can be a recommendation of our souls or persons to the Supreme Being. As to the thing considered in itself, the eating gives us no spiritual advantage, and the eating not is no spiritual loss.

9. But take heed. Lest by frequenting such feasts and eating things offered to idols, under the conviction that an idol is nothing and that you may eat those things innocently, this liberty of yours should become a means of grievously offending a weak brother who has not your knowledge or inducing one who respects you for your superior knowledge to partake of these things with the conscience, the persuasion and belief, that an idol is something, and to conclude that, as you partake of such things, so he may also, and with safety. He is not possessed of your superior information on this point, and he eats to the idol what you take as a common meal.

10. If any man see thee which hast knowledge. Of the true God, and who are reputed for your skill in divine things. Sit at meat in the idol's temple. Is it not strange that any professing the knowledge of the true God should even enter one of those temples? And is it not more surprising that any Christian should be found to feast there? But by all this we may see that the boasted knowledge of the Corinthians had very little depth in things purely spiritual. Be emboldened to eat. Be "built up"—be confirmed and established in that opinion which before he doubtingly held, that on seeing you eat he may be led to think there is no harm in feasting in an idol temple nor in eating things offered to idols.

11. Shall the weak brother perish? Being first taught by thy conduct that there was no harm in thus eating, he grieves the Spirit of God, becomes again darkened and hardened, and sliding back into idolatry, dies in it, and so finally perishes. For whom Christ died. So we learn that a man may perish for whom Christ died; this admits of no quibble. If a man for whom Christ died, apostatizing from Christianity (for he is called a brother though weak), returning again to and dying in idolatry, cannot go to heaven, then a man for whom Christ died may perish everlastingly. And if it were possible for a believer, whether strong or weak, to retrace his steps back to idolatry and die in it, surely it is possible for a man who had escaped the pollutions that are in the world to return to it, live and die in its spirit, and perish everlastingly also.

12. But when ye sin so against the brethren. Against Christians, who are called by the gospel to abhor and detest all such abominations. Ye sin against Christ. By sending to perdition, through your bad example, a soul for whom He shed His blood, and so far defeating the gracious intentions of His sacrificial death.

13. Wherefore. Rather than give any occasion to a Christian to sin against and so to harden his conscience that he should return to idolatry and perish, I would not only abstain from all meats offered to idols, but I would eat no flesh, should I exist through the whole course of time, but live on the herbs of the field, rather than cause my brother to stumble, and thus fall into idolatry and final ruin. The greater our reputation for knowledge and sanctity, the greater mischief we shall do by our influence and example if we turn aside from the holy commandment delivered unto us. Every man should walk so as either to light or lead his brother to heaven.

Paul not only met with opposition from those without, but discouragement from those within. Some among the Corinthians questioned, if they did not disown, his apostolical character. He asserts his apostolical mission and character: Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? To be a witness of his resurrection was one great branch of the apostolical charge. "Am I not free?" It was not because he had no right to live of the gospel that he maintained himself with his own hands.

CHAPTER 9

Vss. 1-27. HE CONFIRMS HIS TEACHING AS TO NOT PUTTING A STUMBLING BLOCK IN A BROTHER'S WAY (ch. 8:13) BY HIS OWN EXAMPLE IN NOT USING HIS UNDOUBTED RIGHTS AS AN APOSTLE, SO AS TO WIN MEN TO CHRIST. 1. Am I not an apostle? am I not free?—The oldest MSS. read the order thus, "Am I not free? am I not an apostle?" He alludes to ch. 8:9, "this liberty of yours": If you claim it, I appeal to yourselves as the witnesses, have not I also it? "Am I not free?" If you be so, much more I. For "am I not an apostle?" so that I can claim not only Christian, but also apostolic, liberty. have I

CHAPTER 9

1. Am I not an apostle? It is sufficiently evident that there were persons at Corinth who questioned the apostleship of Paul; and he was obliged to walk very circumspectly that they might not find any occasion against him. Am I not an apostle? am I not free? These questions are all designed as assertions of the affirmative: "I am an apostle, and I am free"—possessed of all the rights and privileges of an apostle. Have I not seen Jesus Christ? From whom in His personal appearance to me I have received my apostolic commission. This was judged es-

MATTHEW HENRY

He offers the success of his ministry among them as a proof of his apostleship. He justly upbraids the Corinthians with their disrespect, v. 2. "You, above all others, should own my character, and not call it in question." It was aggravated ingratitude for this people to call in question his authority.

Verses 3–14

He proceeds to claim the rights belonging to his office.

I. These he states, v. 3–6.

II. He proceeds to prove his claim, from the common practice of mankind.

F. B. MEYER:

Rights and their surrender. Paul's claim to an equality with Peter and the other apostles was violently disputed by his enemies at Corinth, because in several matters he differed from them. Unlike Peter, he had no wife to support; and he worked for his livelihood instead of being supported by the churches. In this chapter he strongly asserts his rights in this particular; but he is equally strong in saying that he had refused to avail himself of his right, that he might influence a wider circle of men. He was a soldier, a vineyard keeper, a shepherd, and could claim his maintenance. But he desired to be free from the slightest imputation of self-seeking. He knew that jealous critics were watching his every action and seeking to weigh his secret motives. These were the very men he desired to win, and for their sakes he voluntarily surrendered his undoubted rights.

What a lesson for all of us and especially for those who are called to be ministers of Christ's gospel! We must be above suspicion. If we do or permit anything that might prove a hindrance to the acceptance of Christ by others, we must forego it, though reasonable in itself, that we may win them to our Savior.

—Bible Commentary

Those who give themselves up to any way of business in the world expect to live out of it (v. 7–9). It is very reasonable for ministers to expect a livelihood out of their labours, v. 8. It is also consonant to the old law.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

not seen Jesus—corporeally, not in a mere vision: cf. ch. 15:8, where the fact of the resurrection, which he wishes to prove, could only be established by an actual bodily appearance, such as was vouchsafed to Peter and the other apostles. In Acts 9:7, 17 the contrast between "the men with him seeing no man," and "Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way," shows that Jesus actually appeared to him in going to Damascus. His vision of Christ in the temple (Acts 22:17) was "in a trance." To be a witness of Christ's resurrection was a leading function of an apostle (Acts 1:22). The best MSS. omit "Christ." ye my work in the Lord—Your conversion is His workmanship (Eph. 2:10) through my instrumentality: the "seal of mine apostleship" (vs. 2). 2. yet doubtless—yet at least I am such to you. seal of mine apostleship—Your conversion by my preaching, accompanied with miracles ("the signs of an apostle," Rom. 15:18, 19; II Cor. 12:12), and your gifts conferred by me (ch. 1:7), vouch for the reality of my apostleship, just as a seal set to a document attests its genuineness (John 3:33; Rom. 4:11). 3. to them that . . . examine me—i.e., who call in question mine apostleship. is this—viz., that you are the seal of mine apostleship. 4. Have we not power—Greek, "right," or lawful power, equivalent to "liberty" claimed by the Corinthians (ch. 8:9). The "we" includes with himself his colleagues in the apostleship. The Greek interrogative expresses, "You surely won't say (will you?) that we have not the power or right. . . ." eat and drink—without laboring with our hands (vss. 11, 13, 14). Paul's not exercising this right was made a plea by his opponents for insinuating that he was himself conscious he was no true apostle (II Cor. 12:13-16). 5. lead about a sister, a wife—i.e., "a sister as a wife"; "a sister" by faith, which makes all believers brethren and sisters in the one family of God: "a wife" by marriage covenant. Paul implies he did not exercise his undoubted right to marry and "lead about" a believer, for the sake of Christian expediency, as well to save the Church the expense of maintaining her in his wide circuits, as also that he might give himself more undistractedly to building up the Church of Christ (ch. 7:26, 32, 35). Contrast the Corinthians' want of self-sacrifice in the exercise of their "liberty" at the cost of destroying, instead of edifying, the Church (ch. 8: 9, 10; Margin, 11-13). as other apostles—implying that some of them had availed themselves of the power which they all had, of marrying. We know from Matthew 8:14, that Cephas (Peter) was a married man. A confutation of Peter's self-styled followers, the Romanists, who exclude the clergy from marriage. CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS (Stromata or Miscellanies, 7. sec. 63) records a tradition that he encouraged his wife when being led to death by saying, "Remember, my dear one, the Lord." Cf. EUSEBIUS, E. H. 3. 30. brethren of the Lord—held in especial esteem on account of their relationship to Jesus (Acts 1:14; Gal. 1:9). James, Joses, Simon, and Judas. Probably cousins of Jesus: as cousins were termed by the Jews "brethren." ALFORD makes them literally brothers of Jesus by Joseph and Mary. Cephas—probably singled out as being a name carrying weight with one partisan section at Corinth. "If your favorite leader does so, surely so may I" (ch. 1:12; 3:22). 6. Barnabas—long the associate of Paul, and, like him, in the habit of self-denyingly forbearing to claim the maintenance which is a minister's right. So Paul supported himself by tent-making (Acts 18:3; 20:34; I Thess. 2: 9; II Thess. 3:8). 7. The minister is spiritually a soldier (II Tim. 2:3), a vine-dresser (ch. 3:6-8; Song of Sol. 1:6), and a shepherd (I Pet. 5:2, 4). of the fruit—The oldest MSS. omit "of." 8. as a man—I speak thus not merely according to human judgment, but with the sanction of the divine law also. 9. ox . . . treadeth . . . corn—(Deut. 25:4). In the East to the present day they do not after reaping carry the sheaves home to barns as we do, but take them to an area under the open air to be threshed by the oxen treading them with their feet, or else drawing a threshing instrument over them (cf. Mic. 4:13). Doth God . . . care for oxen?—rather, "Is it for the oxen that God careth?" Is the animal the ultimate object for whose sake this law was given? No. God does care for the lower animal (Ps. 36:6; Matt. 10:29), but it is with the ultimate aim of the welfare of man, the head of animal creation. In the humane consideration shown for the lower animal, we are to learn that still more ought it to be exercised in the case of man, the ultimate object of the law; and that the human (spiritual as well as temporal) laborer is worthy of his hire. 10. altogether—Join this with "saith." "Does he (the divine lawgiver) by all means say it for our sakes?"

sentially necessary to constitute an apostle. See Acts xxii. 14-15; xxvi. 16. Are not ye my work? Your conversion from heathenism is the proof that I have preached with the divine unction and authority.

2. If I be not an apostle unto others. If there be other churches which have been founded by other apostles, yet it is not so with you. The seal of mine apostleship are ye. Your conversion to Christianity is God's seal to my apostleship. Had not God sent me, I could not have profited your souls. The seal was a figure cut in a stone, and that set in a ring, by which letters of credence and authority were stamped. The ancients, particularly the Greeks, excelled in this kind of engraving. In the Lord. The apostle shows that it was by the grace and influence of God alone that he was an apostle, and that they were converted to Christianity.

3. Mine answer to them. This is my defense against those who examine me. The words are forensic; and the apostle considers himself as brought before a legal tribunal, and questioned so as to be obliged to answer as upon oath. His defense therefore was this, that they were converted to God by his means. This verse belongs to the preceding two verses.

4. Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not "authority," or "right," to expect sustenance while we are laboring for your salvation? Meat and drink, the necessaries, not the superfluities, of life, were what those primitive messengers of Christ required; it was just that they who labored in the gospel should live by the gospel. They did not wish to make a fortune or accumulate wealth; a living was all they desired.

5. Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife? When the apostle speaks of leading about a sister, a wife, he means, first, that he and all other apostles, and consequently all ministers of the gospel, had a right to marry. For it appears that our Lord's brethren, James and Jude, were married; and we have infallible evidence that Peter was a married man, not only from this verse, but from Matt. viii. 14, where his mother-in-law is mentioned as being cured of a fever by our Lord. And secondly, we find that their wives were persons of the same faith, for less can never be implied in the word sister.

6. Or I only and Barnabas? Have we alone of all the apostles no right to be supported by our converts? It appears from this: (1) That the apostles did not generally support themselves by their own labor; (2) That Paul and Barnabas did thus support themselves. Some of the others probably had not a business at which they could conveniently work, but Paul and Barnabas had a trade at which they could conveniently labor wherever they came.

7. Who goeth a warfare . . . at his own charges? These questions, which are all supposed from the necessity and propriety of the cases to be answered in the affirmative, tend more forcibly to point out that the common sense of man joins with the providence of God in showing the propriety of every man living by the fruits of his labor. The first question applies particularly to the case of the apostle. Does a soldier provide his own victuals? Opsonion is used by the Greek writers to express the military pay or wages, for the Roman soldiers were paid not only in money but in victuals.

8. Say I these things as a man? Is this only human reasoning? or does not God say in effect the same things?

9. Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox. See Deut. xxv. 4. Doth God take care for oxen? This question is to be understood thus: Is it likely that God should be solicitous for the comfort of oxen and be regardless of the welfare of man? In this divine precept the kindness and providential care of God are very forcibly pointed out. He takes care of oxen; He wills them all that happiness of which their nature is susceptible; and can we suppose that He is unwilling that the human soul shall have that happiness which is suited to its spiritual and eternal nature?

MATTHEW HENRY

But this law was not chiefly given out of God's regard to oxen, but to teach mankind that all due encouragement should be given to those who are labouring for our good—that the labourers should taste of the fruit of their labours, v. 10. Those that lay themselves out to do our souls good should not have their mouths muzzled. He argues from common equity. What they had sown was much better than they expected to reap. They had been instruments of conveying to them the greater spiritual blessings; and had they no claim to a share in their carnal things? What, get so much good by them, and yet grudge to do so little good to them! He argues from the maintenance they afforded others. Who has so just a claim as I from the church of Corinth? Who has laboured so much for your good? He renounced his right, rather than by claiming it he would hinder his success, but asserted his right lest his self-denial should prove prejudicial to the ministry.

He argues from the old Jewish establishment: "Do you not know that those who minister about holy things live of the things of the temple, and those who wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? (v. 13). He asserts it to be the institution of Christ: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that those who preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (v. 14). But those transgress an appointment of Christ who deny or withhold it.

Verses 15–18

I. He had neglected to claim his right in times past, v. 15. Nor did he write this to make his claim now.

II. He would not have his glorying made void, v. 15, to have it justly said that he preferred his wages to his work. It is the glory of a minister to deny himself, that he may serve Christ, and save souls.

III. This self-denial yielded him much more content than his preaching did, v. 16. This is a duty expressly bound upon him. Those who are set apart to the office of the ministry have it in charge to preach the gospel. Woe be to them if they do not. But it is not given in charge to all, nor any preacher of the gospel, to do his work gratis. It may be his duty to preach under some circumstances, without receiving a maintenance for it; but he has a right to it. It may sometimes be his duty to insist on his maintenance for so doing, and whenever he forbears he parts with his right.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

It would be untrue, that God saith it altogether (in the sense of solely) for our sakes. But it is true, that He by all means saith it for our sakes as the ultimate object in the lower world. GROTIUS, however, translates, "mainly" or "especially," instead of altogether. that—"meaning that" [ALFORD]; lit., "because." should plough—ought to plough in hope. The obligation rests with the people not to let their minister labor without remuneration. he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope—The oldest MS. versions and Fathers read, "He that thresheth (should or ought to thresh) in the hope of partaking" (viz., of the fruit of his threshing). "He that plougheth," spiritually, is the first planter of a church in a place (cf. ch. 3:6, 9); "he that thresheth," the minister who tends a church already planted. 11. we . . . we—emphatical in the Greek. WE, the same persons who have sown to you the infinitely more precious treasures of the Spirit, may at least claim in return what is the only thing you have to give, viz., the goods that nourish the flesh ("your carnal things"). 12. others—whether true apostles (vs. 5) or false ones (II Cor. 11:20). we rather—considering our greater labors for you (II Cor. 11:23). suffer all things—without complaining of it. We desire to conceal (lit., "hold as a water-tight vessel") any distress we suffer from straitened circumstances. The same Greek is in ch. 13:7. lest we . . . hinder . . . gospel—not to cause a hindrance to its progress by giving a handle for the imputation of self-seeking, if we received support from our flock. The less of incumbrance and expense caused to the Church, and the more of work done, the better for the cause of the Gospel (II Tim. 2:4). 13. minister about holy things—the Jewish priests and Levites. The Greek especially applies to the former, the priests offering sacrifices. partakers with the altar—a part of the victims going to the service of the altar, and the rest being shared by the priests (Lev. 7:6; Num. 18:6, etc.; Deut. 18:1, etc.). 14. Even so—The only inference to be drawn from this passage is, not that the Christian ministry is of a sacrificial character as the Jewish priesthood, but simply, that as the latter was supported by the contributions of the people, so should the former. The stipends of the clergy were at first from voluntary offerings at the Lord's Supper. At the love feast preceding it every believer, according to his ability, offered a gift; and when the expense of the table had been defrayed, the bishop laid aside a portion for himself, the presbyters, and deacons; and with the rest relieved widows, orphans, confessors, and the poor generally [TERTULLIAN, Apology, ch. 39]. The stipend was in proportion to the dignity and merits of the several bishops, presbyters, and deacons [CYPRIAN, c. 4, ep. 6]. preach . . . gospel—plainly marked as the duty of the Christian minister, in contrast to the ministering about sacrifices (Greek) and waiting at the altar of the Jewish priesthood and Levites (vs. 13). If the Lord's Supper were a sacrifice (as the Mass is supposed to be), this 14th verse would certainly have been worded so, to answer to vs. 13. Note the same Lord Christ "ordains" the ordinances in the Old and in the New Testaments (Matt. 10:10; Luke 10:7). 15. Paul's special gift of continency, which enabled him to abstain from marriage, and his ability to maintain himself without interrupting seriously his ministry, made that expedient to him which is ordinarily inexpedient; viz., that the ministry should not be supported by the people. What to him was a duty, would be the opposite to one, for instance, to whom God had committed a family, without other means of support. I have used none of these things—none of these "powers" or rights which I might have used (vss. 4-6, 12). neither—rather, "Yet I have not written." so done unto me—lit., "in my case": as is done in the case of a soldier, a planter, a shepherd, a ploughman, and a sacrificing priest (vss. 7, 10, 13). make my glorying void—deprive me of my privilege of preaching the Gospel without remuneration (II Corinthians 11:7-10). Rather than hinder the progress of the Gospel by giving any pretext for a charge of interested motives (II Cor. 12. 17, 18), Paul would "die" of hunger. Cf. Abraham's similar disinterestedness (Gen. 14:22, 23). 16. though I preach . . . I have nothing to glory of—i.e., If I preach the Gospel, and do so not gratuitously, I have no matter for "glorying." For the "necessity" that is laid on me to preach (cf. Jer. 20:9, and the case of Jonah) does away with ground for "glorying." The sole ground for the latter that I have, is my preaching without charge (vs. 18): since there is no necessity laid on me as to the latter, it is my voluntary act for the Gospel's sake. 17. Translate, "If I be doing this (i.e., preaching) of my own accord (which I am

ADAM CLARKE

10. And he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. Many of the best MSS. and versions read the passage thus: "And he who thresheth in hope of partaking."

11. If we have sown unto you spiritual things. If we have been the means of bringing you into a state of salvation by the divine doctrines which we have preached unto you, is it too much for us to expect a temporal support when we give ourselves up entirely to this work? Every man who preaches the gospel has a right to his own support and that of his family while thus employed.

12. If others be partakers of this power. If those who in any matter serve you have a "right" to a recompense for that service, surely we who have served you in the most essential matters have a right to our support while thus employed in your service. We have not used this power. Though we had this "right," we have not availed ourselves of it, but have worked with our hands to bear our own charges, lest any of you should think that we preached the gospel merely to procure a temporal support, and so be prejudiced against us, and thus prevent our success in the salvation of your souls.

13. They which minister about holy things. All the officers about the Temple, whether priests, Levites, Nethinim, etc., had a right to their support while employed in its service. The priests partook of the sacrifices; the others had their maintenance from tithes, firstfruits, and offerings made to the Temple, for it was not lawful for them to live on the sacrifices. Hence the apostle makes the distinction between those who minister about holy things and those who wait at the altar.

14. Even so hath the Lord ordained. This is evidently a reference to our Lord's ordination, Matt. x. 10: "The workman is worthy of his meat." And Luke x. 7: "For the labourer is worthy of his hire." And in both places it is the preacher of the gospel of whom he is speaking.

15. Neither have I written. Though I might plead the authority of God in the law, of Christ in the gospel, the common consent of our own doctors, and the usages of civil society, yet I have not availed myself of my privileges; nor do I now write with the intention to lay in my claims.

16. For though I preach the gospel. I have cause of glorying that I preach the gospel free of all charges to you; but I cannot glory in being a preacher of the gospel, because I am not such by either my own skill or power. I have received from God both the office and the grace by which I execute the office.

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. If I do this thing willingly, I have a reward. Indeed, it is willing service only that is capable of reward from God. Leave the heart out of our duties, and God abhors them: they are but the carcasses, without the life and spirit, of religion. Ministers have a dispensation of the gospel committed to them. Christ's willing servants shall not fail of a recompence, and his slothful and unwilling servants shall all be called to an account.

V. What is my reward then? (v. 18). That when I preach the gospel I may make it without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel. It is an abuse of power to employ it against the very ends for which it is given. And the apostle would never use his so as to frustrate the ends of it, but would willingly and cheerfully deny himself.

Verses 19–23

I. He asserts his liberty (v. 19). He was free-born, a citizen of Rome. He was in bondage to none, yet he made himself a servant to all, that he might gain the more. He made himself a servant, that they might be made free.

II. He accommodated himself to all sorts of people. To the Jews, and those under the law, he became a Jew. He submitted to it, that he might prevail with them and win them over to Christ.

To those that are without the law, as without law, that is, to the Gentiles. In innocent things he could comply with people's usages for their advantage. He behaved among them as one that was not under the bondage of the Jewish laws. He did not stand on privileges and punctilios.

To the weak he became as weak, that he might gain the weak, v. 22. He did not despise nor judge them, but became as one of them. He denied himself for their sakes, that he might gain their souls. The rights of God he could not give up, but he might resign his own, and he very often did so for the good of others.

III. His reason for acting in this manner (v. 23): This I do for the gospel's sake, and that I may be partaker thereof with you. A heart warmed with zeal for God, and breathing after the salvation of men, will not plead and insist upon rights and privileges.

Verses 24–27

He had a glorious prize, an incorruptible crown, in view. "Know you not that those who run in a race run all, but one obtaineth the prize?" (v. 24).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

not, for the "necessity" is laid on me which binds a servant to obey his master), I have a reward; but if (as is the case) involuntarily (Acts 9:15; 22:15; 26: 16; not of my own natural will, but by the constraining grace of God; Romans 9:16; I Tim. 1:13-16), I have had a dispensation (of the Gospel) entrusted to me" (and so can claim no "reward," seeing that I only "have done that which was my duty to do," Luke 17:10, but incur the "woe," vs. 16, if I fail in it). 18. What is my reward?—The answer is in vs. 19; viz., that by making the Gospel without charge, where I might have rightfully claimed maintenance, I might "win the more." of Christ—The oldest MSS and versions omit these words. abuse—rather "that I use not to the full my power." This is his matter for "glorying"; the "reward" ultimately aimed at is the gaining of the more (vs. 19). The former, as involving the latter, is verbally made the answer to the question, "What is my reward?" But really the "reward" is that which is the ultimate aim of his preaching without charge, viz., that he may gain the more; it was for this end, not to have matter of glorying, that he did so. 19. free from all men—i.e., from the power of all men. gain the more—i.e., as many of them ("all men") as possible. "Gain" is an appropriate expression in relation to a "reward" (I Thess. 2:19, 20); he therefore repeats it frequently (vss. 20-22). 20. I became as a Jew—in things not defined by the law, but by Jewish usage. Not Judaizing in essentials, but in matters where there was no compromise of principle (cf. Acts 16:3; 21:20-26); an undesigned coincidence between the history and the Epistle, and so a sure proof of genuineness. to them that are under the law, as under the law—in things defined by the law; such as ceremonies not then repugnant to Christianity. Perhaps the reason for distinguishing this class from the former is that Paul himself belonged nationally to "the Jews," but did not in creed belong to the class of "them that are under the law." This view is confirmed by the reading inserted here by the oldest MSS., versions, and Fathers, "not being (i.e., parenthetically, 'not that I am') myself under the law." 21. To them . . . without law—i.e., without revealed law: the heathen (cf. Rom. 2:12 with vs. 15). as without law—not urging on them the ceremonies and "works of the law," but "the hearing of faith" (Gal. 3:2). Also discoursing in their own manner, as at Athens, with arguments from their own poets (Acts 17:28). being not without law to God—"While thus conforming to others in matters indifferent, taking care not to be without law in relation to God, but responsible to law (lit., IN LAW) in relation to Christ." This is the Christian's true position in relation to the world, to himself, and to God. Everything develops itself according to its proper law. So the Christian, though no longer subject to the literal law as constraining him from without, is subject to an inward principle or law, the spirit of faith in Christ acting from within as the germ of a new life. He does not in the Greek (as in English Version) say "under the law (as he does in vs. 20) to Christ"; but uses the milder term, "in . . . law," responsible to law. Christ was responsible to the law for us, so that we are no longer responsible to it (Gal. 3:13, 24), but to Him, as the members to the Head (ch. 7:22; Rom. 8:1-4; I Pet. 2:16). Christians serve Christ in newness of spirit, no longer in oldness of the letter (i.e., the old external law as such), Romans 7:4-6. To Christ, as man's Head, the Father has properly delegated His authority (John 5:22, 27); whence here he substitutes "Christ" for "God" in the second clause, "not without law to God, but under the law to Christ." The law of Christ is the law of love (Gal. 6:2; cf. 5:13). 22. gain the weak—i.e., establish, instead of being a stumbling block to inexperienced Christians (ch. 8:7). Romans 14: 1, "Weak in the faith." ALFORD thinks the "weak" are not Christians at all, for these have been already "won"; but those outside the Church, who are yet "without strength" to believe (Rom. 5:6). But when "weak" Christians are by the condescending love of stronger brethren kept from falling from faith, they are well said to be "gained" or won. by all means . . . some—The gain of even "some" is worth the expenditure of "all means." He conformed himself to the feelings of each in the several classes, that out of them all he might gain some. 23. partaker thereof—Greek, "fellow partaker": of the Gospel blessings promised at Christ's coming: "with" (not as English Version, "you": but) them, viz., with those thus "gained" by me to the Gospel. 24. Know ye not—The Isthmian games, in which the foot race was a leading one, were of course well known, and a subject of patriotic pride to the Corinthians, who lived in the immediate neighborhood.

ADAM CLARKE

17. For if I do this thing willingly. If I be a cordial cooperator with God, I have a reward, an incorruptible crown, v. 25. Or, if I freely preach this gospel without being burdensome to any, I have a special reward. But if I do not, I have simply an office to fulfill, into which God has put me, and may fulfill it conscientiously, and claim my privileges at the same time; but then I lose that special reward which I have in view by preaching the gospel without charge to any.

18. That I abuse not my power. I am inclined to think that katachresasthai is to be understood here, not in the sense of abusing, but of "using to the uttermost"—exacting everything that a man can claim by law.

19. For though I be free. Although I am under no obligation to any man, yet I act as if every individual had a particular property in me, and as if I were the "slave" of the public.

20. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew. In Acts xvi. 3, we find that for the sake of the unconverted Jews he circumcised Timothy. To them that are under the law. To those who considered themselves still under obligation to observe its rites and ceremonies, though they had in the main embraced the gospel, he became as if under the same obligations; and therefore purified himself in the Temple, as we find related in Acts xxi. 26. After the first clause, to them that are under the law, as under the law, the following words, "not being myself under the law," are added by several MSS.

21. To them that are without law. The Gentiles, who had no written law, though they had the law written in their hearts; see on Rom. ii. 15. Being not without law to God. Instead of to God and to Christ, the most important MSS. and versions have "of God" and "of Christ"; being not without the law of God, but under the law of Christ.

22. To the weak became I as weak. Those who were conscientiously "scrupulous," even in respect to lawful things. I am made all things to all men. I assumed every shape and form consistent with innocency and perfect integrity; giving up my own will, my own way, my own ease, my own pleasure, and my own profit, that I might save the souls of all. Let those who plead for the system of accommodation on the example of Paul attend to the end he had in view and the manner in which he pursued that end. It was not to get money, influence, or honor, but to save souls! It was not to get ease, but to increase his labors. It was not to save his life, but rather that it should be a sacrifice for the good of immortal souls!

23. And this I do for the gospel's sake. Instead of this, "all things" (I do all things for the gospel's sake), is the reading of many MSS. Several of the fathers have the same reading, and there is much reason to believe it to be genuine. That I might be partaker thereof with you. That I might attain to the reward of eternal life which it sets before me; and this is in all probability the meaning of to evangelion, which we translate "the gospel," and which should be rendered here "prize" or "reward"; this is a frequent meaning of the original word: "I do all this for the sake of the prize, that I may partake of it with you."

24. They which run in a race run all. It is sufficiently evident that the apostle alludes to the athletic exercises in the games which were celebrated every fifth year on the isthmus which joins the Peloponnesus to the mainland, and were thence termed the "Isthmian games."

MATTHEW HENRY

I. It is quite otherwise in the Christian race than in your races; where only one wins the prize. You may all run so as to obtain. You cannot fail if you run well. And it is a glorious contest who shall get first to heaven.

II. He directs them in their course, by setting more fully to view his own example. 1. Those that ran in their games were kept to a set diet, v. 23. "The fighters and wrestlers in your exercises are kept to strict diet and discipline. They use a very spare diet and deny themselves much; so do I; so should you." 2. They were not only temperate, but inured themselves to hardships. Those who fought with one another prepared themselves by beating the air, as the apostle calls it. There is no room for any such exercise in the Christian warfare. Christians are ever in close combat. One enemy the apostle here mentions, namely, the body; this must be kept under, beaten black and blue.

III. The apostle presses this advice by proper arguments drawn from the same contenders. Those who conquered in these games were crowned only with the withering leaves or boughs of trees, of olive, bays, or laurel. But Christians have an incorruptible crown in view. Can they expose their bodies to so much hardship who have no more in view than the trifling huzzas of a giddy multitude, or a crown of leaves? And shall not Christians, who hope for a crown of glory, exert themselves in beating down their fleshly inclinations? All run, but one receives the prize, v. 24.

But the Christian racer is at no such uncertainty. Everyone may run here so as to obtain; but then he must keep to the path of duty prescribed, which is the meaning of running not as uncertainly, v. 26. And would the Grecian racers exert themselves to the very last, when one only could win? And shall not Christians be much more vigorous when all are sure of a crown?

The danger of yielding to fleshly inclinations: I keep my body under, lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway (v. 27), rejected, one to whom the judge or umpire, will not decree the crown. A preacher of salvation may yet miss it. He may show others the way to heaven, and never get thither himself. A holy fear of himself was necessary to preserve the fidelity of an apostle; and how much more necessary is it to our preservation?

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

These periodical games were to the Greeks rather a passion than a mere amusement: hence their suitableness as an image of Christian earnestness. in a race—Greek, "in a race course." all . . . one—Although we knew that one alone could be saved, still it would be well worth our while to run [BENGEL]. Even in the Christian race not "all" who enter on the race win (ch. 10:1-5). So run, that ye may obtain—said parenthetically. These are the words in which the instructors of the young in the exercise schools (gymnasia) and the spectators on the race course exhorted their pupils to stimulate them to put forth all exertions. The gymnasium was a prominent feature in every Greek city. Every candidate had to take an oath that he had been ten months in training, and that he would violate none of the regulations (II Timothy 2:5; cf. I Tim. 4:7, 8). He lived on a strict self-denying diet, refraining from wine and pleasant foods, and enduring cold and heat and most laborious discipline. The "prize" awarded by the judge or umpire was a chaplet of green leaves; at the Isthmus, those of the indigenous pine, for which parsley leaves were temporarily substituted (vs. 25). The Greek for "obtain" is fully obtain. It is in vain to begin, unless we persevere to the end (Matt. 10:22; 24:13; Rev. 2:10). The "so" expresses, Run with such perseverance in the heavenly course, as "all" the runners exhibit in the earthly "race" just spoken of: to the end that ye may attain the prize. 25. striveth—in wrestling: a still more severe contest than the foot race. is temperate—So Paul exercised self-denial, abstaining from claiming sustenance for the sake of the "reward," viz., to "gain the more" (vss. 18, 19). corruptible—soon withering, as being only of fir leaves taken from the fir groves which surrounded the Isthmian race course or stadium. incorruptible—(I Pet. 1:4; 5:4; Rev. 2:10). "Crown" here is not that of a king (which is expressed by a different Greek word, viz., "diadem"), but a wreath or garland. 26. I—Paul returns to his main subject, his own self-denial, and his motive in it. run, not as uncertainly—not as a runner uncertain of the goal. Ye Corinthians gain no end in your entering idol temples or eating idol meats. But I, for my part, in all my acts, whether in my becoming "all things to all men," or in receiving no sustenance from my converts, have a definite end in view, viz., to "gain the more." I know what I aim at, and how to aim at it. He who runs with a clear aim, looks straightforward to the goal, makes it his sole aim, casts away every encumbrance (Heb. 12:1, 2), is indifferent to what the bystanders say, and sometimes even a fall only serves to rouse him the more [BENGEL]. not as one that beateth the air—instead of beating the adversary. Alluding to the sciamachia or sparring in the school in sham-fight (cf. ch. 14:9), wherein they struck out into the air as if at an imaginary adversary. The real adversary is Satan acting on us through the flesh. 27. keep under—lit., "bruise the face under the eyes," so as to render it black and blue; so, to chastise in the most sensitive part. Cf. "mortify the deeds of the body," Romans 8:13; also I Pet. 2:11. It is not ascetic fasts or macerations of the body which are here recommended, but the keeping under of our natural self-seeking, so as, like Paul, to lay ourselves out entirely for the great work. my body—the old man and the remainders of lust in my flesh. "My body," so far as by the flesh it opposes the spirit [ESTIUS] (Gal. 5:17). Men may be severe to their bodies and yet indulge their lust. Ascetic "neglect of the body" may be all the while a more subtile "satisfying of the flesh" (Col. 2:23). Unless the soul keep the body under, the body will get above the soul. The body may be made a good servant, but is a bad master. bring it into subjection—or bondage, as a slave or servant led away captive; so the Greek. preached—lit., "heralded." He keeps up the image from the races. The heralds summoned the candidates for the foot race into the race course [PLATO, Legg. 8. 833], and placed the crowns on the brows of the conquerors, announcing their names [BENGEL]. They probably proclaimed also the laws of the combat; answering to the preaching of the apostles [ALFORD]. The The Christian herald is also a combatant, in which respect he is distinguished from the herald at the games. a castaway—failing shamefully of the prize myself, after I have called others to the contest. Rejected by God, the Judge of the Christian race, notwithstanding my having, by my preaching, led others to be accepted. Cf. the equivalent term, "reprobate," Jeremiah 6:30; II Corinthians 13:6.

ADAM CLARKE

But one receiveth the prize. The apostle places the Christian race in contrast to the Isthmian games; in them, only one received the prize, though all ran; in this, if all run, all will receive the prize. Therefore he says, So run, that ye may obtain. Be as much in earnest to get to heaven as others are to gain their prize; and, although only one of them can win, all of you may obtain.

25. Is temperate in all things. All those who contended in these exercises went through a long state and series of painful preparations. To this exact discipline Epictetus refers, cap. 35: "Do you wish to gain the prize at the Olympic games?—Consider the requisite preparations and the consequences: you must observe a strict regimen; must live on food which you dislike; you must abstain from all delicacies; must exercise yourself at the necessary and prescribed times both in heat and in cold; you must drink nothing cooling; take no wine as formerly; in a word, you must put yourself under the directions of a pugilist, as you would under those of a physician, and afterwards enter the lists. Here you may get your arm broken, your foot put out of joint, be obliged to swallow mouthfuls of dust, to receive many stripes, and after all be conquered." They do it to obtain a corruptible crown. The crown won by the victor in the Olympian games was made of the wild olive. These were all corruptible, for they began to wither as soon as they were separated from the trees or plucked out of the earth. In opposition to these, the apostle says, he contended for an incorruptible crown, the heavenly inheritance.

26. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly. In the foot-course in those games, how many soever ran, only one could have the prize, however strenuously they might exert themselves; therefore all ran uncertainly. But it was widely different in the Christian course; if everyone ran as he ought, each would receive the prize. Not as one that beateth the air. Kypke observes that there are three ways in which persons were said to beat the air: (1) When in practicing for the combat they threw their arms and legs about in different ways, thus practicing the attitudes of offense and defense. (2) Sometimes boxers were to aim blows at their adversaries which they did not intend to take place, and which the others were obliged to exert themselves to prevent as much as if they had been really intended. (3) Pugilists were said to beat the air when they had to contend with a nimble adversary, who, by running from side to side, stooping, and various contortions of the body, eluded the blows of his antagonist; who spent his strength on the air, frequently missing his aim, and sometimes overturning himself in attempting to hit his adversary, who by his agility had been able to elude the blow.

27. But I keep under my body. This is an allusion, not only to boxers, but also to wrestlers in the same games, as we learn from the word hypopiazo, which signifies to "hit in the eyes"; and doulagogo, which signifies to trip, and give the antagonist a fall, and then keep him down when he was down, and having obliged him to acknowledge himself conquered, make him a slave. The apostle considers his body as an enemy with which he must contend; he must mortify it by self-denial, abstinence, and severe labor. It must be the slave of his soul, and not the soul the slave of the body, which in all unregenerate men is the case. Lest . . . when I have preached to others. The word which we translate "having preached" refers to the office of the "herald" at these games, whose business it was to proclaim the conditions of the games, display the prizes, exhort the combatants, excite the emulation of those who were to contend, declare the terms of each contest, pronounce the name of the victors, and put the crown on their heads. Should be a castaway. The word signifies such a person as the judges of the games reject as not having deserved the prize. So Paul himself might be rejected by the great Judge; and to prevent this he ran, he contended, he denied himself, and brought his body into subjection to his spirit, and had his spirit governed by the Spirit of God.

CHAPTER 10

Verses 1-5

He sets before them the example of the Jews. They enjoyed great privileges, but they fell under very grievous punishments.

I. The providence of God towards them, and what happened to them ought to be warnings to us.

II. He specifies some of their privileges. 1. Their deliverance from Egypt. They were miraculously conducted through the Red Sea, where the pursuing Egyptians were drowned: it was a lane to them, but a grave to these. They were very dear to God when he would work such miracles for their deliverance.

2. They had sacraments like ours. They were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea (v. 2).

A. B. SIMPSON:

1. The first great type held forth is the cloud, which led them through the wilderness and covered them as a pavilion from their enemies. It is here spoken of as a divine baptism which came upon them as they passed through the sea. The account of that cloud is very striking and beautiful. First, it preceded and guided them as they went forth out of the land of bondage. So the Holy Spirit leads us out of the world and sin into Christ, going before us at first, while we follow somewhat at a distance. But when at last they came to the deep, dark flood and went down into the death of which it was a symbol, then that cloud that had gone before them gently turned backward, and passing through the camp baptized them into its very substance, covered them over as a pavilion, wrapped itself around them as a garment, penetrated their very being as the element of their living and breathing, and then passed behind and stood above them as a wall of majestic protection from their enemies and a glorious light to shine upon their pathway as they marched on before.

So, after we have followed the Holy Spirit in His earlier leadings, and have come to the place of surrender and death to self and sin, then He comes nearer, passes through our very being, baptizes us into himself and then passes through all our life and becomes our reward, gathering up our past, protecting us as a mighty Providence from all evil, and guarding and guiding all our future way. Beautiful, majestic symbol of the presence of God with His people and the baptism of the Holy Ghost!

2. The next type was the sea. "They were all baptized unto Moses in the sea." There is no doubt that primarily the sea represented our baptism by water. We know the Red Sea represented the idea of their death to the old life of Egypt, and we know that baptism is the symbol of death, for "as many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death."

But it represents much more than the ceremony of baptism. It is a vivid figure of that real death to self and sin in which all true life must begin. This is the first goal to which the Holy Ghost is ever leading us—the grave. It was of this the Master said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with and how am I straitened until it be accomplished," and every true servant must follow Him by the same steps, by the same death. Is it not our deepest need? Is it not the secret of all our failures, all our sorrows, all our defeats? Is it not our deepest desire that we may be dead indeed unto self and sin? Oh, let us go forth with Him to the cross. Let us follow the pillar of cloud and fire down into the very bottom of the sea, and when we reach its depths and all seems lost, then the heavenly cloud will meet us and will enfold us in the bosom of God and baptize us into all His glorious fullness.

CHAPTER 10

Vss. 1-33. DANGER OF FELLOWSHIP WITH IDOLATRY ILLUSTRATED IN THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL: SUCH FELLOWSHIP INCOMPATIBLE WITH FELLOWSHIP IN THE LORD'S SUPPER. EVEN LAWFUL THINGS ARE TO BE FORBORNE, SO AS NOT TO HURT WEAK BRETHREN. 1. Moreover—The oldest MSS. read "for." Thus the connection with the foregoing chapter is expressed. Ye need to exercise self-denying watchfulness notwithstanding all your privileges, lest ye be castaways. FOR the Israelites with all their privileges were most of them castaways through want of it. ignorant—with all your boasted "knowledge." our fathers—The Jewish Church stands in the relation of parent to the Christian Church. all—Arrange as the Greek, "Our fathers were all under the cloud"; giving the "all" its proper emphasis. Not so much as one of so great a multitude was detained by force or disease (Ps. 105:37) [BENGEL]. Five times the "all" is repeated, in the enumeration of the five favors which God bestowed on Israel (vss. 1-4). Five times, correspondingly, they sinned (vss. 6-10). In contrast to the "all" stands "many (rather, 'the most') of them" (vs. 5). All of them had great privileges, yet most of them were castaways through lust. Beware you, having greater privileges, of sharing the same doom through a similar sin. Continuing the reasoning (ch. 9:24), "They which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize." under the cloud—were continually under the defense of the pillar of cloud, the symbol of the divine presence (Exod. 13:21, 22; Ps. 105: 39; cf. Isa. 4:5). passed through the sea—by God's miraculous interposition for them (Exod. 14:29). 2. And—"And so" [BENGEL]. baptized unto Moses—the servant of God and representative of the Old Testament covenant of the law: as Jesus, the Son of God, is of the Gospel covenant (John 1:17; Heb. 3:5, 6). The people were led to believe in Moses as God's servant by the miracle of the cloud protecting them, and by their being conducted under him safely through the Red Sea; therefore they are said to be "baptized unto" him (Exod. 14:31). "Baptized" is here equivalent to "initiated": it is used in accommodation to Paul's argument to the Corinthians; they, it is true, have been "baptized," but so also virtually were the Israelites of old; if the virtual baptism of the latter availed not to save them from the doom of lust, neither will the actual baptism of the former save them. There is a resemblance between the symbols also: for the cloud and sea consist of water, and as these took the Israelites out of sight, and then restored them again to view, so the water does to the baptized [BENGEL]. OLSHAUSEN understands "the cloud" and "the sea" as symbolizing the Spirit and water respectively (John 3:5; Acts 10:44-47). Christ is the pillar-cloud that screens us from the heat of God's wrath. Christ as "the light of the world" is our "pillar of fire" to guide us in the darkness of the world. As the rock when smitten sent forth the waters, so Christ, having been once for all smitten, sends forth the waters of the Spirit. As the manna bruised in mills fed Israel, so Christ, when "it pleased the Lord to bruise Him," has become our spiritual food. A strong proof of inspiration is given in this fact, that the historical parts of Scripture, without the consciousness even of the authors, are covert prophecies of the future. 3. same spiritual meat—As the Israelites had the water from the rock, which answered to baptism, so they had the manna which corresponded to the other of the two Christian sacraments, the Lord's Supper. Paul plainly implies the importance which was attached to these two sacraments by all Christians in those days: "an inspired protest against those who lower their dignity, or deny their necessity" [ALFORD]. Still he guards against the other extreme of thinking the mere external possession of such privileges will ensure salvation. Moreover, had there been seven sacraments, as Rome teaches, Paul would have alluded to them, whereas he refers to only the two. He does not mean by "the same" that the Israelites and we Christians have the "same" sacrament; but that believing and unbelieving Israelites alike had "the same" spiritual privilege of the manna (cf. vs. 17). It was "spiritual meat" or food; because given by the power of God's spirit, not by human labor [GROTIUS and ALFORD]. Galatians 4:29, "born after the Spirit," i.e., supernaturally. Psalm 78:24, "corn of heaven" (Ps. 105:40). Rather, "spiritual" in its typical signification, Christ, the true Bread of heaven, being signified (John 6:32). Not that the Israelites clearly understood the signification; but believers among them would feel that in the type something more was meant; and their implicit and

1. I would not that ye should be ignorant. It seems as if the Corinthians had supposed that their being made partakers of the ordinances of the gospel, such as baptism and the Lord's Supper, would secure their salvation, notwithstanding they might be found partaking of idolatrous feasts; so long, at least, as they considered an idol to be nothing in the world. To remove this destructive supposition, which would have led them to endless errors in both principle and practice, the apostle shows that the Jews had sacramental ordinances in the wilderness, similar to those of the Christians; and that, notwithstanding they had the typical baptism from the cloud, and the typical eucharist from the paschal lamb, and the manna that came down from heaven, yet, when they joined with idolaters and partook of idolatrous feasts, God was not only displeased with them but signified this displeasure by pouring out His judgments upon them, so that in one day 23,000 of them were destroyed.

2. And were all baptized unto Moses. Rather "into Moses", into the covenant of which Moses was the mediator; and by this typical baptism they were brought under the obligation of acting according to the Mosaic precepts, as Christians receiving Christian baptism are said to be baptized "into Christ," and are thereby brought under obligation to keep the precepts of the gospel.

3. Spiritual meat. The manna which is here called spiritual: (1) Because it was provided supernaturally; and, (2) Because it was a type of Christ Jesus, John vi. 31.

MATTHEW HENRY

They did all eat of the same spiritual meat, and drink of the same spiritual drink. These were great privileges. One would think that this should have saved them.

Yet was it otherwise, v. 5. Men may enjoy many and great spiritual privileges in this world, and yet come short of eternal life. Let none presume upon their great privileges.

Verses 6–14

I. Several of their sins are specified as cautions to us. We should shun inordinate desires after carnal objects, v. 6. God fed them with manna, but they must have flesh, Num. xi. 4. Carnal desires get head by indulgence. If once they prevail, and bear sway in us, we know not whither they will carry us.

He warns against idolatry (v. 7). The apostle is speaking to the case of the Corinthians, who were tempted to feast on the heathen sacrifices.

He cautions against fornication, a sin to which the inhabitants of Corinth were in a peculiar manner addicted. How needful was a caution against fornication to those who lived in so corrupt a city! Let us fear the sins of Israel, if we would shun their plagues.

He warns us against tempting Christ (as some of them tempted, and were destroyed of serpents, v. 9), or provoking him to jealousy, v. 22. For which reason God sent fiery serpents among them (Num. xxi. 5, 6). And it is but just to fear that such as tempt Christ under the present dispensation will be left by him in the power of the old serpent.

reverent, though indistinct, faith was counted to them for justification, of which the manna was a kind of sacramental seal. "They are not to be heard which feign that the old fathers did look only for transitory promises" (Article vii, Church of England), as appears from this passage (cf. Heb. 4: 2). 4. drink—(Exod. 17:6). In Numbers 20:8, "the beasts" also are mentioned as having drunk. The literal water typified "spiritual drink," and is therefore so called. spiritual Rock that followed them—rather, "accompanied them." Not the literal rock (or its water) "followed" them, as ALFORD explains, as if Paul sanctioned the Jews' tradition (Rabbi Solomon on Num. 20:2) that the rock itself, or at least the stream from it, followed the Israelites from place to place (cf. Deut. 9:21). But Christ, the "Spiritual Rock" (Ps. 78:20, 35; Deut. 32:4, 15, 18, 30, 31, 37; Isa. 28:16; I Pet. 2:6), accompanied them (Exod. 33:15). "Followed" implies His attending on them to minister to them; thus, though mostly going before them, He, when occasion required it, followed "behind" (Exod. 14:19). He satisfied all alike as to their bodily thirst whenever they needed it; as on three occasions is expressly recorded (Exod. 15:24, 25; 17:6; Num. 20:8); and this drink for the body symbolized the spiritual drink from the Spiritual Rock (cf. John 4:13, 14; see Note, vs. 3). 5. But—though they had so many tokens of God's presence. many of them—rather, "the majority of them"; "the whole part." All except Joshua and Caleb of the first generation. not—in the Greek emphatically standing in the beginning of the sentence: "Not," as one might have naturally expected, "with the more part of them was . . . ." God—whose judgment alone is valid. for—the event showed, they had not pleased God. overthrown—lit., "strewn in heaps." in the wilderness—far from the land of promise. 6. were—Greek, "came to pass as." our examples—samples to us of what will befall us, if we also with all our privileges walk carelessly. lust—the fountain of all the four other offenses enumerated, and therefore put first (Jas. 1:14, 15; cf. Ps. 106: 14). A particular case of lust was that after flesh, when they pined for the fish, leeks, etc., of Egypt, which they had left (Num. 11:4, 33, 34). These are included in the "evil things," not that they are so in themselves, but they became so to the Israelites when they lusted after what God withheld, and were discontented with what God provided. 7. idolaters—A case in point. As the Israelites sat down (a deliberate act), ate, and drank at the idol feast to the calves in Horeb, so the Corinthians were in danger of idolatry by a like act, though not professedly worshipping an idol as the Israelites (ch. 8: 10, 11; 10:14, 20, 21; Exod. 32:6). He passes here from the first to the second person, as they alone (not he also) were in danger of idolatry, etc. He resumes the first person appropriately at the 16th verse. some—The multitude follow the lead of some bad men. play—with lascivious dancing, singing, and drumming round the calf (cf. "rejoiced," Acts 7:41). 8. fornication—lit., Fornication was generally, as in this case (Num. 25), associated at the idol feasts with spiritual fornication, i.e., idolatry. This all applied to the Corinthians (ch. 5:1, 9; 6:9, 15, 18; ch. 8:10). Balaam tempted Israel to both sins with Midian (Rev. 2:14). Cf. ch. 8:7, 9, "stumbling block," "eat . . . thing offered unto . . . idol." three and twenty thousand—in Numbers 25:9 "twenty and four thousand." If this were a real discrepancy, it would militate rather against inspiration of the subject matter and thought, than against verbal inspiration. The solution is: Moses in Numbers includes all who died "in the plague"; Paul, all who died "in one day"; 1000 more may have fallen the next day [KITTO, Biblical Cyclopædia]. Or, the real number may have been between 23,000 and 24,000, say 23,500, or 23,600; when writing generally where the exact figures were not needed, one writer might quite veraciously give one of the two round numbers near the exact one, and the other writer the other [BENGEL]. Whichever be the true way of reconciling the seeming discrepant statements, at least the ways given above prove they are not really irreconcilable. 9. tempt Christ—So the oldest versions, Irenæus (264), and good MSS. read. Some of the oldest MSS. read "Lord"; and one MS. only "God." If "Lord" be read, it will mean Christ. As "Christ" was referred to in one of the five privileges of Israel (vs. 4), so it is natural that He should be mentioned here in one of the five corresponding sins of that people. In Numbers 21:5 it is "spake against God" (whence probably arose the alteration in the one MS., I Cor. 10:9, "God," to harmonize it with Num. 21:5). As either "Christ" or "Lord" is the

4. Spiritual drink. By the spiritual meat and spiritual drink the apostle certainly means both meat and drink which were furnished to the Israelitish assembly miraculously, as well as typically. The spiritual Rock that followed them. It appears that the apostle does not speak about the rock itself, but of Him whom it represented; namely, Christ. This was the Rock that followed them, and ministered to them; and this view of the subject is rendered more probable by what is said, v. 9, that they tempted Christ, and were destroyed by serpents.

5. They were overthrown in the wilderness. And yet all these persons were "under the cloud," "all passed through the sea," all were "baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea," all ate "the same spiritual meat," all drank "the same spiritual drink," for they were made partakers of the spiritual Rock, Christ. Nothing can be a more decisive proof than this that people who have every outward ordinance and are made partakers of the grace of our Lord Jesus may so abuse their privileges and grieve the Spirit of God as to fall from their state of grace and perish everlastingly.

6. These things were our examples. The punishments which God inflicted on them furnish us with evidences of what God will inflict upon us if we sin after the similitude of those transgressors. We should not lust after evil things. It is most evident that the apostle refers here to the history in Num. xi. 4, etc: "And the mixed multitude . . . fell a lusting . . . and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat?" Into the same spirit the Corinthians had most evidently fallen; they lusted after the flesh in the idol feasts, and therefore frequented them to the great scandal of Christianity. The apostle shows them that their sin was of the same nature as that of the murmuring, rebellious Israelites whom God so severely punished; and if He did not spare the natural branches, there was no likelihood that He should spare them.

7. Neither be ye idolaters. The apostle considers partaking of the idolatrous feasts as being the flesh to their gods considered them as feeding invisibly with them on the flesh thus offered, and that everyone that partook of the feast was a real participator with the god to whom the flesh or animal had been offered in sacrifice.

Rose up to play.

The Jews generally explain this word as implying idolatrous acts only. I have considered it as implying acts of impurity, with which idolatrous acts were often accompanied. It also means those dances which were practiced in honor of their gods.

8. Fell in one day three and twenty thousand. In Num. xxv. 9 the number is 24,000; and allowing this to be the genuine reading (and none of the Hebrew MSS. exhibit any various reading in the place), Moses and the apostle may be thus reconciled: In Num. xxv. 4, God commands Moses to "take all the heads [the rulers] of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun"; these possibly amounted to 1,000, and those who fell by the plague were 23,000, so that the whole amounted to 24,000.

9. Neither let us tempt Christ. Instead of Christ several MSS. and a few versions have "the Lord."

MATTHEW HENRY

He warns against murmuring (v. 10). When they met with discouragements in the way to Canaan, they were very apt to fly in the face of their leaders. Something like this seems to have been the case of the Corinthians; they murmured against Paul, and in him against Christ.

II. The apostle subjoins to these particular cautions a more general one (v. 11). Their sins against God were typical of the infidelity of many under the gospel. God's judgments on them were types of spiritual judgments now. Their history was written, to be a standing monitor to the church. Nothing in scripture is written in vain, and it is our wisdom and duty to receive instruction from it.

A caution (v. 12). Others have fallen, and so may we. God has not promised to keep us from falling, if we do not look to ourselves: his protection supposes our own care.

III. He adds a word of comfort, v. 13. Though it is displeasing to God for us to presume, it is not pleasing to him for us to despair. Either our trials will be proportioned to our strength, or strength will be supplied in proportion to our temptations. Others have the like temptations; what they bear up under, and break through, we may also. Men may be false, and the world may be false; but God is faithful, and our strength and security are in him. He is wise as well as faithful. He knows what we can bear. He will take care that we be not overcome, if we rely upon him. He will make a way to escape. There is no valley so dark but he can find a way through it.

IV. "Flee idolatry; shun it." Idolatry is the most heinous affront to the true God. "Seeing you have such encouragement to trust God, be not shaken by any discouragements. God will help you in your trials, and help you out of them." We cannot fall by a temptation if we cleave fast to him.

The apostle urges the general caution against idolatry.

I. An appeal to their own reason and judgment: "I speak to wise men, judge you what I say," v. 15.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

genuine reading, "Christ" must be "God." Cf. "Why do ye tempt the Lord?" (Exod. 17:2, 7. Cf. Rom. 14:11, with Isa. 45:22, 23). Israel's discontented complainings were temptings of Christ especially, the "Angel" of the covenant (Exod. 23:20, 21; 32:34; Isa. 63:9). Though they drank of "that Rock . . . Christ" (vs. 4), they yet complained for want of water (Exod. 17:2, 7). Though also eating the same spiritual meat (Christ, "the true manna," "the bread of life"), they yet murmured, "Our soul loatheth this light bread." In this case, being punished by the fiery serpents, they were saved by the brazen serpent, the emblem of Christ (cf. John 8:56; Heb. 11:26). The Greek for "tempt" means, tempt or try, so as to wear out the long-suffering of Christ (cf. Ps. 95:8, 9; Num. 14:22). The Corinthians were in danger of provoking God's long-suffering by walking on the verge of idolatry, through overweening confidence in their knowledge. 10. some of them . . . murmured—upon the death of Korah and his company, who themselves were murmurers (Num. 16:41, 49). Their murmurs against Moses and Aaron were virtually murmurs against God (cf. Exod. 16:8, 10). Paul herein glances at the Corinthian murmurs against himself, the apostle of Christ. destroyed—14,700 perished. the destroyer—THE same destroying angel sent by God as in Exodus 12:23, and II Samuel 24:16. 11. Now . . . these things . . . ensamples—resuming the thread of vs. 6. The oldest MSS. read, "by way of example." the ends of the world—lit., "of the ages"; the New Testament dispensation in its successive phases (plural, "ends") being the winding up of all former "ages." No new dispensation shall appear till Christ comes as Avenger and Judge; till then the "ends," being many, include various successive periods (cf. Heb. 9:26). As we live in the last dispensation, which is the consummation of all that went before, our responsibilities are the greater; and the greater is the guilt, Paul implies, to the Corinthians, which they incur if they fall short of their privileges. 12. thinketh he standeth—stands and thinks that he stands [BENGEL]; i.e., stands "by faith" "well pleasing" to God; in contrast to vs. 5, "with many of them God was not well pleased" (Rom. 11:20). fall—from his place in the Church of God (cf. vs. 8, "fell"). Both temporally and spiritually (Rom. 14:4). Our security, so far as relates to God, consists in faith; so far as relates to ourselves, it consists in fear. 13. Consolation to them, under their temptation; it is none but such as is "common to man," or "such as man can bear," "adapted to man's powers of endurance" [WAHL]. faithful—(Ps. 125:3; Isa. 27:3, 8; Rev. 3:10). "God is faithful" to the covenant which He made with you in calling you (I Thess. 5:24). To be led into temptation is distinct from running into it, which would be "tempting God" (vs. 9; Matt. 4:7). way to escape—(Jer. 29:11; II Pet. 2:9). The Greek is, "the way of escape"; the appropriate way of escape in each particular temptation; not an immediate escape, but one in due time, after patience has had her perfect work (Jas. 1:2-4,12). He "makes" the way of escape simultaneously with the temptation which His providence permissively aranges for His people. to bear it—Greek, "to bear up under it," or "against it." Not, He will take it away (II Cor. 12:7-9). 14. Resuming the argument, vs. 7; ch. 8: 9, 10. flee—Do not tamper with it by doubtful acts, such as eating idol meats on the plea of Christian liberty. The only safety is in wholly shunning whatever borders on idolatry (II Cor. 6:16, 17). The Holy Spirit herein also presciently warned the Church against the idolatry, subsequently transferred from the idol feast to the Lord's Supper itself, in the figment of transubstantiation. 15. Appeal to their own powers of judgment to weigh the force of the argument that follows: viz., that as the partaking of the Lord's Supper involves a partaking of the Lord Himself, and the partaking of the Jewish sacrificial meats involved a partaking of the altar of God, and, as the heathens sacrifice to devils, to partake of an idol feast is to have fellowship with devils. We cannot divest ourselves of the responsibility of "judging" for ourselves. The weakness of private judgment is not an argument against its use, but its abuse. We should the more take pains in searching the infallible word, with every aid within our reach, and above all with humble prayer for the Spirit's teaching (Acts 17:11). If Paul, an inspired apostle, not only permits, but urges, men to judge his sayings by Scripture, much more should the fallible ministers of the present visible Church do so. To wise men—refers with a mixture of irony to the Corinthian boast of "wisdom" (ch. 4:40; II Cor. 11:19). Here you have an opportunity of exercising your "wisdom" in judging "what I say."

ADAM CLARKE

10. Neither murmur ye. It appears from what the apostle says here that the Corinthians were murmuring against God and His apostle for prohibiting them from partaking of the idolatrous feasts, just as the Israelites did in the wilderness in reference to a similar subject. Destroyed of the destroyer. The Jews suppose that God employed destroying angels to punish those rebellious Israelites; they were five in number, and one of them they call the destroyer.

11. Upon whom the ends of the world are come. The end of the times included within the whole duration of the Mosaic economy. For although the word aion means in its primary sense "endless being" or duration, yet in its accommodated sense it is applied to any round or duration that is complete in itself; and here it evidently means the whole duration of the Mosaic economy. We are to consider the apostle's words as referring to the end of the Jewish dispensation and the commencement of the Christian, which is the last dispensation which God will vouchsafe to man in the state of probation.

12. Let him that thinketh he standeth. "Let him who most confidently standeth"—him who has the fullest conviction in his own conscience that his heart is right with God, and that his mind is right in the truth—take heed lest he fall from his faith, and from the state of holiness in which the grace of God has placed him. I have already shown that the verb dokein, which we render "to seem, to think, to suppose," is used by the best Greek writers, not to lessen or weaken the sense, but to render it stronger and more emphatic. In a state of probation everything may change; while we are in this life we may stand or fall. Our standing in the faith depends on our union with God, and that depends on our watching unto prayer and continuing to possess that faith that worketh by love. The highest saint under heaven can stand no longer than he depends upon God and continues in the obedience of faith. He that ceases to do so will fall into sin and get a darkened understanding and a hardened heart, and he may continue in this state till God comes to take away his soul. Therefore "let him who most assuredly standeth take heed lest he fall"; not only partially, but finally.

13. But such as is common to man. Chrysostom has properly translated this word "small, short, moderate." Your temptations or trials have been but trifling in comparison of those endured by the Israelites; they might have been easily resisted and overcome. Besides, God will not suffer you to be tried above the strength He gives you; but as the trial comes, He will provide you with sufficient strength to resist it; as the trial comes in, He will make your way out. The words are very remarkable, "He will, with the temptation, make the deliverance, or way out." Satan is never permitted to block up our way without the providence of God making a way through the wall.

14. Wherefore . . . flee from idolatry. This is a trial of no great magnitude; to escape from so gross a temptation requires but a moderate portion of grace and circumspection.

15. I speak as to wise men. The Corinthians valued themselves not a little on their wisdom and various gifts; the apostle admits this and draws an argument from it against themselves. As you are so wise, surely you can see the propriety of abominating idolatry of every kind; for an idol is nothing in the world and can do nothing for you and nothing against you.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He lays down his argument from the Lord's supper. Is not this sacred rite a token whereby we professedly hold communion with Christ?

Thus to partake of the Lord's table is to profess ourselves his guests and covenant people; and this in conjunction with all true Christians, with whom we have communion also in this ordinance (v. 17).

III. He confirms this from the Jewish worship and customs. Those who were admitted to eat of the offerings were reckoned to partake of the sacrifice itself, and therefore surely to worship God.

IV. He applies this to the argument against feasting with idolaters on their sacrifices. An idol was nothing. What was sacrificed to idols was nothing. But the eating of it as a part of a heathen sacrifice was, (1) A partaking with them in their idolatry, just as he who eats the Lord's supper is supposed to partake in the Christian sacrifice. "Therefore do not feast on their sacrifices. I would not have you be in communion with devils." (2) It was a virtual renouncing of Christianity, v. 21. Communion with Christ, and communion with devils, could never be had at once. One must be renounced, if the other was maintained. How much reason have we to look to it that every sin and idol be renounced by us, when we eat and drink at the Lord's table.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

16. The cup of blessing—answering to the Jewish "cup of blessing," over which thanks were offered in the Passover. It was in doing so that Christ instituted this part of the Lord's Supper (Matt. 26. 27; Luke 22:17, 20). we bless—"we," not merely ministers, but also the congregation. The minister "blesses" (i.e., consecrates with blessing) the cup, not by any priestly transmitted authority of his own, but as representative of the congregation, who virtually through him bless the cup. The consecration is the corporate act of the whole Church. The act of joint blessing by him and them (not "the cup" itself, which, as also "the bread," in the Greek is in the accusative), and the consequent drinking of it together, constitute the communion, i.e., the joint participation "of the blood of Christ." Cf. vs. 18, "They who eat . . . are partakers" (joint communicants). "Is" in both cases in this verse is literal, not represents. He who with faith partakes of the cup and the bread, partakes really but spiritually of the blood and body of Christ (Eph. 5:30, 32), and of the benefits of His sacrifice on the cross (cf. vs. 18). In contrast to this is to have "fellowship with devils" (vs. 20). ALFORD explains, "The cup . . . is the [joint] participation (i.e., that whereby the act of participation takes place) of the blood . . . ." It is the seal of our living union with, and a means of our partaking of, Christ as our Saviour (John 6:53-57). It is not said, "The cup . . . is the blood," or "the bread . . . is the body," but "is the communion [joint-participation] of the blood . . . body." If the bread be changed into the literal body of Christ, where is the sign of the sacrament? Romanists eat Christ "in remembrance of Himself." To drink literal blood would have been an abomination to Jews, which the first Christians were (Lev. 17:11, 12). Breaking the bread was part of the act of consecrating it, for thus was represented the crucifixion of Christ's body (I Cor. 11:24). The distinct specification of the bread and the wine disproves the Romish doctrine of concomitancy, and exclusion of the laity from the cup. 17. one bread—rather, "loaf." One loaf alone seems to have been used in each celebration. and one body—Omit "and"; "one loaf [that is], one body." "We, the many (viz., believers assembled; so the Greek), are one bread (by our partaking of the same loaf, which becomes assimilated to the substance of all our bodies; and so we become), one body" (with Christ, and so with one another). we . . . all—Greek, "the whole of us." 18. Israel after the flesh—the literal, as distinguished from the spiritual, Israel (Rom. 2: 29; 4:1; 9:3; Gal. 4:29). partakers of the altar—and so of God, whose is the altar; they have fellowship in God and His worship, of which the altar is the symbol. 19, 20. What say I then?—The inference might be drawn from the analogies of the Lord's Supper and Jewish sacrifices, that an idol is really what the heathen thought it to be, a god, and that in eating idol meats they had fellowship with the god. This verse guards against such an inference: "What would I say then? that a thing sacrificed to an idol is any real thing (in the sense that the heathen regard it), or that an idol is any real thing?" (The oldest MSS. read the words in this order. Supply "Nay";) "But [I say] that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils" (demons). Paul here introduces a new fact. It is true that, as I said, an idol has no reality in the sense that the heathen regard it, but it has a reality in another sense; heathendom being under Satan's dominion as "prince of this world," he and his demons are in fact the powers worshipped by the heathen, whether they are or are not conscious of it (Deut. 32:17; Lev. 17:7; II Chron. 11:15; Ps. 106. 37; Rev. 9:20). "Devil" is in the Greek restricted to Satan; "demons" is the term applied to his subordinate evil spirits. Fear, rather than love, is the motive of heathen worship (cf. the English word "panic," from PAN, whose human form with horns and cloven hoofs gave rise to the vulgar representations of Satan which prevail now); just as fear is the spirit of Satan and his demons (Jas. 2:19). I would not that ye . . . have fellowship with devils—by partaking of idol feasts (ch. 8:10). 21. Ye cannot . . .—really and spiritually; though ye may outwardly (I Kings 18:21). cup of devils—in contrast to the cup of the Lord. At idol feasts libations were usually made from the cup to the idol first, and then the guests drank; so that in drinking they had fellowship with the idol. the Lord's table—The Lord's Supper is a feast on a table, not a sacrifice on an altar. Our only altar is the cross, our only sacrifice that of Christ once for all. The Lord's Supper stands, however, in the same relation, analogically, to Christ's sacrifice, as the Jews' sacrificial feasts did to their sacrifices (cf. Mal. 1:7, "altar . . .

ADAM CLARKE

16. The cup of blessing. The apostle speaks here of the Eucharist, which he illustrates by the cup of blessing, over which thanks were expressed at the conclusion of the Passover.

The communion of the blood of Christ. We who partake of this sacred cup in commemoration of the death of Christ are made partakers of His body and blood and thus have fellowship with Him, as those who partake of an idol feast thereby, as much as they can, participate with the idol to whom the sacrifice was offered.

17. For we being many are one bread. The original would be better translated thus: "Because there is one bread, or loaf, we, who are many, are one body." As only one loaf was used at the Passover, and those who partook of it were considered to be one religious body, so we who partake of the eucharistical bread and wine, in commemoration of the sacrificial death of Christ, are one spiritual society, because we are all made partakers of that one Christ whose blood was shed for us to make an atonement for our sins, as the blood of the paschal lamb was shed and sprinkled in reference to this of which it was the type.

18. Behold Israel after the flesh. The Jews not yet converted to Christianity, the latter being Israel after the Spirit. As the design of the apostle was to withdraw his converts at Corinth from all temptations to idolatry, he produces two examples to show the propriety of his endeavors. (1) All who join together in celebrating the Lord's Supper, and are partakers of that one bread, give proof by this that they are Christians and have fellowship with Christ. (2) All the Israelites who offer sacrifice and partake of those sacrifices give proof thereby that they are Jews, and are in fellowship with the object of their worship. So they who join in idol festivals and eat things which have been offered to idols give proof that they are in communion with those idolaters, and that they have fellowship with the demons they worship.

19. What say I then? A Jewish phrase for, "I conclude." And this is his conclusion: that although an idol is nothing, has neither power nor influence, nor are things offered to idols anything the worse for being thus offered, yet, as the things sacrificed by the Gentiles are sacrificed to demons and not to God, those who partake of them have fellowship with demons. Those who profess Christianity cannot have fellowship with both Christ and the devil.

21. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord. It is in vain that you who frequent these idol festivals profess the religion of Christ and commemorate His death and passion in the holy Eucharist; for you cannot have that fellowship with Christ which this ordinance implies while you are partakers of the table of demons.

MATTHEW HENRY

V. He warns them that God is a jealous God (v. 22). Those who have fellowship with other gods provoke him to jealousy. And, before this be done, persons should consider whether they are stronger than he. It is a dangerous thing to provoke God's anger, unless we could withstand his power. Shall we rouse almighty wrath? Are we a match for God?

Verses 23–33

In what instances Christians might lawfully eat what had been sacrificed to idols.

I. That may be lawful which is not expedient, which will not edify. He must be concerned not to hurt his neighbour, nay, he must be concerned to promote his welfare. Those who allow themselves in everything not plainly sinful in itself will often run into what is evil by accident. The welfare of others, as well as our own convenience, must be consulted in many things we do.

II. He tells them that what was sold in the shambles they might eat without asking questions. They need not be so scrupulous as to ask the butcher whether the meat he sold had been offered to an idol? It was there sold as common food, and as such might be bought and used; for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof (v. 26).

III. If they were invited by any heathen acquaintances to a feast, they might go, and eat what was set before them, without asking questions (v. 27). There is a civility owing even to infidels and heathens. Anything fit to be eaten, that was set before them, they might lawfully eat. It is to be understood of civil feasting, not religious. At a common feast they might expect common food.

IV. Yet, if any should say it was a thing that had been offered to idols, they should refrain. They should refrain for his sake who suggested this to them, and for conscience' sake, out of regard to conscience. Christians should be very cautious of doing what may thus prejudice the consciences of others.

V. He urges them to refrain where they will give offence. Christians should take care not to use their liberty to the hurt of others, nor their own reproach.

table of the Lord"), and the heathen idol feasts to their idolatrous sacrifices (Isa. 65:11). The heathen sacrifices were offered to idol nonentities, behind which Satan lurked. The Jews' sacrifice was but a shadow of the substance which was to come. Our one sacrifice of Christ is the only substantial reality; therefore, while the partaker of the Jew's sacrificial feast partook rather "of the altar" (vs. 18) than of GOD manifested fully, and the heathen idol-feaster had fellowship really with demons, the communicant in the Lord's Supper has in it a real communion of, or fellowship in, the body of Christ once sacrificed, and now exalted as the Head of redeemed humanity. 22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy?—by dividing our fellowship between Him and idols (Ezek. 20:39). Is it our wish to provoke Him to assert His power? Deuteronomy 32:21 is before the apostle's mind [ALFORD], (Exod. 20:5). are we stronger?—that we can risk a contest with Him. 23. All things are lawful for me . . .—Recurring to the Corinthian plea (ch. 6:12), he repeats his qualification of it. The oldest MSS. omit both times "for me." edify not—tend not to build up the spiritual temple, the Church, in faith and love. Paul does not appeal to the apostolic decision (Acts 15), which seems to have been not so much regarded outside of Palestine, but rather to the broad principle of true Christian freedom, which does not allow us to be governed by external things, as though, because we can use them, we must use them (ch. 6:12). Their use or non-use is to be regulated by regard to edification. 24. (Vs. 33; ch. 13:5; Rom. 15:1, 2.) 25. shambles—butchers' stalls; the flesh-market. asking no question—whether it has been offered to an idol or not. for conscience' sake—If on asking you should hear it had been offered to idols, a scruple would arise in your conscience which was needless, and never would have arisen had you asked no questions. 26. The ground on which such eating without questioning is justified is, the earth and all its contents ("the fulness thereof," Ps. 20:1; 50:12), including all meats, belong to the Lord, and are appointed for our use; and where conscience suggests no scruple, all are to be eaten (Rom. 14:14, 20; I Tim. 4:4, 5; cf. Acts 10:15). 27. ye be disposed to go—tacitly implying, they would be as well not to go, but yet not forbidding them to go (vs. 9) [GROTIUS]. The feast is not an idol feast, but a general entertainment, at which, however, there might be meat that had been offered to an idol. for conscience' sake—See Note, vs. 25. 28. if any man—a weak Christian at table, wishing to warn his brother. offered in sacrifice unto idols—The oldest MSS. omit "unto idols." At a heathen's table the expression, offensive to him, would naturally be avoided. for conscience' sake—not to cause a stumbling block to the conscience of thy weak brother (ch. 8:10-12). for the earth is the Lord's, . . .—not in the oldest MSS. 29. Conscience . . . of the other—the weak brother introduced in vs. 28. for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?—Paul passes to the first person, to teach his converts by putting himself as it were in their position. The Greek terms for "the other" and "another" are distinct. "The other" is the one with whom Paul's and his Corinthian converts' concern is; "another" is any other with whom he and they have no concern. If a guest know the meat to be idol meat while I know it not, I have "liberty" to eat without being condemned by his "conscience" [GROTIUS]. Thus the "for . . ." is an argument for vs. 27, "Eat, asking no questions." Or, Why should I give occasion by the rash use of my liberty that another should condemn it [ESTIUS], or that my liberty should cause the destruction of my weak brother?" [MENOCHIUS.] Or, the words are those of the Corinthian objector (perhaps used in their letter, and so quoted by Paul), "Why is my liberty judged by another's conscience?" Why should not I be judged only by my own, and have liberty to do whatever it sanctions? Paul replies in vs. 31, Your doing so ought always to be limited by regard to what most tends "to the glory of God" [VATABLUS, CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. The first explanation is simplest; the "for . . ." in it refers to "not thine own" (i.e., "not my own," in Paul's change to the first person); I am to abstain only in the case of liability to offend another's conscience; in cases where my own has no scruple, I am not bound, in God's judgment, by any other conscience than my own. 30. For—The oldest MSS. omit "For." by grace—rather, "thankfully" [ALFORD]. I . . . be partaker—I partake of the food set before me. evil spoken of—by him who does not use his liberty, but will eat nothing without scrupulosity and questioning whence the meat comes. give thanks—which con-

22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? All idolatry is represented as a sort of spiritual adultery. It is giving that heart to Satan that should be devoted to God; and He is represented as being jealous because of the infidelity of those who have covenanted to give their hearts to Him. Are we stronger than he? As He has threatened to punish such transgressors and will infallibly do it, can we resist His omnipotence? A sinner should consider, while he is in rebellion against God, whether he be able to resist that power whereby God will inflict vengeance.

23. All things are lawful for me. I may lawfully eat all kinds of food, but all things are not expedient. It would not be "becoming" in me to eat of all, because I should by this offend and grieve many weak minds.

24. Let no man seek his own. Let none for his private gratification or emolument disturb the peace or injure the soul of another. Let every man live, not for himself, but for every part of the great human family with which he is surrounded.

25. Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat. The case to which the apostle refers is simply this: It was customary to bring the flesh of the animal to market, the blood of which had been poured out in sacrifice to an idol. Or, taken more particularly, the case was this: One part of the sacrifice was consumed on the altar of the idol; a second part was dressed and eaten by the sacrificer; and a third belonged to the priest, and was often sold in the shambles. To partake of the second share, or to feast upon the sacrifice, Paul absolutely forbids, because this was one part of the religious worship which was paid to the idol; it was sitting down as guests at his table, in token that they were in fellowship with him. This was utterly incompatible with receiving the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which was the communion of the body and blood of Christ. But as to the third share, the apostle leaves them at liberty either to eat of it or forbear—except that, by eating, their weak brethren should be offended; in that case, though the thing was lawful, it was their duty to abstain.

26. For the earth is the Lord's. And because God made the earth and its fullness, all animals, plants, and vegetables, there can be nothing in it or them impure or unholy, because all are the creatures of God.

27. If any . . . bid you to a feast. The apostle means any common meal, not an idol festival; for to such no Christian could lawfully go. Whatsoever is set before you, eat. Do not act as the Jews generally do, torturing both themselves and others with questions.

28. This is offered in sacrifice unto idols. While they were not apprized of this circumstance they might lawfully eat; but when told that the flesh set before them had been offered to an idol, then they were not to eat, for the sake of his weak conscience who pointed out the circumstance. For the apostle still takes it for granted that even the flesh offered in sacrifice to an idol might be eaten innocently at any private table, as in that case they were no longer in danger of being partakers with devils, as this was no idol festival. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. This whole clause, which appears also in v. 26, is wanting here in a number of MSS. and in several of the fathers. It has scarcely any authority to support it.

29-30. For why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience? Though in the case of flesh offered to idols and other matters connected with idolatry (on which it appears there was much of a tender conscience among some of the Corinthians) it was necessary to sacrifice something to an overscrupulous conscience, yet the gospel of Christ did not lay any man under this general burden, that he must do nothing at which any weak brother might feel hurt or be stumbled; for the liberty of the gospel must not take for its rule the scrupulosity of any conscience. For if a man, by grace—by the allowance or authority of the gospel—partake of anything that God's bounty has sent and which the gospel has not forbidden and give thanks to God for the blessing, no man has right or

VI. The apostle takes occasion from this discourse to lay down a general rule for Christians' conduct (v. 31, 32). In all we do, we should aim at the glory of God. And therefore nothing should be done by us to offend any, whether Jew, or Gentile, or the church, v. 32. Our own humour and appetite must not determine our practice, but the honour of God and the good and edification of the church.

VII. He presses all upon them by his own example, v. 33. A preacher may press his advice home with boldness and authority when he can enforce it with his own example. And it is highly commendable in a minister to neglect his own advantage that he may promote the salvation of his hearers.

Verses 1–16

Be ye followers of me, as I also am of Christ (v. 1). It is plain that Paul not only preached such doctrine as they ought to believe, but led such a life as they ought to imitate. Ministers are likely to preach most to the purpose when they can press their hearers to follow their example. Yet would not Paul be followed blindly. He would be followed himself no further than he followed Christ. Christ's pattern is a copy without a blot; so is no man's else. He passes next to reprehend an indecency among them, of which the women were more especially guilty.

I. A commendation of what was praiseworthy in them (v. 2). When we reprove what is amiss in any, it is very prudent and fit to commend what is good in them.

II. The superiority of the man over the woman. Christ is at the head of mankind. In this high office he has a superior, God being his head. And as God is the head of Christ, and Christ the head of the whole human kind, so the man is the head of the two sexes: and the woman should be in subjection and not usurp the man's place. The women of the church of Corinth prayed and prophesied even in their assemblies, v. 5. It is indeed an apostolical canon, that the women should keep silence in the churches (ch. xiv. 34; 1 Tim. ii. 12). The apostle does not in this place prohibit the thing, but reprehend the manner of doing it. The manner of doing a thing enters into the morality of it. We must not only be concerned to do good, but that the good we do be well done.

III. The thing he reprehends is the woman's praying or prophesying uncovered, or the man's doing either covered, v. 4, 5.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

secrates all the Christian's acts (Rom. 14:6; I Tim. 4:3, 4).

31. Contrast Zechariah 7:6; the picture of worldly men. The godly may "eat and drink," and it shall be well with him (Jer. 22:15, 16). to the glory of God—(Col. 3:17; I Pet. 4:11)—which involves our having regard to the edification of our neighbor.

32. Give none offence—in things indifferent (ch. 8:13; Rom. 14:13; II Cor. 6:3); for in all essential things affecting Christian doctrine and practice, even in the smallest detail, we must not swerve from principle, whatever offense may be the result (ch. 1:23). Giving offense is unnecessary, if our own spirit cause it; necessary, if it be caused by the truth. 33. I please—I try to please (ch. 9:19, 22; Rom. 15:2). not seeking mine own—(vs. 24). many—rather as Greek, "THE many."

Vss. 1-34. CENSURE ON DISORDERS IN THEIR ASSEMBLIES: THEIR WOMEN NOT BEING VEILED, AND ABUSES AT THE LOVE-FEASTS. 1. Rather belonging to the end of ch. 10, than to this chapter. followers—Greek, "imitators." of Christ—who did not please Himself (Rom. 15:3); but gave Himself, at the cost of laying aside His divine glory, and dying as man, for us (Eph. 5:2; Phil. 2:4, 5). We are to follow Christ first, and earthly teachers only so far as they follow Christ. 2. Here the chapter ought to begin. ye remember me in all things—in your general practice, though in the particular instances which follow ye fail. ordinances—Greek, "traditions," i.e., apostolic directions given by word of mouth or in writing (vs. 23; ch. 15:3; II Thess. 2:15). The reference here is mainly to ceremonies: for in vs. 23, as to the LORD'S SUPPER, which is not a mere ceremony, he says, not merely, "I delivered unto you," but also, "I received of the Lord"; here he says only, "I delivered to you." Romanists argue hence for oral traditions. But the difficulty is to know what is a genuine apostolic tradition intended for all ages. Any that can be proved to be such ought to be observed; any that cannot, ought to be rejected (Rev. 22:18). Those preserved in the written word alone can be proved to be such. 3. The Corinthian women, on the ground of the abolition of distinction of sexes in Christ, claimed equality with the male sex, and, overstepping the bounds of propriety, came forward to pray and prophesy without the customary headcovering of females. The Gospel, doubtless, did raise women from the degradation in which they had been sunk, especially in the East. Yet, while on a level with males as to the offer of, and standing in grace (Gal. 3:28), their subjection in point of order, modesty, and seemliness, is to be maintained. Paul reproves here their unseemliness as to dress: in ch. 14:34, as to the retiring modesty in public which becomes them. He grounds his reproof here on the subjection of woman to man in the order of creation. the head—an appropriate expression, when he is about to treat of woman's appropriate headdress in public. of every man . . . Christ—(Eph. 5:23). of . . . woman . . . man—(*V.*8; Gen. 3:16; I Tim. 2:11, 12; I Pet. 3:1, 5, 6). head of Christ is God—(ch. 3: 23; 15:27, 28; Luke 3:22, 38; John 14:28; 20:17; Eph. 3:9). "Jesus, therefore, must be of the same essence as God: for, since the man is the head of the woman, and since the head is of the same essence as the body, and God is the head of the Son, it follows the Son is of the same essence as the Father" [S. CHRYSOSTOM]. "The woman is of the essence of the man, and not made by the man; so, too, the Son is not made by the Father, but of the essence of the Father" [THEODORET, t. 3, p. 171]. 4. praying—in public (vs. 17). prophesying—preaching in the Spirit (ch. 12:10). having—i.e., if he were to have: a supposed case to illustrate the impropriety in the woman's case. It was the Greek custom (and so that at Corinth) for men in worship to be uncovered; whereas the Jews wore the Talith, or veil, to show reverence before God, and their unworthiness to look on Him (Isa. 6:2); however, authority to condemn such a person. This seems to be the meaning of these two verses; and they read a lesson of caution to rash judges, and to those who are apt to take offense.

31. Whether therefore ye eat, or drink. As no general rule can be laid down in reference to the above particulars, there is one maxim of which no Christian must lose sight—that whether he eats or drinks of this or the other kind of aliments, or whatever else he may do, he must do it so as to bring glory to God. This is a sufficient rule to regulate every man's conscience and practice in all indifferent things, where there are no express commands or prohibitions.

32. Give none offence. Scrupulously avoid giving any cause of offense either to the unconverted Jews or to the unconverted Gentiles, so as to prejudice them against Christianity; nor to the church of God, made up of converts from the above parties.

33. Even as I please all men. Act as I do. Forgetting myself, my own interests, convenience, ease, and comfort, I labor for the welfare of others, and particularly that they may be saved. How blessed and amiable were the spirit and conduct of this holy man!

1. Be ye followers of me. This verse certainly belongs to the preceding chapter, and is here out of all proper place and connection.

2. That ye remember me in all things. It appears that the apostle had previously given them a variety of directions relative to the matters mentioned here; that some had paid strict attention to them, and that others had not; and that contentions and divisions were the consequences, which he here reproves and endeavors to rectify.

3. The head of every man is Christ. The apostle is speaking particularly of Christianity and its ordinances. Christ is the Head or Author of this religion and is the Creator, Preserver, and Lord of every man. The man also is the lord or head of the woman; and the Head or Lord of Christ, as Mediator between God and man, is God the Father. Here is the order—God sends His Son, Jesus Christ, to redeem man; Christ comes and lays down His life for the world; every man who receives Christianity confesses that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father; and every believing woman will acknowledge, according to Gen. iii. 16, that God has placed her in a dependence on the subjection to the man. So far there is no difficulty in this passage.

4. Praying or prophesying. Any person who engages in public acts in the worship of God, whether prayer, singing, or exhortation; for we learn from the apostle himself that "to prophesy" signifies to speak "unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort," chap. xiv. 3. And this comprehends all that we understand by exhortation, or even preaching. Having his head

IV. The reasons on which he grounds his reprehension. The man that prays or prophesies with his head covered dishonoureth his head, namely, Christ, the head of every man (v. 3).

The woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head, namely, the man, v. 3. She appears in the dress of her superior, and throws off the token of her subjection. The sexes should not affect to change places. The woman should keep to the rank God has chosen for her.

A. T. ROBERTSON:

5. "With her head unveiled" (akatakaluptoi tei kephalei). Associative instrumental case of manner and the predicative adjective (compound adjective and feminine form same as masculine), "with the head unveiled." Probably some of the women had violated this custom. "Amongst Greeks only the hetairai, so numerous in Corinth, went about unveiled; slave women wore the shaven head—also a punishment of the adulteress" (Findlay). "One and the same thing as if she were shaven" (hen kai to auto tei exuremenei). Literally, "One and the same thing with the one shaven" (associative instrumental case again, Robertson, Grammar p. 530). Perfect passive articular participle of the verb xurao, later form for the old xureo. It is public praying and prophesying that the Apostle here has in mind. He does not here condemn the act, but the breach of custom which would bring reproach. A woman convicted of adultery had her hair shorn (Isa. 7:20). The Justinian code prescribed shaving the head for an adulteress whom the husband refused to receive after two years. Paul does not tell Corinthian Christian women to put themselves on a level with courtesans.

—Word Pictures in the New Testament

The man is the image and glory of God. It is the man who is set at the head of this lower creation, and therein he bears the resemblance of God. The woman, on the other hand, is the glory of the man (v. 7).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Maimonides (Mishna) excepts cases where (as in Greece) the custom of the place was different. dishonoureth his head—not as ALFORD, "Christ" (vs. 3): but literally, as "his head" is used in the beginning of the verse. He dishonoreth his head (the principal part of the body) by wearing a covering or veil, which is a mark of subjection, and which makes him look downwards instead of upwards to his Spiritual Head, Christ, to whom alone he owes subjection. Why, then, ought not man to wear the covering in token of his subjection to Christ, as the woman wears it in token of her subjection to man? "Because Christ is not seen: the man is seen; so the covering of him who is under Christ is not seen; of her who is under the man, is seen" [BENGEL]. (Cf. vs. 7.) 5. woman . . . prayeth . . . prophesieth—This instance of women speaking in public worship is an extraordinary case, and justified only by the miraculous gifts which such women possessed as their credentials; for instance, Anna the prophetess and Priscilla (so Acts 2:18). The ordinary rule to them is: silence in public (ch. 14:34, 35; I Tim. 2:11, 12). Mental receptivity and activity in family life are recognized in Christianity, as most accordant with the destiny of woman. This passage does not necessarily sanction women speaking in public, even though possessing miraculous gifts; but simply records what took place at Corinth, without expressing an opinion on it, reserving the censure of it till ch. 14:34, 35. Even those women endowed with prophecy were designed to exercise their gift, rather in other times and places, than the public congregation. dishonoureth . . . head—in that she acts against the divine ordinance and the modest propriety that becomes her: in putting away the veil, she puts away the badge of her subjection to man, which is her true "honor"; for through him it connects her with Christ, the head of the man. Moreover, as the head-covering was the emblem of maiden modesty before man (Gen. 24:65), and conjugal chastity (Gen. 20:16); so, to uncover the head indicated withdrawal from the power of the husband, whence a suspected wife had her head uncovered by the priest (Num. 5:18). ALFORD takes "her head" to be man, her symbolical, not her literal head; but as it is literal in the former clause, it must be so in the latter one. all one as if . . . shaven—As woman's hair is given her by nature, as her covering (vs. 15), to cut it off like a man, all admit, would be indecorous: therefore, to put away the head-covering, too, like a man, would be similarly indecorous. It is natural to her to have long hair for her covering: she ought, therefore, to add the other (the wearing of a head-covering) to show that she does of her own will that which nature itself teaches she ought to do, in token of her subjection to man. 6. A woman would not like to be "shorn" or (what is worse) "shaven"; but if she chooses to be uncovered (unveiled) in front, let her be so also behind, i.e., "shorn." a shame—an unbecoming thing (cf. vss. 13-15). Thus the shaving of nuns is "a shame." 7-9. Argument, also, from man's more immediate relation to God, and the woman's to man. man . . . image . . . glory of God—being created in God's "image," first and directly: the woman, subsequently, and indirectly, through the mediation of man. Man is the representative of God's "glory" this ideal of man being realized most fully in the Son of man (Ps. 8:4, 5; cf. II Cor. 8:23). Man is declared in Scripture to be both the "image," and in the "likeness," of God (cf. Jas. 3:9). But "image" alone is applied to the Son of God (Col. 1:15; cf. Heb. 1:3). "Express image," Greek, "the impress." The Divine Son is not merely "like" God, He is God of God, "being of one substance (essence) with the Father." [NICENE CREED]. woman . . . glory of . . . man—He does not say, also, "the image of the man." For the sexes differ: moreover, the woman is created in the image of God, as well as the man (Gen. 1:26, 27). But as the moon in relation to the sun (Gen. 37:9), so woman shines not so much with light direct from God, as with light derived from man, i.e., in her order in creation; not that she does not in grace come individually into direct communion with God; but even here much of her knowledge is mediately given her through man, on whom she is naturally dependent. 8. is of . . . of—takes his being from ("out of") . . . from: referring to woman's original creation, "taken out of man" (cf. Gen. 2:23). The woman was made by God mediately through the man, who was, as it were, a veil or medium placed between her and God, and therefore, should wear the veil or head-covering in public worship, in acknowledgement of this subordination to man in the order of creation. The man being made immediately by God as His glory, has no veil between him-covered, with his cap or turban on, dishonoureth his head, because the head being covered was a sign of subjection; and while he was employed in the public ministration of the Word he was to be considered as a representative of Christ, and on this account his being veiled or covered would be improper. This decision of the apostle was in point-blank hostility to the canons of the Jews; for they would not suffer a man to pray unless he was veiled, for which they gave this reason: "He should veil himself to show that he is ashamed before God, and unworthy with open face to behold Him."

5. But every woman that prayeth. Whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying in respect to the man, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the woman. So that some women at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. And this kind of prophesying or teaching was predicted by Joel, ii. 28, and referred to by Peter, Acts ii. 17. And had there not been such gifts bestowed on women, the prophecy could not have had its fulfillment. The only difference marked by the apostle was, the man had his head uncovered, because he was the representative of Christ; the woman had hers covered, because she was placed by the order of God in a state of subjection to the man, and because it was a custom, among both the Greeks and the Romans, and among the Jews an express law, that no woman should be seen abroad without a veil. This was a common custom through all the East, and none but public prostitutes went without veils. And if a woman should appear in public without a veil, she would dishonor, her head—her husband. And she must appear like to those women who had their hair shorn off as the punishment of whoredom, or adultery.

6. For if the woman be not covered. If she will not wear a veil in the public assemblies, let her . . . be shorn—let her carry a public badge of infamy; but if it be a shame—if to be shorn or shaven would appear, as it must, a badge of infamy, then let her be covered—let her by all means wear a veil.

7. A man indeed ought not to cover his head. He should not wear his cap or turban in the public congregation, for this was a badge of servitude, or an indication that he had a conscience overwhelmed with guilt; and besides, it was contrary to the custom that prevailed, among both the Greeks and the Romans. He is the image and glory of God. He is God's vicegerent in this lower world; and by the authority which he has received from his Maker he is His representative among the creatures and exhibits, more than any other part of the creation, the glory and perfections of the Creator. But the woman is the glory of the man. As the man is, among the creatures, the representative of the glory and perfections of God, so that the fear of Him and the dread of Him are on every beast of the field, etc., so the woman is, in the house and family, the representative of the power and authority of the man. I believe this to be the meaning of the apostle; and that he is speaking here principally concerning power and authority, and skill to use them. It is certainly not the moral image of God, nor His celestial glory, of which he speaks in this verse.

8. For the man is not of the woman. His meaning is that the man does not belong to the woman, as if she were the principal; but the woman belongs to the man in that view.

MATTHEW HENRY

She is the image of God, inasmuch as she is the image of the man, v. 8. The woman was made for the man, and not the man for the woman. And she should do nothing that looks like an affectation of equality.

She ought to have power on her head, because of the angels. Power, that is, a veil, the token that she is under the power of her husband. Jews and Christians have had an opinion that these ministering spirits are present in their assemblies.

V. A caution lest the inference be carried too far (v. 11, 12). They were made to be a mutual comfort and blessing, not one a slave and the other a tyrant. As it is the will of God that the woman know her place, so it is his will also that the man abuse not his power.

VI. The woman's hair is a natural covering; to wear it long is a glory to her; but for a man to have long hair is a token of softness and effeminacy.

VII. He sums up all by referring to the usages and customs of the churches, v. 16. The common practice of the churches is what he would have them govern themselves by.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

self and God [FABER STAPULENSIS in Bengel]. 9. Neither—rather, "For also"; Another argument: The immediate object of woman's creation. "The man was not created for the sake of the woman; but the woman for the sake of the man" (Gen. 2:18, 21, 22). Just as the Church, the bride, is made for Christ; and yet in both the natural and the spiritual creations, the bride, while made for the bridegroom, in fulfilling that end, attains her own true "glory," and brings "shame" and "dishonor" on herself by any departure from it (vss. 4, 6). 10. power on her head—the kerchief: French couvre-chef, head-covering, the emblem of "power on her head"; the sign of her being under man's power, and exercising delegated authority under him. Paul had before his mind the root-connection between the Hebrew terms for "veil" (radid), and subjection (radad). because of the angels—who are present at our Christian assemblies (cf. Ps. 138:1, "gods," i.e., angels), and delight in the orderly subordination of the several ranks of God's worshippers in their respective places, the outward demeanor and dress of the latter being indicative of that inward humility which angels know to be most pleasing to their common Lord (ch. 4:9; Eph. 3:10; Eccles. 5:6). HAMMOND quotes Chrysostom, "Thou standest with angels; thou singest with them; thou hymnest with them; and yet dost thou stand laughing?" BENGEL explains, "As the angels are in relation to God, so the woman is in relation to man. God's face is uncovered; angels in His presence are veiled (Isa. 6:2). Man's face is uncovered; woman in His presence is to be veiled. For her not to be so, would, by its indecorousness, offend the angels (Matt. 18: 10, 31). She, by her weakness, especially needs their ministry; she ought, therefore, to be the more careful not to offend them." 11. Yet neither sex is insulated and independent of the other in the Christian life [ALFORD]. The one needs the other in the sexual relation; and in respect to Christ ("in the Lord"), the man and the woman together (for neither can be dispensed with) realize the ideal of redeemed humanity represented by the bride, the Church. 12. As the woman was formed out of (from) the man, even so is man born by means of woman; but all things (including both man and woman) are from God as their source (Rom. 11:36; II Cor. 5:18). They depend mutually each on the other, and both on him. 13. Appeal to their own sense of decorum. a woman . . . unto God—By rejecting the emblem of subjection (the head-covering), she passes at one leap in praying publicly beyond both the man and angels [BENGEL]. 14. The fact that nature has provided woman, and not man, with long hair, proves that man was designed to be uncovered, and woman covered. The Nazarite, however, wore long hair lawfully, as being part of a vow sanctioned by God (Num. 6:5). Cf. as to Absalom, II Samuel 14:26, and Acts 18:18. 15. her hair . . . for a covering—Not that she does not need additional covering. Nay, her long hair shows she ought to cover her head as much as possible. The will ought to accord with nature [BENGEL]. 16. A summary close to the argument by appeal to the universal custom of the churches. if any . . . seem—The Greek also means "thinks" (fit) (cf. Matt. 3:9). If any man chooses (still after all my arguments) to be contentious. If any be contentious and thinks himself right in being so. A reproof of the Corinthians' self-sufficiency and disputatiousness (ch. 1:20). we—apostles: or we of the Jewish nation, from whom ye have received the Gospel, and whose usages in all that is good ye ought to follow: Jewish women veiled themselves when in public, according to Tertullian [ESTIUS]. The former explanation is best, as the Jews are not referred to in the context: but he often refers to himself and his fellow apostles, by the expression, "we—us" (ch. 4:9, 10). no such custom—as that of women praying uncovered. Not as CHRYSOSTOM, "that of being contentious." The Greek term implies a usage, rather than a mental habit (John 18:39). The usage of true "churches (plural: not, as Rome uses it, 'the Church,' as an abstract entity; but 'the churches, as a number of independent witnesses) of God" (the churches which God Himself recognizes), is a valid argument in the case of external rites, especially, negatively, e.g., Such rites were not received among them, therefore, ought not to be admitted among us: but in questions of doctrine, or the essentials of worship, the argument is not valid [SCLATER] (ch. 7:17; 14: 33). neither—nor yet. Catholic usage is not an infallible test of truth, but a general test of decency. 17. in this—which follows. I declare—rather, "I enjoin"; as the Greek is always so used. The oldest MSS. read literally "This I enjoin (you) not

ADAM CLARKE

9. Neither was the man created. For the man was not created upon the woman's account. The reason is plain from what is mentioned above; and from the original creation of woman she was made for the man, to be his proper or suitable helper.

10. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels. "And because of this superiority in the man, I conclude that the woman should have on her head a veil, the mark of her husband's power over her, especially in the religious assemblies, where the angels are supposed to be invisibly present." The custom of the Nazarite may cast some light upon this place. As Nazarite means one who has separated himself by vow to some religious austerity, wearing his own hair, etc., so a married woman was considered a Nazarite for life, i.e., separated from all others, and joined to one husband, who is her lord. And hence the apostle, alluding to this circumstance, says, The woman ought to have power on her head, i.e., wear her hair and veil; for her hair is a proof of her being a Nazarite, and of her subjection to her husband, as the Nazarite was under subjection to the Lord, according to the rule or law of his order.

11. Neither is the man without the woman. The apostle seems to say: I do not intimate any disparagement of the female sex, by insisting on the necessity of her being under the power or authority of the man, for they are both equally dependent on each other.

12. For as the woman is of the man. For as the woman was first formed out of the side of man, man has ever since been formed out of the womb of the woman; but they, as all other created things, are of God.

13. Judge in yourselves. Consider the subject in your own common sense, and then say whether it be decent for a woman to pray in public without a veil on her head. The heathen priestesses prayed or delivered their oracles bareheaded or with dishevelled hair; to be conformed to them would be very disgraceful to Christian women. And in reference to such things as these the apostle appeals to their sense of honor and decency.

14. Doth not even nature itself teach you that if a man have long hair? Nature certainly teaches us, by bestowing it, that it is proper for women to have long hair; and it is not so with men. The hair of the male rarely grows like that of a female, unless art is used, and even then it bears but a scanty proportion to the former. Hence it is truly womanish to have long hair, and it is a shame to the man who affects it. In ancient times the people of Achaia, the province in which Corinth stood, and the Greeks in general, were noted for their long hair; and hence called by Homer, in a great variety of places, "the long-haired Greeks." Long hair was certainly not in repute among the Jews. The Nazarites let their hair grow, but it was as a token of humiliation; and it is possible that Paul had this in view. There were consequently two reasons why the apostle should condemn this practice: (1) Because it was a sign of humiliation; (2) Because it was womanish. After all, it is possible that Paul may refer to dressed, frizzled, and curled hair, which shallow and effeminate men might have affected in that time, as they do in this.

15. But if a woman have long hair. The Author of their being has given a larger proportion of hair to the head of women than to that of men; and to them it is an especial ornament, and may in various cases serve as a veil.

16. But if any man seem to be contentious. If any person sets himself up as a wrangler, put himself forward as a defender of such points —that a woman may pray or teach with her head uncovered. and that a man may, without reproach, have long hair—let him know that we have no such custom as either, nor are they sanctioned by any of the churches of God, whether among the Jews or among the Gentiles.

17. Now in this . . . I praise you not. In the beginning of this Epistle the apostle did praise them for their attention in general to the rules he had laid down; see v. 2. But here he is

The apostle sharply rebukes them for much greater disorders in their partaking of the Lord's supper.

I. Such scandalous disorders as they were guilty of, called for a sharp reprehension. The ordinances of Christ, if they do not make us better, will be very apt to make us worse; if they do not melt and mend, they will harden.

II. His charge against them. Upon coming together, they fell into divisions. They fell a quarrelling with one another. The apostle had heard a report of the Corinthians' divisions, and he tells them he had too much reason to believe it.

There must be heresies also. No marvel there should be breaches of Christian love in the churches, when such offences will come. Such offences must come. God permits them, that those who are approved (such honest hearts as will bear the trial) may be set to view, and appear faithful. The wisdom of God can make the wickedness of others a foil to the integrity of the saints.

III. The apostle lays the blame of this conduct closely on them. 1. Their conduct perfectly destroyed the purpose and use of such an institution, v. 20. They might as well have stayed away.

He charges them with scandalous disorder, v. 21. They would not stay for one another. Thus some wanted, while others had more than enough. The poor were deprived of the food prepared for them, and the rich turned a feast of charity into a debauch.

2. Their conduct carried in it a contempt of the church, v. 22. If they had a mind to feast, they might do it at home in their own houses. Religious feasts should be attended religiously.

The apostle sets the sacred institution here to view.

I. He tells us how he came by the knowledge of it. He had received from the Lord what he delivered to them, v. 23.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

praising (you)." that—inasmuch as: in that you . . . Here he qualifies his praise (vs. 2). "I said that I praised you for keeping the ordinances delivered to you; but I must now give injunction in the name of the Lord, on a matter in which I praise you not; viz., as to the Lord's Supper (vs. 23; ch. 14:37). not for the better—not so as to progress to what is better. for the worse—so as to retrograde to what is worse. The result of such "coming together" must be "condemnation" (vs. 34). 18. first of all—In the first place. The "divisions" (Greek, "schisms") meant, are not merely those of opinion (ch. 1:10), but in outward acts at the lovefeasts (Agapæ), (vs. 21). He does not follow up the expression, "in the first place," by "in the second place." But though not expressed, a second abuse was in his mind when he said, "In the first place," viz., THE ABUSE OF SPIRITUAL GIFTS, which also created disorder in their assemblies [ALFORD], (ch. 12:1; 14:23, 26, 33, 40). in the church—not the place of worship; for Isidore of Pelusium denies that there were such places specially set apart for worship in the apostles' times (Epistle 246.2). But, "in the assembly" or "congregation"; in convocation for worship, where especially love, order, and harmony should prevail. The very ordinance instituted for uniting together believers in one body, was made an occasion of "divisions" (schisms). partly—He hereby excepts the innocent. "I am unwilling to believe all I hear, but some I cannot help believing" [ALFORD]: while my love is unaffected by it [BENGEL]. 19. heresies—Not merely "schisms" or "divisions" (vs. 18), which are "recent dissensions of the congregation through differences of opinion" [AUGUSTINE, Con. Crescon. Don. 2. 7, quoted by French Synonyms, New Testament], but also "heresies," i.e., "schisms which have now become inveterate"; "Sects" [CAMPBELL, vol. 2, pp. 126, 127]: so Acts 5:17; 15:5 translate the same Greek. At present there were dissensions at the love-feasts; but Paul, remembering Jesus' words (Matt. 18:7; 24:10, 12; Luke 17:1) foresees "there must be (come) also" matured separations, and established parties in secession, as separatists. The "must be" arises from sin in professors necessarily bearing its natural fruits: these are overruled by God to the probation of character of both the godly and the ungodly, and to the discipline of the former for glory. "Heresies" had not yet its technical sense ecclesiastically, referring to doctrinal errors: it means confirmed schisms. St. Augustine's rule is a golden rule as regards questions of heresy and catholicity: "In doubtful questions, liberty; in essentials, unity; in all things, charity." that . . . approved may be made manifest—through the disapproved (reprobates) becoming manifested (Luke 2:35; I John 2:19). 20. When . . . therefore—Resuming the thread of discourse from vs. 18. this is not to—rather, "there is no such thing as eating the LORD'S Supper"; it is not possible where each is greedily intent only on devouring "HIS OWN supper," and some are excluded altogether, not having been waited for (vs. 33), where some are "drunken," while others are "hungry" (vs. 21). The lovefeast usually preceded the Lord's Supper (as eating the Passover came before the Lord's Supper at the first institution of the latter). It was a club-feast, where each brought his portion, and the rich, extra portions for the poor; from it the bread and wine were taken for the Eucharist; and it was at it that the excesses took place, which made a true celebration of the Lord's Supper during or after it, with true discernment of its solemnity, out of the question. 21. one taketh before other—the rich "before" the poor, who had no supper of their own. Instead of "tarrying for one another" (vs. 33); hence the precept (ch. 12: 21, 25). his own supper—"His own" belly is his God (Phil. 3:19); "the Lord's Supper," the spiritual feast, never enters his thoughts. drunken—The one has more than is good for him, the other less [BENGEL]. 22. What!—Greek, "For." houses—(cf. vs. 34)—"at home." That is the place to satiate the appetite, not the assembly of the brethren [ALFORD]. despise ye the church of God—the congregation mostly composed of the poor, whom "GOD hath chosen," however ye show contempt for them (Jas. 2:5); cf. "of God" here, marking the true honor of the Church. shame them that have not—viz., houses to eat and drink in, and who, therefore, ought to have received their portion at the lovefeasts from their wealthier brethren. I praise you not—resuming the words (vs. 17). 23. His object is to show the unworthiness of such conduct from the dignity of the holy supper. 23. I—Emphatic in the Greek. It is not my own invention, but the Lord's institution. received of the Lord—by immediate revelation (Gal. 1:12; cf. Acts 22:17, 18; obliged to condemn certain irregularities which had crept in among them, particularly relative to the celebration of the Lord's Supper. Through some false teaching which they had received, in the absence of the apostle, they appear to have celebrated it precisely in the same way the Jews did their Passover. That, we know, was a regular meal, only accompanied with certain peculiar circumstances and ceremonies. Two of these ceremonies were eating bread, solemnly broken, and drinking a cup of wine called the cup of blessing. Now it is certain that our Lord has taken these two things and made them expressive of the crucifixion of His body and the shedding of His blood as an atonement for the sins of mankind. The teachers which had crept into the Corinthian church appear to have perverted the whole of this divine institution, for the celebration of the Lord's Supper appears to have been made among them a part of an ordinary meal. The people came together and it appears brought their provisions with them. Some had much; others had less. Some ate to excess; others had scarcely enough to suffice nature. One was hungry, and the other was drunken, "was filled to the full"; this is the sense of the word in many places of Scripture.

18. There be divisions among you. They had "schisms" among them; the old parties were kept up, even in the place where they assembled to eat the Lord's Supper.

19. There must be also heresies. Not a common consent of the members of the church either in the doctrines of the gospel or in the ceremonies of the Christian religion. Their difference in religious opinion led to a difference in their religious practice, and thus the church of God, that should have been one body, was split into sects and parties. The divisions and the heresies sprang out of each other.

20. This is not to eat the Lord's supper. They did not come together to eat the Lord's Supper exclusively, which they should have done and not have made it a part of an ordinary meal.

21. Every one taketh before . . . his own supper. They had a grand feast, though the different sects kept in parties by themselves; but all took as ample a supper as they could provide (each bringing his own provisions with him) before they took what was called the Lord's Supper.

22. Have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? They should have taken their ordinary meal at home, and have come together in the church to celebrate the Lord's Supper. Despise ye the church of God? You render the sacred assembly and the place contemptible by your conduct, and you show yourselves destitute of that respect which you owe to the place set apart for divine worship. And shame them that have not. "Them that are poor"; not them who had not victuals at that time, but those who are so poor as to be incapable of furnishing themselves as others had done.

23. I have received of the Lord. It is possible that several of the people at Corinth did receive the bread and wine of the Eucharist as they did the paschal bread and wine, as a mere

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He gives us a more particular account of the institution than we meet with elsewhere.

1. The author—our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. The time of the institution: It was the very night wherein he was betrayed; just as he was entering on his sufferings which are therein to be commemorated.

3. The institution itself. Our Saviour took bread, and when he had given thanks, he broke, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. And in like manner he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; this do, as oft as you drink it, in remembrance of me, v. 24, 25.

(1) The materials of this sacrament, [1] The visible signs; these are bread and the cup. What is eaten is called bread, though it is at the same time said to be the body of the Lord. Bread and the cup are both made use of, because it is a holy feast. The cup is put for what was in it, without once specifying what the liquor was. [2] The things signified by these outward signs: they are Christ's body and blood, his body broken, his blood shed.

(2) The sacramental actions. Our Saviour did, at the institution, deliver his body and blood, with all the benefits procured by his death, to his disciples, and continues to do the same every time the ordinance is administered to true believers. They are to take him as their Lord and life, yield themselves up to him, and live upon him.

(3) An account of the ends of this institution. It was appointed to be done in remembrance of Christ, to keep fresh in our minds his dying for us, as well as to remember an absent friend, even Christ interceding for us. The motto on this ordinance, and the very meaning of it, is, When this you see, remember me. It was to show forth Christ's death. It is not barely in remembrance of Christ, but to commemorate his glorious condescension and grace in our redemption. We own before the world, by this very service, that we are the disciples of Christ, who trust in him alone for salvation and acceptance with God.

(4) It should be frequent. Our bodily meals return often. And it is fit that this spiritual diet should be taken often too. It must be perpetual. It is to be celebrated till the Lord shall come. The Lord's supper is not a temporary, but a standing and perpetual ordinance.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

II Cor. 12:1-4). The renewal of the institution of the Lord's Supper by special revelation to Paul enhances its solemnity. The similarity between Luke's and Paul's account of the institution, favors the supposition that the former drew his information from the apostle, whose companion in travel he was. Thus, the undesigned coincidence is a proof of genuineness. night—the time fixed for the Passover (Exod. 12:6): though the time for the Lord's Supper is not fixed. betrayed—With the traitor at the table, and death present before His eyes, He left this ordinance as His last gift to us, to commemorate His death. Though about to receive such an injury from man, He gave this pledge of His amazing love to man. 24. brake—The breaking of the bread involves its distribution and reproves the Corinthian mode at the love-feast, of "every one taking before other his own supper." my body . . . broken for you—"given" (Luke 22:19) for you (Greek, "in your behalf"), and "broken," so as to be distributed among you. The oldest MSS. omit "broken," leaving it to be supplied from "brake." The two old versions, Memphitic and Thebaic, read from Luke, "given." The literal "body" could not have been meant; for Christ was still sensibly present among His disciples when He said, "This is My body." They could only have understood Him symbolically and analogically: As this bread is to your bodily health, so My body is to the spiritual health of the believing communicant. The words, Take, eat," are not in the oldest MSS. 25. when he had supped—Greek, "after the eating of supper," viz., the Passover supper which preceded the Lord's Supper, as the love-feast did subsequently. Therefore, you Corinthians ought to separate common meals from the Lord's Supper [BENGEL]. the new testament—or "covenant." The cup is the parchment-deed, as it were, on which My new covenant, or last will is written and sealed, making over to you all blessings here and hereafter. in my blood—ratified by MY blood: "not by the blood of goats and calves" (Heb. 9:12).—as oft as—Greek, "as many times soever": implying that it is an ordinance often to be partaken of. in remembrance of me—Luke expresses this, which is understood by Matthew and Mark. Paul twice records it as suiting his purpose. The old sacrifices brought sins continually to remembrance (Heb. 10:1, 3). The Lord's Supper brings to remembrance Christ and His sacrifice once for all for the full and final remission of sins. 26. For—in proof that the Lord's Supper is "in remembrance" of Him. show—announce publicly. The Greek does not mean to dramatically represent, but "ye publicly profess each of you, the Lord has died FOR ME" [WAHL]. This word, as "is" in Christ's institution (vss. 24, 25), implies not literal presence, but a vivid realization, by faith, of Christ in the Lord's Supper, as a living person, not a mere abstract dogma, "bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh" (Eph. 5:30; cf. Gen. 2:23); and ourselves "members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones," "our sinful bodies made clean by His body (once for all offered), and our souls washed through His most precious blood" [Church of England Prayer Book]. "Show," or "announce," is an expression applicable to new things; cf. "show" as to the Passover (Exod. 13:8). So the Lord's death ought always to be fresh in our memory; cf. in heaven, Revelation 5:6. That the Lord's Supper is in remembrance of Him, implies that He is bodily absent, though spiritually present, for we cannot be said to commemorate one absent. The fact that we not only show the Lord's death in the supper, but eat and drink the pledges of it, could only be understood by the Jews, accustomed to such feasts after propitiatory sacrifices, as implying our personal appropriation therein of the benefits of that death. till he come—when there shall be no longer need of symbols of His body, the body itself being manifested. The Greek expresses the certainly of His coming. Rome teaches that we eat Christ present corporally, "till He come" corporally; a contradiction in terms. The shewbread, lit., "bread of the presence," was in the sanctuary, but not in the Holiest Place (Heb. 9:1-8); so the Lord's Supper in heaven, the antitype to the Holiest Place, shall be superseded by Christ's own bodily presence; then the wine shall be drunk "anew" in the Father's kingdom, by Christ and His people together, of which heavenly banquet, the Lord's Supper is a spiritual foretaste and specimen (Matt. 26:29). Meantime, as the shewbread was placed anew, every sabbath, on the table before the Lord (Lev. 24:5-8); so the Lord's death was shown, or announced afresh at the Lord's table the first day of every week in the primitive Church. We are now "priests unto God" in the dispensation of commemoration of an event. And as our Lord had by this institution consecrated that bread and wine, not to be the means of commemorating the deliverance from Egypt and their joy on the account, but their deliverance from sin and death by His passion and cross, therefore the apostle states that he had received from the Lord what he delivered; viz., that the eucharistic bread and wine were to be understood of the accomplishment of that of which the paschal lamb was the type—the body broken for them, the blood shed for them.

ALEXANDER MACLAREN:

"Do this" is the true meaning of the words, not "in remembrance of me," but something far more sweet and pathetic—"do this for the remembering of me." The former expression is equal to: "Do this because you remember." The real meaning of the words is, "Do this in case you forget"; do this in order that you may recall to memory what the slippery memory is so apt to lose—the impression of even the sweetest sweetness, of the most loving love, and the most self-abnegating sacrifice, which He offered for us.

There is something to me infinitely pathetic and beautiful in looking at the words not only as the commandment of the Lord, but as the appeal of the Friend, who wished, as we all do, not to be utterly forgotten by those whom He cared for and loved; and who, not only because their remembrance was their salvation, but because their forgetfulness pained His heart, brings to their hearts the plaintive appeal: "Do not forget Me when I am gone away from you; and even if you have no better way of remembering Me, take these poor symbols, to which I am not too proud to entrust the care of My memory, and do this, lest you forget Me."

"In remembrance of me"—Jesus Christ, then, takes up an altogether unique and solitary position here, and into the sacredest hours of devotion and the loftiest moments of communion with God, intrudes His personality and says, "When you are most religious, remember Me; and let the highest act of your devout life be a thought turned to myself."

—Expositions of Holy Scripture

26. Ye do shew the Lord's death. As in the Passover they showed forth the bondage they had been in and the redemption they had received from it, so in the Eucharist they showed forth the sacrificial death of Christ and the redemption from sin derived from it.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The danger of receiving unworthily and using it to the purposes of feasting and faction. 1. They shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord (v. 27). Instead of being cleansed by his blood, they are guilty of his blood.

IV. The duty of those who would come to the Lord's table (v. 28). Such self-examination is necessary to a right attendance at this holy ordinance. Those should have the wedding-garment on who would be welcome at this marriage-feast—grace in habit, and grace in exercise, v. 31. To be exact and severe on ourselves is the most proper way not to fall under the just severity of our heavenly Father. We must not judge others, lest we be judged (Matt. vii. 1); but we must judge ourselves, to prevent our being judged and condemned by God.

They eat and drink judgment to themselves, v. 29. They provoke God, and are likely to bring down punishment on themselves. But fearful believers should not be discouraged from attending at this holy ordinance by the sound of these words. The Holy Spirit never indited this to deter serious Christians from their duty, though the devil has often made this advantage of it, and robbed good Christians of their choicest comforts. The Corinthians came to the Lord's table not discerning the Lord's body—not making a distinction between that and common food.

For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. Even those who were thus punished were in a state of favour with God: They were chastened of the Lord, that they should not be condemned with the world, v. 32. He frequently punishes those whom he tenderly loves. It is kindness to use the rod to prevent the child's ruin. They were punished by him out of fatherly goodwill, punished now that they might not perish for ever.

V. A caution against the irregularities of which they were guilty (v. 33, 34). They were to eat for hunger and pleasure only at home. Our holy duties, through our own abuse, may prove matter of condemnation. Holy things are to be used in a holy manner, or else they are profaned.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Christ's spiritual presence, antitypical to the HOLY PLACE: the perfect and eternal dispensation, which shall not begin till Christ's coming, is antitypical to the HOLIEST PLACE, which Christ our High Priest alone in the flesh as yet has entered (Heb. 9:6, 7); but which, at His coming, we, too, who are believers, shall enter (Rev. 7:15; 21:22). The supper joins the two closing periods of the Old and the New dispensations. The first and second comings are considered as one coming, whence the expression is not "return," but "come" (cf., however, John 14:3). 27. eat and drink—So one of the oldest MSS. reads. But three or four equally old MSS., the Vulgate and Cyprian, read, "or." Romanists quote this reading in favor of communion in one kind. This consequence does not follow. Paul says, "Whosoever is guilty of unworthy conduct, either in eating the bread, or in drinking the cup, is guilty of the body and blood of Christ." Impropriety in only one of the two elements, vitiates true communion in both. Therefore, in the end of the verse, he says, not "body or blood," but "body and blood." Any who takes the bread without the wine, or the wine without the bread, "unworthily" communicates, and so "is guilty of Christ's body and blood"; for he disobeys Christ's express command to partake of both. If we do not partake of the sacramental symbol of the Lord's death worthily, we share in the guilt of that death. (Cf. "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh," Heb. 6:6.) Unworthiness in the person, is not what ought to exclude any, but unworthily communicating: However unworthy we be, if we examine ourselves so as to find that we penitently believe in Christ's Gospel, we may worthily communicate. 28. examine—Greek, "prove" or "test" his own state of mind in respect to Christ's death, and his capability of "discerning the Lord's body" (vss. 29, 31). Not auricular confession to a priest, but self-examination is necessary. so—after due self-examination. of . . . of—In vs. 27, where the receiving was unworthily, the expression was, "eat this bread, drink . . . cup" without "of." Here the "of" implies due circumspection in communicating [BENGEL]. let him eat—His self-examination is not in order that he may stay away, but that he may eat, i.e., communicate. 29. damnation—A mistranslation which has put a stumbling block in the way of many in respect to communicating. The right translation is "judgment." The judgment is described (vss. 30-32) as temporal. not discerning—not duty judging: not distinguishing in judgment (so the Greek: the sin and its punishment thus being marked as corresponding) from common food, the sacramental pledges of the Lord's body. Most of the oldest MSS. omit "Lord's" (see vs. 27). Omitting also "unworthily," with most of the oldest MSS, we must translate, "He that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment to himself, IF he discern not the body" (Heb. 10:29). The Church is "the body of Christ" (ch. 12:27). The Lord's body is His literal body appreciated and discerned by the soul in the faithful receiving, and not present in the elements themselves. 30. weak . . . sickly—He is "weak" who has naturally no strength: "sickly," who has lost his strength by disease [TITTM. Synonyms]. sleep—are being lulled in death: not a violent death; but one the result of sickness, sent as the Lord's chastening for the individual's salvation, the mind being brought to a right state on the sick bed (vs. 31). 31. if we would judge ourselves—Most of the oldest MSS, read "But," not "For." Translate also literally "If we duly judged ourselves, we should not be (or not have been) judged," i.e., we should escape (or have escaped) our present judgments. In order to duly judge or "discern [appreciate] the Lord's body," we need to "duly judge ourselves." A prescient warning against the dogma of priestly absolution after full confession, as the necessary preliminary to receiving the Lord's Supper. 32. chastened—(Rev. 3:19). with the world—who, being bastards, are without chastening (Heb. 12:8). 33. tarry one for another—In contrast to vs. 21. The expression is not, "Give a share to one another," for all the viands brought to the feast were common property, and, therefore, they should "tarry" till all were met to partake together of the common feast of fellowship [THEOPHYL]. 34. if any . . . hunger—so as not to be able to "tarry for others," let him take off the edge of his hunger at home [ALFORD] (vs. 22). the rest—"the other questions you asked me as to the due celebration of the Lord's Supper." Not other questions in general; for he does subsequently set in order other general questions in this Epistle.

ADAM CLARKE

27. Whosoever shall eat . . . and drink . . . unworthily. To put a final end to controversies and perplexities relative to these words and the context, let the reader observe that to eat and drink the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper unworthily is to eat and drink as the Corinthians did, who ate it, not in reference to Jesus Christ's sacrificial death, but rather in such a way as the Israelites did the Passover, which they celebrated in remembrance of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. Likewise these mongrel Christians at Corinth used it as a kind of historical commemoration of the death of Christ and did not, in the whole institution, discern the Lord's body and blood as a sacrificial offering for sin; and besides, in their celebration of it they acted in a way utterly unbecoming the gravity of a sacred ordinance. Shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. If he use it irreverently, if he deny that Christ suffered unjustly (for of some such persons the apostle must be understood to speak), then he in effect joins issue with the Jews in their condemnation and crucifixion of the Lord Jesus, and renders himself guilty of the death of our blessed Lord. Some, however, understand the passage thus: is guilty, i.e., eats and drinks unworthily, and brings on himself that punishment mentioned in v. 30.

28. Let a man examine himself. Let him try whether he has proper faith in the Lord Jesus, and whether he discerns the Lord's body, and whether he duly considers that the bread and wine point out the crucified body and spilt blood of Christ.

29. Eateth and drinketh damnation. "Judgment, punishment"; and yet this is not unto damnation, for the judgment or punishment inflicted upon the disorderly and the profane was intended for their emendation; for in v. 32 it is said, when we are "judged," we are chastened, corrected as a father does his children, "that we should not be condemned with the world."

30. For this cause. That they partook of this sacred ordinance without discerning the Lord's body. Many are weak and sickly. It is hard to say whether these words refer to the consequences of their own intemperance or to some extraordinary disorders inflicted immediately by God himself. That there were disorders of the most reprehensible kind among these people at this sacred supper, the preceding verses sufficiently point out; and after such excesses, many might be weak and sickly among them, and many might sleep, i.e., "die"; for continual experience shows us that many fall victims to their own intemperance. However, acting as they did in this solemn and awful sacrament, they might have "provoked God to plague them with divers diseases and sundry kinds of death."

31. If we would judge ourselves. If, having acted improperly, we condemn our conduct and humble ourselves, we shall not be judged, i.e., "punished" for the sin we have committed.

33. When ye come together to eat (the Lord's Supper), tarry one for another—do not eat and drink in parties as ye have done heretofore, and do not connect it with any other meal.

34. And if any man hunger, let him not come to the house of God to eat an ordinary meal; let him eat at home—take that in his own house which is necessary for the support of his body before he comes to that sacred repast, where he should have the feeding of his soul alone in view. That ye come not together unto condemnation. That you may avoid the curse that must fall on such worthless communicants as those above mentioned, and that you may get that especial blessing which everyone that discerns the Lord's body in the Eucharist must receive. The rest will I set in order. All the other matters relative to this business to which you have referred in your letter I will regulate when I come to visit you, as, God permitting, I fully design. The apostle did visit them about one year after this, as is generally believed.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 12

Verses 1–11

Of spiritual gifts. Where grace is given it is for the salvation of those who have it. Gifts are bestowed for the advantage and salvation of others. And there may be great gifts where there is not a dram of grace. This church was rich in gifts, but there were many things scandalously out of order in it.

I. Gifts come from God, and are to be used for him.

II. He puts them in mind of the sad state out of which they had been recovered, v. 2. Their former character: they were Gentiles. Not God's peculiar people, but of the nations whom he had in a manner abandoned. What a change was here! Christian Corinthians were once Gentiles. It is of great use to the Christian, and a proper consideration to stir him up both to duty and thankfulness, to think what once he was. The conduct they were under: Carried away to these dumb idols, even as you were led. Miserable abjectness of mind! And those who despised these gross conceptions of the vulgar yet countenanced them by their practice. Could the Spirit of God be among such stupid idolaters?

III. How they might discern those gifts that were from the Spirit of God: No man, speaking by the Spirit, calls Jesus accursed. Thus did both Jews and Gentiles: they blasphemed him as an imposter, and execrated his name. None could act under the influence, nor by the power of the Spirit of God, who disowned and blasphemed Christ: for the Spirit of God could never so far contradict itself as to declare him accursed. No man can call Christ Lord, with a believing dependence upon him, unless that faith be wrought by the Holy Ghost.

IV. The same giver may bestow various gifts, v. 4.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Vss. 1-31. THE USE AND THE ABUSE OF SPIRITUAL GIFTS, ESPECIALLY PROPHESYING AND TONGUES. This is the second subject for correction in the Corinthian assemblies: the "first" was discussed (ch. 11: 18-34). 1. spiritual gifts—the signs of the Spirit's continued efficacious presence in the Church, which is Christ's body, the complement of His incarnation, as the body is the complement of the head. By the love which pervades the whole, the gifts of the several members, forming reciprocal complements to each other, tend to the one object of perfecting the body of Christ. The ordinary and permanent gifts are comprehended together with the extraordinary, without distinction specified, as both alike flow from the divine indwelling Spirit of life. The extraordinary gifts, so far from making professors more peculiarly saints than in our day, did not always even prove that such persons were in a safe state at all (Matt. 7:22). They were needed at first in the Church: (1) as a pledge to Christians themselves who had just passed over from Judaism or heathendom, that God was in the Church; (2) for the propagation of Christianity in the world; (3) for the edification of the Church. Now that we have the whole written New Testament (which they had not) and Christianity established as the result of the miracles, we need no further miracle to attest the truth. So the pillar of cloud which guided the Israelites was withdrawn when they were sufficiently assured of the Divine Presence, the manifestation of God's glory being thenceforward enclosed in the Most Holy Place [ARCHBISHOP WHATELY]. Paul sets forth in order: I. The unity of the body (vss. 1-27). II. The variety of its members and functions (vss. 27-30). III. The grand principle for the right exercise of the gifts, viz., love (vs. 31, and ch. 13). IV. The comparison of the gifts with one another (ch. 14). I would not have you ignorant—with all your boasts of "knowledge" at Corinth. If ignorant now, it will be your own fault, not mine (ch. 14:38). 2. (Eph. 2:11.) that ye were—The best MSS. read, "That WHEN ye were"; thus "ye were" must be supplied before "carried away"—Ye were blindly transported hither and thither at the will of your false guides. these dumb idols—Greek, "the idols which are dumb"; contrasted with the living God who "speaks" in the believer by His Spirit (vs. 3, etc.). This gives the reason why the Corinthians needed instruction as to spiritual gifts, viz., their past heathen state, wherein they had no experience of intelligent spiritual powers. When blind, ye went to the dumb. as ye were led—The Greek is, rather, "as ye might (happen to) be led," viz., on different occasions. The heathen oracles led their votaries at random, without any definite principle. 3. The negative and positive criteria of inspiration by the Spirit—the rejection or confession of Jesus as Lord [ALFORD] (I John 4:2; 5:1). Paul gives a test of truth against the Gentiles; John, against the false prophets. by the Spirit—rather, as Greek, "IN the Spirit"; that being the power pervading him, and the element in which he speaks [ALFORD], (Matt. 16:17; John 15:26). of God . . . Holy—The same Spirit is called at one time "the Spirit of GOD"; at another, "the HOLY Ghost," or "Holy Spirit." Infinite Holiness is almost synonymous with Godhead. speaking . . . say—"Speak" implies the act of utterance; "say" refers to that which is uttered. Here, "say" means a spiritual and believing confession of Him. Jesus—not an abstract doctrine, but the historical, living God-man (Rom. 10:9). accursed—as the Jews and Gentiles treated Him (Gal. 3:13). Cf. "to curse Christ" in the heathen PLINY'S letter (Ep. 10. 97). The spiritual man feels Him to be the Source of all blessings (Eph. 1:3) and to be severed from Him is to be accursed (Rom. 9:3). Lord—acknowledging himself as His servant (Isa. 26:13). "Lord" is the LXX translation for the incommunicable Hebrew name JEHOVAH. 4. diversities of gifts—i.e., varieties of spiritual endowments peculiar to the several members of the Church: cf. "dividing to every man severally" (vs. 11). same Spirit—The Holy Trinity appears here: the Holy Spirit in this verse; Christ in vs. 5; and the Father in vs. 6. The terms "gifts," "administrations," and "operations," respectively correspond to the Divine Three. The Spirit is treated of in vs. 7, etc.; the Lord, in vs. 12, etc.; God, in vs. 28. (Cf. Eph. 4:4-6.) 5, 6. "Gifts" (vs. 4), "administrations" (the various functions and services performed by those having the gifts, cf. vs. 28), and "operations" (the actual effects resulting from both the former, through the universally operative power of the one Father who is "above all, through all, and in us all"), form an ascending climax [HENDERSON, Inspir-

ADAM CLARKE

1. Now concerning spiritual gifts. This was a subject about which they appear to have written to the apostle, and concerning which there were probably some contentions among them. The words may as well be translated "concerning spiritual persons" as spiritual gifts, and indeed the former agrees much better with the context.

I would not have you ignorant. I wish you fully to know whence all such gifts come, and for what end they are given, that each person may serve the church in the capacity in which God has placed him, that there may be no misunderstandings and no schism in the body.

2. Ye were Gentiles. Previously to your conversion to the Christian faith, you were heathens, carried away, not guided by reason or truth, but hurried by your passions into a senseless worship, the chief part of which was calculated only to excite and gratify animal propensities. Dumb idols. Though often supplicated, could never return an answer; so that not only the image could not speak, but the god or demon pretended to be represented by it could not speak—a full proof that an idol was nothing in the world.

3. No man speaking by the Spirit of God. It was granted on all hands that there could be no religion without divine inspiration, because God alone could make His will known to men. Hence heathenism pretended to this inspiration; Judaism had it in the law and the prophets; and it was the very essence of the Christian religion. Both Judaism and heathenism were full of expectations of a future teacher and deliverer; and to this person, especially among the Jews, the Spirit in all the prophets gave witness. This was the Messiah, who was manifested in the person of Jesus of Nazareth; and Him the Jews rejected, though He proved His divine mission both by His doctrines and by His miracles. But as the Holy Spirit through all the law and the prophets gave testimony to the Messiah, and as Jesus proved himself to be the Christ by both His miracles and His doctrines, no man under the inspiration of the divine Spirit could say to Him, "Anathema"—Thou art a deceiver, and a person worthy of death, etc., as the Jews did. Therefore the Jews were no longer under the inspiration of the Spirit of God. And that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord. Nor can we demonstrate this person to be the Messiah and the Saviour of men but by the Holy Ghost, He attesting the truth of our doctrines to them that hear, by enlightening their minds, changing their hearts, and filling them with the peace and love of God.

4. There are diversities of gifts. "Gracious endowments," leading to miraculous results.

5. Differences of administrations. Various offices in the Church, such as apostle, prophet, and teacher; the qualifications for such offices, as well as the appointments themselves, coming immediately from the one Lord Jesus Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

There are different offices, and officers to discharge them (see v. 28–30), but the same Lord, who appointed all, v. 6. There are diversities of operations (v. 10), but it is the same God that worketh all in all. However different they may be in themselves, in this they agree; all are from God. And several of the kinds are here specified, v. 8–10.

V. The end for which these gifts were bestowed, v. 7. They were not distributed for the advantage of those who had them, but for the benefit of the church. Whatever gifts God confers on any man, he confers them that he may do good with them. They are a trust put into his hands. They are not given for show, but for service.

To one was given the word of wisdom; a knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel, and ability to explain them.

To another the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit; that is, say some, the knowledge of mysteries (ch. ii. 13): say others, a skill and readiness to give advice and counsel in perplexed cases.

To another faith, by the same Spirit, whereby they were enabled to trust God in any emergency.

To another the gift of healing, by the same Spirit; that is, healing the sick. To another the working of miracles.

To another prophecy; to explain scripture by a peculiar gift of the Spirit.

To another the discerning of spirits, power to distinguish between true and false prophets. To another divers kinds of tongues, or ability to speak languages by inspiration. To another the interpretation of tongues, or ability to render foreign languages.

VI. All these worketh one and the same Spirit, dividing to every man as he will. Shall not the Spirit of God do what he will with his own? It is not as men will, nor as they may think fit, but as the Spirit pleases.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

ation]. same Lord—whom the Spirit glorifies by these ministrations [BENGEL]. 6. operations—(Cf. vs. 10). same God . . . worketh—by His Spirit working (vs. 11). all in all—all of them (the "gifts") in all the persons (who possess them). 7. But—Though all the gifts flow from the one God, Lord, and Spirit, the "manifestation" by which the Spirit acts (as He is hidden in Himself), varies in each individual. to every man—to each of the members of the Church severally. to profit withal—with a view to the profit of the whole body. 8-10. Three classes of gifts are distinguished by a distinct Greek word for "another" (a distinct class), marking the three several genera: allo marks the species, hetero the genera (cf. Greek, ch. 15:39-41). I. Gifts of intellect, viz., (1) wisdom; (2) knowledge. II. Gifts dependent on a special faith, viz., that of miracles (Matt. 17:20): (1) healings; (2) workings of miracles; (3) prophecy of future events; (4) discerning of spirits, or the divinely given faculty of distinguishing between those really inspired, and those who pretended to inspiration. III. Gifts referring to the tongues: (1) diverse kinds of tongues; (2) interpretation of tongues. The catalogue in vs. 28 is not meant strictly to harmonize with the one here, though there are some particulars in which they correspond. The three genera are summarily referred to by single instances of each in ch. 13:8. The first genus refers more to believers; the second, to unbelievers. by . . . by . . . by—The first in Greek is, "By means of," or "through the operation of"; the second is, "according to" the disposing of (cf. vs. 11); the third is, "in," i.e., under the influence of (so the Greek, Matt. 22:43; Luke 2:27). word of wisdom—the ready utterance of (for imparting to others, Eph. 6:19) wisdom, viz., new revelations of the divine wisdom in redemption, as contrasted with human philosophy (ch. 1:24; 2:6, 7; Eph. 1:8; 3:10; Col. 2:3). word of knowledge—ready utterance supernaturally imparted of truths ALREADY REVEALED (in this it is distinguished from "the word of wisdom," which related to NEW revelations). Cf. ch. 14:6, where "revelation" (answering to "wisdom" here) is distinguished from "knowledge" [HENDERSON]. Wisdom or revelation belonged to the "prophets"; knowledge, to the "teachers." Wisdom penetrates deeper than knowledge. Knowledge relates to things that are to be done. Wisdom, to things eternal: hence, wisdom is not, like knowledge, said to "pass away" (ch. 13:8), [BENGEL]. 9. faith—not of doctrines, but of miracles: confidence in God, by the impulse of His Spirit, that He would enable them to perform any required miracle (cf. ch. 13:2; Mark 11:23; Jas. 5:15). Its nature, or principle, is the same as that of saving faith, viz., reliance on God; the producing cause, also, in the same, viz., a power altogether supernatural (Eph. 1:19, 20). But the objects of faith differ respectively. Hence, we see, saving faith does not save by its instrinsic merit, but by the merits of Him who is the obpect of it. healing—Greek plural, "healings"; referring to different kinds of disease which need different kinds of healing (Matt. 10:1). 10. working of miracles—As "healings" are miracles, those here meant must refer to miracles of special and extraordinary POWER (so the Greek for "miracles" means); e.g., healings might be effected by human skill in course of time; but the raising of the dead, the infliction of death by a word, the innocuous use of poisons, etc., are miracles of special power. Cf. Mark 6:5; Acts. 19:11. prophecy—Here, probably, not in the wider sense of public teaching by the Spirit (ch. 11:4, 5; 14:1-5, 22-39); but, as its position between "miracles" and a "discerning of spirits" implies, the inspired disclosure of the future (Acts 11:27, 28; 21:11; I Tim. 1:18), [HENDERSON]. It depends on "faith" (vs. 9; Rom. 12:6). The prophets ranked next to the apostles (vs. 28; Eph. 3:5; 4:11). As prophecy is part of the whole scheme of redemption, an inspired insight into the obscurer parts of the existing Scriptures, was the necessary preparation for the miraculous foresight of the future. discerning of spirits—discerning between the operation of God's Spirit, and the evil spirit, or unaided human spirit (ch. 14: 29; cf. I Tim. 4:1; I John 4:1). kinds of tongues—the power of speaking various languages: also a spiritual language unknown to man, uttered in ecstasy (ch. 14:2-12). This is marked as a distinct genus in the Greek, "To another and a different class." interpretation of tongues—(ch. 14:13, 26, 27). 11. as he will—(vs. 18; Heb. 2:4).

ADAM CLARKE

6. Diversities of operations. Miraculous influences exerted on others, such as the expulsion of demons, inflicting extraordinary punishments (as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, Elymas the sorcerer, etc.), the healing of different diseases, raising the dead, etc. All these proceeded from God the Father, as the Fountain of all goodness and power, and the immediate Dispenser of every good and perfect gift.

In the preceding three verses we find more than an indirect reference to the doctrine of the sacred Trinity. Gifts are attributed to the Holy Spirit, v. 4; administrations to the Lord Jesus, v. 5; operations to God the Father, v. 6.

7. The manifestation of the Spirit. This is variably understood by the fathers, some of them rendering "illumination," others "demonstration," and others "operation." The apostle's meaning seems to be this: Whatever gifts God has bestowed, or in what various ways soever the Spirit of God may have manifested himself, it is all for the common benefit of the Church. God has given no gift to any man for his own private advantage or exclusive profit. He has it for the benefit of others as well as for his own salvation.

8. Word of wisdom. In all these places I consider that the proper translation of logos is "doctrine," as in many other places of the New Testament. It is very difficult to say what is intended here by the different kinds of gifts mentioned by the apostle; they were probably all supernatural, and were necessary at that time only for the benefit of the Church. By "doctrine of wisdom" we may understand the mystery of our redemption, in which the wisdom of God was most eminently conspicuous. By "the doctrine of knowledge" we may understand either a knowledge of the types, etc., in the Old Testament or what are termed "mysteries": the calling of the Gentiles, the recalling of the Jews, the mystery of iniquity, of the beast, etc., and especially the mystical sense or meaning of the Old Testament, with all its types, rites, ceremonies.

9. By faith we are to understand that miraculous faith by which they could remove mountains, chap. xiii. 2. Gifts of healing simply refers to the power which at particular times the apostles received from the Holy Spirit to cure diseases.

10. The working of miracles. This seems to refer to the same class as the "operations," v. 6, as the words are the same; and to signify those powers by which they were enabled at particular times to work miraculously on others, ejecting demons, inflicting punishments or judgments, as in the cases mentioned under v. 6. Prophecy. This seems to import two things: (1) The predicting future events such as then particularly concerned the state of the Church and the apostles—as the dearth foretold by Agabus, Acts xi. 28; and the binding of Paul, and delivering him to the Romans, Acts xxi. 10; and Paul's foretelling his own shipwreck on Malta, Acts xxvii. 25; and (2) As implying the faculty of teaching or expounding the Scriptures, which is also a common acceptation of the word. Discerning of spirits. A gift by which the person so privileged could discern a false miracle from a true one, or a pretender to inspiration from him who was made really partaker of the Holy Ghost. It probably extended also to the discernment of false professors from true ones as appears in Peter in the case of Ananias and his wife. Divers kinds of tongues. "Different languages," which they had never learned, and which God gave them for the immediate instruction of people of different countries who attended their ministry. Interpretation of tongues. It was necessary that while one was speaking the deep things of God in a company where several were present who did not understand, though the majority did, there should be a person who could immediately interpret what was said to that part of the congregation that did not understand the language. This power to interpret was also an immediate gift of God's Spirit and is classed here among the miracles.

11. But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit. All these gifts are miraculously bestowed. They cannot be acquired by human art or industry, the different languages excepted; but they were given in such a way, and

Verses 12–26

The apostle puts the gifted men among the Corinthians in mind of their duty, by comparing the church of Christ to a human body.

I. One body may have many members, the many members of the same body make but one body (v. 12). All the members are baptized into the same body, and made to drink of the same Spirit, v. 13. Christians become members of this body by baptism: they are baptized into one body. And by communion at the other ordinance we are sustained by drinking into one Spirit. It is baptism by the Spirit, it is internal renovation and drinking into one Spirit that makes us true members of Christ's body. All who have the spirit of Christ are the members of Christ, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free.

II. Each member has its particular form, place, and use. The meanest member makes a part of the body. The foot and ear are less useful, perhaps, than the hand and eye; shall they say, therefore, that they do not belong to the body? v. 15, 16. So every member of the body mystical cannot have the same place and office. The meanest member of his body is as much a member as the noblest. All his members are dear to him. There must be a distinction of members in the body: They are many members, and yet are but one body, v. 20. So it is in the body of Christ. Variety in the members of the body contributes to the beauty of it. So it is for the beauty and good appearance of the church that there should be diversity of gifts. The disposal of members and their situation, are as God pleases, v. 18. So is it also in the members of Christ's body. We should be doing the duties of our own place, and not quarrelling with others, that we are not in theirs. All the members of the body are useful and necessary to each other. Those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary (v. 21, 22). Every member serves some good purpose or other. Nor is there a member of the body of Christ but ought to be useful to his fellow-members, and in some cases, is needful to them. Those who excel in any gift cannot say that they have no need of those who in that gift are their inferiors, while perhaps, in other gifts, they exceed them. The eye has need of the hand, and the head of the feet. Such is the man's concern for his whole body that on the less honourable members more abundant honour is bestowed, and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness, v. 24. So should the members of Christ's body behave towards their fellow-members. Divine wisdom has ordered things in this manner that the members of the body should not be schismatics. That there might be no schism in the body (v. 25). The members of the natural body are made to have a care and concern for each other. So should it be in Christ's body. Christian sympathy is a great branch of Christian duty.

Verses 27–31

I. Here the apostle applies this similitude to the church of Christ.

1. The relation wherein Christians stand to Christ and one another. Now you are the body of Christ, and members in particular. All have a common relation to one another.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12, 13. Unity, not unvarying uniformity, is the law of God in the world of grace, as in that of nature. As the many members of the body compose an organic whole and none can be dispensed with as needless, so those variously gifted by the Spirit, compose a spiritual organic whole, the body of Christ, into which all are baptized by the one Spirit. of that one body—Most of the oldest MSS. omit "one." so also is Christ—i.e, the whole Christ, the head and body. So Psalm 18:50, "His anointed (Messiah or Christ), David (the antitypical David) and His seed." by . . . Spirit . . . baptized—lit., "in"; in virtue of; through. The designed effect of baptism, which is realized when not frustrated by the unfaithfulness of man. Gentiles—lit., "Greeks." all made to drink into one Spirit—The oldest MSS. read, "Made to drink of one Spirit," omitting "into" (John 7:37). There is an indirect allusion to the Lord's Supper, as there is a direct allusion to baptism in the beginning of the verse. So the "Spirit, the water, and the blood" (I John 5:8), similarly combine the two outward signs with the inward things signified, the Spirit's grace. are . . . have been—rather as Greek, "were . . . were" (the past tense). 14. Translate, "For the body also." The analogy of the body, not consisting exclusively of one, but of many members, illustrates the mutual dependence of the various members in the one body, the Church. The well-known fable of the belly and the other members, spoken by Menenius Agrippa, to the seceding commons [LIVY, 2. 32], was probably before Paul's mind, stored as it was with classical literature. 15. The humbler members ought not to disparage themselves, or to be disparaged by others more noble (vss. 21, 22). foot . . . hand—The humble speaks of the more honorable member which most nearly resembles itself: so the "ear" of the "eye" (the nobler and more commanding member, Num. 10: 31), (vs. 16). As in life each compares himself with those whom he approaches nearest in gifts, not those far superior. The foot and hand represent men of active life; the ear and eye, those of contemplative life. 17. Superior as the eye is, it would not do if it were the sole member to the exclusion of the rest. 18. now—as the case really is. every one—each severally. 19. where were the body—which, by its very idea, "hath many members" (vss. 12, 14), [ALFORD]. 20. now—as the case really is: in contrast to the supposition (vs. 19; cf. vs. 18). many members—mutually dependent. 21. The higher cannot dispense with the lower members. 22. more feeble—more susceptible of injury: e.g., the brain, the belly, the eye. Their very feebleness, so far from doing away with the need for them, calls forth our greater care for their preservation, as being felt "necessary." 23. less honourable—"We think" the feet and the belly "less honorable," though not really so in the nature of things. bestow . . . honour—putting shoes on (Margin) the feet, and clothes to cover the belly. uncomely parts—the secret parts: the poorest, though unclad in the rest of the body, cover these. 24. tempered . . . together—on the principle of mutual compensation. to that part which lacked—to the deficient part [ALFORD], (vs. 23).

25. no schism (cf. vs. 21)—no disunion; referring to the "divisions" noticed (ch. 11:18). care one for another—i.e., in behalf of one another.

26. And—Accordingly. all . . . suffer with it—"When a thorn enters the heel, the whole body feels it, and is concerned: the back bends, the belly and thighs contract themselves, the hands come forward and draw out the thorn, the head stoops, and the eyes regard the affected member with intense gaze" [CHRYSOSTOM]. rejoice with it—"When the head is crowned, the whole man feels honored, the mouth expresses, and the eyes look, gladness" [CHRYSOSTOM]. 27. members in particular—i.e., severally members of it. Each church is in miniature what the whole aggregate of churches is collectively, "the body of Christ" (cf. ch. 3:16): and its individual components are members, every one in his assigned place.

in such circumstances, as sufficiently proved that they also were miraculous gifts.

12. For as the body is one. Though the human body have many members and though it be composed of a great variety of parts, yet it is but one entire system, every part and member being necessary to the integrity or completeness of the whole. So also is Christ. That is, So is the Church the body of Christ, being composed of the different officers already mentioned, and especially those enumerated, v. 28, apostles, prophets, teachers, etc. It cannot be supposed that Christ is composed of many members, and therefore the term Church must be understood; unless we suppose, which is not probable, that the term Christ is used to express the Church or whole body of Christian believers.

13. For by one Spirit are we all baptized. As the body of man, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one soul, so the Church of Christ, which is His body, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one Spirit, the Holy Ghost; actuating and working by His spiritual body, as the human soul does in the body of man. To drink into one Spirit. We are to understand being made partakers of the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost agreeably to the words of our Lord, John vii. 37, etc.: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink . . . this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive."

14. For the body is not one member. The mystical body, the Church, as well as the natural body, is composed of many members.

15. If the foot shall say. As all the members of the body are necessarily dependent on each other, and minister to the general support of the system, so is it in the Church.

21. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee. The apostle goes on, with his principal object in view, to show that the gifts and graces with which their different teachers were endowed were all necessary for their salvation, and should be collectively used. For not one of them was unnecessary, nor could they dispense with the least of them; the body of Christ needed the whole for its nourishment and support.

22. Those members . . . which seem to be more feeble. These, and the less honorable and uncomely, mentioned in the next verses, seem to mean the principal viscera, such as the heart, lungs, stomach, and intestinal canal. These, when compared with the arms and limbs, are comparatively weak and some of them, considered in themselves, uncomely and less honorable; yet these are more essential to life than any of the others. A man may lose an eye by accident, and an arm or a leg may be amputated, and yet the body live and be vigorous; but let the stomach, heart, lungs, or any of the viscera be removed, and life becomes necessarily extinct.

25. That there should be no schism in the body. That there should be no unnecessary and independent part in the whole human machine, and that every part should contribute something to the general proportion, symmetry, and beauty of the body.

26. And whether one member suffer. As there is a mutual exertion for the general defense, so there is a mutual sympathy. If the eye, the hand, the foot be injured, the whole man grieves; and if by clothing, or anything else, any particular member or part is adorned, strengthened, or better secured, it gives a general pleasure to the whole man.

27. Now ye are the body of Christ. As the members in the human body, so the different members of the mystical body of Christ. All are intended by Him to have the same relation to each other, to be mutually subservient to each other, to mourn for and rejoice with each other. He has also made each necessary to the beauty, proportion, strength, and perfection of the whole. Not one is useless; not one, unnecessary. Paul, Apollos, Cephas, etc., with all their variety of gifts and graces, are "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying to the body of Christ," Eph. iv. 12. Hence no teacher should be exalted above or opposed to another.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. The variety of offices instituted by Christ, and gifts or favours dispensed by him (v. 28). Observe, (1) The plenteous variety of these gifts and offices. He was no niggard of his benefits and favours. They had no want, but a store—all that was necessary, and even more. (2) Observe the order of these offices and gifts. Those of most value have the first place. God does, and we should, value things according to their real worth. What holds the last and lowest rank in this enumeration is diversity of tongues. It is by itself the most useless and insignificant of all these gifts. The Corinthians valued themselves exceedingly on this gift. How proper a method it is to beat down pride to let persons know the true value of what they pride themselves in! It is but too common a thing for men to value themselves most on what is least worth.

(3) The various distribution of these gifts. All members and officers had not the same endowments (v. 29, 30). The Spirit distributes to everyone as he will. We must be content with our own rank and share. All are to minister to one another, and promote the good of the body in general.

II. He closes this chapter with an advice and a hint. An advice to covet the best gifts. We should desire that most which is best, and most worth. Grace is therefore to be preferred before gifts. But some read this passage, not as an advice, but a charge: You are envious at each other's gifts. You quarrel and contend about them. It was a quarrel about precedency; and it is no wonder that a quarrel about precedency should extinguish charity. When all would stand in the first rank, no wonder if they jostle. To have the heart glow with mutual love is vastly better than to glare with the most pompous titles, offices, or powers.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

28. set . . . in the church—as He has "set the members . . . in the body" (vs. 18). first apostles—above even the prophets. Not merely the Twelve, but others are so called, e.g., Barnabas, etc. (Rom. 16:7). teachers—who taught, for the most part, truths already revealed; whereas, the prophets made new revelations and spoke all their prophesyings under the Spirit's influence. As the teachers had the "word of knowledge," so the prophets "the word of wisdom" (vs. 8). Under "teachers" are included "evangelists and pastors." miracles—lit., "powers" (vs. 10): ranked below "teachers," as the function of teaching is more edifying, though less dazzling than working miracles. helps, governments—lower and higher departments of "ministrations" (vs. 5); as instances of the former, deacons whose office it was to help in the relief of the poor, and in baptizing and preaching, subordinate to higher ministers (Acts 6:1-10; 8:5-17); also, others who helped with their time and means, in the Lord's cause (cf. ch. 13:3; Num. 11:17). The Americans similarly use "helps" for "helpers." And, as instances of the latter, presbyters, or bishops, whose office it was to govern the Church (I Tim. 5:17; Heb. 13:17, 24). These officers, though now ordinary and permanent, were originally specially endowed with the Spirit for their office, whence they are here classified with other functions of an inspired character. Government (lit., guiding the helm of affairs), as being occupied with external things, notwithstanding the outward status it gives, is ranked by the Spirit with the lower functions. Cf. "He that giveth (answering to 'helps')—he that ruleth" (answering to "governments") (Rom. 12:8). Translate, lit., "Helpings, governings" [ALFORD]. diversities of tongues—(vs. 10). "Divers kinds of tongues." 29. Are all?—Surely not. 31. covet earnestly—Greek, "emulously desire." Not in the spirit of discontented "coveting." The Spirit "divides to every man severally as He will" (vs. 1); but this does not prevent men earnestly seeking, by prayer and watchfulness, and cultivation of their faculties, the greatest gifts. BEZA explains, "Hold in the highest estimation"; which accords with the distinction in his view (ch. 14:1) between "follow after charity—zealously esteem spiritual gifts"; also with (vss. 11, 18) the sovereign will with which the Spirit distributes the gifts, precluding individuals from desiring gifts not vouchsafed to them. But see the Note, ch. 14:1. the best gifts—Most of the oldest MSS. read, "the greatest gifts." and yet—Greek, "and moreover." Besides recommending your zealous desire for the greatest gifts, I am about to show you a something still more excellent (lit., "a way most waylike") to desire, "the way of love" (cf. ch. 14:1). This love, or "charity," includes both "faith" and "hope" (ch. 13:7), and bears the same fruits (ch. 13) as the ordinary and permanent fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22-24). Thus "long-suffering," cf. vs. 4; "faith," vs. 7; "joy," vs. 6; "meekness," vs. 5; "goodness," vs. 5; "gentleness," vs. 4 (the Greek is the same for "is kind"). It is the work of the Holy Spirit, and consists in love to God, on account of God's love in Christ to us, and as a consequence, love to man, especially to the brethren in Christ (Rom. 5:5; 15:30). This is more to be desired than gifts (Luke 10:20).

ADAM CLARKE

28. God hath set some in the church. As God has made evident distinctions among the members of the human body, so that some occupy a more eminent place than others, so has He in the Church. And to prove this, the apostle enumerates the principal offices, and in the order in which they should stand. First apostles. Persons immediately designated by Christ, and sent by Him to preach the gospel to all mankind. Secondarily prophets. A person who, under divine inspiration, predicts future events; but the word is often applied to those who preach the gospel. Thirdly teachers. Persons whose chief business it was to instruct the people in the elements of the Christian religion, and their duty to each other. Miracles. Persons endued with miraculous gifts. Gifts of healings. Such as laying hands upon the sick, and healing them. Helps. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these were the apostles' helpers; persons who accompanied them, baptized those who were converted by them, and were sent by them to such places as they could not attend to, being otherwise employed. The Levites are termed by the Talmudists "helps of the priests." The word occurs in Luke i. 54; Rom. viii. 26. Governments. Dr. Lightfoot contends that this word does not refer to the power of ruling, but to the case of a person endued with a deep and comprehensive mind, who is profoundly wise and prudent. Diversities of tongues. "Kinds of tongues"; that is, different kinds. The power to speak, on all necessary occasions, languages which they had not learned.

29. Are all apostles? That is: All are not apostles, all are not prophets, etc. God has distributed His various gifts among various persons, each of whom is necessary for the complete edification of the body of Christ.

31. But covet earnestly. To covet signifies to "desire earnestly." Some think that this verse should be read affirmatively, "You earnestly contend about the best gifts; but I show unto you a more excellent way"; i.e., get your hearts filled with love to God and man—love, which is the principle of obedience, which works no ill to its neighbor, and which is the fulfilling of the law. This is a likely reading, for there were certainly more contentions in the church of Corinth about the gifts than about the graces of the Spirit.

Here the apostle shows what more excellent way he meant, charity, or love: love in its fullest meaning, true love to God and man. Without this the most glorious gifts are nothing.

CHAPTER 13

VSS. 1-13. CHARITY OR LOVE SUPERIOR TO ALL GIFTS. The New Testament psalm of love, as the 45th Psalm (see its title) and Canticles in the Old Testament.

1. Though I speak. At the conclusion of the preceding chapter the apostle promised to show the Corinthians a "more excellent way" than that in which they were now proceeding. They were so distracted with contentions, divided by parties, and envious of each other's gifts that unity was nearly destroyed. This was a full proof that love to God and man was wanting, and that without this their numerous gifts and other graces were nothing in the eyes of God; for it was evident that they did not love one another, which is a proof that they did not love God, and consequently that they had not true religion. Before I proceed to the consideration of the different parts of this chapter, it may be necessary to examine whether the word agape be best translated by charity or "love." Wycliffe, translating from the Vulgate, has the word charity; and him our Authorized Version follows. But Coverdale, Matthews, Cranmer, and the Geneva Bible have "love," which is adopted by recent translators and commentators in general, among whom are Dodd and Wesley. All these strenuously contend that the word charity, which is now confined to "alms-

MATTHEW HENRY

1. The gift of tongues (v. 1). It is the charitable heart, not the voluble tongue, that is acceptable with God.

TODAY'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE:

Tongues, Gift of, granted on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:4), in fulfillment of a promise Christ made to his disciples (Mark 16:17). What this gift actually was has been a subject of much discussion. Some have argued that it was merely an outward sign of the presence of the Holy Spirit among the disciples, typifying his manifold gifts, and showing that salvation was to be extended to all nations. But the words of Luke (Acts 2:9) clearly show that the various people in Jerusalem at the time of Pentecost did really hear "the wonderful works of God" being spoken in their own special language with which they were naturally acquainted (comp. Joel 2:28, 29).

Among the gifts of the Spirit the apostle enumerates in 1 Cor. 12:10; 14:1-28, "divers kinds of tongues" and the "interpretation of tongues."

2. Prophecy, and the understanding of mysteries, and all knowledge. This without charity is as nothing, v. 2. A clear and deep head is of no signification, without a benevolent and charitable heart. It is not great knowledge that God sets a value upon, but true and hearty devotion and love. 3. Miraculous faith. Moving mountains is a great achievement in the account of men; but one dram of charity is, in God's account, of much greater worth than all the faith of this sort in the world. Saving faith is ever in conjunction with charity, but the faith of miracles may be without it.

4. The outward acts of charity, v. 3. There may be an open and lavish hand, where there is no liberal and charitable heart. If we give away all we have, while we withhold the heart from God, it will not profit.

5. Even sufferings, v. 3. Should we sacrifice our lives for the faith of the gospel; this will stand us in no stead without charity. True charity is the very heart and spirit of religion. If we feel none of its sacred heat in our hearts, it will profit nothing, though we be burnt to ashes for the truth.

Some of the properties and effects of charity.

I. It is long suffering. It can endure evil and provocation, without being filled with resentment or revenge. It will put up with many slights from the person it loves, and wait long to see the kindly effects of such patience on him.

II. It is kind. The law of kindness is in her lips. It seeks to be useful; and not only seizes on opportunities of doing good, but searches for them.

III. It envieth not; it is not grieved at the good of others. Envy is the effect of ill-will. The mind which is bent on doing good to all can never wish ill to any.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

1. tongues—from these he ascends to "prophecy" (vs. 2); then, to "faith"; then to benevolent and self-sacrificing deeds: a climax. He does not except even himself, and so passes from addressing them ("unto you," ch. 12:31, to putting the case in his own person, "Though I . . ." speak with the tongues—with the eloquence which was so much admired at Corinth (e.g., Apollos, Acts 18: 24; cf. ch. 1:12; 3:21, 22), and with the command of various languages, which some at Corinth abused to purposes of mere ostentation (ch. 14:2, etc.). of angels—higher than men, and therefore, it is to be supposed, speaking a more exalted language. charity—the principle of the ordinary and more important gifts of the Spirit, as contrasted with the extraordinary gifts (ch. 12). sounding . . . tinkling—sound without soul or feeling: such are "tongues" without charity. cymbal—Two kinds are noticed (Ps. 150:5), the loud or clear, and the highsounding one: hand cymbals and finger cymbals, or castanets. The sound is sharp and piercing.

2. mysteries—(Rom. 11:25 16:25). Mysteries refer to the deep counsels of God hitherto secret, but now revealed to His saints. Knowledge, to truths long known. faith . . . remove mountains—(Matt. 17:20; 21:21). The practical power of the will elevated by faith [NEANDER]; confidence in God that the miraculous result will surely follow the exercise of the will at the secret impulse of His Spirit. Without "love" prophecy, knowledge, and faith, are not what they seem (cf. ch. 8:1, 2; Matt. 7:22; Jas. 2:41, cf. vs. 8), and so fail of the heavenly reward (Matt. 6:2). Thus Paul, who teaches justification by faith only (Rom. 3:4, 5; Gal. 2:16; 3:7-14), is shown to agree with James, who teaches (Jas. 2:24) "by works" (i.e., by LOVE, which is the "spirit" of faith, Jas. 2:26) a man is justified, "and not by faith only." 3. bestow . . . goods . . . poor—lit., "dole out in food" all my goods; one of the highest functions of the "helps" (ch. 12:28).

give . . . body to be burned lit., "to such a degree as that I should be burned." As the three youths did (Dan. 3:28), "yielded their bodies" (cf. II Cor. 12:15). These are most noble exemplifications of love in giving and in suffering. Yet they may be without love; in which case the "goods" and "body" are given, but not the soul, which is the sphere of love. Without the soul God rejects all else, and so rejects the man, who is therefore "profited" nothing (Matt. 16:26; Luke 9:23-25). Men will fight for Christianity, and die for Christianity, but not live in its spirit, which is love.

suffereth long—under provocations of evil from others. The negative side of love.

is kind—the positive side. Extending good to others. Cf. with love's features here those of the "wisdom from above" (Jas. 3:17). envieth—The Greek includes also jealousy.

giving," is utterly improper, and that the word "love" alone expresses the apostle's sense. The tongues of men. All human languages, with all the eloquence of the most accomplished orator. And of angels. I.e., though a man knew the language of the eternal world so well that he could hold conversation with its inhabitants, and find out the secrets of their Kingdom. Or probably the apostle refers to a notion that was common among the Jews that there was a language by which angels might be invoked, adjured, collected, and dispersed; and by the means of which many secrets might be found out, and curious arts and sciences known. Sounding brass. That is, like a trumpet made of brass. Tinkling cymbal. Though I possessed the knowledge of all languages, and could deliver even the truth of God in them in the most eloquent manner, and had not a heart full of love to God and man, my religion is no more to my salvation than the sounds emitted by the brazen trumpet, or the jingling of the cymbals could contribute intellectual pleasure to the instruments which produce them; and, in the sight of God, I am of no more moral worth than those sounds are. I will quote Josiah Gregory: "People of little religion are always noisy; he who has not the love of God and man filling his heart is like an empty wagon coming violently down a hill: it makes a great noise, because there is nothing in it."

2. And though I have the gift of prophecy. Though I should have received from God the knowledge of future events, so that I could correctly foretell what is coming to pass in the world and in the Church; and understand all mysteries. The meaning of all the types and figures in the Old Testament, and all the unexplored secrets of nature; and all knowledge—every human art and science; and though I have all faith—such miraculous faith as would enable me even to remove mountains, or had such powerful discernment in sacred things that I could solve the greatest difficulties; and have not charity—this love to God and man, as the principle and motive of all my conduct, the characteristics of which are given in the following verses; I am nothing—nothing in myself, nothing in the sight of God, nothing in the Church, and good for nothing to mankind. Balaam and several others not under the influence of this love of God prophesied.

3. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor. This is a proof that charity, in our sense of the word, is not what the apostle means; for surely almsgiving can go no further than to give up all that a man possesses in order to relieve the wants of others. The word which we translate to feed the poor signifies to "divide into morsels, and put into the mouth," which implies carefulness and tenderness in applying the bounty thus freely given. And though I give my body to be burned. Mr. Wakefield renders this clause thus: "And though I give up my body so as to have cause of boasting"; in vindication of which he first refers to Dan. iii. 28; Acts xv. 26; Rom. viii. 32; Phil. i. 20. "That I may boast" is the reading of the Aethiopic and Coptic, and of the Codex Alexandrinus; several Greek and Latin MSS. referred to by Jerome; and of Jerome himself, who translates the passage thus: "If I deliver up my body that I may glory, or have cause of boasting." The charity or love which God recommends, the apostle describes in sixteen particulars, which are the following:

4. (1) Charity suffereth long. "Has a long mind"; to the end of which neither trials, adversities, persecutions, nor provocations can reach. The love of God, and of our neighbor for God's sake, is patient towards all man. It suffers all the weakness, ignorance, errors, and infirmities of the children of God, and all the malice and wickedness of the children of this world; and all this, not merely for a time, but long, without end. (2) Is kind. It is tender and compassionate in itself, and kind and obliging to others: it is mild, gentle, and benign; and if called to suffer, inspires the sufferer with the most amiable sweetness and the most tender affection. It is also submissive to all the dispensations of God, and creates trouble to no one. (3) Charity envieth not. Is not grieved because another possesses a greater portion of earthly, intellectual, or spiritual blessings. Those who have this pure love rejoice as much at

IV. It vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, is not bloated with self-conceit. True love will give us an esteem of our brethren, and this will limit our esteem of ourselves. The word rendered in our translation vaunteth itself bears other significations, but in every sense and meaning true charity stands in opposition to it. The Syriac renders it—does not raise tumults and disturbances. Charity calms the angry passions, instead of raising them. Others render it—It does not act insidiously, does not seek to ensnare them. It is not froward nor apt to be cross and contradictory. Some understand it of dissembling and flattery. Charity abhors such falsehood and flattery.

V. It behaveth not unseemly. It does nothing out of place or time; but behaves with courtesy and good-will towards all men.

VI. Charity is an utter enemy to selfishness: Seeketh not its own. Indeed self-love, in some degree, is natural to all men. And a reasonable love of self is by our Saviour made the measure of our love to others. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. But charity never seeks its own to the hurt of others. It often neglects its own for the sake of others.

VII. It is not exasperated. Where the fire of love is kept in, the flames of wrath will not easily kindle, nor long keep burning. Anger cannot rest in the bosom where love reigns. It is hard to be angry with those we love.

vaunteth not—in words, even of gifts which it really possesses; an indirect rebuke of those at Corinth who used the gift of tongues for mere display.

not puffed up—with party zeal, as some at Corinth were (ch. 4:6).

5. not . . . unseemly—is not uncourteous, or inattentive to civility and propriety.

ALBERT BARNES:

5. "Doth not behave itself unseemly." It means to conduct improperly, or disgracefully, or in a manner to deserve reproach. Love seeks that which is proper or becoming in the circumstances and relations of life in which we are placed. It prompts to the due respect for superiors, producing veneration and respect for their opinions; and it prompts to a proper regard for inferiors, not despising their rank, their poverty, their dress, their dwellings, their pleasures, their view of happiness; it prompts to the due observance of all the relations of life, as those of a husband, wife, parent, child, brother, sister, son, daughter, and produces a proper conduct and deportment in all these relations. The proper idea of the phrase is that it prompts to all that is fit and becoming in life; and would save from all that is unfit and unbecoming. There may be included in the word also the idea that it would prevent anything that would be a violation of decency or delicacy.

"Seeketh not her own." There is, perhaps, not a more striking or important expression in the New Testament than this; or one that more beautifully sets forth the nature and power of that love which is produced by true religion. Its evident meaning is that it is not selfish; it does not seek its own happiness exclusively or mainly; it does not seek its own happiness to the injury of others. This expression is not, however, to be pressed as if Paul meant to teach that a man should not regard his own salvation. But it is not simply or mainly that he may be happy that he is to seek it. It is, that he may thus glorify God his Savior, and accomplish the great design which his Maker has had in view in his creation and redemption.

It is the characteristic of the man, not that he promotes his own worth, health, happiness, or salvation, but that he lives to do good to others. Love to others will prompt to that, and that alone. There is not a particle of selfishness in true love. It seeks the welfare of others, and of all others. That true religion will produce this, is evident everywhere in the New Testament; and especially in the life of the Lord Jesus, whose whole biography is comprehended in one expressive declaration, "who went about doing good" (Acts 10:38).

"Is not easily provoked." This word occurs in the New Testament in only one other place. Acts 17:16, "His spirit was stirred within him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." The word properly means to sharpen by, or with, or on anything (from "sharp"), and may be applied to the act of sharpening a knife or sword; then it means to sharpen the mind, temper, courage of anyone; to excite or impel. Here it means evidently to rouse to anger; to excite to indignation or wrath. Tindal renders it, "is not provoked to anger."

the happiness, the honor, and comfort of others as they can do in their own. They are ever willing that others should be preferred before them. (4) Charity vaunteth not itself. This word is variously translated; "acteth not rashly, insolently; is not inconstant." There is a phrase in our own language that expresses what I think to be the meaning of the original, does not "set itself forward"—does not desire to be noticed or applauded, but wishes that God may be All in All. (5) Is not puffed up. Is not "inflated" with a sense of its own importance; for it knows it has nothing but what it has received, and that it deserves nothing that it has got. Every man whose heart is full of the love of God is full of humility; for there is no man so humble as he whose heart is cleansed from all sin. True humility arises from a sense of the fullness of God in the soul; abasement from a sense of corruption is a widely different thing.

5. (6) Doth not behave itself unseemly. Love never acts out of its place or character; observes due decorum and good manners; is never rude, bearish, or brutish; and is ever willing to become all things to all men, that it may please them for their good to edification. No ill-bred man, or what is termed rude or unmannerly, is a Christian. A man may have a natural bluntness, or be a clown, and yet there be nothing boorish or hoggish in his manner. I must apologize for using such words; they best express the evil against which I wish both powerfully and successfully to declaim. I never wish to meet with those who affect to be called "blunt, honest men"; who feel themselves above all the forms of respect and civility, and care not how many they put to pain, or how many they displease. But let me not be misunderstood; I do not contend for ridiculous ceremonies and hollow compliments. There is surely a medium, and a sensible Christian man will not be long at a loss to find it out. (7) Seeketh not her own. Is not desirous of her own spiritual welfare only, but of her neighbor's also. For the writers of the Old and New Testaments do almost everywhere, agreeably to their Hebrew idiom, express a preference given to one thing before another by an affirmation of that which is preferred, and a negative of that which is contrary to it. Love is never satisfied but in the welfare, comfort, and salvation of all. That man is no Christian who is solicitous for his own happiness alone, and cares not how the world goes, so that himself be comfortable. (8) Is not easily provoked. "Is not provoked, is not irritated, is not made sour or bitter." How the word easily got into our translation it is hard to say; but, however it got in, it is utterly improper, and has nothing in the original to countenance it. The New Testament, printed in 1547, the first year of Edward VI, in English and Latin, has simply, "is not provokeed to angre." The edition published in English in the following year, 1548, has the same rendering, but the orthography better: "is not provoked to anger." The Bible in folio, with notes, published the next year, 1549, by Edmund Becke, preserves nearly the same reading, "is not provoketh to anger." The large folio printed by Richard Cardmarden, at Rouen, 1566, has the same reading. The translation made and printed by the command of King James I, in 1611, departs from all these, and improperly inserts the word easily, which might have been His Majesty's own. And yet this translation was not followed by some subsequent editions; for the quarto Bible printed at London four years after, 1615, not only retains this original and correct reading, "it is not provoked to anger," but has the word "love" everywhere in this chapter instead of charity, in which all the preceding versions and editions agree. In short, this is the reading of Coverdale, Matthews, Cranmer, the Geneva, and others; and our own Authorized Version is the only one which I have seen where this false reading appears. The apostle's own words in v. 7 are a sufficient proof that love of which he speaks can never be provoked. When the man who possesses this love gives way to provocation, he loses the balance of his soul and grieves the Spirit of God. In that instant he ceases from loving God with all his soul, mind, and strength; and surely if he get embittered against his neighbor, he does not love him as himself. (9) Thinketh no evil. "Believes no evil where

VIII. Charity thinks no evil. It cherishes no malice, nor gives way to revenge: so some understand it. It is not soon, nor long, angry. It does not suspect evil of others. It will hide faults that appear, instead of hunting and raking out those that lie covered and concealed.

IX. The matter of its joy and pleasure is here suggested. It rejoiceth not in iniquity. It wishes ill to none, much less will it make this the matter of its delight, or rejoice in doing harm and mischief. The sins of others stir all its compassion, but can give it no entertainment. It rejoiceth in the truth. It gives it much satisfaction to see truth and justice prevail among men, and mutual faith and trust established.

X. It beareth all things, it endureth all things. Some read the first, covers all things. It is not for blazing nor publishing the faults of a brother. Though such a man be free to tell his brother his faults in private, he is very unwilling to expose him by making them public. Thus we do by our own faults, and thus charity would teach us to do by the faults of others.

XI. Believeth all things; hopeth all things. Indeed charity does by no means destroy prudence. Wisdom may dwell with love, and charity be cautious. But it is apt to believe well of all. All charity is apt to make the best of everything; it will judge well, and believe well. And, when in spite of inclination, it cannot believe well of others, it will yet hope well. How lovely a mind is that which is tinctured throughout with such benevolence! Happy the man who has this heavenly fire glowing in his heart!

Or, it beareth all things—will be patient upon provocation, and long patient. What a fortitude and firmness fervent love will give the mind! What cannot a lover endure for the beloved and for his sake!

Verses 8–13

How much it is preferable to the gifts on which the Corinthians were so apt to pride themselves.

I. Charity never faileth. It is a permanent and perpetual grace, lasting as eternity.

Prophecy must fail. Tongues will cease. There will be but one language in heaven. There is no confusion of tongues in the region of perfect tranquillity. And knowledge will vanish away. Not that holy and happy souls shall be unknowing: it is a very poor happiness that can consist with utter ignorance. The apostle is here setting the grace of charity in opposition to supernatural gifts. And it is more valuable, because more durable; it shall enter into heaven, where they will have no place.

II. We know in part, and we prophesy in part, v. 9. How little a portion of God was heard even by apostles and inspired men! These gifts were fitted to the present imperfect state of the church, whereas charity was to last for ever.

thinketh no evil—imputeth not evil [ALFORD]; lit., "the evil" which actually is there (Prov. 10:12; I Pet. 4:8). Love makes allowances for the falls of others, and is ready to put on them a charitable construction. Love, so far from devising evil against another, excuses "the evil" which another inflicts on her [ESTIUS]; doth not meditate upon evil inflicted by another [BENGEL]; and in doubtful cases, takes the more charitable view [GROTIUS].

6. rejoiceth in the truth—rather, "rejoiceth with the truth." Exults not at the perpetration of iniquity (unrighteousness) by others (cf. Gen. 9:22, 23), but rejoices when the truth rejoices; sympathizes with it in its triumphs (II John 4). See the opposite (II Tim. 3:8), "Resist the truth." So "the truth" and "unrighteousness" are contrasted (Rom. 2:8). "The truth" is the Gospel truth, the inseparable ally of love (Eph. 4:15; II John 12). The false charity which compromises "the truth" by glossing over "iniquity" or unrighteousness is thus tacitly condemned (Prov. 17:15). 7. Beareth all things—without speaking of what it has to bear. The same Greek verb as in ch. 9:12. It endures without divulging to the world personal distress. Literally said of holding fast like a watertight vessel; so the charitable man contains himself in silence from giving vent to what selfishness would prompt under personal hardship.

believeth all things—unsuspiciously believes all that is not palpably false, all that it can with a good conscience believe to the credit of another. Cf. James 3:17, "easy to be entreated"; Greek, "easily persuaded." hopeth—what is good of another, even when others have ceased to hope.

endureth—persecutions in a patient and loving spirit.

8. never faileth—never is to be out of use; it always holds its place.

shall fail . . . vanish away—The same Greek verb is used for both; and that different from the Greek verb for "faileth." Translate, "Shall be done away with," i.e., shall be dispensed with at the Lord's coming, being superseded by their more perfect heavenly analogues; for instance, knowledge by intuition. Of "tongues," which are still more temporary, the verb is "shall cease." A primary fulfilment of Paul's statement took place when the Church attained its maturity; then "tongues" entirely "ceased," and "prophesyings" and "knowledge," so far as they were supernatural gifts of the Spirit, were superseded as no longer required when the ordinary preaching of the word, and the Scriptures of the New Testament collected together, had become established institutions. 9, 10. in part—partially and imperfectly. Cf. a similar contrast to the "perfect man," "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:11-13). that which is in part—fragmentary and isolated.

no evil seems." Never supposes that a good action may have a bad motive; gives every man credit for his profession of religion, uprightness, godly zeal, while nothing is seen in his conduct or in his spirit inconsistent with this profession. His heart is so governed and influenced by the love of God that he cannot think of evil but where it appears. The original implies that he does not "invent or devise" any evil, or does not "reason" on any particular act or word so as to infer evil from it, for this would destroy his love to his brother; it would be ruinous to charity and benevolence.

6. (10) Rejoiceth not in iniquity. "Rejoiceth not in falsehood," but on the contrary, rejoiceth in the truth. (11) But rejoiceth in the truth. Everything that is opposite to falsehood and irreligion. Those who are filled with the love of God and man rejoice in the propagation and extension of divine truth.

7. (12) Beareth all things. This word is also variously interpreted; to "endure, bear, sustain, cover, conceal, contain." But the true import must be found either in "cover" or "contain." Love conceals everything that should be concealed; betrays no secret; retains the grace given; and goes on to continual increase. A person under the influence of this love never makes the sins. follies, faults, or imperfections of any man the subject of either censure or conversation. He covers them as far as he can; and if alone privy to them, he retains the knowledge of them in his own bosom as far as he ought. (13) Believeth all things. Is ever ready to believe the best of every person, and will credit no evil of any but on the most positive evidence. (14) Hopeth all things. When there is no place left for believing good of a person, then love comes in with its hope, where it could not work by its faith; and begins immediately to make allowances and excuses, as far as a good conscience can permit; and further, anticipates the repentance of the transgressor, and his restoration to the good opinion of society and his place in the Church of God. from which he had fallen. 15) Endureth all things. Bears up under all persecutions and maltreatment from open enemies, and professed friends; bears adversities with an even mind, as it submits with perfect resignation to every dispensation of the providence of God; and never says of any trial, affliction, or insult, "This cannot be endured."

8. (16) Charity never faileth. "This love never falleth off," because it bears, believes, hopes, and endures all things; and while it does so it cannot fail. It is the means of preserving all other graces; indeed, properly speaking, it includes them all; and all receive their perfection from it. Love to God and man can never be dispensed with. It is essential to social and religious life; without it no communion can be kept up with God, nor can any man have a preparation for eternal glory whose heart and soul are not deeply imbued with it. Prophecies, they shall fail. Whether the word imply predicting future events or teaching the truths of religion to men, all such shall soon be rendered useless. Though the accurate prophet and the eloquent, persuasive preacher be useful in their day, they shall not be always so, nor shall their gifts fit them for glory; nothing short of the love above described can fit a soul for the kingdom of God. Tongues, they shall cease. The miraculous gift of different languages shall also cease, as being unnecessary. Knowledge, it shall vanish away. All human arts and sciences, as being utterly useless in the eternal world, though so highly extolled and useful here.

9. For we know in part. We have here but little knowledge even of earthly, and much less of heavenly, things. He that knows most knows little in comparison of what is known by angels and the spirits of just men made perfect. And as we know so very little. how deficient must we be if we have not much love! We prophesy in part. Even the sublimest prophets have been able to say but little of the heavenly state, and the best preachers have left the Spirit of God very much to supply. When you have learned all you can from your ministers, remember you have much to learn from God; and for this you should diligently wait on Him by the reading of His Word and by incessant prayer.

10. But when that which is perfect. The state of eternal blessedness. Then that which is in

III. How much better it will be with the church hereafter (v. 10). When the end is once attained, the means will of course be abolished. Then the church will be in a state of perfection, complete both in knowledge and holiness. God will be known then clearly. What confused and indistinct notions of things, have children, in comparison of grown men! And how naturally do men despise and relinquish their infant thoughts!

The things to be known will be open to our eyes; and our knowledge will be free from all obscurity and error. God is to be seen face to face; and we are to know him as we are known by him. O glorious change! To pass from darkness to light, from clouds to the clear sunshine of our Saviour's face, and in God's own light to see light! It is at best but twilight while we are in this world; there it will be perfect and eternal day.

IV. Faith, hope, and love, are the three principal graces, of which charity is the chief. Faith fixes on the divine revelation, and assents to that: hope fastens on future felicity, and waits for that. But love fastens on the divine perfections themselves. These will all shine forth in the most glorious splendours in another world, and there will love be made perfect; there we shall perfectly love God. And there shall we perfectly love one another. When faith and hope are at an end, true charity will burn for ever with the brightest flame. Where God is to be seen as he is, and face to face, there charity is in its greatest height—there, and there only, will it be perfected.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

11. When . . . a child—(ch. 3:1; 14:20). I spake—alluding to "tongues." understood—or, "had the sentiments of." Alluding to "prophecy." I thought—Greek "reasoned" or "judged"; alluding to "knowledge." when I became . . . I put away—rather, "now that I am become a man, I have done away with the things of the child." 12. now—in our present state. see—an appropriate expression, in connection with the "prophets" of seers (I Sam. 9:9). through a glass—i.e., in a mirror; the reflection seeming to the eye to be behind the mirror, so that we see it through the mirror. Ancient mirrors were made of polished brass or other metals. The contrast is between the inadequate knowledge of an object gained by seeing it reflected in a dim mirror (such as ancient mirrors were), compared with the perfect idea we have of it by seeing itself directly. darkly—lit., "in enigma." As a "mirror" conveys an image to the eye, so an "enigma" to the ear. But neither "eye nor ear" can fully represent (though the believer's soul gets a small revelation now of) "the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him" (ch. 2:9). Paul alludes to Numbers 12:8, "not in dark speeches"; LXX, "not in enigmas." Compared with the visions and dreams vouchsafed to other prophets, God's communications with Moses were "not in enigmas." But compared with the intuitive and direct vision of God hereafter, even the revealed word now is "a dark discourse," or a shadowing forth by enigma of God's reflected likeness. Cf. II Pet. 1:19, where the "light" or candle in a dark place stands in contrast with the "day" dawning. God's word is called a glass or mirror also in II Corinthians 3:18. then—"when that which is perfect is come" (vs. 10). face to face—not merely "mouth to mouth" (Num. 12:8). Genesis 32:30 was a type (John 1:50, 51). know . . . known—rather as Greek, "fully know . . . fully known." Now we are known by, rather than know, God (ch. 8:3; Gal. 4:9). 13. And now—Translate, "But now." "In this present state" [HENDERSON]. Or, "now" does not express time, but opposition, as in ch. 5:11, "the case being so" [GROTIUS]; whereas it is the case that the three gifts, "prophecy," "tongues," and "knowledge" (cited as specimens of the whole class of gifts) "fail" (vs. 8), there abide permanently only these three—faith, hope, charity. In one sense faith and hope shall be done away, faith being superseded by sight, and hope by actual fruition (Rom. 8:24; II Cor. 5:7); and charity, or love, alone never faileth (vs. 8). But in another sense, "faith and hope," as well as "charity," ABIDE; viz., after the extraordinary gifts have ceased; for those three are necessary and sufficient for salvation at all times, whereas the extraordinary gifts are not at all so; cf. the use of "abide," ch. 3:14. Charity, or love, is connected specially with the Holy Spirit, who is the bond of the loving union between the brethren (Rom. 15:30; Col. 1:8). Faith is towards God. Hope is in behalf of ourselves. Charity is love to God creating in us love towards our neighbor. In an unbeliever there is more or less of the three opposites—unbelief, despair, hatred. Even hereafter faith in the sense of trust in God "abideth"; also "hope," in relation to ever new joys in prospect, and at the anticipation of ever increasing blessedness, sure never to be disappointed. But love alone in every sense "abideth"; it is therefore "the greatest" of the three, as also because it presupposes "faith," which without "love" and its consequent "works" is dead (Gal. 5:6; Jas. 2:17, 20). but—rather, "and"; as there is not so strong opposition between charity and the other two, faith and hope, which like it also "abide."

part, that which is imperfect, shall be done away; the imperfect as well as the probationary state shall cease forever.

11. When I was a child. This future state of blessedness is as far beyond the utmost perfection that can be attained in this world as our adult state of Christianity is above our state of natural infancy, in which we understand only as children understand.

12. Now we see through a glass, darkly. Of these words some literal explanation is necessary. The word which we translate a glass literally signifies a mirror or reflector, and among the ancients mirrors were made of fine polished metal. The word here may signify anything by which the image of a person is reflected, as in our "looking, or look-in, glass." The word is not used for a glass to look through, nor would such an image have suited with the apostle's design. The word which we render darkly will help us to the true meaning of the place. "Now, in this life, we see by means of a mirror reflecting the images of heavenly and spiritual things, in an enigmatical manner, invisible things being represented by visible, spiritual by natural, eternal by temporal; but then, in the eternal world, face-to-face, everything being seen in itself, and not by means of a representative or similitude." Now I know in part. Though I have an immediate revelation from God concerning His great design in the dispensation of the gospel, yet there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights of this design which even that revelation has not discovered; nor can they be known and apprehended in the present imperfect state. Eternity alone can unfold the whole scheme of the gospel. As also I am known. In the same manner in which disembodied spirits know and understand.

13. And now (in the present life) abideth faith, hope, charity. These three supply the place of that direct vision which no human embodied spirit can have; these abide or "remain" for the present state. Faith, by which we apprehend spiritual blessings, and walk with God. Hope, by which we view and expect eternal blessedness, and pass through things temporal so as not to lose those which are eternal. Charity or "love," by which we show forth the virtues of the grace which we receive by faith in living a life of obedience to God and of goodwill and usefulness to man. But the greatest of these is charity. Without faith it is impossible to please God; and without it, we cannot partake of the grace of our Lord Jesus. Without hope we could not endure as seeing Him who is invisible, nor have any adequate notion of the eternal world, nor bear up under the afflictions and difficulties of life. But great and useful and indispensably necessary as these are, yet charity or "love" is greater; "love is the fulfilling of the law"; but this is never said of faith or hope. Love is properly the image of God in the soul; for "God is love." By faith we receive from our Maker; by hope we expect a future and eternal good; but by love we resemble God, and by it alone are we qualified to enjoy heaven and be one with Him throughout eternity. Faith, says one, is the foundation of the Christian life and of good works; hope rears the superstructure; but love finishes, completes, and crowns it in a blessed eternity. Faith and hope respect ourselves alone; love takes in both God and man. Faith helps, and hope sustains us; but love to God and man makes us obedient and useful. This one consideration is sufficient to show that love is greater than either faith or hope. Some say love is the greatest because it remains throughout eternity, whereas faith and hope proceed only through life; hence we say that there faith is lost in sight, and hope in fruition. But does the apostle say so? Or does any man inspired by God say so? I believe not. Faith and hope will as necessarily enter into eternal glory as love will. The perfections of God are absolute in their nature, infinite in number, and eternal in their duration. However high, glorious, or sublime the soul may be in that eternal state, it will ever, in respect to God, be limited in its powers, and must be improved and expanded by the communications of the Supreme Being. Hence it will have infinite glories in the nature of God to apprehend by faith, to anticipate by hope, and enjoy by love.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 14

Verses 1–5

He teaches them, among spiritual gifts, which they should prefer.

I. An exhortation to charity (v. 1). See you do not miss this, the principal of all graces.

II. He directs them which spiritual gift to prefer: "Desire spiritual gifts, but rather that you may prophesy." Gifts are fit objects of our desire and pursuit, in subordination to grace and charity.

III. The reasons of this preference. He only compares prophesying with speaking with tongues. This was more ostentatious than the plain interpretation of scripture, but less fit to pursue the purposes of Christian charity. He that spoke with tongues must wholly speak between God and himself, v. 2.

What cannot be understood can never edify. But he that prophesies speaks to the advantage of his hearers. They may be exhorted and comforted by it, v. 3.

He that speaks with tongues may edify himself, v. 4, others can reap no benefit from his speech. Whereas the end of speaking in the church is to edify the church (v. 4), to which prophesying is immediately adapted. That is the best gift which does most good.

Every gift of God is a favour from God, but then those are to be most valued that are most useful. Greater is he who interprets scripture to edify the church than he who speaks tongues to recommend himself. That makes most for the honour of a minister which is most for the church's edification, not that which shows his gifts to most advantage.

If I come to you speaking with tongues, what will it profit you, unless I speak to you by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine? (v. 6).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Vss. 1-25. SUPERIORITY OF PROPHECY OVER TONGUES. 1. Follow after charity—as your first and chief aim, seeing that it is "the greatest" (ch. 13:13). and desire—Translate, "Yet (as a secondary aim) desire zealously (Note, ch. 12:31) spiritual gifts." but rather—"but chiefly that ye may prophesy" (speak and exhort under inspiration) (Prov. 29: 18; Acts 13:1; I Thess. 5:20), whether as to future events, i.e., strict prophecy, or explaining obscure parts of Scripture, especially the prophetical Scriptures or illustrating and setting forth questions of Christian doctrine and practice. Our modern preaching is the successor of prophecy, but without the inspiration. Desire zealously this (prophecy) more than any other spiritual gift; or in preference to "tongues" (vs. 2, etc.) [BENGEL].

2. speaketh ... unto God—who alone understands all languages. no man understandeth—generally speaking; the few who have the gift of interpreting tongues are the exception. in the spirit—as opposed to "the understanding" (vs. 14). mysteries—unintelligible to the hearers, exciting their wonder, rather than instructing them. Corinth, being a mart resorted to by merchants from Asia, Africa, and Europe, would give scope amidst its mixed population for the exercise of the gift of tongues; but its legitimate use was in an audience understanding the tongue of the speaker, not, as the Corinthians abused it, in mere display. 3. But—on the other hand. edification—of which the two principal species given are "exhortation" to remove sluggishness, "comfort" or consolation to remove sadness [BENGEL]. Omit "to."

4. edifieth himself—as he understands the meaning of what the particular "tongue" expresses; but "the church," i.e., the congregation, does not.

Translate, "Now I wish you all to speak with tongues (so far am I from thus speaking through having any objection to tongues), but rather IN ORDER THAT (as my ulterior and higher wish for you) ye should prophesy." Tongues must therefore mean languages, not ecstatic, unintelligible rhapsodie (as NEANDER fancied): for Paul could never "wish" for the latter in their behalf.

greater—because more useful. except he interpret—the unknown tongue which he speaks, "that the Church may receive edifying" (building up).

6. Translate, "But now"; seeing there is no edification without interpretation. revelation ... prophesying—corresponding one to the other; "revelation" being the supernatural unveiling of divine truths to man,

ADAM CLARKE

1. Follow after charity. Most earnestly labor to be put in possession of that love which beareth, believeth, hopeth, and endureth all things. It may be difficult to acquire and difficult to retain this blessed state, but it is essential to your present peace and eternal happiness. This clause belongs to the preceding chapter. Desire spiritual gifts. You are very intent on getting those splendid gifts which may add to your worldly consequence and please your carnal minds; but labor rather to get the gifts of God's Spirit, by which you may grow in grace and be useful to others; and particularly desire that ye may prophesy—that you may be able to teach and instruct others in the things of their salvation.

2. For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue. This chapter is crowded with difficulties. It is not likely that the Holy Spirit should in the church suddenly inspire a man with the knowledge of some foreign language which none in the church understood but himself; and lead him to treat the mysteries of Christianity in that language, though none in the place could profit by his teaching. Dr. Lightfoot's mode of reconciling these difficulties is the most likely I have met with. He supposes that by the unknown tongue the Hebrew is meant, and that God restored the true knowledge of this language when He gave the apostles the gift of tongues. As the Scriptures of the Old Testament were contained in this language, and it has beauties, energies, and depths in it which no verbal translation can reach, it was necessary, for the proper elucidation of the prophecies concerning the Messiah and the establishment of the Christian religion, that the full meaning of the words of this sacred language should be properly understood. Speaketh not unto men, but unto God. None present understanding the language, God alone knowing the truth and import of what he says. In the spirit he speaketh mysteries. Though his own mind (for so pneumati is understood here by many eminent critics) apprehends the mysteries contained in the words which he reads or utters; but if by the spirit we understand the Spirit of God, it only shows that it is by that Spirit that he is enabled to speak and apprehend these mysteries.

3. But he that prophesieth. The person who has the gift of teaching is much more useful to the church than he is who has only the gift of tongues, because he speaks to the profit of men: viz., to their edification, by the Scriptures he expounds; to their exhortation, by what he teaches; and to their comfort, by his revelation.

4. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue—in the Hebrew, for instance. The knowledge of the depth and power of which he has got by a divine revelation edifieth himself by that knowledge. But he that prophesieth. Has the gift of preaching. Edifieth the church. Speaketh unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort, v. 3.

5. I would that ye all spake with tongues. The word thelo does not so much imply a wish or desire as a command or permission. As if he had said: I do not restrain you to prophesying or teaching, though I prefer that; but I give you full permission to speak in Hebrew whenever it is proper, and when one is present who can interpret for the edification of the church, provided yourselves have not that gift, though you understand the language. The apostle said "tongue," in the singular number, vv. 2, 4, because he spoke of a single man; now he says tongues, in the plural number, because he speaks of many speaking. But he has the same meaning in both places. Greater is he that prophesieth. A useful, zealous preacher, though unskilled in learned languages, is much greater in the sight of God, and in the eye of sound common sense, than he who has the gift of those learned tongues, except he interpret; and we seldom find great scholars good preachers. This should humble the scholar, who is too apt to be proud of his attainments and despise his less learned but more useful brother.

6. Speaking with tongues. Without interpreting. What shall I profit you? I.e., I shall not profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation of some secret thing; or by knowledge of some mystery; or by prophesying, fore-

It would signify nothing to utter any of these in an unknown tongue.

I. Unintelligible language is like piping or harping without distinction of sounds: it gives no more direction than a pipe with but one stop or a harp with but one string can direct a dancer how he should order his steps, v. 7.

A trumpet giving an uncertain sound. If, instead of sounding an onset, it sounded a retreat, or sounded one knew not what, who would prepare for the battle? Words without a meaning can convey no notion nor instruction to the mind; and words not understood have no meaning. He compares the speaking in an unknown tongue to the gibberish of barbarians.

There are (v. 10) many kinds of voices in the world, none of which is without its proper signification. But whatever proper signification the words of any language may have to those who understand them, they are perfect gibberish to men of another language. In this case, speaker and hearers are barbarians to each other (v. 11), they talk and hear only sounds without sense. To speak in the church in an unknown tongue is to talk gibberish.

II. Be chiefly desirous of those gifts that are most for the church's edification, v. 12. "Covet those gifts most that will do the best service to men's souls." If they did speak a foreign language, they should beg of God the gift of interpreting it, v. 13. The church must understand, that it might be edified. The sum is that they should perform all religious exercises in their assemblies so that all might join in them and profit by them. He enforces this advice. His own mind might be devoutly engaged, but his understanding would be unfruitful (v. 14), he would not be understood, nor therefore would others join with him in his devotions. Language that is most obvious and easy to be understood is the most proper for public devotion.

The apostle,

I. Directs them how they should sing and pray in public (v. 15). He would have them perform both so as to be understood by others, that others might join with them. Public worship should be performed so as to be understood.

II. He enforces the argument with several reasons.

1. Otherwise the unlearned could not say Amen to their prayers or thanksgivings, could not join in the worship, for they did not understand it, v. 16. All should say Amen inwardly; and it is not improper to testify this inward concurrence in public prayers and devotions, by an audible Amen. Now, how should

"prophesying" the enunciation to men of such revelations. So "knowledge" corresponds to "doctrine," which is the gift of teaching to others our knowledge. As the former pair refers to specially revealed mysteries, so the latter pair refers to the general obvious truths of salvation, brought from the common storehouse of believers. 7. Translate, "And things without life-giving sound, whether pipe or harp, YET (notwithstanding their giving sound) if they give not a distinction in the tones (i.e., notes) how . . .?" what is piped or harped—i.e., what tune is played on the pipe or harp.

8. Translate, "For if also," an additional step in the argument. uncertain sound—having no definite meaning: whereas it ought to be so marked that one succession of notes on the trumpet should summon the soldiers to attack; another, to retreat; another, to some other evolution.

9. So . . . ye—who have life; as opposed to "things without life" (vs. 7). by the tongue—the language which ye speak in. ye shall speak—Ye will be speaking into the air, i.e., in vain (ch. 9:26). 10. it may be—i.e., perhaps, speaking by conjecture. "It may chance" (ch. 15: 37). so many—as may be enumerated by investigators of such matters. Cf. "so much," used generally for a definite number left undefined (Acts 5:8; also II Sam. 12:8). kinds of voices—kinds of articulate speech. without signification—without articulate voice (i.e., distinct meaning). None is without its own voice, or mode of speech, distinct from the rest. 11. Therefore—seeing that none is without meaning. a barbarian—a foreigner (Acts 28:2). Not in the depreciatory sense as the term is now used, but one speaking a foreign language.

zealous—emulously desirous. spiritual gifts—lit., "spirits"; i.e., emanations from the one Spirit. seek that ye may excel to—Translate, "Seek them, that ye may abound in them to the edifying. . . ." 13. Explain, "Let him who speaketh with a tongue [unknown] in his prayer (or, when praying) strive that he may interpret" [ALFORD]. This explanation of "pray" is needed by its logical connection with "prayer in an unknown tongue" (vs. 14). Though his words be unintelligible to his hearers, let him in them pray that he may obtain the gift of interpreting, which will make them "edifying" to "the church" (vs. 12). 14. spirit—my higher being, the passive object of the Holy Spirit's operations, and the instrument of prayer in the unknown tongue, distinguished from the "understanding," the active instrument of thought and reasoning; which in this case must be "unfruitful" in edifying others, since the vehicle of expression is unintelligible to them. On the distinction of soul or mind and spirit, see Ephesians 4:23; Hebrews 4:12.

15. What is it then?—What is my determination thereupon? and—rather as Greek, "but"; I will not only pray with my spirit, which (vs. 14) might leave the understanding unedified, BUT with the understanding also [ALFORD and ELLICOTT]. pray with the understanding also—and, by inference, I will keep silence altogether if I cannot pray with the understanding (so as to make myself understood by others). A prescient warning, mutatis mutandis, against the Roman and Greek practice of keeping liturgies in dead languages, which long since have become unintelligible to the masses; though their forefathers spoke them at a time when those liturgies were framed for general use.

16. Else . . . thou—He changes from the first person, as he had just expressed his own resolution, "I will pray with the understanding," whatever "thou" doest. bless—the highest kind of prayer. occupieth the room of the unlearned—one who, whatever other gifts he may possess, yet, as wanting the gift of interpretation, is reduced by the speaking in an unknown tongue to the position of one unlearned, or "a private person." say Amen—Prayer is not a vicarious duty done by others for telling some future event; or by doctrine, instructing you what to believe and practice.

7. And even things without life. As if he had said, I may illustrate this further by referring to a pipe or harp; if these were to utter mere sounds without order, harmony, or melody, though every tone of music might be in the sounds, surely no person could discern a tune in such sounds nor receive pleasure from such discords. Even so is the person who speaks in an unknown tongue, but does not interpret. His speech tends no more to edification than those discordant and unmeaning sounds do to pleasure and delight.

8. If the trumpet give an uncertain sound. If, when the soldier should prepare himself for the battle, the trumpet should give a different sound to that which is ordinarily used on such occasions, the soldier is not informed of what he should do, and therefore does not arm himself; consequently that vague, unintelligible sound of the trumpet is of no use.

9. Likewise ye. If you do not speak in the church so as to be understood, your labor is useless. Ye shall speak into the air—your speech will be lost and dissipated in the air, without conveying any meaning to any person; there will be a noise or sound, but nothing else.

10. There are, it may be. "For example." So many kinds of voices. So many different languages, each of which has its distinct articulation, pronunciation, emphasis, and meaning; or there may be so many different nations, each possessing a different language.

11. If I know not the meaning of the voice. The "power" and signification of the language. I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian. I shall appear to him, and he to me, as a person who had no distinct and articulate sounds which can convey any kind of meaning. This observation is very natural. When we hear persons speaking in a language of which we know nothing, we wonder how they can understand each other, as in their speech there appears to us no regular distinction of sounds or words.

12. Forasmuch as ye are zealous. Seeing you affect so much to have spiritual gifts, seek that you may get those by which you may excel in edifying the church.

13. Pray that he may interpret. Let him who speaks or reads the prophetic declarations in the Old Testament, in that tongue in which they were originally spoken and written, pray to God that he may so understand them himself and receive the gift of interpretation that he may be able to explain them in all their depth and latitude to others.

14. For if I pray in an unknown tongue. If my prayers are composed of sentences and sayings taken out of the prophets and in their own language, my spirit prayeth, my heart is engaged in the work, and my prayers answer all the purpose of prayers to myself; but my understanding is unfruitful to all others, because they do not understand my prayers, and I either do not or cannot interpret them.

15. I will pray with the spirit. I will endeavor to have all my prayers influenced and guided by the Spirit of God, and to have my own heart deeply affected in and by the work. And I will pray with the understanding also. I will endeavor so to pray that others may understand me, and thus be edified and improved by my prayers. And therefore I will pray in a language in the public congregation that may be understood by all present, so that all may join not only in the act but in the spirit of devotion. I will sing with the spirit. It does appear that singing psalms or spiritual hymns was one thing that was implied in what is termed "prophesying" in the Old Testament, as is evident from 1 Sam. x. 5-6, 10. And when this came through an immediate afflatus or inspiration of God, there is no doubt that it was exceedingly edifying, and must have served greatly to improve and excite the devotional spirit of all who were present.

16. He that occupieth the room of the unlearned. One who is not acquainted with the language in which you speak, sing, or pray. Say Amen. Give his assent and ratification to what he does not understand. It was very frequent in primitive times to express their approbation in the people say Amen to what they did not understand? The intention of public devotions is therefore entirely destroyed if they are performed in an unknown tongue. Others are not, cannot be, edified (v. 17) by what they understand not.

2. He alleges his own example, to make the greater impression. (1) He did not come behind any of them in this spiritual gift. It was not envy that made Paul depreciate what they so highly valued and so much vaunted of; he surpassed them all in this very gift of tongues. There was more ground for them to envy him upon this head than for him to envy them. When we beat down men's unreasonable value for themselves, we should let them see that this does not proceed from an envious and grudging spirit.

(2) He had rather speak five words with understanding than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue, v. 19. A truly Christian minister will value himself much more upon doing good to men's souls than upon procuring the greatest applause.

3. The fondness then discovered for this gift was but too plain an indication of the immaturity of their judgment, v. 20. Children are apt to be struck with novelty and strange appearances. Do not you act like them, and prefer noise and show to worth and substance; be like children in nothing but an innocent and inoffensive disposition. Christians should have wisdom and knowledge that are ripe and mature.

The apostle pursues the argument.

I. Tongues, as the Corinthians used them, were rather a token of judgment from God than mercy to any people (v. 21). It is an evidence that a people are abandoned of God when he gives them up to the discipline of those who speak in another language. They can never be benefited by such teaching as this; and, when they are left to it, it is a sad sign that God gives them over as past cure. Yet thus did the Corinthian preachers who would always deliver their inspirations in an unknown tongue.

II. Tongues were rather a sign to unbelievers than to believers, v. 22. The gift of tongues was necessary to spread Christianity. It was proper and intended to convince unbelievers; interpreting scripture in their own language, as most for the edification of such as did already believe. That gifts may be rightly used, it is proper to know the ends which they are intended to serve. To go about the conversion of infidels had been a vain undertaking without the gift of tongues, but, in an assembly of Christians it would be perfectly impertinent.

us; as in Rome's liturgies and masses. We must join with the leader of the prayers and praises of the congregation, and say aloud our responsive "Amen" in assent, as was the usage of the Jewish (Deut. 27:15-26; Neh. 8:6) and Christian primitive churches [JUSTIN MART., Apol. 2. 97]. 17. givest thanks—The prayers of the synagogue were called "eulogies," because to each prayer was joined a thanksgiving. Hence the prayers of the Christian Church also were called blessings and giving of thanks. This illustrates Colossians 4:2; I Thessalonians 5:17, 18. So the Kaddisch and Keduscha, the synagogue formulæ of "hallowing" the divine "name" and of prayer for the "coming of God's kingdom," answer to the Church's Lord's Prayer, repeated often and made the foundation on which the other prayers are built [TERTULLIAN, de Oratione]. 18. tongues—The oldest MSS. have the singular, "in a tongue [foreign]."

19. I had rather—The Greek verb more literally expresses this meaning, "I WISH to speak five words with my understanding (rather) than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue"; even the two thousandth part of ten thousand. The Greek for "I would rather," would be a different verb. Paul would NOT wish at all to speak "ten thousand words in an unknown tongue."

20. Brethren—an appellation calculated to conciliate their favorable reception of his exhortation. children in understanding—as preference of gifts abused to nonedification would make you (cf. ch. 3:1; Matt. 10:16; Rom. 16:19; Eph. 4:14). The Greek for "understanding" expresses the will of one's spirit, Romans 8:6 (it is not found elsewhere); as the "heart" is the will of the "soul." The same Greek is used for "minded" in Romans 8:6. men—full-grown. Be childlike, not childish.

In the law—as the whole Old Testament is called, being all of it the law of God. Cf. the citation of the Psalms as the "law," John 10:34. Here the quotation is from Isaiah 28:11, 12, where God virtually says of Israel, This people hear Me not, though I speak to them in the language with which they are familiar; I will therefore speak to them in other tongues, namely, those of the foes whom I will send against them; but even then they will not hearken to Me; which Paul thus applies, Ye see that it is a penalty to be associated with men of a strange tongue, yet ye impose this on the Church [GROTIUS]; they who speak in foreign tongues are like "children" just "weaned from the milk" (Isa. 28:9), "with stammering lips" speaking unintelligibly to the hearers, appearing ridiculous (Isa. 28:14), or as babbling drunkards (Acts 2:13), or madmen (vs. 23).

22. Thus from Isaiah it appears, reasons Paul, that "tongues" (unknown and uninterpreted) are not a sign mainly intended for believers (though at the conversion of Cornelius and the Gentiles with him, tongues were vouchsafed to him and them to confirm their faith), but mainly to be a condemnation to those, the majority, who, like Israel in Isaiah's day, reject the sign and the accompanying message. Cf. "yet . . . will they not hear Me" (vs. 21). "Sign" is often used for a condemnatory sign (Ezek. 4:3, 4; Matt. 12:39-42). Since they will not understand, they shall not understand. prophesying . . . not for them that believe not, but . . . believe—i.e., prophesying has no effect on them that are radically and obstinately like Israel (Isa. 28:11, the public assemblies by Amen. This practice, soberly and piously conducted, might still be of great use in the Church of Christ.

17. Thou verily givest thanks well. Because he felt gratitude and, from a sense of his obligation, gave praise to God; but because this was in an unknown tongue, those who heard him received no edification.

18. I speak with tongues more than ye all. He understood more languages than any of them did; and this was indispensably necessary, as he was the apostle of the Gentiles in general, and had to preach to different provinces where different dialects, if not languages, were used. In the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, and Latin, he was undoubtedly well-skilled from his education; and how many he might understand by miraculous gift we cannot tell. But even literally understood, it is very probable that he knew more languages than any man in the church of Corinth.

19. Yet in the church. As the grand object of public worship is the edification of those who attend, five words spoken so as to convey edification were of much more consequence than ten thousand which, not being understood, could convey none. By the word tongue, to which we add unknown, I suppose the apostle always means the Hebrew, for the reasons offered in the note on v. 1.

20. Be not children in understanding. There are three words here to which we must endeavor to affix the proper sense: (1) paidia signifies "children" in general, but particularly such as are grown up, so as to be fit to send to school in order to receive instruction; (2) nepios signifies an "infant," one that cannot yet speak, and is in the lowest stage of infancy; (3) teleioi, from teleo, "I complete or perfect," signifies those who are arrived at perfect maturity, of both growth and understanding. We shall now see the apostle's meaning: Brethren, be not as "little children" just beginning to go to school, in order to learn the first elements of their mother tongue, and with an understanding sufficient only to apprehend those elements. In malice. "In wickedness be as infants," who neither speak, do, nor purpose evil. But in understanding. "Be perfect men," whose vigor of body and energy of mind show a complete growth and a well-cultivated understanding.

21. In the law it is written. But the passage quoted is in Isa. xxviii. 11. Here is no contradiction, for the term torah, law, was frequently used by the Jews to express the whole Scriptures, law, prophets, and hagiographa; and they used it to distinguish these sacred writings from the words of the scribes. With men of other tongues. Bishop Pearce paraphrases this verse as follows: "With the tongues of foreigners and with the lips of foreigners will I speak to this people; and yet, for all that, will they not hear me, saith the Lord." To enter into the apostle's meaning we must enter into that of the prophet. The Jewish people were under the teaching of the prophets who were sent from God; these instructed, reproved, and corrected them by this divine authority. They however became so refractory and disobedient that God purposed to cast them off, and abandon them to the Babylonians: then they had a people to teach, correct, and reprove them whose language they did not understand. The discipline that they received in this way was widely different from that which they received while under the teaching of the prophets and the government of God; and yet for all this they did not humble themselves before their Maker, that this affliction might be removed from them.

22. Wherefore tongues are for a sign. The miraculous gift of tongues was never designed for the benefit of those who have already believed, but for the instruction of unbelievers, that they might see from such a miracle that this is the work of God, and so embrace the gospel. But as in the times of the prophet the strange Babylonish tongues came in the way of punishment and not in the way of mercy, take heed that it be not the case now; that by dwelling on the gift ye forget the Giver, and what was designed for you as a blessing may prove to you to be a curse. For it, because you have the gift of tongues, you will choose for your own aggrandizement to use them in the

III. The credit and reputation of their assemblies required them to prefer prophesying before speaking with tongues. If their ministers, or all employed in public worship, should talk unintelligible language, and infidels should drop in, they would conclude them to be mad. What sort of religion is that which leaves out sense and understanding? Would not this make Christianity ridiculous to a heathen? If, instead of speaking with tongues, those who minister plainly interpret scripture, a heathen or unlearned person, coming in, will probably be convinced, and become a convert to Christianity (v. 24, 25); and so will be brought to confess his guilt, to pay his homage to God, and own that he is indeed among you. Prophesying would certainly edify the church, and might probably convert infidels. The ministry was not instituted to make ostentation of gifts and parts, but to save souls.

Verses 26–33

I. He blames them for the confusion they introduced into the assembly (v. 26). "You are apt to confound the several parts of worship"; or else, "You are apt to be confused if you do not stay for one another. Can this be edifying? Let all things be done to edifying."

II. He corrects their faults. 1. As to speaking in an unknown tongue, he orders that no more than two or three should do it at one meeting, and this one after another. And even this was not to be done unless there were someone to interpret (v. 27, 28). But, if there were none to interpret, he was to be silent in the church, and only exercise his gift between God and himself (v. 28).

2. As to prophesying he orders, (1) That two or three only should speak at one meeting (v. 29). There might be false prophets, and the true prophets were to judge of these and discover who was divinely inspired and who was not. (2) He orders that, if any assistant prophet had a revelation, while another was prophesying, the other should hold his peace, be silent (v. 30). He who had the new revelation might claim liberty of speech in his turn.

The reason annexed (v. 31): That all might prophesy, one after another. Divine inspirations are not, like the diabolical possessions of heathen priests, violent and ungovernable; but are sober and calm, and capable of regular conduct. The man inspired by the Spirit of God may still observe the rules of natural order and decency in delivering his revelations.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12), unbelievers, but on them that are either in receptivity or in fact believers; it makes believers of those not wilfully unbelievers (vs. 24, 25; Rom. 10: 17), and spiritually nourishes those that already believe. 23. whole . . . all . . . tongues—The more there are assembled, and the more that speak in unknown tongues, the more will the impression be conveyed to strangers "coming in" from curiosity ("unbelievers"), or even from a better motive ("unlearned"), that the whole body of worshippers is a mob of fanatical "madmen"; and that "the Church is like the company of builders of Babel after the confusion of tongues, or like the cause tried between two deaf men before a deaf judge, celebrated in the Greek epigram" [GROTIUS]. unlearned—having some degree of faith, but not gifts [BENGEL]. 24. all—one by one (vs. 31). prophesy—speak the truth by the Spirit intelligibly, and not in unintelligible tongues. one—"anyone." Here singular; implying that this effect, viz., conviction by all, would be produced on anyone, who might happen to enter. In vs. 23 the plural is used; "unlearned or unbelievers"; implying that however many there might be, not one would profit by the tongues; yea, their being many would confirm them in rejecting the sign, as many unbelieving men together strengthen one another in unbelief; individuals are more easily won [BENGEL]. convinced—convicted in conscience; said of the "one that believeth not" (John 16:8, 9). judged—His secret character is opened out. "Is searched into" [ALFORD]. Said of the "one unlearned" (cf. ch. 2:15). 25. And thus—omitted in the oldest MSS. and versions. secrets of his heart made manifest—He sees his own inner character opened out by the sword of the Spirit (Heb. 4:12; Jas. 1:23), the word of God, in the hand of him who prophesieth. Cf. the same effect produced on Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2:30 and end of verse 47). No argument is stronger for the truth of religion than its manifestation of men to themselves in their true character. Hence hearers even now often think the preacher must have aimed his sermon particularly at them. and so—convicted at last, judged, and manifested to himself. Cf. the effect on the woman of Samaria produced by Jesus' unfolding of her character to herself (John 4:19, 29). and report—to his friends at home, as the woman of Samaria did. Rather, as the Greek is, "He will worship God, announcing," i.e., openly avowing then and there, "that God is in you of a truth," and by implication that the God who is in you is of a truth the God.

26-40. RULES FOR THE EXERCISE OF GIFTS IN THE CONGREGATION. 26. How is it then?—rather, "What then is the true rule to be observed as to the use of gifts?" Cf. vs. 15, where the same Greek occurs. a psalm—extemporary, inspired by the Spirit, as that of Mary, Zechariah, Simeon, and Anna (Luke 1 and 2). a doctrine—to impart and set forth to the congregation. a tongue . . . a revelation—The oldest MSS. transpose the order: "revelation . . . tongue"; "interpretation" properly following "tongue" (vs. 13). Let all things be done unto edifying—The general rule under which this particular case falls; an answer to the question at the beginning of this verse. Each is bound to obey the ordinances of his church not adverse to Scripture. See Article XXXIV, Church of England Prayer Book. 27. let it be by two—at each time, in one assembly; not more than two or three might speak with tongues at each meeting. by course—in turns. let one interpret—one who has the gift of interpreting tongues; and not more than one. 28. let him—the speaker in unknown tongues. speak to himself, and to God—(cf. vss. 2, 4)—privately and not in the hearing of others. 29. two or three—at one meeting (he does not add "at the most," as in vs. 27, lest he should seem to "quench prophesyings," the most edifying of gifts), and these "one by one," in turn (vs. 27, "by course," and vs. 31). Paul gives here similar rules to the prophets, as previously to those speaking in unknown tongues. judge—by their power of "discerning spirits" (ch. 12:10), whether the person prophesying was really speaking under the influence of the Spirit (cf. ch. 12:3; I John 4:1-3). 30. If any thing—Translate, "But if any thing." another that sitteth by—a hearer. let the first hold his peace—Let him who heretofore spoke, and who came to the assembly furnished with a previous ordinary (in those times) revelation from God (vs. 26), give place to him who at the assembly is moved to prophesy by a sudden revelation from the Spirit. 31. For ye may—rather, "For ye can [if ye will] all prophesy one by one," giving way to one another. The "for" justifies the precept (vs. 30), "let the first hold his peace." 32. And—following up the assertion in vs. 31, "Ye can (if ye will) prophesy one public congregation where none understands them, God may curse your blessings. Prophesying. Teaching the things of God in a known language is of infinitely more consequence than speaking in all the foreign tongues in the universe.

23. Will they not say that ye are mad? So they well might, finding a whole assembly of people talking languages which those who had most need of instruction could not understand.

24. But if all prophesy. If all those who teach do it in the tongue which all understand, if an unbeliever, or one who knows nothing of the sacred language, come in and hear things just suited to his own state, he is convicted by all and he is judged by all.

25. And thus are the secrets of his heart. As these who were the prophets or teachers had often the discernment of spirits, they were able in certain cases, and probably very frequently, to tell a man the secrets of his own heart; and where this was not directly the case, God often led His ministers to speak those things that were suitable to the case before them, though they themselves had no particular design. The sinner, therefore, convinced that God alone could uncover the secrets of his heart, would be often obliged to fall down on his face, abashed and confounded, and acknowledge that God was truly among them.

26. How is it . . . every one of you hath a psalm? When the whole church came together, among whom there were many persons with extraordinary gifts, each of them wished to put himself forward and occupy the time and attention of the congregation; hence confusion must necessarily take place, and perhaps not a little contention. This was contrary to that edifying which was the intention of these gifts.

27. Speak in an unknown tongue. The Hebrew, as has already been conjectured. Let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course. Let only two or three in one assembly act in this way, that too much time may not be taken up with one exercise; and let this be done by course, the one after the other, that two may not be speaking at the same time; and let one interpret for all that shall thus speak.

28. But if there be no interpreter. If there be none present who can give the proper sense of this Hebrew reading and speaking, then let him keep silence and not occupy the time of the church by speaking in a language which only himself can understand.

29. Let the prophets. Those who have the gift of speaking to men "to edification, and exhortation, and comfort," v. 3. Two or three. As prophesying implied psalmody, teaching, and exhortation, Dr. Lightfoot thinks that the meaning of the place is this: Let one sing who has a psalm; let another teach who has a doctrine; and let a third exhort, or comfort, who has a gift of that kind. And let the other judge. The other prophets or qualified persons judge of the propriety of what had been spoken; or let them "discern" how the revelation under the new covenant confirmed and illustrated the revelation granted under the Old Testament. It appears to have been taken for granted that a man might pretend to this spirit of prophecy who was not sent of God; and therefore it was the duty of the accredited teachers to examine whether what he spoke was according to truth and the analogy of faith.

30. Be revealed to another that sitteth by. Probably those who were teachers sat on a particular seat, or place, from which they might most readily address the people; and this may be the meaning of sitting by. If such a person could say, I have just received a particular revelation from God, then let him have the liberty immediately to speak it, as it might possibly relate to the circumstances of that time and place.

31. For ye may all prophesy one by one. The gifts which God grants are given for the purpose of edification, but there can be no edification where there is confusion; therefore let them speak one by one.

32. And the spirits of the prophets. Let no one interrupt another; let all be ready to prefer others before themselves, and let each feel a

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The apostle gives the reasons of these regulations. They would be for the church's benefit, their instruction and consolation. Divine inspiration should by no means throw Christian assemblies into confusion. If they are managed in a tumultuous and confused manner, what a notion must this give of the God who is worshipped! Does it look as if he were the God of peace and order, and an enemy to confusion? Things were thus orderly managed in all the other churches. And it would be perfectly scandalous for them, who exceeded most churches in spiritual gifts, to be more disorderly than any in the exercise of them.

Verses 34, 35

Here the apostle, 1. Enjoins silence on their women in public assemblies, who must not ask questions for their own information in the church, but ask their husbands at home. There is indeed an intimation (ch. xi. 5) as if the women sometimes did pray and prophesy in their assemblies. But here he seems to forbid all public performances of theirs. They are not permitted to speak (v. 34) in the church. Nor must she therefore be allowed to teach in a congregation; nor so much as to ask questions in the church, but learn in silence there; and, if difficulties occurred, ask their own husbands at home. As it is the woman's duty to learn in subjection, it is the man's duty to keep up his superiority, by being able to instruct her. If it be a shame for her to speak in the church, where she should be silent, it is a shame for him to be silent when he should speak, and not be able to give an answer, when she asks him at home. 2. The apostle concludes it was a shame for women to speak in the church. Shame is the mind's uneasy reflection on having done an indecent thing. And what more indecent than for a woman to quit her rank. The woman was made subject to the man, and she should keep her station and be content with it.

Verses 36-40

A just rebuke of the Corinthians for their extravagant pride and self-conceit. Are you the only church favoured with divine revelations. How intolerably assuming is this behaviour!

by one," i.e., restrain yourselves from speaking all together; "and the spirits of the prophets," i.e., their own spirits, acted on by the Holy Spirit, are not so hurried away by His influence, as to cease to be under their own control; they can if they will hear others, and not demand that they alone should be heard uttering communications from God. 33. In all the churches of the saints God is a God of peace; let Him not among you be supposed to be a God of confusion [ALFORD]. Cf. the same argument in ch. 11:16. LACHMANN and others put a full stop at "peace," and connect the following words thus: "As in all churches of the saints, let your women keep silence in your churches."

34. (I Tim. 2:11, 12.) For women to speak in public would be an act of independence, as if they were not subject to their husbands (cf. ch. 11:3; Eph. 5:22 Titus 2:5; I Pet. 3:1). For "under obedience," translate, "in subjection" or "submission," as the Greek is translated (Eph. 5:21, 22, 24).

the law—a term applied to the whole Old Testament; here, Genesis 3:16.

35. Anticipation of an objection. Women may say, "But if we do not understand something, may we not 'ask' a question publicly so as to 'learn'? Nay, replies Paul, if you want information, 'ask' not in public, but 'at home'; ask not other men, but 'your own particular (so the Greek) husbands.'" shame—indecorous. 36. What!—Greek, "Or." Are you about to obey me? Or, if you set up your judgment above that of other churches. I wish to know, do you pretend that your church is the first church FROM which the gospel word came, that you should give the law to all others? Or are you the only persons UNTO whom it has come?

spirit of subjection to his brethren. God grants no ungovernable gifts.

33. For God is not the author of confusion. Let not the persons who act in the congregation in this disorderly manner say that they are under the influence of God; for He is not the Author of confusion. But two, three, or more praying or teaching in the same place at the same time is confusion, and God is not the Author of such work; and let men beware how they attribute such disorder to the God of order and peace. The apostle calls such conduct "tumult, sedition"; and such it is in the sight of God and in the sight of all good men. How often is a work of God marred and discredited by the folly of men! For nature will always, and Satan too, mingle themselves as far as they can in the genuine work of the Spirit, in order to discredit and destroy it. Nevertheless in great revivals of religion it is almost impossible to prevent wildfire from getting in among the true fire, but it is the duty of the ministers of God to watch against and prudently check this; but if themselves encourage it, then there will be confusion and every evil work.

34. Let your women keep silence in the churches. This was a Jewish ordinance; women were not permitted to teach in the assemblies, or even to ask questions. This was their condition till the time of the gospel, when, according to the prediction of Joel, the Spirit of God was to be poured out on the women as well as the men, that they might "prophesy," i.e., teach. And that they did prophesy or teach is evident from what the apostle says, chap. xi. 5, where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct while ministering in the church. But does not what the apostle says here contradict that statement and show that the words in chap. xi should be understood in another sense? For here it is expressly said that they should keep silence in the churches; for it was not permitted to a woman to speak. Both places seem perfectly consistent. It is evident from the context that the apostle refers here to asking questions, and what we call "dictating" in the assemblies. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute, etc., in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to any woman. Paul confirms this in reference also to the Christian church. He orders them to keep silence; and, if they wished to "learn any thing, let them ask of their husbands at home," because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies, on points of doctrine, cases of conscience, etc. But this by no means intimated that when a woman received any particular influence from God to enable her to teach that she was not to obey that influence; on the contrary, she was to obey it, and the apostle lays down directions in chap. xi for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed. All that the apostle opposes here is their questioning, finding fault, disputing, in the Christian church, as the Jewish men were permitted to do in their synagogues; together with the attempts to usurp any authority over the men by setting up their judgment in opposition to them, for the apostle has in view especially acts of disobedience, arrogance, etc., of which no woman would be guilty who was under the influence of the Spirit of God. But . . . to be under obedience, as also saith the law. This is a reference to Gen. iii. 16: "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." From this it is evident that it was the disorderly and disobedient that the apostle had in view, and not any of those on whom God had poured out his Spirit.

35. For it is a shame for women to speak in the church. The Jews would not suffer a woman to read in the synagogue, though a servant or even a child had this permission; but the apostle refers to irregular conduct, such conduct as proved that they were not under obedience, v. 34.

36. Came the word of God out from you? Was it from you that other churches received the gospel? Are you the mother church, that you should have rules, and orders, and customs, different from all others; and set yourselves up for a model to be copied by all the churches of Christ? Or came it unto you only? Are you the only church of God? Are there not many others founded before you that have no such

A. T. ROBERTSON:

34. "Keep silence in the churches" (en tais ekklesiais sigatosan). The same verb used about the disorders caused by speakers in tongues (v. 28) and prophets (v. 30). For some reason some of the women were creating disturbance in the public worship by their dress (11:2-16) and now by their speech. There is no doubt at all as to Paul's meaning here. In church the women are not allowed to speak (lalein) nor even to ask questions. They are to do that "at home" (en oikoi). He calls it a shame (aischron) as in 11:6 (cf. Eph. 5:12; Titus 1:11). Certainly women are still in subjection (hupotassesthosan) to their husbands (or ought to be). But somehow modern Christians have concluded that Paul's commands on this subject, even 1 Tim. 2:12, were meant for specific conditions that do not apply wholly now. Women do most of the teaching in our Sunday schools today. It is not easy to draw the line. The daughters of Philip were prophetesses. It seems clear that we need to be patient with each other as we try to understand Paul's real meaning here.

MATTHEW HENRY

What he said to them was the command of God; nor durst any true prophet deny it (v. 37). "If their revelations contradict mine, they do not come from the same Spirit; either I or they must be false prophets.

But if any continue after all, uncertain or ignorant whether they or I speak by the Spirit of God, they must be left under the power of this ignorance." It is just with God to leave those to the blindness of their own minds who wilfully shut out the light. Though they should not despise the gift of tongues, yet they should prefer prophesying. It was the more useful gift. He charges them to let all things be done decently and in order (v. 40). They must do nothing that was manifestly childish (v. 20), or that would give occasion to say they were mad (v. 23), nor must they act so as to breed confusion, v. 33. All parts of divine worship should be carried on in a composed and orderly manner.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

37. prophet—the species. spiritual—the genus: spiritually endowed. The followers of Apollos prided themselves as "spiritual" (ch. 3:1-3; cf. Gal. 6:1). Here one capable of discerning spirits is specially meant. things that I write . . . commandments of the Lord—a direct assertion of inspiration. Paul's words as an apostle are Christ's words. Paul appeals not merely to one or two, but to a body of men, for the reality of three facts about which no body of men could possibly be mistaken: (1) that his having converted them was not due to mere eloquence, but to the "demonstration of the Spirit and of power"; (2) that part of this demonstration consisted in the communication of miraculous power, which they were then exercising so generally as to require to be corrected in the irregular employment of it; (3) that among these miraculous gifts was one which enabled the "prophet" or "spiritual person" to decide whether Paul's Epistle was Scripture or not. He could not have written so, unless the facts were notoriously true: for he takes them for granted, as consciously known by the whole body of men whom he addresses [HINDS on Inspiration]. 38. if any man be ignorant—wilfully; not wishing to recognize these ordinances and my apostolic authority in enjoining them. let him be ignorant—I leave him to his ignorance: it will be at his own peril; I feel it a waste of words to speak anything further to convince him. An argument likely to have weight with the Corinthians, who admired "knowledge" so much. 39. covet—earnestly desire. Stronger than "forbid not"; marking how much higher he esteemed "prophecy" than "tongues." 40. Let . . .—The oldest MSS. read, "But let. . . ." This verse is connected with vs. 39, "But (while desiring prophecy, and not forbidding tongues) let all things be done decently." "Church government is the best security for Christian liberty" [J. NEWTON]. (Cf. vss. 23, 26-33.)

customs and permit no such disorders?

37. If any man think himself to be a prophet. He who is really a spiritual man, under the influence of the Spirit of God and capable of teaching the divine will, he will acknowledge that what I now say is from the same Spirit; and that the things which I now write are the commandments of God, and must be obeyed on pain of His displeasure.

38. But if any man be ignorant. If he affect to be so, or pretend that he is ignorant, let him be ignorant—let him be so at his peril.

39. Covet to prophesy. Let it be your endeavor and prayer to be able to teach the way of God to the ignorant; this is the most valuable, because the most useful, gift of the Spirit. And forbid not to speak with tongues. Let every gift have its own place and operation; let none envy another; nor prevent him from doing that part of the work to which God, by giving the qualification, has evidently called him.

40. Let all things be done decently. In their proper forms with becoming reverence, according to their dignity and importance. Everything in the Church of God should be conducted with gravity and composure, suitable to the importance of the things, the infinite dignity of the object of worship, and the necessity of the souls in behalf of which those religious ordinances are instituted. And in order. Everything in its place, everything in its time, and everything suitably. Let all things be done decently and in order is a direction of infinite moment in all the concerns of religion, and of no small consequence in all the concerns of life. How much pain, confusion, and loss would be prevented were this rule followed!

It is the apostle's business in this chapter to establish the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, which some of the Corinthians flatly denied, v. 12. And they disowned a future state of recompences, by denying the resurrection of the dead. He begins with an epitome of the gospel. Now concerning the gospel observe,

I. What a stress he lays upon it (v. 1, 2). It was what he constantly preached. The doctrine which Paul had heretofore taught, he still taught. It was what they had received. It was no strange doctrine. It was that very gospel in which they had hitherto stood, and must continue to stand. The doctrine of Christ's death and resurrection is at the foundation of Christianity. Remove this foundation, and the whole fabric falls. It was that alone by which they could hope for salvation (v. 2). There is no salvation in his name, but upon supposition of his death and resurrection. These are the saving truths of our holy religion. They must be retained in mind, they must be held fast. We believe in vain, unless we continue and persevere in the faith of the gospel. We shall be never the better for a temporary faith. And in vain is it to profess faith in Christ, if we deny the resurrection. Take away this, you make nothing of Christianity.

II. What this gospel is. It was that doctrine which he had received, and delivered to them, among the first, the principal. It was a doctrine of the first rank, a most necessary truth. Christ's death and resurrection are the very sum and substance of evangelical truth.

III. This truth is confirmed,

1. By Old Testament predictions. He died for our sins; he was buried, and rose from the dead, according to the scripture-prophecies. It is a great confirmation of our faith of the gospel to see how it corresponds with ancient prophecies.

CHAPTER 15

Vss. 1-58. THE RESURRECTION PROVED AGAINST THE DENIERS OF IT AT CORINTH. Christ's resurrection rests on the evidence of many eyewitnesses, including Paul himself, and is the great fact preached as the groundwork of the Gospel: they who deny the resurrection in general, must deny that of Christ, and the consequence of the latter will be, that Christian preaching and faith are vain. 1. Moreover—"Now" [ALFORD and ELLICOTT]. I declare—lit., "I make known": it implies some degree of reproach that it should be now necessary to make it known to them afresh, owing to some of them "not having the knowledge of God" (vs. 34). Cf. Galatians 1: 11. wherein ye stand—wherein ye now take your stand. This is your present actual privilege, if ye suffer not yourselves to fall from your high standing. 2. ye are saved—rather, "ye are being saved." if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you—Able critics, BENGEL and others, prefer connecting the words thus, "I declare unto you the Gospel (vs. 1) in what words I preached it unto you." Paul reminds them, or rather makes known to them, as if anew, not only the fact of the Gospel, but also with what words, and by what arguments, he preached it to them. Translate in that case, "if ye hold it fast." I prefer arranging as English Version, "By which ye are saved, if ye hold fast (in memory and personal appropriation) with what speech I preached it unto you." unless—which is impossible, your faith is vain, in resting on Christ's resurrection as an objective reality. 3. I delivered unto you—A short creed, or summary of articles of faith, was probably even then existing; and a profession in accordance with it was required of candidates for baptism (Acts 8:37). first of all—lit., "among the foremost points" (Heb. 6:2). The atonement is, in Paul's view, of primary importance. which I . . . received—from Christ Himself by special revelation (cf. ch. 11:23). died for our sins—i.e., to atone FOR them; for taking away our sins (I John 3:5; cf. Gal. 1:4); "gave Himself for our sins" (Isa. 53:5; II Cor. 5:15; Titus 2:14). The "for" here does not, as in some passages, imply vicarious substitution, but "in behalf of" (Heb. 5:3; I Pet. 2:24). It does not, however, mean merely "on account of," which is expressed by a different Greek word (Rom. 4:25), (though in English Version translated similarly, "for"). according to the scriptures—which "cannot be broken." Paul puts the testimony of Scripture above that of those who saw the Lord after His resurrection [BENGEL]. So our Lord quotes Isaiah 53:12, in Luke 22:37; cf. Psalm 22:15, etc.; Daniel 9:26. 4. buried . . . rose

It appears from this chapter that there were some false apostles at Corinth who denied the resurrection (see v. 12), in consequence of which Paul discusses three questions in this chapter: (1) Will there be a resurrection of the dead? vv. 1-35; (2) What will be the nature of the resurrection bodies? vv. 35-51; (3) What will become of those who are found alive in the day of judgment? vv. 51-57.

1. The gospel which I preached unto you. This gospel is contained in Christ dying for our sins, being buried, and rising again the third day.

2. If ye keep in memory. Your future salvation, or being brought finally to glory, will now depend on your faithfulness to the grace that you have received.

3. For I delivered unto you first of all. "As the chief things," or matters of the greatest importance; fundamental truths. That which I also received. By revelations from God himself, and not from man. That Christ died for our sins. The death of Jesus Christ, as a vicarious Sacrifice for sin, is among the things that are of chief importance, and is essential to the gospel scheme of salvation. According to the scriptures. It is not said anywhere in the Scriptures, in express terms, that Christ should rise on the third day; but it is fully implied in His types, as in the case of Jonah, who came out of the belly of the fish on the third day; but particularly in the case of Isaac, who was a very expressive type of Christ; for, as his being brought to the Mount Moriah, bound, and laid on the wood, in order to be sacrificed, pointed out the death of Christ, so his being brought alive on the third day from the mount was a figure of Christ's resurrection.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. By the testimony of many eye-witnesses, who saw Christ after he had risen from the dead. How uncontrollably evident was Christ's resurrection from the dead, when so many eyes saw him at so many different times.

ALBERT BARNES:

6. "Above five hundred brethren at once." More than five hundred Christians or followers of Jesus at one time. This was probably in Galilee, where the Lord Jesus had spent the greater part of his public ministry and where he had made most disciples. The place, however, is not designated, and, of course, cannot be known. It is remarkable that this fact is omitted by all the evangelists; but why they should have omitted so remarkable a proof of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus is unknown. There is a slight circumstance hinted at in Matt. 28:10, which may throw some light on this passage. After his resurrection, Jesus said to the women who were at the sepulchre, "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." And in verse 16 it is said, "The eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them." Jesus had spent most of his public ministry in Galilee. He had made most of his disciples there. It was proper, therefore, that those disciples, who would, of course, hear of his death, should have some public confirmation of the fact that he had risen. It is very probable, also, that the eleven who went down into Galilee after he rose would apprize the brethren there of what had been said to them, that Jesus would meet them on a certain mountain; and it is morally certain that they who had followed him in so great numbers in Galilee would be drawn together by the report that the Lord Jesus who had been put to death was about to be seen there again alive.
—Popular Commentary

Even Paul himself was last of all favoured with the sight of him. The Lord Jesus appeared to him by the way to Damascus, Acts ix. 17. He was highly favoured of God, but he always endeavoured to keep up a mean opinion of himself. So he does here, by observing, (1) That he was one born out of due time (v. 8). He was not matured for the apostolic function, as the others were, who had personal converse with our Lord. He was out of time for it.

(2) By owning himself inferior to the other apostles. The least and not worthy to be called an apostle, because he had been a persecutor of the church of God, v. 9. A humble spirit, in the midst of high attainments, is a great ornament to any man. What kept Paul low was the remembrance of his former wickedness, his raging zeal against Christ and his members. How easily God can bring a good out of the greatest evil! When sinners are by divine grace turned into saints, he makes the remembrance of their former sins very serviceable, to make them humble, and diligent, and faithful. (3) By ascribing all that was valuable in him to divine grace. We are nothing but what God makes us. Though he was conscious of his own zeal, and service, he thought himself so much more the debtor to divine grace. Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. The more he laboured, and the more good he did, the more humble he was and the more disposed to own the favour of God towards him. The apostle tells them (v. 11) that he not only preached the same gospel himself at all times, and in all places, but that all the apostles preached the same. All agreed in this that Jesus Christ, and him crucified and slain, and then rising from the dead, was the very sum and substance of Christianity. By this faith they live. In this faith they die.

If Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? (v. 12). The apostle produces an incontestable fact, namely, the resurrection of Christ.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

again—His burial is more closely connected with His resurrection than His death. At the moment of His death, the power of His inextinguishable life exerted itself (Matt. 27:52). The grave was to Him not the destined receptacle of corruption, but an apartment fitted for entering into life (Acts 2:26-28) [BENGEL]. rose again—Greek, "hath risen": the state thus begun, and its consequences, still continue. 5. seen of Cephas—Peter (Luke 24:34). the twelve—The round number for "the Eleven" (Luke 24:33, 36). "The Twelve" was their ordinary appellation, even when their number was not full. However, very possibly Matthias was present (Acts 1:22, 23). Some of the oldest MSS. and versions read, "the Eleven": but the best on the whole, "the Twelve." 6. five hundred—This appearance was probably on the mountain (Tabor, according to tradition), in Galilee, when His most solemn and public appearance, according to His special promise, was vouchsafed (Matt. 26:32; 28:7, 10, 16). He "appointed" this place, as one remote from Jerusalem, so that believers might assemble there more freely and securely. ALFORD'S theory of Jerusalem being the scene, is improbable; as such a multitude of believers could not, with any safety, have met in one place in the metropolis, after His crucifixion there. The number of disciples (Acts 1:15) at Jerusalem shortly after, was one hundred and twenty, those in Galilee and elsewhere not being reckoned. Andronicus and Junius were, perhaps, of the number (Rom. 16:7): they are said to be "among the apostles" (who all were witnesses of the resurrection, Acts 1:22). remain unto this present—and, therefore, may be sifted thoroughly to ascertain the trustworthiness of their testimony. fallen asleep—in the sure hope of awaking at the resurrection (Acts 7:60). 7. seen of James—the Less, the brother of our Lord (Gal. 1:19). The Gospel according to the Hebrews, quoted by JEROME (Catalogus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum, p. 170 D.), records that "James swore he would not eat bread from the hour that he drank the cup of the Lord, till he should see Him rising again from the dead." all the apostles—The term here includes many others besides "the Twelve" already enumerated (vs. 5): perhaps the seventy disciples (Luke 10) [CHRYSOSTOM]. 8. one born out of due time—Greek, "the one abortively born": the abortion in the family of the apostles. As a child born before the due time is puny, and though born alive, yet not of the proper size, and scarcely worthy of the name of man, so "I am the least of the apostles," scarcely "meet to be called an apostle"; a supernumerary taken into the college of apostles out of regular course, not led to Christ by long instruction, like a natural birth, but by a sudden power, as those prematurely born [GROTIUS]. Cf. the similar image from childbirth, and by the same spiritual power, the resurrection of Christ (I Pet. 1:3). "Begotten again by the resurrection of Jesus." Jesus' appearance to Paul, on the way to Damascus, is the one here referred to. 9. least—The name, "Paulus," in Latin, means least. I persecuted the church—Though God has forgiven him, Paul can hardly forgive himself at the remembrance of his past sin. 10. by . . . grace . . . and his grace—The repetition implies the prominence which God's grace had in his mind, as the sole cause of his marvellous conversion and subsequent labors. Though "not meet to be called an apostle," grace has given him, in Christ, the meetness needed for the office. Translate as the Greek, "His grace which was (showed) towards me." what I am—occupying the honorable office of an apostle. Contrast with this the self-sufficient prayer of another Pharisee (Luke 18:11). but I laboured—by God's grace (Phil. 2:16). than they all—than any of the apostles (vs. 7). grace of God . . . with me—Cf. "the Lord working with them" (Mark 16:20). The oldest MSS. omit "which was." The "not I, but grace," implies, that though the human will concurred with God when brought by His Spirit into conformity with His will, yet "grace" so preponderated in the work, that his own co-operation is regarded as nothing, and grace as virtually the sole agent. (Cf. ch. 3:9; Matt. 10:20; II Cor. 6:1; Phil. 2:12, 13.) 11. whether it were I or they—(the apostles) who "labored more abundantly" (vs. 10) in preaching, such was the substance of our preaching, viz., the truths stated in vss. 3, 4. 12. if—Seeing that it is an admitted fact that Christ is announced by us eyewitnesses as having risen from the dead, how is it that some of you deny that which is a necessary consequence of Christ's resurrection, viz., the general resurrection? some—Gentile reasoners (Acts 17:32; 26:8) who would not believe it because they did not see "how" it could be (vss. 35, 36). 13. If there be no general resur-

ADAM CLARKE

5. That he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve. This refers to the journey to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 13 and 34, and to what is related Mark xvi. 14. Then of the twelve. Perhaps the term twelve is used here merely to point out the society of the apostles, who, though at this time they were only eleven, were still called the twelve because this was their original number, and a number which was afterward filled up. See John xx. 24.

6. Above five hundred brethren at once. This was probably in Galilee, where our Lord had many disciples. See Matt. xxviii. 16. What a remarkable testimony is this to the truth of our Lord's resurrection! Five hundred persons saw Him at one time, the greater part of whom were alive when the apostle wrote, and he might have been confronted by many if he had dared to assert a falsity.

7. After that, he was seen of James. But where, and on what occasion, we are not told. But one thing is sufficiently evident from what is here said, that this James, of whom the apostle speaks, was still alive; for the apostle's manner of speaking justifies this conclusion.

8. And last of all . . . of me also. It seems that it was essential to the character of a primitive apostle that he had seen and conversed with Christ; and it is evident, from the history of Saul's conversion, Acts ix. 4-7, that Jesus Christ did appear to him; and he pleaded this ever after as a proof of his call to the apostleship. And it does not appear that, after this time, Jesus ever did make any personal discovery of himself to anyone. As of one born out of due time. The apostle considers himself as coming after the time in which Jesus Christ personally conversed with His disciples; and that therefore, to see Him at all, he must see Him in this extraordinary way. The words signify not merely one born out of due time, but one born before his time; and consequently, not bidding fair for vigor, usefulness, or long life. But it is likely that the apostle had a different meaning; and that he refers to the original institution of the twelve apostles, in the rank of whom he never stood, being appointed, not to fill up a place among the twelve, but as an extra and additional apostle.

9. I am the least of the apostles. This was literally true in reference to his being chosen last, and chosen not in the number of the twelve, but as an extra apostle. How much pains do some men take to make the apostle contradict himself, by attempting to show that he was the very greatest of the apostles, though he calls himself the least! Taken as a man and a minister of Christ, he was greater than any of the twelve; taken as an apostle he was less than any of the twelve, because not originally in that body. Am not meet to be called an apostle. None of the twelve had ever persecuted Christ nor withstood His doctrine: Saul of Tarsus had been, before his conversion, a grievous persecutor; and therefore he says, "I am not proper to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God," i.e., of Christ, which none of the apostles ever did.

10. But by the grace of God I am what I am. God, by His mere grace and goodwill, has called me to be an apostle, and has denominated me such. And his grace. Nor have I been unfaithful to the divine call. I used the grace which He gave me; and when my labors, travels, and sufferings are considered, it will be evident that I have labored more abundantly than the whole twelve. This was most literally true. Yet not I, but the grace of God. It was not through my own power or wisdom that I performed these things, but through the divine influence which accompanied me.

11. Whether it were I or they. All the apostles of Christ agree in the same doctrines. We all preach one and the same thing; and, as we preached, so ye believed, having received from us the true apostolical faith, that Jesus died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, and that His resurrection is the pledge and proof of ours.

12. Now if Christ be preached. Seeing it is true that we have thus preached Christ, and you have credited this preaching, how say some among you, who have professed to receive

I. It was foretold in ancient prophecies that he should rise; and it has been proved by multitudes of eye-witnesses that he has risen.

II. This supposition decried, would destroy the principal evidence of Christianity; and so, 1. Make preaching vain. "We apostles should be found false witnesses of God. Would not our labour be wholly in vain? If Christ be not raised, the gospel is a jest; it is chaff and emptiness."

2. It would make the faith of Christians vain because it is through his death and sacrifice for sin alone that forgiveness is to be had. Had he remained under the power of death, how could he have delivered us from its power? And how vain a thing would faith in him be. There had been no justification nor salvation if Christ had not risen.

III. They took death to be the destruction and extinction of the man, and not merely of the bodily life. "Upon supposition there is no resurrection, no after-state and life, then dead Christians are quite lost. How vain a thing were our faith and religion upon this supposition!" And this,

IV. Would infer that Christ's ministers and servants were of all men most miserable, as having hope in him in this life only (v. 19). If there be no resurrection, or state of future recompence, and, if all their hopes in Christ lie within the compass of this life, they are in a much worse condition than the rest of mankind. Better be anything than a Christian upon these terms. They fare much harder than other men in this life, and yet have no further nor better hopes. The Christian is by his religion crucified to this world, and taught to live upon the hope of another.

The apostle establishes the truth of the resurrection of the dead, the dead in Christ.

I. On the resurrection of Christ. He has truly risen himself, as the first-fruits of those who sleep in him. As he has risen, they shall rise. Christ's resurrection is a pledge and earnest of ours. This is the first argument used by the apostle in confirmation of the truth: and it is illustrated by a parallel between the first and second Adam, v. 21. All who die die through the sin of Adam; all who are raised, rise through the merit and power of Christ. But the meaning is not that, as all men died in Adam, so all men, without exception, shall be made alive in Christ.

Christ rose as the first-fruits; therefore those that are Christ's (v. 23) shall rise too. All who thus rise, rise in virtue of Christ's resurrection, and so, as by man came death, by man came deliverance. He states that there will be an order observed in their resurrection. What that precisely will be we are nowhere told. It is only here said that the first-fruits are supposed to rise first, and afterwards all who are Christ's, when he shall come again.

rection, which is the consequent, then there can have been no resurrection of Christ, which is the antecedent. The head and the members of the body stand on the same footing: what does not hold good of them, does not hold good of Him either: His resurrection and theirs are inseparably joined (cf. vss. 20-22; John 14:19). 14. your faith . . . vain—(vs. 11). The Greek for "vain" here is, empty, unreal: in vs. 17, on the other hand, it is, without use, frustrated. The principal argument of the first preachers in support of Christianity was that God had raised Christ from the dead (Acts 1:22; 2:32; 4: 10, 33; 13:37; Rom. 1:4). If this fact were false, the faith built on it must be false too. 15. testified of God—i.e., concerning God. The rendering of others is, "against God" [Vulgate, ESTIUS, GROTIUS]: the Greek preposition with the genitive implies, not direct antagonism (as the accusative would mean), but indirect to the dishonor of God. English Version is probably better. if so be—as they assert. It is not right to tell untrue stories, though they are told and seem for the glory of God (Job 13:7). 16. The repetition implies the unanswerable force of the argument. 17. vain—Ye are, by the very fact (supposing the case to be as the skeptics maintained), frustrated of all which "your faith" appropriates: Ye are still under the everlasting condemnation of your sins (even in the disembodied state which is here referred to), from which Christ's resurrection is our justification (Rom. 4:25): "saved by his life" (Rom. 5:10). 18. fallen asleep in Christ—in communion with Christ as His members. "In Christ's case the term used is death, to assure us of the reality of His suffering; in our case, sleep, to give us consolation: In His case, His resurrection having actually taken place, Paul shrinks not from the term death; in ours, the resurrection being still only a matter of hope, he uses the term falling asleep" [PHOTIUS, Quæstiones Amphilochiæ, 197]. perished—Their souls are lost; they are in misery in the unseen world. 19. If our hopes in Christ were limited to this life only, we should be, of all men, most to be pitied; viz., because, while others live unmolested, we are exposed to every trial and persecution, and, after all, are doomed to bitter disappointment in our most cherished hope; for all our hope of salvation, even of the soul (not merely of the body), hangs on the resurrection of Christ, without which His death would be of no avail to us (Eph. 1:19, 20; I Pet. 1:3). The heathen are "without hope" (Eph. 2:12; I Thess. 4:13). We should be even worse, for we should be also without present enjoyment (ch. 4:9). 20. now—as the case really is. and become—omitted in the oldest MSS. the first fruits—the earnest or pledge, that the whole resurrection harvest will follow, so that our faith is not vain, nor our hope limited to this life. The time of writing this Epistle was probably about the Passover (ch. 5:7); the day after the Passover sabbath was that for offering the first fruits (Lev. 23: 10, 11), and the same was the day of Christ's resurrection: whence appears the appropriateness of the image. 21. by man . . . by man—The first fruits are of the same nature as the rest of the harvest; so Christ, the bringer of life, is of the same nature as the race of men to whom He brings it; just as Adam, the bringer of death, was of the same nature as the men on whom he brought it. 22. in Adam all—in union of nature with Adam, as representative head of mankind in their fall. in Christ . . . all—in union of nature with Christ, the representative head of mankind in their recovery. The life brought in by Christ is co-extensive with the death brought in by Adam. 23. But every man in his own order—rather, "rank": the Greek is not in the abstract, but concrete: image from troops, "each in his own regiment." Though all shall rise again, let not any think all shall be saved; nay, each shall have his proper place, Christ first (Col. 1:18), and after Him the godly who die in Christ (I Thess. 4:16), in a separate band from the ungodly, and then "the end," i.e., the resurrection of the rest of the dead. Christian churches, ministers, and individuals seem about to be judged first "at His coming" (Matt. 25: 1-30); then "all the nations" (Matt. 25:31-46). Christ's own flock shall share His glory "at His coming," which is not to be confounded with "the end," or general judgment (Rev. 20:4-6, 11-15). The latter is not in this chapter specially discussed, but only the first resurrection, viz., that of the saints: not even the judgment of Christian hollow professors (Matt. 25:1-30) at His coming, is handled, but only the glory of them "that are Christ's," who alone in the highest sense "obtain the resurrection from the dead" (Luke 14:14; 20:35, 36; Phil. 3:11, see Note). The second coming of Christ is not a mere point of time, but a period beginning with the this doctrine from us, that there is no resurrection of the dead, though we have shown that His resurrection is the proof and pledge of ours? That there was some false teacher, or teachers, among them, who was endeavoring to incorporate Mosaic rites and ceremonies with the Christian doctrines, and even to blend Sadduceeism with the whole, appears pretty evident. To confute this mongrel Christian and overturn his bad doctrine the apostle writes this chapter.

13. If there be no resurrection of the dead. As Christ was Partaker of the same flesh and blood with us, and He promised to raise mankind from the dead through His resurrection, if the dead rise not, then Christ has had no resurrection. There seem to have been some at Corinth who, though they denied the resurrection of the dead, admitted that Christ had risen again. The apostle's argument goes therefore to state that, if Christ was raised from the dead, mankind may be raised; if mankind cannot be raised from the dead, then the body of Christ was never raised.

14. Then is our preaching vain. Our whole doctrine is useless and false.

15. False witnesses. As having testified the fact of Christ's resurrection, as a matter which ourselves had witnessed, when we knew that we bore testimony to a falsehood. But could 500 persons agree in this imposition? And if they did, is it possible that someone would not discover the cheat, when he could have no interest in keeping the secret, and might greatly promote his secular interest by making the discovery? Such a case never occurred, and never can occur. The testimony, therefore, concerning the resurrection of Christ is incontrovertibly true.

17. Ye are yet in your sins. If Christ has not risen from the dead, there is a presumption that He has been put to death justly; and if so, consequently He has made no atonement; and ye are yet in your sins—under the power, guilt, and condemnation of them.

18. They also which are fallen asleep. All those who, by either martyrdom or natural death, have departed in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, are perished; their hope was without foundation, and their faith had not reason and truth for its object.

19. If in this life only we have hope. It would be better to translate and point this verse as follows: "And if in this life we have hoped in Christ only, we are more to be pitied than all men." If in this life we have no other hope and confidence but in Christ (and if He be still dead, and not yet risen), we are more to be pitied than any other men; we are sadly deceived.

20. But now is Christ risen. On the contrary, Christ is raised from the dead, and is become the firstfruits of them that slept. His resurrection has been demonstrated, and our resurrection necessarily follows; as sure as the firstfruits are the proof that there is a harvest, so surely the resurrection of Christ is a proof of ours.

21. For since by man came death. Mortality came by Adam, immortality by Christ; so sure as all have been subjected to natural death by Adam, so sure shall all be raised again by Christ Jesus.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He argues from the continuance of the mediatorial kingdom till all Christ's enemies are destroyed, the last of which is death, v. 24–26.

1. This argument implies: (1) That our Saviour rose from the dead to have all power put into his hands. (2) That this mediatorial kingdom is to have an end, v. 24. (3) That it is not to have an end till all opposing power be put down, v. 24, 25. (4) That, among other enemies, death must be destroyed (v. 26). Therefore the saints must rise, else death and the grave would have power over them. When saints shall live again, and die no more, then, and not till then, will death be abolished.

2. Our Saviour, as man and mediator between God and man, has a delegated royalty. As man, all his authority must be delegated. As Mediator, a middle person between God and man, partaking of both natures, he was to reconcile both parties, God and man. Upon his ascension, he was made head over all things to the church, had power given him to govern and protect it against all its enemies, and in the end destroy them and complete the salvation of all that believe in him. This delegated royalty must at length be delivered up to the Father, from whom it was received (v. 24); for it is a power received for particular ends (v. 25, 26). The Redeemer must reign till his enemies be destroyed, and, when this end is attained, then will he deliver up the power. The Redeemer shall certainly reign till the last enemy of his people be destroyed, till death itself be abolished. He shall have all power in heaven and earth till then. What support should this be to his saints in every hour of distress and temptation!

When this is done, and all things are put under his feet, v. 28, then the man Christ Jesus shall appear upon giving it up to be a subject of the Father. And it will appear to the divine glory, that God may be all in all, that the accomplishment of our salvation may appear altogether divine. Though the human nature must be employed in the work of our redemption, yet God was all in all in it.

III. He argues for the resurrection, from the case of those who were baptized for the dead (v. 29).

resurrection of the just at His appearing, and ending with the general judgment. The ground of the universal resurrection is the union of all mankind in nature with Christ, their representative Head, who has done away with death, by His own death in their stead: the ground of the resurrection of believers is not merely this, but their personal union with Him as their "Life" (Col. 3:4), effected causatively by the Holy Spirit, and instrumentally by faith as the subjective, and by ordinances as the objective means. 24. Then—after that: next in the succession of "orders" or "ranks." the end—the general resurrection, and final judgment and consummation (Matt. 25:46). delivered up . . . kingdom to . . . Father—(Cf. John 13:3). Seeming at variance with Daniel 7:14, "His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away." Really, His giving up of the mediatorial kingdom to the Father, when the end for which the mediatorial economy was established has been accomplished, is altogether in harmony with its continuing everlastingly. The change which shall then take place, shall be in the manner of administration, not in the kingdom itself; God shall then come into direct connection with the earth, instead of mediatorially, when Christ shall have fully and finally removed everything that severs asunder the holy God and a sinful earth (Col. 1:20). The glory of God is the final end of Christ's mediatorial office (Phil. 2:10, 11). His co-equality with the Father is independent of the latter, and prior to it, and shall, therefore, continue when its function shall have ceased. His manhood, too, shall everlastingly continue, though, as now, subordinate to the Father. The throne of the Lamb (but no longer mediatorial) as well as of God, shall be in the heavenly city (Rev. 22:3; cf. 3: 21). The unity of the Godhead, and the unity of the Church, shall be simultaneously manifested at Christ's second coming. Cf. Zephaniah 3:9; Zechariah 14:9; John 17:21-24. The oldest MSS. for "shall have delivered up," read, "delivereth up," which suits the sense better. It is "when He shall have put down all rule," that "He delivereth up the kingdom to the Father." shall have put down all rule—the effect produced during the millenary reign of Himself and His saints (Ps. 110:1; 8:6; 2:6-9), to which passages Paul refers, resting his argument on the two words, "all" and "until," of the Psalmist: a proof of verbal inspiration of Scripture (cf. Rev. 2: 26, 27). Meanwhile, He "rules in the midst of His enemies" (Ps. 110:2). He is styled "the King" when He takes His great power (Matt. 25:34; Rev. 11:15, 17). The Greek for "put down" is, "done away with," or "brought to naught." "All" must be subject to Him, whether openly opposed powers, as Satan and his angels, or kings and angelic principalities (Eph. 1:21). 25. must—because Scripture foretells it. till—There will be no further need of His mediatorial kingdom, its object having been realized. enemies under his feet—(Luke 19:27; Eph. 1:22). 26. shall be—Greek, "is done away with" (Rev. 20:14; cf. 1:18). It is to believers especially this applies (vss. 55-57); even in the case of unbelievers, death is done away with by the general resurrection. Satan brought in sin, and sin brought in death! So they shall be destroyed (rendered utterly powerless) in the same order (vs. 56; Heb. 2: 14; Rev. 19:20; 20:10, 14). 27. all things—including death (cf. Eph. 1:22; Phil. 3:21; Heb. 2:8; I Pet. 3:22). It is said, "hath put," for what God has said is the same as if it were already done, so sure is it. Paul here quotes the 8th Psalm in proof of his previous declaration, "For (it is written), 'He hath put all things under His feet.'" under his feet—as His footstool (Ps. 110:1). In perfect and lasting subjection. when he—viz., God, who by His Spirit inspired the Psalmist. 28. Son . . . himself . . . subject—not as the creatures are, but as a Son voluntarily subordinate to, though co-equal with, the Father. In the mediatorial kingdom, the Son had been, in a manner, distinct from the Father. Now, His kingdom shall merge in the Father's, with whom He is one; not that there is thus any derogation from His honor; for the Father Himself wills "that all should honor the Son, as they honor the Father" (John 5:22, 23; Heb. 1:6). God . . . all in all—as Christ is all in all (Col. 3:11; cf. Zech. 14:9). Then, and not till then, "all things," without the least infringement of the divine prerogative, shall be subject to the Son, and the Son subordinate to the Father, while co-equally sharing His glory. Contrast Psalm 10:4; 14:1. Even the saints do not fully realize God as their "all" (Ps. 73:25) now, through desiring it; then each shall feel, God is all to me. 29. Else—if there be no resurrection. what shall they do?—How wretched is their lot! they . . . which are baptized for the dead—third person; a

ADAM CLARKE

24. When he shall have delivered up the kingdom. The mediatorial Kingdom, which comprehends all the displays of His grace in saving sinners and all His spiritual influence in governing the Church.

All rule and all authority and power. As the apostle is here speaking of the end of the present system of the world, the rule, authority, and power may refer to all earthly governments, emperors, kings, princes, etc.; though angels, principalities, and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and all spiritual wickedness in high places may be also intended. Our Lord Jesus is represented here as administering the concerns of the Kingdom of grace in this lower world during the time that this divine economy lasts; and when the end—the time determined by the wisdom of God—comes, then, as there is no longer any need of this administration, the Kingdom is delivered up unto the Father: an allusion to the case of Roman viceroys or governors of provinces, who, when their administration was ended, delivered up their kingdoms or governments into the hands of the emperor.

25. For he must reign. This is according to the promise, Ps. cx. 1: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Therefore the Kingdom cannot be given up till all rule and government be cast down. So that while the world lasts, Jesus, as the Messiah and Mediator, must reign; and all human beings are properly His subjects, are under His government, and are accountable to Him.

26. The last enemy, Death, shall be destroyed; shall be "counterworked, subverted," and finally "overturned." But death cannot be destroyed by there being simply no further death; death can be destroyed and annihilated only by a general resurrection.

27. For he hath put all things under his feet. The Father hath put all things under the feet of Christ according to the prophecy, Psalms cx. He is excepted. I.e., The Father, who hath put all things under Him, the Son. This observation seems to be introduced by the apostle to show that he does not mean that the divine nature shall be subjected to the human nature. Christ, as Messiah, and Mediator between God and man, must ever be considered inferior to the Father; and His human nature, however dignified in consequence of its union with the divine nature, must ever be inferior to God. The whole of this verse should be read in a parenthesis.

28. The Son also himself be subject. When the administration of the Kingdom of grace is finally closed; when there shall be no longer any state of probation, and consequently no longer need of a distinction between the Kingdom of grace and the Kingdom of glory; then the Son, as being man and Messiah, shall cease to exercise any distinct dominion; and God shall be all in all.

29. Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead? This is certainly the most difficult verse in the New Testament; for, notwith-

MATTHEW HENRY

But what is this baptism for the dead? Some understand the passage of the martyrs: Why do they suffer martyrdom for their religion? This is sometimes called the baptism of blood by the ancients. Some understand it of a custom that was observed among many who professed the Christian name in the first ages, of baptizing some in the name and stead of catechumens dying without baptism. But whether this be the meaning, or whatever else be, doubtless the apostle's argument was good and intelligible to the Corinthians. And his next is as plain to us.

IV. He argues from the absurdity of his own conduct and that of other Christians.

1. It would be a foolish thing for them to run so many hazards (v. 30). Christianity were a foolish profession if it proposed no hopes beyond this life, required men to risk all the blessings and comforts of this life, and to face and endure all the evils of it, without any future prospects.

And must he not fix this character on it if he give up his future hopes, and deny the resurrection of the dead? "I die daily," v. 31. He was in continual danger of death, and carried his life, as we say, in his hand. He had encountered very great difficulties and fierce enemies; he had fought with beasts at Ephesus (v. 32), and was in danger of being pulled to pieces by an enraged multitude (Acts xix. 24, &c.). I take it that this fighting with beasts is a figurative expression, that the beasts intended were men of a fierce and ferine disposition. "Now," says he, "what advantage have I from such contests, if the dead rise not? If I am to perish by death, and expect nothing after it, could anything be more weak?" Was Paul so senseless? Could anything but the sure hopes of a better life after death have extinguished the love of life in him to this degree? "What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" It is very lawful and fit for a Christian to propose advantage to himself by his fidelity to God. Thus did Paul.

2. It would be a much wiser thing to take the comforts of this life (v. 32). Let us even live like beasts, if we must die like them. This would be a wiser course, if there were no resurrection. If there were no hopes after death, would not every wise man prefer an easy comfortable life, and endeavour to enjoy the comforts of life as fast as possible, because the continuance of it is short? Nothing but the hopes of better things hereafter can enable a man to forgo all the comforts and pleasures here.

V. The apostle closes his argument with a caution, exhortation, and reproof. 1. A caution against men of loose lives and principles, v. 33. Possibly, some of those who said that there was no resurrection of the dead were men of loose lives, and had that speech often in their mouths Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. He now warns the Corinthians how dangerous such men's conversation must prove. They would probably be corrupted by them, and fall in with their course of life Those who would keep their innocence must keep good company Error and vice are infectious. 2. Here is an exhortation to break off their sins, and lead a more holy and righteous life (v. 34): "Rouse yourselves, break off your sins. Do not, by sloth and stupidity, be led away into such conversation as will sap your Christian hopes." The disbelief of a future state destroys all virtue and piety. If there will be a resurrection and a future life, we should live and act as those who believe it. 3. Here is a reproof to some at least among them. It is a shame in Christians not to have the knowledge of God. Those who profess this religion reproach class distinct from that in which the apostle places himself, "we" (vs. 30); first person. ALFORD thinks there is an allusion to a practice at Corinth of baptizing a living person in behalf of a friend who died unbaptized; thus Paul, without giving the least sanction to the practice, uses an ad hominem argument from it against its practicers, some of whom, though using it, denied the resurrection: "What account can they give of their practice; why are they at the trouble of it, if the dead rise not?" [So Jesus used an ad hominem argument, Matthew 12:27.] But if so, it is strange there is no direct censure of it. Some Marcionites adopted the practice at a later period, probably from taking this passage, as ALFORD does; but, generally, it was unknown in the Church. BENGEL translates, "over (immediately upon) the dead," i.e., who will be gathered to the dead immediately after baptism. Cf. Job 17:1, "the graves are ready for me." The price they get for their trouble is, that they should be gathered to the dead for ever (vss. 13, 16). Many in the ancient Church put off baptism till near death. This seems the better view; though there may have been some rites of symbolical baptism at Corinth, now unknown, perhaps grounded on Jesus' words (Matt. 20:22, 23), which Paul here alludes to. The best punctuation is, "If the dead rise not at all, why are they then baptized for them" (so the oldest MSS. read the last words, instead of "for the dead")? 30. we—apostles (vs. 9; ch. 4:9). A gradation from those who could only for a little time enjoy this life (i.e., those baptized at the point of death), to us, who could enjoy it longer, if we had not renounced the world for Christ [BENGEL]. 31. by your rejoicing—by the glorying which I have concerning you, as the fruit of my labors in the Lord. Some of the earliest MSS. and fathers read "our," with the same sense. BENGEL understands "your rejoicing," to be the enjoyable state of the Corinthians, as contrasted with his dying daily to give his converts rejoicing or glorying (ch. 4:8; II Cor. 4:12, 15; Eph. 3:13; Phil. 1:26). But the words, "which I have," favor the explanation—'the rejoicing which I have over you.' Many of the oldest MSS. and Vulgate insert "brethren" here. I die daily—This ought to stand first in the sentence, as it is so put prominently forward in the Greek. I am day by day in sight of death, exposed to it, and expecting it (II Cor. 4:11, 12; 1:8, 9; 11:23). 32. Punctuate thus: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me? If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink . . ." [BENGEL]. If "merely as a man" (with the mere human hope of the present life; not with the Christian's hope of the resurrection; answering to "If the dead rise not," the parallel clause in the next sentence), I have fought with men resembling savage beasts. Heraclitus, of Ephesus, had termed his countrymen "wild beasts" 400 years before. So Epimenides called the Cretians (Titus 1:12). Paul was still at Ephesus (ch. 16:8), and there his life was daily in danger (ch. 4:9; cf. II Cor. 1:8). Though the tumult (Acts 19:29, 30) had not yet taken place (for after it he set out immediately for Macedonia), this Epistle was written evidently just before it, when the storm was gathering; "many adversaries" (ch. 16:9) were already menacing him. what advantageth it me?—seeing I have renounced all that, "as a mere man," might compensate me for such sufferings, gain, fame, etc. let us eat . . .—Quoted from LXX, (Isa. 22:13), where the prophet describes the reckless self-indulgence of the despisers of God's call to mourning, Let us enjoy the good things of life now, for it soon will end. Paul imitates the language of such skeptics, to reprove both their theory and practice. "If men but persuade themselves that they shall die like the beasts, they soon will live like beasts too" [SOUTH]. 33. evil communications corrupt good manners—a current saying, forming a verse in Menander, the comic poet, who probably took it from Euripides (SOCRATES, Historia Ecclesiastica, 3. 16). "Evil communications" refer to intercourse with those who deny the resurrection. Their notion seems to have been that the resurrection is merely spiritual, that sin has its seat solely in the body, and will be left behind when the soul leaves it, if, indeed, the soul survive death at all. good—not only good-natured, but pliant. Intimacy with the profligate society around was apt to corrupt the principles of the Corinthians. 34. Awake—lit., "out of the sleep" of carnal intoxication into which ye are thrown by the influence of these skeptics (vs. 32; Joel 1:5). to righteousness—in contrast with "sin" in this verse, and corrupt manners (vs. 33). sin not—Do not give yourselves up to sinful pleasures. The Greek expresses a continued state of abstinence from sin. Thus, Paul implies that standing the greatest and wisest men have labored to explain it, there are to this day nearly as many different interpretations of it as there are interpreters. The sum of the apostle's meaning appears to be this: If there be no resurrection of the dead, those who, in becoming Christians, expose themselves to all manner of privations, crosses, severe sufferings, and a violent death, can have no compensation, nor any motive sufficient to induce them to expose themselves to such miseries. But as they receive baptism as an emblem of "death" in voluntarily going under the water, so they receive it as an emblem of the resurrection unto eternal life in coming up out of the water; thus they are baptized for the dead, in perfect faith of the resurrection. The following three verses seem to confirm this sense.

30. And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? Is there any reason why we should voluntarily submit to so many sufferings, and every hour be in danger of losing our lives, if the dead rise not? On the conviction of the possibility and certainty of the resurrection, we are thus baptized for the dead. We have counted the cost, despise sufferings, and exult at the prospect of death, because we know we shall have a resurrection unto eternal life.

31. I protest by your rejoicing. "By your exultation or boasting." I die daily. A form of speech for "I am continually exposed to death."

32. If after the manner of men. Much learned criticism has been employed on this verse, to ascertain whether it is to be understood literally or metaphorically. Does the apostle mean to say that he had literally fought with wild beasts at Ephesus? or, that he had met with brutish, savage men, from whom he was in danger of his life? That Paul did not fight with wild beasts at Ephesus may be argued: (1) From his own silence on this subject, when enumerating his various sufferings, 2 Cor. xi. 23 ff; (2) From the silence of his historian, Luke, who in the acts of this apostle gives no intimation of this kind; and it certainly was too remarkable a circumstance to be passed over, either by Paul in the catalogue of his own sufferings or by Luke in his history; (3) From similar modes of speech which are employed metaphorically and are so understood; (4) From the improbability that a Roman citizen, as Paul was, should be condemned to such a punishment when in other cases, by pleading his privilege, he was exempted from being scourged; and (5) From the positive testimony of Tertullian and Chrysostom, who deny the literal interpretation. What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? I believe the common method of pointing this verse is erroneous; I propose to read it thus: "If, after the manner of men, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what doth it advantage me? If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die."

What the apostle says here is a regular and legitimate conclusion from the doctrine that there is no resurrection: For if there be no resurrection, then there can be no judgment—no future state of rewards and punishments. Why, therefore, should we bear crosses, and keep ourselves under continual discipline? Let us eat and drink, take all the pleasure we can, for tomorrow we die; and there is an end of us forever. The words, Let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we die, are taken from Isa. xxii. 13, as they stand now in the Septuagint; and are a pretty smooth proverbial saying, which might be paralleled from the writings of several Epicurean heathens.

33. Be not deceived. Do not impose on yourselves, and do not permit others to do it. Evil communications corrupt good manners. There are many sayings like this among the Greek poets; but this of the apostle is generally supposed to have been taken from Menander's lost comedy of Thais: "Bad company good morals doth corrupt."

34. Awake to righteousness. Shake off your slumber; awake fully, thoroughly, "as ye ought to do"; so the word should be rendered, not awake to righteousness. Sin not. For this will lead to the destruction of both body and soul. Life is but a moment; improve it. Heaven has blessings without end.

themselves, by remaining without the knowledge of God; for it must be owing to their own sloth. It must be ignorance of God that leads men into the disbelief of a resurrection and future life. Those who know God know that he is not unfaithful nor unkind, to forget their labour and patience, their faithful services and cheerful sufferings, or let their labour be in vain. Those who own a God and observe how unequal the distributions of the present life are, and how frequently the best men fare worst, can hardly doubt an after state, where everything will be set to rights.

A plausible objection against doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, v. 35. The objection is plainly twofold. How are they raised up? that is, "By what means? What power is equal to this effect?" The other part of the objection is about the quality of their bodies: "With what body will they come?" The former objection is that of those who opposed the doctrine, the latter the enquiry of curious doubters.

I. To the former the apostle replies by telling them this was to be brought about by divine power, that very power which they had all observed to do something very like it, year after year, in the death and revival of the corn, v. 36. It not only sprouts after it is dead, but it must die that it may live. It is a foolish thing to question the divine power to raise the dead, when we see it every day quickening and reviving things that are dead.

II. But he is longer in replying to the second enquiry.

1. There is a change made in the grain that is sown. God gives it such a body as he will. Every seed sown has its proper body. It is certain the grain undergoes a great change, so will the dead, when they rise again.

they who live in sinful pleasures readily persuade themselves of what they wish, viz., that there is to be no resurrection. some—the same as in vs. 12. have not the knowledge of God—and so know not His power in the resurrection (Matt. 22:29). Stronger than "are ignorant of God." An habitual ignorance: wilful, in that they prefer to keep their sins, rather than part with them, in order to know God (cf. John 7:17; I Pet. 2:15). to your shame—that you Corinthian Christians, who boast of your knowledge, should have among you, and maintain intercourse with, those so practically ignorant of God, as to deny the resurrection. 35. How—It is folly to deny a fact of REVELATION, because we do not know the "how." Some measure God's power by their petty intelligence, and won't admit, even on His assurance, anything which they cannot explain. Ezekiel's answer of faith to the question is the truly wise one (Ezek. 37:3). So Jesus argues not on principles of philosophy, but wholly from "the power of God," as declared by the Word of God (Matt. 19:26; Mark 10:27; 12:23; Luke 18:27). come—The dead are said to depart, or to be deceased: those rising again to come. The objector could not understand how the dead are to rise, and with what kind of a body they are to come. Is it to be the same body? If so, how is this, since the resurrection bodies will not eat or drink, or beget children, as the natural bodies do? Besides, the latter have mouldered into dust. How then can they rise again? If it be a different body, how can the personal identity be preserved? Paul answers, In one sense it will be the same body, in another, a distinct body. It will be a body, but a spiritual, not a natural, body. 36. fool—with all thy boasted philosophy (Ps. 14:1). that which thou—"thou," emphatical: appeal to the objector's own experience: "The seed which thou thyself sowest." Paul, in this verse and in vs. 42, answers the question of vs. 35, "How?" and in vss. 37-41 and 43, the question, "With what kind of body?" He converts the very objection (the death of the natural body) into an argument. Death, so far from preventing quickening, is the necessary prelude and prognostication of it, just as the seed "is not quickened" into a new sprout with increased produce, "except it die" (except a dissolution of its previous organization takes place). Christ by His death for us has not given us a reprieve from death as to the life which we have from Adam; nay, He permits the law to take its course on our fleshly nature; but He brings from Himself new spiritual and heavenly life out of death (vs. 37). 37. not that body that shall be—a body beautiful and no longer a "bare grain" [BENGEL]. No longer without stalk or ear, but clothed with blade and ears, and yielding many grains instead of only one [GROTIUS]. There is not an identity of all the particles of the old and the new body. For the perpetual transmutation of matter is inconsistent with this. But there is a hidden germ which constitutes the identity of body amidst all outward changes: the outward accretions fall off in its development, while the germ remains the same. Every such germ ("seed," vs. 38) "shall have its own body," and be instantly recognized, just as each plant now is known from the seed that was sown (see Note, ch. 6:13). So Christ by the same image illustrated the truth that His death was the necessary prelude of His putting on His glorified body, which is the ground of the regeneration of the many who believe (John 12:24). Progress is the law of the spiritual, as of the natural world. Death is the avenue not to mere revivification or reanimation, but to resurrection and regeneration (Matt. 19:28; Phil. 3:21). Cf. "planted," etc., Romans 6:5. 38. as it hath pleased him—at creation, when He gave to each of the (kinds of) seeds (so the Greek is for "to every seed") a body of its own (Gen. 1:11, "after its kind," suited to its species). So God can and will give to the blessed at the resurrection their own appropriate body, such as it pleases Him, and such as is suitable to their glorified state: a body peculiar to the individual, substantially the same as the body sown. 39-41. Illustrations of the suitability of bodies, however various, to their species: the flesh of the several species of animals; bodies celestial and terrestrial; the various kinds of light in the sun, moon, and stars, respectively. flesh—animal organism [DE WETTE]. He implies by the word that our resurrection bodies shall be in some sense really flesh, not mere phantoms of air [ESTIUS]. So some of the oldest creeds expressed it, "I believe in the resurrection of the flesh." Cf. as to Jesus' own resurrection body, Luke 24:39; John 20:27; to which ours shall be made like, and therefore shall be flesh, but not of animal organism (Phil. 3:21) and liable to corrup-

Some have not the knowledge of God. The original is very emphatic: "Some have an ignorance of God"; they do not acknowledge God. To have an ignorance of God—a sort of substantial darkness, that prevents the light of God from penetrating the soul—is a worse state than to be simply in the dark or without the divine knowledge. The apostle probably speaks of those who were once enlightened, once had good morals, but were corrupted by bad company.

35. But some man will say. It is very likely that the apostle by some man means particularly the false apostle or teacher at Corinth who was chief in the opposition to the pure doctrine of the gospel, and to whom, in this covert way, he often refers. The second part of the apostle's discourse begins at this verse. What shall be the nature of the resurrection body? (1) The question is stated, v. 35. (2) It is answered: first, by a similitude, vv. 36-38; secondly, by an application, vv. 39-41; and thirdly, by explication, vv. 42-50.

36. Thou fool. If this be addressed, as it probably is, to the false apostle, there is a peculiar propriety in it, as this man seems to have magnified his own wisdom and set it up against both God and man; and none but a fool could act so. At the same time, it is folly in any to assert the impossibility of a thing because he cannot comprehend it. That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. A grain of wheat is composed of the body and the germ. The latter forms an inconsiderable part of the mass of the grain; the body forms nearly the whole. This body dies—becomes decomposed—and forms a fine earth, from which the germ derives its first nourishment; by the nourishment thus derived the germ is quickened, receives its first vegetable life, and through this means is rendered capable of deriving the rest of its nourishment and support from the grosser earth in which the grain was deposited. Whether the apostle would intimate here that there is a certain germ in the present body which shall become the seed of the resurrection body, this is not the place to inquire.

37. Thou sowest not that body that shall be. This is decomposed and becomes the means of nourishing the whole plant.

38. But God giveth it a body. And is there any other way of accounting for it by the miraculous working of God's power? For out of that one bare grain are produced a system of roots, a tall and vigorous stalk, with all its appendages of leaves, besides the full corn in the ear, the whole making several hundred times the quantum of what was originally deposited. There are no proofs that what some call "nature" can effect this; it will ever be a philosophical as well as a scriptural truth that God giveth it a body as it hath pleased [pleaseth] him; and so doth He manage the whole of the work that every seed shall have its own body: that the wheat germ shall never produce barley; nor the rye, oats.

39. All flesh is not the same flesh. Though the organization of all animals is in its general principles the same, yet there are no two different kinds of animals that have flesh of the same flavor, whether the animal be beast, fowl, or fish. And this is precisely the same with vegetables.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. There is a great deal of variety among other bodies. (1) In bodies of flesh (v. 39). (2) In bodies celestial and terrestrial there is also a difference.

(3) There is a variety of glory among heavenly bodies themselves, v. 41. The bodies of the dead, when they rise, will be so far changed that there will be a variety of glories. It must be as easy to divine power to raise the dead, as out of the same materials to form so many different kinds of flesh and plants, and celestial bodies as well as terrestrial ones. And can he, out of the same materials, form such various beings, and yet not be able to raise the dead?

3. So also, says he, is the resurrection of the dead Burying the dead is like sowing them; it is like committing the seed to the earth, that it may spring out of it again. When we rise, they will be out of the power of the grave, and never more be liable to corruption. Ours is at present a vile body, Phil. iii. 21. But at the resurrection it will be made like the glorious body of our Saviour, and shine out with a splendour resembling his. It is laid in the earth, a poor helpless thing, wholly in the power of death. But when we arise our bodies will have heavenly life and vigour infused into them. When we rise our body will rise spiritual. We shall at the resurrection have bodies made fit to be perpetual associates of spirits made perfect. And why should it not be in the power of God to raise incorruptible spiritual bodies as first to make matter out of nothing, and then produce such variety of beings, both in earth and heaven? To God all things are possible.

4. He illustrates this by a comparison of the first and second Adam. (1) As we have our natural body, from the first Adam, we expect our spiritual body from the second. (2) The first Adam was made a living soul, such a being as ourselves. The second Adam is a quickening Spirit; he is the resurrection tion. But vs. 50 below implies, it is not "flesh and blood" in the animal sense we now understand them; for these "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." not the same—not flesh of the same nature and excellency. As the kinds of flesh, however widely differing from one another, do not cease to be flesh, so the kinds of bodies, however differing from one another, are still bodies. All this is to illustrate the difference of the new celestial body from its terrestrial seed, while retaining a substantial identity. beasts—quadrupeds. another of fishes . . . another of birds—Most of the oldest MSS. read thus, "another FLESH of birds . . . another of fishes": the order of nature. 40. celestial bodies—not the sun, moon, and stars, which are first introduced in vs. 41, but the bodies of angels, as distinguished from the bodies of earthly creatures. the glory of the celestial—(Luke 9:26). glory of . . . terrestrial—(Matt. 6:28, 29; I Pet. 1:24).

41. one glory of . . . sun . . . another . . . of . . . moon—The analogy is not to prove different degrees of glory among the blessed (whether this may be, or not, indirectly hinted at), but this: As the various fountains of light, which is so similar in its aspect and properties, differ (the sun from the moon, and the moon from the stars; and even one star from another star, though all seem so much alike); so there is nothing unreasonable in the doctrine that our present bodies differ from our resurrection bodies, though still continuing bodies. Cf. the same simile, appropriate especially in the clear Eastern skies (Dan. 12:3; Matt. 13:43). Also that of seed in the same parable (Matt. 13:24; Gal. 6:7, 8). 42. sown—Following up the image of seed. A delightful word instead of burial. in corruption—liable to corruption: corruptible: not merely a prey when dead to corruption; as the contrast shows, "raised in incorruption," i.e., not liable to corruption, incorruptible. 43. in dishonour—answering to "our vile body" (Phil. 3:21); lit., "our body of humiliation": liable to various humiliations of disease, injury, and decay at last. in glory—the garment of incorruption (vss. 42, 43) like His glorious body (Phil. 4:21), which we shall put on (vss. 49, 53; II Cor. 5:2-4). in weakness—liable to infirmities (II Cor. 13:4). in power—answering to a "spiritual body" (vs. 44; cf. Luke 1:17, "Spirit and power"). Not liable to the weaknesses of our present frail bodies (Isa. 33:24; Rev. 21:4). 44. a natural body—lit., "an animal body," a body moulded in its organism of "flesh and blood" (vs. 50) to suit the animal soul which predominates in it. The Holy Spirit in the spirit of believers, indeed, is an earnest of a superior state (Rom. 8:11), but meanwhile in the body the animal soul preponderates; hereafter the Spirit shall predominate, and the animal soul be duly subordinate. spiritual body—a body wholly moulded by the Spirit, and its organism not conformed to the lower and animal (Luke 20:35, 36), but to the higher and spiritual, life (cf. ch. 2:14; I Thess. 5:23). There is . . .—The oldest MSS. read, "IF there is a natural (or animal-souled) body, there is also a spiritual body." It is no more wonderful a thing, that there should be a body fitted to the capacities and want of man's highest part, his spirit (which we see to be the case), than that there should be one fitted to the capacities and wants of his subordinate part, the animal soul [ALFORD]. 45. so—in accordance with the distinction just mentioned between the natural or animal-souled body and the spiritual body. it is written—(Gen. 2:7)—"Man became (was made to become) a living soul," i.e., endowed with an animal soul, the living principle of his body. the last Adam—the LAST Head of humanity, who is to be fully manifested in the last day, which is His day (John 6:39). He is so called in Job 19:25; see my Note there (cf. Rom. 5:14). In contrast to "the last," Paul calls "man" (Gen. 2:7) "the FIRST Adam." quickening—not only living, but making alive (John 5:21; 6:33, 39, 40, 54, 57, 62, 63; Rom. 8:11). As the natural or animal-souled body (vs. 44) is the fruit of our union with the first Adam, an animal-

40. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial. The apostle certainly does not speak of celestial and terrestrial bodies in the sense in which we use those terms. We invariably mean by the former the sun, moon, planets, and stars; by the latter, masses of inanimate matter. But the apostle speaks of human beings, some of which were clothed with celestial, others with terrestrial, bodies. It is very likely, therefore, that he means by the celestial bodies such as those refined human bodies with which Enoch, Elijah, and Christ himself appear to the realms of glory; to which we may add the bodies of those saints which arose after our Lord's resurrection and, after having appeared to many, doubtless were taken up to paradise. By terrestrial bodies we may understand those in which the saints now live. But the glory of the celestial is one. The glory—the excellence, beauty, and perfection. Even the present frail human body possesses an indescribable degree of contrivance, art, economy, order, beauty, and excellence; but the celestial body, that in which Christ now appears, and according to which ours shall be raised (Phil. iii. 21), will exceed the excellence of this beyond all comparison. A glory or "splendor" will belong to that which does not belong to this. Here there is a glory of excellence, for the bodies of the saints shall shine like "the sun in the kingdom of their Father." See Matt. xiii. 43.

41. There is one glory of the sun. As if he had said: This may be illustrated by the present appearance of the celestial bodies which belong to our system. The sun has a greater degree of splendor than the moon; the moon, than the planets; and the planets, than the stars.

42. So also is the resurrection of the dead. That is, the bodies of the dead, though all immortal, shall possess different degrees of splendor and glory, according to the state of holiness in which their respective souls were found. It is sown in corruption. The body is buried in a state of degradation, decay, and corruption. The apostle uses the word sown to intimate that the body shall rise again, as a seed springs up that has been sown in the earth. It is raised in incorruption. Being no more subject to corruption, dissolution, and death.

43. It is sown in dishonour. Being now stripped of all the glory it had as a machine, fearfully and wonderfully made by the hands of God, and also consigned to death and destruction because of sin. This is the most dishonorable circumstance. It is raised in glory. It is raised a glorious body, because immortal, and forever redeemed from the empire of death. It is sown in weakness. The principles of dissolution, corruption, and decay have prevailed over it; disease undermined it; and death made it his prey. It is raised in power. To be no more liable to weakness through labor, decay by age, wasting by disease, and dissolution by death.

44. It is sown a natural body. An "animal body." It is raised a spiritual body. One perfect in all its parts, no longer dependent on natural productions for its support, being built up on indestructible principles, and existing in a region where there shall be no more death. The body is spiritual and has a spiritual existence and spiritual support. As the seed which is sown in the earth rots, and out of the germ contained in it God in His providence produces a root, stalk, leaves, ear, and a great numerical increase of grains, is it not likely that God, out of some essential parts of the body that now is, will produce the resurrection body; and will then give the soul a body as it pleaseth Him; and so completely preserve the individuality of every human being, as He does of every grain, giving to each its own body (v. 38)? So that as surely as the grain of wheat shall produce wheat after it is cast in the earth, corrupts, and dies, so surely shall our bodies produce the same bodies as to their essential individuality.

45. The first man Adam was made a living soul. These forms of expression are common among the Jews; hence we find "Adam the first" and "Adam the last." The apostle says this is written: The first man Adam was made a living soul. This is found in Gen. ii. 7, in the words "the breath of life," which the apostle translates a living soul. The last Adam was and the life. If the first Adam could communicate to us natural and animal bodies, cannot the second Adam make our bodies spiritual ones?

ALBERT BARNES:

47. "The first man." Adam. "Is of the earth." Was made of the dust (see Gen. 2:7). "Earthy." Partaking of the earth; he was a mass of animated clay, and could be appropriately called "dust" (Gen. 3:19). Of course, he must partake of a nature that was low, mean, mortal, and corruptible.

"The second man." Christ. He is called the second man, as being the second who sustained a relation to men that was materially to affect their conduct and destiny; the second and the last (v. 45), who should sustain a peculiar headship to the race.

"The Lord from heaven." Called in chapter 2:8 the "Lord of glory." This expression refers to the fact that the Lord Jesus had a heavenly origin, in contradistinction from Adam, who was formed from the earth. The Latin Vulgate renders this, "The second man from heaven is heavenly"; and this idea seems to accord with the meaning in the former member of the verse. The sense is, evidently, that as the first man had an earthly origin, and was, therefore, earthy, so the second man being from heaven, as his proper home, would have a body adapted to that abode; unlike that which was earthy, and which would be fitted to his exalted nature, and to the world where he would dwell. And while, therefore, the phrase "from heaven" refers to his heavenly origin, the essential idea is that he would have a body that was adapted to such an origin and such a world—a body unlike that which was earthy. That is, Christ had a glorified body to which the bodies of the saints must yet be made like.—Popular Commentary

(3) We must first have natural bodies from the first Adam before we can have spiritual bodies from the second (v. 49). It is as certain that we shall have spiritual bodies as it is now that we have natural or animal ones. We are as certainly intended to bear the one as we have borne the other.

5. The reason of this change (v. 50). Corruption cannot inherit incorruption. The bodies of the saints, when they shall rise again, will be greatly changed from what they are now, and much for the better. They are now corruptible; they will be then incorruptible, glorious, and spiritual bodies, fitted to the celestial world, where they are ever afterwards to have their eternal inheritance.

I. He here tells them that all the saints would not die, but all would be changed.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

souled man, so the spiritual body is the fruit of our union with the second Adam, who is the quickening Spirit (II Cor. 3:17). As He became representative of the whole of humanity in His union of the two natures, He exhausted in His own person the sentence of death passed on all men, and giveth spiritual and everlasting life to whom He will. 46. afterward—Adam had a soul not necessarily mortal, as it afterwards became by sin, but "a living soul," and destined to live for ever, if he had eaten of the tree of life (Gen. 3:22); still his body was but an animal-souled body, not a spiritual body, such as believers shall have; much less was he a "life-giving spirit," as Christ. His soul had the germ of the Spirit, rather than the fulness of it, such as man shall have when restored "body, soul, and spirit," by the second Adam (I Thess. 5:23). As the first and lower Adam came before the second and heavenly Adam, so the animal-souled body comes first, and must die before it be changed into the spiritual body (i.e., that in which the Spirit predominates over the animal soul). 47. of the earth—inasmuch as being sprung from the earth, he is "earthy" (Gen. 2:7; 3. 19, "dust thou art"); i.e., not merely earthly or born upon the earth, but terrene, or of earth; lit., "of heaped earth" or clay. Adam means red earth. the Lord—omitted in the oldest MSS. and versions. from heaven—(John 3:13, 31). Humanity in Christ is generic. In Him man is impersonated in his true ideal as God originally designed him. Christ is the representative man, the federal head of redeemed man. 48. As is the earthy—viz., Adam. they . . . that are earthy—All Adam's posterity in their natural state (John 3:6, 7). the heavenly—Christ. they . . . that are heavenly—His people in their regenerate state (Phil. 3:20, 21). As the former precedes the latter state, so the natural bodies precede the spiritual bodies. 49. as—Greek, "even as" (see Gen. 5:3). we shall also bear—or wear as a garment [BENGEL]. The oldest MSS. and versions read, "We must also bear," or "let us also bear." It implies the divine appointment (cf. "must," vs. 53) and faith assenting to it. An exhortation, and yet implying a promise (so Rom. 8:29). The conformity to the image of the heavenly Representative man is to be begun here in our souls, in part, and shall be perfected at the resurrection in both bodies and souls. 50. (See Notes, vss. 37, 39.) "Flesh and blood" of the same animal and corruptible nature as our present (vs. 44) animal-souled bodies, cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Therefore the believer acquiesces gladly in the unrepealed sentence of the holy law, which appoints the death of the present body as the necessary preliminary to the resurrection body of glory. Hence he "dies daily" to the flesh and to the world, as the necessary condition to his regeneration here and hereafter (John 3:6; Gal. 2:20). As the being born of the flesh constitutes a child of Adam, so the being born of the Spirit constitutes a child of God. cannot—Not merely is the change of body possible, but it is necessary. The spirit extracted from the dregs of wine does not so much differ from them, as the glorified man does from the mortal man [BENGEL] of mere animal flesh and blood (Gal. 1:16). The resurrection body will be still a body though spiritual, and substantially retaining the personal identity; as is proved by Luke 24:39; John 20:27, compared with Philippians 3:21. the kingdom of God—which is not at all merely animal, but altogether spiritual. Corruption doth not inherit, though it is the way to, incorruption (vss. 36, 52, 53). 51. Behold—Calling attention to the "mystery" heretofore hidden in God's purposes, but now revealed. you—emphatical in the Greek; I show (Greek, "tell," viz., by the word of the Lord, I Thess. 4:15) YOU, who think you have so much knowledge, "a mystery" (cf. Rom. 11:25) which your reason could never have discovered. Many of the old MSS. and Fathers read, "We shall all sleep, but we shall not all be changed"; but this is plainly a corrupt reading, inconsistent with I Thessalonians 4:15, 17, and with the apostle's argument here, which is that a change is necessary (vs. 53). English Version is supported by some of the oldest MSS. and Fathers. The Greek is literally "We all shall not sleep, but . . . ." The putting off of the corruptible body for an incorruptible by an instantaneous change will, in the case of "the quick," stand as equivalent to death, appointed to all men (Heb. 9:27); of this Enoch and Elijah are types and forerunners. The "we" implies that Christians in that age and every successive age since and hereafter were designed to stand waiting, as if Christ might come again in their time, and as if they might be found among "the quick." 52. the last trump—at the sounding of the trumpet on the last day made a quickening spirit. This is also said to be written; but where? In the very same verse, and in these words: "And man [Adam] became a living soul," which the apostle translates a "quickening or life-giving spirit."

46. That was not first which is spiritual. The natural or "animal" body, described in v. 44, was the first; it was the body with which Adam was created. The spiritual body is the last, and is that with which the soul is to be clothed in the resurrection.

47. The first man is of the earth. That is, Adam's body was made out of the dust of the earth, and hence the apostle says he was "of the dust." The second man is . . . from heaven. The resurrection body shall be of a heavenly nature, and not subject to decay or death. What is formed of earth must live after an earthly manner, must be nourished and supported by the earth. What is from heaven is of a spiritual nature, and shall have no further connection with, nor dependence upon, earth. I conceive both these clauses to relate to man, and to point out the difference between the animal body and the spiritual body, or between the bodies which we now have and the bodies which we shall have in the resurrection. But can this be the meaning of the clause, the second man is the Lord from heaven? In the quotation I have omitted "the Lord," on the basis of many authorities. Some of the most eminent of modern critics leave out the word, and Tertullian says that it was put in by the heretic Marcion. I do think that the word is not legitimate in this place. The verse is read by the MSS., versions, and fathers referred to, thus: "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is of heaven, heavenly." The first man and the second man of this verse are the same as the "first Adam" and the "second Adam" of v. 45, and it is not clear that Christ is meant in either place.

48. As is the earthy. As Adam was, who was formed from the earth, so are all his descendants: frail, decaying, and subject to death. As is the heavenly. As is the heavenly state of Adam and all glorified beings, so shall be the state of all those who at the resurrection are found fit for glory.

49. And as we have borne the image of the earthy. As being descendants from Adam we have all been born in his likeness and subject to the same kind of corruption, disgrace, and death, we shall also be raised to a life immortal such as he now enjoys in the kingdom of God. This interpretation proceeds on the ground that what is here spoken belongs to Adam in his twofold state, viz., of mortality and immortality, of disgrace and honour, of earth and heaven.

50. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom. This is a Hebrew periphrasis for "man," and man in his present state of infirmity and decay. Man in his present state cannot inherit the kingdom of God; his nature is not suited to that place; he could not, in his present weak state, endure an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory. Therefore it is necessary that he should die, or be changed, that he should have a celestial body suited to the celestial state.

51. I shew you a mystery. That is, a thing which you have never known before. But what is this mystery? Why, that we shall not all sleep—we shall not all die; but we shall all be changed. Of this the Jews had not distinct notions. For as flesh and blood cannot inherit glory, and all shall not be found dead at the day of judgment, then all must be changed—undergo such a change that their bodies may become spiritual, like the bodies of those who shall be raised from the dead.

52. In a moment. "In an atom"; that is, an indivisible point of time. In the twinkling of an eye, as soon as a man can wink, which expressions show that this mighty work is to be done by the almighty power of God, as He does all His works. The resurrection of all the dead from the foundation of the world to that time and the change of all the living then upon earth shall be the work of a single moment. At the last trump. This, as well as all the rest of the

It will not be without changing from corruption to incorruption, v. 52. Changed they must be as well as the dead, because flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The apostle here makes known a truth unknown before, which is that the saints living at our Lord's second coming will not die, but be changed, that this change will be made in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and at the sound of the last trump. At this summons the graves shall open, the dead saints shall rise incorruptible, and the living saints be changed to the same incorruptible state, v. 52.

II. The reason of this change (v. 53). This corruptible body must be made incorruptible, this mortal body must be changed into immortal. What is sown must be quickened.

III. What will follow upon this change of the living and dead in Christ: Then shall be brought to pass that saying, Death is swallowed up in victory. Christ hinders it from swallowing his saints when they die; but, when they rise again, death shall be swallowed for ever.

1. They will glory over death as a vanquished enemy: "O death! where is thy sting? We fear no further mischiefs from thee, but defy thy power. O grave! where is thy victory? Once we were thy prisoners, but the prison-doors are burst open, and we are for ever released. Captivity is taken captive. Thy triumphs, grave, are at an end."

2. The foundation for this triumph, (1) Whence death had its power to hurt: The sting of death is sin. This gives venom to his dart. Sin is the parent of death, and gives it all its hurtful power. It is its cursed progeny and offspring. (2) The victory saints obtain over it through Jesus Christ, v. 56. The sting of death is sin; but Christ, by dying, has taken out this sting. It may hiss therefore, but it cannot hurt. The strength of sin is the law; but the curse of the law is removed by our Redeemer's becoming a curse for us, so that sin is deprived of its strength and sting, through Christ. There is a day coming when the grave shall open, the dead saints revive, and become immortal, and put out of the reach of death for ever. They often rejoice beforehand, in the hope of this victory; and, when they arise glorious from the grave, they will boldly triumph over death. It is altogether owing to the grace of God in Christ that sin is pardoned and death disarmed. This triumph of the saints over death should issue in thanksgiving to God: Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through Christ Jesus, our Lord (v. 57). Then only do we enjoy our blessings and honours when God has his revenue of glory out of it. And this really improves and exalts our satisfaction. We are conscious at once of having done our duty and enjoyed our pleasure. Those who remain under the power of death can have no heart to praise; but such conquests and triumphs will certainly tune the tongues of the saints to thankfulness and praise. With what acclamations will saints rising from the dead applaud him! Thanks be to God will be the burden of their song; and angels will join the chorus, and declare their consent with a loud Amen, Hallelujah.

I. An exhortation, and this threefold: 1. That they should be steadfast, fixed in the faith of the gospel. "Do not let your belief of these truths be shaken. They are most certain, and of the last importance." Christians should be steadfast believers of this great article of the resurrection of the dead. A disbelief of a future life will open a way to all manner of licentiousness. It will be easy and natural to infer hence that we may live like beasts, and eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. 2. He exhorts them to be immovable in their expectation of being raised incorruptible and immortal. Christians should not be moved away from this hope of the gospel (Col. i. 23). This hope should be an anchor to their souls, firm and sure, Heb. vi. 19, 3. He exhorts them to abound in the work of the Lord, and that always. What vigour and resolution, what constancy and patience, should those hopes inspire!

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

[VATABLUS] (Matt. 24:31; I Thess. 4:16). Or the Spirit by Paul hints that the other trumpets mentioned subsequently in the Apocalypse shall precede, and that this shall be the last of all (cf. Isa. 27:13; Zech. 9:14). As the law was given with the sound of a trumpet, so the final judgment according to it (Heb. 12:19; cf. Exod. 19:16). As the Lord ascended "with the sound of a trumpet" (Ps. 47:5), so He shall descend (Rev. 11:15). The trumpet was sounded to convoke the people on solemn feasts, especially on the first day of the seventh month (the type of the completion of time; seven being the number for perfection; on the tenth of the same month was the atonement, and on the fifteenth the feast of tabernacles, commemorative of completed salvation out of the spiritual Egypt, cf. Zech. 14:18, 19); cf. Ps. 50:1-7. Cf. His calling forth of Lazarus from the grave "with a loud voice," John 11:43, with 5:25, 28. and—immediately, in consequence. 53. this—pointing to his own body and that of those whom he addresses. put on—as a garment (II Cor. 5:2, 3). immortality—Here only, besides I Timothy 6:16, the word "immortality" is found. Nowhere is the immortality of the soul, distinct from the body, taught; a notion which many erroneously have derived from heathen philosophers. Scripture does not contemplate the anomalous state brought about by death, as the consummation to be earnestly looked for (II Cor. 5:4), but the resurrection. 54. then—not before. Death has as yet a sting even to the believer, in that his body is to be under its power till the resurrection. But then the sting and power of death shall cease for ever. Death is swallowed up in victory—In Hebrew of Isaiah 25:8, from which it is quoted, "He (Jehovah) will swallow up death in victory"; i.e., for ever: as "in victory" often means in Hebrew idiom (Jer. 3:5; Lam. 5:20). Christ will swallow it up so altogether victoriously that it shall never more regain its power (cf. Hos. 6:2; 13:14; II Cor. 5:4; Heb. 2:14, 15; Rev. 20:14; 21:4). 55. Quoted from Hos. 13:14, substantially; but freely used by the warrant of the Spirit by which Paul wrote. The Hebrew may be translated, "O death, where are thy plagues? Where, O Hades, is thy destruction?" The LXX, "Where is thy victory (lit., in a lawsuit), O death? Where is thy sting, O Hades?" "Sting" answers to the Hebrew "plagues," viz., a poisoned sting causing plagues. Appropriate, as to the old serpent (Gen. 3; Num. 21:6). "Victory" answers to the Hebrew "destruction." Cf. Isaiah 25:7, "destroy . . . veil . . . over all nations," viz., victoriously destroy it; and to "in victory" (vs. 54), which he triumphantly repeats. The "where" implies their past victorious destroying power and sting, now gone for ever; obtained through Satan's triumph over man in Eden, which enlisted God's law on the side of Satan and death against man (Rom. 5:12, 17:21). The souls in Hades being freed by the resurrection, death's sting and victory are gone. For "O grave," the oldest MSS .and versions read, "O death," the second time. 56. If there were no sin, there would be no death. Man's transgression of the law gives death its lawful power. strength of sin is the law—Without the law sin is not perceived or imputed (Rom. 3:20; 4:15; 5:13). The law makes sin the more grievous by making God's will the clearer (Rom. 7:8-10). Christ's people are no longer "under the law" (Rom. 6:14).

57. to God—The victory was in no way due to ourselves (Ps. 98:1). giveth—a present certainty. the victory—which death and Hades ("the grave") had aimed at, but which, notwithstanding the opposition of them, as well as of the law and sin, we have gained. The repetition of the word (vss. 54, 55) is appropriate to the triumph gained.

58. beloved—Sound doctrine kindles Christian love. steadfast—not turning aside from the faith of the resurrection of yourselves. unmovable—not turned aside by others (vs. 12; Col. 1:23). the work of the Lord—the promotion of Christ's kingdom (Phil. 2:30).

peculiar phraseology of this chapter, is merely Jewish. For the trumpet shall sound. By this the apostle confirms the substance of the tradition that there shall be the sound of a trumpet on this great day; and this other scriptures teach. See Zech. ix. 14; Matt. xxiv. 31; John v. 25; 1 Thess. iv. 16, in which latter place the apostle treats this subject among the Thessalonians as he does here among the Corinthians. Shall be raised incorruptible. Fully clothed with a new body, to die no more. We shall be changed. That is, those who shall then be found alive.

53. For this corruptible. Because flesh and blood cannot inherit glory, therefore there must be a refinement by death, or a change without it.

54. Death is swallowed up in victory. These words are a quotation from Isa. xxv. 8, where the Hebrew is: "He [God] hath swallowed up death in victory"; or "forever." These words in the Septuagint are thus translated: "Death having prevailed, or conquered, hath swallowed up." But in the version of Theodotion, the words are the same with those of the apostle. The Hebrew lanetsach the Septuagint sometimes translate "in victory," but most commonly "forever." Death is here personified and represented as a devouring being, swallowing up all the generations of men; and by the resurrection of the body and the destruction of the empire of death, God is represented as swallowing him up; or that eternity gulps him down, so that he is endlessly lost and absorbed in its illimitable waste.

55. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? These words are generally supposed to be taken from Hos. xiii. 14, where the Hebrew stands thus: "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction"; and which the Septuagint translate very nearly as the apostle, "O death, where is thy revenge, or judicial process? O grave, where is thy sting?" Both Death and Hades are here personified. Death is represented as having a sting, "dagger, or goad," by which, like the driver of oxen, he is continually irritating and urging on (these irritations are the diseases by which men are urged on till they fall into Hades, the empire of Death;); to Hades, victory is attributed, having overcome and conquered all human life, and subdued all to its own empire. Hades, which we here translate grave, is generally understood to be the place of separate spirits.

56. The sting of death is sin. The apostle explains himself particularly here. Death could not have entered into the world if sin had not entered first; it was sin that not only introduced death, but has armed him with all his destroying force. The goad or dagger of death is sin; by this both body and soul are slain. The strength of sin is the law. The law of God forbids all transgression, and sentences those who commit it to temporal and eternal death. Sin has its controlling and binding power from the law. The law curses the transgressor and provides no help for him; and if nothing else intervene, he must, through it, continue ever under the empire of death.

57. But thanks be to God. What the law could not do, because it is law (and law cannot provide pardon), is done by the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. He has died to slay Death; He has risen again to bring mankind from under the empire of Hades. All this He has done through His mere unmerited mercy; and eternal thanks are due to God for this unspeakable gift. He has given us the victory over sin, Satan, death, the grave, and hell.

58. Be ye stedfast. "Be settled"; confide in the truth of this doctrine of the resurrection, and everything that pertains to it, as confidently as a man sits down on a seat which he knows to be solid, firm, and safe, and on which he has often sat. Always abounding in the work of the Lord. The work of the Lord is obedience to His holy Word; every believer in Christ is a workman of God. He that works not to bring glory to God and good to man is not acknowledged as a servant of Christ; and if he be not a servant, he is not a son; and if not a son, then not an heir. And he must not only work, but abound in that work, ever exceeding his former self; and this, not for a time, but always; beginning, continuing, and ending every act of

II. They have the best grounds in the world to build upon. As surely as Christ is risen, they shall rise. The labour of Christians will not be lost labour; they may lose for God, but they will lose nothing by him. He will never be found unjust to forget their labour of love. Nay, he will do exceedingly abundantly above what they can now ask or think. Those who serve God have good wages; they cannot do too much nor suffer too much for so good a Master. If they serve him now, they shall see him hereafter; they shall rise again from the dead, be crowned with glory, honour, and immortality, and inherit eternal life.

CHAPTER 16

In this chapter Paul closes this long epistle. He begins with directing them about a charitable collection on a particular occasion, the distresses and poverty of Christians in Judæa.

I. How he introduces his direction. He had given similar orders to the churches of Galatia, v. 1. He desired them only to conform to the same rules which he had given to other churches on a similar occasion. He also prudently mentions these orders of his to the churches of Galatia, to excite emulation, and stir them up to be liberal. Those who exceeded most churches in spiritual gifts, surely would not suffer themselves to come behind any in their bounty to their afflicted brethren. It is becoming a Christian not to bear to be outdone by a fellow-christian in anything virtuous and praise-worthy, provided this consideration only makes him exert himself, not envy others. The church of Corinth should not be outdone in this service of love by the churches of Galatia.

The time when this is to be done: The first day of the week, the Lord's day. It is a day of holy rest; and the more vacation the mind has from worldly cares and toils the more disposition has it to show mercy: and the other duties of the day should stir us up to the performance of this; works of charity should always accompany works of piety. Works of mercy are the genuine fruits of true love to God, and therefore are a proper service on his own day.

not in vain—as the deniers of the resurrection would make it (vss. 14, 17). in the Lord—applying to the whole sentence and its several clauses: Ye, as being in the Lord by faith, know that your labor in the Lord (i.e., labor according to His will) is not to be without its reward in the Lord (through His merits and according to His gracious appointment).

CHAPTER 16

Vss. 1-24. DIRECTIONS AS TO THE COLLECTION FOR THE JUDEAN CHRISTIANS: PAUL'S FUTURE PLANS: HE COMMENDS TO THEM TIMOTHY, APOLLOS, ETC. SALUTATIONS AND CONCLUSIONS. 1. collection for the saints—at Jerusalem (Rom. 15:26) and in Judea (Acts 11:29, 30; 24:17; cf. II Cor. 8:4; 9:1, 12). He says "saints" rather than "the poor," to remind the Corinthians that in giving, it is to the Lord's people, their own brethren in the faith. Towards the close of the national existence of the Jews, Judea and Jerusalem were harassed with various troubles, which in part affected the Jewish Christians. The community of goods which existed among them for a time gave temporary relief but tended ultimately to impoverish all by paralyzing individual exertion (Acts 2:44), and hence was soon discontinued. A beautiful fruit of grace it was, that he who had by persecutions robbed many of their all (Acts 26:10), should become the foremost in exertions for their relief. as I have given—rather, "gave order," viz., during my journey through Galatia, that mentioned in Acts 18:23. The churches of Galatia and Phrygia were the last which Paul visited before writing this Epistle. He was now at Ephesus, and came thither immediately from visiting them (Acts 18:23; 19:1). That he had not been silent in Galatia on contributions for the poor, appears from the hint let fall in his Epistle to that church (Gal. 2:10): an undesigned coincidence and mark of genuineness [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. He proposes the Galatians as an example to the Corinthians, the Corinthians to the Macedonians, the Corinthians and Macedonians to the Romans (Rom 15:26, 27; II Cor. 9:2). There is great force in example. 2. first day of . . . week—already kept sacred by Christians as the day of the Lord's resurrection, the beginning day both of the physical and of the new spiritual creations: it gradually superseded the Jewish sabbath on the seventh day (Ps. 118:22-24; John 20:19, 26; Acts 20:7; Rev. 1:10). So the beginning of the year was changed from autumn to spring when Israel was brought out of Egypt. Three annual feasts, all typical of Christian truths, were directed to be kept on the first day of the week: the feast of the wave offering of the first sheaf, answering to the Lord's resurrection; Pentecost, or the feast of weeks, typical of the fruits of the resurrection in the Christian Church (Lev. 23: 11, 15, 16, 36); the feast of tabernacles at harvest, typical of the ingathering of the full number of the elect from one end of heaven to the other. Easter was directed to be kept as a holy sabbath (Exod. 12:16). The Christian Sabbath commemorates the respective works of the Three Persons of the Triune God—creation, redemption (the resurrection), and sanctification (on Pentecost the Holy Ghost being poured out). Jesus came to fulfil the Spirit of the Law, not to cancel it, or to lower its standard. The primary object of the sabbath is holiness, not merely rest: "Remember that thou keep holy the sabbath day." Cf. Genesis 2:3, "God blessed and sanctified it, because . . . in it He had rested . . . ." The word "Remember" implies that it was in existence before the giving of the law from Sinai, and refers to its institution in Paradise (cf. Exod. 16:22, 23, 26, 30). "Six days shalt thou labor": the spirit of the command is fulfilled whether the six days' labor be on the last six days or on the first. A perpetual sabbath would doubtless be the highest Christian ideal; but living in a world of business where the Christian ideal is not yet realized, if a law of definite life to God's glory and the good of his fellows. Your labour is not in vain. "Your labor in the Lord is not in vain"; you must not only work, but you must labour—put forth all your strength; and you must work and labor in the Lord—under His direction, and by His influence; for without Him ye can do nothing. And this labor cannot be in vain; you shall have a resurrection unto eternal life—not because you have labored, but because Christ died and gave you grace to be faithful. One remark I cannot help making: The doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect!

CHAPTER 16

1. The collection for the saints. The Christians living at Jerusalem, we may naturally suppose, were greatly straitened, as the enmity of their countrymen to the gospel of Christ led them to treat those who professed it with cruelty and spoil them of their goods (see Heb. x. 34; and Rom. xv. 26); and the apostle hereby teaches that it was the duty of one Christian congregation to help another when in distress.

2. Upon the first day of the week. It appears from the whole that the first day of the week, which is the Christian Sabbath, was the day on which their principal religious meetings were held in Corinth and the churches of Galatia, and consequently in all other places where Christianity had prevailed. This is a strong argument for the keeping of the Christian Sabbath. We may observe that the apostle follows here the rule of the synagogue; it was a regular custom among the Jews to make their collections for the poor on the Sabbath day, that they might not be without the necessaries of life, and might not be prevented from coming to the synagogue.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The direction itself.

1. The manner in which the collection was to be made: Everyone was to lay by in store (v. 2). He should lay by as he could spare from time to time. It is a good thing to lay up in store for good uses. The best way in the world for them to get a treasury for this purpose is to lay by from time to time, as they can afford. "Every little," as the proverb says, "would make a mickle." We may cheerfully give when we know that we can spare, and that we have been laying by in store that we may.

2. The measure in which they are to lay by: As God hath prospered them. All our business and labour are that to us which God is pleased to make them. It is not the diligent hand that will make rich by itself, without the divine blessing. It is his bounty and blessing to which we owe all we have. And what argument more proper to excite us to charity to the people of God than to consider all we have as his gift? When his bounty flows forth upon us we should not confine it to ourselves, but let it stream out to others. The more good we receive from God the more we should do good to others. They were to lay by as God had blessed them. God expects that our beneficence to others should hold some proportion to his bounty to us. The greater ability he gives, the more enlarged should our hearts be, and the more open our hands; but, where the ability is less, the hands cannot be as open, however willing the mind and however large the heart; nor does God expect it.

The apostle would have everything ready against his coming. As to the disposal of it, he would leave it much to themselves. Paul no more pretended to lord it over the purses of his hearers than over their faith; he would not meddle with their contributions without their consent. They should give letters of credence, and send messengers of their own with their liberality, v. 3. This would be a proper testimony of their respect and brotherly love to their distressed brethren. It would argue that they were very hearty in this service, when they should send some of their own body on so long and hazardous a journey to convey their liberality. We should not only charitably relieve our poor fellow-christians but do it in such a way as will best signify our compassion to them. He offers to go with their messengers, if they think proper, v. 4. Ministers are doing their proper business when they are promoting or helping in works of charity.

The apostle notifies his purpose of visiting them. 1. His purpose: he intended to pass out of Asia, and to go through Macedonia, and to stay some time with them, and perhaps the winter, v. 5, 6. He had long laboured in this church, and done much good among them. The heart of a truly Christian minister must be much towards that people among whom he has long laboured, and with remarkable success. Though some among this people made a faction against him, doubtless there were many who loved him tenderly. And is it any wonder that he should be willing to visit them, and stay with them? It is plain that he hoped for some good effect, because he says he intended to stay, that they might bring him on his journey whithersoever he went (v. 6); not that they might accompany him a little way on the road, but help and encourage him to it, and provide him for it. His stay among them, he hoped, would cure their factious humour.

2. His excuse for not seeing them now (v. 7). He would not see them because he could not stay with them. Such a visit would give neither him nor them any satisfaction. He loved them so much that he longed for an opportunity to take up his abode among them for some length of time. This would be more pleasing to himself, and more serviceable to them, than a cursory visit in his way. 3. We have the limitation of this purpose: I trust to tarry awhile with you, if the Lord permit, v. 7. Concerning all our purposes it is fit we should say, "We will execute them if the Lord permit." It is not in us to effect our own designs, without the divine leave. It is by God's power and permission. 4. We have his purpose expressed of staying at Ephesus for the present. He says he would stay there till pentecost, v. 8. It is very probably that at the time of writing this epistle he was in Ephesus, from this passage, compared with v. 19, where he says, The churches of Asia salute you. 5. We have the reason given for his staying at Ephesus for the present, v. 9. God gave him great success among them. For this reason he determined to stay awhile at Ephesus. Success, and a fair prospect of more, was a just reason to determine an apostle to stay and labour in a times was necessary in Paradise, it is still more so now. every one of you—even those in limited circumstances. lay by him—though there be not a weekly public collection, each is privately to set apart a definite proportion of his weekly income for the Lord's cause and charity. in store—abundantly: the earnest of a better store laid up for the giver (I Tim. 6:19). as God hath prospered him—lit., "whatsoever he may be prospered in," or "may by prosperity have acquired" [ALFORD], (Matt. 25:15-29; II Cor. 8:12). that there be no gatherings when I come—that they may not then have to be made, when your and my time ought to be employed in more directly spiritual things. When men give once for all, not so much is given. But when each lays by something every Lord's day, more is collected than one would have given at once [BENGEL]. 3. approve by your letters—rather translate, "Whomsoever ye shall approve, them will I send with letters": viz., letters to several persons at Jerusalem, which would be their credentials. There could be no need of letters from them before Paul's coming, if the persons recommended were not to be sent off before it. Lit., "by letters"; an abbreviated expression for "I will send, recommending them by letters" [GROTIUS]. If English Version be retained, the sense will be, "When I come, I will send those whom by your letters, then to be given them, ye shall approve." But the antithesis (opposition or contrast) to Paul himself (vs. 4) favors GROTIUS' view. So "by" means with (Rom. 2:27); and the Greek for "by" is translated, with (II Cor. 2:4). liberality—lit., gracious or free gift (II Cor. 8:4). 4. meet—"worth while." If your collections be large enough to be worth an apostle's journey (a stimulus to their liberality), I will accompany them myself instead of giving them letters credential (vs. 3; cf. Acts 20:1-4). with me—to guard against all possible suspicion of evil (II Cor. 8:4, 19-21). 5-7. His first intention had been (II Cor. 1:15, 16) to pass through them (Corinth) to Macedonia, and again return to them from Macedonia, and so to Judea; this he had announced in the lost epistle (ch. 5:9); now having laid aside this intention (for which he was charged with levity, II Cor. 1:17, etc., whereas it was through lenity, II Cor. 1:23; 2:1), he announces his second plan of "not seeing them now by the way," but "passing through Macedonia" first on his way to them, and then "tarrying a while," and even "abiding and wintering with them." for I do pass—as much as to say, "This is what I at last resolve upon" (not as the erroneous subscription of the Epistle represents it, as if he was THEN at Philippi, on his way through Macedonia); implying that there had been some previous communication upon the subject of the journey, and also that there had been some indecisiveness in the apostle's plan [PALEY]. In accordance with his second plan, we find him in Macedonia when II Corinthians was written (II Cor. 2:13; 8:1; 9:2, 4), and on his way to Corinth (II Cor. 12:14; 13:1; cf. Acts 20:1, 2). "Pass through" is opposed to "abide" (vs. 6). He was not yet in Macedonia (as vs. 8 shows), but at Ephesus; but he was thinking of passing through it (not abiding as he purposed to do at Corinth). 6. He did "abide and even winter" for the three WINTER months in Greece (Corinth), Acts 20:3, 6; from which passage it seems that Paul probably left Corinth about a month before the "days of unleavened bread" or the Passover (so as to allow time to touch at Thessalonica and Berea, from which cities two of his companions were; as we read he did at Philippi); so that thus the three months at Corinth would be December, January, and February [BIRKS, Horæ Apostolicæ]. ye—emphatical in the Greek. whithersoever I go—He purposed to go to Judea (II Cor. 1:16) from Corinth, but his plans were not positively fixed as yet (Note, vs. 4; cf. Acts 19:21). 7. I will not see you now by the way—lit., "I do not wish to see you this time in passing"; i.e., to pay you now what would have to be a merely passing visit as I did in the second visit (II Cor. 12:14). In contrast to "a while," i.e., some time, as the Greek might better be translated. but—The oldest MSS. read "for." 8. at Ephesus—whence Paul writes this Epistle. Cf. vs. 19, "Asia," wherein Ephesus was. until Pentecost—He seems to have stayed as he here purposes: for just when the tumult which drove him away broke out, he was already intending to leave Ephesus (Acts 19:21, 22). Combined with ch. 5:7, 8, this verse fixes the date of this Epistle to a few weeks before Pentecost, and very soon after the Passover. 9. door—(II Cor. 2:12). An opening for the extension of the Gospel. Wise men are on the watch for, and avail themselves of, opportunities. So "door of hope," Hosea 2:15. "Door of faith," Acts 14:27. "An

3. Whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters. Why should Paul require letters of approbation in behalf of certain persons when he himself should be among them and could have their characters viva voce? It is probable that he refers here to letters of recommendation which they had sent to him while he was away; and he now promises that, when he shall come to Corinth, he would appoint these persons whom they had recommended to carry the alms to Jerusalem. Some MSS. and several versions join by letters to the following words, and read the verse thus: "When I come, those whom ye shall approve I will send with letters to bring your liberality to Jerusalem." This seems most natural.

4. And if it be meet. If it be a business that requires my attendance, and it be judged proper for me to go to Jerusalem, I will take those persons for my companions.

5. I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia. Paul was now at Ephesus; for almost all allow, in opposition to the subscription at the end of this Epistle that states it was written from Philippi, that it was written from Ephesus. This is supported by many strong arguments; and the eighth verse here seems to put it past all question: "I will tarry at Ephesus"; i.e., I am in Ephesus, and here I purpose to remain until Pentecost. Though Macedonia was not in the direct way from Ephesus to Corinth, yet the apostle intended to make it in his way. And it was because it was not in the direct road, but lay at the upper end of the Aegean Sea, and very far out of his direct line, that he says, I do pass through Macedonia—I have purposed to go thither before I go to Corinth.

6. Yea, and winter with you. He purposed to stay till Pentecost at Ephesus; after that to go to Macedonia, and probably to spend the summer there; and come in the autumn to Corinth, and there spend the winter. That ye may bring me on my journey. That you may furnish me with the means of travelling. It appears that in most cases the different churches paid his expenses to other churches; where this was not done, then he labored at his business to acquire the means of travelling.

7. I will not see you now by the way. From Ephesus to Corinth was merely across the Aegean Sea, and a comparatively short passage.

8. I will tarry at Ephesus. And it is very probable that he did so, and that all these journeys were taken as he himself had projected.

9. A great door and effectual is opened. "A great and energetic door is opened to me"; that is, God has made a grand opening to me in those parts, which I perceive will require much particular place. And there were many adversaries. Great success in the work of the gospel commonly creates many enemies. The devil opposes those most who most heartily set themselves to destroy his kingdom. There were many adversaries; and therefore the apostle determined to stay. True courage is whetted by opposition. The opposition of adversaries only animated his zeal. Adversaries and opposition do not break the spirits of faithful ministers, but only enkindle their zeal. To labour in vain is heartless and discouraging. This damps the spirits, and breaks the heart. But success will give life and vigour to a minister. It is not the opposition of enemies, but the hardness of his hearers, and the backslidings of professors, that damp a faithful minister, and break his heart.

Verses 10–12

I. He recommends Timothy to them, v. 10. Timothy was sent by the apostle to correct the abuses which had crept in among them; and not only to direct, but to reprove, those who were culpable. No doubt the mutual strife and hatred ran very high among them. Proud spirits cannot easily bear reproof. It was reasonable therefore to think young Timothy might be roughly used. It was their duty to behave themselves well towards him, and not dishearten him in his Lord's work. They should not fly out into resentment at his reproof.

He warns them against despising him, v. 11. He was but a young man, and his own youthful face and years commanded but little reverence. Pride was a reigning sin among the Corinthians, and such a caution was but too necessary. Christians should be very careful not to pour contempt on any, but especially on ministers. He tells them they should use him well while he was with them; and they should send him away in friendship, and well prepared for his journey back again to Paul. This is the meaning of bringing him on his journey in peace, v. 11.

II. The reasons why they should behave thus towards Timothy. He was employed in the same work as Paul, and acted in it by the same authority, v. 10. He did not come on Paul's errand among them, nor to do his work, but the work of the Lord. Those who work the work of the Lord should be treated with all tenderness and respect. Pastors and teachers, as well as apostles and evangelists, are to be treated with honour and respect. As they were to esteem him for his work's sake, so also for Paul's sake, who had sent him to Corinth (v. 11). "I am expecting his return and shall judge by your conduct towards him what your regard and respect for me will be." They would hardly dare to send back Timothy with a report that would grieve or provoke the apostle.

III. He informs them of Apollos's purpose to see them. He himself had greatly desired him to come to them, v. 12. Though one party among them had declared for Apollos against Paul, yet Paul did not hinder Apollos from going to Corinth in his own absence. Faithful ministers are not apt to entertain jealousies of each other. True charity and brotherly love think no evil. Apollos could not be prevailed on for the present to come. He would not go to be set at the head of a party. When this had subsided he might conclude a visit would be more proper. Apostles did not vie with each other, but consulted each other's comfort and usefulness. Apollos shows his respect to Paul by declining the journey till the Corinthians were in better temper.

open door," Revelation 3:8. "A door of utterance," Colossians 4:3. "Great," i.e., extensive. "Effectual," i.e., requiring great labors [ESTIUS]; or opportune for effecting great results [BEZA]. many adversaries—who would block up the way and prevent us from entering the open door. Not here false teachers, but open adversaries: both Jews and heathen. After Paul, by his now long-continued labors at Ephesus, had produced effects which threatened the interests of those whose gains were derived from idolatry, "many adversaries" arose (Acts 19:9-23). Where great good is, there evil is sure to start up as its antagonist. 10. Now—rather, "But." Therefore Timothy was not the bearer of the Epistle; for it would not then be said, "IF Timothy come." He must therefore have been sent by Paul from Ephesus before this Epistle was written, to accord with ch. 4:17-19; and yet the passage here implies that Paul did not expect him to arrive at Corinth till after the letter was received. He tells them how to treat him "if" he should arrive. Acts 19:21, 22 clears up the difficulty: Timothy, when sent from Ephesus, where this Epistle was written, did not proceed direct to Corinth, but went first to Macedonia; thus though sent before the letter, he might not reach Corinth till after it was received in that city. The undesigned coincidence between the Epistle and the history, and the clearing up of the meaning of the former (which does not mention the journey to Macedonia at all) by the latter, is a sure mark of genuineness [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. It is not certain that Timothy actually reached Corinth; for in Acts 19:22 only Macedonia is mentioned; but it does not follow that though Macedonia was the immediate object of his mission, Corinth was not the ultimate object. The "IF Timothy come," implies uncertainty. II Corinthians 1:1 represents him with Paul in Macedonia; and II Corinthians 12:18, speaking of Titus and others sent to Corinth, does not mention Timothy, which it would have probably done, had one so closely connected with the apostle as Timothy was, stayed as his delegate at Corinth. The mission of Titus then took place, when it became uncertain whether Timothy could go forward from Macedonia to Corinth, Paul being anxious for immediate tidings of the state of the Corinthian Church. ALFORD argues that if so, Paul's adversaries would have charged him with fickleness in this case also (II Cor. 1:17), as in the case of his own change of purpose. But Titus was sent directly to Corinth, so as to arrive there before Timothy could by the route through Macedonia. Titus' presence would thus make amends for the disappointment as to the intended visit of Timothy and would disarm adversaries of a charge in this respect (II Cor. 7:6, 7). without fear—Referring perhaps to a nervous timidity in Timothy's character (I Tim. 3:15; 5:22, 24). His youth would add to this feeling, as well as his country, Lystra, likely to be despised in refined Corinth. 11. despise—This charge is not given concerning any other of the many messengers whom Paul sent. I Timothy 4:12 accounts for it (cf. Ps. 119:141). He was a young man, younger probably than those usually employed in the Christian missions; whence Paul apprehending lest he should, on that account, be exposed to contempt, cautions him, "Let no man despise thy youth" [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. conduct—set him on his way with every mark of respect, and with whatever he needs (Titus 3:13). in peace—(Acts 15:33; Heb. 11:31). "Peace" is the salutation of kindness and respect in the East; and so it stands for every blessing. Perhaps here there is too a contrast between "peace" and the "contentions" prevalent at Corinth (ch. 1:11). I look for him—He and Titus were appointed to meet Paul in Troas, whither the apostle purposed proceeding from Ephesus (II Cor. 2:12, 13). Paul thus claims their respect for Timothy as one whom he felt so necessary to himself as "look for" to him [THEOPHYL]. with the brethren—Others besides Erastus accompanied Timothy to Macedonia (cf. vs. 12; Acts 19:22). 12. Apollos, I greatly desired . . . to come unto you—He says this lest they should suspect that he from jealousy prevented Apollos' coming to them; perhaps they had expressly requested Apollos to be sent to them. Apollos was not at Ephesus when Paul wrote (cf. vs. 19, and ch. 1:1). Probably Apollos' unwillingness to go to Corinth at this time was because, being aware of the undue admiration of his rhetorical style which led astray many at Corinth, he did not wish to sanction it (ch. 1:12, 3:4). Paul's noble freedom from all selfish jealousy led him to urge Apollos to go; and, on the other hand, Apollos, having heard of the abuse of his name at Corinth to party purposes, perseveringly refused to go. Paul, labor; and besides, I shall have many adversaries to oppose me. Door often signifies occasion or opportunity; but here the apostle may allude to the throwing open of the great doors of the Circus Maximus before the chariot races began, and the many adversaries may refer to the numerous competitors in those races.

10. Now if Timotheus come. Of Timothy we have heard before, chap. iv. 17. And we learn from Acts xix. 22 that Paul sent him with Erastus from Ephesus to Macedonia. It is evident therefore, in opposition to the very exceptionable subscription at the end of this Epistle, that the Epistle itself was not sent by Timothy, as there stated.

That he may be with you without fear. That he may be treated well, and not perplexed and harassed with your divisions and jealousies; for he worketh the work of the Lord—he is divinely appointed, as I also am.

11. Let no man . . . despise him. Let none pretend to say that he has not full authority from God to do the work of an evangelist.

But conduct him forth in peace. I believe, with Bishop Pearce, that this clause should be translated and pointed thus: Accompany him upon his journey, that he may come unto me in peace, "in safety," as the word is used in Mark v. 34 and Luke vii. 50. For I look for him with the brethren. This clause should not be understood as if Paul was expecting certain brethren with Timothy, but it was the brethren that were with Paul that were looking for him; "I, with the brethren, am looking for him."

12. As touching our brother Apollos. It appears from this that the "brethren" of whom the apostle speaks in the preceding verse were then with him at Ephesus; "I, with the brethren, greatly desired to come." But his will was not at all to come. As there had been a faction set up in the name of Apollos at Corinth, he probably thought it not prudent to go thither at this time, lest his presence might be the means of giving it either strength or countenance.

I. Some general advices. They should watch (v. 13). The Corinthians were in manifest danger upon many accounts: their feuds ran high, the irregularities among them were very great, there were deceivers among them. In such dangerous circumstances it was their concern to watch. If a Christian would be secure, he must be on his guard. He advises them to stand fast in the faith. A Christian should be fixed in the faith of the gospel. It is by this faith alone that he will be able to keep his ground in an hour of temptation; it is by this that we must overcome the world (1 John v. 4), both when it fawns and when it frowns. He advises them to act like men and be strong. "Show yourselves men in Christ, by your steadiness, by your sound judgment and firm resolution." Christians should be manly and firm in defending their faith.

He advises them to do everything in charity, v. 14. When the apostle would have us play the man for our faith or religion, he puts in a caution against playing the devil for it. Christians should be careful that charity not only reign in their hearts, but shine out in their lives. Christianity never appears to so much advantage as when the charity of Christians is most conspicuous, when they can bear with their mistaken brethren, and oppose the open enemies of their holy faith in love.

II. Particular directions how they should behave towards some that had been eminently serviceable among them.

1. He gives us their character. (1) The household of Stephanas is mentioned by him. They were the first-fruits of Achaia. It is an honourable character to any man to be early a Christian, betimes in Christ. But they had moreover addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints, to serve the saints. It is not meant of the ministry of the word properly, but of serving them in other respects, and assisting them upon all occasions.

(2) He mentions Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, as coming to him from the church of Corinth. They supplied the deficiencies of the church towards him, and by so doing refreshed his spirit and theirs, v. 17, 18. They gave him a more perfect account of the state of the church by word of mouth than he could acquire by their letter. Report had made their cause much worse than it was in fact; but he had been made more easy by converse with them. They came to him as peace-makers. It is a great refreshment to the spirit of a faithful minister to hear better of a people by wise and good men of their own body than by common report. It is a grief to him to hear ill of those he loves; it gladdens his heart to hear the report thereof is false.

2. He directs how they should behave towards them He would have them acknowledged (v. 11), that is owned and respected. They deserve it for their good offices. Those who discover so good a spirit cannot easily be over-valued, v. 16. They were persons to whom they owed peculiar respect, and whom they should have in veneration.

of course, could not state in his letter particularly these reasons in the existing state of division prevalent there. He calls Apollos "brother" to mark the unity that was between the two. with the brethren—who bear this letter (vs. 17). (See subscription added to the Epistle.) CONYBEARE thinks Titus was one of the bearers of this first letter (II Cor. 8:6, 16-24; 12:18). ALFORD thinks "the brethren" here may be the same as in vs. 11. convenient time—Apollos did return to Corinth when their divisions were moderated [JEROME], and so it was a more seasonable time. 13. He shows that they ought to make their hopes of salvation to depend not on Apollos or any other teacher; that it rests with themselves. "Watch ye": for ye are slumbering. "Stand": for ye are like men tottering. "Quit you like men; be strong": for ye are effeminate (vs. 14).

"Let all your things be done with charity" (ch. 8:1; 13:1): not with strifes as at present [CHRYSOSTOM]. "In the faith" which was assailed by some (ch. 15:1, 2, 12-17). 15. first fruits of Achaia—the first Achæan converts (cf. Rom. 16:5). The image is from the first fruits offered to the Lord (Lev. 23:10; cf. ch. 15:20). The members of this family had been baptized by Paul himself (ch. 1:16). addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints—Translate, "Set themselves, (i.e., voluntarily) to minister unto the saints" (cf. II Cor. 8:4). 16. That ye—Translate, "That ye also," viz., in your turn . . . in return for their self-devotion [ALFORD]. helpeth with—them. laboureth—by himself.

17. Fortunatus . . . Achaicus—probably of Stephanas' household. that . . . lacking on your part—So far as you were unable yourselves to "refresh my spirit," in that you are absent from me, "they have supplied" by coming to me from you, and so supplying the means of intercourse between you and me. They seem to have carried this letter back; see the subscription below: hence the exhortations, vss. 16, 18, as though they would be at Corinth when the Epistle arrived.

18. refreshed my spirit and yours—"yours" will be refreshed on receiving this letter, by knowing that "my spirit is refreshed" by their having come to me from you; and (perhaps) by the good report they gave of many of you (ch. 1:4-8); my refreshment of spirit redounds to yours, as being my disciples (II Cor. 7:13; cf. Zech. 6:8). acknowledge—render them due acknowledgments by a kind reception of them: I Thessalonians 5:12, "know" them in their true worth and treat them accordingly.

ADAM CLARKE

13. Watch ye. You have many enemies; be continually on your guard. Be always circumspect: (1) Watch against evil; (2) Watch for opportunities to receive good; (3) Watch for opportunities to do good; (4) Watch over each other in love; (5) Watch that none may draw you aside from the belief and unity of the gospel. Stand fast in the faith. Hold in conscientious credence what you have already received as the truth of God, for it is the gospel by which you shall be saved and by which you are now put into a state of salvation. Quit you like men. Be not like "children, tossed to and fro . . . with every wind of doctrine." Let your understanding receive the truth; let your judgment determine on the absolute necessity of retaining it; and give up life rather than give up the testimony of God. Be strong. Put forth all the vigor and energy which God has given you in maintaining and propagating the truth, and your spiritual strength will increase by usage. The terms in this verse are all military. Watch ye. Watch, and be continually on your guard, lest you be surprised by your enemies; keep your scouts out, and all your sentinels at their posts, lest your enemies steal a march upon you. See that the place you are in be properly defended, and that each be alert to perform his duty. Stand fast in the faith. Keep in your ranks; do not be disorderly; be determined to keep your ranks unbroken; keep close together. On your unity your preservation depends; if the enemy succeed in breaking your ranks, and dividing one part of this sacred army from another, your rout will be inevitable. Quit yourselves like men. When you are attacked, do not flinch; maintain your ground; resist; press forward; strike home; keep compact; conquer. Be strong. If one company or division be opposed by too great a force of the enemy, strengthen that division and maintain your position; if an attack is to be made on any part or intrenchment of the foe, summon up all your courage, sustain each other. Fear not, for fear will enervate you. Your cause is good; it is the faith, the religion of Jesus. He is your Captain in the field; and should you even die in the contest, the victory is yours.

14. Let all your things be done with charity. Let "love" to God, to man, and to one another be the motive of all your conduct.

15. Ye know the house of Stephanas. You know that Stephanas and his "family" have addicted themselves to the help of the followers of Christ; they have been the chief instruments of supporting the work of God in Achaia, of which work they themselves have been the firstfruits.

16. That ye submit yourselves unto such. That you have due regard to them, and consider them as especial instruments in the hand of God for countenancing and carrying on His great work. The submission here recommended does not imply obedience, but kind and courteous demeanor.

17. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas. It was by these that the Corinthians had sent that letter to the apostle to answer which was a main part of the design of Paul in this Epistle. Fortunatus. This man is supposed to have survived Paul; to be the same mentioned by Clement in his epistle to the Corinthians, sec. 59, as the bearer of that epistle from Clement at Rome to the Christians at Corinth. For that which was lacking on your part. This may refer either to additional communications besides those contained in the letter which the Corinthians sent to the apostle—which additional circumstances were furnished by the persons above; and from them Paul had a fuller account of their spiritual state than was contained in the letter—or to some contributions on their part for the support of the apostle in his peregrinations and labors.

18. They have refreshed my spirit and yours. They have been a means of contributing greatly to my comfort, and what contributes to my comfort must increase yours. This is probably the meaning of the apostle. Therefore acknowledge ye them. Pay them particular respect, and let all be held in esteem in proportion to their work and usefulness. When this is made the rule of respect and esteem, then foolish and capricious attachments will have no place. A

The apostle closes his epistle,

I. With salutations to the church of Corinth, first from those of Asia, from Priscilla and Aquila (who seem to have been at this time inhabitants of Ephesus), with the church in their house (v. 19), and from all the brethren (v. 20) at Ephesus. Paul could find room in an epistle treating of very important matters to send the salutations of friends. Religion should promote a courteous and obliging temper towards all. Those misrepresent and reproach it who would take any encouragement from it to be sour and morose.

Some of these salute them much in the Lord. Christian salutations are attended with hearty recommendations to the divine grace and blessing. We read also of a church in a private family, v. 19. Every Christian family should in some respects be a Christian church. Wherever two or three are gathered together, and Christ is among them, there is a church. He subjoins, 1. An advice, that they should greet one another with a holy kiss (v. 20), or with sincere goodwill, a tacit reproof of their feuds and factions. The love of the brethren should be a powerful incentive to mutual love. 2. His own salutation: The salutation of me Paul with my own hand, v. 21. At the close it was fit that himself should sign it, that they might know it to be genuine. So he wrote in every epistle which he did not wholly pen, as he did that to the Galatians, Gal. vi. 11.

II. With a very solemn warning to them, v. 22. We sometimes need words of threatening, that we may fear. Holy fear is a very good friend both to holy faith and holy living. 1. The person described, who is liable to this doom: He that loveth not the Lord Jesus Christ. It stands here as a warning to the Corinthians and a rebuke of their criminal behaviour. Professed Christians will, by contempt of Christ, and revolt from him, bring upon themselves the most dreadful destruction. Many who have his name much in their mouths have no true love to him in their hearts. And none love him in truth who do not love his laws and keep his commandments. What, not love the most glorious lover in the world! What had we a power of loving for, if we are unmoved with such love as this, and without affection to such a Saviour? 2. The doom of the person described: "Let him be Anathema, Maran-atha, lie under the heaviest and most dreadful curse." Maranatha is a Syriac phrase, and signifies The Lord cometh. That very Lord whom they do not love is coming to execute judgment. Those who fall under his condemning sentence must perish. True faith in Christ will evermore be productive of sincere love to him. Those who love him not cannot be believers in him.

III. With his good wishes for them and expressions of goodwill to them. 1. With his good wishes, v. 23. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ comprehends in it all that is good, for time or eternity. We can wish them nothing more, and we should wish them nothing less. The most solemn warnings are the result of the tenderest affection and the greatest goodwill. And therefore it is no wonder that the apostle should close all, 2. With the declaration of his love to them in Christ Jesus, v. 24. He parts with them in love. His heart would be with them, and he would bear them dear affection as long as their hearts were with Christ. We should be cordial lovers of all who are in Christ. Not but we should love all men, but those must have our dearest affection who are dear to Christ, and lovers of him. May our love be with all those who are in Christ Jesus! Amen.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

19. Asia—not all Asia Minor, but Lydian Asia only, of which Ephesus was the capital. much—with especial affection. Aquila . . . Priscilla—(Cf. Acts 18:2; Rom. 16:3, 4). Originally driven out of Italy by Claudius, they had come to Corinth (whence their salutation of the Corinthians is appropriate here), and then had removed with Paul from Corinth to Ephesus (Acts 18:2, 18, 19, 26); here, as at Rome subsequently, they set up a Church (or assembly of believers) at their house (Rom. 16: 3, 5). A pattern to Christian husbands and wives. Their Christian self-devoting love appears wherever they were (Rom. 16:3, 4). Even the gifted Apollos, so highly admired at Corinth, owed much of his knowledge to them (Acts 18:24-26). In vs. 20, "All the brethren" (i.e., the whole Church) seem to be distinguished from "the church that is in their house," which was but a partial and private assembly out of the general Church at Corinth. NEANDER thinks Romans 16:23 refers to "the whole Church" meeting at the house of Gaius (cf. Col. 4: 15). "Synagogue" implies an assembly in general, without reference to the character or motives of its members. "Church," like the Hebrew Kahal, implies an assembly legally convened; as, for instance, the Jews met as a body politic to receive the law (hence Stephen calls it "the Church in the wilderness," Acts 7:38), and having a legal bond of union. Christ's followers when dispersed from one another cease to be a congregation (synagogue), but still are a Church, having the common bond of union to the same Head by the same faith and hope [VITRINGA, Synagogue and Temple]. From this we may explain Paul's entering "into every house and haling men and women": he would in searching for Christians go to their several "houses" of prayer. in the Lord—They pray for all blessings on you from the Lord, the source of every good [GROTIUS]. ALFORD explains, "in a Christian manner," as mindful of your common Lord. "In the Lord" seems to me to refer to their union together in Christ, their prayers for one another's good being in virtue of that union. 20. holy kiss—the token of the mutual love of Christians, especially at the Lord's Supper (cf. Rom. 16:16; I Thess. 5:26), "in which all the dissensions of the Corinthians would be swallowed up" [BENGEL]. 21. salutation . . . with mine own hand—He therefore dictated all the rest of the Epistle. 22. A solemn closing warning added in his own hand as in Ephesians 6:24; Colossians 4:18. 22. the Lord—who ought to be "loved" above Paul, Apollos, and all other teachers. Love to one another is to be in connection with love to Him above all. IGNATIUS (Epistola ad Romanos 7) writes of Christ, "My love has been crucified" (cf. Song of Solomon 2:7). Jesus Christ—omitted in the oldest MSS. let him be Anathema—accursed with that curse which the Jews who call Jesus "accursed" (ch. 12:3) are bringing righteously on their own heads [BENGEL]. So far from "saluting" him, I bid him be accursed. Maranatha—Syriac for, "the Lord cometh." A motto or watchword to urge them to preparedness for the Lord's coming; as in Philippians 4:5, "The Lord is at hand."

23. The grace . . .—This is the salutation meant in vs. 21; and from which unbelievers (vs. 22; cf. II John 10:11) are excluded [BENGEL]. 24. My love . . .—After having administered some severe rebukes, he closes with expressions of "love": his very rebukes were prompted by love, and therefore are altogether in harmony with the profession of love here made: it was love in Christ Jesus, and therefore embraced "all" who loved Him.

The subscription represents the Epistle as written from Philippi. Verse 8 shows it was written at Ephesus. BENGEL conjectures that perhaps, however, it was sent from Philippi (vs. 5), because the deputies of the Corinthians had accompanied Paul thither. From Ephesus there was a road to Corinth above Philippi.

man will then be honored in proportion to his merit, and his merit will be estimated by his usefulness among men.

19. The churches of Asia salute you. I.e., The churches in Asia Minor. Aquila and Priscilla. Of these eminent persons we have heard before; see Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26; and Rom. xvi. 3. With the church that is in their house. That is, the company of believers who generally worshipped there. There were no churches or chapels built at that time, and the assemblies of Christians were necessarily held in private houses. It appears that Aquila and Priscilla devoted their house to this purpose. The house of Philemon was of the same kind; Philemon v. 2. So was likewise the house of Nymphas, Col. iv. 15.

20. With an holy kiss. The ancient patriarchs, and the Jews in general, were accustomed to kiss each other whenever they met; and this was a token of friendship and peace with them, as shaking of hands is with us. The primitive Christians naturally followed this example of the Jews.

21. The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand. This should be rendered: "The salutation is written by the hand of me Paul." It is very likely that the apostle wrote this and the following verses with his own hand. The rest, though dictated by him, was written by an amanuensis.

22. If any man love not the Lord Jesus. This is directed immediately against the Jews. From chap. xii. 3, we find that the Jews, who pretended to be under the Spirit and teaching of God, called Jesus "accursed"; i.e., a person who should be devoted to destruction. In this place the apostle retorts the whole upon themselves, and says: If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, "accursed" and "devoted to destruction." This is not said in the way of a wish or imprecation, but as a prediction of what would certainly come upon them if they did not repent, and of what did come on them because they did not repent. It is generally allowed that the apostle refers here to some of the modes of excommunication among the Jews, of which there were three, viz.: Niddui, which signifies a simple separation or exclusion of a man from the synagogue, and from his wife and family, for thirty days. Cherem, which was inflicted on him who had borne the niddui, and who had not, in the thirty days, made proper compensation, in order to be reconciled to the synagogue. This was inflicted with dire execrations, which he was informed must all come upon him if he did not repent. Shammatha. This was the direst of all, and cut off all hope of reconciliation and repentance, after which the man was neither reconcilable to the synagogue nor acknowledged as belonging even to the Jewish nation. Anathema, Maran-atha. "Let him be accursed; our Lord cometh." I cannot see the reason why these words were left untranslated. The former is Greek, and has been already explained; the latter is Syriac, maran-atha, "Our Lord is coming"; i.e., to execute the judgment denounced. Does not the apostle refer to the last verse in their Bible? "Lest I come and smite the land with a curse"? And does he not intimate that the Lord was coming to smite the Jewish land with that curse? Which took place a very few years after. What the apostle has said was prophetic, and indicative of what was about to happen to that people. God was then coming to inflict punishment upon them; He came, and they were broken and dispersed.

23. The grace of our Lord Jesus. May the favor, influence, mercy, and salvation procured by Jesus Christ be with you—prevail among you, rule in you, and be exhibited by you, in your life and conversation!

24. Amen. So be it. But this word is wanting in most MSS. of repute, and certainly was not written by the apostle.

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS

I. Introduction (1:1-11)
- A. Salutation (1:1, 2)
  - 1. The authoritative note (1 1a)
  - 2. The inclusive note (1:1b)
  - 3. The salutation (1:2)
- B. Thanksgiving (1:3-11)
  - 1. The values of an experience of suffering (1:3-7)
  - 2. The experience from which the values came (1:8-11)

II. The ministry (1:12-7:16)
- A. Personal vindication (1:12-2:11)
  - 1. A defence of principle (1:12-22)
  - 2. An explanation of action (1:23-2:4)
  - 3. Parenthesis (2:5-11)
- B. Concerning the ministry (2:12-5:21)
  - 1. Its power (2:12-4:6)
  - 2. Its tribulation (4:7-12)
  - 3. Its hope (4:13-5:10)
  - 4. Its impulse (5:11-19)
  - 5. Its aim (5:20, 21)
- C. The consequent appeal (6:1-7:16)
  - 1. For consistency (6:1-10)
  - 2. For consecration (6:11-7:1)
  - 3. For continued fellowship (7:2-16)

III. The collection for the saints (8:1-9:15)
- A. The example of the Macedonians (8:1-5)
- B. The deputation (8:6-9:5)
- C. The results to follow (9:6-15)

IV. Paul's coming to Corinth (10:1-13:10)
- A. His authority (10:1-18)
  - 1. His appeal to them to be obedient (10:1-6)
  - 2. His answer to the criticism of the Christ party (10:7-11)
  - 3. The claim to divine authority (10:12-18)
- B. His apostleship (11:1-12:18)
  - 1. His apology for boasting (11:1-4)
  - 2. His boasting (11:5-12:10)
  - 3. His apology for boasting (12:11-18)
- C. His program (12:19-13:10)
  - 1. The real purpose of his writing (12:19-21)
  - 2. His procedure on arrival (13:1-10)

V. Conclusion—words of cheer (13:11-14)

The apostle had signified his intentions of "coming to Corinth, as he passed through Macedonia" (1 Cor. 16:5), but, being providentially hindered, he writes this second epistle to them. There seem to be these two urgent occasions: (1) The case of the incestuous person. This therefore he gives directions about (ch. 2), and afterward (ch. 7) he declares the satisfaction he had upon their good behavior in that affair. (2) There was a contribution now making for the poor saints at Jerusalem, in which he exhorts the Corinthians to join (chs. 8, 9).

Other things very observable in this epistle are (1) the account the apostle gives of his labors and success in preaching the gospel in several places (ch. 2); (2) the comparison he makes between the Old and New Testament dispensation (ch. 3); (3) the manifold sufferings that he and his fellow laborers met with (chs. 4, 5); (4) the caution he gives the Corinthians against mingling with unbelievers (ch. 6); (5) the way in which he justifies himself and his apostleship (chs. 10-12).

I. The inscription. The apostleship itself was ordained by Jesus Christ, according to the will of God; and Paul was called to it by Jesus Christ, according to the will of God. He joins Timotheus with himself in writing this epistle. His dignifying Timothy with the title of brother shows the humility of this great apostle, and his desire to recommend Timothy to the esteem of the Corinthians. The persons to whom this epistle was sent, the church of God at Corinth: and also to all the saints in all Achaia, that is, to all the Christians who lived in the region round about.

II. The salutation. Therein the apostle desires the two great and comprehensive blessings, grace and peace, for those Corinthians. These two benefits are fitly joined together, because there is no good and lasting peace without true grace; and both of them come from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

The apostle begins with the narrative of God's goodness to him and his fellow-labourers in their manifold tribulations, which he speaks of by way of thanksgiving to God (v. 3–6).

I. The object of the apostle's thanksgiving, the blessed God. 1. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the New Testament God is styled the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, to denote his covenant-relation to the Mediator and his spiritual seed. 2. The Father of mercies. All mercies are from God originally: mercy is his genuine offspring and his delight. 3. The God of all comfort; from him proceedeth the COMFORTER. All our comforts come from God.

Vss. 1-24. THE HEADING; PAUL'S CONSOLATIONS IN RECENT TRIALS IN ASIA; HIS SINCERITY TOWARDS THE CORINTHIANS; EXPLANATION OF HIS NOT HAVING VISITED THEM AS HE HAD PURPOSED. 1. Timothy our brother—When writing to Timothy himself, he calls him "my son" (I Tim. 1:18). Writing of him, "brother," and "my beloved son" (I Cor. 4:17). He had been sent before to Macedonia, and had met Paul at Philippi, when the apostle passed over from Troas to Macedonia (cf. ch. 2:12, 13; Notes, I Cor. 16:10, 11). in all Achaia—comprising Hellas and the Peloponese. The Gentiles themselves, and Annæus Gallio, the proconsul (Acts 18), strongly testified their disapproval of the accusation brought by the Jews against Paul. Hence, the apostle was enabled to labor in the whole province of Achaia with such success as to establish several churches there (I Thess. 1:8; II Thess. 1:4), where, writing from Corinth, he speaks of the "churches," viz., not only the Corinthian, but others also—Athens, Cenchrea, and, perhaps, Sicyon, Argos, etc. He addresses "the Church in Corinth," directly, and all "the saints" in the province, indirectly. In Galatians 1:2 all the "churches" are addressed directly in the same circular Epistle. Hence, here he does not say, all the churches, but "all the saints." 3. This thanksgiving for his late deliverance forms a suitable introduction for conciliating their favorable reception of his reasons for not having fulfilled his promise of visiting them (vss. 15-24). Father of mercies—i.e., the SOURCE of all mercies (cf. Jas. 1:17; Rom. 12:1). comfort—which flows from His "mercies" experienced. Like a true man of faith, he mentions "mercies" and "comfort," before he proceeds to speak of afflictions (vss. 4, 5, 6). The "tribulation" of believers is not inconsistent with God's mercy, and does not beget in them suspicion of it; nay, in the end they feel that He is "the God of ALL comfort," i.e., who imparts the only true and perfect comfort in every

1. Paul, an apostle. Paul, commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ himself, according to the will of God, to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. See on 1 Cor. i. 1.

In all Achaia. The whole of the Peloponnesus, or that country separated from the mainland by the Isthmus of Corinth. From this we may learn that this Epistle was sent not only to the church at Corinth, but to all the churches in that country.

2. Grace be to you and peace. See Rom. i. 7.

3. Blessed be God. Let God have universal and eternal praise: (1) Because he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Gift of His endless love to man, John i. 16. (2) Because He is the Father of mercies, the Source whence all mercy flows, whether it respect the body or the soul, time or eternity; the Source of "tender mercy," for so the word implies. See on Rom. xii. 1. And (3) Because he is the God of all comfort—the Fountain whence all consolation, happiness, and bliss flow to angels and to men.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The reasons of the apostle's thanksgivings.

1. The benefits that he himself and his companions had received from God, v. 4. In the world they had trouble, but in Christ they had peace.

2. The advantage which others might receive (v. 4). What favours God bestows on us are intended not only to make us cheerful ourselves, but also that we may be useful to others.

Their sufferings called the sufferings of Christ (v. 5), did abound, but their consolation by Christ did abound also. Then we speak best of God and his goodness when we speak from our own experience, and, in telling others, tell God also what he has done for our souls.

Verses 7–11

The apostle speaks for the encouragement of the Corinthians; and tells them (v. 7) of his steadfast hope that they should receive benefit by the troubles he and his companions had met with. What their sufferings had been (v. 8). It is not certain what particular troubles in Asia are here referred to, for the apostle was in deaths often. This however is evident, that they were great tribulations.

They despaired even of life (v. 8). And they were brought to this extremity in order that they should not trust in themselves but in God, v. 9. God often brings his people into great straits, that they may be induced to place their trust and hope in his all-sufficiency. Our extremity is God's opportunity. We may safely trust in God, who raiseth the dead, v. 9. He that can do this can do anything, and is worthy to be trusted in at all times. What the deliverance was that they had obtained. Their hope and trust were not in vain.

instance (Ps. 146:3, 5, 8; Jas. 5:11). 4. us—idiomatic for me (I Thess. 2:18). that we may . . . comfort them which are in any trouble—Translate, as the Greek is the same as before, "tribulation." The apostle lived, not to himself, but to the Church; so, whatever graces God conferred on him, he considered granted not for himself alone, but that he might have the greater ability to help others [CALVIN]. So participation in all the afflictions of man peculiarly qualified Jesus to be man's comforter in all his various afflictions (Isa. 50:4-6; Heb. 4:15). 5. sufferings—standing in contrast with "salvation" (vs. 6); as "tribulation" (distress of mind), with comfort or "consolation." of Christ—Cf. Colossians 1:24. The sufferings endured, whether by Himself, or by His Church, with which He considers Himself identified (Matt. 25:40, 45; Acts 9:4; I John 4:17-21). Christ calls His people's sufferings His own suffering: (1) because of the sympathy and mystical union between Him and us (Rom. 8:17; I Cor. 4:10); (2) They are borne for His sake; (3) They tend to His glory (Eph. 4:1; I Pet. 4:14, 16). abound in us—Greek, "abound unto us." The order of the Greek following words is more forcible than in English Version, "Even so through Christ aboundeth also our comfort." The sufferings (plural) are many; but the consolation (though singular) swallows up them all. Comfort preponderates in this Epistle above that in the first Epistle, as now by the effect of the latter most of the Corinthians had been much impressed. 6. we . . . afflicted . . . for your consolation—exemplifying the communion of saints. Their hearts were, so to speak, mirrors reflecting the likenesses of each other (Phil. 2:26, 27) [BENGEL]. Alike the afflictions and the consolations of the apostle tend, as in him so in them, as having communion with him, to their consolation (vs. 4 and ch. 4:15). The Greek for "afflicted" is the same as before, and ought to be translated, "Whether we be in tribulation." which is effectual—lit., worketh effectually. in the enduring . . .—i.e., in enabling you to endure "the same sufferings which we also suffer." Here follows, in the oldest MSS. (not as English Version in the beginning of vs. 7), the clause, And our hope is steadfast on your behalf." 7. so shall ye be—rather, "So are ye." He means, there is a community of consolation, as of suffering, between me and you. 8, 9. Referring to the imminent risk of life which he ran in Ephesus (Acts 19:23-41) when the whole multitude were wrought up to fury by Demetrius, on the plea of Paul and his associates having assailed the religion of Diana of Ephesus. The words (vs. 9), "we had the sentence of death in ourselves," mean, that he looked upon himself as a man condemned to die [PALEY]. ALFORD thinks the danger at Ephesus was comparatively so slight that it cannot be supposed to be the subject of reference here, without exposing the apostle to a charge of cowardice, very unlike his fearless character; hence, he supposes Paul refers to some deadly sickness which he had suffered under (vss. 9, 10). But there is little doubt that, had Paul been found by the mob in the excitement, he would have been torn in pieces; and probably, besides what Luke in Acts records, there were other dangers of an equally distressing kind, such as, "lyings in wait of the Jews" (Acts 20:19), his ceaseless foes. They, doubtless, had incited the multitude at Ephesus (Acts 19:9), and were the chief of the "many adversaries" and "[wild] beasts," which he had to fight with there (I Cor. 15:32; 16:9). His weak state of health at the time combined with all this to make him regard himself as all but dead (ch. 11: 29; 12:10). What makes my supposition probable is, that the very cause of his not having visited Corinth directly as he had intended, and for which he proceeds to apologize (vss. 15-23), was, that there might be time to see whether the evils arising there not only from Greek, but from Jewish disturbers of the Church (ch. 11:29), would be checked by his first Epistle; there not being fully so was what entailed on him the need of writing this second Espistle. His not specifying this here expressly is just what we might expect in the outset of this letter; towards the close, when he had won their favorable hearing by a kindly and firm tone, he gives a more distinct reference to Jewish agitators (ch. 11:22). above strength—i.e., ordinary, natural powers of endurance. despaired—as far as human help or hope from man was concerned. But in respect to help from God we were "not in despair" (ch. 4:8). 9. But—"Yea." in God which raiseth the dead—We had so given up all thoughts of life, that our only hope was fixed on the coming resurrection; so in I Corinthians 15:32 his hope of the resurrection was what buoyed him up in contending

ADAM CLARKE

4. Who comforteth us. Who shows himself to be the God of tender mercy, by condescending to notice us, who have never deserved any good at His hand; and also the God of all consolation, by comforting us in all our tribulation—never leaving us a prey to anxiety, carking care, persecution, or temptation; but, by the comforts of his Spirit, bearing us up in, through, and above all our trials and difficulties. That we may be able to comfort them. Even spiritual comforts are not given us for our use alone; they, like all the gifts of God, are given that they may be distributed, or become the instruments of help to others.

5. The sufferings of Christ. Suffering endured for the cause of Christ: such as persecutions, hardships, and privations of different kinds. Our consolation also aboundeth. We stood as well, as firmly, and as easily in the heaviest trial as in the lightest, because the consolation was always proportioned to the trial and difficulty. Hence we learn that he who is upheld in a slight trial need not fear a great one; for if he be faithful, his consolation shall abound as his sufferings abound. Is it not as easy for a man to lift 100 pounds' weight as it is for an infant to lift a few ounces? The proportion of strength destroys the comparative difficulty.

6. And whether we be afflicted. See on v. 4. Which is effectual. There is a strange and unusual variation in the MSS. and versions in this passage. Perhaps the whole should be read thus: For if we be afflicted, it is for your encouragement and salvation; and if we be comforted, it is also for your encouragement, which exerted itself by enduring the same sufferings which we also suffer. This transposition of the middle and last clauses is authorized by the best MSS. and versions. The meaning seems to be this: While you abide faithful to God, no suffering can be prejudicial to you; on the contrary, it will be advantageous, God having your comfort and salvation continually in view by all the dispensations of His providence; and while you patiently endure, your salvation is advanced, sufferings and consolations all becoming energetic means of accomplishing the great design, for all things work together for good to them that love God.

8. Our trouble which came to us in Asia. To what part of his history the apostle refers we know not. Some think it is to the Jews' lying in wait to kill him, Acts xx. 3; others, to the insurrection raised against him by Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen, Acts xix. 23; others, to his fighting with beasts at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xv. 32, which they understand literally; and others think that there is a reference here to some persecution which is not recorded in any part of the apostle's history.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength. The original is exceedingly emphatic; we were weighed down beyond what any natural strength could support.

9. We had the sentence of death in ourselves. The tribulation was so violent and overwhelming that he had no hope of escaping death. That we should not trust in ourselves. The tribulation was of such a nature as to take away all expectation of help but from God alone.

MATTHEW HENRY

God had delivered them, and did still deliver them, v. 10. What use they made of this deliverance. Past experiences are great encouragements to faith and hope. We reproach our experiences if we distrust God in future straits, who hath delivered as in former troubles. What was desired of the Corinthians upon this account (v. 11). He desires the help of others' prayers. If we thus help one another by our prayers, we may hope for an occasion of giving thanks by many for answer of prayer.

Verses 12–14

The apostle attests their integrity by the sincerity of their conversation.

I. He appeals to the testimony of conscience with rejoicing (v. 12). The witness appealed to, namely, conscience. This is God's deputy in the soul, and the voice of conscience is the voice of God. They rejoiced in the testimony of conscience. The testimony of conscience for us will be matter of rejoicing at all times and in all conditions. The testimony this witness gave. Conscience witnessed, (1) Concerning their conversation, their constant course of life: by that we may judge of ourselves, and not by this or that single act. (2) Concerning the manner of their conversation; that it was in simplicity and godly sincerity. This blessed apostle was a man of plain dealing; you might know where to have him. He was not a man who seemed to be one thing and was another, but a man of sincerity. (3) Concerning the principle they acted from in all their conversation, and that was not fleshly wisdom, but it was the grace of God.

II. He appeals to the knowledge of the Corinthians with hope and confidence, v. 13, 14. They never found anything in him unbecoming an honest man. This they had acknowledged in part already, and he doubted not but they would still do so to the end. And so there would be mutual rejoicing in one another.

The apostle here vindicates himself from the imputation of levity and inconstancy, in that he did not hold his purpose of coming to them at Corinth.

I. He avers the sincerity of his intention (v. 15–17), and he does this in confidence of their good opinion of him. He assured them he was minded to come to them that they might receive a second benefit.

with foes, savage as wild beasts. Here he touches only on the doctrine of the resurrection, taking it for granted that its truth is admitted by the Corinthians, and urging its bearing on their practice. 10. doth deliver—The oldest MSS. read, "will deliver," viz., as regards immediately imminent dangers. "In whom we trust that He will also (so the Greek) yet deliver us," refers to the continuance of God's delivering help hereafter. 11. helping together by prayer for us—rather, "helping together on our behalf by your supplication"; the words "for us" in the Greek following "helping together," not "prayer." that for the gift . . .—lit., "That on the part of many persons the gift (lit., gift of grace; the mercy) bestowed upon us by means of (i.e., through the prayers of) many may be offered thanks for (may have thanks offered for it) on our behalf." 12. For—reason why he may confidently look for their prayers for him. our rejoicing—Greek, "our glorying." Not that he glories in the testimony of his conscience, as something to boast of; nay, this testimony is itself the thing in which his glorying consists. in simplicity—Most of the oldest MSS. read, "in holiness." English Version reading is perhaps a gloss from Ephesians 6:5 [ALFORD]. Some of the oldest MSS. and versions, however, support it. godly sincerity—lit., "sincerity of God"; i.e., sincerity as in the presence of God (I Cor. 5:8). We glory in this in spite of all our adversities. Sincerity in Greek implies the non-admixture of any foreign element. He had no sinister or selfish aims (as some insinuated) in failing to visit them as he had promised: such aims belonged to his adversaries, not to him (ch. 2:17). "Fleshly wisdom" suggests tortuous and insincere courses; but the "grace of God," which influenced him by God's gifts (Rom. 12:3; 15:15), suggests holy straightforwardness and sincere faithfulness to promises (vss. 17-20), even as God is faithful to His promises. The prudence which subserves selfish interests, or employs unchristian means, or relies on human means more than on the Divine Spirit, is "fleshly wisdom." in the world—even in relation to the world at large, which is full of disingenuousness. more abundantly to you-ward—(Ch. 2:4). His greater love to them would lead him to manifest, especially to them, proofs of his sincerity, which his less close connection with the world did not admit of his exhibiting towards it. 13. We write none other things (in this Epistle) than what ye read (in my former Epistle [BENGEL]; present, because the Epistle continued still to be read in the Church as an apostolic rule). CONYBEARE and HOWSON think Paul had been suspected of writing privately to some individuals in the Church in a different strain from that of his public letters; and translates, "I write nothing else to you but what ye read openly (the Greek meaning, "ye read aloud," viz., when Paul's Epistles were publicly read in the congregation, I Thess. 5:27); yea, and what you acknowledge inwardly." or acknowledge—Greek, "or even acknowledge." The Greek for "read" and for "acknowledge" are words kindred in sound and root. I would translate, "None other things than what ye know by reading (by comparing my former Epistle with my present Epistle), or even know as a matter of fact" (viz., the consistency of my acts with my words). even to the end—of my life. Not excluding reference to the day of the Lord (end of vs. 14; I Cor. 4:5). 14. in part—In contrast to "even to the end": the testimony of his life was not yet completed [THEOPHYL and BENGEL]. Rather, "in part," i.e., some of you, not all [GROTIUS, ALFORD]. So in ch. 2:5; Romans 11:25. The majority at Corinth had shown a willing compliance with Paul's directions in the first Epistle: but some were still refractory. Hence arises the difference of tone in different parts of this Epistle. See Introduction. your rejoicing—your subject of glorying or boast. "Are" (not merely shall be) implies the present recognition of one another as a subject of mutual glorying: that glorying being about to be realized in its fulness "in the day (of the coming) of the Lord Jesus." 15. in this confidence—of my character for sincerity being "acknowledged" by you (vss. 12-14). was minded—I was intending. before—"to come unto you before" visiting Macedonia (where he now was). Cf. Note, I Corinthians 16: 5; also 4:18, which, combined with the words here, implies that the insinuation of some at Corinth, that he would not come at all, rested on the fact of his having thus disappointed them. His change of intention, and ultimate resolution of going through Macedonia first, took place before his sending Timothy from Ephesus into Macedonia, and therefore (I Cor. 4:17) before his writing the first Epistle. Cf. Acts 19:21, 22 (the order there is "Macedonia

11. Ye also helping together by prayer. Even an apostle felt the prayers of the Church of God necessary for his comfort and support. What innumerable blessings do the prayers of the followers of God draw down on those who are the objects of them! The gift bestowed . . . by the means of many persons. The blessings communicated by means of their prayers. Thanks may be given by many. When they who have prayed hear that their prayers are so particularly answered, then all that have prayed will feel themselves led to praise God for His gracious answers. Thus the prayers of many obtain the gift, and the thanksgivings of many acknowledge the mercy. The gift which the apostle mentions was his deliverance from the dangers and deaths to which he was exposed.

12. For our rejoicing is this. Our "boasting, exultation, subject of glorying." The testimony of our conscience. That testimony or witness which conscience, under the light and influence of the Spirit of God, renders to the soul of its state, sincerity, safety. In simplicity. Not compounded, having one end in view, having no sinister purpose. In godly sincerity. "The sincerity of God"; that is, such a sincerity as comes from His work in the soul. "Sincerity" comes from the "splendor, or bright shining of the sun"; and here signifies such simplicity of intention and purity of affection as can stand the test of the light of God shining upon it, without the discovery being made of a single blemish or flaw. Not with fleshly wisdom. The cunning and duplicity of man who is uninfluenced by the Spirit of God and has his secular interest, ease, profit, pleasure, and worldly honor in view. But by the grace of God. Which alone can produce the simplicity and godly sincerity before mentioned and inspire the wisdom that comes from above. We have had our conversation. We have conducted ourselves. The word properly refers to the whole tenor of a man's life—all that he does, says, and intends; and the object or end he has in view, and in reference to which he speaks, acts, and thinks; and is so used by the best Greek writers. The word conversation is not an unapt Latinism for the Greek terms, as conversatio comes from con, "together," and verto, "I turn"; and is used by the Latins in precisely the same sense as the other is by the Greeks, signifying the whole of a man's conduct, the tenor and practice of his life. In the world. Both among Jews and Gentiles have we always acted as seeing Him who is invisible. More abundantly to you-ward. That is, We have given the fullest proof of this in our "conduct" towards you. You have witnessed the holy manner in which we have always acted; and God is Witness of the purity of the motives by which we have been actuated; and our conscience tells us that we have lived in uprightness before Him.

13. Than what ye read. Viz., in the First Epistle which he had sent them. Or acknowledge. To be the truth of God; and which he hoped they would continue to acknowledge, and not permit themselves to be turned aside from the hope of the gospel.

14. Have acknowledged us in part. May signify here not in part, but "some of you"; and it is evident, from the distracted state of the Corinthians and the opposition raised there against the apostle, that it was only a part of them that did acknowledge him and receive and profit by his Epistles and advice. We are your rejoicing. You boast of us as the ministers of Christ through whom you have believed, as we boast of you as genuine converts to the Christian faith and worthy members of the Church of God.

15. And in this confidence. Under the conviction or persuasion that this is the case; that you exult in us, as we do in you. I was minded. I had purposed to come unto you before, as he had intimated, 1 Cor. xvi. 5; for he had intended to call on them in his way from Macedonia, but this purpose he did not fulfill; and he gives the reason, v. 23.

MATTHEW HENRY

He tells them that he had not herein used lightness (v. 17), for his purpose was not according to the flesh. It was for some weighty reasons that he had altered his purpose; with him there was not yea yea, and nay nay, v. 17.

II. He would not have the Corinthians to infer that his gospel was false or uncertain, v. 18, 19.

For God is true, and the Son of God, Jesus Christ, is true. Jesus Christ is not yea and nay, but in him was yea (v. 19), nothing but infallible truth. And the promises of God in Christ are not yea and nay, but yea and amen, v. 20. There is an inviolable constancy and certainty in all the parts of the gospel of Christ. The promises of the gospel covenant stand firm and inviolable. Bad men are false; good men are fickle; but God is true, neither fickle nor false. 1. They are the promises of the God of truth (v. 20). 2. They are made in Christ Jesus (v. 20), the Amen, the true and faithful witness.

3. They are confirmed by the Holy Spirit. He is given as an earnest in their hearts, v. 21, 22. An earnest secures the promise, and is part of the payment. And the accomplishment of them shall be to the glory of God (v. 20).

and Achaia," not Achaia, Macedonia); 20:1, 2. that ye might have a second benefit—one in going to, the other in returning from, Macedonia. The "benefit" of his visits consisted in the grace and spiritual gifts which he was the means of imparting (Rom. 1:11, 12). 16. This intention of visiting them on the way to Macedonia, as well as after having passed through it, must have reached the ears of the Corinthians in some way or other—perhaps in the lost Epistle (I Cor. 4:18; 5:9). The sense comes out more clearly in the Greek order, "By you to pass into Macedonia, and from Macedonia to come again unto you." 17. use lightness—Was I guilty of levity? viz., by promising more than I performed. or . . . according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea, yea . . . nay, nay?—The "or" expresses a different alternative: Did I act with levity, or (on the other hand) do I purpose what I purpose like worldly (fleshly) men, so that my "yea" must at all costs be yea, and my "nay" nay [BENGEL, WINER, CALVIN], (Matt. 14:7, 9)? The repetition of the "yea" and "nay" hardly agrees with ALFORD'S view, "What I purpose do I purpose according to the changeable purposes of the fleshly (worldly) man, that there may be with me the yea yea, and the nay nay (i.e., both affirmation and negation concerning the same thing)? The repetition will thus stand for the single yea and nay, as in Matthew 5: 37; James 5:12. But the latter passage implies that the double "yea" here is not equivalent to the single "yea": BENGEL'S view, therefore, seems preferable. 18. He adds this lest they might think his DOCTRINE was changeable like his purposes (the change in which he admitted in vs. 17, while denying that it was due to "lightness," and at the same time implying that not to have changed, where there was good reason, would have been to imitate the fleshly-minded who at all costs obstinately hold to their purpose). true—Greek, "faithful" (I Cor. 1:9). our word—the doctrine we preach. was not—The oldest MSS. read "is not." yea and nay—i.e., inconsistent with itself. 19. Proof of the unchangeableness of the doctrine from the unchangeableness of the subject of it, viz., Jesus Christ. He is called "the Son of God" to show the impossibility of change in One who is co-equal with God himself (cf. I Sam. 15:29; Mal. 3:6). by me . . . Silvanus and Timotheus—The Son of God, though preached by different preachers, was one and the same, unchangeable. Silvanus is contracted into Silas (Acts 15:22; cf. I Pet. 5:12). in him was yea—Greek, "is made yea in Him"; i.e., our preaching of the Son of God is confirmed as true in Him (i.e., through Him; through the miracles wherewith He has confirmed our preaching) [GROTIUS]; or rather, by the witness of the Spirit which He has given (vss. 21, 22) and of which miracles were only one, and that a subordinate manifestation. 20. Rather, How many soever be the promises of God, in Him is the "yea" ("faithfulness in His word": contrasted with the "yea and nay," vs. 19, i.e., inconstancy as to one's word). and in him Amen—The oldest MSS. read, "Wherefore through Him is the Amen"; i.e., In Him is faithfulness ("yea") to His word, "wherefore through Him" is the immutable verification of it ("Amen"). As "yea" is His word, so "Amen" is His oath, which makes our assurance of the fulfilment doubly sure. Cf. "two immutable things (viz., His word and His oath) in which it was impossible for God to lie" (Heb. 6:18; Rev. 3:14). The whole range of Old Testament and New Testament promises are secure in their fulfilment for us in Christ. unto the glory of God by us—Greek, "for glory unto God by us" (cf. ch. 4:15), i.e., by our ministerial labors; by us His promises, and His unchangeable faithfulness to them, are proclaimed. CONYBEARE takes the "Amen" to be the Amen at the close of thanksgiving: but then "by us" would have to mean what it cannot mean here, "by us and you." 21. stablisheth us . . . in Christ—i.e., in the faith of Christ—in believing in Christ. anointed us—As "Christ" is the "Anointed" (which His name means), so "He hath anointed (Greek, chrisas) us, ministers and believing people alike, with the Spirit (vs. 22; I John 2:20, 27). Hence we become "a sweet savor of Christ" (ch. 2:15). 22. sealed—A seal is a token assuring the possession of property to one; "sealed" here answers to "stablisheth us" (vs. 21; I Cor. 9:2). the earnest of the Spirit—i.e., the Spirit as the earnest (i.e., money given by a purchaser as a pledge for the full payment of the sum promised). The Holy Spirit is given to the believer now as a first instalment to assure him his full inheritance as a son of God shall be his hereafter (Eph. 1:13, 14). "Sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession"

ADAM CLARKE

A second benefit. He had been with them once, and they had received an especial blessing in having the seed of life sown among them by the preaching of the gospel; and he had purposed to visit them again that they might have a second blessing, in having that seed watered.

17. Did I use lightness? When I formed this purpose, was it without due consideration? and did I abandon it through fickleness of mind? That with me there should be yea. That I should act as carnal men, who change their purposes and falsify their engagements according as may seem best to their secular interest?

18. But as God is true. Setting the God of truth before my eyes, I could not act in this way; and as sure as He is true, so surely were my purposes sincere; and it was only my uncertainty about your state that induced me to postpone my visit. See v. 23.

19. For the Son of God. If I could have changed my purpose through carnal or secular interest, then I must have had the same interest in view when I first preached the gospel to you, with Silvanus and Timotheus. But did not the whole of our conduct prove that we neither had nor could have such interest in view?

20. For all the promises of God. Had we been light, fickle, worldly-minded persons, persons who could be bound by our engagements only as far as comported with our secular interest, would God have confirmed our testimony among you? Did we not lay before you the promises of God? And did not God fulfill those promises by us—by our instrumentality, to your salvation and His own glory? In him are yea, and in him Amen. All the promises which God has made to mankind are yea, true in themselves, and Amen, faithfully fulfilled to them who believe in Christ Jesus. The promises are all made in reference to Christ; for it is only on the gospel system that we can have promises of grace, for it is only on that system that we can have mercy. Therefore the promise comes originally by Christ, and is yea; and it has its fulfillment through Christ, and is Amen; and this is to the glory of God, by the preaching of the apostles. From what the apostle says here, and the serious and solemn manner in which he vindicates himself, it appears that his enemies at Corinth had made a handle of his not coming to Corinth, according to his proposal, to defame his character and to depreciate his ministry; but he makes use of it as a means of exalting the truth and the mercy of God through Christ Jesus; and of showing that the promises of God not only come by him, but are fulfilled through him.

21. Now he which stablisheth us with you. It is God that has brought both us and you to this sure state of salvation through Christ; and He has anointed us, giving us the extraordinary influences of the Holy Ghost, that we might be able effectually to administer this gospel to your salvation. Through this unction we know and preach the truth, and are preserved by it from dissimulation and falsity of every kind.

22. Who hath also sealed us. Not only deeply impressed His truth and image upon our hearts but, by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, attested the truth of our extraordinary unction or calling to the ministry. And given the earnest of the Spirit. From this unction and sealing we have a clear testimony in our souls, the Divine Spirit dwelling constantly in us, of our acceptance with God, and that our ways please Him. The arrabon of the apostle is the same as the erabon of Moses, Gen. xxxviii. 17-18, 20, which we there translate "pledge." The word properly signifies an earnest of something promised; a "part of the price" agreed for between a buyer and seller, by giving and receiving of which the bargain was ratified; or a "deposit," which was to be restored when the thing promised was given. From the use of the term in Genesis, which the apostle puts here in Greek letters, we may at once see his meaning above and in Eph. i. 14, the Holy Spirit being an earnest in the hearts; and an "earnest of the promised inheritance" means a security given in hand for the fulfillment of all God's promises relative to grace and eternal life. We may learn from this that eternal life will be given in the great day to all who can produce the "pledge." He who is found then with the earnest of God's

III. The apostle gives a good reason why he did not come to Corinth, v. 23. It was that he might spare them. He knew there were things amiss among them, and such as deserved censure, but was desirous to show tenderness. He assures them that this is the true reason.

He adds that he did not pretend to have any dominion over their faith, v. 24. Christ only is the Lord of our faith. He reveals to us what we must believe. Paul, and Apollos, were but ministers by whom they believed (1 Cor. iii. 5), and so the helpers of their joy, even the joy of faith. Our strength and ability are owing to faith, and our comfort and joy must flow from faith.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(Rom. 8:23). The Spirit is the pledge of the fulfilment of "all the promises" (vs. 20). 23. Moreover I—Greek, "But I (for my part)," in contrast to GOD who hath assured us of His promises being hereafter fulfilled certainly (vss. 20-22). call God—the all-knowing One, who avenges wilful unfaithfulness to promises. for a record upon my soul—As a witness as to the secret purposes of my soul, and a witness against it, if I lie (Mal. 3:5). to spare you—in order not to come in a rebuking spirit, as I should have had to come to you, if I had come then. I came not as yet—Greek, "no longer"; i.e., I gave up my purpose of then visiting Corinth. He wished to give them time for repentance, that he might not have to use severity towards them. Hence he sent Titus before him. Cf. ch. 10:10, 11, which shows that his detractors represented him as threatening what he had not courage to perform (I Cor. 4:18, 19).

24. Not for that—i.e., Not that. "Faith" is here emphatic. He had "dominion" or a right to control them in matters of discipline, but in matters of "faith" he was only a "fellow helper of their joy" (viz., in believing, Rom. 15:13; Phil. 1:25). The Greek is, "Not that we lord it over your faith." This he adds to soften the magisterial tone of vs. 23. His desire is to cause them not sorrow (ch. 2:1, 2), but "joy." The Greek for "helpers" implies a mutual leaning, one on the other, like the mutually supporting buttresses of a sacred building. "By faith (Rom. 11:20) ye stand"; therefore it is that I bestow such pains in "helping" your faith, which is the source of all true "joy" (Rom. 15:13). I want nothing more, not to lord it over your faith.

ADAM CLARKE

Spirit in his heart shall not only be saved from death but have that eternal life of which it is the pledge, the earnest, and the evidence.

23. I call God for a record upon my soul. The apostle here resumes the subject which he left in v. 16, and in the most solemn manner calls God to witness, and consequently to punish, if he asserted anything false, that it was through tenderness to them that he did not visit Corinth at the time proposed. As there were so many scandals among them, the apostle had reason to believe that he should be obliged to use the severe and authoritative part of his function in the excommunication of those who had sinned, and delivering them over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh; but to give them space to amend, and to see what effect his Epistle might produce (not having heard as yet from them), he proposed to delay his coming.

24. Not for that we have dominion over your faith. I will not come to exercise my apostolical authority in punishing them who have acted sinfully and disorderly, for this would be to several of you a cause of distress, the delinquents being friends and relatives; but I hope to come to promote your joy, to increase your spiritual happiness, by watering the seed which I have already sowed. This I think to be the meaning of the apostle. It is certain that the faith which they had already received was preached by the apostles; and therefore in a certain sense, according to our meaning of the term, they had a right to propound to them the articles which they ought to believe; and to forbid them, in the most solemn manner, to believe anything else as Christianity which was opposed to those articles. In that sense they had dominion over their faith; and this dominion was essential to them as apostles.

An account of the reason why he did not come to Corinth. He was unwilling to grieve them, or be grieved by them, v. 1,

2. If he had made them sorry, that would have been a sorrow to himself, for there would have been none to have made him glad.

He tells them it was to the same intent that he wrote his former epistle, v. 3, 4. The particular thing referred to was the case of the incestuous person. He assures them that he did not design to grieve them.

CHAPTER 2

Vss. 1-17. REASON WHY HE HAD NOT VISITED THEM ON HIS WAY TO MACEDONIA; THE INCESTUOUS PERSON OUGHT NOW TO BE FORGIVEN; HIS ANXIETY TO HEAR TIDINGS OF THEIR STATE FROM TITUS, AND HIS JOY WHEN AT LAST THE GOOD NEWS REACHES HIM. 1. with myself—in contrast to "you" (ch. 1: 23). The same antithesis between Paul and them appears in vs. 2. not come again . . . in heaviness—"sorrow"; implying that he had already paid them one visit in sorrow since his coming for the first time to Corinth. At that visit he had warned them "he would not spare if he should come again" (Notes, ch. 13:2; cf. ch. 12:14; 13:1). See Introduction to the first Epistle. The "in heaviness" implies mutual pain; they grieving him, and he them. Cf. vs. 2, "I make you sorry," and vs. 5, "If any have caused grief (sorrow)." In this verse he accounts for having postponed his visit, following up ch. 1:23. 2. For—proof that he shrinks from causing them sorrow ("heaviness"). if I—The "I" is emphatic. Some detractor may say that this (vs. 1) is not my reason for not coming as I proposed; since I showed no scruple in causing "heaviness," or sorrow, in my Epistle (the first Epistle to the Corinthians). But I answer, If I be the one to cause you sorrow, it is not that I have any pleasure in doing so. Nay, my object was that he "who was made sorry by me" (viz., the Corinthians in general, vs. 3; but with tacit reference to the incestuous person in particular) should repent, and so "make me glad," as has actually taken place; "for . . . who is he then that . . . ?" 3. I wrote this same unto you—viz., that I would not come to you then (vs. 1), as, if I were to come then, it would have to be "in heaviness" (causing sorrow both to him and them, owing to their impenitent state). He refers to the first Epistle (cf. I Cor. 16:7; cf. 4:19, 21; 5:2-7, 13) sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice—i.e., sorrow from their impenitence, when he ought, on the contrary, to have joy from their penitent obedience. The latter happy effect was produced by his first Epistle, whereas the former would have been the result, had he then visited them as he had originally proposed. having confidence . . . that my joy is the joy of you all—trusting that you, too, would feel that there was sufficient reason for the postponement, if it interfered with our mutual joy [ALFORD]. The communion of saints, he feels confident in them "ALL" (his charity overlooking, for the moment the small section of his detractors at Corinth, I Cor. 13:7), will make his joy (vs. 2) their joy. 4. So far from my change of purpose being due to "lightness" (ch. 1:17), I wrote my letter to

1. But I determined this. The apostle continues to give further reasons why he did not visit them at the proposed time. Because of the scandals that were among them he could not see them comfortably; and therefore he determined not to see them at all till he had reason to believe that those evils were put away.

2. For if I make you sorry. Should he have come and used his apostolical authority in inflicting punishment upon the transgressors, this would have been a common cause of distress. And though he might expect that the sound part of the church would be a cause of consolation to him, yet as all would be overwhelmed with trouble at the punishment of the transgressors, he could not rejoice to see those whom he loved in distress.

3. And I wrote this same unto you. This I particularly marked in my First Epistle to you; earnestly desiring your reformation, lest, if I came before this had taken place, I must have come with a rod and have inflicted punishment on the transgressors. See 1 Corinthians v.

MATTHEW HENRY

He wrote to them with much anguish and affliction in his own heart, and with great affection to them.

The apostle treats concerning the incestuous person. He tells them that the punishment which had been inflicted upon this offender was sufficient, v. 6. The desired effect was obtained.

He therefore directs them, with all speed, to receive him again to their communion, v. 7, 8. He besecches them to forgive him. They must also confirm their love to him; show that their reproofs proceeded from love to his person, as well as hatred to his sin. He was in danger of being swallowed up with over-much sorrow, v. 7. He was in danger of falling into despair. When sorrow is excessive it does hurt; and even sorrow for sin is too great when it drives men to despair. He would have them comply with his desire to restore him, v. 9.

He mentions his readiness to concur with them in this matter, v. 10. And this he would do for their sakes, and for Christ's sake, in conformity to his doctrine and example, which are so full of kindness and tender mercy towards all those who truly repent.

Not only was there danger lest Satan should get an advantage against the penitent, by driving him to despair; but against the apostles or ministers of Christ, by representing them as too rigid and severe. Satan is a subtle enemy, and we should not be ignorant of his devices: he is also a watchful adversary, ready to take all advantages against us.

you (vs. 3) "out of much affliction (Greek, 'trouble') and anguish of heart, and with many tears." not that ye should be grieved—Translate, "be made sorry," to accord with the translation, vs. 2. My ultimate and main object was, "not that ye might be made sorry," but that through sorrow you might be led to repentance, and so to joy, redounding both to you and me (vss. 2, 3). I made you sorry before going to you, that when I went it might not be necessary. He is easily made sorry, who is admonished by a friend himself weeping [BENGEL]. that ye might know the love—of which it is a proof to rebuke sins openly and in season [ESTIUS], (Ps. 141:5; Prov. 27:6). "Love" is the source from which sincere reproof springs; that the Corinthians might ultimately recognize this as his motive, was the apostle's aim. which I have more abundantly unto you—who have been particularly committed to me by God (Acts 18:10; I Cor. 4:15; 9:2). 5. grief ... grieved—Translate as before, "sorrow ... made sorry." The "any" is a delicate way of referring to the incestuous person. not ... me, but in part—He has grieved me only in part (cf. ch. 1:14; Rom. 11: 25), i.e., I am not the sole party aggrieved; most of you, also, were aggrieved. that I may not overcharge—that I may not unduly lay the weight of the charge on you all, which I should do, if I made myself to be the sole party aggrieved. ALFORD punctuates, "He hath not made sorry me, but in part (that I press not too heavily; viz., on him) you all." Thus "you all" is in contrast to "me"; and "in part" is explained in the parenthetical clause. 6. Sufficient—without increasing it, which would only drive him to despair (vs. 7), whereas the object of the punishment was, "that (his) spirit might be saved" in the last day. to such a man—a milder designation of the offender than if he had been named [MEYER]. Rather, it expresses estrangement from such a one who had caused such grief to the Church, and scandal to religion (Acts 22:22; I Cor. 5:5). this punishment—His being "delivered to Satan for the destruction of the flesh"; not only excommunication, but bodily disease (Notes, I Cor. 5:4, 5). inflicted of many—rather, "by the majority" (the more part of you). Not by an individual priest, as in the Church of Rome, nor by the bishops and clergy alone, but by the whole body of the Church. 7. with overmuch sorrow—Greek, "with HIS overmuch sorrow." 8. confirm your love toward him—by giving effect in act, and showing in deeds your love; viz., by restoring him to your fellowship and praying for his recovering from the sickness penally inflicted on him. 9. For—Additional reason why they should restore the offender, viz., as a "proof" of their obedience "in all things"; now in love, as previously in punishing (vs. 6), at the apostle's desire. Besides his other reasons for deferring his visit, he had the further view, though, perhaps, unperceived by them, of making an experiment of their fidelity. This accounts for his deferring to give, in his Epistle, the reason for his change of plan (resolved on before writing it). This full discovery of his motive comes naturally from him now, in the second Epistle, after he had seen the success of his measures, but would not have been a seasonable communication before. All this accords with reality, and is as remote as possible from imposture [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. The interchange of feeling is marked (vs. 4), "I wrote ... that ye might know the love ...": here, "I did write, that I might know the proof of you." 10. Another encouragement to their taking on themselves the responsibility of restoring the offender. They may be assured of Paul's apostolic sanction to their doing so. for if I forgave anything, to whom I forgave it—The oldest MSS. read, "For even what I have forgiven, if I have forgiven anything." for your sakes forgave I it—He uses the past tense, as of a thing already determined on; as in I Corinthians 5:3, "I have judged already"; or, as speaking generally of forgiveness granted, or to be granted. It is for your sakes I have forgiven, and do forgive, that the Church (of which you are constituent members) may suffer no hurt by the loss of a soul, and that ye may learn leniency as well as faithfulness. in the person of Christ—representing Christ, and acting by His authority: answering to I Corinthians 5:4, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ... my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ." 11. Lit., "That we may have no advantage gained over us by Satan," viz., by letting one of our members be lost to us through despair, we ourselves furnishing Satan with the weapon, by our repulsive harshness to one now penitent. The loss of a single sinner is a common loss; therefore, in vs. 10, he said, "for your sakes." Paul had "delivered" the offender "to Satan for the destruction of the flesh

ADAM CLARKE

4. For out of much affliction. It is very likely that the apostle's enemies had represented him as a harsh, austere, authoritative man, who was better pleased with inflicting wounds than in healing them. But he vindicates himself from this charge by solemnly asserting that this was the most painful part of his office, and that the writing of his First Epistle to them cost him much affliction and anguish of heart and many tears.

5. But if any have caused grief. Here he seems to refer particularly to the cause of the incestuous person. Grieved me, but in part. I cannot help thinking that the ek merous and apo merous, which we render in part, and which the apostle uses so frequently in these Epistles, are to be referred to the people. A part of them had acknowledged the apostle, chap. i. 14; and here, a part of them had given him cause of grief; and therefore he immediately adds, that I may not overcharge you all. As only a part of you have put me to pain (viz., the transgressor and those who had taken his part), it would be unreasonable that I should "load you all" with the blame which attaches to that party alone.

6. Sufficient to such a man is this punishment. That is, the man has already suffered sufficiently. Here he gives a proof of his parental tenderness towards this great transgressor. He had been disowned by the church; he had deeply repented; and now the apostle pleads for him.

7. Ye ought rather to forgive him. He had now suffered enough, for the punishment inflicted had answered the end for which it was inflicted; and there was some danger that, if this poor culprit were not restored to the bosom of the church, his distress and anguish would destroy his life or drive him to despair.

8. That ye would confirm your love toward him. You do love him, notwithstanding the reproach he has brought on the gospel; and notwithstanding your love to him, you were obliged to cut him off for the credit of the gospel. Now that he has repented, I beseech you to confirm, to "ratify," by a public act of the church, your love to him; give him the fullest proof that you do love him, by forgiving him and restoring him to his place in the church.

10. To whom ye forgive any thing. Here he further shows them that his sole object in the punishment inflicted on the transgressor was his amendment and therefore promises to ratify, in the name and authority of Christ, the free pardon which he exhorts them to dispense. In the person of Christ. As I believe Christ acts towards his penitent soul, so do I. Christ forgives his sin, and takes him to His favor; let us forgive him his offense against the church and restore him to its communion.

11. Lest Satan should get an advantage. If the man who has given sufficient proof of the sincerity of his repentance be not restored, he may be overwhelmed with sorrow and sink into despair; and then the discipline of the church will be represented, not as emendatory, but as leading to destruction. Of this our enemies would most gladly avail themselves, as they wish to

I. Paul's unwearied labour and diligence in his work, v. 12, 13. He went to Troas from Philipp by sea (Acts xx. 6), and thence he went to Macedonia. He was prevented in his design as to the place of working, yet he was unwearied in his work.

The apostle makes a long digression, to give the Corinthians an account of his travels and labours, declaring at the same time how he had no rest in his spirit, when he found not Titus at Troas (v. 13). And we find afterwards (ch. vii. 5–7) that when the apostle had come into Macedonia he was comforted by the coming of Titus.

II. His success in his work, v. 12. God made manifest the savour of his knowledge by him in every place where he came. The apostle speaks of this as a matter of thankfulness to God. In ourselves we are weak, and have neither joy nor victory; but in Christ we may rejoice and triumph.

W. E. VINE:

THRIAMBEUO denotes to lead in triumph, used of a conqueror with reference to the vanquished (2 Cor. 2:14). Theodoret paraphrases it, "He leads us about here and there and displays us to all the world." This is in agreement with evidences from various sources. Those who are led are not captives exposed to humiliation, but are displayed as the glory and devoted subjects of Him who leads (see the context). This is so even if there is a reference to a Roman "triumph." On such occasions the general's sons, with various officers, rode behind his chariot (Livy, xlv. 40). But there is no necessary reference here to a Roman "triumph" (Field, in Notes on the Trans. of the N.T.). The main thought is that of the display, "in Christ" being the sphere; its evidences are the effects of gospel testimony.

In Col. 2:15 the circumstances and subjects are quite different, and relate to Christ's victory over spiritual foes at the time of His death; accordingly the reference may be to the triumphant display of the defeated.

that the Spirit might be saved" (I Cor. 5:5). Satan sought to destroy the spirit also: to let him do so, would be to give him an advantage, and let him overreach us. not ignorant of his devices—"Ignorant" and "devices" are words akin in sound and root in Greek: we are not without knowledge of his knowing schemes. 12. Paul expected to meet Titus at Troas, to receive the tidings as to the effect of his first Epistle on the Corinthian Church; but, disappointed in his expectation there, he passed on to Macedonia, where he met him at last (ch. 7:5, 6, 7) The history (Acts) does not record his passing through Troas, in going from Ephesus to Macedonia; but it does in coming from that country (Acts 20:6); also, that he had disciples there (Acts 20:7), which accords with the Epistle (ch. 2:12, "a door was opened unto me of the Lord"). An undesigned coincidence marking genuineness [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. Doubtless Paul had fixed a time with Titus to meet him at Troas; and had desired him, if detained so as not to be able to be at Troas at that time, to proceed at once to Macedonia to Philippi, the next station on his own journey. Hence, though a wide door of Christian usefulness opened to him at Troas, his eagerness to hear from Titus the tidings from Corinth, led him not to stay longer there when the time fixed was past, but he hastened on to Macedonia to meet him there [BIRKS]. to preach—lit., "for the Gospel." He had been at Troas before, but the vision of a man from Macedonia inviting him to come over, prevented his remaining there (Acts 16:8-12). On his return to Asia, after the longer visit mentioned here, he stayed seven days (Acts 20:6). and—i.e., though Paul would, under ordinary circumstances, have gladly stayed in Troas. door . . . opened . . . of the Lord—Greek, "in the Lord," i.e., in His work, and by His gracious Providence. 13. no rest in my spirit —rather, "no rest for my spirit" (Gen. 8:9). As here his "spirit" had no rest; so in ch. 7:5, his "flesh." His "spirit" under the Holy Spirit, hence, concluded that it was not necessary to avail himself of the "door" of usefulness at Troas any longer. taking . . . leave of them—the disciples at Troas. 14. Now—Greek, "But." Though we left Troas disappointed in not meeting Titus there, and in having to leave so soon so wide a door, "thanks be unto God," we were triumphantly blessed in both the good news of you from Titus, and in the victories of the Gospel everywhere in our progress. The cause of triumph cannot be restricted (as ALFORD explains) to the former; for "always," and "in every place," show that the latter also is intended. causeth us to triumph—The Greek, is rather, as in Colossians 2:15, "triumphs over us": "leadeth us in triumph." Paul regarded himself as a signal trophy of God's victorious power in Christ. His Almighty Conqueror was leading him about, through all the cities of the Greek and Roman world, as an illustrious example of His power at once to subdue and to save. The foe of Christ was now the servant of Christ. As to be led in triumph by man is the most miserable, so to be led in triumph by God is the most glorious, lot that can befall any [TRENCH]. Our only true triumphs are God's triumphs over us. His defeats of us are our only true victories [ALFORD]. The image is taken from the triumphal procession of a victorious general. The additional idea is perhaps included, which distinguishes God's triumph from that of a human general, that the captive is brought into willing obedience (ch. 10:5) to Christ, and so joins in the triumph: God "leads him in triumph" as one not merely triumphed over, but also as one triumphing over God's foes with God (which last will apply to the apostle's triumphant missionary progress under the leading of God). So BENGEL: "Who shows us in triumph, not [merely] as conquered, but as the ministers of His victory. Not only the victory, but the open 'showing' of the victory is marked: for there follows, Who maketh manifest." savour—retaining the image of a triumph. As the approach of the triumphal procession was made known by the odor of incense scattered far and wide by the incense-bearers in the train, so God "makes manifest by us" (His now at once triumphed over and triumphing captives, cf. Luke 5:10, "Catch," lit., "Take captive so as to preserve alive") the sweet savor of the knowledge of Christ, the triumphant Conqueror (Col. 2:15), everywhere. As the triumph strikes the eyes, so the savor the nostrils; thus every sense feels the power of Christ's Gospel. This manifestation (a word often recurring in his Epistles to the Corinthians, cf. I Cor. 4:5) refutes the Corinthian suspicions of his dishonestly, by reserve, hiding anything from them (vs. 17; ch. 4:2). 15. The order is in Greek, "For (it is) discredit this ministry; and there is always at hand a devil to suggest evil and prompt men to do it, for in this respect we have thorough acquaintance with his devices. Let us therefore be careful to remove, from both Satan and his partisans, all those occasions which might turn to the disadvantage or disparagement of the gospel of Christ.

12. When I came to Troas. After having written the former Epistle, and not having heard what effect it had produced on your minds, though the Lord had opened me a particular door to preach the gospel, in which I so especially rejoice and glory.

13. I had no rest in my spirit. I was so concerned for you, through the love I bear you, that I was greatly distressed because I did not find Titus returned to give me an account of your state. But taking my leave of them. I went thence into Macedonia, expecting to find him there; and thither he did come, and gave me a joyous account of your state. See chap. viii. 6-7.

14. Now thanks be unto God. His coming dispelled all my fears, and was the cause of the highest satisfaction to my mind; and filled my heart with gratitude to God, who is the Author of all good, and who always causeth us to triumph in Christ; not only gives us the victory, but such a victory as involves the total ruin of our enemies. A triumph among the Romans, to which the apostle here alludes, was a public and solemn honor conferred by them on a victorious general by allowing him a magnificent procession through the city. This was not granted by the senate unless the general had gained a very signal and decisive victory—conquered a province, etc. On such occasions the general was usually clad in a rich purple robe interwoven with figures of gold, setting forth the grandeur of his achievements; his buskins were beset with pearls; and he wore a crown, which at first was of laurel, but was afterwards of pure gold. In one hand he had a branch of laurel, the emblem of victory; and in the other, his truncheon. He was carried in a magnificent chariot, adorned with ivory and plates of gold, and usually drawn by two white horses. Musicians led up the procession, and played triumphal pieces in praise of the general; and these were followed by young men, who led the victims which were to be sacrificed on the occasion, with their horns gilded, and their heads and necks adorned with ribbons and garlands. Next followed carts loaded with the spoils taken from the enemy, with their horses and chariots. These were followed by the kings, princes, or generals taken in the war, loaded with chains. Immediately after these came the triumphal chariot, before which, as it passed, the people strewed flowers and shouted, "Io, triumphe!" The triumphal chariot was followed by the senate; and the procession was closed by the priests and their attendants, with the different sacrificial utensils, and a white ox, which was to be the chief victim. They then passed through the triumphal arch, along the via sacra to the capitol, where the victims were slain. During this time all the temples were opened, and every altar smoked with offerings and incense.

The people at Corinth were sufficiently acquainted with the nature of a triumph. About two hundred years before this, Lucius Mummius, the Roman consul, had conquered all Achaia, destroyed Corinth, Thebes, and Chalcis; and, by order of the senate, had a grand triumph, and was surnamed "Achaicus." Paul had now a triumph (but of a widely different kind) over the same people; his triumph was in Christ, and to Christ he gives all the glory. His sacrifice was that of thanksgiving to his Lord; and the incense offered on the occasion caused the savor of the knowledge of Christ to be manifested in every place. As the smoke of the victims and incense offered on such an occasion would fill the whole city with their perfume, so the odor of the name and doctrine of Christ filled the whole of Corinth and the neighboring regions; and the apostles appeared as triumphing in and through Christ over devils, idols, superstition, ignorance, and vice, wherever they came.

III. The comfort that the apostle found, even when the gospel was not successful to the salvation of some who heard it, v. 15–17.

1. The success is different; for some are saved by it, while others perish under it. (1) Unto some it is a savour of death unto death, as men dislike an ill savour, and therefore they are blinded and hardened by it. They reject the gospel, to their ruin, even to spiritual death. (2) Unto others the gospel is a savour of life unto life. To humble and gracious souls the preaching of the word is most delightful and profitable. As it quickened them at first, when they were dead in trespasses and sins, so it will end in eternal life.

2. The awful impressions this matter made upon the apostle, v. 16. Who is worthy to be employed in such weighty work? Who is able to perform such a difficult work? The work is great and our strength is small; all our sufficiency is of God.

3. The comfort which the apostle had. (1) Because faithful ministers shall be accepted of God, whatever their success be (v. 15), in those who are saved and in those also who perish. Ministers shall be accepted, and recompensed, not according to their success, but according to their fidelity. (2) Because his conscience witnessed to his faithfulness, v. 17. Though many did corrupt the word of God, yet the apostle's conscience witnessed to his fidelity. His aim was to approve himself to God; he therefore spoke and acted always as in the sight of God, and therefore in sincerity.

of Christ (that) we are a sweet savor unto God"; thus, the "for" justifies his previous words (vs. 14), "the savor of His (Christ's) knowledge." We not only scatter the savor, but "we are the sweet savor" itself (Song of Sol. 1:3; cf. John 1:14, 16; Eph. 5:2; I John 2:27). in them that are saved—rather, "that are being saved . . . that are perishing" (Note, I Cor. 1:18). As the light, though it blinds in darkness the weak, is for all that still light; and honey, though it taste bitter to the sick, is in itself still sweet; so the Gospel is still of a sweet savor, though many perish through unbelief [CHRYSOSTOM, Homilies, 5. 467], (ch. 4:3, 4, 6). As some of the conquered foes led in triumph were put to death when the procession reached the capitol, and to them the smell of the incense was the "savor of death unto death," while to those saved alive, it was the "savor of life," so the Gospel was to the different classes respectively. in them—in the case of them. "Those being saved" (ch. 3:1, to 4:2): "Those that are perishing" (ch. 4:3-5). 16. savour of death unto death . . . of life unto life—an odor arising out of death (a mere announcement of a dead Christ, and a virtually lifeless Gospel, in which light unbelievers regard the Gospel message), ending (as the just and natural consequence) in death (to the unbeliever); (but to the believer) an odor arising out of life (i.e., the announcement of a risen and living Saviour), ending in life (to the believer) (Matt. 21:44; Luke 2:34; John 9:39). who is sufficient for these things?—viz., for diffusing aright everywhere the savor of Christ, so diverse in its effects on believers and unbelievers. He here prepares the way for one purpose of his Epistle, viz., to vindicate his apostolic mission from its detractors at Corinth, who denied his sufficiency. The Greek order puts prominently foremost the momentous and difficult task assigned to him, "For these things, who is sufficient?" He answers his own question (ch. 3:5, 6), "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God, who hath made us able (Greek, 'sufficient') ministers . . . ." 17. not as many—(ch. 11:18; Phil. 2:21). Rather, "the many," viz., the false teachers of whom he treats (chs. 10-12, especially ch. 11:13; I Thess. 2:3). which corrupt—Greek, "adulterating, as hucksters do wine for gain" (ch. 4:2; Isa. 1:22; II Pet. 2:3, "Make merchandise of you"). as of sincerity . . . as of God—as one speaking from (out of) sincerity, as from (i.e., by the command of, and so in dependence on) God. in Christ—as united to Him in living membership, and doing His work (cf. ch. 12:19). The whole Gospel must be delivered such as it is, without concession to men's corruptions, and without selfish aims, if it is to be blessed with success (Acts 20:27).

ADAM CLARKE

15. For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ. The apostle still alludes to the case of a triumph. The conqueror always represented the person of Jupiter, as even the heathens supposed that God alone could give the victory; and as the punishment of death was inflicted on some of the captives, who had often rebelled and broken leagues and covenants, so others were spared, made tributaries, and often became allies. Alluding to this, the apostle says: We are a sweet savour to God—we have fulfilled His will in faithfully proclaiming the gospel and fighting against sin. And as He has determined that those who believe shall be saved and those who believe not shall perish, we are equally acceptable to Him though we unsuccessfully preach the gospel to some who obstinately reject it and so perish, as we are in preaching to others who believe and are saved.

16. To the one we are the savour of death unto death. There are several sayings among the ancient Jewish writers similar to this. In Debarim Rabba, sec. i. fol. 248, it is said: "As the bee brings home honey to its owner, but stings others; so it is with the words of the law; They are a savour of lives to the Israelites: and a savour of death to the people of this world." The apostle's meaning is plain: Those who believe and receive the gospel are saved; those who reject it perish. Who is sufficient for these things? Is it the false apostle that has been laboring to pervert you? Or is it the men to whom God has given an extraordinary commission, and sealed it by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost? That this is the apostle's meaning is evident from the following verse.

17. For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God. God has made us sufficient for these things by giving us His own pure doctrine, the ministry of reconciliation, which we conscientiously preserve and preach; and we act, not like many among you, who, having received that doctrine, corrupt it, mingling with it their own inventions and explaining away its force and influence, so as to accommodate it to men of carnal minds. The word kapelenontes, from kapelos, a "tavern keeper," signifies acting like an unprincipled vintner; for this class of men have ever been notorious for adulterating their wines, mixing them with liquors of no worth, that thereby they might increase their quantity; and thus the mixture was sold for the same price as the pure wine. See Isa. i. 22. "Your vintners mix your wine with water"; that is, Your false prophets and corrupt priests adulterate the Word of God and render it of none effect by their explanations and traditions. The word has been used, among both the Greeks and the Latins, to signify a prostitution of what was right and just, for the sake of gain.

Verses 1–5

I. The apostle makes an apology for seeming to commend himself. He neither needed nor desired any verbal commendation to them, nor letters testimonial from them, as some others did, meaning the false apostles or teachers, v. 1.

The Corinthians themselves were his real commendation, v. 2. They were written in his heart; known and read of all men.

CHAPTER 3

VSS. 1-18. THE SOLE COMMENDATION HE NEEDS TO PROVE GOD'S SANCTION OF HIS MINISTRY HE HAS IN HIS CORINTHIAN CONVERTS: HIS MINISTRY EXCELS THE MOSAIC, AS THE GOSPEL OF LIFE AND LIBERTY EXCELS THE LAW OF CONDEMNATION. 1. Are we beginning again to recommend ourselves (ch. 5:12) (as some of them might say he had done in his first Epistle; or, a reproof to "some" who had begun doing so)! commendation—recommendation. (Cf. ch. 10:18.) The "some" refers to particular persons of the "many" (ch. 2:17) teachers who opposed him, and who came to Corinth with letters of recommendation from other churches; and when leaving that city obtained similar letters from the Corinthians to other churches. The 13th canon of the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451) ordained that "clergymen coming to a city where they were unknown, should not be allowed to officiate without letters commendatory from their own bishop." The history (Acts 18:27) confirms the existence of the custom here alluded to in the Epistle: "When Apollos was disposed to pass into Achaia [Corinth], the brethren [of Ephesus] wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him." This was about two years before the Epistle, and is probably one of the instances to which Paul refers, as many at Corinth boasted of their being followers of Apollos (I Cor. 1:12). 2. our epistle—of recommendation. in our hearts—not letters borne merely in the hands. Your conversion through my instrumentality, and your faith which is "known of all men" by widespread report (I Cor. 1:4-7), and which is written

1. Do we begin again to commend ourselves? By speaking thus of our sincerity, divine mission, etc., is it with a design to conciliate your esteem or ingratiate ourselves in your affections? By no means. Or need we . . . epistles of commendation. Are we so destitute of ministerial abilities and divine influence that we need, in order to be received in different churches, to have letters of recommendation? Certainly not. God causes us to triumph through Christ in every place, and your conversion is such an evident seal to our ministry as leaves no doubt that God is with us. Letters of commendation were frequent in the primitive Church; and were also in use in the apostolic Church, as we learn from this place. But these were, in all probability, not used by the apostles. Their helpers, successors, and those who had not the miraculous gifts of the Spirit needed such letters; and they were necessary to prevent the churches from being imposed on by false teachers. But when apostles came, they brought their own testimonials, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit.

2. Ye are our epistle. I bear the most ardent love to you. I have no need to be put in remembrance of you by any Epistles or other means; ye are . . . written in our hearts—I have the most affectionate remembrance of you.

A. B. SIMPSON:

His credentials are the lives that have been transformed through his ministry by the power of the Holy Spirit. What better monument can any Christian worker desire? It is said of the famous Sir Christopher Wren that he was rescued as a foundling child on the very site of that glorious cathedral that he afterward built in the city of London, St. Paul's. At the close of an honored life, his dust was buried beneath its foundations, and by his own directions a plain slab covered his tomb with the simple inscription on it, "If you seek my monument, look around you." That splendid building was his sufficient monument. His work was the memorial of his life. Are we transcribing ourselves, or, better, our Master's image on the hearts and lives of men? Paul did not mean that he despised letters of introduction. They possess a certain value, and we all need to be prudent in guarding against impostors. But he had something better. His work was his highest witness. Can we say it is ours? True character will always discover itself to the world, like a spice ship sailing into the harbor, by the fragrance it diffuses all around it.—Christ in the Bible

II. The apostle is careful to ascribe all the praise to God. He says they were the epistle of Christ, v. 3. The apostle and others were but instruments. This epistle was not written with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; nor was it written in tables of stone, but on the heart, upon the fleshy (not fleshly, as fleshliness denotes sensuality) tables of the heart, that is, upon hearts that are softened by divine grace.

He utterly disclaims the taking of any praise to themselves, and ascribes all the glory to God, v. 5. All our sufficiency is of God; to him therefore are owing all the praise and glory of that good which is done. The best are no more than what the grace of God makes them.

Verses 6–11

The apostle makes a comparison between the Old Testament and the New and values himself and his fellow-labourers by this, that they were able ministers of the New Testament, that God had made them so, v. 6.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

by memory and affection on my inmost heart and is borne about wherever I go, is my letter of recommendation (I Cor. 9:2). known and read—words akin in root, sound, and sense (so ch. 1: 13). "Ye are known to be my converts by general knowledge: then ye are known more particularly by your reflecting my doctrine in your Christian life." The handwriting is first "known," then the Epistle is "read" [GROTIUS] (ch. 4:2; I Cor. 14:25). There is not so powerful a sermon in the world, as a consistent Christian life. The eye of the world takes in more than the ear. Christians' lives are the only religious books the world reads. IGNATIUS (ad Ephesum, ch. 10) writes, "Give unbelievers the chance of believing through you. Consider yourselves employed by God; your lives the form of language in which He addresses them. Be mild when they are angry, humble when they are haughty; to their blasphemy oppose prayer without ceasing; to their inconsistency, a steadfast adherence to your faith." 3. declared—The letter is written so legibly that it can be "read by all men" (vs. 2). Translate, "Being manifestly shown to be an Epistle of Christ'; a letter coming manifestly from Christ, and "ministered by us," i.e., carried about and presented by us as its (ministering) bearers to those (the world) for whom it is intended: Christ is the Writer and the Recommender, ye are the letter recommending us. written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God—Paul was the ministering pen or other instrument of writing, as well as the ministering bearer and presenter of the letter. "Not with ink" stands in contrast to the letters of commendation which "some" at Corinth (vs. 1) used. "Ink" is also used here to include all outward materials for writing, such as the Sinaitic tables of stone were. These, however, were not written with ink, but "graven" by "the finger of God" (Exod. 31:18; 32:16). Christ's Epistle (His believing members converted by Paul) is better still: it is written not merely with the finger, but with the "Spirit of the living God"; it is not the "ministration of death" as the law, but of the "living Spirit" that "giveth life" (vss. 6-8). not in—not on tables (tablets) of stone, as the ten commandments were written (vs. 7). in fleshy tables of the heart—ALL the best MSS. read, "On [your] hearts [which are] tables of flesh." Once your hearts were spiritually what the tables of the law were physically, tables of stone, but God has "taken away the stony heart out of your flesh, given you a heart of flesh" (fleshy, not fleshly, i.e., carnal; hence it is written, "out of your flesh" i.e., your carnal nature), Ezek. 11:19; 36:26. Cf. vs. 2, "As ye are our Epistle written in our hearts," so Christ has in the first instance made you "His Epistle written with the Spirit in (on) your hearts." I bear on my heart, as a testimony to all men, that which Christ has by His Spirit written in your heart [ALFORD]. (Cf. Prov. 3:3; 7:3; Jer. 31:31-34). This passage is quoted by PALEY (Horæ Paulinæ) as illustrating one peculiarity of Paul's style, viz., his going off at a word into a parenthetic reflection: here it is on the word "Epistle." So "savor," ch. 2:14-17. 4. And—Greek, "But." "Such confidence, however (viz., of our 'sufficiency,' vss. 5, 6; ch. 2:16 [to which he reverts after the parenthesis], as ministers of the New Testament, 'not fainting,' ch. 4:1), we have through Christ (not through ourselves, cf. vs. 18) toward God" (i.e., in our relation to God and His work, the ministry committed by Him to us, for which we must render an account to Him). Confidence toward God is solid and real, as looking to Him for the strength needed now, and also for the reward of grace to be given hereafter. Cf. Acts 24:15, "hope toward God." Human confidence is unreal in that it looks to man for its help and its reward. 5. The Greek is, "Not that we are (even yet after so long experience as ministers) sufficient to think anything OF ourselves as (coming) FROM ourselves; but our sufficiency is (derived) FROM God." "From" more definitely refers to the source out of which a thing comes; "of" is more general. to think—Greek, to "reason out" or "devise"; to attain to sound preaching by our reasonings [THEODORET]. The "we" refers here to ministers (II Pet. 1:21). anything—even the least. We cannot expect too little from man, or too much from God. 6. able—rather, as the Greek is the same, corresponding to vs. 5, translate, "sufficient as ministers" (Eph. 3:7; Col. 1:23). the new testament—"the new covenant" as contrasted with the Old Testament or covenant (I Cor. 11:25; Gal. 4:24). He reverts here again to the contrast between the law on "tables of stone," and that "written by the Spirit on fleshly tables of the heart" vs. 3). not of the letter—joined with "ministers"; ministers not of the mere literal precept, in which the old law, as then understood, Known and read of all men. For wherever I go I mention you, speak of your various gifts and graces, and praise your knowledge in the gospel.

3. Manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ. You are in our hearts, and Christ has written you there; but yourselves are the epistle of Christ. The change produced in your hearts and lives, and the salvation which you have received, are as truly the work of Christ as a letter dictated and written by a man in his work. Ministered by us. You are the writing, but Christ used me as the pen. Christ dictated, and I wrote; and the divine characters are not made with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, for the gifts and graces that constituted the mind that was in Christ are produced in you by the Holy Ghost.

Not in tables of stone. Where men engrave contracts or record events; but in fleshy tables of the heart—the work of salvation taking place in all your affections, appetites, and desires, working that change within that is so signally manifested without.

5. Not that we are sufficient of ourselves. We do not arrogate to ourselves any power to enlighten the mind or change the heart; we are only instruments in the hand of God.

6. Who . . . hath made us able ministers. This is a more formal answer to the question, "Who is sufficient for these things?" chap. ii. 16. God, says the apostle, has made us able ministers; He has made us sufficient for these things; for the reader will observe that he uses the same word in both places. We apostles execute, under the divine influence, what God himself has devised. We are ministers of the new covenant; of this new dispensation of truth, light, and life, by Christ Jesus; a system which not only proves itself to have come from God, but necessarily implies that God himself by His own Spirit is a continual Agent in it, ever bringing its mighty purposes to pass. Not of the letter, but of the spirit. The apostle does not

I. He distinguishes between the letter and the spirit even of the New Testament, v. 6. They were ministers not merely of the letter, but they were ministers of the Spirit also. The letter killeth, but the Spirit of the gospel giveth life eternal.

II. He shows the excellency of the gospel above the law. The Old Testament dispensation was the ministration of death (v. 7), whereas that of the New Testament is the ministration of life.

The law was the ministration of condemnation, but the gospel is the ministration of righteousness. This reveals the grace and mercy of God through Jesus Christ, for obtaining the remission of sins and eternal life. The gospel therefore so much exceeds in glory that in a manner it eclipses the glory of the legal dispensation, v. 10.

consisted; "but of the Spirit," i.e., the spiritual holiness which lay under the old law, and which the new covenant brings to light (Matt. 5:17-48) with new motives added, and a new power of obedience imparted, viz., the Holy Spirit (Rom. 7:6). Even in writing the letter of the New Testament, Paul and the other sacred writers were ministers not of the letter, but of the spirit. No piety of spirit could exempt a man from the yoke of the letter of each legal ordinance under the Old Testament; for God had appointed this as the way in which He chose a devout Jew to express his state of mind towards God. Christianity, on the other hand, makes the spirit of our outward observances everything, and the letter a secondary consideration (John 4:24). Still the moral law of the ten commandments, being written by the finger of God, is as obligatory now as ever; but put more on the Gospel spirit of "love," than on the letter of a servile obedience, and in a deeper and fuller spirituality (Matt. 5:17-48; Rom. 13:9). No literal precepts could fully comprehend the wide range of holiness which LOVE, the work of the Holy Spirit, under the Gospel, suggests to the believer's heart instinctively from the word understood in its deep spirituality. letter killeth—by bringing home the knowledge of guilt and its punishment, death; vs. 7, "ministration of death" (Rom. 7:9). spirit giveth life—The spirit of the Gospel when brought home to the heart by the Holy Spirit, gives new spiritual life to a man (Rom. 6.4, 11). This "spirit of life" is for us in Christ Jesus (Rom. 8:2, 10), who dwells in the believer as a "quickening" or "life-giving Spirit" (I Cor. 15:45). Note, the spiritualism of rationalists is very different. It would admit no "stereotyped revelation," except so much as man's own inner instrument of revelation, the conscience and reason, can approve of; thus making the conscience judge of the written word, whereas the apostles make the written word the judge of the conscience (Acts 17:11; I Pet. 4:1). True spirituality rests on the whole written word, applied to the soul by the Holy Spirit as the only infallible interpreter of its far-reaching spirituality. The letter is nothing without the spirit, in a subject essentially spiritual. The spirit is nothing without the letter, in a record substantially historical. 7. the ministration of death—the legal dispensation, summed up in the Decalogue, which denounces death against man for transgression. written and engraven in stones—There is no "and" in the Greek. The literal translation is, "The ministration of death in letters," of which "engraven on stones" is an explanation. The preponderance of oldest MSS. is for the English Version reading. But one (perhaps the oldest existing MS.) has "in the letter," which refers to the preceding words (vs. 6), "the letter killeth," and this seems the probable reading. Even if we read as English Version, "The ministration of death (written) in letters," alludes to the literal precepts of the law as only bringing us the knowledge of sin and "death," in contrast to "the Spirit" in the Gospel bringing us "life" (vs. 6). The opposition between "the letters" and "the Spirit" (vs. 8) confirms this. This explains why the phrase in Greek should be "in letters," instead of the ordinary one which English Version has substituted, "written and." was glorious—lit., "was made (invested) in glory," glory was the atmosphere with which it was encompassed. could not steadfastly behold—lit., "fix their eyes on." Exodus 34:30, "The skin of his face shone; and they were AFRAID to come nigh him." "Could not," therefore means here, for FEAR. The "glory of Moses' countenance" on Sinai passed away when the occasion was over: a type of the transitory character of the dispensation which he represented (vs. 11), as contrasted with the permanency of the Christian dispensation (vs. 11). 8. be rather glorious—lit., "be rather (i.e., still more, invested) in glory." "Shall be," i.e., shall be found to be in part now, but fully when the glory of Christ and His saints shall be revealed. 9. ministration of condemnation—the law regarded in the "letter" which "killeth" (vs. 6; Rom. 7:9-11). The oldest existing MS. seems to read as English Version. But most of the almost contemporary MSS., versions, and Fathers, read, "If to the ministration of condemnation there be glory." the ministration of righteousness—the Gospel, which especially reveals the righteousness of God (Rom. 1:17), and imputes righteousness to men through faith in Christ (Rom. 3:21-28; 4:3, 22-25), and imparts righteousness by the Spirit (Rom. 8:1-4). exceed—"abound." 10. For even the ministration of condemnation, the law, vs. 7 (which has been glorified at Sinai in Moses' person), has now (English Version translates less fitly, "was made . . . had") lost its glory in this respect by reason of the surpassing glory (of the mean here, as some have imagined, that he states himself to be a minister of the New Testament, in opposition to the Old, and that it is the Old Testament that kills and the New that gives life; but that the New Testament gives the proper meaning of the Old, for the old covenant had its letter and its spirit, its "literal" and its "spiritual" meaning. The law was founded on the very supposition of the gospel; and all its sacrifices, types, and ceremonies refer to the gospel. The Jews rested in the letter, which not only afforded no means of life, but killed, by condemning every transgressor to death. They did not look at the spirit, did not endeavor to find out the spiritual meaning; and therefore they rejected Christ, who was "the end of the law" for justification, and so for redemption from death to everyone that believes. Every institution has its letter as well as its spirit, as every word must refer to something of which it is the sign or significator. The gospel has both its letter and its spirit; and multitudes of professing Christians, by resting in the letter, receive not the life which it is calculated to impart. Water, in baptism, is the letter that points out the purification of the soul; they who rest in this letter are without this purification; and dying in that state, they die eternally. Bread and wine in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper are the letter; the atoning efficacy of the death of Jesus and the grace communicated by this to the soul of a believer are the spirit. Multitudes rest in this letter, simply receiving these symbols without reference to the atonement or to their guilt, and thus lose the benefit of the atonement and the salvation of their souls.

7. The ministration of death. Here the apostle evidently intends the law. It was a ministration or "service" of death. It was the province of the law to ascertain the duty of man, to assign his duties, to fix penalties for transgressions. As man is prone to sin, and is continually committing it, this law was to him a continual ministration of death. Yet this ministration of death (the Ten Commandments, written on stones; a part of the Mosaic institutions being put for the whole) was glorious—was full of splendor; for the apostle refers to the thunderings, and lightnings, and luminous appearances which took place in the giving of the law, so that the very body of Moses partook of the effulgence in such a manner that the children of Israel could not look upon his face; and he, to hide it, was obliged to use a veil. All this was intended to show the excellency of that law as an institution coming immediately from God: and the apostle gives it all its heightenings, that he may compare it to the gospel, and thereby prove that, glorious as it was, it had no glory that could be compared with that of the gospel; and that even the glory it had was a glory that was to be done away—to be absorbed, as the light of the stars, planets, and moon, is absorbed in the splendor of the sun.

8. The ministration of the spirit. The gospel dispensation, which gives the true spiritual sense of the law. Be rather glorious. Forasmuch as the thing signified is of infinitely more consequence than that by which it is signified.

9. The ministration of condemnation. The law, which ascertained sin, and condemned it to just punishment. The ministration of righteousness. The gospel, the grand business of which was to proclaim the doctrine "of justification," and to show how God could be just and yet the Justifier of him who believes in Jesus.

10. For even that which was made glorious. The law, which was exhibited for a time in great glory and splendor, partly when it was given and partly by the splendor of God in the Tabernacle and first Temple. But all this ceased and was done away; was intended to give place

The law is done away, but the gospel does and shall remain, v. 11. That dispensation was only to continue for a time; whereas the gospel shall remain to the end of the world.

Verses 12–18

I. The duty of the ministers of the gospel to use great clearness of speech. The gospel is a more clear dispensation than the law. Though the Israelites could not look steadfastly to the end of what was commanded, yet we may.

II. The privilege of those who enjoy the gospel, above those who lived under the law. Those who lived under the legal dispensation had their minds blinded (v. 14), and there was a veil upon their hearts, v. 15.

There is a time coming when this veil also shall be taken away, and when it (the body of that people) shall turn to the Lord, v. 16.

Gospel): as the light of the stars and moon fades in the presence of the sun. 11. was glorious—lit., "was with glory"; or "marked by glory." that which remaineth—abideth (Rev. 14:6). Not "the ministry," but the Spirit, and His accompaniments, life and righteousness. is glorious—lit., "is in glory." The Greek "with" or "by" is appropriately applied to that of which the glory was transient. "In" to that of which the glory is permanent. The contrast of the Old and New Testaments proves that Paul's chief opponents at Corinth were Judaizers. 12. such hope—of the future glory, which shall result from the ministration of the Gospel (vss. 8, 9). plainness of speech—openness; without reserve (ch. 2:17; 4:2). 13. We use no disguise, "as Moses put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel might not look steadfastly upon the end of that which was to be done away" [ELLICOTT and others]. The view of Exodus 34:30-35, according to LXX is adopted by Paul, that Moses in going in to speak to God removed the veil till he came out and had spoken to the people; and then when he had done speaking, he put on the veil that they might not look on the end, or the fading, of that transitory glory. The veil was the symbol of concealment, put on directly after Moses' speaking; so that God's revelations by him were interrupted by intervals of concealment [ALFORD]. But ALFORD's view does not accord with vs. 7; the Israelites "could not look steadfastly on the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance". Plainly Moses' veil was put on because of their not having been able to "look steadfastly at him." Paul here (vs. 13) passes from the literal fact to the truth symbolized by it, the blindness of Jews and Judaizers to the ultimate end of the law: stating that Moses put on the veil that they might not look steadfastly at (Christ, Rom. 10:4) the end of that (law) which (like Moses' glory) is done away. Not that Moses had this purpose; but often God attributes to His prophets the purpose which He has Himself. Because the Jews would not see, God judicially gave them up so as not to see. The glory of Moses' face is antitypically Christ's glory shining behind the veil of legal ordinances. The veil which has been taken off to the believer is left on to the unbelieving Jew, so that he should not see (Isa. 6: 10; Acts 28:26, 27). He stops short at the letter of the law, not seeing the end of it. The evangelical glory of the law, like the shining of Moses' face, cannot be borne by a carnal people, and therefore remains veiled to them until the Spirit comes to take away the veil (vss. 14-17) [CAMERON]. 14-18. Parenthetical: Of Christians in general. He resumes the subject of the ministry, ch. 4:1. 14 minds—Greek, "mental perceptions"; "understandings." blinded—rather, "hardened." The opposite to "looking steadfastly at the end" of the law (vs. 13). The veil on Moses' face is further typical of the veil that is on their hearts. untaken away . . . which veil—rather, "the same veil . . . remaineth untaken away [lit., not unveiled], so that they do not see THAT it (not the veil as English Version, but 'THE OLD TESTAMENT,' or covenant of legal ordinances) is done away (vss. 7, 11, 13) in Christ" or, as BENGEL, "Because it is done away in Christ," i.e., it is not done away save in Christ: the veil therefore remains untaken away from them, because they will not come to Christ, who does away, with the law as a mere letter. If they once saw that the law is done away in Him, the veil would be no longer on their hearts in reading it publicly in their synagogues (so "reading" means, Acts 15: 21). I prefer the former. 15. the veil is—rather, "a veil lieth upon their heart" (Their understanding, affected by the corrupt will, John 8: 43; I Cor. 2:14). The Tallith was worn in the synagogue by every worshipper, and to this veil hanging over the breast there may be an indirect allusion here (Note, I Cor. 11:4): the apostle making it symbolize the spiritual veil on their heart. 16. Moses took off the veil on entering into the presence of the Lord. So as to the Israelites whom Moses represents, "whensoever their heart (it) turns (not as English Version, 'shall turn') to the Lord, the veil is [by the very fact] (not as English Version, 'shall be') taken away." Exodus 34:34 is the allusion; not Exodus 34:30, 31, as ALFORD thinks. Whenever the Israelites turn to the Lord, who is the Spirit of the law, the veil is taken off their hearts in the presence of the Lord: as the literal veil was taken off by Moses in going before God: no longer resting on the dead letter, the veil, they by the Spirit commune with God and with the inner spirit of the Mosaic covenant (which answers to the glory of Moses' face unveiled in God's presence). 17. the Lord—Christ (vss. 14, 16; ch. 4:5). is that Spirit—is THE Spirit, viz., that Spirit spoken of in vs. 6, to the gospel, and has actually given place to that system, so that now in no part of the world is that law performed, even by the people who are attached to it and reject the gospel. The glory that excelleth. The gospel dispensation, giving supereminent displays of the justice, holiness, goodness, mercy, and majesty of God.

11. For if that which is done away. Here is another striking difference between the law and the gospel. The former is termed that which is "counterworked and abolished"; the latter, that which "continues," which is not for a particular time, place, and people, as the law was, but for all times, all places, and all people.

12. Seeing . . . we have such hope. Such glorious prospects as those blessings which the gospel sets before us. We use great plainness of speech. We speak not only with all confidence, but with all imaginable plainness.

13. And not as Moses. The splendor of Moses' countenance was so great that the Israelites could not bear to look upon his face, and therefore he was obliged to veil his face. This, it appears, he did typically, to represent the types and shadows by which the whole dispensation of which he was the minister was covered. So that the Israelites could not stedfastly look—could not then have the full view or discernment of that in which the Mosaic dispensation should issue and terminate.

14. But their minds were blinded. By resting in the letter, shutting their eyes against the light that was granted to them, they contracted a hardness or stupidity of heart. And the veil that was on the face of Moses, which prevented the glory of his face from shining out, may be considered as emblematical of the veil of darkness and ignorance that is on their hearts, and which hinders the glory of the gospel from shining in. In the reading of the old testament. Here is an evident allusion to the conduct of the Jews in their synagogues. When they read the law they cover the whole head with a veil, which they term the tallith, "veil," from talal, "to cover"; and this voluntary usage of theirs, the apostle tells us, is an emblem of the darkness of their hearts while they are employed even in sacred duties. Which veil is done away in Christ. It is only by acknowledging Christ that the darkness is removed, and the end and spiritual meaning of the law discerned.

16. When it shall turn to the Lord. When the Israelitish nation shall turn to the Lord Jesus, the veil shall be taken away; the true light shall shine, and they shall see all things clearly. There is an evident allusion here to the case of Moses, mentioned in Exod. xxxiv. 34. When he came from the Lord and spoke to the Israelites, he put the veil over his face; but when he returned to speak with the Lord, then he took off the veil. So when the Israelitish nation shall return to speak with and pray to the Lord Jesus, the veil of darkness and ignorance shall be taken away from their hearts; but never before that time. The words seem to imply: (1) That there will be a conversion of the Jews to Christianity; and (2) That this conversion will be en masse; that a time will come when the whole nation of the Jews, in every place, shall turn to Christ; and then the Gentiles and Jews make one fold, under one Shepherd and Bishop of all souls.

17. Now the Lord is that Spirit. In vv. 6 and 8 the word spirit evidently signifies the gospel; so called because it points out the spiritual nature and meaning of the law, because it produces spiritual effects, and because it is especially the dispensation of the Spirit of God. Here Jesus Christ is represented as that Spirit, because He is "the end of the law" for justification to everyone that believes; and because the residue of the Spirit is with Him, and He is the Dispenser of all its gifts, graces, and influences.

MATTHEW HENRY

The condition of those who believe the gospel is much more happy. They have liberty (v. 17).

They have light; for with open face we behold the glory of the Lord, v. 18.

It was the peculiar privilege of Moses for God to converse with him face to face; but now all true Christians see him with open face. This light and liberty are transforming (v. 18), till grace here be consummated in glory for ever.

CHAPTER 4

In this chapter his design is to vindicate their ministry from the accusation of false teachers. He tells them how they believed, and how they showed their value for their office as ministers of the gospel.

I. Their constancy and perseverance in their work are declared (v. 1). And this their steadfastness was owing to the mercy of God. The best men in the world would faint in their work, and under their burdens, if they did not receive mercy from God. Their sincerity in their work is avouched (v. 2). They had no base and wicked designs covered with fair and specious pretences of something that was good. Nor did they in their preaching handle the word of God deceitfully; but they used great plainness of speech.

They manifested the truth to every man's conscience, declaring nothing but what in their own conscience they believed to be true. And all this they did as in the sight of God, desirous thus to commend themselves to God, and to the consciences of men.

and here resumed after the parenthesis (vss. 7-16): Christ is the Spirit and "end" of the Old Testament, who giveth life to it, whereas "the letter killeth" (I Cor. 15:45; Rev. 19:10, end). where the Spirit of the Lord is—in a man's "heart", vs. 15; Rom. 8:9, 10). there is liberty—(John 8:36). "There," and there only. Such cease to be slaves to the letter, which they were while the veil was on their heart. They are free to serve God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus (Phil. 3:3): they have no longer the spirit of bondage, but of free sonship (Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:7). "Liberty" is opposed to the letter (of the legal ordinances), and to the veil, the badge of slavery: also to the fear which the Israelites felt in beholding Moses' glory unveiled (Exod. 34:30; I John 4:18). 18. But we all—Christians, as contrasted with the Jews who have a veil on their hearts, answering to Moses' veil on his face. He does not resume reference to ministers till ch. 4:1. with open face—Translate, "with unveiled face" (the veil being removed at conversion): contrasted with "hid" (ch. 4:3).

as in a glass—in a mirror, viz., the Gospel which reflects the glory of God and Christ (ch. 4: 4; I Cor. 13:12; Jas. 1:23, 25). are changed into the same image—viz., the image of Christ's glory, spiritually now (Rom. 8:29; I John 3:3); an earnest of the bodily change hereafter (Phil. 3:21). However many they be, believers all reflect the same image of Christ more or less: a proof of the truth of Christianity. from glory to glory—from one degree of glory to another. As Moses' face caught a reflection of God's glory from being in His presence, so believers are changed into His image by beholding Him. even as . . .—Just such a transformation "as" was to be expected from "the Lord the Spirit" (not as English Version, "the Spirit of the Lord") [ALFORD] (vs. 17): "who receives of the things of Christ, and shows them to us" (John 16:14; Rom. 8:10, 11). (Cf. as to hereafter, Ps. 17:15; Rev. 22:4.)

Vss. 1-18. HIS PREACHING IS OPEN AND SINCERE, THOUGH TO MANY THE GOSPEL IS HIDDEN; for he preaches Christ, not himself: the human vessel is frail that God may have the glory; yet, though frail, faith and the hope of future glory sustain him amidst the decay of the outward man. 1. Therefore—Greek, "For this cause": Because we have the liberty-giving Spirit of the Lord, and with unveiled face behold His glory (ch. 3:17, 18). seeing we have this ministry—"The ministration of the Spirit" (ch. 3:8, 9): the ministry of such a spiritual, liberty-giving Gospel: resuming ch. 3:6, 8. received mercy—from God, in having had this ministry conferred on us (ch. 3:5). The sense of "mercy" received from God, makes men active for God (I Tim. 1:11-13). we faint not—in boldness of speech and action, and patience in suffering (vss. 2, 8-16, etc.). 2. renounced—lit., "bid farewell to." of dishonesty—rather, "of shame." "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ" (Rom. 1:16). Shame would lead to hiding (vs. 3); whereas "we use great plainness of speech" (ch. 3:12; "by manifestation of the truth." Cf. ch. 3:3, "manifestly declared." He refers to the disingenuous artifices of "many" teachers at Corinth (ch. 2:17; 3:1; 11:13-15). handling . . . deceitfully—so "corrupt" or adulterate "the word of God" (ch. 2:17; cf. I Thess. 2:3, 4).

commending—recommending ourselves: recurring to ch. 3:1. to—to the verdict of. every man's conscience—(ch. 5:11). Not to men's carnal judgment, as those alluded to (ch. 3:1). in the sight of God—(ch. 2:17; Gal. 1: 10).

ADAM CLARKE

And where the Spirit of the Lord is. Wherever this gospel is received, there the Spirit of the Lord is given; and wherever that Spirit lives and works, there is liberty, not only from Jewish bondage, but from the slavery of sin—from its power, its guilt, and its pollution.

18. But we all, with open face. The Jews were not able to look on the face of Moses, the mediator of the old covenant, and therefore he was obliged to veil it. But all we Christians, with face uncovered, behold, as clearly as we can see our own natural face in a "mirror," the glorious promises and privileges of the gospel of Christ; and while we contemplate, we anticipate them by desire and hope, and apprehend them by faith, and are changed from the glory there represented to the enjoyment of the thing which is represented, even the glorious image—righteousness and true holiness—of the God of glory. As by the Spirit of the Lord. By the energy of that Spirit of Christ which gives life and being to all the promises of the gospel; and thus we are made partakers of the divine nature and escape all the corruptions that are in the world. This appears to me to be the general sense of this verse; its peculiar terms may be more particularly explained. The word katoptrizomenoi, which we translate beholding . . . in a glass, comes from kata, "against," and optomai, "I look"; and properly conveys the sense of looking into a mirror, or discerning by reflected light. Now as mirrors, among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans, were made of highly polished metal (see the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 12), it would often happen, especially in strong light, that the face would be greatly illuminated by this strongly reflected light; and to this circumstance the apostle seems here to allude. So by earnestly contemplating the gospel of Jesus and believing on Him who is its Author, the soul becomes illuminated with His divine splendor, for this sacred mirror reflects back on the believing soul the image of Him whose perfections it exhibits; and thus we see the glorious form after which our minds are to be fashioned. And by believing and receiving the influence of His Spirit our form is changed into the same image, which we behold there; and this is the image of God, lost by our fall, and now recovered and restored by Jesus Christ.

1. Seeing we have this ministry. The gospel, of which he gave that noble account which we read in the preceding chapter. We faint not. We meet with many tribulations, but are supported in and through all by the grace of the gospel. Instead of ouk ekkakoumen, we faint not, enkakoumen, "we act not wickedly," is the reading of some MSS. Wakefield thinks it the genuine reading; it certainly makes very good sense with what goes before and what follows. If we follow this reading the whole verse may be read thus: "Wherefore, as we have obtained mercy, or been graciously entrusted, with this ministry, we do not act wickedly, but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty."

2. But have renounced. We have disclaimed the hidden things of dishonesty; "the hidden things of shame." Not walking in craftiness. In "subtlety" and "clever cunning," as the false teachers did. Nor handling the word of God deceitfully. Not using the doctrines of the gospel to serve any secular or carnal purpose; not explaining away their force so as to palliate or excuse sin; not generalizing its precepts so as to excuse many in particular circumstances from obedience, especially in that which most crossed their inclinations. There were deceitful handlers of this kind in Corinth, and there are many of them still in the garb of Christian ministers; persons who disguise that part of their creed which, though they believe it is of God, would make them unpopular; affecting moderation in order to procure a larger audience and more extensive support; not attacking prevalent and popular vices; calling dissipation of mind "relaxation," and worldly and carnal pleasures "innocent amusements." Commending ourselves to every man's conscience. Speaking so that every man's conscience shall bear its testimony that we proclaim the truth of God. This is one characteristic of divine truth: even

II. An objection is obviated. "How then does it come to pass, that the gospel is hid, as to some who hear it?" The true reasons of this are, 1. Those are lost souls to whom the gospel is hid, v. 3. 2. The god of this world hath blinded their minds, v. 4. They are under the influence of the devil, who is here called the god of this world, because of the great interest he has in this world. And as he is the prince of darkness, and ruler of the darkness of this world, so he darkens the understandings of men. Christ's design by his gospel is to make a glorious discovery of God to the minds of men. The design of the devil is to keep men in ignorance.

III. A proof of their integrity is given, v. 5. They made it their business to preach Christ and not themselves. But they preached Christ Jesus the Lord, as being Christ's servants. All the lines of Christian doctrine centre in Christ; and in preaching Christ we preach all we should preach. Ministers should not be of proud spirits who are servants to the souls of men: yet, at the same time, they must avoid becoming the servants of the humours or the lusts of men. Why they should preach Christ. For by gospel light we have the knowledge of the glory of God, which shines in the face of Jesus Christ, v. 6. It is a pleasant thing for the eye to behold the sun in the firmament; but it is more pleasant and profitable when the gospel shines in the heart.

Why they should not preach themselves: because they were but earthen vessels. The ministers of the gospel are weak and frail creatures; they are mortal, and soon broken in pieces. And God has so ordered it that the weaker the vessels are the stronger his power may appear to be, that the treasure itself should be valued the more.

Verses 8–18

I. How their sufferings, and patience under them, are declared, v. 8–12. "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed," v. 8. We can see help in God, and help from God.

3. But if—Yea, even if (as I grant is the case). hid—rather (in reference to ch. 3:13-18), "veiled." "Hid" (Greek, Col. 3:3) is said of that withdrawn from view altogether. "Veiled," of a thing within reach of the eye, but covered over so as not to be seen. So it was in the case of Moses' face. to them—in the case only of them: for in itself the Gospel is quite plain. that are lost—rather, "that are perishing" (I Cor. 1:18). So the same cloud that was "light" to the people of God, was "darkness" to the Egyptian foes of God (Exod. 14:20). 4. In whom—Translate, "In whose case." god of this world—The worldly make him their God (Phil. 3:19). He is, in fact, the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that ruleth in the children of disobedience" (Eph. 2:2). minds—"understandings": "mental perceptions," as in ch. 3:14. them which believe not—the same as "them that are lost" (or "are perishing"). Cf. II Thessalonians 2:10-12. SOUTH quaintly says, "when the malefactor's eyes are covered, he is not far from his execution" (Esther 7:8). Those perishing unbelievers are not merely veiled, but blinded (ch. 3:14, 15): Greek, not "blinded," but "hardened." light of the glorious gospel of Christ—Translate, "The illumination (enlightening: the propagation from those already enlightened, to others of the light) of the Gospel of the glory of Christ." "The glory of Christ" is not a mere quality (as "glorious" would express) of the Gospel; it is its very essence and subject matter. image of God—implying identity of nature and essence (John 1:18; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3). He who desires to see "the glory of God," may see it "in the face of Jesus Christ" (vs. 6; I Tim. 6:14-16). Paul here recurs to ch. 3:18. Christ is "the image of God," into which "same image" we, looking on it in the mirror of the Gospel, are changed by the Spirit; but this image is not visible to those blinded by Satan [ALFORD]. 5. For—Their blindness is not our fault, as if we had selfseeking aims in our preaching. preach . . . Christ . . . the Lord—rather, "Christ as Lord," and ourselves as your servants. . . . "Lord," or Master, is the correlative term to "servants." 6. For—proof that we are true servants of Jesus unto you. commanded the light—Greek, "By speaking the word, commanded light" (Gen. 1:3). hath shined—rather, as Greek, "is He who shined." (It is God) who commanded light, etc., that shined, etc., (Job 37:15); Himself our Light and Sun, as well as the Creator of light (Mal. 4:2; John 8:12). The physical world answers to the spiritual. in our hearts—in themselves dark. to give the light—i.e., to propagate to others the light, etc., which is in us (cf. Note, vs. 4). the glory of God—answering to "the glory of Christ" (Note, vs. 4). in the face of Jesus Christ—Some of the oldest MSS. retain "Jesus." Others omit it. Christ is the manifestation of the glory of God, as His image (John 14:9). The allusion is still to the brightness on Moses' "face." The only true and full manifestation of God's brightness and glory is "in the face of Jesus" (Heb. 1:3). 7. "Lest any should say, How then is it that we continue to enjoy such unspeakable glory in a mortal body? Paul replies, this very fact is one of the most marvellous proofs of God's power, that an earthen vessel could bear such splendor and keep such a treasure" [CHRYSOSTOM, Homilies, 8. 496, A.]. The treasure or "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God." The fragile "earthen vessel" is the body, the "outward man" (vs. 16; cf. vs. 10), liable to afflictions and death. So the light in Gideon's pitchers, the type (Judg. 7:16-20, 22). The ancients often kept their treasures in jars or vessels of earthenware. "There are earthen vessels which yet may be clean; whereas a golden vessel may be filthy" [BENGEL]. that the excellency of the power . . .—that the power of the ministry (the Holy Spirit), in respect to its surpassing "excellency," exhibited in winning souls (I Cor. 2:4) and in sustaining us ministers, might be ascribed solely to God, we being weak as earthen vessels. God often allows the vessel to be chipped and broken, that the excellency of the treasure contained, and of the power which that treasure has, may be all His (vss. 10, 11; John 3:30). may be of God . . . not of us—rather, as Greek, "may be God's (may be seen and be thankfully (vs. 15) acknowledged to belong to God), and not (to come) from us." The power not merely comes from God, but belongs to Him continually, and is to be ascribed to him. 8. Greek, "BEING hard pressed, yet not inextricably straitened; reduced to inextricable straits" (nominative to "we have,' vs. 7). on every side—Greek, "in every respect" (cf. vs. 10, "always"; ch. 7:5). This verse expresses inward distresses; next verse, outward distresses (ch. 7:5). "Without were fightings; within were fears." The first clause in each member of the series of conevery man's conscience will acknowledge it, though it speak decidedly against his own practices.

3. But if our gospel be hid. "Veiled"; he refers to the subject that he had treated so particularly in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. If there be a veil on the gospel, it is only to the willfully blind; and if any man's heart be veiled that hears this gospel, it is a proof that he is among the lost. The word does not necessarily imply those that will perish eternally, but is a common epithet to point out a man without the gospel and without God in the world. Christ commands His disciples in preaching the gospel to go "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," Matt. x. 6; for himself says, Matt. xviii. 11 and Luke xix. 10: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." The word more properly signifies, not those who are lost, but those who "are perishing"; and will perish, if not sought and saved.

5. For we preach not ourselves. We proclaim neither our own wisdom nor our own power; we have nothing but what we have received; we do not wish to establish our own authority nor to procure our own emolument. But Christ Jesus the Lord. We proclaim the Author of this glorious gospel as Christ, the same as hammashiach, the Messiah, the "Anointed One"; Him of whom the prophets wrote; and who is the Expectation, as He is the Glory, of Israel. We proclaim Him as Jesus, Yehoshua, the "Saviour" and "Deliverer," who saves men from their sins. And further, we proclaim this Jesus, the Messiah, to be the Lord, the great Ruler who has all power in heaven and earth, who made and governs the world, and who can save to the uttermost all that come to God through Him. And ourselves your servants. Laboring as fervently and as faithfully for your eternal interests as your most trusty slaves can do for your secular welfare. And we do this for Christ's sake. For although we by our labor show ourselves to be your servants, yea, your "slaves," yet it is a voluntary service; and we are neither employed by you nor receive our wages from you. We belong to Jesus; and are your servants on His account, and by His order.

6. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness. The apostle refers here to Gen. i. 3. For when God created the heavens and the earth, "darkness was upon the face of the deep. . . . And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." Thus He caused the light to shine out of darkness. Hath shined in our hearts. He has given our hearts the glorious light of the gospel, as He has given the world the glorious light of the sun. It is in the "appearance" and "person" of Jesus Christ that these blessings are communicated to us.

7. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels. The original signifies more literally vessels made of shells, which are very brittle. The word ostracon not only signifies a shell, or vessel made of shell, but also earthen vessels which have been burnt in the kiln, and earthen vessels or pottery in general.

That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. God keeps us continually dependent upon himself. The good therefore that is done is so evidently from the power of God that none can pretend to share the glory with Him.

8. We are troubled on every side. We have already seen, in the notes on the ninth chapter of the preceding Epistle, that Paul has made several allusions to those public games which were celebrated every fifth year at the Isthmus of Corinth. In this and the following three verses the apostle makes allusion to the contests at those games, and the terms which he employs in

"We are perplexed, yet not in despair (v. 8), knowing that God is able to support us, and to deliver us. We are persecuted; yet not forsaken of God," v. 9. "We are cast down; yet we are not destroyed," v. 9. Still they were preserved, and kept their heads above water. Whatever condition the children of God may be in, in this world they have a "but not" to comfort themselves with. The apostle speaks of their sufferings as a counterpart of the sufferings of Christ, v. 10.

Thus did they bear about the dying of the Lord Jesus in their body, that the life of Jesus might also be made manifest, though they were always delivered to death (v. 11), and though death worked in them (v. 12). Death worketh in us; but life in you, v. 12.

II. What it was that kept them from sinking and fainting under their sufferings, v. 13–18.

1. Faith kept them from fainting (v. 13). The grace of faith is a sovereign cordial against fainting-fits in troublous times. As the apostle had David's example to imitate, who said (Ps. cxvi. 10), I have believed, and therefore have I spoken, so he leaves us his example to imitate: We also believe, says he, and therefore speak.

2. Hope of the resurrection kept them from sinking, v. 14. Their hope was firm, being well grounded, that he who raised up Christ the head will also raise up all his members. What reason has a good Christian to fear death, that dies in hope of a joyful resurrection?

3. The consideration of the benefit of the church kept them from fainting, v. 15. We may well afford to bear sufferings patiently when we see others are the better for them.

trasted participles, implies the earthiness of the vessels; the second clause, the excellency of the power. perplexed, but not in despair—Greek, "not utterly perplexed." As perplexity refers to the future, so "troubled" or "hard pressed" refers to the present. 9. not forsaken—by God and man. Jesus was forsaken by both; so much do His sufferings exceed those of His people (Matt. 27:46). cast down—or "struck down"; not only "persecuted," i.e., chased as a deer or bird (I Sam. 26:20), but actually struck down as with a dart in the chase (Heb. 11:35-38). The Greek "always" in this verse means, "throughout the whole time"; in vs. 11 the Greek is different, and means, "at every time," "in every case when the occasion occurs." bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus—i.e., having my body exposed to being put to death in the cause of Jesus (the oldest MSS. omit "the Lord"), and having in it the marks of such sufferings, I thus bear about wheresoever I go, an image of the suffering Saviour in my own person (vs. 11; ch. 1:5; cf. I Cor. 15:31). Doubtless, Paul was exposed to more dangers than are recorded in Acts (cf. ch. 7:5; 11:26). The Greek for "the dying" is lit., "the being made a corpse", such Paul regarded his body, yet a corpse which shares in the life-giving power of Christ's resurrection, as it has shared in His dying and death. that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body—rather, "may be." The name "Jesus," by itself is often repeated here as Paul seems, amidst sufferings, peculiarly to have felt its sweetness. In vs. 11 the same words occur with the variation, "in our mortal flesh." The fact of a dying, corpse-like body being sustained amidst such trials, manifests that "the (resurrection) life also," as well as the dying, "of Jesus," exerts its power in us. I thus bear about in my own person an image of the risen and living, as well as of the suffering, Saviour. The "our" is added here to "body," though not in the beginning of the verse. "For the body is ours not so much in death, as in life" [BENGEL]. 11. we which live—in the power of Christ's "life" manifested in us, in our whole man, body as well as spirit (Rom. 8:10, 11; Note, vs. 10; cf. ch. 5:15). Paul regards his preservation amidst so many exposures to "death," by which Stephen and James were cut off, as a standing miracle (ch. 11:23). delivered unto—not by chance; by the ordering of Providence, who shows "the excellency of His power" (vs. 7), in delivering unto DEATH His living saints, that He may manifest LIFE also in their dying flesh. "Flesh," the very element of decay (not merely their "body"), is by Him made to manifest life. 12. The "death" of Christ manifested in the continual "perishing of our outward man" (vs. 16), works peculiarly in us, and is the means of working spiritual "life" in you. The life whereof we witness in our bodily dying, extends beyond ourselves, and is brought by our very dying to you. 13. Translate as Greek; "BUT having . . ." i.e., not withstanding the trials just mentioned, we having. . . the same spirit of faith, according as it . . .—Cf. Romans 8:15, on the usage of "spirit of . . ." The Holy Spirit acting on our spirit. Though "death worketh in us, and life in you" (vs. 12), yet as we have the same spirit of faith as you, we therefore [believingly] look for the same immortal life as you [ESTIUS], and speak as we believe. ALFORD not so well translates, "The same . . . faith with that described in the Scriptures" (Ps. 116:10). The balance of the sentence requires the parallelism to be this, "According to that which is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak," viz., without fear, amidst "afflictions" and "deaths" (vs. 17). 14. Knowing—by faith (ch. 5:1). shall raise up us also—at the resurrection (I Cor. 6:13, 14). by Jesus—The oldest MSS. have "with Jesus." present us—vividly picturing the scene before the eyes (Jude 24). with you—(ch. 1:14; I Thess. 2:19, 20; 3:13). 15. For—Confirming his assertion "with you" (vs. 14), and "life . . . worketh in you" (vs. 12). all things—whether the afflictions and labors of us ministers (vss. 8-11), or your prosperity (vs. 12; I Cor. 3:21, 22; 4:8-13). for your sakes—(II Tim. 2:10). abundant grace . . .—rather, "That grace (the grace which preserves us in trials and works life in you), being made the greater (multiplied), by means of the greater number (of its recipients), may cause the thanksgiving to abound to . . ." [CHRYSOSTOM] (ch. 1:11; 9:11, 12). The Greek is susceptible also of this translation, "That grace, being made the greater (multiplied) on account of the thanksgiving of the greater number (for grace already received), may abound (abundantly redound) to. . ." Thus the Greek for "abound" has not to be taken in an active sense, but in its ordinary neuter sense, and so the other Greek words. Thanksgiving invites more these verses cannot be understood but in reference to those agonistical exercises to which he alludes. Dr. Hammond has explained the whole on this ground, and I shall here borrow his help. There are four pairs of expressions taken from the customs of the agones: (1) Troubled on every side, yet not distressed. (2) Perplexed, but not in despair. (3) Persecuted, but not forsaken. (4) Cast down, but not destroyed. Three of these pairs belong to the customs of wrestling; the fourth, to that of running in the race. Troubled on every side. The word thlibesthai belongs clearly to wrestling. Perplexed, but not in despair. The word "to be in perplexity" is fit for the wrestler, who being puzzled by his antagonist's skill knows not what to do.

9. Persecuted, but not forsaken. The pursued (diokomenoi) is peculiar to the race, when one being foremost others pursue, and get up close after him, endeavoring to outstrip him, but cannot succeed. This is the meaning of not "outstripped," or "outgone," as the word implies. Cast down, but not destroyed. This also belongs to wrestlers, where he that throws the other first is conqueror. And then, the being not destroyed signifies that, although they were "thrown down"—cast into troubles and difficulties—yet they rose again, and surmounted them all.

10. Always bearing about in the body. Being every moment in danger of losing our lives in the cause of truth, as Jesus Christ was. There is probably an allusion here to the marks, wounds, and bruises which the contenders in those games got, and continued to carry throughout life.

11. For we which live. And yet, although we are preserved alive, we are in such continual dangers that we carry our life in our hands, and are constantly in the spirit of sacrifice. But the life, the preserving power, of Christ is manifest in our continual support.

12. Death worketh in us. We apostles are in continual danger, and live a dying life, while you who have received this gospel from us are in no danger.

13. We having the same spirit of faith. As David had when he wrote Ps. cxvi. 10: "I believed, therefore have I spoken." We also believe that we shall receive the fulfillment of all God's promises; and being fully convinced of the truth of the Christian religion, we speak and testify that our deliverance is from God.

14. Knowing that he which raised up the Lord. And though we shall at last seal this truth with our blood, we fear not, being persuaded that as the body of Christ was raised from the dead by the power of the Father, so shall our bodies be raised, and that we shall have an eternal life with Him in glory.

15. For all things are for your sakes. We proclaim all these truths and bear all these sufferings for your sakes. That the abundant grace. The "abounding benefit"—the copious outpouring of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, by which you have been favored and enriched, may through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God; i.e., that the gratitude of the multitudes which have been converted may keep pace with the blessings which they have received, and "abound," as these blessings have abounded.

4. The thoughts of the advantage their souls would reap kept them from fainting, v. 16. It is our happiness if when the body is sick the soul is vigorous. The best of men have need of further renewing of the inward man, even day by day. As in wicked men things grow every day worse and worse, so in godly men they grow better and better.

5. The prospect of eternal life and happiness kept them from fainting. The apostle and his fellow-sufferers saw their afflictions working towards heaven, and that they would end at last (v. 17), whereupon they weighed things aright in the balance of the sanctuary. They found afflictions to be light, and the glory of heaven to be a far more exceeding weight. That which sense was ready to pronounce heavy and long, faith perceived to be light and short, and but for a moment. Their faith enabled them to make this right judgment of things, v. 18. Unseen things are eternal, seen things but temporal. By faith we not only discern these things, and the great difference between them, but by this also we take our aim at unseen things.

abundant grace (II Chron. 20:19-22; Ps. 18:3; 50:23). 16. we faint not—notwithstanding our sufferings. Resuming vs. 1. outward man—the body, the flesh. perish—"is wearing away"; "is wasted away" by afflictions. inward man—our spiritual and true being, the "life" which even in our mortal bodies (vs. 11) "manifests the life of Jesus." is renewed—"is being renewed," viz., with fresh "grace" (vs. 15), and "faith" (vs. 13), and hope (vss. 17, 18). 17. which is but for a moment—"Our PRESENT light (burden of) affliction" (so the Greek; cf. Matt. 11:30), [ALFORD]. Cf. "now for a season . . . in heaviness" (I Pet. 1:6). The contrast, however, between this and the "ETERNAL weight of glory" requires, I think, the translation, "Which is but for the present passing moment." So WAHL. "The lightness of affliction" (he does not express "burden" after "light"; the Greek is "the light of affliction") contrasts beautifully with the "weight of the glory." worketh—rather, "worketh out." a far more exceeding and—rather, "in a surpassing and still more surpassing manner" [ALFORD]; "more and more exceedingly" [ELLICOTT, TRENCH, and others]. Greek, "in excess and to excess." The glory exceeds beyond all measure the affliction. 18. look not at—as our aim. things . . . seen—"earthly things" (Phil. 3:19). We mind not the things seen, whether affliction or refreshment come, so as to be seduced by the latter, or deterred by the former [CHRYSOSTOM]. things . . . not seen—not "the invisible things" of Romans 1:20, but the things which, though not seen now, shall be so hereafter. temporal—rather, "for a time"; in contrast to eternal. English Version uses "temporal" for temporary. The Greek is rightly translated in the similar passage, "the pleasures of sin for a season."

ADAM CLARKE

16. For which cause we faint not. See on v. 1. Here we have the same various reading, "We do no wickedness"; and it is supported by a member of MSS. The common reading, faint not, appears to agree best with the apostle's meaning. But though our outward man. That is, our bodies, that part of us that can be seen, heard, and felt. Perish—be slowly consumed by continual trials and afflictions, and be martyred at last. Yet the inward man. Our soul, that which cannot be felt or seen by others, is renewed, is "revived," and receives a daily increase of light and life from God.

17. For our light affliction. "It is everywhere visible what influence Paul's Hebrew had on his Greek: cabad signifies to be 'heavy,' and to be 'glorious'; the apostle in his Greek unites these two significations, and says, weight of glory."

18. While we look not at the things which are seen. While we "aim not" at the things which are seen, do not make them our object, are not striving to obtain them; for they are not worthy the pursuit of an immortal spirit, because they are seen, they are "temporary," they are to have a short duration. But the things which we make our scope and aim are not seen; they are spiritual, and therefore invisible to the eye of the body; and besides, they are eternal, things that are permanent, that can have no end. Afflictions may be means of preparing us for glory if, during them, we receive grace to save the soul; but afflictions of themselves have no spiritual nor saving tendency. On the contrary, they sour the unregenerated mind and cause murmurings against the dispensations of divine providence.

CHAPTER 5

I. He mentions their expectation, and desire, and assurance, of eternal happiness, v. 1–5.

1. The believer's expectation of eternal happiness after death, v. 1. "We know that we have a building of God, we have a firm expectation of the future felicity." (1) What heaven is in the eye and hope of a believer. He looks upon it as a house, or habitation, our Father's house, and our everlasting home. It is a house in the heavens. It is a building of God. It is eternal in the heavens, not like the earthly tabernacles, the poor cottages of clay in which our souls now dwell.

(2) When it is expected this happiness shall be enjoyed—so soon as our house of this earthly tabernacle is dissolved. Then comes the house not made with hands. Such as have walked with God here shall dwell with God for ever.

VSS. 1-21. THE HOPE (ch. 4:17, 18) OF ETERNAL GLORY IN THE RESURRECTION BODY. Hence arises his ambition to be accepted at the Lord's coming judgment. Hence, too, his endeavor to deal openly with men, as with God, in preaching; thus giving the Corinthians whereof to boast concerning him against his adversaries. His constraining motive is the transforming love of Christ, by whom God has wrought reconciliation between Himself and men, and has committed to the apostle the ministry of reconciliation. 1. For—Assigning the reason for the statement (ch. 4:17), that affliction leads to exceeding glory. we know—assuredly (ch. 4:14; Job 19:25). if—For all shall not die; many shall be "changed" without "dissolution" (I Cor. 15:51-53). If this daily delivering unto death (ch. 3:11) should end in actual death. earthly—not the same as earthy (I Cor. 15:47). It stands in contrast to "in the heavens." house of this tabernacle—rather, "house of the tabernacle." "House" expresses more permanency than belongs to the body; therefore the qualification, "of the tabernacle" (implying that it is shifting, not stationary), is added (cf. Job 4:19; II Pet. 1:13, 14). It thus answers to the tabernacle in the wilderness. Its wooden frame and curtains wore out in course of time when Israel dwelt in Canaan, and a fixed temple was substituted for it. The temple and the tabernacle in all essentials were one; there was the same ark, the same cloud of glory. Such is the relation between the "earthly" body and the resurrection body. The Holy Spirit is enshrined in the believer's body as in a sanctuary (I Cor. 3:16). As the ark went first in taking down the wilderness tabernacle, so the soul (which like the ark is sprinkled with blood of atonement, and is the sacred deposit in the inmost shrine, II Tim. 1:12) in the dissolution of the body; next the coverings were removed, answering to the flesh; lastly, the framework and boards, answering to the bones, which are last to give way (Num. 4). Paul, as a tentmaker, uses an image taken from his trade (Acts 18:3). dissolved—a mild word for death, in the case of believers. we have—in assured prospect of possession, as certain as if it were in our hands, laid up "in the heavens" for us. The tense is present (cf. John 3:36; 6:47, "hath"). a building of God—rather "from God." A solid building, not a temporary tabernacle or tent. "Our" body stands in contrast to "from God." For though our present body be also from God, yet it is not fresh and perfect from His hands, as our resurrection body shall be. not made with hands—contrasted with houses erected by man's hands (I Cor. 15:44-49). So Christ's body is designated, as contrasted with the tabernacle reared by Moses (Mark 14:58; Heb. 9:11). This "house" can only be the resurrection

1. If our earthly house of this tabernacle. By earthly house the apostle most evidently means the body in which the soul is represented as dwelling or sojourning for a time, and from which it is to be liberated at death. The apostle also alludes here to the ancient Jewish Tabernacle, which, on all removals of the congregation, was dissolved and taken in pieces; and the ark of the covenant, covered with its own curtains, was carried by itself; and when they came to the place of rest, then the dissolved parts of the Tabernacle were put together as before.

When we consider this simile in connection with the doctrine of the resurrection, then we shall see that he intends to convey the following meaning: that as the Tabernacle was taken down in order to be again put together, so the body is to be dissolved, in order to be reedified; that as the ark of the covenant subsisted by itself, while the Tabernacle was down, so can the soul when separated from the body; that as the ark had then its own veil for its covering, Exod. xl. 21, so the soul is to have some vehicle in which it shall subsist till it receives its body at the resurrection.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. The believer's earnest desire after this future blessedness—we groan. (1) A groaning of sorrow under a heavy load, v. 2. We that are in this tabernacle groan, being burdened, v. 4. Believers groan because burdened with a body of sin. (2) There is a groaning of desire after the happiness of another life; and thus believers groan. The believer is willing rather to be absent from the body, that he may be present with the Lord (v. 8), to put off these rags of mortality that he may put on the robes of glory. Gracious souls are not found naked in the other world; no, they are clothed with garments of praise.

3. The believer's assurance of this future blessedness, from the experience of the grace of God, making him meet for this blessedness, v. 5. All who are designed for heaven hereafter are wrought or prepared for heaven while they are here; the stones of that spiritual building above are squared and fashioned here below. No hand less than the hand of God can work us for this thing. The earnest of the Spirit gave them this assurance.

II. An inference for the comfort of believers in their present state in this world, v. 6–8. What their present state is: they are absent from the Lord (v. 6).

God is with us here, yet we are not with him as we hope to be: For we walk by faith, not by sight, v. 7. Faith is for this world, and sight is reserved for the other world. How comfortable and courageous we ought to be in the hour of death (v. 6) and again (v. 8). They should be willing rather to die than live, when it is the will of God that they should put off this tabernacle, to close their eyes to all things in this world, and open them in a world of glory. Faith will be turned into sight.

body, in contrast to the "earthly house of the tabernacle," our present body. The intermediate state is not directly taken into account. A comma should separate "eternal," and "in the heavens." 2. For in this—Greek, "For also in this"; "herein" (ch. 8: 10). ALFORD takes it, "in this" tabernacle. Verse 4, which seems parallel, favors this. But the parallelism is sufficiently exact by making "in this we groan" refer generally to what was just said (vs. 1), viz., that we cannot obtain our "house in the heavens" except our "earthly tabernacle" be first dissolved by death. we groan (Rom. 8:23) under the body's weaknesses now and liability to death. earnestly desiring to be clothed upon—translate, "earnestly longing to have ourselves clothed upon . . .," viz., by being found alive at Christ's coming, and so to escape dissolution by death (vss. 1, 4), and to have our heavenly body put on over the earthly. The groans of the saints prove the existence of the longing desire for the heavenly glory, a desire which cannot be planted by God within us in vain, as doomed to disappointment. our house—different Greek from that in vs. 1; translate, "our habitation," "our domicile"; it has a more distinct reference to the inhabitant than the general term "house" (vs. 1) [BENGEL]. from heaven—This domicile is "from heaven" in its origin, and is to be brought to us by the Lord at His coming again "from heaven" (I Thess. 4:16). Therefore this "habitation" or "domicile" is not heaven itself. 3. If so be . . .—Our "desire" holds good, should the Lord's coming find us alive. Translate, "If so be that having ourselves clothed (with our natural body, cf. vs. 4) we shall not be found naked" (stripped of our present body). 4. For—resuming vs. 2. burdened; not for that—rather, "in that we desire not to have ourselves unclothed (of our present body), but clothed upon" (with our heavenly body). that mortality . . .—rather, "that what is mortal (our mortal part) may be swallowed up of (absorbed and transformed into) life." Believers shrink from, not the consequences, but the mere act of dying; especially as believing in the possibility of their being found alive at the Lord's coming (I Thess. 4:15), and so of having their mortal body absorbed into the immortal without death. Faith does not divest us of all natural feeling, but subordinates it to higher feeling. Scripture gives no sanction to the contempt for the body expressed by philosophers. 5. wrought us—framed us by redemption, justification, and sanctification. for the selfsame thing—"unto" it; viz., unto what is mortal of us being swallowed up in life (vs. 4). who also—The oldest MSS. omit "also." earnest of the Spirit—(Note, ch. 1:22). It is the Spirit (as "the first fruits") who creates in us the groaning desire for our coming deliverance and glory (Rom. 8:23). 6. Translate as Greek, "Being therefore always confident and knowing . . . ." He had intended to have made the verb to this nominative, "we are willing" (rather, "well content"), but digressing on the word "confident" (vss. 6, 7), he resumes the word in a different form, viz., as an assertion: "We are confident and well content." "Being confident . . . , we are confident" may be the Hebraic idiom of emphasis; as Acts 7:34, Greek, "Having seen, I have seen," i.e., I have surely seen. always—under all trials. BENGEL makes the contrast between "always confident" and "confident" especially at the prospect of being "absent from the body." We are confident as well at all times, as also most of all in the hope of a blessed departure. whilst . . . at home . . . absent—Translate as Greek, "While we sojourn in our home in the body, we are away from our home in the Lord." The image from a "house" is retained (cf. Phil. 3:20; Heb. 11: 13-16; 13:14). 7. we walk—in our Christian course here on earth. not by sight—Greek, "not by appearance." Our life is governed by faith in our immortal hope; not by the outward specious appearance of present things [TITTM. Synonyms]. Cf. "apparently," LXX, "by appearance," Numbers 12:8. WAHL supports English Version. Ch. 4:18 also confirms it (cf. Rom. 8:24; I Cor. 13:12, 13). God has appointed in this life faith for our great duty, and in the next, vision for our reward [SOUTH] (I Pet. 1:8). 8. willing—lit., "well content." Translate also, "To go (lit., migrate) from our home in the body, and to come to our home with the Lord." We should prefer to be found alive at the Lord's coming, and to be clothed upon with our heavenly body (vss. 2-4). But feeling, as we do, the sojourn in the body to be a separation from our true home "with the Lord," we prefer even dissolution by death, so that in the intermediate disembodied state we may go to be "with the Lord" (Phil. 1:23). "To be with Christ" (the disembodied state) is distinguished from Christ's coming to take us to be with

2. For in this we groan. While in this state and in this body, we are encompassed with many infirmities and exposed to many trials.

When the apostle says that they earnestly desired to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, he certainly means that the great concern of all the genuine followers of God was to be fully prepared to enjoy the beatific vision of their Maker and Redeemer.

3. If so be that being clothed. That is, fully prepared in this life for the glory of God; we shall not be found naked. Destitute in that future state of that divine image which shall render us capable of enjoying an endless glory.

4. For we that are in this tabernacle. We who are in this state of trial and difficulty do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed. We do not desire death; nor to die, even with the full prospect of eternal glory before our eyes, an hour before that time which God in His wisdom has assigned. But clothed upon. To have the fullest preparation for eternal glory. That mortality might be swallowed up of life. Being fully prepared for the eternal state, we shall scarcely be said to die, all that is mortal being absorbed and annihilated by immortality and glory.

5. Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing. God has given us our being and our body for this very purpose, that both might be made immortal and both be glorified together. Or God himself has given us this insatiable hungering and thirsting after righteousness and immortality.

6. We are always confident. We are always "full of courage"; we never despond; we know where our help lies; and, having the earnest of the Spirit, we have the full assurance of hope. Whilst we are at home in the body. The original words in this sentence are very emphatic: endemein signifies to "dwell among one's own people"; ekdemein, to "be a sojourner among a strange people." Heaven is the home of every genuine Christian, and is claimed by them as such; see Phil. i. 23. Yet while here below, the body is the proper home of the soul. We see plainly that the apostle gives no intimation of an intermediate state between being at home in the body and being present with the Lord. There is not the slightest intimation here that the soul sleeps.

7. For we walk by faith. While we are in the present state faith supplies the place of direct vision. In the future world we shall have sight.

8. We are confident. We are "of good courage," notwithstanding our many difficulties; because we have this earnest of the Spirit, and the unfailing testimony of God. And notwithstanding this, we are willing rather to be absent from the body—we certainly prefer a state of glory to a state of suffering, and the enjoyment of the beatific vision to even the anticipation of it by faith and hope; but, as Christians, we cannot desire to die before our time.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. An inference to quicken himself and others to duty, v. 9–11. Well-grounded hopes of heaven will be far from giving the least encouragement to sloth, v. 9. We are ambitious. The apostle was thus ambitious to be accepted of him, the Lord (v. 9). It was the summit of ambition. Further quickening motives from the consideration of the judgment to come, v. 10, 11. The certainty of this judgment, for we must appear; the universality of it, for we must all appear; the great Judge before whose judgment-seat we must appear, the Lord Jesus Christ; the recompence to be then received, for things done in the body.

The apostle calls this awful judgment the terror of the Lord (v. 11), and was excited to persuade men to repent, and live a holy life, that, when Christ shall appear terribly, they may appear before him comfortably.

I. The apostle makes an apology for seeming to commend himself and his fellow-labourers (v. 13). The true reason was this, to put an argument in their mouths wherewith to answer his accusers.

II. He gives good reasons for their great zeal and diligence. The apostle tells them, 1. It was for the glory of God, and the good of the church, that he was thus zealous and industrious, v. 13. 2. The love of Christ constrained them, v. 14. Love has a constraining virtue to excite ministers and private Christians in their duty. Our love to Christ will have this virtue; and Christ's love to us will have this effect upon us.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Him in soul and body (I Thess. 4:14-17, "with the Lord"). Perhaps the disembodied spirits of believers have fulness of communion with Christ unseen; but not the mutual recognition of one another, until clothed with their visible bodies at the resurrection (cf. I Thess. 4:13-17), when they shall with joy recognize Christ's image in each other perfect. 9. Wherefore—with such a sure "confidence" of being blessed, whether we die before, or be found alive at Christ's coming. we labour—lit., "make it our ambition"; the only lawful ambition. whether present or absent—whether we be found at His coming present in the body, or absent from it. accepted—Greek, "well-pleasing." 10. appear—rather, "be made manifest," viz., in our true character. So "appear," Greek, "be manifested" (Col. 3:4; cf. I Cor. 4:5). We are at all times, even now, manifest to God; then we shall be so to the assembled intelligent universe and to ourselves: for the judgment shall be not only in order to assign the everlasting portion to each, but to vindicate God's righteousness, so that it shall be manifest to all His creatures, and even to the conscience of the sinner himself. receive—His reward of grace proportioned to "the things done . . ." (ch. 9:6-9; II John 8). Though salvation be of grace purely, independent of works, the saved may have a greater or less reward, according as he lives to, and labors for, Christ more or less. Hence there is scope for the holy "ambition" (Note, vs. 9; Heb. 6:10). This verse guards against the Corinthians supposing that all share in the house . . . "from heaven" (vss. 1, 2). There shall be a searching judgment which shall sever the bad from the good, according to their respective deeds, the motive of the deeds being taken into account, not the mere external act; faith and love to God are the sole motives recognized by God as sound and good (Matt. 12:36, 37; 25:35-45), done in his body—The Greek may be, "by the instrumentality of the body"; but English Version is legitimate (cf. Greek, Rom. 2:27). Justice requires that substantially the same body which has been the instrument of the unbelievers' sin, should be the object of punishment. A proof of the essential identity of the natural and the resurrection body. 11. terror of the Lord—the coming judgment, so full of terrors to unbelievers [ESTIUS]. ELLICOTT and ALFORD, after GROTIUS and BENGEL, translate, "The fear of the Lord" (ch. 7:1; Eccl. 12:13; Acts 9:31; Rom. 3:18; Eph. 5:21). persuade—Ministers should use the terrors of the Lord to persuade men, not to rouse their enmity (Jude 23). BENGEL, ESTIUS, and ALFORD explain: "Persuade men" (by our whole lives, vs. 13), viz., of our integrity as ministers. But this would have been expressed after "persuade," had it been the sense. The connection seems as follows: He had been accused of seeking to please and win men, he therefore says (cf. Gal. 1:10), "It is as knowing the terror (or fear) of the Lord that we persuade men; but (whether men who hear our preaching recognize our sincerity or not) we are made manifest unto God as acting on such motives (ch. 4:2); and I trust also in your consciences." Those so "manifested" need have no "terror" as to their being "manifested (English Version, appear) before the judgment seat" (vs. 10). 12. For—the reason why he leaves the manifestation of his sincerity in preaching to their consciences (ch. 3:1), viz., his not wishing to "commend" himself again. occasion to glory—(ch. 1:14), viz., as to our sincerity. in appearance—Greek, "face" (cf. I Sam. 16:7). The false teachers gloried in their outward appearance, and in external recommendations (ch. 11:18) their learning, eloquence, wisdom, riches, not in vital religion in their heart. Their conscience does not attest their inward sincerity, as mine does (ch. 1:12). 13. be—rather as Greek, "have been." The contrast is between the single act implied by the past tense, "If we have ever been beside ourselves," and the habitual state implied by the present, "Or whether we be sober," i.e., of sound mind. beside ourselves—The accusation brought by Festus against him (Acts 26:24). The holy enthusiasm with which he spake of what God effected by His apostolic ministry, seemed to many to be boasting madness. sober—humbling myself before you, and not using my apostolic power and privileges. to God . . . for your cause—The glorifying of his office was not for his own, but for God's glory. The abasing of himself was in adaptation to their infirmity, to gain them to Christ (I Cor. 9:22). 14. For—Accounting for his being "beside himself" with enthusiasm: the love of Christ towards us (in His death for us, the highest proof of it, Rom. 5:6-8), producing in turn love in us to Him, and not mere "terror" (vs. 11). constraineth us—with irresistible power limits us to the one great object

ADAM CLARKE

9. Wherefore we labour. From philos, "loving," and time, "honor." We act at all times on the principles of honor; we are, in the proper sense of the word, ambitious to do and say everything consistently with our high vocation. We may be accepted of him. "To be pleasing to Him." Through the love we have to God, we study and labor to please Him.

10. For we must all appear before the judgment seat. We labor to walk so as to please Him, because we know that we shall have to give a solemn account of ourselves before the judgment seat of Christ.

That every one may receive the things. That "each may receive to himself, into his own hand," his own reward and his own wages.

The things done in his body. That is, while he was in this lower state; for in this sense the term body is taken often in this Epistle. We may observe also that the soul is the grand agent; the body is but its instrument.

11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord. This, I think, is too harsh a translation; should be rendered, "knowing therefore the fear of the Lord"; which, strange as it may at first appear, often signifies the "worship" of the Lord, or that religious reverence which we owe to Him. As we know therefore what God requires of man, because we are favored with His own revelation, we persuade men to become Christians, and to labor to be acceptable to Him, because they must all stand before the judgment seat. But we are made manifest unto God. God, who searches the heart, knows that we are upright in our endeavors to please Him; and because we are fully persuaded of the reality of eternal things, therefore we are fully in earnest to get sinners converted to Him. Manifest in your consciences. We have reason to believe that you have had such proof of our integrity and disinterestedness, that your consciences must acquit us of every unworthy motive and of every sinister view.

12. For we commend not ourselves. I do not say these things to bespeak your good opinion, to procure your praise; but to give you occasion to glory, to exult on our behalf; and to furnish you with an answer to all those who either malign us or our ministry, and who only glory in appearance. Paul probably speaks here concerning the false apostle, who had been dividing the church and endeavoring to raise a party to himself by vilifying both the apostle and his doctrine.

13. Beside ourselves. Probably he was reputed by some to be deranged. Festus thought so: "Paul, thou art beside thyself; [too] much learning doth make thee mad." And his enemies at Corinth might insinuate not only that he was deranged, but attribute his derangement to a less worthy cause than intense study and deep learning. It is to God. If we do appear, in speaking of the glories of the eternal world, to be transported beyond ourselves, it is through the good hand of our God upon us, and we do it to promote His honor. Whether we be sober, speak of divine things in a more cool and dispassionate manner, it is that we may the better instruct and encourage you.

14. For the love of Christ constraineth us. We have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, and this causes us to love God intensely, and to love and labor for the salvation of men. And it is the effect produced by this love which

(2) What such should do, for whom Christ died; they should live to him. They should not live to themselves, v. 15. Then do we live as we ought to live when we live to Christ, who died for us.

Verses 16–21

Two things that are necessary in order to our living to Christ: regeneration and reconciliation.

I. Regeneration. 1. Weanedness from the world, v. 16. The love of Christ is in our hearts, and the world is under our feet. Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet, says the apostle, we know him no more. We must live upon his spiritual presence and the comfort it affords.

2. A thorough change of the heart: He is a new creature, v. 17. Some read it, Let him be a new creature, not only that they wear a new livery, but that they have a new heart and new nature. Old things are passed away, and all these things must become new.

to the exclusion of other considerations. The Greek implies to compress forcibly the energies into one channel. Love is jealous of any rival object engrossing the soul (ch. 11:1-3). because we thus judge—lit., (as) "having judged thus"; implying a judgment formed at conversion, and ever since regarded as a settled truth. that if—i.e., that since. But the oldest MSS. omit "if." "That one died for all" (Greek, "in behalf of all"). Thus the following clause will be, "Therefore all (lit., 'the all,' viz., for whom He 'died') died." His dying is just the same as if they all died; and in their so dying, they died to sin and self, that they might live to God their Redeemer, whose henceforth they are (Rom. 6:2-11; Gal. 2:20; Col. 3:3; I Pet. 4:1-3). 15. they which live—in the present life (ch. 4:11, "we which live") [ALFORD]; or, they who are thus indebted to Him for life of soul as well as body [MENOCHIUS]. died for them—He does not add, "rose again for them," a phrase not found in Paul's language [BENGEL]. He died in their stead, He arose again for their good, "for (the effecting of) their justification" (Rom. 4:25), and that He might be their Lord (Rom. 14:7-9). ELLICOTT and ALFORD join "for them" with both "died" and "rose again"; as Christ's death is our death, so His resurrection is our resurrection; Greek, "Who for them died and rose again." not henceforth—Greek, "no longer"; viz., now that His death for them has taken place, and that they know that His death saves them from death eternal, and His resurrection life brings spiritual and everlasting life to them. 16. Wherefore—because of our settled judgment (vs. 14), henceforth—since our knowing Christ's constraining love in His death for us. know we no man after the flesh—i.e., according to his mere worldly and external relations (ch. 11:18; John 8:15; Phil. 3:4), as distinguished from what he is according to the Spirit, as a "new creature" (vs. 17). For instance, the outward distinctions of Jew or Gentile, rich or poor, slave or free, learned or unlearned, are lost sight of in the higher life of those who are dead in Christ's death, and alive with Him in the new life of His resurrection (Gal. 2:6; 3:28). yea, though—The oldest MSS. read, "if even." known Christ after the flesh—Paul when a Jew had looked for a temporal reigning, not a spritual, Messiah. (He says "Christ," not Jesus: for he had not known personally Jesus in the days of His flesh, but he had looked for Christ or the Messiah.) When once he was converted he no longer "conferred with flesh and blood" (Gal. 1:16). He had this advantage over the Twelve, that as one born out of due time he had never known Christ save in His heavenly life. To the Twelve it was "expedient that Christ should go away" that the Comforter should come, and so they might know Christ in the higher spiritual aspect and in His new life-giving power, and not merely "after the flesh," in the carnal aspect of Him (Rom. 6:9-11; I Cor. 15:45; I Pet. 3:18; 4:1, 2). Doubtless Judaizing Christians at Corinth prided themselves on the mere fleshly (ch. 11:18) advantage of their belonging to Israel, the nation of Christ, or on their having seen Him in the flesh, and thence claimed superiority over others as having a nearer connection with Him (vs. 12; ch. 10:7). Paul here shows the true aim should be to know Him spiritually as new creatures (vss. 15, 17), and that outward relations towards Him profit nothing (Luke 18:19-21; John 16:7, 22; Phil. 3:3-10). This is at variance with both Romish Mariolatry and transubstantiation. Two distinct Greek verbs are used here for "know"; the first ("know we no man") means "to be personally acquainted with"; the latter ("known Christ . . . know . . . more") is to recognize, or estimate. Paul's estimate of Christ, or the expected Messiah, was carnal, but is so now no more. 17. Therefore—connected with the words in vs. 16, "We know Christ no more after the flesh." As Christ has entered on His new heavenly life by His resurrection and ascension, so all who are "in Christ" (i.e., united to Him by faith as the branch is IN the vine) are new creatures (Rom. 6:9-11). "New" in the Greek implies a new nature quite different from anything previously existing, not merely recent, which is expressed by a different Greek word (Gal. 6:15). creature—lit., "creation," and so the creature resulting from the creation (cf. John 3:3, 5; Eph. 2:10; 4:23; Col. 3:10, 11). As we are "in Christ," so "God was in Christ" (vs. 19): hence He is Mediator between God and us. old things—selfish, carnal views (cf. vs. 16) of ourselves, of other men, and of Christ. passed away—spontaneously, like the snow of early spring [BENGEL] before the advancing sun. behold—implying an allusion to Isaiah 43:19, and 65:17. 18. all—THE, Greek—things—all our privileges in this new crea-

"bears us away with itself," which causes us to love after the similitude of that love by which we are influenced; and as God so loved the world as to give His Son for it, and as Christ so loved the world as to pour out His life for it, so we, influenced by the very same love, desire to spend and be spent for the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls. If one died for all, then were all dead. The first position the apostle takes for granted; viz., that Jesus Christ died for all mankind. The second position he infers from the first, and justly too; for if all had not been guilty, and consigned to eternal death because of their sin, there could have been no need of His death.

15. And that he died for all, that they which live. This third position he draws from the preceding: If all were dead, and in danger of endless perdition; and if He died for all, to save them from that perdition; then it justly follows that they are not their own, that they are bought by His blood; and should not . . . live unto themselves, for this is the way to final ruin; but unto him which died for them, and thus made an atonement for their sins, and rose again for their justification.

16. Know we no man after the flesh. As we know that "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God," therefore we esteem no man on account of his family relations or the stock whence he proceeded.

Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh. We know that the Jews valued themselves much in having Abraham for their father, and some of the Judaizing teachers at Corinth might value themselves in having seen Christ in the flesh, which certainly Paul did not; hence he takes occasion to say here that this kind of privilege availed nothing.

17. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. It is vain for a man to profess affinity to Christ according to the flesh while he is unchanged in his heart and life, and dead in trespasses and sins; for he that is in Christ, that is, a genuine Christian, having Christ dwelling in his heart by faith, is a *new creature. His old state is changed. He was a child of Satan; he is now a child of God. He was a slave of sin; he is now made free from sin. Behold, all things are become new. The man is not only mended, but he is new-made; he is a new creature, a "new creation."

II. Reconciliation.

1. An unquestionable privilege, v. 18, 19. Reconciliation supposes a quarrel, or breach of friendship. Yet, behold, there may be a reconciliation. He has reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, v. 18.

F. B. MEYER:

"All things are of God." "Of" here is equivalent to "out of." All the precious contents of the Gospel have emanated from the heart of God; so that we may say with the psalmist, "All my springs are in thee."

That we have a building, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to which to go when the earthly house of this tabernacle is broken up; that it is possible for the mortal to be swallowed up in the descending glory of the Second Advent; that we have received the Spirit as earnest of our future glory; that we shall be one day at home with the Lord; that One died for all that the dominion of the self-life should be destroyed, and that they should henceforth live, not to themselves, but to Him; that it is possible to become a new creation in Christ; that God is already reconciled to the world of men, and is only waiting for them to be reconciled to Him; that He hath committed to men the ministry of reconciliation and commissioned them to be his ambassadors; that it is possible for us to be the righteousness of God in Jesus—all these things have issued from his heart of love.

Oh, for a soul as wide as the utmost circle of the highest heaven that containeth all, to contain his love! Oh, world's wonder! Oh, what a sight to be up in heaven, in "the fair orchard of Paradise!" But the very greatness of his provisions will make our doom the greater if we refuse or ignore them. The men who made light of the king's invitation had their city burnt. This is the terror of the Lord; and our duty is to beseech men not to put away the reconciliation which God offers. Let the "all things" of our life be of God's direction, impulse, and inspiration.—Great Verses Through the Bible

All things relating to our reconciliation by Jesus Christ are of God, who by the mediation of Jesus Christ has reconciled the world to himself. He has appointed the ministry of reconciliation, v. 18. He has appointed the office of the ministry, which is a ministry of reconciliation.

2. Our indispensable duty, v. 20. As God is willing to be reconciled to us, we ought to be reconciled to God. Though God can be no loser by the quarrel, nor gainer by the peace, yet by his ministers he beseeches sinners that they would be reconciled to him.

tion (vss. 14, 15). reconciled us—i.e., restored us ("the world," vs. 19) to His favor by satisfying the claims of justice against us. Our position judicially considered in the eye of the law is altered, not as though the mediation of Christ had made a change in God's character, nor as if the love of God was produced by the mediation of Christ; nay, the mediation and sacrifice of Christ was the provision of God's love, not its moving cause (Rom. 8:32). Christ's blood was the price paid at the expense of God Himself, and was required to reconcile the exercise of mercy with justice, not as separate, but as the eternally harmonious attributes in the one and the same God (Rom. 3:25, 26). The Greek "reconcile" is reciprocally used as in the Hebrew Hithpahel conjugation, appease, obtain the favor of. Matthew 5:24, "Be reconciled to thy brother"; i.e., take measures that he be reconciled to thee, as well as thou to him, as the context proves. Diallagethi, however (Matt. 5:24), implying mutual reconciliation, is distinct from Katallagethi here, the latter referring to the change of status wrought in one of the two parties. The manner of God reconciling the world to Himself is implied (vs. 19), viz., by His "not imputing their trespasses to them." God not merely, as subsequently, reconciles the world by inducing them to lay aside their enmity, but in the first instance, does so by satisfying His own justice and righteous enmity against sin (Ps. 7:11). Cf. I Sam. 29:4, "Reconcile himself unto his master"; not remove his own anger against his master, but his master's against him [ARCHBISHOP MAGEE, Atonement]. The reconciling of men to God by their laying aside their enmity is the consequence of God laying aside His just enmity against their sin, and follows at vs. 20). to us—ministers (vss. 19, 20). 19. God was in Christ, reconciling—i.e., God was BY Christ (in virtue of Christ's intervention) reconciling.... "Was reconciling" implies the time when the act of reconciliation was being carried into effect (vs. 21), viz., when "God made Jesus, who knew no sin, to be sin for us." The compound of "was" and the participle "reconciling," instead of the imperfect (Greek), may also imply the continuous purpose of God, from before the foundation of the world, to reconcile man to Himself, whose fall was foreseen. The expression "IN Christ" for "by Christ" may be used to imply additionally that God was IN Christ (John 10:38; 14: 10), and so by Christ (the God-man) was reconciling.... The Greek for "by" or through Christ (the best MSS. omit "Jesus"), vs. 18, is different. "In" must mean here in the person of Christ. The Greek Katallasson implies "changing" or altering the judicial status from one of condemnation to one of justification. The*atonement* (at-one-ment), or reconciliation, is the removal of the bar to peace and acceptance with a holy God, which His righteousness interposed against our sin. The first step towards restoring peace between us and God was on God's side (John 3:16). The change therefore now to be effected must be on the part of offending man, God the offended One being already reconciled. It is man, not God, who now needs to be reconciled, and to lay aside his enmity against God (Rom. 5:10, 11). ("We have received the atonement" [Greek, "reconciliation"], cannot mean "We have received the laying aside of our own enmity.") Cf. Romans 3:24, 25. the world—all men (Col. 1:20; I John 2: 2). The manner of the reconciling is by His "not imputing to men their trespasses," but imputing them to Christ the Sin-bearer. There is no incongruity that a father should be offended with that son whom he loveth, and at that time offended with him when he loveth him. So, though God loved men whom He created, yet He was offended with them when they sinned, and gave His Son to suffer for them, that through that Son's obedience He might be reconciled to them [reconcile them to Himself, i.e., restore them WITH JUSTICE to His favor] [BISHOP PEARSON, Creed]. hath committed unto us—Greek, "hath put into our hands." "Us," i.e., ministers. 20. for Christ... in Christ's stead—The Greek of both is the same: translate in both cases "on Christ's behalf." beseech... pray—rather, "entreat [plead with you]... beseech." Such "beseeching" is uncommon in the case of "ambassadors," who generally stand on their dignity (cf. ch. 10:2; I Thess. 2: 6, 7). be ye reconciled to God—English Version here inserts "ye," which is not in the original, and which gives the wrong impression, as if it were emphatic thus: God is reconciled to you, be ye reconciled to God. The Greek expresses rather, God was the RECONCILER in Christ... let this reconciliation then have its designed effect. Be reconciled to God, i.e., let God reconcile you to Himself (vss. 18, 19). 21. For—omitted in the oldest MSS. The new creation, and creation is the proper work of an all-wise, almighty Being; then this total change of heart, soul, and life, which takes place under the preaching of the gospel, is effected by the power and grace of God. The ministry of reconciliation. The "office or function" of this reconciliation; called, v. 19, "the word"; the "doctrine of this reconciliation." Reconciliation comes from "to change thoroughly"; and the grand object of the gospel is to make a complete change in men's minds and manners; but the first object is the removal of enmity from the heart of man, that he may be disposed to accept of the salvation God has provided for him, on the terms which God has promised. The enmity in the heart of man is the grand hindrance to his salvation.

19. That God was in Christ. This is the doctrine which this ministry of reconciliation holds out, and the doctrine which it uses to bring about the reconciliation itself.

ALBERT BARNES:

"That God was in Christ." That God was "by" Christ, by means of Christ; "by" the agency or mediatorship of Christ. Or it may mean that God was united to Christ and manifested himself by him. Christ was the mediator by means of whom God designed to accomplish the great work of reconciliation.

"Reconciling the world unto himself." The "world" here evidently means the human race generally, without distinction of nation, age, or rank. The whole world was alienated from him, and he sought to have it reconciled. This is one incidental proof that God designed that the plan of salvation should be adapted to all men. It may be observed further, that God sought that the world should be reconciled. Man did not seek it. He had no plan for it. He did not desire it. He had no way to effect it. It was the offended party, not the offending, that sought to be reconciled; and this shows the strength of his love. It was love for enemies and alienated beings, and love evinced to them by a most earnest desire to become their friend, and to be at agreement with them. Tindal renders this very accurately, "For God was in Christ, and made agreement between the world and himself, and imputed not their sins unto them."

—Popular Commentary

20. We are ambassadors for Christ. "We execute the function of ambassadors in Christ's stead." He came from the Father to mankind on this important embassy. He has left the world, and appointed us in His place. As though God did beseech you by us. What we say to you we say on the authority of God; our entreaties are His entreaties; our warm love to you, a faint reflection of His infinite love. We pray you to return to God; it is His will that you should do so. We promise you remission of sins; we are authorized to do so by God himself. In Christ's stead we pray you to lay aside your enmity and be reconciled to God.

MATTHEW HENRY

And for our encouragement so to do the apostle subjoins what should be well known by us (v. 21). The purity of the Mediator: He knew no sin. The sacrifice he offered: He was made sin; that is, a sin-offering, a sacrifice for sin.

That we might be made the righteousness of God in him. As Christ, who knew no sin of his own, was made sin for us, so we, who have no righteousness of our own, are made the righteousness of God in him.

CHAPTER 6

An account of the apostle's general errand and exhortation to all to whom he preached.

I. The errand or exhortation itself, v. 1. As it is the duty of the ministers of the gospel to exhort their hearers to accept of grace and mercy, so they are honoured with this high title of co-workers with God. They are workers with God, yet under him. If they be faithful, they may hope to find God working with them, and their labour will be effectual. Observe the way of the gospel: it is not with roughness and severity, but with all mildness and gentleness, to beseech and entreat.

II. The arguments and method which the apostle used.

1. The present time is the only proper season to accept of the grace that is offered: Now is the accepted time, NOW is the day of salvation, v. 2. The morrow is none of ours: we know not what will be on the morrow.

grand reason why they should be reconciled to God, viz., the great atonement in Christ provided by God, is stated without the "for" as being part of the message of reconciliation (vs. 19). he—God. sin—not a sin offering, which would destroy the antithesis to "righteousness," and would make "sin" be used in different senses in the same sentence: not a sinful person, which would be untrue, and would require in the antithesis "righteous men," not "righteousness"; but "sin," i.e., the representative Sin-bearer (vicariously) of the aggregate sin of all men past, present, and future. The sin of the world is one, therefore the singular, not the plural, is used; though its manifestations are manifold (John 1:29). "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the SIN of the world." Cf. "made a curse for us," Galatians 3:13. for us—Greek, "in our behalf." Cf. John 3:14, Christ being represented by the brazen serpent, the form, but not the substance, of the old serpent. At His death on the cross the sin-bearing for us was consummated. knew no sin—by personal experience (John 8:46) [ALFORD]. Hebrews 7:26; I Peter 2:22; I John 3:5.

might be made—not the same Greek as the previous "made." Rather, "might become." the righteousness of God—Not merely righteous, but righteousness itself; not merely righteousness, but the righteousness of God, because Christ is God, and what He is we are (I John 4:17), and He is "made of God unto us righteousness." As our sin is made over to Him, so His righteousness to us (in His having fulfilled all the righteousness of the law for us all, as our representative (Jer. 23:6; I Cor. 1:30). The innocent was punished voluntarily as if guilty, that the guilty might be gratuitously rewarded as if innocent (I Peter 2:24). "Such are we in the sight of God the Father, as is the very Son of God himself" [HOOKER]. in him—by virtue of our standing in Him, and in union with Him [ALFORD].

VSS. 1-18. HIS APOSTOLIC MINISTRY IS APPROVED BY FAITHFULNESS IN EXHORTATION, IN SUFFERINGS, IN EXHIBITION OF THE FRUITS OF THE HOLY GHOST: HIS LARGENESS OF HEART TO THEM CALLS FOR ENLARGEMENT OF THEIR HEART TO HIM. EXHORTATIONS TO SEPARATION FROM POLLUTION. 1. workers together—with God (Acts 15:4; I Cor. 3:9). Not only as "ambassadors." beseech—entreat (ch. 5:20). He is describing his ministry, not exhorting directly. you also—rather, "WE ALSO (as well as God, ch. 5:20) beseech" or "entreat you": vss. 14, 15, on to ch. 7:1, is part of this entreaty or exhortation. in vain—by making the grace of God a ground for continuance in sin (vs. 3). By a life of sin, showing that the word of reconciliation has been in vain, so far as you are concerned (Heb. 12:15; Jude 4). "The grace of God" here, is "the reconciliation" provided by God's love (ch. 5:18, 19; cf. Gal. 2:2). 2. For—God's own promise is the ground of our exhortation. he saith—God the Father saith to God the Son, and so to all believers who are regarded as one with Him. heard thee—In the eternal purposes of my love I have hearkened to thy prayer for the salvation of thy people (cf. John 17:9, 15, 20, 24). accepted . . . accepted—The Greek of the latter is more emphatic, "well-accepted." What was "an accepted time" in the prophecy (Isa. 49:8, Hebrew, "in the season of grace") becomes "the wellaccepted time" in the fulfilment (cf. Ps. 69:13). As it is God's time of receiving sinners, receive ye His grace: accept (vs. 1) the word of reconciliation in His accepted time. in the day of salvation—"in a day of salvation" (Luke 4:18, 19, 21; 19:42; Heb. 3:7).

ADAM CLARKE

21. For he hath made him to be sin for us. "He made Him who knew no sin (who was innocent) a Sin Offering for us." The word hamartia occurs here twice. In the first place it means sin, i.e., transgression and guilt; and of Christ it is said, "He knew no sin," i.e., was innocent; for not to know sin is the same as to be conscious of innocence. In the second place it signifies a "sin offering," or "sacrifice for sin," and answers to the chattaah and chattath of the Hebrew text; which signifies both "sin" and "sin offering" in a great variety of places in the Pentateuch. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew word by hamartia in ninety-four places in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, where a "sin offering" is meant; and where our version translates the word, not "sin," but an "offering for sin." Had our translators attended to their own method of translating the word in other places where it means the same as here, they would not have given this false view of a passage which has been made the foundation of a most blasphemous doctrine; viz., that our sins were imputed to Christ, and that He was a proper Object of the indignation of divine justice, because He was blackened with imputed sin; and some have proceeded so far in this blasphemous career as to say that Christ may be considered as the greatest of sinners, because all the sins of mankind, or of the elect, as they say, were imputed to Him, and reckoned as His own. Thus they have confounded sin with the punishment due to sin. Christ suffered in our stead, died for us, bore our sins (the punishment due to them) in His own body upon the tree, for the Lord laid upon Him the iniquities of us all; that is, the punishment due to them; explained by making "his soul," His life, "an offering for sin," and healing us by His stripes. That we might be made the righteousness of God in him. The righteousness of God signifies here the "salvation" of God, as comprehending justification through the blood of Christ, and sanctification through His Spirit; or as the mountains of God, the hail of God, the wind of God mean exceeding high mountains, extraordinary hail, and most tempestuous wind, so here the righteousness of God may mean a thorough righteousness, complete justification, complete sanctification such as none but God can give, such as the sinful nature and guilty conscience of man require, and such as is worthy of God to impart. And all this righteousness, justification, and holiness we receive in, by, for, and through Him.

1. We then, as workers together with him. The last two words, with him, are not in the text, and some supply the place thus: "We then, as workers together with you." For my own part I see nothing wanting in the text if we only suppose the term "apostles"; we (i.e., apostles), "being fellow workers, also entreat you not to receive the grace of God in vain." By the grace of God, this grace or benefit of God, the apostle certainly means the grand sacrificial offering of Christ for the sin of the world, which He had just before mentioned in speaking of the ministry of reconciliation. We learn, therefore, that it was possible to receive the grace of God and not ultimately benefit by it; or in other words, to begin in the Spirit and end in the flesh.

2. For he saith. That is, God hath said it, by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xlix. 8; which place the apostle quotes verbatim et literatim from the Septuagint. And from this we may at once see what is the accepted time, and what the day of salvation. The advent of the Messiah was the time of God's pleasure or benevolence, of which all the faithful were in expectation; and the day of salvation was the time in which this salvation should be manifested and applied. I rather think that this second verse should be read immediately after the last verse of the preceding chapter, as where it now stands it greatly disturbs the connection between the first and the third verses. I will set down the whole in the order in which I think they should stand. "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

ALBERT BARNES:

3. "Giving no offence in any thing." We the ministers of God (v. 1). The word rendered "offence" means, properly, "stumbling"; then offence, o cause of offence, a falling into sin. The meaning here is, "giving no occasion for rejecting the gospel." The idea of Paul is that he and his fellow apostles so labored as that no one who saw or knew them should have occasion to reproach the ministry or the religion which they preached; but so that in their pure and self-denying lives, the strongest argument should be seen for embracing it (cf. Matt. 10: 6; 1 Cor. 8:13; 10:32, 33). How they conducted so as to give no offence he states in the following verses.

"That the ministry be not blamed." The phrase, "the ministry," refers here not merely to the ministry of Paul; that is, it does not mean merely that he would be subject to blame and reproach, but that the ministry itself which the Lord Jesus had established would be blamed, or would be reproached by the improper conduct of anyone who was engaged in that work. The idea is, that the misconduct of one minister of the gospel would bring a reproach upon the profession itself and would prevent the usefulness and success of others, just as the misconduct of a physician exposes the profession to reproach, or the bad conduct of a lawyer reflects itself in some degree on the entire profession.—Popular Commentary

2. What caution they used not to give offence that might hinder the success of their preaching, v. 3. When others are too apt to take offence, we should be cautious lest we give offence; and ministers especially should be careful.

3. Their constant aim in all things to approve themselves faithful, as became the ministers of God, v. 4. His great desire was to be the servant of God, and to approve himself so. (1) By much patience in afflictions.

He was a great sufferer, and met with many afflictions, but he exercised much patience in all, v. 4, 5. Those who would approve themselves to God must approve themselves faithful in trouble as well as in peace, not only in doing the work of God diligently, but also in bearing the will of God patiently.

(2) By acting from good principles. What his principles were (v. 6, 7); namely, pureness; and there is no piety without purity. Knowledge was another principle; and zeal without this is but madness. He also acted with long-suffering and kindness, bearing with the hardness of men's hearts, and hard treatment from their hands. He acted under the influence of the Holy Ghost, from the noble principle of unfeigned love, according to the rule of the word of truth, under the power of God, having on the armour of righteousness, which is the best defence against the temptations of prosperity on the right hand, and of adversity on the left.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

3. Resuming the connection with vs. 1, interrupted by the parenthetical vs. 2. "Giving no offense" (cf. I Cor. 10:33), "approving ourselves," and all the other participles down to vs. 10, are nominatives to "we also entreat you" (vs. 1), to show the pains he took to enforce his exhortation by example, as well as precept [ALFORD]. "Offense" would be given, if we were without "patience" and the other qualifications which he therefore subjoins (cf. Rom. 14:13). 4. Translate, to mark the true order of the Greek words, "in everything, as God's ministers recommending ourselves," i.e., that our hearers may give our message a favorable hearing, through our consistency in every respect, not that they may glorify us. Alluding to ch. 3:1, he implies, We commend ourselves, not like them by word, but by deed. patience—(ch. 12:12). Put first. "Pure-minded" follows (vs. 6). Three triplets of trials exercising the "patience" (patient endurance) follow: Afflictions (or "tribulations"), necessities, distresses (or "straits"); stripes, imprisonments, tumults; labors, watchings, fastings. The first triplet expresses afflictions generally; the second, those in particular arising from the violence of men; the third, those which he brought on himself directly or indirectly.

5. stripes—(ch. 11:23, 24; Acts 16:23). imprisonments—(ch. 11:23). He had been, doubtless, elsewhere imprisoned besides at Philippi when he wrote this Epistle. tumults—(Acts 13:50; 14:5, 19; 16:22; and recently 19:23-41). labours—in the cause of Christ (ch. 11:23; Rom. 16:12). watchings—(ch. 11:27). Sleepless nights. fastings—The context here refers to his trials, rather than devotional exercises (cf. ch. 11:27). Thus "foodlessness" would seem to be the sense (cf. I Cor. 4:11, Phil. 4:12). But the usual sense of the Greek is fasts, in the strict sense; and in ch. 11:27 it is spoken of independently of "hunger and thirst." (Cf. Luke 2:37; Acts 10:30; 14:23.) However, Matthew 15:32; Mark 8:3, justify the sense, more favored by the context, foodlessness, though a rare use of the word. GAUSSEN remarks "The apostles combine the highest offices with the humblest exterior: as everything in the Church was to be cast in the mould of death and resurrection, the cardinal principle throughout Christianity."

6. By . . . by . . .—rather, as Greek, "In . . . in," implying not the instrument, but the sphere or element in which his ministry moved. knowledge—spiritual: in Gospel mysteries, unattainable by mere reason (I Cor. 2:6-16; II Cor. 3:6, 17, 18). long-suffering . . . kindness—associated with "charity" or "love" (I Cor. 13:4), as here. by the Holy Ghost—in virtue of His influences which produce these graces, and other gifts, "love unfeigned" being the foremost of them.

7. By the word of truth, by the power of God—rather, "IN . . . in. . . ." As to "the word of truth" (cf. ch. 4:2; Col. 1:5), and "the (miraculous) power of God" (ch. 4:7); I Corinthians 2:4, "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." by the armour—Greek, "through" or "by means of the armor." "Righteousness," which is the breastplate alone in Ephe-

ADAM CLARKE

For he hath made him . . . [a] sin [offering] for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Immediately after this, the sixth chapter will very properly commence, and we shall see that the connection will be then undisturbed: "We then, as fellow workers, beseech you also that ye receive not this grace of God in vain, giving no offence in any thing, that this ministry be not blamed." This change of the place of the second verse, which everyone allows must, if it stand here, be read in a parenthesis, preserves the whole connection of the apostle's discourse and certainly sets his argument before us in a stronger light.

3. Giving no offence. The word signifies a "stumbling block" in general, or anything over which a man stumbles or falls; and here means any transgression or scandal that might take place among the ministers, or the Christians themselves, whereby either Jews or Gentiles might take occasion of offense and vilify the gospel of Christ.

4. But in all things approving ourselves. The apostle now proceeds to show how conscientiously himself and his fellow laborers acted in order to render the ministry of reconciliation effectual to the salvation of men. They not only gave no offense in anything, but they labored to manifest themselves to be the genuine ministers of God, in much patience, bearing calmly up under the most painful and oppressive afflictions. In afflictions. This may signify the series of persecutions and distresses in general, the state of cruel suffering in which the Church of God and the apostles then existed. In necessities. "Straits" and "difficulties," including all that want and affliction which arose from the impoverished state of the Church. In distresses. Such straits and difficulties as were absolutely unavoidable and insurmountable. The word implies "being reduced to a narrow place, driven to a corner, hemmed in on every side," as the Israelites were at the Red Sea—the sea before them, Pharaoh and his host behind them, and Egyptian fortresses on either hand. God alone could bring them out of such difficulties, when their enemies themselves saw that the wilderness had shut them in. So was it often with the apostles; all human help failed, and their deliverance came from God alone.

5. In stripes, in imprisonments. Of these the history of the Acts of the Apostles gives ample testimony; and there were doubtless many instances of persecution in various forms which are not on record. In tumults. "Insurrections" raised against them because of the gospel. It is more natural to understand the word thus than of agitations or tossings to and fro in consequence of their unsettled state of life; or because of persecution, which obliged them to flee from place to place. In labours. Both with our own hands to provide for ourselves the necessaries of life, that we might not be chargeable to others, and in labors to spread the gospel of God through all countries where His providence opened our way. In watchings. Passing many nights without sleep or rest. In fastings. Partly constrained through want of food and partly voluntary, as a means of obtaining an increase of grace both for ourselves and for the churches.

6. By pureness. In "simplicity" of intention, and "purity" of affection, together with that chastity and holinsss of life which the gospel enjoins. By knowledge. Of the divine mysteries. By longsuffering. Under all provocations. By kindness. To our most virulent persecutors, and to all men. By the Holy Ghost. The constant indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and with it the various gifts of the Holy Spirit by which he was enabled to work miracles. By love unfeigned. "Love without hypocrisy."

7. By the word of truth. The doctrine of truth received immediately from God, and faithfully and affectionately preached to men. By the power of God. Confirming this doctrine, not only by the miracles which we were enabled to work, but also by the application of that truth to the souls of the people by the energy of God. By the armour of righteousness. Such

(3) By a due temper and behaviour under all the variety of conditions, v. 8–10. The apostles met with honour and dishonour, good report and evil report. We stand in need of the grace of God to arm us against the temptations of honour on the one hand, so as to bear good report without pride, and of dishonour on the other hand, so as to bear reproaches without recrimination. Some represented them as the best, and others as the worst, of men: by some they were counted deceivers, by others as true. They were slighted by the men of the world as unknown, not worth taking notice of; yet in all the churches of Christ they were well known, and of great account: they were looked upon as dying, "and yet behold, we live." They were chastened, and often fell under the lash of the law, yet not killed:

and though it was thought that they were sorrowful, a company of mopish and melancholy men, yet they were always rejoicing in God. They were despised as poor, and yet they made many rich, by preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ. They were thought to have nothing, yet they possessed all things. They had nothing in themselves, but possessed all things in Christ. Such a paradox is a Christian's life.

Verses 11–18

The apostle cautions them against mingling with unbelievers.

I. The caution is introduced with a profession of the most tender affection to them, v. 11–13. He seemed to want words to express the warm affections he had for these Corinthians. Our mouth is open unto you, and our heart is enlarged unto you.

"You are not," says he, "straitened in us; we would gladly do you all the service we can, and if it be otherwise, the fault is in yourselves; it is because you are straitened in yourselves. All we desire as a recompence is only that you would be proportionably affected towards us, as children should love their father."

II. The caution itself, not to mingle with unbelievers, not to be unequally yoked with them, v. 14. It is wrong for good people to join in affinity with the wicked and profane. There is more danger that the bad will damage the good than hope that the good will benefit the bad. We should not yoke ourselves in friendship with wicked men and unbelievers. We should never choose them for our bosom-friends. Much less should we join in religious communion with them. It is a very great absurdity, v. 14, 15.

sians 6:13-17, here is made the whole Christian panoply (cf. ch. 10:4). on . . . right . . . and . . . left—i.e., guarding on every side. 8. Translate, "Through glory and dishonor" (disgrace), viz., from those in authority, and accruing to us present. "By," or "through evil report and good report," from the multitude, and affecting us absent [BENGEL]. Regarded "as deceivers" by those who, not knowing (vs. 9), dishonor and give us an evil report; "as true," by those who "know" (vs. 9) us in the real "glory" of our ministry. In proportion as one has more or less of glory and good report, in that degree has he more or less of dishonor and evil report. 9. unknown . . . yet well known—"unknown" in our true character to those who "evil report" of us, "well known" to those who hold us in "good report" (vs. 8). CONYBEARE explains, "Unknown by men, yet acknowledged by God" (I Cor. 13:12). Perhaps both God and men (believers) are intended as knowing him (ch. 5:11, and 11:6). dying . . . live—(ch. 1:9; 4:10, 11; 11:23). Cf. GAUSSEN'S remark, Note, vs. 5. "Behold" calls attention to the fact as something beyond all expectation. chastened . . . not killed—realizing Psalm 118:18.

10. The "as" no longer is used to express the opinion of his adversaries, but the real state of him and his fellow laborers. making many rich—Spiritually (I Cor. 1:5), after the example of our Lord, who "by His poverty made many rich" (ch. 8:9). having nothing—Whatever of earthly goods we have, and these are few, we have as though we had not; as tenants removable at will, not owners (I Cor. 7:30). possessing all things—The Greek implies firm possession, holding fast in possession (cf.I Cor. 3:21, 22). The things both of the present and of the future are, in the truest sense, the believer's in possession, for he possesses them all in Christ, his lasting possession, though the full fruition of them is reserved for the future eternity. 11. mouth . . . open unto you—I use no concealment, such as some at Corinth have insinuated (ch. 4:2). I use all freedom and openness of speech to you as to beloved friends. Hence he introduces here, "O Corinthians" (cf. Phil. 4:15). The enlargement of his heart towards them (ch. 7:3) produced his openness of mouth, i.e., his unreserved expression of his inmost feelings. As an unloving man is narrow in heart, so the apostle's heart is enlarged by love, so as to take in his converts at Corinth, not only with their graces, but with their many shortcomings (cf. I Kings 4:29; Ps. 119:32; Isa. 60:5). 12. Any constraint ye feel towards me, or narrowness of heart, is not from want of largeness of heart on my part towards you, but from want of it on your part towards me; "bowels," i.e., affections (cf. ch. 12:15). not straitened in us—i.e., for want of room in our hearts to take you in. 13. Translate, "As a recompense in the same kind . . . be enlarged also yourselves" [ELLICOTT]. "In the same way" as my heart is enlarged towards you (vs. 11), and "as a recompense" for it (Gal. 4:12). I speak as unto my children—as children would naturally be expected to recompense their parents' love with similar love. 14. Be not—Greek, "Become not." unequally yoked—"yoked with one alien in spirit." The image is from the symbolical precept of the law (Lev. 19: 19), "Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind"; or the precept (Deut. 22:10), "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together." Cf. Deuteronony 7:3, forbidding marriages with the heathen; also I Corinthians 7:39. The believer and unbeliever are utterly heterogeneous. Too close intercourse with unbelievers in other relations also is included (vs. 16; I Cor. 8:10; 10:14).

as that described by the apostle, Eph. vi. 13-17, which he calls there "the whole armour of God." On the right hand and on the left. Particularly the shield and the sword; the former on the left arm, the latter in the right hand.

8. By honour and dishonour. By going through both; sometimes respected, sometimes despised. By evil report and good report. Sometimes praised, at other times calumniated. As deceivers. Said to carry about a false doctrine for our secular emolument. And yet true. Demonstrated by the nature of the doctrine, as well as by our life and conversation, that we are true men, having nothing in view but God's glory and the salvation of the world.

9. As unknown. Persons who are to be suspected as harboring dark designs; persons of neither birth, parentage, nor respectable connections in life. And yet well known. Proved by our whole conduct to have no such designs, and demonstrated to be holy, upright, and useful. As dying. Through continual dangers, fatigues, and persecutions. And, behold, we live. We are preserved by the mighty power of God in the greatest dangers and deaths. As chastened. As though we were disobedient children. And not killed. Though we continue in the very same line of conduct that is supposed to bring on us those chastisements, and which, if it were criminal, would justly expose us to death for incorrigible obstinacy; but our preservation is a proof that we please God.

10. As sorrowful. Considerate men supposing from our persecuted state and laborious occupation (often destitute of the necessaries of life; seldom enjoying its conveniences, and scarcely ever its comforts) that we must be the most miserable of all men. Yet always rejoicing. Having the consolation of God's Spirit at all times, and a glorious prospect of a blessed immortality. As poor. Destitute of all worldly good and secular interest. Yet making many rich. By dispensing to them the treasures of salvation; making them rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom. As having nothing. Being the most abject of the poor. And yet possessing all things that are really necessary to the preservation of our lives. For the wants under which we labor for a time are supplied again by a bountiful Providence. The man who possesses a contented spirit possesses all things, for he is satisfied with every dispensation of the providence of God; and "a contented mind is a continual feast."

11. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you. I speak to you with the utmost freedom and fluency because of my affection for you. Our heart is enlarged. It is expanded to take you and all your interests in, and to keep you in the most affectionate remembrance.

12. Ye are not straitened in us. That is, You have not a narrow place in our affections. The metaphor here is taken from the case of a person pent up in a small or narrow place, where there is scarcely room to breathe. Ye are straitened in your own bowels. I have not the same place in your affections which you have in mine. The bowels are used in Scripture to denote the most "tender affections."

13. Now for a recompense in the same. That you may, in some sort, repay me for my affection towards you. I speak to you as unto my children, whom I have a right to command. Be ye also enlarged; love me as I love you.

14-15. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. This is a military term: keep in your own ranks; do not leave the Christian community to join in that of the heathens. The verb signifies to leave one's own rank, place, or order, and go into another; and here it must signify not only that they should not associate with the Gentiles in their idolatrous feasts, but that they should not apostatize from Christianity; and the questions which follow show that there was a sort of fellowship that some of the Christians had formed with the heathens which was both wicked and absurd, and if not speedily checked would infallibly lead to final apostasy. Some apply this exhortation to pious persons marrying with those who are not decidedly religious and converted to God. That the exhortation may be thus applied I grant, but it is certainly not the meaning of the apostle in this place. Nevertheless common Believers are righteous; but unbelievers are unrighteous. Believers are made light in the Lord, but unbelievers are in darkness; and what comfortable communion can these have together? Christ and Belial are contrary one to the other.

It is a dishonour to the Christian's profession (v. 16); for Christians are the temples of the living God. Now there can be no agreement between the temple of God and idols.

There is a great deal of danger in communicating with unbelievers, danger of being defiled and of being rejected; therefore the exhortation is (v. 17) to come out from among them, to be separate, as one would avoid the society of those who have the leprosy or the plague, and not to touch the unclean thing. Who can touch pitch, and not be defiled by it? We must take care not to defile ourselves by converse with those who defile themselves with sin.

It is base ingratitude to God for all the favours he has bestowed upon believers and promised to them, v. 18. God has promised to be a Father to them, and that they shall be his sons and his daughters; and is there a greater honour or happiness than this?

fellowship—lit., "share," or "participation." righteousness—the state of the believer, justified by faith. unrighteousness—rather, as always translated elsewhere, "iniquity"; the state of the unbeliever, the fruit of unbelief. light—of which believers are the children (I Thess. 5:5). 15. Belial—Hebrew, "worthlessness, unprofitableness, wickedness." As Satan is opposed to God, and Antichrist to Christ; Belial being here opposed to Christ, must denounce all manner of Antichristian uncleanness [BENGEL]. he that believeth with an infidel—Translate, "a believer with an unbeliever." 16. agreement—accordance of sentiments (cf. I Kings 18:21; Eph. 5:7, 11). the temple of God—i.e., you believers (I Cor. 3:16; 6:19). with idols—Cf. Dagon before the ark (I Sam. 5:24). as—"even as God said." Quotation from Leviticus 26:12; Jeremiah 31:33; 32:38; Ezekiel 37:26, 27; cf. Matthew 28:20; John 14:23. walk in them—rather, among them." As "dwell" implies the divine presence, so "walk," the divine operation. God's dwelling in the body and soul of saints may be illustrated by its opposite, demoniacal possession of body and soul. my people—rather, "they shall be to me a people." 17. Quoted from Isaiah 52:11, with the freedom of one inspired, who gives variations sanctioned by the Holy Spirit. be ye separate—"be separated" (Hos. 4:17). touch not the unclean thing—rather, "anything unclean" (ch. 7:1; Mic. 2:10). Touching is more polluting, as implying participation, than seeing. receive you—The Greek implies, "to myself"; as persons heretofore out of doors, but now admitted within (ch. 5:1-10). With this accords the clause, "Come out from among them," viz., so as to be received to me. So Ezekiel 20:41, "I will accept you"; and Zephaniah 3:19; "gather her that was driven out." "The intercourse of believers with the world should resemble that of angels, who, when they have been sent a message from heaven, discharge their office with the utmost promptness, and joyfully fly back home to the presence of God" (I Cor. 7:31; 5:9, 10). 18. Translate, "I will be to you in the relation of a Father, and ye shall be to me in the relation of sons. . . ." This is a still more endearing relation than (vs. 16), "I will be their God, and they . . . My people." Cf. the promise to Solomon (I Chron. 28:6; Isa. 43:6; Rev. 21:3, 7; Jer. 31:1, 9). Lord Almighty—The Lord the Universal Ruler: nowhere else found but in Revelation. The greatness of the Promiser enhances the greatness of the promises.

sense and true piety show the absurdity of two such persons pretending to walk together in a way in which they are not agreed. A very wise and very holy man has given his judgment on this point: "A man who is truly pious, marrying with an unconverted woman, will either draw back to perdition, or have a cross during life." The same may be said of a pious woman marrying an unconverted man. Such persons cannot say this petition of the Lord's Prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." They plunge into it of their own accord. For what fellowship? As righteousness cannot have communion with unrighteousness, and light cannot dwell with darkness, so Christ can have no concord with Belial, nor can he that believeth have any with an infidel. All these points were self-evident; how then could they keep up the profession of Christianity, or pretend to be under its influence, while they associated with the unrighteous, had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?

16. What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Nothing could appear more abominable to a Jew than an idol in the Temple of God. Here, then, could be no agreement; the worship of the two is wholly incompatible. Ye are the temple of the living God. God intends to make the heart of every believer His own house. I will dwell in them, and walk in them. The words are very emphatic: "I will inhabit in them." I will be their God. They shall have no other God, they shall have none besides Me; and if they take Me for their God, I will be to them all that an infinite, eternal, and self-sufficient Being can be to His intelligent offspring. They shall be my people. If they take Me for their God, their supreme and eternal Good, I will take them for My people; and instruct, enlighten, defend, provide for, support, and bless them, as if I had none else to care for in the creation.

17. Wherefore come out from among them. Is it not plain from this and the following verse that God would be their God only on the ground of their taking Him for such, and that this depended on their being separated from the works and workers of iniquity?

18. Will be a Father unto you. I will act towards you as the most affectionate father can act towards his most tender and best beloved child. And ye shall be my sons and daughters. You shall all be of the household of God, the family of heaven; you shall be holy, happy, and continually safe. Saith the Lord Almighty. The Lord, the Governor of all things. Earthly fathers, however loving and affectionate, may fail to provide for their children because not everything is at their disposal; they may frequently lack both the power and the means, though to will may be present with them. But the Lord who made and who governs all things can never lack will, power, nor means. The promise is sure to the children, and the children are those who take the Almighty for their God. For the promise belongs to no soul that is not separate from sinful ways, works, and men. Those who touch the unclean thing, i.e., who do what God forbids, and hold communion with unrighteousness, can never stand in the endearing relation of children to God Almighty: and this is most forcibly stated by God himself in these verses, and in the beginning of the following chapter, the first verse of which should conclude this.

CHAPTER 7

These verses contain a double exhortation:

I. To make a progress in holiness, v. 1. 1. The dying unto sin. We must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit. There are sins of the flesh, that are committed with the body, and sins of the spirit, and we must cleanse ourselves from the filthiness of both.

CHAPTER 7

VSS. 1-16. SELF-PURIFICATION THEIR DUTY RESULTING FROM THE FOREGOING. HIS LOVE TO THEM, AND JOY AT THE GOOD EFFECTS ON THEM OF HIS FORMER EPISTLE, AS REPORTED BY TITUS. 1. cleanse ourselves—This is the conclusion of the exhortation (ch. 6:1, 14; I John 3:3; Rev. 22:11). filthiness—"the unclean thing" (ch. 6:17). of the flesh—for instance, fornication, prevalent at Corinth (I Cor. 6:15-18). and spirit—for instance, idolatry, direct or indirect (I Cor. 6:9; 8:1, 7; 10:7, 21, 22). The spirit (Ps. 32:2) receives pollution through the flesh, the instrument of uncleanness.

1. Having therefore these promises. The promises mentioned in the last three verses of the preceding chapter, to which this verse should certainly be joined. Let us cleanse ourselves. Let us apply to Him for the requisite grace of purification; and avoid everything in spirit and practice which is opposite to the doctrine of God, and which has a tendency to pollute the soul. Filthiness of the flesh. The apostle undoubtedly means drunkenness, fornication, adultery, and all such sins as are done immediately against the body; and by filthiness of the . . . spirit, all impure desires, unholy thoughts, and polluting imaginations. If we avoid and abhor evil inclinations, and turn away our eyes from beholding vanity, incentives

2. The living unto righteousness and holiness. We must be still perfecting holiness, and not be contented with sincerity (which is our gospel perfection), without aiming at sinless perfection. This we must do in the fear of God; there is no holiness without it.

II. To show a due regard to the ministers of the gospel: Receive us, v. 2. If the ministers of the gospel are thought contemptible because of their office, there is danger lest the gospel itself be contemned also. He had done nothing to forfeit their esteem (v. 2).

He did not herein reflect upon them for want of affection to him, v. 3. He assures them again of his great affection to them, insomuch that he could spend his last breath at Corinth, and live and die with them.

It was his great affection to them that made him use such boldness of speech towards them, and caused him to glory, or make his boast of them.

Verses 5–11

I. How he was distressed, v. 5. He was troubled when he did not meet with Titus at Troas, and afterwards when for some time he did not meet with him in Macedonia. There were fightings without and there were fears within.

perfecting holiness—The cleansing away impurity is a positive step towards holiness (ch. 6:17). It is not enough to begin; the end crowns the work (Gal. 3:3; 5:7; Phil. 1:6). fear of God—often conjoined with the consideration of the most glorious promises (ch. 5:11; Heb. 4:1). Privilege and promise go hand in hand.

2. Receive us—with enlarged hearts (ch. 6:13). we have wronged . . . corrupted . . . defrauded no man—(cf. vs. 9). This is the ground on which he asks their reception of (making room for) him in their hearts. We wronged none by an undue exercise of apostolic authority; vs. 13 gives an instance in point. We have corrupted none, viz., by beguilements and flatteries, while preaching "another Gospel," as the false teachers did (ch. 11:3, 4). We have defrauded none by "making a gain" of you (ch. 12:17). Modestly he leaves them to supply the positive good which he had done; suffering all things himself that they might be benefited (vss. 9, 12; ch. 12:13).

3. In excusing myself, I do not accuse you, as though you suspected me of such things [MENOCHIUS], or as though you were guilty of such things; for I speak only of the false apostles "ESTIUS and Greek commentators]. Rather, "as though you were ungrateful and treacherous" [BEZA]. I . . . said before—in ch. 6:11, 12; cf. Phil. 1:7. die and live with you—the height of friendship. I am ready to die and live with you and for you (Phil. 1:7, 20, 24; 2:17, 18). Cf. as to Christ, John 10:11.

4. boldness of speech—(cf. ch. 6:11). glorying of you—Not only do I speak with unreserved openness to you, but I glory (boast) greatly to others in your behalf, in speaking of you. filled with comfort—at the report of Titus (vss. 6, 7, 9, 13; ch. 1:4). exceeding joyful—Greek, I overabound with joy (vss. 7, 9, 16).

our tribulation—described in vs. 5; also in ch. 4:7, 8; 6: 4, 5.

5. Greek, "For also" (for "even"). This verse is thus connected with ch. 2:12, 13, "When I came to Troas, I had no rest in my spirit"; so "also" now, when I came to Macedonia, my "flesh" had no rest (he, by the term "flesh," excepts his spiritual consolations) from "fightings with adversaries "without" (I Cor. 5:12), and from fears for the Corinthian believers "within" the Church, owing to "false brethren" (ch. 11:26). Cf. ch. 4:8; Deuteronomy 32:25, to which he seems to allude.

to evil being thus lessened (for the eye affects the heart), there will be the less danger of our falling into outward sin. And if we avoid all outward occasions of sinning, evil propensities will certainly be lessened. All this is our work under the common aids of the grace of God. We may turn away our eyes and ears from evil, or we may indulge both in what will infallibly beget evil desires and tempers in the soul. How can those expect God to purify their hearts who are continually indulging their eyes, ears, and hands in what is forbidden, and in what tends to increase and bring into action all the evil propensities of the soul? Perfecting holiness. Getting the whole mind of Christ brought into the soul. This is the grand object of a genuine Christian's pursuit. The means of accomplishing this are: (1) Resisting and avoiding sin, in all its inviting and seducing forms. (2) Setting the fear of God before our eyes, that we may dread His displeasure, and abhor whatever might excite it, and whatever might provoke Him to withhold His manna from our mouths.

2. Receive us. This address is variously understood. Receive us into your affections—love us as we love you. Receive us as your apostles and teachers; we have given you full proof that God has both sent and owned us. Receive, "comprehend," what we now say to you, and carefully mark it. We have wronged no man. We have never acted contrary to the strictest justice. We have corrupted no man. With any false doctrine or pernicious opinion. We have defrauded no man. Of any part of his property. But what have your false teachers done? They have beguiled you from the simplicity of the truth, and thus corrupted your minds, chap. xi. 3. They have brought you into bondage; they have taken of you, devoured you, exalted themselves against you, and you have patiently suffered all this, chap. xi. 20. It is plain that he refers here to the false apostle or teacher which they had among them.

3. I speak not this to condemn you. I do not speak to reproach but to correct you. I wish you to open your eyes and see how you are corrupted, spoiled, and impoverished by those whom you have incautiously preferred to the true apostles of Jesus Christ. I have said before, that ye are in our hearts. He has in effect and substance said this in chap. i. 6-8; ii. 4, 12; iii. 2; and v. 13. To die and live with you. An expression which points out the strongest affection, as in cases where love blinds us to the faults of those whom we love, and causes us to prefer them to all others.

4. Great is my boldness of speech. He seems to refer to the manner in which he spoke of them to others. Great is my glorying of you. They had probably been very loving and affectionate previously to the time in which they were perverted by their false apostle. He therefore had boasted of them in all the churches. I am filled with comfort. My affection for you has still the most powerful ascendancy in my soul. Here we may see the affection of the most tender father to his children. I am exceeding joyful. "I superabound in joy"; I have a joy beyond expression—an extremely rare verb. I have not met with it in any Greek author; and it occurs nowhere in the New Testament but here and in Rom. v. 20. In all our tribulation. Perhaps epi here should be rendered "under" instead of in, as it signifies, Mark ii. 26; Luke iii. 2; Acts xi. 28. "Under all our tribulations, I feel inexpressible joy on your account."

5. When we were come into Macedonia. Paul, having left Ephesus, came to Troas, where he stopped some time; afterwards he came to Macedonia, whence he wrote this Epistle. Our flesh had no rest. So exceedingly anxious was he to know the success of his First Epistle to them. Without were fightings. The oppositions of pagans, Jews, and false brethren. Within were fears. Uncertain conjectures relative to the success of his Epistle; fears lest the severity of it should alienate their affections utterly from him; fears lest the party of the incestuous person should have prevailed; fears lest the teaching of the false apostle should have perverted their minds from the simplicity of the truth. All was uncertainty, all apprehension; and the Spirit of God did not think proper to remove the causes of these apprehensions in any ex-

MATTHEW HENRY

II. How he was comforted, v. 6, 7. The very coming of Titus was some comfort to him. The good news which Titus brought concerning the Corinthians was matter of greater consolation. He found Titus to be comforted in them; and this filled the apostle with comfort. He ascribes all his comfort to God as the author. It was God who comforted him by the coming of Titus, v. 6.

III. How greatly he rejoiced at their repentance. The apostle was sorry that it was needful he should make those sorry whom he would rather have made glad, v. 8.

But now he rejoiced, when he found they had sorrowed to repentance, v. 9. The effect of it (repentance unto salvation, v. 10), made him rejoice.

1. The antecedent of true repentance is godly sorrow. It was a godly sorrow, because a sorrow for sin. Godly sorrow will end in salvation; but worldly sorrow worketh death. The sorrows of worldly men for worldly things will bring down grey hairs the sooner to the grave. Humiliation and godly sorrow are previously necessary in order to repentance, and both of them are from God, the giver of all grace.

2. The happy fruits and consequences of true repentance are mentioned (v. 11). Where the heart is changed, the life and actions will be changed too. It wrought indignation at sin; it wrought fear, a fear of reverence, an awful fear of God, a cautious fear of sin, and a jealous fear of themselves. It wrought vehement desires after a thorough reformation of what had been amiss. It wrought zeal, a mixture of love and anger, a zeal for duty, and against sin. And thus in all things had they approved themselves to be clear in that matter. They were penitent, and therefore clear of guilt before God, who would pardon and not punish them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Translate in the order required by the Greek, "But he that comforteth those that are cast down, even God." Those that are of an high spirit are not susceptible of such comfort. 7. when he told us—Greek, "telling us." We shared in the comfort which Titus felt in recording your desire (vs. 13). He rejoiced in telling the news; we in hearing them [ALFORD]. earnest desire—Greek, "longing desire," viz., to see me [GROTIUS]; or, in general, towards me, to please me. mourning—over your own remissness in not having immediately punished the sin (I Cor. 5:1, etc.) which called forth my rebuke. fervent mind—Greek, "zeal" (cf. vs. 11; John 2:17). toward me—Greek, "for me"; for my sake. They in Paul's behalf showed the zeal against the sin which Paul would have shown had he been present. rejoiced the more—more than before, at the mere coming of Titus. 8. with a letter—Greek, "in the letter" viz., the first Epistle to the Corinthians. I do not repent, though I did repent—Translate, "I do not regret it, though I did regret it." The Greek words for regret and repent are distinct. Paul was almost regretting, through parental tenderness, his having used rebukes calculated to grieve the Corinthians; but now that he has learned from Titus the salutary effect produced on them, he no longer regrets it. for I perceive . . .—This is explanatory of "I did repent" or "regret it," and is parenthetical ("for I perceive that that Epistle did make you sorry, though it was but for a season"). 9. Now I rejoice—Whereas "I did repent" or regret having made you sorry by my letter, I rejoice NOW, not that ye were caused sorrow, but that your sorrow resulted in your repentance. ye sorrowed—rather, as before, "ye were made sorry." after a godly manner—lit., "according to God," i.e., your sorrow having regard to God, and rendering your mind conformable to God (Rom. 14:22; I Pet. 4:6). that—Translate in Greek order, "to the end that (cf. ch. 11:9) ye might in nothing receive damage from us," which ye would have received, had your sorrow been other than that "after a godly manner" (vs. 10). 10. worketh . . . worketh—In the best Greek reading the translation is, "worketh (simply) . . . worketh out." "Sorrow" is not repentance, but, where it is "godly," "worketh" it; i.e., contributes or tends to it (the same Greek word is in Rom. 13:10). The "sorrow of the world" (i.e., such as is felt by the worldly) "worketh out," as its result at last, (eternal) death (the same Greek verb is in ch. 4:17, where see the Note). repentance . . . not to be repented of—There is not in the Greek this play on words, so that the word qualified is not "repentance" merely, but "repentance unto salvation"; this, he says, none will ever regret, however attended with "sorrow" at the time. "Repentance" implies a coming to a right mind; "regret" implies merely uneasiness of feeling at the past or present, and is applied even to the remorse of Judas (Matt. 27:3; Greek, "stricken with remorse," not as English Version, "repented himself"); so that, though always accompanying repentance, it is not always accompanied by repentance. "Repentance" removes the impediments in the way of "salvation" (to which "death," viz., of the soul, is opposed). "The sorrow of the world" is not at the sin itself, but at its penal consequences: so that the tears of pain are no sooner dried up, than the pleasures of ungodliness are renewed. So Pharaoh, Exodus 9:27, 28-30; and Saul, I Sam. 15: 23-30. Cf. Isaiah 9:13; Revelation 16:10, 11. Contrast David's "godly sorrow," II Samuel 12:13, and Peters, Matthew 26:75. 11. Confirmation of vs. 10 from the Corinthians' own experience. carefulness—solicitude, lit., "diligence"; opposed to their past negligence in the matter. in you—Greek "for you." yea—not only "carefulness" or diligence, but also "clearing of yourselves," viz., to me by Titus: anxiety to show you disapproved of the deed. indignation—against the offender. fear—of the wrath of God, and of sinning any more [SCLATER and CALVIN]; fear of Paul [GROTIUS], (I Cor. 4:2, 19-21). vehement desire—longing for restoration to Paul's approval [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. "Fear" is in spite of one's self. "Longing desire" is spontaneous, and implies strong love and an aspiration for correction [CALVIN]. "Desire" for the presence of Paul, as he had given them the hope of it (I Cor. 4:19; 16:5) [GROTIUS and ESTIUS]. zeal—for right and for God's honor against what is wrong. Or, "for the good of the soul of the offender" [BENGEL]. revenge—Translate, "Exacting of punishment" (I Cor. 5:2, 3). Their "carefulness" was exhibited in the six points just specified: "clearing of themselves," and "indignation" in relation to themselves; "fear" and "vehement desire" in respect to the apostle; "zeal" and "revenge" in respect to the offender [BENGEL]; (cf. vs. 7). In all—the respects traordinary way.

6. Comforted us by the coming of Titus. Who brought him a most satisfactory account of the success of his Epistle, and the good state of the Corinthian church.

7. He told us your earnest desire. To see me, and correct what was amiss among yourselves. Your mourning. Because you had sinned. Your fervent mind. The zeal you felt to testify your affectionate regard for me.

8. I do not repent, though I did repent. Though I had many doubts in my mind concerning the success of my letter, and though I grieved that I was obliged to write with so much severity, the case absolutely requiring it, yet now I am not sorry that I have written that letter, because I find it has completely answered the end for which it was sent.

9. Ye sorrowed to repentance. You had such a sorrow as produced a complete change of mind and conduct. We see that a man may sorrow and yet not repent. Made sorry after a godly manner. It was not a sorrow because you were found out, but a sorrow because you had sinned against God. Damage by us in nothing. Your repentance prevented that exercise of my apostolic duty which would have consigned your bodies to destruction, that your souls might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

10. For godly sorrow. That which has the breach of God's holy law for its object. Worketh repentance, a thorough "change of mind" unto salvation, because the person who feels it cannot rest till he finds pardon through the mercy of God. But the sorrow of the world worketh death. Sorrow for lost goods, lost friends, death of relatives, when it is poignant and deep, produces diseases, increases those that already exist, and often leads men to lay desperate hands on themselves. This sorrow leads to destruction, the other leads to salvation; the one leads to heaven, the other to hell.

11. What carefulness it wrought in you. Carefulness of obeying my directions, v. 15; yea, what clearing of yourselves from guilt by inflicting censures on the guilty person, and putting away evil from among you, 1 Cor. xv. 18; yea, what indignation against him who had dishonored his profession, and defiled the church; yea, what fear of my displeasure, and the rod which I threatened, 1 Cor. iv. 21; yea, what vehement desire to rectify what was amiss in this matter, v. 7; yea, what zeal for me; yea, what revenge in punishing the delinquent!

In all things. In the whole of your conduct in this affair since you have received my letter, ye have approved yourselves to be clear; not only to be clear of contumacy and obstinate persistence in your former conduct, but to have done all in the compass of your power to rectify the abuses which had crept in among you.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 12–16

The apostle endeavours to comfort the Corinthians. He had a good design in his former epistle, which might be thought severe, v. 12. It was not chiefly for his cause that did the wrong, nor was it merely for his cause that suffered wrong, but it was also to manifest his sincere concern and care for them.

Titus was rejoiced, and his spirit refreshed, with their comfort, and this comforted and rejoiced the apostle also (v. 13); and, as Titus was comforted while he was with them, so when he remembered his reception among them, the thought of these things increased his affections to them, v. 15. Great comfort and joy follow upon godly sorrow. Paul was glad, and Titus was glad, and the Corinthians were comforted. Well may all this joy be on earth, when there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. He was not ashamed of his boasting concerning them to Titus (v. 14); for he was not disappointed in his expectation concerning them, and he could now with great joy declare what confidence he still had in them as to all things.

just stated. clear—Greek, "pure," viz., from complicity in the guilty deed. "Approved yourselves," Greek, "commended yourselves." Whatever suspicion of complicity rested on you (I Cor. 5:2, 6) through your former remissness, you have cleared off by your present strenuousness in reprobating the deed. 12. though I wrote unto you—"making you sorry with my letter" (vs. 8). his cause that suffered wrong—the father of the incestuous person who had his father's wife (I Cor. 5:1). The father, thus it seems, was alive. that our care for you . . .—Some of the oldest MSS. read thus, "That YOUR care for US might be made manifest unto you. . . ." But the words, "unto you," thus, would be rather obscure; still the obscurity of the genuine reading may have been the very reason for the change being made by correctors into the reading of English Version. ALFORD explains the reading: "He wrote in order to bring out their zeal on his behalf (i.e., to obey his command), and make it manifest to themselves in God's sight, i.e., to bring out among them their zeal to regard and obey him." But some of the oldest MSS. and versions (including the Vulgate and old Italian) support English Version. And the words, "to you," suit it better than the other reading. Ch. 2:4, "I wrote . . . that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you," plainly accords with it, and disproves ALFORD's assertion that English Version is inconsistent with the fact as to the purpose of his letter. His writing, he says, was not so much for the sake of the individual offender, or the individual offended, but from his "earnest care" or concern for the welfare of the Church. 13. The oldest MSS. read thus, "Therefore (Greek, "for this cause," viz., because our aim has been attained) we have been (English Version, "were," is not so accurate) comforted; yea (Greek, "but"), in OUR comfort we exceedingly the more joyed for the joy of Titus . . ." (cf. vs. 7). 14. anything—i.e., at all. I am not ashamed—"I am not put to shame," viz., by learning from Titus that you did not realize the high character I gave him of you. as . . . all things . . . in truth, even so our boasting . . . is found a truth—As our speaking in general to you was true (ch. 1:18), so our particular boasting to Titus concerning you is now, by his report, proved to be truth (cf. ch. 9:2). Some oldest MSS. read expressly, "concerning you"; this in either reading is the sense. 15. his inward affection—lit., bowels (cf. ch. 6:12; Phil. 1:8; 2:1; Col. 3:12). obedience—(ch. 2:9).

fear and trembling—with trembling anxiety to obey my wishes, and fearful lest there should be aught in yourselves to offend him and me (vs. 11; cf. I Cor. 2:3).

16. therefore—omitted in the oldest MSS. The conclusion is more emphatical without it. that I have confidence in you in all things—rather, as Greek, "that in everything I am of good courage concerning (lit., in the case of) you," as contrasted with my former doubts concerning you.

ADAM CLARKE

The Corinthians were not clear, i.e., innocent or void of blame in the fact, but they were clear of all blame in their endeavors to remove the evil.

12. Not for his cause that had done the wrong. Viz., the incestuous person. Nor for his cause that suffered wrong. Some think the apostle means himself; others, that he means the church at Corinth, the singular being put for the plural; others, the family of the incestuous person; and others, the father of the incestuous person. If this latter opinion be adopted, it would seem to intimate that the father of this person was yet alive, which would make the transgression more flagrant; but these words might be spoken in reference to the father, if dead, whose cause should be vindicated; as his injured honor might be considered, like Abel's blood, to be crying from the earth. But that our care for you . . . might appear. It was not to get the delinquent punished, nor merely to do justice to those who had suffered in this business, that the apostle wrote his Epistle to them, but that they might have the fullest proof of his fatherly affection for them, and his concern for the honor of God.

13. For the joy of Titus. Titus, who had now met Paul in Macedonia, gave him the most flattering accounts of the improved state of the Corinthian church; and indeed their kind usage of Titus was a full proof of their affection for Paul.

14. For if I have boasted. The apostle had given Titus a very high character of this church, and of their attachment to himself, and doubtless this was the case previously to the evil teacher coming among them, who had succeeded in changing their conduct, and changing in a great measure their character also. But now they return to themselves, so that the good character which the apostle gave them before, and which they had for a time forfeited, is now as applicable to them as ever. Therefore his boasting of them is still found a truth.

15. Whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all. This is a very natural picture; he represents Titus as overjoyed even while he is delivering his account of the Corinthian church. He expatiated on it with extreme delight, and thereby showed at once both his love for Paul and his love for them. He loved them because they so loved the apostle; and he loved them because they had shown such kindness to himself; and he loved them because he found so many excellent and rare gifts, joined to so much humility, producing such an exemplary and holy life. With fear and trembling ye received him. You reverenced his authority; you were obedient to his directions; and you dreaded lest anything should be undone or ill done which he had delivered to you in the name of God.

16. I have confidence in you in all things. It appears that the apostle was now fully persuaded, from the accounts given by Titus, that every scandal had been put away from this church; that the faction which had long distracted and divided them was nearly broken; that all was on the eve of being restored to its primitive purity and excellence; and that their character was now so firmly fixed that there was no reason to apprehend that they should be again tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

I. The apostle takes occasion from the good example of the churches of Macedonia to exhort the Corinthians to the good work of charity.

1. He acquaints them with their great liberality, v. 1. It is great grace and favour from God, if we are made useful to others.

CHAPTER 8

Vss. 1-24. THE COLLECTION FOR THE SAINTS; THE READINESS OF THE MACEDONIANS A PATTERN TO THE CORINTHIANS; CHRIST THE HIGHEST PATTERN; EACH IS TO GIVE WILLINGLY AFTER HIS ABILITY; TITUS AND TWO OTHERS ARE THE AGENTS ACCREDITED TO COMPLETE THE COLLECTION. 1. we do you to wit—we make known to you. the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia—Their liberality was not of themselves naturally, but of God's grace bestowed on them, and enabling them to be the instrument of God's "grace" to others (vss. 6, 19). The importance given in this Epistle to the collection, arose as well from Paul's engagement (Gal. 2:10), as also chiefly from his hope to conciliate the Judaizing Christians at Jerusalem to himself and the Gentile believers, by such an act of love on the part of the latter towards their

CHAPTER 8

1. Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit. In all our dignified version very few ill-constructed sentences can be found; however here is one, and the worst in the book. We do you to wit is in the original, "We made known unto you." This is plain and intelligible, the other is not so; and the form is now obsolete. The grace of God bestowed. The charitable contribution made by the churches in Macedonia, to which they were excited by the grace or influence of God upon their hearts; not bestowed on, but "given in." That charis means "liberality" appears from v. 6: "We desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish" this charitable contribution. And v. 7: That "ye abound" in this liberal contribution. And v. 19: "Who was also chosen of the churches to

MATTHEW HENRY

2. He commends the charity of the Macedonians. They were themselves in distress, yet they contributed to the relief of others, v. 2. As they had abundance of joy in the midst of tribulation, they abounded in their liberality; they gave out of a little, trusting in God to provide for them. They gave very largely, with the riches of liberality (v. 2);

it was according to, yea beyond, their power (v. 3), as much as could well be expected from them, if not more. They were willing of themselves (v. 3), and were so far from needing that Paul should urge and press them that they prayed him with much entreaty to receive the gift, v. 4.

Their charity was founded in true piety (v. 5). They solemnly made a fresh surrender of themselves, and all they had, unto the Lord Jesus Christ, sanctifying their contributions to God's honour, by first giving themselves to the Lord. We should give ourselves to God; we cannot bestow ourselves better. What we give or bestow for charitable uses will not be accepted of God, unless we first give ourselves to the Lord.

II. The apostle tells them that Titus was desired to go and make a collection among them (v. 6). Titus had already begun this work among them, therefore he was desired to finish it. When so good a work had already prospered in so good a hand, it would be a pity if it should not proceed and be finished. The work of charity will often succeed the best when the most proper persons are employed to solicit contributions and dispose of them.

I. He urges upon them the consideration of their eminence in other gifts and graces, and would have them excel in this of charity also, v. 7. When he would persuade the Corinthians to this good thing, he commends them for other good things. Most people love to be complimented, especially when we ask a gift of them; and it is a justice we owe to those in whom God's grace shines to give them their due commendation. What it was that the Corinthians abounded in. Faith is mentioned first, for that is the root. Those who abound in faith will abound in other graces and good works also. To their faith was added utterance. Many have faith who want utterance. With their utterance there appeared knowledge. They abounded also in all diligence. Those who have great knowledge and ready utterance are not always the most diligent Christians. Great talkers are not always the best doers. And further, they had abundant love to their ministers. Now to all these good things the apostle desires them to add this grace also, to abound in charity to the poor. He takes care to prevent any misapprehensions, and tells them (v. 8) he does not speak by commandment. I give my advice, v. 10. Many a thing which is good for us to do, yet cannot be said to be, by express and indispensable commandment, our duty at this or that time.

II. Another argument is taken from the consideration of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. And you know, saith the apostle, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ (v. 9), that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor; that ye thereby might be made rich, rich in the love of God, rich in the blessings of the new covenant, rich in the hopes of eternal life. We should be charitable to the poor out of what we have, because we ourselves live upon the charity of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Jewish brethren.

2. trial of affliction—The Greek expresses, "in affliction (or, "tribulation") which tested them"; lit., "in a great testing of affliction." abundance of their joy—The greater was the depth of their poverty, the greater was the abundance of their joy. A delightful contrast in terms, and triumph, in fact, of spirit over flesh. their deep poverty—Greek, "their poverty down to the death of it." abounded unto the riches . . .—another beautiful contrast in terms: their poverty had the effect, not of producing stinted gifts, but of "abounding in the riches of liberality" (not as Margin, "simplicity"; though the idea of singleness of motive to God's glory and man's good, probably enters into the idea); (cf. Rom. 12:8, and Margin; ch. 9:11, Note, 13; Jas. 1:5). 3-5. they were willing—rather, supply from vs. 5, the ellipsis thus, "According to their power . . . yea, and beyond their power, THEY GAVE." of themselves—not only not being besought, but themselves beseeching us. 4. that we would receive—omitted in the oldest MSS. Translate therefore, "Beseeching of us . . . the grace and fellowship of (i.e., to grant them the favor of sharing in) the ministering unto the saints." The Macedonian contributions must have been from Philippi, because Philippi was the only church that contributed to Paul's support (Phil. 4:10, 15, 16). 5. And this they did, not as we hoped—Translate, "And not as we hoped (i.e., far beyond our hopes), but their own selves gave they first to the Lord." "First," not indicating priority of time, but first of all, above all in importance. The giving of themselves takes precedency of their other gifts, as being the motive which led them to the latter (Rom. 15: 16). by the will of God—not "according to the will of God," but "moved by the will of God, who made them willing" (Phil. 2:13). It is therefore called (vs. 1), "the grace of God." 6. Insomuch that—As we saw the Macedonians' alacrity in giving, we could not but exhort Titus, that as we collected in Macedonia, so he in Corinth should complete the work of collecting which he had already begun there, lest ye, the wealthy people of Corinth, should be outdone in liberality by the poor Macedonians. as he had begun—Greek, "previously begun," viz., the collection at Corinth, before the Macedonians began to contribute, during the visit to Corinth from which he had just returned. finish in you the same grace—complete among you this act of grace or beneficence on your part. also—as well as other things which he had to do among them [ALFORD]. 7. in faith—(ch. 1:24). utterance—(Note, I Cor. 1: 5). Not as ALFORD, "doctrine" or "word." knowledge—(I Cor. 8:1). diligence—in everything that is good. your love to us—lit., "love from you (i.e., on your part) in us" (i.e., which has us for its object; which is felt in the case of us). 8. not by commandment—"not by way of commandment." by the occasion of the forwardness of others, and . . .—rather, "But by (mention of) the forwardness of others (as an inducement to you), and to prove (lit., proving) the sincerity of your love." The Greek is "by means of," not "on account of the forwardness . . . ." BENGEL, ELLICOTT, and others translate, "By means of the forwardness of others, proving the sincerity of your love ALSO." The former is the simpler construction in the Greek. 9. ye know the grace—the act of gratuitous love whereby the Lord emptied Himself of His previous heavenly glory (Phil. 2:6, 7) for your sakes. became poor—Yet this is not demanded of you (vs. 14); but merely that, without impoverishing yourselves, you should relieve others with your abundance. If the Lord did so much more, and at so much heavier a cost, for your sakes; much more may you do an act of love to your brethren at so little a sacrifice of self. might be rich—in the heavenly glory which constitutes His riches, and all other things, so far as is really good for us (cf. I Cor. 3: 21, 22). 10. advice—Herein he does not (as some misinterpret the passage) disclaim inspiration for the advice he gives; but under the Spirit, states that it is his "opinion" [ALFORD] or "judgment" [ELLICOTT, and others], not a command, that so their travel with us" with this charitable contribution, "which is administered," which is to be dispensed, "by us." This charity is styled the grace of God, either from its exceeding greatness (as the "cedars of God" and "mountains of God" signify great cedars and great mountains, Ps. xxxvi. 6; lxxx. 10); or rather, it is called so as proceeding from God, who is the Dispenser of all good, and the Giver of this disposition; for the motive of charity must come from Him. The churches of Macedonia. These were Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea.

2. In a great trial of affliction. The sense of this verse is the following: The Macedonians, though both poor and persecuted, rejoiced exceedingly that an opportunity was afforded them of doing good to their more impoverished and more persecuted brethren.

3. For to their power. In their liberality they had no rule but their ability; they believed they were bound to contribute all they could; and even this rule they transgressed, for they went beyond their power—they deprived themselves for a time of the necessaries of life, in order to give to others who were destitute even of necessaries.

4. Praying us with much intreaty. We had not to solicit them to this great act of kindness; they even entreated us to accept their bounty, and to take on ourselves the administration or application of it to the wants of the poor in Judea.

5. Not as we hoped. They far exceeded our expectations, for they consecrated themselves entirely to the work of God, giving themselves and all they possessed first unto the Lord; and then, as they saw that it was the will of God that they should come especially forward in this charitable work, they gave themselves to us to assist to the uttermost in providing relief for the suffering Christians in Judea.

6. That we desired Titus. Titus had probably laid the plan of this contribution when he was before at Corinth, according to the direction given by the apostle, 1 Cor. xvi. 1. The same grace. Liberality. See the note on v. 1.

7. As ye abound in every thing. In faith, crediting the whole testimony of God; in utterance, "in doctrine," knowing what to teach; knowledge of God's will, and prudence to direct you in teaching and doing it; in diligence, to amend all that is wrong among you, and to do what is right; and in your love to us, whom now you prize the apostles of the Lord, and your pastors in Him. Abound in this grace also. Be as eminent for your charitable disposition as you are for your faith, doctrine, knowledge, diligence, and love.

8. I speak not by commandment. I do not positively order this; I assume no right or authority over your property; what you devote of your substance to charitable purposes must be your own work, and a freewill offering. The forwardness of others. Viz., the churches of Macedonia, which had already exerted themselves so very much in this good work. And the apostle here intimates that he takes this opportunity to apprise them of the zeal of the Macedonians, lest those at Corinth, who excelled in every other gift, should be outdone in this.

9. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. This was the strongest argument of all; and it is urged home by the apostle with admirable address. Ye know. You are acquainted with God's ineffable love in sending Jesus Christ into the world; and you know the grace—the infinite benevolence of Christ himself. That, though he was rich. The Possessor, as He was the Creator, of the heavens and the earth. For your sakes he became poor. He emptied himself, and "made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and . . . humbled himself . . . unto death, even the death of the cross." That ye through his poverty—through His humiliation and death, might be rich—might regain your forfeited inheritance, and be enriched with every grace of His Holy Spirit, and brought at last to His eternal glory.

10. Herein I give my advice. For I speak not by way of commandment, v. 8. For this is expedient for you. It is necessary you should do this to preserve a consistency of conduct; for

III. Another argument is taken from their forwardness to begin this good work. It was expedient for them to finish what they had begun, v. 10, 11. Good purposes, indeed, are good things; they are like buds and blossoms, pleasant to behold, and give hopes of good fruit; but they are lost, and signify nothing, without performances which would be acceptable to God (v. 12). When men purpose that which is good, and endeavour to perform also, God will accept of what they can do, and not reject them for what is not in their power to do. This scripture will by no means justify those who think good meanings are enough.

IV. Another argument is taken from the distribution of the things of this world, and the mutability of human affairs, v. 13–15. Those who have a greater abundance may supply those who are in want, that there may be room for charity. It is the will of God that, by our mutually supplying one another, there should be some sort of equality.

All should think themselves concerned to supply those who are in want. This is illustrated by the instance of gathering and distributing manna in the wilderness: he that had gathered much had nothing over.

I. He commends Titus for his earnest care for them. This is mentioned with thankfulness to God (v. 16), and it is cause of thankfulness if God hath put it into the hearts of any to do us or others any good. He commends him for his readiness to this present service, v. 17. Asking charity for the relief of others is looked upon as a thankless office; yet it is a good office.

II. He commends another brother, who was sent with Titus. It is generally thought that this was Luke. He is commended as a man whose praise was in the gospel through all the churches, v. 18.

offering might be free and spontaneous. this—my giving you an advice, not a command. who have begun before—"seeing that ye have begun before" the Macedonian churches; "a year ago" should be connected with this clause. not only to do, but also to be forward—There were three steps: (1) the forwardness, more literally, "the will"; (2) the setting about it, lit., "doing it"; (3) completion of it [ALFORD]. In the two former, not only the act, but the intention, the Corinthians preceded the Macedonians. BENGEL explains, "Not only to do" FOR THE PAST YEAR, "but also to be forward" or willing FOR THIS YEAR. ELLICOTT translates, "already," instead of "before": "Ye began already a year ago, not only to do, but also to be forward." It appears hence, that something had been done in the matter a year before; other texts, however, show the collection was not yet paid (cf. vs. 11 and ch. 9:5, 7). This agrees with one, and only one, supposition, viz., that every man had laid by in store the fund from which he was afterwards to contribute, the very case which is shown by I Cor. 16:2 to have existed [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. 11. perform—"complete the doing also" (Note, vs. 10). a readiness to will—Greek, "the readiness of will"; referring to vs. 10, where the Greek for "to be forward," ought to be translated as here, "to will." performance—"completion" [ALFORD]. The godly should show the same zeal to finish, as well as to begin well, which the worldly exhibit in their undertakings (Jer. 44:25). 12. For—Following up the rule "out of that which ye have" (vs. 11), and no more. a willing mind—rather, as Greek, "the readiness," viz., to will, referring to vs. 11. accepted—Greek "favorably accepted." according to that a man hath—The oldest MSS. omit "a man." Translate, "According to whatsoever it have"; the willing mind, or "readiness" to will, is personified [ALFORD]. Or better, as BENGEL, "He is accepted according to whatsoever he have"; so ch. 9:7, The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Cf. as to David, I Kings 8:18. God accepts the will for the deed. He judges not according to what a man has the opportunity to do, but according to what he would do if he had the opportunity (cf. Mark 14:8; and the widow's mite, Luke 21:3, 4). 13. For—Supply from vs. 8, "I speak." My aim is not that others (viz., the saints at Jerusalem) may be relieved at the cost of your being "distressed" (so the Greek for "burdened"). The golden rule is, "Love thy neighbour as thyself," not more than thyself. 14. by an equality—"by the rule of equality" [ALFORD]: lit., "out of equality." now at this time—Greek, "at the present juncture" or season. that their abundance also—The Greek being distinct from the previous "that," translate, "in order that," viz., at another season, when your relative circumstances may be reversed. The reference is solely to temporal wants and supplies. Those, as BENGEL, who quote Romans 15:27 for interpreting it of spiritual supplies from the Jews to the Gentiles, forget that Romans 15:27 refers to the past benefit spiritually, which the Jews have conferred on the Gentiles, as a motive to gratitude on the part of the latter, not to a prospective benefit to be looked for from the former, which the text refers to. 15. Exodus 16:18; LXX. As God gave an equal portion of manna to all the Israelites, whether they could gather much or little; so Christians should promote by liberality an equality, so that none should need the necessaries of life while others have superfluities. "Our luxuries should yield to our neighbor's comforts; and our comforts to his necessities" [J. HOWARD]. 16, 17. Returning to the subject of vs. 6. for you—Translate, "Which put the same earnest care for you into the heart of Titus," as was in myself. My care for you led me to "desire" him (vss. 6 and 17, "exhortation," the same Greek); but Titus had of himself the same care, whence he "accepted (gladly) my exhortation" (vs. 17) to go to you (vs. 6). being more forward—more earnest than to need such exhortation. he went—Greek, "went forth." We should say, he is going forth; but the ancients put the past tense in letterwriting, as the things will have been past by the time that the correspondent, receives the letter. "Of his own accord," i.e., it is true he has been exhorted by me to go, but he shows that he has anticipated my desires, and already, "of his own accord," has desired to go. 18. the brother, whose praise is in the gospel—whose praise is known in connection with the Gospel: Luke may be meant; not that "the Gospel" here refers to his *written Gospel; but the language implies some one well known throughout the churches, and at that time with Paul, as Luke then was (Acts 20:6). Not a Macedonian, as appears from ch. 9:4. Of all Paul's "companions in travel" (vs. 19; Acts 19:29), you began this work a year ago, and it is necessary that you should complete it as soon as possible. Not only to do, but also to be forward. Literally, "to do and to will"; but as the will must be before the deed, thelein must be taken here in the sense of "delight," as it frequently means in the Old and New Testaments. A year ago. It was about a year before this that the apostle, in his First Epistle, chap. xvi. 2, had exhorted them to make this contribution; and there is no doubt that they, in obedience to his directions, had begun to lay up in store for this charitable purpose. He therefore wishes them to complete this good work, and thus show that they were not led to it by the example of the Macedonians, seeing they themselves had been first movers in this business.

11. A readiness to will, so there may be a performance. You have willed and purposed this; now perform it. Out of that which ye have. Give as God has enabled you; and give as God has disposed you. He requires each man to do as he can, and accepts the will where the means are wanting to perform the deed.

12. According to that a man hath. According to his real property; not taking that which belongs to his own family, and is indispensably necessary for their support; and not taking that which belongs to others, viz., what he owes to any man.

13. That other men be eased. I do not design that you should impoverish yourselves in order that others may live affluently.

14. But by an equality. That you may do to those who are distressed now as, on a change of circumstances, you would wish them to do to you. And I only wish that of your abundance you would now minister to their wants; and it may be that their abundance may yet supply your wants; for so liable are all human affairs to change that it is as possible that you rich Corinthians should need the charitable help of others as it is that those Jews, who once had need of nothing, should now be dependent on your bounty. That there may be equality. That you may exert yourselves so in behalf of those poor people that there may be between you an equality in the necessaries of life, your abundance supplying them with that of which they are utterly destitute.

15. He that had gathered much had nothing over. On the passage to which the apostle alludes, Exod. xvi. 18, I have stated that, probably, every man gathered as much manna as he could, and when he brought it home and measured it by the omer (for this was the measure for each man's eating), if he had a surplus it went to the supply of some other family that had not been able to collect enough; the family being large, and the time in which the manna might be gathered, before the heat of the day, not being sufficient to collect a supply for so numerous a household, several of whom might be so confined as not to be able to collect for themselves. Thus there was an equality among the Israelites in reference to this thing, and in this light these words of Paul lead us to view the passage. To apply this to the present case: The Corinthians, in the course of God's providence, had gathered more than was absolutely necessary for their own support; by giving the surplus to the persecuted and impoverished Christian Jews there would be an equality.

16. But thanks be to God. He thanks God, who had already disposed the heart of Titus to attend to this business; and, with his usual address, considers all this as done in the behalf of the Corinthian church.

17. He accepted the exhortation. I advised him to visit you and excite you to this good work, and I found that he was already disposed in his heart to do it; God put this "earnest care into the heart of Titus for you," v. 16.

18. The brother, whose praise is in the gospel. Who this brother was we cannot tell; some suppose it was Luke, who wrote a Gospel, and who was the companion of Paul in several of his travels; others think it was Silas; others, Barnabas; others, Mark; and others, Apollos. Neither ancients nor moderns agree in either; but Luke, John, and Mark seem to have the most probable opinions in their favor. Whoever the person was, he was sufficiently known to the Corinthians, as we learn by what the apostle

As one chosen of the churches (v. 19). This was done, it is most likely, at the request of Paul himself; that no man might blame him in that abundance which was administered by him (v. 20). He would not give occasion to any to accuse him of partiality, and thought it to be his duty, to provide for things honest, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men. We live in a censorious world, and should cut off occasion from those who seek occasion to speak reproachfully.

III. He commends also another brother. This brother is thought to be Apollos. Whoever he was, he had approved himself diligent in many things; and therefore was fit to be employed in this affair.

IV. He concludes with a general good character of them all (v. 23). Wherefore, he exhorts them to show their liberality that these messengers of the churches, and the churches themselves, might see a full proof of their love, and that it was with good reason the apostle had even boasted on their behalf, v. 24.

Luke was the most prominent, having been his companion in preaching the Gospel at his first entrance into Europe (Acts 16:10). The fact that the person here referred to was "chosen of the churches" as their trustee to travel with Paul in conveying the contribution to Jerusalem, implies that he had resided among them some time before: this is true of Luke, who after parting from Paul at Philippi (as he marks by the change from "we" to "they," Acts 16) six years before, is now again found in his company in Macedonia. In the interim he had probably become so well known that "his praise was throughout all the churches." Cf. ch. 12:18; Philemon 24. He who is faithful in the Gospel will be faithful also in matters of inferior importance [BENGEL]. 19. not that only—not only praised in all the churches. chosen—by vote: so the Greek. of the churches—therefore these companions of Paul are called "messengers of the churches" (vs. 23). to travel—to Jerusalem. with this grace—Greek, "in the case of this grace," or "gift." to the glory of the same Lord—The oldest MSS. omit "same." declaration of your ready mind—The oldest MSS. read, "our," not your. This and the previous clause, "to the glory of the same Lord," do not follow "administered by us," but "chosen of the churches to travel...." The union of the brother with Paul in this affair of the collection was done to guard against suspicions injurious "to the glory" of the Lord. It was also done in order to produce a "readiness" on the part of Paul and the brother to undertake the office which each, by himself, would have been less ready to undertake, for fear of suspicions arising (vs. 20) as to their appropriation of any of the money. 20. Avoiding—taking precautions against this. in this abundance—in the case of this abundance. 21. LXX (Prov. 3:4; Rom. 12:17). The oldest MSS. read, "For we provide." honest things—"things honorable" 22. This second brother, BIRKS supposes to be Trophimus; for a Macedonian is not meant (ch. 9:4) probably the same as was sent before with Titus (ch. 12:18); and therefore sent from Ephesus, and probably an Ephesian: all this is true of Trophimus. oftentimes . . . in many things—Join and translate as in the Greek, "many times in many things." upon the great confidence which I have in you—"through the great confidence WHICH HE HAS towards you" [ALFORD]. BENGEL better supports English Version, "We have sent... through the confidence WHICH WE FEEL in regard to your liberality." 23. fellow helper concerning you—Greek, "fellow worker towards you." our brethren—the two mentioned in vss. 18 and 22. messengers—rather, as the Greek, "apostles": in the less strict sense (Acts 14:14). of the churches—sent by the churches, as we are by the Lord (Phil. 2:25). There was in the synagogue an ecclesiastical officer, called "the angel of the Church," whence the title seems derived (cf. Rev. 2:1). 24. The oldest MSS. read "[continue] manifesting to them in the face of the churches the manifestation of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf."

says of him in this place.

19. Chosen of the churches to travel with us. Appointed by a "show of hands." This appointment, by the suffrage of the churches, seems to refer more to Luke than anyone else. With this grace. Liberal contribution. See on v. 1. Your ready mind. Your willingness to relieve them. But, instead of your, "our" is the reading of almost all the best MSS. and all the versions. This is doubtless the true reading.

20. Avoiding this, that no man should blame us. Taking this prudent caution to have witnesses of our conduct, and such as were chosen by the churches themselves, that we might not be suspected of having either embezzled or misapplied their bounty.

21. Providing for honest things. Taking care to act so as not only to be clear in the sight of God, but also to be clear in the sight of all men, avoiding even the appearance of evil.

22. We have sent with them. Titus and probably Luke. Our brother, probably Apollos. Now much more diligent. Finding that I have the fullest confidence in your complete reformation and love to me, he engages in this business with alacrity, and exceeds even his former diligence.

23. Whether any do enquire of Titus. Should it be asked, "Who is this Titus?" I answer, He is my companion, and my fellow laborer in reference to you; chap. ii. 13; vii. 6-7. Should any inquire, Who are these brethren, Luke and Apollos? I answer, They are "apostles" of the churches, and intensely bent on promoting the glory of Christ.

24. Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches. Seeing they are persons every way worthy in themselves, and coming to you on such an important occasion, and so highly recommended, receive them affectionately; and let them thus see that the very high character I have given of you is not exaggerated, and that you are as ready in every work of charity as I have stated you to be. Act in this for your honor.

I. It was needless to press them with further arguments to afford relief to their poor brethren (v. 1). He knew their forwardness to every good work, and how they had begun this good work a year ago. He had boasted of their zeal to the Macedonians, and this had provoked many of them to do as they had done. As they had begun well, they would go on well.

II. He sends Titus and the other brethren to them, that, having this timely notice, they might be fully ready (v. 3), when he should come to them. When we would have others to do that which is good we must give them time. Another reason was that he might not be ashamed of his boasting concerning them, if they should be found unready, v. 3, 4. Some from Macedonia might haply come with him: and, if the collection should not then be made, this would make him, not to say them, ashamed.

CHAPTER 9

VSS. 1-15. REASONS FOR HIS SENDING TITUS. THE GREATER THEIR BOUNTIFULNESS, THE MORE SHALL BE THE RETURN OF BLESSING TO THEM, AND THANKSGIVING TO GOD. 1. For—connected with ch. 8:16: "Show love to the messengers of the churches; for as concerns the ministration for the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you who are so forward already." write—emphatical: It is superfluous to write, for you will have witnesses present [BENGEL]. 2. ready a year ago—to send off the money, owing to the apostle's former exhortation (I Cor. 16:1, 2). your zeal—Greek, "the zeal from you," i.e., on your part; propagated from you to others. provoked—i.e., stimulated. very many—Greek, "the greater number," viz., of the Macedonians. 3. have I sent—we should say, "I send"; whereas the ancients put it in the past, the time which it would be by the time that the letter arrived. the brethren—(ch. 8:18, 22)—Titus and the two others. should be in vain in this behalf—"should be proved futile in this particular," however true in general (ch. 7:4). A tacit compliment, softening the sharp monition. as I said—as I was saying (vs. 2). 4. if they of Macedonia—rather as Greek, "if Macedonians." unprepared—with your collection; see vs. 2, "ready," Greek, "prepared." we, not to say ye—Ye would naturally feel more ashamed for yourselves, than we (who boasted of you) would for you. confident boasting—The oldest MSS. read simply "confi-

1. It is superfluous for me to write to you. I need not enlarge, having already said enough. See the preceding chapter.

2. I know the forwardness of your mind. You have already firmly purposed to contribute to the support of the poor and suffering saints. That Achaia was ready a year ago. The apostle means not only Corinth but other churches in different parts about Corinth; we know there was a church at Cenchrea, one of the ports on the Corinthian Isthmus. Your zeal hath provoked very many. Hearing that the Corinthians were so intent on the relief of the sufferers in Palestine, other churches, and especially they of Macedonia, came forward the more promptly and liberally.

3. Yet have I sent the brethren. Titus and his companions, mentioned in the preceding chapter. That, as I said, ye may be ready. And he wished them to be ready, that they might preserve the good character he had given them. This was for their honor; and if they did not take care to do so, he might be reputed a liar; and thus both they and himself be ashamed before the Macedonians, should any of them at this time accompany him to Corinth.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 6–16

I. Proper directions to be observed about the right manner of bestowing charity. It should be bountifully. Men who expect a good return at harvest are not wont to pinch and spare in sowing their seed.

It should be deliberately: Every man, according as he purposes in his heart, v. 7. Works of charity, like other good works, should be done with thought and design. It should be freely given: Not grudgingly, nor of necessity, but cheerfully, v. 7. Persons sometimes will give merely to satisfy the importunity of those who ask their charity, and what they give is in a manner squeezed or forced from them, and this unwillingness spoils all they do.

II. Good encouragement to perform this work of charity.

1. They themselves would be no losers by what they gave in charity. What is given to the poor is far from being lost; as the precious seed which is cast into the ground is not lost, for it will spring up, and bear fruit; the sower shall receive it again with increase, v. 6. God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). Can a man be a loser by doing that with which God is pleased? God is able to make our charity redound to our advantage, v. 8. We have no reason to distrust the goodness of God; he is able to make all grace abound. The honour of it is lasting, the reward of it eternal.

A prayer to God that they might be gainers, and not losers, v. 10, 11. To whom the prayer is made—to God, who ministereth seed to the sower, who giveth such an increase of the fruits of the earth that we have not only bread sufficient to eat for one year, but enough to sow again for a future supply.

For what he prayeth. That they may have bread for their food, always a competency for themselves—that God will multiply their seed sown, that they may still be able to do more good—and that there may be an increase of the fruits of righteousness, so as to be enriched in everything to all bountifulness (v. 11). Works of charity are so far from impoverishing us that they are the proper means truly to enrich us, or make us truly rich.

2. While they would be no losers, the poor would be gainers, v. 12.

dence," viz., in your liberality. 5. that they would go before—Translate, "that they should . . . ." whereof ye had notice before—rather, "promised before"; "long announced by me to the Macedonians" (vs. 2) [BENGEL]. "Your promised bounty" [ELLICOTT and others]. not as of covetousness—Translate, "not as matter of covetousness," which it would be, if you gave niggardly.

6. I say—ELLICOTT and others supply the ellipsis thus: "But remember this." bountifully—lit., "with," or "in blessings." The word itself implies a beneficent spirit in the giver (cf. vs. 7, end), and the plural implies the abundance and liberality of the gifts. "The reaping shall correspond to the proportions and spirit of the sowing" [BENGEL]. Cf. Ezekiel 34:26, "Showers of blessing."

7. according as he purposeth in his heart—Let the full consent of the free will go with the gift [ALFORD]. Opposed to "of necessity," as "grudgingly" is opposed to "a cheerful giver" (Prov. 22:9; 11:25; Isa. 32:8).

8. all grace—even in external goods, and even while ye bestow on others [BENGEL]. that—"in order that." God's gifts are bestowed on us, not that we may have them to ourselves, but that we may the more "abound in good works" to others. sufficiency—so as not to need the help of others, having yourselves from God "bread for your food" (vs. 10). in all things—Greek, "in everything." every good work—of charity to others, which will be "your seed sown" (vs. 10). 9. As it is written—realizing the highly blessed character portrayed in Psalm 112:9. He—the "good man" (Ps. 112:5). dispersed—as seed sown with full and open hand, without anxious thought in what direction each grain may fall. It is implied also that he has always what he may disperse [BENGEL]. So in Psalm 112:9. the poor—The Greek word is found here only in New Testament, "one in straitened circumstances, who earns his bread by labor." The word usually employed means "one so poor as to live by begging." his righteousness—Here "beneficence": the evidence of his being righteous before God and man. Cf. Deuteronomy 24:13; Matthew 6:1, "alms"; Greek, "righteousness." remaineth—unexhausted and unfailing. 10. Translate, as in Isaiah 55:10, "He that ministereth (supplieth) seed to the sower and bread for food" (lit., "bread for eating"). minister—rather future, as the oldest MSS., "Shall minister (supply) and multiply." your seed—your means for liberality.

the fruits of your righteousness—the heavenly rewards for your Christian charity (Matt. 10:42). Righteousness shall be itself the reward, even as it is the thing rewarded (Hos. 10:12; Matt. 5:6; 6:33).

11. Cf. vs. 8. bountifulness—Greek, "single-minded liberality." Translated "simplicity," Romans 12:8. causeth through us—lit., "worketh through us"; i.e., through our instrumentality as the distributors. thanksgiving—on the part of the recipients. 12. Greek, "The ministration of this public service (on your part) is not only still further supplying the wants of the saints (besides the supplies from other quarters), but is abounding also (viz., in respect to relieving the necessities of others in poverty through many thanksgivings to God."

ADAM CLARKE

5. Whereof ye had notice before. Instead of "spoken of before," several MSS. and several of the fathers have "what was promised before." The sense is not very different; probably the latter reading was intended to explain the former. Bounty, and not as of covetousness. Had they been backward, strangers might have attributed this to a covetous principle.

6. He which soweth sparingly. This is a plain maxim; no man can expect to reap but in proportion as he has sowed. And here almsgiving is represented as a seed sown, which shall bring forth a crop. If the sowing be liberal and the seed good, the crop shall be so too. Sowing is used among the Jews to express almsgiving; so they understand Isa. xxxii. 20: "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters"; i.e., who are ready to help everyone that is in need. And Hos. x. 12, they interpret: "Sow to yourselves almsgiving, and ye shall reap in mercy"—if you show mercy to the poor, God will show mercy to you.

7. Not grudgingly, or of necessity. The Jews had in the Temple two chests for alms: the one was of what was necessary, i.e., what the law required; the other was of the freewill offerings. To escape perdition some would grudgingly give what necessity obliged them; others would give cheerfully, for the love of God, and through pity to the poor. Of the first, nothing is said; they simply did what the law required. Of the second much is said; God loves them. The benefit of almsgiving is lost to the giver when he does it with a grumbling heart.

8. God is able to make all grace abound. We have already seen, chap. viii. 1, that the word charis, in the connection in which the apostle uses it in these chapters, signifies a "charitable gift"; here it certainly has the same meaning. God is able to give you, in His mercy, abundance of temporal good; that, having a sufficiency, you may abound in every good work. This refers to the sowing plenteously; those who do so shall reap plenteously—they shall have an abundance of God's blessings.

9. He hath dispersed abroad. Here is still the allusion to the sower. He sows much, not at home merely, or among those with whom he is acquainted, but abroad, among the strangers, whether of his own or of another nation. The quotation is taken from Ps. cxii. 9. He hath given to the poor. This is the interpretation of "he hath scattered abroad"; and therefore it is said, his righteousness remaineth for ever—his good work is had in remembrance before God. By righteousness we have already seen that the Jews understand "almsgiving."

10. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower. The sower, as we have already seen, is he that gives alms of what he hath; and God, who requires him to give these alms, is here represented as providing him with the means. The word he that ministereth is very emphatic; it signifies "he who leads up the chorus"; it means also to "join to, associate, to supply or furnish one thing after another" so that there be no want or chasm. Thus God is represented, in the course of His providence, associating and connecting causes and effects; keeping everything in its proper place and state of dependence on another, and all upon himself; so that summer and winter, heat and cold, seedtime and harvest, regularly succeed each other. Thus God leads up this grand chorus of causes and effects. The fruits of your righteousness. Your beneficence.

11. Being enriched in every thing. Observe, Why does God give riches? That they may be applied to His glory and the good of men. Why does He increase riches? That those who have them may exercise all bountifulness. And if they be enriched in every thing, what will be the consequence if they do not exercise all bountifulness? Why, God will curse their blessings; the rust shall canker them, and the moth shall consume their garments. But if, on the other hand, they do thus apply them, then they cause thanksgiving to God. The ninth and tenth verses should be read in a parenthesis, for this verse connects with the eighth.

12. For the administration of this service. The poor are relieved, see the hand of God in this relief, and give God the glory for His grace.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. This would redound to the praise and glory of God. All who wished well to the gospel would glorify God for this proof of subjection to the gospel of Christ, and true love to all men, v. 13.

4. Those whose wants were supplied would make the best return they were able, by sending up many prayers to God for those who had relieved them, v. 14. As this is the only recompence the poor can make, so it is often greatly for the advantage of the rich.

Lastly, The apostle concludes this whole matter with this doxology, Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift, v. 15. He means Jesus Christ, who is indeed the unspeakable gift of God unto this world.

CHAPTER 10

I. He addresses them in a very mild and humble manner, v. 1. In the midst of the greatest provocations he shows mildness.

How humbly also does this great apostle speak of himself, as one in presence base among them! So his enemies spoke of him with contempt. He is desirous that no occasion may be given to use severity, v. 2. He beseeches them to give no occasion for him to be bold, or to exercise his authority against them in general.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

13. by—through occasion of. experiment—Translate, "the experience" [ELLICOTT and others]. Or, "the experimental proof" of your Christian character, afforded by "this ministration." they—the recipients. for your professed subjection—Greek, "for the subjection of your profession"; i.e., your subjection in accordance with your profession, in relation to the Gospel. Ye yield yourselves in willing subjection to the Gospel precepts, evinced in acts, as well as in profession. your liberal distribution—Greek, "the liberality of your contribution in relation to them . . . ." 14. Translate, "Themselves also with prayer for you, longing after you on account of the exceeding grace of God (resting) upon you." English Version is, however, good sense: They glorify God (vs. 13) by the experimental proof, etc., "and by their prayer for you." But the Greek favors the former.

15. his unspeakable gift—the gift of His own Son, which includes all other inferior gifts (ch. 8:9; Rom. 8:32). If we have received from God "His unspeakable gift," what great thing is it, if we give a few perishing gifts for His sake?

VSS. 1-18. HE VINDICATES HIS APOSTOLIC AUTHORITY AGAINST THOSE WHO DEPRECIATED HIM FOR HIS PERSONAL APPEARANCE. HE WILL MAKE HIS POWER FELT WHEN HE COMES. HE BOASTS NOT, AS THEY, BEYOND HIS MEASURE. 1. I Paul myself—no longer "we," "us," "our" (ch. 9:11): I who am represented by depreciators as "base," I, the same Paul, of my own accord "beseech" you"; or rather "entreat," "exhort" you for your sake. As "I beseech you" (a distinct Greek verb, vs. 2) for my sake. by the meekness and gentleness of Christ—He mentions these graces of Christ especially (Ps. 18:35; Matt. 11:29), as on account of his imitation of them in particular he was despised [GROTIUS]. He entreats them by these, in order to show that though he must have recourse to more severe measures, he is naturally inclined to gentle ones after Christ's example [MENOCHIUS]. "Meekness" is more in the mind internally; "gentleness" in the external behavior, and in relation to others; for instance, the condescending yieldingness of a superior to an inferior, the former not insisting on his strict rights [TRENCH]. BENGEL explains it, "By the meekness and gentleness derived by me from Christ," not from my own nature: he objects to understanding it of Christ's meekness and gentleness, since nowhere else is "gentleness" attributed to Him. But though the exact Greek word is not applied to Him, the idea expressed by it is (cf. Isa. 40:11; Matt. 12:19, 20). in presence—in personal appearance when present with you. base—Greek, "lowly"; timid, humbly diffident: opposed to "bold." "Am" stands here by ironical concession for "am reputed to be" (cf. vs. 10). 2. I beseech you—Intimating that, as he can beseech in letters, so he can be severe in their presence. that I may not be—that I may not have to be bold . . . . with that confidence—that authoritative sternness. I think—I am minded to be. as if we walked according to the flesh—His Corinthian detractors judged of him by themselves, as if he were influenced by fleshly motives, the desire of favor or fear of giving offense, so as not to exercise his authority when present. 3. For—Reason why they should regard him "beseeching" them (vs. 2) not to oblige him to have recourse to "bold" and stern exercise of authority. "We walk IN the flesh," and so in weakness: but not "ACCORDING TO the flesh" (vs. 2). Moreover, though we WALK in it, we do not WAR according to it. A double contrast or antithesis. "They who accuse us of walking after the flesh, shall find [to their cost] that we do not war after the flesh; therefore compel us not to use our weapons" [ALFORD]. 4. A confutation of those who try to propagate their creed by force and persecution (cf. Luke 9:54-56). weapons—for punishing offending members (vs. 6; I Cor. 4:21; 5:5, 13); boldness of speech, ecclesiastical discipline (vs. 8; ch. 13:10), the power of the word,

ADAM CLARKE

13. By the experiment of this ministration. In this, and in the preceding and following verses, the apostle enumerates the good effects that would be produced by their liberal almsgiving to the poor saints at Jerusalem. (1) The wants of the saints would be supplied. (2) Many thanksgivings would thereby be rendered unto God. (3) The Corinthians would thereby give proof of their subjection to the gospel. And, (4) The prayers of those relieved will ascend up to God in behalf of their benefactors.

14. The exceeding grace of God in you. By the "superabounding" or "transcending grace" of God, which was in them, the apostle most evidently means the merciful and charitable disposition which they had towards the suffering saints.

15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. Some contend that Christ only is here intended; others, that the almsgiving is meant. After all the difference of commentators and preachers, it is most evident that the unspeakable gift is precisely the same with the "superabounding grace or benefit" of the preceding verse. If therefore Jesus Christ, the Gift of God's unbounded love to man, be the meaning of the unspeakable gift in this verse, He is also intended by the superabounding grace in the preceding. But it is most evident that it is the work of Christ in them, and not Christ himself, which is intended in the fourteenth verse; and consequently that it is the same work, not the operator, which is referred to in this last verse.

1. I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness. Having now finished his directions and advices relative to the collection for the poor, he resumes his argument relative to the false apostle, who had gained considerable influence by representing Paul as despicable in his person, his ministry, and his influence. Under this obloquy the apostle was supported by the meekness and gentleness of Christ; and through the same heavenly disposition he delayed inflicting that punishment which, in virtue of his apostolical authority, he might have inflicted on him who had disturbed and labored to corrupt the Christian Church. Who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you. He seems to quote these as the words of his calumniator, as if he had said: "This apostle of yours is a mere braggadocio; when he is among you, you know how base and contemptible he is; when absent, see how he brags and boasts." The word which we render base signifies "lowly," and, as some think, "short of stature." The insinuation is that, when there was danger or opposition at hand, Paul acted with great obsequiousness, fearing for his person and authority, lest he should lose his secular influence.

2. Some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh. As it is customary for cowards and overbearing men to threaten the weak and the timid when present, to bluster when absent, and to be very obsequious in the presence of the strong and courageous. This conduct they appear to have charged against the apostle, which he calls here walking after the flesh—acting as a man who had worldly ends in view and would use any means in order to accomplish them.

3. Though we walk in the flesh. That is: Although I am in the common condition of human nature, and must live as a human being, yet I do not war after the flesh—I do not act the coward, as they insinuate.

4. The weapons of our warfare. The apostle often uses the metaphor of a warfare to represent the life and trials of a Christian minister. See Eph. vi. 10-17; 1 Tim. i. 18; 2 Tim. ii. 3-5.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. He asserts the power of his preaching and his power to punish offenders.

1. The power of his preaching, v. 3, 5. The work of the ministry is a warfare, not after the flesh indeed, for it is a spiritual warfare, with spiritual enemies and for spiritual purposes. The doctrines of the gospel are the weapons. Outward force, therefore, is not the method of the gospel, but strong persuasions. People must be persuaded to God and their duty, not driven by force of arms. What opposition is made against the gospel by the powers of sin and Satan in the hearts of men, but these strongholds are pulled down by the gospel, through the grace and power of God.

ALEXANDER MACLAREN:

The first effect of any real contact with Christ and His Gospel is to reveal a man to himself, to shatter his delusive estimates of what he is, and to pull down about his ears the lofty fortress in which he has ensconced himself. It seems strange work for what calls itself a Gospel to begin by forcing a man to cry out with sobs and tears, "Oh, wretched man that I am!" But no man will ever reach the heights to which Christ can lift him, who does not begin his upward course by descending to the depths into which Christ's Gospel begins its work by plunging him. Unconsciousness of sin is sure to lead to indifference to a Savior, and unless we know ourselves to be miserable and poor and blind and naked, the offer of gold refined by fire and white garments that we may clothe ourselves will make no appeal to us. The fact of sin makes the need for a Savior; our individual sense of sin makes us sensible of our need of a Savior.

Paul believed that the weapons of his warfare were mighty enough to cast down the strongest of all strongholds in which men shut themselves up against the humbling Gospel of salvation by the mercy of God.

—Expositions of Holy Scripture

2. The apostle's power to punish offenders is asserted in v. 6. Though the apostle showed meekness and gentleness, yet he would not betray his authority.

Verses 7–11

"Do you," says he, "look on things after the outward appearance? (v. 7). Is this a fit rule to make an estimate of things or persons by?" In outward appearance, Paul was mean and despicable with some. But there are often false appearances.

I. His relation to Christ, v. 7. Now the apostle reasons thus with the Corinthians: "Suppose it to be so, allowing what they say to be true, yet they ought also to allow this to us, that we also are Christ's." There is room in Christ for many; and those who differ much from one another may yet be one in him. It would help to heal the differences that are among us if we would remember that those who differ from us may belong to Christ too. We must not think that we are the people, and that none belong to Christ but ourselves. This we may plead for ourselves, against those who judge us and despise us that, how weak soever we are, yet, as they are Christ's, so are we.

II. His authority from Christ as an apostle. The Lord had given it to him, and it was more than his adversaries could justly pretend to. It was certainly what he should not be ashamed of, v. 8. The nature of his authority: it was for edification, and not for destruction.

and of the sacraments, the various extraordinary gifts of the Spirit. carnal—Translate, "fleshly," to preserve the allusion to vss. 2, 3. mighty through God—Greek, "mighty to God," i.e., mighty before God: not humanly, but divinely powerful. The power is not ours, but God's. Cf. "fair to God," i.e., divinely fair (Margin, Acts 7:20). Also above (ch. 2:15), "unto God a sweet savor." "The efficacy of the Christian religion proves its truth" [BENGEL]. pulling down—As the Greek is the same as in vs. 5, translate, "casting down." Cf. Jeremiah 1:10: the inspired servants of God inherit the commission of the Old Testament prophets. strongholds—(Prov. 21:22)—viz., in which sinners entrench themselves against reproof; all that opposes itself to Christ; the learning, and eloquence, and philosophical subtleties on which the Corinthians prided themselves. So Joshua's trumpet blast was "mighty" under God to overthrow the walls of Jericho. 5. imaginations—rather, "reasonings." Whereas "thought" expresses men's own purpose and determination of living after their own pleasure [TITTM]. high thing—So it ought to be translated (Rom. 8:39). A distinct Greek word from that in Ephesians 3:18, "height," and Revelation 21:16, which belongs to God and heaven from whence we receive nothing hurtful. But "high thing" is not so much "height" as something made high, and belongs to those regions of air where the powers of darkness "exalt themselves" against Christ and us (Eph. 2:2; 6:12; II Thess. 2:4). exalteth itself—II Thessalonians 2:4 supports English Version rather than the translation of ELLICOTT, etc., "is lifted up." Such were the high towers of Judaic self-righteousness, philosophic speculations, and rhetorical sophistries, the "knowledge" so much prized by many (opposed to "the knowledge of God"), which endangered a section of the Corinthian Church. against the knowledge of God—True knowledge makes men humble. Where there is exaltation of self, there knowledge of God is wanting [BENGEL]. Arrange the words following thus: "Bringing every thought (i.e., intent of the mind or will) into captivity to the obedience of Christ," i.e., to obey Christ. The three steps of the apostle's spiritual warfare are: (1) It demolishes what is opposed to Christ; (2) It leads captive; (3) It brings into obedience to Christ (Rom. 1:5; 16:26). The "reasonings" (English Version, "imaginations") are utterly "cast down." The "mental intents" (English Version, "thoughts") are taken willing captives, and tender the voluntary obedience of faith to Christ the Conqueror. 6. Translate, "Having ourselves (i.e., being) in readiness to exact punishment for all disobedience . . . ." We have this in store for the disobedient: it will be brought into action in due time. when your obedience . . .—He charitably assumes that most of the Corinthian Church will act obediently; therefore he says "YOUR obedience." But perhaps some will act otherwise; in order, therefore, to give all an opportunity of joining the obedient, he will not prematurely exact punishment, but wait until the full number of those gathered out to Christ has been "completed," and the remainder have been proved incorrigible. He had acted already so at Corinth (Acts 18:6-11; cf. Exod. 32:34; Matt. 13:28-30). 7. Do ye regard mere outward appearance (mere external recommendations, personal appearance, voice, manner, oratory of teachers present face to face, such as they admired in the false teachers to the disparagement of Paul, vs. 10; Note, ch. 5:12)? Even in outward bearing when I shall be present with you (in contrast to "by letters," vs. 9) I will show that I am more really armed with the authority of Christ, than those who arrogate to themselves the title of being peculiarly "Christ's" (I Cor. 1:12). A Jewish emissary seems to have led this party. let him of himself think this again—He may "of himself," without needing to be taught it in a more severe manner, by "thinking again," arrive at "this" conclusion, "that even as . . . ." Paul modestly demands for himself only an equal place with those whom he had begotten in the Gospel [BENGEL]. 8. "For even if I were to boast somewhat more exceedingly (than I do, vss. 3-6) of our (apostolic) authority (vs. 6; ch. 13:10) . . . I should not be put to shame (by the fact; as I should be if my authority proved to be without foundation: my threats of punishment not being carried into effect). for edification . . . not for . . . destruction—Greek, "for building up . . . not for . . . CASTING DOWN" (the same Greek as in vs. 5): the image of a building as in vss. 4, 5. Though we "cast down reasonings," this is not in order to destroy, but really to build up ("edify"), by removing those things which are hindrances to edification, and testing what is unsound, and putting together all that

ADAM CLARKE

Are not carnal. Here he refers to the means used by the false apostle in order to secure his party. But mighty through God. Our doctrines are true and pure.

They come from God and lead to Him, and He accompanies them with His mighty power to the hearts of those who hear them; and the strong holds—the apparently solid and cogent reasoning of the philosophers—we, by these doctrines, pull down.

5. Casting down imaginations. "Reasonings" or "opinions." The Greek philosophers valued themselves especially on their ethic systems, in which their reasonings appeared to be very profound and conclusive; but they were obliged to assume principles which were either such as did not exist or were false in themselves. Every high thing. Even the pretendedly sublime doctrines, for instance, of Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics in general, fell before the simple preaching of Christ crucified. The knowledge of God. The doctrine of the unity and eternity of the divine nature, which was opposed by the plurality of their idols, and the generation of their gods, and their man-made deities. The obedience of Christ. Subjection to idols was annihilated by the progress of the gospel among the heathen.

6. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience. I am ready through this mighty armor of God to punish those opposers of the doctrine of Christ and the disobedience which has been produced by them. When your obedience is fulfilled. When you have in the fullest manner discountenanced those men, and separated yourselves from their communion. All the terms in these two verses are military. Allusion is made to a strongly fortified city, where the enemy had made his last stand: entrenching himself about the walls; strengthening all his redoubts and ramparts; raising castles, towers, and various engines of defense and offense upon the walls; and neglecting nothing that might tend to render his stronghold impregnable. The army of God comes against the place and attacks it; the "strong holds," all the "fortified places," are carried. The "imaginations," engines, and whatever the imagination or skill of man could raise, are speedily taken and destroyed. Every "high thing"—all the castles and towers are sapped, thrown down and demolished; the walls are battered into breaches; and the besieging army, carrying everything at the point of the sword, enter the city, storm and take the citadel. Everywhere defeated, the conquered submit, and are brought "into captivity," "are led away captives."

7. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? Do not be carried away with appearances; do not be satisfied with show and parade. If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's. Here, as in several other places of this and the preceding Epistle, the any, or "certain," person most evidently refers to the false apostle who made so much disturbance in the church. And this man trusted to himself—assumed to himself that he was Christ's messenger. Let him of himself. Without any authority, certainly, from God; but as he arrogates to himself the character of a minister of Christ, let him acknowledge that even so we are Christ's ministers; and that I have, by my preaching and the miracles which I have wrought, given the fullest proof that I am especially commissioned by Him.

8. For though I should boast. I have a greater authority and spiritual power than I have yet shown, both to edify and to punish; but I employ this for your edification in righteousness, and not for the destruction of any delinquent.

MATTHEW HENRY

The caution with which he speaks of his authority, professing that his design was not to terrify them with big words, nor by angry letters, v. 9.

The apostle declares he did not intend to frighten those who were obedient. He would have his adversaries know this (v. 11), that he would, by the exercise of his apostolical power make it appear to have a real efficacy.

Verses 12–18

I. The apostle refuses to justify himself as the false apostles did, v. 12. He plainly intimates that they took a wrong method to commend themselves. They were pleased, and did pride themselves, in their own attainments. We should be pleased and thankful for what we have of gifts or graces, but never pride ourselves therein, as if there were none to be compared with us. The apostle would not be of the number of such vain men.

II. He fixes a better rule for his conduct, v. 13. He would not go beyond the line prescribed to him, which the false apostles did, while they boasted of other men's labours.

III. He acted according to this rule, v. 14. He acted according to this rule in preaching at Corinth, for he came thither by divine direction. In boasting of them as his charge, he boasted not of other men's labours, v. 15.

IV. He declares his success in observing this rule. His hope was that their faith was increased, and that others would embrace the gospel also.

is true in the building [CHRYSOSTOM]. 9. I say this lest I should seem to be terrifying you, as children, with empty threats [BENGEL]. ESTIUS explains, "I might boast more of my authority, but I forbear to do so, that I may not seem as if . . . ." But this ellipsis is harsh: and vss. 10, 11 confirm BENGEL's view. 10. letters—implying that there had been already more letters of Paul received by the Corinthians than the one we have, viz., I Corinthians; and that they contained strong reproofs. say they—Greek, "says one," "such a one" (vs. 11) seems to point to some definite individual. Cf. Galatians 5: 10; a similar slanderer was in the Galatian Church. weak—(ch. 12:7; I Cor. 2:3). There was nothing of majesty or authority in his manner; he bore himself tremblingly among them, whereas the false teachers spoke with authoritative bearing and language.

11. think this—"consider this." such will we be—or "are," in general, not merely shall we be at our next visit. 12. "We do not presume (irony) to judge ourselves among, or in comparison with, some of them that commend themselves." The charge falsely brought against him of commending himself (ch. 3:1; 5:12), really holds good of the false teachers. The phrase, "judge ourselves of the number," is drawn from the testing of athletes and senators, the "approved" being set down on the roll [WAHL]. measuring themselves by themselves—"among themselves": to correspond to the previous verb, "judge ourselves among them." Instead of measuring themselves by the public standard, they measure themselves by one made by themselves: they do not compare themselves with others who excel them, but with those like themselves: hence their high self-esteem. The one-eyed is easily king among the blind. are not wise—with all their boasted "wisdom" (I Cor. 1:19-26), they are anything but "wise." 13. not boast . . . without . . . measure—Greek, "to unmeasured bounds." There is no limit to a man's high opinion of himself, so long as he measures himself by himself (vs. 13) and his fellows, and does not compare himself with his superiors. It marks the personal character of this Epistle that the word "boast" occurs twenty-nine times in it, and only twenty-six times in all the other Epistles put together. Undeterred by the charge of vanity, he felt he must vindicate his apostolic authority by facts [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. It would be to "boast of things without our measure," were we to boast of conversions made by "other men's labors" (vs. 15). distributed—apportioned [ALFORD]. a measure—as a measure [ALFORD]. to reach—"that we should reach as far as even to you": not that he meant to go no further (vs. 16; Rom. 15:20-24). Paul's "measure" is the apportionment of his sphere of Gospel labors ruled for him by God. A "rule" among the so-called "apostolic canons" subsequently was, that no bishop should appoint ministers beyond his own limits. At Corinth no minister ought to have been received without Paul's sanction, as Corinth was apportioned to him by God as his apostolic sphere. The Epistle here incidentally, and therefore undesignedly, confirms the independent history, the Acts, which represents Corinth as the extreme limit as yet of his preaching, at which he had stopped, after he had from Philippi passed southward successively through Amphipolis, Apollonia, Thessalonica, Berea, and Athens [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. 14. "We are not stretching ourselves beyond our measure, as (we should be) if we did not reach unto you: (but we do), for as far as even to you have we come in preaching the Gospel." 15. "Not boasting to unmeasured bounds (i.e., not exceeding our own bounds by boasting) of (lit., "in") other men's labors." when—"AS your faith goes on increasing." The cause of his not yet reaching with the Gospel the regions beyond Corinth, was the weakness as yet of their faith. He desired not to leave the Corinthians before the proper time, and yet not to put off preaching to others too long. enlarged by you—Greek, "in your case." Our success in your case will give us an important step towards further progress beyond you (vs. 16). according to our rule—according to our divinely assigned apportionment of the area or sphere of our work; for "we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure" (vs. 14). abundantly—Greek, "unto exceeding abundance": so as to exceed the limits we have yet reached (vs. 16).

9. That I may not seem. This is an elliptical sentence, and may be supplied thus: "I have not used this authority; nor will I add any more concerning this part of the subject, lest I should seem, as my adversary has insinuated, to wish to terrify you by my letters.

10. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful. He boasts of high powers, and that he can do great things. See on vv. 1-2. But his bodily presence is weak. When you behold the man, you find him a feeble, contemptible mortal; and when you hear him speak, his speech, probably his "doctrine," is good for nothing. If we can credit some ancient writers, such as Nicephorus, we shall find the apostle thus described: "Paul was a little man, crooked, and almost bent like a bow; with a pale countenance, long and wrinkled; a bald head; his eyes full of fire and benevolence; his beard long, thick, and interspersed with grey hairs, as was his head." Perhaps there is not one of these statements correct. As to Nicephorus, he is a writer of the fourteenth century, weak and credulous, and worthy of no regard. That Paul could be no such diminutive person we may fairly presume from the office he filled under the high priest, in the persecution of the Church of Christ; and that he had not an impediment in his speech, but was a graceful orator, we may learn from his whole history, and especially from the account we have, Acts xiv. 12, where the Lycaonians took him for Mercury, the god of eloquence, induced thereto by his powerful and persuasive elocution.

11. Such as we are in word. A threatening of this kind would doubtless alarm the false apostle; and it is very likely that he did not await the apostle's coming, as he would not be willing to try the fate of Elymas.

12. We dare not make ourselves. As if he had said: I dare neither associate with, nor compare myself to, those who are full of self-commendation. But they measuring themselves by themselves. As they dare not compare themselves with the true apostles of Christ, they compare themselves with each other; and, as they have no perfect standard, they can have no excellence.

13. Things without our measure. By the measure mentioned here, it seems as if the apostle meant the commission he received from God to preach the gospel to the Gentiles; a measure or "district" that extended through all Asia Minor and Greece, down to Achaia, where Corinth was situated, a measure to reach even unto you. But the expressions in these verses are all agonistical, and taken from the stadium or racecourse in the Olympic and Isthmian games. The measure was the length of the course; the rule or line, vv. 15 and 16, was probably the same with the white line which marked out the boundaries of the stadium; and the verbs "reach unto," "stretch out," etc., are all references to the exertions made to win the race.

14. For we stretch not ourselves beyond. We have not proceeded straight from Macedonia through Thessaly, and across the Adriatic Gulf into Italy, which would have led us beyond you westward; but knowing the mind of our God, we left this direct path, and came southward through Greece, down into Achaia, and there we planted the gospel. The false apostle has therefore got into our province, and entered into our labors, and there boasts as if the conversion of the heathen Achaians had been his own work.

15. Not boasting of things without our measure. We speak only of the work which God has done by us; for we have never attempted to enter into other men's labors, and we study to convert those regions assigned to us by the Holy Spirit. We enter the course lawfully, and run according to rule. When your faith is increased. When you receive more of the life and power of godliness, and when you can better spare me to go to other places. We shall be enlarged by you. Probably signifies here to be "praised" or "commended"; and the sense would be this: We hope that shortly, on your gaining an increase of true religion, after your long distractions and divisions, you will plainly see that we are the true messengers of God to you; and that in all your intercourse with your neighbors, or foreign parts, you will speak of this gospel preached by us as a glorious system of saving

V. He seems to check himself as if he had spoken too much in his own praise. He is afraid of boasting, or taking any praise to himself, v. 17.

Ministers in particular must be careful not to glory in their performances, but must give God the glory of their work, and the success thereof, v. 18. Of all flattery, self-flattery is the worst. Instead of praising or commending ourselves, we should strive to approve ourselves to God, and his approbation will be our best commendation.

CHAPTER 11

1. The apology the apostle makes for going about to commend himself, v. 1. As much against the grain as it is with a proud man to acknowledge his infirmities, so much is it against the grain with a humble man to speak in his own praise.

2. The reasons for what the apostle did. To preserve the Corinthians from being corrupted by the insinuations of the false apostles, v. 2, 3. He was jealous over them with godly jealousy. He had espoused them to one husband, and he was desirous to present them as a chaste virgin—pure, and spotless, and faithful, not having their minds corrupted by false teachers. To vindicate himself against the false apostles.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

16. To—i.e., so as to preach . . . beyond you (and) not to boast . . . . in another man's line of things made ready to our hand—Do not connect "line of things . . ."; but "boast of things . . ." To make this clearer, arrange the words thus, "Not to boast as to things (already made by the preaching of others) ready to our hand in another man's line (i.e., within the line, or sphere of labor, apportioned by God to another)." 17. glorieth—Translate, to accord with vs. 16, "boasteth." In contrast to his opponents' practice of boasting in another's line or sphere, Paul declares the only true boasting is in the Lord (I Cor. 1:31; 15:10).

18. (Prov. 27:2.) whom the Lord commendeth—to whom the Lord has given as His "Epistle of commendation," the believers whom he has been the instrument of converting: as was Paul's case (ch. 3:1-3). is approved—can stand the test of the final trial. A metaphor from testing metals (Rom. 16:10; I Cor. 11:19). So on the other hand those finally rejected by the Lord are termed "reprobate silver" (Jer. 6:30).

Vss. 1-33. THROUGH JEALOUSY OVER THE CORINTHIANS, WHO MADE MORE ACCOUNT OF THE FALSE APOSTLES THAN OF HIM, HE IS OBLIGED TO COMMEND HIMSELF AS IN MANY RESPECTS SUPERIOR. 1. Would to God—Translate as Greek, "I would that." bear with me—I may ask not unreasonably to be borne with; not so the false apostles (vss. 4, 20). my—not in the oldest MSS. folly—The Greek is a milder term than that for "foolishness" in I Corinthians 3:19; Matthew 5:22; 25:2. The Greek for "folly" here implies imprudence; the Greek for "foolishness" includes the idea of perversity and wickedness. and indeed bear—A request (so vs. 16). But the Greek and the sense favor the translation, "But indeed (I need not wish it, for) ye do bear with me"; still I wish you to bear with me further, while I enter at large into self-commendations. 2. For I am jealous—The justification of his self-commendations lies in his zealous care lest they should fall from Christ, to whom he, as "the friend of the Bridegroom" (John 3:29), has espoused them; in order to lead them back from the false apostles to Christ, he is obliged to boast as an apostle of Christ, in a way which, but for the motive, would be "folly." godly jealousy—lit., "jealousy of God" (cf. ch. 1:12, "godly sincerity," lit., "sincerity of God"). "If I am immoderate, I am immoderate to God" [BENGEL]. A jealousy which has God's honor at heart (I Kings 19:10). I . . . espoused you—Paul uses a Greek term applied properly to the bridegroom, just as he ascribes to himself "jealousy," a feeling properly belonging to the husband; so entirely does he identify himself with Christ. present you as a chaste virgin to Christ—at His coming, when the heavenly marriage shall take place (Matt. 25:6; Rev. 19:7, 9). What Paul here says he desires to do, viz., "present" the Church as "a chaste virgin" to Christ, Christ Himself is said to do in the fuller sense. Whatever ministers do effectively, is really done by Christ (Eph. 5:27-32). The espousals are going on now. He does not say "chaste virgins"; for not individual members, but the whole body of believers conjointly constitute the Bride. 3. I fear—(ch. 12:20)—not inconsistent with love. His source of fear was their yielding character. subtilty—the utter foe of the "simplicity" which is intent on ONE object, Jesus, and seeks none "other," and no "other" and different Spirit (vs. 4); but loves him with tender SINGLENESS OF AFFECTION. Where Eve first gave way, was in mentally harboring for a moment the possibility insinuated by the serpent, of GOD not having her truest interests at heart, and of this "other" professing friend being more concerned for her than GOD. corrupted—so as to lose their virgin purity through seducers (vs. 4). The same Greek stands for "minds" as for "thoughts" (ch. 10:5, where see Note); intents of the will, or mind. The oldest MSS., after "simplicity," add, "and the purity" or "chastity." in Christ—rather, "that is towards truth; and that, in consequence, the heathen countries around you will be the better prepared to receive our message, and thus our rule or district will be abundantly extended. This interpretation agrees well with the following verse.

16. To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you. He probably refers to those parts such as Sparta, that lay southward of them; and to Italy, which lay on the west. Not to boast in another man's line. So very scrupulous was the apostle not to build on another man's foundation that he would not even go to those places where other apostles were laboring.

17. He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. Instead of boasting or exulting even in your own success in preaching the gospel, as none can be successful without the especial blessing of God, let God, who gave the blessing, have the glory.

18. Not he that commendeth himself. Not the person who makes a parade of his own attainments; who preaches himself, and not Christ Jesus the Lord; and, far from being your servant for Christ's sake, affects to be your ruler—not such a one shall be approved of God by an especial blessing on his labors, but whom the Lord commendeth, by giving him the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit and converting the heathen by his ministry. These were qualifications to which the false apostle at Corinth could not pretend.

1. Would to God ye could bear with me. As the word God is not mentioned here, it would have been much better to translate the passage literally thus: "I wish ye could bear a little with me." The too frequent use of this sacred name produces a familiarity with it that is not at all conducive to reverence and godly fear. In my folly. In my seeming folly, for being obliged to vindicate his ministry, it was necessary that he should speak much of himself, his sufferings, and his success. And as this would appear like boasting, and boasting is always the effect of an empty, foolish mind, those who were not acquainted with the necessity that lay upon him to make this defense might be led to impute it to vanity.

2. That I may present you as a chaste virgin. There seems to be a reference to Lev. xxi. 14, that the high priest must not marry anyone that was not a pure virgin. Here then Christ is the High Priest, the Spouse or Husband; the Corinthian church, the pure virgin to be espoused; the apostle and his helpers had educated and prepared this virgin for her husband and espoused her to him.

3. As the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty. This is a strong reflection on the false apostle and his teaching. He was subtle, and by his subtlety he was enabled to corrupt the minds of the people from the simplicity of the gospel of Christ; or, to follow the metaphor, he had seduced the pure, chaste, well-educated virgin from her duty, affection, and allegiance to her one only true Husband, the High Priest, Jesus Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

They could not pretend they had another Jesus, or another Spirit, or another gospel, to preach to them, v. 4. But seeing there is but one Jesus, one Spirit, and one gospel preached to them and received by them, what reason could there be why the Corinthians should be prejudiced against him, who first converted them to the faith?

Verses 5–15

I. His equality with the other apostles, v. 5. This he expresses very modestly: I suppose so. He might have spoken very positively.

He speaks modestly of himself, and humbly owns his personal infirmity, that he was rude in speech. However, he was not rude in knowledge; much less was he ignorant of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.

II. His equality with the false apostles in this particular. They ought to acknowledge he had been a good friend to them. He had preached the gospel to them freely, v. 7–10.

He says he himself had taken wages of other churches (v. 8), so that he had a right to have asked and received from them: yet he waived his right, and chose rather to abase himself. He chose rather to be supplied from Macedonia than to be chargeable unto them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Christ." 4. if...—which in fact is impossible. However, if it were possible, ye might then bear with them (see Note, vs. 1). But there can be no new Gospel; there is but the one which I first preached; therefore it ought not to be "borne" by you, that the false teachers should attempt to supersede me. he that cometh—the high-sounding title assumed by the false teachers, who arrogated Christ's own peculiar title (Greek, Matt. 11:3, and Heb. 10:37), "He that is coming." Perhaps he was leader of the party which assumed peculiarly to be "Christ's" (ch. 10:7; I Cor. 1:12); hence his assumption of the title. preacheth...receive—is preaching... ye are receiving. Jesus—the "Jesus" of Gospel history. He therefore does not say "Christ," which refers to the office. another... another—Greek, "another Jesus... a different Spirit... a different Gospel." Another implies a distinct individual of the same kind; different implies one quite distinct in kind. which ye have not received—from us. spirit... received... gospel... accepted—The will of man is passive in RECEIVING the "Spirit"; but it is actively concurrent with the will of God (which goes before to give the good will) in ACCEPTING the "Gospel." ye might well bear with him—There would be an excuse for your conduct, though a bad one (for ye ought to give heed to no Gospel other than what ye have already heard from me, Gal. 1:6, 7); but the false teachers do not even pretend they have "another Jesus" and a "different Gospel" to bring before you; they merely try to supplant me, your accredited Teacher. Yet ye not only "bear with" them, but prefer them. 5. For—My claim is superior to that of the false teachers, "For...." I suppose—I reckon [ALFORD]. I was not—Greek, "That I have not been, and am not." the very chiefest apostles—James, Peter, and John, the witnesses of Christ's transfiguration and agony in Gethsemane. Rather, "those overmuch apostles," those surpassers of the apostles in their own esteem. This sense is proved by the fact that the context contains no comparison between him and the apostles, but only between him and the false teachers; vs. 6 also alludes to these, and not to the apostles; cf. also the parallel phrase, "false apostles" (Note, vs. 13, and ch. 12:11) [ALFORD]. 6. rude—Greek, "a common man"; a "laic"; not rhetorically trained; unskilled in finish of diction. I Corinthians 2:1-4, 13; ch. 10:10, 11, shows his words were not without weight, though his "speech" was deficient in oratorical artifice. "Yet I am not so in my knowledge" (ch. 12:1-5; Eph. 3:1-5). have been... made manifest—Read with the oldest MSS., "We have made things (Gospel truths) manifest," thus showing our "knowledge." English Version would mean, I leave it to yourselves to decide whether I be rude in speech...: for we have been thoroughly (lit., "in everything") made manifest among you (lit., "in respect to you"; "in relation to you"). He had not by reserve kept back his "knowledge" in divine mysteries from them (ch. 2: 17; 4:2; Acts 20:20, 27). in all things—The Greek rather favors the translation, "among all men"; the sense then is, we have manifested the whole truth among all men with a view to your benefit [ALFORD]. But the Greek in Philippians 4:12, "In each thing and in all things," sanctions English Version, which gives a clearer sense. 7. Have I—lit., "OR have I?" Connected with last verse, "Or will any of you make it an objection that I have preached to you gratuitously?" He leaves their good feeling to give the answer, that this, so far from being an objection, was a decided superiority in him above the false apostles (I Cor. 9:6-15). abasing myself—in my mode of living, waiving my right of maintenance, and earning it by manual labor; perhaps with slaves as his fellow laborers (Acts 18:3; Phil. 4:12). ye... exalted—spiritually, by your admission to Gospel privileges. because—"in that." gospel of God—"of God" implies its divine glory to which they were admitted. freely—"without charge." 8. I robbed—i.e., took from them in order to spare you more than what was their fair share of contribution to my maintenance, e.g., the Philippian Church (Phil. 4:15, 16). wages—"subsidy." to do you service—Greek, "with a view to ministration to you"; cf. "supplied" (Greek, "in addition"), vs. 9, implying, he brought with him from the Macedonians, supplies towards his maintenance at Corinth; and (vs. 9) when those resources failed ("when I wanted") he received a new supply, while there, from the same source. 9. wanted—"was in want." chargeable—Greek, "burdensome," lit., "to torpify," and so to oppress. JEROME says it is a Cilician word (ch. 12:14, 16). the brethren which came—rather, as Greek, "the brethren when they came." Perhaps Timotheus and Silas (Acts 8:

ADAM CLARKE

4. For if he that cometh. The false apostle who came after Paul had left Corinth. Preacheth another Jesus. Who can save more fully and more powerfully than that Jesus whom I have preached. Or if ye receive another spirit. And if in consequence of believing in this new saviour you receive another spirit, the gifts, graces, and consolations of which are greater than those which you have received from the Holy Ghost, who has been given to you on your believing on the Christ whom we preached. Or another gospel. Containing more privileges, spiritual advantages, and stronger excitements to holiness than that which we have preached and which you have accepted, ye might well bear with him. This would be a sufficient reason why you should not only bear with him, but prefer him to me.

5. I was not . . . behind the very chiefest apostles. That is: The most eminent of the apostles have not preached Christ, ministered the Spirit, explained and enforced the doctrines of the gospel in a more powerful and effectual manner than I have done.

6. But though I be rude in speech. Though I speak like a common, unlettered man, in plain, unadorned phrase, studying none of the graces of eloquence, yet I am not unskilled in the most profound knowledge of God, of spiritual and eternal things, of the nature of the human soul, and the sound truths of the gospel system. You yourselves are witnesses of this, as in all these things I have been thoroughly manifested among you.

7. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself? Have I transgressed in laboring with my hands that I might not be chargeable to you? and getting my deficiencies supplied by contributions from other churches, while I was employed in laboring for your salvation? Does your false apostle insinuate that I have disgraced the apostolic office by thus descending to servile labor for my support? Well, I have done this that you might be exalted—that you might receive the pure doctrines of the gospel, and be exalted to the highest pitch of intellectual light and blessedness. And will you complain that I preached the gospel gratis to you? Surely not. The whole passage is truly ironical.

8. I robbed other churches. This part of the sentence is explained by the latter, taking wages . . . to do you service. The word signifies the pay of money and provisions given daily to a Roman soldier. As if he had said: I received food and raiment, the bare necessaries of life, from other churches while laboring for your salvation. Will you esteem this a crime?

9. And when I was present with you. The particle which we translate and should be rendered "for" in this place: "For when I was with you, and was in want, I was chargeable to no man." I preferred to be, for a time, even without the necessaries of life, rather than be a burden to you. To whom was this a reproach, to me or to you? The brethren which came from

He informs them of the reason. It was not because he did not love them (v. 11), but it was to avoid offence. He would not give occasion for any to accuse him of worldly designs in preaching the gospel, or that he intended to enrich himself, v. 12.

III. The false apostles are charged as deceitful workers (v. 13), and though they were the ministers of Satan, would seem to be the ministers of righteousness. Hypocrisy is a thing not to be much wondered at in this world, especially when we consider the great influence Satan has. As he can turn himself into any shape, and look sometimes like an angel of light, in order to promote his kingdom of darkness, so he will teach his instruments to do the same. But it follows, Their end is according to their works (v. 15).

Let no man think me a fool, v. 16. Boasting of ourselves is usually not only a sign of a proud mind, but a mark of folly also, v. 17. He would not have them think that boasting of ourselves is a thing commanded by the Lord in general unto Christians. It is the duty and practice of Christians rather to humble and abase themselves; yet prudence must direct in what circumstances it is needful to speak of what God has wrought for us, and in us, and by us too, v. 18. But he gloried in his infirmities, as he tells them afterwards.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

1, 5). Cf. Philippians 4:15, 16, which refers to donations received from the Philippians (who were in Macedonia) at two distinct periods ("once and again"), one at Thessalonica, the other after his departure from Macedonia, that is, when he came into Achaia to Corinth (from the church in which city he would receive no help); and this "in the beginning of the Gospel," i.e., at its first preaching in these parts. Thus all three, the two Epistles and history, mutually, and no doubt undesignedly, coincide; a sure test of genuineness. supplied—Greek, "supplied in addition," viz., in addition to their former contributions; or as BENGEL, in addition to the supply obtained by my own manual labor. 10. Greek, "There is (the) truth of Christ in me that . . ." (Rom. 9:1). no man shall stop me of—The oldest MSS. read, "This boasting shall not be shut (i.e., stopped) as regards me." "Boasting is as it were personified . . . shall not have its mouth stopped as regards me" [ALFORD]. 11. Love is often offended at its favors being not accepted, as though the party to whom they are offered wished to be under no obligation to the offerer. 12. I will do—I will continue to decline help. occasion—Greek, "the occasion," viz., of misrepresenting my motives, which would be afforded to my detractors, if I accepted help. that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we—BENGEL joins this clause with "the occasion," viz., of glorying or boasting; the occasion "that they may be found (a point wherein they glory) even as we," i.e., quite as disinterested, or virtually, quite as gain-seeking and self-seeking. It cannot mean that the false teachers taught gratuitously even as Paul (cf. vs. 20; I Cor. 9:12). ALFORD less clearly explains by reference to vs. 18, etc., where the "glorying" here is taken up and described as "glorying after the flesh"; thus it means, that in the matters of which they boast they may be found even as we, i.e., we may be on a fair and equal footing; that there may be no adventitious comparisons made between us, arising out of misrepresentations of my course of procedure, but that in every matter of boasting we may be fairly compared and judged by facts; FOR (vs. 13) realities they have none, no weapons but misrepresentation, being false apostles. 13. For—reason why he is unwilling they should be thought like him [BENGEL]. such—they and those like them. false apostles—those "overmuch apostles" (Note, vs. 5) are no apostles at all. deceitful workers—pretending to be "workmen" for the Lord, and really seeking their own gain. 14. is transformed—rather, "transforms himself" (cf. Job 1:6); habitually; the first occasion of his doing so was in tempting Eve. "Himself" is emphatical: If their master himself, who is the "prince of darkness," the most alien to light, does so, it is less marvellous in the case of them who are his servants (Luke 22:54; Eph. 6:12). 15. no great thing—no difficult matter. if his ministers also—as well as himself. righteousness—answering to "light" (vs. 14); the manifestation wherewith God reveals Himself in Christ (Matt. 6:33; Rom. 1:17). end—The test of things is the end which strips off every specious form into which Satan's agents may now "transform" themselves (ch. Phil. 3:19, 21). according to their works—not according to their pretensions. 16. I say again—again taking up from vs. 1 the anticipatory apology for his boasting. if otherwise—but if ye will not grant this; if ye will think me a fool. yet as a fool—"yet even as a fool receive me"; grant me the indulgent hearing conceded even to one suspected of folly. The Greek denotes one who does not rightly use his mental powers; not having the idea of blame necessarily attached to it; one deceived by foolish vanities, yet boasting himself [TITTM.], (vss. 17, 19). that I—The oldest MSS. read, "that I, too," viz., as well as they, may boast myself. 17. not after the Lord—By inspired guidance he excepts this "glorying" or "boasting" from the inspired authoritativeness which belongs to all else that he wrote; even this boasting, though undesirable in itself, was permitted by the Spirit, taking into account its aim, viz., to draw off the Corinthians from their false teachers to the apostle. Therefore this passage gives no proof that any portion of Scripture is uninspired. It merely guards against his boasting being made a justification of boasting in general, which is not ordinarily "after the Lord," i.e., consistent with Christian humility. foolishly—Greek, "in foolishness." confidence of boasting—(ch. 9:4). 18. many—including the "false teachers." after the flesh—as fleshly men are wont to boast, viz., of external advantages, as their birth, doings, etc. (cf. vs. 22). I will glory also—i.e., I also will boast of such fleshly advantages, to show you that even in these I am not their inferiors, and therefore ought not to Macedonia. He probably refers to the supplies which he received from the church at Philippi, which was in Macedonia; of which he says, that "in the beginning of the gospel . . . no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity," Phil. iv. 15-16.

10. As the truth of Christ is in me. That is: I speak as becomes a Christian man, and as influenced by the gospel of Christ. It is a solemn form of asseveration, if not to be considered in the sense of an oath. In the regions of Achaia. The whole of the Peloponnesus, in which the city of Corinth stood. From this it appears that he had received no help from any of the other churches in the whole of that district.

11. Wherefore. Why have I acted thus? and why do I propose to continue to act thus? is it because I love you not, and will not permit you to contribute to my support? God knoweth the contrary; I do most affectionately love you.

12. But what I do. I act thus that I may cut off occasion of glorying, boasting, or calumniating from them—the false prophets and his partisans, "who seek occasion"—who would be glad that I should become chargeable to you, that it might in some sort vindicate them who exact much from you; for they "bring you into bondage" and "devour you," v. 20. Nothing could mortify these persons more than to find that the apostle did take nothing and was resolved to take nothing, while they were fleecing the people.

13. For such are false apostles. Persons who pretend to be apostles but have no mission from Christ. Deceitful workers. They do preach and labor, but they have nothing but their own emolument in view. Transforming themselves. Assuming as far as they possibly can, consistently with their sinister views, the habit, manner, and doctrine of the apostles of Christ.

14. And no marvel. And no wonder; it need not surprise you what the disciples do, when you consider the character of the master. Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. As in v. 3 the apostle had the history of the temptation and fall of man particularly in view, it is very likely that here he refers to the same thing. In whatever form Satan appeared to our first mother, his pretensions and professions gave him the appearance of a good angel; and by pretending that Eve should get a great increase of light, that is, wisdom and understanding, he deceived her, and led her to transgress. It is generally said that Satan has three forms under which he tempts men: (1) the subtle serpent, (2) the roaring lion, (3) the angel of light. He often, as the angel of light, persuades men to do things under the name of religion which are subversive of it.

15. Whose end shall be according to their works. A bad way leads to a bad end. The way of sin is the way to hell.

16. Let no man think me a fool. See the note on v. 1. As the apostle was now going to enter into a particular detail of his qualifications, natural, acquired, and spiritual, and particularly of his labors and sufferings, he thinks it necessary to introduce the discourse once more as he did in v. 1.

17. I speak it not after the Lord. Were it not for the necessity under which I am laid to vindicate my apostleship, my present glorying would be inconsistent with my Christian profession of humility and knowing no one after the flesh.

18. Seeing that many glory after the flesh. Boast of external and secular things.

MATTHEW HENRY

These words, You suffer fools gladly seeing you yourselves are wise (v. 19), may be ironical.

"Notwithstanding all your wisdom, you willingly suffer yourselves to be brought into bondage, or suffer others to lord it over you; nay, even to smite you on the face, or impose upon you to your very faces" (v. 20).

The circumstances of the case were such as made it needful that whereinsoever any were bold he should be bold also, v. 21.

Verses 22–33

I. The privilege of his birth (v. 22). He was a Hebrew of the Hebrews; of a family among the Jews that never intermarried with the Gentiles. He was also an Israelite, and was also of the seed of Abraham.

II. He makes mention also of his apostleship, v. 23. They had found full proofs of his ministry: Are they ministers of Christ? I am more so.

III. He chiefly insists upon this, that he had been an extraordinary sufferer for Christ, v. 23. When the apostle would prove himself an extraordinary minister, he proves that he had been an extraordinary sufferer.

ALBERT BARNES:

23. "Are they ministers of Christ?" Though Jews by birth yet they claimed to be the ministers of the Messiah. "I speak as a fool." As if he had said, "Bear in mind, in what I am now about to say, that he who speaks is accused of being a fool in boasting. Let it not be deemed improper that I should act in this character, and since you regard me as such, let me speak like a fool." His frequent reminding them of this charge was eminently fitted to humble them that they had ever made it, especially when they were reminded by an enumeration of his trials of the character of the man against whom the charge was brought.

"I am more." Paul was not disposed to deny that they were true ministers of Christ. But he had higher claims to the office than they had. He had been called to it in a more remarkable manner, and he had shown by his labors and trials that he had more of the true spirit of a minister of the Lord Jesus than they had. He therefore goes into detail to show what he had endured in endeavoring to diffuse the knowledge of the Savior; trials which he had borne probably while they had been dwelling in comparative ease and in a comfortable manner, free from suffering and persecution.

—Popular Commentary

be supplanted by them in your esteem; though these are not what I desire to glory in (ch. 10:17). 19. gladly—willingly. Irony. A plea why they should "bear with" (vs. 1) him in his folly, i.e., boasting; ye are, in sooth, so "wise" (I Cor. 4:8, 10; Paul's real view of their wisdom was very different, I Cor. 3:1-4) yourselves that ye can "bear with" the folly of others more complacently. Not only can ye do so, but ye are actually doing this and more. 20. For—Ye may well "bear with" fools; for ye even "bear with" oppressors. Translate, "Ye bear with them." a man—as the false apostles do. bring you into bondage—to himself. Translate "brings," not "bring"; for the case is not merely a supposed case, but a case actually then occurring. Also "devours" (viz., by exactions, Matt. 23:24; Ps. 53: 4), "takes," "exalts," "smites." take of you—So the Greek for "take" is used for "take away from" (Rev. 6:4). ALFORD translates, as in ch. 12:16, "catches you." exalt himself—under the pretext of apostolic dignity. smite you on the face—under the pretext of divine zeal. The height of insolence on their part, and of servile endurance on yours (I Kings 22:24; Neh. 13:25; Luke 22:64; Acts 23:2; I Tim. 3:3). 21. as concerning reproach—rather, "by way of dishonor (i.e., self-disparagement) I say it." as though we . . . weak—in not similarly (vs. 20) showing our power over you. "An ironical reminiscence of his own abstinence when among them from all these acts of self-exaltation at their expense" (as if such abstinence was weakness) [ALFORD]. The "we" is emphatically contrasted with the false teachers who so oppressively displayed their power. I speak so as though WE had been weak when with you, because we did not show our power this way. Howbeit (we are not really weak; for), whereinsoever any is bold . . . , I am bold also. 22. Hebrews . . . Israelites . . . the seed of Abraham—A climax. "Hebrews," referring to the language and nationality; "Israelites," to the theocracy and descent from Israel, the "prince who prevailed with God" (Rom. 9:4); "the seed of Abraham," to the claim to a share in the Messiah (Rom. 11:1; 9:7). Cf. Philippians 3:5, "An Hebrew of the Hebrews," not an Hellenist or Greekspeaking Jew, but a Hebrew in tongue, and sprung from Hebrews.

23. I speak as a fool—rather, as Greek, "I speak as if beside myself"; stronger than "as a fool." I am more—viz., in respect to the credentials and manifestations of my ministry, more faithful and self-denying; and richer in tokens of God's recognition of my ministry. Old authorities read the order thus, "In prisons above measures, in stripes more abundantly" (English Version, less accurately, "more frequent"). Acts 16:23-40 records one case of his imprisonment with stripes. CLEMENT (I Epistle to Corinthians) describes him as having suffered bonds seven times. in death oft—(ch. 4:10; Acts 9:23; 13:50; 14:5, 6, 19; 17:5, 13).

24. Deuteronomy 25:3 ordained that not more than forty stripes should be inflicted. To avoid exceeding this number, they gave one short of it: thirteen strokes with a treble lash [BENGEL]. This is one of those minute agreements with Jewish usage, which a forger would have not been likely to observe.

ADAM CLARKE

19. Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise. A very fine irony. You are so profoundly wise as to be able to discern that I am a fool. Well, it would be dishonorable to you as wise men to fall out with a fool; you will therefore gladly bear with his impertinence and foolishness because of your own profound wisdom.

20. For ye suffer. As you are so meek and gentle as to submit to be brought into bondage, to have your property devoured, your goods taken away, yourselves laid in the dust, so that others may exalt themselves over you—yea, and will bear from those the most degrading indignity—then of course you will bear with one who has never insulted, defrauded, devoured, taken of you, exalted himself against you, or offered you any kind of indignity; and who only wishes you to bear his confident boasting concerning matters which he can substantiate. The expressions in this verse are some evidence that the false apostle was a Judaizing teacher. Ye suffer, says the apostle, if a man bring you into bondage, probably meaning to the Jewish rites and ceremonies, Gal. iv. 9; v. 1. If he devour you; as the Pharisees did the patrimony of the widows, and for a pretense made long prayers; if a man take of you, exact different contributions, pretendedly for the Temple at Jerusalem. If he exalt himself, pretending to be of the seed of Abraham, infinitely higher in honor and dignity than all the families of the Gentiles; if he smite you on the face, treat you with indignity, as the Jews did the Gentiles, considering them only as dogs, and not fit to be ranked with any of the descendants of Jacob.

22. Are they Hebrews? Speaking the sacred language, and reading in the congregation from the Hebrew Scriptures? The same is my own language. Are they Israelites? Regularly descended from Jacob, and not from Esau? I am also one. Are they the seed of Abraham? Circumcised, and in the bond of the covenant? So am I. I am no proselyte, but I am a Hebrew of the Hebrews by both father and mother; and can trace my genealogy through the tribe of Benjamin, up to the father of the faithful.

23. Are they ministers of Christ? So we find that these were professors of Christianity; and that they were genuine Jews, and such as endeavored to incorporate both systems, and no doubt to oblige those who had believed to be circumcised; and this appears to have been the bondage into which they had brought many of the believing Christians. I am more. More of a minister of Christ than they are, and have given fuller proofs of it. I have suffered persecution for the cross of Christ, and of the Jews too; and had I preached up the necessity of circumcision, I should have been as free from opposition as these are. In labours more abundant. Far from sitting down to take my ease in a church already gathered into Christ, I travel incessantly, preach everywhere and at all risks, in order to get the heathen brought from the empire of darkness into the kingdom of God's beloved Son. In stripes above measure. Being beaten by the heathen, who had no particular rule according to which they scourged criminals; and we find, from Acts xvi. 22-23, that they beat Paul unmercifully with many stripes. In prisons more frequent. See Acts xxi. 11 and the whole of the apostle's history; and his long imprisonment of at least two years at Rome, Acts xxviii. It does not appear that there is any one instance of a false apostle having been imprisoned for the testimony of Christ; this was a badge of the true apostles. In deaths oft. That is, in the most imminent dangers. See 1 Cor. xv. 31; 2 Cor. iv. 11.

24. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. That is, he was five times scourged by the Jews, whose law (Deut. xxv. 3) allowed forty stripes; but they, pretending to be lenient, and to act within the letter of the law, inflicted but thirty-nine. To except one stripe from the forty was a very ancient canon among the Jews, as we learn from Josephus, Antiq., l. iv, c. viii, s. 21, who mentions the same thing: "forty stripes, excepting one." The Mishna gives this as a rule, Mish., Maccoth, fol. 22, 10: "How often shall he, the culprit, be smitten? Ans. forty stripes, wanting one; i.e., with the number which is nighest to forty." They also thought

F. B. MEYER:

It has been truly said that this enumeration represents a life which up to that hour had been without precedent in the history of the world. Self-devotion at particular moments or for some special cause had been often witnessed before; but a self-devotion involving such sacrifices and extending over at least fourteen years, in the interests of mankind at large, was up to that time a thing unknown. The lives of missionaries and philanthropists in later times may have paralleled his experiences; but Paul did all this, and was the first to do it.

The biography of the apostle, as told by Luke, comes greatly short of this marvelous description. Of the facts alluded to, only two—the stoning and one of the Roman scourgings—are mentioned in the book of the Acts; from which we gather that the book is, after all, but a fragmentary record, and that the splendid deeds of the disciples and apostles of that first age will be known only when the Lamb himself recites them from his Book. But even this enumeration omits all that the apostle suffered after the writing of this epistle, including, of course, the sufferings between his arrest and his appearance before Nero.—Bible Commentary

Bonds and imprisonments were familiar to him. He says that thrice he suffered shipwreck. A night and a day he had been in the deep (v. 25). Wherever he went, he went in perils.

If he journeyed by land, or voyaged by sea, he was in perils of robbers; his own countrymen sought to kill him; the heathen were not more kind to him, for among them he was in peril. If he was in the city, or in the wilderness, still he was in peril. He was in peril not only among avowed enemies, but among those also who called themselves brethren, but were false brethren, v. 26. He was in watchings often, and exposed to hunger and thirst; in fastings often; and endured cold and nakedness, v. 27. Thus he was used as if he had been the burden of the earth, and the plague of his generation.

As an apostle, the care of all the churches lay on him, v. 28. He mentions this last, as if this lay the heaviest upon him, v. 29. There was not a weak Christian with whom he did not sympathize, nor any one scandalized, but he was affected therewith.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

25. The beating by Roman magistrates at Philippi (Acts 16:23) is the only one recorded in Acts, which does not profess to give a complete journal of his life, but only a sketch of it in connection with the design of the book, viz., to give an outline of the history of the Gospel Church from its foundation at Jerusalem, to the period of its reaching Rome, the capital of the Gentile world. once was I stoned—(Acts 14:19). thrice . . . shipwreck—before the shipwreck at Melita (Acts 27). Probably in some of his voyages from Tarsus, where he stayed for some time after his conversion, and from which, as being a seafaring place, he was likely to make missionary voyages to adjoining places (Acts 9:30; 11:25; Gal. 1:21). a night and a day . . . in the deep—probably in part swimming or in an open boat. 26. In—rather, "By": connected with vs. 23, but now not with "in," as there, and as in vs. 27, where again he passes to the idea of surrounding circumstances or environments [ALFORD, ELLICOTT and others]. waters—rather, as Greek, "rivers," viz., perils by the flooding of rivers, as on the road often traversed by Paul between Jerusalem and Antioch, crossed as it is by the torrents rushing down from Lebanon. So the traveller Spon lost his life. robbers—perhaps in his journey from Perga to Antioch in Pisidia. Pisidia was notorious for robbers; as indeed were all the mountains that divided the high land of Asia from the sea. the heathen—Gentiles. in the city—Damascus, Acts 9:24, 25; Jerusalem, Acts 9:29; Ephesus, Acts 19:23.

false brethren—(Gal. 2:4). 27. fastings—voluntary, in order to kindle devotions (Acts 13:2, 3; 14:23; I Cor. 9:27); for they are distinguished from "hunger and thirst," which were involuntary [GROTIUS]. See, however, Note, ch. 6: 5. The context refers solely to hardships, not to self-imposed devotional mortification. "Hunger and thirst" are not synonymous with "foodlessness" (as the Greek of "fasting" means), but are its consequences. cold . . . nakedness—"cold" resulting from "nakedness," or insufficient clothing, as the Greek often means: as "hunger and thirst" result from "foodlessness." (Cf. Acts 28:2; Rom. 8:35.) "When we remember that he who endured all this was a man constantly suffering from infirm health (II Cor. 4:7-12; 12:7-10; Gal. 4:13, 14), such heroic self-devotion seems almost superhuman [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. 28. without—"Beside" trials falling on me externally, just recounted, there is "that which cometh upon me (lit., the impetuous concourse to me of business; properly, a crowd rising up against one again and again, and ready to bear him down), the care of all the churches" (including those not yet seen in the flesh, Col. 2:1): an internal and more weighty anxiety. But the oldest MSS., for "that which cometh," read, "the pressure": "the pressing care-taking" or "inspection that is upon me daily." ALFORD translates, "Omitting what is BESIDES"; viz., those other trials besides those recounted. But the Vulgate, ESTIUS, and BENGEL, support English Version. the care—The Greek implies, "my anxious solicitude for all the churches." 29. I . . . weak—in condescending sympathy with the weak (I Cor. 9:22). "Care generates sympathy, which causes the minister of Christ personally to enter into the feelings of all his people, as if he stood in their position, so as to accommodate himself to all" [CALVIN].

it right to stop under forty, lest the person who counted should make a mistake, and the criminal get more than forty stripes, which would be injustice, as the law required only forty. The manner in which this punishment was inflicted is described in the Mishna, fol. 22, 2: "The two hands of the criminal are bound to a post, and then the servant of the synagogue either pulls or tears off his clothes till he leaves his breast and shoulders bare. A stone or block is placed behind him on which the servant stands; he holds in his hands a scourge made of leather, divided into four tails. He who scourges lays one third on the criminal's breast, another third on his right shoulder, and another on his left. The man who receives the punishment is neither sitting nor standing, but all the while stooping; and the man smites with all his strength, with one hand."

25. Thrice was I beaten with rods. This was under the Roman government, as their lictors beat criminals in this way. We hear of the apostle's being treated thus once, namely, at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22. Once was I stoned. Namely, at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19, etc. A night and a day I have been in the deep. To what this refers we cannot tell; it is generally supposed that in some shipwreck not on record the apostle had saved himself on a plank, and was a whole day and night on the sea, tossed about at the mercy of the waves.

26. In journeyings often. He means the particular journeys which he took to different places, for the purpose of propagating the gospel. In perils of waters. Exposed to great dangers in crossing rivers; for of "rivers" the original must be understood. Of robbers. Judea itself, and perhaps every other country, was grievously infested by bandits of this kind; and no doubt the apostle in his frequent peregrinations was often attacked; but being poor and having nothing to lose, he passed unhurt, though not without great danger. In perils by mine own countrymen. The Jews had the most rooted antipathy to him, because they considered him an apostate from the true faith, and also the means of perverting many others. There are several instances of this in the Acts; and a remarkable conspiracy against his life is related, Acts xxiii. 12, etc. In perils by the heathen. In the heathen provinces whither he went to preach the gospel. Several instances of these perils occur also in the Acts. In perils in the city. The different seditions raised against him; particularly in Jerusalem, to which Ephesus and Damascus may be added. Perils in the wilderness. Uninhabited countries through which he was obliged to pass in order to reach from city to city. In such places it is easy to imagine many dangers from bandits, wild beasts, cold, starvation, etc. Perils in the sea. The different voyages he took in narrow seas, such as the Mediterranean, about dangerous coasts, and without compass. False brethren. Persons who joined themselves to the Church, pretending faith in Christ, but intending to act as spies, hoping to get some matter of accusation against him. He not doubt suffered much also from apostates.

27. In weariness and painfulness. Tribulations of this kind were his constant companions.

28. Beside those things that are without. Independently of all these outward things, I have innumerable troubles and mental oppressions. Which cometh upon me. This continual press of business; this insurrection of cases to be heard, solved, and determined, relative to the doctrine, discipline, state, persecution, and supply of all the churches. All his perils were little in comparison of what he felt relative to the peace, government, and establishment of all the churches among the Gentiles; for as he was the apostle of the Gentiles, the government of all the churches among these fell in some sort on him, whether they were of his own planting or of the planting of others. See Col. ii. 1. None but a conscientious minister, who has at heart the salvation of souls, can enter into the apostle's feelings in this place.

29. Who is weak? What church is there under persecution with which I do not immediately sympathize? or who from his weakness in the faith and scrupulousness of conscience is likely to be turned out of the way, to whom I do not

Nor was he ashamed of all this; it was what he accounted his honour, v. 30.

He mentions one particular part of his sufferings out of its place, as if he had forgotten it before, namely, the danger he was in at Damascus, soon after he was converted. This was his first great danger and difficulty, and the rest of his life was of a piece with this. The apostle confirms this narrative with a solemn oath, v. 31. It is a great comfort to a good man that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ knows the truth of all he says, and knows all he does and all he suffers for his sake.

CHAPTER 12

Verses 1–10

I. The narrative the apostle gives of the favours God had shown him, for doubtless he himself is the man in Christ of whom he speaks.

The modest manner in which the apostle mentions this matter, v. 1. He therefore did not mention this till above fourteen years after, v. 2.

offended—by some stumbling block put in his way by others: the "weak" is most liable to be "offended." I burn not—The "I" in the Greek is emphatic, which it is not in the former clause, "I am not weak." I not only enter into the feeling of the party offended, but I burn with indignation at the offender, I myself taking up his cause as my own. "Who meets with a stumbling block and I am not disturbed even more than himself" [NEANDER]. 30. glory of . . . infirmities—A striking contrast! Glorying or boasting of what others make matter of shame, viz., infirmities; for instance, his humbling mode of escape in a basket (vs. 33). A character utterly incompatible with that of an enthusiast (cf. ch. 12:5, 9, 10).

31. This solemn asseveration refers to what follows. The persecution at Damascus was one of the first and greatest, and having no human witness of it to adduce to the Corinthians, as being a fact that happened long before and was known to few, he appeals to God for its truth. Luke (Acts 9:25) afterwards recorded it (cf. Gal. 1:20), [BENGEL]. It may ALSO refer to the revelation in ch. 12:1, standing in beautiful contrast to his humiliating escape from Damascus. 32. governor—Greek, "Ethnarch": a Jewish officer to whom heathen rulers gave authority over Jews in large cities where they were numerous. He was in this case under Aretas, king of Arabia. Damascus was in a Roman province. But at this time, A.D. 38 or 39, three years after Paul's conversion, A.D. 36, Aretas, against whom the Emperor Tiberius as the ally of Herod Agrippa had sent an army under Vitellius, had got possession of Damascus on the death of the emperor, and the consequent interruption of Vitellius' operations. His possession of it was put an end to immediately after by the Romans [NEANDER]. Rather, it was granted by Caligula (A.D. 38) to Aretas, whose predecessors had possessed it. This is proved by our having no Damascus coins of Caligula or Claudius, though we do have of their immediate imperial predecessors and successors [ALFORD].

VSS. 1-21. REVELATIONS IN WHICH HE MIGHT GLORY: BUT HE RATHER GLORIES IN INFIRMITIES, AS CALLING FORTH CHRIST'S POWER: SIGNS OF HIS APOSTLESHIP: HIS DISINTERESTEDNESS: NOT THAT HE IS EXCUSING HIMSELF TO THEM; BUT HE DOES ALL FOR THEIR GOOD, LEST HE SHOULD FIND THEM NOT SUCH AS HE DESIRED, AND SO SHOULD HAVE TO BE SEVERE AT HIS COMING. 1. He proceeds to illustrate the "glorying in infirmities" (ch. 11:30). He gave one instance which might expose him to ridicule (ch. 11:33); he now gives another, but this one connected with a glorious revelation of which it was the sequel: but he dwells not on the glory done to himself, but on the infirmity which followed it, as displaying Christ's power. The oldest MSS. read, "I MUST NEEDS boast (or glory) though it be not expedient; for I will come." The "for" gives a proof that it is "not expedient to boast": I will take the case of revelations, in which if anywhere boasting might be thought harmless. "Visions" refers to things seen: "revelations," to things heard (cf. I Sam. 9:15) or revealed in any way. In "visions" their signification was not always vouchsafed; in "revelations" there was always an unveiling of truths before hidden (Dan. 2:19, 31). All parts of Scripture alike are matter of inspiration; but not all of revelation. There are degrees of revelation; but not of inspiration. of—i.e., from the Lord; Christ, vs. 2. 2. Translate, "I know," not "I knew." a man—meaning himself. But he purposely thus distinguishes between the rapt and glorified person of vss. 2, 4, and himself the infirmity-laden victim of the "thorn in the flesh" (vs. 7). Such glory belonged not to him, but the weakness did. Nay, he did not even know whether he was in or out of the body when the glory was put upon him, so far was the glory from being his [ALFORD]. His spiritual self was his highest and truest self: the flesh with its infirmity merely his temporary self (Rom. 7:25). Here, however, the latter is the prominent thought. in Christ—a Christian (Rom. 16:7). above—rather, simply "fourteen condescend, and whose burden I do not bear? Who is offended, or likely to be turned out of the way, and I burn not with zeal to restore and confirm him?

30. I will glory . . . which concern mine infirmities. I will not boast of my natural or acquired power, neither in what God has done by me; but rather in what I have suffered for Him. Many persons have understood by infirmities what they call the indwelling sin of the apostle, and say that "he gloried in this, because the grace of Christ was the more magnified in his being preserved from ruin, notwithstanding this indwelling adversary." And to support this most unholy interpretation they quote those other words of the apostle, chap. xii. 9: "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities," my indwelling corruptions, "that the power of Christ," in chaining the fierce lion, "may rest upon me." But it would be difficult to produce a single passage in the whole New Testament where the word which we translate infirmity has the sense of sin or moral corruption.

31. The God and Father of our Lord. Here is a very solemn asseveration, an appeal to the ever blessed God for the truth of what he asserts. It is something similar to his asseveration or oath in v. 10 of this chapter; see also Rom. ix. 5 and Gal. i. 20.

32. In Damascus the governor under Aretas. For a description of Damascus see the note on Acts ix. 2. And for the transaction to which the apostle refers see Acts ix. 23. As to King Aretas, there were three of this name. The first is mentioned in 2 Maccab. v. 8; the second, by Josephus. The third, who is the person supposed to be referred to here, was the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, of whom see the notes, Acts ix. 23 ff. The governor. Who this ethnarch was we cannot tell. The word ethnarch signifies the governor of a province, under a king or emperor. Desirous to apprehend me. The enemies of the apostle might have represented him to the governor as a dangerous spy, employed by the Romans.

33. Through a window in a basket. Probably the house was situated on the wall of the city. See the notes on this history, Acts ix. 23-25.

1. It is not expedient for me. There are several various readings on this verse which are too minute to be noticed here; they seem in effect to represent the verse thus: "If it be expedient to glory (which does not become me), I will proceed to visions," etc. The plain meaning of the apostle, in this and the preceding chapter, in reference to glorying is that, though to boast in any attainments or in what God did by him was in all possible cases to be avoided, as being contrary to the humility and simplicity of the gospel, yet the circumstances in which he was found in reference to the Corinthian church and his detractors there rendered it absolutely necessary; not for his personal vindication, but for the honor of the gospel, the credit of which was certainly at stake. I will come to visions. Symbolical representations of spiritual and celestial things, in which matters of the deepest importance are exhibited to the eye of the mind by a variety of emblems, the nature and properties of which serve to illustrate those spiritual things. Revelations. A manifestation of things not before known, and such as God alone can make known, because they are a part of His own inscrutable counsels.

2. I knew a man in Christ. I knew a Christian, or a Christian man. Fourteen years ago. On what occasion or in what place this transaction took place we cannot tell; there are many conjectures among learned men concerning it, but of what utility can they be when everything is so palpably uncertain?

MATTHEW HENRY

He was caught up into the third heaven, v. 2. When this was we cannot say, much less can we pretend to say how this was. In some sense he was caught up into the third heaven.

This third heaven is called paradise (v. 4). The apostle does not mention what he saw in the third heaven or paradise, but tells us that he heard unspeakable words: nor was it lawful to utter those words.

Again, his humility appears by the check he seems to put upon himself (v. 6). It is an excellent thing to have a lowly spirit in the midst of high advancements; and those who abase themselves shall be exalted.

II. The methods God took to prevent his being lifted up above measure. When God's people communicate their experiences, let them always remember to take notice of what God has done to keep them humble.

1. The apostle was pained with a thorn in the flesh, and buffeted with a messenger of Satan, v. 7. We are much in the dark what this was. Some think it was an acute bodily pain or sickness. This is certain, that what the apostle calls a thorn in his flesh was for a time very grievous to him: but the thorns Christ wore for us, sanctify and make easy all the thorns in the flesh we may at any time be afflicted with.

years ago." This Epistle was written A.D. 55-57. Fourteen years before will bring the vision to A.D. 41-43, the time of his second visit to Jerusalem (Acts 22:17). He had long been intimate with the Corinthians, yet had never mentioned this revelation before: it was not a matter lightly to be spoken of. I cannot tell—rather as Greek, "I know not." If in the body, he must have been caught up bodily; if out of the body, as seems to be Paul's opinion, his spirit must have been caught up out of the body. At all events he recognizes the possibility of conscious receptivity in disembodied spirits. caught up—(Acts 8:39). to the third heaven—"even to...." These raptures (note the plural, "visions," "revelations") had two degrees: first he was caught up "to the third heaven," and from thence to "Paradise" (vs. 4) [CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS, Stromata 5. 427], which seems to denote an inner recess of the third heaven [BENGEL] (Luke 23:43; Rev. 2:7). Paul was permitted not only to "hear" the things of Paradise, but to see also in some degree the things of the third heaven (cf. "visions," vs. 1). The occurrence TWICE of "whether in the body . . . , I know not, God knoweth," and of "lest I should be exalted above measure," marks two stages in the revelation. "Ignorance of the mode does not set aside the certain knowledge of the fact. The apostles were ignorant of many things" [BENGEL]. The first heaven is that of the clouds, the air; the second, that of the stars, the sky; the third is spiritual (Eph. 4:10). 3. Translate, "I know." out of—Most of the oldest MSS. read "apart from." 4. unspeakable—not in themselves, otherwise Paul could not have heard them; but as the explanation states, "which it is not lawful . . . to utter" [ALFORD]. They were designed for Paul's own consolation, and not for communication to others. Some heavenly words are communicable (Exod. 34: 6; Isa. 6:3). These were not so. Paul had not the power adequately to utter; nor if he had, would he have been permitted; nor would earthly men comprehend them (John 3:12; I Cor. 2:9). A man may hear and know more than he can speak.

5. of myself—concerning myself. Self is put in the background, except in respect to his infirmities. His glorying in his other self, to which the revelations were vouchsafed, was not in order to give glory to his fleshly self, but to bring out in contrast the "infirmities" of the latter, that Christ might have all the glory. 6. For—Not but that I might glory as to "myself" (vs. 5); "FOR if I should desire to glory, I shall not be a fool"; for I have things to glory, or boast of which are good matter for glorying of (not mere external fleshly advantages which when he gloried in (ch. 11) he termed such glorying "folly," ch. 11:1, 16, 17). think of me—Greek, "form his estimate respecting me." heareth of me—Greek, "heareth aught from me." Whatever haply he heareth from me in person. If on account of healing a cripple (Acts 14:12, 13), and shaking off a viper (Acts 28), the people thought him a god, what would they have not done, if he had disclosed those revelations? [ESTIUS.] I wish each of you to estimate me by "what he sees" my present acts and "hears" my teaching to be; not by my boasting of past revelations. They who allow themselves to be thought of more highly than is lawful, defraud themselves of the honor which is at God's disposal [BENGEL] (John 5:44; 12: 43). 7. exalted above measure—Greek, "overmuch uplifted." How dangerous must self-exaltation be, when even the apostle required so much restraint! [BENGEL]. abundance—Greek, "the excess"; exceeding greatness. given . . . me—viz., by God (Job 5:6; Phil. 1:29). thorn in the flesh—(Num. 33. 55; Ezek. 28:24). ALFORD thinks it to be the same bodily affliction as in Galatians 4:13, 14. It certainly was something personal, affecting him individually, and not as an apostle: causing at once acute pain (as "thorn" implies) and shame ("buffet": as slaves are buffeted, I Pet. 2:20).

ADAM CLARKE

Whether in the body, I cannot tell. That the apostle was in an ecstasy or trance, something like that of Peter, Acts x. 9, etc., there is reason to believe; but we know that being carried literally into heaven was possible to the Almighty. Caught up to the third heaven. He appeared to have been carried up to this place; but whether bodily he could not tell, or whether the spirit were not separated for the time and taken up to the third heaven he could not tell. The third heaven—The Jews talk of seven heavens, and Mohammed has received the same from them; but these are not only fabulous but absurd. In the sacred writings three heavens only are mentioned. The first is the atmosphere, what appears to be intended by rekia, the firmament or expansion, Gen. i. 6. The second, the starry heaven; where are the sun, moon, planets, and stars; but these two are often expressed under the one term shamayim, the two heavens, or expansions; and in Gen. i. 17 they appear to be both expressed by rekia hashshamayim, the "firmament of heaven." And, thirdly, the place of the blessed, or the throne of the divine glory, probably expressed by the words hashshamayim, the "heavens of heavens." But on these subjects the Scripture affords us but little light, and on this distinction the reader is not desired to rely.

4. Caught up into paradise. The Jewish writers have no less than four paradises, as they have seven heavens: but it is needless to wade through their fables. Among Christian writers it generally means the place of the blessed, or the state of separate spirits. Which it is not lawful for a man to utter. The Jews thought that the divine name, the Tetragrammaton Yehovah, should not be uttered, and that it is absolutely unlawful to pronounce it; indeed they say that the true pronunciation is utterly lost, and cannot be recovered without an express revelation. Not one of them, to the present day, ever attempts to utter it; and when they meet with it in their reading always supply its place with Adonai, Lord. It is probable that the apostle refers to some communication concerning the divine nature and the divine economy, of which he was only to make a general use in his preaching and writing. No doubt what he learned at this time formed the basis of all his doctrines.

5. Of such an one will I glory. Through modesty he does not mention himself, though the account can be understood of no other person; for did he mean any other, the whole account would be completely irrelevant.

6. I shall not be a fool. Who that had received such honor from God would have been fourteen years silent on the subject? I will say the truth. I speak nothing but truth; and the apostle seems to have intended to proceed with something else of the same kind, but, finding some reason probably occurring suddenly, says, I forbear—I will say no more on this subject. Lest any man should think of me above. The apostle spoke of these revelations for two purposes: first, lest his enemies might suppose they had cause to think meanly of him; and, secondly, having said thus much, he forbears to speak any further of them, lest his friends should think too highly of him. It is a rare gift to discern when to speak and when to be silent; and to know when enough is said on a subject, neither too little nor too much.

7. And lest I should be exalted. There were three evils to be guarded against: (1) the contempt of his gifts and call by his enemies, (2) the overweening fondness of his friends, and (3) self-exultation. A thorn in the flesh. The word signifies a "stake." Whatever it was, it was in the flesh, i.e., of an outward kind. It was neither sin nor sinfulness, for this could not be given him to prevent his being exalted above measure; for sin never had and never can have this tendency. What this thorn in the flesh might be has given birth to a multitude of conjectures: Tertullian thought it the earache; Chrysostom, the headache; Cyprian, many and grievous bodily torments. I believe the apostle to refer simply to the distresses he had endured through the opposition he met with at Corinth; which were as painful and grievous to him as a thorn in his flesh, or his being bound to a stake; for if he could have devoted himself to destruction, Rom. ix. 3, for his rebellious and

2. The design of this was to keep the apostle humble, v. 7. If God loves us, he will hide pride from us, and keep us from being exalted above measure. This thorn in the flesh is said to be a messenger of Satan, which he did not send with a good design, but with ill intentions. But God overruled it for good.

3. The apostle prayed earnestly to God for the removal of this sore grievance. If an answer be not given to the first prayer, nor to the second, we must hold on, and hold out, till we receive an answer. As troubles are sent to teach us to pray, so they are continued to teach us to continue instant in prayer.

4. My grace is sufficient for thee. Though God accepts the prayer of faith, yet he does not always answer it in the letter; as he sometimes grants in wrath, so he sometimes denies in love. It is a great comfort to us, whatever thorns in the flesh we are pained with, that God's grace is sufficient for us. Grace signifies two things: (1) The goodwill of God towards us, and this is sufficient to strengthen and comfort us. (2) The good work of God in us. Christ Jesus will proportion the remedy to our malady.

III. The use which the apostle makes of this dispensation: He gloried in his infirmities (v. 9), and took pleasure in them for Christ's sake, v. 10. They were fair opportunities for Christ to manifest the power and sufficiency of his grace resting upon him. When we are weak in ourselves, then we are strong in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I. He blames them that they had not stood up in his defence. They compelled him to commend himself, v. 11. They in particular had good reason to speak well of him. It is a debt we owe to good men to stand up in the defence of their reputation. How much soever we are esteemed by others, we ought always to think humbly of ourselves. See an example of this in this great apostle, who thought himself to be nothing, though in truth he was not behind the greatest apostles.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

messenger of Satan—who is permitted by God to afflict His saints, as Job (Job 2:7; Luke 13:16). to buffet me—In Greek, present: to buffet me even now continuously. After experiencing the state of the blissful angels, he is now exposed to the influence of an evil angel. The chastisement from hell follows soon upon the revelation from heaven. As his sight and hearing had been ravished with heavenly "revelations," so his touch is pained with the "thorn in the flesh."

8. For—"concerning this thing." thrice—To his first and second prayer no answer came. To his third the answer came, which satisfied his faith and led him to bow his will to God's will. So Paul's master, Jesus, thrice prayed on the Mount of Olives, in resignation to the Father's will. The thorn seems (from vs. 9, and Greek, vs. 7, "that he may buffet me") to have continued with Paul when he wrote, lest still he should be "overmuch lifted up." the Lord—Christ. Escape from the cross is not to be sought even indirectly from Satan (Luke 4:7). "Satan is not to be asked to spare us" [BENGEL].

9. said—lit., "He hath said," implying that His answer is enough [ALFORD]. is sufficient—The trial must endure, but the grace shall also endure and never fail thee [ALFORD], (Deut. 33:25). The Lord puts the words into Paul's mouth, that following them up he might say, "O Lord, Thy grace is sufficient for me" [BENGEL]. my strength—Greek, "power." is made perfect—has its most perfect manifestation. in weakness—Do not ask for sensible strength, FOR My power is perfected in man's "strengthlessness" (so the Greek). The "for" implies, thy "strengthlessness" (the same Greek as is translated "weakness"; and in vs. 10, "infirmities") is the very element in which My "power" (which moves coincident with "My grace") exhibits itself more perfectly. So that Paul instead of desiring the infirmity to "depart," "rather" henceforth "glories in infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest (Greek, 'tabernacle upon', cover my infirmity all over as with a tabernacle; cf. Greek, John 1:12) upon" him. This effect of Christ's assurance on him appears, ch. 4:7; I Corinthians 2:3, 4; cf. I Peter 4:14. The "My" is omitted in some of the oldest MSS.; the sense is the same, "power" (referring to God's power) standing absolutely, in contrast to "weakness" (put absolutely, for man's weakness). Paul often repeats the word "weakness" or "infirmity" (chs. 11, 12, and 13) as being Christ's own word. The Lord has more need of our weakness than of our strength: our strength is often His rival; our weakness, His servant, drawing on His resources, and showing forth His glory. Man's extremity is God's opportunity; man's security is Satan's opportunity. God's way is not to take His children out of trial, but to give them strength to bear up against it (Ps. 88:7; John 17:15). 10. take pleasure in—too strongly. Rather as the Greek, "I am well contented in." infirmities—the genus. Two pairs of species follow, partly coming from "Satan's messenger," partly from men. reproaches—"insults." when—in all the cases just specified. then—then especially. strong—"powerful" in "the power of Christ" (vs. 9; ch. 13:4; Heb. 11:34).

11. in glorying—omitted in the oldest MSS. "I am become a fool." He sounds a retreat [BENGEL]. ye—emphatic. "It is YE who have compelled me; for I ought to have been commended by you," instead of having to commend myself. am I behind—rather as Greek, "was I behind" when I was with you? the very chiefest—rather, as in ch. 11:5, "those overmuch apostles." though I be nothing—in myself (I Cor. 15:9, 10).

unbelieving countrymen, what must he have suffered on account of an eminent church being perverted and torn to pieces by a false teacher? God permitted this to keep the apostle humble, and at last completely delivered the church out of the hands and influence of this deceiver; none, not even the incestuous person, having been turned finally out of the way by the false doctrines there preached. The messenger of Satan. Another mode of expressing what he calls the thorn in the flesh; and he seems most plainly to refer to the false apostle at Corinth. The apostle himself was, as he styles himself to this church, chap. i. 1, the "apostle of Jesus Christ." The person in question is styled here "the apostle or angel of Satan." It is almost impossible to mistake the apostle's meaning and reference. Jesus Christ sent Paul to proclaim His truth, and found a church at Corinth. Satan, the adversary of God's truth, sent a man to preach lies at the same place, and turn the church of God into his own synagogue; and by his teaching lies and calumnies the apostle was severely buffeted.

8. I besought the Lord. That is, Christ, as the next verse absolutely proves, and the Socinians themselves confess. And if Christ be an object of prayer in such a case as this, or indeed in any case, it is a sure proof of His divinity; for only an omniscient Being can be made an object of prayer. Thrice. It is worthy of remark that our Lord in His agony acted in the same way. At three different times He applied to God that the cup might depart from Him; and in each application He spoke the same words, Matt. xxvi. 39-44. There is, therefore, a manifest allusion to our Lord's conduct in these words of the apostle.

9. My grace is sufficient for thee. Thou shalt not be permitted to sink under these afflictions. Your enemies shall not be able to prevail against you. My strength is made perfect in weakness. The more, and the more violently, you are afflicted and tried, being upheld by My power and prospered in all your labors, the more eminently will My power be seen and acknowledged. For the weaker the instrument I use, the more the power of My grace shall be manifested. Will I rather glory in my infirmities. Therefore his infirmities do not mean his corruptions, or sins, or sinfulness of any kind; for it would be blasphemous for any man to say, I will rather glory that God leaves my corruptions in me than that He should take them away. That the power of Christ may rest upon me. That it may "overshadow me as a tent" or tabernacle, affording me shelter, protection, safety, and rest. This expression is like that, John i. 14: "And the Word was made flesh," and made His tabernacle among us, "full of grace and truth." The same eternal Word promised to make His tabernacle with the apostle, and gives him a proof that He was still the same, "full of grace and truth," by assuring him that His grace should be sufficient for him. Paul, knowing that the promise of grace could not fail, because of the divine truth, says: Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my afflictions, that such a power of Christ may overshadow and defend me. The words are also similar to those of the Prophet Isaiah, chap. iv. 5: "Upon all the glory shall be a defence."

10. Therefore I take pleasure. I not only endure them patiently, but am pleased when they occur; for I do it for Christ's sake, on His account; for on His account I suffer. For when I am weak, most oppressed with trials and afflictions, then am I strong, God supporting my mind with His most powerful influences, causing me to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

11. I am become a fool in glorying. It is not the part of a wise or gracious man to boast; but ye have compelled me—I have been obliged to do it, in order to vindicate the cause of God. I ought to have been commended of you. You should have vindicated both myself and my ministry against the detractors that are among you. Though I be nothing. Though I have been thus set at nought by your false apostle, and though in consequence of what he has said some of you have been ready to consider me as nothing—what we call good for nothing.

12. The signs of an apostle were wrought

MATTHEW HENRY

ALBERT BARNES:

12. "Truly the signs of an apostle." Such "signs" or evidences that they were divinely commissioned (Mark 16:17; Acts 2:22; Rom. 15:19). "Were wrought among you." That is, by me (1 Cor. 9:2). "In all patience." I performed those works notwithstanding the opposition which I met with. I patiently persevered in furnishing the evidence of my divine commission. There was a succession of miracles demonstrating that I was from God, notwithstanding the unreasonable opposition which I met with, until I convinced you that I was called to the office of an apostle. "In signs and wonders." In working miracles (Acts 2:22). What these miracles at Corinth were we are not distinctly informed. They probably, however, were similar to those wrought in other places, in healing the sick—the most benevolent as it was one of the most decisive proofs of the divine power.
—Popular Commentary

II. His behaviour and kind intentions towards them. He says (v. 13) he had not been burdensome to them, for the time past, and tells them (v. 14) he would not be burdensome to them when he should come to them. He spared their purses to save their souls. Those who aim at clothing themselves with the fleece of the flock, and take no care of the sheep, are hirelings, and not good shepherds.

He would gladly spend and be spent for them (v. 15); so spend as to be spent, and be like a candle, which consumes itself to give light to others. He did not abate in his love to them, v. 15. He was careful not only that he himself should not be burdensome, but that none he employed should.

He was a man who did all things for edifying, v. 19. He would not shrink from his duty. Therefore he was resolved to be faithful in reproving sin, v. 20. Faithful ministers must not fear offending the guilty by sharp reproofs as they are needful, in public and in private.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

12. Truly . . . —There is understood some such clause as this, "And yet I have not been commended by you." in all patience, in signs . . .—The oldest MSS. omit "in." "Patience" is not one of the "signs," but the element IN which they were wrought: endurance of opposition which did not cause me to leave off working [ALFORD]. Translate, "IN . . . patience, BY signs . . . ." His mode of expression is modest, putting himself, the worker, in the background, "were wrought," not "I wrought." As the signs have not been transmitted to us, neither has the apostleship. The apostles have no literal successors (cf. Acts 1:21, 22). mighty deeds—palpable works of divine omnipotence. The silence of the apostles in fourteen Epistles, as to miracles, arises from the design of those Epistles being hortatory, not controversial. The passing allusions to miracles in seven Epistles prove that the writers were not enthusiasts to whom miracles seem the most important thing. Doctrines were with them the important matter, save when convincing adversaries. In the seven Epistles the mention of miracles is not obtrusive, but marked by a calm air of assurance, as of facts acknowledged on all hands, and therefore unnecessary to dwell on. This is a much stronger proof of their reality than if they were formally and obtrusively asserted. Signs and wonders is the regular formula of the Old Testament, which New Testament readers would necessarily understand of supernatural works. Again, in the Gospels the miracles are so inseparably and congruously tied up with the history, that you cannot deny the former without denying the latter also. And then you have a greater difficulty than ever, viz., to account for the rise of Christianity; so that the infidel has something infinitely more difficult to believe than that which he rejects, and which the Christian more rationally accepts. 13. wherein you were inferior —i.e., were treated with less consideration by me than were other churches. I myself—I made a gain of you neither myself, nor by those others whom I sent, Titus and others (vss. 17, 18). wrong—His declining support from the Corinthians might be regarded as the denial to them of a privilege, and a mark of their spiritual inferiority, and of his looking on them with less confidence and love (cf. ch. 11:9, 11). 14. the third time—See Introduction to First Corinthians. His second visit was probably a short one (I Cor. 16:7), and attended with humiliation through the scandalous conduct of some of his converts (cf. vs. 21; ch. 2:1). It was probably paid during his three years' sojourn at Ephesus, from which he could pass so readily by sea to Corinth (cf. ch. 1:15, 16; 13:1, 2). The context here implies nothing of a third preparation to come; but, "I am coming, and the third time, and will not burden you this time any more than I did at my two previous visits" [ALFORD]. not yours, but you—(Phil. 4:17). children . . . parents—Paul was their spiritual father (I Cor. 4:14, 15). He does not, therefore, seek earthly treasure from them, but lays up the best treasure (viz., spiritual) "for their souls" (vs. 15). 15. I will . . . spend—all I have. be spent —all that I am. This is more than even natural parents do. They "lay up treasures for their children." But I spend not merely my treasures, but myself. for you—Greek, "for your souls"; not for your mere bodies. the less I be loved—Love rather descends than ascends [BENGEL]. Love him as a true friend who seeks your good more than your good will. 16. I did not burden you—The "I" in the Greek is emphatic. A possible insinuation of the Corinthians is hereby anticipated and refuted: "But, you may say, granted that I did not burden you myself; nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you (in my net) with guile"; viz., made a gain of you by means of others (I Thess. 2:3). 17. Paul's reply: You know well I did not. My associates were as distinterested as myself. An important rule to all who would influence others for good. I desired Titus—viz., to go unto you. Not the mission mentioned ch. 8:6, 17, 22; but a mission previous to this Epistle, probably that from which he had just returned announcing to Paul their penitence (ch. 7:6-16). a brother—rather "OUR (lit., "the") brother"; one well known to the Corinthians, and perhaps a Corinthian; probably one of the two mentioned in ch. 8:18, 22. same spirit—inwardly. steps—outwardly. 19. Again—The oldest MSS. read, "This long time ye think that we are excusing ourselves unto you? (Nay.) It is before God (as opposed to 'unto you') that we speak in Christ" (ch. 2:17). English Version Greek text was a correction from ch. 3:1; 5:12. 20. For—Assigning cause why they needed to be thus spoken to "for their edification"; viz., his fear that at his coming he among you. Though I have been reputed as nothing, I have given the fullest proof of my divine mission by various signs, wonders, and miracles, and by that patience which I have manifested towards you; though I had power from God to inflict punishment on the transgressors, I have in every case forborne to do it.

13. For what is it wherein ye were inferior? This is a fine, forcible, yet delicate stroke. It was your duty and your interest to have supported your apostle; other churches have done so. I did not require this from you; in this respect all other churches are superior to you. I am the cause of your inferiority, by not giving you an opportunity of ministering to my necessities; forgive me the wrong I have done you. It is the privilege of the churches of Christ to support the ministry of His gospel among them. Those who do not contribute their part to the support of the gospel ministry either care nothing for it or derive no good from it.

14. The third time I am ready. That is, this is the third time that I am ready—have formed the resolution—to visit you. He had formed this resolution twice before, but was disappointed. See 1 Cor. xvi. 5 and 2 Cor. i. 15-16. He now formed it a third time, having more probability of seeing them now than he had before. See chap. xiii. 2. I seek not yours, but you. I seek your salvation; I desire not your property. Others have sought your property, but not your salvation. For the children ought not to lay up for the parents. You may have many teachers, but you have but one Father; "for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel"; see 1 Cor. iv. 15.

15. And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. I will continue to act as a loving father, who spends all he has upon his children, and expends his own strength and life in providing for them the things necessary for their preservation and comfort. Though the more abundantly I love you. I will then act towards you with the most affectionate tenderness, though it happen to me, as it often does to loving fathers, that their disobedient children love them less in proportion as their love to them is increased. Does it not frequently happen that the most disobedient child in the family is that one on which the parents' tenderness is more especially placed? See the parable of the prodigal son. It is in the order of God that it should be so, else the case of every prodigal would be utterly deplorable. The shepherd feels more for the lost sheep than for the ninety-nine that have not gone astray.

16. But be it so, I did not burden you. That is: You grant that I did not burden you, that I took nothing from you, but preached to you the gospel freely. But you say that, being crafty, I caught you with guile; i.e., getting from you, by means of others, what I pretended to be unwilling to receive immediately from yourselves.

17. Did I make a gain of you? Did any person I ever sent to preach the gospel to you or help you in your Christian course ever get anything from you for me? Produce the proof if you can.

18. I desired Titus. I never sent any to you but Titus and another brother; chap. viii. 6, 18. And did Titus make a gain of you? Did he get anything from you, either for himself or for me? You know he did not. He was actuated by the same spirit and he walked in the same steps.

19. Think ye that we excuse ourselves? That we "make an apology" for our conduct; or that I have sent Titus and that brother to you because I was ashamed or afraid to come myself? We speak before God in Christ. I have not done so. I speak the truth before God; He is Judge whether I was actuated in this way by any sinister or unworthy motive. For your edifying. Whatever I have done in this or any other way I have done for your edifying, not for any emolument to myself or friends.

20. I fear, lest, when I come. I think the present time is used here for the past; the apostle seems most evidently to be giving them the reason why he had not come to them according to his former purposes, and why he sent Titus and his companion. He was afraid to come at that time lest he should find them

He was grieved at the apprehension that he should find scandalous sins among them not duly repented of. This would be the cause of great humiliation and lamentation. We have reason to bewail many that have sinned, and have not repented, v. 21. Those who love God, and love them, should mourn for them.

I. The apostle threatens to be severe against obstinate sinners when he should come.

He was not hasty in using severity, but gave a first and second admonition (v. 1), referring to his first and second epistles, by which he admonished them, as if he were present with them, though in person he was absent, v. 2. We should go, or send, to our brother, once and again, to tell him of his fault. Now he tells them to exercise severity. The threatening itself: That he would not spare such as were impenitent. Though it is God's gracious method to bear long with sinners, yet he will not bear always.

II. Why he would be thus severe, v. 3. It was the design of the false teachers to make the Corinthians call this matter into question, of which yet they had not weak, but strong and mighty proofs (v. 3).

should find them "not such as he would," and so he should be found by them "such as they would not" like, viz., severe in punishing misconduct.

debates —Greek, "strifes," "contentions." envyings—The oldest MSS. read "envying," singular. strifes—"factions," "intrigues," "factious schemes" [WAHL]. Ambitious self-seeking; from a Greek root, "to work for hire." backbitings, whisperings—open "slanderings," and "whispering backbitings" (Gal. 5:20). swellings—arrogant elation; puffing up of yourselves. Jude 16, "great swelling words" (II Pet. 2:18).

21. my God—his God, however trying the humiliation that was in store for him. will humble me—The indicative implies that the supposition will actually be so. The faithful pastor is "humbled" at, and "bewails" the falls of his people, as though they were his own. sinned already—before my last coming [BENGEL], i.e., before the second visit which he paid, and in which he had much at Corinth to rebuke. have not repented—shall not have repented [ALFORD]. uncleanness—for example, of married persons (I Thess. 4:7). fornication —among the unmarried.

VSS. 1-14. HE THREATENS A SEVERE PROOF OF HIS APOSTOLIC AUTHORITY, BUT PREFERS THEY WOULD SPARE HIM THE NECESSITY FOR IT. This is the third time I am coming to you—not merely preparing to come to you. This proves an intermediate visit between the two recorded in Acts 18:1; 20:2. In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established—Quoted from Deuteronomy 19:15, LXX. "I will judge not without examination, nor will I abstain from punishing upon due evidence" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. I will no longer be among you "in all patience" towards offenders (ch. 12:12). The apostle in this case, where ordinary testimony was to be had, does not look for an immediate revelation, nor does he order the culprits to be cast out of the church before his arrival. Others understand the "two or three witnesses" to mean his two or three visits as establishing either (1) the truth of the facts alleged against the offenders, or (2) the reality of his threats. I prefer the first explanation to either of the two latter. 2. Rather, "I have already said (at my second visit), and tell you (now) beforehand, AS (I did) WHEN I WAS PRESENT THE SECOND TIME, SO ALSO NOW in my absence (the oldest MSS. omit the 'I write,' which here wrongly follows in English Version Greek text) to them which heretofore have sinned (viz., before my second visit, ch. 12:21), and to all others" (who have sinned since my second visit, or are in danger of sinning). The English Version, "as if I were present the second time," viz., this next time, is quite inconsistent with vs. 1, "this is the third time I am coming to you," as Paul could not have called the same journey at once "the second" and "the third time" of his coming. The antithesis between "the second time" and "now" is palpable. if I come again . . .—i.e., whensoever I come again (Acts 20:2). These were probably the very words of his former threat which he now repeats again. 3. Since—The reason why he will not spare: Since ye challenge me to give a "proof" that Christ speaks in me. It would be better if ye would "prove your own selves" (vs. 5). This disproves the assertion of some that Scripture nowhere asserts the infallibility of its writers when writing it. which—"who" (Christ.) is not weak—in relation to you, by me and in this very Epistle, in exercising upon you strong discipline. mighty in you—has given many proofs of His power in miracles, and even in punishing offenders (ch. 5:11, 20, 21). Ye have no need to put me to the proof in this, as long ago Christ has exhibited great proofs of His power by me among you (ch. 12:12) [GROTIUS]. It is therefore not me, but Christ, whom ye wrong: it is His perverted from the right way, and be obliged to make use of his apostolical rod, and punish the offenders. But, feeling towards them the heart of a tender father, he was unwilling to use the rod; and sent the First Epistle to them, and the messengers above mentioned, being reluctant to go himself till he had satisfactory evidence that their divisions were ended and that they had repented for and put away the evils that they had committed. Debates, envyings. From these different expressions, which are too plain to need interpretation, we see what a distracted and divided state the church at Corinth must have been in. Brotherly love and charity seem to have been driven out of this once heavenly assembly. These debates, etc., are precisely the opposites to that love which the apostle recommends and explains by its different properties in the thirteenth chapter of his First Epistle.

21. Lest, when I come again. And even after all that has been done for you, I fear that when I do come—when I pay you my second visit, my God will humble me—will permit me to be affected with deep sorrow through what I may see among you, as I have been by the buffetings of the apostle of Satan who has perverted you. Humiliation is repeatedly used for "affliction." Have sinned already. "Who have sinned before"; who were some of the first offenders, and have not yet repented. Of the uncleanness. There must have been a total relaxation of discipline, else such abominations could not have been tolerated in the Christian Church. And although what is here spoken could be the case of only a few, yet the many were ill disciplined, else these must have been cast out.

1. This is the third time I am coming to you. These words are nearly the same with those in chap. xii. 14, and probably refer to the purpose which he had twice before formed of seeing them. But the latter clause seems to attach a different meaning to the passage; at least so it has been understood by some learned men.

3. Since ye seek a proof of Christ. The conversion of the Corinthians was to themselves a solid proof that Christ spoke by the apostle; and therefore he could, with great propriety, say that this power of Christ, far from being weak, was mighty among them.

MATTHEW HENRY

Even as Christ himself was crucified through weakness but liveth by the power of God (v. 4), so the apostles did yet manifest the power of God, and particularly the power of his grace, in converting the world to Christianity.

He puts them upon proving their Christianity (v. 5). If Jesus Christ was in them, this was a proof that Christ spoke in him.

If therefore they could prove themselves not to be reprobates, he trusted they would know that he was not a reprobate (v. 6). We should examine whether we be in the faith; prove our own selves whether Christ be in us, or not.

Verses 7–10

I. The apostle's prayer to God on the behalf of the Corinthians, v. 7. We are more concerned to pray that we may not do evil than that we may not suffer evil.

II. The reasons why the apostle put up this prayer to God, v. 7. The best way to adorn our holy religion is to do that which is honest, and of good report.

Further that they might be free from all blame when he should come to them. This is intimated in v. 8. If therefore they did not do evil the apostle had no power to punish them (v. 9), "Though we are weak through persecutions and contempt, we bear it joyfully, while we see that you are strong and persevering in well-doing."

He desired their perfection (v. 9). He not only desired that they might be kept from sin, but also that they might grow in grace. This was the great end of his writing this epistle.

patience that ye try in despising my admonitions, and derogating from my authority [CALVIN]. 4. though—omitted in some of the oldest MSS.; then translate, "For He was even crucified . . ." through weakness—Greek, "from weakness"; i.e., His assumption of our weakness was the source, or necessary condition, from which the possibility of His crucifixion flowed (Heb. 2:14; Phil. 2:7, 8). by—Greek, "from"; "owing to." the power of God—the Father (Rom. 1:4; 6:4; Eph. 1:20). weak in him—i.e., in virtue of our union with Him, and after His pattern, weakness predominates in us for a time (exhibited in our "infirmities" and weak "bodily presence," ch. 10:10; 12:5, 9, 10; and also in our not putting into immediate exercise our power of punishing offenders, just as Christ for a time kept in abeyance His power). we shall live with him—not only hereafter with Him, free from our present infirmities, in the resurrection life (Phil. 3:21), but presently in the exercise of our apostolic authority against offenders, which flows to us in respect to you from the power of God, however "weak" we now seem to you. "With Him," i.e., even as He now exercises His power in His glorified resurrection life, after His weakness for a time. 5. Examine—Greek, "Try (make trial of) yourselves." prove your own selves—This should be your first aim, rather than "seeking a proof of Christ speaking in me" (vs. 3). your own selves—I need not speak much in proof of Christ being in me, your minister (vs. 3), for if ye try your own selves ye will see that Christ is also in you [CHRYSOSTOM], (Rom. 8:10). Finding Christ dwelling in yourselves by faith, ye may well believe that He speaks in me, by whose ministry ye have received this faith [ESTIUS]. To doubt it would be the sin of Israel, who, after so many miracles and experimental proofs of God's presence, still cried (Exod. 17:7), "Is the Lord among us or not?" (Cf. Mark 8:11). except ye be reprobates—The Greek softens the expression, "somewhat reprobates," i.e., not abiding the "proof" (alluding to the same word in the context); failing when tested. Image from metals (Jer. 6:30; Dan. 5:27; Rom. 1:28). 6. we . . . not reprobates—not unable to abide the "proof" to which ye put us (vs. 6). "I trust that" your own Christianity will be recognized by you (observe, "ye shall know," answers to "know your own selves," vs. 5) as sufficient "proof" that ye are not reprobates, but that "Christ speaks in me," without needing a proof from me more trying to yourselves. If ye doubt my apostleship, ye must doubt your own Christianity, for ye are the fruits of my apostleship. 7. I pray—The oldest MSS. read, "we pray." not that we should appear approved—not to gain credit for ourselves, your ministers, by your Christian conduct; but for your good [ALFORD]. The antithesis to "reprobates" leads me to prefer explaining with BENGEL, "We do not pray that we may appear approved," by restraining you when ye do evil; "but that ye should do what is right" (English Version, "honest"). though we be as reprobates—though we be thereby deprived of the occasion for exercising our apostolic power (viz., in punishing), and so may appear "as reprobates" (incapable of affording proof of Christ speaking in us).

8. Our apostolic power is given us that we may use it not against, but for the furtherance of, the truth. Where you are free from fault, there is no scope for its exercise: and this I desire. Far be it from me to use it against the innocent, merely in order to increase my own power (vs. 10).

9. are glad—Greek, "rejoice." when we are weak—having no occasion for displaying our power; and so seeming "weak," as being compassed with "infirmities" (ch. 10:10; 11:29, 30). ye . . . strong—"mighty" in faith and the fruits of the Spirit. and—not in the oldest MSS. we wish—Greek, "pray for." your perfection—lit., "perfect restoration"; lit., that of a dislocated limb. Cf. vs. 11, "Be perfect," the same Greek word; also in I Corinthians 1:10, "perfectly joined together"; Eph. 4:12, "the perfecting of the saints."

ADAM CLARKE

4. For though he was crucified through weakness. It is true Christ was crucified, and His crucifixion appeared to be the effect of His weakness; yet even this was not so. He gave up His life; none could take it away from Him. And in His last struggle, had He even been deficient in power, He could have had more than twelve legions of angels to support Him against the high priest's mob, Matt. xxvi. 53; but how then could the Scripture be fulfilled? And had He not died, how could the human race have been saved? We also are weak in him. Because we are on Christ's side we appear to you as weak as He did to the Jews; but it is not so, for we . . . live with him, under the same influence and partaking of the same life, manifesting by our preaching and miracles the power of God toward you. While I do not use the rod, I appear to you weak; I will use it, and then you shall find me to be strong.

5. Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith. "Try yourselves"; pierce your hearts; try yourselves by what I have written, and see whether you retain the true faith of the gospel. Prove your own selves. "Put yourselves to the test," as you would try gold or silver suspected of adulteration. No more take that for gospel which is not so than you would take adulterated money for sterling coin. This is a metaphor taken from testing or assaying adulterated metals. Know ye not your own selves? Are you not full of wisdom and understanding? And is it not as easy to find out a spurious faith as it is to detect a base coin? There is an assay and touchstone for both. Does Jesus Christ dwell in you? You have His Spirit, His power, His mind, if you are Christians; and the Spirit of Christ bears witness with your spirit that you are the children of God. And this is the case except ye be reprobates; "base counterfeit coin"; mongrel Christians.

6. Ye shall know that we are not reprobates. You have had, and you shall have, the fullest proof that I have preached the true faith among you, and that God has confirmed it by His testimony; and thus that I am proved and manifested to be what I ought to be, and shown to be approved of God.

7. I pray to God that ye do no evil. That you do not persist in that course which will oblige me to use the power of Christ, with which I am endued, to punish you. Not that we should appear approved. We do not wish to give this proof that we are approved of God, by inflicting this punishment on the transgressors. But that ye should do that which is honest. That you may do that which is "right" and "seemly," though we should be, in consequence of that, as reprobates—as persons "not approved" of God; because your reformation will prevent the exercise of this power which would otherwise have given an awful proof that we are approved of God.

8. For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. As we are the apostles of God, we cannot bring to you any false doctrine; and as we profess to be under the influence of God's Spirit, we cannot do anything that is opposed to that truth, or which might be prejudicial to it. On the contrary, what we say and do is for that truth, to propagate and establish it.

9. For we are glad, when we are weak. It will give me indescribable pleasure that I should still appear to be poor, despicable, and destitute of this extraordinary power with which God has clothed me, so that you be strong in all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. And this also we wish, even your perfection. We cannot be satisfied that persons with such eminent endowments and who have once received the truth as it is in Jesus should be deficient in any of the graces that constitute the mind of Christ, such as brotherly love, charity, harmony, unity, and order. I have given the above paraphrase to this verse because of the last term, perfection. It signifies the reducing of a dislocated limb to its proper place; and hence, as Beza says on this passage: "The apostle's meaning is, that whereas the members of the church were all, as it were, dislocated and out of joint, they should be joined together in love; and they should endeavor to make perfect what was amiss among them, either in faith or morals."

ALBERT BARNES:

Even "your perfection." The word here used occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, though the verb from which it is derived occurs often (Matt. 4:21; 21:16; Mark 1:19; Luke 6:40; Rom. 9:22; 1 Cor. 1:10; 2 Cor. 13:11; Gal. 6:1; 1 Thess. 3:10). On the meaning of the word, see Rom. 9:22. The idea of restoring, putting in order, fitting, repairing, is involved in the word always, and hence the idea of making perfect; i.e. of completely restoring anything to its proper place. Here it evidently means that Paul wished their entire reformation—so that there should be no occasion for exercising discipline. Doddridge renders it "perfect good order"; Macknight, "restoration." For this restoration of good order Paul has diligently labored in these epistles; and this was an object near to his heart.—Popular Commentary

Verses 11–14

I. A valediction.

1. He gives them several good exhortations. To be perfect, or to be knit together in love. To be of good comfort. To be of one mind, for the more easy we are with our brethren the more ease we shall have in our own souls. He exhorts them to live in peace, that difference in opinion should not cause an alienation of affections.

2. He encourages them with the promise of God's presence among them, v. 11. God is the God of love and peace. God will be with those who live in love and peace. He will love those who love peace.

3. He gives directions to them to salute each other, and sends kind salutations to them from those who were with him, v. 12, 13.

II. The apostolical benediction (v. 14). Thus the apostle concludes his epistle. This is a very solemn benediction, and we should give all diligence to inherit this blessing.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

10. Therefore—because I wish the "sharpness" to be in my letters rather than in deeds [CHRYSOSTOM]. edification . . . not to destruction—for building up . . . not for casting down. To "use sharpness" would seem to be casting down, rather than building up; therefore he prefers not to have to use it.

11. farewell—meaning in Greek also "rejoice"; thus in bidding farewell he returns to the point with which he set out, "we are helpers of your joy" (ch. 1:24; Phil. 4:4). Be perfect—Become perfect by filling up what is lacking in your Christian character (Eph. 4:13). be of good comfort—(ch. 1:6; 7:8-13; I Thess. 4:18).

The benediction which proves the doctrine of the Divine Trinity in unity. "The grace of Christ" comes first, for it is only by it we come to "the love of God" the Father (John 14:6). The variety in the order of Persons proves that "in this Trinity none is afore or after other" [ATHANAS, Creed].

communion—joint fellowship, or participation, in the same Holy Ghost, which joins in one catholic Church, His temple, both Jews and Gentiles. Whoever has "the fellowship of the Holy Ghost," has also "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "the love of God"; and vice versa. For the three are inseparable, as the three Persons of the Trinity itself [CHRYSOSTOM]. The doctrine of the Trinity was not revealed clearly and fully till Christ came, and the whole scheme of our redemption was manifested in Him, and we know the Holy Three in One more in their relations to us (as set forth summarily in this benediction), than in their mutual relations to one another (Deut. 29:29). Amen—omitted in the oldest MSS. Probably added subsequently for the exigencies of public joint worship.

ADAM CLARKE

It is a metaphor, also, taken from a building; the several stones and timbers being all put in their proper places and situations, so that the whole building might be "complete," and be a proper habitation for the owner. The same figure, though not in the same terms, the apostle uses, Eph. ii. 20-22. The perfection or "rejointing" which the apostle wishes is that which refers to the state of the church in its fellowship, unity, order, etc. And perfection in the soul is the same, in reference to it, as perfection in the church is to its order and unity. The perfection or rejointing of the soul implies its purification, and placing every faculty, passion, and appetite in its proper place; so that the original order, harmony, unity, and purity of the soul may be restored; and the whole builded up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 22.

10. Therefore I write these things. I only threaten you now, by this Epistle, to put you on your guard, and lead you to reformation before I visit you; that I may not then have to use sharpness, "a cutting off," employing thus my apostolical authority to inflict punishment—a power which God has given me rather to be employed in your edification than in your destruction.

11. Finally. All that "remains" for me now to write is to wish you all manner of happiness, and so to take my leave. Farewell. A good wish; go on prosperously! Be perfect. "Be compact"; get into joint again; let unity and harmony be restored. Be of good comfort. "Receive admonition," that you may receive comfort. If you take my advice, you shall have consolation; if you do not, you will have nothing but misery and woe. Be of one mind. "Think the same"; let there be not dissensions among you. Live in peace. "Cultivate peace"; or, as he says elsewhere, "Follow peace," and pursue it, Heb. xii. 14. Cultivate a peaceable disposition, and neither say nor do anything which has a tendency to irritate each other. And the God of love and peace shall be with you. While you are full of contentions, dissensions, and discord, peace can have no place among you; and as to love, the fulfilling of the law, that worketh no ill to its neighbor, it has necessarily taken its flight. Love cannot live, neither exist, where there are brawls, contentions, and divisions. And where neither peace nor love is to be found, there God cannot be.

12. Greet one another with an holy kiss. Use every means by which a good understanding may be brought about. Let the spirit of friendship live among you, and encourage its continuance by every friendly act. See the note on Rom. xvi. 16.

13. All the saints. The Christians of Macedonia or Philippi, from which he wrote this Epistle. In the primitive Church a saint and a Christian were the same thing, for the Christian religion calls every man to be holy.

14. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. All the "favor" and "beneficence" that come from and through the Redeemer of the world; as the Lord, the Ruler and Governor of all things; as Jesus, the "Saviour" of all men by His passion and death; as Christ, the Distributer of all the divine unction which enlightens, comforts, harmonizes, and purifies the mind. May this most exalted, glorious, and all-sufficient Saviour be ever with you! And the love of God. God, your Maker, in that infinite love which induced Him to create the world, and form man in His own image and in His own likeness, that he might be capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying Him forever; and God in the fullest manifestations of that love which caused Him to give His only begotten Son, to the end that they who believe on Him should not perish but have everlasting life. May this God of love, and this love of God, be ever with you! And the communion of the Holy Ghost. May that Holy Spirit, that divine and eternal Energy which proceeds from the Father and the Son; that heavenly Fire that gives light and life, that purifies and refines, sublimes and exalts, comforts and invigorates, make you all "partakers" with himself! Koinonia, which we translate "fellowship" and communion, signifies properly "participation," having things in common, partaking with each other.

THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS

I. Introduction (1:1-10)
- A. Personal introduction (1:1-5)
  - 1. Direct (1:1a, 2)
  - 2. Parenthetical (1:1b)

IV. An appeal—demands of the Gospel (5:1-6:10)
- A. Freedom must be maintained (5:1-12)
  - 1. The law of liberty (5:1)
  - 2. The alternatives (5:2-6)
  - 3. The appeal (5:7-12)
- B. Freedom is to realization (5:13-26)
  - 1. Not fleshly license (5:13-15)
  - 2. Life in the Spirit is victory over the flesh (5:16-26)
- C. Freedom is mutual (6:1-10)
  - 1. One another's burdens (6:1, 2)
  - 2. His own burden (6:3-5)
  - 3. Liberality (6:6-10)

V. Conclusion (6:11-18)
- A. The conclusion in "large letters" (6:11)
- B. A summary contrasting teachers (6:12-16)
  - 1. "They" (6:12, 13)
  - 2. "We" (6:14-16)
- C. The Apostle's credential (6:17)
- D. The benediction (6:18)

While he was with them, they had expressed the greatest esteem and affection both for his person and ministry. Some judaizing teachers got in among them. That which these false teachers chiefly aimed at was to draw them off from the truth as it is in Jesus, particularly in the great doctrine of justification, asserting the necessity of joining the observance of the law of Moses with faith in Christ in order to it. They did all they could to lessen the character and reputation of the apostle, representing him as one who, if he was to be owned as an apostle, yet was much inferior to others, and particularly who deserved not such a regard as Peter, James, and John. In both these attempts they had but too great success. This was the occasion of his writing this epistle, wherein he expresses his great concern that they had suffered themselves to be so soon turned aside, vindicates his own character and authority as an apostle, and shows he was not "behind the very chief of the apostles." He then sets himself to assert and maintain the great gospel doctrine of justification by faith without the works of the law, and he exhorts them to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free, gives them several very needful counsels and directions and then concludes the epistle.

I. The person or persons from whom this epistle is sent—from Paul an apostle, &c., and all the brethren that were with him. 1. He gives a general account both of his office and of the manner in which he was called to it. As to his office, he was an apostle. He acquaints them how he was called to this office, and assures them that his commission to it was wholly divine.

He was an apostle by Jesus Christ, he had his commission immediately from him, and consequently from God the Father. Furthermore his call to the apostleship was after Christ's resurrection from the dead. He had his call from him when in heaven.

Vss. 1-24. SUPERSCRIPTION. GREETINGS. THE CAUSE OF HIS WRITING IS THEIR SPEEDY FALLING AWAY FROM THE GOSPEL HE TAUGHT. DEFENSE OF HIS TEACHING: HIS APOSTOLIC CALL INDEPENDENT OF MAN.

1. apostle—in the earliest Epistles, the two to the Thessalonians, through humility, he uses no title of authority; but associates with him "Silvanus and Timotheus"; yet here, though "brethren" (vs. 2) are with him, he does not name them but puts his own name and apostleship prominent; evidently because his apostolic commission needs now to be vindicated against deniers of it. of—Greek, "from." Expressing the origin from which his mission came, "not from men," but from Christ and the Father (understood) as the source. "By" expresses the immediate operating agent in the call. Not only was the call from God as its ultimate source, but by Christ and the Father as the immediate agent in calling him (Acts 22:15, and 26:16-18). The laying on of Ananias' hands (Acts 9:17) is no objection to this; for that was but a sign of the fact, not an assisting cause. So the Holy Ghost calls him specially (Acts 13:2, 3); he was an apostle before this special mission. man—singular; to mark the contrast to "Jesus Christ." The opposition between "Christ" and "man," and His name being put in closest connection with God the Father, imply His Godhead. raised him from the dead—implying that, though he had not seen Him in His humiliation as the other apostles (which was made an objection against him), he had seen and been constituted an

1. Paul, an apostle, (not of men). Not commissioned by any assembly or council of the apostles.

Neither by man. Nor by any one of the apostles; neither by James, who seems to have been president of the apostolic council at Jerusalem; nor by Peter, to whom, in a particular manner, the keys of the Kingdom were entrusted. But by Jesus Christ. Having his mission immediately from Christ himself, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead, see Acts xxii. 14-15, and commanded him to go both to the Jews and to the Gentiles.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. He joins all the brethren that were with him in the inscription of the epistle. Hereby it would appear that he had their concurrence with him in the doctrine which he had preached, and was now about to confirm.

II. To whom this epistle is sent. It should seem that all of them were more or less corrupted through the arts of those seducers who had crept in among them.

III. The apostolical benediction, v. 3. Grace includes God's goodwill towards us and his good work upon us; and peace implies in it all that inward comfort or outward prosperity which is really needful for us. Both these the apostle wishes for these Christians. First grace, and then peace, for there can be no true peace without grace. Having mentioned the Lord Jesus Christ, he cannot pass without enlarging upon his love (v. 4). This present world is an evil world: it has become so by the sin of man. Jesus Christ has died to deliver us from this present evil world, not to remove his people out of it, but to rescue them from the power of it.

This, the apostle informs us, he has done according to the will of God and our Father. Hence we have encouragement to look upon God as our Father. As he is the Father of our Lord Jesus, so in and through him he is also the Father of all true believers.

The apostle concludes this preface with a solemn ascription of praise and glory to him (v. 5).

That they were so soon removed. In a very little time they lost that esteem of this grace of Christ which they seemed to have. This, as it was an instance of their weakness, so it was a further aggravation of their guilt.

apostle by Him in His resurrection power (Matt. 28:18; Rom. 1:4, 5). Cf. as to the ascension, the consequence of the resurrection, and the cause of His giving "apostles," Ephesians 4:11. He rose again, too, for our justification (Rom. 4:25); thus Paul prepares the way for the prominent subject of the Epistle, justification in Christ, not by the law. 2. all the brethren—I am not alone in my doctrine; all my colleagues in the Gospel work, travelling with me (Acts 19:29, Gaius and Aristarchus at Ephesus; Acts 20:4, Sopater, Secundus, Timotheus, Tychicus, Trophimus, some, or all of these), join with me. Not that these were joint authors with Paul of the Epistle; but joined him in the sentiments and salutations. The phrase, "all the brethren," accords with a date when he had many travelling companions, he and they having to bear jointly the collection to Jerusalem [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. the churches—Pessinus and Ancyra were the principal cities; but doubtless there were many other churches in Galatia (Acts 18:23; I Cor. 16:1). He does not attach any honorable title to the churches here, as elsewhere, being displeased at their Judaizing. See I Corinthians; I Thessalonians, etc. The first Epistle of Peter is addressed to Jewish Christians sojourning in Galatia (I Pet. 1:1), among other places mentioned. It is interesting thus to find the apostle of the circumcision, as well as the apostle of the uncircumcision, once at issue (ch. 2:7-15), cooperating to build up the same churches. 3. from . . . from—Omit the second "from." The Greek joins God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ in closet union, by there being but the one preposition. 4. gave himself—(ch. 2:20)—unto death, as an offering. Found only in this and the Pastoral Epistles. The Greek is different in Ephesians 5:25 (Note). for our sins—which enslaved us to the present evil world. deliver us from this—Greek, "out of the . . ." The Father and Son are each said to "deliver us. . . ." (Col. 1:13); but the Son, not the Father, "gave Himself for" us in order to do so, and make us citizens of a better world (Phil. 3:20). The Galatians in desiring to return to legal bondage are, he implies, renouncing the deliverance which Christ wrought for us. This he more fully repeats in ch. 3:13. "Deliver" is the very word used by the Lord as to His deliverance of Paul himself (Acts 26:17); an undesigned coincidence between Paul and Luke. world—Greek, "age"; system or course of the world, regarded from a religious point of view. The present age opposes the "glory" (vs. 5) of God, and is under the authority of the Evil One. The "ages of ages" (Greek, vs. 5) are opposed to "the present evil age." according to the will of God and our Father—Greek, "of Him who is at once God [the sovereign Creator] and our Father" (John 6:38, 39; 10:18, end). Without merit of ours. His sovereignty as "GOD," and our filial relation to Him as "OUR FATHER," ought to keep us from blending our own legal notions (as the Galatians were doing) with His will and plan. This paves the way for his argument. 5. be glory—rather, as Greek, "be the glory"; the glory which is peculiarly and exclusively His. Cf. Ephesians 3:21, Note. 6. Without the usual expressions of thanksgiving for their faith, etc., he vehemently plunges into his subject, zealous for "the glory" of God (vs. 5), which was being disparaged by the Galatians falling away from the pure Gospel of the "grace" of God. I marvel—implying that he had hoped better things from them, whence his sorrowful surprise at their turning out so different from his expectations. so soon—after my last visit; when I hoped and thought you were untainted by the Judaizing teachers. If this Epistle was written from Corinth, the interval would be a little more than three years, which would be "soon" to have fallen away, if they were apparently sound at the time of his visit. Ch. 4:18, 20 may imply that he saw no symptom of unsoundness then, such as he hears of in them now. removed—Translate, "are being removed," i.e., ye are suffering yourselves so soon (whether from the time of my last visit, or from the time of the first temptation held out to you) [PARÆUS] to be removed by Jewish seducers. Thus he softens the censure by implying that the Galatians were tempted by seducers from without, with whom the chief guilt lay: and the present, "ye are being removed," implies that their seduction was only in process of being effected, not that it was actually effected. WAHL, ALFORD, and others take the Greek as middle voice. "ye are removing" or "passing over." "Shifting your ground" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. But thus the point of Paul's oblique reference to their misleaders is lost; and in Hebrews 7:12 the Greek is used passively, justifying its being taken so here. On the impulsiveness and fickleness of the Gauls

2. And all the brethren which are with me. It is very likely that this refers to those who were his assistants in preaching the gospel, and not to any private members of the church.

Churches of Galatia. Galatia was a region or province of Asia Minor; there was neither city nor town of this name. But as in this province Paul had planted several churches, he directs the Epistle to the whole of them; for it seems they were all pretty nearly in the same state and needed the same instructions.

4. Who gave himself for our sins. Who became a Sin Offering to God in behalf of mankind, that they might be saved from their sins.

5. To whom be glory for ever. Let Him have the glory to whom alone it is due, for having delivered us from the present evil world, and from all bondage to Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed. It was a matter of wonder to the apostle that a people so soundly converted to God should have so soon made shipwreck of their faith.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 6–9

I. How much he was concerned at their defection. There were several things by which their defection was greatly aggravated: 1. That they were removed from him that had called them; not only from the apostle, but from God himself. They had been guilty of a great abuse of his kindness and mercy towards them. 2. They had been called to partake of the greatest blessings and benefits. In proportion to the greatness of the privilege they enjoyed, such were their sin and folly in deserting it.

That they were removed to another gospel, which yet was not another. You will find it to be no gospel at all, but the perverting of the gospel of Christ. Those who go about to establish any other way to heaven than what the gospel of Christ has revealed will find themselves wretchedly mistaken.

II. The gospel he had preached to them was the only true gospel. He pronounced an anathema upon those who pretended to preach any other gospel (v. 8). "If you have any other gospel preached to you under our name, or under colour of having it from an angel himself, you must conclude that you are imposed upon: and whoever preaches another gospel lays himself under a curse."

What Paul had said in the preface of this epistle he now proceeds to enlarge upon. There he had declared himself to be an apostle of Christ; and here he comes more directly to support his claim to that character and office.

I. From the scope and design of his ministry. As he professed to act by a commission from God, so that which he chiefly aimed at was to promote his glory, by recovering sinners into a state of subjection to him. He did not accommodate himself to the humours of persons, but his great care was to approve himself to God. No man could serve two such masters, and therefore he dare not allow himself to gratify men at the expense of his faithfulness to Christ. Thus, he proves that he was truly an apostle of Christ. The great end which ministers of the gospel should aim at is to bring men to God. They must not be solicitous to please men, if they would approve themselves faithful servants to Christ.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(another form of Kel-t-s, the progenitors of the Erse, Gauls, Cymri, and Belgians), whence the Galatians sprang, see Introduction and CÆSAR, B. G. 3. 19. from him that called you—God the Father (vs. 15; ch. 5:8; Rom. 8:30; I Cor. 1:9; I Thess. 2:12; 5:24). into—rather, as Greek, "IN the grace of Christ," as the element in which, and the instrument by which, God calls us to salvation. Cf. Note, I Corinthians 7:15; Romans 5:15, "the gift by (Greek, 'in') grace (Greek, 'the grace') of (the) one man." "The grace of Christ," is Christ's gratuitously purchased and bestowed justification, reconciliation, and eternal life. another—rather, as Greek, "a second and different gospel," i.e., into a so-called gospel, different altogether from the only true Gospel. 7. another—A distinct Greek word from that in vs. 6. Though I called it a gospel (vs. 6), it is not really so. There is really but one Gospel, and no other gospel, but—Translate, "Only that there are some that trouble you . . ." (ch. 5:10, 12). All I meant by the "different gospel" was nothing but a perversion by "some" of the one Gospel of Christ. would pervert—Greek, "wish to pervert"; they could not really pervert the Gospel, though they could pervert Gospel professors (cf. ch. 4:9, 17, 21; 6:12, 13; Col. 2:18). Though acknowledging Christ, they insisted on circumcision and Jewish ordinances and professed to rest on the authority of other apostles, viz., Peter and James. But Paul recognizes no gospel, save the pure Gospel. 8. But—however weighty they may seem "who trouble you." Translate as Greek, "Even though we," viz., I and the brethren with me, weighty and many as we are (vss. 1, 2). The Greek implies a case supposed which never has occurred. angel—in which light ye at first received me (cf. ch. 4:14; I Cor. 13:1), and whose authority is the highest possible next to that of God and Christ. A new revelation, even though seemingly accredited by miracles, is not to be received if it contradict the already existing revelation. For God cannot contradict Himself (Deut. 13:1-3; I Kings 13:18; Matt. 24:24; II Thess. 2:9). The Judaizing teachers sheltered themselves under the names of the great apostles, James, John, and Peter: "Do not bring these names up to me, for even if an angel. . . ." Not that he means, the apostles really supported the Judaizers; but he wishes to show, when the truth is in question, respect of persons is inadmissible [CHRYSOSTOM]. preach—i.e., "should preach." any other gospel . . . than—The Greek expresses not so much "any other gospel different from what we have preached," as, "any gospel BESIDE that which we preached." This distinctly opposes the traditions of the Church of Rome, which are at once besides and against (the Greek includes both ideas) the written Word, our only attested rule. 9. said before—when we were visiting you (so "before" means, II Cor. 13:2). Cf. ch. 5:2, 3, 21. Translate, "If any man preacheth unto you any gospel BESIDE that which. . . ." Observe the indicative, not the subjunctive or conditional mood, is used, "preacheth," lit., "furnisheth you with any gospel." The fact is assumed, not merely supposed as a contingency, as in vs. 8, "preach," or "should preach." This implies that he had already observed (viz., during his last visit) the machinations of the Judaizing teachers: but his surprise (vs. 6) now at the Galatians being misled by them, implies that they had not apparently been so then. As in vs. 8 he had said, "which we preached," so here, with an augmentation of the force, "which ye received"; acknowledging that they had truly accepted it. accursed—The opposite appears in ch. 6:16. 10. For—accounting for the strong language he has just used. do I now—resuming the "now" of vs. 9. "Am I now persuading men?" [ALFORD], i.e., conciliating. Is what I have just now said a sample of men-pleasing, of which I am accused? His adversaries accused him of being an interested flatterer of men, "becoming all things to all men," to make a party for himself, and so observing the law among the Jews (for instance, circumcising Timothy), yet persuading the Gentiles to renounce it (ch. 5:11) (in order to flatter those, really keeping them in a subordinate state, not admitted to the full privileges which the circumcised alone enjoyed). NEANDER explains the "now" thus: Once, when a Pharisee, I was actuated only by a regard to human authority and to please men (Luke 16:15; John 5:44), but NOW I teach as responsible to God alone (I Cor. 4:3). or God?—Regard is to be had to God alone. for if I yet pleased men—The oldest MSS. omit "for." "If I were still pleasing men . . ." (Luke 6:26; John 15:19; I Thess. 2:4; Jas. 4:4; I John 4:5). On "yet," cf. ch. 5:11. servant of Christ—and so pleasing Him in all things (Titus 2:9; Col. 3:22). 11. certify—I made known to you as to the Gospel which was

From him that called you. The apostle seems here to mean himself. He called them into the grace of Christ; and they not only abandoned that grace, but their hearts became greatly estranged from him; so that, though at first they would have plucked out their eyes for him, they at last counted him their enemy, chap. iv. 14-16.

7. Which is not another. It is not gospel, i.e., "good tidings," for it loads you again with the burdens from which the genuine gospel had disencumbered you. Instead of giving you peace, it troubles you; instead of being a useful supplement to the gospel of Christ, it perverts that gospel. You have gained nothing but loss and damage by the change.

8. But though we, or an angel. That gospel which I have already preached to you is the only true gospel; were I to preach any other, I should incur the curse of God. If your false teachers pretend, as many in early times did, that they received their accounts by the ministry of an angel, let them be accursed; separate them from your company, and have no religious communion with them.

9. Let him be accursed. Perhaps this is not designed as an imprecation, but a simple direction; for the word here may be understood as implying that such a person should have no countenance in his bad work, but let him, as Theodoret expresses it, "be separated from the communion of the church." This, however, would also imply that unless the person repented the divine judgments would soon follow.

10. Do I now persuade men, or God? The words may be rendered to "court or solicit the favor of God," as the after clause sufficiently proves. While the apostle was a persecutor of the Christians, he was the servant of men and pleased men. When he embraced the Christian doctrine, he became the servant of God, and pleased Him.

11. But I certify you, brethren. I wish you fully to comprehend that the gospel which I

II. From the manner wherein he received the gospel which he preached to them (v. 11, 12). One thing peculiar in the character of an apostle was that he had been called to, and instructed for, this office immediately by Christ himself. He had his knowledge of the gospel, as well as his authority to preach it, directly from the Lord Jesus.

1. He tells them what his conversation in time past had been, v. 13, 14. It must be something very extraordinary which had made so great a change in him, and brought him not only to profess, but to preach, that doctrine, which he had before so vehemently opposed.

2. In how wonderful a manner he was brought to the knowledge and faith of Christ, and appointed to the office of an apostle, v. 15, 16. There was something peculiar in the case of Paul, both in the suddenness and in the greatness of the change wrought in him, and also in the manner wherein it was effected. He had Christ revealed in him. It will but little avail us to have Christ revealed to us if he is not also revealed in us. It pleased God to reveal his Son in him that he should preach him among the heathen. So that he was both a Christian and an apostle by revelation.

3. How he behaved himself hereupon, from v. 16. He conferred not with flesh and blood. So that it could not well be pretended that he was indebted to any other either for his knowledge of the gospel or his authority to preach it.

preached by me, that it is not after man, i.e., not of by, or from man (vss. 1, 12). It is not according to man; not influenced by mere human considerations, as it would be, if it were of human origin. brethren—He not till now calls them so. 12. Translate, "For not even did I myself (any more than the other apostles) receive it from man, nor was I taught it (by man)." "Received it," implies the absence of labor in acquiring it. "Taught it," implies the labor of learning. by the revelation of Jesus Christ—Translate, "by revelation of [i.e., from] Jesus Christ." By His revealing it to me. Probably this took place during the three years, in part of which he sojourned in Arabia (vss. 17, 18), in the vicinity of the scene of the giving of the law; a fit place for such a revelation of the Gospel of grace, which supersedes the ceremonial law (ch. 4:25). He, like other Pharisees who embraced Christianity, did not at first recognize its independence of the Mosaic law, but combined both together. Ananias, his first instructor, was universally esteemed for his legal piety and so was not likely to have taught him to sever Christianity from the law. This severance was partially recognized after the martyrdom of Stephen. But Paul received it by special revelation (I Cor. 11: 23; 15:3; I Thess. 4:15). A vision of the Lord Jesus is mentioned (Acts 22:18), at his first visit to Jerusalem (vs. 18); but this seems to have been subsequent to the revelation here meant (cf. vss. 15-18), and to have been confined to giving a particular command. The vision "fourteen years before" (II Cor. 12:1) was in A.D. 43, still later, six years after his conversion. Thus Paul is an independent witness to the Gospel. Though he had recived no instruction from the apostles, but from the Holy Ghost, yet when he met them his Gospel exactly agreed with theirs. 13. heard—even before I came among you. conversation—"my former way of life." Jews' religion—The term, "Hebrew," expresses the language; "Jew," the nationality, as distinguished from the Gentiles; "Israelite," the highest title, the religious privileges, as a member of the theocracy. the church—Here singular, marking its unity, though constituted of many particular churches, under the one Head, Christ. of God—added to mark the greatness of his sinful alienation from God (I Cor. 15:19). wasted—laid it waste: the opposite of "building it up." 14. profited—Greek, "I was becoming a proficient"; "I made progress." above—beyond. my equals—Greek, "Of mine own age, among my countrymen." traditions of my fathers—viz., those of the Pharisees, Paul being "a Pharisee, and son of a Pharisee" (Acts 23:6; 26:5). "My fathers," shows that it is not to be understood generally of the traditions of the nation. 15. separated—"set me apart": in the purposes of His electing love (cf. Acts 9:15; 22:14), in order to show in me His "pleasure," which is the farthest point that any can reach in inquiring the causes of his salvation. The actual "separating" or "setting apart" to the work marked out for him, is mentioned in Acts 13:2; Romans 1:1. There is an allusion, perhaps, in the way of contrast, to the derivation of Pharisee from Hebrew, pharash, "separated." I was once a socalled Pharisee or Separatist, but God had separated me to something far better. from . . . womb—Thus merit in me was out of the question, in assigning causes for His call (Rom. 9:11). Grace is the sole cause (Ps. 22:9; 71: 6; Isa. 49:1, 5; Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:15). called me—on the way to Damascus (Acts 9). 16. reveal his Son in me—within me, in my inmost soul, by the Holy Spirit (ch. 2:20). Cf. II Corinthians 4:6, "shined in our hearts." The revealing of His Son by me to the Gentiles (so translate for "heathen") was impossible, unless He had first revealed His Son in me; at first on my conversion, but especially at the subsequent revelation from Jesus Christ (vs. 12), whereby I learned the Gospel's independence of the Mosaic law. that I might preach—the present in the Greek, which includes the idea "that I may preach Him," implying an office still continuing. This was the main commission entrusted to him (ch. 2:7, 9). immediately—connected chiefly with "I went into Arabia" (vs. 17). It denotes the sudden fitness of the apostle. So Acts 9:20, "Straightway he preached Christ in the synagogue." I conferred not—Greek, "I had not further (viz., in addition to revelation) recourse to . . . for the purpose of consulting." The divine revelation was sufficient for me [Bengel]. flesh and blood—(Matt. 16:17). 17. went I up—Some of the oldest MSS. read, "went away." to Jerusalem—the seat of the apostles. into Arabia—This journey (not recorded in Acts) was during the whole period of his stay at Damascus, called by Luke (Acts 9:23), "many [Greek, a preached to you is not after man; there is not a spark of human invention in it, nor the slightest touch of human cunning.

12. I neither received it of man. By means of any apostle, as was remarked on v. 1. No man taught me what I have preached to you. But by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Being commissioned by himself alone, receiving the knowledge of it from Christ crucified.

13. Ye have heard of my conversation. "My manner of life," the mode in which I conducted myself. Beyond measure I persecuted the church. For proofs of this the reader is referred to Acts ix. 1-2; xxii. 4. The apostle tells them that they had heard this, because, being Jews, they were acquainted with what had taken place in Judea relative to these important transactions.

14. And profited in the Jews' religion. The apostle does not mean that he became more exemplary in the love and practice of the pure law of God than any of his countrymen, but that he was more profoundly skilled in the traditions of the fathers than most of his contemporaries.

15. Who separated me from my mother's womb. Him whom I acknowledge as the God of grace; who preserved me by His providence when I was a helpless infant, and saved me by His grace when I was an adult persecutor.

16. To reveal his Son in me. To make me know Jesus Christ, and the power of His resurrection.

That I might preach him among the heathen. For it was to the Gentiles, and the dispersed Jews among the Gentiles, that Paul was especially sent. Peter was sent more particularly to the Jews in the land of Judea; Paul, to those in the different Greek provinces. I conferred not with flesh and blood. I did not take counsel with men; "flesh and blood" is a periphrasis for "man," any man.

17. Neither went I up to Jerusalem. The aim of the apostle is to show that he had his call so immediately and pointedly from God himself that he had no need of the concurrence even of the apostles, being appointed by the same

ALBERT BARNES:

"And abode with him fifteen days." Why he departed then is unknown. Beza supposes that it was on account of the plots of the Grecians against him and their intention to destroy him (Acts 9:29); but this is not assigned by Paul himself as a reason. It is probable that the purpose of his visit to Peter would be accomplished in that time, and he would not spend more time than was necessary with him. It is clear that in the short space of two weeks he could not have been very extensively taught by Peter the nature of the Christian religion, and probably the time is mentioned here to show that he had not been under the teaching of the apostles.

19. "Save James the Lord's brother." That the James here referred to was an apostle is clear. The whole construction of the sentence demands this supposition. In the list of the apostles in Matt. 10:2, 3, two of this name are mentioned, James the son of Zebedee and brother of John, and James the son of Alpheus. From the Acts of the Apostles, it is clear that there were two of this name in Jerusalem. Of these, James the brother of John was slain by Herod (Acts 12:2), and the other continued to reside in Jerusalem (Acts 15:13; 21:13). This latter James was called James the Less (Mark 15:40) to distinguish him from the other James, probably because he was the younger. It is probable that this was the James referred to here, as it is evident from the Acts of the Apostles that he was a prominent man among the apostles in Jerusalem. Commentators have not been agreed as to what is meant by his being the brother of the Lord Jesus. Doddridge understands it as meaning that he was "the near kinsman" to Jesus, for he was, says he, the son of Alpheus and Mary, the sister of the virgin; and if there were but two of this name, this opinion is undoubtedly correct. In the Apostolical Constitution, three of this name are mentioned as apostles or eminent men in Jerusalem; and hence many have supposed that one of them was the son of Mary the mother of the Lord Jesus. It is said (Matt. 8:55) that the brothers of Jesus were James and Joses, and Simon, and Judas; and it is remarkable that three of the apostles bear the same names: James the son of Alpheus, Simon Zelotes, and Judas (John 14:22). It is indeed possible, as Bloomfield remarks, that three brothers of our Lord and three of his apostles might bear the same names, and yet be different persons; but such a coincidence would be very remarkable and not easily explained. But if it were not so, then the James here was the son of Alpheus, and consequently a cousin of the Lord Jesus. The word "brother" may, according to scripture usage, be understood as denoting a "near kinsman."—Popular Commentary

This account being of importance, to establish his claim to this office, he confirms it by a solemn oath (v. 20), which, though it will not justify us in solemn appeals to God upon every occasion, yet shows that, in matters of weight and moment, this may sometimes not only be lawful, but duty.

considerable number of] days." It is curiously confirmatory of the legitimacy of taking "many days" to stand for "three years," that the same phrase exactly occurs in the same sense in I Kings 2: 38, 39. This was a country of the Gentiles; here doubtless he preached as he did before and after (Acts 9:20, 22) at Damascus: thus he shows the independence of his apostolic commission. He also here had that comparative retirement needed, after the first fervor of his conversion, to prepare him for the great work before him. Cf. Moses (Acts 7:29, 30). His familiarity with the scene of the giving of the law, and the meditations and revelations which he had there, appear in ch. 4:24, 25; Hebrews 12:18. See Note, vs. 12. The Lord from heaven communed with him, as He on earth in the days of His flesh communed with the other apostles. returned—Greek "returned back again." 18. after three years—dating from my conversion, as appears by the contrast to "immediately" (vs. 16). This is the same visit to Jerusalem as in Acts 9:26, and at this visit occurred the vision (Acts 22:17, 18). The incident which led to his leaving Damascus (Acts 9: 25; II Cor. 11:33) was not the main cause of his going to Jerusalem. So that there is no discrepancy in the statement here that he went "to see Peter"; or rather, as Greek, "to make the acquaintance of"; "to become personally acquainted with." The two oldest MSS. read, "Cephas," the name given Peter elsewhere in the Epistle, the Hebrew name; as Peter is the Greek (John 1:42). Appropriate to the view of him here as the apostle especially of the Hebrews. It is remarkable that Peter himself, in his Epistles, uses the Greek name Peter, perhaps to mark his antagonism to the Judaizers who would cling to the Hebraic form. He was prominent among the apostles, though James, as bishop of Jerusalem, had the chief authority there (Matt. 16:18). abode—or "tarried" [ELLICOTT]. fifteen days—only fifteen days; contrasting with the long period of three years, during which, previously, he had exercised an independent commission in preaching: a fact proving on the face of it, how little he owed to Peter in regard to his apostolical authority or instruction. The Greek for "to see," at the same time implies visiting a person important to know, such as Peter was. The plots of the Jews prevented him staying longer (Acts 9:29). Also, the vision directing him to depart to the Gentiles, for that the people of Jerusalem would not receive his testimony (Acts 22:17, 18). 19. Cf. Acts 9:27, 28, wherein Luke, as an historian, describes more generally what Paul, the subject of the history, himself details more particularly. The history speaks of "apostles"; and Paul's mention of a second apostle, besides Peter, reconciles the Epistle and the history. At Stephen's martyrdom, and the consequent persecution, the other ten apostles, agreeably to Christ's directions, seem to have soon (though not immediately, Acts 8:14) left Jerusalem to preach elsewhere. James remained in charge of the mother church, as its bishop. Peter, the apostle of the circumcision, was present during Paul's fifteen days' stay; but he, too, presently after (Acts 9:32), went on a circuit through Judea. James, the Lord's brother—This designation, to distinguish him from James the son of Zebedee, was appropriate while that apostle was alive. But before Paul's second visit to Jerusalem (ch. 2:1; Acts 15), he had been beheaded by Herod (Acts 12:2). Accordingly, in the subsequent mention of James here (ch. 2:9, 12), he is not designated by this distinctive epithet: a minute, undesigned coincidence, and proof of genuineness. James was the Lord's brother, not in our strict sense, but in the sense, "cousin," or "kinsman" (Matt. 28:10; John 20:17). His brethren are never called "sons of Joseph," which they would have been had they been the Lord's brothers strictly. However, cf. Psalm 69:8, "I am an alien to my mother's children." In John 7:3, 5, the "brethren" who believed not in Him may mean His near relations, not including the two of His brethren, i.e., relatives (James and Jude) who were among the Twelve apostles. Acts 1:14, "His brethren," refer to Simon and Joses, and others (Matt. 13:55) of His kinsmen, who were not apostles. It is not likely there would be two pairs of brothers named alike, of such eminence as James and Jude; the likelihood is that the apostles James and Jude are also the writers of the Epistles, and the brethren of Jesus. James and Joses were sons of Alpheus and Mary, sister of the Virgin Mary. 20. Solemn asseveration that his statement is true that his visit was but for fifteen days and that he saw no apostle save Peter and James. Probably it had been reported by Judaizers that he had received a long course of instruction from the apostles in Jerusalem from the authority and fitted to the work by the same grace and Spirit as they were. But I went into Arabia. That part of Arabia which was contiguous to Damascus, over which Aretas was then king. Of this journey into Arabia we have no other account. As Luke was not then with him, it is not inserted in the Acts of the Apostles.

18. After three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter. These three years may be reckoned either from the departure of Paul from Jerusalem or from his return from Arabia to Damascus. To see Peter. To become "personally acquainted" with Peter; for this is the proper import of the verb from which we have the word "history," which signifies a "relation of things from personal knowledge and actual acquaintance.

And abode with him fifteen days. It was not, therefore, to get religious knowledge from him that he paid him this visit. He knew as much of the Jewish religion as Peter did, if not more; and as to the gospel, he received that from the same source and had preached it three years before this.

19. James the Lord's brother is mentioned thus to distinguish him from James the brother of John.

20. Before God, I lie not. This he speaks in reference to having seen only Peter and James at Jerusalem; and consequently to prove that he had not learned the gospel from the assembly of the apostles at Jerusalem, nor consequently received his commission from them.

ALBERT BARNES:

21. "Afterwards I came." In this account he has omitted a circumstance recorded by Luke (Acts 9:29), of the controversy which he had with the Grecians or Hellenists. It was not material to the purpose which he has here in view which is to state that he was not indebted to the apostles for his knowledge of the doctrines of Christianity. He therefore merely states that he left Jerusalem soon after he went there, and traveled to other places.

22. "And was unknown by face." Paul had visited Jerusalem only and he had formed no acquaintance with any of the churches in the other parts of Judea. He regarded himself at the first as called to preach particularly to the Gentiles, and he did not remain even to form an acquaintance with the Christians in Judea. "The churches of Judea." Those which were out of Jerusalem. Even at the early period of the conversion of Paul there were doubtless many churches in various parts of the land. "Which were in Christ." United to Christ; or which were Christian churches. The design of mentioning this is to show that he had not derived his views of the gospel from any of them. He had neither been instructed by the apostles nor was he indebted to the Christians in Judea for his knowledge of the Christian religion.

—Popular Commentary

He had no communication at that time with the churches of Christ in Judæa, they had not so much as seen his face. The very report of this mighty change in him, as it filled them with joy, so it excited them to give glory to God on the account of it.

first; hence his earnestness in asserting the contrary facts. 21. I came into ... Syria and Cilicia—"preaching the faith" (vs. 23), and so, no doubt, founding the churches in Syria and Cilicia, which he subsequently confirmed in the faith (Acts 15:23, 41). He probably went first to Cæsarea, the main seaport, and thence by sea to Tarsus of Cilicia, his native place (Acts 9:30), and thence to Syria; Cilicia having its geographical affinities with Syria, rather than with Asia Minor, as the Tarsus mountains separate it from the latter. His placing "Syria" in the order of words before "Cilicia," is due to Antioch being a more important city than Tarsus, as also to his longer stay in the former city. Also "Syria and Cilicia," from their close geographical connection, became a generic geographical phrase, the more important district being placed first [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. This sea journey accounts for his being "unknown by face to the churches of Judea" (vs. 22). He passes by in silence his second visit, with alms, to Judea and Jerusalem (Acts 11:30); doubtless because it was for a limited and special object, and would occupy but a few days (Acts 12:25), as there raged at Jerusalem at the time a persecution in which James, the brother of John, was martyred, and Peter was in prison, and James seems to have been the only apostle present (Acts 12:17); so it was needless to mention this visit, seeing that he could not at such a time have received the instructions which the Galatians alleged he had derived from the primary fountains of authority, the apostles. 22. So far was I from being a disciple of the apostles, that I was even unknown in the churches of Judea (excepting Jerusalem, Acts 9:26-29), which were the chief scene of their labors. 23. Translate as Greek, "They were hearing": tidings were brought them from time to time [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. he which persecuted us in times past—"our former persecutor" [ALFORD]. The designation by which he was known among Christians still better than by his name "Saul." destroyed—Greek, "was destroying." 24. in me—"in my case." "Having understood the entire change, and that the former wolf is now acting the shepherd's part, they received occasion for joyful thanksgiving to God in respect to me" [THEODORET]. How different, he implies to the Galatians, their spirit from yours!

ADAM CLARKE

22. And was unknown by face. I was not personally acquainted with any of the churches of Judea; I was converted in another place, and had not preached the gospel in any Christian congregation in that country. I knew only those at Jerusalem.

23. They had heard only. As a persecutor of the Church of Christ, I was well-known; and as a convert to Christ I was not less so. The fame of both was great, even where I was personally unknown.

24. They glorified God in me. Hearing now that I preached that faith which before I had persecuted and endeavored to destroy, they glorified God for the grace which had wrought my conversion. I owe nothing to them; I owe all to God—and they themselves acknowledge this. I received all from God, and God has all the glory.

From the very first preaching of Christianity there was a difference of apprehension between those Christians who had first been Jews and those who had first been Gentiles. Peter was the apostle of the circumcision. But Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles. He informs us of another journey which he took to Jerusalem, v. 1–10.

I. It was not till fourteen years after the former (mentioned ch. i. 18). It was some evidence that he had no dependence upon the other apostles, that he had been so long absent from them, and was all the while employed in preaching pure Christianity, without being called into question by them for it. He went up with Barnabas, and took with him Titus also. If the journey here spoken of was the same with that recorded Acts xv, then we have a plain reason why Barnabas went along with him; for he was chosen by the Christians at Antioch to be his companion and associate. Though Titus had now become not only a convert to the Christian faith, but a preacher of it too, yet he was by birth a Gentile and uncircumcised, and therefore, by making him his companion, it appeared that their doctrine and practice were of a piece. He went up by revelation. It was a privilege with which this apostle was often favoured to be under a special divine direction. It should teach us to endeavour to see our way made plain before us, and to commit ourselves to the guidance of Providence.

II. An account of his behaviour while he was at Jerusalem.

1. He there communicated the gospel to them, which he preached among the Gentiles, but privately, &c. Observe both the faithfulness and prudence of our great apostle. (1) His faithfulness in giving them a fair account of the doctrine which he had all along preached among the Gentiles, and was still resolved to preach. (2) He uses prudence and caution herein. He chooses rather to do it in a more private than in a public way. The reason of this his caution was lest he should stir up opposition against himself and thereby either the success of his past labours should be lessened, or his future usefulness be obstructed. It was enough to his purpose to have his doctrine

VSS. 1-21. HIS CO-ORDINATE AUTHORITY AS APOSTLE OF THE CIRCUMCISION RECOGNIZED BY THE APOSTLES. PROVED BY HIS REBUKING PETER FOR TEMPORIZING AT ANTIOCH: HIS REASONING AS TO THE INCONSISTENCY OF JUDAIZING WITH JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH. 1. Translate, "After fourteen years"; viz., from Paul's conversion inclusive [ALFORD]. In the fourteenth year from his conversion [BIRKS]. The same visit to Jerusalem as in Acts 15 (A.D. 50), when the council of the apostles and Church decided that Gentile Christians need not be circumcised. Titus ... also—specified on account of what follows as to him, in vs. 3. Paul and Barnabas, and others, were deputed by the Church of Antioch (Acts 15:2) to consult the apostles and elders at Jerusalem on the question of circumcision of Gentile Christians. 2. by revelation—not from being absolutely dependent on the apostles at Jerusalem, but by independent divine "revelation." Quite consistent with his at the same time, being a deputy from the Church of Antioch, as Acts 15:2 states. He by this revelation was led to suggest the sending of the deputation. Cf. the case of Peter being led by vision, and at the same time by Cornelius' messengers, to go to Cæsarea, Acts 10. I ... communicated unto them—viz., "to the apostles and elders" (Acts 15:2): to the apostles in particular (vs. 9). privately—that he and the apostles at Jerusalem might decide previously on the principles to be adopted and set forward before the public council (Acts 15). It was necessary that the Jerusalem apostles should know beforehand that the Gospel Paul preached to the Gentiles was the same as theirs, and had received divine confirmation in the results it wrought on the Gentile converts. He and Barnabas related to the multitude, not the nature of the doctrine they preached (as Paul did privately to the apostles), but only the miracles vouchsafed in proof of God's sanctioning their preaching to the Gentiles (Acts 15: 12). to them ... of reputation—James, Cephas, and John, and probably some of the "elders"; vs. 6, "those who seemed to be somewhat." lest ...—"lest I should be running, or have run, in vain"; i.e., that they might see that I am not running, and have

1. Then fourteen years after. There is a considerable difference among critics concerning the time specified in this verse; the apostle is however generally supposed to refer to the journey he took to Jerusalem about the question of circumcision, mentioned in Acts xv. 4. Others contend that the journey of which the apostle speaks is that mentioned in Acts xi. 27, when Barnabas and Saul were sent by the church of Antioch with relief to the poor Christians in Judea.

2. I went up by revelation. This either means that he went up at that time by an express revelation from God that it was his duty to do so, made either to the church of Antioch to send these persons to Jerusalem or to these persons to go according to the directions of that church, or the apostle here wishes to say that, having received the gospel by revelation from God, to preach Christ among the Gentiles, he went up "according" to that revelation, and told what God had done by him among the Gentiles. Or it may refer to the revelation made to "certain prophets" who came to Antioch, and particularly "Agabus," who signified by the Spirit that there would be a dearth, in consequence of which the disciples purposed to send relief to their poor brethren at Jerusalem. See Acts xi. 27-30. But privately to them which were of reputation. To the "chief men"; those who were highest in reputation among the apostles, "the honorable." With these the apostle intimates that he had some private conferences.

owned by those who were of greatest authority, whether it was approved by others or not.

2. In his practice he firmly adhered to the doctrine which he had preached. Though he had Titus with him, who was a Greek, yet he would not suffer him to be circumcised. It does not appear that the apostles at all insisted upon this; they were not for imposing it upon the Gentiles.

But there were others who did, false brethren, unawares brought in, to spy out their liberty which they had in Christ Jesus. Their design herein was to bring them into bondage. Had they prevailed with Paul to have circumcised Titus, they would easily have imposed circumcision upon other Gentiles, and so have brought them under the bondage of the Law of Moses.

But Paul would not give place by subjection, no, not for an hour, that the truth of the gospel might continue with them. He would not yield to those who were for the Mosaic rites and ceremonies, but would stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

3. Though he conversed with the other apostles, yet he did not receive any addition to his knowledge or authority from them, v. 6. That they were apostles first was no prejudice to his being equally an apostle with them. They told him nothing but what he before knew by revelation, nor could they except against the doctrine which he communicated to them.

4. The other apostles were fully convinced of his divine mission and authority, and accordingly acknowledged him as their fellow-apostle, v. 7–10. They justly concluded that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to Paul, as the gospel of the circumcision was to Peter.

not run, in vain. Paul does not himself fear lest he be running, or had run, in vain; but lest he should, if he gave them no explanation, seem so to them. His race was the swift-running proclamation of the Gospel to the Gentiles (cf. "run," Margin, for "Word . . . have free course," II Thess. 3:1). His running would have been in vain, had circumcision been necessary, since he did not require it of his converts. 3. But—So far were they from regarding me as running in vain, that "not even Titus who was with me, who was a Greek (and therefore uncircumcised), was compelled to be circumcised." So the Greek should be translated. The "false brethren," vs. 4 ("certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed," Acts 15:5), demanded his circumcision. The apostles, however, constrained by the firmness of Paul and Barnabas (vs. 5), did not compel or insist on his being circumcised. Thus they virtually sanctioned Paul's course among the Gentiles and admitted his independence as an apostle: the point he desires to set forth to the Galatians. Timothy, on the other hand, as being a proselyte of the gate, and son of a Jewess (Acts 16: 1), he circumcised (Acts 16:3). Christianity did not interfere with Jewish usages, regarded merely as social ordinances, though no longer having their religious significance, in the case of Jews and proselytes, while the Jewish polity and temple still stood; after the overthrow of the latter, those usages naturally ceased. To have insisted on Jewish usages for Gentile converts, would have been to make them essential parts of Christianity. To have rudely violated them at first in the case of Jews, would have been inconsistent with that charity which (in matters indifferent) is made all things to all men, that by all means it may win some (I Cor. 9:22; cf. Rom. 14:1-7, 13-23). Paul brought Titus about with him as a living example of the power of the Gospel upon the uncircumcised heathen. 4. And that—i.e., What I did concerning Titus (viz., by not permitting him to be circumcised) was not from contempt of circumcision, but "on account of the false brethren" (Acts 15:1, 24) who, had I yielded to the demand for his being circumcised, would have perverted the case into a proof that I deemed circumcision necessary. unawares—"in an underhand manner brought in." privily—stealthily. to spy out—as foes in the guise of friends, wishing to destroy and rob us of—our liberty—from the yoke of the ceremonial law. If they had found that we circumcised Titus through fear of the apostles, they would have made that a ground for insisting on imposing the legal yoke on the Gentiles. bring us into bondage—The Greek future implies the certainty and continuance of the bondage as the result. 5. Greek, "To whom not even for an hour did we yield by subjection." ALFORD renders the Greek article, "with THE subjection required of us." The sense rather is, We would willingly have yielded for love [BENGEL] (if no principle was at issue), but not in the way of subjection, where "the truth of the Gospel" (vs. 14; Col. 1:5) was at stake (viz., the fundamental truth of justification by faith only, without the works of the law, contrasted with another Gospel, ch. 1:6). Truth precise, unaccommodating, abandons nothing that belongs to itself, admits nothing that is inconsistent with it [BENGEL]. might continue with you—Gentiles. We defended for your sakes your true faith and liberties, which you are now renouncing. 6. Greek, "From those who . . . ." He meant to complete the sentence with "I derived no special advantage"; but he alters it into "they . . . added nothing to me." accepteth—so as to show any partiality; "respecteth no man's person" (Eph. 6:9). seemed to be somewhat—i.e., not that they seemed to be what they were not, but "were reputed as persons of some consequence"; not insinuating a doubt but that they were justly so reputed. in conference added—or "imparted"; the same Greek as in ch. 1:16, "I conferred not with flesh and blood." As I did not by conference impart to them aught at my conversion, so they now did not impart aught additional to me, above what I already knew. This proves to the Galatians his independence as an apostle. 7. contrariwise—on the contrary. So far from adding any new light to ME, THEY gave in THEIR adhesion to the new path on which Barnabas and I, by independent revelation, had entered. So far from censuring, they gave a hearty approval to my independent course, viz., the innovation of preaching the Gospel without circumcision to the Gentiles. when they saw—from the effects which I showed them, were "wrought" (vs. 8; Acts 15:12). was committed unto me—Greek, "I was entrusted with . . . , as Peter was with . . . . gospel of the uncircumcision—i.e., of the Gentiles, who were to be converted without circumcision be-his divine call, he had preached the gospel to the Gentiles, and the great good which God had wrought by his ministry; but they, not knowing the nature and end of his call, might be led to suppose he had acted wrong, and thus labored in vain. It was necessary, therefore, that he should give the apostolic council the fullest information that he had acted according to the divine mind in every respect, and had been blessed in his deed.

3. But neither Titus, who was with me. The apostle proceeds to state that his account was so satisfactory to the apostles that they not only did not require him to insist on the necessity of circumcision among the Gentiles, but did not even require him to have Titus, who was a Greek, circumcised; though that might have appeared expedient, especially at Jerusalem, to prevent false brethren from making a handle of his uncircumcision, and turning it to the prejudice of the gospel in Judea.

4. To spy out our liberty. The Judaizing brethren got introduced into the assembly of the apostles, in order to find out what was implied in the liberty of the gospel, that they might know the better how to oppose Paul and his fellows in their preaching Christ to the Gentiles and admitting them into the Church without obliging them to observe circumcision and keep the law.

5. To whom we gave place by subjection. So fully satisfied was he with his divine call, and that he had in preaching among the Gentiles acted in strict conformity to it, that he did not submit in the least to the opinion of those Judaizing teachers; and therefore he continued to insist on the exemption of the Gentiles from the necessity of submitting to Jewish rites. That the truth of the gospel—this grand doctrine that the Gentiles are admitted by the gospel of Christ to be fellow heirs with the Jews—might continue; and thus the same doctrine is continued with you Gentiles.

6. These who seemed to be somewhat. "Those who were of acknowledged reputation." The verb dokein, "to seem," is repeatedly used by the best Greek writers, not to call the sense in question or to lessen it, but to deepen and extend it. See the note on Luke viii. 18. Perhaps this verse had best be translated thus: "But there is no difference between those who were of acknowledged reputation and myself; God accepts no man's person; but in the conferences which I held with them they added nothing to me"—gave me no new light; did not attempt to impose on me any obligation, because they saw that God had appointed me my work, and that His counsel was with me.

7. But contrariwise. They were so far from wishing me to alter my plan, or to introduce anything new in my doctrine to the Gentiles, that they saw plainly that my doctrine was the same as their own, coming immediately from the same source; and therefore gave to me and to Barnabas the right hand of fellowship. The gospel of the uncircumcision. They saw to their utmost satisfaction that I was as expressly sent by God to preach the gospel to the Gentiles as Peter was to preach it to the Jews.

ALBERT BARNES:

9. "And when James, Cephas, and John who seemed to be pillars." That is, pillars or supports in the church. The word rendered "pillars" means properly firm support; then persons of influence and authority, as in a church or that support a church as a pillar or column does an edifice. In regard to James, see Acts 15:13. Cephas, or Peter, was the most aged of the apostles and regarded as the head of the apostolical college. John was the beloved disciple, and his influence in the church must of necessity have been great. Paul felt that if he had the countenance of these men, it would be an important proof to the churches of Galatia that he had a right to regard himself as an apostle. Their countenance was expressed in the most full and decisive manner. "Perceived the grace that was given unto me." That is, the favor that had been shown to me by the great Head of the church in so abundantly blessing my labors among the Gentiles. "They gave unto me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship." The right hand in token of fellowship or favor. They thus publicly acknowledged us as fellow laborers and expressed the utmost confidence in us. To give the right hand with us is a token of friendly salutation, and it seems that it was a mode of salutation not unknown in the time of the apostles. They were thus recognized as associated with the apostles in the great work of spreading the gospel around the world. Whether this was done in a public manner is not certainly known; but it was probably in the presence of the church, or possibly at the close of the council referred to in Acts 15.

"That we should go unto the heathen." To preach the gospel and to establish churches. In this way the whole matter was settled, and settled as Paul desired it to be. A delightful harmony was produced between Paul and the apostles at Jerusalem; and the result showed the wisdom of the course which he had adopted. There had been no harsh contention or strife. No jealousies had been suffered to arise. Paul had sought an opportunity of a full statement of his views to them in private (v. 2), and they had been entirely satisfied that God had called him and Barnabas to the work of making known the gospel among the heathen. Instead of being jealous at their success, they had rejoiced in it; and instead of throwing any obstacle in their way, they cordially gave them the right hand.—Popular Commentary

They gave unto him and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, and agreed that these should go to the heathen, while they continued to preach to the circumcision. And thus this meeting ended in an entire harmony and agreement; they approved both Paul's doctrine and conduct, and had nothing further to add, only that they would remember the poor, which of his own accord he was very forward to do. Herein he has given us an excellent pattern of Christian charity and we should by no means confine it to those who are just of the same sentiments with us, but be ready to extend it to all whom we have reason to look upon as the disciples of Christ.

I. He acquaints them with another interview which he had with the apostle Peter at Antioch, and what passed between them there, v. 11–14. In their other meeting, there had been good harmony and agreement. But in this Paul finds himself obliged to oppose Peter.

ing required. circumcision . . . unto Peter—Peter had originally opened the door to the Gentiles (Acts 10 and 15:7). But in the ultimate apportionment of the spheres of labor, the Jews were assigned to him (cf. I Pet. 1:1). So Paul on the other hand wrote to the Hebrews (cf. also Col. 4:11), though his main work was among the Gentiles. The non-mention of Peter in the list of names, presciently through the Spirit, given in Romans 16, shows that Peter's residence at Rome, much more primacy, was then unknown. The same is palpable from the sphere here assigned to him. 8. he—God (I Cor. 12:6). wrought effectually—i.e., made the preached word efficacious to conversion, not only by sensible miracles, but by the secret mighty power of the Holy Ghost. in Peter—ELLICOTT and others, translate, "For Peter." GROTIUS translates as English Version. to—with a view to. was mighty—Translate as before, the Greek being the same, "wrought effectually." in me—"for (or 'in') me also." 9. James—placed first in the oldest MSS., even before Peter, as being bishop of Jerusalem, and so presiding at the council (Acts 15). He was called "the Just," from his strict adherence to the law, and so was especially popular among the Jewish party though he did not fall into their extremes; whereas Peter was somewhat estranged from them through his intercourse with the Gentile Christians. To each apostle was assigned the sphere best suited to his temperament: to James, who was tenacious of the law, the Jerusalem Jews; to Peter, who had opened the door to the Gentiles but who was Judaically disposed, the Jews of the dispersion; to Paul, who, by the miraculous and overwhelming suddenness of his conversion, had the whole current of his early Jewish prejudices turned into an utterly opposite direction, the Gentiles. Not separately and individually, but collectively the apostles together represented Christ, the One Head, in the apostleship. The twelve foundation stones of various colors are joined together to the one great foundation stone on which they rest (I Cor. 3:11; Rev. 21: 14, 19, 20). John had got an intimation in Jesus' lifetime of the admission of the Gentiles (John 12: 20-24). seemed—i.e., were reputed to be (Note, vss. 2, 6) pillars, i.e., weighty supporters of the Church (cf. Prov. 9:1; Rev. 3:12). perceived the grace . . . given unto me—(II Pet. 3:15). gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship—recognizing me as a colleague in the apostleship, and that the Gospel I preached by special revelation to the Gentiles was the same as theirs. Cf. the phrase, Lamentations 5:6; Ezekiel 17:18. heathen—the Gentiles. 10. remember the poor—of the Jewish Christians in Judea, then distressed. Paul and Barnabas had already done so (Acts 11:23-30). the same—the very thing. I . . . was forward—or "zealous" (Acts 24:17; Rom. 15:25; I Cor. 16:1; II Cor. 8 and 9). Paul was zealous for good works, while denying justification by them. 11. Peter—"Cephas" in the oldest MSS. Paul's withstanding Peter is the strongest proof that the former gives of the independence of his apostleship in relation to the other apostles, and upsets the Romish doctrine of Peter's supremacy. The apostles were not always inspired; but were so always in writing the Scriptures. If then the inspired men who wrote them were not invariably at other times infallible, much less were the uninspired men who kept them. The Christian fathers may be trusted generally as witnesses to facts, but not implicitly followed in matters of opinion. come to Antioch—then the citadel of the Gentile Church: where first the Gospel was preached to idolatrous Gentiles, and where the name "Christians" was first given (Acts 11:20, 26), and where Peter is said to have been subsequently bishop. The question at Antioch was not whether the Gentiles were admissible to the Christian covenant without becoming circumcised—that was the question settled at the Jerusalem council just before—but whether the Gentile Christians were to be admitted to social intercourse with the Jewish Christians without conforming to the Jewish institution. The Judaizers, soon after the council had passed the resolutions recognizing the equal rights of the Gentile Christians, repaired to Antioch, the scene of the gathering in of the Gentiles (Acts 11: 20-26), to witness, what to Jews would look so extraordinary, the receiving of men to communion of the Church without circumcision. Regarding the proceeding with prejudice, they explained away the force of the Jerusalem decision; and probably also desired to watch whether the Jewish Christians among the Gentiles violated the law, which that decision did not verbally sanction them in doing, though giving the Gentiles latitude (Acts 15:19). to be blamed—rather, "(self)-condemned"; his act

8. For he that wrought effectually. "He who wrought powerfully with Peter wrought powerfully also with me." He gave us both those talents which were suited to our work, and equal success in our different departments.

9. James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars. "Who were known to be very eminent, and acknowledged as chief men" among the apostles. Among the Jews, persons of great eminence and importance are represented as "pillars" and "foundations" of the world. The right hands of fellowship. Giving the right hand to another was the mark of confidence, friendship, and fellowship.

10. Only they would that we should remember the poor. they saw plainly that God had as expressly called Barnabas and me to go to the Gentiles as He had called them to preach to the Jews, and they did not attempt to give us any new injunctions, only wished us to remember the poor in Judea; but this was a thing to which we were previously disposed.

11. When Peter was come to Antioch. There had been a controversy whether Peter here should not be read "Kephas"; and whether this Kephas was not a different person from Peter the apostle. Instead of Peter, several MSS. and versions and several of the Greek fathers read Kephas. That Peter the apostle is meant, the most sober and correct writers of antiquity maintain.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. Peter's fault. When he came among the Gentile churches, he complied with them, and did eat with them. But, when there came some Jewish Christians from Jerusalem, he withdrew, and separated himself. His fault herein had a bad influence upon others.

Barnabas himself, one of the apostles of the Gentiles, was carried away with their dissimulation. Here note, (1) The weakness and inconstancy of the best of men, and how apt they are to falter in their duty to God, out of an undue regard to the pleasing of men. (2) The great force of bad examples, especially the examples of great men and good men.

2. The rebuke which Paul gave him. When he observes him thus behaving he is not afraid to reprove him for it. Paul adhered resolutely to his principles, when others faltered in theirs. He was as good a Jew as any and the Gentiles must comply with the Jews, or else not be admitted into Christian communion.

II. He takes occasion to speak of that great fundamental doctrine of the gospel—That justification is only by faith in Christ, and not by the works of the law. This was the doctrine which Paul had preached among the Galatians, to which he still adhered, and which it is his great business in this epistle to confirm.

at one time condemning his contrary acting at another time. 2. certain–men: perhaps James' view (in which he was not infallible, any more than Peter) was that the Jewish converts were still to observe Jewish ordinances, from which he had decided with the council the Gentiles should be free (Acts 15:19). NEANDER, however, may be right in thinking these self-styled delegates from James were not really from him. Acts 15:24 favors this. "Certain from James," may mean merely that they came from the Church at Jerusalem under James' bishopric. Still James' leanings were to legalism, and this gave him his influence with the Jewish party (Acts 21:18-26). eat with . . . Gentiles–as in Acts 10:10-20, 48, according to the command of the vision (Acts 11:3-17). Yet after all, this same Peter, through fear of man (Prov. 29:25), was faithless to his own so distinctly avowed principles (Acts 15:7-11). We recognize the same old nature in him as led him, after faithfully witnessing for Christ, yet for a brief space, to deny Him. "Ever the first to recognize, and the first to draw back from great truths" [ALFORD]. An undesigned coincidence between the Gospels and the Epistle in the consistency of character as portrayed in both. It is beautiful to see how earthly misunderstandings of Christians are lost in Christ. For in II Peter 3:15, Peter praises the very Epistles of Paul which he knew contained his own condemnation. Though apart from one another and differing in characteristics, the two apostles were one in Christ. withdrew–Greek, "began to withdraw . . . ." This implies a gradual drawing back; "separated," entire severance. 13. the other–Greek, "the rest." Jews–Jewish Christians. dissembled likewise–Greek, "joined in hypocrisy," viz., in living as though the law were necessary to justification, through fear of man, though they knew from God their Christian liberty of eating with Gentiles, and had availed themselves of it already (Acts 11:2-17). The case was distinct from that in I Corinthians chs. 8-10; Romans 14. It was not a question of liberty, and of bearing with others' infirmities, but one affecting the essence of the Gospel, whether the Gentiles are to be virtually "compelled to live as do the Jews," in order to be justified (vs. 14). Barnabas also–"Even Barnabas": one least likely to be led into such an error, being with Paul in first preaching to the idolatrous Gentiles: showing the power of bad example and numbers. In Antioch, the capital of Gentile Christianity and the central point of Christian missions, the controversy first arose, and in the same spot it now broke out afresh; and here Paul had first to encounter the party that afterwards persecuted him in every scene of his labors (Acts 15:30-35). 14. walked not uprightly–lit., "straight": "were not walking with straightforward steps." Cf. ch. 6:16. truth of the gospel–which teaches that justification by legal works and observances is inconsistent with redemption by Christ. Paul alone here maintained the truth against Judaism, as afterwards against heathenism (II Tim. 4:16, 17). Peter–"Cephas" in the oldest MSS. before . . . all–(I Tim. 5:20). If thou . . .–"If thou, although being a Jew (and therefore one who might seem to be more bound to the law than the Gentiles), livest (habitually, without scruple and from conviction, Acts 15:10, 11) as a Gentile (freely eating of every food, and living in other respects also as if legal ordinances in no way justify, vs. 12), and not as a Jew, how (so the oldest MSS. read, for "why") is it that thou art compelling (virtually, by thine example) the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?" (lit., to Judaize, i.e., to keep the ceremonial customs of the Jews: What had been formerly obedience to the law, is now mere Judaism). The high authority of Peter would constrain the Gentile Christians to regard Judaizing as necessary to all, since Jewish Christians could not consort with Gentile converts in communion without it. 15, 16. Connect these verses together, and read with most of the oldest MSS. "But" in the beginning of vs. 16: "We (I and thou, Peter) by nature (not by proselytism), Jews, and not sinners as (Jewish language termed the Gentiles) from among the Gentiles, YET (lit., BUT) knowing that . . . even we (resuming the 'we' of vs. 15, 'we also,' as well as the Gentile sinners; casting away trust in the law), have believed . . . ." not justified by the works of the law–as the GROUND of justification. "The works of the law" are those which have the law for their object–which are wrought to fulfil the law [ALFORD]. but by–Translate, "But only (in no other way save) through faith in Jesus Christ," as the MEAN and instrument of justification. Jesus Christ–In the second case, read with the oldest MSS., "Christ Jesus," the Messiahship coming into prominence in the case of Jewish believers,

ADAM CLARKE

12. Before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles. Here was Peter's fault. He was convinced that God had pulled down the middle wall of partition that had so long separated the Jews and Gentiles, and he acted on this conviction, associating with the latter and eating with them. But when certain Jews came from James, who it appears considered the law still to be in force, lest he should place a stumbling block before them he withdrew from all commerce with the converted Gentiles, and acted as if he himself believed the law to be still in force, and that the distinction between the Jews and the Gentiles should still be kept up.

13. And the other Jews dissembled likewise. That is: Those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews, and who had also been convinced that the obligation of the Jewish ritual had ceased, seeing Peter act this part, and also fearing them that were of the circumcision, separated themselves from the converted Gentiles and acted so as to convince the Jews that they still believed the law to be of moral obligation; and so powerful was the torrent of such an example that the gentle, loving-hearted Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation, "with their hypocrisy," feigning to be what they really were not.

14. That they walked not uprightly. They did not walk "with a straight step"—they did not maintain a firm footing. According to the truth of the gospel. According to that true doctrine, which states that "Christ is the end of the law" for justification "to every one that believeth"; and that such are under no obligation to observe circumcision and the other peculiar rites and ceremonies of the law. If thou, being a Jew, livest. This was a cutting reproof. He was a Jew and had been circumstantially scrupulous in everything relative to the law; and it required a miracle to convince him that the Gentiles were admitted on their believing in Christ to become members of the same Church and fellow heirs of the hope of eternal life; and in consequence of this he went in with the Gentiles and ate with them; i.e., associated with them as he would with Jews. But now, fearing them of the circumcision, he withdrew from this fellowship. Why compellest thou the Gentiles? You once considered that they were not under such an obligation, and now you act as if you did consider the law in full force; but you are convinced that the contrary is the case, yet act differently! This is "hypocrisy."

15. We who are Jews by nature. We who belong to the Jewish nation—who have been born, bred, and educated Jews. And not sinners of the Gentiles. Not without the knowledge of God, as they have been. Among the nations or Gentiles many Jews sojourned, who in Scripture are known by the name of Hellenists, and these were distinguished from those who were termed sinners of the Gentiles—"heathens."

1. The practice of the Jewish Christians themselves: "What did we believe in Christ for? Was it not that we might be justified by the faith of Christ? And, if so, is it not folly to go back to the law?"

To give the greater weight to this he adds (v. 17), "But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, is Christ the minister of sin? Will it not follow that he is so, if he engage us to receive a doctrine by which we are so far from being justified that we remain impure sinners?" But he rejects it with abhorrence: "God forbid," says he, "that thereby he should direct us into a way of justification that is defective and ineffectual.

For," says he (v. 18), "if I build again the things which I destroyed I make myself a transgressor; I own myself to remain under the guilt of sin, notwithstanding my faith in Christ."

2. What his own judgment and practice were. (1) He was dead to the law, through the law itself. He saw that justification was not to be expected by the works of it and that there was now no further need of the sacrifices since they were done away in Christ, by his offering up himself a sacrifice for us. But, though he was thus dead to the law, yet he did not look upon himself as without law. He was dead to the law, that he might live unto God. The doctrine of the gospel, instead of weakening the bond of duty, did but the more strengthen and confirm it; and therefore, though he was dead to the law, yet it was only in order to his living a new and better life to God.

as "Jesus" does in the first case, referring to the general proposition. justified by the faith of Christ—i.e., by Christ, the object of faith, as the ground of our justification. for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified—He rests his argument on this as an axiom in theology, referring to Psalm 143:2, "Moses and Jesus Christ; The law and the promise; Doing and believing; Works and faith; Wages and the gift; The curse and the blessing—are represented as diametrically opposed" [BENGEL]. The moral law is, in respect to justification, more legal than the ceremonial, which was an elementary and preliminary Gospel: So "Sinai" (ch. 4:24), which is more famed for the Decalogue than for the ceremonial law, is made pre-eminently the type of legal bondage. Thus, justification by the law, whether the moral or ceremonial, is excluded (Rom. 3:20). 17. Greek, "But if, seeking to be justified IN (i.e., in believing union with) Christ (who has in the Gospel theory fulfilled the law for us), we (you and I) ourselves also were found (in your and my former communion with Gentiles) sinners (such as from the Jewish standpoint that now we resume, we should be regarded, since we have cast aside the law, thus having put ourselves in the same category as the Gentiles, who, being without the law, are, in the Jewish view, 'sinners," vs. 15), is therefore Christ, the minister of sin?" (Are we to admit the conclusion, in this case inevitable, that Christ having failed to justify us by faith, so has become to us the minister of sin, by putting us in the position of "sinners," as the Judaic theory, if correct, would make us, along with all others who are "without the law," Romans 2:14; I Corinthians 9:21; and with whom, by eating with them, we have identified ourselves?) The Christian mind revolts from so shocking a conclusion, and so, from the theory which would result in it. The whole sin lies, not with Christ, but with him who would necessitate such a blasphemous inference. But his false theory, though "seeking" from Christ, we have not "found" salvation (in contradiction to Christ's own words, Matt. 7:7), but "have been ourselves also (like the Gentiles) found" to be "sinners," by having entered into communion with Gentiles (vs. 12). 18. Greek, "For if the things which I overthrew (by the faith of Christ), those very things I build up again (viz., legal righteousness, by subjecting myself to the law), I prove myself (lit., 'I commend myself') a transgressor." Instead of commending yourself as you sought to do (vs. 12, end), you merely commend yourself as a transgressor. The "I" is intended by Paul for Peter to take to himself, as it is his case, not Paul's own, that is described. A "transgressor" is another word for "sinner" (in vs. 17), for "sin is the transgression of the law." You, Peter, by now asserting the law to be obligatory, are proving yourself a "sinner," or "transgressor," in your having set it aside by living as the Gentiles, and with them. Thus you are debarred by transgression from justification by the law, and you debar yourself from justification by Christ, since in your theory He becomes a minister of sin. 19. Here Paul seems to pass from his exact words to Peter, to the general purport of his argument on the question. However, his direct address to the Galatians seems not to be resumed till ch. 3:1, "O foolish Galatians...." For—But I am not a "transgressor" by forsaking the law. "For...." Proving his indignant denial of the consequence that "Christ is the minister of sin" (vs. 17), and of the premises from which it would follow. Christ, so far from being the minister of sin and death, is the establisher of righteousness and life. I am entirely in Him [BENGEL]. I—here emphatical. Paul himself, not Peter, as in the "I" (vs. 18). through the law—which was my "schoolmaster to bring me to Christ" (ch. 3:24); both by its terrors (ch. 3:13; Rom. 3:20) driving me to Christ, as the refuge from God's wrath against sin, and, when spiritually understood, teaching that itself is not permanent, but must give place to Christ, whom it prefigures as its scope and end (Rom. 10:4); and drawing me to Him by its promises (in the prophecies which form part of the Old Testament law) of a better righteousness, and of God's law written in the heart (Deut. 18:15-19; Jer. 31:33; Acts 10:43). am dead to the law—lit., "I died to the law," and so am dead to it, i.e., am passed from under its power, in respect to non-justification or condemnation (Col. 2:20; Rom. 6:14; 7:4, 6); just as a woman, once married and bound to a husband, ceases to be so bound to him when death interposes, and may be lawfully married to another husband. So by believing union to Christ in His death, we, being considered dead with Him, are severed from the law's past power over us (cf. ch. 6:14; I Cor. 7:39; Rom. 6:6-11; I Pet. 2:24). live unto God—(Rom. 6:11;

ADAM CLARKE

16. Knowing that a man is not justified. Neither the works of the Jewish law, nor of any other law, could justify any man.

17. But if, while we seek to be justified. If, while we acknowledge that we must be justified by faith in Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, enjoining the necessity of fulfilling the law, which is impossible, we thus constitute ourselves sinners. Is therefore Christ the minister of sin?—Christ, who has taught us to renounce the law, and expect justification through His death? God forbid that we should either act so or think so.

18. For if I build again the things which I destroyed. If I act like a Jew and enjoin the observance of the law on the Gentiles, which I have repeatedly asserted and proved to be abolished by the death of Christ, then I "build up what I destroyed" and thus make myself a transgressor by not observing the law in that way in which I appear to enjoin the observance of it upon others.

19. For I through the law am dead to the law. In consequence of properly considering the nature and requisitions of the law, I am dead to all hope and expectation of help or salvation from the law, and have been obliged to take refuge in the gospel of Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) As he was dead to the law, so he was alive unto God through Jesus Christ (v. 20). He is crucified, and yet he lives; the old man is crucified, but the new man is living. Sin is mortified, and grace quickened. I live, and yet not I. He has the comforts and the triumphs of grace; and yet that grace is not from himself, but from another. He is crucified with Christ, and yet Christ lives in him. He is interested in the death of Christ, so as to die unto sin; and yet interested in the life of Christ, so as to live unto God.

He lives in the flesh, and yet lives by faith; to outward appearance he lives as other people do, yet he has a higher and nobler principle that supports him, that of faith in Christ. Those who have true faith live by that faith.

Lastly, By the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ, without the works of the law, he avoided two great difficulties. 1. He did not frustrate the grace of God. If it be of works, it is no more of grace. 2. He did not frustrate the death of Christ; for, if we look for salvation by the law of Moses, then we render the death of Christ needless.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

II Cor. 5:15; I Pet. 4:1, 2). 20. I am crucified—lit., "I have been crucified with Christ." This more particularizes the foregoing. "I am dead" (vs. 19; Phil. 3:10). nevertheless I live; yet not I—Greek, "nevertheless I live, no longer (indeed) I." Though crucified I live; (and this) no longer that old man such as I once was (cf. Rom. 7:17). No longer Saul the Jew (ch. 5:24; Col. 3:11, but "another man"; cf. I Sam. 10:6). ELLICOTT and others translate, "And it is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." But the plain antithesis between "crucified" and "live," requires the translation, "nevertheless." the life which I now live—as contrasted with my life before conversion. in the flesh—My life seems to be a mere animal life "in the flesh," but this is not my true life; "it is but the mask of life under which lives another, viz., Christ, who is my true life" [LUTHER]. I live by the faith . . .—Greek, "IN faith (viz.), that of (i.e., which rests on) the Son of God." "In faith," answers by contrast to "in the flesh." Faith, not the flesh, is the real element in which I live. The phrase, "the Son of God," reminds us that His Divine Sonship is the source of His life-giving power. loved me—His eternal gratuitous love is the link that unites me to the Son of God, and His "giving Himself for me," is the strongest proof of that love. 21. I do not frustrate the grace of God—I do not make it void, as thou, Peter, art doing by Judaizing. for—justifying the strong expression "frustrate," or "make void." is dead in vain—Greek, "Christ died needlessly," or "without just cause." Christ's having died, shows that the law has no power to justify us; for if the law can justify or make us righteous, the death of Christ is superfluous [CHRYSOSTOM].

ADAM CLARKE

20. I am crucified with Christ. The death of Christ on the Cross has showed me that there is no hope of salvation by the law; I am therefore as truly dead to all expectation of justification by the law as Christ was dead when He gave up the ghost upon the Cross. Yet not I. It is not of my natural life I speak, nor of any spiritual things which I myself have procured; but Christ liveth in me.

But this life I have by the faith of the Son of God—by believing on Christ as a Sacrifice for sin; for he loved me, and because He did so He gave himself for me—made himself a Sacrifice unto death, that I might be saved from the bitter pains of death eternal.

21. I do not frustrate. I do not "contemn, despise, or render useless" the grace of God—the doctrine of Christ crucified, which I must do if I preach the necessity of observing the law. For if righteousness. If "justification" and salvation come by an observance of the law, then Christ is dead in vain. His death is useless if an observance of the law can save us; but no observance of the law can save us, and therefore there was an absolute necessity for the death of Christ.

CHAPTER 3

The apostle is here dealing with those who, having embraced the faith of Christ, still continued to seek for justification by the works of the law.

He reproves them, v. 1. He asks, Who hath bewitched you? They did not adhere to the gospel way of justification, wherein they had been taught. It is not enough to know the truth, and to say we believe it, but we must obey it too. Several things proved the folly of these Christians.

1. Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth as crucified among them; they had had the doctrine of the cross preached to them, and the sacrament of the Lord's supper administered among them, in both which Christ crucified had been set before them.

2. He appeals to the experiences they had had of the working of the Spirit upon their souls (v. 2). He desires to know how they came by these gifts and graces: Was it by the works of the law? Or was it by the hearing of faith. The latter, if they would say the truth, they were obliged to own.

3. He calls upon them to consider their past and present conduct (v. 3, 4). They had begun well; but now they were turning to the law, and expected to be advanced to higher degrees of perfection by adding the observance of it to faith in Christ, in order to their justification. This, instead of being an improvement upon the gospel, was really a perversion of it; they were so far from being more perfect Christians that they were more in danger of becoming no Christians at all.

VSS. 1-29. REPROOF OF THE GALATIANS FOR ABANDONING FAITH FOR LEGALISM. JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH VINDICATED: THE LAW SHOWN TO BE SUBSEQUENT TO THE PROMISE: BELIEVERS ARE THE SPIRITUAL SEED OF ABRAHAM, WHO WAS JUSTIFIED BY FAITH. THE LAW WAS OUR SCHOOLMASTER TO BRING US TO CHRIST, THAT WE MIGHT BECOME CHILDREN OF GOD BY FAITH. 1. that ye should not obey the truth—omitted in the oldest MSS. bewitched—fascinated you so that you have lost your wits. THEMISTIUS says the Galatians were naturally very acute in intellect. Hence, Paul wonders they could be so misled in this case. you—emphatical. "YOU, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been graphically set forth (lit., in writing, viz., by vivid portraiture in preaching) among you, crucified" (so the sense and Greek order require rather than English Version). As Christ was "crucified," so ye ought to have been by faith "crucified with Christ," and so "dead to the law" (ch. 2:19, 20). Reference to the "eyes" is appropriate, as fascination was supposed to be exercised through the eyes. The sight of Christ crucified ought to have been enough to counteract all fascination. 2. "Was it by the works of the law that ye received the Spirit (manifested by outward miracles, vs. 5; Mark 16:17; Heb. 2:4; and by spiritual graces, vs. 14; Gal. 4:5, 6; Eph. 1:13), or by the hearing of faith?" The "only" implies, "I desire, omitting other arguments, to rest the question on this alone"; I who was your teacher, desire now to "learn" this one thing from you. The epithet "Holy" is not prefixed to "Spirit" because that epithet is a joyous one, whereas this Epistle is stern and reproving [BENGEL]. hearing of faith—Faith consists not in working, but in receiving (Rom. 10:16, 17). 3. begun—the Christian life (Phil. 1:6). in the Spirit—Not merely was Christ crucified "graphically set forth" in my preaching, but also "the Spirit" confirmed the word preached, by imparting His spiritual gifts. "Having thus begun" with the receiving His spiritual gifts, "are ye now being made perfect" (so the Greek), i.e., are ye seeking to be made perfect with fleshly ordinances of the law? [ESTIUS.] Cf. Romans 2:28; Philippians 3:3; Hebrews 9:10. Having begun in the Spirit, i.e., the Holy Spirit ruling your spiritual life as its "essence and active principle" [ELLICOTT], in contrast to "the flesh," the element in which the law works [ALFORD]. Having begun your Christianity in the Spirit, i.e., in the divine life that proceeds from faith, are ye seeking after something higher still (the perfecting of your Christianity) in the sensuous and the earthly, which cannot possibly elevate the inner life of the Spirit, viz., outward ceremonies? [NEANDER.] No doubt the Galatians thought that they were going more deeply into the Spirit; for the flesh may be easily mistaken for the Spirit, even by those who have made prog-

1. O foolish Galatians. O infatuated people, you make as little use of reason as those who have none; you have acted in this business as those do who are "fascinated"—they are led blindly and unresistingly on to their own destruction. That ye should not obey the truth. This clause is wanting in some MSS., and in the most important of the Greek and Latin fathers. Of the clause Professor White says, "It should certainly be expunged." There are several various readings on this verse, from which it appears that the verse in the best ancient MSS. and versions was read thus: "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? Before whose eyes Jesus Christ crucified hath been plainly set forth." Among you is wanting in some MSS. and in several of the fathers. The words appear to disturb the sense.

2. Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law. This may refer to the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, which were very common in the apostolic Church. Did you receive these extraordinary gifts in consequence of your circumcision and observing the Mosaic precepts? or was it by the hearing of the gospel, prescribing faith in Christ crucified? It may also refer to the spirit of adoption, and consequently to their sonship.

3. Having begun in the Spirit. Having received a spiritual religion which refined and purified your hearts; and having received the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were endued with various miraculous influences; and the spirit of adoption, by which you were assured of the remission of sins and incorporation with the family of God. Are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Are you seeking to complete that spiritual religion, and to perfect these spiritual gifts, by the carnal rite of circumcision? It appears that by the Spirit, here, not only the Holy Spirit, but His gifts, are to be understood; and by the flesh, by a metonymy, "circumcision" itself.

MATTHEW HENRY

They had not only embraced the Christian doctrine, but suffered for it too; and therefore their folly would be the more aggravated, if now they should desert it.

4. They had ministered the Spirit to them, and wrought miracles among them: and he appeals to them whether they did it by the works of the law or by the hearing of faith. They very well knew that it was not the former, but the latter; and therefore must needs be inexcusable in forsaking a doctrine which had been so signally owned and attested.

Verses 6–18

He largely proves the doctrine which he had reproved them for rejecting.

I. From the example of Abraham's justification (v. 6). His faith fastened upon the promise of God, and upon his believing he was owned and accepted of God as a righteous man.

Those who are of faith are the children of Abraham (v. 7). Abraham was justified by faith, and so are they (v. 8).

God would justify the heathen world in the way of faith; and therefore in Abraham, that is, in the seed of Abraham, which is Christ, not the Jews only, but the Gentiles also, should be blessed as Abraham was, being justified as he was. It was through faith in the promise of God that he was blessed, and it is only in the same way that others obtain this privilege.

II. We cannot be justified but by faith fastening on the gospel, because the law condemns us. If we put ourselves upon trial in that court, we are certainly lost and undone, v. 10.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

ress, unless they continue to maintain a pure faith [BENGEL]. 4. Have ye suffered so many things—viz., persecution from Jews and from unbelieving fellow countrymen, incited by the Jews, at the time of your conversion. in vain—fruitlessly, needlessly, since ye might have avoided them by professing Judaism [GROTIUS]. Or, shall ye, by falling from grace, lose the reward promised for all your sufferings, so that they shall be "in vain" (ch. 4:11; I Cor. 15:2, 17-19, 29-32; II Thess. 1:5-7; II John 8)? yet rather, "If it be really (or 'indeed') in vain" [ELLICOTT]. "If, as it must be, what I have said, 'in vain,' is really the fact" [ALFORD]. I prefer understanding it as a mitigation of the preceding words. I hope better things of you, for I trust you will return from legalism to grace; if so, as I confidently expect, you will not have "suffered so many things in vain" [ESTIUS]. For "God has given you the Spirit and has wrought mighty works among you" (vs. 5; Heb. 10:32-36) [BENGEL]. 5. He . . . that ministereth—or "supplieth," God (II Cor. 9:10). He who supplied and supplies to you the Spirit still, to the present time. These miracles do not prove grace to be in the heart (Mark 9:38, 39). He speaks of these miracles as a matter of unquestioned notoriety among those addressed; an undesigned proof of their genuineness (cf. I Cor. 12). worketh miracles among you—rather, "IN you," as ch. 2:8; Matthew 14:2; Ephesians 2:2; Philippians 2:13; at your conversion and since [ALFORD]. doeth he it by the works of the law—i.e., as a consequence resulting from (so the Greek) the works of the law (cf. vs. 2). This cannot be because the law was then unknown to you when you received those gifts of the Spirit. 6. The answer to the question in vs. 5 is here taken for granted, It was by the hearing of faith: following this up, he says, "Even as Abraham believed . . ." (Gen. 15:4-6; Rom. 4:3). God supplies unto you the Spirit as the result of faith, not works, just as Abraham obtained justification by faith, not by works (vss. 6, 8, 16; ch. 4:22, 26, 28). Where justification is, there the Spirit is, so that if the former comes by faith, the latter must also. 7. they which are of faith—as the source and starting point of their spiritual life. The same phrase is in the Greek of Romans 3:26. the same—these, and these alone, to the exclusion of all the other descendants of Abraham. children—Greek, "sons" (vs. 29). 8. And—Greek, "Moreover." foreseeing—One great excellency of Scripture is, that in it all points liable ever to be controverted, are, with prescient wisdom, decided in the most appropriate language. would justify—rather, "justifieth." Present indicative. It is now, and at all times, God's one way of justification. the heathen—rather, "the Gentiles"; or "the nations," as the same Greek is translated at the end of the verse. God justifieth the Jews, too, "by faith, not by works." But he specifies the Gentiles in particular here, as it was their case that was in question, the Galatians being Gentiles. preached before the gospel—"announced beforehand the Gospel." For the "promise" was substantially the Gospel by anticipation. Cf. John 8:56; Hebrews 4:2. A proof that "the old fathers did not look only for transitory promises" (Article VII, Church of England). Thus the Gospel, in its essential germ, is older than the law though the full development of the former is subsequent to the latter. In thee—not "in thy seed," which is a point not here raised; but strictly "in thee," as followers of thy faith, it having first shown the way to justification before God [ALFORD]; or "in thee," as Father of the promised seed, viz., Christ (vs. 16), who is the Object of faith (Gen. 22:18; Ps. 72:17), and imitating thy faith (see Note, vs. 9). all nations—or as above, "all the Gentiles" (Gen. 12:3; 18:18; 22:18). be blessed—an act of grace, not something earned by works. The blessing of justification was to Abraham by faith in the promise, not by works. So to those who follow Abraham, the father of the faithful, the blessing, i.e., justification, comes purely by faith in Him who is the subject of the promise. 9. they—and they alone. of faith—Note, vs. 7, beginning. with—together with. faithful—implying what it is in which they are "blessed together with him," viz., faith, the prominent feature of his character, and of which the result to all who like him have it, is justification. 10. Confirmation of vs. 9. They who depend on the works of the law cannot share the blessing, for they are under the curse "written," Deuteronomy 27:26, LXX. PERFECT obedience is required by the words, "in all things." CONTINUAL obedience by the word, "continueth." No man renders this obedience (cf. Rom. 3:19, 20). It is observable, Paul quotes Scripture to the Jews who were conversant with it, as in Epistle to the He-

ADAM CLARKE

4. Have ye suffered so many things in vain? Have you received and lost so much good? The verb signifies to "suffer pain or loss" or to "possess and enjoy." Though it is possible that the Galatians had suffered some persecution for the truth of Christ, yet it is as likely that the apostle refers to the benefits which they had received. You have received faith, the pardon of your sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit, and with it many extraordinary gifts and graces. Have you received all these in vain? if . . . yet in vain—if it be credible that you have sacrificed so many excellent benefits for an imaginary good.

5. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit. The apostle means himself; he had been the means of conveying the Holy Spirit to them, and by that Spirit he wrought miracles among them. And he did all this, not as a Jew (for as such he had no power), but he did all as a believer in Christ. The word which we translate ministereth is very emphatic and signifies "leading up the chorus," bringing up one after another, adding grace to grace, benefit to benefit; so that it appears that they had not only some, but many, benefits, God by means of His apostle having greatly enriched them with various spiritual blessings.

6. Abraham believed God. This is quoted from Gen. xv. 6; and Paul produces it, Rom. iv. 3-5. Abraham, while even uncircumcised, believed in God, and his faith was reckoned to him for justification; and Abraham is called the "father of the faithful" or "of believers." If then he was justified by faith long before the law was given, the law is not necessary to salvation. It is remarkable that the Jews themselves maintained that Abraham was saved by faith. Mehilta, in Yalcut Simeoni, p. 1, fol. 69, makes this assertion: "It is evident that Abraham could not obtain an inheritance either in this world or in the world to come but by faith."

8. The scripture, foreseeing. See the notes on Rom. iv. 3-16.

As God intended to justify the heathen through faith, He preached the gospel that contains the grand display of the doctrine of salvation by faith, before, to Abraham, while he was in his heathen state; and thus he is called "the father of believers." Therefore it must refer to them who shall believe the same gospel among the Gentiles, consequently the promise was fulfilled: In thee shall all nations [of the earth] be blessed.

9. They which be of faith. All who believe, as Abraham has believed, are made partakers of Abraham's blessings.

10. As many as are of the works of the law. All that seek salvation by the performance of the works of the law are under the curse, because it is impossible for them to come up to the spiritual meaning and intent of the law; and the law pronounces them cursed that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. Hence every Jew is necessarily under the curse of God's broken law; and every sinner is under the same curse, though he be not a Jew, who does not take refuge in the salvation provided for him by the gospel.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The apostle alleges the express testimony of the Old Testament, v. 11. The just shall live by faith. It is only through faith that persons become righteous, and as such obtain this life and happiness. The law is not of faith, but the language of it is, The man that doeth them shall live in them. It requires perfect obedience as the condition of life, and therefore now can by no means be the rule of our justification.

The condition of life, by the law, is perfect, personal, and perpetual obedience; the language of it is as v. 12. Unless our obedience be universal, and unless it be perpetual too, we fall under the curse of the law. If, as transgressors of the law, we are under the curse of it, it must be a vain thing to look for justification by it. Yet the apostle afterwards acquaints us that there is a way open to our escaping this curse, through faith in Christ (as he says, v. 13). A strange method it was which Christ took to redeem us from the curse of the law; it was by his being himself made a curse for us.

MARTIN LUTHER:

Not only my sins and yours, but the sins of the entire world, past, present, and future, attack Him, try to damn Him, and do in fact damn Him. But because in the same Person, who is the highest, the greatest, and the only sinner, there is also eternal and invincible righteousness, therefore these two converge: the highest, the greatest, and the only sin; and the highest, the greatest, and the only righteousness. Here one of them must yield and be conquered, since they come together and collide with such a powerful impact. Thus the sin of the entire world attacks righteousness with the greatest possible impact and fury. What happens? Righteousness is eternal, immortal, and invincible. Sin, too, is a very powerful and cruel tyrant, dominating and ruling over the whole world, capturing and enslaving all men. In short, sin is a great and powerful god who devours the whole human race, all the learned, holy, powerful, wise, and unlearned men. He, I say, attacks Christ and wants to devour Him as he has devoured all the rest. But he does not see that He is a person of invincible and eternal righteousness. In this duel, therefore, it is necessary for sin to be conquered and killed, and for righteousness to prevail and live. Thus in Christ all sin is conquered, killed, and buried; and righteousness remains the victor and the ruler eternally.

Thus also death, which is the almighty empress of the entire world, killing kings, princes, and all men in general, clashes against life with full force and is about to conquer it and swallow it; and what it attempts, it accomplishes. But because life was immortal, it emerged victorious when it had been conquered, conquering and killing death in turn. The Prince of life, who died, is alive and reigns. Through Christ, therefore, death is conquered and abolished in the whole world, so that now it is nothing but a picture of death. Now that its sting is lost, it can no longer harm believers in Christ, who has become the death of death, as Hosea sings (13:14): "O death, I shall be your death!"

brews, as said or spoken; but to the Gentiles, as written. So Matthew, writing for Jews, quotes it as said, or spoken; Mark and Luke, writing for Gentiles, as written (Matt. 1:22; Mark 1:2; Luke 2: 22, 23) [TOWNSON]. 11. by the law—Greek, "IN the law." Both in and by are included. The syllogism in this verse and vs. 12, is, according to Scripture, "The just shall live by faith." But the law is not of faith, but of doing, or works (i.e., does not make faith, but works, the conditional ground of justifying). Therefore "in," or "by the law, no man is justified before God" (whatever the case may be before men, Rom. 4:2),—not even if he could, which he cannot, keep the law, because the Scripture element and conditional mean of justification is faith. The just shall live by faith—(Rom. 1:17; Hab. 2:4). Not as BENGEL and ALFORD, "He who is just by faith shall live." The Greek supports English Version. Also the contrast is between "live by faith" (viz., as the ground and source of his justification), and "live in them," viz., in his doings or works (vs. 12), as the conditional element wherein he is justified. 12. doeth—Many depended on the law although they did not keep it; but without doing, saith Paul, it is of no use to them (Rom. 2:13, 17, 23; 10: 5). 13. Abrupt exclamation, as he breaks away impatiently from those who would involve us again in the curse of the law, by seeking justification in it, to "Christ," who "has redeemed us from its curse." The "us" refers primarily to the JEWS, to whom the law principally appertained, in contrast to "the Gentiles" (vs. 14; cf. ch. 4:3, 4). But it is not restricted solely to the Jews, as ALFORD thinks; for these are the representative people of the world at large, and their "law" is the embodiment of what God requires of the whole world. The curse of its non-fulfilment affects the Gentiles through the Jews; for the law represents that righteousness which God requires of all, and which, since the Jews failed to fulfil, the Gentiles are equally unable to fulfil. Verse 10, "As many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse," refers plainly, not to the Jews only, but to all, even Gentiles (as the Galatians), who seek justification by the law. The Jews' law represents the universal law which condemned the Gentiles, though with less clear consciousness on their part (Rom. 2). The revelation of God's "wrath" by the law of conscience, in some degree prepared the Gentiles for appreciating redemption through Christ when revealed. The curse had to be removed from off the heathen, too, as well as the Jews, in order that the blessing, through Abraham, might flow to them. Accordingly, the "we," in "that we might receive the promise of the Spirit," plainly refers to both Jews and Gentiles. redeemed us—bought us off from our former bondage (ch. 4:5), and "from the curse" under which all lie who trust to the law and the works of the law for justification. The Gentile Galatians, by putting themselves under the law, were involving themselves in the curse from which Christ has redeemed the Jews primarily, and through them the Gentiles. The ransom price He paid was His own precious blood (I Pet. 1:18, 19; cf. Matt. 20:28; Acts 20:28; I Cor. 6:20; 7:23; I Tim. 2:6; II Peter 2:1; Rev. 5:9). being made—Greek, "having become." a curse for us—Having become what we were, in our behalf, "a curse," that we might cease to be a curse. Not merely accursed (in the concrete), but a curse in the abstract, bearing the universal curse of the whole human race. So II Corinthians 5:21, "Sin for us," not sinful, but bearing the whole sin of our race, regarded as one vast aggregate of sin. See Note there. "Anathema" means "set apart to God," to His glory, but to the person's own destruction. "Curse," an execration. written—Deuteronomy 21:23. Christ's bearing the particular curse of hanging on the tree, is a sample of the general curse which He representatively bore. Not that the Jews put to death malefactors by hanging; but after having put them to death otherwise, in order to brand them with peculiar ignominy, they hung the bodies on a tree, and such malefactors were accursed by the law (cf. Acts 5:30; 10:39). God's providence ordered it so that to fulfil the prophecy of the curse and other prophecies, Jesus should be crucified, and so hang on the tree, though that death was not a Jewish mode of execution. The Jews accordingly, in contempt, call Him "the hanged one," Tolvi, and Christians, "worshippers of the hanged one"; and make it their great objection that He died the accursed death [TRYPHO, in Justin Martyr, p. 249; I Pet. 2:24]. Hung between heaven and earth as though unworthy of either! 14. The intent of "Christ becoming a curse for us"; "To the end that upon the Gentiles the blessing of Abraham (i.e., promised to

11. But that no man is justified by the law, by the observance of the law, suppose he had even continued in all things that are written in it to do them, is evident;

for the Prophet Habakkuk, chap. ii. 4, has declared, under the direct influence of the Spirit of God, The just shall live by faith; or, "He who is just by faith shall live." Therefore this justification comes not by works, or the observance of the law, but by faith.

12. And the law is not of faith. It promises no forgiveness to believing, but requires obedience. It is not, What do you believe? but, What have you done? The man that doeth them perfectly at all times, and in all places, he shall live in them; but if in any case he fails, he forfeits his life.

13. Christ hath redeemed us. "Hath bought us with a price"; viz., His blood, or life.

Being made a curse for us. Being made an Atonement for our sins; for whatever was offered as an atonement for sin was considered as bearing the punishment due to sin, and the person who suffered for transgression was considered as bearing the curse in his body. Therefore in the same day in which a criminal was executed it was ordered that his body should be buried, that the land might not be polluted; because he that was hanged, which was the case with every heinous culprit, was considered accursed of God, Deut. xxi. 22-23.

The design of this was that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ—that all who believed on Christ might become heirs of Abraham's blessing, and particularly of that great promise of the Spirit. Hence it appeared that it was not by putting themselves under the law, but by faith in Christ, that they became the people of God and heirs of the promise.

IV. The apostle urges the stability of the covenant which God made with Abraham, which was not disannulled by the giving of the law to Moses, v. 15, &c. Faith had the precedence of the law, for Abraham was justified by faith. God entered into covenant with Abraham (v. 8). The original word signifies both a covenant and a testament.

If it should be said that a testament may be defeated for want of persons to claim the benefit of it (v. 16), he shows that there is no danger of that. Abraham is dead, and the prophets are dead, but the covenant is made with Abraham and his seed.

Says the apostle, "It points at a single person—that seed is Christ." So that the covenant is still in force; for Christ abideth for ever.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Abraham, viz., justification by faith) might come in Christ Jesus" (cf. vs. 8). that we might receive the promise of the Spirit—the promised Spirit (Joel 2: 28, 29; Luke 24:49). This clause follows not the clause immediately preceding (for our receiving the Spirit is not the result of the blessing of Abraham coming on the Gentiles), but "Christ hath redeemed us . . ." through faith—not by works. Here he resumes the thought in vs. 2. "The Spirit from without, kindles within us some spark of faith whereby we lay hold of Christ, and even of the Spirit Himself, that He may dwell within us" [FLACIUS]. 15. I speak after the manner of men—I take an illustration from a merely human transaction of everyday occurrence. but a man's covenant—whose purpose it is far less important to maintain. if it be confirmed—when once it hath been ratified. no man disannulleth—"none setteth aside," not even the author himself, much less any second party. None does so who acts in common equity. Much less would the righteous God do so. The law is here, by personification, regarded as a second person, distinct from, and subsequent to, the promise of God. The promise is everlasting, and more peculiarly belongs to God. The law is regarded as something extraneous, afterwards introduced, exceptional and temporary (vss. 17-19, 21-24). addeth—None addeth new conditions "making" the covenant "of none effect" (vs. 17). So legal Judaism could make no alteration in the fundamental relation between God and man, already established by the promises to Abraham; it could not add as a new condition the observance of the law, in which case the fulfilment of the promise would be attached to a condition impossible for man to perform. The "covenant" here is one of free grace, a promise afterwards carried into effect in the Gospel. 16. This verse is parenthetical. The covenant of promise was not "spoken" (so Greek for "made") to Abraham alone, but "to Abraham and his seed"; to the latter especially; and this means Christ (and that which is inseparable from Him, the literal Israel, and the spiritual, His body, the Church). Christ not having come when the law was given, the covenant could not have been then fulfilled, but awaited the coming of Him, the Seed, to whom it was spoken. promises—plural, because the same promise was often repeated (Gen. 12:3, 7; 15:5, 18; 17:7; 22:18), and because it involved many things; earthly blessings to the literal children of Abraham in Canaan, and spiritual and heavenly blessings to his spiritual children; but both promised to Christ, "the Seed" and representative Head of the literal and spiritual Israel alike. In the spiritual seed there is no distinction of Jew or Greek; but to the literal seed, the promises still in part remain to be fulfilled (Rom. 11:26). The covenant was not made with "many" seeds (which if there had been, a pretext might exist for supposing there was one seed before the law, another under the law; and that those sprung from one seed, say the Jewish, are admitted on different terms, and with a higher degree of acceptability, than those sprung from the Gentile seed), but with the one seed; therefore, the promise that in Him "all the families of the earth shall be blessed" (Gen. 12:3), joins in this one Seed, Christ, Jew and Gentile, as fellow heirs on the same terms of acceptability, viz., by grace through faith (Rom. 4:13); not to some by promise, to others by the law, but to all alike, circumcised and uncircumcised, constituting but one seed in Christ (Rom. 4:16). The law, on the other hand, contemplates the Jews and Gentiles as distinct seeds. God makes a covenant, but it is one of promise; whereas the law is a covenant of works. Whereas the law brings in a mediator, a third party (vss. 19, 20), God makes His covenant of promise with the one seed, Christ (Gen. 17:7), and embraces others only as they are identified with, and represented by, Christ. one . . . Christ—not in the exclusive sense, the man Christ Jesus, but "Christ" (Jesus is not added, which would limit the meaning), including His people who are part of Himself, the Second Adam, and Head of redeemed humanity. Verses 28, 29 prove this, "Ye are all ONE in Christ Jesus" (Jesus is added here as the person is indicated). "And if ye be Christ's, ye are Abraham's SEED, heirs according to the promise." 17. this I say—"this is what I mean," by what I said in vs. 15. confirmed . . . of God—"ratified by God" (vs. 15). in Christ—rather, "unto Christ" (cf. vs. 16). However, Vulgate and the old Italian versions translate as English Version. But the oldest MSS. omit the words altogether. the law which was—Greek, "which came into existence 430 years after" (Exod. 12:40, 41). He does not, as in the case of "the covenant," add "enacted by God" (John

14. That the blessing of Abraham. That is, justification or the pardon of sin, with all other blessings consequent on it, such as peace with God, spiritual life, and eternal glory. Might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ. So we find that He was made a curse for us that the blessings promised to Abraham might be given to them who believe on Him, as having been made a curse; i.e., an expiatory Victim for them. The promise of the Spirit. The spirit of adoption, sonship with God; and Spirit of God to attest that sonship. All this was through faith. Hence, from the beginning God had purposed that salvation should be through faith, and never expected that any soul of man should be justified by the works of the law; and gave that law only that the exceeding sinfulness of sin might appear, and that man might be prepared to welcome the gospel, which proclaimed salvation to a lost world through the atoning passion and death of Christ.

15. I speak after the manner of men. I am about to produce an example taken from civil transactions. If it be confirmed—if an agreement or bond be signed, sealed, and witnessed. No man disannulleth. It stands under the protection of the civil law, and nothing can be legally erased or added.

16. Now to Abraham and his seed. The promise of salvation by faith was made to Abraham and his posterity.

He saith not, And to seeds. It was one particular kind of posterity which was intended: but as of one . . . which is Christ; i.e., to the spiritual Head, and all believers in Him, who are children of Abraham, because they are believers, v. 7. But why does the apostle say, Not of seeds, as of many? To this it is answered that Abraham possessed in his family two seeds: one natural, viz., the members of his own household; and the other spiritual, those who were like himself because of their faith. The promises were not of a temporal nature. Had they been so, they would have belonged to his natural seed. But they did not; therefore they must have belonged to the spiritual posterity.

17. Confirmed before of God in Christ. I.e., the promise of justification made to believers in Christ Jesus, who are the spiritual seed of Christ, as they are children of Abraham from the similitude of their faith. Abraham believed in God and it was reckoned to him for justification; the Gentiles believed in Christ and received justification. Four hundred and thirty

MARTIN LUTHER:

A great emphasis, or rather irony, is concealed in Paul's explicit reference to four hundred and thirty years. It is as though he were saying: "If you understand arithmetic, count on your fingers what the interval is between the giving of the promise and the Law. Certainly there was a promise a long time ago, even while there was no Law (that is, for four hundred and thirty years)." Therefore this is a rather vigorous argument based on a specific interval.—Luther's Works

The subsequent law could not disannul the previous covenant or promise (v. 18). If the inheritance was given to Abraham by promise, we may be sure that God would not retract that promise; for he is not a man that he should repent.

Verses 19–29

Why did God give the law by Moses?

I. The law was added because of transgressions, v. 19. The Israelites were sinners as well as others, and therefore the law was given to convince them of their sin. And it was also intended to restrain them from the commission of sin.

The law was given for this purpose till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. The law was added because of transgressions, till this fulness of time should come. But when a fuller discovery of divine grace in the promise was made, then the law, as given by Moses, was to cease. And though the law, considered as the law of nature, is always in force, yet we are now no longer under the bondage and terror of that legal covenant. The law then was only to lead men to see their need of the promise, by showing them the sinfulness of sin, and to point them to Christ. Whereas the promise was given immediately by God himself, the law was given by the ministry of angels, and the hand of a mediator.

Hence it appeared that the law could not be designed to set aside the promise; for (v. 20), God is one, and therefore it is not to be supposed that he should make void a promise which he had long before made to Abraham. This would not have been consistent with his truth and faithfulness. Moses was only a mediator, and therefore the law that was given by him could not affect the promise.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

1:17). The dispensation of "the promise" began with the call of Abraham from Ur into Canaan, and ended on the last night of his grandson Jacob's sojourn in Canaan, the land of promise. The dispensation of the law, which engenders bondage, was beginning to draw on from the time of his entrance into Egypt, the land of bondage. It was to Christ in him, as in his grandfather Abraham, and his father Isaac, not to him or them as persons, the promise was spoken. On the day following the last repetition of the promise orally (Gen. 46: 1-6), at Beersheba, Israel passed into Egypt. It is from the end, not from the beginning of the dispensation of promise, that the interval of 430 years between it and the law is to be counted. At Beersheba, after the covenant with Abimelech, Abraham called on the everlasting God, and the well was confirmed to him and his seed as an everlasting possession. Here God appeared to Isaac. Here Jacob received the promise of the blessing, for which God had called Abraham out of Ur, repeated for the last time, on the last night of his sojourn in the land of promise. cannot—Greek, "doth not disannul." make . . . of none effect—The promise would become so, if the power of conferring the inheritance be transferred from it to the law (Rom. 4:14). 18. the inheritance—all the blessings to be inherited by Abraham's literal and spiritual children, according to the promise made to him and to his Seed, Christ, justification and glorification (ch. 4:7; Rom. 8:17; I Cor. 6:9). but God . . .—The Greek order requires rather, "But to Abraham it was by promise that God hath given it." The conclusion is, Therefore the inheritance is not of, or from, the law (Rom. 4:14). 19. "Wherefore then serveth the law?" as it is of no avail for justification, is it either useless, or contrary to the covenant of God? [CALVIN.] added—to the original covenant of promise. This is not inconsistent with vs. 15, "No man addeth thereto"; for there the kind of addition meant, and therefore denied, is one that would add new conditions, inconsistent with the grace of the covenant of promise. The law, though misunderstood by the Judaizers as doing so, was really added for a different purpose, viz., "because of (or as the Greek, 'for the sake of') the transgressions," i.e., to bring out into clearer view the transgressions of it (Rom. 7:7-9); to make men more fully conscious of their sins, by being perceived as transgressions of the law, and so to make them long for the promised Saviour. This accords with vss. 23, 24; Romans 4:15. The meaning can hardly be "to check transgressions," for the law rather stimulates the corrupt heart to disobey it (Rom. 5:20; 7:13). till the seed—during the period up to the time when the seed came. The law was a preparatory dispensation for the Jewish nation (Rom. 5:20; Greek, "the law came in additionally and incidentally"), intervening between the promise and its fulfilment in Christ. come—(Cf. "faith came," vs. 23). the promise—(Rom. 4:21). ordained—Greek, "constituted" or "disposed." by angels—as the instrumental enactors of the law [ALFORD] God delegated the law to angels as something rather alien to Him and severe (Acts 7:53; Heb. 2:2, 3; cf. Deut. 33:2, "He came with ten thousands of saints," i.e., angels, Ps. 68:17). He reserved "the promise" to Himself and dispensed it according to His own goodness. in the hand of a mediator—viz., Moses. Deuteronomy 5:5, "I stood between the Lord and you": the very definition of a mediator. Hence the phrase often recurs, "By the hand of Moses." In the giving of the law, the "angels" were representatives of God; Moses, as mediator, represented the people. 20. "Now a mediator cannot be of one (but must be of two parties whom he mediates between); but God is one" (not two: owing to His essential unity not admitting of an intervening party between Him and those to be blessed; but as the ONE Sovereign, His own representative, giving the blessing directly by promise to Abraham, and, in its fulfilment, to Christ, "the Seed," without new condition, and without a mediator such as the law had). The conclusion understood is, Therefore a mediator cannot appertain to God; and consequently, the law, with its inseparable appendage of a mediator, cannot be the normal way of dealing of God, the one, and unchangeable God, who dealt with Abraham by direct promise, as a sovereign, not as one forming a compact with another party, with conditions and a mediator attached thereto. God would bring man into immediate communion with Him, and not have man separated from Him by a mediator that keeps back from access, as Moses and the legal priesthood did (Exod. 19:12, 13, 17, 21-24; Heb. 12:19-24). The law that thus interposed a mediator and conditions between man years after. God made a covenant with Abraham that the Messiah should spring from his posterity. This covenant stated that justification should be obtained by faith in the Messiah. The law was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham; therefore the law could not possibly annul the Abrahamic covenant.

19. Wherefore then serveth the law? If the law does not annul the Abrahamic covenant, and cannot confer salvation on its votaries, why did God give it? This was a very natural objection, and must arise in the mind of any Jew who had paid attention to the apostle's reasoning. It was added because of transgressions. It was given that we might know our sinfulness, and the need we stood in of the mercy of God.

Till the seed should come. The law was to be in force till the advent of the Messiah. After that it was to cease.

It was ordained by angels. The ministry of angels was certainly used in giving the law; see Ps. lxviii. 17; Acts vii. 53; and Heb. ii. 2; but they were only instruments for transmitting. Moses was the mediator between God and the people, Deut. v. 5.

20. A mediator is not a mediator of one. As a mediator signifies a "middle person," there must necessarily be two parties between whom he stands and acts in reference to both, as he is supposed to have the interests of both equally at heart. Though Moses was the mediator between God and the Israelites, yet he was not the mediator between God and that one seed which was to come; viz., the Gentiles who should believe in Christ. But God is one. He is the one God, who is the Father of the spirits of all flesh, the God of the Gentiles as well a the God of the Jews. That this is Paul's meaning is evident from his use of the same words in other places, 1 Tim. ii. 5: "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and man"; that is, There is only one God and one Mediator for the whole human race. The sense of the whole is: Moses was the mediator of one part of Abraham's seed, viz., the Israelites; but of the other seed, the Gentiles, he was certainly not the mediator; for the Mediator of that seed,

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The law was given to convince men of the necessity of a Saviour (v. 21). The law is by no means inconsistent with the promise. The design of it is to discover men's transgressions, and to show them the need they have of a better righteousness than that of the law.

The scripture hath concluded all under sin (v. 22). The law discovered their wounds, but could not afford them a remedy.

The great design of it was that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to those that believe, that being convinced of the insufficiency of the law to effect a righteousness for them, they might be persuaded to believe on Christ, and so obtain the benefit of the promise.

III. The law was designed for a schoolmaster, to bring men to Christ, v. 24. They were shut up, held under the terror and discipline of it, as prisoners in a state of confinement. Hereby they might be disposed more readily to accept Christ when he came into the world. It was proper to convince them of their lost and undone condition in themselves, and to let them see the weakness and insufficiency of their own righteousness. And thus it was their schoolmaster, to instruct and govern them in their state of minority, their servant, to lead and conduct them to Christ (as children were wont to be led to school by those servants who had the care of them); that they might be more fully instructed by him as their schoolmaster, in the true way of justification and salvation, which is only by faith in him.

The apostle adds (v. 25) after faith has come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster—we have no such need of the law to direct us to him as there was then.

and God, was an exceptional state limited to the Jews, and parenthetically preparatory to the Gospel, God's normal mode of dealing, as He dealt with Abraham, viz., face to face directly; by promise and grace, and not conditions; to all nations united by faith in the one seed (Eph. 2:14, 16, 18), and not to one people to the exclusion and severance from the ONE common Father, of all other nations.

21. "Is the law (which involves a mediator) against the promises of God (which are without a mediator, and rest on God alone and immediately)? God forbid." life—The law, as an externally prescribed rule, can never internally impart spiritual life to men naturally dead in sin, and change the disposition. If the law had been a law capable of giving life, "verily (in very reality, and not in the mere fancy of legalists) righteousness would have been by the law" (for where life is, there righteousness, its condition, must also be). But the law does not pretend to give life, and therefore not righteousness; so there is no opposition between the law and the promise. Righteousness can only come through the promise to Abraham, and through its fulfilment in the Gospel of grace. 22. But—as the law cannot give life or righteousness [ALFORD]. Or the "But" means, So far is righteousness from being of the law, that the knowledge of sin is rather what comes of the law [BENGEL]. the scripture—which began to be written after the time of the promise, at the time when the law was given. The written letter was needed so as PERMANENTLY to convict man of disobedience to God's command. Therefore he says, "the Scripture," not the "Law." Cf. vs. 8, "Scripture," for "the God of the Scripture." concluded—"shut up," under condemnation, as in a prison. Cf. Isaiah 24: 22, "As prisoners gathered in the pit and shut up in the prison." Beautifully contrasted with "the liberty wherewith Christ makes free," which follows, vss. 7, 9, 25, 26; ch. 5:1; Isaiah 61:1. all—Greek neuter, "the universe of things": the whole world, man, and all that appertains to him. under sin—(Rom. 3:9, 19; 11:32). the promise—the inheritance promised (vs. 18). by faith of Jesus Christ—i.e., which is by faith in Jesus Christ. might be given—The emphasis is on "given": that it might be a free gift; not something earned by the works of the law (Rom. 6:23). to them that believe—to them that have "the faith of (in) Jesus Christ" just spoken of. 23. faith—viz., that just mentioned (vs. 22), of which Christ is the object. kept—Greek, "kept in ward": the effect of the "shutting up" (vs. 22; ch. 4:2; Rom. 7:6). unto—"with a view to the faith . . . ." We were, in a manner, morally forced to it, so that there remained to us no refuge but faith. Cf. the phrase, Psalm 78:50; Margin, 31:8. which should afterwards . . .—"which was afterwards to be revealed." 24. "So that the law hath been (i.e., hath turned out to be) our schoolmaster (or "tutor," lit., "pedagogue": this term, among the Greeks, meant a faithful servant entrusted with the care of the boy from childhood to puberty, to keep him from evil, physical and moral, and accompany him to his amusements and studies) to guide us unto Christ," with whom we are no longer "shut up" in bondage, but are freemen. "Children" (lit., infants) need such tutoring (ch. 4:3). might be—rather, "that we may be justified by faith"; which we could not be till Christ, the object of faith, had come. Meanwhile the law, by outwardly checking the sinful propensity which was constantly giving fresh proof of its refractoriness—as thus the consciousness of the power of the sinful principle became more vivid, and hence the sense of need both of forgiveness of sin and freedom from its bondage was awakened—the law became a "schoolmaster to guide us unto Christ" [NEANDER]. The moral law shows us what we ought to do, and so we learn our inability to do it. In the ceremonial law we seek, by animal sacrifices, to answer for our not having done it, but find dead victims no satisfaction for the sins of living men, and that outward purifying will not cleanse the soul; and that therefore we need an infinitely better Sacrifice, the antitype of all the legal sacrifices. Thus delivered up to the judicial law, we see how awful is the doom we deserve: thus the law at last leads us to Christ, with whom we find righteousness and peace. "Sin, sin! is the word heard again and again in the Old Testament. Had it not there for centuries rung in the ear, and fastened on the conscience, the joyful sound, 'grace for grace,' would not have been the watchword of the New Testament. This was the end of the whole system of sacrifices" [THOLUCK]. 25. "But now that faith is come . . . ." Moses the lawgiver cannot bring us into the heavenly Canaan though he can bring us to the border of it. At that point he is according to the promise of God and covenant made with Abraham, is Christ.

21. Is the law then against the promises of God? Is it possible that the intervention of the law, in reference to one part of the Abrahamic seed, should annul the promise made to the other? It is impossible. For if there had been a law. If any law or "rule" of life could have been found out that would have given life—saved sinners from death, and made them truly happy—then righteousness, "justification," should have been by the law.

22. But the scripture hath concluded. All the writings of the prophets have uniformly declared that men are all sinners, and the law declares the same by the continual sacrifices which it prescribes. All therefore have sinned and come short of the glory of God; and being tried and found guilty, "the Scripture hath shut them up"—put them in prison, and locked them up, till the time should come in which the sentence of the law should be executed upon them.

23. But before faith came. Before the gospel was published. We were kept under the law, shut up. "We were kept as in a stronghold, locked up, unto the faith," the religion of the Lord Jesus, which should afterwards be revealed.

24. The law was our schoolmaster. "The law was our pedagogue into Christ." The pedagogue is not the schoolmaster, but the servant who had the care of the children to lead them to and bring them back from school, and had the care of them out of school hours. Thus the law did not teach us the living, saving knowledge; but by its rites and ceremonies, and especially by its sacrifices, it directed us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. This is a beautiful metaphor and highly illustrative of the apostle's doctrine.

25. But after that faith is come. When Christ was manifested in the flesh and the gospel was preached, we were no longer under the pedagogue; we came to Christ, learned of Him, be-

1. The goodness of God to his people of old, in giving the law to them. It furnished them with sufficient helps both to direct them in their duty to God and to encourage their hopes in him.

2. The great fault and folly of the Jews, in mistaking the design of the law. They expected to be justified by the works of it, whereas it was never designed to be the rule of their justification, but only a means of convincing them of their guilt and of their need of a Saviour.

3. The great advantage of the gospel state above the legal. We are not now treated as children in a state of minority, but as sons grown up to a full age.

(1) We are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, v. 26. The great privilege which real Christians enjoy under the gospel: They are no longer accounted servants, but sons. They are admitted into the number, and have a right to all the privileges of his children. How they come to obtain this privilege by faith in Christ Jesus. This faith in Christ, whereby they became the children of God (v. 27), was what they professed in baptism. Having thus become the members of Christ, they were owned as the children of God. Baptism is now the solemn rite of our admission into the Christian church. Those who are baptized into Christ have put on Christ; under the gospel baptism comes in the room of circumcision. Being baptized into Christ, we are baptized into his death, that as he died and rose again, so we should die unto sin, and walk in newness of life; it would be of great advantage to us did we oftener remember this.

(2) This privilege of being the children of God is now enjoyed in common by all real Christians. The law indeed made a difference between Jew and Greek, between bond and free, and between male and female. But it is not so now; they all stand on the same level, and are all one in Christ Jesus. All who sincerely believe on Christ, of what nation, or sex, or condition, soever they be, are accepted of him, and become the children of God through faith in him.

(3) Being Christ's, we are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. "You therefore become the true seed of Abraham, and as such are heirs according to the promise, and consequently are entitled to the great blessings and privileges of it." They were very unreasonable and unwise, in hearkening to those who at once endeavoured to deprive them of the truth and liberty of the gospel.

The law leads us to Christ, and there its office ceases. 26. children—Greek, "sons." by—Greek, "through faith." "Ye all" (Jews and Gentiles alike) are no longer children requiring a tutor, but SONS emancipated and walking at liberty. 27. baptized into Christ—(Rom. 6:3). have put on Christ—Ye did, in that very act of being baptized into Christ, put on, or clothe yourselves with, Christ: so the Greek expresses. Christ is to you the toga virilis (the Roman garment of the full-grown man, assumed when ceasing to be a child) [BENGEL]. GATAKER defines a Christian, "One who has put on Christ." The argument is, By baptism ye have put on Christ; and therefore, He being the Son of God, ye become sons by adoption, by virtue of His Sonship by generation. This proves that baptism, where it answers to its ideal, is not a mere empty sign, but a means of spiritual transference from the state of legal condemnation to that of living union with Christ, and of sonship through Him in relation to God (Rom. 13: 14). Christ alone can, by baptizing with His Spirit, make the inward grace correspond to the outward sign. But as He promises the blessing in the faithful use of the means, the Church has rightly presumed, in charity, that such is the case, nothing appearing to the contrary. 28. There is in this sonship by faith in Christ, no class privileged above another, as the Jews under the law had been above the Gentiles (Rom. 10:12; I Cor. 12:13; Col. 3:11). bond nor free—Christ alike belongs to both by faith; whence he puts "bond" before "free." Cf. Notes, I Cor. 7:21, 22; Eph. 6:8. neither male nor female—rather, as Greek, "there is not male and female." There is no distinction into male and female. Difference of sex makes no difference in Christian privileges. But under the law the male sex had great privileges. Males alone had in their body circumcision, the sign of the covenant (contrast baptism applied to male and female alike); they alone were capable of being kings and priests, whereas all of either sex are now "kings and priests unto God" (Rev. 1:6); they had prior right to inheritances. In the resurrection the relation of the sexes shall cease (Luke 20:35). one—Greek, "one man"; masculine, not neuter, viz., "one new man" in Christ (Eph. 2:15). 29. and heirs—The oldest MSS. omit "and." Christ is "Abraham's seed" (vs. 16): ye are "one in Christ" (vs. 28), and one with Christ, as having "put on Christ" (vs. 27); therefore YE are "Abraham's seed," which is tantamount to saying (whence the "and" is omitted), ye are "heirs according to the promise" (not "by the law," vs. 18); for it was to Abraham's seed that the inheritance was promised (vs. 16). Thus he arrives at the same truth which he set out with (vs. 7). But one new "seed" of a righteous succession could be found. One single faultless grain of human nature was found by God Himself, the source of a new and imperishable seed: "the seed" (Ps. 22:30) who receive from Him a new nature and name (Gen. 3:15; Isa. 53:10, 11; John 12:24). In Him the lineal descent from David becomes extinct. He died without posterity. But He lives and shall reign on David's throne. No one has a legal claim to sit upon it but Himself, He being the only living direct representative (Ezek. 21:27). His spiritual seed derive their birth from the travail of His soul, being born again of His word, which is the incorruptible seed (John 1:12; Rom. 9:8; I Peter 1:23).

came wise unto salvation. It is worthy of remark that "the law" is used by Paul to signify, not only the law properly so called, but the whole of the Mosaic economy; so "the faith" is used by him to express, not merely the act of believing in Christ, but the whole of the gospel.

26. For ye, who have believed the gospel, are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. But no man is a child of God by circumcision nor by any observance of the Mosaic law.

27. As many of you as have been baptized into Christ. All of you who have believed in Christ as the promised Messiah, and received baptism as a public proof that you had received Christ as your Lord and Saviour, have put on Christ—have received His Spirit, entered into His interests, and copied His manners. To put on or to "be clothed with" one is to assume the person and character of that one; and they who do so are bound to act his part, and to sustain the character which they have assumed. The profession of Christianity is an assumption of the character of Christ. He has left us an example that we should follow His steps; and we should, as Christians, have that mind in us which was in Him.

28. There is neither Jew nor Greek. Greek is put here for "heathen." Under the gospel all distinctions are done away, as either helping or hindering; all are equally welcome to Christ, and all have an equal need of Him. All persons of all sects and conditions and sexes who believe in Him become one family through Him. They are one body, of which He is the Head. Neither male nor female. With great reason the apostle introduces this. Between the privileges of men and women there was a great disparity among the Jews. A man might shave his head and rend his clothes in the time of mourning; a woman was not permitted to do so. A man might betroth his daughter; a woman had no such power. A man might sell his daughter; a woman could not. In many cases women were treated more like children than adults. Under the blessed spirit of Christianity, they have equal rights, equal privileges, and equal blessings; and, let me add, they are equally useful.

29. And if ye be Christ's. Or, as several good MSS. read, "If ye be one in Christ." If you have all received justification through His blood, and the mind that was in Him, then are ye Abraham's seed; you are that real, spiritual posterity of Abraham, that other seed, to whom the promises were made; and then heirs according to the promise, being fitted for the rest that remains for the people of God, that heavenly inheritance which was typified by the earthly Canaan.

CHAPTER 4

The apostle deals plainly with those who hearkened to the judaizing teachers.

I. He acquaints us with the state of the Old Testament church: it was like a child under age.

CHAPTER 4

VSS. 1-31. THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED: ILLUSTRATION OF OUR SUBJECTION TO THE LAW ONLY TILL CHRIST CAME, FROM THE SUBJECTION OF AN HEIR TO HIS GUARDIAN TILL HE IS OF AGE. PETER'S GOOD WILL TO THE GALATIANS SHOULD LEAD THEM TO THE SAME GOOD WILL TO HIM AS THEY HAD AT FIRST SHOWN. THEIR DESIRE TO BE UNDER THE LAW SHOWN BY THE ALLEGORY OF ISAAC AND ISHMAEL TO BE INCONSISTENT WITH THEIR GOSPEL LIBERTY. 1-7. The fact of God's sending His Son to redeem us who were under the law (vs. 4), and sending the Spirit of His Son into our hearts (vs. 6), confirms the conclusion (ch. 3:29) that we are "heirs according to the promise." the heir—(ch. 3:29). It is not, as in earthly inheritances, the death of the father, but our Father's sovereign will simply that makes us heirs. child—Greek, "one under age." differeth nothing . . .—i.e., has no more freedom than a slave (so the Greek for "servant" means). He is not at his own disposal. lord of all—by title and virtual ownership (cf. I Cor. 3:21, 22).

CHAPTER 4

1. The heir, as long as he is a child. Though he be appointed by his father's will heir of all his possessions, yet till he arrive at the legal age he is master of nothing, and does not differ from one of the common domestics.

MATTHEW HENRY

That was indeed a dispensation of grace, and yet it was comparatively a dispensation of darkness; for as the heir, in his minority, is under tutors and governors till the time appointed of his father, so it was with the Old Testament church. And as that was a dispensation of darkness, so of bondage too. The church then lay more under the character of a servant. The time appointed of the Father having come, we are under a dispensation of greater light and liberty.

II. He acquaints us with the much happier state under the gospel-dispensation, v. 4–7. When the fulness of time had come he sent forth his Son, &c.

He, in pursuance of the great design he had undertaken, submitted to be made of a woman—there is his incarnation; and to be made under the law—there is his subjection.

One great end of all this was to redeem those that were under the law. He was sent to redeem us, that we might receive the adoption of sons—that we might no longer be accounted as servants, but as sons grown up to maturity. Under the gospel, particular believers receive the adoption.

tutors and governors—rather, "guardians (of the person) and stewards" (of the property.) Answering to "the law was our schoolmaster" or "tutor" (ch. 3: 24). until the time appointed of the father—in His eternal purposes (Eph. 1:9-11). The Greek is a legal term, expressing a time defined by law, or testamentary disposition. 3. we—the Jews primarily, and inclusively the Gentiles also. For the "we" in vs. 5 plainly refers to both Jew and Gentile believers. The Jews in their bondage to the law of Moses, as the representative people of the world, include all mankind virtually amenable to God's law (Rom. 2: 14, 15; cf. ch. 3:13, 23, Notes). Even the Gentiles were under "bondage," and in a state of discipline suitable to nonage, till Christ came as the Emancipator. were in bondage—as "servants" (vs. 1). under the elements—or "rudiments"; rudimentary religion teaching of a non-Christian character: the elementary lessons of outward things (lit., "of the [outward] world"); such as the legal ordinances mentioned, vs. 10 (Col. 2:8, 20). Our childhood's lessons [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. Lit., The letters of the alphabet (Heb. 5:12). 4. the fulness of the time—viz., "the time appointed by the Father" (vs. 2). Cf. Note, Ephesians 1:10; Luke 1:57; Acts 2:1; Ezekiel 5:2. "The Church has its own ages" [BENGEL]. God does nothing prematurely, but, foreseeing the end from the beginning, waits till all is ripe for the execution of His purpose. Had Christ come directly after the fall, the enormity and deadly fruits of sin would not have been realized fully by man, so as to feel his desperate state and need of a Saviour. Sin was fully developed. Man's inability to save himself by obedience to the law, whether that of Moses, or that of conscience, was completely manifested; all the prophecies of various ages found their common center in this particular time; and Providence, by various arrangements in the social and political, as well as the moral world, had fully prepared the way for the coming Redeemer. God often permits physical evil long before he teaches the remedy. The smallpox had for long committed its ravages before inoculation, and then vaccination, was discovered. It was essential to the honor of God's law to permit evil long before He revealed the full remedy. Cf. "the set time" (Ps. 102:13). was come—Greek, "came." sent forth—Greek, "sent forth out of heaven from Himself" [ALFORD and BENGEL]. The same verb is used of the Father's sending forth the Spirit (vs. 6). So in Acts 7:12. Cf. with this verse, John 8:42; Isaiah 48:16. his—emphatical. "His own Son." Not by adoption, as we are (vs. 5); nor merely His Son by the anointing of the Spirit which God sends into the heart (vs. 6; John 1:18). made of a woman—"made" is used as in I Cor. 15:45, "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul," Greek, "made to be (born) of a woman." The expression implies a special interposition of God in His birth as man, viz., causing Him to be conceived by the Holy Ghost. So ESTIUS. made under the law—"made to be under the law." Not merely as GROTIUS and ALFORD explain, "Born subject to the law as a Jew." But "made" by His Father's appointment, and His own free will, "subject to the law," to keep it all, ceremonial and moral, perfectly for us, as the Representative Man, and to suffer and exhaust the full penalty of our whole race's violation of it. This constitutes the significance of His circumcision, His being presented in the temple (Luke 2:21, 22, 27; cf. Matt. 5:17), and His baptism by John, when He said (Matt. 3:15), "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." 5. To—Greek, "That He might redeem." them . . . under the law—primarily the Jews; but as these were the representative people of the world, the Gentiles, too, are included in the redemption (ch. 3:13). receive—The Greek implies the suitableness of the thing as long ago predestined by God. "Receive as something destined or due" (Luke 23:41; II John 8). Herein God makes of sons of men sons of God, inasmuch as God made of the Son of God the Son of man [ST. AUGUSTINE on Ps. 52]. 6. because ye are sons . . .—The gift of the Spirit of prayer is the consequence of our adoption. The Gentile Galatians might think, as the Jews were under the law before their adoption, that so they, too, must first be under the law. Paul, by anticipation, meets this objection by saying, YE ARE sons, therefore ye need not be as children (vs. 1) under the tutorship of the law, as being already in the free state of "sons" of God by faith in Christ (ch. 3:26), no longer in your nonage (as "children," vs. 1). the Spirit of his Son—By faith ye are one with the Son, so that what is His is yours; His Sonship ensures your sonship; His Spirit ensures for you a share in the same. "If any man have not the Spirit of

2. But is under tutors, "guardians," and governors, those who have the charge of the family. These words are nearly similar; but we may consider the first as "executor," the last as the person who superintends the concerns of the family and estate till the heir become of age, such as we call "trustee." Until the time appointed of the father. The time mentioned in the father's will or testament.

3. Even so we. The whole Jewish people were in a state of nonage while under the law. The elements of the world. A mere Jewish phrase, "the principles of this world"; that is, the rudiments or principles of the Jewish religion. The apostle intimates that the law was not the science of salvation; it was only the elements or alphabet of it; and in the gospel this alphabet is composed into a most glorious system of divine knowledge. But as the alphabet is nothing of itself unless compounded into syllables, words, sentences, and discourses, so the law, taken by itself, gives no salvation. It contains indeed the outlines of the gospel, but it is the gospel alone that fills up these outlines.

4. When the fulness of the time was come. The time which God in His infinite wisdom counted best, in which all His counsels were "filled up"; the time which His Spirit, by the prophets, had specified; and the time to which He intended the Mosaic institutions should extend, and beyond which they should be of no avail.

God sent forth his Son, Him who came immediately from God himself, made of a woman, according to the promise, Gen. iii. 15; produced by the power of God in the womb of the Virgin Mary without any intervention of man. Made under the law. In subjection to it, that in Him all its designs might be fulfilled and by His death the whole might be abolished, the law dying when the Son of God expired upon the Cross.

5. To redeem them. To "pay down a price" for them, and thus "buy them off" from the necessity of observing circumcision, offering brute sacrifices, performing different ablutions, etc. That we might receive the adoption of sons. Which adoption we could not obtain by the law, for it is the gospel only that puts us among the children and gives us a place in the heavenly family.

6. And because ye are sons. By faith in Christ Jesus, being redeemed from both the bondage and the curse of the law. God the Father, called generally the First Person of the glorious Trinity, hath sent forth the Spirit—the Holy Ghost, the Second Person of that Trinity—of his Son, Jesus Christ, the Third Person of the Trinity,

MATTHEW HENRY

They have together therewith the Spirit of adoption, enabling them in prayer to eye God as a Father (v. 6): Because you are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father. And hereupon (v. 7) the apostle concludes this argument: Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and, if a son, then an heir of God through Christ; we are no longer under the servitude of the law, but, upon our believing in Christ, become the sons of God, and, being the sons, we are also heirs of God.

1. The wonders of divine love and mercy towards us, particularly of God the Father, in sending his Son into the world to redeem and save us—of the Son of God, in suffering so much, for us—and of the Holy Spirit, in condescending to dwell in the hearts of believers for such gracious purposes.

2. The great and invaluable advantages which Christians enjoy under the gospel. We receive the adoption of sons. We who by nature are children of wrath and disobedience have become by grace children of love. We receive the Spirit of adoption. All who are received into the number partake of the nature of the children of God; for he will have all his children to resemble him. Those who have the nature of sons shall have the inheritance of sons.

Verses 8–11

I. He reminds them what they were before the gospel was preached to them. Then they knew not God. They were under the worst of slaveries, for they did service to those which by nature were no gods, and therefore were utterly unable to hear and help them. Those who are ignorant of the true God cannot but be inclined to false gods.

II. He calls upon them to consider the happy change made in them by the preaching of the gospel. They had known God or rather were known of God; this happy change in their state was not owing to themselves, but to him. All our acquaintance with God begins with him; we know him, because we are known of him.

III. The unreasonableness of their suffering themselves to be brought again into a state of bondage. How turn you again, &c., says he, v. 9. "How is it that you, who have been taught to worship God in the gospel way, should now be persuaded to comply with the ceremonial way of worship? They were more inexcusable than the Jews themselves, who might be supposed to have some fondness for that which had been of such long standing among them. Besides, what they suffered themselves to be brought into bondage to were but weak and beggarly elements, such things as had no power in them to cleanse the soul.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Christ, he is none of His" (Rom. 8:9). Moreover, as the Spirit of God proceeds from God the Father, so the Spirit of the Son proceeds from the Son: so that the Holy Ghost, as the Creed says, "proceedeth from the Father and the Son." The Father was not begotten: the Son is begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son. crying—Here the SPIRIT is regarded as the agent in praying, and the believer as His organ. In Romans 8:15, "The Spirit of adoption" is said to be that whereby WE cry, "Abba, Father"; but in Romans 8:26, "The SPIRIT ITSELF maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." The believers' prayer is His prayer: hence arises its acceptability with God. Abba, Father—The Hebrew says, "Abba" (a Hebrew term), the Greek, "Father" ("Pater," a Greek term in the original), both united together in one Sonship and one cry of faith, "Abba, Father." So "Even so ('Nai,' Greek), Amen" (Hebrew), both meaning the same (Rev. 1: 7). Christ's own former cry is the believers' cry, "Abba, Father" (Mark 14:36). 7. Wherefore—Conclusion inferred from vss. 4-6. thou—individualizing and applying the truth to each. Such an individual appropriation of this comforting truth God grants in answer to them who cry, "Abba, Father." heir of God through Christ—The oldest MSS. read, "an heir through God." This combines on behalf of man, the whole before-mentioned agency of THE TRINITY: the Father sent His Son and the Spirit; the Son has freed us from the law; the Spirit has completed our sonship. Thus the redeemed are heirs THROUGH the Triune GOD, not through the law, nor through fleshly descent [WINDISCHMANN in ALFORD]; (ch. 3:18 confirms this). heir—confirming ch. 3:29; cf. Romans 8:17. 8-11. appeal to them not to turn back from their privileges as free sons, to legal bondage again. then—when ye were "servants" (vs. 7). ye knew not God—not opposed to Romans 1:21. The heathen originally knew God, as Romans 1:21 states, but did not choose to retain God in their knowledge, and so corrupted the original truth. They might still have known Him, in a measure, from His works, but as a matter of fact they knew Him not, so far as His eternity, His power as the Creator, and His holiness, are concerned. are no gods—i.e., have no existence, such as their worshippers attribute to them, in the nature of things, but only in the corrupt imaginations of their worshippers (Notes, I Cor. 8:4; 10:19, 20; II Chron. 13:9). Your "service" was a different bondage from that of the Jews, which was a true service. Yet theirs, like yours, was a burdensome yoke; how then is it ye wish to resume the yoke after that God has transferred both Jews and Gentiles to a free service? 9. known God or rather are known of God—They did not first know and love God, but God first, in His electing love, knew and loved them as His, and therefore attracted them to the saving knowledge of Him (Matt. 7:23; I Cor. 8:3; II Tim. 2:19; cf. Exod. 33:12, 17; John 15:16; Phil. 3:12). God's great grace in this made their fall from it the more heinous. how—expressing indignant wonder at such a thing being possible, and even actually occurring (ch. 1:6). "How is it that ye turn back again?" weak—powerless to justify: in contrast to the justifying power of faith (ch. 3:24; cf. Heb. 7:18). beggarly—contrasted with the riches of the inheritance of believers in Christ (Eph. 1:18). The state of the "child" (vs. 1) is weak, as not having attained manhood; "beggarly," as not having attained the inheritance. elements—"rudiments." It is as if a schoolmaster should go back to learning the A, B, C's [BENGEL]. again—There are two Greek words in the original. "Ye desire again, beginning afresh, to be in bondage." Though the Galatians, as Gentiles, had never been under the Mosaic yoke, yet they had been under "the elements of the world" (vs. 3): the common designation for the Jewish and Gentile systems alike, in contrast to the Gospel (however superior the Jewish was to the Gentile). Both systems consisted in outward worship and cleaved to sensible forms. Both were in bondage to the elements of sense, as though these could give the justification and sanctification which the inner and spiritual power of God alone could bestow. ye desire—or "will." Will-worship is not acceptable to God (Col. 2:18, 23). 10. To regard the observance of certain days as in itself meritorious as a work, is alien to the free spirit of Christianity. This is not incompatible with observing the Sabbath or the Christian Lord's day as obligatory, though not as a work (which was the Jewish and Gentile error in the observance of days), but as a holy mean appointed by the Lord for attaining the great end, holiness. The whole life alike belongs crying, Abba, Father, from the fullest and most satisfactory evidence that God, the Father, Son, and Spirit, had become their portion.

7. Thou art no more a servant. You who have believed in Christ are no longer a "slave," either under the dominion of sin or under obligation to the Mosaic ritual; but a son of God, adopted into the heavenly family. And if a son, then an heir. Having a right to the inheritance because one of the family, for none can inherit but the children. But this heirship is the most extraordinary of all. It is not an heirship of any tangible possession, either in heaven or on earth; it is not to possess a part or even the whole of either. It is to possess Him who made all things; not God's works, but God himself; heirs of God through Christ.

8. When ye knew not God. Though it is evident from the complexion of the whole of this Epistle that the great body of the Christians in the churches of Galatia were converts from among the Jews or proselytes to Judaism, yet from this verse it appears that there were some who had been converted from heathenism, unless we suppose that the apostle here particularly addresses those who had been proselytes to Judaism and thence converted to Christianity, which appears to be most likely from the following verses.

9. Now, after that ye have known God. After having been brought to the knowledge of God as your Saviour. Or rather are known of God. Are approved of Him, having received the adoption of sons.

To the weak and beggarly elements. After receiving all this, will you turn again to the ineffectual rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law—rites too weak to counteract your sinful habits, and too poor to purchase pardon and eternal life for you? If the Galatians were turning again to them, it is evident that they once had been addicted to them. And this they might have been, allowing that they had become converts from heathenism to Judaism and from Judaism to Christianity.

MATTHEW HENRY

Their weakness and folly were the more aggravated, in submitting to them, and in observing their various festivals, days, and months, and times, and years. It is possible for those who have made great professions of religion to be afterwards drawn into very great defections from the purity and simplicity of it. This the apostle lays a special stress upon, that after they had known God, or rather were known of him, they desired to be in bondage under the weak and beggarly elements of the law

IV. He expresses his fears concerning them, lest he had bestowed on them labour in vain. He had been at a great deal of pains about them, but now they were rendering his labour among them fruitless, and with the thoughts of this he could not but be deeply affected.

Verses 12–16

I. How affectionately he addresses himself to them. He styles them brethren, though he knew their hearts were in a great measure alienated from him.

He would have them to be as he was, for he was as they were, they had not injured him at all. He had no quarrel with them upon his own account. Thus he endeavours to mollify their spirits towards him, that so they might receive the admonitions he was giving them. In reproving others we should take care to convince them that our reproofs do not proceed from any private pique but from a sincere regard to the honour of God and their truest welfare.

II. He magnifies their former affection. He puts them in mind of the difficulty under which he laboured when he came first among them: I knew how, through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the gospel unto you at the first.

When this infirmity of the flesh was, which in the following words he expresses by his temptation that was in his flesh, we can now have no certain knowledge of. It seems it made no impression on them to his disadvantage.

They did not despise him on the account of it, but on the contrary, received him as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus.

III. He expostulates with them hereupon: Where is then, the blessedness you spoke of? "You once thought yourselves happy in receiving the gospel; have you now any reason to think otherwise?" Those who have left their first love would do well to consider, Where is now the blessedness they once spoke of?

He was a welcome messenger to them; yea, so great was their esteem of him, that they could have plucked out their own eyes, and have given them to him. How uncertain the respects of people are, how apt they are to change their minds, so that they are ready to pluck out the eyes of those for whom they would before have plucked out their own!

to the Lord in the Gospel view, just as the whole world, and not the Jews only, belong to Him. But as in Paradise, so now one portion of time is needed wherein to draw off the soul more entirely from secular business to God (Col. 2:16). "Sabbaths, new moons, and set feasts" (I Chron. 23:31; II Chron. 31:3), answer to "days, months, times." "Months," however, may refer to the first and seventh months, which were sacred on account of the number of feasts in them. times—Greek, "seasons," viz., those of the three great feasts, the Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles. years—The sabbatical year was about the time of writing this Epistle, A.D. 48 [BENGEL]. 11. lest—Greek, "lest haply." My fear is not for my own sake, but for yours. 12. be as I am—"As I have in my life among you cast off Jewish habits, so do ye; for I am become as ye are," viz., in the non-observance of legal ordinances. "The fact of my laying them aside among Gentiles, shows that I regard them as not at all contributing to justification or sanctification. Do you regard them in the same light, and act accordingly." His observing the law among the Jews was not inconsistent with this, for he did so only in order to win them, without compromising principle. On the other hand, the Galatian Gentiles, by adopting legal ordinances, showed that they regarded them as needful for salvation. This Paul combats. ye have not injured me at all—viz., at the period when I first preached the Gospel among you, and when I made myself as you are, viz., living as a Gentile, not as a Jew. You at that time did me no wrong; "ye did not despise my temptation in the flesh" (vs. 14): nay, you "received me as an angel of God." Then in vs. 16, he asks, "Have I then, since that time, become your enemy by telling you the truth?" 13. how through infirmity—rather, as Greek, "Ye know that because of an infirmity of my flesh I preached...." He implies that bodily sickness, having detained him among them, contrary to his original intentions, was the occasion of his preaching the Gospel to them. at the first—lit., "at the former time"; implying that at the time of writing he had been twice in Galatia. See my Introduction: also vs. 16, and ch. 5:21, Notes. His sickness was probably the same as recurred more violently afterward, "the thorn in the flesh" (II Cor. 12:7), which also was overruled to good (II Cor. 12:9, 10), as the "infirmity of the flesh" here. 14. my temptation—The oldest MSS. read, "your temptation." My infirmity, which was, or might have been, a "temptation," or trial, to you, ye despised not, i.e., ye were not tempted by it to despise me and my message. Perhaps, however, it is better to punctuate and explain as LACHMANN, connecting it with vs. 13, "And (ye know) your temptation (i.e., the temptation to which ye were exposed through the infirmity) which was in my flesh. Ye despised not (through natural pride), nor rejected (through spiritual pride), but received me...." "Temptation does not mean here, as we now use the word, tendency to an evil habit, but BODILY TRIAL." as an angel of God—as a heaven-inspired and sent messenger from God: angel means messenger (Mal. 2:7). Cf. the phrase, II Samuel 19:27, a Hebrew and Oriental one for a person to be received with the highest respect (Zech. 12:8). An angel is free from the flesh, infirmity, and temptation. as Christ—being Christ's representative (Matt. 10:40). Christ is Lord of angels. 15. Where...—Of what value was your congratulation (so the Greek for "blessedness" expresses) of yourselves, on account of your having among you me, the messenger of the Gospel, considering how entirely you have veered about since? Once you counted yourselves blessed in being favored with my ministry. ye would have plucked out your own eyes—one of the dearest members of the body—so highly did you value me: a proverbial phrase for the greatest selfsacrifice (Matt. 5:29). CONYBEARE and HOWSON think that this particular form of proverb was used with reference to a weakness in Paul's eyes, connected with a nervous frame, perhaps affected by the brightness of the vision described, Acts 22:11; II Corinthians 12:1-7. "You would have torn out your own eyes to supply the lack of mine." The divine power of Paul's words and works, contrasting with the feebleness of his person (II Cor. 10:10), powerfully at first impressed the Galatians, who had all the impulsiveness of the Keltic race from which they sprang. Subsequently they soon changed with the fickleness which is equally characteristic of Kelts. 16. Translate, "Am I then become your enemy (an enemy in your eyes) by telling you the truth" (ch. 2:5, 14)? He plainly did not incur their enmity at his first visit, and the words here imply that he had

ADAM CLARKE

10. Ye observe days. You superstitiously regard the Sabbaths and particular days of your own appointment. And months. New moons. Times—festivals, such as those of Tabernacles, Dedication, Passover. Years. Annual atonements, sabbatical years, and jubilees.

11. I am afraid of you. I begin now to be seriously alarmed for you, and think you are so thoroughly perverted from the gospel of Christ that all my pains and labor in your conversion have been thrown away.

12. Be as I am. Thoroughly addicted to the Christian faith and worship, from the deepest conviction of its truth. For I am as ye are. I was formerly a Jew, and as zealously addicted to the rites and ceremonies of Judaism as you are, but I am saved from that means and unprofitable dependence. "Be therefore as I am now, who was once as you now are." Ye have not injured me at all. I do not thus earnestly entreat you to return to your Christian profession because your perversion has been any loss to me, nor because your conversion can be to me any gain. You have not injured me at all; you injure only yourselves.

13. Ye know how through infirmity. The apostle seems to say that he was much afflicted in body when he first preached the gospel to them. And is this any strange thing, that a minister so laborious as Paul was should be sometimes overdone and overcome by the severity of his labors? Surely not. This might have been only an occasional affliction while laboring in that part of Asia Minor, and not a continual and incurable infirmity, as some have too hastily conjectured.

14. And my temptation which was in my flesh. On this verse there are a great many various readings, as there are various opinions. Instead of my temptation, a number of MSS. and versions and several of the primitive fathers have "your temptation." The word which we translate temptation signifies "trial" of any kind. The verse therefore may be read, "You despised not the trial which was in my flesh"; or, "You despised not your trial, which was in my flesh"; i.e., what my flesh suffered on your account, the afflictions I passed through in consequence of my severe labors on your account. They received him as an angel of God, as a messenger from heaven, and as Christ Jesus himself. This appears to me to be the simple meaning of the apostle, and that he alludes to neither a bodily nor a mental infirmity which generally or periodically afflicted him, as some have imagined. Nor does he appear at all to speak of the same case as that mentioned in 2 Cor. xii. 7.

15. Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? Ye spake of should be in italics, there being no corresponding word in the Greek text. Perhaps there is not a sentence in the New Testament more variously translated than this. "What was then your blessedness!" Or, "How great was your happiness at that time!" Or, "What blessings did ye then pour on me!" It is worthy of remark that, instead of what, several MSS. and some of the fathers have where; and was is omitted by some. According to these authorities the text should be read thus: "Where then is your blessedness?" Having renounced the gospel, you have lost your "happiness." What have your false teachers given you to compensate the loss of communion with God, or that Spirit of adoption, that Spirit of Christ, by which you cried, "Abba, Father"! If, however, we understand the words as implying the benedictions they then heaped on the apostle, the sense will be sufficiently natural, and agree well with the concluding part of the verse; for I bear you record, that, if . . . possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me. You had then the strongest affection for me; you loved God, and you loved me for God's sake, and were ready to give me the most unequivocal proof of your love. Dearer than one's eyes, or to profess to give one's eyes for the sake of a person, appears to have been a proverbial expression, intimating the highest tokens of the strongest affection.

16. Am I therefore become your enemy?

MATTHEW HENRY

He again asks (v. 16), "Am I become your enemy, because I tell you the truth? How is it that I, who was heretofore your favourite, am now accounted your enemy? It is no uncommon thing for men to account those their enemies who are really their best friends; for so, undoubtedly, those are who tell them the truth. Ministers sometimes create enemies to themselves by the faithful discharge of their duty. Yet ministers must not forbear speaking the truth, for fear of offending others. If others have become their enemies, it is only for telling them the truth.

Verses 17, 18

He here gives them the character of those false teachers. He tells them they were designing men, who were aiming to set up themselves. "They zealously affect you," says he; "and pretend a great deal of affection to you, but not well; for they would exclude you, that you might affect them. That which they are chiefly aiming at is to engage your affections to them." There may appear to be a great deal of zeal where yet there is but little truth and sincerity. The apostle gives us that excellent rule which we have, v. 18, It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing. What our translation renders in a good thing some choose to render to a good man, and so consider the apostle as pointing to himself; and not only when I am present with you. It is a very good rule that zeal be exercised only upon that which is good; for zeal is then only good when it is in a good thing. It is good to be zealous always in a good thing; not for a time only, or now and then, like the heat of an ague-fit, but, like the natural heat of the body, constant. Happy would it be for the church of Christ if this rule were better observed among Christians!

Verses 19, 20

He here expresses his great affection to them. He was not like them—one thing when among them and another when absent from them. Nor was he like their false teachers, who pretended a great deal of affection to them, when at the same time they were only consulting their own interest. He calls them his children, as he justly might, yea, he styles them his little children, which may possibly have a respect to their present behaviour, whereby they showed themselves too much like little children. He expresses his concern for them. He travailed in birth for them that Christ might be formed in them, that they might become Christians indeed. From this we may note, 1. The very tender affection which faithful ministers bear towards those among whom they are employed; it is like that of the most affectionate parents to their little children. 2. That the chief thing they are longing for, on their account, is that Christ may be formed in them. How unreasonably must those people act who suffer themselves to be prevailed upon to desert or dislike such ministers! He adds (v. 20) that he desired to be then present with them, that thereupon he might find occasion to change his voice towards them; for at present he stood in doubt of them. He knew not well what to think of them. But he would be glad to find that matters were better with them than he feared, and that he might have occasion to commend them, instead of thus reproving and chiding them.

Verses 21–31

The apostle illustrates the difference between believers who rested in Christ only and those judaizers who trusted in the law, by a comparison taken from the story of Isaac and Ishmael. Tell me, says he, you that desire to be under the law, do you not hear the law?

He sets before them the history itself (v. 22, 23): For it is written, Abraham had two sons, &c. The one, Ishmael, was by a bond-maid, and the other, Isaac, since then, and before his now writing, incurred it: so that the occasion of his telling them the unwelcome truth, must have been at his second visit (Acts 18:23, see my Introduction). The fool and sinner hate a reprover. The righteous love faithful reproof (Ps. 141:5; Prov. 9:8). 17. They—your flatterers: in contrast to Paul himself, who tells them the truth. zealously—zeal in proselytism was characteristic especially of the Jews, and so of Judaizers (ch. 1:14; Matt. 23:15; Rom. 10:2). affect you—i.e., court you (II Cor. 11:2. not well—not in a good way, or for a good end. Neither the cause of their zealous courting of you, nor the manner, is what it ought to be. they would exclude you—"They wish to shut you out" from the kingdom of God (i.e., they wish to persuade you that as uncircumcised Gentiles, you are shut out from it), "that ye may zealously court them," i.e., become circumcised, as zealous followers of themselves. ALFORD explains it, that their wish was to shut out the Galatians from the general community, and attract them as a separate clique to their own party. So the English word "exclusive," is used. 18. good to be zealously affected—rather, to correspond to "zealously court" in vs. 18, "to be zealously courted." I do not find fault with them for zealously courting you, nor with you for being zealously courted; provided it be "in a good cause" (translate so), "it is a good thing" (I Cor. 9:20-23). My reason for saying the "not well" (vs. 17: the Greek is the same as that for "good," and "in a good cause," in vs. 28), is that their zealous courting of you is not in a good cause. The older interpreters, however, support English Version (cf. ch. 1:14). always—Translate and arrange the words thus, "At all times, and not only when I am present with you." I do not desire that I exclusively should have the privilege of zealously courting you. Others may do so in my absence with my full approval, if only it be in a good cause, and if Christ be faithfully preached (Phil. 1: 15-18). 19. My little children—(I Tim. 1:18; II Tim. 2:1; I John 2:1). My relation to you is not merely that of one zealously courting you (vss. 17, 18), but that of a father to his children (I Cor. 4: 15). I travail in birth—i.e., like a mother in pain till the birth of her child. again—a second time. The former time was when I was "present with you" (vs. 18; cf. Note, vs. 13). Christ be formed in you—that you may live nothing but Christ, and think nothing but Christ (ch. 2:20), and glory in nothing but Him, and His death, resurrection, and righteousness (Phil. 3:8-10; Col. 1:27). 20. Translate as Greek, "I could wish." If circumstances permitted (which they do not), I would gladly be with you [M.STUART]. now—as I was twice already. Speaking face to face is so much more effective towards loving persuasion than writing (II John 12; III John 13, 14). change my voice—as a mother (vs. 19): adapting my tone of voice to what I saw in person your case might need. This is possible to one present, but not to one in writing [GROTIUS and ESTIUS]. I stand in doubt of you—rather, "I am perplexed about you," viz., how to deal with you, what kind of words to use, gentle or servere, to bring you back to the right path. 21. desire—of your own accord madly courting that which must condemn and ruin you. do ye not hear—do ye not consider the mystic sense of Moses' words? [GROTIUS.] The law itself sends you away from itself to Christ [ESTIUS]. After having sufficiently maintained his point by argument, the apostle confirms and illustrates it by an inspired allegorical exposition of historical facts, containing in them general laws and types. Perhaps his reason for using allegory was to confute the Judaizers with their own weapons: subtle, mystical, allegorical interpretations, unauthorized by the Spirit, were their favorite arguments, as of the Rabbins in the synagogues. Cf. the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractatu Succa, cap. Hechalil. Paul meets them with an allegorical exposition, not the work of fancy, but sanctioned by the Holy Spirit. History, if properly understood. contains in its complicated phenomena, simple and continually recurring divine laws. The history of the elect people, like their legal ordinances, had, besides the literal, a typical meaning (cf. I Cor. 10:1-4; 15:45, 47; Rev. 11:8). Just as the extra-ordinarily-born Isaac, the gift of grace according to promise, supplanted, beyond all human calculations, the naturally-born Ishmael, so the new theocratic race, the spiritual seed of Abraham by promise, the Gentile, as well as Jewish believers, were about to take the place of the natural seed, who had imagined that to them exclusively belonged the kingdom of God. 22. (Gen. 16:3-16; 21:2.) Abraham—whose sons ye wish to be (cf. Rom. 9:7-9). a bond maid . . . a free woman—rather, as Greek, 'the bond maid . . . the free woman.

ADAM CLARKE

How is it that you are so much altered towards me that you now treat me as an enemy, who formerly loved me with the most fervent affection? Is it because I tell you the truth, that very truth for which you at first so ardently loved me?

17. They zealously affect you, but not well. It is difficult for common readers to understand the meaning of these words; perhaps it would be better to translate: These false teachers "endeavor to conciliate your esteem, but not on honest or true principles." They work themselves into your good graces; they wish you to place all your affection upon themselves. They would exclude you. They wish to "shut you out" from the affection of your apostle, that ye might affect them, that you might love them alone, hear them alone, abide by their directions only, and totally abandon him who called you into the grace of the gospel of Christ. Some MSS. read "us" instead of you; they wish to shut us entirely out from among you, that you may receive and believe them alone. The sense is nearly the same but the former appears to be the more authentic reading.

18. It is good to be zealously affected. It is well to have a determined mind and an ardent heart in reference to things which are laudable and good. Not only when I am present. You were thus attached to me when I was among you, but now you have lost both your reverence and affection for me. Your false teachers pretended great concern for you, that you might put all your confidence in them. They have gained their end; they have estranged you from me, and got you to renounce the gospel, and have brought you again into your former bondage.

19. My little children. "My beloved children." As their conversion to God had been the fruit of much labor, prayers, and tears, so he felt them as his children and peculiarly dear to him because he had been the means of bringing them to the knowledge of the truth. Therefore he represents himself as suffering the same anxiety and distress which he endured at first when he preached the gospel to them, when their conversion to Christianity was a matter of great doubt and uncertainty. The metaphor which he uses needs no explanation. Until Christ be formed in you. Till you once more receive the Spirit and unction of Christ in your hearts, from which you are fallen by your rejection of the spirit of the gospel.

20. I desire to be present with you. I wish to accommodate my doctrine to your state; I know not whether you need stronger reprehension or to be dealt with more leniently. I stand in doubt of you. I have doubts concerning your state, the progress of error and conviction among you, which I cannot fully know without being among you. This appears to be the apostle's meaning, and tends much to soften and render palatable the severity of his reproofs.

21. Ye that desire to be under the law. You who desire to incorporate the Mosaic institutions with Christianity, and thus bring yourselves into bondage to circumcision and a great variety of oppressive rites. Do ye not hear the law? Do you not understand what is written in the Pentateuch relative to Abraham and his children? It is evident that the word law is used in two senses in this verse. It first means the Mosaic institutions; secondly, the Pentateuch, where the history is recorded to which the apostle refers.

22. For it is written. Viz., in Gen. xvi. 15 and xxii. 1, that Abraham had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac: the one, Ishmael, by a bondmaid, Hagar; the other, Isaac, by a freewoman, Sarah.

by a free-woman; the former was born after the flesh, or by the ordinary course of nature, the other was by promise, when in the course of nature there was no reason to expect that Sarah should have a son.

He acquaints them with the meaning of this history (v. 24–27): These things, says he, are an allegory. These two, Agar and Sarah, are the two covenants.

The former, Agar, represented that which was given from mount Sinai, and which gendereth to bondage. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia and it answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children; it justly represents the present state of the Jews, who adhering to that covenant, are still in bondage with their children.

But the other, Sarah, was intended to prefigure Jerusalem which is above, which is free both from the curse of the moral and the bondage of the ceremonial law, and is the mother of us all—a state into which all, both Jews and Gentiles, are admitted, upon their believing in Christ.

And to this greater freedom the apostle refers that of the prophet, Isa. liv. 1, where it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she who hath a husband.

He applies the history to the present case (v. 28): Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of the promise. We Christians, who have accepted Christ and look for justification and salvation by him alone, are entitled to the promised inheritance.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

23. after the flesh—born according to the usual course of nature: in contrast to Isaac, who was born "by virtue of the promise" (so the Greek), as the efficient cause of Sarah's becoming pregnant out of the course of nature (Rom. 4:19). Abraham was to lay aside all confidence in the flesh (after which Ishmael was born), and to live by faith alone in the promise (according to which Isaac was miraculously born, contrary to all calculations of flesh and blood). 24. are an allegory—rather, "are allegorical," i.e., have another besides the literal meaning. these are the two covenants—"these [women] are (i.e., mean; omit 'the' with all the oldest MSS.) two covenants." As among the Jews the bondage of the mother determined that of the child, the children of the free covenant of promise, answering to Sarah, are free; the children of the legal covenant of bondage are not so. one from—i.e., taking his origin from Mount Sinai. Hence, it appears, he is treating of the moral law (ch. 3:19) chiefly (Heb. 12:18). Paul was familiar with the district of Sinai in Arabia (ch. 1:17), having gone thither after his conversion. At the gloomy scene of the giving of the Law, he learned to appreciate, by contrast, the grace of the Gospel, and so to cast off all his past legal dependencies. which gendereth—i.e., bringing forth children unto bondage. Cf. the phrase (Acts 3:25), "children of the covenant which God made . . . saying unto Abraham." Agar i.e., Hagar. 25. Translate, "For this word, Hagar, is (imports) Mount Sinai in Arabia" (i.e., among the Arabians—in the Arabian tongue). So CHRYSOSTOM explains. HARAUT, the traveller, says that to this day the Arabians call Sinai, "Hadschar," i.e., Hagar, meaning a rock or stone. Hagar twice fled into the desert of Arabia (Gen. 16 and 21): from her the mountain and city took its name, and the people were called Hagarenes. Sinai, with its rugged rocks, far removed from the promised land, was well suited to represent the law which inspires with terror, and the spirit of bondage. answereth—lit., "stands in the same rank with"; "she corresponds to." Jerusalem which now is—i.e., the Jerusalem of the Jews, having only a present temporary existence, in contrast with the spiritual Jerusalem of the Gospel, which in germ, under the form of the promise, existed ages before, and shall be for ever in ages to come. and—The oldest MSS. read, "For she is in bondage." As Hagar was in bondage to her mistress, so Jerusalem that now is, is in bondage to the law, and also to the Romans: her civil state thus being in accordance with her spiritual state [BENGEL]. 26. This verse stands instead of the sentence which we should expect, to correspond to vs. 24, "One from Mount Sinai," viz., the other covenant from the heavenly mount above, which is (answers in the allegory to) Sarah. Jerusalem . . . above—Hebrews 12:22, "the heavenly Jerusalem." "New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God" (Rev. 3:12; 21:2). Here "the Messianic theocracy, which before Christ's second appearing is the Church, and after it, Christ's kingdom of glory" [MEYER]. free—as Sarah was; opposed to "she is in bondage" (vs. 25). all—omitted in many of the oldest MSS., though supported by some. "Mother of us," viz., believers who are already members of the invisible Church, the heavenly Jerusalem, hereafter to be manifested (Heb. 12:22). 27. (Isa. 54:1.) thou barren—Jerusalem above: the spiritual Church of the Gospel, the fruit of "the promise," answering to Sarah, who bore not "after the flesh": as contrasted with the law, answering to Hagar, who was fruitful in the ordinary course of nature. Isaiah speaks primarily of Israel's restoration after her longcontinued calamities; but his language is framed by the Holy Spirit so as to reach beyond this to the spiritual Zion: including not only the Jews, the natural descendants of Abraham and children of the law, but also the Gentiles. The spiritual Jerusalem is regarded as "barren" while the law trammeled Israel, for she then had no spiritual children of the Gentiles. break forth—into crying. cry—shout for joy. many more—Translate as Greek, "Many are the children of the desolate (the New Testament Church made up in the greater part from the Gentiles, who once had not the promise, and so was destitute of God as her husband), more than of her which hath an (Greek, 'THE') husband" (the Jewish Church having GOD for her husband, Isa. 54:5; Jer. 2:2). Numerous as were the children of the legal covenant, those of the Gospel covenant are more so. The force of the Greek article is, "Her who has THE husband of which the other is destitute." 28. we—The oldest MSS. and versions are divided between "we" and "ye." "We" better accords with vs. 26, "mother of us." children of promise—not children after the flesh, but through

ADAM CLARKE

23. Was born after the flesh. Ishmael was born according to the course of nature, his parents being both of a proper age, so that there was nothing uncommon or supernatural in his birth. This is the proper meaning of the apostle's after or "according to" the flesh. By promise. Both Abraham and Sarah had passed that age in which the procreation of children was possible on natural principles. The birth, therefore, of Isaac was supernatural; it was the effect of an especial promise of God, and it was only on the ground of that promise that it was either credible or possible.

24. Which things are an allegory. They are to be understood spiritually, more being intended in the account than meets the eye. Allegory signifies a "thing that is a representative of another," where the literal sense is the representative of a spiritual meaning. For these are the two covenants. These signify two different systems of religion: the one by Moses, the other by the Messiah. The one from the mount Sinai. On which the law was published, which was typified by Hagar, Abraham's bond maid. Which gendereth to bondage. For as the bond maid or slave could only gender, "bring forth her children," in a state of slavery, so all that are born and live under those Mosaic institutions are born and live in a state of bondage—a bondage to various rites and ceremonies; under the obligation to keep the whole law, yet from its severity and their frailness obliged to live in the habitual breach of it, and in consequence exposed to the curse which it pronounces.

25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia. This is the common reading; but it is read differently in some of the most respectable MSS., versions, and fathers—thus: "For this Sinai is a mountain of Arabia," the word Agar being omitted. Answereth to Jerusalem. Hagar, the bond maid, bringing forth children in a state of slavery, answereth to Jerusalem which now is, "points out" or "bears a similitude" to Jerusalem in her present state of subjection; which, with her children, her citizens, is not only in bondage to the Romans, but in a worse bondage to the law, to its oppressive ordinances, and to the heavy curse which it has pronounced against all those who do not keep them.

26. But Jerusalem which is above. The apostle still follows the Jewish allegory, showing not only how the story of Hagar and Sarah, Ishmael and Isaac, was allegorized, but pointing out also that even Jerusalem was the subject of allegory. Is free, which is the mother of us all. There is a spiritual Jerusalem, of which this is the type; and this Jerusalem, in which the souls of all the righteous are, is free from all bondage and sin. Or by this, probably, the kingdom of the Messiah was intended; and this certainly answers best to the apostle's meaning, as the subsequent verse shows. There is an earthly Jerusalem, but this earthly Jerusalem typifies a heavenly Jerusalem. The former, with all her citizens, is in bondage; the latter is a free city, and all her inhabitants are free also. And this Jerusalem is our mother; it signifies the Church of Christ, the metropolis of Christianity, or rather the state of liberty into which all true believers are brought. The word panton, of . . . all, is omitted by almost every MS. and version of antiquity and importance, and by the most eminent of the fathers who quote his place. It is undoubtedly spurious, and the text should be read thus: "But Jerusalem, which is above, is free, which is our mother."

27. Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not. This quotation is taken from Isa. liv. 1, and is certainly a promise which relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, as the following clause proves. For the desolate, the Gentile world, hath many more children, is a much larger and more numerous Church, than she, Jerusalem, the Jewish state, which hath an husband, has been so long in covenant with God, living under His continual protection and in possession of a great variety of spiritual advantages; and especially those offered to her by the gospel, which she has rejected, and which the Gentiles have accepted.

28. Now we, who believe in the Lord Jesus, are the children of promise—are the spiritual offspring of the Messiah, the Seed of Abraham,

MATTHEW HENRY

He tells them that as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, they must expect it would be so now.

But, he desires them to consider what the scripture saith (Gen. xxi. 10), Cast out the bond-woman and her son, for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman. He concludes (v. 31), So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

the promise (vss. 23, 29, 31). "We are" so, and ought to wish to continue so. 29. persecuted—Ishmael "mocked" Isaac, which contained in it the germ and spirit of persecution (Gen. 21:9). His mocking was probably directed against Isaac's piety and faith in God's promises. Being the older by natural birth, he haughtily prided himself above him that was born by promise: as Cain hated Abel's piety. him . . .born after the Spirit—The language, though referring primarily to Isaac, born in a spiritual way (viz., by the promise or word of God, rendered by His Spirit efficient out of the course of nature, in making Sarah fruitful in old age), is so framed as especially to refer to believers justified by Gospel grace through faith, as opposed to carnal men, Judaizers, and legalists. even so it is now—(ch. 5:11; 6:12, 17; Acts 9:29; 13:45, 49, 50; 14:1, 2, 19; 17:5, 13; 18:5, 6). The Jews persecuted Paul, not for preaching Christianity in opposition to heathenism, but for preaching it as distinct from Judaism. Except in the two cases of Philippi and Ephesus (where the persons beginning the assault were pecuniarily interested in his expulsion), he was nowhere set upon by the Gentiles, unless they were first stirred up by the Jews. The coincidence between Paul's Epistles and Luke's history (the Acts) in this respect, is plainly undesigned, and so a proof of genuineness (see PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ). 30. Genesis 21:10, 12, where Sarah's words are, "shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac." But what was there said literally, is here by inspiration expressed in its allegorical spiritual import, applying to the New Testament believer, who is antitypically "the son of the free woman." In John 8: 35, 36, Jesus refers to this. Cast out—from the house and inheritance: literally, Ishmael; spiritually, the carnal and legalists. shall not be heir—The Greek is stronger, "must not be heir," or "inherit." 31. So then—The oldest MSS. read, "Wherefore." This is the conclusion inferred from what precedes. In ch. 3:29 and 4:7, it was etstablished that we, New Testament believers, are "heirs." If, then, we are heirs, "we are not children of the bond woman (whose son, according to Scripture, was 'not to be heir,' vs. 30), but of the free woman" (whose son was, according to Scripture, to be heir). For we are not "cast out" as Ishmael, but accepted as sons and heirs.

in whom the promise stated that all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

29. But as then he, Ishmael, that was born after the flesh, whose birth had nothing supernatural in it but was according to the ordinary course of nature, persecuted him, Isaac, that was born after the Spirit—who had a supernatural birth, according to the promise, and through the efficacy of the Holy Spirit giving effect to that promise, "Sarah shall have a son," Gen. xvii. 16-21; xxi. 1. Persecuted him; the persecution here referred to is that mentioned in Gen. xxi. 9. It consisted in mocking his brother, Isaac. Even so it is now. So the Jews in every place persecute the Christian, and show thereby that they are rather of the posterity of Hagar than of Sarah.

30. What saith the scripture? (In Gen. xxi. 10.) Cast out the bondwoman and her son. And what does this imply in the present case? Why, that the present Jerusalem and her children shall be cast out of the favor of God, and shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman—shall not inherit the blessings promised to Abraham, because they believe not in the promised Seed.

31. So then . . . we, Jews and Gentiles, who believe on the Lord Jesus, are not children of the bondwoman, are not in subjection to the Jewish law, but of the free; and consequently are delivered from all its bondage, obligation, and curse.

Since it appeared by what had been said that we can be justified only by faith in Jesus Christ, and that the law of Moses was no longer in force, he would have them to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not to be again entangled with the yoke of bondage. Under the gospel we are enfranchised, we are brought into a state of liberty. We owe this liberty to Jesus Christ. It is he who has made us free. It is therefore our duty to stand fast in this liberty, and not to suffer ourselves to be again entangled in the yoke of bondage.

I. Their submitting to circumcision, and depending on the works of the law for righteousness, were a forfeiture of all their advantages by Jesus Christ, v. 2–4.

1. With what solemnity the apostle declares this: Behold, I Paul say unto you (v. 2), and he repeats it (v. 3), I testify unto you that if you be circumcised Christ shall profit you nothing, &c. He looked upon it as a matter of the greatest consequence that they did not submit to it.

That this is his meaning appears from v. 4, where he expresses the same thing by their being justified by the law. Christ would profit them nothing, that were debtors to do the whole law; Christ

Vss. 1-26. PERORATION. EXHORTATION TO STAND FAST IN THE GOSPEL LIBERTY, JUST SET FORTH, AND NOT TO BE LED BY JUDAIZERS INTO CIRCUMCISION, OR LAW JUSTIFICATION: YET THOUGH FREE, TO SERVE ONE ANOTHER BY LOVE: TO WALK IN THE SPIRIT, BEARING THE FRUIT THEREOF, NOT IN THE WORKS OF THE FLESH. 1. The oldest MSS. read, "in liberty (so ALFORD, MOBERLEY, HUMPHRY, and ELLICOTT. But as there is no Greek for 'in,' as there is in translating in I Cor. 16:13; Phil. 1:27; 4:1, I prefer 'It is FOR freedom that') Christ hath made us free (not in, or for, a state of bondage). Stand fast, therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage" (viz., the law, ch. 4:24; Acts 15:10). On "again," see Note, ch. 4:9. 2. Behold—i.e., Mark what I say. I Paul—Though you now think less of my authority, I nevertheless give my name and personal authority as enough by itself to refute all opposition of adversaries. if ye be circumcised—not as ALFORD, "If you will go on being circumcised." Rather, "If ye suffer yourselves to be circumcised," viz., under the notion of its being necessary to justification (vs. 4; Acts 15:1). Circumcision here is not regarded simply by itself (for, viewed as a mere national rite, it was practiced for conciliation's sake by Paul himself, Acts 16:3), but as the symbol of Judaism and legalism in general. If this be necessary, then the Gospel of grace is at an end. If the latter be the way of justification, then Judaism is in no way so. Christ . . . profit . . . nothing—(ch. 2:21). For righteousness of works and justification by faith cannot co-exist. "He who is circumcised [for justification] is so as fearing the law, and he who fears, disbelieves the power of grace, and he who disbelieves can profit nothing by that grace which he disbelieves [CHRYSOSTOM]. 3. For—Greek, "Yea, more"; "Moreover." I testify . . . to every man—as well as "unto you" (vs. 2). that is circumcised—that submits to be circumcised. Such a one became a "proselyte of righteousness." the whole law—impossible for man to keep even in part, much less wholly (Jas. 2:10); yet none can be justified by the law, unless he keep it wholly (ch. 3: 10). 4. Lit., "Ye have become void from Christ," i.e., your connection with Christ has become void

1. Stand fast therefore in the liberty. This is intimately connected with the preceding chapter, the apostle having said just before, "So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free," immediately adds, Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. Hold fast your Christian profession; it brings spiritual liberty. On the contrary, Judaism brings spiritual bondage. The liberty mentioned by the apostle is freedom from Jewish rites and ceremonies, called properly here the yoke of bondage; and also liberty from the power and guilt of sin, which nothing but the grace of Christ can take away.

2. If ye be circumcised. By circumcision you take on you the whole obligation of the Jewish law, and consequently profess to seek salvation by means of its observances. Therefore Christ can profit you nothing; for by seeking justification by the works of the law you renounce justification by faith in Christ.

3. He is a debtor to do the whole law. Lays himself, by receiving circumcision, under the obligation to fulfill all its precepts and ordinances.

4. Christ is become of no effect unto you. It is vain for you to attempt to unite the two had become of no effect to them, they were fallen from grace. Thereby they renounced that way of justification which God had established. They became debtors to do the whole law, which required such an obedience as they were not capable of performing. Having thus revolted from Christ, and built their hopes upon the law, Christ would profit them nothing. He will not be the Saviour of any who will not own and rely upon him as their only Saviour.

II. To persuade them to steadfastness he sets before them his own example, and acquaints them what their hopes were; through the Spirit they were waiting for the hope of righteousness by faith. 1. What it is that Christians are waiting for: it is the hope of righteousness, by which we are chiefly to understand the happiness of the other world. It is the great object of their hope, which they are above everything else desiring and pursuing. It is the righteousness of Christ alone which has procured it for us, and on account of which we can expect to be brought to the possession of it. 2. How they hope to obtain this happiness, namely, by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, not by the works of the law. 3. Whence it is that they are thus waiting for the hope of righteousness: it is through the Spirit. It is under his conduct, and by his assistance, that they are enabled to believe on Christ, and to look for the hope of righteousness through him.

III. He tells them (v. 6) that in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision. Christ, who is the end of the law, having come, now it was neither here nor there whether a man were circumcised or uncircumcised; he was neither the better for the one nor the worse for the other, nor would either the one or the other recommend him to God. Yet he informs them what would do so; faith, which worketh by love. Without it nothing else would stand them in any stead. Faith, where it is true, is a working grace: it works by love, love to God and love to our brethren; and faith, thus working by love, is all in all in our Christianity.

IV. To recover them from their backslidings he puts them in mind of their good beginnings.

1. They did run well. The life of a Christian is a race, wherein he must run, and hold on, if he would obtain the prize. It is not enough that we run in this race, but we must run well. Thus these Christians had done for awhile, but they were either turned out of the way or at least made to flag and falter in it.

2. He asks them, and calls upon them to ask themselves, Who did hinder you? He very well knew who they were, and what it was that hindered them; but he would have them to put the question to themselves. Many who set out fair in religion, and run well for awhile—are yet by some means or other hindered in their progress, or turned out of the way. It concerns those who have run well, but now begin either to turn out of the way or to tire in it, to enquire what it is that hinders them. Young converts must expect that Satan will be doing all he can to divert them from the course they are in. The apostle tells them that by hearkening to them they were kept from obeying the truth. The gospel which he had preached to them was the truth. It was necessary that they should obey it, that they should continue to govern their lives and hopes according to the directions of it. The truth is not only to be believed, but to be obeyed, to be received not only in the light of it, but in the love and power of it. Those do not rightly obey the truth, who do not steadfastly adhere to it.

V. He argues from the ill rise of that persuasion whereby they were drawn away (v. 8): This persuasion, says he, cometh not of him that calleth you. That is, either of God, or of the apostle himself. It could not come from God, for it was contrary to that way of justification and salvation which he had established; nor from Paul himself, for he had all along been an opposer and not a preacher of circumcision, he had never pressed the use of it upon Christians, much less imposed it upon them as necessary to salvation. He leaves them to judge whence it must arise; it could be owing to none but Satan and his instruments. The Galatians had every reason to reject it, and to continue steadfast in the truth which they had before embraced.

VI. The danger there was of the spreading of this infection, is a further argument which the apostle urges against their complying with false teachers. To convince them that there was more danger in it than they were aware of, he tells them (v. 9) that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. The whole lump of the Christian society may be infected by

(vs. 2). Romans 7:2, "Loosed from the law," where the same Greek occurs as here. whosoever of you are justified—"are being justified," i.e., are endeavoring to be justified. by the law—Greek, "IN the law," as the element in which justification is to take place. fallen from grace—Ye no longer "stand" in grace (Rom. 5:2). Grace and legal righteousness cannot co-exist (Rom. 4:4, 5; 11:6). Christ, by circumcision (Luke 2:21), undertook to obey all the law, and fulfil all righteousness for us: any, therefore, that now seeks to fulfil the law for himself in any degree for justifying righteousness, severs himself from the grace which flows from Christ's fulfilment of it, and becomes "a debtor to do the whole law" (vs. 3). The decree of the Jerusalem council had said nothing so strong as this; it had merely decided that Gentile Christians were not bound to legal observances. But the Galatians, while not pretending to be so bound, imagined there was an efficacy in them to merit a higher degree of perfection (ch. 3:3). This accounts for Paul not referring to the decree at all. He took much higher ground. See PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ. The natural mind loves outward fetters, and is apt to forge them for itself, to stand in lieu of holiness of heart. 5. For—proof of the assertion, "fallen from grace," by contrasting with the case of legalists, the "hope" of Christians. through the Spirit—Greek, rather, "by the Spirit": in opposition to by the flesh (ch. 4:29), or fleshly ways of justification, as circumcision and legal ordinances. "We" is emphatical, and contrasted with "whosoever of you would be justified by the law" (vs. 4). the hope of righteousness—"We wait for the (realization of the) hope (which is the fruit) of the righteousness (i.e., justification which comes) by (lit., from—out of) faith," Rom. 5:1, 4, 5; 8:24, 25, "Hope . . . we with patience wait for it." This is a farther step than being "justified"; not only are we this, but "wait for the hope" which is connected with it, and is its full consummation. "Righteousness," in the sense of justification, is by the believer once for all already attained; but the consummation of it in future perfection above is the object of hope to be waited for: "the crown of righteousness laid up" (II Tim. 4:8); "the hope laid up for you in heaven" (Col. 1:5; I Pet. 1:3). 6. For—confirming the truth that it is "by faith" (vs. 5). in Jesus Christ—Greek, "in Christ Jesus." In union with Christ (the ANOINTED Saviour), that is, Jesus of Nazareth. nor uncircumcision—This is levelled against those who, being not legalists, or Judaizers, think themselves Christians on this ground alone. faith which worketh by love Greek, "working. . . ." This corresponds to "a new creature" (ch. 6:15), as its definition. Thus in vss. 5, 6, we have the three, "faith," "hope," and "love." The Greek expresses, "Which effectually worketh"; which exhibits its energy by love (so I Thess. 2:13). Love is not joined with faith in justifying, but is the principle of the works which follow after justification by faith. Let not legalists, upholding circumcision, think that the essence of the law is set at naught by the doctrine of justification by faith only. Nay, "all the law is fulfilled in one word—love," which is the principle on which "faith worketh" (vs. 14). Let them, therefore, seek this "faith," which will enable them truly to fulfil the law. Again, let not those who pride themselves on uncircumcision think that, because the law does not justify, they are free to walk after "the flesh" (vs. 13). Let them, then, seek that "love" which is inseparable from true faith (Jas. 2:8, 12-22). Love is utterly opposed to the enmities which prevailed among the Galatians (vss. 15, 20). The Spirit (vs. 5) is a Spirit of "faith" and "love" (cf. Rom. 14:17; I Cor. 7:19). 7. Translate, "Ye were running well" in the Gospel race (I Cor. 9:24-26; Phil. 3:13, 14). who . . .—none whom you ought to have listened to [BENGEL]: alluding to the Judaizers (cf. ch. 3:1). hinder—The Greek means, lit., "hinder by breaking up a road." not obey the truth—not submit yourselves to the true Gospel way of justification. 8. This persuasion—Greek, "The persuasion," viz., to which you are yielding. There is a play on words in the original, the Greek for persuasion being akin to "obey" (vs. 7). This persuasion which ye have obeyed. cometh not of—i.e. "from". Does not emanate from Him, but from an enemy. that calleth you—(V. 13: ch. 1:6; Phil. 3:14; I Thess. 5:24). The calling is the rule of the whole race [BENGEL]. 9. A little leaven—the false teaching of the Judaizers. A small portion of legalism, if it be mixed with the Gospel, corrupts its purity. To add legal ordinances and works in the least degree to justification by faith, is to undermine "the whole." So "leaven" is used of false doctrine (Matt. 16:12; cf. 13:33). In I Corinthians 5:6 it means the corrupt-systems. You must have the law and no Christ or Christ and no law for your justification.

Ye are fallen from grace. From the gospel. They had been brought into the grace of the gospel, and now, by readopting the Mosaic ordinance, they had apostatized from the gospel as a system of religion, and had lost the grace communicated to their souls, by which they were preserved in a state of salvation. The peace and love of God, received by Jesus Christ, could not remain in the hearts of those who had rejected Christ. They had therefore in every sense of the word fallen from grace, and whether some of them ever rose again is more than we can tell.

5. For we, Christians, through the Spirit, through the operation of the Holy Ghost, under this spiritual dispensation of the gospel, wait for the hope of righteousness—expect that which is the object of our hope, on our being justified by faith in Christ. Righteousness may here, as in many other places of Paul's Epistles, mean "justification." And the hope of justification, or the hope excited and inspired by it, is the possession of eternal glory; for, says the apostle, Rom. v. 1-2, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God . . . and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." As this glory is necessarily future, it is to be waited for. But this waiting, in a thorough Christian, is not only a blessed expectation, but also a continual anticipation of it; and therefore the apostle says we "receive out of it." This is no fanciful derivation; it exists in the experience of every genuine Christian. He is continually anticipating or receiving foretastes of that glory the fullness of which he expects after death. Thus Christians are receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls, 1 Pet. i. 9.

6. For in Jesus Christ. By the dispensation of the gospel all legal observances as essential to salvation are done away; and uncircumcision, or the Gentile state, contributes as much to salvation as circumcision or the Jewish state. They are both equally ineffectual; and nothing now avails in the sight of God but that faith "which is made active [or energetic] by love." God acknowledges no faith as of the operation of His Spirit that is not active or obedient. But the principle of all obedience to God and beneficence to man is love; therefore faith cannot work unless it be associated with love.

7. Ye did run well. You once had the faith that worked by love—you were genuine, active, useful Christians. Who did hinder? Who prevented you from continuing to obey the truth? You could be turned aside only by your own consent. Paul here, as in 1 Cor. ix. 24, compares Christianity to a race.

8. This persuasion, of the necessity of your being circumcised and obeying the law of Moses, is not of him that calleth you. I never preached such a doctrine to you; I called you out of bondage to liberty, from a galling yoke to a cheerful service.

9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. A proverbial expression (see 1 Cor. v. 6) very aptly applied to those who receive the smallest tincture of false doctrine relative to the things essential to salvation, which soon influences the whole conduct so that the man becomes totally perverted. They might have argued, "It is a small thing, and should not be made a subject one member of it, and therefore they were greatly concerned, to purge out the infection from among them. The doctrine which the false teachers were industrious to spread, and which some in these churches had been drawn into, was subversive of Christianity itself, and therefore considering the fatal tendency of it, he would not have them to be easy and unconcerned.

VII. He expresses the hopes he had concerning them (v. 10): I have confidence in you, through the Lord, that you will be none otherwise minded. He hoped that they might be brought to be of the same mind with him, and to own and abide by that truth and that liberty of the gospel which he had preached to them. We ought to hope the best even of those concerning whom we have cause to fear the worst. He lays the blame of it more upon others than themselves; for he adds, But he that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be. In reproving sin and error, we should always distinguish between the leaders and the led. Thus the apostle softens and alleviates the fault of these Christians, even while he is reproving them. But as for him or those that troubled them, he declares they should bear their judgment. He did not doubt but God would deal with them according to their deserts.

VIII. To dissuade these Christians from hearkening to their judaizing teachers, he represents them as men who had used very base methods to compass their designs: for they had misrepresented him. They had given out among them that Paul himself was a preacher of circumcision: for when he says (v. 11), And I brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, it plainly appears that they had reported him to have done so. Yet that he was a preacher of it he utterly denies. If he would have preached circumcision, he might have avoided persecution. If I yet preach circumcision, says he, why do I yet suffer persecution? If he had fallen in with them herein, instead of being exposed to their rage he might have been received into their favour. He was so far from preaching the doctrine he was charged with, that, rather than do so, he was willing to expose himself to the greatest hazards.

If he had yielded to the Jews herein, then would the offence of the cross have ceased. He rather chose to hazard his ease and credit, yea his very life itself, than thus to corrupt the truth and give up the liberty of the gospel.

He wishes that they were even cut off—not cut off from Christ and all hopes of salvation by him, but cut off by the censures of the church, which ought to witness against those teachers who thus corrupted the purity of the gospel.

Verses 13–26

The apostle comes to exhort these Christians to serious practical godliness.

I. They should not strive with one another, but love one another. He tells them (v. 13) that they had been called unto liberty, but yet he would have them be very careful that they did not use this liberty as an occasion to the flesh.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

ing influence of one bad person; so BENGEL understands it here to refer to the person (vss. 7, 8, 10) who misled them. Ecclesiastes 9:18, "One sinner destroyeth much good" (I Cor. 15:33). I prefer to refer it to false doctrine, answering to "persuasion" (vs. 8). 10. Greek, "I (emphatical: "I on my part") have confidence in the Lord with regard to you (II Thess. 3:4), that ye will be none otherwise minded" (than what by this Epistle I desire you to be, Phil. 3:15). but he that troubleth you—(ch. 1:7; Acts 15:24; Josh. 7:25; I Kings 18:17, 18). Some one, probably, was prominent among the seducers, though the denunciation applies to them all (ch. 1:7; 4:17). shall bear—as a heavy burden. his—his due and inevitable judgment from God. Paul distinguishes the case of the seduced, who were misled through thoughtlessness, and who, now that they are set right by him, he confidently hopes, in God's goodness, will return to the right way, from that of the seducer who is doomed to judgment. whosoever he be—whether great (ch. 1:8) or small. 11. Translate, "If I am still preaching (as I did before conversion) circumcision, why am I still persecuted?" The Judaizing troubler of the Galatians had said, "Paul himself preaches circumcision," as is shown by his having circumcised Timothy (Acts 16:3; cf. also Acts 20:6; 21:24). Paul replies by anticipation of their objection, As regards myself, the fact that I am still persecuted by the Jews shows plainly that I do not preach circumcision; for it is just because I preach Christ crucified, and not the Mosaic law, as the sole ground of justification, that they persecute me. If for conciliation he lived as a Jew among the Jews, it was in accordance with his principle enunciated (I Cor. 7:18, 20; 9:20). Circumcision, or uncircumcision, are things indifferent in themselves: their lawfulness or unlawfulness depends on the animus of him who uses them. The Gentile Galatians' animus in circumcision could only be their supposition that it influenced favorably their standing before God. Paul's living as a Gentile among Gentiles, plainly showed that, if he lived as a Jew among Jews, it was not that he thought it meritorious before God, but as a matter indifferent, wherein he might lawfully conform as a Jew by birth to those with whom he was, in order to put no needless stumbling block to the Gospel in the way of his countrymen. then—Presuming that I did so, "then," in that case, "the offense of (stumbling block, I Cor. 1:23 occasioned to the Jews by) the cross has become done away." Thus the Jews' accusation against Stephen was not that he preached Christ crucified, but that "he spake blasphemous words against this holy place and the law." They would, in some measure, have borne the former, if he had mixed with it justification in part by circumcision and the law, and if he had, through the medium of Christianity, brought converts to Judaism. But if justification in any degree depended on legal ordinances, Christ's crucifixion in that degree was unnecessary, and could profit nothing (vss. 2, 4). Worldly Wiseman, of the town of Carnal Policy, turns Christian out of the narrow way of the Cross, to the house of Legality. But the way to it was up a mountain, which, as Christian advanced, threatened to fall on him and crush him, amidst flashes of lightning from the mountain (Pilgrim's Progress; Heb. 12:18-21). 12. they . . . which trouble you—Translate, as the Greek is different from vs. 10, "they who are unsettling you." were even cut off—even as they desire your foreskin to be cut off and cast away by circumcision, so would that they were even cut off from your communion, being worthless as a castaway foreskin (ch. 1:7, 8; cf. Phil. 3:2). The fathers, JEROME, AMBROSE, AUGUSTINE, and CHRYSOSTOM, explain it, "Would that they would even cut themselves off," i.e., cut off not merely the foreskin, but the whole member: if circumcision be not enough for them, then let them have excision also; an outburst hardly suitable to the gravity of an apostle. But vss. 9, 10 plainly point to excommunication as the judgment threatened against the troublers: and danger of the bad "leaven" spreading, as the reason for it. 13. The "ye" is emphatical, from its position in the Greek, "Ye brethren"; as opposed to those legalists "who trouble you." unto liberty—The Greek expresses, "on a footing of liberty." The state or condition in which ye have been called to salvation, is one of liberty. Gospel liberty consists in three things, freedom from the Mosaic yoke, from sin, and from slavish fear. only . . .—Translate, "Only turn not your liberty into an occasion for the flesh." Do not give the flesh the handle or pretext (Rom. 7:8, "occasion") for its indulgence which it eagerly seeks for; do not let it make Christian "liberty" its pretext for indulgence (vss. 16:17; I Pet. 2:16; II Pet. 2:19; Jude 4). but of serious controversy, whether we be circumcised or not." Granted that in itself it is a small matter; but as every man who is circumcised "is a debtor to do the whole law," v. 3, then your circumcision leads necessarily to your total perversion; as the little portion of leaven, mixed with the batch, soon leavens the whole lump.

10. I have confidence in you. I now feel a persuasion from the Lord that I shall not be permitted to expostulate with you in vain. That ye will be none otherwise minded—that you will be aware of the danger to which you are exposed, that you will retreat in time, and recover the grace which you have lost. But he that troubleth you. The false teacher who sowed doubtful disputations among you, and thus has troubled the repose of the whole church, shall bear his judgment, shall meet with the punishment he deserves for having sown his tares among God's wheat.

11. If I yet preach circumcision. It is very likely that some of the false apostles, hearing of Paul's having circumcised Timothy, Acts xvi. 3, which must have been done about this time, reported him as being an advocate for circumcision, and by this means endeavored to sanction their own doctrine. To this the apostle replies: Were it so, that I am a friend to this measure, is it likely that I should suffer persecution from the Jews? But I am everywhere persecuted by them, and I am persecuted because I am known to be an enemy to circumcision.

Were I a friend to this doctrine, the offence of the cross, preaching salvation only through the sacrifice of Christ, would soon cease; because, to be consistent with myself, if I preached the necessity of circumcision I must soon cease to preach Christ crucified, and then the Jews would be no longer my enemies.

12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you. As the persons who were breeding all this confusion in the churches of Galatia were members of that church, the apostle appears to me to be simply expressing his desire that they might be cut off or "excommunicated" from the church.

13. Ye have been called unto liberty. A total freedom from all the burdensome rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Only use not that liberty for an occasion to the flesh. By flesh here we may understand all the unrenewed desires and propensities of the mind, whatsoever is not under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit of God. Your liberty is from that which would oppress the spirit, not from that which would lay restraints on the flesh. The gospel proclaims liberty from the ceremonial law, but binds you still faster under the moral law. To be freed from the ceremonial law is the gospel liberty; to pretend freedom from the moral law is antinomianism.

MATTHEW HENRY

On the contrary, he would have them by love to serve one another. The liberty we enjoy as Christians is not a licentious liberty: though Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, yet he has not freed us from the obligation of it. Though we ought to stand fast in our Christian liberty, yet we should not insist upon it to the breach of Christian charity, but should always maintain such a temper towards each other as may dispose us by love to serve one another. Two considerations for this purpose: (1) That all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, v. 14. Love is the sum of the whole law. It will appear that we are the disciples of Christ indeed when we have love one to another (John xiii. 35); and, if it do not wholly extinguish those unhappy discords that are among Christians, yet at least the fatal consequences of them will be prevented. (2) The dangerous tendency of a contrary behaviour (v. 15): But, says he, if you bite and devour one another, take heed that you be not consumed one of another. Mutual strifes among brethren, if persisted in, are likely to prove a common ruin. Christian churches can only be ruined by their own hands; if Christians be as brute beasts, biting and devouring each other, what can be expected but that the God of love should deny his grace to them, and the Spirit of love should depart from them, and that the evil spirit should prevail?

II. They should all strive against sin; and happy would it be for the church if Christians would let all their quarrels be swallowed up of this, even a quarrel against sin. This is what we are chiefly concerned to fight against.

1. That there is in everyone a struggle between the flesh and the spirit (v. 17): The flesh lusts against the spirit. On the other hand, the spirit (the renewed part of us) strives against the flesh, hence it comes to pass that we cannot do the things that we would. Even as in a natural man there is something of this struggle (the convictions of his conscience and the corruption of his own heart strive with one another) so in a renewed man, there is a struggle between the old nature and the new nature, the remainders of sin and the beginnings of grace; and this Christians must expect as long as they continue in this world.

2. That it is our duty and interest in this struggle to side with the better part and with our graces against our lusts. He gives us this one general rule, to walk in the Spirit (v. 16): This I say, then, Walk in the Spirit, and you shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. The duty here recommended to us is that we set ourselves to act under the guidance and influence of the blessed Spirit. We may depend upon it that, though we may not be freed from the stirrings of our corrupt nature, though it remain in us, yet it shall not obtain a dominion over us. The best antidote against the poison of sin is to walk in the Spirit.

So it would be a good evidence that they were Christians indeed; for, says the apostle (v. 18), If you be led by the Spirit, you are not under the law. If, in the prevailing bent and tenor of your lives, you be led by the Spirit, it will hence appear that you are not under the law, not under the condemning, though you are still under the commanding, power of it.

3. The apostle specifies the works of the flesh and the fruits of the Spirit, which must be cherished and brought forth (v. 19), &c. He begins with the works of the flesh, which, as they are many, so they are manifest. Some are sins against the seventh commandment, such as adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness.

by love serve one another—Greek, "Be servants (be in bondage) to one another." If ye must be servants, then be servants to one another in love. While free as to legalism, be bound by Love (the article in the Greek personifies love in the abstract) to serve one another (I Cor. 9:19). Here he hints at their unloving strifes springing out of lust of power. "For the lust of power is the mother of heresies" [CHRYSOSTOM]. 14. all the law—Greek, "the whole law," viz., the Mosaic law. Love to God is presupposed as the root from which love to our neighbor springs; and it is in this tense the latter precept (so "word" means here) is said to be the fulfilling of "all the law" (Lev. 19:18). Love is "the law of Christ" (ch. 6:2; Matt. 7:12; 22:39, 40; Rom. 13:9, 10). is fulfilled—Not as received text "is being fulfilled," but as the oldest MSS. read, "has been fulfilled"; and so "receives its full perfection," as rudimentary teachings are fulfilled by the more perfect doctrine. The law only united Israelites together; the Gospel unites all men, and that in relation to God [GROTIUS]. 15. bite—backbite the character. devour—the substance by injuring, extortion, etc. (Hab. 1:13; Matt. 23:14; II Cor. 11:20). consumed . . .—Strength of soul, health of body, character, and resources, are all consumed by broils [BENGEL]. 16. This I say then—Repeating in other words, and explaining the sentiment in vs. 13. "What I mean is this." Walk in the Spirit—Greek, "By (the rule of) the (Holy) Spirit." Cf. vss. 16-18, 22, 25; ch. 6:1-8, with Romans 7: 22; 8:11. The best way to keep tares out of a bushel is to fill it with wheat. the flesh—the natural man, out of which flow the evils specified (vss. 19-21). The spirit and the flesh mutually exclude one another. It is promised, not that we should have no evil lusts, but that we should "not fulfil" them. If the spirit that is in us can be at ease under sin, it is not a spirit that comes from the Holy Spirit. The gentle dove trembles at the sight even of a hawk's feather. 17. For—the reason why walking by the Spirit will exclude fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, viz., their mutual contrariety. the Spirit—not "lusteth," but "tendeth (or some such word is to be supplied) against the flesh." so that ye cannot do the things that ye would—The Spirit strives against the flesh and its evil influence; the flesh against the Spirit and His good influence, so that neither the one nor the other can be fully carried out into action. "But" (vs. 18) where "the Spirit" prevails, the issue of the struggle no longer continues doubtful (Rom. 7:15-20) [BENGEL]. The Greek is, "that ye may not do the things that ye would." "The flesh and Spirit are contrary one to the other," so that you must distinguish what proceeds from the Spirit, and what from the flesh; and you must not fulfil what you desire according to the carnal self, but what the Spirit within you desires [NEANDER]. But the antithesis of vs. 18 ("But . . ."), where the conflict is decided, shows, I think, that here vs. 17 contemplates the inability both for fully accomplishing the good we "would," owing to the opposition of the flesh, and for doing the evil our flesh would desire, owing to the opposition of the Spirit in the awakened man (such as the Galatians are assumed to be), until we yield ourselves wholly by the Spirit to "walk by the Spirit" (vss. 16, 18). 18. "If ye are led (give yourselves up to be led) by (Greek) the Spirit, ye are not under the law." For ye are not working the works of the flesh (vss. 16, 19-21) which bring one "under the law" (Rom. 8:2, 14). The "Spirit makes free from the law of sin and death" (vs. 23). The law is made for a fleshly man, and for the works of the flesh (I Tim. 1:9), "not for a righteous man" (Rom. 6:14, 15). 19-23. Confirming vs. 18, by showing the contrariety between the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit. manifest—The hidden fleshly principle betrays itself palpably by its works, so that these are not hard to discover, and leave no doubt that they come not from the Spirit. which are these—Greek, "such as," for instance. Adultery—omitted in the oldest MSS. lasciviousness—rather, "wantonness" petulance, capricious insolence; it may display itself in "lasciviousness," but not necessarily or constantly so (Mark 7:21, 22. where it is not associated with fleshly lusts) [TRENCH]. "Works" (in the plural) are attributed to the "flesh," because they are divided, and often at variance with one another, and even when taken each one by itself, betray their fleshly origin. But the "fruit of the Spirit" (vs. 23) is singular, because, however manifold the results, they form one harmonious whole. The results of the flesh are not dignified by the name "fruit"; they are but "works" (Eph. 5:9, 11). He enumerates those fleshly works (committed against our neighbor, against God, and against ourselves) to which the Galatians were most prone (the Kelts have al-

ADAM CLARKE

By love serve one another. Having that "faith which worketh by love," serve each other to the uttermost of your power; serve each other, when necessary, as "slaves" serve their masters.

14. For all the law, which respects our duty to our fellows, is fulfilled, is comprehended, in one word: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15. If ye bite and devour one another. These churches seem to have been in a state of great distraction; there were continual altercations among them. They had fallen from the grace of the gospel; and as Christ no longer dwelt in their hearts by faith, pride, anger, ill will, and all unkind and uncharitable tempers took possession of their souls, and they were in consequence alternately destroying each other. Nothing is so destructive to the peace of man and to the peace of the soul as religious disputes; where they prevail, religion in general has little place.

16. Walk in the Spirit. Get back that Spirit of God which you have grieved and lost; take up that spiritual religion which you have abandoned. Ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. If the Spirit of God dwell in and rule your heart, the whole carnal mind will be destroyed; and then, not only carnal ordinances will be abandoned, but also the works and propensities of the flesh.

17. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit. God still continues to strive with you, notwithstanding your apostasy, showing you whence you have fallen and exciting you to return to Him; but your own obstinacy renders all ineffectual; and through the influence of these different principles you are kept in a state of self-opposition and self-distraction, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. You are convinced of what is right, and you wish to do it; but having abandoned the gospel and the grace of Christ, the law and its ordinances which you have chosen in their place afford you no power to conquer your evil propensities. It was on this ground that the apostle exhorted them, v. 16, to "walk in the Spirit," that they might not "fulfil the lust of the flesh," as without the grace of God they could do nothing.

18. But if ye be led of the Spirit. If you receive again the gospel and the grace of Christ, and permit yourselves to be influenced by the Holy Spirit, whom you are now grieving, ye are not under the law, you will not feel those evil propensities which now disgrace and torment you; but they must prevail while you are not under the influence of the grace and Spirit of Christ.

19. Now the works of the flesh are manifest. By flesh we are to understand the evil and fallen state of the soul, no longer under the guidance of God's Spirit and right reason, but under the animal passions; and they are rendered even more irregular and turbulent by the influence of sin, so that man is in a worse state than the brute. And so all-commanding is this evil nature that it leads men into all kinds of crimes, among them the following, which are manifest—known to all, and most prevalent; and though these are most solemnly forbidden by your law, the observance of its ordinances gives no power to overcome them, and provides no pardon for the guilt and condemnation produced by them. Adultery. Illicit connection with a married person. This word is wanting in this place in the best MSS., versions, and fathers, the next term often comprehending both. Fornication. Illicit connection between single or unmarried persons, yet often signifying adultery also. Uncleanness. Whatever is opposite to purity; probably meaning here, as in Rom. i. 24; 2 Cor. xii. 21, unnatural practices; sodomy, bestiality. Lasciviousness. Whatever is contrary to chastity; all lewdness.

Some are sins against the first and second commandments, as idolatry and witchcraft. Others are sins against our neighbour, such as hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, and sometimes break out into murders, not only of the names and reputation, but even of the very lives of our fellow-creatures.

Others are sins against ourselves, such as drunkenness and revellings. Of these and such like, says he, I tell you before, as I have also told you in times past, that those who do such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. These are sins which will undoubtedly shut men out of heaven. He specifies the fruits of the Spirit, which as Christians we are concerned to bring forth, v. 22, 23. As sin is called the work of the flesh, because the flesh is the principle that moves men to it, so grace is said to be the fruit of the Spirit, because it wholly proceeds from the Spirit, as the fruit does from the root.

He particularly commends to us, love and joy, by which may be understood constant delight in God,—peace, with God, or a peaceableness towards others,—long-suffering,—gentleness,—a sweetness of temper, easy to be entreated when any have wronged us,—goodness, readiness to do good to all as we have opportunity, ways been prone to disputations and internal strifes): and those manifestations of the fruit of the Spirit most needed by them (vss. 13, 15). This passage shows that "the flesh" does not mean merely sensuality, as opposed to spirituality; for "divisions" in the catalogue here do not flow from sensuality. The identification of "the natural (Greek, animal-souled) man," with the "carnal" or fleshly man (I Cor. 2:14), shows that "the flesh" expresses human nature as estranged from God. TRENCH observes, as a proof of our fallen state, how much richer is every vocabulary in words for sins, than in those for graces. Paul enumerates seventeen "works of the flesh," only nine manifestations of "the fruit of the Spirit" (cf. Eph. 4:31). 20. witchcraft—sorcery; prevalent in Asia (Acts 19:19; cf. Rev. 21). hatred—Greek, "hatreds." variance—Greek, "strife"; singular in the oldest MSS. emulations—in the oldest MSS. singular, "emulation," or rather, "jealousy"; for the sake of one's own advantage. "Envyings" (vs. 21) are even without advantage to the person himself [BENGEL]. wrath—Greek, plural, "passionate outbreaks" [ALFORD]. strife—rather as Greek, "factions," "cabals"; derived from a Greek root, meaning "a worker for hire": hence, unworthy means for compassing ends, factious practices. seditions—"dissensions," as to secular matters. heresies—as to sacred things (Note, I Cor. 11:19). Self-constituted parties; from a Greek root, to choose. A schism is a more recent split in a congregation from a difference of opinion. Heresy is a schism become inveterate [AUGUSTINE, Con. Crescon. Don., 2, 7].

21. tell . . . before—viz., before the event. I . . . told you in time past—when I was with you. you—who, though maintaining justification by the law, are careless about keeping the law (Rom. 2:21-23). not inherit . . . kingdom of God—(I Cor. 6:9, 10; Eph. 5:5).

22. love—the leader of the band of graces (I Corinthians 13).

gentleness—Greek, "benignity," conciliatory to others; whereas "goodness," though ready to do good, has not such suavity of manner [JEROME]. ALFORD translates, "kindness."

ADAM CLARKE

20. Idolatry. Worshipping of idols; frequenting idol festivals; all the rites of Bacchus, Venus, etc., which were common among the Gentiles. Witchcraft. Pharmaceia from pharmacon, "a drug or poison"; because in all spells and enchantments, whether true or false, drugs were employed. Hatred. "Aversions" and "antipathies," when opposed to brotherly love and kindness. Variance. "Contentions," where the principle of hatred proceeds to open acts; hence contests, altercations, lawsuits, and disputes in general. Emulations. "Envies" or "emulations"; that is, strife to excel at the expense of another; lowering others to set up oneself; unholy zeal, fervently adopting a bad cause, or supporting a good one by cruel means. Wrath. Turbulent passions, disturbing the harmony of the mind, and producing domestic and civil broils and disquietudes. Strife. Disputations, janglings. Seditions. Divisions into separate factions; parties, whether in the church or state. Heresies. "Factions"; parties in the church separating from communion with each other, and setting up altar against altar. The word, which is harmless in itself, is here used in a bad sense.

21. Envyings. "Pain felt, and malignity conceived, at the sight of excellence or happiness," a passion the most base and the least curable of all that disgrace or degrade the fallen soul. Murders. Similarity of sound to the preceding seems to have suggested the word in this association; it is wanting in several MSS. Murder signifies the destruction of human life; and as he who hates his brother in his heart is ready to take away his life, so he is called a murderer. Revellings. Lascivious feastings, with obscene songs, music, etc. And such like. All that proceeds from the evil passions of a fallen spirit, besides those above specified; and all that the law of God specifies and condemns. Of the which I tell you before. When I first preached the gospel to you. As I have also told you in time past. When I paid my second visit to you, for the apostle did visit them twice. See Acts xvi. 6 and xviii. 23. Shall not inherit. They are not children of God, and therefore cannot inherit the Kingdom which belongs only to the children of the divine family.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit. Both "flesh," the sinful dispositions of the human heart, and spirit, the changed or purified state of the soul by the grace and Spirit of God, are represented by the apostle as trees, one yielding good, the other bad fruit; the productions of each being according to the nature of the tree, as the tree is according to the nature of the seed from which it sprang. The bad seed produced a bad tree, yielding all manner of bad fruit; the good seed produced a good tree, bringing forth fruits of the most excellent kind. The tree of the flesh, with all its bad fruits, we have already seen; the tree of the Spirit with its good fruits, we shall now see. Love. An intense desire to please God, and to do good to mankind; the very soul and spirit of all true religion; the fulfilling of the law, and what gives energy to faith itself. Joy. The exultation that arises from a sense of God's mercy communicated to the soul in the pardon of its iniquities, and the prospect of that eternal glory of which it has the foretaste in the pardon of sin. Peace. The calm, quiet, and order which take place in the justified soul instead of the doubts, fears, alarms, and dreadful forebodings which every true penitent more or less feels, and must feel till the assurance of pardon brings peace and satisfaction to the mind. Longsuffering. Long-mindedness, bearing with the frailties and provocations of others, from the consideration that God has borne long with ours and that, if He had not, we should have been speedily consumed; bearing up also through all the troubles and difficulties of life without murmuring or repining; submitting cheerfully to every dispensation of God's providence, and thus deriving benefit from every occurrence. Gentleness. Benignity, affability; a very rare grace, often wanting in many who have a considerable share of Christian excellence. A good education and polished manners, when brought under the influence of the grace of God, will bring out this grace with great effect. Goodness. The perpetual desire and sincere study, not only to abstain from every appearance of evil, but to do good to the bodies and souls of men to the utmost of our ability.

—faith, in what we profess and promise to others,—meekness, not to be easily provoked, and, when we are so, to be soon pacified,— and temperance. Concerning those in whom these fruits of the Spirit are found, the apostle says, There is no law against them. They are not under the law, but under grace; for these fruits of the Spirit, in whomsoever they are found, plainly show that such are led by the Spirit. So (v. 24) he informs us that this is the sincere care and endeavour of all real Christians: And those that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. They are now sincerely endeavouring to die unto sin, as he had died for it. They have not yet obtained a complete victory over it; they have still flesh as well as Spirit in them, and that has its affections and lusts, which continue to give them no little disturbance, but they are seeking the utter ruin and destruction of it. If we would approve ourselves to be Christ's, we must make it our constant care to crucify the flesh. Christ will never own those as his who yield themselves the servants of sin. It is not enough that we cease to do evil, but we must learn to do well. Our Christianity obliges us not only to oppose the works of the flesh, but to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit too. This must be our sincere care and endeavour as well as the other; and that it was the design of the apostle to represent both of these as our duty may be gathered from what follows (v. 25): If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. He had before told us that the Spirit of Christ is a privilege bestowed on all the children of God, ch. iv. 6. Let us show it by behaviour agreeable hereunto; let us evidence our good principles by good practices. It must be by our walking not after the flesh, but after the spirit. We must set ourselves in good earnest both to mortify the deeds of the body, and to walk in newness of life.

4. The apostle concludes this chapter with a caution against pride and envy, v. 26. He here cautions them against being desirous of vainglory, because this would certainly lead them to provoke one another and to envy one another. Thus a foundation is laid for those quarrels and contentions which are inconsistent with that love which Christians ought to maintain towards each other. This therefore the apostle would have us by all means to watch against. (1) The glory which comes from men is vain-glory, which, instead of being desirous of, we should be dead to. (2) An undue regard to the applause of men is one great ground of the unhappy strifes and contentions that exist among Christians.

faith—"faithfulness"; opposed to "heresies" [BENGEL]. ALFORD refers to I Corinthians 13:7, "Believeth all things"· faith in the widest sense, toward God and man. "Trustfulness" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON].

23. temperance—The Greek root implies self-restraint as to one's desires and lusts. against such—not persons, but things, as in vs. 21. no law—confirming vs. 18, "Not under the law" (I Tim. 1:9, 10). The law itself commands love (vs. 14); so far is it from being "against such."

24. The oldest MSS. read, "They that are of Christ Jesus"; they that belong to Christ Jesus; being "led by (His) Spirit" (vs. 18). have crucified the flesh—They nailed it to the cross once for all when they became Christ's, on believing and being baptized (Rom. 6:3, 4); they keep it now in a state of crucifixion (Rom. 6:6); so that the Spirit can produce in them, comparatively uninterrupted by it, "the fruit of the Spirit" (vs. 22). "Man, by faith, is dead to the former standing-point of a sinful life, and rises to a new life (vs. 25) of communion with Christ (Col. 3:3). The act by which they have crucified the flesh with its lust, is already accomplished ideally in principle. But the practice, or outward conformation of the life, must harmonize with the tendency given to the inward life" (vs. 25) [NEANDER]. We are to be executioners, dealing cruelly with the body of sin, which has caused the acting of all cruelties on Christ's body. with the affections—Translate, "with its passions." Thus they are dead to the law's condemning power, which is only for the fleshly, and their lusts (vs. 23). 25. in . . . in—rather, as Greek, "If we live (Note, vs. 24) BY the Spirit, let us also walk (vs. 16; ch. 6:16) BY the Spirit." Let our life in practice correspond to the ideal inner principle of our spiritual life, viz., our standing by faith as dead to, and severed from, sin, and the condemnation of the law. "Life by (or in) the Spirit" is not an occasional influence of the Spirit, but an abiding state, wherein we are continually alive, though sometimes sleeping and inactive. 26. Greek, "Let us not BECOME." While not asserting that the Galatians are "vainglorious" now, he says they are liable to become so. provoking one another—an effect of "vaingloriousness" on the stronger; as "envying" is its effect on the weaker. A danger common both to the orthodox and Judaizing Galatians.

ADAM CLARKE

Faith. Here used for "fidelity"—punctuality in performing promises, conscientious carefulness in preserving what is committed to our trust, in restoring it to its proper owner, in transacting the business confided to us, neither betraying the secret of our friend nor disappointing the confidence of our employer.

23. Meekness. Mildness, indulgence toward the weak and erring, patient suffering of injuries without feeling a spirit of revenge, an even balance of all tempers and passions, the entire opposite to anger. Temperance. "Continence, self-government, or moderation," principally with regard to sensual or animal appetites. Moderation in eating, drinking, sleeping, etc. Against such there is no law. Those whose lives are adorned by the above virtues cannot be condemned by any law, for the whole purpose and design of the moral law of God is fulfilled in those who have the Spirit of God producing in their hearts and lives the preceding fruits.

24. And they that are Christ's, all genuine Christians, have crucified the flesh—are so far from obeying its dictates and acting under its influence that they have crucified their sensual appetites; they have nailed them to the cross of Christ, where they have expired with Him. Hence, says Paul, Rom. vi. 6, "our old man," the flesh, with its affections and lusts, "is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." By which we see that God has fully designed to save all who believe in Christ from all sin, whether outward or inward, with all the affections, irregular "passions," and lusts, disorderly "wishes" and "desires"—all that a man may feel contrary to love and purity, and all that he may desire contrary to moderation and that self-denial peculiar to the Christian character.

25. If we live in the Spirit, if we profess to believe a spiritual religion, let us also walk in the Spirit—let us show in our lives and conversation that the Spirit of God dwells in us.

26. Let us not be desirous of vain glory. "Let us not be vainglorious"—boasting of our attainments; vaunting ourselves to be superior to others; or seeking honor from those things which do not possess moral good, in birth, riches, or eloquence. Provoking one another. What this may refer to we cannot tell. Whether to the Judaizing teachers endeavoring to set themselves up beyond the apostle, and their attempts to lessen him in the people's eyes, that they might secure to themselves the public confidence and thus destroy Paul's influence in the Galatian churches, or whether to some other matter in the internal economy of the church, we know not. But the exhortation is necessary for every Christian, and for every Christian church. He who professes to seek the honor that comes from God should not be desirous of vain glory. He who desires to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace should not provoke another. He who knows that he never deserved any gift or blessing from God should not envy another those blessings which the divine goodness may have thought proper to bestow upon him.

I. We are here taught to deal tenderly with those who are overtaken in a fault, v. 1; if a man be overtaken in a fault, brought to sin by the surprise of temptation. It is one thing to overtake a fault by contrivance and deliberation, and another thing to be overtaken in a fault. Great tenderness should be used. Those who are spiritual must restore such a one with the spirit of meekness. 1. The duty we are directed to—to restore such. The original word signifies to set in joint, as a dislocated bone. We should endeavour to set them in joint again, comforting them in a sense of pardoning mercy, confirming our love to them. 2. The manner wherein this is to be done: With the spirit of meekness; not in wrath and passion, as those who triumph in a brother's falls. Many needful reproofs lose their efficacy by being given in wrath; but when they are managed with tenderness, and from sincere concern for the welfare of those to whom they are given, they are likely to make a due

CHAPTER 6

Vss. 1-18. EXHORTATIONS CONTINUED; TO FORBEARANCE AND HUMILITY; LIBERALITY TO TEACHERS AND IN GENERAL. POSTSCRIPT AND BENEDICTION. 1. Brethren—An expression of kindness to conciliate attention. Translate as Greek, "If a man even be overtaken" (i.e., caught in the very act [ALFORD and ELLICOTT]; BEFORE he expects; unexpectedly). BENGEL explains the "before" in the Greek compound verb, "If a man be overtaken in a fault before ourselves"; If another has really been overtaken in a fault the first; for often he who is first to find fault, is the very one who has first transgressed. a fault—Greek, "a transgression," "a fall"; such as a falling back into legal bondage. Here he gives monition to those who have not so fallen, "the spiritual," to be not "vainglorious" (ch. 5:26), but forbearing to such (Rom. 15:1). restore—The Greek is used of a dislocated limb, reduced to its place. Such is the tenderness with which we should treat a fallen member of the Church in restoring

1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken. If he be "surprised, seized on" without warning, "suddenly invaded, taken before he is aware"; all these meanings the word has in connections similar to this. Ye which are spiritual. You who still retain the grace of the gospel, and have wisdom and experience in divine things. Restore such an one. Bring the man "back into his place." It is a metaphor taken from a dislocated limb, brought back into its place by the hand of a skillful and tender surgeon. In the spirit of meekness. Use no severity nor haughty carriage towards him; as the man was suddenly overtaken, he is already deeply humbled and distressed, and needs much encouragement and lenient usage. There is a great difference between a man who being suddenly assailed falls into sin and the man who transgressed in consequence of having walked in the counsel of impression. 3. A very good reason why this should be done with meekness: Considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. We ought to deal very tenderly with those who are overtaken in sin, it may some time or other be our own case. This will dispose us to do by others as we desire to be done by in such a case.

II. We are here directed to bear one another's burdens, v. 2. This may be considered either as referring to what goes before, and so may teach us to exercise forbearance and compassion towards one another, or a more general precept it directs us to sympathize with one another under the various trials and troubles that we may meet with. So we shall fulfil the law of Christ. This is to act agreeably to the law of his precept, which is the law of love, and it would also be agreeable to his pattern and example, which have the force of a law to us. Though as Christians we are freed from the law of Moses, yet we are under the law of Christ; and therefore, instead of laying unnecessary burdens upon others, it much more becomes us to fulfil the law of Christ by bearing one another's burdens. The apostle being aware how great a hindrance pride would be to the mutual condescension which he had been recommending (v. 3) takes care to caution us against this; he supposes it as a very possible thing for a man to think himself to be something—when in truth he is nothing. Such a one does but deceive himself; while he imposes upon others, by pretending to what he has not, he puts the greatest cheat upon himself. He is neither the freer from mistakes nor will he be the more secure against temptations for the good opinion he has of his own sufficiency, but rather the more liable to fall into them; for he that thinks he stands has need to take heed lest he fall. Self-conceit is but self-deceit. There is not a more dangerous cheat in the world than self-deceit.

III. We are advised everyone to prove his own work, v. 4. By our own work is chiefly meant our own actions or behaviour. These the apostle directs us to prove, that is, seriously to examine them by the rule of God's word. Instead of being forward to judge and censure others, it would much more become us to search and try our own ways; our business lies more at home than abroad, with ourselves than with other men. The best way to keep us from being proud of ourselves is to prove our ownselves: the better we are acquainted with our own hearts and ways, the less liable shall we be to despise and the more disposed to compassionate and help others.

1. This is the way to have rejoicing in ourselves alone. If we set ourselves in good earnest to prove our own work, this, he intimates, would be a much better ground of joy and satisfaction than to be able to rejoice in another, either in the good opinion which others may have of us, or by comparing ourselves with others. The joy that results thence is nothing to that which arises from trial of ourselves by the rule of God's word, and our being able thereupon to approve ourselves to him. Though we have nothing in ourselves to boast of, yet we may have the matter of rejoicing in ourselves. If our consciences can witness for us we may upon good ground rejoice therein. The true way to have rejoicing in ourselves is to be much in proving our own works. If we have the testimony of our consciences that we are accepted of God, we need not much concern ourselves about what others think or say of us.

2. The other argument which the apostle uses is that every man shall bear his own burden (v. 5). There is a day come when we must all give an account of ourselves to God; and he declares that then the judgment will proceed, and the sentence pass, according as our state and behaviour have really been in the sight of God. If we must certainly be called to an account hereafter, surely we ought to be often calling ourselves to an account here, to see whether or no we are such as God will own and approve then. If it were more our practice instead of bearing hard upon one another, we should be more ready to fulfil that law of Christ by which we must be judged in bearing one another's burdens.

IV. Christians are here exhorted to be free and liberal in maintaining their ministers (v. 6): Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth, in all good things. As there are some to be taught, so there are others who are appointed to teach them. Reason itself directs us to put a difference between the teachers and the taught, and the scriptures sufficiently declare that it is the will of God we should do so. It is the word of God wherein ministers are to teach and instruct others. It is the word of God which is the only rule of faith and life. They are no further to be regarded than as they speak according to this rule. It is the duty of those who are taught in the word to support those who are appointed to teach him to a better state. the spirit of meekness—the meekness which is the gift of the Holy Spirit working in our spirit (ch. 5:22, 25). "Meekness" is that temper of spirit towards God whereby we accept His dealings without disputing; then, towards men, whereby we endure meekly their provocations, and do not withdraw ourselves from the burdens which their sins impose upon us [TRENCH]. considering thyself—Transition from the plural to the singular. When congregations are addressed collectively, each individual should take home the monition to himself. thou also be tempted—as is likely to happen to those who reprove others without meekness (cf. Matt. 7:2-5; II Tim. 2:25; Jas. 2:13). 2. If ye, legalists, must "bear burdens," then instead of legal burdens (Matt. 23:4), "bear one another's burdens," lit., "weights." Distinguished by BENGEL from "burden," vs. 4 (a different Greek word, "load"): "weights" exceed the strength of those under them; "burden" is proportioned to the strength. so fulfil—or as other old MSS. read, "so ye will fulfil," Greek, "fill up," "thoroughly fulfil." the law of Christ—viz., "love" (ch. 5:14). Since ye desire "the law," then fulfil the law of Christ, which is not made up of various minute observances, but whose sole "burden" is "love" (John 13:34; 15:12); Romans 15:3 gives Christ as the example in the particular duty here. 3. Self-conceit, the chief hindrance to forbearance and sympathy towards our fellow men, must be laid aside. something—possessed of some spiritual pre-eminence, so as to be exempt from the frailty of other men. when he is nothing—The Greek is subjective: "Being, if he would come to himself, and look on the real fact, nothing" [ALFORD] (vss. 2, 6; Rom. 12:3; I Cor. 8:2). deceiveth himself—lit., "he mentally deceives himself." Cf. James 1:26, "deceiveth his own heart."

4. his own work—not merely his own opinion of himself. have rejoicing in himself alone—Translate, "Have his (matter for) glorying in regard to himself alone, and not in regard to another" (viz., not in regard to his neighbor, by comparing himself with whom, he has fancied he has matter for boasting as that neighbor's superior). Not that really a man by looking to "himself alone" is likely to find cause for glorying in himself. Nay, in vs. 5, he speaks of a "burden" or load, not of matter for glorying, as what really belongs to each man. But he refers to the idea those whom he censures had of themselves: they thought they had cause for "glorying" in themselves, but it all arose from unjust self-conceited comparison of themselves with others, instead of looking at home. The only true glorying, if glorying it is to be called, is in the testimony of a good conscience, glorying in the cross of Christ. 5. For (by this way, vs. 4, of proving himself, not depreciating his neighbor by comparison) each man shall bear his own "burden," or rather, "load" (viz., of sin and infirmity), the Greek being different from that in vs. 2. This verse does not contradict vs. 2. There he tells them to bear with others' "burdens" of infirmity in sympathy; here, that self-examination will make a man to feel he has enough to do with "his own load" of sin, without comparing himself boastfully with his neighbor. Cf. vs. 3. Instead of "thinking himself to be something," he shall feel the "load" of his own sin; and this will lead him to bear sympathetically with his neighbor's burden of infirmity. ÆSOP says a man carries two bags over his shoulder, the one with his own sins hanging behind, that with his neighbor's sins in front. 6. From the mention of bearing one another's burdens, he passes to one way in which those burdens may be borne—by ministering out of their earthly goods to their spiritual teachers. The "but " in the Greek, beginning of this verse, expresses this: I said, Each shall bear his own burden; BUT I do not intend that he should not think of others, and especially of the wants of his ministers. communicate unto him—"impart a share unto his teacher": lit., him that teacheth catechetically. in all good things—in every kind of the good things of this life, according as the case may require (Rom. 15:27; I Cor. 9:11, 14).

the ungodly or stood in the way of sinners.

Considering thyself. Looking to thyself; as he fell through a moment of unwatchfulness, look about, that you are not surprised. As he fell, so may you. You are now warned at his expense; therefore keep a good lookout. Lest thou also be tempted. And having had this warning, you will have less to plead in extenuation of your offense.

2. Bear ye one another's burdens. Have sympathy; feel for each other; and consider the case of a distressed brother as your own. And so fulfil the law of Christ. That law or commandment, "Ye shall love one another"; or that, "Do unto all men as ye would they should do unto you." We should be as indulgent to the infirmities of others as we can be consistently with truth and righteousness. Our brother's infirmity may be his burden; and if we do not choose to help him to bear it, let us not reproach him because he is obliged to carry the load.

3. If a man think himself to be something. I.e., to be a proper Christian man. When he is nothing; being destitute of that charity which beareth, hopeth, and endureth all things. See 1 Cor. xiii. 1, etc. Those who suppose themselves to excel all others in piety, understanding, etc., while they are harsh, censorious, and overbearing, prove that they have not the charity that "thinketh no evil," and in the sight of God are only "as sounding brass" and "a tinkling cymbal." There are no people more censorious or uncharitable than those among some religious people who pretend to more light and a deeper communion with God. They are generally carried away with a sort of sublime, high-sounding phraseology which seems to argue a wonderfully deep acquaintance with divine things; stripped of this, many of them are like Samson without his hair.

4. Prove his own work. Let him examine himself and his conduct by the words and example of Christ, and if he find that they bear this touchstone, then he shall have rejoicing in himself alone, feeling that he resembles his Lord and Master, and not in another—not derive his consolation from comparing himself with another who may be weaker or less instructed than himself. The only rule for a Christian is the word of Christ; the only pattern for his imitation is the example of Christ. He should not compare himself with others; they are not his standard. Christ has left us an example that we should follow His steps.

5. Every man shall bear his own burden. All must answer for themselves, not for their neighbors. And every man must expect to be dealt with by the divine Judge, as his character and conduct have been. The greater offenses of another will not excuse your smaller crimes. Every man must give account of himself to God.

6. Let him that is taught in the word, he who receives instructions in Christianity by the public preaching of the Word. Communicate unto him that teacheth, contribute to the support of the man who has dedicated himself to the work of the ministry, and who gives up his time and his life to preach the gospel. It appears that some of the believers in Galatia could receive the Christian ministry without contributing to its support. This is both ungrateful and base. We do not expect that a common schoolmaster will give up his time to teach our children their alphabet without being paid for it; and can we suppose that it is just for any person to sit under the preaching of the gospel in order to grow wise unto salvation by it, and not contribute to the support of the spiritual teacher? It is unjust.

them; for they are to communicate to them in all good things. It is but fit and equitable that, while they are sowing to others spiritual things, they should reap their carnal things.

V. A caution to take heed of mocking God, or of deceiving ourselves, by imagining that he can be imposed upon by mere professions (v. 7): Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Many are apt to excuse themselves from the work of religion, though at the same time they may make a show of it. Hereby they may possibly impose upon others, yet they do but deceive themselves if they think to impose upon God. As he cannot be deceived, so he will not be mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. Our present time is seed-time: in the other world there will be a great harvest. We shall reap then as we sow now. And he further informs us (v. 8) that, as there are two sorts of seedness, so accordingly will the reckoning be hereafter: If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption; a mean and short-lived satisfaction at present, and ruin and misery at the end of it. But, on the other hand, those who sow to the Spirit, may depend upon it that of the Spirit they shall reap life everlasting—they shall have the truest comfort in their present course, and an eternal life and happiness at the end of it. The God we have to do with will certainly deal with us hereafter, not according to our professions, but our practices.

VI. A further caution, not to be weary in well doing, v. 9. There is in all of us too great a proneness to this; we are very apt to flag and tire in duty. In due season we shall reap, if we faint not. There is a recompence of reward in reserve for all who sincerely employ themselves in well doing. Though our reward may be delayed, yet it will surely come.

VII. An exhortation to all Christians to do good in their places (v. 10): As we have therefore an opportunity, &c. It is not enough that we be good ourselves, but we must do good to others. 1. The objects of this duty are more generally all men. We are not to confine our charity and beneficence within too narrow bounds, but should be ready to extend it to all as far as we are capable. We are to have a special regard to the household of faith. Though others are not to be excluded, yet these are to be preferred. 2. The rule which we are to observe in doing good as we have opportunity. (1) We should be sure to do it while we have opportunity, or while our life lasts. We must not, as too many do, neglect it in our lifetime, and defer it till we come to die, under a pretence of doing something of this nature then: by leaving something behind us for the good of others, when we can no longer keep it ourselves. But we should take care to do good in our lifetime, yea, to make this the business of our lives. (2) We should be ready to improve every opportunity for it. Whenever God gives us an opportunity of being useful to others, he expects we should improve it, according to our capacity and ability. None who stand in need of us are to be wholly overlooked, yet there is a difference to be made between some and others.

The apostle seems as if he intended here to have put an end to the epistle. As a particular mark of his respect for them, he had written this large letter with his own hand, and had not made use of another as his amanuenis. But such is his affection to them that he cannot break off till he has once again given them the true character of those teachers.

I. False teachers were men who desired to make a fair show in the flesh, v. 12. They were very zealous for the externals of religion, though they had little or no regard to real piety, for, neither do they themselves keep the law. Frequently those have least of the substance of religion who are most solicitous to make a show of it. They constrained the Gentile Christians to be circumcised, only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ. They were willing to sleep in a whole skin, and to save their worldly cargo, and cared not though they made shipwreck of faith and a good conscience.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

God is not mocked—The Greek verb is, literally, to sneer with the nostrils drawn up in contempt. God does not suffer Himself to be imposed on by empty words: He will judge according to works, which are seeds sown for eternity of either joy or woe. Excuses for illiberality in God's cause (vs. 6) seem valid before men, but are not so before God (Ps. 50: 21). soweth—especially of his resources (II Cor. 9:6). that—Greek, "this"; this and nothing else. reap—at the harvest, the end of the world (Matt. 13: 39). 8. Translate, "He that soweth unto his own flesh," with a view to fulfilling its desires. He does not say, "His spirit," as he does say, "His flesh." For in ourselves we are not spiritual, but carnal. The flesh is devoted to selfishness. corruption—i.e., destruction (Phil. 3:19). Cf. as to the deliverance of believers from "corruption" (Rom. 8:21). The use of the term "corruption" instead, implies that destruction is not an arbitrary punishment of fleshly-mindedness, but is its natural fruit; the corrupt flesh producing corruption, which is another word for destruction: corruption is the fault, and corruption the punishment (Note, I Cor. 3:17; II Pet. 2:12). Future life only expands the seed sown here. Men cannot mock God because they can deceive themselves. They who sow tares cannot reap wheat. They alone reap life eternal who sow to the Spirit (Ps. 126:6; Prov. 11:18; 22:8; Hos. 8: 7; 10:12; Luke 16:25; Rom. 8:11; Jas. 5:7). 9. (II Thess. 3:13.) And when we do good, let us also persevere in it without fainting. in due season—in its own proper season, God's own time (I Tim. 6:15). faint not—lit., "be relaxed." Stronger than "be not weary." Weary of well-doing refers to the will; "faint not" to relaxation of the powers [BENGEL]. No one should faint, as in an earthly harvest sometimes happens. 10. Translate, "So then, according as (i.e., in proportion as) we have season (i.e., opportunity), let us work (a distinct Greek verb from that for "do," in vs. 9) that which is (in each case) good." As thou art able, and while thou art able, and when thou art able (Eccles. 9:10). We have now the "season" for sowing, as also there will be hereafter the "due season" (vs. 9) for reaping. The whole life is, in one sense, the "seasonable opportunity" to us; and, in a narrower sense, there occur in it more especially convenient seasons. The latter are sometimes lost in looking for still more convenient seasons (Acts 24:25). We shall not always have the opportunity "we have" now. Satan is sharpened to the greater zeal in injuring us, by the shortness of his time (Rev. 12:12). Let us be sharpened to the greater zeal in well-doing by the shortness of ours. them who are of the household—Every right-minded man does well to the members of his own family (I Tim. 5:8); so believers are to do to those of the household of faith, i.e., those whom faith has made members of "the household of God" (Eph. 2:19); "the house of God" (I Tim. 3:15; I Pet. 4:17). 11. Rather, "See in how large letters I have written." The Greek is translated "how great" in Hebrews 7:4, the only other passage where it occurs in the New Testament. Owing to his weakness of eyes (ch. 4:15) he wrote in large letters. So JEROME. All the oldest MSS. are written in uncial, i.e., capital letters, the cursive, or small letters, being of more recent date. Paul seems to have had a difficulty in writing, which led him to make the uncial letters larger than ordinary writers did. The mention of these is as a token by which they would know that he wrote the whole Epistle with his own hand; as he did also the pastoral Epistle, which this Epistle resembles in style. He usually dictated his Epistles to an amanuensis, excepting the concluding salutation, which he wrote himself (Rom. 16:22; I Cor. 16:21). This letter, he tells the Galatians, he writes with his own hand, no doubt in order that they may see what a regard he had for them, in contrast to the Judaizing teachers (vs. 12), who sought only their own ease. If English Version be retained, the words, "how large a letter" (lit., "in how large letters"), will not refer to the length of the Epistle absolutely, but that it was a large one for him to have written with his own hand. NEANDER supports English Version, as more appropriate to the earnestness of the apostle and the tone of the Epistle: "How large" will thus be put for "how many." 12. Contrast between his zeal in their behalf, implied in vs. 11, and the zeal for self on the part of the Judaizers. make a fair show—(II Cor. 5:12). in the flesh—in outward things. they—it is "these" who. . . . constrain you—by example (vs. 13) and importuning. only lest—"only that they may not . . ." (cf. ch. 5:11). suffer persecution—They escaped in a great degree the Jews' bitterness against Christianity and the offense of the cross of Christ, by making the Mosaic law a

ADAM CLARKE

7. Be not deceived. Neither deceive yourselves nor permit yourselves to be deceived by others. He seems to refer to the Judaizing teachers. God is not mocked. You cannot deceive Him, and He will not permit you to mock Him with pretended instead of real services. Whatsoever a man soweth. Whatsoever kind of grain a man sows in his field, of that shall he reap; for no other species of grain can proceed from that which is sown.

8. He that soweth to his flesh. In like manner, he that soweth to the flesh, who indulges his sensual and animal appetites, shall have corruption as the crop: you cannot expect to lead a bad life and go to heaven at last. According as your present life is, so will be your eternal life; whether your sowing be to the flesh or to the Spirit, so will your eternal reaping be. To sow here means transacting the concerns of a man's natural life. To reap signifies his enjoyment or punishment in another world. Probably by flesh and Spirit the apostle means Judaism and Christianity. Circumcision of the flesh was the principal rite of the former; circumcision in the heart, by the Spirit, the chief rite of the latter. Hence the one may have been called flesh; the other, Spirit. He who rejects the gospel, and trusts only in the rites and ceremonies of the law for salvation, will reap endless disappointment and misery. He who trusts in Christ, and receives the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, shall reap life everlasting.

9. Let us not be weary. Well doing is easier in itself than ill doing; and the danger of growing weary in the former arises only from the opposition to good in our own nature, or the outward hindrances we may meet with from a gainsaying and persecuting world. In due season we shall reap. As a husbandman, in ploughing, sowing, and variously laboring in his fields, is supported by the hope of a plentiful harvest, which he cannot expect before the right and appointed time, so every follower of God may be persuaded that he shall not be permitted to pray, weep, deny himself, and live in a conformity to his Maker's will without reaping the fruit of it in eternal glory. And although no man obtains glory because he has prayed, yet none can expect glory who do not seek it in this way. This is sowing to the Spirit; and the Spirit and the grace are furnished by Christ Jesus, and by Him the kingdom of Heaven is opened to all believers; but only those who believe, love, and obey shall enter into it.

10. As we have therefore opportunity. While it is the time of sowing let us sow the good seed; and let our love be, as the love of Christ is, free, manifested to all. Let us help all who need help according to the uttermost of our power, but let the first objects of our regard be those who are of the household of faith—the members of the Church of Christ, who form one family, of which Jesus Christ is the Head. Those have the first claims on our attention; but all others have their claims also, and therefore we should do good unto all.

12. A fair shew in the flesh. The Jewish religion was general in the region of Galatia and was respectable. As it was then professed and practiced among the Jews, this religion had nothing very grievous to the old man; an unrenewed nature might go through all its observances with little pain or cross-bearing. On the other hand, Christianity could not be very popular; it was too strict. A Jew made a fair show there, according to his carnal system, and it was a temptation to a weak Christian to swerve into Judaism, that he might be exempted from persecution and be creditable among his countrymen.

MATTHEW HENRY

They were men who had no further zeal for the law than as it subserved their carnal designs; for they desired to have these Christians circumcised, that they might glory in their flesh (v. 13), that they might say they had gained them over to their side.

II. He acquaints us, on the other hand, with his own temper and behaviour.

1. His principal glory was in the cross of Christ: God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, v. 14. This was what the Jews stumbled at and the Greeks accounted foolishness; and the judaizing teachers themselves were for mixing the observance of the law of Moses with faith in Christ, as necessary to salvation. But Paul was so far from being offended at the cross of Christ that he gloried in it, and rejected the thought of setting up anything in competition with it, with the utmost abhorrence. God forbid, &c. This was the ground of all his hope as a Christian, and whatever trials his firm adherence to it might bring upon him, he was ready not only to submit to them, but to rejoice in them. There is the greatest reason why we should glory in it, for to it we owe all our joys and hopes.

2. He was dead to the world. By Christ the world was crucified to him, and he to the world. He had got above both the smiles and the frowns of it, and had become as indifferent to it as one who is dying out of it. The more we contemplate the sufferings our dear Redeemer met with from the world the less likely shall we be to be in love with it.

3. He did not lay the stress of his religion on one side or the other of the contesting interests, but on sound Christianity, v. 15. What they laid so great a stress upon Paul made very little account of. He very well knew that in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availed anything nor uncircumcision, as to men's acceptance with God, but a new creature. Here he instructs us both wherein real religion does not and wherein it does consist. It does not consist in our being in this or the other denomination of Christians; but it consists in our being new creatures; in our being renewed in the spirit of our minds and having Christ formed in us. It is a change of mind and heart, whereby we are enabled to believe in the Lord Jesus and to live a life of devotedness to God. No outward professions, nor particular names, will ever be sufficient to recommend us to him. Were Christians duly concerned to experience this in themselves, and to promote it in others, if it did not make them lay aside their distinguishing names, yet it would at least take them off from laying so great a stress upon them as they too often do. And as many as walk according to this rule peace be upon them, and mercy upon the Israel of God. The blessings which he desires or which he gives them the hope and prospect of (for the words may be taken either as a prayer or a promise), are peace and mercy. A foundation is laid for these in that gracious change which is wrought in them. These, he declares, shall be the portion of all the Israel of God, all sincere Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles, all who are Israelites indeed. The Jews and judaizing teachers were for confining these blessings to such as were circumcised. Real Christians are such as walk by rule; not a rule of their own devising, but that which God himself has prescribed to them. Even those who walk according to this rule do yet stand in need of the mercy of God.

4. He had cheerfully suffered persecution for the sake of Christ and Christianity, v. 17. He had already suffered much in the cause of Christ, for he bore in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, the scars of those wounds which he had sustained from persecuting enemies, for his steady adherence to him. With a becoming warmth and vehemence, suitable to his authority as an apostle and to the deep concern of mind he was under, he insists upon it that no man should henceforth trouble him, by opposing his doctrine or authority, or by any such reproaches as had been cast upon him. It may justly be presumed that men are fully persuaded of those truths in the defence of which they are willing to suffer. It is very unjust to charge those things upon others which are contrary not only to their profession, but their sufferings too.

III. The apostle concludes the epistle with his apostolical benediction, v. 18. He calls them his brethren, and takes his leave of them with this very affectionate prayer, that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ may be with their spirit. This was a usual farewell wish of the apostle's. And herein he prays that they might enjoy the favour of Christ, all that grace which was needful to establish them in their Christian course, and to encourage and comfort them under all the trials of life and the prospect of death itself.

necessary preliminary; in fact, making Christian converts into Jewish proselytes. 13. Translate, "For not even do they who submit to circumcision, keep the law themselves (Rom. 2:17-23), but they wish you (emphatical) to be circumcised," etc. They arbitrarily selected circumcision out of the whole law, as though observing it would stand instead of their non-observance of the rest of the law. that they may glory in your flesh—viz., in the outward change (opposed to an inward change wrought by the SPIRIT) which they have effected in bringing you over to their own Jewish-Christian party. 14. Translate, "But as for me (in opposition to those gloriers 'in your flesh,' vs. 13), God forbid that I . . . . in the cross—the atoning death on the cross. Cf. Philippians 3:3, 7, 8, as a specimen of his glorying. The "cross," the great object of shame to them, and to all carnal men, is the great object of glorying to me. For by it, the worst of deaths, Christ has destroyed all kinds of death [AUGUSTINE, Tract 36, on John, sec. 4]. We are to testify the power of Christ's death working in us, after the manner of crucifixion (ch. 5:24; Rom. 6.5, 6). our—He reminds the Galatians by this pronoun, that they had a share in the "Lord Jesus Christ" (the full name is used for greater solemnity), and therefore ought to glory in Christ's cross, as he did. the world—inseparably allied to the "flesh" (vs. 13). Legal and fleshly ordinances are merely outward, and "elements of the world" (ch. 4:3). is—rather, as Greek, "has been crucified to me" (ch. 2:20). He used "crucified" for dead (Col. 2:20, "dead with Christ"), to imply his oneness with Christ crucified (Phil. 3:10): "the fellowship of His sufferings being made conformable unto His death." 15. availeth—The oldest MSS. read, "is" (cf. ch. 5:6). Not only are they of no avail, but they are nothing." So far are they from being matter for "glorying," that they are "nothing." But Christ's cross is "all in all," as a subject for glorying, in "the new creature" (Eph. 2:10, 15, 16). new creature—(II Cor. 5:17). A transformation by the renewal of the mind (Rom. 12:2).

16. as many—contrasting with the "as many," vs. 12. rule—lit., a straight rule, to detect crookedness; so a rule of life. peace—from God (Eph. 2:14-17; 6:23). mercy—(Rom. 15:9). Israel of God—not the Israel after the flesh, among whom those teachers wish to enrol you; but the spiritual seed of Abraham by faith (ch. 3:9, 29; Rom. 2:28, 29; Phil. 3:3).

17. let no man trouble me—by opposing my apostolic authority, seeing that it is stamped by a sure seal, viz., "I (in contrast to the Judaizing teachers who gloried in the flesh) bear" (as a high mark of honor from the King of kings). the marks—properly, marks branded on slaves to indicate their owners. So Paul's scars of wounds received for Christ's sake, indicate to whom he belongs, and in whose free and glorious service he is (II Cor. 11:23-25). The Judaizing teachers gloried in the circumcision mark in the flesh of their followers; Paul glories in the marks of suffering for Christ on his own body (cf. vs. 14; Phil. 3:10; Col. 1:24). the Lord—omitted in the oldest MSS.

18. Brethren—Place it, as Greek, last in the sentence, before the "Amen." After much rebuke and monition, he bids them farewell with the loving expression of brotherhood as his last parting word (Note, ch. 1:6). be with your spirit—which, I trust, will keep down the flesh (I Thess. 5:23; II Tim. 4:22; Philemon 25).

13. Neither they themselves who are circumcised. They received circumcision and professed Judaism, not from a desire to be conformed to the will of God, but Judaism was popular, and the more converts the false teachers could make, the more occasion of glorying they had; and they wished to get those Christian converts to receive circumcision, that they might glory in their flesh.

14. But God forbid that I should glory. Whatever others may do, or whatever they may exult or glory in, God forbid that I should "exult" except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; in the grand doctrine that justification and salvation are only through Christ crucified, He having made an atonement for the sin of the world by His passion and death. And I glory also in the disgrace and persecution which I experience through my attachment to this crucified Christ.

By whom the world is crucified unto me. Jewish rites and Gentile vanities are equally insipid to me; I know them to be empty and worthless. If Jews and Gentiles despise me, I despise that in which they trust; through Jesus, all are crucified unto me.

15. In Christ Jesus. Under the dispensation of the gospel, of which He is Head and supreme, neither circumcision, nothing that the Jew can boast of, nothing that the Gentile can call excellent, availeth any thing—can in the least contribute to the salvation of the soul. But a new creature. "But a new creation"; not a new creature merely (for this might be restrained to any new power or faculty), but a total renewal of the whole man, of all the powers and passions of the soul; and as creation could not be effected but by the power of the Almighty, so this change cannot be effected but by the same energy.

16. As many as walk according to this rule. "This canon"; viz., what is laid down in the preceding verses, that redemption is through the sacrifice of Christ, that circumcision and uncircumcision are equally unavailable, and that none can be saved without being created anew. This is the grand canon or "rule" in Christianity. Peace be on them. Those who act from this conviction will have the peace and mercy of God; for it is in this way that mercy is communicated and peace obtained. The Israel of God. The true Christians, called here the Israel of God, to distinguish them from Israel according to the flesh.

17. From henceforth let no man trouble me. Put an end to your contentions among yourselves; return to the pure doctrine of the gospel; abandon those who are leading you astray; separate from the church those who corrupt and disturb it; and let me be grieved no longer with your defections from the truth. I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus. The stigmata, of which the apostle speaks here, may be understood as implying the scars of the wounds which he had received in the work of the ministry; and that he had such scars we may well conceive when we know that he had been scourged, stoned, and maltreated in a variety of ways. The writer could show such scars himself, received in the same way. Or the apostle may allude to the stigmata or marks with which servants and slaves were often impressed, in order to ascertain whose property they were. You glory in your mark of circumcision; I glory in the marks which I bear in my body for the testimony of the Lord; I am an open, professed Christian, and have given full proof of my attachment to the cause of Christianity.

18. The grace, favor, benevolence, and continual influence of the Lord Jesus, be with your spirit—may it live in your heart, enlighten and change your souls, and be conspicuous in your life!

Unto the Galatians, written from Rome. This, or the major part of it, is wanting in the best and most ancient MSS.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS

I. Introduction (1:1, 2)
A. The message (1:1)
B. The salutation (1:2)

II. The Church—the heavenly calling (1:3-3:21)
A. Inclusive preliminary benediction (1:3)
B. Predestination—"before the foundation of the world" (1:4-23)
1. The predestined purpose (1:4-6)
2. The predestined method (1:7-14)
3. The parenthetical prayer (1:15-23)
B. Edification—"now . . . made nigh" (2:1-22)
1. The materials—individuals: the workmanship of God (2:1-10)
2. The building—the union of such individuals in one Church (2:11-22)
C. Vocation—"unto all generations for ever and ever" (3:1-21)
1. The personal parenthesis (3:2-13)
2. The great prayer (3:1, 14-19)
3. The great doxology (3:20, 21)

III. The Church—the earthly conduct (4:1-6:18)
A. Concerning the Church (4:1-16)
1. Basic unity (4:1-6)
2. Growth (4:7-12, 14-16)
3. Ultimate unity (4:13)
B. Concerning conduct (4:17-6:9)
1. Individual (4:17-5:21)
2. Family (5:22-6:4)
3. Household (6:5-9)
C. Concerning conflict (6:10-18)
1. "Put on the armor" (6:10-12)
2. "Take up the armor" (6:13)
3. "Stand" (6:14-18)

IV. Conclusion (6:19-24)
A. Personal conclusion (6:19-22)
B. Resultant final benediction (6:23, 24)

Some think that this epistle to the Ephesians was a circular letter sent to several churches. It is the only one of all Paul's epistles that has nothing in it peculiarly adapted to the case of that particular church; but it has much of common concernment to all Christians. It is an epistle that bears date out of a prison: and some have observed that what this apostle wrote when he was prisoner had the greatest relish and savour in it of the things of God. When his tribulations did abound, his consolations did much more abound. The apostle's design is to settle and establish the Ephesians in the truth, and further to acquaint them with the mystery of the gospel. In the former part he represents the great privilege of the Ephesians, who were now converted to Christianity and received into covenant with God (chs. 1-3). In the latter part he instructs them in the principal duties of religion.

1. The title St. Paul takes to himself—Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, &c. Such a one Paul was by the will of God. Every faithful minister of Christ may, with our apostle, reflect on it as an honour that he is what he is by the will of God. 2. The persons to whom this epistle is sent: To the saints who are at Ephesus. He calls them saints, for such they were in profession, and many of them were such. All Christians must be saints. He calls them the faithful in Christ Jesus. Those are not saints who are not faithful; in Christ Jesus, from whom they derive all their grace and spiritual strength. 3. The apostolical benediction: Grace be to you, &c. By grace we are to understand the free and undeserved love and favour of God, and those graces of the Spirit which proceed from it; by peace all other blessings, the fruits and product of the former. No peace without grace. No peace, nor grace, but from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. These peculiar blessings proceed from God not as a Creator, but as a Father, and they come from our Lord Jesus Christ, who has a right to bestow them. The saints, and the faithful in Christ Jesus, had already received grace and peace. The best saints stand in need of fresh supplies of the graces of the Spirit: and therefore they should pray, each one for himself and all for one another, that such blessings may still abound unto them. The Spirit of God saw fit that his discourse of divine things in this chapter should be cast into prayers and praises. Prayer may preach; and praise may do so too.

Verses 3–14

He begins with thanksgivings and praise, and enlarges upon the exceedingly great and precious benefits which we enjoy by Jesus Christ.

I. He blesses God for spiritual blessings, v. 3, where he styles him the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. All blessings come from God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. He hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings. Spiritual blessings are the best blessings. He blesses us by bestowing such things upon us as make us really blessed. We cannot thus bless God in return; but by praising. Those whom God blesses with some he blesses with all spiritual blessings. It is not so with temporal blessings.

Vss. 1-23. INSCRIPTION: ORIGIN OF THE CHURCH IN THE FATHER'S ETERNAL COUNSEL, AND THE SON'S BLOODSHEDDING: THE SEALING OF IT BY THE SPIRIT. THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER THAT THEY MAY FULLY KNOW GOD'S GRACIOUS POWER IN CHRIST TOWARDS THE SAINTS. 1. by—rather, "through the will of God": called to the apostleship through that same "will" which originated the Church (vss. 5, 9, 11; cf. Gal. 1:4). which are at Ephesus—See Introduction. to the saints . . . and to the faithful—The same persons are referred to by both designations, as the Greek proves: "to those who are saints, and faithful in Christ Jesus." The sanctification by God is here put before man's faith. The twofold aspect of salvation is thus presented, God's grace in the first instance sanctifying us, (i.e., setting us apart in His eternal purposes as holy unto Himself); and our faith, by God's gift, laying hold of salvation (II Thess. 2:13; I Pet. 1:2). 2. (Rom. 1:7; I Cor. 3; II Cor. 1:2; Galatians 1:3.) 3. The doxologies in almost all the Epistles imply the real sense of grace experienced by the writers and their readers (I Pet. 1:3). From vs. 3 to vs. 14 sets forth summarily the Gospel of the grace of God: the FATHER'S work of love, vs. 3 (choosing us to holiness, vs. 4; to sonship, vs. 5; to acceptance, vs. 6): the SON'S, vs. 7 (redemption, vs. 7; knowledge of the mystery of His will, vs. 9; an inheritance, vs. 11); the HOLY SPIRIT'S, vs. 13 (sealing, vs. 13; giving an earnest of the inheritance, vs. 14). the God and Father of . . . Christ—and so the God and Father of us who are in Him (John 20:17). God is "the God" of the man Jesus, and "the Father" of the Divine Word. The Greek is, "Blessed us," not "hath blessed us"; referring to the past original counsel of God. As in creation (Gen. 1:22) so in redemption (Gen. 12: 3; Matt. 5:3-11; 25:34) God "blesses" His children; and that not in mere words, but in acts. us—all Christians. blessings—Greek, "blessing." "All," i.e., "every possible blessing for time and eternity, which the Spirit has to besow" (so "spiritual" means; not "spiritual," as the term is now used, as opposed to bodily). in heavenly places—a phrase five times found in this Epistle, and not elsewhere (vs. 20; ch. 2:6; 3:10; 6:12); Greek, "in the heavenly places." Christ's ascension is the means of intro-

1. To the saints which are at Ephesus. By the term saints we are to understand those who in that place professed Christianity, and were members of the Christian Church. Saint properly signifies a "holy person," and such the gospel of Christ requires every man to be, and such every true believer is, in both heart and life; but saint appears to have been as ordinary a denomination of a believer in Christ in those primitive times as the term "Christian" is now. The faithful in Christ Jesus. The "believers"—the persons who received Christ as the promised Messiah and the Saviour of the world, and continued in the grace which they had received.

3. Blessed be the God. See the note on 2 Cor. i. 3, where the same form is used. With all spiritual blessings. With the pure doctrines of the gospel, and the abundant gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, justifying, sanctifying, and building us up on our most holy faith. In heavenly places. "In heavenly things," such as those mentioned above; they were not yet in heavenly places, but they had abundance of heavenly things to prepare them for heavenly places. Some think the word should be understood as signifying blessings of the most exalted or excellent kind, such as are spiritual in opposition to those that are earthly, such as are eternal in opposition to those that are temporal; and all these in, through, and by Christ. We have already seen, on Gal. iv. 26, that the heavenly Jerusalem, or "Jerusalem which is from above," is used by the Jews to signify the days of the Messiah, and that state of grace and glory which should follow the Levitical worship and ceremonies; and it is possible that Paul may use "heavenly things," in this sense: "God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things, or in this heavenly state," in which life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel. This is apparently the preferable sense.

MATTHEW HENRY

They are spiritual blessings in heavenly places. Or it may be read, in heavenly things, such as come from heaven, and are designed to prepare men for it. We should hence learn to mind spiritual and heavenly blessings as the best blessings with which we cannot be miserable, and without which we cannot but be so.

II. Particular spiritual blessings enlarged upon. 1. Election and predestination, v. 4, 5, 11. Election, or choice, respects that lump or mass of mankind from which they are separated.

Before the foundation of the world they were chosen in the counsel of God from all eternity. The alms which you give to beggars at your doors proceed from a sudden resolve; but the provision which a parent makes for his children is the result of many thoughts. He acts in pursuance of his eternal purpose in bestowing spiritual blessings upon his people. He hath blessed us—according as he hath chosen us in him, in Christ the great head of the election. One great end and design of this choice: chosen—that we should be holy. All who are chosen to happiness as the end are chosen to holiness as the means. And without blame before him—that their holiness might not be merely external and in outward appearance, but internal and real, such holiness as proceeds from love to God and to our fellow-creatures, this charity being the principle of all true holiness.

Predestination has respect to the blessings they are designed for; particularly the adoption of children, that in due time we should become his adopted children, and so have a right to all the privileges of children.

Here is also the rule and the fontal cause of God's election: it is according to the good pleasure of his will (v. 5), because it was his sovereign will.

2. The next is acceptance with God through Jesus Christ: Wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved, v. 6. We cannot be thus accepted of God, but in and through Jesus Christ. He loves his people for the sake of the beloved.

ducing us into the heavenly places, which by our sin were barred against us. Cf. the change made by Christ (Col. 1:20; ch. 1:20). While Christ in the flesh was in the form of a servant, God's people could not realize fully their heavenly privileges as sons. Now "our citizenship (Greek) is in heaven" (Phil. 3:20), where our High Priest is ever "blessing" us. Our "treasures" are there (Matt. 6:20, 21); our aims and affections (Col. 3: 1, 2); our hope (Col. 1: 5; Titus 2:13); our inheritance (I Pet. 1:4). The gift of the Spirit itself, the source of the "spiritual blessing," is by virtue of Jesus having ascended thither (ch. 4:8). in Christ—the center and source of all blessing to us. 4. hath chosen us—Greek, "chose us out for Himself" (viz., out of the world, Gal. 1:4): referring to His original choice, spoken of as past. in him—The repetition of the idea, "in Christ" (vs. 3), implies the paramount importance of the truth that it is in Him, and by virtue of union to Him, the Second Adam, the Restorer ordained for us from everlasting, the Head of redeemed humanity, believers have all their blessings (ch. 3: 11). before the foundation of the world—This assumes the eternity of the Son of God (John 17:5, 24), as of the election of believers in Him (II Tim. 1:9; II Thess. 2:13). that we should be holy—positively (Deut. 14:2). without blame—negatively (ch. 5:27; I Thess. 3:13). before him—It is to Him the believer looks, walking as in His presence, before whom he looks to be accepted in the judgment (Col. 1:22; cf. Rev. 7:15). in love—joined by BENGEL and others with vs. 5, "in love having predestinated us . . . ." But English Version is better. The words qualify the whole clause, "that we should be holy . . . before Him." Love, lost to man by the fall, but restored by redemption, is the root and fruit and sum of all holiness (ch. 5:2; I Thess. 3:12, 13). 5. predestinated—more special in respect to the end and precise means, than "chosen" or elected. We are "chosen" out of the rest of the world; "predestinated" to all things that secure the inheritance for us (vs. 11; Rom. 8:29). "Foreordained." by Jesus—Greek, "through Jesus." to himself—the Father (Col. 1:20). ALFORD explains, "adoption . . . into Himself," i.e., so that we should be partakers of the divine nature (II Pet. 1:4). LACHMANN reads, "unto Him." The context favors the explanation of CALVIN: God has regard to Himself and the glory of His grace (vss. 6, 12, 14) as His ultimate end. He had one only begotten Son, and He was pleased for His own glory, to choose out of a lost world many to become His adopted sons. Translate, "unto Himself."

the good pleasure of his will—So the Greek (Matt. 11:26; Luke 10:21). We cannot go beyond "the good pleasure of His will" in searching into the causes of our salvation, or of any of His works (vs. 9). (Job 33:13.) Why needest thou philosophize about an imaginary world of optimism? Thy concern is to take heed that thou be not bad. There was nothing in us which deserved His love (vss. 1, 9, 11) [BENGEL]. 6. (Vss. 7, 17, 18.) The end aimed at (Ps. 50:23), i.e., that the glory of His grace may be praised by all His creatures, men and angels. wherein—Some of the oldest MSS. read, "which." Then translate, "which He graciously bestowed on us." But English Version is supported by good MSS. and the oldest versions. us accepted—a kindred Greek word to "grace": charitos, echaritosen: translate, "graciously accepted"; "made us subjects of His grace"; "embraced us in the arms of His grace" (Rom. 3:24; 5: 15). in the beloved—pre-eminently so called (Matt. 3:17; 17:5; John 3:35; Col. 1:13). Greek, "Son of His love." It is only "IN HIS BELOVED" that He loves us (vs. 3; I John 4:9, 10).

ADAM CLARKE

4. According as he hath chosen us in him. As He has decreed from "the beginning of the world," and has kept in view from the commencement of the religious system of the Jews (which the phrase sometimes means) to bring us Gentiles to the knowledge of the glorious state of salvation by Christ Jesus. The Jews considered themselves an elect or chosen people, and wished to monopolize the whole of the divine love and beneficence. The apostle here shows that God had the Gentiles as much in the contemplation of His mercy and goodness as He had the Jews; and the blessings of the gospel, now so freely dispensed to them, were the proof that God had thus chosen them, and that His end in giving them the gospel was the same which He had in view by giving the law to the Jews, viz., that they might be holy and without blame before Him. And as His object was the same in respect to them both, they should consider that, as He loved them, so they should love one another. God having provided for each the same blessings, they should therefore be holy—fully separated from earth and sin, and consecrated to God; and without blame—having no spot nor imperfection, their inward holiness agreeing with their outward consecration. The words are a metaphor taken from the perfect and immaculate sacrifices which the law required the people to bring to the altar of God. But as love is the fulfilling of the law, and love the fountain whence their salvation flowed, therefore love must fill their hearts towards God and each other, and love must be the motive and end of all their words and works.

5. Having predestinated us. As the doctrine of eternal predestination has produced much controversy in the Christian world, it may be necessary to examine the meaning of the term, that those who do use it may employ it according to the sense it has in the oracles of God. The verb proorizo, from pro, "before," and horizo, "I define, finish, bound, or terminate," whence horos, "a boundary or limit," signifies to "define beforehand," and circumscribe by certain bounds or limits; and is originally a geographical term, but applied also to anything concluded, or determined, or demonstrated. Here the word is used to point out God's fixed purpose or predetermination to bestow on the Gentiles the blessing of the adoption of "sons" by Jesus Christ, which adoption had been before granted to the Jewish people; and without circumcision, or any other Mosaic rite, to admit the Gentiles to all the privileges of His Church and people. The apostle marks that all this was "foredetermined" by God, as He had foredetermined the bounds and precincts of the land which He gave them according to the promise made to their fathers; that the Jews had no reason to complain, for God had formed this purpose before He had given the law, or called them out of Egypt (for it was before the foundation of the world, v. 2); and that, therefore, the conduct of God in calling the Gentiles now—bringing them into His Church, and conferring on them the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit—was in pursuance of His original design; and if He did not do so, His eternal purposes could not be fulfilled; and that, as the Jews were taken to be His peculiar people, not because they had any goodness or merit in themselves, so the Gentiles were called, not for any merit they had, but according to the good pleasure of his will; that is, according to His eternal benevolence, showing mercy and conferring privileges in this new creation, as He had done in the original creation.

6. To the praise of the glory of his grace. The glory of his grace, for "His glorious or illustrious grace," according to the Hebrew idiom. But the grace or mercy of God is peculiarly illustrated and glorified in the plan of redemption by Christ Jesus. By the giving of the law, God's justice and holiness were rendered most glorious; by the giving of the gospel, His grace and mercy are made equally conspicuous. Wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved. This translation is not clear; "with which He has graciously favored us through the Beloved" is at once more literal and more intelligible. In the beloved must certainly mean "in Christ," who is termed God's beloved Son, Matt. iii. 17.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. Remission of sins, and redemption through the blood of Jesus, v. 7. No remission without redemption. The guilt and the stain of sin could be no otherwise removed than by the blood of Jesus. All our spiritual blessings flow down to us in that stream. It is according to the riches of God's grace. It was rich grace to provide such a surety as his own Son, when nothing of that nature could have entered into our thoughts, nor have been otherwise found out for us.

He has not only manifested riches of grace, but has abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence (v. 8).

4. Another privilege is divine revelation—that God hath made known to us the mystery of his will (v. 9). This we owe to Christ, who came to declare his will to the children of men: According to his good pleasure which he had purposed. It is described (v. 13) as the word of truth, and the gospel of our salvation. O, how ought we to prize this glorious gospel and to bless God for it!

ALBERT BARNES:

10. "That in the dispensation." The word here rendered "dispensation" means properly "the management of household affairs." Then it means stewardship or administration; a dispensation or arrangement of things; a scheme or plan. The meaning here is that this plan was formed in order or "unto" this end, that in the full arrangement of times, or in the arrangements completing the filling up of the times, God might gather together in one all things. Tindal renders it, "to have it declared when the time was full come."

"The fulness of times." When the times were fully completed; when all the periods should have passed by which he had prescribed or judged necessary to the completion of the object. The period referred to here is that when all things shall be gathered together in the Redeemer at the winding up of human affairs, or the consummation of all things. The arrangement was made with reference to that, and embraced all things which conduced to that. The plan stretched from before "the foundation of the world" to the period when all times should be completed; and of course all the events occurring in that intermediate period were embraced in the plan.—Popular Commentary

7. In whom—"the Beloved" (vs. 6; Rom. 3:24). we have—as a present possession. redemption—Greek, "our (lit., 'the') redemption"; THE redemption which is the grand subject of all revelation, and especially of the New Testament (Rom. 3:24), viz., from the power, guilt, and penal consequences of sin (Matt. 1:21). If a man were unable to redeem himself from being a bond servant, his kinsman might redeem him (Lev. 25:48). Hence, antitypically the Son of God became the Son of man, that as our kinsman He might redeem us (Matt. 20:28). Another "redemption" follows, viz., that "of the purchased possession" hereafter (vs. 14). through his blood—(ch. 2:13)—as the instrument; the propitiation, i.e., the consideration (devised by His own love) for which He, who was justly angry (Isa. 12:1), becomes propitious to us; the expiation, the price paid to divine justice for our sin (Acts 20:28; Rom. 3:25; I Cor. 6:20; Col. 1:20; I Pet. 1:18, 19). the forgiveness of sins—Greek, "the remission of our transgressions": not merely "pretermission," as the Greek (Rom. 3:25) ought to be translated. This "remission," being the explanation of "redemption," includes not only deliverance from sin's penalty, but from its pollution and enslaving power, negatively; and the reconciliation of an offended God, and a satisfaction unto a just God, positively. riches of his grace—(ch. 2:7)—"the exceeding riches of His grace." Cf. vs. 18, and ch. 3:16, "according to the riches of His glory": so that "grace" is His "glory." 8. Rather, "which He made to abound towards us." all wisdom and prudence—"wisdom" in devising the plan of redeeming mankind; "prudence" in executing it by the means, and in making all the necessary arrangements of Providence for that purpose. Paul attributes to the Gospel of God's grace "all" possible "wisdom and prudence," in opposition to the boasts of wisdom and prudence which the unbelieving Jews and heathen philosophers and false apostles arrogated for their teachings. Christ crucified, though esteemed "foolishness" by the world, is "the wisdom of God" (I Cor. 1:18-30). Cf. ch. 3:10, "the manifold wisdom of God. 9. "He hath abounded," or "made (grace) to abound toward us" (vs. 8), in that He made known to us, viz., experimentally, in our hearts. the mystery—God's purpose of redemption hidden heretofore in His counsels, but now revealed (ch. 6:19; Rom. 16:25; Col. 1:26, 27). This "mystery" is not like the heathen mysteries, which were imparted only to the initiated few. All Christians are the initiated. Only unbelievers are the uninitiated. according to his good pleasure—showing the cause why "He hath made known to us the mystery," viz., His own loving "good pleasure" toward us; also the time and manner of His doing so, are according to His good pleasure. purposed—(Vs. 11). in himself—God the Father. BENGEL takes it, "in Him," i.e., Christ, as in vss. 3, 4. But the proper name, "in Christ," vs. 10, immediately after, is inconsistent with His being here meant by the pronoun. 10. Translate, "Unto the dispensation of the fulness of the times," i.e., "which He purposed in Himself" (vs. 9) with a view to the economy of (the gracious administration belonging to) the fulness of the times (Greek, "fit times," "seasons"). More comprehensive than "the fulness of the time" (Gal. 4:4). The whole of the Gospel times (plural) is meant, with the benefits to the Church dispensed in them severally and successively. Cf. "the ages to come" (ch. 2:7). "The ends of the ages" (Greek, I Cor. 10:11); "the times (same Greek as here, 'the seasons,' or 'fitly appointed times') of the Gentiles" (Luke 21:24); "the seasons which the Father hath put in His own power" (Acts 1:7); "the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:20, 21). The coming of Jesus at the first advent, "in the fulness of time," was one of these "times." The descent of the Holy Ghost, "when Pentecost was fully come" (Acts 2:1), was another. The testimony given by the apostles to Him "in due time" ("in its own seasons," Greek) (I Tim. 2:6) was another. The conversion of the Jews "when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled," the second coming of Christ, the "restitution of all things," the millennial kingdom, the new heaven and earth, shall be severally instances of "the dispensation of the fulness of the times," i.e., "the dispensation of" the Gospel events and benefits belonging to their respective "times," when severally filled up or completed. God the Father, according to His own good pleasure and purpose, is the Dispenser both of the Gospel benefits and of their several fitting times (Acts 1:7). gather together in one—Greek, "sum up under one head"; "recapitulate." The "good pleasure which He purposed,"

7. In whom we have redemption. God has glorified His grace by giving us redemption by the blood of His Son, and this redemption consists in forgiving and delivering us from our sins; so then Christ's blood was the redemption price paid down for our salvation.

8. Wherein he hath abounded. That is, in the dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus. In all wisdom and prudence. Giving us apostles the most complete instructions in heavenly things by the inspiration of His Spirit; and at the same time prudence, that we might know when and where to preach the gospel so that it might be effectual to the salvation of those who heard it. Nothing less than the Spirit of God could teach the apostles that wisdom by which they were to instruct a dark and sinful world; and nothing less than the same Spirit could inspire them with that prudence which was necessary to be exercised in every step of their life and ministry.

9. Having made known unto us the mystery. That the Gentiles should ever be received into the Church of God, and have all the privileges of the Jews, without being obliged to submit to circumcision and perform the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law, was a mystery—a "hidden thing" which had never been published before; and now revealed only to the apostles. It was God's will that it should be so, but that will He kept hidden to the present time. A mystery signifies something hidden, but it ceases to be a mystery as soon as it is revealed. Good pleasure. "That benevolent design which He had purposed in himself," not being induced by any consideration from without.

10. In the dispensation of the fulness of times. The dispensation of the gospel, that plan by which God has provided salvation for a lost world; and according to which He intends to gather all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, into one Church under Jesus Christ, their Head and Governor. The fulness of times—By this phrase we are to understand either the gospel dispensation, which is the consummation of all preceding dispensations and the last that shall be afforded to man, or that advanced state of the world which God saw to be the most proper for the full manifestation of those benevolent purposes which He had formed in himself relative to the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ.

That he might gather together in one. The gathering together both Jews and Gentiles, who have believed in Christ, into one Church and

5. Union in and with Christ is a great privilege. He gathers together in one all things in Christ, v. 10. All the lines of divine revelation meet in Christ; all religion centres in him. Jews and Gentiles were united to each other by being both united to Christ. Things in heaven and things on earth are gathered together in him; peace made between heaven and earth through him. The innumerable company of angels become one with the church through Christ: this God purposed in himself.

6. The eternal inheritance is the great blessing with which we are blessed in Christ: In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, v. 11. Heaven is the inheritance. If children, then heirs. All the blessings that we have in hand are but small if compared with the inheritance. What is laid out upon an heir in his minority is nothing to what is reserved for him when he comes to age.

It is according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will (v. 11). The last and great end is his own glory: To the praise of the glory of his grace (v. 6), that we should be to the praise of his glory (v. 12). The glory of God is his own end, and it should be ours in all that we do.

7. The seal and earnest of the Spirit. We are said to be sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, v. 13. He makes us holy. He is the promised Spirit. By him believers are sealed and set apart for God.

The Spirit is the earnest of our inheritance, v. 14. The earnest is part of payment, and it secures the full sum. All his influences are heaven begun, glory in the seed and bud. His comforts are earnests of everlasting joys.

was "to sum up all things (Greek, 'THE whole range of things') in Christ" (Greek, "the Christ," i.e., His Christ) [ALFORD]. God's purpose is to sum up the whole creation in Christ, the Head of angels, with whom He is linked by His invisible nature, and of men with whom He is linked by His humanity; of Jews and Gentiles; of the living and the dead (ch. 3:15); of animate and inanimate creation. Sin has disarranged the creature's relation of subordination to God. God means to gather up all together in Christ; or as Colossians 1:20 says, "By Him to reconcile all things unto Himself, whether things in earth or things in heaven." ALFORD well says, "The Church of which the apostle here mainly treats, is subordinated to Him in the highest degree of conscious and joyful union; those who are not His spiritually, in mere subjugation, yet consciously; the inferior tribes of creation unconsciously; but objectively, all are summed up in Him." 11. In whom—by virtue of union to whom. obtained an inheritance—lit., "We were made to have an inheritance" [WAHL]. Cf. vs. 18, "His inheritance in the saints": as His inheritance is there said to be in them, so theirs is here said to be in Him (Acts 26: 18). However, vs. 12, "That we should BE TO . . . His glory" (not "that we should have"), favors the translation of BENGEL, ELLICOTT, and others, "We were made an inheritance." So the literal Israel (Deut. 4:20; 9:29; 32:9). "Also" does not mean "we also," nor as English Version, "in whom also"; but, besides His having "made known to us His will," we were also "made His inheritance," or "we have also obtained an inheritance." predestinated—(Vs. 5). The foreordination of Israel, as the elect nation, answers to that of the spiritual Israelites, believers, to an eternal inheritance, which is the thing meant here. The "we" here and in vs. 12, means Jewish believers (whence the reference to the election of Israel nationally arises), as contrasted with "you" (vs. 13) Gentile believers. purpose—repeated from "purposed" (vs. 9; ch. 3:11). The Church existed in the mind of God eternally, before it existed in creation. counsel of his . . . will—vs. 5, "the good pleasure of His will." Not arbitrary caprice, but infinite wisdom ("counsel") joined with sovereign will. Cf. his address to the same Ephesians in Acts 20:27, "All the counsel of God" (Isa. 28:29). Alike in the natural and spiritual creations, God is not an agent constrained by necessity. "Wheresoever counsel is, there is election, or else it is vain; where a will, there must be freedom, or else it is weak" [PEARSON]. 12. (V. 6, 14.) who first trusted in Christ—rather (we Jewish Christians), "who have before hoped in the Christ": who before the Christ came, looked forward to His coming, waiting for the consolation of Israel. Cf. Acts 26:6, 7, "I am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come." Acts 28:20, "the hope of Israel" [ALFORD]. Cf. vs. 18; ch. 2:12; 4:4. 13. In whom ye also—Ye Gentiles. Supply as English Version, "trusted," from vs. 12; or "are." The priority of us Jews does not exclude you Gentiles from sharing in Christ (cf. Acts 13:46). the word of truth—the instrument of sanctification, and of the new birth (John 17:17; II Tim. 2:15; James. 1:18). Cf. Colossians 1:5, where also, as here, it is cannected with "hope." Also ch. 4:21. sealed—as God's confirmed children, by the Holy Spirit as the seal (Acts 19:1-6; Rom. 8:16, 23; Note, II Cor. 1:22; I Johu 3:24). A seal impressed on a document gives undoubted validity to the contract in it (John 3:33; 6: 27; cf. II Cor. 3:3). So the sense of "the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 5:5), and the sense of adoption given through the Spirit at regeneration (Rom. 8:15, 16), assure believers of God's good will to them. The Spirit, like a seal, impresses on the soul at regeneration the image of our Father. The "sealing" by the Holy Spirit is spoken of as past once for all. The witnessing to our hearts that we are the children of God, and heirs (vs. 11), is the Spirit's present testimony, the "earnest of the (coming) inheritance" (Rom. 8:16-18). that Holy Spirit of promise—rather, as the Greek, "The Spirit of promise, even the Holy Spirit": The Spirit promised both in the Old and New Testaments (Joel 2:28; Zech. 12:10; John 7:38, 39). "The word" promised the Holy Spirit. Those who "believed the word of truth" were sealed by the Spirit accordingly. 14. earnest—the first instalment paid as a pledge that the rest will follow (Rom. 8:23; II Cor. 1:22). until—rather, "Unto the redemption . . ."; joined thus, "ye were sealed (vs. 13) unto," i.e., for the purpose of, and against, the accomplishment of "the redemption," viz., not the redemption in its first stage, flock. All things . . . which are in heaven, and which are on earth. This clause is variously understood. Some think by things . . . in heaven the Jewish state is meant; and by things . . . on earth, the Christian. The Jews had been long considered a divine or heavenly people. But there are others who imagine the things . . . in heaven mean the angelical hosts; and the things . . . on earth, believers of all nations, who shall all be joined together at last in one assembly to worship God throughout eternity. And some think that the things . . . in heaven mean the saints who died before Christ's advent, and who are not to be made perfect till the resurrection. And some think that, as the Hebrew phrase shamayim vehaarets, the "heavens and the earth," signifies all creatures, the words in the text are to be understood as signifying all mankind, without discrimination of peoples, kindreds, or tongues: Jews, Greeks, or barbarians—all that are saved of all nations (being saved in the same way, viz., by faith in Christ Jesus, without any distinction of nation or previous condition) and all gathered into one Church or assembly. I believe that the forming one Church out of both Jews and Gentiles is that to which the apostle refers. This agrees with what is said in chap. ii. 14-17.

11. In whom, Christ Jesus; also we—believing Jews; have obtained an inheritance—what was promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, viz., the adoption of sons, and the kingdom of Heaven. Being predestinated. God having determined to bring both Jews and Gentiles to salvation, not by works nor by any human means or schemes, but by Jesus Christ; that salvation being defined and determined before in the divine mind, and the means by which it should be brought about all being according to His purpose, who consults not His creatures, but operates according to the counsel of his own will, that being ever wise, gracious, and good.

12. That we. Jews, now apostles and messengers of God, to whom the first offers of salvation were made, and who were the first that believed in Christ. Should be to the praise of his glory. By being the means of preaching Christ crucified to the Gentiles, and spreading the gospel throughout the world.

13. In whom ye also trusted. You Gentiles, having heard from us the word, the doctrine of the truth, which is the gospel, or glad tidings, of your salvation, have believed, as we Jews have done, and received similar blessings to those with which God has favored us. In whom also, Christ Jesus, after that ye had believed, viz., that He was the only Saviour, and that through His blood redemption might be obtained, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise. It was customary among all nations, when a person purchased goods of any kind, to mark with his seal that which he had bought, in order that he might know it, and be able to claim it if mixed with the goods of others; to this custom the apostle may here allude. But it was also customary to set a seal upon what was dedicated to God, or what was to be offered to Him in sacrifice.

14. Which is the earnest of our inheritance. This Holy Spirit, sealing the soul with truth and righteousness, is the earnest, "foretaste," and "pledge" of the heavenly inheritance. And he who can produce this earnest—this witness of the Spirit—in the day of judgment shall have an abundant entrance into the holiest.

MATTHEW HENRY

He is said to be the earnest, until the redemption of the purchased possession. This earnest makes it as sure to the heirs as though they were already possessed of it; and it is purchased for them by the blood of Christ. The great end and design of God in bestowing all these spiritual privileges is that we should be to the praise of his glory who first trusted in Christ. Seniority in grace is a preferment: those who have for a longer time experienced the grace of Christ are under more special obligations to glorify God. This is the great design of God in all that he has done for us: it is unto the praise of his glory, v. 14.

Verses 15–23

Paul's earnest prayer to God in behalf of these Ephesians. He has laid up these spiritual blessings for us in the hands of his Son. He has appointed us to draw them out, and fetch them in, by prayer. We have no part nor lot in the matter, any further than we claim it by faith and prayer. Note, the good account he had of them, of their faith in the Lord Jesus and love to all the saints, v. 15. Those who love saints, as such, love all saints, how weak in grace, how mean in the world, how fretful and peevish soever, some of them may be. Another inducement to pray for them was because they had received the earnest of the inheritance. Wherefore—I cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers, v. 16. While he blessed God for giving them the Spirit, he ceases not to pray (v. 17), that he would give greater measures of the Spirit. The great thing he prays for is the illumination of their understandings, and that their knowledge might increase and abound; he means it of a practical and experimental knowledge. The graces and comforts of the Spirit are communicated to the soul by the enlightening of the understanding. Satan takes a contrary way: he gets possession by the senses and passions, Christ by the understanding.

I. Whence this knowledge must come; from the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, v. 17. The Lord is a God of knowledge, and there is no sound saving knowledge but what comes from him. He gives knowledge by giving the Spirit of knowledge; for the Spirit of God is the teacher of the saints, the Spirit of wisdom and revelation. We have the revelation of the Spirit in the word: but will that avail us, if we have not the wisdom of the Spirit in the heart? In the knowledge of him. This knowledge is first in the understanding. He prays that the eyes of their understanding may be enlightened, v. 18. Christians should not think it enough to have warm affections, but they should labour to have clear understandings; they should be ambitious of being knowing Christians, and judicious Christians.

II. What it is that he more particularly desires they should grow in the knowledge of. 1. The hope of his calling, v. 18. There is a hope in this calling; for those who deal with God deal upon trust. We ought to labour after, and pray earnestly for, a clearer insight into, and a fuller acquaintance with, the great objects of a Christian's hopes. 2. The riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints. There is a present inheritance in the saints; for grace is glory begun, and holiness is happiness in the bud. There is a glory in this inheritance, and it is desirable to know this experimentally. It may be understood of the glorious inheritance in heaven, where God does, as it were, lay forth all his riches. Let us endeavour then, by reading, contemplation, and prayer, to know as much of heaven as we can, that we may be desiring and longing to be there. 3. The exceeding greatness of God's power towards those who believe, v. 19. It is a difficult thing to bring a soul to believe in Christ. It is nothing less than an almighty power that will work this in us.

made by the blood of Christ, which secures our title, but, in its final completion, when the actual possession shall be ours, the full "redemption of the body" (Rom. 8:23), as well as of the soul, from every infirmity (ch. 4:30). The deliverance of the creature (the body, and the whole visible creation) from the bondage of corruption, and from the usurping prince of this world, into the glorious liberty of the children of God (Rom. 8:21-23; II Pet. 3:13). of the purchased possession—God's people purchased (acquired, Greek) as His peculiar (Greek) possession by the blood of Christ (Acts 20:28). We value highly that which we pay a high price for; so God, His Church (ch. 5:25, 26; I Pet. 1:18; 2:9; Mal. 3:17, Margin, "my special treasure"). 15. Wherefore—because ye are in Christ and sealed by His Spirit (vss. 13, 14). I also—on my part, in return for God's so great benefits to you. after I heard—ever since I have heard. Not implying that he had only heard of their conversion: an erroneous argument used by some against the address of this Epistle to the Ephesians (Note, vs. 1); but referring to the report he had heard since he was with them, as to their Christian graces. So in the case of Philemon, his "beloved fellow laborer" (Philemon 1), he uses the same words (Philemon 4, 5). your faith—rather, as Greek, "the faith among you," i.e., which many (not all) of you have. love unto all the saints—of whatever name, simply because they are saints. A distinguishing characteristic of true Christianity (ch. 6:24). "Faith and love he often joins together. A wondrous pair" [CHRYSOSTOM]. Hope is added, vs. 18. 16. (Col. 1:9.) of you—omitted in the oldest MSS. Then the translation may be as English Version still, or as ALFORD, "making mention of them" (your "faith and love"). 17. A fit prayer for all Christians. the God of our Lord Jesus—appropriate title here; as in vss. 20-22 he treats of God's raising Jesus to be Head over all things to the Church. Jesus Himself called the Father "My God" (Matt. 27:46). the Father of glory—(Cf. Acts 7:2). The Father of that infinite glory which shines in the face of Christ, who is "the glory" (the true Shekinah); through whom also "the glory of the inheritance" (vs. 18) shall be ours (John 17:24; II Cor. 3:7 to 4:6). the spirit of wisdom—whose attribute is infinite wisdom and who works wisdom in believers (Isa. 11:2). and revelation—whose function it is to reveal to believers spiritual mysteries (John 16:14, 15; I Cor. 2:10). in the knowledge—rather, as Greek (see Note, I Cor. 13:12), "in the full knowledge of Him," viz., God. 18. understanding—The oldest MSS., versions, and Fathers, read "heart." Cf. the contrary state of unbelieving, the heart being in fault (ch. 4:18; Matt. 13:15). Translate, "Having the eyes of your heart enlightened" (ch. 5:14; Matt. 4:16). The first effect of the Spirit moving in the new creation, as in the original physical creation (Gen. 1:3; II Cor. 4: 6). So THEOPHILUS to AUTOLYCUS, 1. 3, "the ears of the heart." Where spiritual light is, there is life (John 1:4). The heart is "the core of life" [HARLESS], and the fountain of the thoughts; whence "the heart" in Scripture includes the mind, as well as the inclination. Its "eye," or inward vision, both receives and contemplates the light (Matt. 6:22, 23). The eye is the symbol of intelligence (Ezek. 1:18). the hope of his calling—the hope appertaining to His having called you; or, to the calling wherewith He has called you. and—omitted in the oldest MSS. and versions. riches of the glory . . .—(Col. 1:27). his inheritance in the saints—The inheritance which he has in store in the case of the saints. I prefer explaining, "The inheritance which He has in his saints." (See Note, vs. 11; Deut. 32: 9.) 19. exceeding—"surpassing." power to us-ward who believe—The whole of the working of His grace, which He is carrying on, and will carry on, in us who believe. By the term "saints" (vs. 18), believers are regarded as absolutely perfected, and so as being God's inheritance; in this verse, as in the course of fighting the good fight of faith. according to—in accordance with what might be expected from. working—Greek, "the energizing"; translate, "the effectual working" (ch. 3:7). The same superhuman power was needed and exerted to make us believe, as was needed and exerted to raise Christ from the dead (vs. 20). Cf. Philippians 3:10, "the power of His resurrection" (Col. 2:12; I Pet. 1:3-5). of his mighty power—Greek, "of the strength of His might."

ADAM CLARKE

The redemption of the purchased possession. That is, till the time when body and soul are redeemed from all their miseries and glorified in the kingdom of Heaven. The redemption of the purchased possession. All those who believe in Christ Jesus are considered as His peculiar people and property, and to them eternal glory is promised. The Spirit of promise, which is given them, is a pledge that they shall have a resurrection from the dead, and eternal blessedness; the redemption, or bringing to life of the body, cannot take place till the day of judgment, but the Holy Spirit promises this redemption, and is now in their hearts an earnest or "pledge" of this complete restoration at the great day, which will then be, in an especial manner, unto the praise of his glory, viz., of Christ, who has bought them by His blood.

15. Faith in the Lord Jesus. Cordial reception of the Christian religion, amply proved by their love unto all the saints—to all the Christians. Perhaps love here implies not only the kind affection so called but also all the fruits of love—benevolence and kind offices of every description.

16. Cease not to give thanks. The apostle intimates, so fully satisfied was he of the genuineness of their conversion, and of their steadiness since their conversion, that it was to him a continual cause of thanksgiving to God, who had brought them into that state of salvation; and of prayer, that they might be preserved blameless to the end. Making mention of you. While praying for the prosperity of the Christian cause generally, he was led, from his particular affection for them, to mention them by name before God.

17. That the God of our Lord Jesus. Jesus Christ, as Man and Mediator, has the Father for His God and Father; and it is in reference to this that He himself says: "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God," John xx. 17. The Father of glory. The Author and Giver of that glory which you expect at the end of your Christian race. This may be a Hebraism for "glorious Father," but the former appears to be the best sense. The spirit of wisdom and revelation. I pray that God may give you His Holy Spirit, by whom His will is revealed to men, that He may teach and make you wise unto salvation, that you may continue to acknowledge Him, Christ Jesus, as your only Lord and Saviour.

18. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened. Instead of of your understanding, "of your heart," is the reading of several MSS. "The eyes of your heart" is undoubtedly the true reading. The hope of his calling. That you may clearly discern the glorious and important objects of your hope, to the enjoyment of which God has called or invited you. The riches of the glory of his inheritance. That you may understand what is the glorious abundance of the spiritual things to which you are entitled, in consequence of being made children of God; for if children, then heirs, heirs of that glorious inheritance which God has provided for the saints—for all genuine Christians, whether formerly Jews or Gentiles.

19. The exceeding greatness of his power. As the apostle is here speaking of the glorious state of believers after death, the exceeding greatness of his power, or that power which surpasses all difficulties, being itself omnipotent, is to be understood of that might which is to be exerted in raising the body at the last day; as it will require the same power or energy which He wrought in Christ, when He raised His body from the grave, to raise up the bodies of all mankind, the resurrection of the human nature of Christ being a proof of the resurrection of mankind in general. According to the working of his mighty power. "According to the energy of the power of His might." We may understand these words thus: "might" is the state or simple efficiency of this attribute in God; "power" is this might or efficiency in action; "energy" is the quantum of force, momentum, or velocity with which the power is applied. Though they appear to be synonymous terms they may be thus understood. Passive power is widely different from power in action; and power in action will be in its results ac-

MATTHEW HENRY

The apostle speaks as if he wanted words to express the exceeding greatness of God's almighty power, that power which God exerts towards his people, and by which he raised Christ from the dead, v. 20. That indeed was the great proof of the truth of the gospel to the world: but the transcript of that in ourselves is the great proof to us. Many understand the apostle here as speaking of that exceeding greatness of power which God will exert for raising believers to eternal life, even the same mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him, &c. And how desirable a thing must it be to become at length acquainted with that power, by being raised thereby unto eternal life!

The apostle digresses a little to make mention of the Lord Jesus and his exaltation. He sits at the Father's right hand in the heavenly places, &c., v. 20, 21.

The Father hath put all things under his feet (v. 22). God GAVE him to be head over all things. It was a gift to Christ, and it was a gift to the church, to be provided with a head endued with so much power and authority. He gave him all power both in heaven and in earth. The Father loves the Son, and hath given ALL things into his hands. But that which completes the comfort of this is that he is the head over all things to the church.

The same power that supports the world supports the church; and we are sure he loves his church, for it is his body (v. 23), and he will care for it

It is the fulness of him that filleth all in all. Jesus Christ filleth all in all. Christ as Mediator would not be complete if he had not a church. How could he be a king if he had not a kingdom?

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

20. in Christ—as our "first fruits" of the resurrection, and Head, in virtue of God's mighty working in whom His power to us-ward is made possible and actual [ALFORD]. when he raised him—"in that He raised Him." The raising of Christ is not only an earnest of our bodies being hereafter raised, but has a spiritual power in it involving (by virtue of our living union with Him, as members with the Head) the resurrection, spiritually of the believer's soul now, and, consequently, of his body hereafter (Rom. 6:8-11; 8:11). The Son, too, as God (though not as man), had a share in raising His own human body (John 2:19; 10:17, 18). Also the Holy Spirit (Rom. 1:4; I Pet. 3:18). set him—Greek, "made Him sit." The glorious spirits stand about the throne of God, but they do not sit at God's right hand (Heb. 1:13). at his own right hand—(Ps. 110:1). Where He remains till all His enemies have been put under His feet (I Cor. 15:24). Being appointed to "rule in the midst of His enemies" during their rebellion (Ps. 110:2), He shall resign His commission after their subjection [PEARSON] (Mark 16:19; Heb. 1:3; 10:12). in the heavenly places—(vs. 3). As Christ has a literal body, heaven is not merely a state, but a place; and where He is, there His people shall be (John 14:3). 21. Greek, "Far (or high) above all (ch. 4:10) principality (or rule, I Cor. 15:24), and authority, and power (Matt. 28:18), and dominion (or lordship)." Cf. Philippians 2:9; Colossians 1:16; Hebrews 7:26; I Peter 3:22. Evil spirits (who are similarly divided into various ranks, ch. 6:12), as well as angels of light, and earthly potentates, are included (cf. Rom. 8:38). Jesus is "King of kings, and Lord of lords" (Rev. 19:16). The higher is His honor, the greater is that of His people, who are His members joined to Him, the Head. Some philosophizing teachers of the school of Simon Magus, in Western Asia Minor, had, according to IRENÆUS and EPIPHANIUS, taught their hearers these names of various ranks of angels. Paul shows that the truest wisdom is to know Christ as reigning above them all. every name—every being whatever. "Any other creature" (Rom. 8:39). in this world—Greek, "age," i.e., the present order of things. "Things present . . . things to come" (Rom. 8:38). that . . . to come—"Names which now we know not, but shall know hereafter in heaven. We know that the emperor goes before all, though we cannot enumerate all the satraps and ministers of his court; so we know that Christ is set above all, although we cannot name them all" [BENGEL]. 22. put . . . under—Greek, "put in subjection under" (Ps. 8:6; I Cor. 15:27). gave . . . to the church—for her special advantage. The Greek order is emphatic: "HIM He gave as Head over all things to the Church." Had it been anyone save HIM, her Head, it would not have been the boon it is to the Church. But as He is Head over all things who is also her Head (and she the body), all things are hers (I Cor. 3:21-23). He is OVER ("far above") all things; in contrast to the words, "TO the Church," viz., for her advantage. The former are subject; the latter is joined with Him in His dominion over them. "Head" implies not only His dominion, but our union; therefore, while we look upon Him at the right hand of God, we see ourselves in heaven (Rev. 3:21). For the Head and body are not severed by anything intervening, else the body would cease to be the body, and the Head cease to be the Head [PEARSON from CHRYSOSTOM]. 23. his body—His mystical and spiritual, not literal, body. Not, however, merely figurative, or metaphorical. He is really, though spiritually, the Church's Head. His life is her life. She shares His crucifixion and His consequent glory. He possesses everything, His fellowship with the Father, His fulness of the Spirit, and His glorified manhood, not merely for Himself, but for her, who has a membership of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones (ch. 5:30). fulness—"the filled-up receptacle" [EADIE]. The Church is dwelt in and filled by Christ. She is the receptacle, not of His inherent, but of His communicated, plenitude of gifts and graces. As His is the "fulness" (John 1:16; Col. 1:19; 2:9) inherently, so she is His "fulness" by His impartation of it to her, in virtue of her union to Him (ch. 5:18; Col. 2:10). "The full manifestation of His being, because penetrated by His life" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. She is the continued revelation of His divine life in human form; the fullest representative of His plenitude. Not the angelic hierarchy, as false teachers taught (Col. 2:9, 10, 18), but Christ Himself is the "fulness of the God-head," and she represents Him. KOPPE translates less probably, "the whole universal multitude." filleth all in all—Christ as the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of the world, constituted cording to the energy or momentum with which it is applied.

20. Set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places. Gave Him, as Mediator between God and man, the highest honors and dignities, Phil. ii. 9; in which state of exaltation He transacts all the affairs of His Church and rules the universe.

The right hand is the place of friendship, honor, confidence, and authority.

21. Far above all principality. Some think he has reference here to the different orders among good and evil angels; He is superior to all the former, and rules all the latter. Others think he refers to earthly governments; and as principality, the first word, signifies the most sovereign and extensive kind of dominion; and "lordship," the last word, signifies the lowest degree of authority; hence we are to understand that to our Lord, in His human nature, are subjected the highest, the intermediate, and the lowest orders of beings in the universe. It is certain that the apostle means that all created power, glory, and influence are under Christ; and hence it is added:

22. And hath put all things under his feet. All beings and things are subject to Him, whether they be thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, Col. i. 16-18 and ii. 10; for He, God the Father, has given him to be head—chief, and supreme over all, to the church, the Church having no ruler but Jesus Christ. Others may be officers in His Church, but He alone is Head and supreme.

23. Which is his body. As he is "head over all things," he is Head to the Church; and this Church is considered as the body of which He is especially the Head; and from Him, as the Head, the Church receives light, life, and intelligence. And is the fulness of him. That in which He especially manifests His power, goodness, and truth; for though He fills all the world with His presence, yet He fills all the members of His mystical body with wisdom, goodness, truth, and holiness in an especial manner. Some understand the fulness here as signifying the "thing to be filled"; so the Christian Church is to be filled by Him, whose fullness fills all His members, with all spiritual gifts and graces. And this corresponds with what John says, chap. i. 16: "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." And with what is said in Col. ii. 9-10: "Ye are complete in him"; "And ye are in Him filled full"; i.e., with gifts and grace. How, in any other sense, the Church can be said to be the fullness of Him who fills all in all is difficult to say. However, as Jesus Christ is represented to be the Head, and the Church the body under that Head, the individuals being so many members in that body, and as it requires a body and members to make a head complete, so it requires a Church, or general assembly of believers, to make up the body of Christ. When therefore the Jews and Gentiles are brought into this Church, the body may be said to be complete; and thus Christ

Unregenerate souls are dead in trespasses and sins. All those who are in their sins, are dead in sins. Sin is the death of the soul. Wherever that prevails there is a privation of all spiritual life.

A state of sin is a state of conformity to this world, v. 2. Wherein in time past you walked; you lived and behaved yourselves in such a manner as the men of the world are used to do. We are by nature bond-slaves to sin and Satan. Those who walk according to the course of this world, walk according to the prince of the power of the air. Wicked men are slaves to Satan. The course and tenor of their lives are according to his suggestions; they are subject to him, and are led captive by him at his will, whereupon he is called the god of this world, and the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. As the good Spirit works that which is good in obedient souls, so the evil spirit works that which is evil in wicked men; and he now works, not only heretofore.

Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past. We are by nature drudges to the flesh, and to our corrupt affections, v. 3, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind. We lived in the actual commission of all those sins to which corrupt nature inclined us. The carnal mind makes a man a perfect slave to his vicious appetite.—The fulfilling of the wills of the flesh, so the words may be rendered. We are by nature the children of wrath, even as others. One man is as much so as another by nature, not only by custom and imitation, but by reason of our natural inclinations and appetites. Our state and course are such as deserve wrath, and would end in eternal wrath, if divine grace did not interpose. What reason have sinners then to be looking out for that grace that will make them children of God and heirs of glory!

VSS. 1-22. GOD'S LOVE AND GRACE IN QUICKENING US, ONCE DEAD, THROUGH CHRIST. HIS PURPOSE IN DOING SO: EXHORTATION BASED ON OUR PRIVILEGES AS BUILT TOGETHER, AN HOLY TEMPLE, IN CHRIST, THROUGH THE SPIRIT. 1. And you—"You also," among those who have experienced His mighty power in enabling them to believe (vss. 19-23). hath he quickened—supplied from the Greek (vs. 5). dead—spiritually (Col. 2:13). A living corpse: without the gracious presence of God's Spirit in the soul, and so unable to think, will, or do aught that is holy. in trespasses . . . sins—in them, as the element in which the unbeliever is, and through which he is dead to the true life. Sin is the death of the soul. Isaiah 9:2; John 5:25, "dead" (spiritually), I Timothy 5:6. "Alienated from the life of God" (ch. 4:18). Translate, as Greek, "in your trespasses . . . ." "Trespass" in Greek, expresses a FALL OR LAPSE, such as the transgression of Adam whereby he fell. "Sin" (Greek, "hamartia") implies innate corruption and ALIENATION from God (lit., erring of the mind from the rule of truth), exhibited in acts of sin (Greek, "hamartemata"). BENGEL refers "trespasses" to the Jews who had the law, and yet revolted from it; "sins," to the Gentiles who know not God. 2. the course of this world—the career (lit., "the age," cf. Gal. 1:4), or present system of this world (I Cor. 2:6, 12; 3:18, 19, as opposed to "the world to come"): alien from God, and lying in the wicked one (I John 5:19). "The age" (which is something more external and ethical) regulates "the world" (which is something more external). the prince of the power of the air—the unseen God who lies underneath guiding "the course of this world" (II Cor. 4:4); ranging through the air around us: cf. Mark 4:4, "fowls of the air" (Greek, "heaven") i.e., (vs. 15), "Satan" and his demons. Cf. ch. 6:12; John 12:31. Christ's ascension seems to have cast Satan out of heaven (Rev. 12:5, 9, 10, 12, 13), where he had been heretofore the accuser of the brethren (Job 1). No longer able to accuse in heaven those justified by Christ, the ascended Saviour (Rom. 8:33, 34), he assails them on earth with all trials and temptations; and "we live in an atmosphere poisonous and impregnated with deadly elements. But a mighty purification of the air will be effected by Christ's coming" [AUBERLEN], for Satan shall be bound (Rev. 12:12, 13, 15, 17; 20:2, 3). "The power" is here used collectively for the "powers of the air"; in apposition with which "powers" stand the "spirits," comprehended in the singular, "the spirit," taken also collectively: the aggregate of the "seducing spirits" (I Tim. 4:1) which "work now (still; not merely, as in your case, 'in time past') in the sons of disobedience" (a Hebraism: men who are not merely by accident disobedient, but who are essentially sons of disobedience itself: cf. Matt. 3:7), and of which Satan is here declared to be "the prince." The Greek does not allow "the spirit" to refer to Satan, "the prince" himself, but to "the powers of the air" of which he is prince. The powers of the air are the embodiment of that evil "spirit" which is the ruling principle of unbelievers, especially the heathen (Acts 26:18), as opposed to the spirit of the children of God (Luke 4:33). The potency of that "spirit" is shown in the "disobedience" of the former. Cf. Deuteronomy 32:20, "children in whom is no faith" (Isa. 30:9; 57:4). They disobey the Gospel both in faith and practice (II Thess. 1:8; II Cor. 2:12). 3. also we—i.e., we also. Paul here joins himself in the same category with them, passing from the second person (vss. 1, 2) to the first person here. all—Jews and Gentiles. our conversation—"our way of life" (II Cor. 1:12; I Pet. 1:18). This expression implies an outwardly more decorous course, than the open "walk" in gross sins on the part of the majority of Ephesians in times past, the Gentile portion of whom may be specially referred to in vs. 2. Paul and his Jewish countrymen, though outwardly more seemly than the Gentiles (Acts 26:4, 5, 18), had been essentially like them in living to the unrenewed flesh, without the Spirit of God. fulfilling—Greek, "doing." mind—Greek, "our thoughts." Mental suggestions and purposes (independent of God), as distinguished from the blind impulses of "the flesh." and were by nature—He intentionally breaks off the construction, substituting "and we were" for "and being," to mark

1. And you hath he quickened. This chapter should not have been separated from the preceding, with which it is most intimately connected. As Christ fills the whole body of Christian believers with His fullness (chap. i. 23), so had He dealt with the converted Ephesians, who before were dead in trespasses and dead in sins. Death is often used by all writers, and in all nations, to express a state of extreme misery. Trespasses may signify the slightest deviation from the line and rule of moral equity, as well as any flagrant offense; for these are equally transgressions, as long as the sacred line that separates between vice and virtue is passed over. Sins may probably mean here habitual transgression, sinning knowingly and daringly.

2. Wherein in time past ye walked. There is much force in these expressions. The Ephesians had not sinned casually, or now and then, but continually; they walked in trespasses and sins. And this was not a solitary case; all the nations of the earth acted in the same way. It was the course of this world, "according to the life," mode of living, or successive ages of this world. The word aion, the literal meaning of which is "constant duration," is often applied to things which have a complete course, as the Jewish dispensation, a particular government, and the "term of human life"; so, here, the whole of life is a tissue of sin, from the cradle to the grave; every human soul, unsaved by Jesus Christ, continues to transgress. The prince of the power of the air. As the former clause may have particular respect to the Jewish people, who are frequently denominated "this world," this latter clause may especially refer to the Gentiles, who were most manifestly under the power of the devil, as almost every object of their worship was a demon, to whom the worst of passions and practices were attributed, and whose conduct his votaries took care to copy. Satan is termed prince of the power of the air, because the air is supposed to be a region in which malicious spirits dwell, all of whom are under the direction and influence of Satan, their chief. Children of disobedience. Perhaps a Hebraism for "disobedient children"; but, taken as it stands here, it is a strong expression in which disobedience appears to be personified, and wicked men exhibited as her children; the prince of the power of the air being their father, while disobedience is their mother.

3. Among whom also we all had our conversation. We Jews, as well as you Gentiles, have lived in transgressions and sins; this was the "course of our life." The lusts—the evil, irregular, and corrupt affections of the heart, showed themselves in the perversion of the mind as well as in our general conduct. The mind was darkened by the lusts of the flesh, and both conjoined to produce acts of unrighteousness.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 4–10

The glorious change that was wrought in them by converting grace.

But God, who is rich in mercy, &c., v. 4. God himself is the author of this great and happy change. Love is his inclination to do us good considered simply as creatures: mercy respects us as apostate and as miserable creatures. That love of God is great love, and that mercy of his is rich mercy.

II. Wherein this change consists. 1. We who were dead are quickened (v. 5). Grace in the soul is a new life in the soul. As death seals up all the powers and faculties, so does a state of sin, as to anything that is good. Grace unlocks and opens all, and enlarges the soul. A regenerate sinner becomes a living soul, being born of God: He hath quickened us together with Christ. It is in him that we live: Because I live, you shall live also.

2. We who were buried are raised up, v. 6. When he raised Christ from the dead, he did in effect raise up all believers together with him, and when he placed him at his right hand in heavenly places, he advanced and glorified them in and with him.—And made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Sinners roll themselves in the dust; sanctified souls sit in heavenly places; the world is as nothing to them, compared with what it has been, and compared with what the other world is. They are exalted to reign with him; they sit upon the throne with Christ.

III. The great design of God in producing and effecting this change. 1. With respect to others: That in the ages to come he might show, &c. (v. 7), that he might give a proof of his great goodness and mercy, for the encouragement of sinners in future time. The goodness of God in saving sinners heretofore is a proper encouragement to others in after-time to hope in his grace and mercy. God having this in his design, poor sinners should take great encouragement from it.

By grace you are saved (v. 5), and by grace are you saved through faith—it is the gift of God, v. 8. Every converted sinner is a saved sinner. The grace that saves them is the free undeserved goodness and favour of God; and he saves them, not by the works of the law, but through faith in Christ Jesus. Both that faith and that salvation are the gift of God. God has ordered all so that the whole shall appear to be of grace.

emphatically his and their past state by nature, as contrasted with their present state by grace.

children of wrath—not merely "sons," as in the Greek, "sons of disobedience" (vs. 2), but "children" by generation; not merely by adoption, as "sons" might be. The Greek order more emphatically marks this innate corruption: "Those who in their (very) nature are children of wrath"; vs. 5, "grace" is opposed to "nature" here; and salvation (implied in vss. 5, 8, "saved") to "wrath." The phrase, "children of wrath," is a Hebraism, i.e., objects of God's wrath from childhood, in our natural state, as being born in the sin which God hates. So "son of death" (Margin, II Sam. 12:5); "son of perdition" (John 17:12; II Thess. 2:3). as others—Greek, "as the rest" of mankind are (I Thess. 4:13). 4. God, who is rich—Greek "(as) being rich in mercy." for—i.e., "because of His great love." This was the special ground of God's saving us; as "rich in mercy" (cf. vs. 7; ch. 1:7; Rom. 2:4; 10:12) was the general ground. "Mercy takes away misery; love confers salvation" [BENGEL]. 5. dead in sins—The best reading is in the Greek, "dead in our (lit., 'the') trespasses." quickened—"vivified" spiritually, and consequences hereafter, corporally. There must be a spiritual resurrection of the soul before there can be a comfortable resurrection of the body [PEARSON] (John 11:25, 26; Rom. 8:11). together with Christ—The Head being seated at God's right hand, the body also sits there with Him [CHRYSOSTOM]. We are already seated there IN Him ("in Christ Jesus," vs. 6), and hereafter shall be seated by Him: IN Him already as in our Head, which is the ground of our hope; by Him hereafter, as by the conferring cause, when hope shall be swallowed up in fruition [PEARSON]. What God wrought in Christ, He wrought (by the very fact) in all united to Christ, and one with Him. by grace ye are saved—Greek, "Ye are in a saved state." Not merely "ye are being saved," but ye "are passed from death unto life" (John 5:24). Salvation is to the Christian not a thing to be waited for hereafter, but already realized (I John 3:14). The parenthetic introduction of this clause here (cf. vs. 8) is a burst of Paul's feeling, and in order to make the Ephesians feel that grace from first to last is the sole source of salvation; hence, too, he says "ye," not "we." 6. raised us up together—with Christ. The "raising up" presupposes previous quickening of Jesus in the tomb, and of us in the grave of our sins. made us sit together—with Christ, viz., in His ascension. Believers are bodily in heaven in point of right, and virtually so in spirit, and have each their own place assigned there, which in due time they shall take possession of (Phil. 3:20, 21). He does not say, "on the right hand of God"; a prerogative reserved to Christ peculiarly; though they shall share His throne (Rev. 3:21). in Christ Jesus—Our union with Him is the ground of our present spiritual, and future bodily, resurrection and ascension. "Christ Jesus" is the phrase mostly used in this Epistle, in which the office of the Christ, the Anointed Prophet, Priest and King, is the prominent thought; when the Person is prominent, "Jesus Christ" is the phrase used. 7. Greek, "That He might show forth (middle reflexive voice; for His own glory, ch. 1:6, 12, 14) in the ages which are coming on," i.e., the blessed ages of the Gospel which supersede "the age (Greek, for 'course') of this world" (vs. 2), and the past "ages" from which the mystery was hidden (Col. 1:26, 27). These good ages, though beginning with the first preaching of the Gospel, and thenceforth continually succeeding one another, are not consummated till the Lord's coming again (cf. ch. 1:21; Heb. 6:5). The words, "coming on," do not exclude the time then present, but imply simply the ages following upon Christ's "raising them up together" spiritually (vs. 6). kindness—"benignity." through Christ—rather, as Greek, "in Christ"; the same expression as is so often repeated, to mark that all our blessings center "IN HIM." 8. For—illustrating "the exceeding riches of His grace in kindness." Translate as in vs. 5, "Ye are in a saved state." through faith—the effect of the power of Christ's resurrection (ch. 1:19, 20; Phil. 3:10) whereby we are "raised together" with Him (vs. 6; Col. 2:12). Some of the oldest MSS. read, "through your (lit., 'the') faith." The instrument or mean of salvation on the part of the person saved; Christ alone is the meritorious agent. and that—viz., the act of believing, or "faith." "Of yourselves" stands in opposition to, "it is the gift of God" (Phil. 1:29). "That which I have said, 'through faith,' I do not wish to be understood so as if I excepted faith itself from grace" [ESTIUS]. "God justifies the believing man, not for the worthiness of his belief, but for the worthiness of Him in whom he believes" [HOOKER]. The

ADAM CLARKE

4. But God, who is rich in mercy. As they were corrupt in their nature, and sinful in their practice, they could possess no merit, nor have any claim upon God; and it required much mercy to remove so much misery and to pardon such transgressions. His great love. God's infinite love is the groundwork of our salvation; in reference to us that love assumes the form of mercy, and that mercy provides the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. And therefore the apostle adds, v. 5: "By grace ye are saved"—it is by God's free mercy in Christ that you are brought into this state of salvation.

5. Even when we were dead in sins. Dead in our souls; dead towards God; dead in law; and exposed to death eternal. Hath quickened us together with Christ. God has given us as complete a resurrection from the death of sin to a life of righteousness as the body of Christ has had from the grave. And as this quickening, or making alive, was most gratuitous on God's part, the apostle, with great propriety, says: By grace ye are saved.

6. And hath raised us up together . . . in Christ. Or rather, "by Christ"; His resurrection being the proof that He had made the full atonement, and that we might be justified by His blood. Believing therefore the record which God gave of His Son, we received this atonement, and were raised from a death of sin to a life of righteousness; and now we sit in heavenly places—we have a right to the kingdom of God, anticipate this glory, and are indescribably happy in the possession of this salvation, and in our fellowship with Christ Jesus.

8. For by grace are ye saved through faith. As you are now brought into a state of salvation, your sins being all blotted out, and you made partakers of the Holy Spirit; and, having a hope full of immortality, you must not attribute this to any works or merit of yours; for when this gospel reached you, you were all found "dead in trespasses and sins." Therefore it was God's free mercy to you, manifested through Christ, in whom you were commanded to believe; and having believed by the power of the Holy Spirit, you received, and were sealed by, the Holy Spirit of promise; so that this salvation is in no sense of yourselves, but is the "free gift" of God and not of any kind of works; so that no man can boast as having wrought out his own salvation, or even contributed anything towards it. By grace are ye saved through faith in Christ. This is a true doctrine, and continues to be essential to the salvation of man to the end of the world. But whether are we to understand, faith or salvation, as being the gift of God? This question is answered by the Greek text: "By this grace ye are saved through faith; and this [touto, this salvation] not of you; it is the gift of God, not of works: so that no one can boast." "The relative touto, 'this,' which is in the neuter gender, cannot stand for faith, which is the feminine; but it has the whole sentence that goes before for its antecedent." But it may be asked: Is not faith the gift of God? Yes, as to the grace by which it is produced; but the grace or power to believe, and the act of believing, are two different things. Without the grace or power to believe no man ever did or can believe; but with that power the act of faith is a man's own.

MATTHEW HENRY

I. By whom, and in what manner, it was brought about. Not of yourselves, v. 8. Not of works, lest any man should boast, v. 9. These things are not brought to pass by anything done by us. There is no room for any man's boasting of his own abilities and power; or as though he had done anything that might deserve such immense favours from God.

With respect to the regenerated sinners themselves: For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, &c., v. 10. We are his workmanship; not only as men, but as saints. The new man is a new creature; and God is its Creator. In Christ Jesus, that is, on the account of what he has done and suffered. Unto good works, &c. Lest he should seem to discourage good works, he here observes that God, in his new creation, has designed us for good works: Created unto good works; which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them, or glorify God by an exemplary conversation and by our perseverance in holiness.

The miserable condition of these Ephesians by nature. Wherefore remember, &c., v. 11. Converted sinners ought frequently to reflect upon the sinfulness and misery of the state they were in by nature. Gentiles in the flesh, that is, living in the corruption of their natures. Who are called uncircumcision by that, &c., "You were reproached and upbraided for it by the formal Jews." The misery of their case, v. 12. "At that time you were,"

1. "In a Christless condition without any saving relation to him." It must be a sad and deplorable thing for a soul to be without a Christ. Being without Christ, they were, 2. Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel; they did not belong to Christ's church. It is no small privilege to be placed in the church of Christ, and to share in the advantages peculiar to it.

3. They are strangers from the covenants of promise; the covenants of promise, because it is made up of promises. The Ephesians, in their gentilism, were strangers to this covenant, and all unregenerate sinners are strangers to it.

4. They had no hope. Those who are without Christ, and strangers from the covenant, can have no good hope.

They were in a state of estrangement from God: Without God in the world. The words are, atheists in the world: for, though they worshipped many gods, yet they were without the true God.

The happy change that was made in their state: But now, in Christ Jesus, you who sometimes were far off, &c. They were far off from Christ, and from God himself; and therefore from all good. "But now in Christ Jesus, &c., you are made initiation, as well as the increase, of faith, is from the Spirit of God, not only by an external proposal of the word, but by internal illumination in the soul [PEARSON]. Yet "faith" cometh by the means which man must avail himself of, viz., "hearing the word of God" (Rom. 10:17), and prayer (Luke 11: 13), though the blessing is wholly of God (I Cor. 3:6, 7). 9. Not of works—This clause stands in contrast to "by grace," as is confirmed by Romans 4:4, 5; 11:6. lest—rather, as Greek, "that no man should boast" (Rom. 3:27; 4:2). 10. workmanship—lit., "a thing of His making"; "handiwork." Here the spiritual creation, not the physical, is referred to (vss. 8, 9). created—having been created (ch. 4:24; Ps. 102:18; Isa. 43:21; II Cor. 5:5, 17). unto good works—"for good works." "Good works" cannot be performed until we are new "created unto" them. Paul never calls the works of the law "good works." We are not saved by, but created unto, good works. before ordained—Greek, "before made ready" (cf. John 5:36). God marks out for each in His purposes beforehand, the particular good works, and the time and way which He sees best. God both makes ready by His providence the opportunities for the works, and makes us ready for their performance (John 15:16; II Tim. 2:21). that we should walk in them—not "be saved" by them. Works do not justify, but the justified man works (Gal. 5:22-25). 11. The Greek order in the oldest MSS. is, "That in time past (lit., once) ye . . . ." Such remembrance sharpens gratitude and strengthens faith (vs. 19) [BENGEL]. Gentiles in the flesh—i.e., Gentiles in respect to circumcision. called Uncircumcision—The Gentiles were called [in contempt], and were, the Uncircumcision; the Jews were called, but were not truly, the Circumcision [ELLICOTT]. in the flesh made by hands—as opposed to the true "circumcision of the heart in the Spirit, and not the letter" (Rom. 2:29), "made without the hands in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ" (Col. 2:11). 12. without Christ—Greek, "separate from Christ"; having no part in Him; far from Him. A different Greek word (aneu) would be required to express, "Christ was not present with you" [TITTMANN]. aliens—Greek, "alienated from," not merely "separated from." The Israelites were cut off from the commonwealth of God, but it was as being self-righteous, indolent, and unworthy, not as aliens and strangers [CHRYSOSTOM]. The expression, "alienated from," takes it for granted that the Gentiles, before they had apostatized from the primitive truth, had been sharers in light and life (cf. ch. 4:18, 23). The hope of redemption through the Messiah, on their subsequent apostasy, was embodied into a definite "commonwealth" or polity, viz., that "of Israel," from which the Gentiles were alienated. Contrast vs. 13; ch. 3:6; 4:4, 5, with Psalm 147:20. covenants of promise—rather, ". . . of the promise," viz., "to thee and thy seed will I give this land" (Rom. 9:4; Gal. 3:16). The plural implies the several renewals of the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and with the whole people at Sinai [ALFORD]. "The promise" is singular, to signify that the covenant, in reality, and substantially, is one and the same at all times, but only different in its accidents and external circumstances (cf. Heb. 1:1, "at sundry times and in divers manners"). having no . . . hope—beyond this life (I Cor. 15:19). The CONJECTURES of heathen philosophers as to a future life were at best vague and utterly unsatisfactory. They had no divine "promise," and therefore no sure ground of "hope." Epicurus and Aristotle did not believe in it at all. The Platonists believed the soul passed through perpetual changes, now happy, and then again miserable; the Stoics, that it existed no longer than till the time of the general burning up of all things. without God—Greek, "atheists," i.e., they had not "God" in the sense we use the word, the Eternal Being who made and governs all things (cf. Acts 14:15, "Turn from these vanities unto the living God who made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things therein"), whereas the Jews had distinct ideas of God and immortality. Cf. also Galatians 4:8, "Ye knew not God . . . ye did service unto them which are no gods" (I Thess. 4:5). So also pantheists are atheists, for an impersonal God is NO GOD, and an ideal immortality no immortality [THOLUCK]. in the world—in contrast to belonging to "the commonwealth of Israel." Having their portion and their all in this godless vain world (Ps. 17:14), from which Christ delivers His people (John 15:19; 17:14; Gal. 1:4). 13. now—in contrast to "at that time" (vs. 12). in Christ Jesus—"Jesus" is here added, whereas the expression before (vs. 12) had been merely "Christ," to mark that they know Christ as the personal Saviour,

ADAM CLARKE

God never believes for any man any more than He repents for him; the penitent, through this grace enabling him, believes for himself. Nor does he believe necessarily or impulsively when he has that power; the power to believe may be present long before it is exercised, else why the solemn warnings with which we meet everywhere in the Word of God, and threatenings against those who do not believe? Is not this a proof that such persons have the power but do not use it?

10. For we are his workmanship. So far is this salvation from being our own work, or granted for our own works' sake, that we are ourselves not only the creatures of God, but our new creation was produced by His power; for we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works. He has saved us that we may show forth the virtues of Him who called us from darkness into His marvellous light. For though we are not saved for our good works, yet we are saved that we may perform good works, to the glory of God and the benefit of man. Which God hath before ordained. "For which God before prepared us, that we might walk in them." For being saved from sin, we are made partakers of the Spirit of holiness; and it is natural to that Spirit to lead to the practice of holiness; and he who is not holy in his life is not saved by the grace of Christ. The before ordaining, or rather preparing, must refer to the time when God began the new creation in their hearts; for from the first inspiration of God upon the soul it begins to love holiness, and obedience to the will of God is the very element in which a holy or regenerated soul lives.

11. Wherefore remember. That you may ever see and feel your obligations to live a pure and holy life, and be unfeignedly thankful to God for your salvation, remember that you were once heathens, in the flesh—without the pure doctrine, and under the influence of your corrupt nature; such as by the Jews (who gloried, in consequence of their circumcision, to be in covenant with God) were called Uncircumcision; i.e., persons out of the divine covenant, and having no right or title to any blessing of God.

12. That at that time ye were without Christ. Not only were not Christians, but had no knowledge of the Christ or Messiah, and no title to the blessings which were to proceed from Him. Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. You were by your birth, idolatry, etc., alienated from the commonwealth of Israel—from the civil and religious privileges of the Jewish people. Strangers from the covenants of promise. Having no part in the promise of the covenant made with Abraham, whether considered as relating to his natural or spiritual seed.

Having no hope. Either of the pardon of sin or of the resurrection of the body, nor indeed of the immortality of the soul. Of all these things the Gentiles had no rational or well-grounded hope.

Without God in the world. They had gods many and lords many, but in no Gentile nation was the true God known: nor indeed had they any correct notion of the divine nature. He who has neither God nor Christ is in a most deplorable state; he has neither a God to worship nor a Christ to justify him. And this is the state of every man who is living without the grace and Spirit of Christ. All such, whatever they may profess, are no better than practical atheists.

13. Ye who sometimes were far off. To be far off and to be near are sayings much in use among the Jews. (1) Among them, to be near signifies to be in the approbation or favor of God, and to be far off signifies to be under His displeasure. A holy man, or a genuine penitent, might be said to be nigh to God, because such persons are in His favor. (2) Every person who offered a sacrifice to God was considered as nigh." They were brought home to God. God is a help at hand to his people; and this is by the blood of Christ. Every believing sinner owes his nearness to God, to the death and sacrifice of Christ.

The great privileges that converted Jews and Gentiles both receive from Christ. Those who were in a state of enmity are reconciled. Jesus Christ is our peace, v. 14. He made peace and came to reconcile, 1. Jews and Gentiles to each other. He made both one. He broke down the middle wall of partition, the ceremonial law, called the partition-wall by way of allusion to the partition in the temple, which separated the court of the Gentiles from that into which the Jews only had liberty to enter.

Thus he abolished in his flesh the enmity, v. 15. By his sufferings in the flesh, he took away the binding power of the ceremonial law, the law of commandments contained in ordinances. By taking these out of the way, he formed one church of believers, whether they had been Jews or Gentiles. Thus he made in himself of twain one new man. He framed both these parties into one new society, so making peace.

2. God and sinners, whether Jews or Gentiles. Christ came to slay that enmity, and to reconcile them both to God, v. 16.

Sin breeds a quarrel between God and men. Christ came to take up the quarrel, and to bring it to an end, and this by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby. The great advantages which both parties gain, v. 17. Christ came, partly in his own person, as to the Jews, who are here said to have been nigh, and partly in his apostles to the Gentiles, who are said to have been afar off. And preached peace, reconciliation with God.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

"Jesus." sometimes—Greek, "aforetime." far off—the Jewish description of the Gentiles. Far off from God and from the people of God (vs. 17; Isa. 57:19; Acts 2:39). are—Greek, "have been." by—Greek, "in." Thus "the blood of Christ" is made the seal of a covenant IN which their nearness to God consists. In ch. 1:7, where the blood is more directly spoken of as the instrument, it is "through His blood" [ALFORD]. 14. he—Greek, "Himself" alone, pre-eminently, and none else. Emphatical. our peace—not merely "Peacemaker," but "Himself" the price of our (Jews' and Gentiles' alike) peace with God, and so the bond of union between "both" in God. He took both into Himself, and reconciled them, united, to God, by His assuming our nature and our penal and legal liabilities (vs. 15; Isa. 9:5, 6; 53:5; Mic. 5:5; Col. 1:20). His title, "Shiloh," means the same (Gen. 49:10). the middle wall of partition—Greek, "... of the partition" or "fence"; the middle wall which parted Jew and Gentile. There was a balustrade of stone which separated the court of the Gentiles from the holy place, which it was death for a Gentile to pass. But this, though incidentally alluded to, was but a symbol of the partition itself, viz., "the enmity" between "both" and God (vs. 15), the real cause of separation from God, and so the mediate cause of their separation from one another. Hence there was a twofold wall of partition, one the inner wall, severing the Jewish people from entrance to the holy part of the temple where the priests officiated, the other the outer wall, separating the Gentile proselytes from access to the court of the Jews (cf. Ezek. 44:7; Acts 21:28). Thus this twofold wall represented the Sinaitic law, which both severed all men, even the Jews, from access to God (through sin, which is the violation of the law), and also separated the Gentiles from the Jews. As the term "wall" implies the strength of the partition, so "fence" implies that it was easily removed by God when the due time came. 15. Rather, make "enmity" an apposition to "the middle wall of partition"; "Hath broken down the middle wall of partition (not merely as English Version, 'between us,' but also between all men and God), to wit, the enmity (Rom. 8:7) by His flesh" (cf. vs. 16; Rom. 8:3). the law of commandments contained in—Greek, "the law of the commandments [consisting] in ordinances." This law was "the partition" or "fence," which embodied the expression of the "enmity" (the "wrath" of God against our sin, and our enmity to Him, vs. 3) (Rom. 4:15; 5:20; 7:10, 11; 8:7). Christ has in, or by, His crucified flesh, abolished it, so far as its condemning and enmity-creating power is concerned (Col. 2:14), substituting for it the law of love, which is the everlasting spirit of the law, and which flows from the realization in the soul of His love in His death for us. Translate what follows, "that He might make the two (Jews and Gentiles) into one new man." Not that He might merely reconcile the two to each other, but incorporate the two, reconciled in Him to God, into one new man; the old man to which both belonged, the enemy of God, having been slain in His flesh on the cross. Observe, too, ONE new man; we are all in God's sight but one in Christ, as we are but one in Adam [ALFORD]. making peace—primarily between all and God, secondarily between Jews and Gentiles; He being "our peace." This "peace-making" precedes its publication (vs. 17). 16. Translate, "might altogether reconcile them both in one body (the Church, Col. 3:15) unto God through His cross." The Greek for "reconcile" (apocatalaxe), found only here and in Colossians 1:20, expresses not only a return to favor with one (catallage), but so to lay aside enmity that complete amity follows; to pass from enmity to complete reconciliation [TITTMANN]. slain the enmity—viz., that had been between man and God; and so that between Jew and Gentile which had resulted from it. By His being slain, He slew it (cf. Heb. 2:14). thereby—Greek, "therein"; "in" or "by the cross," i.e., His crucifixion (Col. 2:15). 17. Translate, "He came and announced glad tidings of peace." "He came" of His own free love, and "announced peace" with His own mouth to the apostles (Luke 24:36; John 20:19, 21, 26); and by them to others, through His Spirit present in His Church (John 14:18). Acts 26:23 is strictly parallel; after His resurrection "He showed light to the people ('them that were nigh') and to the Gentiles" ("you that were afar off"), by His Spirit in His ministers (cf. I Pet. 3:19). and to them—The oldest MSS. insert "peace" again: "And peace to them." The repetition implies the joy with which both alike would dwell again and again upon the welcome word "peace." So Isaiah 57:19. 18. Translate, "For it is through Him (John 14:6; having access to Him by the blood of that sacrifice. Hence the priests, whose office it was to offer sacrifices, were considered as being nigh to God; and all who brought gifts to the altar were considered as approaching the Almighty. (3) Being far off signified the state of the Gentiles as contradistinguished from the Jews, who were nigh. You Gentiles, who were unacquainted with God, and were even without God in the world, are brought to an acquaintance with Him; and are now, through Christ Jesus, brought into the favor and fellowship of God.

14. For he is our peace. Jesus Christ has died for both Jews and Gentiles, and has become a "Peace Offering," to reconcile both to God and to each other. Who hath made both one. Formed one Church out of the believers of both people. The middle wall of partition. By abolishing the law of Jewish ordinances, He has removed that which kept the two parties not only in a state of separation but also at variance. This expression, the middle wall, can refer only to that most marked distinction which the Jewish laws and customs made between them and all other nations whatsoever.

15. Having abolished in his flesh. By His incarnation and death He not only made an atonement for sin, but He appointed the doctrine of reconciliation to God and of love to each other, to be preached in all nations. The enmity of which the apostle speaks was reciprocal among the Jews and Gentiles. The former detested the Gentiles and could hardly allow them the denomination of men; the latter had the Jews in contempt because of the peculiarity of their religious rites and ceremonies, which were different from those of all the other nations of the earth. The law of commandments. Contained in, or rather "concerning," ordinances; which law was made merely for the purpose of keeping the Jews a distinct people, and pointing out the Son of God till He should come. To make in himself. To make one Church out of both people, which should be considered the body of which Jesus Christ is the Head. Thus He makes one new man—one new Church; and thus He makes and establishes peace. I think the apostle still alludes to the "peace offering" among the Jews. They have a saying, Sephra, fol. 121: "Whosoever offers a peace offering sacrifice, brings peace to the world." Such a peace offering was the death of Christ, and by it peace is restored to the earth.

16. That he might reconcile both unto God in one body. That the Jews and Gentiles, believing on the Lord Jesus, might lay aside all their causes of contention and become one spiritual body, or society of men, influenced by the Spirit, and acting according to the precept of the gospel. Having slain the enmity thereby. Having by His death upon the Cross made reconciliation between God and man, and by His Spirit in their hearts removed the enmity of their fallen, sinful nature.

17. And came and preached peace. Proclaimed the readiness of God to forgive and save both Jews and Gentiles.

Now the effect of this peace is the free access which both Jews and Gentiles have unto God (v. 18): For through him we both have access. The throne of grace is erected for us to come to, and liberty of approach to that throne is allowed us. Christ purchased for us leave to come to God, and the Spirit gives us a heart to come.

Now therefore you are no more strangers and foreigners, v. 19. They were now no longer aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. The church is compared to a city, and every converted sinner is free of it. It is also compared to a house, and every converted sinner is one of the family, a servant and a child in God's house.

In v. 20 the church is compared to a building. The apostles and prophets are the foundation of that building. Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ contains in it nothing so wonderful as himself. It is a mass of marvels, but He is the miracle of it; the wonder of wonders is "the Wonderful" himself. If proof be asked of the truth which He proclaimed, we point men to Jesus Christ himself. His character is unique. We defy unbelievers to imagine another like Him. He is God and yet man, and we challenge them to compose a narrative in which the two apparently incongruous characters shall be so harmoniously blended—in which the human and divine shall be so marvelously apparent, without the one overshading the other. They question the authenticity of the four Gospels; will they try to write a fifth? Will they even attempt to add a few incidents to the life which shall be worthy of the sacred biography, and congruous with those facts which are already described? If it be all a forgery, will they be so good as to show us how it is done? Will they find a novelist who will write another biography of a man of any century they choose, of any nationality, or of any degree of experience, or any rank or station, and let us see if they can describe in that imaginary life a devotion, a self-sacrifice, a truthfulness, a completeness of character at all comparable to that of Jesus Christ himself? Can they invent another perfect character even if the divine element be left out? They must of necessity fail, for there is none like unto Jesus himself.

—The Treasury of the New Testament

Christ supports the building by his strength: In whom all the building, fitly framed together, &c., v. 21. All believers being united to Christ by faith, and among themselves by Christian charity, grow unto a holy temple, in which there is much communion between God and his people. The church is the place which God hath chosen to put his name there, and it becomes such a temple by grace and strength derived from himself—in the Lord.

In whom you also are built together, &c., v. 22. Every true believer is a living temple, is a habitation of God through the Spirit. God dwells in all believers now, an earnest of their dwelling together with him to eternity.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Heb. 10:19) that we have our access (ch. 3:12; Rom. 5:2), both of us, in (i.e., united in, i.e., by, I Cor. 12:13, Greek) one Spirit to the Father," viz., as our common Father, reconciled to both alike; whence flows the removal of all separation between Jew and Gentile. The oneness of "the Spirit," through which we both have our access, is necessarily followed by oneness of the body, the Church (vs. 16).

19. Now, therefore—rather, "So then" [ALFORD]. foreigners—rather, "sojourners"; opposed to "members of the household," as "strangers" is to "fellow citizens." Philippians 3:19, 20, "conversation," Greek, "citizenship." but—The oldest MSS. add, "are." with the saints—"the commonwealth of (spiritual) Israel" (vs. 12). of God—THE FATHER; as JESUS CHRIST appears in vs. 20, and THE SPIRIT in vs. 22. 20. Translate as Greek, "Built up upon . . ." (participle; having been built up upon; omit, therefore, "and are"). Cf. I Corinthians 3:11, 12. The same image in ch. 3:18, recurs in his address to the Ephesian elders (Acts 20:32), and in his Epistle to Timothy at Ephesus (I Tim. 3:15; II Tim. 2:19), naturally suggested by the splendid architecture of Diana's temple; the glory of the Christian temple is eternal and real, not mere idolatrous gaud. The image of a building is appropriate also to the Jew-Christians; as the temple at Jerusalem was the stronghold of Judaism; as Diana's temple, of paganism. foundation of the apostles . . .—i.e., upon their ministry and living example (cf. Matt. 16:18). Christ Himself, the only true Foundation, was the grand subject of their ministry, and spring of their life. As one with Him and His fellow workers, they, too, in a secondary sense, are called "foundations" (Rev. 21:14). The "prophets" are joined with them closely; for the expression is here not "foundations of the apostles and the prophets," but "foundations of the apostles and prophets." For the doctrine of both was essentially one (I Pet. 1:10, 11; Rev. 19:10). The apostles take the precedency (Luke 10:24). Thus he appropriately shows regard to the claims of the Jews and Gentiles: "the prophets" representing the old Jewish dispensation, "the apostles" the new. The "prophets" of the new also are included. BENGEL and ALFORD refer the meaning solely to these (ch. 3:5; 4:11). These passages imply, I think, that the New Testament prophets are not excluded; but the apostle's plain reference to Psalm 118:22, "the head stone of the corner," proves that the Old Testament prophets are a prominent thought. David is called a "prophet" in Acts 2:30. Cf. also Isaiah 28:16; another prophet present to the mind of Paul, which prophecy leans on the earlier one of Jacob (Gen. 49:24). The sense of the context, too, suits this: Ye were once aliens from the commonwealth of Israel (in the time of her Old Testament prophets), but now ye are members of the true Israel, built upon the foundation of her New Testament apostles and Old Testament prophets. Paul continually identifies his teaching with that of Israel's old prophets (Acts 26:22; 28:23). The costly foundation stones of the temple (I Kings 5:17) typified the same truth (cf. Jer. 51:26). The same stone is at once the cornerstone and the foundation stone on which the whole building rests. Paul supposes a stone or rock so large and so fashioned as to be both at once; supporting the whole as the foundation, and in part rising up at the extremities, so as to admit of the side walls meeting in it, and being united in it as the cornerstone [ZANCHIUS]. As the cornerstone, it is conspicuous, as was Christ (I Pet. 2:6), and coming in men's way may be stumbled over, as the Jews did at Christ (Matt. 21:42; I Pet. 2:7). 21. In whom—as holding together the whole. fitly framed—so as exactly to fit together. groweth—"is growing" continually. Here an additional thought is added to the image; the Church has the growth of a living organism, not the mere increase of a building. Cf. I Peter 2:5; "lively stones . . . built up a spiritual house." Cf. ch. 4:16; Zechariah 6:12, "The Branch shall build the temple of the Lord," where similarly the growth of a branch, and the building of a temple, are joined. holy—as being the "habitation of God" (vs. 22). So "in the Lord" (Christ) answers to "through the Spirit" (vs. 22; cf. ch. 3:16, 17). "Christ is the inclusive Head of all the building, the element in which it has its being and now its growth" [ALFORD]. 22. are builded together—Translate, "are being builded together." through—Greek, "in the Spirit." God, by His Spirit in believers, has them for His habitation (I Cor. 3:16, 17; 6:19; II Cor. 6:16).

ADAM CLARKE

18. For through him, Christ Jesus, we both—Jews and Gentiles—have access by one Spirit, through the influence of the Holy Ghost, unto the Father—God Almighty. This text is a plain proof of the Holy Trinity. No soul can have access to God but by Jesus Christ, and He introduces none but such as receive His Holy Spirit.

19. Ye are no more strangers. In this chapter the Church of God is compared to a city which has a variety of privileges, rights, etc., founded on regular charters and grants. The Gentiles, having believed in Christ, are all incorporated with the believing Jews in this holy city. Formerly, when any of them came to Jerusalem, being strangers, they had no rights whatever; nor could they, as mere heathens, settle among them. Again, if any of them, convinced of the errors of the Gentiles, acknowledged the God of Israel but did not receive circumcision, he might dwell in the land, but he had no right to the blessings of the covenant. Such might be called "sojourners"—persons who have no property in the land, and may only rent a house for the time being. Fellowcitizens with the saints. Called to the enjoyment of equal privileges with the Jews themselves, who, by profession, were a holy people; who were bound to be holy, and therefore are often called saints, or "holy persons," when both their hearts and conduct were far from being right in the sight of God. But the saints spoken of here are the converted or Christianized Jews. Of the household of God. The house of God is the "temple"; the Temple was a type of the Christian Church. This is now become God's house; all genuine believers are considered as being domestics of this house, the children and servants of God Almighty, having all equal rights, privileges, and advantages.

20. And are built upon the foundation. Following the same metaphor, comparing the Church of Christ to a city, and to the Temple, the believing Ephesians are represented as parts of that building; the living stones out of which it is principally formed, 1 Pet. ii. 4-5, having for foundation—the ground plan, specification, and principle on which it was builded—the doctrine taught by the prophets in the Old Testament and the apostles in the New; Jesus Christ being that corner stone, the chief angle or foundation Cornerstone, the connecting Medium by which both Jews and Gentiles were united in the same building.

21. In whom. By which foundation Cornerstone, Christ Jesus, all the building, composed of converted Jews and Gentiles, fitly framed together, "properly jointed and connected together," groweth unto an holy temple—is continually increasing as new converts from Judaism or heathenism flock into it. It is not a finished building, but will continue to increase and be more and more perfect till the day of judgment.

22. In whom ye also are builded. The apostle now applies the metaphor to the purpose for which he produced it, retaining however some of the figurative expressions. As the stones in a temple are all properly placed so as to form a complete house and be a habitation for the deity that is worshipped there, so you are all, both believing Jews and Gentiles, prepared by the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, under the influence of the Spirit of Christ, to become a habitation of God, a Church in which God shall be worthily worshipped, and in which He can continually dwell.

I. The tribulations and sufferings which he endured, v. 1. "For this cause,—for asserting that the great privileges of the gospel belong not only to the Jews, but to believing Gentiles also,—for this I am now a prisoner, but a prisoner of Jesus Christ." Christ's servants, if they come to be prisoners, are his prisoners. Paul adhered to Christ, and Christ owned him, when he was in prison. For you, Gentiles the faithful ministers of Christ are to dispense his sacred truths whatever they themselves may suffer for doing so. He speaks again of his sufferings: Wherefore I desire that you faint not at my tribulation for you, which is your glory, v. 13. While he was in prison, he suffered much there; yet he would not have them discouraged nor dismayed at this. The apostle seems to have been more solicitous lest they should be discouraged and faint upon his tribulations than about what he himself endured. His sufferings, he says, were their glory. God not only sent his apostles to preach the gospel to them, but even to suffer for them.

II. The apostle informs them of God's appointing him to the office by a special revelation that he made unto him. 1. God appointed him to the office: If you have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward, v. 2.

Of the revelation of this truth he speaks, v. 3–5. The coalition of Jews and Gentiles in the gospel church was a mystery. It is called a mystery because the several circumstances of it were concealed and kept secret in God's own breast. And it is called the mystery of Christ because it was revealed by him, and because it relates so very much to him. Of this the apostle has given some hints afore in the preceding chapters. Whereby, when you read; or, as those words may be read, unto which attending (and it is not enough for us barely to read the scriptures, unless we attend to them) you may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. This mystery in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit (v. 5). Who would have imagined that those who had been so long in the dark, and at so great a distance, would be enlightened with the marvellous light, and be made nigh? Let us learn hence not to despair of the worst, of the worst of persons, and the worst of nations. None so unworthy but God may please to confer great grace upon them.

2. God eminently qualified him for it, by a special revelation. (1) The mystery revealed is that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the gospel (v. 6). And this in Christ, being united to Christ, in whom all the promises are yea and amen; and by the gospel. This was the great truth revealed to the apostles. He styles the gospel the grace of God because it is the gift of divine grace to sinful men; and it is also the great instrument in the hands of the Spirit by which God works grace in the souls of men. Whereof I was made a minister, &c., v. 7. He was MADE a minister—he did not make himself such—according to the gift of the grace of God unto him. God supplied and furnished him for his work by the effectual working of his power, in himself more especially, and also in great numbers of those to whom he preached. What God calls men to he fits them for, and does it with an almighty power.

Vss. 1-21. HIS APOSTOLIC OFFICE TO MAKE KNOWN THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST REVEALED BY THE SPIRIT: PRAYER THAT BY THE SAME SPIRIT THEY MAY COMPREHEND THE VAST LOVE OF CHRIST: DOXOLOGY ENDING THIS DIVISION OF THE EPISTLE. As the first chapter treated of THE FATHER'S office; and the second, THE SON'S, so this, that of THE SPIRIT. 1. of Jesus Christ—Greek, "Christ Jesus." The office is the prominent thought in the latter arrangement; the person, in the former. He here marks the Messiahship of "Christ," maintained by him as the origin of his being a "prisoner," owing to the jealousy of the Jews being roused at his preaching it to the Gentiles. His very bonds were profitable to ("for" or "in behalf of you") Gentiles (vs. 13; II Tim. 2:10). He digresses at "For this cause," and does not complete the sentence which he had intended, until vs. 14, where he resumes the words, "For this cause," viz., because I know this your call of God as Gentiles (ch. 2:11-22), to be "fellow heirs" with the Jews (vs. 6), "I bow my knees to" the Father of our common Saviour (vss. 14, 15) to confirm you in the faith by His Spirit. "I Paul," expresses the agent employed by the Spirit to enlighten them, after he had been first enlightened himself by the same Spirit (vss. 3-5, 9). 2. If—The Greek does not imply doubt: "Assuming (what I know to be the fact viz.,) that ye have heard...." "If, as I presume...." The indicative in the Greek shows that no doubt is implied: "Seeing that doubtless...." He by this phrase delicately reminds them of their having heard from himself, and probably from others subsequently, the fact. See Introduction, showing that these words do not disprove the address of this Epistle to the Ephesians. Cf. Acts 20:17-24. the dispensation—"The office of dispensing, as a steward, the grace of God which was (not 'is') given me to you-ward," viz., to dispense to you. 3. he made known—The oldest MSS. read, "That by revelation was the mystery (viz., of the admission of the Gentiles, vs. 6; ch. 1:9) made known unto me (Gal. 1:12). as I wrote afore—viz., in this Epistle (ch. 1:9, 10), the words of which he partly repeats. 4. understand my knowledge—"perceive my understanding" [ALFORD], or "intelligence." "When ye read," implies that, deep as are the mysteries of this Epistle, the way for all to understand them is to read it (II Tim. 3:15, 16). By perceiving his understanding of the mysteries, they, too, will be enabled to understand. the mystery of Christ—The "mystery" is Christ Himself, once hidden, but now revealed (Col. 1:27). 5. in other ages—Greek, "generations." not made known—He does not say, "has not been revealed." Making known by revelation is the source of making known by preaching [BENGEL]. The former was vouchsafed only to the prophets, in order that they might make known the truth so revealed to men in general. unto the sons of men—men in their state by birth, as contrasted with those illuminated "by the Spirit" (Greek, "IN the Spirit," cf. Rev. 1: 10), Matt. 16:17. as—The mystery of the call of the Gentiles (of which Paul speaks here) was not unknown to the Old Testament prophets (Isa. 56:6, 7; 49:6). But they did not know it with the same explicit distinctness "AS" it has been now known (Acts 10:19, 20; 11:18-21). They probably did not know that the Gentiles were to be admitted without circumcision or that they were to be on a level with the Jews in partaking of the grace of God. The gift of "the Spirit" in its fulness was reserved for the New Testament that Christ might thereby be glorified. The epithet, "holy," marks the special consecration of the New Testament "prophets" (who are here meant) by the Spirit, compared with which even the Old Testament prophets were but "sons of men" (Ezek. 2:3, and elsewhere). 6. Translate, "That the Gentiles are..." "and fellow members of the same body, and fellow partakers of the (so the oldest MSS. read, not 'His') promise, in Christ Jesus (added in the oldest MSS.), through the Gospel." It is "in Christ Jesus" that they are made "fellow heirs" in the inheritance of GOD: "of the same body" under the Head, CHRIST JESUS; and "fellow partakers of the promise" in the communion of THE HOLY SPIRIT (ch. 1:13; Heb. 6:4). The Trinity is thus alluded to, as often elsewhere in this Epistle (ch. 2:19, 20, 22). 7. Whereof—"of which" Gospel. according to—in consequence of, and in accordance with, "the gift of the grace of God." given—"which (gift of grace) was given to me by (Greek, 'according to,' as in vs. 20; ch. 1:19: as the result of, and in proportion to) the effectual working (Greek, 'energy,' or 'in-working') of His power." 8. am—Not merely was I in times past,

1. For this cause. Because he maintained that the Gentiles were admitted to all the privileges of the Jews and all the blessings of the new covenant, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, the Jews persecuted him and caused him to be imprisoned, first at Caesarea, where he was obliged to appeal to the Roman emperor, in consequence of which he was sent prisoner to Rome. The prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles. For preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, and showing that they were not bound by the law of Moses, and yet were called to be fellow citizens with the saints; for this very cause the Jews persecuted him unto bonds, and conspired his death.

2. If ye have heard of the dispensation. The compound particle which is commonly translated "if indeed," in several places means "since indeed, seeing that," and should be translated so in this verse, and in several other places of the New Testament. "Seeing ye have heard of the dispensation of God, which is given me to you-ward." By the dispensation of the grace of God we may understand either the apostolic office and gifts granted to Paul for the purpose of preaching the gospel among the Gentiles (see Rom. i. 5) or the knowledge which God gave him of that gracious and divine plan which He had formed for the conversion of the Gentiles.

3. By revelation he made known unto me. Instead of he made known, "was made known" is the reading of many MSS. It is doubtless the true reading. The apostle wishes the Ephesians to understand that it was not an opinion of his own, or a doctrine which he was taught by others, or which he had gathered from the ancient prophets; but one that came to him by immediate revelation from God, as he had informed them before in few words, referring to what he had said in chap. i. 9-12.

4. Whereby, when ye read. When you refer back to them. Ye may understand my knowledge. You may see what God has given me to know concerning what has been hitherto a mystery—the calling of the Gentiles and the breaking down the middle wall between them and the Jews, so as to make both one spiritual body, and on the same conditions.

5. Which in other ages was not made known. That the calling of the Gentiles was made known by the prophets in different ages of the Jewish church is exceedingly clear; but it certainly was not made known in that clear and precise manner in which it was now revealed by the Spirit unto the ministers of the New Testament. Nor was it made known unto them at all that the Gentiles should find salvation without coming under the yoke of the Mosaic law, and that the Jews themselves should be freed from that yoke of bondage; these were discoveries totally new, and now revealed for the first time by the Spirit of God.

6. That the Gentiles should be fellowheirs. This is the substance of that mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and which was now made known to the New Testament apostles and prophets, and more particularly to Paul. His promise in Christ. That the promise made to Abraham extended to the Gentiles, the apostle has largely proved in his Epistle to the Romans; and that it was to be fulfilled to them by and through Christ, he proves there also; and particularly in his Epistle to the Galatians—see Gal. iii. 14. And that these blessings were to be announced in the preaching of the gospel, and received on believing it, he everywhere declares, but more especially in this Epistle.

7. Whereof I was made a minister. A "deacon," a "servant" acting under and by the direction of the great Master, Jesus Christ; from whom, by an especial call and revelation, I received the apostolic gifts and office, and by the "energy," the "in-working of His power," this gospel which I preached was made effectual to the salvation of vast multitudes of Jews and Gentiles.

III. How he was employed in this office with respect to the Gentiles, and to all men.

1. With respect to the Gentiles, he preached to them the unsearchable riches of Christ, v. 8. (1) How humbly he speaks of himself: I am less than the least of all saints. St. Paul, who was the chief of the apostles, calls himself less than the least of all saints. What can be less than the least? To speak himself as little as could be, he speaks himself less than could be. Where God gives grace to be humble, there he gives all other grace. While he magnifies his office, he debases himself.

(2) How highly he speaks of Jesus Christ: The unsearchable riches of Christ. There is a mighty treasury of mercy, grace, and love, laid up in Christ Jesus, and that both for Jews and Gentiles. And they are unsearchable riches, which we cannot find the bottom of. It was the apostle's business and employment to preach these unsearchable riches of Christ among the Gentiles. "Unto me is this grace given; this special favour God has granted to such an unworthy creature as I am." And it is an unspeakable favour to the Gentile world that to them the unsearchable riches of Christ are preached. Though many remain poor, and are not enriched with these riches, yet if we are not enriched with them, it is our own fault.

2. With respect to all men, v. 9. To make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God who created all things by Jesus Christ. No wonder that he saves the Gentiles as well as the Jews; for he is the common Creator of them both.

but I still am the least worthy of so high an office (cf. I Tim. 1:15, end). least of all saints—not merely "of all apostles" (I Cor. 15:9, 10). is—Greek, "has been given."

among—omitted in the oldest MSS. Translate, "to announce to the Gentiles the glad tidings of the unsearchable (Job 5:9) riches," viz., of Christ's grace (ch. 1:7; 2:7). Romans 11: 33, "unsearchable" as a mine inexhaustible, whose treasures can never be fully explored (vss. 18, 19).

9. to make all men see—Greek, "to enlighten all" (ch. 1:18; Ps. 18:28; Heb. 6:4). "All" (cf. Col. 1: 28). fellowship—The oldest MSS. read, "economy," or "dispensation" (cf. Col. 1:25, 26; and Note, ch. 1:10, above). "To make all see how it hath seemed good to God at this time to dispense (through me and others, His stewards) what heretofore was a mystery." ELLICOTT explains it, "the arrangement," or "regulation" of the mystery (the union of Jews and Gentiles in Christ) which was now to be humbly traced and acknowledged in the fact of its having secretly existed in the counsel of God, and now having been revealed to the heavenly powers by means of the Church. from the beginning of the world—Greek, "from (the beginning of) the ages." Cf. ch. 1:4; Romans 16:25; I Corinthians 2:7. The "ages" are the vast successive periods of time, marked by successive stages of creation and orders of beings. in God—"hidden in" His counsels (ch. 1:9).

created all things by Jesus Christ—God's creation of the world and all things therein is the foundation of the rest of the "economy," which is freely dispensed according to the universal power of God [BENGEL]. As God created "the whole range of things" (so the Greek), physical and spiritual alike, He must have an absolute right to adjust all things as He will. Hence, we may see His right to keep the mystery of world-wide salvation in Christ "hidden in Himself," till his own good time for revealing it. The oldest MSS. omit "by Jesus Christ." 10. The design of God in giving Paul grace to proclaim to the Gentiles the mystery of salvation heretofore hidden. now—first: opposed to "hidden from the beginning of the world" (vs. 5). unto the principalities and—Greek adds "the"—powers—unto the various orders of good angels primarily, as these dwell "in the heavenly places" in the highest sense; "known" to their adoring joy (I Tim. 3:16; I Pet. 1:12). Secondarily, God's wisdom in redemption

8. Less than the least of all saints. As the design of the apostle was to magnify the grace of Christ in the salvation of the world, he uses every precaution to prevent the eyes of the people from being turned to anything but Christ crucified. And although he was obliged to speak of himself as the particular instrument which God had chosen to bring the Gentile world to the knowledge of the truth, yet he does it in such a manner as to show that the excellency of the power was of God and not of him. To lay himself as low as possible, consistently with his being in the number of divinely commissioned men, he calls himself less than the least; and is obliged to make a new word, by strangely forming a comparative degree, not from the positive, which would have been a regular grammatical procedure, but from the superlative. The adjective signifies "little," or less, and least. On the superlative of "little," Paul forms his comparative, less than the least, a word of which it would be vain to attempt a better translation than that given in our own version. It most strongly marks the unparalleled humility of the apostle; and the amazing condescension of God, in favoring him, who had been before a persecutor and blasphemer, with the knowledge of this glorious scheme of human redemption, and the power to preach it so successfully among the Gentiles. The unsearchable riches of Christ. The word from a, privative, and "to trace out," from ichnos, a "step," is exceedingly well-chosen here. It refers to the footsteps of God, the plans He had formed, the dispensations which He had published, and the innumerable providences which He had combined to prepare, mature, and bring to full effect and view His gracious designs in the salvation of a ruined world, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of His Son. There were in these schemes and providences such riches—such an abundance, such a variety, as could not be comprehended even by the naturally vast and, through the divine inspiration, unparalleledly capacious mind of the apostle.

9. And to make all men see. "And to illuminate all"; to give information to both Jews and Gentiles; to afford them a sufficiency of light, so that they might be able distinctly to discern the great objects exhibited in this gospel. What is the fellowship of the mystery. The word koinonia, which we properly translate fellowship, was used among the Greeks to signify their religious communities. Here it may intimate the association of Jews and Gentiles in one Church or body, and their agreement in that glorious mystery which was now so fully opened relative to the salvation of both. But instead of koinonia, "fellowship," oikonomia, "dispensation" or "economy," is the reading of most MSS. Some of the best printed editions of the Greek text have the same reading, and that in our common text has very little authority to support it. "Dispensation" or "economy" is far more congenial to the scope of the apostle's declaration in this place; he wished to show them the economy of that mystery of bringing Jews and Gentiles to salvation by faith in Christ Jesus which God from the beginning of the world had kept hidden in His own infinite mind, and did not think proper to reveal even when He projected the creation of the world, which had respect to the economy of human redemption. Who created all things by Jesus Christ. Some very judicious critics are of opinion that this does not refer to the material creation; and that we should understand the whole as referring to the formation of all God's dispensations of grace, mercy, and truth, which have been planned, managed, and executed by Christ, from the foundation of the world to the present time. But the words by Jesus Christ are wanting in several MSS. The text therefore should be read: "which from the beginning of the world had been hidden in God who created all things."

10. That now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places. Who are these principalities and powers? Some think evil angels are intended, because they are thus denominated, chap. vi. 12. Others think good angels are meant; for as these heavenly beings are curious to investigate the wondrous economy of the gospel, though they are not its immediate objects (see 1 Pet. i. 12), it is quite consistent with the

To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known, by the church, the manifold wisdom of God, v. 10. Of the manifold wisdom of God; that is, of the great variety with which God wisely dispenses things, or of the many ways he takes in ordering his church, and especially in receiving the Gentiles into it.

And this is according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, v. 11.

The apostle, having mentioned our Lord Jesus Christ, subjoins concerning him, In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him (v. 12). We have liberty to open our minds freely to God, as to a Father. We may come with humble boldness to hear from God, and we may expect to hear from him good words and comfortable.

Verses 14–21

Paul's affectionate prayer to God for his beloved Ephesians.—For this cause. This may be referred either to the immediately foregoing verse, That you faint not, &c., or, rather, the apostle is here resuming what he began at the first verse.

I. To whom he prays—to God, as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

II. I bow my knees. When we draw nigh to God, we should reverence him in our hearts, and express our reverence in the most becoming behaviour.

is made known to evil angels, who dwell "in heavenly places" in a lower sense, viz., the air (cf. ch. 2:2 with 6:12); "known" to their dismay (I Cor. 15: 24; Col. 2:15). might be known—Translate, "may be known."

by the church—"by means of," or "through the Church," which is the "theater" for the display of God's manifold wisdom (Luke 15:10; I Cor. 4:9): "a spectacle (Greek, 'theater') to angels." Hence, angels are but our "fellow servants" (Rev. 19:10). manifold wisdom—though essentially one, as Christ 10). manifold wisdom—though essentially one, as Christ is one, yet varying the economy in respect to places, times, and persons (Isa. 55:8, 9; Heb. 1:1). Cf. I Pet. 4:10, "stewards of the manifold grace of God." Man cannot understand aright its single acts till he can survey them as a connected whole (I Cor. 13:12). The call of the Church is no haphazard remedy, or afterthought, but part of the eternal scheme, which, amidst manifold varieties of dispensation, is one in its end.

11. which he purposed—Greek, "made." ELLICOTT translates, "wrought."

12. Translate, "our boldness and our access (ch. 2:18) in confidence through our faith in Him." ALFORD quotes as an instance, Romans 8:38, etc. "THE access" (Greek) implies the formal introduction into the presence of a monarch.

13. "I entreat you not to be dispirited." for you—in your behalf. which is—rather, "which are your glory," viz., inasmuch as showing that God loved you so much, as both to give His Son for you, and to permit His apostles to suffer "tribulations" for you [CHRYSOSTOM] in preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles. Note, vs. 1, "prisoner for you Gentiles." My tribulations are your spiritual "glory," as your faith is furthered thereby (I Cor. 4:10). 14. For this cause—Resuming the thread of vs. 1, "For this cause." Because ye have such a standing in God's Church [ALFORD]. bow my knees—the proper attitude in humble prayer. Posture affects the mind, and is not therefore unimportant. See Paul's practice (Acts 20:36); and that of the Lord Himself on earth (Luke 22: 41). unto the Father—The oldest MSS. omit "of our Lord Jesus Christ." But Vulgate and some very old authorities retain them: vs. 15, "From whom," in either case, refers to "the Father" (Patera), as "family" (patria, akin in sound and etymology) plainly refers to Him. Still the foundation of all sonship is in Jesus Christ.

15. the whole family—ALFORD, MIDDLETON, and others translate, goodness of God to give them that satisfaction which they require. And in this discovery of the gospel plan of salvation, which reconciles things in heaven and things on earth, both men and angels, these pure spirits are greatly interested, and their praises to the Divine Being rendered much more abundant. Others imagine the Jewish rulers and rabbins are intended, particularly those of them who were converted to Christianity, and who had now learned from the preaching of the gospel what, as Jews, they could never have known. By the church. That is, by the Christians, and by the wonderful things done in the Church; and by the apostles, who were its pastors. The manifold wisdom of God. "That multifarious and greatly diversified wisdom of God"; laying great and infinite plans, and accomplishing them by endless means, through the whole lapse of ages; making every occurrence subservient to the purposes of His infinite mercy and goodness. God's gracious design to save a lost world by Jesus Christ could not be defeated by any cunning skill or malice of man or devils. Whatever hindrances are thrown in the way, His wisdom and power can remove; and His infinite wisdom can never want ways or means to effect its gracious designs.

11. According to the eternal purpose. "According to the purpose concerning the periods." This seems to refer to the complete round of the Jewish system, and to that of the gospel. I have often observed that, though the proper grammatical meaning of the word is "everduring," or "endless duration," yet it is often applied to those systems, periods, and governments which have a complete duration, taking in the whole of them, from their commencement to their termination, leaving nothing of their duration unembraced. So, here, God purposed that the Jewish dispensation should commence at such a time and terminate at such a time; that the gospel dispensation should commence when the Jewish ended, and terminate only with life itself; and that the results of both should be endless. This is probably what is meant by the above phrase. Which he purposed in Christ Jesus. "Which He made or constituted in or for Christ Jesus." The manifestation of Christ and the glory which should follow were the grand objects which God kept in view in all His dispensations.

12. In whom we have boldness. "By whom we Gentiles have this liberty of speech," so that we may say anything by prayer and supplication, and this "introduction" into the divine presence by faith in Christ. It is only in His name we can pray to God, and it is only by Him that we can come to God; none can give us an "introduction" but Christ Jesus, and it is only for His sake that God will either hear or save us. It is on the ground of such scriptures as these that we conclude all our prayers in the name, and for the sake, of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

13. I desire that ye faint not. In those primitive times, when there was much persecution, people were in continual danger of falling away from the faith who were not well-grounded in it. This the apostle deprecates, and advances a strong reason why they should be firm.

14. For this cause I bow my knees. That you may not faint, but persevere, I frequently pray to God, who is our God and the Father of our Lord Jesus. Some very ancient and excellent MSS. and versions omit the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. And in them the passage reads: "I bow my knees unto the Father." Many parts of this prayer bear a strict resemblance to that offered up by Solomon when dedicating the Temple: "He . . . kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven," 2 Chron. vi. 13. The apostle was now dedicating the Christian Church, that then was and that ever should be to God; and praying for those blessings which should ever rest on and distinguish it; and he kneels down after the example of Solomon, and invokes Him to whom the first Temple was dedicated, and who had made it a type of the gospel Church.

15. Of whom the whole family. Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ on earth, the spirits of

The universal church has a dependence upon the Lord Jesus Christ: Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. Understand it of the saints in heaven, who wear the crown of glory, and of saints on earth who are going on in the work of grace here. Both the one and the other make but one family; and from him they are named CHRISTIANS.

III. What the apostle asks of God for these his friends—spiritual blessings. 1. Spiritual strength for the work to which they were called. That he would grant you, according to the riches of his grace, to be strengthened, &c. And the apostle prays that this may be according to the riches of his glory, or according to his glorious riches, and this by his Spirit. Strength from the Spirit of God in the inner man is the best and most desirable strength.

2. The indwelling of Christ in their hearts, v. 17. Christ is an inhabitant in the soul of every good Christian. Where his Spirit dwells, there he dwells; and he dwells in the heart by faith. Faith opens the door of the soul, to receive Christ, faith admits him, and submits to him. By faith we are united to Christ. 3. The fixing of devout affections in the soul: That you being rooted and grounded in love. Many have some love to God and to his servants, but it is a flash, like the crackling of thorns under a pot, it makes a great noise, but is gone presently. We should earnestly desire that good affections may be fixed in us. Some understand it of their being settled and established in the sense of God's love to them. And how very desirable it is to have a settled fixed sense of the love of God and Christ to our souls, so as to be able to say with the apostle at all times, He has loved me! Now the best way to attain this is to be careful that we maintain a constant love to God in our souls

"every family": alluding to the several families in heaven and in earth supposed to exist (THEOPHYLACT, ŒCUMENIUS, in SUICER, 2. 633), the apostle thus being supposed to imply that God, in His relation of Father to us His adopted children, is the great prototype of the paternal relation wherever found. But the idea that "the holy angels are bound up in spiritual families or compaternities," is nowhere else in Scripture referred to. And Acts 2:36, where the article is similarly omitted, and yet the translation is, "All the house of Israel," shows that in New Testament Greek the translation is justifiable, "all the family," or "the whole family": which accords with Scripture views, that angels and men, the saints militant and those with God, are one holy family joined under the one Father in Christ, the mediator between heaven and earth (ch. 1:10; Phil. 2:10). Hence angels are termed our "brethren" (Rev. 19:10), and "sons of God" by creation, as we are by adoption (Job 38:7). The Church is part of the grand family, or kingdom, which comprehends, besides men, the higher spiritual world, where the archetype, to the realization of which redeemed man is now tending, is already realized. This universal idea of the "kingdom" of God as one divine community, is presented to us in the Lord's Prayer. By sin men were estranged, not only from God, but from that higher spiritual world in which the kingdom of God is already realized. As Christ when He reconciled men to God, united them to one another in a divine community (joined to Himself, the one Head), breaking down the partition wall between Jew and Gentile (ch. 2: 14), so also He joins them in communion with all those who have already attained that perfection in the kingdom of God, to which the Church on earth is aspiring (Col. 1:20) [NEANDER]. is named—derives its origin and its name as sons of God. To be named, and to be, are one with God. To bear God's name is to belong to God as His own peculiar people (Num. 6:27; Isa. 43:7; 44:5; Rom. 9:25, 26). 16. according to—i.e. in abundance consonant to the riches of His glory; not "according to" the narrowness of our hearts. Colossians 1:11, "Strengthened with all might according to His glorious power." by—Greek, "through"; "by means of His Spirit." in—The Greek implies, "infused into."

the inner man—(ch. 4:22, 24; I Pet. 3:4)—"the hidden man of the heart." Not predicated of unbelievers, whose inward and outward man alike are carnal. But in believers, the "inner (new) man," their true self, stands in contrast to their old man, which is attached to them as a body of death daily being mortified, but not their true self.

17. That—So that. dwell—abidingly make His abode (John 14:23). Where the Spirit is there Christ is (John 14:16, 18). by faith—Greek, "through faith," which opens the door of the heart to Jesus (John 3:20). It is not enough that He be on the tongue, or flit through the brain: the heart is His proper seat [CALVIN]. "You being rooted and grounded in love" (cf. vs. 19), is in the Greek connected with this clause, not with the clause, "that ye may be able to comprehend." "Rooted" is an image from a tree; "grounded" (Greek, "founded," "having your foundations resting on"), from a building (cf. Note, ch. 2:20, 21; Col. 1:23; 2:7). Contrast Matthew 13:6, 21. "Love," the first fruit of the Spirit, flowing from Christ's love realized in the soul, was to be the basis on which should rest their further comprehension of all the vastness of Christ's love.

just men made perfect in a separate state, and all the holy angels in heaven make but one family, of which God is the Father and Head. Paul does not say, Of whom the "families," as if each order formed a distinct household; but he says family, because they are all one, and of One. And all this family is named, derives its origin and being, from God, as children derive their name from him who is the father of the family; holy persons in heaven and earth derive their being and their holiness from God, and therefore His name is called upon them.

16. That he would grant you. This prayer of the apostle is one of the most grand and sublime in the whole oracles of God. The riches of the grace of the gospel and the extent to which the soul of man may be saved here below are most emphatically pointed out here. Every word seems to have come immediately from heaven, laboring to convey ideas of infinite importance to mankind. No paraphrase can do it justice, and few commentators seem to have entered into its spirit, perhaps deterred by its unparalleled sublimity. That he would grant you. You can expect nothing from Him but as a free gift through Christ Jesus; let this be a ruling sentiment of your hearts when you pray to God. According to the riches of his glory. According to the measure of His own eternal fullness, God's infinite mercy and goodness being the measure according to which we are to be saved. In giving alms it is a maxim that everyone should act according to his ability. It would be a disgrace to a king or a nobleman to give no more than a tradesman or a peasant. God acts up to the dignity of His infinite perfections; He gives according to the riches of his glory. To be strengthened with might. You have many enemies, cunning and strong; many trials, too great for your natural strength; many temptations, which no human power is able successfully to resist; many duties to perform, which cannot be accomplished by the strength of man. Therefore you need divine strength; you must have might; and you must be strengthened everywhere, and every way fortified by that might, mightily and most effectually strengthened. By his Spirit. By the sovereign energy of the Holy Ghost. This Fountain of spiritual energy can alone supply the spiritual strength which is necessary for this spiritual work and conflict. In the inner man. In the soul. Every man is a compound being; he has a body and a soul. The outward man is that alone which is seen and considered by men; the inward man is that which stands particularly in reference to God and eternity. The outward man is strengthened by earthly food; the inward man, by spiritual and heavenly influences. The soul must be as truly fed and nourished by divine food as the body by natural food.

17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith. In this as well as in many other passages, and particularly that in chap. ii. 21, the apostle compares the body or Church of true believers to a temple, which, like that of Solomon, is built to be a habitation of God through the Spirit. And as there could be no indwelling of God but by Christ, and no indwelling of Christ but by faith, he prays that they may have such faith in Christ as shall keep them in constant possession of His love and presence. This is what the apostle points out to the believing Ephesians, in praying that Christ might "intensely and constantly dwell in their hearts by faith." That ye, being rooted and grounded in love. Here is a double metaphor; one taken from agriculture, the other from architecture. As trees, they are to be rooted . . . in love—this is the soil in which their souls are to grow; into the infinite love of God their souls by faith are to strike their roots, and from this love derive all that nourishment which is essential for their full growth, till they have the mind in them that was in Jesus, or, as it is afterwards said, till they are "filled with all the fulness of God." As a building, their foundation is to be laid in this love. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." Here is the ground on which alone the soul, and all its hopes and expectations, can be safely founded. This is a foundation that cannot be shaken; and it is from this alone that the doctrine of redemption flows to man, and from this alone has the soul its form and comeliness.

MATTHEW HENRY

4. For their experimental acquaintance with the love of Jesus Christ. That you may be able to comprehend with all saints, &c. (v. 18, 19). Christians should not aim to comprehend above all saints; we should desire to comprehend with all saints, to have so much knowledge as the saints are allowed to have in this world. How magnificently the apostle speaks of the love of Christ. The dimensions of redeeming love are admirable: The breadth, and length, and depth, and height. By enumerating these dimensions, the apostle designs to signify the exceeding greatness of the love of Christ, the unsearchable riches of his love. We should desire to comprehend this love: it is the character of all the saints that they do so.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

18. May be able—even still further. Greek, "May be fully able." breadth . . . length . . . depth . . . height—viz., the full dimensions of the spiritual temple, answering to "the fulness of God" (vs. 19), to which the Church, according to its capacity, ought to correspond (cf. ch. 4:10, 13) as to "the fulness of Christ." The "breadth" implies Christ's world-wide love, embracing all men: the "length," its being extended through all ages (vs. 21); the "depth," its profound wisdom which no creature can fathom (Rom. 11:33); the "height," its being beyond the reach of any foe to deprive us of (ch. 4:8) [BENGEL]. I prefer to understand "the breadth," etc., to refer to the whole of the vast mystery of free salvation in Christ for all, Gentile and Jew alike, of which Paul had been speaking (vss. 3-9), and of which he now prays they may have a fuller comprehension. As subsidiary to this, and the most essential part of it, he adds, "and to know the love of Christ" (vs. 19). GROTIUS understands depth and height of God's goodness raising us from the lowest depression to the greatest height.

ADAM CLARKE

In this, as its proper soil, it grows. On this, as its only foundation, it rests.

18. May be able to comprehend with all saints. These words are so exceedingly full of meaning that it is almost impossible to translate them. The first word, from ex, intensive, and ischyo, "to be strong," signifies that they might be "thoroughly able," by having been "strengthened with might," by God's power. The second word, from kata, intensive, and lambano, to "take, catch, or seize on," may be translated, "that you may fully catch, take in, and comprehend" this wonderful mystery of God. The mind must be rendered apt, and the soul invigorated, to take in and comprehend these mysteries. What is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height. Here the apostle still keeps up the metaphor, comparing the Church of God to a building; and as, in order to rear a proper building, a ground plan and specification must be previously made, according to which the building is to be constructed, the apostle refers to this. They were to be builded up a heavenly house, "an habitation of God through the Spirit"; and this must have its breadth, its length, its height, and its depth. But what can the apostle mean by the breadth, length, depth, and height, of the love of God? Imagination can scarcely frame any satisfactory answer to this question. It takes in the eternity of God. "God is love"; and in that, an infinity of breadth, length, depth, and height is included; or rather all breadth, length, depth, and height are lost in this immensity. It comprehends all that is above, all that is below, all that is past, and all that is to come. In reference to human beings, the love of God, in its breadth, is a girdle that encompasses the globe; its length reaches from the eternal purpose of the mission of Christ to the eternity of blessedness which is to be spent in His ineffable glories; its depth reaches to the lowest fallen of the sons of Adam, and to the deepest depravity of the human heart; and its height, to the infinite dignities of the throne of Christ. "He that overcometh will I give to sit down with Me upon My throne, as I have overcome and sat down with the Father upon His throne." Thus we see that the Father, the Son, and all true believers in Him are to be seated on the same throne! This is the height of the love of God, and the height to which that love raises the souls that believe in Christ Jesus!

19. To know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge. It is only by the love of Christ that we can know the love of God. The love of God to man induced Him to give Christ for his redemption; Christ's love to man induced Him to give His life's blood for his salvation. The gift of Christ to man is the measure of God's love; the death of Christ for man is the measure of Christ's love. "God so loved the world." "Christ loved us, and gave himself for us." But how can the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, be known? Many have labored to reconcile this seeming contradiction. If we take the verb in a sense in which it is frequently used in the New Testament, "to approve, acknowledge, or acknowledge with approbation," and gnosis to signify "comprehension," then the difficulty will be partly removed: "That you may acknowledge, approve, and publicly acknowledge that love of God which surpasseth knowledge." We can acknowledge and approve of that which surpasses our comprehension. We cannot comprehend God; yet we can know that He is; approve of, love, adore, and serve Him. In like manner, though we cannot comprehend the immensity of the love of Christ, yet we know that He has loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood; and we approve of, and acknowledge, Him as our only Lord and Saviour. In this sense we may be said to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge. But it is more likely that the word gnosis, which we translate knowledge, signifies here science in general, and particularly that science of which the rabbins boasted, and that in which the Greeks greatly exulted. The former professed to have the key of knowledge, the secret of all divine mysteries; the latter considered their philosophers and their systems of philosophy superior to everything that had ever been known among men, and on this account reputed all other nations as barbarians. When the apostle

ALEXANDER MACLAREN:

We have no measure by which we can translate into the terms of our experience and so bring within the grasp of our minds what was the depth of the step which Christ took at the impulse of His love from the throne to the cross. We know not what He forewent; we know not, nor ever shall know, what depths of darkness and soul agony He passed through at the bidding of His all enduring love to us. Nor do we know the consequences of that great work of emptying himself of His glory. We have no means by which we can estimate the darkness and the depth of the misery from which we have been delivered, nor the height and the radiance of the glory to which we are to be lifted. And until we can tell and measure by our compasses both of these two extremes of possible human fate, till we have gone down into the deepest abyss of a bottomless pit of growing alienation and misery, and up above the highest reach of all unending progress into light and glory and God-likeness, we have not stretched our compasses wide enough to touch the two poles of this great sphere—the infinite love of Jesus Christ. So we bow before it, we know that we possess it with a knowledge more sure and certain, more deep and valid, than our knowledge of ought but ourselves; but yet it is beyond our grasp, and towers above us inaccessible in the altitude of its glory, and stretches deep beneath us in the profundity of its condescension.

And, in like manner, we may say that this known love passes knowledge, inasmuch as our experience of it can never exhaust it. We are like the settlers on some great island continent—as, for instance, on the Australian continent for many years after its first discovery—a thin fringe of population round the seaboard here and there, and all the bosom of the land untraversed and unknown. So after all experiences of and all blessed participation in the love of Jesus Christ which come to each of us by our faith, we have but skimmed the surface, but touched the edges, but received a drop of what, if it should come upon us in fullness of flood like a Niagara of love, would overwhelm our spirits.—Expositions of Holy Scripture

And to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, v. 19. If it passeth knowledge, how can we know it? We must pray and endeavour to know something, and should still covet to know more and more of it, though none can fully comprehend it: in its full extent it surpasses knowledge.

19. passeth—surpasseth, exceeds. The paradox "to know . . . which passeth knowledge," implies that when he says "know," he does not mean that we can adequately know; all we know is, that His love exceeds far our knowledge of it, and with even our fresh accessions of knowledge hereafter, will still exceed them. Even as God's power exceeds our thoughts (vs. 20).

MATTHEW HENRY

5. He prays that they may be filled with all the fulness of God. It is a high expression: we should not dare to use it if we did not find it in the scriptures. Such a fulness as God is ready to bestow, who is willing to fill them all to the utmost of their capacity, and that with all those gifts and graces which he sees they need. Those who receive grace for grace from Christ's fulness may be said to be filled with the fulness of God, according to their capacity.

The apostle closes the chapter with a doxology, v. 20, 21. How he describes God, and how he ascribes glory to him. He describes him as a God that is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think. There is an inexhaustible fulness of grace and mercy in God, which the prayers of all the saints can never draw dry. We should encourage our faith by a consideration of his all-sufficiency and almighty power. According to the power which worketh in us. We have already had a proof of this power of God, in what he hath wrought in us and done for us. The power that still worketh for the saints is according to that power that hath wrought in them.

He ascribes glory to him. Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus. The seat of God's praises is in the church. That little rent of praise which God receives from this world is from the church, every particular member of which, both Jew and Gentile, concurs in this work of praising God. The Mediator of these praises is Jesus Christ. All God's gifts come from him to us through the hand of Christ; and all our praises pass from us to him through the same hand. And God should and will be praised thus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen. So be it; and so it will certainly be.

filled with—rather, as Greek, "filled even unto all the fulness of God" (this is the grand goal), i.e., filled, each according to your capacity, with the divine wisdom, knowledge, and love; even as God is full, and as Christ who dwells in your hearts, hath "all the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in Him bodily" (Col. 2:9).

20. unto him—contrasted with ourselves and our needs. Translate, "that is able above all things (what is above all things) to do exceeding abundantly above what we ask or (even) think": thought takes a wider range than prayers. The word, above, occurs thrice as often in Paul's writings, as in all the rest of the New Testament, showing the warm exuberance of Paul's spirit. according to the power—the indwelling Spirit (Rom. 8:26). He appeals to their and his experience.

21. Translate, "Unto Him be the glory (i.e., the whole glory of the gracious dispensation of salvation just spoken of) in the Church (as the theater for the manifestation of the glory, vs. 10) in Christ Jesus (as in Him all the glory centers, Zech. 6:13) to all the generations of eternal ages," lit., "of the age of the ages." Eternity is conceived as consisting of "ages" (these again consisting of "generations") endlessly succeeding one another.

prays that they may know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, he may refer to all the boasted knowledge of the Jewish doctors, and to all the greatly extolled science of the Greek philosophers. To know the love of Christ infinitely surpasses all other science. This gives a clear and satisfactory sense. That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God. Among all the great sayings in this prayer, this is the greatest. To be filled with God is a great thing; to be filled with the fullness of God is still greater; but to be filled with all the fulness of God utterly bewilders the sense and confounds the understanding. By the fulness of God we are to understand all those gifts and graces which He has promised to bestow on man, and which He dispenses to the Church. To be filled with all the fulness of God is to have the whole soul filled with meekness, gentleness, goodness, love, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth. And as what God fills neither sin nor Satan can fill, consequently it implies that the soul shall be emptied of sin, that sin shall neither have dominion over it nor a being in it.

20. Now unto him. Having finished his short but most wonderfully comprehensive and energetic prayer, the apostle brings in his doxology, giving praise to Him from whom all blessings come, and to whom all thanks are due. That is able to do exceeding abundantly. It is impossible to express the full meaning of these words. God is omnipotent; therefore He is able to do all things, and able to do "superabundantly above the greatest abundance." And who can doubt this who has any rational or scriptural views of His power or His love? According to the power that worketh in us. All that He can do and all that He has promised to do will be done according to what He has done, by that power of the Holy Ghost "which worketh strongly in us"—acts with "energy" in our hearts, expelling evil, purifying and refining the affections and desires, and implanting good.

21. Unto him, thus possessed of power and goodness, be glory in the church—be unceasing praises ascribed in all the assemblies of the people of God, wherever these glad tidings are preached, and wherever this glorious doctrine shall be credited. By Christ Jesus. Through whom, and for whom, all these miracles of mercy and power are wrought. Throughout all ages. "Through all succeeding generations"—while the race of human beings continues to exist on the face of the earth. World without end. "Throughout eternity"—in the coming world as well as in this. The song of praise, begun upon earth and protracted through all the generations of men, shall be continued in heaven by all that are redeemed from the earth, where eras, limits, and periods are no more forever. Amen. So be it! So let it be!

Verse 1

This is a general exhortation to walk as becomes our Christian profession. Paul was now a prisoner at Rome; and he was the prisoner of the Lord. He mentions this once and again, to show that he was not ashamed of his bonds. We have here the petition of a poor prisoner: "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you, &c.' Considering what God has done for you I now come with an earnest request to you not to send me relief, nor to use your interest for the obtaining of my liberty, but, that you would approve yourselves good Christians: That you walk worthily." We are called Christians; we must answer that name, and live like Christians. We are called to God's kingdom and glory; we must walk as becomes the heirs of them.

Verses 2–16

Exhortation to mutual love. Love is the law of Christ's kingdom, the lesson of his school, the livery of his family.

1. The means of unity: Lowliness and meekness, long-suffering, and forbearing one another in love, v. 2. By lowliness we are to understand humility opposed to pride, by meekness, that excellent disposition of soul which makes men unwilling to provoke others, and not easily to be provoked. Long-suffering implies a patient bearing of injuries, without seeking revenge.

Vss. 1-32. EXHORTATIONS TO CHRISTIAN DUTIES RESTING ON OUR CHRISTIAN PRIVILEGES, AS UNITED IN ONE BODY, THOUGH VARYING IN THE GRACES GIVEN TO THE SEVERAL MEMBERS, THAT WE MAY COME UNTO A PERFECT MAN IN CHRIST. 1. Translate, according to the Greek order, "I beseech you, therefore (seeing that such is your calling of grace, chs. 1, 2, 3). I the prisoner in the Lord" (i.e., imprisoned in the Lord's cause). What the world counted ignominy, he counts the highest honor, and he glories in his bonds for Christ, more than a king in his diadem [THEODORET]. His bonds, too, are an argument which should enforce his exhortation. vocation—Translate, "calling" to accord, as the Greek does, with "called" (vs. 4; ch. 1:18; Rom. 8: 28, 30). Colossians 3:15 similarly grounds Christian duties on our Christian "calling." The exhortations of this part of the Epistle are built on the conscious enjoyment of the privileges mentioned in the former part. Cf. ch. 4:32, with ch. 1:7; 5:1, with 1:5; 4:30, with 1:13; 5:15, with 1:8.

2, 3. lowliness—In classic Greek, the meaning is meanness of spirit: the Gospel has elevated the word to express a Christian grace, viz., the esteeming of ourselves small, inasmuch as we are so; the thinking truly, and because truly, therefore lowlily, of ourselves [TRENCH]. meekness—that spirit in which we accept God's dealings with us without disputing and resisting; and also the accepting patiently of the

1. I therefore. Therefore, because God has provided for you such an abundant salvation, and you have His testimonies among you, and have full liberty to use all the means of grace. The prisoner of the Lord. Who am deprived of my liberty for the Lord's sake. Beseech you that ye walk. You have your liberty, and may walk; I am deprived of mine, and cannot. This is a fine stroke, and wrought up into a strong argument. You who are at large can show forth the virtues of Him who called you into His marvellous light; I am in bondage, and can only exhort others by my writing, and show my submission to God by my patient suffering. The vocation wherewith ye are called. The "calling" is the free invitation they have had from God to receive the privileges of the gospel, and become His sons and daughters, without being obliged to observe Jewish rites and ceremonies. Their vocation, or calling, took in their Christian profession, with all the doctrines, precepts, privileges, duties, etc., of the Christian religion.

2. With all lowliness. It is by acting as the apostle here directs that a man walks worthy of this high vocation; tapeinophrosyne signifies "subjection" or "humility of mind." Meekness. The opposite to anger and irritability of disposition. Longsuffering. "Long-mindedness"—never permitting a trial or provocation to get

Forbearing one another in love. The best Christians have need to make the best one of another, to provoke one another's graces and not their passions. We find much in ourselves which it is hard to forgive ourselves; and therefore we must not think it much if we find that in others which we think hard to forgive them, and yet we must forgive them. Now without these things unity cannot be preserved. The first step towards unity is humility. Pride and passion break the peace, and make all the mischief. Humility and meekness restore the peace. The more lowly-mindedness the more like-mindedness.

II The nature of that unity: it is the unity of the Spirit, v. 3. The seat of Christian unity is in the heart or spirit: it does not lie in one set of thoughts, nor in one form and mode of worship, but in one heart and one soul. This we should endeavour to keep. Endeavouring is a gospel word. We must do our utmost. If others will quarrel with us, we must take all possible care not to quarrel with them. In the bond of peace. Peace is a bond. Many slender twigs, bound together, become strong. The bond of peace is the strength of society. Not that it can be imagined that all good people, should be in everything just of the same length, and the same sentiments. As in a bundle of rods, they may be of different lengths and different strength; but, when they are tied together by one bond, they are stronger than any, even than the thickest and strongest was of itself.

III. The motives proper to promote this Christian unity and concord.

1. Consider how many unities there are. There should be one heart; for there is one body, and one Spirit, v. 4. Two hearts in one body would be monstrous. If there be but one body, all that belong to that body should have one heart. If we belong to Christ, we are all actuated by one and the same Spirit, and therefore should be one. Even as you are called in one hope of your calling. There is one Christ that they all hope in, and one heaven that they are all hoping for; and therefore they should be of one heart.

One Lord (v. 5), that is, Christ. One faith, that is, the gospel, or, it is the same grace of faith whereby all Christians are saved. One baptism, by by which we profess our faith.

One God and Father of all, v. 6. One God, who owns all the true members of the church for his children; and he is above all, and through all, by his providence upholding them: and in you all, in all believers, by his Spirit. If then there be so many ones, it is a pity but there should be one more—one heart, or one soul.

2. Consider the variety of gifts that Christ has bestowed among Christians: But unto everyone of us is injuries done us by men, out of the thought that they are permitted by God for the chastening and purifying of His people (II Sam. 16:11; cf. Gal. 6:1; II Tim. 2:25; Titus 3:2). It is only the lowly, humble heart that is also meek (Col. 3:12). As "lowliness and meekness" answer to "forbearing one another in love" (cf. "love," vss. 15, 16), so "long-suffering" answers to (vs. 4) "endeavoring (Greek, 'earnestly' or 'zealously giving diligence') to keep (maintain) the unity of the Spirit (the unity between men of different tempers, which flows from the presence of the Spirit, who is Himself 'one,' vs. 4) in (united in) the bond of peace" (the "bond" by which "peace" is maintained, viz., "love," Col. 3:14, 15 [BENGEL]; or, peace itself is the "bond" meant, uniting the members of the Church [ALFORD]). 4. In the apostle's creed, the article as to THE CHURCH properly follows that as to THE HOLY GHOST. To the Trinity naturally is annexed the Church, as the house to its tenant, to God His temple, the state to its founder [AUGUSTINE, Enchir. ad Laurentium, c. 15]. There is yet to be a Church, not merely potentially, but actually catholic or world-wide; then the Church and the world will be coextensive. Rome falls into inextricable error by setting up a mere man as a visible head, antedating that consummation which Christ, the true visible Head, at His appearing shall first realize. As the "SPIRIT" is mentioned here, so the "LORD" (Jesus), vs. 5, and "GOD the Father," vs. 6. Thus the Trinity is again set forth. hope—here associated with "the Spirit," which is the "earnest of our inheritance" (ch. 1:13, 14). As "faith" is mentioned, vs. 5, so "hope" here, and "love," vs. 2. The Holy Spirit, as the common higher principle of life (ch. 2:18, 22), gives to the Church its true unity. Outward uniformity is as yet unattainable; but beginning by having one mind, we shall hereafter end by having "one body." The true "body" of Christ (all believers of every age) is already "one," as joined to the one Head. But its unity is as yet not visible, even as the Head is not visible; but it shall appear when He shall appear (John 17:21-23; Col. 3:4). Meanwhile the rule is, "In essentials, unity; in doubtful questions, liberty; in all things, charity." There is more real unity where both go to heaven under different names than when with the same name one goes to heaven, the other to hell. Truth is the first thing: those who reach it, will at last reach unity, because truth is one; while those who seek unity as the first thing, may purchase it at the sacrifice of truth, and so of the soul itself. of your calling—the one "hope" flowing from our "calling," is the element "IN" which we are "called" to live. Instead of privileged classes, as the Jews under the law, a unity of dispensation was henceforth to be the common privilege of Jew and Gentile alike. Spirituality, universality, and unity, were designed to characterize the Church; and it shall be so at last (Isa. 2:2-4; 11:9, 13; Zeph. 3:9; Zech. 14:9). 5. Similarly "faith" and "baptism" (the sacramental seal of faith) are connected Mark 16:16; Col. 2:12). Cf. I Corinthians 12:13, "Faith" is not here that which we believe, but the act of believing, the mean by which we apprehend the "one Lord." "Baptism" is specified, being the sacrament whereby we are incorporated into the "one body." Not the Lord's Supper, which is an act of matured communion on the part of those already incorporate, "a symbol of union, not of unity" [ELLICOTT]. In I Corinthians 10:17, where a breach of union was in question, it forms the rallying point [ALFORD]. There is not added, "One pope, one council, one form of government" [Cautions for Times]. The Church is one in unity of faith (vs. 5; Jude 3); unity of origination (ch. 2:19-21); unity of sacraments (vs. 5; I Cor. 10: 17; 12:13); unity of "hope" (vs. 4; Titus 1:2); unity of charity (vs. 3); unity (not uniformity) of discipline and government: for where there is no order, no ministry with Christ as the Head, there is no Church [PEARSON, Creed, Article 9]. 6. above—"over all." The "one God over all" (in His sovereignty and by His grace) is the grand source and crowning apex of unity (ch. 2:19, end). through all—by means of Christ "who filleth all things" (vs. 10; ch. 2:20, 21), and is "a propitiation" for all men (I John 2:2). in you all—The oldest MSS. omit "you." Many of the oldest versions and Fathers and old MSS. read, "in us all." Whether the pronoun be read or not, it must be understood (either from the "ye," vs. 4, or from the "us," vs. 7); for other parts of Scripture prove that the Spirit is not "in all" men, but only in believers (Rom. 8:9, 14). God is "Father" both by generation (as Creator) and regeneration (ch. 2:10; Jas. 1:17, 18; I John 5:1). 7. But—Though "one" in our common connection with "one Lord, one faith, etc., one God," to the end of your patience. Forbearing one another. "Sustaining one another"—helping to "support each" other in all the miseries and trials of life; or if the word be taken in the sense of "bearing with each other," it may mean that, through the love of God working in our hearts, we should bear with each other's infirmities, ignorance, etc., knowing how much others have been or are still obliged to bear with us.

3. Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There can be no doubt that the church at Ephesus was composed partly of converted Jews, as well as Gentiles. Now from the different manner in which they had been brought up, there might be frequent causes of altercation. Indeed the Jews, though converted, might be envious that the Gentiles were admitted to the same glorious privileges with themselves without being initiated into them by bearing the yoke and burden of the Mosaic law. The apostle guards them against this, and shows them that they should "intensely labor" (for so the word implies) to promote and preserve peace and unity. By the unity of the Spirit we are to understand, not only a spiritual unity, but also a unity of sentiments, desires, and affections, such as is worthy of and springs from the Spirit of God. By the bond of peace we are to understand a peace or union where the interests of all parties are concentrated, cemented, and sealed, the Spirit of God being the Seal upon this knot.

4. There is one body. Viz., of Christ, which is His Church. One Spirit. The Holy Ghost, who animates this body. One hope. Of everlasting glory, to which glory you have been called by the preaching of the gospel; through which you have become the body of Christ, instinct with the energy of the Holy Ghost.

5. One Lord. Jesus Christ, who is the Governor of this Church. One faith. One system of religion, proposing the same objects to the faith of all. One baptism. Administered in the name of the Holy Trinity; indicative of the influences, privileges, and effects of the Christian religion.

6. One God. The Fountain of all being, self-existent and eternal; and Father of all, both Jews and Gentiles, because He is the Father of the spirits of all flesh. Who is above all. "Who is over all"; as the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. And through all. Pervading everything, being present with everything, providing for all creatures, and by His energy supporting all things. And in you all. By the energy of His Spirit enlightening, quickening, purifying, and comforting; in a word, making your hearts the temples of the Holy Ghost. Some think the mystery of the blessed Trinity is contained in this verse: God is "over all," as Father; through all, by the Logos or Word; and in . . . all, by the Holy Spirit.

7. Unto every one of us is given grace. Grace may here signify a particular office; as if the given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Though the members of Christ's church agree in so many things, yet there are some things wherein they differ: but this should breed no difference of affection among them, since they are all derived from the same bountiful author. They had no reason to quarrel about them because all was given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. All the ministers, and all the members of Christ, owe all the gifts and graces that they are possessed of to him; and this is a good reason why we should love one another, because to everyone of us is given grace. All to whom Christ has given grace, and on whom he has bestowed his gifts ought to love one another. The apostle takes this occasion to specify some of the gifts. And that they were bestowed by Christ he makes appear by those words of David (Ps. lxviii. 18), Wherefore he saith (v. 8), When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Let us set ourselves to think of the ascension of Jesus Christ: that our blessed Redeemer, having risen from the dead, is gone to heaven, where he sits at the right hand of the majesty on high. Christ, when he ascended into heaven, as a triumphant conqueror, led captivity captive. It is a phrase used in the Old Testament to signify a conquest over enemies, especially over such as formerly had led others captive. He conquered those who had conquered us; such as sin, the devil, and death. Indeed, he triumphed over these on the cross; but the triumph was completed at his ascension, when he became Lord over all. And he gave gifts unto men: in the psalm it is, He received gifts for men. He received for them, that he might give to them.

The apostle takes notice that he descended first, v. 9, into the lower parts of the earth. He descended to the earth in his incarnation.

He descended into the earth in his burial. He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens (v. 10) into the heaven of heavens that he might fill all things, all the members of his church, with gifts and graces.

The apostle next tells us what were Christ's gifts at his ascension: He gave some apostles, &c., v. 11. The great gift that Christ gave to the church at his ascension was that of the ministry of peace and reconciliation. The gift of the ministry is the fruit of Christ's ascension. The officers which Christ gave to his church were of two sorts—extraordinary ones:

yet "each one of us" has assigned to him his own particular gift, to be used for the good of the whole: none is overlooked; none therefore can be dispensed with for the edifying of the Church (vs. 12). A motive to unity (vs. 3). Translate, "Unto each one of us was the grace (which was bestowed by Christ at His ascension, vs. 8) given according to . . . ." the measure—the amount "of the gift of Christ" (Rom. 12:3, 6). 8. Wherefore—"For which reason," viz., in order to intimate that Christ, the Head of the Church, is the author of all these different gifts, and that giving of them is an act of His "grace" [ESTIUS]. he saith—God, whose word the Scripture is (Ps. 68:18). When he ascended—GOD is meant in the Psalm, represented by the ark, which was being brought up to Zion in triumph by David, after that "the Lord had given him rest round about from all his enemies" (II Sam. 6; 7:1; I Chron. 15). Paul quotes it of CHRIST ascending to heaven, who is therefore GOD. captivity—i.e., a band of captives. In the Psalm, the captive foes of David. In the antitypical meaning, the foes of Christ the Son of David, the devil, death, the curse, and sin (Col. 2: 15; II Pet. 2:4), led as it were in triumphal procession as a sign of the destruction of the foe. gave gifts unto men—in the Psalm, "received gifts for men," Hebrew, "among men," i.e., "thou hast received gifts" to distribute among men. As a conqueror distributes in token of his triumph the spoils of foes as gifts among his people. The impartation of the gifts and graces of the Spirit depended on Christ's ascension (John 7:39; 14:12). Paul stops short in the middle of the verse, and does not quote "that the Lord God might dwell among them." This, it is true, is partly fulfilled in Christians being an "habitation of God through the Spirit" (ch. 2: 22). But the Psalm (vs. 16) refers to "the Lord dwelling in Zion for ever"; the ascension amidst attendant angels, having as its counterpart the second advent amidst "thousands of angels" (vs. 17), accompanied by the restoration of Israel (vs. 22), the destruction of God's enemies and the resurrection (vss. 20, 21, 23), the conversion of the kingdoms of the world to the Lord at Jerusalem (vss. 29-34). 9. Paul reasons that (assuming Him to be God) His ascent implies a previous descent; and that the language of the Psalm can only refer to Christ, who first descended, then ascended. For God the Father does not ascend or descend. Yet the Psalm plainly refers to God (vss. 8, 17, 18). It must therefore be GOD THE SON (John 6:33, 62). As He declares (John 3:13), "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven." Others, though they did not previously descend, have ascended; but none save Christ can be referred to in the Psalm as having done so; for it is of God it speaks. lower parts of the earth—The antithesis or contrast to "far above all heavens," is the argument of ALFORD and others, to show that this phrase means more than simply the earth, viz., the regions beneath it, even as He ascended not merely to the visible heavens, but "far above" them. Moreover, His design "that He might fill all things" (vs. 10, Greek, "the whole universe of things") may imply the same.

Also the leading "captive" of the "captive band" ("captivity") of satanic powers, may imply that the warfare reached to their habitation itself (Ps. 63:9). Christ, as Lord of all, took possession first of the earth the unseen world beneath it (some conjecture that the region of the lost is in the central parts of our globe), then of heaven (Acts 2:27, 28). However, all we surely know is, that His soul at death descended to Hades, i.e., underwent the ordinary condition of departed spirits of men. The leading captive of satanic powers here, is not said to be at His descent, but at His ascension; so that no argument can be drawn from it for a descent to the abodes of Satan. Acts 2:27, 28, and Romans 10:7, favor the view of the reference being simply to His descent to Hades. So PEARSON on Creed (Phil. 2:10). 10. all heavens—Greek, "all the heavens" (Heb. 7:26; 4:14), Greek, "passed through the heavens" to the throne of God itself. might fill—In Greek, the action is continued to the present time, both "might" and "may fill," viz., with His divine presence and Spirit, not with His glorified body. "Christ, as God, is present everywhere; as glorified man, He can be present anywhere" [ELLICOTT]. 11. Greek, emphatical. "Himself" by His supreme power. "It is HE that gave. . . ." gave some, apostles—Translate, ". . . some to be apostles, and some to be prophets. . . ." The men who filled the office, no less than the office itself, were a divine gift [EADIE]. Ministers did not give themselves. Cf. with the list here, I Corinthians 12:10, 28. As the apostles, prophets, and apostle had said: Though we are all equal in the respects already mentioned, yet we have all different offices and situations to fill up in the Church and in the world; and we receive a free gift from Christ, according to the nature of the office, that we may be able to discharge it according to His own mind.

8. Wherefore he saith. The reference seems to be to Ps. lxviii. 18, which, however it may speak of the removal of the Tabernacle, appears to have been intended to point out the glorious ascension of Christ after His resurrection from the dead. When he ascended up on high. The whole of this verse, as it stands in the psalm, seems to refer to a military triumph. Take the following paraphrase: "Thou hast ascended on high"; the conqueror was placed in a very elevated chariot. "Thou hast led captivity captive"; the conquered kings and generals were usually bound behind the chariot of the conqueror, to grace the triumph. "Thou hast received gifts for [Paul, given gifts unto] men"; at such times the conqueror was wont to throw money among the crowd. Even to "the rebellious"; those who had fought against him now submit unto him, and share his munificence, for it is the property of a hero to be generous. "That the Lord God might dwell among them"; the conqueror being now come to fix his abode in the conquered provinces, and subdue the people to his laws.

9. But that he also descended. The meaning of the apostle appears to be this: The Person who ascended is the Messiah, and His ascension plainly intimates His descension; that is, His incarnation, humiliation, death, and resurrection.

10. He that descended. And He who descended so low is the same who has ascended so high. He came to "the lower parts of the earth"—the very deepest abasement; having emptied himself, taken upon Him the form of a servant, and humbled himself unto death, even the death of the Cross, now He is ascended far above all heavens—higher than all height; He has a name above every name. Here His descending into "the lower parts of the earth" is put in opposition to His ascending far above all heavens. His abasement was unparalleled; so also is His exaltation. That he might fill all things. That He might be the Fountain whence all blessings might flow, dispensing all good things to all His creatures, according to their several capacities and necessities; and, particularly, fill both converted Jews and Gentiles with all the gifts and graces of His Holy Spirit. Hence it follows:

11. He gave some, apostles. He established several offices in His Church; furnished these with the proper officers; and, to qualify them for their work, gave them the proper gifts. For a full illustration of this verse, the reader is requested to refer to the notes on 1 Cor. xii. 6-10 and 28-30.

such were apostles, prophets, and evangelists. The apostles were chief. They having been the witnesses of his miracles and doctrine, he sent them forth to spread the gospel. The prophets seem to have been such as expounded the writings of the Old Testament. The evangelists were ordained persons whom the apostles took for their companions in travel. And then there are ordinary ministers, as pastors and teachers. Some take these two names to signify one office. Others think they design two distinct offices, and then pastors are such as are fixed at the head of particular churches; and they are frequently called bishops and elders: and the teachers were those whose work it was to instruct the people by way of exhortation. How rich is the church that has still such a variety of gifts! How kind is Christ to his church!

3. Christ's great end and design in giving gifts unto men. The gifts of Christ were intended for the good of his church. All are for the perfecting of the saints (v. 12); to bring into an orderly spiritual state those who had been dislocated and disjointed by sin, and then to advance them therein, that so each might contribute to the good of the whole.—For the work of the ministry. For the edifying of the body of Christ; that is, to build up the church, which is Christ's mystical body, by an increase of their graces, and an addition of new members. All are designed to prepare us for heaven: Till we all come, &c., v. 13. Till they all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, not a bare speculative knowledge, but such as is attended with appropriation and affection.—Unto a perfect man, to our full growth of gifts and graces, free from those childish infirmities that we are subject to in the present world.—Unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, so as to be Christians of a full maturity in all the graces derived from Christ's fulness. We shall never come to the perfect man, till we come to the perfect world. God's children, as long as they are in this world, are growing. Now see God's design in his sacred institutions, and what effect they ought to have upon us.

(1) We henceforth be no more children, &c. (v. 14); no longer children in knowledge, weak in the faith, and inconstant in our judgments, easily yielding to every temptation, and being at everyone's beck. Children are easily imposed upon. We must take care of this, and of being tossed to and fro, like ships without ballast, and carried about, like clouds in the air, with such doctrines as have no truth nor solidity in them, and are therefore compared to wind. By the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, as in an ambush, in order to circumvent the weak. The best method we can take to fortify ourselves against such is to study the sacred oracles, and to pray for the illumination and grace of the Spirit of Christ.

(2) We should speak the truth in love (v. 15). Love is an excellent thing; but we must be careful to preserve truth together with it. Truth is an excellent thing; yet it is requisite that we speak it in love, and not in contention. These two should go together—truth and peace. (3) We should grow up into Christ in all things. Into Christ, so as to be more deeply rooted in him. In all things; in knowledge, love, faith. We should grow up towards maturity, which is opposed to being children. The more we grow into an acquaintance with Christ, faith in him, love to him, dependence upon him, the more we shall flourish in every grace. (4) We should be helpful one to another, as members of the same body, v. 16. Here the apostle makes a comparison between the natural body and Christ's mystical body. As there must be communion of the members of the body among themselves, so there must be mutual love and unity among Christians, in order to their spiritual improvement and growth in grace. Particular Christians receive their gifts and graces from Christ for the sake and benefit of the whole body. Unto the edifying of itself in love. Mutual love among Christians is a great friend to spiritual growth: it is in love that the body edifies itself.

evangelists were special and extraordinary ministers, so "pastors and teachers" are the ordinary stated ministers of a particular flock, including, probably, the bishops, presbyters, and deacons. Evangelists were itinerant preachers like our missionaries, as Philip the deacon (Acts 21:8); as contrasted with stationary "pastors and teachers" (II Tim. 4:5). The evangelist founded the Church; the teacher built it up in the faith already received. The "pastor" had the outward rule and guidance of the Church: the bishop. As to revelation, the "evangelist" testified infallibly of the past; the "prophet," infallibly of the future. The prophet derived all from the Spirit; the evangelist, in the special case of the Four, recorded matter of fact, cognizable to the senses, under the Spirit's guidance. No one form of Church polity as permanently unalterable is laid down in the New Testament though the apostolical order of bishops, or presbyters, and deacons, superintended by higher overseers (called bishops after the apostolic times), has the highest sanction of primitive usage.

12. For—with a view to; the ultimate aim. "Unto." perfecting—The Greek implies correcting in all that is deficient, instructing and completing in number and all parts. for—a different Greek word; the immediate object. Cf. Romans 15:2, "Let every one . . . please his neighbor for his good unto edification." the ministry—Greek, "ministration"; without the article. The office of the ministry is stated in this verse. The good aimed at in respect to the Church (vs. 13). The way of growth (vss. 14, 15, 16). edifying—i.e., building up as the temple of the Holy Ghost. 13. come in—rather, "attain unto." ALFORD expresses the Greek order, "Until we arrive all of us at the unity. . . . faith and . . . knowledge—Full unity of faith is then found, when all alike thoroughly know Christ, the object of faith, and that in His highest dignity as "the Son of God" [DE WETTE] (ch. 3:17, 19; II Pet. 1:5). Not even Paul counted himself to have fully "attained" (Phil. 3:12-14). Amidst the variety of the gifts and the multitude of the Church's members, its "faith" is to be ONE: as contrasted with the state of "children carried about with EVERY WIND OF DOCTRINE" (vs. 14). perfect man—unto the "full-grown man" (I Cor. 2: 6; Phil. 3:15; Heb. 5:14); the maturity of an adult; contrasted with children (vs. 14). Not "perfect men"; for the many members constitute but one Church joined to the one Christ. stature . . .—The standard of spiritual "stature" is "the fulness of Christ," i.e., which Christ has (ch. 1:23; 3:19; cf. Gal. 4:19); that the body should be worthy of the Head, the perfect Christ. 14. Translate, "To the end that"; the aim of the bestowal of gifts stated negatively, as in vs. 13 it is stated positively. tossed to and fro—inwardly, even without wind; like billows of the sea. So the Greek. Cf. James 1:6. carried about—with every wind from without. doctrine—"teaching." The various teachings are the "winds" which keep them tossed on a sea of doubts (Heb. 13:9; cf. Matt. 11:7). by—Greek, "in"; expressing "the evil atmosphere in which the varying currents of doctrine exert their force" [ELLICOTT]. sleight—lit., "dice-playing." The player frames his throws of the dice so that the numbers may turn up which best suit his purpose. of men—contrasted with Christ (vs. 13). and—Greek, "in." cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive—Translate as Greek, "craftiness tending to the methodized system of deceit" ("the schemes of error") [ALFORD]. BENGEL takes "deceit," or "error," to stand for "the parent of error," Satan (cf. ch. 6:11); referring to his concealed mode of acting. 15. speaking the truth—Translate, "holding the truth"; "following the truth"; opposed to "error" or "deceit" (vs. 14). in love—"Truth" is never to be sacrificed to so-called "charity"; yet it is to be maintained in charity. Truth in word and act, love in manner and spirit, are the Christian's rule (cf. vss. 21, 24). grow up—from the state of "children" to that of "full-grown men." There is growth only in the spiritually alive, not in the dead. into him—so as to be more and more incorporated with Him, and become one with Him. the head—(ch. 1:22). 16. (Col. 2:19) fitly joined together—"being fitly framed together," as in ch. 2:21; all the parts being in their proper position, and in mutual relation. compacted—implying firm consolidation. by that which every joint supplieth—Greek, "by means of every joint of the supply"; joined with "maketh increase of the body," not with "compacted." "By every ministering (supplying) joint." The joints are the points of union where the supply passes to the different members, furnishing the body with the materials of its growth. effectual working—(ch. 1: 19; 3:7). According to the effectual working of

12. For the perfecting of the saints. For the complete instruction, purification, and union of all who have believed in Christ Jesus, both Jews and Gentiles. For the meaning of perfecting, see the note on 2 Cor. xiii. 9. For the work of the ministry. All these various officers, and the gifts and graces conferred upon them, were judged necessary, by the great Head of the Church, for its full instruction in the important doctrines of Christianity. Edifying of the body. The body of Christ is His Church, see chap. ii. 20, etc.; and its edification consists in its thorough instruction in divine things, and its being filled with faith and holiness.

13. In the unity of the faith. Jews and Gentiles being all converted according to the doctrines laid down in the faith—the Christian system. The knowledge of the Son of God. A true understanding of the mystery of the Incarnation: why God was manifest in the flesh, and why this was necessary in order to have human salvation. Unto a perfect man. One thoroughly instructed; the whole body of the Church being fully taught, justified, sanctified, and sealed. Measure of the stature. The full measure of knowledge, love, and holiness which the gospel of Christ requires.

14. Be no more children. Children, here, are opposed to the "perfect man" in the preceding verse; and the state of both is well explained by the apostle's allusions. The man is grown up strong and healthy, and has attained such a measure or height as qualifies him for the most respectable place in the ranks of his country. The child is ignorant, weak, and unsteady, tossed about in the nurse's arms, or whirled round in the giddy sports or mazes of youth; this seems to be the apostle's allusion. By the sleight of men. The words refer to the arts used by gamesters, who employ false dice that will always throw up one kind of number, which is that by which those who play with them cannot win. Cunning craftiness. It is difficult to give a literal translation of the original words: "By cunning, for the purpose of using the various means of deception." Panourgia signifies "craft" and "subtlety" in general, "cheating" and "imposition." Methodia, from which we have our term "method," signifies a "wile, a particular sleight, mode of tricking and deceiving." It is applied to the arts which the devil uses to deceive and destroy souls; see chap. vi. 11, called there the "wiles of the devil." From this it seems that various arts were used, by both the Greek sophists and the Judaizing teachers, to render the gospel of none effect or to adulterate and corrupt it.

15. But speaking the truth in love. The truth recommended by the apostle is the whole system of gospel doctrine; this they are to teach and preach, and this is opposed to the deceit mentioned above. This truth, as it is the doctrine of God's eternal love to mankind, must be preached in love. Scolding and abuse from the pulpit or press, in matters of religion, are truly monstrous. Grow up into him. This is a continuance of the metaphor taken from the members of a human body receiving nourishment equally and growing up, each in its due proportion to other parts and to the body in general. The truth of God should be so preached to all the members of the Church of God that they may all receive an increase of grace and life; so that each, in whatever state he may be, may get forward in the way of truth and holiness.

16. From whom the whole body. This verse is another proof of the wisdom and learning of the apostle. Not only the general ideas here are anatomical, but the whole phraseology is the same: the articulation of the bones, the composition and action of the muscles, the circulation of the fluids, carrying nourishment to every part and depositing some in every place, the energy of the system in keeping up all the functions, being particularly introduced, and the whole terminating in the general process of

Verses 17–32

There follows an exhortation to Christian purity and holiness of heart and life, and that both more general (v. 17–24) and in several particular instances, v. 25–32. This is solemnly introduced: "This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord."

I. The more general exhortation to purity and holiness of heart and life.

1. "That you henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk." Converted Gentiles must not live as unconverted Gentiles do. Though they live among them, they must not live like them.

(1) The wickedness of the Gentile world. [1] Their understandings were darkened, v. 18. They were void of all saving knowledge. They sat in darkness, and they loved it rather than light: and by their ignorance they were alienated from the life of God. They were estranged from a life of holiness.

Their wilful ignorance was the cause of their estrangement from this life of God. And what was the cause of their being thus ignorant? It was because of the blindness or the hardness of their heart. It was not because God did not make himself known to them by his works. They were ignorant because they would be so. Their ignorance proceeded from their obstinacy. [2] Their consciences were debauched and seared: Who being past feeling, v. 19. They had no sense of their sin, nor of the danger of their case.

They gave themselves over unto lasciviousness. They indulged themselves in their filthy lusts. They became the slaves and drudges of sin and the devil, working all uncleanness with greediness. When men's consciences are once seared, there are no bounds to their sins.

(2) These Christians must distinguish themselves from such Gentiles: You have not so learned Christ, v. 20. It may be read, But you not so; you have learned Christ. Those who have learned Christ are saved from the darkness which others lie under; and, as they know more, they are obliged to live in a better manner than others. Learn Christ! Is Christ a book, a lesson, a way, a trade? "If so be that you have heard him (v. 21), and have been taught by him." Christ is the lesson; we must learn Christ: and Christ is the teacher; we are taught by him. As the truth is in Jesus. "You have been taught the real truth, as held forth by Christ himself, both in his doctrine and in his life." The truth of Christ then appears in its beauty and power, when it appears as in Jesus.

2. Another branch of the general exhortation follows. That you put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, &c., v. 22–24. Here the apostle expresses himself in metaphors taken from garments. There must be sanctification, which con-

grace in each member (or else, rather, "according to each several member's working"), proportioned to the measure of its need of supply. every part—Greek, "each one part"; each individual part. maketh increase—Translate, as the Greek is the same as vs. 15, "maketh (carrieth on) the growth of the body." 17. therefore—resuming the exhortation which he had begun with, "I therefore beseech you that ye walk worthy. . . ." (vs. 1). testify in the Lord—in whom (as our element) we do all things pertaining to the ministry (I Thess. 4:1 [ALFORD]; Rom. 9:1). henceforth . . . not—Greek, "no longer"; resumed from vs. 14. other—Greek, "the rest of the Gentiles." in the vanity . . .—as their element: opposed to "in the Lord." "Vanity of mind" is the waste of the rational powers on worthless objects, of which idolatry is one of the more glaring instances. The root of it is departure from the knowledge of the true God (vss. 18, 19; Rom. 1:21; I Thess. 4:5). 18. More lit., "Being darkened in their understanding," i.e., their intelligence, or perceptions (cf. ch. 5:8; Acts 26:18; I Thess. 5:4, 5). alienated—This and "darkened," imply that before the fall they (in the person of their first father) had been partakers of life and light: and that they had revolted from the primitive revelation (cf. ch. 2:12). life of God—that life whereby God lives in His own people: as He was the life and light in Adam before the irruption of death and darkness into human nature; and as He is the life in the regenerate (Gal. 2:20). "Spiritual life in believers is kindled from the life itself of God" [BENGEL]. through—rather as Greek, "on account of the ignorance," viz., of God. Wilful ignorance in the first instance, their fathers not "choosing to retain God in their knowledge." This is the beginning point of their misery (Acts 17: 30; Rom. 1:21, 23, 28; I Pet. 1:14). because of—"on account of." blindness—Greek, "hardness," lit., the hardening of the skin so as not to be sensible of touch. Hence a soul's callousness to feeling (Mark 3:5). Where there is spiritual "life" ("the life of God") there is feeling; where there is not, there is "hardness." 19. past feeling—senseless, shameless, hopeless; the ultimate result of a long process of "hardening," or habit of sin (vs. 18). "Being past hope," or despairing, is the reading of the Vulgate; though not so well supported as English Version reading, "past feeling," which includes the absence of hope (Jer. 2:25; 18:12). given themselves over—In Romans 1:24 it is, "God gave them up to uncleanness." Their giving themselves to it was punished in kind, God giving them up to it by withdrawing His preventing grace; their sin thus was made their punishment. They gave themselves up of their own accord to the slavery of their lust, to do all its pleasure, as captives who have ceased to strive with the foe. God gave them up to it, but not against their will; for they give themselves up to it [ZANCHIUS]. lasciviousness—"wantonness" [ALFORD]. So it is translated in Romans 13:13; II Peter 2:18. It does not necessarily include lasciviousness; but it means intemperate, reckless readiness for it, and for every self-indulgence. "The first beginnings of unchastity" [GROTIUS]. "Lawless insolence, and wanton caprice" [TRENCH]. to work all uncleanness—The Greek implies, "with a deliberate view to the working (as if it were their work or business, not a mere accidental fall into sin) of uncleanness of every kind." with greediness—Greek, "in greediness." Uncleanness and greediness of gain often go hand in hand (ch. 5:3, 5; Col. 3:5); though "greediness" here includes all kinds of self-seeking. 20. learned Christ—(Phil. 3:10). To know Christ Himself, is the great lesson of the Christian life: this the Ephesians began to learn at their conversion. "Christ," in reference to His office, is here specified as the object of learning. "Jesus," in the following verse, as the person. 21. If so be that—not implying doubt; assuming what I have no reason to doubt, that . . . . heard him—The Him is emphatic: heard Himself, not merely heard about Him. taught by him—Greek, "taught IN HIM," i.e., being in vital union with Him (Rom. 16:7). as the truth is . . .—Translate in connection with "taught"; "And in Him have been taught, according as is truth in Jesus." There is no article in the Greek. "Truth" is therefore used in the most comprehensive sense, truth in its essence, and highest perfection, in Jesus; "if according as it is thus in Him, ye have been so taught in Him"; in contrast to "the vanity of mind of the Gentiles" (vs. 17; cf. John 1:14, 17; 18:37). Contrast John 8:44. 22. That ye—following "Ye have been taught" (vs. 21). concerning the former conversation—"in respect to your former way of life." the old man—your old unconverted nature (Rom. 6:6). is corrupt according to the deceitful nutrition, increasing the body, and supplying all the waste that had taken place in consequence of labor.

17. Walk not as other Gentiles walk. You are called to holiness by the gospel, The other Gentiles have no such calling; walk not as they walk. In this and the following two verses the apostle gives a most awful account of the conduct of the heathens who were without the knowledge of the true God. (1) They walked in the vanity of their mind. "In the foolishness of their mind"; want of genuine wisdom is that to which the apostle refers, and it was through this that the Gentiles became addicted to every species of idolatry; and they fondly imagined that they could obtain help from gods which were the work of their own hands!

18. (2) Having the understanding darkened. This is the second instance alleged by the apostle of the degradation of the Gentiles. Having no means of knowledge, the heart, naturally dark, became more and more so by means of habitual transgression, everything in the Gentile system having an immediate tendency to blind the eyes and darken the whole soul. (3) Being alienated from the life of God. The original design of God was to live in man; and the life of God in the soul of man was that by which God intended to make man happy, and without which true happiness was never found by any human spirit: from this through the ignorance that is in them, through the "substantial" or continually existing ignorance, their moral state became so wretched that they are represented as "abhorring" everything spiritual and pure, for this is the import of the word which we translate alienated in some of the best Greek writers. They abhorred everything that had a tendency to lay any restraint on their vicious passions and inclinations. (4) Blindness of their heart. Because of the "callousness" of their hearts. "Callous" signifies a thickening of the outward skin of any particular part, especially on the hands and feet, by repeated exercise or use, through which such parts are rendered insensible. This may be metaphorically applied to the conscience of a sinner, which is rendered stupid and insensible by repeated acts of iniquity.

19. (5) Who being past feeling. The verb signifies: (a) To throw off all sense of shame, and to be utterly devoid of pain, for committing unrighteous acts; (b) To be desperate, having neither hope nor desire to reformation; in a word, to be without remorse, and to be utterly regardless of conduct, character, or final blessedness. Several excellent MSS. and versions have "being without hope"; that is, persons who, from their manner of life in this world, could not possibly hope for blessedness in the world to come. (6) Have given themselves over unto lasciviousness. Lasciviousness is here personified; and the Gentiles in question are represented as having delivered themselves over to her jurisdiction. This is a true picture of the Gentile world. (7) To work all uncleanness with greediness. This is a complete finish of the most abandoned character. To do an unclean act is bad; to labor in it is worse; to labor in "all uncleanness" is worse still. But to do all this in every case to the utmost extent, "with a desire exceeding" time, place, opportunity, and strength, is worst of all, and leaves nothing more profligate or more abandoned to be described or imagined.

20. But ye have not so learned Christ. You have received the doctrines of Christianity, and therefore are taught differently; you have received the Spirit of Christ, and therefore are saved from such dispositions. Some would point and translate the original thus: "But you are not thus; you have learned Christ."

21. If so be that ye have heard him. "Seeing that, since indeed," you have heard us proclaim His eternal truth; we have delivered it to you as we received it from Jesus.

22. That ye put off. And this has been one especial part of our teaching, that you should abandon all these, and live a life totally opposite to what it was before. Which is corrupt. The whole of your former life was corrupt and sists of these two things: (1) The old man must be put off. The corrupt nature is called a man. It is the old man, as old Adam, from whom we derive it. It is bred in the bone, and we brought it into the world with us. It is said to be corrupt; for sin in the soul is the corruption of its faculties: and where it is not mortified, it grows daily worse and worse. According to the deceitful lusts. They promise men happiness, but render them more miserable. These therefore must be put off as an old garment that we should be ashamed to be seen in. These lusts prevailed in their former conversation. (2) The new man must be put on. It is not enough to shake off corrupt principles, but we must be actuated by gracious ones. "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind (v. 23),

And that you put on the new man," v. 24. By the new man is meant the new nature, the new creature. This new man is created, or produced out of confusion and emptiness, by God's almighty power. After God: The loss of God's image upon the soul was both the sinfulness and misery of man's fallen state; and that resemblance which it bears to God is the glory, and the happiness, of the new creature.

In righteousness towards men and in holiness towards God. True holiness in opposition to the ceremonial holiness of the Jews. We are said to put on this new man when we are endeavouring after this divine nature.

II. Those particular limbs of the old man that must be mortified, those filthy rags of the old nature that must be put off, and what are the peculiar ornaments of the new man. 1. Take heed of lying, and be ever careful to speak the truth (v. 25): "Wherefore, putting away lying." Of this sin the heathen were very guilty, affirming that a profitable lie was better than a hurtful truth. That branch of the new man that must be put on in opposition to it is speaking the truth in all our converse with others. All who have grace make conscience of speaking the truth. We are members one of another. Truth is a debt we owe to one another; and, if we love one another, we shall not deceive one another. We belong to the same society or body, which falsehood or lying tends to dissolve; and therefore we should avoid it, and speak truth. Lying is a very great sin. 2. "Take heed of anger and ungoverned passions. Be you angry, and sin not," v. 26. Here is an easy concession; for as such we should consider it. Be you angry. This we are apt enough to be, God knows: but we find it difficult enough to observe the restriction, and sin not. If we would be angry and not sin (says one), we must be angry at nothing but sin. One great and common sin in anger is to suffer it to burn into wrath, and then to let it rest.

Before night calm and quiet your spirits, be reconciled to the offender: Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. Though anger in itself is not sinful, yet there is the utmost danger of its becoming so if it be not carefully watched.

lusts—rather, "which is being corrupted ('perisheth,' cf. Gal. 6:8, 'corruption,' i.e., destruction) according to (i.e., as might be expected from) the lusts of deceit." Deceit is personified; lusts are its servants and tools. In contrast to "the holiness of the truth," vs. 24, and "truth in Jesus," vs. 21; and answering to Gentile "vanity," vs. 17. Corruption and destruction are inseparably associated together. The man's old-nature-lusts are his own executioners, fitting him more and more for eternal corruption and death. 23. be renewed—The Greek (ananeousthai) implies "the continued renewal in the youth of the new man." A different Greek word (anakainousthai) implies "renewal from the old state." in the spirit of your mind—As there is no Greek for "in," which there is at vs. 17, "in the vanity of their mind," it is better to translate, "By the Spirit of your mind," i.e., by your new spiritual nature; the restored and divinely informed leading principle of the mind. The "spirit" of man in New Testament is only then used in its proper sense, as worthy of its place and governing functions, when it is one spirit with the Lord. The natural, or animal man, is described as "not having the Spirit" (Jude 19) [ALFORD]. Spirit is not in this sense attributed to the unregenerate (I Thess. 5:23). 24. put on the new man—Opposed to "the old man," which is to be "put off" (vs. 22). The Greek here (kainon) is different from that for "re-new-ed" (vs. 23). Put on not merely a renovated nature, but a new, i.e., altogether different nature, a changed nature (cf. Col. 3:10, Note). after God . . .—Translate, "Which hath been created (once for all: so the Greek aorist means: in Christ, ch. 2:10; so that in each believer it has not to be created again, but to be put on) after (the image of) God" (Gen. 1:27; Col. 3:10; I Pet. 1:15), etc. God's image in which the first Adam was originally created, is restored, to us far more gloriously in the second Adam, the image of the invisible God (II Cor. 4:4; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3). in righteousness—"IN" it as the element of the renewed man. true holiness—rather, as the Greek, "holiness of the truth"; holiness flowing from sincere following of "the truth of God" (Rom. 1:25; 3:7; 15:8): opposed to "the lusts of deceit" (Greek, vs. 22); cf. also vs. 21, "truth is in Jesus." "Righteousness" is in relation to our fellow men, the second table of the law; "Holiness," in relation to God, the first table; the religious observance of offices of piety (cf. Luke 1:75). In the parallel (Col. 3:10) it is, "renewed in knowledge after the image . . . ." As at Colosse the danger was from false pretenders to knowledge, the true "knowledge" which flows from renewal of the heart is dwelt on; so at Ephesus, the danger being from the corrupt morals prevalent around, the renewal in "holiness," contrasted with the Gentile "uncleanness" (vs. 19), and "righteousness," in contrast to "greediness," is made prominent. 25. Wherefore—From the general character of "the new man," there will necessarily result the particular features which he now details. putting away—Greek, "having put away" once for all. lying—"falsehood": the abstract. "Speak ye truth each one with his neighbor," is quoted, slightly changed, from Zechariah 8:16. For "to," Paul quotes it "with," to mark our inner connection with one another, as "members one of another" [STIER]. Not merely members of one body. Union to one another in Christ, not merely the external command, instinctively leads Christians to fulfil mutual duties. One member could not injure or deceive another, without injuring himself, as all have a mutual and common interest. 26. Be ye angry, and sin not—So the LXX, Psalm 4:4. Should circumstances arise to call for anger on your part, let it be as Christ's "anger" (Mark 3:5), without sin. Our natural feelings are not wrong when directed to their legitimate object, and when not exceeding due bounds. As in the future literal, so in the present spiritual, resurrection, no essential constituent is annihilated, but all that is a perversion of the original design is removed. Thus indignation at dishonor done to God, and wrong to man, is justifiable anger. Passion is sinful (derived from "passio," suffering; implying that amidst seeming energy. a man is really passive, the slave of his anger, instead of ruling it). let not the sun go down upon your wrath—"wrath" is absolutely forbidden; "anger" not so, though, like poison sometimes used as medicine, it is to be used with extreme caution. The sense is not, Your anger shall not be imputed to you if you put it away before nightfall; but "let no wrath (i.e., as the Greek, personal 'irritation' or 'exasperation') mingle with your 'anger,' even though the latter be righteous" [TRENCH, Synonyms]. "Put it away before sunset" (when the Jewish day began), is proverbial abominable; you lived in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness; you sought this in the gratification of the lusts of the flesh; and were ever deceived by these lusts, and disappointed in your expectations.

23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind. Their old mode of living was to be abandoned; a new one to be assumed. The mind is to be renovated, and not only its general complexion, but the very spirit of it; all its faculties and powers must be thoroughly, completely, and universally renewed.

24. Put on the new man. Get a new nature; for in Christ Jesus, under the Christian dispensation, neither circumcision avails anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. Therefore you must be renewed in the spirit of your mind. Which after God is created in righteousness. Here is certainly an allusion to the creation of man. Moses tells us, Gen. i. 27, that "God created man in his own image"; that is, God was the Model according to which he was formed in the spirit of his mind. Paul says here that they should put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, or "in the holiness of truth." Both certainly refer to the same thing, and the one illustrates the other. From the apostle we learn what Moses meant by the "image of God"; it was "righteousness and the truth of holiness."

25. Wherefore putting away lying. All falsity, all prevarication, because this is opposite to the truth as it is in Jesus, v. 21, and to the holiness of truth, v. 24. Speak every man truth with his neighbour. Truth was but of small account among many of even the best heathens, for they taught that on many occasions a lie was to be preferred to the truth itself. We are members one of another. Consider yourselves as one body, of which Jesus Christ is the Head; and as a man's right hand would not deceive or wrong his left hand, so deal honestly with each other.

26. Be ye angry, and sin not. Here is the same as "If ye be angry, do not sin." We can never suppose that the apostle delivers this as a precept, if we take the words as they stand in our version. Perhaps the sense is, "Take heed that you be not angry, lest you sin"; for it would be very difficult, even for an apostle himself, to be angry and not sin. If we consider anger as simply implying displeasure, then there are a multitude of cases in which a man may be innocently—yea, laudably—angry; for he should be displeased with everything which is not for the glory of God and the good of mankind. But, in any other sense, I do not see how the words can be safely taken. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. That is: If you do get angry with anyone, see that the fire be cast with the utmost speed out of your bosom. Do not go to sleep with any unkind or unbrotherly feeling; anger, continued in, may produce malice and revenge.

MATTHEW HENRY

Neither give place to the devil, v. 27. Those who persevere in sinful anger and in wrath let the devil into their hearts. "Neither give place to the calumniator, or the false accuser" (so some read the words); "let your ears be deaf to whisperers, tale-bearers, and slanderers." 3. We are here warned against the sin of stealing, and advised to honest industry and to beneficence: Let him that stole steal no more, v. 28. But we must not only take heed of the sin, but conscientiously abound in the opposite duty: not only not steal, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing that is good. Idleness makes thieves. Men should therefore be diligent and industrious, not in any unlawful way, but in some honest calling: Working the thing which is good. Industry will keep people out of temptation of doing wrong. But there is another reason that they may be capable of doing some good. That he may have to give to him that needeth. They must labour not only that they may live themselves. Those who have but little for themselves, must cast their mite into the treasury. God must have his dues and the poor are his receivers.

4. We are here warned against corrupt communication; and directed to that which is useful and edifying, v. 29. Filthy and unclean words and discourse are poisonous and infectious, as putrid rotten meat. Christians should beware of all such discourse. We must not only put off corrupt communication, but put on that which is good to the use of edifying. Christians should endeavour to promote a useful conversation: that it may minister grace unto the hearers. It is the great duty of Christians to take care that they offend not with their lips, and that they improve discourse for the good of others.

And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, v. 30. We must not do that which is contrary to his holy nature and his will; we must not refuse to hearken to his counsels, nor rebel against his government. Provoke not the blessed Spirit of God to withdraw his presence and his gracious influences from you! By him we are sealed unto the day of redemption. The body is to be redeemed from the power of the grave at the resurrection-day; then our full and complete happiness commences. All true believers are sealed to that day. God has distinguished them from others, and the Spirit of God is the seal. We should be undone should God take away his Holy Spirit from us.

5. Another caution against wrath and anger, with further advice to mutual love, v. 31, 32. By bitterness, wrath, and anger, are meant violent inward resentment against others: and, by clamour, intemperate speeches, by which bitterness, wrath, and anger, vent themselves. Christians should not be clamorous with their tongues. Evil speaking signifies all railing against such as we are angry with. Malice, that rooted anger which prompts men to design mischief to others. The contrary to all this follows: Be you kind one to another. This implies the principle of love in the heart, and the outward expression of it. Tender-hearted; that is, merciful, so as to be quickly moved to compassion and pity.

for put it away at once before another day begin (Deut. 24:15); also before you part with your brother for the night, perhaps never in this world to meet again. So JONA, "Let not night and anger against anyone sleep with you, but go and conciliate the other party, though he have been the first to commit the offense." Let not your "anger" at another's wickedness verge into hatred, or contempt, or revenge [VATABLUS]. 27. Neither give place—i.e., occasion, or scope, to the devil, by continuing in "wrath." The keeping of anger through the darkness of night, is giving place to the devil, the prince of darkness (ch. 6:12). 28. Greek, "Let him that stealeth." The imperfect or past tense is, however, mainly meant, though not to the exclusion of the present. "Let the stealing person steal no more." Bandits frequented the mountains near Ephesus. Such are meant by those called "thieves" in the New Testament. but rather—For it is not enough to cease from a sin, but the sinner must also enter on the path that is its very opposite [CHRYSOSTOM]. The thief, when repentant, should labor more than he would be called on to do, if he had never stolen. let him labour—Theft and idleness go together. the thing which is good—in contrast with theft, the thing which was evil in his past character. with his hands—in contrast with his former thievish use of his hands. that he may have to give—"that he may have wherewith to impart." He who has stolen should exercise liberality beyond the restitution of what he has taken. Christians in general should make not selfish gain their aim in honest industry, but the acquisition of the means of greater usefulness to their fellow men; and the being independent of the alms of others. So Paul himself (Acts 20: 35; II Thess. 3:8) acted as he taught (I Thess. 4:11). 29. corrupt—lit., "insipid," without "the salt of grace" (Col. 4:6), so worthless and then becoming corrupt: included in "foolish talking" (ch. 5:4). Its opposite is "that which is good to edifying." communication—language. that which . . .—Greek, "whatever is good." use of edifying—lit., "for edifying of the need," i.e., for edifying where it is needed. Seasonably edifying; according as the occasion and present needs of the hearers require, now censure, at another time consolation. Even words good in themselves must be introduced seasonably lest by our fault they prove injurious instead of useful. TRENCH explains, Not vague generalities, which would suit a thousand other cases equally well, and probably equally ill: our words should be as nails fastened in a sure place, words suiting the present time and the present person, being "for the edifying of the occasion" (Col. 4:6). minister—Greek, "give." The word spoken "gives grace to the hearers" when God uses it as His instrument for that purpose. 30. grieve not—A condescension to human modes of thought most touching. Cf. "vexed His Holy Spirit" (Isa. 63:10; Ps. 78:40); "fretted me" (Ezek. 16:43: implying His tender love to us); and of hardened unbelievers, "resist the Holy Ghost" (Acts 7:51). This verse refers to believers, who grieve the Spirit by inconsistencies such as in the context are spoken of, corrupt or worthless conversation, etc. whereby ye are sealed—rather, "wherein (or 'IN whom') ye were sealed." As in ch. 1:13, believers are said to be sealed "in" Christ, so here" in the Holy Spirit," who is one with Christ, and who reveals Christ in the soul: the Greek implies that the sealing was done already once for all. It is the Father "BY" whom believers, as well as the Son Himself, were sealed (John 6:27). The Spirit is represented as itself the seal (ch. 1:13, where see, for the image employed, the Note). Here the Spirit is the element IN which the believer is sealed, His gracious influences being the seal itself. unto—kept safely against the day of redemption, viz., of the completion of redemption in the deliverance of the body as well as the soul from all sin and sorrow (ch. 1:14; Luke 21:28; Rom. 8:23). 31. bitterness—both of spirit and of speech: opposed to "kind." wrath—passion for a time: opposed to "tender-hearted." Whence BENGEL translates for "wrath," harshness. anger—lasting resentment: opposed to "forgiving one another." clamour—compared by CHRYSOSTOM to a horse carrying anger for its rider: "Bridle the horse, and you dismount its rider." "Bitterness" begets "wrath"; "wrath," "anger"; "anger," "clamor"; and "clamor," the more chronic "evil-speaking," slander, insinuations, and surmises of evil. "Malice" is the secret root of all: "fires fed within, and not appearing to bystanders from without, are the most formidable" [CHRYSOSTOM]. 32. (Luke 7:42; Col. 3: 12.) even as—God hath shown Himself "kind, tender-hearted, and forgiving to you"; it is but just that you in turn shall be so to your fellow men,

ADAM CLARKE

27. Neither give place to the devil. Your adversary will strive to influence your mind and irritate your spirit; watch and pray that he may not get any place in you, or ascendancy over you. As the word diabolos is sometimes used to signify a "calumniator, talebearer, whisperer, or backbiter," here it may have the same signification: Do not open your ear to the talebearer, to the slanderer, who comes to you with accusations against your brethren, or with surmisings and evil speakings.

28. Let him that stole steal no more. Stealing, overreaching, defrauding, purloining, etc., are consistent with no kind of religion that acknowledges the true God. If Christianity does not make men honest, it does nothing for them.

29. Let no corrupt communication. "A "useless, putrid, unsavory, and obscene word or conversation." But that which is good to the use of edifying. To be good for a thing is a Graecism, as well as an Anglicism, for to be "fit, proper, suitable." That it may minister grace. This may be understood thus: (1) Let your conversation be pure, wise, and holy, that it may be the means of conveying grace, or divine influences, to them that hear. (2) Let it be such as to be grateful or acceptable to the hearers. This is the meaning in some of the most correct Greek writers. Never wound modesty, truth, or religion with your discourse; endeavor to edify those with whom you converse; and, if possible, speak so as to please them.

30. Grieve not the holy Spirit of God by giving way to any wrong temper, unholy word, or unrighteous action. Even those who have already a measure of the light and life of God, both of which are not only brought in by the Holy Spirit, but maintained by His constant indwelling, may give way to sin, and so grieve this Holy Spirit that He shall withdraw both His light and presence; and in proportion as He withdraws, then hardness and darkness take place. What is still worse, a state of insensibility is the consequence; for the darkness prevents the fallen state from being seen, and the hardness prevents it from being felt. Whereby ye are sealed. The Holy Spirit in the soul of a believer is God's Seal, set on his heart to testify that he is God's property, and that he should be wholly employed in God's service.

31. Let all bitterness. It is astonishing that any who profess the Christian name should indulge bitterness of spirit. Those who are censorious, who are unmerciful to the failings of others, who have fixed a certain standard by which they measure all persons in all circumstances, and unchristianize everyone that does not come up to this standard, these have the bitterness against which the apostle speaks. And wrath. More properly "anger," which may be considered the commencement of the passion. Anger. More properly "wrath"—the passion carried to its highest pitch, accompanied with injurious words and outrageous acts, some of which are immediately specified. And clamour. Loud and obstreperous speaking, brawling, railing, boisterous talk, often the offspring of wrath; all of which are highly unbecoming the meek, loving, quiet, sedate mind of Christ and His followers. And evil speaking. "Blasphemy"; that is, "injurious speaking"—words which tend to hurt those of whom or against whom they are spoken. With all malice. "All malignity"; as anger produces wrath, and wrath clamor, so all together produce malice; that is, settled, sullen, fell wrath, which is always looking out for opportunities to revenge itself by the destruction of the object of its indignation.

32. Be ye kind one to another. Be kind and obliging to each other; study good breeding and gentleness of manners. A Christian cannot be a savage, and he need not be a boor. Never put any person to needless pain. Tenderhearted. "Compassionate."

MATTHEW HENRY

Forgiving one another. Occasions of difference will happen among Christ's disciples; and therefore they must be ready to forgive, therein resembling God himself, who for Christ's sake hath forgiven them. Those who are forgiven of God should be of a forgiving spirit, and should forgive even as God forgives. All these particulars that the apostle has insisted on belong to the second table. He who does not conscientiously discharge them can never fear nor love God in truth and in sincerity, whatever he may pretend to.

CHAPTER 5

Exhortation to mutual love. "Because God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven you, therefore be you followers of God, or imitators of him"; for so the word signifies. This puts a great honour upon practical religion, that it is the imitating of God. We must be holy as God is holy, merciful as he is merciful, perfect as he is perfect. But there is no one attribute of God more recommended to our imitation than that of his goodness. Be you imitators of God, especially in his love. As dear children, as children (who are wont to be greatly beloved by their parents) usually resemble them in the features of their faces, and in the dispositions of their minds. Children are obliged to imitate their parents in what is good, especially when dearly beloved by them. The character that we bear of God's children obliges us to resemble him. And those only are God's dear children who imitate him. And walk in love, v. 2. It should be the principle from which we act; it should direct the ends at which we aim. As Christ also hath loved us. We are all joint sharers in that love and therefore should love one another, Christ having loved us all, he hath given himself for us.

An offering and a sacrifice to God; or an offering, even a sacrifice, for a sweet-smelling savour. As he offered himself with a design to be accepted of God, so God did accept, was pleased with, that sacrifice. His example should be prevailing with us, and we should carefully copy it.

Filthy lusts must be suppressed, in order to the supporting of holy love. Walk in love, and shun fornication and all uncleanness. Now these sins must be dreaded and detested in the highest degree: Let it not be once named among you as becometh saints. The apostle not only cautions against the gross acts of sin, but against what some may be apt to make light of, and think to be excusable.

Neither filthiness (v. 4), nor foolish talking, such vain discourse as betrays much folly and indiscretion, nor jesting. There is no doubt an innocent and inoffensive jesting, which we cannot suppose the apostle here forbids. But the context seems to restrain it to such pleasantry of discourse as is filthy and obscene.

They are not convenient. Indeed there is more than inconvenience, even a great deal of mischief, in them. Those things do not become Christians. Christians are allowed to be cheerful and pleasant; but they must be merry and wise.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

who have not erred against you in the degree that you have erred against God (Matt. 18:33). God for Christ's sake—rather as Greek, "God in Christ" (II Cor. 5:19). It is in Christ that God vouchsafes forgiveness to us. It cost God the death of His Son, as man, to forgive us. It costs us nothing to forgive our fellow man. hath forgiven—rather as Greek, "forgave you." God has, once for all, forgiven sin in Christ, as a past historical fact.

CHAPTER 5

Vss. 1-33. EXHORTATIONS TO LOVE: AND AGAINST CARNAL LUSTS AND COMMUNICATIONS. CIRCUMSPECTION IN WALK: REDEEMING THE TIME: BEING FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT: SINGING TO THE LORD WITH THANKFULNESS: THE WIFE'S DUTY TO THE HUSBAND RESTS ON THAT OF THE CHURCH TO CHRIST. 1. therefore—seeing that "God in Christ forgave you" (ch. 4:32). followers—Greek, "imitators" of God, in respect to "love" (vs. 2): God's essential character (I John 4: 16). as dear children—Greek, "as children beloved"; to which vs. 2 refers, "As Christ also loved us" (I John 4:19). "We are sons of men, when we do ill; sons of God, when we do well" [AUGUSTINE, Ps. 52]; (cf. Matt. 5:44, 45, 48). Sonship infers an absolute necessity of imitation, it being vain to assume the title of son without any similitude of the Father [PEARSON]. 2. And—in proof that you are so. walk—resuming ch. 4:1, "walk worthy of the vocation. . . ." as Christ . . . loved us—From the love of the Father he passes to the love of the Son, in whom God most endearingly manifests His love to us. given himself for us—Greek, "given Himself up (viz., to death, Gal. 2:20) for us," i.e., in our behalf: not here vicarious substitution, though that is indirectly implied, "in our stead." The offerer, and the offering that He offered, were one and the same (John 15:13; Rom. 5:8). offering and a sacrifice—"Offering" expresses generally His presenting Himself to the Father, as the Representative undertaking the cause of the whole of our lost race (Ps. 40:6-8), including His life of obedience; though not excluding His offering of His body for us (Heb. 10: 10). It is usually an unbloody offering, in the more limited sense. "Sacrifice" refers to His death for us exclusively. Christ is here, in reference to Psalm 40;6 (quoted again in Heb. 10:5), represented as the antitype of all the offerings of the law, whether the unbloody or bloody, eucharistical or propitiatory. for a sweet-smelling savour—Greek, "for an odor of a sweet smell," i.e., God is well pleased with the offering on the ground of its sweetness,and so is reconciled to us (ch. 1:6; Matt. 3:17; II Cor. 5:18, 19; Heb. 10:6-17). The ointment compounded of principal spices, poured upon Aaron's head, answers to the variety of the graces by which He was enabled to "offer Himself a sacrifice for a sweet-smelling savor." Another type, or prophecy by figure, was "the sweet savor" (savor of rest, Margin) which God smelled in Noah's sacrifice (Gen. 8:21). Again, as what Christ is, believers also are (I John 4:17), and ministers are: Paul says (II Cor. 2:17) "we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ." 3. once named—Greek, "Let it not be even named" (vss. 4, 12). "Uncleanness" and "covetousness" are taken up again from ch. 4:19. The two are so closely allied that the Greek for "covetousness" (pleonexia) is used sometimes in Scripture, and often in the Greek Fathers, for sins of impurity. The common principle is the longing to fill one's desire with material objects of sense, outside of God. The expression, "not be even named," applies better to impurity, than to "covetousness." 4. filthiness—obscenity in act or gesture. foolish talking—the talk of fools, which is folly and sin together. The Greek of it, and of "filthiness," occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. nor—rather, "or" (cf. vs. 3). jesting—Greek, "eutrapelia"; found nowhere else in the New Testament: implying strictly that versatility which turns about and adapts itself, without regard to principle, to the shifting circumstances of the moment, and to the varying moods of those with whom it may deal. Not scurrile buffoonery, but refined "persiflage" and "badinage," for which Ephesus was famed (PLAUTUS, Miles Gloriosus, 3.1, 42-52), and which, so far from being censured, was and is thought by the world a pleasant accomplishment. In Colossians 3:8, "filthy communication" refers to the foulness; "foolish talking," to the folly; "jesting," to the false refinement [and trifling witticism, TITTMANN] of discourse unseasoned with the salt of grace [TRENCH]. not convenient—"unseemly"; not

ADAM CLARKE

Forgiving one another. Should you receive any injury from a brother, or from any man, be as ready to forgive him, on his repentance and acknowledgment, as God was, for Christ's sake, to forgive you when you repented of your sins, and took refuge in His mercy.

1. Be ye therefore followers of God. The beginning of this chapter is properly a continuation of the preceding, which should have ended with the second verse of this. The word which we translate followers signifies such as personate others, assuming it is from this Greek word that we have the word "mimic." Though this term is often used in a ludicrous sense, yet here it is to be understood in a very solemn and proper sense. Let your whole conduct be like that of your Lord; "imitate" Him in all your actions, words, spirit, and inclinations; imitate Him as children do their beloved parents, and remember that you stand in the relation of beloved children to Him.

2. And walk in love. Let every act of life be dictated by love to God and man. As Christ also hath loved us. Laying down your lives for your brethren if necessary; counting nothing too difficult to be done in order to promote their eternal salvation. Hath given himself for us. Christ has died in our stead, and become thereby a Sacrifice for our sins. An offering. An oblation, a eucharistic offering. It means any offering by which gratitude was expressed for temporal blessings received from the bounty of God. A sacrifice. A "sin offering, a victim for sin." These terms may be justly considered as including every kind of sacrifice, offering, and oblation made to God on any account; and both these terms are with propriety used here, because the apostle's design was to represent the sufficiency of the offering made by Christ for the sin of the world. For a sweetsmelling savour. The same as is expressed in Gen. viii. 21; Lev. i. 9; iii. 16: "a sweet savour unto the Lord"; i.e., an offering of His own prescription, and one with which He was well-pleased, and by accepting of which He showed that He accepted the person who offered it. The sweetsmelling savour refers to the burnt offerings, the fumes of which ascended from the fire in the act of burning; and as such odors are grateful to man, God represents himself as pleased with them when offered by an upright worshipper according to His own appointment.

3. But fornication. It is probable that the three terms used here by the apostle refer to different species of the same thing. The word fornication may imply not only fornication but adultery also, as it frequently does; uncleanness may refer to all abominable and unnatural lusts —sodomy, bestiality, etc.; and covetousness, to "excessive indulgence" in that which, moderately used, is lawful. As the covetous man never has enough of wealth, so the pleasure-taker and the libertine never have enough of the gratifications of sense, the appetite increasing in proportion to its indulgence. If, however, simple covetousness, i.e., the "love of gain," be here intended, it shows from the connection in which it stands (for it is linked with fornication and all uncleanness) how degrading it is to the soul of man and how abominable it is in the eye of God. In other places it is ranked with idolatry, for the man who has an inordinate love of gain makes money his god. Let it not be once named. Let no such things ever exist among you, for you are called to be saints.

4. Neither filthiness. Anything base or vile in words or acts. Foolish talking. Scurrility, buffoonery, ridicule, or what tends to expose another to contempt. Nor jesting. Artfully turned discourses or words; words that can be easily turned to other meanings; chaste words which, from their connection and the manner in which they are used, convey an obscene or offensive meaning. Which are not convenient. "They do not come up" to the proper standard; they are utterly improper in themselves, and highly unbecoming in those who profess Chris-

But rather giving of thanks: that he may delight his mind, and make himself cheerful, by a grateful remembrance of God's goodness and mercy to him, and by blessing and praising him on account of these. A reflection on the grace and goodness of God to us, to excite our thankfulness to him, is proper to delight the Christian's mind, and to make him cheerful. If men abounded more in good and pious expressions, they would not be so apt to utter ill and unbecoming words.

I. To fortify us against the sins of uncleanness, &c., the apostle urges several arguments, and prescribes several remedies.

1. He urges several arguments, (1) Consider that these are sins which shut persons out of heaven: For this you know, &c., v. 5. There is spiritual idolatry in the love of this world. As the epicure makes a god of his belly, so the covetous man makes a god of his money. He serves mammon instead of God. Of these persons it is said that they have no inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. In this kingdom the saints and servants of God have an inheritance. But those who allow themselves either in the lusts of the flesh or the love of the world, belong not to the kingdom of grace, nor shall they ever come to the kingdom of glory. Let us then be on our guard against those sins which would shut us out of heaven. (2) These sins bring the wrath of God upon those who are guilty of them: "Let no man deceive you with vain words," &c., v. 6. Those who flatter themselves with hopes of impunity in sin do but put a cheat upon themselves. They are vain words indeed, for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Disobedience is the very malignity of sin. The wrath of God comes upon such, sometimes in this world, but more especially in the next. And dare we make light of that which will lay us under the wrath of God? Be not you therefore partakers with them, v. 7. "Do not partake with them in their sins, that you may not share in their punishment." (3) Consider what obligations Christians are under to live at another rate, For you were sometimes darkness, but now, &c., v. 8. The apostles call their former condition darkness. A state of sin is a state of darkness. Sinners, like men in the dark, are going they know not whither, and doing they know not what. Now are you light in the Lord. Walk as children of light. "Now, being such, live up to the obligation you are under by that knowledge and those advantages you enjoy".

2. Some remedies against them. (1) We must bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, v. 9. This is expected from the children of light, that they be also sanctified by the Spirit, and thereupon bring forth his fruit, which is in all goodness and righteousness. All religion is goodness and righteousness. With these must be truth.

—Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord (v. 10), searching diligently what God has revealed to be his will. We must not only dread and avoid that which is displeasing to God, but enquire and consider what will be acceptable to him.

(2) We must have no fellowship with sin nor sinners, v. 11. Sinful works are works of darkness. These works of darkness are unfruitful works; there is nothing got by them in the long run, whatever profit is pretended by sin, it will by no means balance the loss. We must therefore have no fellowship with these unfruitful works. If we share with others in their sin, we must expect to share with them in their plagues. Rather than have fellowship with them, we must reprove them. We must witness against the sins of others, and endeavour to convince them of their sinfulness in our words; but especially by the holiness of our lives. Reprove their sins by abounding in the contrary duties.

For it is a shame even to speak of those things, &c., v. 12; much more must it be a shame to have any fellowship with them. The things which are done of them in secret. A good man is ashamed to speak that which many wicked people are not ashamed to act.

such "as become saints" (vs. 3). rather giving of thanks—a happy play on sounds in Greek, eucharistia contrasted with eutrapelia; refined "jesting" and subtle humor sometimes offend the tender feelings of grace; "giving of thanks" gives that real cheerfulness of spirit to believers which the worldly try to get from "jesting" (vs. 19, 20; Jas. 5:13). 5. this ye know—The oldest MSS. read, "Of this ye are sure knowing"; or as ALFORD, "This ye know being aware." covetous . . .idolater—(Col. 3:5). The best reading may be translated, That is to say, lit., which is (in other words) an idolater. Paul himself had forsaken all for Christ (II Cor. 6:10; 11:27). Covetousness is worship of the creature instead of the Creator, the highest treason against the King of kings (I Sam. 15:3; Matt. 6:24; Phil. 3:19; I John 2:15). hath—The present implies the fixedness of the exclusion, grounded on the eternal verities of that kingdom [ALFORD]. of Christ and of God—rather, as one Greek article is applied to both, "of Christ and God," implying their perfect oneness, which is consistent only with the doctrine that Christ is God (cf. II Thess. 1:12; I Tim. 5:21; 6:13). 6. vain—empty, unreal words, viz., palliations of "uncleanness," vss. 3, 4; Isaiah 5:20 (that it is natural to indulge in love), "covetousness" (that it is useful to society that men should pursue gain), and "jesting" (that it is witty and clever, and that God will not so severely punish for such things). because of these things—uncleanness, covetousness, etc. (vss. 3-5). cometh—present, not merely "shall come." Is as sure as if already come. children—rather, "sons of disobedience" (ch. 2:2, 3). The children of unbelief in doctrine (Deut. 32:20) are "children of disobedience" in practice, and these again are "children of wrath." 7. Here fellowship with wicked workers is forbidden; in vs. 11, with their wicked works. 8. sometimes—"once." The emphasis is on "were." Ye ought to have no fellowship with sin, which is darkness, for your state as darkness is now PAST. Stronger than "in darkness" (Rom. 2:19). light—not merely "enlightened"; but light enlightening others (vs. 13). in—in union with the Lord, who is THE LIGHT. children of light—not merely "of the light"; just as "children of disobedience" is used on the opposite side; those whose distinguishing characteristic is light. PLINY, a heathen writing to Trajan, bears unwilling testimony to the extraordinary purity of Christians' lives, contrasted with the people around them. 9. fruit of the Spirit—taken by transcribers from Galatians 5:22. The true reading is that of the oldest MSS., "The fruit of THE LIGHT"; in contrast with "the unfruitful works of darkness" (vs. 11). This verse is parenthetic. Walk as children of light, i.e., in all good works and words, "FOR the fruit of the light is [borne] in [ALFORD; but BENGEL, 'consists in'] all goodness [opposed to 'malice,' ch. 4:31], righteousness [opposed to 'covetousness,' vs. 3] and truth" [opposed to "lying," ch. 4:25]. 10. Proving—construed with "walk" (vs. 8; Rom. 12:1, 2). As we prove a coin by the eye and the ear, and by using it, so by accurate and continued study, and above all by practice and experimental trial, we may prove or test "what is acceptable unto the Lord." This is the office of "light," of which believers are "children," to manifest what each thing is, whether sightly or unsightly. 11. unfruitful works of darkness—Sins are terminated in themselves, and therefore are called "works," not "fruits" (Gal. 5:19, 22). Their only fruit is that which is not in a true sense fruit (Deut. 32:32), viz., "death" (Rom. 6:21; Gal. 6:8). Plants cannot bear "fruit" in the absence of light. Sin is "darkness," and its parent is the prince of darkness (ch. 6:12). Graces, on the other hand, as flourishing in "the light," are reproductive, and abound in fruits; which, as harmoniously combining in one whole, are termed (in the singular) "the FRUIT of the Spirit" (vs. 9). rather . . .—Translate as Greek, "rather even reprove them" (cf. Matt. 5:14-16). Not only "have no fellowship, but even reprove them," viz., in words, and in your deeds, which, shining with "the light," virtually reprove all that is contrary to light (vs. 13; John 3:19-21). "Have no fellowship," does not imply that we can avoid all intercourse (I Cor. 5:10), but "avoid such fellowship as will defile yourselves"; just as light, though it touch filth, is not soiled by it; nay, as light detects it, so, "even reprove sin." 12. The Greek order is, "For the things done in secret by them, it is a shame even to speak of." The "for" gives his reason for "not naming" (cf. vs. 3) in detail the works of darkness, whereas he describes definitely (vs. 9) "the fruit of the light" [BENGEL]. "Speak of," I think, is used here as "speaking of without reproving," in contrast to "even reprove them." Thus the "for" expresses this, Reprove them, for tianity. But rather giving of thanks. Prayer or praise is the most suitable language for man; and he who is of a trifling, light disposition is ill fitted for either.

5. For this ye know. You must be convinced of the dangerous and ruinous tendency of such a spirit and conduct, when you know that persons of this character can never inherit the kingdom of God.

6. Let no man deceive you. Suffer no man to persuade you that any of these things are innocent, or that they are unavoidable frailties of human nature. They are all sins and abominations in the sight of God; those who practice them are children of disobedience; and on account of such practices the wrath of God, divine punishment, must come upon them.

7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. Do not act as your fellow citizens do; nor suffer their philosophy, with vain words, with "empty doctrines," to lead you astray from the path of truth.

8. For ye were sometimes ("formerly") darkness. While you lived in darkness, you lived in these crimes. But now are ye light in the Lord. When you were in heathenish darkness you served divers lusts and pleasures, but now you have the light—the wisdom and teaching which come from God; therefore walk as children of the light—let the world see that you are not slaves to the flesh, but free, willing, rational servants of the Most High.

9. For the fruit of the Spirit. Instead of Spirit, some MSS., together with several of the fathers, read "light," which is supposed by most critics to be the true reading, because there is no mention made of the Spirit in any part of the context. As light, v. 8, not only means the divine influence upon the soul, but also the gospel, with great propriety it may be said: The fruit of the light, i.e., of the gospel, is in all goodness and righteousness and truth. Goodness, in the principle and disposition; righteousness, the exercise of that goodness in the whole conduct of life; truth, the director of that principle, and its exercise, to the glorification of God and the good of mankind.

10. Proving what is acceptable. By walking in the light—under the influence of the divine Spirit, according to the dictates of the gospel—you shall be able to try and bring to full proof that by which God is best pleased. You shall be able to please Him well in all things.

11. Have no fellowship. Have no religious connection whatever with heathens or their worship. Unfruitful works of darkness. Probably alluding to the mysteries among the heathens, and the different lustrations and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated; all which he denominates works of darkness, because they were destitute of true wisdom; and unfruitful works, because they were of no use to mankind, the initiated being obliged, on pain of death, to keep secret what they had seen, heard, and done. Rather reprove them. Bear a "testimony" against them; "convince" them that they are wrong; "confute" them in their vain reasons; reprove them for their vices, which are flagrant, while pretending to superior illumination. All these meanings has the Greek word which we generally render "to convince" or "reprove."

12. For it is a shame even to speak. This no doubt refers to the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries, which were performed in the night and darkness, and were known to be so impure and abominable, especially the latter, that the Roman senate banished them both from Rome and Italy.

MATTHEW HENRY

But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light, v. 13. By that instructive light which is diffused by the holiness of your lives and by your exemplary walk. For whatsoever doth make manifest is light, and accordingly it becomes those who are children of light, who are light in the Lord, to discover to others their sins, thus shining as lights in the world.

The apostle further urges this duty from the example of God or Christ: Wherefore he saith, &c. (v. 14). Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead.

They would break off their sins by repentance, and he encourages them to do their utmost that way, by that gracious promise, And Christ shall give thee light. When we are endeavouring to convince sinners, and to reform them from their sins, we are imitating God and Christ in that which is their great design throughout the gospel. (3) Another remedy against sin is circumspection, (v. 15): See then, &c. "If you are to reprove others for their sins you must look well to yourselves, and to your own behaviour and conduct." We have here another preservative from the before-mentioned sins; it being impossible to maintain purity and holiness of heart and life without great circumspection and care. Walk circumspectly, exactly in the right way, in order to which we must be frequently consulting our rule. Not as fools, who walk at all adventures, and who through neglect, and want of care, fall into sin, and destroy themselves; but as wise, as persons taught of God. Circumspect walking is the effect of true wisdom, but the contrary is the effect of folly. Redeeming the time (v. 16), literally, buying the opportunity. It is a metaphor taken from merchants and traders who diligently observe and improve the seasons for merchandise and trade. Good Christians must be good husbands of their time. They should make the best use they can of the present seasons of grace. Our time is a talent given us by God for some good end, and it is misspent and lost when it is not employed according to his design. If we have lost our time heretofore, we must endeavour to redeem it by doubling our diligence for the future.

Because the days are evil. Those were times of persecution wherein the apostle wrote this: the Christians were in jeopardy every hour. When the days are evil we know not how soon they may be worse. People are very apt to complain of bad times; it were well if that would stir them up to redeem time.

"Wherefore (v. 17), be you not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." Acquaintance with the will of God, and a care to comply with it, bespeak the best and truest wisdom.

to speak of them without reproving them, is a shame (vs. 3). Thus "works of darkness" answers to "things done in secret." 13. that are reproved—rather, "when they are reproved," viz., by you (vs. 11). whatsoever doth make manifest—rather, "everything that is (i.e., suffers itself to be) made manifest (or 'shone upon,' viz., by your 'reproving,' vs. 11) is (thenceforth no longer 'darkness,' vs. 8, but) light." The devil and the wicked will not suffer themselves to be made manifest by the light, but love darkness, though outwardly the light shines round them. Therefore, "light" has no transforming effect on them, so that they do not become light (John 3:19, 20). But, says the apostle, you being now light yourselves (vs. 8), by bringing to light through reproof those who are in darkness, will convert them to light. Your consistent lives and faithful reproofs will be your "armor of light" (Rom. 13:12) in making an inroad on the kingdom of darkness. 14. Wherefore—referring to the whole foregoing argument (vss. 8, 11, 13). Seeing that light (spiritual) dispels the pre-existing darkness, He (God) saith ... (cf. the same phrase, ch. 4:8). Awake—The reading of all the oldest MSS. is "Up!" or, "Rouse thee!" a phrase used in stirring men to activity. The words are a paraphrase of Isaiah 60: 1, 2, not an exact quotation. The word "Christ," shows that in quoting the prophecy, he views it in the light thrown on it by its Gospel fulfilment. As Israel is called on to "awake" from its previous state of "darkness" and "death" (Isa. 59:10; 60:2), for that her Light is come; so the Church, and each individual is similarly called to awake. Believers are called on to "awake" out of sleep; unbelievers, to "arise" from the dead (cf. Matt. 25:5; Rom. 13: 11; I Thess. 5:6, with ch. 2:1). Christ—"the true light," "the Sun of righteousness." give thee light—rather, as Greek, "shall shine upon thee" (so enabling thee by being "made manifest" to become, and be, by the very fact, "light," vs. 13; then being so "enlightened," ch. 1:18, thou shalt be able, by "reproving," to enlighten others). 15. that—rather as Greek, "See how ye walk...." The double idea is compressed into one sentence: "See (take heed) how ye walk," and "See that ye walk circumspectly." The manner, as well as the act itself, is included. See how ye are walking, with a view to your being circumspect (lit., accurate, exact) in your walk. Cf. Colossians 4:5, "Walk in wisdom (answering to 'as wise' here) toward them that are without" (answering to "circumspectly," i.e., correctly, in relation to the unbelievers around, not giving occasion of stumbling to any, but edifying all by a consistent walk). not as fools—Greek, "not as unwise, but as wise." 16. Redeeming the time—(Col. 4:5). Greek, "Buying up for yourselves the seasonable time" (whenever it occurs) of good to yourselves and to others. Buying off from the vanities of "them that are without" (Col. 4:5), and of the "unwise" (here in Ephesians), the opportune time afforded to you for the work of God. In a narrower sense, special favorable seasons for good, occasionally presenting themselves, are referred to, of which believers ought diligently to avail themselves. This constitutes true "wisdom" (vs. 15). In a larger sense, the whole season from the time that one is spiritually awakened, is to be "redeemed" from vanity for God (cf. II Cor. 6:2; I Pet. 4:2-4). "Redeem" implies the preciousness of the opportune season, a jewel to be bought at any price. WAHL explains, "Redeeming for yourselves (i.e., availing yourselves of) the opportunity (offered you of acting aright), and commanding the time as a master does his servant." TITTMANN, "Watch the time, and make it your own so as to control it; as merchants look out for opportunities, and accurately choose out the best goods; serve not the time, but command it, and it shall do what you approve." So PINDAL, Pythia, 4. 509, "The time followed him as his servant, and was not as a runaway slave." because the days are evil—The days of life in general are so exposed to evil, as to make it necessary to make the most of the seasonable opportunity so long as it lasts (ch. 6:13 Gen. 47:9; Ps. 49:5; Eccles. 11:2; 12:1; John 12:35). Besides, there are many special evil days (in persecution, sickness, etc.) when the Christian is laid by in silence; therefore he needs the more to improve the seasonable times afforded to him (Amos 5:13), which Paul perhaps alludes to. 17. Wherefore—seeing that ye need to walk so circumspectly, choosing and using the right opportunity of good. unwise—a different Greek word from that in vs. 15. Translate, "foolish," or "senseless." understanding—not merely knowing as a matter of fact (Luke 12:47), but knowing with understanding. the will of the Lord—as to how each opportunity is to be used. The Lord's will, ulti-

14. Wherefore he saith. It is a matter of doubt and controversy whence this saying is derived. Some think it taken from Isa. xxvi. 19: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust." Others think that it is taken from Isa. lx. 1-3: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come." But it seems more natural to understand the words he saith as referring to the light, i.e., the gospel, mentioned in v. 13; and should be translated, "Wherefore it saith, Awake thou." That is, This is the general, the strong, commanding voice of the gospel in every part—Receive instruction; leave your sins, which are leading you to perdition; believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and He will enlighten and save you.

15. Walk circumspectly. Our word "circumspect," from the Latin circumspicio, signifies to look round about on all hands; to be every way watchful, wary, and cautious, in order to avoid danger, discern enemies before they come too nigh, and secure a man's interest by every possible and lawful means. But the original word signifies "correctly, accurately, consistently, or perfectly." You who have received the truth, be careful of your conduct; walk by the rule which God has given you. Do this as well in little as in great matters. Exemplify your principles, which are holy and good, by a corresponding conduct; do not only profess, but live, the gospel. Not as fools, but as wise. The heathens affected to be called "wise men." The apostle here takes the term sophos, and applies it to the Christian; and, instead of it, gives the empty Gentile philosopher the title of fool.

16. Redeeming the time. Buying up those moments which others seem to throw away; steadily improving every present moment, that you may in some measure regain the time you have lost. Let time be your chief commodity; deal in that alone; buy it all up, and use every portion of it yourselves. Time is that on which eternity depends; in time you are to get a preparation for the kingdom of God. If you get not this in time, your ruin is inevitable; therefore buy up the time.

Because the days are evil. The present times are dangerous; they are full of trouble and temptations, and only the watchful and diligent have any reason to expect that they shall keep their garments unspotted.

17. Wherefore be ye not unwise. "Do not become madmen." Here is a most evident allusion to the orgies of Bacchus, in which his votaries acted like madmen: running about, tossing their heads from shoulder to shoulder, appearing to be in every sense completely frantic. But understanding what the will of the Lord is. It is the will of God that you should be sober, chaste, holy, and pure. Get a thorough understanding of this; acquaint yourselves with God's will, that you may know how to glorify Him.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The apostle warns against some other particular sins, and urges some other duties. 1. He warns against the sin of drunkenness: And be not drunk with wine, v. 18. The apostle adds, wherein is excess. Drunkenness is a sin that seldom goes alone, but often involves men in other instances of guilt: it is a great hindrance to the spiritual life. 2. Instead of being filled with wine, he exhorts them to be filled with the Spirit. Those who are full of drink are not likely to be full of the Spirit. Men should labour for a plentiful measure of the graces of the Spirit, that would fill their souls with great joy, and courage, which things sensual men expect their wine should inspire them with. We ought not to be satisfied with a little of the Spirit, but to be filled with the Spirit. Now by this means we shall come to understand what the will of the Lord is.

The apostle exhorts, 3. To sing unto the Lord, v. 19. Drunkards are wont to sing obscene and profane songs. The joy of Christians should express itself in songs of praise to their God. In these they should speak to themselves in their assemblies. Though Christianity is an enemy to profane mirth, yet it encourages joy and gladness. God's people have reason to rejoice, and to sing for joy. They are to sing and to make melody in their hearts; not only with their voices, but with inward affection, and then it will be done to the Lord.

4 Thanksgiving is another duty, v. 20. We should be always giving thanks; and we should give thanks for all things. It is our duty in everything to give thanks unto God and the Father.

Verses 21–33

The discharge of relative duties. As a general foundation for these duties, he lays down that rule v. 21. There is a mutual submission that Christians owe one to another. In the fear of God, for his sake that hereby we may give proof that we truly fear him Where there is this mutual submission, the duties of all relations will be the better performed.

I. The duty prescribed to wives is submission to their husbands in the Lord (v. 22).

The reason of this submission from wives: For the husband is the head of the wife, v. 23. God has given the man the pre-eminence and a right to direct and govern by creation. Generally, too, the man has (what he ought to have) a superiority in wisdom and knowledge. He is therefore the head, even as Christ is the head of the church, and he is the Saviour of the body. Christ's authority is exercised over the church for the saving of her from evil, and the supplying of her with everything good for her. In like manner should the husband be employed for the protection and comfort of his spouse.

mately, is our "sanctification" (I Thess. 4:3); and that "in every thing," meantime, we should "give thanks" (I Thess. 5:18; cf. above, vs. 10). 18. excess—worthless, ruinous, reckless prodigality. wherein—not in the wine itself when used aright (I Tim. 5: 23), but in the "excess" as to it. but be filled with the Spirit—The effect in inspiration was that the person was "filled" with an ecstatic exhilaration, like that caused by wine; hence the two are here connected (cf. Acts 2:13-18). Hence arose the abstinence from wine of many of the prophets, e.g., John Baptist, viz., in order to keep distinct before the world the ecstasy caused by the Spirit, from that caused by wine. So also in ordinary Christians the Spirit dwells not in the mind that seeks the disturbing influences of excitement, but in the well-balanced prayerful mind. Such a one expresses his joy, not in drunken or worldly songs, but in Christian hymns of thankfulness. 19. (Col. 3:16.) to yourselves—"to one another." Hence soon arose the antiphonal or responsive chanting of which PLINY writes to Trajan: "They are wont on a fixed day to meet before daylight [to avoid persecution] and to recite a hymn among themselves by turns, to Christ, as if being God." The Spirit gives true eloquence; wine, a spurious eloquence. psalms—generally accompanied by an instrument. hymns—in direct praise to God (cf. Acts 16:25; I Cor. 14: 26; Jas. 5:13). songs—the general term for lyric pieces; "spiritual" is added to mark their being here restricted to sacred subjects, though not merely to direct praises of God, but also containing exhortations, prophecies, etc. Contrast the drunken "songs," Amos 8:10. making melody—Greek, "playing and singing with an instrument." in your heart—not merely with the tongue; but the serious feeling of the heart accompanying the singing of the lips (cf. I Cor. 14:15; Ps. 47:7). The contrast is between the heathen and the Christian practice, "Let your songs be not the drinking songs of heathen feasts, but psalms and hymns; and their accompaniment, not the music of the lyre, but the melody of the heart" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. to the Lord—See Pliny's letter quoted above: "To Christ as God." 20. thanks . . . for all things—even for adversities; also for blessings, unknown as well as known (Col. 3:17; I Thess. 5:18). unto God and the Father—the Fountain of every blessing in Creation, Providence, Election, and Redemption. Lord Jesus Christ—by whom all things, even distresses, become ours (Rom. 8:35, 37; I Cor. 3:20-23). 21. (Phil. 2:3; I Peter 5:5.) Here he passes from our relations to God, to those which concern our fellow men. in the fear of God—All the oldest MSS. and authorities read, "in the fear of CHRIST." The believer passes from under the bondage of the law as a letter, to be "the servant of Christ" (I Cor. 7: 22), which, through the instinct of love to Him, is really to be "the Lord's freeman"; for he is "under the law to Christ" (I Cor. 9:21; cf. John 8:36). Christ, not the Father (John 5:22), is to be our judge. Thus reverential fear of displeasing Him is the motive for discharging our relative duties as Christians (I Cor. 10:22; II Cor. 5:11; I Pet. 2:13). 22. (Ch. 6:9.) The Church's relation to Christ in His everlasting purpose, is the foundation and archetype of the three greatest of earthly relations, that of husband and wife (vss. 22-33), parent and child (ch. 6:1-4), master and servant (ch. 6:4-9). The oldest MSS. omit "submit yourselves"; supplying it from vs. 21, "Ye wives (submitting yourselves) unto your own husbands." "Your own" is an argument for submissiveness on the part of the wives; it is not a stranger, but your own husbands whom you are called on to submit unto (cf. Gen. 3:16; I Cor. 7:2; 14:34; Col. 3:18 Titus 2:5; I Pet. 3:1-7). Those subject ought to submit themselves, of whatever kind their superiors are. "Submit" is the term used of wives: "obey," of children (ch. 6:1), as there is a greater equality between wives and husbands, than between children and parents. as unto the Lord—Submissiveness is rendered by the wife to the husband under the eye of Christ, and so is rendered to Christ Himself. The husband stands to the wife in the relation that the Lord does to the Church, and this is to be the ground of her submission: though that submission is inferior in kind and degree to that which she owes Christ (vs. 24). 23. (I Cor. 11:3.) even as—Greek, "as also." and he is—The oldest MSS. read, "Himself (being) Saviour. . . ." omitting "and," and "is." In Christ's case, the Headship is united with, nay gained by, His having SAVED the body in the process of redemption; so that (Paul implies) I am not alleging Christ's Headship as one entirely identical with that other, for He has a claim to it, and office in it, peculiar to Himself [ALFORD]. The husband is not saviour of

18. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess. This is a further allusion to the Bacchanalian mysteries; in them his votaries got drunk, and ran into all manner of excesses. Plato, though he forbade drunkenness in general, yet allowed that the people should get drunk in the solemnities of that god who invented wine. The word which we translate excess means profligacy and debauchery of every kind; such as are the general concomitants of drunkenness, and especially among the votaries of Bacchus in Greece and Italy. But be filled with the Spirit. The heathen priests pretended to be filled with the influence of the god they worshipped, and it was in these circumstances that they gave out their oracles. The apostle exhorts the Ephesians not to resemble these, but, instead of being filled with wine, to be filled with the Spirit of God; in consequence of which, instead of those discoveries of the divine will to which in their drunken worship the votaries of Bacchus pretended, they should be wise indeed, and should understand what the will of the Lord is.

19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms. We can scarcely say what is the exact difference between these three expressions. Psalms may probably mean those of David. Hymns. Extemporaneous effusions in praise of God, uttered under the influence of the divine Spirit, or a sense of His especial goodness. Songs. "Odes"; premeditated and regular poetic compositions. But in whatever form they were composed, we learn that they were all spiritual, tending to magnify God and edify men. Singing and making melody in your heart. The heart always going with the lips. It is a shocking profanation of divine worship to draw nigh to God with the lips while the heart is far from Him. It is too often the case that in public worship men are carried off from the sense of the words by the sounds that are put to them. And how few choirs of singers are there in the universe whose hearts ever accompany them in what they call singing the praises of God!

20. Giving thanks always. God is continually loading you with His benefits. You deserve nothing of His kindness; therefore give Him thanks for His unmerited bounties. God and the Father. That is, God, who is your Father, and the Father of mercies. In the name of our Lord Jesus. He is the only Mediator, and through Him alone can you approach to God.

21. Submitting yourselves one to another. Let no man be so tenacious of his own will or his opinion in matters indifferent as to disturb the peace of the church; in all such matters give way to each other, and let love rule. In the fear of God. Instead of in the fear of God, "in the fear of Christ" is the reading of the best MSS.

22. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands. As the Lord, viz., Christ, is the Head or Governor of the Church, and the Head of the man, so is the man the head or governor of the woman. The husband should not be a tyrant, and the wife should not be the governor.

As unto the Lord. The word "Church" seems to be necessarily understood here; that is, Act under the authority of your husbands, as the Church acts under the authority of Christ.

23. For the husband is the head of the wife. This is the reason which the apostle gives for his injunctions. He is the saviour of the body. As Christ exercises authority over the Church so as to save and protect it, so let the husband exercise authority over his wife by protecting, comforting, and providing her with every necessary and comfort of life, according to his power.

MATTHEW HENRY

Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ (v. 24), with cheerfulness, with fidelity, with humility, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything.

II. The duty of husbands is to love their wives (v. 25); for without this they would abuse their superiority, it being a special and peculiar affection that is required in her behalf. The love of Christ to the church is proposed as an example of this, which love of his is a constant affection, and that notwithstanding the imperfections and failures that she is guilty of. The greatness of his love to the church appeared in his giving himself unto the death for it. The love which God requires from the husband in behalf of his wife will make amends for the subjection which he demands from her to her husband; and the prescribed subjection of the wife will be an abundant return for that love of the husband which God has made her due.

The reason why he gave himself for it: That he might sanctify and cleanse it, with the washing of water by the word (v. 26).

That he might present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot, nor wrinkle, nor any such thing, holy and without blemish, free from the least remains of sin. The church in general, and particular believers, will not be without spot or wrinkle till they come to glory.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

the wife, in which particular Christ excels; hence, "But" (vs. 24) follows [BENGEL]. 24. Therefore—Translate, as Greek, "But," or "Nevertheless," i.e., though there be the difference of headships mentioned in vs. 23, nevertheless, thus far they are one, viz., in the subjection or submission (the same Greek stands for "is subject," as for "submit," vss. 21, 22) of the Church to Christ, being the prototype of that of the wife to the husband. their own—not in most of the oldest MSS., and not needed by the argument. in every thing—appertaining to a husband's legitimate authority; "in the Lord" (Col. 3:18); everything not contrary to God. 25. "Thou hast seen the measure of obedience; now hear also the measure of love. Do you wish your wife to obey you, as the Church is to obey Christ? Then have a solicitude for her as Christ had for the Church [vs. 23, 'Himself the Saviour of the body']; and if it be necessary to give thy life for her, or to be cut in ten thousand pieces, or to endure any other suffering whatever, do not refuse it; and if you suffer thus, not even so do you do what Christ has done; for you indeed do so being already united to her, but He did so for one that treated Him with aversion and hatred. As, therefore, He brought to His feet one that so treated Him, and that even wantonly spurned Him, by much tenderness of regard, not by threats, insults, and terror: so also do you act towards your wife, and though you see her disdainful and wantonly wayward, you will be able to bring her to your feet by much thoughtfulness for her, by love, by kindness. For no bound is more sovereign in binding than such bonds, especially in the case of husband and wife. For one may constrain a servant by fear, though not even he is so to be bound to you; for he may readily run away. But the companion of your life, the mother of your children, the basis of all your joy, you ought to bind to you, not by fear and threats, but by love and attachment" [CHRYSOSTOM]. gave himself—Greek, "gave Himself up." for it—Translate, "for her." The relation of the Church to Christ is the ground of Christianity's having raised woman to her due place in the social scale, from which she was, and is, excluded in heathen lands. 26. sanctify—i.e., consecrate her to God. Cf. John 17:19, meaning, "I devote Myself as a holy sacrifice, that My disciples also may be devoted or consecrated as holy in (through) the truth" [NEANDER] (Heb. 2:11; 10:10, Note; 13:12). and cleanse—rather, as Greek, "cleansing," without the "and." with the washing of water—rather as Greek, "with," or "by the laver of the water," viz., the baptismal water. So it ought to be translated in Titus 3:5, the only other passage in the New Testament where it occurs. As the bride passed through a purifying bath before marriage, so the Church (cf. Rev. 21:2). He speaks of baptism according to its high ideal and design, as if the inward grace accompanied the outward rite; hence he asserts of outward baptism whatever is involved in a believing appropriation of the divine truths it symbolizes, and says that Christ, by baptism, has purified the Church [NEANDER] (I Pet. 3:21). by the word—Greek, "IN the word." To be joined with "cleansing it," or "her." The "word of faith" (Rom. 10:8, 9, 17), of which confession is made in baptism, and which carries the real cleansing (John 15:3; 17:17) and regenerating power (I Pet. 1:23; 3:21) [ALFORD]. So AUGUSTINE, Tract 80, in John, "Take away the word, and what is the water save water? Add the word to the element, and it becomes a sacrament, being itself as it were the visible word." The regenerating efficacy of baptism is conveyed in, and by, the divine word alone. 27. he—The oldest MSS. and authorities read, "That He might Himself present unto Himself the Church glorious," viz., as a bride (II Cor. 11:2). Holiness and glory are inseparable. "Cleansing" is the necessary preliminary to both. Holiness is glory internal; glory is holiness shining forth outwardly. The laver of baptism is the vehicle, but the word is the nobler and true instrument of the cleansing [BENGEL]. It is Christ that prepares the Church with the necessary ornaments of grace, for presentation to Himself, as the Bridegroom at His coming again (Matt. 25:1, etc.; Rev. 19:7; 21:2). not having spot—(Song of Sol. 4:7). The visible Church now contains clean and unclean together, like Noah's ark; like the wedding room which contained some that had, and others that had not, the wedding garment (Matt. 22:10-14; cf. II Tim. 2:20); or as the good and bad fish are taken in the same net because it cannot discern the bad from the good, the fishermen being unable to know what kind of fish the nets have taken under the waves. Still the Church is termed "holy" in the creed, in reference to her ideal and ultimate destination. When the Bridegroom comes, the bride

ADAM CLARKE

24. In every thing. That is, every lawful thing; for it is not intimated that they should obey their husbands in anything criminal, or in anything detrimental to the interests of their souls. The husband may be profligate, and may wish his wife to become such also; he may be an enemy to true religion, and use his authority to prevent his wife from those means of grace which she finds salutary to her soul. In none of these things should she obey him.

25. Husbands, love your wives. Here is a grand rule according to which every husband is called to act: "Love your wife as Christ loved the Church." But how did Christ love the Church? He gave himself for it—He laid down His life for it. So then husbands should, if necessary, lay down their lives for their wives. And there is more implied in the words than mere protection and support; for, as Christ gave himself for the Church to save it, so husbands should by all means in their power labor to promote the salvation of their wives and their constant edification in righteousness. Thus we find that the authority of the man over the woman is founded on his love to her, and this love must be such as to lead him to risk his life for her. As the care of the family devolves on the wife, and the children must owe the chief direction of their minds and formation of their manners to the mother, she has need of all the assistance and support which her husband can give her; and if she performs her duty well, she deserves the utmost of his love and affection.

26. That he might sanctify and cleanse it. The Church is represented as the spouse of Christ, as the woman is the spouse of the man; and to prepare this Church for himself He washes, cleanses, and sanctifies it. There is certainly an allusion here to the ancient method of purifying women, who were appointed to be consorts to kings. Twelve months, it appears, were in some instances spent in this purification: "Six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women." See the case of Esther, chap. ii. 12; see also Ps. xlv. 13-14; Ezek. xvi. 7-14. With the washing of water. Baptism, accompanied by the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit.

By the word. The "doctrine" of Christ crucified, through which baptism is administered, sin cancelled, and the soul purified from all unrighteousness, the death of Christ giving efficacy to all.

27. That he might present it to himself. It was usual to bring the royal bride to the king in the most sumptuous apparel; and is there not here an allusion to Ps. xlv. 13-14: "The king's daughter is all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold. She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework"? This presentation here spoken of by the apostle will take place on the last day. A glorious church. Every way splendid and honorable, because pure and holy. Not having spot. No "blemish" on the face, no spots upon the garment, the heart and life both holy. Wrinkle. No mark of decay. The word is commonly applied to wrinkles on the face, indicative of sickness or decrepitude. Holy and without blemish. In every sense holy, pure, and perfect. Now it was for this purpose that Christ gave himself for the Church; and for this purpose He continues the different ordinances which He has appointed; and particularly the preaching of the Word—the doctrine of reconciliation through faith in His blood. And it is in this life that all this purification is to take place; for none shall be presented at the day of judgment to Him who has not here been sanctified, cleansed, washed, made glorious, having neither spot, wrinkle, blemish, nor any such thing.

MATTHEW HENRY

Those, and those only, who are sanctified now, will be glorified hereafter.—So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies, &c., v. 28. The wife being made one with her husband this is an argument why he should love her with as ardent an affection as that with which he loves himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, v. 29—he nourishes and cherishes it: even as the Lord the church. For we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones, v. 30.

ALBERT BARNES:

"Of his flesh, and of his bones." There is an allusion here evidently to the language which Adam used respecting Eve. "This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh" (Gen. 2:23). It is language which is employed to denote the closeness of the marriage relation and which Paul applies to the connection between Christ and his people. Of course, it cannot be understood literally. It is not true literally that our bones are a part of the bones of Christ, or our flesh of his flesh; nor should language ever be used that would imply a miraculous union. It is not a physical union, but a union of attachment, of feeling, of love. If we avoid the notion of a physical union, however, it is scarcely possible to use too strong language in describing the union of believers with the Lord Jesus. The Scriptures make use of language which is stronger than that employed to describe any other connection; and there is no union of affection so powerful as that which binds the Christian to the Savior. So strong is it that he is willing for it to forsake father, mother, and home; to leave his country and to abandon his possessions; to go to distant lands and dwell among barbarians to make the Redeemer known; or to go to the cross or the stake from simple love to the Savior. Account for it as men may, there has been manifested on earth nowhere else so strong an attachment as that which binds the Christian to the cross. It is stronger love than that which a man has for his own flesh and bones; for it makes him willing that his flesh should be consumed by fire, or his bones broken on the wheel rather than deny him. Can the infidel account for this strength of attachment on any other principle than that it has a divine origin?—Popular Commentary

For this cause (because they are one, as Christ and his church are one) shall a man leave his father and mother. This relation is to be preferred to all others, there being a nearer union between these two than between any others.

—And they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery, v. 32. Those words have also a hidden mystical sense in them, relating to the union between Christ and his church. I speak concerning Christ and the church.

shall be presented to Him wholly without spot, the evil being cut off from the body for ever (Matt. 13: 47-50). Not that there are two churches, one with bad and good intermingled, another in which there are good alone; but one and the same Church in relation to different times, now with good and evil together, hereafter with good alone [PEARSON]. 28. Translate, "So ought husbands also (thus the oldest MSS. read) to love their own (cf. Note, vs. 22) wives as their own bodies." "He that loveth his own wife . . ." (vs. 28). So there is the same love and the same union of body between Christ and the Church (vss. 30, 32). 29. For—Supply, and we all love ourselves: "For no man. . . ." his own flesh—(V. 31, end). nourisheth—Greek, "nourisheth it up," viz., to maturity. "Nourisheth," refers to food and internal sustenance; "cherisheth," to clothing and external fostering. even as—Translate, "even as also." the Lord—The oldest MSS. read, "Christ." Exodus 21:10 prescribes three duties to the husband. The two former (food and raiment) are here alluded to in a spiritual sense, by "nourisheth and cherisheth"; the third "duty of marriage" is not added in consonance with the holy propriety of Scripture language: its antitype is, "know the Lord" (Hos. 2:19, 20) [BENGEL]. 30. For—Greek, "Because" (I Cor. 6:15). Christ nourisheth and cherisheth the Church as being of one flesh with Him. Translate, "Because we are members of His body (His literal body), being OF His flesh and of His bones" [ALFORD] (Gen. 2:23, 24). The Greek expresses, "Being formed out of," or "of the substance of His flesh." Adam's deep sleep, wherein Eve was formed from out of his opened side, is an emblem of Christ's death, which was the birth of the Spouse, the Church. John 12:24; 19:34, 35, to which verses 25, 26, 27 allude, as implying atonement by His blood, and sanctification by the "water," answering to that which flowed from His side (cf. also John 7:38, 39; I Cor. 6:11). As Adam gave Eve a new name, Hebrew, Isha, "woman," formed from his own rib, Ish, "man," signifying her formation from him, so Christ, Revelation 2:17; 3: 12. Genesis 2:21, 23, 24 puts the bones first because the reference there is to the natural structure. But Paul is referring to the flesh of Christ. It is not our bones and flesh, but "we" that are spiritually propagated (in our soul and spirit now, and in the body hereafter, regenerated) from the manhood of Christ which has flesh and bones. We are members of His glorified body (John 6:53). The two oldest existing MSS., and Coptic or Memphitic version, omit "of His flesh and of His bones"; the words may have crept into the text through the Margin from Genesis 2:23, LXX. However, IRENÆUS, 294, and the old Latin and Vulgate versions, with some good old MSS., have them. 31. For this cause—The propagation of the Church from Christ, as that of Eve from Adam, is the foundation of the spiritual marriage. The natural marriage, wherein "a man leaves father and mother (the oldest MSS. omit 'his') and is joined unto his wife," is not the principal thing meant here, but the spiritual marriage represented by it, and on which it rests, whereby Christ left the Father's bosom to woo to Himself the Church out of a lost world: vs. 32 proves this: His earthly mother as such, also, He holds in secondary account as compared with His spiritual Bride (Luke 2:48, 49; 8:19-21; 11:27, 28). He shall again leave His Father's abode to consummate the union (Matt. 25:1-10; Rev. 19:7). they two shall be one flesh—So the Samaritan Pentateuch, LXX, etc., read (Gen. 2:24), instead of "they shall be one flesh." So Matthew 19:5. In natural marriage, husband and wife combine the elements of one perfect human being: the one being incomplete without the other. So Christ, as God-man, is pleased to make the Church, the body, a necessary adjunct to Himself, the Head. He is the archetype of the Church, from whom and according to whom, as the pattern, she is formed. He is her Head, as the husband is of the wife (Rom. 6:5; I Cor. 11:3; 15:45). Christ will never allow any power to sever Himself and His bride, indissolubly joined (Matt. 19:6; John 10:28, 29; 13:1). 32. Rather, "This mystery is a great one." This profound truth, beyond man's power of discovering, but now revealed, viz., of the spiritual union of Christ and the Church, represented by the marriage union, is a great one, of deep import. See Note, vs. 30. So "mystery" is used of a divine truth not to be discovered save by revelation of God (Rom. 11:25; I Cor. 15:51). The Vulgate wrongly translates, "This is a great sacrament," which is made the plea by the Romish Church (in spite of the blunder having been long ago exposed by their own commentators, CAJETAN and ESTIUS) for making marriage a sacrament; it is plain

ADAM CLARKE

28. As their own bodies. For the woman is, properly speaking, a part of the man; for God made man "male and female," and the woman was taken out of his side. Therefore is she flesh of his flesh and bone of his bone; and therefore he that loves his wife loves himself, for they two are one flesh. The apostle in all these verses refers to the creation and original state of the first human pair.

29. No man ever yet hated his own flesh. And this is a natural reason why he should love his wife, and nourish and cherish her.

30. We are members of his body. He has partaken of our nature as we have partaken of the nature of Adam. And as He is the Head of the Church and the Saviour of this body, so we, being members of the Church, are members of His mystical body. That is, we are united to Him by one Spirit in the closest intimacy, even similar to that which the members have with the body.

31. Shall be joined unto his wife. He shall be "glued" or "cemented" to her; and as a well-glued board will sooner break in the whole wood than in the glued joint, so death alone can part the husband and wife; and nothing but death should dissolve their affection.

32. This is a great mystery. "This mystery is great." By mystery we may understand a natural thing by which some spiritual matter is signified, which signification the Spirit of God alone can give. So the creation and union of Adam and Eve were intended, in the design of God, to point out the union of Christ and the Church, a union the most important that can be conceived; and therefore the apostle calls it a great mystery.

MATTHEW HENRY

A brief summary of the duty of husbands and wives, v. 33. "Nevertheless let everyone of you in particular so love his wife even as himself. And the wife see that she reverence her husband." Reverence consists of love and esteem. That the wife thus reverence her husband is the will of God and the law of the relation.

CHAPTER 6

I. The duty of children to their parents: to obey their parents (v. 1). That obedience which God demands from their children includes an inward reverence, as well as the outward expressions and acts. Obey in the Lord. "Obey your parents, especially in those things which relate to the Lord. Your parents teach you good manners, and therein you must obey them. They teach you what is for your health, and in this you must obey them: but the chief things in which you are to do it are the things pertaining to the Lord." In these things especially they must see that they be obedient. For this is right, there is a natural equity in it, God has enjoined it. It is the order of nature that parents command and children obey. The apostle quotes the law of the fifth commandment. Honour thy father and mother (v. 2), which is the first commandment with promise. The promise is, That it may be well with thee, &c., v. 3.

Outward prosperity and long life are blessings promised to those who keep this commandment. Obedient children are often rewarded with outward prosperity. Not indeed that it is always so; but ordinarily obedience is thus rewarded. The gospel has its temporal promises, as well as spiritual ones. We are allowed to have respect to the promised reward. This may be considered as a motive and encouragement to our obedience.

II. The duty of parents: And you fathers, v. 4. 1. "Do not provoke your children to wrath. Your children are pieces of yourselves, and therefore ought to be governed with great tenderness and love. When you caution them, when you counsel them, when you reprove them, do it in such a manner as not to provoke them to wrath, endeavouring to convince their judgments and to work upon their reason." 2. "Bring them up well, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Give them a good education." It is the great duty of parents to be careful in the education of their children. Not only bring them up as men, but as Christians, in the admonition of the Lord. Let them have a religious education.

III. The duty of servants. This also is summed up in one word, obedience. These servants were generally slaves. Civil servitude is not inconsistent with Christian liberty. Those may be the Lord's freemen who are slaves to men. "Your masters according to the flesh (v. 5), who have the command of your bodies, but not of your souls and consciences." 1. That they obey with fear and trembling. They are to reverence those who are over them. 2. That they be sincere in their obedience: In singleness of heart: serving them with faithfulness. 3. They should have an eye to Jesus Christ in all the service that they perform to their masters (v. 5–7), doing service as to the Lord, and not to men. Service done to their earthly masters, with an eye to him, becomes acceptable service to him also. 4. They must not serve their masters with eye-service (v. 6)—that is, only when their master's eye is upon them. Their Master in heaven beholds them: and therefore they must not act as men-pleasers. A steady regard to the Lord Jesus Christ will make men faithful and sincere in every station of life.

not marriage in general, but that of Christ and the Church, is what is pronounced to be a "great mystery," as the words following prove, "I [emphatic] say it in regard to Christ and to the Church" (so the Greek is best translated). "I, while I quote these words out of Scripture, use them in a higher sense" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. 33. Nevertheless—not to pursue further the mystical meaning of marriage. Translate, as Greek, "Do ye also (as Christ does) severally each one so love. . . ." The words, "severally each one," refer to them in their individual capacity, contrasted with the previous collective view of the members of the Church as the bride of Christ.

CHAPTER 6

Vss. 1-24. MUTUAL DUTIES OF PARENTS AND CHILDREN: MASTERS AND SERVANTS: OUR LIFE A WARFARE: THE SPIRITUAL ARMOUR NEEDED AGAINST SPIRITUAL FOES. CONCLUSION. 1. obey—stronger than the expression as to wives, "submitting," or "being subject" (ch. 5:21). Obedience is more unreasoning and implicit; submission is the willing subjection of an inferior in point of order to one who has a right to command. in the Lord—Both parents and children being Christians "in the Lord," expresses the element in which the obedience is to take place, and the motive to obedience. In Colossians 3:20, it is, "Children, obey your parents in all things." This clause, "in the Lord," would suggest the due limitation of the obedience required (Acts 5:29; cf. on the other hand, the abuse, Mark 7:11-13). right—Even by natural law we should render obedience to them from whom we have derived life. 2. Here the authority of revealed law is added to that of natural law. which is . . . promise—The "promise" is not made the main motive to obedience, but an incidental one. The main motive is, because it is God's will (Deut. 5:16, "Honor thy father and mother, as the Lord thy God hath COMMANDED thee"); and that it is so peculiarly, is shown by His accompanying it "with a promise." first—in the decalogue with a special promise. The promise in the second commandment is a general one. Their duty is more expressly prescribed to children than to parents; for love descends rather than ascends [BENGEL]. This verse proves the law in the Old Testament is not abolished. 3. long on the earth—In Exodus 20:12, "long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," which Paul adapts to Gospel times, by taking away the local and limited reference peculiar to the Jews in Canaan. The godly are equally blessed in every land, as the Jews were in the land which God gave them. This promise is always fulfilled, either literally, or by the substitution of a higher blessing, viz., one spiritual and eternal (Job 5:26; Prov. 10:27). The substance and essence of the law are eternally in force: its accidents alone (applying to Israel of old) are abolished (Rom. 6:15). 4. fathers—including mothers; the fathers are specified as being the fountains of domestic authority. Fathers are more prone to passion in relation to their children than mothers, whose fault is rather over-indulgence. provoke not—irritate not, by vexatious commands, unreasonable blame, and uncertain temper [ALFORD]. Colossians 3:21, "lest they be discouraged." nurture—Greek, "discipline," viz., training by chastening in act where needed (Job 5:17; Heb. 12:7). admonition—training by words (Deut. 6:7; Prov. 22:6, Margin, "catechise"), whether of encouragement, or remonstrance, or reproof, according as is required [TRENCH]. Contrast I Samuel 3:13, Margin. of the Lord—such as the Lord approves, and by His Spirit dictates. 5. Servants—lit., "slaves." masters according to the flesh—in contrast to your true and heavenly Master (vs. 4). A consolatory hint that the mastership to which they were subject, was but for a time [CHRYSOSTOM]; and that their real liberty was still their own (I Cor. 7:22). fear and trembling—not slavish terror, but (I Cor. 2:3, Note; II Cor. 7:15) an anxious eagerness to do your duty, and a fear of displeasing, as great as is produced in the ordinary slave by "threatenings" (vs. 9). singleness—without double-mindedness, or "eyeservice" (vs. 6), which seeks to please outwardly, without the sincere desire to make the master's interest at all times the first consideration (I Chron. 29:17; Matt. 6:22, 23; Luke 11:34). "Simplicity." 6. (Col. 3:22.) Seeking to please their masters only so long as these have their eyes on them: as Gehazi was a very different man in his master's presence from what he was in his absence (II Kings 5). men-pleasers—not Christ-pleasers (cf. Gal. 1:10; I Thess. 2:4). doing the

ADAM CLARKE

33. Nevertheless. "Moreover," or "therefore," on the consideration of God's design in the institution of marriage, let every one of you . . . love his wife as himself, because she is both naturally and by a divine ordinance a part of himself. That she reverence her husband. Let the wife ever consider the husband as her head; and this he is, not only by nature, but also by the ordinance of God. These are very important matters, and on them the apostle lays great stress.

1. Children, obey your parents. This is a duty with which God will never dispense; He commands it, and one might think that gratitude, from a sense of the highest obligations, would most strongly enforce the command. In the Lord. This clause is wanting in several reputable MSS. and in some versions. In the Lord may mean on account of the commandment of the Lord, or as far as the parents' commands are according to the will and word of God. For surely no child is called to obey any parent if he give unreasonable or unscriptural commands.

4. Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath. Avoid all severity; this will hurt your own souls, and do them no good; on the contrary, if punished with severity or cruelty, they will be only hardened and made desperate in their sins. Cruel parents generally have bad children. He who corrects his children according to God and reason will feel every blow on his own heart more sensibly than his child feels it on his body. Parents are called to correct, not to punish, their children. Those who punish them do it from a principle of revenge; those who correct them do it from a principle of affectionate concern. Bring them up. Literally, "Nourish them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord." The mind is to be nourished with wholesome discipline and instruction, as the body is with proper food. "Discipline" may refer to all that knowledge which is proper for children, including elementary principles and rules for behavior. "Instruction" may imply whatever is necessary to form the mind; to touch, regulate, and purify the passions; and necessarily includes the whole of religion. Both these should be administered in the Lord—according to His will and Word, and in reference to His eternal glory.

5. Servants, be obedient. Though doulos frequently signifies a "slave" or "bondman," yet it often implies a servant in general, or anyone bound to another, either for a limited time or for life. Even a slave, if a Christian, was bound to serve him faithfully by whose money he was bought, howsoever illegal that traffic may be considered. According to the flesh. Your masters in secular things; for they have no authority over your religion nor over your souls. With fear and trembling. Because the law gives them a power to punish you for every act of disobedience. In singleness of your heart. Not merely through fear of punishment, but from a principle of uprightness, serving them as you would serve Christ.

6. Not with eyeservice. Not merely in their presence, when their eye is upon you, as unfaithful and hypocritical servants do, without consulting conscience in any part of their work.

5. What they do they must do cheerfully: Doing the will of God from the heart, serving their masters as God wills they should. This is doing it with goodwill (v. 7). Service, performed with conscience, and from a regard to God, though it be to unrighteous masters, will be accounted by Christ as service done to himself.

6. Let faithful servants trust God for their wages, while they do their duty in his fear: Knowing that whatsoever good thing (v. 8)—the same shall he receive of the Lord. Though his master on earth should neglect or abuse him, instead of rewarding him, he shall certainly be rewarded by the Lord Christ, whether he be bond or free. Christ regards not these differences of men at present; nor will he in the great and final judgment.

IV. The duty of masters: And you masters, do the same things unto them (v. 9). Masters are under as strict obligations to discharge their duty to their servants as servants are to be obedient and dutiful to them. "Forbearing threatening. Be not tyrannical and imperious over them, knowing that your Master also is in heaven; you and they are but fellow-servants in respect of Christ. You are therefore to show favour to others, as ever you expect to find favour with him; and you will never be a match for him, though you may be too hard for your servants." Neither is there respect of persons with him. He will call masters and servants to an impartial account for their conduct one to another. If both masters and servants would consider their relation to God and the account they must shortly give to him, they would be more careful of their duty to each other.

Is not our life a warfare? It is so; for we struggle with the common calamities of human life. Is not our religion much more a warfare? It is so; for we struggle with the opposition of the powers of darkness. "Finally, my brethren (v. 10), it yet remains that you apply yourselves to your work and duty as Christian soldiers."

I. They must see that they be stout-hearted. Be strong in the Lord, &c. Those who have so many battles to fight, and who, in their way to heaven, must dispute every pass, with dint of sword, have need of a great deal of courage. Be strong therefore. Let a soldier be ever so well armed without, if he have not within a good heart, his armour will stand him in little stead. Spiritual strength and courage are very necessary for our spiritual warfare. We have no sufficient strength of our own. All our sufficiency is of God. In his strength we must go forth and go on. We must fetch in grace and help from heaven to enable us to do that which of ourselves we cannot do in our Christian work and warfare.

II. They must be well armed: "Put on the whole armour of God (v. 11). Get and exercise all the Christian graces, the whole armour, that no part be naked and exposed to the enemy." Those who would have true grace must aim at all grace, the whole armour. We have no armour of our own that will be armour of proof in a trying time. Nothing will stand us in stead but the armour of God. This armour is prepared for us, but we must put it on.

The Christian should be completely armed that he may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil—that he may be able to hold out, and to overcome.

1. What our danger is, and what need we have to put on this whole armour. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, &c., v. 12. The combat is not against ordinary human enemies, not barely against men compounded of flesh and blood. (1) We have to do with an enemy who uses wiles and stratagems, as v. 11. He has a thousand ways of beguiling unstable souls.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

will of God—the unseen but ever present Master: the best guarantee for your serving faithfully your earthly master alike when present and when absent. from the heart—lit., soul (Ps. 111:1; Rom. 13:5). 7. good will—expressing his feeling towards his master; as "doing the will of God from the heart" expresses the source of that feeling (Col. 3:23). "Good will" is stated by XENOPHON (Economics) to be the principal virtue of a slave towards his master: a real regard to his master's interest as if his own, a good will which not even a master's severity can extinguish. 8. any man doeth—Greek, "any man shall have done," i.e., shall be found at the Lord's coming to have done. the same—in full payment, in heaven's currency. shall . . . receive—(II Cor. 5: 10; Col. 3:25; but all of grace, Luke 17:10). bond or free—(I Cor. 7:22; 12:13; Gal. 3:28; Col. 3:11). Christ does not regard such distinctions in His present dealings of grace, or in His future judgment. The slave that has acted faithfully for the Lord's sake to his master, though the latter may not repay his faithfulness, shall have the Lord for his Paymaster. So the freeman who has done good for the Lord's sake, though man may not pay him, has the Lord for his Debtor (Prov. 19:17). 9. the same things—Mutatis mutandis. Show the same regard to God's will, and to your servants' well-being, in your relation to them, as they ought to have in their relation to you. Love regulates the duties both of servants and masters, as one and the same light attempers various colors. Equality of nature and faith is superior to distinctions of rank [BENGEL]. Christianity makes all men brothers: cf. Leviticus 25:42, 43; Deuteronomy 15:12; Jeremiah 34:14 as to how the Hebrews were bound to treat their brethren in service; much more ought Christians to act with love. threatening—Greek, "the threatening" which masters commonly use. "Masters" in the Greek, is not so strong a term as "despots": it implies authority, but not absolute domination. your Master also—The oldest MSS. read, "the Master both of them and you": "their Master and yours." This more forcibly brings out the equality of slaves and masters in the sight of God. SENECA, Thyestes, 607, says, "Whatever an inferior dreads from you, this a superior Master threatens yourselves with: every authority here is under a higher above." As you treat your servants, so will He treat you. neither . . . respect of persons—He will not, in judging, acquit thee because thou art a master, or condemn him because he is a servant (Acts 10:34; Rom. 2:11; Gal. 2:6; Col. 3:25; I Pet. 1:17). Derived from Deuteronomy 10:17; II Chronicles 19:7. 10. my brethren—Some of the oldest MSS. omit these words. Some with Vulgate retain them. The phrase occurs nowhere else in the Epistle (see, however, vs. 23); if genuine, it is appropriate here in the close of the Epistle, where he is urging his fellow soldiers to the good fight in the Christian armor. Most of the oldest MSS. for "finally," read, "henceforward," or "from henceforth" (Gal. 6:17). be strong—Greek, "be strengthened." in the power of his might—Christ's might: as in ch. 1:19, it is the Father's might. 11. the whole armour—the armor of light (Rom. 13:12); on the right hand and left (II Cor. 6:7). The panoply offensive and defensive. An image readily suggested by the Roman armory, Paul being now in Rome. Repeated emphatically, vs. 13. In Romans 13:14 it is, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ"; in putting on Him, and the new man in Him, we put on "the whole armor of God." No opening at the head, the feet, the heart, the belly, the eye, the ear, or the tongue, is to be given to Satan. Believers have once for all overcome him; but on the ground of this fundamental victory gained over him, they are ever again to fight against and overcome him, even as they who once die with Christ have continually to mortify their members upon earth (Rom. 6:2-14; Col. 3:3, 5). of God—furnished by God; not our own, else it would not stand (Ps. 35:1-3). Spiritual, therefore, and mighty through God, not carnal (II Cor. 10:4). wiles—lit., "schemes sought out" for deceiving (cf. II Cor. 11:14). the devil—the ruling chief of the foes (vs. 12) organized into a kingdom of darkness (Matt. 12:26), opposed to the kingdom of light. 12. Greek, "For our wrestling ('the wrestling' in which we are engaged) is not against flesh . . . ." Flesh and blood foes are Satan's mere tools, the real foe lurking behind them is Satan himself, with whom our conflict is. "Wrestling" implies that it is a hand-to-hand and foot-to-foot struggle for the mastery: to wrestle successfully with Satan, we must wrestle with GOD in irresistible prayer like Jacob (Gen. 32:24-29; Hos. 12:4). Translate, "The principalities . . . the powers" (ch. 1:21; Note, 3:10; Col. 1:16). The same

ADAM CLARKE

Doing the will of God. Seeing that you are in the state of servitude, it is the will of God that you should act conscientiously in it.

7. With good will. With "cheerfulness"; do not take up your service as a cross or bear it as a burden; but take it as coming in the order of God's providence and a thing that is pleasing to Him.

8. Whatsoever good thing any man doeth. Though your masters should fail to give you the due reward of your fidelity and labor, yet, as you have done your work as unto the Lord, He will take care to give you the proper recompense. Whether he be bond. A "slave," bought with money. Or free. A person who has hired himself of his own free accord.

9. Ye masters, do the same things unto them. Act in the same affectionate, conscientious manner towards your slaves and servants as they do towards you. Forbearing threatening. If they should transgress at any time, lean more to the side of mercy than justice; and when you are obliged to punish, let it be as light and as moderate as possible; and let revenge have no part in the chastisement, for that is of the devil, and not of God. The words forbearing threatening signify to mitigate, relax, or not exact threatening; that is, the threatened punishment.

Knowing that your Master also is in heaven. You are their masters; God is yours. As you deal with them, so God will deal with you; for do not suppose, because their condition on earth is inferior to yours, that God considers them to be less worthy of His regard than you are. This is not so, for there is no respect of persons with Him.

10. Finally. Having laid before you your great and high calling and all the doctrines and precepts of the gospel, it is necessary that I should show you the enemies that will oppose you, and the strength which is requisite to enable you to repel them. Be strong in the Lord. You must have strength, and strength of a spiritual kind, and such strength too as the Lord himself can furnish; and you must have this strength through an indwelling God, the power of His might working in you.

11. Put on the whole armour of God. The apostle considers every Christian as having a warfare to maintain against numerous, powerful, and subtle foes; and that therefore they would need much strength, much courage, complete armor, and skill to use it. The "panoply" which is mentioned here refers to the armor of the heavy troops among the Greeks; those who were to sustain the rudest attacks, who were to sap the foundations of walls, storm cities. Their ordinary armor was the shield, the helmet, the sword, and the greaves or brazen boots. To all these the apostle refers below.

The wiles of the devil. "The methods of the devil"; the different means, plans, schemes, and machinations which he uses to deceive, entrap, enslave, and ruin the souls of men.

12. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood. Our wrestling or contention is not with men like ourselves. Flesh and blood is a Hebraism for "men," or human beings. Against principalities. "Chief rulers"; beings of the first rank and order in their own kingdom. Powers. "Authorities," derived from and constituted by the above.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) He is a powerful enemy: Principalities, and powers, and rulers. They are numerous, they are vigorous, and rule in those heathen nations which are yet in darkness. Satan's is a kingdom of darkness; whereas Christ's is a kingdom of light.

(3) They are spiritual enemies: Spiritual wickedness in high places, or wicked spirits, as some translate it. Our danger is the greater from our enemies because they are unseen, and assault us ere we are aware of them. These enemies are said to be in high places, or in heavenly places, so the word is. Our enemies strive to prevent our ascent to heaven. They assault us in the things that belong to our souls. We have need of faith in our Christian warfare, because we have spiritual enemies to grapple with, as well as of faith in our Christian work, because we have spiritual strength to fetch in.

2. What our duty is: to put on the whole armour of God, and then to stand our ground, and withstand our enemies.

(1) We must withstand, v. 13. We must not yield to the devil's allurements and assaults, but oppose them. If he stand up against us, we must stand against him. To stand against Satan is to strive against sin. That you may be able to withstand in the evil day, in the day of temptation, or of any sore affliction.

(2) We must stand our ground: And, having done all, to stand. Resist him, and he will flee. If we give back, he will get ground. Our present business is to withstand the assaults of the devil, and to stand it out; and then our warfare will be accomplished, and we shall be finally victorious.

(3) We must stand armed. Here is a Christian in complete armour: and the armour is divine: Armour of God. The apostle specifies the particulars of this armour, both offensive and defensive. The military girdle or belt, the breast-plate, the greaves (or soldier's shoes), the shield, the helmet, and the sword. It is observable that, among them all, there is none for the back; if we turn our back upon the enemy, we lie exposed. [1] Truth is our girdle, v. 14. This is the strength of our loins; and it girds on all other pieces of our armour, and therefore is first mentioned. I know no religion without sincerity. [2] Righteousness must be our breast-plate. The breast-plate secures the vitals, shelters the heart. The righteousness of Christ implanted in us is our breast-plate to fortify the heart against the attacks which Satan makes against us.

[3] Resolution must be as the greaves to our legs: And their feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, v. 15. Shoes, or greaves of brass, were formerly part of the military armour to defend the feet against the gall-traps, and sharp sticks, which were wont to be laid to obstruct the marching of the enemy, those who fell upon them being unfit to march. The preparation of the gospel of peace signifies a resolved frame of heart which will enable us to walk with a steady pace in the way of religion.

grades of powers are specified in the case of the demons here, as in that of angels there (cf. Romans 8:38; I Cor. 15:24; Col. 2:15). The Ephesians had practiced sorcery (Acts 19:19), so that he appropriately treats of evil spirits in addressing them. The more clearly any book of Scripture, as this, treats of the economy of the kingdom of light, the more clearly does it set forth the kingdom of darkness. Hence, nowhere does the satanic kingdom come more clearly into view than in the Gospels which treat of Christ, the true Light. rulers of the darkness of this world—Greek, "age" or "course of the world." But the oldest MSS. omit "of world." Translate, "Against the world rulers of this (present) darkness" (ch. 2:2; 5:8; Luke 22:53; Col. 1:13). On Satan and his demons being "world rulers," cf. John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11; Luke 4:6; II Cor. 4:4; I John 5:19, Greek, "lieth in the wicked one." Though they be "world rulers," they are not the ruler of the universe; and their usurped rule of the world is soon to cease, when He shall "come whose right it is" (Ezek. 21:27). Two cases prove Satan not to be a mere subjective fancy: (1) Christ's temptation; (2) the entrance of demons into the swine (for these are incapable of such fancies). Satan tries to parody, or imitate in a perverted way, God's working (II Cor. 11:13, 14). So when God became incarnate, Satan, by his demons, took forcible possession of human bodies. Thus the demoniacally possessed were not peculiarly wicked, but miserable, and so fit subjects for Jesus' pity. Paul makes no mention of demoniacal possession, so that in the time he wrote, it seems to have ceased; it probably was restricted to the period of the Lord's incarnation, and of the foundation of His Church. spiritual wickedness—rather as Greek, "The spiritual hosts of wickedness." As three of the clauses describe the power, so this fourth, the wickedness of our spiritual foes (Matt. 12:45). in high places—Greek, "heavenly places": in ch. 2:2, "the air," where see the Note. The alteration of expression to "in heavenly places," is in order to mark the higher range of their powers than ours, they having been, up to the ascension (Rev. 12:5, 9, 10), dwellers "in the heavenly places" (Job 1:7), and being now in the regions of the air which are called the heavens. Moreover, pride and presumption are the sins in heavenly places to which they tempt especially, being those by which they themselves fell from heavenly places (Isa. 14:12-15). But believers have naught to fear, being "blessed with all spiritual blessings in the heavenly places" (ch. 1:3). 13. take . . . of God—not "make," God has done that: you have only to "take up" and put it on. The Ephesians were familiar with the idea of the gods giving armor to mythical heroes: thus Paul's allusion would be appropriate. the evil day—the day of Satan's special assaults (vss. 12, 16) in life and at the dying hour (cf. Rev. 3:10). We must have our armor always on, to be ready against the evil day which may come at any moment, the war being perpetual (Ps. 41:1, Margin). done all—rather, "accomplished all things," viz., necessary to the fight, and becoming a good soldier. 14. Stand—The repetition in vss. 11, 14, shows that standing, i.e., maintaining our ground, not yielding or fleeing, is the grand aim of the Christian soldier. Translate as Greek, "Having girt about your loins with truth," i.e., with truthfulness, sincerity, a good conscience (II Cor. 1:12; I Tim. 1:5, 18; 3:9). Truth is the band that girds up and keeps together the flowing robes, so as that the Christian soldier may be unencumbered for action. So the Passover was eaten with the loins girt, and the shoes on the feet (Exod. 12:11; cf. Isa. 5:27; Luke 12:35). Faithfulness (LXX, "truth") is the girdle of Messiah (Isa. 11:5): so truth of His followers. having on—Greek, "having put on." breastplate of righteousness—Isaiah 59:17, similarly of Messiah. "Righteousness" is here joined with "truth," as in ch. 5:9: righteousness in works, truth in words [ESTIUS] (I John 3:7). Christ's righteousness inwrought in us by the Spirit. "Faith and love," i.e., faith working righteousness by love, are "the breastplate" in I Thess. 5:8. 15. Translate, "Having shod your feet" (referring to the sandals, or to the military shoes then used). the preparation—rather, "the preparedness," or "readiness of," i.e., arising from the "Gospel" (Ps. 10:17). Preparedness to do and suffer all that God wills; readiness for march, as a Christian soldier.

ADAM CLARKE

Spiritual wickedness. "The spiritual things of wickedness" or "the spiritualities of wickedness"; highly refined and sublimed evil; disguised falsehood in the garb of truth; antinomianism in the guise of religion. The spiritual wickedness is supposed to be the angels which kept not their first estate; who fell from the heavenly places but are ever longing after and striving to regain them; and which have their station in the regions of the air.

13. Wherefore. Because you have such enemies to contend with, take unto you, assume, as provided and prepared for you, the whole armour of God; which armor if you put on and use, you shall be both invulnerable and immortal. The ancient heroes are fabled to have had armor sent to them by the gods. That ye may be able to withstand. That you may not only stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, but also discomfit all your spiritual foes; and continuing in your ranks, maintain your ground against them, never putting off your armor, but standing always ready, prepared to repel any new attack. And having done all, to stand. Rather, "And having conquered all, stand." This is a military phrase, and is repeatedly uesd in this sense by the best Greek writers. By evil day we may understand any time of trouble, affliction, and sore temptation.

14. Stand therefore. Prepare yourselves for combat, having your loins girt about with truth. He had told them before to take the whole armor of God, v. 13, and to put on this whole armor. Having got all the pieces of it together, and the defensive parts put on, they were then to gird them close to their bodies with the girdle; and instead of a fine ornamented belt, such as the ancient warriors used, they were to have truth. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the truth of God. Truth may be taken here for "sincerity"; for if a man be not conscious to himself that his heart is right before God, and that he makes no false pretenses to religion, in vain does he enter the spiritual lists. This alone can give him confidence. The breastplate of righteousness. The word righteousness, we have often had occasion to note, is a word of very extensive import. It signifies the principle of righteousness; it signifies the practice of righteousness, or living a holy life; it signifies God's method of justifying sinners; and it signifies justification itself. Here it may imply a consciousness of justification through the blood of the Cross; the principle of righteousness or true holiness implanted in the heart; and a holy life, a life regulated according to the testimonies of God. As the breastplate defends the heart and lungs, and all those vital functionaries that are contained in what is called the region of the thorax, so this righteousness, this life of God in the soul of man, defends everything on which the man's spiritual existence depends. While he possesses this principle and acts from it, his spiritual and eternal life is secure.

15. Your feet shod. The "greaves" were deemed of essential importance in the ancient armor; if the feet or legs are materially wounded, a man can neither stand to resist his foe, pursue him if vanquished, nor flee from him should he have the worst of the fight. That the apostle has obedience to the gospel in general in view, there can be no doubt. But he appears to have more than this, a readiness to publish the gospel; for "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" (Isa. lii. 7; Rom. x. 15) The preparation of the gospel. The word which we translate preparation is variously understood. Some think it means a habitual readiness in walking in the way prescribed by the gospel; others, that firmness and solidity which the gospel gives to them who conscientiously believe its doctrines; others, those virtues and graces which in the first planting of Christianity were indispensably necessary to those who published it. Should we take the word preparation in its common acceptation, it may imply that, by a conscientious belief of the gospel, receiving the salvation provided by its Author, and walking in the way of obedience which is pointed out by it, the soul

It is styled the gospel of peace because it brings all sorts of peace. This will certainly preserve you from many great temptations and persecutions, as did those shoes of brass the soldiers from those gall-traps.

[4] Faith must be our shield: Above all, taking the shield of faith, v. 16. This is more necessary than any of them. Faith is all in all to us in an hour of temptation. The breast-plate secures the vitals; but with the shield we turn every way. Faith is like a shield, a sort of universal defence. Our enemy the devil is here called the wicked one. He is wicked himself, and he endeavours to make us wicked. His temptations are called fiery darts, by way of allusion to the poisonous darts which were wont to inflame the parts which were wounded. Violent temptations, by which the soul is set on fire of hell, are the darts which Satan shoots at us. Faith is the shield with which we must quench these fiery darts, that they may not hit us, or at least that they may not hurt us.

[5] Salvation must be our helmet (v. 17); that is, hope, which has salvation for its object. He would tempt us to despair; but good hope keeps us trusting in God, and rejoicing in him.

[6] The word of God is the sword of the Spirit. It is called the sword of the Spirit, because he renders it efficacious and powerful. This, being hid in the heart, will preserve from sin.

[7] Prayer must buckle on all the other parts of our Christian armour, v. 18. We must join prayer with all these graces, and we must pray always. Not as though we were to do nothing else but pray, for there are other duties that are to be done in their place and season; but we should keep up constant times of prayer. We must pray upon all occasions. We must intermix ejaculatory prayers with other duties, and with common business. Though set and solemn prayer may sometimes be unseasonable, yet pious ejaculations can never be so.

gospel of peace—(cf. Luke 1:79; Rom. 10: 15). The "peace" within forms a beautiful contrast to the raging of the outward conflict (Isa. 26:3; Phil. 4:7).

16. Above all—rather, "Over all"; so as to cover all that has been put on before. Three integuments are specified, the breastplate, girdle, and shoes; two defenses, the helmet and shield; and two offensive weapons, the sword and the spear (prayer). ALFORD translates, "Besides all," as the Greek is translated, Luke 3:20. But if it meant this, it would have come last in the list (cf. Col. 3: 14). shield—the large oblong oval door-like shield of the Romans, four feet long by two and a half feet broad; not the small round buckler. ye shall be able—not merely "ye may." The shield of faith will certainly intercept, and so "quench, all the fiery darts" (an image from the ancient fire-darts, formed of cane, with tow and combustibles ignited on the head of the shaft, so as to set fire to woodwork, tents, etc.) of the wicked—rather "of the EVIL ONE." Faith conquers him (I Pet. 5:9), and his darts of temptation to wrath, lust, revenge, despair, etc. It overcomes the world (I John 5:4), and so the prince of the world (I John 5:18).

17. take—a different Greek word from that in vss. 13, 16; translate, therefore, "receive," "accept," viz., the helmet offered by the Lord, viz., "salvation" appropriated, as I Thessalonians 5:8, "Helmet, the hope of salvation"; not an uncertain hope, but one that brings with it no shame of disappointment (Rom. 5:5). It is subjoined to the shield of faith, as being its inseparable accompaniment (cf. Rom. 5:1, 5). The head of the soldier was among the principal parts to be defended, as on it the deadliest strokes might fall, and it is the head that commands the whole body. The head is the seat of the mind, which, when it has laid hold of the sure Gospel "hope" of eternal life, will not receive false doctrine, or give way to Satan's temptations to despair. God, by this hope, "lifts up the head" (Ps. 3:3; Luke 21:28). sword of the Spirit—i.e., furnished by the Spirit, who inspired the writers of the word of God (II Pet. 1:21). Again the Trinity is implied: the Spirit here; and Christ in "salvation" and God the Father, vs. 13 (cf. Heb. 4:12; Rev. 1: 16; 2:12). The two-edged sword, cutting both ways (Ps. 45:3, 5), striking some with conviction and conversion, and others with condemnation (Isa. 11:4; Rev. 19:15), is in the mouth of Christ (Isa. 49:2), in the hand of His saints (Ps. 149:6). Christ's use of this sword in the temptation is our pattern as to how we are to wield it against Satan (Matt. 4:4, 7, 10). There is no armor specified for the back, but only for the front of the body; implying that we must never turn our back to the foe (Luke 9:62); our only safety is in resisting ceaselessly (Matt. 4:11; Jas. 4: 7). 18. always—Greek, "in every season"; implying opportunity and exigency (Col. 4:2). Paul uses the very words of Jesus in Luke 21:36 (a Gospel which he quotes elsewhere, in undesigned consonance with the fact of Luke being his associate in travel (I Cor. 11:23, etc.; I Tim. 5:18). Cf. Luke 18:1; Romans 12:12; I Thessalonians 5:17. with all—i.e., every kind of. prayer—a sacred term for prayer in general.

is prepared for the kingdom of Heaven. The gospel is termed the gospel of peace because it establishes peace between God and man, and proclaims peace and goodwill to the universe. Contentions, strife, quarrels, and all wars being as alien from its nature and design as they are opposed to the nature of Him who is love and compassion to man.

16. Above all, "over all" the rest of the armor, taking the shield of faith. In the word thureos the apostle alludes to the great oblong shield, or scutum, which covers the whole body. And as faith is the grace by which all others are preserved and rendered active, so it is properly represented here under the notion of a shield, by which the whole body is covered and protected. Faith, in this place, must mean that evidence of things unseen which every genuine believer has, that God, for Christ's sake, has blotted out his sins, and by which he is enabled to call God his Father, and feel Him to be his Portion. It is such an appropriating faith as this which can quench any dart of the devil. The fiery darts of the wicked. Belos, "a dart," signifies any kind of missile weapon; everything that is projected to a distance by the hand, as a javelin or short spear; or by a bow, as an arrow; or a stone by a sling. The fiery darts of the wicked, or devil, are evil thoughts and strong injections, as they are termed, which in the unregenerate inflame the passions and excite the soul to acts of transgression. While the faith is strong in Christ it acts as a shield to quench these. He who walks so as to feel the witness of God's Spirit that he is His child has all evil thoughts in abhorrence; and though they pass through his mind, they never fix in his passions. They are caught on this shield, blunted, and extinguished.

17. Take the helmet of salvation. Or, as it is expressed, 1 Thess. v. 8, "And for an helmet, the hope of salvation." So the hope of conquering every adversary and surmounting every difficulty, through the blood of the Lamb, is as a helmet that protects the head; an impenetrable one, that the blow of the battle-axe cannot cleave. The sword of the Spirit. The sword of which Paul speaks is, as he explains it, the word of God; that is, the revelation which God has given of himself, or what we call the Holy Scriptures. This is called the sword of the Spirit because it comes from the Holy Spirit and receives its fulfilment in the soul through the operation of the Holy Spirit. An ability to quote this on proper occasions, and especially in times of temptation and trial, has a wonderful tendency to cut in pieces the snares of the adversary. In God's Word a genuine Christian may have unlimited confidence, and to every purpose to which it is applicable it may be brought with the greatest effect. The shield, faith, and the sword . . . the word of God—or faith in God's unchangeable Word—are the principal armor of the soul.

18. Praying always. The apostle does not put praying among the armor; had he done so he would have referred it, as he has done all the rest, to some of the Grecian armor; but as he does not do this, therefore we conclude that his account of the armor is ended, and that now, having equipped his spiritual soldier, he shows him the necessity of praying, that he may successfully resist those principalities, powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, and the spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places, with whom he has to contend. The "panoply," or whole armor of God, consists in (1) the girdle, (2) the breastplate, (3) the greaves, (4) the shield, (5) the helmet, and (6) the sword. He who had these was completely armed. And as it was the custom of the Grecian armies, before they engaged, to offer prayers to the gods for their success, the apostle shows that these spiritual warriors must depend on the Captain of their salvation, and pray with all prayer, i.e., incessantly, being always in the spirit of prayer, so that they should be ever ready for public, private, mental, or ejaculatory prayer; always depending on Him who can alone save and who alone can destroy. When the apostle exhorts Christians to pray with all prayer, we may at once see that he neither means spiritual nor formal prayer, in exclusion of the other. Praying refers to the state of the spirit as well as to

We must pray with all prayer and supplications, with all kinds of prayer. We must pray in the Spirit. We must do it by the grace of God's good Spirit. We must watch thereunto, endeavouring to keep our hearts in a praying frame, and taking all occasions for the duty. This we must do with all perseverance. We must continue in it as long as we live in the world. And we must pray with supplication, not for ourselves only, but for all saints. None are so much saints, and in so good a condition in this world, but they need our prayers, and they ought to have them.

Verses 19–24

I. He desires their prayers for him, v. 19. Having mentioned supplication for all saints, he puts himself into the number. We must pray for all saints, and particularly for God's faithful ministers. "That utterance may be given unto me; and that I may open my mouth boldly. To make known the mystery of the gospel." The whole gospel was a mystery, till made known by divine revelation. Paul had a great command of language; they called him Mercury, because he was the chief speaker (Acts xiv. 12), and yet he would have his friends ask of God the gift of utterance for him. He was a man of great courage, yet he would have them pray that God would give him boldness. He knew as well what to say as any man; yet he desires them to pray for him, that he may speak as he ought to speak. For the sake of the gospel he was an ambassador in bonds, v. 20. He was persecuted and imprisoned for preaching the gospel; though, notwithstanding, he continued in the embassy committed to him by Christ. The best ministers may receive advantage by the prayers of good Christians; and therefore should earnestly desire them.

II. He recommends Tychicus unto them, v. 21, 22. He sent him with this epistle, that he might acquaint them how he did, and what he did. It is desirable to good ministers both that their Christian friends should know their state and that they should be acquainted with the condition of their friends; for by this means they may the better help each other in their prayers.—And that he might comfort their hearts, by giving such an account of his sufferings, as might prevent their fainting at his tribulations and even minister matter of joy and thanksgiving unto them. Tychicus was a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord. He was very dear to Paul, which makes Paul's love to these Christian Ephesians the more observable, in that he should now part with so good and dear a friend for their sakes. But the faithful servants of Jesus Christ are wont to prefer the public good to their own personal interests.

III. He concludes with his good wishes and prayers for them, and not for them only, but for all the brethren, v. 23, 24. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith; faith and love including all the rest. It is the continuance and increase of these that he desires for them, in whom they were already begun. From God the Father, &c. The closing benediction is more extensive than the former; for in this he prays for all true believers at Ephesus, and everywhere else. Our love to Christ is not acceptable, unless it be in sincerity: indeed there is no such thing as love to Christ, whatever men may pretend, where there is not sincerity. Grace, that is, the favour of God, and all good, the product of it, are and shall be with all those who thus love our Lord Jesus Christ. And it is, or ought to be, the prayer of every lover of Christ that it may be so with all his fellow-christians. Amen, so be it.

supplication—a common term for a special kind of prayer [HARLESS], an imploring request. "Prayer" for obtaining blessings, "supplication" for averting evils which we fear [GROTIUS]. in the Spirit—to be joined with "praying." It is he in us, as the Spirit of adoption, who prays, and enables us to pray (Rom. 8:15, 26; Gal. 4:6; Jude 20). watching—not sleeping (ch. 5:14; Ps. 88:13; Matt. 26:41). So in the temple a perpetual watch was maintained (cf. Anna, Luke 2:37). thereunto—"watching unto" (with a view to) prayer and supplication. with—Greek, "in." Persevering constancy ("perseverance") and (i.e., exhibited in) supplication are to be the element in which our watchfulness is to be exercised. for all saints—as none is so perfect as not to need the intercessions of his fellow Christians. 19. for me—a different Greek preposition from that in vs. 18; translate, therefore, "on my behalf." that I may open my mouth boldly—rather, "that there may be given to me 'utterance,' or 'speech' in the opening of my mouth (when I undertake to speak; a formula used in set and solemn speech, Job 3:1; Dan. 10:16), so as with boldness to make known . . . ." etc. Bold plainness of speech was the more needed, as the Gospel is a "mystery" undiscoverable by mere reason, and only known by revelation. Paul looked for utterance to be given him; he did not depend on his natural or acquired power. The shortest road to any heart is by way of heaven; pray to God to open the door and to open your mouth, so as to avail yourself of every opening (Jer. 1:7, 8; Ezek. 3:8, 9, 11; II Cor. 4:13). 20. For—Greek, as in vs. 19, "On behalf of which." an ambassador in bonds—a paradox. Ambassadors were held inviolable by the law of nations, and could not, without outrage to every sacred right, be put in chains. Yet Christ's "ambassador is in a chain!" The Greek is singular. The Romans used to bind a prisoner to a soldier by a single chain, in a kind of free custody. So Acts 28:16, 20, "I am bound with this chain." The term, "bonds" (plural), on the other hand, is used when the prisoner's hands or feet were bound together (Acts 26:29); cf. Acts 12:6, where the plural marks the distinction. The singular is only used of the particular kind of custody described above; an undesigned coincidence [PALEY]. 21. that ye also—as I have been discussing things relating to you, so that ye also may know about me (cf. Col. 4:7, 8). NEANDER takes it, "Ye also," as well as the Colossians (Col. 4:6). my affairs—Greek, "the things concerning me." how I do—how I fare. Tychicus—an Asiatic, and so a fit messenger bearing the respective Epistles to Ephesus and Colosse (Acts 20:4; II Tim. 4:12). a . . .—Greek, "the beloved brother"; the same epithet as in Colossians 4:7. minister—i.e., servant. in the Lord—in the Lord's work. 22. for the same purpose—Greek, "for this very purpose." Colossians 4:8 is almost word for word the same as this verse. our affairs—Greek, "the things concerning us," viz., concerning myself. "Aristarchus, my fellow prisoner, and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas" (Col. 4:10). 23. love with faith—Faith is presupposed as theirs; he prays that love may accompany it (Gal. 5:6). 24. Contrast the malediction on all who love Him not (I Cor. 16:22). in sincerity—Greek, "in incorruption," i.e., not as English Version, but "with an immortal (constant) love" [WAHL]. Cf. "that which is not corruptible" (I Pet. 3:4). Not a fleeting, earthly love, but a spiritual and eternal one [ALFORD]. Contrast Colossians 2:22, worldly things "which perish with the using." Cf. I Corinthians 9:25, "corruptible . . . incorruptible crown." "Purely," "holily" [ESTIUS], without the corruption of sin (Note, I Cor. 3:17; II Pet. 1:4; Jude 10). Where the Lord Jesus has a true believer, there I have a brother [BISHOP M'ILWAINE]. He who is good enough for Christ, is good enough for me [R. HALL]. The differences of opinion among real Christians are comparatively small, and show that they are not following one another like silly sheep, each trusting the one before him. Their agreement in the main, while showing their independence as witnesses by differing in non-essentials, can only be accounted for by their being all in the right direction (Acts 15:8, 9; I Cor. 1:2; 12:3).

the act. With all prayer refers to the different kinds of prayer that are performed in public, in the family, in the closet, in business, on the way, in the heart without a voice, and with the voice from the heart. All these are necessary to the genuine Christian, and he whose heart is right with God will be frequent in the whole. And supplication. There is a difference between prayer and supplication. Some think the former means prayer for the attainment of good; the latter, prayer for averting evil. Supplication however seems to mean prayer continued in, strong and incessant pleadings, till the evil is averted or the good communicated. There are two things that must be attended to in prayer: (1) That it be "in every time, season, or opportunity"; (2) That it should be "in or through the Spirit"—that the heart should be engaged in it, and that its infirmities should be helped by the Holy Ghost. Watching thereunto. Being always on your guard lest your enemies should surprise you. Watch, not only against evil, but also for opportunities to do good, and for opportunities to receive good. Without watchfulness, prayer and all the spiritual armor will be ineffectual. With all perseverance. Being always intent on your object, and never losing sight of your danger, or of your interest. The word implies "stretching out the neck" and "looking about" in order to discern an enemy at a distance. For all saints. For all Christians; for this was the character by which they were generally distinguished.

19. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me. Kypke has proved by many examples that logon didonai signifies permission and power to defend oneself in a court of justice; and this sense of the phrase is perfectly applicable to the case of Paul, who was "an ambassador in bonds" (v. 20), and expected to be called to a public hearing, in which he was not only to defend himself, but to prove the truth and excellency of the Christian religion.

20. An ambassador in bonds. An ambassador being the representative of his king, his person was in all civilized countries held sacred. Contrary to the rights of nations, this ambassador of the King of heaven was put in chains! He had, however, the opportunity of defending himself and of vindicating the honor of his Master.

21. That ye also. As well as other churches to whom I have communicated the dealings of both God and man to me. May know my affairs. May be acquainted with my situation and circumstances. And how I do. How I employ my time, and what fruit there is of my apostolical labors. Tychicus, a beloved brother. We learn, from Acts xx. 4, that Tychicus was of Asia, and that he was a useful companion of Paul. This same person, and with the same character and commendation, is mentioned in the Epistle to the Colossians, chap. iv. 7. He is mentioned also in Titus iii. 12 and in 2 Tim. iv. 12; from all these places it is evident that he was a person in whom the apostle had the highest confidence, and that he was a very eminent minister of Christ.

22. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose. Namely, that the Ephesians might know his affairs and those of the church at Rome; messengers of this kind frequently passed between the churches in those ancient times. Comfort your hearts. By showing you how powerfully he was upheld in all his tribulations, and how God turned his bonds to the furtherance of the gospel. This must have been great consolation to all the followers of God.

23. Peace. All prosperity, and continual union with God and among yourselves; and love to God and man, the principle of all obedience and union; with faith, continually increasing, and growing stronger and stronger, from God the Father, as the Fountain of all our mercies, and the Lord Jesus Christ, through whose sacrifice and mediation they all come.

24. Grace be with all them. May the divine "favor" and all the benedictions flowing from it be with all them who love our Lord Jesus Christ, who has so loved us as to give His life to redeem ours and to save us unto life eternal. In sincerity. In "incorruptibility." Those who show the genuineness of their love by walking before Him in holiness of life.

Philippi was a chief city of the western part of Macedonia. This remarkable epistle was written when Paul was a prisoner at Rome. Paul seems to have had a very particular kindness for the church at Philippi, which he himself had been instrumental in planting; he had, upon that account, a particular fatherly, tender care of this. He looked upon them as his children, and, having "begotten them by the gospel," he was desirous by the same gospel to nourish and nurse them up.

I. He was called in an extraordinary manner to preach the gospel at Philippi. A vision appeared to Paul in the night: "There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us." He saw God going before him.

II. At Philippi he suffered hard things; yet he had not the less kindness for the place. We must never love our friends the less for the ill treatment which our enemies give us.

III. The beginnings of that church were very small; yet that did not discourage him. If good be not done at first, it may be done afterward and the last works may be more abundant.

IV. It seems that this church at Philippi grew into a flourishing church, and particularly that the brethren were very kind to Paul. He acknowledges the receipt of a present they had sent him (4.18), and this when no other church communicated with him as concerning giving and receiving (4:15).

CHAPTER 1

I. The persons writing the epistle—Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ. The highest honour of the greatest apostle, and most eminent ministers, is to be the servants of Jesus Christ; not the masters of the churches, but the servants of Christ.

II. The persons to whom it is directed. 1. To all the saints in Christ who are at Philippi. He mentions the church before the ministers, because the ministers are for the church, not the churches for the ministers. They are not only the servants of Christ, but the servants of the church for his sake. It is directed to all the saints, one as well as another, even the meanest, the poorest, and those of the least gifts. Christ makes no difference; the rich and the poor meet together in him: Saints in Christ Jesus. Out of Christ the best saints will appear sinners, and unable to stand before God. 2. With the bishops and deacons, the bishops or elders, whose office it was to teach and rule, and the deacons, or overseers of the poor, who took care of the outward business of the house of God. These were all the offices which were then known in the church, and which were of divine appointment.

Vss. 1-30. INSCRIPTION. THANKSGIVING AND PRAYERS FOR THE FLOURISHING SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE PHILIPPIANS. HIS OWN STATE AT ROME, AND THE RESULT OF HIS IMPRISONMENT IN SPREADING THE GOSPEL. EXHORTATION TO CHRISTIAN CONSISTENCY.

1. Timotheus—mentioned as being well known to the Philippians (Acts 16:3, 10-12), and now present with Paul. Not that Timothy had any share in writing the Epistle; for Paul presently uses the first person singular, "I," not "we" (vs. 3). The mention of his name implies merely that Timothy joined in affectionate remembrances to them. servants of Jesus Christ—The oldest MSS. read the order, "Christ Jesus." Paul does not call himself "an apostle," as in the inscriptions of other Epistles; for the Philippians needed not to be reminded of his apostolic authority. He writes rather in a tone of affectionate familiarity. all—so vss. 4, 7, 8, 25; ch. 2:17, 26. It implies comprehensive affection which desired not to forget any one among them "all." bishops—synonymous with "presbyters" in the apostolical churches; as appears from the same persons being called "elders of the Church" at Ephesus (Acts 20:17), and "overseers" (Acts 20:28), Greek, "bishops." And Titus 1:5, cf. with vs. 7. This is the earliest letter of Paul where bishops and deacons are mentioned, and the only one where they are separately addressed in the salutation. This accords with the probable course of events, deduced alike from the letters and history. While the apostles were constantly visiting the churches in person or by messengers, regular pastors would be less needed; but when some were removed by various causes, provision for the permanent order of the churches would be needed. Hence the three pastoral letters, subsequent to this Epistle, give instruction as to the due appointment of bishops and deacons.

1. Paul and Timotheus. That Timothy was at this time with the apostle in Rome we learn from chap. ii. 19, and also that he was very high in the apostle's estimation. He had also accompanied the apostle on his two voyages to Philippi (see Acts xvi and xx), and was therefore deservedly dear to the church in that city. It was on these accounts that Paul joined his name to his own, not because he was in any part the author of this Epistle, but he might have been the apostle's amanuensis, though the subscription to the Epistle gives this office to Epaphroditus. Neither in this Epistle nor in those to the Thessalonians and to Philemon does Paul call himself an apostle; the reason of which appears to be that in none of these places was his apostolical authority called in question. Bishops and deacons. The "overseers" of the Church of God, and those who ministered to the poor, and preached occasionally. There has been a great deal of paper wasted on the inquiry, "Who is meant by bishops here, as no place could have more than one bishop?" To which it has been answered: "Philippi was a metropolitan see, and might have several bishops." This is the extravagance of trifling. I believe no such officer is meant as we now term "bishop."

III. The apostolical benediction: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, v. 2. This is the same, almost word for word, in all the epistles, we must not be shy of forms, though we are not to be tied down to them. Grace and peace—the free favour and goodwill of God, and all the blessed fruits and effects of it, and that from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. No peace without grace. Inward peace springs from a sense of divine favour. No grace and peace but from God our Father, the fountain and original of all blessings. No grace and peace from God our Father, but in and through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The apostle proceeds to thanksgiving for the saints at Philippi.

I. Paul remembered them: he bore them much in his thoughts. Upon every mention of you. As he often thought of them, so he often spoke of them, and delighted to hear them spoken of. It is a pleasure to hear of the welfare of an absent friend.

II. He remembered them with joy. At Philippi he was maltreated; and yet he remembers Philippi with joy. So far was he from being ashamed of them, or loth to hear of the scene of his sufferings, that he remembered it with joy.

III. He remembered them in prayer: Always in every prayer of mine for you all, v. 4. The best remembrance of our friends is to remember them at the throne of grace. He had seasons of prayer for the church at Philippi. God gives us leave to be thus free with him, though, for our comfort, he knows whom we mean when we do not name them.

IV. He thanked God upon every joyful remembrance of them. Thanksgiving must have a part in every prayer. What we have the comfort of, God must have the glory of. He thanked God, as well as made requests with joy.

V. I thank my God. It encourages us in prayer, and enlarges the heart in praise, to see every mercy coming from the hand of God as our God.—I thank my God upon every remembrance of you. He gives thanks to God. 1. For the comfort he had in them: for your fellowship in the gospel, from the first day until now, v. 5. Gospel fellowship is a good fellowship. Those who sincerely receive the gospel have fellowship in it from the very first day: a new-born Christian, if he is true-born, is interested in all the promises of the gospel from the first day of his becoming such. —Until now. It is a great comfort to ministers when those who begin well hold on and persevere. 2. For the confidence he had concerning them (v. 6): Being confident of this very thing, &c. The confidence of Christians is the great comfort of Christians, and we may fetch matter of praise from our hopes as well as from our joys. Paul speaks with much confidence. That he who has begun a good work in you will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ. A good work among you—he who hath planted Christianity in the world will preserve it as long as the world stands. But it is rather to be applied to particular persons, and then it speaks of the certain accomplishment of the work of grace wherever it is begun. (1) The work of grace is a good work. It makes us like God, and fits us for the enjoyment of God. (2) Wherever this good work is begun it is of God's beginning: He has begun a good work in you. We could not begin it ourselves, for we are by nature dead in trespasses and sins: and what can dead men do towards raising themselves to life? It is God who quickens those who are thus dead. (3) The work of grace is but begun in this life; it is not finished here. (4) If the same God who begins the good work did not undertake the carrying on and finishing of it, it would lie for ever unfinished. (5) We may be confident that God will finish the work of his own hands. (6) The work of grace will never be perfected till the day of Jesus Christ. When he shall come to judge the world, then this work will be complete.

Verses 7, 8

The ardent affection he had for them: I have you in my heart, v. 7. 1. Why he had them in his heart: Inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, you are all partakers of my grace; they were partakers of that grace of God which by him was communicated to them. This makes people dear to their ministers—their receiving benefit by their ministry. Or, "You are partakers of my grace, you have joined with me in doing and suffering." They were partakers of his affliction by sympathy and concern, and readiness to assist him. Those shall share in the reward, who bear their part of the burden. He loved them because they adhered to him in his bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel: they were as ready to appear in

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

2. Grace . . . peace—The very form of this salutation implies the union of Jew, Greek, and Roman. The Greek salutation was "joy" (chairein), akin to the Greek for "grace" (charis). The Roman was "health," the intermediate term between grace and peace. The Hebrew was "peace," including both temporal and spiritual prosperity. Grace must come first if we are to have true peace. from . . . from—Omit the second "from": as in the Greek, "God our Father" and "the Lord Jesus Christ," are most closely connected.

3. Translate, "In all my remembrance of you."

4. making request—Translate, "making my request." for you all—The frequent repetition in this Epistle of "all" with "you," marks that Paul desires to declare his love for all alike, and will not recognize any divisions among them. with joy—the characteristic feature in this Epistle, as love is in that to the Ephesians (cf. vs. 18; ch. 2:2, 19, 28; 3:1; 4:1, 4). Love and joy are the two first fruits of the Spirit. Joy gives especial animation to prayers. It marked his high opinion of them, that there was almost everything in them to give him joy, and almost nothing to give him pain. 5. Ground of his "thanking God" (vs. 3): "For your (continued) fellowship (i.e., real spiritual participation) in (lit., 'in regard to') the Gospel from the first day (of your becoming partakers in it) until now." Believers have the fellowship of the Son of God (I Cor. 1:9) and of the Father (I John 1:3) in the Gospel, by becoming partakers of "the fellowship of the Holy Ghost" (II Cor. 13:14), and exercise that fellowship by acts of communion, not only the communion of the Lord's Supper, but holy liberality to brethren and ministers (ch. 4:10, 15, "communicated . . . concerning giving"; II Cor. 9:13; Gal. 6:6; Heb. 13:16, "To communicate forget not"). 6. confident—This confidence nerves prayers and thanksgivings (vss. 3, 4). this very thing—the very thing which he prays for (vs. 4) is the matter of his believing confidence (Mark 11:24; I John 5:14, 15). Hence the result is sure. he which hath begun—God (ch. 2:13). a good work—Any work that God begins, He will surely finish (I Sam. 3:12). Not even men begin a work at random. Much more the fact of His beginning the work is a pledge of its completion (Isa. 26:12). So as to the particular work here meant, the perfecting of their fellowship in the Gospel (vs. 5; Ps. 37:24; 89:33; 138:8; John 10:28, 29; Rom. 8:29, 35-39; 11:1, 2; Heb. 6:17-19; Jas. 1:17; Jude 24). As God cast not off Israel for ever, though chastening them for a time, so He will not cast off the spiritual Israel (Deut. 33:3; Isa. 27:3, I Pet. 1:5). perform it until—"perfect it up to" [ALFORD, ELLICOTT, and others]. the day of . . . Christ—(vs. 10). The Lord's coming, designed by God in every age of the Church to be regarded as near, is to be the goal set before believers' minds rather than their own death.

7. meet—Greek, "just." to think this—to have the prayerful confidence I expressed (vss. 4-6). of you—lit., "in behalf of you." Paul's confident prayer in their behalf was that God would perfect His own good work of grace in them. because . . .—Punctuate and translate, "Because I have you in my heart (so vs. 8); otherwise the Greek and the words immediately following in the verse, favor MARGIN, 'Ye have me in your heart . . . being partakers of my grace' (both, in my bonds, and in my defense and confirmation of the Gospel), you (I say) all being fellow partakers of my grace." This last clause thus assigns the reason why he has them in his heart (i.e., cherished in his love, II Cor. 3:2; 7: 3), even in his bonds, and in his defense and con-

3. Upon every remembrance. As often as you recur to my mind, so often do I thank God for the great work wrought among you. Some think that the words should be translated, "for all your kind remembrance," referring to their kind attention to the apostle in supplying his wants.

4. Always in every prayer. I pray often for you, and have great pleasure in doing it, seeing what God has already wrought among you.

5. For your fellowship in the gospel. If we consider koinonia as implying spiritual fellowship or "communion," then it signifies, not only their attention to the gospel, their readiness to continue it, and perseverance in it, but also their unity and affection among themselves. Some understand the word as expressing their liberality to the apostle, and to the gospel in general; for the term may not only be applied to communion among themselves, but to communications to others. This sense, though followed by Chrysostom and Theophylact, does not appear to be the best; though we know it to be a fact that they were liberal in supplying the apostle's necessities, and, no doubt, in ministering to the support of others.

6. Being confident. There shall be nothing lacking on God's part to support you; and to make you wise, holy, and happy; and bring you at last to His kingdom and glory.

7. It is meet for me to think this. It is "just" that I should think so, because I have you in my heart—you live in my warmest love and most affectionate remembrance. Inasmuch as both in my bonds. Because you have set your hearts upon me in my bonds, sending Epaphroditus to minister to me in my necessities, chap. ii. 25, and contributing of your own substance to me, chap. iv. 14, sending once and again to me while I was in bonds for the defense of the faith, vv. 15-16; those things which, being "a sweet savour, a sacrifice well pleasing and acceptable to God," v. 18, confirm my hope concerning you; especially when I find you yet standing firm under the like afflictions, "having the same conflict which ye saw in me" (when their places for the defence of the gospel, as the apostle was in his. Fellow sufferers should be dear one to another. 2. The evidence of it: It is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart. By this it appeared that he had them in his heart, because he had a good opinion of them. It is very proper to think the best of other people, and as well as we can of them. 3. An appeal to God concerning the truth of this (v. 8): For God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. Having them in his heart, he longed after them. He had joy in them (v. 4), because of the good he saw and heard of among them. He longed after them all, not only those among them who were witty and wealthy, but even the meanest and poorest; and he longed greatly after them. And this in the bowels of Jesus Christ, with that tender concern which Christ himself has and has shown to precious souls. Paul was herein a follower of Christ, and all good ministers should aim to be so. Shall not we pity and love those souls whom Christ had such a love and pity for? For this he appeals to God: God is my record. "Whether you know it or not, God, who knows the heart, knows it."

Verses 9–11

The prayers he put up for them. Paul often let his friends know what it was he begged of God for them, that they might know what to beg for themselves, and that they might be encouraged to hope they should receive from God the comforting grace which Paul asked of God for them. He prayed, 1. That they might be a loving people: That your love might abound yet more and more. Those who abound much in any grace have still need to abound more and more, because we are imperfect in our best attainments. 2. That they might be a knowing and judicious people: that love might abound in knowledge and in all judgment. It is not a blind love that will recommend us to God. Strong passions, without knowledge and a settled judgment, will not make us complete in the will of God, and sometimes do more hurt than good. 3. That they might be a discerning people. That you may approve the things which are excellent (v. 10); or, as it is in the margin, Try the things which differ: that we may approve the things which are excellent upon the trial of them, and discern their difference from other things. The truths and laws of Christ are excellent things. We only need to try them, to approve of them. 4. That they might be an honest upright-hearted people: That you may be sincere. Sincerity is our gospel perfection. When we are really what we appear to be, and mean honestly, then we are sincere. 5. That they might be an inoffensive people: that you may be without offence until the day of Christ; not apt to take offence; and very careful not to give offence to God or their brethren. And we must continue to the end blameless, that we may be presented so at the day of Christ. 6. That they might be a fruitful useful people (v. 11): Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, &c. From God is our fruit found, and therefore from him it must be asked. Being filled with them. Fear not being emptied by bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, for you will be filled with them. These fruits are by Jesus Christ, and they are unto the glory and praise of God. We must not aim at our own glory in our fruitfulness. It is much for the honour of God, when Christians not only are good, but do good, and abound in good works.

He was now a prisoner at Rome; this might be a stumbling-block to those who had received the gospel by his ministry. They might be shy of owning this doctrine, lest they should be involved in the same trouble themselves. Now to take off the offence of the cross, he expounds this dark and hard chapter of his sufferings.

I. He suffered by the sworn enemies of the gospel; but they should not be stumbled at this, for good was brought out of it, and it tended to the furtherance of the gospel (v. 12): The things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel.

A strange chemistry of Providence this, to extract so great a good as the enlargement of the gospel out of so great an evil as the confinement of the apostle.

1. It alarmed those who were without (v. 13): My bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace and in all other places. Paul's sufferings made him known at court, and this might lead some of them to enquire after the gospel for which he suffered, which they might otherwise have never heard of. When his bonds were manifest in the palace, they were manifest in all other places.

firmation of the Gospel (such as he was constantly making in private, Acts 28:17-23; his self-defense and confirmation of the Gospel being necessarily conjoined, as the Greek implies; cf. vs. 17), viz., "inasmuch as ye are fellow partakers of my grace": inasmuch as ye share with me in "the fellowship of the Gospel" (vs. 5), and have manifested this, both by suffering as I do for the Gospel's sake (vss. 28-30), and by imparting to me of your substance (ch. 4:15). It is natural and right for me thus confidently to pray in your behalf. (ELLICOTT, and others translate, "To be thus minded for you all"), because of my having you in my warmest remembrances even in my bonds, since you are sharers with me in the Gospel grace. Bonds do not bind love. 8. Confirmation of vs. 7. record—i.e., witness. in the bowels of Jesus Christ—"Christ Jesus" is the order in the oldest MSS. My yearning love (so the Greek implies) to you is not merely from natural affection, but from devotedness to Christ Jesus. "Not Paul, but Jesus Christ lives in Paul; wherefore Paul is not moved in the bowels [i.e., the tender love, Jer. 31:20] of Paul, but of Jesus Christ" [BENGEL]. All real spiritual love is but a portion of Christ's love which yearns in all who are united to Him [ALFORD]. 9. The subject of his prayer for them (vs. 4). your love—to Christ, producing love not only to Paul, Christ's minister, as it did, but also to one another, which it did not altogether as much as it ought (ch. 2:2; 4:2). knowledge—of doctrinal and practical truth. judgment—rather, "perception"; "perceptive sense." Spiritual perceptiveness: spiritual sight, spiritual hearing, spiritual feeling, spiritual taste. Christianity is a vigorous plant, not the hotbed growth of enthusiasm. "Knowledge" and "perception" guard love from being ill-judged. 10. Lit., "With a view to your proving (and so approving and embracing) the things that excel" (Rom. 2:18); not merely things not bad, but the things best among those that are good; the things of more advanced excellence. Ask as to things, not merely, Is there no harm, but is there any good, and which is the best? sincere—from a Greek root. Examined in the sunlight and found pure.

without offence—not stumbling; running the Christian race without falling through any stumbling block, i.e., temptation, in your way. till—rather, "unto," "against"; so that when the day of Christ comes, ye may be found pure and without offense. 11. The oldest MSS. read the singular, "fruit." So Galatians 5:22 (see Note); regarding the works of righteousness, however manifold, as one harmonious whole, "the fruit of the Spirit" (Eph. 5:9); Jas. 3:18, "the fruit of righteousness" (Heb. 12:11); Rom. 6:22, "fruit unto holiness." which are—"which is by (Greek, through) Jesus Christ." Through His sending to us the Spirit from the Father. "We are wild and useless olive trees till we are graffed into Christ, who, by His living root, makes us fruit-bearing branches" [CALVIN]. 12. understand—Greek, "know." The Philippians probably had feared that his imprisonment would hinder the spread of the Gospel; he therefore removes this fear. the things which happened unto me—Greek, "the things concerning me." rather—so far is my imprisonment from hindering the Gospel. Faith takes in a favorable light even what seems adverse [BENGEL] (vss. 19, 28; ch. 2:17). 13. my bonds in Christ—rather as Greek, "So that my bonds have become manifest in Christ," i.e., known, as endured in Christ's cause. palace—lit., "Prætorium," i.e., the barrack of the Prætorian guards attached to the palace of Nero, on the Palatine hill at Rome; not the general Prætorian camp outside of the city; for this was not connected with "Cæsar's household," which ch. 4:22 shows the Prætorium here meant was. The emperor was "Prætor," or Commander-in-Chief; naturally then the barrack of his bodyguard was called the Prætorium. Paul seems now not to have been at large in his own hired house, though chained to a soldier, as in Acts 28:16, 20, 30, 31, but in strict custody in the Prætorium; a change which probably took place on Tigellinus becoming Prætorian Prefect. See my Introduction. in all other places—so CHRYSOSTOM. Or else, "to all the rest," i.e., "manifest to all the other" Prætorian soldiers stationed elsewhere, through the instrumentality of the Prætorian household guards who might for the time be attached to the emperor's palace, and who relieved one another in succession. Paul had been now upwards of two years a prisoner, so that there was time for his cause and the Gospel having become widely known at Rome.

ADAM CLARKE

I was among you, Acts xvi. 12, etc.), "and now hear to be in me," chap. i. 30.

8. For God is my record. I call God to witness that I have the strongest affection for you, and that I love you with that same kind of tender concern with which Christ loved the world when He gave himself for it; for I am even ready to "be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith," chap. ii. 17.

9. This I pray. This is the substance of all my prayers for you, that your love to God, to one another, and to all mankind, may abound yet more and more: that it may be like a river, perpetually fed with rain and fresh streams, so that it continues to swell and increase till it fills all its banks and floods the adjacent plains. In knowledge. Of God's nature, perfections, your own duty and interest, His work upon your souls, and His great designs in the gospel. And in all judgment. In all "spiritual or moral feeling"; that you may at once have the clearest perception and the fullest enjoyment of those things which concern your salvation.

10. That ye may approve things that are excellent. "To the end that you may put to proof the things that differ," or the things that are "more profitable." By the pure and abundant love which they received from God they would be able to try whatever differed from the teaching they had received, and from the experience they had in spiritual things. That ye may be sincere. The word which we translate "sincerity" is compounded of eile, the "splendor of the sun," and krino, "I judge"; a thing which may be examined in the clearest and strongest light without the possibility of detecting a single flaw or imperfection. Be so purified and refined in your souls, by the indwelling Spirit, that even the light of God shining into your hearts shall not be able to discover a fault that the love of God has not purged away. Our word sincerity is from the Latin sinceritas, which is compounded of sine, "without," and cera, "wax," and is a metaphor taken from clarified honey; for the pure or clarified honey is that which is sine cera, without wax, no part of the comb being left in it. Sincerity, taken in its full meaning, is a word of the most extensive import; and, when applied in reference to the state of the soul, is as strong as the word "perfection" itself. The soul that is sincere is the soul that is without sin. Without offence. Neither offending God nor your neighbor; being neither stumbled yourselves nor the cause of stumbling to others. Till the day of Christ. Till He comes to judge the world, or till the day in which you are called into the eternal world. According to this prayer a man, under the power and influence of the grace of God, may so love as never to offend his Maker, to the latest period of his life. Those who deny this must believe that the Spirit of God either cannot or will not do it, or that the blood of Christ cannot cleanse from all unrighteousness.

11. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness. By righteousness we may understand here the whole work of the Spirit of God in the soul of a believer; and by the fruits of righteousness, all holy tempers, holy words, and right actions. And with these they are to be filled, "filled up, filled full"; the whole soul and life occupied with them, ever doing something by which glory is brought to God, or good done to man. By Jesus Christ. That is, according to His doctrine, through the power of His grace, and by the agency of His Spirit. Unto the glory and praise of God. God being honored when the work of His grace thus appears to men in the fruits of righteousness; and God is praised by all the faithful when His work thus appears.

12. That the things which happened unto me. Paul was at this time a prisoner at Rome, and it appears probable that he had already been called to make a defense for himself, and to vindicate the doctrines of the gospel; and this he had been enabled to do in such a manner that the honor of the gospel had been greatly promoted by it.

13. My bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace. In consequence of the public defense which he was obliged to make, his doctrines must be fully known in the court and throughout the whole city, as on his trial he would necessarily explain the whole. The praetorium, which we here translate palace, signifies the

2. It emboldened those who were within. As his enemies were startled at his sufferings, so his friends were encouraged by them. Many of the brethren in the Lord waxing confident by my bonds, v. 14. When they saw Paul imprisoned for Christ, they were so far from being deterred from preaching Christ and praising his name, that it made them the more bold. If they should be hurried from the pulpit to the prison, they could be reconciled to it, because they would be there in such good company. Besides, the comfort which Paul had in his sufferings greatly encouraged them. They saw that those who served Christ served a good Master, who could both bear them up and bear them out. Waxing confident by my bonds. That which was intended by the enemy to discourage the preachers of the gospel was overruled for their encouragement. And are much more bold to speak the word without fear: they see the worst of it, and therefore are not afraid to venture.

II. He suffered from false friends as well as from enemies (v. 15, 16): Some preach Christ even of envy and strife. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely. There were those who envied Paul's reputation in the churches, and endeavoured to supplant and undermine him. Supposing to add affliction to my bonds. However, there were others who were animated by Paul's sufferings to preach Christ the more vigorously: Some also of goodwill, and love.—Knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel. This made them the more bold to preach the word.

III. How easy he was in the midst of all: Notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and I will rejoice, v. 18. It is God's prerogative to judge of the principles men act upon; this is out of our line. Paul was so far from envying those who had liberty to preach the gospel that he rejoiced in the preaching of it even by those who do it in pretence, and not in truth.

1. It tended to the salvation of the souls of men: I know that this shall turn to my salvation, v. 19. God can bring good out of evil. What reward can those expect who preach Christ out of strife, and envy, and contention, and to add affliction to a faithful minister's bonds? who preach in pretence, and not in truth? And yet even this may turn to the salvation of others; and Paul's rejoicing in it turned to his salvation too. Through your prayers, and the supply of the Spirit of Christ. The prayers of the people may bring a supply of the Spirit to their ministers, to support them in suffering, as well as in preaching the gospel.

2. It would turn to the glory of Christ, v. 20. According to my earnest expectation and hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, &c.

14. Translate as Greek, "And that (vs. 13) most of the brethren in the Lord . . . ." "In the Lord," distinguishes them from "brethren after the flesh," Jewish fellow countrymen. ELLICOTT translates, "Trusting in the Lord." by my bonds—encouraged by my patience in bearing my bonds. much more bold—Translate as Greek, "are more abundantly bold." 15. "Some indeed are preaching Christ even for envy, i.e., to carry out the envy which they felt towards Paul, on account of the success of the Gospel in the capital of the world, owing to his steadfastness in his imprisonment; they wished through envy to transfer the credit of its progress from him to themselves. Probably Judaizing teachers (Rom. 14; I Cor. 3:10-15; 9:1, etc.; II Cor. 11:1-4). some also of—rather for—good will—answering to "the brethren" (vs. 14); some being well disposed to him. 16, 17. The oldest MSS. transpose these verses, and read, "These (last) indeed out of love (to Christ and me), knowing (the opposite of 'thinking' below) that I am set (i.e., appointed by God, I Thess. 3:3) for the defense of the Gospel (vs. 7, not on my own account). But the others out of contention (or rather, 'a factious spirit'; 'cabal'; a spirit of intrigue, using unscrupulous means to compass their end; Note, Gal. 5:20; 'self-seeking' [ALFORD]) proclaim (the Greek is not the same as that for 'preach,' but, 'announce') Christ, not sincerely (answering to 'but of a spirit of intrigue,' or 'self-seeking'). Lit., 'not purely'; not with a pure intention; the Jewish leaven they tried to introduce was in order to glorify themselves (Gal. 6:12, 13; see, however, Note, vs. 18), thinking (but in vain) to raise up (so the oldest MSS. read) tribulation to my bonds." Their thought was, that taking the opportunity of my being laid aside, they would exalt themselves by their Judaizing preaching, and depreciate me and my preaching, and so cause me trouble of spirit in my bonds; they thought that I, like themselves, sought my own glory, and so would be mortified at their success over mine. But they are utterly mistaken; "I rejoice" at it (vs. 18), so far am I from being troubled at it. 18. "What then?" What follows from this? Does this trouble me as they thought it would? "Notwithstanding" their unkind thought to me, and self-seeking intention, the cause I have at heart is furthered "every way" of preaching, "whether in pretense (with a by motive, vs. 16) or in truth (out of true 'love' to Christ, vs. 17), Christ is proclaimed; and therein I do rejoice, yea, and I will rejoice." From this it would seem that these self-seeking teachers in the main "proclaimed Christ," not "another Gospel," such as the Judaizers in Galatia taught (Gal. 1:6-8); though probably having some of the Jewish leaven (Note, vss. 15, 16, 17), their chief error was their selfseeking envious motive, not so much error of doctrine; had there been vital error, Paul would not have rejoiced. The proclamation of CHRIST, however done, roused attention, and so was sure to be of service. Paul could thus rejoice at the good result of their bad intentions (Ps. 76:10; Isa. 10:5, 7). 19. turn to my salvation—"turn out to me for (or unto) salvation." This proclamation of Christ every way will turn out to my spiritual good. Christ, whose interests are my interests, being glorified thereby; and so the coming of His kingdom being furthered, which, when it does come, will bring completed "SALVATION" (Heb. 9:28) to me and all whose "earnest expectation" (vs. 20) is that Christ may be magnified in them. So far is their preaching from causing me, as they thought, tribulation in my bonds (vs. 16). Paul plainly quotes and applies to himself the very words of the LXX (Job 13:16), "This shall turn out to my salvation," which belong to all God's people of every age, in their tribulation (cf. Job 13:15). through your prayer and the supply—The Greek intimately joins the two nouns together, by having but one preposition and one article: "Through your prayer and (the consequent) supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ" (obtained for me through your prayer). 20. According to my earnest expectation—The Greek expresses, "expectation with uplifted head (Luke 21:28) and outstretched neck." Romans 8:19 is the only other place in the New Testament that the word occurs. TITTMANN says, in both places it implies not mere expectation, but the anxious desire of an anticipated prosperous issue in afflictive circumstances. The subject of his earnest expectation which follows, answers to "my salvation" (vs. 19). in nothing I shall be ashamed—in nothing have reason to be ashamed of "my work for God, or His work in me" [ALFORD]. Or, "in nothing be disappointed in my hope, but that I may fully obtain it" [ESTIUS]. So "ashamed" is used in Romans 9:33. all bold- court where causes were heard and judged by the praetor or civil magistrate; it sometimes signifies the "general's tent," and at others the "emperor's palace." It is supposed that it is used in this latter sense here. There were, no doubt, persons belonging to the emperor's household who would bring the news of so remarkable a case to the palace; for we find that there were Christians even in Caesar's household; chap. iv. 22.

14. Waxing confident. Finding the effect produced by the public defense which the apostle made, they were greatly encouraged, and the more boldly and openly proclaimed the doctrine of Christ crucified.

15. Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife. These must have been the Judaizing teachers, who insisted on the necessity of connecting the Mosaic rites with the Christian institutions; and probably denounced Paul to the Jews dwelling at Rome as not only an enemy to the law and the prophets, but also as a very imperfect Christian, because he declared strongly against the doctrine of circumcision; and no doubt endeavored to prejudice him with the heathen Romans. Some also of good will. Some, through mere benevolence to the apostle, both espoused his doctrine and vindicated his cause.

16. Preach Christ of contention. The Judaizing teachers, they also preach Christ; they acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ or promised Messiah, and preach Him as such. Not sincerely. "Not chastely," garbling the gospel; not speaking the whole truth, but just what served their purpose; and at the same time they denounced the apostle as an enemy to the divine institutions, because he spoke against circumcision.

17. The other of love. Through a sincere desire, not only to make known the way of salvation to the people, but also to vindicate and help the apostle, because they considered him as appointed by God to preach and defend the gospel. The sixteenth and seventeenth verses are transposed by several MSS.

18. What then? It is a matter of little importance to me how Christ is preached, provided He be preached. I rejoice that anything is known of Him; and am truly glad that the gospel is even made partially known, for this will lead to further inquiries and in the end be of service to the truth.

19. This shall turn to my salvation. That is: It will be the means of my temporal "safety"; of my "deliverance"; for so the word soteria is here to be understood. The Jews had denounced the apostle as an enemy to Caesar; but he knew that, when the nature of the gospel should be fully known, the Romans would see that he could be no enemy to Caesar who proclaimed a prince whose kingdom was not of this world. Through your prayer. Knowing them to be genuine followers of Christ, he was satisfied that their prayers would be very available in his behalf; and under God he places much dependence upon them. The supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. The word which we translate supply signifies also "furnishing whatever is necessary." The Spirit of God he expected to help all his infirmities and to furnish him with all the wisdom, prudence, strength of reason, and argument which might be necessary for him in the different trials he had to pass through with his persecutors, and the civil powers, at whose judgment seat he stood.

20. Earnest expectation. He had the most confident expectation that God would stand by him, so that he should be enabled, with the "utmost liberty of speech," to testify the gospel of the grace of God; and, should he have the liberty of doing so, he was utterly regardless what the issue might be relative to himself.

MATTHEW HENRY

The great desire of every true Christian is that Christ may be magnified and glorified. Those who truly desire that Christ may be magnified desire that he may be magnified in their body. They are willing to serve his designs with every member of their body, as well as faculty of their soul. That in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness Christ may be magnified. The boldness of Christians is the honour of Christ. Those who make Christ's glory their desire may make it their expectation and hope. If it be truly aimed at, it shall certainly be attained. Those who desire that Christ may be magnified in their bodies have a holy indifference whether it be by life or by death. They refer it to him which way he will make them serviceable to his glory, whether by their living to his honour in working for him or dying to his honour in suffering for him.

Verses 21–26

We have here an account of the life and death of blessed Paul: his life was Christ, and his death was gain. It is the undoubted character of every good Christian that to him to live is Christ. The glory of Christ ought to be the end of our life. All those to whom to live is Christ to them to die will be gain. Death is a great loss to a carnal worldly man; but to a good Christian it is gain. It delivers him from all the evils of life, and brings him to the possession of the chief good. Some read the whole expression thus: To me, living and dying, Christ is gain. "I desire no more, neither while I live nor when I die, but to win Christ and be found in him."

I. If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour (v. 22), that is, Christ is. He reckoned his labour well bestowed, if he could be instrumental to advance the kingdom of Christ in the world. It is worth while for a good Christian and a good minister to live in the world as long as he can glorify God and do good to his church. Yet what I shall choose I wot not, for I am in a strait betwixt two. It was a blessed strait which Paul was in, not between two evil things, but between two good things. Paul was in a strait between two blessings—living to Christ, and being with him.

1. His inclination was for death. We have naturally an aversion to death, but he had an inclination to it (v. 23); Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ. It is being with Christ which makes a departure desirable to a good man. If I cannot be with Christ without departing, I shall reckon it desirable on that account to depart. Which is far better. Those who know the value of Christ and heaven will readily acknowledge it far better to be in heaven than to be in this world, to be with Christ. If we come to be with Christ, farewell sin and temptation, farewell sorrow and death, for ever.

2. His judgment was rather to live awhile longer in this world, for the service of the church (v. 24): Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. Paul's strait was not between living in this world and living in heaven; between these two there is no comparison: but his strait was between serving Christ in this world and enjoying him in another. To advance the interest of Christ and his church, he chose rather to tarry here, where he met with oppositions and difficulties, and to deny himself for awhile the satisfaction of his reward.

II. And, having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith, v. 25. What a great confidence Paul had in the divine Providence, that it would order all for the best to him. Whatsoever is best for the church, we may be sure God will do. What ministers are continued for: For our furtherance and joy of faith, our further advancement in holiness and comfort. What promotes our faith and joy of faith is very much for our furtherance in the way to heaven. The more faith the more joy, and the more faith and joy the more we are furthered in our Christian course.

III. That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me, by my coming to you again, v. 26. They rejoiced in the hope of seeing him, and enjoying his further labours among them. All our joys should terminate in Christ. Our joy in good ministers should be our joy in Christ Jesus for them.

Verses 27–30

I. He exhorts them to strictness of conversation (v. 27): Only let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ. Let it be in all respects as those who belong to the kingdom of God among men. It is an ornament to our profession when our conversation is of a piece with it.—That whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs. Our religion must not be bound up in the hands of our ministers. Whether ministers come or no, Christ is always at hand. Let me hear of you that

ness—"all" is opposed to "in nothing," as "boldness" is the opposite to "ashamed." so now also—when "my body" is "in bonds" (vs. 17). Christ—not Paul, "shall be magnified." life, or by death—Whatever be the issue, I cannot lose; I must be the gainer by the event. Paul was not omniscient; in the issue of things pertaining to themselves, the apostles underwent the same probation of faith and patience as we. 21. For—in either event (vs. 20) I must be the gainer, "For to me . . . ." to live is Christ—whatever life, time, and strength, I have, is Christ's; Christ is the sole object for which I live (Gal. 2:20). to die is gain—not the act of dying, but as the Greek ("to have died") expresses, the state after death. Besides the glorification of Christ by my death, which is my primary object (vs. 20), the change of state caused by death, so far from being a matter of shame (vs. 20) or loss, as my enemies suppose, will be a positive "gain" to me. 22. Rather as Greek, "But if to live in the flesh (if), this (I say, the continuance in life which I am undervaluing) be the fruit of my labor (i.e., be the condition in which the fruit of my ministerial labor is involved), then what I shall choose I know not" (I cannot determine with myself, if the choice were given me, both alternatives being great goods alike). So ALFORD and ELLICOTT. BENGEL takes it as English Version, which the Greek will bear by supposing an ellipsis, "If to live in the flesh (be my portion), this (continuing to live) is the fruit of my labor," i.e., this continuance in life will be the occasion of my bringing in "the fruit of labor," i.e., will be the occasion of "labors" which are their own "fruit" or reward; or, this my continuing "to live" will have this "fruit," viz., "labors" for Christ. GROTIUS explains "the fruit of labor" as an idiom for "worth-while"; If I live in the flesh, this is worth my while, for thus Christ's interest will be advanced, "For to me to live is Christ" (vs. 21; cf. ch. 2:30; Rom. 1:13). The second alternative, viz., dying, is taken up and handled, ch. 2:17, "If I be offered." 23. For—The oldest MSS. read, "But." "I know not (vs. 22), BUT am in a strait (am perplexed) betwixt the two (viz., 'to live' and 'to die'), having the desire for departing (lit., to loose anchor, II Tim. 4: 6) and being with Christ; FOR (so the oldest MSS.) it is by far better"; or as the Greek, more forcibly, "by far the more preferable"; a double comparative. This refutes the notion of the soul being dormant during its separation from the body. It also shows that, while he regarded the Lord's advent as at all times near, yet that his death before it was a very possible contingency. The partial life eternal is in the interval between death and Christ's second advent; the perfectional, at that advent [BISHOP PEARSON]. To depart is better than to remain in the flesh; to be with Christ is far, far better; a New Testament hope (Heb. 12:24), [BENGEL]. 24. to abide—to continue somewhat longer. for you—Greek, "on your account"; "for your sake." In order to be of service to you, I am willing to forego my entrance a little sooner into blessedness; heaven will not fail to be mine at last. 25. Translate, "And being confident of this." I know . . .—by prophetical intimations of the Spirit. He did not yet know the issue, as far as human appearances were concerned (ch. 2:23). He doubtless returned from his first captivity to Philippi (Heb. 13:19; Philemon 22). joy of faith—Greek, "joy in your faith." 26. Translate, "That your matter of glorying (or rejoicing) may abound in Christ Jesus in me (i.e., in my case; in respect to me, or for me who have been granted to your prayers, vs. 19) through my presence again among you." ALFORD makes the "matter of glorying," the possession of the Gospel, received from Paul, which would abound, be assured and increased, by his presence among them; thus, "in me," implies that Paul is the worker of the material of abounding in Christ Jesus. But "my rejoicing over you" (ch. 2:16), answers plainly to "your rejoicing in respect to me" here.

27. Only—Whatever happens as to my coming to you, or not, make this your one only care. By supposing this or that future contingency, many persuade themselves they will be such as they ought to be, but it is better always without evasion to perform present duties under present circumstances [BENGEL]. let your conversation be—(Cf. ch. 3:20.) The Greek implies, "Let your walk as citizens (viz., of the heavenly state; 'the city of the living God,' Heb. 12:22, 'the heavenly Jerusalem,' 'fellow citizens of the saints,' Eph. 2:19) be . . . ." I . . . see . . . hear—so vs. 30. "Hear," in order to include both alternatives, must include the meaning know.

21. For to me to live is Christ. "Whether I live or die, Christ is gain to me." While I live I am Christ's property and servant, and Christ is my Portion. If I die, if I be called to witness the truth at the expense of my life, this will be gain; I shall be saved from the remaining troubles and difficulties in life, and be put immediately in possession of my heavenly inheritance.

22. But if I live in the flesh. Should I be spared longer, I shall labor for Christ as I have done; and this is the fruit of my labour, that Christ shall be magnified by my longer life, v. 20. Yet what I shall choose I wot not. Had I the two conditions left to my own choice, whether to die now and go to glory or whether to live longer in persecutions and affliction (glorifying Christ by spreading the gospel), I could not tell which to prefer.

23. For I am in a strait betwixt two. Viz., the dying now and being immediately with God or living longer to preach and spread the gospel and thus glorify Christ among men. Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ. It appears to be a metaphor taken from the commander of a vessel, in a foreign port, who feels a strong desire "to set sail," and get to his own country and family; but this desire is counterbalanced by a conviction that the general interests of the voyage may be best answered by his longer stay in the port where his vessel now rides.

24. To abide in the flesh. It would certainly be gain to myself to die, but it will be a gain to you if I live.

25. Having this confidence, I know that I shall abide. Convinced that it is necessary that I should live longer, for the spreading and defense of the gospel, I am persuaded that I shall now be liberated. This was in fact the case, for, after having been two years in bonds at Rome, he was released. For your furtherance. In the way of righteousness. And joy of faith. And happiness in that way.

26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant. Men rejoice more in recovering a thing that was lost than they do in a continual possession of what is of much greater value.

27. Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel. The apostle considers the church at Philippi as a free or imperial city, which possesses great honors, dignities, and privileges; and he exhorts them to act "worthy of or suitably to" those honors and privileges. This is the idea that is expressed by the word, "act according to the nature of your political situation," the citizenship and privileges which you possess in consequence of your being free inhabitants of Christ's imperial city, the Church. The apostle resumes the same metaphor, chap. iii. 20: "For our citizenship is in heaven." Whether I come and see you. Leaving the matter still in doubt as to them, whether he should again visit them.

MATTHEW HENRY

you stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel. It becomes those who profess the gospel to strive for it. There is much opposition, and there is need of striving. A man may sleep and go to hell; but he who will go to heaven must look about him and be diligent. The unity and unanimity of Christians become the gospel: Strive together, not strive one with another. One spirit and one mind become the gospel. Steadfastness becomes the gospel: Stand fast in one spirit, with one mind. It is a shame to religion when the professors of it are off and on, unfixed in their minds, and unstable as water. Those who would strive for the faith of the gospel must stand firm to it.

II. He exhorts them to courage and constancy in suffering: And in nothing terrified by your adversaries, v. 28. Whatever oppositions we meet with, we must not be frightened at them. Persecuting is an evident token of perdition. Those who oppose the gospel of Christ are marked out for ruin. But being persecuted is a token of salvation. Not that it is a certain mark; many hypocrites have suffered for their religion; but it is a good sign that we are in good earnest in religion, when we are enabled in a right manner to suffer for the cause of Christ.—For to you it is given on the behalf of Christ not only to believe, but also to suffer for his name, v. 29. To believe in him. Faith is God's gift on the behalf of Christ. To suffer for the sake of Christ is a valuable gift too. If we suffer reproach and loss for Christ, we are to reckon it a great gift, always provided we behave under our sufferings with the genuine temper of martyrs (v. 30): "Having the same conflict which you saw in me, and now hear to be in me; suffering in the same manner as you saw and now hear of me that I suffer." It is not simply the suffering, but the cause, and not only the cause, but the spirit, which makes the martyr.

your affairs—your state. in one spirit—the fruit of partaking of the Holy Spirit (Eph. 4:3, 4). with one mind—rather as Greek, "soul," the sphere of the affections; subordinate to the "Spirit," man's higher and heavenly nature. "There is sometimes natural antipathies among believers; but these are overcome, when there is not only unity of spirit, but also of soul" [BENGEL]. striving together—with united effort.

28. terrified—lit., said of horses or other animals startled or suddenly scared; so of sudden consternation in general. which—your not being terrified. evident token of perdition—if they would only perceive it (II Thess. 1:5). It attests this, that in contending hopelessly against you, they are only rushing on to their own perdition, not shaking your united faith and constancy. to you of salvation—The oldest MSS. read, "of your salvation"; not merely your temporal safety. 29. For—rather, a proof that this is an evident token from God of your salvation, "Because . . . ." it is given—Greek, "it has been granted as a favor," or "gift of grace." Faith is the gift of God (Eph. 2:8), not wrought in the soul by the will of man, but by the Holy Ghost (John 1:12, 13). believe on him—"To believe Him," would merely mean to believe He speaks the truth. "To believe on Him," is to believe in, and trust through, Him to obtain eternal salvation. Suffering for Christ is not only not a mark of God's anger, but a gift of His grace. 30. ye saw in me—(Acts 16:12, 19, etc.; I Thess. 2:2). I am "in nothing terrified by mine adversaries" (vs. 29), so ought not ye. The words here, "ye saw . . . and . . . hear," answer to "I come and see you, or else . . . hear" (vs. 27).

ADAM CLARKE

In one spirit. Being all of one mind under the influence of the Holy Ghost. Striving together. "Wrestling together," not in contention with each other, but in union against the enemies of the gospel faith.

28. In nothing terrified by your adversaries. So it appears that the church at Philippi was then under persecution.

29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ. "To you it is graciously given"; it is no small privilege that God has so far honored you as to permit you to suffer on Christ's account. It is only His most faithful servants that He thus honors. Be not therefore terrified by your enemies; they can do nothing to you which God will not turn to your eternal advantage.

30. Having the same conflict. When Paul preached the gospel at Philippi he was grievously persecuted, as we learn from Acts xvi. 19-40, being stripped, scourged, thrown into prison, even into the dungeon, and his feet made fast in the stocks. This was the conflict they had seen in him; and now they heard that he had been sent prisoner to Rome as an evildoer, and that he was at present in bonds, and shortly to be tried for his life before the Roman emperor, to whom he had been obliged to appeal.

Further exhortations to Christian duties.

I. The great gospel precept pressed upon us; to love one another. This he represents (v. 2) by being like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Christians should be one in affection, whether they can be one in apprehension or no. Having the same love. Christian love ought to be mutual love. Love, and you shall be loved. Being of one accord, and of one mind; unanimously agreeing in the great things of God and keeping the unity of the Spirit in other differences.

1. The pathetic pressing of the duty. The inducements to brotherly love are these: (1) "If there is any consolation in Christ. Have you experienced consolation in Christ? Evidence that experience by loving one another." Do we expect consolation in Christ? If we would not be disappointed, we must love one another. (2) "Comfort of love. If there is any comfort in God's love to you, in your love to God, or in your brethren's love to us, be you like-minded." (3) "Fellowship of the Spirit. If there is such a thing as communion with God and Christ by the Spirit, such a thing as the communion of saints, be you like-minded." (4) "Any bowels and mercies, in God and Christ, towards you. If you expect the benefit of God's compassions to yourselves, be you compassionate one to another." (5) Another argument is the comfort it would be to him: Fulfil you my joy. It is the joy of ministers to see people like-minded and living in love. He had been instrumental in bringing them to the grace of Christ and the love of God. "Now," says he, "fulfil the joy of your poor minister, who preached the gospel to you."

2. Some means to promote it. (1) Do nothing through strife and vain glory, v. 3. Christ came to slay all enmities; therefore let there not be among Christians a spirit of opposition. Christ came to humble us, and therefore let there not be among us a spirit of pride. (2) We must esteem others in lowliness of mind better than ourselves, be severe upon our own faults and charitable in our judgment of others. We must esteem the good which is in others above that which is in ourselves; for we best know our own unworthiness and imperfections.

Vss. 1-30. CONTINUED EXHORTATION: TO UNITY: TO HUMILITY AFTER CHRIST'S EXAMPLE, WHOSE GLORY FOLLOWED HIS HUMILIATION: TO EARNESTNESS IN SEEKING PERFECTION, THAT THEY MAY BE HIS JOY IN THE DAY OF CHRIST: HIS JOYFUL READINESS TO BE OFFERED NOW BY DEATH, SO AS TO PROMOTE THEIR FAITH. HIS INTENTION TO SEND TIMOTHY: HIS SENDING EPAPHRODITUS MEANTIME. 1. The "therefore" implies that he is here expanding on the exhortation (ch. 1:27), "In one Spirit, with one mind" (soul). He urges four influencing motives in this verse, to inculcate the four Christian duties corresponding respectively to them (vs. 2). "That ye be like-minded, having the same love, of one accord, of one mind"; (1) "If there be (with you) any consolation in Christ," i.e., any consolation of which Christ is the source, leading you to wish to console me in my afflictions borne for Christ's sake, ye owe it to me to grant my request "that ye be like-minded" [CHRYSOSTOM and ESTIUS]: (2) "If there be any comfort of (i.e., flowing from) love," the adjunct of "consolation in Christ"; (3) "If any fellowship of (communion together as Christians, flowing from joint participation in) the Spirit" (II Cor. 13:14). As Pagans meant literally those who were of one village, and drank of one fountain, how much greater is the union which conjoins those who drink of the same Spirit! (I Cor. 12:4, 13) [GROTIUS]: (4) "If any bowels (tender emotions) and mercies" (compassions), the adjuncts of "fellowship of the Spirit." The opposites of the two pairs, into which the four fall, are reprobated, vss. 3, 4. 2. Fulfil—i.e., Make full. I have joy in you, complete it by that which is still wanting, viz., unity (ch. 1:9). likeminded—lit., "that ye be of the same mind"; more general than the following "of one mind." having the same love—equally disposed to love and be loved. being of one accord—lit., "with united souls." This pairs with the following clause, thus, "With united souls, being of one mind"; as the former two also pair together, "That ye be like-minded, having the same love." 3. Let nothing be done—The italicized words are not in the Greek. Perhaps the ellipsis had better be supplied from the Greek (vs. 2), "Thinking nothing in the way of strife" (or rather, "factious intrigue," "self-seeking," Note, ch. 1:16). It is the thought which characterizes the action as good or bad before God. lowliness of mind—The direct relation of this grace is to God alone; it is the sense of dependence of the creature on the Creator as such, and it places all created beings in this respect on a level. The man "lowly of mind" as to his spiritual life is independent of men, and free from all slavish feeling, while sensible of his continual dependence on God. Still it INDIRECTLY affects his behavior toward his fellow

1. If there be therefore any consolation. The if does not express any doubt here, but on the contrary is to be considered as a strong affirmation; "as there is" consolation in Christ, as there is comfort of love. The word translated here consolation is in other places rendered "exhortation," and is by several critics understood so here; as if he had said: If exhorting you in the name of Christ has any influence with you. It is extremely difficult to give the force of these expressions; they contain a torrent of most affecting eloquence, the apostle pouring out his whole heart to a people whom with all his heart he loved, and who were worthy of the love even of an apostle. If any comfort of love. If the followers of Christ, by giving proofs of their ardent love to each other in cases of distress, alleviate the sufferings of the persecuted. If any fellowship of the Spirit. If there be an intimate relation established among all Christians, by their being made mutual partakers of the Holy Ghost. If any bowels and mercies. If you, as persons whom I have brought to God at the hazard of my life, feel sympathetic tenderness for me now in a further state of suffering.

2. Fulfil ye my joy. You ought to complete my joy, who have suffered so much to bring you into the possession of these blessings, by being likeminded with myself, having the same love to God. His cause, and me as I have to Him, His cause, and you.

3. Let nothing be done through strife. Never be opposed to each other; never act from separate interests. You are all brethren, and of one body; therefore let every member feel and labor for the welfare of the whole. But in lowliness of mind. Have always a humbling view of yourselves, and this will lead you to prefer others to yourselves; for, as you know your own secret defects, charity will lead you to suppose that your brethren are more holy and more devoted to God than you are; and they will think the same of you, their secret defects also being known only to themselves.

MATTHEW HENRY

(3) We must interest ourselves in the concerns of others, in Christian love and sympathy: Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others, v. 4. A selfish spirit is destructive of Christian love. We must love our neighbour as ourselves, and make his case our own.

II. A gospel pattern proposed is the example of our Lord Jesus Christ: Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, v. 5. Christians must be of Christ's mind. We must bear a resemblance to his life, if we would have the benefit of his death. He was eminently humble, and this is what we are peculiarly to learn of him. If we were lowly-minded, we should be like-minded; and, if we were like Christ, we should be lowly-minded. Walk in the same spirit with the Lord Jesus, who humbled himself to sufferings and death for us.

1. Here are the two natures of Christ. His divine nature: Who being in the form of God (v. 6), partaking of the divine nature, as the eternal Son of God.

He thought it no robbery to be equal with God; did not think himself guilty of any invasion of what did not belong to him. It is the highest degree of robbery for any mere man or mere creature to pretend to be equal with God.

His human nature: He was made in the likeness of men, and found in fashion as a man. He was really and truly man. And he voluntarily assumed human nature; it was his own act. We cannot say that our participation of the human nature is so. Herein he emptied himself, to clothe himself with the rags of human nature.

Here are,

2. His two estates, of humiliation and exaltation. (1) His humiliation. The form of a servant. He was not only God's servant, but he came to minister to men, and was among them as one who serveth. One would think that the Lord Jesus, if he would be a man, should have been a prince. But quite the contrary: He took upon him the form of a servant. He was brought up meanly, probably working with his supposed father at his trade. His whole life was a life of humiliation.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

men; for, conscious of his entire dependence on God for all his abilities, even as they are dependent on God for theirs, he will not pride himself on his abilities, or exalt self in his conduct toward others (Eph. 4:2; Col. 3:12) [NEANDER]. let each esteem —Translate as Greek, "esteeming each other superior to yourselves." Instead of fixing your eyes on those points in which you excel, fix them on those in which your neighbor excels you: this is true "humility." 4. The oldest MSS. read, "Not looking each of you (plural, Greek) on his own things (i.e., not having regard solely to them), but each of you on the things of others" also. Cf. vs. 21; also Paul's own example (ch. 1:24). 5. The oldest MSS. read, "Have this mind in you. . . ." He does not put forward himself (see Note, vs. 4, and ch. 1:24) as an example, but Christ, THE ONE pre-eminently who sought not His own, but "humbled Himself" (vs. 8), first in taking on Him our nature, secondly, in humbling Himself further in that nature (Rom. 15: 3). 6. Translate, "Who subsisting (or existing, viz., originally: the Greek is not the simple substantive verb, to be) in the form of God (the divine essence is not meant: but the external self-manifesting characteristics of God, the form shining forth from His glorious essence. The divine nature had infinite BEAUTY in itself, even without any creature contemplating that beauty: that beauty was 'the form of God'; as 'the form of a servant' (vs. 7), which is in contrasted opposition to it, takes for granted the existence of His human nature, so 'the form of God' takes for granted His divine nature [BENGEL], cf. John 5:37; 17:5; Col. 1:15, 'Who is the IMAGE of the invisible God' at a time before 'every creature,' II Corinthians 4:4, esteemed (the same Greek verb as in vs. 3) His being on an equality with God "no (act of) robbery" or self-arrogation; claiming to one's self what does not belong to him. ELLICOTT, WAHL, and others have translated, "A thing to be grasped at," which would require the Greek to be harpagma, whereas harpagmos means the act of seizing. So harpagmos means in the only other passage where it occurs, PLUTARCH, De educatione puerorum, 120. The same insuperable objection lies against ALFORD'S translation, "He regarded not as self-enrichment (i.e., an opportunity for self-exaltation) His equality with God." His argument is that the antithesis (vs. 7) requires it, "He used His equality with God as an opportunity, not for self-exaltation, but for self-abasement, or emptying Himself. But the antithesis is not between His being on an equality with God, and His emptying Himself; for He never emptied Himself of the fulness of His Godhead, or His "BEING on an equality with God"; but between His being "in the FORM (i.e., the outward glorious self-manifestation) of God," and His "taking on Him the form of a servant," whereby He in a great measure emptied Himself of His precedent "form," or outward self-manifesting glory as God. Not "looking on His own things" (vs. 4), He, though existing in the form of God, He esteemed it no robbery to be on an equality with God, yet made Himself of no reputation. "Being on an equality with God," is not identical with "subsisting in the form of God"; the latter expresses the external characteristics, majesty, and beauty of the Deity, which "He emptied Himself of," to assume "the form of a servant"; the former, "HIS BEING," or NATURE, His already existing STATE OF EQUALITY with God, both the Father and the Son having the same ESSENCE. A glimpse of Him "in the form of God," previous to His incarnation, was given to Moses (Exod. 24:10, 11), Aaron, etc. 7. made himself of no reputation, and . . .and—rather as the Greek, "emptied Himself, taking upon him the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men." The two latter clauses (there being no conjunctions, "and–and," in the Greek) expresses in what Christ's "emptying of Himself" consists, viz., in "taking the form of a servant" (Note, Heb. 10:5; cf. Exod. 21:5, 6, and Ps. 40:6, proving that it was at the time when He assumed a body, He took "the form of a servant"), and in order to explain how He took "the form of a servant," there is added, by "being made in the likeness of men." His subjection to the law (Luke 2:21; Gal. 4:4) and to His parents (Luke 2:51), His low state as a carpenter, and carpenter's reputed son (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6: 3), His betrayal for the price of a bond-servant (Exod. 21:32), and slave-like death to relieve us from the slavery of sin and death, finally and chiefly, His servant-like dependence as man on God, while His divinity was not outwardly manifested (Isa. 49: 3, 7), are all marks of His "form as a servant." This proves: (1) He was in the form of a servant as soon as He was made man. (2) He was "in the form of God" before He was "in the form of a servant."

ADAM CLARKE

4. Look not every man on his own things. Do nothing through self-interest in the things of God nor arrogate to yourselves gifts, graces, and fruits which belong to others; you are all called to promote God's glory and the salvation of men.

5. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. Christ labored to promote no separate interest; as man He studied to promote the glory of God and the welfare and salvation of the human race. See then that you have the same "disposition" that was in Jesus.

6. Thought it not robbery to be equal with God. The word which we translate robbery has been supposed to imply "a thing eagerly to be seized, coveted, or desired," and on this interpretation the passage has been translated: "Who, being in the form of God, did not think it a matter to be earnestly desired to appear equal to God; but made himself of no reputation." Though He was from eternity in the form of God—possessed of the same glory—yet He thought it right to veil this glory and not to appear with it among the children of men; and therefore He was made in the likeness of men and took upon Him the form or "appearance" of a servant. On this account I prefer this sense of the word before that given in our text, which does not agree so well with the other expressions in the context.

7. But made himself of no reputation. "He emptied himself"—did not appear in His glory, for He assumed the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of man.

MATTHEW HENRY

But the lowest step of his humiliation was his dying the death of the cross. He became obedient to death, even the death of the cross. He not only suffered, but was voluntarily obedient. There is an emphasis laid upon the manner of his dying, which had in it all the circumstances possible which are humbling: Even the death of the cross, a cursed, shameful death,—full of pain,—and the death of a malefactor and a slave, not of a free-man,—exposed as a public spectacle.

(2) His exaltation: Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him. Because he humbled himself, God exalted him; and he highly exalted him. He exalted his whole person, the human nature as well as the divine. His exaltation here is made to consist in honour and power. He had a name above every name. Every knee must bow to him.

The whole creation must be in subjection to him: things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, the inhabitants of heaven and earth, the living and the dead. At the name of Jesus all should pay a solemn homage.

Every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord. The kingdom of Christ reaches to heaven and earth, and to all the creatures in each, and to the dead as well as the living.—To the glory of God the Father. Whatever respect is paid to Christ redounds to the honour of the Father.

He urges this from the consideration of their readiness always to obey the gospel: "As you have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence," v. 12. They were not merely awed by the apostle's presence, but did it even much more in his absence.

I. He exhorts them to diligence and seriousness in the Christian course: Work out your own salvation. It concerns us above all things to secure the welfare of our souls: whatever becomes of other things, let us take care of our best interests. It is our own salvation. It is not for us to judge other people; we have enough to do to look to ourselves. We are required to work out our salvation. The word signifies working thoroughly and taking true pains. We must

(3) He did as really subsist in the divine nature, as in the form of a servant, or in the nature of man. For He was as much "in the form of God" as "in the form of a servant"; and was so in the form of God as "to be on an equality with God"; He therefore could have been none other than God; for God saith, "To whom will ye liken Me and make Me equal?" (Isa. 46:5), [BISHOP PEARSON]. His emptying Himself presupposes His previous plenitude of Godhead (John 1:14; Col. 1:19; 2:9). He remained full of this; yet He bore Himself as if He were empty. 8. being found in fashion as a man—being already, by His "emptying Himself," in the form of a servant, or likeness of man (Rom. 8:3), "He humbled Himself (still further by) becoming obedient even unto death (not as English Version, 'He humbled Himself and became . . .'; the Greek has no 'and,' and has the participle, not the verb), and that the death of the cross." "Fashion" expresses that He had the outward guise, speech, and look. In vs. 7, in the Greek, the emphasis is on Himself (which stands before the Greek verb), "He emptied Himself," His divine self, viewed in respect to what He had heretofore been; in vs. 8 the emphasis is on "humbled" (which stands before the Greek "Himself"); He not only "emptied Himself" of His previous "form of God," but submitted to positive HUMILIATION. He "became obedient," viz., to God, as His "servant" (Rom. 5:19; Heb. 5:8). Therefore "God" is said to "exalt" Him (vs. 9), even as it was God to whom He became voluntarily "obedient." "Even unto death" expresses the climax of His obedience (John 10:18). 9. Wherefore—as the just consequence of His self-humiliation and obedience (Ps. 8:5, 6; 110:1, 7; Matt. 28:18; Luke 24:26; John 5:27; 10:17; Rom. 14:9; Eph. 1:20-22; Heb. 2:9). An intimation, that if we would hereafter be exalted, we too must, after His example. now humble ourselves (vss. 3, 5; ch. 3:21; I Pet. 5:5, 6). Christ emptied Christ; God exalted Christ as man to equality with God [BENGEL]. highly exalted—Greek, "super-eminently exalted" (Eph. 4:10). given him—Greek, "bestowed on Him." a name—along with the corresponding reality, glory and majesty. which—Translate, (viz.), "that which is above every name." The name "JESUS" (vs. 10), which is even now in glory His name of honor (Acts 9:5). "Above" not only men, but angels (Eph. 1:21). 10. at the name—rather as Greek, "in the name." bow—rather, "bend," in token of worship. Referring to Isaiah 45:23; quoted also in Romans 14:11. To worship "in the name of Jesus," is to worship Jesus Himself (cf. vs. 11; Prov. 18:10), or God in Christ (John 16:23; Eph. 3:14). Cf. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord (i.e., whosoever shall call on the Lord in His revealed character) shall be saved" (Rom. 10:13; I Cor. 1:2); "all that call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord" (cf. II Tim. 2: 22); "call on the Lord"; Acts 7:59, "calling upon . . . and saying, Lord Jesus" (Acts 9:14, 21; 22:16). of things in heaven—angels. They worship Him not only as God, but as the ascended God-man, "Jesus" (Eph. 1:21; Heb. 1:6; I Pet. 3:22). in earth—men; among whom He tabernacled for a time. under the earth—the dead; among whom He was numbered once (Rom. 14:9, 11; Eph. 4:9, 10; Rev. 5:13). The demons and the lost may be included indirectly, as even they give homage, though one of fear, not love, to Jesus (Mark 3:11; Luke 8:31; Jas. 2:19, see Note, vs. 11). 11. every tongue—Cf. "every knee" (vs. 10). In every way He shall be acknowledged as Lord (no longer as "servant," vs. 7). As none can fully do so "but by the Holy Ghost" (I Cor. 12:3), the spirits of good men who are dead, must be the class directly meant, vs. 10, "under the earth." to the glory of God the Father—the grand end of Christ's mediatorial office and kingdom, which shall cease when this end shall have been fully realized (John 5:19-23, 30; 17:1, 4-7; I Cor. 15:24-28. 12. Wherefore—Seeing that we have in Christ such a specimen of glory resulting from "obedience" (vs. 8) and humiliation, see that ye also be "obedient," and so "your salvation" shall follow your obedience. as ye have . . . obeyed—"even as ye have been obedient." viz., to God, as Jesus was "obedient" unto God (Note, vs. 8). not as . . .—"not as if" it were a matter to be done "in my presence only, but now (as things are) much more (with more earnestness) (in my absence)" (because my help is withdrawn from you) [ALFORD]. work out—carry out to its full perfection. "Salvation" is "worked in" (vs. 13; Eph. 1:11) believers by the Spirit, who enables them through faith to be justified once for all; but it needs, as a progressive work, to be "worked out" by obedience, through the help of the same Spirit, unto perfection (II Pet. 1:5-8).

ADAM CLARKE

8. And being found in fashion as a man. This clause should be joined to the preceding, and thus translated: "Being made in the likeness of man, and was found in fashion as a man." He humbled himself. Laid himself as low as possible: (1) In emptying himself—laying aside the effulgence of His glory. (2) In being incarnate—taking upon Him the human form. (3) In becoming a Servant—assuming the lowest innocent character, that of being the Servant of all. (4) In condescending to die. to which He was not naturally liable, as having never sinned, and therefore had a right in His human nature to immortality, without passing under the empire of death. (5) In condescending, not only to death, but to the lowest and most ignominious kind of death. the death of the cross, the punishment of the meanest of slaves and worst of felons. What must sin have been in the sight of God when it required such abasement in Jesus Christ to make an atonement for it, and undo its influence and malignity!

9. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him. He has given him a name, "the name," which is above every name. This makes it much more emphatic. According to Eph. i. 20-21, the Man Christ Jesus is exalted to the right hand of God, "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come." But if we refer to any particular epithet, then the name Jesus or "Saviour" must be that which is intended; as no being either in heaven or earth can possess this name as He who is the Redeemer of the world does.

10. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow. That all human beings should consider themselves redeemed unto God by His blood. In a word, that all the spirits of just men made perfect, now in a state of blessedness; all human beings still in their state of probation on earth; and all that are in the shades below, who have, through their own fault, died without having received His salvation; should acknowledge Him.

11. And that every tongue should confess. That all those before mentioned should acknowledge that Jesus Christ is Lord, or "absolute Governor," and thus glorify God the Father, who has exalted this human nature to this state of ineffable glory, in virtue of its passion, death, resurrection, and the atonement which it has made, by which so many attributes of the divine nature have become illustrated, the divine law magnified and made honorable, and an eternal glory provided for man. Others by "things in heaven" understand the holy angels; by "things on earth," human beings generally; and by "things under the earth," fallen spirits of every description. Perhaps the three expressions are designed to comprehend all beings of all kinds, all creatures.

12. As ye have always obeyed. Continue to act on the same principles and from the same motives; having the same disposition which was in Christ; laboring so as to promote His glory.

not only work at our salvation, by doing something now and then about it; but we must work out our salvation, by doing all that is to be done, and persevering therein to the end. We cannot attain salvation without the utmost care and diligence.

With fear and trembling, that is, with great care and circumspection. Fear is a great guard and preservative from evil.

"And because it is God who worketh in you, do you work out your salvation. Work, for he worketh." God is ready to concur with his grace, and assist our faithful endeavours. The operations of God's grace in us are so far from excusing, that they are intended to quicken our endeavours.

"And work out our salvation with fear and trembling, for he worketh in you. Work with fear, for he works of his good pleasure."—To will and to do. It is the grace of God which inclines the will to that which is good: and then enables us to perform it. Of his good pleasure. As we cannot act without God's grace, so we cannot pretend to deserve it.

Verses 14–18

The apostle exhorts them to adorn their Christian profession by a suitable temper and behaviour. 1. By a cheerful obedience to the commands of God (v. 14): "Do all things without murmurings. Mind your work, and do not quarrel with it." God's commands were given to be obeyed, not to be disputed. 2. By peaceableness and love one to another. "Do all things without disputing. The light of truth and the life of religion are often lost in the heats and mists of disputation."

3. By a blameless conversation towards all men (v. 15): "That you may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke." We should endeavour not only not to do hurt, but not to come under the just suspicion of it. The sons of God. The children of God should differ from the sons of men. Without rebuke. We should endeavour, not only to get to heaven, but to get thither without a blot. In the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. Where there is no true religion, little is to be expected but crookedness and perverseness; and the more crooked and perverse others are among whom we live, the more careful we should be to keep ourselves blameless and harmless. Among whom you shine as lights in the world. Good Christians are lights in the world. When God raises up a good man in any place, he sets up a light in that place. They must shine as well as be sincere.—Holding forth the word of life, v. 16. It is our duty not only to hold fast, but to hold forth the word of life; to hold it forth for the benefit of others, to hold it forth as the candlestick holds forth the candle.

"That I may rejoice in the day of Christ; not only rejoice in your steadfastness, but in your usefulness." He would have them think that he had not run in vain, nor laboured in vain. Running denotes vehemence and vigour; labour denotes constancy and close application. It is a great joy to ministers when they perceive that they have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain; and it will be their rejoicing in the day of Christ, when their converts will be their crown.

your own—The emphasis is on this. Now that I am not present to further the work of your salvation, "work out your own salvation" yourselves the more carefully. Do not think this work cannot go on because I am absent; "for (vs. 13) it is God that worketh in you. . . ." In this case adopt a rule different from the former (vs. 4), but resting on the same principle of "lowliness of mind" (vs. 3), viz., "look each on his own things," instead of "disputings" with others (vs. 14). salvation—which is in "Jesus" (vs. 10), as His name (meaning God-Saviour) implies. with fear and trembling—the very feeling enjoined on "servants," as to what ought to accompany their "obedience" (Eph. 6:5). So here: See that, as "servants" to God, after the example of Christ, ye be so "with the fear and trembling" which becomes servants; not slavish fear, but trembling anxiety not to fall short of the goal (I Cor. 9:26, 27; Heb. 4:1, "Let us fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any should come short of it"), resulting from a sense of our human insufficiency, and from the consciousness that all depends on the power of God, "who worketh both to will and to do" (Rom. 11:20). "Paul, though joyous, writes seriously" [J. J. WOLF]. 13. For—encouragement to work: "For it is God who worketh in you," always present with you, though I be absent. It is not said, "Work out your own salvation, though it is God . . .," but, "because it is God who. . . ." The will, and the power to work, being first instalments of His grace, encourage us to make full proof of, and carry out to the end, the "salvation" which He has first "worked," and is still "working in" us, enabling us to "work it out." "Our will does nothing thereunto without grace; but grace is inactive without our will" [ST. BERNARD]. Man is, in different senses, entirely active, and entirely passive: God producing all, and we acting all. worketh—rather as Greek, "worketh effectually." We cannot of ourselves embrace the Gospel of grace: "the will" (Ps. 110:3; II Cor. 3:5) comes solely of God's gift to whom He will (John 6:44, 65); so also the power "to do" (rather, "to work effectually," as the Greek is the same as that for "worketh in"), i.e., effectual perseverance to the end, is wholly of God's gift (ch. 1:6; Heb. 13:21). of his good pleasure—rather as Greek, "FOR His good pleasure"; in order to carry out His sovereign gracious purpose towards you (Eph. 1:5, 9). 14. murmurings—secret murmurings and complaints against your fellow men arising from selfishness: opposed to the example of Jesus just mentioned (cf. the use of the word, John 7:12, 13; Acts 6:1; I Peter 4:9; Jude 16). disputings—The Greek is translated "doubting" in I Tim. 2:8. But here referring to profitless "disputings" with our fellow men, in relation to whom we are called on to be "blameless and harmless" (vs. 15): so the Greek is translated, Mark 9:33, 34. These disputings flow from "vainglory" reprobated (vs. 3); and abounded among the Aristotelian philosophers in Macedon, where Philippi was. 15. blameless and harmless—without either the repute of mischief, or the inclination to do it [ALFORD]. sons—rather as Greek, "the children of God" (Rom. 8:14-16). Imitation of our heavenly Father is the instinctive guide to our duty as His children, more than any external law (Matt. 5:44, 45, 48). without rebuke—"without (giving handle for) reproach." The whole verse tacitly refers by contrast to Deuteronomy 32:5, "Their spot . . . not . . . of His children . . . a perverse and crooked generation" (cf. I Pet. 2:12). ye shine—lit., "appear" [TRENCH]. "Show yourselves" (cf. Matt. 5:14-16; Eph. 5:8-13). as lights in the world—The Greek expresses "as luminaries in the world," as the sun and moon, "the lights," or "great lights," in the material world or in the firmament. LXX uses the very same Greek word in the passage, Genesis 1:14, 16; cf. Note, Revelation 21:11. 16. Holding forth—to them, and so applying it (the common meaning of the Greek; perhaps here including also the other meaning, "holding fast"). The image of light-bearers or luminaries is carried on from vs. 15. As the heavenly luminaries' light is closely connected with the life of animals, so ye hold forth the light of Christ's "word" (received from me) which is the "life" of the Gentiles (John 1:4; I John 1:1, 5-7). Christ is "the Light of the world" (John 8:12); believers are only "lightbearers" reflecting His light. that I may rejoice in—lit., "with a view to (your being) a subject of rejoicing to me against the day of Christ" (ch. 4:1; II Cor. 1:14; I Thess. 2:19). that I have not run in vain—that it was not in vain that I labored for your spiritual good. 17. Yea, and if—rather as Greek, "Yea, if even"; implying that he regarded the contingency as not unlikely: He had assumed the possibility of his being found

ADAM CLARKE

Work out your own salvation. Go on, walking by the same rule and minding the same thing, till your salvation be completed.

With fear and trembling. Considering the difficulty of the work and the danger of miscarriage.

13. To will and to do. The power to will and the power to act must necessarily come from God, who is the Author of both soul and body, and of all their powers and energies; but the act of volition and the act of working come from the man. Because God works in them the power to will and the power to do, therefore the apostle exhorts them to work out their own salvation, most manifestly showing that the use of the powers of volition and action belongs to themselves. They cannot do God's work; they cannot produce in themselves a power to will and to do. And God will not do their work; He will not work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

14. Do all things without murmurings. "Without grumblings and altercations."

15. That ye may be blameless. In yourselves, and harmless to others. The sons of God. Showing by your holy conduct that you are partakers of the divine nature.

Without rebuke. Persons against whom no charge of transgression can justly be laid. Among whom ye shine. Be like the sun and moon; bless even the perverse and disobedient by your light and splendor.

16. Holding forth the word of life. An allusion, some think, to those towers which were built at the entrance of harbors, on which fires were kept during the night to direct ships into the port.

MATTHEW HENRY

The apostle not only ran and laboured for them with satisfaction, he was ready to suffer for their good (v. 17): Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all. He could willingly be a sacrifice at their altars, to serve the faith of God's elect. Could Paul think it worth while to shed his blood for the service of the church, and shall we think it much to take a little pains?

He could rejoice to seal his doctrine with his blood (v. 18): For the same cause also do you joy and rejoice with me. It is the will of God that good Christians should be much in rejoicing; and those who are happy in good ministers have a great deal of reason to joy and rejoice with them.

Verses 19–30

I. He speaks of Timothy, whom he intended to send to the Philippians. For I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your state. Timothy was a non-such. None comparable to Timothy, a man of an excellent spirit and tender heart. Who will naturally care for your state. It is best with us when our duty becomes in a manner natural to us. Naturally, that is, sincerely, and not in pretence only. It is the duty of ministers to care for the state of their people and be concerned for their welfare. It is a rare thing to find one who does it naturally. All seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's, v. 21. Did Paul say this in haste, as David said, All men are liars? He means the generality; all, either the most, or all in comparison of Timothy. Many prefer their own credit, ease, and safety, before truth, holiness, and duty, but Timothy was none of these.—You know the proof of him, v. 22. Timothy was a man who had been tried, and was faithful in all that befell him. All the churches with whom he had acquaintance knew the proof of him. He was a man as good as he seemed to be. As a son with a father, he hath served with me in the gospel. He was Paul's assistant in many places. Their ministrations together were with great respect on the one side and great tenderness and kindness on the other—an admirable example to elder and younger ministers united in the same service. Him therefore I hope to send presently, as soon as I shall see how it will go with me, v. 23. He was now a prisoner, and did not know what would be the issue. He hoped to come himself (v. 24): But I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly. Paul desired his liberty, not that he might take his pleasure, but that he might do good.—I trust in the Lord. He expresses his hope of seeing them, with a humble submission to the divine will.

II. Concerning Epaphroditus, whom he calls his brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, alive at Christ's coming (for in every age Christ designed Christians to stand in preparedness for His coming as at hand): he here puts a supposition which he regards as more likely, viz., his own death before Christ's coming. I be offered—rather as Greek, "I am poured out." "I am made a libation." Present, not future, as the danger is threatening him now. As in sacrifices libations of wine were "poured upon" the offerings, so he represents his Philippian converts, offered through faith (or else their faith itself), as the sacrifice, and his blood as the libation "poured upon" it (cf. Rom. 15:16; II Tim. 4:6). service—Greek, "priest's ministration"; carrying out the image of a sacrifice. I joy—for myself (ch. 1: 21, 23). His expectation of release from prison is much fainter, than in the Epistles to Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon, written somewhat earlier from Rome. The appointment of Tigellinus to be Prætorian Prefect was probably the cause of this change. See Introduction. rejoice with you all—ALFORD translates, "I congratulate you all," viz. on the honor occurring to you by my blood being poured out on the sacrifice of your faith. If they rejoiced already (as English Version represents), what need of his urging them, "Do ye also joy." 18. "Do ye also rejoice" at this honor to you, "and congratulate me" on my blessed "gain" (ch. 1:21). 19. Vs. 22, "ye know the proof of him . . that . . . he hath served with me," implies that Timothy had been long with Paul at Philippi. Accordingly, in the history (Acts 16:1-4; 17:10, 14), we find them setting out together from Derbe in Lycaonia, and together again at Berea in Macedonia, near the conclusion of Paul's missionary journey: an undesigned coincidence between the Epistle and history, a mark of genuineness [PALEY]. From vss. 19-50, it appears Epaphroditus was to set out at once to allay the anxiety of the Philippians on his account, and at the same time bearing the Epistle; Timothy was to follow after the apostle's liberation was decided, when they could arrange their plans more definitely as to where Timothy should, on his return with tidings from Philippi, meet Paul, who was designing by a wider circuit, and slower progress, to reach that city. Paul's reason for sending Timothy so soon after having heard of the Philippians from Epaphroditus was that they were now suffering persecutions (ch. 1:28-30); and besides, Epaphroditus' delay through sickness on his journey to Rome from Philippi, made the tidings he brought to be of less recent date than Paul desired. Paul himself also hoped to visit them shortly. But I trust—Yet my death is by no means certain; yea, "I hope (Greek) in the Lord" (i.e., by the Lord's help). unto you—lit., "for you," i.e., to your satisfaction, not merely motion, to you. I also—that not only you "may be of good courage" (so Greek) on hearing of me (vs. 23), but "I also, when I know your state." 20. His reason for sending Timothy above all others: I have none so "like-minded," lit., "like-souled," with myself as is Timothy. Cf. Deuteronomy 13:6, "Thy friend which is as thine own soul" (Ps. 55:14). Paul's second self. naturally—Greek, "genuinely"; "with sincere solicitude." A case wherein the Spirit of God so changed man's nature, that to be natural was with him to be spiritual: the great point to be aimed at. 21. Translate as Greek, "They all" (viz., who are now with me, ch. 1:14, 17; ch. 4:21: such Demas, then with him, proved to be, Col. 4:14; cf. II Tim. 4:10; Philemon 24). seek their own—opposed to Paul's precept (vs. 4; I Cor. 10:24, 33; 13:5). This is spoken, by comparison with Timothy; for ch. 1: 16, 17 implies that some of those with Paul at Rome were genuine Christians, though not so self-sacrificing as Timothy. Few come to the help of the Lord's cause, where ease, fame, and gain have to be sacrificed. Most help only when Christ's gain is compatible with their own (Judg. 5:17, 23). 22. Rare praise (Neh. 7:2). as a son with the father—Translate, "as a child (serveth) a father." served with me—When we might expect the sentence to run thus, "As a child serveth a father, so he served me"; he changes it to "served with me" in modesty; as Christians are not servants TO one another, but servants of God WITH one another (cf. ch. 3:17). in the gospel—Greek, "unto," or "for the Gospel." 23. so soon as I shall see—i.e., so soon as I shall have known for certain. 24. also myself—as well as Timothy. 25. I supposed—"I thought it necessary." to send—It was properly a sending Epaphroditus back (ch. 4:18). But as he had come intending to stay some time with Paul, the latter uses the word "send" (cf. vs. 30). fellow soldier—in the "good fight" of faith (ch. 1:27, 30; II Tim. 2:3; 4:7). your messenger—lit., "apostle." The "apostles" or "messengers of the churches" (Rom. 16:7; II Cor. 8:23), were distinct from the "apostles" specially com-

17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service. The metaphor appears to be carried on. As it was customary for the weather-beaten mariner, when he had gained his port, to offer a sacrifice to God of some particular animal which he had vowed while in his state of danger, and this was considered to be a "religious service," the apostle, pursuing the idea, states himself to be willing to become the "libation" that was to be "poured upon the sacrifice."

18. For the same cause also do ye joy. Should I be thus offered, as I shall rejoice in it, do you also rejoice that I am counted worthy of this high honor.

19. But I trust in the Lord Jesus. He is Governor and Disposer of all events, being above all principality and power; and I humbly confide in His power and goodness that I shall be a little longer spared to visit you again, v. 24, and to be able to send Timothy shortly to you. When I know your state. By the correct information which I shall receive from Timothy.

20. For I have no man likeminded. He is "of the same soul"; a man after my own heart.

21. For all seek their own. This must relate to the persons who preached Christ "even of envy and strife," chap. i. 15.

22. Ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me. The Philippians had full proof of the affectionate attachment of Timothy to Paul, for he had labored with him there, as we learn from Acts xvi. 1-3 and xvii. 14; and we find from what is said here that Timothy was not a servant to the apostle, but that he had served with him.

23. How it will go with me. The apostle was now in captivity; his trial appears to have been approaching, and of its issue he was doubtful, though he seems to have had a general persuasion that he should be spared (see v. 19 and v. 24).

who ministered to my wants. He had an earnest desire to come to them, and Paul was willing he should.

1. Epaphroditus had been sick: They had heard that he had been sick, v. 26. And indeed he was sick, nigh unto death, v. 27. 2. The Philippians were exceedingly sorry to hear of his sickness. He was one for whom they had a particular respect and affection, and thought fit to choose out to send to the apostle. 3. It pleased God to recover and spare him: But God had mercy on him, v. 27. The apostle owns it is a great mercy to himself, as well as to Epaphroditus and others. He was sensibly touched with the thoughts of so great a loss: Lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. "Lest, besides the sorrow of my own imprisonment, I should have the sorrow of his death." 4. Epaphroditus was willing to pay a visit to the Philippians, that he might be comforted with those who had sorrowed for him when he was sick: "That when you see him again you may rejoice" (v. 28). He gave himself the pleasure of comforting them by the sight of so dear a friend. "Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness, and hold such in reputation: account such men valuable, who are zealous and faithful, and let them be highly loved and regarded." It seems he had caught his illness in the work of God: It was for the work of Christ that he was nigh to death, and to supply their lack of service to him. The apostle reckons they ought to love him the more upon that account. What is given us in answer to prayer should be received with great thankfulness and joy.

missioned by Christ, as the Twelve and Paul. ministered to my wants—by conveying the contributions from Phillippi. The Greek leitourgon, lit., implies ministering in the ministerial office. Probably Epaphroditus was a presbyter or else a deacon. 26. For—reason for thinking it "necessary to send" "Epaphroditus. Translate as Greek, "Inasmuch as he was longing after you all." full of heaviness—The Greek expresses the being worn out and overpowered with heavy grief. because that ye had heard that he had been sick—rather, "that he was sick." He felt how exceedingly saddened you would be in hearing it; and he now is hastening to relieve your minds of the anxiety. 27. Epaphroditus' sickness proves that the apostles had not ordinarily the permanent gift of miracles, any more than of inspiration: both were vouchsafed to them only for each particular occasion, as the Spirit thought fit. lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow—viz., the sorrow of losing him by death, in addition to the sorrow of my imprisonment. Here only occurs anything of a sorrowful tone in this Epistle, which generally is most joyous. 29. Receive him—There seems to be something behind respecting him. If extreme affection had been the sole ground of his "heaviness," no such exhortation would have been needed [ALFORD]. in reputation—"in honor." 30. for the work of Christ—viz., the bringing of a supply to me, the minister of Christ. He was probably in a delicate state of health in setting out from Philippi; but at all hazards he undertook this service of Chirstian love, which cost him a serious sickness. not regarding his life—Most of the oldest MSS. read, "hazarding. . . ." to supply your lack of service—Not that Paul would imply, they lacked the will: what they "lacked" was the "opportunity" by which to send their accustomed bounty (ch. 4:10). "That which ye would have done if you could [but which you could not through absence], he did for you; therefore receive him with all joy" [ALFORD].

ADAM CLARKE

27. Lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. The sorrows of his death, added to the sorrow he endured on account of his sickness; or he may refer to his own state of affliction, being imprisoned and maltreated.

28. The more carefully. With the "more haste or dispatch"; because, having suffered so much on account of his apprehended death, they could not be too soon comforted by seeing him alive and restored.

29. Receive him therefore in the Lord. For the Lord's sake receive him, and as the Lord's servant.

30. For the work of Christ. Preaching the gospel, and ministering to the distressed. He was nigh unto death. Having labored far beyond his strength. Not regarding his life. Instead of not regarding his life, "risking his life" is the reading of some MSS.

It seems the church of the Philippians, though a faithful and flourishing church, was disturbed by the judaizing teachers.

I. He exhorts them to rejoice in the Lord (v. 1). The more we take of the comfort of our religion the more closely we shall cleave to it: the more we rejoice in Christ the more willing we shall be to suffer for him, and the less danger of being drawn away from him.

II. He cautions them to take heed of those false teachers: To write the same thing to you to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe. Ministers must not think anything grievous to themselves which they have reason to believe is safe and edifying to the people. It is good for us often to hear the same truths. It is a wanton curiosity to desire always to hear some new thing. Beware of dogs, v. 2. Dogs, for their malice against the faithful professors of the gospel of Christ, barking at them and biting them.

They cried up good works in opposition to the faith of Christ; but Paul calls them evil workers: they boasted themselves to be of the circumcision; but he calls them the concision.

Vss. 1-21. WARNING AGAINST JUDAIZERS: HE HAS GREATER CAUSE THAN THEY TO TRUST IN LEGAL RIGHTEOUSNESS, BUT RENOUNCED IT FOR CHRIST'S RIGHTEOUSNESS, IN WHICH HE PRESSES AFTER PERFECTION: WARNING AGAINST CARNAL PERSONS: CONTRAST OF THE BELIEVER'S LIFE AND HOPE. 1. Finally—rather, not with the notion of time, but making a transition to another general subject, "Furthermore" [BENGEL and WAHL] as in I Thessalonians 4:1. Lit., "As to what remains. . . ." It is often used at the conclusion of Epistles for "finally" (Eph. 6:10, II Thess. 3:1). But it is not restricted to this meaning, as ALFORD thinks, supposing that Paul used it here intending to close his Epistle, but was led by the mention of the Judaizers into a more lengthened dissertation. the same things—concerning "rejoicing," the prevailing feature in this Epistle (ch. 1:18, 25; 2:17; 4:4, where, cf. the "again I say," with "the same things" here). In the Lord—marks the true ground of joy, in contrast with "having confidence in the flesh," or in any outward sensible matter of boasting (vs. 3). not grievous—"not irksome." for you it is safe—Spiritual joy is the best safety against error (vs. 2; Neh. 8:10, end). 2. Beware—Greek, "Have your eye on" so as to beware of. Contrast "mark," or "observe," viz., so as to follow vs. 17. dogs—Greek, "the dogs," viz., those impure persons "of whom I have told you often" (vs. 18, 19); "the abominable" (cf. Rev. 21:8, with 22:15; Matt. 7:6; Titus 1:15, 16): "dogs" in filthiness, unchastity, and snarling (Deut. 23:18; Ps. 59:6, 14, 15; II Pet. 2:22): especially "enemies of the cross of Christ" (vs. 18; Ps. 22:16, 20). The Jews regarded the Gentiles as "dogs" (Matt. 15:26); but by their own unbelief they have ceased to be the true Israel, and are become "dogs" (cf. Isa. 56:10, 11). evil workers—II Corinthians 11:13, "deceitful workers." Not simply "evildoers" are meant, but men who "worked," indeed, ostensibly for the Gospel, but worked for evil: "serving not our Lord, but their own belly" (vs. 19; cf. Rom. 16:18). Translate, "The evil workmen," i.e., bad teachers (cf. II Tim. 2:15). concision—Circumcision had now lost its spiritual significance, and was now become to those who rested on it as any ground of justification, a senseless mutilation. Christians have the only true circumcision, viz., that of the heart; legalists have only "concision," i.e., the cutting off of the flesh. To make "cuttings in the flesh" was expressly prohibited by the law (Lev. 21:5): it was a Gentile-heathenish practice (I Kings 18:28); yet this, writes Paul indignantly, is what these legalists are virtually doing in violation of the law.

CHAPTER 3

1. Rejoice in the Lord. Be always happy, but let that happiness be such as you derive from the Lord. For you it is safe. It is much better to have these divine things committed to writing than confided to memory.

2. Beware of dogs. The Jews, who have here the same appellative which they formerly gave to the Gentiles.

Evil workers. Judaizing teachers, who endeavored to pervert the gospel.

The concision. The "cutting" or "excision"; not the "circumcision." The word is used by the apostle to degrade the pretensions which the Jews made to sanctity by the cutting in their flesh. Circumcision was an honorable thing, for it was a sign of the covenant; but as they now had rejected the new covenant, their circumcision was rendered uncircumcision, and is termed a "cutting," by way of degradation.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. He describes true Christians. We are the circumcision, who worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Here are three characters: 1. They worshipped in the spirit, in opposition to the carnal ordinances of the Old Testament. Christianity teaches us to be inward with God in all the duties of religious worship. The work of religion is to no purpose any further than the heart is employed in it. 2. They rejoice in Christ Jesus. Now that the substance has come the shadows are done away, and we are to rejoice in Christ Jesus only. 3. They have no confidence in the flesh, in those carnal ordinances and outward performances. Our confidence, as well as our joy, is proper to him.

Verses 4–8

The apostle here proposes himself for an example of trusting in Christ only.

I. He shows what he had to boast of as a Jew and a Pharisee. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof to trust in the flesh, I more, v. 4. He had as much to boast of as any Jew of them all. 1. His birth-right privileges. He was not a proselyte, but a native Israelite: of the stock of Israel. And he was of the tribe of Benjamin. A Hebrew of the Hebrews, an Israelite on both sides, and from one generation to another; none of his ancestors had matched with Gentiles. 2. He could boast of his relations to the covenant, for he was circumcised the eighth day. 3. For learning, he was a Pharisee, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel. He was a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee (Acts xxiii. 6). 4. He had a blameless conversation: Touching the righteousness which is of the law, blameless. As to the mere letter of the law and outward observance of it, he could acquit himself from the breach of it and could not be accused by any. 5. He had been an active man for his religion. Concerning zeal, persecuting the church. He showed that he was in good earnest, though he had a zeal without knowledge. All this was stock sufficient to set up with for his justification.

II. How little account he made of these: But what things were gain to me those have I counted loss for Christ (v. 7). "I should have reckoned myself an unspeakable loser if, to adhere to them, I had lost Jesus Christ." The apostle did not persuade them to quit anything but what he had himself quitted.—Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, v. 8. 1. He tells us what it was that he reached after: it was the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord, a believing experimental acquaintance with Christ as Lord; not a speculative, but a practical knowledge of him. And it is the excellency of knowledge. There is an abundant and transcendent excellency in the doctrine of Christ, above all the knowledge of nature, and improvements of human wisdom. 2. He shows how he had quitted his privileges as a Jew and a Pharisee: Yea doubtless; his expression rises with a holy triumph and elevation. But indeed even also do I count all things but loss. He had spoken before of those things, his Jewish privileges: here he speaks of all things. There he had said that he did count them but loss; but it might be asked, "Did he continue still in the same mind?" Now he speaks in the present tense: Yea doubtless, I do count them but loss. He tells us that he had himself practised according to this estimate of the case: For whom I have suffered the loss of all things. When he embarked in the bottom of the Christian religion, he ventured all in it, and suffered the loss of all for the privileges of a Christian. He not only counted them loss, but dung—offals thrown to dogs; they are not only less valuable than Christ, but in the highest degree contemptible, when they come in competition with him.

What he laid hold on: Christ and heaven.

I. The apostle had his heart upon Christ. 1. He desired to win Christ. That I may win him; as the runner wins the prize, as the sailor makes the port he is bound for. 2. That he might be found in him (v. 9). We are undone without a righteousness wherein to appear before God. There is a righteousness provided for us in Jesus Christ. "Not having my own righteousness, which is of the law; not thinking that my outward observances and good deeds are able to atone for my bad ones. The righteousness is that which is through the faith of Christ, not a legal, but evangelical righteousness: The righteousness which is of God by faith, ordained and appointed of God." Faith is the ordained means of saving benefit in all the purchase of his blood.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

3. "We are the (real) circumcision" (Rom. 2:25-29; Col. 2:11). worship God in the Spirit—The oldest MSS. read, "worship by the Spirit of God"; our religious service is rendered by the Spirit (John 4:23, 24). Legal worship was outward, and consisted in outward acts, restricted to certain times and places. Christian worship is spiritual, flowing from the inworkings of the Holy Spirit, not relating to certain isolated acts, but embracing the whole life (Rom. 12:1). In the former, men trusted in something human, whether descent from the theocratic nation, or the righteousness of the law, or mortification of "the flesh" ("Having confidence," or "glorying in the flesh") [NEANDER] (Rom. 1:9). rejoice in Christ Jesus—"make our boast in Christ Jesus," not in the law: the ground of their boasting. have no confidence in the flesh—but in the Spirit. 4. "although I (emphatical) might have confidence even in the flesh." Lit., "I having," but not using, "confidence in the flesh." I more—have more "whereof I might have confidence in the flesh." 5. In three particulars he shows how he "might have confidence in the flesh" (vs. 4): (1) His pure Jewish blood. (2) His legal preciseness and high status as such. (3) His zeal for the law. The Greek is literally, "Being in circumcision an eighth-day person," i.e., not one circumcised in later life as a proselyte, but on the eighth day after birth, as the law directed in the case of Jew-born infants. of the tribe of Benjamin—son of Rachel, not of the maid servant [BENGEL]. Hebrew of the Hebrews—neither one or other parent being Gentile. The "Hebrew," wherever he dwelt, retained the language of his fathers. Thus Paul, though settled in Tarsus, a Greek city, calls himself a Hebrew. A "Grecian" or Hellenist, on the other hand, in the New Testament, is the term used for a Greek-speaking Jew [TRENCH]. touching the law—i.e., as to legal status and strictness. a Pharisee—"of the straitest sect" (Acts 26:5). 6. Concerning—Translate as before and after, "As touching Zeal" (cf. Acts 22:3; 26:9). blameless—Greek, "having become blameless" as to ceremonial righteousness: having attained in the eyes of man blameless legal perfection. As to the holiness before God, which is the inner and truest spirit of the law, and which flows from "the righteousness of God by faith," he on the contrary declares (vss. 12-14) that he has not attained perfection. 7. gain—rather as Greek, "gains"; including all possible advantages of outward status, which he had heretofore enjoyed. I counted—Greek, "I have counted for Christ's sake loss." He no longer uses the plural as in "gains"; for he counts them all but one great "loss" (Matt. 16:26; Luke 9:25). 8. Yea doubtless—The oldest MSS. omit "doubtless" (Greek, "ge"): translate, "nay more." Not only "have I counted" those things just mentioned "loss for Christ's sake, but, moreover, I even DO count ALL things but loss. . . ." for the excellency—Greek, "On account of the surpassing excellency (the super-eminence above them all) of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." my Lord—believing and loving appropriation of Him (Ps. 63: 1; John 20:28). for whom—"on account of whom." I have suffered the loss—not merely I "counted" them "loss," but have actually lost them. all things—The Greek has the article, referring to the preceding "all things"; "I have suffered the loss of them all." dung—Greek, "refuse (such as excrements, dregs, dross) cast to the dogs," as the derivation expresses. A "loss" is of something having value; but "refuse" is thrown away as not worthy of being any more touched or looked at. win—Translate, to accord with the translation, vs. 7, "gain Christ." A man cannot make other things his "gain" or chief confidence, and at the same time "gain Christ." He who loses all things, and even himself, on account of Christ, gains Christ: Christ is His, and He is Christ's (Song of Sol. 2:16; 6:3; Luke 9:23, 24; I Cor. 3:23). 9. be found in him—"be found" at His coming again, living spiritually "in Him" as the element of my life. Once lost, I have been "found," and I hope to be perfectly "found" by Him (Luke 15:8). own righteousness . . . of the law—(V. 6; Rom. 10:3, 5.) "Of," i.e., from. righteousness . . . of God by faith—Greek, "which is from God (resting) upon faith." Paul was transported from legal bondage into Christian freedom at once, and without any gradual transition. Hence, the bands of Pharisaism were loosed instantaneously; and opposition to Pharisaic Judaism took the place of opposition to the Gospel. Thus God's providence fitly prepared him for the work of overthrowing all idea of legal justification. "The righteousness of faith," in Paul's sense, is the righteousness or perfect holiness of Christ appropriated by faith, as the objective ground of confidence for the believer, and

3. We are the circumcision. We who have embraced the faith of Christ crucified are now entered into the new covenant, and according to that new covenant, worship God in the Spirit, "exulting," "making our boast of Christ Jesus," as our only Saviour, having no confidence in the flesh—in any outward rite or ceremony prescribed by the Jewish institutions.

4. Though I might also have confidence. If any of them have any cause to boast in outward rites and privileges, I have as much; yea, more.

5. Circumcised the eighth day. This was the time that the law required the males to be circumcised. Of the stock of Israel. Regularly descended from the patriarch Jacob. Of the tribe of Benjamin. The most favorite son of that patriarch; and a tribe that did not revolt with Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 21, nor pollute the worship of God by idolatry. An Hebrew of the Hebrews. Though born in a heathen country, Tarsus, yet both my parents were Hebrews; nor has there ever been any strange blood mixed with that of our family. Touching the law, a Pharisee. One that not only received the law and the prophets as coming from God, but belonged to that sect which, of all others, was most scrupulously attached to it.

6. Concerning zeal. As to my zeal for Pharisaism, I gave the fullest proof of it by persecuting the Church of Christ; and this is known to all my countrymen. Touching the righteousness. And as to that plan of "justification," which justification the Jews say is to be obtained by an observance of the law, I have done everything so conscientiously from my youth up that in this respect I am blameless; and may, with more confidence than most of them, expect that justification which the law appears to promise.

7. But what things were gain. The credit and respect which I had, as being zealously attached to the law and to the traditions of the elders, I counted loss for Christ—I saw that this could stand me in no stead, that all my acts of righteousness were nothing on which I could depend for salvation, and that Christ crucified could alone profit me.

8. I count all things but loss. Not only my Jewish privileges, but all others of every kind. The excellency of the knowledge of Christ. That superior light, information, and blessedness which come through the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have suffered the loss of all things. Some translate, "for whom I have thrown away all things"—I have made a voluntary choice of Christ, His cross, His poverty, and His reproach; and for these I have freely sacrificed all I had from the world, and all I could expect from it. And do count them but dung. The word means the vilest dross or "refuse" of anything, the worst excrement.

9. And be found in him. Be found a believer in Christ, not having mine own righteousness—not trusting in anything I have done or could do, in order to my salvation; relying on no scheme of justification, set up formerly either by myself or by others. But that which is through the faith of Christ. That justification which is received by faith through the atonement made by Christ. The righteousness which is of God. God's method of justifying sinners through faith in His Son.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. That he might know Christ (v. 10): That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings. Knowing him here is believing in him: it is an experimental knowledge. The apostle was as ambitious of being sanctified as he was of being justified. 4. That he might be conformable unto him. We are then made conformable to his death when we die to sin, as Christ died for sin, when we are crucified with Christ, and the world is crucified to us.

II. The apostle had his heart upon heaven as his happiness: If by any means I might attain to the resurrection of the dead, v. 11.

1. The happiness of heaven is here called the resurrection of the dead. This the apostle had his eye upon; this he would attain. There will be a resurrection of the unjust, and our care must be to escape that: but the joyful and glorious resurrection of saints is called the resurrection by eminence. To the saints it will be indeed a resurrection, while the resurrection of the wicked is a rising from the grave, but a return to a second death.

2. This joyful resurrection the apostle pressed towards. He speaks as if they were in danger of missing it, and coming short of it. A holy fear of coming short is an excellent means of perseverance. Paul himself did not hope to attain it through his own merit, but through the merit of Jesus Christ.

(1) He looks upon himself to be in a state of imperfection and trial: Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, v. 12. The best men in the world will readily own their imperfection in the present state. If Paul had not attained to perfection, much less have we. Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended (v. 13). Those who think they have grace enough give proof that they have little enough, or rather that they have none at all; because, wherever there is true grace, there is a desire of more grace.

(2) What the apostle's actings were under this conviction. "I follow after (v. 12), I pursue with vigour. If that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." It is not our laying hold of Christ first, but his laying hold of us, which is our happiness and salvation. Not our keeping hold of Christ, but his keeping hold of us, is our safety. To apprehend that for which we are apprehended of Christ. To apprehend that for which he apprehended us is to attain the perfection of our bliss. He adds further (v. 13): This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth to those things which are before. Paul forgot the things which were behind, he was still for having more and more. So he reached forth.

(3) The apostle's aim. I press towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, v. 14. The fitter we grow for heaven the faster we must press towards it. Heaven is the prize of the high calling; what we aim at in all we do, and what will reward all our pains. It is of God, from whom we are to expect it. But it is in Christ Jesus; through his hand it must come to us. There is no getting to heaven as our home but by Christ as our way.

also as a new subjective principle of life. Hence it includes the essence of a new disposition, and may easily pass into the idea of sanctification, though the two ideas are originally distinct.

10. That I may know him—experimentally. The aim of the "righteousness" just mentioned. This verse resumes, and more fully explains, "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ" (vs. 8). To know HIM is more than merely to know a doctrine about Him. Believers are brought not only to redemption, but to the Redeemer Himself. the power of his resurrection—assuring believers of their justification (Rom. 4:25; I Cor. 15:17), and raising them up spiritually with Him, by virtue of their identification with Him in this, as in all the acts of His redeeming work for us (Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12; 3:1). The power of the Divine Spirit, which raised Him from literal death, is the same which raises believers from spiritual death now (Eph. 1:19, 20), and shall raise their bodies from literal death hereafter (Rom. 8:11). the fellowship of his sufferings—by identification with Him in His sufferings and death, by imputation; also, in actually bearing the cross whatever is laid on us, after His example, and so "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ" (Col. 1:24); and in the will to bear aught for His sake (Matt. 10:38; 16:24; II Tim. 2:11). As He bore all our sufferings (Isa. 53:4), so we participate in His. made conformable unto his death—"conformed to the likeness of His death," viz., by continued sufferings for His sake, and mortifying of the carnal self (Rom. 8:29; I Cor. 15:31; II Cor. 4:10-12; Gal. 2:20). 11. If by any means—not implying uncertainty of the issue, but the earnestness of the struggle of faith (I Cor. 9:26, 27), and the urgent need of jealous selfwatchfulness (I Cor. 10:12). attain unto the resurrection of the dead—The oldest MSS. read, "... the resurrection from (out of) the dead," viz., the first resurrection; that of believers at Christ's coming (I Cor. 15:23; I Thess. 4:15; Rev. 20:5, 6). The Greek word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. "The power of Christ's resurrection" (Rom. 1:4), ensures the believer's attainment of the "resurrection from the (rest of the) dead" (cf. vss. 20, 21). Cf. "accounted worthy to obtain the resurrection from the dead" (Luke 20:35). "The resurrection of the just" (Luke 14:14). 12. Translate, "Not that I...." (I do not wish to be understood as saying that....) attained—"obtained," viz., a perfect knowledge of Christ, and of the power of His death, and fellowship of His sufferings, and a conformity to His death. either were already perfect—"or am already perfected," i.e., crowned with the garland of victory, my course completed, and perfection absolutely reached. The image is that of a racecourse throughout. See I Corinthians 9:24; Hebrews 12:23. See TRENCH, Synonyms of New Testament. I follow after—"I press on." apprehend ... apprehended—if so be that I may lay hold on that (viz., the prize, vs. 14) for which also I was laid hold on by Christ" (viz., at my conversion, Song of Sol. 1:4; I Cor. 13:12). Jesus—omitted in the oldest MSS. Paul was close to "apprehending" the prize (II Tim. 4:7, 8). Christ the Author, is also the Finisher of His people's "race." 13. I—whatever others count as to themselves. He who counts himself perfect, must deceive himself by calling sin infirmity (I John 1:8); at the same time, each must aim at perfection, to be a Christian at all (Matt. 5:48). forgetting those things ... behind—Looking back is sure to end in going back (Luke 9:62): So Lot's wife (Luke 17:32). If in stemming a current we cease pulling the oar against it, we are carried back. God's word to us is as it was to Israel, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward" (Exod. 14:15). The Bible is our landmark to show us whether we are progressing or retrograding. reaching forth—with hand and foot, like a runner in a race, and the body bent forward. The Christian is always humbled by the contrast between what he is and what he desires to be. The eye reaches before and draws on the hand, the hand reaches before and draws on the foot [BENGEL]. unto—towards (Heb. 6:1). 14. high calling—lit., "the calling that is above" (Gal. 4:26; Col. 3:1): "the heavenly calling" (Heb. 3:1). "The prize" is "the crown of righteousness" (I Cor. 9:24; II Tim. 4:8). Revelation 2:10, "crown of life." I Peter 5:4, "a crown of glory that fadeth not away." "The high," or "heavenly calling," is not restricted, as ALFORD thinks, to Paul's own calling as an apostle by the summons of God from heaven; but the common calling of all Christians to salvation in Christ, which coming from heaven invites us to heaven, whither accordingly our minds ought to be uplifted. 15. therefore—resuming vs.

ADAM CLARKE

10. That I may know him. To be the true and promised Messiah, and experience all that salvation which He has bought by His blood. And the fellowship of his sufferings. Christ died, not only as a Victim for sin, but as a Martyr to the truth. No creature can have fellowship with Him in His vicarious sufferings; as a martyr to the truth, Paul wished to imitate Him.

11. The resurrection of the dead. That is, the resurrection of those who, having died in the Lord, rise to glory and honor; and hence Paul uses a peculiar word which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. The words, as they stand in the best MSS., are as follows: "to that resurrection which is of the dead."

12. Not as though I had already attained. For I have not yet received the prize; I am not glorified, for I have not finished my course; and I have a conflict still to maintain, and the issue will prove whether I should be crowned. From the beginning of the eleventh to the end of the seventeenth verse there is one continued allusion to the contests at the Olympic games; exercises with which, and their laws, the Philippians were well acquainted. Either were already perfect. "Nor am I yet perfect"; I am not yet crowned, in consequence of having suffered martyrdom. I am quite satisfied that the apostle here alludes to the Olympic games, and the word teteleiomai is the proof; spoken of those who have completed their race, reached the goal, and are honored with the prize. Paul therefore is not speaking here of any deficiency in his own grace or spiritual state; he does not mean by not being yet perfect that he had a body of sin and death cleaving to him, and was still polluted with indwelling sin, as some have imagined. He speaks of his not having terminated his course by martyrdom, which he knew would sooner or later be the case. But I follow after. "But I pursue." Several are gone before me in this glorious way, and have obtained the crown of martyrdom; I am hurrying after them. That I may apprehend. That I may receive those blessings to which I am called by Christ Jesus. There is still an allusion here to the stadium, and exercises there. The apostle considers Christ as the brabeus, or Judge in the games, who proclaimed the victor and distributed the prizes; and he represents himself as being introduced by this very brabeus, or Judge, into the contest; and this brabeus brought him in with the design to crown him, if he contended faithfully. To complete this faithful contention is what he has in view; that he may apprehend, or "lay hold" on, that for which he had been apprehended, or "taken by the hand," by Christ, who had converted, strengthened, and endowed him with apostolical powers, that he might fight the good fight of faith, and "lay hold" on eternal life.

13. I count not myself to have apprehended. Whatever gifts, graces, or honors I may have received from Jesus Christ, I consider everything as incomplete till I have finished my course, got this crown, and have my body raised and fashioned after His glorious body. This one thing I do. This is the concern, as it is the sole business, of my life. Reaching forth. The Greek word points out the strong exertions made in the race; every muscle and nerve is exerted, and he puts forth every particle of his strength in running. He was running for life, and running for his life.

14. I press toward the mark. "I pursue along the line"; this is a reference to the white lines that marked the ground in the stadium, from the starting place to the goal, on which the runners were obliged to keep their eyes fixed; for they who transgressed or went beyond this line did not run lawfully, and were not crowned, even though they got first to the goal. What is called scopos, "mark" or "scope," here is called canon, the "line," i.e., the marked line, v. 16. When it was said to Diogenes, the cynic, "Thou art now an old man, rest from thy labors"; to this he answered: "If I have run long in the race, will it become me to slacken my pace when I come near the end; should I not rather stretch forward?" For the prize of the high calling of God. The reward which God from above calls me, by Christ Jesus, to receive. The apostle still keeps in view his crown of martyrdom and his glorious resurrection.

MATTHEW HENRY

This was the thing wherein all good Christians were agreed, to make Christ all in all, and set their hearts upon another world. This is that whereto we have all attained. Therefore let us walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing. Having made Christ our all, to us to live must be Christ.

Christians who differ in smaller matters should yet bear with one another, because they are agreed in the main matter: "If in anything you be otherwise minded, you must not judge one another, while you all meet now in Christ as your centre, and hope to meet shortly in heaven as your home.

God shall reveal even this unto you. Whatever it is wherein you differ, you must wait till God give you a better understanding. As far as you have attained, you must go together in the ways of God, and wait for further light in the minor things wherein you differ."

I. He warns them against following the examples of evil teachers (v. 18, 19): Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ.

1. There are many called by Christ's name who are enemies to Christ's cross. Their walk is a surer evidence what they are than their profession. I have told you often. We so little heed the warnings given us that we have need to have them repeated. I now tell you weeping. What we say often we may say again, if we say it affectionately.

2. The characters of those who were the enemies of the cross of Christ. (1) Whose God is their belly. They minded nothing but their sensual appetites. The same observance which good people give to God epicures give to their appetites. (2) They glory in their shame. "They value themselves for what is their blemish and reproach." (3) They mind earthly things. Those who mind earthly things act directly contrary to the cross of Christ. They set their hearts and affections on earthly things. How absurd it would be for Christians to follow the example of such! To deter us all from so doing, he reads their doom. (4) Whose end is destruction. Their way seems pleasant, but death and hell are at the end of it. If we choose their way, we have reason to fear their end.

II. He proposes himself and his brethren for an example: Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark those who walk as you have us for an example, v. 17. He explains himself (v. 20) by their regard to Christ and heaven: For our conversation is in heaven. Good Christians, even while they are here on earth, have their conversation in heaven. This world is not our home, but that is. The life of a Christian is in heaven, where his home is, and where he hopes to be shortly. It is good having fellowship with those who have fellowship with Christ, and conversation with those whose conversation is in heaven.

1. We look for the Saviour from heaven (v. 20): Whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. We expect his second coming thence.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

3. "As many of us then, as are perfect," i.e., full grown (no longer "babes") in the Christian life (vs. 3, "worshipping God in the Spirit, and having no confidence in the flesh"), I Corinthians 2:6, fully established in things of God. Here, by "perfect," he means one fully fit for running [BENGEL]; knowing and complying with the laws of the course (II Tim. 2:5). Though "perfect" in this sense, he was not yet "made perfect" (Greek) in the sense intended in vs. 12, viz., "crowned with complete victory," and having attained absolute perfection. thus minded—having the mind which he had described, vss. 7-14. otherwise minded—having too high an opinion of yourselves as to your attainment of Christian perfection. "He who thinks that he has attained everything, hath nothing" [CHRYSOSTOM]. Probably, too, he refers to those who were tempted to think to attain to perfection by the law (Gal. 3:3): who needed the warning (vs. 3), "Beware of the concision," though on account of their former piety, Paul hopes confidently (as in Gal. 5:10) that God will reveal the path of right-mindedness to them. Paul taught externally God "reveals" the truth internally by His Spirit (Matt. 11:25; 16: 17; I Cor. 3:6). unto you—who sincerely strive to do God's will (John 7:17; Eph. 1:17). 16. The expectation of a new revelation is not to make you less careful in walking according to whatever degree of knowledge of divine things and perfection you have already attained. God makes further revelations to those who walk up to the revelations they already have (Hos. 6:3). rule, let us mind the same thing—omitted in the oldest MSS. Perhaps partly inserted from Galatians 6:16, and ch. 2:2. Translate then, "Whereunto we have attained, let us walk on (a military term, march in order) in the same" (the measure of knowledge already attained). 17. followers—Greek, "imitators together." of me—as I am an imitator of Christ (I Cor. 11:1): Imitate me no farther than as I imitate Christ. Or as BENGEL "My fellow imitators of God" or "Christ"; "imitators of Christ together with me" (Note, ch. 2:22; Eph. 5:1). mark—for imitation. which walk so as ye have us for an ensample—In English Version of the former clause, the translation of this clause is, "those who are walking so as ye have an example in us." But in BENGEL'S translation, "inasmuch as," or "since," instead of "as." 18. many walk—in such a manner. Follow not evildoers, because they are "many" (Exod. 23:2). Their numbers are rather a presumption against their being Christ's "little flock" (Luke 12:32). often—There is need of constant warning. weeping—(Rom. 9:2). A hard tone in speaking of the inconsistencies of professors is the very opposite of Paul's spirit, and David's (Ps. 119: 136), and Jeremiah's (Jer. 13:17). The Lord and His apostles, at the same time, speak more strongly against empty professors (as the Pharisees), than against open scoffers. enemies of the cross of Christ—in their practice, not in doctrine (Gal. 6:14; Heb. 6:6; 10:29). 19. destruction—everlasting at Christ's coming. Ch. 1:28, "perdition"; the opposite word is "Saviour" (vs. 20). end—fixed doom. whose god is their belly—(Rom. 16:18)—hereafter to be destroyed by God (I Cor. 6:13). In contrast to our "body" (vs. 21), which our God, the Lord Jesus, shall "fashion like unto His glorious body." Their belly is now pampered, our body now wasted; then the respective states of both shall be reversed. glory is in their shame—As "glory" is often used in the Old Testament for "God" (Ps. 106:20), so here it answers to "whose God," in the parallel clause; and "shame" is the Old Testament term contemptuously given to an idol (Judg. 6:32, Margin). Hosea 4:7 seems to be referred to by Paul (cf. Rom. 1:32). There seems no allusion to circumcision, as no longer glorious, but a shame to them (vs. 2). The reference of the immediate context is to sensuality, and carnality in general. mind earthly things—(Rom. 8:5). In contrast to vs. 20; Col. 3:2. 20. our conversation—rather, "our state" or "country"; our citizenship: our life as citizens. We are but pilgrims on earth; how then should we "mind earthly things?" (vs. 19; Heb. 11:9, 10, 13-16). Roman citizenship was then highly prized; how much more should the heavenly citizenship (Acts 22:28; cf. Luke 10:20)? is—Greek, "has its existence." in heaven—Greek, "in the heavens." look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ—"We wait for (so the same Greek is translated, Rom. 8:19) the Lord Jesus as a (i.e., in the capacity of a) Saviour" (Heb. 9:28). That He is "the Lord," now exalted above every name, assures our expectation (ch. 2:9-11). Our High Priest is gone up into the Holy of Holies not made with hands, there to atone for us; and as the Israelites stood outside the tabernacle, expecting Aaron's

ADAM CLARKE

15. As many as be perfect. As many as are "thoroughly instructed" in divine things, who have cast off all dependence on the law and on every other system for salvation, and who discern God calling them from above by Christ Jesus. Be thus minded; be intensely in earnest for eternal life, nor ever halt till the race is finished. The word teleioi, perfect, is taken here in the same sense in which it is taken in 1 Cor. xiv. 20: "Be not children in understanding . . . but in understanding be ye men," teleioi—"thoroughly instructed, deeply experienced." 1 Cor. ii. 6: "We speak wisdom among them that are perfect," among those who are fully instructed, adults in Christian knowledge. Eph. iv. 13: "Till we all come . . . unto a perfect man"; teleion, to the state of adults in Christianity. Heb. v. 14: "But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age"; teleion, "the perfect"—those who are thoroughly instructed and experienced in divine things. Let us therefore, says the apostle, as many as be perfect, as have entered fully into the spirit and design of the gospel, be thus minded, viz., Forget the things which are behind, and stretch forward along the mark for the prize. If in any thing ye be otherwise minded. If you have not yet entered into the full spirit and design of this gospel, if any of you have yet remaining any doubts relative to Jewish ordinances or their expediency in Christianity, God shall reveal even this unto you; for while you are sincere and upright, God will take care that you shall have full instruction in these divine things.

16. Whereto we have already attained. Let us not lose that part of the race which we have already run. Let us walk by the same rule—let us keep the white line continually in view. Let us mind the same thing, always considering the glorious prize which is held out by God through Christ Jesus to animate and encourage us.

17. Brethren, be followers together of me. In the things of Christ let me be your "line"; and my writing, preaching, and conduct, your "rule." And mark them. Still alluding to the "line" in the stadium; keep your eye steadily fixed on those which walk, "live," as ye have us—myself, Timothy, and Epaphroditus—for an ensample.

18. For many walk. The Judaizing teachers continue to preach, who wish to incorporate circumcision and other ordinances of the law with the gospel. They are the enemies of the cross of Christ. They rather attribute justification to the Levitical sacrifices than to the sacrificial death of Christ; and thus they are enemies to that Cross, and will not suffer persecution for its sake.

19. Whose end is destruction. This is the issue of their doctrine and of their conduct. They are here described by three characters: (1) Their god is their belly—they live not in any reference to eternity.

(2) Their glory is in their shame—they lay it down as a proof of their address that they can fare sumptuously every day in consequence of preaching a doctrine which flatters the passions of their hearers.

(3) They mind earthly things—their whole study and attention are taken up with earthly matters.

20. Our conversation is in heaven. "Our citizenship" or "civil rights."

MATTHEW HENRY

2. At the second coming of Christ we expect to be happy and glorified there. Who shall change our vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, v. 21. There is a glory reserved for the saints, which they will be instated in at the resurrection. The body is now at the best a vile body, the body of our humiliation. But it will be made a glorious body. According to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. It is matter of comfort to us that he can subdue all things to himself. And the resurrection will be wrought by this power. Let this confirm our faith of the resurrection, that we not only have the scriptures, which assure us it shall be, but we know the power of God, which can effect it. As Christ's resurrection was a glorious instance of the divine power, so will our resurrection be. And then all the enemies of the Redeemer's kingdom will be completely conquered.

CHAPTER 4

I. Steadfastness in our Christian profession, v. 1. Seeing our conversation is in heaven, and we look for the Saviour to come thence and fetch us thither, therefore let us stand fast. The believing prospect of eternal life should engage us to be constant, in our Christian course. My brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown; and again, My dearly beloved. Thus he expresses the pleasure he took in them to convey his exhortations to them with so much the greater advantage. Being brethren he loved them, and loved them dearly: Dearly beloved; and again, My dearly beloved. Brotherly love must always go along with the brotherly relation. He loved them and longed for them. He loved them and rejoiced in them. They were his joy. He loved them and gloried in them. They were his crown as well as his joy. So stand fast in the Lord. Being in Christ, they must stand fast in him, close and constant unto the end. Or, To stand fast in the Lord is to stand fast in his strength and by his grace; not trusting in ourselves.

II. He exhorts them to unanimity and mutual assistance (v. 2, 3): I beseech Euodias and Syntyche that they be of the same mind in the Lord. This is directed to some particular persons. Sometimes there is need of applying the general precepts of the gospel to particular persons and cases. Euodias and Syntyche, it seems, were at variance, either one with the other or with the church. "Desire them from me to be of the same mind in the Lord, to keep the peace and live in love, to be of the same mind with the rest of the church." Then he exhorts to mutual assistance (v. 3), and this exhortation he directs to particular persons: I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow. Who this person was whom he calls true yoke-fellow is uncertain. He exhorts his yoke-fellow to help the women who laboured with him. Whoever was the yoke-fellow with the apostle must be a yoke-fellow too with his friends. It seems, there were women who laboured with Paul in the gospel. Women may be helpful to ministers in the work of the gospel. Do thou help them. Those who help others should be helped themselves when there is occasion.—With Clement also, and other my fellow-labourers. Paul had a kindness for all his fellow-labourers, Whose names are in the book of life. There is a book of life; there are names in that book and not characters and conditions only. We cannot search into that book, or know whose names are written there; but we may conclude that those who labour in the gospel have their names in the book of life.

III. Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, Rejoice, v. 4. All our joy must terminate in God; and our thoughts of God must be delightful thoughts. It is our duty and privilege to rejoice in God, and to rejoice in him always; at all times, in all conditions. There is enough in God to furnish us with matter of joy in the worst circumstance on earth. Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice. If good men have not a continual feast, it is their own fault.

IV. We are here exhorted to gentleness, and good temper towards our brethren: "Let your moderation be known to all men, v. 5. In things indifferent do not run into extremes; judge charitably concerning one another." Some understand it of the patient bearing of afflictions, or the sober enjoyment of worldly good.

return (cf. Luke 1:21), so must we look unto the heavens expecting Christ thence. 21. Greek, "Who shall transfigure the body of our humiliation (viz., in which our humiliation has place, II Cor. 4:10; Eph. 2:19; II Tim. 2:12), that it may be conformed unto the body of His glory (viz., in which His glory is manifested), according to the effectual working whereby. . . ." Not only shall He come as our "Saviour," but also as our Glorifier. even—not only to make the body like His own, but "to subdue all things," even death itself, as well as Satan and sin. He gave a sample of the coming transfiguration on the mount (Matt. 17:1, etc.). Not a change of identity, but of fashion or form (Ps. 17:15; I Cor. 15:51). Our spiritual resurrection now is the pledge of our bodily resurrection to glory hereafter (vs. 20; Rom. 8:11). As Christ's glorified body was essentially identical with His body of humiliation; so our resurrection bodies as believers, since they shall be like His, shall be identical essentially with our present bodies, and yet "spiritual bodies" (I Cor. 15:42-44). Our "hope" is, that Christ, by His rising from the dead, hath obtained the power, and is become the pattern, of our resurrection (Mic. 2:13).

Vss. 1-23. EXHORTATIONS: THANKS FOR THE SUPPLY FROM PHILIPPI: GREETING; AND CLOSING BENEDICTION. 1. "Wherefore"; since we have such a glorious hope (ch. 3:20, 21). dearly beloved—repeated again at the close of the verse, implying that his great love to them should be a motive to their obedience. longed for—"yearned after" in your absence (ch. 1:8). crown—in the day of the Lord (ch. 2:16; I Thess. 2:19). so—as I have admonished you. stand fast—(Ch. 1:27). 2. Euodia and Syntyche were two women who seem to have been at variance; probably deaconesses of the church. He repeats, "I beseech," as if he would admonish each separately, and with the utmost impartiality. in the Lord—the true element of Christian union; for those "in the Lord" by faith to be at variance, is an utter inconsistency. 3. And—Greek, "Yea." true yoke-fellow—yoked with me in the same Gospel yoke Matt. 11:29, 30; cf. I Tim. 5:17, 18). Either Timothy, Silas (Acts 15:40; 16:19, at Philippi), or the chief bishop of Philippi. Or else the Greek, Sunzugus, or Synzygus, is a proper name: "Who art truly, as thy name means, a yoke-fellow." Certainly not Paul's wife, as I Corinthians 9:5 implies he had none. help those women—rather, as Greek, "help them," viz., Euodia and Syntyche. "Co-operate with them" [BIRKS]; or as ALFORD, "Help in the work of their reconciliation." which laboured with me—"inasmuch as they labored with me." At Philippi, women were the first hearers of the Gospel, and Lydia the first convert. It is a coincidence which marks genuineness, that in this Epistle alone, special instructions are given to women who labored with Paul in the Gospel. In selecting the first teachers, those first converted would naturally be fixed on. Euodia and Syntyche were doubtless two of "the women who resorted to the riverside, where prayer was wont to be made" (Acts 16:13), and being early converted, would naturally take an active part in teaching other women called at a later period; of course not in public preaching, but in a less prominent sphere (I Tim. 2:11, 12). Clement—bishop of Rome shortly after the death of Peter and Paul. His Epistle from the Church of Rome to the Church of Corinth is extant. It makes no mention of the supremacy of the See of Peter. He was the most eminent of the apostolical fathers. ALFORD thinks that the Clement here was a Philippian, and not necessarily Clement, bishop of Rome. But ORIGEN (Comment, John 1:29) identifies the Clement here with the bishop of Rome. in the book of life—the register-book of those whose "citizenship is in heaven" (Luke 10:20; Phil. 3:20). Anciently, free cities had a roll-book containing the names of all those having the right of citizenship (cf. Exod. 32:32; Ps. 69:28; Ezek. 13:9; Dan. 12:1; Rev. 20:12; 21:27). 4. (Isa. 61:10.) alway—even amidst the afflictions now distressing you (ch. 1:28-30). again—as he had already said, "Rejoice" (ch. 3:1). Joy is the predominant feature of the Epistle. I say—Greek, rather, "I will say." 5. moderation—from a Greek root, "to yield," whence yieldingness [TRENCH]; or from a root, "it is fitting," whence "reasonableness of dealing" [ALFORD], that considerateness for others, not urging one's own rights to the uttermost, but waiving a part, and thereby rectifying the injustices of justice. The archetype of this grace is God, who presses not the strictness of His law against us as we deserve (Ps.

ADAM CLARKE

21. Who shall change our vile body. Who will "refashion" or "alter the fashion and condition of," the body of our humiliation; this body that is dead—adjudged to death because of sin, and must be putrefied, dissolved, and decomposed. That it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. "That it may bear a similar form to the body of His glory." That is: The bodies of true believers shall be raised up at the great day in the same likeness, immortality, and glory of the glorified humanity of Jesus Christ; and be so thoroughly changed as to be not only capable through their immortality of eternally existing, but also of the infinite spiritual enjoyments at the right hand of God. According to the working. "According to that energy, by which He can bring all things under subjection to himself."

1. Therefore, my . . . beloved. Because you have this armor, and those enemies, and God for your support, see that you stand fast in Him. This verse most unquestionably belongs to the preceding chapter.

2. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche. These were two pious women, as it is generally supposed, who were deaconesses in the church at Philippi, and who in some points of doctrine and discipline had disagreed. He exhorts them to be of the same mind, that is, to compose their differences; and if they could not perfectly agree, to think and let think, and to avoid all public opposition, as their dissension would strengthen the hands of the common enemy and stumble those who were weak.

3. Help those women which laboured with me. Both in the Grecian and Asiatic countries women were kept much secluded, and it was not likely that even the apostles had much opportunity of conversing with them. It was therefore necessary that they should have some experienced Christian women with them who could have access to families and preach Jesus to the female part of them. The apostle tells us that certain women labored with him in the gospel, and were assistants to others also who had assisted him.

With Clement also. Supposed to be the same who was afterwards bishop of Rome, and who wrote an Epistle to the Corinthians, which is still extant.

Whose names are in the book of life. Who are genuine Christians; who are enlisted or enrolled in the armies of the Lord, and have received a title to eternal glory.

4. Rejoice in the Lord alway. Be continually happy; but this happiness you can find only in the Lord. Genuine happiness is spiritual; as it can come only from God, so it infallibly tends to Him.

5. Let your moderation be known. The word is of very extensive signification; it means the same as mildness, patience, yieldingness, gentleness, clemency, unwillingness to litigate or contend; but moderation is expressive enough as a general term.

MATTHEW HENRY

The Lord is at hand. "He will take vengeance on your enemies, and reward your patience."

V. A caution against disquieting perplexing care (v. 6): Be careful for nothing. Avoid anxious care and distracting thought in the wants and difficulties of life. It is the duty and interest of Christians to live without care. There is a care of diligence which is our duty, but there is a care of distrust which is our sin and folly.

VI. He recommends to us constant prayer: In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. We must pray upon every particular emergency: In everything by prayer. When anything burdens our spirits, we must ease our minds by prayer; when our affairs are perplexed or distressed, we must seek direction and support. We must join thanksgiving with our prayers and supplications. We must not only seek supplies of good, but own receipts of mercy. Prayer is the offering up of our desires to God: Let your requests be made known to God. Not that God needs to be told either our wants or desires; but he will know them from us.

The effect of this will be the peace of God keeping our hearts, v. 7. The peace of God which passeth all understanding is a greater good than can be sufficiently valued or duly expressed.

This peace will keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus; it will keep us from sinning under our troubles, and from sinking under them.

VII. We are exhorted to get and keep a good name: Whatsoever things are true and honest (v. 8), a regard to truth and to becomingness in our behaviour. Whatsoever things are just and pure, without the impurity or mixture of sin. Whatsoever things are lovely and of good report, that will render us beloved, and make us well spoken of. If there is any virtue, if there is any praise.

The apostle would have the Christians learn anything which was good of their heathen neighbours: "If there be any virtue, think of these things—imitate them in what is truly excellent among them." We should not be ashamed to learn any good thing of bad men. Virtue has its praise, and will have. Those things which you have learned, and received, and heard and seen in me, do. Paul's

130:3, 4); though having exacted the fullest payment for us from our Divine Surety. There are included in "moderation," candor and kindliness. Joy in the Lord raises us above rigorism towards others (vs. 5), and carefulness (vs. 6) as to one's own affairs. Sadness produces morose harshness towards others, and a troublesome spirit in ourselves. Let . . . be known—i.e., in your conduct to others, let nothing inconsistent with "moderation" be seen. Not a precept to make a display of moderation. Let this grace "be known" to men in acts; let "your requests be made to God" in word (vs. 6). unto all men—even to the "perverse" (ch. 2:15), that so ye may win them. Exercise "forbearance" even to your persecutors. None is so ungracious as not to be kindly to someone, from some motive or another, on some occasion; the believer is to be so "unto all men" at all times. The Lord is at hand—The Lord's coming again speedily is the grand motive to every Christian grace (Jas. 5:8,9). Harshness to others (the opposite of "moderation") would be taking into our own hands prematurely the prerogatives of judging, which belongs to the Lord alone (I Cor. 4:5); and so provoking God to judge us by the strict letter of the law (Jas. 2:12, 13). 6. Translate, "Be anxious about nothing." Care and prayer are as mutually opposed as fire and water [BENGEL]. by prayer and supplication—Greek, "by the prayer and the supplication" appropriate to each case [ALFORD]. Prayer for blessings; and the general term. Supplication, to avert ills; a special term, suppliant entreaty (Note, Eph. 6:18). thanksgiving—for every event, prosperity and affliction alike (I Thess. 5:18; Jas. 5:13). The Philippians might remember Paul's example at Philippi when in the innermost prison (Acts 16:25). Thanksgiving gives effect to prayer (II Chron. 20: 21), and frees from anxious carefulness by making all God's dealings matter for praise, not merely for resignation, much less murmuring. "Peace" is the companion of "thanksgiving" (vs. 7; Col. 3:15). let your requests be made known unto God—with generous, filial, unreserved confidence; not keeping aught back, as too great, or else too small, to bring before God, though you might feel so as to your fellow men. So Jacob, when fearing Esau (Gen. 32:9-12); Hezekiah fearing Sennacherib (II Kings 19:14; Ps. 37:5). 7. And—The inseparable consequence of thus laying everything before God in "prayer with thanksgiving." peace—the dispeller of "anxious care" (vs. 6). of God—coming from God, and resting in God (John 14:27; 16:33; Col. 3:15). passeth—surpasseth, or exceedeth, all man's notional powers of understanding its full blessedness (I Cor. 2:9, 10; Eph. 3:20; cf. Prov. 3:17). shall keep—rather, "shall guard"; shall keep as a well-garrisoned stronghold (Isa. 26:1, 3). The same Greek verb is used in I Peter 1:5. There shall be peace secure within, whatever outward troubles may besiege. hearts and minds—rather, "hearts (the seat of the thoughts) and thoughts" or purposes. through—rather as Greek, "in Christ Jesus." It is in Christ that we are "kept" or "guarded" secure. 8. Summary of all his exhortations as to relative duties, whether as children or parents, husbands or wives, friends, neighbors, men in the intercourse of the world, etc. true—sincere, in words. honest—Old English for "seemly," viz., in action; lit., grave, dignified. just—towards others. pure—"chaste," in relation to ourselves. lovely—lovable (cf. Mark 10:21; Luke 7:4, 5). of good report—referring to the absent (ch. 1: 27); as "lovely" refers to what is lovable face to face. if there be any virtue—"whatever virtue there is" [ALFORD]. "Virtue," the standing word in heathen ethics, is found once only in Paul's Epistles, and once in Peter's (II Pet. 1:5); and this in use different from those in heathen authors. It is a term rather earthly and human, as compared with the names of the spiritual graces which Christianity imparts; hence the rarity of its occurrence in the New Testament. Piety and true morality are inseparable. Piety is love with its face towards God; morality is love with its face towards man. Despise not anything that is good in itself; only let it keep its due place. praise—whatever is praiseworthy; not that Christians should make man's praise their aim (cf. John 12:43); but they should live so as to deserve men's praise. think on—have a continual regard to, so as to "do" these things (vs. 9) whenever the occasion arises. 9. both—rather, "The things also which ye have learned . . . , these practice"; the things which besides recommending them in words, have been also recommended by my example, carry into practice. heard—though ye have not yet sufficiently "received" them. seen—though ye have not as yet

ADAM CLARKE

The Lord is at hand. A phrase something similar to the Maranatha of 1 Cor. xvi. 22. The Lord is Judge, and is at hand to punish.

6. Be careful for nothing. Be not anxiously solicitous. Do not give place to carking care, let what will occur; for anxiety cannot change the state or condition of anything from bad to good, but will infallibly injure your own souls. By prayer and supplication. God alone can help you; He is disposed to do it, but you must ask by prayer and supplication; without this He has not promised to help you. By prayer—solemn application to God from a sense of want. Supplication—continuance in earnest prayer. With thanksgiving, for innumerable favors already received; and for dangers, evils, and deaths turned aside.

7. And the peace of God. That harmonizing of all passions and appetites which is produced by the Holy Spirit, and arises from a sense of pardon and the favor of God.

Shall keep your hearts. Shall keep them as in a strong place or castle. Your hearts—the seat of all your affections and passions, and minds—your understanding, judgment, and conscience. Through Christ Jesus; by whom you were brought into this state of favor, through whom you are preserved in it, and in whom you possess it, for Christ keeps that heart in peace in which He dwells and rules.

8. Finally, brethren. The object of the apostle is to recommend holiness and righteousness to them in every point of view; and to show that the gospel of Christ requires all its professors to have the mind that was in Christ, and to walk as He himself also walked. Whatsoever things are true. All that is agreeable to unchangeable and eternal truth. Whatsoever things are honest. Whatever is "grave, decent, and venerable." Whatever becomes you as men, as citizens, and as Christians. Whatsoever things are just. Whatsoever is agreeable to justice and righteousness. All that you owe to God, to your neighbor, and to yourselves. Whatsoever things are pure. Whatsoever is "chaste." In reference to the state of the mind and to the acts of the body. Whatsoever things are lovely. Whatsoever is "amiable" on its own account and on account of its usefulness to others, whether in your conduct or conversation. Whatsoever things are of good report. Whatsoever things the public agree to acknowledge as useful and profitable to men; such as charitable institutions of every kind, in which genuine Christians should ever take the lead. If there be any virtue. If they be calculated to promote the general good of mankind, and are thus praiseworthy. Think on these things. Esteem them highly, recommend them heartily, and practice them fervently.

9. Those things, which ye have . . . learned. From my preaching and writing. And received. By faith, as a revelation from God. And heard.

MATTHEW HENRY

doctrine and life were of a piece. He could propose himself as well as his doctrine to their imitation. It gives a great force to what we say to others when we can appeal to what they have seen in us.

Verses 10-19

Grateful acknowledgment of the kindness of the Philippians.

He excuses their neglect of late. Now at the last their care of him flourished again (v. 10), like a tree in the spring, which seemed all the winter to be quite dead. He makes an excuse for them: Wherein you were also careful, but you lacked opportunity. They would have done it if a fair opportunity had offered.

Not that I speak in respect of want (v. 11); not in respect of any want he felt, nor of any want he feared. As to the former, he was content with the little he had, and that satisfied him; as to the latter, he depended upon the providence of God to provide for him from day to day, and that satisfied him. For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. That was the lesson he had as much need to learn as most men, considering the hardships and sufferings with which he was exercised.—I know both how to be abased and I know how to abound, v. 12. This is a special act of grace, to accommodate ourselves to every condition of life. To accommodate ourselves to an afflicted condition—to know how to be abased. To a prosperous condition—to know how to abound, how to be full, so as not to be proud, or secure. And this is as hard a lesson as the other; for the temptations of fulness and prosperity are not less than those of affliction and want. I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me, v. 13. We need his strength to teach us to be content in every condition. The apostle had seemed to boast of himself, and of his own strength: I know how to be abased (v. 12); but here he transfers all the praise to Christ. It is by his constant and renewed strength I am enabled to act in everything.

He commends their present liberality: Notwithstanding, you have well done that you did communicate with my affliction, v. 14. Here see Christian sympathy; not only to be concerned for our friends in their troubles, but to do what we can to help them. He rejoiced greatly in it (v. 10), because it was an evidence of their affection to him and the success of his ministry among them.

He takes occasion to acknowledge their former kindnesses to him, v. 15, 16. Paul had a grateful spirit. Wherever this epistle shall be read there shall this which they did to Paul be told for a memorial of them. Surely never was present so well repaid. In the beginning of the gospel no church communicated with me as to giving and receiving but ye only, v. 15, not only while he was with them, but when he departed from Macedonia; and this when no other church did so. They were the only church who were thus just and generous.

Even in Thessalonica you sent once and again to my necessity, v. 16. Just such things as he had need of; he did not desire superfluities nor dainties. You sent once and again. Many people make it an excuse for their charity that they have given once; why should the charge come upon them again? But the Philippians sent once and again.

"Not because I desired a gift (v. 17). I welcome your kindness because it adds to your account. I desire fruit that may abound to your account. I have all, and abound, v. 18. What can a man desire more than enough?" I am full, having received from Epaphroditus the things which were sent by you. A covetous worldling, if he has ever so much, would still have more; but a heavenly Christian, though he has little, has enough.

The apostle assures them that God did accept, and would recompense, their kindness to him. He did accept it: It is an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God. A sacrifice of acknowledgment, and well-pleasing to God. It was more acceptable to God as it was the fruit of their grace than it was to Paul as it was the supply of his want.

sufficiently "learned" them [BENGEL]. and—"and then," as the necessary result (vs. 7). Not only "the peace of God," but "the God of peace" Himself "shall be with you." 10. But—transitional conjunction. But "now" to pass to another subject. in the Lord—He views everything with reference to Christ. at the last—"at last"; implying he was expecting their gift, not from a selfish view, but as a "fruit" of their faith, and to "abound" to their account (vss. 11, 17). Though long in coming, owing to Epaphroditus' sickness and other delays, he does not imply their gift was too late. your care . . . hath flourished again—Greek, "Ye have flourished again (revived, as trees sprouting forth again in spring) in your care for me." wherein ye were also careful—in respect to which (revival, viz., the sending of a supply to me) "ye were also (all along) careful, but ye lacked opportunity"; whether from want of means or want of a messenger. Your "lack of service" (ch. 2:30), was owing to your having "lacked opportunity." 11. I have learned—The I in Greek is emphatical. I leave it to others if they will, to be discontented. I, for my part, have learned, by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, and the dealings of Providence (Heb. 5:8), to be content in every state. content—The Greek, literally expresses "independent of others, and having sufficiency in one's self." But Christianity has raised the term above the haughty self-sufficiency of the heathen Stoic to the contentment of the Christian, whose sufficiency is not in self, but in God (II Cor. 3:5; I Tim. 6:6, 8; Heb. 13:5; cf. Jer. 2:36; 45:5). 12. abased—in low circumstances (II Cor. 4:8; 6:9, 10). everywhere—rather [ALFORD], "in each, and in all things." instructed—in the secret. Lit., "initiated" in a secret teaching, which is a mystery unknown to the world. 13. I can do all things—Greek, "I have strength for all things"; not merely "how to be abased and how to abound." After special instances he declares his universal power—how triumphantly, yet how humbly! [MEYER.] through Christ which strengtheneth me—The oldest MSS. omit "Christ"; then translate, "In Him who giveth me power," i.e., by virtue of my living union and identification with Him, who is my strength (Gal. 2:20). Cf. I Timothy 1:12, whence probably, "Christ" was inserted here by transcribers. 14. He here guards against their thinking from what he has just said, that he makes light of their bounty. ye did communicate with my affliction—i.e., ye made yourselves sharers with me in my present affliction, viz., by sympathy; of which sympathy your contribution is the proof. 15. Now—"Moreover." Arrange as Greek, "Ye also know" (as well as I do myself). in the beginning of the gospel—dating from the Philippian Christian era; at the first preaching of the Gospel at Philippi. when I departed from Macedonia—(Acts 17:14). The Philippians had followed Paul with their bounty when he left Macedonia and came to Corinth. II Corinthians 11:8, 9 thus accords with the passage here, the dates assigned to the donation in both Epistles agreeing; viz., "in the beginning of the Gospel" here, and there, at the time of his first visit to Corinth [PALEY'S Horæ Paulinæ]. However, the supply meant here is not that which he received at Corinth, but the supply sent to him when "in Thessalonica, once and again" (vs. 16), [ALFORD]. as concerning giving and receiving—In the account between us, "the giving" was all on your part; "the receiving" all on mine. ye only—We are not to wait for others in a good work, saying, "I will do so, when others do it." We must go forward, though alone. 16. even in Thessalonica—"even" as early as when I had got no further than Thessalonica, ye sent me supplies for my necessities more than once. 17. a gift—Greek, "the gift." Translate, "It is not that I seek after the gift, but I do seek after the fruit that aboundeth to your account"; what I do seek is your spiritual good, in the abounding of fruits of your faith which shall be put down to your account, against the day of reward (Heb. 6:10). 18. But—Though "the gift" is not what I chiefly "seek after" (vs. 17), yet I am grateful for the gift, and hereby acknowledge it as ample for all my needs. Translate, "I have all" that I want, "and more than enough." Lit., as English Version, "I abound" over and above my needs. I am full—Greek, "I am filled full." the odour of a sweet smell—(Note, Eph. 5:2.) The figure is drawn from the sweet-smelling incense which was burnt along with the sacrifices; their gift being in faith was not so much to Paul, as to God (Matt. 25:40), before whom it "came up for a memorial" (Acts 10:4), sweet-smelling in God's presence (Gen. 8:21; Rev. 8:3, 4). sacrifice acceptable—(Heb. 13:16). 19. my—Paul calls God

ADAM CLARKE

From my preaching, and that of those who labored with me; and heard from me in my private communications with you; and heard of me from other churches. And seen in me. While living and laboring among you. Do. Take them for the rule of your faith and practice. And the God of peace. He who is the Author of peace, the Lover of peace, and the Maintainer of peace; He who has made peace between heaven and earth, by the mission and sacrifice of His Son, shall be ever with you while you believe and act as here recommended.

10. But I rejoiced in the Lord. Every good comes from God, either immediately from His providence or from His grace; therefore the apostle thanks God for the kindness of the Philippians towards him; for it was God who gave them the power, and directed their hearts to use it. Hath flourished again. They had helped him before, chap. ii. 25; they had ceased for a time, and now they began again. This is evidently designed by the apostle, as the word implies, which is a metaphor taken from the reviviscence of flowers in spring which seemed dead in winter. For the time in which they were apparently remiss he makes a delicate apology: Ye were . . . careful, but ye lacked opportunity; or rather, "You had not ability; you wanted the means."

11. Not that I speak in respect of want. I am quite unconcerned in this respect, leaving the whole of my support, while bound for the testimony of Jesus, to the providence of God. For I have learned. How true is the proverb, "A contented mind is a continual feast"! What do we get by murmuring and complaining?

12. I know . . . how to be abased. I have passed through all these states; I know how to conduct myself in each, and how to extract good from all. And he had passed through these things, especially the hardships, so that he had learned the lesson "perfectly," as the word implies; he was thoroughly instructed, fully initiated into all the mysteries of poverty and want, and of the supporting hand of God in the whole.

13. I can do all things. It was not a habit which he had acquired by frequent exercise; it was a disposition which he had by grace; and he was enabled to do all by the power of an indwelling Christ. "Through Him who strengtheneth me" is the reading of some of the best MSS., versions, and fathers, the word Christ being omitted.

14. Ye have well done. Though I have learned all these important lessons, and am never miserable in want, yet you have done well in sending me relief in the time of affliction.

15. In the beginning of the gospel. When, having preached to you, I went forth into Macedonia, I received help from none of the churches which I had founded but from you alone.

16. For even in Thessalonica. While laboring to plant the church there, he was supported partly by working with his hands, 1 Thess. ii. 9; 2 Thess. iii. 7-9, and partly by the contributions sent him from Philippi.

17. Not because I desire a gift. I do not speak thus to incite you to send me a further gift; I speak this on the general subject because I wish you to bear such fruit as shall abound to your account in the day of the Lord.

18. I have all. You have now sent me so much by Epaphroditus that I abound in all the necessaries of life. Having received . . . the things. Probably a supply of clothes and such like necessaries, as well as of money. An odour of a sweet smell. Alluding to the sacrifices offered up under the law. With what you have done to me, His servant, God is well pleased.

He would recompense it: But my God shall supply all your wants according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus, v. 19. He does as it were draw a bill upon the exchequer in heaven, and leaves it to God. "You have supplied my needs, according to your poverty; and he shall supply yours, according to his riches." But still it is by Christ Jesus. Not of debt, but of grace.

Verses 20–23

1. Praises to God: Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever, Amen, v. 20. God is to be considered by us as our Father. It is a title peculiar to the gospel dispensation. We should look upon God, under all our weaknesses and fears, not as a tyrant, but as a Father, who is disposed to pity us and help us. We must thankfully own the receipt of all from him, and give the praise of all to him. And our praise must be constant and perpetual; it must be glory for ever and ever.

2. Salutations to his friends at Philippi: Salute every saint in Christ Jesus (v. 21). Paul had a kind affection to all good Christians.

3. Salutations from those who were at Rome: "The brethren who are with me salute you; all the saints here. Chiefly those who are of Cæsar's household; the Christian converts who belonged to the emperor's court." There were saints in Cæsar's household. The gospel early obtained among some of the rich and great.

4. The apostolical benediction, as usual: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen."

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

here "my God," to imply that God would reward their bounty to His servant, by "fully supplying" (translate so, lit., fill to the full) their every "need" (II Cor. 9:8), even as they had "fully" supplied his "need" (vss. 16, 18). My Master will fully repay you; I cannot. The Philippians invested their bounty well since it got them such a glorious return. according to his riches—The measure of His supply to you will be the immeasurable "riches of His grace" (Eph. 1:7). in glory—These words belong to the whole sentence. "Glory" is the element IN which His rich grace operates; and it will be the element IN which He will "supply fully all your need." by Christ Jesus—by virtue of your being "IN" (so Greek, not "by") Christ Jesus, the Giver and Mediator of all spiritual blessings. 20. God and our Father—Translate, "Unto our God and Father." be glory—rather as the Greek, "be the glory." Not to us, but to Him be "the glory" alike of your gift, and of His gracious recompense to you. 21. Salute every saint—individually. greet—salute you. The brethren which are with me—Perhaps Jewish believers are meant (Acts 28: 21). I think ch. 2:20 precludes our thinking of "closer friends," "colleagues in the ministry" [ALFORD]; he had only one close friend with him, viz., Timothy. 22. they that are of Cæsar's household—the slaves and dependents of Nero who had been probably converted through Paul's teaching while he was a prisoner in the Prætorian barrack attached to the palace. Philippi was a Roman "colony," hence there might arise a tie between the citizens of the mother city and those of the colony; especially between those of both cities who were Christians, converted as many of them were by the same apostle, and under like circumstances, he having been imprisoned at Philippi, as he now is at Rome. 23. (Gal. 6:18.) be with you all. Amen—The oldest MSS. read, "Be with your spirit," and omit "Amen."

ADAM CLARKE

19. My God shall supply all your need. As you have given to me in my distress, God will never suffer you to want without raising up help to you, as He raised you up for help to me.

21. Salute every saint. Remember to present my affectionate wishes to every Christian at Philippi. The brethren which are with me. Those who were fellow laborers with him, generally supposed to be Aristarchus, Mark, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas.

22. All the saints. All the Christians now at Rome. They that are of Caesar's household. Nero was at this time emperor of Rome. A more worthless, cruel, and diabolic wretch never disgraced the name or form of man; yet in "his family" there were Christians. But whether this relates to the members of the imperial family, or to guards, or courtiers, or to servants, we cannot tell. If even some of his slaves were converted to Christianity, it would be sufficiently marvellous.

23. The grace of our Lord. The word our is omitted by many MSS. and several versions, which simply read, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ."

THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS

- B. Messages (4:10-14)
- C. Instructions (4:15-17)
- D. The last words (4:18)

Colosse was a considerable city of Phrygia, and probably not far from Laodicea and Hierapolis; we find these mentioned together (4:13). It is now buried in ruins, and the memory of it chiefly preserved in this epistle. The design of the epistle is to warn them of the danger of the Jewish zealots. He professes a great satisfaction in their steadfastness and constancy. It was written while he was now a prisoner at Rome. He was not idle in his confinement, and the Word of God was not bound

The epistle, like that to the Romans, was written to those he had never seen. The church planted at Colosse was not by Paul's ministry, but by the ministry of Epaphras, whom he delegated to preach the gospel among the Gentiles; and yet, there was a flourishing church in Colosse, and one which was eminent and famous among the churches. God is sometimes pleased to make use of the ministry of those who are of less note, and lower gifts, for doing great service to his church. God uses what hands he pleases, and is not tied to those of note. Though Paul had not the planting of this church, yet he did not therefore neglect it. The Colossians were as dear to him as the Philippians, or any others who were converted by his ministry.

I. He calls himself an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God. He thought himself engaged to do his utmost, as an apostle, because he was made so by the will of God. He joins Timothy in commission with himself, and, though he elsewhere calls him his son, yet here he calls him his brother. He calls the Christians at Colosse saints, and faithful brethren in Christ. All good Christians are brethren one to another. Towards God they must be saints. And in both these, as saints to God and as brethren to one another, they must be faithful. Faithfulness runs through every character and relation of the Christian life, and is the crown and glory of them all.

II. Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. He wishes them grace and peace, the free favour of God and all the blessed fruits of it.

Verses 3–8

I. He gave thanks to God for them. In his prayers for them he gave thanks for them. Thanksgiving ought to be a part of every prayer. 1. Whom he gives thanks to: To God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. In our thanksgiving we must have an eye to God as God, and as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, in and through whom all good comes to us. 2. What he gives thanks to God for—for the graces of God in them. Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love you have to all the saints; for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, v. 4, 5. Faith, hope, and love, are the three principal graces in the Christian life. (1) He gives thanks for their faith in Christ Jesus, that they were brought to believe in him. (2) For their love. Besides the general love which is due to all men, there is a particular love owing to the saints. We must love all the saints, notwithstanding smaller points of difference, and many real weaknesses. (3) For their hope: The hope which is laid up for you in heaven, v. 5. What is laid out upon believers in this world is much; but what is laid up for them in heaven is much more. The more we fix our hopes on the recompence of reward in the other world, the more free shall we be of our earthly treasure upon all occasions of doing good.

Vss. 1-29. ADDRESS: INTRODUCTION: CONFIRMING EPAPHRAS' TEACHING: THE GLORIES OF CHRIST: THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER FOR THE COLOSSIANS: HIS OWN MINISTRY OF THE MYSTERY. 1. by the will of God—Greek, "through . . ." (cf. Note, I Cor. 1:1). Timothy—(Cf. Notes, II Cor. 1:1; Phil. 1:1.) He was with Paul at the time of writing in Rome. He had been companion of Paul in his first tour through Phrygia, in which Colosse was. Hence the Colossians seem to have associated him with Paul in their affections, and the apostle joins him with himself in the address. Neither, probably, had seen the Colossian Church (cf. ch. 2:1); but had seen, during their tour through Phrygia, individual Colossians, as Epaphras, Philemon, Archippus, and Apphia (Philemon 2), who when converted brought the Gospel to their native city. 2. Colosse—written in the oldest MSS., "Colasse." As "saints" implies union with God, so "the faithful brethren" union with Christian men [BENGEL]. and the Lord Jesus Christ—supported by some oldest MSS., omitted by others of equal antiquity. 3. Thanksgiving for the "faith, hope, and love" of the Colossians. So in the twin Epistle sent at the same time and by the same bearer, Tychicus (Eph. 1:15, 16). We—I and Timothy. and the Father—So some of the oldest MSS. read. But others better omit the "and," which probably crept in from Ephesians 1:3. praying always for you—with thanksgiving (Phil. 4:6). See next verse. 4. Since we heard—lit., "Having heard." The language implies that he had only heard of, and not seen, them (ch. 2:1). Cf. Romans 1:8, where like language is used of a Church which he had not at the time visited. love . . . to all—the absent, as well as those present [BENGEL]. 5. For—to be joined with the words immediately preceding: "The love which ye have to all the saints because of (lit., on account of) the hope . . . ." The hope of eternal life will never be in us an inactive principle but will always produce "love." This passage is abused by Romanists, as if the hope of salvation depended upon works. A false argument. It does not follow that our hope is founded on our works because we are strongly stimulated to live well; since nothing is more effectual for this

1. Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God. The word apostle signifies "one sent," an envoy or messenger. And Timotheus. Though Timothy is here joined in the salutation, yet he has never been understood as having any part in composing this Epistle. He has been considered as the amanuensis or scribe of the apostle.

4. Since we heard of your faith. This is very similar to Eph. i. 15. And it is certain that the apostle seems to have considered the church at Ephesus and that at Colossae to have been in nearly the same state, as the two Epistles are very similar in their doctrine and phraseology.

5. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven. That eternal life, of both body and soul, which the apostle mentions, Titus i. 2: "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." The hope is here used for the object of hope; as every person that is born of God hopes for the resurrection of his body, and the glorification of both it and his soul in the realms of eternal blessed-

II. He blesses God for the means of grace which they enjoyed: Wherein you heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel. The gospel is the word of truth, and what we may safely venture our immortal souls upon. He calls it the grace of God in truth, v. 6. It is a great mercy to hear this word of truth.

"Which has come unto you, as it hath to all the world, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you," v. 6. All who hear the word of the gospel ought to bring forth the fruit of the gospel. Wherever the gospel comes, it will bring forth fruit to the honour and glory of God. We mistake, if we think to monopolise the comforts and benefits of the gospel to ourselves.

III. The minister by whom they believed (v. 7, 8): As you also learned of Epaphras, our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ. He calls him his fellow-servant. They were fellow-labourers in the work of the Lord. He calls him his dear fellow-servant: it is an endearing consideration that they are engaged in the same service. He represents him as one who was a faithful minister of Christ to them. He does not say who is your minister; but who is the minister of Christ for you. It is by his authority and appointment.

He represents him as one who gave them a good word: Who also declared unto us your love in the Spirit, v. 8. He recommends him to their affection, from the good report he made of their sincere love, which was wrought in them by the Spirit. Faithful ministers are glad to be able to speak well of their people.

He heard that they were good, and he prayed that they might be better. We do not cease to pray for you. It may be he could hear of them but seldom, but he constantly prayed for them.

I. Filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. A mere empty notion of the greatest truths is insignificant. Our knowledge of the will of God must be always practical: we must know it, in order to do it. Our knowledge is then a blessing indeed when it is in wisdom, when we know how to apply our general knowledge to our particular occasions. Christians should endeavour to be filled with knowledge; not only to know the will of God, but to know more of it, and to increase in the knowledge of God (as it is v. 10).

purpose than the sense of God's free grace [CALVIN]. laid up—a treasure laid up so as to be out of danger of being lost (II Tim. 4:8). Faith, love, and hope (vss. 4, 5), comprise the sum of Christianity. Cf. vs. 23, "the hope of the Gospel." in heaven—Greek, "in the heavens." whereof ye heard before—viz., at the time when it was preached to you. in the word . . .—That "hope" formed part of "the word of the truth of the Gospel" (cf. Eph. 1:13), i.e., part of the Gospel truth preached unto you. 6. Which is come unto you—Greek, "Which is present among you," i.e., which has come to, and remains with, you. He speaks of the word as a living person present among them. as it is in all the world—virtually, as it was by this time preached in the leading parts of the then known world; potentially, as Christ's command was that the Gospel should be preached to all nations, and not be limited, as the law was, to the Jews (Matt. 13:38; 24:14; 28:19). However, the true reading, and that of the oldest MSS., is that which omits the following "and," thus (the "it is" of English Version is not in the original Greek): "As in all the world it is bringing forth fruit and growing (so the oldest MSS. read; English Version omits 'and growing,' without good authority), even as it doth in you also." Then what is asserted is not that the Gospel has been preached in all the world, but that it is bearing fruits of righteousness, and (like a tree growing at the same time that it is bearing fruit) growing in numbers of its converts in, or throughout, all the world. heard of it—rather, "heard it." and knew—rather, "came to know"; became fully experimentally acquainted with. the grace of God in truth—i.e., in its truth, and with true knowledge [ALFORD]. 7. As ye also learned—"Also" is omitted in the oldest MSS. The insertion implied that those inserting it thought that Paul had preached the Gospel to the Colossians as well as Epaphras, Whereas the omission in the oldest MSS. implies that Epaphras alone was the founder of the Church at Colosse. of—"from Epaphras." dear—Greek, "beloved." fellow servant—viz., of Christ. In Philemon 23 he calls him "my fellow prisoner." It is possible that Epaphras may have been apprehended for his zealous labors in Asia Minor; but more probable that Paul gave him the title, as his faithful companion in his imprisonment (cf. Note, ch. 4:10, as to MEYER'S conjecture). who is for you . . .—Translate, "who is faithful in your behalf as a minister of Christ"; hinting that he is one not to be set aside for the new and erroneous teachers (ch. 2). Most of the oldest MSS. read, "for (or in behalf of) US." Vulgate, however, with one of the oldest MSS., supports English Version. 8. your love—(vs. 4)—"to all the saints." in the Spirit—the sphere or element IN which alone true love is found; as distinguished from the state of those "in the flesh" (Rom. 8:9). Yet even they needed to be stirred up to greater love (ch. 3:12-14). Love IS the first and chief fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22). 9. we also—on our part. heard it—(vs. 4). pray—Here he states what in particular he prays for; as in vs. 3 he stated generally the fact of his praying for them. to desire—"to make request." might be filled—rather, "may be filled"; a verb often found in this Epistle (ch. 4:12, 17). knowledge—Greek, "full and accurate knowledge." Akin to the Greek for "knew" (Note, vs. 6). of his will—as to how ye ought to walk (Eph. 5:17); as well as chiefly that "mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure which He purposed in Himself; that in the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ" (Eph. 1:9, 10); God's "will," whereby He eternally purposed to reconcile to Himself, and save men by Christ, not by angels, as the false teachers in some degree taught (ch. 2:18) [ESTIUS]. There seems to have been a want of knowledge among the Colossians; notwithstanding their general excellencies; hence he so often dwells on this subject (vs. 28; ch. 2:2, 3; 3:10, 13; 4:5, 6). On the contrary he less extols wisdom to the Corinthians, who were puffed up with the conceit of knowledge. wisdom—often mentioned in this Epistle, as opposed to the (false) "philosophy" and "show of wisdom" (ch. 2:8, 23; cf. Eph. 1:8). understanding—sagacity to discern what on each occasion is suited to the place and the time; its seat is "the understanding" or intellect; wisdom is more general and has its seat in the whole compass of the faculties of the soul [BENGEL]. "Wouldst thou know that the matters in the word of Christ are real things? Then never read them for mere knowledge sake." [Quoted by GAUSSEN.] Knowledge is desirable only when seasoned by "spiritual understanding." 10. Greek, "So as to walk"; so that ye may walk. True knowledge of God's will is inseparable from walking conformably to it.

ADAM CLARKE

ness. In the word of the truth of the gospel. In the "doctrine" of that gospel of your salvation which is the truth of God. Of this hope, by this doctrine, they had heard before, probably by persons who had heard and received the gospel either at Ephesus or some other place, in either Asia Minor or Greece, where the apostles had preached.

6. And bringeth forth fruit. Wherever the pure gospel of Christ is preached it is the seed of the kingdom, and must be fruitful in all those who receive it by faith, in simplicity of heart. After bringeth forth fruit, many MSS., together with many of the fathers, add "and increaseth." It had not only brought forth fruit, but was multiplying its own kind. This reading is very important, and is undoubtedly genuine.

7. As ye also learned of Epaphras . . . who is for you. That he was a Colossian is evident from chap. iv. 12: "Epaphras, who is one of you," and some think that he was the first who preached the gospel among this people, and hence called an apostle.

8. Your love in the Spirit. The heavenly flame in the heart of this minister communicated itself to those who heard him; it was "like priest, like people." They enjoyed a spiritual, energetic ministry, and they were a spiritual people; they had a loving spirit, and love through the Spirit of God, who dwelt in them.

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

For the church that was at Colosse, Paul gave hearty thanks to God for many most important blessings, especially for their faith, their love, and their hope. It would be a very useful exercise to our hearts if we would often give thanks to God for the gifts and graces which we discover in our Christian brethren. I am afraid we are more inclined to spy out their faults, and to suppose that we deplore them, than we are to discern the work of the Holy Spirit in them, and from the bottom of our hearts to give thanks to God for them. Paul felt encouraged by what he saw in the Colossian believers to pray to God to enrich them yet further. It should be our desire that our best brethren should be better, and that those who are most like Jesus should be still more completely conformed to His image. We cannot more wisely show our love to our friends than by first acknowledging the grace which is in them, and then by praying that God may give them more. Paul, as with an eagle eye, surveyed the church at Colosse and noted that it was somewhat lacking in knowledge. The Colossians had fewer gifted brethren among them who could act as teachers, and, though this was no fault of theirs, it impoverished them in the matter of knowledge, and as Paul would not have them come behind in any desirable attainment, he therefore prayed for them that they might be filled with knowledge in all wisdom and spirtual undertanding.

—The Treasury of the New Testament

MATTHEW HENRY

II. Good knowledge without a good life will not profit. That you may walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing (v. 10). The agreeableness of our conversation to our religion is pleasing to God as well as to good men. Being fruitful in every good work. Good words will not do without good works. We must abound in good works, and in every good work. There must be a regular uniform regard to all the will of God. And the more fruitful we are in good works the more we shall increase in the knowledge of God.

III. Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power (v. 11). Where there is spiritual life there is still need of spiritual strength. To be strengthened is to be furnished by the grace of God for every good work, and fortified by that grace against every evil one. In the praying for spiritual strength we are not straitened in the promises, and therefore should not be straitened in our own hopes and desires. He prayed that they might be strengthened with might: that they might be mightily strengthened. It is with all might. With all that might which we have occasion for, to enable us to discharge our duty or preserve our innocence, that grace which is sufficient for us in all the trials of life. It is according to his glorious power. The grace of God in the hearts of believers is the power of God; and there is a glory in this power. The communications of strength are not according to our weakness, but according to his power. That you may be strengthened unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness. He prays not only that they may be supported under their troubles, but strengthened for them. Strengthened according to his glorious power. 1. To all patience. Then we are strengthened to all patience—when we not only bear our troubles patiently, but receive them as gifts from God, and are thankful for them. 2. This is even unto long-suffering, not only to bear trouble awhile, but to bear it as long as God pleases to continue it. 3. It is with joyfulness, to rejoice in tribulation, to rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer for his name, to have joy as well as patience in the troubles of life. This we could never do by any strength of our own, but as we are strengthened by the grace of God.

Verses 12–29

Here is a summary of the doctrine of the gospel concerning the great work of our redemption by Christ. It comes in here as the matter of a thanksgiving: Giving thanks unto the Father, v. 12.

I. The operations of the Spirit of grace. We must give thanks for them: Giving thanks to the Father, &c., v. 12, 13. Those in whom the work of grace is wrought must give thanks unto the Father. 1. "He hath delivered us from the power of darkness, v. 13. He hath saved us from the dominion of sin, which is darkness." 2. "He hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, made us members of the church of Christ, which is a state of light and purity." The conversion of a sinner is the translation of a soul into the kingdom of Christ out of the kingdom of the devil. It is the kingdom of his dear Son. 3. "He hath made us meet to partake of the inheritance of the saints in light, v. 12." God gives grace and glory. (1) What that glory is. It is the inheritance of the saints in light. It is an inheritance, and belongs to them as children. And it is an inheritance of the saints. Those who are not saints on earth will never be saints in heaven. And it is an inheritance in light; by communion with God, who is light. (2) What this grace is. It is a meetness for the inheritance: "He hath made us meet to be partakers." All who are designed for heaven hereafter are prepared for heaven now. Those who are sanctified and renewed go out of the world with their heaven about them. Those who have the inheritance of sons have the education of sons. This meetness for heaven is the earnest of the Spirit in our heart, which is part of payment, and assures the full payment.

II. The Redeemer. Glorious things are here said of him; for blessed Paul was full of Christ. He speaks of him distinctly as God, and as Mediator. 1. As God he speaks of him, v. 15–17. (1) He is the image of the invisible God. He is so the image of God as the son is the image of his father, who has a natural likeness to him.

worthy of the Lord—(Eph. 4:1). unto—so as in every way to be well-pleasing to God. pleasing—lit., "desire of pleasing." being fruitful—Greek, "bearing fruit." This is the first manifestation of their "walking worthy of the Lord." The second is, "increasing (growing) in the knowledge of God" (or as the oldest MSS. read, "growing BY the full knowledge of God"); thus, as the Gospel word (vs. 6) was said to "bring forth fruit," and to "grow" in all the world, even as it did in the Colossians, ever since the day they knew the grace of God, so here it is Paul's prayer that they might continue to "bring forth fruit," and "grow" more and more by the full knowledge of God, the more that "knowledge" (vs. 9) was imparted to them. The full knowledge of God is the real instrument of enlargement in soul and life of the believer [ALFORD]. The third manifestation of their walk is (vs. 11), "Being strengthened with all might...." The fourth is (vs. 12), "Giving thanks unto the Father...." 11. Greek, "Being made mighty with (lit., in) all might." according to his glorious power—rather, "according to the power (the characteristic of 'His glory,' here appropriate to Paul's argument, Eph. 1:19; 6:10; as its exuberant 'riches,' in Eph. 3:16) of His glory." His power is inseparable from His glory (Rom. 6: 4). unto all patience—so as to attain to all patient endurance; persevering, enduring continuance in the faith, in spite of trials of persecutors, and seductions of false teachers. long-suffering—towards those whom one could repel. "Patience," or "endurance," is exercised in respect to those whom one cannot repel [CHRYSOSTOM]. with joyfulness—joyful endurance (Acts 16:25; Rom. 5:3, 11). 12. You "giving thanks unto the Father." See Note, vs. 10; this clause is connected with "that ye may be filled" (vs. 9), and "that ye may walk" (vs. 10). The connection is not, "We do not cease to pray for you (vs. 9) giving thanks." unto the Father—of Jesus Christ, and so our Father by adoption (Gal. 3:26; 4:4, 5, 6). which hath made us meet—Greek, "who made us meet." Not "is making us meet" by progressive growth in holiness; but once for all made us meet. It is not primarily the Spirit's work that is meant here, as the text is often used; but the Father's work in putting us by adoption, once for all, in a new standing, viz., that of children.

to be partakers...—Greek, "for the (or our) portion of the inheritance (Acts 20:32; 26:18; Eph. 1:11) of the saints in light." "Light" begins in the believer here, descending from "the Father of lights" by Jesus, "the true light," and is perfected in the kingdom of light, which includes knowledge, purity, love, and joy. It is contrasted here with the "darkness" of the unconverted state (vs. 13; cf. I Pet. 2:9). 13. from—Greek, "out of the power," out of the sphere in which his power is exercised. darkness—blindness, hatred, misery [BENGEL]. translated—Those thus translated as to state, are also transformed as to character. Satan has an organized dominion with various orders of powers of evil (Eph. 2:2; 6:12). But the term "kingdom" is rarely applied to his usurped rule (Matt. 12:26); it is generally restricted to the kingdom of God. his dear Son—rather as Greek, "the Son of His love": the Son on whom His love rests (John 17:26; Eph. 1:6): contrasted with the "darkness" where all is hatred and hateful. 14. (Eph. 1:7.) redemption—rather as Greek, "our redemption." through his blood—omitted in the oldest MSS.; probably inserted from Ephesians 1:7. sins—Translate as Greek, "our sins." The more general term: for which Ephesians 1:7, Greek, has, "our transgressions," the more special term. 15. They who have experienced in themselves "redemption" (vs. 14), know Christ in the glorious character here described, as above the highest angels to whom the false teachers (ch. 2:18) taught worship was to be paid. Paul describes Him: (1) in relation to God and creation (vss. 15-17); (2) in relation to the Church (vss. 18-20). As the former regards Him as the Creator (vss. 15, 16) and the Sustainer (vs. 17) of the natural world; so the latter, as the source and stay of the new moral creation. image—exact likeness and perfect Representative. Adam was made "in the image of God" (Gen. 1:27). But Christ, the second Adam, perfectly reflected visibly "the invisible God" (I Tim. 1:17), whose glories the first Adam only in part represented. "Image" (eicon) involves "likeness" (homoiosis); but "likeness" does not involve "image." "Image" always supposes a prototype, which it not merely resembles, but from which it is drawn: the exact counterpart, as the reflection of the sun in the water: the child the living image of the parent. "Likeness" implies mere resemblance, not the exact counterpart and derivation as "image" expresses; hence it is nowhere applied to

ALEXANDER MACLAREN:

The form of the word "strengthened" here would be more fully represented by "being strengthened," and suggests an unintermitted process of bestowal and reception of God's might rendered necessary by our continuous human weakness and by the tear and wear of life. As in the physical life there must be constant renewal because there is constant waste, and as every bodily action involves destruction of tissue so that living is a continual dying, so is it in the mental and still more in the spiritual life. Just as there must be a perpetual oxygenation of blood in the lungs, so there must be an uninterrupted renewal of spiritual strength for the highest life. It is demanded by the conditions of our human weakness. It is no less rendered necessary by the nature of the divine strength imparted, which is ever communicating itself, and like the ocean cannot but pour so much of its fullness as can be received into every creek and crack on its shore.

The Apostle not merely emphasizes the continuousness of this communicated strength, but its many-sided variety, by designating it "all power." In this whole context that word "all" seems to have a charm for him. Here the comprehensive completeness of the strength available for our many-sided weakness is marvelously revealed. There is "infinite riches in a narrow room." All power means every kind of power, be it bodily or mental, for all variety of circumstances.

—Expositions of Holy Scripture

12. Giving thanks unto the Father. Knowing that you have nothing but what you have received from His mere mercy, and that in point of merit you can never claim anything from Him. Which hath made us meet. Who has "qualified" us to be partakers. Of the inheritance. A plain allusion to the division of the Promised Land by lot among the different families of the twelve Israelitish tribes. Of the saints in light. Light, in the sacred writings, is used to express knowledge, felicity, purity, comfort, and joy of the most substantial kind; here it is put to point out the state of glory at the right hand of God.

13. Delivered us from the power of darkness. Darkness is here personified and is represented as having power, "authority, and sway," all Jews and Gentiles who had not embraced the gospel being under this authority and power. Translated us into the kingdom. He has thoroughly changed our state, brought us out of the dark region of vice and impiety, and placed us in the Kingdom under the government of his dear Son, "the Son of His love"; the Person whom, in His infinite love, He has given to make an atonement for the sin of the world.

14. In whom we have redemption. Who has paid down the redemption price, even His own blood, that our sins might be cancelled, and we made fit to be partakers of the inheritance among the saints in light. The clause through his blood is omitted by most MSS. and versions of weight and importance, and by most of the Greek fathers. It is likely that the reading here is not genuine. The same phrase is used Eph. i. 7, where there is no various reading in any of the MSS., versions, or fathers. The forgiveness of sins. "The taking away of sins"; all the power, guilt, and infection of sin.

15. Who is the image of the invisible God. The Counterpart of God Almighty; and if the image of the invisible God, consequently nothing that appeared in Him could be that image.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) He is the first-born of every creature. Born or begotten before all the creation, which is the scripture-way of representing eternity. It signifies his dominion over all things, as the first-born in a family is heir and lord of all.

(3) He is so far from being himself a creature that he is the Creator: For by him were all things created, which are in heaven and earth, visible and invisible, v. 16.

He speaks here as if there were several orders of angels: Whether thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers.

All things are created by him and for him. He is the end, as well as the cause of all things.

(4) He was before all things. He had a being before the world was made, and therefore from all eternity. He not only had a being before he was born of the virgin, but he had a being before all time. (5) By him all things consist. The whole creation is kept together by the power of the Son of God, and made to consist in its proper frame.

2. What he is as Mediator, v. 18, 19. (1) He is the head of the body the church: not only a head of government and direction, but a head of vital influence, as the head in the natural body: for all grace and strength are derived from him.

the Son, while "image" is here, cf. I Corinthians 11: 7 [TRENCH]. (John 1:18; 14:9; II Cor. 4:4; I Tim. 3:16; Heb. 1:3.) Even before His incarnation He was the image of the invisible God, as the Word (John 1:1-3) by whom God created the worlds, and by whom God appeared to the patriarchs. Thus His essential character as always "the image of God," (1) before the incarnation, (2) in the days of His flesh, and (3) now in His glorified state, is, I think, contemplated here by the verb "is." first-born of every creature—Hebrews 1:6, "the first-begotten": "begotten of His Father before all worlds" [NICENE Creed]. Priority and superlative dignity is implied (Ps. 89:27). English Version might seem to favor Arianism, as if Christ were a creature. Translate, "Begotten (lit., born) before every creature," as the context shows, which gives the reason why He is so designated. "For . . ." (vss. 16, 17) [TRENCH]. This expression is understood by ORIGEN (so far is the Greek from favoring Socinian or Arian views) as declaring the Godhead of Christ, and is used by Him as a phrase to mark that Godhead, in contrast with His manhood (B. 2., sec. contra Celsus). The Greek does not strictly admit ALFORD's translation, "the first-born of all creation." 16. For—Greek, "Because." This gives the proof that He is not included in the things created, but is the "first-begotten" before "every creature" (vs. 15), begotten as "the Son of God's love" (vs. 13), antecedently to all other emanations: "for" all these other emanations came from Him, and whatever was created, was created by Him. by him—rather as Greek, "in Him": as the conditional element, pre-existent and all-including: the creation of all things BY Him is expressed afterwards, and is a different fact from the present one, though implied in it [ALFORD]. God revealed Himself in the Son, the Word of the Father, before all created existence (vs. 15).

all things—Greek, "the universe of things." That the new creation is not meant in this verse (as Socinians interpret), is plain; for angels, who are included in the catalogue, were not new created by Christ; and he does not speak of the new creation till vs. 18. The creation "of the things that are in the heavens" (so Greek) includes the creation of the heavens themselves: the former are rather named, since the inhabitants are more noble than their dwellings. Heaven and earth and all that is in them (I Chron. 29:11; Neh. 9:6; Rev. 10:6). invisible—the world of spirits. thrones, or dominions—lordships: the thrones are the greater of the two. principalities, or powers—rather, "rules, or authorities": the former are stronger than the latter (cf. Note, Eph. 1:21). The latter pair refer to offices in respect to God's creatures: "thrones and dominions" express exalted relation to God, they being the chariots on which He rides displaying His glory (Ps. 68:17). The existence of various orders of angels is established by this passage. all things—Greek, "the whole universe of things." were—rather, to distinguish the Greek aorist, which precedes from the perfect tense here, "have been created." In the former case the creation was viewed as a past act at a point of time, or as done once for all; here it is viewed, not merely as one historic act of creation in the past, but as the permanent result now and eternally continuing. by him—as the instrumental Agent (John 1:3). for him—as the grand End of creation; containing in Himself the reason why creation is at all, and why it is as it is [ALFORD]. He is the final cause as well as the efficient cause.

17. (John 8:58.) Translate as Greek, "And He Himself (the great HE) is (implying divine essential being) before all things," in time, as well as in dignity. Since He is before all things, He is before even time, i.e., from eternity. Cf. "the first-born of every creature" (vs. 15). by him—Greek, "IN Him" (as the conditional element of existence, vs. 16) [ALFORD]. consist—"subsist." Not only are called into being from nothing, but are maintained in their present state. The Son of God is the Conserver, as well as the Creator of all things [PEARSON]. BENGEL less probably explains, "All things in Him come together into one system: the universe found its completion in Him" (Isa. 41:4; Rev. 22:13). Cf. as to GOD, Romans 11:36: similar language; therefore Christ must be God. 18. Revelation of Christ to the Church and the new creation, as the Originator of both. he—emphatical. Not angels in opposition to the false teachers' doctrine concerning angel-worship, and the power of Œons or (imaginary) spirit-emanations from God (ch. 2:10, 18). head of the body, the church—The Church is His body by virtue of His entering into communion corporeally with human nature

The first-born of every creature. I suppose this phrase to mean the same as that in Phil. ii. 9: "God . . . hath . . . given him a name which is above every name." He is a Man at the head of all the creation of God; nor can He with any propriety be considered as a creature, having himself created all things, and existed before anything was made. If it be said that God created Him first, and that He by a delegated power from God created all things, this is most flatly contradicted by the apostle's reasoning in the sixteenth and seventeenth verses. As the Jews term Jehovah "the firstborn of all the world" or "of all the creation," to signify His having created or produced all things, so Christ is here termed, and the words which follow in the sixteenth and seventeenth verses are the proof of this. The phraseology is Jewish; and as they apply it to the Supreme Being merely to denote His eternal preexistence, and to point Him out as the Cause of all things, it is most evident that Paul uses it in the same way, and illustrates his meaning in the following words, which would be absolutely absurd if we could suppose that by the former he intended to convey any idea of the inferiority of Jesus Christ.

16-17. For by him were all things created. Four things are here asserted: (1) That Jesus Christ is the Creator of the universe, of all things visible and invisible.

(2) That whatsoever was created was created for himself.

(3) That He was prior to all creation, to all beings, whether in the visible or invisible world. (4) That He is the Preserver and Governor of all things; for by him all things consist.

18. He is the head of the body. What the apostle has said in the preceding two verses refers to the divine nature of Jesus Christ. He now proceeds to speak of His human nature, and to show how highly that is exalted beyond all created things, and how, in that, He is Head of the church—the Author and Dispenser of

(2) He is the beginning, the first-born from the dead, the principle of our resurrection. The first and only one who rose by his own power, and has given us evidence of our resurrection from the dead.

(3) He hath in all things the pre-eminence, preferred above angels and all the powers in heaven. Among men he should have the pre-eminence.

(4) All fulness dwells in him, and it pleased the Father it should do so (v. 19), not only a fulness of abundance for himself, but abundance for us.

III. The work of redemption.

1. Wherein it consists. (1) In the remission of sin: In whom we have redemption, even the forgiveness of sins, v. 14. If we are redeemed, we must be redeemed from sin; and this is by forgiveness. (2) In reconciliation to God. God by him reconciled all things to himself, v. 20. He is the Mediator of reconciliation, who procures peace as well as pardon for sinners, and will bring all holy creatures into one blessed society at last: things in earth, or things in heaven.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

[NEANDER], (Eph. 1:22). The same One who is the Head of all things and beings by creation, is also, by virtue of being "the first-born from the dead," and so "the first-fruits" of the new creation among men, the Head of the Church. who is—i.e., in that He is the Beginning [ALFORD].

the beginning—viz., of the new creation, as of the old (Prov. 8:22; John 1:1; cf. Rev. 1:8): the beginning of the Church of the first-born (Heb. 12:23), as being Himself the "first-born from the dead" (Acts 26:23; I Cor. 15:20,23). Christ's primogeniture is threefold: (1) From eternity the "first-begotten" of the Father (vs. 15); (2) As the first-born of His mother (Matt. 1:25); (3) As the Head of the Church, mystically begotten of the Father, as it were to a new life, on the day of His resurrection, which is His "regeneration," even as His people's coming resurrection will be their "regeneration" (i.e., the resurrection which was begun in the soul, extended to the body and to the whole creation, Romans 8:21, 22) (Matt. 19:28; Acts 13:33; Rev. 1:5). Sonship and resurrection are similarly connected (Luke 20:36; Rom. 1:4; 8:23; I John 3:2). Christ by rising from the dead is the efficient cause (I Cor. 15:22), as having obtained the power, and the exemplary cause, as being the pattern (Mic. 2:13; Rom. 6:5; Phil. 3:21), of our resurrection: the resurrection of "the Head" involves consequentially that of the members. that in all things—He resumes the "all things" (vs. 20). he might have the pre-eminence—Greek, "He HIMSELF may (thus) become the One holding the first place," or, "take the precedency." Both ideas are included, priority in time and priority in dignity: now in the regenerated world, as before in the world of creation (vs. 15). "Begotten before every creature, or "first-born of every creature" (Ps. 89:27; John 3:13). 19. Greek, "(God) was well pleased . . . ." in him—i.e., in the Son (Matt. 3:17). all fulness—rather as Greek, "all the fulness," viz., of God, whatever divine excellence is in God the Father (ch. 2:9; Eph. 3:19; cf. John 1:16; 3:34). The Gnostics used the term "fulness," for the assemblage of emanations, or angelic powers, coming from God. The Spirit presciently by Paul warns the Church, that the true "fulness" dwells in Christ alone. This assigns the reason why Christ takes precedence of every creature (vs. 15). For two reasons Christ is Lord of the Church: (1) Because the fulness of the divine attributes (vs. 19) dwells in Him, and so He has the power to govern the universe; (2) Because (vs. 20) what He has done for the Church gives Him the right to preside over it. should . . . dwell—as in a temple (John 2:21). This indwelling of the Godhead in Christ is the foundation of the reconciliation by Him [BENGEL]. Hence the "and" (vs. 20) connects as cause and effect the two things, the Godhead in Christ, and the reconciliation by Christ. 20. The Greek order is, "And through Him (Christ) to reconcile again completely (see Note, Eph. 2:16) all things (Greek, 'the whole universe of things') unto Himself (unto God the Father, II Cor. 5:19), having made peace (God the Father having made peace) through the blood of His (Christ's) cross," i.e., shed by Christ on the cross: the price and pledge of our reconciliation with God. The Scripture phrase, "God reconciles man to Himself," implies that He takes away by the blood of Jesus the barrier which God's justice interposes against man's being in union with God (cf. Note, Rom. 5:10; II Cor. 5:18). So the LXX, I Samuel 29:4, "Wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master," i.e., reconcile his master unto him by appeasing his wrath. So Matthew 5:23, 24. by him—"through Him" (the instrumental agent in the new creation, as in the original creation): emphatically repeated, to bring the person of Christ, as the Head of both creations alike, into prominence. things in earth . . . in heaven—Good angels, in one sense, do not need reconciliation to God; fallen angels are excluded from it (Jude 6). But probably redemption has effects on the world of spirits unknown to us. Of course, His reconciling us, and His reconciling them, must be by a different process, as He took not on Him the nature of angels, so as to offer a propitiation for them. But the effect of redemption on them, as He is their Head as well as ours, is that they are thereby brought nearer God, and so gain an increase of blessedness [ALFORD], and larger views of the love and wisdom of God (Eph. 3:10). All creation subsists in Christ, all creation is therefore affected by His propitiation: sinful creation is strictly "reconciled" from its enmity; sinless creation, comparatively distant from His unapproachable purity (Job 4:18; 15:15; 25:5), is lifted into nearer participation of Him, and in this wider sense is reconciled.

light, life, and salvation, to the Christian world; or in other words, that from Him, as the Man in whom the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelt, all the mercy and salvation of the gospel system is to be received. The beginning, the firstborn from the dead. In 1 Cor. xv. 20, Christ is called "the firstfruits of them that slept"; and here, the chief and firstborn from the dead; He being the first that ever resumed the natural life, with the employment of all its functions, nevermore to enter the empire of death, after having died a natural death, and in such circumstances as precluded the possibility of deception. The arche, "chief, head, or first," answers in this verse to the aparche, or "firstfruits," 1 Cor. xv. 20. Jesus Christ is not only the first who rose from the dead to die no more, but He is the firstfruits of human beings, for as surely as the firstfruits were an indication and pledge of the harvest, so surely was the resurrection of Christ the proof that all mankind should have a resurrection from the dead.

That in all things he might have the preeminence. That He might be considered, in consequence of His mediatorial office, as possessing the first place in and being chief over all the creation of God. For is it to be wondered at that the human nature, with which the great Creator condescended to unite himself, should be set over all the works of His hands?

19. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. As the words the Father are not in the original text, some have translated the verse thus: "For in him it seemed right that all fulness should dwell"; that is, that the majesty, power, and goodness of God should be manifested in and by Christ Jesus, and thus by Him the Father reconciles all things to himself. The fulness must refer here to the divine nature dwelling in the Man Christ Jesus.

20. And, having made peace through the blood of his cross. Peace between God and man. To reconcile all things unto himself. The enmity was on the part of the creature; though God is angry with the wicked every day, yet He is never unwilling to be reconciled. But man, whose carnal mind is enmity to God, is naturally averse from this reconciliation; it requires, therefore, the blood of his cross to atone for the sin, and the influence of the Spirit to reconcile the transgressor to Him against whom he has offended!

Things in earth, or things in heaven. If the phrase be not a kind of collective phrase to signify "all the world" or "all mankind," the things in heaven may refer, according to some, to those persons who died under the Old Testament dispensation, and who could not have a title to glory but through the sacrificial death of Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

The Gentiles, who were alienated, and enemies in their minds by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, v. 21. This enmity is slain, and we are now reconciled. The greatest enemies to God may be reconciled, if it be not their own fault.

2. How the redemption is procured: it is through his blood (v. 14); he has made peace through the blood of his cross (v. 20), and it is in the body of his flesh through death, v. 22. There was such a value in the blood of Christ that, on account of Christ's shedding it, God was willing to deal with men upon new terms, to pardon and accept to favour all who comply with them.

The duty of those who are interested in this redemption: If you continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel which you have heard, v. 23. We can expect the happy end of our faith only when we continue in the faith, and are so far grounded and settled in it as not to be moved from it.

IV. The preaching of this redemption.

1. To whom it was preached: To every creature under heaven (v. 23). The gospel excludes none who do not exclude themselves.

2. By whom it was preached: Whereof I Paul am made a minister. He looks upon it as the highest of his titles of honour to be a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

21. The Colossians are included in this general reconciliation (cf. Eph. 2:1, 12). sometime—"once." alienated—from God and salvation: objectively banished from God, through the barrier which God's justice interposed against your sin: subjectively estranged through the alienation of your own wills from God. The former is the prominent thought (cf. Rom. 5:10), as the second follows, "enemies in your mind." "Actual alienation makes habitual 'enemies'" [BENGEL]. in your mind—Greek, "in your understanding" or "thought" (Eph. 2:3; 4:18). by wicked works—rather as Greek, "in your wicked works" (wicked works were the element in which your enmity subsisted). yet now—Notwithstanding the former alienation, now that Christ has come, God hath completely reconciled, or restored to His friendship again (so the Greek, cf. Note, vs. 20). 22. In the body of his flesh—the element in which His reconciling sufferings had place. Cf. vs. 24, "afflictions of Christ in my flesh" (I Pet. 2:24). Angels who have not a "body of flesh" are not in any way our reconciling mediators, as your false teachers assert, but He, the Lord of angels, who has taken our flesh, that in it He might atone for our fallen manhood. through death—rather as Greek, "through His death" (which could only take place in a body like ours, of flesh, Heb. 2:14). This implies He took on Him our true and entire manhood. Flesh is the sphere in which His human sufferings could have place (cf. vs. 24; Eph. 2:15). to present you—(Eph. 5:27). The end of His reconciling atonement by death. holy—positively; and in relation to God. unblamable . . . unreprovable—negatively. "Without blemish" (as the former Greek word is translated as to Jesus, our Head, I Pet. 1:19) in one's self. Irreproachable (the Greek for the second word, one who gives no occasion for his being brought to a law court) is in relation to the world without. Sanctification, as the fruit, is here treated of; justification, by Christ's reconciliation, as the tree, having preceded (Eph. 1:4; 5:26, 27; Titus 2: 14). At the same time, our sanctification is regarded here as perfect in Christ, into whom we are grafted at regeneration or conversion, and who is "made of God unto us (perfect) sanctification" (I Cor. 1:30; I Pet. 1:2; Jude 1): not merely progressive sanctification, which is the gradual development of the sanctification which Christ is made to the believer from the first. in his sight—in God's sight, at Christ's appearing. 23. If—"Assuming that . . .": not otherwise shall ye be so presented at His appearing (vs. 22). grounded—Greek, "founded," "fixed on the foundation" (cf. Note, Eph. 3:17; Luke 6:48, 49). settled—"steadfast." "Grounded" respects the foundation on which believers rest; "settled," their own steadfastness (I Pet. 5:10). I Corinthians 15:58 has the same Greek. not moved away—by the false teachers. the hope of the gospel—(Eph. 1:18). which ye have heard . . . which was preached to every creature . . . whereof I . . . am . . . a minister—Three arguments against their being "moved away from the Gospel": (1) Their having heard it; (2) The universality of the preaching of it; (3) Paul's ministry in it. For "to (Greek, 'in') every creature," the oldest MSS. read, "in all creation." Cf. "in all the world," vs. 6; "all things . . . in earth," vs. 20 (Mark 16:15): thus he implies that the Gospel from which he urges them not to be moved, has this mark of truth, viz., the universality of its announcement, which accords with the command and prophecy of Christ Himself (Matt. 24:14). By "was preached," he means not merely "is being preached," but has been actually, as an accomplished fact, preached. PLINY, not many years subsequently, in his famous letter to the Emperor Trajon (B. X., Ep. 97), writes, "Many of every age, rank, and sex, are being brought to trial. For the contagion of that superstition [Christianity] has spread over not only cities, but villages and the country." whereof I Paul am—rather as Greek, "was made a minister." Respect for me, the minister of this world-wide Gospel, should lead you not to be moved from it. Moreover (he implies), the Gospel which ye heard from Epapharas, your "minister" (vs. 7), is the same of which "I was made a minister" (vs. 25; Eph. 3:7): if you be moved from it, ye will desert the teaching of the recognized ministers of the Gospel for unauthorized false teachers. 24. Who—The oldest MSS. omit "who"; then translate, "Now I rejoice." Some very old MSS., and the best of the Latin versions, and Vulgate, read as English Version. To enhance the glory of Christ as paramount to all, he mentions his own sufferings for the Church of Christ. "Now" stands in contrast to "I was made," in the past time (vs. 23). for you—"on your be-

ADAM CLARKE

21. And you, that were sometime alienated. All men are alienated from God, and all are enemies in their mind to Him, and show it by their wicked works; but this is spoken particularly of the Gentiles. The word which we render to alienate, "to give to another, to estrange," expresses the state of the Gentiles. While the Jews were, at least by profession, dedicated to God, the Gentiles were alienated, that is, "given up to others"; they worshipped not the true God, but had gods many and lords many, to whom they dedicated themselves, their religious service, and their property. Enemies in your mind. They had the carnal mind, which is enmity against God; and this was expressed in their outward conduct by wicked works. The mind is taken here for all the soul, heart, affections, passions.

22. In the body of his flesh. By Christ's assumption of a human body, and dying for man, He has made an atonement for sin, through which men become reconciled to God and to each other. To present you holy. Having saved you from your sins. Unblameable. Having filled you with His Spirit, and written His law in your hearts, so that His love, shed abroad in your hearts, becomes the principle and motive to every action. And unreproveable. For, being filled with love, joy, peace, meekness, gentleness, and goodness, against these there is no law. In his sight. At the day of judgment. None can enjoy heaven who have not been reconciled to God here, and shown forth the fruits of that reconciliation in being made holy and unblameable, that, when they come to be judged, they may be found unreproveable.

23. If ye continue in the faith. This will be the case if you, who have already believed in Christ Jesus, continue in that faith, grounded in the knowledge and love of God, and settled, made firm and perseveringly steadfast, in that state of salvation. And be not moved away. Not permitting yourselves to be seduced by false teachers. The hope of the gospel. The resurrection of the body, and the glorification of it and the soul together, in the realms of blessedness. This is properly the gospel hope. To every creature which is under heaven. A Hebraism for the whole human race.

ALBERT BARNES:

23. "If ye continue in the faith." In the belief of the gospel and in holy living. If this were done, they would be presented unblamable before God; if not, they would not be. The meaning is that it will be impossible to be saved unless we continue to lead lives becoming the gospel. "Grounded." On a firm foundation (Eph. 3:17). "And settled." Firm—as a building that is founded on a rock (Matt. 7:25). "And be not moved away from the hope of the gospel." By the arts of philosophy and the allurements of sin.—Popular Commentary

MATTHEW HENRY

(3) What kind of preacher Paul was.

[1] He was a suffering preacher: Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, v. 24. He suffered for preaching the gospel to them. And, while he suffered in so good a cause, he could rejoice in his sufferings. And fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh. The suffering of Paul and other good ministers made them conformable to Christ. They are said to fill up what was behind of the sufferings of Christ, as the wax fills up the vacuities of the seal, when it receives the impression of it. Or it may be meant of his suffering for Christ. He filled that which was behind. He was still filling up more and more what was behind, or remained of them to his share.

(1) Whence Paul had his ministry: it was according to the dispensation of God which was given to him (v. 25). He received it from God as a gift, and took it as a favour.

(2) For whose sake he had his ministry: It is for you. We are Christ's ministers for the good of his people, to fulfil the word of God (that is, fully to preach it).

3. The gospel which was preached. Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, but is now made manifest to his saints, v. 26, 27. The mystery of the gospel was long hidden.

This mystery now is made manifest to the saints. And what is this mystery? It is the riches of God's glory among the Gentiles. This mystery, thus made known, is Christ in you, the hope of glory. Christ is the hope of glory. The ground of our hope is Christ in the world. The evidence of our hope is Christ in the heart.

[2] He was a close preacher. Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, v. 28. When we warn people of what they do amiss, we must teach them to do better: warning and teaching must go together. Men must be warned and taught in all wisdom. We must choose the fittest seasons, and accommodate ourselves to the different capacities of those we have to do with.

half," that ye may be confirmed in resting solely on Christ (to the exclusion of angel-worship) by the glorification of Christ in my sufferings (Eph. 3:1). fill up that which is behind—lit., "the deficiencies"—all that are lacking of the afflictions of Christ (cf. Note, II Cor. 1:5). Christ is "afflicted in all His people's afflictions" (Isa. 63:9). "The Church is His body in which He is, dwells, lives, and therefore also suffers" [VITRINGA]. Christ was destined to endure certain afflictions in this figurative body, as well as in His literal; these were "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," which Paul "filled up." His own meritorious sufferings in expiation for sin were once for all completely filled up on the Cross. But His Church (His second Self) has her whole measure of afflictions fixed. The more Paul, a member, endured, the less remain for the rest of the Church to endure; the communion of saints thus giving them an interest in his sufferings. It is in reference to the Church's afflictions, which are "Christ's afflictions, that Paul here saith, "I fill up the deficiencies," or "what remain behind of the afflictions of Christ." She is afflicted to promote her growth in holiness, and her completeness in Christ. Not one suffering is lost (Ps. 56:8). All her members have thus a mutual interest in one another's sufferings (I Cor. 12:26). But Rome's inference hence, is utterly false that the Church has a stock treasury of the merits and satisfactions of Christ and His apostles, out of which she may dispense indulgences; the context has no reference to sufferings in expiation of sin and productive of merit. Believers should regard their sufferings less in relation to themselves as individuals, and more as parts of a grand whole, carrying out God's perfect plan. 25. am—Greek, "I was made a minister": resuming vs. 23, "whereof I Paul was made a minister." dispensation—the stewardship committed to me to dispense in the house of God, the Church, to the whole family of believers, the goods of my Master (Luke 12:42; I Cor. 4:1, 2; 9:17; Eph. 3:2). which is given—Greek, "which was given." for you—with a view to you, Gentiles (vs. 27; Rom. 15:16). to fulfil—to bring it fully to all: the end of his stewardship: "fully preached" (Rom. 15:19). "The fulness of Christ (vs. 19), and of the times (Eph. 1:10) required him so to do" [BENGEL]. 26. the mystery—(Notes, Eph. 1:9, 10; 3:5-9). The mystery, once hidden, now revealed, is redemption for the whole Gentile world, as well as for the Jews, "Christ in you (Gentiles) the hope of glory" (vs. 27). from ages—"from," according to ALFORD, refers to time, not "hidden from": from the time of the ages; still what is meant is that the mystery was hidden from the beings living in those "ages." The "ages" are the vast successive periods marked by successive orders of beings and stages of creation. Greek, "Æons," a word used by the Gnostics for angelic beings emanating from God. The Spirit by Paul presciently, in opposition to Gnostic error already beginning (ch. 2:18), teaches, that the mystery of redemption was hidden in God's purposes in Christ, alike from the angelic beings (cf. Eph. 3:10) of the pre-Adamic "ages," and from the subsequent human "generations." Translate as Greek, "the ages . . . the generations." made manifest to his saints—to His apostles and prophets primarily (Eph. 3:5), and through them to all His saints. 27. would—rather as Greek, "willed," or "was pleased to make known." He resolves all into God's good pleasure and will, that man should not glory save in God's grace. what—How full and inexhaustible! the riches of the glory of this mystery—He accumulates phrase on phrase to enhance the greatness of the blessing in Christ bestowed by God on the Gentiles. Cf. ch. 2:3, "all the treasures" of wisdom; Ephesians 3:8, "the unsearchable riches of Christ"; Ephesians 1:7, "riches of His grace." "The glory of this mystery" must be the glory which this once hidden, and now revealed, truth makes you Gentiles partakers of, partly now, but mainly when Christ shall come (ch. 3:4; Rom. 5:2; 8:17, 18; Eph. 1:18). This sense is proved by the following: "Christ in you the hope of the (so Greek) glory." The lower was the degradation of you Gentiles, the higher is the richness of the glory to which the mystery revealed now raises you. You were "without Christ, and having no hope" (Eph. 2:12). Now you have "Christ in you the hope of the glory" just mentioned. 28. preach—rather as Greek, "announce" or "proclaim." warning . . . teaching—"Warning" is connected with repentance, refers to one's conduct, and is addressed primarily to the heart. "Teaching" is connected with faith, refers to doctrines, and is addressed primarily to the intellect. These are the two heads of evangelical teaching. every . . . every man—without distinc-

24. Rejoice in my sufferings for you. Paul always considers his persecutions, as far as the Jews were concerned in them, as arising from this simple circumstance—his asserting that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to enjoy the very same privileges with the Jews, and to constitute one Church with them. That which is behind of the afflictions of Christ. I have still some afflictions to pass through before my race of glory be finished, afflictions which fall on me on account of the gospel, such as Christ bore from the same persecuting people. It is worthy of remark that the apostle does not say the "passion" of Christ, but simply the "afflictions," such as are common to all good men who bear a testimony against the ways and fashions of a wicked world. In these the apostle had his share; in the passion of Christ he could have none. His body's sake. Believers, of both Jews and Gentiles, who form that one body, of which Christ is the Head.

25. Whereof I am made a minister. Having received especial commission from God to preach salvation to the Gentiles. According to the dispensation. According to the gospel "economy" of "institution," the scheme or plan of salvation by Christ crucified. To fulfil the word of God. The Greek may be translated, "fully to preach the doctrine of God."

26. The mystery which hath been hid. The mystery is this: that God had designed to grant the Gentiles the same privileges with the Jews, and make them His people who were not His people.

Made manifest to his saints. It is fully known to all who have embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified, to all Christians.

27. The riches of the glory. God manifests to these how abundantly glorious this gospel is among the Gentiles, and how effectual to the salvation of multitudes is this doctrine of Christ crucified.

MATTHEW HENRY

That which he aimed at was to present every men perfect in Christ Jesus. Ministers ought to aim at the improvement and salvation of every particular person who hears them.

He was a laborious preacher (v. 29): Whereunto I also labour, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily. As Paul laid out himself to do much good, so he had this favour, that the power of God wrought in him the more effectually.

The apostle had never been at Colosse, and yet he had as tender a care of it as if it had been the only people of his charge (v. 1): For I would that you knew what great conflict I have for you, and for those at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh. Paul's care of the church was such as amounted to a conflict. He was in a sort of agony. We may keep up a communion by faith, hope, and holy love, even with those of whom we have no personal knowledge. Those we never saw in the flesh we may hope to meet in heaven.

I. What was it that the apostle desired for them? That their hearts may be comforted, being knit together in love, &c., v. 2. It was their spiritual welfare about which he was solicitous, that their hearts may be comforted. The prosperity of the soul is the best prosperity. A description of soul-prosperity.

1. When our knowledge grows to an understanding of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ. To understand the mystery. Not barely to speak of it by rote, but to enter into the meaning and design of it.

2. When our faith grows to a full assurance and bold acknowledgment of this mystery. To a full assurance, or a well-settled judgment. To a free acknowledgment, and we not only believe with the heart, but are ready to make confession with our mouth. This is called the riches of the full assurance of understanding. Great knowledge and strong faith make a soul rich.

3. That their hearts might be comforted. The soul prospers when it is filled with joy and peace.

4. Being knit together in love. The stronger our faith is, and the warmer our love, the greater will our comfort be.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

tion of Jew or Gentile, great or small (Rom. 10:12, 13). in all wisdom—with all the wisdom in our method of teaching that we possess: so ALFORD. But vs. 9, and ch. 3:16, favor ESTIUS' view, which refers it to the wisdom communicated to those being taught: keeping back nothing, but instructing all in the perfect knowledge of the mysteries of faith which is the true wisdom (cf. I Cor. 2:6, 7; 12:8; Eph. 1:17). present—(Note, vs. 22)—at Christ's coming. every man—Paul is zealous lest the false teachers should seduce one single soul of Christ's people at Colosse. So each individual among them should be zealous for himself and his neighbor. Even one soul is of incalculable value. perfect in Christ—who is the element in living union with whom alone each believer can find perfection: perfectly instructed (Eph. 4:13) in doctrine, and full grown or matured in faith and practice. "Jesus" is omitted in all the oldest MSS. 29. Whereunto—viz., "to present every man perfect in Christ." I also labour—rather, "I labor also." I not only "proclaim" (English Version, "preach") Christ, but I labor also. striving—in "conflict" (ch. 2:1) of spirit (cf. Rom. 8:26). The same Greek word is used of Epaphras (ch. 4:12), "laboring fervently for you in prayers": lit., "agonizing," "striving as in the agony of a contest." So Jesus in Gethsemane when praying (Luke 22:44): so "strive" (the same Greek word, "agonize"), Luke 13:24. So Jacob "wrestled" in prayer (Gen. 32:24-29). Cf. "contention," Greek, "agony," or "striving earnestness," I Thessalonians 2:2. according to his working—Paul avows that he has power to "strive" in spirit for his converts, so far only as Christ works in him and by him (Eph. 3:20; Phil. 4:13). mightily—lit., "in power."

CHAPTER 2

Vss. 1-23. HIS STRIVINGS IN PRAYER FOR THEIR STEADFASTNESS IN CHRIST; FROM WHOM HE WARNS THEM NOT TO BE LED AWAY BY FALSE WISDOM. 1. For—He explains in what respect he "labored striving" (ch. 1:29). Translate as Greek, "I wish you to know how great a conflict (the same Greek word as in ch. 1:29, "agony of a conflict" of fervent, anxious prayer; not conflict with the false teachers, which would have been impossible for him now in prison) I have for you." them at Laodicea—exposed to the same danger from false teachers as the Colossians (cf. ch. 4:16). This danger was probably the cause of his writing to Laodicea, as well as to Colosse. not seen my face in the flesh—including those in Hierapolis (ch. 4:13). Paul considered himself a "debtor" to all the Gentiles (Rom. 1:14). "His face" and presence would have been a "comfort" (vs. 2; Acts 20:38). Cf. ch. 1:4, 7, 8, in proof that he had not seen, but only heard of the Colossians. Hence he strives by earnest conflict with God in anxious prayer for them, to make up for the loss of his bodily presence among them. Though "absent in the flesh, I am with you in the Spirit" (vs. 5). 2. Translate, "That their hearts may be comforted." Their hearts would be comforted by "knowing what conflict he had for" them, and how much he is interested for their welfare; and also by being released from doubts on learning from the apostle, that the doctrine which they had heard from Epaphras was true and certain. In writing to churches which he had instructed face to face, he enters into particular details concerning them, as a father directing his children. But to those among whom he had not been in person, he treats of the more general truths of salvation. being—Translate as Greek in oldest MSS., "They being knit together." in love—the bond and element of perfect knitting together; the antidote to the dividing schismatical effect of false doctrine. Love to God and to one another in Christ. unto—the object and end of their being "knit together." all riches—Greek, "all the riches of the full assurance (I Thess. 1:5; Heb. 6:11; 10:22) of the (Christian) understanding." The accumulation of phrases, not only "understanding," but "the full assurance of understanding"; not only this, but "the riches of . . ."; not only this, but "all the riches of . . ." implies how he desires to impress them with the momentous importance of the subject in hand. to—Translate "unto." acknowledgment—The Greek implies, "full and accurate knowledge." It is a distinct Greek word from "knowledge," vs. 3. ALFORD translates, "thorough . . . knowledge." Acknowledgment hardly is strong enough; they did in a measure acknowledge the truth; what they wanted was the full and accurate knowledge of it (cf. Notes, ch. 1:9, 10; Phil. 1:9). of God, and of the Father and of

ADAM CLARKE

29. Whereunto I also labour. In order to accomplish this end, I labor with the utmost zeal and earnestness, and with all that strength with which God has most powerfully furnished me. Whoever considers the original words will find that no verbal translation can convey their sense. God worked "energetically" in Paul, and he "wrought energetically" with God; and all this was in reference to the salvation of mankind.

CHAPTER 2

1. What great conflict. The word agon, which we here render conflict, is to be understood as implying earnest care and solicitude, accompanied, undoubtedly, with the most fervent application to the throne of grace in their behalf. The agonizomenos of the preceding verse gave the apostle occasion to use the word agon here. He "agonized" with God, and his "agony" was for them.

2. That their hearts might be comforted. That they might have continual happiness in God, having constant affiance in Him.

Being knit together in love. The word signifies being united, as the beams or the timbers of a building, by mortices and pins. The visible Church of Christ cannot be in union with God unless it have unity in itself, and without love this unity is impossible. Unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding. That is, that they might have the most indubitable certainty of the truth of Christianity, of their own salvation, and of the general design of God to admit the Gentiles into His Church. This is the grand mystery of God, which was now laid open by the preaching of the gospel.

MATTHEW HENRY

Having occasion to mention Christ (v. 2), he makes this remark to his honour (v. 3): In whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. The treasures of wisdom are hidden not from us, but for us, in Christ. We must spend upon the stock which is laid up for us in him, and draw from the treasures which are hidden in him.

Verses 4–12

The apostle cautions the Colossians against deceivers (v. 4): And this I say lest any man beguile you with enticing words; and v. 8, Lest any man spoil you. Satan spoils souls by beguiling them. He deceives them, and by this means slays them. He could not ruin us if he did not cheat us; and he could not cheat us but by our own folly. Satan's agents beguile them with enticing words. How many are ruined by the flattery of those who lie in wait to deceive! "That which they aim at is to spoil you."

His concern for them is repeated (v. 5): Though I am absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying, and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ. We may be present in spirit with those from whom we are absent in body. Though he had never seen them he tells them he could easily think himself among them, and look with pleasure upon their good behaviour. The more steadfast our faith in Christ is, the better order there will be in our whole conversation.

I. A sovereign antidote against seducers (v. 6, 7): As you have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk you in him, rooted and built up, &c. All Christians have, in profession at least, received Jesus Christ the Lord, consented to him, taken him for theirs in every relation and every capacity. The great concern of those who have received Christ is to walk in him. We must walk with him in our daily course and keep up our communion with him. The more closely we walk with Christ the more we are rooted and established in the faith. If we walk in him, we shall be rooted in him; and the more firmly we are rooted in him the more closely we shall walk in him: Rooted and built up.—As you have been taught. A good education has a good influence upon our establishment. We must be established in the faith, as we have been taught, abounding therein. And this with thanksgiving.

II. The fair warning given us of our danger: Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ, v. 8. There is a philosophy which is a noble exercise of our reasonable faculties. But there is a philosophy which is vain and deceitful.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Christ—The oldest MSS. omit "and of the Father, and of"; then translate, "Of God (viz.), Christ." Two very old MSS. and Vulgate read, "Of God the Father of Christ." 3. Translate in the Greek order, "In whom (not as ALFORD, 'in which' mystery; Christ is Himself the 'mystery' (vs. 2; I Tim. 3:16), and to Christ the relative refers) are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden." The "all" here, answers to "all" in vs. 2; as "treasures" answer to the "riches"; it is from the treasures that the riches (vs. 2) are derived. "Are" is the predicate of the sentence; all the treasures ARE in Him; hidden is predicated of the state or manner in which they are in Him. Like a mine of unknown and inexhaustible wealth, the treasures of wisdom are all in Him hidden, but not in order to remain so; they only need to be explored for you to attain "unto the riches" in them (vs. 2); but until you, Colossians, press after attaining the full knowledge (see Note, vs. 2) of them, they remain "hidden."

wisdom—general, and as to experimental and practical truth; whence comes "understanding" (vs. 2). knowledge—special and intellectual, in regard to doctrinal truth; whence comes "the full knowledge" (vs. 2). 4. And—"Now." Cf. with "lest any man . . ." vss. 8, 16, 18. He refers to the blending of Judaism with Oriental philosophy, and the combination of this mixture with Christianity. enticing words—plausible as wearing the guise of wisdom and humility (vss. 18, 23). 5. For—argument against their suffering themselves to be beguiled, drawn from a regard to his personal authority as though he were present. joying and beholding—beholding with joy. order—your good order; answering to "knit together" (vs. 2) as a well-organized body; the same Greek as that for "knit together," is used of the body" of the Church "compacted," in Ephesians 4:16. Cf. I Corinthians 14: 33, 40. steadfastness—Greek, "the firm (or solid) foundation." As "order" expresses the outward aspect of the Church; so "steadfastness" expresses the inner basis on which their Church rested. The Greek literally implies not an abstract quality, but the thing in the concrete; thus their "faith" here is the solid thing which constituted the basis of their Church. 6. "As therefore ye received (once for all; the aorist tense; from Epaphras) Jesus the Christ as your Lord (cf. I Cor. 12:3; II Cor. 4:5; Phil. 3:8), so walk in Him." He says not merely, "Ye received" the doctrine of Christ, but "Jesus" Himself; this is the essence of faith (John 14:21, 23; Gal. 1:16). Ye have received once for all the Spirit of life in Christ; carry into practice that life in your walk (Gal. 5:25). This is the main scope of the Epistle. 7. Rooted—(Eph. 3:17). built up—Greek, "being builded up." As "rooted" implies their vitality; so "builded up," massive solidity. As in the Song of Solomon, when one image is not sufficient to express the varied aspects of divine truth, another is employed to supply the idea required. Thus "walking," a third image (vs. 6), expresses the thought which "rooted" and "built," though each suggesting a thought peculiar to itself, could not express, viz., onward motion. "Rooted" is in the past tense, implying their first conversion and vital grafting "in Him." "Built up" is present (in the Greek), implying their progressive increase in religion by union with Him. Ephesians 2:20 refers to the Church; but the passage here to their individual progress in edification (Acts 20:32). stablished—confirmed. as—"even as." abounding therein with thanksgiving—advancing to fuller maturity (cf. vs. 2) in the faith, "with thanksgiving" to God as the gracious Author of this whole blessing. 8. Translate, "Beware (lit., 'Look' well) lest there shall be (as I fear there is: the Greek indicative expresses this) any man (pointing to some known emissary of evil, Gal. 1:7) leading you away as his spoil (not merely gaining spoil out of you, but making yourselves his spoil) through (by means of) his philosophy," etc. The apostle does not condemn all philosophy, but "the philosophy" (so Greek) of the Judæic-oriental heretics at Colosse, which afterwards was developed into Gnosticism. You, who may have "the riches of full assurance" and "the treasures of wisdom," should not suffer yourselves to be led away as a spoil by empty, deceitful philosophy: "riches" are contrasted with spoil; "full" with "vain," or empty (vss. 2, 3, 9). after—"according to." tradition of men—opposed to, "the fulness of the Godhead." Applied to Rabbinical traditions, Mark 7:8. When men could not make revelation even seem to tell about deep mysteries which they were curious to pry into, they brought in human philosophy and pretended traditions to help it, as if one should bring a lamp to the sundial to find the hour [Cautions for times, p. 85]. The false teachers boasted of a higher wisdom in theory, trans-

And of the Father, and of Christ. These words are variously written in different MSS., versions, and fathers. This great variety of versions leaves the strongest presumption that the words in question are glosses which have crept into the text and are of no authority.

3. In whom are hid. Or rather "in which," referring to the "mystery" mentioned above. In this glorious scheme of Christianity all the treasures—the abundance and excellency—of wisdom and knowledge are contained.

4. Lest any man should beguile you. The word means to deceive by sophistry or subtle reasoning, in which all the conclusions appear to be fairly drawn from the premises, but the premises are either assumed without evidence or false in themselves; but this not being easily discovered, the unthinking or unwary are carried away by the conclusions which are drawn from these premises. And this result is clearly intimated by the term enticing words, "plausible conclusions or deductions" from this mode of reasoning. The apostle seems to allude to the Gentile philosophers, who were notorious for this kind of argumentation.

6. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus. Many persons lay a certain stress on the words as and so, and make various fine heads of discourses from them; viz., As you received Christ in a spirit of humility, so walk in Him. This may be all proper in itself, but nothing of the kind was intended by the apostle. His meaning is simply this: Seeing you have embraced the doctrine of Christ, continue to hold it fast, and not permit yourselves to be turned aside by sophistical or Judaizing teachers.

7. Rooted and built up in him. It is not usual with the apostle to employ this double metaphor, taken partly from the growth of a tree and the increase of a building. They are to be rooted; as the good seed had been already sown, it is to take root, and the roots are to spread far, wide, and deep. They are to be "grounded"; as the foundation has already been laid, they are to build thereon. In the one case, they are to bear much fruit; in the other, they are to grow up to be "an habitation of God through the Spirit." See the notes on Eph. ii. 21-22 and iii. 17. Abounding therein with thanksgiving. No limitation is ever set to the operations of God on the soul or to the growth of the soul in the knowledge, love, and image of God. Those who are brought into such a state of salvation should abound in gratitude and loving obedience as they grow in grace.

8. Beware lest any man spoil you. The word signifies to "rob," or "spoil" of their goods, as if by violence or rapine. Their goods were the salvation they had received from Christ; and both the Gentile and Jewish teachers endeavored to deprive them of these, by perverting their minds and leading them off from the truths of Christianity. Philosophy and vain deceit. Or "the vain or empty deceit of philosophy"; such philosophizing as the Jewish and Gentile teachers used. As the term philosophy stood in high repute among the Gentiles, the Jews of this time affected it; and both Philo and Josephus use the word to express the whole of the Mosaic institutions.

MATTHEW HENRY

After the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world. The Jews governed themselves by the traditions of their elders. The Gentiles mixed their maxims of philosophy with their Christian principles; and both alienated their minds from Christ. Those who pin their faith on other men's sleeves have turned away from following after Christ.

1. We have in Christ the substance of all the shadows of the ceremonial law. Had they then the Shechinah, or special presence of God? So have we now in Jesus Christ (v. 9): For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. It dwells in him bodily; not as the body is opposed to the spirit, but as the body is opposed to the shadow. The fulness of the Godhead dwells in Christ really, and not figuratively.

Again, The Jews thought themselves complete in the ceremonial law; but we are complete in Christ, v. 10. That was imperfect and defective. But all the defects of it are made up in the gospel of Christ. Which is the head of all principality and power. As the Old Testament priesthood had its perfection in Christ, so likewise had the kingdom of David. He is the Lord and head of all the powers in heaven and earth. Had they circumcision, which was the seal of the covenant? In Christ we are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands (v. 11). It is made without hands; not by the power of any creature, but by the power of the blessed Spirit of God.

2. We have communion with Christ in his whole undertaking (v. 12): Buried with him in baptism, wherein also you have risen with him. We are both buried and rise with him, and both are signified by our baptism.

mitted by tradition among the initiated; in practice they enjoined asceticism, as though matter and the body were the sources of evil. Phrygia (in which was Colosse) had a propensity for the mystical and magical, which appeared in their worship of Cybele and subsequent Montanism [NEANDER]. rudiments of the world—(Note, Gal. 4:3). "The rudiments" or elementary lessons "of the (outward) world," such as legal ordinances; our Judaic childhood's lessons (vss. 11, 16, 20; Gal. 4:1-3). But NEANDER, "the elements of the world," in the sense, what is earthly, carnal and outward, not "the rudiments of religion," in Judaism and heathenism. not after Christ—Their boasted higher "philosophy" is but human tradition, and a cleaving to the carnal and worldly, and not to Christ. Though acknowledging Christ nominally, in spirit they by their doctrine deny Him. 9. For—"Because." Their philosophy" (vs. 8) is not "after Christ," as all true philosophy is, everything which comes not from, and tends not to, Him, being a delusion; "For in Him (alone) dwelleth" as in a temple.... the fulness—(ch. 1:19; John 14:10). of the Godhead—The Greek (theotes) means the ESSENCE and NATURE of the Godhead, not merely the divine perfections and attributes of Divinity (Greek, "theiotes"). He, as man, was not merely God-like, but in the fullest sense, GOD. bodily—not merely as before His incarnation, but now "bodily in Him" as the incarnate word (John 1:14, 18). Believers, by union with Him, partake of His fulness of the divine nature (John 1: 16; Note, Eph. 3:19; II Pet. 1:4). 10. And—And therefore; and so. Translate in the Greek order, "Ye are in Him (by virtue of union with Him) filled full" of all that you need (John 1:16). Believers receive of the divine unction which flows down from their Divine Head and High Priest (Ps. 133: 2). He is full of the "fulness" itself; we, filled from Him. Paul implies, Therefore ye Colossians need no supplementary sources of grace, such as the false teachers dream of. Christ is "the Head of all rule and authority" (so the Greek), Ephesians 1:10; He, therefore, alone, not these subject "authorities" also, is to be adored (vs. 18). 11. Implying that they did not need, as the Judaizers taught, the outward rite of circumcision, since they had already the inward spiritual reality of it. are—rather, as the Greek, "Ye were (once for all) circumcised (spiritually, at your conversion and baptism, Rom. 2:28, 29; Phil. 3:3) with a (so the Greek) circumcision made without hands"; opposed to "the circumcision in the flesh made by hands" (Eph. 2:11). Christ's own body, by which the believer is sanctified, is said to be "not made with hands" (Mark 14:58; Heb. 9:11; cf. Dan. 2:45). in putting off—rather as Greek, "in your putting off"; as an old garment (Eph. 4:22); alluding to the putting off the foreskin in circumcision. the body of the sins of the flesh—The oldest MSS. read, "the body of the flesh," omitting "of the sins," i.e., "the body," of which the prominent feature is fleshiness (cf. Rom. 8:13, where "flesh" and "the body" mutually correspond). This fleshly body, in its sinful aspect, is put off in baptism (where baptism answers its ideal) as the seal of regeneration where received in repentance and faith. In circumcision the foreskin only was put off; in Christian regeneration "the body of the flesh" is spiritually put off, at least it is so in its ideal conception, however imperfectly believers realize that ideal. by—Greek, "in." This spiritual circumcision is realized in, or by, union with Christ, whose "circumcision," whereby He became responsible for us to keep the whole law, is imputed to believers for justification; and union with whom, in all His vicarious obedience, including HIS CIRCUMCISION, is the source of our sanctification. ALFORD makes it explanatory of the previous, "a circumcision made without hands," viz., "the circumcision brought about by your union with Christ." The former view seems to me better to accord with 12; ch. 3:1, 3, 4, which similarly makes the believer, by spiritual union with Christ, to have personal fellowship in the several states of Christ, viz., His death, resurrection, and appearing in glory.

12. Translate, "Having been buried with Him in your baptism." The past participle is here coincident in time with the preceding verb, "ye were (Greek) circumcised." Baptism is regarded as the burial of the old carnal life, to which the act of immersion symbolically corresponds; and in warm climates where immersion is safe, it is the mode most accordant with the significance of the ordinance; but the spirit of the ordinance is kept by affusion, where immersion would be inconvenient or dangerous; to insist on literal immersion in all cases would be mere legal ceremonialism (Rom. 6:3, 4). are risen—rather as Greek,

ADAM CLARKE

After the rudiments of the world. According to the doctrine of the Jewish teachers; or according to the Mosaic institutions, as explained and glossed by the scribes, Pharisees, and rabbins in general. Not after Christ. Not according to the simple doctrine of Christ, viz., He died for our offenses; believe on the Lord Jesus, and you shall be saved.

9. For in him dwelleth all the fulness. This is opposed to the vain or "empty" doctrine of the Gentile and Jewish philosophers: there is a fulness in Christ suited to the empty, destitute state of the human soul; but in the philosophy of the Jews and Gentiles nothing like this was found, nor indeed in the more refined and correct philosophy of the present day. No substitute has ever been found for the grace of the Lord Jesus. By the Godhead or "Deity" we are to understand the "state or being of the divine nature"; and by the fulness of that Deity, the infinite attributes essential to such a nature. Bodily. Signifies "truly, really"; in opposition to "typically, figuratively." There was a symbol of the Divine Presence in the Hebrew Tabernacle, and in the Jewish Temple. But in the body of Christ, the Deity, with all its plenitude of attributes, dwelt "really" and "substantially"; for so the word means.

10. And ye are complete in him. "And you are filled with Him." Our word complete quite destroys the connection subsisting in the apostle's ideas. The philosophy of the world was "empty," but there was a "fulness" in Christ. The Colossians were empty, spoiled and deprived of every good, while following the empty philosophy and groundless traditions of Jewish and Gentile teachers; but since they had received Christ Jesus they were "filled" with Him. This is the true meaning of the word, and by this the connection and assemblage of ideas in the apostle's mind are preserved. No fanciful "completeness in Christ" of a believer, while incomplete in himself, is either expressed or intended by Paul. It is too bad a doctrine to exist in the oracles of God.

11. In whom also ye are circumcised. All that was designed by circumcision, literally performed, is accomplished in them that believe through the Spirit and power of Christ. It is not a cutting off of a part of the flesh, but a putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, through the circumcision of Christ, He having undergone and performed this and all other rites necessary to qualify Him to be a Mediator between God and man. But by the circumcision of Christ, the operation of His grace and Spirit may be intended. The law required the circumcision of the flesh; the gospel of Christ required the circumcision of the heart. The words of the sins are omitted by several MSS.

12. Buried with him in baptism. Alluding to the immersions practiced in the case of adults, wherein the person appeared to be buried under the water, as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth. His rising again the third day, and their emerging from the water, was an emblem of the resurrection of the body; and, in them, of a total change of life.

MATTHEW HENRY

He is speaking of the circumcision made without hands; and says it is through the faith of the operation of God. God in baptism engages to be to us a God, and we become engaged to be his people, and by his grace to die to sin and to live to righteousness.

Verses 13–15

The privileges we Christians have above the Jews.

I. Christ's death is our life: And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, v. 13. A state of sin is a state of spiritual death. Those who are in sin are dead in sin. As the death of the body is the corruption of it, so sin is the corruption of the soul. As a man who is dead is unable to help himself by any power of his own, so an habitual sinner is morally impotent. This is our state. Now through Christ we, who were dead in sins, are quickened. Quickened together with him. Christ's death was the death of our sins; Christ's resurrection is the quickening of our souls.

II. Through him we have the remission of sin: Having forgiven you all trespasses. The pardon of the crime is the life of the criminal.

III. Whatever was in force against us is taken out of the way. He has obtained for us a legal discharge from the hand-writing of ordinances, which was against us (v. 14). Cursed is everyone who continues not in everything. This was a hand-writing which was against us, and contrary to us.

When he was nailed to the cross, the curse was as it were nailed to the cross. It must be understood of the ceremonial law, the hand-writing of ordinances. The Lord Jesus took it out of the way, nailed it to his cross; disannulled the obligation of it. When the substance came, the shadows fled away.

IV. He has obtained a glorious victory for us over the powers of darkness: And, having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it, v. 15. As the curse of the law was against us, so the power of Satan was against us. Out of the hands of Satan the executioner he redeemed us by power and with a high hand. The devil and all the powers of hell were conquered and disarmed by the dying Redeemer. The Redeemer conquered by dying. See his crown of thorns turned into a crown of laurels.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

were raised with Him." through the faith of . . .—by means of your faith in the operation of God; so "faith of," for "faith in" (Eph. 3:12; Phil. 3:9). Faith in God's mighty operation in raising again Jesus, is saving faith (Rom. 4:24; 10:9); and it is wrought in the soul by His same "mighty working" whereby He "raised Jesus from the dead" (Eph. 1:19, 20). 13. you, being dead—formerly (Eph. 2:1, 2); even as Christ was among the dead, before that God raised Him "from the dead" (vs. 12). sins—rather as Greek is translated at end of this verse, "trespasses," lit., "fallings aside" from God's ways; actual transgressions, as that of Adam. uncircumcision of your flesh—your not having put off the old fleshly nature, the carnal foreskin, or original sin, which now by spiritual circumcision, i.e., conversion and baptism, you have put off. he quickened—GOD "quickened together with Him" (CHRIST). Just as Christ's resurrection proved that He was delivered from the sin laid on Him, so our spiritual quickening proves that we have been forgiven our sins (I Pet. 3:22; 4:1, 2). forgiven you—So Vulgate and HILARY. But the oldest MSS. read, "us," passing from the particular persons, the Colossians, to the general Church (ch. 1:14; Eph. 1:7). all trespasses—Greek, "all our trespasses." 14. Blotting out—Greek, "Having wiped out"; coincident in time with "having forgiven you" (vs. 13); hereby having cancelled the law's indictment against you. The law (including especially the moral law, wherein lay the chief difficulty in obeying) is abrogated to the believer, as far as it was a compulsory, accusing code, and as far as "righteousness" (justification) and "life" were sought for by it. It can only produce outward works, not inward obedience of the will, which in the believer flows from the Holy Spirit in Him (Rom. 3:21; 7:2, 4; Gal. 2:19). the handwriting of ordinances—rather, "IN ordinances" (Note, Eph. 2:15); "the law of commandments contained in ordinances." "The handwriting" (alluding to the Decalogue, the representative of the law, written by the hand of God) is the whole law, the obligatory bond, under which all lay; the Jews primarily were under the bond, but they in this respect were the representative people of the world (Rom. 3:19); and in their inability to keep the law was involved the inability of the Gentiles also, in whose hearts "the work of the law was written" (Rom. 2:15); and as they did not keep this, they were condemned by it. that was against us . . . contrary to us—Greek "adversary to us"; so it is translated, Hebrews 10:27. "Not only was the law against us by its demands, but also an adversary to us by its accusations" [BENGEL]. TITTMANN explains the Greek, "having a latent contrariety to us"; not open designed hostility, but virtual unintentional opposition through our frailty; not through any opposition in the law itself to our good (Rom. 7:7-12, 14; I Cor. 15:56, Gal. 3:21; Heb. 10:3). The "WRITING" is part of "that which was contrary to us"; for "the letter killeth" (Note, II Cor. 3:6). and took it—Greek, and hath taken it out of the way" (so as to be no longer a hindrance to us), by "nailing it to the cross." Christ, by bearing the curse of the broken law, has redeemed us from its curse (Gal. 3:13). In His person nailed to the cross, the law itself was nailed to it. One ancient mode of cancelling bonds was by striking a nail through the writing: this seems at that time to have existed in Asia [GROTIUS]. The bond cancelled in the present case was the obligation lying against the Jews as representatives of the world, and attested by their amen, to keep the whole law under penalty of the curse (Deut. 27:26; Neh. 10:29). 15. ALFORD, ELLICOTT, and others translate the Greek to accord with the translation of the same Greek, ch. 3:9, "Stripping off from Himself the principalities and the powers:" GOD put off from Himself the angels, i.e., their ministry, not employing them to be promulgators of the Gospel in the way that He had given the law by their "disposition" or ministry (Acts 7:53; Gal. 3:19; Heb. 2:2, 5): God manifested Himself without a veil in Jesus. "THE principalities and THE powers" refers back to vs. 10, Jesus, "the Head of all principality and power," and ch. 1:16. In the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross, God subjected all the principalities, etc., to Jesus, declaring them to be powerless as to His work and His people (Eph. 1:21). Thus Paul's argument against those grafting on Christianity Jewish observances, along with angel worship, is, whatever part angels may be supposed to have had under the law, now at an end, God having put the legal dispensation itself away. But the objection is, that the context seems to refer to a triumph over bad angels: in II Corinthians 2:14, however, Christ's triumph over those subjected to Him, is not a triumph for destruction, but for

ADAM CLARKE

The faith of the operation of God. They were quickened, changed, and saved by means of faith in Christ Jesus, which faith was produced by the operation or energy of God. Believing is the act of the soul; but the grace or power to believe comes from God himself.

14. Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances. By the handwriting of ordinances the apostle most evidently means the ceremonial law.

Blotting out the handwriting is probably an allusion to Num. v. 23, where the curses written in the book, in the case of the woman suspected of adultery, are directed to be blotted out with the bitter waters.

This was against them, for they were bound to fulfil it; and it was contrary to them, as condemning them for their neglect and transgression of it.

Nailing it to his cross. When Christ was nailed to the Cross, our obligation to fulfill these ordinances was done away.

15. And having spoiled principalities and powers. Here is an allusion to the treatment of enemies when conquered. They are "spoiled of their armor"; and they are "exhibited" with contumely and reproach to the populace, especially when the victor has the honor of a "triumph"; to the former of which there is an allusion in the words "making a public exhibition of them"; and to the latter in the words triumphing over them. And the principalities and powers refer to the emperors, kings, and generals taken in battle, and reserved to grace the victor's triumph. It is very likely that by the principalities and powers over whom Christ triumphed the apostle means the nesioth and roshoth, who were the rulers and chiefs in the Sanhedrin and synagogues, and who had great authority among the people, both in making constitutions and in explaining traditions. The propagation of Christianity in Judea quite destroyed their spiritual power and domination.

MATTHEW HENRY

He spoiled them and made a show of them openly. Never had the devil's kingdom such a mortal blow given to it as was given by the Lord Jesus. Triumphing over them in it; in His Cross and by His death.

Verses 16–23

I. A caution to take heed of judaizing teachers. Let no man therefore judge you in meat nor in drink, &c., v. 16. "Let no man impose those things upon you, for God has not imposed them."

These things were shadows of things to come (v. 17): they are now done away. But the body is of Christ: the body, of which they were shadows, has come. They had the shadows, we have the substance.

II. He cautions them to take heed of those who would introduce the worship of angels as the Gentile philosophers did: Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels, v. 18.

Though it has a show of humility, it is a voluntary, not a commanded humility; and therefore it is not acceptable, yea, it is not warrantable.

Besides, the notions upon which this practice was grounded were merely the inventions of men—the proud conceits of human reason: Intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind. Though there was a show of humility in the practice, there was a real pride in the principle. Pride is at the bottom of a great many errors and corruptions, and even of many evil practices, which have a great show and appearance of humility.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

their salvation, so that good angels may be referred to (ch. 1:20). But the Greek middle is susceptible of English Version, "having spoiled," or, lit. [TITTMANN], "having completely stripped," or "despoiled" for Himself (cf. Rom. 8:38; I Cor. 15:24; Eph. 6:2). English Version accords with Matt. 12:29; Luke 11: 22; Hebrews 2:14. Translate as the Greek, "The rules and authorities." made a show of them openly—at His ascension (Notes, Eph. 4:8; confirming English Version of this verse). openly—John 7:4; 11: 54, support English Version against ALFORD's translation, "in openness of speech." in it—viz., His cross, or crucifixion: so the Greek fathers translate. Many of the Latins, "In Himself," or "in Him." Ephesians 2:16 favors English Version, "reconcile . . . by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby." If "in Him," i.e., Christ, be read, still the Cross will be the place and means of God's triumph in Christ over the principalities (Eph. 1:20; 2:5). 16. therefore—because ye are complete in Christ, and God in Him has dispensed with all subordinate means as essential to acceptance with Him. meat . . . drink—Greek, "eating . . . .drinking" (Rom. 14:1-17). Pay no regard to any one who sits in judgment on you as to legal observances in respect to foods. holyday—a feast yearly. Cf. the three, I Chronicles 23:31. new moon—monthly. the sabbath—Omit "THE," which is not in the Greek (cf. Note, Gal. 4:10). "SABBATHS" (not "the sabbaths") of the day of atonement and feast of tabernacles have come to an end with the Jewish services to which they belonged (Lev. 23:32, 37-39). The weekly sabbath rests on a more permanent foundation, having been instituted in Paradise to commemorate the completion of creation in six days. Leviticus 23:38 expressly distinguished "the sabbath of the Lord" from the other sabbaths. 17. things to come—the blessings of the Christian covenant, the substance of which Jewish ordinances were but the type. Cf. "ages to come," i.e., the Gospel dispensation (Eph. 2:7). Hebrews 2:5, "the world to come." the body is of Christ—The real substance (of the blessings typified by the law) belongs to Christ (Heb. 8:5; 10:1). 18. beguile—Translate, "Defraud you of your prize," lit., "to adjudge a prize out of hostility away from him who deserves it" [TRENCH]. "To be umpire in a contest to the detriment of one." This defrauding of their prize the Colossians would suffer, by letting any self-constituted arbitrator or judge (i.e., false teacher) draw them away from Christ," the righteous Judge" and Awarder of the prize (II Tim. 4:8; Jas. 1:12; I Pet. 5:4), to angel-worship. in a voluntary humility—So "will worship" (vs. 23). Lit., "Delighting [WAHL] in humility"; loving (so the Greek is translated, Mark 12: 38, "love to go in long clothing") to indulge himself in a humility of his own imposing: a volunteer in humility [DALLÆUS]. Not as ALFORD, "Let no one of purpose defraud you. . . ." Not as GROTIUS, "If he ever so much wish" (to defraud you). For the participle "wishing" or "delighting," is one of the series, and stands in the same category as "intruding," "puffed up," "not holding"; and the self-pleasing implied in it stands in happy contrast to the (mock) humility with which it seems to me, therefore, to be connected. His "humility," so called, is a pleasing of self: thus it stands in parallelism to "his fleshly mind" (its real name, though he styles it "humility"), as "wishing" or "delighting" does to "puffed up." The Greek for "humility" is lit., "lowliness of mind," which forms a clearer parallel to "puffed up by his fleshly mind." Under pretext of humility, as if they durst not come directly to God and Christ (like the modern Church of Rome), they invoked angels: as Judaizers, they justified this on the ground that the law was given by angels. This error continued long in Phrygia (where Colosse and Laodicea were), so that the Council of Laodicea (A.D. 360) expressly framed its 35th canon against the "Angelici" (as AUGUSTINE, Hæreses, 39, calls them) or "invokers of angels."

intruding into . . .things which he hath not seen—So very old MSS. and Vulgate and ORIGEN read. But the oldest MSS. and LUCIFER omit "not"; then translate, "haughtily treading on ('standing on' [ALFORD]) the things which he hath seen." TREGELLES refers this to fancied visions of angels. But if Paul had meant a fancied seeing, he would have used some qualifying word, as, "which he seemed to see," not "which he hath seen." Plainly the things were actually seen by him, whether of demoniacal origination (I Sam. 28: 11-20), or phenomena resulting from natural causation, mistaken by him as if supernatural. Paul, not stopping to discuss the nature of the things so seen, fixes on the radical error, the tendency of such a

In it. The words refer rather to Christ than to the Cross, if indeed they be genuine; of which there is much reason to doubt, as the versions and fathers differ so greatly in quoting them.

16. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink. The apostle speaks here in reference to some particulars of the "handwriting of ordinances," which had been taken away, viz., the distinction of meats and drinks, what was clean and what unclean, according to the law; and the necessity of observing certain holy days or festivals, such as the new moons and particular sabbaths, or those which should be observed with more than ordinary solemnity. All these had been taken out of the way and nailed to the Cross, and were no longer of moral obligation.

17. Which are a shadow. All these things were types, and must continue in force till the Christ, whom they represented, came; the apostle therefore says that the body—the substance or design of them, was of Christ—pointed Him out, and the excellent blessings which He has procured. The word shadow is often used to express anything "imperfect" or "unsubstantial"; while the term body was used in the opposite sense, and expressed anything "substantial, solid, and firm." The law was but the shadow or representation of good things to come; none should rest in it. All that it pointed out is to be sought and obtained in Christ.

18. Let no man beguile you. Let no man take the "prize" from you which the brabeus, or judge in the contests, has assigned you in consequence of your having obtained the victory. In a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels. The whole passage has been paraphrased thus: "Let no man spoil you of the prize adjudged to you, who delights in mortifying his body, and walking with the apparent modesty of an angel, affecting superior sanctity in order to gain disciples; intruding into things which he has not seen; and, notwithstanding his apparent humility, his mind is carnal, and he is puffed up with a sense of his superior knowledge and piety."

MATTHEW HENRY

These who do so do not hold the head, v. 19. When men let go their hold of Christ, they catch at that which is next them and will stand them in no stead.—From which all the body, by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God. Jesus Christ is not only a head of government over the church, but a head of vital influence to it. The body of Christ is a growing body: it increaseth with the increase of God, with a large and abundant increase.

III. He takes occasion hence to warn them against "Wherefore, if you be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are you subject to ordinances? (v. 20). Such observances as, Touch not, taste not, handle not" v. 21, 22, which all are to perish with the using, having no other authority than the traditions and injunctions of men.

Which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will-worship and humility. They thought themselves wiser than their neighbours. There is nothing of true devotion in these things, for the gospel teaches us to worship God in spirit and truth and not by ritual observances, and through the mediation of Christ alone and not of any angels. Such things have only a show of wisdom, but are really folly. It is true wisdom to keep close to the appointments of the gospel, and an entire subjection to Christ, the only head of the church.

one in all this to walk by SENSE (viz., what he haughtily prides himself on having SEEN), rather than by FAITH in the UNSEEN "Head" (vs. 19; cf. John 20: 29; II Cor. 5:7; Heb. 11:1).

puffed up—implying that the previous so called "humility" (Greek, "lowliness of mind") was really a "puffing up." fleshly mind—Greek, "By the mind of his own flesh." The flesh, or sensuous principle, is the fountain head whence his mind draws its craving after religious objects of sight, instead of, in true humility as a member, "holding fast the (unseen) Head." 19. Translate, "Not holding fast the Head." He who does not hold Christ solely and supremely above all others, does not hold Him at all [BENGEL]. The want of firm holding of Christ has set him loose to [pry into, and so] "tread haughtily on (pride himself on) things which he hath seen." Each must hold fast the Head for himself, not merely be attached to the other members, however high in the body [ALFORD]. from which—rather, "from whom." the body—i.e., all the members of the body (Eph. 4:16). joints—the points of union where the supply of nourishment passes to the different members, furnishing the body with the materials of growth. bands—the sinews and nerves which bind together limb and limb. Faith, love, and peace, are the spiritual bands. Cf. "knit together in love" (vs. 2; ch. 3:14; Eph. 4:3). having nourishment ministered—i.e., supplied to it continually. "Receiving ministration." knit together—The Greek is translated, "compacted," Ephesians 4:16: implying firm consolidation. with the increase of God—(Eph. 4: 16)—i.e., wrought by God, the Author and Sustainer of the believer's spiritual life, in union with Christ, the Head (I Cor. 3:6); and tending to the honor of God, being worthy of Him, its Author. 20. Wherefore—The oldest MSS. omit "Wherefore." if ye be dead—Greek, "if ye died (so as to be freed) from..." (cf. Rom. 6:2; 7:2, 3; Gal. 2:19). rudiments of the world—(vs. 8). Carnal, outward, worldly, legal ordinances. as though living—as though you were not dead to the world like your crucified Lord, into whose death ye were buried (Gal. 6:14; I Pet. 4:1, 2). are ye subject to ordinances—Why do ye submit to be made subject to ordinances? Referring to vs. 14: you are again being made subject to "ordinances," the "handwriting" of which had been "blotted out" (vs. 14). 21. Cf. vs. 16, "meat... drink." He gives instances of the "ordinances" (vs. 20) in the words of their imposers. There is an ascending climax of superstitious prohibitions. The first Greek word (hapse) is distinguished from the third (thiges), in that the former means close contact and retention; the latter, momentary contact (cf. I Cor. 7:1; John 20:17, Greek, "Hold me not"; cling not to me"). Translate, "Handle not, neither taste, nor even touch." The three refer to meats. "Handle not" (a stronger term than "nor even touch"), "nor taste" with the tongue, "nor even touch," however slight the contact. 22. Which—things, viz., the three things handled, touched, and tasted. are to perish—lit., "are constituted by their very nature) for perishing (or destruction by corruption) in (or with) their using up" (consumption). Therefore they cannot really and lastingly defile a man (Matt. 15:17; I Cor. 6:13). after—according to. Referring to vss. 20, 21. All these "ordinances" are according to human, not divine, injunction. doctrines—Greek, teachings." ALFORD translates, (doctrinal) "systems." 23. have—Greek, "are having"; implying the permanent characteristic which these ordinances are supposed to have. show of wisdom—rather, "a reputation of wisdom" [ALFORD]. will worship—arbitrarily invented worship: would-be worship, devised by man's own will, not God's. So jealous is God of human will worship, that He struck Nadab and Abihu dead for burning strange incense (Lev. 10:1-3). So Uzziah was stricken with leprosy for usurping the office of priest (II Chron. 26:16-21). Cf. the will worship of Saul (I Sam. 13:8-14) for which he was doomed to lose his throne. neglecting of the body—Greek, "not sparing of the body." This asceticism seems to have rested on the Oriental theory that matter is the source of evil. This also looked plausible (cf. I Cor. 9:27). not in any honour—of the body. As "neglecting of the body" describes asceticism positively; so this clause, negatively. Not paying any of that "honor" which is due to the body as redeemed by such a price as the blood of Christ. We should not degrade, but have a just estimation of ourselves, not in ourselves, but in Christ (Acts 13:46; I Cor. 3:21; 6:15; 7:23; 12:23, 24; I Thess. 4:4). True self-denial regards the spirit, and not the forms of ascetical self-mortification in "meats which profit not those occupied therein" (Heb. 13:9), and is consistent with Christian self-respect, the "honor" which

It is very likely that the apostle here alludes to the Essenes, who were remarkably strict and devout, spent a principal part of their time in the contemplation of the Divine Being, abstained from all sensual gratifications, and affected to live the life of angels upon earth.

19. And not holding the Head. Not acknowledging Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of mankind, and the only Head or "chief" of the Christian Church, on whom every member of it depends, and from whom each derives both light and life. For a further explanation of these words see the notes on Eph. iv. 16, where the figures and phraseology are the same.

20. If ye be dead with Christ. See the notes on Rom. vi. 3, 5. From the rudiments of the world. You have renounced all hope of salvation from the observance of Jewish rites and ceremonies, which were only rudiments, "first elements" or the "alphabet," out of which the whole science of Christianity was composed. We have often seen that the world and "this world" signify the Jewish dispensation, or the rites, ceremonies, and services performed under it. Why, as though living in the world. Why, as if you were still under the same dispensation from which you have been already freed, are you subject to its ordinances, performing them as if expecting salvation from this performance?

21. Touch not; taste not; handle not. These are forms of expression very frequent among the Jews.

22. Which all are to perish with the using. These are not matters of eternal moment; the different kinds of meats were made for the body, and go with it into corruption. In like manner, all the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion now perish, having accomplished the end of their institution; namely, to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. After the commandments and doctrines of men. These words should follow the twentieth verse, of which they form a part; and it appears from them that the apostle is here speaking of the traditions of the elders, and the load of cumbrous ceremonies which they added to the significant rites prescribed by Moses.

23. Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom. All these prescriptions and rites have indeed the appearance of wisdom, and are recommended by plausible reasons; but they form a worship which God has not commanded, and enjoin macerations of the body, accompanied with a humiliation of spirit, that are neither profitable to the soul nor of any advantage to the body; so that the whole of their religion is worth nothing. What is here termed will worship signifies simply a mode of worship which a man chooses for himself, independently of the revelation which God has given.

CHAPTER 3

Though we are made free from the ceremonial law, it does not therefore follow that we may live as we list. We must walk the more closely with God. If you then have risen with Christ, seek those things which are above. We must mind the concerns of another world more than the concerns of this. Christ sits at the right hand of God. He who is our best friend has gone before to secure to us the heavenly happiness; and therefore we should seek what he has purchased at so vast an expense.

I. He explains this duty (v. 2): Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. Upon the wings of affection the heart soars upwards. Things on earth are here set in opposition to things above. Heaven and earth are contrary one to the other, and the prevalence of our affection to one will proportionably weaken our affection to the other.

II. He assigns three reasons for this, v. 3, 4.

1. We are dead to present things. And if we are dead to the earth, and have renounced it as our happiness, it is absurd for us to set our affections upon it, and seek it.

2. Our true life lies in the other world: You are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God, v. 3. The new man has its livelihood thence. It is hid with Christ: not hid from us only, in point of secrecy, but hid for us, denoting security. This is our comfort, that our life is hid with him, and laid up safely with him.

3. At the second coming of Christ we hope for the perfection of our happiness. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory, v. 4. Christ is a believer's life. He is the principle and end of the Christian's life. Christ will appear again. He is now hid, but he will appear in his own glory and his Father's glory. We shall then appear with him in glory. It will be his glory to have his redeemed with him, and it will be their glory to come with him. Do we look for such a happiness, and should we not set our affections upon that world, and live above this? Our head is there, our home is there, our treasure is there, and we hope to be there for ever.

Verses 5–7

It is our duty to mortify our members which are upon the earth, and which naturally incline us to the things of the world.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

belongs to the believer as dedicated to the Lord. Cf. "vainly," vs. 18. to the satisfying of the flesh—This expresses the real tendency of their human ordinances of bodily asceticism, voluntary humility, and will worship of angels. While seeming to deny self and the body, they really are pampering the flesh. Thus "satisfying of the flesh" answers to "puffed up by his fleshly mind" (vs. 18), so that "flesh" is used in its ethical sense, "the carnal nature" as opposed to the spiritual; not in the sense "body."

CHAPTER 3

Vss. 1-25. EXHORTATIONS TO HEAVENLY AIMS, AS OPPOSED TO EARTHLY, ON THE GROUND OF UNION TO THE RISEN SAVIOUR; TO MORTIFY AND PUT OFF THE OLD MAN, AND TO PUT ON THE NEW; IN CHARITY, HUMILITY, WORDS OF EDIFICATION, THANKFULNESS; RELATIVE DUTIES. 1. If . . . then—The connection with ch. 2:18, 23, is, he had condemned the "fleshly mind" and the "satiating to the full the flesh"; in contrast to this he now says, "If then ye have been once for all raised up (Greek, aorist) together with Christ" (viz., at your conversion and baptism, Rom. 6:4). seek those things . . . above—(Matt. 6:33; Phil. 3:20.) sitteth—rather, as Greek, "Where Christ is, sitting on the right of God" (Eph. 1:20). The Head being quickened, the members are also quickened with Him. Where the Head is, there the members must be. The contrast is between the believer's former state, alive to the world but dead to God, and his present state, dead to the world but alive to God; and between the earthly abode of the unbeliever and the heavenly abode of the believer (I Cor. 15:47, 48). We are already seated there in Him as our Head; and hereafter shall be seated by Him, as the Bestower of our bliss. 2. Translate, "Set your mind on the things above, not on the things . . ." (ch. 2:20). Contrast "who mind earthly things" (Phil. 3:19). Whatever we make an idol of, will either be a cross to us if we be believers, or a curse to us if unbelievers. 3. The Greek aorist implies, "For ye have died once for all" (ch. 2:12; Rom. 6:4-7). It is not said, Ye must die practically to the world in order to become dead with Christ; but the latter is assumed as once for all having taken place in the regeneration; what believers are told is, Develop this spiritual life in practice. "No one longs for eternal, incorruptible, and immortal life, unless he be wearied of this temporal, corruptible, and mortal life" [AUGUSTINE]. your life . . . hid—Psalm 83:3—like a seed buried in the earth; cf. "planted," Romans 6:5. Cf. Matthew 13:31 and 33, "like . . . leaven . . . hid." As the glory of Christ now is hid from the world, so also the glory of believers' inner life, proceeding from communion with Him, is still hidden with Christ in God; but (vs. 4) when Christ, the Source of this life, shall manifest Himself in glory, then shall their hidden glory be manifest, and correspond in appearance to its original [NEANDER]. The Christian's secret communion with God will now at times make itself seen without his intending it (Matt. 5:14, 16); but his full manifestation is at Christ's manifestation (Matt. 13:43; Rom. 8:19-23). "It doth not yet appear (Greek, 'is not yet manifested') what we shall be" (I John 3:2; I Pet. 1:7). As yet Christians do not always recognize the "life" of one another, so hidden is it, and even at times doubt as to their own life, so weak is it, and so harassed with temptations (Ps. 51; Rom. 7). in God—to whom Christ has ascended. Our "life" is "laid up for" us in God (ch. 1:5), and is secured by the decree of Him who is invisible to the world (II Tim. 4:8). 4. Translate, "When Christ shall be manifested who is our life (John 11:25; 14:6, 19), then shall ye also with Him be manifested in glory" (I Pet. 4:13). The spiritual life our souls have now in Him shall be extended to our bodies (Rom. 8:11). then—and not till then. Those err who think to find a perfect Church before then. The true Church is now militant. Rome errs in trying to set up a Church now regnant and triumphant. The true Church shall be visible as a perfect and reigning Church, when Christ shall be visibly manifested as her reigning Head. 5. Mortify—Greek, "make a corpse of"; "make dead"; "put to death." therefore—(Note, vs. 3). Follow out to its necessary consequence the fact of your having once for all died with Christ spiritually at your regeneration, by daily "deadening your members," of which united "the body of the sins of the flesh" consists (cf. 2:11). "The members" to be mortified are the fleshly instruments of lust, in so far as the members

1. If ye then. "Seeing then that you are risen with Christ"; this refers to what he had said, chap. ii. 12: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him." As therefore you have most cordially received the doctrine of Christ, and profess to be partakers of a spiritual religion that promises spiritual and eternal things, seek those things, and look to be prepared for the enjoyment of them.

2. Set your affection on things above. This is a very good general rule: "Be as much in earnest for heavenly and eternal things as you formerly were for those that are earthly and perishing."

CHARLES H. SPURGEON:

What are these "things above" which we should set our affection upon? I ask you now to lift your eyes above yon clouds, and this lower firmament is the residence of God. What see you there? First, there is God himself. Make Him the subject of your thoughts, your desires, your emotions, your love. "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he will give thee the desires of thine heart." "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from him." Call Him "God my exceeding joy." Let nothing come between you and your heavenly Father. What is all the world if you have not God, and when you once have God, what matters if all the world be gone? God is all things, and when you can say, "God is mine," you are richer than Croesus. Oh, to say, "Whom have I in heaven but thee." Oh, to love God with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our mind, and with all our strength: that is what the law required; it is what the gospel enables us to render.

What see I next? I see Jesus, who is God, but yet is truly man. Need I press upon you, to set your love upon the Well-beloved? Has He not won your heart, and does He not hold it now as under a mighty spell? I know you love Him. Fix your mind on Him then. Often meditate upon His divine person, His perfect work, His mediatorial glory, His second coming, His glorious reign, His love for you, your own security in Him, your union with Him. Oh, let these sweet thoughts possess your breasts, fill your mouths, and influence your lives. Let the morning break with thoughts of Christ, and let your last thought at night be sweetened with His presence. Set your affection upon Him who has set His affection upon you.

—The Treasury of the New Testament

5. Mortify therefore your members. "Put them to death." The verb is used metaphorically to signify "to deprive a thing of its power, to destroy its strength." Use no member of your body to sin against God; keep all under dominion, and never permit the beast to run away with the man.

MATTHEW HENRY

I. The lusts of the flesh: Fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence—which were so contrary to the Christian state and the heavenly hope.

II. The love of the world: And covetousness, which is idolatry; that is, an inordinate love of present good and outward enjoyments. Covetousness is spiritual idolatry: it is the giving of that love and regard to worldly wealth which are due to God only. Among all the instances of sin which good men are recorded in the scripture to have fallen into there is no instance of any good man charged with covetousness. How necessary it is to mortify sins, v. 6, 7. If we do not kill them, they will kill us: For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience, v. 6. See what we are all by nature more or less: we are children of disobedience. The wrath of God comes upon all the children of disobedience. Those who do not obey the precepts of the law incur the penalties of it. We should mortify these sins because they have lived in us: In which you also walked some time, when you lived in them, v. 7. The consideration that we have formerly lived in sin is a good argument why we should now forsake it. We have walked in by-paths, therefore let us walk in them no more. When you lived among those who did such things (so some understand it), then you walked in those evil practices. Let us keep out of the way of evil-doers.

Verses 8–11

We are to mortify inordinate passions (v. 8): But now you also put off all these, anger, wrath, malice. Anger and wrath are bad, but malice is worse; it is anger heightened and settled. So the product of them in the tongue; as blasphemy, which seems there to mean, not so much speaking ill of God as speaking ill of men,—filthy communication, all lewd and wanton discourse, which propagates the same defilements in the hearers. Lie not one to another (v. 9). Lying makes us like the devil (who is the father of lies). Seeing you have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, v. 10. Those who have put off the old man have put it off with its deeds; and those who have put on the new man must put on all its deeds, renewed in knowedge, because an ignorant soul cannot be a good soul. Light is the first thing in the new creation, as it was in the first: after the image of him who created him. It was the honour of man in innocence that he was made after the image of God.

In the privilege of sanctification there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, v. 11. It is as much the duty of the one as of the other to be holy, and as much the privilege of the one as of the other to receive from God the grace to be so.

Christ is all in all. Christ is a Christian's all, all his hope and happiness.

of the body are abused to such purposes. Habitually repress and do violence to corrupt desires of which the members are the instruments (cf. Rom. 6:19; 8:13; Gal. 5:24, 25). upon the earth–where they find their support [BENGEL] (cf. vs. 2, "things on earth"). See Ephesians 5:3, 4. inordinate affection–"lustful passion." evil concupiscence–more general than the last [ALFORD], the disorder of the external senses; "lustful passion," lust within [BENGEL]. covetousness–marked off by the Greek article as forming a whole genus by itself, distinct from the genus containing the various species just enumerated. It implies a self-idolizing, grasping spirit; far worse than another Greek term translated "the love of money" (I Tim. 6:10). which is–i.e., inasmuch as it is "idolatry." Cf. Note, Ephesians 4:19, on its connection with sins of impurity. Self and mammon are deified in the heart instead of God (Matt. 6:24; Note, Eph. 5:5). 6. (Note, Eph. 5:6.) 7. sometime–"once." walked . . . when ye lived in them–These sins were the very element in which ye "lived" (before ye became once for all dead with Christ to them); no wonder, then, that ye "walked" in them. Cf. on the opposite side, "living in the Spirit," having as its legitimate consequence, "walking in the Spirit" (Gal. 5:25). The living comes first in both cases, the walking follows. 8. But now–that ye are no longer living in them. ye also–like other believers; answering to "ye also" (vs. 7) like other unbelievers formerly. put off–"Do ye also put away all these," viz., those just enumerated, and those which follow [ALFORD]. anger, wrath–(Note, Eph. 4:31). blasphemy–rather, "reviling," "evil-speaking," as it is translated in Ephesians 4:31. filthy communication–The context favors the translation, "abusive language," rather than impure conversation. "Foul language" best retains the ambiguity of the original. 9. (Eph. 4: 22, 25.) put off–Greek, "wholly put off"; utterly renounced [TITTMANN]. the old man–the unregenerate nature which ye had before conversion. his deeds–habits of acting. 10. the new man–(Note, Eph. 4:23). Here (neon) the Greek, means "the recently-put-on nature"; that lately received at regeneration (see Note, Eph. 4:23, 24). which is renewed–Greek, "which is being renewed" (anakainoumenou); viz., its development into a perfectly renewed nature is continually progressing to completion. in knowledge–rather as the Greek, "unto perfect knowledge" (Notes, ch. 1:6, 9, 10). Perfect knowledge of God excludes all sin (John 17:3). after the image of him that created him–viz., of God that created the new man (Eph. 2:10; 4:24). The new creation is analogous to the first creation (II Cor. 4:6). As man was then made in the image of God naturally, so now spiritually. But the image of God formed in us by the Spirit of God, is as much more glorious than that borne by Adam, as the Second Man, the Lord from heaven, is more glorious than the first man. Genesis 1:26, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." The "image" is claimed for man, I Corinthians 11:7; the "likeness," James 3:9. 11. Where–Translate, "Wherein," viz., in the sphere of the renewed man. neither . . . nor . . . nor . . . nor–Translate as Greek, "There is no such thing as Greek and Jew (the difference of privilege between those born of the natural seed of Abraham and those not, is abolished), circumcision and uncircumcision (the difference of legal standing between the circumcised and uncircumcised is done away, Gal. 6:15)–bondman, freeman." The present Church is one called out of the flesh, and the present world-course (Eph. 2:2), wherein such distinctions exist, to life in the Spirit, and to the future first resurrection: and this because Satan has such power now over the flesh and the world. Scythian–heretofore regarded as more barbarian than the barbarians. Though the relation of bond and free actually existed, yet in relation to Christ, all alike were free in one aspect, and servants of Christ in another (I Cor. 7:22; Gal. 3:28). Christ is all–Christ absorbs in Himself all distinctions, being to all alike, everything that they need for justification, sanctification, and glorification (I Cor. 1:30; 3:21-23; Gal. 2:20). in all–who believe and are renewed, without distinction of person; the sole distinction now is, how much each draws from Christ. The unity of the divine life shared in by all believers, counterbalances all differences, even as great as that between the polished "Greek" and the rude "Scythian." Christianity imparts to the most uncivilized the only spring of sound, social and moral culture. 12. the elect of God–There is no "the" in the Greek, "God's elect" (cf. Rom. 8:3; I Thess. 1:4). The order of the words "elect, holy, beloved," answers to the order of the things. Election from eternity precedes sanc-

Inordinate affection. "Unnatural and degrading passion"; bestial lusts.

Covetousness, which is idolatry. For the covetous man makes his money his god.

7. In the which ye also walked sometime. When you were in your unconverted state, you served divers lusts and pleasures.

8. But now ye also put off all these. See on Eph. iv. 22. Being now converted, sin had no more dominion over them. Anger, wrath. They had not only lived in the evils mentioned in v. 5, but also in those enumerated here; and they had not only laid aside the former, but they had laid aside the latter also. Blasphemy. The word seems here to mean "injurious and calumnious speaking."

9. Lie not one to another. Do not deceive each other; speak the truth in all your dealings. Ye have put off the old man. See the notes on Rom. vi. 6, and particularly on Rom. xiii. 11-14. You have received a religion widely different from that you had before; act according to its principles.

10. And have put on the new man. See on Rom. xii. 1-2. Is renewed in knowledge. Ignorance was the grand characteristic of the heathen state; knowledge, of the Christian.

After the image of him that created him. The image in which man was made, and in which he must be "remade," "made anew," consists in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.

11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew. In which new creation no inquiry is made what nation the persons belonged to or from what ancestry they had sprung, whether in Judea or Greece. Circumcision nor uncircumcision. Nor is their peculiar form of religion of any consideration, whether circumcised like the Jews or uncircumcised like the heathens. Bond nor free. Nor does the particular state or circumstances in which a man may be found either help him to or exclude him from the benefit of this religion, the slave having as good a title to salvation by grace as the freeman.

But Christ is all, and in all. All mankind are His creatures, all conditions are disposed and regulated by His providence, and all human beings are equally purchased by His blood. He alone is the Source whence all have proceeded, and to Him alone all must return. He is the Maker, Preserver, Saviour, and Judge of all men.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 12–17

Put on therefore bowels of mercy, v. 12. We must not only put off anger and wrath (as v. 8), but we must put on compassion and kindness.

I. Put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved. Those who are the elect of God, are beloved, and ought to conduct themselves in everything as becomes them. What we must put on. 1. Compassion towards the miserable: Bowels of mercy. Those who owe so much to mercy ought to be merciful. 2. Kindness. The design of the gospel is not only to soften the minds of men, but to sweeten them, and to promote friendship among men as well as reconciliation with God. 3. Humbleness of mind. There must not only be a humble demeanour, but a humble mind. 4. Meekness. Prudently bridle our own anger, and patiently bear the anger of others. 5. Long-suffering. Many can bear a short provocation who are weary of bearing when it grows long. If God is long-suffering to us we should exercise long-suffering to others. 6. Mutual forbearance: Forbearing one another. We have all of us something which needs to be borne with. We need the same good turn from others which we are bound to show them. 7. Forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any. Quarrels will sometimes happen, even among the elect of God, who are holy and beloved. But it is our duty to forgive one another in such cases. Even as Christ forgave you, so also do you. It is a branch of his example which we are obliged to follow, if we ourselves would be forgiven.

II. In order to all this, we are exhorted: 1. To clothe ourselves with love (v. 14): Above all things put on charity. He lays the foundation in faith, and the top-stone in charity, which is the bond of perfectness. Christian unity consists of unanimity and mutual love. 2. To submit ourselves to the government of the peace of God (v. 15): Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, prevail and govern there, or as an umpire decide all matters of difference among you.

—To which you are called in one body. Being united in one body, we are called to be at peace one with another. We must be thankful. The work of thanksgiving to God is such a sweet and pleasant work that it will help to make us sweet and pleasant towards all men. 3. To let the word of Christ dwell in us richly, v. 16. It must dwell in us, or keep house, not as a servant but as a master. It must dwell in us; that is, be always ready and at hand to us in everything. It must dwell in us richly: not only keep house in our hearts, but keep a good house. Many have the word of Christ dwelling in them, but it dwells in them but poorly. The soul prospers when the word of God dwells in us richly. And this in all wisdom. The word of Christ must dwell in us, not in all notion and speculation, to make us doctors, but in all wisdom, to make us good Christians. 4. To teach and admonish one another. We sharpen ourselves by quickening others. We must admonish one another in psalms and hymns. Religious poesy seems countenanced by these expressions and is capable of great edification. But, when we sing psalms, we make no melody unless we sing with grace in our hearts. And we are not only to quicken and encourage ourselves, but to teach and admonish one another.

tification in time; the sanctified, feeling God's love, imitate it [BENGEL]. bowels of mercies—Some of the oldest MSS. read singular, "mercy." Bowels express the yearning compassion, which has its seat in the heart, and which we feel to act on our inward parts (Gen. 43:30; Jer. 31:20; Luke 1:78, Margin). humbleness of mind—True "lowliness of mind"; not the mock "humility" of the false teachers (ch. 2:23; Eph. 4:2, 32). 13. Forbearing—as to present offenses. forgiving—as to past offenses. quarrel—rather as Greek, "cause of blame," "cause of complaint." Christ—who had so infinitely greater cause of complaint against us. The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read "the Lord." English Version is supported by one very old MS. and old versions. It seems to have crept in from Ephesians 4:32. 14. above—rather "over," as in Ephesians 6:16. Charity, which is the crowning grace, covering the multitude of others' sins (I Pet. 4:8), must overlie all the other graces enumerated. which is—i.e., "for it is"; lit., "which thing is." bond of perfectness—an upper garment which completes and keeps together the rest, which, without it, would be loose and disconnected. Seeming graces, where love is wanting, are mere hypocrisy. Justification by faith is assumed as already having taken place in those whom Paul addresses, vs. 12, "elect of God, holy . . . beloved," and ch. 2:12; so that there is no plea here for Rome's view of justification by works. Love and its works "perfect," i.e., manifest the full maturity of faith developed (Matt. 5:44, 48). Love . . . be ye perfect . . . (Jas. 2:21, 22; I John 2:5). "If we love one another, God's love is perfected in us" (Rom. 13:8; I Cor. 13; I Tim. 1:5; I John 4:12). As to "bond," cf. ch. 2:2, "knit together in love" (Eph. 4:3), "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." 15. peace of God—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "The peace of CHRIST" (cf. Phil. 4:7). "The peace of GOD." Therefore Christ is God. Peace was His legacy to His disciples before He left them (John 14:27), "My peace I give unto you." Peace is peculiarly His to give. Peace follows love (vs. 14; Eph. 4:2, 3). rule—lit., "sit as umpire"; the same Greek verb simple, as appears compounded (ch. 2:18). The false teacher, as a self-constituted umpire, defrauds you of your prize; but if the peace of Christ be your umpire ruling in your hearts, your reward is sure. "Let the peace of Christ act as umpire when anger, envy, and such passions arise; and restrain them." Let not those passions give the award, so that you should be swayed by them, but let Christ's peace be the decider of everything. in your hearts—Many wear a peaceful countenance and speak peace with the mouth, while war is in their hearts (Ps. 28:3; 55:21). to the which—i.e., with a view to which state of Christian peace (Isa. 26:3); I Cor. 7:15, "God hath called us to peace." ye are called—Greek, "ye were also called." The "also" implies that besides Paul's exhortation, they have also as a motive to "peace," their having been once for all called. in one body—(Eph. 4:4). The unity of the body is a strong argument for "peace" among the members. be ye thankful—for your "calling." Not to have "peace ruling in your hearts" would be inconsistent with the "calling in one body," and would be practical unthankfulness to God who called us (Eph. 5:4, 19, 20). 16. The form which "thankfulness" (vs. 15) ought to take. Let the word of Christ—the Gospel word by which ye have been called. richly—(ch. 2:2; Rom. 15:14)—in all wisdom—ALFORD joins this clause with "teaching. . . ." not with "dwell in you," as English Version, for so we find in ch. 1:28, "teaching in all wisdom," and the two clauses will thus correspond, "In all wisdom teaching," and "in grace singing in your hearts" (so the Greek order). and . . . and—The oldest MSS. read "psalms, hymns, spiritual songs" (Note, Eph. 5:19). At the Agapæ or love-feasts, and in their family circles, they were to be so full of the Word of Christ in the heart that the mouth should give it utterance in hymns of instruction, admonition, and praise (cf. Deut. 6:7). TERTULLIAN, Apology, 39, records that at the love-feasts, after the water had been furnished for the hands and the lights had been lit, according as any had the power, whether by his remembrance of Scripture, or by his powers of composition, he used to be invited to sing praises to God for the common good. Paul contrasts (as in Eph. 5:18, 19) the songs of Christians at their social meetings, with the bacchanalian and licentious songs of heathen feasts. Singing usually formed part of the entertainment at Greek banquets (cf. Jas. 5:13). with grace—Greek, "IN grace," the element in which your singing is to be: "the grace" of the indwelling Holy Spirit. This clause expresses the seat and source of true psalmody, whether in private or public, viz., the heart as well as the voice; singing

ADAM CLARKE

12. Bowels of mercies. Be merciful, not in act merely, but in spirit and affection. In all cases of this kind let your heart dictate to your hand; be clothed with bowels of mercy—let your tenderest feelings come in contact with the miseries of the distressed as soon as ever they present themselves.

13. Forbearing one another. Avoid all occasions of irritating or provoking each other. Forgiving one another. If ye receive offense, be instantly ready to forgive on the first acknowledgment of the fault. Even as Christ forgave you. Who required no satisfaction and sought for nothing in you but the broken, contrite heart, and freely forgave you as soon as you returned to Him.

14. And above all these things. "Upon all, over all"; as the outer garment envelopes all the clothing, so let charity or "love" invest and encompass all the rest. Which is the bond of perfectness. Love to God and man is not only to cover all, but also to unite and consolidate the whole. It is therefore represented here under the notion of a girdle, by which all the rest of the clothing is bound close about the body. To love God with all the heart, soul, mind, and strength, and one's neighbor as oneself, is the perfection which the new covenant requires, and which the grace and Spirit of Christ work in every sincerely obedient, humble believer.

15. And let the peace of God. Instead of God, "Christ" is the reading of several MSS., with several of the fathers.

Rule in your hearts. Let the peace of Christ "judge, decide, and govern" in your hearts, as the brabeus, or judge, does in the Olympic contests. No heart is right with God where the peace of Christ does not rule, and the continual prevalence of the peace of Christ is the decisive proof that the heart is right with God.

In one body. You cannot have peace with God, in yourselves nor among each other, unless you continue in unity; and, as one body, continue in connection and dependence on Him who is your only Head; to this ye are called. It is a glorious state of salvation, and you should be forever thankful that you are thus privileged.

16. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly. I believe the apostle means that the Colossians should be "well instructed in the doctrine of Christ"; that it should be their constant study; that it should be frequently preached, explained, and enforced among them; and that all the wisdom comprised in it should be well understood. Through bad pointing this verse is not very intelligible; the several members of it should be distinguished thus: "Let the doctrine of Christ dwell richly among you; teaching and admonishing each other in all wisdom; singing with grace in your hearts unto the Lord, in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs." This arrangement the original will not only bear, but it absolutely requires it, and is not sense without it.

MATTHEW HENRY

5. That all must be done in the name of Christ (v. 17): And whatsoever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. Giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Those who do all things in Christ's name will never want matter of thanksgiving to God, even the Father.

Verses 18–25

Exhortations to relative duties. We must never separate the privileges and duties of the gospel religion.

I. The duties of wives and husbands (v. 18): Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. Submission is the duty of wives. It is agreeable to the order of nature and the reason of things, as well as the appointment and will of God. It is submission to a husband, and to her own husband, who stands in the nearest relation, and is under strict engagements to proper duty too. And this is fit in the Lord. Husbands must love their wives, and not be bitter against them, v. 19. They must love them with tender and faithful affection, as Christ loved the church. And they must not be bitter against them, but be kind and obliging to them in all things.

II. The duties of children and parents: Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord, v. 20. They must be willing to do all their lawful commands, as those who have a natural right and are fitter to direct them than themselves. And this is well-pleasing to God. And parents must be tender, as well as children obedient (v. 21): "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Let not your authority over them be exercised with rigour and severity, but with kindness and gentleness, lest you, by holding the reins too tight make them fly out with the greater fierceness."

III. Servants and masters: Servants, obey your masters in all things according to the flesh, v. 22. Servants must do the duty of the relation in which they stand in all things—not only when their master's eye is upon them. In singleness of heart, fearing God. The fear of God ruling in the heart will make people good in every relation. "And whatsoever you do, do it heartily (v. 23), with diligence, not idly and slothfully."—As to the Lord, and not as to men. It sanctifies a servant's work when it is done as unto God, and not merely as unto men. We are really doing our duty to God when we are faithful in our duty to men. A good and faithful servant is never the further from heaven for his being a servant: "Knowing that of the Lord you shall receive the reward of the inheritance, for you serve the Lord Christ, v. 24. Serving your masters according to the command of Christ, you serve Christ, and he will be your paymaster. Though you are now servants, you will receive the inheritance of sons." He who does wrong will receive for the wrong which he has done, v. 25. He will be sure to punish the unjust as well as reward the faithful servant: as well if masters wrong their servants.—And there is no respect of persons with him. The righteous Judge of the earth will be impartial, and carry it with an equal hand towards master and servant. How happy would the gospel religion make the world, if it everywhere prevailed; and how much would it influence every state of things and every relation of life!

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(cf. vs. 15, "peace . . . rule in your hearts"), the psalm of love and praise being in the heart before it finds vent by the lips, and even when it is not actually expressed by the voice, as in closet-worship. The Greek order forbids English Version, "with grace in your hearts"; rather, "singing in your hearts." to the Lord—The oldest MSS. read, "to God." 17. Lit., "And everything whatsoever ye do . . . do all . . ."; this includes words as well as deeds. in the name of the Lord Jesus—as disciples called by His name as His, seeking His guidance and help, and desiring to act so as to gain His approval (Rom. 14:8; I Cor. 10:31; II Cor. 5:15; I Pet. 4:11). Cf. "in the Lord," vss. 18, and 11, "Christ is all." God and the Father—The oldest MSS. omit "and," which seems to have crept in from Ephesians 5:20. by him—Greek, "through Him" as the channel of His grace to us, and of our thanksgiving to Him (John 14:6, end). 18. unto your own husbands—The oldest MSS. omit "own," which crept in from Ephesians 5:22. as it is fit in the Lord—Greek, "was fit," implying that there was at Colosse some degree of failure in fulfilling this duty, "as it was your duty to have done as disciples of the Lord." 19. (Eph. 5:22-33.) be not bitter—ill-tempered and provoking. Many who are polite abroad, are rude and bitter at home because they are not afraid to be so there. 20. (Eph. 6:1.) unto the Lord—The oldest MSS. read, "IN the Lord," i.e., this is acceptable to God when it is done in the Lord, viz., from the principle of faith,and as disciples in union with the Lord. 21. (Eph. 6:4.) It is a different Greek verb, therefore translate here, "irritate not." By perpetual fault-finding "children" are "discouraged" or "disheartened." A broken-down spirit is fatal to youth [BENGEL]. 22. (Eph. 6:5, 6.) This is to fear God, when, though none sees us, we do no evil: but if we do evil, it is not God, but men, whom we fear. singleness—"simplicity of heart." fearing God—The oldest MSS. read, "the Lord." 23. And—omitted in the oldest MSS. (cf. Eph. 6:7, 8). Cf. the same principle in the case of all men, Hezekiah (II Chron. 31:21; Rom. 12:11). do, do it—two distinct Greek verbs, "Whatsoever ye do, work at it" (or labor at it). heartily—not from servile constraint, but with hearty good will. 24. the reward of the inheritance—"Knowing that it is from the Lord (the ultimate source of reward), ye shall receive the compensation (or recompense, which will make ample amends for your having no earthly possession, as slaves now) consisting of the inheritance" (a term excluding the notion of meriting it by works: it is all of grace, Rom. 4:14; Gal. 3:18). for ye serve—The oldest MSS. omit "for," then translate as Vulgate, "Serve ye the Lord Christ;" cf. vs. 23, "To the Lord and not unto men" (I Cor. 7:22, 23). 25. But—The oldest MSS. read, "for," which accords with "serve ye . . ." (vs. 24), the oldest reading: the for here gives a motive for obeying the precept. He addresses the slaves: Serve ye the Lord Christ, and leave your wrongs in His hands to put to rights: (translate), "For he that doeth wrong shall receive back the wrong which he hath done (by just retribution in kind), and there is no respect of persons" with the Great Judge in the day of the Lord. He favors the master no more than the slave (Rev. 6:15).

ADAM CLARKE

17. Whatsoever ye do in word or deed. Let your words be right and your actions upright. Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. Begin with Him and end with Him; invoke His name and pray for His direction and support in all that you do; and thus every work will be crowned with all requisite success. Giving thanks to God. Even praises, as well as prayers, must ascend to God through this Mediator.

18. Wives, submit yourselves. Having done with general directions, the apostle comes to particular duties, which are commonly called relative, because they belong only to persons in certain situations and are not incumbent on all. The directions here to wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, and masters are so exactly the same in substance with those in Eph. v. 22-33 and vi. 1-9 that there is no need to repeat what has been said on those passages; and to the notes there the reader is requested to refer. As it is fit in the Lord. God commands it, and it is both proper and decent.

19. Be not bitter against them. Wherever bitterness is, there love is wanting. And where love is wanting in the married life, there is hell upon earth.

20. Children, obey your parents in all things. That is, in the Lord, in everything that your parents command you which is not contrary to the will or word of God.

24. The reward of the inheritance. Here you have neither lands nor property; you are servants or slaves. Be not discouraged; you have an inheritance in store. Be faithful unto God and to your employers, and Christ will give you a heavenly inheritance.

Verse 1

The apostle proceeds with the duty of masters to their servants. Justice is required of them: Give unto your servants that which is just and equal (v. 1), not only strict justice, but equity and kindness. "Knowing that you also have a Master in heaven. You who are masters of others have a Master yourself, and are accountable to one above you. Deal with your servants as you expect God should deal with you. You are both servants of the same Lord and are equally accountable to him at last."

Verses 2–4

This is the duty of everyone—to continue in prayer. Watching in the same. Christians should lay hold of all opportunities for prayer, and choose the fittest seasons, and keep their minds lively in the duty.—

CHAPTER 4

Vss. 1-18. EXHORTATIONS CONTINUED. TO PRAYER: WISDOM IN RELATION TO THE UNCONVERTED: AS TO THE BEARERS OF THE EPISTLE, TYCHICUS AND ONESIMUS: CLOSING SALUTATIONS. 1. give—Greek "render": lit., "afford." equal—i.e., as the slaves owe their duties to you, so you equally owe to them your duties as masters. Cf. "ye masters do the same things" (Note, Eph. 6:9). ALFORD translates, "fairness," "equity," which gives a large and liberal interpretation of justice in common matters (Philemon 16). knowing—(Ch. 3:24). ye also—as well as they.

2. Continue—Greek, "Continue perseveringly," "persevere" (Eph. 6:18), "watching thereunto"; here, "watch in the same," or "in it," i.e., in prayer: watching against the indolence as to prayer, and in prayer, of our corrupt wills.

1. Masters, give unto your servants. This verse should have been added to the preceding, to which it properly belongs; and this chapter should have begun with v. 2. That which is just and equal. As they are "bondmen" or "slaves" of whom the apostle speaks, we may at once see with what propriety this exhortation is given. The condition of slaves among the Greeks and Romans was wretched in the extreme; they could appeal to no law, and they could neither expect justice nor equity. The apostle therefore informs the proprietors of these slaves that they should act towards them both according to justice and equity; for God, their Master, required this of them, and would at last call them to account for their conduct in this respect.

2. Continue in prayer. This was the apostle's general advice to all; without this neither wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, nor masters could fulfil the duties which God, in their respective stations, required of them. Watch in the same. Be always on your guard; and when you have got the requisite grace by praying, take care of it, and bring it into its proper action by watchfulness; by which you

With thanksgiving. Thanksgiving must have a part in every prayer.—Withal praying also for us, v. 3. The people must pray particularly for their ministers, and bear them upon their hearts at all times at the throne of grace. As if he had said, "Do not forget us, whenever you pray for yourselves." That God would open to us a door of utterance, that is, either afford opportunity to preach the gospel, or else give me ability and courage. And for me, that utterance may be given to me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds. He would have them pray for him, that he might not be discouraged in his work, nor driven from it by his sufferings: That I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak, v. 4. He had been particular in telling them what he prayed for on their behalf, ch. i. Here he tells them particularly what he would have them pray for on his behalf. Paul knew as well as any man how to speak; and yet he begged their prayers for him, that he might be taught to speak.

Verses 5, 6

The apostle exhorts them further to a prudent conduct towards the heathen world, or those out of the Christian church among whom they lived (v. 5): Walk in wisdom towards those who are without. Be careful to get no hurt by them, and to do no hurt to them, or increase their prejudices against religion. Do them all the good you can, and by all the fittest means recommend religion to them.—Redeeming the time; either "improving every opportunity of doing them good," or else "walking with circumspection, to give them no advantage against you.

Let your speech be always with grace v. 6. Let all your discourse be as becomes Christians—savoury, discreet, seasonable." Though it be not always of grace, it must be always with grace. It must be in a Christian manner: seasoned with salt. Grace is the salt which seasons our discourse, makes it savoury, and keeps it from corrupting. That you may know how to answer every man. We have need of a great deal of wisdom and grace to give proper answers to every man, particularly in answering the questions and objections of adversaries against our religion, giving the reasons of our faith.

Verses 7–18

I. Concerning Tychicus, v. 7. By him this epistle was sent. He knew they would be glad to hear how it fared with him. The churches cannot but be concerned for good ministers and desirous to know their state. A beloved brother and faithful minister. Faithfulness in any one is truly lovely, and renders him worthy our affection and esteem. And a fellow-servant in the Lord. It adds much to the beauty and strength of the gospel ministry when ministers are thus loving one to another. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts, v. 8. He was as willing to hear from them as they could be to hear from him. It is a great comfort to have the mutual concern of fellow-christians.

II. Concerning Onesimus (v. 9): With Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. This was he whom Paul had begotten in his bonds, Philem. 10. He was converted at Rome, whither he had fled from his master's service. Though he was a poor servant, and had been a bad man, yet, being now a convert, Paul calls him a faithful and beloved brother. The meanest circumstance of life, and greatest wickedness of former life, make no difference in the spiritual relation among sincere Christians.

III. Aristarchus, a fellow-prisoner. Those who join in services and sufferings should be thereby engaged to one another in holy love.

with thanksgiving—for everything, whether joyful, or sorrowful, mercies temporal and spiritual, national, family, and individual (I Cor. 14:17; Phil. 4:6; I Thess. 5:18). 3. for us—myself and Timothy (ch. 1:1). a door of utterance—Translate, "a door for the word." Not as in Ephesians 6:19, where power of "utterance" is his petition. Here it is an opportunity for preaching the word, which would be best afforded by his release from prison (I Cor. 16:9; II Cor. 2:12; Philemon 22; Rev. 3:8). to speak—so that we may speak. the mystery of Christ—(Ch. 1:27). for which . . . also—on account of which I am (not only "an ambassador," Eph. 6: 20, but) ALSO in bonds. 4. ALFORD thinks that Paul asks their prayers for his release as if it were the only way by which he could "make it (the Gospel) manifest" as he ought. But while this is included in their subject of prayer, Philippians 1:12, 13, written somewhat later in his imprisonment, clearly shows that "a door for the word" could be opened, and was opened, for its manifestation, even while he remained imprisoned (cf. II Tim. 2:9). 5. (Notes, Eph. 5:15, 16.) in wisdom—practical Christian prudence. them . . . without—Those not in the Christian brotherhood (I Cor. 5:12; I Thess. 4:12). The brethren, through love, will make allowances for an indiscreet act or word of a brother; the world will make none. Therefore be the more on your guard in your intercourse with the latter, lest you be a stumbling block to their conversion. redeeming the time—The Greek expresses, buying up for yourselves, and buying off from worldly vanities the opportunity, whenever it is afforded you, of good to yourselves and others. "Forestall the opportunity, i.e., to buy up an article out of the market, so as to make the largest profit from it" [CONYBEARE and HOWSON]. 6. with grace—Greek, "IN grace" as its element (ch. 3:16; Eph. 4:29). Contrast the case of those "of the world" who "therefore speak of the world" (I John 4:5). Even the smallest leaf of the believer should be full of the sap of the Holy Spirit (Jer. 17:7, 8). His conversation should be cheerful without levity, serious without gloom. Cf. Luke 4:22; John 7:46, as to Jesus' speech. seasoned with salt—i.e., the savor of fresh and iively spiritual wisdom and earnestness, excluding all "corrupt communication," and also tasteless insipidity (Matt. 5:13; Mark 9:50; Eph. 4: 29). Cf. all the sacrifices seasoned with salt (Lev. 2:13). Not far from Colosse, in Phrygia, there was a salt lake, which gives to the image here the more appropriateness. how ye ought to answer every man—(I Pet. 3:15). 7. Tychicus—(Note, Eph. 6:2). who is a beloved brother—rather, "the beloved brother"; the article "the" marks him as well known to them. 8. for the same purpose—Greek, "for this very purpose." that he might know your estate—Translate, "that he may know your state": answering to vs. 7. So one very old MS. and Vulgate read. But the oldest MSS. and the old Latin versions, "that YE may know OUR state." However, the latter reading seems likely to have crept in from Ephesians 6:22. Paul was the more anxious to know the state of the Colossians, on account of the seductions to which they were exposed from false teachers; owing to which he had "great conflict for" them (ch. 2:1). comfort your hearts—distressed as ye are by my imprisonment, as well as by your own trials. 9. Onesimus—the slave mentioned in the Epistle to Philemon 10, 16, "a brother beloved." a faithful . . . brother—rather, "the faithful brother," he being known to the Colossians as the slave of Philemon, their fellow townsman and fellow Christian. one of you—belonging to your city. They shall make known unto you all things—Greek, "all the things here." This substantial repetition of "all my state shall Tychicus declare unto you," strongly favors the reading of English Version in vs. 8, "that he might (may) know your state," as it is unlikely the same thing should be stated thrice. 10. Aristarchus—a Macedonian of Thessalonica (Acts 27:2), who was dragged into the theater at Ephesus, during the tumult with Gaius, they being "Paul's companions in travel." He accompanied Paul to Asia (Acts 20:4), and subsequently (Acts 27:2) to Rome. He was now at Rome with Paul (cf. Philemon 23: 24). As he is here spoken of as Paul's "fellow prisoner," but in Philemon 24 as Paul's "fellow laborer"; and vice versa, Epaphras in Philemon 23, as his "fellow prisoner," but here (ch. 1:7) "fellow servant," MEYER in ALFORD, conjectures that Paul's friends voluntarily shared his imprisonment by turns, Aristarchus being his fellow prisoner when he wrote to the Colossians, Epaphras when he wrote to Philemon. The Greek for "fellow prisoner" is literally, fellow captive, an image from prisoners will know when, and where, and how to apply it. With thanksgiving. Being always grateful to God, who has called you into such a state of salvation, and affords you such abundant means and opportunities to glorify Him.

3. Praying also for us. Let the success and spread of the gospel be ever dear to you; and neglect not to pray fervently to God that it may have free course, run, and be glorified. A door of utterance. The word thyra, which commonly signifies a door, or suchlike entrance into a house or passage through a wall, is often used metaphorically for an "entrance" to any business, "occasion" or "opportunity" to commence or perform any particular work. The mystery of Christ. The gospel, which had been hidden from all former times, and which revealed that purpose long hidden in the divine councils, that the Gentiles should be called to enjoy the same privileges with the Jews. For which I am also in bonds. He was suffering under Jewish malice, and for preaching this very mystery; for they could not bear to hear announced, as from heaven, that the Gentiles, whom they considered eternally shut out from any participation of the divine favor, should be made fellow heirs with them of the grace of life; much less could they bear to hear that they were about to be reprobated and the Gentiles elected in their place. It was for asserting these things that they persecuted Paul at Jerusalem, so that to save his life he was obliged to appeal to Caesar; and being taken to Rome, he was detained a prisoner till his case was fully heard; and he was a prisoner at Rome on this very account when he wrote this Epistle to the Colossians.

4. That I may make it manifest. It was a mystery, and he wished to make it manifest—to lay it open, and make all men see it.

5. Walk in wisdom. Act wisely and prudently in reference to them who are without—who yet continue unbelieving Gentiles or persecuting Jews.

6. Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt. Let all your conversation be such as may tend to exemplify and recommend Christianity; let it not only be holy, but wise, gracious, and intelligent. A harsh method of proposing or defending the doctrines of Christianity only serves to repel men from those doctrines, and from the way of salvation. Salt, from its use in preserving good from corruption, and rendering it both savory and wholesome, has always been made the emblem of wisdom. How ye ought to answer every man. That your discourse may be so judiciously managed that you may discern how to treat the prejudices and meet the objections of both Jews and Gentiles.

7. All my state shall Tychicus. See the note on Eph. vi. 21. Tychicus well knew the apostle's zeal and perseverance in preaching the gospel, his sufferings on that account, his success in converting both Jews and Gentiles, and the converts which were made in Caesar's household.

8. That he might know your estate. Instead of "that he may know your affairs," read "that you may know our affairs," which is probably the true reading. Tychicus was sent to them, not to know their affairs, but with Onesimus, to carry this Epistle and make the apostle's state known to them, and comfort their hearts by the good news which he brought. The next verse confirms this meaning.

9. With Onesimus . . . who is one of you. Onesimus was a native of some part of Phrygia, if not of Colossae itself; and being lately converted to the Christian faith by the instrumentality of the apostle, he would be able, on this account, to give them satisfactory information concerning the apostle's state, which would be doubly acceptable to them as he was their countryman. See the Epistle to Philemon.

10. Aristarchus my fellow prisoner. Concerning Aristarchus, see Acts xix. 29; xx. 4; and xxvii. 2 Aristarchus and Epaphras are mentioned as saluters in this Epistle, and in that to Philemon written at the same time.

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, who wrote the gospel which bears his name.

If he come unto you receive him. Paul had a quarrel with Barnabas upon the account of this Mark, yet Paul is not only reconciled to him himself, but recommends him to the respect of the churches. If men have been guilty of a fault, it must not be always remembered against them. We must forget as well as forgive.

V. Here is one who is called Jesus, which is the Greek name for the Hebrew Joshua. Who is called Justus. These are my fellow-labourers unto the kingdom of God, who have been a comfort unto me. One is his fellow-servant, another his fellow-prisoner, and all his fellow-workers.

VI. Epaphras (v. 12). He is one of you; he salutes you. Always labouring fervently for you in prayers. Epaphras has learned of Paul to be much in prayer for his friends. We must be earnest in prayer, not only for ourselves, but for others also. That you may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. To stand perfect and complete in the will of God is what we should earnestly desire both for ourselves and others.

He had a great zeal for them: "I bear him record." And his zeal extended to all about them: to those who are in Laodicea and Hierapolis.

VII. Luke is another here mentioned, whom he calls the beloved physician. This is he who wrote the Gospel and Acts, and was Paul's companion.

taken in warfare, Christians being "fellow soldiers" (Phil. 2:25; Philemon 2), whose warfare is "the good fight of faith." Mark—John Mark (Acts 12: 12, 25); the Evangelist according to tradition. sister's son—rather, "cousin," or "kinsman to Barnabas"; the latter being the better known is introduced to designate Mark. The relationship naturally accounts for Barnabas' selection of Mark as his companion when otherwise qualified; and also for Mark's mother's house at Jerusalem being the place of resort of Christians there (Acts 12:12). The family belonged to Cyprus (Acts 4:36); this accounts for Barnabas' choice of Cyprus as the first station on their journey (Acts 13:4), and for Mark's accompanying them readily so far, it being the country of his family; and for Paul's rejecting him at the second journey for not having gone further than Perga, in Pamphylia, but having gone thence home to his mother at Jerusalem (Matt. 10:37) on the first journey (Acts 13:13). touching whom—viz., Mark. ye received commandments—possibly before the writing of this Epistle; or the "commandments" were verbal by Tychicus, and accompanying this letter, since the past tense was used by the ancients (where we use the present) in relation to the time which it would be when the letter was read by the Colossians. Thus (Philemon 19), "I have written," for "I write." The substance of them was, "If he come unto you, receive him." Paul's rejection of him on his second missionary journey, because he had turned back at Perga on the first journey (Acts 13:13; 15:37-39), had caused an alienation between himself and Barnabas. Christian love soon healed the breach; for here he implies his restored confidence in Mark, makes honorable allusion to Barnabas, and desires that those at Colosse who had regarded Mark in consequence of that past error with suspicion, should now "receive" him with kindness. Colosse is only about 110 miles from Perga, and less than 20 from the confines of Pisidia, through which province Paul and Barnabas preached on their return during the same journey. Hence, though Paul had not personally visited the Colossian Church, they knew of the past unfaithfulness of Mark; and needed this recommendation of him, after the temporary cloud on him, so as to receive him, now that he was about to visit them as an evangelist. Again, in Paul's last imprisonment, he, for the last time, speaks of Mark (II Tim. 4:11). 11. Justus—i.e., righteous; a common name among the Jews; Hebrew, tzadik (Acts 1:23). of the circumcision—This implies that Epaphras, Luke, and Demas (vss. 12, 14) were not of the circumcision. This agrees with Luke's Gentile name (the same as Lucanus), and the Gentile aspect of his Gospel. These only . . .—viz., of the Jews. For the Jewish teachers were generally opposed to the apostle of the Gentiles (Phil. 1:15). Epaphras, etc., were also fellow laborers, but Gentiles. unto—i.e., in promoting the Gospel kingdom. which have been—Greek, "which have been made," or "have become," i.e., inasmuch as they have become a comfort to me. The Greek implies comfort in forensic dangers; a different Greek word expresses comfort in domestic affliction [BENGEL]. 12. Christ—The oldest MSS. add "Jesus." labouring fervently—As the Greek, is the same, translate, "striving earnestly" (Note, ch. 1: 29; 2:1), lit., striving as in the agony of a contest. in prayers—Translate as Greek, "in his prayers." complete—The oldest MSS. read, "fully assured." It is translated, "fully persuaded," Rom. 4:21; 14:5. In the expression "perfect," he refers to what he has already said, ch. 1:28; 2:2; 3:14. "Perfect" implies the attainment of the full maturity of a Christian. BENGEL joins "in all the will of God" with "stand." 13. a great zeal—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate have "much labor." for you—lest you should be seduced (ch. 2:4); a motive why you should be anxious for yourselves. them that are in Laodicea . . . Hierapolis—churches probably founded by Epaphras, as the Church in Colosse was. Laodicea, called from Laodice, queen of Antiochus II, on the river Lycus, was, according to the subscription to I Timothy, "the chiefest city of Phrygia Pacatiana." All the three cities were destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 62 [TACITUS, Annals, 14. 27] Hierapolis was six Roman miles north of Laodicea. 14. It is conjectured that Luke "the beloved physician" (the same as the Evangelist), may have first become connected with Paul in professionally attending on him in the sickness under which he labored in Phrygia and Galatia (in which latter place he was detained by sickness), in the early part of that journey wherein Luke first is found in his company (Acts 16:10; cf. Note, Gal. 4:13). Thus the allusion to his medical profession is appropriate in writing to Marcus. See the account of this person, Acts xv. 39. Though there had been some difference between the apostle and this Mark, yet from this, and 2 Tim. iv. 11, we find that they were fully reconciled, and that Mark was very useful to Paul in the work of the ministry.

ALBERT BARNES:

"And Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas." John Mark, in relation to whom Paul and Barnabas had formerly disagreed so much as to cause a separation between Barnabas and Paul. The ground of the disagreement was that Barnabas wished to take him, probably on account of relationship, with them in their travels; Paul was unwilling to take him because he had, on one occasion, departed from them. They afterward became reconciled and Paul mentions Mark here with affection. He sent for him when he sent Tychicus to Ephesus, and it seems that he had come to him in obedience to his request (2 Tim. 4:11). Mark had probably become more decided, and Paul did not harbor unkind and unforgiving feelings toward anyone. "Touching whom ye received commandments." What these directions were and how they were communicated, whether verbally or by writing, is now unknown. It was, not improbably, on some occasion when Paul was with them. He refers to it here in order that they might know distinctly whom he meant. "If he come to you, receive him." In Philem. 24, Mark is mentioned as a "fellow laborer" of Paul. It would seem probable, therefore, that he was not a prisoner. Paul here intimates that he was about to leave Rome, and he enjoins it on the Colossians to receive him kindly. This injunction may have been necessary, as the Colossians may have been aware of the breach between him and Paul and may have been disposed to regard him with suspicion. Paul retained no malice and now commended in the warmest manner, one from whom he was formerly constrained to separate.
—Popular Commentary

11. Jesus, which is called Justus. Jesus, Joshua or Jehoshua, was his name among his countrymen the Jews; Justus was the name which he bore among the Greeks and Romans. These only. That is, only Aristarchus, Marcus, and Jesus Justus, who were formerly Jews or proselytes; for they were of the circumcision, and assisted the apostle in preaching the gospel.

12. Epaphras, who is one of you. A native of some part of Phrygia, and probably of Colossae itself. A servant of Christ. A minister of the gospel. Labouring fervently for you. "Agonizing"; very properly expressed by our translators, labouring fervently. That ye may stand perfect and complete. That you may stand firm, perfectly instructed, and fully persuaded of the truth of those doctrines which have been taught you as the revealed will of God: this I believe to be the meaning of the apostle. Instead of complete or "filled up," almost all the MSS. of the Alexandrian rescension, which are considered the most authentic and correct, have "that ye may be fully persuaded."

13. He hath a great zeal for you. Instead of "much zeal," some MSS., versions, and fathers, read "much labor"; they are here nearly of the same meaning, though the latter appears to be the better and genuine reading. Them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis. These were both cities of Phrygia, between which Colossae was situated. The latter was called Hierapolis, or the "holy city," from the multitude of its temples. Apollo, Diana, Aesculapius, and Hygeia were all worshipped here, as appears by the coins of this city still extant.

14. Luke, the beloved physician. This is generally supposed to be the same with Luke the Evangelist.

MATTHEW HENRY

VIII. Demas. We read (2 Tim. iv. 10), Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world. Many who have made a great figure in profession, and gained a great name among Christians, have yet shamefully apostatized.

IX. The brethren in Laodicea living in the neighbourhood of Colosse: and Paul sends salutations to them, and orders that this epistle should be read in the church of the Laodiceans (v. 16). And some think Paul sent another epistle at this time to Laodicea: And that you likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. If so, that epistle is now lost.

X. Nymphas is mentioned (v. 15) as one who lived at Colosse, and had a church in his house.

XI. Concerning Archippus. They are bidden to admonish him to mind his work as a minister, to take heed to it, and to fulfil it. The ministry we have received is a great honour; for it is received in the Lord, and is by his appointment. The people may put their ministers in mind of their duty, and excite them to it: Say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry.

XII. Concerning himself (v. 18): The salutation of me Paul. Remember my bonds. These words he wrote with his own hand. "Grace be with you. The favour of God, and all good, be with you, and be your portion."

men of Phrygia. Luke ministered to Paul in his last imprisonment (II Tim. 4:11). Demas—included among his "fellow laborers" (Philemon 24), but afterwards a deserter from him through love of this world (II Tim. 4:10). He alone has here no honorable or descriptive epithet attached to his name. Perhaps, already, his real character was betraying itself. 15. Nymphas—of Laodicea. church . . . in his house—So old MSS. and Vulgate read. The oldest read, "THEIR house"; and one MS., "HER house," which makes Nymphas a woman. 16. the epistle from Laodicea—viz., the Epistle which I wrote to the Laodiceans, and which you will get from them on applying to them. Not the Epistle to the Ephesians. See INTRODUCTIONS to the Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians. The Epistles from the apostles were publicly read in the church assemblies. IGNATIUS, ad Ephesum 12; POLYCARP, ad Philippenses, 3. 11, 12; CLEMENT, ad Corinthios 1. 47; I Thessalonians 5:27; Revelation 1:3, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear." Thus, they and the Gospels were put on a level with the Old Testament, which was similarly read (Deut. 31:11). The Holy Spirit inspired Paul to write, besides those extant, other Epistles which He saw necessary for that day, and for particular churches; and which were not so for the Church of all ages and places. It is possible that as the Epistle to the Colossians was to be read for the edification of other churches besides that of Colosse; so the Epistle to the Ephesians was to be read in various churches besides Ephesus, and that Laodicea was the last of such churches before Colosse, whence he might designate the Epistle to the Ephesians here as "the Epistle from Laodicea." But it is equally possible that the Epistle meant was one to the Laodiceans themselves. 17. say to Archippus—The Colossians (not merely the clergy, but the laymen) are directed, "Speak ye to Archippus." This proves that Scripture belongs to the laity as well as the clergy; and that laymen may profitably admonish the clergy in particular cases when they do so in meekness. BENGEL suggests that Archippus was perhaps prevented from going to the Church assembly by weak health or age. The word, "fulfil," accords with his ministry being near its close (ch. 1:25; cf. Philemon 2). However, "fulfil" may mean, as in II Timothy 4:5, "make full proof of thy ministry." "Give all diligence to follow it out fully"; a monition perhaps needed by Archippus. in the Lord—The element in which every work of the Christian, and especially the Christian minister, is to be done (vs. 7; I Cor. 7:39; Phil. 4:2). 18. Paul's autograph salutation (so I Cor. 16:21; II Thess. 3:17), attesting that the preceding letter, though written by an amanuensis, is from himself. Remember my bonds—Already in this chapter he had mentioned his "bonds" (vs. 3), and again vs. 10, an incentive why they should love and pray (vs. 3) for him; and still more, that they should, in reverential obedience to his monitions in this Epistle, shrink from the false teaching herein stigmatized, remembering what a conflict (ch. 2:1) he had in their behalf amidst his bonds. "When we read of his chains, we should not forget that they moved over the paper as he wrote; his [right] hand was chained to the [left hand of the] soldier who kept him" [ALFORD]. Grace be with you—Greek, "THE grace" which every Christian enjoys in some degree, and which flows from God in Christ by the Holy Ghost (Titus 3:15; Heb. 13:25)

ADAM CLARKE

15. Salute . . . Nymphas, and the church which is in his house. This person, and his whole family, which probably was very numerous, appear to have received the gospel; and it seems that, for their benefit and that of his neighbors, he had opened his house for the worship of God. In those primitive times there were no consecrated places, for it was supposed that the simple setting apart of any place for the worship of God was a sufficient consecration.

16. Cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans. That is: Let a copy be taken and sent to them, that it may be read there also. This appears to have been a regular custom in the apostolic Church. That ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. Some suppose that this was an epistle sent from Laodicea to the apostle, which he now sent by Aristarchus to the Colossians, that they might peruse it. Others think that the Epistle to the Ephesians is the epistle in question, and that it was originally directed to them, and not to the Ephesians. But others, equally learned, think that there was an epistle, different from that to the Ephesians, sent by Paul to the Laodiceans, which is now lost.

17. Say to Archippus. Who this person was we cannot tell; there have been various conjectures concerning him. Some think he was bishop, or overseer of the church at Colossae, in the absence of Epaphras.

18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul. The preceding part of the Epistle was written by a scribe, from the mouth of the apostle; this, and what follows, was written by the hand of Paul himself. A similar distinction we find in 1 Cor. xvi. 21 and in 2 Thess. iii. 17; and this, it seems, was the means by which the apostle authenticated every Epistle which he sent to the different churches. Remember my bonds. See what proof you have of the truth of the gospel; I am in bonds on this account. I suffer patiently, yea, exult in the Lord Jesus, so perfectly am I upheld by the grace of the gospel. Remember my bonds, and take courage. How eloquent were these concluding words! Amen. This is omitted by the most ancient and correct MSS.

V. Conclusion (5:23-28)
A. The final desire of assurance (5:23-24)
B. Personal words (5:25-28)

Thessalonica was formerly the metropolis of Macedonia. The apostle Paul, being directed after an extraordinary manner to preach the gospel in Macedonia (Acts 16:9, 10), went from Troas to Samothracia, thence to Neapolis, and then to Philippi, where he had good success in his ministry, but met with hard usage, being cast into prison with Silas, from which being wonderfully delivered, they comforted the brethren there and departed. Passing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where the apostle planted a church. But a tumult being raised in the city, Paul and Silas, for their safety, were sent away by night unto Berea. Afterward Paul was conducted to Athens, leaving Silas and Timothy behind him. When they came, Timothy was sent to Thessalonica to inquire after their welfare and to establish them in the faith (1 Thess. 3:2), and was sent again, together with Silas, to visit the churches in Macedonia. So that Paul, being left at Athens alone (1 Thess. 3:1), departed thence to Corinth, where he continued a year and a half, and then he wrote this epistle to the church of Christ at Thessalonica, which, though it is placed after the other epistles of this apostle, is supposed to be first in time of all Paul's epistles.

CHAPTER 1

Verse 1

I. The inscription. The persons from whom this epistle came. Paul was the writer of this epistle. He joins Silvanus (or Silas) and Timotheus with himself.

The persons to whom this epistle is written, the church of the Thessalonians, the converted Jews and Gentiles. This church is said to be in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Gentiles among them were turned to God from idols, and the Jews among them believed Jesus to be the promised Messias. All of them were devoted and dedicated to God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER 1

Vss. 1-10. ADDRESS: SALUTATION: HIS PRAYERFUL THANKSGIVING FOR THEIR FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE. THEIR FIRST RECEPTION OF THE GOSPEL, AND THEIR GOOD INFLUENCE ON ALL AROUND. 1. Paul—He does not add "an apostle," because in their case, as in that of the Philippians (Note, Philippians 1:1), his apostolic authority needs not any substantiation. He writes familiarly as to faithful friends, not but that his apostleship was recognized among them (ch. 2:6). On the other hand, in writing to the Galatians, among whom some had called in question his apostleship, he strongly asserts it in the superscription. An undesigned propriety in the Epistles, evincing genuineness. Silvanus—a "chief man among the brethren" (Acts 15:22), and a "prophet" (vs. 32), and one of the deputies who carried the decree of the Jerusalem council to Antioch. His age and position cause him to be placed before "Timothy," then a youth (Acts 16:1; I Timothy 4:12). Silvanus (the Gentile expanded form of "Silas") is called in I Pet. 5:12, "a faithful brother" (cf. II Cor. 1:19). They both aided in planting the Thessalonian Church, and are therefore included in the address. This, the first of Paul's Epistles, as being written before various evils crept into the churches, is without the censures found in other Epistles. So realizing was their Christian faith, that they were able hourly to look for the Lord Jesus. unto the church—not merely as in the Epistles to Romans, Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, "to the saints," or "the faithful at Thessalonica." in—implying vital union. God the Father—This marks that they were no longer heathen. the Lord Jesus Christ—This marks that they were not Jews, but Christians. Grace be unto you, and peace—that ye may have in

1. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus. Though Paul himself dictated this letter, yet he joins the names of Silas and Timothy, because they had been with him at Thessalonica, and were well-known there.

And Silvanus. This was certainly the same as Silas, who was Paul's companion in all his journeys through Asia Minor and Greece; see Acts xv. 22; xvi. 19; xvii. 4, 10. The apostle took him and Timothy with him into Macedonia, and they continued at Berea when the apostle went from thence to Athens; from this place Paul sent for them to come to him speedily, and though it is not said that they came while he was at Athens, yet it is most probable that they did; after which, having sent them to Thessalonica, he proceeded to Corinth, where they afterwards rejoined him, and from whence he wrote this Epistle.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The salutation. Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. The free grace or favour of God is the spring of all the peace and prosperity we can enjoy. As all good comes from God, so no good can be hoped for by sinners but from God in Christ. And the best good may be expected from God as our Father for the sake of Christ.

Verses 2–5

I. The apostle begins with thanksgiving to God. Being about to mention the things that were matter of joy to him, and highly praiseworthy in them, he chooses to do this by way of thanksgiving to God. Even when we do not actually give thanks to God by our words, we should have a grateful sense of God's goodness upon our minds.

II. He joined prayer with his praise or thanksgiving. When we give thanks for any benefit we receive we should join prayer. As there is much that we ought to be thankful for, so there is much occasion of constant prayer for further supplies of good.

III. The particulars for which he was so thankful to God.

1. The saving benefits bestowed on them. (1) Their faith and their work of faith. Their faith was a true and living faith, because a working faith. Wherever there is a true faith, it will work. (2) Their love and the labour of love. Love will show itself by labour. (3) Their hope and the patience of hope. Wherever there is a well-grounded hope of eternal life, it will appear by the exercise of patience.

2. The apostle not only mentions these three cardinal graces, faith, hope, and love, but also takes notice of the sincerity of them: being in the sight of God even our Father. Then is the work of faith, or labour of love, or patience of hope, sincere, when it is done as under the eye of God.

He mentions the fountain whence these graces flow, God's electing love: Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God, v. 4. Thus he runs up these streams to the fountain, and that was God's eternal election. He calls them, brethren beloved. It is a good reason why we should love one another, because we are all beloved of God. The election of God is of his own good pleasure and mere grace, not for the sake of any merit in those who are chosen. The election of God may be known by the fruits thereof.

3. Another ground of the apostle's thanksgiving is the success of his ministry among them. He was thankful on his own account as well as theirs, that he had not laboured in vain. Their ready entertainment of the gospel he preached to them was an evidence of their being elected and beloved of God. The gospel came to them also not in word only, but in power. It did not merely tickle the ear and please the fancy, but it affected their hearts: a divine power went along with it. By this we may know our election, if we not only speak of the things of God by rote as parrots, but feel the influence of these things in our hearts. It came in the Holy Ghost. Unless the Spirit of God accompany the word of God it will be to us but as a dead letter; and the letter killeth, it is the Spirit that giveth life. The gospel came to them in much assurance. They were fully convinced of the truth of it. They were willing to leave all for Christ, and to venture their souls upon the verity of the gospel revelation. The Thessalonians thus knew what manner of men the apostle and his fellow-labourers were among them, and what they did for their sake.

Verses 6–10

The evidence of the apostle's success among the Thessalonians.

I. They were careful to imitate the good examples of the apostles and ministers of Christ, v. 6. The Thessalonians showed a conscientious care to be followers of them. Herein they became also followers of the Lord, who is the perfect example we must strive to imitate.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

God that favor and peace which men withhold [ANSELM]. This is the salutation in all the Epistles of Paul, except the three pastoral ones, which have "grace, mercy, and peace." Some of the oldest MSS. support, others omit the clause following, "from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." It may have crept in from I Corinthians 1:3; II Corinthians 1:2. 2. (Rom. 1:9; II Tim. 1:3.) The structure of the sentences in this and the following verses, each successive sentence repeating with greater fulness the preceding, characteristically marks Paul's abounding love and thankfulness in respect to his converts, as if he were seeking by words heaped on words to convey some idea of his exuberant feelings towards them. We—I, Silvanus, and Timotheus. Romans 1:9 supports ALFORD in translating, "making mention of you in our prayers without ceasing" (vs. 3). Thus, "without ceasing," in the second clause, answers in parallelism to "always," in the first. 3. work of faith—the working reality of your faith; its alacrity in receiving the truth, and in evincing itself by its fruits. Not an otiose assent; but a realizing, working faith; not "in word only," but in one continuous chain of "work" (singular, not plural, works), vss. 5-10; James 2:22. So "the work of faith" in I Thessalonians 1:11 implies its perfect development (cf. Jas. 1:4). The other governing substantives similarly mark respectively the characteristic manifestation of the grace which follows each in the genitive. Faith, love, and hope, are the three great Christian graces (ch. 5:8; I Cor. 13:13). labour of love—The Greek implies toil, or troublesome labor, which we are stimulated by love to bear (ch. 2:9); Rev. 2:2). For instances of self-denying labors of love, see Acts 20:35; Romans 16:12. Not here ministerial labors. Those who shun trouble for others, love little (cf. Heb. 6:10). patience—Translate, "endurance of hope"; the persevering endurance of trials which flows from "hope." Romans 15:4 shows that "patience" also nourishes "hope." hope in our Lord Jesus—lit., "hope of our Lord Jesus," viz., of His coming (vs. 10): a hope that looked forward beyond all present things for the manifestation of Christ. in the sight of God—Your "faith, hope, and love" were not merely such as would pass for genuine before men, but "in the sight of God," the Searcher of hearts [GOMARUS]. Things are really what they are before God. BENGEL takes this clause with "remembering." Whenever we pray, we remember before God your faith, hope, and love. But its separation from "remembering" in the order, and its connection with "your . . . faith . . ." make me to prefer the former view. and . . .—The Greek implies, "in the sight of Him who is [at once] God and our Father." 4. Knowing—Forasmuch as we know. your election of God—The Greek is rather, "beloved by God"; so Romans 1:7; II Thessalonians 2:13. "Your election" means that God has elected you as individual believers to eternal life (Rom. 11:5, 7; Col. 3:12; II Thess. 2:13). 5. our gospel—viz., the Gospel which we preached. came—Greek, "was made," viz., by God, its Author and Sender. God's having made our preaching among you to be attended with such "power," is the proof that you are "elect of God" (vs. 4). in power—in the efficacy of the Holy Spirit clothing us with power (see end of verse; Acts 1:8; 4:33; 6:5, 8) in preaching the Gospel, and making it in you the power of God unto salvation (Rom. 1:16). As "power" produces faith; so "the Holy Ghost," love; and "much assurance" (Col. 2:2, full persuasion), hope (Heb. 6:11), resting on faith (Heb. 10:22). So faith, love, and hope (vs. 3). as ye know—answering to the "knowing," i.e., as WE know (vs. 4) your character as the elect of God, so YE know ours as preachers. for your sake—The purpose herein indicated is not so much that of the apostles, as that of God. "You know what God enabled us to be . . . how mighty in preaching the word . . . for your sakes . . . thereby proving that He had chosen (vs. 4) you for His own" [ALFORD]. I think, from ch. 2:10-12, that, in "what manner of men we were among you," besides the power in preaching, there is included also Paul's and his fellow missionaries' whole conduct which confirmed their preaching; and in this sense, the "for your sake" will mean "in order to win you." This, though not the sole, yet would be a strong, motive to holy circumspection, viz., so as to win those without (Col. 4:5; cf. I Cor. 9:19-23). 6. And ye—answering to "For our Gospel," vs. 5. followers—Greek, "imitators." The Thessalonians in their turn became "ensamples" (vs. 7) for others to imitate. of the Lord—who was the apostle of the Father, and taught the word, which He brought from heaven, under adversities [BENGEL]. This was the point in which they imitated Him and His apos-

3. Your work of faith. This verse contains a very high character of the believers at Thessalonica. They had faith, not speculative and indolent, but true, sound, and operative; their faith worked. They had love, not that gazed at and became enamored of the perfections of God, but such a love as labored with faith to fulfill the whole will of God. Faith worked; but love, because it can do more, did more, and therefore labored—worked energetically, to promote the glory of God and the salvation of men. They had hope; not an idle, cold, heartless expectation of future good, from which they felt no excitement, and for which they could give no reason, but such a hope as produced a satisfying expectation of a future life and state of blessedness, the reality of which faith had descried, and love anticipated.

4. Knowing . . . your election of God. Being assured, from the doctrine which I have delivered to you, and which God has confirmed by various miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, that He has chosen and called the Gentiles to the same privileges to which He chose and called the Jews; and that, as they have rejected the offers of the gospel, God has now elected the Gentiles in their stead. This is the election which the Thessalonians knew; and of which the apostle treats at large in his Epistle to the Romans, and also in his Epistles to the Galatians and Ephesians. No irrespective, unconditional, eternal, and personal election to everlasting glory is meant by the apostle.

5. For our gospel. That is, the glad tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ and of your being elected to enjoy all the privileges to which the Jews were called, without being obliged to submit to circumcision or to fulfill the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Came not unto you in word only. It was not by simple teaching or mere reasoning that the doctrines which we preached recommended themselves to you. We did not insist on your using this or the other religious institution; we insisted on a change of heart and life, and we held out the energy which was able to effect it. And in the Holy Ghost. By His influence upon your hearts, in changing and renewing them; and by the testimony which you received from Him, that you were accepted through the Beloved, and become the adopted children of God. And in much assurance. The Holy Spirit who was given you left no doubt on your mind, with respect to either the general truth of the doctrine or the safety of your own state. What manner of men we were. How we preached, and how we lived, our doctrines and our practices ever corresponding. And for your sake we sustained difficulties, endured hardships, and were incessant in our labors.

6. Ye became followers of us. You became "imitators."

MATTHEW HENRY

The Thessalonians acted thus, notwithstanding their affliction. They were willing to share in the sufferings that attended the embracing of Christianity. Perhaps this made the word more precious, being dear-bought. With joy in the Holy Ghost, who, when our afflictions abound, makes our consolations much more to abound.

II. They were themselves examples to all about them, v. 7, 8.

1. Their example was very effectual to make good impressions upon many others. They were stamps, or instruments to make impression with. They had themselves received good impressions, and they made good impressions. Christians should be so good as by their example to influence others.

2. It was very extensive, and reached beyond the confines of Thessalonica, even to the believers of all Macedonia, and further in Achaia.

3. It was very famous. The word of the Lord was famous and well known, in the regions round about that city, and in every place; so that, from the good success of the gospel among them, many others were encouraged to entertain it, and to be willing, when called, to suffer for it. The readiness of their faith was famed abroad. These Thessalonians embraced the gospel as soon as it was preached to them. The effects of their faith were famous. They quitted their idolatry. They gave themselves up to God, to the living and true God.

They set themselves to wait for the Son of God from heaven, v. 10. And this is one of the peculiarities of our holy religion, to wait for Christ's second coming, as those who believe he will come and hope he will come to our joy.

tles, joyful witness for the word in much affliction: the second proof of their election of God (vs. 4); vs. 5 is the first (see Note, vs. 5). received the word in much affliction—(ch. 2:14; 3:2-5; Acts 17:5-10). joy of—i.e., wrought by "the Holy Ghost." "The oil of gladness" wherewith the Son of God was "anointed above His fellows" (Ps. 45:7), is the same oil with which He, by the Spirit, anoints His fellows too (Isa. 61:1, 3; Rom. 14:17; I John 2:20, 27). 7. ensamples—So some of the oldest MSS. read. Others, "ensample" (singular), the whole Church being regarded as one. The Macedonian Church of Philippi was the only one in Europe converted before the Thessalonians. Therefore he means their past conduct is an ensample to all believers now; of whom he specifies those "in Macedonia" because he had been there since the conversion of the Thessalonians, and had left Silvanus and Timotheus there; and those in "Achaia," because he was now at Corinth in Achaia. 8. from you sounded . . . the word of the Lord—not that they actually became missionaries: but they, by the report which spread abroad of their "faith" (cf. Rom. 1:8), and by Christian merchants of Thessalonica who travelled in various directions, bearing "the word of the Lord" with them, were virtually missionaries, recommending the Gospel to all within reach of their influence by word and by example (vs. 7). In "sounded," the image is that of a trumpet filling with its clear-sounding echo all the surrounding places. to Godward—no longer directed to idols. so that we need not to speak any thing—to them in praise of your faith; "for (vs. 9) they themselves" (the people in Macedonia, Achaia, and in every place) know it already. 9. Strictly there should follow, "For they themselves show of you . . ."; but, instead, he substitutes that which was the instrumental cause of the Thessalonians' conversion and faith, "for they themselves show of US what manner of entering in we had unto you"; cf. vs. 5, which corresponds to this former clause, as vs. 6 corresponds to the latter clause. "And how ye turned from idols to serve the living . . . God. . . ." Instead of our having "to speak any thing" to them (in Macedonia and Achaia) in your praise (vs. 8), "they themselves (have the start of us in speaking of you, and) announce concerning (so the Greek of 'show of' means) us, what manner of (how effectual an) entrance we had unto you" (vs. 5; ch. 2:1). the living and true God—as opposed to the dead and false gods from which they had "turned." In the English Version reading, Acts 17:4, "of the devout Greeks a great multitude," no mention is made, as here, of the conversion of idolatrous Gentiles at Thessalonica; but the reading of some of the oldest MSS. and Vulgate singularly coincides with the statement here: "Of the devout AND of Greeks (viz., idolaters) a great multitude"; so in vs. 17, "the devout persons," i.e., Gentile proselytes to Judaism, form a separate class. PALEY and LACHMANN, by distinct lines of argument, support the "AND." 10. This verse distinguishes them from the Jews, as vs. 9 from the idolatrous Gentiles. To wait for the Lord's coming is a sure characteristic of a true believer, and was prominent amidst the graces of the Thessalonians (I Cor. 1:7, 8). His coming is seldom called his return (John 14:3); because the two advents are regarded as different phases of the same coming; and the second coming shall have features altogether new connected with it, so that it will not be a mere repetition of the first, or a mere coming back again. his Son . . . raised from the dead—the grand proof of His divine Sonship (Rom. 1:4). delivered—rather as Greek, "who delivereth us." Christ has once for all redeemed us; He is our Deliverer ALWAYS. wrath to come—(ch. 5:9; Col. 3:6).

ADAM CLARKE

Having received the word in much affliction. That they received the doctrine of the gospel in the midst of much persecution we may learn from the history in general, and from Acts xvii. 5-6. With joy of the Holy Ghost. The consolations which they received in consequence of believing in Christ more than counterbalanced all the afflictions which they suffered from their persecutors.

7. Ye were ensamples. "Types," models, or patterns; according to which all the churches in Macedonia and Achaia formed both their creed and their conduct.

8. From you sounded out. As Thessalonica was very conveniently situated for traffic, many merchants from thence traded through Macedonia, Achaia, and different parts of Greece. By these, the fame of the Thessalonians having received the doctrine of the gospel was doubtless carried far and wide.

9. How ye turned to God from idols. This could not be spoken either of the Jews or of the devout persons, but of the heathen Greeks; and of such it appears that the majority of the church was formed. The true God—in opposition to the whole system of idolatry, which was false in the objects of its adoration, false in its pretensions, false in its promises, and false in all its prospects.

10. And to wait for his Son from heaven. To expect a future state of glory, and resurrection of the body, according to the gospel doctrine, after the example of Jesus Christ, who was raised from the dead and ascended unto heaven, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

Delivered us from the wrath to come. From all the punishment due to us for our sins, and from the destruction which is about to come on the unbelieving and impenitent Jews.

CHAPTER 2

He could appeal to the Thessalonians how faithfully he, and Silas, and Timotheus, had discharged their office: You yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you. His preaching was not in vain, or, as some read it, was not vain. It was not fruitless or in vain (according to our translation), or, as others think, it was not vain and empty. The subject-matter of the apostle's preaching was sound and solid truth. He had no worldly design in his preaching, which he puts them in mind to have been,

CHAPTER 2

VSS. 1-20. HIS MANNER OF PREACHING, AND THEIRS OF RECEIVING, THE GOSPEL; HIS DESIRE TO HAVE REVISITED THEM FRUSTRATED BY SATAN. 1. For—confirming ch. 1:9. He discusses the manner of his fellow missionaries' preaching among them (ch. 1:5, and former part of vs. 9) from vs. 1 to vs. 12; and the Thessalonians' reception of the word (cf. ch. 1:6, 7, and latter part of vs. 9) from vss. 13 to 16. yourselves—Not only do strangers report it, but you know it to be true [ALFORD] "yourselves." not in vain—Greek, "not vain," i.e., it was full of "power" (ch. 1:5). The Greek for "was," expresses rather "hath been and is," implying the permanent and continuing character of his preaching. 2. even after that we had suffered before—at Philippi (Acts 16): a circumstance which would have deterred mere natural, unspiritual men from further

CHAPTER 2

1. Our entrance in unto you. His first coming to preach the gospel was particularly owned of the Lord, many of them having been converted under his ministry.

MATTHEW HENRY

I. With courage and resolution: We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God, v. 2. The apostle was inspired with a holy boldness, nor was he discouraged at the afflictions he met with. He had met with ill usage at Philippi, as these Thessalonians well know. There it was that he and Silas were put in the stocks; yet no sooner were they set at liberty than they went to Thessalonica, and preached the gospel with as much boldness as ever. Suffering in a good cause should rather sharpen than blunt the edge of holy resolution. Those who preached it preached it with contention, which denoted either the apostles' striving in their preaching or their striving against the opposition they met with. Paul was neither daunted in his work, nor driven from it.

II. With great simplicity and godly sincerity: Our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile, v. 3. This, no doubt, was matter of the greatest comfort to the apostle—the consciousness of his own incerity; and was one reason of his success. The gospel he preached was without deceit, it was true and faithful. Nor was it of uncleanness. His gospel was pure and holy, and, as the matter of the apostle's exhortation was thus true and pure, the manner of his speaking was without guile. The apostle not only asserts his sincerity, but subjoins the reasons and evidences thereof.

1. They were stewards, put in trust with the gospel. The gospel which Paul preached was not his own, but the gospel of God. Ministers have a great favour shown them, and honour put upon them, and trust committed to them.

2. Their design was to please God and not men. If sincerity be wanting, all that we do cannot please God. The gospel of Christ is not accommodated to the vain fancies and lusts of men, but, on the contrary, it was designed for the mortifying of their corrupt affections, that they might be brought under the power of faith.

3. They acted as in the sight of him who tries our hearts. He is well acquainted with all our aims and designs, as well as our actions. And it is from this God who trieth our hearts that we must receive our reward. The evidences of the apostles' sincerity: (1) He avoided flattery: Neither at any time used we flattering words, as you know, v. 5. He and his fellow-labourers preached Christ and him crucified, and did not aim to gain an interest in men's affections for themselves, nor did he flatter men in their sins. He did not flatter them with vain hopes. (2) He avoided covetousness. He did not make the ministry a cloak, or a covering, for covetousness, as God was witness, v. 5. His design was not to enrich himself by preaching the gospel: so far from this, he did not stipulate with them for bread. (3) He avoided ambition and vain-glory: Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you nor yet of others, v. 6. They expected neither people's purses nor their caps.

I. He mentions the gentleness of their behaviour: We were gentle among you, v. 7. He showed the kindness and care of a nurse that cherishes her children. This is the way to win people, rather than to rule with rigour.

As a nursing mother bears with frowardness in a child, and condescends to mean offices for its good, cherishing it in her bosom, so in like manner should the ministers of Christ behave towards their people. This gentleness the apostle expressed several ways. 1. By the most affectionate desire of their welfare: Being affectionately desirous of you, v. 8. It was their spiritual and eternal welfare that he was earnestly desirous of. 2. By great readiness to do them good, willingly imparting to them, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, v. 8. He was willing to spend and be spent in the service of men's souls.
