1. More generally, v. 8. The being and abounding of all Christian graces in us will make us neither inactive nor unfruitful, it will make us very zealous and lively, and eminently fruitful in the works of righteousness. These will bring much glory to God, by bringing forth much fruit among men, being fruitful in knowledge, or the acknowledging of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is the necessary consequence of adding one grace to another; for, where all Christian graces are in the heart, they improve and strengthen one another. Wherever grace abounds there will be an abounding in good works. How desirable it is to be in such a case the apostle evidences, v. 9. He who has not the forementioned graces is blind, that is, as to spiritual and heavenly things. He cannot see far off. This present evil world he can see, and dotes upon, but has no discerning at all of the world to come. How wretched is their condition who are thus blind as to the awfully great things of the other world. But this is not all the misery of those who do not add to their faith virtue, knowledge, &c. They are as unable to look backward as forward, their memories are slippery and unable to retain what is past. Often call to mind, and seriously meditate on, your solemn engagement to be the Lord's, to lay aside all filthiness of flesh and spirit.

2. Two particular advantages: stability in grace, and a triumphant entrance into glory. Giving diligence to make our calling and election sure. It requires a great deal of diligence and labour to make sure our calling and election; there must be a very close examination of ourselves.

"But, how great soever the labour is, do not think much of it, for great is the advantage you gain by it. By this you will be kept from falling." When many fall into errors, they shall be preserved sound in the faith, and stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Those who are growing in grace, and abounding in the work of the Lord, shall have an abundant entrance into the joy of their Lord, and they shall reign with him for ever and ever.

Verses 12–15

I. Peter will not be negligent, but will be exemplarily diligent, and that in the work of a remembrancer. We need to be put in mind of what we already know to prevent our forgetting it, and to improve our knowledge, and reduce all to practice. We must be established in the belief of the truth, that we may not be shaken by every wind of doctrine, and especially in that which is the present truth, the truth more peculiarly necessary for us to know in our day. If the people need teaching and exhortation while they are in the body, it is very meet and just that ministers should, as long as they are in this tabernacle, instruct and exhort them, and bring those truths to their remembrance that they have formerly heard.

ness; he who has brotherly kindness will feel godliness needful; the godly will mix nothing stoical with his patience; to the patient, temperance is easy; the temperate weighs things well, and so has knowledge; knowledge guards against sudden impulse carrying away its virtue [BENGEL]. 8. be—Greek, "subsist" i.e., supposing these things to have an actual subsistence in you; "be" would express the mere matter-of-fact being (Acts 16:20). abound—more than in others; so the Greek. make—"render," "constitute you," habitually, by the very fact of possessing these graces. barren—"inactive," and, as a field lying fallow and unworked (Greek), so barren and useless. unfruitful in—rather, ". . . . in respect to," "The full knowledge (Greek) of Christ" is the goal towards which all these graces tend. As their subsisting in us constitutes us not barren or idle, so their abounding in us constitutes us not unfruitful in respect to it. It is through doing His will, and so becoming like Him, that we grow in knowing Him (John 7:17). 9. But—Greek, "For." Confirming the need of these graces (vss. 5-8) by the fatal consequences of the want of them. he that lacketh—Greek, "he to whom these are not present." blind—as to the spiritual realities of the unseen world. and cannot see afar off—explanatory of "blind." He closes his eyes (Greek) as unable to see distant objects (viz., heavenly things), and fixes his gaze on present and earthly things which alone he can see. Perhaps a degree of wilfulness in the blindness is implied in the Greek, "closing the eyes," which constitutes its culpability; hating and rebelling against the light shining around him. forgotten—Greek, "contracted forgetfulness," wilful and culpable obliviousness. that he was purged—The continually present sense of one's sins having been once for all forgiven, is the strongest stimulus to every grace (Ps. 130:4). 10. Wherefore—seeking the blessed consequence of having, and the evil effects of not having, these graces (vss. 8, 9). the rather—the more earnestly. brethren—marking that it is affection for them which constrains him so earnestly to urge them. Nowhere else does he so address them, which makes his calling them so here the more emphatical. give diligence—The Greek aorist implies one lifelong effect [ALFORD]. to make—Greek middle voice; to make so far as it depends on you; to do your part towards making. "To make" absolutely and finally is God's part, and would be in the active. your calling and election sure—by "ministering additionally in your faith virtue, and in your virtue knowledge . . ." God must work all these graces in us, yet not so that we should be mere machines, but willing instruments in His hands in making His election of us "secure." The ensuring of our election is spoken of not in respect to God, whose counsel is steadfast and everlasting, but in respect to our part. There is no uncertainty on His part, but on ours the only security is our faith in His promise and the fruits of the Spirit (vss. 5-7, 11).

fall—Greek, "stumble" and fall finally (Rom. 11:11). Metaphor from one stumbling in a race (I Cor. 9:24). 11. an entrance—rather as Greek, "the entrance" which ye look for. ministered—the same verb as in vs. 5. Minister in your faith virtue and the other graces, so shall there be ministered to you the entrance into that heaven where these graces shine most brightly. The reward of grace hereafter shall correspond to the work of grace here. abundantly—Greek, "richly." It answers to "abound," vs. 8. If these graces abound in you, you shall have your entrance into heaven not merely "scarcely" (as he had said, I Pet. 4:18), nor "so as by fire," like one escaping with life after having lost all his goods, but in triumph without "stumbling and falling." 12. Wherefore—as these graces are so necessary to your abundant entrance into Christ's kingdom (vss. 10, 11). I will not be negligent—The oldest MSS. read, "I will be about always to put you in remembrance" (an accumulated future: I will regard you as always needing to be reminded): cf. "I will endeavor," vs. 15. "I will be sure always to remind you" [ALFORD]. "Always"; implying the reason why he writes the second Epistle so soon after the first. He feels there is likely to be more and more need of admonition on account of the increasing corruption (ch. 2:1, 2). in the present truth—the Gospel truth now present with you: formerly promised to Old Testament believers as about to be, now in the New Testament actually present with, and in, believers, so that they are "established" in it as a "present" reality. Its importance renders frequent monitions never superfluous: cf. Paul's similar apology, Romans 15:14, 15. 13. Yea—Greek, "But"; though "you know" the truth (vs. 12). this tabernacle—soon to be taken down (II Cor. 5:1): I therein their own apprehension none is so truly orthodox or religious as themselves.

8. For if these things be in you, and abound. If you possess all these graces, and they increase and abound in your souls, they will make, show, you to be neither "idle" nor unfruitful, "in the acknowledgment of our Lord Jesus Christ." The common translation is here very unhappy. Barren and unfruitful certainly convey the same ideas; but "idle" or "inactive," which is the proper sense, takes away this tautology and restores the sense. The graces already mentioned by the apostle are in themselves active principles; he who was possessed of them, and had them abounding in him, could not be "inactive"; and he who is not inactive in the way of life must be fruitful.

9. But he that lacketh these things. He, whether Jew or Gentile, who professes to have faith in God, and has not added to that faith "fortitude, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, bortherly kindness, and universal love," is blind—his understanding is darkened; and cannot see afar off, "shutting his eyes against the light, winking," not able to look truth in the face, nor to behold that God whom he once knew was reconciled to him: and thus it appears he is willfully blind; and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins—has at last, through his non-improvement of the grace which he received from God, lost the evidence of things not seen.

10. Wherefore. Seeing the danger of apostasy and the fearful end of them who obey not the gospel, give all diligence, "hasten," be deeply careful, labor with the most intense purpose of soul. To make your calling. From deep Gentile darkness into the marvellous light of the gospel. And election. Your being chosen, in consequence of obeying the heavenly calling, to be the people and Church of God. Sure. "Firm, solid." For your calling to believe the gospel, and your election to be members of the Church of Christ, will be ultimately unprofitable to you unless you hold fast what you have received by adding to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance. For if ye do these things—if you are careful and diligent to work out your own salvation, through the grace which you have already received from God. Ye shall never fall—"You shall at no time stumble or fall"; as the Jews have done, and lost their election, Rom. xi. 11, where the same word is used. We find, therefore, that they who do not these things shall fall; and thus we see that there is nothing absolute and unconditional in their election.

11. For so an entrance shall be ministered. If you give diligence, and do not fall, an abundant, free, honorable, and triumphant entrance shall be ministered unto you . . . into the everlasting kingdom. There seems to be here an allusion to the triumphs granted by the Romans to their generals who had distinguished themselves by putting an end to a war or doing some signal military service to the state. "You shall have a triumph, in consequence of having conquered your foes, and led captivity captive."

12. Wherefore I will not be negligent. He had already written one Epistle; this is the second.

13. As long as I am in this tabernacle. By tabernacle we are to understand his body.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The apostle tells us (v. 14) what makes him earnest in this matter. The body is but the tabernacle of the soul. This tabernacle must be put off. We are not to continue long in this earthly house. The nearness of death makes the apostle diligent in the business of life.

He must soon be removed from those to whom he wrote; and his ambition being that they should remember the doctrine he had delivered to them, after he himself was taken away from them, he commits his exhortation to writing.

Verses 16–18

These things are not idle tales, or a vain thing, but of undoubted truth and vast concern. The gospel is not a cunningly devised fable. The apostle's preaching was a making of these things known. 1. The preaching of the gospel is a making known the power of Christ. 2. The coming of Christ also is made known by the preaching of the gospel. This coming of Christ the gospel is very plain and circumstantial in setting forth; but there is a second coming, which it likewise mentions. He will come to judge the world in righteousness by the everlasting gospel. During our blessed Saviour's abode here on earth he sometimes manifested himself to be God, and particularly to our apostle and the two sons of Zebedee, who were eye-witnesses of his divine majesty, when he was transfigured before them. Besides the visible glory there was an audible voice from heaven. What a gracious declaration was made: This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased—the best voice that ever came from heaven to earth; God is well pleased with Christ. He received honour and glory from God the Father. This is the person whom God delights to honour. This voice is from heaven, called here the excellent glory. This voice was heard, and that so as to be understood, by Peter, James, and John. They not only heard a sound, but they understood the sense. God opens the ears and understandings of his people to receive what they are concerned to know. Blessed are those who not only hear, but understand, who believe the truth, and feel the power of the voice from heaven.

In these words the apostle lays down another argument to prove the truth and reality of the gospel. For this is foretold by the prophets of the Old Testament, who spoke and wrote according to the direction of the Spirit of God.

I. The description that is given of the scriptures of the Old Testament: they are called a more sure word of prophecy. It is a prophetical declaration of the power and coming of our Saviour. But the New Testament is a history of that whereof the Old Testament is a prophecy. Read the Old Testament as a prophecy of Christ, and with diligence and thankfulness use the New as the best exposition of the Old. How firm and sure should our faith be, who have such a firm and sure word to rest upon! All the fore need to make the most of my short time for the good of Christ's Church. The zeal of Satan against it, the more intense as his time is short, ought to stimulate Christians on the same ground. by—Greek, "in" (cf. ch. 3:1). 14. shortly I must put off—Greek, "the putting off (as a garment) of my tabernacle is speedy": implying a soon approaching, and also a sudden death (as a violent death is). Christ's words, John 21:18, 19, "When thou art old . . .," were the ground of his "knowing," now that he was old, that his foretold martyrdom was near. Cf. as to Paul, II Timothy 4:6. Though a violent death, he calls it a "departure" (Greek for "decease," vs. 15), cf. Acts 7:60. 15. endeavour—"use my diligence": the same Greek word as in vs. 10: this is the field in which my diligence has scope. Peter thus fulfils Christ's charge, "Feed My sheep." decease—"departure." The very word (exodus) used in the Transfiguration, Moses and Elias conversing about Christ's decease (found nowhere else in the New Testament, but Heb. 11:22, "the departing of Israel" out of Egypt, to which the saints' deliverance from the present bondage of corruption answers). "Tabernacle" is another term found here as well as there (Luke 9:31, 33): an undesigned coincidence confirming Peter's authorship of this Epistle. that ye may be able—by the help of this written Epistle; and perhaps also of Mark's Gospel, which Peter superintended. always—Greek, "on each occasion": as often as occasion may require. to have . . . in remembrance—Greek, "to exercise remembrance of." Not merely "to remember," as sometimes we do, things we care not about; but "have them in (earnest) remembrance," as momentous and precious truths. 16. For—reason why he is so earnest that the remembrance of these things should be continued after his death. followed—out in detail. cunningly devised—Greek, "devised by (man's) wisdom"; as distinguished from what the Holy Ghost teaches (cf. I Cor. 3:13). But cf. also ch. 2:3, "feigned words." fables—as the heathen mythologies, and the subsequent Gnostic "fables and genealogies," of which the germs already existed in the junction of Judaism with Oriental philosophy in Asia Minor. A precautionary protest of the Spirit against the rationalistic theory of the Gospel history being myth. when we made known unto you—not that Peter himself had personally taught the churches in Pontus, Galatia, etc., but he was one of the apostles whose testimony was borne to them, and to the Church in general, to whom this Epistle is addressed (ch. 1:1, including, but not restricted, as I Peter, to the churches in Pontus, etc.). power—the opposite of "fables"; cf. the contrast of "word" and "power," I Corinthians 4:20. A specimen of His power was given at the Transfiguration also of His "coming" again, and its attendant glory. The Greek for "coming" is always used of His second advent. A refutation of the scoffers (ch. 3:4): I, James and John, saw with our own eyes a mysterious sample of His coming glory. were—Greek, "were made." eyewitnesses—As initiated spectators of mysteries (so the Greek), we were admitted into His innermost secrets, viz., at the Transfiguration. his—emphatical (cf. Greek): "THAT great ONE'S majesty." 17. received . . . honour—in the voice that spake to Him. glory—in the light which shone around Him. came Greek, "was borne": the same phrase occurs only in I Peter 1:13; one of several instances showing that the argument against the authenticity of this Second Epistle, from its dissimilarity of style as compared with I Peter, is not well founded. such a voice—as he proceeds to describe. from the excellent glory—rather as Greek, "by (i.e. uttered by) the magnificent glory" (i.e., by God: as His glorious manifested presence is often called by the Hebrews "the Glory," cf. "His Excellency," Deut. 33:26; Ps. 21:5). in whom—Greek, "in regard to whom" (accusative); but Matthew 17:5, "in whom" (dative) centers and rests My good pleasure. Peter also omits, as not required by his purpose, "hear Him," showing his independence in his inspired testimony. I am—Greek aorist, past time, "My good pleasure rested from eternity. 18. which came—rather as Greek, "we heard borne from heaven." holy mount—as the Transfiguration mount came to be regarded, on account of the manifestation of Christ's divine glory there. we—emphatical: we, James and John, as well as myself. We—all believers. a more sure—rather as Greek, "we have the word of prophecy more sure" (confirmed). Previously we knew its sureness by faith, but, through that visible specimen of its hereafter entire fulfilment, assurance is made doubly sure. Prophecy assures us that Christ's sufferings, now past, are to be followed by Christ's glory, still future: the Transfiguration gives us a pledge to make our faith still stronger, that "the

ADAM CLARKE

14. Knowing that shortly I must put off. Peter plainly refers to the conversation between our Lord and himself related in John xxi. 18-19. And it is likely that he had now a particular intimation that he was shortly to seal the truth with his blood. But as our Lord told him that his death would take place when he should be old, being aged now he might on this ground fairly suppose that his departure was at hand.

15. Moreover, I will endeavour. And is not this endeavor seen in these two Epistles? By leaving these among them, even after his decease they had these things always in remembrance. After my decease. "After my going out," i.e., of his tabernacle.

16. Cunningly devised fables. I think from the apostle's using eyewitnesses, or rather "beholders," in the end of the verse, it is probable that he means those cunningly devised fables among the heathens, concerning the appearance of their gods on earth in human form. And to gain the greater credit to these fables, the priests and statesmen instituted what they called the "mysteries" of the gods, in which the fabulous appearance of the gods was represented in mystic shows. But one particular show none but the fully initiated were permitted to behold; hence they were entitled "beholders." This show was probably some resplendent image of the god, imitating life, which, by its glory, dazzled the eyes of the beholders, while their ears were ravished by hymns sung in its praise; to this it was natural enough for Peter to allude when speaking about the transfiguration of Christ. Here the indescribably resplendent majesty of the great God was manifested, as far as it could be, in conjunction with that human body in which the fullness of the Divinity dwelt. "And we," says the apostle, "were beholders of His own majesty." Here was no trick, no feigned show; we saw Him in His glory whom thousands saw before and afterwards; and we have made known to you the power and coming, the appearance and presence, of our Lord Jesus; and we call you to feel the exceeding greatness of this power in your conversion, and the glory of this appearance in His revelation by the power of His Spirit to your souls. These things we have witnessed, and these things you have experienced; and therefore we can confidently say that neither you nor we have followed cunningly devised fables, but that blessed gospel which is the power of God to the salvation of everyone that believes.

17. For he received . . . honour and glory. In His transfiguration our Lord received from the Father honour in the voice or declaration which said, "This is My Son, the beloved One, in whom I have delighted." And He received glory when, penetrated with and involved in that excellent glory, "the fashion of his countenance was altered," for His face did shine as the sun, "and his raiment was white and glistering," exceeding white like snow.

18. And this voice . . . we heard. That is, himself, James, and John heard it, and saw this glory; for these only were the "beholders" on the holy mount. It is worthy of remark that our blessed Lord, who came to give a new law to mankind, appeared on this holy mount with splendor and great glory, as God did when He came on the holy mount, Sinai, to give the old law to Moses. And when the voice came from the excellent glory, "This is My Son, the beloved One, in whom I have delighted; hear Him," the authority of the old law was taken away.

19. We have also a more sure word of prophecy. "We have the prophetic doctrine more firm or more confirmed"; for in this sense the word is used in several places in the New Testament. See 1 Cor. i. 6: "Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in [among] you"; 2 Cor. i. 21; Col. ii. 7; Heb. ii. 3; vi. 16. This is the literal sense of the passage in question, and this sense removes that ambiguity from the text prophecies of the Old Testament are more sure and certain to us who have the history of the accomplishment of them.

II. The encouragement the apostle gives us to search the scriptures. We do well if we take heed to them; apply our minds to understand the sense, and our hearts to believe the truth, of this sure word. If we thus apply ourselves to the word of God, we certainly do well in all respects, what is pleasing to God and profitable to ourselves. They must use the scripture as a light which God hath sent into the world, to dispel that darkness which is upon the face of the whole earth. They must acknowledge their own darkness. Every man in the world is naturally without that knowledge which is necessary in order to attain eternal life. If ever men are made wise to salvation, it is by the shining of the word of God into their hearts. Natural notions of God are not sufficient for fallen man. When the light of the scripture is darted into the dark understanding by the Holy Spirit of God, then the spiritual day dawns and the day-star arises in that soul. This enlightening of a dark benighted mind is like the day-break that spreads and diffuses itself through the whole soul, till it makes perfect day. It is a growing knowledge. All who do truth come to this light, while evil-doers keep at a distance from it.

III. The apostle lays down one thing as previously necessary, and that is the knowing that all prophecy is of divine origin. No scripture prophecy is of private interpretation, but the revelation of the mind of God. This was the difference between the prophets of the Lord and the false prophets. The prophets of the Lord did not speak nor do anything of their own mind. The prophets and penmen of the scripture spoke and wrote what was the mind of God. Every private man ought to search it, and come to understand the sense and meaning thereof. This important truth of the divine origin of the scriptures is to be known and owned by all who will give heed to the sure word of prophecy. As a man not barely believes, but knows assuredly that that very person is his particular friend in whom he sees all the distinguishing marks and characters of his friend, so the Christian knows that book to be the word of God in which he sees all the proper marks and characters of a divinely inspired book. The divinity of the scriptures must be known and acknowledged in the first place, before men can give good heed to them.

IV. The apostle (v. 21) tells us how the Old Testament came to be compiled. 1. They were holy men of God who were employed about that book which we receive as the word of God. All the penmen of the scriptures were holy men of God. 2. These holy men were moved by the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is the supreme agent, the holy men are but instruments. The Holy Ghost inspired and dictated to them what they were to deliver of the mind of God. He effectually engaged them to speak (and write) what he had put into their mouths. Mix faith therefore with what you find in the scriptures; esteem and reverence your Bible as a book written by holy men, inspired, influenced, and assisted by the Holy Ghost.

day" of His glory will "dawn" ere long. He does not mean to say that "the word of prophecy," or Scripture, is surer than the voice of God heard at the Transfiguration, as English Version; for this is plainly not the fact. The fulfilment of prophecy so far in Christ's history makes us the surer of what is yet to be fulfilled, His consummated glory.

whereunto—to which word of prophecy, primarily the Old Testament in Peter's day; but now also in our day the New Testament, which, though brighter than the Old Testament (cf. I John 2:8, end), is but a lamp even still as compared with the brightness of the eternal day (cf. ch. 3:2). Oral teachings and traditions of ministers are to be tested by the written word (Acts 17:11). dark—The Greek implies squalid, having neither water nor light: such spiritually is the world without, and the smaller world (microcosm) within, the heart in its natural state. Cf. the "dry places" Luke 11:24 (viz., unwatered by the Spirit), through which the unclean spirit goeth. dawn—bursting through the darkness. day star—Greek, the morning star," as Revelation 22:16. The Lord Jesus. in your hearts—Christ's arising in the heart by His Spirit giving full assurance, creates spiritually full day in the heart, the means to which is prayerfully giving heed to the word. This is associated with the coming of the day of the Lord, as being the earnest of it. 20. "Forasmuch as ye know this" (I Pet. 1:18). first—the foremost consideration in studying the word of prophecy. Laying it down as a first principle never to be lost sight of. is—Greek, not the simple verb, to be, but to begin to be, "proves to be," "becometh." No prophecy is found to be the result of "private (the mere individual writer's uninspired) interpretation" (solution), and so origination. The Greek noun epilusis, does not mean in itself origination; but that which the sacred writer could not always fully interpret, though being the speaker or writer (as I Pet. 1:10-12 implies), was plainly not of his own, but of God's disclosure, origination, and inspiration, as Peter proceeds to add, "But holy men . . . spake (and afterwards wrote) . . . moved by the Holy Ghost": a reason why ye should "give" all "heed" to it. The parallelism to vs. 16 shows that "private interpretation," contrasted with "moved by the Holy Ghost," here answers to "fables devised by (human) wisdom," contrasted with "we were eyewitnesses of His majesty," as attested by the "voice from God." The words of the prophetical (and so of all) Scripture writers were not mere words of the individuals, and therefore to be interpreted by them, but of "the Holy Ghost" by whom they were "moved." "Private" is explained, vs. 21, "by the will of man" (viz., the individual writer). In a secondary sense the text teaches also, as the word is the Holy Spirit's, it cannot be interpreted by its readers (any more than by its writers by their mere private human powers, but by the teaching of the Holy Ghost (John 16:14). "He who is the author of Scripture is its supreme interpreter" [GERHARD]. ALFORD translates, "springs not out of human interpretation," i.e., is not a prognostication made by a man knowing what he means when he utters it, but . . . (John 11:49-52). Rightly: except that the verb is rather, doth become, or prove to be. It not being of private interpretation, you must "give heed" to it, looking for the Spirit's illumination "in your hearts" (cf. Notes, vs. 19). 21. came not in old time—rather, "was never at any time borne" (to us). by the will of man—alone. Jeremiah 23:26, "prophets of the deceit of their own heart." Cf. ch. 3:5, "willingly." holy—One oldest MS. has, "men FROM God": the emissaries from God. "Holy," if read, will mean because they had the Holy Spirit. moved—Greek, "borne" (along) as by a mighty wind: Acts 2:2, "rushing (the same Greek) wind": rapt out of themselves: still not in fanatical excitement (I Cor. 14:32). The Hebrew nabi, "prophet," meant an announcer or interpreter of God: he, as God's spokesman, interpreted not his own "private" will or thought, but God's "Man of the Spirit" (Margin, Hos. 9:7). "Thou testifiedst by Thy Spirit in Thy prophets." "Seer," on the other hand, refers to the mode of receiving the communications from God, rather than to the utterance of them to others. "Spake" implies that, both in its original oral announcement, and now even when in writing, it has been always, and is, the living voice of God speaking to us through His inspired servants. Greek, "borne (along)" forms a beautiful antithesis to "was borne." They were passive, rather than active instruments. The Old Testament prophets primarily, but including also all the inspired penmen, whether of the New or Old Testament (ch. 3:2).

which has given rise to so many different interpretations. Taken according to the common translation, it seems to say that prophecy is a surer evidence of divine revelation than miracles; and so it has been understood. The meaning of the apostle appears to be this: The voice from heaven and the miraculous transfiguration of His person have confirmed the prophetic doctrine concerning Him.

And to this doctrine, thus confirmed, you do well to take heed; for it is that light that shines in the dark place, in the Gentile world, as well as among the Jews; and this you must continue to do till the day of His second, last, and most glorious appearing to judge the world comes; and the day star—phosphoros, "this light-bringer"—arise in your hearts—manifest himself to your eternal consolation. The word phosphoros generally signified the planet Venus, when she is the morning star; and thus she is called in most European nations.

20. Knowing this first. Considering this as a first principle, that no prophecy of the scripture, whether that referred to above or any other, is of any private interpretation—proceeds from the prophet's own knowledge or invention. The word signifies also "impetus, impulse"; and probably this is the best sense here: not by the mere private impulse of his own mind.

21. For the prophecy came not in old time. That is, in any former time, by the will of man, by a man's own searching, conjecture, or calculation; but holy men of God, persons separated from the world and devoted to God's service, spake . . . moved by the Holy Ghost. So far were they from inventing these prophetic declarations concerning Christ or any future event that they were "carried away," out of themselves and out of the whole region, as it were, of human knowledge and conjecture, by the Holy Ghost, who, without their knowing anything of the matter, dictated to them what to speak and what to write.

CHAPTER 2

Verses 1–3

I. In all ages of the church the devil sends some to deceive, false prophets in the Old Testament, and seducing teachers in the New.

Their business is to bring in destructive errors, even damnable heresies. Those who introduce destructive heresies deny the Lord that bought them.

Those who bring in errors destructive to others bring swift (and therefore sure) destruction upon themselves. Self destroyers are soon destroyed.

II. The consequence with respect to others. Corrupt leaders seldom fail of many to follow them. Men drink in iniquity like water, and are pleased to live in error. The spreading of error will bring up an evil report on the way of truth; the way of salvation by Jesus Christ.

III. The method seducers take to draw disciples after them: they use feigned words; they flatter, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple. All this is through covetousness, with design to get more wealth, or credit, or commendation, by increasing the number of their followers.

Verses 3–6

How successful and prosperous soever false teachers may be, yet their judgment lingereth not. Such unbelievers are condemned already. Examples of the righteous judgment of God.

I. The angels who sinned. No excellency will exempt a sinner from punishment. God did not spare them. By how much the more excellent the offender, by so much the more severe the punishment. Sin debases and degrades the persons who commit it. The angels of heaven are divested of all their glory upon their disobedience. Sin is the work of darkness, and darkness is the wages of sin. Those who will not walk according to the light and direction of God's law shall be deprived of the light of God's countenance.

II. He spared not the old world. If the sin be universal, the punishment shall likewise extend to all.

Vss. 1-22. FALSE TEACHERS TO ARISE: THEIR BAD PRACTICES AND SURE DESTRUCTION, FROM WHICH THE GODLY SHALL BE DELIVERED, AS LOT WAS. 1. But—in contrast to the prophets "moved by the Holy Ghost" (ch. 1:21). also—as well as the true prophets (ch. 1:19-21). Paul had already testified the entrance of false prophets into the same churches. among the people—Israel: he is writing to believing Israelites primarily (Note, I Pet. 1:1). Such a "false prophet" was Balaam (vs. 15). there shall be—Already symptoms of the evil were appearing (vss. 9-22; Jude 4-13). false teachers—teachers of falsehood. In contrast to the true teachers, whom he exhorts his readers to give heed to (ch. 3:2). who—such as (lit., "the which") shall. privily—not at first openly and directly, but by the way, bringing in error by the side of the true doctrine (so the Greek): Rome objects, Protestants cannot point out the exact date of the beginnings of the false doctrines superadded to the original truth; we answer, Peter foretells us it would be so, that the first introduction of them would be stealthy and unobserved (Jude 4). damnable—lit., "of destruction"; entailing destruction (Phil. 3:19) on all who follow them. heresies—selfchosen doctrines, not emanating from God (cf. "will worship," Col. 2:23). even—going even to such a length as to deny both in teaching and practice. Peter knew, by bitter repentance, what a fearful thing it is to deny the Lord (Luke 22:61, 62). denying—Him whom, above all others, they ought to confess. Lord—"Master and Owner" (Greek), cf. Jude 4, Greek. Whom the true doctrine teaches to be their OWNER by right of purchase. Lit., "denying Him who bought them (that He should be thereby), their Master." bought them—Even the ungodly were bought by His "precious blood." It shall be their bitterest self-reproach in hell, that, as far as Christ's redemption was concerned, they might have been saved. The denial of His propitiatory sacrifice is included in the meaning (cf. I John 4:3). bring upon themselves—cf. "God bringing in the flood upon the world," vs. 5. Man brings upon himself the vengeance which God brings upon him. swift—swiftly descending: as the Lord's coming shall be swift and sudden. As the ground swallowed up Korah and Dathan, and "they went down quick into the pit." Cf. Jude 11, which is akin to this passage. 2. follow—out: so the Greek. pernicious ways—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "licentiousness" (Jude 4). False doctrine and immoral practice generally go together (vss. 18, 19). by reason of whom—"on account of whom," viz., the followers of the false teachers. the way of truth shall be evil spoken of—"blasphemed" by those without, who shall lay on Christianity itself the blame of its professors' evil practice. Contrast I Peter 2:12. 3. through . . .—Greek, "IN covetousness" as their element (vs. 14, end). Contrast II Corinthians 11:20; 12:17. of a long time—in God's eternal purpose. "Before of old ordained to condemnation" (Jude 4). lingereth not—though sinners think it lingers; "is not idle." damnation—Greek, "destruction" (Note, vs. 1). Personified. slumbereth not—though sinners slumber. 4. if—The apodosis or consequent member of the sentence is not expressed, but is virtually contained in vs. 9. If God in past time has punished the ungodly and saved His people, He will be sure to do so also in our days (cf. end of vs. 3). angels—the highest of intelligent creatures (cf. with this verse, Jude 6), yet not spared when they sinned. hell—Greek, "Tartarus": nowhere else in New Testament or LXX: equivalent to the usual Greek, Gehenna. Not inconsistent with I Peter 5:8; for though their final doom is hell, yet for a time they are permitted to roam beyond it in "the darkness of this world." Slaves of Tartarus (called "the abyss," or "deep," Luke 8: 31; "the bottomless pit," Revelation 9:11) may also come upon earth. Step by step they are given to Tartarus, until at last they shall be wholly bound to it. delivered—as the judge delivers the condemned prisoner to the officers (Rev. 20:2). into chains—(Jude 6). The oldest MSS. read, "dens," as ALFORD translates: the Greek, however, may, in Hellenistic Greek, mean "chains," as Jude expresses it. They are "reserved" unto hell's "mist of darkness" as their final "judgment" or doom, and meanwhile their exclusion from the light of heaven is begun. So the ungodly were considered as virtually "in prison," though at large on the earth, from the moment that God's sentence went forth, though not executed till 120 years after. 5. eighth—i.e., Noah, and seven others. Contrasted with the densely peopled "world of the ungodly."

1. But there were false prophets. There were not only holy men of God among the Jews, who prophesied by divine inspiration, but there were also false prophets, whose prophecies were from their own imagination, and perverted many. As there shall be false teachers among you. At a very early period of the Christian Church many heresies sprang up. Damnable heresies. "Heresies of destruction"; such as, if followed, would lead a man to perdition. And these they will "bring in privately"—cunningly, without making much noise, and as covertly as possible. It would be better to translate "destructive heresies" than damnable.

2. Many shall follow. "Will follow," because determined to gratify their sinful propensities. Pernicious ways. "Their destructions"; i.e., the "heresies of destruction," or "destructive opinions," mentioned above. But instead of "destructions," "lasciviousnesses or uncleannesses" is the reading of upwards of sixty MSS., most of which are among the most ancient, correct, and authentic. The word "lasciviousnesses" is undoubtedly the true reading, and this points out what the nature of the heresies was. It was a sort of antinomianism; they pampered and indulged the lusts of the flesh. By reason of whom. These were persons who professed Christianity; and because they were called Christians, and followed such abominable practices, the way of truth, the Christian religion, was "blasphemed." Had they called themselves by any name but that of Christ, His religion would not have suffered.

3. And through covetousness, that they might get money to spend upon their lusts, with feigned words, with "counterfeit tales, false narrations" of pretended facts, "lying miracles, fabulous legends." Whose judgment now of a long time. From the beginning God has condemned sin and inflicted suitable punishments on transgressors; and has promised in His Word, from the earliest ages, to pour out His indignation on the wicked. The punishment, therefore, so long ago predicted shall fall on these impure and incorrigible sinners; and the "condemnation" which is denounced against them slumbereth not—it is alert; it is on its way; it is hurrying on, and must soon overtake them.

4. For if God spared not the angels. The angels were originally placed in a state of probation, some having fallen and some having stood proves this. How long that probation was to last to them, and what was the particular test of their fidelity, we know not; nor indeed do we know what was their sin, nor when nor how they fell. Jude says, They "kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation"; which seems to indicate that they got discontented with their lot and aspired to higher honors, or perhaps to celestial domination. But cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness. "But with chains of darkness confining them in Tartarus, delivered them over to be kept to judgment"; or, "Sinking them into Tartarus, delivered them over into custody for punishment, to chains of darkness." Chains of darkness is a highly poetic expression. Darkness binds them on all hands; and so dense and strong is this darkness that it cannot be broken through; they cannot deliver themselves nor be delivered by others. As the word "Tartarus" is found nowhere else in the New Testament, nor does it appear in the Septuagint, we must have recourse to the Greek writers for its meaning. The ancient Greeks appear to have received, by tradition, an account of the punishment of the "fallen angels," and of bad men after death; and their poets did, in conformity I presume with that account, make Tartarus the place where the giants who rebelled against Jupiter, and the souls of the wicked, were confined.

5. Spared not the old world. The apostle's argument is this: If God spared not the rebellious angels, nor the sinful antediluvians, nor the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, He will not spare those wicked teachers who corrupt the pure doctrines of Christianity. Saved Noah, the eighth. Some think that the words should be translated, "Noah, the eighth preacher of righteousness"; but it seems most evident, from

But if there be but a few righteous, they shall be preserved. God does not destroy the good with the bad. In wrath he remembers mercy. The procuring cause of destruction: it was a world of ungodly men. Ungodliness puts men out of the divine protection, and exposes them to utter destruction.

III. Sodom and Gomorrah. He destroys the old world by water, and Sodom by fire. He who keeps fire and water from hurting his people can make either to destroy his enemies; therefore they are never safe. Those who are sinners exceedingly before the Lord must expect the most dreadful vengeance. The punishment of sinners in former ages is designed for the example of those who come after. Men who live ungodly must see what they are to expect if they go on still in a course of impiety.

Verses 7–9

When God sends destruction on the ungodly, he commands deliverance for the righteous. This we have an instance of in his preserving Lot. 1. The character given of Lot; he is called a just man. He does not follow the multitude to do evil, but in a city of injustice he walks uprightly. 2. The impression the sins of others made upon this righteous man. In bad company we cannot escape either guilt or grief. 3. The duration and continuance of this good man's grief and vexation: it was from day to day. Being accustomed to hear and see their wickedness did not reconcile him to it. (1) The Lord knows those that are his. He has set apart him who is godly for himself; and, if there is but one in five cities, he knows him. (2) The wisdom of God is never at a loss about ways and means to deliver his people. They are often utterly at a loss; but he can find a way of escape. (3) The deliverance of the godly is the work of God, both his wisdom to contrive the way and his power to work out the deliverance out of temptation. (4) The unjust has no share in the salvation God works out for the righteous. The wicked are reserved to the day of judgment.

Verses 10–22

The apostle's design being to warn us of seducers, he now returns to discourse more particularly of them.

I. These walk after the flesh. They, in their lives, act directly contrary to God's righteous precepts, and comply with the demands of corrupt nature. Evil opinions are often accompanied with evil practices; and those who are for propagating error are for improving in wickedness. They go on in their sinful course, and increase unto more ungodliness. They also pour contempt on those whom God has set in authority over them and requires them to honour.

II. This he aggravates, by setting forth the very different conduct of more excellent creatures, even the angels. They are greater in power and might, and that even than those who are clothed with authority and power among the sons of men. Angels bring their accusations of sinful creatures before the Lord. It is before the Lord, who is the Judge, and will be the avenger, of all impiety and injustice. Good angels mingle no bitter revilings nor base reproaches with any of the accusations they bring. Let us imitate the angels. If we complain of wicked men, let it be to God, and that not with rage and reviling, but with compassion, that may evidence that we belong to him who is meek and merciful.

III. The apostle proceeds (v. 12) to show how like they are to the most inferior. Men, under the power of sin, are so far from observing divine revelation that they do not exercise reason. Brute-creatures follow the instinct of their sensitive appetite, and sinful man follows the inclination of his carnal mind.

These persons shall be utterly destroyed in their own corruption. Whatever they meet with is the just reward of their unrighteousness.

preacher—not only "righteous" himself (cf. vs. 8), but also "a preacher of righteousness": adduced by Peter against the licentiousness of the false teachers (vs. 2) who have no prospect before them but destruction, even as it overtook the ungodly world in Noah's days. 6. with . . .—"to overthrow" [ALFORD]. ensample—"of (the fate that should befall) those who in after time should live ungodly." Cf. Jude 7, "set forth for an example." 7. just—righteous. filthy conversation—lit., "behavior in licentiousness" (Gen. 19:5). the wicked—Greek, "lawless": who set at defiance the laws of nature, as well as man and God. The Lord reminds us of Lot's faithfulness, but not of his sin in the cave: so in Rahab's case. 8. vexed—Greek, "tormented." 9. knoweth how—He is at no loss for means, even when men see no escape. out of—not actually from. temptations—trials. to be punished—Greek, "being punished": as the fallen angels (vs. 4), actually under sentence, and awaiting its final execution. Sin is already its own penalty; hell will be its full development. 10. chiefly—They especially will be punished (Jude 8). after—following after. lust of uncleanness—defilement: "hankering after polluting and unlawful use of the flesh" [ALFORD]. government—Greek, "lordship," "dominion" (Jude 8). Presumptuous—Greek, "Darers." Self-will begets presumption. Presumptuously daring. are not afraid—though they are so insignificant in might; Greek, "tremble not" (Jude 8, end). speak evil of—Greek, "blaspheme." dignities—Greek, "glories." 11. which are—though they are. greater—than these blasphemers. Jude instances Michael. railing accusation—Greek, "blaspheming judgment" (Jude 9). against them—against "dignities," as for instance, the fallen angels: once exalted, and still retaining traces of their former power and glory. before the Lord—In the presence of the Lord, the Judge, in reverence, they abstain from judgment [BENGEL]. Judgment belongs to God, not the angels. How great is the dignity of the saints who, as Christ's assessors, shall hereafter judge angels! Meanwhile, railing judgments, though spoken with truth, against dignities, as being uttered irreverently, are of the nature of "blasphemies" (Greek: I Cor. 4:4, 5). If superior angels dare not, as being in the presence of God, the Judge, speak evil even of the bad angels, how awful the presumption of those who speak evil blasphemously of good "dignities." II Samuel 16: 7, 8, Shimei; Numbers 16:2, 3, Korah, etc., referred to also in Jude 11; Numbers 12:8, "Were ye (Aaron and Miriam) not afraid to speak evil of My servant Moses?" The angels who sinned still retain the indelible impress of majesty. Satan is still "a strong man": "prince of this world"; and under him are "principalities, powers, rulers of the darkness of this world." We are to avoid irreverence in regard to them, not on their account, but on account of God. A warning to those who use Satan's name irreverently and in blasphemy. "When the ungodly curseth Satan, he curseth his own soul." 12. (Jude 10:19). But—In contrast to the "angels," vs. 11. brute—Greek, "irrational." In contrast to angels that "excel in strength." beasts—Greek, "animals" (cf. Ps. 49:20). natural—transposed in the oldest MSS., "born natural," i.e., born naturally so: being in their very nature (i.e., naturally) as such (irrational animals), born to be taken and destroyed (Greek, "unto capture and destruction," or corruption, Note, Gal. 6:8; cf. end of this verse, "shall perish," lit., "shall be corrupted," in their own corruption. Jude 10, "naturally . . . corrupt themselves," and so destroy themselves; for one and the same Greek word expresses corruption, the seed, and destruction, the developed fruit). speak evil of—Greek, "in the case of things which they understand not." Cf. the same presumption, the parent of subsequent Gnostic error, producing an opposite, though kindred, error, "the worshipping of good angels": Colossians 2:18, "intruding into those things which he hath not seen." 13. receive—"shall carry off as their due." reward of—i.e., for their "unrighteousness" [ALFORD]. Perhaps it is implied, unrighteousness shall be its own reward or punishment. "Wages of unrighteousness" (vs. 15) has a different sense, viz., the earthly gain to be gotten by "unrighteousness." in the daytime—Translate as Greek, "counting the luxury which is in the daytime (not restricted to night, as ordinary revelling. Or as Vulgate and CALVIN, 'the luxury which is but for a day': so Hebrews 11:25, 'the pleasures of sin for a season'; and 12:16, Esau) to be pleasure," i.e., to be their chief good and highest enjoyment. Spots—in themselves. blemishes—disgraces: bringing blame (so the Greek) on the Church and on Christianity itself. sporting them-

ADAM CLARKE

1 Pet. iii. 20, that eight persons are here meant, which were the whole that were saved in the ark, viz., Shem, Ham, Japheth, and their three wives, six; Noah's wife, seven; and Noah himself, the eighth. The form of expression, Noah, the eighth, i.e., Noah and seven more, is most common in the Greek language. World of the ungodly. A whole race without God—without any pure worship or rational religion.

7. Vexed with the filthy conversation. "Being exceedingly pained with the unclean conduct of those lawless persons." What this was, see in the history, Genesis xix.

8. That righteous man dwelling among them. Lot, after his departure from Abraham, lived at Sodom a space of about twenty years. The word "tormented" is not less emphatic than the word "grievously pained" in the preceding verse, and shows what this man must have felt in dwelling so long among a people so abandoned.

9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly. The preservation and deliverance of Lot gave the apostle occasion to remark that God knew as well to save as to destroy; and that His goodness led Him as forcibly to save righteous Lot as His justice did to destroy the rebellious in the instances already adduced.

10. But chiefly them that walk. That is, God will in the most signal manner punish them that walk after the flesh—addict themselves to sodomitical practices, and the "lust of pollution," probably alluding to those most abominable practices where men abuse themselves and abuse one another. Despise government. They brave the power and authority of the civil magistrate, practicing their abominations so as to keep out of the reach of the letter of the law. And they speak evil of dignities—they blaspheme civil government; they abhor the restraints laid upon men by the laws, and would wish all governments destroyed that they might live as they list. Presumptuous are they. They are bold and daring, headstrong, regardless of fear. Selfwilled. Self-sufficient; presuming on themselves; following their own opinions, which no authority can induce them to relinquish. Are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. They are lawless and disobedient, spurn all human authority, and speak contemptuously of all legal and civil jurisdiction.

11. Whereas angels. This is a difficult verse, but the meaning seems to be this: The holy angels, who are represented as bringing an account of the actions of the fallen angels before the Lord in judgment, simply state the facts without exaggeration, and without permitting anything of a bitter, reviling, or railing spirit to enter into their accusations. See Zech. iii. 1 and Jude 9, to the former of which Peter evidently alludes.

12. But these, as natural brute beasts. "As those natural animals void of reason," following only the gross instinct of nature, being governed by neither reason nor religion. Made to be taken and destroyed. Intended to be taken with nets and gins and then destroyed, because of their fierce and destructive nature. So these false teachers and insurgents must be treated; first incarcerated, and then brought to judgment, that they may have the reward of their doings. And thus, by "blaspheming what they do not understand," they at last perish in their own corruption; i.e., their corrupt doctrines and vicious practices.

13. They that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Most sinners, in order to practice their abominable pleasures, seek the secrecy of the night; but these, bidding defiance to all decorum, decency, and shame, take the open day, and thus proclaim their impurities to the sun. Spots . . . and blemishes. They are a disgrace to the Christian name. Sporting themselves. Forming opinions which give license

Such sinners as sport themselves in mischief deceive themselves and disgrace all they belong to, for by one sort of sins they prepare themselves for another; so that their eyes are full of adultery, their wanton looks show their own impure lusts and are directed to kindle the like in others; and this is what they cannot cease from. Those who are themselves incessant in sin are very often successful in drawing others into the same excess of riot. Those who are in the greatest danger of being led away into error and impiety, are the unstable. Those whose hearts are not established with grace are easily turned into the way of sin. These are not only riotous and lascivious, but covetous also; they pant after riches, and the desire of their souls is to the wealth of this world. If men abandon themselves to all sorts of lusts, we cannot wonder that the apostle should call them cursed children.

IV. The apostle (v. 15, 16) proves that they are cursed children. They have forsaken the right way. They have gone into a wrong way: they have erred and strayed from the way of life. This he makes out by showing it to be the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor. The love of riches and honour turned Balaam out of the way of his duty, although he knew that the way he took displeased the Lord.

Hardened sinners sometimes meet with rebukes for their iniquity. God stops them in their way. If rebuking a sinner for his iniquity would have made a man return to his duty, surely the rebuke of Balaam must have produced this effect. The dumb ass is enabled to speak, and she exposes the madness of his conduct and opposes his going on in this evil way, and yet all in vain.

V. The apostle proceeds (v. 17) to a further description of seducing teachers.

1. As wells, or fountains, without water. The word of truth is the water of life, but these deceivers are set upon spreading and promoting error, and therefore are set forth as empty, because there is no truth in them

2. As clouds carried with a tempest. These are clouds which yield no rain, for they are driven with the wind, but not of the Spirit, but the stormy tempest of their own ambition. Clouds obstruct the light of the sun, and darken the air, and, seeing these men are for promoting darkness in this world, it is very just that the mist of darkness should be their portion in the next. They allure those they deal with. It is with great swelling words of vanity which have a great sound but little sense. They work upon the corrupt affections and carnal fleshly lusts of men. By application and industry men attain a skilfulness and dexterity in promoting error. They are as artful and as successful as the fisher, who makes angling his daily employment. Persons who have for a while adhered to the truth, and kept clear of errors, may be so far deceived as to fall into those errors they had for a while clean escaped. To prevent these men's gaining proselytes, he tells us that they are the servants of corruption; their own lusts have gotten a complete victory over them, and they are actually in bondage to them.

This consideration should prevent our being led away by these seducers; and to this he adds another (v. 20). It is a real detriment to those who have clean escaped from those who live in error, for hereby their latter end is made worse than their beginning.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

selves—Greek, "luxuriating." with—Greek, "in." deceivings—or else passively, "deceits": luxuries gotten by deceit. Cf. Matthew 13:22, "Deceitfulness of riches"; Ephesians 4:22, "Deceitful lusts." While deceiving others, they are deceived themselves. Cf. with English Version, Philippians 3:19, "Whose glory is in their shame." 14. full of adultery—lit., "full of an adulteress," as though they carried about adulteresses always dwelling in their eyes: the eye being the avenue of lust [HORNEIUS]. BENGEL makes the adulteress who fills their eyes, to be "alluring desire." that cannot cease—"that cannot be made to cease from sin." beguiling—"laying baits for." unstable—not firmly established in faith and piety. heart—not only the eyes, which are the channel, but the heart, the fountain head of lust. Job 31:7, "Mine heart walked after mine eyes." covetous practices—The oldest MSS. read singular, "covetousness." cursed children—rather as Greek, "children of curse," i.e., devoted to the curse. Cursing and covetousness, as in Balaam's case, often go together: the curse he designed for Israel fell on Israel's foes and on himself. True believers bless, and curse not, and so are blessed. 15. have—Some of the seducers are spoken of as already come, others as yet to come. following—out: so the Greek. the way—(Num. 22:23, 32; Isa. 56:11). son of Bosor—the same as Beor (Num. 22:5). This word was adopted, perhaps, because the kindred word Basar means flesh; and Balaam is justly termed son of carnality, as covetous, and the enticer of Israel to lust. loved the wages of unrighteousness—and therefore wished (in order to gain them from Balak) to curse Israel whom God had blessed, and at last gave the hellish counsel that the only way to bring God's curse on Israel was to entice them to fleshly lust and idolatry, which often go together. 16. was rebuked—Greek, "had a rebuke," or conviction; an exposure of his specious wickedness on his being tested (the root verb of the Greek noun means to "convict on testing"). his—Greek, "his own": his own beast convicted him of his own iniquity. ass—lit., "beast of burden"; the ass was the ordinary animal used in riding in Palestine. dumb—Greek, "voiceless-speaking in man's voice"; marking the marvellous nature of the miracle. forbade—lit., "hindered." It was not the words of the ass (for it merely deprecated his beating it), but the miraculous fact of its speaking at all, which withstood Balaam's perversity in desiring to go after God had forbidden him in the first instance. Thus indirectly the ass, and directly the angel, rebuked his worse than asinine obstinacy; the ass turned aside at the sight of the angel, but Balaam, after God had plainly said, Thou shalt not go, persevered in wishing to go for gain; thus the ass, in act, forbade his madness. How awful a contrast—a dumb beast forbidding an inspired prophet! 17. (Jude 12, 13.) wells—"clouds" in Jude; both promising (cf. vs. 19) water, but yielding none; so their "great swelling words" are found on trial to be but "vanity" (vs. 18). clouds—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "mists," dark, and not transparent and bright as "clouds" often are, whence the latter term is applied sometimes to the saints; fit emblem of the children of darkness. "Clouds" is a transcriber's correction from Jude 12, where it is appropriate, "clouds . . . without water" (promising what they do not perform); but not here, "mists driven along by a tempest." mist—blackness; "the chilling horror accompanying darkness" [BENGEL]. 18. allure—Greek, "lay baits for." through—Greek, "in"; the lusts of the flesh being the element IN which they lay their baits. much wantonness—Greek, "by licentiousness"; the bait which they lay. clean escaped—Greek, "really escaped." But the oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "scarcely," or "for but a little time"; scarcely have they escaped from them who live in error (the ungodly world), when they are allured by these seducers into sin again (vs. 20). 19. promise . . . liberty—(Christian)—These promises are instances of their "great swelling words" (vs. 18). The liberty which they propose is such as fears not Satan, nor loathes the flesh. Pauline language, adopted by Peter here, and I Peter 2:16, Note; (cf. ch. 3:15; Rom. 6:16-22; 8:15, 21; Gal. 5:1, 13; cf. John 8:34). corruption—Note, vs. 12, "destroyed . . . perish . . . corruption." of whom—"by whatever . . . by the same . . . ." 20. after they—the seducers "themselves" have escaped (vs. 19: Note, Heb. 6:46). pollutions—which bring "corruption" (vs. 19).

to sin and then acting on those opinions, and thus rioting in their own deceits. While they feast with you. It appears they held a kind of communion with the Church, and attended sacred festivals, which they desecrated with their own unhallowed opinions and conduct.

14. Having eyes full of adultery. "Of an adulteress"; being ever bent on the gratification of their sensual desires, so that they are represented as having an adulteress constantly before their eyes, and that their eyes can take in no other object but her. Cannot cease from sin. "Which cease not from sin"; they might cease from sin, but they do not; they love and practice it. Beguiling unstable souls. The metaphor is taken from adulterers seducing unwary, inexperienced, and light, trifling women; so do those false teachers seduce those who are not established in righteousness. Exercised with covetous practices. The metaphor is taken from the agonistae in the Grecian games, who exercised themselves in those feats, such as wrestling, boxing, running, in which they proposed to contend in the public games. These persons had their hearts schooled in nefarious practices; they had exercised themselves till they were perfectly expert in all the arts of seduction, overreaching, and every kind of fraud. Cursed children. Such not only live under God's curse here, but they are heirs to it hereafter.

15. Which have forsaken the right way. As Balaam did, who, although God showed him the right way, took one contrary to it, preferring the reward offered him by Balak to the approbation and blessing of God. The way of Balaam is the counsel of Balaam. He counselled the Moabites to give their most beautiful young women to the Israelitish youth, that they might be enticed by them to commit idolatry. See the notes on Num. xxii. 5 ff. and xxiii. 1 ff.

16. The dumb ass speaking with man's voice. See the note on Num. xxii. 28.

17. These are wells without water. Persons who by their profession should furnish the water of life to souls athirst for salvation, but they have not this water. Clouds that are carried with a tempest. In a time of great drought, to see clouds beginning to cover the face of the heavens raises the expectation of rain; but to see these "carried off" by a sudden tempest is a dreary disappointment. These false teachers were equally as unprofitable as the empty well, or the light, dissipated cloud. To whom the mist of darkness is reserved. That is, an eternal separation from the presence of God and the glory of His power. They shall be thrust into "outer darkness," Matt. viii. 12. Instead of clouds, "and mists" is the reading in a number of MSS. and in several of the fathers.

18. They speak great swelling words of vanity. The word signifies things of great magnitude, grand, superb, sublime; it sometimes signifies "inflated, bombastic." Those that were clean escaped. Those who, through hearing the doctrines of the gospel, had been converted were perverted by those false teachers.

19. While they promise them liberty. Either to live in the highest degrees of spiritual good or a freedom from the Roman yoke; or from the yoke of the law, or what they might term needless restraints. Their own conduct showed the falsity of their system, for they were slaves to every disgraceful lust. For of whom a man is overcome. This is an allusion to the ancient custom of selling for slaves those whom they had conquered and captivated in war.

20. The pollutions of the world. Sin in general, and particularly superstition, idolatry, and lasciviousness. These are called miasmata, things that "infect, pollute, and defile." The word was anciently used, and is in use at the present day, to express those noxious particles of effluvia proceeding from persons infected with contagious and dangerous diseases; or from dead and corrupt bodies, stagnant and putrid waters, marshes, etc., by which the sound and healthy may be infected and destroyed. The world is here represented as one large, putrid marsh, or corrupt body, sending off its destructive miasmata everywhere and in every direction, so that none can escape its contagion, and none can be healed of the great epidemic disease of sin, but by the mighty power and skill of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

Some men are, for a time, kept from the pollutions of the world, by the knowledge of Christ. A religious education has restrained many whom the grace of God has not renewed, but we must receive the love of the truth, and hide God's word in our heart, or it will not sanctify and save us. When men are once entangled, they are easily overcome. If men who have once escaped are again entangled, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

VI. A state of apostasy is worse than a state of ignorance; for it is a condemning of the way of righteousness, after they have had some knowledge of it. The misery of such deserters of Christ and his gospel is more intolerable than that of other offenders. God is more highly provoked by those who by their conduct despise the gospel, and pour contempt upon his grace. No wonder it should be so when they have licked up their own vomit again, returning to the same impieties that they had once cast off, and wallowing in that filthiness from which they appeared once to be really cleansed.

The better to recommend the matter, he tells them that what he would have them to remember are, The words spoken by the holy prophets, who were divinely inspired. The commandments of the apostles of the Lord and Saviour. What God has spoken by the prophets of the Old Testament, and Christ has commanded by the apostles of the New, cannot but demand and deserve to be frequently remembered. It is by these things the pure minds of Christians are to be stirred up.

Verses 3–7

There will be scoffers, men who will make a mock of sin, and of salvation from it. God's way of saving sinners by Jesus Christ is what men will scoff at, and that in the last days, under the gospel. The spirituality and simplicity of New Testament worship are directly contrary to the carnal mind of man. This is mentioned as a thing well known to all Christians.

I. What sort of persons they are: they walk after their own lusts, they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts. They live as they list, and they speak as they list. As they will walk in their own way, and talk their own language, so will they also think their own thoughts, and form principles which are altogether their own.

II. They will scoffingly say, Where is the promise of his coming? (v. 4). Without this, all the other articles of the Christian faith will signify very little; this is that which fills up and gives the finishing stroke to all the rest. Till our Lord shall have come, they will not themselves believe that he will come; nay, they will laugh at the very mention of his second coming. The believer not only desires that he may come, but, having a promise that he will come, he is also firmly and fully persuaded that he will come: on the other hand, these seducers, because they wish he never may, therefore do all that in them lies to cheat themselves and others into a persuasion that he never will come. They will laugh at that very promise: Where is the promise, say they, of his coming?

III. While they laugh they will pretend to argue too, v. 4. This is a subtle, though not a solid way of reasoning; it is apt to make impressions upon weak minds, and especially upon wicked hearts. Those are all dead to whom the promise was made, and it was never made good in their time, and there is no likelihood that it ever will be in any time; why should we trouble ourselves about it? To this very day all things continue as they were, without any change, even from the beginning of the creation. What he never has done they would conclude he never can do or never will.

IV. The apostle puts us in remembrance of a change already past, which was the drowning of the world in the days of Noah. This they willingly are ignorant of (v. 5), they choose to pass it over in silence. It is hard to persuade men to believe what they are not willing to find true. They do not know because they do not care to know. But let not sinners think that such ignorance as this will be admitted as an excuse for whatever sin it may betray them into.

through—Greek, "in." knowledge—Greek, "full and accurate knowledge." the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ—solemnly expressing in full the great and gracious One from whom they fall. latter end is worse . . . than the beginning—Peter remembers Christ's words. "Worse" stands opposed to "better" (vs. 21). 21. the way of righteousness—"the way of truth" (vs. 2). Christian doctrine, and "the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour." turn—back again; so the Greek. from the holy commandment—the Gospel which enjoins holiness; in opposition to their corruption. "Holy," not that it makes holy, but because it ought to be kept inviolate [TITTMANN]. delivered—once for all; admitting no turning back. 22. But—You need not wonder at the event; for dogs and swine they were before, and dogs and swine they will continue. They "scarcely" (vs. 18) have escaped from their filthy folly, when they again are entangled in it. Then they seduce others who have in like manner "for a little time escaped from them that live in error" (vs. 18). Peter often quoted Proverbs in his First Epistle (1: 7; 2:17; 4:8, 18); another proof that both Epistles come from the same writer.

VSS. 1-18. SURENESS OF CHRIST'S COMING, AND ITS ACCOMPANIMENTS, DECLARED IN OPPOSITION TO SCOFFERS ABOUT TO ARISE. GOD'S LONG-SUFFERING A MOTIVE TO REPENTANCE, AS PAUL'S EPISTLES SET FORTH; CONCLUDING EXHORTATION TO GROWTH IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST. 1. now—"This now a second Epistle I write." Therefore he had lately written the former Epistle. The seven Catholic Epistles were written by James, John, and Jude, shortly before their deaths; previously, while having the prospect of being still for some time alive, they felt it less necessary to write [BENGEL]. unto you—The Second Epistle, though more general in its address, yet included especially the same persons as the First Epistle was particularly addressed to. pure—lit., "pure when examined by sunlight"; "sincere." Adulterated with no error. Opposite to "having the understanding darkened." ALFORD explains, The mind, will, and affection, in relation to the outer world, being turned to God [the Sun of the soul], and not obscured by fleshly and selfish regards. by way of—Greek, "in," in putting you in remembrance (ch. 1:12, 13). Ye already know (vs. 3); it is only needed that I remind you (Jude 5). 2. prophets—of the Old Testament. of us—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "And of the commandment of the Lord and Saviour (declared) by YOUR apostles" (so "apostle of the Gentiles," Rom. 11:13)—the apostles who live among you in the present time, in contrast to the Old Testament "prophets." 3. Knowing this first—from the word of the apostles. shall come—Their very scoffing shall confirm the truth of the prediction. scoffers—The oldest MSS. and Vulgate add, "(scoffers) in (i.e., with) scoffing." As Revelation 14:2, "harping with harps." walking after their own lusts—(ch. 2:10; Jude 16, 18). Their own pleasure is their sole law, unrestrained by reverence for God. 4. (Cf. Ps. 10:11; 73:11.) Presumptuous skepticism and lawless lust, setting nature and its so-called laws above the God of nature and revelation, and arguing from the past continuity of nature's phenomena that there can be no future interruption to them, was the sin of the antediluvians, and shall be that of the scoffers in the last days. Where—implying that it ought to have taken place before this, if ever it was to take place, but that it never will. the promise—which you, believers, are so continually looking for the fulfilment of (vs. 13). What becomes of the promise which you talk so much of? his—Christ's; the subject of prophecy from the earliest days. the fathers—to whom the promise was made, and who rested all their hopes on it. all things—in the natural world; skeptics look not beyond this. as they were—continue as they do; as we see them to continue. From the time of the promise of Christ's coming as Saviour and King being given to the fathers, down to the present time, all things continue, and have continued, as they now are, from "the beginning of creation." 5. Refutation of their scoffing from Scripture history. willingly—wilfully; they do not wish to know. Their ignorance is voluntary. they . . . are ignorant of—in contrast to vs. 8, "Be not ignorant of this." Lit., in both verses, "This escapes THEIR notice (sagacious philosophers though they think themselves)"; "let this not escape YOUR notice." They obstinately shut their eyes to the Scripture record of the creation

ADAM CLARKE

Now it is by the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as says Peter, that we escape the destructive influence of these contagious miasmata. But if, after having been healed, and escaped the death to which we were exposed, we get again entangled, "enfolded, enveloped" with them, then the latter end will be worse . . . than the beginning, forasmuch as we shall have sinned against more light.

21. For it had been better for them not to have known. For the reasons assigned above; because they have sinned against more mercy, are capable of more sin, and are liable to greater punishment. The holy commandment. The whole religion of Christ is contained in this one commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; and thy neighbor as thyself."

22. According to the true proverb. This seems to be a reference to Prov. xxvi. 11: "As a dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool returneth to [repeateth] his folly."

1. This second epistle. In order to guard them against the seductions of false teachers, he calls to their remembrance the doctrine of the ancient prophets, and the commands or instructions of the apostles, all founded on the same basis.

3. There shall come . . . scoffers. Persons who shall endeavor to turn all religion into ridicule, as this is the most likely way to depreciate truth in the sight of the giddy multitude. The scoffers, having no solid argument to produce against revelation, affect to laugh at it, and get superficial thinkers to laugh with them. Walking after their own lusts. Here is the true source of all infidelity. The gospel of Jesus is pure and holy, and requires a holy heart and holy life. They wish to follow their own lusts, and consequently cannot brook the restraints of the gospel; therefore they labor to prove that it is not true. There is a remarkable addition here in almost every MS. and version of note: "There shall come in the last days, in mockery, scoffers walking after their own lusts." This is the reading of a number of MSS. and several of the fathers. They come "in mockery"; this is their spirit and temper. They have no desire to find out truth; they take up the Bible merely with the design of turning it into ridicule. The last days probably refer to the conclusion of the Jewish polity, which was then at hand.

5. For this they willingly are ignorant of. They shut their eyes against the light and refuse all evidence; what does not answer their purpose they will not know.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. The apostle's account of the destruction which has once already come upon the world (v. 5, 6). At the time of the universal deluge, the case is strangely altered; the waters which God had divided before, now does he, in anger, throw together again in a heap. All this was done by the word of God; it was by his powerful word that the world was made at first. By the word of the Lord the heavens were of old and the earth standing out of the water and in the water.

The after-confusion and ruin of the world, as well as the utter destruction of its inhabitants, were also by the same word. This was the change which God had before brought upon the world, and which these scoffers had overlooked.

2. What the apostle says of the destructive change which is yet to come upon it, v. 7. Here we have an awful account of the final dissolution of the world. The judgment here spoken of is yet to come, and will surely come, though we know not when. That the world has once been destroyed by a universal deluge renders it the more credible that it may be again ruined by a universal conflagration. Let therefore the scoffers, who laugh at the coming of our Lord to judgment, at least consider that it may be. The heavens and the earth which now are, are kept in store. They are reserved unto fire. The day of judgment is the day of the perdition of ungodly men. Those who now scoff at a future judgment shall find it a day of vengeance. "Give diligence therefore to be found in Christ, that that may be a time of refreshment and day of redemption to you."

Verse 8

We may clearly discern the tenderness and affection wherewith he speaks to them, calling them beloved; he had a compassionate concern and a love of good-will for the ungodly wretches who refused to believe divine revelation, but he has a peculiar respect for the true believers.

I. The truth which the apostle asserts—that with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years are as one day. All things past, present, and future, are ever before him.

II. The importance of this truth: This is the one thing the apostle would not have us ignorant of. This is a truth that belongs to our peace, and therefore he endeavours that it may not be hidden from our eyes; as it is in the original, Let not this one thing be hidden from you. Yet how hard is it to conceive of eternity!

Verses 9, 10

We are here told that the Lord is not slack—he does not delay beyond the appointed time; he will keep to the time appointed in coming to judge the world. Good men are apt to think God stays beyond the appointed time, that is, the time which they have set, but they set one time and God sets another.

I. What men count slackness is truly longsuffering, and that to us-ward; it is giving more time to his own people that they may bring glory to God, and improve in a meetness for heaven; for God is not willing that any of these should perish, but that all of them should come to repentance. God has no delight in the death of sinners. His goodness and forbearance do in their own nature call to repentance all those to whom they are exercised; and, if men continue impenitent when God gives them space to repent, he will deal more severely with them.

II. The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, v. 10. 1. The certainty of the day of the Lord. The day has not yet come, it assuredly will come. God has appointed a day and he will keep his appointment. 2. The suddenness of this day: It will come as a thief in the night, at a time when men are sleeping and secure. The time which men think to be the most improper and unlikely, and when therefore they are most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming.

and the deluge; the latter is the very parallel to the coming judgment by fire, which Jesus mentions, as Peter doubtless remembered. by the word of God—not by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms [ALFORD]. of old—Greek, "from of old"; from the first beginning of all things. A confutation of their objection, "all things continue as they were FROM THE BEGINNING OF CREATION." Before the flood, the same objection to the possibility of the flood might have been urged with the same plausibility: The heavens (sky) and earth have been FROM OF OLD, how unlikely then that they should not continue so! But, replies Peter, the flood came in spite of their reasonings; so will the conflagration of the earth come in spite of the "scoffers" of the last days, changing the whole order of things (the present "world," or as Greek means, "order"), and introducing the new heavens and earth (vs. 13). earth standing out of—Greek, "consisting of," i.e., "formed out of the water." The waters under the firmament were at creation gathered together into one place, and the dry land emerged out of, and above, them. in . . .—rather, "by means of the water," as a great instrument (along with fire) in the changes wrought on the earth's surface to prepare it for man. Held together BY the water. The earth arose out of the water by the efficacy of the water itself [TITTMANN]. 6. Whereby—Greek, "By which" (plural). By means of which heavens and earth (in respect to the WATERS which flowed together from both) the then world perished (i.e., in respect to its occupants, men and animals, and its then existing order: not was annihilated); for in the flood "the fountains of the great deep were broken up" from the earth (1) below, and "the windows of heaven" (2) above "were opened." The earth was deluged by that water out of which it had originally risen. 7. (Cf. Job 28:5, end.) which are now—"the postdiluvian visible world." In contrast to "that then was," vs. 6. the same—Other oldest MSS. read, "His" (God's). kept in store—Greek, "treasured up." reserved—"kept." It is only God's constantly watchful providence which holds together the present state of things till His time for ending it. 8. be not ignorant—as those scoffers are (vs. 5). Besides the refutation of them (vss. 5-7) drawn from the history of the deluge, here he adds another (addressed more to believers than to the mockers): God's delay in fulfilling His promise is not, like men's delays, owing to inability or fickleness in keeping His word, but through "long-suffering." this one thing—as the consideration of chief importance (Luke 10:42). one day . . . thousand years—Psalm 90:4: Moses there says, Thy eternity, knowing no distinction between a thousand years and a day, is the refuge of us creatures of a day. thousand years as one day—No delay which occurs is long to God: as to a man of countless riches, a thousand dollars are as a single penny. God's æonologe (eternal-ages measurer) differs wholly from man's horologe (hour-glass). His gnomon (dial-pointer) shows all the hours at once in the greatest activity and in perfect repose. To Him the hours pass away, neither more slowly, nor more quickly, than befits His economy. There is nothing to make Him need either to hasten or delay the end. The words, "with the Lord" (Ps. 90:4, "In Thy sight"), silence all man's objections on the ground of his incapability of understanding this [BENGEL]. 9. slack—slow, tardy, late; exceeding the due time, as though that time were already come. Hebrews 10:37, "will not tarry." his promise—which the scoffers cavil at. Verse 4, "Where is the promise?" It shall be surely fulfilled "according to His promise" (vs. 13). some—the "scoffers." count—His promise to be the result of "slackness" (tardiness). long-suffering—waiting until the full number of those appointed to "salvation" (vs. 15) shall be completed. to us-ward—The oldest MSS., Vulgate, Syriac, etc. read, "towards YOU." any—not desiring that any, yea, even that the scoffers, should perish, which would be the result if He did not give space for repentance. come—go and be received to repentance: the Greek implies there is room for their being received to repentance (cf. Greek, Mark 2:2; John 8:37). 10. The certainty, suddenness, and concomitant effects, of the coming of the day of the Lord. will—emphatical. But (in spite of the mockers, and notwithstanding the delay) come and be present the day of the Lord SHALL. as a thief—Peter remembers and repeats his Lord's image (Luke 12:39, 41) used in the conversation in which he took a part; so also Paul (I Thess. 5:2) and John (Rev. 3:3; 16:15). the heavens—which the scoffers say shall "continue" as they are (vs. 4; Matt. 24:35; Rev. 21:1). with a great noise—with a rushing noise, like

By the word of God the heavens were of old. Moses: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." Now these heavens and earth which God made in the beginning, and which He says were at first formless and empty, and which He calls "the deep," are in the very next verse called "waters"; from which it is evident that Moses teaches that the earth was made out of some fluid substance, to which the name of "water" is properly given. The earth, which was originally formed out of the water, "subsists by water."

7. But the heavens and the earth, which are now. The present earth and its atmosphere, which are liable to the same destruction, because the same means still exist (for there is still water enough to drown the earth, and there is iniquity enough to induce God to destroy it and its inhabitants), are nevertheless kept in store, "treasured up," kept in God's storehouse, to be destroyed, not by water, but by fire at the day of judgment.

8. Be not ignorant. Though they are willfully ignorant, neglect not the means of instruction.

One day is with the Lord as a thousand years. That is: All time is as nothing before Him, because in the presence as in the nature of God all is eternity; therefore nothing is long, nothing short, before Him. The words of the apostle seem to be a quotation from Ps. xc. 4.

9. But is longsuffering. It is not slackness that induced God to prolong the respite of ungodly men, but His long-suffering, His unwillingness that any should perish; and therefore He spared them, that they might have additional offers of grace and be led to repentance. As God is not willing that any should perish, and as He is willing that all should come to repentance, consequently He has never devised nor decreed the damnation of any man, nor has He rendered it impossible for any soul to be saved.

10. The day of the Lord will come. See Matt. xxiv. 43, to which the apostle seems to allude.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. The solemnity of this coming. The heavens shall pass away with a great noise. The elements shall melt with fervent heat. The earth also, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. All must pass through the fire, which shall be a consuming fire to all that sin has brought into the world, though it may be but a refining fire to the works of God's hand.

What a difference there will be between the first coming of Christ and the second! May we be so wise as to prepare for it, that it may not be a day of vengeance and destruction unto us.

Verses 11–18

The apostle, having instructed them in the doctrine of Christ's second coming,

I. Takes occasion thence to exhort them to purity and godliness in their whole conversation. Seeing all these things must be dissolved, how holy should we be. Inasmuch as this dissolution is in order to their being restored to their primitive beauty and excellency, how pure and holy should we be, in order to our being fit for the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness! Those things which we now see must in a little while pass away, and be no more as they now are: let us look therefore at what shall abide and continue. This looking for the day of God is one of the directions the apostle gives us, in order to our being eminently holy and godly in all manner of conversation.

The coming of the day of God is what every Christian must hope for and earnestly expect. Though it cannot but affright the ungodly to see the visible heavens and the elements melting, yet the believer can rejoice in hope of more glorious heavens after these have been refined by that dreadful fire which shall burn up all the dross of this visible creation. 1. What true Christians look for: new heavens and a new earth. In these new heavens and earth only righteousness shall dwell. 2. What is the ground and foundation of this expectation and hope—the promise of God. To look for anything which God has not promised is presumption; but if our expectations are according to the promise, we cannot meet with a disappointment.

II. In v. 14 he resumes his exhortation from the consideration that they shall be again renewed. It nearly concerns you to see in what state you will be when the Judge of all the world shall come to pass sentence upon men, therefore get ready to appear before the judgment-seat of Christ.

1. "That you be found of him in peace, in a state of peace and reconciliation with God through Christ. Those whose sins are pardoned and their peace made with God are the only safe and happy people; therefore follow after peace." Peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Peace in our own consciences. Peace with men.

2. That you be found of Christ without spot, and blameless. Follow after holiness as well as peace. We must be pressing towards spotless purity, absolute perfection. Christians must be perfecting holiness. It is only the diligent Christian who will be the happy Christian in the day of the Lord. He will certainly reward us if we be diligent in the work he has allotted us; now, that you may be diligent, account the long-suffering of our Lord to be salvation. "Does your Lord delay his coming? It is so much space to repent that men may have time to prepare for eternity." Our apostle quotes St. Paul as directing men to make the same good use of the divine forbearance. What an honourable mention does this apostle of the circumcision make of that very man who had openly, before all, reproved him. He calls him brother, not only that he is a fellow-christian, but a fellow-apostle. Though many seducing teachers denied Paul's apostleship, yet Peter owns him to be an apostle. He calls him beloved. He mentions Paul as one who had an uncommon measure of wisdom given unto him. How desirable is it that those who preach the same gospel should treat one another according to the pattern Peter here sets them! (1) The excellent wisdom that was in Paul is said to be given him. The understanding and knowledge that qualify men to preach the gospel are the gift of God.

that of a whizzing arrow, or the crash of a devouring flame. elements—the component materials of the world [WAHL]. However, as "the works" in the earth are mentioned separately from "the earth," so it is likely by "elements," mentioned after "the heavens," are meant "the works therein," viz., the sun, moon, and stars (as THEOPHILUS OF ANTIOCH, p. 22, 148, 228; and JUSTIN MARTYR, Apology, 2. 44, use the word "elements"): these, as at creation, so in the destruction of the world, are mentioned [BENGEL]. But as "elements" is not so used in Scripture Greek, perhaps it refers to the component materials of "the heavens," including the heavenly bodies; it clearly belongs to the former clause, "the heavens," not to the following, "the earth...." melt—be dissolved, as in vs. 11. the works... therein—of nature and of art. 11. Your duty, seeing that this is so, is to be ever eagerly expecting the day of God. then—Some oldest MSS. substitute "thus" for "then": a happy refutation of the "thus" of the scoffers, vs. 4 (English Version, "AS they were," Greek, "thus"). shall be—Greek, "are being (in God's appointment, soon to be fulfilled) dissolved"; the present tense implying the certainty as though it were actually present. what manner of men...—exclamatory. How watchful, prayerful, zealous! to be—not the mere Greek substantive verb of existence (einai), but (huparchein) denoting a state or condition in which one is supposed to be [TITTMANN]. What holy men ye ought to be found to be, when the event comes! This is "the holy commandment" mentioned in vs. 2. conversation... godliness—Greek, plural: behaviors (towards men), godlinesses (or pieties towards God) in their manifold modes of manifestation. 12. hasting unto—with the utmost eargerness desiring [WAHL], praying for, and contemplating, the coming Saviour as at hand. The Greek may mean "hastening (i.e., urging onward [ALFORD] the day of God"; not that God's eternal appointment of the time is changeable, but God appoints us as instruments of accomplishing those events which must be first before the day of God can come. By praying for His coming, furthering the preaching of the Gospel for a witness to all nations, and bringing in those whom "the long-suffering of God" waits to save, we hasten the coming of the day of God. The Greek verb is always in New Testament used as neuter (as English Version here), not active; but the LXX uses it actively. Christ says, "Surely I come quickly. Amen." Our part is to speed forward this consummation by praying, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." the coming—Greek, "presence" of a person: usually, of the Saviour. the day of God—God has given many myriads of days to men: one shall be the great "day of God" Himself. wherein—rather as Greek, "on account of (or owing to) which" day. heavens—the upper and lower regions of the sky. melt—Our igneous rocks show that they were once in a liquid state. 13. Nevertheless—"But": in contrast to the destructive effects of the day of God stand its constructive effects. As the flood was the baptism of the earth, eventuating in a renovated earth, partially delivered from "the curse," so the baptism with fire shall purify the earth so as to be the renovated abode of regenerated man, wholly freed from the curse. his promise—(Isa. 65:17; 66:22). The "we" is not emphatical as in English Version. new heavens—new atmospheric heavens surrounding the renovated earth. righteousness—dwelleth in that coming world as its essential feature, all pollutions having been removed. 14. that ye... be found of him—"in His sight" [ALFORD], at His coming; plainly implying a personal coming. without spot—at the coming marriage feast of the Lamb, in contrast to ch. 2:13, "Spots they are and blemishes while they feast," not having on the King's pure wedding garment. blameless—(I Cor. 1:8; Phil. 1:10; I Thess. 3:13; 5:23). in peace—in all its aspects, towards God, your own consciences, and your fellow men, and as its consequence eternal blessedness: "the God of peace" will effect this for you. 15. account... the long-suffering... is salvation—is designed for the salvation of those yet to be gathered into the Church: whereas those scoffers "count it (to be the result of) slackness" on the Lord's part (vs. 9). our beloved brother Paul—a beautiful instance of love and humility. Peter praises the very Epistles which contain his condemnation. according to the wisdom given unto him—adopting Paul's own language, I Corinthians 3:10, "According to the grace of God which is given unto me as a wise master-builder." Supernatural and inspired wisdom "GIVEN" him, not acquired in human schools of learning. hath written—Greek aorist, "wrote," as a thing wholly past: Paul was by this time either

11. All these things shall be dissolved. They will all be "separated," all "decomposed," but none of them destroyed. And as they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently they may enter again into the composition of a new system; and therefore the apostle says, v. 13: "We . . . look for new heavens and a new earth"—the others being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials. What manner of persons ought ye to be? Some put the note of interrogation at the end of this clause, and join the remaining part with the twelfth verse, thus: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? By holy conversation and godliness, expecting and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God," etc.

12. The word which we translate hasting unto should be rendered "earnestly desiring" or "wishing for," which is a frequent meaning of the word in the best Greek writers.

13. We, according to his promise, look for new heavens. The promise to which it is supposed the apostle alludes is found Isa. lxv. 17: "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind"; and chap. lxvi. 22: "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed." Now although these may be interpreted of the glory of the gospel dispensation, yet, if Peter refer to them, they must have a more extended meaning.

14. Seeing that ye look for such things. As you profess that such a state of things shall take place and have the expectation of enjoying the blessedness of it, be diligent in the use of every means and influence of grace, that ye may be found of him—the Lord Jesus, the Judge of quick and dead; without spot—any contagion of sin in your souls; and blameless—being not only holy and innocent, but useful in your lives.

15. And account that the longsuffering of our Lord. Conclude that God's long-suffering with the world is a proof that He designs men to be saved. According to the wisdom given unto him. That is, according to the measure of the divine inspiration by which he was qualified for the divine work and by which he was so capable of entering into the deep things of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) The apostle imparts to men according as he had received from God. He endeavours to lead others as far as he himself was led into the knowledge of the mysteries of the gospel.

But the apostle Peter proceeds to tell us that in those things which are to be met with in Paul's epistles there are some things hard to be understood. Some are not easy to be understood because of their own obscurity, others cannot be so easily understood because of their excellency and sublimity, and others are with difficulty taken in because of the weakness of men's minds.

And here the unlearned and unstable make wretched work; for they wrest and torture the scriptures. Those who are not well instructed and well established in the truth are in great danger of perverting the word of God. Where there is a divine power to establish as well as to instruct men in divine truth, persons are effectually secured from falling into errors. How great a blessing this is we learn by observing what is the pernicious consequence of the errors that ignorant and unstable men fall into—even their own destruction.

III. The apostle gives them a word of caution, v. 17, 18.

1. The knowledge we have of these things should make us very watchful, inasmuch as there is a twofold danger, v. 17. (1) We are in great danger of being seduced, and turned away from the truth. Many who have the scriptures and read them do not understand what they read; and too many of those who have a right understanding are not established in the belief of the truth, and all these are liable to fall into error. (2) We are in great danger by being seduced. If men corrupt the word of God, it tends to their own utter ruin. When men wrest the word of God, they fall into the error of the wicked. If we imbibe their opinions, we shall too soon imitate their practices. Those who are led away by error fall from their own steadfastness. They are wholly unhinged and unsettled, and know not where to rest.

2. The apostle directs us what to do, v. 18. We must grow in grace. By how much the stronger grace is in us, by so much the more steadfast shall we be in the truth. We must grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Such a knowledge of Christ as conforms us more to him, and endears him more to us, must needs preserve us from falling off in times of general apostasy. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

dead, or had ceased to minister to them. to you—Galatians, Ephesians, Colossians, the same region as Peter addresses. Cf. "in peace," vs. 14, a practical exhibition of which Peter now gives in showing how perfectly agreeing Paul (who wrote the Epistle to the Galatians) and he are, notwithstanding the event recorded (Gal. 2:11-14). Colossians 4 refers to Christ's second coming. The Epistle to the Hebrews, too (addressed not only to the Palestinian, but also secondarily to the Hebrew Christians everywhere), may be referred to, as Peter primarily (though not exclusively) addresses in both Epistles the Hebrew Christians of the dispersion (Note, I Pet. 1:1). Hebrews 9:27, 28; 10:25, 37, "speak of these things" (vs. 16) which Peter has been handling, viz., the coming of the day of the Lord, delayed through His "long-suffering," yet near and sudden. 16. also in all his epistles—Romans 2:4 is very similar to vs. 15, beginning. The Pauline Epistles were by this time become the common property of all the churches. The "all" seems to imply they were now completed. The subject of the Lord's coming is handled in I Thessalonians 4: 13; 5:11; cf. vs. 10 with I Thessalonians 5:2. Still Peter distinguishes Paul's Epistle, or Epistles, "TO YOU," from "all his (other) Epistles," showing that certain definite churches, or particular classes of believers, are meant by "you." in which—Epistles. The oldest MSS. read the feminine relative (hais); not as Received Text (hois), "in which things." some things hard to be understood—viz., in reference to Christ's coming, e.g., the statements as to the man of sin and the apostasy, before Christ's coming. "Paul seemed thereby to delay Christ's coming to a longer period than the other apostles, whence some doubted altogether His coming" [BENGEL]. Though there be some things hard to be understood, there are enough besides, plain, easy, and sufficient for perfecting the man of God. "There is scarce anything drawn from the obscure places, but the same in other places may be found most plain" [AUGUSTINE]. It is our own prejudice, foolish expectations, and carnal fancies, that make Scripture difficult [JEREMY TAYLOR]. unlearned—Not those wanting human learning are meant, but those lacking the learning imparted by the Spirit. The humanly learned have been often most deficient in spiritual learning, and have originated many heresies. Cf. II Timothy 2:23, a different Greek word, "unlearned," lit., "untutored." When religion is studied as a science, nothing is more abstruse; when studied in order to know our duty and practice it, nothing is easier. unstable—not yet established in what they have learned; shaken by every seeming difficulty; who, in perplexing texts, instead of waiting until God by His Spirit makes them plain in comparing them with other Scriptures, hastily adopt distorted views. wrest—strain and twist (properly with a hand screw) what is straight in itself (e.g., II Tim. 2:18). other scriptures—Paul's Epistles were, therefore, by this time, recognized in the Church, as "Scripture": a term never applied in any of the fifty places where it occurs, save to the Old and New Testament sacred writings. Men in each Church having miraculous discernment of spirits would have prevented any uninspired writing from being put on a par with the Old Testament word of God; the apostles' lives also were providentially prolonged, Paul's and Peter's at least to thirty-four years after Christ's resurrection, John's to thirty years later, so that fraud in the canon is out of question. The three first Gospels and Acts are included in "the other Scriptures," and perhaps all the New Testament books, save John and Revelation, written later. unto their own destruction—not through Paul's fault (ch. 2:1). 17. Ye—warned by the case of those "unlearned and unstable" persons (vs. 16). knowing . . . before—the event. led away with—the very term, as Peter remembers, used by Paul of Barnabas' being "carried," Greek, "led away with" Peter and the other Jews in their hypocrisy. wicked—"lawless," as in ch. 2:7. fall from—(grace, Gal. 5:4: the true source of) "steadfastness" or stability in contrast with the "unstable" (vs. 16): "established" (ch. 1:12): all kindred Greek terms. Cf. Jude 20, 21. 18. grow—Not only do not "fall from" (vs. 17), but grow onward: the true secret of not going backward. Ephesians 4:15, "Grow up into Him, the Head, Christ." grace and . . . knowledge of . . . Christ—"the grace and knowledge of Christ" [ALFORD rightly]: the grace of which Christ is the author, and the knowledge of which Christ is the object. for ever—Greek, "to the day of eternity": the day that has no end: "the day of the Lord," beginning with the Lord's coming.

ADAM CLARKE

It is worthy of remark that Paul's Epistles are ranked among the "scriptures"; a term applied to those writings which are divinely inspired, and to those only.

16. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things. For example, he has spoken of Christ's coming to judgment, 1 Thess. iii. 13; iv. 14-18; 2 Thess. i. 7-10; Titus ii. 13. And of the resurrection of the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 22; Phil. iii. 20-21. And of the burning of the earth, 2 Thess. i. 8. And of the heavenly country, 2 Cor. v. 1-10. And of the introduction of the righteous into that country, 1 Thess. iv. 17; Heb. iv. 9; xii. 14, 18, 24. And of the judgment of all mankind by Christ, Rom. xiv. 10.

ALBERT BARNES:

"Which they that are unlearned." The evil here is that which arises in cases where those without competent knowledge undertake to become expounders of the Word of God. It is not said that it is not proper for them to attempt to become instructed by the aid of the sacred writings; but the danger is, that without proper views of interpretation, of language, and of ancient customs, they might be in danger of perverting and abusing certain portions of the writings of Paul. Intelligence among the people is everywhere in the Bible presumed to be proper in understanding the sacred Scriptures; and ignorance may produce the same effects in interpreting the Bible which it will produce in interpreting other writings. Every good thing is liable to abuse; but the proper way to remove this danger is not to keep the people in ignorance or to appoint someone to be an infallible interpreter; it is to remove the ignorance itself by enlightening the people and rendering them better qualified to understand the sacred oracles.

"And unstable." Who have no settled principles and views. The evil here is that which arises where those undertake to interpret the Bible who have no established principles. They regard nothing as settled. They have no landmarks set up to guide their inquiries. They have no stability in their character, and of course nothing can be regarded as settled in their methods of interpreting the Bible. They are under the control of feeling and emotion, and are liable to embrace one opinion today and another directly opposite tomorrow. But the way to prevent this evil is not by attempting to give to a community an authoritative interpretation of the Bible; it is to diffuse abroad just principles, that men may obtain from the Bible an intelligent view of what it means.

—Popular Commentary

17. Seeing ye know these things before. Seeing that by prophets and apostles you have been thus forewarned, beware, "keep watch, be on your guard"; cleave to God and the word of His grace, lest you be led away from the truth delivered by the prophets and apostles, by the error of the wicked, "of the lawless"—those who wrest the Scriptures to make them countenance their lusts and lawless practices. Fall from your own stedfastness. From that faith in Christ which has put you in possession of that grace which establishes the heart.

18. But grow in grace. Increase in the image and favor of God. To him, the Lord Jesus, be glory—all honor and excellency attributed both now, in this present state, and for ever, "to the day of eternity"—that in which death, and misery, and trial, and darkness, and change, and time itself are to the righteous forever at an end. It is eternity; and this eternity is one unalterable, interminable, unclouded, and unchangeable day!

B. Perils of hatred (4:1-21)

IV. Fellowship with God—God is life (5:1-12)
A. Life and love (5:1-3)
B. Life and light (5:4-7)
C. The life (5:8-12)

V. Conclusion (5:13-21)
A. The final statements—"that ye may know" (5:13-17)
B. The final certainties—"we know" (5:18-20)
C. The final charge (5:21)

The continued tradition of the church attests that this epistle came from John the apostle. There is scarcely a critic or competent judge of diction, or style of argument and spirit, who will not adjudge this epistle to the writer of the gospel of John.

The epistle is styled general, as being not inscribed to any particular church; it is, as a circular letter, sent to divers churches in order to confirm them in their steadfast adherence to the Lord Christ, against seducers; and to instigate them to adorn that doctrine by love to God and man, and particularly to each other.

CHAPTER 1

I. An account of the Mediator's person. 1. As the Word of life, v. 1. He is not a mere vocal word, but a vital one: the Word of life. 2. As eternal life, He was from eternity. He is the eternal Word of the eternal living Father. 3. As life manifested (v. 2), manifested in the flesh. Kindness indeed, that eternal life should come to visit mortals, and to procure eternal life for them, and then confer it on them!

II. The evidences that the apostle and his brethren had of the Mediator's presence in this world. The life, the word of life, the eternal life, as such, could not be seen and felt; but the life manifested might be, and was so. 1. To their ears, v. 1, 3. The life assumed a mouth and tongue, that he might utter words of life. The divine word would employ the ear, and the ear should be devoted to the word of life. 2. To their eyes, v. 1–3. The Word would become visible, would not only be heard, but seen with our eyes—with all the use and exercise that we could make of our eyes. His apostles must be eye-witnesses as well as ear-witnesses of him. 3. To their internal sense, to the eyes of their mind: for so (possibly) may the next clause be interpreted: Which we have looked upon. The word is not applied to the immediate object of the eye, but to that which was rationally collected from what they saw. The senses are to be the informers of the mind. 4. To their hands and sense of feeling: And our hands have handled of the Word of life. The invisible life and Word was no despiser of the testimony of sense. Sense is a means that God has appointed for our information. Our Lord took care to satisfy all the senses of his apostles, that they might be the more authentic witnesses of him to the world. The apostles could not be deceived in such long and various exercise of their sense. Sense must minister to reason and judgment; and reason and judgment must minister to the reception of the Lord Jesus Christ and his gospel.

III. The apostles publish these assurances for our satisfaction, v. 2, 3. It became the apostles to open to the disciples the evidence by which they were led. It concerned the disciples to be well assured of the truth of the institution they had embraced. They should see the evidences of their holy religion.

IV. The reason of the apostle's asserting this summary of sacred faith.

1. That the believers of it may be advanced to the same happiness with them (with the apostles themselves), v. 3. It is communion with heaven, and in blessings that come thence and tend thither. There is a communion (or common participation of privilege and dignity) belonging to all saints, from the highest apostle to the lowest believer. What it is and where

Vss. 1-10. The Writer's Authority as an Eyewitness to the Gospel Facts, Having Seen, Heard, and Handled Him Who Was from the Beginning: His Object in Writing: His Message. If We Would Have Fellowship with Him, We Must Walk in Light, as He is Light. 1. Instead of a formal, John adopts a virtual address (cf. vs. 4). To wish joy to the reader was the ancient customary address. The sentence begun in vs. 1 is broken off by the parenthetic vs. 2, and is resumed at vs. 3 with the repetition of some words from vs. 1. That which was—not "began to be," but was essentially (Greek, een, not egeneto) before He was manifested (vs. 2); answering to "Him that is from the beginning" (ch. 2:13); so John's Gospel, 1:1, "In the beginning was the Word." Proverbs 8:23, "I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was." we—apostles. heard . . . seen . . . looked upon . . . handled—a series rising in gradation. Seeing is a more convincing proof than hearing of; handling, than even seeing. "Have heard . . . have seen" (perfects), as a possession still abiding with us; but in Greek (not as English Version "have," but simply) "looked upon" (not perfect, as of a continuing thing, but aorist, past time) while Christ the incarnate Word was still with us. hands . . . handled—Thomas and the other disciples on distinct occasions after the resurrection. John himself had leaned on Jesus' breast at the last supper. Contrast the wisest of the heathen feeling after (the same Greek as here; groping after with the hands) if haply they might find God. This proves against Socinians he is here speaking of the personal incarnate Word, not of Christ's teaching from the beginning of His official life. of—"concerning"; following "heard." "Heard" is the verb most applying to the purpose of the Epistle, viz. the truth which John had heard concerning the Word of life, i.e., (Christ) the Word who is the life. "Heard," viz., from Christ Himself, including all Christ's teachings about Himself. the life—Jesus, "the Word of life." was manifested—who had previously been "with the Father." show—Translate as in vs. 3, "declare" (cf. vs. 5). Declare is the general term; write is the particular (vs. 4). that eternal life—Greek, "the life which is eternal." As the Epistle begins, so it ends with "eternal life," which we shall ever enjoy with, and in, Him who is "the life eternal." which—Greek, "the which," the beforementioned (vs. 1) life which was with the Father "from the beginning" (cf. John 1:1). This proves the distinctness of the First and Second Persons in the one Godhead. 3. That which we have seen and heard—resumed from vs. 1, wherein the sentence, being interrupted by vs. 2, parenthesis, was left incomplete. declare we unto you—Oldest MSS. add also; unto you also who have not seen or heard Him. that ye also may have fellowship with us—that ye also who have not seen, may have the fellowship with us which we who have seen enjoy; what that fellowship consists in he proceeds to state, "Our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son." Faith realizes what we have not seen as spiritually visible; not till by faith we too have seen, do we

1. That which was from the beginning. That glorious Personage, Jesus Christ the Lord, who was from eternity; Him, being manifested in the flesh, we have heard proclaim the doctrine of eternal life; with our own eyes have we seen Him, not transiently, for we have looked upon Him frequently;

and our hands have handled—frequently touched—His person; and we have had every proof of the identity and reality of this glorious Being that our senses of hearing, seeing, and feeling could possibly require.

2. For the life was manifested. The Lord Jesus, who is the Creator of all things and the Fountain of life, was manifested in the flesh, and we have seen Him, and in consequence bear witness to Him as the Fountain and Author of eternal life. For He who was from eternity with the Father was manifested unto us, His apostles, and to the whole of the Jewish nation, and preached that doctrine of eternal life which I have before delivered to the world in my gospel, and which I now further confirm by this Epistle.

3. That which we have seen and heard. We deliver nothing by hearsay, nothing by tradition, nothing from conjecture; we have had the fullest certainty of all that we write and preach. That ye also may have fellowship with us. That you may be preserved from all false doctrine, and have a real "participation" with us, apostles of the grace, peace, love, and life of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

it is: And truly our fellowship (or communion) is with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. See to what the gospel revelation tends—to advance us far above sin and earth and to carry us to blessed communion with the Father and the Son. See for what end the eternal life was made flesh—that he might advance us to eternal life in communion with the Father and himself.

2. That believers may be enlarged and advanced in holy joy, v. 4. The mystery of the Christian religion is for the joy of mortals. Those live beneath the use and end of the Christian revelation who are not filled with spiritual joy. Were they confirmed in their holy faith, how would they rejoice!

I. Here is the message from the Lord Jesus (v. 5). The apostles are the messengers of the Lord Jesus; it is their honour to bring his messages to the world. He that put on human nature will honour earthen vessels. It was the ambition of the apostles faithfully to deliver the messages they had received. The present one is this—That God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. He is all that beauty and perfection that can be represented to us by light. There is no defect or imperfection, v. 5. It is meet that to this dark world the great God should be represented as pure and perfect light. What more could be included in one word than in this, God is light, and in him is no darkness at all?

II. There is a just conclusion to be drawn from this message. 1. For the conviction of such professors as have no true fellowship with God: If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. To walk in darkness is to live and act according to such ignorance, and erroneous practice, as are contrary to our holy religion. They may profess to have communion with God; and yet their lives may be irreligious, immoral, and impure. To such the apostle would not fear to give the lie: They lie, and do not the truth. Their practice gives their profession and pretences the lie, and demonstrates the folly and falsehood of them. 2. For the conviction and consequent satisfaction of those that are near to God: But, if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. Those that so walk show that they know God. Then we have fellowship one with another, they with us and we with them, and both with God. The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. His blood procures for us those sacred influences by which sin is to be subdued more and more, till it is quite abolished.

Verses 8–10

I. The apostle, having supposed that even those of this heavenly communion have yet their sin, proceeds here to justify that supposition, v. 8. We must beware of deceiving ourselves in denying or excusing our sins. The Christian religion is the religion of sinners.

know all the excellency of the true Solomon. He Himself is ours; He in us and we in Him. We are "partakers of the divine nature." We know God only by having fellowship with Him; He may thus be known, but not comprehended. The repetition of "with" before the "Son," distinguishes the persons, while the fellowship or communion with both Father and Son, implies their unity.

4. these things—and none other, viz., this whole Epistle. write we unto you—Some oldest MSS. omit "unto you," and emphasize "we." Thus the antithesis is between "we" (apostles and eye-witnesses) and "your." We write thus that your joy may be full. Other oldest MSS. and versions read "OUR joy," viz., that our joy may be filled full by bringing you also into fellowship with the Father and Son. 5. First division of the body of the Epistle (cf. Introduction). declare—Greek, "announce"; report in turn; a different Greek word from vs. 3. As the Son announced the message heard from the Father as His apostle, so the Son's apostles announce what they have heard from the Son. John nowhere uses the term "Gospel"; but the witness or testimony, the word, the truth, and here the message. God is light—What light is in the natural world, that God, the source of even material light, is in the spiritual, the fountain of wisdom, purity, beauty, joy, and glory. As all material life and growth depends on light, so all spiritual life and growth depends on GOD. As God here, so Christ, in ch. 2:8, is called "the true light." no darkness at all—strong negation; Greek, "No, not even one speck of darkness"; no ignorance, error, untruthfulness, sin, or death. John heard this from Christ, not only in express words, but in His acted words, viz., His is whole manifestation in the flesh as "the brightness of the Father's glory." Christ Himself was the embodiment of "the message," representing fully in all His sayings, doings, and sufferings, Him who is LIGHT. 6. say—profess. have fellowship with him—(vs. 3). The essence of the Christian life. walk—in inward and outward action, whithersoever we turn ourselves [BENGEL]. in darkness—Greek, "in the darkness"; opposed to "the light" (cf. ch. 2:8, 11). lie—(ch. 2:4). do not—in practice, whatever we say. the truth—(Eph. (4: 21; John 3:21). 7. Cf. Ephesians 5:8, 11-14. "WE WALK"; "God IS (essentially in His very nature as 'the light,' vs. 5) in the light." WALKING in the light, the element in which God Himself IS, constitutes the test of fellowship with Him. Christ, like us, walked in the light (ch. 2:6). ALFORD notices, Walking in the light as He is in the light, is no mere imitation of God, but an identity in the essential element of our daily walk with the essential element of God's eternal being. we have fellowship one with another—and of course with God (to be understood from vs. 6). Without having fellowship with God there can be no true and Christian fellowship one with another (cf. vs. 3). and—as the result of "walking in the light, as He is in the light." the blood of Jesus . . . cleanseth us from all sin—daily contracted through the sinful weakness of the flesh, and the power of Satan and the world. He is speaking not of justification through His blood once for all, but of the present sanctification ("cleanseth" is present) which the believer, walking in the light and having fellowship with God and the saints, enjoys as His privilege. Cf. John 13:10, Greek, "He that has been bathed, needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." Cf. vs. 9, "cleanse us from all unrighteousness," a further step besides "forgiving us our sins." Christ's blood is the cleansing mean, whereby gradually, being already justified and in fellowship with God, we become clean from all sin which would mar our fellowship with God. Faith applies the cleansing, purifying blood. Some oldest MSS. omit "Christ"; others retain it. 8. The confession of sins is a necessary consequence of "walking in the light" (vs. 7). that we have no sin—"HAVE," not "have had," must refer not to the past sinful life while unconverted, but to the present state wherein believers have sin even still. Observe, "sin" is in the singular; "(confess our) sins" (vs. 9) in the plural. Sin refers to the corruption of the old man still present in us, and the stain created by the actual sins flowing from that old nature in us. To confess our need of cleansing from present sin is essential to "walking in the light"; so far is the presence of some sin incompatible with our in the main "walking in light." But the believer hates, confesses, and longs to be delivered from all sin, which is darkness. "They who defend their sins, will see in the great day whether their sins can defend them." deceive ourselves—We cannot deceive God; we only make ourselves to err from the right path. the truth—(ch. 2:4). True

4. That your joy may be full. You have already tasted that the Lord is good; but I am now going to show you the height of your Christian calling, that your happiness may be complete, being thoroughly cleansed from all sin, and filled with the fullness of God.

5. This then is the message. This is the grand principle on which all depends, which we have heard from him.

God is light—the Source of wisdom, knowledge, holiness, and happiness; and in him is no darkness at all—no ignorance, no imperfection, no sinfulness, no misery.

6. If we say that we have fellowship. Having fellowship, "communion," with God necessarily implies a partaking of the divine nature. Now if a man profess to have such communion, and walk in darkness—live an irreligious and sinful life—he lies in the profession which he makes, and does not the truth—does not walk according to the directions of the gospel.

7. But if we walk in the light. If, having received the principle of holiness from Him, we live a holy and righteous life, deriving continual light, power, and life from Him, then we have fellowship one with another; that is, we have communion with God, and God condescends to hold communion with us.

The blood of Jesus Christ. The meritorious efficacy of His passion and death has purged our consciences from dead works, and cleanseth us, "continues to cleanse us," i.e., to keep clean what it has made clean. And being cleansed from all sin is what every believer should look for, what he has a right to expect, and what he must have in this life in order to be prepared to meet his God. Christ is not a partial Saviour; He saves to the uttermost, and He cleanses from all sin.

8. If we say that we have no sin. This is tantamount to v. 10: "If we say that we have not sinned." "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God"; and therefore every man needs a Saviour, such as Christ is. It is very likely that the heretics, against whose evil doctrines the apostle writes, denied that they had any sin or needed any Saviour. Indeed the Gnostics even denied that Christ suffered; the Aeon, or Divine Being that dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, according to them, left Him when He was taken by the Jews; and He being but a common man, His sufferings and death had neither merit nor efficacy. We deceive ourselves. By supposing that we have no guilt, no sinfulness, and consequently have no need of the blood of Christ as an atoning sacrifice. The truth is not in us. We have no knowledge of the gospel of Jesus, the whole of which is founded on this most awful truth—all have sinned, all are guilty, all are unholy; and none can redeem himself. Hence it was necessary that Jesus Christ should become incarnated and suffer and die to bring men to God.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The way to the continued pardon of the believer's sin. 1. His duty in order thereto, v. 9. Penitent confession and acknowledgment of sin are the means of his deliverance from his guilt. 2. His encouragement thereto. This is the righteousness, and clemency of God, to whom he makes such confession, v. 9. God is faithful to his word, wherein he has promised forgiveness to penitent believing confessors. He is clement and gracious also, and so will forgive, to the contrite confessor, all his sins and cleanse him from the guilt of all unrighteousness.

The Christian life is a life of continued repentance, of continual faith in, thankfulness for, and love to the Redeemer, v. 10. The denial of our sin not only deceives ourselves, it challenges his veracity. God has given his testimony to the continued sinfulness of the world, by providing a sacrifice for sin, that will be needed in all ages, and to the continued sinfulness of believers themselves by requiring them continually to confess their sins.

faith. "The truth respecting God's holiness and our sinfulness, which is the very first spark of light in us, has no place in us" [ALFORD]. 9. confess—with the lips, speaking from a contrite heart; involving also confession to our fellow men of offenses committed against them. he—God. faithful—to His own promises; "true" to His word. just—Not merely the mercy, but the justice or righteousness of God is set forth in the redemption of the penitent believer in Christ. God's promises of mercy, to which He is faithful, are in accordance with His justice. to—Greek, "in order that." His forgiving us our sins and cleansing us from . . . is in furtherance of the ends of His eternal faithfulness and justice. forgive—remitting the guilt. cleanse—purify from all filthiness, so that henceforth we more and more become free from the presence of sin through the Spirit of sanctification (cf. Heb. 9:14; and above, Note, vs. 7). unrighteousness—offensive to Him who "is just" or righteous; called "sin," vs. 7, because "sin is the transgression of the law," and the law is the expression of God's righteousness, so that sin is unrighteousness.

10. Parallel to vs. 8. we have not sinned—referring to the commission of actual sins, even after regeneration and conversion; whereas in vs. 8, "we have no sin," refers to the present GUILT remaining (until cleansed) from the actual sins committed, and to the SIN of our corrupt old nature still adhering to us. The perfect "have . . . sinned" brings down the commission of sins to the present time, not merely sins committed before, but since, conversion. we make him a liar—a gradation; vs. 6, "we lie"; vs. 8, "we deceive ourselves"; worst of all, "we make Him a liar," by denying His word that all men are sinners (cf. ch. 5:10). his word is not in us—"His word," which is "the truth" (vs. 8), accuses us truly; by denying it we drive it from our hearts (cf. John 5:38). Our rejection of "His word" in respect to our being sinners, implies as the consequence our rejection of His word and will revealed in the law and Gospel as a whole; for these throughout rest on the fact that we have sinned, and have sin.

ADAM CLARKE

9. If we confess our sins. If, from a deep sense of our guilt, impurity, and helplessness, we humble ourselves before God, acknowledging our iniquity, His holiness, and our own utter helplessness, and implore mercy for His sake who has died for us. He is faithful, because to such He has promised mercy, Ps. xxxii. 5; Prov. xxviii. 13; and just, for Christ has died for us, and thus made an atonement to the divine justice; so that God can now be just, and yet the Justifier of him who believes in Jesus. And to cleanse us from all unrigheousness. Not only to forgive the sin, but to purify the heart. Observe, (1) Sin exists in the soul after two modes or forms: (a) In guilt, which requires forgiveness or pardon; (b) In pollution, which requires cleansing. (2) Guilt, to be forgiven, must be confessed; and pollution, to be cleansed, must be also confessed. In order to find mercy, a man must know and feel himself to be a sinner, that he may fervently apply to God for pardon; in order to get a clean heart, a man must know and feel its depravity, acknowledge and deplore it before God, in order to be fully sanctified. (3) Few are pardoned, because they do not feel and confess their sins; and few are sanctified or cleansed from all sin, because they do not feel and confess their own sore, and the plague of their hearts. (4) As the blood of Jesus Christ, the merit of His passion and death, applied by faith, purges the conscience from all dead works, so the same cleanses the heart from all unrighteousness. (5) As all unrighteousness is sin, so he that is cleansed from all unrighteousness is cleansed from all sin. To attempt to evade this, and plead for the continuance of sin in the heart through life, is ungrateful, wicked, and even blasphemous; for as he who says he has not sinned, v. 10, makes God a liar, who has declared the contrary through every part of His revelation; so he that says the blood of Christ either cannot or will not cleanse us from all sin in this life gives also the lie to his Maker, who has declared the contrary, and thus shows that the word, the doctrine of God, is not in him. Reader, it is the birthright of every child of God to be cleansed from all sin, to keep himself unspotted from the world, and so to live as nevermore to offend his Maker. All things are possible to him that believes, because all things are possible to the infinitely meritorious blood and energetic Spirit of the Lord Jesus.

CHAPTER 2

He gives them both dissuasion and support.

1. Dissuasion. He would leave no room for sin, v. 1. The design of this letter is to dissuade and drive them from sin. See the familiar affectionate compellation with which he introduces his admonition. Certainly the gospel most prevailed where such ministerial love most abounded.

II. The believer's support and relief in case of sin, v. 1. Believers themselves have yet their sins. There are some who, though they really sin, yet, in comparison with others, are said not to sin.

And this must be the support and refuge of believers: We have an Advocate. Here is an advocate in heaven and with the Father. The Judge with whom our advocate pleads is the Father. He who was our Judge in the legal court (the court of the violated law) is our Father in the gospel court, the court of heaven and of grace. His throne or tribunal is the mercy-seat. Our advocate is recommended to us upon these considerations: 1. By his person and personal names. It is Jesus Christ the Son of the Father, one anointed by the Father for the whole work of salvation, and consequently for that of the intercessor.

Vss. 1-29. THE ADVOCACY OF CHRIST IS OUR ANTIDOTE TO SIN WHILE WALKING IN THE LIGHT; FOR TO KNOW GOD, WE MUST KEEP HIS COMMANDMENTS AND LOVE THE BRETHREN, AND NOT LOVE THE WORLD, NOR GIVE HEED TO ANTICHRISTS, AGAINST WHOM OUR SAFETY IS THROUGH THE INWARD ANOINTING OF GOD TO ABIDE IN GOD: SO AT CHRIST'S COMING WE SHALL NOT BE ASHAMED. 1. (Ch. 5:18). My little children—The diminutive expresses the tender affection of an aged pastor and spiritual father. My own dear children, i.e., sons and daughters (Note, vs. 12). these things—(ch. 1:6-10). My purpose in writing what I have just written is not that you should abuse them as giving a license to sin but, on the contrary, "in order that ye may not sin at all" (the Greek aorist implying the absense not only of the habit, but of single acts of sin [ALFORD]).

And . . .—connected with the former; Furthermore, "if any man sin," let him, while loathing and condemning it, not fear to go at once to God, the Judge, confessing it, for "we have an Advocate with Him." He is speaking of a BELIEVER'S occasional sins of infirmity through Satan's fraud and malice. The use of "we" immediately afterwards implies that we all are liable to this, though not necessarily constrained to sin. we have an advocate—Advocacy is God's family blessing; other blessings He grants to good and bad alike, but justification, sanctification, continued intercession, and peace, He grants to His children alone. advocate—Greek, "paraclete," the same term as is applied to the Holy Ghost, as the "other Comforter"; showing the unity of the Second and Third Persons of the Trinity. Christ is the Intercessor for us above; and, in His absence, here below the Holy Ghost is the other Intercessor in us. Christ's advocacy is inseparable from the Holy Spirit's comfort and working in us, as the spirit of intercessory prayer. righteous—As our "advocate,"

1. My little children. "My beloved children"; the address of an affectionate father to children whom he tenderly loves. The term also refers to the apostle's authority as their spiritual father, and their obligation to obey as his spiritual children. That ye sin not. This is the language of the whole Scripture; of every dispensation, ordinance, institution, doctrine, and word of God.

And if any man sin. If, through ignorance, inexperience, the violence of temptation, unwatchfulness, you have fallen into sin and grieve the Spirit of God, do not continue in the sin nor under the guilt; do not despair of being again restored to the favor of God. Your case, it is true, is deeply deplorable, but not desperate; there is still hope, for—we have an advocate with the Father. We still have Him before the throne who died for our offenses and rose again for our justification; and there He makes intercession for us.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. By his qualification for the office. It is Jesus Christ the righteous. The clients are guilty; their innocence and legal righteousness cannot be pleaded. It is the advocate's own righteousness that he must plead for the criminals. He has been righteous to the death, righteous for them. Upon this score he pleads, that the clients' sins may not be imputed to them. 3. By the plea he has to make, the ground and basis of his advocacy, v. 2. He is the propitiatory sacrifice. The Mediator of intercession, the Advocate for us, is the Mediator of redemption, the propitiation for our sins. It is his propitiation that he pleads. He ever lives to make intercession for those that come to God through him.

4. By the extent of his plea. It is not confined to one nation, v. 2; not only for the past, or us present believers, but for the sins of all who shall hereafter come to God through him. The extent and intent of the Mediator's death reach to all tribes, nations, and countries.

Here now succeeds the trial or test of our light and of our love.

I. The trial of our light, v. 3. Divine light and knowledge are the beauty and improvement of the mind. Young Christians are apt to magnify their new light and applaud their own knowledge; and old ones are apt to suspect the sufficiency and fulness of their knowledge. Here is the evidence of the soundness of our knowledge, if it constrain us to keep God's commandments.

A careful conscientious obedience to his commands shows that the apprehension and knowledge of these things are graciously impressed upon the soul; and therefore it must follow in the reverse that he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, v. 4. A disobedient life is the confutation and shame of pretended religious knowledge.

II. The trial of our love, v. 5. To keep the word of God, or of Christ, is sacredly to attend thereto in all the conduct and motion of life; in him that does so is the love of God perfected. The phrase denotes here our love to God; so v. 15, so ch. iii. 17. We know that we belong to him, and that we are united to him by that Spirit which assists us to this obedience; and if we acknowledge our relation to him, and our union with him, it must have this continued enforcement upon us: He that saith he abideth in him ought himself to walk even as he walked, v. 6. Those who profess to be on his side, and to abide with him, must walk with him, walk after his pattern and example.

The precept of fraternal love is recommended,

I. As an old one, v. 7. The precept of love must be as old as human nature. And so it is the old commandment.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Christ is not a mere suppliant petitioner. He pleads for us on the ground of justice, or righteousness, as well as mercy. Though He can say nothing good of us, He can say much for us. It is His righteousness, or obedience to the law, and endurance of its full penalty for us, on which He grounds His claim for our acquittal. The sense therefore is, "in that He is righteous"; in contrast to our sin ("if any man sin"). 2. And he—Greek, "And Himself." He is our all-prevailing Advocate, because He is *Himself "the propitiation"; abstract, as in I Corinthians 1:30: He is to us all that is needed for propitiation "in behalf of our sins"; the propitiatory sacrifice, provided by the Father's love, removing the estrangement, and appeasing the righteous wrath, on God's part, against the sinner. "There is no incongruity that a father should be offended with that son whom he loveth, and at that time offended with him when he loveth him" [BISHOP PEARSON]. The only other place in the New Testament where Greek "propitiation" occurs, is ch. 4:10; it answers in LXX to Hebrew caphar, to effect an atonement or reconciliation with God; and in Ezekiel 44:29, to the sin offering. In Romans 3:25, Greek, it is "propitiatory," i.e., the mercy seat, or lid of the ark whereon God, represented by the Shekinah glory above it, met His people, represented by the high priest who sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice on it. and—Greek, "yet." ours—believers: not Jews, in contrast to Gentiles; for he is not writing to Jews (ch. 5:21). also for the sins of the whole world—Christ's advocacy is limited to believers (vs. 1; ch. 1:7): His propitiation extends as widely as sin extends: Note, II Peter 2:1, "denying the Lord that bought them." "The whole world" cannot be restricted to the believing portion of the world (cf. ch. 4:14; and "the whole world," (ch. 5:19). "Thou, too, art part of the world, so that thine heart cannot deceive itself and think, The Lord died for Peter and Paul, but not for me" [LUTHER]. 3. hereby—Greek, "in this." "It is herein, and herein only, that we know (present) that we have knowledge of (perfect, once-for-all obtained and continuing knowledge of) Him" (vss. 4, 13, 14). Tokens whereby to discern grace are frequently given in this Epistle. The Gnostics, by the Spirit's prescient forewarning, are refuted, who boasted of knowledge, but set aside obedience. "Know Him," viz., as "the righteous" (vss. 1, 29); our "Advocate and Intercessor." keep—John's favorite word, instead of "do," lit., "watch", "guard," and "keep safe" as a precious thing; observing so as to keep. So Christ Himself. Not faultless conformity, but hearty acceptance of, and willing subjection to, God's whole revealed will, is meant. commandments—injunctions of faith, love, and obedience. John never uses "the law" to express the rule of Christian obedience: he uses it as the Mosaic law. 4. I know—Greek, "I have knowledge of (perfect) Him." Cf. with this verse ch. 1:8. 5. Not merely repeating the proposition, vs. 3, or asserting the merely opposite alternative to vs. 4, but expanding the "know Him" of vs. 3, into "in Him, verily (not as a matter of vain boasting) is the love of (i.e. towards) God perfected," and "we are in Him." Love here answers to knowledge in vs. 3. In proportion as we love God, in that same proportion we know Him, and vice versa, until our love and knowledge shall attain their full maturity of perfection. 5. his word—His word is one (Note, ch. 1:5), and comprises His "commandments," which are many (vs. 3). hereby—in our progressing towards this ideal of perfected love and obedience. There is a gradation: vs. 3, "know Him"; vs. 5, "we are in Him"; vs. 6, "abideth in Him"; respectively, knowledge, fellowship, abiding constancy [BENGEL]. 6. abideth—implying a condition lasting, without intermission, and without end. He that saith . . . ought—so that his deeds may be consistent with his words. even as he—Believers readily supply the name, their hearts being full of Him (cf. John 20:15). "Even as He walked" when on earth, especially in respect to love. John delights in referring to Christ as the model man, with the words, "Even as He. . . ." "It is not Christ's walking on the sea, but His ordinary walk, that we are called on to imitate" [LUTHER]. 7. Brethren—The oldest MSS. and versions read instead, "Beloved," appropriate to the subject here, love. no new commandment—viz., love, the main principle of walking as Christ walked (vs. 6), and that commandment, of which one exemplification is presently given, vss. 9, 10, the love of brethren. ye had from the beginning—from the time that ye first heard the Gospel word preached. 8. a new commandment—It was "old," in that Christians as such had heard it from the first; but "new" (Greek, kaine, not nea: new and different from the old legal precept)

ADAM CLARKE

He is the righteous; He who suffered, "the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." Do not therefore despair, but have immediate recourse to God through Him.

2. And he is the propitiation, the "atoning sacrifice," for our sins. This is the proper sense of the word as used in the Septuagint, where it often occurs; and is the translation of asham, an "oblation for sin," Amos viii. 14; chattath, a "sacrifice for sin," Ezek. xliv. 27; kippur, an "atonement," Nom. v. 8. The word is used only here and in chap. iv. 10.

And not for ours only. It is not for us apostles that He has died, nor exclusively for the Jewish people, but for the whole world, Gentiles as well as Jews, all the descendants of Adam. The apostle does not say that He died for any select part of the inhabitants of the earth, but for all mankind, and the attempt to limit this is a violent outrage against God and His Word. For the meaning of the word which we here translate "advocate" see the note on John xiv. 16.

3. And hereby we do know that we know him. If we keep the commandments of God, loving Him with all our hearts, and our neighbors as ourselves, we have the fullest proof that we have the true saving knowledge of God and His Christ. The Gnostics pretended to much knowledge, but their knowledge left them in possession of all their bad passions and unholy habits; they therefore gave no proof that they had known either God or His Son, Jesus; nor is any man properly acquainted with God who is still under the power of his sins.

4. He that saith, I know him. This is a severe blow against those false teachers, and against all pretenders to religious knowledge, who live under the power of their sins; and against all antinomians, and false boasters in the righteousness of Christ as a covering for their personal unholiness. They are all liars, and no truth of God is in them.

5. But whoso keepeth his word. Conscientiously observes His doctrine, the spirit and letter of the religion of Christ. Is the love of God perfected. The design of God's love in sending Jesus Christ into the world to die for the sin of man "is accomplished" in that man who receives the doctrine and applies for the salvation provided for him. That we are in him. That we have entered into His spirit and views, received His salvation, have been enabled to walk in the light, and have communion with Him by the Holy Spirit.

6. Abideth in him. He who not only professes to have known Christ, but also that he has communion with Him and abides in His favor, should prove the truth of his profession by walking as Christ walked; living a life of devotion and obedience to God, and of benevolence and beneficence to his neighbor. Thus Christ walked; and He has left us an example that we should follow His steps. To "be in Christ," v. 5, is to be converted to the Christian faith, and to have received the remission of sins. To "abide in Christ," v. 6, is to continue in that state of salvation, growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

7. Brethren, I write no new commandment. There seems a contradiction between this and the next verse. But the apostle appears to speak, not so much of any difference in the essence of the precept itself, as in reference to the degrees of light and grace belonging to the Mosaic and Christian dispensations. It was ever the command of God that man should receive His light, walk by that light, and love Him and one another. But this commandment was renewed by Christ with much latitude and spirituality of meaning; and also with much additional light to see its extent, and grace to observe it. It may therefore be called the "old commandment," which was "from the beginning"; and also a "new commandment" revealed afresh and illustrated by Christ. Instead of brethren, a number of MSS., along with several of the fathers, have "beloved." This is without doubt the true reading.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. As a new one: "Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him, and it is true in you; this law is in some measure written upon your hearts; you are taught of God to love one another, and that because the darkness is past, your deplorable ignorance of God and of Christ is now past, and the true light now shineth" (v. 8). We should see that that grace which was true in Christ be true also in us. The more our darkness is past, and gospel light shines unto us, the deeper should our subjection be to the commandments of our Lord, whether considered as old or new.

Another trial of our Christian light; before, it was to be approved by obedience to God; here by Christian love. 1. He who wants such love in vain pretends his light, v. 9. These cannot be swayed by the sense of the love of Christ to their brethren, and therefore remain in their dark state. 2. He who is governed by such love approves his light to be good and genuine, v. 10. He sees how meet it is that we should love those whom Christ hath loved; there is no occasion of stumbling in him (v. 10). Christian love teaches us highly to value our brother's soul, and to dread everything that will be injurious to his innocence and peace. 3. Hatred is a sign of spiritual darkness, v. 11. He then who is possessed with malignity towards a Christian brother must needs be destitute of spiritual light; consequently he walks in darkness, and he knows not whither he goes, because darkness hath blinded his eyes, v. 11. It is the Lord Jesus that is the great Master of love: it is his school that is the school of love. His disciples are the disciples of love, and his family must be the family of love.

I. All Christians are not of the same standing and stature; there are babes in Christ, there are grown men, and old disciples. There are precepts and a correspondent obedience common to them all, as particularly mutual love and contempt of the world.

1. The lowest in the Christian school, v. 12. There are novices in religion, babes in Christ. He addresses the children in Christianity, (1) Because their sins were forgiven them for his name's sake, v. 12. The youngest sincere disciple is pardoned. Sins are forgiven either for God's name's sake, or for Christ's name's sake, and those that are forgiven of God are strongly obliged to relinquish this world. (2) Because of their knowledge of God, v. 13. We say, It is a wise child that knows his father. These children cannot but know theirs. Those that know the Father may well be withdrawn from the love of this world.

2. To those of the highest station, to the seniors in Christianity (v. 13, 14). The apostle immediately passes from the bottom to the top of the school. Those that are of longest standing in Christ's school have need of further advice and instruction. None are too old to learn. He writes to them upon the account of their knowledge, v. 13, 14. Those who know him that was from the beginning may well be induced thereby to relinquish this world.

in that it was first clearly promulgated with Christianity; though the inner spirit of the law was love even to enemies, yet it was enveloped in some bitter precepts which caused it to be temporarily almost unrecognized, till the Gospel came. Christianity first put love to brethren on the new and highest MOTIVE, instinctive love to Him who first loved us, constraining us to love all, even enemies, thereby walking in the steps of Him who loved us when enemies. So Jesus calls it "new," John 13:34, 35, "Love one another as I have loved you" (the new motive); 15:12. which thing is true in him and in you—"In Christ all things are always true, and were so from the beginning; but in Christ and in us conjointly the commandment [the love of brethren] is then true when we acknowledge the truth which is in Him, and have the same flourishing in us" [BENGEL]. darkness is past—rather, as in ch. 2:17, "is passing away." It shall not be wholly "past" until "the Sun of righteousness" shall arise visibly; "the light is now shining" already, though but partially until the day bursts forth. 9-11. There is no mean between light and darkness, love and hatred, life and death, God and the world: wherever spiritual life is, however weak, there darkness and death no longer reign, and love supplants hatred; and Luke 9:50 holds good: wherever life is not, there death, darkness, the flesh, the world, and hatred, however glossed over and hidden from man's observation, prevail; and Luke 11:23 holds good. "Where love is not, there hatred is; for the heart cannot remain a void" [BENGEL]. in the light—as his proper element. his brother—his neighbor, and especially those of the Christian brotherhood. The very title "brother" is a reason why love should be exercised. even until now—notwithstanding that "the true light already has begun to shine" (vs. 8). 10. Abiding in love is abiding in the light; for the Gospel light not only illumines the understanding, but warms the heart into love. none occasion of stumbling—In contrast to, "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." "In him who loves there is neither blindness nor occasion of stumbling [to himself]: in him who does not love, there is both blindness and occasion of stumbling. 11. is in darkness ... walketh—"is" marks his continuing STATE: he has never come out of "the (so Greek) darkness; "walketh" marks his OUTWARD WALK and acts. whither—Greek, "where"; including not only the destination to which, but the way whereby. hath blinded—rather as Greek aorist, "blinded" of old. Darkness not only surrounds, but blinds him, and that a blindness of long standing. 12. little children—Greek, "little sons," or "dear sons and daughters"; not the same Greek as in vs. 13, "little children," "infants" (in age and standing). He calls ALL to whom he writes, "little sons" (ch. 2:1, Greek; 2:28; 3:18; 4:4; 5:21); but only in vss. 13 and 18 he uses the term "little children," or "infants." Our Lord, whose Spirit John so deeply drank into, used to His disciples (John 13:33) the term "little sons," or dear sons and daughters; but in John 21:5, "little children." are forgiven—"have been, and are forgiven you": ALL God's sons and daughters alike enjoy this privilege. 13, 14. All three classes are first addressed in the present. "I write"; then in the past (aorist) tense, "I wrote" (not "I have written"; moreover, in the oldest MSS. and versions, in the end of vs. 13, it is past, "I wrote," not as English Version, "I write"). Two classes, "fathers" and "young men," are addressed with the same words each time (except that the address to the young men has an addition expressing the source and means of their victory); but the "little sons" and "little children" are differently addressed. have known—and do know: so the Greek perfect means. The "I wrote" refers not to a former Epistle, but to this Epistle. It was an idiom to put the past tense, regarding the time from the reader's point of view; when he should receive the Epistle the writing would be past. When he uses "I write," he speaks from his own point of view. him that is from the beginning—Christ: "that which was from the beginning." overcome—The fathers, appropriately to their age, are characterized by knowledge. The young men, appropriately to theirs, by activity in conflict. The fathers, too, have conquered; but now their active service is past, and they and the children alike are characterized by knowing (the fathers know Christ, "Him that was from the beginning"; the children know the Father). The first thing that the little children realize is that God is their Father; answering in the parallel clause to "little sons ... your sins are forgiven you for His name's sake," the universal first privilege of

8. Which thing is true in him and in you. It is true that Christ loved the world so well as to lay down His life for it; and it was true in them, in all His faithful followers at that time, who were ready to lay down their lives for the testimony of Jesus. The darkness is past. The total thick darkness of the heathen world and the comparative darkness of the Mosaic dispensation are now passing away, and the pure and superior light of Christianity is now diffusing its beams everywhere. He does not say that the darkness was all gone by, but "is passing away"; he does not say that the fullness of the light had appeared, but it "is now shining," and will shine more and more to the perfect day; for the darkness passes away in proportion as the light shines and increases.

9. He that saith he is in the light. He that professes to be a convert to Christianity, even in the lowest degree. And hateth his brother—not only does not love him, but wills and does him evil, as the Jews did the Gentiles. Is in darkness—has received no saving knowledge of the truth.

10. He that loveth his brother. That is, his neighbor, his fellow creature, whether Jew or Gentile, so as to bear him continual goodwill, and to be ready to do him every kind office. Abideth in the light—not only gives proof that he has received Christ Jesus the Lord, but that he walks in Him, that he retains the grace of his justification, and grows therein. And there is none occasion of stumbling in him. "And there is no stumbling block in him"; he neither gives nor receives offense. Love prevents him from giving any to his neighbor; and love prevents him from receiving any from his neighbor, because it leads him to put the best construction on everything.

11. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness. He is still in his heathen or unconverted state. And walketh in darkness, his conduct being a proof of that state. And knoweth not whither he goeth—having no proper knowledge of God or eternal things; and cannot tell whether he is going to heaven or hell, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes—darkened his whole soul, mind, and heart.

12. I write unto you, little children. "Beloved children" (see on v. 1), those who were probably the apostle's own converts, and members of the church over which he presided. But it may be applied to young converts in general; therefore he says of them that their sins were forgiven them for His name's sake; i.e., on account of Jesus, the Saviour.

13. I write unto you, fathers. By fathers it is very likely that the apostle means persons who had embraced Christianity on its first promulgation in Judea and in the Lesser Asia, some of whom had probably seen Christ in the flesh; for this appears to be what is meant by Ye have known him . . . from the beginning. But him that is from the beginning may mean Jesus Christ in the eternity of His nature; see John i. 1-2. I write unto you, young man. These were confirmed disciples of Christ; persons who were well-grounded in the truth, had been thoroughly exercised in the Christian warfare, were no longer agitated by doubts and fears, but had arrived at the abiding testimony of the Spirit of God in their consciences; hence they are said to have overcome the wicked one, v. 14. They were persons in the prime of life, and in the zenith of their faith and love. I write unto you, little children. A very different term from that used in the twelfth verse, which means "beloved children," as we have already seen. This is another class, and their state is differently described: Ye have known the Father.

3. To the middle age of Christians, v. 13, 14. There are the adults in Christ Jesus. The apostle applies to them, (1) Upon the account of their martial exploits. Dexterous soldiers they are in the camp of Christ, v. 13. Those that are well taught in Christ's school can handle their arms and vanquish the evil one; and those that can vanquish him may be called to vanquish the world too.

(2) Upon the account of their strength, discovered in this their achievement, v. 14. Young men are wont to glory in their strength. It will be their glory, and it will try their strength, to overcome the devil. The same strength must be exerted in overcoming the world as is employed in overcoming the devil. (3) Because of their acquaintance with the word of God, v. 14. Those in whom the word of God dwells are well furnished for the conquest of the world.

II. A caution fundamental to vital practical religion, v. 15. Be crucified to the world. Their love should be reserved for God; throw it not away upon the world. The reasons of this dissuasion and caution.

1. The inconsistency of this love with the love of God, v. 15. The heart of man is narrow, and cannot contain both loves.

2. The prohibition of worldly love or lust; it is not ordained of God, v. 16. This love or lust is not appointed of God but it intrudes itself from the world. The things of the world are distinguished into three classes, according to the three predominant inclinations of depraved nature, (1) There is the lust of the flesh. This lust is usually called luxury. (2) There is the lust of the eyes. This is the lust of covetousness.

(3) There is the pride of life. This is ambition. The objects of these appetites must be abandoned and renounced, v. 16. The Father disallows them. The lust or appetite to these things must be mortified and subdued.

all those really-dear sons of God. Thus this latter clause includes all, whereas the former clause refers to those more especially who are in the first stage of spiritual life, "little children." Of course, these can only know the Father as theirs through the Son (Matt. 11:27). 14. young men . . . strong—made so out of natural weakness, hence enabled to overcome "the strong man armed" through Him that is "stronger." Faith is the victory that overcomes the world. This term "overcome" is peculiarly John's, adopted from his loved Lord. It occurs sixteen times in the Apocalypse, six times in the First Epistle, only thrice in the rest of the New Testament. In order to overcome the world on the ground, and in the strength, of the blood of the Saviour, we must be willing, like Christ, to part with whatever of the world belongs to us: and . . .—the secret of the young men's strength: the Gospel word, clothed with living power by the Spirit who abideth permanently in them; this is "the sword of the Spirit" wielded in prayerful waiting on God. Contrast the mere physical strength of young men, Isaiah 40:30, 31. Oral teaching prepared these youths for the profitable use of the word when written. "Antichrist cannot endanger you (vs. 18), nor Satan tear from you the word of God." the wicked one—who, as "prince of this world," enthrals "the world" (vss. 15-17; ch. 5:19, Greek, "the wicked one"), especially the young. Christ came to destroy this "prince of the world". Believers achieve the first grand conquest over him when they pass from darkness to light, but afterwards they need to maintain a continual keeping of themselves from his assaults, looking to God by whom alone they are kept safe. 15. Love not the world—that lieth in the wicked one (ch. 5:19), whom ye young men have overcome. Having once for all, through faith, overcome the world (ch. 4:4; 5:4), carry forward the conquest by not loving it. "The world" here means "man, and man's world" [ALFORD], in his and its state as fallen from God. "God loved [with the love of compassion] the world," and we should feel the same kind of love for the fallen world; but we are not to love the world with congeniality and sympathy in its alienation from God; we cannot have this latter kind of love for the God-estranged world, and yet have also "the love of the Father in" us. neither—Greek, "nor yet." A man might deny in general that he loved the world, while keenly following some one of THE THINGS IN IT: its riches, honors, or pleasures; this clause prevents him escaping from conviction. any man—therefore the warning, though primarily addressed to the young, applies to all. love of—i.e., towards "the Father." The two, God and the (sinful) world, are so opposed, that both cannot be congenially loved at once. 16. all that is in the world—can be classed under one or other of the three; the world contains these and no more. lust of the flesh—i.e., the lust which has its seat and source in our lower animal nature. Satan tried this temptation the first on Christ: Luke 4:3, "Command this stone that it be made bread." Youth is especially liable to fleshly lusts. lust of the eyes—the avenue through which outward things of the world, riches, pomp, and beauty, inflame us. Satan tried this temptation on Christ when he showed Him the kingdoms of the world in a moment. By the lust of the eyes David (II Sam. 11:2) and Achan fell (Josh. 7:21). Cf. David's prayer, Psalm 119:37; Job's resolve, Psalm 31:1 Matthew 5:28. The only good of worldly riches to the possessor is the beholding them with the eyes. Cf. Luke 14:18, "I must go and SEE it." pride of life—lit., "arrogant assumption": vainglorious display. Pride was Satan's sin whereby he fell and forms the link between the two foes of man, the world (answering to "the lust of the eyes") and the devil (as "the lust of the flesh" is the third foe). Satan tried this temptation on Christ in setting Him on the temple pinnacle that, in spiritual pride and presumption, on the ground of His Father's care, He should cast Himself down. The same three foes appear in the three classes of soil on which the divine seed falls: the wayside hearers, the devil; the thorns, the world; the rocky undersoil, the flesh. The world's awful antitrinity, the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," similarly is presented in Satan's temptation of Eve: "When she saw that the tree was good for food, pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise" (one manifestation of "the pride of life," the desire to know above what God has revealed, Col. 2:8, the pride of unsanctified knowledge). of—does not spring from "the Father" (used in relation to the preceding "little children," vs. 12, or "little sons"). He who is born of God alone turns to God; he who is of the world turns to the world; the sources of

14. The word of God abideth in you. You have not only thoroughly known and digested the divine doctrine, but your hearts are molded into it.

15. Love not the world. The Holy Spirit saw it necessary to caution these against the love of the world, the inordinate desire of earthly things. Covetousness is the predominant vice of old age: Ye "fathers," love not the world. The things which are in the world, its profits, pleasures, and honors, have the strongest allurements for youth; therefore, you "young men, little children, and babes," love not the things of this world. The love of the Father is not in him. The love of God and the love of earthly things are incompatible.

16. For all that is in the world. All that it can boast of, all that it can promise, is only sensual, transient gratification, and even this promise it cannot fulfill; so that its warmest votaries can complain loudest of their disappointment.

Is not of the Father. Nothing of these inordinate attachments either comes from or leads to God. They are of this world; here they begin, flourish, and end. They deprave the mind, divert it from divine pursuits, and render it utterly incapable of spiritual enjoyments.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. The vain and vanishing state of earthly things, v. 17. The things of the world are fading and dying apace.

4. The immortality of the lover of God, v. 17. The object of his love in opposition to the world that passeth away, abideth for ever. Love shall never fail; and he himself is an heir of immortality and endless life.

Verses 18, 19

I. The end is coming, v. 18. It is meet that the disciples should be warned of the haste and end of time.

II. The sign of this last time (v. 18), that many oppose the kingdom of Christ. It should be no great offence nor prejudice to the disciples that there are such antichrists: 1. One great one has been foretold, v. 18. Even now there are many antichrists, the mystery of iniquity already worketh. 2. They were foretold also as the sign of this last time, v. 18.

III. Some account of these seducers or antichrists: "They went out from us (v. 19), from our company and communion." The purest churches may have their apostates. "For, if they had been of us, they would have continued with us (v. 19); had the sacred truth been rooted in their hearts it would have held them with us." Those that apostatize from religion sufficiently indicate that, before, they were hypocrites in religion. But this was done (or they went out) that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us, v. 19. Some of the hypocritical must be manifested here, and that for their own shame and benefit too, in their reduction to the truth.

Verses 20–27

Here, I. The apostle encourages the disciples in this hour of seducers. But you have an unction from the Holy One, and you know all things. 1. The blessing wherewith they were enriched: You have an unction. True Christians are anointed ones, their name intimates as much. They are anointed by the Spirit of grace. 2. From whom this blessing comes—from the Holy One. The Lord Christ disposes of the graces of the divine Spirit, and he anoints the disciples to make them like himself.

3. The effect of this unction: "And thereby you know all things (v. 20), all these things concerning Christ and his religion."

love to God and love to the world, are irreconcilably distinct. 17. the world—with all who are of the world worldly. passeth away—Greek, "is passing away" even now. the lust thereof—in its threefold manifestation (vs. 16). he that doeth the will of God—not his own fleshly will, or the will of the world, but that of God (vss. 3, 6), especially in respect to love. abideth for ever—"even as God also abideth for ever" (with whom the godly is one; cf. Ps. 55:19, "God, even He that abideth of old"): a true comment, which CYPRIAN and LUCIFER have added to the text without support of Greek MSS. In contrast to the three passing lusts of the world, the doer of God's will has three abiding goods, "riches, honor, and life" (Prov. 22:4). 18. Little children—same Greek as vs. 13; children in age. After the fathers and young men were gone, "the last time" with its "many Antichrists" was about to come suddenly on the children. "In this last hour we all even still live" [BENGEL]. Each successive age has had in it some of the signs of "the last time" which precedes Christ's coming, in order to keep the Church in continual waiting for the Lord. The connection with vss. 15-17 is: There are coming those seducers who are of the world (ch. 4:5), and would tempt you to go out from us (vs. 19) and deny Christ (vs. 22). as ye have heard—from the apostles, preachers of the Gospel (e.g., II Thess. 2: 3-10; and in the region of Ephesus, Acts 20:29, 30). shall come—Greek, "cometh," viz., out of his own place. Antichrist is interpreted in two ways: a false Christ (Matt. 24:5, 24), lit., "instead of Christ"; or an adversary of Christ, lit., "against Christ." As John never uses pseudo-Christ, or "false Christ," for Antichrist, it is plain he means an adversary of Christ, claiming to himself what belongs to Christ, and wishing to substitute himself for Christ as the supreme object of worship.

are there—Greek, "there have begun to be"; there have arisen. These "many Antichrists" answer to "the spirit of lawlessness (Greek) doth already work." The Antichristian principle appeared then, as now, in evil men and evil teachings and writings; but still "THE Antichrist" means a hostile person, even as "THE Christ" is a personal Saviour.

19. out from us—from our Christian communion. Not necessarily a formal secession or going out: thus Rome has spiritually gone out, though formally still of the Christian Church. not of us—by spiritual fellowship (ch. 1:3). they would . . . have continued—implying the indefectibility of grace in the elect. "Where God's call is effectual, there will be sure perseverance" [CALVIN]. Still, it is no fatal necessity, but a "voluntary necessity" [DIDYMUS], which causes men to remain, or else go from the body of Christ.

that they were not all of us—This translation would imply that some of the Antichrists are of us! Translate, therefore, "that all (who are for a time among us) are not of us." Cf. I Corinthians 11:19, "There must be heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." For "were" some of the oldest MSS. read "are." Such occasions test who are, and who are not, the Lord's people. 20. But—Greek, "And." He here states the means which they as believers have wherewith to withstand. Antichrists (vs. 18), viz., the chrism (so the Greek: a play upon similar sounds), or "anointing unguent," viz., the Holy Spirit (more plainly mentioned further on, as in John's style, ch. 3:24; 4:13; 5:6), which they ("ye" is emphatical in contrast to those apostates, vs. 19) have "from the Holy One, Christ (John 1:33; 3:34; 15:26; 16:14): "the righteous" (vs. 1), "pure" (ch. 3:3), "the Holy One" (Acts 3:14) "of God"; Mark 1:24. Those anointed of God in Christ alone can resist those anointed with the spirit of Satan, Antichrists, who would sever them from the Father and from the Son. Believers have the anointing Spirit from the Father also, as well as from the Son; even as the Son is anointed therewith by the Father. Hence the Spirit is the token that we are in the Father and in the Son; without it a man is none of Christ's. The material unguent of costliest ingredients, poured on the head of priests and kings, typified this spiritual unguent, derived from Christ, the Head, to us, His members. We can have no share in Him as Jesus, except we become truly Christians, and so be in Him as Christ, anointed with that unction from the Holy One. The Spirit poured on Christ, the Head, is by Him diffused through all the members. "It appears that we all are the body of Christ, because we all are anointed: and we all in Him are both Christ's and Christ, because in some measure the whole Christ is Head and body." and—therefore. ye know all things—needful for acting aright

17. The world passeth away. All these things are continually fading and perishing, and the very state in which they are possessed is changing perpetually. And the lust thereof. The men of this world, their vain pursuits, and delusive pleasures are passing away in their successive generations, and their very memory perishes. But he that doeth the will of God—that seeks the pleasure, profit, and honor that comes from above—shall abide for ever, always happy through time and eternity, because God, the unchangeable Source of felicity, is his Portion.

18. Little children, it is the last time. This is the last dispensation of grace and mercy to mankind.

Antichrist shall come. Who is this antichrist? Any person, thing, doctrine, system of religion, polity, which is opposed to Christ, and to the spirit and spread of His gospel, is antichrist. Many antichrists. Many false prophets, false Messiahs, heretics, and corrupters of the truth. Whereby we know that it is the last time. That time which our Lord has predicted, and of which He has warned us.

19. They went out from us. These heretics had belonged to our Christian assemblies; they professed Christianity, and do so still. They are not Christians; we abhor their conduct and their creed. We never sent them to teach. They were not of us. For a considerable time before they left our assemblies they gave proofs that they had departed from the faith; for if they had been of us, if they had been apostles, and continued in the firm belief of the Christian doctrines, they would not have departed from us to form a sect of themselves. That they were not all of us. These false teachers probably drew many sincere souls away with them; and to this it is probable the apostle alludes when he says, They were not all of us. Some were; others were not.

20. But ye have an unction. The word chrisma signifies, not an unction, but an "ointment," the very thing itself by which anointing is effected; and so it was properly rendered in our former translations. Probably this is an allusion to the holy anointing oil of the law, and to Ps. xlv. 7: "God . . . hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness"; He hath given Thee the plenitude of the Spirit, which none of "thy fellows," none of the prophets, ever received in such abundance. By this it is evident that not only the gifts of the Spirit, but the Holy Spirit himself, is intended. As oil was used among the Asiatics for the inauguration of persons into important offices, and this oil was acknowledged to be an emblem of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, without which the duties of those offices could not be discharged; so it is put here for the Spirit himself, who presided in the Church, and from whom all gifts and graces flowed. The chrism or "ointment" here mentioned is also an allusion to the holy anointing ointment prescribed by God himself, Exod. xxx. 23-25, which was composed of fine myrrh, sweet cinnamon, sweet calamus, cassia lignea, and olive oil. This was an emblem of the gifts and graces of the divine Spirit. Ye know all things. Every truth of God necessary to your salvation and the salvation of man in general, and have no need of that knowledge of which the Gnostics boast.

But although the above is the sense in which this verse is generally understood, yet there is reason to doubt its accuracy. The adjective

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The mind and meaning with which he wrote to them. 1. By way of negation; not as suspecting their knowledge, v. 21. It is good to surmise well concerning our Christian brethren. A just confidence in religious persons may both encourage and contribute to their fidelity. 2. By way of assertion, But because you know it (you know the truth in Jesus), and that no lie is of the truth. Those who know the truth in any respect are thereby prepared to discern what is inconsistent therewith. No lie belongs to religion, either natural or revealed. No lie is of the truth; frauds and impostures then are very unfit means to support and propagate the truth.

III. The apostle further arraigns these seducers. 1. They are liars: Who is a liar, but ye that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? There is no truth so sacred and fully attested but some or other will contradict or deny it. 2. They are direct enemies to God as well as to the Lord Christ, v. 22. He that opposes Christ denies the witness and testimony of the father. The apostle may well infer, Whosoever denies the Son the same has not the Father. But he that acknowledgeth the Son has the Father also, v. 23.

IV. The apostle advises the disciples to continue in the old doctrines at first communicated to them, v. 24. Truth is older than error. The truth concerning Christ, that was at first delivered to the saints, is not to be exchanged for novelties. The Christian truth may plead antiquity, and be recommended thereby.

1. The sacred advantage they will receive by adhering to the primitive truth and faith. (1) They will continue thereby in holy union with God and Christ, v. 24. It is the truth of Christ abiding in us that is the means of severing us from sin and uniting us to the Son of God. (2) They will thereby secure the promise of eternal life, v. 25. Great is the promise that God makes to his faithful adherents. It is eternal life, which none but God can give.

2. The design of the apostle's writing to them. This letter is to fortify them against the deceivers of the age (v. 26), and therefore, if you continue not in what you have heard from the beginning, my writing and service will be in vain.

3. The instructive blessing they had received from heaven, v. 27. True Christians have an inward confirmation of the divine truth they have imbibed. This sacred chrism is commended on these accounts: (1) It is durable and lasting, v. 27. Divine illumination must be something continued. Temptations, snares, and seductions, arise. The anointing must abide. (2) It is better than human instruction, v. 27. You were instructed by us before you were anointed; but now our teaching is nothing in comparison to that. (3) It is a sure evidence of truth, v. 27. The Holy Spirit must needs be the Spirit of truth. The Spirit of truth will not lie; and he teacheth all things. (4) It will preserve those in whom it abides against seducers and their seduction, v. 27. It teaches you to abide in Christ; and, as it teaches you, it secures you.

And now, little children, abide in him, v. 28. He would persuade by love, and prevail by endearment as well as by reason. Those that are anointed by the Lord Jesus are highly obliged to abide with him. This duty of perseverance and constancy is strongly urged: 1. From the consideration of his return at the great day of account, v. 28. It is here taken for granted that the Lord Jesus will come again. This was part of that truth they had heard from the beginning. Those who have continued with him throughout all their temptations shall have confidence, and joy, in the sight of him. On the contrary, those that have deserted him shall be ashamed before him. The apostle includes himself in the number. "Let not us be ashamed of you," as well as, "you will not be ashamed of yourselves."

against Antichrist's seductions, and for Christian life and godliness. In the same measure as one hath the Spirit, in that measure (no more and no less) he knows all these things. 21. because ye know it, and that . . .—Ye not only know what is the truth (concerning the Son and the Father, vs. 13), but also are able to detect a lie as a thing opposed to the truth. For right (a straight line) is the index of itself and of what is crooked [ESTIUS]. The Greek is susceptible of ALFORD'S translation, "Because ye know it, and because no lie is of the truth" (lit., "every lie is excluded from being of the truth"). I therefore wrote (in this Epistle) to point out what the lie is, and who the liars are. 22. a liar—Greek, "Who is the liar?" viz., guilty of the lie just mentioned (vs. 21). that Jesus is the Christ—the grand central truth. He is Antichrist—Greek, "the Antichrist"; not however here personal, but in the abstract; the ideal of Antichrist is "he that denieth the Father and the Son." To deny the latter is virtually to deny the former. Again, the truth as to the Son must be held in its integrity; to deny that Jesus is the Christ, or that He is the Son of God, or that He came in the flesh, invalidates the whole (Matt. 11:27). 23. Greek, "Every one who denieth the Son, hath not the Father either" (ch. 4:2, 3): "inasmuch as God hath given Himself to us wholly to be enjoyed in Christ" [CALVIN]. he—that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also—These words ought not to be in italics, as though they were not in the original: for the oldest Greek MSS. have them. hath—viz., in his abiding possession as his "portion"; by living personal "fellowship." acknowledgeth—by open confession of Christ. 24. Let that—truth respecting the Father and the Son, regarded as a seed not merely dropped in, but having taken root (ch. 3:9). ye—in the Greek standing emphatically at the beginning of the sentence. YE, therefore, acknowledge the Son, and so shall ye have the Father also (vs. 23). from the beginning—from the time of your first hearing the Gospel. remain—Translate as before, "abide." ye also—in your turn, as distinguished from "that which ye have heard," the seed abiding in you. Cf. vs. 27, "the anointing abideth in you . . . ye shall abide in Him." Having taken into us the living seed of the truth concerning the Father and the Son, we become transformed into the likeness of Him whose seed we have taken into us. 25. this is the promise—Eternal life shall be the permanent consummation of thus abiding in the Son and in the Father (vs. 24). he—Greek, "Himself," Christ, "the Son" (cf. ch. 1:1). promised—(John 3:15, 36; 6:40, 47, 57; 17:2, 3). 26. These things—(vss. 18-25). have I written—resumed from vs. 21 and vs. 14. seduce you—i.e., are trying to seduce or lead you into error. 27. But—Greek, "And you (contrasting the believing readers with the seducers; the words "and you" stand prominent, the construction of the sentence following being altered, and no verb agreeing with 'and you' until 'need not') . . . the anointing . . ." (resumed from vs. 20). received of him—(John 1:16). So we "are unto God a sweet savor of Christ." abideth in you—He tacitly thus admonishes them to say, when tempted by seducers, "The anointing abideth in us; we do not need a teacher [for we have the Holy Spirit as our teacher, Jer. 31:34; John 6:45; 16:13]; it teaches us the truth; in that teaching we will abide" [BENGEL]. and—and therefore. God is sufficient for them who are taught of Him; they are independent of all others, though, of course, not declining the Christian counsel of faithful ministers. "Mutual communication is not set aside, but approved of, in the case of those who are partakers of the anointing in one body" [BENGEL]. the same anointing—which ye once for all received, and which now still abides in you. of—"concerning." all things—essential to salvation; the point under discussion. Not that the believer is made infallible, for no believer here receives the Spirit in all its fulness, but only the measure needful for keeping him from soul-destroying error. So the Church, though having the Spirit in her, is not infallible (for many fallible members can never make an infallible whole), but is kept from ever wholly losing the saving truth. no lie—as Antichristian teaching. ye shall abide in him—(vs. 24, end)—even as "the anointing abideth in you." The oldest MSS. read the imperative, "abide in Him." 28. little children—Greek, "little sons," as in vs. 12; believers of every stage and age. abide in him—Christ. John repeats his monition with a loving appellation, as a father addressing dear children. when—lit., "if"; the uncertainty is not as to the fact, but the time. appear—Greek, "be manifested." we—both writer and readers. ashamed before him—lit., "from Him"; shrink back from Him ashamed.

panta, which we translate all things, is most probably in the accusative case singular, having "man," or some such substantive, understood. The verse therefore should be translated: "You have an ointment from the Holy One, and you know or discern every man." This interpretation appears to be confirmed by v. 26, "those who are deceiving or misleading you"; and in the same sense should v. 27 be understood: "But as the same anointing teacheth you," not "of all things," but "of all men." It is plain from the whole tenor of the Epistle that John is guarding the Christians against seducers and deceivers, who were even then disturbing and striving to corrupt the Church.

21. I have not written. It is not because you are ignorant of these things that I write to you, but because you know them, and can by these judge of the doctrines of those false teachers, and clearly perceive that they are liars; for they contradict the truth which you have already received.

22. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? Here we see some of the false doctrines which were then propagated in the world. There were certain persons who, while they acknowledged Jesus to be a divine teacher, denied Him to be the Christ, i.e., the Messiah. He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. He is antichrist who denies the supernatural and miraculous birth of Jesus Christ, who denies Jesus to be the Son of God, and who denies God to be the Father of the Lord Jesus; thus he denies the Father and the Son. The Jews in general, and the Gnostics in particular, denied the miraculous conception of Jesus; with both He was accounted no more than a common man, the son of Joseph and Mary. But the Gnostics held that a divine person, aeon, or angelic being, dwelt in him; but all things else relative to His miraculous generation and divinity they rejected. These were antichrists, who denied Jesus to be the Christ.

23. Whosoever denieth the Son. He who denies Jesus to be the Son of God, and consequently the Christ or Messiah, he hath not the Father—he can have no birth from above; he cannot be enrolled among the children of God, because none can be a child of God but by faith in Christ Jesus.

24. Let that therefore abide in you. Continue in the doctrines concerning the incarnation, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession of the Lord Jesus, which you have heard preached from the beginning by us, His apostles. Ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. You who are preachers shall not only be acknowledged as ministers of the Church of Christ, but be genuine children of God, by faith in the Son of His love; and you all, thus continuing, shall have fellowship with the Father and with the Son.

25. This is the promise. God has promised eternal life to all who believe on Christ Jesus. So they who receive His doctrine, and continue in communion with the Father and the Son, shall have this eternal life.

26. These things have I written. Either meaning the whole Epistle or what is contained in the preceding verses, from the beginning of the eighteenth to the end of the twenty-fifth. Them that seduce you. That is, the "deceivers" that were among them, and who were laboring to pervert the followers of Christ.

27. But the anointing which ye have received. That "ointment," the gifts of the Holy Spirit, mentioned in v. 20. Ye need not that any man teach you. John does not say that those who had once received the teaching of the divine Spirit had no further need of the ministry of the gospel. No, but he says they had no need of such teaching as their false teachers proposed to them; nor of any other teaching that was different from that anointing, i.e., the teaching of the Spirit of God. No man, howsoever holy, wise, or pure, can ever be in such a state as to have no need of the gospel ministry; they who think so give the highest proof that they have never yet learned of Christ or His Spirit. And is truth. Because it is the Spirit of truth, John xvi. 13.

28. And now, little children, "beloved children," abide in him—in Christ Jesus. Let His

2. From the consideration of the dignity of those who still adhere to Christ, v. 29. He that doeth righteousness may here be justly enough assumed as another name for him that abideth in Christ. Such a one must needs be born of him. He is renewed by the Spirit of Christ, after the image of Christ. He that is constant to the practice of religion in trying times gives good evidence that he is born from above, from the Lord Christ.

CHAPTER 3

The apostle,

I. Breaks forth into the admiration of that grace that is the spring of such a wonderful vouchsafement: Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! It is wonderful condescending love of the eternal Father, that such as we should be made and called his sons. Strange, that the holy God is not ashamed to be called our Father, and to call us his sons!

II. Infers the honour of believers above the cognizance of the world, v. 1. Little does the world perceive the happiness of the genuine followers of Christ. Little does the world think that these poor, humble, contemned ones are the favourites of heaven, and will be inhabitants there ere long. Their Lord was here unknown as well as they, v. 1. Let the followers of Christ be content with hard fare here, since they are in a land of strangers, among those who little know them, and their Lord was so treated before them.

III. Exalts these persevering disciples in the prospect of the certain revelation of their state and dignity. 1. Their present honourable relation is asserted, v. 2. We have the nature of sons by regeneration. 2. The glory pertaining to the sonship and adoption is reserved for another world. The sons of God must walk by faith, and live by hope.

3. The time of the revelation of the sons of God is determined: But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him. The sons of God will be known and be made manifest by their likeness to their head.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Contrast "boldness in the day of judgment," ch. 4: 17; cf. ch. 3:21; 5:14. In the Apocalypse (written, therefore, BENGEL thinks, subsequently), Christ's coming is represented as put off to a greater distance. 29. The heading of the second division of the Epistle: "God is righteous; therefore, every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him." Love is the grand feature and principle of "righteousness" selected for discussion, ch. 2:29 to 3:3. If ye know . . . ye know—distinct Greek verbs: "if ye are aware (are in possession of the knowledge) . . . ye discern or apprehend also that. . . ." Ye are already aware that God ("He" includes both "the Father," of whom the believer is born [end of this verse, and ch. 3:1], and "the Son," vss. 1, 23) is righteous, ye must necessarily, thereby, perceive also the consequence of that truth, viz., "that everyone that doeth righteousness (and he alone; lit., the righteousness such as the righteous God approves) is born of Him." The righteous produceth the righteous. We are never said to be born again of Christ, but of God, with whom Christ is one.

VSS. 1-24. DISTINGUISHING MARKS OF THE CHILDREN OF GOD AND THE CHILDREN OF THE DEVIL. BROTHERLY LOVE THE ESSENCE OF TRUE RIGHTEOUSNESS. 1. Behold—calling attention, as to some wonderful exhibition, little as the world sees to admire. This verse is connected with the previous ch. 2:29, thus: All our doing of righteousness is a mere sign that God, of His matchless love, has adopted us as children; it does not save us, but is a proof that we are saved of His grace. what manner of—of what surpassing excellence, how gracious on His part, how precious to us. love . . . bestowed—He does not say that God hath given us some gift, but love itself and the fountain of all honors, the heart itself, and that not for our works or efforts, but of His grace [LUTHER]. that—"what manner of love"; resulting in, proved by, our being. . . . The immediate effect aimed at in the bestowal of this love is, "that we should be called children of God." should be called—should have received the privilege of such a glorious title (though seeming so imaginary to the world), along with the glorious reality. With God to call is to make really to be. Who so great as God? What nearer relationship than that of sons? The oldest MSS. add, "And we ARE so" really. therefore—"on this account," because "we are (really) so." us—the children, like the Father. it knew him not—viz., the Father. "If they who regard not God, hold thee in any account, feel alarmed about thy state" [BENGEL]. Contrast ch. 5:1. The world's whole course is one great act of non-recognition of God. 2. Beloved—by the Father, and therefore by me. now—in contrast to "not yet." We now already are really sons, though not recognized as such by the world, and (as the consequence) we look for the visible manifestation of our sonship, which not yet has taken place. doth not yet appear—Greek, "it hath not yet ('at any time'), Greek aorist) been visibly manifested what we shall be"—what further glory we shall attain by virtue of this our sonship. The "what" suggests a something inconceivably glorious. but—omitted in the oldest MSS. Its insertion in English Version gives a wrong antithesis. It is not, "We do not yet know manifestly what . . ., but we know. . . ." Believers have some degree of the manifestation already, though the world has not. The connection is, The manifestation to the world of what we shall be, has not yet taken place; we know (in general; as a matter of well-assured knowledge; so the Greek) that when (lit., "if"; expressing no doubt as to the fact, but only as to the time; also implying the coming preliminary fact, on which the consequence follows, Mal. 1:6; John 14:3) He (not "it," viz., that which is not yet manifested [ALFORD]) shall be manifested (vs. 5; ch. 2:28), we shall be like Him (Christ; all sons have a substantial resemblance to their father, and Christ, whom we shall be like, is "the express image of the Father's person," so that in resembling Christ, we shall resemble the Father). We wait for the manifestation (lit., the "apocalypse"; the same term as is applied to Christ's own manifestation) of the sons of God. After our natural birth, the new birth into the life of grace is needed, which is to be followed by the new birth into the life of glory; the two latter alike are termed "the regeneration" (Matt. 19:28). The resurrection of our bodies is a kind of coming out of the womb of the earth, and being born into another life. Our first temptation was that we should be like God in knowl-

word and Spirit continually abide in you, and have communion with the Father and the Son. That, when he shall appear, to judge the world, we may have confidence, "freedom of speech, liberty of access, boldness," from a conviction that our cause is good, and that we have had proper ground for exultation; and not be ashamed, confounded, when it appears that those who were brought to Christ Jesus have apostatized.

29. If ye know that he is righteous, that God is a holy God, ye know also, that every one who doeth righteousness, who lives a holy life, following the commandments of God, is born of him, "begotten of Him"—is made a partaker of the divine nature, without which he could neither have a holy heart nor live a holy life. This verse properly belongs to the following chapter and should not be separated from it. The subject is the same, and does not stand in any strict relation to that with which the twenty-eighth verse concludes.

1. Behold, what manner of love. Whole volumes might be written upon this and the following two verses without exhausting the extraordinary subject contained in them, viz., the love of God to man. What manner of love. "What great love," as to both quantity and quality, for these ideas are included in the original term. The length, the breadth, the depth, the height, he does not attempt to describe. The Father hath bestowed. For we had neither claim nor merit that we should be called, that is, "constituted" or "made," the sons of God, who were before children of the wicked one. After "that we might be called," "and we are" is added by several MSS. Therefore the world—the Jews, and all who know not God, and are seeking their portion in this life. Knoweth us not—do not "acknowledge, respect, love, or approve" of us. In this sense the word is here to be understood. We have often seen that this is a frequent use of the term "know," in both Hebrew and Greek, in the Old Testament and also in the New. Because it knew him not. The Jews did not "acknowledge" Jesus; they "approved" neither of Him, His doctrine, nor His manner of life.

2. Now are we the sons of God. He speaks of those who are begotten of God and who work righteousness. And it doth not yet appear what we shall be. "It is not yet manifest"; though we know that we are the children of God, we do not know that state of glorious excellence to which, as such, we shall be raised.

When he shall appear. "When He shall be manifested"; i.e., when He comes the second time, and shall be manifested in His glorified human nature to judge the world. We shall be like him, for our vile bodies shall be made like unto His glorious body; we shall see him as he is, in all the glory and majesty of both the divine and human nature. See Phil. iii. 21; and John xvii. 24: "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory."

MATTHEW HENRY

4. Their likeness to him is argued from the sight they shall have of him: We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. All shall see him, but not as he is, to those in heaven. The wicked shall see him in his frowns; but these shall see him in the smiles and beauty of his face. Their likeness shall enable them to see him as the blessed do in heaven.

IV. Urges to the prosecution of holiness, v. 3. The sons of God know that their Lord is holy and pure. Those then who hope to live with him must study the utmost purity, their hope of heaven will dictate and constrain them so to do. It is a contradiction to such hope to indulge sin and impurity. As we are sanctified by faith, we must be sanctified by hope. That we may be saved by hope we must be purified by hope.

Multiplied arguments against sin, and all communion with the works of darkness.

I. From the nature of sin. It is a contrariety to the divine law, v. 4. Commission of sin now is the rejection of the divine law, and this is the rejection of the divine authority, and consequently of God himself.

II. From the errand of the Lord Jesus in this world, which was to remove sin, v. 5. He takes sin away, that he may conform us to himself, and in him is no sin. Those that expect communion with Christ above should study communion with him here in the utmost purity.

III. From the opposition between sin and a real union with the Lord Christ, v. 6. He that abideth in Christ continues not in the practice of sin. Those that abide in Christ abide in their covenant with him. They abide in the potent light and knowledge of him; and therefore it may be concluded that he that sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Practical renunciation of sin is the great evidence of saving knowledge of the Lord Christ.

IV. From the connection between the practice of righteousness and a state of righteousness. The practice of sin and a justified state are inconsistent: "Little children, let no man deceive you. He that doeth righteousness is righteous." It may appear that edge, and by that we fell; but being raised by Christ, we become truly like Him, by knowing Him as we are known, and by seeing Him as He is [PEARSON, Creed]. As the first immortality which Adam lost was to be able not to die, so the last shall be not to be able to die. As man's first free choice or will was to be able not to sin, so our last shall be not to be able to sin [AUGUSTINE, Civit. Dei, B. 22, c. 30]. The devil fell by aspiring to God's power; man, by aspiring to his knowledge; but aspiring after God's goodness, we shall ever grow in His likeness. The transition from God the Father to "He," "Him," referring to Christ (who alone is ever said in Scripture to be manifested; not the Father, John 1:18), implies the entire unity of the Father and the Son. for . . .—Continual beholding generates likeness (II Cor. 3: 18); as the face of the moon being always turned towards the sun, reflects its light and glory. see him—not in His innermost Godhead, but as manifested in Christ. None but the pure can see the infinitely Pure One. In all these passages the Greek is the same verb opsomai; not denoting the action of seeing, but the state of him to whose eye or mind the object is presented; hence the Greek verb is always in the middle or reflexive voice, to perceive and inwardly appreciate [TITTMANN]. Our spiritual bodies will appreciate and recognize spiritual beings hereafter, as our natural bodies now do natural objects. 3. this hope—of being hereafter "like Him." Faith and love, as well as hope, occur in vss. 11, 23. in—rather, "(resting) upon Him"; grounded on His promises. purifieth himself—by Christ's Spirit in him (John 15:5, end). "Thou purifiest thyself, not of thyself, but of Him who comes that He may dwell in thee" [AUGUSTINE]. One's justification through faith is presupposed. as he is pure—unsullied with any uncleanness. The Second Person, by whom both the Law and Gospel were given. 4. Sin is incompatible with birth from God (vss. 1-3). John often sets forth the same truth negatively, which he had before set forth positively. He had shown, birth from God involves self-purification; he now shows where sin, i.e., the want of self-purification, is, there is no birth from God. Whosoever—Greek, "Every one who." committeth sin—in contrast to vs. 3, "Every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself"; and vs. 7, "He that doeth righteousness." transgresseth . . . the law—Greek, "committeth transgression of law." God's law of purity; and so shows he has no such hope of being hereafter pure as God is pure, and, therefore, that he is not born of God. for—Greek, "and." sin is . . . transgression of . . . law—definition of sin in general. The Greek having the article to both, implies that they are convertible terms. The Greek "sin" (hamartia) is lit., "a missing of the mark." God's will being that mark to be ever aimed at. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." The crookedness of a line is shown by being brought into juxtaposition with a straight ruler. 5. Additional proof of the incompatibility of sin and sonship; the very object of Christ's manifestation in the flesh was to take away (by one act, and entirely, aorist) all sins, as the scapegoat did typically. and—another proof of the same. in him is no sin—not "was," but "is," as in vs. 7, "He is righteous," and vs. 3, "He is pure." Therefore we are to be so. 6. He reasons from Christ's own entire separation from sin, that those in him must also be separate from it. abideth in him—as the branch in the vine, by vital union living by His life. sinneth not—In so far as he abides in Christ, so far is he free from all sin. The ideal of the Christian. The life of sin and the life of God mutually exclude one another, just as darkness and light. In matter of fact, believers do fall into sins (ch. 1:8-10; 2:1, 2); but all such sins are alien from the life of God, and need Christ's cleansing blood, without application to which the life of God could not be maintained. He sinneth not so long as he abideth in Christ. whosoever sinneth hath not seen him—Greek perfect, "has not seen, and does not see Him." Again the ideal of Christian intuition and knowledge is presented (Matt. 7:23). All sin as such is at variance with the notion of one regenerated. Not that "whosoever is betrayed into sins has never seen nor known God"; but in so far as sin exists, in that degree the spiritual intuition and knowledge of God do not exist in him. neither—"not even." To see spiritually is a further step than to know; for by knowing we come to seeing by vivid realization and experimentally. 7, 8. The same truth stated, with the addition that he who sins is, so far as he sins, "of the devil." let no man deceive you—as Antinomians try to mislead men. righteousness—Greek, "the righteousness," viz., of Christ or God. he that doeth . . . is righteous—Not his doing makes him righteous, but his being right-

ADAM CLARKE

3. And every man that hath this hope in him. All who have the hope of seeing Christ as He is; that is, of enjoying Him in His own glory. Purifieth himself—abstains from all evil, and keeps himself from all that is in the world, viz., the lusts of the flesh, of the eye, and the pride of life. God having purified his heart, it is his business to keep himself "in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." The apostle does not here speak of any man purifying his own heart, because this is impossible; but of his persevering in the state of purity into which the Lord has brought him. The words, however, may be understood of a man's anxiously using all the means that lead to purity; and imploring God for the sanctifying Spirit, to "cleanse the thoughts of his heart by its inspiration, that he may perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His name." As he is pure. Till he is as completely saved from his sins as Christ was free from sin. Many tell us that "this never can be done, for no man can be saved from sin in this life." Will these persons permit us to ask, How much sin may we be saved from in this life? Something must be ascertained on this subject: (1) That the soul may have some determinate object in view; (2) That it may not lose its time, or employ its faith and energy, in praying for what is impossible to be attained. Now, as "he was manifested to take away our sins," v. 5, to "destroy the works of the devil," v. 8; and as his blood cleanseth from all sin and unrighteousness, chap. i. 7, 9; is it not evident that God means that believers in Christ shall be saved from all sin? For if His blood cleanses from all sin, if He destroys the works of the devil (and sin is the work of the devil), and if he who "is born of God doth not commit sin," v. 9, then he must be cleansed from all sin; and while he continues in that state he lives without sinning against God; for the "seed [of God] remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born [or begotten] of God," v. 9. How strangely warped and blinded by prejudice and system must men be who, in the face of such evidence as this, will still dare to maintain that no man can be saved from his sin in this life; but must daily commit sin, in thought, word, and deed, as the Westminster divines have asserted! That is, every man is laid under the fatal necessity of sinning as many ways against God as the devil does through his natural wickedness and malice; for even the devil himself can have no other way of sinning against God except by thought, word, and deed. And yet, according to these, and others of the same creed, "even the most regenerate sin thus against God as long as they live." Could not the grace that saved them partially save them perfectly? Could not that power of God that saved them from habitual sin save them from occasional or accidental sin? Shall we suppose that sin, how potent soever it may be, is as potent as the Spirit and grace of Christ?

4. Sin is the transgression of the law. The spirit of the law as well as of the gospel is that "we should love God with all our powers, and our neighbor as ourselves." All disobedience is contrary to love; therefore sin is the transgression of the law, whether the act refers immediately to God or to our neighbor.

5. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins. He came into the world to destroy the power, pardon and guilt, and cleanse from the pollution of sin. In him is no sin. And therefore He is properly qualified to be the atoning Sacrifice for the sins of men.

6. Whosoever abideth in him. By faith, love, and obedience. Sinneth not. Because his heart if purified by faith. Hath not seen him. It is no unusual thing with this apostle, both in his Gospel and in his Epistles, to put occasionally the past for the present, and the present for the past tense. It is very likely that here he puts, after the manner of the Hebrew, the preterite for the present: He who sins against God "doth not see Him, neither doth he know Him."

7. Let no man deceive you. By asserting either that "you cannot be saved from sin in this life" or "that sin will do you no harm and cannot alter your state, if you are adopted into the family of God; for sin cannot annul this righteousness may in several places of scripture be justly rendered religion, as Matt. v. 10, Blessed are those that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, that is, for religion's sake. To do righteousness then is to practise religion. The practice of religion cannot subsist without a principle of integrity and conscience.

V. From the relation between the sinner and the devil, and thereupon from the design of the Lord Christ. 1. From the relation between the sinner and the devil. To commit sin is here to live under the power and dominion of it; and he who does so is of the devil.

2. From the design and office of the Lord Christ against the devil, v. 8. He came into our world that he might conquer him. Sin will he loosen and dissolve more and more, till he has quite destroyed it. Let not us serve or indulge what the Son of God came to destroy.

VI. From the connection between regeneration and the relinquishment of sin: Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin. To be born of God is to be inwardly renewed, and restored to a holy rectitude of nature by the power of the Spirit of God. Such a one committeth not sin, his seed remaineth in him. Renewing grace is an abiding principle. Religion is not an art, an acquired dexterity and skill, but a new nature. And thereupon the consequence is the regenerate person cannot sin. He cannot continue in the course and practice of sin. And the reason is because he is born of God. There is that light in his mind which shows him the evil and malignity of sin. There is that bias upon his heart which disposes him to loathe and hate sin. There is the spiritual disposition, that breaks the force and fulness of the sinful acts. It is not reckoned the person's sin, in the gospel account, where the bent and frame of the mind and spirit are against it. The unregenerate person is morally unable for what is religiously good. The regenerate person is happily disabled for sin.

VII. From the discrimination between the children of God and the children of the devil. They have their distinct characters, v. 10. Now the seed of the serpent is known: 1. By neglect of religion: Whosoever doeth not righteously is not of God, but, on the contrary, of the devil. 2. By hatred of fellow-christians, v. 10.

I. He recommends fraternal Christian love, v. 11. We should love the Lord Jesus, and value his love, and consequently love all the objects of it.

II. He dissuades from what is contrary thereto and that by the example of Cain. He was as the first-born of the serpent's seed; was of the wicked one. He imitated and resembled the first wicked one, the devil. His ill-will had no restraint; it proceeded so far as to accomplish murder, v. 12. Sin, indulged, knows no bound. He was vexed with the superiority of Abel's service, and envied him the favour and acceptance he had with God. And for these he martyred his brother, v. 12. Ill-will will teach us to hate and revenge what we should admire and imitate.

III. He infers that it is no wonder that good men are so served now, v. 13. The serpentine nature still continues in the world. Wonder not then that the serpentine world hates and hisses at you.

Verses 14–19

The beloved apostle can scarcely touch upon the mention of sacred love, but he must enlarge upon the enforcement of it.

I. It is a mark of our transition into a state of life, v. 14. We may know it by the evidences of our faith in Christ, of which this love to our brethren is one. This love, eous (justified by the righteousness of God in Christ, Rom. 10:3-10) makes him to do righteousness: an inversion common in familiar language, logical in reality, though not in form, as in Luke 7:47; John 8:47. Works do not justify, but the justified man works. 8. He that committeth sin is of the devil —in contrast to "He that doeth righteousness," vs. 7. He is a son of the devil (vs. 10; John 8:44). John does not, however, say, "born of the devil." as he does "born of God," for "the devil begets none, nor does he create any; but whoever imitates the devil becomes a child of the devil by imitating him, not by proper birth" [AUGUSTINE, Tract, 4. 10]. From the devil there is not generation, but corruption [BENGEL]. sinneth from the beginning—from the time that any began to sin [ALFORD]; from the time that he became what he is, the devil. He seems to have kept his first estate only a very short time after his creation [BENGEL]. Since the fall of man [at the beginning of our world] the devil is (ever) sinning (this is the force of "sinneth"; he has sinned from the beginning, is the cause of all sins, and still goes on sinning; present). As the author of sin, and prince of this world, he has never ceased to seduce man to sin [LUECKE]. destroy—break up and do away with; bruising and crushing the serpent's head. works of the devil—sin, and all its awful consequences. John argues, Christians cannot do that which Christ came to destroy. 9. Whosoever is born of God—lit., "Everyone that is begotten of God." doth not commit sin—His higher nature, as one born or begotten of God, doth not sin. To be begotten of God and to sin, are states mutually excluding one another. In so far as one sins, he makes it doubtful whether he be born of God. his seed—the living word of God, made by the Holy Spirit the seed in us of a new life and the continual mean of sanctification. remaineth—abideth in him (Note, cf. vs. 6; John 5:38). This does not contradict ch. 1:8, 9; the regenerate show the utter incompatibility of sin with regeneration, by cleansing away every sin into which they may be betrayed by the old nature, at once in the blood of Christ. cannot sin, because he is born of God—"because it is of God that he is born" (so the Greek order, as compared with the order of the same words in the beginning of the verse); not "because he was born of God" (the Greek is perfect, which is present in meaning, not aorist); it is not said, Because a man was once for all born of God he never afterwards can sin; but, Because he is born of God, the seed abiding now in Him, he cannot sin; so long as it energetically abides, sin can have no place. Cf. Genesis 39:9, Joseph, "How CAN I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" The principle within me is at utter variance with it. The regenerate life is incompatible with sin, and gives the believer a hatred for sin in every shape, and an unceasing desire to resist it.

10. children of the devil—(Note, vs. 8; Acts 13:10). There is no middle class between the children of God and the children of the devil. doeth not righteousness—Contrast ch. 2:29. he that loveth not his brother—(ch. 4:8)—a particular instance of that love which is the sum and fulfilment of all righteousness, and the token (not loud professions, or even seemingly good works) that distinguishes God's children from the devil's. 11. the message—"announcement," as of something good; not a mere command, as the law. The Gospel message of Him who loved us, announced by His servants, is, that we love the brethren; not here all mankind, but those who are our brethren in Christ, children of the same family of God, of whom we have been born anew. 12. who—not in the Greek. of that wicked one—Translate, "evil one," to accord with "Because his own works were evil." Cf. vs. 8, "of the devil," in contrast to "of God," vs. 10. slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous—through envy and hatred of his brother's piety, owing to which God accepted Abel's, but rejected Cain's offering. Enmity from the first existed between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent. 13. Marvel not—The marvel would be if the world loved you. the world—of whom Cain is the representative (vs. 12). hate you —as Cain hated even his own brother, and that to the extent of murdering him. The world feels its bad works tacitly reproved by your good works. 14. We—emphatical; hated though we be by the world, we know what the world knows not. know —as an assured fact. passed—changed our state. Colossians 1:13, "from the power of darkness . . . translated into the kingdom of His dear Son." from death unto life—lit., "out of the death (which enthrals the unregenerate) into the life" (of the regenerate). A palpable coincidence of language and adoption." Hear God, you deceivers! He that doeth righteousness is righteous, according to his state, nature, and the extent of his moral powers, Even as he is righteous. Allowing for the disparity that must necessarily exist between that which is bounded and that which is without limits. As God, in the infinitude of His nature, is righteous, so they, being filled with Him, are in their limited nature righteous.

8. He that committeth sin is of the devil. Hear this, you who cannot bear the thought of that doctrine that states believers are to be saved from all sin in this life! He that committeth sin is a child of the devil, and shows that he has still the nature of the devil in him; for the devil sinneth from the beginning—he was the father of sin, brought sin into the world, and maintains sin in the world by living in the hearts of his own children, and thus leading them to transgression; and persuading others that they cannot be saved from their sins in this life, that he may secure a continual residence in their hearts. He knows that if he has a place there throughout life, he will probably have it at death; and, if so, throughout eternity. For this purpose. For "this very end," with this very design, was Jesus manifested in the flesh, that he might destroy, "that He might loose," the bonds of sin, and dissolve the power, influence, and connection of sin.

9. Whosoever is born of God, "begotten" of God, doth not commit sin. "That is," say some, "as he used to do; he does not sin habitually as he formerly did." This is bringing the influence and privileges of the heavenly birth very low indeed. We have the most indubitable evidence that many of the heathen philosophers had acquired, by mental discipline and cultivation, an entire ascendency over all their wonted vicious habits.

10. In this the children of God are manifest. Here is a fearful text. Who is a child of the devil? He that commits sin. Who is a child of God? He that works righteousness. By this text we shall stand or fall before God, whatever our particular creed may say to the contrary. Neither he that loveth not his brother. No man is of God who is not ready on all emergencies to do any act of kindness for the comfort, relief, and support of any human being. For, as God made of one blood all the nations of men to dwell upon the face of the whole earth, so all are of one family; and consequently all are brethren, and should love as brethren.

11. For this is the message. See chap. i. 5. From the beginning God has taught men that they should love one another.

12. Not as Cain. Men should not act to each other as Cain did to his brother, Abel. He murdered him because he was better than himself. But who was Cain? "He was of the devil."

13. Marvel not . . . if the world hate you. Expect no better treatment from unconverted Jews and Gentiles than Abel received from his wicked and cruel brother.

14. We know that we have passed from death unto life. Death and life are represented here as two distinct territories, states, or kingdoms, to either of which the inhabitants of either may be removed. This is implied in the term denoting "change of place," and "I go." It is the same figure which Paul uses, Col. i. 13: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness,

MATTHEW HENRY

1. Supposes a general love to mankind. Mankind are to be loved: (1) As the excellent work of God, made by him, and made in wonderful resemblance of him. (2) As being beloved in Christ. A world so beloved of God should accordingly be loved by us. This love will include all due love to enemies themselves.

2. It includes a peculiar love to the Christian society. They are not so much loved for their own sakes as for the sake of God and Christ, who have loved them. This is the issue of faith in Christ, of our passage from death to life.

II. The hatred of our brethren is a sign of our deadly state, v. 14. This the apostle argues, v. 15. Hatred of the person is a hatred of life and welfare, and naturally tends to desire the extinction of it. Now he who by the disposition of his heart is a murderer cannot have eternal life abiding in him.

III. The example of God and Christ should inflame our hearts with this holy love, v. 16. The great God has given his Son to the death for us. Surely we should love those whom God hath loved, and so loved.

IV. The apostle proceeds to show us what should be the effect of this our Christian love. 1. It must be so fervent as to make us willing to suffer even to death for the safety and salvation of the dear brethren, v. 16. How mortified should the Christian be to this life, and how well assured of a better!

2. It must be compassionate, liberal, and communicative to the necessities of the brethren, v. 17. Those who have this world's good must love a good God more, and their good brethren more, and be ready to distribute it for their sakes. This love to the brethren is love to God in them; and where there is none of this love to them there is no true love to God at all.

There may be other fruits of this love, v. 18. Compliments and flatteries become not Christians; but the sincere expressions of sacred affection, and the services or labours of love, do.

V. This love will evince our sincerity in religion, and give us hope towards God, v. 19. It is a great happiness to be assured of our integrity in religion. The way to secure our inward peace, is to abound in love and in the works of love.

thought, the beloved disciple adopting his Lord's words. because we love the brethren—the ground, not of our passing over out of death into life, but of our knowing that we have so. Love, on our part, is the evidence of our justification and regeneration, not the cause of them. He that loveth not—Most of the oldest MSS. omit "his brother," which makes the statement more general. abideth—still. in death—"in the (spiritual) death" (ending in eternal death) which is the state of all by nature. His want of love evidences that no saving change has passed over him. 15. hateth—equivalent to "loveth not" (vs. 14); there is no medium between the two. "Love and hatred, like light and darkness, life and death, necessarily replace, as well as necessarily exclude, one another" [ALFORD]. is a murderer—because indulging in that passion, which, if followed out to its natural consequences, would make him one. "Whereas, vs. 16 desires us to lay down our lives for the brethren; duels require one (awful to say!) to risk his own life, rather than not deprive another of life" [BENGEL]. God regards the inward disposition as tantamount to the outward act which would flow from it. Whomsoever one hates, one wishes to be dead. hath—Such a one still "abideth in death." It is not his future state, but his present, which is referred to. He who hates (i.e., loveth not) his brother (vs. 14), cannot in this his present state have eternal life abiding in him. 16. What true love to the brethren is, illustrated by the love of Christ to us. Hereby—Greek, "Herein." the love of God—The words "of God" are not in the original. Translate, "We arrive at the knowledge of love"; we apprehend what true love is. he—Christ. and we—on our part, if absolutely needed for the glory of God, the good of the Church, or the salvation of a brother. lives—Christ alone laid down His one life for us all; we ought to lay down our lives severally for the lives of the brethren; if not actually, at least virtually, by giving our time, care, labors, prayers, substance: "Non nobis, sed omnibus." Our life ought not to be dearer to us than God's own Son was to Him. The apostles and martyrs acted on this principle. 17. this world's good—lit., "livelihood" or substance. If we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren (vs. 16), how much more ought we not to withhold our substance? seeth—not merely casually, but deliberately contemplates as a spectator; Greek, "beholds." shutteth up his bowels of compassion—which had been momentarily opened by the spectacle of his brother's need. The "bowels" mean the heart, the seat of compassion. how—How is it possible that "the love of (i.e. to) God dwelleth (Greek, 'abideth') in him?" Our superfluities should yield to the necessities; our comforts, and even our necessaries in some measure, should yield to the extreme wants of our brethren. "Faith gives Christ to me; love flowing from faith gives me to my neighbor." 18. When the venerable John could no longer walk to the meetings of the Church but was borne thither by his disciples, he always uttered the same address to the Church; he reminded them of that one commandment which he had received from Christ Himself, as comprising all the rest, and forming the distinction of the new covenant, "My little children, love one another." When the brethren present, wearied of hearing the same thing so often, asked why he always repeated the same thing, he replied, "Because it is the commandment of the Lord, and if this one thing be attained, it is enough" [JEROME]. in word—Greek, "with word . . . with tongue, but in deed and truth." 19. hereby—Greek, "herein"; in our loving in deed and in truth (vs. 18). we know—The oldest MSS. have "we shall know," viz., if we fulfil the command (vs. 18). of the truth—that we are real disciples of, and belonging to, the truth, as it is in Jesus: begotten of God with the word of truth. Having herein the truth radically, we shall be sure not to love merely in word and tongue. (vs. 18). assure—lit., "persuade," viz., so as to cease to condemn us; satisfy the questionings and doubts of our consciences as to whether we be accepted before God or not (cf. Matt. 28:14; Acts 12:20, "having made Blastus their friend," lit., "persuaded"). The "heart," as the seat of the feelings, is our inward judge; the conscience, as the witness, acts either as our justifying advocate, or our condemning accuser, before God even now. John 8: 9, has "conscience," but the passage is omitted in most old MSS. John nowhere else uses the term "conscience." Peter and Paul alone use it. before him—as in the sight of Him, the omniscient Searcher of hearts. Assurance is designed to be the ordinary experience and privilege of the believer. 20. LUTHER and BENGEL take this verse as consoling the believer whom his heart condemns; and who, and hath translated us into the kingdom" of the Son of His love. We know, says the apostle, that "we are passed over from the territory of death to the kingdom of life," because we love the brethren, which those who continue in the old kingdom—under the old covenant—can never do; for he that loveth not his brother abideth in death. He has never changed his original residence. He is still an unconverted, unrenewed sinner.

15. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. He has the same principle in him which was in Cain, and it may lead to the same consequences. No murderer hath eternal life. Eternal life springs from an indwelling God, and God cannot dwell in the heart where hatred and malice dwell. This text has been quoted to prove that no murderer can be saved. This is not said in the text; and there have been many instances of persons who have been guilty of murder having had deep and genuine repentance, and who doubtless found mercy from His hands who prayed for His murderers, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

16. Hereby perceive we the love of God. This sixteenth verse of this third chapter of John's First Epistle is, in the main, an exact counterpart of the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of John's Gospel: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." Here the apostle says, We perceive, "we have known," the love of God, because he laid down his life for us. Of God is not in the text, but it is preserved in one MS. and in two or three of the versions; but though this does not establish its authenticity, yet of God is necessarily understood or "of Christ."

17. But whoso hath this world's good. Here is a test of this love; if we do not divide our bread with the hungry, we certainly would not lay down our lives for Him. Whatever love we may pretend to mankind, if we are not charitable and benevolent, we give the lie to our profession. This world's good. "The life of this world," i.e., the means of life. How dwelleth the love of God in him? That is, it cannot possibly dwell in such a person. Hardheartedness and God's love never meet together; much less can they be associated.

18. My little children, "my beloved children," let us not love in word—in merely allowing the general doctrine of love to God and man to be just and right. Neither in tongue—in making professions of love, and of a charitable and humane disposition, and resting there. But in deed—by humane and merciful acts. And in truth—feeling the disposition of which we speak.

19. Hereby we know that we are of the truth, that we have the true religion of the Lord Jesus, and shall assure our hearts, be persuaded in our consciences that we have the truth as it is in Jesus, as no man can impose upon himself by imagining he loves when he does not. He may make empty professions to others, but if he loves either God or man, he knows it because he feels it. And love unfelt is not love; it is "word" or "tongue." This the apostle lays down as a test of a man's Christianity, and it is the strongest and most infallible test that can be given.

MATTHEW HENRY

The apostle proceeds here,

I. To establish the court of conscience, v. 20. Our heart here is our self-reflecting judicial power, whereby we can take cognizance of ourselves, and accordingly pass a judgment upon our state towards God; and so it is the same with conscience. Conscience is God's viceregent, calls the court in his name, and acts for him. If conscience condemn us, God does so too. God is a greater witness than our conscience, and knoweth more against us than it does: he knoweth all things.

If conscience acquit us, God does so too (v. 21). Then have we assurance that he accepts us now, and will acquit us in the great day of account. Let conscience therefore be heard, be well-informed, and diligently attended to.

II. To indicate the privilege of those who have a good conscience towards God. They have interest in heaven; their suits are heard there, v. 22. Obedient souls are prepared for blessings, and they have promise of audience.

I. What his commandments are, v. 23. To discern what he is, according to his name, the Son of God, and the anointed Saviour of the world. To approve him in judgment and conscience. To consent to him as our Redeemer. To trust to him for the full discharge of his saving office. This faith is a needful requisite to those who would be prevalent petitioners with God, because it is by the Son that we must come to the Father. That we love one another, as he gave us commandment, v. 23. As goodwill to men was proclaimed from heaven, so goodwill to men must be carried in the hearts of those who go to God and heaven.

II. The blessedness of obedience to these commands. The obedient enjoy communion with God, v. 24. We dwell in God and God dwells in us. The trial of his divine inhabitation (v. 24), is by the frame of soul that he hath conferred upon us.

therefore, like Peter, appeals from conscience to Him who is greater than conscience. "Lord, Thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I love Thee." Peter's conscience, though condemning him of his sin in denying the Lord, assured him of his love; but fearing the possibility, owing to his past fall, of deceiving himself, he appeals to the all-knowing God: so Paul, I Corinthians 4:3, 4. So if we be believers, even if our heart condemns us of sin in general, yet having the one sign of sonship, love, we may still assure our hearts (some oldest MSS, read heart, vs. 19, as well as vs. 20), as knowing that God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

Our hypocrisy in loving by word and tongue, not in deed and truth, does not escape even our conscience, though weak and knowing but little, how much less God who knows all things! Still the consolatory view may be the right one. For the Greek for "we shall assure our hearts" (see Note, vs. 19), is gain over, persuade so as to be stilled, implying that there was a previous state of self-condemnation by the heart (vs. 20), which, however, is got over by the consolatory thought, "God is greater than my heart" which condemns me, and "knows all things" (Greek ginoskei, "knows," not kataginoskei, "condemns"), and therefore knows my love and desire to serve Him, and knows my frame so as to pity my weakness of faith. This gaining over the heart to peace is not so advanced a stage as the having CONFIDENCE towards God which flows from a heart condemning us not. The first "because" thus applies to the two alternate cases, vss. 20, 21 (giving the ground of saying, that having love we shall gain over, or assure our minds before Him, vs. 19); the second "because" applies to the first alternate alone, viz., "if our heart condemn us." When he reaches the second alternate, vs. 21, he states it independently of the former "because" which had connected it with vs. 19, inasmuch as CONFIDENCE toward God is a farther stage than persuading our hearts, though always preceded by it. 21. Beloved—There is no "But" contrasting the two cases, vss. 20, 21, because "Beloved" sufficiently marks the transition to the case of the brethren walking in the full confidence of love (vs. 18). The two results of our being able to "assure our hearts before Him" (vs. 19), and of "our heart condemning us not" (of insincerity as to the truth in general, and as to LOVE in particular) are, (1) confidence toward God; (2) a sure answer to our prayers. John does not mean that all whose hearts do not condemn them, are therefore safe before God; for some have their conscience seared, others are ignorant of the truth, and it is not only sincerity, but sincerity in the truth which can save men. Christians are those meant here: knowing Christ's precepts and testing themselves by them. 22. we receive—as a matter of fact, according to His promise. Believers, as such, ask only what is in accordance with God's will; or if they ask what God wills not, they bow their will to God's will, and so God grants them either their request, or something better than it. because we keep his commandments—Cf. Psalm 66:18; 34:15; 145:18, 19. Not as though our merits earned a hearing for our prayers, but when we are believers in Christ, all our works of faith being the fruit of His Spirit in us, are "pleasing in God's sight"; and our prayers being the voice of the same Spirit of God in us, naturally and necessarily are answered by Him. 23. Summing up of God's commandments under the Gospel dispensation in one commandment. this is his commandment—singular: for faith and love are not separate commandments, but are indissolubly united. We cannot truly love one another without faith in Christ, nor can we truly believe in Him without love. believe—once for all; Greek aorist. on the name of his Son—on all that is revealed in the Gospel concerning Him, and on Himself in respect to His person, offices, and atoning work. as he—as Jesus gave us commandment. 24. dwelleth in him—The believer dwelleth in Christ. and he in him—Christ in the believer. Reciprocity. "Thus he returns to the great keynote of the Epistle, abide in Him, with which the former part concluded" (ch. 2:28). hereby—"herein we (believers) know that He abideth in us, viz., from (the presence in us of) the Spirit which He hath given us." Thus he prepares, by the mention of the true Spirit, for the transition to the false "spirit," ch. 4:1-6; after which he returns again to the subject of love.

20. If our heart condemn us. If we be conscious that our love is feigned, we shall feel inwardly condemned in professing to have what we have not. And if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, for He knows every hypocritical winding and turning of the soul. He searches the heart, and tries the reins, and sees all the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart which we cannot see.

21. If our heart condemn us not—if we be conscious to ourselves of our own sincerity, that we practice not deceit, and use no mask; then have we confidence toward God—we can appeal to Him for our sincerity, and we can come with boldness to the throne of grace, to "obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." And therefore says the apostle,

22. Whatsoever we ask, in such a spirit, we receive of him; for He delights to bless the humble, upright, and sincere soul. Because we keep his commandments. Viz., by loving Him and loving our neighbor. These are the great commandments of both the old covenant and the new. And whoever is filled with this love to God and man will do those things that are pleasing to Him, for love is the very soul and principle of obedience. The word "heart" is used in the preceding verses for conscience, and so the Greek fathers interpret it; but this is not an unfrequent meaning of the word in the sacred writings.

23. That we should believe on the name of his Son. We are commanded to believe on Christ; and being through Him redeemed from the guilt of sin, restored to the divine favor, and made partakers of the Holy Ghost, we are enabled to love one another, as he gave us commandment; for without a renewal of the heart, love to God and man is impossible, and this renewal comes by Christ Jesus.

24. Dwelleth in him, i.e., in God; and he, God, in him, the believer. And hereby we know. We know by the Spirit which he hath given us that we dwell in God, and God in us.

I. He calls the disciples to caution and scrutiny about the spirits that had now risen. 1. To caution: "Beloved, believe not every spirit; follow not every pretender to the Spirit of God." There had been real communications from the divine Spirit and therefore others pretended thereto. 2. To scrutiny, to examination of the claims that are laid to the Spirit, v. 1. To the disciples is allowed a judgment of discretion. A reason is given for this trial, v. 1. It should not seem strange to us that false teachers set themselves up in the church: it was so in the apostles' times.

II. He gives a test whereby the disciples may try these pretending spirits. They were to be tried by their doctrine, v. 2. He who confesses and preaches Christ, does it by the Spirit of God. The sum of revealed religion is comprehended in the doctrine concerning Christ, his person and office.

We see then the aggravation of a systematic opposition to him and it, v. 3. The anti-christian spirit began betimes, even in the apostles' days. But we have been forewarned that such opposition would arise, and the more we see the word of Christ fulfilled the more confirmed we should be in the truth of it.

The apostle encourages the disciples against this seducing antichristian spirit. He assures them of a more divine principle in them, v. 4, 6. We are born of God. He gives them hope of victory, v. 4. "There is a strong preserver within you, v. 4. The Spirit of God dwells in you, and that Spirit is more mighty than men or devils." The Spirit of God hath framed your mind for God and heaven; but they are of the world, and therefore speak they of the world. This worldly design procures them proselytes, v. 5. They are followed by such as themselves: the world will love its own, and its own will love it. "He that knoweth God heareth us. He who knows the purity and holiness of God, the love and grace of God, must know that he is with us; and he who knows this will attend to us, and abide with us. He that is not of God heareth not us. Thus you have a distinction between us and others," v. 6.

Verses 7–13

The Spirit of truth is known by love, v. 7. The apostle would unite them in his love, that he might unite them in love to each other.

Vss. 1-21. TESTS OF FALSE PROPHETS. LOVE, THE TEST OF BIRTH FROM GOD, AND THE NECESSARY FRUIT OF KNOWING HIS GREAT LOVE IN CHRIST TO US. 1. Beloved—the affectionate address wherewith he calls their attention, as to an important subject. every spirit—which presents itself in the person of a prophet. The Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error, speak by men's spirits as their organs. There is but one Spirit of truth, and one spirit of Antichrist. try—by the tests (vss. 2, 3). All believers are to do so: not merely ecclesiastics. Even an angel's message should be tested by the word of God: much more men's teachings, however holy the teachers may seem. because...—the reason why we must "try," or test the spirits. many false prophets—not "prophets" in the sense "foretellers," but organs of the spirit that inspires them, teaching accordingly either truth or error: "many Antichrists." are gone out—as if from God. into the world—said alike of good and bad prophets (II John 7). The world is easily seduced (vss. 4, 5). 2. Hereby—"Herein." know... the Spirit of God—whether he be, or not, in those teachers professing to be moved by Him. Every spirit—i.e., Every teacher claiming inspiration by the HOLY SPIRIT. confesseth—The truth is taken for granted as established. Man is required to confess it, i.e., in his teaching to profess it openly. Jesus Christ is come in the flesh—a twofold truth confessed, that Jesus is the Christ, and that He is come (the Greek perfect implies not a mere past historical fact, as the aorist would, but also the present continuance of the fact and its blessed effects) in the flesh ("clothed with flesh": not with a mere seeming humanity, as the Docetæ afterwards taught: He therefore was, previously, something far above flesh). His flesh implies His death for us, for only by assuming flesh could He die (for as God He could not), Hebrews 2:9, 10, 14, 16; and His death implies His LOVE for us (John 15:13). To deny the reality of His flesh is to deny His love, and so cast away the root which produces all true love on the believer's part (vss. 9-11, 19). Rome, by the doctrine of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary, denies Christ's proper humanity. 3. confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh—IRENÆUS (3. 8), LUCIFER, ORIGEN, on Matthew 25:14, and Vulgate read, "Every spirit which destroys (sets aside, or does away with) Jesus (Christ)." CYPRIAN and POLYCARP support English Version text. The oldest extant MSS., which are, however, centuries after POLYCARP, read, "Every spirit that confesseth not (i.e., refuses to confess) Jesus" (in His person, and all His offices and divinity), omitting "is come in the flesh." ye have heard—from your Christian teachers. already is it in the world—in the person of the false prophets (vs. 1). 4. Ye—emphatical: YE who confess Jesus: in contrast to "them," the false teachers. overcome them—(ch. 5:4, 5)—instead of being "overcome and brought into (spiritual) bondage" by them (II Pet. 2:19). John 10:8, 5, "the sheep did not hear them": "a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers." he that is in you—God, of whom ye are. he that is in the world—the spirit of Antichrist, the devil, "the prince of this world." 5. of the world—They derive their spirit and teaching from the world, "unregenerate human nature, ruled over and possessed by Satan, the prince of this world" [ALFORD]. speak they of the world—They draw the matter of their conversation from the life, opinions, and feelings of the world. the world heareth them—(John 15:18, 19). The world loves its own. 6. We—true teachers of Christ: in contrast to them. are of God—and therefore speak of God: in contrast to "speak they of the world," vs. 5. knoweth God—as his Father, being a child "of God" (ch. 2:13, 14). heareth us—Cf. John 18:37, "Every one that is of the truth, heareth My voice." Hereby—(vss. 2-6)—by their confessing, or not confessing, Jesus; by the kind of reception given them respectively by those who know God, and by those who are of the world and not of God. spirit of truth—the Spirit which comes from God and teaches truth. spirit of error—the spirit which comes from Satan and seduces into error. 7. Resumption of the main theme (ch. 2:29). Love, the sum of righteousness, is the test of our being born of God. Love flows from a sense of God's love to us: cf. vs. 9 with ch. 3:16, which vs. 9 resumes; and vs. 13 with ch. 3:24, which similarly vs. 13 resumes. At the same time, vss. 7-21 is connected with the immediately preceding context, vs. 2 setting forth Christ's incarnation, the great proof of God's love (vs. 10). Beloved—an address

1. Beloved, believe not every spirit. Do not be forward to believe every teacher to be a man sent of God. As in those early times every teacher professed to be inspired by the Spirit of God, because all the prophets had come thus accredited, the term spirit was used to express the man who pretended to be and teach under the Spirit's influence. See 1 Cor. xii. 1-12; 1 Tim. iv. 1. Try the spirits. Put these teachers to the proof. Try them by that testimony which is known to have come from the Spirit of God, the word of revelation already given. Many false prophets. Teachers not inspired by the Spirit of God.

2. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God. We know that the man who teaches that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, and that he is come in the flesh, is of God—is inspired by the divine Spirit; for no man can call Jesus Lord but by the Holy Ghost.

3. Every spirit, every teacher, that confesseth not Jesus is not of God—has not been inspired by God. The words is come in the flesh are wanting in several MSS. Griesbach has left them out of the text.

Ye have heard that it should come. See 2 Thess. ii. 7. Even now already is it in the world. Is working powerfully among both Jews and Gentiles.

4. Ye are of God. You are under the influence of the divine Spirit. And have overcome them—your testimony, proceeding from the Spirit of Christ, has invalidated theirs, which has proceeded from the influence of Satan; for greater is the Holy Spirit which is in you, than the spirit which is in the world.

5. They are of the world. They have no spiritual views; they have no spirituality of mind; they seek the present world and its enjoyments. Their conversation is worldly, and worldly men hear them in preference to all others.

6. We are of God. We apostles have the Spirit of God, and speak and teach by that Spirit. He that knoweth God, who has a truly spiritual discernment, heareth us, acknowledges that our doctrine is from God; that it is spiritual, and leads from earth to heaven.

MATTHEW HENRY

I. The high and heavenly descent of love: For love is of God, v. 7. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of love. Love comes down from heaven.

II. Love argues a true apprehension of the divine nature, v. 7, 8. What attribute of the divine Majesty so clearly shines in all the world as his communicative goodness, which is love. He that loveth not knoweth not God. Knowledge of God dwells not in such a soul; for God is love (v. 8). Love is natural and essential to the divine Majesty: God is love. He hath loved us, such as we are (v. 9). Strange that God should love impure dust and ashes! He has loved us at such an incomparable value as he has given for us, v. 9. Mystery and miracle of divine love that such a Son should be sent into our world for us! God loved us first, v. 10. He loved us, when we had no love for him, when we lay in our guilt. He gave us his Son for such service and such an end. For such service, to be the propitiation for our sins. For such an end (v. 9), that we might live with God, and live in eternal glory and blessedness with him. O what love is here!

III. Divine love to the brethren should constrain ours, v. 11. This should be an invincible argument. Shall we refuse to love those whom the eternal God hath loved? We should be admirers of his love, and lovers of his love, and consequently lovers of those whom he loves.

IV. The Christian love is an assurance of the divine inhabitation, v. 12. The sacred lovers of the brethren are the temples of God; the divine Majesty has a peculiar residence there.

V. Herein the divine love attains accomplishment in us, v. 12. God's love is not perfected in him, but in and with us. Faith is perfected by its works, and love perfected by its operations. When the divine love has wrought us to the love of God, and thereupon to the love of the brethren, for his sake, it is therein perfected. How ambitious should we be of this love, when God reckons his own love to us perfected thereby, v. 13. One would think that to speak of God dwelling in us, and we in him, were to use words too high for mortals, had not God gone before us therein. What it fully is must be left to the revelation of the blessed world. But this mutual inhabitation we know, says the apostle, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

Verses 14–16

I. The fundamental article of the Christian religion, v. 14. 1. The Lord Jesus's relation to God; he is Son to the Father. 2. His relation and office towards us—the Saviour of the world. 3. The ground on which he became so: The Father sent the Son. 4. The apostle's assurance of this—he and his brethren had seen it; they had seen the Son of God in his human nature. 5. The apostle's attestation of this: "We have seen and do testify."

II. The excellent privilege attending the due acknowledgment of this truth, v. 15. He who thus confesses Christ, and God in him, is possessed by the Spirit of God.

III. God's love is thus seen and exerted in Christ Jesus, v. 16. The Christian revelation is the revelation of the divine love; the articles of our revealed faith are but so many articles relating to the divine love. The history of the Lord Christ is the history of God's love to us.

1. God is love; he is essential boundless love; he has incomprehensible love for us of this world, which he has demonstrated in the mission of his beloved Son. What will he not do then when he designs to demonstrate his love, that he himself is love? In such a dispensation as that of giving an eternal Son for us and to us, he will commend his love to us indeed. Then may it well be inscribed upon the whole creation of God, God is love.

2. He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. He that dwells in sacred love has the love of God shed abroad upon his heart, and will ere long go to dwell with God for ever.

He recommends it in both the branches of it, both as love to God, and love to our brother.

I. As love to God. 1. It will give us peace and satisfaction of spirit in the day when it will be most needed, v. 17. There must be a day of universal judgment. Happy they who shall have boldness before the Judge at that day, who shall be able to lift up their heads, and to look him in the face, as knowing he is their friend. So may do the lovers of God. And we have this boldness towards Christ because of our appropriate to his subject, "love." love—All love is from God as its fountain: especially that embodiment of love, God manifest in the flesh. The Father also is love (vs. 8). The Holy Ghost sheds love as its first fruit abroad in the heart. knoweth God—spiritually, experimentally, and habitually. 8. knoweth not—Greek aorist: not only knoweth not now, but never knew, has not once for all known God. God is love—There is no Greek article to love, but to God; therefore we cannot translate, Love is God. God is fundamentally and essentially LOVE: not merely is loving, for then John's argument would not stand; for the conclusion from the premises then would be this, This man is not loving: God is loving; therefore he knoweth not God IN SO FAR AS GOD IS LOVING; still he might know Him in His other attributes. But when we take love as God's essence, the argument is sound: This man doth not love, and therefore knows not love: God is essentially love, therefore he knows not God. 9. toward us—Greek, "in our case." sent—Greek, "hath sent." into the world—a proof against Socinians, that the Son existed before He was "sent into the world." Otherwise, too, He could not have been our life (vs. 9), our "propitiation" (vs. 10), or our "Saviour" (vs. 14). It is the grand proof of God's love, His having sent His only-begotten Son, that we might live through Him, who is the Life, and who has redeemed our forfeited life; and it is also the grand motive to our mutual love. 10. Herein is love—love in the abstract: love, in its highest ideal, is herein. The love was all on God's side, none on ours. not that we loved God—though so altogether worthy of love. he loved us—though so altogether unworthy of love. The Greek aorist expresses, Not that we did any act of love at any time to God, but that He did the act of love to us in sending Christ. 11. God's love to us is the grand motive for our love to one another (ch. 3:16). if—as we all admit as a fact. we . . . also—as being born of God, and therefore resembling our Father who is love. In proportion as we appreciate God's love to us, we love Him and also the brethren, the children (by regeneration) of the same God, the representatives of the unseen God. 12. God, whom no man hath seen at any time, hath appointed His children as the visible recipients of our outward kindness which flows from love to Himself, "whom not having seen, we love," cf. Notes, vss. 11, 19, 20. Thus vs. 12 explains why, instead (in vs. 11) of saying, "If God so loved us, we ought also to love God," he said, "We ought also to love one another." If we love one another, God dwelleth in us—for God is love; and it must have been from Him dwelling in us that we drew the real love we bear to the brethren (vss. 8, 16). John discusses this in vss. 13-16. his love—rather, "the love of (i.e., to) Him" (ch. 2:5), evinced by our love to His representatives, our brethren. is perfected in us—John discusses this in vss. 17-19. Cf. ch. 2:5, "is perfected," i.e., attains its proper maturity. 13. Hereby—"Herein." The token vouchsafed to us of God's dwelling (Greek, "abide") in us, though we see Him not, is this, that He hath given us "of His Spirit" (ch. 3:24). Where the Spirit of God is, there God is. ONE Spirit dwells in the Church: each believer receives a measure "of" that Spirit in the proportion God thinks fit. Love is His first fruit (Gal. 5:22). In Jesus alone the Spirit dwelt without measure (John 3:34). 14. And we—primarily, we apostles, Christ's appointed eyewitnesses to testify to the facts concerning Him. The internal evidence of the indwelling Spirit (vs. 13) is corroborated by the external evidence of the eyewitnesses to the fact of the Father having "sent His Son to be the Saviour of the world." seen—Greek, "contemplated," "attentively beheld" (Note, ch. 1:1). sent—Greek, "hath sent": not an entirely past fact (aorist), but one of which the effects continue (perfect). 15. shall confess—once for all: so the Greek aorist means. that Jesus is the Son of God—and therefore "the Saviour of the world" (vs. 14). 16. And we—John and his readers (not as vs. 14, the apostles only). known and believed—True faith, according to John, is a faith of knowledge and experience: true knowledge is a knowledge of faith [LUECKE]. to us—Greek, "in our case" (Note, vs. 9). dwelleth—Greek, "abideth." Cf. with this verse, vs. 7. 17, 18. (Cf. ch. 3:19-21.) our love—rather as the Greek, "LOVE (in the abstract, the principle of love [ALFORD]) is made perfect (in its relations) with us." Love dwelling in us advances to its consummation "with us" i.e., as it is concerned with us: so Greek. Luke 1:58, "showed mercy upon (lit., 'with') her": II John 2, the truth "shall be with us for ever." boldness—"confidence": the same Greek as ch. 3:21, to which this passage is

ADAM CLARKE

7. Beloved, let us love one another. And ever be ready to promote each other's welfare, both spiritual and temporal. For love is of God. And ever acts like Him; He loves man, and daily loads him with His benefits. He that loveth most has most of God in him; and he that loveth God and his neighbor, as before described and commanded, is born of God, "is begotten of God"—is a true child of his Heavenly Father.

8. He that loveth not, as already described, knoweth not God, has no experimental knowledge of Him. God is love. How can a decree of absolute, unconditional reprobation of the greater part or any part of the human race stand in the presence of such a text as this? It has been well observed that, although God is holy, just, righteous, He is never called "holiness, justice," in the abstract, as He is here called love. This seems to be the essence of the divine nature, and all other attributes to be only modifications of this.

9. In this was manifested the love of God. The mission of Jesus Christ was the fullest proof that God could give, or that man could receive, of His infinite love to the world. That we might live through him. The whole world was sentenced to death because of sin, and every individual was dead in trespasses and sins; and Jesus came to die in the stead of the world, and to quicken every believer, that all might live to Him who died for them and rose again. This is another strong allusion to John iii. 16.

10. Not that we loved God, and that He was thereby induced to give His Son to be a propitiation for our sins.

11. If God so loved us—without any reason or consideration on our part, and without any desert in us. We ought also, in like manner, to love one another.

12. No man hath seen God at any time. We may feel Him, though we cannot see Him; and if we love one another, He dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us—it has then its full accomplishment, having molded us according to its own nature.

14. And we have seen Jesus Christ manifested in the flesh; see chap. i. 1. And do testify—bear witness, in consequence of having the fullest conviction—that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. We have had the fullest proof of this from His doctrine and miracles, which we heard and saw during the whole time that He sojourned among men.

15. Whosoever shall confess. Much stress is laid on this confession, because the false teachers denied the reality of the Incarnation; but this confession implied also such a belief in Christ as put them in possession of His pardoning mercy and indwelling Spirit.

16. God is love. See on v. 8. He that dwelleth in love—he who is full of love to God and man is full of God, for God is love.

17. Herein is our love made perfect. By God dwelling in us and we in Him, having cast out all the carnal mind that was "enmity" against himself, and filled the whole heart with the spirit of love and purity. May have boldness in the day of judgment. "Freedom of speech," and "liberty of access," seeing in the person of our Judge Him who has died for us, regenerated conformity to him, v. 17. Love hath conformed us to him.

2. It prevents servile fear (v. 18); so far as love prevails, fear ceases. We must here distinguish between the fear of God and being afraid of him. The fear of God is often mentioned and commanded as the substance of religion. Such fear is consistent with love, yea, with perfect love. But then there is a being afraid of God, which arises from a sense of guilt; and so fear here may be rendered dread: There is no dread in love. Love puts off dread, and puts on joy in him; and, as love grows, joy grows too; so that perfect love casteth out fear or dread. They well know that God loves them, and they thereupon triumph in his love. Because fear hath torment (v. 18) —fear is known to be a disquieting passion, but perfect love casteth out torment, for it teaches the mind a perfect acquiescence in the beloved, and therefore perfect love casteth out fear. He that feareth is not made perfect in love, it is a sign that our love is far from being perfect. 3. We cannot but love so good a God, who loved us when we were both unloving and unlovely. The divine love stamped love upon our souls.

II. As love to our brother in Christ; such love is urged on these accounts: 1. As consonant to our Christian profession. In the profession of Christianity we profess to love God as the root of religion (v. 20). That such a one loves not God the apostle proves, v. 20. The eye is wont to affect the heart; things unseen less catch the mind, and thereby the heart. The member of Christ has much of God visible in him. How then shall the hater of a visible image of God pretend to love the invisible God himself? 2. As suitable to the express law of God, v. 21. We must love God originally and supremely, and others in him. It cannot but be a natural suitable obligation that he who loves God should love his brother also.

parallel. The opposite of "fear," vs. 18. Herein is our love perfected, viz., in God dwelling in us, and our dwelling in God (vs. 16), involving as its result "that we can have confidence (or boldness) in the day of judgment" (so terrible to all other men, Acts 24:25; Rom. 2:16). because . . .—The ground of our "confidence" is, "because even as He (Christ) is, we also are in this world" (and He will not, in that day, condemn those who are like Himself), i.e., we are righteous as He is righteous, especially in respect to that which is the sum of righteousness, love (ch. 3:14). Christ IS righteous, and love itself, in heaven: so are we, His members, who are still "in this world." Our oneness with Him even now in His exalted position above (Eph. 2:6), so that all that belongs to Him of righteousness, etc., belongs to us also by perfect imputation and progressive impartation, is the ground of our love being perfected so that we can have confidence in the day of judgment. We are in, not of, this world. 18. Fear has no place in love. Bold confidence (vs. 17), based on love, cannot coexist with fear. Love, which, when perfected, gives bold confidence, casts out fear (cf. Heb. 2:14, 15). The design of Christ's propitiatory death was to deliver from this bondage of fear. but—"nay" [ALFORD]. fear hath torment—Greek, "punishment." Fear is always revolving in the mind the punishment deserved [ESTIUS]. Fear, by anticipating punishment [through consciousness of deserving it], has it even now, i.e., the foretaste of it. Perfect love is incompatible with such a self-punishing fear. Godly fear of offending God is quite distinct from slavish fear of consciously deserved punishment. The latter fear is natural to us all until love casts it out. "Men's states vary: one is without fear and love; another, with fear without love; another, with fear and love; another, without fear with love" [BENGEL]. 19. him—omitted in the oldest MSS. Translate, We (emphatical: WE on our part) love (in general: love alike Him, and the brethren, and our fellow men), because He (emphatical: answering to "we"; because it was He who) first loved us in sending His Son (Greek aorist of a definite act at a point of time). He was the first to love us: this thought ought to create in us love casting out fear (vs. 18). 20. loveth not . . . brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen —It is easier for us, influenced as we are here by sense, to direct love towards one within the range of our senses than towards One unseen, appreciable only by faith. Thus, by faith in Christ, we learn to love both the true God, and the true man, and so to love the brethren as bearing His image. hath seen —and continually sees. 21. Besides the argument (vs. 20) from the common feeling of men, he here adds a stronger one from God's express commandment (Matt. 22:39). He who loves, will do what the object of his love wishes. he who loveth God —he who wishes to be regarded by God as loving Him.

our hearts, and who himself fills them.

As he is —pure, holy, and loving. So are we in this world, being saved from our sins, and made like to himself in righteousness and true holiness. No man can contemplate the day of judgment with any comfort or satisfaction but on this ground, that the blood of Christ hath cleansed him from all sin; and that he is kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation. This will give him boldness in the day of judgment.

18. There is no fear in love. The man who feels that he loves God with all his heart can never dread Him as his Judge. As he is now made a partaker of His Spirit, and carries a sense of the divine approbation in his conscience, he has nothing of that fear that produces "terror" or brings torment. The perfect love, that fullness of love which he has received, casteth out fear, removes all terror relative to this day of judgment, for it is of this that the apostle particularly speaks. He that feareth—he who is still uncertain concerning his interest in Christ. Is not made perfect in love—has not yet received the abiding witness of the Spirit that he is begotten of God; nor that fullness of love to God and man which excludes the "enmity" of the "carnal mind," and which it is his privilege to receive. We are not to suppose that the love of God casts out every kind of fear from the soul; it casts out only that which has torment.

20. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother. This, as well as many other parts of this Epistle, seems levelled against the Jews who pretended much love to God while they hated the Gentiles.

21. This commandment have we. The love of God and the love of man can never be separated He who loves God will love his brother; he who loves his brother gives this proof that he loves God.

I. Our Christian brethren are nearly related to God; they are his children, v. 1. Here the Christian brother is, 1. Described by his faith; he that believeth that Jesus is the Christ accordingly yields himself up to his care and direction. 2. Dignified by his descent, v. 1. All believers, though by nature sinners, are spiritually descended from God, and accordingly are to be beloved, v. 1. It seems but natural that he who loves the Father should love the children also.

II. The apostle shows, 1. How we may discern the truth of our love to the regenerate. The ground of it must be our love to God, v. 2. Our love to them appears to be sound and genuine when we love them because they are God's children, and so in them God himself is loved.

VSS. 1-21. WHO ARE THE BRETHREN ESPECIALLY TO BE LOVED (ch. 4:21); OBEDIENCE, THE TEST OF LOVE, EASY THROUGH FAITH, WHICH OVERCOMES THE WORLD. LAST PORTION OF THE EPISTLE. THE SPIRIT'S WITNESS TO THE BELIEVER'S SPIRITUAL LIFE. TRUTHS REPEATED AT THE CLOSE: FAREWELL WARNING. 1. Whosoever—Greek, "Everyone that." He could not be our "Jesus" (God-Saviour) unless He were "the Christ"; for He could not reveal the way of salvation, except He were a prophet: He could not work out that salvation, except He were a priest: He could not confer that salvation upon us, except He were a king: He could not be prophet, priest, and king, except He were the Christ [PEARSON on the Creed]. born—Translate, "begotten," as in the latter part of the verse, the Greek being the same. Christ IS the "only-begotten Son" by generation; we become begotten sons of God by regeneration and adoption. every one that loveth him that begat—sincerely, not in mere profession (ch. 4:20). loveth him also that is begotten of him—viz., "his brethren" (ch. 4:21). 2. By—Greek, "In." As our love to the brethren is the sign and test of our love to God, so (John here says) our love to God (tested by our "keeping his commandments") is, conversely, the ground and only true basis of love to our brother. we know —John means here, not the outward criteria of genuine brotherly love, but the inward spiritual criteria of it, consciousness of love to God manifested in a hearty keeping of His commandments. When we have this inwardly and outwardly con-

CHAPTER 5

1. Whosoever believeth. "He that believeth that Jesus is the Messiah," and confides in Him for the remission of sins, "is begotten of God"; and they who are pardoned and begotten of God love Him in return for His love, and love all those who are His children.

2. By this we know that we love the children of God. Our love of God's followers is a proof that we love God. Our love to God is the cause why we love His children, and our keeping the commandments of God is the proof that we love Him.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. How we may learn the truth of our love to God, v. 2. Then we truly love God: For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and the keeping of his commandments requires a spirit delighting therein, v. 3. His commandments are thereby made easy and pleasant to us.

3. What is the result of regeneration, v. 4. He that is born of God is born for God, and consequently for another world. He can repel and conquer this, v. 4. Faith is the cause of victory. In and by faith we cleave to Christ in opposition to the world. It receives and derives strength from the object of it, the Son of God, for conquering the world.

III. It is the real Christian that is the true conqueror of the world, v. 5. He who believes that Jesus is the Son of God believes therein that Jesus came from God to be the Saviour of the world. And he who so believes must needs by this faith overcome the world. He sees it must be a great part of the Saviour's work, and of his own salvation, to be redeemed and rescued from this malignant world. He perceives that the Lord Jesus conquered the world, not for himself only, but for his followers. He is possessed with a spirit and disposition that cannot be satisfied with this world, that looks beyond it. It is the Christian revelation that is the great means of conquering the world, and gaining another that is blessed and eternal. The Saviour designs not this world for the inheritance and portion of his saved company. It is the real Christian that is the proper hero, who vanquishes the world. Who in all the world but the believer on Jesus Christ can thus overcome the world?

Verses 6–9

The faith of the Christian believer had need to be well founded, and it is so; Christ brings his credentials along with him.

I. In the way and manner by which he came: This is he that came by water and blood (v. 6).

1. We are inwardly and outwardly defiled. Inwardly, by the pollution of sin in our nature. For our cleansing from this we need spiritual water. We are defiled outwardly by the guilt of sin upon our persons. From this we must be purged by atoning blood.

2. Both these ways of cleansing were represented in the old ceremonial institutions of God. Persons and things must be purified by water and blood.

3. Upon the death of Jesus Christ, his side being pierced with a soldier's spear, out of the wound there immediately issued water and blood. This the beloved apostle saw. Now this water and blood are comprehensive of all that is necessary to our salvation. By the water our souls are washed and purified. By the blood God is glorified, his law is honoured. By the blood we are justified, reconciled, and presented righteous to God. The water and the blood then comprehend all things that can be requisite to our salvation.

II. In the witness that attends him, v. 6. The apostle adds the commendation of this witness. He is the Spirit of God, and cannot lie. He is indeed the Spirit of truth. And that the Spirit is truth, and a witness worthy of all acceptation, appears in that he is a heavenly witness. But here, firmed love to God, we can know assuredly that we truly love the children of God. "Love to one's brother is prior, according to the order of nature (Note, ch. 4:20); love to God is so, according to the order of grace (ch. 5:2). 3. this is—the love of God consists in this. not grievous—as so many think them. It is "the way of the transgressor" that "is hard." What makes them to the regenerate "not grievous," is faith which "overcometh the world" (vs. 4): in proportion as faith is strong, the grievousness of God's commandments to the rebellious flesh is overcome. The reason why believers feel any degree of irksomeness in God's commandments is, they do not realize fully by faith the privileges of their spiritual life. 4. For—(Note, vs. 3). The reason why "His commandments are not grievous." Though there is a conflict in keeping them, the issue for the whole body of the regenerate is victory over every opposing influence; meanwhile there is a present joy to each believer in keeping them which makes them "not grievous." whatsoever—Greek, "all that is begotten of God."

overcometh—habitually. the world—all that is opposed to keeping the commandments of God, or draws us off from God, in this world, including our corrupt flesh, on which the world's blandishments or threats act, as also including Satan, the prince of this world. this is the victory that overcometh—Greek aorist: "... that hath (already) overcome the world": the victory (where faith is) hereby is implied as having been already obtained (ch. 2:13; 4:4). 5. Who—"Who" else "but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God—"the Christ" (vs. 1)? Confirming, by a triumphant question defying all contradiction, as an undeniable fact, vs. 4, that the victory which overcomes the world is faith. For it is by believing that we are made one with Jesus the Son of God, so that we partake of His victory over the world, and have dwelling in us One greater than he who is in the world (ch. 4:4). "Survey the whole world, and show me even one of whom it can be affirmed with truth that he overcomes the world, who is not a Christian, and endowed with this faith" [EPISCOPIUS in ALFORD]. 6. This—the Person mentioned in vs. 5. This Jesus. he that came by water and blood—"by water," when His ministry was inaugurated by baptism in the Jordan, and He received the Father's testimony to His Messiahship and divine Sonship. Cf. vs. 5, "believeth that Jesus is the Son of God," with John 1:33, 34, "The Spirit... remaining on Him... I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God"; and vs. 8, below, "there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood." Corresponding to this is the baptism of water and the Spirit which He has instituted as a standing seal and mean of initiatory incorporation with Him. and blood—He came by "the blood of His cross" (so "by" is used, Heb. 9:12: "by," i.e., with, "His own blood He entered in once into the holy place"): a fact seen and so solemnly witnessed to by John. "These two past facts in the Lord's life are this abiding testimony to us, by virtue of the permanent application to us of their cleansing and atoning power." Jesus Christ—not a mere appellation, but a solemn assertion of the Lord's Person and Messiahship. not by...—Greek, "not IN the water only, but IN the water and IN (so oldest MSS. add) the blood." As "by" implies the mean through, or with, which He came: so "in," the element in which He came. "The" implies that the water and the blood were sacred and well-known symbols. John Baptist came only baptizing with water, and therefore was not the Messiah. Jesus came first to undergo Himself the double baptism of water and blood, and then to baptize us with the Spirit-cleansing, of which water is the sacramental seal, and with His atoning blood, the efficacy of which, once for all shed, is perpetual in the Church; and therefore is the Messiah. It was His shed blood which first gave water baptism its spiritual significancy. We are baptized into His death: the grand point of union between us and Him, and, through Him, between us and God. it is the Spirit...—The Holy Spirit is an additional witness (cf. vs. 7), besides the water and the blood, to Jesus' Sonship and Messiahship. The Spirit attested these truths at Jesus' baptism by descending on Him, and throughout His ministry by enabling Him to speak and do what man never before or since has spoken or done; and "it is the Spirit that beareth witness" of Christ, now permanently in the Church: both in the inspired New Testament Scriptures, and in the hearts of believers, and in the spiritual reception of baptism and the Lord's Supper. because the Spirit is truth—It is His essential truth which gives His witness such

3. For this is the love of God. This the love of God necessarily produces. It is vain to pretend love to God while we live in opposition to His will. His commandments, to love Him with all our hearts, and our neighbor as ourselves, are not grievous, are not burdensome; for no man is burdened with the duties which his own love imposes. The old proverb explains the meaning of the apostle's words, "Love feels no loads."

4. Whatsoever is born of God. "Whatsoever [the neuter for the masculine] is begotten of God overcometh the world."

6. This is he that came by water and blood. Jesus was attested to be the Son of God and promised Messiah by water, i.e., His baptism, when the Spirit of God came down from heaven upon Him, and the voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Jesus Christ came also by blood. He shed His blood for the sins of the world, and this was in accordance with all that the Jewish prophets had written concerning Him.

Here the apostle says that the Spirit witnesses this; that He came not by water only—being baptized, and baptizing men in His own name that they might be His followers and disciples; but by blood also—by His sacrificial death, without which the world could not be saved, and He could have had no disciples.

MATTHEW HENRY

1. We are stopped in our course by the contest there is about the genuineness of v. 7. It is alleged that many old Greek manuscripts have it not. We shall not here enter into the controversy. It can scarcely be supposed that, when the apostle is representing the Christian's faith in overcoming the world, and the foundation it relies upon in adhering to Jesus Christ, he should omit the supreme testimony that attended him (v. 9). Upon our present reading here is a noble enumeration of the several witnesses and testimonies supporting the truth of the Lord Jesus.

2. The apostle, having told us that the Spirit that bears witness to Christ is truth, shows us that he is so, by assuring us that he is in heaven, v. 7.

(1) Here is a trinity of heavenly witnesses, such as have testified and vouched to the world the authority of the Lord Jesus in his claims. The first that occurs in order is the Father; he set his seal to the commission of the Lord Christ all the while he was here. The second witness is the Word, a mysterious name. He must bear witness to the human nature, or to the man Christ Jesus. The third witness is the Holy Ghost. True and faithful must he be to whom the Spirit of holiness sets his seal. These are witnesses in heaven; and they bear record from heaven; and they are one.

(2) To these there is opposed, though with them joined, a trinity of witnesses on earth, v. 8. Of these witnesses the first is the spirit. The regeneration or renovation of souls is a testimony to the Saviour. It is a testimony on earth, because it continues with the church here. To this Spirit belong not only the regeneration and conversion of the church, but its progressive sanctification, victory over the world. The second is the water. This was before considered as a means of salvation, now as a testimony to the Saviour himself, and intimates his purity and purifying power. And so it seems to comprehend the testimony of John's baptism, who bore witness of him and to the purity of his own doctrine, by which souls are purified and washed. The baptism that he has appointed for the initiation of his disciples. The third witness is the blood; this he shed, and this was our ransom. This testifies for Jesus Christ; in that it demonstrated unspeakable love to us; and none will deceive those whom they entirely love. In that it lays obligation on his disciples to suffer and die for him. This shows that neither he nor his kingdom is of this world. These are signified and sealed in the institution of his own supper. Such are the witnesses on earth. These three witnesses agree in one, in one and the same thing among themselves.

III. The apostle concludes, v. 9. Here is the witness whereby God hath testified of his Son. He has by himself proclaimed him to the world. The authority and acceptableness of his testimony. It is truth itself, of highest authority and most unquestionable infallibility. The application of the rule to the present case. God, that cannot lie, hath given sufficient assurance to the world that Jesus Christ is his Son, the Son of his love, to reconcile the world unto himself; he testified therefore the truth and divine origin of the Christian religion, and that it is the sure appointed way of bringing us to God.

I. The privilege and stability of the real Christian, v. 10. He hath not only the outward evidence that others have, but he hath in his own heart a testimony for Jesus Christ. He can allege what Christ and the truth of Christ have done for his soul and what he has seen and found in him. Christ is formed in him, and he is growing up to the fulness and perfection or perfect image of Christ, in heaven.

II. The aggravation of the unbeliever's sin, the sin of unbelief, v. 10. He must believe that God did not send his Son into the world, or that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God.

III. The matter of all this divine testimony concerning Jesus Christ, v. 11. This is the sum of the gospel. 1. God hath given to us eternal life. He has designed it for us. He has made it over to us. 2. This life is in the Son. He is eternal life to us.

infallible authority. 7. three—Two or three witnesses were required by law to constitute adequate testimony. The only Greek MSS. in any form which support the words, "in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one; and there are three that bear witness in earth," are the Montfortianus of Dublin, copied evidently from the modern Latin Vulgate; the Ravianus, copied from the Complutensian Polyglot; a MS. at Naples, with the words added in the margin by a recent hand; Ottobonianus, 298, of the fifteenth century, the Greek of which is a mere translation of the accompanying Latin. All the old versions omit the words. The oldest MSS. of the Vulgate omit them: the earliest Vulgate MS. which has them being Wizanburgensis, 99, of the eighth century. A scholium quoted in Matthæi, shows that the words did not arise from fraud; for in the words in all Greek MSS., "there are three that bear record," as the Scholiast notices, the word "three" is masculine, because the three things (the Spirit, the water, and the blood) are SYMBOLS OF THE TRINITY. To this Cyprian, 196, also refers, "Of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, it is written, 'And these three are one (a unity)." There must be some mystical truth implied in using "three" (Greek) in the masculine, though the antecedents, "Spirit, water, and blood," are neuter. That THE TRINITY was the truth meant is a natural inference: the triad specified pointing to a still Higher Trinity; as is plain also from vs. 9, "the witness of GOD," referring to the Trinity alluded to in the Spirit, water, and blood. It was therefore first written as a marginal comment to complete the sense of the text, and then, as early at least as the eighth century, was introduced into the text of the Latin Vulgate. The testimony, however, could only be borne on earth to men, not in heaven. The marginal comment, therefore, that inserted "in heaven," was inappropriate. It is on earth that the context evidently requires the witness of the three, the Spirit, the water, and the blood, to be borne: mystically setting forth the divine triune witnesses, the Father, the Spirit, and the Son. 8. agree in one—"tend unto one result"; their agreeing testimony to Jesus' Sonship and Messiahship they give by the sacramental grace in the water of baptism, received by the penitent believer, by the atoning efficacy of His blood, and by the internal witness of His Spirit (vs. 10): answering to the testimony given to Jesus' Sonship and Messiahship by His baptism, His crucifixion, and the Spirit's manifestations in Him (Note, vs. 6).

9. If . . .—We do accept (and rightly so) the witness of veracious men, fallible though they be; much more ought we to accept the infallible witness of God (the Father). "The testimony of the Father is, as it were, the basis of the testimony of the Word and of the Holy Spirit; just as the testimony of the Spirit is, as it were, the basis of the testimony of the water and the blood" [BENGEL]. for—This principle applies in the present case, FOR . . . . which—in the oldest MSS., "because He hath given testimony concerning His Son." What that testimony is we find above in vss. 1, 5, "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God"; and below in vss. 10, 11. 10. hath the witness—of God, by His Spirit (vs. 8). in himself—God's Spirit dwelling in him and witnessing that "Jesus is the Lord," "the Christ," and "the Son of God" (vss. 1, 5). The witness of the Spirit in the believer himself to his own sonship is not here expressed, but follows as a consequence of believing the witness of God to Jesus' divine Sonship. believeth not God—credits not His witness. made him a liar—a consequence which many who virtually, or even avowedly, do not believe, may well startle back from as fearful blasphemy and presumption (ch. 1:10). believeth not the record—Greek, "believeth not IN the record, or witness." Refusal to credit God's testimony ("believeth not God") is involved in refusal to believe IN (to rest one's trust in) Jesus Christ, the object of God's record or testimony. "Divine faith is an assent unto something as credible upon the testimony of God. This is the highest kind of faith; because the object hath the highest credibility, because grounded upon the testimony of God, which is infallible" [PEARSON on Creed]. "The authority on which we believe is divine; the doctrine which we follow is divine" [LEO]. gave—Greek, "hath testified, and now testifies." of—concerning. 11. hath given—Greek, aorist: "gave" once for all. Not only "promised" it. life is in his Son—essentially (John 1:4; 11:25; 14:6); bodily (Col. 2:9); operatively (II Tim. 1:10) [LANGE in ALFORD]. It is in the second Adam, the Son of God, that this life is secured to us, which, if left to depend on us, we

7. There are three that bear record in heaven. It is likely that this verse is not genuine. It is wanting in every MS., one excepted.

A. T. ROBERTSON:

7. "For there are three who bear witness" (hoti treis eisin hoi marturountes). At this point the Latin Vulgate gives the words in the Textus Receptus, found in no Greek ms save two late cursives (162 in the Vatican Library of the fifteenth century, 34 of the sixteenth century in Trinity College, Dublin). Jerome did not have it. Cyprian applies the language of the Trinity and Priscillian has it. Erasmus did not have it in his first edition, but rashly offered to insert it if a single Greek ms had it and 34 was produced with the insertion, as if made to order. The spurious addition is: "in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth." The last clause belongs to verse 8. The fact and the doctrine of the Trinity do not depend on this spurious addition. Some Latin scribe caught up Cyprian's exegesis and wrote it on the margin of his text, and so it got into the Vulgate and finally into the Textus Receptus by the stupidity of Erasmus.
—Word Pictures in the New Testament

8. The spirit, and the water, and the blood. This verse is supposed to mean "the Spirit—in the word confirmed by miracles; the water—in baptism, wherein we are dedicated to the Son (with the Father and the Holy Spirit), typifying His spotless purity, and the inward purifying of our nature; and the blood—represented in the Lord's Supper, and applied to the consciences of believers: and all these harmoniously agree in the same testimony, that Jesus Christ is the divine, the complete, the only Saviour of the world" (Mr. Wesley's notes).

9. If we receive the witness of men. Which all are obliged to do, and which is deemed a sufficient testimony to truth in numberless cases. The witness of God is greater—He can neither be deceived nor deceive.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God. This is God's witness to a truth, the most important and interesting to mankind. God has witnessed that whosoever believeth on His Son shall be saved and have everlasting life; and shall have the witness of it in himself, the Spirit bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. To know his sin forgiven, to have the testimony of this in the heart from the Holy Spirit himself, is the privilege of every true believer in Christ.

11. This is the record. The great truth to which the Spirit, the water, and the Blood bear testimony. God hath given to us eternal life—a right to endless glory, and a meetness for it. And this life is in his Son; it comes by and through Him.

MATTHEW HENRY

It must follow, (1) He that is united to the Son is united to life (v. 12). (2) He who refuses the Son, who is life itself, and the way to it refuses life.

IV. The end of the apostle's preaching this to believers. 1. For their satisfaction and comfort: These believers have eternal life. These believers may come to know that they have eternal life, and should be encouraged, and comforted, in the prospect of it

2. For their confirmation and progress in their holy faith (v. 13). Believers must persevere, or they do nothing.

I. A privilege belonging to faith in Christ, audience in prayer: v. 14. The Lord Christ emboldens us to come to God in all circumstances. Through him our petitions are accepted of God. The matter of our prayer must be agreeable to the declared will of God. We may have confidence that the prayer of faith shall be heard in heaven.

II. The advantage accruing to us by such privilege, v. 15. To know that his petitions are heard or accepted is as good as to know that they are answered.

III. Direction in prayer in reference to the sins of others, v. 16. 1. We ought to pray for others as well as for ourselves. 2. There is a great distinction in the heinousness and guilt of sin (v. 16), and (v. 17). (1) There is a sin unto death. There is a sin unto death in opposition to such sin as is here said not to be unto death. There is, therefore, (2) A sin not unto death. The gospel does not positively and peremptorily threaten death to the more visible sins of the members of Christ but only some gospel-chastisement. There is room left for divine wisdom or goodness, or even gospel severity, to determine how far the chastisement or the scourge shall proceed. There are sins which are unto death spiritual and evangelical, that is, are inconsistent with spiritual life in the soul and with an evangelical right to life above, such as total impenitence and unbelief.

IV. The direction for prayer according to the different sorts of sin. The prayer is supposed to be for life: He shall ask, and he shall give them life. Life is to be asked of God. He is the God of life; he gives it when and to whom he pleases. In the case of a brother's sin, which is not unto death, we may in faith and hope pray for him. But, in case of the sin unto death we have no allowance to pray. Perhaps the apostle's expression, I do not say, He shall pray for it, may intend no more than, "I have no promise for you in that case." The removal of evangelical penalties, or the prevention of death, can be prayed for only conditionally or provisionally. We cannot pray that the sins of the impenitent and unbelieving should, while they are such, be forgiven them. But we may pray for their repentance, for their being enriched with faith in Christ, and thereupon for all other saving mercies. The apostle seems to argue that there is sin that is not unto death (v. 17); for, were all unrighteousness unto death, then we were all peremptorily bound over to death, and, since it is not so, there must be sin that is not to death. Though there is no venial sin there is pardoned sin.

should lose, like the first Adam. 12. the Son... life—Greek, "THE life." BENGEL remarks, The verse has two clauses: in the former the Son is mentioned without the addition "of God," for believers know the Son: in the second clause the addition "of God" is made, that unbelievers may know thereby what a serious thing it is not to have Him. In the former clause "has" bears the emphasis; in the second, life. To have the Son is to be able to say as the bride, "I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine." Faith is the mean whereby the regenerate HAVE Christ as a present possession, and in having Him have life in its germ and reality now, and shall have life in its fully developed manifestation hereafter.

13. These things—This Epistle. He, towards the close of his Gospel (John 20:30, 31), wrote similarly, stating his purpose in having written. In ch. 1:4 he states the object of his writing this Epistle to be, "that your joy may be full." To "know that we have eternal life" is the sure way to "joy in God." 13. The oldest MSS. and versions read, "These things have I written unto you [omitting that believe on the name of the Son of God] that ye may know that ye have eternal life (cf. vs. 11), THOSE (of you I mean) WHO believe (not as English Version reads, and that ye may believe) on the name of the Son of God." English Version, in the latter clause, will mean, "that ye may continue to believe . . ." (cf. vs. 12). 14. the confidence—boldness" (ch. 4:17) in prayer, which results from knowing that we have eternal life (vs. 13; ch. 3:19, 22). according to his will—which is the believer's will, and which is therefore no restraint to his prayers. In so far as God's will is not our will, we are not abiding in faith, and our prayers are not accepted. ALFORD well says, If we knew God's will thoroughly, and submitted to it heartily, it would be impossible for us to ask anything for the spirit or for the body which He should not perform; it is this ideal state which the apostle has in view. It is the Spirit who teaches us inwardly, and Himself in us asks according to the will of God. 15. hear—Greek, "that He heareth us." we have the petitions that we desired of him—We have, as present possessions, everything whatsoever we desired (asked) from Him. Not one of our past prayers offered in faith, according to His will, is lost. Like Hannah, we can rejoice over them as granted even before the event; and can recognize the event when it comes to pass, as not from chance, but obtained by our past prayers. Cf. also Jehoshaphat's believing confidence in the issue of his prayers, so much so that he appointed singers to praise the Lord beforehand. 16. If any... see—on any particular occasion; Greek aorist. his brother—a fellow Christian. sin a sin—in the act of sinning, and continuing in the sin: present. not unto death—provided that it is not unto death. he shall give—The asker shall be the means, by his intercessory prayer, of God giving life to the sinning brother. Kindly reproof ought to accompany his intercessions. Life was in process of being forfeited by the sinning brother when the believer's intercession obtained its restoration. for them—resuming the proviso put forth in the beginning of the verse. "Provided that the sin is not unto death." "Shall give life," I say, to, i.e., obtain life "for (in the case of) them that sin not unto death." I do not say that he shall pray for it—The Greek for "pray" means a REQUEST as of one on an equality, or at least on terms of familiarity, with him from whom the favor is sought. "The Christian intercessor for his brethren, John declares, shall not assume the authority which would be implied in making request for a sinner who has sinned the sin unto death (I Sam. 15:35; 16:1; Mark 3:29), that it might be forgiven him" [TRENCH, Synonyms of New Testament]. 17. "Every unrighteousness (even that of believers, cf. ch. 1:9; 3:4. Every coming short of right) is sin"; (but) not every sin is the sin unto death. and there is a sin not unto death—in the case of which, therefore, believers may intercede. Death and life stand in correlative opposition (vss. 11-13). The sin unto death must be one tending "towards" (so the Greek), and so resulting in, death. ALFORD makes it to be an appreciable ACT of sin, viz., the denying Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of God (in contrast to confess this truth, vss. 1, 5), ch. 2:19, 22; 4:2, 3; 5:10. Such wilful deniers of Christ are not to be received into one's house, or wished "God speed." Still, I think with BENGEL, not merely the act, but also the state of apostasy accompanying the act, is included—a "state of soul in which faith, love, and hope, in short, the new life, is extinguished. The chief commandment is faith and love. Therefore, the

12. He that hath the Son hath life. As the eternal life is given "in" the Son of God, it follows that it cannot be enjoyed without Him. No man can have it without having Christ; therefore he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

13. That ye may know that ye have eternal life. It is not a blind reliance for, but an actual enjoyment of, salvation; Christ living, working and reigning in the heart. And that ye may believe. That is, "continue to believe"; for Christ dwells in the heart only by faith, and faith lives only by love, and love continues only by obedience; he who believes loves, and he who loves obeys.

14. This is the confidence, the "liberty of access and speech," that, if we ask any thing according to his will, that is, which He has promised in His Word. All that God has promised we are justified in expecting; and what He has promised and we expect, we should pray for. Prayer is the language of the children of God.

15. And if we know that he hear us. Seeing we are satisfied that He hears the prayer of faith, requesting the things which himself has promised, we know, consequently, that we have the petitions—the answer to the petitions—that we desired of him. For He cannot deny himself; and we may consider them as sure as if we had them; and we shall have them as soon as we plead for and need them.

16. A sin which is not unto death. This is an extremely difficult passage, and has been variously interpreted. What is the sin not unto death, for which we should ask, and life shall be given to him that commits it? And what is the sin unto death, for which we should not pray? The sin unto death means a case of transgression, particularly of grievous backsliding from the life and power of godliness, which God determines to punish with temporal death, while at the same time He extends mercy to the penitent soul. The disobedient prophet, 1 Kings xiii. 1-32, is, on this interpretation, a case in point. Many others occur in the history of the Church, and of every religious community. The sin not unto death is any sin which God does not choose thus to punish. This view of the subject is that taken by the late Rev. J. Wesley, in a sermon entitled "A Call to Backsliders." I do not think the passage has anything to do with what is termed "the sin against the Holy Ghost." See the note on Matt. xii. 31-32.

17. All unrighteousness is sin. Every act contrary to justice is sin—is a transgression of the law which condemns all injustice.

Verses 18–21

I. A recapitulation of the privileges of sound Christian believers. 1. They are secured against sin (v. 18); secured against that sin which is unto death. The new nature, and the inhabitation of the divine Spirit thereby, prevent the admission of such unpardonable sin.

2. They are fortified against the devil's destructive attempts (v. 18). It seems not to be barely a narration of the duty of the regenerate; but an indication of their power.

3. They are on God's side in opposition to the world, v. 19. Mankind are divided into two great parties, that which belongs to God and that which belongs to wickedness. The Christian believers belong to God. They are of God, and from him, and to him, and for him. On the contrary, the whole world, the rest, being by far the major part, lieth in wickedness. May the God of the Christian world continually demolish the devil's dominion, and translate souls into the kingdom of his dear Son!

4. They are enlightened in the knowledge of the true eternal God, v. 20. The Son of God has come into our world, and we have seen him, and know him. He has revealed unto us the true God, and he has opened our minds too to understand that revelation; and we are assured that it is the true God that he hath discovered to us. It is a great happiness to know the true God, to know him in Christ; it is eternal life. 5. They have a happy union with God and his Son, v. 20. The Son leads us to the Father, and we are in both, in the love and favour of both. In union with either, much more with both, we are united to the true God and eternal life.

II. The apostle's concluding monition, v. 21. Since you know the true God, and are in him, let your light and love guard you. Flee from the false gods of the heathen world. The God whom you have known is he who redeemed you by his Son, who has pardoned your sins, and given you eternal life. Cleave to him in faith, and love, and constant obedience. To this living and true God be glory and dominion for ever and ever Amen.

chief sin is that by which faith and love are destroyed. In the former case is life; in the latter, death. As long as it is not evident (Note, 'see,' vs. 16) that it is a sin unto death, it is lawful to pray. But when it is deliberate rejection of grace, and the man puts from him life thereby, how can others procure for him life?"18. (Ch. 3:9.) We know—Thrice repeated emphatically, to enforce the three truths which the words preface, as matters of the brethren's joint experimental knowledge. This vs. 18 warns against abusing vss. 16: 17, as warranting carnal security. whosoever—Greek, "every one who." Not only advanced believers, but every one who is born again, "sinneth not." he that is begotten—Greek aorist, "has been (once for all in past time) begotten of God"; in the beginning of the verse it is perfect. "Is begotten," or "born," as a continuing state. keepeth himself—The Vulgate translates, "The having been begotten of God keepeth HIM" (so one of the oldest MSS. reads): so ALFORD. Lit., "He having been begotten of God (nominative pendent), it (the divine generation implied in the nominative) keepeth him." So ch. 3:9, "His seed remaineth in him." Still, in English Version reading, God's working by His Spirit inwardly, and man's working under the power of that Spirit as a responsible agent, is what often occurs elsewhere. That God must keep us, if we are to keep ourselves from evil, is certain. Cf. John 17: 15 especially with this verse. that wicked one toucheth him not—so as to hurt him. In so far as he realizes his regeneration-life, the prince of this world hath nothing in him to fasten his deadly temptations on, as in Christ's own case. His divine regeneration has severed once for all his connection with the prince of this world. 19. world lieth in wickedness—rather, "lieth in the wicked one," as the Greek is translated in vs. 18; ch. 2:13, 14; cf. ch. 4:4; John 17:14, 15. The world lieth in the power of, and abiding in, the wicked one, as the resting-place and lord of his slaves; cf. "abideth in death," ch. 3:14; contrast vs. 20, "we are in Him that is true." While the believer has been delivered out of his power, the whole world lieth helpless and motionless still in it, just as it was; including the wise, great, respectable, and all who are not by vital union in Christ. 20. Summary of our Christian privileges. is come—is present, having come. "HE IS HERE—all is full of Him—His incarnation, work, and abiding presence, is to us a living fact" [ALFORD]. given us an understanding—Christ's office is to give the inner spiritual understanding to discern the things of God. that we may know—Some oldest MSS. read, "(so) that we know." him that is true—God, as opposed to every kind of idol or false god (vs. 21). Jesus, by virtue of His oneness with God, is also "He that is true" (Rev. 3:7). even—"we are in the true" God, by virtue of being "in His Son Jesus Christ." This is the true God—"This Jesus Christ (the last-named Person) is the true God" (identifying Him thus with the Father in His attribute, "the only true God," John 17:3, primarily attributed to the Father). and eternal life—predicated of the Son of God; ALFORD wrongly says, He was the life, but not eternal life. The Father is indeed eternal life as its source, but the Son also is that eternal life manifested, as the very passage (ch. 1:2) which ALFORD quotes, proves against him. Cf. also vss. 11, 13. Plainly it is as the Mediator of ETERNAL LIFE to us that Christ is here contemplated. The Greek is, "The true God and eternal life is this" Jesus Christ, i.e., In believing in Him we believe in the true God, and have eternal life. The Son is called "He that is TRUE," Revelation 3:7, as here. This naturally prepares the way for warning against false gods (vs. 21). Jesus Christ is the only "express image of God's person" which is sanctioned, the only true visible manifestation of God. All other representations of God are forbidden as idols. Thus the Epistle closes as it began (ch. 1:1, 2). 21. Affectionate parting caution. from idols—Christians were then everywhere surrounded by idolaters, with whom it was impossible to avoid intercourse. Hence the need of being on their guard against any even indirect compromise or act of communion with idolatry. Some at Pergamos, in the region whence John wrote, fell into the snare of eating things sacrificed to idols. The moment we cease to abide "in Him that is true (by abiding) in Jesus Christ," we become part of "the world that lieth in the wicked one," given up to spiritual, if not in all places literal, idolatry (Eph. 5:5; Col. 3:5).

ADAM CLARKE

18. Whosoever is born of God sinneth not. This is spoken of adult Christians; they are cleansed from all unrighteousness, consequently from all sin, chap. i. 7-9.

Keepeth himself. That is, in the love of God, Jude 21, by building up himself on his most holy faith, and praying in the Holy Ghost; and that wicked one, the devil, toucheth him not, finds nothing of his own nature in him on which he can work.

19. The whole world lieth in wickedness. "Lieth in the wicked one."

20. We know that the Son of God is come. in the flesh, and has made His soul an offering for sin; and hath given us an understanding, a more eminent degree of light than we ever enjoyed before.

21. Little children. "Beloved children"; he concludes with the same affectionate feeling with which he commenced. Keep yourselves from idols. That is a man's idol or god from which he seeks his happiness. That is a man's idol which prevents him from seeking and finding his all in God.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF JOHN

I. Introduction (1-4)
A. Addresses and key word: truth (1, 2)
B. Salutation (3)
C. The apostle's joy (4)

II. Love—the commandment (5)

III. Love and light (6)
A. Love defined
B. Light defined

IV. Light and life (7-11)
A. A warning (7)
B. Injunction (8)
C. A test (9)
D. A requirement (10, 11)

V. Conclusion—the farewell (12, 13)

Here we find a canonical epistle inscribed, principally, not only to a single person, but to one also of the gentler sex. And why not to one of that sex? In gospel redemption, privilege, and dignity, "there is neither male nor female"; they are both one "in Christ Jesus." No wonder, then, that a heroine in the Christian religion should be dignified also by an apostolic epistle.

CHAPTER 1

I. The saluter, not expressed by name, but by a chosen character: The elder. The expression, and style, and love, intimate that the penman was the same with that of the foregoing epistle. Possibly the oldest apostle now living. He was now old in holy service and experience, had seen and tasted much of heaven, and was much nearer than when at first he believed.

II. The saluted: To the elect lady and her children. A lady, a person of eminent quality. It is well that the gospel has got among such. It is a pity but lords and ladies should be acquainted with the Lord Christ and his religion. The elect lady; not only a choice one, but one chosen of God. And her children; probably the lady was a widow. We see that children may well be taken notice of in Christian letters, and they should know it too; it may avail to their encouragement. The respect paid them, 1. By the apostle himself: Whom I love in the truth, whom I sincerely and heartily love. He who was the beloved disciple had learnt the art or exercise of love. 2. By all her Christian acquaintance: And not I only, but also all those that have known the truth. Truth demands acknowledgment, and those who see the evidences of pure religion should confess and attest them. The ground of this love and respect was their regard to the truth: For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever. Those who love truth and piety in themselves should love it in others too. Religion should still dwell within us, in our minds and hearts, in our faith and love.

III. The salutation, which is indeed an apostolical benediction, v. 3. Sacred love pours out blessings upon this honourable Christian family; to those who have shall more be given.

1. From whom these blessings are craved, (1) From God the Father. He is the fountain of blessedness. (2) From the Lord Jesus Christ. He is also author and communicator of these heavenly blessings, the Son of the Father.

2. What the apostle craves, (1) Grace—divine favour and goodwill. (2) Mercy—free pardon and forgiveness; those who are already rich in grace have need of continual forgiveness. (3) Peace—tranquillity of spirit and serenity of conscience. And these are desired in truth and love. These blessings will continually preserve true faith and love in the elect lady and her children.

IV. The congratulation upon the prospect of the exemplary behaviour of other children of this excellent lady, v. 4. Possibly the lady's sons travelled abroad, and in their travels might come to Ephesus, where the apostle is supposed to have now resided, and might there happily converse with him. Let young travellers learn to carry their religion along with them, and not either leave it at home or learn the ill customs of the countries where they come. It is pleasant to see children treading in good parent's steps. How great a joy must it be to her ladyship to hear so good an account of them from so good a judge! We see here also the rule of true walking: the commandment of the Father. Then is our walk true, our converse right, when it is managed by the word of God.

Verses 5, 6

I. The apostle's request. Whether out of deference to her ladyship, or apostolical meekness, or both, he condescends to beseech: And now I beseech thee,

CHAPTER 1

Vss. 1-13. ADDRESS: GREETING: THANKSGIVING FOR THE ELECT LADY'S FAITHFULNESS IN THE TRUTH: ENJOINS LOVE: WARNS AGAINST DECEIVERS, LEST WE LOSE OUR REWARD: CONCLUSION. 1. The elder—In a familiar letter John gives himself a less authoritative designation than "apostle"; so I Peter 5. 1. lady—BENGEL takes the Greek as a proper name Kyria, answering to the Hebrew "Martha." Being a person of influence, "deceivers" (vs. 7) were insinuating themselves into her family to seduce her and her children from the faith [TIRINUS], whence John felt it necessary to write a warning to her.

A particular Church, probably that at Babylon, was intended. "Church" is derived from Greek Kuriake, akin to Kuria, or Kyria here; the latter word among the Romans and Athenians means the same as ecclesia, the term appropriated to designate the Church assembly. love in the truth—Christian love rests on the Christian truth (vs. 3, end). Not merely "I love in truth," but "I love in THE truth." all—All Christians form one fellowship, rejoicing in the spiritual prosperity of one another. "The communion of love is as wide as the communion of faith" [ALFORD]. 2. For the truth's sake—joined with "I love," vs. 1. "They who love in the truth, also love on account of the truth." dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever—in consonance with Christ's promise. 3. Grace be with you—One of the oldest MSS. and several versions have "us" for you. The Greek is lit., "Grace shall be with us," i.e., with both you and me. A prayer, however, is implied besides a confident affirmation. grace . . . mercy . . . peace—"Grace" covers the sins of men; "mercy," their miseries. Grace must first do away with man's guilt before his misery can be relieved by mercy. Therefore grace stands before mercy. Peace is the result of both, and therefore stands third in order. Casting all our care on the Lord, with thanksgiving, maintains this peace. the Lord—The oldest MSS. and most of the oldest versions omit "the Lord." John never elsewhere uses this title in his Epistles, but "the Son of God." in truth and love—The element or sphere in which alone grace, mercy, and peace, have place. He mentions truth in vs. 4; love, in vs. 5. Paul uses FAITH and love; for faith and truth are close akin. 4. I found—probably in one of his missionary tours of superintendence. See Introduction, at the end, and vs. 12; III John 10:14. of thy children—some. in truth—i.e., in the Gospel truth. as—even as. "The Father's commandment" is the standard of "the truth." 5. I beseech—rather (cf. Note, I John 5:16), "I request thee," implying some degree of authority. not . . . new commandment—It was old in that Christians heard it from the first in the Gospel preaching; new, in that the Gospel rested love on the new principle of filial imitation of God who first loved us, and gave Jesus to die for us; and also, in that love is now set forth with greater clearness than in the Old Testament dispensation. Love performs both tables of the law, and is the end of the law and the Gospel alike (cf. Note, I John 2:7, 8). that we—implying that he already had love, and urging her to join him in the same Christian grace. This verse seems to me to decide that a Church, not an individual lady, is meant. For a man to urge a wo-

1. The elder. John the apostle, who was now a very old man, generally supposed to be about ninety, and therefore he uses the term presbyter or elder, not as the name of an office, but as designating his advanced age. He is allowed to have been the oldest of all the apostles, and to have been the only one who died a natural death. The elect lady. As kuria may be the feminine of kurios, "lord," therefore it may signify lady; and so several, both ancients and moderns, have understood it. But others have considered it the proper name of a woman, Kyria; and that this is a very ancient opinion is evident from the Peshito Syriac, which uses it as a proper name, as does also the Arabic. Some have thought that Eclecta was the name of this matron, from the word which we translate elect, and which here signifies the same as "excellent, eminent, honorable," or the like. Others think that a particular church is intended, which some suppose to be the church at Jerusalem, and that the "elect sister," v. 13, means the church at Ephesus; but these are conjectures which appear to me to have no good ground. I am satisfied that no metaphor is here intended; that the Epistle was sent to some eminent Christian matron, not far from Ephesus, who was probably deaconess of the church, who, it is likely, had a church at her house, or at whose house the apostles and travelling evangelists frequently preached, and were entertained. Whom I love in the truth. Whom I love as the Christian religion requires us to love one another. And not I only. She was well-known in the churches; many had witnessed or heard of her fidelity, and partook of her hospitality.

2. For the truth's sake. On account of the gospel. And shall be with us. For God will preserve not only the Christian religion but its truth, all its essential doctrines, for ever.

3. Grace be with you. This is addressed to her, her household, and probably that part of the church which was more immediately under her care. The Son of the Father. The apostle still keeps in view the miraculous conception of Christ, a thing which the Gnostics absolutely denied, a doctrine which is at the groundwork of our salvation.

4. That I found of thy children walking in truth. I have already supposed this Christian matron to be mother of a family, probably a widow, for no mention is made of her husband; and that she was also a deaconess in the church, and one in whose house the travelling evangelists preached, and where they were entertained. The children mentioned here may either be her own children or those members of the church which were under her care, or some of both. The apostle was glad to find, probably by an epistle sent from herself to him or from the information of some of the itinerant evangelists, that the work of God was prospering in the place where she lived, and also in her own household. He does not say that all were walking in the truth, but "some" of her children.

lady. Love will avail where authority will not; and we may often see that the more authority is urged the more it is slighted.

II. The thing requested—growth in love. Those that are eminent in any Christian virtue have yet room to grow therein.

1. This love is recommended: From the obligation thereto—the commandment. From the antiquity of the obligation, v. 5. This commandment must everywhere attend Christianity, that the disciples of it must love one another.

2. Then this love is illustrated, v. 5. This is the evidence of our sincere, mutual, Christian love—that we walk after God's commands. Universal obedience is the proof of the sincerity of Christian virtues. This is a fundamental duty in the gospel-charter (v. 6), that is, walk in this love.

I. The ill news communicated to the lady, For many deceivers have entered into the world. Your stability is likely to be tried. 1. The description of the deceiver and his deceit (v. 7); he brings some error or other concerning the person of the Lord Jesus. Strange that after such evidence any should deny that the Lord Jesus is the Son of God and Saviour of the world! 2. The aggravation of the case (v. 7); he deludes souls and undermines the kingdom of the Lord Christ.

II. The counsel given hereupon, v. 8. Two things they must beware of, for some begin well, but at last lose all their pains. 1. Professors should take care not to lose what they have gained. Sad it is that fair and splendid attainments in the school of Christ should all be lost at last. 2. That they lose not their reward, none of it. That we receive a full reward. The way to attain the full reward is to abide true to Christ, and constant in religion to the end.

III. The reason of the apostle's counsel. 1. The danger and evil of departure from gospel light. It is in reality a departure from God himself: Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. Those who revolt thence, in so doing revolt from God. 2. The advantage and happiness of firm adherence to Christian truth. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. We must retain that holy doctrine in faith and love, as we hope or desire to arrive at blessed communion with the Father and the Son.

Verses 10, 11

I. The apostle gives direction concerning the treatment of such: If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house. Neither bid him God speed. Bad work should not be consecrated or recommended to the divine benediction. God will be no patron of falsehood and sin. The propagation of fatal error we must not dare to countenance.

II. The reason of such direction: For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds. Favour and affection partake of the sin. We may be sharers in the iniquities of others.

The apostle concludes this letter, for some things are better spoken than written. The use of pen and ink may be a mercy and a pleasure; but a personal interview may be more so.

The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Grace was abundant towards this family; here are two elect sisters, and probably their elect children. May there be many such gracious ladies rejoicing in their gracious descendants and other relations! Amen.

man ("THEE"; not thee and thy children) that he and she should love one another, is hardly like an apostolic precept, however pure may be the love enjoined; but all is clear if "the lady" represent a Church. 6. "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and the fulfilling of the law is the sure test of love. This is the commandment—Greek, "The commandment is this," viz., love, in which all God's other commandments are summed up. 7. As love and truth go hand in hand (vss. 3, 4), he feels it needful to give warning against teachers of untruth. For—giving the reason why he dwelt on truth and on love, which manifests itself in keeping God's commandments (vs. 6). many—(I John 2:18; 4:1). are entered—The oldest MSS. read, "have gone forth," viz., from us. confess not . . . Jesus . . . in the flesh—the token of Antichrist. is come—Greek, "coming." He who denies Christ's coming in the flesh, denies the possibility of the incarnation; he who denies that he has come, denies its actuality.

This is a . . .—Greek, "This (such a one as has been just described) is the deceiver and the Antichrist." The many who in a degree fulfil the character, are forerunners of the final personal Antichrist, who shall concentrate in himself all the features of previous Antichristian systems. 8. Look to yourselves—amidst the widespread prevalence of deception so many being led astray. So Christ's warning, Matthew 24:4, 5, 24. we lose not . . . we receive—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "That YE lose not, but that YE receive." which we have wrought—So one oldest MS. reads. Other very old MSS., versions, and Fathers, read, "which YE have wrought." The we being seemingly the more difficult reading is less likely to have been a transcriber's alteration. Look that ye lose not the believing state of "truth and love," which WE (as God's workmen, II Cor. 6:1; II Tim. 2:15) were the instruments of working in you. a full reward—of grace not of debt. Fully consummated glory. If "which YE have wrought" be read with very old authorities, the reward meant is that of their "work (of faith) and labor of love." There are degrees of heavenly reward proportioned to the degrees of capability of receiving heavenly blessedness. Each vessel of glory hanging on Jesus shall be fully happy. 9. The loss (vs. 8) meant is here explained: the not having God, which results from abiding not in the doctrine of Christ. transgresseth—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "Every one who takes the lead"; lit., "goes," or "leads on before"; cf. John 10:4, "He goeth before them" (not the same Greek). Cf. III John 9, "Loveth to have the pre-eminence." hath not God—(I John 2:23; 5:15). The second "of Christ" is omitted in the oldest MSS., but is understood in the sense. He—emphatical: He and He alone. 10. If there come any—as a teacher or brother. The Greek is indicative, not subjunctive; implying that such persons do actually come, and are sure to come; when any comes, as there will. True love is combined with hearty renunciation and separation from all that is false, whether persons or doctrines. receive him not . . . neither bid him God speed—This is not said of those who were always aliens from the Church, but of those who wish to be esteemed brethren, and subvert the true doctrine [GROTIUS]. The greeting salutation forbidden in the case of such a one is that usual among Christian brethren in those days, not a mere formality, but a token of Christian brotherhood. 11. By wishing a false brother or teacher "God (or good) speed," you imply that he is capable as such of good speed and joy (the lit. meaning of the Greek), and that you wish him it while opposing Christ; so you identify yourself with "his evil deeds." The Greek of "partaker" is "having communion with." We cannot have communion with saints and with Antichrist at the same time. Here we see John's naturally fiery zeal directed to a right end.

12. I would not write—A heart full of love pours itself out more freely face to face, than by letter. paper—made of Egyptian papyrus. Pens were then reeds split. ink—made of soot and water, thickened with gum. Parchment was used for the permanent MSS. in which the Epistles were preserved. Writing tablets were used merely for temporary purposes, as our slates. face to face—lit., "mouth to mouth." full—Greek, "filled full." Your joy will be complete in hearing from me in person the joyful Gospel truths which I now defer communicating till I see you. On other occasions his writing the glad truths was for the same purpose. 13. ALFORD confesses that the non-mention of the "lady" herself here seems rather to favor the hypothesis that a Church is meant.

ADAM CLARKE

5. That which we had from the beginning. The commandment to love one another was what they had heard from the first publication of Christianity, and what he wishes this excellent woman to inculcate on all those under her care. The mode of address here shows that it was a person, not a church, to which the apostle wrote.

6. And this is love. That is, our love is shown and proved by our walking according to the commandments of God; for love is the principle of obedience.

7. For many deceivers. Of these he had spoken before, see 1 John iv. 1 ff. And these appear to have been Gnostics, for they denied that Jesus was come in the flesh. And this doctrine, so essential to salvation, none could deny but a deceiver and an antichrist. Instead of are entered into, many excellent MSS. and versions have "are gone out." The sense is nearly the same.

8. Look to yourselves. Be on your guard against these seducers; watch, pray, love God and each other, and walk in newness of life. That we lose not those things which we have wrought. That we apostles, who have been the means of your conversion, may not be deprived of you as our crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus. Instead of the first person plural, we lose, many MSS., versions, and fathers read the whole clause in the second person plural, "ye lose": "Take heed to yourselves, that ye lose not the things which ye have wrought, but that ye receive a full reward." This reading is more consistent and likely, and is supported by at least as good evidence as the other.

9. Whosoever transgresseth—he who "passes over" the sacred enclosure, or "goes beyond" the prescribed limits. And abideth not in the doctrine—does not remain within these holy limits, but indulges himself either in excesses of action or passion. Hath not God for his Father, nor the love of God in his heart. Hath both the Father and the Son. He who abideth in the doctrine of Christ, his body is a temple of the Holy Trinity, and he has communion with the Father as his Father, and with the Son as his Saviour and Redeemer.

10. If there come any unto you, under the character of an apostle or evangelist, to preach in your house. And bring not this doctrine, that Jesus is come in the flesh, and has died for the redemption of the world; Receive him not into your house. Give him no entertainment as an evangelical teacher. Let him not preach under your roof. Neither bid him God speed. "And do not say, Health to him"—do not salute him with "Peace be to you!" The words mean, according to the Eastern use of them, "Have no religious connection with him, nor act towards him so as to induce others to believe you acknowledge him as a brother."

11. Is partaker of his evil deeds. He that acts towards him as if he considered him a Christian brother, and sound in the faith, puts it in his power to deceive others, by thus apparently accrediting his ministry.

12. Having many things to write. That is, I have many things that I might write to you, but I think it best not to commit them to paper, because I hope to visit you shortly, and speak fully of those matters, which will be a means of increasing the comfort of both you and your family, as well as my own. There is more comfort in mutual interviews among friends than in epistolary correspondence.

13. The children of thy elect sister. Probably her own sister, who lived at Ephesus and, being acquainted with the apostle's writing, desired to be thus remembered to her. Elect, in both this and the first verse, signifies "excellent, eminent, or honorable." Amen is wanting in the most ancient MSS. and in most of the versions.

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN

A. The address (1)
B. The prayer (2)
C. The apostle's joy (3, 4)

II. Gaius: love practiced (5-8)
A. Gaius' hospitality (5, 6a)
B. Injunction to continue (6b)
C. The reason (7, 8)

III. Diotrephes (9, 10)
A. The reason of Diotrephes' disobedience (9)
B. The warning (10a)
C. The expression of Diotrephes' pride (10b)

IV. Demetrius: love, light, life (11, 12)
A. The injunction (11a)
B. Central statement (11b)
C. The example of Demetrius (12)

V. Conclusion (13, 14)
A. Anticipation of meeting (13)
B. A message of peace (14)

The apostle sends this encouraging epistle to his friend Gaius, in which also he complains of the quite opposite spirit of a certain minister, and confirms the good report concerning another.

CHAPTER 1

I. The sacred penman who writes and sends the letter; not here indeed notified by his name: The elder. Some have questioned whether this were John the apostle or no; but his style and spirit seem to shine in the epistle. Gaius could not question from whom the letter came.

II. The person saluted and honoured by the letter. He is notified, 1. By his name,—Gaius. We read of several of that name, particularly of one whom the apostle Paul baptized at Corinth. 2. By the kind expressions of the apostle to him: The well-beloved, and whom I love in the truth. Love expressed is wont to kindle love. To love our friends for the truth's sake is true love, gospel love.

III. The salutation or greeting. 1. The apostle's good opinion of his friend, that his soul prospered, the greatest blessing on this side heaven. 2. His good wish for his friend that his body may prosper and be in health as well as his soul. Grace will improve health, health will employ grace.

Verses 3–8

I. The good report that the apostle had received concerning this friend of his (v. 3–6). 1. The testimony concerning Gaius—the truth that was in him, and this evinced by his charity. Faith should work by love. 2. The witnesses—brethren that came from Gaius testified. A good report is due from those who have received good. 3. The auditory before which the report and testimony were given—before the church. This seems to be the church at which the apostle now resided. They could not but testify what they found and felt.

II. The report the apostle himself gives of him, v. 5. He was hospitable, good to the brethren, even to strangers. All who were of the household of faith were welcome to him. He was conscientious in what he did: "Thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest; thou doest it as a faithful servant, and from the Lord Christ mayest thou expect the reward."

III. The apostle's joy therein, v. 3. The best evidence of our having the truth is our walking in the truth.

IV. Concerning further treatment of the brethren that were with him. It seems to have been customary in those days of love to attend travelling ministers and Christians, at least some part of their road. It is a kindness to a stranger to be guided in his way, and a pleasure to travellers to meet with suitable company: this is a work that may be done after a godly sort.

V. The reasons of this directed conduct: Because that for his name's sake these brethren went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. They went forth to preach the gospel; possibly they might be sent out by this apostle himself: they went forth to convert the Gentiles; they went forth for God and his name's sake; they went forth also to carry a free gospel about with them: Taking nothing of the Gentiles. There are those who are not called to preach the gospel themselves who may yet contribute to the progress of it. The gospel should be made without charge to those to whom it is first preached.

Vss. 1-14. ADDRESS: WISH FOR GAIUS' PROSPERITY: JOY AT HIS WALKING IN THE TRUTH. HIS HOSPITALITY TO THE BRETHREN AND STRANGERS THE FRUIT OF LOVE. DIOTREPHES' OPPOSITION AND AMBITION. PRAISE OF DEMETRIUS. CONCLUSION. 1. I—emphatical: I personally, for my part. On Gaius or Caius, see Introduction before Second Epistle. love in the truth—(II John 1). "Beloved" is repeated often in this Epistle, indicating strong affection (vss. 1, 2, 5, 11). 2. above all things—Greek, "concerning all things": so ALFORD: in all respects. But WAHL justifies English Version (cf. I Pet. 4:8). Of course, since his soul's prosperity is presupposed, "above all things" does not imply that John wishes Gaius' bodily health above that of his soul, but as the first object to be desired next after spiritual health. I know you are prospering in the concerns of your soul. I wish you similar prosperity in your body. Perhaps John had heard from the brethren (vs. 3) that Gaius was in bad health, and was tried in other ways (vs. 10), to which the wish, vs. 2, refers. prosper—in general. be in health—in particular. 3. testified of the truth that is in thee—Greek, "of (or to) thy truth": thy share of that truth in which thou walkest [ALFORD]. even as thou—in contrast to Diotrephes (vs. 9). 4. my children—members of the Church: confirming the view that the "elect lady" is a Church. 5. faithfully—an act becoming a faithful man. whatsoever thou doest—a distinct Greek word from the former "dóest": translate, "workest": whatsoever work, or labor of love, thou dost perform. So Matthew 26: 10, "She hath wrought a good work upon me." and to strangers—The oldest MSS., "and that (i.e., and those brethren) strangers." The fact of the brethren whom thou didst entertain being "strangers," enhances the love manifested in the act. 6. borne witness of thy charity before the church—to stimulate others by the good example. The brethren so entertained by Gaius were missionary evangelists (vs. 7); and, probably, in the course of narrating their missionary labors for the edification of the Church where John then was, incidentally mentioned the loving hospitality shown them by Gaius. bring forward on their journey—"if thou (continue to) forward on their journey" by giving them provisions for the way. after a godly sort—Greek, "in a manner worthy of God," whose ambassadors they are, and whose servant thou art. He who honors God's missionary servants (vs. 7), honors God. 7. his name's sake—Christ's. went forth—as missionaries. taking nothing—refusing to receive aught by way of pay, or maintenance, though justly entitled to it, as Paul at Corinth and at Thessalonica. Gentiles—the Christians just gathered out by their labors from among the heathen. As Gaius himself was a Gentile convert, "the Gentiles" here must mean the converts just made from the heathen, the Gentiles to whom they had gone forth. It would have been inexpedient to have taken aught (the Greek meden implies, not that they got nothing, though they had desired it, but that it was of their own choice they took nothing) from the infant churches among the heathen:

1. The elder. See on the first verse of the preceding Epistle. The wellbeloved Gaius. Gaius is the Greek mode of writing the Roman name Caius, and thus it should be rendered in European languages. Several persons of the name of Gaius occur in the New Testament. In the Epistle to the Romans, chap. xvi. 23, Paul mentions a Gaius who lived at Corinth, whom he calls his "host," and the host "of the whole church." In 1 Cor. i. 14, Paul mentions a Gaius who lived at Corinth, whom he had baptized; but this is probably the same with the above. In Acts xix. 29, mention is made of a Gaius who was a native of Macedonia, who accompanied Paul, and spent some time with him at Ephesus. In Acts xx. 4 we meet a Gaius of Derbe, who was likewise a fellow traveller of Paul. Now whether this Gaius was one of the persons just mentioned or whether he was different from them all is difficult to determine, because Gaius was a very common name. Yet if we may judge from the similarity of character it is not improbable that he was the Gaius who lived at Corinth, and who is styled by Paul the "host . . . of the whole church"; for hospitality to his Christian brethren was the leading feature in the character of this Gaius to whom John wrote, and it is on this very account that he is commended by the apostle.

2. I wish above all things. Above all things I pray that thou mayest prosper and be in health.

3. When the brethren came. Probably the same of whom he speaks in the fifth and following verses, and who appear to have been itinerant evangelists. The truth that is in thee. The soundness of your faith and the depth of your religion.

4. To hear that my children. From this it has been inferred that Gaius was one of John's converts, and consequently not the Corinthian Gaius, who was converted, most probably, by Paul. But the apostle might use the term children here as implying those who were immediately under his pastoral care, and being an old man, he had a right to use such terms in addressing his juniors in both age and grace.

6. Which have borne witness of thy charity. Of your love and benevolence. Before the church. The believers at Ephesus, for to this church the apostle seems to refer. Whom if thou bring forward. If you continue to assist such, as you have done, thou shalt do well. After a godly sort. "Worthy of God"; and in such a way as He can approve.

7. For his name's sake they went forth. For the sake of preaching the gospel of the grace of God, and making known Jesus to the heathen. Taking nothing of the Gentiles. Receiving no emolument for their labor, but in every respect showing themselves to be truly disinterested. Sometimes, and on some special occasions, this

We ought therefore to receive such, that we may be fellow-helpers to the truth. Those who cannot themselves proclaim it may yet help and countenance those who do.

Verses 9–11

I. Here is a very different example and character.

1. His name—a Gentile name: Diotrephes, attended with an unchristian spirit.

2. His temper and spirit—full of pride and ambition: He loves to have the pre-eminence.

3. His contempt of the apostle's authority, and letter, and friends. Of his authority: The deeds which he doeth prating against us with malicious words. Malice and ill-will in the heart will be apt to vent themselves by the lips. Of his letter (v. 9). To an ambitious aspiring spirit apostolical authority or epistle signifies but little. Of his friends, the brethren he recommended, v. 10. There might be some differences or different customs between the Jewish and Gentile Christians. Many are cast out of the church who should be received there with satisfaction and welcome.

4. The apostle's menace of this proud domineerer (v. 10). This seems to intimate apostolical authority.

II. Here is counsel upon that different character, v. 11. Caution and counsel are not needless to those who are good already. To this caution and counsel a reason is respectively subjoined. To the counsel: Follow that which is good; for he that doeth good is of God. To the caution: Follow not that which is evil, for he that doeth evil hath not seen God. Evil-workers vainly pretend or boast an acquaintance with God.

Verses 12–14

I. The character of another person, one Demetrius, not much known otherwise. But here his name will live. His commendation was, 1. General: Demetrius has a good report of all men. Few are well spoken of by all. But universal integrity and goodness are the way to (and sometimes obtain) universal applause. 2. Deserved and well founded, v. 12. 3. Confirmed by the apostle's and his friends' testimony: Yea, and we also bear record; And you know that our record is true. It is good to be well known, or known for good.

II. The conclusion of the epistle. The referring of some things to personal interview, v. 13, 14. Many things may be more proper for immediate communication than for letter. Good Christians may well be glad to see one another. The benediction: Peace be to you. The public salutation sent to Gaius: Our friends salute thee. The apostle's particular salutation of the Christians in Gaius's church or vicinity: Greet the friends by name. Those may well salute and greet one another on earth who hope to live together in heaven.

the case was different in receiving hospitality from Gaius. 8. We—in contradistinction to "the Gentiles" or "heathen" referred to, vs. 7. therefore—as they take nothing from the Gentiles or heathen. receive—The oldest MSS. read, "take up." As they take nothing from the Gentiles, we ought to take them up so as to support them. fellow helpers—with them. to the truth—i.e., to promote the truth. 9. I wrote—The oldest MSS. add "something": a communication, probably, on the subject of receiving the brethren with brotherly love (vss. 8, 10). That Epistle was not designed by the Spirit for the universal Church, or else it would have been preserved. unto the church—of which Gaius is a member. loveth . . . pre-eminence—through ambition. Evidently occupying a high place in the Church where Gaius was (vs. 10). among them—over the members of the Church. receiveth us not—virtually, viz., by not receiving with love the brethren whom we recommended to be received (vss. 8, 10; cf. Matt. 10:40). 10. if I come—(V. 14). I will remember—lit., "I will bring to mind" before all by stigmatizing and punishing. prating—with mere silly tattle. neither doth he . . . receive the brethren—with hospitality. "The brethren" are the missionaries on their journey. forbiddeth them that would—receive them. casteth them—those that would receive the brethren, by excommunication from the Church, which his influence, as a leading man (vs. 9) in it, enabled him to do. NEANDER thinks that the missionaries were JEWS by birth, whence it is said in their praise they took nothing from THE GENTILES: in contrast to other Jewish missionaries who abused ministers' right of maintenance elsewhere, as Paul tells us, II Corinthians 11:22; Philippians 3:2, 5, 19. Now in the Gentile churches there existed an ultra-Pauline party of anti-Jewish tendency, the forerunners of Marcion: Diotrephes possibly stood at the head of this party, which fact, as well as this domineering spirit, may account for his hostility to the missionaries, and to the apostle John, who had, by the power of love, tried to harmonize the various elements in the Asiatic churches. At a later period, Marcion, we know, attached himself to Paul alone, and paid no deference to the authority of John. 11. follow not that which is evil—as manifested in Diotrephes (vss. 9, 10). but . . . good—as manifested in Demetrius (vs. 12). is of God—is born of God, who is good. hath not seen God—spiritually, not literally. 12. of all men—who have had opportunity of knowing his character. of the truth itself—The Gospel standard of truth bears witness to him that he walks conformably to it, in acts of real love, hospitality to the brethren (in contrast to Diotrephes), etc. Cf. John 3:21 "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." we also—besides the testimony of "all men," and "of the truth itself." ye know—The oldest MSS. read, "thou knowest." 13. I will not—rather as Greek, "I wish not . . . to write" more. 14. face to face—Greek, "mouth to mouth." Peace—peace inward of conscience, peace fraternal of friendship, peace supernal of glory [LYRA]. friends—a title seldom used in the New Testament, as it is absorbed in the higher titles of "brother, brethren." Still Christ recognizes the relation of friend also, based on the highest grounds, obedience to Him from love, and entailing the highest privileges, admission to the intimacy of the holy and glorious God, and sympathizing Saviour; so Christians have "friends" in Christ. Here in a friendly letter, mention of "friends" appropriately occurs. by name—not less than if their names were written [BENGEL].

may be necessary; but "The labourer is worthy of his hire" is the maxim of the Author of Christianity. And those congregations of Christians are ever found to prize the gospel most, and profit most by it, who bear all expenses incident to it.

9. I wrote unto the church, the church where Gaius was. But Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence, "who loves the presidency, or chief place" in the church. He was doubtless an officer in the church, at least a deacon, probably a bishop; and being one, he magnified himself in his office; he loved such eminence, and behaved himself haughtily in it. Receiveth us not. Does not acknowledge the apostolical authority.

10. If I come, I will remember. I will show him the authority which, as an apostle of Jesus Christ, I possess. Prating against us. Diotrephes might have been a converted Jew who was unwilling that the Gentiles should be received into the church; or a Judaizing Christian who wished to incorporate the law with the gospel, and calumniated the apostles who taught otherwise. This haughty and unfeeling man would give no countenance to the converted Gentiles; so far from it that he would not receive any of them himself, forbade others to do it, and excommunicated those who had been received into the church by the apostles.

11. Follow not that which is evil. "Do not imitate that wicked man," i.e., the conduct of Diotrephes; be merciful, loving, and kind.

12. Demetrius hath good report. Perhaps another member of the church where Gaius was; or he might have been one of those whom the apostle recommends to Gaius; or possibly the bearer of this letter from John to Gaius.

13. I had many things to write. That is, I have many things that I might write; but having the hope of seeing you shortly, I will not commit them to paper. Ink and pen are here mentioned, paper and ink in the preceding Epistle.

14. Peace be to thee. May you possess every requisite good, of both a spiritual and a temporal kind. Our friends salute thee. Desire to be affectionately remembered to you. Greet the friends by name—remember me to all those with whom I am acquainted, as if I had specified them by name.

THE EPISTLE OF JUDE

I. Introduction (1-3)
- A. The writer and the readers (1)
- B. Salutation (2)
- C. The writing—change of purpose declared (3)

- B. "To set you before the presence of His glory" —consummation
- C. "To Him be glory"

This epistle is styled (as are some few others) general because it is not immediately directed to any particular person, family, or church, but to the whole society of Christians. The general scope of it is much the same with that of the second chapter of the second epistle of Peter. It is designed to warn us against seducers, to inspire us with warm love to, and a hearty concern for, truth and that in the closest conjunction with holiness, of which charity is a most essential character.

I. We have an account of the penman of this epistle, Jude, or Judas. He was name-sake to one of his ancestors, the patriarch-son of Jacob. This was a name of worth, eminency, and honour; yet, 1. He had a wicked name-sake. There was one Judas who was the betrayer of his and our Lord. The same names may be common to the best and worst persons. It may be instructive to be called after the names of eminently good men, but there can be no inference drawn thence as to what we shall prove, though we may conclude what sort of persons our good parents hoped we should be. But, 2. Our Judas was quite another man. He was a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, the other was his betrayer and murderer. Our apostle here calls himself a servant of Jesus Christ, esteeming that a most honourable title. He might have claimed kindred to Christ according to the flesh, but he waives this, and rather glories in being his servant. It is a great honour to the meanest sincere minister (and it holds proportionably as to every upright Christian) that he is the servant of Christ Jesus. The apostles were servants before they were apostles, and they were but servants still. And brother of James, to wit, of him whom the ancients style the first bishop of Jerusalem. Of this James our Jude was brother, whether in the strictest or a larger acceptation I determine not.

II. To whom this epistle is directed; to all those who are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called. The apostle may speak of their being called to be Christians. Christians are the called, called out of the world,—called from sin to Christ. Sanctified: Sanctified by God the Father. All who are effectually called are sanctified. Our sanctification is not our own work. Our corruption and pollution are of ourselves; but our sanctification and renovation are of God and his grace. The called and sanctified are preserved in Christ Jesus. Where he begins he will perfect; though we are fickle, he is constant.

III. We have the apostolical benediction: Mercy to you, &c. The mercy of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for. Next to mercy is peace, which we have from the sense of having obtained mercy. As from mercy springs peace, so from peace springs love, his love to us, our love to him, and our brotherly love to one another. These the apostle prays may be multiplied, that Christians may not be content with scraps and narrow scantlings of them.

Verses 3–7

I. The design of the apostle in writing this epistle: to establish them in the Christian faith, and a practice and conversation truly conformable thereunto, and in an open and bold profession thereof. 1. The gospel salvation is a common salvation, in a most sincere offer and tender of it to all mankind. None

Vss. 1-25. ADDRESS: GREETING: HIS OBJECT IN WRITING: WARNING AGAINST SUDUCERS IN DOCTRINE AND PRACTICE FROM GOD'S VENGENANCE ON APOSTATES, ISRAEL, THE FALLEN ANGELS, SODOM AND GOMORRAH. DESCRIPTION OF THESE BAD MEN, IN CONTRAST TO MICHAEL: LIKE CAIN, BALAAM, AND CORE: ENOCH'S PROPHECY AS TO THEM: THE APOSTLES' FOREWARNING: CONCLUDING EXHORTATION AS TO PRESERVING THEIR OWN FAITH, AND TRYING TO SAVE OTHERS: DOXOLOGY. 1. servant of Jesus Christ—as His minister and apostle. brother of James—who was more widely known as bishop of Jerusalem and "brother of the Lord" (i.e., either cousin, or stepbrother, being son of Joseph by a former marriage; for ancient traditions universally agree that Mary, Jesus' mother, continued perpetually a virgin). Jude therefore calls himself modestly "brother of James." to them . . . sanctified by God the Father—The oldest MSS. and versions, ORIGEN, LUCIFER, and others read, "beloved" for sanctified. If English Version be read, cf. Colossians 1:12; I Peter 1:2. The Greek is not "by," but "in." God the Father's love is the element IN which they are "beloved." Thus the conclusion, vs. 21, corresponds, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." Cf. "beloved of the Lord" II Thessalonians 2:13. preserved in Jesus Christ—"kept." Translate not "in," but as Greek, "FOR Jesus Christ." "Kept continually (so the Greek perfect participle means) by God the Father for Jesus Christ," against the day of His coming. Jude, beforehand, mentions the source and guarantee for the final accomplishment of believers' salvation; lest they should be disheartened by the dreadful evils which he proceeds to announce [BENGEL]. and called—predicated of "them that are beloved in God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ: who are called." God's effectual calling in the exercise of His divine prerogative, guarantees their eternal safety. 2. Mercy—in a time of wretchedness. Therefore mercy stands first; the mercy of Christ (vs. 21). peace—in the Holy Ghost (vs. 20). love—of God (vs. 21). The three answer to the divine Trinity. be multiplied—in you and towards you. 3. Design of the Epistle (cf. vss 20, 21). all diligence—(II Pet. 1:5). As the minister is to give all diligence to admonish, so the people should, in accordance with his admonition, give all diligence to have all Christian graces, and to make their calling sure. the common salvation—wrought by Christ. Cf. Note, "obtained LIKE precious faith," II Pet. 1:1. This community of faith, and of the object of faith, salvation, forms the ground of mutual exhortation by appeals to common hopes and fears. it was needful for me—rather, "I felt it necessary to write (now at once; so the Greek aorist means; the present infinitive 'to write,' which precedes, expresses merely the general fact of writing) exhorting you." The reason why he felt it necessary "to

1. Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ. Probably Jude the apostle, who was surnamed Thaddaeus and Lebbaeus, was son to Alphaeus, and brother to James the less, Joses, and Simon. Brother of James. Supposed to be James the less, bishop of Jerusalem, mentioned here because he was an eminent person in the Church. To them that are sanctified by God. Instead of "to the sanctified," several MSS., with several of the fathers, have "to them that are beloved." Jude writes to all believers everywhere, and not to any particular church; hence this Epistle has been called a general Epistle.

2. Mercy unto you. For even the best have no merit, and must receive every blessing and grace in the way of mercy. Peace with God and your consciences, love to both God and man, be multiplied, be unboundedly increased.

3. When I gave all diligence. This phrase is a Grecism for being "exceedingly intent" upon a subject, taking it up seriously with determination to bring it to good effect. The meaning of the apostle seems to be this: "Beloved brethren, when I saw it necessary to write to you concerning the common salvation, my mind being deeply affected with the dangers to which the Church is exposed from the false teachers that are gone out into the world, I found it extremely necessary to write and exhort you to hold fast the truth which you had received, and strenuously to contend for that only faith which, by our Lord and His apostles, has been delivered to the Christians." The common salvation. The Christian religion and the salvation which it brings. This is called common because it belongs equally to Jews and Gentiles.

are excluded from the benefit of these gracious offers and invitations, but those who exclude themselves. It is made to all believers; it is made to the weak as well as to the strong. Here let us abide; here we are safe; if we stir a step further, we are in danger of being either entangled or seduced. The apostles and evangelists all wrote to us of this common salvation. They have fully declared to us all that is necessary for every one to believe and do, in order to obtain a personal interest in the common salvation. The apostle (though inspired) gave all diligence to write of the common salvation. Those who speak of sacred things ought always to speak of them with the greatest reverence, care, and diligence. Those who have received the doctrine of this common salvation must contend earnestly for it. Earnestly, not furiously. But how? As the apostles did; by suffering patiently and courageously for it.

II. The occasion the apostle had to write to this purport. As evil manners give rise to good laws, so dangerous errors often give just occasion to the proper defence of important truths. 1. Ungodly men are the great enemies of the faith of Christ and the peace of the church. Those who deny or corrupt the one, and disturb the other, are here expressly styled ungodly men. Ungodly men raise scruples, start questions, cause divisions, widen breaches. Nothing cuts us off from the church but that which cuts us off from Christ; namely, reigning infidelity and ungodliness. Those are ungodly men who live without God in the world, who have no regard to God and conscience.

2. Those are the worst of ungodly men who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, who take encouragement to sin more boldly because the grace of God has abounded, and still abounds, so wonderfully. 3. Those who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness do in effect deny the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ; they deny both natural and revealed religion. They strike at the foundation of natural religion, for they deny the only Lord God; and they overturn all the frame of revealed religion, for they deny the Lord Jesus Christ. These stand or fall together, and they mutually yield light and force to each other. Never two tallies answered more exactly to each other than these do. 4. Those who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness are ordained unto condemnation. Those who thus sin must needs die of their wounds, of their disease. 5. We ought to contend earnestly for the faith, in opposition to those who would corrupt or deprave it, such as have crept in unawares. The more busy and crafty the instruments and agents of Satan are, to rob us of the truth, the more solicitous should we be to hold it fast.

III. The fair warning which the apostle, in Christ's name, gives to those who, having professed his holy religion, do afterwards prove false to it, v. 5–7. I will put you in remembrance. What we already know we still need to be put in remembrance of. Preaching is not designed to teach us something new in every sermon; but to put us in remembrance, to call to mind things forgotten. Though you know these things, yet you still need to know them better.

1. The destruction of the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, v. 5. They had miracles in abundance: they were their daily bread; yet even they perished in unbelief. We have greater advantages than they had; let their error be our awful warning.

2. We are here put in remembrance of the fall of the angels, v. 6. There were a great number of the angels who left their own habitation. They quitted their post, and rebelled against God. But God did not spare them. Those who would not be servants to their Maker were made captives to his justice, and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness. Hear and fear, O sinful mortals of mankind!

write with exhortation," he states, vs. 4, "For there are certain men crept in. . . ." Having intended to write generally of the common salvation, he found it necessary from the existing evils in the Church, to write specially that they should contend for the faith against those evils. earnestly contend—Cf. Philippians 1:27, "striving together for the faith of the Gospel:" once . . .—Greek, "once for all delivered. . . ." No other faith or revelation is to supersede it. A strong argument for resisting heretical innovators (vs. 4). Believers, like Nehemiah's workmen, with one hand "build themselves up in their most holy faith"; with the other they" contend earnestly for the faith" against its foes. the saints—all Christians, holy (i.e., consecrated to God) by their calling, and in God's design. 4. certain men—implying disparagement. crept in unawares—stealthily and unlawfully. Note, II Peter 2:1, "privily shall bring in damnable heresies." before . . . ordained—Greek, "forewritten," viz., in Peter's prophecy vss. 17, 18; and in Paul's before that, I Tim. 4:1; II Tim. 3:1; and by implication in the judgments which overtook the apostate angels. The disobedient Israelites, Sodom and Gomorrah, Balaam and Core, and which are written "for an example" (vs. 7, and vss. 5, 6, 11). God's eternal character as the Punisher of sin, as set forth in Scripture "of old," is the ground on which such apostate characters are ordained to condemnation.

to this condemnation—Jude graphically puts their judgment as it were present before the eyes, "THIS." Enoch's prophecy comprises the "ungodly men" of the last days before Christ's coming to judgment, as well as their forerunners, the "ungodly men" before the flood, the type of the last judgment (Matt. 24:37-39; II Pet. 3:3-7). The disposition and the doom of both correspond. the grace of our God—A phrase for the Gospel especially sweet to believers who appropriate God in Christ as "our God," and so rendering the more odious the vile perversity of those who turn the Gospel state of grace and liberty into a ground of licentiousness, as if their exemption from the law gave them a license to sin. denying the only Lord—The oldest MSS., versions, and Fathers omit "God," which follows in English Version. Translate as the Greek, "the only Master"; here used of Jesus Christ, who is at once Master and "Lord" (a different Greek word). So II Peter 2:1, Note. By virtue of Christ's perfect oneness with the Father, He, as well as the Father, is termed "the ONLY" God and "MASTER." Greek, "Master," implies God's absolute ownership to dispose of His creatures as He likes. 5. (Heb. 3:16; 4:13). therefore—Other oldest MSS. and Vulgate read, "But"; in contrast to the ungodly vs. 4. though ye once—rather, "once for all." Translate, "I wish to remind you, as knowing ALL (viz., that I am referring to; so the oldest MSS., versions, and Fathers) once for all." As already they know all the facts once for all, he needs only to "remind" them. the Lord—The oldest MSS. and versions read, "Jesus." So "Christ" is said to have accompanied the Israelites in the wilderness; so perfectly is Jesus one with the God of the Israelite theocracy. saved—brought safely, and into a state of safety and salvation. afterward—Greek, "secondly"; in the next instance "destroyed them that believed not," as contrasted with His in the first instance having saved them. 6. (II Pet. 2:4.) kept not their first estate—Vulgate translates, "their own principality," which the fact of angels being elsewhere called "principalities," favors: "their own" implies that, instead of being content with the dignity once for all assigned to them under the Son of God, they aspired higher. left—on their own accord. their own—Greek, "their proper." habitation—heaven, all bright and glorious, as opposed to the "darkness" to which they now are doomed. Their ambitious designs seem to have had a peculiar connection with this earth, of which Satan before his fall may have been God's vicegerent, whence arises his subsequent connection with it as first the Tempter, then "the prince of this world." reserved—As the Greek is the same, and there is an evident reference to their having "kept not their first estate," translate, "He hath kept." Probably what is meant is, He hath kept them in His purpose; that is their sure doom; moreover, as yet, Satan and his demons roam at large on the earth. An earnest of their doom is their having been cast out of heaven, being already restricted to "the darkness of this present world," the "air" that surrounds the earth, their peculiar element now. They lurk in places of gloom and death, looking forward with agonizing fear to their final torment in the bottomless pit. He means not literal chains and darkness, but figurative in this present world where, with restricted powers and liberties,

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares. They had got into the Church under specious pretenses; and, when in, began to sow their bad seed. Before of old ordained. Such as were long ago "proscribed, and condemned in the most public manner"; this is the import of the word in this place, and there are many examples of this use of it in the Greek writers.

To this condemnation. To a similar punishment to that immediately about to be mentioned. In the sacred writings all such persons, false doctrines, and impure practices have been most openly proscribed and condemned; and the apostle immediately produces several examples, viz., the disobedient Israelites, the unfaithful angels, and the impure inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah. Turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness. Making the grace and mercy of God a covering for crimes, intimating that men might sin safely who believe the gospel, because in that gospel grace abounds. The only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. God is omitted by more than sixteen MSS. and by many of the fathers. It is very likely that it was originally inserted as a gloss, to ascertain to whom the title of "the only Sovereign," belonged; and thus make two persons where only one seems to be intended. The passage I believe belongs solely to Jesus Christ, and may be read thus: "Denying the only sovereign Ruler, even our Lord Jesus Christ."

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance. That is, how such persons were proscribed, and condemned to bear the punishment due to such crimes. Though ye once knew this. The word here translated once has greatly puzzled many interpreters. It has two meanings in the sacred writings, and indeed in the Greek writers also. It signifies (1) "once, one time"; (2) "altogether, entirely, perfectly." This appears to be the sense of the word in Heb. vi. 4: "those who were fully enlightened." Heb. x. 2: "thoroughly cleansed." Jude is to be understood as saying, "I will therefore put you in remembrance, though you are thoroughly instructed in this." Saved the people. Delivered them from the Egyptian bondage. Afterward destroyed them. Because they neither believed His word nor were obedient to His commands. This is the first example of what was mentioned in v. 4.

6. The angels which kept not their first estate. "Their own principality." The words may be understood of their having invaded the office or dignity of some others, or of their having by some means forfeited their own. This is spoken of those generally termed the "fallen angels"; but from what they fell, or from what cause or for what crime, we know not. They are produced as the second example. But left their own habitation. This seems to intimate that they had invaded the office and prerogatives of others, and attempted to seize on their place of residence and felicity. He hath reserved in everlasting chains. That is, in a state of confinement from which they cannot escape. Under darkness. Alluding probably to those dungeons or dark cells in prisons where the most flagitious culprits were confined. The judgment of the great day. The final judgment, when both angels and men shall receive their eternal doom.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. The apostle here calls to our remembrance the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 7. Their ruin is a particular warning to all people to take heed of, and fly from, fleshly lusts that war against the soul. God is the same holy, just, pure Being now as then; and can the beastly pleasures of a moment make amends for your suffering the vengeance of eternal fire?

Verses 8–15

A charge against deceivers who were now seducing the disciples of Christ. He calls them filthy dreamers, forasmuch as delusion is a dream, and the beginning of, and inlet to, all manner of filthiness. These filthy dreamers dream themselves into a fool's paradise on earth, and into a real hell at last.

I. The character of these deceivers is described.

1. They defile the flesh. The flesh or body is the immediate seat, and often the irritating occasion, of many horrid pollutions; yet these, though done in and against the body, do greatly defile and grievously maim and wound the soul.

2. They despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. Such evil-speakers despise the dominion of conscience, make a jest of it, and would banish it out of the world; and as for the word of God, the rule of conscience, they despise it. Religion and its serious professors have been always and everywhere evil spoken of.

The apostle brings in Michael the archangel, &c., v. 9. Interpreters are at a loss what is here meant by the body of Moses.

He durst not bring, &c. Not that he was afraid of the devil, but he believed God would be offended if, in such a dispute, he went that way to work. A memorandum to all disputants, never to bring railing accusations into their disputes. Truth needs no supports from falsehood or scurrility. The Lord rebuke thee. He would not stand disputing with the devil. Divine rebukes are harder to be borne than careless sinners now think for.

3. They speak evil of the things which they know not, &c., v. 10. If they had known them, they would have spoken well of them, for nothing but good and excellent can be truly said of religion. Men are most apt to speak evil of those persons and things that they know least of. On the other hand, retirement screens some even from just censure. But what they know naturally, &c. The apostle likens such to brute beasts, though they often think and boast themselves if not as the wisest, yet at least as the wittiest part of mankind. In those things they corrupt themselves. The fault, whatever it is, lies in their depraved wills.

4. In v. 11 the apostle represents them as followers of Cain, and in v. 12, 13, as atheistical and profane people,—as greedy and covetous, who, so they could but gain present worldly advantages, cared not what came next—who, like Core, ran into attempts in which they must assuredly perish, as he did.

shut out from heaven, they, like condemned prisoners, await their doom. 7. Even as—ALFORD translates, "I wish to remind you (vs. 5) that." Sodom . . .—(II Pet. 2:6). giving themselves over to fornication—following fornication extraordinarily, i.e., out of the order of nature. On "in like manner to them" (Greek), cf. Note, vs. 6. Cf. on spiritual fornication, "go a whoring from thee," Psalm 73: 27. going after strange flesh—departing from the course of nature, and going after that which is unnatural. In later times the most enlightened heathen nations indulged in the sin of Sodom without compunction or shame. are set forth—before our eyes. suffering—undergoing to this present time; alluding to the marks of volcanic fire about the Dead Sea. the vengeance—Greek, "righteous retribution." eternal fire—The lasting marks of the fire that consumed the cities irreparably, is a type of the eternal fire to which the inhabitants have been consigned. BENGEL translates as the Greek will admit, "Suffering (the) punishment (which they endure) as an example or sample of eternal fire (viz., that which shall consume the wicked)." 8. also—rather, "In like manner nevertheless" (notwithstanding these warning examples) [ALFORD]. these... dreamers—The Greek has not "filthy" of English Version. The clause, "these men dreaming" (i.e., in their dreams), belongs to all the verbs, "defile," "despise," and "speak evil." All sinners are spiritually asleep, and their carnal activity is as it were a dream (I Thess. 5:6, 7). Their speaking evil of dignities is because they are dreaming, and know not what they are speaking evil of (vs. 10).

defile the flesh—(V. 7). dominion—"lordship." dignities—lit., "glories." Earthly and heavenly dignities. 9. Michael, the archangel—Nowhere in Scripture is the plural used, "archangels"; but only ONE, "archangel." The only other passage in the New Testament where it occurs, is I Thessalonians 4:16, where Christ is distinguished from the archangel, with whose voice He shall descend to raise the dead; they therefore err who confound Christ with Michael. The name means, Who is like God? In Daniel 10:13 he is called "One (Margin, the first) of the chief princes." He is the champion angel of Israel. In Revelation 12:7 the conflict between Michael and Satan is again alluded to. about the body of Moses—his literal body. Satan, as having the power of death, opposed the raising of it again, on the ground of Moses' sin at Meribah, and his murder of the Egyptian. That Moses' body was raised, appears from his presence with Elijah and Jesus (who were in the body) at the Transfiguration: the sample and earnest of the coming resurrection-kingdom, to be ushered in by Michael's standing up for God's people. durst not—from reverence for Satan's former dignity (vs. 8). railing accusation—Greek, "judgment of blasphemy," or evil-speaking. Peter said, Angels do not, in order to avenge themselves, rail at dignities, though ungodly, when they have to contend with them: Jude says that the archangel Michael himself did not rail even at the time when he fought with the devil, the prince of evil spirits—not from fear of him, but from reverence of God, whose delegated power in this world Satan once had, and even in some degree still has. From the word "disputed," or debated in controversy, it is plain it was a judicial contest. 10. (II Peter 2:12.) those things which—Greek, "all things whatsoever they understand not," viz., the things of the spiritual world. but what . . . naturally—Connect thus, "Whatever (so the Greek) things naturally (by natural, blind instinct), as the unreasoning (so the Greek) animals, they know. . . ." The Greek for the former "know" implies deeper knowledge; the latter "know," the mere perception of the "animal senses and faculties." 11. Woe—Note, II Peter 2: 14, "cursed children." Cain—the murderer: the root of whose sin was hatred and envy of the godly, as it is the sin of these seducers. ran greedily—lit., "have been poured forth" like a torrent that has burst its banks. Reckless of what it costs, the loss of God's favor and heaven, on they rush after gain like Balaam. perished in the gainsaying of Core—(Cf. Note, vs. 12). When we read of Korah perishing by gainsaying, we read virtually also of these perishing in like manner through the same: for the same seed bears the same harvest. 12. spots—So II Peter 2:13, Greek, spiloi; but here the Greek is spilades, which elsewhere, in secular writers, means rocks, viz., on which the Christian love feasts were in danger of being shipwrecked. The oldest MS. prefixes the article emphatically, "THE rocks." The reference to "clouds . . . winds . . . waves of the sea," accords with this image of rocks. Vulgate seems to have been misled by the similar sounding word to translate, as English Version, "spots"; cf. however,

ADAM CLARKE

7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha. What their sin and punishment were may be seen in Genesis xix, and the notes there. This is the third example to illustrate what is laid down in v. 4.

Are set forth for an example. Both of what God will do to such transgressors and of the position laid down in v. 4, viz., that God has in the most open and positive manner declared that such and such sinners shall meet with the punishment due to their crimes. Suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Subjected to such a punishment as an endless fire can inflict.

8. Likewise also these filthy dreamers. He means to say that these false teachers and their followers were as unbelieving and disobedient as the Israelites in the wilderness, as rebellious against the authority of God as the fallen angels, and as impure and unholy as the Sodomites; and that consequently they must expect similar punishment. Despise dominion. They "set all government at nought"—they will come under no restraints; they despise all law, and wish to live as they list. Speak evil of dignities. "They blaspheme or speak injuriously of supreme authority."

9. Yet Michael the archangel. Let it be observed that the word archangel is never found in the plural number in the sacred writings. There can be properly only one archangel, one chief or head of all the angelic host. Nor is the word "devil," as applied to the great enemy of mankind, ever found in the plural; there can be but one monarch of all fallen spirits. Michael is this archangel, and head of all the angelic orders; the devil, great dragon, or Satan, is head of all the diabolic orders. When these two hosts are opposed to each other they are said to act under these two chiefs, as leaders. Hence in Rev. xii. 7, it is said: "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon . . . and his angels." Disputed about the body of Moses. What this means I cannot tell, or from what source Jude drew it, unless from some tradition among his countrymen. Durst not bring against him a railing accusation. It was a Jewish maxim, as may be seen in Synopsis Sohar, page 92, note 6: "It is not lawful for man to prefer ignominious reproaches, even against wicked spirits."

10. Speak evil of those things which they know not. They do not understand the origin and utility of civil government; they revile that which ever protects their own persons and their property. But what they know naturally. They are destitute of reflection; their minds are uncultivated; they follow mere natural instinct, and are slaves to their animal propensities. As brute beasts. Like the irrational animals; but, in the indulgence of their animal propensities, they corrupt themselves, beyond the example of the brute beasts.

11. They have gone in the way of Cain. They are haters of their brethren, and they that are such are murderers; and by their false doctrine they corrupt and destroy the souls of the people. The error of Balaam. For the sake of gain they corrupt the Word of God and refine away its meaning and let it down so as to suit the passions of the profligate. Gainsaying of Core. See the account of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and their company, in Numbers xxii. It appears that these persons opposed the authority of the apostles of our Lord, as Korah and his associates did that of Moses and Aaron; and Jude predicts them a similar punishment.

12. Spots in your feasts of charity. It appears that these persons, unholy and impure as they were, still continued to have outward fellow-

MATTHEW HENRY

These are spots in your feasts of charity, or love-feasts. Yet how common in all Christian societies here on earth, the very best not excepted, are such blemishes!

When they feast with you, they feed themselves without fear. Arrant gluttons, no doubt, they were; such as minded only the gratifying of their appetites. In common eating and drinking a holy fear is necessary, much more in feasting.

Clouds they are without water, which promise rain in time of drought, but perform nothing of what they promise. Such is the case of formal professors. Carried about of winds, easily driven about as the wind happens to set; such are empty, ungrounded professors, an easy prey to every seducer. How happy would our world be if men either knew more or practically knew how little they know! Trees whose fruit withereth, &c. Trees they are, for they are planted in the Lord's vineyard, yet fruitless ones. Twice dead. One would think to be once dead were enough. They had been once dead in their natural state; but they seemed to recover, and to be brought to life again, when they took upon them the profession of the Christian religion. But now they are dead again by the evident proofs they have given of their hypocrisy: whatever they seemed, they had nothing truly vital in them.—Plucked up by the roots, as we commonly serve dead trees, from which we expect no more fruit. Raging waves of the sea, full of talk and turbulency, foaming out their own shame, creating much uneasiness to men of calmer tempers, which yet will in the end turn to their own greater shame and just reproach. Raging waves are a terror to sailing passengers; but, when they have got to port, the waves are forgotten, their noise and terror are for ever ended. Wandering stars. A very lively emblem of false teachers, who are sometimes here and sometimes there, so that one knows not where nor how to fix them.

II. The doom of this wicked people is declared. False teachers are to expect the worst of punishments in this and a future world. If this will not make both ministers and people cautious, I know not what will.

Of the prophecy of Enoch (v. 14, 15) we have no mention made in any other part or place of scripture.

The Lord cometh with his holy myriads, including both angels and the spirits of just men made perfect. What a glorious time will that be, when Christ shall come with ten thousand of these! He cometh, To execute judgment upon the wicked; to convince them. They shall have no excuse or apology to make that they either can or dare then stand by.

I cannot pass v. 15 without taking notice how often, and how emphatically, the word ungodly is repeated in it, no fewer than four times: ungodly men, ungodly sinners, ungodly deeds, ungodly committed. Godly or ungodly signifies little with men nowadays, unless it be to scoff at and deride even the very expressions; but it is not so in the language of the Holy Ghost. Hard speeches of one another, especially if ill-grounded, will most certainly come into account at the judgment of the great day.

vs. 23, which favors English Version, if the Greek will bear it. Two oldest MSS., by the transcriber's effort to make Jude say the same as Peter, read here "deceivings" for "love feasts," but the weightiest MS. and authorities support English Version reading. The love feast accompanied the Lord's Supper (I Cor. 11, end). Korah the Levite, not satisfied with his ministry, aspired to the sacrificing priesthood also: so ministers in the Lord's Supper have sought to make it a sacrifice, and themselves the sacrificing priests, usurping the function of our only Christian sacerdotal Priest, Christ Jesus. Let them beware of Korahs doom! feeding themselves—Greek, "pasturing (tending) themselves." What they look to is the pampering of themselves, not the feeding of the flock. without fear—Join these words not as English Version, but with "feast." Sacred feasts especially ought to be celebrated with fear. Feasting is not faulty in itself [BENGEL], but it needs to be accompanied with fear of forgetting God, as Job in the case of his sons' feasts. clouds—from which one would expect refreshing rains. II Peter 2:17, "wells without water." Professors without practice. carried about—The oldest MSS. have "carried aside," i.e., out of the right course (cf. Eph. 4:14). trees whose fruit withereth—rather, "trees of the late (or waning) autumn," viz., when there are no longer leaves or fruits on the trees [BENGEL]. without fruit—having no good fruit of knowledge and practice; sometimes used of what is positively bad. twice dead—First when they cast their leaves in autumn, and seem during winter dead, but revive again in spring; secondly, when they are "plucked up by the roots." So these apostates, once dead in unbelief, and then by profession and baptism raised from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, but now having become dead again by apostasy, and so hopelessly dead. There is a climax. Not only without leaves, like trees in late autumn, but without fruit: not only so, but dead twice; and to crown all, "plucked up by the roots." 13. Raging—wild. Jude has in mind Isaiah 57:29. shame—plural in Greek, "shames" (cf. Phil. 3:19). wandering stars—instead of moving on in a regular orbit, as lights to the world, bursting forth on the world like erratic comets, or rather, meteors of fire, with a strange glare, and then doomed to fall back again into the blackness of gloom. 14. See Introduction on the source whence Jude derived this prophecy of Enoch. The Holy Spirit, by Jude, has sealed the truth of this much of the matter contained in the book of Enoch, though probably that book, as well as Jude, derived it from tradition (cf. Note, vs. 9). There are reasons given by some for thinking the book of Enoch copied from Jude rather than vice versa. It is striking how, from the first, prophecy hastened towards its consummation. The earliest prophecies of the Redeemer dwell on His second coming in glory, rather than His first coming in lowliness (cf. Gen. 3:15 with Rom. 16:20). Enoch, in his translation without death, illustrated that truth which he all his life preached to the unbelieving world, the certainty of the Lord's coming, and the resurrection of the dead, as the only effectual antidote to their skepticism and self-wise confidence in nature's permanence. And Enoch—Greek, "Moreover, also Enoch. . . ." seventh from Adam—Seven is the sacred number. In Enoch, freedom from death and the sacred number are combined: for every seventh object is most highly valued. Jude thus shows the antiquity of the prophecies. Cf. "of old," Note, vs. 4. There were only five fathers between Enoch and Adam. The seventh from Adam prophesied the things which shall close the seventh age of the world [BENGEL]. of these—in relation to these. The reference of his prophecies was not to the antediluvians alone, but to all the ungodly (vs. 15). His prophecy applied primarily indeed to the flood, but ultimately to the final judgment. cometh—lit., "came." Phophecy regards the future as certain as if it were past. saints—Holy angels (cf. Deut. 33:2; Dan. 7:10 Zech. 14:5; Matt. 25:31; Heb. 12:22). 15. This verse and the beginning of Enoch's prophecy is composed in Hebrew poetic parallelism, the oldest specimen extant. Some think Lamech's speech, which is also in poetic parallelism, was composed in mockery of Enoch's prophecy: as Enoch foretold Jehovah's coming to judgment, so Lamech presumes on impunity in polygamy and murder (just as Cain the murderer seemed to escape with impunity). convince—convict. hard speeches—such as are noticed in vss. 8, 10, 16; Malachi 3:13, 14; contrast 16:17. ungodly sinners—not merely sinners, but proud despisers of God: impious. against him—They who speak against God's children are regarded by God as speaking against Himself. 16. murmurers—in secret: mut- ship with the Church! The feasts of charity, the "love feasts," of which the apostle speaks, were in use in the primitive Church till the middle of the fourth century, when, by the Council of Laodicea, they were prohibited to be held in the churches; and, having been abused, fell into disuse. In later days they have been revived, in all the purity and simplicity of the primitive institution, among the Moravians and the people called Methodists. Feeding themselves without fear. Eating, not to suffice nature, but to pamper appetite. It seems the provision was abundant, and they ate to gluttony and riot. It was this which brought the love feasts into disrepute in the Church, and was the means of their being at last wholly laid aside.

Clouds . . . without water. The doctrine of God is compared to the rain, Deut. xxxii. 2, and clouds are the instruments by which the rain is distilled upon the earth. In arid or parched countries the very appearance of a cloud is delightful, because it is a token of refreshing showers; but when sudden winds arise and disperse these clouds, the hope of the husbandman and shepherd is cut off. These false teachers are represented as clouds; they have the form and office of the teachers of righteousness, and from such appearances pure doctrine may be naturally expected. But these are clouds . . . without water—they distill no refreshing showers, because they have none; they are carried away and about by their passions, as those light, fleecy clouds are carried by the winds. Trees whose fruit withereth. "Galled or diseased trees." They have the appearance of ministers of the gospel, but they have no fruit. Twice dead. First, naturally and practically dead in sin, from which they had been revived by the preaching and grace of the gospel. Secondly, dead by backsliding or apostasy from the true faith, by which they lost the grace they had before received; and now likely to continue in that death because plucked up from the roots, their roots of faith and love being no longer fixed in Christ Jesus.

13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame. The same metaphor as in Isa. lvii. 20: "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Wandering stars. These are uncertain, anomalous meteors, wills-o'-the-wisp. The blackness of darkness. They are such as are going headlong into that outer darkness where there are wailing, and weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

14. Enoch also, the seventh from Adam. He was the seventh patriarch, and is distinguished thus from Enoch, son of Cain, who was but the third from Adam; this appears plainly from the genealogy, 1 Chron. i. 1. Of the Book of Enoch, from which this prophecy is thought to have been taken, much has been said; but as the work is apocryphal, and of no authority, I shall not burden my page with extracts. Perhaps the word prophesied means no more than "preached, spoke, made declarations," concerning these things and persons; for doubtless he reproved the ungodliness of his own times. Ten thousands of his saints. This seems to be taken from Dan. vii. 10.

15. To execute judgment. This was originally spoken to the antediluvians, and the coming of the Lord to destroy that world was the thing spoken of in this prophecy or declaration.

Verses 15–25

Here, I. The apostle enlarges further on the character of these evil men and seducers, v. 16. A murmuring complaining temper lays men under a very bad character; such are very weak at least, and for the most part very wicked. They are angry at everything that happens, and never pleased with their own state and condition in the world, as not thinking it good enough for them. Their will, their appetite, their fancy, are their only rule.

II. He proceeds to caution and exhort those to whom he is writing, v. 17–23.

1. He calls them to remember how they had been forewarned, v. 17. The accomplishment of it is a confirmation of their faith, instead of being in the least an occasion of shaking and unsettling them therein. Those who would persuade must make it evident that they sincerely love those whom they would persuade. Bitter words and hard usage never did nor ever will convince, much less persuade anybody. We must not think it strange, but comfort ourselves with this, that in the midst of all this confusion Christ will maintain his church, and make good his promise. The more religion is ridiculed and persecuted the faster hold we should take and keep of it; being forewarned, we should show that we are fore-armed; under such trials we should stand firm.

2. He guards them against seducers by a further description of their odious character, &c., v. 19.

Sensual men have not the Spirit, that is, of God and Christ, the Spirit of holiness. The worse others are the better should we endeavour to be; the more busy Satan, the more tenacious should we be of sound doctrine and a good conversation.

3. He exhorts them to persevering constancy in truth and holiness.

(1) Building up yourselves in your most holy faith, v. 20. Having laid our foundation well in a sound faith, we must build upon it; and we should take care with what materials we carry on our building. Right principles will stand the test even of the fiery trial.

(2) Praying in the Holy Ghost. Prayer is the nurse of faith. Our prayers are then most likely to prevail when we pray in the Holy Ghost, under his guidance and influence.

(3) Keep yourselves in the love of God, v. 21. Keep yourselves in the way of God, if you would continue in his love.

tering murmurs against God's ordinances and ministers in Church and state. Cf. vs. 8, "speak evil of dignities"; 15, "hard speeches"; against the Lord. complainers—never satisfied with their lot (Num. 11:1; cf. the penalty, Deut. 28:47, 48). walking after their own lusts—(vs. 18). The secret of their murmuring and complaining is the restless insatiability of their desires. great swelling words—(II Pet. 2:18). men's persons—their mere outward appearance and rank. because of advantage—for the sake of what they may gain from them. While they talk great swelling words, they are really mean and fawning towards those of wealth and rank. 17. But; beloved . . . ye—in contrast to those reprobates, vs. 20, again. remember—implying that his readers had been contemporaries of the apostles. For Peter uses the very same formula in reminding the contemporaries of himself and the other apostles. spoken before—spoken already before now. the apostles—Peter (Notes, II Pet. 3:2, 3), and Paul before Peter (Acts 20:29; I Tim. 4:1; II Tim. 3:1). Jude does not exclude himself from the number of the apostles here, for in vs. 18, immediately after, he says, "they told YOU," not us (rather as Greek, "used to tell you" implying that Jude's readers were contemporaries of the apostles, who used to tell them). 18. mockers—In the parallel, II Peter 3:3, the same Greek is translated, "scoffers." The word is found nowhere else in the New Testament. How ALFORD can deny that II Peter 3:2, 3 is referred to (at least in part), I cannot imagine, seeing that Jude quotes the very words of Peter as the words which the apostles used to speak to his (Jude's) readers. walk after their own ungodly lusts—lit., "after (according to) their own lusts of ungodliness." 19. These be they—showing that their characters are such as Peter and Paul had foretold. separate themselves—from Church communion in its vital, spiritual reality: for outwardly they took part in Church ordinances (vs. 12). Some oldest MSS. omit "themselves": then understand it, "separate," cast out members of the Church by excommunication (Isa. 65:5; 66:5; Luke 6:22; John 9:34; cf. "casteth them out of the Church," III John 10). Many, however, understand "themselves," which indeed is read in some of the oldest MSS. as English Version has it. Arrogant setting up of themselves, as having greater sanctity and a wisdom and peculiar doctrine, distinct from others, is implied. sensual—lit., "animal-souled": as opposed to the spiritual, or "having the Spirit." It is translated, "the natural man," I Corinthians 2:14. In the threefold division of man's being, body, soul, and spirit, the due state in God's design is, that "the spirit," which is the recipient of the Holy Spirit uniting man to God, should be first, and should rule the soul, which stands intermediate between the body and spirit; but in the animal, or natural man, the spirit is sunk into subserviency to the animal soul, which is earthly in its motives and aims. The "carnal" sink somewhat lower, for in these the flesh, the lowest element and corrupt side of man's bodily nature, reigns paramount. having not the Spirit—In the animal and natural man the spirit, his higher part, which ought to be the receiver of the Holy Spirit, is not so; and therefore, his spirit not being in its normal state, he is said not to have the spirit (cf. John 3:5, 6). In the completion of redemption the parts of redeemed man shall be placed in their due relation: whereas in the ungodly, the soul severed from the spirit shall have for ever animal life without union to God and heaven—a living death. 20. Resuming vs. 17. building up yourselves—the opposite to the "separate themselves" (vs. 19): as "in the Holy Ghost" is opposed to "having not the Spirit." on—as on a foundation. Building on THE FAITH is equivalent to building on Christ, the object of faith. praying in the Holy Ghost—(Rom. 8:26; Eph. 6:18). The Holy Spirit teaches what we are to pray for, and how. None can pray aright save by being in the Spirit, i.e., in the element of His influence. CHRYSOSTOM states that, among the charisms bestowed at the beginning of the New Testament dispensation, was the gift of prayer, bestowed on someone who prayed in the name of the rest, and taught others to pray. Moreover, their prayers so conceived and often used, were received and preserved among Christians, and out of them forms of prayer were framed. Such is the origin of liturgies [HAMMOND]. 21. In vss. 20, 21, Jude combines the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost: and faith, hope, and love. Keep yourselves—not in your own strength, but "in the love of God," i.e., God's love to you and all His believing children, the only guarantee for their being kept safe. Man's need of watching is implied; at the same time he cannot keep himself, unless God in His love keep him.

ADAM CLARKE

16. Having men's persons in admiration. Timeservers and flatterers. Because of advantage. "For the sake of lucre." All the flatterers of the rich are of this kind; and especially those who profess to be ministers of the gospel and who, for the sake of a more advantageous living, will soothe the rich even in their sins.

17. Remember ye the words. Instead of following those teachers and their corrupt doctine, remember what Christ and His apostles have said, for they foretold the coming of such false teachers and impostors.

19. Who separate themselves. From the true Church, which they leave from an affectation of superior wisdom.

Sensual. "Animal"—living as brute beasts, guided simply by their own lusts and passions.

For they have not the Spirit —they are not spiritually minded, and have no Holy Ghost, no inspiration from God.

20. Building up yourselves. Having the most holy faith—the gospel of our Lord Jesus, and the writings of His apostles—for your foundation.

Praying in the Holy Ghost. Holding fast the divine influence which you have received, and under that influence making prayer and supplication to God. The prayer that is not sent up through the influence of the Holy Ghost is never likely to reach heaven.

21. Keep yourselves in the love of God. By "building up yourselves on your most holy faith," and "praying in the Holy Ghost"; for without this we shall soon lose the love of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

(4) Looking for the mercy, &c. Eternal life is to be looked for only through mercy; mercy is our only plea, not merit. Through the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ as Redeemer; all who come to heaven must come thither through our Lord Jesus Christ. A lively faith of the blessed hope will help us to mortify our cursed lusts.

4. He directs them how to behave towards erring brethren, v. 22, 23. We ought to do all we can to rescue others out of the snare of the devil. We are not only our own keepers, but every man ought to be, as much as in him lies, his brother's keeper. This must be done with compassion, making a difference. We must distinguish between the weak and the wilful. Of some we must have compassion, treat them with all tenderness, not be needlessly harsh and severe in our censures of them. If God has forgiven them, why should not we? We infinitely more need his forgiveness than they do ours. Others save with fear, urging upon them the terrors of the Lord: "Endeavour to frighten them out of their sins. Fear lest you frustrate your own good intentions, do not harden, instead of reclaiming." We are often apt to over-do, when we are sure we mean honestly, and think we are right in the main.

"Hating even the garment spotted with the flesh, keeping yourselves at the utmost distance from what is or appears evil."

III. The apostle concludes this epistle with a solemn ascription of glory to the great God, v. 24, 25. God is able, and he is as willing as able, to keep us from falling and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory; not as those who never have been faulty, but as those whose faults shall not be imputed.—Before the presence of his glory. The glory of the Lord will shortly be present. This is now the object of our faith, but hereafter it will be the object of our sense; whom we now believe in, him we shall shortly see. When believers shall be presented faultless it will be with exceeding joy. Where there is no sin there will be no sorrow; where there is the perfection of holiness, there will be the perfection of joy. Surely, the God who can and will do all this is worthy to have glory, majesty, dominion, and power, ascribed to him, both now and for ever! Amen.

looking for—in hope. the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ—to be fully manifested at His coming. Mercy is usually attributed to the Father: here to the Son: so entirely one are they. 22, 23. None but those who "keep themselves" are likely to "save" others. have compassion—So one oldest MS. reads. But two oldest MSS., Vulgate, etc., read, "convict"; "reprove to their conviction"; "confute, so as to convince." making a difference—The oldest MSS. and versions read the accusative for the nominative, "when separating themselves" [WAHL], referring to vs. 19; or "when contending with you," as the Greek is translated, vs. 9. 23. save with fear—The oldest MSS. do not read "with fear" in this position: but after "snatching them out of the fire" (with which, cf. Amos 4:11; I Cor. 3:15; Zech. 3:2, said of a most narrow escape), they add the following words, forming a THIRD class, "and others compassionate with (IN) fear." Three kinds of patients require three kinds of medical treatment. Ministers and Christians are said to "save" those whom they are made the instruments of saving: the Greek for "save" is present, therefore meaning "try to save." Jude already (vs. 9) had reference to the same passage (Zech. 3:1-3). The three classes are: (1) those who contend with you (accusative in oldest MSS.), whom you should convict; (2) those who are as brands already in the fire, of which hell-fire is the consummation: these you should try to save by snatching them out; (3) those who are objects of compassion, whom accordingly you should compassionate (and help if occasion should offer), but at the same time not let pity degenerate into connivance at their error. Your compassion is to be accompanied "with fear" of being at all defiled by them. hating—Even hatred has its legitimate field of exercise. Sin is the only thing which God hates: so ought we. even the garment—a proverbial phrase: avoiding the most remote contact with sin, and hating that which borders on it. As garments of the apostles wrought miracles of good in healing, so the very garment of sinners metaphorically, i.e., anything brought into contact with their pollution, is to be avoided. Cf. as to lepers and other persons defiled, Leviticus 13: 52-57; 15:4-17: the garments were held polluted; and anyone touching them was excluded, until purified, from religious and civil communion with the sanctified people of Israel. Christians who received at baptism the white garment in token of purity, are not to defile it by any approach to what is defiled. 24, 25. Concluding doxology. Now—Greek, "But." you—ALFORD, on inferior authority, reads, "them." You is in contradistinction to those ungodly men mentioned above. keep . . . from falling—rather, "guard . . . (so as to be) without falling," or stumbling. faultless—Greek, "blameless." before the presence of his glory—i.e., before Himself, when He shall be revealed in glory. with exceeding joy—lit., "with exultation" as of those who leap for joy. To the only . . . God our Saviour—The oldest MSS. add, "through Jesus Christ our Lord." The transcribers, fancying that "Saviour" applied to Christ alone, omitted the words. The sense is, To the only God (the Father) who is our Saviour through (i.e., by the mediation of) Jesus Christ our Lord. dominion—Greek, "might." power—authority: legitimate power. The oldest MSS. and Vulgate, after "power," have "before all the age," i.e., before all time as to the past; "and now," as to the present; "and to all the ages," i.e., for ever, as to the time to come.

ADAM CLARKE

22. And of some have compassion, making a difference. The general meaning of this exhortation is supposed to be, "You are not to deal alike with all those who have been seduced by false teachers; you are to make a difference between those who have been led away by weakness and imprudence and those who, in the pride and arrogance of their hearts and their unwillingness to submit to wholesome discipline, have separated themselves from the Church and become its inveterate enemies."

24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling. Who alone can preserve you from the contagion of sin, and preserve you from falling into any kind of error that might be prejudicial to the interests of your souls; and thus to present you faultless. Before the presence of his glory, where nothing can stand that does not resemble himself; with exceeding great joy in finding youselves eternally out of the reach of the possibility of falling, and for having now arrived at an eternity of happiness.

25. To the only wise God. Who alone can teach, who alone has declared the truth; that truth in which you now stand. Our Saviour. Who has by His blood washed us from our sins, and made us kings and priests unto God the Father. Be glory. Be ascribed all light, excellence, and splendor. Majesty. All power, authority, and preeminence. Dominion. All rule and government in the world and in the Church, in earth and in heaven. And power. All energy and operation to everything that is wise, great, good, holy, and excellent. Both now. In the present state of life and things. And ever. To the end of all states, places, dispensations, and worlds; and to a state which knows no termination, being that eternity in which this glory, majesty, dominion, and power ineffably and incomprehensibly dwell.

After to the only wise God our Saviour, many excellent MSS., etc., add "by Jesus Christ our Lord"; and after dominion and power they add "before all time"; and both these readings Griesbach has received into the text. The text therefore may be read thus: "To the only wise God our Saviour, by Christ Jesus our Lord, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, before all time; and now, and through all futurity. Amen."

It ought to be no prejudice to the credit and authority of this book that it has been rejected by men of corrupt minds. The church of God has generally received it, and found good counsel and great comfort in it. Christ himself prophesied of the destruction of Jerusalem; and, about the time in which that was accomplished, he entrusted the apostle John with this book of revelation for the support of the faith of his people and the direction of their hope.

I. It is the revelation of Jesus Christ. As the prophet of the church, he has made known to us the things that shall be hereafter. It is a revelation which God gave unto Christ. Our Lord Jesus is the great trustee of divine revelation; it is to him that we owe the knowledge we have of what we are to expect from God and what he expects from us. This revelation Christ sent and signified by his angel. Christ employed an angel to communicate it to the churches. The angels are God's messengers. The angels signified it to the apostle John. John was the apostle chosen for this service. Some think he was the only one surviving, the rest having sealed their testimony with their blood. John was to deliver this revelation to the church, to all his servants. They have all a right to the oracles of God.

II. The subject-matter of this revelation, the things that must shortly come to pass. We have in this revelation a general idea of the methods of divine providence. These events were such as should come to pass not only surely, but shortly.

III. Here is an attestation of the prophecy, v. 2. He was one who bore record of the word of God in general, and of the testimony of Jesus in particular, and of all things that he saw; he was an eye-witness, and he concealed nothing that he saw. As he added nothing to it, so he kept back no part of the counsels of God.

Vss. 1-20. Title: Source and Object of This Revelation: Blessing on the Reader and Keeper of It, as the Time Is Near: Inscription to the Seven Churches: Apostolic Greeting: Keynote, "Behold He Cometh" (cf. at the close, ch. 22:20, "Surely I come quickly"): Introductory Vision of the Son of Man in Glory, amidst the Seven Candlesticks, with Seven Stars in His Right Hand. 1. Revelation—an apocalypse or unveiling of those things which had been veiled. A manifesto of the kingdom of Christ. of Jesus Christ—coming from Him. Jesus Christ, not John the writer, is the Author of the Apocalypse. Christ taught many things before His departure; but those which were unsuitable for announcement at that time He brought together into the Apocalypse [Bengel]. which God gave unto him—The Father reveals Himself and His will in, and by, His Son. to show—The word recurs in ch. 22:6: so entirely have the parts of Revelation reference to one another.

his servants—not merely to "His servant John," but to all His servants (cf. ch. 22:3). shortly—Greek, "speedily"; lit., "in," or "with speed." Cf. "the time is at hand," vs. 3; ch. 22:6, "shortly"; 7, "Behold, I come quickly." Not that the things prophesied were according to man's computation near; but this word "shortly" implies a corrective of our estimate of worldly events and periods. Though a "thousand years" (ch. 20 at least are included, the time is declared to be at hand. Luke 18:8, "speedily." The Israelite Church hastened eagerly to the predicted end, which premature eagerness prophecy restrains (cf. Dan. 9). he sent—Jesus Christ sent. by his angel—joined with "sent." The angel does not come forward to "signify" things to John until ch. 17:1; 19:9, 10. Previous to that John receives information from others. Jesus Christ opens the Revelation, vss. 10, 11; ch. 4:1; in ch. 6:1 one of the four living creatures acts as his informant; in ch. 7:13, one of the elders; in ch. 10:8, 9, the Lord and His angel who stood on the sea and earth. Only at the end (ch. 17:1) does the one angel stand by Him (cf. Dan. 8:16; 9:21; Zech. 1:19). 2. bare record of—"testified the word of God" in this book. Where we would say "testifies," the ancients in epistolary communications use the past tense. The word of God constitutes his testimony; vs. 3, "the words of this prophecy." the testimony of Jesus—"the Spirit of prophecy" (ch. 19:10). and of all

1. The Revelation of Jesus Christ. The word from which we have our word Apocalypse signifies literally a "revelation, or discovery of what was concealed or hidden." It is here said that this revelation, or discovery of hidden things, was given by God to Jesus Christ, that Christ gave it to His angel, that this angel showed it to John, and that John sent it to the churches.

Things which must shortly come to pass. On the mode of interpretation devised by Wetstein, this is plain; for if the book were written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and the prophecies in it relate to that destruction, and the civil wars among the Romans, which lasted but three or four years, then it might be said the Revelation is of things which must shortly come to pass. But if we consider the book as referring to the state of the Church in all ages, the words here and those in v. 3 must be understood of the commencement of the events predicted; as if he had said: In a short time the train of these visions will be put in motion.

2. Who bare record of the word of God. Is there a reference here to the first chapter of John's Gospel, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God"? Of this Word, John did bear record. Or does the writer mean the fidelity with which he noted and related the word—doctrines or prophecies—which

Verses 3–8

We have here an apostolic benediction on those who should give a due regard to this divine revelation.

I. More generally, to all who either read or hear the words of the prophecy. It is a blessed privilege to enjoy the oracles of God. It is a blessed thing to study the scriptures. It is a privilege not only to read the scriptures ourselves, but to hear them read by others. It is not sufficient to our blessedness that we read and hear the scriptures, but we must keep the things that are written.

II. The apostolic benediction is pronounced more especially and particularly to the seven Asian churches, v. 4. These seven churches are named in v. 11, and distinct messages sent to each of them.

1. What the blessing is. Grace, that is, the goodwill of God towards us and his good work in us; and peace, that is, the sweet evidence and assurance of this grace.

2. Whence this blessing is to come. In the name of God, of the whole Trinity. (1) The Father is first named: God the Father, who is, and who was, and who is to come, eternal, unchangeable.

(2) The Holy Spirit, called the seven spirits, the infinite perfect Spirit of God, in whom there is a diversity of gifts and operations. He is before the throne; for, as God made, so he governs, all things by his Spirit.

(3) The Lord Jesus Christ. Observe the particular account we have here of Christ, v. 5. The faithful witness; upon his testimony we may safely depend, for he is a faithful witness, cannot be deceived and cannot deceive us.

The first-begotten or first-born from the dead. The prince of the kings of the earth; by him their power is limited; by him their counsels are over-ruled, and to him they are accountable.

things that . . .—The oldest MSS. omit "and." Translate, "whatsoever things he saw," in apposition with "the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ." 3. he that readeth, and they that hear—viz., the public reader in Church assemblies, and his hearers. In the first instance, he by whom John sent the book from Patmos to the seven churches, read it publicly: a usage most scriptural and profitable. A special blessing attends him who reads or hears the apocalyptic "prophecy" with a view to keeping the things therein (as there is but one article to "they that hear and keep those things," not two classes, but only one is meant: "they who not only hear, but also keep those things," Rom. 2:13); even though he find not the key to its interpretation, he finds a stimulus to faith, hope, and patient waiting for Christ. Note, the term "prophecy" has relation to the human medium or prophet inspired, here John: "Revelation" to the Divine Being who reveals His will, here Jesus Christ. God gave the revelation to Jesus: He by His angel revealed it to John, who was to make it known to the Church. 4. John—the apostle. For none but he (supposing the writer an honest man) would thus sign himself nakedly without addition. As sole survivor and representative of the apostles and eyewitnesses of the Lord, he needed no designation save his name, to be recognized by his readers. seven churches—not that there were not more churches in that region, but the number seven is fixed on as representing totality. These seven represent the universal Church of all times and places. See TRENCH'S (Epistles to Seven Churches) interesting Note, ch. 1:20, on the number seven. It is the covenant number, the sign of God's covenant relation to mankind, and especially to the Church.

Asia—Proconsular, governed by a Roman proconsul: consisting of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, and Lydia: the kingdom which Attalus III had bequeathed to Rome. Grace . . . peace—Paul's apostolical greeting. In his Pastoral Epistles he inserts "mercy" in addition: so II John 3. him which is . . . was . . . is to come—a periphrasis for the incommunicable name JEHOVAH, the self-existing One, unchangeable. In Greek the indeclinability of the designation here implies His unchangeableness. Perhaps the reason why "He which is to come" is used, instead of "He that shall be," is because the grand theme of Revelation is the Lord's coming (vs. 7). Still it is THE FATHER as distinguished from "Jesus Christ" (vs. 5) who is here meant. But so one are the Father and Son that the designation, "which is to come," more immediately applicable to Christ, is used here of the Father. the seven Spirits which are before his throne—The oldest MSS. omit "are." before—lit., "in the presence of." The Holy Spirit in His sevenfold (i.e., perfect, complete, and universal) energy. Corresponding to "the seven churches." One in His own essence, manifold in His gracious influences. The seven eyes resting on the stone laid by Jehovah (ch. 5:6). Four is the number of the creature world (cf. the fourtold cherubim); seven the number of God's revelation in the world. 5. the faithful witness—of the truth concerning Himself and His mission as Prophet, Priest, and King Saviour. "He was the faithful witness, because all things that He heard of the Father He faithfully made known to His disciples. Also, because He taught the way of God in truth, and cared not for man, nor regarded the persons of men. Also, because the truth which He taught in words He confirmed by miracles. Also, because the testimony to Himself on the part of the Father He denied not even in death. Lastly, because He will give true testimony of the works of good and bad at the day of judgment" [RICHARD OF ST. VICTOR in TRENCH]. The nominative in Greek standing in apposition to the genitive, "Jesus Christ," gives majestic prominence to "the faithful witness." the first-begotten of the dead—(Col. 1:18). Lazarus rose to die again. Christ rose to die no more. The image is not as if the grave was the womb of His resurrection-birth [ALFORD]; but as Acts 13:33; Romans 1:4, treat Christ's resurrection as the epoch and event which fulfilled the Scripture, Psalm 2:7, "This day (at the resurrection) have I begotten Thee." It was then that His divine Sonship as the Godman was manifested and openly attested by the Father.

the prince—or Ruler. The kingship of the world which the tempter offered to Jesus on condition of doing homage to him, and so shunning the cross, He has obtained by the cross. "The kings of the earth" conspired against the Lord's Anointed (Ps. 2:2): these He shall break in pieces (Ps. 2:9). Those who are wise in time and kiss the Son shall bring their glory unto Him at His manifestation as King of kings, after He has he received at this time by revelation from God? This seems more consistent with the latter part of the verse.

3. Blessed is he that readeth. This is to be understood of the happiness or security of the persons who, reading and hearing the prophecies of those things which were to come to pass shortly, took proper measures to escape from the impending evils. The time is at hand. Either in which they shall be all fulfilled or begin to be fulfilled. See the note on v. 1. These three verses contain the introduction; now the dedication to the seven churches commences.

4. John to the seven churches. The apostle begins this much in the manner of the Jewish prophets. They often name themselves in the messages which they receive from God to deliver to the people. The Asia here mentioned was what is called Proconsular Asia; the seven churches were those of Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. These seven were those which lay nearest to the apostle, and were more particularly under his care; though the message was sent to the churches in general, and perhaps it concerns the whole Christian world. But the number seven may be used here as the number of perfection. Grace be unto you. This form of apostolical benediction we have often seen in the preceding Epistles. From him which is, and which was, and which is to come. This phraseology is purely Jewish, and probably taken from the Tetragrammaton, Yehovah; which is supposed to include in itself all time, past, present, and future. In Chasad Shimuel, Rab. Samuel ben David asks: "Why are we commanded to use three hours of prayer? Answer: These hours point out the holy blessed God; he who was, who is, and who shall be. The morning prayer points out him who was before the foundation of the world; the noonday prayer points out him who is; and the evening prayer points out him who is to come." This phraseology is exceedingly appropriate, and strongly expresses the eternity of God; for we have no other idea of time than as past, or now existing, or yet to exist. That which was is the eternity before time; that which is, is time itself; and that which is to come is the eternity which shall be when time is no more. The seven Spirits which are before his throne. The ancient Jews, who represented the throne of God as the throne of an Eastern monarch, supposed that there were seven ministering angels before this throne, as there were seven ministers attendant on the throne of a Persian monarch. We have an ample proof of this, Tobit xii. 15: "I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One." And in Jonathan ben Uzziel's Targum, on Gen. xi. 7: "God said to the seven angels which stand before him." That seven angels are here meant, and not the Holy Spirit, is most evident from the place, the number, and the tradition. Those who imagine the Holy Ghost to be intended suppose the number seven is used to denote His manifold gifts and graces. That these seven spirits are angels, see chap. iii. 1; iv. 5; and particularly v. 6, where they are called "the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth."

5. The faithful witness. The true Teacher, whose testimony is infallible, and whose sayings must all come to pass. The first begotten of the dead. See the note on Col. i. 18.

The prince of the kings. The "Chief" or "Head" of all earthly potentates.

MATTHEW HENRY

The great friend of his church and people. He has loved them. First, He has washed them from their sins in his own blood. Sins leave a stain upon the soul. Nothing can fetch out this stain but the blood of Christ; and, rather than it should not be washed out, Christ was willing to shed his own blood.

Secondly, He has made them kings and priests to God and his Father. Having justified and sanctified them, he makes them kings to his Father. As kings, they overcome the world. He hath made them priests, given them access to God.

For these high honours and favours they are bound to ascribe to him dominion and glory for ever.

He will be the Judge of the world, v. 7. This book, the Revelation, begins and ends with a prediction of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. John speaks as if he saw that day: "Behold, he cometh, as sure as if you beheld him with your eyes. He cometh with clouds, which are his chariot and pavilion. Every eye shall see him, the eye of his people, the eye of his enemies, every eye, yours and mine." He shall come, to the terror of those who have pierced him and have not repented and of all who have wounded and crucified him afresh by their apostasy from him, and to the astonishment of the pagan world.

This account of Christ is ratified and confirmed by himself, v. 8. He is the beginning and the end; all things are from him and for him; he is the Almighty; he is the same eternal and unchangeable one.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

destroyed His foes. Unto him that loved us—The oldest MSS. read the present, "... loveth us." It is His evercontinuing character, He loveth us, and ever shall love us. His love rests evermore on His people. washed us—The two oldest MSS. read, "freed (loosed as from a bond) us": so ANDREAS and PRIMASIUS. One very old MS., Vulgate, and Coptic read as English Version, perhaps drawn from ch. 7:4. "loosed us in (virtue of) His blood," being the harder reading to understand, is less likely to have come from the transcribers. The reference is thus to Greek, lutron, the ransom paid for our release (Matt. 20:28). 6. And hath—rather as Greek, "And (He) hath." made us kings—The oldest MSS. read, "a kingdom." One oldest MS. reads the dative, "for us." Another reads "us," accusative: so Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and Andreas. This seems preferable, "He made us (to be) a kingdom." So Exodus 19:6, "a kingdom of priests"; I Peter 2:9, "a royal priesthood." The saints shall constitate peculiarly a kingdom of God, and shall themselves be kings (ch. 5:10). They shall share His King-Priest throne in the millennial kingdom. The emphasis thus falls more on the kingdom than on priests: whereas in English Version reading it is equally distributed between both. This book lays prominent stress on the saints' kingdom. priests—who have pre-eminently the privilege of near access to the king. David's sons were priests (Hebrew), II Samuel 8:18. The distinction of priests and people, nearer and more remote from God, shall cease; all shall have nearest access to Him. All persons and things shall be holy to the Lord. God and his Father—There is but one article to both in the Greek, therefore it means, "Unto Him who is at once God and His Father." glory and dominion—Greek, "the glory and the might." The fuller threefold doxology occurs, ch. 4:9, 11; fourfold, ch. 5:13; Jude 25; sevenfold, ch.7:12 ; I Chronicles 29:11. Doxology occupies the prominent place above, which prayer does below. for ever and ever—Greek, "unto the ages." 7. with clouds—Greek, "the clouds," viz., of heaven. "A cloud received Him out of their sight" at His ascension (Acts 1:9). His ascension corresponds to the manner of His coming again (Acts 1:11). Clouds are the symbols of wrath to sinners. every eye—His coming shall therefore be a personal, visible appearing. shall see—It is because they do not now see Him, they will not believe. Contrast John 20:29. they also—they in particular; "whosoever." Primarily, at His pre-millennial advent the Jews, who shall "look upon Him whom they have pierced," and mourn in repentance, and say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." Secondarily, and here chiefly, at the general judgment all the ungodly, not only those who actually pierced Him, but those who did so by their sins, shall look with trembling upon Him. John is the only one of the Evangelists who records the piercing of Christ's side. This allusion identifies him as the author of the Apocalypse. all kindreds ... shall wail—all the unconverted at the general judgment; and especially at His pre-millennial advent, the Antichristian confederacy (Zech. 12:3-6, 9; 14:1-4; Matt. 24:30). Greek, "all the tribes of the land," or "the earth." See the limitation to "all," ch. 13:8. Even the godly while rejoicing in His love shall feel penitential sorrow at their sins, which shall all be manifested at the general judgment. because of—Greek, "at," or "in regard to Him." Even so, Amen—Gods seal of His own word; to which corresponds the believer's prayer, ch. 22:20. The "even so" is Greek; "Amen" is Hebrew. To both Gentiles and Jews His promises and threats are unchangeable. 8. Greek, "I am the Alpha and the Omega." The first and last letters of the alphabet. God in Christ comprises all that goes between, as well as the first and last. the beginning and the ending—omitted in the oldest MSS., though found in Vulgate and Coptic. Transcribers probably inserted the clause from ch. 21:6. In Christ, Genesis, the Alpha of the Old Testament, and Revelation, the Omega of the New Testament, meet together: the last book presenting to us man and God reconciled in Paradise, as the first book presented man at the beginning innocent and in God's favor in Paradise. Accomplishing finally what I begin. the Lord—The oldest MSS. read "the Lord God." Almighty—Hebrew, Shaddai, and Jehovah Sabaoth, i.e., of hosts; commanding all the hosts or powers in heaven and earth, so able to overcome all His Church's foes. It occurs often in Revelation, but nowhere else in the New Testament save II Corinthians 6:18, a quotation from Isaiah. 9. I John—So "I Daniel" (Dan. 7:28; 9:2; 10:2). One of the many features of resem-

ADAM CLARKE

Unto him that loved us. This should begin a new verse, as it is the commencement of a new subject. Our salvation is attributed to the love of God, who gave His Son; and to the love of Christ, who died for us. See John iii. 16. Washed us from our sins. The redemption of the soul, with the remission of sins and purification from unrighteousness, is here, as in all the New Testament, attributed to the blood of Christ shed on the Cross for man.

6. Kings and priests. See on 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. But instead of kings and priests the most reputable MSS., versions, and fathers have "a kingdom and priests"; i.e., a Kingdom of priests, or a royal priesthood. The regal and sacerdotal dignities are the two highest that can possibly exist among men; and these two are here mentioned to show the glorious prerogatives and state of the children of God.

To him be glory. That is, to Christ; for it is of Him that the prophet speaks, and of none other. For ever and ever. "To ages of ages"; or rather, through all indefinite periods; through all times, and through eternity. Amen. A word of affirmation and approbation; so it shall be, and so it ought to be.

7. Behold, he cometh with clouds. This relates to His coming to execute judgment on the enemies of His religion.

And all kindreds of the earth. "All the tribes of the land." By this the Jewish people are most evidently intended, and therefore the whole verse may be understood as predicting the destruction of the Jews, and is a presumptive proof that the Apocalypse was written before the final overthrow of the Jewish state. Even so, Amen. "Yea, Amen." It is true, so be it.

8. I am Alpha and Omega. I am from eternity to eternity. This mode of speech is borrowed from the Jews, who express the whole compass of things by aleph and tau, the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet; but as John was writing in Greek, he accommodates the whole to the Greek alphabet, of which alpha and omega are the first and last letters. With the rabbins "from aleph to tau" expressed the whole of matter, "from the beginning to the end." The beginning and the ending. This clause is wanting in almost every MS. and version of importance. It appears to have been added first as an explanatory note, and in process of time crept into the text.

I. The person who was favoured with this vision. His present state and condition. A persecuted man, banished, and perhaps imprisoned, for his adherence to Christ. He was their brother, though an apostle. He was their companion in tribulation: the persecuted servants of God did not suffer alone. He was their companion in patience, not only a sharer with them in suffering circumstances, but in suffering graces. By this account he acknowledges his engagements to sympathize with them, and to endeavour to give them counsel and comfort. The place where he was when he was favoured with this vision: he was in the isle Patmos. Under this confinement it was the apostle's comfort that he did not suffer as an evil-doer, but that it was for the testimony of Jesus. This was a cause worth suffering for; and the Spirit of glory and of God rested upon this persecuted apostle.

The day and time in which he had this vision: it was the Lord's day. He was in the Spirit. He was not only in a rapture when he received the vision, but before he received it. God usually prepares the souls of his people for uncommon manifestations of himself, by the quickening influences of his good Spirit.

II. What he heard. An alarm was given as with the sound of a trumpet, and then he heard a voice, the voice of Christ, the first and the last, commanding the apostle to commit to writing the things that were now to be revealed to him, and to send it immediately to the seven Asian churches.

III. An account of what he saw. He turned to see the voice, and then a wonderful scene of vision opened itself to him.

1. He saw a representation of the church under the emblem of seven golden candlesticks. The churches are compared to candlesticks, because they hold forth the light of the gospel to advantage.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

blance between the Old Testament and the New Testament apocalyptic seers. No other Scripture writer uses the phrase. also—as well as being an apostle. The oldest MSS. omit "also." In his Gospel and Epistles he makes no mention of his name, though describing himself as "the disciple whom Jesus loved." Here, with similar humility, though naming himself, he does not mention his apostleship. companion—Greek, "fellow partaker in the tribulation." Tribulation is the necessary precursor of the kingdom," therefore "the" is prefixed. patience—Translate, "endurance." "Persevering, enduring continuance" (Acts 14:22); "the queen of the graces (virtues)" [CHRYSOSTOM]. of . . .—The oldest MSS. read "IN Jesus," or "Jesus Christ." It is IN Him that believers have the right to the kingdom, and the spiritual strength to enable them to endure patiently for it. was—Greek, "came to be." in . . . Patmos—now Patmo or Palmosa. See Introduction on this island, and John's exile to it under Domitian, from which he was released under Nerva. Restricted to a small spot on earth, he is permitted to penetrate the wide realms of heaven and its secrets. Thus John drank of Christ's cup, and was baptized with His baptism (Matt. 20:22). for—Greek, "for the sake of," "on account of"; so, "because of the word of God and . . . testimony." Two oldest MSS. omit the second "for"; thus "the Word of God" and "testimony of Jesus" are the more closely joined. Two oldest MSS. omit "Christ." The Apocalypse has been always appreciated most by the Church in adversity. Thus the Asiatic Church from the flourishing times of Constantine less estimated it. The African Church being more exposed to the cross always made much of it [BENGEL]. 10. I was—Greek, "I came to be"; "I became," in the Spirit—in a state of ecstasy; the outer world being shut out, and the inner and higher life or spirit being taken full possession of by God's Spirit, so that an immediate connection with the invisible world is established. While the prophet "speaks" in the Spirit, the apocalyptic seer is in the Spirit in his whole person. The spirit only (that which connects us with God and the invisible world) is active, or rather recipient, in the apocalyptic state. With Christ this being "in the Spirit" was not the exception, but His continual state. on the Lord's day—Though forcibly detained from Church communion with the brethren in the sanctuary on the Lord's day, the weekly commemoration of the resurrection, John was holding spiritual communion with them. This is the earliest mention of the term, "the Lord's day." But the consecration of the day to worship, almsgiving, and the Lord's Supper, is implied in Acts 20:7; I Corinthians 16:2; cf. John 20:19-26. The name corresponds to "the Lord's Supper," I Corinthians 11:20.

great voice—summoning solemn attention; Greek order, "I heard a voice behind me great (loud) as (that) of a trumpet." The trumpet summoned to religious feasts, and accompanies God's revelations of Himself. 11. I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and—The oldest MSS, omit all this clause. write in a book—To this book, having such an origin, and to the other books of Holy Scripture, who is there that gives the weight which their importance demands, preferring them to the many books of the world? [BENGEL.] seven churches—As there were many other churches in Proconsular Asia (e.g., Miletus, Magnesia, Tralles), besides the seven specified, doubtless the number seven is fixed upon because of its mystical signification, expressing totality and universality. The words, "which are in Asia" are rejected by the oldest MSS., A, B, C, CYPRIAN, Vulgate, and Syriac; Coptic alone supports them of old authorities. These seven are representative churches; and, as a complex whole, ideally complete, embody the chief spiritual characteristics of the Church, whether as faithful or unfaithful, in all ages. The churches selected are not taken at random, but have a many-sided completeness.

12. see the voice—i.e., ascertain whence the voice came; to see who was it from whom the voice proceeded. that—Greek, "of what kind it was which." The voice is that of God the Father, as at Christ's baptism and transfiguration, so here in presenting Christ as our High Priest. spake—The oldest MSS., versions, and Fathers read, "was speaking." being—"having turned." seven . . . candlesticks—"lamp-stands" [KELLY]. The stand holding the lamp. In Exodus 25:31, 32, the seven are united in ONE candlestick or lamp-stand, i.e., six arms and a central shaft; so Zechariah 4:2, 11. Here the seven are separate candlesticks, typifying, as that one, the entire Church, but now no longer as the Jewish Church (represented by the one sevenfold

9. Your brother. A Christian, begotten of God, and incorporated in the heavenly family. Companion in tribulation. Suffering under the persecution in which you also suffer. In the kingdom. For we are a Kingdom of priests unto God. And patience of Jesus. Meekly bearing all indignities, privations, and sufferings for the sake and after the example of our Lord and Master.

The isle that is called Patmos. This island lies in the Aegean Sea. It has derived all its celebrity from being the place to which John was banished by one of the Roman emperors; whether Domitian, Claudius, or Nero is not agreed on, but it was most probably the latter. The whole island is about thirty miles in circumference. For the testimony of Jesus Christ. For preaching Christianity and converting heathens to the Lord Jesus.

10. I was in the Spirit. That is, I received the Spirit of prophecy, and was under its influence when the first vision was exhibited. The Lord's day. The first day of the week, observed as the Christian Sabbath, because on it Jesus Christ rose from the dead; therefore it was called the Lord's day, and has taken place of the Jewish Sabbath throughout the Christian world. And heard behind me a great voice. This voice came unexpectedly and suddenly. He felt himself under the divine afflatus, but did not know what scenes were to be represented. As of a trumpet. This was calculated to call in every wandering thought, to fix his attention, and solemnize his whole frame. Thus God prepared Moses to receive the law. See Exod. xix. 16, 19.

11. I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and. This whole clause is wanting in many MSS. Griesbach has left it out of the text. Saying . . . What thou seest, write in a book. Carefully note down everything that is represented to you. John had the visions from heaven, but he described them in his own language and manner. Send it unto the seven churches. The names of which immediately follow. In Asia. This is wanting in the principal MSS. and versions. Ephesus. This was a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Aegean Sea, about fifty miles south of Smyrna. Smyrna, now called also Ismir, is the largest and richest city of Asia Minor. It is situated about one hundred and eighty-three miles west by south of Constantinople, on the shore of the Aegean Sea. Pergamos. A town of Mysia, situated on the river Caicus. It was anciently famous for its library, which contained, according to Plutarch, two hundred thousand volumes. It was here that the membranae Pergameniae, Pergamenian skins, were invented; from which we derive our word "parchment." Thyatira. A city of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on the river Hermus, in a plain eighteen miles broad, and is about fifty miles from Pergamos. Sardis. Now called Sardo and Sart, a town of Asia, in Natolia, about forty miles east from Smyrna. Philadelphia. A city of Natolia, seated at the foot of mount Tmolus, by the river Cogamus. It is about forty miles east-southeast of Smyrna. Laodicea. A town of Phrygia, on the river Lycus. It was built by Antiochus Theos, and named after his consort Laodice.

12. And I turned. For he had heard the voice behind him. To see the voice; i.e., the person from whom the voice came. Seven golden candlesticks. "Seven golden lamps." These seven lamps represented the seven churches, in which the light of God was continually shining and the love of God continually burning. And they are here represented as golden, to show how precious they were in the sight of God. This is a reference to the Temple at Jerusalem, where

J. A. SEISS:

"And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." Here we have the feet with which he is to tread down the wicked; and the description corresponds with the rest of the picture. Christ is all-glorious, even to his feet. They are like glowing brass—like brass in the fire heated unto whiteness. The glory of this metal, in such a state, is almost insufferable to the human gaze. It presents an image of pureness which is terrible. And it is upon these feet of dreadful holiness that our Lord walks among the churches, and shall tread down all abominations, and crush Antichrist and Satan and all who unhappily set aside his authority and his claims.

"And his voice as the sound of many waters." Consider that the day is approaching when "all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and they that hear shall live." This majesty and power of voice is elsewhere more especially referred to the dreadfulness of Christ toward his faithless servants and enemies. His word came to Jeremiah, saying, "Say unto them, The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth. A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth, for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord."

"And he had in his right hand seven stars." "The seven stars are the angels [ministers] of the seven churches," and, as such, they are distinct from the candlesticks. Christ walks among the candlesticks, but he holds these ministers in his right hand. The democratic idea of church organization, which makes all power proceed from the members, and makes the ministerial position nothing more than what inheres in every Christian, is thus scattered to the winds. Ministers partake directly of Christ's authority, and are responsible directly to him, and are upheld by his right hand, beyond the power of men or angels to displace them. What a lesson for ministers, as to the holiness of their office, the solemnity of their responsibilities, the necessity of unswerving fidelity, and the exercise of every confidence in their sacred functions. They are in Christ's hand. If they are unfaithful none can deliver them out of that hand; but if true to their position, none can touch them or quench their light. They shall shine as the stars forever and ever. What a lesson for the people as to the authority of those ministrations which they are so prone to despise.

"And out of his mouth went a sharp, two-edged sword." The sword is the symbol of magistracy and judgment. But this is not a hand-sword, but a word-sword. It accords exactly with what Christ himself has said, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." Even now the word of Christ is all the while absolving, or binding under condemnation, everyone to whom it is preached. A certain judicial process inheres in every faithful presentation of the Gospel. It is good news—glad tidings; but there is a sword in it; a sword of double edge; and that a sword of judgment.

candlestick) restricted to one outward unity and one place; the several churches are mutually independent as to external ceremonies and government (provided all things are done to edification, and schisms or needless separations are avoided), yet one in the unity of the Spirit and the Headship of Christ. The candlestick is not light, but the bearer of light, holding it forth to give light around. 13. His glorified form as man could be recognized by John, who had seen it at the Transfiguration. in the midst—implying Christ's continual presence and ceaseless activity in the midst of His people on earth. In ch. 4, when He appears in heaven, His insignia undergo a corresponding change yet even there the rainbow reminds us of His everlasting covenant with them. seven—omitted in two of the oldest MSS., but supported by one. Son of man—The form which John had seen enduring the agony of Gethsemane, and the shame and anguish of Calvary, he now sees glorified. His glory (as Son of man, not merely Son of God) is the result of His humiliation as Son of man. down to the foot—a mark of high rank. The garment and girdle seem to be emblems of His priesthood. Cf. Exodus 28:2, 4, 31; LXX. Aaron's robe and girdle were "for glory and beauty," and combined the insignia of royalty and priesthood, the characteristics of Christ's antitypical priesthood "after the order of Melchisedec." His being in the midst of the candlesticks (only seen in the temple), shows that it is as a king-priest He is so attired. This priesthood He has exercised ever since His ascension; and, therefore He here wears its emblems. As Aaron wore these insignia when He came forth from the sanctuary to bless the people (Lev. 16:4, 23, 24, the chetoneth, or holy linen coat), so when Christ shall come again, He shall appear in the similar attire of "beauty and glory" (Margin, Isa. 4:2). 14. Greek, "But," or "And." like wool—Greek, "like white wool." The color is the point of comparison; signifying purity and glory. (So in Isa. 1:18.) Not age, for hoary hairs are the sign of decay. eyes . . . as . . . flame—all-searching and penetrating like fire: at the same time, also, implying consuming indignation against sin, especially at His coming "in flaming fire, taking vengeance" on all the ungodly, which is confirmed as the meaning here, by Revelation 19: 11, 12. 15. fine brass—Greek, chalcolibanus, derived by some from two Greek words, "brass" and "frankincense"; derived by BOCHART from Greek, chalcos, brass, and Hebrew, libbeen, to whiten; hence, "brass," which in the furnace has reached a white heat. Thus it answers to "burnished (flashing, or glowing) brass," Ezekiel 1:7; Revelation 10: 1, "His feet as pillars of fire." Translate, "Glowing brass, as if they had been made fiery (red-hot) in a furnace." The feet of the priests were bare in ministering in the sanctuary. So our great High Priest here. voice as . . . many waters—Ezekiel 43: 2; in Daniel 10:6, it is "like the voice of a multitude." As the Bridegroom's voice, so the bride's, ch. 14:2; 19:6; Ezekiel 1:24, the cherubim, or redeemed creation. His voice, however, is here regarded in its terribleness to His foes. Contrast Song of Solomon 2:8; 5:2, with which cf. ch. 3:20. 16. he had—Greek, "having." John takes up the description from time to time, irrespective of the construction, with separate strokes of the pencil [ALFORD]. in . . . right hand seven stars—(vs. 20; ch. 2:1; 3:1). He holds them as a star-studded "crown of glory," or "royal diadem," in His hand: so Isaiah 62:3. He is their Possessor and Upholder. out of . . . mouth went—Greek, "going forth"; not wielded in the hand. His WORD is omnipotent in executing His will in punishing sinners. It is the sword of His Spirit. Reproof and punishment, rather than its converting winning power, is the prominent point. Still, as He encourages the churches, as well as threatens, the former quality of the Word is not excluded. Its two edges (back and front) may allude to its double efficacy, condemning some, converting others. sword—Greek, romphaia, the Thracian long and heavy broadsword: six times in Revelation, once only elsewhere in New Testament, viz., Luke 2:35. sun . . . in his strength—in unclouded power. So shall the righteous shine, reflecting the image of the Sun of righteousness. TRENCH notices that this description, sublime as a purely mental conception, would be intolerable if we were to give it an outward form. With the Greeks, æsthecial taste was the first consideration, to which all others must give way. With the Hebrews, truth and the full representation ideally of the religious reality were the paramount consideration, that representation being designed not to be outwardly embodied, but to remain a purely mental conception. This exalting of the essence above the

there was a candlestick or chandelier of seven branches; or rather six branches—three springing out on either side, and one in the centre. See Exod. xxxvii. 17-23. This reference to the Temple seems to intimate that the Temple of Jerusalem was a type of the whole Christian Church.

13. Like unto the Son of man. This seems a reference to Dan. vii. 13. This was our blessed Lord himself, v. 18. Clothed with a garment down to the foot. This is a description of the high priest, in his sacerdotal robes. Jesus is our High Priest, even in heaven. He is still discharging the sacerdotal functions before the throne of God. Golden girdle. The emblem of both regal and sacerdotal dignity.

14. His head and his hairs were white like wool. This was not only an emblem of His antiquity, but it was the evidence of His glory; for the whiteness or splendor of His head and hair doubtless proceeded from the rays of light and glory which encircled His head, and darted from it in all directions. His eyes were as a flame of fire. To denote His omniscience, and the all-penetrating nature of the divine knowledge.

15. His feet like unto fine brass. An emblem of His stability and permanence, brass being considered the most durable of all metallic substances or compounds. The original word means the famous metal which, according to Suidas, was "a kind of amber, more precious than gold." It seems to have been a composition of gold, silver, and brass, and the same with the Corinthian brass, so highly famed and valued. It may however mean no more than copper melted with lapis calaminaris, which converts it into brass; and the flame that proceeds from the metal during this operation is one of the most intensely and unsufferably vivid that can be imagined. I have often seen several furnaces employed in this operation, and the flames bursting up through the earth (for these furnaces are underground) always called to remembrance this description given by John: His feet of fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace. His voice as the sound of many waters. The same description we find in Ezek. xliii. 2: "The glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters; and the earth shined with his glory."

16. In his right hand seven stars. The stars are afterwards interpreted as representing the seven angels, messengers, or bishops of the seven churches. Their being in the right hand of Christ shows that they are under His special care and most powerful protection. Out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword. The sharp twoedged sword may represent the Word of God in general, according to that saying of the apostle, Heb. iv. 12: "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." And "the word of God" is termed "the sword of the Spirit," Eph. vi. 17. And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. His face was like the disk of the sun in the brightest summer's day, when there were no clouds to abate the splendor of his rays. A similar form of expression is found in Judges v. 31: "Let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."

2. He saw a representation of the Lord Jesus Christ in the midst of the golden candlesticks.

(1) The glorious form in which Christ appeared.

(2) The impression this appearance of Christ made upon the apostle John (v. 17). He was overpowered with the greatness of the lustre and glory in which Christ appeared, though he had been so familiar with him before.

(3) The condescending goodness of the Lord Jesus to his disciple, v. 17. He raised him up; he put strength into him, he spoke kind words to him. Words of comfort and encouragement: Fear not. Words of instruction, telling him particularly who he was that thus appeared to him. He acquaints him, First, With his divine nature: The first and the last. Secondly, With his former sufferings: I was dead. Thirdly, With his resurrection and life: "I live, and am alive for evermore, have conquered death, and am partaker of an endless life."

Fourthly, With his office and authority: I have the keys of hell and of death, a sovereign dominion in and over the invisible world.

Fifthly, With his will and pleasure: Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and which shall be hereafter.

Sixthly, With the meaning of the seven stars, and of the seven candlesticks.

form marks their deeper religious earnestness. 17. So fallen is man that God's manifestation of His glorious presence overwhelms him. laid his right hand upon me—So the same Lord Jesus did at the Transfiguration to the three prostrate disciples, of whom John was one, saying, Be not afraid. The "touch" of His hand, as of old, imparted strength. unto me—omitted in the oldest MSS. the first . . . the last—(Isa. 41:4; 44:6; 48:12). From eternity, and enduring to eternity: "the First by creation, the Last by retribution: the First, because before Me there was no God formed; the Last, because after Me there shall be no other: the First, because from Me are all things; the Last, because to Me all things return" [RICHARD OF ST. VICTOR]. 18. Translate as Greek, "And THE LIVING ONE": connected with last sentence, vs. 17. and was—Greek, "and (yet) I became." alive for evermore—Greek, "living unto the ages of ages": not merely "I live," but I have life, and am the source of it to My people. "To Him belongs absolute being, as contrasted with the relative being of the creature; others may share, He only hath immortality: being in essence, not by mere participation, immortal [THEODORET in TRENCH]. One oldest MS., with English Version, reads "Amen." Two others, and most of the oldest versions and Fathers, omit it. His having passed through death as one of us, and now living in the infinite plenitude of life, reassures His people, since through Him death is the gate of resurrection to eternal life. have . . . keys of hell—Greek, "Hades"; Hebrew, "Sheol." "Hell" in the sense, the place of torment, answers to a different Greek word, viz., Gehenna. I can release from the unseen world of spirits and from DEATH whom I will. The oldest MSS. read by transposition, "Death and Hades," or Hell." It is death (which came in by sin, robbing man of his immortal birthright, Rom. 5:12) that peoples Hades, and therefore should stand first in order. Keys are emblems of authority, opening and shutting at will "the gates of Hades" (Ps. 9:13, 14; Isa. 38:10; Matt. 16:18). 19. The oldest MSS. read, "Write therefore" (inasmuch as I, "the First and Last," have the keys of death, and vouchsafe to thee this vision for the comfort and warning of the Church). things which are—"the things which thou hast seen" are those narrated in this chapter (cf. vs. 11). "The things which are" imply the present state of things in the churches when John was writing, as represented in chs. 2 and 3. "The things which shall be hereafter," the things symbolically represented concerning the future history of chs. 4-22. 20. in—Greek, "upon My right hand." the mystery . . . candlesticks—in apposition to, and explaining, "the things which thou hast seen," governed by "Write." Mystery signifies the hidden truth, veiled under this symbol, and now revealed; its correlative is revelation. Stars symbolize lordship (Num. 24:17; cf. Dan. 12:3, of faithful teachers; ch. 8:10; 12:4; Jude 13). angels—not as ALFORD, from ORIGEN Homily 13 on Luke, and 20 on Numbers, the guardian angels of the churches, just as individuals have their guardian angels. For how could heavenly angels be charged with the delinquencies laid here to the charge of these angels? Then, if a human angel be meant (as the Old Testament analogy favors, Hag. 1:13, "the Lord's Messenger in the Lord's message"; Mal. 2:7; 3:1), the bishop, or superintendent pastor, must be the angel. For whereas there were many presbyters in each of the larger churches (as e.g., Ephesus, Smyrna, etc.), there was but one angel, whom, moreover, the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of souls holds responsible for the spiritual state of the Church under him.

ADAM CLARKE

17. I fell at his feet as dead. The appearance of the glory of the Lord had the same effect upon Ezekiel, chap. i. 28; and the appearance of Gabriel had the same effect on Daniel, chap. vii. 17. The terrible splendor of such majesty was more than the apostle could bear, and he fell down deprived of his senses, but was soon enabled to behold the vision by a communication of strength from our Lord's right hand.

18. I am he that liveth, and was dead. I am Jesus, the Saviour, who, though the Fountain of life, have died for mankind; and being raised from the dead I shall die no more, the great sacrifice being consummated.

And have the keys of death and the grave, so that I can destroy the living and raise the dead. The key here signifies the power and authority over life, death, and the grave. This is also a rabbinical form of speech. We should understand hades here, not as hell, nor the place of separate spirits, but merely as the "grave"; and the key we find to be merely the emblem of power and authority. Christ can both save and destroy, can kill and make alive. Death is still under His dominion, and He can recall the dead whensoever He pleases. He is "the resurrection, and the life."

20. The mystery. That is, the allegorical explanation of the seven stars is the seven angels or ministers of the churches; and the allegorical meaning of the "seven golden lamps" is the seven churches themselves.

CHAPTER 2

Vss. 1-29. EPISTLES TO EPHESUS, SMYRNA, PERGAMOS, THYATIRA. Each of the seven epistles in this chapter and ch. 3, commences with, "I know thy works." Each contains a promise from Christ, "To him that overcometh." Each ends with, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." The title of our Lord in each case accords with the nature of the address, and is mainly taken from the imagery of the vision, ch. 1. Each address has a threat or a promise, and most of the addresses have both. Their order seems to be ecclesiastical, civil, and geographical: Ephesus first, as being the Asiatic metropolis (termed "the light of Asia," and "first city of Asia"), the nearest to Patmos, where John received the epistle to the seven churches, and also as being that Church with which John was especially connected; then the churches on the west coast of Asia; then those in the interior. Smyrna and Philadelphia alone receive unmixed

CHAPTER 2

I must here advise my readers: (1) That I do not perceive any metaphorical or allegorical meaning in the epistles to these churches. (2) I consider the churches as real; and that their spiritual state is here really and literally pointed out; and that they have no reference to the state of the Church of Christ in all ages of the world, as has been imagined; and that the notion of what has been termed the Ephesian state, the Smyrnian state, the Pergamenian state, the Thyatirian state, etc., is unfounded, absurd, and dangerous; and such expositions should not be entertained by any who wish to arrive at a sober and rational knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. (3) I consider the angel of the church as signifying the messenger, the pastor, sent by Christ and His apostles to teach and edify that church. (4) I consider what is spoken to this angel as spoken to the whole church; and that

Verses 1–7

I. The inscription. 1. To the church of Ephesus. 2. From whom this epistle to Ephesus was sent. He that holds the stars in his right hand. The ministers of Christ are under his special care and protection. The ministers of the gospel are in his hand. He supports them, or else they would soon be falling stars; and all the good they do is done by his hand with them. He walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks. This intimates his relation to his churches. Though Christ is in heaven, he walks in the midst of his churches on earth.

II. The contents of the epistle.

1. The commendation Christ gave this church, which he brings in by declaring that he knows their works, and therefore both his commendation and reprehension are to be strictly regarded; for he does not in either speak at a venture: he knows what he says. Now the church of Ephesus is commended, (1) For their diligence in duty, v. 2–3. (2) For their patience in suffering, v. 2. It is not enough that we be diligent, but we must be patient—no Christian can be without it. There must be bearing patience, and there must be waiting patience, that they may receive the promise, v. 3. (3) For their zeal against what was evil, v. 2. We must show all meekness to men, yet we must show a just zeal against their sins. True zeal proceeds with discretion; none should be cast off till they be tried.

2. The rebuke given to this church, v. 4. Those that have much good in them may have something much amiss in them. Thou hast left thy first love; not left and forsaken the object of it, but lost the fervent degree of it that at first appeared. The first affections of men towards Christ are usually lively and warm. These lively affections will abate and cool if great care be not taken.

3. The advice and counsel given them from Christ. Those that have lost their first love must remember whence they have fallen; they must compare their present with their former state, and consider how much better it was with them then than now. They must repent. They must return and do their first works. They must as it were begin again. They must endeavour to revive and recover their first zeal.

4. This good advice is enforced and urged, (1) By a severe threatening, if it should be neglected. If the presence of Christ's grace and Spirit be slighted, we may expect the presence of his displeasure.

praise. Sardis and Laodicea receive almost solely censure. In Ephesus, Pergamos, and Thyatira, there are some things to praise, others to condemn, the latter element preponderating in one case (Ephesus), the former in the two others (Pergamos and Thyatira). Thus the main characteristics of the different states of different churches, in all times and places, are portrayed, and they are suitably encouraged or warned. 1. Ephesus—famed for the temple of Diana, one of the seven wonders of the world. For three years Paul labored there. He subsequently ordained Timothy superintending overseer or bishop there: probably his charge was but of a temporary nature. John, towards the close of his life, took it as the center from which he superintended the province. holdeth—Greek, "holdeth fast," as in vs. 25; ch. 3:11; cf. John 10:28, 29. The title of Christ here as "holding fast the seven stars (from ch. 1:16: only that, for having is substituted holding fast in His grasp), and walking in the midst of the seven candlesticks," accords with the beginning of His address to the seven churches representing the universal Church. Walking expresses His unwearied activity in the Church, guarding her from internal and external evils, as the high priest moved to and fro in the sanctuary. 2. I know thy works—expressing His omniscience. Not merely "thy professions, desires, good resolutions" (ch. 14:13, end). thy labour—Two oldest MSS. omit "thy"; one supports it. The Greek means "labor unto weariness." patience—persevering endurance. bear—evil men are a burden which the Ephesian Church regarded as intolerable. We are to "bear (the same Greek, Gal. 6:2) one another's burdens" in the case of weak brethren; but not to bear false brethren. tried—by experiment; not the Greek for "test," as I John 4:1. The apostolical churches had the miraculous gift of discerning spirits. Cf. Acts 20:28-30, wherein Paul presciently warned the Ephesian elders of the coming false teachers, as also in writing to Timothy at Ephesus. TERTULLIAN, De baptism. 17, and JEROME, in Catal. Vir. Illustr. in Lucca 7, record of John, that when a writing, professing to be a canonical history of the acts of Paul, had been composed by a presbyter of Ephesus, John convicted the author and condemned the work. So on one occasion he would not remain under the same roof with Cerinthus the heretic. say they are apostles—probably Judaizers. IGNATIUS, Ad Ephesum 6, says subsequently, "Onesimus praises exceedingly your good discipline that no heresy dwells among you"; and 9, "Ye did not permit those having evil doctrine to sow their seed among you, but closed your ears." 3. borne . . . patience—The oldest MSS. transpose these words. Then translate as Greek, "persevering endurance . . . borne." "Thou hast borne" My reproach, but "thou canst not bear the evil" (vs. 2). A beautiful antithesis. and . . . hast laboured, and hast not fainted—The two oldest MSS. and oldest versions read, "and . . . hast not labored," omitting "and hast fainted." The difficulty which transcribers by English Version reading tried to obviate, was the seeming contradiction, "I know thy labor . . . and thou hast not labored." But what is meant is, "Thou hast not been wearied out with labor." 4. somewhat . . . because—Translate, "I have against thee (this) that . . ." It is not a mere "somewhat"; it is everything. How characteristic of our gracious Lord, that He puts foremost all He can find to approve, and only after this notes the shortcomings! left thy first love—to Christ. Cf. I Timothy 5:12, "cast off their first faith." See the Ephesians' first love, Ephesians 1:15. This epistle was written under Domitian, when thirty years had elapsed since Paul had written his Epistle to them. Their warmth of love had given place to a lifeless orthodoxy. Cf. Paul's view of faith so called without love, I Corinthians 13:2. 5. whence—from what a height. do the first works—the works which flowed from thy first love. Not merely "feel thy first feelings," but do works flowing from the same principle as formerly, "faith which worketh by love." I will come—Greek, "I am coming" in special judgment on thee. quickly—omitted in two oldest MSS., Vulgate and Coptic versions: supported by one oldest MS.). remove thy candlestick out of his place—I will take away the Church from Ephesus and remove it elsewhere. "It is removal of the candlestick, not extinction of the candle, which is threatened here; judgment for some, but that very judgment the occasion of mercy for others. So it has been. The seat of the Church has been changed, but the Church itself survives. What the East has lost, the West has gained. One who lately visited Ephesus found only three Christians there, and these so ignorant as scarcely to have heard the names of St. Paul or St. John" [TRENCH].

ADAM CLARKE

it is not his particular state that is described, but the state of the people in general under his care.

THE EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS

1. Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus. By angel we are to understand the "messenger" or person sent by God to preside over this church; and to him the epistle is directed, not as pointing out his state, but the state of the church under his care. Angel of the church here answers exactly to that officer of the synagogue among the Jews called the messenger of the church, whose business it was to read, pray, and teach in the synagogue. The church at Ephesus is first addressed, as being the place where John chiefly resided; and the city itself was the metropolis of that part of Asia. Holdeth the seven stars. Who particularly preserves and guides and upholds, not only the ministers of those seven churches, but all the genuine ministers of His gospel, in all ages and places. Walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. Is the supreme Bishop and Head, not only of those churches, but of all the churches or congregations of His people throughout the world.

2. I know thy works. For the eyes of the Lord are throughout the earth, beholding the evil and the good; and, being omnipresent, all things are continually open and naked before Him. It is worthy of remark that whatsoever is praiseworthy in any of these churches is first mentioned, thereby intimating that God is more intent on finding out the good than the evil in any person or church, and that those who wish to reform such as have fallen or are not making sufficient advances in the divine life should take occasion, from the good which yet remains, to encourage them to set out afresh for the kingdom of Heaven. Exhortations and encouragements of this kind are sure to produce the most blessed effects; and under such the work of God infallibly revives.

3. And hast borne. The same things mentioned in the preceding verse, but in an inverted order, the particular reason of which does not appear. Perhaps it was intended to show more forcibly to this church that there was no good which they had done, nor evil which they had suffered, that was forgotten before God. And hast not fainted. They must therefore have had a considerable portion of this love remaining, else they could not have thus acted.

4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee. The clause should be read, according to the Greek, thus: "But I have against you that you have left your first love." They did not retain that strong and ardent affection for God and sacred things which they had when first brought to the knowledge of the truth, and justified by faith in Christ.

5. Remember. Consider the state of grace in which you once stood; the happiness, love, and joy which you felt when you received remission of sins; the zeal you had for God's glory and the salvation of mankind; your willing, obedient spirit, your cheerful self-denial, your fervor in private prayer, your detachment from the world, and your heavenly-mindedness. Whence thou art fallen. Or "Remember what a loss you have sustained." Repent. Be deeply humbled before God for having so carelessly guarded the divine treasure. Do the first works. Resume your former zeal and diligence; watch, fast, pray, reprove sin, carefully attend all the ordinances of God, walk as in His sight, and rest not till you have recovered all your lost ground, and got back the evidence of your acceptance with your Maker. I will come unto thee quickly. In the way of judgment. And will remove thy candlestick. Take away My ordinances, remove your ministers, and send you a famine of the word.

MATTHEW HENRY

(2) By an encouraging mention of what was yet good among them, v. 6. "Though thou hast declined in thy love to what is good, yet thou retainest thy hatred to what is evil." An indifference of spirit between truth and error, good and evil, may be called charity and meekness, but it is not pleasing to Christ.

III. We have the conclusion of this epistle.

1. A call to attention. What is said to one church concerns all the churches, in every place and age.

2. A promise of great mercy to those who overcome. We must never yield to our spiritual enemies, but fight the good fight, till we gain the victory, and the warfare and victory shall have a glorious triumph and reward. They shall eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God, not in the earthly paradise, but the heavenly.

Verses 8–11

I. The preface or inscription in both parts. 1. The superscription: To the angel of the church in Smyrna. 2. The subscription. Jesus Christ is the first and the last. It is but a little scantling of time that is allowed to us in this world, but our Redeemer is the first and the last. He was dead and is alive. He was dead, and died for our sins; he is alive, and he ever lives to make intercession for us.

II. The subject-matter of this epistle.

1. The improvement they had made in their spiritual state. But thou art rich. Some who are poor outwardly are inwardly rich, rich in faith and in good works. Where there is spiritual plenty, outward poverty may be better borne.

2. Their sufferings: I know thy tribulation and thy poverty. Jesus Christ takes particular notice of all their troubles.

3. He knows the wickedness and the falsehood of their enemies: I know the blasphemy of those that say they are Jews, but are not; that is, of those who

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

6. But—How graciously, after necessary censure, He returns to praise for our consolation, and as an example to us, that we would show, when we reprove, we have more pleasure in praising than in fault-finding. hatest the deeds—We should hate men's evil deeds, not hate the men themselves. Nicolaitanes—IRENÆUS, Hæreses 1. 26. 3; and TERTULLIAN, Præscriptione Hæreticorum 46, make these followers of Nicolas, one of the seven (honorably mentioned, Acts 6:3, 5). They (CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS, Stromata 2. 20; 3. 4 and EPIPHANIUS, Hæreses 25) evidently confound the latter Gnostic Nicolaitanes, or followers of one Nicolaos, with those of Revelation.

Cf. vss. 14, 15, which shows the true sense of Nicolaitanes; they are not a sect, but professing Christians who, like Balaam of old, tried to introduce into the Church a false freedom, i.e., licentiousness; this was a reaction in the opposite direction from Judaism, the first danger to the Church combated in the council of Jerusalem, and by Paul in the Epistle to Galatians. These symbolical Nicolaitanes, or followers of Balaam, abused Paul's doctrine of the grace of God into a plea for lasciviousness (II Pet. 2:15, 16, 19; Jude 4, 11 who both describe the same sort of seducers as followers of Balaam). 7. He that hath an ear—This clause precedes the promise in the first three addresses, succeeds it in the last four. Thus the promises are enclosed on both sides with the precept urging the deepest attention as to the most momentous truths. Every man "hath an ear" naturally, but he alone will be able to hear spiritually to whom God has given "the hearing ear"; whose "ear God hath wakened" and "opened." Cf. "Faith, the ears of the soul" [CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS]. the Spirit saith—What Christ saith, the Spirit saith; so one are the Second and Third Persons. unto the churches—not merely to the particular, but to the universal Church. overcometh—In John's Gospel (16:33) and First Epistle (2:13, 14, 5:4, 5) an object follows, viz., "the world," "the wicked one." will I give—as the Judge. The tree of life in Paradise, lost by the fall, is restored by the Redeemer. Allusions to it occur in Proverbs 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4, and prophetically, ch. 22:2, 14; Ezekiel 47:12; cf. John 6:51. give . . . tree of life—The thing promised corresponds to the kind of faithfulness manifested. They who refrain from Nicolaitane indulgences (vs. 6) and idol meats (vss. 14, 15), shall eat of meat infinitely superior, viz., the fruit of the tree of life, and the hidden manna (vs. 17). in the midst of the paradise—The oldest MSS. omit "the midst of." In Genesis 2:9 these words are appropriate, for there were other trees in the garden, but not in the midst of it. Here the tree of life is simply in the paradise, for no other tree is mentioned in it; in ch. 22:2 the tree of life is "in the midst of the street of Jerusalem"; from this the clause was inserted here. Paradise (a Persian, or else Semitic word), originally used of any garden of delight; then specially of Eden; then the temporary abode of separate souls in bliss; then "the Paradise of God," the third heaven, the immediate presence of God.

8. Smyrna—in Ionia, a little to the north of Ephesus. POLYCARP, martyred in A.D. 168, eighty-six years after his conversion, was bishop, and probably "the angel of the Church in Smyrna" meant here. The allusions to persecutions and faithfulness unto death accord with this view. IGNATIUS (Martyrium Ignatii, 3), on his way to martyrdom in Rome, wrote to POLYCARP, then (A.D. 108) bishop of Smyrna; if his bishopric commenced ten or twelve years earlier, the dates will harmonize. TERTULLIAN, Præscriptione Hæreticorum, 32, and IRENÆUS, who had talked with POLYCARP in youth, tell us POLYCARP was consecrated bishop of Smyrna by St. John. the first . . . the last . . . was dead . . . is alive—The attributes of Christ most calculated to comfort the Church of Smyrna under its persecutions; resumed from ch. 1:17, 18. As death was to Him but the gate to life eternal, so it is to be to them (vs. 10, 11). 9. thy works, and—omitted in two oldest MSS., Vulgate, and Coptic. Supported by one oldest MS. tribulation—owing to persecution. poverty—owing to "the spoiling of their goods." but thou art rich—in grace. Contrast Laodicea, rich in the world's eyes and her own, poor before God. "There are both poor rich-men, and rich poor-men in God's sight" [TRENCH]. blasphemy of them—blasphemous calumny of thee on the part of (or arising from) them. . . . say they are Jews, and are not—Jews by national descent, but not spiritually of "the true circumcision." The Jews blaspheme Christ as "the hanged one." As elsewhere, so at Smyrna they bitterly opposed Christianity; and

6. The deeds of the Nicolaitanes. These were, as is commonly supposed, a sect of the Gnostics, who taught the most impure doctrines and followed the most impure practices.

7. He that hath an ear. Let every intelligent person, and every Christian man, attend carefully to what the Holy Spirit, in this and the following epistles, says to the churches. See the note on Matt. xi. 15, where the same form of speech occurs.

To him that overcometh. To him who continues steadfast in the faith and uncorrupt in his life, who faithfully confesses Jesus and neither imbibes the doctrines nor is led away by the error of the wicked, will I give to eat of the tree of life. As he who conquered his enemies had, generally, not only great honor but also a reward, so here a great reward is promised "to the conqueror." And as in the Grecian games, to which there may be an allusion, the conqueror was crowned with the leaves of some tree, here it is promised that they should eat of the fruit of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God; that is, that they should have a happy and glorious immortality. The tree of life is frequently spoken of by the rabbins; and by it they generally mean the immortality of the soul and a final state of blessedness.

THE EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT SMYRNA

8. These things saith the first and the last. He who is eternal; from whom all things come, and to whom all things must return. Which was dead, for the redemption of the world; and is alive to die no more forever, His glorified humanity being enthroned at the Father's right hand.

9. I know thy works. As He had spoken to the preceding church, so He speaks to this: I know all that you have done, and all that you have suffered. The tribulation here mentioned must mean persecution, either from the Jews, the heathens, or from the heretics, who, because of their flesh-pampering doctrine, might have had many partisans at Smyrna. And poverty. Stripped probably of all their temporal possessions because of their attachment to the gospel. But thou art rich. Rich in faith, and heir of the kingdom of Christ. The blasphemy of them which say they are Jews. There were persons there who professed Judaism, and had a synagogue in the place, and professed to worship the true God; but they had no genuine religion, and they served the devil rather than God. They pretend to be the only peculiar covenant-people of God, when indeed they are the synagogue of Satan. For the synagogues of Satan to give themselves out to be the church or Israel of God is no less than blasphemy.

4. He foreknows the future trials of his people. (1) He forewarns them of future trials, v. 10. They had been impoverished by their tribulations before; now they must be imprisoned. (2) Christ forearms them against these approaching troubles, [1] By his counsel: Fear none of these things. This is not only a word of command, but of efficacy. [2] By showing them how their sufferings would be alleviated and limited. They should not be universal. It would be some of them, not all.

They were not to be perpetual, but for a short time: Ten days. It should be to try them, not to destroy them. [3] By proposing a glorious reward to their fidelity: Be thou faithful to death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He has said it that is able to do it; and he has undertaken that he will do it. The suitableness of it. A crown, to reward their poverty, their fidelity, and their conflict. A crown of life, to reward those who are faithful even unto death.

III. The conclusion of this message. A call to universal attention. It concerns all the inhabitants of the world to observe God's dealings with his own people. A gracious promise to the conquering Christian, v. 11. There is not only a first, but a second death. This second death is unspeakably worse than the first death. It is eternal death. From this death Christ will save all his faithful servants. The first death shall not hurt them, and the second death shall have no power over them.

Verses 12–17

I. The inscription of this message. To the angel of the church of Pergamos. The church of Pergamos was infested with men of corrupt minds, and Christ, being resolved to fight against them by the sword of his word, takes the title of him that hath the sharp sword with two edges. The word of God is a sword; it is a weapon both offensive and defensive. It is a sharp sword. No heart is so hard but it is able to wound it. It is a sword with two edges. There is the edge of the law against the transgressors of that dispensation, and the edge of the gospel against the despisers of that dispensation.

II. The contents of the epistle.

1. Christ takes notice of the trials and difficulties this church encountered, v. 13. Now that which added very much lustre to the good works of this church was the circumstance of the place where this church was planted, a place where Satan's seat was. His circuit is throughout the world, his seat is in some places that are infamous for wickedness, error, and cruelty.

2. He commends their steadfastness. "Thou holdest fast my name; thou art not ashamed of thy relation to me, but accountest it thine honour that my name is named on thee. That which has made thee thus faithful is the grace of faith: thou hast not denied, nor departed from the Christian faith." They had been steadfast even in those days wherein Antipas his faithful martyr was slain among them. He sealed his faith and fidelity with his blood in the place where Satan dwelt. They were not discouraged nor drawn away from their steadfastness.

at POLYCARP's martyrdom they joined the heathens in clamoring for his being cast to the lions; and when there was an obstacle to this, for his being burnt alive; and with their own hands they carried logs for the pile. synagogue of Satan—Only once is the term "synagogue" in the New Testament used of the Christian assembly, and that by the apostle who longest maintained the union of the Church and Jewish Synagogue. The Jews, who might have been "the Church of God," had now, by their opposition and unbelief, become the synagogue of Satan. So "the throne of Satan" (vs. 13) represents the heathens' opposition to Christianity; "the depths of Satan" (vs. 24), the opposition of heretics. 10. Fear none . . .—the oldest MSS. read, "Fear not those things. . . ." "The Captain of our salvation never keeps back what those who faithfully witness for Him may have to bear for His name's sake; never entices recruits by the promise they shall find all things easy and pleasant there" [TRENCH]. devil—"the accuser." He acted, through Jewish accusers against Christ and His people. The conflict of the latter was not with mere flesh and blood, but with the rulers of the darkness of this world. tried—with temptation by "the devil." The same event is often both a temptation from the devil, and a trial from God—God sifting and winnowing the man to separate his chaff from his wheat, the devil sifting him in the hope that nothing but chaff will be found in him [TRENCH]. ten days—not the ten persecutions from Nero to Diocletian. LYRA explains ten years on the year-day principle. The shortness of the duration of the persecution is evidently made the ground of consolation. unto death—so as even to endure death for My sake. crown of life—James 1:12; II Timothy 4:8, "crown of righteousness"; I Peter 5:4, "crown of glory." The crown is the garland, the mark of a conqueror, or of one rejoicing, or at a feast; but diadem is the mark of a KING. 11. shall not be hurt—Greek, "shall not by any means (or possibly) be hurt." the second death—"the lake of fire." "The death in life of the lost, as contrasted with the life in death of the saved" [TRENCH]. The phrase "the second death" is peculiar to the Apocalypse. What matter about the first death, which sooner or later must pass over us, if we escape the second death? POLYCARP'S noble words to his heathen judges who wished him to recant, are well known: "Fourscore and six years have I served the Lord, and He never wronged me, how then can I blaspheme my King and Saviour?" Smyrna's faithfulness is rewarded by its candlestick not having been removed out of its place (vs. 5); Christianity has never wholly left it; whence the Turks call it, "Infidel Smyrna." 12. TRENCH prefers writing Pergamus, or rather, Pergamum, on the river Caicus. It was capital of Attalus the Second's kingdom, which was bequeathed by him to the Romans, 133 B.C. Famous for its library, founded by Eumenes (197-159), and destroyed by Caliph Omar. Parchment, i.e., Pergamena charta, was here discovered for book purposes. Also famous for the magnificent temple of Esculapius, the healing god [TACITUS, Annals, 3. 63]. he which hath the sharp sword with two edges—appropriate to His address having a twofold bearing, a searching power so as to convict and convert some (vss. 13, 17), and to convict and condemn to punishment others (vss. 14-16, especially vs. 16; cf. also Note, ch. 1:16). 13. I know thy works—Two oldest MSS. omit this clause; one oldest MS. retains it. Satan's seat—rather as the Greek is translated all through Revelation, "throne." Satan, in impious mimicry of God's heavenly throne, sets up his earthly throne (ch. 4:2). Esculapius was worshipped there under the serpent form; and Satan, the old serpent, as the instigator (cf. vs. 10) of fanatical devotees of Esculapius, and, through them, of the supreme magistracy at Pergamos, persecuted one of the Lord's people (Antipas) even to death. Thus, this address is an anticipatory preface to ch. 12:1-17; Note, "throne . . . the dragon, Satan . . . war with her seed," 5:9, 17. even in those days—Two oldest MSS. omit "even"; two retain it. wherein—Two oldest MSS. omit this (then translate, "in the days of Antipas, My faithful witness," or "martyr"); two retain it. Two oldest MSS. read, "My witness, MY faithful one"; two read as English Version. Antipas is another form for Antipater. SIMEON METAPHRASTES has a palpably legendary story, unknown to the early Fathers, that Antipas, in Domitian's reign, was shut up in a red-hot brazen bull, and ended his life in thanksgivings and prayers. HENGSTENBERG makes the name, like other apocalyptic names, symbolical, meaning one standing out "against all" for Christ's sake. 14. few—in comparison of the many tokens of thy faithfulness. hold applied a sacred name to an unholy thing; and this is one meaning of the word blasphemy in this book.

10. Ten days. As the days in this book are what is commonly called "prophetic days," each answering to a year, the ten days of tribulation may denote "ten years of persecution"; and this was precisely the duration of the persecution under Diocletian, during which all the Asiatic churches were grievously afflicted. Others understand the expression as implying frequency and abundance, as it does in other parts of Scripture. Gen. xxxi. 7, 41: Thou hast "changed my wages ten times"; i.e., you have frequently changed my wages. Num. xiv. 22: "Those men . . . have tempted me now these ten times"; i.e., They have frequently and grievously tempted and sinned against Me. Neh. iv. 12: "The Jews which dwelt by them came . . . [and] said unto us ten times," i.e., They were frequently coming and informing us that our adversaries intended to attack us. Job xix. 3; "These ten times have ye reproached me"; i.e., you have loaded me with continual reproaches. Be thou faithful unto death. Be firm, hold fast the faith, confess Christ to the last and at all hazards, and you shall have a crown of life—you shall be crowned with life, have an eternal happy existence, though you suffer a temporal death. It is said of Polycarp that when brought before the judge, and commanded to abjure and blaspheme Christ, he firmly answered, "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me wrong. How then can I blaspheme my King, who hath saved me?" He was then adjudged to the flames, and suffered cheerfully for Christ, the Lord and Master.

11. He that overcometh. The "conqueror" who has stood firm in every trial and vanquished all his adveraries. Shall not be hurt of the second death. That is, an eternal separation from God and the glory of His power, as what we commonly mean by final perdition. This is another rabbinical mode of speech in very frequent use, and by it they understand the punishment of hell in a future life.

THE EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT PERGAMOS

12. Which hath the sharp sword. See on chap. i. 16. The "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," cuts every way; it convinces of sin, righteousness, and judgment; pierces between the joints and the marrow, divides between the soul and spirit, dissects the whole mind, and exhibits a regular anatomy of the soul. It not only reproves and exposes sin, but it slays the ungodly, pointing out the punishment they shall endure. Jesus has the sword with two edges, because He is the Saviour of sinners and the Judge of quick and dead.

13. Where Satan's seat is. "Where Satan has his throne"—where he reigns as king and is universally obeyed. It was a maxim among the Jews that, where the law of God was not studied, there Satan dwelt; but he was obliged to leave the place where a synagogue or academy was established. Thou holdest fast my name. Notwithstanding that the profession of Christianity exposed this church to the bitterest persecution, they held fast the name of Christian, which they had received from Jesus Christ, and did not deny His faith; for when brought to the trial they openly professed themselves disciples and followers of their Lord and Master. Antipas was my faithful martyr. Who this Antipas was we cannot tell. We only know that he was a Christian, and probably bore some office in the church, and became illustrious by his martyrdom in the cause of Christ.

14. I have a few things against thee. Their good deeds are first carefully sought out and

3. He reproves them for their sinful failures (v. 14). The filthiness of the spirit and the filthiness of the flesh often go together. To continue in communion with persons of corrupt principles and practices draws a guilt and blemish upon the whole society.

4. He calls them to repentance, v. 16. It is the duty of churches and communities as well as particular persons; those who sin together should repent together. When God comes to punish the corrupt members of a church, he rebukes that church itself for allowing such to continue in its communion, and some drops of the storm fall upon the whole society. The word of God will take hold of sinners, sooner or later, either for their conviction or their confusion.

III. There is the promise of great favour to those that overcome, v. 17. 1. The hidden manna, the influences and comforts of the Spirit of Christ, coming down from heaven into the soul, from time to time. This is hidden from the rest of the world, and it is laid up in Christ.

2. The white stone, with a new name engraven upon it. This white stone is absolution from the guilt of sin, alluding to the ancient custom of giving a white stone to those acquitted on trial and a black stone to those condemned. The new name is the name of adoption. None can read the evidence of a man's adoption but himself.

the doctrine of Balaam—"the teaching of Balaam," viz., that which he "taught Balak." Cf. "the counsel of Balaam," Numbers 31:16. "Balak" is dative in the Greek, whence BENGEL translates, "taught (the Moabites) for (i.e., to please) Balak." But though in Numbers it is not expressly said he taught Balak, yet there is nothing said inconsistent with his having done so; and JOSEPHUS, Antiquities, 4. 6. 6, says he did so. The dative is a Hebraism for the accusative. children—Greek, "sons of Israel." stumbling block—lit., that part of a trap on which the bait was laid, and which, when touched, caused the trap to close on its prey; then any entanglement to the foot [TRENCH]. eat things sacrificed unto idols—the act common to the Israelites of old, and the Nicolaitanes in John's day; he does not add what was peculiar to the Israelites, viz., that they sacrificed to idols. The temptation to eat idol meats was a peculiarly strong one to the Gentile converts. For not to do so involved almost a withdrawal from partaking of any social meal with the heathen around. For idol meats, after a part had been offered in sacrifice, were nearly sure to be on the heathen entertainer's table; so much so, that the Greek "to kill" (thuein) meant originally "to sacrifice." Hence arose the decree of the council of Jerusalem forbidding to eat such meats; subsequently some at Corinth ate unscrupulously and knowingly of such meats, on the ground that the idol is nothing; others needlessly fortured themselves with scruples, lest unknowingly they should eat of them when they got meat from the market or in a heathen friend's house. Paul handles the question in I Corinthians 8 and 10:25-33. fornication—often connected with idolatry. 15. thou—emphatic: "So THOU also hast," As Balak and the Moabites of old had Balaam and his followers literally, so hast thou also them that hold the same Balaamite or Nicolaitane doctrine spiritually or symbolically. Literal eating of idol meats and fornication in Pergamos were accompanied by spiritual idolatry and fornication.

doctrine—teaching (Note, vs. 6): viz., to tempt God's people to idolatry. which thing I hate—It is sin not to hate what God hates. The Ephesian Church (vs. 6) had this point of superiority to Pergamos. 16. The three oldest MSS. read, "Repent, therefore." Not only the Nicolaitanes, but the whole Church of Pergamos is called on to repent of not having hated the Nicolaitane teaching and practice. Contrast Paul, Acts 20:26. I will come—I am coming. fight against them—Greek, "war with them"; with the Nicolaitanes primarily; but including also chastisement of the whole Church at Pergamos: cf. "unto THEE." with the sword of my mouth—resumed from ch. 1:16, but with an allusion to the drawn sword with which the angel of the Lord confronted Balaam on his way to curse Israel: an earnest of the sword by which he and the seduced Israelites fell at last. The spritual Balaamites of John's day are to be smitten with the Lord's spiritual sword, the word or "rod of His mouth." 17. to eat—omitted in the three oldest MSS. the hidden manna—the heavenly food of Israel, in contrast to the idol meats (vs. 14). A pot of manna was laid up in the holy place "before the testimony." The allusion is here to this: probably also to the Lord's discourse (John 6:31-35). Translate, "the manna which is hidden." As the manna hidden in the sanctuary was by divine power preserved from corruption, so Christ in His incorruptible body has passed into the heavens, and is hidden there until the time of His appearing. Christ Himself is the manna "hidden" from the world, but revealed to the believer, so that he has already a foretaste of His preciousness. Cf. as to Christ's own hidden food on earth, John 4:32, 34, and Job 23:12. The full manifestation shall be at His coming. white stone . . . new name . . . no man knoweth saving he . . .—TRENCH'S explanation seems best. White is the color and livery of heaven. "New" implies something altogether renewed and heavenly. The white stone is a glistening diamond, the Urim borne by the high priest within the choschen or breastplate of judgment, with the twelve tribes' names on the twelve precious stones, next the heart. The word Urim means light, answering to the color white. None but the high priest knew the name written upon it, probably the incommunicable name of God, "Jehovah." The high priest consulted it in some divinely appointed way to get direction from God when needful. The "new name" is Christ's (cf. ch. 3:12, "I will write upon him My new name"): some new revelation of Himself which shall hereafter be imparted to His people, and which they alone are capable of receiving. The connection with the "hidden manna" will thus be clear, as none save the high priest had commended; what was wrong in them is touched with a gentle but effectual hand. The followers of Balaam, the Nicolaitans, and the Gnostics were probably all the same kind of persons, but see on v. 6. What the doctrine of Balaam was, see the notes on Num. xxiv; xxv; and xxxi. It appears that there were some then in the church at Pergamos who held eating things offered to idols in honor of those idols, and fornication, indifferent things. They associated with idolaters in the heathen temples and partook with them in their religious festivals.

15. The doctrine of the Nicolaitanes. See on v. 6.

16. Will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. See on v. 12. He now speaks for their edification and salvation; but if they do not repent, He will shortly declare those judgments which shall unavoidably fall upon them.

17. The hidden manna. It was a constant tradition of the Jews that the ark of the covenant, the tables of stone, Aaron's rod, the holy anointing oil, and the pot of manna were hidden by King Josiah when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans; and that these should all be restored in the days of the Messiah. This manna was hidden, but Christ promises to give it to him that is conqueror. Jesus is the Ark, the Oil, the Rod, the Testimony, and the Manna. He who is partaker of His grace has all those things in their spiritual meaning and perfection. And will give him a white stone. It is supposed that by the white stone is meant pardon or acquittance, and the evidence of it; and that there is an allusion here to the custom observed by judges in ancient times, who were accustomed to give their suffrages by white and black pebbles. Those who gave the former were for absolving the culprit; those who gave the latter were for his condemnation. Others suppose there is an allusion here to conquerors in the public games, who were not only conducted with great pomp into the city to which they belonged, but had a white stone given to them, with their name inscribed on it; which badge entitled them, during their whole life, to be maintained at the public expense. The most remarkable of these instruments were the tesserae hospitales, which were given as badges of friendship and alliance, and on which some device was engraved, as a testimony that a contract of friendship had been made between the parties. A small, oblong, square piece of wood, bone, stone, or ivory was taken and divided into two equal parts, on

I. The inscription. To the angel of the church of Thyatira.

By whom it was sent: by the Son of God, who is here described as having eyes like a flame of fire, and feet like as fine brass. His eyes are like a flame of fire, signifying his piercing insight into all persons and all things. His feet are like fine brass. As he judges with perfect wisdom, so he acts with perfect strength and steadiness.

II. The contents of this epistle.

1. The honourable character and commendation Christ gives of this church. Christ makes honourable mention of their charity: there is no religion where there is no charity. Their service. Their faith, which was the grace that actuated all the rest. Their patience. Their growing fruitfulness: their last works were better than the first. It should be the ambition and earnest desire of all Christians that their last works may be their best works.

2. A faithful reproof for what was amiss. These wicked seducers are compared to Jezebel, and called by her name. The sin of these seducers was that they attempted to draw the servants of God into fornication, and to offer sacrifices to idols.

They abused the patience of God to harden themselves in their wickedness. God gave them space for repentance, but they repented not.

access to the "manna hidden" in the sanctuary. Believers, as spiritual priests unto God, shall enjoy the heavenly antitypes to the hidden manna and the Urim stone. receiveth it—viz., "the stone"; not "the new name"; see above. The "name that no man knew but Christ Himself," He shall hereafter reveal to His people. 18. Thyatira—in Lydia, south of Pergamos. Lydia, the purple-seller of this city, having been converted at Philippi, a Macedonian city (with which Thyatira, as being a Macedonian colony, had naturally much intercourse), was probably the instrument of first carrying the Gospel to her native town. John follows the geographical order here, for Thyatira lay a little to the left of the road from Pergamos to Sardis (STRABO, 13:4). Son of God . . . eyes like . . . fire . . . feet . . . like fine brass—or "glowing brass" (Note, ch. 1:14, 15, whence this description is resumed). Again His attributes accord with His address. The title "Son of God," is from Psalm 2:7, 9, which is referred to in vs. 27. The attribute, "eyes like a flame . . ." answers to vs. 23, "I am He which searcheth the reins and hearts." The attribute, "feet like . . . brass," answers to vs. 27, "as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers," He treading them to pieces with His strong feet. 19. The oldest MSS. transpose the English Version order, and read, "faith and service." The four are subordinate to "thy works"; thus, "I know thy works, even the love and the faith (these two forming one pair, as 'faith works by love,' Gal. 5:6), and the service (ministration to the suffering members of the Church, and to all in spiritual or temporal need), and the endurance of (i.e., shown by) thee" (this pronoun belongs to all four). As love is inward, so service is its outward manifestation. Similarly, faith and persevering edurance, or "patient continuance (the same Greek as here, Rom. 2:7) in well-doing," are connected. and thy works; and the last—Omit the second "and," with the three oldest MSS. and the ancient versions; translate, "And (I know) thy works which are last (to be) more in number than the first"; realizing I Thessalonians 4:1; the converse of Matthew 12:45; II Peter 2:20. Instead of retrograding from "the first works" and "first love," as Ephesus, Thyatira's last works exceeded her first (vss. 4, 5). 20. a few things—omitted in the three oldest MSS. Translate then, "I have against thee that. . . ." sufferest—The three oldest MSS. read, "lettest alone." that woman—Two oldest MSS. read, "THY wife"; two omit it. Vulgate and most ancient versions read as English Version. The symbolical Jezebel was to the Church of Thyatira what Jezebel, Ahab's "wife," was to him. Some self-styled prophetess (or as the feminine in Hebrew is often used collectively to express a multitude, a set of false prophets), as closely attached to the Church of Thyatira as a wife is to a husband, and as powerfully influencing for evil that Church as Jezebel did Ahab. Wholly given to Baal-worship, like Eth-baal, whose name expresses his idolatry, she, with her strong will, seduced the weak Ahab and Israel beyond the calf-worship (which was a worship of the true God under the cherub-ox form, i.e., a violation of the second commandment) to that of Baal (a violation of the first commandment also). She seems to have been herself a priestess and prophetess of Baal. Cf. II Kings 9:22, 30, "whoredoms of . . . Jezebel and her witchcrafts" (impurity was part of the worship of the Phœnician Astarte, or Venus). Her spiritual counterpart at Thyatira lured God's "servants" by pretended utterances of inspiration to the same libertinism, fornication, and eating of idol meats, as the Balaamites and Nicolaitanes (vss. 6, 14, 15). By a false spiritualism these seducers led their victims into the grossest carnality, as though things done in the flesh were outside the true man, and were, therefore, indifferent. "The deeper the Church penetrated into heathenism, the more she herself became heathenish; this prepares us for the expressions 'harlot' and 'Babylon,' applied to her afterwards" [AUBERLEN]. to teach and to seduce—The three oldest MSS. read, "and she teaches and seduces," or "deceives." 21. space—Greek, "time." of her fornication . . . she repented not—The three oldest MSS. read, "and she willeth not to repent of (lit., 'out of', i.e., so as to come out of) her fornication." Here there is a transition from literal to spiritual fornication, as appears from vs. 22. The idea arose from Jehovah's covenant relation to the Old Testament Church being regarded as a marriage, any transgression against which was, therefore, harlotry, fornication, or adultery. 22. Behold—calling attention to her awful doom to come. I will—Greek present, "I cast her." a bed—The place of her sin shall be the place of her punishment. The bed of her sin shall be her bed of which each of the parties wrote his own name, and then interchanged it with the other. This was carefully preserved; and by producing this when they travelled, it gave a mutual claim to the bearers of kind reception and hospitable entertainment at each other's houses. The tessera taken in this sense seems to have been a kind of tally, and the two parts were compared together to ascertain the truth. Now it is very probable that John may allude to this, for on this mode of interpretation every part of the verse is consistent. The word does not necessarily signify a stone of any kind, but a suffrage, sentence, decisive vote; and in this place seems answerable to the tessera. The names of the contracting persons, or some device, were written on the tessera, which commemorated the friendly contract; and as the parts were interchanged, none could know that name or device, or the reason of the contract, but he who received it. This, when produced, gave the bearer a right to the offices of hospitality; he was accommodated with food, lodging, as far as these were necessary; and to this the eating of the hidden manna may refer.

THE EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT THYATIRA

19. I know thy works. And of these he first sets forth their charity, their "love" to God and each other, and particularly to the poor and distressed; and hence followed their faith, their "fidelity," to the grace they had received; and service, "ministration"; properly pious and benevolent service to widows, orphans, and the poor in general. And thy patience. Your "perseverance" under afflictions and persecutions, and your continuance in well-doing. I put faith before service according to the general consent of the best MSS. and versions. Thy works. The continued labor of love and thorough obedience. The last to be more than the first. They not only retained what they had received at first, but grew in grace, and in the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ. This is a rare thing in most Christian churches; they generally lose the power of religion and rest in the forms of worship, and it requires a powerful revival to bring them to such a state that their last works shall be more than their first.

20. That woman Jezebel. There is an allusion here to the history of Ahab and Jezebel, as given in 2 Kings ix—x; and although we do not know who this Jezebel was, yet from the allusion we may take it for granted she was a woman of power and influence in Thyatira, who corrupted the true religion and harassed the followers of God in that city, as Jezebel did in Israel. Instead of that woman Jezebel, many excellent MSS., and almost all the ancient versions, read "thy wife Jezebel"; which intimates, indeed asserts, that this bad woman was the wife of the bishop of the church, and his criminality in suffering her was therefore the greater. This reading Griesbach has received into the text.

21. I gave her space to repent. It is worthy of remark that the Gnostics called their doctrine "the depths of God" and "the depths of Bythos," intimating that they contained the most profound secrets of divine wisdom. Christ here calls them the "depths of Satan," being masterpieces of his subtlety. Perhaps they thought them to be of God, while all the time they were deceived by the devil.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. The punishment of this seducer, v. 22, 23. I will cast her into a bed, into a bed of pain, not of pleasure. I will kill her children with death; that is, the second death.

4. The design of Christ in the destruction of these wicked seducers, was the instruction of others. God is known by the judgments that he executes.

5. The encouragement given to those who keep themselves pure and undefiled, v. 24. (1) What these seducers called their doctrines—depths, profound mysteries. (2) What Christ called them—depths of Satan, Satanical delusions and devices.

(3) How tender Christ is of his faithful servants, v. 24, 25. "I only require your attention to what you have received." If they hold fast faith and a good conscience till he come, all the difficulty and danger will be over.

III. The conclusion of this message, v. 26–29. 1. The promise of an ample reward to the persevering victorious believer: Very great power and dominion over the rest of the world: Power over the nations.

sickness and anguish. Perhaps a pestilence was about to be sent. Or the bed of the grave, and of the hell beyond, where the worm dieth not. them that commit adultery with her—spiritually; including both the eating of idol meats and fornication. "With her," in the Greek, implies participation with her in her adulteries, viz., by suffering her (vs. 20), or letting her alone, and so virtually encouraging her. except they repent—Greek aorist, "repent" at once; shall have repented by the time limited in My purpose. their deeds—Two of the oldest MSS. and most ancient versions read "her." Thus, God's true servants, who by connivance, are incurring the guilt of her deeds, are distinguished from her. One oldest MS., ANDREAS, and CYPRIAN, support "their." 23. her children—(Isa. 57:3; Ezek. 23: 45, 47). Her proper adherents; not those who suffer her, but those who are begotten of her. A distinct class from the last in vs. 22 (cf. Note there), whose sin was less direct, being that only of connivance. kill . . . with death—Cf. the disaster that overtook the literal Jezebel's votaries of Baal, and Ahab's sons, I Kings 18:40; II Kings 10:6, 7, 24, 25. Kill with death is a Hebraism for slay with most sure and awful death; so "dying thou shalt die" (Gen. 2:17). Not "die the common death of men" (Num. 16:29). all the churches shall know—implying that these addresses are designed for the catholic Church of all ages and places. So palpably shall God's hand be seen in the judgment on Thyatira, that the whole Church shall recognize it as God's doing. I am he—the "I" is strongly emphatical: "that it is I am He who. . . ." searcheth . . . hearts—God's peculiar attribute is given to Christ. The "reins" are the seat of the desires; the "heart," that of the thoughts. The Greek for "searcheth" expresses an accurate following up of all tracks and windings. unto every one of you—lit., "unto you, to each." according to your works—to be judged not according to the mere act as it appears to man, but with reference to the motive, faith and love being the only motives which God recognizes as sound. 24. you . . . and . . . the rest—The three oldest MSS. omit "and"; translate then, "Unto you, the rest." as many as have not—not only do not hold, but are free from contact with. and which—The oldest MSS. omit "and"; translate, "whosoever." the depths—These false prophets boasted peculiarly of their knowledge of mysteries and the deep things of God; pretensions subsequently expressed by their arrogant title, Gnostics ("full of knowledge"). The Spirit here declares their so-called "depths," (viz., of knowledge of divine things) to be really "depths of Satan"; just as in vs. 9, He says, instead of "the synagogue of God," "the synagogue of Satan." I will put—Two oldest MSS. have "I put," or "cast." One oldest MS. reads as English Version. none other burden—save abstinence from, and protestation against, these abominations; no "depths" beyond your reach, such as they teach, no new doctrine, but the old faith and rule of practice once for all delivered to the saints. 25. that which ye have already—(Jude 3, end). hold fast—do not let go from your grasp, however false teachers may wish to wrest it from you. till I come—when your conflict with evil will be at an end. The Greek implies uncertainty as to when He shall come. 26. And—implying the close connection of the promise to the conqueror that follows, with the preceding exhortation, vs. 25. and keepeth—Greek, "and he that keepeth." Cf. the same word in the passage already alluded to by the Lord, Acts 15:28, 29, end. my works—in contrast to "her (English Version, 'their') works" (vs. 22). The works which I command and which are the fruit of My Spirit. unto the end—(Matt. 24:13). The image is perhaps from the race, wherein it is not enough to enter the lists, but the runner must persevere to the end. give power—Greek, authority." over the nations—at Christ's coming the saints shall possess the kingdom "under the whole heaven"; therefore over this earth; cf. Luke 19:17, "have thou authority [the same word as here] over ten cities." 27. From Psalm 2:8, 9. rule—lit., "rule as a shepherd." In Psalm 2:9 it is, "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron." The LXX, pointing the Hebrew word differently, read as Revelation here. The English Version of Psalm 2:9 is doubtless right, as the parallel word, "dash in pieces," proves. But the Spirit in this case sanctions the additional thought as true, that the Lord shall mingle mercy to some, with judgment on others; beginning by destroying His Antichristian foes, He shall reign in love over the rest.

As severity here is the primary thought, "rule as a shepherd" seems to me to be used thus: He who would have shepherded them with a pastoral

J. A. SEISS:

The church in Thyatira had some of the same excellencies as the church in Pergamos, but conjoined with even worse defects. It was active in services and charities, patient in reliance upon God's promises, and increasingly vigorous in its endeavors; but it was lacking in proper zeal for the maintenance of godly discipline and doctrine, and was so indulgent toward errors and errorists that falsehood and idolatry permeated, overlaid and modified the whole character of the church, obscuring the faith, deceiving the saints, and setting up in its very midst the infamous school of Satan himself. With all that is said commendatory of this church, the idea of effeminacy connects with its whole history and character. The first Christian in Thyatira was a woman. The name, Thyatira, some take as equivalent to thygatira, a daughter. We get the idea of feminine oppression. The false prophets who first enticed the members of this church into apostasy were women. And the great fault which Christ finds with these Christians is their toleration of the false pretences, the miserable domination, and the abominable doings, of one whom He designates as "that woman Jezebel," who, like her namesake of old, seems to have borne down what should have been the governing will, set aside the true prophets of God with falsities, and entirely taken possession of the church for her own impurities. It was a church with much activity of faith and love, but lying in the embraces of an adulteress, and, for the most part, completely in her power.—The Apocalypse

25. That which ye have—that is, the pure doctrine of the gospel; hold fast till I come—till I come to execute the judgments which I have threatened.

26. Power over the nations. Every witness of Christ has power to confute and confound all the false doctrines and maxims of the nations of the world, for Christianity shall at last rule over all; the kingdom of Christ will come, and the kingdom of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of His Christ.

MATTHEW HENRY

Knowledge and wisdom, suitable to such power and dominion: I will give him the morning-star. Christ is the morning-star. He brings day with him into the soul, the light of grace and of glory. 2. This epistle ends with the usual demand of attention.

I. The preface. To the angel of the church of Sardis, said to have been the first city in that part of the world that was converted by the preaching of John; and, some say, the first that revolted from Christianity. By whom this message was sent—the Lord Jesus, that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars. (1) He hath the seven spirits, that is, the Holy Spirit with his various powers. This epistle being sent to a languishing ministry and church, they are very fitly put in mind that Christ has the seven spirits, the Spirit without measure and in perfection, to whom they may apply themselves for the reviving of his work among them. (2) He hath the seven stars, the angels of the churches. The Holy Spirit usually works by the ministry, and the ministry will be of no efficacy without the Spirit; the same divine hand holds them both.

II. The body of this epistle. In this (and in the epistle to Laodicea) he begins,

1. With a reproof, and a very severe one. Hypocrisy, and a lamentable decay in religion, are the sins charged upon this church. This church had gained a great reputation; it had a name for a flourishing church. We read not of any unhappy divisions among themselves. Everything appeared well, as to what falls under the observation of men. This church was not really what it was reputed to be. There was a form of godliness, but not the power, a name to live, but not a principle of life. What little life was yet left among them was expiring, ready to die.

2. Our Lord proceeds to give this degenerate church the best advice, v. 2. (1) He advises them to be upon their watch. Whenever we are off our watch, we lose ground, and therefore must return to our watchfulness against sin, and Satan. (2) To strengthen the things that remain, and that are ready to die. Some understand this of persons. It is a difficult thing to keep up to the life and power of godliness ourselves, when we see a universal deadness and declension prevailing round about us. Or it may be understood of practices: I have not found thy works perfect before God; there is something wanting in them; there is the shell, but not the kernel. The inward thing is wanting, thy works are hollow and empty. When the spirit is wanting the form cannot long subsist. (3) To recollect themselves (v. 3); to remember what they had received and heard, how welcome the gospel and the grace of God were to them when they first received them. (4) To hold fast what they had received, that they might not lose all and repent.

3. Christ enforces his counsel with a dreadful threatening, v. 3. (1) When Christ leaves a people as to his gracious presence, he comes to them in judgment. (2) His judicial approach to a dead declining people will be surprising; their deadness will keep them in security.

rod, shall, because of their hardened unbelief, shepherd them with a rod of iron. shall they be broken—So one oldest MS., Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic Versions read. But two oldest MSS, read, "as the vessels of a potter are broken to shivers." A potter's vessel dashed to pieces, because of its failing to answer the design of the maker, is the image to depict God's sovereign power to give reprobates to destruction, not by caprice, but in the exercise of His righteous judgment. even as I—"as I also have received of (from) My Father," viz., in Psalm 2:7-9. Jesus had refused to receive the kingdom without the cross at Satan's hands; He would receive it from none but the Father, who had appointed the cross as the path to the crown. As the Father has given the authority to Me over the heathen and uttermost parts of the earth, so I impart a share of it to My victorious disciple. 28. the morning star—i.e., I will give unto him Myself, who am "the morning star" (ch. 22:16); so that reflecting My perfect brightness, he shall shine like Me, the morning star, and share My kingly glory (of which a star is the symbol, Num. 21:17; Matt. 2:2).

Vss. 1-22. THE EPISTLES TO SARDIS, PHILADELPHIA, AND LAODICEA. 1. Sardis—the ancient capital of Lydia, the kingdom of wealthy Crœsus, on the river Pactolus. The address to this Church is full of rebuke. It does not seem to have been in vain; for Melito, bishop of Sardis in the second century, was eminent for piety and learning. he that hath the seven Spirits of God—i.e., He who hath all the fulness of the Spirit (ch. 1:4; 4:5; 5:6, with which cf. Zech. 3:9; 4:10, proving His Godhead). This attribute implies His infinite power by the Spirit to convict of sin and of a hollow profession. and the seven stars—(ch. 1:16, 20). His having the seven stars, or presiding ministers, flows, as a consequence, from His having the seven Spirits, or the fulness of the Holy Spirit. The human ministry is the fruit of Christ's sending down the gifts of the Spirit. Stars imply brilliancy and glory; the fulness of the Spirit, and the fulness of brilliant light in Him, form a designed contrast to the formality which He reproves. name . . . livest . . . dead—(I Tim. 5:6; II Tim. 3:5 Titus 1:16; cf. Eph. 2:1, 5; 5:14). "A name," i.e., a reputation. Sardis was famed among the churches for spiritual vitality; yet the Heart-searcher, who seeth not as man seeth, pronounces her dead; how great searchings of heart should her case create among even the best of us! Laodicea deceived herself as to her true state (vs. 17), but it is not written that she had a high name among the other churches, as Sardis had. 2. Be—Greek. "Become," what thou art not, "watchful," or "wakeful," lit., "waking." the things which remain—Strengthen those thy remaining few graces, which, in thy spiritual deadly slumber, are not yet quite extinct [ALFORD]. are—The two oldest MSS. read, "were ready," lit., "were about to die," viz., at the time when you "strengthen" them. This implies that "thou art dead," vs. 1, is to be taken with limitation; for those must have some life who are told to strengthen the things that remain. perfect—lit., "filled up in full complement"; Translate, "complete." Weighed in the balance of Him who requires living faith as the motive of works, and found wanting. before God—Greek, in the sight of God." The three oldest MSS., Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic, read, "before (in the sight of) MY God"; Christ's judgment is God the Father's judgment. 3. how thou hast received—(Col. 2:6; I Thess. 4:1; I Tim. 6:20). What Sardis is to "remember" is, not how joyfully she had received originally the Gospel message, but how the precious deposit was committed to her originally, so that she could not say, she had not "received and heard" it. The Greek is not aorist (as in ch. 2:4, as to Ephesus, "Thou didst leave thy first love"), but "thou hast received" (perfect), and still hast the permanent deposit of doctrine committed to thee. The word "keep" (so the Greek is for English Version, "hold fast") which follows, accords with this sense. "Keep" or observe the commandment which thou hast received and didst hear. heard—Greek aorist, "didst hear," viz., when the Gospel doctrine was committed to thee.

If therefore—seeing thou art so warned, if, nevertheless. . . . come on thee as a thief—in special judgment on thee as a Church, with the same stealthiness and as unexpectedly as shall be My visible second coming. As the thief gives no notice of his approach. Christ applies the language which

27. He shall rule them with a rod of iron. He shall restrain vice by the strictest administration of justice; and those who finally despise the word and rebel shall be broken and destroyed, so as never more to be able to make head against the truth.

CHAPTER 3

EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT SARDIS

1. The seven Spirits of God. See the note on chap. i. 4.

Thou hast a name that thou livest. You have the reputation of Christians, and consequently of being alive to God, through the quickening influence of the divine Spirit; but art dead—you have not the life of God in your souls; you have not walked consistently and steadily before God, and His Spirit has been grieved with you, and He has withdrawn much of His light and power.

2. Be watchful. You have lost ground by carelessness and inattention. Awake, and keep awake! Strengthen the things which remain. The convictions and good desires, with any measure of the fear of God and of a tender conscience, which, although still subsisting, are about to perish, because the Holy Spirit, who is the Author of them, being repeatedly grieved, is about finally to depart.

Thy works perfect. "Filled up." They performed duties of all kinds, but no duty completely. They were constantly beginning, but never brought anything to a proper end. Their resolutions were languid, their strength feeble, and their light dim. They probably maintained their reputation before men, but their works were not perfect before God.

3. Remember. Enter into a serious consideration of your state. How thou hast received. With what joy, zeal, and gladness you heard the gospel of Christ when first preached to you.

Hold fast. Those good desires and heavenly influences which still remain. And repent. Be humbled before God.

I will come on thee as a thief. As the thief comes when he is not expected.

MATTHEW HENRY

4. Our blessed Lord does not leave this sinful people without some comfort and encouragement (v. 4). He makes honourable mention of the faithful remnant in Sardis, though but small. God takes notice of the smallest number of those who abide with him; and the fewer they are the more precious in his sight.

He makes a very gracious promise to them. They shall walk with Christ, and what delightful converse will there be between Christ and them when they thus walk together! Those who walk with Christ shall walk with Christ in the white robes of honour and glory in the other world.

III. The conclusion of this epistle.

1. A great reward promised to the conquering Christian (v. 5). The purity of grace shall be rewarded with the perfect purity of glory. Holiness, when perfected, shall be its own reward; glory is the perfection of grace.

To this is added another promise. Christ has his book of life. Christ will not blot the names of his chosen and faithful ones out of this book of life. The names of those that overcome shall never be blotted out. Christ will produce this book of life, and confess the names of the faithful who stand there, before God, and all the angels. How great will this honour and reward be!

2. The demand of universal attention finishes the message. Every word from God deserves attention from men.

Verses 7–13

I. The inscription.

1. For whom it was designed: The angel of the church of Philadelphia. It was its ancient name, on account of the love and kindness which the citizens had and showed to each other. This was an excellent spirit, and would render them an excellent church, as indeed they were, for here is no one fault found with this church.

2. By whom this letter was signed; even by the same Jesus. You have his personal character: He that is holy and he that is true; holy in his nature, and therefore he cannot but be true to his word.

in its fullest sense describes His second coming, to describe His coming in special judgments on churches and states (as Jerusalem, Matt. 24) these special judgments being anticipatory earnests of that great last coming. 4. The three oldest MSS. prefix "but," or "nevertheless" (notwithstanding thy spiritual deadness), and omit "even." names—persons named in the book of life (vs. 5) known by name by the Lord as His own. These had the reality corresponding to their name; not a mere name among men as living, while really dead (vs. 1). The gracious Lord does not overlook any exceptional cases of real saints in the midst of unreal professors. not defiled their garments—viz., the garments of their Christian profession, of which baptism is the initiatory seal, whence the candidates for baptism used in the ancient Church to be arrayed in white. Cf. also Ephesians 5:27, as to the spotlessness of the Church when she shall be presented to Christ; and ch. 19:8, as to the "fine linen, clean and white, the righteousness of the saints," in which it shall be granted to her to be arrayed; and "the wedding garment." Meanwhile she is not to sully her Christian profession with any defilement of flesh or spirit, but to "keep her garments." For no defilement shall enter the heavenly city. they shall walk with me in white—The promised reward accords with the character of those to be rewarded: keeping their garments undefiled and white through the blood of the Lamb now, they shall walk with Him in while hereafter. are worthy—with the worthiness (not their own, but that) which Christ has put on them (ch. 7:14). Ezekiel 16:14, "perfect through MY comeliness which I had put upon thee." Grace is glory in the bud. "The worthiness here denotes a congruity between the saint's state of grace on earth, and that of glory, which the Lord has appointed for them, about to be estimated by the law itself of grace" [VITRINGA]. Contrast Acts 13:46. 5. white—not a dull white, but glittering, dazzling white [GROTIUS]. Cf. Matthew 13:43. The body transfigured into the likeness of Christ's body, and emitting beams of light reflected from Him, is probably the "white raiment" promised here. the same—Greek, "THIS man"; he and he alone. So one oldest MS. reads. But two oldest MSS., and most of the ancient versions, shall THUS be clothed. . . ." raiment—Greek, "garments." "He that overcometh" shall receive the same reward as they who "have not defiled their garments" (vs. 4); therefore the two are identical. I will not—Greek, "I will not by any means." blot out . . . name out of . . . book of life—of the heavenly city. A register was kept in ancient cities of their citizens: the names of the dead were of course erased. So those who have a name that they live and are dead (vs. 1), are blotted out of God's roll of the heavenly citizens and heirs of eternal life; . . . before—Greek, "in the presence of." Cf. the same promise of Christ's confessing before His Father those who confessed Him, Matthew 10:32, 33; Luke 12:8, 9. He omits "in heaven" after "My Father," because there is, now that He is in heaven, no contrast between the Father in heaven and the Son on earth. He now sets His seal from heaven upon many of His words uttered on earth [TRENCH].

6. (Cf. Note, ch. 2:7.) 7. Philadelphia—in Lydia, twenty-eight miles southeast of Sardis, built by Attalus Philadelphus, king of Pergamos, who died A.D. 138. It was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius [TACITUS, Annals, 2. 47]. The connection of this Church with Jews there causes the address to it to have an Old Testament coloring in the images employed. It and Smyrna alone of the seven receive unmixed praise. he that is holy—as in the Old Testament, "the Holy One of Israel." Thus Jesus and the God of the Old Testament are one. None but God is absolutely holy (Greek, hagios, separate from evil and perfectly hating it). In contrast to "the synagogue of Satan" (vs. 9). true—Greek, alethinos: "VERY God," as distinguished from the false gods and from all those who say that they are what they are not (vs. 9): real, genuine. Furthermore, He perfectly realizes all that is involved in the names, GOD, Light (John 1:9; I John 2:8), Bread (John 6:32), the Vine (John 15:1); as distinguished from all typical, partial, and imperfect realizations of the idea. His nature answers to His name (John 17:3; I Thess. 1:9). The Greek, alethes, on the other hand, is "truth-speaking," "truthloving" (John 3:33; Titus 1:2). he that hath the key of David—the antitype of Eliakim, to whom the "key," the emblem of authority "over the house of David," was transferred from Shebna, who was removed from the office of chamberlain or treasurer, as unworthy of it. Christ, the Heir of the throne of David, shall supplant all the less wor-

ADAM CLARKE

4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis. A few "persons," names being put for those who bore them. And as the members of the church were all enrolled, or their names entered in a book, when admitted into the church or when baptized, names are here put for the people themselves. Have not defiled their garments. Their souls. The Hebrews considered holiness as the garb of the soul, and evil actions as stains or spots on this garb.

They shall walk with me in white. They shall be raised to a state of eternal glory, and shall be forever with their Lord.

5. I will not blot out his name. This may be an allusion to the custom of registering the names of those who were admitted into the church in a book kept for that purpose. These are properly book[s] of life, as there those who were born unto God were registered. Or there may be allusions to the white raiment worn by the priests, and the erasing of the name of any priest out of the sacerdotal list who had either sinned or was found not to be of the seed of Aaron. "The great council of Israel sat and judged the priests. If in a priest any vice was found they stripped off his white garments and clothed him in black, in which he wrapped himself, went out, and departed. Him in whom no vice was found they clothed in white, and he went and took his part in the ministry among his brother priests." I will confess his name. I will acknowledge that this person is My true disciple and a member of My mystical body.

EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH AT PHILADELPHIA

7. He that is holy. In whom holiness essentially dwells, and from whom all holiness is derived. He that is true. He who is the Fountain of truth.

He that hath the key of David. See this metaphor explained, Matt. xvi. 19.

MATTHEW HENRY

The acts of his government. [1] He opens. He opens a door of opportunity to his churches; he opens a door of entrance, opens the heart; and he opens the door of admission into the church triumphant. [2] He shuts the door. When he pleases, he shuts the door of opportunity, and he shuts the door of heaven against the workers of iniquity. The way and manner in which he performs these acts is absolute sovereignty. When he works, none can hinder.

II. The subject-matter of this epistle.

1. Christ puts them in mind of what he had done for them, v. 8. I have set it open, and kept it open, though there be many adversaries. Wicked men envy the people of God their door of liberty, and would be glad to shut it against them. If we do not provoke Christ to shut this door against us, men cannot do it.

2. This church is commended, v. 8. In this there seems to be couched a gentle reproof: "Thou hast a little strength, a little grace." True grace, though weak, has the divine approbation; yet believers should not rest satisfied in a little, but should strive to grow in grace. True grace, though weak, will enable the Christian to keep the word of Christ, and not to deny his name.

3. The great favour God would bestow on this church, v. 9, 10.

(1) Christ would make this church's enemies subject to her. [1] Those enemies are described to be such as said they were Jews, but were really the synagogue of Satan. [2] Their subjection to the church is described: They shall worship at thy feet; shall be convinced that they have been in the wrong. How shall this great change be wrought? By the power of God upon the hearts of his enemies, and by signal discoveries of his peculiar favour to his church: They shall know that I have loved thee. Christ can discover this his favour to his people in such a manner that their very enemies shall see it, and be forced to acknowledge it. This will, by the grace of Christ, soften the hearts of their enemies.

(2) Another instance of favour that Christ promises (v. 10). The gospel of Christ is the word of his patience. It is the fruit of the patience of God to a sinful world.

After a day of patience we must expect an hour of temptation. Those who keep the gospel in a time of peace shall be kept by Christ in an hour of temptation.

4. Christ calls the church to persevere. "Hold fast that which thou hast; thou hast been possessed of this excellent treasure, hold it fast. Behold, I come quickly. I am just coming to relieve them under the trial, to reward their fidelity, and to punish those who fall away. The persevering Christian shall win the prize from backsliding professors."

III. The conclusion of this epistle, v. 12, 13.

1. Our Saviour promises a glorious reward to the victorious believer in two things: (1) He shall be a monumental pillar in the temple of God; not a pillar to support the temple, but a monument of the grace of God, a monument that shall never be defaced nor removed, as many stately pillars erected in honour to the Roman emperors and generals have been.

thy stewards who have abused their trust in God's spiritual house, and "shall reign over the house of Jacob," literal and spiritual (Luke 1:32, 33), "for ever," "as a Son over His own house" (Heb. 3:2-6). It rests with Christ to open or shut the heavenly palace, deciding who is, and who is not, to be admitted: as He also opens, or shuts, the prison, having the keys of hell (the grave) and death (ch. 1:18). Though "the synagogue of Satan," false "Jews" (vs. 9) try to "shut" the "door" which I "set open before thee"; "no man can shut it" (vs. 8). shutteth—So Vulgate and Syriac Versions read. But the four oldest MSS. read, "shall shut"; so Coptic Version and ORIGEN. shutteth, and no man openeth—Two oldest MSS., B, ℵ Coptic Version, and ORIGEN read, "shall open." Two oldest MSS., A, C. and Vulgate Version support English Version reading. 8. I have set—Greek, "given": it is My gracious gift to thee. open door for evangelization; a door of spiritual usefulness. The opening of a door by Him to the Philadelphian Church accords with the previous assignation to Him of "the key of David." and—The three oldest MSS., A, B, C, and ORIGEN read, "which no man can shut." for—"because." a little—This gives the idea that Christ says, He sets before Philadelphia an open door because she has some little strength; whereas the sense rather is, He does so because she has "but little strength": being consciously weak herself, she is the fitter object for God's power to rest on [so AQUINAS], that so the Lord Christ may have all the glory. and hast kept—and so, the littleness of thy strength becoming the source of Almighty power to thee, as leading thee to rest wholly on My great power, thou hast kept My word.

9. I will make—Greek present, "I make," lit., "I give" (Note, vs. 8). The promise to Philadelphia is larger than that to Smyrna. To Smyrna the promise was that "the synagogue of Satan" should not prevail against the faithful in her: to Philadelphia, that she should even win over some of "the synagogue of Satan" to fall on their faces and confess God is in her of a truth. Translate, "(some) of the synagogue." For until Christ shall come, and all Israel then be saved, there is but "a remnant" being gathered out of the Jews "according to the election of grace." This is an instance of how Christ set before her an "open door," some of her greatest adversaries, the Jews, being brought to the obedience of the faith. Their worshipping before her feet expresses the convert's willingness to take the very lowest place in the Church, doing servile honor to those whom once they persecuted, rather than dwell with the ungodly. So the Philippian jailer before Paul. 10. patience—"endurance." "The word of My endurance" is My Gospel word, which teaches patient endurance in expectation of my coming (ch. 1:9). My endurance is the endurance which I require, and which I practice. Christ Himself now endures, patiently waiting until the usurper be cast out, and all "His enemies be made His footstool." So, too, His Church, for the joy before her of sharing His coming kingdom, endures patiently. Hence, in vs. 11, follows, "Behold, I come quickly." I also—The reward is in kind: "because thou didst keep. . . ." "I also (on My side) will keep thee. . . . from—Greek, "(so as to deliver thee) out of," not to exempt from temptation. the hour of temptation—the appointed season of affliction and temptation (so in Deut. 4:34 the plagues are called "the temptations of Egypt"), lit., "the temptation": the sore temptation which is coming on: the time of great tribulation before Christ's second coming. to try them that dwell upon the earth—those who are of earth, earthy (ch. 8:13). "Dwell" implies that their home is earth, not heaven. 11. Behold—omitted by the three oldest MSS. and most ancient versions. I come quickly—the great incentive to persevering faithfulness, and the consolation under present trials. that . . . which thou hast—"The word of my patience," or "endurance" (vs. 10), which He had just commended them for keeping, and which involved with it the attaining of the kingdom; this they would lose if they yielded to the temptation of exchanging consistency and suffering for compromise and ease. that no man take thy crown—which otherwise thou wouldst receive: that no tempter cause thee to lose it: not that the tempter would thus secure it for himself (Col. 2:18). 12. pillar in the temple—In one sense there shall be "no temple" in the heavenly city because there shall be no distinction of things into sacred and secular, for all things and persons shall be holy to the Lord. The city shall be all one great temple, in which the saints shall be not merely stones, as in the spiritual temple now on earth, but all eminent as pillars: immovably firm (unlike Philadelphia, the

Key is the emblem of authority and knowledge; the key of David is the regal right or authority of David. David could shut or open the kingdom of Israel to whom he pleased. The Kingdom of the gospel and the kingdom of Heaven are at the disposal of Christ. He can shut against whom He will; He can open to whom He pleases. If He shuts, no man can open; if He opens, no man can shut.

8. I have set before thee an open door. I have opened to you a door to proclaim and diffuse My word; and notwithstanding there are many adversaries to the spread of My gospel, yet none of them shall be able to prevent it. Thou hast a little strength. May refer either to the smallness of the numbers or to the littleness of their grace.

9. I will make them, show them to be, of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews, pretending thereby to be of the synagogue of God, and consequently His true and peculiar children. I will make them to come and worship. I will so dispose of matters in the course of My providence that the Jews shall be obliged to seek unto the Christians for toleration, support, and protection, which they shall be obliged to sue for in the most humble and abject manner. To know that I have loved thee. That the love which was formerly fixed on the Jews is now removed and transferred to the Gentiles.

10. The word of my patience. The doctrine which has exposed you to so much trouble and persecution, and required so much patience and magnanimity to bear up under its attendant trials.

The hour of temptation. A "time" of sore and peculiar trial which might have proved too much for their strength. He who is faithful to the grace of God is often hidden from trials and difficulties which fall without mitigation on those who have been unfaithful in His covenant. Many understand by the hour of temptation the persecution under Trajan, which was greater and more extensive than the preceding ones under Nero and Domitian. To try them. That is, such persecutions will be the means of trying and proving those who profess Christianity and showing who were sound and thorough Christians and who were not.

12. A pillar in the temple. There is probably an allusion here to the two pillars in the Temple of Jerusalem, called Jachin and Boaz, "stability and strength." The Church is the temple; Christ is the Foundation on which it is built; and His ministers are the pillars by which, under Him, it is adorned and supported.

On this there shall be an honourable inscription, as in those cases is usual. [1] The name of God, and the name of the city of God, the new Jerusalem, which came down from heaven.

[2] The new name of Christ. By this it will appear under whose banner this conquering believer had enlisted, and under whose influence he fought the good fight, and came off victorious.

2. The epistle is closed up with the demand of attention.

We now come to the last and worst of all the seven Asian churches. Here is nothing commended.

I. The inscription. To the angel of the church of Laodicea. The apostle Paul was very instrumental in planting the gospel in this city, from which he wrote a letter, as he mentions in the epistle to the Colossians. Here our Lord Jesus styles himself the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God. The Amen, one that is steady and unchangeable in all his purposes and promises.

The faithful and true witness, whose testimony of God to men ought to be received.

The beginning of the creation of God, either of the first creation, or of the second creation, the church; as it is in ch. i. 5.

II. The subject-matter.

1. The heavy charge drawn up against this church, v. 15. Lukewarmness or indifference in religion is the worst temper in the world. If religion is worth anything, it is worth everything. Here is no room for neutrality. Christ expects that men should declare themselves in earnest either for him or against him.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

city which was so often shaken by earthquakes, STRABO, 12 and 13), like the colossal pillars before Solomon's temple, Boaz (i.e., "In it is strength") and Jachin ("It shall be established"): only that those pillars were outside, these shall be within the temple. my God—(Note, ch. 2:7). go no more out—The Greek is stronger, never more at all. As the elect angels are beyond the possibility of falling, being now under (as the Schoolmen say) "the blessed necessity of goodness," so shall the saints be. upon him the name of my God—as belonging to God in a peculiar sense (ch. 7:3; 9:4; 14:1; and especially 23:4), therefore secure. As the name of Jehovah ("Holiness to the Lord") was on the golden plate on the high priest's forehead (Exod. 28:36-38); so the saints in their heavenly royal priesthood shall bear His name openly, as consecrated to Him.

name of the city of my God—as one of its citizens (ch. 21:2, 3, 10, which is briefly alluded to by anticipation here). The full description of the city forms the appropriate close of the book. The saint's citizenship is now hidden, but then it shall be manifested: he shall have the right to enter in through the gates into the city (ch. 22:14). This was the city which Abraham looked for. new—Greek, kaine. Not the old Jerusalem, once called "the holy city," but having forfeited the name. Greek, nea, would express that it had recently come into existence; but Greek, kaine, that which is new and different, superseding the worn-out old Jerusalem and its polity.

my new name—at present incommunicable and only known to God: to be hereafter revealed and made the believer's own in union with God in Christ. Christ's name written on him denotes he shall be wholly Christ's. New also relates to Christ, who shall assume a new character (answering to His "new name") entering with His saints on a kingdom—not that which He had with the Father before the worlds, but that earned by His humiliation as Son of man. 13. (Note, ch. 2:7.) 14. Laodiceans—The city was in the southwest of Phrygia, on the river Lycus, not far from Colosse, and lying between it and Philadelphia. It was destroyed by an earthquake, A.D. 62, and rebuilt by its wealthy citizens without the help of the state [TACITUS, Annals 14. 27]. This wealth (arising from the excellence of its wools) led to a self-satisfied, lukewarm state in spiritual things, as vs. 17 describes. See Note on Colossians 4:16, on the Epistle which is thought to have been written to the Laodicean Church by Paul. The Church in latter times was apparently flourishing; for one of the councils at which the canon of Scripture was determined was held in Laodicea in A.D. 361. Hardly a Christian is now to be found on or near its site. the Amen—(Isa. 65:16, Hebrew, "Bless Himself in the God of Amen . . . swear by the God of Amen," II Cor. 1:20). He who not only says, but is, the Truth. The title happily harmonizes with the address. His unchanging faithfulness as "the Amen" contrasts with Laodicea's wavering of purpose, "neither hot nor cold" (vs. 16). The angel of Laodicea has with some probability been conjectured to be Archippus, to whom, thirty years previously, Paul had already given a monition, as needing to be stirred up to diligence in his ministry. So the Apostolic Constitutions, 8. 46, name him as the first bishop of Laodicea: supposed to be the son of Philemon (Philemon 2). faithful and true witness—As "the Amen" expresses the unchangeable truth of His promises; so "the faithful true witness," the truth of His revelations as to the heavenly things which He has seen and testifies. "Faithful," i.e., trustworthy (II Tim. 2:11, 13). "True" is here (Greek, alethinos) not truth-speaking (Greek, alethes), but "perfectly realizing all that is comprehended in the name Witness" (I Tim. 6:13). beginning of the creation of God—not he whom God created first, but as in Colossians 1:15-18 (cf. Notes there), the Beginner of all creation, its originating instrument. All creation would not be represented adoring Him, if He were but one of themselves. His being the Creator is a strong guarantee for His faithfulness as "the Witness and Amen." 15. neither cold—The antithesis to "hot," lit., "boiling" ("fervent," Acts 18:25; Rom. 12:11; cf. Song of Sol. 8:6; Luke 24:32), requires that "cold" should here mean more than negatively cold; it is rather, positively icy cold: having never yet been warmed. The Laodiceans were in spritual things cold comparatively, but not cold as the world outside, and as those who had never belonged to the Church. The lukewarm state, if it be the transitional stage to a warmer, is a desirable state (for

I will write upon him the name of my God. As the high priest had on his breastplate the names of the twelve tribes engraved, and these constituted the city or church of God, Christ here promises that in place of them the twelve apostles, representing the Christian Church, shall be written, which is called the New Jerusalem, and which God has adopted in place of the twelve Jewish tribes.

My new name. The Saviour of all, the Light that lightens the Gentiles, the Christ, the Anointed One, the only Governor of His Church, and the Redeemer of all mankind. There is here an intimation that the Christian Church is to endure forever, and the Christian ministry to last as long as time endures: He shall go no more out forever.

EPISTLE TO THE CHURCH OF THE LAODICEANS

14. These things saith the Amen. That is, He who is true or faithful; from aman, "he was true"; immediately interpreted, the faithful and true witness.

The beginning of the creation of God. That is, the Head and Governor of all creatures, the King of the creation. See on Col. i. 15. By His titles here He prepares them for the humiliating and awful truths which He was about to declare, and the authority on which the declaration was founded.

15. Thou art neither cold nor hot. You are neither heathens nor Christians—neither good nor evil—neither led away by false doctrine nor thoroughly addicted to that which is true. In a word, they were listless and indifferent, and seemed to care little whether heathenism or Christianity prevailed. Though they felt little zeal either for the salvation of their own souls or that of others, yet they had such a general conviction of the truth and importance of Christianity that they could not readily give it up.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. A severe punishment threatened: I will spew thee out of my mouth. As lukewarm water turns the stomach, and provokes to a vomit, lukewarm professors turn the heart of Christ against them. He is sick of them, and cannot long bear them. They shall be rejected.

3. We have one cause of this indifference assigned, and that is self-conceitedness or self-delusion, v. 17. What a difference there was between the thoughts they had of themselves and the thoughts that Christ had of them. The high thoughts they had of themselves. Perhaps they were well provided for as to their bodies, and this made them overlook the necessities of their souls. Or they thought themselves well furnished in their souls. How careful should we be not to put the cheat upon our own souls! Doubtless there are many in hell that once thought themselves to be in the way to heaven. The mean thoughts that Christ had of them. They were poor, really poor, when they said and thought they were rich. Their souls were starving in the midst of their abundance. They were blind; they could not see their state, nor their way; they could not see into themselves; yet they thought they saw. They could not see Christ. They could not see God. They were naked. They were without clothing, had neither the garment of justification nor that of sanctification.

4. We have good counsel given by Christ to this sinful people, v. 18. Our Lord Jesus Christ continues to give good counsel to those who have cast his counsels behind their backs. These people were poor; Christ counsels them to buy of him gold tried in the fire, that they might be rich. He lets them know where they might have true riches and how they might have them. Where they might have them—from himself. How must they have this true gold from him? They must buy it. "Part with self-sufficiency, and come to Christ with your poverty and emptiness, that you may be filled with his hidden treasure." These people were naked; Christ tells them where they might have clothing. This they must receive from Christ; and they must only put off their filthy rags that they might put on the white raiment which he had provided for them.

They were blind; and he counsels them to buy of him eye-salve, that they might see, to give up their own wisdom and reason, and resign themselves to his word and Spirit, and their eyes shall be opened.

a little religion, if real, is better than none); but most fatal when, as here, an abiding condition, for it is mistaken for a safe state (vs. 17). This accounts for Christ's desiring that they were cold rather than lukewarm. For then there would not be the same "danger of mixed motive and disregarded principle" [ALFORD].

16. neither cold nor hot—So one oldest MS., B., and Vulgate read. But two oldest MSS., Syriac, and Coptic transpose thus, "hot nor cold." It is remarkable that the Greek adjectives are in the masculine, agreeing with the angel, not feminine, agreeing with the Church. The Lord addresses the angel as the embodiment and representative of the Church. The chief minister is answerable for his flock if he have not faithfully warned the members of it. I will—Greek, "I am about to," "I am ready to": I have it in my mind: implying graciously the possibility of the threat not being executed, if only they repent at once. His dealings towards them will depend on theirs towards Him. spue thee out of my mouth—reject with righteous loathing, as Canaan spued out its inhabitants for their abominations. Physicians used lukewarm water to cause vomiting. Cold and hot drinks were common at feasts, but never lukewarm. There were hot and cold springs near Laodicea. 17. Self-sufficiency is the fatal danger of a likewarm state (Note, vs. 15). thou sayest—virtually and mentally, if not in so many words. increased with goods—Greek, "have become enriched," implying self-praise in self-acquired riches. The Lord alludes to Hosea 12:8. The riches on which they prided themselves were spiritual riches; though, doubtless, their spiritual self-sufficiency ("I have need of nothing") was much fostered by their worldly wealth; as, on the other hand, poverty of spirit is fostered by poverty in respect to worldly riches. knowest not that thou—in particular above all others. The "THOU" in the Greek is emphatic. art wretched—Greek, "art the wretched one." miserable—So one oldest MSS. reads. But two oldest MSS. prefix "the." Translate, "the pitiable"; "the one especially to be pitied." How different Christ's estimate of men, from their own estimate of themselves, "I have need of nothing!" blind—whereas Laodicea boasted of a deeper than common insight into divine things. They were not absolutely blind, else eye-salve would have been of no avail to them; but short-sighted. 18. Gentle and loving irony. Take My advice, thou who fanciest thyself in need of nothing. Not only art thou not in need of nothing, but art in need of the commonest necessaries of existence.

"Buy" at the cost of thine own self-sufficiency (so Paul, Phil. 3:7, 8); and the giving up of all things, however dear to us, that would prevent our receiving Christ's salvation as a free gift, e.g., self and worldly desires. Cf. Isaiah 55:1, "Buy . . . without money and price." of me—the source of "unsearchable riches" (Eph. 3:8). Laodicea was a city of extensive money transactions [CICERO]. gold tried in . . .—lit., "fired (and fresh) from the fire," i.e., just fresh from the furnace which has proved its purity, and retaining its bright gloss. Sterling spiritual wealth, as contrasted with its counterfeit, in which Laodicea boasted itself. Having bought this gold she will be no longer poor (vs. 17). mayest be rich—Greek, ". . . enriched." white raiment—"garments." Laodicea's wools were famous. Christ offers infinitely whiter raiment. As "gold tried in the fire" expresses faith tested by fiery trials: so "white raiment," Christ's righteousness imputed to the believer in justification and imparted in sanctification. appear—Greek, "be manifested," viz., at the last day, when everyone without the wedding garment shall be discovered. To strip one, is in the East the image of putting to open shame. So also to clothe one with fine apparel is the image of doing him honor. Man can discover his shame, God alone can cover it, so that his nakedness shall not be manifested at last (Col. 3:10-14). Blessed is he whose sin is so covered. The hypocrite's shame may be manifested now; it must be so at last. anoint . . . with eye-salve—The oldest MSS. read, "(buy of Me) eye-salve (collyrium, a roll of ointment), to anoint thine eyes." Christ has for Laodicea an ointment far more precious than all the costly unguents of the East. The eye is here the conscience or inner light of the mind. According as it is sound and "single" (Greek, haplous, "simple"), or otherwise, the man sees aright spiritually, or does not. The Holy Spirit's unction, like the ancient eye-salve's, first smarts with conviction of sin, then heals. He opens our eyes first to ourselves in our wretchedness, then to the Saviour in His preciousness. 19. (Job 5:17; Prov. 3:

I would thou wert cold or hot. That, is, you should be decided; adopt some part or other, and be in earnest in your attachment to it. Epictetus, Ench., chap. 36: "Thou oughtest to be one kind of man, either a good man or a bad man."

16. Because thou art lukewarm. Irresolute and undecided. I will spue thee out of my mouth. He alludes here to the known effect of tepid water upon the stomach; it generally produces a nausea. I will cast you off.

17. I am rich. You suppose yourself to be in a safe state, perfectly sure of final salvation, because you have begun well and laid the right foundation. It was this most deceitful conviction that cut the nerves of their spiritual diligence; they rested in what they had already received, and seemed to think that once in grace must be still in grace. Thou art wretched. "Most wretched." Instead of being children of God, as they supposed, and infallible heirs of the Kingdom, they were, in the sight of God, in the condition of the most abject slaves. And miserable. Most deplorable, to be pitied by all men. And poor. Having no spiritual riches, no holiness of heart. Rich and poor are sometimes used by the rabbins to express the righteous and the wicked. And blind. The eyes of your understanding being darkened, so that you do not see your state. And naked. Without the image of God, not clothed with holiness and purity. A more deplorable state in spiritual things can scarcely be imagined than that of this church. And it is the true picture of many churches and of innumerable individuals.

18. White raiment. Holiness of heart and life.

Anoint thine eyes. Pray for, that you may receive, the enlightening influences of My Spirit, that you may be convinced of your true state, and see where your help lies.

MATTHEW HENRY

5. Great and gracious encouragement to this sinful people to take the admonition well that Christ had given them, v. 19, 20. "You may think I have given you hard words and severe reproofs; it is all out of love to your souls." Sinners ought to take the rebukes of God's word as tokens of his goodwill to their souls. Better are the frowns and wounds of a friend than the flattering smiles of an enemy

If they would comply with his admonitions, he was ready to make them good to their souls, v. 20. Christ is graciously pleased by his word and Spirit to come to the door of the heart of sinners. He finds this door shut against him; the heart of man is by nature shut up against Christ. When he finds the heart shut he does not immediately withdraw, but he waits to be gracious.

Those who open to him shall enjoy his presence. He will sup with them; he will accept of what is good in them; and he will bring the best part of the entertainment with him.

III. The conclusion of this epistle.

1. The promise made to the overcoming believer. It was possible that by the reproofs and counsels of Christ they might be inspired with fresh zeal and vigour, and might come off conquerors in their spiritual warfare. If they did so they should have a great reward, v. 21. Christ himself had met with his temptations and conflicts. He overcame them all, and was more than a conqueror. Those who are conformed to Christ in his trials and victories shall be conformed to him in his glory.

2. All is closed up with the general demand of attention (v. 22). Thus end the messages of Christ to the Asian churches.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

11, 12; Heb. 12:5, 6.) So in the case of Manasseh (II Chron 33:11-13). As many—All. I love—Greek, philo, the love of gratuitous affection, independent of any grounds for esteem in the object loved. But in the case of Philadelphia (vs. 9), "I have loved thee" (Greek, egapesa) with the love of esteem, founded on the judgment. Cf. Note in my English Gnomon of BENGEL, John 21:15-17. I rebuke—The "I" in the Greek stands first in the sentence emphatically. I in My dealings, so altogether unlike man's, in the case of all whom I love, rebuke. The Greek, elencho, is the same verb as in John 16:8, "(the Holy Ghost) will convince (rebuke unto conviction) the world of sin." chasten—"chastise." The Greek, paideu, which in classical Greek means to instruct, in the New Testament means to instruct by chastisement (Heb. 12:5, 6). be zealous—habitually. Present tense in the Greek, of a lifelong course of zeal. The opposite of "lukewarm." The Greek by alliteration marks this: Laodicea had not been "hot" (Greek, zestos), she is therefore urged to "be zealous" (Greek, zeleue): both are derived from the same verb, Greek, zeo, "to boil." repent—Greek aorist: of an act to be once for all done, and done at once. 20. stand—waiting in wonderful condescension and long-suffering. knock—(Song of Sol. 5:2). This is a further manifestation of His loving desire for the sinner's salvation. He who is Himself "the Door," and who bids us "knock" that it may be "opened unto" us, is first Himself to knock at the door of our hearts. If He did not knock first, we should never come to knock at His door. my voice—He appeals to the sinner not only with His hand (His providences) knocking, but with His voice (His word read or heard; or rather, His Spirit inwardly applying to man's spirit the lessons to be drawn from His providence and His word). man hear—for man is not compelled by irresistible force: Christ knocks, but does not break open the door, though the violent take heaven by the force of prayer (Matt. 11:12): whosoever does hear, does so not of himself, but by the drawings of God's grace (John 6:44): repentance is Christ's gift (Acts 5:31). I will come in to him—as I did to Zaccheus. sup with him, and he with me—Delightful reciprocity! Cf. "dwelleth in me, and I in Him," John 6:56. Whereas, ordinarily, the admitted guest sups with the admitter, here the divine guest becomes Himself the host, for He is the bread of life, and the Giver of the marriage feast. 21. sit with me in my throne—(Ch. 2:26, 27; 20:6; Matt. 19:28; 20:23; John 17:22, 24; II Tim. 2.12). The same whom Christ had just before threatened to spue out of His mouth, is now offered a seat with Him on His throne! "The highest place is within reach of the lowest; the faintest spark of grace may be fanned into the mightiest flame of love" [TRENCH]. even as I also—Two thrones are here mentioned: (1)His Father's, upon which He now sits, and has sat since His ascension, after His victory over death, sin, the world; upon this none can sit save God, and the God-man Christ Jesus, for it is the incommunicable prerogative of God alone; (2) the throne which shall be peculiarly His as the once humbled and then glorified Son of man, to be set up over the whole earth (heretofore usurped by Satan) at His coming again; in this the victorious saints shall share (I Cor. 6:2). The transfigured elect Church shall with Christ judge and reign over the nations in the flesh, and Israel the foremost of them; ministering blessings to them as angels were the Lord's mediators of blessing and administrators of His government in setting up His throne in Israel at Sinai.

ADAM CLARKE

19. As many as I love. So it was the love He still had to them that induced Him thus to reprehend and thus to counsel them.

Be zealous. Be in earnest to get your souls saved. They had no zeal; this was their bane. He now stirs them up to diligence in the use of the means of grace, and repentance for their past sins and remissness.

20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock. There are many sayings of this kind among the ancient rabbins; thus in Shir Hashirim Rabba, fol. 25, 1: "God said to the Israelites, My children, open to me one door of repentance, even so wide as the eye of a needle, and I will open to you doors through which calves and horned cattle may pass." In Sohar Levit. fol. 8, col. 32, it is said: "If a man conceal his sin, and do not open it before the holy King, although he ask mercy, yet the door of repentance shall not be opened to him. But if he open it before the holy blessed God, God spares him, and mercy prevails over wrath; and when he laments, although all the doors were shut, yet they shall be opened to him, and his prayer shall be heard." Christ stands, waits long, at the door of the sinner's heart; He knocks—uses judgments, mercies, reproofs, exhortations, to induce sinners to repent and turn to Him; He lifts up His voice—calls loudly by His Word, ministers, and Spirit. If any man hear. If the sinner will seriously consider his state and attend to the voice of his Lord. And open the door. This must be his own act, receiving power for this purpose from his offended Lord, who will not break open the door; He will make no forcible entry. I will come in to him. I will manifest myself to him, heal all his backslidings, pardon all his iniquities, and love him freely. Will sup with him. Hold communion with him, feed him with the bread of life.

21. To sit with me in my throne. In every case it is to him that overcometh, to the "conqueror," that the final promise is made. He that conquers not is not crowned; therefore every promise is here made to him that is faithful unto death. Here is a most remarkable expression: Jesus has conquered and is set down with the Father upon the Father's throne; he who conquers through Christ sits down with Christ upon His throne; but Christ's throne and the throne of the Father are the same; and it is on this same throne that those who are faithful unto death are finally to sit!

This is the worst of the seven churches, and yet the most eminent of all the promises are made to it, showing that the worst may repent, finally conquer, and attain even to the highest state of glory.

CHAPTER 4

Verses 1–8

We have here an account of a second vision with which the apostle John was favoured.

I. The preparation made for the apostle's having this vision.

1. A door was opened in heaven. We can know nothing of future events but what God is pleased to discover to us; they are within the veil, till God opens the door.

CHAPTER 4

VSS. 1-11. VISION OF GOD'S THRONE IN HEAVEN; THE FOUR AND TWENTY ELDERS; THE FOUR LIVING CREATURES. After this—Greek, "After these things," marking the opening of the next vision in the succession. Here is the transition from "the things which are" (ch. 1:19), the existing state of the seven churches, as a type of the Church in general, in John's time, to "the things which shall be hereafter," viz., in relation to the time when John wrote. I looked—rather as Greek, "I saw" in vision; not as English Version means, I directed my look that way. was—Omit, as not being in the Greek opened "standing open"; not as though John saw it in the act of being opened. Cf. Ezekiel 1:1; Matthew 3: 16; Acts 7:56; 10:11. But in those visions the heavens opened, disclosing the visions to those below on

1. A door was opened in heaven. This appears to have been a visible aperture in the sky over his head.

2. To prepare John for the vision, a trumpet was sounded, and he was called up into heaven, to have a sight there of the things which were to be hereafter.

3. To prepare for this vision, the apostle was in the Spirit. He was in a rapture. His spirit was possessed with the spirit of prophecy, and wholly under a divine influence.

II. The vision itself. 1. He saw a throne set in heaven, the seat of honour, and authority, and judgment. All earthly thrones are under the jurisdiction of this throne that is set in heaven. 2. He saw a glorious one upon the throne. There was one in it who filled it, and that was God. His countenance was like a jasper and a sardine-stone; he is not described by any human features, so as to be represented by an image, but only by his transcendent brightness.

3. He saw a rainbow about the throne, like unto an emerald, v. 3. The rainbow was the seal and token of the covenant of providence that God made with Noah. This rainbow looked like the emerald; the most prevailing colour was a pleasant green, to show the reviving and refreshing nature of the new covenant.

4. He saw four-and-twenty seats round about the throne, with four-and-twenty elders. They are clothed in white raiment, the righteousness of the saints; they had on their heads crowns of gold, signifying the honour and authority given them of God, and the glory they have with him.

5. He perceived lightnings and voices proceeding out of the throne. Thus he gave forth the law on mount Sinai; and the gospel has not less glory and authority than the law.

6. He saw seven lamps of fire burning before the throne (v. 5), the various gifts, graces, and operations of the Spirit of God.

7. He saw before the throne a sea of glass like unto crystal. In this all those must be washed that are admitted into the gracious presence of God.

earth. Whereas here, heaven, the temple of God, remains closed to those on earth, but John is transported in vision through an open door up into heaven, whence he can see things passing on earth or in heaven, according as the scenes of the several visions require. the first voice which I heard—the voice which I heard at first, viz., in ch. 1:10; the former voice. was as it were—Omit was, it not being in the Greek. "Behold" governs in sense both "a door . . ." and "the first voice. . . ." Come up hither—through the "open door." be—come to pass. hereafter—Greek, "after these things": after the present time (ch. 1:19). 2. And—omitted in the two oldest MSS., Vulgate, Syriac. I was . . . —Greek, "I became in the Spirit" (Note, ch. 1:10): I was completely rapt in vision into the heavenly world. was set—not was placed, but was situated, lit., "lay." one sat on the throne—the Eternal Father: the Creator (vs. 11): also cf. vs. 8 with ch. 1:4, where also the Father is designated, "which is, and was, and is to come." 3. was—omitted in the two oldest MSS., but supported by Vulgate and Coptic. to look upon—Greek, "in sight," or "appearance." jasper—From ch. 21:11, where it is called most precious, which the jasper was not, EBRARD infers it was a diamond. Ordinarily, the jasper is a stone of various wavy colors, somewhat transparent: in ch. 21:11 it represents watery crystalline brightness. The sardine, our cornelian, or else a fiery red. As the watery brightness represents God's holiness, so the fiery red His justice executing fiery wrath. The same union of white or watery brightness and fiery redness appears in ch. 1:14; 10:1; Ezekiel 1:4; 8:2; Daniel 7: 9. rainbow round about the throne—forming a complete circle (type of God's perfection and eternity: not a half circle as the earthly rainbow) surrounding the throne vertically. Its various colors, which combined form one pure solar ray, symbolize the varied aspects of God's providential dealings uniting in one harmonious whole. Here, however, the predominating color among the prismatic colors is green, the most refreshing of colors to look upon, and so symbolizing God's consolatory promises in Christ to His people amidst judgments on His foes.

4. seats—rather as the Greek is translated in this very verse, "thrones," of course lower and smaller than the grand central throne. So ch. 16:10, "the seat (rather throne) of the beasts," in hellish parody of God's throne. four and twenty elders—Greek, "the four and twenty (or as one oldest MS., 'twenty-four') elders": the well-known elders [ALFORD]. But TREGELLES translates, "Upon the twenty-four thrones (I saw: omitted in two oldest MSS.) elders sitting": which is more probable, as the twenty-four elders were not mentioned before, whereas the twenty-four thrones were. They are not angels, for they have white robes and crowns of victory, implying a conflict and endurance, "Thou hast redeemed us": they represent the Heads of the Old and New Testament churches respectively, the Twelve Patriarchs (cf. ch. 7:5-8, not in their personal, but in their representative character), and Twelve Apostles. So in ch. 15:3, "the song of Moses, and of the Lamb," the double constituents of the Church are implied, the Old Testament and the New Testament. 5. proceeded—Greek, "proceed." thunderings and voices —The two oldest MSS. transpose, "voices and thunderings." Cf. at the giving of the law on Sinai, Exodus 19:16. "The thunderings express God's threats against the ungodly: there are voices in the thunders (ch. 10:3), i.e., not only does He threaten generally, but also predicts special judgments" [GROTIUS]. seven lamps . . . seven Spirits —The Holy Spirit in His sevenfold operation, as the light-and-life Giver (cf. ch. 5:6, seven eyes . . . the seven Spirits of God; 1:4; 21:23 Ps. 119:105) and fiery purifier of the godly, and consumer of the ungodly (Matt. 3:11). 6. Two oldest MSS., A, B, Vulgate, Coptic, and Syriac read, "As it were a sea of glass." like . . . crystal—not imperfectly transparent as the ancient common glass, but like rock crystal.

But see the analogue in the temple, the molten sea before the sanctuary (Note, vs. 4, above). There is in this sea depth and transparency, but not the fluidity and instability of the natural sea (cf. ch. 21:1). It stands solid, calm, and clear, God's judgments are called "a great deep" (Ps. 36:6). In ch. 15:2 it is a "sea of glass mingled with fire." Thus there is symbolized here the purificatory baptism of water and the Spirit of all who are made "kings and priests unto God." In ch. 15:2 the baptism with the fire of trial is meant. Through both all the kingpriests have to pass in coming to God:

ADAM CLARKE

2. I was in the Spirit. Rapt up in an ecstasy.

3. And he that sat. There is here no description of the Divine Being, so as to point out any similitude, shape, or dimensions. The description rather aims to point out the surrounding glory and effulgence than the person of the almighty King.

4. Four and twenty elders. Perhaps this is in reference to the smaller Sanhedrin at Jerusalem, which was composed of twenty-three elders; or to the princes of the twenty-four courses of the Jewish priests which ministered at the Tabernacle and the Temple, at first appointed by David. Clothed in white raiment. The garments of the priests. On their heads crowns of gold. An emblem of their dignity.

5. Seven lamps of fire. Seven angels, the attendants and ministers of the supreme King. See chap. i. 4.

MATTHEW HENRY

8. He saw four animals, living creatures, between the throne and the circle of the elders (as seems most probable), standing between God and the people; these seem to signify the ministers of the gospel. The elders sit and are ministered unto; these stand and minister: they rest not night nor day.

Verses 8–11

We have considered the sights that the apostle saw in heaven: now let us observe the songs that he heard.

I. He heard the song of the four living creatures, which refers to the prophet Isaiah's vision, ch. vi. They adore one God, and one only, the Lord God Almighty. They adore three holies in this one God

II. He heard the adorations of the four-and-twenty elders, v. 10, 11.

1. The object of their worship: Him that sat on the throne, the eternal everliving God. There is but one God, and he alone, as God, is worshipped by the church on earth and in heaven.

2. The acts of adoration. They fell down before him that sat on the throne. They cast their crowns before the throne; they gave God the glory of the holiness wherewith he had crowned their souls on earth and the honour and happiness with which he crowns them in heaven. It is their glory to be glorifying God.

3. The words of adoration, v. 11. In this they tacitly acknowledge that God is exalted far above all blessing and praise. He was worthy to receive glory, but they were not worthy to praise.

4. We have the ground of their adoration. (1) He is the Creator of all things; and none but the Creator of all things should be adored; no made thing can be the object of religious worship. (2) He is the preserver of all things. All beings but God are dependent upon the will and power of God, and no dependent being must be set up as an object of religious worship. (3) He is the final cause of all things: For thy pleasure they are and were created. It was his will and pleasure to create all things.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

His judgments, which overwhelm the ungodly, they stand firmly upon, as on a solid sea of glass; able like Christ to walk on the sea, as though it were solid. round about the throne—one in the midst of each side of the throne. four beasts—The Greek for "beasts," ch. 13:1, 11, is different, therion, the symbol for the carnal man by opposition to God losing his true glory, as lord, under Him, of the lower creatures, and degraded to the level of the beast. Here it is zoon, "living creatures"; not beast. 7. calf—"a steer"—[ALFORD]. The LXX often uses the Greek term here for an ox (Exod. 22:1; 29:10, etc.). as a man—The oldest MSS. have "as of a man." 8. about him—Greek, "round about him." ALFORD connects this with the following sentence: "All round and within (their wings) they are (so two oldest MSS., A, B, and Vulgate read) full of eyes." John's object is to show that the six wings in each did not interfere with that which he had before declared, viz., that they were "full of eyes before and behind." The eyes were round the outside of each wing, and up the inside of each when half expanded, and of the part of body in that inward recess. rest not—lit., "have no rest." How awfully different the reason why the worshippers of the beast "have no rest day nor night," viz., "their torment for ever and ever." Holy, holy, holy—The "tris-hagion" of the Greek liturgies. In Isaiah 6:3, as here, it occurs; also Psalm 99:3, 5, 9, where He is praised as "holy," (1) on account of His majesty (vs. 1) about to display itself; (2) His justice (vs. 4) already displaying itself; (3) His mercy (vss. 6-8) which displayed itself in times past. So here "Holy," as He "who was"; "Holy," as He "who is": "Holy," as He "who is to come." He showed Himself an object of holy worship in the past creation of all things: more fully He shows Himself so in governing all things: He will, in the highest degree, show Himself so in the consummation of all things. "Of (from) Him, through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen." In Isaiah 6:3 there is added, "the whole EARTH is full of His glory." But in Revelation this is deferred until the glory of THE LORD fills the earth, His enemies having been destroyed [BENGEL]. Almighty—answering to "Lord of hosts" (Sabaoth), Isaiah 6:3. The cherubim here have six wings, like the seraphim in Isaiah 6; whereas the cherubim in Ezekiel 1:6 had four wings each. They are called by the same name, "living creatures." But whereas in Ezekiel each living creature has all four faces, here the four belong severally one to each.

But here the context best suits the view which regards the four living creatures as representing the redeemed election-Church in its relation of ministering king-priests to God, and ministers of blessing to the redeemed earth, and the nations on it, and the animal creation, in which man stands at the head of all, the lion at the head of wild beasts, the ox at the head of tame beasts, the eagle at the head of birds and of the creatures of the waters. 9-11. The ground of praise here is God's eternity, and God's power and glory manifested in the creation of all things for His pleasure. Creation is the foundation of all God's other acts of power, wisdom, and love, and therefore forms the first theme of His creatures' thanksgivings. The four living creatures take the lead of the twenty-four elders, both in this anthem, and in that new song which follows on the ground of their redemption (ch. 5:8-10). 9. when—i.e., whensoever: as often as. A simultaneous giving of glory on the part of the beasts, and on the part of the elders. give—"shall give" in one oldest MS. for ever and ever—Greek, "unto the ages of the ages." 10. fall—immediately. Greek, "shall fall down": implying that this ascription of praise shall be repeated onward to eternity. So also, "shall worship . . . shall cast their crowns," viz., in acknowledgment that all the merit of their crowns (not kingly diadems, but the crowns of conquerors) is due to Him. 11. O Lord—The two oldest MSS., A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac add, "and our God." "Our" by virtue of creation, and especially redemption. glory . . .—"the glory—the honor—the power." thou—emphatic in the Greek: "It is THOU who didst create." all things—Greek, "the all things": the universe. for . . .—Greek, "on account of"; "for the sake of Thy pleasure," or "will."

were created—by Thy definite act of creation at a definite time.

ADAM CLARKE

6. Four beasts. "Four living creatures." The word beast is very improperly used here and elsewhere in this description. Wycliffe first used it, and translators in general have followed him in this uncouth rendering.

7. The first beast was like a lion. It is supposed that there is a reference here to the four standards or ensigns of the four divisions of the tribes in the Israelitish camp, as they are described by Jewish writers. The first living creature was like a lion; this was, say the rabbins, the standard of Judah on the east, with the two tribes of Issachar and Zabulon. The second, like a calf or "ox," which was the emblem of Ephraim, who pitched on the west, with the two tribes of Manasseh and Benjamin. The third, with the face of a man, which, according to the rabbins, was the standard of Reuben, who pitched on the south, with the two tribes of Simeon and Gad. The fourth, which was like a flying (spread) eagle, was, according to the same writers, the emblem on the ensign of Dan, who pitched on the north, with the two tribes of Asher and Naphtali. This traditionary description agrees with the four faces of the cherub in Ezekiel's vision.

8. The four beasts had each of them six wings. I have already observed, in the preface to this book, that the phraseology is rabbinical; I might have added, and the imagery also. We have almost a counterpart of this description in Pirkey Elieser, chap. 4. In Shemoth Rabba, sec. 23, fol. 122, 4, Rabbi Abin says: "There are four which have principality in this world: among intellectual creatures, man; among birds, the eagle; among cattle, the ox; and among wild beasts, the lion: each of these has a kingdom and a certain magnificence, and they are placed under the throne of glory, Ezek. i. 10, to show that no creature is to exalt itself in this world, and that the kingdom of God is over all." These creatures may be considered the representatives of the whole creation.

10. Cast their crowns before the throne. Acknowledge the infinite supremacy of God, and that they have derived their being and their blessings from Him alone. This is an allusion to the custom of prostrations in the East, and to the homage of petty kings acknowledging the supremacy of the emperor.

11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive. Thus all creation acknowledges the supremacy of God; and we learn from this song that He made all things for His pleasure; and through the same motive He preserves.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 5

Verses 1–5

Hitherto the apostle had seen only the great God, the governor of all things. Now,

I. He is favoured with a sight of the methods of his government, as they are all written down in a book which he holds in his hand; and this we are now to consider as shut up and sealed. But there is a transcript of so much as was necessary to be known in the book of the scripture in general, in the prophetical part of scripture especially. God holds this book in his right hand, to declare the authority of the book. It is known to none but himself, till he allows it to be opened. It is sealed with seven seals. Each part seems to have its particular seal. These seven parts are not unsealed and opened at once, but successively, one scene of Providence introducing another, and explaining it.

II. He heard a proclamation made concerning this sealed book. The crier was a strong angel. This angel seems to come out as a champion, with a challenge to any or all the creatures to try the strength of their wisdom in opening the counsels of God. The cry or challenge, v. 2. None in heaven or earth could accept the challenge and undertake the task. None under the earth, none of the fallen angels. Satan himself, with all his subtlety, cannot do it; the creatures cannot open it, nor look on it; they cannot read it. God only can do it.

III. The apostle wept much; it was a great disappointment to him. By what he had seen in him who sat upon the throne, he was very desirous to see and know more of his mind and will. Those who have seen his glory desire to know his will.

IV. The apostle was comforted and encouraged to hope this sealed book would yet be opened. Who it was that gave John the hint: One of the elders. God had revealed it to his church. Who it was that would do the thing—the Lord Jesus Christ, called the lion of the tribe of Judah, according to his human nature, and the root of David according to his divine nature.

He who bears the office of Mediator between God and man, is fit and worthy to open and execute all the counsels of God towards men.

Verses 6–14

I. The apostle beholds this book taken into the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ. His place and station. He was on the same throne with the Father. Christ, as man and Mediator, is subordinate to God the Father, but is nearer to him than all the creatures.

The form in which he appeared. Before he is called a lion; here he appears as a lamb slain. He is a lion to conquer Satan, a lamb to satisfy the justice of God. He appears as a lamb, having seven horns and

VSS. 1-14. THE BOOK WITH SEVEN SEALS: NONE WORTHY TO OPEN IT BUT THE LAMB: HE TAKES IT AMIDST THE PRAISES OF THE REDEEMED, AND OF THE WHOLE HEAVENLY HOST. 1. in . . .—Greek, "(lying) upon the right hand . . . ." His right hand was open and on it lay the book. On God's part there was no withholding of His future purposes as contained in the book: the only obstacle to unsealing it is stated in vs. 3 [ALFORD]. book—rather, as accords with the ancient form of books, and with the writing on the backside, "a roll." The writing on the back implies fulness and completeness, so that nothing more needs to be added (ch. 22:18). The roll, or book, appears from the context to be "the title-deed of man's inheritance" [DE BURGH] redeemed by Christ, and contains the successive steps by which He shall recover it from its usurper and obtain actual possession of the kingdom already "purchased" for Himself and His elect saints. sealed . . . seven seals—Greek, "sealed up," or "firmly sealed." The number seven (divided into four, the world-wide number, and three, the divine) abounds in Revelation and expresses completeness. Thus, the seven seals, representing all power given to the Lamb; the seven trumpets, by which the world kingdoms are shaken and overthrown, and the Lamb's kingdom ushered in; and the seven vials, by which the beast's kingdom is destroyed. 2. strong—(Ps. 103:20). His voice penetrated heaven, earth, and Hades (ch. 10:1-3). 2. no man—Greek, "no one." Not merely no man, but also no one of any order of beings. in earth—Greek, "upon the earth." under the earth—viz., in Hades. look thereon—to look upon the contents, so as to read them. 4. and to read—inserted in English Version Greek text without good authority. One oldest MS., ORIGEN, CYPRIAN, and HILARY omit the clause. "To read" would be awkward standing between "to open the book" and "to look thereon." John having been promised a revelation of "things which must be hereafter," weeps now at his earnest desire being apparently frustrated. He is a pattern to us to imitate, as an eager and teachable learner of the Apocalypse. 5. one of—Greek, "one from among." The "elder" meant is, according to some (in LYRA), Matthew. With this accords the description here given of Christ, "the Lion, which is (so the Greek) of the tribe of Juda, the root of David"; the royal, David-descended, lion-aspect of Christ being that prominent in Matthew, whence the lion among the fourfold cherubim is commonly assigned to him. Root of David—(Isa. 11:1, 10). Not merely "a sucker come up from David's ancient root" (as ALFORD limits it), but also including the idea of His being Himself the root and origin of David: cf. these two truths brought together, Matthew 22:42-45. Hence He is called not merely Son of David, but also David. He is at once "the branch" of David, and "the root" of David, David's Son and David's Lord, the Lamb slain and therefore the Lion of Juda: about to reign over Israel, and thence over the whole earth. prevailed—Greek, "conquered": absolutely, as elsewhere (ch. 3:21): gained the victory: His past victory over all the powers of darkness entitles Him now to open the book. to open—i.e., so as to open. One oldest MS., B, reads, "He that openeth," i.e., whose office it is to open, but the weight of oldest authorities is with English Version reading, viz., A, Vulgate, Coptic, and ORIGEN. 6. I beheld, and, lo—One oldest MS., A, omits "and, lo." Another, B, CYPRIAN, etc,. support, "and, lo," but omit, "and I beheld." in the midst of the throne—i.e., not on the throne (cf. vs. 7), but in the midst of the company (ch. 4:4) which was "round about the throne." Lamb—Greek, arnion; always found in Revelation exclusively, except in John 21:15 alone: it expresses endearment, viz., the endearing relation in which Christ now stands to us, as the consequence of His previous relation as the sacrificial Lamb. So also our relation to Him: He the precious Lamb, we His dear lambs, one with Him. BENGEL thinks there is in Greek, arnion, the idea of taking the lead of the flock. Another object of the form Greek, arnion, the Lamb, is to put Him in the more marked contrast to Greek, therion, the Beast. Elsewhere Greek, amnos, is found, applying to Him as the paschal, sacrificial Lamb (Isa. 53: 7, LXX; John 1:29, 36; Acts 8:32; I Pet. 1:19). as it had been slain—bearing marks of His past death wounds. He was standing, though bearing the marks of one slain. In the midst of heavenly glory Christ crucified is still the prominent object. seven horns—i.e., perfect might, "seven" symbolizing perfection; "horns," might, in contrast to the

1. A book written within and on the backside. That is, the book was full of solemn contents within, but it was sealed; and on the backside was a superscription indicating its contents. It was a labelled book, or one written on each side of the skin, which was not usual.

Sealed with seven seals. As seven is a number of perfection, it may mean that the book was so sealed that the seals could neither be counterfeited nor broken; i.e., the matter of the book was so obscure and enigmatical, and the work it enjoined and the facts it predicted so difficult and stupendous, that they could neither be known nor performed by human wisdom or power.

2. A strong angel. One of the chief of the angelic host. Proclaiming. As the "herald" of God. To open the book, and to loose the seals. To loose the seals that he may open the book. Who can tell what this book contains? Who can open its mysteries? The book may mean the purposes and designs of God relative to His government of the world and the Church.

3. And no man. No "person" or "being." In heaven. Among all the angels of God. Nor in the earth. No human being. Neither under the earth. No disembodied spirit, nor any demon. Neither angels, men, nor devils can fathom the decrees of God. Neither to look thereon. None can look into it unless it be opened, and none can open it unless the seals be unloosed.

4. I wept much. Because the world and the Church were likely to be deprived of the knowledge of the contents of the book.

5. The Lion of the tribe of Juda. Jesus Christ, who sprang from this tribe, as His genealogy proves; see on Matthew i and Luke iii. There is an allusion here to Gen. xlix. 9, "Judah is a lion's whelp"; the lion was the emblem of this tribe, and was supposed to have been embroidered on its ensigns. The Root of David. See Isa. xi. 1. Christ was the Root of David as to His divine nature; He was a "Branch" "out of the stem of Jesse" as to His human nature.

Hath prevailed. By the merit of His incarnation, passion, and death. To open the book. To explain and execute all the purposes and decrees of God, in relation to the government of the world and the Church.

6. Stood a Lamb. Christ, so called because He was a sacrificial Offering; "a little or delicate Lamb."

As it had been slain. As if now in the act of being offered. This is very remarkable; so important is the sacrificial offering of Christ in the sight of God that He is still represented as being in the very act of pouring out His blood for the offenses of man. Thus all succeeding generations find they have the continual sacrifice ready, and the newly shed Blood to offer. Seven horns. As horn is the emblem of power, seven eyes, perfect power to execute all the will of God and perfect wisdom to understand it all. For he hath the seven Spirits of God, he has received the Holy Spirit without measure. His act and deed (v. 7), not by violence, nor by fraud, but he prevailed to do it (as v. 5), he prevailed by his merit and worthiness.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. No sooner had Christ received this book out of the Father's hand than he received the applauses and adorations of angels and men, yea, of every creature.

I. The church begins the doxology, as being more immediately concerned in it (v. 8). (1) The object of their worship—the Lamb, the Lord Jesus Christ. (2) Their posture: They fell down before him, gave him the most profound adoration. (3) The instruments used in their adoration—harps and vials; the harps were the instruments of praise, the vials were full of odours or incense, which signify the prayers of the saints.

(4) The matter of their song. Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof. They mention the grounds of this worthiness, yet they chiefly insist upon the merit of his sufferings; these more sensibly struck their souls with thankfulness and joy. They mention his suffering: "Thou wast slain." The fruits of his sufferings. [1] Redemption to God. [2] High exaltation, v. 10.

J. A. SEISS:

"And he came and took [the book] from the right hand of him that sitteth upon the throne." This is the sublimest individual act recorded in the Apocalypse. It is the act which includes all that suffering creation, and the disinherited saints of God have been sighing, and crying, and waiting for, for all these long ages. It is the act which carries with it all else that is written in the succeeding part of this glorious revelation. It is the act by virtue of which the world is subdued, Babylon judged, Antichrist destroyed, the dragon vanquished, death overthrown, the curse expunged, the earth made new, and the reign of everlasting blessedness and peace made to cover its hills and illuminate its valleys, and transform it into an unfading paradise of God. It was the lifting of the title deeds of the alienated inheritance—the legal act of repossession of all that was lost in Adam, and paid for by the blood and tears of the Son of God. Heaven looks on in solemn silence as that act is being performed. The universe is stricken with awe, and grows breathless as it views it. And the Living Ones, and Elders, and all the hosts of angels, are filled with adoring wonder and joy, as if another fiat had gone forth from God for a new creation.—The Apocalypse

2. The doxology is carried on by the angels, v. 11. They are said to be innumerable, and to be the attendants on the throne of God. Though they did not need a Saviour themselves, yet they rejoice in the redemption and salvation of sinners, and they agree with the church that he is worthy to receive power, horns of the Antichristian world powers, ch. 17:3; etc.; Daniel 7:7, 20; 8:3. seven eyes . . . the seven Spirits . . . sent forth—So one oldest MS., A. But B reads, "being sent forth." As the seven lamps before the throne represent the Spirit of God immanent in the Godhead, so the seven eyes of the Lamb represent the same sevenfold Spirit profluent from the incarnate Redeemer in His world-wide energy. The Greek for "sent forth," apostellomena, or else apestalmenoi, is akin to the term "apostle," reminding us of the Spirit-impelled labors of Christ's apostles and minister throughout the world: if the present tense be read, as seems best, the idea will be that of those labors continually going on unto the end. "Eyes" symbolize His all-watchful and wise providence for His Church, and against her foes. 7. The book lay on the open hand of Him that sat on the throne for any to take who was found worthy [ALFORD]. The Lamb takes it from the Father in token of formal investiture into His universal and everlasting dominion as Son of man.

8. had taken—Greek, "took." fell down before the Lamb—who shares worship and the throne with the Father. harps—Two oldest MSS., A, B, Syriac and Coptic read, "a harp": a kind of guitar, played with the hand or a quill. vials—"bowls" [TREGELLES]: censers. odours—Greek, "incense." prayers of saints—as the angel offers their prayers (ch. 8:3) with incense (cf. Ps. 141:2). This gives not the least sanction to Rome's dogma of our praying to saints. Though they be employed by God in some way unknown to us to present our prayers (nothing is said of their interceding for us), yet we are told to pray only to Him (ch. 19:10; 22: 8, 9). Their own employment is praise (whence they all have harps): ours is prayer. 9. sung—Greek, "sing": it is their blessed occupation continually. The theme of redemption is ever new, ever suggesting fresh thoughts of praise, embodied in the "new song." us to God—So MS. B, Coptic, Vulgate, and CYPRIAN. But A omits "us": and ℵ reads instead, "to our God." out of—the present election-church gathered out of the world, as distinguished from the peoples gathered to Christ as the subjects, not of an election, but of a general and world-wide conversion of all nations. kindred . . . tongue . . . people . . . nation—The number four marks world-wide extension: the four quarters of the world. For "kindred," translate as Greek, "tribe." This term and "people" are usually restricted to Israel: "tongue and nation" to the Gentiles (ch. 7:9; 11:9; 13:7, the oldest reading; 14:6). Thus there is here marked the election-Church gathered from Jews and Gentiles. In ch. 10:11, for "tribes," we find among the four terms "kings"; in 17:15, "multitudes." 10. made us—A, B, ℵ, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "them." The Hebrew construction of the third person for the first, has a graphic relation to the redeemed, and also has a more modest sound than us, priests [BENGEL]. unto our God—So B and ℵ read. But A omits the clause. kings—So B reads. But A, ℵ, Vulgate, Coptic, and CYPRIAN, read, "A kingdom." ℵ reads also "a priesthood" for priests. They who cast their crowns before the throne, do not call themselves kings in the sight of the great King (ch. 4:10, 11); though their priestly access has such dignity that their reigning on earth cannot exceed it. So in ch. 20:6 they are not called "kings" [BENGEL]. we shall reign on the earth—This is a new feature added to ch. 1:6. ℵ, Vulgate, and Coptic read, "They shall reign." A and B read, "They reign." ALFORD takes this reading and explains it of the Church EVEN NOW, in Christ her Head, reigning on the earth: "all things are being put under her feet, as under His; her kingly office and rank are asserted, even in the midst of persecution." But even if we read (I think the weightiest authority is against it), "They reign," still it is the prophetical present for the future: the seer being transported into the future when the full number of the redeemed (represented by the four living creatures) shall be complete and the visible kingdom begins. The saints do spiritually reign now; but certainly not as they shall when the prince of this world shall be bound (Notes, ch. 20:2-6).

11. I beheld—the angels: who form the outer circle, while the Church, the object of redemption, forms the inner circle nearest the throne. The heavenly hosts ranged around gaze with intense love and adoration at this crowning manifestation of God's love, wisdom, and power. ten thousand times ten thousand—Greek, "myriads of myriads." 12. to receive power—Greek, "the power." The remaining six (the whole being seven, the number for perfection and completeness) are and seven the number of perfection, the seven horns may denote the all-prevailing and infinite might of Jesus Christ. He can support all His friends; He can destroy all His enemies; and He can save to the uttermost all that come unto God through Him. Seven eyes. To denote His infinite knowledge and wisdom; but as these seven eyes are said to be the seven Spirits of God, they seem to denote rather His providence, in which He often employs the ministry of angels. Therefore these are said to be sent forth into all the earth. See on chap. i. 4.

7. He came and took the book. This verse may be properly explained by John, chap. i. 18. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." With Jesus alone are all the counsels and mysteries of God.

8. The four beasts . . . fell down before the Lamb. The whole Church of God, and all His children in heaven and earth, acknowledge that Jesus Christ is alone worthy and able to unfold and execute all the mysteries and counsels of God. Having every one of them harps. There were harps and vials; and each of the elders and living creatures had one. Odours, which are the prayers of saints. The frankincense and odors offered at the Tabernacle were emblems of the prayers and praises of the Lord. That prayers are compared to incense, see Ps. cxli. 2: "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense."

9. A new song. Composed on the matters and blessings of the gospel, which was just now opened on earth. But new song may signify a "most excellent song"; and by this the gospel and its blessings are probably signified. The gospel is called a new song, Ps. xcvi. 1. And perhaps there is an allusion in the "harps" here to Ps. cxliv. 9: "I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings." The same form of speech is found, Isa. xlii. 10: "Sing unto the Lord a new song"; and there the prophet seems to have the gospel dispensation particularly in view. Thou . . . hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every . . . nation. It appears, therefore, that the living creatures and the elders represent the aggregate of the followers of God; or the Christian Church in all nations, and among all kinds of people, and perhaps through the whole compass of time; and all these are said to be redeemed by Christ's blood, plainly showing that His life was a sacrificial offering for the sins of mankind.

10. Kings and priests. See Exod. xix. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9, and the notes there.

11. The voice of many angels. These also are represented as joining in the chorus with redeemed mortals. Ten thousand times ten thousand. "Myriads of myriads and chiliads of chiliads"; that is, an infinite or innumerable multitude. This is in reference to Dan. vii. 10.

12. To receive power. That is, Jesus Christ is worthy "to take," to have ascribed to Him, power—omnipotence; and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

3. This doxology is resounded by the whole creation, v. 13. Heaven and earth ring with the high praises of the Redeemer. The whole creation fares the better for Christ.

That part which is made for the whole creation is a song of blessing, and honour, and glory, and power. To him that sits on the throne, to God the Father. To the Lamb, the Mediator of the new covenant. We worship and glorify one and the same God for our creation and for our redemption. Thus we have seen this sealed book passing with great solemnity from the hand of the Creator into the hand of the Redeemer.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

all, as well as "power," ranged under the one Greek article, to mark that they form one complete aggregate belonging to God and His coequal, the Lamb. Cf. ch. 7:12, where each of all seven has the article. riches—both spiritual and earthly. blessing—ascribed praise: the will on the creature's part, though unaccompanied by the power, to return blessing for blessing conferred [ALFORD]. 13. The universal chorus of creation, including the outermost circles as well as the inner (of saints and angels), winds up the doxology. The full accomplishment of this is to be when Christ takes His great power and reigns visibly. every creature—"all His works in all places of His dominion" (Ps. 103:22). under the earth—the departed spirits in Hades. such as are—So B and Vulgate. But A omits this. in the sea—Greek, "upon the sea": the sea animals which are regarded as being on the surface [ALFORD]. all that are in them—So Vulgate reads. A omits "all (things)" here (Greek, panta), and reads, "I heard all (Greek, pantas) saying": implying the harmonious concert of all in the four quarters of the universe. Blessing . . .—Greek, "the blessing, the honor, and the glory, and the might to the ages of the ages." The fourfold ascription indicates world-wide universality. 14. said—So A, Vulgate, and Syriac read. But B and Coptic read, "(I heard) saying." Amen—So A reads. But B reads, "the (accustomed) Amen." As in ch. 4:11, the four and twenty elders asserted God's worthiness to receive the glory, as having created all things, so here the four living creatures ratify by their "Amen" the whole creation's ascription of the glory to Him. four and twenty—omitted in the oldest MSS.: Vulgate supports it. him that liveth for ever and ever—omitted in all the MSS.: inserted by commentators from ch. 4:9. But there, where the thanksgiving is expressed, the words are appropriate; but here less so, as their worship is that of silent prostration. "Worshipped" (viz., God and the Lamb). So in ch. 11:1, "worship" is used absolutely.

riches—beneficence; wisdom—omniscience; strength—power in prevalent exercise; honour—the highest reputation for what He has done; glory—the praise due to such actions; and blessing—the thankful acknowledgments of the whole creation. Here are seven different species of praise; and this is exactly agreeable to the rabbinical forms, which the author of this book keeps constantly in view. See Sepher Rasiel, fol. 39, 2: "To thee belongs glory; magnitude; might; the kingdom; the honour; the victory; and the praise."

13. Every creature. All parts of the creation, animate and inanimate, are represented here, by that figure of speech called "personification," as giving praise to the Lord Jesus, because by Him all things were created. We find the whole creation gives precisely the same praise, and in the same terms, to Jesus Christ, who is undoubtedly meant here by the Lamb just slain, as they give to God who sits upon the throne. Now if Jesus Christ were not properly God, this would be idolatry, as it would be giving to the creature what belongs to the Creator.

14. The four beasts said, Amen. Acknowledged that what was attributed to Christ was His due. The four and twenty elders. The word twenty-four is wanting in the most eminent MSS. and versions. Fell down and worshipped. Fell down on their knees, and then "prostrated themselves" before the throne. This is the Eastern method of adoration: first, the person worshipping fell down on his knees; and then, bowing down, touched the earth with his forehead. This latter act was "prostration." Him that liveth for ever. This clause is wanting in many MSS. and is undoubtedly spurious.

CHAPTER 6

Christ, the Lamb, opens the first seal.

We have the vision itself, v. 2. 1. The Lord Jesus appears riding on a white horse. 2. He had a bow in his hand. The convictions impressed by the word of God are sharp arrows, they reach at a distance. 3. A crown was given him. When Christ was going to war, one would think a helmet had been more proper than a crown; but a crown is given him as the earnest of victory. 4. He went forth conquering, and to conquer. As long as the church continues militant Christ will be conquering. He conquers his enemies in his people; their sins are their enemies and his enemies; when Christ comes with power into their soul he begins to conquer these enemies, and he goes on conquering, in the progressive work of sanctification, till he has gained us a complete victory. And he conquers his enemies in the world, wicked men. The successful progress of the gospel of Christ in the world is a glorious sight, worth beholding. Christ's work is not all done at once. We are ready to think, when the gospel goes forth, it should carry all the world before it, but it often meets with opposition, and moves slowly. Christ will do his own work effectually, in his own time and way.

Verses 3–8

The next three seals give us a sad prospect of judgments with which God punishes those who abuse the everlasting gospel.

I. Upon opening the second seal another horse appears, a red horse, v. 4. This signifies the desolating judgment of war. The sword of war is a dreadful judgment; it takes away peace from the earth. Men, who should love one another and help one another, are, in a state of war, set upon killing one another.

Vss. 1-17. THE OPENING OF THE FIRST SIX OF THE SEVEN SEALS. 1. one of the seals—The oldest MSS., A, B, C, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "one of the seven seals." noise—The three oldest MSS. read this in the nominative or dative, not the genitive, as English Version, "I heard one from among the four living creatures saying, as (it were) the voice (or, as with the voice) of thunder." The first living creature was like a lion (ch. 4:7): his voice is in consonance. Implying the lion-like boldness with which, in the successive great revivals, the faithful have testified for Christ, and especially a little before His coming shall testify. Or, rather, their earnestness in praying for Christ's coming. Come and see—One oldest MS., B, has "And see." But A, C, and Vulgate reject it. ALFORD rightly objects to English Version reading: "Whither was John to come? Separated as he was by the glassy sea from the throne, was he to cross it?" Contrast the form of expression, ch. 10:8. It is much more likely to be the cry of the redeemed to the Redeemer, "Come" and deliver the groaning creature from the bondage of corruption. Thus, vs. 2 is an answer to the cry, went (lit., "came") forth corresponding to "Come."

2. Evidently Christ, whether in person, or by His angel, preparatory to His coming again, as appears from ch. 19:11, 12. bow—(Ps. 45:4, 5). crown—Greek, stephanos, the garland or wreath of a conqueror, which is also implied by His white horse, white being the emblem of victory. and to conquer—i.e., so as to gain a lasting victory. All four seals usher in judgments on the earth, as the power which opposes the reign of Himself and His Church. This, rather than the work of conversion and conviction, is primarily meant, though doubtless, secondarily, the elect will be gathered out through His word and His judgments. 3. and see—omitted in the three oldest MSS., A, B, C, and Vulgate. 4. red—the color of blood. The color of the horse in each case answers to the mission of the rider. Cf. Matthew 10:24-36, "Think not I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." The white horse of Christ's bloodless victories is soon followed, through man's perversion of the Gospel, by the red horse of bloodshed; but this is overruled to the clearing away of the obstacles to Christ's coming kingdom. The patient ox is the emblem of the second living creature who, at the opening of this seal, saith, "Come." The saints amidst judgments on the earth in pa-

1. When the Lamb opened one of the seals. It is worthy of remark that the opening of the seals is not merely a declaration of what God will do, but is the exhibition of a purpose then accomplished; for whenever the seal is opened, the sentence appears to be executed. It is supposed that, from chaps. vi to xi inclusive, the calamities which should fall on the enemies of Christianity, and particularly the Jews, are pointed out under various images, as well as the calamities. One of the four beasts. Probably that with the face of a lion. See chap. iv. 7. Come and see. Attend to what is about to be exhibited. It is very likely that all was exhibited before his eyes as in a scene; and he saw every act represented which was to take place, and all the persons and things which were to be the chief actors.

2. A white horse. Supposed to represent the gospel system, and pointing out its excellence, swiftness, and purity. He that sat on him. Supposed to represent Jesus Christ. A bow. The preaching of the gospel, darting conviction into the hearts of sinners. A crown. The emblem of the Kingdom which Christ was to establish on earth. Conquering, and to conquer. Overcoming and confounding the Jews first, and then the Gentiles, spreading more and more the doctrine and influence of the Cross over the face of the earth.

3. The second beast. That which had the face of an ox.

4. Another horse that was red. The emblem of war; perhaps also of severe persecution, and the martyrdom of the saints. Him that sat thereon. Some say, Christ; others, Vespasian; others, the Roman armies. Take peace from the earth. To deprive Judea of all tranquillity.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. Upon opening the third seal another horse appears, a black horse, signifying famine (v. 5).

One judgment seldom comes alone; the judgment of war naturally draws after it that of famine. The famine of bread is a terrible judgment; but the famine of the word is more so.

III. Upon opening the fourth seal there appears another horse, of a pale colour. 1. The name of the rider—Death, the king of terrors. 2. The attendants of this king of terrors—hell. There is a natural connection between one judgment and another: war is a wasting calamity, and draws scarcity and famine after it; and famine draws the pestilence after it. God has published threatenings against the wicked as well as promises to the righteous; and it is our duty to believe the threatenings as well as the promises.

IV. After the opening of these seals we have this general observation, v. 8. To the three great judgments of war, famine, and pestilence, is here added the beasts of the earth, another of God's sore judgments. When a nation is depopulated by the sword, famine, and pestilence, the small remnant that continue become an easy prey. Others, by the beasts of the field, understand brutish, cruel, savage men.

I. The fifth seal. It does not contain a new prophecy, but rather opens a spring of consolation to those who still were under great tribulation.

1. The sight this apostle saw at the opening of the fifth seal (v. 9). He saw the souls of the martyrs. Where he saw them—in the most holy place; he saw them in heaven, at the foot of Christ. God has provided a good place in the better world for those who are faithful to death and are not allowed a place any longer on earth. The cause in which they suffered—the word of God and the testimony which they held. A noble cause, the best that any man can lay down his life for.

2. The cry he heard, v. 10. Even the spirits of just men made perfect retain a proper resentment of the wrong they have sustained by their cruel enemies. They commit their cause to him to whom vengeance belongeth; they are not for avenging themselves but leave all to God.

3. The kind return that was made to this cry (v. 11). What was given to them—white robes, the robes of victory and of honour.

tience "endure to the end." that they should kill—The Greek is indicative future, "that they may, as they also shall, kill one another." 5. Come and see—The two oldest MSS., A, C. and Vulgate omit "and see." B retains the words. black—implying sadness and want. had—Greek, "having." a pair of balances—the symbol of scarcity of provisions, the bread being doled out by weight. 6. a voice—Two oldest MSS., A, C, read, "as it were a voice." B reads as English Version. The voice is heard "in the midst of the four living creatures" (as Jehovah in the Shekinah cloud manifested His presence between the cherubim); because it is only for the sake of, and in connection with, His redeemed, that God mitigates His judgments on the earth. A measure—"A chœnix." While making food scarce, do not make it so much so that a chœnix (about a day's provision of wheat, variously estimated at two or three pints) shall not be obtainable "for a penny" (denarius, about twenty cents, probably the day's wages of a laborer). Famine generally follows the sword. Ordinarily, from sixteen to twenty measures were given for a denarius. The sword, famine, noisome beasts, and the pestilence, are God's four judgments on the earth. A spiritual famine, too, may be included in the judgment. The "Come," in the case of this third seal, is said by the third of the four living creatures, whose likeness is a man indicative of sympathy and human compassion for the sufferers. God in it tempers judgment with mercy. Cf. Matthew 24:7, which indicates the very calamities foretold in these seals, nation rising against nation (the sword), famines, pestilences (vs. 8), and earthquakes (vs. 12). three measures of barley for a penny—the cheaper and less nutritious grain, bought by the laborer who could not buy enough wheat for his family with his day's wages, a denarius, and, therefore, buys barley. see thou hurt not the oil, and the wine—the luxuries of life, rather than necessaries; the oil and wine were to be spared for the refreshment of the sufferers. 7. and see—supported by B; omitted by A, C, and Vulgate. The fourth living creature, who was "like a flying eagle," introduces this seal; implying high-soaring intelligence, and judgment descending from on high fatally on the ungodly, as the king of birds on his prey. 8. pale—"livid" [ALFORD]. Death—personified. Hell—Hades personified. unto them—Death and Hades. So A, C read. But B and Vulgate read, "to him." fourth part of the earth—answering to the first four seals; his portion as one of the four, being a fourth part. death—pestilence; cf. Ezekiel 14:21 with the four judgments here, the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts; the famine the consequence of the sword; pestilence, that of famine; and beasts multiplying by the consequent depopulation. with the beasts—Greek, "by"; more direct agency. 9. The three last seals relate to the invisible, as the first four to the visible world; the fifth, to the martyrs who have died as believers; the sixth, to those who have died, or who shall be found at Christ's coming, unbelievers, viz., "the kings . . . great men . . . bondman . . . freeman"; the seventh, to the silence in heaven. The scene changes from earth to heaven; so that interpretations which make these three last consecutive to the first four seals, are very doubtful. I saw—in spirit. For souls are not naturally visible. under the altar—As the blood of sacrificial victims slain on the altar was poured at the bottom of the altar, so the souls of those sacrificed for Christ's testimony are symbolically represented as under the altar, in heaven; for the life or animal soul is in the blood, and blood is often represented as crying for vengeance (Gen. 4:10).

testimony which they held—i.e., which they bore, as committed to them to bear. Cf. ch. 12:17, "Have (same Greek as here) the testimony of Jesus." 10. How long—Greek, "Until when?" Lord—Greek, "Master"; implying that He has them and their foes and all His creatures as absolutely at His disposal, as a master has his slaves; hence, in vs. 11, "fellow servants," or fellow slaves follows. holy—Greek, "the Holy one." avenge—"exact vengeance for our blood." on—Greek, "from them." that dwell on the earth—the ungodly, of earth, earthly, as distinguished from the Church, whose home and heart are even now in heavenly places. 11. white robes—The three oldest MSS., A, B, C, read, "A white robe was given." every one of—One oldest MS., B, omits this. A and C read, "unto them, unto each," i.e., unto them severally. Though their joint cry for the riddance of the earth from the ungodly is not yet granted, it is intimated that it will be so in due time; meanwhile, individually they receive the white robe, indicative of light, joy, and triumphant victory over their foes; even as the

They should kill one another. This was literally the case with the Jews, while besieged by the Romans. A great sword. Great influence and success, producing terrible carnage.

5. The third beast. That which had the face of a man. A black horse. The emblem of famine. Some think that which took place under Claudius. See Matt. xxiv. 7; the same which was predicted by Agabus, Acts xi. 28. A pair of balances. To show that the scarcity would be such that every person must be put under an allowance.

6. A measure of wheat for a penny. It contained as much as one man could consume in a day; and a penny, the Roman denarius, was the ordinary pay of a laborer. So it appears that in this scarcity each might be able to obtain a bare subsistence by his daily labor; but a man could not, in such cases, provide for a family.

Three measures of barley. This seems to have been the proportion of value between the wheat and the barley. Barley was allowed to afford a poor aliment, and was given to the Roman soldiers instead of wheat, by way of punishment. Hurt not the oil and the wine. Be sparing of these; use them not as delicacies, but for necessity, because neither the vines nor the olives will be productive.

7. The fourth beast. That which had the face of an eagle.

8. A pale horse. The symbol of death. Of this symbol there can be no doubt, because it is immediately said, His name that sat on him was Death. And Hell followed with him. The "grave," or "state of the dead," received the slain. Over the fourth part of the earth. One-fourth of mankind was to feel the desolating effects of this seal. To kill with sword (war), and with hunger (famine), and with death (pestilence), and with the beasts of the earth (lions, tigers, hyaenas, which would multiply in consequence of the devastations occasioned by war, famine, and pestilence).

9. The fifth seal. There is no animal nor any other being to introduce this seal, nor does there appear to be any new event predicted; but the whole is intended to comfort the followers of God under their persecutions, and to encourage them to bear up under their distresses. I saw under the altar. A symbolical vision was exhibited, in which he saw an altar; and under it the souls of them that were slain for the word of God—martyred for their attachment to Christianity—are represented as being newly slain as victims to idolatry and superstition.

10. And they cried with a loud voice. That is, their blood, like that of Abel, cried for vengeance; for we are not to suppose that there was anything like a vindictive spirit in those happy and holy souls who had shed their blood for the testimony of Jesus. We sometimes say, "Blood cries for blood"; that is, in the order of divine justice every murderer, and every murdering persecutor, shall be punished. O Lord. Sovereign Lord. Holy. In Thy own nature, hating threatenings. Dost thou not judge the persecutors, and avenge our blood, inflict signal punishment, on them that dwell on the earth? Probably meaning the persecuting Jews; they dwelt "upon that land," a form of speech by which Judea is often signified in the New Testament.

11. White robes. The emblems of purity, innocence, and triumph.

MATTHEW HENRY

What was said to them—that they should be easy in themselves, for it would not be long ere the number of their fellow-sufferers should be fulfilled. He will recompence tribulation to those who trouble them, and to those that are troubled full and uninterrupted rest.

II. We have here the sixth seal opened, v. 12.

1. The tremendous events that were hastening; and here are several occurrences that contribute to make that day and dispensation very dreadful (v. 13). It would be a judgment that should astonish all the world.

2. The dread and terror that would seize upon all sorts of men in that great and awful day, v. 15. The degree of their terror and astonishment; it should prevail so far as to make them call to the mountains to fall upon them, and to the hills to cover them. The cause of their terror—the wrath of the Lamb. Though God be invisible, he can make the inhabitants of this world sensible of his awful frowns.

Though Christ be a lamb, yet he can be angry, and the wrath of the Lamb is exceedingly dreadful. As men have their day of opportunity, and their seasons of grace, so God has his day of righteous wrath.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

Captain of their salvation goes forth on a white horse conquering and to conquer; also of purity and sanctity through Christ. should—So C reads. But A and B, "shall rest." a little season—One oldest MS., B, omits "little." A and C support it. Even if it be omitted, is it to be inferred that the "season" is short as compared with eternity? BENGEL fancifully made a season (Greek, chronus, the word here used) to be one thousand one hundred and eleven one-ninth years, and a time (ch. 12:12, 14, Greek, kairos) to be a fifth of a season, i.e., two hundred and twenty-two two-ninths years. The only distinction in the Greek is, a season (Greek, chronus) is a sort of aggregate of times. Greek, kairos, a specific time, and so of short duration. As to their rest, cf. ch. 14:13 (the same Greek, anapauomai); Isa. 57:2; Dan. 12:13. until their . . . brethren . . . be fulfilled—in number. Until their full number shall have been completed. The number of the elect is definitely fixed: perhaps to fill up that of the fallen angels. But this is mere conjecture. The full blessedness and glory of all the saints shall be simultaneous. The earlier shall not anticipate the later saints. A and C read, "shall have been accomplished"; B and ℵ read, "shall have accomplished (their course)." 12. As vss. 4, 6-8, the sword, famine, and pestilence, answer to Matthew 24:6, 7; and vss. 9, 10, as to martyrdoms, answer to Matthew 24:9, 10; so this passage, vss. 12, 17, answers to Matthew 24:29, 30, "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven; . . . then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming"; imagery describing the portents of the immediate coming of the day of the Lord; but not the coming itself until the elect are sealed, and the judgments invoked by the martyrs descend on the earth, the sea, and the trees (ch. 7). and, lo—So A reads. But B and C omit "lo." earthquake—Greek, "shaking" of the heavens, the sea, and the dry land; the shaking of these mutable things being the necessary preliminary to the setting up of those things which cannot be shaken. This is one of the catchwords [WORDSWORTH] connecting the sixth seal with the sixth trumpet (ch. 11:13) and the seventh vial (ch. 16:17-21); also the seventh seal (ch. 8:5). sackcloth—One kind, made of the "hair" of Cilician goats, was called "cilicium," or Cilician cloth, and was used for tents, etc. Paul, a Cilician, made such tents (Acts 18:3). moon—A, B, C, and oldest versions read, the whole moon"; the full moon; not merely the crescent moon. as blood—(Joel 2:31). 13. stars . . . fell . . . as a fig tree casteth her . . .figs—(Isa. 34:4, Nah. 3:12). The Church shall be then ripe for glorification, the Antichristian world for destruction, which shall be accompanied with mighty phenomena in nature. As to the stars falling to the earth, Scripture describes natural phenomena as they would appear to the spectator, not in the language of scientific accuracy; and yet, while thus adapting itself to ordinary men, it drops hints which show that it anticipates the discoveries of modern science. 14. departed—Greek, "was separated from" its place; "was made to depart." Not as ALFORD, "parted asunder"; for, on the contrary, it was rolled together as a scroll which had been open is rolled up and laid aside. There is no "asunder one from another" here in the Greek, as in Acts 15:39, which ALFORD copies. mountain . . . moved out of . . . places—(Ps. 121:1, Margin; Jer. 3:23; 4:24; Nah. 1:5). This total disruption shall be the precursor of the new earth, just as the pre-Adamic convulsions prepared it for its present occupants. 15. kings . . . hid themselves—Where was now the spirit of those whom the world has so greatly feared? [BENGEL]. great men—statesmen and high civil officers. rich men . . . chief captains—The three oldest MSS., A, B, C, transpose thus, "chief captains . . . rich men." mighty—The three oldest MSS, A, B, and C read, "strong" physically (Ps. 33:16). in—lit., "into"; ran into, so as to hide themselves in. dens—"caves." 16. from the face—(Ps. 34:16). On the whole verse, cf. Hosea 10:8; Luke 23:30. 17. Lit., "the day, the great (day)," which can only mean the last great day. After the Lord has exhausted all His ordinary judgments, the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts, and still sinners are impenitent, the great day of the Lord itself shall come.

to stand—to stand justified, and not condemned before the Judge. Thus the sixth seal brings us to the verge of the Lord's coming. The ungodly "tribes of the earth" tremble at the signs of His immediate approach. But before He actually inflicts the blow in person, "the elect" must be "gathered " out.

ADAM CLARKE

They should rest yet for a little season. This is a declaration that, when the cup of the iniquity of the Jews should be full, they should then be punished in a mass. If this book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as is most likely, then this destruction is that which was to fall upon the Jews and the "little time" or season was that which elapsed between their martyrdom, or the date of this book, and the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, under Vespasian and his son Titus, about A.D. 70. What follows may refer to the destruction of the heathen Roman Empire.

12. The sixth seal. This seal also is opened and introduced by Jesus Christ alone. A great earthquake. A most stupendous change in the civil and religious constitution of the world. If it refer to Constantine the Great, the change that was made by his conversion to Christianity might be very properly represented under the emblem of an earthquake, and the other symbols mentioned in this and the following verses. The sun—the ancient pagan government of the Roman Empire—was totally darkened; and, like a black hair sackcloth, was degraded and humbled to the dust. The moon—the ecclesiastical state of the same empire—became as blood—was totally ruined, their sacred rites abrogated, their priests and religious institutions desecrated, their altars cast down, their temples destroyed, or turned into places for Christian worship.

13. The stars of heaven. The gods and goddesses, demigods, and deified heroes of their poetical and mythological heaven were prostrated indiscriminately, and lay as useless as the figs or fruit of a tree shaken down before ripe by a "tempestuous wind."

14. And the heaven departed as a scroll. The whole system of pagan and idolatrous worship, with all its spiritual, secular, and superstitious influence, was blasted, shrivelled up, and rendered null and void, as a parchment scroll when exposed to the action of a strong fire. And every mountain. All the props, supports, and dependencies of the empire, whether regal allies, tributary kings, dependent colonies, or mercenary troops, were all moved out of their places, so as to stand no longer in the same relation to that empire, and its worship, support, and maintenance, as they formerly did. And island. The heathen temples, with their precincts and enclosures, cut off from the common people, and into which none could come but the privileged, may be here represented by islands, for the same reasons.

15. The kings of the earth. All the secular powers who had endeavored to support the pagan worship by authority, influence, riches, political wisdom, and military skill; with every bondman—all "slaves," who were in life and limb addicted to their masters or owners. And every free man. Those who had been manumitted, commonly called "freedmen," and who were attached, through gratitude, to the families of their liberators. All hid themselves—were astonished at the total overthrow of the heathen empire and the revolution which had then taken place.

16. Said to the mountains and rocks. Expressions which denote the strongest perturbation and alarm. They preferred any kind of death to that which they apprehended from this most awful revolution. From the face of him that sitteth on the throne. They now saw that all these terrible judgments came from the Almighty; and that Christ, the Author of Christianity, was now judging, condemning, and destroying them for their cruel persecutions of is followers.

17. For the great day of his wrath. The decisive and manifest time in which He will execute judgment on the oppressors of His people. Who shall be able to stand? No might can prevail against the might of God. All these things may literally apply to the final destruction of Jerusalem, and to the revolution which took place in the Roman Empire under Constantine the Great. Some apply them to the "day of judgment"; but they do not seem to have that awful event in view.

Verses 1–12

I. An account of the restraint laid upon the winds. By these winds we suppose are meant those errors which would occasion a great deal of trouble and mischief to the church of God. The spirits of error are compared to the four winds, contrary one to another, but doing much hurt to the garden and vineyard of God. Errors are as wind, by which those who are unstable are shaken. They are restrained by the ministry of angels, standing on the four corners of the earth; the spirit of error cannot go forth till God permits it. Angels minister to the good of the church by restraining its enemies. Their restraint was only for a season, and that was till the servants of God were sealed in their foreheads.

II. An account of the sealing of the servants of God. 1. To whom this work was committed—to an angel. Another angel was employed to mark out and distinguish the faithful servants of God.

2. How they were distinguished—the seal of God was set upon their foreheads. By this mark they were set apart for mercy and safety in the worst of times.

3. The number of those that were sealed. A particular account of those that were sealed of the twelve tribes of Israel—twelve thousand out of every tribe.

J. A. SEISS:

We see that God is not yet done with the Jews. Their national restoration is not necessarily involved in this text; though such a restoration in advance of this sealing would admirably agree with the vision and with other predictions relating to the same transactions. But it is involved that the Jews shall remain a distinct people upon earth up to the day of judgment; and that, before the final consummation, God will again turn himself toward them, and begin to deal with them once more in mercy, as in the days that He brought them up out of the land of Egypt. Edom, and those who disbelieve with Edom in Jacob's birthright, may sneeringly ask: "Watchman, what of the night?" But, there is a morning coming. A stormy morning it may be; but a morning nevertheless, and not without its sunshine and its rays of blessing. They err who tell us that all God's promises to Israel as a race are dead, never again to be revived. The Giver of them does not so speak. His inspired Apostle, even after Jerusalem had fallen, wrote, with regard to this very subject, that "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance"; and that for the selfsame Israel which has fallen, and been cast down, and broken off, there is a coming fullness, recovery, and grafting in again, when the Deliverer shall come (see Rom. 11).
—The Apocalypse

A general account of those who were saved out of other nations (v. 9). Though the church of God is but a little flock, in comparison of the wicked world, yet it is no contemptible society, but really large, and to be still more enlarged.

Vss. 1-17. SEALING OF THE ELECT OF ISRAEL. THE COUNTLESS MULTITUDE OF THE GENTILE ELECT. 1. And—so B and Syriac. But A, C, Vulgate, and Coptic omit "and." after these things—A, B, C, and Coptic read, "after this." The two visions in this chapter come in as an episode after the sixth seal, and before the seventh seal.
earth . . . sea . . . tree—The judgments to descend on these are in answer to the martyrs' prayer under the fifth seal. Cf. the same judgments under the fifth trumpet, the sealed being exempt (ch. 9:4). on any tree—Greek, "against any tree" (Greek, epi ti dendron: but on the earth," Greek, epi tees gees). 2. from the east—Greek, ". . . the rising of the sun." The quarter from which God's glory oftenest manifests itself. 3. Hurt not—by letting loose the destructive winds. till we have sealed the servants of our God—parallel to Matthew 24:31, "His angels . . . shall gather together His elect from the four winds." God's love is such, that He cannot do anything in the way of judgment, till His people are secured from hurt (Gen. 19:22). Israel, at the eve of the Lord's coming, shall be found re-embodied as a nation; for its tribes are distinctly specified (Joseph, however, being substituted for Dan; whether because Antichrist is to come from Dan, or because Dan is to be Antichrist's especial tool [ARETAS, tenth century], cf. Gen. 49:17; Jer. 8:16; Amos 8:14; just as there was a Judas among the Twelve). Out of these tribes a believing remnant will be preserved from the judgments which shall destroy all the Antichristian confederacy (ch. 6:12-17), and shall be transfigured with the elect Church of all nations, viz., 144,000 (or whatever number is meant by this symbolical number), who shall faithfully resist the seductions of Antichrist, while the rest of the nation, restored to Palestine in unbelief, are his dupes, and at last his victims.

foreheads—the most conspicuous and noblest part of man's body; on which the helmet, "the hope of salvation," is worn. 4. Twelve is the number of the tribes, and appropriate to the Church: 3 by 4:3, the divine number, multiplied by 4, the number for world-wide extension. 12 by 12 implies fixity and completeness, which is taken a thousandfold in 144,000. A thousand implies the world perfectly pervaded by the divine; for it is ten, the world number, raised to the power of three, the number of God. of all the tribes—lit., "out of every tribe"; not 144,000 of each tribe, but the aggregate of the 12,000 from every tribe. children—Greek, "sons of Israel." Ch. 3:12; 21:12, are no objection, as ALFORD thinks, to the literal Israel being meant; for, in consummated glory, still the Church will be that "built on the foundation of the (Twelve) apostles (Israelites), Jesus Christ (an Israelite) being the chief cornerstone." Gentile believers shall have the name of Jerusalem written on them, in that they shall share the citizenship antitypical to that of the literal Jerusalem. 5-8. Judah (meaning praise) stands first, as Jesus' tribe. Benjamin, the youngest, is last; and with him is associated second last, Joseph. Reuben, as originally first-born, comes next after Judah, to whom it gave place, having by sin lost its primogeniture-right. Besides the reason given above, another akin for the omission of Dan, is, its having been the first to lapse into idolatry (Judg. 18); for which same reason the name Ephraim, also (cf. Judg. 17: Hos. 4:17), is omitted, and Joseph substituted. Also, it had been now for long almost extinct. Long before, the Hebrews say [GROTIUS], it was reduced to the one family of Hussim, which perished subsequently in the wars before Ezra's time. Hence it is omitted in I Chronicles 4-8. Dan's small numbers are joined here to Naphtali's, whose brother he was by the same mother [BENGEL]. The twelve times twelve thousand sealed ones of Israel are the nucleus of transfigured humanity [AUBERLEN], to which the elect Gentiles are joined, "a multitude which no man could number," vs. 9 (i.e., the Church of Jews and Gentiles indiscriminately, in which the Gentiles are the predominant element, Luke 21:24. The word "tribes," Greek, implies that believing Israelites are in this countless multitude). Both are in heaven, yet ruling over the earth, as ministers of blessing to its inhabitants: while upon earth the world of nations is added to the kingdom of Israel. The twelve apostles stand at the head of the whole. The upper and the lower congregation, though distinct, are intimately associated. 9. no man—Greek, "no one." of all nations—Greek, "OUT OF every nation." The human race is one nation by origin, but afterwards separated itself into tribes, peoples, and tongues;

ADAM CLARKE

1. And after these things. Immediately after the preceding vision. I saw four angels. Instruments which God employs in the dispensation of His providence; we know not what. On the four corners of the earth. On the extreme parts of the land of Judea, called "the land," or earth, by way of eminence. Holding the four winds. Preventing evil from every quarter. Earth . . . sea, nor on any tree; keeping the whole of the land free from evil, till the Church of Christ should wax strong, and each of His followers have time to prepare for his flight from Jerusalem, previously to its total destruction by the Romans.

2. The seal of the living God. This angel is represented as the chancellor of the supreme King, and as ascending from the east, "from the rising of the sun." Some understand this of Christ, who is called "the east," Luke i. 78. Four angels, to whom it was given to hurt. Particular agents employed by divine providence in the management of the affairs of the earth, but whether spiritual or material we know not.

3. Till we have sealed the servants of our God. There is manifestly an allusion to Ezek. ix. 4 here. By sealing we are to understand consecrating the persons in a more especial manner to God, and showing, by this mark of God upon them, that they were under His more immediate protection, and that nothing should hurt them. It was a custom in the East, and indeed in the West too, to stamp with a hot iron the name of the owner upon the forehead or shoulder of his slave. It is worthy of remark that not one Christian perished in the siege of Jerusalem; all had left the city and escaped to Pella.

4. I heard the number of them which were sealed. In the number of 144,000 are included all the Jews converted to Christianity; 12,000 out of each of the 12 tribes. But this must be only a certain for an uncertain number; for it is not to be supposed that just 12,000 were converted out of each of the 12 tribes.

5-8. Of the tribe of Juda. First, we are to observe that the tribe of Levi is here mentioned, though that tribe had no inheritance in Israel; but they now belonged to the spiritual priesthood. Secondly, that the tribe of Dan, which had an inheritance, is here omitted, as also the tribe of Ephraim. Thirdly, that the tribe of Joseph is here added in the place of Ephraim. Ephraim and Dan, being the principal promoters of idolatry, are left out in this enumeration.

9. A great multitude. This appears to mean the Church of Christ among the Gentiles, for it was different from that collected from the twelve tribes; and it is here said to be of all

MATTHEW HENRY

III. We have the songs of saints and angels, v. 9–12.

1. The praises offered up by the saints. (1) The posture of these praising saints: they stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, before the Creator and the Mediator. The throne of God would be inaccessible to sinners were it not for a Mediator. (2) Their habit: they were clothed with white robes, and had palms in their hands, as conquerors used to appear in their triumphs.

(3) Their employment: they cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb. This may be understood either as a hosannah, or as a hallelujah. Both the Father and the Son are joined together in these praises; the Father contrived this salvation, the Son purchased it, and those who enjoy it must and will bless the Lord and the Lamb.

2. Here is the song of the angels as they fell on their faces and worshipped (v. 11, 12). What humility then, and what profound reverence, become us vile frail creatures, when we come into the presence of God! They consented to the praises of the saints, their Amen thereto; and then they added more of their own. We see what is the work of heaven, and we ought to get our hearts tuned for it, and to long for that world where our praises, as well as happiness, will be perfected.

A description of the happiness of those who have faithfully served the Lord Jesus Christ.

I. A question asked by one of the elders, not for his own information, but for John's instruction. The lowest saint in heaven knows more than the greatest apostle in the world.

II. The answer returned by the apostle, in which he tacitly acknowledges his own ignorance: Thou knowest.

III. The account given to the apostle concerning that noble army of martyrs. 1. The low and desolate state they had formerly been in; they had been in great tribulation. The way to heaven lies through many tribulations; but tribulation shall not separate us from the love of God.

2. The means by which they had been prepared for the great happiness they now enjoyed, v. 14. This is the only blood that makes the robes of the saints white and clean.

3. The blessedness to which they are now advanced. (1) They are happy in their station, for they are before the throne of God night and day; and he dwells among them. (2) They are happy in their employment, for they serve God continually.

hence, the one singular stands first, followed by the three plurals. kindreds—Greek, "tribes." people—Greek, "peoples." The "first fruits unto the Lamb," the 144,000 (ch. 14:1-4) of Israel, are followed by a copious harvest of all nations, an election out of the Gentiles, as the 144,000 are an election out of Israel (Note, vs. 3). white robes—(Note, ch. 6:11; also ch. 3:5, 18; 4:4). palms in . . . hands—the antitype to Christ's entry into Jerusalem amidst the palm-bearing multitude. This shall be just when He is about to come visibly and take possession of His kingdom. The palm branch is the symbol of joy and triumph. It was used at the feast of tabernacles, on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when they kept feast to God in thanksgiving for the ingathered fruits. The antitype shall be the completed gathering in of the harvest of the elect redeemed here described.

10. cried—Greek, "cry," in the three oldest MSS., A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. It is their continuing, ceaseless employment. Salvation—lit., "THE salvation"; all the praise of our salvation be ascribed to our God. At the Lord's entry into Jerusalem, the type, similarly "salvation" is the cry of the palm-bearing multitudes. Hosanna means "save us now"; taken from Psalm 118:25, in which Psalm (vss. 14, 15, 21, 26) the same connection occurs between salvation, the tabernacles of the righteous, and the Jews' cry to be repeated by the whole nation at Christ's coming, "Blessed be He that cometh in the name of the Lord." 11. The angels, as in ch. 5:11, in their turn take up the anthem of praise. There it was "many angels," here it is "all the angels." stood—"were standing" [ALFORD]. 12. Greek, "The blessing, the glory, the wisdom, the thanksgiving, the honor, the power, the might [the doxology is sevenfold, implying its totality and completeness], unto the ages of the ages." 13. answered—viz., to my thoughts; spoke, asking the question which might have been expected to arise in John's mind from what has gone before. One of the twenty-four elders, representing the Old and New Testament ministry, appropriately acts as interpreter of this vision of the glorified Church. What . . .—Greek order, "These which are arrayed in white robes, WHO are they?" 14. Sir—Greek, "Lord." B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic versions, and CYPRIAN read, "My Lord." A omits "My," as English Version. thou knowest—taken from Ezekiel 37:3. Comparatively ignorant ourselves of divine things, it is well for us to look upward for divinely communicated knowledge. came—rather as Greek, "come"; implying that they are just come. great tribulation—Greek, "THE great tribulation"; "the tribulation, the great one," viz., the tribulation to which the martyrs were exposed under the fifth seal, the same which Christ foretells as about to precede His coming (Matt. 24:21, great tribulation), and followed by the same signs as the sixth seal (Matt. 24:29, 30), cf. Daniel 12:1; including also retrospectively all the tribulation which the saints of all ages have had to pass through. Thus this seventh chapter is a recapitulation of the vision of the six seals, ch. 6, to fill up the outline there given in that part of it which affects the faithful of that day. There, however, their number was waiting to be completed, but here it is completed, and they are seen taken out of the earth before the judgments on the Antichristian apostasy; with their Lord, they, and all His faithful witnesses and disciples of past ages, wait for His coming and their coming to be glorified and reign together with Him.

washed . . . robes . . . white in the blood of . . . Lamb—(ch. 1:5; Isa. 1:18; Heb. 9:14; I John 1:7; cf. Isa. 61:10; Zech. 3:3-5). Faith applies to the heart the purifying blood; once for all for justification, continually throughout the life for sanctification. 15. Therefore—because they are so washed white; for without it they could never have entered God's holy heaven; ch. 22:14, "Blessed are those who wash their robes (the oldest MSS. reading), that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city"; 21:27; Ephesians 5:26, 27. before—Greek, "in the presence of." Matthew 5:8; I Corinthians 13:12, "face to face." throne . . . temple—These are connected because we can approach the heavenly King only through priestly mediation; therefore, Christ is at once King and Priest on His throne. day and night—i.e., perpetually; as those approved of as priests by the Sanhedrim were clothed in white, and kept by turns a perpetual watch in the temple at Jerusalem; cf. as to the singers, I Chronicles 9:33, "day and night"; Psalm 134:1. Strictly "there is no night" in the heavenly sanctuary (ch. 22:5). in his temple—in what is the nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues. Clothed with white robes, as emblems of innocence and purity. With palms in their hands, in token of victory gained over the world, the devil, and the flesh.

10. Salvation to our God. That is, God alone is the Author of the salvation of man; and this salvation is procured for and given to them through the Lamb, as their propitiatory Sacrifice.

11. All the angels. As there is joy in the presence of God among these holy spirits when one sinner repents, no wonder that they take such an interest in the gathering together of such innumerable multitudes who are fully saved from their sins.

12. Saying, Amen. Giving their most cordial and grateful assent to the praises attributed to God and the Lamb. Blessing, and glory. There are here seven different species of praise attributed to God, as in chap. v. 12, where see the note.

13. One of the elders answered. A Hebraism for "spoke." The question is here asked, that the proposer may have the opportunity of answering it.

14. Sir, thou knowest. That is, I do not know, but you can inform me. Came out of great tribulation. Persecutions of every kind.

And have washed their robes. Have obtained their pardon and purity through the blood of the Lamb. Their white robes cannot mean the righteousness of Christ, for this cannot be washed and made white in His own blood. This white linen is said to be "the righteousness of saints," chap. xix. 8, and this is the righteousness in which they stand before the throne. Therefore it is not Christ's righteousness, but it is a righteousness wrought in them by the merit of His blood and the power of His Spirit.

15. Therefore. Because they are washed in the blood of the Lamb, are they before the throne—admitted to the immediate presence, of God.

And serve him day and night. Without ceasing; being filled with the spirit of prayer, faith, love, and obedience.

MATTHEW HENRY

(3) They are happy in their freedom from all the inconveniences of this present life. From all want and sense of want: They hunger and thirst no more; all their wants are supplied. From all sickness and pain: they shall never be scorched by the heat of the sun any more. (4) They are happy in the love and guidance of the Lord Jesus: He shall feed them, he shall lead them to living fountains of waters. (5) They are happy in being delivered from all sorrow. God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. God himself, with his own gentle and gracious hand, will wipe those tears away, and they would not have been without those tears, when God comes to wipe them away. In this he deals with them as a tender father who finds his beloved child in tears, he comforts him, he wipes his eyes, and turns his sorrow into rejoicing.

CHAPTER 8

I. The opening of the last seal. This was to introduce a new set of events.

II. A profound silence in heaven for the space of half an hour. A silence of expectation; great things were upon the wheel of providence, and the church of God, both in heaven and earth, stood silent, to see what God was doing.

III. The trumpets were delivered to the angels who were to sound them.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

heavenly analogue to His temple on earth, for strictly there is "no temple therein" (ch. 21:22), "God and the Lamb are the temple" filling the whole, so that there is no distinction of sacred and secular places; the city is the temple, and the temple the city. Cf. ch. 4:8, "the four living creatures rest not day and night, saying, Holy..." shall dwell among them—rather (Greek, scenosei ep' autous), "shall be the tabernacle over them" (cf. ch. 21:3; Lev. 26:11 especially Isa. 4:5, 6; 8:14; 25:4; Ezek. 37:27). His dwelling among them is to be understood as a secondary truth, besides what is expressed, viz., His being their covert. When once He tabernacled among us as the Word made flesh, He was in great lowliness; then He shall be in great glory. 16. (Isa. 49:10.) hunger no more—as they did here. thirst any more—(John 4:13). the sun—literally, scorching in the East. Also, symbolically, the sun of persecution. neither... light—Greek, "by no means at all... light" (fall). heat—as the sirocco. 17. in the midst of the throne—i.e., in the middle point in front of the throne (ch. 5:6). feed—Greek, "tend as a shepherd." living fountains of water—A, B, Vulgate, and CYPRIAN read, (eternal) "life's fountains of waters." "Living" is not supported by the old authorities.

VSS. 1-13. SEVENTH SEAL. PREPARATION FOR THE SEVEN TRUMPETS. THE FIRST FOUR AND THE CONSEQUENT PLAGUES. 1. was—Greek, "came to pass"; "began to be." silence in heaven about... half an hour—The last seal having been broken open, the book of God's eternal plan of redemption is opened for the Lamb to read to the blessed ones in heaven. The half hour's silence contrasts with the previous jubilant songs of the great multitude, taken up by the angels (ch. 7:9-11). It is the solemn introduction to the employments and enjoyments of the eternal Sabbath-rest of the people of God, commencing with the Lamb's reading the book heretofore sealed up, and which we cannot know till then. In ch. 10:4, similarly at the eve of the sounding of the seventh trumpet, when the seven thunders uttered their voices, John is forbidden to write them. The seventh trumpet (ch. 11:15-19) winds up God's vast plan of providence and grace in redemption, just as the seventh seal brings it to the same consummation. So also the seventh vial, ch. 16:17. In the Jewish temple, musical instruments and singing resounded during the whole time of the offering of the sacrifices, which formed the first part of the service. But at the offering of incense, solemn silence was kept (Ps. 62:1, "My soul waiteth upon God." Margin, "is silent"; 65:1, Margin), the people praying secretly all the time. The half-hour stillness implies, too, the earnest adoring expectation with which the blessed spirits and the angels await the succeeding unfolding of God's judgments. A short space is implied; for even an hour is so used (ch. 17:12; 18:10, 19). 2. the seven angels—Cf. the apocryphal Tobit, 12:15, "I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One." Cf. Luke 1:19, "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God." stood—Greek, "stand." seven trumpets—These come in during the time while the martyrs rest until their fellow servants also, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled; for it is the inhabiters of the earth on whom the judgments fall, on whom also the martyrs prayed that they should fall (ch. 6:10). All the ungodly, and not merely some one portion of them, are meant, all the opponents and obstacles in the way of the kingdom of Christ and His saints, as is proved by ch. 11:15, 18, end, at the close of the seven trumpets. The Revelation becomes more special only as it advances farther (ch. 13; 16:10; 17:18). By the seven trumpets the world kingdoms are overturned to make way for Christ's universal kingdom. The first four are connected together; and the last three, which alone have Woe, woe, woe (vss. 7-13). 3. another angel—not Christ, as many think; for He, in Revelation, is always designated by one of His proper titles; though, doubtless, He is the only true High Priest, the Angel of the Covenant, standing before the golden altar of incense, and there, as Mediator, offering up His people's prayers, rendered acceptable before God through Shall dwell among them. He lives in is own Church, and in the heart of every true believer.

16. They shall hunger no more. They shall no longer be deprived of their religious ordinances and the blessings attendant on them, as they were when in a state of persecution. Neither shall the sun light on them. Their secular rulers, being converted to God, became nursing fathers to the Church. Nor any heat. Neither persecution nor affliction of any kind. These the Hebrews express by the term "heat, scorching."

17. The Lamb. The Lord Jesus, enthroned with His Father in ineffable glory. Shall feed them. Shall communicate to them everything calculated to secure, continue, and increase their happiness. Living fountains of waters. A "spring" in the Hebrew phraseology is termed "living water," because constantly boiling up and running on. By these perpetual fountains we are to understand endless sources of comfort and happiness, which Jesus Christ will open out of His own infinite plenitude to all glorified souls. These eternal living fountains will make an infinite variety in the enjoyments of the blessed. God shall wipe away, in the most affectionate and fatherly manner, all tears from their eyes, all causes of distress and grief. They shall have pure, unmixed happiness.

1. The seventh seal. This is ushered in and opened only by the Lamb. Silence in heaven. This must be a mere metaphor, silence being put here for the deep and solemn expectation of the stupendous things about to take place, which the opening of this seal had produced. When anything prodigious or surprising is expected, all is silence, and even the breath is scarcely heard to be drawn. Half an hour. As heaven may signify the place in which all these representations were made to John, the half an hour may be considered as the time during which no representation was made to him, the time in which God was preparing the august exhibition which follows. There is here, and in the following verses, a strong allusion to different parts of the Temple worship; a presumption that the Temple was still standing, and the regular service of God carried on. The silence here refers to this fact—while the priest went in to burn incense in the holy place, all the people continued in silent mental prayer without till the priest returned. See Luke i. 10. The angel mentioned here appears to execute the office of priest, as we shall by and by see.

2. The seven angels which stood before God. Probably the same as those called "the seven Spirits which are before his throne," chap. i. 4. There is still an allusion here to the seven ministers of the Persian monarchs. See Tobit, chap. xii. 15.

3. Another angel. About to perform the office of priest.

MATTHEW HENRY

IV. To prepare for this, another angel must first offer incense, v. 3. This incense he was to offer up, with the prayers of all the saints, upon the golden altar. 1. All the saints are a praying people; none of the children of God are born dumb. 2. Times of danger should be praying times, and so should times of great expectation; both our fears and our hopes should put us upon prayer. 3. The prayers of the saints themselves stand in need of the incense and intercession of Christ to make them acceptable and effectual. No prayer, thus recommended, was ever denied audience or acceptance. These prayers that were thus accepted in heaven produced great changes upon earth.

The same angel in the same censer took of the fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth, and this presently caused strange commotions, voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. And now, all things being thus prepared, the angels discharge their duty.

I. The first angel sounded the first trumpet, v. 7. It was a very terrible storm—fire, and hail, and blood: a strange mixture! The limitation of it: it fell on the third part of the trees, and on the third part of the grass, and blasted and burnt it up. The most severe calamities have their bounds and limits set them by the great God.

II. The second angel sounded, v. 8. Here was still a limitation to the third part, for in the midst of judgment God remembers mercy.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

the incense of His merit. Here the angel acts merely as a ministering spirit, just as the twenty-four elders have vials full of odors, or incense, which are the prayers of saints, and which they present before the Lamb. there was given unto him—The angel does not provide the incense; it is given to him by Christ, whose meritorious obedience and death are the incense, rendering the saints' prayers well pleasing to God. It is not the saints who give the angel the incense; nor are their prayers identified with the incense; nor do they offer their prayers to him. Christ alone is the Mediator through whom, and to whom, prayer is to be offered. offer it with the prayers—rather as Greek, "give it TO the prayers," so rendering them efficacious as a sweet-smelling savor to God. Christ's merits alone can thus incense our prayers, though the angelic ministry be employed to attach this incense to the prayers. The saints' praying on earth, and the angel's incensing in heaven, are simultaneous. all saints—The prayers both of the saints in the heavenly rest, and of those militant on earth. The martyrs' cry is the foremost, and brings down the ensuing judgments. golden altar—antitype to the earthly. 4. the smoke . . . which came with the prayers . . . ascended up—rather, "the smoke of the incense FOR (or given TO: 'given' being understood from vs. 3) the prayers of the saints ascended up, out of the angel's hand, in the presence of God." The angel merely burns the incense given him by Christ the High Priest, so that its smoke blends with the ascending prayers of the saints. The saints themselves are priests; and the angels in this priestly ministration are but their fellow servants (ch. 19:10). 5. cast it into the earth—i.e., unto the earth: the hot coals off the altar cast on the earth, symbolize God's fiery judgments about to descend on the Church's foes in answer to the saints' incense-perfumed prayers which have just ascended before God, and those of the martyrs. How marvellous the power of the saints' prayers! there were—"there took place," or "ensued." voices . . . thunderings . . .—B places the "voices" after "thunderings." A places it after "lightnings." 6. sound—blow the trumpets. 7. The common feature of the first four trumpets is, the judgments under them affect natural objects, the accessories of life, the earth, trees, grass, the sea, rivers, fountains, the light of the sun, moon, and stars. The last three, the woe-trumpets (vs. 13), affect men's life with pain, death, and hell. The language is evidently drawn from the plagues of Egypt, five or six out of the ten exactly corresponding: the hail, the fire (Exod. 9:24), the WATER turned to blood (Exod. 7:19), the darkness (Exod. 10:21), the locusts (Exod. 10:12), and perhaps the death (ch. 9:18). Judicial retribution in kind characterizes the inflictions of the first four, those elements which had been abused punishing their abusers. mingled with—A, B, and Vulgate read, Greek, ". . . IN blood." So in the case of the second and third vials (ch. 16:3, 4). upon the earth—Greek, "unto the earth." A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac add, "And the third of the earth was burnt up." So under the third trumpet, the third of the rivers is affected: also, under the sixth trumpet, the third part of men are killed. In Zechariah 13:8, 9 this tripartite division appears, but the proportions reversed, two parts killed, only a third preserved. Here, vice versa, two-thirds escape, one-third is smitten. The fire was the predominant element. all green grass—no longer a third, but all is burnt up. 8. as it were—not literally a mountain: a mountain-like burning mass. There is a plain allusion to Jeremiah 51: 25; Amos 7:4. third part of the sea became blood—In the parallel second vial, the whole sea (not merely a third) becomes blood. The overthrow of Jericho, the type of the Antichristian Babylon, after which Israel, under Joshua (the same name as Jesus), victoriously took possession of Canaan, the type of Christ's and His people's kingdom, is perhaps alluded to in the SEVEN trumpets, which end in the overthrow of all Christ's foes, and the setting up of His kingdom. On the seventh day, at the seventh time, when the seven priests blew the seven ram's horn trumpets, the people shouted, and the walls fell flat: and then ensued the blood-shedding of the foe. A mountain-like fiery mass would not naturally change water into blood; nor would the third part of ships be thereby destroyed. The symbolical interpreters take the ships here to be churches. For the Greek here for ships is not the common one, but that used in the Gospels of the apostolic vessel in which Christ taught: and the first churches were in the shape of an inverted ship: and the Greek for destroyed is also used of heretical corruptings (I Tim. 6:5). 10. a lamp—a torch. 11.

ADAM CLARKE

Having a golden censer. This was a preparation peculiar to the day of expiation. "On other days it was the custom of the priest to take fire from the great altar in a silver censer, but on the day of expiation the high priest took the fire from the great altar in a golden censer; and when he was come down from the great altar, he took incense from one of the priests, who brought it to him, and went with it to the golden altar; and while he offered the incense the people prayed without in silence, which is the silence in heaven for half an hour." See Sir Isaac Newton. Much incense, that he should offer it. Judgments of God are now about to be executed. The saints, the genuine Christians, pray much to God for protection. The angelic priest comes with much incense, standing between the living and those consigned to death, and offers his incense to God with the prayers of all saints.

4. The smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers. Though incense itself be an emblem of the prayers of the saints, Ps. cxli. 2, yet here they are said to ascend before God, as well as the incense. It is not said that the angel presents these prayers. He presents the incense, and the prayers ascend with it. The ascending of the incense shows that the prayers and offering were accepted.

5. Cast it into the earth. That is, upon the land of Judea; intimating the judgments and desolations which were now coming upon it, and which appear to be further opened in the sounding of the seven trumpets. There were voices. All these seem to point out the confusion, commotions, distresses, and miseries which were coming upon these people in the wars which were at hand.

6. Prepared themselves to sound. Each took up his trumpet, and stood prepared to blow his blast. Wars are here indicated; the trumpet was the emblem of war.

7. Hail and fire mingled with blood. This was something like the ninth plague of Egypt. See Exod. ix. 18-24: "The Lord sent thunder and hail . . . and fire mingled with the hail"—"and the fire ran along upon the ground. They were cast upon the earth. "Into that land"; viz., Judea, thus often designated. And the third part of trees. Before this clause the Codex Alexandrinus and some thirty-five others have, "And the third part of the land was burnt up." This reading, which is undoubtedly genuine, is found also in the Complutensian Polyglot. Griesbach has received it into the text. The land was wasted; the trees—the chiefs of the nation—were destroyed; and the grass—the common people—slain or carried into captivity. High and low, rich and poor were overwhelmed with one general destruction. This seems to be the meaning of these figures.

8. A great mountain burning with fire. Mountain, in prophetic language, signifies a "kingdom," Jer. li. 25, 27, 30, 58. Great disorders, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are represented by "mountains" being cast "into the midst of the sea," Ps. xlvi. 2. Seas mean peoples, as is shown in this book, chap. xvii. 15. Therefore great commotions in kingdoms and among their inhabitants may be here intended; but to whom, where, and when these happened, or are to happen, we know not. The third part of the sea became blood. Another allusion to the Egyptian plagues, Exod. vii. 20-21. Third part is a rabbinism expressing a considerable number. "When Rabbi Akiba prayed, wept, rent his garments, put off his shoes, and sat in the dust, the world was struck with a curse; and then the third part of the olives, the third part of the wheat, and the third part of the barley, was smitten."

9. The third part of the ships were destroyed. These judgments seem to be poured out upon some maritime nation, destroying much of its population, and much of its traffic.

10. There fell a great star from heaven. This has given rise to various conjectures. Some say the star means Attila and his Huns; others, Genseric with his Vandals falling on the city of Rome; others, Eleazer, the son of Annus,

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The third angel sounded, v. 10. A star from heaven fell: Upon a third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters. It turned those springs and streams into wormwood, made them very bitter, that men were poisoned by them. The souls of men found their ruin where they sought for their refreshment.

IV. The fourth angel sounded. The nature of this calamity; it was darkness; it fell therefore upon the great luminaries of the heaven, that give light to the world—the sun, and the moon, and the stars. The limitation: it was confined to a third part of these luminaries; there was some light both of the sun by day, and of the moon and stars by night. Where the gospel comes to a people, and is but coldly received, it is usually followed with dreadful judgments. God gives warning to men of his judgments before he sends them, so that, if a people be surprised, it is their own fault. Yet God does not in this world stir up all his wrath, but sets bounds to the most terrible judgments.

V. Before the other three trumpets are sounded here is solemn warning how terrible the calamities would be that should follow them, v. 13. The messenger was an angel flying in the midst of heaven, as in haste. Here are three woes, to show how much the calamities coming should exceed those that had been already. If less judgments do not take effect, but the church and the world grow worse under them, they must expect greater.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

The symbolizers interpret the star fallen from heaven as a chief minister (ARIUS, according to BULLINGER, BENGEL, and others; or some future false teacher, if, as is more likely, the event be still future) falling from his high place in the Church, and instead of shining with heavenly light as a star, becoming a torch lit with earthly fire and smouldering with smoke. And "wormwood," though medicinal in some cases, if used as ordinary water would not only be disagreeable to the taste, but also fatal to life: so "heretical wormwood changes the sweet Siloas of Scripture into deadly Marahs" [WORDSWORTH]. Contrast the converse change of bitter Marah water into sweet, Exodus 15:23. 12. third part—not a total obscuration as in the sixth seal (ch. 6:12, 13). This partial obscuration, therefore, comes between the prayers of the martyrs under the fifth seal, and the last overwhelming judgments on the ungodly under the sixth seal, at the eve of Christ's coming. the night likewise—withdrew a third part of the light which the bright Eastern moon and stars ordinarily afford. 13. an angel—A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read for "angel," which is supported by none of the oldest MSS., "an eagle": the symbol of judgment descending fatally from on high; the king of birds pouncing on the prey. Cf. this fourth trumpet and the flying eagle with the fourth seal introduced by the fourth living creature, "like a flying eagle," ch. 4:7; 6:7, 8: the aspect of Jesus as presented by the fourth Evangelist. John is compared in the cherubim (according to the primitive interpretation) to a flying eagle: Christ's divine majesty in this similitude is set forth in the Gospel according to John, His judicial visitations in the Revelation of John. Contrast "another angel," or messenger, with "the everlasting Gospel," ch. 14:6. through the midst of heaven—Greek, "in the mid-heaven," i.e., in the part of the sky where the sun reaches the meridian: in such a position as that the eagle is an object conspicuous to all. the inhabiters of the earth—the ungodly, the "men of the world," whose "portion is in this life," upon whom the martyrs had prayed that their blood might be avenged (ch. 6:10). Not that they sought personal revenge, but their zeal was for the honor of God against the foes of God and His Church. the other—Greek, "the remaining voices."

ADAM CLARKE

spurning the emperor's victims, and exciting the fury of the Zealots; others, Arius, infecting the pure Christian doctrine with his heresy. It certainly cannot mean all these, and probably none of them. Let the reader judge.

11. The star is called Wormwood. So called from the bitter or distressing effects produced by its influence.

12. The third part of the sun . . . moon . . . stars . . . was darkened. Supposed to mean Rome, with her senates, consuls, eclipsed by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, and Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, in the fifth century. But all this is uncertain.

13. I . . . heard an angel flying. Instead of an angel flying, almost every MS. and version of note has "an eagle flying." The eagle was the symbol of the Romans, and was always on their ensigns. The three woes which are here expressed were probably to be executed by this people, and upon the Jews and their commonwealth. Taken in this sense the symbols appear consistent and appropriate; and the reading "eagle" instead of angel is undoubtedly genuine, and Griesbach has received it into the text.

1. A star falling from heaven to the earth. 2. To this fallen star was given the key of the bottomless pit. It becomes the devil's turnkey, to let loose the powers of hell against the churches of Christ. 3. Upon the opening of the bottomless pit there arose a great smoke, which darkened the sun and the air. The devil carries on his designs by extinguishing light and knowledge. Wretched souls follow him in the dark, or they durst not follow him. 4. Out of this dark smoke there came a swarm of locusts, and these had, by the just permission of God, power to hurt those who had not the mark of God in their foreheads. 5. The hurt they were to do them was not a bodily, but a spiritual hurt. They should not in a military way destroy all by fire and sword; the trees and the grass should be untouched, and those they hurt should not be slain. 6. They had no power so much as to hurt those who had the seal of God in their foreheads.

7. The power given to these factors for hell is limited in point of time: five months, a certain season, and but a short season.

VSS. 1-21. THE FIFTH TRUMPET: THE FALLEN STAR OPENS THE ABYSS WHENCE ISSUE LOCUSTS. THE SIXTH TRUMPET. FOUR ANGELS AT THE EUPHRATES LOOSED. 1. The last three trumpets of the seven are called, from ch. 8:13, the woe-trumpets. fall—rather as Greek, "fallen." When John saw it, it was not in the act of falling, but had fallen already. This is a connecting link of this fifth trumpet with ch. 12:8, 9, 12, "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth, for the devil is come down. . . ." Cf. Isaiah 14:12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, Lucifer, son of the morning!" the bottomless pit—Greek, "the pit of the abyss"; the orifice of the hell where Satan and his demons dwell. 3. upon—Greek, "unto," or "into." as the scorpions of the earth—as contrasted with the "locusts" which come up from hell, and are not "of the earth." have power—viz., to sting.

4. not hurt the grass . . . neither . . . green thing . . . neither . . . tree—the food on which they ordinarily prey. Therefore, not natural and ordinary locusts. Their natural instinct is supernaturally restrained to mark the judgment as altogether divine. those men which—Greek, "the men whosoever." in . . .—Greek, "upon their forehead." Thus this fifth trumpet is proved to follow the sealing in ch. 7, under the sixth seal. None of the saints are hurt by these locusts, which is not true of the saints in Mohammed's attack, who is supposed by many to be meant by the locusts; for many true believers fell in the Mohammedan invasions of Christendom. 5. they . . . they—The subject changes: the first "they" is the locusts; the second is the unsealed. five months—the ordinary time in the year during which locusts continue their ravages.

their torment—the torment of the sufferers. This fifth verse and vs. 6 cannot refer to an invading army. For an army would kill, and not merely torment.

CHAPTER 9

1. A star fall from heaven. An angel encompassed with light suddenly descended, and seemed like a star falling from heaven. The key of the bottomless pit. Power to inundate the earth with a flood of temporal calamities and moral evils.

2. He opened the bottomless pit. "The pit of the bottomless deep." Some think the angel means Satan, and the bottomless pit hell. Some suppose Mohammed is meant. There arose a smoke. False doctrine, obscuring the true light of heaven.

3. Locusts. Vast hordes of military troops; the description which follows certainly agrees better with the Saracens than with any other people or nation, but may also apply to the Romans. As the scorpions of the earth have power. Namely, to hurt men by stinging them.

4. They should not hurt the grass. Neither the common people, the men of middling condition, nor the nobles. However, this appears rather to refer to the prudent counsels of a military chief, not to destroy the crops and herbage, of which they might have need in their campaigns. Which have not the seal of God. All false, hypocritical, and heterodox Christians.

5. To them it was given. That is, they were permitted. That they should be tormented five months. Some take these months literally, and apply them to the conduct of the Zealots who, from May to September, in the year of the siege, produced dreadful contests among the people; or to the afflictions brought upon the Jews by Cestius Gallus when he came against Jerusalem, before which he lay one whole summer, or nearly five months. Others consider the months as being prophetical months, each day being reckoned for a year; therefore this period must amount to 150 years, counting 30 days to each month, as was the general custom of the Asiatics. Their torment was as the torment of a scorpion. The phraseology here is

8. Though it would be short, it would be very sharp, v. 6. 9. These locusts were of a monstrous size and shape, v. 7, 8, &c. They were equipped for their work like horses prepared to battle.

They had crowns like gold on their heads; it was not a true, but a counterfeit authority.

They had the show of wisdom and sagacity, the faces of men, though the spirit of devils.

They had all the allurements of seeming beauty—hair like women. Though they appeared with the tenderness of women, they were really cruel creatures.

They had the defence and protection of earthly powers—breastplates of iron. They made a mighty noise in the world, and the noise of their motion was like that of an army with chariots and horses. Though at first they soothed and flattered men with a fair appearance, there was a sting in their tails.

The king and commander of this hellish squadron is here described as an angel. The angel of the bottomless pit; an angel still, but a fallen angel, fallen into the bottomless pit. His true name is Abaddon, Apollyon—a destroyer, for that is his business, to which he diligently attends.

J. A. SEISS:

Hell and hell-torments are not the mere fictions which some have pronounced them. Neither are they as remote from this present world as men often dream. There is a fiery abyss, with myriads of evil beings in it, malignant and horrible, and there is but a door between this world and that. Heaven is just as near; but heaven is above, and hell is beneath. Mortal man and his world lie between two mighty, opposite, spiritual spheres, both touching directly upon him, each operative to conform him to itself as he yields to one or the other, to be conjoined eventually to the society on high, or to companionship with devils and all evil beings beneath. To doubt this is to mistake concerning the most momentous things of our existence, and to have all our senses closed to the most startling realities of our lives. As we are heavenly in our inclinations and efforts, and open and yielding to things Divine, heaven opens to us, and spirits of heaven become our helpers, comforters, protectors, and guides; and as we are devilish in our temper, unbelieving, defiant of God, and self-sufficient, the doors of separation between us and hell gradually yield, and the smoke of the pit gathers over us, and the spirits of perdition come forth to move among us and to do us mischief. And at the last, as the saints of God are taken up out of the world on the one side, the angels of hell with their malignity and torments are let in on the other.

—The Apocalypse

I. The preface to this vision, v. 13, 14. When nations are ripe for punishment, those instruments of God's anger that were before restrained are let loose upon them, v. 14.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

6. shall desire—Greek, "eagerly desire"; set their mind on. shall flee—So B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read. But A and ℵ read, "fleeth," viz., continually. In ch. 6:16, which is at a later stage of God's judgments, the ungodly seek annihilation, not from the torment of their suffering, but from fear of the face of the Lamb before whom they have to stand. 7. prepared unto battle—Greek, "made ready unto war." Cf. Note, Joel 2:4, where the resemblance of locusts to horses is traced: the plates of a horse armed for battle are an image on a larger scale of the outer shell of the locust. crowns—(Nah. 3:17). ELLIOTT explains this of the turbans of Mohammedans. But how could turbans be "like gold?" ALFORD understands it of the head of the locusts actually ending in a crown-shaped fillet which resembled gold in its material. as the faces of men—The "as" seems to imply the locusts here do not mean men. At the same time they are not natural locusts, for these do not sting men (vs. 5). They must be supernatural. 8. hair of women—long and flowing. An Arabic proverb compares the antlers of locusts to the hair of girls. EWALD in ALFORD understands the allusion to be to the hair on the legs or bodies of the locusts: cf. "rough caterpillars," Jeremiah 51:27. as the teeth of lions—(Joel 1:6, as to locusts). 9. as it were breastplates of iron—not such as forms the thorax of the natural locust. as . . . chariots (Joel 2:5-7). battle—Greek, "war." 10. tails like unto scorpions—like unto the tails of scorpions. and there were stings—There is no oldest MS. for this reading. A, B, ℵ Syriac, and Coptic read, "and (they have) stings: and in their tails (is) their power (lit., 'authority': authorized power) to hurt." 11. And—so Syriac. But A, B, and ℵ, omit "and." had—Greek, "have." a king . . . which is the angel—English Version, agreeing with A, ℵ, reads the (Greek) article before "angel," in which reading we must translate, "They have as king over them the angel . . ." Satan (cf. vs. 1). Omitting the article with B, we must translate, "They have as king an angel . . .": one of the chief demons under Satan: I prefer from vs. 1, the former. bottomless pit—Greek, "abyss." Abaddon—i.e., perdition or destruction (Job 26:6; Prov. 27:20). The locusts are supernatural instruments in the hands of Satan to torment, and yet not kill, the ungodly, under this fifth trumpet. Just as in the case of godly Job, Satan was allowed to torment with elephantiasis, but not to touch his life. In vs. 20, these two woe-trumpets are expressly called "plagues." ANDREAS OF CÆSAREA, A.D. 500, held, in his Commentary on Revelation, that the locusts mean evil spirits again permitted to come forth on earth and afflict men with various plagues. 12. Greek, "The one woe." hereafter—Greek, "after these things." I agree with ALFORD and DE BURGH, that these locusts from the abyss refer to judgments about to fall on the ungodly immediately before Christ's second advent. None of the interpretations which regard them as past, are satisfactory. Joel 1:2-7; 2:1-11, is strictly parallel and expressly refers (2:11) to THE DAY OF THE LORD GREAT AND VERY TERRIBLE: vs. 10 gives the portents accompanying the day of the Lord's coming, the earth quaking, the heavens trembling, the sun, moon, and stars, withdrawing their shining: vs. 18. 31, 32, also point to the immediately succeeding deliverance of Jerusalem: cf. also, the previous last conflict in the valley of Jehoshaphat, and the dwelling of God thenceforth in Zion, blessing Judah. 13. a voice—lit., "one voice." from—Greek, "out of." the four horns—A, Vulgate (Amiatinus MS.), Coptic, and Syriac omit "four." B and CYPRIAN support it. The four horns together gave forth their voice, not diverse, but one. God's revelation (e.g., the Gospel), though in its aspects fourfold (four expressing world-wide extension: whence four is the number of the Evangelists), still has but one and the same voice. However, from the parallelism of this sixth trumpet to the fifth seal (ch. 6:9, 10), the martyrs' cry for the avenging of their blood from the altar reaching its consummation under the sixth seal and sixth trumpet, I prefer understanding this cry from the four corners of the altar to refer to the saints' prayerful cry from the four quarters of the world, incensed by the angel, and ascending to God from the golden altar of incense, and bringing down in consequence fiery judgments. omits the whole clause, "one from the four horns." 14. in . . .—Greek, epi to potamo; "on," or "at the great river." Euphrates—(Cf. ch. 16:12). The river whereat Babylon, the ancient foe of God's people was situated. Again, whether from the literal region of the Euphrates, or from the spiritual Babylon (the peculiar, and probably refers to the warlike weapon called a scorpion, several of which, or men armed with them, Cestius Gallus brought with him in his army. Isidore describes this scorpion thus: "The scorpion is a poisoned arrow shot from a bow or other instrument, which, when it wounds a man, deposits the poison with which it is covered in the wound; whence it has the name of scorpion."

6. In those days shall men seek death. So distressing shall be their sufferings and torment that they shall long for death in any form, to be rescued from the evils of life.

7. The locusts were like unto horses. This description of the locusts appears to be taken from Joel ii. 4. The whole of this symbolical description of an overwhelming military force agrees very well with the troops of Mohammed. The Arabs are the most expert horsemen in the world; they live so much on horseback that the horse and his rider seem to make but one animal. The Romans also were eminent for their cavalry. Crowns like gold. Not only alluding to their costly turbans, but to the extent of their conquests and the multitude of powers which they subdued. Their faces were as the faces of men. That is, though locusts symbolically, they are really men.

8. Hair as the hair of women. No razor passes upon their flesh; their hair long, and their beards unshaven. Their teeth were as the teeth of lions. They are ferocious and cruel.

9. They had breastplates . . . of iron. They seemed to be invulnerable, for no force availed against them. The sound of their wings. Their hanging weapons and military trappings, with the clang of their shields and swords when they make their fierce onsets. This simile is borrowed from Joel ii. 5-7.

10. They had tails like unto scorpions. This may refer to the consequences of their victories. They infected the conquered with their pernicious doctrines. Their power was to hurt men five months. The locusts make their principal ravages during the five summer months. But probably these may be prophetic months, as above, in v. 5—150 years.

11. A king over them. A supreme head; some think Mohammed, some think Vespasian. The angel of the bottomless pit. The chief envoy of Satan. Abaddon. From abad, "he destroyed." Apollyon. From apo, intensive, and ollyo, "to destroy." The meaning is the same in both Hebrew and Greek.

12. One woe is past. That is, the woe or desolation by the symbolical scorpions. There come two woes more. In the trumpets of the sixth and seventh angels.

13. The four horns of the golden altar. This is another not very obscure indication that the Jewish Temple was yet standing.

14. Loose the four angels. These four angels bound, hitherto restrained, in the Euphrates, are by some supposed to be the Arabs, the Saracens, the Tartars, or the Turks; by others,

MATTHEW HENRY

II. The vision itself, v. 15, 16. 1. The time of their military operations is limited to an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. Prophetic characters of time are hardly to be understood by us.

How far the execution shall prevail, even to a third part of the inhabitants of the earth. 2. The army that was to execute this great commission is mustered, and the number found to be of horsemen two hundred thousand thousand; but we are left to guess what the infantry must be. In general, it tells us, the armies should be vastly great.

3. Their formidable equipage and appearance, v. 17. As the horses were fierce, like lions, so those who sat upon them were clad in bright and costly armour. 4. The vast havoc and desolation that they made. 5. Their artillery, by which they made such slaughter, described by fire, smoke, and brimstone, issuing out of the mouths of their horses, and the stings that were in their tails.

6. The impenitency of the antichristian generation under these dreadful judgments (v. 20). They still persisted in those sins for which God was so severely punishing them. Though God has revealed his wrath from heaven against them, they are obstinate, and impenitent. Impenitency under divine judgments is an iniquity that will be the ruin of sinners; for where God judges he will overcome.

apostate Church, especially ROME), four angelic ministers of God's judgments shall go forth, assembling an army of horsemen throughout the four quarters of the earth, to slay a third of men, the brunt of the visitation shall be on Palestine. 15. were—"which had been prepared" [TREGELLES rightly]. for an hour . . .—rather as Greek, "for (i.e., against) THE hour, and day, and month, and year," viz., appointed by God. The Greek article (teen), put once only before all the periods, implies that the hour in the day, and the day in the month, and the month in the year, and the year itself, had been definitely fixed by God. The article would have been omitted had a sum-total of periods been specified, viz., 391 years and one month (the period from A.D. 1281, when the Turks first conquered the Christians, to 1672, their last conquest of them, since which last date their empire has declined). slay—not merely to "hurt" (vs. 10), as in the fifth trumpet. third part—(Note, ch. 8:7-12). of men—viz., of earthy men, ch. 8:13, "inhabiters of the earth," as distinguished from God's sealed people (of which the sealed of Israel, ch. 7, form the nucleus). 16. Cf. with these 200,000,000, Psalm 68:17; Daniel 7:10. The hosts here are evidently, from their numbers and their appearance (vs. 17), not merely human hosts, but probably infernal, though constrained to work out God's will (cf. vss. 1, 2). and I heard—A, B, ℵ, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and CYPRIAN omit "and." 17. thus—as follows. of fire—the fiery color of the breastplates answering to the fire which issued out of their mouths. of jacinth—lit., "of hyacinth color," the hyacinth of the ancients answering to our dark blue iris: thus, their dark, dull-colored breastplates correspond to the smoke out of their mouths. brimstone—sulphur-colored: answering to the brimstone or sulphur out of their mouths. 18. By these three—A, B. C, and ℵ read (apo for kupo), "From"; implying the direction whence the slaughter came; not direct instrumentality as "by" implies. A, B, C, ℵ also add "plagues" after "three." English Version reading, which omits it, is not well supported. by the fire—Greek, "owing to the fire," lit., "out of." 19. their—A, B, C and ℵ read, "the power of the horses." in their mouth—whence issued the fire, smoke, and brimstone (vs. 17). Many interpreters understand the horsemen to refer to the myriads of Turkish cavalry arrayed in scarlet, blue, and yellow (fire, hyacinth, and brimstone), the lion-headed horses denoting their invincible courage, and the fire and brimstone out of their mouths, the gunpowder and artillery introduced into Europe about this time, and employed by the Turks; the tails, like serpents, having a venomous sting, the false religion of Mohammed supplanting Christianity, or, as ELLIOTT thinks, the Turkish pachas' horsetails, worn as a symbol of authority. (!) All this is very doubtful. Considering the parallelism of this sixth trumpet to the sixth seal, the likelihood is that events are intended immediately preceding the Lord's coming. "The false prophet" (as Isa. 9:15 proves), or second beast, having the horns of a lamb, but speaking as the dragon, who supports by lying miracles the final Antichrist, seems to me to be intended. Mohammed, doubtless, is a forerunner of him, but not the exhaustive fulfiller of the prophecy here: Satan will, probably, towards the end, bring out all the powers of hell for the last conflict (Note, "devils," vs. 20; cf. vss. 1, 2, 17, 18). with them—with the serpent heads and their venomous fangs. 20. the rest of the men—i.e., the ungodly. yet—So A, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. B and ℵ read, "did not even repent of," viz., so as to give up "the works . . . ." Like Pharaoh hardening his heart against repentance notwithstanding the plagues. of their hands—(Deut. 31:29). Especially the idols made by their hands. Cf. ch. 13:14, 15, "the image of the beast" ch. 19: 20. that they should not—So B reads. But A, C, and ℵ read. ". . . shall not": implying a prophecy of certainty that it shall be so. devils—Greek, "demons" which lurk beneath the idols which idolaters worship. 21. sorceries—witchcrafts by means of drugs (so the Greek). One of the fruits of the unrenewed flesh: the sin of the heathen: about to be repeated by apostate Christians in the last days, ch. 22:15 "sorcerers." The heathen who shall have rejected the proffered Gospel and clung to their fleshly lusts, and apostate Christians who shall have relapsed into the same shall share the same terrible judgments. The worship of images was established in the East in A.D. 842. fornication—singular: whereas the other sins are in the plural. Other sins are perpetrated at intervals: those lacking purity of heart indulge in one perpetual fornication [BENGEL].

ADAM CLARKE

Vespasian's four generals, one in Arabia, one in Africa, one in Alexandria, and one in Palestine.

15. For an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. We have in this place a year resolved into its component parts. Twenty-four hours constitute a day; seven days make a week; four weeks make a month; and twelve months make a year. Probably no more is meant than that these four angels were "at all times" prepared and permitted to inflict evil on the people against whom they had received their commission. There are some who understand these divisions of time as prophetical periods, and to these I must refer, not professing to discuss such uncertainties.

16. Two hundred thousand thousand. "Two myriads of myriads"; that is, 200,000,000; an army that was never yet got together from the foundation of the world, and could not find forage in any part of the earth. Perhaps it only means vast numbers, multitudes without number. Such a number might be literally true of the locusts. Those who will have their particular system supported by the images in this most obscure book tell us that the number here means all the soldiers that were employed in this war, from its commencement to its end!

17. Breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone. That is, red, blue, and yellow; the first is the color of fire, the second of jacinth, and the third of sulphur. And the heads of the horses. Is this an allegorical description of great ordnance? Fire, smoke, and brimstone is a good allegorical representation of gunpowder. The Ottomans made great use of heavy artillery in their wars with the Greeks of the lower empire.

18. By these three was the third part of men killed. That is, By these was great carnage made.

19. Their power is in their mouth. From these the destructive balls are projected. And in their tails, the breech where the charge of gunpowder is lodged. Their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads. If cannons are intended, the description, though allegorical, is plain enough; for brass ordnance especially are frequently thus ornamented, both at their muzzles and at their breech.

20. Yet repented not. The commission which these horsemen had was against idolaters; and though multitudes of them were destroyed, yet the residue continued their senseless attachment to dumb idols, and therefore heavier judgments might be expected. These things are supposed to refer to the desolation brought upon the Greek church by the Ottomans, who entirely ruined that church and the Greek empire. The church which was then remaining was the Latin or Western church, which was not at all corrected by the judgments which fell upon the Eastern church, but continued its senseless adoration of angels, saints, relics, and does so to the present day. If therefore God's wrath be kindled against such, this church has much to fear.

21. Neither repented they of their murders. Their cruelties towards the genuine followers of God the Albigenses, and Waldenses, and others, against whom they published crusades, and hunted them down, and butchered them in the most shocking manner. The innumerable murders by the horrible Inquisition need not be mentioned. Their sorceries. Those who apply this also to the Romish church understand by it the various tricks, sleights of hand, or legerdemain by which they impose on the common people in causing images of Christ to bleed, and the various pretended miracles wrought at the tombs of pretended saints, holy wells, and suchlike. Fornication. Giving that honor to various creatures which is due only to the Creator. Their thefts. Their exactions and impositions on men for indulgences, pardons. These things may be intended, but it is going too far to say that this is the true interpretation. And yet to express any doubt on this subject is with some little else than heresy. If such men can see these things so clearly in such obscure prophecies, let them be thankful for their sight, and indulgent to those who still sit in darkness.

Another vision the apostle was favoured with.

I. The person communicating this discovery to John—an angel from heaven, another mighty angel.

II. His station and posture: He set his right foot upon the sea and his left foot upon the earth. And he held in his hand a little book opened, probably the same that was before sealed, but was now opened, and gradually fulfilled by him.

III. His awful voice (v. 3) was echoed by seven thunders, seven solemn and terrible ways of discovering the mind of God.

IV. The prohibition given to the apostle, v. 4. The apostle was for preserving and publishing everything he saw and heard in these visions, but the time had not yet come.

V. The solemn oath taken by this mighty angel. He lifted up his hand to heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever, that there shall be time no longer; either,

1. That there shall be now no longer delay in fulfilling the predictions of this book than till the last angel should sound, v. 7. Or, 2. That when this mystery of God is finished time itself shall be no more.

Vss. 1-11. VISION OF THE LITTLE BOOK.

1. another mighty angel—as distinguished from the mighty angel who asked as to the former and more comprehensive book (ch. 5:2), "Who is worthy to open the book?" clothed with a cloud—the emblem of God coming in judgment. a—A, B, C. and ℵ read "the"; referring to (ch. 4:3) the rainbow already mentioned. rainbow upon his head—the emblem of covenant mercy to God's people, amidst judgments on God's foes. Resumed from ch. 4:3 (see Note there). face as . . . the sun—(ch. 1:16 18:1). feet as pillars of fire—(ch. 1:15; Ezek. 1:7). The angel, as representative of Christ, reflects His glory and bears the insignia attributed in ch. 1:15, 16; 4:3, to Christ Himself. The pillar of fire by night led Israel through the wilderness, and was the symbol of God's presence. 2. he had—Greek, "Having." in his hand in his left hand: as in vs. 5 (Note), he lifts up his right hand to heaven. a little book—a roll little in comparison with the "book" (ch. 5:1) which contained the whole vast scheme of God's purposes, not to be fully read till the final consummation. This other, a less book, contained only a portion which John was now to make his own (vss. 9, 11), and then to use in prophesying to others.

upon the sea . . . earth—Though the beast with seven heads is about to arise out of the sea (ch. 13:1), and the beast with two horns like a lamb (ch. 13:11) out of the earth, yet it is but for a time, and that time shall no longer be (vss. 6, 7) when once the seventh trumpet is about to sound; the angel with his right foot on the sea, and his left on the earth, claims both as God's, and as about soon to be cleared of the usurper and his followers. 3. as . . . lion—Christ, whom the angel represents, is often so symbolized (ch. 5:5, "the Lion of the tribe of Juda"). seven thunders—Greek, "the seven thunders." They form part of the Apocalyptic symbolism; and so are marked by the article as well known. Thus thunderings marked the opening of the seventh seal (ch. 8:1, 5); so also at the seventh vial (ch. 16:17, 18). uttered their—Greek, "spake their own voices"; i.e., voices peculiarly their own, and not now revealed to men. 4. when—ℵ reads, "Whatsoever things." But most MSS. support English Version. uttered their voices—A, B, C, and ℵ omit "their voices." Then translate, "had spoken." unto me—omitted by A, B, C, ℵ, and Syriac. Seal up—the opposite command to ch. 22:20. Even though at the time of the end the things sealed in Daniel's time were to be revealed, yet not so the voices of these thunders. Though heard by John, they were not to be imparted by him to others in this book of Revelation; so terrible are they that God in mercy withholds them, since "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." 5. lifted up his hand—So A and Vulgate read. But B, C, ℵ Syriac, and Coptic, ". . . his right hand." It was customary to lift up the hand towards heaven, appealing to the God of truth, in taking a solemn oath. 6. liveth for ever and ever—Greek, "liveth unto the ages of the ages" (cf. Dan. 12:7). created heaven . . . earth . . . sea . . .—This detailed designation of God as the Creator, is appropriate to the subject of the angel's oath, viz., the consummating of the mystery of God (vs. 7), which can surely be brought to pass by the same Almighty power that created all things, and by none else. that there should be time no longer—Greek, "that time (i.e., an interval of time) no longer shall be." The martyrs shall have no longer a time to wait for the accomplishment of their prayers for the purgation of the earth by the judgments which shall remove their and God's foes from it (ch. 6:11). The appointed season or time of delay is at an end (the same Greek is here as in ch. 6:11, chronus). Not as English Version implies, Time shall end and eternity begin. 7. But—connected with vs. 6. "There shall be no longer time (i.e., delay), but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he is about to (so the Greek) sound his trumpet (so the Greek), then (lit., "also"; which conjunction often introduces the consequent member of a sentence) the mystery of God is finished," lit., "has been finished"; the prophet regarding the future as certain as if it were past. A, C, ℵ, and Coptic read the past tense (Greek, etelesthee). B reads, as English Version, the future (Greek, telesthee). should be finished" (cf. ch. 11:15-18). Sweet consolation to the waiting saints! The seventh trumpet shall be sounded without further delay. the mystery of God—the theme of the "little book," and so of the remainder of the Apocalypse. What a grand contrast to the "mystery of iniquity—Babylon!" The mystery of God's scheme of redemption, once hidden in God's secret counsel and dimly shadowed forth in types and prophecies, but now more and more clearly revealed according as the Gospel-kingdom develops itself, up to its fullest consummation at the end. declared to—Greek, "declared the glad tidings to." "The mystery of God" is the Gospel glad tidings. The office of the prophets is to receive the glad tidings from God, in order to declare them to others. The final consummation is the great theme of the Gospel announced to, and by, the prophets (cf. Gal. 3:8). 8. spake . . . and said—So Syriac and Coptic read. But A, B, C, "(I heard) again speaking with me, and saying" (Greek, lalousan . . . legousan). little book—So ℵ and B read. But A and C, "the book." 9. I went—Greek, "I went away." John here leaves heaven, his standingpoint of observation heretofore, to be near the angel standing on the earth and sea. Give—A, B, C, and Vulgate read the infinitive, "Telling him to give." eat it up—appropriate its contents so entirely as to be assimilated with (as food), and become part of thyself, so as to impart them the more vividly to others. belly bitter—parallel to Ezekiel 2:10, "There was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe." as honey—(Ps. 19:10 119:103). Honey, sweet to the mouth, sometimes turns into bile in the stomach. The thought that God would be glorified (ch. 11:3-6, 11-18) gave him the sweetest pleasure. Yet, afterwards the belly, or carnal natural feeling, was embittered with grief at the prophecy of the coming bitter persecutions of the Church (ch. 11:7-10); cf. John 16:1, 2. The revelation of the secrets of futurity is sweet to one at first, but bitter and distasteful to our natural man, when we learn the cross which is to be borne before the crown shall be won. John was grieved at the coming apostasy and the sufferings of the Church at the hands of Antichrist. 10. the little book—So A and C, but B, ℵ, and Vulgate, "the book." was bitter—Greek, "was embittered." 11. he said—A, B, and Vulgate read, "they say unto me"; an indefinite expression for "it was said unto me." Thou must—The obligation lies upon thee, as the servant of God, to prophesy at His command. again—as thou didst already in the previous part of this book of Revelation. before . . .—rather as Greek (epilaois), "concerning many peoples . . .", viz., in their relation to the Church.

II. An account of the taste which this little book would have; at first, while in his mouth, sweet. But, when this book of prophecy was more thoroughly digested by the apostle, the contents would be bitter; these were things so awful and terrible, that the foresight of them would not be pleasant.

sounding of the seventh angel. On these points there is little agreement among learned men. Whether it mean the destruction of Jerusalem, or the destruction of the papal power, or something else, we know not. And yet with what confidence do men speak of the meaning of these hidden things! Declared to his servants the prophets. It is most likely, therefore, that this trumpet belongs to the Jewish state.

8. Take the little book which is open. Learn from this angel what should be published to the world.

9. Take it, and eat it up. Fully comprehend its meaning; study it thoroughly.

10. It was in my mouth sweet as honey. There was in it some pleasing, some unpleasing, intelligence. I read of the consolations and protection of the true worshippers of God, and did rejoice; I read of the persecutions of the Church, and was distressed.

11. Thou must prophesy again. You must write, not only for the instruction of the Jews in Palestine, but of those in the different provinces, as well as the heathens and heathen emperors and potentates in general.

CHAPTER 11

This prophetical passage about measuring the temple is a plain reference to what we find in Ezekiel's vision, Ezek. xl. 3, &c. The design of this measurement seems to be the preservation of it in those times of public danger and calamity that are here foretold.

I. How much was to be measured. 1. The temple: the gospel church in general. 2. The altar. Whether the church has the true altars. 3. The worshippers too must be measured, whether they make God's glory their end and his word their rule.

Vss. 1-19. MEASUREMENT OF THE TEMPLE. THE TWO WITNESSES' TESTIMONY: THEIR DEATH, RESURRECTION, AND ASCENSION: THE EARTHQUAKE: THE THIRD WOE: THE SEVENTH TRUMPET USHERS IN CHRIST'S KINGDOM. THANKSGIVING OF THE TWENTY-FOUR ELDERS. This eleventh chapter is a compendious summary of, and introduction to, the more detailed prophecies of the same events to come in chs. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.

1. and the angel stood—omitted in A, Vulgate, and Coptic. Supported by B and Syriac. If it be omitted, the "reed" will, in construction, agree with "saying." So WORDSWORTH takes it. The reed, the canon of Scripture, the measuring reed of the Church, our rule of faith, speaks. So in ch. 16:7 the altar is personified as speaking (cf. Note there). The Spirit speaks in the canon of Scripture (the word canon is derived from Hebrew, kaneh, "a reed," the word here used; and John it was who completed the canon). the temple—Greek, naon (as distinguished from the Greek, hieron, or temple in general), the Holy Place, "the sanctuary." the altar—of incense; for it alone was in the sanctuary (Greek, naos). The measurement of the Holy place seems to me to stand parallel to the sealing of the elect of Israel under the sixth seal. God's elect are symbolized by the sanctuary at Jerusalem (I Cor. 3:16, 17, where the same Greek word, naos, occurs for "temple," as here). Literal Israel in Jerusalem, and with the temple restored (Ezek. 40: 3, 5, where also the temple is measured with the measuring reed, 41, 42, 43, 44), shall stand at the head of the elect Church. The measuring implies at once the exactness of the proportions of the temple to be restored, and the definite completeness (not one being wanting) of the numbers of the Israelite and of the Gentile elections. The literal temple at Jerusalem shall be the typical forerunner of the heavenly Jerusalem, in which there shall be all temple, and no portion exclusively set apart as temple. 2. But—Greek, "And." the court

1. And there was given me a reed. See Ezek. xl. 3, etc.

Measure the temple of God. This must refer to the Temple of Jerusalem; and this is another presumptive evidence that it was yet standing.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. What was not to be measured (v. 2): The court which is without the temple measure it not. Herod, in the additions made to the temple, built an outer court, and called it the court of the Gentiles. This was no part of the temple, and therefore God would have no regard to it.

Both that and the city were trodden under foot for a certain time—forty and two months. Those who worship in the outer court are either such as worship in a false manner or with hypocritical hearts. Those who worship in the outer court will be rejected, and only those who worship within the veil accepted.

God has reserved to himself his faithful witnesses.

I. The number of these witnesses. 1. It is but small. One witness, when the cause is upon trial, is worth many at other times. 2. It is a sufficient number; for in the mouth of two witnesses every cause shall be established. Christ sent out his disciples two by two, to preach the gospel.

II. The time of their prophesying. A thousand two hundred and threescore days; that is (as many think), to the period of the reign of antichrist.

III. Their habit: they prophesy in sackcloth, as those that are deeply affected with the low and distressed state of the churches.

IV. How they were supported: they stood before the God of the whole earth. He made them to be like Zerubbabel and Joshua, the two olive-trees and candlestick in the vision of Zechariah, ch. iv. 2, &c.

V. Their security and defence during the time of their prophesying, v. 5. Some think this alludes to Elias's calling for fire from heaven, to consume the captains and their companies that came to seize him, 2 Kings i. 12, and restraining the dews of heaven, shutting heaven up, that no rain should fall for many days, as God did at the prayers of Elias, 1 Kings xvii. 1.

... without—all outside the Holy Place (vs. 1). leave out—of thy measurement, lit.,"cast out"; reckon as unhallowed. it—emphatic. It is not to be measured; whereas the Holy Place is. given—by God's appointment. unto the Gentiles—In the wider sense, there are meant here "the times of the Gentiles," wherein Jerusalem is "trodden down of the Gentiles," as the parallel, Luke 21:24, proves; for the same word is used here [Greek, patein], tread under foot." Cf. also Psalm 79:1; Isaiah 63:18. forty ... two months—(ch. 13:5). The same period as Daniel's "time, times, and half" (ch. 12:14); and vs. 3, and ch. 12:6, the woman a fugitive in the wilderness "a thousand two hundred and threescore days." In the wider sense, we may either adopt the year-day theory of 1260 years (on which, and the papal rule of 1260 years, see my Notes, Dan. 7:25; 8:14; 12-11), or rather, regard the 2300 days (Dan. 8:14), 1335 days (Dan. 12:11, 12). 1290 days, and 1260 days, as symbolical of the long period of the Gentile times, whether dating from the subversion of the Jewish theocracy at the Babylonian captivity (the kingdom having been never since restored to Israel), or from the last destruction of Jerusalem under Titus, and extending to the restoration of the theocracy at the coming of Him "whose right it is"; the different epochs marked by the 2300, 1335, 1290, and 1260 days, will not be fully cleared up till the grand consummation; but, meanwhile, our duty and privilege urge us to investigate them. The three and a half, in a word, marks the time in which the earthly rules over the heavenly kingdom. 3. I will give—power—There is no "power" in the Greek, so that "give" must mean "give commission," or some such word. my two witnesses—Greek, "the two witnesses of me." The article implies that the two were well known at least to John. prophesy—preach under the inspiration of the Spirit, denouncing judgments against the apostate. They are described by symbol as "the two olive trees" and "the two candlesticks," or lamp-stands, "standing before the God of the earth." The reference is to Zechariah 4:3, 12, where two individuals are meant, Joshua and Zerubbabel, who ministered to the Jewish Church, just as the two olive trees emptied the oil out of themselves into the bowl of the candlestick. So in the final apostasy God will raise up two inspired witnesses to minister encouragement to the afflicted, though sealed, remnant. As two candlesticks are mentioned in vs. 4, but only one in Zechariah 4, I think the twofold Church, Jewish and Gentile, may be meant by the two candlesticks represented by the two witnesses: just as in ch. 7 there are described first the sealed of Israel, then those of all nations.

DE BURGH thinks Elijah and Moses will again appear, as Malachi 4: 5, 6 seems to imply (cf. Matt. 17:11; Acts 3:21). Moses and Elijah appeared with Christ at the Transfiguration, which foreshadowed His coming millennial kingdom. An objection to this interpretation is that those blessed departed servants of God would have to submit to death (vss. 7, 8), and this in Moses' case a second time, which Hebrews 9:27 denies.

in sackcloth—the garment of prophets, especially when calling people to mortification of their sins, and to repentance. Their very exterior aspect accorded with their teachings: so Elijah, and John who came in His spirit and power. The sackcloth of the witnesses is a catch word linking this episode under the sixth trumpet, with the sun black as sackcloth (in righteous retribution on the apostates who rejected God's witnesses) under the sixth seal (ch. 6:12). 4. standing before the God of the earth—A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS read "Lord" for "God": so Zechariah 4: 14. Ministering to (Luke 1:19), and as in the sight of Him, who, though now so widely disowned on earth, is its rightful King, and shall at last be openly recognized as such (vs. 15). The phrase alludes to Zechariah 4:10, 14, "the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." The article "the" marks this allusion. They are "the two candlesticks," not that they are the Church, the one candlestick, but as its representative light-bearers (Greek, Phil. 2:15, phosteres), and ministering for its encouragement in a time of apostasy.

5. will hurt—Greek, "wishes," or "desires to hurt them." fire ... devoureth—(Cf. Jer. 5:14; 23:29). out of their mouth—not literally, but God makes their inspired denunciations of judgment to come to pass and devour their enemies. if any man will hurt them—twice repeated, to mark the immediate certainty of the accomplishment. in this manner—so in like manner as he tries to hurt them

2. But the court ... is given unto the Gentiles. The measuring of the Temple probably refers to its approaching destruction, and the termination of the whole Levitical service; and this we find was to be done by the Gentiles (Romans), who were to tread it down 42 months; i.e., just 3½ years, or 1,260 days. This must be a symbolical period.

3. My two witnesses. This is extremely obscure; the conjectures of interpreters are as unsatisfactory as they are endless on this point. Those who wish to be amused or bewildered may have recourse both to ancients and moderns on this subject.

4. These are the two olive trees. Mentioned in Zech. iv. 14, which there represent Zerubbabel and Joshua, the high priest. The whole account seems taken from Zech. iv. 1-14. Whether the prophet and the apostle mean the same things by these emblems, we know not.

5. Fire proceedeth out of their mouth. That is, they are commissioned to denounce the judgments of God against all who would attempt to prevent them from proceeding in their ministry.

MATTHEW HENRY

VI. The slaying of the witnesses. To make their testimony more strong, they must seal it with their blood. The time when they should be killed: When they have finished their testimony. They are immortal, till their work be done. The enemy that should overcome and slay them—the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit.

Antichrist should make war against them with open force and violence; and God would permit his enemies to prevail against his witnesses for a time.

The barbarous usage of these slain witnesses; the malice of their enemies, pursued even their dead bodies. They would not allow them a quiet grave; their bodies were cast out in the open street.

Their death was a matter of mirth and joy to the antichristian world, v. 10.

VII. The resurrection of these witnesses. The time of their rising again (v. 11). God's witnesses may be slain, but they shall rise again. God will revive his work, when it seems to be dead in the world. The Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet. God put not only life, but courage into them. The effect of their resurrection upon their enemies: Great fear fell upon them. A persecuting spirit, though cruel, is not a courageous, but a cowardly spirit.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

(cf. ch. 13:10). Retribution in kind. 6. These ... power—Greek, "authorized power." it rain not—Greek, huetos brechee, "rain shower not," lit., "moisten not" (the earth). smite ... with all plagues—Greek, "with (lit., 'in') every plague." 7. finished their testimony—The same verb is used of Paul's ending his ministry by a violent death. the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit—Greek, "the wild beast ... the abyss." This beast was not mentioned before, yet he is introduced as "the beast," because he had already been described by Daniel (7:3, 11), and he is fully so in the subsequent part of the Apocalypse, viz., ch. 13:1; 17:8.

make war against them—alluding to Daniel 7:21, where the same is said of the little horn that sprang up among the ten horns on the fourth beast. 8. dead bodies—So Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS. But A, B, C, the oldest MSS., and Coptic read the singular, "dead body." The two fallen in one cause are considered as one. the great city—eight times in the Revelation elsewhere used of BABYLON (ch. 14:8; 16:19; 17:18; 18:10, 16, 18, 19, 21). In ch. 21:10 (English Version as to the new Jerusalem), the oldest MSS. omit "the great" before city, so that it forms no exception. It must, therefore, have an anticipatory reference to the mystical Babylon. which—Greek, "the which," viz., the city which. spiritually—in a spiritual sense. Sodom—The very term applied by Isaiah 1:10 to apostate Jerusalem (cf. Ezek. 16:48). Egypt—the nation which the Jews' besetting sin was to lean upon. where ... Lord was crucified—This identifies the city as Jerusalem, though the Lord was crucified outside of the city. The difficulty is, how can Jerusalem be called "the great city," i.e., Babylon? By her becoming the world's capital of idolatrous apostasy, such as Babylon originally was, and then Rome has been; just as she is here called also "Sodom and Egypt." also our—A, B, C, ORIGEN, ANDREAS, and others read, "also their." Where their Lord, also, as well as they, was slain.

9. they—rather, "(some) of the peoples." peoples—Greek, "peoples." kindreds—Greek, "tribes"; all save the elect (whence it is not said, The peoples ...; but [some] of the peoples ...; or, some of the peoples ... may refer to those of the nations ..., who at the time shall hold possession of Palestine and Jerusalem). shall see—So Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. But A, B, C, and ANDREAS, the present, "see," or rather (Greek, blepousin), "look upon." The prophetic present. dead bodies—So Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS. But A, B, C, and Coptic, singular, as in vs. 8, "dead body." Three and a half days answer to the three and a half years (Notes, vss. 2, 3), the half of seven, the full and perfect number. shall not suffer—so B, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A, C, and Vulgate read, "do not suffer." in graves—so Vulgate and PRIMASIUS. But B, C, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS, singular; translate, "into a sepulchre," lit., "a monument." Accordingly, in righteous retribution in kind, the flesh of the Antichristian hosts is not buried, but given to all the fowls in midheaven to eat (ch. 19:17, 18, 21). 10. they that dwell upon ... earth—those who belong to the earth, as its citizens, not to heaven (ch. 3:10; 8:13; 12:12; 13:8). shall—so Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. But A, B, and C read the present; cf. Note, vs. 9, on "shall not suffer." rejoice over them—The Antichristianity of the last days shall probably be under the name of philosophical enlightenment and civilization, but really man's deification of himself. Fanaticism shall lead Antichrist's followers to exult in having at last seemingly silenced in death their Christian rebukers.

send gifts one to another—as was usual at a joyous festival. tormented them—viz., with the plagues which they had power to inflict (vss. 5, 6); also, by their testimony against the earthly. 11. Translate as Greek, "After the three days...." the Spirit of life—the same which breathed life into Israel's dry bones, Ezekiel 37:10, 11 (where see my Notes), "Breath came into them." The passage here, as there, is closely connected with Israel's restoration as a nation to political and religious life. Cf. also concerning the same, Hosea 6:2, where Ephraim says, "After two days will He revive us; in the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live in His sight." into—so B and Vulgate. But A reads (Greek, en autois), "(so as to be) IN them." stood upon their feet—the very words in Ezekiel 37:10, which proves the allusion to be to Israel's resurrection, in contrast to "the times of the Gentiles" wherein these "tread under foot the holy city." great fear—such as fell on the soldiers guarding Christ's tomb at His resurrection (Matt. 28:4), when also there was a great earthquake (vs. 2). saw

6. These have power to shut heaven. As Elijah did, 1 Kings xvii and xviii. To turn them to blood. As Moses did, Exodus vii. They shall have power to afflict the land with plagues, similar to those which were inflicted on the Egyptians.

7. The beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. This may be what is called "antichrist," some power that is opposed to genuine Christianity. But what or whence, except from the bottomless pit, i.e., under the influence and appointment of the devil, we cannot tell; nor do we know by what name this power or being should be called. The conjectures concerning the "two witnesses" and the "beast" have been sufficiently multiplied. If the whole passage, as some think, refers to the persecution raised by the Jews against the Christians, then some Jewish power or person is the beast from the bottomless pit. If it refer to the early ages of Christianity, then the beast may be one of the persecuting heathen emperors. If it refer to a later age of Christianity, then the beast may be the papal power, and the Albigenses and Waldenses the two witnesses, which were nearly extinguished by the horrible persecutions raised up against them by the church of Rome. Whatever may be here intended, the earth has not yet covered their blood.

8. The great city. Some say Rome, which may be spiritually called Sodom for its abominations, Egypt for its tyrannous cruelty, and the place where also our Lord was crucified because of its persecution of the members of Christ; but Jerusalem itself may be intended. All these things I must leave to others.

9. Shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. They shall be treated with the greatest barbarity. Refusal of burial to the dead was allowed to be the sum of brutality and cruelty.

10. Shall send gifts. This was a custom in days of public rejoicing. They sent gifts to each other, and gave portions to the poor. See Esther ix. 19, 22.

11. They stood upon their feet. Were restored to their primitive state.

MATTHEW HENRY

VIII. The ascension of the witnesses into heaven, v. 12, 13. 1. Their ascension. To this honour they did not attempt to ascend, till God called them, and said, Come up hither. The Lord's witnesses must wait for their advancement, till God calls them.

2. The consequences of their ascension—a mighty shock and convulsion and the fall of a tenth part of the city.

The fear of God fell upon many. They gave glory to the God of heaven. Thus, when God's work and witnesses revive, the devil's work and witnesses fall before him.

Verses 14–19

What he before expected he now heard—the seventh angel sounding.

I. Loud and joyful acclamations of the saints and angels in heaven. They rose from their seats, and fell upon their faces, and worshipped God. They thankfully recognise the right of our God and Saviour to rule and reign over all the world, v. 15.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

—Greek, "beheld." 12. they—so A, C, and Vulgate. But B, Coptic, Syriac, and ANDREAS read, "I heard." a cloud—Greek, "the cloud"; which may be merely the generic expression for what we are familiar with, as we say "the clouds." But I prefer taking the article as definitely alluding to THE cloud which received Jesus at His ascension, Acts 1:9 (where there is no article, as there is no allusion to a previous cloud, such as there is here). As they resembled Him in their three and a half years' witnessing, their three and a half days lying in death (though not for exactly the same time, nor put in a tomb as He was), so also in their ascension is the translation and transfiguration of the sealed of Israel (ch. 7), and the elect of all nations, caught up out of the reach of the Antichristian foe. In ch. 14:14, 15, 16, He is represented as sitting on a white cloud. their enemies beheld them—and were thus openly convicted by God for their unbelief and persecution of His servants; unlike Elijah's ascension formerly, in the sight of friends only.

13. "In that same (lit. 'the') hour." great earthquake—answering to the "great earthquake" under the sixth seal, just at the approach of the Lord (ch. 6:12).

tenth part of the city fell—i.e., of "the great city" (ch. 16:19; Zech. 14:2). Ten is the number of the world kingdoms (ch. 17:10-12), and the beast's horns (ch. 13:1), and the dragon's (ch. 12:3). Thus, in the Church-historical view, it is hereby implied that one of the ten apostate world kingdoms fall. But in the narrower view a tenth of Jerusalem under Antichrist falls. The nine-tenths remain and become when purified the center of Christ's earthly kingdom. of men—Greek, "names of men." The men are as accurately enumerated as if their names were given.

the remnant—consisting of the Israelite inhabitants not slain. Their conversion forms a blessed contrast to ch. 16:9; and above, ch. 9:20, 21. These repenting (Zech. 12:10-14; 13:1), become in the flesh the loyal subjects of Christ reigning over the earth with His transfigured saints. gave glory to the God of heaven—which while apostates, and worshipping the beast's image, they had not done. God of heaven—The apostates of the last days, in pretended scientific enlightenment, recognize no heavenly power, but only the natural forces in the earth which come under their observation. His receiving up into heaven the two witnesses who had power during their time on earth to shut heaven from raining (vs. 6), constrained His and their enemies who witnessed it, to acknowledge the God of heaven, to be God of the earth (vs. 4). As in vs. 4 He declared Himself to be God of the earth by His two witnesses, so now He proves Himself to be God of heaven also. 14. The second woe—that under the sixth trumpet (ch. 9:12-21), including also the prophecy, ch. 11:1-13: Woe to the world, joy to the faithful, as their redemption draweth nigh. the third woe cometh quickly—It is not mentioned in detail for the present, until first there is given a sketch of the history of the origination, suffering, and faithfulness of the Church in a time of apostasy and persecution. 15. sounded—with his trumpet. Evidently "the LAST trumpet." Six is close to seven, but does not reach it. The world judgments are complete in six, but by the fulfilment of seven the world kingdoms become Christ's. kingdoms—A, B, C, and Vulgate read the singular, "The kingdom (sovereignty) of (over) the world is our Lord's and His Christ's." There is no good authority for English Version reading. The kingdoms of the world give way to the kingdom of (over) the world exercised by Christ. The earth kingdoms are many: His shall be one. The appellation "Christ," the Anointed, is here, where His kingdom is mentioned appropriately for the first time used in Revelation. For it is equivalent to KING. Though priests and prophets also were anointed, yet this term is peculiarly applied to Him as King, insomuch that "the Lord's anointed" is His title as KING, in places where He is distinguished from the priests. The glorified Son of man shall rule mankind by His transfigured Church in heaven, and by His people Israel on earth: Israel shall be the priestly mediator of blessings to the whole world, realizing them first. he—not emphatic in the Greek. shall reign for ever and ever—Greek, "unto the ages of the ages." Here begins the millennial reign, the consummation of "the mystery of God" (ch. 10:7). 16. before God—B and Syriac read, "before the throne of God." But A, C, Vulgate, and Coptic read as English Version. seats—Greek, "thrones." 17. thanks—for the answer to our prayers (ch. 6:10, 11) in destroying them which destroy the earth (vs. 18),

ADAM CLARKE

12. They ascended up to heaven. Enjoyed a state of great peace and happiness.

13. A great earthquake. Violent commotions among the persecutors, and revolutions of states. Slain of men seven thousand. Many perished in these popular commotions.

The remnant were affrighted. Seeing the hand of God's judgments so remarkably stretched out. Gave glory. Received the pure doctrines of the gospel, and glorified God for His judgments and their conversion.

14. The second woe is past. That which took place under the sixth trumpet, and has been already described. The third woe cometh. Is about to be described under the seventh trumpet, which the angel is now prepared to sound. Of the three woes which were denounced, chap. viii. 13, the first is described in chap. ix. 1-12, the second in chap. ix. 13-21. These woes are supposed by many learned men to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem: the first woe—the seditions among the Jews themselves; the second woe—the besieging of the city by the Romans; the third woe—the taking and sacking of the city, and burning the Temple. This was the greatest of all the woes, as in it the city and Temple were destroyed, and nearly a million men lost their lives.

15. There were great voices in heaven. All the heavenly host—angels and redeemed human spirits—joined together to magnify God, that He had utterly discomfited His enemies and rendered His friends glorious. This will be truly the case when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of God and of His Christ. But when shall this be? Some say what is meant by these words has already taken place in the destruction of the Jewish state and sending the gospel throughout the Gentile world. Others say that it refers to the millennium and to the consummation of all things.

16. The four and twenty elders. The representatives of the universal Church of Christ. See on chap. v. 8-10.

MATTHEW HENRY

They give him thanks because he had taken to him his great power. They rejoice that this his reign shall never end. None shall ever wrest the sceptre out of his hand.

II. Angry resentments in the world at these actings of the power of God (v. 18): The nations were angry; their hearts rose up against God. They fretted against God, and so increased their guilt and hastened their destruction.

III. The opening of the temple of God in heaven. What was seen there: the ark of God's testament. This was in the holy of holies; in this ark the tables of the law were kept. As before Josiah's time the law of God had been lost, but was then found, so in the reign of antichrist God's law was laid aside. Now the scriptures are opened, now they are brought to the view of all. What was heard and felt there: Lightnings, voices, thunderings, an earthquake, and great hail. By terrible things in righteousness God would answer those prayers that were presented in his holy temple, now opened.

thereby preparing the way for setting up the kingdom of Thyself and Thy saints. and art to come—omitted in A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, CYPRIAN, and ANDREAS. The consummation having actually come, they do not address Him as they did when it was still future, "Thou that art to come." Cf. vs. 18, "is come." From the sounding of the seventh trumpet He is to His people JAH, the ever present Lord, WHO IS, more peculiarly than JEHOVAH "who is, was, and is to come." taken to thee thy great power—"to Thee" is not in the Greek. Christ takes to Him the kingdom as His own of right. 18. the nations were angry—alluding to Psalm 99:1, LXX, "The Lord is become King: let the peoples become angry." Translate, as the Greek is the same. "The nations were angered, and Thy anger is come." How petty man's impotent anger, standing here side by side with that of the omnipotent God! dead . . . be judged—proving that this seventh trumpet is at the end of all things, when the judgment on Christ's foes and the reward of His saints, long prayed for by His saints, shall take place. the prophets—as, for instance, the two prophesying witnesses (vs. 3), and those who have showed them kindness for Christ's sake. Jesus shall come to effect by His presence that which we have looked for long, but vainly, in His absence, and by other means. destroy them which destroy the earth—Retribution in kind (cf. ch. 16:6; Luke 19:27). Daniel 7:14-18, my Notes. 19. temple—the sanctuary or Holy place (Greek, naos), not the whole temple (Greek, hieron). opened in heaven—A and C read the article, "the temple of God which is in heaven, was opened." the ark of his testament—or ". . . His covenant." As in the first verse the earthly sanctuary was measured, so here its heavenly antitype is laid open, and the antitype above to the ark of the covenant in the Holiest Place below is seen, the pledge of God's faithfulness to His covenant in saving His people and punishing their and His enemies. Thus this forms a fit close to the series of trumpet judgments and an introduction to the episode (chs. 12 and 13) as to His faithfulness to His Church. Here first His secret place, the heavenly sanctuary, is opened for the assurance of His people; and thence proceed His judgments in their behalf (ch. 14:15, 17; 15:5; 16:17), which the great company in heaven laud as "true and righteous." This then is parallel to the scene at the heavenly altar, at the close of the seals and opening of the trumpets (ch. 8:3),and at the close of the episode (chs. 12-15) and opening of the vials (ch. 15:7, 8).

ADAM CLARKE

17. O Lord God Almighty, which art. This gives a proper view of God in His eternity; all times are here comprehended, the present, the past, and the future. This is the infinitude of God.

Hast taken to thee. Thou hast exercised that power which Thou ever hast; and Thou hast broken the power of Thy enemies, and exalted Thy Church.

18. The nations were angry. Were enraged against Thy gospel and determined to destroy it. Thy wrath is come. The time to avenge Thy servants and to destroy all Thy enemies. The time of the dead, that they should be judged. The word "to judge" is often used in the sense of "to avenge." The dead, here, may mean those who were slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the judging is the avenging of their blood. Give reward unto thy servants. Who have been faithful unto death. The prophets—the faithful teachers in the Church; the saints—the Christians. And them that fear thy name. All Thy sincere followers. Destroy them which destroy the earth. All the authors, fomenters, and encouragers of bloody wars.

19. The temple of God was opened in heaven. The true worship of God was established and performed in the Christian Church; this is the true temple, that at Jerusalem being destroyed. And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail. These great commotions were intended to introduce the following vision; for the twelfth chapter is properly a continuation of the eleventh, and should be read in strict connection with it.

CHAPTER 12

I. The attempts of Satan to prevent the increase of the church.

1. The church is represented, (1) As a woman, the spouse of Christ, and the mother of the saints. (2) As clothed with the sun. Having put on Christ, who is the Sun of righteousness, she shines in his rays. (3) As having the moon under her feet. Her heart and hope are not set upon sublunary things, but on the things that are in heaven, where her head is.

(4) As having on her head a crown of twelve stars, that is, the doctrine of the gospel preached by the twelve apostles. (5) As in travail and now in pain, to bring forth a holy progeny to Christ.

VSS. 1-17. VISION OF THE WOMAN, HER CHILD, AND THE PERSECUTING DRAGON. 1. This episode (chs. 12, 13, 14, and 15) describes in detail the persecution of Israel and the elect Church by the beast, which had been summarily noticed, ch. 11:7-10, and the triumph of the faithful, and torment of the unfaithful. great—in size and significance. wonder—Greek, "sign": significant of momentous truths. in heaven—not merely the sky, but the heaven beyond just mentioned, ch. 11:19; cf. vss. 7-9. woman clothed with the sun . . . moon under her feet—the Church, Israel first, and then the Gentile Church; clothed with Christ, "the Sun of righteousness." "Fair as the moon, clear as the sun." Clothed with the Sun, the Church is the bearer of divine supernatural light in the world. So the seven churches (i.e., the Church universal, the woman) are represented as lightbearing candlesticks (ch. 1). On the other hand, the moon, though standing above the sea and earth, is altogether connected with them and is an earthly light: sea, earth, and moon represent the worldly element, in opposition to the kingdom of God—heaven, the sun. The moon cannot disperse the darkness and change it into day: thus she represents the world religion (heathenism) in relation to the supernatural world. The Church has the moon, therefore, under her feet; but the stars, as heavenly lights, on her head. The devil directs his efforts against the stars, the angels of the churches, about hereafter to shine for ever. The twelve stars, the crown around her head, are the twelve tribes of Israel [AUBERLEN].

2. pained—Greek, "tormented" (basanizomene). DE BURGH explains this of the bringing in of the first-begotten into the world AGAIN, when Israel shall at last welcome Him, and when "the man-child shall rule all nations with the rod of iron." But there is a plain contrast between the painful travailing of the woman here,

1. There appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun. That the woman here represents the true Church of Christ most commentators are agreed. In other parts of the Apocalypse, the pure Church of Christ is evidently portrayed by a woman (19:7; 21:9). That the Christian Church is meant will appear also from her being clothed with the sun, a striking emblem of Jesus Christ, the Sun of righteousness, the light and glory of the Church. The moon under her feet. Bishop Newton understands this of the Jewish typical worship; and indeed the Mosaic system of rites and ceremonies could not have been better represented, for it was the shadow of good things to come. The moon is the less light, ruling over the night, and deriving all its illumination from the sun; in like manner the Jewish dispensation was the bright moonlight night of the world, and possessed a portion of the glorious light of the Gospel. At the rising of the sun the night is ended, and the lunar light no longer necessary, as the sun which enlightens her shines full upon the earth; exactly in the same way has the whole Jewish system of types and shadows been superseded by the birth, life, crucifixion, death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession of Jesus Christ. A crown of twelve stars. A very significant representation of the twelve apostles, who were the first founders of the Christian Church, and by whom the Gospel was preached in great part of the Roman empire with astonishing success.

2. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth. This, when taken in connection with the following verses, is a striking figure of the great persecution which the Church of Christ should suffer under the heathen Roman emperors, but more especially of that long and most dreadful one under Diocletian. The woman is represented as being with child, to show

2. How the grand enemy of the church is represented. (1) A dragon for strength and terror—a red dragon for fierceness and cruelty. (2) As having seven heads. It is probable that pagan Rome is here meant. (3) As having ten horns, divided into ten provinces, as the Roman empire was by Augustus Cæsar. (4) As having seven crowns upon his head, which is afterwards expounded to be seven kings, ch. xvii. 10.

(5) As drawing with his tail a third part of the stars in heaven and casting them down to the earth.

(6) As standing before the woman, to devour her child as soon as it should be born, very vigilant to crush the Christian religion in its birth.

II. The unsuccessfulness of these attempts. She was safely delivered of a man-child (v. 5). Care was taken of this child. The Christian religion has been from its infancy the special care of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Care was taken of the mother as well as of the child, v. 6. Furthermore her obscure and private state was for a limited time.

and Christ's second coming to the Jewish Church, the believing remnant of Israel, "Before she travailed she brought forth . . . a MAN-CHILD," i.e., almost without travail-pangs, she receives (at His second advent), as if born to her, Messiah and a numerous seed. 3. appeared—"was seen." wonder—Greek; semeion "sign." red—So A and Vulgate read. But B, C, and Coptic read, "of fire." In either case, the color of the dragon implies his fiery rage as a murderer from the beginning. His representative, the beast, corresponds, having seven heads and ten horns (the number of horns on the fourth beast of Daniel 7:7; ch. 13:1. But there, ten crowns are on the ten horns (for before the end, the fourth empire is divided into ten kingdoms); here, seven crowns (rather, "diadems," Greek, diademata, not stephanoi, "wreaths") are upon his seven heads. In Daniel 7 the Antichristian powers up to Christ's second coming are represented by four beasts, which have among them seven heads, i.e., the first, second, and fourth beasts having one head each, the third, four heads. His universal dominion as prince of this fallen world is implied by the seven diadems (contrast the "many diadems on Christ's head," ch. 19:12, when coming to destroy him and his), the caricature of the seven Spirits of God. His worldly instruments of power are marked by the ten horns, ten being the number of the world. It marks his self-contradictions that he and the beast bear both the number seven (the divine number) and ten (the world number). 4. drew—Greek, present, "draweth," "drags down." His dragging down the stars with his tail (lashed back and forward in his fury) implies his persuading to apostatize, like himself, and to become earthy, those angels and also once eminent human teachers who had formerly been heavenly (cf. vs. 1; ch. 1:20; Isa. 14:12). stood—"stands" [ALFORD]: perfect, Greek, hesteken. ready to be delivered—"about to bring forth." for to devour . . .—"that when she brought forth, he might devour her child." So the dragon, represented by his agent Pharaoh (a name common to all the Egyptian kings, and meaning, according to some, crocodile, a reptile like the dragon, and made an Egyptian idol), was ready to devour Israel's males at the birth of the nation. Antitypically the true Israel, Jesus, when born, was sought for destruction by Herod, who slew all the males in and around Bethlehem. 5. man-child—Greek, "a son, a male." On the deep significance of this term, cf. Notes, vss. 1, 2. rule—Greek, poimainein, "tend as a shepherd"; (see Note, ch. 2:27). rod of iron—A rod is for long-continued obstinacy until they submit themselves to obedience [BENGEL]: ch. 2:27; Psalm 2:9, which passages prove the Lord Jesus to be meant. Any interpretation which ignores this must be wrong. The male son's birth cannot be the origin of the Christian state (Christianity triumphing over heathenism under Constantine), which was not a divine child of the woman, but had many impure worldly elements. In a secondary sense, the ascending of the witnesses up to heaven answers to Christ's own ascension, "caught up unto God, and unto His throne": as also His ruling the nations with a rod of iron is to be shared in by believers (ch. 2:27). 6. woman fled—Mary's flight with Jesus into Egypt is a type of this. where she hath—So C reads. But A and B add "there." a place—that portion of the heathen world which has received Christianity professedly, viz., mainly the fourth kingdom, having its seat in the modern Babylon, Rome, implying that all the heathen world would not be Christianized in the present order of things. prepared of God—lit., "from God." Not by human caprice or fear, but by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, the woman, the Church, fled into the wilderness. they should feed her—Greek, "nourish her." Indefinite for, "she should be fed." The heathen world, the wilderness, could not nourish the Church, but only afford her an outward shelter. Here, as in Daniel 4:26, and elsewhere, the third person plural refers to the heavenly powers who minister from God nourishment to the Church. As Israel had its time of first bridal love, on its first going out of Egypt into the wilderness, so the Christian Church's wilderness-time of first love was the apostolic age, when it was separate from the Egypt of this world, having no city here, but seeking one to come; having only a place in the wilderness prepared of God (vss. 6, 14).

thousand two hundred and threescore days—anticipatory of vs. 14, where the persecution which caused her to flee is mentioned in its place: ch. 13 gives the details of the persecution. It is most unlikely that the transithat the time would speedily arrive when God's patient forbearance with the heathen would be terminated, and that a deliverer should arise in the Christian world who would execute the Divine vengeance upon paganism.

3. There appeared another wonder—a great red dragon. The dragon here is a symbol, not of the Roman empire in general, but of the heathen Roman empire. But what is a dragon? An entirely fabulous beast of antiquity, consequently, in this respect, a most proper emblem of the heathen worship, which consisted in paying adoration to numerous imaginary beings, termed gods, goddesses, etc. Having seven heads. As the dragon is an emblem of the heathen Roman power, its heads must denote heathen forms of government (17:10). And ten horns. That these ten horns signify as many kingdoms is evident from the seventh chapter of Daniel, where the angel, speaking of the fourth beast, says, that "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise"; and in this view of the passage many commentators are agreed, who also admit that the ten kingdoms are to be met with "amid the broken pieces of the Roman empire." And it is evident that nothing less than the dismemberment of the Roman empire, and its division into ten independent kingdoms, can be intended by the angel's interpretation just quoted. And seven crowns upon his head. In the seven Roman forms of government already enumerated, heathenism has been the crowning or dominant religion.

4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven. The tail of the dragon is the heathen Roman power in its seventh or last form of government, the imperial power; and is not to be restricted to the last heathen Roman emperors. The heathen imperial power is said to draw the third part of the stars of heaven. As the Christian Church has upon her head a crown of twelve stars, which signifies that she is under the guidance of the twelve apostles, so has the dragon also his stars or ministers. The stars therefore which the dragon draws with his tail must represent the whole body of pagan priests, who were the stars or lights of the heathen world. The religious world in the time of St. John was divided into three grand branches: the Christian world, the Jewish world, and the heathen world. Consequently, as a dragon is an emblem of a civil power supporting a religion founded in fable, it necessarily follows that the stars or ministers of the Jews and Christians cannot be numbered among those which he draws with his tail, as they were not the advocates of his idolatry, and consequently formed no part of the pagan world, though they were in subjection in secular matters to the pagan Roman empire.

5. And she brought forth a man child. The Christian Church, when her full time came, obtained a deliverer. To rule all nations. The heathen Roman empire. With a rod of iron. A strong figure to denote the very great restraint that should be put upon paganism, so that it should not be able longer to persecute the Christian Church. The man child mentioned in this verse is the dynasty of Christian emperors, beginning with Constantine's public acknowledgment of his belief in the divinity of the Christian religion, which happened in the latter part of A.D. 312, after the defeat of the Emperor Maxentius.

6. And the woman fled into the wilderness. The account of the woman's flying into the wilderness immediately follows that of her child being caught up to the throne of God, to denote the great and rapid increase of heresies in the Christian Church after the time that Christianity was made the religion of the empire. Where she hath a place prepared of God. See on verse 14.

III. The attempts of the dragon not only proved unsuccessful against the church, but fatal to his own interests (v. 7). Heaven will espouse the quarrel of the church.

1. The seat of this war—in heaven, in the church, which is the kingdom of heaven on earth, under the care of heaven.

2. The parties: Christ, the great Angel of the covenant, and his faithful followers; and Satan and all his instruments. The strength of the church lies in having the Lord Jesus for the captain of their salvation.

3. The success of the battle: The dragon and his angels fought and prevailed not. The victory fell to Christ and his church, and the dragon and his angels were not only conquered, but cast out.

4. The triumphant song that was composed and used on this occasion, v. 10, 11. The conqueror is adored.

The salvation and strength of the church are all to be ascribed to the king and head of the church. The conquered enemy is described.

By his malice he appeared before God as an adversary to the church. Though he hates the presence of God, yet he is willing to appear there to accuse the people of God.

tion should be made from the birth of Christ to the last Antichrist, without notice of the long intervening Church-historical period. Probably the 1260 days, or periods, representing this long interval, are RECAPITULATED on a shorter scale analogically during the last Antichrist's short reign. They are equivalent to three and a half years, which, as half of the divine number seven, symbolize the seeming victory of the world over the Church. As they include the whole Gentile times of Jerusalem's being trodden of the Gentiles, they must be much longer than 1260 years; for, above several centuries more than 1260 years have elapsed since Jerusalem fell. 7. In Job 1 and 2, Satan appears among the sons of God, presenting himself before God in heaven, as the accuser of the saints: again in Zechariah 3:1, 2. there was—Greek, "there came to pass," or "arose." war in heaven—What a seeming contradiction in terms, yet true! Contrast the blessed result of Christ's triumph, Luke 19:38, "peace in heaven." Colossians 1:20, "made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself; whether . . . things in earth, or things in heaven." Michael and his angels . . . the dragon . . . and his angels—It was fittingly ordered that, as the rebellion arose from unfaithful angels and their leader, so they should be encountered and overcome by faithful angels and their archangel, in heaven. On earth they are fittingly encountered, and shall be overcome, as represented by the beast and false prophet, by the Son of man and His armies of human saints (ch. 19:14-21), The conflict in heaven, though judicially decided already against Satan from the time of Christ's resurrection and ascension, receives its actual completion in the execution of judgment by the angels who cast out Satan from heaven. From Christ's ascension he has no standing-ground judicially against the believing elect. Luke 10:18, "I beheld (in the earnest of the future full fulfilment given in the subjection of the demons to the disciples) Satan as lightning fall from heaven." As Michael fought before with Satan about the body of the mediator of the old covenant (Jude 9), so now the mediator of the new covenant, by offering His sinless body in sacrifice, arms Michael with power to renew and finish the conflict by a complete victory. against—A, B, and C read, "with." 8. prevailed not—A and Coptic read, "He prevailed not." But B and C read as English Version. neither—A, B, and C read, "not even" (Greek, oude): a climax. Not only did they not prevail, but not even their place was found any more in heaven. 9. that old serpent—alluding to Genesis 3:1, 4. Devil—the Greek, for "accuser," or "slanderer." Satan the Hebrew for "adversary," especially in a court of justice. The twofold designation, Greek and Hebrew, marks the twofold objects of his accusations and temptations, the elect Gentiles and the elect Jews. world—Greek, "habitable world." 10. Now—Now that Satan has been cast out of heaven. Primarily fulfilled in part at Jesus' resurrection and ascension, when He said (Matthew 28:18), "All power [Greek, exousia, 'authority,' as here; see below] is given unto Me in heaven and in earth"; connected with vs. 5, "Her child was caught up unto God and to His throne." In the ulterior sense, it refers to the eve of Christ's second coming, when Israel is about to be restored as mother-church of Christendom, Satan, who had resisted her restoration on the ground of her unworthiness, having been cast out by the instrumentality of Michael, Israel's angelic prince (Note, vs. 7). Thus this is parallel, and the necessary preliminary to the glorious event similarly expressed, ch. 11:15, "The kingdom of this world is become (the very word here, Greek egeneto, 'is come,' 'hath come to pass') our Lord's and His Christ's," the result of Israel's resuming her place. salvation . . .—Greek, "the salvation (viz., fully, finally, and victoriously accomplished, Heb. 9:28; cf. Luke 3:6, yet future; hence, not till now do the blessed raise the fullest hallelujah for salvation to the Lamb, ch. 7:10; 19:1) the power (Greek, dunamis), and the authority (Greek, exousia; legitimate power; see above) of His Christ." accused them before our God day and night—Hence the need that the oppressed Church, God's own elect (like the widow, continually coming, so as even to weary the unjust judge), should cry day and night unto Him. 11. they—emphatic in the Greek. "They" in particular. They and they alone. They were the persons who overcame. overcame—(Rom. 8:33, 34, 37; 16:20). him—(I John 2:14, 15). It is the same victory (a peculiarly Johannean phrase) over Satan and the world which the Gospel of John describes in the life of Jesus, his

ADAM CLARKE

7. And there was war in heaven. As heaven means here the throne of the Roman empire, the war in heaven consequently alludes to the breaking out of civil commotions among the governors of this empire. Michael and his angels fought against the dragon. Michael was the man child which the woman brought forth, as is evident from the context, and therefore signifies, as has been shown already, the dynasty of Christian Roman emperors. This dynasty is represented by Michael, because his is "the great prince which standeth for the children of God's people" (Dan. 12:1). And the dragon fought and his angels. Or ministers.

8. And prevailed not. Against the cause of Christianity. Neither was their place found any more in heaven. The advocates of the heathen idolatry were prevented from having any further share in the government of the empire. The wonderful success of Constantine over all his enemies, and his final triumph over Licinius, correspond exactly to the symbolical language in this verse.

9. And the great dragon was cast out. If by the dragon be meant the devil, then we are necessarily led to this conclusion, that the great apostate spirit is a monster, having seven heads and ten horns; and also that he has a tail, with which he drags after him the third part of the stars of heaven. The appelations, old serpent, devil, and Satan, must, therefore, be understood figuratively. The heathen power is called that old serpent which deceived the whole world, from its subtlety against the Christians, and its causing the whole Roman world, as far as it was in its power to embrace the absurdities of paganism.

10. And I heard a loud voice, saying, Now is come salvation. This is a song of triumph of the Christian Church over the heathen idolatry, and is very expressive of the great joy of the Christians upon this most stupendous event. The loud voice of triumph is said to be heard in heaven, to show that the Christian religion was now exalted to the heaven or throne of the Roman empire. "It is very remarkable," as Bishop Newton observes, "that Constantine himself, and the Christians of his time, describe his conquests under the image of a dragon, as if they had understood that this prophecy had received its accomplishment in him.

11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb. Here is given the reason why the followers of Christ prevailed at this time against all their adversaries. It was because they fought against the dragon in the armor of God.

MATTHEW HENRY

How the victory was gained. The servants of God overcame Satan, (1) By the blood of the Lamb. (2) By the word of their testimony—by a resolute powerful preaching of the everlasting gospel.

By their courage and patience in sufferings; they loved not their lives unto the death; their love to their own lives was overcome by stronger affections of another nature.

Epistle in the life of each believer, and his Apocalypse in the life of the Church. by . . .—Greek (dia to haima; accusative, not genitive, as English Version would require, cf. Heb. 9:12), "on account of (on the ground of) the blood of the Lamb"; "because of . . ."; on account of and by virtue of its having been shed. Had that blood not been shed, Satan's accusations would have been unanswerable; as it is, that blood meets every charge. by the word of their testimony—Greek, "on account of the word of their testimony." On the ground of their faithful testimony, even unto death, they are constituted victors. Their testimony evinced their victory over him by virtue of the blood of the Lamb. Hereby they confess themselves worshippers of the slain Lamb and overcome the beast, Satan's representative; an anticipation of ch. 15:2, "them that had gotten the victory over the beast" (cf. ch. 13:15, 16). unto—Greek, achri, "even as far as." They carried their not-love of life as far as even unto death. 12. Therefore—because Satan is cast out of heaven (vs. 9). dwell—lit., "tabernacle." Not only angels and the souls of the just with God, but also the faithful militant on earth, who already in spirit tabernacle in heaven, having their home and citizenship there, rejoice that Satan is cast out of their home. the inhabiters of—So ANDREAS reads. But A, B, and C omit. The words probably, were inserted from ch. 8:13. is come down—rather as Greek, catebee, "is gone down"; John regarding the heaven as his standing-point of view whence he looks down on the earth. unto you—earth and sea, with their inhabitants; those who lean upon, and essentially belong to, the earth (contrast John 3:7, Margin, with John 3:31; 8:23; Phil. 3:19, end; I John 4:5) and its sea-like troubled politics. Furious at his expulsion from heaven, and knowing that his time on earth is short until he shall be cast down lower, when Christ shall come to set up His kingdom (ch. 20:1, 2), Satan concentrates all his power to destroy as many souls as he can. Though no longer able to accuse the elect in heaven, he can tempt and persecute on earth. short time—Greek, kairon, "season": opportunity for his assaults. 13. Resuming from vs. 6 the thread of the discourse, which had been interrupted by the episode, vss. 7-12 (giving in the invisible world the ground of the corresponding conflict between light and darkness in the visible world), this verse accounts for her flight into the wilderness (vs. 6). 14. were given—by God's determinate appointment, not by human chances (Acts 9:11). two—Greek, "the two wings of the great eagle." Alluding to Exodus 19:4: proving that the Old Testament Church, as well as the New Testament Church, is included in "the woman." All believers are included (Isa. 40:30, 31). The great eagle is the world power; in Ezekiel 17:3, 7, Babylon and Egypt: in early Church history, Rome, whose standard was the eagle, turned by God's providence from being hostile into a protector of the Christian Church. As "wings" express remote parts of the earth, the two wings may here mean the east and west divisions of the Roman empire. wilderness—the land of the heathen, the Gentiles: in contrast to Canaan, the pleasant and glorious land. God dwells in the glorious land; demons (the rulers of the heathen world, ch. 9:20; I Cor. 10:20), in the wilderness. Heathendom, in its essential nature, being without God, is a desolate wilderness. Thus, the woman's flight into the wilderness is the passing of the kingdom of God from the Jews to be among the Gentiles (typified by Mary's flight with her child from Judea into Egypt). her place—the chief seat of the then world empire, Rome. The Acts of the Apostles describe the passing of the Church from Jerusalem to Rome. The Roman protection was the eagle wing which often shielded Paul, the great instrument of this transmigration, and Christianity, from Jewish opponents who stirred up the heathen mobs. Israel was in the wilderness forty years, and had forty-two stages in her journey, so the Church for forty-two months, three and a half years or times [lit., seasons, used for years in Hellenistic Greek (MŒRIS, the Atticist), Greek, kairous, Dan. 7:25; 12:7], or 1260 days (vs. 6) between the overthrow of Jerusalem and the coming again of Christ, shall be a wilderness sojourner before she reaches her millennial rest (answering to Canaan of old). 15, 16. flood—Greek, "river" (cf. Exod. 2:3; Matt. 2:20; and especially Exod. 14). The flood, or river, is the stream of Germanic tribes which, pouring on Rome, threatened to destroy Christianity. But the earth helped the woman, by swallowing up the flood. The earth, as contradistinguished from water, is the world

By the blood of the Lamb—by proclaiming salvation to sinners at the throne of grace for the conversion of the heathen world.

And by the word of their testimony. By constantly testifying against the errors and follies of mankind. And they loved not their lives unto the death. They regarded not their present temporal estate, but even gladly delivered up their lives to the fury of their persecutors, and thus sealed the truth of what they spake with their blood.

12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Let the Christians, who are now partakers of the present temporal prosperity, and advanced to places of trust in the empire, praise and magnify the Lord who has thus so signally interfered in their behalf. But it is added, Woe to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you. By the inhabiters of the earth are meant the people in subjection to the Roman empire; and by the sea, those parts of the Roman dominions appear to be intended that were reduced to a state of anarchy by the incursion of the barbarous nations. Having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. The Christian religion, the pagan party see with great regret, is rapidly gaining ground everywhere; and, if not timely checked, must soon brave all opposition.

13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth. When the heathen party saw that they were no longer supported by the civil power, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child. The heathens persecuted the Christian Church in the behalf of which Divine Providence had raised up a dynasty of Christian Roman emperors.

14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle. The great eagle here mentioned is an emblem of the Roman empire in general, and therefore differs from the dragon, which is a symbol of the heathen Roman empire in particular. The Roman power is called an eagle from its legionary standard. The two wings of the great eagle refer to the two grand independent divisions of the Roman empire, which took place January 17, A.D. 395, and were given to the woman, Christianity being the established religion of both empires. That she might fly into the wilderness, into her place. The meaning therefore of verses 6 and 14, when taken in connection with their respective contexts, is, that the woman began to make rapid strides towards the desert almost immediately after her elevation to the heaven or throne of the Roman empire, and in the course of her flight was furnished with the wings of the great eagle that she might fly into that place prepared of God, where she should be fed a thousand two hundred and threescore days. The one thousand two hundred and threescore days must be understood symbolically, and consequently denote as many natural years. The wilderness into which the woman flies is the Greek and Latin worlds, for she is conveyed into her place by means of the two wings of the great eagle.

15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood. The water here evidently means great multitudes of nations and peoples (17:15). This water, then, which the dragon cast out of his mouth, must be an inundation of heathen barbarous nations upon the Roman empire; and the purpose which the dragon has in view by this inundation is, that he might cause the woman, or Christian Church, to be carried away of the flood. Entirely swept away from the face of the earth.

The form and shape of this beast. In some part of this description there seems to be an allusion to Daniel's vision of the four beasts, which represented the four monarchies, Dan. vii. 1–3, &c. The seven heads and the ten horns seem to design its several powers; the ten crowns, its tributary princes;

the word blasphemy on its forehead proclaims its direct enmity to the glory of God.

consolidated and civilized. The German masses were brought under the influence of Roman civilization and Christianity [AUBERLEN]. 17. wroth with—Greek, "at." went—Greek, "went away." the remnant of her seed—distinct in some sense from the woman herself. Satan's first effort was to root out the Christian Church, so that there should be no visible profession of Christianity. Foiled in this, he wars (ch. 11:7; 13:7) against the invisible Church, viz., "those who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus" (A, B, and C omit "Christ"). These are "the remnant," or rest of her seed, as distinguished from her seed, "the man-child" (vs. 5), on one hand, and from mere professors on the other.

I stood So B, ℵ, and Coptic read. But A, C, Vulgate, and Syriac, "He stood." Standing on the sand of the sea, HE gave his power to the beast that rose out of the sea. upon the sand of the sea—where the four winds were to be seen striving upon the great sea (Dan. 7:2). beast—Greek, "wild beast." Man becomes "brutish" when he severs himself from God, the archetype and true ideal, in whose image he was first made, which ideal is realized by the man Christ Jesus. out of the sea—(Dan. 7:3; cf. my Note, ch. 8:8)—out of the troubled waves of peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues. The earth (vs. 11), on the other hand, means the consolidated, ordered world of nations, with its culture and learning. seven heads and ten horns—A, B, and C transpose, "ten horns and seven heads." The ten horns are now put first (contrast the order, ch. 12:3) because they are crowned. They shall not be so till the last stage of the fourth kingdom (the Roman), which shall continue until the fifth kingdom, Christ's, shall supplant it and destroy it utterly; this last stage is marked by the ten toes of the two feet of the image in Daniel 2. The seven implies the world power setting up itself as God, and caricaturing the seven Spirits of God; yet its true character as God-opposed is detected by the number ten accompanying the seven. Dragon and beast both wear crowns, but the former on the heads, the latter on the horns (ch. 12:3; 13:1). Therefore, both heads and horns refer to kingdoms; cf. ch. 17:7, 10, 12, "kings" representing the kingdoms whose heads they are.

The seven heads are the seven world monarchies, Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, the Germanic empire, under the last of which we live [AUBERLEN], and which devolved for a time on Napoleon, after Francis, emperor of Germany and king of Rome, had resigned the title in 1806. crowns—Greek, "diadems." name of blasphemy—So C, Coptic, and ANDREAS. A, B, and Vulgate read, "names . . ." viz., a name on each of the heads; blasphemously arrogating attributes belonging to God alone (cf. Note, ch. 17:3). A characteristic of the little horn in Daniel 7:8, 20, 21; II Thessalonians 2:4. 2. leopard . . . bear . . . lion—This beast unites in itself the God-opposed characteristics of the three preceding kingdoms, resembling respectively the leopard, bear, and lion. It rises up out of the sea, as Daniel's four beasts, and has ten horns, as Daniel's fourth beast, and seven heads, as Daniel's four beasts had in all, viz., one on the first, one on the second, four on the third, and one on the fourth. Thus it represents comprehensively in one figure the world power (which in Daniel is represented by four) of all times and places, not merely of one period and one locality, viewed as opposed to God; just as the woman is the Church of all ages. This view is favored also by the fact, that the beast is the vicarious representative of Satan, who similarly has seven heads and ten horns: a general description of his universal power in all ages and places of the world. Satan appears as a serpent, as being the archetype of the beast nature (ch. 12:9).

3. one of—lit., "from among." wounded . . . healed—twice again repeated emphatically (vs. 12, 14); cf. ch. 17:8, 11, "the beast that was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit" (cf. vs. 11 below); the Germanic empire, the seventh head (revived in the eighth), as yet future in John's time (ch. 17:10). Contrast the change whereby Nebuchadnezzar, being humbled from his selfdeifying pride, was converted from his beast-like form and character to MAN'S form and

17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman. The heathen party, foiled in their subtle attempt to destroy Christianity, were greatly enraged, and endeavored to excite the hatred of the multitude against the religion of Jesus. Went to make war with the remnant of her seed. The dragon departed into the wilderness, whither the woman had fled; and in another form commenced a new species of persecution, directed only against the remnant of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

1. And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea. An earthly belligerent power is evidently designed. And the comparison is peculiarly appropriate; for as several species of wild beasts carry on perpetual warfare with the animal world, so most governments, influenced by ambition, promote discord and depopulation. This beast is said to rise up out of the sea, in which particular it corresponds with the four beasts of Daniel; the sea is therefore the symbol of a great multitude of nations, as has already been proven; and the meaning is, that every mighty empire is raised upon the ruins of a great number of nations, which it has successfully contended against and incorporated with its dominions. Having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns. The beast here described is the Latin empire, which supported the Romish or Latin Church; for it has upon his horns ten crowns, i.e., is an empire composed of ten distinct monarchies in the interest of the Latin Church.

And upon his heads the name of blasphemy. Blasphemy, in Scripture, signifies impious speaking when applied to God, and injurious speaking when directed against our neighbor. A name of blasphemy is the prostitution of a sacred name to an unholy purpose. A name of blasphemy, or blasphemous appellation, is said to be upon all the seven heads of the beast. The heads signify the seven electorates of the German empire, and also seven forms of Latin government. The name of blasphemy will consequently be found upon the seven electorates of Germany. This, therefore, can be no other than that which was common, not only to the electorates but also to the whole empire of Germany, "The Sacred (or Holy) Roman Empire." Here is a sacred appellation blasphemed by its application to the principal power of the beast. No kingdom can properly be called holy but that of Jesus; therefore it would be blasphemy to unite this epithet with any other power.

2. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard. This similitude of the beast to a leopard appears to be an allusion to the third beast of Daniel, which is well known to represent the empire of the Greeks. The Latin empire greatly resembled the modern empire of the Greeks. Though in its general appearance it resembles a leopard, yet differs from it in having feet like those of a bear. The second beast of Daniel was likened to a bear, and there can be no doubt that the kingdom of the Medes and Persians was intended; and it is very properly likened to this animal, because it was one of the most inhuman governments that ever existed, and a bear is the well-known Scripture emblem of cruelty.

3. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death. The head that was wounded to death can be no other than the seventh draconic head, which was the sixth head of the beast, viz., the imperial power; for "this head," as Bishop Newton observes, "was, as it were, wounded to death when the Roman empire was overturned by the northern nations, and an end was put to the very name of emperor in Momyllus Augustulus." And his deadly wound was healed. This was effected by Charlemagne, who with his successors as-

The honour and worship paid to this infernal monster: All the world wondered after the beast. They paid honour and subjection to the devil and his instruments, and thought there was no power able to withstand them.

How he exercised his infernal power and policy: He had a mouth, speaking great things, and blasphemies; and he made war with the saints, and overcame them. And against those that dwell in heaven. The malice of the devil shows itself against heaven and the blessed inhabitants of heaven. These are above the reach of his power. All he can do is to blaspheme them; but the saints on earth are more exposed to his cruelty, and he sometimes is permitted to triumph over them. The limitation of the devil's power and success. He is limited in point of time (v. 5).

He is also limited as to the persons that he shall entirely subject to his will. It will be only those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life.

Those who have killed with the sword shall themselves fall by the sword (v. 10), and those who led the people of God into captivity shall themselves be made captives.

true position towards God; symbolized by his eagle wings being plucked, and himself made to stand upon his feet as a man (Dan. 7:4). Here, on the contrary, the beast's head is not changed into a human head, but receives a deadly wound, i.e., the world kingdom which this head represents does not truly turn to God, but for a time its God-opposed character remains paralyzed ("as it were slain"; the very words marking the beast's outward resemblance to the Lamb, "as it were slain," Notes, ch. 5:6. Cf. also the second beast's resemblance to the Lamb, vs. 11). Though seemingly slain (Greek for "wounded"), it remains the beast still, to rise again in another form (vs. 11). The first six heads were heathenish, Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome; the new seventh world power (the pagan German hordes pouring down on Christianized Rome), whereby Satan had hoped to stifle Christianity (ch. 11:15, 16), became itself Christianized (answering to the beast's, as it were, deadly wound: it was slain, and it is not, ch. 17:11). Its ascent out of the bottomless pit answers to the healing of its deadly wound (ch. 17:8). No essential change is noticed in Daniel as effected by Christianity upon the fourth kingdom; it remains essentially God-opposed to the last. The beast, healed of its temporary and external wound, now returns, not only from the sea, but from the bottomless pit, whence it draws new Antichristian strength of hell (vss. 3, 11, 12, 14; ch. 11:7; 17:8). wondered after—followed with wondering gaze. 4. which gave—A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS read, "because he gave." power—Greek, "the authority" which it had; its authority. Who is like unto the beast?—The very language appropriated to God, Exodus 15:11 (whence, in the Hebrew, the Maccabees took their name; the opponents of the Old Testament Antichrist, Antiochus); Psalm 35: 10; 71:19; 113:5; Micah 7:18; blasphemously (vss. 1, 5) assigned to the beast. It is a parody of the name "Michael" (cf. ch. 12:7), meaning, "Who is like unto God?" 5. blasphemies—So ANDREAS reads. B reads "blasphemy." A, "blasphemous things" (cf. Dan. 7:8; 11:25). power—"authority"; legitimate power (Greek, exousia). to continue—Greek, poiesai, "to act," or "work." B reads, "to make war" (cf. vs. 4). But A, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS omit "war." forty . . . two months—(Notes, ch. 11:2, 3; 12:6). 6. opened . . . mouth—The usual formula in the case of a set speech, or series of speeches. Vss. 6, 7 expand vs. 5. blasphemy—So B and ANDREAS. A and C read "blasphemies." and them—So Vulgate, Coptic, ANDREAS, and PRIMASIUS read. A and C omit "and": "them that dwell (lit., 'tabernacle') in heaven," mean not only angels and the departed souls of the righteous, but believers on earth who have their citizenship in heaven, and whose true life is hidden from the Antichristian persecutor in the secret of God's tabernacle. Note, ch. 12:12; John 3:7. 7. power—Greek, "authority." all kindreds . . . tongues . . . nations—Greek, "every tribe . . . tongue . . . nation." A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, ANDREAS, and PRIMASIUS add "and people," after "tribe" or "kindred." 8. all that dwell upon the earth—being of earth earthy; in contrast to "them that dwell in heaven." whose names are not written—A, B, C, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS read singular, "(every one) whose (Greek, hou; but B, Greek, hon, plural) name is not written." Lamb slain from the foundation of the world—The Greek order of words favors this translation. He was slain in the Father's eternal counsels: cf. I Peter 1:19, 20, virtually parallel. The other way of connecting the words is, "Written from the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb slain." So in ch. 17:8. The elect. The former is in the Greek more obvious and simple.

9. A general exhortation. Christ's own words of monition calling solemn attention. 10. He that leadeth into captivity—A, B, C, and Vulgate read, "if any one (be) for captivity." shall go into captivity—Greek present, "goeth into captivity." Cf. Jeremiah 15:2, which is alluded to here. ℵ, B, and C read simply, "he goeth away," and omit "into captivity." But A and Vulgate support the words. he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword—So B and C read. But A reads, "if any (is for) being (lit., 'to be') killed. . . ." As of old, so now, those to be persecuted by the beast in various ways, have their trials severally appointed them by God's fixed counsel. English Version is quite a different sense, viz., a warning to the persecutors that they shall be punished with retribution in kind. Here—"Herein": in bearing their appointed sufferings lies the patient endurance . . . of the saints. This is to be the motto and sumed all the marks of the ancient emperors of the west. And all the world wondered after the beast. As the original word signifies earth, and not world as in our translation, the Latin word, which is the earth of the beast, is here intended; and the meaning of the passage consequently is that the whole body of the Roman Catholics were affected with great astonishment at the mighty sway of the Latin empire, considering it as a great and holy power.

4. And they worshiped the dragon. Not only the dragon or revived western empire was worshiped; the beast, the whole Latin empire, is a partaker in the adoration. The manner in which it is worshiped consists in the subjects of it—Saying, Who is like unto the beast? Is it not the only holy power in the universe? Is it possible for any person not a subject of it to be saved?

5. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things. That is, there was given to the rulers of the Latin empire, who are the mouth of the beast, power to assume great and pompous titles, indicative of their mighty sway over many subjugated countries, and also to utter against their opponents the most terrible edicts.

6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name. The Latin empire is here represented as a blasphemous power. And them that dwell in heaven. By heaven is here meant the throne of God, and not the throne of the beast, because it is against God the beast blasphemes. This must therefore allude to his impious adoration of the saints and angels, whose residence is in heaven. He blasphemes against God by paying that adoration to the celestial inhabitants which belong to God alone.

8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb. The earth here is the Latin world, as has been observed before in similar cases. The meaning therefore is, that all the corrupt part of mankind who are inhabitants of the Latin world shall submit to the religion of the empire, except, as Bishop Newton expresses it, "those faithful few whose names, as citizens of heaven, were enrolled in the registers of life." Slain from the foundation of the world. That is, of the Christian world; for this has been shown to be the meaning of all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. The years of the crucifixion is properly the commencement of Christianity, as the apostles then first began to promulgate the religion of Christ with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. But as Jesus Christ was in the Divine purpose appointed from the foundation of the world to redeem man by his blood, he therefore is, in a very eminent sense, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, i.e., from the creation.

Verses 11–18

I. The form and shape of this second beast: He had two horns like a lamb, but a mouth that spoke like the dragon. All agree that this must be some great impostor, who, under a pretence of religion, shall deceive the souls of men.

II. The power which he exercises (v. 12) to draw men off from worshipping the true God to worship those who by nature are no gods.

III. The methods by which this second beast carried on his designs. Lying wonders, pretended miracles, by which they should be deceived. They would pretend to bring down fire from heaven. God sometimes permits his enemies to do things that seem very wonderful, and by which unwary persons may be deluded.

watchword of the elect during the period of the world kingdom. As the first beast is to be met by patience and faith (vs. 10), the second beast must be opposed by true wisdom (vs. 18). 11. another beast—"the false prophet." out of the earth—out of society civilized, consolidated, and ordered, but still, with all its culture, of earth earthy: as distinguished from "the sea," the troubled agitations of various peoples out of which the world power and its several kingdoms have emerged. As the first beast was like the Lamb in being, as it were, wounded to death, so the second is like the Lamb in having two lamb-like horns (its essential difference from the Lamb is marked by its having TWO, but the Lamb SEVEN horns, ch. 5:6). The former paganism of the world power, seeming to be wounded to death by Christianity, revives. In its second beast-form it is Christianized heathendom ministering to the former, and having earthly culture and learning to recommend it. The second beast's, or false prophet's rise, coincides in time with the healing of the beast's deadly wound and its revival (ch. 13:12-14). Its manifold character is marked by the Lord (Matt. 24:11, 24), "Many false prophets shall rise," where He is speaking of the last days. As the former beast corresponds to the first four beasts of Daniel, so the second beast, or the false prophet, to the little horn starting up among the ten horns of the fourth beast. 12. power—Greek, "authority." before him—"in his presence"; as ministering to, and upholding him. "The non-existence of the beast embraces the whole Germanic Christian period. The healing of the wound and return of the beast is represented [in regard to its final Antichristian manifestation though including also, meanwhile, its healing and return under Popery, which is baptized heathenism] in that principle which, since 1789, has manifested itself in beast-like outbreaks" [AUBERLEN]. which dwell therein—the earthly-minded. The Church becomes the harlot: the world's political power, the Antichristian beast; the world's wisdom and civilization, the false prophet. But in the last days all these God-opposed powers which have succeeded each other shall co-operate, and raise each other to the most terrible and intense power of their nature: the false prophet causes men to worship the beast, and the beast carries the harlot. These three forms of apostasy are reducible to two: the apostate Church and the apostate world, pseudo-Christianity and Antichristianity, the harlot and the beast; for the false prophet is also a beast; and the two beasts, as different manifestations of the same beast-like principle, stand in contradistinction to the harlot, and are finally judged together, whereas separate judgment falls on the harlot [AUBERLEN]. deadly wound—Greek, "wound of death." 13. wonders—Greek, "signs." so that—so great that. maketh fire—Greek, "maketh even fire." This is the very miracle which the two witnesses perform, and which Elijah long ago had performed; this the beast from the bottomless pit, or the false prophet, mimics. Not merely tricks, but miracles of a demoniacal kind, and by demon aid, like those of the Egyptian magicians, shall be wrought, most calculated to deceive; wrought "after the working (Greek, 'energy') of Satan." 14. deceiveth them that dwell on the earth—the earthly-minded, but not the elect. Even a miracle is not enough to warrant belief in a professed revelation unless that revelation be in harmony with God's already revealed will. by the means of those miracles—rather as Greek, "on account of (because of; in consequence of) those miracles." which he had power to do—Greek, "which were given him to do." in the sight of the beast—"before him" (vs. 12). which—A, B, and C read, "who"; marking, perhaps, a personal Antichrist. had—So B and ANDREAS read. But A, C, and Vulgate read, "hath." 15. he had power—Greek, "it was given to him." to give life—Greek, "breath," or "spirit." image—Nebuchadnezzar set up in Dura a golden image to be worshipped, probably of himself; for his dream had been interpreted, "Thou art this head of gold"; the three Hebrews who refused to worship the image were cast into a burning furnace. All this typifies the last apostasy. speak—"False doctrine will give a spiritual, philosophical appearance to the foolish apotheosis of the creaturely personified by Antichrist" [AUBERLEN]. JEROME, on Daniel 7, says, Antichrist shall be "one of the human race in whom the whole of Satan shall dwell bodily." Rome's speaking images and winking pictures of the Virgin Mary and the saints are an earnest of the future demoniacal miracles of the false prophet in making the beast's or Antichrist's image to speak. 16. to receive a mark—lit., "that

11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth. As a beast has already been shown to be the symbol of a kingdom or empire, the rising up of this second beast must consequently represent the rising up of another empire. This beast comes up out of the earth; therefore it is totally different from the preceding, which rose up out of the sea. Earth here means the Latin world, for this word has been shown to import this already in several instances; the rising up of the beast out of the earth must, consequently, represent the springing up of some power out of a state of subjection to the Latin empire: therefore the beast, here called another beast, is another Latin empire. This beast is the spiritual Latin empire, or, in other words, the Romish hierarchy; for with no other power can the prophetic description yet to be examined be shown to accord. And he had two horns. Two horns must represent two kingdoms; for if horns of a beast mean kingdoms in one part of the Apocalypse, kingdoms must be intended by this symbol whenever it is used in a similar way in any other part of this book. As the second beast is the spiritual Latin empire, the two horns of this best denote that the empire thus represented is composed of two distinct spiritual powers. These, therefore, can be no other, as Bishop Newton and Faber properly observe, than the two grand independent branches of the Romish hierarchy, viz., the Latin clergy, regular and secular. Like a lamb. The two horns of the beast, or the regular and secular clergy, profess to be the ministers of Christ, to be like him in meekness and humility, and to teach nothing that is contrary to godliness. The two-horned beast, or spiritual Latin empire, has in reality the name, and in the eyes of the Latin world the appearance, of a Christian power. But he is only so in appearance, and that alone among his deluded votaries.

12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him. Here he is represented as having obtained the direction and management of all the power of the first beast or secular Latin empire before him. That the Romish hierarchy has had the extensive power here spoken of, is evident from history; for the civil power was in subjection to the ecclesiastical. The earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. That is, he causes the whole Latin world to submit to the authority of the Latin empire, with the revived western empire at its head, persuading them that such submission is beneficial to their spiritual interests, and absolutely necessary for their salvation.

13. Maketh fire come down from heaven—in the sight of men. Fire, in Scripture, when it signifies wrath, represents that species of indignation which is attended with the destruction of whatever is the cause of it. Therefore the fire which the false prophet bringeth down from heaven upon the earth, is the fiery indignation which he causes to come down from heaven or throne of the Latin empire upon all those of the earth or Latin world who rebel against his authority. All this has been fulfilled in the Romish hierarchy; the Latin clergy have denominated all those that oppose their authority heretics, they have instituted tribunals to try the cause of heresy, and all those that would not submit to their idolatry they have condemned to various kinds of tortures and deaths.

They have the mark of the beast in their forehead and in their right hand, and they have the name of the beast and the number of his name. They make an open profession of their subjection.

IV. We have here the number of the beast, given in such a manner as will sufficiently exercise all the wisdom and accuracy of men: The number is the number of a man, and it is 666. Only this we know, God has written Mene Tekel upon all his enemies; he has numbered their days, and they shall be finished, but his own kingdom shall endure for ever.

they should give them a mark"; such a brand as masters stamp on their slaves, and monarchs on their subjects. Soldiers voluntarily punctured their arms with marks of the general under whom they served. Votaries of idols branded themselves with the idol's cipher or symbol. Thus Antiochus Epiphanes branded the Jews with the ivy leaf, the symbol of Bacchus (II Maccabees 6:7; III Maccabees 2:29). 17. And—So A, B, and Vulgate read. C, IRENÆUS, 316, Coptic, and Syriac omit it. might buy—Greek, "may be able to buy." the mark, or the name—Greek, "the mark (viz.), the name of the beast." The mark may be, as in the case of the sealing of the saints in the forehead, not a visible mark, but symbolical of allegiance. So the sign of the cross in Popery. The Pope's interdict has often shut out the excommunicate from social and commercial intercourse. Under the final Antichrist this shall come to pass in its most violent form. number of his name—implying that the name has some numerical meaning. 18. wisdom—the armory against the second beast, as patience and faith against the first. Spiritual wisdom is needed to solve the mystery of iniquity, so as not to be beguiled by it. count . . . for—The "for" implies the possibility of our calculating or counting the beast's number. the number of a man—i.e., counted as men generally count. So the phrase is used in ch. 21:17. six hundred threescore and six—A and Vulgate write the numbers in full in the Greek. But B writes merely the three Greek letters standing for numbers, Ch, X, St. "C reads" 616, but IRENÆUS, 328, opposes this and maintains "666." IRENÆUS, in the second century, disciple of POLYCARP, John's disciple, explained this number as contained in the Greek letters of Lateinos (L being 30; A, 1; T, 300; E, 5; I, 10; N, 50; O, 70; S, 200). The Latin is peculiarly the language of the Church of Rome in all her official acts; the forced unity of language in ritual being the counterfeit of the true unity; the premature and spurious anticipation of the real unity, only to be realized at Christ's coming, when all the earth shall speak "one language" (Zeph. 3:9).

ADAM CLARKE

16. And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bound, to receive a mark. The mark imposed by the two-horned beast is called the mark of his name. The name of the beast is the Latin empire: the mark of his name must therefore be his Latin worship: for this very reason, that it is the two-horned beast, or false prophet, who causes all descriptions of persons to receive it.

17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark. "If any," observes Bishop Newton, "dissent from the stated and authorized forms, they are condemned and excommunicated as heretics; and in consequence of that they are no longer suffered to buy or sell; they are interdicted from traffic and commerce, and all the benefits of civil society."

18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six. It is said the number of the beast is the number of a man; consequently the numbered beast must be a man, that is, it must be represented elsewhere in the Revelation under this emblem, for in no other sense can an empire be denominated a man. Therefore, it is not the ten-horned beast, for this is uniformly styled The Beast in every part of the Apocalypse where there has been occasion to mention this power. It can therefore be no other than the two-horned beast, or Romish hierarchy; which, on account of its preaching to the world its most antichristian system of doctrines, and calling it Christianity, is likewise named The False Prophet.

Their songs of praise (v. 3). They are described by their chastity and purity: They are virgins.

God's and Christ's name here answers to the seal "upon their foreheads" in ch. 7:3. As the 144,000 of Israel are "the first fruits" (vs. 4), so "the harvest" (vs. 15) is the general assembly of Gentile saints to be translated by Christ as His first act in assuming His kingdom, prior to His judgment (ch. 16, the last seven vials) on the Antichristian world, in executing which His saints shall share. 2. from—Greek, "out of." voice of many waters—as is the voice of Himself, such also is the voice of His people I heard the voice of harpers—A, B, C, and ORIGEN read, "the voice which I heard (was) as of harpers." 3. sung—Greek, "sing." as it were—So A, C, and Vulgate read. It is "as it were" a new song; for it is, in truth, as old as God's eternal purpose. But B, Syriac, Coptic, ORIGEN, and ANDREAS omit these words. new song—(ch. 5:9, 10). The song is that of victory after conflict with the dragon, beast, and false prophet: never sung before, for such a conflict had never been fought before; therefore new: till now the kingdom of Christ on earth had been usurped; they sing the new song in anticipation of His blood-bought kingdom with His saints. four beasts—rather as Greek, "four living creatures." The harpers and singers evidently include the 144,000: so the parallel proves (ch. 15:2, 3), where the same act is attributed to the general company of the saints, the harvest (vs. 15) from all nations. Not as ALFORD, "the harpers and song are in heaven, but the 144,000 are on earth." redeemed—lit., "purchased." Not even the angels can learn that song, for they know not experimentally what it is to have "come out of the great tribulation, and washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb" (ch. 7:14). 4. virgins—spiritually (Matt. 25:1); in contrast to the apostate Church, Babylon (vs. 8),

CHAPTER 14

1. A Lamb stood on the mount Sion. This represents Jesus Christ in His sacrificial office; mount Sion was a type of the Christian Church. And with him an hundred forty and four thousand. Representing those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews. See chap. vii. 4. His Father's name written in their foreheads. They were professedly, openly, and practically the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Different sects of idolaters have the peculiar mark of their god on their foreheads. Almost every MS. of importance, as well as most of the versions and many of the fathers, read this clause thus: "Having His name and His Father's name written upon their foreheads." This is undoubtedly the true reading, and is properly received by Griesbach into the text.

2. The voice of many waters. That is, of multitudes of various nations. The voice of harpers. Though the sounds were many and apparently confused, yet both harmony and melody were preserved.

3. They sung . . . a new song. See on chap. v. 9. No man could learn that song. As none but genuine Christians can worship God acceptably, because they approach Him through the only Mediator, so none can understand the deep things of God but such; nor can others know the cause why true believers exult so much in God through Christ, because they know not the communion which such hold with the Father and the Son through the Holy Ghost.

MATTHEW HENRY

They had not defiled themselves either with corporal or spiritual adultery. By their loyalty and steadfast adherence to Christ: They follow the Lamb whithersoever he goes. By their former designation to this honour, v. 4. They were the first-fruits to God and to the Lamb, and the earnest of many more who should be followers of them, as they were of Christ.

There was no guile found in them, and they were without fault before the throne of God. Their hearts were right with God, and they were freely pardoned in Christ.

Verses 6–12

Three angels or messengers sent from heaven to give notice of the fall of Babylon.

I. The first angel was sent on an errand antecedent to it, v. 6, 7. The gospel is an everlasting gospel. It is a work fit for an angel to preach this everlasting gospel. The everlasting gospel is of great concern to all the world. The gospel is the great means whereby men are brought to fear God, and to give glory to him. It is by the preaching of the gospel that men are turned from idols to serve the living God, v. 7.

II. The second angel follows the other, and proclaims the actual fall of Babylon. By Babylon is generally understood Rome. The wickedness of Babylon will make her fall just, v. 8.

III. A third angel follows the other two, v. 9, 10. If after this any should persist in their idolatry, they must expect to drink deep of the wine of the wrath of God. Those who refuse to come out of Babylon must receive of her plagues.

spiritually "a harlot" (ch. 17:1-5; Isa. 1:21; contrast II Cor. 11:2; Eph. 5:25-27). Their not being defiled with women means they were not led astray from Christian faithfulness by the tempters who jointly constitute the spiritual "harlot." follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth—in glory, being especially near His person; the fitting reward of their following Him so fully on earth. redeemed—"purchased." being the—rather, "as a first fruit." Not merely a "first fruit" in the sense in which all believers are so, but Israel's 144,000 elect are the first fruit, the Jewish and Gentile elect Church is the harvest; in a further sense, the whole of the transfigured and translated Church which reigns with Christ at His coming, is the first fruit, and the consequent general ingathering of Israel and the nations, ending in the last judgment, is the full and final harvest. 5. guile—So ANDREAS in one copy. But A, B, C, ORIGEN, and ANDREAS in other copies read, "falsehood." Cf. with English Version reading Psalm 32:2; Isaiah 53:9; John 1:47. for—So B, Syriac, Coptic, ORIGEN, and ANDREAS read. But A and C omit. without fault—Greek, "blameless": in respect to the sincerity of their fidelity to Him. Not absolutely, and in themselves blameless; but regarded as such on the ground of His righteousness in whom alone they trusted, and whom they faithfully served by His Spirit in them. The allusion seems to be to Psalm 15:1, 2. Cf. vs. 1, "stood on Mount Sion." before the throne of God—A, B, C, Syriac, Coptic, ORIGEN, and ANDREAS omit these words. The oldest Vulgate MS. supports them. 6. Here begins the portion relating to the Gentile world, as the former portion related to Israel. Before the end the Gospel is to be preached for a WITNESS unto all nations: not that all nations shall be converted, but all nations shall have had the opportunity given them of deciding whether they will be for, or against, Christ.

everlasting gospel—the Gospel which announces the glad tidings of the everlasting kingdom of Christ, about to ensue immediately after the "judgment" on Antichrist, announced as imminent in vs. 7. As the former angel "flying through the midst of heaven" (ch. 8:13) announced "woe," so this angel "flying in the midst of heaven" announced joy. 7. Fear God—the forerunner to embracing the love of God manifested in the Gospel. Repentance accompanies faith. give glory to him—and not to the beast (cf. ch. 13:4; Jer. 13:16). the hour of his judgment—"The hour" implies the definite time. "Judgment," not the general judgment, but that upon Babylon, the beast, and his worshippers (vss. 8-12). worship him that made heaven—not Antichrist (cf. Acts 14:15). sea . . . fountains—distinguished also in ch. 8:8, 10. 8. another—so Vulgate. But A, B, Syriac, and ANDREAS add, "a second"; "another, a second angel." Babylon—here first mentioned; identical with the harlot, the apostate Church; distinct from the beast, and judged separately. is fallen—anticipation of ch. 18:2. A, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS support the second "is fallen." But B, C, and Coptic omit it. that great city—A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit "city." Then translate, "Babylon the great." The ulterior and exhaustive fulfilment of Isaiah 21:9. because—so ANDREAS. But A, C, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "which." B and Coptic omit it. Even reading "which," we must understand it as giving the reason of her fall. all nations—A, B and C read, "all the nations." the wine of the wrath of her fornication—the wine of the wrath of God, the consequence of her fornication. As she made the nations drunk with the wine of her fornication, so she herself shall be made drunk with the wine of God's wrath. 9. A, B, C, and ANDREAS read, "another, a third angel." Cf. with this verse ch. 13:15, 16. 10. The same—Greek, "he also," as the just and inevitable retribution. wine of . . . wrath of God—(Ps. 75:8). without mixture—whereas wine was so commonly mixed with water that to mix wine is used in Greek for to pour out wine; this wine of God's wrath is undiluted; there is no drop of water to cool its heat. indignation—Greek, orges, "abiding wrath." But the Greek for "wrath" above (Greek, thumou) is boiling indignation, from (Greek, thuo) a root meaning "to boil"; this is temporary ebullition of anger; that is lasting [AMMONIUS], and accompanied with a purpose of vengeance [ORIGEN on Ps. 2:5]. tormented . . . in the presence of . . . angels—(Ps. 49: 14; 58:10; 139:21; Isa. 66:24). God's enemies are regarded by the saints as their enemies, and when the day of probation is past, their mind shall be so entirely one with God's, that they shall rejoice in witnessing visibly the judicial vindication of God's righteousness in sinners' punishment. 11. for ever

4. These are they which were not defiled with women. They are pure from idolatry, and are presented as unspotted virgins to their Lord and Saviour, Christ. There may be an allusion here to the Israelites committing idolatry, through the means of their criminal connection with the Midianitish women. See Num. xxv. 1-4 and xxxi. 16. The firstfruits unto God. The reference appears to be to those Jews who were the first converts to Christianity.

5. In their mouth was found no guile. When brought before kings and rulers they did not dissemble, but boldly confessed the Lord Jesus.

6. Another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel. Whether this angel means any more than a particular dispensation of providence and grace, by which the gospel shall be rapidly sent throughout the whole world; or whether it means any especial messenger, order of preachers, people, or society of Christians, whose professed object it is to send the gospel of the Kingdom throughout the earth, we know not. But the vision seems truly descriptive of a late institution entitled "The British and Foreign Bible Society," whose object it is to print and circulate the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments through all the habitable world, and in all the languages spoken on the face of the earth.

7. Fear God, and give glory to him. This is the general language of the sacred writings. Worship the true God, the Creator and Governor of all things; and give Him glory; for to Him alone, not to idols or men, all glory and honor belong.

8. Babylon is fallen, is fallen. This is generally understood to be a prediction concerning Rome; and it is certain that Rome, in the rabbinical writings, is termed Babylon. That great city. Among the same writers this city is styled "the great city" and "the great Rome." But which Rome is meant? Pagan or papal Rome? Some parts of the description apply best to the former. The wine of the wrath of her fornication. There is an allusion here to a custom of impure women, who give love potions to those whom they wish to seduce and bind to their will; and these potions are generally of an intoxicating nature, greatly inflaming the blood, and disturbing the intellect. Fornication and adultery are frequently used in Scripture as emblems of idolatry and false worship. No nation of the earth spread their idolatries so far as the ancient Romans; they were as extensive as their conquests. And papal Rome has been not less active in disseminating her superstitions. She has given her rituals, but not the everlasting gospel, to most nations of the earth.

10. The wine of the wrath of God. As they have drunk the intoxicating wine of idolatry or spiritual fornication, they shall now drink the wine of God's wrath, which is poured out into the cup of His indignation. This is an allusion to the poisoned cup which certain criminals were obliged to drink, on which ensued speedy death. Shall be tormented with fire and brimstone. An allusion to the punishment of Sodom and Gomorrah for their unnatural crimes. Presence of the holy angels, and . . . of the Lamb, these being the instruments employed in their destruction; the Lamb—the Lord Jesus Christ—acting as Judge.

MATTHEW HENRY

When the treachery and rebellion of others shall be punished, then it will be said, to the honour of the faithful (v. 12): Here is the patience of the saints; you have before seen their patience exercised, now you see it rewarded.

The vision of the harvest and vintage.

I. The preface, v. 13. This prophecy came down from heaven, and not from men, and therefore it is of certain truth. It was to be preserved and published—by writing; it was to be matter of record, that the people of God might have recourse to it for their comfort upon all occasions. It principally intended to show the blessedness of all the faithful servants of God, both in death and after death: Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, &c. The description of those that are and shall be blessed—such as die in the Lord.

They are blessed in their rest. They are blessed in their recompence: Their works follow them; as their evidence of having lived and died in the Lord.

II. The vision itself.

1. A harvest (v. 14, 15), an emblem that sometimes signifies the cutting down of the wicked, and sometimes the gathering in of the righteous. This seems rather to represent God's judgments against the wicked.

(1) The Lord of the harvest—one so like unto the Son of man that he was the same, even the Lord Jesus. The chariot in which he sat—a white cloud, a cloud that had a bright side turned to the church, how dark soever it might be to the wicked. The ensign of his power: On his head was a golden crown, authority to do whatsoever he would do. The instrument of his providences: In his hand a sharp sickle.

(2) The harvest-work, to thrust the sickle into the corn, and reap the field.

(3) The harvest-time; when the corn is ripe, when the measure of the sin of men is filled up. Then he will spare them no longer; he will thrust in his sickle, and the earth shall be reaped.

2. A vintage, v. 17. To whom this vintage-work was committed—another angel that came out from the altar. The work of the vintage, which consists of two parts: (1) Gathering the clusters of the vine, fully ripe, v. 18.

(2) Casting these grapes into the wine-press (v. 19). It was the wrath of God, without the city, where the army lay that came against Babylon. The quantity of the wine, that is, of the blood that was drawn forth by this judgment (v. 20). But here we are left to doubtful conjectures.

and ever—Greek, "unto ages of ages." no rest day nor night—Contrast the very different sense in which the same is said of the four living creatures in heaven, "They rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy . . ."; yet they do "rest" in another sense; they rest from sin and sorrow, weariness and weakness, trial and temptation (vs. 13); the lost have no rest from sin and Satan, terror, torment, and remorse. 12. Here . . .—resumed from ch. 13:10, where see the Note. In the fiery ordeal of persecution which awaits all who will not worship the beast, the faith and patience of the followers of God and Jesus shall be put to the test, and proved. patience—Greek, hupomene, "patient, persevering endurance." The second "here" is omitted in A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and PRIMASIUS. Translate, "Here is the endurance of the saints, who keep . . . ." the faith of Jesus—the faith which has Jesus for its object. 13. Encouragement to cheer those persecuted under the beast. Write—to put it on record for ever. Blessed—in resting from their toils, and, in the case of the saints just before alluded to as persecuted by the beast, in resting from persecutions. Their full blessedness is now "from henceforth," i.e., FROM THIS TIME, when the judgment on the beast and the harvest gatherings of the elect are imminent. The time so earnestly longed for by former martyrs is now all but come; the full number of their fellow servants is on the verge of completion; they have no longer to "rest (the same Greek as here, anapausis) yet for a little season," their eternal rest, or cessation from toils (II Thessalonians 1:7; Greek, anesis, relaxation after hardships. the Spirit—The words of God the Father (the "voice from heaven") are echoed back and confirmed by the Spirit (speaking in the Word, ch. 2:7; 22:17; and in the saints, II Cor. 5:5; I Pet. 4:14). All "God's promises in Christ are yea" (II Cor. 1:20). unto me—omitted in A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. that they may—The Greek includes also the idea, They are blessed, in that they SHALL rest from their toils (so the Greek). and—So B and ANDREAS read. But A, C, Vulgate, and Syriac read "for." They rest from their toils because their time for toil is past; they enter on the blessed rest because of their faith evinced by their works which, therefore, "follow WITH (so the Greek) them." Their works are specified because respect is had to the coming judgment, wherein every man shall be "judged according to his works." crown—Greek, stephanon, "garland" of victory; not His diadem as a king. The victory is described in detail, ch. 19:11-21. one sat—"one sitting," Greek, cathemenon homoion, is the reading of A, B, C, Vulgate, and Coptic. 15. Thrust in—Greek, "Send." The angel does not command the "Son of man" (vs. 14), but is the mere messenger announcing to the Son the will of God the Father, in whose hands are kept the times and the seasons. thy sickle—alluding to Mark 4:29, where also it is "sendeth the sickle." The Son sends His sickle-bearing angel to reap the righteous when fully ripe. harvest—the harvest crop. By the harvest-reaping the elect righteous are gathered out; by the vintage the Antichristian offenders are removed out of the earth, the scene of Christ's coming kingdom. The Son of man Himself, with a golden crown, is introduced in the harvest-gathering of the elect, a mere angel in the vintage (vss. 18-20). is ripe—lit., "is dried." Ripe for glory. 16. thrust in—Greek, "cast." 17. out of the temple . . . in heaven—(ch. 11:19). 18. from the altar—upon which were offered the incense-accompanied prayers of all saints, which bring down in answer God's fiery judgment on the Church's foes, the fire being taken from the altar and cast upon the earth. fully ripe—Greek, "come to their acme"; ripe for punishment. 19. "The vine" is what is the subject of judgment because its grapes are not what God looked for considering its careful culture, but "wild grapes' (Isa. 5). The apostate world of Christendom, not the world of heathendom who have not heard of Christ, is the object of judgment. Cf. the emblem, ch. 19: 15; Isaiah 63:2, 3; Joel 3:13. 20. without the city—Jerusalem. The scene of the blood-shedding of Christ and His people shall be also the scene of God's vengeance on the Antichristian foe. Cf. the "horsemen," ch. 9:16, 17. blood—answering to the red wine. The slaughter of the apostates is what is here spoken of, not their eternal punishment. even unto the horse bridles—of the avenging "armies of heaven." by the space of a thousand . . . six hundred furlongs—lit., "a thousand six hundred furlongs off" [W. KELLY].

ADAM CLARKE

11. The smoke of their torment. Still an allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

12. Here is the patience of the saints. Here the faith of the true Christians shall be proved; they will "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth"; they keep the commandments of God, and are steadfast in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. Sometimes patience or "perseverance" is taken for the reward of these virtues. The text therefore may be thus understood: Here is the reward of the perseverance of the true Christians; for although they die for the testimony of Jesus, yet they shall be unutterably blessed. See the next verse.

13. I heard a voice from heaven. As the information now to be given was of the utmost importance, it is solemnly communicated by a voice from heaven, and the apostle is commanded to write or record what is said. Blessed are the dead. Happy are they. They do not see the evil that shall come upon the world, and are exempted from any further sufferings. "Happy are the dead" is a proverb frequently to be met in the Greek and Roman poets. From henceforth. "From this time; now; immediately." This word is joined to the following by many MSS. and some versions. It was a maxim among the Jews that as soon as the souls of the just departed from this life they ascended immediately to heaven. Yea, saith the Spirit. The Holy Spirit confirms the declaration from heaven and assigns the reasons of it. That they may rest from their labours. Have no more tribulation and distress. And their works do follow them. "And their works follow with them." Here is an elegant personification; their good works, sufferings, etc., are represented as so many companions escorting them on their way to the kingdom of God.

14. A white cloud. It is supposed that, from this verse to the end of the chapter, the destruction of Rome is represented under the symbols of harvest and vintage; images very frequent among the ancient prophets, by which they represented the destruction and excision of nations. See Joel iii. 12-14; Isa. xvii. 5; lxiii. 1; and Matt. xiii. 37 A golden crown In token of victory and regal power.

15. Thrust in thy sickle. Execute the judgments which God has decreed. For the harvest of the earth is ripe. The cup of the people's iniquity is full.

16. The earth was reaped. The judgments were executed.

18. Power over fire. Probably meaning the same angel which is mentioned in chap. viii. 3; ix. 13, who stood by the altar of burnt offering, having authority over its fire to offer that incense to God which represents the prayers of the saints.

19. The great winepress of the wrath of God. The place or kingdom where God executes His judgments on the workers of iniquity, whether pagans or persecuting Christians—Rome pagan or Rome papal.

20. Even unto the horse bridles. A hyperbolical expression, to denote a great effusion of blood. The Jews said, "When Hadrian besieged the city called Bitter, he slew so many that the horses waded in blood up to their mouths."

CHAPTER 15

Verses 1–4

The pouring out of the seven vials, which was committed to seven angels. The work they had to do, which was to finish the destruction of antichrist.

The spectators and witnesses of this their commission: all that had gotten the victory over the beast, &c.

These stood on a sea of glass singing the song of Moses. They extol the greatness of God's works.

They call upon all nations to render unto God the fear due to such a discovery of his truth and justice: Who shall not fear thee? (v. 4).

Verses 5–8

I. How these angels appeared, v. 5. Here is an allusion to the holiest of all in the tabernacle and temple, where was the mercy-seat, covering the ark of the testimony. In the judgments God was now about to execute he was fulfilling the prohecies and promises of his word and covenant, which were there always before him.

Vss. 1-8. THE LAST SEVEN VIALS OF PLAGUES. SONG OF THE VICTORS OVER THE BEAST. 1. the seven last plagues—Greek, "seven plagues which are the last." is filled up—lit., "was finished," or "consummated": the prophetical past for the future, the future being to God as though it were past, so sure of accomplishment is His word. This verse is the summary of the vision that follows: the angels do not actually receive the vials till vs. 7; but here, in vs. 1, by anticipation they are spoken of as having them. There are no more plagues after these until the Lord's coming in judgment. The destruction of Babylon (ch. 18) is the last: then in ch. 19 He appears. 2. sea of glass—Answering to the molton sea or great brazen laver before the mercy seat of the earthly temple, for the purification of the priests; typifying the baptism of water and the Spirit of all who are made kings and priests unto God. mingled with fire—answering to the baptism on earth with fire, i.e., fiery trial, as well as with the Holy Ghost, which Christ's people undergo to purify them, as gold is purified of its dross in the furnace. them that had gotten the victory over—Greek, "those (coming) off from (the conflict with) the beast-conquerors." over the number of his name A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit the words in English Version, "over his mark." The mark, in fact, is the number of his name which the faithful refused to receive, and so were victorious over it. stand on the sea of glass—ALFORD and DE BURGH explain "on (the shore of) the sea": at the sea. So the preposition, Greek, epi, with the accusative, is used for at, ch. 3:20. It has a pregnant sense: "standing" implies rest, Greek epi with the accusative implies motion towards. Thus the meaning is, Having come TO the sea, and now standing AT it. As the sea typifies the troubled state out of which the beast arose, and which is to be no more in the blessed world to come (ch. 21:1), so the victorious saints stand on it, having it under their feet (as the woman had the moon, ch. 12:1, see Note); but it is now no longer treacherous wherein the feet sink, but solid like glass, as it was under the feet of Christ, whose triumph and power the saints now share. Firmness of footing amidst apparent instability is thus represented.

harps of God—in the hands of these heavenly virgins, infinitely surpassing the timbrels of Miriam and the Israelitesses. 3. song of Moses . . . and . . . the Lamb—The New Testament song of the Lamb (i.e., the song which the Lamb shall lead, as being "the Captain of our salvation," just as Moses was leader of the Israelites, the song in which those who conquer through Him [Rom. 8:37] shall join, ch. 12:11) is the antitype to the triumphant Old Testament song of Moses and the Israelites at the Red Sea (Exod. 15). The Churches of the Old and New Testament are essentially one in their conflicts and triumphs.

servant of God—(Exod. 14:31; Num. 12:7; Josh. 22:5). The Lamb is more: He is the SON. Great and marvellous are thy works . . .—part of Moses' last song. The vindication of the justice of God that so He may be glorified is the grand end of God's dealings. Hence His servants again and again dwell upon this in their praises (ch. 16:7; 19:2; Prov. 16:4; Jer. 10:10; Dan. 4:37). Especially at the judgment (Ps. 50:1-6; 145:17). saints—There is no MS. authority for this. A, B, Coptic, and CYPRIAN read, "of the NATIONS." C reads "of the ages," and so Vulgate and Syriac. The point at issue in the Lord's controversy with the earth is, whether He, or Satan's minion, the beast, is "the King of the nations"; here at the eve of the judgments descending on the kingdom of the beast, the transfigured saints hail Him as "the King of the nations" (Ezek. 21:27). 4. Who shall not—Greek, "Who is there but must fear Thee?" Cf. Moses' song, Exodus 15:14-16, on the fear which God's judgments strike into the foe. thee—so Syriac. But A, B, C, Vulgate, and CYPRIAN reject "thee." all nations shall come—alluding to Psalm 22:27-31; cf. Isaiah 66:23; Jeremiah 16:19. The conversion of all nations, therefore, shall be when Christ shall come, and not till then; and the first moving cause will be Christ's manifested judgments preparing all hearts for receiving Christ's mercy.

judgment—Greek, "righteousness." 5. So ch. 11:19; cf. ch. 16:17. "The tabernacle of the testimony" appropriately here comes to view, where God's faithfulness in avenging His people with judgments on their foes is about to be set forth. We need to get a glimpse within the Holy place to "understand" the secret spring

1. Seven angels having the seven last plagues. Under the emblems of harvest and vintage God's judgments on the enemies of His Church have already been pointed out; but these are further signified by the seven vials, which are called the seven last plagues of God. The seven last plagues appear to fall under the seventh and last trumpet. As the seventh seal contained the seven trumpets, so the seventh trumpet contains the seven vials. And as seven angels sounded the seven trumpets, so seven angels are appointed to pour out the seven vials, angels being always the ministers of Providence. This chapter contains the opening vision which is preparatory to the pouring out of the vials.

2. A sea of glass. A spacious, lucid plain around the throne, from which fiery coruscations were continually emitted; or the reflection of the light upon this lucid plain produced the prismatic colors of the most vivid rainbow.

3. They sing the song of Moses. That which Moses sang, Exod. xv. 1, when he and the Israelites, by the miraculous power of God, had got safely through the Red Sea, and saw their enemies all destroyed. And the song of the Lamb. The same song adapted to the state of the suffering, but now delivered, Christians.

Great and marvellous are thy works. God's works are descriptive of His infinite power and wisdom. Lord God Almighty. Nearly the same as "Jehovah God of hosts." Just and true are thy ways. Every step God takes in grace or providence is according to justice, and He carefully accomplishes all His threatenings and all His promises; to this He is bound by His truth.

4. Who shall not fear thee? That is, "All should fear" and worship this true God, because He is just and true and holy; and His saints should love and obey Him, because He is their King; and they and all men should acknowledge His judgments, because they are made manifest.

5. The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony. The temple which succeeded the tabernacle, in which was the testimony, viz., the two tables, Aaron's rod, pot of manna, holy anointing oil, etc. All bearing testimony to the truth of God and His miraculous interposition in their behalf.

MATTHEW HENRY

II. How they were equipped. Their array, v. 6. This was the habit of the high priests when they went in to enquire of God, and came out with an answer from him. They do everything in a pure and holy manner.

Their artillery was seven vials filled with the wrath of God; they were armed with the wrath of God against his enemies.

III. They were all wrapt up in clouds of smoke, which filled the temple, from the glorious and powerful presence of God; so that no man was able to enter into the temple, till the work was finished. God himself was now preaching to the church and to all the world, by terrible things in righteousness; but when this work was done, the temple would be opened.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

and the end of God's righteous dealings. are—lit., "were": the prophetical past for the immediate future. 5. behold—omitted by A, B, C, Syriac, and ANDREAS. It is supported only by Vulgate, Coptic, and PRIMASIUS, but no MS. 6. having—So B reads. But A and C, read "who have": not that they had them yet (cf. vs. 7), but they are by anticipation described according to their office. linen—So B reads. But A, C, and Vulgate, "a stone." On the principle that the harder reading is the one least likely to be an interpolation, we should read, "a stone pure ('and' is omitted in A, B, C, and ANDREAS), brilliant" (so the Greek): probably the diamond. With English Version, cf. Acts 1:10; 10: 30. golden girdles—resembling the Lord in this respect (ch. 1:13). 7. one of the four beasts—Greek, "living creatures." The presentation of the vials to the angels by one of the living creatures implies the ministry of the Church as the medium for manifesting to angels the glories of redemption (Eph. 3:10). vials—"bowls"; a broad shallow cup or bowl. The breadth of the vials in their upper part would tend to cause their contents to pour out all at once, implying the overwhelming suddenness of the woes. full of . . . wrath—How sweetly do the vials full of odors, i.e., the incense-perfumed prayers of the saints, contrast with these! 8. temple . . . filled—Isaiah 6:4; cf. Exodus 40:34; II Chronicles 5:14, as to the earthly temple, of which this is the antitype. the glory of God and . . . power—then fully manifested. no man was able to enter . . . the temple—because of God's presence in His manifested glory and power during the execution of these judgments.

ADAM CLARKE

6. The seven angels came out of the temple. To show that they were sent from God himself. Clothed in pure and white linen. Habited as priests. For these habits see Exod. xxviii. 6, 8; and see the note on chap. i. 13.

8. The temple was filled with smoke. So was the Tabernacle when consecrated by Moses, Exod. xl. 34-35, and the Temple when consecrated by Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 10-11; 2 Chron. v. 14. See Isa. vi. 4. This account seems at least partly copied from those above.

CHAPTER 16

I. Though everything was made ready before, yet nothing was to be put in execution without an order from God; and this he gave out of the temple.

II. No sooner was the word of command given than it was immediately obeyed. God says, Go your ways, and pour out the vials; and immediately the work is begun. We have here a reference and allusion to several of the plagues of Egypt. Their sins were alike, and so were their punishments. These vials have a plain reference to the seven trumpets, which represented the rise of antichrist. The fall of antichrist shall be gradual; as Rome was not built in one day, so neither shall it fall in one day. The fall of the antichristian interest shall be universal. Everything that any ways belonged to them, all consigned over to ruin, all accursed for the sake of the wickedness of that people.

1. The first angel, v. 2. Where the vial fell—upon the earth, upon the common people. What it produced—noisome and grievous sores on all who had the mark of the beast. They had marked themselves by their sin, now God marks them out by his judgments.

2. The second angel poured out his vial. Where it fell—upon the sea. It turned the sea into blood, as the blood of a dead man, and every living soul died in the sea. God discovered not only the vanity and falsehood of their religion, but the pernicious and deadly nature of it.

The next angel poured out his vial. Where it fell—upon the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters. It turned them into blood.

The following doxology (v. 5, 6). The instrument that God makes use of in this work is here called the angel of the waters, who extols the righteousness of God in this retaliation, to which another angel answered by full consent, v. 7.

CHAPTER 16

VSS. 1-21. THE SEVEN VIALS AND THE CONSEQUENT PLAGUES. 1. a great voice—viz., God's. These seven vials (the detailed expansion of the vintage, ch. 14:18-20) being called "the last," must belong to the period just when the term of the beast's power has expired (whence reference is made in them all to the worshippers of the beast as the objects of the judgments), close to the end or coming of the Son of man. the temple—B and Syriac omit. But A, C, Vulgate, and ANDREAS support the words. the vials—so Syriac and Coptic. But A, B, C, Vulgate, and ANDREAS read, "the seven vials." upon—Greek, "into." 2. went—Greek, "went away." poured out—So the angel cast fire into the earth previous to the series of trumpets (ch. 8:5). upon—so Coptic. But A, B, C, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "into." noisome—lit., "evil" (cf. Deut. 28:27, 35). The very same Greek word is used in the LXX as here, Greek, helkos. The reason why the sixth Egyptian plague is the first here is because it was directed against the Egyptian magicians, Jannes and Jambres, so that they could not stand before Moses; and so here the plague is sent upon those who in the beast worship had practiced sorcery. As they submitted to the mark of the beast, so they must bear the mark of the avenging God. Contrast ch. 7:3; Ezekiel 9:4, 6. grievous—distressing to the sufferers. sore upon the men—antitype to the sixth Egyptian plague. which had the mark of the beast—Therefore this first vial is subsequent to the period of the beast's rule. 3. angel—So B and ANDREAS. But A, C, and Vulgate omit it. upon—Greek, "into." became as . . . blood—answering to another Egyptian plague. of a dead man—putrefying. living soul—So B and ANDREAS. But A, C, and Syriac, "soul of life" (cf. Gen. 1:30; 7:21, 22). in the sea—So B and ANDREAS. But A, C, and Syriac read, "(as respects) the things in the sea." 4. Exodus 7:20. angel—so Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A, B, C, and Vulgate omit it. 5. angel of the waters—i.e., presiding over the waters. O Lord—omitted by A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. and shalt be—A, B, C, Vulgate, and ANDREAS for this clause read, "(which art and wast) holy." The Lord is now no longer He that shall come, for He is come in vengeance and therefore the third of the three clauses found in ch. 1:4, 8; and 4:8 is here and in ch. 11:17 omitted. judged thus—lit., "these things." "Thou didst inflict this judgment." 6. (Ch. 11:18, end; Gen. 9:6; Isa. 49:26.) An anticipation of ch. 18:20, 24; cf. ch. 13:15. For—A, B, C, and ANDREAS omit. 7. another out of—omitted in A, C, Syriac, and Coptic. Translate then, "I heard the altar [personified] saying." On it the prayers of saints are presented before God: beneath it are the souls of the martyrs crying for vengeance on the foes of God. 8. angel—so Coptic and ANDREAS. But A, B, C, Vulgate, and Syriac omit it. upon—not as in

CHAPTER 16

1. Go your ways, and pour out. These ministers of the divine justice were ready to execute vengeance upon transgressors, having full power, but could do nothing in this way till they received especial commission. Nothing can be done without the permission of God, and in the manifestation of justice or mercy by divine agency there must be positive command.

2. A noisome and grievous sore. This is a reference to the sixth Egyptian plague, boils and blains, Exod. ix. 8, etc.

3. As the blood of a dead man. Either meaning blood in a state of putrescency or an effusion of blood in naval conflicts; even the sea was tinged with the blood of those who were slain in these wars. This is most probably the meaning of this vial. These engagements were so sanguinary that both the conquerors and the conquered were nearly destroyed; every living soul died in the sea.

4. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters. This is an allusion to the first Egyptian plague. Exod. vii. 20; and to those plagues in general there are allusions throughout this chapter. It is a sentiment of the rabbins that "whatever plagues God inflicted on the Egyptians in former times, he will inflict on the enemies of his people in all later times."

5. The angel of the waters. The rabbins attribute angels, not only to the four elements so called, but to almost everything besides. We have already seen the "angel of the bottomless pit," chap. ix. 11, and "the angel of the fire," chap. xiv. 18.

6. Thou hast given them blood to drink. They thirsted after blood and massacred the saints of God, and now they have got blood to drink!

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 8–11

The fourth angel poured out his vial, and that fell upon the sun. That sun which before cherished them with warm and benign influences shall now grow hot against these idolaters, and shall scorch them, which yet will be so far from bringing them to repentance, that it will cause them to curse God. They will be hardened to their ruin.

The fifth angel, v. 10. Where this vial fell—upon the seat of the beast, upon Rome itself. The whole kingdom of the beast was full of darkness. Darkness is opposed to wisdom and penetration, and forebodes the confusion and folly which the idolaters should discover at that time. It is opposed to pleasure and joy.

Verses 12–16

The sixth angel poured out his vial.

I. Where it fell—upon the great river Euphrates. Some take it literally. Others take it for the river Tiber.

II. What did this vial produce? The drying up of the river. A way is hereby prepared for the kings of the east. The last effort of the great dragon; he is resolved to have another push for it.

The instruments he makes use of: Three unclean spirits like frogs. These would muster up the devil's forces for a decisive battle.

The means these instruments would use. They would work pretended miracles.

vss. 2, 3, "into." sun—Whereas by the fourth trumpet the sun is darkened (ch. 8:12) in a third part, here by the fourth vial the sun's bright scorching power is intensified. power was given unto him—rather, "unto it," the sun. men—Greek, "the men," viz., those who had the mark of the beast (vs. 2). 9. men—Greek, "the men." repented not to give him glory—(ch. 9:20). Affliction, if it does not melt, hardens the sinner. Cf. the better result on others, ch. 11:13; 14:7; 15:4. 10. angel—omitted by A, B, C, Vulgate, and Syriac. But Coptic and ANDREAS support it. seat—Greek, "throne of the beast": set up in arrogant mimicry of God's throne; the dragon gave his throne to the beast (ch. 13:2). darkness—parallel to the Egyptian plague of darkness, Pharaoh being the type of Antichrist (cf. ch. 15:2, 3, Notes; cf. the fifth trumpet, ch. 9:2). gnawed their tongues for pain—Greek, "owing to the pain" occasioned by the previous plagues, rendered more appalling by the darkness. Or, as "gnashing of teeth" is one of the accompaniments of hell, so this "gnawing of their tongues" is through rage at the baffling of their hopes and the overthrow of their kingdom. 11. sores—This shows that each fresh plague was accompanied with the continuance of the preceding plagues: there was an accumulation, not a mere succession, of plagues. repented not—(Cf. vs. 9). 12. angel—so Coptic and ANDREAS. A, B, C, Vulgate, and Syriac omit. kings of the east—Greek, "the kings who are from the rising of the sun." Reference to the Euphrates similarly occurs in the sixth trumpet. The drying up of the Euphrates, I think, is to be taken figuratively, as Babylon itself, which is situated on it, is undoubtedly so, ch. 17:5. The waters of the Euphrates (cf. Isa. 8:7, 8) are spiritual Babylon's, i.e., the apostate Church's (of which Rome is the chief, though not exclusive representative) spiritual and temporal powers. The drying up of the waters of Babylon expresses the same thing as the ten kings stripping, eating, and burning the whore. The phrase, "way may be prepared for," is that applied to the Lord's coming (Isa. 40:3; Matt. 3:3; Luke 1:76). He shall come from the East (Matt. 24:27; Ezek. 43:2, "the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the East"): not alone, for His elect transfigured saints of Israel and the Gentiles shall accompany Him, who are "kings and priests unto God" (ch. 1:6). 13. unclean spirits like frogs—the antitype to the plague of frogs sent on Egypt. The presence of the "unclean spirit" in the land (Palestine) is foretold, Zechariah 13:2, in connection with idolatrous prophets. Beginning with infidelity as to Jesus Christ's coming in the flesh, men shall end in the grossest idolatry of the beast, the incarnation of all that is self-deifying and God-opposed in the world powers of all ages; having rejected Him that came in the Father's name, they shall worship one that comes in his own, though really the devil's representative; as frogs croak by night in marshes and quagmires, so these unclean spirits in the darkness of error teach lies amidst the mire of filthy lusts. The unclean spirit out of the mouth of the dragon symbolizes the proud infidelity which opposes God and Christ. That out of the beast's mouth is the spirit of the world, which in the politics of men, whether lawless democracy or despotism, sets man above God. That out of the mouth of the false prophet is lying spiritualism and religious delusion, which shall take the place of the harlot when she shall have been destroyed. the dragon—Satan, who gives his power and throne (ch. 13:2) to the beast. false prophet—distinct from the harlot, the apostate Church (of which Rome is the chief, though not sole, representative), ch. 17:1-3, 16; and identical with the second beast, ch. 13:11-15, as appears by comparing ch. 19:20 with ch. 13:13; ultimately consigned to the lake of fire with the first beast; as is also the dragon a little later (ch. 20:10).

14. devils—Greek, "demons." working miracles—Greek, "signs." go forth unto—or "for," i.e., to tempt them to the battle with Christ. the kings of the earth and . . .—A, B, Syriac, and ANDREAS omit "of the earth and," which clause is not in any MS. Translate, "kings of the whole habitable world," who are "of this world," in contrast to "the kings of (from) the East" (the sunrising), vs. 12, viz., the saints to whom Christ has appointed a kingdom, and who are "children of light." God, in permitting Satan's miracles, as in the case of the Egyptian magicians who were His instruments in hardening Pharaoh's heart, gives the reprobate up to judicial delusion preparatory to their destruction.

battle—Greek, "war"; the final conflict for the kingship of the world described in

ADAM CLARKE

10. The seat of the beast. "Upon the throne of the wild beast." The regal family was smitten by the fourth vial; they did not repent; then the fifth angel pours out his vial on the throne of the wild beast, or anti-Christian idolatrous power. Was full of darkness. Confusion, dismay, and distress.

11. Blasphemed the God of heaven. Neither did they repent; therefore other judgments must follow.

12. Upon the great river Euphrates. Probably meaning the people in the vicinity of this river, though some think that the Tiber is intended. The water thereof was dried up. The people discomfited and all impediments removed. The kings of the east. There seems to be an allusion here to the ruin of Babylon by Cyrus, predicted by the Prophet Jeremiah, chaps. l and li.

13. Three unclean spirits. Perhaps false teachers, called afterwards "spirits of devils," which persuade the kings of the earth by lying miracles to come forth to the place of general slaughter, vv. 14, 16.

J. A. SEISS:

To tell exactly who and what these seducing devils are, and exactly how they manage their infernal mission, may not be in our power. This is not the only place where their agency and successes are mentioned. Paul tells us that the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times seducing spirits shall manifest themselves, even teaching demons, deceiving men with their lies (1 Tim. 4:1, 2). They are spirits; they are "unclean spirits"; they are "demon spirits"; they are sent forth into activity by the Dragon Trinity; they are the elect agents to awaken the world to the attempt to abolish God from the earth; and they are frog-like in that they come forth out of the pestiferous quagmires of the universe, do their work amid the world's evening shadows, and creep, and croak, and defile, and fill the ears of the nations with their noisy demonstrations, till they set all the kings and armies of the whole earth in enthusiastic commotion for the final crushing out of the Lamb and all His powers. As in chapter 9, the seven Spirits of God and of Christ went forth into all the earth to make up and gather together into one holy fellowship the great congregation of the sanctified; so these spirits of hell go forth upon the kings and potentates of the world, to make up and gather together the grand army of the devil's worshipers.—The Apocalypse

MATTHEW HENRY

The warning which God gives of this great and decisive trial, v. 15. When God's cause comes to be tried, and his battles to be fought, all his people shall be ready and be faithful and valiant in his service.

The field of battle—a place called Armageddon; that is, say some, the mount of Megiddo. The further account of it is suspended till we come to the nineteenth chapter, v. 19, 20.

Verses 17–21

An account of the seventh and last angel pouring forth his vial, which was the finishing stroke.

I. Where this plague fell—on the air, upon the prince of the power of the air, that is, the devil. Here is a vial poured out upon his kingdom, and he is not able to support his tottering cause and interest any longer.

II. What it produced. 1. A thankful voice from heaven, pronouncing that now the work was done. It is finished.

2. An earthquake, so great as never was before, and this ushered in by thunder and lightnings.

3. The fall of Babylon (v. 19). God now remembered this great and wicked city. Now he gives unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath, and every island and every mountain, that seemed by nature and situation the most secured, were carried away in the deluge of this ruin.

III. How the antichristian party were affected with it. Though it fell upon them as a dreadful storm, as if the stones of the city, tossed up into the air, came down upon their heads, like hailstones of a talent weight each, yet they were so far from repenting that they blasphemed that God who thus punished them.

ch. 19:17-21. 15. The gathering of the world kings with the beast against the Lamb is the signal for Christ's coming; therefore He here gives the charge to be watching for His coming and clothed in the garments of justification and sanctification, so as to be accepted. thief—(Matt. 24:43; II Pet. 3:10). they—saints and angels. shame—lit., "unseemliness" (Greek, aschemosunee): Greek, I Corinthians 13:5: a different word from the Greek in ch. 3:18 (Greek, aischunee). 16. he—rather, "they (the three unclean spirits) gathered them together." If English Version be retained, "He" will refer to God who gives them over to the delusion of the three unclean spirits; or else the sixth angel (vs. 12). Armageddon—Hebrew, Har, a mountain, and Megiddo in Manasseh in Galilee, the scene of the overthrow of the Canaanite kings by God's miraculous interposition under Deborah and Barak; the same as the great plain of Esdraelon. Josiah, too, as the ally of Babylon, was defeated and slain at Megiddo; and the mourning of the Jews at the time just before God shall interpose for them against all the nations confederate against Jerusalem, is compared to the mourning for Josiah at Megiddo. Megiddo comes from a root, gadad, "cut off," and means slaughter. Cf. Joel 3:2, 12, 14, where "the valley of Jehoshaphat" (meaning in Hebrew, "judgment of God") is mentioned as the scene of God's final vengeance on the God-opposing foe. Probably some great plain, antitypical to the valleys of Megiddo and Jehoshaphat, will be the scene. 17. angel—so ANDREAS. But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac omit it. into—so ANDREAS (Greek, eis). But A and B, "upon" (Greek, epi). great—so B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A omits. of heaven—so B and ANDREAS But A, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit. It is done—"It is come to pass." God's voice as to the final consummation, as Jesus' voice on the cross when the work of expiation was completed, "It is finished." 18. voice . . . thunders . . . lightnings—A has the order, "lightnings . . . voices . . . thunders." This is the same close as that of the seven seals and the seven thunders; but with the difference that they do not merely form the conclusion, but introduce the consequence, of the last vial, viz., the utter destruction of Babylon and then of the Antichristian armies. earthquake—which is often preceded by a lurid state of air, such as would result from the vial poured upon it. men were—so B, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS. But A and Coptic read, "A man was." so mighty—Greek, "such." 19. the great city—the capital and seat of the apostate Church, spiritual Babylon (of which Rome is the representative, if one literal city be meant). The city in ch. 11:8 (see Note), is probably distinct, viz., Jerusalem under Antichrist (the beast, who is distinct from the harlot or apostate Church). In ch. 11:13 only a tenth of Jerusalem falls whereas here the city (Babylon) "became (Greek) into three parts" by the earthquake. cities of the nations—other great cities in league with spiritual Babylon. great . . . came in remembrance—Greek, "Babylon the great was remembered" (ch. 18:5). It is now that the last call to escape from Babylon is given to God's people in her (ch. 18:4). fierceness—the boiling over outburst of His wrath (Greek, thumou orgees), cf. Note, ch. 14:10. 20. Plainly parallel to ch. 6:14-17, and by anticipation descriptive of the last judgment. the mountains—rather as Greek, "there were found no mountains." 21. fell—Greek, "descends." upon men—Greek, "the men." men—not those struck who died, but the rest. Unlike the result in the case of Jerusalem (ch. 11:13), where "the remnant . . . affrighted . . . gave glory to the God of heaven." was—Greek, "is."

ADAM CLARKE

15. Behold, I come as a thief. Here is a sudden but timely warning to put every man on his guard, when this sudden and generally unexpected tribulation should take place. Keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked. Here is a plain allusion to the office of him who was called the prefect or overseer of the mountain of the Temple. His custom was to go his rounds during the watches of the night; and if he found any of the Levites sleeping on his watch, he had authority to beat him with a stick and burn his vestments. Such a person being found on his return home naked, it was at once known that he had been found asleep at his post, had been beaten, and his clothes burned; thus his shame was seen—he was reproached for his infidelity and irreligion.

16. Armageddon. The original of this word has been variously formed and variously translated. It is "the mount of the assembly"; or "the destruction of their army"; or it is "Mount Megiddo," the valley of which was remarkable for two great slaughters: one of the Israelites, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, the other of the Canaanites, Judg. iv. 16; v. 19. But what is the battle of Armageddon? How ridiculous have been the conjectures of men relative to this point! Within the last twenty years this battle has been fought at various places, according to our purblind seers and self-inspired prophets! At one time it was Austerlitz, at another Moscow, at another Leipsic, and now Waterloo! And thus they have gone on, and will go on, confounding and being confounded.

17. Poured out his vial into the air. To signify that this plague was to be widely diffused, and perhaps to intimate that pestilences and various deaths would be the effect of this vial. It is done. It is said, chap. x. 7, that in the days of the seventh trumpet "the mystery of God should be finished"; so here we find it completed. "All's over!"

18. A great earthquake. Most terrible commotions, both civil and religious. Or a convulsion, shaking, or revolution.

19. The great city. Some say Jerusalem, others Rome pagan, others Rome papal.

The cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. Alluding to the mode of putting certain criminals to death, by making them drink a cup of poison.

20. Every island fled away. Probably meaning the capture of seaport towns, and fortified places.

21. A great hail . . . every stone about the weight of a talent. Has this any reference to cannon balls and bombs? It is very doubtful; we are all in the dark in these matters. The words "as a talent" are used to express something "great, excessively oppressive."

CHAPTER 17

Verses 1–6

Here we have a new vision. 1. The invitation given to the apostle, v. 1. This is a name of great infamy. She had been a prostitute to the kings of the earth, whom she had intoxicated with the wine of her fornication.

CHAPTER 17

VSS. 1-18. THE HARLOT BABYLON'S GAUD: THE BEAST ON WHICH SHE RIDES, HAVING SEVEN HEADS AND TEN HORNS, SHALL BE THE INSTRUMENT OF JUDGMENT ON HER.

1. unto me—A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit. many—So A. But B, "the many waters" (Jer. 51:13); vs. 15, below, explains the sense. The whore is the apostate Church, just as the woman (ch. 12) is the Church while faithful. drunk with—Greek, "owing to." It cannot be pagan Rome, but papal Rome, if a particular seat of error be meant, but I incline to think that the judgment (ch. 18:2) and the spiritual fornication (ch. 18:3), though finding their culmination in Rome, are not restricted to it, but comprise the whole apostate Church, Roman, Greek, and even Protestant, so far as it has been seduced from its "first love" (ch. 2:4)

CHAPTER 17

1. Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters. That idolatrous worship is frequently represented in Scripture under the character of a whore or whoredom, is evident from numerous passages which it is unnecessary to quote. The woman mentioned here is called a great whore, to denote her excessive depravity, and the awful nature of her idolatry. She is also represented as sitting upon many waters, to show the vast extent of her influence.

MATTHEW HENRY

2. The appearance she made, v. 4. 3. Her principal seat and residence—upon the beast that had seven heads and ten horns; that is to say, Rome, the city on seven hills.

4. Her name, which was written on her forehead. She is named from her place of residence—Babylon the great.

She is named from her infamous way and practice; not only a harlot, but a mother of harlots.

5. Her diet: she satiated herself with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus. She drank their blood with such greediness that she intoxicated herself with it.

Verses 7–13

Here we have the mystery of this vision explained But it is so explained as still to need further explanation. 1. This beast was, and is not, and yet is;

to Christ, the heavenly Bridegroom, and given its affections to worldly pomps and idols. The woman (ch. 12:1) is the congregation of God in its purity under the Old and New Testament, and appears again as the Bride of the Lamb, the transfigured Church prepared for the marriage feast. The woman, the invisible Church, is latent in the apostate Church, and is the Church militant; the Bride is the Church triumphant. 3. the wilderness—Contrast her in ch. 12:6, 14, having a place in the wilderness-world, but not a home; a sojourner here, looking for the city to come. Now, on the contrary, she is contented to have her portion in this moral wilderness. upon a scarlet... beast—The same as in ch. 13:1, who there is described as here, "having seven heads and ten horns (therein betraying that he is representative of the dragon, ch. 12:3), and upon his heads names (so the oldest MSS. read) of blasphemy"; cf. also vss. 12-14, below, with ch. 19:19, 20, and ch. 17:13, 14, 16. Rome, resting on the world power and ruling it by the claim of supremacy, is the chief, though not the exclusive, representative of this symbol. As the dragon is fiery-red, so the beast is blood-red in color; implying its blood-guiltiness, and also deep-dyed sin. The scarlet is also the symbol of kingly authority. full—all over; not merely "on his heads," as in ch. 13:1, for its opposition to God is now about to develop itself in all its intensity. Under the harlot's superintendence, the world power puts forth blasphemous pretensions worse than in pagan days.

4. The color scarlet, it is remarkable, is that reserved for popes and cardinals. Whenever and wherever (not in Rome alone) the Church, instead of being "clothed (as at first, ch. 12:1) with the sun" of heaven, is arrayed in earthly meretricious gauds, compromising the truth of God through fear, or flattery, of the world's power, science, or wealth, she becomes the harlot seated on the beast, and doomed in righteous retribution to be judged by the beast (vs. 16). Soon, like Rome, and like the Jews of Christ's and the apostles' time leagued with the heathen Rome, she will then become the persecutor of the saints (vs. 6). Instead of drinking her Lord's "cup" of suffering, she has "a cup full of abominations and filthinesses." decked—lit., "gilded." stones—Greek, "stone." filthiness—A, B, and ANDREAS read, "the filthy (impure) things. 5. upon... forehead... name—as harlots usually had. What a contrast to "HOLINESS TO THE LORD," inscribed on the miter on the high priest's forehead! mystery—implying a spiritual fact heretofore hidden, and incapable of discovery by mere reason, but now revealed. As the union of Christ and the Church is a "great mystery" (a spiritual truth of momentous interest, once hidden, now revealed, Eph. 5:31, 32), so the Church conforming to the world and thereby becoming a harlot is a counter "mystery" (or spiritual truth, symbolically now revealed). As iniquity in the harlot is a leaven working in "mystery," and therefore called "the mystery of iniquity," so when she is destroyed, the iniquity heretofore working (comparatively) latently in her, shall be revealed in the man of iniquity, the open embodiment of all previous evil. The name Babylon, which in the image, Daniel 2, is given to the head, is here given to the harlot, which marks her as being connected with the fourth kingdom, Rome, the last part of the image. of harlots—Greek, "of the harlots and of the abominations." Not merely Rome, but Christendom as a whole, even as formerly Israel as a whole, has become a harlot. The invisible Church of true believers is hidden and dispersed in the visible Church. The boundary lines which separate harlot and woman are not denominational nor drawn externally, but can only be spiritually discerned.

6. martyrs—witnesses. I wondered with great admiration—As the Greek is the same in the verb and the noun, translate the latter "wonder." John certainly did not admire her in the modern English sense. Elsewhere (vs. 8; ch. 13:3), all the earthly-minded ("they that dwell on the earth") wonder in admiration of the beast. Here only is John's wonder called forth; not the beast, but the woman sunken into the harlot, the Church become a world-loving apostate, moves his sorrowful astonishment at so awful a change. That the world should be beastly is natural, but that the faithful bride should become the whore is monstrous, and excites the same amazement in him as the same awful change in Israel excited in Isaiah and Jeremiah. 8. beast... was, and is not—(Cf. vs. 11). The time when the beast "is not" is the time during which it has "the deadly wound"; the time of the seventh

3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness. This wilderness into which the apostle was carried is the desolate state of the Church of Christ, in one of the wings of the once mighty Roman empire. It was a truly awful sight, a terrible desert, a waste howling wilderness. Saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. No doubt can now be entertained that this woman is the Latin Church, for she sits upon the beast with seven heads and ten horns, which has been already proven to be the Latin empire, because his empire alone contains the number 666. This is a representation of the Latin Church in her highest state of antichristian prosperity, for she sits upon the scarlet-colored beast, a striking emblem of her complete domination over the secular Latin empire.

4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. This strikingly represents the most pompous and costly manner in which the Latin Church has held forth to the nations the rites and ceremonies of its idolatrous and corrupt worship.

5. And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots, and Abominations of the Earth. This inscription being written upon her forehead is intended to show that she is not ashamed of her doctrines, but publicly professes and glories in them before the nations: she has indeed a whore's forehead, she has refused to be ashamed. The inscription upon her forehead is exactly the portraiture of the Latin Church.

7. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. The apostle was greatly astonished, as well he might be, at the woman's being drunk with the blood of the saints, when the beast which carried her abounded with sacred appellations, such as holy, most holy, most Christian, sacred, most sacred. The angel undertakes to explain to St. John the vision which had excited in him so great astonishment; and the explication is of such great importance, that, had it not been given, the mystery of the dragon and the beast could never have been satisfactorily explained in all its particulars.

8. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition. The beast is the Latin kingdom; consequently, the beast was, that is, was in existence previously to it was a seat of idolatry and persecution; and is not, not in the ancient form, and yet it is truly the seat of idolatry and tyranny. It ascends out of the bottomless pit, and it shall return thither and go into perdition.

2. This beast has seven heads, which have a double signification. Seven mountains—the seven hills on which Rome stands. Seven kings—seven sorts of government.

Five of these were extinct; one was then in being; and the other was yet to come, v. 10. This beast makes an eighth.

J. A. SEISS:

By these seven great powers then, filling up the whole interval of this world's history, this great Harlot is said to be carried. On these she rides, according to the vision. It is not upon one alone, nor upon any particular number of them, but upon all of them, the whole seven-headed Beast, that she sits. These seven powers, each and all, support the Woman as their joy and pride; and she accepts and uses them, and sways their administrations, and rides in glory by means of them. They are her devotees, lovers, and most humble servants; and she is their patronizing and most noble lady, with a mutuality of favors and inter-communion belonging to her designation. This is the picture as explained by the angel. But, to say that the Romish Papacy was thus carried, nurtured, and sustained by the ancient empires of Greece, Persia, Babylon, Assyria, and Egypt, would be a great lie on history. It was not so. In the nature of things it could not be so. By no means then can this Harlot be the Papacy alone. Furthermore, it is a matter of fact, that as surely as Rome in John's day, and Greece, Persia, Babylon, Assyria, and Egypt, before Rome, existed and bore sway on earth as regal mountains, so surely and conspicuously were they each and all ridden by this great Harlot. They were each and all the lovers, supporters, and defenders of organized falsehood in religion, the patrons of idolatry, the foster friends of all manner of spiritual harlotry.—The Apocalypse head becoming Christian externally, when its beastlike character was put into suspension temporarily. The healing of its wound answers to its ascending out of the bottomless pit. The beast, or Antichristian world power, returns worse than ever, with satanic powers from hell (ch. 11:7), not merely from the sea of convulsed nations (ch. 13:1).

go—So B, Vulgate, and ANDREAS read the future tense. But A and IRENÆUS, "goeth." into perdition—The continuance of this revived seventh (i.e., the eighth) head is short: it is therefore called "the son of perdition," who is essentially doomed to it almost immediately after his appearance. names were—so Vulgate and ANDREAS. But A, B, Syriac, and Coptic read the singular, "name is." written in—Greek, "upon." which—rather, "when they behold the beast that it was .... So Vulgate. was, and is not, and yet is—A, B, and ANDREAS read, "... and shall come" (lit., "be present," viz., again: Greek, kai parestai). The Hebrew, tetragrammaton, or sacred four letters in Jehovah "who is, who was, and who is to come," the believer's object of worship, has its contrasted counterpart in the beast "who was, and is not, and shall be present," the object of the earth's worship [BENGEL].

9. Cf. ch. 13:18; Daniel 12:10, where similarly spiritual discernment is put forward as needed in order to understand the symbolical prophecy. seven heads and seven mountains—The connection between mountains and kings must be deeper than the mere outward fact to which incidental allusion is made, that Rome (the then world city) is on seven hills (whence heathen Rome had a national festival called Septimontium, the feast of the seven-hilled city [PLUTARCH]; and on the imperial coins, just as here, she is represented as a woman seated on seven hills. As nature shadows forth the great realities of the spiritual world, so seven-hilled Rome is a representative of the seven-headed world power of which the dragon has been, and is the prince. The seven universal God-opposed monarchies are Egypt (the first world power which came into collision with God's people,) Assyria, Babylon, Greece, Medo-Persia, Rome, the Germanic-Slavonic empire (the clay of the fourth kingdom mixed with its iron in Nebuchadnezzar's image, a fifth material, Dan. 2:33, 34, 42, 43, symbolizing this last head). The woman sitting on the seven hills implies the Old and New Testament Church conforming to, and resting on, the world power, i.e., on all the seven world kingdoms. 10. there are—Translate, "they (the seven heads) are seven kings." five ... one—Greek, "the five ... the one"; the first five of the seven are fallen (a word applicable not to forms of government passing away, but to the fall of once powerful empires: Egypt, Ezek. 29 and 30; Assyria and Nineveh, Nah. 3:1-19; Babylon, ch. 18: 2; Jer. 50 and 51; Medo-Persia, Dan. 8:3-7, 20-22; 10:13; 11:2; Greece, Dan. 11:4). Rome was "the one" existing in John's days. "Kings" is the Scripture phrase for kingdoms, because these kingdoms are generally represented in character by some one prominent head, as Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, Medo-Persia by Cyrus, Greece by Alexander, etc. the other is not yet come—not as ALFORD, inaccurately representing AUBERLEN, the Christian empire beginning with Constantine; but, the Germanic-Slavonic empire beginning and continuing in its beastlike, i.e., HEATHEN Antichristian character for only "a short space." The time when it is said of it, "it is not" (vs. 11), is the time during which it is "wounded to death," and has the "deadly wound" ch. 13:3). 11. beast that ... is not—his beastly character being kept down by outward Christianization of the state until he starts up to life again as "the eighth" king, his "wound being healed" (ch. 13:3), Antichrist manifested in fullest and most intense opposition to God. The "he" is emphatic in the Greek. He, peculiarly and pre-eminently: answering to "the little horn" with eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things, before whom three of the ten horns were plucked up by the roots, and to whom the whole ten "give their power and strength" (vss. 12, 13, 17). That a personal Antichrist will stand at the head of the Antichristian kingdom, is likely from the analogy of Antiochus Epiphanes, the Old Testament Antichrist, "the little horn" in Daniel 8:9-12; also, "the man of sin, son of perdition" (II Thess. 2:3-8), answers here to "goeth into perdition," and is applied to an individual, viz., Judas, in the only other passage where the phrase occurs (John 17:12). He is essentially a child of destruction, and hence he has but a little time ascended the time of St. John; is not now, because the Latin nation has ceased long ago to be an independent power, and is now under the domination of the Romans; but shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, that is, the Latin kingdom, the antichristian power, or that which ascendeth out of the abyss or bottomless pit, is yet in futurity. And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast. By the earth is here meant the Latin world; therefore the meaning is, that all who dwell in the Latin world shall adhere to the idolatrous and blasphemous religion of the Latin Church, which is supported by the Latin empire, except those who abide by the sacred Scriptures, receiving them as the only rule of faith and practice. These believe in the true Sacrifice, and keep themselves unspotted from the corruption that is in the world.

9. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. This verse has been almost universally considered to allude to the seven hills upon which Rome originally stood. But it has been objected that modern Rome is not thus situated, and that, consequently, pagan Rome is intended in the prophecy. This is certainly a very formidable objection against the generally received opinion among Protestants, that papal Rome is the city meant by the woman sitting upon seven mountains. It has been already shown that the woman here mentioned is an emblem of the Latin Church in her highest state of antichristian prosperity; and therefore the city of Rome, seated upon seven mountains, is not at all designed in the prophecy. In order to understand this scripture aright, the word mountains must be taken in a figurative and not a literal sense. The mountains upon which the woman sitteth must be seven great powers; and as the mountains are heads of the beast, they must be the seven greatest eminences of the Latin world.

10. And there are seven kings. Before, it was said, they are seven mountains; here, they are also seven kings, which is a demonstration that kingdoms are not here meant by mountains: and this is a further argument that the seven electorates are represented by seven mountains, for though the sovereigns of these states ranked with kings, they were not kings; that is to say, they were not absolute and sole lords of the territories they possessed, independently of the emperor, for their states formed a part of the Germanic body. But the seven heads of the beast are also seven kings, that is to say, the Latin empire has had seven supreme forms of government; for king is used in the prophetical writings for any supreme governor of a state or people.

11. And the beast, that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. That is to say, the Latin kingdom that has already been, but is now no longer nominally in existence, shall immediately follow the dissolution of the seventh form of Latin government; and this dominion is called an eighth, because it succeeds to the seventh. Yet it is not an eighth head of the beast, because the beast has only seven heads; for to constitute a new head of the beast the form of government must not only differ in nature, but also in name. This head of the beast is, therefore, one of the seven. Consequently the form of government represented by this head is the restoration of one of the preceding seven. The restored head can be therefore no other than the regal state of the Latins, or in other words, the Latin kingdom.

MATTHEW HENRY

3. This beast had ten horns; which are said to be ten kings which have as yet received no kingdoms.

Verses 14–18

I. War begun between the beast and his followers, and the Lamb and his followers. One would think an army with a lamb at the head of them could not stand before the great red dragon.

II. Victory gained by the Lamb: The Lamb shall overcome. He will be sure to meet with many enemies, but he will also be sure to gain the victory.

III. The ground or reason of the victory. 1. From the character of the Lamb: He is King of kings and Lord of lords. All the powers of earth and hell are subject to his check and control. 2. From the character of his followers: They are called, and chosen, and faithful. Such an army, under such a commander, will at length carry all the world before them.

IV. The victory is justly aggrandized. 1. By the vast multitude who paid obedience and subjection to the beast and to the whore, v. 15, 18.

2. By the powerful influence which God hereby showed he had over the minds of great men. It was of God, and to fulfil his will, that these kings agreed to give their kingdom unto the beast. It was of God that afterwards their hearts were turned against the whore.

out of the bottomless pit, when he "goes into perdition" (vss. 8, 11). "While the Church passes through death of the flesh to glory of the Spirit, the beast passes through the glory of the flesh to death" [AUBERLEN]. is of the seven—rather "springs out of the seven." The eighth is not merely one of the seven restored, but a new power or person proceeding out of the seven, and at the same time embodying all the God-opposed features of the previous seven concentrated and consummated; for which reason there are said to be not eight, but only seven heads, for the eighth is the embodiment of all the seven. 12. ten kings . . . received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings . . . with the beast—Hence and from vss. 14, 16, it seems that these ten kings or kingdoms, are to be contemporaries with the beast in its last or eighth form, viz., Antichrist. Cf. Daniel 2:34, 44, "the stone smote the image upon his feet," i.e., upon the ten toes, which are, in vss. 41-44, interpreted to be "kings." The ten kingdoms are not, therefore, ten which arose in the overthrow of Rome (heathen), but are to rise out of the last state of the fourth kingdom under the eighth head. one hour—a definite time of short duration, during which "the devil is come down to the inhabitant of the earth and of the sea, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Probably the three and a half years (ch. 11:2, 3; 13:5).

13. one mind—one sentiment. shall give—so Coptic. But A, B, and Syriac, "give." strength—Greek, "authority." They become his dependent allies (vs. 14). Thus Antichrist sets up to be King of kings, but scarcely has he put forth his claim when the true KING OF KINGS appears and dashes him down in a moment to destruction. 14. These shall . . . war with the Lamb—in league with the beast. This is a summary anticipation of ch. 19:19. This shall not be till after they have first executed judgment on the harlot (vss. 15, 16). Lord of lords . . .—anticipating ch. 19:16. are—not in the Greek. Therefore translate, "And they that are with Him, called chosen, and faithful (shall overcome them, viz., the beast and his allied kings)." These have been with Christ in heaven unseen, but now appear with Him. 15. (Vs. 1; Isa. 8:7.) An impious parody of Jehovah who "sitteth upon the flood" [ALFORD]. Also, contrast the "many waters" ch. 19:6, "Alleluia." The "peoples . . ." here mark the universality of the spiritual fornication of the Church. The "tongues" remind us of the original Babel, the confusion of tongues, the beginning of Babylon, and the first commencement of idolatrous apostasy after the flood, as the tower was doubtless dedicated to the deified heavens. Thus, Babylon is the appropriate name of the harlot. 16. upon the beast—But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "and the beast." shall make her desolate—having first dismounted her from her seat on the beast (vs. 3). naked—stripped of all her gaud (vs. 4). As Jerusalem used the world power to crucify her Saviour, and then was destroyed by that very power, Rome; so the Church, having apostatized to the world, shall have judgment executed on her first by the world power, the beast and his allies; and these afterwards shall have judgment executed on them by Christ Himself in person.

eat her flesh—Greek plural, "masses of flesh," i.e., "carnal possessions"; implying the fulness of carnality into which the Church is sunk. The judgment on the harlot is again and again described (ch. 18:1; 19:5); first by an "angel having great power" (ch. 18:1), then by "another voice from heaven" (ch. 18:4-20), then by "a mighty angel" (ch. 18:21-24). Cf. Ezekiel 16:37-44, orginally said of Israel, but further applicable to the New Testament Church when fallen into spiritual fornication. On the phrase, "eat . . . flesh" for prey upon one's property, and injure the character and person, cf. Psalm 14:4; 27:2; Jeremiah 10:25; Micah 3:3.

burn . . . with fire—the legal punishment of an abominable fornication. 17. hath put—the prophetical past tense for the future. fulfil—Greek, "do," or "accomplish." The Greek, poiesai, is distinct from that which is translated, "fulfilled," Greek, telesthesontai, below. his will—Greek, "his mind," or purpose; while they think only of doing their own purpose. to agree—lit., "to do (or accomplish) one mind" or "purpose." A and Vulgate omit this clause, but B supports it. the words of God—foretelling the rise and downfall of the beast; Greek, hoi logoi, in A, B, and ANDREAS. English Version reading is Greek, ta rhemata, which is not well supported. No mere articulate utterances, but the efficient words of Him who is the Word: Greek, logos. fulfilled—(ch. 10:7). 18.

ADAM CLARKE

12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. Though the Latin empire be now in existence, the ten horns refer to ten Latin kingdoms yet in futurity, and consequently they have received no dominion as yet; for that part of the Latin domination now in power is the sixth head, or imperial government of the heathen Caesars. But the ten states of the Latins receive dominion as monarchies at the same time with the beast, or that which ascendeth out of the bottomless pit; consequently, the Latin empire here intended is the one which was in futurity in the apostolic age.

13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. Therefore the ten horns must constitute the principal strength of the Latin empire; that is to say, this empire is to be composed of the dominions of ten monarchs independent of each other in every other sense except in their implicit obedience to the Latin Church.

14. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them. The ten powers of the beast must compose the secular kingdom of antichrist, for they make war with the Lamb, who is Christ Jesus. This is perfectly true of all popish states, for they have constantly opposed, as long as they have had any secular power, the progress of pure Christianity. They make war with the Lamb by persecuting his followers.

16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. It is said the ten horns shall hate the whore; by which is evidently meant, when connected with what follows, that the whole of the ten kingdoms in the interest of the Latin Church shall finally despise her doctrines, be reformed from popery, assist in depriving her of all influence and in exposing her follies, and in the end consign her to utter destruction. From this it follows that no Roman Catholic power which did not exist so late as the Reformation can be numbered among the horns of the beast; the horns must, therefore, be found among the great states of Europe at the commencement of the Reformation.

17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. Let no one imagine that these ten Latin kingdoms, because they support an idolatrous worship, have been raised up merely by the power of man or the chances of war. No kingdom or state can exist without the will of God; therefore let the inhabitants of the world tremble when they see a wicked monarchy rise to power, and let them consider that it is raised up by the Lord to execute his vengeance upon the idolatries and profligacies of the times.

MATTHEW HENRY

CHAPTER 18

Verses 1–8

Here is another angel sent from heaven, v. 1. He had not only light in himself, to discern the truth of his own prediction, but to inform and enlighten the world about that great event. This angel publishes the fall of Babylon, as a thing already come to pass. Here seems to be an allusion to the prediction of the fall of pagan Babylon (Isa. xxi. 9), where the word is repeated as it is here: has fallen, has fallen, v. 2. This is also borrowed from Isa. xxi. 9, and seems to describe not so much her sin as her punishment, it being a common notion that unclean spirits, as well as ominous and hateful birds, used to haunt a city or house that lay in its ruins. The reason of this ruin is declared (v. 3). She had not only forsaken the true God herself, and set up idols, but had drawn all sorts of men into the spiritual adultery, and by her wealth and luxury had retained them in her interest.

All that expect mercy from God should not only come out of her, but be assisting in her destruction, v. 4, 5 God may have a people even in Babylon.

Those that are resolved to partake with wicked men in their sins must receive of their plagues. Though private revenge is forbidden, yet God will have his people act under him, when called to it, in pulling down his and their implacable enemies, v. 6.

God will proportion the punishment of sinners to the measure of their pride, and security, v. 7.

reigneth—lit., "hath kingship over the kings." The harlot cannot be a mere city literally, but is called so in a spiritual sense (ch. 11:8). Also the beast cannot represent a spiritual power, but a world power. In this verse the harlot is presented before us ripe for judgment. The 18th chapter details that judgment.

Vss. 1-24. BABYLON'S FALL: GOD'S PEOPLE CALLED OUT OF HER: THE KINGS AND MERCHANTS OF THE EARTH MOURN, WHILE THE SAINTS REJOICE AT HER FALL. 1. And—so Vulgate and ANDREAS. But A, B, Syriac, and Coptic omit "And." power—Greek, "authority." lightened—"illumined." with—Greek, "owing to." 2. mightily . . . strong—not supported by MSS. But A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "with (lit., 'in' a mighty voice." is fallen, is fallen—so A, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS. But B and Coptic omit the second "is fallen" (Isa. 21:9; Jer. 51:8). This phrase is here prophetical of her fall, still future, as vs. 4 proves. devils—Greek, "demons." the hold—a keep or prison. 3. drunk—ch. 14:8, from which perhaps "the wine" may have been interpolated. They have drunk of her fornication, the consequence of which will be wrath to themselves. But A, B, and C read, "(owing to the wrath of her fornication all nations) have fallen." Vulgate and most versions read as English Version, which may be the right reading though not supported by the oldest MSS. Babylon, the whore, is destroyed before the beast slays the two witnesses (ch. 11), and then the beast himself is destroyed. the wine—so B, Syriac, and Coptic. But A, C, and Vulgate omit. abundance—lit., "power." delicacies—Greek, "luxury." See Note, I Timothy 5:11, where the Greek verb "wax wanton" is akin to the noun here. Translate, "wanton luxury." The reference is not to earthly merchandise, but to spiritual wares, indulgences, idolatries, superstitions, worldly compromises, wherewith the harlot, i.e., the apostate Church, has made merchandise of men.

4. Come out of her, my people—quoted from Jeremiah 50:8; 51:6, 45. Even in the Romish Church God has a people: but they are in great danger; their only safety is in coming out of her at once. So also in every apostate or world-conforming church there are some of God's invisible and true Church, who, if they would be safe, must come out. Especially at the eve of God's judgment on apostate Christendom: as Lot was warned to come out of Sodom just before its destruction, and Israel to come from about the tents of Dathan and Abiram. So the first Christians came out of Jerusalem when the apostate Jewish Church was judged. partakers—Greek, "have no fellowship with her sins." that ye receive not of her plagues—as Lot's wife, by lingering too near the polluted and doomed city. 5. her sins—as a great heap. reached—Greek, "reached so far as to come into close contact with, and to cleave unto." 6. Addressed to the executioners of God's wrath. Reward—Greek, "repay." she rewarded—English Version reading adds "you" with none of the oldest MSS. But A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit it. She had not rewarded or repaid the world power for some injury which the world power had inflicted on her; but she had given the world power that which was its due, viz., spiritual delusions, because it did not like to retain God in its knowledge; the unfaithful Church's principle was, Populus vult decipi, et decipiatur, "The people like to be deceived, and let them be deceived." double—of sorrow. Contrast with this the double of joy which Jerusalem shall receive for her past suffering (Isa. 61:7; Zech. 9:12); even as she has received double punishment for her sins (Isa. 40:2). unto her—So Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. A, B, and C omit it. in the cup—(vs. 3; ch. 14:8; 17:4). filled—lit., mixed. fill to her double—of the Lord's cup of wrath. 7. How much—i.e., in proportion as. lived deliciously—luxuriously: Note, vs. 3, where the Greek is akin. sorrow—Greek, "mourning," as for a dead husband. I sit—so Vulgate. But A, B, and C prefix "that." I . . . am no widow—for the world power is my husband and my supporter. shall see no sorrow—Greek, "mourning." "I am seated (this long time) . . . I am no widow . . . I shall see no sorrow," marks her complete unconcerned security as to the past, present, and future [BENGEL]. I shall never have to mourn as one bereft of her husband. As Babylon was queen of the East, so Rome has been queen of the West, and is called on Imperial coins "the eternal city."

1. The earth was lightened with his glory. This may refer to some extraordinary messenger of the everlasting gospel, who, by his preaching and writings, should be the means of diffusing the light of truth and true religion over the earth.

2. Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen. This is a quotation from Isa. xxi. 9: "And he . . . said, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground." This is applied by some to Rome pagan, by others to Rome papal, and by others to Jerusalem. Is become . . . the hold of every foul spirit. See the parallel passages in the margin. The figures here point out the most complete destruction. A city utterly sacked and ruined, never to be rebuilt.

3. The wine of the wrath. The punishment due to her transgressions, because they have partaken with her in her sins. See the note on chap. xiv. 8.

4. Come out of her, my people. These words appear to be taken from Isa. xlviii. 20; Jer. i. 8; li. 6, 45.

5. Her sins have reached unto heaven. They are become so great and enormous that the long-suffering of God must give place to His justice.

6. Reward her even as she rewarded you. These words are a prophetic declaration of what shall take place: God will deal with her as she dealt with others.

MATTHEW HENRY

When destruction comes on a people suddenly, the surprise is a great aggravation of their misery, v. 8.

Verses 9–24

I. A doleful lamentation made by Babylon's friends for her fall.

1. The mourners, those who had been bewitched by her fornication, and those who had been gainers by her wealth and trade—the kings and the merchants of the earth.

2. The manner of their mourning. They stood afar off. Even Babylon's friends will stand at a distance from her fall. Though they had been partakers with her in her sinful pleasures and profits, they were not willing to bear a share in her plagues. They made a grievous outcry, v. 19. Those who have most indulged themselves in pride and pleasure are the least able to bear calamities.

3. The cause of their mourning; not their sin, but their punishment. The spirit of antichrist is a worldly spirit, and their sorrow is a mere worldly sorrow. The wealth and merchandise of this city, all which was suddenly lost (v. 12, 13), and lost irrecoverably (v. 14).

The church of God may fall for a time, but she shall rise again; but the fall of Babylon will be an utter overthrow. Godly sorrow is some support under affliction, but mere worldly sorrow adds to the calamity.

8. death—on herself, though she thought herself secure even from the death of her husband. mourning—instead of her feasting. famine—instead of her luxurious delicacies (vss. 3, 7). fire—(Note, ch. 17:16). Literal fire may burn the literal city of Rome, which is situated in the midst of volcanic agencies. But as the harlot is mystical (the whole faithless Church), the burning may be mainly mystical, symbolizing utter destruction and removal.

the Lord—so B, C, Syriac, and ANDREAS. But A and Vulgate omit. "Strong" is the meaning of God's Hebrew name, EL. judgeth—But A, B, and C read the past tense (Greek, krinas), "who hath judged her": the prophetical past for the future: the charge in vs. 4 to God's people to come out of her implies that the judgment was not yet actually executed. 9. lived deliciously—Greek, luxuriated. The faithless Church, instead of reproving, connived at the self-indulgent luxury of the great men of this world, and sanctioned it by her own practice. Contrast the world's rejoicing over the dead bodies of the two witnesses (ch. 11:10) who had tormented it by their faithfulness, with its lamentations over the harlot who had made the way to heaven smooth, and had been found a useful tool in keeping subjects in abject tyranny. Men's carnal mind relishes a religion like that of the apostate Church, which gives an opiate to conscience, while leaving the sinner license to indulge his lusts. bewail her—A, B, C, Syriac, Coptic, and CYPRIAN omit "her." 10. God's judgments inspire fear even in the worldly, but it is of short duration, for the kings and great men soon attach themselves to the beast in its last and worst shape, as open Antichrist, claiming all that the harlot had claimed in blasphemous pretensions and more, and so making up to them for the loss of the harlot. mighty—Rome in Greek means strength; though that derivation is doubtful. 11. shall—So. B. But A and C read the present, "weep and mourn." merchandise—Greek, "cargo": wares carried in ships: ship-lading (cf. vs. 17). Rome was not a commercial city, and is not likely from her position to be so. The merchandise must therefore be spiritual, even as the harlot is not literal, but spiritual. She did not witness against carnal luxury and pleasure-seeking, the source of the merchants' gains, but conformed to them (vs. 7).

12. (Note, ch. 17:4.) stones . . . pearls—Greek, "stone . . . pearl." fine linen—A, B, and C read Greek, bussinou for bussou, i.e., fine linen manufacture" [ALFORD]. The manufacture for which Egypt (the type of the apostate Church, ch. 11:8) was famed. Contrast "the fine linen" (Ezek. 16:10) put on Israel, and on the New Testament Church (ch. 19:8), the Bride, by God (Ps. 132:9). thyine wood—the citrus of the Romans: probably the cypressus thyoyides, or the thuia articulata. "Citron wood" [ALFORD]. A sweet-smelling tree of Cyrene in Lybia, used for incense. all manner vessels—Greek, "every vessel," or "furniture." 13. cinnamon—designed by God for better purposes: being an ingredient in the holy anointing oil, and a plant in the garden of the Beloved (Song of Sol. 4:14); but desecrated to vile uses by the adulteress (Prov. 7:17). odours—of incense. A, C, Vulgate, and Syriac prefix "and amomium" (a precious hair ointment made from an Asiatic shrub). English Version reading is supported by Coptic and ANDREAS, but not oldest MSS. ointments—Greek, "ointment." frankincense—Contrast the true "incense" which God loves (Ps. 141: 2; Mal. 1:11). fine flour—the similago of the Latins [ALFORD]. beasts—of burden: cattle. slaves—Greek, "bodies." souls of men—(Ezek. 27:13). Said of slaves. Appropriate to the spiritual harlot, apostate Christendom, especially Rome, which has so often enslaved both bodies and souls of men.

14. Direct address to Babylon. the fruits that thy soul lusted after—Greek, "thy autumn-ripe fruits of the lust (eager desire) of the soul." dainty—Greek, "fat": "sumptuous" in food. goodly—"splendid," "bright," in dress and equipage. departed—supported by none of our MSS. But A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "perished." thou shalt—A, C, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "They (men) shall no more find them at all." 15. of these things—of the things mentioned, vss. 12, 13. which—"who." made rich by—Greek, "derived riches from her." stand afar off for the fear—(Cf. vs. 10). wailing—Greek, "mourning." 16. And—so Vulgate and ANDREAS. But A, B, and C omit. decked—lit., "gilded." stones . . . pearls—Greek, "stone . . . pearl." B and ANDREAS read "pearls." But A and C, "pearl." 17. is come to naught—Greek, "is desolated." shipmaster—Greek, "steersman," or "pilot." all the company in ships—A, C, Vulgate,

ADAM CLARKE

8. Therefore shall her plagues come. Death, by the sword of her adversaries; mourning, on account of the slaughter; and famine, the fruits of the field being destroyed by the hostile bands.

9. The kings of the earth. Those who copied her superstitions and adopted her idolatries.

10. Standing afar off. Beholding her desolations with wonder and astonishment, utterly unable to afford her any kind of assistance.

11. The merchants of the earth. These are represented as mourning over her, because their traffic with her was at an end.

J. A. SEISS:

The destruction of Great Babylon is an illustrious exhibition of the truth and righteousness of the divine administrations. Often it would seem as if God had forgotten his word, so great is the posterity of the wicked, the triumph of injustice, the wrongs and afflictions which those who most honor him suffer. But it is not so. He is true. His ways are just. Everything will come out fully equalized at the last. And here is a signal demonstration of the fact. The godless wisdom and pride of men are left to work themselves out to the full, but when the harvest is ripe the sweep of the sharp sickle of judgment comes against it and it suddenly falls, and all its just deservings it gets. The harlot has her day; but then comes her night with never a star of hope to rise upon her anymore. She is permitted to lure, delude, and debauch the world, because men preferred her abominations to the truth and kingdom of God; but only that her judgment may be the more conspicuous, and her destruction the more signal and complete. And the halleluia of eternity is all the louder and more intense because her judgment comes as it does. Ah, yes, God's ways are right; his judgments are true and righteous. Perplexing and trying as they may be for the time, our halleluias will be all the deeper and the sweeter by reason of what we may now deplore.

—The Apocalypse

13. Slaves. The "bodies of men"; probably distinguished here from souls of men, to express bondmen and freemen.

14. Dainty and goodly. "Delicacies for the table"; what is "splendid and costly in apparel."

16. Clothed in fine linen, and purple. The verb which we here translate clothed signifies often "to abound, be enriched, laden with," and is so used by the best Greek writers. These articles are not to be considered here as personal ornaments, but as articles of trade or merchandise, in which this city trafficked.

17. Every shipmaster. Captains of vessels; some think pilots are meant, and this is most likely to be the meaning of the original word. This description appears to be at least partly taken from Ezek. xxvii. 26-28. And all the company in ships. The crowd or passengers

II. The joy and triumph there was both in heaven and earth at the irrecoverable fall of Babylon, v. 20. 1. How universal this joy would be: heaven and earth, angels and saints, would join in it. 2. How just and reasonable. (1) Because the fall of Babylon was an act of God's justice. Though they did not take pleasure in the miseries of any, yet they had reason to rejoice in the discoveries of the glorious justice of God.

(2) Because it was an irrecoverable ruin (v. 21). The place shall be no longer habitable by man, no work shall be done there, no comfort enjoyed, no light seen there, but utter darkness and desolation, as the reward of her great wickedness, v. 24. Such abominable sins deserved so great a ruin.

Verses 1-4

The fall of Babylon being finished, and declared to be irrecoverable, this begins with a holy triumph over her. The form of their thanksgiving, Alleluia, praise you the Lord: with this they begin, with this they go on, and with this they end (v. 4); their prayers are now turned into praises, their hosannas end in halleluias.

They praise him for the truth of his word, and the righteousness of his providential conduct, especially in this great event—the ruin of Babylon (v. 2).

and Syriac read, "Every one who saileth to a place" (B has "... to the place") every voyager.

18. when they saw—Greek, horontes. But A, B, C, and ANDREAS read, Greek, blepontes, "looking at." Greek, blepo, is to use the eyes, to look: the act of seeing without thought of the object seen. Greek, horao, refers to the thing seen or presented to the eyes [TITTMANN]. smoke—so B, C. But A reads "place." What city is like—Cf. the similar beast as to the beast, ch. 13: 4: so closely do the harlot and beast approximate one another. 19. wailing—"mourning." that had ships—A, B, and C read, "that had their ships": lit., "the ships." costliness—her costly treasures: abstract for concrete. 20. holy apostles—So C reads. But A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, "Ye saints and ye apostles." avenged you on her—Greek, "judged your judgment on (lit., exacting it from) her." "There is more joy in heaven at the harlot's downfall than at that of the two beasts. For the most heinous of all sin is the sin of those who know God's word of grace, and keep it not. The worldliness of the Church is the most worldly of all worldliness. 21. a—Greek, "one." millstone—Cf. the judgment on the Egyptian hosts at the Red Sea, Exodus 15:5, 10; Nehemiah 9:11, and the foretold doom of Babylon, the world power, Jeremiah 51:63, 64. with violence—Greek, "with impetus." This verse shows that this prophecy is regarded as still to be fulfilled. 22. pipers—flute players. "Musicians," painters and sculptors, have desecrated their art to lend fascination to the sensuous worship of corrupt Christendom. craftsman—artisan. 23. What a blessed contrast is ch. 22:5, respecting the city of God: "They need no candle (just as Babylon shall no more have the light of a candle, but for a widely different reason), for the Lord God giveth them light." candle—Translate as Greek, "lamp." bridegroom ... bride ... no more ... in thee—Contrast the heavenly city, with its Bridegroom, Bride, and blessed marriage supper (ch. 19:7, 9; 21:2, 9; Isa. 62:4, 5). thy merchants were—So most of the best authorities read. But A omits the Greek article before "merchants," and then translates, "The great men of ... were thy merchants." sorceries—Greek, "sorcery." 24. Applied by Christ (Matt. 23:35) to apostate Jerusalem, which proves that not merely the literal city Rome, and the Church of Rome (though the chief representative of the apostasy), but the WHOLE of the faithless Church of both the Old and New Testament is meant by Babylon the harlot; just as the whole Church (Old and New Testament) is meant by "the woman" (ch. 12:1).

VSS. 1-21. THE CHURCH'S THANKSGIVING IN HEAVEN FOR THE JUDGMENT ON THE HARLOT. THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB: THE SUPPER: THE BRIDE'S PREPARATION: JOHN IS FORBIDDEN TO WORSHIP THE ANGEL: THE LORD AND HIS HOSTS COME FORTH FOR WAR: THE BEAST AND THE FALSE PROPHET CAST INTO THE LAKE OF FIRE: THE KINGS AND THEIR FOLLOWERS SLAIN BY THE SWORD OUT OF CHRIST'S MOUTH.

1. And—so ANDREAS. But A, B, C, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic omit. a great voice—A, B, C, Vulgate, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, "as it were a great voice." What a contrast to the lamentations ch. 18! Cf. Jeremiah 51:48. The great manifestation of God's power in destroying Babylon calls forth a great voice of praise in heaven. people—Greek, "multitude." Alleluia—Hebrew, "Praise ye JAH," or JEHOVAH: here first used in Revelation, whence ELLICOTT infers the Jews bear a prominent part in this thanksgiving. JAH is not a contraction of JEHOVAH, as it sometimes occurs jointly with the latter. It means "He who IS": whereas Jehovah is "He who will be, is, and was." It implies God experienced as a PRESENT help; so that "Hallelujah," says KIMCHI in BENGEL, is found first in the Psalms on the destruction of the ungodly. "Hallelu-Jah" occurs four times in this passage. Cf. Psalm 149: 4-9, which is plainly parallel, and indeed identical in many of the phrases, as well as the general idea. Israel, especially, will join in the Hallelujah, when "her warfare is accomplished" and her foe destroyed. Salvation ...—Greek, "The salvation ... the glory ... the power." and honour—so Coptic. But A, B, C, and Syriac omit. unto the Lord our God—so ANDREAS. But A, B, C, and Coptic read, "(Is) of our God," i.e., belongs to Him. 2. which did corrupt the earth—Greek, "used to corrupt" continually. "Instead of opposing and lessening, aboard. But the best MSS. and versions have "those who sail from place to place."

18. What city is like unto this great city! Viz., in magnitude, power, and luxury.

19. They cast dust on their heads. They showed every sign of the sincerest grief. The lamentation over this great ruined city, from vv. 9 to 19, is exceedingly strong and well-drawn. Here is no dissembled sorrow; all is real to the mourners, and affecting to the spectators.

20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven. This is grand and sublime; the fall of this bad city was cause of grief to bad men. But as this city was a persecutor of the godly and an enemy to the works of God, angels, apostles, and prophets are called to rejoice over her fall.

21. Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down. This action is finely and forcibly expressed by the original words. The millstone will in falling have not only an accelerated force from the law of gravitation, but that force will be greatly increased by the projectile force impressed upon it by the power of the destroying angel. Shall be found no more at all. In her government, consequence, or influence. This is true of ancient Babylon. It is also true of Jerusalem; her government, consequence, and influence are gone. It is not true of Rome pagan; nor, as yet, of Rome papal.

22. The voice of harpers. This seems to indicate not only a total destruction of influence, etc., but also of being. It seems as if this city was to be swallowed up by an earthquake, or burnt up by fire from heaven.

23. By thy sorceries. Political arts, state tricks, counterfeit miracles, and deceptive maneuvers of every kind. This may be spoken of many great cities of the world, which still continue to flourish.

24. In her was found the blood of prophets. She was the persecutor and murderer of prophets and of righteous men. And of all that were slain upon the earth. This refers to her counsels and influence, exciting other nations and people to persecute and destroy the real followers of God.

CHAPTER 19

1. I heard a great voice of much people in heaven. The idolatrous city being destroyed, and the blood of the martyred saints being avenged, there is a universal joy among the redeemed of the Lord, which they commence with the word Hallelu-Yah, "Praise ye Jah or Jehovah"; which the Septuagint, and John from them, put into Greek letters thus: Allelou-ia.

Salvation. He is the sole Author of deliverance from sin; the glory of this belongs to Him, the honour should be ascribed to Him, and His power is that alone by which it is effected.

2. For true and righteous. His judgments displayed in supporting His followers and punish-

MATTHEW HENRY

When the angels and saints cried Alleluia, her fire burned more fiercely, v. 3. Praising God for what we have is praying in the most effectual manner for what is yet further to be done for us; the praises of the saints blow up the fire of God's wrath against the common enemy. The blessed harmony between the angels and the saints in this triumphant song, v. 4.

Verses 5–10

An epithalamium, or marriage-song, begins, v. 6.

I. The concert of heavenly music. The chorus was large and loud, as the voice of many waters and of mighty thunderings.

II. The occasion of this song, v. 7.

1. A description of the bride, how she appeared; not in the gay and gaudy dress of the mother of harlots, but in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints; in the robes of Christ's righteousness. These her nuptial ornaments she did not purchase by any price of her own, but received them as the grant of her blessed Lord.

2. The marriage-feast which is declared to be such as would make all those happy who were called to it, a feast made up of the promises of the gospel, the true sayings of God, v. 9.

3. The transport of joy which the apostle felt. He fell down at the feet of the angel to worship him. The angel refused it, and this was with some resentment: "See thou do it not. I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren which have the testimony of Jesus. Thou, as an apostle, having the Spirit of prophecy, hast the same testimony to give in; and therefore we are in this brethren and fellow-servants. Worship God, and him alone."

she promoted the sinful life and decay of the world by her own earthliness, allowing the salt to lose its savor" [AUBERLEN]. avenged—Greek, "exacted in retribution." A particular application of the principle (Gen. 9:5). blood of his servants—literally shed by the Old Testament adulterous Church, and by the New Testament apostate Church; also virtually, though not literally, by all who, though called Christians, hate their brother, or love not the brethren of Christ, but shrink from the reproach of the cross, and show unkindness towards those who bear it. 3. again—Greek, "a second time." rose up—Greek, "goeth up." for ever and ever—Greek, "to the ages of the ages." 4. beasts—rather, "living creatures." sat—Greek, "sitteth." 5. out of—Greek, "out from the throne" in A, B, C. Praise our God—Cf. the solemn act of praise performed by the Levites I Chronicles 16:36; 23:5, especially when the house of God was filled with the divine glory (II Chron. 5:13). both—omitted in A, B, C, Vulgate, Coptic, and Syriac. Translate as Greek, "the small and the great." 6. many waters—Contrast the "many waters" on which the whore sitteth (ch. 17:1). This verse is the hearty response to the stirring call, "Alleluia! Praise our God" (vs. 4, 5). the Lord God omnipotent—Greek, "the Omnipotent." reigneth—lit., "reigned": hence reigneth once for all. His reign is a fact already established. Babylon, the harlot, was one great hindrance to His reign being recognized. Her overthrow now clears the way for His advent to reign; therefore, not merely Rome, but the whole of Christendom in so far as it is carnal and compromised Christ for the world, is comprehended in the term "harlot." The beast hardly arises when he at once "goeth into perdition": so that Christ is prophetically considered as already reigning, so soon does His advent follow the judgment on the harlot. 7. glad . . . rejoice—Greek, "rejoice . . . exult." give—so B and ANDREAS. But A reads, "we will give." glory—Greek, "the glory." the marriage of the Lamb is come—The full and final consummation is at ch. 21:2-9, etc. Previously there must be the overthrow of the beast, etc., at the Lord's coming, the binding of Satan, the millennial reign, the loosing of Satan and his last overthrow, and the general judgment. The elect-Church, the heavenly Bride, soon after the destruction of the harlot, is transfigured at the Lord's coming, and joins with Him in His triumph over the beast.

8. granted—Though in one sense she "made herself ready," having by the Spirit's work in her put on "the wedding garment," yet in the fullest sense it is not she, but her Lord, who makes her ready by "granting to her that she be arrayed in fine linen." It is He who, by giving Himself for her, presents her to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot, but holy and without blemish. It is He also who sanctifies her, naturally vile and without beauty, with the washing of water by the word, and puts His own comeliness on her, which thus becomes hers. clean and white—so ANDREAS. But A and B transpose. Translate, "bright and pure"; at once brilliantly splendid and spotless as in the bride herself. righteousness—Greek, "righteousnesses"; distributively used. Each saint must have this righteousness: not merely be justified, as if the righteousness belonged to the Church in the aggregate; the saints together have righteousnesses; viz., He is accounted as "the Lord our righteousness" to each saint on his believing, their robes being made white in the blood of the Lamb.

9. He—God by His angel saith unto me. called—effectually, not merely externally. The "unto," or into," seems to express this: not merely invited to (Greek, epi), but called INTO, so as to be partakers of (Greek, eis); cf. I Corinthians 1:9. marriage supper—Greek, "the supper of the marriage." Typified by the Lord's Supper. true—Greek, "genuine"; veritable sayings which shall surely be fulfilled, viz., all the previous revelations. 10. at—Greek, "before." John's intending to worship the angel here, as in ch. 22:8, on having revealed to him the glory of the new Jerusalem, is the involuntary impulse of adoring joy at so blessed a prospect. It forms a marked contrast to the sorrowful wonder with which he had looked on the Church in her apostasy as the harlot (ch. 17:6). thy brethren—i.e., a fellow servant of thy brethren. have the testimony of Jesus—(Note, ch. 12:17). the testimony of—i.e., respecting Jesus. is the spirit of prophecy—is the result of the same spirit of prophecy in you as in myself. We angels, and you apostles, all alike have the testimony of (bear testimony concerning) Jesus by the operation of one and the same Spirit, who enables me to show you these revelations and enables you to record them: wherefore ing His enemies are true—according to His predictions; and righteous, being all according to infinite justice and equity.

3. Her smoke rose up. There was, and shall be, a continual evidence of God's judgments executed on this great whore or idolatrous city; nor shall it ever be restored.

4. The four and twenty elders. The true Church of the Lord Jesus converted from among the Jews. See chap. iv. 10; v. 14.

5. Praise our God. Let all, whether redeemed from among Jews or Gentiles, give glory to God.

6. The voice of a great multitude. This is the catholic or universal Church of God gathered from among the Gentiles. The Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Many excellent MSS., most of the versions, add "our," and according to this the text reads emphatically thus: "Our Lord God, the Almighty, reigneth." What consolation to every genuine Christian that his Lord and God is the Almighty, and that this Almighty never trusts the reins of the government of the universe out of His hands!

7. The marriage of the Lamb is come. The meaning of these figurative expressions appears to be this: After this overthrow of idolatry and superstition, and the discomfiture of Antichrist, there will be a more glorious state of Christianity than ever was before.

8. Arrayed in fine linen. A prediction that the Church should become more pure in her doctrines, more pious in her experience, and more righteous in her conduct than she had ever been from her formation. The fine linen here spoken of is not the righteousness of Christ imputed to believers, for it is here called the righteousness of the saints—that which the grace and Spirit of Christ have wrought in them.

9. Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper. This is an evident allusion to the marriage of the king's son, Matt. xxii. 2, etc., where the incarnation of our Lord and the calling of Jews and Gentiles are particularly pointed out. Blessed are all they who hear the gospel, and are thus invited to lay hold on everlasting life.

10. I fell at his feet to worship him. Great as this angel was, John could not mistake him either for Jesus Christ or for God the Father; nor was his prostration intended as an act of religious worship. It was merely an act of that sort of reverence which any Asiatic would pay to a superior. His mistake was the considering that he was under obligation to the angel for the information which he had now received. This mistake the angel very properly corrects, showing him that it was from God alone this intelligence came, and that to Him alone the praise was due. I am thy fellowservant. No higher in dignity than yourself; employed by the same God, on the same errand, and with the same testimony; and therefore not entitled to your prostration. Worship God—prostrate yourself to Him, and to Him give thanks. The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. As this is a reason given by the angel why he should not worship him, the meaning must be this: I, who have received this spirit of prophecy, am not superior to you, who have received the testimony of Christ, to preach Him among the Gentiles. Or the spirit of prophecy is a general

Verses 11–21

The glorious head of the church is called out to a new expedition, which seems to be the great battle that was to be fought at Armageddon.

I. The description of the great Commander. The seat of his empire; and that is heaven. His equipage: he is again described as sitting on a white horse. He is faithful and true, he is righteous in all his proceedings, he has a penetrating insight into all the strength of his enemies, he has a large and extensive dominion, many crowns.

J. A. SEISS:

"In righteousness he judgeth and warreth." In the letter to the Laodiceans he was "the Faithful and True Witness," reproving and instructing his friends; here he is the Faithful and True Warrior and Judge, for the punishment of his enemies. Heaven cannot be at peace with iniquity, and justice cannot be at amity with falsehood and rebellion. When sin is once incorrigible, and incurable by remedial measures, it must be put down by force of arms. Mercy slighted and abused brings the executioner. The world banded together in arms against its true Sovereign brings against it the sword of insulted majesty. Not as human kings and nations war—out of covetousness, pride, and an ambition for selfish greatness and dominion—but in absolute justice and right, and in strictest accord with every holy principle and every holy interest he now unsheaths and wields the sword of infinite power. Dreadful is the carnage which follows, but no one can ever say that it is not precisely what was merited and demanded. —The Apocalypse

His armour; and that is a vesture dipped in blood.

His name: The Word of God, a name that none fully knows but himself. His perfections are incomprehensible by any creature.

II. The army which he commands (v. 14).

III. The weapons of his warfare—a sharp sword proceeding from his mouth (v. 15).

IV. The ensigns of his authority, his coat of arms, v. 16.

we are fellow servants, not I your lord to be worshipped by you. Cf. ch. 22:9, "I am fellow servant of thee and of thy brethren the prophets"; whence the "FOR the testimony . . ." here, may be explained as giving the reason for his adding "and (fellow servant) of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." 11. behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him—identical with ch. 6:2. Here as there he comes forth "conquering and to conquer." Compare the ass-colt on which He rode into Jerusalem. The horse was used for war: and here He is going forth to war with the beast. The ass is for peace. His riding on it into Jerusalem is an earnest of His reign in Jerusalem over the earth, as the Prince of peace, after all hostile powers have been overthrown. When the security of the world power, and the distress of the people of God, have reached the highest point, the Lord Jesus shall appear visibly from heaven to put an end to the whole course of the world, and establish His kingdom of glory. He comes to judge with vengeance the world power, and to bring to the Church redemption, transfiguration, and power over the world. Distinguish between this coming (Matt. 24:27, 29, 37, 39; Greek, parousia) and the end, or final judgment (Matt. 25:31; I Cor. 15:23). Powerful natural phenomena shall accompany His advent [AUBERLEN]. 12. Identifying Him with the Son of man similarly described, ch. 1:14. many crowns—Greek, "diadems": not merely (Greek, stephanoi) garlands of victory, but royal crowns, as KING OF KINGS. Christ's diadem comprises all the diadems of the earth and of heavenly powers too.

name . . . that no man knew but . . . himself—(Judg. 13:18; I Cor. 2:9, 11; I John 3:2). The same is said of the "new name" of believers. In this, as in all other respects, the disciple is made like his Lord. The Lord's own "new name" is to be theirs, and to be "in their foreheads"; whence we may infer that His as yet unknown name also is written on His forehead; as the high priest had "Holiness to the Lord" inscribed on the miter on his brow. John saw it as "written," but knew not its meaning. It is, therefore, a name which in all its glorious significancy can be only understood when the union of His saints with Him, and His and their joint triumph and reign, shall be perfectly manifested at the final consummation. 13. vesture dipped in blood—Isaiah 63:2 is alluded to here, and in vs. 15, end. There the blood is not His own, but that of His foes. So here the blood on His "vesture," reminding us of His own blood shed for even the ungodly who trample on it, is a premonition of the shedding of their blood in righteous retribution. He sheds the blood, not of the godly, as the harlot and beast did, but of the blood-stained ungodly, including them both. The Word of God—who made the world, is He also who under the same character and attributes shall make it anew. His title, Son of God, is applicable in a lower sense, also to His people; but "the Word of God" indicates His incommunicable Godhead, joined to His manhood, which He shall then manifest in glory. 14. the armies . . . in heaven—Cf. "the horse bridles," ch. 14:20. The glorified saints whom God "will bring with" Christ at His advent; cf. ch. 17:14, "they that are with Him, called, chosen, faithful"; as also "His mighty angels." white and clean—Greek, "pure." A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and CYPRIAN omit "and," which ORIGEN and ANDREAS retain, as English Version. 15. out of his mouth . . . sword—(ch. 1:16; 2:12, 16). Here in its avenging power, II Thessalonians 2:8, "consume with the Spirit of His mouth" (Isa. 11:4, to which there is allusion here); not in its convicting and converting efficacy (Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12, 13, where also the judicial keenness of the sword-like word is included). The Father commits the judgment to the Son. he shall rule—The HE is emphatic, He and none other, in contrast to the usurpers who have misruled on earth. "Rule," lit., "tend as a shepherd"; but here in a punitive sense. He, who would have shepherded them with pastoral rod and with the golden scepter of His love, shall dash them in pieces, as refractory rebels, with "a rod of iron." treadeth . . . wine press—(Isa. 63:3). of the fierceness and wrath—So ANDREAS reads. But A, B, Vulgate, Coptic, and ORIGEN read, "of the fierceness (or boiling indignation) of the wrath," omitting "and." Almighty—The fierceness of Christ's wrath against His foes will be executed with the resources of omnipotence. 16. "His name written on His vesture and on His thigh," was written partly on the vesture, partly on the thigh itself, at the part where in an equestrian figure the robe drops from the thigh. The thigh symbolizes Christ's humanity as having come, after testimony concerning Jesus, for He is the Scope and Design of the whole Scriptures.

11. A white horse. This is an exhibition of the triumph of Christ after the destruction of His enemies. The white horse is the emblem of this, and Faithful and True are characters of Christ. See chap. iii. 14. In righteousness he doth judge and make war. The wars which He wages are from no principle of ambition, lust of power, or extension of conquest and dominion; they are righteous in their principle and in their object.

12. His eyes were as a flame of fire. To denote the piercing and all-penetrating nature of His wisdom. On his head were many crowns. To denote the multitude of His conquests and the extent of His dominion. A name written, that no man knew. This is a reference to what the rabbins call the tetragrammaton, YHVH; or what we call "Jehovah." This name the Jews never attempt to pronounce; when they meet with it in the Bible, they read Adonai for it. But, to a man, they all declare that no man can pronounce it; and that the true pronunciation has been lost, at least since the Babylonish captivity; and that God alone knows its true interpretation and pronunciation. This, therefore, is the name . . . that no man knew, but he himself.

13. He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood. To show that He was just come from recent slaughter. The description is taken from Isa. lxiii. 2-3.

The Word of God. Written in the Targum, and in other Jewish writings, "The word of Jehovah;" by which they always mean a Person, and not a word spoken.

14. The armies which were in heaven. Angels and saints, over whom Jesus Christ is Captain. Clothed in fine linen. All holy, pure, and righteous.

15. Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword. See on chap. i. 16. This appears to mean the word of the gospel, by which His enemies are confounded and His friends supported and comforted.

With a rod of iron. He shall execute the severest judgment on the opposers of His truth. He treadeth the winepress. As the grapes are trodden to express the juice, so His enemies shall be bruised and beaten, so that their life's blood shall be poured out.

MATTHEW HENRY

V. An invitation given to the fowls of heaven, that they should come and share in the spoil and pillage of the field (v. 17, 18).

VI. The battle joined. The enemy falls on with great fury; the powers of earth and hell gathered, to make their utmost effort, v. 19.

VII. The victory gained by the great head of the church: The beast and the false prophet are taken prisoners, and cast into the burning lake, and their followers are given up to military execution, and made a feast for the fowls of heaven.

the flesh, from the loins of David, and now appearing as the glorified "Son of man." On the other hand, His incommunicable divine name, "which no man knew," is on His head (vs. 12), [MENOCHIUS]. KING OF KINGS–Cf. ch. 17:14, in contrast with vs. 17, the beast being in attempted usurpation a king of kings, the ten kings delivering their kingdom to him. 17. an–Greek, "one." in the sun–so as to be conspicuous in sight of the whole world. to all the fowls–(Ezek. 39:17-20). and gather yourselves–A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, "be gathered," omitting "and." of the great God–A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, "the great supper (i.e., banquet) of God." 18. Contrast with this "supper," vs. 17, 18, the marriage supper of the Lamb, vs. 9. captains–Greek, "captains of thousands," i.e., chief captains. The "kings" are "the ten" who "give their power unto the beast." free and bond–specified in ch. 13:16, as "receiving the mark of the beast." The repetition of flesh (in the Greek it is plural: masses of flesh) five times in this verse, marks the gross carnality of the followers of the beast. Again, the giving of their flesh to the fowls to eat, is a righteous retribution for their not suffering the dead bodies of Christ's witnesses to be put in graves. 19. gathered together–at Armageddon, under the sixth vial. For "their armies" in B and ANDREAS, there is found "His armies" in A. war–so ANDREAS. But A and B read, "the war," viz., that foretold, ch. 16:14; 17:4. 20. and with him . . .–A reads, "and those with him." B reads, "and he who was with him, the false prophet." miracles–Greek, "the miracles" (lit., "signs") recorded already (ch. 13:14) as wrought by the second beast before (lit., in sight of) the first beast. Hence it follows the second beast is identical with the false prophet. I think it not unlikely that the false prophet will be the successor of the spiritual pretensions of the papacy; while the beast in its last form as the fully revealed Antichrist will be the secular representative and embodiment of the fourth world kingdom, Rome, in its last form of intensified opposition to God. Cf. with this prophecy, Ezekiel 38:39; Daniel 2:34, 35, 44; 11:44, 45; 12:1; Joel 3:9-17; Zechariah 12; 13; 14. had received–rather as Greek, "received," once for all. them ; that worshipped–lit., "them worshipping" not an act once for all done, as the "received" implies, but those in the habit of "worshipping." These both were cast . . . into a lake– Greek, ". . . the lake of fire," Gehenna. Satan is subsequently cast into it, at the close of the outbreak which succeeds the millennium (ch. 20:10). Then Death and Hell, as well those not found at the general judgment "written in the book of life"; this constitutes "the second death." alive–a living death; not mere annihilation. "Their worm dieth not, their fire is not quenched." 21. the remnant–Greek, "the rest," i.e., "the kings and their armies" (vs. 19) classed together in one indiscriminate mass. A solemn confirmation of the warning in Psalm 2:10.

ADAM CLARKE

17. An angel standing in the sun. Exceedingly luminous, every part of Him emitting rays of light.

18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings. There shall be a universal destruction; the kings, generals, captains, and all their host shall be slain.

J. A. SEISS:

"And the Beast was taken." The great judgment strikes the head and leader first. He is not a system; or he would not fall till the myriads of his supporters fall. He is a person, as truly as his Captor is a person. He is distinct from his armies, as Christ is distinct from his; or he could not be taken in advance of his armies. He is the living god and confidence of all his hosts, and all this war is for his glory; therefore the assault is first made upon him. He is a supernatural being, a man resurrected from the dead by the devil's power, and seemingly incapable of corporeal death; for he is not slain. No sword smites him. He does not die. In contradistinction from all save his companion, the False Prophet, it is specifically stated that he is simply "taken"—taken "alive," and "cast alive into the lake of fire." His worshipers held him to be invincible. They asked in the utmost confidence and triumph, "Who is like unto the Beast? Who can war with him?" But, without the striking of a blow, and with all his worshipers in arms around him, he is "taken," captured as a lion seizes his prey, dragged away from the field as a helpless prisoner.—The Apocalypse

20. That worshipped his image. The beast has been represented as the Latin empire; the image of the beast, the popes of Rome; and the false prophet, the papal clergy. Were cast alive into a lake of fire. Were discomfited when alive, in the zenith of their power, and destroyed with an utter destruction.

21. With the sword of him that sat upon the horse. He who sat on the white horse is Christ; and His sword is His word—the unadulterated gospel.

Verses 1–10

I. A prophecy of the binding of Satan. To whom this work of binding Satan is committed—to an angel from heaven. Christ never wants proper powers and instruments to break the power of Satan. The execution of this work, v. 2, 3. Neither the strength of the dragon, nor the subtlety of the serpent, was sufficient to rescue him. He cast him into the bottomless pit. He is brought back to that prison, and there laid in chains. He is shut up, and a seal set upon him. We have the term of this confinement of Satan—a thousand years, after which he was to be loosed again for a little season.

CHAPTER 20

VSS. 1-15. SATAN BOUND, AND THE FIRST-RISEN SAINTS REIGN WITH CHRIST, A THOUSAND YEARS; SATAN LOOSED, GATHERS THE NATIONS, GOG AND MAGOG, ROUND THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS, AND IS FINALLY CONSIGNED TO THE LAKE OF FIRE; THE GENERAL RESURRECTION AND LAST JUDGMENT. 1. The destruction of his representatives, the beast and the false prophet, to whom he had given his power, throne, and authority, is followed by the binding of Satan himself for a thousand years. the key of the bottomless pit–now transferred from Satan's hands, who had heretofore been permitted by God to use it in letting loose plagues on the earth; he is now to be made to feel himself the torment which he had inflicted on men, but his full torment is not until he is cast into "the lake of fire" (vs. 10). 2. that old–ancient serpent (ch. 12:9). thousand years–As seven mystically implies universality, so a thousand implies perfection, whether in good or evil [AQUINAS on ch. 11]. Thousand symbolizes that the world is perfectly leavened and pervaded by the divine; since thousand is ten, the number of the world, raised to the third power, three being the number of God [AUBERLEN]. It may denote literally also a thousand years. 3. shut him–A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS omit "him." set a seal upon him–Greek, "over him," i.e., sealed up the door of the abyss over his head. A surer seal to keep him from getting out than his seal over Jesus in the tomb of Joseph, which was burst on the resurrection morn. Satan's binding at this juncture

1. An angel came down from heaven. One of the executors of the divine justice, who receives criminals, and keeps them in prison, and delivers them up only to be tried and executed. The key of the prison and the chain show who He is; and as the chain was great, it shows that the culprit was impeached of no ordinary crimes.

2. That old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan. He who is called the old serpent is the Devil—the "calumniator," and Satan—the "opposer." A thousand years. In what this binding of Satan consists, who can tell? How many visions have been seen on this subject both in ancient and modern times! This and what is said in vv. 3-5 no doubt refer to a time in which the influence of Satan will be greatly restrained, and the true Church of God enjoy great prosperity, which shall endure for a long time. But it is not likely that the number, a thousand years, is to be taken literally here, and "year" symbolically and figuratively in all the book beside. The doctrine of the "millennium," or of the saints reigning on earth a thousand years, with Christ for their Head, has been illustrated and defended by many Christian writers, among both the ancients and the mod-

J. A. SEISS:

Is this a literal transaction? Certainly it is. The battle is literal; the taking of the Beast and the False Prophet is literal; the slaying of the kings and their armies is literal; Satan is literal; and his binding must be equally literal. Some have asked with an air of triumph, "How can a chain of iron or brass bind a spirit, and that spirit an archangel?" But the record does not say that it is a chain of iron, or brass, or steel, or any other material of earthly chains. It is a chain of divine make, as the sword that proceeds from the mouth of the Son of God. It is a spirit-chain, as the horses of the celestial army are spirit-horses. It is a chain of a character that can bind spirit and fetter angels. Jude tells of such chains, actually holding now (Jude 6), and which not even the angels can break. What they are made of, and how they serve to bind the freedom of spiritual natures, it is not for us to know or show; but they are not therefore any less real as literal chains. Figures, tropes, and shadows cannot bind anybody, unless it be some commentators, who seem to be hopelessly entangled in them. The abyss is a reality, and the chain is also a reality, or it is not what inspiration says it is. It is called "a great chain"; and "great" it must be to hold and confine the great Red Dragon. But it is adequate to its purpose. Heaven makes no miscalculations. It is fastened on the limbs of the old monster. He cannot resist it, nor shake it off. Archangel as he is, he is compelled to submit, bound as a helpless prisoner, and violently cast into his dungeon, there to lie in his fetters for a decade of centuries.—The Apocalypse

II. An account of the reign of the saints for the same space of time in which Satan continued bound (v. 4–6). Who those were that received such honour —those who had suffered for Christ, and all who had faithfully adhered to him. The honour bestowed upon them.

They were raised from the dead, and restored to life. They reigned with Christ a thousand years. Those who suffer with Christ shall reign with Christ.

This is called the first resurrection, which none but those who have served Christ and suffered for him shall be favoured with.

The happiness of these servants of God. They are blessed and holy, v. 6. None can be blessed but those that are holy; and all that are holy shall be blessed. They are secured from the power of the second death. Those who have had experience of a spiritual resurrection are saved from the power of the second death.

is not arbitrary, but is the necessary consequence of the events (ch. 19:20); just as Satan's being cast out of heaven, where he had previously been the accuser of the brethren, was the legitimate judgment which passed on him through the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ (ch. 12:7-10). He had thought to destroy God's people on earth by Antichristian persecutions (just as he had thought previously to destroy Christ); but the Church is not destroyed from the earth but is raised to rule over it, and Satan himself is shut up for a thousand years in the "abyss" (Greek for "bottomless pit"), the preparatory prison to the "lake of fire," his final doom. As before he ceased by Christ's ascension to be an accuser in heaven, so during the millennium he ceases to be the seducer and the persecutor on earth.

that he should deceive—so A. But B reads, "that he deceive" (Greek, plana, for planeesee). and—so Coptic and ANDREAS. But A, B, and Vulgate omit "and." 4, 5. they sat—the twelve apostles, and the saints in general. judgment was given unto them—(Note, Dan. 7:22). The office of judging was given to them. Though in one sense having to stand before the judgment seat of Christ, yet in another sense they "do not come into judgment (Greek), but have already passed from death unto life." souls—This term is made a plea for denying the literality of the first resurrection, as if the resurrection were the spiritual one of the souls of believers in this life; the life and reign being that of the soul raised in this life from the death of sin by vivifying faith. But "souls" expresses their disembodied state (cf. ch. 6:9) as John saw them at first; "and they lived" implies their coming to life in the body again, so as to be visible, as the phrase, vs. 5, "this is the first resurrection," proves; for as surely as "the rest of the dead lived not (again) until . . ." refers to the bodily general resurrection, so must the first resurrection refer to the body. beheaded—lit., "smitten with an axe"; a Roman punishment, though crucifixion, casting to beasts, and burning, were the more common modes of execution. The guillotine in revolutionary France was a revival of the mode of capital punishment of pagan imperial Rome. for—Greek, "for the sake of"; on account of"; "because of." and which—Greek, "and the which." And prominent among this class (the beheaded), such as did not worship the beast. The martyrs are put first, because most like Jesus in their sufferings and death, therefore nearest Him in their life and reign; for Christ indirectly affirms there are relative degrees and places of honor in His kingdom, the highest being for those who drink his cup of suffering. Next shall be those who have not bowed to the world power, but have looked to the things unseen and eternal. neither—"not yet." foreheads . . . hands—Greek, "forehead . . . hand." reigned with Christ—over the earth. 5. But—B, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, "and." A and Vulgate omit it. again—A, B, Vulgate, Coptic, and ANDREAS omit it. "Lived" is used for lived again, as in ch. 2:8. John saw them not only when restored to life, but when in the act of reviving [BENGEL]. first resurrection—"the resurrection of the just." Earth is not yet transfigured, and cannot therefore be the meet locality for the transfigured Church; but from heaven the transfigured saints with Christ rule the earth, there being a much freer communion of the heavenly and earthly churches (a type of which state may be seen in the forty days of the risen Saviour during which He appeared to His disciples), and they know no higher joy than to lead their brethren on earth to the same salvation and glory as they share themselves. The millennial reign on earth does not rest on an isolated passage of the Apocalypse, but all Old Testament prophecy goes on the same view (cf. Isa. 4:3; 11:9; 35:8). 6. Blessed—(Cf. ch. 14:13; 19:9). on such the second death hath no power—even as it has none on Christ now that He is risen. priests of God—The heavenly Church is elected not merely to salvation, but to rule in love, and minister blessings over the whole earth, as king-priests. The glory of the transfigured saints shall be felt by men in the flesh with the same consciousness of blessing as on the Mount of Transfiguration the three disciples experienced in witnessing the glory of Jesus, and of Moses and Elias, when Peter exclaimed, "It is good for us to be here"; in II Peter 1:16-18, the Transfiguration is regarded as the earnest of Christ's coming in glory. The privilege of "our high calling in Christ" is limited to the present time of Satan's reign; when he is bound, there will be no scope for suffering for, and so afterwards reigning with, Him (ch. 3:

erns. Were I to give a collection of the conceits of the primitive fathers on this subject, my readers would have little reason to applaud my pains. It has long been the idle expectation of many persons that the millennium, in their sense, was at hand; and its commencement has been expected in every century since the Christian era. It has been fixed for several different years, during the short period of my own life! I believed those predictions to be vain, and I have lived to see them such. Yet there is no doubt that the earth is in a state of progressive moral improvement; and that the light of true religion is shining more copiously everywhere, and will shine more and more to the perfect day. But when the religion of Christ will be at its meridian of light and heat, we know not. In each believer this may speedily take place; but probably no such time shall ever appear, in which evil shall be wholly banished from the earth, till after the day of judgment, when the earth having been burned up, a new heaven and a new earth shall be produced out of the ruins of the old, by the mighty power of God; righteousness alone shall dwell in them. The phraseology of the apostle here seems partly taken from the ancient prophets and partly rabbinical; and it is from the Jewish use of those terms that we are to look for their interpretation.

3. He should deceive the nations no more. Be unable to blind men with superstition and idolatry as he had formerly done.

4. I saw thrones. Christianity established in the earth, the kings and governors being all Christians. Reigned with Christ a thousand years. I am satisfied that this period should not be taken literally. It may signify that there shall be a long and undisturbed state of Christianity; and so universally shall the gospel spirit prevail that it will appear as if Christ reigned upon earth; which will in effect be the case, because His Spirit shall rule in the hearts of men; and in this time the martyrs are represented as living again; their testimony being revived, and the truth for which they died, and which was confirmed by their blood, being now everywhere prevalent. As to the term thousand years, it is a mystic number among the Jews. It appears therefore that this phraseology is purely rabbinical.

5. The rest of the dead lived not again. It is generally supposed from these passages that all who have been martyred for the truth of God shall be raised a thousand years before the other dead, and reign on earth with Christ during that time, after which the dead in general shall be raised; but this also is very doubtful.

6. Blessed ("happy") and holy. He was holy and therefore he suffered for the testimony of Jesus in the time when nothing but holiness was called to such a trial. The first resurrection. Supposed to be that of the martyrs, mentioned above. The second death. Punishment in the eternal world; such is the acceptation of the phrase among the ancient Jews. Hath no power. "Hath no authority"—no dominion over him. This is also a rabbinical mode of speech.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. An account of another mighty conflict, very sharp, but short and decisive. The restraints laid on Satan are at length taken off. While this world lasts, Satan's power in it will not be wholly destroyed. No sooner is Satan let loose than he falls to his old work, deceiving the nations, and so stirring them up to make a war with the saints and servants of God. His last efforts seem to be the greatest, v. 8. The principal commanders in this army under the dragon—Gog and Magog. Of Gog and Magog together we only read in Ezek. xxxviii. 2, a prophecy whence this in the Revelation borrows many of its images. The march and military disposition of this formidable army (v. 9).

The doom and punishment of the grand enemy, the devil: he is now cast into hell, with his two great officers, the beast and the false prophet, to be there tormented night and day, for ever and ever.

The utter destruction of the devil's kingdom leads to an account of the day of judgment. This will be a great day, the great day, when all shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. 1. We behold the throne, great and white, very glorious and perfectly just and righteous. 2. The Judge, the Lord Jesus Christ. The earth and the heaven flee from his face, and there is no place found for them. 3. The persons to be judged (v. 12). None are so mean but they have some talents to account for, and none so great as to avoid the jurisdiction of this court; not only those that are found alive at the coming of Christ, but all who have died before.

4. The rule of judgment settled: The books were opened. The book of God's omniscience, and the book of the sinner's conscience. And another book shall be opened—the book of the scriptures, the statute-book of heaven, the rule of life.

21; cf. Note, I Cor. 6:2). Moreover, none can be saved in the present age and in the pale of the Christian Church who does not also reign with Christ hereafter, the necessary preliminary to which is suffering with Christ now. If we fail to lay hold of the crown, we lose all, "the gift of grace as well as the reward of service" [DE BURGH]. 7. expired—Greek, "finished." 8. Gog and Magog—(Notes, Ezek. 38 and 39). Magog is a general name for northern nations of Japheth's posterity, whose ideal head is Gog (Gen. 10:2). A has but one Greek article to "Gog and Magog," whereby the two, viz., the prince and the people, are marked as having the closest connection. B reads the second article before Magog wrongly. HILLER (Onomasticon) explains both words as signifying "lofty," "elevated." For "quarters" the Greek is "corners." to battle—Greek, "to the war," in A and B. But ANDREAS omits "the." 9. on the breadth of the earth—so as completely to overspread it. Perhaps we ought to translate, ".... of the [holy] land." the camp of the saints . . . and the beloved city—the camp of the saints encircling the beloved city, Jerusalem (Ecclesiasticus 24:11). Contrast "hateful" in Babylon (ch. 18:2; Deut. 32: 15, LXX). Ezekiel's prophecy of Gog and Magog (38 and 39) refers to the attack made by Antichrist on Israel before the millennium: but this attack is made after the millennium, so that "Gog and Magog" are mystical names representing the final adversaries led by Satan in person. Ezekiel's Gog and Magog come from the north, but those here come "from the four corners of the earth." Gog is by some connected with a Hebrew root, "covered." from God—so B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A omits the words. Even during the millennium there is a separation between heaven and earth, transfigured humanity and humanity in the flesh. Hence it is possible that an apostasy should take place at its close. In the judgment on this apostasy the world of nature is destroyed and renewed, as the world of history was before the millennial kingdom; it is only then that the new heaven and new earth are realized in final perfection. 10. that deceived—Greek, "that deceiveth." lake of fire—his final doom: as the bottomless pit" (vs. 1) was his temporary prison. where—so Coptic. But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "where also." the beast and the false prophet are—(ch. 19:20). day and night—figurative for without intermission (ch. 22:5), such as now is caused by night interposing between day and day. The same phrase is used of the external state of the blessed (ch. 4:8). As the bliss of these is eternal, so the woe of Satan and the lost must be. As the beast and the false prophet led the former conspiracy against Christ and His people, so Satan in person heads the last conspiracy. for ever and ever—Greek, "to the ages of the ages." 11. great—in contrast to the "thrones," vs. 4. white—the emblem of purity and justice. him that sat on it—the Father [ALFORD]. Rather, the Son, to whom "the Father hath committed all judgment." God in Christ, i.e., the Father represented by the Son, is He before whose judgment seat we must all stand. earth and heaven fled away—The final conflagration, therefore, precedes the general judgment. This is followed by the new heaven and earth (ch. 21). 12. the dead—"the rest of the dead" who did not share the first resurrection, and those who died during the millennium. small and great—B has "the small and the great." A, Vulgate, Syriac, and ANDREAS have "the great and the small." The wicked who had died from the time of Adam to Christ's second advent, and all the righteous and wicked who had died during and after the millennium, shall then have their eternal portion assigned to them. The godly who were transfigured and reigned with Christ during it, shall also be present, not indeed to have their portion assigned as if for the first time (for that shall have been fixed long before, John 5:24), but to have it confirmed for ever, and that God's righteousness may be vindicated in the case of both the saved and the lost, in the presence of an assembled universe. Cf. "We must ALL appear...." Romans 14:10; II Corinthians 5:10. The saints having been first pronounced just themselves by Christ out of "the book of life," shall sit as assessors of the Judge. books . . . opened—(Dan. 7:10). The books of God's remembrance, alike of the evil and the good (Ps. 56:8; 139:4; Mal. 3:16): conscience (Rom. 2: 15, 16), the word of Christ (John 12:48), the law (Gal. 3:10), God's eternal counsel (Ps. 139:16). book of life—(ch. 3:5; 13:8; 21:27; Exod. 32:32, 33; Ps. 69:28; Dan. 12:1; Phil. 4:3). Besides the general book recording the works of all, there is a special book for believers in which their names are

7. Satan shall be loosed. How can this bear any kind of literal interpretation? Satan is bound a thousand years, and the earth is in peace; righteousness flourishes, and Jesus Christ alone reigns. This state of things may continue forever if the imprisonment of Satan be continued. Satan, however, is loosed at the end of the thousand years, and goes out and deceives the nations, and peace is banished from the face of the earth, and a most dreadful war takes place. These can be only symbolical representations, utterly incapable of the sense generally put upon them.

8. Gog and Magog. This seems to be almost literally taken from the Jerusalem Targum, and that of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on Num. xi. 26. I shall give the words at length: "And there were two men left in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, the name of the other was Medad, and on them the spirit of prophecy rested. Then they both prophesied together, and said, 'In the very end of time Gog and Magog and their army shall come up against Jerusalem, and they shall fall by the hand of the King Messiah; and for seven whole years shall the children of Israel light their fires with the wood of their warlike engines, and they shall not go to the wood nor cut down any tree.'" This account seems most evidently to have been copied by John, but how he intended it to be applied is a question too difficult to be solved by the skill of man; yet both the account in the rabbins and in John is founded on Ezekiel xxxviii—xxxix. The rabbinical writings are full of accounts concerning Gog and Magog. Under these names the enemies of God's truth are generally intended.

9. The beloved city. Primarily, Jerusalem; typically, the Christian Church.

10. And the devil . . . was cast into the lake. Before Satan was "bound," that is, his power was curtailed and restrained; now he is cast into the lake of fire, his power being totally taken away.

11. A great white throne. Refulgent with glorious majesty. Him that sat on it. The indescribable Jehovah. From whose face the earth and the heaven fled away. Even the brightness of His countenance dissolved the universe, and annihilated the laws by which it was governed. This is a very majestic figure, and finely expressed. There was found no place for them. The glorious majesty of God filling all things, and being all in all.

12. The dead, small and great. All ranks, degrees, and conditions of men. This description seems to refer to Dan. vii. 9-10.

And the books were opened. See Dan. xii. 1. "Rab Jehuda said: All the actions of men, whether good or bad, are written in a book, and of all they shall give account" (Sohar Gen., fol. 79, col. 298). "In the first day of the new year the holy blessed God sits that he may judge the world; and all men, without exception, give an account of themselves; and the books of the living and the dead are opened" (Sohar Chadash, fol. 19, 1).

MATTHEW HENRY

5. The cause to be tried; the works of men, what they have done and whether it be good or evil.

6. The issue of the trial and judgment. All those who have made a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell, shall then be condemned with their infernal confederates, cast with them into the lake of fire.

But those whose names are written in that book shall then be justified and acquitted by the Judge.

written, not for their works, but for the work of Christ for, and in, them. Therefore it is called, "the Lamb's book of life." Electing grace has singled them out from the general mass. according to their works—We are justified by faith, but judged according to (not by) our works. For the general judgment is primarily designed for the final vindication of God's righteousness before the whole world, which in this checkered dispensation of good and evil, though really ruling the world, has been for the time less manifest. Faith is appreciable by God and the believer alone (ch. 2:17). But works are appreciable by all. These, then, are made the evidential test to decide men's eternal state, thus showing that God's administration of judgment is altogether righteous. 13. death and hell—Greek, "Hades." The essential identity of the dying and risen body is hereby shown; for the sea and grave give up their dead. The body that sinned or served God shall, in righteous retribution, be the body also that shall suffer or be rewarded. The "sea" may have a symbolical [CLUVER from AUGUSTINE], besides the literal, meaning, as in ch. 8:8; 12:12; 13: 1; 18:17, 19; so "death" and "hell" are personifications (cf. ch. 21:1). But the literal sense need hardly be departed from: all the different regions wherein the bodies and souls of men had been, gave them up. 14. Death and Hades, as personified representatives of the enemies of Christ and His Church, are said to be cast into the lake of fire to express the truth that Christ and His people shall never more die, or be in the state of disembodied spirits. This is the second death—"the lake of fire" is added in A, B, and ANDREAS. English Version, which omits the clause, rests on inferior MSS. In hell the ancient form of death, which was one of the enemies destroyed by Christ, shall not continue, but a death of a far different kind reigns there, "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord": an abiding testimony of the victory of Christ. 15. The blissful lot of the righteous is not here specially mentioned as their bliss had commenced before the final judgment. Cf., however, Matthew 25:34, 41, 46.

ADAM CLARKE

The books mentioned here were the books of the living and the dead, or the "book of life" and the "book of death"; that is, the account of the good and evil actions of men; the former leading to life, the latter to death. John evidently alludes here to Dan. vii. 10, on which the rabbinical account of the books appears to be founded. The expressions are figurative in both.

13. The sea gave up the dead. Those who had been drowned in it. And death. All who died by any kind of disease. Death is here personified, and represented as a keeper of defunct human beings; probably no more than earth or the grave is meant, as properly belonging to the empire of death. And hell. Hades, the place of separate spirits. The sea and death have the bodies of all human beings; hades has their spirits. That they may be judged, and punished or rewarded according to their works, their bodies and souls must be reunited; hades, therefore, gives up the spirits; and the sea and the earth give up the bodies.

14. And death and hell were cast into the lake. Death himself is now abolished, and the place for separate spirits is no longer needful. All dead bodies and separated souls being rejoined, and no more separation of bodies and souls by death to take place, consequently the existence of these things is no further necessary. This is the second death. The first death consisted in the separation of the soul from the body for a season; the second death in the separation of body and soul from God forever. The first death is that from which there may be a resurrection; the second death is that from which there can be no recovery.

CHAPTER 21

I. A new world now opens to our view (v. 1). To make way for the commencement of this new world, the old world passed away.

II. In this new world the apostle saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from heaven. This new Jerusalem is the church of God in its new and perfect state, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

CHAPTER 21

Vss. 1-27. THE NEW HEAVEN AND EARTH: NEW JERUSALEM OUT OF HEAVEN. 1. the first—i.e., the former. passed away—Greek, in A and B is "were departed" (Greek, apeelthon, not as in English Version, pareelthe). was—Greek, "is," which graphically sets the thing before our eyes as present. no more sea—The sea is the type of perpetual unrest. Hence our Lord rebukes it as an unruly hostile troubler of His people. It symbolized the political tumults out of which "the beast" arose, ch. 13:1. As the physical corresponds to the spiritual and moral world, so the absence of sea, after the metamorphosis of the earth by fire, answers to the unruffled state of solid peace which shall then prevail.

2. And I John—"John" is omitted in A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS; also the "I" in the Greek of these authorities is not emphatic. The insertion of "I John" in the Greek would somewhat interfere with the close connection which subsists between "the new heaven and earth," vs. 1, and the "new Jerusalem" in this verse. Jerusalem ... out of heaven—(ch. 3:12; Gal. 4:26, "Jerusalem which is above"; Heb. 11:10; 12:22; 13:14). The descent of the new Jerusalem out of heaven is plainly distinct from the earthly Jerusalem in which Israel in the flesh shall dwell during the millennium, and follows on the creation of the new heaven and earth. John in his Gospel always writes [Greek] Hierosoluma of the old city; in the Apocalypse always Hierousaleem of the heavenly city (ch. 3:12). Hierousaleem is a Hebrew name, the original and holy appellation. Hierosoluma is the common Greek term, used in a political sense. Paul observes the same distinction when refuting Judaism (Gal. 4:26; cf. 1:17, 18; 2:1; Heb. 12:22), though not so in the Epistles to Romans and Corinthians [BENGEL]. bride—made up of the blessed citizens of "the holy city." There is no longer merely a Paradise as in Eden (though there is that also, ch. 2:7), no longer a mere garden, but now the city of God on earth, costlier, statelier, and more glorious, but at the same time the result of labor and pains such as had not to be expended by man in dressing the primitive garden of Eden. 3. out of heaven—so ANDREAS. But A and Vulgate read, "out of the throne." the tabernacle—alluding to the tabernacle of God in the wilderness (wherein many signs of His presence were given): of which this is the antitype, having previously been in heav-

CHAPTER 21

1. A new heaven and a new earth. See the notes on 2 Pet. iii. 13. The ancient Jews believed that God would renew the heavens and the earth at the end of seven thousand years. The general supposition they founded on Isa. lxv. 17. There was no more sea. The sea no more appeared than did the first heaven and earth. All was made new; and probably the new sea occupied a different position and was differently distributed from that of the old sea.

2. And I John. The writer of this book.

New Jerusalem. See the notes on Gal. iv. 24-27. This doubtless means the Christian Church in a state of great prosperity and purity, but some think eternal blessedness is intended.

MATTHEW HENRY

III. The blessed presence of God with his people is here proclaimed, v. 3. The presence of God with his church is the glory of the church.

The presence of God with his people in heaven will not be interrupted as it is on earth, but he will dwell with them continually. They shall be his people. God himself will be their God.

IV. This new and blessed state will be free from all trouble and sorrow. All tears shall be wiped away. God himself, as their tender Father, with his own kind hand, shall wipe away the tears of his children; and they would not have been without those tears when God shall come and wipe them away. All the causes of future sorrow shall be for ever removed: There shall be neither death nor pain; and therefore no sorrow nor crying; former things have passed away.

V. The truth and certainty of this blessed state are ratified by the word and promise of God, v. 5, 6. God would have it committed to writing, for perpetual memory, and continual use to his people. These words are faithful and true; and it follows, It is done, is as sure as if it were done already. We may and ought to take God's promise as present payment; if he has said that he makes all things new, it is done.

His titles of honour as a pledge of the full performance, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. As his power and will were the first cause of all things, his pleasure and glory are the last end, and he will not lose his design. Men may begin designs which they can never bring to perfection; but the counsel of God shall stand. It would be inconsistent with the goodness of God, and his love to his people, to create in them holy desires, and then deny them their proper satisfaction; and therefore they may be assured that he will give them of the fountain of the water of life freely.

VI. The greatness of this future felicity is declared. The freeness of it: He gives of the water of life freely. The fulness of it. They inherit all things (v. 7). He is all in all. The tenure and title by which they enjoy this blessedness as the sons of God, a title most sure and indefeasible.

The vastly different state of the wicked, v. 8. The sins of those who perish. The fearful lead the van in this black list. Those who were so dastardly as not to dare to take up the cross of Christ, were yet so desperate as to run into all manner of abominable wickedness. Their punishment. They could not burn at a stake for Christ, but they must burn in hell for sin. They must die another death after their natural death; the agonies and terrors of the first death will consign them over to the far greater terrors and agonies of eternal death.

en: ch. 11:19; 15:5, "the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven"; also 13:6. Cf. the contrast in Hebrews 9:23, 14, between "the patterns" and "the heavenly things themselves," between "the figures" and "the true." The earnest of the true and heavenly tabernacle was afforded in the Jerusalem temple described in Ezekiel 40, etc., as about to be, viz., during the millennium. dwell with them—lit., "tabernacle with them"; the same Greek word as is used of the divine Son "tabernacling among us." Then He was in the weakness of the flesh: but at the new creation of heaven and earth He shall tabernacle among us in the glory of His manifested Godhead (ch. 22:4). they—in Greek emphatic, "they" (in particular). his people—Greek, "His peoples": "the nations of the saved" being all peculiarly His, as Israel was designed to be. So A reads. But B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "His people": singular. God himself . . . with them—realizing fully His name Immanuel. 4. all tears—Greek, "every tear." no more death—Greek, "death shall be no more." Therefore it is not the millennium, for in the latter there is death (Isa. 65:20; I Cor. 15:26, 54, "the last enemy . . . destroyed is death," ch. 20:14, after the millennium). sorrow—Greek, "mourning." passed away—Greek, "departed," as in vs. 1. 5. sat—Greek, "sitteth." all things new—not recent, but changed from the old (Greek, kaina, not nea). An earnest of this regeneration and transfiguration of nature is given already in the regenerate soul. unto me—so Coptic and ANDREAS. But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac omit. true and faithful—so ANDREAS. But A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic transpose, "faithful and true" (lit., "genuine"). 6. It is done the same Greek as in ch. 16:17. "It is come to pass." So Vulgate reads with English Version. But A reads, "They (these words, vs. 5) are come to pass." All is as sure as if it actually had been fulfilled for it rests on the word of the unchanging God. When the consummation shall be, God shall rejoice over the work of His own hands, as at the completion of the first creation God saw everything that He had made, and behold it was very good. Alpha . . . Omega—Greek in A and B, "the Alpha . . . the Omega" (ch. 1:18). give unto . . . athirst . . . water of life—(ch. 22:17; Isa. 12:3; 55:1; John 4:13, 14; 7:37, 38). This is added lest any should despair of attaining to this exceeding weight of glory. In our present state we may drink of the stream, then we shall drink at the Fountain. freely—Greek, "gratuitously": the same Greek as is translated, "(They hated Me) without a cause," John 15:25. As gratuitous as was man's hatred of God, so gratuitous is God's love to man: there was every cause in Christ why man should love Him, yet man hated Him; there was every cause in man why (humanly speaking) God should have hated man, yet God loved man: the very reverse of what might be expected took place in both cases. Even in heaven our drinking at the Fountain shall be God's gratuitous gift. 7. He that overcometh—another aspect of the believer's life: a conflict with sin, Satan, and the world is needed. Thirsting for salvation is the first beginning of, and continues for ever (in the sense of an appetite and relish for divine joys) a characteristic of the believer. In a different sense, the believer "shall never thirst." inherit all things—A, B, Vulgate, and CYPRIAN read, "these things," viz., the blessings described in this whole passage. With "all things," cf. I Corinthians 3:21-23. I will be his God—Greek, ". . . to him a God," i.e., all that is implied of blessing in the name "God." he shall be my son—"He" is emphatic: He in particular and in a peculiar sense, above others: Greek, "shall be to me a son," in fullest realization of the promise made in type to Solomon, son of David, and antitypically to the divine Son of David. 8. the fearful—Greek, "the cowardly," who do not quit themselves like men so as to "overcome" in the good fight; who have the spirit of slavish "fear," not love, towards God; and who through fear of man are not bold for God, or "draw back." Cf. vs. 27; ch. 22:15. unbelieving—Greek, "faithless." abominable—who have drank of the harlot's "cup of abominations." sorcerers—one of the characteristics of Antichrist's time. all liars—Greek, "all the liars": or else "all who are liars"; cf. I Timothy 4:1, 2, where similarly lying and dealings with spirits and demons, are joined together as features of the latter times." second death—ch. 20:14: "everlasting destruction," II Thessalonians 1:9; Mark 9:44, 46, 48, "Where THEIR worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." 9. The same angel who had shown John Babylon the harlot, is appropriately employed to show him in contrast new Jerusalem, the Bride (ch. 17:1-5). The angel so employed is

ADAM CLARKE

3. The tabernacle of God is with men. God, in the most especial manner, dwells among His followers, diffusing His light and life everywhere.

4. There shall be no more death. Because there shall be a general resurrection. And this is the inference which Paul makes from his doctrine of a general resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 26, where he says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

5. Behold, I make all things new. As the creation of the world at the beginning was the work of God alone, so this new creation. These words are true and faithful. Truth refers to the promise of these changes; faithfulness, to the fulfillment of these promises.

6. It is done. All is determined, and shall be fulfilled in due time. The great drama is finished, and what was intended is now completed, referring to the period alluded to by the angel. I am Alpha and Omega. See on chap. i. 8. The fountain of the water of life. See on John iv. 10, 14; vii. 37, etc. The rabbins consider "the fountain of the world to come" as one of the particular blessings of a future state.

7. Inherit all things. Here he had no inheritance; there he shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven, and be with God and Christ, and have every possible degree of blessedness.

8. But the fearful. Those who, for fear of losing life or their property, either refused to receive the Christian religion, though convinced of its truth and importance, or having received it, in times of persecution fell away, not being willing to risk their lives. And unbelieving. Those who resist against full evidence. The abominable. Those who are polluted with unnatural lust. And murderers. Those who take away the life of man for any cause but the murder of another, and those who hate a brother in their heart. And whoremongers. Adulterers, fornicators, whores, prostitutes, and rakes of every description. Idolaters. Those who offer any kind of worship or religious reverence to anything but God. And all liars. Everyone who speaks contrary to the truth when he knows the truth, and even he who speaks the truth with the intention to deceive; i.e., to persuade a person that a thing is different from what it really is, by telling only a part of the truth, or suppressing some circumstance which would have led the hearer to a different and to the true conclusion. All these shall have their portion, their "share," what belongs to them, their right, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death, from which there is no recovery.

MATTHEW HENRY

Verses 9–27

We now come to the vision itself.

I. The person that opened the vision to the apostle, v. 9. God has a variety of work and employment for his holy angels. They readily execute every commission they receive from God.

II. The place from which the apostle had this glorious view. He was taken into a high mountain. Those who would have clear views of heaven must get as near heaven as they can, into the mount of vision.

III. The subject-matter of the vision (v. 10); the church of God in her glorious, perfect, triumphant state.

1. The exterior part of the city—the wall and the gates.

(1) The wall for security. Heaven is a safe state. The height of it (v. 17), sufficient both for ornament and security. The matter of it: It was as jasper, v. 11. This city has a wall that is impregnable as well as precious. The form of it: In the new Jerusalem all shall be equal in purity and perfection. The measure of the wall (v. 15, 16). Here is room sufficient for all the people of God—many mansions in their Father's house. The foundation of the wall (v. 19). The foundations are described by their number—twelve, alluding to the twelve apostles (v. 14). The matter of these foundations, it was various and precious, set forth by twelve sorts of precious stones.

(2) The gates for entrance. Heaven is not inaccessible; there is a free admission to all those that are sanctified. Their number—twelve gates, answering to the twelve tribes of Israel. All the true Israel of God shall have entrance into the new Jerusalem. Their guards—twelve angels, to admit and receive the several tribes of the spiritual Israel. The inscription on the gates—the names of the twelve tribes, to show that they have a right to the tree of life, and to enter through the gates into the city.

The situation of the gates. As the city had four equal sides, answering to the four quarters of the world, so on each side there were three gates, signifying that there is as free entrance from one part of the world as from the other.

the one that had the last seven plagues, to show that the ultimate blessedness of the Church is one end of the divine judgments on her foes. unto me—A, B, and Vulgate omit. the Lamb's wife—in contrast to her who sat on many waters (ch. 17:1), (i.e., intrigued with many peoples and nations of the world, instead of giving her undivided affections, as the Bride does, to the Lamb. 10. The words correspond to ch. 17:3, to heighten the contrast of the bride and harlot. mountain—Cf. Ezekiel 40:2, where a similar vision is given from a high mountain. that great—omitted in A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and CYPRIAN. Translate then, "the holy city Jerusalem." descending—Even in the millennium the earth will not be a suitable abode for transfigured saints, who therefore shall then reign in heaven over the earth. But after the renewal of the earth at the close of the millennium and judgment, they shall descend from heaven to dwell on an earth assimilated to heaven itself. "From God" implies that "we (the city) are God's workmanship." 11. Having the glory of God—not merely the Shekinah cloud, but God Himself as her glory dwelling in the midst of her. Cf. the type, the earthly Jerusalem in the millennium (Zech. 2:5; cf. vs. 23, below). her light—Greek, "light-giver": properly applied to the heavenly luminaries which diffuse light. Cf. Note, Philippians 2:15, the only other passage where it occurs. The "and" before "her light' is omitted in A, B, and Vulgate. even like—Greek, "as it were." jasper—representing watery crystalline brightness. 12. And—A and B omit. Ezekiel 48:30-35, has a similar description, which implies that the millennial Jerusalem shall have its exact antitype in the heavenly Jerusalem which shall descend on the finally regenerated earth. wall great and high—setting forth the security of the Church. Also, the exclusion of the ungodly. twelve angels—guards of the twelve gates: an additional emblem of perfect security, while the gates being never shut (vs. 25) imply perfect liberty and peace. Also, angels shall be the brethren of the heavenly citizens. names of . . . twelve tribes—The inscription of the names on the gates implies that none but the spiritual Israel, God's elect, shall enter the heavenly city.

13. On the north . . . on the south—A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "And on the north and on the south. In Ezekiel 48:32, Joseph, Benjamin, Dan (for which Manasseh is substituted in ch. 7:6), are on the east. Reuben, Judah, Levi, are on the north. Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, on the south. Gad, Asher, Naphtali, on the west. In Numbers 2, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, are on the east. Reuben, Simeon, Gad, on the south. Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin, on the west. Dan, Asher, Naphtali, on the north. 14. twelve foundations—Joshua, the type of Jesus, chose twelve men out of the people, to carry twelve stones over the Jordan with them, as Jesus chose twelve apostles to be the twelve foundations of the heavenly city, of which He is Himself the Chief cornerstone. Peter is not the only apostolic rock on whose preaching Christ builds His Church. Christ Himself is the true foundation: the twelve are foundations only in regard to their apostolic testimony concerning Him. Though Paul was an apostle besides the twelve, yet the mystical number is retained, 12 representing the Church, viz. 3, the divine number, multiplied by 4, the world number. in them the names . . .—As architects often have their names inscribed on their great works, so the names of the apostles shall be held in everlasting remembrance. 15. had a golden reed—so Coptic. But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "had (as) a measure, a golden reed." In ch. 11:2 the non-measuring of the outer courts of the temple implied its being given up to secular and heathen desecration. So here, on the contrary, the city being measured implies the entire consecration of every part, all things being brought up to the most exact standard of God's holy requirements, and also God's accurate guardianship henceforth of even the most minute parts of His holy city from all evil. twelve thousand furlongs—lit., "to 12,000 stadii": one thousand furlongs being the space between the several twelve gates.

17, hundred . . . forty . . . four cubits—twelve times twelve: the Church-number squared. The wall is far beneath the height of the city. measure of a man, that is, of the angel—The ordinary measure used by men is the measure here used by the angel, distinct from "the measure of the sanctuary." Men shall then be equal to the angels. 18. the building—"the structure" [TREGELLES], Greek, endomeesis. gold, like . . . clear glass—Ideal gold, transparent as no gold here is [ALFORD]. Excellencies will be combined in the heavenly city

9. The bride, the Lamb's wife. The pure and holy Christian Church.

10. To a great and high mountain. That, being above this city, he might see every street and lane of it.

11. Having the glory of God. Instead of the sun and moon, it has the splendor of God to enlighten it. Unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. Among precious stones there are some even of the same species more valuable than others; for their value is in proportion to their being free from flaws, and of a uniform and brilliant transparency. A crystal is perfectly clear; the Oriental jasper is a beautiful sea-green.

12. Had a wall great and high. An almighty defense. Twelve gates. A gate for every tribe of Israel, in the vicinity of which gate that tribe dwelt, so that in coming in and going out they did not mix with each other. This description of the city is partly taken from Ezek. xlviii. 30-35.

13. On the east three gates. The city is here represented as standing to the four cardinal points of heaven, and presenting one side to each of these points.

14. The wall of the city had twelve foundations. Probably twelve stones, one of which served for a foundation or "threshold" to each gate; and on these were inscribed the names of the twelve apostles, to intimate that it was by the doctrine of the apostles that souls enter into the Church, and thence into the New Jerusalem.

15. Had a golden reed. Several excellent MSS. add "a measure"; he had "a measuring rod made of gold." This account of measuring the city seems to be copied, with variations, from Ezek. xl. 3, etc.

16. The city lieth foursquare. The quadrangular form intimates its perfection and stability, for the square figure was a figure of perfection among the Greeks; the "square" or "cubical man" was, with them, a man of unsullied integrity, perfect in all things.

17. The wall . . . an hundred and forty and four cubits. This is twelve, the number of the apostles, multiplied by itself. The measure of a man, that is, of the angel. The cubit, so called from cubitus, the "elbow," is the measure from the tip of the elbow to the tip of the middle finger, and is generally reckoned at one foot and a half, or eighteen inches. By the cubit of a man we may here understand the ordinary cubit, and that this was the angel's cubit who appeared in the form of a man.

18. The building of the wall of it was of jasper. The Oriental jasper is exceedingly hard and almost indestructible. Pillars made of this stone have lasted some thousands of years, and appear to have suffered scarcely anything from the tooth of time. Pure gold, like unto clear glass. Does not this imply that the walls were made of some beautifully bright yellow stone, very highly polished? This description has been most injudiciously applied to heaven; and in some public discourses, for the comfort and edification of the pious, we hear of heaven with its golden walls, golden pavements, gates of pearl, not considering that nothing of this description was ever intended to be literally understood, and that gold and jewels can have no place in the spiritual and eternal world.

MATTHEW HENRY

The materials of these gates—they were all of pearls: Every gate one pearl. Christ is the pearl of great price, and he is our way to God. There is nothing magnificent enough in this world fully to set forth the glory of heaven.

2. The interior part of the new Jerusalem, v. 22-27. The first thing which we observe there is the street of the city, v. 21. The saints in heaven tread upon gold. The saints are then at rest, but it is not a mere passive rest; but a state of delightful motion: The nations that are saved walk in the light of it. They walk with Christ in white. They have communion not only with God, but with one another.

(1) The temple of the new Jerusalem, which was no material temple, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple thereof.

(2) The light of this city, v. 23. There is no want of the light of the sun, for the glory of God lightens that city, and the Lamb is the light thereof. There is no need of the sun or moon, any more than we here need to set up candles at noon day.

(3) The inhabitants of this city. Their numbers—whole nations of saved souls. All those multitudes who were sealed on earth are saved in heaven. Their dignity—some of the kings and princes of the earth. God will have some of all ranks and degrees of men to fill the heavenly mansions, high and low. Their continual accession and entrance into this city: The gates shall never be shut. Those that are sanctified always find the gates open.

(4) The accommodations of this city: All the glory and honour of the nations shall be brought into it. Whatever is excellent and valuable in this world shall be there enjoyed in a more refined kind, and to a far greater degree.

(5) The unmixed purity of all who belong to the new Jerusalem, v. 27. There the saints shall have no impure thing remaining in them. Now they feel a sad mixture of corruption with their graces; but, at their entance into the holy of holies, they are washed in the laver of Christ's blood, and presented to the Father without spot. There the saints shall have no impure persons admitted among them. In the new Jerusalem there is a society perfectly pure. Free from such as are openly profane. There are none admitted into heaven who work abominations. Free from hypocrites, such as make lies. They cannot intrude into the new Jerusalem.

which now seem incompatible. 19. And—so Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A, B, and Vulgate omit. Cf. vs. 14 with this verse; also Isaiah 54:11. all manner of precious stones—Contrast ch. 18:12 as to the harlot, Babylon. These precious stones constituted the "foundations." chalcedony—agate from Chalcedon: semi-opaque, sky-blue, with stripes of other colors [ALFORD].

20. sardonyx—a gem having the redness of the cornelian, and the whiteness of the onyx. sardius—(Note, ch. 4:3). chrysolite—described by PLINY as transparent and of a golden brightness, like our topaz: different from our pale green crystallized chrysolite. beryl—of a sea-green color. topaz—PLINY, 37. 32, makes it green and transparent, like our chrysolite. chrysoprasus—somewhat pale, and having the purple color of the amethyst [PLINY, 37, 20, 21]. jacinth—The flashing violet brightness in the amethyst is diluted in the jacinth [PLINY, 37. 41]. 21. every several—Greek, "each one severally." 22. no temple . . . God . . . the temple—As God now dwells in the spiritual Church, His "temple" (Greek, naos, shrine; I Cor. 3:17; 6:19), so the Church when perfected shall dwell in Him as her "temple" (naos: the same Greek). As the Church was "His sanctuary," so He is to be their sanctuary. Means of grace shall cease when the end of grace is come. Church ordinances shall give place to the God of ordinances. Uninterrupted, immediate, direct, communion with Him and the Lamb (cf. John 4:23), shall supersede intervening ordinances. 23. in it—so Vulgate. But A, B, and ANDREAS read, "(shine) on it," or lit., "for her." the light—Greek, "the lamp" (Isa. 60:19, 20). The direct light of God and the Lamb shall make the saints independent of God's creatures, the sun and moon, for light. 24. of them which are saved . . . in—A, B, Vulgate, Coptic, and ANDREAS read, (the nations shall walk) "by means of her light": omitting "of them which are saved." Her brightness shall supply them with light. the kings of the earth—who once had regard only to their glory, having been converted, now in the new Jerusalem do bring their glory into it, to lay it down at the feet of their God and Lord. and honour—so B, Vulgate, and Syriac. But A omits the clause. 25. not be shut . . . by day—therefore shall never be shut: for it shall always be day. Gates are usually shut by night: but in it shall be no night. There shall be continual free ingress into it, so as that all which is blessed and glorious may continually be brought into it. So in the millennial type. 26. All that was truly glorious and excellent in the earth and its converted nations shall be gathered into it; and while all shall form one Bride, there shall be various orders among the redeemed, analogous to the divisions of nations on earth constituting the one great human family, and to the various orders of angels. 27. anything that defileth—Greek, koinoun. A and B read [koinon], "anything unclean." in the Lamb's book of life—Note, ch. 20:12, 15). As all the filth of the old Jerusalem was carried outside the walls and burnt there, so nothing defiled shall enter the heavenly city, but be burnt outside (cf. ch. 22:15). It is striking that the apostle of love, who shows us the glories of the heavenly city, is he also who speaks most plainly of the terrors of hell. On vss. 26, 27, ALFORD writes a Note, rash in speculation, about the heathen nations, above what is written, and not at all required by the sacred text: cf. my Note, vs. 26.

ADAM CLARKE

19. The foundations of the wall. Does not this mean the foundations or "thresholds" of the gates? The gates represented the twelve tribes, v. 12; and these foundations or thresholds, the twelve apostles, v. 14. There was no entrance into the city but through those gates, and none through the gates but over these thresholds. The first foundation was jasper. A stone very hard, some species of which are of a sea-green color; but it is generally a bright reddish brown. The second, sapphire. This is a stone of a fine blue color, next in hardness to the diamond. The third, a chalcedony. A genus of the semi-pellucid gems. The fourth, an emerald. This is of a bright green color without any mixture, and is one of the most beautiful of all the gems.

20. The fifth, sardonyx. The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind; it is of a dark horny color, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red. The sixth, sardius. The sardius is a precious stone of a blood-red color. The seventh, chrysolite. The gold stone. It is of a dusky green with a cast of yellow. It is a species of the topaz. The eighth, beryl. This is a pellucid gem of a bluish green color. The ninth, a topaz. A pale, dead green, with a mixture of yellow. It is considered by the mineralogists as a variety of the sapphire. The tenth, a chrysoprasus. A variety of the chrysolite, called by some a yellowish green and cloudy topaz. The eleventh, a jacinth. A precious stone of a dead red color, with a mixture of yellow. The twelfth, an amethyst. A gem generally of a purple or violet color, composed of a strong blue and deep red. These stones are nearly the same with those on the breastplate of the high priest, Exod. xxviii. 17 ff., and probably were intended to express the meaning of the Hebrew words there used.

21. The twelve gates were twelve pearls. This must be merely figurative, for it is out of all the order of nature to produce a pearl large enough to make a gate to such an immense city.

22. I saw no temple. There was no need of a temple where God and the Lamb were manifestly present.

23. No need of the sun. This is also one of the traditions of the ancient Jews, that "in the world to come the Israelites shall have no need of the sun by day, nor the moon by night" (Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 7, 3). God's light shines in this city, and in the Lamb that light is concentrated, and from Him everywhere diffused.

24. The nations of them which are saved. This is an allusion to the promise that the Gentiles should bring their riches, glory, and excellence to the Temple at Jerusalem, after it should be rebuilt.

25. The gates of it shall not be shut at all. The Christian Church shall ever stand open to receive sinners of all sorts, degrees, and nations. There shall be no night there. No more idolatry, no intellectual darkness; the Scriptures shall be everywhere read, the pure Word everywhere preached, and the Spirit of God shall shine and work in every heart.

26. The glory and honour of the nations into it. Still alluding to the declarations of the prophets that the Gentiles would be led to contribute to the riches and glory of the Temple by their gifts.

27. There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth. See Isa. xxxv. 8; lii. 1. Neither an impure person—he who turns the grace of God into lasciviousness, nor a liar—he that holds and propagates false doctrines.

CHAPTER 22

Verses 1-5

The heavenly state is here described as a paradise. A paradise in a city, or a whole city in a paradise! In the first paradise there were only two persons to behold the beauty of it; but in this second paradise whole cities and nations shall find abundant delight and satisfaction.

I. The river of paradise. Its fountain-head—the throne of God and the Lamb. All our springs of

VSS. 1-21. THE RIVER OF LIFE: THE TREE OF LIFE: THE OTHER BLESSEDNESSES OF THE REDEEMED. JOHN FORBIDDEN TO WORSHIP THE ANGEL. NEARNESS OF CHRIST'S COMING TO FIX MAN'S ETERNAL STATE. TESTIMONY OF JESUS, HIS SPIRIT, AND THE BRIDE, ANY ADDITION TO WHICH, OR SUBTRACTION FROM WHICH, SHALL BE ETERNALLY PUNISHED. CLOSING BENEDICTION. 1. pure—A, B, Vulgate, and HILARY 22, omit. water of life—infinitely superior to the typical waters in the first Paradise (Gen. 2: 10-14); and even superior to those figurative ones in the millennial Jerusalem (Ezek. 47:1, 12; Zech. 14:8), as the matured fruit is superior to the flower. The millennial waters represent full Gospel grace;

CHAPTER 22

1. Pure river of water of life. This is evidently a reference to the garden of paradise, and the river by which it was watered; and there is also a reference to the account, Ezek. xlvii. 7-12. Water of life, as we have seen before, generally signifies spring or running water; here it may signify incessant communications of happiness proceeding from God.

MATTHEW HENRY

grace, comfort, and glory, are in God; and all our streams from him are through the Lamb. Its quality —pure and clear as crystal. All the streams of earthly comfort are muddy; but these are clear, giving life, to those who drink of them.

II. The tree of life, in this paradise. Such a tree there was in the earthly paradise, Gen. ii. 9. This far excels it. The situation of it—in the midst of the street, and on either side the river. This tree of life is fed by the pure waters of the river that comes from the throne of God.

The fruitfulness of this tree. It brings forth many sorts of fruit—twelve sorts. It brings forth fruit at all times—yields its fruit every month. There is always fruit upon it.

The fruit is not only pleasant, but wholesome. The presence of God in heaven is the health and happiness of the saints.

III. The perfect freedom of this paradise from everything that is evil (v. 3). No serpent there, as there was in the earthly paradise. The devil has nothing to do there.

IV. The supreme felicity of this paradisaical state. There the saints shall see the face of God. God will own them, as having his seal and name on their foreheads.

They shall reign with him for ever. All this shall be with perfect knowledge and joy, walking in the light of the Lord; and this not for a time, but for ever and ever.

Verses 6–19

We have here a solemn ratification of the contents of this book. 1. This is confirmed by the name and nature of that God who gave out these discoveries: he is the Lord God, faithful and true.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

these waters of new Jerusalem represent Gospel glory perfected. Their continuous flow from God, the Fountain of life, symbolizes the uninterrupted continuance of life derived by the saints, ever fresh, from Him: life in fulness of joy, as well as perpetual vitality. Like pure crystal, it is free from every taint: cf. ch. 4:6, "before the throne a sea of glass, like crystal." clear—Greek, "bright." 2. street of it—i.e., of the city. on either side of the river—ALFORD translates, "In the midst of the street of it (the city) and of the river, on one side and on the other" (for the second Greek, enteuthen, A, B, and Syriac read, ekeithen: the sense is the same; cf. Greek, John 19: 18); thus the trees were on each side in the middle of the space between the street and the river. But from Ezekiel 47:7, I prefer English Version. The antitype exceeds the type: in the first Paradise was only one tree of life; now there are "very many trees at the bank of the river, on the one side and on the other." To make good sense, supposing there to be but one tree, we should either, as MEDE, suppose that the Greek for street is a plain washed on both sides by the river (as the first Paradise was washed on one side by the Tigris, on the other by the Euphrates), and that in the midst of the plain, which itself is in the midst of the river's branches, stood the tree: in which case we may translate, "In the midst of the street (plain) itself, and of the river (having two branches flowing) on this and on that side, was there the tree of life." Or else with DURHAM suppose, the tree was in the midst of the river, and extending its branches to both banks. But cf. Ezekiel 47:12, the millennial type of the final Paradise; which shows that there are several trees of the one kind, all termed "the tree of life." Death reigns now because of sin; even in the millennial earth sin, and therefore death, though much limited, shall not altogether cease. But in the final and heavenly city on earth, sin and death shall utterly cease. yielded her fruit every month—Greek, "according to each month"; each month had its own proper fruit, just as different seasons are now marked by their own productions; only that then, unlike now, there shall be no season without its fruit, and there shall be an endless variety, answering to twelve, the number symbolical of the world-wide Church (cf. Notes, ch. 12:1; 21:14).

leaves . . . for . . . healing—(Ezek. 47:9, 12). The leaves shall be the health-giving preventive securing the redeemed against, not healing them of, sicknesses, while "the fruit shall be for meat." In the millennium described in Ezekiel 47 and ch. 20, the Church shall give the Gospel-tree to the nations outside Israel and the Church, and so shall heal their spiritual malady; but in the final and perfect new Jerusalem here described, the state of all is eternally fixed, and no saving process goes on any longer (cf. vs. 11). 3. no more curse—of which the earnest shall be given in the millennium (Zech. 14:11). God can only dwell where the curse and its cause, the cursed thing sin (Josh. 7:12), are removed. So there follows rightly, "But the throne of God and of the Lamb (who redeemed us from the curse, Gal. 3:10, 13) shall be in it." Cf. in the millennium, Ezekiel 48:35. serve him—with worship (ch. 7:15). 4. see his face—revealed in divine glory, in Christ Jesus. They shall see and know Him with intuitive knowledge of Him, even as they are known by Him (I Cor. 13:9-12), and face to face. Cf. I Tim. 6:16, with John 14:9. God the Father can only be seen in Christ. in—Greek, "on their foreheads." Not only shall they personally and in secret (ch. 3:17) know their sonship, but they shall be known as sons of God to all the citizens of the new Jerusalem, so that the free flow of mutual love among the members of Christ's family will not be checked by suspicion as here. 5. there—so ANDREAS. But A, B, Vulgate, and Syriac read, "(there shall be no night) any longer"; Greek, eti, for ekei. they need—A, Vulgate, and Coptic read the future, "they shall not have need." B reads, "(and there shall be) no need." candle—Greek, "lamp." A, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic insert "light (of a candle, or lamp)." B omits it. of the sun—so A. But B omits it. giveth . . . light—"illumines." So Vulgate and Syriac. But A reads, "shall give light." them—so B and ANDREAS. But A reads, "upon them." reign—with a glory probably transcending that of their reign in heaven with Christ over the millennial nations in the flesh described in ch. 20:4, 6; that reign was but for a limited time, "a thousand years"; this final reign is "unto the ages of the ages." 6. These sayings are true—thrice repeated (ch. 19:9; 21:5). For we are slow to believe that God is as good as He is. The news seems to us, habituated

2. In the midst of the street of it. That is, of the city which was described in the preceding chapter. The tree of life. An allusion to Gen. ii. 9. The account in Ezekiel is this: "And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade . . . it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months . . . and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine," chap. xlvii. 12.

Twelve manner of fruits. "Twelve fruits"; that is, fruit twelve times in the year, as is immediately explained, yielded her fruit every month. As this was a great and spacious city, one fountain was not sufficient to provide water for it; therefore a river is mentioned, a great river, by which it was sufficiently watered. Some think that by this tree of life the gospel is indicated; the twelve . . . fruits are the twelve apostles; and the leaves are gospel doctrines by which nations—the Gentiles—are healed of the disease of sin. But this seems to be a fanciful interpretation.

3. No more curse. Instead of curse the best MSS., versions, etc., read "cursed person." As there shall be no more sinning against God, so there shall be no more curse of God upon the people; for they shall all be His servants, and serve him. Our first parents came under the curse by sinning against their Maker in paradise. These shall never apostatize; therefore neither they nor the earth shall be cursed.

4. See his face. Enjoy what is called the beatific vision; and they shall exhibit the fullest evidence that they belong entirely to Him, for his name shall be written on their foreheads.

5. There shall be no night there. See the twenty-third and twenty-fifth verses of the preceding chapter.

6. These sayings are faithful and true. See the preceding chapter, v. 5. From this verse to the end of the chapter is reckoned the epilogue of this book. (1) The angel affirms the truth

MATTHEW HENRY

2. By the messengers he chose. The holy angels showed them to holy men of God.

3. They will soon be confirmed by their accomplishment. Christ will make haste, he will come quickly. 4. By the integrity of that angel who had been the apostle's guide and interpreter in these visions.

5. By the order given to leave the book of the prophecy open, to be perused by all. He does not speak in secret.

6. By the effect this book will have upon men; those that are filthy and unjust will take occasion thence to be more so, but it will further sanctify those that are upright with God.

7. It will be Christ's rule of judgment at the great day; he will dispense rewards and punishments to men according as their works agree or disagree with the word of God. 8. It is the word of him who is the author, finisher, and rewarder of the faith and holiness of his people, v. 13, 14. He is the first and the last.

He will by this word give to his people a right to the tree of life, and an entrance into heaven.

9. It condemns and excludes from heaven all wicked persons, and particularly those that love and make lies (v. 15).

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, BROWN

as we are to the misery of this fallen world, too good to be true [NANGLE]. They are no dreams of a visionary, but the realities of God's sure word. holy—so ANDREAS. But A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, ("the Lord God of the) spirits (of the prophets.)" The Lord God who with His Spirit inspired their spirits so as to be able to prophesy. There is but one Spirit, but individual prophets, according to the measure given them [I Cor. 12: 4-11], had their own spirits [BENGEL] (I Pet. 1:11; II Peter 1:21). be done—Greek, "come to pass." 7. "And" is omitted in Coptic and ANDREAS with English Version, but is inserted by A, B, Vulgate and Syriac. blessed—(ch. 1:3). 8. Both here and in ch. 19:9, 10, the apostle's falling at the feet of the angel is preceded by a glorious promise to the Church, accompanied with the assurance, that "These are the true sayings of God," and that those are "blessed" who keep them. Rapturous emotion, gratitude, and adoration, at the prospect of the Church's future glory transport him out of himself, so as all but to fall into an unjustifiable act; contrast his opposite feeling at the prospect of the Church's deep fall [AUBERLEN], ch. 17:6, where cf.the Note, and on ch. 19:9, 10. 9. Lit., "See not"; the abruptness of the phrase marking the angel's abhorrence of the thought of his being worshipped however indirectly. Contrast the fallen angel's temptation to Jesus, "Fall down and worship me" (Matt. 4:9). for—A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, ANDREAS, and CYPRIAN omit "for"; which accords with the abrupt earnestness of the angel's prohibition of an act derogatory to God. and of—"and (the fellow servant) of thy brethren." 10. Seal not—But in Daniel 12:4, 9 (cf. 8:26), the command is, "Seal the book," for the vision shall be "for many days." The fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy was distant, that of John's prophecy is near. The New Testament is the time of the end and fulfilment. The Gentile Church, for which John wrote his Revelation, needs more to be impressed with the shortness of the period, as it is inclined, owing to its Gentile origin, to conform to the world and forget the coming of the Lord.

11. unjust—"unrighteous"; in relation to one's fellow men; opposed to "righteous," or "just" (as the Greek may be translated) below. More literally, "he that doeth unjustly, let him do unjustly still." filthy—in relation to one's own soul as unclean before God; opposed to holy," consecrated to God as pure.

The solemn lesson derivable from this verse is, Be converted now in the short time left (vs. 10, end) before "I come" (vss. 7, 12), or else you must remain unconverted for ever; sin in the eternal world will be left to its own natural consequences; holiness in germ will there develop itself into perfect holiness, which is happiness. 12. And—in none of our MSS. But A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and CYPRIAN omit it. behold, I come quickly—(Cf. vs. 7). my reward is with me—(Isa. 40:10; 62:11). to give—Greek, "to render." every man—Greek, "to each." shall be—so B in MAI. But B in TISCHENDORF, and A, Syriac, read, "is." 13. I am Alpha—Greek, " . . . the Alpha and the Omega." A, B, Vulgate, Syriac, ORIGEN, and CYPRIAN transpose thus, "the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End." ANDREAS supports English Version. Cf. with these divine titles assumed here by the Lord Jesus, ch. 1:8, 17; 21:6. At the winding up of the whole scheme of revelation He announces Himself as the One before whom and after whom there is no God. 14. do his commandments—so B, Syriac, Coptic, and CYPRIAN. But A, ℵ, and Vulgate read, (Blessed are they that) "wash their robes," viz., in the blood of the Lamb (cf. ch. 7:14). This reading takes away the pretext for the notion of salvation by works. But even English Version reading is quite compatible with salvation by grace; for God's first and grand Gospel "commandment" is to believe on Jesus. Thus our "right" to (Greek, "privilege" or "lawful authority over") the tree of life is due not to our doings, but to what He has done for us. The right, or privilege, is founded, not on our merits, but on God's grace. through—Greek, "by the gates." 15. But—so Coptic. But A, B, HIPPOLYTUS, ANDREAS, and CYPRIAN omit. dogs—Greek, "the dogs"; the impure, filthy (vs. 11; cf. Phil. 3:2). maketh—including also "whosoever practiceth a lie" [W. KELLY]. 16. mine angel—for Jesus is Lord of the angels. unto you—ministers and people in the seven representative churches, and, through you, to testify to Christians of all times and places. root . . . offspring of David—appropriate title here where assuring His Church of "the sure mercies of David," secured to Israel first, and through Israel to the Gentiles. Root of David, as of all that had been spoken, vv. 6-11. (2) Jesus Christ confirms what has been affirmed, and pledges himself for the fulfilment of all the prophecies contained in it, vv. 12-17. (3) John cautions his readers against adding or diminishing, and concludes with the apostolical blessing, vv. 18-21.

8. I fell down to worship. I prostrated myself before him as before a superior being, to express my gratitude, and give him thanks for the communications he had made. See on chap. xix. 10.

10. Seal not the sayings. Do not lay them up for future generations; they concern the present times; "They must shortly come to pass," for the time is at hand. See above, v. 6. What concerned the Jews was certainly at hand.

11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still. The time of fulfilment will come so suddenly that there will be but little space for repentance and amendment. What is done must be done instantly; and let him that is holy persevere, and hold fast what he has received.

12. Behold, I come quickly. I come to establish My cause, comfort and support My followers, and punish the wicked.

13. I am Alpha and Omega. See on chap. i. 8, 18.

14. Blessed are they that do his commandments. They are happy who are obedient. That they may have right to the tree of life. The original is much more expressive, "That they may have authority over the tree of life"; an authority founded on right, this right founded on obedience to the commandments of God, and that obedience produced by the grace of God working in them.

15. Without are dogs. All those who are uncircumcised in heart. The Jews call all the uncircumcised dogs. "Who is a dog? Ans. He who is not circumcised" (Pirkey Elieser, chap. 29).

16. I Jesus. The Maker, the Redeemer, and Judge of all men. Have sent mine angel. An especial messenger from heaven. I am the root and the offspring of David. Christ is the root of David as to His divine nature, for from that all the human race sprang. And He is the offspring of David as to His human nature, for that He took of the stock of David.

MATTHEW HENRY

10. It is confirmed by the testimony of Jesus, which is the Spirit of prophecy. He is the fountain of all light, the bright and the morning star, and has given to his churches this morning light of prophecy, to assure them of the light of that perfect day which is approaching.

11. It is confirmed by an open invitation to all to come and partake of the streams of the water of life; these are tendered to all who feel in their souls a thirst which nothing in this world can quench. 12. It is confirmed by the joint testimony of the Spirit of God, and that gracious Spirit that is in all the true members of the church of God; the Spirit and the bride.

13. It is confirmed by a most solemn sanction, v. 18, 19. This sanction is like a flaming sword, to guard the canon of the scripture from profane hands.

We have now come to the conclusion of the whole.

I. Christ's farewell to his church. Behold, I come quickly. As when he ascended into heaven, after his resurrection, he parted with a promise of his gracious presence, so here he parts with a promise of a speedy return. The vision is for an appointed time, and will not tarry. He will come quickly.

II. The church's hearty echo to Christ's promise. Her firm belief of it: Amen, so it is, so it shall be. Her earnest desire of it: Even so, come, Lord Jesus. We should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us. This is the language of the church of the first-born, and we should join with them. What comes from heaven in a promise should be sent back to heaven in a prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus. Finish thy great design, and fulfil all that word in which thou hast caused thy people to hope."

III. The apostolical benediction, which closes the whole: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen. Nothing should be more desired by us than that the grace of Christ may be with us in this world, to prepare us for the glory of Christ in the other world. To this most comprehensive prayer we should all add our hearty Amen, most earnestly thirsting after greater measures of the gracious influences of the blessed Jesus in our souls, and his gracious presence with us, till glory has perfected all his grace towards us.

being Jehovah; the offspring of David as man. David's Lord, yet David's son (Matt. 22:42-45). the morning star—that ushered in the day of grace in the beginning of this dispensation and that shall usher in the everlasting day of glory at its close. 17. Reply of the spiritual Church and John to Christ's words (vss. 7, 12, 16). the Spirit—in the churches and in the prophets. the bride—not here called "wife," as that title applies to her only when the full number constituting the Church shall have been completed. The invitation, "Come," only holds good while the Church is still but an affianced Bride, and not the actually wedded wife. However, "Come" may rather be the prayer of the Spirit in the Church and in believers in reply to Christ's "I come quickly," crying, Even so, "Come" (vss. 7, 12); vs. 20 confirms this view. The whole question of your salvation hinges on this, that you be able to hear with joy Christ's announcement, "I come," and to reply, "Come" [BENGEL]. Come to fully glorify Thy Bride. let him that heareth—i.e., let him that heareth the Spirit and Bride saying to the Lord Jesus, "Come," join the Bride as a true believer, become part of her, and so say with her to Jesus, "Come." On "heareth" means "obeyeth"; for until one has obeyed the Gospel call, he cannot pray to Jesus "Come"; so "hear" is used, ch. 1:3; John 10:16. let him that is athirst come—As the Bride, the Church, prays to Jesus, "Come," so she urges all whosoever thirst for participation in the full manifestation of redemption-glory at His coming to us, to COME in the meantime and drink of the living waters, which are the earnest of "the water of life pure as crystal . . . out of the throne of God of the Lamb" (vs. 1) in the regenerated heaven and earth. And—so Syriac. But A, B, Vulgate, and Coptic omit "and." whosoever will—i.e., is willing and desirous. There is a descending climax; Let him that heareth effectually and savingly Christ's voice, pray individually, as the Bride, the Church, does collectively, "Come, Lord Jesus" (vs. 20). Let him who, though not yet having actually heard unto salvation, and so not yet able to join in the prayer, "Lord Jesus, come, "still thirsts for it, come to Christ. Whosoever is even willing, though his desires do not yet amount to positive thirsting, let him take the water of life freely, i.e., gratuitously. 18. For—None of our MSS. have this. A, B, Vulgate,, and ANDREAS read, "I" emphatic in the Greek. "I testify." unto these things—A, B, and ANDREAS read, "unto them." add . . . add—just retribution in kind. 19. book—None of our MSS. read this. A, B, ℵ, Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic read, "(take away his part, i.e., portion) from the tree of life," i.e., shall deprive him of participation in the tree of life. and from the things—so Vulgate. But A, B, ℵ, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS omit "and"; then "which are written in this book" will refer to "the holy city and the tree of life." As in the beginning of this book (ch. 1:3) a blessing was promised to the devout, obedient student of it, so now at its close a curse is denounced against those who add to, or take from, it. 20. Amen. Even so, come—The Song of Solomon (8:14) closes with the same yearning prayer for Christ's coming. A, B, and ℵ omit "Even so," Greek, nai: then translate for Amen, "So be it, come, Lord Jesus"; joining the "Amen," or "So be it," not with Christ's saying (for He calls Himself the "Amen" at the beginning of sentences, rather than puts it as a confirmation at the end), but with John's reply. Christ's "I come," and John's "Come," are almost coincident in time; so truly does the believer reflect the mind of his Lord. 21. our—so Vulgate, Syriac, and Coptic. But A, B, and ℵ omit. Christ—so B, Vulgate, Syriac, Coptic, and ANDREAS. But A and ℵ omit. with you all—so none of our MSS. B has, "with all the saints." A and Vulgate have, "with all." ℵ has, "with the saints." This closing benediction, Paul's mark in his Epistles, was after Paul's death taken up by John. The Old Testament ended with a "curse" in connection with the law; the New Testament ends with a blessing in union with the Lord Jesus. Amen—so B, ℵ, and ANDREAS. A and Vulgate Fuldensis omit it.

May the Blessed Lord who has caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning, bless this humble effort to make Scripture expound itself, and make it an instrument towards the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints, to the glory of His great name and the hastening of His kingdom! Amen.

ADAM CLARKE

The bright and morning star. I am splendor and glory to My kingdom; as the morning star ushers in the sun, so shall I usher in the unclouded and eternal glories of the everlasting Kingdom.

17. The Spirit and the bride. All the prophets and all the apostles; the Church of God under the Old Testament, and the Church of Christ under the New. Say, Come. Invite men to Jesus, that by Him they may be saved and prepared for this Kingdom.

Let him that heareth. Let all who are privileged with reading and hearing the Word of God join in the general invitation to sinners.

Him that is athirst. He who feels his need of salvation and is longing to drink of the living fountain.

And whosoever will. No soul is excluded: Jesus died for every man; every man may be saved; therefore let him who wills, who wishes for salvation, come and take the water of life freely—without money or price!

18. If any man shall add. Shall give any other meaning to these prophecies, or any other application of them, than God intends, he, though not originally intended, shall have the plagues threatened in this book for his portion.

19. If any man shall take away. If any man shall lessen this meaning, curtail the sense, explain away the spirit and design, of these prophecies, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, etc. Thus Jesus Christ warns all those who consider this book to beware of indulging their own conjectures concerning it. I confess that this warning has its own powerful influence upon my mind, and has prevented me from indulging my own conjectures concerning its meaning, or of adopting the conjectures of others. These visions and threatenings are too delicate and awful a subject to trifle with, or even to treat in the most solemn manner, where the meaning is obscure. I must leave these things to time and event, the surest interpreters. This is termed a revelation, but it is a revelation of symbols; an exhibition of enigmas, to which no particular solution is given, and to which God alone can give the solution.

20. Surely I come quickly. This may be truly said to every person in every age; Jesus, the Judge, is at the door! Even so, come, Lord Jesus. The wish and desire of the suffering Church, and of all the followers of God, who are longing for the coming of His kingdom.

21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. May the favor and powerful influence of Jesus Christ be with you all; you of the seven churches, and the whole Church of Christ in every part of the earth, and through all the periods of time.
