Preface

The Bible Knowledge Commentary is an exposition of the Scriptures written and edited solely by Dallas Seminary faculty members. It is designed for pastors, laypersons, Bible teachers, serious Bible students, and others who want a comprehensive but brief and reliable commentary on the entire Bible.

Why another Bible commentary when so many commentaries are already available? Several features make this volume a distinctive Bible study tool.

First, The Bible Knowledge Commentary is written by faculty members of one school—Dallas Theological Seminary. This volume interprets the Scriptures consistently from the grammatical-historical approach and from the pretribulational, premillennial perspective, for which Dallas Seminary is well known. At the same time, the authors often present various views of passages where differences of opinion exist within evangelical scholarship.

Second, this is the first single-volume commentary to be based on the New International Version of the Holy Bible (1978 ed.). The NIV is widely accepted as a translation that faithfully renders the biblical text into clear modern-day English. The Bible Knowledge Commentary thus becomes immediately useful as a companion to one's personal Bible study.

Third, this commentary has features that not all one-volume commentaries include. (a) In their comments on the biblical text, the writers discuss how the purpose of the book unfolds, how each part fits with the whole and with what precedes and follows it. This helps readers see why the biblical authors chose the material they did as their words were guided by the Holy Spirit's inspiration. (b) Problem passages, puzzling Bible-time customs, and alleged contradictions are carefully considered and discussed. (c) Insights from the latest in conservative biblical scholarship are incorporated in this volume. (d) Many Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek words, important to the understanding of certain passages, are discussed. These words are transliterated for the benefit of readers not proficient in the biblical languages. Yet those who do know these languages will also appreciate these comments. (e) Dozens of maps, charts, and diagrams are included; they are placed conveniently with the Bible passages being discussed, not at the end of the volume. (f) Numerous cross references to related or parallel passages are included with the discussions on many passages.

The material on each Bible book includes an Introduction (discussion of items such as authorship, date, purpose, unity, style, unique features), Outline, Commentary, and Bibliography. In the Commentary section, summaries of entire sections of the text are given, followed by detailed comments on the passage verse by verse and often phrase by phrase. All words quoted from the NIV appear in boldface type, as do the verse numbers at the beginning of paragraphs. The Bibliography entries, suggested for further study, are not all endorsed in their entirety by the authors and editors. The writers and editors have listed both works they have consulted and others which would be useful to readers.

Personal pronouns referring to Deity are capitalized, which often helps make it clear that the commentator is writing about a Member of the Trinity. The word LORD, as in the NIV, is the English translation of the Hebrew YHWH, often rendered Yahweh in English. Lord translates 'Ădōnāy. When the two names stand together as a compound name of God, they are rendered "Sovereign LORD," as in the NIV.

The New Testament Consulting Editor, Dr. Stanley D. Toussaint, has added to the quality of this commentary by reading the manuscripts and offering helpful suggestions. His work is greatly appreciated. We also express thanks to Lloyd Cory, Victor Books Reference Editor, to Barbara Williams, whose careful editing enhanced the material appreciably, to hardworking Production Coordinator Myrna Jean Hasse, and to the many manuscript typists at Scripture Press and Dallas Theological Seminary for their diligence.

This volume is an exposition of the Bible, an explanation of the text of Scripture, based on careful exegesis. It is not primarily a devotional commentary, or an exegetical work giving details of lexicology, grammar, and syntax with extensive discussions of critical matters pertaining to textual and background data. May this commentary deepen your insight into the Scriptures, as you seek to have "the eyes of your heart . . . enlightened" (Eph. 1:18) by the teaching ministry of the Holy Spirit.

This book is designed to enrich your understanding and appreciation of the Scriptures, God's inspired, inerrant Word, and to motivate you "not merely [to] listen to the Word" but also to "do what it says" (James 1:22) and "also . . . to teach others" (2 Tim. 2:2).

III. Visions

Revelation

MATTHEW

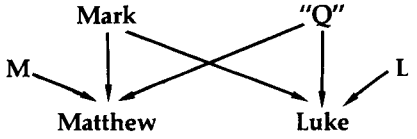
Louis A. Barbieri, Jr.

INTRODUCTION

It is fitting that the New Testament begins with four accounts of the life of Jesus Christ. These accounts present the "good news" concerning the Son of God, telling of His life on earth and His death on the cross for the sin of mankind. The first three Gospels take a similar view of the facts surrounding this Person, while the Fourth Gospel is unique in its presentation. Because of this common view of Jesus Christ the first three New Testament books are called the Synoptic Gospels.

The Synoptic Problem

1. The problem stated. "Synoptic" comes from the Greek adjective synoptikos, which is from two words syn and opsesthai, "to see with or together." While Matthew, Mark, and Luke have distinctive purposes, they nevertheless view the life of Jesus Christ in a common way. However, some differences in the Gospel narratives must also be accounted for. These similarities and differences raise the question of the sources of the Gospels, thus positing a "Synoptic problem."



Most conservative scholars acknowledge that the Gospel writers made use of various sources. For example, the genealogical records of both Matthew and Luke may have come from temple records or oral tradition. Luke stated at the beginning of his Gospel (Luke 1:1) that many had written down the facts concerning the Lord Jesus. This implies that Luke could have drawn on a number of written accounts. That the individual writers may have used different sources for their material is a valid conclusion. However, this is not what critical scholars mean when they talk about sources. Most critical scholars view the "sources" as extensive writings which were joined together by skilled editors to produce their own accounts. This conclusion has led to several explanations of these sources.

a. The Urevangelium theory. Some scholars conclude that an original Gospel (known in German as the Urevangelium) now lost, was the source for the biblical editors as they compiled their accounts. The major objection to this view is that no trace of such a writing has ever been discovered. No scholar can point to a document as the possible Urevangelium. Also, while such an explanation would account for the similarities, it in no way explains the differences in the Gospel stories of the same events.

b. The oral tradition theory. Some have concluded that the basic sources for the Gospels came from oral tradition, an oral testimony that developed around Jesus Christ. Normally such a testimony involved four steps: (1) The event occurred. (2) The event was told and repeated often enough so that it became widely known. (3) The event became fixed so that it was then told exactly the same way. (4) The event was written down in an account. An objection to this view is similar to the Urevangelium theory: this view accounts for similarities in the stories but it fails to account for the differences. Furthermore, why would an eyewitness of the events limit himself to stories from oral tradition?

c. The document theory. A popular view today is that the biblical editors made use of various written sources to compile their accounts. This viewpoint usually posits the following: (1) The first written account was the Gospel of Mark. A major reason for this position is that only 7 percent of the Gospel of Mark is unique, as 93 percent of Mark can be found in Matthew and Luke. (2) In addition to Mark a second written document existed which basically contained discourse material. This document is known as "Q", an abbreviated form of the German word for source, Quelle. The approximately 200 verses common to Matthew and Luke which are not found in Mark must have come from "Q". (3) The editors used at least two other sources. One source reflects verses in Matthew not found in either Mark or Luke, and the other source reflects verses in Luke not found in either Matthew or Mark. This theory with its lines of dependence could be charted in this way:

This theory has several problems. First, it has difficulty with tradition. Conservative scholars have generally held that Matthew was the first of the written Gospels. While not all conservatives agree, this tradition does have some weight behind it and should not be shrugged off as "mere tradition" as sometimes tradition is correct. Second, this theory cannot account for the fact that occasionally Mark made a comment that neither Matthew nor Luke included. Mark wrote that the rooster crowed a second time (Mark 14:72), but neither Matthew nor Luke included that fact. Third, if Mark were the first Gospel, written after Peter's death around A.D. 67–68, then Matthew and Luke would probably have been written later after the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. One would then expect that destruction to have been mentioned as a fitting climax to the Lord's words in Matthew 24–25 or Luke's statement in 21:20-24; however, neither mentioned the event. Fourth, the greatest problem is the whole speculation about the existence of "Q". If such a document existed and were thought of so highly by Matthew and Luke that they quoted extensively from it, why did not the church also regard it highly and preserve it?

d. The form critical theory. This widely held view assumes the document theory, but takes it a step further. When the Gospel accounts were compiled, a multiplicity of documents existed, not simply four documents (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and "Q"). Interpreters today seek to discover and classify these documents, called "forms," and also to get behind the forms and discover exactly what the first-century church was seeking to communicate through them. The literal facts communicated in the forms are not sufficient in themselves; the truth is discovered by going behind the literal story. The facts in the stories are considered "myths" which the church built up around Jesus Christ. By scraping away the myths or "demythologizing," kernels of truth concerning Jesus are discovered.

While this theory is widely held, it has some serious problems. It is virtually impossible to classify the "forms" into exact categories. It is doubtful if any two interpreters would agree on the classifications. Furthermore, this view says that the first-century church caused these stories to be told the way they were, but the view never adequately explains what caused the church. In other words, this view has purposefully overlooked the living witness of Jesus Christ and the true impact His life and death made on first-century believers.

2. A proposed solution. The similarities and differences in the Gospel accounts can be solved through a composite viewpoint. First, the Gospel writers of the first century had extensive personal knowledge of much of the material they recorded. Matthew and John were disciples of Jesus Christ who spent a considerable amount of time with the Lord. Mark's account may be the reflections of Simon Peter near the end of his life, and Luke could have learned many facts through his relationship with Paul and others. These facts would have been used in writing the four accounts.

Second, oral tradition was involved. For example, Acts 20:35 refers to a saying of Christ not recorded in the Gospels. Paul in 1 Corinthians 7:10 gave a quotation from the Lord; when Paul wrote this, possibly none of the Gospels had yet been written. Third, written documents told some of the stories about Jesus Christ. Luke acknowledged this fact as he began his Gospel (Luke 1:1-4). None of these facts, however, gives the dynamic needed to record an inspired account of Jesus Christ's life that is free from all error. Fourth, another element must be included to help solve the Synoptic problem, namely, the dynamic of the Holy Spirit's ministry of inspiration as the Gospel writers recorded the accounts. The Lord promised the disciples that the Holy Spirit would teach them all things and remind them of all Jesus had told them (John 14:26). This dynamic guarantees accuracy, whether the author was making use of his memory, passed-down oral traditions, or written accounts available to him. Whatever the source, the direction of the Holy Spirit assured an accurate text. The better one understands the various stories about the Lord, the clearer the "difficulties" become, for there was a divine superintendence over the authors regardless of the sources they used.

The Authorship of the First Gospel. When one deals with the question of who wrote a particular Bible book, the evidence is normally twofold: evidence outside the book ("external evidence") and evidence within the book itself ("internal evidence"). External evidence strongly supports the view that the Apostle Matthew wrote the Gospel that bears his name. Many early church fathers cited Matthew as its author, including Pseudo Barnabas, Clement of Rome, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen. (For further attestation see Norman L. Geisler and William E. Nix, A General Introduction to the Bible. Chicago: Moody Press, 1968, p. 193.) Matthew was certainly not one of the more prominent apostles. One might think the First Gospel would have been written by Peter, James, or John. But the extensive tradition that Matthew wrote it strongly commends him as its author.

Internal evidence also supports the fact that Matthew was the author of the First Gospel. This book has more references to coins than any of the other three Gospels. In fact this Gospel includes three terms for coins that are found nowhere else in the New Testament: "The two-drachma tax" (Matt. 17:24); "a four-drachma coin" (17:27), and "talents" (18:24). Since Matthew's occupation was tax collecting, he had an interest in coins and noted the cost of certain items. The profession of tax collector would necessitate an ability to write and keep records. Matthew obviously had the ability, humanly speaking, to write a book such as the First Gospel.

His Christian humility comes through as well, for Matthew alone continually refers to himself throughout his Gospel as "Matthew the tax collector." But Mark and Luke do not continually use that term of contempt when speaking of Matthew. Also, when Matthew began to follow Jesus, he invited his friends to a "dinner" (Matt. 9:9-10). Luke, however, called the dinner "a great banquet" (Luke 5:29). The omissions from the First Gospel are significant too, for Matthew omitted the Parable of the Pharisee and the Tax Collector (Luke 18:9-14) and the story of Zacchaeus, a tax collector who restored fourfold what he had stolen (Luke 19:1-10). The internal evidence concerning the authorship of the First Gospel points to Matthew as its most likely author.

The Original Language of the First Gospel. While all the extant manuscripts of the First Gospel are in Greek, some suggest that Matthew wrote his Gospel in Aramaic, similar to Hebrew. Five individuals stated, in effect, that Matthew wrote in Aramaic and that translations followed in Greek: Papias (A.D. 80–155), Irenaeus (A.D. 130–202), Origen (A.D. 185–254), Eusebius (fourth century A.D.), and Jerome (sixth century A.D.). However, they may have been referring to a writing by Matthew other than his Gospel account. Papias, for example, said Matthew compiled the sayings (logia) of Jesus. Those "sayings" might have been a second, shorter account of the Lord's words, written in Aramaic and sent to a group of Jews for whom it would have been most meaningful. That writing was later lost, for no such version exists today. The First Gospel, however, was probably penned by Matthew in Greek and has survived until today. Matthew's logia did not survive, but his Gospel did. This was because the latter, part of the biblical canon and thus God's Word, was inspired and preserved by the Spirit of God.

The Date of the First Gospel. Pinpointing the writing of the First Gospel to a specific year is impossible. Various dates for the book have been suggested by conservative scholars. C.I. Scofield in the original Scofield Reference Bible gave A.D. 37 as a possible date. Few scholars give a date after A.D. 70, since Matthew made no reference to the destruction of Jerusalem. Furthermore, Matthew's references to Jerusalem as the "Holy City" (Matt. 4:5; 27:53) imply that it was still in existence.

But some time seems to have elapsed after the events of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. Matthew 27:7-8 refers to a certain custom continuing "to this day," and 28:15 refers to a story being circulated "to this very day." These phrases imply the passing of time, and yet not so much time that the Jewish customs had ceased. Since church tradition has strongly advocated that the Gospel of Matthew was the first Gospel account written, perhaps a date somewhere around A.D. 50 would satisfy all the demands mentioned. It would also be early enough to permit Matthew to be the first Gospel account. (For further discussion and an alternate view [that Mark was the first of the four Gospels] see "Sources" under the Introduction to Mark.)

The Occasion for Writing the First Gospel. Though the precise occasion for the writing of this account is not known, it appears Matthew had at least two reasons for writing. First, he wanted to show unbelieving Jews that Jesus is the Messiah. Matthew had found the Messiah, and he wanted others to come into that same relationship. Second, Matthew wrote to encourage Jewish believers. If indeed Jesus is the Messiah, a horrible thing had occurred. The Jews had crucified their Messiah and King. What would now become of them? Was God through with them? At this point Matthew had a word of encouragement, for though their act of disobedience would bring judgment on that generation of Israelites, God was not through with His people. His promised kingdom would yet be instituted with His people at a future time. In the meantime, however, believers are responsible to communicate a different message of faith in this Messiah as they go into all the world to make disciples among all nations.

Some Outstanding Characteristics of the First Gospel

1. The Book of Matthew places great emphasis on the teaching ministry of Jesus Christ. Of the Gospel accounts Matthew has the largest blocks of discourse material. No other Gospel contains so much of Jesus' teachings. Matthew 5-7 is commonly referred to as the Sermon on the Mount; chapter 10 includes Jesus' instructions to His disciples as they were sent out to minister; chapter 13 presents the parables of the kingdom; in chapter 23 is Jesus' "hot" denunciation of the religious leaders of Israel; and chapters 24-25 are the Olivet Discourse, a detailed explanation of future events relating to Jerusalem and the nation.

2. Some of the material in Matthew is arranged logically rather than chronologically. As examples, the genealogical tables are broken into three equal groups, a large number of miracles are given together, and the opposition to Jesus is given in one section. Matthew's purpose is obviously more thematic than chronological.

3. The First Gospel is filled with Old Testament quotations. Matthew includes approximately 50 direct citations from the Old Testament. In addition about 75 allusions are made to Old Testament events. This is undoubtedly because of the audience for whom the book was intended. Matthew primarily had Jews in mind as he wrote, and they would have been impressed by the many references to Old Testament facts and events. In addition, if this Gospel was written around A.D. 50, not many New Testament books were available for Matthew to have cited. Those books may not have been known to his readers or even to Matthew himself.

4. The First Gospel shows that Jesus Christ is the Messiah of Israel and explains God's kingdom program (Stanley D. Toussaint, Behold the King: A Study of Matthew, pp. 18-20). "If indeed Jesus is Messiah," a Jew would ask, "what has happened to the promised kingdom?" The Old Testament clearly taught that the Messiah would bring in a glorious utopian reign on the earth in which the nation Israel would have a prominent position. Since the nation rejected its true King, what happened to the kingdom? The Book of Matthew includes some "mysteries" about the kingdom, which had not been revealed in the Old Testament. These "mysteries" show that the kingdom has taken a different form in the present Age, but that the promised Davidic kingdom will be instituted at a future time when Jesus Christ returns to earth to establish His rule.

5. The First Gospel has a summary statement in its first verse: "A record of the genealogy of Jesus Christ the Son of David, the Son of Abraham." Why does David's name appear before Abraham's? Would not Abraham, the father of the nation, be more significant to a Jewish mind? Perhaps Matthew listed the name of David first because the King who would rule over the nation was to come through David (2 Sam. 7:12-17). Jesus Christ came with a message for His own nation. But in the plan of God, His message was rejected. Therefore a universal message reaches out to the entire world. The promise of blessings for all the nations of the world came through Abraham and the covenant God made with him (Gen. 12:3). It is significant that Matthew did include Gentiles, such as the Magi from the East (Matt. 2:1-12), the centurion with his great faith (8:5-13), and the Canaanite woman who had greater faith than Christ had seen in all Israel (15:22-28). Also the book concludes with the Great Commission to "go and make disciples of all nations" (28:19).

COMMENTARY

I. Introduction of the King (1:1–4:11)

A. Presentation by ancestry (1:1-17) (Luke 3:23-38)

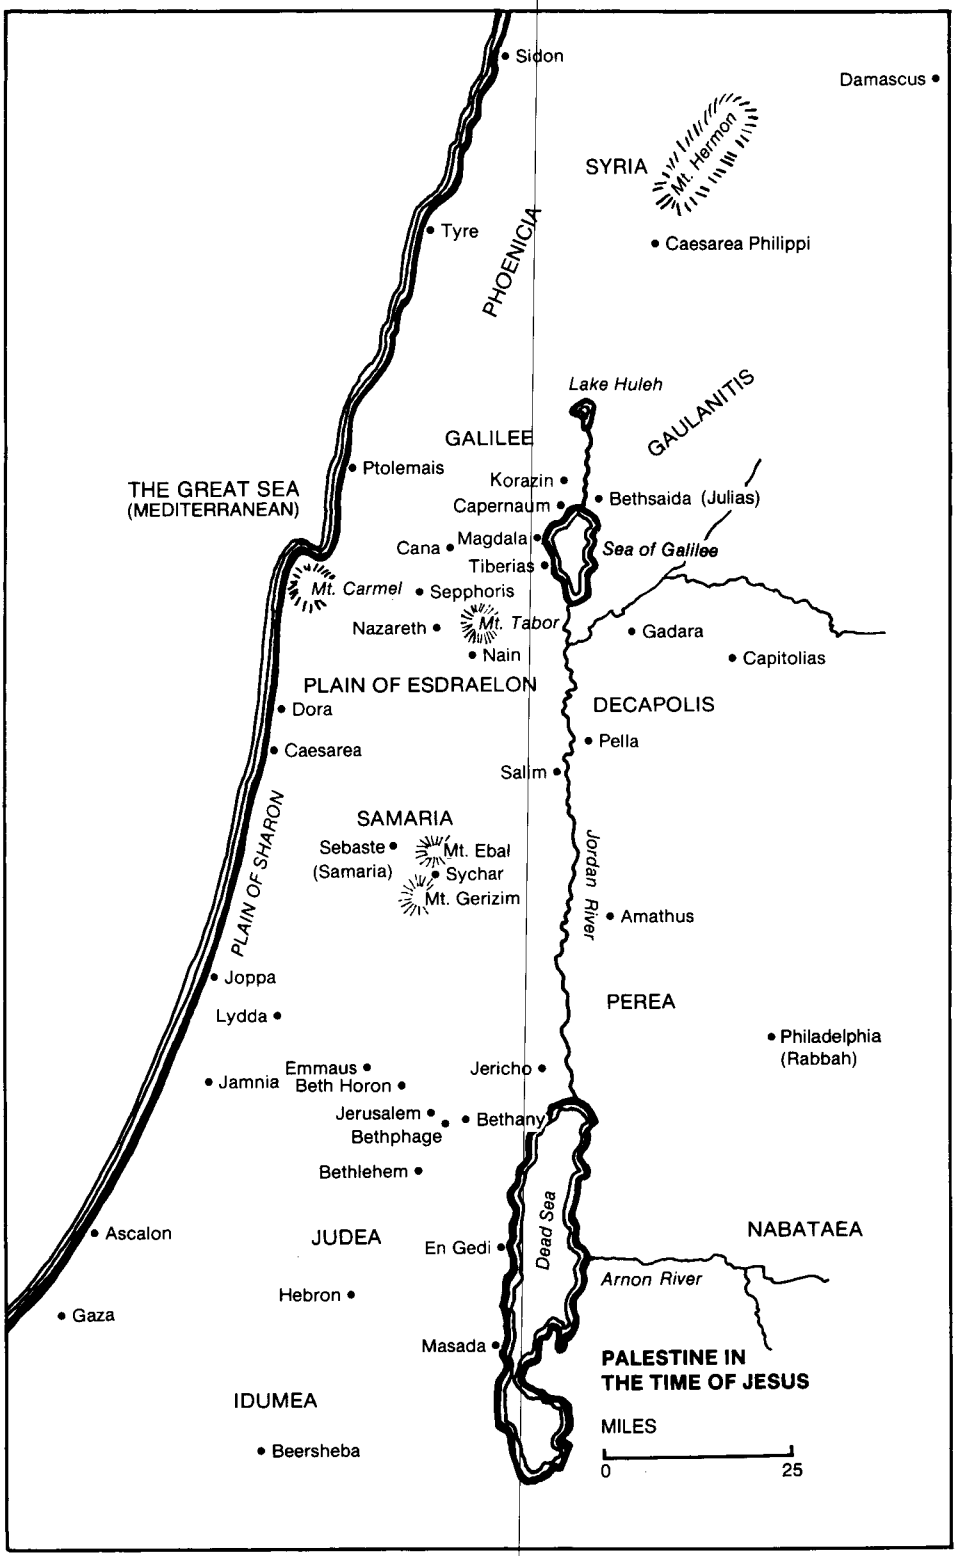
1:1. From the very first words of his Gospel, Matthew recorded his central theme and character. Jesus Christ is the main character in Matthew's presentation, and the opening verse connected Him back to two great covenants in Jewish history: the Davidic (2 Sam. 7) and the Abrahamic (Gen. 12; 15). If Jesus of Nazareth is the fulfillment of these two great covenants, is He related to the rightful line? This is a question the Jews would have asked, so Matthew traced Jesus' lineage in detail.

1:2-17. Matthew gave Jesus' lineage through His legal father, Joseph (v. 16). Thus this genealogy traced Jesus' right to the throne of David, which must come through Solomon and his descendants (v. 6). Of particular interest is the inclusion of Jeconiah (v. 11) of whom Jeremiah said, "Record this man as if childless" (Jer. 22:30). Jeremiah's prophecy related to the actual occupation of the throne and the reception of blessing while on the throne. Though Jeconiah's sons never occupied the throne, the line of rulership did pass through them. If Jesus had been a physical descendant of Jeconiah, He would not have been able to occupy David's throne. Luke's genealogy made it clear that Jesus was a physical descendant of David through another son named Nathan (Luke 3:31). But Joseph, a descendant of Solomon, was Jesus' legal father, so Jesus' right to the throne was traced through Joseph.

Matthew traced Joseph's line from Jeconiah through the latter's son Shealtiel and grandson Zerubbabel (Matt. 1:12). Luke (3:27) also refers to Shealtiel, the father of Zerubbabel, in Mary's line. Does Luke's account, then, mean that Jesus was a physical descendant of Jeconiah, after all? No, because Luke's Shealtiel and Zerubbabel were probably different persons from those two in Matthew. In Luke Shealtiel was the son of Neri, but Matthew's Shealtiel was the son of Jeconiah.

Another interesting fact about Matthew's genealogy is the inclusion of four Old Testament women: Tamar (Matt. 1:3), Rahab (v. 5), Ruth (v. 5), and Solomon's mother (v. 6), Bathsheba. All of these women (as well as most of the men) were questionable in some way. Tamar and Rahab were prostitutes (Gen. 38:24; Josh. 2:1), Ruth was a foreigner, a Moabitess (Ruth 1:4), and Bathsheba committed adultery (2 Sam. 11:2-5). Matthew may have included these women in order to emphasize that God's choices in dealing with people are all of His grace. Perhaps also he included these women in order to put Jewish pride in its place.

When the fifth woman, Mary (Matt. 1:16), was mentioned in the genealogy, an important change occurred. The genealogy consistently repeated, the father of, until it came to Mary. At that point Matthew changed and said of whom was born Jesus. The "of whom" is a feminine relative pronoun (ex hēs), clearly indicating that Jesus was the physical Child of Mary but that Joseph was not His physical father. This miraculous conception and birth are explained in 1:18-25.



Matthew obviously did not list every individual in the genealogy between Abraham and David (vv. 2-6), between David and the Exile (vv. 6-11), and between the Exile and Jesus (vv. 12-16). Instead he listed only 14 generations in each of these time periods (v. 17). Jewish reckoning did not require every name in order to satisfy a genealogy. But why did Matthew select 14 names in each period? Perhaps the best solution is that the name "David" in Hebrew numerology added up to 14. It should be noted that in the period from the Exile to the birth of Jesus (vv. 12-16) 13 new names appeared. Many scholars feel that Jeconiah (v. 12), though repeated from verse 11, provides the 14th name in this final period.

Matthew's genealogy answered the important question a Jew would rightfully ask about anyone who claimed to be King of the Jews. Is He a descendant of David through the rightful line of succession? Matthew answered yes!

further explanation. Matthew's explanation can best be understood in the light of Hebrew marriage customs. Marriages were arranged for individuals by parents, and contracts were negotiated. After this was accomplished, the individuals were considered married and were called husband and wife. They did not, however, begin to live together. Instead, the woman continued to live with her parents and the man with his for one year. The waiting period was to demonstrate the faithfulness of the pledge of purity given concerning the bride. If she was found to be with child in this period, she obviously was not pure, but had been involved in an unfaithful sexual relationship. Therefore the marriage could be annulled. If, however, the one-year waiting period demonstrated the purity of the bride, the husband would then go to the house of the bride's parents and in a grand processional march lead his bride back to his home. There they would begin to live together as husband and wife and consummate their marriage physically. Matthew's story should be read with this background in mind.

Mary and Joseph were in the one-year waiting period when Mary was found to be with child. They had never had sexual intercourse and Mary herself had been faithful (vv. 20, 23). While little is said about Joseph, one can imagine how his heart must have broken. He genuinely loved Mary, and yet the word came that she was pregnant. His love for her was demonstrated by his actions. He chose not to create a public scandal by exposing her condition to the judges at the city gate. Such an act could have resulted in Mary's death by stoning (Deut. 22:23-24). Instead he decided to divorce her quietly.

Then in a dream (cf. Matt. 2:13, 19, 22), an angel told Joseph that Mary's condition was not caused by a man, but through the Holy Spirit (1:20; cf. v. 18). The Child Mary carried in her womb was a unique Child, for He would be a Son whom Joseph should name Jesus for He would save His people from their sins. These words must have brought to Joseph's mind the promises of God to provide salvation through the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31-37). The unnamed angel also told Joseph that this was in keeping with God's eternal plan, for the Prophet Isaiah had declared 700 years before that the virgin will be with Child (Matt. 1:23; Isa. 7:14). While Old Testament scholars dispute whether the Hebrew 'almâh should be rendered "young woman" or "virgin," God clearly intended it here to mean virgin (as implied by the Gr. word parthenos). Mary's miraculous conception fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy, and her Son would truly be Immanuel . . . God with us. In light of this declaration Joseph was not to be afraid to take Mary into his home (Matt. 1:20). There would be misunderstanding in the community and much gossip at the well, but Joseph knew the true story of Mary's pregnancy and God's will for his life.

2. HIS BIRTH (1:24-25)

1:24-25. As soon as Joseph awakened from this dream, he obeyed. He violated all custom by immediately taking Mary into his home rather than waiting till the one-year time period of betrothal had passed. Joseph was probably thinking of what would be best for Mary in her condition. He brought her home and began to care and provide for her. But there was no sexual relationship between them until after the birth of this Child, Jesus. Matthew simply noted the birth of the Child and the fact that He was named Jesus, whereas Luke, the physician (Col. 4:14), recorded several details surrounding the birth (Luke 2:1-7).

3. HIS INFANCY (CHAP. 2)

a. In Bethlehem (2:1-12)

2:1-2. Though not all scholars agree on the timing of the arrival of the Magi from the East, they apparently came some time after the birth of Jesus. Jesus and Mary and Joseph, though still in Bethlehem, were now in a house (v. 11), and Jesus was called a Child (paidion, vv. 9, 11) rather than a newborn Infant (brephos, Luke 2:12).

The exact identity of the Magi is impossible to determine, though several ideas have been suggested. They have been given traditional names and identified as representatives of the three groups of peoples that descended from Noah's sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. More likely they were Gentiles of high position from a country, perhaps Parthia, northeast of Babylon, who were given a special revelation by God of the birth of the King of the Jews. This special revelation may simply have been in the sky, as might be indicated by their title "Magi" (specialists in astronomy) and by the fact they referred to a star which they saw. Or this revelation could have come through some contact with Jewish scholars who had migrated to the East with copies of Old Testament manuscripts. Many feel the Magi's comments reflected a knowledge of Balaam's prophecy concerning the "star" that would "come out of Jacob" (Num. 24:17). Whatever the source, they came to Jerusalem to worship the newborn King of the Jews. (According to tradition three Magi traveled to Bethlehem. But the Bible does not say how many there were.)

2:3-8. It is no surprise that King Herod . . . was disturbed when the Magi came to Jerusalem looking for the One who had been "born King" (v. 2). Herod was not the rightful king from the line of David. In fact he was not even a descendant of Jacob, but was descended from Esau and thus was an Edomite. (He reigned over Palestine from 37 B.C. to 4 B.C. See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5.) This fact caused most of the Jews to hate him and never truly to accept him as king, even though he did much for the country. If someone had been rightfully born king, then Herod's job was in jeopardy. He therefore called the Jewish scholars together and inquired where the Christ was to be born (Matt. 2:4). Interestingly Herod connected the One "born king of the Jews" (v. 2) with "the Christ," the Messiah. Obviously Israel had a messianic hope and believed that the Messiah would be born.

The answer to Herod's question was simple, because Micah the prophet had given the precise location centuries before: the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2). This answer from the people's chief priests and teachers of the Law (scribes, KJV) was apparently carried back to the Magi by Herod himself. Then Herod asked them when they had first seen their star (Matt. 2:7). This became critical later in the account (v. 16); it showed that Herod was already contemplating a plan to get rid of this young King. He also instructed the Magi to return and tell him the location of this King so that he might come and worship Him. That was not, however, what he had in mind.

2:9-12. The journey of the Magi from Jerusalem wrought a further miracle. The star they had seen in the East now reappeared and led them to a specific house in Bethlehem where they found the Child Jesus. Bethlehem is about five miles south of Jerusalem. "Stars" (i.e., planets) naturally travel from east to west across the heavens, not from north to south. Could it be that "the star" which the Magi saw and which led them to a specific house was the Shekinah glory of God? That same glory had led the children of Israel through the wilderness for 40 years as a pillar of fire and cloud. Perhaps this was what they saw in the East, and for want of a better term they called it a "star." All other efforts to explain this star are inadequate (such as a conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, and Mars; a supernova; a comet; etc.).

Nevertheless they were led to the Child and going in, they worshiped Him. Their worship was heightened by the giving of gifts . . . gold . . . incense and . . . myrrh. These were gifts worthy of a king and this act by Gentile leaders pictures the wealth of the nations which will someday be completely given to the Messiah (Isa. 60:5, 11; 61:6; 66:20; Zeph. 3:10; Hag. 2:7-8).

Some believe the gifts had further significance by reflecting on the character of this Child's life. Gold might represent His deity or purity, incense the fragrance of His life, and myrrh His sacrifice and death (myrrh was used for embalming). These gifts were obviously the means by which Joseph took his family to Egypt and sustained them there until Herod died. The wise men were warned by God not to return and report to Herod, so they returned to their homes by another route.

b. In Egypt (2:13-18)

2:13-15. After the visit of the Magi, Joseph was warned by an angel of the Lord to take Mary and Jesus and flee to Egypt. This warning was given in a dream (the second of Joseph's four dreams: 1:20; 2:13, 19, 22). The reason was Herod would be searching for the Child to kill Him. Under cover of darkness, Joseph obeyed, and his family left Bethlehem (see map) and journeyed into Egypt. Why Egypt? The Messiah was sent to and returned from Egypt so that the prophet's words, Out of Egypt I called My Son, might be fulfilled. This is a reference to Hosea 11:1, which does not seem to be a prophecy in the sense of a prediction. Hosea was writing of God's calling Israel out of Egypt into the Exodus. Matthew, however, gave new understanding to these words. Matthew viewed this experience as Messiah being identified with the nation. There were similarities between the nation and the Son. Israel was God's chosen "son" by adoption (Ex. 4:22), and Jesus is the Messiah, God's Son. In both cases the descent into Egypt was to escape danger, and the return was important to the nation's providential history. While Hosea's statement was a historical reference to Israel's deliverance, Matthew related it more fully to the call of the Son, the Messiah, from Egypt. In that sense, as

Matthew "heightened" Hosea's words to a more significant event—the Messiah's return from Egypt—they were "fulfilled."

2:16-18. As soon as Herod learned that the Magi had not complied with his orders to give him the exact location of the newborn King, he put into action a plan to kill all the male children in Bethlehem. The age of two . . . and under was selected in compliance with the time . . . the Magi saw "the star" in the East. Perhaps this time reference also indicated that when the Magi visited Jesus, He was under two years of age.

This slaughter of the male children is mentioned only here in the biblical record. Even the Jewish historian Josephus (A.D. 37–?100) did not mention this dastardly deed of putting to death innocent babies and young children. But it is not surprising that he and other secular historians overlooked the death of a few Hebrew children in an insignificant village, for Herod's infamous crimes were many. He put to death several of his own children and some of his wives whom he thought were plotting against him. Emperor Augustus reportedly said it was better to be Herod's sow than his son, for his sow had a better chance of surviving in a Jewish community. In the Greek language, as in English, there is only one letter difference between the words "sow" (huos) and "son" (huios).

This event too was said to be the fulfillment of a prophecy by Jeremiah. This statement (Jer. 31:15) referred initially to the weeping of the nation as a result of the death of children at the time of the Babylonian Captivity (586 B.C.). But the parallel to the situation at this time was obvious, for again children were being slaughtered at the hands of non-Jews. Also, Rachel's tomb was near Bethlehem and Rachel was considered by many to be the mother of the nation. That is why she was seen weeping over these children's deaths.

c. In Nazareth (2:19-23)

2:19-23. After Herod died . . . Joseph was again instructed by an angel of the Lord. This was the third of four times an angel appeared to him in a dream (cf. 1:20; 2:13, 19, 22). He was made aware of Herod's death and told to return to the land (v. 20). Joseph obediently followed the Lord's instruction and was planning to return to the land of Israel, perhaps to Bethlehem. However, a son of Herod, Archelaus, was ruling over the territories of Judea, Samaria, and Idumea. Archelaus, noted for tyranny, murder, and instability, was probably insane as a result of close family intermarriages. (He ruled from 4 B.C. to A.D. 6. See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5). God's warning to Joseph (again in a dream, Matt. 2:22; cf. 1:20; 2:13, 19) was not to return to Bethlehem, but instead to move back to the northern district of Galilee to the town of Nazareth. The ruler of this region was Antipas, another son of Herod (cf. 14:1; Luke 23:7-12), but he was a capable ruler.

The fact that the family moved to Nazareth was once again said to be in fulfillment of prophecy (Matt. 2:23). However, the words He will be called a Nazarene, were not directly spoken by any Old Testament prophet, though several prophecies come close to this expression. Isaiah said the Messiah would be "from [Jesse's] roots" like "a Branch" (Isa. 11:1). "Branch" is the Hebrew word neṣer, which has consonants like those in the word "Nazarene" and which carry the idea of having an insignificant beginning.

Since Matthew used the plural prophets, perhaps his idea was not based on a specific prophecy but on the idea that appeared in a number of prophecies concerning Messiah's despised character. Nazareth was the town which housed the Roman garrison for the northern regions of Galilee. Therefore most Jews would not have any associations with that city. In fact those who lived in Nazareth were thought of as compromisers who consorted with the enemy, the Romans. Therefore to call one "a Nazarene" was to use a term of contempt. So because Joseph and his family settled in Nazareth, the Messiah was later despised and considered contemptible in the eyes of many in Israel. This was Nathanael's reaction when he heard Jesus was from Nazareth (John 1:46): "Can anything good come from there?" This concept fit several Old Testament prophecies that speak of the lowly character of the Messiah (e.g., Isa. 42:1-4). Also the term "Nazarene" would have reminded Jewish readers of the similar-sounding word "Nazirite" (Num. 6:1-21). Jesus was more devoted to God than the Nazirites.

C. Presentation by an ambassador (3:1-12)
(Mark 1:1-8; Luke 3:1-9, 15-18; John 1:19-28)

3:1-2. In Matthew's story of the Messiah-King, he skipped the next 30 years or so of Jesus' life. Matthew picked up the story with the introductory ministry of John the Baptist, the "ambassador" of the King. In the Scriptures several men were named John, but only one had the distinguishing name John the Baptist, that is, the Baptizer. While self-imposed proselyte baptism was known to the Jews, John's baptism was unusual for he was the first person who came baptizing others.

John's ministry was conducted in the Desert of Judea, barren and rugged land west of the Dead Sea. His message was forthright and had two parts: (1) a soteriological aspect, repent, and (2) an eschatological aspect, for the kingdom of heaven is near. The concept of a coming kingdom was well known in Old Testament Scriptures. But the idea that repentance was necessary in order to enter this kingdom was something new and became a stumbling block to many Jews. They thought that as children of Abraham they would automatically be granted entrance into Messiah's kingdom. John's message, however, was that a change of mind and heart (metanoeite, "repent") was necessary before they could qualify for the kingdom. They did not realize how far they had drifted from God's Law and the requirements laid down by the prophets (e.g., Mal. 3:7-12).

The eschatological aspect of John's message has caused modern-day commentators greater problems. Not all scholars agree on John's meaning; in fact even conservative scholars are divided. What was John preaching? He announced a coming kingdom, which simply means "a coming rule." This rule was to be heaven's rule: "the kingdom of heaven." Does that mean God would then begin to rule in heavenly spheres? Obviously not, for God has always ruled over heavenly spheres since Creation. John must mean that God's heavenly rule was about to be extended directly to earthly spheres. God's rule over the earth had drawn near and was about to be instituted through the person of the Messiah for whom John was preparing the way. No one hearing John preach asked him what he was talking about, for the concept of Messiah's rule over the kingdom of earth was a common thread in Old Testament prophecy. The requirement for that institution, however, was that the nation repent.

3:3-10. John's message was a fulfillment of the prophecy in Isaiah 40:3 with reflections of Malachi 3:1. All four Gospels relate John the Baptist to Isaiah's words (Mark 1:2-3; Luke 3:4-6; John 1:23). Isaiah 40:3, however, refers to "highway construction workers" who were called on to clear the way in the desert for the return of the Lord as His people, the exiles, returned to Judah from the Babylonian Captivity in 537 B.C. In similar fashion, John the Baptist was in the desert preparing the way for the Lord and His kingdom by calling on people to return to Him.

John was thus a voice of one calling in the desert to prepare a remnant to receive the Messiah. His preaching "in the Desert of Judea" (Matt. 3:1) suggests that he came to separate people from the religious systems of the day. He dressed similarly to Elijah (clothes . . . of camel's hair and . . . a leather belt; cf. 2 Kings 1:8; Zech. 13:4). And he ate locusts and wild honey. Locusts were eaten by the poor (Lev. 11:21). Like Elijah he was a rough outdoorsman with a forthright message.

Large numbers of people . . . from Jerusalem and all Judea went to hear John the Baptist. Some accepted his message and confessed their sins, submitting to water baptism, the identifying sign of John's ministry. John's baptism was not the same as Christian baptism, for it was a religious rite signifying confession of sin and commitment to a holy life in anticipation of the coming Messiah.

However, not all believed. The Pharisees and Sadducees, who came to see what he was doing, rejected his appeal. Their feelings were summed up in John's words to them (Matt. 3:7-10). They believed that they, as physical sons of Abraham, were automatically qualified for Messiah's kingdom. John completely repudiated Pharisaic Judaism and said that God, if necessary, could raise up . . . stones to become His children. God could take outsiders, Gentiles, if necessary to find individuals to follow Him. Judaism was in danger of being removed. Unless there was productive fruit in keeping with repentance (v. 8), God would remove the tree.

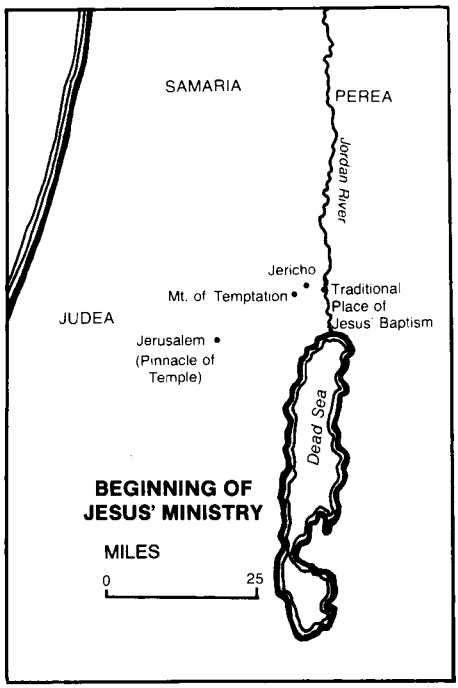
3:11-12. The relationship of John the Baptist to the coming Messiah was clearly seen. John believed he was not even worthy to carry (or untie) the sandals of the Coming One. John was simply an introducer who was preparing a remnant for the Messiah, and who was baptizing in water those who responded. The Coming One would baptize them with the Holy Spirit and with fire. Those hearing John's words would have been reminded of two Old Testament prophecies: Joel 2:28-29 and Malachi 3:2-5. Joel had given the promise of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Israel. An actual outpouring of the Spirit did occur in Acts 2 on the day of Pentecost, but experientially Israel did not enter into the benefits of that event. She will yet experience the benefits of this accomplished work when she turns in repentance at the Lord's Second Advent. The baptism "with fire" referred to the judging and cleansing of those who would enter the kingdom, as prophesied in Malachi 3. This symbolism was carried through by John who spoke of the separation that occurs when a winnowing fork tosses up grain, wheat is then gathered into the barn, and chaff is burned up. John was saying that the Messiah, when He came, would prepare a remnant (wheat) for the kingdom by empowering and cleansing the people. Those who reject Him (chaff) would be judged and cast into eternal unquenchable fire (cf. Mal. 4:1).

D. Presentation through approval (3:13–4:11)

1. BY BAPTISM (3:13-17)
(MARK 1:9-11; LUKE 3:21-22)



3:13-14. After years of silence in Nazareth, Jesus appeared among those listening to John's preaching and presented Himself as a candidate for baptism. Only Matthew recorded John's opposition to this act: I need to be baptized by You, and do You come to me? John recognized Jesus did not fit the requirements for his baptism, since his baptism was for repentance from sin. Of what did Jesus have to repent? He had never sinned (2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; 7:26; 1 John 3:5), so He could not be officially entering into John's baptism even though He was seeking to be baptized by John. Some feel Jesus was confessing the sins of the nation as Moses, Ezra, and Daniel had done on previous occasions. However, another possibility is suggested in Matthew 3:15.

3:15. Jesus' response to John was that it was fitting for Him to take part in John's baptism at this time in order to fulfill all righteousness. What did Jesus mean? The Law included no requirements about baptism, so Jesus could not have had in view anything pertaining to Levitical righteousness. But John's message was a message of repentance, and those experiencing it were looking forward to a coming Messiah who would be righteous and who would bring in righteousness. If Messiah were to provide righteousness for sinners, He must be identified with sinners. It was therefore in the will of God for Him to be baptized by John in order to be identified (the real meaning of the word "baptized") with sinners.

3:16-17. The significant thing about the baptism of Jesus was the authentication from heaven. As Jesus came up out of the water . . . the Spirit of God came down on Him in the form of a dove. As One went up, the Other came down. A voice from heaven—the voice of God the Father—said, This is My Son, whom I love; with Him I am well pleased (cf. Eph. 1:6; Col. 1:13). God repeated these words about Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:5). All three Persons of the Godhead were present at this event: the Father who spoke of His Son, the Son who was being baptized, and the Spirit who descended on the Son as a dove. This verified for John that Jesus is the Son of God (John 1:32-34). It was also in keeping with Isaiah's prophecy that the Spirit would rest on the Messiah (Isa. 11:2). The descent of the Holy Spirit empowered the Son, the Messiah, for His ministry among people.

2. BY TEMPTATION (4:1-11)

4:1-2. After being baptized, Jesus was led immediately by the Spirit of God into the desert (traditionally near Jericho; see map) for a period of testing. This period of time was a necessary period under God's direction—a time in which the Son obeyed (Heb. 5:8). After fasting 40 days, when the Lord was hungry, the tests began. From God's standpoint the tests demonstrated the quality of the Lord. It was impossible for the divine Son to sin, and that fact actually heightened the tests. He could not give in to the tests and sin, but He had to endure until the tests were completed.

4:3-4. The first test pertained to the matter of sonship. Satan assumed that if He were the Son, perhaps He could be persuaded to act independently of the Father. Satan's test was subtle for since He is the Son of God, He has the power to turn the stones all around Him into bread. But that was not the will of His Father for Him. The Father's will was for Him to be hungry in the desert with no food. To submit to Satan's suggestion and satisfy His hunger would have been contrary to God's will. Jesus therefore quoted Deuteronomy 8:3, which affirms that man does not live on bread alone, but by God's Word. It is better to obey God's Word than to satisfy human desires. The fact that Jesus quoted from Deuteronomy showed that He recognized the inerrant authority of that book, one often criticized by scholars.

4:5-7. The second test by Satan appealed to personal display or popularity. This test built on the first, for if He is the Son of God and the Messiah, nothing could harm Him. Satan took Him to . . . the highest point of the temple. Whether this was actual or simply a vision cannot be determined dogmatically. Here Satan made a subtle suggestion to Jesus as the Messiah. In effect he was reminding Jesus of Malachi's prophecy (Mal. 3:1), which had led to a common belief among the Jews that Messiah would suddenly appear in the sky, coming down to His temple. Satan was saying, in essence, "Why don't You do what the people are expecting and make some marvelous display? After all, the Scripture says His angels will protect You and You won't even hurt a foot as You come down." Satan may have thought if Jesus could quote Scripture to him, he could quote it too. However, he purposely did not quote Psalm 91:11-12 accurately. He left out an important phrase, "in all Your ways." According to the psalmist, a person is protected only when he is following the Lord's will. For Jesus to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple in some dramatic display to accommodate Himself to the people's thinking would not have been God's will. Jesus responded, again from Deuteronomy (6:16), that it would not be proper to test . . . God and expect Him to do something when one is out of His will.

4:8-11. Satan's final test related to God's plan for Jesus. It was and is God's design that Jesus Christ rule the world. Satan showed Jesus the kingdoms of the world with all their splendor. These kingdoms presently are Satan's, as he is "the god of this Age" (2 Cor. 4:4) and "the prince of this world" (John 12:31; cf. Eph. 2:2). He had the power to give all these kingdoms to Jesus at that time—if only Jesus would bow down and worship him. Satan was saying, "I can accomplish the will of God for You and You can have the kingdoms of this world right now." This of course would have meant Jesus would never have gone to the cross. He supposedly could have been the King of kings without the cross. However, this would have thwarted God's plan for salvation and would have meant Jesus was worshiping an inferior. His response, once again from Deuteronomy (6:13 and 10:20), was that God alone should be

Satan's Temptations of Eve and of Jesus

Temptation	Genesis 3	Matthew 4
Appeal to physical appetite	You may eat of any tree (3:1).	You may eat by changing stones to bread (4:3).
Appeal to personal gain	You will not die (3:4).	You will not hurt Your foot (4:6).
Appeal to power or glory	You will be like God (3:5).	You will have all the world's kingdoms (4:8-9).

worshiped and served. Jesus resisted this temptation also.

Interestingly Satan's temptations of Eve in the Garden of Eden correspond to those of Jesus in the desert. Satan appealed to the physical appetite (Gen. 3:1-3; Matt. 4:3), the desire for personal gain (Gen. 3:4-5; Matt. 4:6), and an easy path to power or glory (Gen. 3:5-6; Matt. 4:8-9). And in each case Satan altered God's Word (Gen. 3:4; Matt. 4:6). Satan's temptations of people today often fall into the same three categories (cf. 1 John 2:16). The One who had identified Himself with sinners by baptism and who would provide righteousness proved He is righteous, and revealed His approval by the Father. Satan then left Jesus. At that moment God sent angels to minister to His needs.

II. Communications from the King (4:12–7:29)

A. Beginning proclamations (4:12-25)

1. BY WORD (4:12-22) (MARK 1:14-20; LUKE 4:14-15)

a. His sermon (4:12-17)

4:12-16. Matthew presented an important time factor in his account when he noted Jesus did not officially begin His public ministry until John the Baptist had been put in prison. The reason for John's imprisonment was not presented here, but it was stated later (14:3). When Jesus learned of John's imprisonment, He went from Nazareth and settled in Capernaum (Luke 4:16-30 explains why He left Nazareth). This region was the area settled by the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali after the conquest of Joshua's time. Isaiah had prophesied (Isa. 9:1-2) that light would come to this region, and Matthew saw this movement of Jesus as fulfillment of this prophecy. One of Messiah's works was to bring light into darkness, for He would be a light to both Jews and Gentiles (cf. John 1:9; 12:46).

4:17. When John was imprisoned, Jesus began to preach. His words had a familiar ring: Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is near (cf. 3:2). The twofold message of John was now proclaimed by the Messiah. The work of God was rapidly moving toward the establishing of the glorious kingdom of God on earth. If one wanted to be a part of the kingdom, he must repent. Repentance was mandatory if fellowship with God was to be enjoyed.

b. His summons (4:18-22) (Mark 1:16-20; Luke 5:1-11)

4:18-22. Since Jesus is the promised Messiah, He had the right to call men from their normal pursuits of life to follow Him. This was not the first time these men had met Jesus, for the Fourth Gospel relates Jesus' first meeting with some of the disciples (John 1:35-42). Jesus now called these fishermen to leave their profession behind and to begin following Him permanently. He would take them from fishing for fish and make them fishers of men. The message of the coming kingdom needed to be proclaimed widely so that many could hear and could become, by repentance, subjects of His kingdom. The calling carried with it a cost, for it involved leaving not only one's profession but also one's family responsibilities. Matthew noted that James and John . . . left not only their fishing, but also their father to begin following Jesus.

4:23. The work of the Lord was not limited to preaching. His deeds were as important as His words, for a great question in the minds of the Jews would be, "Can this One claiming to be Messiah perform the works of Messiah?" Matthew 4:23 is an important summary statement crucial to Matthew's theme (cf. 9:35, almost identical to 4:23). Several important elements are included in this verse. (1) Jesus went throughout Galilee, teaching in their synagogues. The ministry of this One who claimed to be King of the Jews was conducted among the Jews. He ministered in synagogues, places of Jewish gatherings for worship. (2) This One was involved in "teaching" and preaching. He thus was involved in a prophetic ministry for He is "the Prophet" announced in Deuteronomy 18:15-19. (3) He was proclaiming the good news of the kingdom. His message was that God was moving to fulfill His covenantal program with Israel and to establish His kingdom on the earth. (4) He was healing every disease and sickness among the people (cf. "teaching," "preaching," and "healing" in Matt. 9:35). This authenticated that He is indeed the Prophet, for His words were backed up by authenticating signs. All these actions should have convinced the Jewish people that God was moving in history to accomplish His purposes. They were responsible to get ready by repenting from their sins and acknowledging Jesus as the Messiah.

4:24-25. The ministry of Jesus—and probably also the ministry of the four men he called (vv. 18-22)—was dramatic for multitudes of people heard of Jesus and began to flock to Him. The news about Him spread all over Syria, the area north of Galilee. As people came, they brought many who were afflicted with a variety of illnesses and Jesus healed them all. No wonder large crowds began to follow Jesus from Galilee, from the Decapolis (lit., "10 cities"; an area east and south of the Sea of Galilee), from Jerusalem and Judea, and the region across (west of) the Jordan River (see map, p. 19).

B. Continuing pronouncements (chaps. 5–7)

1. THE SUBJECTS OF HIS KINGDOM (5:1-16)

a. Their character (5:1-12)

5:1-12. As the multitudes continued to flock to Jesus (cf. 4:25), He went up on a mountainside and sat down. It was the custom of Rabbis to sit as they taught. His disciples came to Him and He began to teach them. Matthew 5–7 is commonly called "the Sermon on the Mount" because Jesus delivered it on a mountain. Though the mountain's exact location is unknown, it was undoubtedly in Galilee (4:23) and was apparently near Capernaum on a place which was "level" (Luke 6:17). "Disciples" refers not to the Twelve, as some suggest, but to the crowds following Him (cf. Matt. 7:28, "the crowds were amazed at His teaching").

Jesus instructed them in view of His announcement of the coming kingdom (4:17). Natural questions on the heart of every Jew would have been, "Am I eligible to enter Messiah's kingdom? Am I righteous enough to qualify for entrance?" The only standard of righteousness the people knew was that laid down by the current religious leaders, the scribes and Pharisees. Would one who followed that standard be acceptable in Messiah's kingdom? Jesus' sermon therefore must be understood in the context of His offer of the kingdom to Israel and the need for repentance to enter that kingdom. The sermon did not give a "Constitution" for the kingdom nor did it present the way of salvation. The sermon showed how a person who is in right relationship with God should conduct his life. While the passage must be understood in the light of the offer of the messianic kingdom, the sermon applies to Jesus' followers today for it demonstrates the standard of righteousness God demands of His people. Some of the standards are general (e.g., "You cannot serve both God and money" [6:24]); some are specific (e.g., "If someone forces you to go one mile, go with him two miles" [5:41]); and some pertain to the future (e.g., "many will say to Me on that day, 'Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in Your name?' " [7:22]).

Jesus began His sermon with "the Beatitudes," statements beginning with Blessed are. "Blessed" means "happy" or "fortunate" (cf. Ps. 1:1). The qualities Jesus mentioned in this list, "the poor in spirit," "those who mourn," "the meek," etc., obviously could not be products of Pharisaic righteousness. The Pharisees were concerned primarily with external qualities, but the qualities Jesus mentioned are internal. These come only when one is properly related to God through faith, when one places his complete trust in God.

The poor in spirit (Matt. 5:3) are those who consciously depend on God, not on themselves; they are "poor" inwardly, having no ability in themselves to please God (cf. Rom. 3:9-12). Those who mourn (Matt. 5:4) recognize their needs and present them to the One who is able to assist. Those who are meek (v. 5) are truly humble and gentle and have a proper appreciation of their position. (Praeis, the Gr. word rendered "meek," is translated "gentle" in its three other usages in the NT: 11:29; 21:5; 1 Peter 3:4.) Those who hunger and thirst for righteousness (Matt. 5:6) have a spiritual appetite, a continuing desire for personal righteousness. The merciful (v. 7) extend mercy to others, thus demonstrating God's mercy which has been extended to them. The pure in heart (v. 8) are those who are inwardly clean from sin through faith in God's provision and a continual acknowledging of their sinful condition. The peacemakers (v. 9) show others how to have inward peace with God and how to be instruments of peace in the world. They desire and possess God's righteousness even though it brings them persecution (v. 10).

These qualities contrast sharply with Pharisaic "righteousness." The Pharisees were not "poor in spirit"; did not "mourn" in recognition of their needs; were proud and harsh, not humble and gentle; they felt they had attained righteousness and therefore did not have a continual appetite or desire for it; they were more concerned with "legalities" of God's and their own laws than with showing mercy; were pure ceremonially but not inwardly; created a rift, not peace in Judaism; and certainly did not possess true righteousness. Jesus' followers who possess these qualities become heirs of the kingdom (vv. 3, 10) on earth (v. 5), receive spiritual comfort (v. 4) and satisfaction (v. 6), receive mercy from God and others (v. 7), will see God (v. 8), that is, Jesus Christ, who is God "in a body" (1 Tim. 3:16; cf. John 1:18; 14:7-9). His followers were known as God's sons (Matt. 5:9; cf. Gal 3:26) for they partook of His righteousness (Matt. 5:10).

People possessing these qualities would naturally stand out in the crowd and would not be understood by others. Thus they would be persecuted; others would speak evil of them (v. 11). However, Jesus' words encouraged His followers, for they would be walking in the train of the prophets, who also were misunderstood and persecuted (v. 12; cf. 1 Kings 19:1-4; 22:8; Jer. 26:8-11; 37:11-16; 38:1-6; Dan. 3; 6; Amos 7:10-13).

b. Their circle of influence (5:13-16) (Mark 9:50; Luke 14:34-35)

5:13-16. To demonstrate the impact these people would make on their world, Jesus used two common illustrations: salt and light. Jesus' followers would be like salt in that they would create a thirst for greater information. When one sees a unique person who possesses superior qualities in specific areas, he desires to discover why that person is different. It is also possible that salt means these people serve as a preservative against the evils of society. Whichever view one takes, the important quality to note is that salt ought to maintain its basic character. If it fails to be salty, it has lost its purpose for existence and should be discarded.

A light is meant to shine and give direction. Individuals Jesus described in verses 3-10 would obviously radiate and point others to the proper path. Their influence would be evident, like a city on a hill or a lamp . . . on its stand. A concealed lamp, placed under a bowl (a clay container for measuring grain) would be useless. Light-radiating people live so that others see their good deeds and give praise not to them but to their Father in heaven. (V. 16 includes the first of 15 references by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount to God as "your [or 'our' or 'My'] Father in heaven," "your heavenly Father," "your Father." Also see vv. 45, 48; 6:1, 4, 6, 8-9, 14-15, 18, 26, 32; 7:11, 21. One who stands in God's righteousness by faith in Him has an intimate spiritual relationship to Him, like that of a child to his loving father.)

2. THE SUBSTANCE OF HIS MESSAGE (5:17-20)

5:17-20. This section presents the heart of Jesus' message, for it demonstrates His relationship to the Law of God. Jesus was not presenting a rival system to the Law of Moses and the words of the Prophets, but a true fulfillment of the Law and the Prophets—in contrast with the Pharisees' traditions. "The Law and the Prophets" refer to the entire Old Testament (cf. 7:12; 11:13; 22:40; Luke 16:16; Acts 13:15; 24:14; 28:23; Rom. 3:21). I tell you the truth is literally, "Surely (or Verily, KJV) I say to you." "Surely" renders the word "Amen" (Gr. amēn, transliterated from the Heb. 'āman, "to be firm, true"). This expression, "I tell you the truth," points to a solemn declaration that the hearers should note. It occurs 31 times in Matthew alone. (In the Gospel of John this Gr. word always occurs twice: "Amen, Amen." Cf. comments on John 1:51.)

Jesus' fulfillment would extend to the smallest Hebrew letter, the "jot" (lit., yôd), and even to the smallest stroke of a Hebrew letter, the "tittle." In English a jot would correspond to the dot above the letter "i" (and look like an apostrophe), and a tittle would be seen in the difference between a "P" and an "R". The small angled line that completes the "R" is like a tittle. These things are important because letters make up words and even a slight change in a letter might change the meaning of a word. Jesus said He would fulfill the Law by obeying it perfectly and would fulfill the prophets' predictions of the Messiah and His kingdom. But the responsibility of the people was made clear. The righteousness they were currently seeking—that of the Pharisees and the teachers of the Law—was insufficient for entrance into the kingdom Jesus was offering. The righteousness He demanded was not merely external; it was a true inner righteousness based on faith in God's Word (Rom. 3:21-22). This is clear from what follows.

3. THE SUBSTANTIATION OF HIS MESSAGE (5:21–7:6)

a. Rejection of Pharisaic traditions (5:21-48)

Jesus rejected the traditions of the Pharisees (vv. 21-48) and their practices (6:1–7:6). Six times Jesus said, "You have heard that it was said. . . . But I tell you" (5:21-22, 27-28, 31-32, 33-34, 38-39, 43-44). These words make it clear that Jesus was presenting (a) what the Pharisees and teachers of the Law were saying to the people and, by contrast, (b) what God's true intent of the Law was. This spelled out His statement (v. 20) that Pharisaic righteousness is not enough to gain entrance into the coming kingdom.

5:21-26. Jesus' first illustration pertained to an important commandment, Do not murder (Ex. 20:13). The Pharisees taught that murder consists of taking someone's life. But the Lord said the commandment extended not only to the act itself but also to the internal attitude behind the act. Of course, murder is wrong, but the anger prompting the act is also as wrong as plunging in a knife. Furthermore, becoming angry and assuming a position of superiority over another by calling him a derogatory name (such as the Aram. Raca or You fool!) demonstrates sinfulness of the heart. A person with such a sinful heart obviously is a sinner and therefore is headed for the fire of hell ("hell" is lit., "Gehenna"; cf. Matt. 5:29-30; 10:28; 18:9; 23:15, 33; 7 of the 11 references to Gehenna are in Matt.). "Gehenna" means valley of Hinnom, the valley south of Jerusalem where a continually burning fire consumed the city refuse. This became an apt name for the eternal punishment of the wicked.

Such wrongful attitudes should be dealt with and made right. Reconciliation between brothers must be accomplished whether the "innocent" (5:23-24) or the "offending" (vv. 25-26) brother takes the first step. Without such reconciliation, gifts presented at the altar mean nothing: Even on the way to a court trial a defendant should seek to clear up any such problem. Otherwise the Sanhedrin, the Jewish court of 70 members, would send him to prison and he would be penniless.

5:27-30. A second practical illustration dealt with the problem of adultery (Ex. 20:14). Once again the Pharisees' teaching was concerned only with the outward act. They said the only way one could commit adultery was through an act of sexual union. They correctly quoted the commandment, but they missed its point. Adultery begins within one's heart

(looking lustfully) and follows in the act. The lustful desire, in the heart, as wrong as the act, indicates that one is not rightly related to God.

Jesus' words recorded in Matthew 5:29-30 have often been misunderstood. Obviously Jesus was not teaching physical mutilation, for a blind man could have as much of a problem with lust as a sighted person, and a man with only one hand might use it also to sin. Jesus was advocating the removal of the inward cause of offense. Since a lustful heart would ultimately lead to adultery, one's heart must be changed. Only by such a change of heart can one escape hell ("Gehenna"; cf. v. 22).

5:31-32 (Matt. 19:3-9; Mark 10:11-12; Luke 16:18). Among the Jewish leaders were two schools of thought regarding the matter of divorce (Deut. 24:1). Those who followed Hillel said it was permissible for a husband to divorce his wife for any reason at all, but the other group (those following Shammai) said divorce was permissible only for a major offense. In His response, the Lord strongly taught that marriage is viewed by God as an indissoluble unit and that marriages should not be terminated by divorce. The "exception clause," except for marital unfaithfulness (porneias), is understood in several ways by Bible scholars. Four of these ways are: (a) a single act of adultery, (b) unfaithfulness during the period of betrothal (Matt. 1:19), (c) marriage between near relatives (Lev. 18:6-18), or (d) continued promiscuity. (See comments on Matt. 19:3-9.)

5:33-37. The matter of making oaths (Lev. 19:12; Deut. 23:21) was next addressed by the Lord. The Pharisees were notorious for their oaths, which were made on the least provocation. Yet they made allowances for mental reservations within their oaths. If they wanted to be relieved of oaths they had made by heaven . . . by the earth . . . by Jerusalem, or by one's own head, they could argue that since God Himself had not been involved their oaths were not binding.

But Jesus said oaths should not even be necessary: Do not swear at all. The fact that oaths were used at all emphasized the wickedness of man's heart. Furthermore, swearing "by heaven," "by the earth," or "by Jerusalem" is binding, since they are God's throne . . . footstool, and city, respectively. Even the color of the hair on their heads was determined by God (Matt. 5:36). However, Jesus later in His life responded to an oath (26:63-64), as did Paul (2 Cor. 1:23). The Lord was saying one's life should be sufficient to back up one's words. A yes always ought to mean yes, and a no should mean no. James seems to have picked up these words of the Lord in his epistle (James 5:12).

5:38-42 (Luke 6:29-30). The words Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth come from several Old Testament passages (Ex. 21:24; Lev. 24:20; Deut. 19:21); they are called the lex talionis, the law of retaliation. This law was given to protect the innocent and to make sure retaliation did not occur beyond the offense. Jesus pointed out, however, that while the rights of the innocent were protected by the Law, the righteous need not necessarily claim their rights. A righteous man would be characterized by humility and selflessness. Instead he might go "the extra mile" to maintain peace. When wronged by being struck on a cheek, or sued for his tunic (undergarment; a cloak was the outer garment), or forced to travel with someone a mile, he would not strike back, demand repayment, or refuse to comply. Instead of retaliating he would do the opposite, and would also commit his case to the Lord who will one day set all things in order (cf. Rom. 12:17-21). This was seen to its greatest extent in the life of the Lord Jesus Himself, as Peter explained (1 Peter 2:23).

5:43-48 (Luke 6:27-28, 32-36). The Pharisees taught that one should love those near and dear to him (Lev. 19:18), but that Israel's enemies should be hated. The Pharisees thus implied that their hatred was God's means of judging their enemies. But Jesus stated that Israel should demonstrate God's love even to her enemies—a practice not even commanded in the Old Testament! God loves them; He causes His sun to rise on them and He sends rain to produce their crops. Since His love extends to everyone, Israel too should be a channel of His love by loving all. Such love demonstrates that they are God's sons (cf. Matt. 5:16). Loving only those who love you and greeting only your brothers is no more than the tax collectors and pagans do—a cutting remark for Pharisees!

Jesus concluded this section by saying, Be perfect therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect. His message demonstrated God's righteous standard, for God Himself truly is the "standard" of righteousness. If these individuals are to be righteous, they must be as God is, "perfect," that is, mature (teleioi) or holy. Murder, lust, hate, deception, and retaliation obviously do not characterize God. He did not lower His standard to accommodate humans; instead He set forth His absolute holiness as the standard. Though this standard can never be perfectly met by man himself, a person who by faith trusts in God enjoys His righteousness being reproduced in his life.

b. Rejection of Pharisaic practices (6:1–7:6)

The Lord then turned from the Pharisees' teachings to examine their hypocritical deeds.

6:1-4. Jesus first spoke of the Pharisees' almsgiving. Righteousness is not primarily a matter between a person and others, but between a person and God. So one's acts should not be demonstrated before others for then his reward should come from them (vv. 1-2). The Pharisees made a great show of their giving to the needy . . . in the synagogues and on the streets, thinking they were thus proving how righteous they were. But the Lord said that in giving one should not even let his left hand know what his right hand is doing, that is, it should be so secret that the giver readily forgets what he gave. In this way he demonstrates true righteousness before God and not before people, so God in turn will reward him. One cannot be rewarded, as the Pharisees expected, by both man and God.

6:5-15 (Luke 11:2-4). Jesus then spoke about the practice of prayer, which the Pharisees loved to perform publicly. Rather than making prayer a matter between an individual and God, the Pharisees had turned it into an act to be seen by men—again, to demonstrate their supposed righteousness. Their prayers were directed not to God but to other men, and consisted of long, repetitive phrases (Matt. 6:7).

Jesus condemned such practices. Prayer should be addressed to your Father, who is unseen (cf. John 1:18; 1 Tim. 1:17) and who knows what you need (Matt. 6:8); it is not "to be seen by men." But Jesus also presented a model prayer for His disciples to follow. This prayer is commonly called "the Lord's Prayer," but it is actually "the disciples' prayer." This prayer, which is repeated by many Christians, contains elements that are important for all praying: (1) Prayer is to begin with worship. God is addressed as Our Father in heaven. Worship is the essence of all prayer. (In vv. 1-18 Jesus used the word "Father" 10 times! Only those who have true inner righteousness can address God in that way in worship.) (2) Reverence is a second element of prayer, for God's name is to be hallowed, that is, revered (hagiasthētō). (3) The desire for God's kingdom—Your kingdom come—is based on the assurance that God will fulfill all His covenant promises to His people. (4) Prayer is to include the request that His will be accomplished today on earth as it is being accomplished in heaven, that is, fully and willingly. (5) Petition for personal needs such as daily food is also to be a part of prayer. "Daily" (epiousion, used only here in the NT) means "sufficient for today." (6) Requests regarding spiritual needs, such as forgiveness, are included too. This implies that the petitioner has already forgiven those who had offended him. Sins (cf. Luke 11:4), as moral debts, reveal one's shortcomings before God. (7) Believers recognize their spiritual weakness as they pray for deliverance from temptation to evil (cf. James 1:13-14).

Jesus' words in Matthew 6:14-15 explain His statement about forgiveness in verse 12. Though God's forgiveness of sin is not based on one's forgiving others, a Christian's forgiveness is based on realizing he has been forgiven (cf. Eph. 4:32). Personal fellowship with God is in view in these verses (not salvation from sin). One cannot walk in fellowship with God if he refuses to forgive others.

6:16-18. Fasting was a third example of Pharisaic "righteousness." The Pharisees loved to fast so that others would see them and think them spiritual. Fasting emphasized the denial of the flesh, but the Pharisees were glorifying their flesh by drawing attention to themselves. The Lord's words emphasized once again that such actions should be done in secret before God. Nor was one to follow the Pharisees' custom of withholding olive oil from his head during fasting. As a result, God alone would know and would reward accordingly.

In all three examples of Pharisaic "righteousness"—almsgiving (vv. 1-4), praying (vv. 5-15), and fasting (vv. 16-18)—Jesus spoke of hypocrites (vv. 2, 5, 16), public ostentation (vv. 1-2, 5, 16), receiving their reward in full when their actions are done before men (vv. 2, 5, 16), acting in secret (vv. 4, 6, 18), and being rewarded by the Father, who sees or "knows," when one's actions are done secretly (vv. 4, 6, 8, 18).

6:19-24 (Luke 12:33-34; 11:34-36; 16:13). One's attitude toward wealth is another barometer of righteousness. The Pharisees believed the Lord materially blessed all He loved. They were intent on building great treasures on earth. But treasures built here are subject to decay (moth destroys cloth and rust destroys metal; cf. James 5:2-3) or theft, whereas treasures deposited in heaven can never be lost.

The Pharisees had this problem because their spiritual eyes were diseased (Matt. 6:22). With their eyes they were coveting money and wealth. Thus they were in spiritual darkness. They were slaves to the master of greed, and their desire for money was so great they were failing in their service to their true Master, God. Money is the translation of the Aramaic word for "wealth or property," mamōna ("mammon," KJV).

6:25-34 (Luke 12:22-34). If a person is occupied with the things of God, the true Master, how will he care for his ordinary needs in life, such as food, clothing, and shelter? The Pharisees in their pursuit of material things had never learned to live by faith. Jesus told them and us not to worry about these things, for life is more important than physical things. He cited several illustrations to prove His point. The birds of the air are fed by the heavenly Father, and the lilies of the field grow in such a way that their splendor is greater than even Solomon's. Jesus was saying God has built into His Creation the means by which all things are cared for. The birds are fed because they diligently work to maintain their lives. They do not store up great amounts of food, but continually work. And believers are far more valuable to God than birds! The lilies grow daily through a natural process. Therefore an individual need not be anxious about his existence (Matt. 6:31), for by worrying he can never add any amount of time, not even a single hour, to his life. Rather than being like the pagans who are concerned about physical needs, the Lord's disciples should be concerned about the things of God, His kingdom and His righteousness. Then all these needs will be supplied in God's timing. This is the life of daily faith. It does no good to worry—do not worry occurs three times (vv. 25, 31, 34; cf. vv. 27-28)—or be concerned about tomorrow for there are sufficient matters to attend to each day. Worrying shows that one has "little faith" in what God can do (v. 30; cf. you of little faith in 8:26; 14:31; 16:8). As a disciple cares each day for the things God has trusted to him, God, his heavenly Father (6:26, 32), cares for his daily needs.

7:1-6 (Luke 6:41-42). A final illustration of Pharisaic practices pertains to judging. The Pharisees were then judging Christ and finding Him to be inadequate. He was not offering the kind of kingdom they anticipated or asking for the kind of righteousness they were exhibiting. So they rejected Him. Jesus therefore warned them against hypocritical judging.

This passage does not teach that judgments should never be made; Matthew 7:5 does speak of removing the speck from your brother's eye. The Lord's point was that a person should not be habitually critical or condemnatory of a speck of sawdust in someone else's eye when he has a plank—a strong hyperbole for effect—in his own eye. Such action is hypocritical (You hypocrite, v. 5; cf. "hypocrites" in 6:2, 5, 16). Though judgment is sometimes needed, those making the distinctions (krinō, judge, means "to distinguish" and thus "to decide") must first be certain of their own lives.

Furthermore when seeking to help another, one must exercise care to do what would be appreciated and beneficial. One should never entrust holy things (what is sacred) to unholy people (dogs; cf. "dogs" in Phil. 3:2) or throw . . . pearls to pigs. Dogs and pigs were despised in those days.

4. THE SUMMONS TO THE LISTENERS (7:7-29)

7:7-11 (Luke 11:9-13). Earlier in this sermon Jesus had given the disciples a model prayer (Matt. 6:9-13). Now He assured them that God welcomes prayer, and urged them to come to Him continuously and persistently. This is emphasized by the present tenses in the verbs: "keep on asking"; "keep on seeking"; "keep on knocking" (7:7). Why? Because your Father in heaven (v. 11) delights in giving good gifts (cf. James 1:17) to those who persist in prayer. (Luke substitutes "the Holy Spirit" for "good gifts," Luke 11:13.) No decent father would give his son . . . a stone instead of a round loaf of bread (which looked like a stone), or a snake instead of a similar-appearing fish. If an earthly father, with his sinful (evil) nature, delights to do right materially for his children, it makes sense that the righteous, heavenly Father will much more reward His children spiritually for their persistence.

7:12. This verse is commonly referred to as "the Golden Rule." The principle is that what people ordinarily want others to do for them should be what they practice toward those others. This principle summarizes the essential teachings of the Law and the Prophets. But such a principle cannot be consistently practiced by a natural person. Only a righteous person is able to practice this rule and thereby demonstrate the spiritual change that has come about in his life. An individual who is able to live this kind of life obviously possesses the righteousness Jesus demanded (5:20). Such a person's righteous acts do not save him, but because he has been delivered he is able to demonstrate true righteousness toward others.

7:13-14 (Luke 13:24). Elaborating on the Golden Rule, Jesus presented the clear way of access into righteousness. The righteousness He demanded (Matt. 5:20) does not come through the wide . . . gate and the broad . . . road. Rather it comes through the small . . . gate and the narrow . . . road. In light of the whole sermon, it was obvious Jesus was comparing the wide gate and the broad road to the outward righteousness of the Pharisees. If those listening to Jesus followed the Pharisees' teachings, their path would lead to destruction (apōleian, "ruin"). The narrow gate and road referred to Jesus' teaching, which emphasized not external requirements but internal transformation. Even the Lord Jesus acknowledged that few would find the true way, the way that leads to life (i.e., to heaven, in contrast with ruin in hell).

7:15-23 (Luke 6:43-44; 13:25-27). After presenting the true way of access into His anticipated kingdom, Jesus gave a warning about false prophets. He referred to these advocates of the broad way as ferocious wolves who appear harmless as sheep. How can one determine the character of false teachers? He need only look at the fruit they produce. Grapes and figs do not grow on thornbushes or thistles. Good fruit trees produce good fruit, but bad fruit trees produce bad fruit. In Jesus' evaluation, the Pharisees were obviously producing bad fruit; the only thing to do with bad trees is to cut them down and destroy them. If they do not fulfill their purpose for existence, they should be removed.

Those hearing this sermon must have wondered about the religious leaders, who seemed to be good men, teaching spiritual truths about Messiah and His kingdom. Jesus made it clear they were not good for they were leading others astray. Even if they were doing supernatural deeds—prophesying in His name, driving out demons, and performing many miracles, they were not obedient to the Father, continually doing His will (Matt. 7:21). They would be refused admission to the kingdom because Jesus had no personal relationship with them (vv. 21, 23).

7:24-27 (Luke 6:47-49). In conclusion Jesus presented the two options open to His listeners. They were now responsible for what they had heard and must make a choice. They could build on one of two foundations. One foundation was likened to a big rock and the other to sand. The foundation determines the ability of a structure to withstand the elements (rain and winds). The rock foundation represented the Lord Himself and the truths He had been presenting, especially the truth concerning inner transformation. The sand spoke of Pharisaic righteousness which the people knew and on which many were basing their hopes. In storms the first would give stability; the second would result in

Jesus' "Proverbs"

Statements

"A city on a hill cannot be hidden" (Matt. 5:14).
"Only in his hometown and in his own house is a prophet without honor" (Matt. 13:57).
"If a blind man leads a blind man, both will fall into a pit" (Matt. 15:14).
"A student is not above his teacher" (Luke 6:40).
"The worker deserves his wages" (Luke 10:7).
"Wherever there is a carcass, there the vultures will gather" (Matt. 24:28).

Questions

"You are the salt of the earth. But if the salt loses its saltiness, how can it be made salty again?" (Matt. 5:13)
"Do you bring in a lamp to put it under a bowl or a bed?" (Mark 4:21)
"Do people pick grapes from thornbushes, or figs from thistles?" (Matt. 7:16)

Command

"Physician, heal yourself!" (Luke 4:23)

destruction. Thus hearing and heeding Jesus' words is wise; one who does not is foolish. Only two courses of action are possible—two kinds of roads and gates (Matt. 7:13-14), two kinds of trees and fruit (vv. 15-20), two kinds of foundations and builders (vv. 24-27).

7:28-29. After recording Jesus' "Sermon on the Mount," Matthew wrote, When Jesus had finished saying these things. Five times Matthew wrote such a statement (identical or similar words), each time following a collection of Jesus' sayings: v. 28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1. These serve as turning points or shifts in the book's structure.

As a result of this sermon, the crowds of people following Jesus were amazed at His teaching. "Amazed" (exeplēssonto, lit., "struck out") means "overwhelmed." It suggests a strong, sudden sense of being astounded, and is stronger than thaumazō ("to wonder or be amazed"). Matthew used exeplēssonto four times (7:28; 13:54; 19:25; 22:33). Jesus had just demonstrated the inadequacies of the Pharisees' religious system. The righteousness they knew was not sufficient for entering His kingdom. The authority of Jesus is what amazed them, for He taught as a Spokesman from God—not as the teachers of His time who were simply reflecting the authority of the Law. The contrast between Jesus and the religious leaders was most pronounced.

III. Credentials of the King (8:1–11:1)

By word and deed Jesus Christ had authenticated Himself as the Messiah (chaps. 3-4). In a long sermon He announced the standards for entrance into His kingdom and clearly presented the way of access to it (chaps. 5-7). But the Jews still had questions on their minds. Could this One be the Messiah? If so, could He bring about the changes necessary to institute the kingdom? Did He have the power to bring about change? Matthew therefore presented a number of miracles to authenticate the King to Israel and to prove that He is able to perform His Word. These miracles demonstrated various realms in which Christ has authority.

A. His power over disease (8:1-15)

8:1-4. Significantly the first healing Matthew recorded was that of a man with leprosy. But Jesus had performed several miracles before that (see the list of Jesus' miracles at John 2:1-11). He came to Jesus, acknowledging His authority as Lord (cf. 7:21; 8:6). Jesus healed him—He touched the leper! (v. 3)—and then told him to go . . . to the priest and offer the proper sacrifice for cleansing from leprosy, as Moses prescribed (Lev. 14; two birds, wood, yarn, and hyssop on the first day [Lev. 14:4-8]; and on the eighth day two male lambs, a ewe lamb, flour, and oil [Lev. 14:10]). Jesus told him not to tell anyone before he went to the priest. Apparently Jesus wanted the priest to be the first to examine him.

Jesus said this would be a testimony to the priests. And so it was, for in the entire history of the nation there was no record of any Israelite being healed from leprosy other than Miriam (Num. 12:10-15). One can imagine the dramatic impact when this man suddenly appeared at the temple and announced to the priests he had been cured of leprosy! This event should have led to an examination of the circumstances surrounding the healing. Jesus in effect was presenting His "calling card" to the priests, for they would have to investigate His claims. (The healed man, however, disobeyed Jesus' orders to tell no one, for he "began to talk freely" [Mark 1:45]. Presumably, however, the man eventually made his way to the temple.)

2. PARALYSIS (8:5-13)

8:5-13. The second miracle dealing with disease also reflected on Jesus' authority. As He entered Capernaum, a Roman centurion came . . . asking for help (see Luke 7:2 for comments on centurions). This Gentile approached Jesus as Lord (as did the leper, Matt. 8:2) and requested healing for a servant of his. Luke has doulos ("slave"), whereas Matthew has pais ("boy"), which may suggest the slave was young. He was paralyzed and suffering intensely, and he was near death (Luke 7:2).

When Jesus said He would go and heal him, the centurion replied that would not be necessary. As a man who was used to giving orders, he understood the principle of authority. One with authority does not need to be present to accomplish a task. Orders may be carried out by others even at a distance. Jesus marveled at the centurion's great faith (cf. Matt. 15:28), for this was the kind of faith He was vainly looking for in Israel. Faith such as this made entrance into His kingdom possible, regardless of national, racial, or geographical residence (the East and the West). (Eating at a banquet often pictured being in the kingdom; cf. Isa. 25:6; Matt. 22:1-14; Luke 14:15-24.) But those who thought they would automatically gain entrance because of their religious backgrounds (they considered themselves subjects [lit., "sons"] of the kingdom) would not find entrance (Matt. 8:12). Instead they would be cast into judgment (thrown outside, into the darkness; cf. 22:13). Regarding weeping and gnashing of teeth, see comments on 13:42. In light of this centurion's faith, Jesus healed his servant at that very hour.

3. FEVER (8:14-15)
(MARK 1:29-31; LUKE 4:38-39)

8:14-15. As Jesus entered Peter's house in Capernaum, He saw Peter's mother-in-law lying in bed with a fever. Jesus' touch brought healing from the fever, but a further miracle was also evident. The woman was also given strength to get up from her bed and immediately be involved in work, waiting (diēkonei, "serving") on the Lord and the many disciples who were still actively following Him. Usually when a fever leaves, one's body is weak for some time, but that was not true here.

B. His power over demonic forces (8:16-17, 28-34)

Jesus was capable not only of bringing healing from physical sickness, but also of exercising power over demonic forces.

8:16-17 (Mark 1:32-34; Luke 4:40-41). As Jesus stayed in Peter's home, many . . . demon-possessed people were brought to Him. Matthew simply recorded that Jesus healed them all, in fulfillment of words spoken through . . . Isaiah (Isa. 53:4). His taking our infirmities (astheneias) and carrying our diseases (nosous) was finally accomplished on the cross in His death. But in anticipation of that event, Jesus performed many definite acts of healing in His ministry. By casting out demons, Jesus demonstrated His power over Satan, ruler of the demon world (cf. Matt. 9:34; 12:24).

8:18-27. These verses are discussed later, after verse 34.

8:28-34 (Mark 5:1-20; Luke 8:26-39). A more detailed account of Jesus' authority in the demonic realm is seen in these verses. Jesus arrived . . . in the region of the Gadarenes. The name "Gadarenes" comes from the town of Gadara, the capital of the region about eight miles southeast of the southern tip of the Sea of Galilee. Mark and Luke wrote that the place was "the region of the Gerasenes" (Mark 5:1; Luke 8:26). For an explanation of this difference, see comments on those two verses. There Jesus met . . . two demon-possessed men. Mark and Luke wrote of one demon-possessed man, but they did not say only one. Presumably one of the two was more violent than the other.

The influence of the demons on these men was obvious for they were wild, violent men, forced out of the city and living in a graveyard (tombs). The demons' two questions implied they knew who Jesus is—the Son of God—and also that His coming would ultimately mean their doom (Matt. 8:29). Rather than being forced to become disembodied spirits, the demons requested permission to enter a nearby large herd of pigs. Mark stated that this herd numbered "about 2,000" (Mark 5:13).

As soon as the demons entered them, the whole herd rushed down the steep bank into the lake, the Sea of Galilee, and drowned. Obviously, those keeping the herd were frightened and went into the nearby town to report this incredible event. The people of the town went out, and because of fear (Luke 8:37), pleaded with Jesus . . . to leave their region.

C. His power over men (8:18-22; 9:9)

In this section Matthew gave three illustrations to demonstrate the right of the King to ask servants to follow Him and to deny requests from those who were motivated improperly.

8:18-20 (Luke 9:57-58). A teacher of the Law (a scribe) came to Jesus and, seemingly without thinking, blurted out, Teacher, I will follow You wherever You go. Though Jesus desired disciples who would follow Him and work in His harvest fields, He wanted only those who were properly motivated. Jesus' reply to this scribe demonstrated His lowly character for He, in contrast with animals such as foxes and birds, did not even have a place where He could lay His head at night. He had no permanent home. The Lord obviously knew the heart of this person and saw that he desired fame in following a prominent Teacher. Such was not Jesus' character. This is the first of numerous times Jesus referred to Himself or was called by others the Son of Man (29 times in Matt., 14 in Mark, 24 in Luke, 13 in John). It points to Jesus as the Messiah (cf. Dan. 7:13-14).

8:21-22 (Luke 9:59-60). A second man, already a disciple of Jesus, requested that he be permitted to return home and bury his father. This man's father was not dead or even at the point of death. This disciple was simply saying he wanted to return home and wait until his father died. Then he would return and follow Jesus. His request demonstrated he felt discipleship was something he could pick up or lay down at will. He put material concerns ahead of Jesus, for he apparently wanted to receive the estate when his father died.

Jesus' response, Let the dead bury their own dead, showed that following Him carried with it the highest priority. Jesus said that the physically dead could be cared for by those who are spiritually dead.

8:23–9:8. These verses are discussed after 9:9.

9:9 (Mark 2:13-14; Luke 5:27-28). While it is not clear from either of the two preceding illustrations whether those men did follow Jesus, the third illustration is perfectly clear. The Lord met a man named Matthew sitting in a tax collector's booth. He collected taxes on customs paid at ports, in this case, Capernaum. To him Jesus issued the command, Follow Me. Immediately Matthew got up and began following Jesus. As King, Jesus had the right to select His disciples. Matthew was no doubt profoundly impressed with Jesus' person, teaching, and authority.

D. His power over nature (8:23-27) (Mark 4:35-41; Luke 8:22-25)

8:23-27. Another realm over which Jesus has authority is nature. This was proved as Jesus and His disciples started across the Sea of Galilee, a sea notorious for sudden storms that swept across it. However, in the midst of a furious storm (lit., "great earthquake," i.e., great turbulence), Jesus was asleep. The disciples, fearful of imminent death, awakened Jesus. First He rebuked them: You of little faith (cf. 6:30), why are you so afraid? Then He . . . rebuked the winds and the waves and there was absolute calm. His disciples who were seasoned fishermen had been through storms on this sea that had suddenly ceased. But after the wind would pass, the waves would continue to chop for a while. No wonder Matthew recorded their amazement as they wondered what kind of Man He is. They were amazed (ethaumasan; cf. 9:33) at the supernatural character of the One whose rebuke was sufficient to bring nature into perfect peace. This the Messiah will do when He institutes His kingdom, as He did when He revealed Himself to His disciples.

8:28-34. See comments on these verses under "B. His power over demonic forces (8:16-17, 28-34)."

E. His power to forgive (9:1-8) (Mark 2:1-12; Luke 5:17-26)

9:1-8. Returning from the eastern side of the Sea of Galilee, Jesus went to His own town, Capernaum. There the faith of some men was evident when a paralytic, lying on a mat was brought to Jesus. Mark explained that four men lowered him through the roof (Mark 2:3-4). Several religious leaders were present and heard Jesus tell this man, Take heart, son; your sins are forgiven. (The words "Take heart" are from the Gr. word tharseō, used here for the first of seven times in the NT [Matt. 9:2, 22; 14:27; Mark 6:50; 10:49; John 16:33; Acts 23:11]. It means "to take courage or cheer up.") Apparently the illness had resulted from his sin. Jesus was claiming divine authority, for only God can forgive sins (Mark 2:7; Luke 5:21). The leaders stumbled over this and said to themselves, Jesus is blaspheming! This was the first opposition of the religious leaders to Jesus. Knowing their thoughts, Jesus asked them whether it is easier to say one's sins are forgiven, or to tell him to arise and walk. While either statement could be spoken with ease, the first would be "easier" in that it could not be disproved by onlookers. If, however, Jesus had first said, Get up and walk, and the man remained paralyzed on his mat, it would be clear Jesus was not who He claimed to be. Jesus therefore spoke not only the easier words, but He also spoke of healing, thereby proving He has power to perform both acts, healing and forgiving sin. As a result the crowd was filled with awe (this word ephobēthēsan differs from the word for "amazed" [ethaumasan, from thaumazō], the disciples' reaction after the storm [Matt. 8:27]). They recognized the authority behind such actions, and they praised God.

9:9. See comments on this verse under "C. His power over men (8:18-22; 9:9)."

F. His power over traditions (9:10-17)

9:10-13 (Mark 2:15-17; Luke 5:29-32). After Matthew began to follow the Lord (Matt. 9:9), he held a dinner at his house. Since he had invited many of his associates to this dinner, many tax collectors and "sinners" were present. Perhaps this was to introduce them to the Savior. The Jews hated tax collectors, for they collected money to support the Romans, and tax collectors often took in more than necessary and pocketed the difference. Thus the Pharisees, who would never eat with such people, asked Jesus' disciples why He was eating with them. The Lord's response demonstrated that His ministry is directed toward those who realize they have a need: Only sick people need a doctor. The Pharisees did not think they were sinners (sick) so they would never have sought out the Lord (the Physician). The Pharisees always brought the proper sacrifices, but they were totally lacking in compassion toward sinners. When mercy is lacking, then religious formalities are meaningless (cf. Hosea 6:6).

9:14-17 (Mark 2:18-22; Luke 5:33-39). Not only did the Pharisees question Jesus' participation in this feast with tax collectors and "sinners," but disciples of John the Baptist also came and asked Jesus a question about taking part in such feasts. It was right for John and his disciples to fast, for they were calling people to repentance and to the coming kingdom. But John's disciples asked why Jesus' men were not fasting too.

Jesus answered that the kingdom is like a great feast (cf. Matt. 22:2; Isa. 25:6), in this case a wedding banquet. Since the King was now present, it was inappropriate for Him or His disciples to fast. At a wedding, people are happy and are eating, not mourning or fasting. Jesus did, however, anticipate His rejection for He added that a time would come when the bridegroom would be taken away.

Then He pictured the relationship between His ministry and that of John the Baptist. John was a reformer seeking to bring about repentance among those steeped in the traditions of Judaism. Jesus, however, was not out to patch up an old system, like sewing a new unshrunk cloth on an old garment, which would then tear, or pouring new wine into old wineskins, which would then burst. His purpose was to bring in something new. He had come to lead a group out of Judaism into the kingdom based on Him and His righteousness. True righteousness is not built on the Law or on Pharisaic traditions.

G. His power over death (9:18-26) (Mark 5:21-43; Luke 8:40-56)

9:18-26. In this section two miracles are described. A ruler (of the synagogue [Mark 5:22] probably at Capernaum), called Jairus in Mark and Luke, came to Jesus and requested healing for his daughter who, Luke added, was 12 years old (Luke 8:42). She had just died, Jairus said, but he believed Jesus could give her life. In the parallel Gospel accounts the father said she was "dying," not is "dead" (Mark 5:23; Luke 8:42). This apparent discrepancy is explained by the fact that while Jesus was speaking to Jairus, someone came from his house to tell him the girl had died. Matthew did not mention that detail, and therefore included the report of the girl's death in Jairus' request.

As Jesus . . . went on the way to deal with Jairus' daughter, He was interrupted by a woman who was healed as she in faith reached out and touched Jesus' cloak. Interestingly the duration of her hemorrhaging was the same as Jairus' daughter's age—12 years. The woman was ceremonially unclean (Lev. 15:19-30). Jesus stopped and called her Daughter (thygatēr, an affectionate term; cf. "the girl" [Matt. 9:24], korasion, possibly also an affectionate word like the Eng. "maiden"). Jesus said her faith was the reason she was healed. Undoubtedly Jairus' heart must have been encouraged by this act, for he too had faith in Jesus. On the words "take heart" (from tharseō) see comments on verse 2.

When the party arrived at Jairus' home, the flute players and the noisy crowd (of mourners, Luke 8:52) had already assembled to weep for the family. They believed the child was dead, for when Jesus said the girl was merely asleep . . . they laughed. Jesus was not denying that she was actually dead. He was simply comparing her dead condition to sleep. Like sleep, her death was temporary, and she would rise from it. After the crowd was dismissed, Jesus restored the girl to life. Such power truly belongs only to God, and news of the event spread throughout the land (cf. Matt. 9:31).

H. His power over darkness (9:27-31)

9:27-31. As Jesus traveled on, He was followed by two blind men who appealed to Him on the basis of the fact that He is the Son of David (cf. 12:23; 15:22; 20:30-31). This title clearly related Jesus to the messianic line (cf. 1:1). The persistence of the blind men was seen as they followed Jesus into a house where He miraculously restored their sight. Their faith was genuine for they truly believed He was able to heal them (9:28). They affirmed His deity for they acknowledged Him as Lord. Their sight was restored in keeping with their faith. In spite of Jesus' warning to tell no one about this event, His fame continued to spread throughout the region (cf. v. 26; 12:16). His warning was probably given to keep multitudes from thronging to Him merely for the purpose of physical healing. While Jesus did heal many from physical diseases, His miracles were for the purpose of authenticating His claims. Jesus came primarily for spiritual healing, not physical healing.

I. His power over dumbness (9:32-34)

9:32-34. As the two former blind men were leaving the house, a demon-possessed man was brought to Jesus. The demon had prevented the man from speaking. Jesus immediately healed him. When the dumb man spoke, the crowd marveled (ethaumasan; cf. 8:27) and said, Nothing like this has ever been seen in Israel. However, the religious leaders did not draw the same conclusion. They believed that Jesus was performing His miracles by the power of Satan, the prince of demons (cf. 10:25; 12:22-37).

J. His power to delegate authority (9:35–11:1)

1. THE WORK OBSERVED (9:35-38)

9:35-38. In verse 35 Matthew summarized Jesus' threefold ministry (see comments on 4:23, with its almost identical wording). Jesus had been going through all the towns and villages of Israel, teaching and preaching about the kingdom. His healing ministry was for the purpose of authenticating His Person. The spectacular nature of Jesus' ministry attracted large crowds.

As Jesus observed the crowds, He had compassion toward them. The verb "to have compassion" (splanchnizomai) is used in the New Testament only by the Synoptic Gospel writers: five times in Matthew (9:36; 14:14; 15:32; 18:27; 20:34), four in Mark (1:41; 6:34; 8:2; 9:22), and three in Luke (7:13; 10:33; 15:20; see comments on Luke 7:13). Suggesting strong emotion, it means "to feel deep sympathy." The related noun splanchna ("sympathy, affection, or inward feelings") is used once by Luke (1:78), eight times by Paul, and once by John (1 John 3:17).

Jesus saw that the people were harassed and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd. Like sheep bothered by wolves, lying down and unable to help themselves, and having no shepherd to guide and protect them, the people were maligned by the religious leaders, helpless before them, and wandering about with no spiritual guidance. The religious leaders, who should have been their shepherds, were keeping the sheep from following the true Shepherd. In response to the people's "helpless" condition, Jesus encouraged His disciples to beseech the Lord of the harvest, namely, God the Father, to send out additional workers (cf. Luke 10:2). The harvest was ready; for the kingdom was at hand (Matt. 4:17). But additional laborers were necessary to complete the harvest.

2. THE WORKERS NOTED (10:1-4) (MARK 3:13-19; LUKE 6:12-16)

10:1-4. It is not surprising that a listing of laborers follows Jesus' injunction in 9:38 to ask the Father for laborers. Twelve of the disciples (10:1) who were following Jesus (a "disciple," mathētēs, was a learner; cf. 11:29) were designated as "apostles." These Twelve were specifically sent forth ("apostle" means "one sent forth to represent an official") by Jesus and given His authority to cast out demons and heal every kind of disease and sickness. The 12 Apostles were here named in pairs and probably were sent out in that fashion ("He sent them out two by two" [Mark 6:7]).

Each time the 12 Apostles are listed, Peter is mentioned first (because of his prominence) and Judas, last. Jesus had changed Simon's name to Peter (John 1:42). Soon after the brothers Peter and Andrew followed Jesus, another set of brothers—James and John—did the same (Matt. 4:18-22). Philip, like Andrew and Peter, was from Bethsaida by the Sea of Galilee (John 1:44). Nothing is known about Bartholomew, except that he was possibly known as Nathanael (John 1:45-51). Thomas was called "Didymus" (twin) in John 11:16; he was one who questioned Jesus' resurrection (John 20:24-27). Matthew referred to himself by his former dubious occupation of tax collecting (whereas Mark and Luke simply listed him as Matthew). James son of Alphaeus is mentioned only in the lists of apostles; Thaddaeus may be the same as Judas, son of James (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). Simon the Zealot had been a member of the revolutionary Jewish Zealots, a political party that sought to overthrow the Roman Empire. And Judas Iscariot, of course, later betrayed the Lord (Matt. 26:47-50). "Iscariot" may mean "from Kerioth," a Judean town.

3. THE WORKERS INSTRUCTED (10:5-23)

a. The appropriate message (10:5-15) (Mark 6:7-13; Luke 9:1-6)

10:5-15. The message the 12 Apostles were to give concerning the kingdom (v. 7) was identical to John the Baptist's message (3:1) and Jesus' message (4:17). In addition Jesus told them to limit their proclamation to the nation Israel. In fact He specifically told them not to go to the Gentiles or to the Samaritans. The latter were half-breeds, part Jewish and part Gentile, whose origin began soon after 722 B.C. when Assyria conquered the Northern Kingdom and moved conquered peoples of northern Mesopotamia into Israel where they intermarried. The apostles were to go only to the lost sheep of Israel (cf. 15:24) because the kingdom message was for God's covenant people.

She needed to accept her King, who had arrived. If she did the nations would then be blessed through her (Gen. 12:3; Isa. 60:3).

The apostles' message, like their Lord's, would be authenticated by miracles (Matt. 10:8; cf. 9:35). They were not to make elaborate provisions for their travel, thus avoiding the impression they were engaged in a business enterprise. Included in the list of items they were not to take was a staff (cf. Luke 9:3). Mark, however, recorded that the apostles could take a staff (Mark 6:8). This problem is solved by observing that Matthew said they were not to "procure" (ktēsēsthe) extra items (Matt. 10:9), but Mark wrote that they could "take" (airōsen) any staffs they already had.

As the apostles ministered, they in turn were to be ministered to by their recipients. In every town or village they were to find a worthy person . . . and stay with that individual. Such "worthiness" would obviously be determined by a favorable response to the message preached. Those who rejected the message and failed to welcome the apostles were to be passed by. Shaking the dust off their feet as they left an inhospitable place symbolized their rejection of the Jewish city as if it were a despised Gentile city, whose very dust was unwanted. The Lord said that judgment on such people would be greater than that on Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19) when the final day of judgment comes. (I tell you the truth occurs in Matt. 10:15, 23, 42; cf. comments on 5:18.)

b. The anticipated response (10:16-23) (Mark 13:9-13; Luke 21:12-17)

10:16-23. The Lord's words to the apostles concerning the response to their ministry were not encouraging. Their task would be difficult for they would be like sheep among wolves (cf. 7:15, where false prophets are spoken of as "ferocious wolves"). It would be essential for them to be as shrewd as snakes and as innocent as doves, that is, wise in avoiding danger but harmless in not forcibly opposing the enemy. "Innocent" translates akeraioi (lit., "unmixed, pure"). It is used only twice elsewhere in the New Testament: Romans 16:19 and Philippians 2:15. In carrying out their ministries the apostles would be taken before their own Jewish leaders and flogged (cf. Acts 5:40) and be brought before Roman governors and Herodian kings. But the messengers need not worry, for the Holy Spirit, called here the Spirit of your Father, would give them words to say that would free them from arrest.

Even if the persecutions went to the point of betrayal of family members (Matt. 10:21) and extreme hatred (v. 22), Jesus promised them ultimate deliverance. The apostles were to continue their ministries, moving from place to place. But even though they moved out for the Lord, they would not be able to reach all the cities of Israel before the Son of Man would come.

These words of the Lord probably had an application beyond His own lifetime. What was proclaimed here was more fully demonstrated in the apostles' lives after the day of Pentecost (Acts 2) in the spread of the gospel in the church (e.g., Acts 4:1-13; 5:17-18, 40; 7:54-60). But these words will find their fullest manifestation in the days of the Tribulation when the gospel will be carried throughout the entire world before Jesus Christ returns in power and glory to establish His kingdom on the earth (Matt. 24:14).

4. THE WORKERS COMFORTED (10:24-33) (LUKE 12:2-9)

10:24-33. Jesus reminded the apostles He was not asking something of them He Himself had not already experienced. In reaction to His casting out a demon, the religious leaders had claimed He was working by the prince of the demons (cf. 9:34). If they accused Jesus (the Head of the house) of demonic power, surely they would say the same thing of His servants (the members of His household). Beelzebub (the Gr. has Beezeboul) was a name for Satan, the prince of the demons, perhaps derived from Baal-Zebub, god of the Philistine city of Ekron (2 Kings 1:2). "Beelzebub" means "lord of the flies," and "Beezeboul" or "Beelzeboul" means "lord of the high place."

However, the apostles need not fear the religious leaders who could destroy only the physical body (Matt. 10:28). The leaders' true motives will be revealed in the judgment (v. 26). Obedience to God, who ultimately is in charge of physical as well as spiritual life, is far more crucial.

The message they had received from the Lord privately (in the dark . . . whispered), they were to proclaim publicly without fear (speak in the daylight . . . proclaim from the [flat] housetops), for their Father was truly concerned for them and aware of their circumstances. He is aware of the death of a sparrow which is worth so little. Two sparrows were sold for a mere penny (assarion, a Gr. copper coin worth about 1/16 of a Roman denarius, a day's wages). God the Father also knows the number of hairs on a person's head (v. 30). The apostles were instructed not to fear for they, being far more valuable to God than sparrows, were seen and known by Him. Instead they were faithfully to confess (acknowledge, homologēsei) Jesus before men (v. 32). This would result in the Lord's acknowledging His servants before His Father; but failure to confess Him would result in His denial of them. Of the original 12 Apostles, only one, Judas Iscariot, fell into the latter category.

5. THE WORKERS ADMONISHED (10:34-39)

10:34-39. Jesus said He had come at this time not . . . to bring peace to the earth . . . but a sword which divides and severs. As a result of His visit to earth, some children would be set against parents and a man's enemies might be those within his own household. This is because some who follow Christ are hated by their family members. This may be part of the cost of discipleship, for love of family should not be greater than love for the Lord (v. 37; cf. comments on Luke 14:26). A true disciple must take his cross and follow Jesus (cf. Matt. 16:24). He must be willing to face not only family hatred, but also death, like a criminal carrying his cross to his own execution. In addition, in those days a criminal carrying his cross was tacitly admitting that the Roman Empire was correct in executing its death sentence on him. Similarly Jesus' followers were admitting His right over their lives. In so doing one would find his life in return for having given it up to Jesus Christ (cf. comments on 16:25).

6. THE WORKERS REWARDED (10:40–11:1)

10:40–11:1. Those who faithfully served the Lord and who faithfully received these workers were promised rewards. To receive a prophet and his message was tantamount to receiving Jesus Christ. (Here the apostles were called prophets for they were recipients and communicators of God's message; cf. 10:27.) Therefore even a cup of cold water given to one of these little ones, these insignificant disciples of Jesus, would be detected by the One who keeps accounts. The reward is in keeping with the act performed. With these words of instruction, Jesus departed to teach and preach in . . . Galilee (11:1). With the Twelve having received delegated authority from the Lord, it may be assumed that they departed and carried out Jesus' instructions. The words, After Jesus had finished instructing, indicate another turning point in the book (cf. 7:28; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1).

IV. Challenge to the King's Authority (11:2–16:12)

A. Seen in the rejection of John the Baptist (11:2-19) (Luke 7:18-35)

11:2-3. Matthew had recorded (4:12) that John the Baptist had been put in prison. The cause for his imprisonment was stated by Matthew later (14:3-4). When John heard of all Jesus was doing, he sent some of his disciples to ask Jesus, Are You the One who was to come, or should we expect someone else? The words "the One who was to come" are a messianic title based on Psalms 40:7 and 118:26 (cf. Mark 11:9; Luke 13:35). John must have thought, If I am Messiah's forerunner and Jesus is the Messiah, why am I in prison? John needed reassurance and clarification, for he had expected the Messiah to overcome wickedness, judge sin, and bring in His kingdom.

2. JESUS' ANSWER (11:4-6)

11:4-6. Jesus did not answer John with a direct yes or no. Instead, He told John's disciples, Go back and report to John what they heard and saw taking place. Among the notable events occurring were the blind being given sight . . . lame people walking, lepers being cured, the deaf hearing, the dead being given life, and the good news being preached to the poor. These works would, of course, indicate that Jesus indeed is the Messiah (Isa. 35:5-6; 61:1). Those who did not miss the true character of the Lord would be truly blessed. Though He will ultimately bring judgment to this world by judging sin when He brings in His kingdom, the timing then was not appropriate. Israel's rejection of Him was causing a postponement in establishing the physical kingdom. But all, including John, who truly perceived the person and work of Christ would be blessed.

3. JESUS' DISCOURSE (11:7-19)

11:7-15. John's question prompted Jesus to give a discourse to the crowd. Perhaps some began to wonder about John's commitment to the Messiah in light of his question. So Jesus explained that John was not weak and vacillating. He was not a papyrus reed that could be shaken by every breeze that blew. Nor was he a man dressed in fine clothes, the kind worn in kings' palaces. In fact John the Baptist wore the opposite (3:4). John was a true prophet who proclaimed the message that God demanded repentance. In fact he was even more than a prophet, for he, in fulfillment of Malachi 3:1, was Jesus' own messenger or forerunner. Mark in his Gospel (Mark 1:2-3) combined this prophecy from Malachi 3:1 with Isaiah's prophecy (Isa. 40:3) concerning the one who would prepare Jesus' way. Jesus added that of all men who had lived on earth, none was greater than John the Baptist. And yet one who is least in the kingdom will be greater than John. The privileges of Jesus' disciples sharing in the kingdom will be far greater than anything anyone could experience on earth.

But the kingdom had been subject to violence and evil men were trying to take it by force (Matt. 11:12). The religious leaders of Jesus' day (forceful men) were resisting the movement introduced by John, Jesus, and the apostles. Forcefully advancing (biazetai) could be rendered in the passive, "is violently treated." (The verb lay hold of [harpazousin] means "to grasp" in the sense of resisting or laying claim to it on their own). Those leaders wanted a kingdom, but not the kind Jesus was offering. So they were resisting the message and attempting to establish their own rule. But John's message was true, and if the nation would accept it, and consequently accept Jesus, John would fulfill the prophecies of Elijah. Only if they accepted the message would John the Baptist be the Elijah who was to come (cf. Mal. 4:5). Because the nation rejected the Messiah, Elijah's coming is still future (cf. Mal. 4:6 with Acts 3:21).

11:16-19. Jesus compared that generation to a group of little children sitting in the marketplaces who could not be pleased by anything. Like children rejecting the suggestions to "play" wedding (flute . . . dance) or funeral (dirge . . . mourn) music, the people rejected both John and Jesus. They were not satisfied with John the Baptist because he did not eat or drink, or with Jesus who did eat and drink with sinners. They said John had a demon, and they rejected Jesus as a glutton and a drunkard and a friend of tax collectors and "sinners." Though that generation was not happy with anything, the wisdom of the approach of both John and Jesus would be proved right by the results, namely, that many people would be brought into the kingdom.

B. Seen in the condemnation of the cities (11:20-30)

11:20-24. Though it was not Jesus' primary thrust in His First Advent to pronounce judgment, He did denounce sin. Here He specifically pronounced condemnation against the cities in which some of His most significant miracles had occurred—Korazin . . . Bethsaida, and Capernaum, all three near the Sea of Galilee's northwest shore. By contrast, three terribly wicked Gentile cities—Tyre and Sidon (v. 22), cities on the Phoenician coast 35 and 60 miles, respectively, from the Sea of Galilee (cf. 15:21), and Sodom (11:23), more than 100 miles south—would have repented if they had seen Jesus' miracles. Their judgment, though terrible, is less than that on the Jewish cities. All three Galilean cities, in spite of their greater "light," rejected the Messiah, and are today in ruins. Though Jesus lived in Capernaum for some time, it would not be lifted up to the skies, or exalted. Instead its inhabitants would go down to the depths, literally, to hades, the place of the dead.

11:25-30. In contrast with His condemnation on the three Galilean cities

(vv. 20-24), Jesus issued a great call to those who in faith would turn to Him. Jesus had previously condemned that generation for their childish reactions (vv. 16-19). Here He declared that true discipleship can be enjoyed only by those who come to Him in childlike faith. God in His good pleasure (cf. Eph. 1:5) had hidden the great mysteries of His wise dealings from the wise and learned (the leaders of that day) but had revealed them to little children. This was possible because God the Son and God the Father know each other perfectly in the intimacy of the Trinity (Matt. 11:27). ("Father" occurs five times in vv. 25-27.) Hence the only ones who can know the Father and the things He has revealed are those whom the Son chooses (cf. John 6:37).

Therefore Jesus issued a call to all . . . who are weary (hoi kopiōntes, "those tired from hard toil") and burdened (pephortismenoi, "those loaded down"; cf. phortion, "load," in Matt. 11:30) to come to Him. People's weariness comes from enduring their burdens, probably the burdens of sin and its consequences. Rather, they should come and yoke themselves with Jesus. By placing themselves under His yoke and learning from Him, they may find rest for their souls from sins' burdens. By yoking, they become true disciples of Jesus and join Him in His proclamation of divine wisdom. To learn (mathete) from Him is to be His disciple (mathētēs). People can trade their heavy, tiring burdens for His yoke and burden (phortion, "load"), which by contrast are easy and light. To serve Him is no burden, for He, in contrast with those who reject Him, is gentle (praus; cf. 5:5) and humble.

C. Seen in the controversies over His authority (chap. 12)

1. SABBATH CONTROVERSIES (12:1-21)

a. Working on the Sabbath (12:1-8) (Mark 2:23-28; Luke 6:1-5)

12:1-8. As Jesus and His disciples were going through the grainfields on the Sabbath, His disciples began to pick the wheat and eat the grain. The Pharisees immediately jumped on this "violation" of the Law (Ex. 20:8-11) and accused the disciples of working on the Sabbath. According to the Pharisees, plucking wheat from its stem is reaping, rubbing the wheat heads between one's palms is threshing, and blowing away the chaff is winnowing!

Jesus, however, disputed the Pharisees' claim, using three illustrations. First, he cited an event in the life of David (Matt. 12:3-4). As he fled from Saul, David was given the consecrated bread which had been removed from the tabernacle (1 Sam. 21:1-6), and was normally reserved for the priests alone (Lev. 24:9). David believed that preserving his life was more important than observing a technicality. Second, the priests in the temple were involved in work on the Sabbath (Matt. 12:5; cf. Num. 28:9-10, 18-19), yet they were considered blameless. Third, Jesus argued that He Himself was greater than the temple (Matt. 12:6; cf. "One greater" in vv. 41-42), for He is Lord of the Sabbath, that is, He controls what can be done on it, and He did not condemn the disciples (the innocent) for their action. The Pharisees were splitting hairs with their technicalities about reaping, threshing, and winnowing. They failed to understand compassion for people's basic needs (in this case, the disciples' hunger; cf. Deut. 23:24-25), but were intense in their concern for the sacrifices. Jesus reminded them of the words in Hosea 6:6, I desire mercy, not sacrifice, that is, inner spiritual vitality, not mere external formality.

b. Healing on the Sabbath (12:9-14) (Mark 3:1-6; Luke 6:6-11)

12:9-14. The first controversy (vv. 1-8) was barely over when Jesus arrived in the synagogue. Since it was the Sabbath Day, one would expect Jesus to be in the synagogue. A man with a shriveled hand was there. Since the Pharisees were continually looking for some way to accuse Jesus, they undoubtedly planted this man in the synagogue to create an incident. The Pharisees raised the question, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath? Jesus answered their question, as He often did, with another question. If one's sheep would fall into a pit on the Sabbath, would he not . . . lift the sheep out of the pit, even though this might be construed as work? An act of mercy toward an animal was perfectly in order. Since people are much more valuable than animals, mercy should be extended toward them even on Sabbath Days. Jesus thus removed any possible objection to what He was going to do, for Scripture did not forbid it and His logic was flawless. His healing the man, however, did not prompt faith in the Pharisees for they went out and plotted how they might kill Jesus.

c. Jesus' reaction (12:15-21)

12:15-21. Jesus knew what the Pharisees were trying to do through these Sabbath controversies. As many people continued to follow Him . . . He healed all their sick but warned them not to tell who He is (cf. 9:30). To publicize that He is the Messiah would only invite more opposition. This was to fulfill the prophecy in Isaiah (42:1-4), obviously a messianic passage. "It suits Matthew's argument well. First, it shows how the withdrawal of the King fits the work of the Messiah. He shall not wrangle or cry out in the streets. It is also a fitting picture of His compassion, for he will not break a battered reed or put out a smoldering wick. . . . A second argument presented by the prophecy is the divine approval of the Messiah. Though He does not cry out or engage in open conflicts, He is still God's Servant who shall carry out God's program" (Toussaint, Behold the King, p. 161).

The Trinity appears in Matthew 12:18 (quoting from Isa. 42:1). God the Father spoke of Christ as My Servant, and His Spirit was on the Messiah, who proclaimed justice. In Christ the nations . . . hope (Matt. 12:21).

2. SATANIC CONDEMNATION (12:22-37)

12:22-24. Though the text does not state who brought this demon-possessed man to Jesus . . . they (v. 22) may refer to the Pharisees (cf. v. 14). Probably the Pharisees discovered this man and realized the difficult nature of his case. He was both blind and mute, so communication with him was almost impossible. The man could not see what someone might want him to do, and while he could hear instructions, he would not be able to respond. Jesus immediately healed him by removing the demon, and the man both spoke and saw. The people (lit., "all the crowds") were astonished (existanto, "were beside themselves"; cf. comments on 7:28 on other words for amazement) and asked, Could this be the Son of David? In other words, "Is not this the promised Messiah, David's Descendant (cf. 2 Sam. 7:14-16) who has come to rule over us and bring healing to our nation?" While the people were asking this question, the Pharisees were concluding that Jesus' power must be attributed to Beelzebub, the prince of demons (cf. Matt. 9:34; on the meaning of "Beelzebub" see comments on 10:25; Mark 3:22).

12:25-29. Knowing what the Pharisees were thinking, Jesus defended His authority. This was one of the few times He did so, but the issue was clear. Jesus gave three arguments to answer the claim that He was working by Satan's power. First, He said if He were casting out a demon by Satan's power, then Satan would be working against himself (vv. 25-26). Why would Satan let Jesus cast out a demon and free a man who was already under his control? To do so would divide Satan's kingdom and bring it to destruction.

Second, Jesus asked them about contemporary Jewish exorcists, those who were able to cast out demons by the power of God (v. 27). The apostles had been given that authority (10:1) and others were thought to possess such power. Jesus was saying in essence, "If you believe exorcists work by the power of God in casting out demons, why do you not think I have that same divine power?"

Third, by driving out demons, He was proving He was greater than Satan. He was able to go into Satan's realm (the strong man's house), the demonic world, and come away with the spoils of victory (12:29). Since He could do this, He was able to institute the kingdom of God among them (v. 28). If He were driving out demons by Satan's power, He certainly could not be offering the people God's kingdom. That would be contradictory. The fact that He was coming to establish the kingdom clearly showed that He worked by the power of the Spirit of God, not by Satan's power.

12:30-37. Jesus then invited the people to make a clear decision. They must either be with Him or against Him. He gave a strong warning to those moving away from Him. Understandably some would not comprehend who Jesus is. A divine Person living among men would naturally not be appreciated fully. That was why allowances for such actions were made: Anyone who speaks a word against the Son of Man will be forgiven. But while the person of Jesus was not fully comprehended, the power evidenced through Him should never have been misunderstood, especially by religious leaders.

The nation, because of its leaders, was on the brink of making a decision that would bring irreversible consequences. They were about to attribute incorrectly to Satan the power of the Holy Spirit exercised through Jesus and thus to commit the blasphemy against the Spirit. This specific sin cannot be reproduced today, for it required Jesus' presence on earth with His performing miracles through the Spirit's power. If, however, the leaders, acting on behalf of the nation, concluded that Jesus was empowered by Satan, they would commit a sin that would never find national or individual forgiveness (in this Age or in the Age to come). The consequences would bring about God's judgment on the nation and on any individual who persisted in that view.

The contrasts Jesus made between the good tree and its fruit and the bad tree and its fruit demonstrated the choices (cf. 7:16-20). Jesus condemned the Pharisees as a brood of vipers who could never say anything good because their hearts were evil. People are responsible for all their actions and words, which will acquit or condemn them on the day of judgment.

3. SIGN-SEEKERS (12:38-50)

12:38-42 (Luke 11:29-32). Though Jesus had just performed a significant sign-miracle, the religious leaders asked for a miraculous sign (cf. Matt. 16:1). Their statement implied that they rejected the many signs given so far. In effect they were saying, "We would just like to see one good sign from You." The Lord suggested that signs should not be necessary for faith, even though He had given them many signs. Only a wicked and adulterous generation asked for signs (cf. 16:4). ("Adulterous" [moichalis] suggests that Israel was spiritually unfaithful to God by its religious formality and its rejection of the Messiah.)

But no more signs would be given to that generation except the sign of the Prophet Jonah (cf. 16:4). As Jonah was . . . in the belly of a huge fish for three days and three nights . . . the Son of Man would be in the heart of the earth for three days and three nights. (Since the Jews reckoned part of a day as a full day, the "three days and three nights" could permit a Friday crucifixion.) Of course, by giving this sign Jesus was demonstrating that they had already decided to reject Him. For Him to fulfill this sign, He would have to be rejected, die, and be buried. By the time this sign would be accomplished, it would be too late for them to accept His right to rule over the nation as King.

The generation He addressed had an unusual privilege, afforded to no previous generation. The men of Nineveh . . . repented at the preaching of a mere man, Jonah. The Queen of the South (i.e., the Queen of Sheba; 1 Kings 10:1-13) came . . . to listen to the wisdom of a man, Solomon. The response of the Ninevites and of the Queen was commendable. But One greater than Jonah and Solomon (cf. Matt. 12:6) was with this generation, and instead of accepting Him, they were rejecting Him. (The words One greater than should be trans. "something greater than," referring to the kingdom, for the word pleion ["greater than"] is neuter, not masc.) Their judgment will be certain when they stand before the Judge in the final day. Again pagan peoples were more responsive than the Jewish nation itself (cf. 11:20-24).

12:43-45 (Luke 11:24-26). This generation of sign-seekers stood condemned in the final judgment. To show what their condition on earth would be if they persisted in unbelief, Jesus compared them to a man who had found deliverance from a demon (an evil spirit), perhaps through a Jewish exorcist (cf. Matt. 12:27). After the man was delivered, he tried by every natural means to clean up his life and set things in order. But mere "religion" is never effective so the man lacked a supernatural conversion. Consequently he was subject to possession again with more serious ramifications. Instead of one demon possessing him, he became possessed by seven other spirits. His latter condition was worse than his former. The Pharisees and other religious leaders were in danger of that happening to them for their attempts at reformation, without the power of God, were sterile. They clearly did not understand God's power, for they had just confused the power of the Spirit with the power of Satan (vv. 24-28). Thus they were wide-open targets for Satan.

12:46-50 (Mark 3:31-35; Luke 8:19-21). As Jesus concluded His statements, His mother and brothers desired to communicate with Him. The Apostle John made it clear that His brothers (actually half brothers, born to Mary after Jesus was born) did not believe in Him before His resurrection (John 7:5). Perhaps here they were trying to attach themselves to Jesus and receive special favors through family ties. Jesus stated that true discipleship comes not through physical relationships but only through obedience to the will of the Father. Mere religion (Matt. 12:43-45) and family relationships (vv. 46-50) cannot obtain merit before God. Following God's will makes one a disciple (cf. 7:21).

D. Seen in the change in the kingdom program (13:1-52)

The previous chapter (12) is probably the major turning point in the book. The King had authenticated His power by various miracles. But growing opposition to the King climaxed when Israel's leaders concluded that Jesus worked not by divine power but by satanic power (9:34; 12:22-37). While their full rejection of Him did not occur until later, the die was cast. Therefore Jesus turned to His disciples and began to instruct them along different lines. This is one of several major discourses in the Gospel of Matthew (others are in chaps. 5–7; 10; 23–25).

1. THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER (13:1-23)

13:1-9 (Mark 4:1-9; Luke 8:4-8). As Jesus continued to minister to crowds of people, He did something He had not done before. For the first time in Matthew's Gospel, Jesus told parables. The word "parable" comes from two Greek words (para and ballō), which together mean "to throw alongside." A parable, like an illustration, makes a comparison between a known truth and an unknown truth; it throws them alongside each other. In the first of seven parables in this chapter Jesus told about a farmer who sowed seed in his field. The emphasis in the story is on the results of the sowing, for the seed fell on four kinds of soil: along the path (Matt. 13:4), on rocky places (v. 5), among thorns (v. 7), and on good soil (v. 8). So the farmer had four kinds of results.

13:10-17 (Mark 4:10-12; Luke 8:9-10). The disciples immediately noticed a change in Jesus' method of teaching. They came and asked Him directly why He was speaking in parables. The Lord gave three reasons. First, He was communicating through parables in order to continue to reveal truth to His disciples (Matt. 13:11-12a). The Lord said He was making known to them the secrets of the kingdom of heaven. The word "secrets" is translated "mysteries" in other Bible versions and in most of its other NIV occurrences. This term in the New Testament referred to truths not revealed in the Old Testament but which now were made known to those instructed.

Why did Matthew frequently use the term "kingdom of heaven" whereas Mark, Luke, and John used only "kingdom of God" and never "kingdom of heaven"? Some scholars answer that "heaven" was a softened reference to God by Jews who, out of reverence, avoided saying the word "God." However, Matthew did occasionally write "kingdom of God" (12:28; 19:24; 21:31, 43). And he used the word "God" almost 50 times. A distinction seems intended: The "kingdom of God" never includes unsaved people, but the "kingdom of heaven" includes both saved people and also others who profess to be Christians but are not. This is seen in the Parable of the Wheat and Weeds (see comments on 13:24-30, 36-43), the Parable of the Mustard Seed (see comments on vv. 31-35), and the Parable of the Net (see comments on vv. 47-52).

Significantly Jesus did not speak of any "mysteries" concerning the kingdom of heaven until the nation had made its decision concerning Him. That decision was made by the leaders when they attributed His divine power to Satan (9:34; 12:22-37). Now Jesus unveiled certain additional facts not given in the Old Testament about His reign on earth. Many Old Testament prophets had predicted that the Messiah would deliver the nation Israel and establish His kingdom on the earth. Jesus came and offered the kingdom (4:17), but the nation rejected Him (12:24). In view of that rejection what would happen to God's kingdom? The "secrets" of the kingdom now reveal that an entire Age would intervene between Israel's rejection of the King and her later acceptance of Him.

Second, Jesus spoke in parables to hide the truth from unbelievers. The secrets of the kingdom would be given to the disciples, but would be hidden from the religious leaders who rejected Him (13:11b, but not to them). In fact, even what they had previously known would no longer be clear to them (v. 12). Jesus' parabolic instruction thus carried with it a judgmental aspect. By using parables in public, Jesus could preach to as many individuals as before, but He could then draw the disciples aside and explain to them fully the meaning of His words.

Third, He spoke in parables in order to fulfill Isaiah 6:9-10. As Isaiah began his ministry, God told him that people would not comprehend his message. Jesus experienced the same kind of response. He preached the Word of God and many people saw but they did not truly perceive; they heard but did not . . . understand (Matt. 13:13-15).

By contrast, the disciples were blessed because they were privileged to see (understand) and hear these truths (v. 16), truths that people in Old Testament times longed to know (v. 17; cf. 1 Peter 1:10-11). Jesus' disciples heard the same truths as the national leaders, but their response was entirely different. The disciples saw and believed; the leaders saw and rejected. Since the leaders turned from the light they had been given, God gave them no additional light.

13:18-23 (Mark 4:13-20; Luke 8:11-15). In Jesus' interpretation of the Parable of the Sower, He compared the four results of sowing to four responses to the kingdom message. This was the message preached by John, Jesus, and the apostles. First, when one hears the message but does not understand it, the devil (evil one; cf. Matt. 13:38-39; 1 John

5:19) snatches away the Word that was sown. This is seed sown on the path. The next two results—represented by seed on rocky places that had no root, and by seed among the thorns (worries and wealth) that choke it out—speak of hearers' initial interest, but with no genuine heartfelt response. The seed on rocky soil speaks of a person who hears the Word but falls away (lit., "is offended," skandalizetai; cf. Matt. 13:57; 15:12) when he faces trouble for having expressed interest in the Word. Only the seed that fell on good soil had an abiding result and the production of a crop that increased 100, 60, or 30 times what had been sown. The one who believes Jesus' word (the man who hears the Word and understands it) will then receive and understand even more (cf. 13:12).

The difference in these results was not in the seed but in the soil on which the seed fell. As the gospel of the kingdom was presented, the good news was the same. The difference was in the individuals who heard that Word. The Lord was not saying that an exact 25 percent of those who heard the message would believe. But He was saying that a majority would not respond positively to the good news. In this parable Jesus demonstrated why the Pharisees and religious leaders rejected His message. They were not "prepared soil" for the Word. The "mystery" concerning the kingdom Jesus presented here was the truth that the good news was rejected by the majority. This had not been revealed in the Old Testament.

2. THE PARABLE OF THE WHEAT AND THE WEEDS (13:24-30, 36-43)

13:24-30. In the second parable, Jesus again used the figure of the sower, but with a different twist. After a farmer sowed his wheat seed, an enemy came at night and sowed weeds on the same soil. As a result, the wheat and the weeds grew together and would continue to do so till the time of harvest, for removing the weeds early would result in destroying the wheat (vv. 28-29). Therefore they must grow together until the harvest when the weeds would first be gathered out and destroyed. Then . . . the wheat would be gathered into the barn.

13:31-35. These verses are discussed later, after verse 43.

13:36-43. As Jesus and His disciples came into a house away from the crowd they asked for an explanation of this "wheat and weeds" parable. First, He said, the sower of the good seed is the Son of Man, the Lord Himself. This fact is an important starting point for understanding parables. The parables cover the time beginning with the Lord Himself on earth ministering and proclaiming the good news.

Second, the field is the world into which the good news is spread.

Third, the good seed represents the sons of the kingdom. The good seed in this parable corresponds to the seed in the first parable that produced a fruitful crop. The weeds are the sons of the evil one (cf. v. 19) that had been sown among the wheat by the enemy . . . the devil. This condition of the kingdom was never revealed in the Old Testament, which spoke of a kingdom of righteousness in which evil would be overcome.

Fourth, the harvest is the end of the Age, and the harvesters are angels (cf. v. 49). This fact gives the ending of the time period suggested by these parables. "The end of the Age" represents the conclusion of the present Age before Christ establishes the messianic kingdom. Thus the parables in Matthew 13 cover the period of time from Christ's work on earth to the time of the judgment at His return. At His second coming, the angels will gather the wicked and throw them into judgment (vv. 40-42; cf. vv. 49-50; 2 Thes. 1:7-10; Rev. 19:15).

At that time there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew frequently mentioned this reaction to judgment (Matt. 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30), and Luke mentioned it once (Luke 13:28). Each time it is used, it refers to judgment on sinners before the Millennium is established. "Weeping" suggests sorrow and grief (emotional agony of the lost in hell), and grinding of one's teeth speaks of pain (physical agony in hell). These are some of the many references in Matthew to judgment. Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father (Matt. 13:43; cf. Dan. 12:3).

In this period between Jesus' rejection and His future return He the King is absent but His kingdom continues, though in a newly revealed form. This Age is broader than but includes the Church Age. The church did not begin until the day of Pentecost, and it will conclude at the Rapture, at least seven years before the end of this Age. This "mystery period" is characterized by profession of faith but also by a counter-profession that cannot be separated until the final judgment. This mystery period does not involve a universal triumph of the gospel, as postmillennialists affirm, nor does it include Christ's earthly reign. It simply is the time between His two Advents, before He returns to institute the kingdom promised to David through his greater Son.

3. THE PARABLE OF THE MUSTARD SEED (13:31-32)
(MARK 4:30-32; LUKE 13:18-19)

13:31-32. Another parable Jesus presented to the crowd likened the kingdom of heaven to a mustard seed. This seed was in fact the smallest of the garden seeds known. (Orchard seeds, though smaller, were unknown in that part of the world.) Also "small as a mustard seed" was a proverb by which people then referred to something unusually small (e.g., "faith as small as a mustard seed," 17:20).

Though its seed is so small, a mustard plant grows to a great height (12-15 feet!) in one season, and is a nesting place for the birds of the air. Jesus did not directly interpret this parable. However, its meaning may be that the sphere of professing followers, sometimes called Christendom, which Jesus mentioned in the second parable, would have a small beginning but would grow rapidly into a large entity. This group could include both believers and unbelievers, as indicated by the birds lodging in the branches of the tree. Other interpreters feel, however, that the presence of the birds is not an indication of evil but simply an expression of prosperity and bounty.

4. THE PARABLE OF THE YEAST (13:33-35)

13:33-35. In this fourth parable Jesus compared the kingdom of heaven to yeast (leaven) which, when mixed into a large amount of flour, continues to work till all the dough is permeated. Many expositors teach that the yeast here represents evil present in the interval of time between the Advents of the King. In the Bible yeast often represents evil (e.g., Ex. 12:15; Lev. 2:11; 6:17; 10:12; Matt. 16:6, 11-12; Mark 8:15; Luke 12:1; 1 Cor. 5:7-8; Gal. 5:8-9). However, if the yeast in this parable represents evil, the idea would be redundant for evil was already represented by the weeds in the second parable. Therefore some feel that Jesus had in mind here the dynamic character of yeast. The nature of yeast is such that once the process of leavening begins, it is impossible to stop. Perhaps Jesus was implying that those who profess to belong to the kingdom would grow in numbers and nothing would be able to stop their advance. This idea fits with the nature of yeast and makes sense in the flow of these parables.

Matthew added (Matt. 13:34-35) that is in keeping with Jesus' earlier statements (cf. vv. 11-12). By speaking in parables Jesus was fulfilling Scripture (Ps. 78:2) and at the same time was teaching truths not previously revealed.

13:36-43. See comments on these verses under "2. The Parable of the Wheat and the Weeds (13:24-30, 36-43)."

5. THE PARABLE OF THE HIDDEN TREASURE (13:44)

13:44. In a fifth parable Jesus compared the kingdom of heaven to treasure hidden in a field. A man having discovered the treasure, then bought that field in order to have the treasure for himself. Since the Lord did not interpret this parable, a variety of interpretive views are held. In the flow of this chapter, it seems best to understand this to be a reference to Israel, God's "treasured possession" (Ex. 19:5; Ps. 135:4). One reason Jesus came into the world was to redeem Israel, so that He could be viewed as the One who sold all He had (viz., the glories of heaven; cf. John 17:5; 2 Cor. 8:9; Phil. 2:5-8) in order to purchase the treasure.

6. THE PARABLE OF THE PEARL (13:45-46)

13:45-46. This parable, also not interpreted by the Lord, may be linked with the previous one. The pearl of great value may represent the church, the bride of Jesus Christ. Pearls are uniquely formed. "Its formation occurs because of an irritation in the tender side of an oyster. There is a sense in which the church was formed out of the wounds of Christ and has been made possible by His death and sacrifice" (John F. Walvoord, Matthew: Thy Kingdom Come, p. 105). The merchant who sold everything he had in order to buy the highly valued pearl represents Jesus Christ who through His death provided redemption for those who would believe. These two parables in close proximity—the treasure and the pearl—teach that within the period of time when the King is absent, Israel would continue to exist and the church would be growing.

7. THE PARABLE OF THE NET (13:47-52)

13:47-50. Jesus' seventh parable compares the kingdom of heaven to a net that was let down into the lake so that a great catch of fish was hauled in. The fishermen pulled the full net to shore and sorted out the fish, collecting the good ones in baskets and throwing the bad ones away. Jesus said this sorting represents the angelic separation of the wicked from the righteous at the end of the Age (v. 49; cf. vv. 37-43). This separation will occur when Jesus Christ returns to establish His kingdom on earth (cf. 25:30).

13:51-52. Jesus asked the disciples if they had understood all He told them. Their yes answer is surprising, for they could not have known the full implications of these parables. In fact the disciples' subsequent questions and actions proved that they did not really comprehend the parables. Jesus, however, was performing the function of an owner of a house who could bring new and old treasures out of his storeroom.

In these seven parables He presented some truths they were well aware of and others that were new to them. They knew about a kingdom over which Messiah would rule and reign, but they did not know it would be rejected at the time it was offered. They knew the kingdom would include righteousness, but they did not know it would also include evil. Jesus pointed up a new truth that the period between His rejection and His second coming would be characterized by professing followers, both good and evil. This era would have a small beginning, but it would grow into a great "kingdom" of professors. Once this process began, it could not be stopped, and within it God is maintaining His people Israel and creating His church. This interadvent period will end with a time of judgment in which God will separate the wicked from the righteous and the righteous will then enter the earthly kingdom to rule and reign with Christ. Through these parables Jesus answered the question, What happened to the kingdom? The answer: God's kingdom will be established on earth at Jesus' second coming; meanwhile good and evil coexist.

E. Seen in various rejections (13:53–16:12)

1. REJECTION IN THE CITY OF NAZARETH (13:53-58)
(MARK 6:1-6)

13:53-58. After instructing His disciples, Jesus returned to His hometown (Nazareth; Luke 1:26-27; Matt. 2:23; 21:11; John 1:45) and taught the people in their synagogue. On a previous visit to Nazareth, the populace had rejected His teaching and attempted to throw Him over a cliff (Luke 4:16-29). This time the people were impressed with His powers and teachings, but they rejected Him. They remembered Him as the carpenter's Son (Matt. 13:55). They mentioned four (half) brothers (not cousins) of Jesus, children born to Mary and Joseph after the birth of Jesus Christ. Three of these sons—James . . . Simon, and Judas—are not to be confused with three of the Twelve by the same names. The people of Nazareth refused to believe in Jesus Christ and hampered His ministry there. Nazareth's problem was the danger of the familiar for the city's residents could not see beyond the young Man who had grown up among them. Surely One so "ordinary" could not be the promised Messiah. Consequently they rejected the Messiah and took offense at Him. Jesus was not surprised, for He cited what has become a common proverb, namely, that a prophet is not honored in his own hometown and family. As a result of their lack of faith, Jesus performed few miracles there.

2. REJECTION IN THE ACTIONS OF HEROD (CHAP. 14)

a. The execution of John the Baptist (14:1-12)
(Mark 6:14-29; Luke 3:19-20; 9:7-9)

14:1-12. As the news concerning Jesus and His mighty works spread, Herod heard about Jesus and His miraculous powers. This was Herod Antipas, who ruled over a fourth of Palestine (hence the title the tetrarch), including Galilee and Perea. He ruled from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. His father Herod the Great had killed the Bethlehem babies (2:16). Herod Antipas judged Jesus when He was on trial (Luke 23:7-12). (See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5.)

Herod concluded that Jesus was John the Baptist . . . risen from the dead (cf. Luke 9:7). Matthew's last reference to John the Baptist was John's sending messengers to Jesus to inquire about Him (Matt. 11:2-14). The story concerning John was now completed by Matthew. Herod Antipas had arrested John . . . because of Herodias. John had publicly condemned Herod, who was living with Herodias, his sister-in-law. She was his brother Philip's wife so this was an immoral relationship. Herod Antipas wanted to execute John but was fearful, for the people loved John and thought him to be a prophet. Therefore he only removed John from the public by placing him in prison. But at a birthday celebration Salome, Herodias' daughter . . . danced. She so delighted Herod that he foolishly promised her anything she wanted. Her request, Give me here on a platter the head of John the Baptist, was not her idea, for she was prompted by her mother Herodias. Though this request greatly distressed (lypētheis means to be grieved or sad to the point of distress; cf. 18:31; 19:22) Herod, he was caught in a trap for his oath was at stake (14:9). So he granted the wish and John was beheaded.

John's disciples gave his body a decent burial, and reported to Jesus what had happened. Herod's act was another illustration of the rejection of Jesus, for Matthew so connected the ministries of these two men that what happened to one was viewed as having a direct effect on the other. Herod, by rejecting the King's forerunner, was rejecting the King who followed him.

b. The exit of Jesus (14:13-36)

When Jesus learned of John the Baptist's death, He withdrew with His disciples to a remote place. From this time on, the ministry of Jesus was directed primarily toward His disciples. His goal seemed to be to instruct them in light of the fact that He would be leaving them. He said almost nothing more to the nation to convince them He is the Messiah.

14:13-21 (Mark 6:30-44; Luke 9:10-17; John 6:1-14). The people anticipated where Jesus and His disciples were going. The crowds, by walking along the north shore of the Sea of Galilee, joined Jesus. Feeling compassion (esplanchnisthē; cf. comments on Matt. 9:36), Jesus . . . healed their sick. When evening came, the disciples wanted to send the crowds away for there were no supplies in that remote place (cf. a solitary place, 14:13) to feed so many people. But the Lord said, They do not need to go away. You give them something to eat. However, they had only five loaves of bread and two fish. With these elements in Jesus' hands, a miracle occurred. The bread and fish continually multiplied so that all present ate and were satisfied. More than enough was available, for 12 basketfuls of broken pieces . . . were left over. About 5,000 men were fed on this occasion, plus many women and children, perhaps 15,000 to 20,000 in all.

This miracle took place at Bethsaida (see comments on Luke 9:10) just before the Passover (John 6:4). This is the only miracle of Jesus which is recorded in all four Gospels. The significance of this miracle was intended primarily for the disciples. Jesus was illustrating the kind of ministry they would have after His departure. They would be involved in feeding people, but with spiritual food. The source for their feeding would be the Lord Himself. When their supply ran out, as with the bread and fish, they would need to return to the Lord for more. He would supply them, but the feeding would be done through them. The people Jesus fed sensed that He was the anticipated Prophet (John 6:14-15; Deut. 18:15) and tried to make Him King. Surely One who could heal their physical diseases and provide food so abundantly must be the King. But the timing was not correct, for the nation's leaders had decided against Jesus (Matt. 12:24), and His official rejection would soon come.

14:22-36 (Mark 6:45-56; John 6:15-21). Jesus sent the disciples away in a boat. After dismissing the crowd . . . He went up into the hills alone to pray (cf. John 6:15). Sending the disciples into the boat did two things: it got them away from the crowd, and it gave them opportunity to ponder the significance of what had just happened through them. But soon they were in a storm. Somewhere between 3 and 6 in the morning (the fourth watch of the night), Jesus joined them, walking on the lake to their boat—a distance of "three or three and a half miles" (John 6:19). His power over the elements was obvious, but there was also a lesson in faith for the disciples in this experience. Their fear of seeing a ghost (Matt. 14:26) was relieved when Jesus announced that it was He.

But Peter wanted greater assurance that it was really the Lord. He said, Lord, if it's You . . . tell me to come to You on the water. The Lord's reply was a simple Come. Peter's initial response demonstrated his faith for he stepped out of the boat and began walking toward the Lord. (Only Matthew recorded Peter's walk on the water.) In all recorded history only two men ever walked on . . . water, Jesus and Peter. But Peter's faith was challenged when he saw the wind, that is, when he saw its effect on the water. As he sank, he cried to the Lord for help. Immediately the Lord caught him. Jesus rebuked Peter for his lack of faith (cf. 6:30; 8:26; 16:8), which had caused him to sink.

When they reached the boat, the storm calmed and the amazed disciples worshiped Him. Their concept of Jesus had been expanded and they acknowledged Him as the Son of God. Their view of Jesus was in direct contrast with the men of Gennesaret (14:34), a fertile plain southwest of Capernaum. When these men learned Jesus had arrived, they brought all their sick for healing. Their touching His cloak recalls a hemorrhaging woman in that area who had touched His garment (9:20). Though they acknowledged Jesus as a great Healer, they did not fully comprehend who He is. The disciples, however, were growing continually in their comprehension of His true identity.

3. REJECTION IN THE CONTROVERSIES WITH THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS (15:1–16:12)

a. The first controversy and result (chap. 15)

15:1-9 (Mark 7:1-13). News of Jesus' teaching and His mighty acts had spread throughout the land. The officials in Jerusalem were aware of all Jesus was doing, for a delegation arrived in Galilee from Jerusalem to interrogate Jesus over a matter of Jewish tradition. Their attack was directed against Jesus' disciples, who were accused of failing to observe the elders' tradition of the ceremonial washing of hands before eating. This tradition (Rabbinic, not Mosaic) was an elaborate washing ritual involving not only one's hands but also cups, pitchers, and kettles (Mark 7:3-4).

Jesus immediately took the offensive against the religious leaders and asked why they continued to break the direct command of God. He cited the fifth commandment concerning honoring one's father and mother (Matt. 15:4; Ex. 20:12). The Jews considered honoring of parents so important that anyone who cursed his parents was to be put to death (Ex. 21:17; Lev. 20:9).

Jesus showed how these religious leaders had in effect nullified this commandment (Matt. 15:6). They could simply affirm that a particular item had been a gift devoted to God. Then the item could not be used by an individual but was kept separate. This was simply a clever way of keeping things from passing to one's parents. The person would of course continue to keep those things in his own home where they had been supposedly set aside for God. Such action was condemned by Jesus as being hypocritical (v. 7), for while it appeared to be spiritual, it actually was done to keep one's possessions for himself. Thus this failure to help one's parents deliberately violated the fifth commandment of the Decalogue. Such action had been described by Isaiah centuries before (Isa. 29:13). Their religion had become a matter of action and man-made rules. Their hearts were far from God and consequently their worship was in vain (matēn, "fruitless, futile," an adjective used only here [Matt. 15:9] and in the parallel passage, Mark 7:7; it is a variation of the more common adjective mataios, "without results, futile").

15:10-20 (Mark 7:14-23). Jesus then turned and warned the crowd against the religious leaders' teachings. He said a man is not defiled by what goes into his mouth, but rather his defiled condition is evidenced by what comes out of his mouth. The Pharisees were wrong in thinking their washings kept them spiritually clean.

The disciples reported to Jesus that the Pharisees were offended (cf. Matt. 13:21, 57) by what He had just said, sensing that His words were directed against them. Jesus added that since the Pharisees had not been planted by His heavenly Father (another of the many times in Matt. where Jesus referred to God as "Father"), they were headed for uprooting (judgment). Jesus said to leave them alone, for they had chosen their path and nothing would deter them. They were blind guides, trying to lead blind people; they would fall into a pit.

Peter asked for further clarification about Jesus' teaching (the parable refers to Jesus' words in 15:11; cf. Mark 7:15-17). So Jesus enlarged on His previous statement. Defilement of a person does not come from the outside. What comes from the outside is simply passed through the digestive system and is eventually eliminated. But what comes out of the mouth represents what is actually inside one's heart, and these may make him (or, show him to be) unclean (koinoi, "common, ceremonially impure"). Evil (ponēroi) thoughts, murder, adultery (moicheiai), sexual immorality (porneiai), theft, false testimony, slander—such actions and words rise from within one's evil heart. These matters—not whether one eats food with unwashed hands—reveal spiritual uncleanness.

15:21-28 (Mark 7:24-30). To get away from the questionings of the religious leaders, Jesus withdrew from Israel and went north into the region of Tyre and Sidon, the Gentile coastal region of Phoenicia. Tyre was 35 miles from Galilee and Sidon was 60. There He met a Canaanite woman. Centuries earlier that area's inhabitants were called Canaanites (Num. 13:29). She pleaded with Him to have mercy on her demon-possessed daughter. She addressed Him as Lord, Son of David (cf. Matt. 9:27; 20:30-31), a messianic title. But even that appeal could not help her, for the timing was not appropriate. When Jesus failed to answer her and she persisted with her appeal, the disciples . . . urged Jesus to send her away. They seemed to be asking, "Lord, why don't You go ahead and help this woman? She isn't going to give up until You do."

Jesus reminded them, I was sent only to the lost sheep of Israel (cf. 10:6).

He had come to offer to His own people the kingdom promised through David centuries before. Thus it was inappropriate for Him to bring blessings on Gentiles before blessings fell on Israel. But the woman was not easily discouraged. She saw in Jesus the only chance for help for her child. On her knees she pleaded, Lord, help me! Jesus' reply caused her to realize her position, for He said it would not be right to take the children's bread and toss it to their dogs. He was picturing a family gathered at mealtime around a table, eating food provided by the head of the household. The Gentile woman saw herself in this picture. She was not a child in the family (of Israel) eligible for the choicest morsels of food. But she saw herself as a household dog (a Gentile; the Jews often called Gentiles "dogs") eligible to receive crumbs that might fall from the master's table. She was not wanting to deprive Israel of God's blessings. She was simply asking that some of the blessing be extended to her in her need. In light of such great faith (cf. 8:10), the kind of faith Jesus was looking for in Israel, He granted her request. Her daughter was healed . . . that very hour. This Gentile woman's faith contrasted with Israel's leaders who were rejecting Jesus.

15:29-39 (Mark 7:31–8:10). Jesus, returning from Tyre and Sidon, went near the Sea of Galilee . . . into the hills (cf. Matt. 14:23) where He sat down. Great crowds of people brought a multitude of sick people to Him. In view of Mark 7:31-37, the crowds referred to in Matthew 15:30-31 may have been Gentiles (also cf. Mark 8:13 with Matt. 15:39). Jesus healed their physical illnesses, and people praised the God of Israel. Jesus was thus demonstrating what He will do for Gentiles as well as for Jews when His rightful millennial rule will be established on earth.

This ministry lasted about three days. Jesus had compassion for them (splanchnizomai; cf. comments on 9:36; Luke 7:13). He did not want to send them home without food. The disciples questioned how in this remote place (cf. Matt. 14:15) they could buy enough food to feed them all. When Jesus asked them about their present resources, they said they had seven bread loaves and a few small fish. The disciples must have anticipated that Jesus was going to use them again to feed this multitude, as He had done earlier (14:13-21). Jesus told the crowd to sit down, gave thanks for the seven loaves and the fish, and divided the food among the disciples, who distributed it to the people. After the crowd—estimated this time at 4,000 men, besides women and children—ate and were satisfied . . . seven basketfuls of broken pieces were picked up.

This miracle demonstrated that the Lord's blessings through His disciples would fall not only on Israel (14:13-21) but also on Gentiles. This is perhaps most clearly seen in Acts 10–11 when Peter shared the good news of salvation with Cornelius and his Gentile household. After Jesus had dismissed the crowd, He returned to the western shore of the Sea of Galilee to the city of Magadan, a variant spelling of Magdala, just north of Tiberias. Mary Magdalene (Matt. 27:56) was from Magdala, also called Dalmanutha (Mark 8:10).

b. The second controversy and result (16:1-12)

16:1-4 (Mark 8:11-13; Luke 12:54-56). As Jesus returned to Israel, He was again confronted by religious leaders, the Pharisees and Sadducees. They tested Him by asking for a sign from heaven. By this they were again saying that they rejected all the signs Jesus had performed before their eyes (cf. Matt. 12:38). They were in effect asking Jesus to give them a sign more spectacular than healings, so they could believe. Jesus' response was again condemnatory for He called them a wicked and adulterous generation (16:4; cf. 12:39). They were careful observers of weather signs and could fairly well forecast whether the weather would be good or threatening. Yet they had been surrounded by spiritual signs relating to the person of Jesus Christ and had missed them all. Such a wicked generation would not receive any special treatment. Jesus was not a sign-worker simply for the sake of working signs. He was not a puppet on strings to perform at their command. The only sign they would receive was the sign of Jonah, which He had previously given them (12:38-42), but they would not recognize that sign until it was too late.

16:5-12 (Mark 8:14-21). As Jesus left the religious leaders, He warned His disciples . . . against the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees, to whom He had just spoken. Jesus' mention of yeast caused the disciples to think He referred to their having forgotten to bring along bread. But Jesus explained that He was not referring to their lack of bread. He reminded them of previous occasions when He had multiplied loaves and fish so that food was left over (Matt. 14:13-21; 15:29-38). The amount of food was not the issue, for Jesus could care for such a need if it arose. Because they were not trusting Him for that, they were, He said, of little faith (16:8; three other times in Matt. Jesus spoke of "little faith"; 6:30; 8:26; 14:31). He then simply repeated His warning: Be on your guard against the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees (cf. 16:6). Their teaching was like pervasive yeast, penetrating and corrupting the nation.

V. Cultivation of the King's Disciples (16:13–20:34)

A. The revelation in view of rejection (16:13–17:13)

1. THE PERSON OF MESSIAH (16:13-16) (MARK 8:27-30; LUKE 9:18-21)

16:13-16. Jesus and the disciples removed themselves from the region around the Sea of Galilee and went north about 30 miles to Caesarea Philippi, that is, Caesarea in the tetrarchy of Herod Philip, Antipas' brother. There Jesus questioned the disciples about their faith in Him. He asked them what the people were saying about Him. Their replies were all flattering, for people were identifying Jesus with John the Baptist . . . Elijah . . . Jeremiah, or one of the prophets. His teachings were certainly similar to theirs. All these answers, of course, were wrong. He then asked the disciples, But what about you? Who do you say I am?

Speaking for the disciples, Peter spoke his now-famous words, You are the Christ, the Son of the living God. As "the Christ," He is the Messiah. Ho christos is the New Testament equivalent of the Old Testament māšîaḥ, which means "the anointed One." In Him are fulfilled all the promises of God to the nation. And as the Old Testament made clear, the Messiah is more than a human being; He is God (Isa. 9:6; Jer. 23:5-6; Micah 5:2). Peter thus acknowledged Jesus' deity as the Son of the living God. The disciples had come to this conclusion as they observed the Lord Jesus over a period of time, witnessed His miracles, and heard His words.

2. THE PROGRAM OF MESSIAH (16:17-26)

16:17-20. Peter's words brought a word of commendation from the Lord. Peter was blessed because he had come to a correct conclusion about the person of Christ and because great blessing would be brought into his life. The Lord added, however, this was not a conclusion Peter had determined by his own or others' ability. God, the Father in heaven, had revealed it to him. Peter was living up to his name (it means "rock") for he was demonstrating himself to be a rock. When the Lord and Peter first met, Jesus had said Simon would be named Cephas (Aram. for "rock") or Peter (Gr. for "rock"; John 1:41-42).

But his declaration about Messiah's person led to a declaration of Messiah's program. Peter (Petros, masc.) was strong like a rock, but Jesus added that on this rock (petra, fem.) He would build His church. Because of this change in Greek words, many conservative scholars believe that Jesus is now building His church on Himself. Others hold that the church is built on Peter and the other apostles as the building's foundation stones (Eph. 2:20; Rev. 21:14). Still other scholars say that the church is built on Peter's testimony. It seems best to understand that Jesus was praising Peter for his accurate statement about Him, and was introducing His work of building the church on Himself (1 Cor. 3:11).

Building His church was a yet-future work of Jesus Christ, for He had not yet started the process. He said, I will build (future tense) My church, but His program for the nation Israel had to be concluded before another program could be set in motion. This is probably why Jesus said not even the gates of hades would overcome this program. Jews would understand hades' gates to refer to physical death. Jesus was thus telling the disciples His death would not prevent His work of building the church. Later (Matt. 16:21) He spoke of His imminent death. He was therefore anticipating His death and His victory over death through the Resurrection.

His church would then begin to be built, starting on the day of Pentecost, and Peter and the other apostles would have important roles in it. He declared that Peter would be given significant authority, the keys of the kingdom of heaven. A "key" was a sign of authority, for a trusted steward kept the keys to his master's possessions and dispensed them accordingly (cf. "the keys of death and hades" [Rev. 1:18] and "the key of David" [Rev. 3:7], which Jesus possesses). Peter was told he would possess the keys and be able to bind and loose people. These were decisions Peter was to implement as he received instruction from heaven, for the binding and loosing occurred there first. Peter simply carried out God's directions. This privilege of binding and loosing was seen in Peter's life as he had the privilege on the day of Pentecost to proclaim the gospel and announce to all those who responded in saving faith that their sins had been forgiven (Acts 2). He was able to do the same thing with the household of Cornelius (Acts 10–11; cf. Acts 15:19-20). The same privilege was given all the disciples (John 20:22-23).

After making this great declaration about His future church program, Jesus told the disciples not to tell anyone that He is the Christ, the Messiah. The Lord knew it was too late for the nation to respond to His offer, and His rejection was drawing near. There was no reason for His disciples to be trying to convince a nation that had already turned from Him.

16:21-26 (Mark 8:31-38; Luke 9:22-25). Jesus explained to His disciples that His death was near. It would be necessary for Him to go to Jerusalem and there suffer many things at the hands of the religious leaders. Eventually He would be killed, but He would rise again from the dead on the third day. This is Matthew's first prediction of Jesus' death. Other predictions follow in Matthew 17:22-23 and 20:18-19.

Peter, hearing these words, took the Lord aside and began to rebuke Him. The disciple who had just been blessed by the Master obviously did not fully comprehend the Master's plan. Peter could not understand how Jesus could be Messiah and yet die at the hands of the religious leaders. Peter probably was so shocked to hear Jesus speak of His death that he failed to hear Him mention His resurrection. Peter's rebuke, however, brought a rebuke from the Lord, for Peter was playing the role of Satan. Jesus directly addressed Satan, who was seeking to use Peter as his instrument.

Jesus had previously told Satan to get away from Him (4:10); He now repeated that order. Peter was trying to keep the Lord from dying, but that was a primary reason why Jesus came into the world. Trying to thwart the Crucifixion, as Satan had earlier tried to do (4:8-10), resulted from not thinking from God's viewpoint.

Though Peter wanted Jesus to follow his plan, the Lord showed that discipleship involves a cost. Discipleship does not mean one enjoys glory immediately. A person who would follow Jesus must deny himself and all his ambitions. He must take up his cross and follow Jesus (cf. 10:38). In the Roman Empire a convicted criminal, when taken to be crucified, was forced to carry his own cross. This showed publicly that he was then under and submissive to the rule he had been opposing. Likewise Jesus' disciples must demonstrate their submission to the One against whom they had rebelled. The path Jesus and His followers would travel would be a road of sorrow and suffering. But in so losing one's life, one would truly find a better life. Jesus' similar words (in 10:38-39) were stated in connection with one's attitudes toward his family; here (16:24-25) Jesus spoke in relation to Peter's misunderstanding about His program and the cost of discipleship.

If it were possible for an individual, in preserving his own life, to gain the whole world, but in the process lose his soul, of what value then would be the possessions of the world? True discipleship involves following Christ and doing His will, wherever that path might lead.

3. THE PICTURE OF MESSIAH'S KINGDOM (16:27–17:13)

16:27-28 (Mark 9:1; Luke 9:26-27). As Jesus continued to instruct His disciples, He spoke prophetically of His second coming when He, the Son of Man, would return in His Father's glory with His angels (cf. Matt. 24:30-31; 2 Thes. 1:7). As "the Son of . . . God" (Matt. 16:16) He possesses a divine nature, and as "the Son of Man" He possesses a human nature (cf. comments on 8:20). At that time the Lord will reward His servants for their faithfulness. Speaking of His return led Him to state that some disciples standing there with Him would be permitted to view His coming kingdom before they experienced death. This statement has caused many to misunderstand the kingdom program, for they wonder how the disciples saw the Lord coming in His kingdom. The explanation is found in the following event, the transfiguration (17:1-8).

17:1-8 (Mark 9:2-13; Luke 9:28-36). This chapter division in Matthew is an unfortunate break in the flow of this biblical passage. Jesus had just said that some standing with Him would not die before they saw the Son of Man coming in His kingdom (Matt. 16:28). The continuing story occurred six days later when Jesus took . . . Peter, James, and John with Him up a high mountain by themselves. Luke wrote that this event occurred "about eight days after" (Luke 9:28), which includes the beginning and ending days as well as the six days between. The high mountain may have been Mount Hermon, near Caesarea Philippi (see map), for Jesus was in that region (Matt. 16:13).

There Jesus was transfigured (metemorphōthē, "changed in form"; cf. Rom. 12:2; 2 Cor. 3:18) before this inner circle of disciples (Matt. 17:2). This was a revelation of Jesus' glory. The radiance of His glory was evidenced in His face and in His garments that became as white as the light. Moses and Elijah appeared from heaven in some visible form and talked with Jesus (thus demonstrating that conscious existence follows death). Luke wrote that Moses and Elijah talked with Jesus about His coming death (Luke 9:31).

Why were Moses and Elijah, of all Old Testament people, present on this occasion? Perhaps these two men and the disciples suggest all the categories of people who will be in Jesus' coming kingdom. The disciples represent individuals who will be present in physical bodies. Moses represents saved individuals who have died or will die. Elijah represents saved individuals who will not experience death, but will be caught up to heaven alive (1 Thes. 4:17). These three groups will be present when Christ institutes His kingdom on earth. Furthermore the Lord will be in His glory as He was at the transfiguration, and the kingdom will take place on earth, as this obviously did. The disciples were thus enjoying a foretaste of the kingdom the Lord promised (Matt. 16:28).

Peter seemed to sense the significance of the event for he suggested that he erect three shelters, for Jesus, Moses, and . . . Elijah. He saw in this event the fulfillment of the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles which looked two ways: backward to the wanderings in the wilderness for 40 years, and forward to Israel's full enjoyment of God's blessings when He would gather His people to the land. Peter was correct in his understanding of what was taking place (he saw the kingdom) but he was wrong in his timing.

While Peter was still speaking, a more important voice spoke from a bright cloud that had enveloped them. This voice said, This is My Son, whom I love; with Him I am well-pleased. Listen to Him! (cf. 3:17) This authentication of the Son of God by the voice of God carried great significance for the disciples. Years later when Peter wrote his second epistle he referred to this event (2 Peter 1:16-18). This authentication of Jesus by the Father caused the terrified disciples to fall on their faces. When the Lord Himself told the disciples to get up . . . they saw no one except Jesus, for Moses and Elijah had departed.

17:9-13. As this small group returned from the mountain, Jesus told the three not to tell anyone what they had witnessed until after He had risen from the dead (cf. 16:20). Some people had already tried to make Jesus King by force, and if news of this event had become commonly known, perhaps others would have attempted to make Jesus King.

This event was a taste of the kingdom, but the disciples were puzzled. Many were teaching that before Messiah could come, Elijah must return. Jesus explained that Elijah must in fact come and restore all things (cf. Mal. 4:5), but Elijah had already come in the person of John the Baptist and his ministry was not recognized. Instead of receiving John the Baptist, the religious leaders had rejected him. As they refused to acknowledge John's ministry and instead rejected him, Jesus too would be rejected. At the first announcement concerning the birth of John, Zechariah his father had been told that he would go before the Lord "in the spirit and power of Elijah" (Luke 1:17). The Lord's earlier words concerning John (Matt. 11:14) affirmed that he would have been the predicted Elijah if the nation had responded in saving faith. Everything necessary to bring in Messiah's kingdom had been performed. The only contingency was the acceptance by the nation of her rightful King.

B. The instruction in view of rejection (17:14–20:34)

1. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING FAITH (17:14-21)

(MARK 9:14-29; LUKE 9:37-43A)

17:14-21. When Jesus and the inner circle returned to the other disciples, a crowd was gathered because a man with an epileptic son had sought healing help from the nine disciples. They, however, had not been able to drive out the demon (v. 18) that possessed the boy and caused his epilepsy. The father appealed to Jesus, kneeling before Him and addressing Him as Lord. The boy's epilepsy had caused him much suffering and physical danger; the convulsions even caused him to fall uncontrollably into the fire and into the water. Mark mentioned the boy's foaming at the mouth (Mark 9:18, 20). Jesus asked for the boy to be brought to Him, and He rebuked not only the disciples but also the entire crowd for their lack of faith. He immediately drove the demon out of the boy and restored him completely from that moment (cf. Matt. 15:28).

When the disciples inquired why they had not been able to heal the boy, Jesus said their problem was their little faith (cf. the "great faith" of the Roman centurion [8:10] and of the Canaanite woman [15:28]). Even a small amount of faith, as small as a mustard seed (cf. comments on the mustard seed in 13:31), is adequate to move a huge mountain, assuming, of course, that the "move" is in God's will. Nothing is impossible with God (cf. 19:26; Luke 1:37). (Some Gr. mss. add Matt. 17:21, "But this kind does not go out except by prayer and fasting," based on Mark 9:29.) Jesus was instructing the disciples about their future ministries. Their problem often would be lack of faith and failure to seek their Lord's direction. His Word would be sufficient to produce the desired healing but their actions would necessitate great faith and constant contact with the Lord through prayer. When these elements are combined, there is no limit to the works the disciples could accomplish, following His will.

2. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING HIS DEATH (17:22-23)
(MARK 9:30-32; LUKE 9:43B-45)

17:22-23. Again the Lord reminded the disciples that He was to be betrayed and wicked men would kill Him. One could never say that death took Jesus by surprise. He was in control of His life and no one took it from Him (John 10:11, 15, 17-18). He also told the disciples that death would not be the end for Him. Again He said He would rise on the third day. Unlike before (Matt. 16:21-23) this announcement of His death was not met by any recorded opposition from the disciples. But they were filled with grief over the Lord's words. One wonders if they heard the complete message or simply the part about His death.

3. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING RESPONSIBILITY TO GOVERNMENT (17:24-27)

17:24-27. When Jesus and the disciples arrived back in Capernaum, tax collectors were waiting for them. According to custom every Jew 20 years old and above was required to pay a temple tax of half a shekel or two drachmas each year to help support the temple (cf. Ex. 30:13-15; Neh. 10:32). Both Peter and Jesus had apparently not yet paid their tax (Matt. 17:27b) for that year, so the collectors sought Peter out. Their question about the Lord's not paying His tax implied that He was not keeping the Law. Peter responded that the Lord would pay the tax in compliance with the Law.

Before Peter spoke to the Lord about this matter, Jesus asked him if kings . . . collect duty and taxes from their own sons, or from others. Peter replied that kings do not collect taxes from family members, for they were exempt, but they do collect from others. The Lord was demonstrating to Peter that not only should He as King be tax-free, but also His disciples, as sons of the kingdom, should be free from such taxes (v. 26). They too had a privileged position, and the King should provide all they needed. However, the Lord did not intend at this time to make an issue (offend them, v. 27) over such a small point. The religious leaders were looking for accusations to use against Jesus. Peter was told to do something he really enjoyed: the Lord sent him fishing. He was to throw out his line and a special catch would be brought in. This fish would have in its mouth a specific four-drachma coin that would be the exact amount Peter needed to pay the tax for himself and for the Lord.

While Matthew did not record the rest of the story, it may be assumed Peter did as he was commanded, caught the fish, found the money, and paid the tax. The Lord thereby demonstrated His submission to ruling authority.

4. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING HUMILITY (18:1-6)

18:1-6. While still in the city of Capernaum, the disciples asked Jesus a question they had undoubtedly been pondering among themselves: Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? The disciples were still anticipating an earthly kingdom and wondering what great positions they would have. In response Jesus took a little child (paidion), who had no rights according to the Law, and stood him in their midst. He told the disciples a change in their thinking was necessary. Greatness in the kingdom was not based on great works or words, but on childlike humility of spirit.

Jesus' reply indicated they were asking the wrong question. They should have been concerned about serving the Lord, not asking about positions in the kingdom. Their service needed to be directed toward people, for Jesus spoke about welcoming a little child . . . in His name. Little thought was directed in those days toward children, but Jesus did not overlook them. In fact, He gave a stern warning concerning any who might place a stumbling block before one of these little ones who believe in Him. (Interestingly little children can—and do—believe in Jesus!) Causes . . . to sin translates the verb skandalisē, "to offend, or cause to fall," a verb Matthew used 13 times. It would be better for such an offender to have a large millstone hung around his neck and to be drowned in the depths of the sea. A truly humble person does not concern himself with position or power, but is concerned about active service, especially toward those who are most in need.

5. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING OFFENSES (18:7-14)

18:7-11 (Mark 9:43-48). Jesus continued the previous discussion by talking about those who cause offenses. It was obvious such individuals were present in Jesus' time, but the judgment of God (woe, twice, Matt. 18:7; eternal fire, v. 8; the fire of hell, v. 9; cf. 6:22) would fall on them because they were failing to deal with the basic cause of their sin. Jesus was not teaching self-mutilation, cutting off one's hand or foot or gouging out one's eye (cf. 5:29-30). Doing that would not remove the source of offense, which is the heart (cf. 15:18-19). Jesus was saying one must remove whatever offends. To keep from offending, radical changes are often necessary. The disciples were reminded of the value the Lord places on these little ones (mikrōn toutōn; cf. 18:6, 14). Children are important to God. It may be God has entrusted the care of little children to a specific group of His angelic beings (their angels) who are in constant touch with the heavenly Father (cf. Ps. 91:11; Acts 12:15). (Some Gr. mss. add the words of Matt. 18:11, "The Son of Man came to save what was lost," perhaps inserted from Luke 19:10.)

18:12-14 (Luke 15:3-7). In order to demonstrate the importance God attaches to little children, the Lord gave the disciples an illustration. Suppose a man who owns 100 sheep suddenly discovers only 99 are present. Will he not leave them and search for the one until he finds it? In the same way God (your Father in heaven; cf. Matt. 18:10) is concerned about these little ones (cf. vv. 6, 10) and does not want to lose any of them. Great care must be exercised to avoid all offense.

6. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING DISCIPLINE (18:15-20)

18:15-20. The Lord had just spoken about offenses; now He talked about what should be done when known sin occurs. When a brother sins against another, the two of them should discuss the matter. If the matter can be settled at that level, there is no need for it to go any further. But if the sinning brother refuses to listen . . . two or three witnesses should be taken along for a clear testimony. This was in keeping with Old Testament precedents, as in Deuteronomy 19:15. If the sinning brother still failed to recognize his error, the situation should be told before the entire church, or "assembly." The disciples probably would have understood Jesus to mean the matter should be brought before the Jewish assembly. After the establishment of the church, on the day of Pentecost, these words would have had greater meaning for them. One who refuses to acknowledge his sin is then to be treated as an outsider (a pagan or a tax collector).

This corporate action was entrusted to the entire apostolic group. Their actions of binding and loosing were to be directed by heaven (Matt. 18:18; cf. comments on 16:19). Clearly all are addressed for the you pronouns are plural. Besides their binding and loosing, they were also to engage in corporate prayer. Whenever they came together in the name of the Lord, He would be with them. And if two or three would agree together about anything it would be done for them by the Father in heaven.

7. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING FORGIVENESS (18:21-35)

18:21-22. Peter then asked Jesus . . . Lord, how many times shall I forgive my brother when he sins against me? Up to seven times? Peter was being generous here, for the traditional Rabbinic teaching was that an offended person needed to forgive a brother only three times. Jesus' reply was that forgiveness needs to be exercised to a much greater extent. Not just 7 times, but "70 times 7" (NIV marg.), that is, 490 times. Jesus meant that no limits should be set. Then to complete the idea, He told a parable.

18:23-35. Jesus told about a king who wanted to settle accounts with his servants. One servant owed a large amount, 10,000 talents. This probably equaled several million dollars, for a talent was probably a measure of gold, between 58 and 80 pounds. When he could not . . . pay, the master ordered that the servant and his wife . . . children, and possessions be sold so he could repay as much of the debt as possible. The servant pleaded with his master, begging for time to repay his master. The master took pity on the servant, canceled the debt, and set him free.

But shortly thereafter this servant went out and found another servant who owed him a much smaller amount, 100 denarii. A denarius was a Roman silver coin, worth about 16 cents; it represented a laborer's daily wages. The first servant demanded payment and refused to show mercy toward his debtor. In fact he had the second servant thrown into prison until he paid the debt. The other servants, aware of all that had happened . . . were greatly distressed (elypēthēsan, "grieved or sad to the point of distress"; cf. 14:9; 19:22) by this turn of events and told their master what had transpired. The master called back the first servant and jailed him for failing to show mercy to a fellow servant when he had been forgiven a much greater debt.

The Lord was teaching that forgiveness ought to be in direct proportion to the amount forgiven. The first servant had been forgiven all, and he in turn should have forgiven all. A child of God has had all his sins forgiven by faith in Jesus Christ. Therefore when someone sins against him, he ought to be willing to forgive . . . from the heart no matter how many times the act occurs (cf. 18:21-22; Eph. 4:32).

8. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING DIVORCE (19:1-12)

19:1-12. Jesus . . . left Galilee for the last time and headed for Jerusalem through the region of Judea to the east side of the Jordan River. That area was known as Perea. There, as often before, He was followed by large crowds of needy people, and He healed them. But some Pharisees sought to test Jesus through a question: Is it lawful for a man to divorce his wife for any and every reason? The nation was divided over this issue. Followers of Hillel felt a man could divorce his wife for almost any reason, but others, following Shammai, thought one could not divorce his wife unless she were guilty of sexual offense. Without getting involved in the Hillel-Shammai controversy Jesus reminded the religious leaders of God's original purpose in establishing the marriage bond. God made people male and female (v. 4; Gen. 1:27). In marriage He joins them together in an inseparable bond. This bond is a higher calling than the parent-child relationship, for a man is to leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife in a one-flesh relationship (Gen. 2:24). Therefore what God has joined together, men ought not separate (chōrizetō; in 1 Cor. 7:10 this word means "to divorce").

The Pharisees, realizing that Jesus was speaking of the permanence of the marital relationship, asked why Moses made a provision for divorce for people in his time (Matt. 19:7). The Lord's answer was that Moses granted this permission because people's hearts were hard (cf. Deut. 24:1-4). "Because your hearts were hard" is literally, "toward your hardness of heart" (sklērokardian; from sklēros, "hardness," comes the Eng. "sclerosis," and from kardian comes the Eng. "cardiac"). But that was not God's intention for marriage. God intended husbands and wives to live together permanently. Divorce was wrong except for marital unfaithfulness (cf. Matt. 5:32).

Bible scholars differ over the meaning of this "exception clause," found only in Matthew's Gospel. The word for "marital unfaithfulness" is porneia.

(1) Some feel Jesus used this as a synonym for adultery (moicheia). Therefore adultery by either partner in a marriage is the only sufficient grounds for a marriage to end in divorce. Among those holding this view, some believe remarriage is possible but others believe remarriage should never occur.

(2) Others define porneia as a sexual offense that could occur only in the betrothal period when a Jewish man and woman were considered married but had not yet consummated their coming marriage with sexual intercourse. If in this period the woman was found pregnant (as was Mary; 1:18-19), a divorce could occur in order to break the contract.

(3) Still others believe the term porneia referred to illegitimate marriages within prohibited degrees of kinship, as in Leviticus 18:6-18. If a man discovered that his wife was a near relative, he would actually be involved in an incestuous marriage. Then this would be a justifiable grounds for divorce. Some say this meaning of porneia is found in Acts 15:20, 29 (cf. 1 Cor. 5:1).

(4) Another view is that porneia refers to a relentless, persistent, unrepentant lifestyle of sexual unfaithfulness (different from a one-time act of illicit relations). (In the NT porneia is broader than moicheia). Such a continued practice would thus be the basis for divorce, since such unfaithful and unrelenting conduct would have broken the marriage bond. (On the subject of divorce and remarriage, see comments on 1 Cor. 7:10-16.)

Whatever view one takes on the exception clause, Jesus obviously affirmed the permanence of marriage. Those who heard His words understood Him in this way, for they reasoned that if there were no grounds for divorce one would be better off never to marry. But this was not what Jesus intended, for God has given marriage to people for their betterment (Gen. 2:18). Marriage should be a deterrent to lustful sin and to unfaithfulness (1 Cor. 7:2). But a few either do not have normal sexual desires (they were born eunuchs or were castrated), or are able to control those desires for the furtherance of God's program on the earth (Matt. 19:12; cf. 1 Cor. 7:7-8, 26). But not all are able to accept the single role (Matt. 19:11). Many marry and carry out God's purposes, extending His work in the world.

9. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING CHILDREN (19:13-15)

19:13-15. Many parents were bringing children . . . to Jesus for Him to place His hands on them and pray for them. But the disciples felt this was a waste of Jesus' time. They began rebuking those bringing their children. Apparently the disciples had already forgotten what Jesus said earlier about the worth of children and the seriousness of causing them to fall (cf. 18:1-14). Jesus rebuked the disciples, telling them to let the little children come and not hinder them. The kingdom of heaven is not limited to adults who might be considered to be worth more than children. Anyone who comes to the Lord in faith is a worthy subject for the kingdom. This implies (19:15) that Jesus had time for all the children, for He did not depart from the region till He had blessed them all.

10. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING RICHES (19:16-26)

19:16-22. A man who was young (v. 20), wealthy (v. 22) and a ruler (Luke 18:18; perhaps of the Sanhedrin) came and asked Jesus, Teacher, what good thing must I do to get eternal life? This ruler was not asking how he could earn salvation. Instead, he wondered how he could be assured of entering Messiah's kingdom. He wanted to know what "good thing" (work) would demonstrate that he was righteous and therefore qualified for the kingdom. Jesus replied, There is only One who is good, namely, God. Perfection is required (Matt. 5:48; cf. 19:21); therefore one must be as good as God. He must have God's righteousness, which comes through faith in Him (Rom. 4:5). Perhaps Jesus then waited for a response from the ruler to see if he would affirm his belief that Jesus is God, that Jesus, being one with the Father, is good (agathos, "intrinsically good").

When the man did not reply, Jesus indicated that life (i.e., life in God's kingdom) can be entered only if one gives evidence that he is righteous. Since the official standard of righteousness was the Law of Moses, Jesus told the man to obey the commandments. The ruler was perceptive for he immediately asked, Which ones? Other standards of righteousness were being promoted by the Pharisees, who had added to Moses' commandments far beyond God's intention. The young man was in effect asking Jesus, "Must I keep all the Pharisees' commandments?" Jesus replied by repeating several of the commandments from the second table of the Law, the 5th through the 9th commandments forbidding murder . . . adultery, stealing, giving false testimony, and also the positive command to honor one's parents (Ex. 20:12-16). Jesus did not mention the 10th commandment (Ex. 20:17) concerning coveting, but He did add the summary statement, Love your neighbor as yourself (cf. Lev. 19:18; Matt. 22:39; Rom. 13:9; Gal. 5:14; James 2:8).

The young man affirmed he had kept all these things, but he still sensed a lack (Matt. 19:20). Whether he had truly kept these commands, only God knows. The young man believed he had and yet he knew something was missing in his life. Jesus put His finger on his problem when He told him to go, sell all his possessions and give to the poor, and he would then have treasure in heaven. Such mercy toward the poor would demonstrate inner righteousness. If he were righteous (based on faith in Jesus as God), he should have given his wealth to the poor and followed Jesus. But instead, the man . . . went away sad (lypoumenos, "grieved or sad to the point of distress"; cf. 14:9; 18:31) for he had great wealth. His unwillingness to relinquish his wealth showed he did not love his neighbor as himself. Thus he had not kept all the commandments, and he lacked salvation. Nothing more was written about this young man; probably he never left all and followed Jesus. He loved his money more than God, and thus he violated even the first commandment (Ex. 20:3).

19:23-26. The incident with the young ruler prompted a brief message from Jesus to His disciples. He remarked how difficult it is for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. In fact Jesus said it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. Since the man was trusting his riches rather than the Lord to save him, he could no more enter the kingdom than a camel (one of the largest animals used by Jews) could go through "the eye of a needle" (rhaphidos, a sewing needle; not a small gate within another gate as is sometimes suggested). This needle's eye was an extremely small opening. The astonished disciples asked, Who then can be saved? This showed the Pharisees' influence on them, for the Pharisees said God bestows wealth on those He loves. So if a wealthy person cannot make it into the kingdom, seemingly no one can! Jesus answered that salvation is a work of God. What appears to be impossible with men is what God delights to do (cf. 17:20).

11. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING SERVICE AND REWARDS (19:27–20:16)

19:27-30. In the previous incident Jesus told the rich young man to sell all he had and follow Him. This was exactly what the disciples had done, as expressed by Peter. We have left everything to follow You! What then will there be for us? Whereas the young ruler did not leave his possessions (v. 22), Peter and the other disciples had (4:18-22; 9:9; cf. 16:25). Surely then, Peter reasoned, God would bless them for they were not trusting in their wealth! The Lord explained there would be a renewal (palingenesia, "rebirth") of all things. Though the nation was then rejecting His offer of the kingdom, the kingdom would come, with its extensive remaking of things spiritual (Isa. 2:3; 4:2-4; 11:9b), political (Isa. 2:4; 11:1-5, 10-11; 32:16-18), and geographical and physical (Isa. 2:2; 4:5-6; 11:6-9; 35:1-2). Christ will then sit on His glorious throne (cf. Matt. 25:31; Rev. 22:1).

The disciples will have a special place in the kingdom, sitting on thrones and judging the 12 tribes of Israel (cf. Rev. 21:12-14). In fact all who leave their homes and relatives for the Lord's sake will receive physical blessings that will more than compensate for their losses (Matt. 19:29). This will be in addition to their eternal life in His kingdom. While it might appear they are giving up everything now and are the last, they will be given everything eternally and will be first. Conversely those, like the rich young ruler, who appear to have everything now (the first) will discover one day they have lost everything (they will be last; cf. 20:16).

20:1-16. Continuing this discussion, Jesus told a parable in which a landowner . . . went out early in the morning and hired men to work in his vineyard for the day, at an agreed price of one denarius, the normal daily pay for a laborer. Later, about the third hour (around 9 A.M.) the landowner encouraged others in the marketplace also to work in the vineyard, not for a stipulated wage but for whatever is right. The landowner employed more laborers about the sixth hour (about noon) and at the ninth hour (3 P.M.), and even some at the eleventh hour (5 P.M.) when only one hour was left for labor.

When it came time (evening, i.e., 6 P.M.) for the landowner to pay the workers, he began with those who had worked the shortest amount of time and paid each of them one denarius. When those who had worked the entire day came for their reckoning, they thought they would receive more than a denarius. They had labored all day and borne the burden of the work and the heat of the day. They had agreed, however, to work for a stipulated amount and that is what they received (v. 13). The landowner argued that he had the right to do what he chose with his money. He reminded them they should not be envious of his generosity toward those who had labored only briefly.

By this illustration, Jesus was teaching that the matter of rewards is under the sovereign control of God, the "Landowner" in the parable. God is the One before whom all accounts will be settled. Many who have prominent places will someday find themselves demoted. And many who often find themselves at the end of the line will find themselves promoted to the head of the line: The last will be first, and the first will be last. (This supports what Jesus had said in 19:28-30.) In the final accounting, the Lord's analysis will carry the greatest and only important weight.

20:17-19. One could never say Jesus did not prepare His disciples for His death. At least three times already He had announced that He was going to die (12:40; 16:21; 17:22-23). He was now on the road to Jerusalem (cf. Jesus' movements geographically: 4:12; 16:13; 17:24; 19:1; 21:1). Once again He told the disciples that death awaited Him in that city. Here He spoke for the first time of His betrayal, mocking, flogging, and crucifixion. But He also reminded them that death was not the end for Him, for He would rise again on the third day (cf. 16:21; 17:23). The disciples gave no response to the Lord's words. Perhaps they could not bring themselves to believe the Lord was indeed going to be treated in that way.

13. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING AMBITION (20:20-28)

20:20-23. Jesus' recent discussion about "the renewal of all things" (19:28) prompted the following incident. The mother of James and John came to Jesus with her two sons and bowed before Him. When Jesus inquired what her request was, she asked that her two sons might be granted places of favor in His kingdom, one seated at His right hand and one at His left. Perhaps she had heard Jesus say His disciples would be seated on thrones (19:28), and she, with typical motherly pride, felt her sons deserved the two best locations.

Jesus did not correct her as to the fact of His coming kingdom. His only question was addressed to the two sons (you is pl.), who apparently had urged their mother to make the request. He asked if they could drink the cup He was about to drink. Jesus was speaking of His coming trials and death as He would be betrayed and die on a cross (26:39, 42). They both replied, We can. Jesus indicated they would indeed share the cup of suffering and death with Him. James suffered death early in the Church Age at the hands of Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12:1-2), and John is thought to have died a martyr's death near the end of the first century.

However, granting positions of honor to His right and left in the kingdom is not His prerogative. Those places will be filled by those . . . whom the Father, the gracious and generous Judge (cf. Matt. 20:1-16), will appoint (v. 23). This account illustrates again that the disciples did not understand Jesus' teaching about humility (cf. 18:1-6). Peter's question (19:27) also demonstrated a desire for position. This the disciples continued to discuss, even to the point of the Lord's death.

20:24-28. When the 10 disciples heard about the request by James and John's mother, they became indignant. They were probably sorry they had not thought of it first! (cf. 18:1) Jesus was of course aware of the friction evident within the group. So He called the Twelve together and reminded them of some important principles. While some people (rulers and high officials) lord it over others, the disciples were not to do so. Greatness in the Lord's kingdom does not come through rulership or authority but through service (20:26-27). Their goal should be serving, not ruling. Those most highly esteemed will be those who serve, those who are humble.

There was no greater example of this principle than the Lord Himself. He did not come into the world to be served, but to serve, and to give His life as a ransom for many. Here was the first clue as to what the death of Christ would accomplish. He had told them on a number of occasions He would die. But He had not indicated the reason for His death. Now it was clear that His death would be to provide a "ransom" (lytron, "payment") "for" (anti, "in place of") "many" (see the chart, "New Testament Words for Redemption" at Mark 10:45). His death would take the place of many deaths, for only His death could truly atone for sin (John 1:29; Rom. 5:8; 1 Peter 2:24; 3:18). He was the perfect Sacrifice, whose substitutionary death paid the price for sin.

14. INSTRUCTION CONCERNING AUTHORITY (20:29-34)

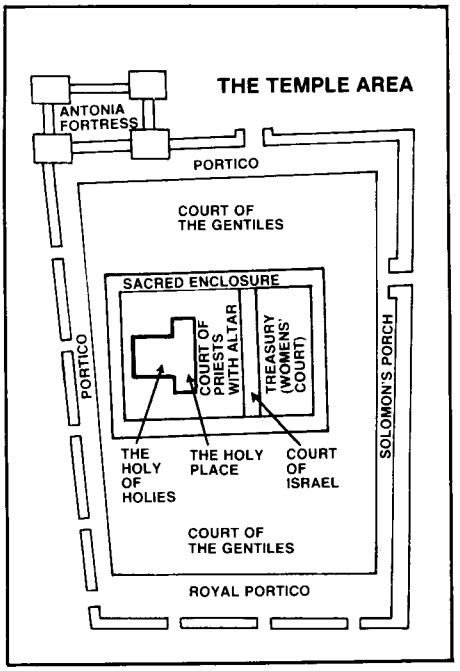
20:29-34. In a final display of His authority before He reached Jerusalem, Jesus healed two blind men near the city of Jericho. The other Synoptic writers (Mark and Luke) repeat this story with a few differences. Matthew wrote of two men; Mark and Luke spoke of one. Mark included the name of the blind man, Bartimaeus. Undoubtedly two men were there and Bartimaeus was the more noticeable of the two. Matthew and Mark said the men were healed when Jesus left Jericho, but Luke said the healing occurred when Jesus approached Jericho. This can be explained by the fact that there were two Jerichos then, an old city and a new one. Jesus was leaving old Jericho (Matt. and Mark) and approaching new Jericho (Luke) when the miracle occurred.

The blind men cried out for help when they heard . . . Jesus was passing by. Their appeal to Him was based on the fact that He is the Lord, Son of David. Earlier two other blind men called Jesus "Son of David" (Matt. 9:27; cf. 15:22). By using this title, they were appealing to Him as Messiah. They persisted in spite of the rebuke from the crowd until Jesus stopped and called them out. When He asked what they wanted, they simply replied they wanted their sight. Jesus had compassion (splanchnistheis; cf. comments on 9:36) on them and exercising His authority as the Messiah, the Son of David, He healed them immediately. It is interesting that this extended section (17:14–20:34), in which Jesus was teaching the disciples things they would need after His death, ended with a demonstration of His authority. Truly He is to be believed for He is the Son of David, the Messiah of Israel.

VI. Climax of the King's Offer (chaps. 21–27)

A. The official presentation of the King (21:1-22)



1. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY (21:1-11)

21:1-5. Jesus and the disciples were approaching Jerusalem from the east as they came up the road from Jericho. When they reached the town of Bethphage on the eastern slopes of the Mount of Olives, Jesus sent two disciples ahead to find a donkey and its colt. Though all four Gospel accounts include the Triumphal Entry, only Matthew mentioned a donkey along with the colt. A simple explanation of what some call a contradiction is that when Jesus rode the colt, the mother donkey naturally went along. Perhaps He rode each animal part of the distance (v. 7).

Jesus told the disciples to bring the animals to Him. If anyone questioned their actions, they were to say the Lord needed them. As Messiah He had the right to request whatever He needed. Matthew mentioned (vv. 4-5) that this act fulfilled a prophecy, namely, Zechariah 9:9 (cf. Isa. 62:11), which spoke to the nation of the coming of her King in a gentle manner riding on . . . a colt, the foal (lit., son) of a donkey. This was not the normal manner in which kings arrived, for they usually came as conquerors riding on horses. A colt was a symbol of peace.

21:6-8. The disciples got the animals, threw their garments on them to make saddles, and people in the large crowd spread their cloaks (cf. 2 Kings 9:13) and tree branches on the road. Most of these people were pilgrims from Galilee on their way to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover. They were familiar with Jesus and the many miracles He had performed in Galilee.

21:9. As the people walked along, some before Jesus and some behind Him, they were probably singing some of the pilgrim psalms. Matthew noted that they (including children, v. 15) shouted the words of Psalm 118:26, Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord. To Him they shouted, Hosanna to the Son of David. "Hosanna" is from the Hebrew hôšî'âh nā', "Save (us), we pray," taken from Psalm 118:25. It came to be a note of praise as well as petition.

While the crowd did not fully understand the significance of this event, they seemed to be acknowledging that this One is the promised Seed of David who had come to grant them salvation. Both their actions and words bestowed honor on this One coming into the city, at last presenting Himself publicly as their King.

21:10-11. As Jesus entered Jerusalem, the entire city was moved and asked, Who is this? Since Jesus had usually avoided the city, its inhabitants did not know Him. Those accompanying Jesus from out of town kept answering, This is Jesus, the Prophet from Nazareth in Galilee (cf. v. 46). As the Prophet, He is the One promised by Moses (Deut. 18:15). Luke recorded that Jesus wept over the city (Luke 19:41) and told the religious leaders that the day was a significant time for the nation: "If you, even you, had only known on this day what would bring you peace—but now it is hidden from your eyes" (Luke 19:42). Jesus may well have had in mind the significant prophecy of Daniel concerning the time of Messiah's coming and that He had arrived in Jerusalem at the very time predicted by Daniel over 500 years previously (Dan. 9:25-26). This event marked the official presentation of Jesus Christ to the nation of Israel as the rightful Son of David.

2. THE MESSIANIC AUTHORITY (21:12-14)

21:12-14. While Matthew's account seems to imply Jesus entered the temple immediately after His entry into Jerusalem, the other accounts state that Jesus returned to Bethany after the entry. The cleansing of the temple probably occurred the next morning when Jesus returned to Jerusalem from Bethany (Mark 11:11-16).

As Messiah Jesus entered the temple area, His indignation was directed toward those who had changed the character of the temple from a place of prayer into a place of corrupt commercialism. Many were making their living from the temple and the sacrifices purchased there. They insisted that in the temple the people could not use money that had been circulating in society, but had to change their money into temple money first, for a fee, and then use the temple money to purchase animals for sacrifice, at inflated prices. Since such extortion was completely contrary to the temple's purposes, the Lord overturned their tables and benches in the outer court of the Gentiles (see sketch) while quoting parts of two Old Testament verses, Isaiah 56:7 and Jeremiah 7:11. (Jesus had previously cleared the temple at the beginning of His ministry [John 2:14-16].)

Jesus further demonstrated His authority by healing the blind and the lame who came to Him at the temple. (Only Matthew recorded this fact.) Normally such individuals were excluded from the temple, but Jesus' authority brought many changes.

3. THE OFFICIAL INDIGNATION (21:15-17)

21:15-17. As Jesus healed those who came to Him in the temple, children ascribed praise to Him, shouting . . . Hosanna to the Son of David, clearly a messianic title (cf. comments on v. 9). The chief priests and the teachers of the Law were angered by Jesus' works and the children's praises. Were indignant comes from a verb meaning "to be stirred up in anger," used only in the Synoptic Gospels (cf. 20:24; 26:8; Mark 10:14, 41; 14:4; Luke 13:14). Their question to Jesus, Do You hear what these children are saying? implied a request that Jesus make them stop. Probably many of the "children" in the temple were there for the first time, celebrating their becoming men in the society. Such influence on young minds was not thought to be in the best interests of the nation. Jesus replied by quoting from Psalm 8:2, which spoke of praise coming from the lips of children and infants. By receiving their praise, Jesus was declaring He was worthy of praise as their Messiah. The religious leaders, in rejecting Jesus, did not even have the insights of children, who were receiving Him (cf. Matt. 18:3-4). Consequently Jesus left the leaders and departed from the temple. He returned to the town of Bethany, about a two-mile walk over the Mount of Olives, where He spent the night, probably in the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus.

4. THE SYMBOLIC REJECTION (21:18-22)

21:18-22. As Jesus was making His way back to the city of Jerusalem the next morning . . . He was hungry. He saw a fig tree by the road and noticed it was covered with leaves. As He drew closer, He discovered there was no fruit on the tree. Fig trees bear fruit first and then the leaves appear, or both appear about the same time. Since the tree was in leaf, figs should have been on it. When Jesus found none, He cursed the tree and it immediately . . . withered. Mark indicated that the disciples heard Jesus curse the tree, but did not notice the withered condition till they returned to Jerusalem the next morning (Mark 11:13-14, 20). The disciples marveled (ethaumasan) that the tree withered so quickly.

Jesus used this event to teach a lesson in faith, for if they had genuine faith in God they not only would be able to do miracles such as cursing the tree, but they would be able to move mountains (cf. Matt. 17:20). If they truly believed, they would receive whatever they prayed for. The Lord was teaching the importance of faith rather than doubting or simply marveling. By contrast the nation of Israel had failed to exercise faith in Him.

This event may have meaning beyond the lesson in faith, however. Many believe that Jesus saw this fig tree as a symbol of Israel at that time. They too were professing to be fruitful, but a closer examination of the nation revealed they were fruitless. By cursing that generation, Jesus was showing His rejection of them and predicting that no fruit would ever come from them. Within a few days, that generation would reject their King and crucify Him. This ultimately led to judgment on that generation. In A.D. 70 the Romans came, demolished the temple, overran the country of Israel, and ended Israel's political entity (Luke 21:20). Perhaps in cursing the fig tree, Jesus was setting aside that generation. Of course the entire nation was not set aside (cf. Rom. 11:1, 26).

B. The religious confrontation with the King (21:23–22:46)

1. CONFRONTATION WITH THE PRIESTS AND ELDERS (21:23–22:14)

a. The attack (21:23)

21:23. Jesus returned to the temple courts He had just recently claimed for His Father. In these courts He confronted various religious groups in the nation. The debate began as the chief priests and the elders asked Jesus, By what authority are You doing these things? And who gave You this authority? By "these things" they probably meant His Triumphal Entry into the city, His reception of praise from the people, His clearing of the temple, His healing of the blind and the lame (vv. 8-14), and His teaching (v. 23). The leaders understood Jesus was claiming authority as Messiah and wanted to know where He got such authority. He certainly had not received it from them!

b. The response (21:24–22:14)

(1) The baptism of John (21:24-32).
21:24-27 (Mark 11:29-33; Luke 20:3-8). In response to the religious leaders' question, Jesus asked another question, promising that if they answered His question, He would answer theirs. He asked, John's baptism—where did it come from? Was it from heaven, or from men? Though this question seemed fairly simple, it prompted a debate among the religious leaders. If they answered that John's baptism was from heaven, they knew Jesus would respond, Then why didn't you believe him? On the other hand if they responded that John's baptism was from men, they knew the people would be upset with them. John was regarded as a great prophet by the populace. Jesus thus put them in a position in which they had tried to place Him on many occasions. They finally responded that they did not know the answer to Jesus' question. In keeping with His word, Jesus therefore refused to answer their question. Instead He gave a parable.

21:28-32. In Jesus' parable a man asked his two sons to go . . . work in the vineyard. The first son said he would not go but later he changed his mind and went. The other immediately said he would go and work but he never showed up. Jesus then asked, Which of the two did what his father wanted? The obvious answer was that the first son obeyed. Jesus immediately applied this to the religious leaders. While some seemingly accepted the ministry of John the Baptist (John 5:35), their actions (Luke 7:29-30) proved they were like the second son. On the other hand many tax collectors and prostitutes received the message of John and did the will of the Father. Therefore they would be allowed entrance into the kingdom of God. But the religious leaders who did not repent and believe would be denied entrance. These religious leaders stood condemned. They must have been stunned by Jesus' words that despised, immoral people such as tax collectors and prostitutes were entering the kingdom and they, the religious leaders, were not!

(2) The Parable of the Landowner (21:33-46; Mark 12:1-12; Luke 20:9-19).

21:33-39. In another parable Jesus continued to demonstrate the response of the nation to His ministry. He told of a landowner who went to great expense to make a vineyard productive. He rented out the vineyard to farmers who were to care for it. When harvesttime came, the landowner sent his servants . . . to collect what was rightfully his. But the tenant farmers mistreated the servants, beating one, killing another, and stoning a third. Other servants were sent with the same results. Finally the landowner sent his son, thinking they would respect him. The farmers, however, reasoned that if they killed the son, the land would be theirs. Therefore they threw him out of the vineyard and killed him.

It seems clear that Jesus was speaking of the nation of Israel that had been carefully prepared by God to be His fruitful vineyard (cf. Isa. 5:1-7). The care of the vine had been committed to the nation's religious leaders. But they had failed to acknowledge the Master's right over them and had treated His messengers and prophets badly. They ultimately would even kill His Son, Jesus Christ, outside Jerusalem (cf. Heb. 13:12).

21:40-46. Jesus posed a natural question when He asked His listeners what they thought the landowner would do to those unfaithful farmers. Obviously he would not let them continue to operate the vineyard, but he would bring judgment on them. The land would be taken away from them and used by other tenants who would give him his rightful share of the harvest. This was in keeping with the Scriptures, for Jesus quoted Psalm 118:22-23, which refers to the rejected stone which will become the capstone.

By way of application Jesus said the kingdom of God was being taken away from those who heard Him, and it would be given to the people who would produce its fruit. The word for "people" (ethnei) is usually translated "nation." (It appears here without an article.) Two interpretations of this verse are often presented. One is that Jesus was saying the kingdom had been taken from the Jewish nation and would be given to Gentile nations who would produce the proper fruit of genuine faith. It is argued that since ethnei is singular, not plural, the word refers to the church which is called a nation in Romans 10:19 and 1 Peter 2:9-10. But the kingdom has not been taken completely away from Israel forever (Rom. 11:15, 25). And the church is not now inheriting the kingdom.

A better interpretation is that Jesus was simply saying the kingdom was being taken away from the nation Israel at that time, but it would be given back to the nation in a future day when that nation would demonstrate true repentance and faith. In this view Jesus was using the term "nation" in the sense of generation (cf. Matt. 23:36). Because of their rejection, that generation of Israel would never be able to experience the kingdom of God (cf. comments on 21:18-22). But a future generation in Israel will respond in saving faith to this same Messiah (Rom. 11:26-27), and to that future generation the kingdom will be given. By rejecting Jesus the Stone, these builders (Matt. 21:42) suffered judgment (he on whom it [the Stone] falls will be crushed). The religious leaders (then the chief priests and the Pharisees, v. 45; cf. v. 23) realized Jesus' remarks were directed toward them, and they tried their best to arrest Him. But they were afraid of the . . . people (cf. v. 26), who thought Jesus was a Prophet (cf. v. 11), so they were unable to act.

(3) The Parable of the Wedding Feast (22:1-14; Luke 14:15-24). 22:1-7. In a third parable addressed to the religious leaders (cf. the other two parables in 21:28-32 and 21:33-44) Jesus again referred to God's work in offering the kingdom. The figure of a wedding banquet here portrays the Millennial Age (cf. 9:15; Isa. 25:6; Luke 14:15). The king in this parable had made plans for a wedding banquet for his son. His servants had told those invited that it was time for the banquet, but the invitation was ignored and the guests refused to come. Further effort was put forth to extend the invitation but the same result followed. Since the offer was rejected to the point of mistreating and killing the servants, the king was enraged. He sent his army and destroyed those murderers and burned their city.

Jesus had in mind the effect of the nation's rejection of Him. God had made plans for His Son's millennial reign and the invitation had been extended. But the preaching of John the Baptist, Jesus, and the disciples had largely been ignored. The nation would even kill those extending the offer. Finally in A.D. 70 the Roman army would come, kill most of the Jews living in Jerusalem, and destroy the temple.

22:8-14. The wedding banquet, however, was prepared. Since those who were first invited had rejected the invitation, opportunity to attend was then given to a broader group. Though the invitation was extended to both good and bad, individual preparation was still necessary. This was evidenced by the fact that one guest at the banquet had not made adequate preparation. He had failed to appropriate what the king provided for he was not wearing the proper wedding clothes. (Apparently the king gave them all wedding clothes as they arrived, for they came off the streets [v. 10]. A person must respond not only outwardly, but also he must be rightly related to God the King by appropriating all the King provides.) Consequently this guest was cast out into a place of separation and suffering. (For comments on weeping and gnashing of teeth, see 13:42.) While the kingdom had now been expanded to include individuals from all races and backgrounds (many are invited), there is an election (few are chosen). And yet individual response is essential.

2. CONFRONTATION WITH THE PHARISEES AND THE HERODIANS (22:15-22) (MARK 12:13-17; LUKE 20:20-26)

22:15-17. This incident illustrates that controversy often makes strange bedfellows. The religious leaders of Israel had one goal: to get rid of Jesus of Nazareth. They would do this through any means possible, even if it meant cooperating with lifelong enemies. The Pharisees were the purists of the nation who opposed Rome and all attempts by Rome to intrude into the Jewish way of life. But the Herodians actively supported the rule of Herod the Great and favored making changes with the times as dictated by Rome. But those issues were less important to them than the pressing issue of getting rid of Jesus. So they sent a delegation to try to trick Jesus.

They began by saying several nice things about Him, but their hypocrisy was obvious for they really did not believe in Him. Their question was, Is it right to pay taxes to Caesar or not? Their cleverly devised question appeared to have no clear-cut answer. They thought they had trapped Jesus. If He answered that it was right to pay taxes to Caesar, He would be siding with the Romans against Israel and most Jews, including the Pharisees, would consider Him a traitor. If, however, He said taxes should not be paid to Rome, He could be accused of being a rebel who opposed the authority of Rome, and the Herodians would be against Him.

22:18-22. Jesus was aware of the hypocrisy in their approach and also of the implications of His answer. He therefore answered their question by demonstrating that government does have a rightful place in everyone's life and that one can be in subjection to government and God at the same time. He asked them to give Him a coin used to pay the tax. A Roman denarius, with its image of Caesar, the Roman emperor, made it obvious they were under Roman authority and taxation. (One coin inscription reads, "Tiberius Caesar Augustus, son of the Divine Augustus.") Therefore the taxes must be paid: Give to Caesar what is Caesar's.

But Jesus also reminded them that a sphere of authority belongs to God: Give to God what is God's. Individuals are to be subject also to His authority. Man has both political and spiritual responsibilities. Amazed at Jesus' answer, both the Pharisees and the Herodians were silenced.

3. CONFRONTATION WITH THE SADDUCEES (22:23-33)

22:23-28. The Sadducees were the next religious group to try to discredit Jesus and His ministry. The Sadducees were the "religious liberals" of their day for they said there is no resurrection or angels or spirits (Acts 23:8). Purposely their question centered on the doctrine of resurrection and its implications in a particular case. They cited the story of a woman who married a man who later died. In accordance with the levirate law (Deut. 25:5-10), her husband's brother took her as his wife (in order to perpetuate the dead brother's line). But he too died shortly thereafter. This happened with seven brothers.

The Sadducees' question therefore was, At the resurrection, whose wife will she be of the seven, since all of them were married to her? The Sadducees implied that heaven was simply an extension of things on earth men most enjoy, such as marital relationships. But if this woman had seven husbands, how could her marital relationship be possible? The Sadducees were trying to make the resurrection appear ridiculous.

22:29-33. The Sadducees' problems arose, Jesus said, because they did not know the Scriptures or the power of God. This was a strong denunciation of religious leaders, for of all people certainly they should have known God's Word and His power. God's Word taught the resurrection, and His power can bring people back to life. Jesus then corrected the Sadducees' two false notions: (1) Heaven, He said, is not simply an extension of the pleasures people enjoy on earth. In fact in the eternal state marriage will be unnecessary. Once individuals have received glorified bodies no longer subject to death, the need for procreation, one of the basic purposes for marriage, will no longer exist. Believers in glorified bodies will be like the angels in that regard, for angels do not reproduce themselves. (He did not say people will become angels.) Jesus did not answer all the questions about the eternal state and the eternal relationship of those married in this life. But He did answer the immediate question raised by the Sadducees. (2) A more important issue raised by the Sadducees pertained to the resurrection. If they had read and understood the Old Testament Scriptures, they would have clearly seen there is a future life and that when a person dies he continues to exist. To the Sadducees the resurrection was ridiculous because they believed death ended man's existence. But Jesus quoted a statement God had made directly to Moses at the burning bush: I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob (Ex. 3:6). If the Sadducees were correct and Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob had died and were no longer present anywhere, the words "I am" should have been "I was." The use of the present tense, "I am," implied that God is still the God of these patriarchs for they are alive with God and ultimately will share in the resurrection of the righteous. As a result of this encounter, the crowds . . . were astonished (exeplēssonto; cf. comments on Matt. 7:28; and cf. ethaumasan in 22:22) all the more at His teaching. Jesus thus successfully answered and defeated these religious experts.

4. CONFRONTATION WITH THE PHARISEES (22:34-46)

a. Their interrogation of Jesus (22:34-40)

22:34-40. When the Pharisees heard that Jesus had answered the Sadducees, they quickly sent a representative, a well-versed expert in the Law, to Jesus with a question . . . Which is the greatest commandment in the Law? This question was being debated among the religious leaders at the time and various commandments were being championed as the greatest. Jesus' quick reply summarized the entire Decalogue. He replied that the greatest commandment is to love the Lord . . . God with all one's heart . . . soul, and . . . mind (cf. Deut. 6:5). He added that the second commandment is to love one's neighbor as oneself (cf. Lev. 19:18). The first summarizes the first table of the Law, and the second summarizes the second table. Jesus said, All the Law and the Prophets hang on these two commandments, that is, all the Old Testament develops and amplifies these two points: love for God and love for others, who are made in God's image.

Mark reported that the teacher of the Law said Jesus had correctly answered the question, and that love for God and one's neighbor is more important than burnt offerings and sacrifices (Mark 12:32-33). The light was beginning to shine into his heart. He was not far, Jesus said, from the kingdom of God. Mark also added, "From then on no one dared ask Him any more questions" (Mark 12:34). The reason was obvious. Jesus was answering them as no had ever done. In fact in this last incident, the questioner was close to leaving the Pharisees and accepting Jesus. Perhaps they felt they should stop before they would lose any more people to Jesus' cause.

b. Jesus' interrogation of them (22:41-46) (Mark 12:35-37; Luke 20:41-44)

22:41-46. Since the Pharisees refused to ask Jesus any further questions, He took the offensive and posed a question to them. His question sought to solicit their views concerning Messiah. He asked, What do you think about the Christ? Whose Son is He? Their answer came quickly for they knew the Messiah was to come from the line of David. Jesus' reply (vv. 43-45) demonstrated that the Messiah had to be more than simply a human son of David, as many in that time were thinking. If the Messiah were simply an earthly son of David, why did David ascribe deity to Him? Jesus quoted from a messianic psalm (Ps. 110:1), in which David referred to the Messiah as my Lord. "Lord" translates the Hebrew 'ădōnāy, used only of God (e.g., Gen. 18:27; Job 28:28). If David called this Son "Lord," He certainly must be more than a human son.

The complexities of this theological discussion were too much for the Pharisees who were not ready to acknowledge the deity of this Son of David. No one . . . dared answer His question or debate points of practice or theology with Jesus. All His opponents had been silenced, including the chief priests and elders (Matt. 21:23-27), the Pharisees and the Herodians together (22:15-22), the Sadducees (vv. 23-33), and the Pharisees (vv. 34-36).

C. The national rejection of the King (chap. 23) (Mark 12:38-40; Luke 11:37-52; 20:45-47)

1. HIS WARNING TO THE MULTITUDES (23:1-12)

23:1-12. The hypocrisy and unbelief of the nation's religious leaders, evidenced in chapter 22, prompted a strong message from Jesus. He turned to the crowds and to His disciples, who were in the temple listening to His debates with the various religious leaders. He warned them about their teachings saying that their authority was to be recognized (they sit in Moses' seat, i.e., they teach the Law), but their practices, being hypocritical, should not be followed. They placed heavy burdens on people but were not righteous themselves (23:4). All their works were performed to be observed by men. Their phylacteries, small leather pouches containing strips of parchment with Old Testament verses (Ex. 13:9, 16; Deut. 6:8; 11:18), tied to their left arms and foreheads, were wide and thus conspicuous. And the tassels of their prayer shawls (Num. 15:38) were long and noticeable. They loved places of honor and to be called Rabbi, implying they were scholars. Such was not to be the attitude of Jesus' followers. Titles (such as Rabbi . . . father . . . teacher) and position were not to be sought; instead there should be a brotherly relationship among the disciples (Matt. 23:8).

Jesus was not saying there would be no lines of authority among them. But He was emphasizing that service for Him—the one Master (didaskalos, lit., "teacher") and one Teacher (kathēgētēs, "an authoritative guide," used only here in the NT)—was more important than human positions of honor. Leadership positions should never be a goal in and of themselves, but should always be viewed as opportunities to serve others. The Pharisees, who exalted themselves, would be humbled, and Jesus' followers, by humbling themselves in service, would someday be exalted.

2. HIS WARNINGS TO THE LEADERS (23:13-39)

23:13. In warning the teachers of the Law and the Pharisees of their ultimate destruction if they continued in their present path, Jesus pronounced seven denunciations, each beginning with Woe to you. "Those woes, in contrast to the Beatitudes, denounce false religion as utterly abhorrent to God and worthy of severe condemnation" (Walvoord, Matthew: Thy Kingdom Come, p. 171). In six of the seven, Jesus called the leaders you hypocrites.

His first denunciation concerned the fact that the Pharisees were preventing others from entering the kingdom. Their antagonism toward Jesus had caused many to turn away from Him. Many Jews were looking to their leaders for direction. Their failure to accept Jesus as Messiah had placed a stumbling block in the paths of their countrymen. For this they stood condemned.

23:14. The NIV and some Greek manuscripts omit this verse. It may have been added because of Mark 12:40 and Luke 20:47. If it is authentic here, the number of woes is eight. This "woe" demonstrated the inconsistency of the religious leaders for they made long "prayers" to impress people with their spirituality, but also oppressed widows, whom they should have helped.

23:15. This woe addressed the zealous activity of the religious leaders for they actively traveled not only over land but also over the sea to make even a single convert (prosēlyton, "proselyte") to Judaism. The problem with this was that by their actions they were condemning many individuals to eternal damnation. By imposing external restrictions of Rabbinic traditions on their converts, they were preventing these people from seeing the truth. In fact, such a convert became twice as much a son of hell as the Pharisees, that is, he became more pharisaic than the Pharisees themselves! "A son of hell" (lit., "of Gehenna"; cf. v. 33), was one deserving eternal punishment.

23:16-22. In the third woe Jesus pointed out the tricky character of the leaders. (In the first two woes Jesus spoke of the leaders' effects on others; in the other five woes He spoke of the leaders' own characters and actions.) When taking oaths, they made fine lines of distinction that could possibly invalidate their oaths. If one swore by the temple, or by the altar of the temple, it meant nothing to them. While thus appearing to be making a binding oath, they inwardly had no intention of keeping it. But if one swore by the gold of the temple or the gift on the altar, he would be bound by the oath. But Jesus said they were wrong in suggesting that gold was greater than the temple and a gift greater than the altar. Jesus pointed out that any oath based on the temple or things in it was binding for behind the temple was the One who dwelt in it. This was parallel to making an oath by God's throne, for that oath was also binding because of the One who sat on the throne. Such distinctions by the religious leaders were condemned by Jesus, for they were clearly deceptive and dishonest. Jesus denounced those leaders as blind guides (v. 16), blind fools (v. 17), and blind men (v. 19; cf. vv. 24, 26).

23:23-24. The fourth woe related to the pharisaic practice of meticulously tithing all their possessions. They went so far as to carry the practice down to the smallest spices from plants: mint, dill, and cummin. While meticulously following the Law in this area (Lev. 27:30), they failed to manifest the justice, mercy, and faithfulness demanded by the Law. They were majoring on minors, straining out a gnat, while minoring on majors, swallowing a camel. Being so busy with small details, they never dealt with the important matters. Jesus was not saying tithing was unimportant; He was saying they were completely neglecting the one area at the expense of the other. They should have been doing both. Since they were not, they were blind guides.

23:25-26. The fifth woe emphasized the hypocritical nature of the Pharisees. They were concerned with external cleanliness, such as the outside of the cup and dish from which they would eat. But in their hearts were greed and self-indulgence. Their cleansing was primarily for the sake of being seen by men. But they were not above robbery and excesses in their own lives. If cleansing would take place internally, their outside would also be affected.

23:27-28. In the sixth woe Jesus continued the thought of the previous statement about external purification. The fifth woe stressed their actions; the sixth, their appearances. He called the teachers of the Law and the Pharisees . . . whitewashed tombs. A custom then was to keep tombs painted white on the outside so they would appear beautiful. But inside the tombs was the decaying flesh of dead people. Similarly, while the Pharisees appeared beautiful on the outside because of their religious conformity, they were corrupt and decaying inside. They were full of hypocrisy and wickedness (anomias, "lawlessness").

23:29-32. The final woe also emphasized the religious leaders' hypocrisy. They spent time building tombs and decorating the graves of the righteous. They were quick to say that if they had lived in the time of the prophets, they would never have been involved in shedding the blood of these righteous men. Jesus knew they were already in the process of planning His death. By that act they would demonstrate they were just like the former generations who murdered the prophets. By rejecting the Prophet, they would be following in the footsteps of their forefathers and "filling up" their ancestors' sin.

23:33-36. In severe language Jesus condemned the religious leaders, calling them snakes and a brood of vipers, whose eternal destiny was hell (lit., "Gehenna"), the place of eternal punishment (cf. v. 15; cf. comments on Gehenna in 5:22). The evidence that they were deserving of hell would be their continual rejection of the truth. The Lord promised to send them prophets and wise men and teachers, but the leaders would reject their words and even kill some and flog and pursue others. Their response to the proclaimed truth would justify the judgment coming on them. Abel was the first righteous martyr mentioned in the Hebrew Scriptures (Gen. 4:8) and Zechariah was the last martyr (2 Chron. 24:20-22), 2 Chronicles being last in the Hebrew Bible. (In this statement Jesus attested the Old Testament canon.) In 2 Chronicles 24:20, Zechariah is called the "son of Jehoiada," whereas in Matthew he is the son of Berakiah. "Son of" can mean descendant; thus Jehoiada, being a priest, could have been Zechariah's grandfather. Or Jesus may have had in mind the Prophet Zechariah who was the son of Berakiah (Zech. 1:1). On that generation (genean) of Jews, who were guilty because they were following their blind (Matt. 23:16-17, 19, 24, 26) leaders, would fall God's judgment for their involvement in shedding innocent blood. The Lord was anticipating the nation's continuing rejection of the gospel. Their refusal of the Messiah ultimately led to the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70.

23:37-39 (Luke 13:34-35). In a final lament over the city of Jerusalem, Jesus stated His desire for that nation. Jerusalem, the capital, represented the entire nation, and people there had killed the prophets and stoned those sent to them (cf. Matt. 23:34; 21:35). He longed to gather the nation together much as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings. The nation, unlike chicks that naturally run to their mother hen in times of danger, willfully refused (you were not willing) to turn to the Lord. They were responsible to make a choice and their choice brought condemnation. The result was their house was left . . . desolate, or alone. Their "house" could mean their city; this is probably the most commonly accepted view. Or Jesus might have meant the temple or even the Davidic dynasty. Perhaps all these are involved.

But Jesus is not through with the nation and the city of Jerusalem. Though He would soon depart (John 13:33), at a future time He will be seen again (Zech. 12:10) and will be accepted, not rejected. In that day the nation will say, Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord, a quotation of Psalm 118:26. Jesus was speaking of His return to the earth to establish His millennial kingdom. This statement led to the following discussion.

D. The prophetic anticipation of the King (chaps. 24–25)

1. THE INQUIRY TO JESUS (24:1-3)

24:1-3. Having completed His discussions and debates with the religious leaders, Jesus left the temple to return to Bethany (cf. 26:6) by way of the Mount of Olives (24:3). The words Jesus had just uttered were still burning in His disciples' ears. He had denounced the nation and said it would be "desolate" (23:38). If Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed, how would there be a nation for Messiah to rule? The disciples pointed out the buildings of the temple area to Jesus as if to impress Him with their magnificence. What could possibly happen to such impressive buildings, especially to the temple of God? Jesus' response brought them consternation: Not one stone here will be left on another; every one will be thrown down. The temple would be destroyed and Jerusalem with it. This, however, prompted the disciples to ask when all this would take place. As Jesus reached the Mount of Olives in His walk to Bethany, He sat down and the disciples came to Him. Four disciples, Peter, James, John, and Andrew (Mark 13:3), plainly asked Jesus two questions: (1) When will this happen? That is, when will the temple be destroyed and not one stone left on another? (2) What will be the sign of Your coming and of the end of the Age?

These two questions prompted the following discussion by Jesus, commonly called the Olivet Discourse (Matt. 24–25). The questions related to the destruction of the temple and Jerusalem, and the sign of the Lord's coming and the end of the Age. They have nothing to do with the church, which Jesus said He would build (16:18). The church is not present in any sense in chapters 24 and 25. The disciples' questions related to Jerusalem, Israel, and the Lord's second coming in glory to establish His kingdom. Actually Matthew did not record Jesus' answer to the first question, but Luke did (Luke 21:20). The disciples felt that the destruction of Jerusalem, of which Jesus had spoken, would usher in the kingdom. They were thinking, no doubt, of Zechariah 14:1-2. (The destruction Jesus referred to in Matt. 23:38 occurred in A.D. 70, a destruction separate from the final one in Zech. 14.)

2. THE COMING TIME OF TROUBLE (24:4-26)

24:4-8 (Mark 13:5-8; Luke 21:8-11). Jesus began to describe the events leading up to His return in glory and to indicate signs of that return. In this section (Matt. 24:4-8) He described the first half of the seven-year period preceding His second coming. That period is called the Seventieth Week of Daniel (Dan. 9:27). (However, some premillenarians hold that Christ in Matt. 24:4-8 spoke of general signs in the present Church Age and that the time of trouble begins at v. 9. Others hold that Christ spoke of general signs in vv. 4-14, with the Tribulation beginning at v. 15.) The events described in verses 4-8 correspond somewhat to the seven seals in Revelation 6. (Walvoord, however, holds that all seven of the seal judgments will occur in the second half of the seven-year period; see comments on Rev. 6.)

That period will be characterized by (a) false Christs (Matt. 24:4-5; cf. Rev. 6:1-2; the first seal is Antichrist), (b) wars and rumors of wars (Matt. 24:6; cf. Rev. 6:3-4; the second seal is warfare) in which nations will rise up against each other on a global scale (Matt. 24:7a), and (c) unusual disturbances in nature including famines (v. 7b; cf. Rev. 6:5-6; the third seal is famine; the fourth and fifth seals are death and martyrdom [Rev. 6:7-11]) and earthquakes (Matt. 24:7b; cf. Rev. 6:12-14; the sixth seal is an earthquake). These things, Jesus said, will be the beginning of birth pains. As a pregnant woman's birth pains indicate that her child will soon be born, so these universal conflicts and catastrophes will mean the end of this interadvent Age is near.

24:9-14 (Mark 13:9-13; Luke 21:12-19). Jesus began His words (Matt. 24:9) with a time word, Then. At the middle point of the seven-year period preceding Christ's second coming, great distress will begin to be experienced by Israel. The Antichrist, who will have risen to power in the world and will have made a protective treaty with Israel, will break his agreement at that time (Dan. 9:27). He will bring great persecution on Israel (Dan. 7:25) and even establish his own center of worship in the temple in Jerusalem (2 Thes. 2:3-4). This will result in the death of many Jews (Matt. 24:9) and many people departing from the faith. Believing Jews will be betrayed by nonbelievers (v. 10), and many will be deceived by rising false prophets (cf. v. 5; Rev. 13:11-15). Wickedness will increase, causing the love of most people (for the Lord) to grow cold.

Those who remain faithful to the Lord until the end of that period of time will be saved, that is, delivered (Matt. 24:13). This does not refer to a personal self-effort at endurance that results in one's eternal salvation, but to physical deliverance of those who trust in the Savior during the Tribulation. They will enter the kingdom in physical bodies.

Also the gospel of the kingdom will be preached in the whole world during this period as a testimony to all nations. Though this will be a terrible time of persecution, the Lord will have servants who will witness and spread the good news concerning Christ and His soon-coming kingdom. This message will be similar to that preached by John the Baptist, Jesus, and the disciples at the beginning of Matthew's Gospel, but this message will clearly identify Jesus in His true character as the coming Messiah. This is not exactly the same message the church is proclaiming today. The message preached today in the Church Age and the message proclaimed in the Tribulation period calls for turning to the Savior for salvation. However, in the Tribulation the message will stress the coming kingdom, and those who then turn to the Savior for salvation will be allowed entrance into the kingdom. Apparently many will respond to that message (cf. Rev. 7:9-10).

24:15-26 (Mark 13:14-23; Luke 21:20-26). Having given a brief overview of the entire Tribulation period prior to His return, Jesus then spoke of the greatest observable sign within that period, the abomination that causes desolation. This abomination was spoken of by Daniel (Dan. 9:27). It referred to the disruption of the Jewish worship which will be reinstituted in the Tribulation temple (Dan. 12:11) and the establishment of the worship of the world dictator, the Antichrist, in the temple. He will make the temple abominable (and therefore desolate) by setting up in the temple an image of himself to be worshiped (2 Thes. 2:4; Rev. 13:14-15). Such an event will be clearly recognizable by everyone.

When that event occurs, those . . . in Judea should flee to the mountains. They should not be concerned about taking anything with them or returning from the field for possessions, not even for a cloak. The time following this event will be a time of great distress, unequaled from the beginning of the world . . . and never to be equaled again (Jer. 30:7). The awful character of the Tribulation period cannot be truly grasped by anyone. This was why Jesus pointed out how difficult the time would be for pregnant women and nursing mothers (Matt. 24:19). He encouraged people to pray that their escape would not have to be in the winter when it would be difficult or on the Sabbath when travel would be limited.

There was an encouraging note, however, for the Lord declared that those days would be cut short (v. 22). This meant there will be a termination of this period of time, not that the days will be fewer than 24 hours. If it were to go on indefinitely, no one would survive. But the period will come to an end for the sake of the elect, those who will be redeemed in the Tribulation and who will enter the kingdom. The elect of this Church Age will have already been raptured before the Tribulation. Much misinformation will be disseminated then for false Christs will be all around (vv. 23-24). They all will be preaching messages of salvation and performing signs and miracles, seeking to deceive even the elect. The Lord warned the disciples ahead of time not to be fooled for He would not be on earth working in that way.

3. THE COMING OF THE SON OF MAN (24:27-31)

24:27-31. The Lord will not be on the earth bodily at that time, but He will return to earth. And His coming will be like lightning flashing from the east . . . to the west; it will be a splendorous, visible event. Wherever there is a carcass (physical corruption), vultures will go there to eat it. Similarly, where there is spiritual corruption judgment will follow. The world will have become the domain of Satan's man, the Antichrist, the lawless one (2 Thes. 2:8), and many people will have been corrupted by false prophets (Matt. 24:24). But the Son of Man will come quickly in judgment (v. 27).

Immediately following the distress of that period, the Lord will return. His return will be accompanied by unusual displays in the heavens (v. 29; cf. Isa. 13:10; 34:4; Joel 2:31; 3:15-16) and by the appearing of His "sign" in the sky (Matt. 24:30). The appearance of the sign will cause all the nations to mourn (cf. Rev. 1:7), probably because they will realize the time of their judgment has come.

Exactly what the sign of the Son of Man will be is unknown. The sign of the setting aside of the nation of Israel was the departure of the glory from the temple (Ezek. 10:3, 18; 11:23). Perhaps the sign of the Lord's return will again involve the Shekinah glory. Some believe the sign may involve the heavenly city, New Jerusalem, which may descend at this time and remain as a satellite city suspended over the earthly city Jerusalem throughout the Millennium (Rev. 21:2-3). Or the sign may be the lightning, or perhaps the Lord Himself. Whatever the sign, it will be visible for all to see, for the Lord will return on the clouds . . . with power and great glory (cf. Dan. 7:13). He will then send His angels forth to regather His elect from the four winds, which relates to the earth (cf. Mark 13:27), from one end of the heavens to the other. This involves the gathering of those who will have become believers during the Seventieth Week of Daniel and who will have been scattered into various parts of the world because of persecution (cf. Matt. 24:16). This gathering will probably also involve all Old Testament saints, whose resurrection will occur at this time, so that they may share in Messiah's kingdom (Dan. 12:2-3, 13).

4. THE CONFIRMATION BY PARABLES (24:32-51)

In the previous portion of this sermon (24:4-31) Jesus had spoken directly about His return to earth. Then He gave some practical applications and instructions in light of His return. One should keep in mind that the primary application of this section is directed toward the future generation that will experience the days of the Tribulation and will be looking forward to the immediate coming of the King in glory. A secondary application of this passage, as with much of Scripture, is to believers living today who comprise the body of Christ, the church. The church is not in view in these verses. But just as God's people in a future time are told to be prepared, watchful, and faithful, so too believers today should also be faithful and alert.

a. The fig tree (24:32-44)

24:32-35 (Mark 13:28-31; Luke 21:29-33). Jesus' words, Now learn this lesson, show that He was beginning to apply what He had been teaching. When the twigs of fig trees begin to get tender and put forth leaves, that is a sure sign summer is not far away (cf. Matt. 21:18-20). Just as a fig tree was a harbinger of summer, so these signs (24:4-28) Jesus had been speaking of clearly indicated that His coming would follow shortly. The Lord's emphasis fell on the fact that all these things would be necessary. While various events throughout history have been pointed to as the fulfillment of this prophecy, clearly all these things (pertaining to the Great Tribulation) have never occurred. The completion of all these events is yet future. The generation (genea) of people living in that future day will see the completion of all the events. Jesus was not referring to the generation listening to Him then, for He had already said the kingdom had been taken from that group (21:43). That first-century generation would experience God's judgment. But the generation that will be living at the time these signs begin to take place will live through that period and will see the Lord Jesus coming as the King of glory. This promise is sure, for it would be easier for heaven and earth to pass away than for Christ's words to fail (cf. 5:18).

24:36-41 (Mark 13:32-33; Luke 17:26-37). The precise moment of the Lord's return cannot be calculated by anyone. When the Lord spoke these words, that information was said to be known by only the Father. Christ was obviously speaking from the vantage of His human knowledge (cf. Luke 2:52), not from the standpoint of His divine omniscience. But the period before His coming will be like the time in the days of Noah. People then were enjoying the normal pursuits of life, with no awareness of imminent judgment. Life continued normally for the people of Noah's day for they were eating, drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. But the Flood came and took them all away. It was sudden and they were unprepared.

As it was in Noah's day, so it will be before the glorious coming of the Lord. Two men will be in the field; one will be taken and the other left. Two women will be grinding with a hand mill; one will be taken and the other left. Analogous to Noah's day, the individuals who will be "taken" are the wicked whom the Lord will take away in judgment (cf. Luke 17:37). The individuals "left" are believers who will be privileged to be on the earth to populate the kingdom of Jesus Christ in physical bodies. As the wicked were taken away in judgment and Noah was left on the earth, so the wicked will be judged and removed when Christ returns and the righteous will be left behind to become His subjects in the kingdom.

Clearly the church, the body of Christ, cannot be in view in these statements. The Lord was not describing the Rapture, for the removal of the church will not be a judgment on the church. If this were the Rapture, as some commentators affirm, the Rapture would have to be posttribulational, for this event occurs immediately before the Lord's return in glory. But that would conflict with a number of Scriptures and present other problems that cannot be elaborated on here (cf., e.g., comments on 1 Thes. 4:13-18 and Rev. 3:10). The Lord's warning emphasized the need to be prepared, for judgment will come at a time when people will least expect it.

24:42-44. The Lord encouraged His disciples to keep watch (grēgoreite, the word rendered "be alert" in 1 Thes. 5:6), because they could not know on what day the Lord would come (cf. Matt. 25:13). The limits of the Tribulation period are known to God, for the Seventieth Week of Daniel will have a definite starting time and a definite ending time. But the people living then will only know in generalities the limits of the time. Therefore watchfulness is important. If a person knows the approximate time a thief may come to break into his house, he takes precautions and prepares accordingly. Likewise believers in the Tribulation, who will be looking forward to the coming of the Lord of glory, should be alert. They will know generally, from the signs of the end, when He will return, but they will not know the exact time.

b. The faithful servant (24:45-51)

24:45-51. The coming of the Lord will be a test of servants. As the master in Jesus' story entrusted all his possessions to his servant, so God has entrusted the care of all things in this earth to His servants. The responses of the servants are indications of their inward conditions. The Lord wants to find His servants, like the first steward, faithfully carrying out His will (vv. 45-46). Such a servant will be rewarded for his faithful service when the Lord returns (v. 47). But a servant who fails to carry out his stewardship will be judged severely. Such a servant, concluding that his master was not returning for a long time, took advantage of others (he beat his fellow servants) and lived wickedly (eating and drinking with drunkards). Like the wicked people of Noah's day (vv. 37-39), he was unaware of the sudden coming judgment (v. 50). But the judgment will come and he will be dealt with as one would deal with a hypocrite, which is precisely what an unfaithful servant is. His separation will result in eternal judgment (weeping and gnashing of teeth; cf. comments on 13:42) apart from his master. Likewise the judgment of the wicked at the Lord's second coming will separate them eternally from God.

5. THE COMING JUDGMENT ON ISRAEL (25:1-30)

25:1-13. When Christ returns in glory, further separations will occur, as indicated by the Parable of the 10 Virgins. While various interpretations have been given to this parable, it seems best to understand it as a judgment on living Jews soon after the Lord's return in glory. The context clearly points to that event (24:3, 14, 27, 30, 39, 44, 51). The judgment of the Gentiles (sheep and goats) will occur when the Lord returns (25:31-46). Also at His glorious return, Israel will be judged as a nation (Ezek. 20:33-44; Zech. 13:1).

Israel therefore is pictured as 10 virgins who are awaiting the return of the bridegroom. In wedding customs in Jesus' day, the bridegroom would return from the house of the bride in a procession leading to his own home where a wedding banquet would be enjoyed. In Jesus' parable, He as King will return from heaven with His bride, the church, in order to enter into the Millennium. The Jews in the Tribulation will be some of the invited guests privileged to share in the feast.

But preparation is necessary. In the parable, five of the virgins had made adequate preparation for they possessed the necessary lamps and extra oil in jars (Matt. 25:4). Five others had lamps but no extra oil. At midnight . . . the bridegroom arrived. The lamps of the five virgins without extra oil were going out. So they had to go searching for oil and missed the arrival of the bridegroom. When they returned and found the wedding feast in progress, they sought admission but were denied (vv. 10-12).

Israel in the Tribulation will know that Jesus' coming is near, but not all will be spiritually prepared for it. His coming will be sudden, when it is not expected (24:27, 39, 50). Though this passage does not specifically interpret the meaning of the oil, many commentators see it as representing the Holy Spirit and His work in salvation. Salvation is more than mere profession for it involves regeneration by the Holy Spirit. Those who will merely profess to be saved, and do not actually possess the Spirit, will be excluded from the feast, that is, the kingdom. Those who fail to be ready when the King comes, cannot enter His kingdom. Since the day and hour of His return are unknown, believers in the Tribulation should keep watch (grēgoreite), that is, be alert and prepared (cf. 24:42).

25:14-30 (Luke 19:11-27). In another parable on faithfulness, Jesus told the story of a master with three servants. The master went on a journey and gave each servant a specific amount of money, talents. The talents were of silver (money in Matt. 25:18 is argyrion, which means silver money). A talent weighed between 58 and 80 pounds. Thus the master entrusted his servants with considerable amounts of money. The amounts were in keeping with the men's abilities.

Two of the servants were faithful in caring for the master's money (vv. 16-17) and were accordingly rewarded for their faithfulness with additional wealth, additional responsibilities, and sharing of the master's joy (vv. 20-23). The third servant, having received the one talent, reasoned that his master might not be coming back at all. If he did return someday, the servant could simply return the talent to his master without loss from any poor investment (v. 25). But if he failed to return, the servant wanted to be able to keep the talent for himself. He did not want to deposit the talent in a bank where it would be recorded that the talent belonged to the master (v. 27). His reasoning indicated he lacked faith in his master; he proved to be a worthless servant. As a result, he lost what he had (v. 29; cf. 13:12), and was cast into judgment. Like the unworthy servant in 24:48-51, he too would be eternally separated from God. On weeping and gnashing of teeth see comments on 13:42. The Parable of the 10 Virgins (25:1-13) stressed the need for preparedness for the Messiah's return. This Parable of the Talents stressed the need to serve the King while He is away.

6. THE COMING JUDGMENT ON GENTILES (25:31-46)

When the Lord returns "in His glory," He will judge not only the nation Israel (as in the Parable of the 10 Virgins [vv. 1-13] and the Parable of the Talents [vv. 14-30]) but also the Gentiles. This is not the same as the great white throne judgment, which involves only the wicked and which follows the Millennium (Rev. 20:13-15). The judgment of the Gentiles will occur 1,000 years earlier in order to determine who will and will not enter the kingdom.

25:31-33. The words the nations (ta ethnē) should be translated "the Gentiles." These are all people, other than Jews, who have lived through the Tribulation period (cf. Joel 3:2, 12). They will be judged individually, not as national groups. They are described as a mingling of sheep and goats, which the Lord will separate.

25:34-40. The King "on His throne" (v. 31) will extend an invitation to those on His right hand, the sheep, to enter the kingdom God had prepared . . . since the Creation of the world. The basis of their entrance is seen in their actions, for they provided food, drink, clothing, and care for the King (vv. 35-36). The King's statement will prompt the sheep to respond that they do not recall ever having ministered directly to the King (vv. 37-39). The King will answer that they performed these services for the least of these brothers of Mine, and by so doing were ministering to the King (v. 40).

The expression "these brothers" must refer to a third group that is neither sheep nor goats. The only possible group would be Jews, physical brothers of the Lord. In view of the distress in the Tribulation period, it is clear that any believing Jew will have a difficult time surviving (cf. 24:15-21). The forces of the world dictator will be doing everything possible to exterminate all Jews (cf. Rev. 12:17). A Gentile going out of his way to assist a Jew in the Tribulation will mean that Gentile has become a believer in Jesus Christ during the Tribulation. By such a stand and action, a believing Gentile will put his life in jeopardy. His works will not save him; but his works will reveal that he is redeemed.

25:41-46. To the goats on His left hand (cf. v. 33) the King will pronounce judgment. They will be told, Depart . . . into the eternal fire prepared not for men but for the devil and his angels (cf. "the kingdom prepared," v. 34). The basis of their judgment will be their failure to extend mercy to the remnant of Jewish believers during the Tribulation. Their lack of righteous works will evidence their unconcern (vv. 42-44; cf. vv. 35-36). Such individuals will sympathize with the world dictator and support his cause. They will be removed from the earth and will be cast into "eternal fire" (v. 41) to undergo eternal punishment (v. 46). With all wickedness removed in the various judgments at the Second Advent, the kingdom will begin on earth with only saved individuals in physical bodies constituting the earthly kingdom as the King's subjects. Glorified saints from Old Testament times and the church, the bride of Christ, will also be present to share in the reign of the King of kings.

In this extended prophetic sermon, Jesus answered His disciples' questions about the sign of His coming and the end of the Age (24:4-31). He also presented practical lessons for those who will be living at that time (24:32-51), encouraging them to faithfulness, watchfulness, and preparedness. By way of application these lessons are relevant to all believers in any Age. He concluded by pointing out the establishment of the kingdom and the judgment of Jews (25:1-30) and of Gentiles (vv. 31-46).

E. The national rejection of the King (chaps. 26–27)

1. THE PRELIMINARY EVENTS (26:1-46)

a. The developing of the plot (26:1-5) (Mark 14:1-2; Luke 22:1-2; John 11:45-53)

26:1-5. The words, When Jesus had finished saying all these things, are the last of five such turning points in the book (cf. 7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1). As soon as Jesus completed the Olivet Discourse, He reminded the disciples that the Passover feast was only two days away and that He would be handed over to be crucified. The events in 26:1-16 occurred on Wednesday. Though there is no record of the disciples' reactions to the Lord's words, Matthew did record the plot that developed among the religious leaders to kill Him. In the palace of the high priest . . . Caiaphas, the plan was begun to arrest Jesus in some sly way but not until the Feast had passed. Their thinking was to wait until the many pilgrims who had converged on Jerusalem for the Passover had gone home. Then they would dispose of Jesus in a quiet way. Their timing was not God's timing, however, and the advancement in the timetable was due in part to the willingness of Judas Iscariot who volunteered to betray the Lord.

b. The anointing by perfume (26:6-13) (Mark 14:3-9; John 12:1-8)

26:6-9. During the final week of His life before the Cross, the Lord spent the nights in Bethany, east of Jerusalem on the south slopes of the Mount of Olives. Matthew recorded an event that took place one evening in the home of . . . Simon the Leper. John described the same event in greater detail (John 12:1-8), giving the names of the individuals. The woman who poured the oil on Jesus' head was Mary (John 12:3), and the disciple who first objected to the action was Judas Iscariot (John 12:4). The perfume was very expensive (Matt. 26:7), worth "a year's wages" (John 12:5; lit., "300 denarii"). Obviously this act of love was costly for Mary.

26:10-13. The Lord was aware of the disciples' comments ("Why this waste?" v. 8) and their heart attitude ("they were indignant," v. 8; cf. 20:24; 21:15) behind their words. Judas Iscariot was not motivated by his concern for the poor (John 12:6). He was a thief and was concerned about the money not being put in their common purse which he controlled. Jesus reminded them that because the poor would always be with them they would have many opportunities to show kindness, but He would not always be among them.

Mary's beautiful act prepared His body for burial (Matt. 26:12). Jesus had spoken several times of His coming death (e.g., 16:21; 17:22; 20:18), but the disciples did not seem to believe His words. Mary believed and performed this act as a testimony of her devotion to Him. As a result her sacrificial act is often proclaimed throughout the world. Perhaps it was this act and the Lord's approval of it that made Judas willing to betray the Lord. From this scene Judas went to the chief priests and offered to betray Jesus.

c. The plan for betrayal (26:14-16) (Mark 14:10-11; Luke 22:3-6)

26:14-16. Judas Iscariot must have been viewed by the religious leaders as an answer to their prayers. Judas' offer to the chief priests to betray Jesus Christ was more than agreeing to point out Jesus to arresting officers. Judas was offering his services as a witness against Jesus when He would be brought to trial. He would do anything to gain more money (cf. John 12:6). The offer was made in exchange for funds, probably paid out immediately to Judas. Thirty silver coins were the redemption price paid for a slave (Ex. 21:32). This same amount was also prophesied as the price for the services of the rejected Shepherd (Zech. 11:12). The exact value of the agreed price cannot be determined because the coinage was not identified; it was simply called "silver" (argyria; cf. Matt. 25:18). But it could have been a substantial amount. The bargain had been struck and Judas was now being looked to by the religious leaders as their deliverer from their biggest problem, Jesus of Nazareth. Judas knew he had to follow through, for his word had been given and money had been exchanged.

d. The celebrating of the Passover (26:17-30)

26:17-19 (Mark 14:12-16; Luke 22:7-13). Most Bible students believe that the events recorded in Matthew 26:17-30 took place on Thursday of Passion Week. This was the first day of the seven-day Feast of Unleavened Bread. On that first day Passover lambs were sacrificed (Mark 14:12). The Feast of Unleavened Bread followed immediately after the Passover; the entire eight-day event was sometimes called the Passover Week (cf. Luke 2:41; 22:1, 7; Acts 12:3-4; see comments on Luke 22:7).

The disciples who were sent to make preparations for the Passover meal were Peter and John (Luke 22:8). The place of the Passover celebration is not designated in any of the Gospels, though it took place in the city (Matt. 26:18), that is, Jerusalem, probably in the home of someone who acknowledged Jesus as Messiah. That he willingly opened his home indicated he had an awareness of Jesus and His claims. Besides finding the location, the two disciples . . . prepared the Passover, that is, they purchased and prepared the food, which probably took them the greater part of the day.

26:20-25 (Mark 14:17-21; Luke 22:14-23; John 13:21-30). When evening came, Jesus entered the prepared room, an "upper" (upstairs) room (Luke 22:12), and partook of the Passover supper with the Twelve. During the celebration, Jesus said that one of those sitting with Him was about to betray Him. This revealed Jesus' omniscience (cf. John 2:25; 4:29). Surprisingly no disciple pointed to another with an accusing finger, but each became very sad and began to ask if he would be the betrayer. Jesus added that the one betraying Him had been sharing close fellowship with Him; they had eaten out of the same bowl. Jesus said He would go (i.e., die) just as it had been written by prophets (e.g., Isa. 53:4-8; cf. Matt. 26:56). But woe to the one who would betray Him. It would be better for that one if he had never been born. Jesus was pointing out to Judas the consequences of his betrayal, for while he had already taken the money to betray Jesus the act was not yet accomplished. When Judas asked the Lord, Surely not I, Rabbi? Jesus clearly pointed him out as the betrayer. Not surprisingly, Judas called Him "Rabbi," not "Lord" as did the other disciples (v. 22; cf. v. 49).

The Lord's words were not understood by the other disciples, as John made clear (John 13:28-29). If they had understood, it is doubtful they would have let Judas leave the room. Since they did not understand, Judas departed (John 13:30).

26:26-30 (Mark 14:22-26; Luke 22:19-20). Jesus then instituted something new in the Passover feast. While they were eating, He took bread and gave it a special meaning. Then taking the cup of wine, He gave it a special meaning too. Jesus said the bread was His body (Matt. 26:26) and the wine was His blood of the New Covenant (v. 28). While Christians disagree on the meanings of these words, it appears Jesus was using these elements as visible reminders of an event about to take place.

The bread and wine represented His body and blood about to be shed, in keeping with the remission of sins promised in the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31-37; 32:37-40; Ezek. 34:25-31; 36:26-28), a covenant that would replace the old Mosaic Covenant. His blood was soon to be shed for many (cf. Matt. 20:28) for the forgiveness of sins. This portion of the Passover supper has been followed by Christians and called the Lord's Supper or Communion. Jesus committed this ordinance to the church to be followed as a continual reminder of His work in their salvation. It is to be commemorated until He returns (1 Cor. 11:23-26). Jesus told the disciples He would not eat this meal again with them until the institution of His Father's kingdom on earth. After the Passover meal, Jesus and the disciples together sang a hymn, left the home, and went out to the Mount of Olives.

e. The prayerful vigil (26:31-46)

26:31-35 (Mark 14:27-31; Luke 22:31-38; John 13:36-38). As Jesus and the disciples headed for the Mount of Olives, He reminded them that soon they would all forsake Him. This would be in keeping with the words of Zechariah who prophesied that the Shepherd would be struck down, and the sheep . . . scattered (Zech. 13:7). This is one of numerous times Matthew quoted from and alluded to the Book of Zechariah. But Jesus promised victory over death, for He said He would rise from the dead and go ahead of them into Galilee (Matt. 26:32; cf. 28:7). All the disciples were from Galilee and they had ministered with Jews in Galilee.

Whether Peter heard the Lord's words concerning Resurrection cannot be known. But he strongly reacted against the idea that he would forsake Jesus. Peter affirmed he would never deny the Lord, even if all the others did. But Jesus predicted that Peter would deny Him three times that very night before the crowing of the rooster in the early morning. Peter could not believe he would forsake Jesus; again he affirmed his devotion even if it meant death (26:35). This was the feeling of all the other disciples too; they could not believe they would deny the Lord. They would not betray Him (v. 22), so why would they deny Him?

26:36-46 (Mark 14:32-42; Luke 22:39-46; John 18:1). Jesus then went . . . to a place known as Gethsemane, which means "an oil press." In a field covered with olive trees, oil presses were used to extract oil from the fruit. An olive grove was in that place (John 18:1). There Jesus left His disciples—except for Peter and two of Zebedee's sons (James and John, Matt. 4:21) who went with Him, and He began to pray. He was experiencing sorrow (lypeisthai, "to be grieved or sad to the point of distress"; cf. 14:9; 17:23; 18:31; 19:22) and trouble such as He had never known in His earthly life. He asked the three disciples to stay and keep watch with Him (26:38). In this hour of His greatest need the Lord wanted those with a sympathetic understanding to be praying with Him.

Separating Himself then from the three, He prayed to His Father, asking that if . . . possible . . . this cup be taken away from Him. The "cup" probably referred to His imminent death. He also may have had in mind His coming separation from the Father (27:46) and

Jesus' Six Trials

His coming contact with sin as He became sin for mankind (2 Cor. 5:21). A cup, figuratively in the Old Testament, refers to wrath. The significant thing about this prayer, however, was that the Lord submitted His will to the will of His Father (Matt. 26:39).

When Jesus returned to the three, He found them asleep. He awakened them and reprimanded Peter (not the three) for his inability to bear with Him in prayer. Only a short time before, Peter had twice said he would never forsake the Lord (vv. 33, 35) and yet he could not even pray with Him in His greatest need. Jesus encouraged them (the imperatives and the word you are pl.) to keep watching and praying, but He did acknowledge the weakness of the human flesh (v. 41).

As Jesus prayed a second time, He recognized that the cup (cf. v. 39) could not pass away unless He "drank" of it. He affirmed a second time that God's will must be accomplished whatever the cost (v. 42; cf. v. 39). He returned and found the three disciples asleep again, but this time He did not wake them.

A third time He prayed the same prayer while the disciples slept on. Their sleeping and resting was in stark contrast to His agonizing (v. 37) and praying to the point of exhaustion and perspiration (Luke 22:43-44). He was lonely, for though the disciples were nearby, they were useless in their intercession. And yet He evidenced unswerving obedience—determination to follow the Father's will regardless of the cost. When Jesus returned to the disciples the third time, He awakened them with the news His betrayer was coming and they must go meet him.

2. THE ARREST IN THE GARDEN (26:47-56) (MARK 14:43-50; LUKE 22:47-53; JOHN 18:2-12)

26:47-56. As Jesus spoke, Judas . . . arrived in the garden. He was accompanied by a large crowd, including both Roman soldiers (John 18:3) and Jews from the temple guard (Luke 22:52) dispatched by the chief priests and the elders. The crowd had swords and clubs (Matt. 26:47; Mark 14:43) and torches and lanterns (John 18:3). The large group was considered necessary to make sure Jesus did not get away. Perhaps the leaders felt the pilgrims present for the Passover feast in Jerusalem might somehow try to prevent the arrest.

Judas had arranged a sign with the officials. The One he kissed would be the One to arrest. As he approached Jesus, he said, Greetings, Rabbi! (cf. Matt. 26:25) and kissed Him. Jesus' response to Judas indicated that He still loved him, for Jesus addressed him as Friend (hetaire, "companion" or "associate," used only three times in the NT, each time in Matt. [20:13; 22:12; 26:50]). With this the arresting soldiers probably pushed Judas out of the way and grabbed Jesus.

Peter was not to be outdone. (Only John identified him by name [John 18:10].) Having just awakened and perhaps still not fully aware of what was going on, he grabbed his sword and attempted to defend Jesus by striking out at one of those in the arresting group. He struck Malchus, the servant of the high priest (John 18:10).

The Lord immediately stopped the violence and reprimanded Peter for his efforts. He did not need anyone's defense, for He could have called on His Father who would have sent 12 legions of angels to defend Him. A Roman legion numbered about 6,000 soldiers. Such angelic protection (of about 72,000 angels!) could easily have defended Jesus from any opposition. But it was not God's will for Jesus to be rescued. Jesus' arrest occurred because He permitted it. Though Matthew did not mention it Luke, the physician, noted that Jesus healed the man's severed ear (Luke 22:51).

Matthew did record a brief speech by Jesus to His captors. He asked them why they had come out in this manner to arrest Him. He had been in their midst daily, teaching in the temple courts. Arrest had been possible at any time. Obviously these religious leaders feared the people's acknowledgment of Him. But the will of the Father was being fulfilled as well as the writings of the prophets who spoke of His death.

At that point all the disciples deserted Him and fled into the night—though they had vowed they would never do so! (Matt. 26:33, 35) The sheep were scattering (v. 31).

3. THE TRIALS OF THE KING (26:57–27:26)

a. The trial before the Jewish authorities (26:57–27:10)

26:57-58 (Mark 14:53-54; Luke 22:54; John 18:15-16). After Jesus was arrested in Gethsemane, He was led by the soldiers to Caiaphas, the high priest (see the chart on Jesus' six trials). But first there was a brief trial before the former high priest, Annas, who was Caiaphas' father-in-law (cf. comments on John 18:12-13, 19-24; see chart at Acts 4:1). That delaying tactic apparently gave Caiaphas time to assemble the "Sanhedrin" quickly (Matt. 26:59; cf. Acts 4:15 for comments on the Sanhedrin). Peter followed the Lord at a distance and came into the courtyard of the high priest's home to await the outcome.

26:59-68 (Mark 14:55-65; Luke 22:63-65). The purpose of Jesus' trials was to find some legal basis on which to condemn Him to death. Judas' testimony was crucial to the religious leaders' case, but he was nowhere to be found. As a result witnesses were sought against Jesus, a highly unusual court procedure, attempting to find anything that would make Him worthy of death. While many false witnesses volunteered, none of them could agree on anything against Jesus (Matt. 26:60). Finally two witnesses agreed that Jesus had once said, I am able to destroy the temple of God and rebuild it in three days. Jesus had said that approximately three years earlier at the outset of His ministry (John 2:19), referring not to the temple building, but to His body. It is interesting that this statement was here recalled soon before His crucifixion and resurrection. Jesus refused to answer any of the charges brought against Him because He was never officially charged with any crime.

Then the high priest attempted to get Jesus to respond to the accusations brought against Him (Matt. 26:62). Still Jesus remained silent until the high priest placed Him under sacred oath. Once the high priest charged Jesus under an oath by the living God, Jesus had to answer truthfully. Caiaphas insisted that Jesus answer if He was the Christ (the Messiah), the Son of God (v. 63). Jesus answered in the affirmative, adding that in the future He would sit at the right hand of the Mighty One (cf. 25:31) and He would return on the clouds of heaven (cf. 24:30). Here was a clear statement of His deity, clearly understood as such by the high priest, who immediately tore his clothes, which he was forbidden to do by the Law (Lev. 21:10), and declared that Jesus had spoken blasphemy (Matt. 26:65). He said there was no further need of witnesses for the Lord's lips had revealed His guilt.

The people had only two choices. One was to acknowledge that Jesus spoke the truth, and fall down and worship Him as Messiah. The other was to reject Him as a blasphemer and put Him to death. They chose the latter, thus sealing their rejection of the One who came as their Messiah-King.

No further evidence was examined at this point. No one defended Jesus or pointed to the works He had performed among them during the past three years. It appeared that the Sanhedrin had Jesus where they wanted Him. He had just spoken words of blasphemy which all heard. Contrary to all Jewish and Roman law, they took it on themselves to begin to punish the accused. They spit in His face . . . struck Him with their fists, and slapped Him. They asked Him to proph- esy, telling, if He could, who had just hit Him. These actions they continued doing, seemingly enjoying every moment of it. The Lord remained silent throughout this terrible ordeal, submitting Himself to His Father's will (cf. Isa. 53:7; 1 Peter 2:23).

26:69-75 (Mark 14:66-72; Luke 22:55-62; John 18:17-18, 25-27). While Jesus was undergoing His trial before the Sanhedrin, Peter was also undergoing a testing. He had followed the Lord and gained entrance into the house of the high priest (John 18:15-16). As he sat in the courtyard (cf. Matt. 26:58) awaiting the outcome of the trial, he had three opportunities to speak up for his Lord. All three times he denied he ever knew the Accused or was in any way ever connected with Him. The first denial occurred when a servant girl said in front of the others that he was one of those who had been with Jesus (v. 69). Another girl at the gate of the courtyard more directly pointed Peter out as one who had indeed been with Jesus (v. 71). Finally a number of those present came and accused Peter of being one who had been with Jesus for his Galilean accent gave him away (v. 73). With the third accusation, Peter began to call down curses on himself and he swore (v. 74). The calling of curses on himself was a legal way of seeking to affirm one's innocence; if the calamities did not follow, he would be assumed innocent (cf. Job 31).

As he publicly denied his Lord the third time, immediately a rooster crowed. That triggered in his thinking the words of the Lord, Before the rooster crows, you will disown Me three times (cf. Matt. 26:34). Peter knew immediately he had failed the Lord. Though he had affirmed that he would never forsake the Lord, he had publicly denied the One he loved. Filled with remorse, he left the courtyard and wept bitterly. His tears were tears of true repentance for having forsaken and denied the Lord.

27:1-2 (Mark 15:1). Jesus' first Jewish trials occurred under the cover of darkness. Since Jewish law required trials to be conducted during the day, the chief priests and the elders of the people realized an official trial was necessary. The brief trial recorded in Matthew 27:1 was simply for the court to reaffirm what had taken place earlier. The court decided that Jesus must die, but they did not have the power to put that decision into action (John 18:31). To get a death sentence, they needed to take the case to Pilate, the governor, the procurator of Judea and Samaria, A.D. 26–36 (cf. Luke 3:1). Jesus was therefore bound and brought by the Jews to Pilate. Pilate's home was in Caesarea, but at this festival time, he was in his Jerusalem palace.

27:3-10. When Judas Iscariot realized the outcome of the deliberations, he was filled with remorse and went back to the officials. He had not envisioned this as the outcome of his betrayal, but what he had hoped to accomplish is not mentioned in the biblical text. He knew he had betrayed innocent blood for he admitted Jesus was not worthy of death. The religious leaders were unsympathetic, pointing out that that was his problem, not theirs. Judas decided he had to get rid of the money he had received for betraying the Lord. The money was apparently a continual reminder of his action and convicted him of his sin. He went to the temple and threw the money into the temple (naos, the holy place itself, not the temple precincts). Unlike Peter, however, Judas' remorse did not include repentance, for he went from the temple and hanged himself. (More details of his action were given by Luke, Acts 1:18-19.)

Judas' act of throwing the betrayal money into the temple caused the religious leaders some problems. They did not feel the money should be put into the temple coffers since it was blood money, money paid to bring about a man's death. Yet they had had no scruples about giving it out in the first place (Matt. 26:15). They decided to take the money and buy a parcel of land (apparently in Judas' name, Acts 1:18) in which to bury foreigners. The parcel, which was a potter's field, a place where potters dug for clay, became known as the Field of Blood (Matt. 27:8), or Akeldama in Aramaic (Acts 1:19).

Matthew viewed these events as the fulfillment of a prophecy of Jeremiah. But the prophecy Matthew quoted was primarily from Zechariah, not Jeremiah. There is a close resemblance between Matthew 27:9-10 and Zechariah 11:12-13. But there are also similarities between Matthew's words and the ideas in Jeremiah 19:1, 4, 6, 11. Why then did Matthew refer only to Jeremiah? The solution to this problem is probably that Matthew had both prophets in mind but only mentioned the "major" prophet by name. (A similar situation is found in Mark 1:2-3, where Mark mentioned the Prophet Isaiah but quoted directly from both Isaiah and Malachi.) In addition, another explanation is that Jeremiah, in the Babylonian Talmud (Baba Bathra 14b), was placed first among the prophets, and his book represented all the other prophetic books.

b. The trial before the Roman authorities (27:11-26)

27:11-14 (Mark 15:2-5; Luke 23:1-5; John 18:28-38). Compared with the other Gospels, Matthew's record of Jesus' trial before Pilate is rather brief. Luke even mentioned that Pilate sent Jesus to Herod when he learned Jesus was a Galilean (Luke 23:6-12). That gesture brought about a friendship between Pilate and Herod that had not existed before. Matthew mentioned only one trial before Pilate and the one "accusation" that Jesus is the King of the Jews. The kingship of Jesus of course was Matthew's main theme. When Pilate asked Jesus, Are You the King of the Jews? the answer came in the affirmative. But as John recorded, Jesus' kingdom at that time was not a political kingdom to rival Rome (John 18:33-37). Jesus was no threat to Roman rule. Pilate realized that and sought to release Jesus.

While other accusations were presented by the chief priests and the elders, Jesus did not answer them, and Pilate was greatly surprised (thaumazein, "to be amazed"). Jesus need not answer those charges, for He was not being tried for those accusations. Instead He was on trial because they said He claimed to be the King of the Jews, the Messiah (Matt. 26:63-64). Since Pilate had also declared Jesus' innocence (John 18:38), there was no reason for Him to answer the accusations.

27:15-23 (Mark 15:6-14; Luke 23:13-24; John 18:39-40). Pilate had been warned by his wife to be careful how he dealt with this prisoner, for He was an innocent Man (Matt. 27:19). She had suffered a great deal through a dream concerning Jesus and shared her experience with her husband. To speculate beyond the words of the text on the content of her dream would be useless. Since Pilate believed Jesus was innocent, he tried to have Him released. It was a custom of the governor to release a prisoner each year at the Passover in order to gain acceptance with the Jews. His plan to bring about the release of Jesus involved a notorious prisoner named Barabbas, an insurrectionist (John 18:40) and murderer (Mark 15:7). Pilate thought that surely the people of the nation loved Jesus, their King, and that only the leaders were envious of Him and of the people's acclaim of Him (Matt. 27:18). He reasoned that if the people had a choice they surely would release Jesus, not the notorious Barabbas.

However, Pilate failed to grasp the determination of the religious leaders to do away with Jesus, for they persuaded the crowd to ask for Barabbas and to have Jesus executed. When Pilate asked the crowd what he should do . . . with Jesus who is called Christ . . . they all answered, Crucify Him! The Greek text shows their cry was one word, "Crucify" (staurōthētō). One can almost picture this scene, somewhat like a football stadium in which the crowd shouts "Defense!" Their cheer was "Crucify, crucify!" When Pilate sought further information from the crowd as to Jesus' crimes, the crowd simply shouted . . . louder, Crucify!

27:24-26 (Mark 15:15; Luke 23:25; John 19:6-16). Pilate realized he was getting nowhere with the crowd, and their threats to report him to Caesar (John 19:12) concerned him. His record with Caesar was not good, and he did not want word of a rival king to reach Caesar's ears, especially if Pilate had released that king. He therefore took water and washed his hands in front of the crowd, symbolizing his desire to absolve himself from being involved in putting an innocent man to death (Deut. 21:6-9). But his words, I am innocent of this Man's blood, did not make him innocent (Acts 4:27). Such an act did not remove Pilate's guilt from this travesty of justice.

When Pilate turned the responsibility over to the Jews (Matt. 27:24), however, they readily accepted it. They said, Let His blood be on us and on our children! Their words sadly came to pass as the judgment of God came on many of them and their children in A.D. 70 when

HARMONY OF EVENTS AT JESUS' CRUCIFIXION

1. Jesus arrived at Golgotha (Matt. 27:33; Mark 15:22; Luke 23:33; John 19:17).
2. He refused the offer of wine mixed with myrrh (Matt. 27:34; Mark 15:23).
3. He was nailed to the cross between the two thieves (Matt. 27:35-38; Mark 15:24-28; Luke 23:33-38; John 19:18).
4. He gave His first cry from the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing" (Luke 23:34).
5. The soldiers took Jesus' garments, leaving Him naked on the cross (Matt. 27:35; Mark 15:24; Luke 23:34; John 19:23).
6. The Jews mocked Jesus (Matt. 27:39-43; Mark 15:29-32; Luke 23:35-37).
7. He conversed with the two thieves (Luke 23:39-43).
8. He gave His second cry from the cross, "I tell you the truth; today you will be with Me in paradise" (Luke 23:43).
9. He spoke the third time, "Woman, here is your son" (John 19:26-27).
10. Darkness came from noon to 3 P.M. (Matt. 27:45; Mark 15:33; Luke 23:44).
11. He gave His fourth cry, "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?" (Matt. 27:46-47; Mark 15:34-36)
12. His fifth cry was, "I am thirsty" (John 19:28).
13. He drank "wine vinegar" (John 19:29).
14. His sixth cry was, "It is finished" (John 19:30).
15. He drank wine vinegar from a sponge (Matt. 27:48; Mark 15:36).
16. He cried a seventh time, "Father, into Your hands I commit My spirit" (Luke 23:46).
17. He dismissed His spirit by an act of His own will (Matt. 27:50; Mark 15:37; Luke 23:46; John 19:30).
18. The temple curtain was torn in two (Matt. 27:51; Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45).
19. Roman soldiers admitted, "Surely He was the Son of God" (Matt. 27:54; Mark 15:39).

the Romans destroyed the nation and the temple. In spite of Pilate's four declarations of Jesus' innocence (Luke 23:14, 20, 22; John 19:4), he fulfilled his commitment to the Jews by releasing Barabbas and turning Jesus over for crucifixion after He had been flogged.

4. THE CRUCIFIXION OF THE KING (27:27-56)

27:27-31 (Mark 15:16-20; John 19:1-5). Jesus was brought into the Praetorium, the common meeting courtyard crowded with Roman soldiers. The Praetorium may have been at Pilate's residence, the Castle of Antonia, though others suggest Herod's palace. The Praetorium was a large area, for 600 soldiers were there ("company of soldiers" is lit., "cohort," one-tenth of a legion).

There they removed His clothing and mocked Him by (a) putting on Him a scarlet robe, clothing for a king, (b) placing a crown of thorns . . . on His head, and (c) giving Him a staff for a "scepter." They knelt before Him and mocked Him by saying, Hail, King of the Jews! What a tragic figure Jesus presented at that moment. They degraded Him further by spitting on Him, and striking Him on the head again and again with the staff. Unknown to them, their actions fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy concerning the Savior's marring (Isa. 52:14). Because of the known cruelty of Roman soldiers, Jesus was probably beaten to the point where few would have recognized Him. Yet He silently bore the unjust treatment, submitting to the will of His Father (cf. 1 Peter 2:23). With their sport completed, the soldiers again dressed Jesus in His own clothes and led Him away to be crucified.

27:32-38 (Mark 15:21-28; Luke 23:26-34; John 19:17-27). Matthew recorded only a few of the events that occurred when Jesus was taken to the place of crucifixion. Simon of Cyrene, a city in North Africa populated with many Jews, was forced . . . to carry the cross

(actually the crossbeam) when Jesus could no longer carry it Himself, being weak from the beatings. Eventually the procession came to a place known as Golgotha, which in Aramaic means the Place of the Skull. This was not a place of skulls, a cemetery, or place of execution, but a hill that in some way resembled a skull. This was located either at the site of the present Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which was then outside Jerusalem's walls, or at Gordon's Calvary.

Jesus was then offered . . . wine . . . mixed with gall, a drink given to dull the senses and make the pain of crucifixion somewhat easier to bear. Jesus refused to drink the mixture, for He wanted to be in complete control of His senses even while hanging on the cross. The actual crucifixion was briefly noted by Matthew. He made no reference to the nails being driven into the Lord's hands and feet, but he did record the dividing of His clothes (by casting lots) by those crucifying Him. A few Greek manuscripts add to Matthew 27:35 that this action fulfilled Psalm 22:18. Though this probably was not part of Matthew's original account, John pointed out that same prophecy (John 19:24).

Over the head of a person being crucified was written an inscription containing the charge that brought him there. Over Jesus' head, was written THIS IS JESUS, THE KING OF THE JEWS, for that truly was the charge for which Jesus was dying. Though each Gospel account presents a slight variation in the wording, the sign probably included a combination of all the accounts. Thus it would have read, "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." John noted that Pilate had the charge written there in Aramaic, Latin, and Greek (John 19:20). The words "the King of the Jews" offended the chief priests, but Pilate refused to change what he had written (John 19:21-22). Jesus was crucified between two robbers (Matt. 27:38), whom Luke called "criminals" (Luke 23:33).

27:39-44 (Mark 15:29-32; Luke 23:35-43). While Jesus was hanging on the cross, He was subject to continual verbal abuse by those passing by. In mockery, they recalled what Jesus had said earlier about destroying the temple and raising it up three days later (John 2:19; cf. Matt. 26:61). Surely He must be a false leader, they thought, because His alleged ability to destroy the temple was now gone! If He were the Son of God, then He ought to be able to perform a miracle and come down from the cross. His inability to do that proved, they reasoned, that His claim was false. He had previously saved others . . . but now He could not save Himself; in this way too He was disqualified, they alleged. They said that if He came down . . . from the cross, they would believe in Him. One wonders, however, if even such an act as this would have prompted them to believe. They claimed if He were really the Son of God . . . God would rescue Him.

Besides the passersby (27:39-40) and the religious leaders (vv. 41-43), the robbers . . . crucified with Him also insulted Him (v. 44). Luke, however, recorded that a change of heart took place in one of the robbers (Luke 23:39-43). The irony of this scene was that Jesus could have done the things the crowd was shouting for Him to do. He could have come down from the cross and physically saved Himself. He did not lack the power to accomplish His deliverance. But it was not in the Father's will to do that. It was necessary that the Son of God die for others. He therefore patiently bore their insults.

27:45-50 (Mark 15:33-37; Luke 23:44-46; John 19:28-30). Matthew made no reference to the time when the crucifixion began. But Mark indicated that it began at the "third hour" (Mark 15:25), around 9 A.M. Matthew noted specifically that from the sixth hour, noon, until the ninth hour, 3 P.M., darkness came over all the land. In this period of darkness Jesus became the Sin-offering for the world (John 1:29; Rom. 5:8; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Peter 2:24; 3:18) and as such was forsaken by the Father. Near the end of this period of time, Jesus could bear the separation no longer and cried out in a loud voice, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? These Aramaic words mean, My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me? (a quotation of Ps. 22:1) Jesus sensed a separation from the Father He had never known, for in becoming sin the Father had to turn judicially from His Son (Rom. 3:25-26).

Some of those standing near the cross misunderstood Jesus' words. They heard "Eloi," but thought Jesus was trying to call for Elijah (Matt. 27:47). In Greek the word "Elijah" sounds more like "Eloi" than it does in English. Thinking His lips and throat had become dry, someone thought a drink of wine vinegar would moisten His vocal cords so He could speak plainly. Others, however, said to leave Jesus alone and see if Elijah would come and deliver Him. Their jeers were obviously still being directed against Jesus.

With one last cry Jesus . . . gave up His spirit, committing it into the hands of His Father (Luke 23:46). Jesus was in complete control of His life and died at the precise moment He determined by dismissing His spirit. No man took Jesus' life from Him, as He had said (John 10:11, 15, 17-18). He laid His life down in keeping with God's plan and He was involved in taking it back up again in His resurrection.

27:51-53 (Mark 15:38; Luke 23:44-45). At the time of Jesus' death, three momentous events occurred. First, the curtain of the temple was torn in two from top to bottom. This curtain separated the holy place from the holy of holies in the temple (Heb. 9:2-3). The fact that this occurred from top to bottom signified that God is the One who ripped the thick curtain. It was not torn from the bottom by men ripping it. God was showing that the way of access into His presence was now available for everyone, not simply the Old Testament high priest (Heb. 4:14-16; 10:19-22).

Second, at Christ's death a strong earthquake occurred, splitting rocks (Matt. 27:51). Truly the death of Christ was a powerful, earthshaking event with repercussions affecting even the creation. A third event mentioned was recorded only by Matthew. The tombs of many holy (righteous) people (v. 52) were opened, probably at a Jerusalem cemetery. The NIV suggests that these saints were resurrected when Jesus died and then went into Jerusalem after Jesus' resurrection. A number of commentators agree with this view. Many others, however, say that since Christ is the firstfruits of the dead (1 Cor. 15:23), their resurrection did not occur till He was raised. In this view, the phrase "after Jesus' resurrection" goes with the words were raised to life and came out of the tombs. This is possible in the Greek, and is suggested in the KJV and the NASB. The tombs, then, broke open at Christ's death, probably by the earthquake, thus heralding Christ's triumph in death over sin, but the bodies were not raised till Christ was raised.

These people returned to Jerusalem, (the Holy City) where they were recognized by friends and family. Like Lazarus (John 11:43-44), Jairus' daughter (Luke 8:52-56), and the widow of Nain's son (Luke 7:13-15), they too passed through physical death again. Or some say they may have been raised with glorified bodies like the Lord's. Walvoord suggests this event was "a fulfillment of the Feast of the Firstfruits of harvest mentioned in Leviticus 23:10-14. On that occasion, as a token of the coming harvest, the people would bring a handful of grain to the priest. The resurrection of these saints, occurring after Jesus Himself was raised, is a token of the coming harvest when all the saints will be raised" (Walvoord, Matthew: Thy Kingdom Come, p. 236).

27:54-56 (Mark 15:39-41; Luke 23:47-49). A Roman centurion (cf. Matt. 8:5; see Luke 7:2 for comments on centurions) and other Roman guards were impressed and terrified with the unusual circumstances surrounding the death of this Man, for such accompanying signs had never been observed in previous crucifixions. Their response was, Surely He was the Son of God! The momentous events of the day struck fear into the soldiers' hearts.

Also some women were there, observing from a distance the Lord's death. These women had followed Jesus from Galilee and had been caring for His needs. Among this group were Mary Magdalene (cf. Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:9; John 20:18), Mary the mother of James and Joseph (perhaps the same as "Mary the wife of Clopas," John 19:25), and the mother of Zebedee's sons, James and John (Matt. 4:21; 10:2). John mentioned that Mary, Jesus' mother, and Mary's sister were also present at the foot of the cross (John 19:25-27). While Matthew made no reference to what the women may have said or how they felt, their hearts must have been broken as they observed the death of their Lord, whom

FORTY DAYS—from Resurrection to Ascension

SUNDAY MORNING

1. An angel rolled away the stone from Jesus' tomb before sunrise (Matt. 28:2-4).
2. Women who followed Jesus visited Jesus' tomb and discovered Him missing (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1-4; Luke 24:1-3; John 20:1).
3. Mary Magdalene left to tell Peter and John (John 20:1-2).
4. The other women, remaining at the tomb, saw two angels who told them about the Resurrection (Matt. 28:5-7; Mark 16:5-7; Luke 24:4-8).
5. Peter and John visited Jesus' tomb (Luke 24:12; John 20:3-10).
6. Mary Magdalene returned to the tomb and Jesus appeared to her alone in the garden (Mark 16:9-11; John 20:11-18): His first appearance.
7. Jesus appeared to the other women (Mary, mother of James, Salome, and Joanna) (Matt. 28:8-10): His second appearance.
8. Those who guarded Jesus' tomb reported to the religious rulers how the angel rolled away the stone. They were then bribed (Matt. 28:11-15).
9. Jesus appeared to Peter (1 Cor. 15:5): His third appearance.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON

10. Jesus appeared to two men on the road to Emmaus (Mark 16:12-13; Luke 24:13-32): His fourth appearance.

SUNDAY EVENING

11. The two disciples from Emmaus told others they saw Jesus (Luke 24:33-35).
12. Jesus appeared to 10 apostles, with Thomas absent, in the Upper Room (Luke 24:36-43; John 20:19-25): His fifth appearance.

THE FOLLOWING SUNDAY

13. Jesus appeared to the 11 Apostles, including Thomas, and Thomas believed (John 20:26-28): His sixth appearance.

THE FOLLOWING 32 DAYS

14. Jesus appeared to seven disciples by the Sea of Galilee and performed a miracle of fish (John 21:1-14): His seventh appearance.
15. Jesus appeared to 500 (including the Eleven) at a mountain in Galilee (Matt. 28:16-20; Mark 16:15-18; 1 Cor. 15:6): His eighth appearance.
16. Jesus appeared to His half-brother James (1 Cor. 15:7): His ninth appearance.
17. At Jerusalem Jesus appeared again to His disciples (Luke 24:44-49; Acts 1:3-8): His 10th appearance.
18. On the Mount of Olives Jesus ascended into heaven while the disciples watched (Mark 16:19-20; Luke 24:50-53; Acts 1:9-12).

they loved and had served. With the approach of night, they apparently returned to the city and lodged there, for in a few days they were seeking to assist in the preparation of Jesus' body for burial (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1-3; Luke 24:1).

5. THE BURIAL OF THE KING (27:57-66)

27:57-61 (Mark 15:42-47; Luke 23:50-56; John 19:38-42). No known preparation had been made for Jesus' burial; normally the body of a crucified criminal would simply have been discarded without ceremony. However, a rich man from Arimathea (a town east of Joppa), named Joseph, asked Pilate . . . for Jesus' body. Joseph, a member of the Sanhedrin, had not agreed with the council's decision to crucify Jesus (Luke 23:51). Instead he was one who had been looking for the kingdom of God and was a believer in Jesus. Pilate granted his request, surprised that Jesus was already dead (Mark 15:44-45). Another account reported Joseph was assisted in the burial by Nicodemus (John 19:39; cf. John 3:1-21). These two men took the body of Jesus and following burial customs of the time, wrapped the body in linen with a mixture of myrrh and aloes, spices used in burial (John 19:40; cf. Matt. 2:11). This procedure was done rapidly in order to be completed before the Sabbath began at nightfall. Joseph placed the wrapped body in his own new tomb . . . cut out of the rock near the place of crucifixion. Why Joseph of Arimathea would own a tomb in Jerusalem cannot be determined. Possibly Jesus had made arrangements ahead of time with him and he had purchased the tomb especially for this occasion. Joseph and Nicodemus rolled a big stone across the tomb's entrance.

Matthew noted that Mary Magdalene and the other Mary sat across from the tomb (27:61), no doubt in mourning. Interestingly these women accompanied Jesus' body right up to the minute it was buried, whereas Jesus' disciples had all abandoned Him (26:56).

27:62-66. It is a little surprising that a group of unbelievers would remember Jesus' prediction that He would rise again on the third day, while the believing disciples seemingly forgot. The very next day after His death, that is, on the Sabbath, the chief priests and the Pharisees went to Pilate and informed him of Jesus' words. While they did not believe in Jesus (whom they blasphemously called that deceiver), they feared His disciples might come . . . steal the body, and attempt to fabricate a resurrection lie. If this were to happen, the deception would be worse than anything Jesus had accomplished in His life. The Resurrection was the one thing these leaders feared, so they suggested the tomb . . . be made secure until the third day.

Pilate agreed with their suggestion and ordered that a guard be sent to the tomb to make it as secure as possible. The Roman guard not only sealed the tomb (presumably with the official Roman seal and with a cord and wax, which if tampered with, could be detected) but also continued to keep a guard at the scene. Their presence made stealing the body impossible.

VII. Confirmation of the King's Life (chap. 28)

A. The empty tomb (28:1-8) (Mark 16:1-8; Luke 24:1-12; John 20:1-20)

1. THE OCCASION (28:1-4)

28:1-4. At dawn on the first day of the week, several women went to the tomb of Jesus. They knew where the Lord had been laid for they had seen Joseph and Nicodemus roll the stone over the door of the tomb (27:56). The women were returning to the tomb on Sunday morning, now that the Sabbath was over, to anoint Jesus' body for burial (Mark 16:1). There was, however, a violent earthquake associated with an angel coming from heaven and rolling away the stone from the door of the tomb. The appearance of the angel was like lightning, and his clothes were white as snow. The Roman soldiers guarding the tomb were so frightened by the angel that they shook and apparently fainted. They had been sent there to seal and guard the tomb, but their power was useless before this angelic messenger.

2. THE PROCLAMATION (28:5-8)

28:5-8. Though the soldiers were afraid, the angel had a special message for the women. To them he announced the fact of the Resurrection, for the One they sought was no longer there, but had risen just as He said. He had told them several times He would rise on the third day (16:21; 17:23; 20:19). If He had failed to rise, He would have been a deceiver unworthy of further devotion. One proof He had risen was the empty tomb. The women were encouraged to come and see the place where the Lord had been lying. Then the angel told them to go quickly and tell the disciples that He had risen from the dead and would be going ahead of them into Galilee, just as He had said (26:32). They would see Him . . . there, and indeed they did (28:16-20; John 21:1-23). But these words did not preclude His appearing to them on other occasions, as He did later that day (John 20:19-25). The women obeyed the angel's instructions for they hurried away from the tomb, intending to find the disciples and tell them the good news. They were filled with joy over the fact of the Resurrection, but they were fearful for they could not possibly comprehend the full implications of this momentous event.

B. The personal appearance (28:9-10)

28:9-10. As the women were on their way to tell the disciples what had happened, suddenly Jesus met them. Hearing His greeting, they recognized Him immediately and they fell at His feet and worshiped Him. By His appearance Jesus alleviated their fears and repeated the same message the angel had previously given: Do not be afraid (v. 10; cf. v. 5). He told them to tell the disciples (My brothers) to go to Galilee where He would appear before them. The Galilean ministry of Jesus was prominent in Matthew's account and it was natural for Jesus to meet His disciples there. They were all from Galilee and would be returning to Galilee after the Feast. There Jesus would meet them.

C. The "official" explanation (28:11-15)

28:11-15. While the women were running to find the disciples and tell them of the Resurrection, another group was moving rapidly to counteract the truth. Some of those who had been guarding the tomb overcame their fear, went into the city, and reported to the chief priests all that had transpired. It was imperative that the priests have an explanation to counter the truth. After deliberation the chief priests and elders . . . devised a plan. They gave the soldiers who had guarded the tomb a large sum of money and told them what to report to their superiors. The fabricated lie was that the disciples of Jesus had come during the night and had stolen away the body of Jesus while the soldiers were asleep. Such a report would not have been well received by the officials for a soldier who fell asleep on guard duty would be put to death (Acts 12:19). The Jewish leaders realized this as well, but promised to make things right with the superiors. When this was brought to the attention of the governor, they promised to satisfy him and keep the soldiers out of trouble. Such satisfaction obviously would involve the payment of another large sum of money. The soldiers took the money offered by the Jewish leaders and did as they were instructed.

As a result, this story was widely circulated among the Jews, and many believed the disciples had really stolen Jesus' body. But the logic of the explanation does not hold up. If the soldiers were asleep, how would they have known what had happened to the body of Jesus? And why would they admit "sleeping on the job"? The disciples' courage during this period was not sufficient to carry out such a plot. They were afraid and had scattered when Jesus was arrested. To execute this kind of plot was beyond their ability. But the truth is often harder for a person to believe than a lie, and many still swallow this lie.

28:16-20. Matthew did not record the meeting of Jesus with the 10 disciples later that same day (John 20:19-23) or the appearance 8 days later to the 11 disciples (John 20:24-29). But he did record an appearance occurring some time later in Galilee, where He promised He would meet them (Matt. 26:32; cf. 28:7, 10) at a mountain. Which mountain He specified is unknown. When Jesus appeared they worshiped Him, but some doubted. Since Jesus had appeared to them earlier and verified Himself to them, they were not doubting the Resurrection. There was probably simply a brief question among some of them as to whether this was truly Jesus appearing to them. There was no indication that any miraculous element was involved in His being there and since unusual circumstances had occurred with previous visits, perhaps they wondered.

Their doubts were quickly dispelled, for Jesus spoke to them claiming all authority in heaven and on earth. This authority (exousia, "official right or power") had been given to Jesus by the Father and now He was instructing the disciples to go on the basis of that authority. Their field was to include all nations, not just Israel (see comments on 10:5-6). They were to make disciples by proclaiming the truth concerning Jesus. Their hearers were to be evangelized and enlisted as Jesus' followers. Those who believed were to be baptized in water in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Such an act would associate a believer with the person of Jesus Christ and with the Triune God. The God whom they served is one God and yet is three Persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Those who respond are also to be taught the truths Jesus had specifically communicated to the Eleven. Not all that Jesus taught the disciples was communicated by them but they did teach specific truths for the new Church Age as they went abroad. Jesus' commission, applicable to all His followers, involved one command, "Make disciples," which is accompanied by three participles in the Greek: "going," baptizing, and teaching.

The final words of the Lord recorded by Matthew were a promise that He would be with them always until the very end of the Age. Though the Lord did not remain physically with the Eleven, His spiritual presence was with them until their tasks on earth were finished. These final words of the Lord were carried out by the apostles as they went everywhere, proclaiming the story of their Messiah, Jesus Christ, the King of the Jews.

MARK

John D. Grassmick

INTRODUCTION

Mark is the shortest of the four Gospels. From the 4th till the 19th centuries it was largely neglected by scholars because it was commonly regarded as an abridgment of Matthew. But by the end of the 19th century the theory that Mark was the first Gospel written gained widespread acceptance. Since then Mark has been the object of intense interest and study.

Authorship. Technically Mark's Gospel is anonymous since it does not name its author. The title "according to Mark" (Kata Markon) was added later by a scribe some time before A.D. 125. However, sufficient evidence is available from early church tradition (external evidence) and from information within the Gospel itself (internal evidence) to identify the author.

The unanimous testimony of the early church fathers is that Mark, an associate of the Apostle Peter, was the author. The earliest known statement of this comes from Papias (ca. A.D. 110), who quoted the testimony of John the elder, probably an alternate designation for the Apostle John. Papias' quotation named Mark as author and included the following information about Mark: (1) He was not an eyewitness follower of Jesus. (2) He accompanied the Apostle Peter and heard his preaching. (3) He wrote down accurately all that Peter remembered of Jesus' words and works "but not in order," that is, not always in chronological order. (4) He was Peter's "interpreter," probably meaning he explained Peter's teaching to a wider audience by writing it down rather than translating Peter's Aramaic discourses into Greek or Latin. (5) His account is wholly reliable (cf. Eusebius Ecclesiastical History 3. 39. 15).

This early evidence is confirmed by testimony from Justin Martyr (Dialogue 106. 3; ca. A.D. 160), the Anti-Marcionite Prologue to Mark (ca. A.D. 160–180), Irenaeus (Against Heresies 3. 1. 1-2; ca. A.D. 180), Tertullian (Against Marcion 4. 5; ca. A.D. 200), and the writings of Clement of Alexandria (ca. A.D. 195) and Origen (ca. A.D. 230), both cited by Eusebius (Ecclesiastical History 2. 15. 2; 6. 14. 6; 6. 25. 5). Thus the external evidence for Marcan authorship is early and is derived from various centers of early Christianity: Alexandria, Asia Minor, Rome.

Though not explicitly stated, most interpreters assume that the Mark mentioned by the church fathers is the same person as the "John (Hebrew name), also called Mark" (Latin name) referred to 10 times in the New Testament (Acts 12:12, 25; 13:5, 13; 15:37, 39; Col. 4:10; 2 Tim. 4:11; Phile. 24; 1 Peter 5:13). Objections raised against this identification are not convincing. No evidence exists for "another" Mark who had close connections with Peter nor is it necessary to suggest an "unknown" Mark in light of the New Testament data.

Internal evidence, though not explicit, is compatible with the historical testimony of the early church. It reveals the following information: (1) Mark was familiar with the geography of Palestine, especially Jerusalem (cf. Mark 5:1; 6:53; 8:10; 11:1; 13:3). (2) He apparently knew Aramaic, the common language of Palestine (cf. 5:41; 7:11, 34; 14:36). (3) He understood Jewish institutions and customs (cf. 1:21; 2:14, 16, 18; 7:2-4).

Several features also point to the author's connection with Peter: (a) the vividness and unusual detail of the narratives, that suggest that they were derived from the reminiscences of an "inner-circle" apostolic eyewitness such as Peter (cf 1:16-20, 29-31, 35-38; 5:21-24, 35-43; 6:39, 53-54; 9:14-15; 10:32, 46; 14:32-42); (b) the author's use of Peter's words and deeds (cf. 8:29, 32-33; 9:5-6; 10:28-30; 14:29-31, 66-72); (c) the inclusion of the words "and Peter" in 16:7, which are unique to this Gospel; and (d) the striking similarity between the broad outline of this Gospel and Peter's sermon in Caesarea (cf. Acts 10:34-43).

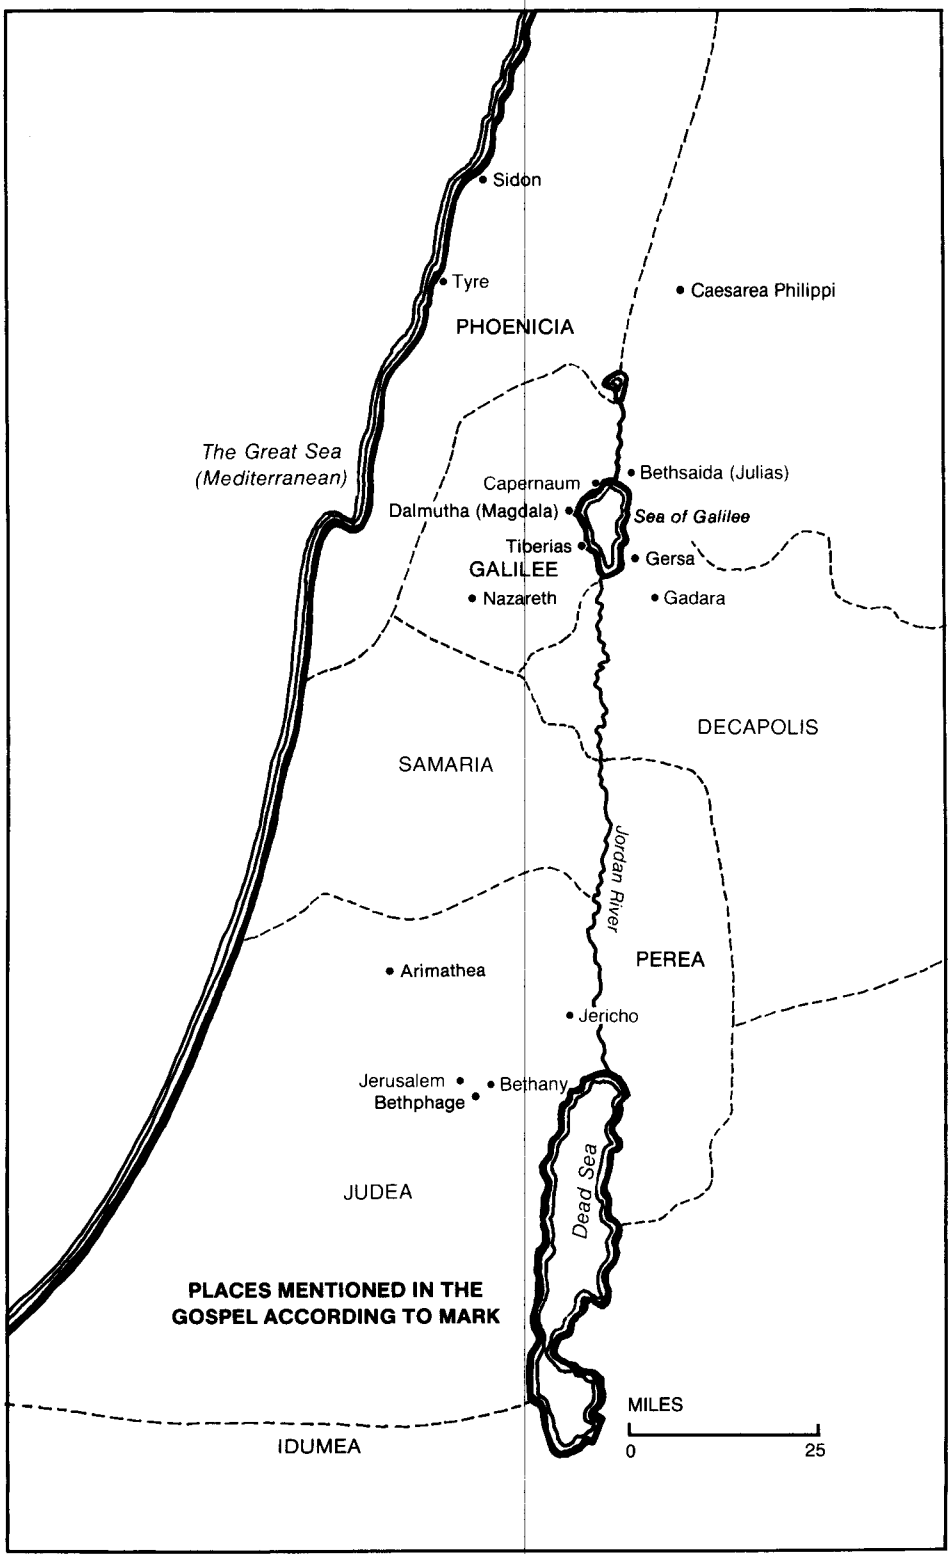
In light of both external and internal evidence it is reasonable to affirm that the "John/Mark" in Acts and the Epistles authored this Gospel. He was a Jewish Christian who lived in Jerusalem with Mary his mother during the early days of the church. Nothing is known about his father. Their home was an early Christian meeting place (cf. Acts 12:12). Perhaps it was the location of Jesus' last Passover meal (cf. comments on Mark 14:12-16). Mark was probably the "young man" who fled away naked after Jesus' arrest in Gethsemane (cf. comments on 14:51-52). Peter's calling him "my son" (cf. 1 Peter 5:13) may mean Mark became a Christian through Peter's influence.



During the church's early days in Jerusalem (ca. A.D. 33–47) Mark no doubt became familiar with Peter's preaching. Later he went to Antioch and accompanied Paul and Barnabas (Mark's cousin; cf. Col. 4:10), as far as Perga on their first missionary journey (cf. Acts 12:25; 13:5, 13; ca. A.D. 48–49). For an unstated reason he returned home to Jerusalem. Because of this desertion Paul refused to take him on his second journey. Instead Mark served with Barnabas on the island of Cyprus (cf. Acts 15:36-39; ca. A.D. 50–?). Sometime later, perhaps by A.D. 57, he went to Rome. He was a fellow worker with Paul during Paul's first Roman imprisonment (cf. Col. 4:10; Phile. 23-24; ca. A.D. 60–62). After Paul's release Mark apparently remained in Rome and served with Peter on his arrival in "Babylon," Peter's code word for Rome (cf. 1 Peter 5:13; ca. A.D. 63–64). (Some, however, take Babylon to refer to the city on the Euphrates River; cf. comments on 1 Peter 5:13.) Probably because of severe persecution under Emperor Nero and Peter's martyrdom, Mark left Rome for a time. Finally Paul, during his second imprisonment in Rome (ca. A.D. 67–68), requested Timothy who was in Ephesus to pick up Mark who was presumably somewhere in Asia Minor and bring him to Rome because Paul considered him useful in his ministry (cf. 2 Tim. 4:11).

Sources. To say that Mark was the author of this Gospel does not mean he created the material in it. A "Gospel" was a unique literary form in the first century. It was not simply a biography of Jesus' life, a chronicle of His "mighty deeds," or a set of reminiscences by His followers, though it contains elements of all these. Rather it is a theological proclamation to a particular audience of God's "good news" centered in the historical events of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection. In line with his purpose Mark arranged and adapted the historical material he acquired from his sources.

His major source was the preaching and instruction of the Apostle Peter (cf. comments under "Authorship"). Presumably he heard Peter preach many times in Jerusalem in the early days (ca. A.D. 33–47) and may have taken notes. He also probably had personal conversations with him. Mark also had contact with Paul and Barnabas (cf. Acts 13:5-12; 15:39; Col. 4:10-11). Presumably Mark included at least one reminiscence of his own (cf. Mark 14:51-52). Other sources of information include: (a) units of oral tradition that circulated in the early church individually or as a topical (e.g., 2:1–3:6) or temporal/geographical (e.g., chaps. 14–15) series of events forming a continuous narrative; (b) independent traditional sayings of Jesus linked together by "catch words" (e.g., 9:37-50); and (c) oral tradition which Mark summarized (e.g., 1:14-15; 3:7-12; 6:53-56). Under the oversight of the Holy Spirit Mark used these sources to compose a historically accurate and trustworthy Gospel.

There is no certain evidence that Mark used written sources, though the Passion narrative (chaps. 14–15) may have come to him at least partially written. This raises the problem of Mark's relationship to Matthew and Luke.

Many scholars believe that Mark was the first Gospel written and that Matthew and Luke used it as a primary source document along with material from other sources. Luke, in fact, stated that he used other documents (Luke

1:1-4). Several arguments support the priority of Mark: (1) Matthew incorporates about 90 percent of Mark, and Luke over 40 percent—over 600 of Mark's 661 verses are found in Matthew and Luke combined. (2) Matthew and Luke usually follow Mark's order of events in Jesus' life, and where either of them differs for topical reasons the other always holds to Mark's order. (3) Matthew and Luke hardly ever agree against the content of Mark in passages where they all deal with the same subject. (4) Matthew and Luke often repeat Mark's exact words but where they differ in wording, the language of one or the other is simply grammatically or stylistically smoother than Mark's (cf., e.g., Mark 2:7 with Luke 5:21). (5) Matthew and Luke seem to alter Mark's wording in some instances to clarify his meaning (cf. Mark 2:15 with Luke 5:29) or to "tone down" some of his strong statements (cf., e.g., Mark 4:38b with Matt. 8:25; Luke 8:24). (6) Matthew and Luke sometimes omit words and phrases from Mark's "full" descriptions to make room for additional material (cf., e.g., Mark 1:29 with Matt. 8:14; Luke 4:38).

Five major objections have been raised against the theory of Marcan priority: (1) Matthew and Luke agree with each other against the content of Mark in some passages dealing with the same subject. (2) Luke omits all reference to the material in Mark 6:45–8:26 which is unusual if he used Mark. (3) Mark occasionally has bits of information not found in the same incident reported in Matthew or Luke (cf. Mark 14:72). (4) The early church fathers apparently believed in the priority of Matthew instead of Mark. (5) Marcan priority practically requires the view that Matthew and/or Luke were written after the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

In response to the first objection, the agreements of Luke and Matthew against Mark involve a very small number of passages (ca. 6%) and are probably due to common sources (i.e., oral tradition) which they used in addition to Mark. The second objection falters on the commonly acknowledged fact that the Gospel writers selected material from their sources in line with their purposes. Luke may have omitted reference to material in Mark 6:45–8:26 in order not to interrupt the development of his own journey-to-Jerusalem theme (cf. Luke 9:51). This also answers the third objection in addition to the fact that Mark had Peter as an eyewitness source. The fourth objection stems from the arrangement of the Gospels in the New Testament canon. To infer from this that the early fathers believed Matthew was written first is not valid. They were concerned about the apostolic authority and apologetic value of the Synoptic Gospels, not their historical interrelationships. Thus Matthew, written by an apostle and beginning with a genealogy that linked it nicely to the Old Testament, was given first place. Furthermore, if Matthew were the first Gospel written and it were used by Mark and Luke, one would expect to find places where Luke follows Matthew's order of events and Mark does not—but this does not occur. It is also more difficult to explain why Mark would shift from Matthew's order than vice versa. Displacement of order favors Marcan priority. In response to the fifth objection, Marcan priority does not necessitate dating Matthew and/or Luke after A.D. 70 (cf. comments on "Date").

Some literary dependence seems to be the only way to explain adequately the close relationship between the Synoptic Gospels. The priority-of-Mark theory, though not without problems, accounts best for the basic outline of events and the detailed similarities between the Synoptic Gospels. The differences are probably due to a combination of oral and written traditions which Matthew and Luke used independently in addition to Mark. (For further discussion and an alternate view on the Synoptic problem [priority of Matt.] see the Introduction to Matt.)

Date. Nowhere does the New Testament have any explicit statement regarding the date of Mark. The discourse centered around Jesus' prediction of the destruction of the Jerusalem temple (cf. comments on 13:2, 14-23) suggests that Mark's Gospel was written before A.D. 70, when the temple was destroyed.

Early testimony from the church fathers is divided on whether Mark wrote his Gospel before or after the martyrdom of Peter (ca. A.D. 64–68). On one hand, Irenaeus (Against Heresies 3. 1. 1) declared that Mark wrote after the "departure" (exodon) of Peter and Paul (thus after A.D. 67 or 68). By the word exodon Irenaeus probably meant "departure in death." The word is used this way in Luke 9:31 and 2 Peter 1:15. This is clearly supported by the Anti-Marcionite Prologue to Mark which asserts, "After the death of Peter himself, he [Mark] wrote down this same Gospel. . . ." On the other hand, Clement of Alexandria and Origen (cf. Eusebius Ecclesiastical History 2. 15. 2; 6. 14. 6; 6. 25. 5) placed the writing of Mark's Gospel during Peter's lifetime stating, in fact, that Peter participated in its production and ratified its use in the church.

Because of conflicting external evidence the question of date remains problematic. Two options are available. One view is that the Gospel can be dated between A.D. 67–69 if one accepts the tradition that it was written after the deaths of Peter and Paul. Advocates of this view usually hold either that Matthew and Luke were written after A.D. 70 or that they were written before Mark. A second view is that the Gospel can be dated prior to A.D. 64–68 (when Peter was martyred) if one accepts the tradition that it was written during Peter's lifetime. On this view one can accept the priority of Mark (or Matt.) and still hold that all the Synoptic Gospels were written before A.D. 70.

The second view is preferred for these reasons: (1) Tradition is divided though the more reliable evidence supports this view. (2) The priority of Mark (cf. comments under "Sources"), particularly Mark's relationship to Luke, which antedates Acts (cf. Acts 1:1), points to a date before A.D. 64. The fact that Acts closes with Paul still in prison prior to his first release (ca. A.D. 62) pushes the date for Mark before A.D. 60. (3) It is historically probable that Mark (and perhaps Peter also for a short time) could have been in Rome during the latter part of the 50s (cf. comments under "Authorship" and under "Place of Origin and Destination"). Thus a plausible dating would seem to be A.D. 57–59 during the early part of Emperor Nero's reign (A.D. 54–68).

Place of Origin and Destination. The almost universal testimony of early church fathers (cf. references under "Authorship") is that Mark's Gospel was written in Rome primarily for Gentile Roman Christians.

The following evidence from the Gospel itself supports this: (1) Jewish customs are explained (cf. 7:3-4; 14:12; 15:42). (2) Aramaic expressions are translated into Greek (cf. 3:17; 5:41; 7:11, 34; 9:43; 10:46; 14:36; 15:22, 34) (3) Several Latin terms are used rather than their Greek equivalents (cf. 5:9; 6:27; 12:15, 42; 15:16, 39). (4) The Roman method of reckoning time is used (cf. 6:48; 13:35). (5) Only Mark identified Simon of Cyrene as the father of Alexander and Rufus (cf. 15:21; Rom. 16:13). (6) Few Old Testament quotations or references to fulfilled prophecy are used. (7) Mark portrayed a particular concern for "all the nations" (cf. comments on Mark 5:18-20; 7:24–8:10; 11:17; 13:10; 14:9), and at a climactic point in the Gospel a Gentile Roman centurion unwittingly proclaimed Jesus' deity (cf. 15:39). (8) The tone and message of the Gospel are appropriate to Roman believers who were encountering persecution and expecting more (cf. comments on 9:49; 13:9-13). (9) Mark assumed that his readers were familiar with the main characters and events of his narrative, so he wrote with more of a theological than a biographical interest. (10) Mark addressed his readers as Christians more directly by explaining the meaning for them of particular actions and statements (cf. 2:10, 28; 7:19).

Characteristics. Several features make Mark's Gospel unique among the Gospels. First, it emphasizes Jesus' actions more than His teaching. Mark recorded 18 of Jesus' miracles but only four of His parables (4:2-20, 26-29, 30-32; 12:1-9) and one major discourse (13:3-37). Repeatedly Mark wrote that Jesus taught without recording His teaching (1:21, 39; 2:2, 13; 6:2, 6, 34; 10:1; 12:35). Most of the teaching he did include came out of Jesus' controversies with the Jewish religious leaders (2:8-11, 19-22, 25-28; 3:23-30; 7:6-23; 10:2-12; 12:10-11, 13-40).

Second, Mark's writing style is vivid, forceful, and descriptive, reflecting an eyewitness source such as Peter (cf., e.g., 2:4; 4:37-38; 5:2-5; 6:39; 7:33; 8:23-24; 14:54). His use of Greek is nonliterary, close to the everyday speech of that time with a recognizable Semitic flavoring. His use of Greek tenses, especially the "historical present" tense (used over 150 times), simple sentences linked by "and," frequent use of "immediately" (euthys; cf. comments on 1:10), and the use of forceful words (e.g., lit., "impelled," 1:12) lend vividness to his narrative.

Third, Mark portrayed his subjects with unusual candor. He emphasized the responses of Jesus' hearers with various expressions of amazement (cf. comments on 1:22, 27; 2:12; 5:20; 9:15). He related the concern of Jesus' family over His mental health (cf. 3:21, 31-35). He candidly and repeatedly drew attention to the disciples' lack of understanding and failures (cf. 4:13; 6:52; 8:17, 21; 9:10, 32; 10:26). He also highlighted Jesus' emotions such as His compassion (1:41; 6:34; 8:2; 10:16), His anger and displeasure (1:43; 3:5; 8:33; 10:14), and His sighs of distress and sorrow (7:34; 8:12; 14:33-34).

Fourth, Mark's Gospel is dominated by Jesus' movement toward the Cross and the Resurrection. From Mark 8:31 onward Jesus and His disciples were "on the way" (cf. 9:33; 10:32) from Caesarea Philippi in the north through Galilee to Jerusalem in the south. The rest of the narrative (36%) was devoted to events of the Passion Week—the eight days from Jesus' entry into Jerusalem (11:1-11) to His resurrection (16:1-8).

Theological Themes. Mark's portrait of Jesus and its meaning for discipleship stand at the center of his theology. In the opening verse Jesus Christ is identified as "the Son of God" (1:1). This was confirmed by the Father (1:11; 9:7) and affirmed by demons (3:11; 5:7), by Jesus Himself (13:32; 14:36, 61-62), and by a Roman centurion at Jesus' death (15:39). It was also confirmed by His authoritative teaching (1:22, 27) and His sovereign power over disease and disability (1:30-31, 40-42; 2:3-12; 3:1-5; 5:25-34; 7:31-37; 8:22-26; 10:46-52), demons (1:23-27; 5:1-20; 7:24-30; 9:17-27), the domain of nature (4:37-39; 6:35-44, 47-52; 8:1-10), and death (5:21-24, 35-43). All this was convincing proof that "the kingdom of God"—His sovereign rule—had come near to people in Jesus, both in His words and works (cf. comments on 1:15).

Yet paradoxically Mark stressed Jesus' demand that the demons be silent (1:25, 34; 3:12) and that His miracles not be publicized (1:44; 5:43; 7:36; 8:26). He stressed Jesus' use of parables in teaching the crowds (4:33-34) because His kingly rule was then veiled, a mystery, recognized only by people of faith (4:11-12). Mark stressed the disciples' slowness to understand the meaning of Jesus' presence with them despite private instruction (4:13, 40; 6:52; 7:17-19; 8:17-21). He stressed Jesus' demand for silence even from the disciples following Peter's confession of His identity (8:30). Jesus did this because of the Jews' misleading views about the Messiah, which were contrary to the purpose of His earthly ministry. He did not want His identity declared openly till He had made clear to His followers the kind of Messiah He was and the character of His mission.

Mark recorded Peter's confession, "You are the Christ" (8:29), in its simplest, most direct form. Jesus did not accept or reject this title but turned the disciples' attention from the question of His identity to that of His activity (8:31, 38). He used the preferred designation "Son of Man" and taught His disciples that He must suffer, die, and rise again. The title, Son of Man, used 12 times by Jesus in Mark versus His one use of the title "Christ" ("the Messiah," 9:41), was especially suited to His total messianic mission—present and future (cf. comments on 8:31, 38; 14:62). He was the suffering Servant of Yahweh (Isa. 52:13–53:12) who gave up His life for others in submission to God's will (Mark 8:31). He was also the Son of Man who will come in glory to render judgment and establish His kingdom on earth (8:38–9:8; 13:26; 14:62). But before the glorious triumph of His messianic reign He must first suffer and die under the curse of God for human sin (14:36; 15:34) as a ransom for many (10:45). This had important implications for all who would follow Him (8:34-38).

It was hard for Jesus' 12 disciples to grasp this. They envisioned a reigning Messiah, not One who would suffer and die. In his special discipleship section (8:31–10:52) Mark portrayed Jesus "on the way" to Jerusalem teaching His disciples what it meant to follow Him. The prospect was not attractive. But in His transfiguration He gave three of them a reassuring preview of His future coming in power and glory (9:1-8). At the same time the Father confirmed Jesus' sonship and commanded them to obey Him. Throughout this section the disciples "saw" but not as they ought (8:22-26). Again Mark emphasized that they followed Jesus with amazement, misunderstanding, and even fear of what lay ahead (9:32; 10:32). At Jesus' arrest they all deserted Him (14:50). With restraint Mark recorded Jesus' crucifixion and the accompanying phenomena that elucidated its meaning (15:33-39).

But Mark emphasized the empty tomb and the angel's message that Jesus was alive and was going ahead of His disciples into Galilee (14:28; 16:7), the place of their initial ministry (6:6b-13). His abrupt conclusion dramatically declared that Jesus is alive to lead His disciples and care for their needs as He had done previously. Thus their "journey" of discipleship was to go on in light of and determined by Jesus' death and resurrection (9:9-10).

Occasion and Purpose. Mark's Gospel contains no direct statement about this, so that information must be derived from a study of its contents and presumed historical setting. Because such assessments differ, various views have been given.

Some suggested purpose statements: (a) to present a biographical portrait of Jesus as the Servant of the Lord, (b) to win converts to Jesus Christ, (c) to give instruction to new Christians and strengthen their faith in the face of persecution, (d) to provide material for evangelists and teachers to use, and (e) to correct false ideas about Jesus and His messianic mission. These suggestions, though helpful, seem either to exclude portions of the Gospel from consideration or fail to account for Mark's emphases.

Mark's purpose was basically pastoral. The Christians in Rome had already heard and believed the good news of God's saving power (Rom. 1:8) but they needed to hear it again with a new emphasis to catch afresh its implications for their lives in a dissolute and often hostile environment. They needed to understand the nature of discipleship—what it meant to follow Jesus—in light of who Jesus is and what He had done and would keep doing for them.

Like a good pastor, Mark presented "the gospel about Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (1:1) in a way that would meet this need and continue to shape his readers' lives. He achieved this through his portraits of Jesus and the 12 disciples with whom he expected his readers to identify (cf. comments under "Theological Themes"). He showed how Jesus Christ is the Messiah because He is the Son of God, and His death as the suffering Son of Man was God's plan for people's redemption. In light of this he showed how Jesus cared for His disciples and taught them about discipleship in the context of His death and resurrection—the same kind of care and teaching needed by all who follow Jesus.

1:1. The opening verse (a verbless phrase) stands as the book's title and theme. The word gospel (euangeliou, "good news") does not refer to Mark's book, known as "the Gospel of Mark." Instead it refers to the good news about Jesus Christ.

Those acquainted with the Old Testament knew the importance of the word "gospel" (cf. Isa. 40:9; 41:27; 52:7; 61:1-3). "News" meant that something significant had happened. When Mark used the word, it had become a technical term signifying Christian preaching about Jesus Christ. "The gospel" is the proclamation of God's power through Jesus Christ to save all who believe (Rom. 1:16). It was an important term in the theological shaping of Mark's narrative (Mark 1:14-15; 8:35; 10:29; 13:9-10; 14:9).

For Mark, the beginning of the gospel was the historical facts of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. Later the apostles proclaimed it, beginning (e.g., Acts 2:36) where Mark ended.

The gospel is "about Jesus Christ," the Son of God. "Jesus," His divinely given personal name (cf. Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:31; 2:21), is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew yᵉhôšūaʿ ("Joshua"), "Yahweh is salvation."

"Christ" is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew title Māšîaḥ ("Messiah, Anointed One"). It was used specifically of the Deliverer anticipated in the Jewish world who would be God's Agent in fulfilling Old Testament prophecies (e.g., Gen. 49:10; Pss. 2; 110; Isa. 9:1-7; 11:1-9; Zech. 9:9-10). The anticipated Messiah is Jesus. Though the title "Christ" became part of Jesus' personal name in early Christian usage, Mark intended its full titular force as shown by his usage (cf. Mark 8:29; 12:35; 14:61; 15:32).

The title "Son of God" points to Jesus' unique relationship to God. He is a Man (Jesus)—and God's "Special Agent" (Messiah)—but He is also fully divine. As the Son He depends on and obeys God the Father (cf. Heb. 5:8).

II. Introduction: The Preparation for Jesus' Public Ministry (1:2-13)

Mark's brief introduction presents three preparatory events that are necessary for a proper understanding of Jesus' life-mission: the ministry of John the Baptist (vv. 2-8), Jesus' baptism (vv. 9-11), and Jesus' temptation (vv. 12-13). Two recurring words bind this section together: "the desert" (erēmos; vv. 3-4, 12-13) and "the Spirit" (vv. 8, 10, 12).

A. Jesus' forerunner, John the Baptist (1:2-8)

1. JOHN'S FULFILLMENT OF OLD TESTAMENT PROPHECY (1:2-3)

1:2-3. Mark began by putting his account in its proper scriptural context. Aside from Old Testament quotations by Jesus this is the only place Mark referred to the Old Testament in his Gospel.

Verse 2 blends Exodus 23:20 (LXX) and Malachi 3:1 (Heb.), and Mark 1:3 is from Isaiah 40:3 (LXX). Mark adopted a traditional understanding of these verses so he could use them without explanation. In addition he emphasized the word "way" (hodos, lit., "road, highway"), an important theme in Mark's explanation of discipleship (Mark 8:27; 9:33; 10:17, 32, 52; 12:14).

Mark prefaced this composite quotation from three Old Testament books with the words: It is written in Isaiah the prophet. This illustrates a common practice by New Testament authors in quoting several passages with a unifying theme. The common theme here is the "wilderness" (desert) tradition in Israel's history. Since Mark was introducing the ministry of John the Baptist in the desert, he cited Isaiah as the source because the Isaiah passage refers to "a voice . . . calling" in the desert.

Under the Holy Spirit's guidance Mark gave those Old Testament texts a messianic interpretation by altering "the way before Me" (Mal. 3:1) to Your way, and "the paths of our God" (Isa. 40:3, LXX) to paths for Him. Thus the speaker, I, was God who will send His messenger (John) ahead of You (Jesus) who will prepare Your (Jesus') way. John was a voice urging the nation of Israel to prepare (pl. verb) the way for the Lord (Jesus) and to make straight "paths for Him" (Jesus). The meaning of these metaphors is given in John's ministry (Mark 1:4-5).

2. JOHN'S ACTIVITY AS A PROPHET (1:4-5)

1:4. In fulfillment of the preceding prophecy, John came (egeneto, "appeared") on the stage of history as the last Old Testament prophet (cf. Luke 7:24-28; 16:16), signaling a turning point in God's dealings with mankind. John was baptizing in the desert region (erēmō, dry, uninhabited country) and preaching a baptism of repentance. The word "preaching" (kēryssōn) could be rendered "proclaiming as a herald," appropriate in light of the prediction in Mark 1:2-3.

John's baptism was no innovation since Jews required Gentiles wanting to be admitted into Judaism to be baptized by self-immersion. The startling new element was that John's baptism was designed for God's covenant people, the Jews, and it required their repentance in view of the coming Messiah (cf. Matt. 3:2).

This baptism is described as one relating to or expressive of repentance for (eis) the forgiveness of sins. The Greek preposition eis could be referential ("with reference to") or purpose ("leading to") but probably not cause ("on account of"). "Repentance" (metanoia) occurs in Mark only here. It means "a turn about, a deliberate change of mind resulting in a change of direction in thought and behavior" (cf. Matt. 3:8; 1 Thes. 1:9).

"Forgiveness" (aphesin) means "the removal or cancellation of an obligation or barrier of guilt." It refers to God's gracious act whereby "sins" as a debt are canceled, based on Christ's sacrificial death (cf. Matt. 26:28). Forgiveness was not conveyed by the outward rite of baptism, but baptism was a visible witness that one had repented and as a result had received God's gracious forgiveness of sins (cf. Luke 3:3).

1:5. Using hyperbole (cf. also vv. 32-33, 37), Mark showed the great impact John made on all areas of Judea and Jerusalem. The people went out and were baptized by John in the Jordan River (cf. v. 9) as they confessed their sins to God. The imperfect tense of the Greek verbs portrays in motion-picture fashion the continual procession of people who kept going out to hear John's preaching and to be baptized by him.

The verb "baptize" (baptizō, intensive form of baptō, "to dip") means "to immerse, submerge." Being baptized by John in the Jordan marked the "turn" of a Jew to God. It identified him with the repentant people who were preparing for the coming Messiah.

Included in the performance of the baptismal rite was the people's open confession of sins. The verb "confessing" (exomologoumenoi, "agree with, acknowledging, admitting"; cf. Acts 19:18; Phil. 2:11), is intensive. They openly agreed with God's verdict on their sins (hamartias, "failure to hit the mark," i.e., God's standard). Every Jew familiar with the nation's history knew they had fallen short of God's demands. Their willingness to be baptized by John in the desert was an admission of their disobedience and an expression of their turning to God.

3. JOHN'S LIFESTYLE AS A PROPHET (1:6)

1:6. John's attire and diet marked him as a man of the desert and also depicted his role as God's prophet (cf. Zech. 13:4). In this way he resembled the Prophet Elijah (2 Kings 1:8), who was equated in Malachi 4:5 with the messenger (Mal. 3:1) cited earlier (cf. Mark 1:2; 9:13; Luke 1:17). Locusts (dried insects) and wild honey were the common diet in desert regions. Locusts are listed in Leviticus 11:22 among the "clean" foods.

4. JOHN'S MESSAGE AS A PROPHET (1:7-8)

1:7. The opening words are literally, "And he was proclaiming as a herald, saying . . ." (cf. v. 4). Mark summarized John's message in order to focus on its main theme, the announcement of a greater Person still to come who would baptize people with the Holy Spirit (v. 8).

The words, After me (in time) will come One echo Malachi 3:1 and 4:5, but the precise identity of the Coming One remained hidden even to John till after Jesus' baptism (cf. John 1:29-34). No doubt Mark avoided the term "Messiah" because of popular misconceptions associated with it. Mark 1:8 suggests why the Coming One is more powerful than John.

John emphasized the importance of the Coming One and showed his own humility (cf. John 3:27-30) by declaring that he was not worthy to stoop down (words recorded only by Mark) and untie the thongs (leather straps) used to fasten His sandals. Even a Hebrew slave was not required to do this menial task for his master!

1:8. This verse contrasts I with He. John administered the outward sign, water baptism; but the Coming One would actually bestow the life-giving Spirit.

When used in connection with water, the word "baptize" normally indicated a literal immersion (cf. vv. 9-10). When used with the words Holy Spirit it metaphorically means coming under the Spirit's life-giving power.

I baptize is literally "I baptized," probably indicating that John was addressing those he had already baptized. His baptism with (or "in") "water" was limited and preparatory. But those who received it pledged to welcome the Coming One who would baptize them with the Holy Spirit (cf. Acts 1:5; 11:15-16). The bestowal of the Spirit was an expected feature of the Messiah's coming (Isa. 44:3; Ezek. 36:26-27; Joel 2:28-29).

B. Jesus' baptism by John the Baptist (1:9-11)

1. JESUS' BAPTISM IN THE JORDAN (1:9)

1:9. Mark abruptly introduced the Coming One (v. 7) as Jesus. In contrast with "all the people" from Judea and Jerusalem (v. 5), He came to John in the desert region from Nazareth in Galilee. Nazareth was an obscure village never mentioned in the Old Testament, the Talmud, or the writings of Josephus, the well-known first-century Jewish historian. Galilee, about 30 miles wide and 60 miles long, was the populous northernmost region of the three divisions of Palestine: Judea, Samaria, and Galilee.

John baptized Jesus in (eis) the Jordan River (cf. v. 5). The Greek prepositions eis ("into," v. 9) and ek ("out of," v. 10) suggest baptism by immersion. Jesus' baptism probably occurred near Jericho. He was about 30 years old at this time (Luke 3:23).

In contrast with all others, Jesus made no confession of sins (cf. Mark 1:5) since He is without sin (cf. John 8:45-46; 2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15; 1 John 3:5). Mark did not state why Jesus submitted to John's baptism; however, three reasons may be suggested: (1) It was an act of obedience, showing that Jesus was in full agreement with God's overall plan and the role of John's baptism in it (cf. Matt. 3:15). (2) It was an act of self-identification with the nation of Israel whose heritage and sinful predicament He shared (cf. Isa. 53:12). (3) It was an act of self-dedication to His messianic mission, signifying His official acceptance and entrance into it.

2. THE DIVINE RESPONSE FROM HEAVEN (1:10-11)

1:10. Mark used the Greek adverb euthys ("immediately, at once") here for the first of 42 occurrences in his Gospel (the NIV omits it here). Its meaning varies from the sense of immediacy (as here) to that of logical order ("in due course, then"; cf. 1:21 ["when"]; 11:3 ["shortly"]).

Three things set Jesus apart from all others who had been baptized. First, He saw heaven being torn open. The forceful verb, "being torn open" (schizomenous, "split") reflects a metaphor for God's breaking into human experience to deliver His people (cf. Pss. 18:9, 16-19; 144:5-8; Isa. 64:1-5).

Second, He saw the Spirit descending on Him like a dove, in a visible dovelike form, not in a dovelike way (cf. Luke 3:22). The dove imagery probably symbolized the Spirit's creative activity (cf. Gen. 1:2). In Old Testament times the Spirit came on certain people to empower them for service (e.g., Ex. 31:3; Jud. 3:10; 11:29; 1 Sam. 19:20, 23). The coming of the Spirit on Jesus empowered Him for His messianic mission (cf. Acts 10:38) and the task of baptizing others with the Spirit, as John predicted (Mark 1:8).

1:11. Third, Jesus heard a voice . . . from heaven (cf. 9:7). The Father's words, expressing His unqualified approval of Jesus and His mission, echoed three verses: Genesis 22:2; Psalm 2:7; Isaiah 42:1.

In the first declaration, You are My Son, the words "You are" affirm Jesus' unique sonship with the Father. The significance of these words is found in Psalm 2:7 where God addressed the anointed King as His Son. At His baptism Jesus began His official role as God's Anointed One (cf. 2 Sam. 7:12-16; Ps. 89:26; Heb. 1:5).

The second clause, whom I love, is literally, "the Beloved One" (ho agapētos). This is either a title ("the Beloved") or a descriptive adjective ("beloved" Son). As a title it stresses the intensity of love between God the Father and the Son without losing its descriptive force. As an adjective, it can be understood in the Old Testament sense of an "only" Son (cf. Gen. 22:2, 12, 16; Jer. 6:26; Amos 8:10; Zech. 12:10), equivalent to the Greek adjective monogenēs ("only, unique"; cf. John 1:14, 18; Heb. 11:17). This more interpretive rendering points to Jesus' preexistent sonship.

The words with You I am well pleased point to the kind of kingly Son Jesus was to be in His earthly mission. The verb eudokēsa is in the past tense ("I was well pleased"). Timeless in force, it is rendered in English in the present tense to indicate that God is pleased with His Son at all times. God's delight never had a beginning and will never end.

These words come from Isaiah 42:1 in which God addressed His Servant whom He had chosen, the One in whom He delights, and on whom He had put His Spirit. Isaiah 42:1 begins the first of a series of four prophecies about the true Servant-Messiah in contrast with the disobedient servant-nation of Israel (cf. Isa. 42:1-9; 49:1-7; 50:4-9; 52:13–53:12). The true Servant would suffer greatly in fulfilling God's will. He would die as a "guilt offering" (Isa. 53:10), and He Himself would serve as the sacrificial Lamb (cf. Isa. 53:7-8; John 1:29-30). At His baptism Jesus began His role as the Lord's suffering Servant. Mark gives prominence to this feature of Jesus' messianic mission (Mark 8:31; 9:30-31; 10:32-34, 45; 15:33-39).

Jesus' baptism did not change His divine status. He did not become the Son of God at His baptism (or at the transfiguration, 9:7). Rather, His baptism showed the far-reaching significance of His acceptance of His messianic vocation as the suffering Servant of the Lord as well as the Davidic Messiah. Because He is the Son of God, the One approved by the Father and empowered by the Spirit, He is the Messiah (not vice versa). All three Persons of the Trinity are involved.

C. Jesus' temptation by Satan (1:12-13) (Matt. 4:1-11; Luke 4:1-13)

1:12. After His baptism Jesus went forward in the power of the Spirit and at once (euthys, "immediately") the Spirit sent Him farther out into the desert region. The word "sent" is from a strong verb (ekballō) meaning "drive out, expel, send away." Mark used it to denote the expulsion of demons (vv. 34, 39; 3:15, 22-23; 6:13; 7:26; 9:18, 28, 38). Here it reflects Mark's forceful style (cf. "led," Matt. 4:1; Luke 4:1). The thought is that of strong moral compulsion by which the Spirit led Jesus to take the offensive against temptation and evil instead of avoiding them. The desert (erēmos; cf. Mark 1:4) region, dry uninhabited places, was viewed traditionally as the haunt of evil powers (cf. Matt. 12:43; Luke 8:29; 9:24). The traditional temptation site is northwest of the Dead Sea immediately west of Jericho.

1:13. Jesus was in the desert for 40 days. Despite possible appeal to various Old Testament verses (Ex. 34:28; Deut. 9:9, 18; 1 Kings 19:8), the closest parallel is that of the victory of David over Goliath who had opposed Israel 40 days (1 Sam 17:16).

Jesus was being tempted by Satan. "Tempted" is a form of peirazō, which means "put to the test, make trial of" in order to discover the kind of person someone is. It is used either in a good sense (God's testing, e.g., 1 Cor. 10:13; Heb. 11:17) or in a bad sense of enticement to sin by Satan and his cohorts. Both senses are involved here. God put Jesus to the test (the Spirit led Him to it) to show He was qualified for His messianic mission. But also Satan tried to draw Jesus away from His divinely appointed mission (cf. Matt. 4:1-11; Luke 4:1-13). Jesus' sinlessness does not rule out the fact that He was actually tempted; in fact, it bears witness to His true humanity (cf. Rom. 8:3; Heb. 2:18).

The tempter was Satan, the adversary, the one who opposes. Mark did not use the term "the devil" (slanderer; Matt. 4:1; Luke 4:2). Satan and his forces are in constant, intense opposition against God and His purposes, especially Jesus' mission. Satan tempts people to turn aside from God's will, accuses them before God when they fall, and seeks their ruin. Jesus encountered the prince of evil personally before confronting his forces. He entered on His ministry to defeat him and set his captives free (Heb. 2:14; 1 John 3:8). As the Son of God, He battled Satan in the desert, and the demons confessed Him as such (cf. Mark 1:24; 3:11; 5:7).

The reference to wild animals is recorded only by Mark. In Old Testament imagery, "the wilderness" was the place of God's curse—a place of desolation, loneliness, and danger where frightening, ravenous animals lived (cf. Isa. 13:20-22; 34:8-15; Pss. 22:11-21; 91:11-13). The presence of wild animals stresses the hostile character of the desert region as Satan's domain.

In contrast with the dangerous wild animals is God's protecting care through the angels who attended (lit., "were serving," diēkonoun) Jesus throughout the temptation period (though the verb could be rendered "began to serve Him," i.e., after the temptation). They supplied general aid and the assurance of God's presence. Mark did not mention fasting (cf. Matt. 4:2; Luke 4:2), probably because Jesus' stay in the desert region clearly implied it.

Mark's temptation account is brief (in contrast with Matt. and Luke). He said nothing about the temptation's content, its climactic end, or Jesus' victory over Satan. His concern was that this began an ongoing conflict with Satan who kept attempting through devious means to get Jesus to turn aside from God's will (cf. Mark 8:11, 32-33; 10:2; 12:15). Because of the vocation Jesus accepted in His baptism, He faced a confrontation with Satan and his forces. Mark's Gospel is the record of this great encounter which climaxed at the Cross. At the outset Jesus established His personal authority over Satan. His later exorcisms of demons were based on His victory in this encounter (cf. 3:22-30).

III. Jesus' Early Galilean Ministry (1:14–3:6)

The first major section of Mark's Gospel includes a summary statement of Jesus' message (1:14-15); the calling of the first disciples (1:16-20); Jesus' exorcising and healing ministry in and around Capernaum (1:21–45); five controversies with Jewish religious leaders (2:1–3:5), and a plot by the Pharisees and Herodians to kill Jesus (3:6). Throughout the section Jesus demonstrated His authority over all things both by His words and deeds.

A. Introductory summary: Jesus' message (1:14-15) (Matt. 4:12-17; Luke 4:14-21)

Jesus began His ministry in Galilee (cf. Mark 1:9) after John the Baptist was arrested by Herod Antipas (see chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5) for the reason stated in Mark 6:17-18. Before entering Galilee, Jesus ministered in Judea for about a year (cf. John 1:19–4:45), which Mark did not mention. This shows that Mark's purpose was not to give a complete chronological account of Jesus' life.

1:14. The words was put in prison translate to paradothēnai, from paradidomi, "deliver up or hand over." The verb is used of Jesus' betrayal by Judas (3:19), suggesting that Mark set up a parallel between John's and Jesus' experiences (cf. 1:4, 14a). The passive voice without a stated agent implies that God's purpose was being fulfilled in John's arrest (cf. parallel to Jesus, 9:31; 14:18) and that the time for Jesus' ministry in Galilee had now come (cf. comments on 9:11-13).

Jesus came into Galilee proclaiming (kērysson; cf. 1:4) the good news (euangelion; cf. v. 1) of (from) God. Possibly the words "of the kingdom" (KJV) should be included before "of God" because of their presence in many Greek manuscripts.

1:15. Jesus' two declarations and two commands summarize His message. The first declaration, The time has come, emphasizes the distinctive note of fulfillment in Jesus' proclamation (cf. Luke 4:16-21). God's appointed time of preparation and expectation, the Old Testament era, now stood fulfilled (cf. Gal. 4:4; Heb. 1:2; 9:6-15).

The second declaration, The kingdom of God is near, presents a key feature of Jesus' message. "Kingdom" (basileia) means "kingship" or "royal rule." Involved in the term is the sovereign authority of a ruler, the activity of ruling, and the realm of rule including its benefits (Theological Dictionary of the New Testament [hereafter TDNT]. Grand Rapids: Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., s.v. "basileia," 1:579-80). Thus "the kingdom of God" is a dynamic (not static) concept that refers to God's sovereign activity of ruling over His Creation.

This concept was familiar to the Jews of Jesus' day. In light of Old Testament prophecy (cf. 2 Sam. 7:8-17; Isa. 11:1-9; 24:23; Jer. 23:4-6; Micah 4:6-7; Zech. 9:9-10; 14:9) they were expecting a future messianic (Davidic) kingdom to be established on earth (cf. Matt. 20:21; Mark 10:37; 11:10; 12:35-37; 15:43; Luke 1:31-33; 2:25, 38; Acts 1:6). So Jesus' hearers naturally understood His reference to the kingdom of God to be the long-awaited messianic kingdom.

Jesus said God's rule "is near" (ēngiken, "has come near" or "has arrived"; cf. same verb form in Mark 14:42 ["Here comes"]). But it was not near in the form the Jews expected. Rather it had arrived in the sense that Jesus, the Agent of God's rule, was present among them (cf. Luke 17:20–21). This was "the good news from God."

The required response to which Jesus summoned His hearers was a double command: Repent and believe the good news! Repentance and faith (belief) are bound together in one piece (not temporally successive acts). To "repent" (metanoeō; cf. Mark 1:4) is to turn away from an existing object of trust (e.g., oneself). To "believe" (pisteuō, here pisteuete en, the only NT appearance of this combination) is to commit oneself wholeheartedly to an object of faith. Thus to believe in the good news meant to believe in Jesus Himself as the Messiah, the Son of God. He is the "content" of the good news (cf. v. 1). Only by this means can one enter into or receive (as a gift) the kingdom of God (cf. 10:15).

As a nation Israel officially rejected these requirements (cf. 3:6; 12:1-12; 14:1-2, 64-65; 15:31-32). Furthermore Jesus taught that His earthly Davidic reign would not come immediately (cf. Luke 19:11). After God completes His present purpose of saving Jews and Gentiles and building His church (cf. Rom. 16:25-27; Eph. 3:2-12), Jesus will return and set up His kingdom on this earth (Matt. 25:31, 34; Acts 15:14-18; Rev. 19:15; 20:4-6). The nation of Israel will be restored and redeemed (Rom. 11:25-29).

So the kingdom of God has two aspects, both centering in Christ (cf. Mark 4:13–31): (1) It is already present, though veiled, as a spiritual realm (Mark's emphasis; cf. 3:23-27; 10:15, 23-27; 12:34). (2) It is still future when God's rule will be openly established on earth (cf. 9:1; 13:24-27).

B. Jesus' call of four fishermen (1:16-20)

Jesus' call of four fishermen, to be His followers comes immediately after the summary of His message. So Mark made clear that to repent and believe in the gospel (Mark 1:15) is to break with one's old way of life and to follow Jesus, to make a personal commitment to Him in response to His call. With this call Jesus began His work in Galilee. This anticipated His appointing and sending out the Twelve (3:13-19; 6:7-13, 30).

1:16. The Sea (a Semitic label) of Galilee, a warm-water lake about 7 miles wide, 13 miles long, and 685 feet below sea level, was the scene of a thriving fishing industry. It was geographically central to Jesus' Galilean ministry.

As He was walking along the shore, Jesus . . . saw Simon (surnamed Peter) and Andrew, his brother, each throwing out a circular casting net (10–15 feet diameter) into the lake. The significant thing about this, Mark explained (gar, for), is that they were fishermen by trade.

1:17-18. The words Come, follow Me are literally, "Come after Me," a technical expression that meant "Go behind Me as a disciple." Unlike a Rabbi whose pupils sought him out, Jesus took the initiative and called His followers.

The call included Jesus' promise: and I will make you to become (genesthai) fishers of men. He had "caught" them for His kingdom; now He would equip them to share His task, to become (genesthai implies preparation) fishers who catch "men" (generic for "people"; cf. 8:27).

The fishing metaphor was probably suggested by the brothers' occupation but also had an Old Testament background (cf. Jer. 16:16; Ezek. 29:4-5; Hab. 1:14-17). Though the prophets used this figure to express divine judgment, Jesus used it positively as a means to avoid divine judgment. In view of the impending righteous rule of God (cf. Mark 1:15) Jesus summoned these men to the task of gathering people out of the "sea" (OT imagery for sin and death, e.g., Isa. 57:20-21).

At once (euthys; cf. Mark 1:10) Simon and Andrew left their nets (their old calling) and followed Him. In the Gospels the verb "follow" (akoloutheō), when referring to individuals, expresses the call and response of discipleship. Later events (cf. vv. 29-31) show that their response meant not a repudiation of their homes but rather giving Jesus their full allegiance (cf. 10:28; 1 Cor. 7:17-24).

1:19-20. On the same occasion Jesus saw James and John, the sons of Zebedee (cf. 10:35), in their boat, preparing (from katartizō, "put in order, make ready") their nets for another night's fishing. They were partners to Simon (cf. Luke 5:10). Without delay (euthys) Jesus called them to follow Him. They left behind their old way of life (fishing boat and nets) and prior claims (their father Zebedee and the hired helpers) and followed (lit., "went away after") Him as disciples.

Mark did not mention any previous contact with Jesus by these fishermen (cf. John 1:35-42). Later Jesus gathered the Twelve around Himself in a Teacher-pupil relationship (Mark 3:14-19). Mark abbreviated historical events (1:14-20) to emphasize Jesus' authority over people and the obedience of His followers.

Discipleship is prominent in Mark's Gospel. Jesus' call would pose two questions in the minds of Mark's readers: "Who is this One who calls?" and "What does it mean to follow Him?" Mark gave them an answer in his Gospel. He assumed similarities between the Twelve (cf. comments on 3:13; 13:37) and his readers. Discipleship is the expected norm for all who believe the gospel (cf. 1:15).

C. Jesus' authority over demons and disease (1:21-45)

The authoritative nature (v. 22) and importance (vv. 38-39) of Jesus' word already experienced by the four fishermen was demonstrated further by His powerful deeds. Verses 21-34 describe a single, perhaps typical, Sabbath Day's activities in Capernaum: His power over demons (vv. 21-28), the healing of Peter's mother-in-law (vv. 29-31), and the healing of others after sunset (vv. 32-34). Then verses 35-39 present a brief withdrawal for prayer and a summary of a preaching tour in Galilee. One significant event on that tour was the healing of a leper (vv. 40-45). Jesus' authoritative words and deeds provoked both amazement and alarm and set the stage for controversies (2:1–3:5).

1. THE CURE OF A DEMONIAC (1:21-28)

1:21-22. The four disciples accompanied Jesus into nearby Capernaum (cf. 2:1; 9:33), on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee. It was their hometown and became the hub of Jesus' Galilean ministry (cf. Luke 4:16-31). In due course (euthys; cf. Mark 1:10), on the Sabbath (Saturday) Jesus attended the regular worship service in the synagogue, a Jewish place of assembly and worship (cf. vv. 23, 29, 39; 3:1; 6:2; 12:39; 13:9). No doubt by invitation from the ruler of the synagogue, He began to teach (cf. Acts 13:13-16). Mark often referred to Jesus' teaching ministry (Mark 2:13; 4:1-2; 6:2, 6, 34; 8:31; 10:1; 11:17; 12:35; 14:49), but recorded little of what Jesus taught.

His hearers were amazed (exeplēssonto, lit., "astounded, struck out of their senses, overwhelmed"; also in 6:2; 7:37; 10:26; 11:18) at the manner and the content (cf. 1:14-15) of Jesus' teaching. He taught with direct authority from God and had the power to evoke decisions. This contrasted sharply with the teachers of the Law (lit., "scribes") who were schooled in the written Law and its oral interpretation. Their knowledge was derived from scribal tradition, so they simply quoted the sayings of their predecessors.

1:23-24. Just then (euthys; cf. v. 10), the presence of Jesus and His authoritative teaching in the synagogue provoked a strong outburst from a man under control of an evil spirit (lit., "an unclean spirit," Semitic for "demon"; cf. v. 34).

The demon spoke through the man who cried out, What do You want with us. . .? These words translate a Hebrew idiom which expresses the incompatibility of opposing forces (cf. 5:7; Josh. 22:24; Jud. 11:12; 2 Sam. 16:10; 19:22).

This question, in the NIV, could be punctuated more forcefully as a declaration: "You have come (into the world) to destroy (ruin, not annihilate) us." The pronoun "us" in both sentences indicates that this demon perceived the significance of Jesus' presence (cf. Mark 1:15) to all the demonic forces. Jesus was the ultimate threat to their power and activity.

The demon, in contrast with most people, recognized Jesus' true character and identity as the Holy One of God (cf. 3:11; 5:7), the One empowered by the Holy Spirit. Thus the evil spirit knew the explanation for Jesus' authority.

1:25-26. In a few direct words (no incantations) Jesus sternly rebuked (epetimēsen; cf. 4:39) the evil spirit and ordered the demon to come out of the man. The words Be quiet translate the forceful phimōthēti, "be muzzled or silenced" (cf. 4:39). Submitting to Jesus' authority, the evil spirit convulsed (cf. 9:26) the possessed man, and with a loud shriek, left him.

Jesus did not accept the demon's defensive utterance (1:24) because doing so would have undermined His task of confronting and defeating Satan and his forces. His authority over evil spirits was evidence that God's rule had come in Jesus (cf. v. 15). This initial exorcism set the pattern for the sustained conflict Jesus had with demons—an important element in Mark's account. (See the list of Jesus' miracles at John 2:1-11.)

1:27-28. All the people were greatly amazed (ethambēthēsan, "surprised, astonished"; cf. 10:24, 32). Their question, What is this? referred both to the nature of Jesus' teaching and His expulsion of a demon with only a word of command. His teaching was qualitatively new (kainē) and came with authority (cf. 1:22) that extended even to demonic forces who were forced to obey (submit to) Him (cf. 4:41). In summary, Mark declared that very soon (euthys; cf. 1:10) all Galilee heard the news about Him.

2. THE HEALING OF SIMON'S MOTHER-IN-LAW (1:29-31)

1:29-31. Immediately (euthys; cf. v. 10) after leaving the synagogue Sabbath service, Jesus and the four disciples went to the nearby home of Simon (Peter) and Andrew. This house became something of a headquarters for Jesus when He was in Capernaum (cf. 2:1; 3:20; 9:33; 10:10).

He was promptly (euthys) told that Simon's mother-in-law was lying in bed burning with a fever. In compassionate response Jesus stood beside her and without a word simply grasped her hand and raised her up. The fever left completely, and without weakness she began to serve (diēkonei, imperf.) her guests.

3. THE HEALING OF MANY PEOPLE AT SUNSET (1:32-34)

1:32-34. This summary portrays the excitement in Capernaum generated by the miracles on that Sabbath. The double time reference, that evening after sunset, made it clear that the people of Capernaum waited until the Sabbath Day was over (sunset) before moving the sick lest they break the Law (cf. Ex. 20:10) or Rabbinic regulations which prohibited burden-bearing on that day (cf. Mark 3:1-5).

The townspeople brought (lit., "kept carrying," imperf.) to Jesus all the physically sick and demon-possessed (not "possessed with devils," KJV, since there is only one devil). Again, a clear distinction is maintained between physical sickness and demon possession (cf. 6:13). It seemed as if the whole town (hyperbole; cf. 1:5) had gathered at the door of Simon's house. In compassionate response to this human need Jesus healed many (a Heb. idiom meaning "all who were brought"; cf. v. 32; 10:45; Matt. 8:16) who had a wide variety of diseases. He also drove out (exebalen, from ekballō; cf. Mark 1:12, 39) many demons, but as before (vv. 23-26) He repeatedly silenced their cries of recognition, showing that they were powerless before Him.

The miracles accompanying Jesus' preaching increased His popularity. He performed miracles not to impress people with His power but to authenticate His message (cf. v. 15).

4. A WITHDRAWAL FOR PRAYER AND A PREACHING TOUR IN GALILEE (1:35-39)

1:35. Despite a full day of ministry (vv. 21-34), Jesus got up the next morning very early, before daybreak (about 4 A.M.) and went out to a solitary (erēmon, "uninhabited, remote") place (cf. v. 4) where He spent time praying. He withdrew from the acclaim of the Capernaum crowds to a wilderness place—the kind of place where He initially confronted Satan and withstood his temptations (cf. vv. 12-13).

Mark selectively portrayed Jesus at prayer on three crucial occasions, each in a setting of darkness and aloneness: near the beginning of his account (v. 35), near the middle (6:46), and near the end (14:32-42). All three were occasions when He was faced with the possibility of achieving His messianic mission in a more attractive, less costly way. But in each case He gained strength through prayer.

1:36-37. The crowds, returning to Simon's door and expecting to find Jesus, discovered He was gone. Simon and his companions (cf. v. 29) went out to look for Him (lit., "to hunt Him down," from katadiōkō, occurring only here in the NT). Their exclamation, Everyone is looking for You! implied some annoyance because they thought Jesus was failing to capitalize on some excellent opportunities in Capernaum.

1:38-39. Jesus' reply showed that they too did not understand Him or His mission. His plan was to go elsewhere—to the nearby villages, populous market towns, so that He could preach (cf. vv. 4, 14) there also, in addition to Capernaum. His explanatory statement, That ("to preach") is why I have come, probably does not refer to leaving Capernaum (He left to pray, v. 35) but rather to His coming from God on a divine mission. His purpose was to proclaim "the good news of God" (v. 14) and confront people with the demand to "repent and believe" it (v. 15). Since the Capernaum crowds sought Him as a Miracle-worker, He deliberately departed to preach elsewhere.

Verse 39 summarizes His tour throughout Galilee (cf. v. 28) which probably lasted several weeks (cf. Matt. 4:23-25). His main activity was preaching (cf. Mark 1:14-15) in the local synagogues, and His driving out (ekballōn; cf. v. 34) demons dramatically confirmed His message.

5. THE CLEANSING OF A LEPER (1:40-45)

1:40. On Jesus' Galilean tour, a man with leprosy came to Him (a bold move for a leper). "Leprosy" included a variety of serious skin diseases ranging from ringworm to true leprosy (Hanson's bacillus), a progressively disfiguring disease. This man experienced a pitiful existence due not only to the physical ravages of the disease but also to ritual uncleanness (cf. Lev. 13–14) and exclusion from society. Leprosy brought anguish at all levels: physical, mental, social, and religious. It serves as an illustration of sin.

The Rabbis regarded leprosy as humanly incurable. Only twice does the Old Testament record that God cleansed a leper (Num. 12:10-15; 2 Kings 5:1-14). Yet this leper was convinced that Jesus could cleanse him. Without presumption (If You are willing) and without doubting Jesus' ability (You can make me clean), he humbly begged Jesus to heal him.

1:41-42. Moved by compassion (splanchnistheis, "having deep pity"), Jesus . . . touched the untouchable and cured the incurable. His touch showed that Jesus was not bound by Rabbinic regulations regarding ritual defilement. Both this symbolic touch (cf. 7:33; 8:22) and Jesus' authoritative pronouncement—I am willing (pres. tense), be clean (aorist pass., decisive act received)—constituted the cure. It was immediate (euthys; cf. 1:10), complete, visible to all who saw him.

1:43-44. The forceful words, sent him away (exebalen; cf. v. 12), at once (euthys; cf. v. 10), and a strong warning (cf. 14:5) emphasize the need for prompt obedience to the instructions in 1:44.

First, Jesus sternly warned (same verb in 14:5) him: Don't tell this (his cure) to anyone. This could be a temporary prohibition that was in force till the man had been pronounced clean by the priest. However, Jesus often commanded silence and sought to minimize the proclaiming of His true identity and miraculous powers (cf. 1:25, 34; 3:12; 5:43; 7:36; 9:9). Why did Jesus do this? Some contend that Mark and the other Gospel writers inserted these commands for silence as a literary device to explain why the Jews did not recognize Jesus as the Messiah during His earthly ministry. This view is called "the messianic secret," that is, Jesus' messiahship was kept secret.

A more satisfactory view is that Jesus wanted to avoid misunderstandings that would precipitate a premature and/or erroneous popular response to Him (cf. comments on 11:28). He did not want His identity declared till He had made the character of His mission clear (cf. comments on 8:30; 9:9). Thus there was a progressive withdrawal of the veil from His identity until He openly declared it (14:62; cf. 12:12).

Second, Jesus instructed the former leper to show himself to the priest, who alone could declare him ritually clean, and to offer the sacrifices prescribed by Moses (cf. Lev. 14:2-31).

This demand is qualified by the phrase as (eis, "for") a testimony to them. This phrase could be understood in a positive sense ("a convincing witness") or negative sense ("an incriminating witness") to either the people in general or the priests in particular. In this context, as in the two other occurrences of this phrase (Mark 6:11; 13:9), the negative sense is preferred. Thus "testimony" means an item of proof which can serve as incriminating evidence (cf. TDNT, s.v. "martys," 4:502-4) and "them" refers to the priests.

The cleansing of the leper was an undeniable messianic sign (cf. Matt. 11:5; Luke 7:22) that God was working in a new way. If the priests declared the leper clean but rejected the One who cleansed him, their unbelief would be incriminating evidence against them.

1:45. Instead of obeying Jesus' command to silence, the man went out and began to talk freely (lit., "to proclaim [kēryssein] it much"), making known the story of his cure far and wide. Mark did not say whether he obeyed Jesus' command to show himself to the priest.

As a result, Jesus' preaching ministry in the synagogues of Galilee (cf. v. 39) was interrupted. He could not enter a town openly without encountering large crowds seeking special favors. Even when He withdrew to lonely (erēmois, "uninhabited, remote"; cf. v. 35) places . . . the people kept coming from all directions.

The deliverance Jesus brought transcended the Mosaic Law and its regulations. Though the Law provided for the ritual purification of a leper, it was powerless to cleanse a person from the disease or to effect inward spiritual renewal.

D. Jesus' controversies with Jewish religious leaders in Galilee (2:1–3:5)

Mark brought together the five episodes in this section because of the common theme of conflict in Galilee between Jesus and the Jewish religious leaders. Thus they are not in strict chronological order. A similar unit of five controversies in the temple at Jerusalem is recorded in 11:27–12:37.

The conflict here concerned Jesus' authority over sin and the Law. The first incident is introduced by a summary statement (2:1-2) of Jesus' preaching. Mark often used this literary device to summarize Jesus' activity and keep his narrative moving on to events that suited his purpose (cf. 1:14-15, 39; 2:1-2, 13; 3:7-12, 23; 4:1, 33-34; 8:21-26, 31; 9:31; 10:1; 12:1).

1. THE HEALING OF A PARALYTIC MAN AND FORGIVENESS (2:1-12)

2:1-2. A few days later when Jesus returned to Capernaum (cf. 1:21), it was reported that He was at home (probably Peter's house; cf. 1:29). In the freedom of Jewish custom many uninvited people crowded into the house and around the door, thus preventing access. Jesus was speaking (imperf., elalei) the Word (cf. 1:14-15; 4:14, 33) to them.

2:3-4. Four men brought a paralytic (paralyzed man) on a mat (poor man's "bed," KJV), hoping to get him to Jesus. But they could not . . . because of the crowd. Like many Palestinian dwellings, this house probably had an outside stairway leading to a flat roof. So the men went onto the roof. After digging through it (a composite of grass, clay, clay tiles, and laths), they made an opening . . . above Jesus and lowered the paralyzed man before Him (probably using fishing ropes that lay at hand).

2:5. Jesus viewed the determined effort of the four as visible evidence of their faith in His power to heal this man. He did not rebuke this interruption to His teaching but unexpectedly told the paralytic, Son (an affectionate term), your sins are forgiven.

In the Old Testament disease and death were viewed as the consequences of man's sinful condition, and healing was predicated on God's forgiveness (e.g., 2 Chron. 7:14; Pss. 41:4; 103:3; 147:3; Isa. 19:22; 38:16-17; Jer. 3:22; Hosea 14:4). This does not mean there is a corresponding sin for each occurrence of sickness (cf. Luke 13:1-5; John 9:1-3). Jesus simply showed that this man's physical condition had a basic spiritual cause.

2:6-7. The teachers of the Law (lit., "scribes"; cf. 1:22; Luke 5:17) who were present were offended by Jesus' veiled pronouncement. Only God can forgive sins (cf. Ex. 34:6-9; Pss. 103:3; 130:4; Isa. 43:25; 44:22; 48:11; Dan. 9:9). In the Old Testament forgiveness of sins was never attributed to the Messiah. The scribes regarded such talk by this fellow (contemptuous tone) as a pretentious affront to God's power and authority, blasphemy against God, a serious offense punishable by death from stoning (Lev. 24:15-16). In fact such a charge became the basis for a formal condemnation later (cf. Mark 14:61-64).

2:8-9. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) Jesus perceived in His spirit (inwardly; cf. 14:38) their hostile thoughts and He confronted them directly with pointed counterquestions (a rhetorical device in Rabbinic debate; cf. 3:4; 11:30; 12:37).

The scribes expected a physical healing, but Jesus pronounced the man's sins . . . forgiven. They probably thought that a pronouncement of forgiveness was easier than one of healing because healing was visible and immediately verifiable.

2:10. This verse presents an interpretive problem due to the awkward change of addressee in the verse's middle. Jesus seemed to be addressing the scribes (v. 10a) but there is an abrupt break in the verse after which He addressed the paralytic. Another problem in light of the overall emphasis of Mark is the public use of the title Son of Man by Jesus in the presence of unbelieving hearers so early in His ministry (cf. 9:9; 10:33). Apart from 2:10 and 28, this title does not occur in Mark's account until after Peter's confession (8:29). After that it occurs 12 times and is crucial to Jesus' self-disclosure to His disciples (cf. 8:31, 38; 9:9, 12, 31;

10:33, 45; 13:26; 14:21 [twice], 41, 62; see comments on 8:31).

In light of these difficulties 2:10a is probably a parenthetical, editorial comment by Mark (cf. similarly, vv. 15c, 28; 7:3-4, 19; 13:14). He inserted it into the narrative to explain the significance of this event for his readers: that Jesus as the risen Son of Man has authority (exousian, the right and power) on earth to forgive sins, something the scribes did not fully recognize. Only here in the Gospels is the forgiveness of sins attributed to the Son of Man.

This view contributes to the literary unity of the passage: forgiveness is declared (2:5), questioned (vv. 6-9), validated (v. 11), and recognized (v. 12). The initial words in verse 10, But that you may know, could thus be translated, "Now you (Mark's readers) should know that. . . ." The last clause signals the end of Mark's comment and a return to the incident itself.

2:11-12. Jesus commanded the paralytic to get up (a test of his faith), take his mat, and go home (demand of obedience). The man was enabled to do this immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) in full view of them all, including Jesus' critics. They were forced to recognize that the man had received God's forgiveness. This showed the character of salvation Jesus brought, namely, healing whole persons. Everyone (probably including the scribes) was amazed (existasthai, lit., "out of their minds"; cf. 3:21; 5:42; 6:51) and praised (ascribed glory to) God because of Jesus' display of supernatural power.

2. THE CALL OF LEVI AND EATING WITH SINNERS (2:13-17)
(MATT. 9:9-13; LUKE 5:27-32)

2:13. Jesus went out from Capernaum to the lake (Sea of Galilee) once again (cf. 1:16). To summarize His activity, Mark stated that Jesus was teaching a large crowd which kept on coming to hear Him. His withdrawal from populous centers is a recurring pattern in Mark (cf. 1:45; 2:13; 3:7, 13; 4:1; 5:21; etc.) and recalls the "wilderness" theme (cf. 1:4, 12-13, 35, 45).

2:14. Capernaum was a customs post on the caravan route from Damascus to the Mediterranean Sea. Levi (surnamed Matthew; cf. 3:18; Matt. 9:9; 10:3) was a Jewish tax official in the service of Herod Antipas, the ruler of Galilee (see the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5). For such service, often involving fraudulent practices, these officials were despised by the Jews. Yet Jesus extended to Levi a gracious call to follow Him and leave his old calling behind (cf. Mark 1:17-18).

2:15-16. Shortly afterward, Levi gave a dinner for Jesus and His disciples. This is the first mention (of 43) in Mark of the "disciples" as a distinct group. Mark added an editorial comment explaining that there were many (disciples) who followed Jesus, not just the five mentioned so far in Mark's Gospel.

Eating with Jesus were many tax collectors (Levi's former associates) and "sinners," a technical term for common people regarded by the Pharisees as untaught in the Law, who did not abide by rigid pharisaic standards. For Jesus and His disciples to share a meal (an expression of trust and fellowship) with them offended the Law teachers who were Pharisees. The Pharisees, the most influential religious party in Palestine, were deeply devoted to the Mosaic Law. They strictly regulated their lives by the supposedly binding interpretations of it passed down in oral tradition and were meticulous about maintaining ceremonial purity (cf. 7:1-5). They criticized Jesus for not being a separatist, for failing to observe their pious distinction between "the righteous" (they themselves) and "the sinners."

2:17. Jesus answered their criticism with a well-known proverb (recognized as valid by His opponents) and a statement of His mission which vindicated His conduct. The words, the righteous, are used ironically to refer to those who saw themselves as such, namely, the Pharisees (cf. Luke 16:14-15). They saw no need to repent and believe (cf. Mark 1:15). But Jesus knew that everyone, including "the righteous," are sinful. He came (into the world) to call sinners, those who humbly acknowledge their need and receive His gracious forgiveness, to God's kingdom. This was why Jesus ate with sinners (cf. 2:5-11, 19-20).

3. THE DISCUSSION ABOUT FASTING AND THE NEW SITUATION (2:18-22)

2:18. Mark's initial statement explained that John's disciples (John the Baptist's remaining followers) and the Pharisees (and their disciples or adherents) were fasting, presumably while Jesus and His disciples were feasting at Levi's house. The Old Testament prescribed fasting for all Jews only on the annual Day of Atonement, as an act of repentance (Lev. 16:29), but the Pharisees promoted voluntary fasts on every Monday and Thursday (cf. Luke 18:12) as an act of piety. In response to a critical inquiry, Jesus showed the incongruity of fasting for His disciples (Mark 2:19-22), though He allowed it if practiced properly (cf. Matt. 6:16-18).

2:19-20. Jesus' counterquestion set up a comparison and a veiled analogy to Himself. As it is inappropriate for guests (lit., "sons of the bridal chamber," the groom's attendants) to fast (an expression of sorrow) in the presence of the bridegroom, so it was inappropriate for Jesus' disciples to fast (in sorrow) while He was with them.

His presence with them constituted a situation as joyous as a wedding festival. But this situation would change, for the time (lit., "days") would come when the Bridegroom (Jesus) would be taken (aparthē, implying violent removal; cf. Isa. 53:8) from them and on that day (His crucifixion) the disciples would fast in the metaphorical sense of experiencing sorrow in place of joy. This allusion to His coming death is the first hint of the Cross in Mark's Gospel.

2:21-22. For the first time Mark used two of Jesus' parables, both of which had broader relevance than to fasting. Jesus' presence with His people was a time of newness (fulfillment) and signaled the passing of the old.

An attempt to bind the newness of the gospel to the old religion of Judaism is as futile as trying to patch an old (palaion, "worn out by use") garment with a new, unshrunk piece of cloth. When the new (kainon, "qualitatively new") piece (plērōma, "fullness") becomes wet, it will shrink, pull away from the old, and make a larger hole.

It is equally disastrous to pour new (neon, "fresh"), not fully fermented wine into old (palaious, "worn out by use," with no elasticity, brittle) wineskins. Inevitably, as the new wine ferments (expands), it will burst the skins and both the wine and the wineskins will be ruined. Salvation, available through Jesus, was not to be mixed with the old Judaistic system (cf. John 1:17).

4. THE PICKING AND EATING OF GRAIN ON THE SABBATH (2:23-28)

2:23-24. While walking on a footpath through someone's grainfields one Sabbath, Jesus' disciples . . . began picking some heads of grain to eat. This was legitimate (Deut. 23:25), but the Pharisees viewed it as reaping, an act of work forbidden on the Sabbath (cf. Ex. 34:21), so they demanded an explanation from Jesus.

2:25-26. In response Jesus appealed to Scripture and a precedent set by David and his companions when they were hungry and in need (1 Sam. 21:1-6). The words "his companions" and "in need" are key elements in this incident. David entered the tabernacle court, requested the consecrated bread (cf. Lev. 24:5-9) which was restricted by Mosaic legislation to the priests (cf. Lev. 24:9) and gave some to his men. Jesus used this action which God did not condemn, to show that the Pharisees' narrow interpretation of the Law blurred God's intention. The spirit of the Law in respect to human need took priority over its ceremonial regulations.

Mark stated that David's action occurred in the days of Abiathar the high priest, but the high priest was actually Ahimelech, his father (1 Sam. 21:1). A plausible explanation is to render the introductory phrase: "in the passage about Abiathar, the high priest" (cf. parallel phrase in Mark 12:26). This was a customary Jewish way of indicating the section of the Old Testament where a desired incident could be found. Abiathar became high priest shortly after Ahimelech and proved more prominent than he, thus justifying the use of his name here.

2:27-28. With the words, Then He said to them, Mark appended two principles: (1) He quoted Jesus' words that the Sabbath was instituted (by God) for mankind's benefit and refreshment, not that people were made to keep burdensome regulations pertaining to it. (2) Mark concluded (so, in light of vv. 23-27) with an editorial comment (cf. v. 10) on the meaning of Jesus' statement for his readers. The Son of Man (cf. 8:31) is Lord (Master) even of the Sabbath; He has sovereign authority over its use, as the next incident demonstrates.

5. THE HEALING OF THE MAN WITH A WITHERED HAND ON THE SABBATH (3:1-5) (MATT. 12:9-14; LUKE 6:6-11)

3:1-2. On another Sabbath occasion in the synagogue (probably Capernaum; cf. 1:21) Jesus saw a man with a shriveled hand (his "right" one; cf. Luke 6:6). Some of them (Pharisees, cf. Mark 3:6) were watching Jesus closely to see what He would do so they might find a reason to accuse Him. They permitted healing on the Sabbath only if a life was in danger. This man's problem was not life-threatening and could wait till the next day; so if Jesus healed him, they could accuse Him of being a Sabbath-violator, an offense punishable by death (cf. Ex. 31:14-17).

3:3-4. Jesus commanded the man, Stand up so the whole gathering could see his shriveled hand. Then He asked the Pharisees a rhetorical question concerning which of two kinds of action was really consistent with the purpose of the Sabbath in the Mosaic Law. The obvious answer is: to do good and to save life (psychēn, "soul"; cf. 8:35-36). Yet failure to use the Sabbath to meet this man's need (cf. 2:27) was to do evil (harmful misuse of its purpose) and, as ultimately happened, their malicious plotting on the Sabbath (cf. 3:6) led them to kill. The moral (not legal) issue of "doing good" on the Sabbath was at stake, and the Pharisees refused to debate it.

3:5. Jesus looked around (from periblepomai, an all-inclusive penetrating look; cf. v. 34; 5:32; 10:23; 11:11) at the Pharisees in anger. This is the only explicit reference to Jesus' anger in the New Testament. It was nonmalicious indignation coupled with deep sorrow (grief) at their obstinate insensitivity (pōrōsei, "hardening"; cf. Rom. 11:25; Eph. 4:18) to God's mercy and human misery.

When the man held out his hand at Jesus' command, it was instantly and completely restored. Jesus did not use any visible means that might be construed as "work" on the Sabbath. As Lord of the Sabbath (Mark 2:28) Jesus freed it from legal encumbrances, and in grace delivered this man from his distress.

E. Conclusion: Jesus' rejection by the Pharisees (3:6)

3:6. This verse climaxes the section on Jesus' conflicts in Galilee with the religious establishment (2:1–3:5). It is Mark's first explicit reference to Jesus' death, which now began to cast its shadow over His mission. The Pharisees conspired immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) with the Herodians (cf. 12:13), influential political supporters of Herod Antipas, in an unprecedented common effort to destroy Jesus (cf. 15:31-32). His authority confronted and overwhelmed their authority, so He must be killed. Their problem was how.

IV. Jesus' Later Galilean Ministry (3:7–6:6a)

The second major section of Mark's Gospel begins and concludes structurally like the first one (cf. 1:14-15 with 3:7-12; 1:16-20 with 3:13-19; 3:6 with 6:1-6a). It shows the development of Jesus' mission in the context of opposition and unbelief.

A. Introductory summary: Jesus' activity around the Sea of Galilee (3:7-12) (Matt. 12:14-21)

3:7-10. This summary passage is similar in context and character to 2:13. An added element is that Jesus withdrew with His disciples (emphatic first position in Gr.), who shared in both the hostility and the popular acclaim directed toward Jesus.

Many people from Galilee followed (nontechnical sense, "went along with") and, attracted by all He was doing (i.e., healing miracles), many . . . came from areas outside Galilee—from the south, Judea, Jerusalem, Idumea; the east, Transjordan (Perea); and the north, the coastal cities of Tyre and Sidon (in Phoenicia). Jesus spent time in all these areas (except Idumea; 5:1; 7:24, 31; 10:1; 11:11). So intense was the impact of Jesus' healing ministry and the desire of those with diseases (mastigas, "scourges," cf. 5:29 ["suffering"], 34) to touch Him that He told His disciples to have a small boat ready to escape the rush of the crowds. Only Mark reported this detail, suggesting the memory of an eyewitness such as Peter.

3:11-12. In the crowds were demoniacs, people whose speech and behavior were dominated by evil spirits. They recognized Jesus' true status as the Son of God and were greatly threatened by His presence. Jesus did not accept their repeated (imperf. verbs) cries of recognition, and ordered (cf. 1:25; 4:39; 8:30, 32-33; 9:25) them not to tell who He was (cf. 1:24-25, 34). In silencing their untimely cries Jesus reaffirmed His submission to God's plan for the progressive disclosure of His identity and mission.

B. Jesus' appointment of the Twelve (3:13-19)

3:13. From the lakeside lowlands Jesus went up into the hills (of central Galilee; cf. 6:46). Taking the initiative, He summoned to Himself those He wanted, namely the Twelve (3:16-19), and they came from the crowd to Him (cf. Luke 6:13). Mark had already said that Jesus had many other disciples (cf. Mark 2:15).

3:14-15. He appointed (lit., "made") 12 for two reasons: (a) so they could be with Him (immediate association for training) and (b) be sent out by Him to preach (cf. 1:4, 14) and to have (delegated) authority to drive out (ekballein; cf. 1:34, 39) demons (their future mission; cf. 6:7-13). Mark devoted attention to their association with Jesus and preparation for their ministries.

Nearly all major ancient Greek manuscripts and most early versions omit the phrase, designating them apostles. This seems preferable; its inclusion in a few early manuscripts was probably due to the influence of Luke 6:13 and because Mark used the term "apostles" only in Mark 6:30 where it is appropriate in a nontechnical sense.

The number 12 corresponds to the 12 tribes of Israel, thus expressing Jesus' claim on the whole nation. "The Twelve" became an official designation or title for those appointed by Jesus on this occasion (cf. 4:10; 6:7; 9:35; 10:32; 11:11; 14:10, 17, 20, 43). Though significantly linked with Israel, they are never called a new or spiritual "Israel." Rather they were the nucleus of a coming new community, the church (cf. Matt. 16:16-20; Acts 1:5-8).

3:16-19. These verses give a traditional list of the names of the appointed Twelve. Simon (cf. 14:37) heads the list. Jesus surnamed him Peter (cf. John 1:42), the Greek equivalent of the Aramaic Cephas, which means a "stone or rock." This probably described his leadership role during Jesus' ministry and in the early church (cf. Matt. 16:16-20; Eph. 2:20), and did not refer to his personal character. James and John, Zebedee's sons, are surnamed Boanerges, a Hebrew idiom Mark interpreted as Sons of Thunder (cf. Mark 9:38; 10:35-39; Luke 9:54), though a more complimentary meaning (now unknown) may have been intended by Jesus.

Apart from Andrew (cf. Mark 1:16; 13:3), Judas Iscariot (cf. 14:10, 43), and possibly James son of Alphaeus as "James the younger" (cf. 15:40), the remaining names do not occur again in Mark: Philip (cf. John 1:43-45), Bartholomew (Nathanael; John 1:45-51), Matthew (Levi; cf. Mark 2:14), Thomas (cf. John 11:16; 14:5; 20:24-28; 21:2), James son of Alphaeus (probably not Levi's brother; cf. Mark 2:14), Thaddaeus (Judas son of James; cf. Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13), and Simon the Zealot ("Zealot" probably indicated his zeal for God's honor, not an extreme nationalism). In contrast was Judas Iscariot (a "man from Kerioth," the only non-Galilean; cf. John 6:71; 13:26), who betrayed Jesus to His enemies (cf. Mark 14:10-11, 43-46).

C. The Beelzebub accusation and Jesus' identity of His true family (3:20-35)

This section has a "sandwich" structure in which the account concerning Jesus' family (vv. 20-21, 31-35) is divided by the Beelzebub accusation (vv. 22-30). This deliberate literary device is used several times by Mark (cf. 5:21-43; 6:7-31; 11:12-26; 14:1-11, 27-52) for different reasons. Here Mark pointed out a parallel in the charges made against Jesus (cf. 3:21 and 30) but at the same time made a distinction between general opposition to Jesus and a distortion of the Holy Spirit's work through Him.

1. THE CONCERN OF JESUS' FAMILY FOR HIM (3:20-21)

3:20-21. These verses are unique to Mark. After Jesus entered a house (in Capernaum; cf. 2:1-2), such a large crowd demanded His attention that He and His disciples had no time to eat (cf. 6:31). When His family (lit., "those with Him," a Gr. idiom for kinsmen, not "friends," KJV; cf. 3:31) heard that His ceaseless activity prevented proper care for His needs, they came (probably from Nazareth) to take charge of Him (kratēsai, a word used for making an arrest; cf. 6:17; 12:12; 14:1, 44, 46, 51) for (gar; cf. "for" in 1:16) the people kept saying He was out of His mind, a mentally unbalanced religious fanatic (cf. Acts 26:24; 2 Cor. 5:13).

2. JESUS' REFUTATION OF THE BEELZEBUB ACCUSATION (3:22-30)

3:22. Meanwhile a delegation of Law teachers (scribes) came down from Jerusalem to investigate Jesus. They repeatedly charged (a) that He was possessed by Beelzebub (demon-possessed; cf. v. 30), and (b) that He was driving out demons through a power alliance with Satan, the prince (ruler) of demons (cf. v. 23).

The spelling "Beelzebub" came into English translations from the Latin Vulgate which derived it from the Hebrew "Baalzebub" meaning "Lord of the flies," the name of an ancient Canaanite deity (cf. 2 Kings 1:2). But the spelling "Beelzeboul" (NIV marg.) has better Greek manuscript support. It reflects the later Hebrew "Baalzebul" (not used in the OT) meaning: "Lord of the dwelling place (temple)," that is, of evil spirits in the New Testament contexts (cf. Matt. 10:25; Luke 11:17-22).

3:23-27. Jesus summoned His accusers and refuted their charges in parables (short proverbial sayings, not stories). He dealt with the second accusation first (vv. 23-26) by showing the absurdity of their underlying assumption that Satan acts against himself. He used two illustrations to make the self-evident point that if a kingdom or a house (household) is divided against itself in purpose and goals, it cannot stand. The same applies to Satan if it is assumed that Satan opposes himself and his realm is divided. This would mean that his end has come, that is, his power, not his personal existence. Clearly this is false, for Satan remains strong (cf. v. 27; 1 Peter 5:8). So the charge that Jesus' exorcisms were due to Satan's power was false.

The analogy in Mark 3:27 refuted their first accusation (v. 22) showing in fact (lit., "on the contrary") that the opposite was true. Satan is the strong man. His house is the realm of sin, sickness, demon possession, and death. His possessions are people who are enslaved by one or more of these things, and demons are his agents who carry out his diabolical activity. No one can enter his realm to carry off (diarpasai, "plunder") his possessions unless he first binds the strong man (shows he is more powerful). Then he can rob (diarpasei, "plunder") the realm, releasing the enslaved victims. At His temptation (cf. 1:12-13) and through His exorcisms Jesus demonstrated that He is the Stronger One, empowered by the Holy Spirit (cf. 3:29). His mission is to confront and overpower (not cooperate with) Satan and to deliver those enslaved by him.

3:28-30. In light of the preceding charges Jesus issued a strong warning. The words, I tell you the truth (lit., "Amen [truly], I say to you"), are a recurring formula of solemn affirmation (13 times in Mark) found only in the Gospels and always spoken by Jesus.

Jesus declared, All the sins and blasphemies (derogatory words vs. God) of men (generic, "people") are open to God's gracious forgiveness (cf. 1:4) with one exception—blasphemies against the Holy Spirit. In light of the context this refers to an attitude (not an isolated act or utterance) of defiant hostility toward God that rejects His saving power toward man, expressed in the Spirit-empowered person and work of Jesus. It is one's preference for darkness even though he has been exposed to light (cf. John 3:19). Such a persistent attitude of willful unbelief can harden into a condition in which repentance and forgiveness, both mediated by God's Spirit, become impossible. This person is guilty (enochos, "liable to, in the grasp") of an eternal sin (sing., the ultimate sin because it remains forever unforgiven; cf. Matt. 12:32). Judas Iscariot (cf. Mark 3:29; 14:43-46) proved the reality of these words.

Mark explained that Jesus said all this because they (the Law teachers, 3:22) kept saying He was demon-possessed (v. 22b). Jesus did not actually say the scribes had committed this unpardonable sin; but they came perilously close by attributing His exorcisms to satanic power when they really were accomplished by the Holy Spirit. They were close to calling the Holy Spirit "Satan."

3. JESUS' TRUE FAMILY (3:31-35)

3:31-32. The arrival of Jesus' mother (Mary; cf. 6:3) and His brothers (cf. 6:3) resumes the narrative suspended in 3:21. Standing outside the house, they sent someone through the crowd . . . around Him, requesting a private conversation in an attempt to restrain His activity.

3:33-35. Jesus' rhetorical question (v. 33) was not a repudiation of family relationships (cf. 7:10-13). He was highlighting the far deeper issue of a person's relationship to Him. It is qualitative in force: "Who are the sort of people who are My mother and My brothers?" Then looking (from periblepomai; cf. 3:5) at those seated in a circle around Him (His disciples in contrast with those standing outside, v. 31), Jesus asserted that their kinship went beyond natural family ties.

Jesus broadened the reference beyond those present by stating that whoever does God's will is a member of His family. The words brother and sister and mother, all occurring without an article in Greek (thus qualitative), figuratively denote Jesus' spiritual family. Doing God's will (e.g., 1:14-20) characterizes those who are Jesus' spiritual kinfolk.

D. Jesus' parables depicting the character of God's kingdom (4:1-34)

This group of parables constitutes the first of two lengthy units in Mark's Gospel devoted to Jesus' teaching (cf. also 13:3-37). Mark selected these parables (as implied in 4:2, 10, 13, 33) from a larger collection to depict the character of God's kingdom (cf. 4:11 with 1:15).

They were given in a climate of growing hostility and opposition (cf. 2:3–3:6, 22-30), but also enormous popular acclaim (cf. 1:45; 2:2, 13, 15; 3:7-8). Both responses showed people's failure to grasp who Jesus really is.

"Parable" is a transliteration of the Greek parabolē, "comparison." It can designate a variety of figurative forms of speech (e.g., 2:19-22; 3:23-25; 4:3-9, 26-32; 7:15-17; 13:28). But usually a parable is a short discourse that conveys spiritual truth by making a vivid comparison. The truth to be taught is compared to something in nature or a common-life experience. A parable usually expresses a single important truth, though occasionally a subordinate feature expands its total meaning (cf. 4:3-9, 13-20; 12:1-12). A parable draws its hearers to take part in a situation, evaluate it, and apply its truth to themselves. (See the list of Jesus' 35 recorded parables at Matt. 7:24-27.)

1. INTRODUCTORY SUMMARY (4:1-2)
(MATT. 13:1-2)

4:1-2. Once again (cf. 2:13; 3:7) Jesus was teaching a large crowd by the lake (Sea of Galilee). The crowd was so large that He was forced to sit in a boat . . . out on the lake and teach those who lined the shore. This time He taught them many things by parables.

2. THE PARABLE OF THE SOILS (4:3-20)

a. Jesus' statement of the Soils Parable (4:3-9)
(Matt. 13:3-9; Luke 8:4-8)

Both before and after Jesus told this parable, He urged the crowd to listen carefully (cf. Mark 4:3, 9, 23).

4:3-9. As a farmer (lit., "one who sows") scattered seed over his unplowed field, some fell along the well-trodden foot path (cf. 2:23). Some fell on rocky places having no depth of soil because limestone was close to the surface. Other seed fell among thorns (ground containing unearthed thorn plant roots). And still other seeds fell on good soil.

Not all the seed produced a crop. Birds . . . ate the seed that fell on the path (4:4). The sun . . . scorched the tender plants that quickly (euthys; cf. 1:10) sprouted in the shallow rocky soil and they withered (4:6). Thorns grew up and choked other plants, making them unproductive (v. 7).

By contrast, the seed on the good soil took root, grew, and produced an abundant harvest. It brought yields up to 30, 60, and even 100 times (v. 8) the seed sown, depending on the fertility of the soil. Back then a yield of 10 to 1 was considered a fine crop.

b. Jesus' explanation for teaching in parables (4:10-12)

4:10. The change of scene here is significant. Verses 10-20 occurred later (cf. vv. 35-36; Matt. 13:36), but Mark put them here to illustrate the principle stated in Mark 4:11, 33-34, and thereby show the importance of parables. When Jesus was alone with the Twelve and the others around Him (other true disciples; cf. 3:34), they asked Him about the parables in general, and the Parable of the Soils in particular (cf. 4:13).

4:11-12. These verses must be viewed in the context of unbelief and hostility (cf. 3:6, 21-22, 30). To those who believed, to you (emphatic first position in Gr.), the disciples, God had given the secret of the kingdom of God (cf. 1:15). But to those on the outside (of the circle of disciples, the unbelieving crowd) everything, His whole message and mission, was stated in parables. The word "parables" here has the special sense of "enigmatic speech." The crowd did not really understand Jesus.

Both groups were confronted by Jesus and His message (cf. 1:14-15). God enabled the disciples to see in Him the "secret" (mystērion) about the kingdom. This refers to the disclosure of God's present kingdom plan which is to be an Age of "seed-sowing" (cf. 4:13-20; 13:10). It was previously hidden to the prophets, but now was revealed to people of His choice (cf. Rom. 16:25-26).

The basic "secret," common to all the kingdom parables, is that in Jesus, God's rule (kingdom) has come into human experience in a new spiritual form. The disciples had believed in Jesus. God had already given (dedotai, perf. pass.) them this "secret," though so far they understood little of its full impact.

On the other hand those blinded by unbelief saw in Jesus nothing but a threat to their existence. They rejected Him and did not come to know the "secret" of God's kingdom. Jesus' parables served to conceal its truths from them.

They were like the Israelites in Isaiah's day (Isa. 6:9-10). Isaiah said that this spiritual blindness and deafness that comes to people is God's judgment. He particularly referred to Israel as a nation (cf. Mark 6:9, "this people") for rejecting God's revelation, especially as expressed in Jesus. They would see or hear the imagery of a parable but they would not understand its spiritual meaning. Otherwise (mēpote, "lest perhaps") they might turn to God (repent) and be forgiven by Him.

Jesus' audiences were not denied the opportunity to believe in Him. But after they persistently closed their minds to His message (cf. 1:15), they were excluded from further understanding of it by His use of parables. Yet even the parables, which veiled the truth, were meant to provoke thought, enlighten, and ultimately reveal it (cf. 12:12). They uniquely preserved people's freedom to believe, while demonstrating that such a decision is effected by God's enabling (cf. 4:11a).

c. Jesus' interpretation of the Soils Parable (4:13-20)

4:13. The two questions here emphasize the importance of the Soils Parable. If Jesus' disciples did not understand (oidate, "intuitively comprehend") its meaning, then they would not understand (gnōsesthe, "comprehend by experience") any of the kingdom parables.

4:14-20. The farmer (sower) is not identified, but the context indicates he probably represents Jesus and all who sow (proclaim) the Word (message) of God, which is the seed (cf. 1:15, 45; 2:2; 6:12). In 4:15-20 a change occurs: the kinds of soil represent various types of hearers in whom the seed is sown.

Many people give one of three negative responses to Jesus' message. Some . . . hear the Word with hard-hearted indifference. Satan (like the birds) comes immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) and takes it away. In effect, there was no response.

Others . . . hear the Word with a hasty (euthys), enthusiastic, but shallow profession of acceptance. However, they last only a short time because the Word takes no root in them. When trouble (lit., "hardships") or persecution comes (like a hot sun) on account of the Word, they quickly (euthys) fall away (skandalizontai, "are repelled"; cf. comments on 14:27). Their profession proves not to be genuine.

Still others . . . hear the Word but are preoccupied with the cares and riches of this life. Three competing concerns—distracting worries of this life (lit., "the present Age"); the deceitfulness (deceptive lure) of wealth; and desires for all sorts of other things in place of the Word—enter into their lives (like thriving thorn plants). These things choke the Word, making it (the Word, not the hearer) unfruitful (cf. 10:22), indicating they are not true believers.

By contrast, others . . . hear the Word, accept it (paradechontai, "welcome it for themselves"), and produce a crop, or bear spiritual fruit. These are genuine disciples. In the future harvest they will have fruitful yields of varying amounts: 30, 60, or . . . 100 (cf. 4:24-25 with Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 19:11-27).

Giving out the news of God's kingdom is like sowing seed on various kinds of soil. At Jesus' first coming and in the present Age the kingdom is largely veiled in the face of satanic opposition and human unbelief. But despite this, God's rule takes hold in those who accept Jesus' message and His rule manifests itself in spiritual fruitfulness. But God's kingdom will be openly established on earth at Jesus' second coming with a glory yet undisclosed (cf. Mark 13:24-27). Then there will be an abundant harvest. Thus the parable displayed God's kingdom as both present but veiled and future but openly glorious (cf. 1:14-15).

3. THE PARABLE OF THE LAMP AND THE MEASURE (4:21-25)
(LUKE 8:16-18; MATT. 5:15 AND LUKE 11:33; MATT. 7:2 AND LUKE 6:38; MATT. 10:26 AND LUKE 12:2; MATT. 13:12; 25:29 AND LUKE 19:26)

Jesus used the parabolic sayings of these verses on various occasions (cf. above references). Mark put them here because their message reinforced the message of Jesus' kingdom parables and demonstrated the need for a proper response to them. Mark 4:23-24a recalls verses 3 and 9, indicating that Mark understood these words to be part of Jesus' parabolic teaching to all (cf. vv. 26, 30) rather than the continuation of Jesus' private address to His disciples.

4:21-23. In this parable Jesus pointed out the self-evident fact that a lamp, a lighted wick in a shallow clay bowl full of oil, was not meant to be lit and then hidden under a measuring bowl (as was done at bedtime) or a bed (lit., "dining couch"). Rather, it was to be placed on its stand where it would give light. Then Jesus explained (gar, for) whatever was hidden or concealed (during the night) was meant to be brought out into the open (for use in the day). This story from everyday life conveyed a spiritual truth for anyone willing to learn from it.

4:24-25. If a person accepts His proclamation (cf. 1:15), God will give him a share in His kingdom now and even more will be added in its future manifestation (cf. 4:21-23). But if one rejects His Word, that one suffers absolute loss because even the opportunity he has for a share in the kingdom now will someday be taken away from him.

4. THE PARABLE OF THE EARTH BEARING FRUIT BY ITSELF (4:26-29)

This is Mark's only unique parable. Like the Soils Parable, it presents a comprehensive picture of the coming of God's kingdom: sowing (v. 26), growing (vv. 27-28), and harvesting (v. 29), with emphasis on the growing phase. Only one person, the sower (not identified), appears in all three phases.

4:26. The initial words in this parable could be rendered: "The kingdom of God is as follows: it is like. . . ." In phase one, the sower scatters seed on the ground.

4:27-28. In phase two the sower appears but is not active. After planting the seed, he leaves it and goes about his duties night and day without anxious thought for the seed. Meanwhile it germinates, sprouts, and grows in a way he did not know and cannot explain.

The soil (lit., "the earth") produces grain which develops to maturity in successive stages. The soil does this all by itself (automatē; cf. the Eng. "automatic"). This key Greek word (emphatic by position) could be translated "without visible cause" implying "without human agency," and thus refers to work done by God (cf. similar situations in Josh. 6:5; Job 24:24; Acts 12:10). God works in the life-bearing seed which, when planted in good soil, grows stage by stage and produces grain without human intervention.

4:29. The sower's ultimate interest is phase three, the harvest. Whenever (future) the grain is ripe, he immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) puts the sickle to it (lit., "sends forth the sickle," a figure of speech for "sending forth the reapers"; cf. Joel 3:13) because the harvest has come (parestēken, "stands ready").

Some interpreters view this parable as a picture of evangelism. Some take it as depicting spiritual growth in a believer. Others see it as a picture of the coming of God's kingdom by the mysterious, sovereign work of God. Its emphasis is on growth under God's initiative in the interim phase between the proclamation by Jesus (the lowly Sower) and His disciples and the ultimate manifestation of the kingdom by Jesus (the mighty Harvester). The third view is preferred in light of Mark 4:26a and the overall context of the kingdom parables.

4:30-32. This parable has an elaborate double-question introduction which states in essence that the emergence of God's kingdom is similar to what happens to a mustard seed (the common black mustard, sinapis nigra) after it is sown on the ground. In Jewish thinking, its small size was proverbial since it was the smallest of all the seeds sown in the field. It took 725–760 mustard seeds to weigh a gram (28 grams equal one ounce). The mustard shrub is an annual plant which, growing from seed, becomes the largest of all garden plants (ta lachana, "large, fast-growing annual shrubs") in Palestine, reaching a height of 12-15 feet in a few weeks. Birds of the air (undomesticated fowl) are attracted by its seed and the shade of its large branches (cf. TDNT, s.v. "sinapi," 7:287-91). This parable emphasizes the contrast between the smallest of the seeds growing into the tallest of the shrubs. It contrasts the insignificant, even enigmatic beginning of God's kingdom, embodied in the presence of Jesus, with the greatness of the end result to be established at His Second Advent when it will surpass all the earth's kingdoms in power and glory.

The reference to the birds may simply indicate the surprising size of the end result. Or perhaps they represent evil forces (cf. v. 4), but this would indicate an abnormal development of God's kingdom. Probably they represent the incorporation of the Gentiles into God's kingdom program (cf. Ezek. 17:22-24; 31:6). What God had promised to do (Ezek. 17), He began to do in Jesus' mission. (The kingdom, however, is not to be identified with the church; cf. comments on Mark 1:15.)

6. CONCLUDING SUMMARY (4:33-34)

4:33-34. These verses summarize the purpose and approach of Jesus' parabolic teaching (cf. vv. 11-12). His practice was to speak the Word (cf. 1:15) to them, the crowds plus the disciples, through parables which He adapted to their levels of understanding.

Because of misconceptions about God's kingdom, Jesus . . . did not teach about it without using a parable (in figurative speech). But to His own disciples privately (kat'idian; cf. 6:31-32; 7:33; 9:2, 28; 13:3) He explained (lit., "kept on explaining") everything about His mission as it related to God's kingdom. This dual approach, illustrated here in chapter 4, is assumed throughout the rest of the Gospel.

E. Jesus' miracles demonstrating His sovereign power (4:35–5:43)

Mark's selection of parables is followed by a series of miracles, indicating that what Jesus did (His works) authenticated what He said (His words). Both relate to the presence of God's sovereign rule (kingdom) in Jesus.

With only three exceptions Mark put all the miracles he recorded before 8:27. (Cf. the list "The Miracles of Jesus" at John 2:1-11.) This was to highlight the fact that Jesus would not tell His disciples about His coming death and resurrection until they openly acknowledged Him as God's Messiah.

This section contains four miracles that clearly show Jesus' sovereign authority over various hostile powers: a storm at sea (4:35-41); demon possession (5:1-20); incurable physical illness (5:25-34); and death (5:21-24, 35-43).

1. THE CALMING OF THE STORM ON THE LAKE (4:35-41)

4:35-37. The vivid details indicate that Mark recorded an eyewitness report, probably from Peter. On the evening of that day of teaching by the lake (cf. v. 1), Jesus took the initiative and decided to cross over to the other (east) side of the Sea of Galilee with His 12 disciples. Though not stated, He probably desired relief from the crowds and rest. Perhaps also He sought a new sphere of ministry (cf. 1:38). Even so, other boats, carrying those who wanted to remain with Jesus, tagged along.

His disciples, several of them experienced fishermen, took charge of the voyage. The words, just as He was, refer back to 4:1 and link Jesus' teaching in a boat with His miracle-work in a boat (cf. the disciples' address, "Teacher," v. 38).

The journey was interrupted by a sudden furious squall, common on this lake, surrounded by high hills and narrow valleys that functioned as wind tunnels. A storm in the evening was especially dangerous, and on this occasion the boisterous waves broke over (lit., "kept spilling over into") the boat so that it was nearly swamped.

4:38-39. Exhausted from a full day of teaching, Jesus was sleeping . . . in the stern, on a sailor's leather rowing cushion. The panic-stricken disciples woke Him with a cry of reproach (cf. 5:31; 6:37; 8:4, 32) at His apparent indifference to their situation. Though they called Him Teacher (Gr. for the Heb. Rabbi), they did not yet understand His teaching.

Jesus rebuked (lit., "ordered"; cf. 1:25) the wind and said to the waves, "Be silent! Be muzzled and remain so!" (the force of the Gr. perf. tense, pephimōso) This verb, "be muzzled," was somewhat of a technical term for dispossessing a demon of his power (cf. 1:25) and may suggest that Jesus recognized demonic powers behind the ferocious storm. But at His command the wind stopped and the lake became completely calm.

4:40-41. Jesus rebuked His disciples for being afraid (deiloi, "cowardly fear") in a crisis. Despite Jesus' tutoring (vv. 11, 34) it still had not dawned on them that God's authority and power were present in Jesus. This is what He meant by His second question, Do you still have no faith? (cf. 7:18; 8:17-21, 33; 9:19)

In stilling the storm Jesus assumed the authority exercised only by God in the Old Testament (cf. Pss. 89:8-9; 104:5-9; 106:8-9; 107:23-32). That is why the disciples were terrified (lit., "feared a great fear") when they saw that even the forces of nature did obey Him. The verb "terrified" (from phobeomai, "have awe;" cf. deilos, "cowardly fear," in Mark 4:40) refers to a reverence that overtakes people in the presence of supernatural power (cf. 16:8). However, their question to one another, Who is this? indicated that they did not fully comprehend the significance of it all.

2. THE CURE OF THE GERASENE DEMONIAC (5:1-20)

a. A description of the demoniac (5:1-5)

5:1. Jesus and His disciples went to the east side of the lake (Sea of Galilee) into the region of the Gerasenes. Greek manuscripts are divided on the precise location involved, citing three names: Gadarenes (Matt. 8:28), Gergesenes (from Origen), and Gerasenes. (See comments on Luke 8:26). Reliable evidence favors the name Gerasenes which probably referred to the small town Gersa (modern Khersa) located on the lake's eastern shore. Most of its inhabitants were Gentiles (cf. Mark 5:11, 19).

5:2-5. The vivid details of this whole account reflect both an eyewitness report and the report of townspeople who had long been familiar with this demoniac. As soon as (euthys; cf. 1:10) Jesus got out of the boat, He encountered a man with an evil spirit (cf. 5:8, 13 with 1:23) from (ek, "out of") the tombs. These were probably cavelike rooms cut into the rocks of nearby hills which served as tombs and sometimes as haunts for demented people. Matthew mentioned demoniacs, whereas Mark and Luke focused attention on one, probably the worst case.

Mark 5:3-5 elaborately describes his pathetic condition. He lived in the tombs (an outcast); he was uncontrollable for no one could . . . subdue (from damazō, "to tame a wild animal") him, not even with fetters for his feet or a chain for his hands. He went about night and day shrieking wildly and cutting himself with sharp stones, perhaps in a demonic form of worship.

Such behavior shows that demon possession is not mere sickness or insanity but a desperate satanic attempt to distort and destroy God's image in man (cf. TDNT, s.v. "daimōn," 2:18-19).

b. The command to the demon (5:6-10)

5:6-7. The brief statement of Jesus' encounter with the demoniac (v. 2) is now related in more detail. Three things indicate that the demon possessing the man was fully aware of Jesus' divine origin and superior power: he knelt before Him (in homage, not worship); he used Jesus' divine name in an attempt to gain control over Him (cf. 1:24); and he brazenly appealed to Jesus not to punish him. The words, Most High God, were used in the Old Testament, often by Gentiles, to refer to the superiority of the true God of Israel over all man-made gods (cf. Gen. 14:18-24; Num. 24:16; Isa. 14:14; Dan. 3:26; 4:2; cf. comments on Mark 1:23-24).

The plea, Swear to God, was used in exorcisms and should be rendered, "I implore you by (I appeal to) God." The demon did not want Jesus to torture him by sending him to his final punishment then (cf. 1:24; Matt. 8:29; Luke 8:31).

5:8. This verse is a brief explanatory (gar, for) comment by Mark (cf. 6:52). Jesus was commanding him, the demon, to leave the man. Throughout this section there is fluctuation between the personality of the man and the demon who possessed him.

5:9-10. These verses resume the conversation of verse 7. The demon said through the man, My name is Legion for we are many. Many evil powers controlled this man and subjected him to intense oppression. They tormented him as one combined force under the leadership of one demon, their spokesman. This accounts for the alternating singular ("my") and plural ("we") pronouns. Repeatedly the leading demon begged Jesus earnestly not to send them out of the area (lit., "region"; cf. v. 1) into a lonely exile where they could not torment people.

The Latin word "Legion," commonly known in Palestine, denoted a Roman army regiment of about 6,000 soldiers, though it probably also meant a very large number (cf. v. 15). To people under Roman domination the word no doubt suggested great strength and oppression.

c. The loss of the herd of pigs (5:11-13)

5:11. The Jews considered pigs "unclean" animals (cf. Lev. 11:7). But the farmers on the east side of the Sea of Galilee with its predominantly Gentile population raised pigs for the meat markets in the Decapolis, "the 10 cities" of that region (cf. Mark 5:20).

5:12-13. The demons (cf. v. 9) specifically begged Jesus to send them among (eis here suggests movement toward) the pigs so that they might go into them as their new hosts. They knew they were subject to Jesus' command, and in a desperate attempt to avoid being consigned to a disembodied state until final judgment, they made this appeal.

Jesus gave them permission to do so. When the demons left the man and entered the pigs, the whole herd, about 2,000 in number, stampeded down the steep bank into the lake and were drowned (lit., "one after another they drowned themselves"). The "sea" perhaps symbolized the satanic realm.

d. The plea of the townspeople (5:14-17)

5:14-15. The herdsmen tending the pigs fled in fear and reported this startling event in the town (probably Gersa; cf. v. 1) and the surrounding countryside. The report was so unbelievable that many people went to investigate the incident for themselves. They saw the former demoniac sitting there, dressed (cf. Luke 8:27) and in his right mind, rational and self-controlled (contrast Mark 5:3-5). So complete was the transformation that the townspeople were afraid (awed; cf. 4:41).

5:16-17. The herdsmen (and perhaps the disciples) rehearsed what had happened to the . . . man—and to the pigs, a detail Mark emphasized to show that this economic loss (not the man) was the people's major concern. As a result the townspeople began urging Jesus to leave. Apparently they feared further losses if He stayed. There is no record that He ever returned to that area.

e. The request of the restored man (5:18-20)

5:18-20. In contrast with the local inhabitants (cf. v. 17), the man who had been demon-possessed was begging (parekalei, the same word used by the demon, v. 10) to go with Jesus. Jesus' miracles repelled some (vv. 15-17) and attracted others (vv. 18-20).

The words, "to go with Him" (lit., "in order that he might be with Him"), recall a similar clause in 3:14 that describes one of the purposes for which Jesus called the Twelve. It is in this sense that Jesus refused the man's request.

Jesus told him to go to his home (immediate family) and family (lit., "to yours," your own people) from whom he had been estranged and report to them all that the Lord, the Most High God (cf. 5:7; Luke 8:39) had done for him and how He had shown mercy on him. The man obeyed and began to proclaim (cf. Mark 1:4, 14) in the Decapolis (a league of 10 Gr. cities all but one east of the Jordan) the wonderful things Jesus (cf. "Lord," 5:19) had done for him. Those who heard him were amazed (ethaumazon, cf. "astonished"; 6:6a; 12:17; 15:5, 44).

Since this man was a Gentile and his preaching activity was confined to a Gentile area where Jesus was not welcome, Jesus did not give His usual injunction to silence (cf. 1:44; 5:43; 7:36).

3. THE HEMORRHAGING WOMAN AND JAIRUS' DAUGHTER (5:21-43) (MATT. 9:18-26; LUKE 8:40-56)

This section, like Mark 3:20-35, has a "sandwich" structure. The account of the raising of Jairus' daughter from the dead (5:21-24, 35-43) is divided by the incident of the woman with a hemorrhage (5:25-34). What appeared to be a disastrous delay in the healing of the woman actually assured the restoration of Jairus' daughter. It was providentially ordered to test and strengthen Jairus' faith.

a. Jairus' earnest request (5:21-24) (Matt. 9:18-19; Luke 8:40-42)

5:21-24. Jesus and His disciples returned to the other (west) side of the Sea of Galilee, probably to Capernaum. As before in this area, a large crowd gathered around Jesus while He was still by the lake.

On this occasion, Jairus came to Him. As one of the synagogue rulers, he was a lay official responsible for the physical management of the synagogue building and the worship services. He was a respected leader in the community. Not all the religious leaders were hostile to Jesus.

Jairus' little daughter (an only daughter, Luke 8:42) was dying (lit., "was at the point of death"). Matthew's abbreviated treatment of this event (135 words whereas Mark used 374) accounts for his statement that the girl had already died (Matt. 9:18). In humility, Jairus pleaded earnestly (lit., "begged much"; cf. Mark 5:10) with Jesus to come and put His hands on her so that she might be healed (lit., "saved," delivered from physical death) and live. The practice of "laying on of hands" in healing symbolized the transfer of vitality to a needy recipient; it was popularly associated with Jesus' healings (cf. 6:5; 7:32; 8:23, 25). Jairus probably knew about Jesus' power from previous associations (cf. 1:21-28) and was confident that He could save his daughter's life.

As Jesus went with Jairus, a great crowd followed them and pressed ("kept thronging," from synthlibō; cf. v. 31) around Him.

b. The healing of the woman with a hemorrhage (5:25-34) (Matt. 9:20-22; Luke 8:43-48)

5:25-27. An unnamed woman with an incurable condition joined the crowd. She had suffered (lit., "was in") bleeding for 12 years (cf. v. 42). This may have been a chronic menstrual disorder or a uterine hemorrhage. Her condition made her ritually unclean (cf. Lev. 15:25-27), excluding her from normal social relations since any who came in contact with her would become "unclean."

She had suffered greatly from various treatments by many doctors. She had spent all she owned in a desperate attempt to get well. Nothing helped; in fact her condition grew worse.

But because she had heard about Jesus' healing power (which aroused her faith), she came up behind Him in the crowd and touched His cloak (outer garment). She did this despite her "uncleanness" and with a desire to avoid an embarrassing public disclosure of her malady.

5:28. She kept telling herself that if she could just touch His clothes, she would be healed and then she could slip away unobserved. Perhaps her faith was mixed with a popular notion that a healer had power in his clothing, or she may have known someone who had been healed in this way (cf. 3:10; 6:56).

5:29. When the woman touched Jesus' garment, immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) her bleeding stopped. She felt (lit., "knew," from ginōskō, "know experientially"; cf. 5:30) by a physical sensation in her body that she was freed (lit., "had been healed") from her suffering. The healing occurred without overt participation by Jesus.

5:30. Yet Jesus immediately (euthys) realized in Himself (from epiginōskō, "know fully"; cf. v. 29) that power had gone out from Him or, more literally, "power from Him (on account of who He is) had gone out."

This unusual expression has been understood in two ways. One view maintains that God the Father healed the woman and Jesus was not aware of it till afterward. The other view is that Jesus Himself, wishing to honor the woman's faith, willingly extended His healing power to her. The latter view is more consistent with Jesus' healing ministry. Power did not leave Him without His knowledge and will. However, He exercised it only at the Father's bidding (cf. 13:32). The touch of the garment had no magical effect.

Aware of how the miracle took place, Jesus turned around . . . and asked, Who touched My clothes? He wanted to establish a personal relationship with the healed person, untainted with quasi-magical notions.

5:31-32. Jesus' question seemed absurd to His disciples (the Twelve; cf. Luke 8:45) because the crowd was pressing (from synthlibō; cf. Mark 5:24) in and many people were touching Him. This emphasized Jesus' ability to distinguish the touch of one who in faith expected deliverance from the inadvertent touch of those crowding against Him. There was, and still is, a great difference between the two. So Jesus kept looking around (perieblepeto; "was looking penetratingly"; cf. 3:5, 34) at the people surrounding Him in order to see who had touched Him in this way.

5:33-34. Then the woman, the only one who understood Jesus' question, came in humility, and trembling with fear (from phobeomai, "to have awe, reverence"; cf. 4:41) because she knew what had happened to her, in courage and gratitude told Him everything.

The affectionate title, Daughter (its only recorded use by Jesus) signified her new relationship with Him (cf. 3:33-35). Jesus attributed her cure to her faith rather than the touch of His clothing. Her faith healed her (lit., "has saved or delivered you"; cf. 5:28; 10:52) in that it caused her to seek healing from Jesus. Faith, confident trust, derives its value not from the one who expresses it, but from the object in which it rests (cf. 10:52; 11:22).

Jesus said, Go in peace and be freed (lit., "be healthy") from your suffering (cf. 5:29). This assured her that her healing was complete and permanent. In her extremity of need—incurable illness and socio-religious isolation—she was a living "dead" person for 12 years. Her restoration to wholeness of life anticipated the dramatic raising of Jairus' daughter who died after living for 12 years.

c. The raising of Jairus' daughter to life (5:35-43)

5:35-36. The delay (cf. vv. 22-24) caused by the woman's healing (vv. 25-34) was a severe test of Jairus' faith. His fears that his little daughter would die before Jesus got there were confirmed by the report of some men (unidentified friends and relatives) from his house that she had died. They concluded that her death ended any hope that Jesus could help so they suggested that it was futile to bother (lit., "trouble") the Teacher (cf. 4:38) any further.

Jesus overheard the message but refused to accept its implications. This is the force of the verb translated ignoring (parakousas), which means "refuse to listen" (cf. Matt. 18:17). The present imperatives in Jesus' reassuring words to Jairus could be rendered: "Stop fearing (i.e., in unbelief); just keep on believing." He had already exercised faith in coming to Jesus, he had seen the relationship between faith and Jesus' power (Mark 5:25-34); now he was exhorted to believe that Jesus could restore his lifeless daughter.

5:37-40a. Including Jairus, Jesus let only three disciples—Peter, James, and John—accompany Him to the house as witnesses (cf. Deut. 17:6). These three disciples served as legal witnesses here in anticipation of Jesus' resurrection, then at His transfiguration (Mark 9:2), and in Gethsemane (14:33).

At the house the elaborate ritual of Jewish mourning had already begun. The commotion (thorybon, "an uproar") included the activity of hired mourners (cf. Jer. 9:17; Amos 5:16), weeping, and antiphonal wailing.

Jesus entered the house and rebuked the mourners because, He told them . . . the child was not dead but asleep. Did Jesus mean she was just in a coma? Friends and relatives (cf. Mark 5:35) as well as the professional mourners who laughed scornfully at His words, knew she was dead (cf. Luke 8:53). Was Jesus simply describing death as sleep, implying a state of "sleep" between death and resurrection? This is not supported elsewhere in the New Testament (cf. Luke 23:42-43; 2 Cor. 5:6-8; Phil. 1:23-24). Probably He was saying that in this case death was like sleep. From a mourner's point of view, the girl's death would turn out to be like "a sleep" from which she was awakened. Her condition was not final and irrevocable (cf. Luke 8:55; John 11:11-14).

5:40b-42. After He put . . . out all the mourners, Jesus took the girl's parents and the three disciples (cf. v. 37) with Him into her room. Then He took her . . . hand and spoke the Aramaic words, Talitha koum! This was a command, not a magical formula. Mark translated it for his Greek-speaking readers, Little girl . . . get up, adding the clause I say to you to emphasize Jesus' authority over death. Since Galileans were bilingual, Jesus spoke both Aramaic, His mother tongue—a Semitic language related to Hebrew—and Greek, the lingua franca of the Greco-Roman world. He likely also spoke Hebrew.

At Jesus' command, immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) the girl got up and began walking around for (gar), Mark explained, she was 12 years old. The parents and three disciples were completely astonished (from existēmi, lit., "out of their minds with great amazement"; cf. 2:12; 6:51).

5:43. Jesus then gave two orders. The first was a strict injunction to silence. Jesus did not want the miracle to attract people to Him for the wrong reasons (cf. comments on 1:43-45).

The second command, that the girl be given food, displayed His compassion and also confirmed that she was restored to good health. Her body had been resuscitated, returned to natural life, but was still subject to death, and needed to be sustained by food. This contrasts with a resurrected body (cf. 1 Cor. 15:35-57).

F. Conclusion: Jesus' rejection at Nazareth (6:1-6a) (Matt. 13:53-58)

6:1. From Capernaum Jesus went about 20 miles southwest to His hometown, Nazareth (cf. 1:9, 24), where He had lived and ministered previously (cf. Luke 4:16-30). He was accompanied by His disciples, returning as a Teacher (Rabbi) surrounded by His students. This was a public mission, and He was preparing His disciples by example for their own missions (cf. Mark 6:7-13).

6:2-3. On the Sabbath . . . He taught in the synagogue (cf. 1:21), probably expounding on the Law and the Prophets. Many . . . were amazed (exeplēssonto, "astounded, struck out, overwhelmed"; cf. 1:22; 7:37; 10:26; 11:18) at His teaching.

But some asked disparaging questions about the origin of (a) these things, His teaching, (b) the wisdom . . . given Him (lit., "to this One"), and (c) His power to do miracles elsewhere (cf. 6:5). Only two answers were possible: His source was God, or Satan (cf. 3:22).

Despite His impressive words and deeds, He was too ordinary for them. The derogatory question, Isn't this the carpenter? implied, "He is a common laborer like the rest of us." All His immediate family—mother, brothers, and sisters—were known to the townspeople, and they were ordinary people. The phrase Mary's Son was also derogatory since a man was not described as his mother's son in Jewish usage even if she was a widow, except by insult (cf. Jud. 11:1-2; John 8:41; 9:29). Their words, calculated insults, also suggested they knew there was something unusual about Jesus' birth.

His brothers and sisters (cf. Mark 3:31-35) were most likely children of Joseph and Mary born after Jesus' birth rather than Joseph's children by a previous marriage or Jesus' cousins. James became a leader in the early church at Jerusalem (cf. Acts 15:13-21), and authored the Epistle of James (James 1:1). Judas was probably Jude, author of the Epistle of Jude (Jude 1). Nothing more is known of Joses and Simon or His sisters. Perhaps Joseph was not mentioned because he was already dead.

Thus since the townspeople could not explain Jesus, they took offense (from skandalizomai, "to be caused to stumble, to be repelled"; cf. comments on Mark 14:27) at Him, finding no reason to believe He was God's Anointed One.

6:4. Jesus responded to their rejection with the proverb that a prophet is not appreciated at home. He was like an Old Testament prophet (cf. v. 15; 8:28) whose words were often rejected and who was dishonored most by those who knew Him best (cf. 6:17-29).

6:5-6a. Because of such persistent unbelief Jesus could not do any miracles there except to lay His hands on (cf. 5:23) a few sick people and heal them. There was no limitation on His power, but His purpose was to perform miracles in the presence of faith. Only a few here had faith to come to Him for healing.

Even Jesus was amazed (ethaumasen, "astonished"; cf. 5:20; 12:17; 15:5, 44) at their unbelief, their unwillingness to believe that His wisdom and power were from God. So far as is known, He never returned to Nazareth.

The people of Nazareth represent Israel's blindness. Their refusal to believe in Jesus pictured what the disciples would soon experience (cf. 6:7-13) and what Mark's readers (then and now) would experience in the advance of the gospel.

V. Jesus' Ministry in and beyond Galilee (6:6b–8:30)

The third major section of Mark's Gospel begins structurally like the first two sections (cf. 6:6b with 1:14-15 and 3:7-12; 6:7-34 with 1:16-20 and 3:13-19), but concludes with Peter's confession of Jesus as Messiah (8:27-30) instead of a statement of rejection (cf. 3:6; 6:1-6a). During this phase of His ministry Jesus directed more attention to His disciples. In the face of opposition, He revealed to them by both words and deeds who He really is. Much of this time was spent outside of Galilee.

A. Introductory summary: Jesus' teaching tour of Galilee (6:6b) (Matt. 9:35-38)

6:6b. This statement summarizes Jesus' third tour of Galilee (for the first, cf. 1:35-39; Mark did not mention the second, cf. Luke 8:1-3). Despite His rejection at Nazareth, Jesus was going around the neighboring villages teaching (cf. Mark 1:21). This set the stage for the Twelve's mission.

B. Jesus' sending forth of the Twelve and John the Baptist's death (6:7-31)

This section has a "sandwich" structure (cf. 3:20-35; 5:21-43). The narrative of the mission of the Twelve (6:7-13, 30-31) is divided by the account of John the Baptist's death (6:14-29). This indicates that the death of John the messenger did not silence his message. The forerunner's death prefigured Jesus' death. And Jesus' message would still be proclaimed by His followers.

1. THE MISSION OF THE TWELVE (6:7-13) (MATT. 10:1, 5-15; LUKE 9:1-6)

6:7. In order to extend His ministry on this Galilean tour, Jesus sent (from apostellō; cf. 3:14; 6:30) the Twelve out two by two, a common practice in that day for practical and legal reasons (cf. 11:1; 14:13; John 8:17; Deut. 17:6; 19:15).

The Twelve were His authorized representatives in keeping with the Jewish concept of šᵉlûḥîm, that is, a man's representative (šālîaḥ) was considered as the man himself (cf. Matt. 10:40 and TDNT, s.v. "apostolos," 1:413-27). They were to fulfill a special commission and bring back a report (cf. Mark 6:30); so Jesus' unusual instructions (vv. 8-11) pertained only to that particular mission.

He gave them authority (exousian; the "right" and the "power"; cf. 2:10; 3:15) over evil spirits. This power to exorcise demons (cf. 1:26) would authenticate their preaching (cf. 6:13; 1:15).

6:8-9. The urgency of their mission required that they travel lightly. They were to take a staff (rhabdon, "walking stick") and to wear sandals (ordinary footwear). But they were not to take bread (food), a bag (probably a traveler's bag for provisions, not a beggar's bag), money (small copper coins easily tucked in their cloth belts), or an extra tunic, additional inner garment used as a covering at night. They were to depend on God to provide food and shelter through the hospitality of Jewish households.

The two concessions of a staff and sandals are unique to Mark. Both are forbidden in Matthew 10:9-10, and the staff is forbidden in Luke 9:3. Matthew used ktaomai ("to procure, acquire"), instead of airō ("to take"); so the disciples were not to acquire additional staffs or sandals—but to use the ones they already had. Mark and Luke both use airō, "to take or carry along." But Luke says, "Take nothing for the journey—no staff (rhabdon)," presumably no additional staff; while Mark says, "Take nothing for the journey except (cf. Mark 6:5) a staff (rhabdon)," presumably the one already in use. Each writer stressed a different aspect of Jesus' instructions.

6:10-11. Whenever the disciples entered a house as invited guests, they were to stay there making it their base of operations until they left the town. They were not to impose on the hospitality of many people or accept more attractive offers once they were settled.

They should also expect rejection. If any place (a household, synagogue, village) would not offer hospitality or listen to their message, they were to leave there and to shake the dust off their feet. Devout Jews did this when they left Gentile (alien) territory to show that they were dissociating themselves from it. This would tell Jewish hearers they were acting like pagans in rejecting the disciples' message.

This was to be done as a testimony (cf. 1:44; 13:9) against the citizens. It warned them that the disciples' responsibility to them had been fulfilled and those who rejected the message would have to answer to God for themselves (cf. Acts 13:51; 18:6). No doubt it provoked serious thought and perhaps repentance by some. The KJV statement regarding Sodom and Gomorrah is not in the earliest Greek manuscripts of Mark's text (cf. Matt. 10:15).

6:12-13. In obedience the Twelve preached repentance (cf. 1:4, 14-15), drove out many demons (cf. 1:32-34, 39), and healed many sick people (cf. 3:10). As Jesus' representatives (cf. 6:7; 9:37) they learned that His power extended beyond His personal presence. Their mission showed the coming of God's kingdom (cf. 1:15).

Anointing the sick with oil is unique to Mark. This use of olive oil was both because of its medicinal properties (cf. Luke 10:34; James 5:14) and its symbolic value indicating that the disciples acted by Jesus' authority and power, not their own.

2. THE BEHEADING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST (6:14-29)

a. Popular explanations of Jesus' identity (6:14-16)

6:14-16. The miraculous activity of Jesus and the Twelve throughout Galilee caught the attention of Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great (see the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5). Herod Antipas was tetrarch (ruler of a fourth part of his father's kingdom) of Galilee and Perea under the aegis of Rome from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39 (cf. Matt. 14:1; Luke 3:19; 9:7). Officially he was not a king but Mark's use of the title probably reflected local custom in view of Herod's covetous ambitions.

Mark 6:14b-15 presents three opinions which attempt to account for Jesus' miraculous powers; He was (a) John the Baptist (cf. 1:4-9) risen from the dead, (b) Elijah (cf. Mal. 3:1; 4:5-6), or (c) a prophet, resuming the suspended line of Israel's prophets.

Despite other opinions Herod, troubled by a guilty conscience, remained convinced that Jesus was the man he had beheaded. Herod believed John the Baptist was risen from the dead and was using miraculous powers. Mark 6:17-29 explains verse 16 in a "flashback."

b. Flashback: the execution of John the Baptist (6:17-29)

Mark included this section not only to supplement 1:14 and further clarify 6:16, but also to provide a "passion narrative" of Jesus' forerunner that foreshadowed and paralleled Jesus' own suffering and death. Mark focused on what Herod and Herodias did to John. Perhaps he included so many details to draw a parallel to the Elijah-Jezebel conflict since Jesus later identified John as Elijah (9:11-13).

6:17-18. Mark explained (gar, for) that Herod himself had ordered John to be put in prison. According to Josephus, this prison was at the fortress-palace of Machaerus near the northeastern shore of the Dead Sea (The Antiquities of the Jews 18. 5. 2). Herod did this because of Herodias, an ambitious woman who was his second wife. Herod had first married a daughter of the Arabian king, Aretas IV. Then he became enamored with his half-niece Herodias (daughter of his half-brother, Aristobulus) who was married to Herod's half-brother (brother means half-brother) Philip (her half-uncle; cf. Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 18. 5. 1-2). They had a daughter, Salome. Herod divorced his wife in order to marry Herodias who had divorced Philip (not the Philip of Luke 3:1). John had repeatedly denounced this marriage as unlawful (cf. Lev. 18:16; 20:21).

6:19-20. John's bold rebuke infuriated Herodias who nursed a grudge against him (lit., "had it in for him"). Not satisfied with John's imprisonment, she wanted to kill him, but her plans were thwarted because Herod feared John (had a superstitious dread of him), whom he knew was a righteous and holy man. So he protected John from Herodias' murderous intentions by keeping him in prison—a shrewd compromise.

In spite of his immoral lifestyle, Herod was fascinated by John. He had a certain attraction for John's preaching, but it left him greatly puzzled. The words "greatly puzzled" (polla ēporei) have good manuscript support and are preferred on contextual grounds to the reading "he did many things" (polla epoiei; NIV marg.; KJV), a reading that may reflect an error of hearing by scribes who copied the text as it was read to them. Herod's conflict between his passion for Herodias and his respect for John showed his vacillating moral weakness.

6:21-23. Finally (cf. v. 19) Herodias found an opportunity to carry out a murderous scheme. The occasion was Herod's birthday . . . banquet, a luxurious celebration he gave for his high officials (in civil government), military commanders, and the leading men (prominent citizens) of Galilee. Herodias deliberately sent (implied by vv. 24-25) her daughter, Salome, into the banquet room to dance in a way that would win Herod's approval.

Salome was a young woman of marriageable age (korasion, "girl"; cf. Es. 2:2, 9; Mark 5:41-42), probably in her middle teens. Her skillful and provocative dance pleased Herod and his . . . guests, and led him to make her an ostentatious, rash offer as a reward. He arrogantly promised her anything she wanted and sealed it with an oath (cf. Es. 5:6) which included the words up to half my kingdom (cf. Es. 7:2). Actually Herod had no "kingdom" (realm) to give (cf. comments on Mark 6:14). He used a proverbial saying for generosity which Salome knew was not to be taken literally (cf. 1 Kings 13:8).

6:24-25. When Salome asked her mother what she should ask for, Herodias replied with premeditated promptness, The head of John the Baptist. She wanted proof that he was dead. At once (euthys; cf. 1:10) Salome hurried back to the king with her macabre request. She demanded that the deed be done right now (exautēs, "at once") before Herod could find a way to avoid it. She added the words on a platter, suggested perhaps by the festive occasion.

6:26-28. Salome's request deeply grieved (cf. 14:34) Herod. But because of his oaths (considered irrevocable) and to save face before his dinner guests (cf. 6:21) he did not have the courage to reject it. So he immediately (euthys) ordered the request to be fulfilled.

An executioner (spekoulatora, a Latin loanword, probably a bodyguard) beheaded John in the prison of the fortress, brought . . . his head on a platter to Salome in the banquet hall. She in turn gave it to Herodias (cf. 9:12-13). John had been silenced, but his message to Herod still stood.

6:29. When John's disciples (cf. Matt. 11:2-6) heard about his death, they came . . . took his body, and put it in a tomb.

3. THE RETURN OF THE TWELVE (6:30-31) (LUKE 9:10A)

6:30-31. The apostles (apostoloi, "delegates, messengers") returned to Jesus, probably at Capernaum by prearrangement, and reported to Him all they had done (they mentioned their "works" first) and taught ("words") in fulfilling their commission (cf. vv. 7-13). The designation "apostles" for the Twelve occurs only twice in Mark (cf. 3:14). It is used in a nontechnical sense to describe their function as "missionaries" (cf. 6:7-9; Acts 14:14) rather than to denote an official title (cf. Eph. 2:19-20).

Jesus directed them to come with Him for a brief, well-earned rest. This was necessary because so many people were coming and going that they had no time to eat (cf. Mark 3:20). They were to come by themselves (kat' idian; cf. 4:34) to a quiet (erēmon, "remote"; cf. 1:35, 45) place (cf. 6:32).

C. Jesus' self-disclosure to the Twelve in word and deed (6:32–8:26)

This section highlights a period in Jesus' ministry when He made several withdrawals from Galilee to minister elsewhere (cf. 6:31; 7:24, 31; 8:22). During this time He showed the Twelve and Mark's readers how He cares for His own.

1. THE FEEDING OF THE 5,000 (6:32-44) (MATT. 14:13-21; LUKE 9:10B-17; JOHN 6:1-14)

6:32-34. These verses are a transition from the successful mission of the Twelve to the resultant presence of a large crowd in a remote place. Two phrases in the fulfillment of Jesus' directive provide the connecting links: by themselves (kat' idian, Gr. idiom meaning "privately"), a phrase Mark used for Jesus' private instruction of individuals (cf. 4:34a; 6:31-32; 7:33; 9:2, 28; 13:3); and to a solitary (erēmon, "remote") place (cf. 1:3-4, 12-13, 35, 45; 6:31-32, 35). The place where they sailed, though unnamed by Mark, was near Bethsaida Julias, a city across the Jordan River on the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee (cf. Luke 9:10).

Many people anticipated their destination and arrived there on foot . . . ahead of them. Their planned rest was interrupted by people in need.

When Jesus . . . saw the large crowd, He felt compassion (not annoyance) toward them. This inner emotion moved Him to help them (cf., e.g., Mark 6:39-44). He viewed them as sheep without a shepherd, lost and helpless, without guidance, nourishment, or protection. In several Old Testament passages (Num. 27:17; 1 Kings 22:17; Ezek. 34:5, 23-25) the sheep/shepherd image is associated with the "wilderness" (erēmos; cf. Mark 6:31-32). This crowd, representing the nation of Israel, received compassion, extensive teaching concerning God's kingdom (cf. Luke 9:11), and the provision of their needs (Mark 6:35-44) from Jesus, the true Shepherd (cf. John 10:1-21).

6:35-38. These verses present a significant dialogue between Jesus and the Twelve after He had taught the crowd all day. Since it was late (after 3 P.M. Jewish time) and they were in a remote (erēmos; cf. vv. 31-32) place, the disciples asked Jesus to dismiss the people . . . so they could buy food in the surrounding . . . villages before sunset.

Unexpectedly, Jesus told them to feed the crowd. He emphasized the word you (hymeis). The disciples' caustic reply showed the inadequacy of their resources and the impossibility of meeting His demand. According to their calculations, to feed such a crowd would take, literally, 200 denarii (NIV marg.). The denarius, the basic Roman silver coin used in Palestine, was the average daily wage for a farm laborer. Consequently 200 denarii was roughly equivalent to eight months of a man's wages, a sum beyond the disciples' means.

Jesus insisted they find out what bread was available, probably back at the boat and also in the crowd. The disciples returned with the answer: a mere five loaves of bread and two fish (salted and dried or roasted).

6:39-44. Mark's vivid description of the miracle indicates an eyewitness report, perhaps Peter's.

To insure orderly distribution, Jesus commanded the disciples to have everyone sit down in groups on the green grass (suggesting springtime). The words "in groups" in verse 39 could be rendered "table company by table company" (symposia symposia, lit., "drinking or eating parties"). But the words "in groups" in verse 40 are literally, "garden plot by garden plot" (prasiai prasiai); they are used figuratively, picturing well-arranged plots of people, perhaps colorfully dressed, seated on the grass in groups of 100s and 50s. The command was a challenge to faith for both the disciples and the crowd.

Jesus, serving as Host, spoke the customary Jewish blessing over the five loaves (round wheat or barley cakes) and two fish (cf. Lev. 19:24; Deut. 8:10). The words gave thanks are from eulogeō (lit., "to praise, extol" [God], or "to bless"; cf. Mark 14:22). The object of the blessing in such a prayer was not the food, but God who gave it. Jesus looked up to heaven, regarded as where God is (cf. Matt. 23:22), in dependence on the Father for a miraculous provision of food.

Then He broke the loaves into pieces, divided the fish into portions, and gave (lit., "kept giving") them to His disciples to set before the people. How the miracle itself took place is not stated, but the imperfect tense of the verb "gave" indicates the bread multiplied in Jesus' hands (cf. Mark 8:6).

The provision was miraculous and abundant. Mark emphasized that all ate and were fully satisfied. This was confirmed by the fact that the disciples collected 12 basketfuls (kophinoi, small wicker baskets; contrast 8:8, 20) of leftovers, probably a basket for each disciple. The count of 5,000 men (andres, "males"), a very large crowd by local standards, did not include women and children (cf. Matt. 14:21), who were probably grouped separately for the meal according to Jewish custom.

The usual theme of astonishment at the close of a miracle story is not included here. This, plus subsequent comments in Mark 6:52 and 8:14-21 on this event, indicate that Mark regarded it as an important disclosure to Jesus' disciples of who He is. But they failed to understand its meaning (cf. 6:52).

2. JESUS' WALKING ON THE WATER (6:45-52)

6:45-46. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) after feeding the 5,000, Jesus made (lit., "compelled") His disciples return to their boat and set sail (lit., "go before [Him] to the other side") to Bethsaida ("house of fishing"). The verb "made" implies an unexplained urgency; but John 6:14-15 states that the people recognized Jesus as the promised future Prophet (cf. Mark 6:14-15) and were determined to make Him King, by force if necessary. Jesus sensed the potential danger of this "messianic enthusiasm" and its effect on the disciples, so He compelled them to embark while He dismissed the crowd.

There is a geographical difficulty about the location of "Bethsaida" (cf. 6:32; Luke 9:10; John 12:21). The simplest solution seems to be that Bethsaida Julias (east of the Jordan) spread across to the western side of the Jordan and was called "Bethsaida in Galilee" (cf. John 12:21; 1:44; Mark 1:21, 29), a fishing suburb of Capernaum (cf. John 6:17). The disciples sailed for this town from the northeastern shore of the Sea of Galilee but were blown off course southward, eventually landing at Gennesaret on the western shore (cf. Mark 6:53).

After dismissing the excited crowd, Jesus went up on a nearby hillside to pray (cf. comments on 1:35).

6:47. At evening (sunset till darkness) the disciples' boat was well out in the . . . lake (not the geographical middle) and Jesus was alone on land. When He was absent (or appeared to be), the disciples often experienced distress and demonstrated a lack of faith (cf. 4:35-41; 9:14-32).

6:48. Jesus continued praying well past midnight. Meanwhile the disciples had made little headway out on the lake because a strong north wind blew against them. In the dim light of early dawn, the fourth watch of the night (by Roman reckoning, 3 to 6 A.M.; cf. 13:35), Jesus saw them straining at the oars and went out to them, walking on the choppy water's surface. The words He was about to pass by them do not mean He was going "to bypass" them. He intended "to pass beside" them in the sense of an Old Testament theophany (cf. Ex. 33:19, 22; 1 Kings 19:11; Mark 6:50b) to reassure them.

6:49-50a. The disciples cried out (cf. 1:23) with terror at Jesus' appearance on the water. They thought He was a ghost (phantasma, a water phantom). Mark explained that they responded this way because they all saw Him (not a hallucination by a few) and were terrified.

6:50b-52. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) Jesus calmed their fears and spoke words of reassurance. Take courage! (tharseite) Don't be afraid (lit., "stop fearing") are familiar Old Testament words to people in distress (cf. the LXX of Isa. 41:10, 13-14; 43:1; 44:2). The first command occurs seven times in the New Testament, always on the lips of Jesus except for Mark 10:49 (cf. Matt. 9:2, 22; 14:27; Mark 6:50; John 16:33; Acts 23:11). The words It is I (lit., "I am," egō eimi) may simply convey self-identification ("It is I, Jesus"), but they are probably intended here to echo the Old Testament formula of God's self-revelation: "I am who I am" (cf. Ex. 3:14; Isa. 41:4; 43:10; 51:12; 52:6).

When Jesus joined the disciples in the boat . . . the wind died down (ekopasen, "stopped, rested"; cf. Mark 4:39), an additional demonstration of His mastery over nature (cf. 4:35-41).

The disciples were completely amazed (existanto, lit., "out of their minds"; cf. 2:12; 5:42) among themselves at this revelation of Jesus' presence and power. Mark alone explained (gar, for) they had not caught on to the meaning of the loaves miracle (cf. 6:35-44) as a pointer to His true identity. So they did not recognize Him when He walked on the water; they were spiritually imperceptive (cf. 3:5).

3. SUMMARY STATEMENT: JESUS' HEALING MINISTRY AT GENNESARET (6:53-56) (MATT. 14:34-36)

This summary statement marks the climax of Jesus' Galilean ministry just before His departure for the coastal region around Tyre and Sidon (cf. Mark 7:24).

6:53. Jesus and His disciples had crossed over the Sea of Galilee from the northeast to the west (cf. v. 45) and anchored (moored) at Gennesaret, a fertile, populous plain (two miles wide and four miles long), south of Capernaum on the northwestern shore of the lake. Rabbis called this plain "the Garden of God" and "a paradise." A small town there was also called Gennesaret.

6:54-56. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) people recognized Jesus. As He moved through the region, they carried the sick on mats to Him for healing. Everywhere He went . . . the sick were placed in marketplaces (open spaces). Several medicinal mineral springs in this area made it a resort for invalids.

They kept begging again and again (parekaloun; cf. 5:10, 23) to touch even the edge of His cloak as He passed by. The "edge" or "fringe" was a border of blue tassels worn by a loyal Jew on his outer cloak (cf. Num. 15:37-41; Deut. 22:12).

All who touched Him were healed (lit., "were being saved"; cf. Mark 5:28). These words iterate Mark's earlier reference to a personal faith relationship between Jesus and a sick person (cf. 3:7-10; 5:25-34). Healing was not effected by a touch but by the gracious action of Jesus who honored this means of expressing their faith in Him.

4. THE CONTROVERSY WITH THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS CONCERNING DEFILEMENT (7:1-23) (MATT. 15:1-20)

This passage returns to the theme of conflict between Jesus and the religious leaders (cf. Mark 2:1–3:6). It emphasizes the rejection Jesus encountered in Israel (cf. 3:6, 19-30; 6:1-6a) despite His public popularity (cf. 6:53-56). It serves as a fitting prelude for His ministry to Gentiles (7:24–8:10). The words "unclean" (7:2, 5, 15, 18, 20, 23) and "tradition" (vv. 3, 5, 8, 9, 13) bind the section together.

a. The charge by the religious leaders (7:1-5) (Matt. 15:1-2)

7:1-2. The Pharisees (cf. 2:16; 3:6) and some Law teachers (cf. 1:22) from Jerusalem (cf. 3:22-30) came to investigate Jesus and His followers again, presumably at Capernaum (cf. 7:17).

They critically observed some of Jesus' disciples eating food with "unclean" . . . hands. "Unclean" (koinais, "common"), as Mark explained for his Gentile readers, meant ceremonially unwashed. It was a technical term among Jews denoting whatever was contaminated according to their religious rituals and thus was unfit to be called holy or devoted to God.

7:3-4. These verses constitute an extended parenthesis in which Mark explained (gar; cf. 1:16), for the benefit of his Gentile readers who lived outside Palestine, the common Jewish practice of ceremonial washing.

The ritual washing regulations were observed by the Pharisees and all the Jews (a generalization depicting their custom) as part of the tradition of the elders which they followed scrupulously. These interpretations, designed to regulate every aspect of Jewish life, were considered as binding as the written Law and were passed on to each generation by faithful Law teachers (scribes). Later, in the third century A.D., the oral tradition was collected and codified in the Mishnah which, in turn, provided the foundation for and structure of the Talmud.

The most common ritual cleansing was the washing of one's hands with a handful of water, a formal practice required before eating food (cf. TDNT, s.v. "katharos," 3:418-24). This was especially important after a trip to the marketplace where a Jew would likely come in contact with an "unclean" Gentile or such things as money or utensils.

The comment that the Jews observed many other traditions, some of which Mark named, indicates that the issue under discussion involved the whole detailed question of ritual cleansing. For a loyal Jew, to disregard these regulations was a sin; to follow them was the essence of goodness and service to God.

7:5. The religious leaders directed their critical inquiry to Jesus who, as the disciples' Teacher, was held responsible for their conduct (cf. 2:18, 24). The Jewish leaders thought that the disciples' failure to observe ritual washing was a symptom of a deeper problem. Their concern was that the disciples, and Jesus, did not live according to the tradition of the elders (cf. 7:3).

b. Jesus' response and countercharge to His critics (7:6-13) (Matt. 15:3-9)

In reply Jesus made no reference to His disciples' conduct. Rather He addressed two issues underlying the inquiry: (a) the true source of religious authority—tradition or Scripture (Mark 7:6-13), and (b) the true nature of defilement—ceremonial and moral (vv. 14-23).

7:6-8. Jesus quoted Isaiah 29:13 (almost verbatim from the LXX) and applied Isaiah's description of his contemporaries to His questioners whom He called hypocrites (occurring only here in Mark).

They were "hypocrites" because they made an outward profession of worshiping God but gave Him no genuine worship from their hearts, the hidden centers of their thoughts and decisive choices (cf. Mark 7:21; 12:30). Their worship (a pious act) of God was in vain (matēn, "futile") because like the Jews of Isaiah's day they were teaching the rules of men as authoritative (divine) teachings.

Consequently Jesus charged them with abandoning the commands of God, His Law, and instead adhering to the traditions of men. He redefined their oral tradition (cf. 7:3, 5), emphasizing its human origin (cf. vv. 9, 13), and He straightforwardly rejected its authority.

7:9. Jesus restated His charge that the religious leaders were clever at sidestepping God's Law in order to observe their own traditions (cf. v. 8). He supported this verdict by citing a striking illustration (vv. 10-12) which exposed their sin.

7:10. Moses clearly set forth the divine command (cf. v. 13) regarding a person's duty toward his parents. He stated it positively (Ex. 20:12, LXX, the fifth commandment; cf. Deut. 5:16) and negatively (Ex. 21:17, LXX; cf. Lev. 20:9). Such responsibility included adequate financial support and practical care for their needs in their old age (cf. 1 Tim. 5:4, 8). A person who treated his parents with contempt would face the death penalty.

7:11-12. Jesus quoted a scribal tradition that sidestepped the divine command. The words, But you say, are emphatic, showing the contrast with Moses' words (v. 10). In their "tradition" it was possible for a person to declare all his possessions to be Corban and thereby absolve himself from the fifth commandment.

"Corban" is the Greek (and Eng.) transliteration of a Hebrew term used to refer to a gift devoted to God. It was a dedicatory formula pronounced over money and property donated to the temple and its service by an inviolable vow. Such gifts could only be used for religious purposes.

If a son declared that the resources needed to support his aging parents were "Corban" then, according to scribal tradition, he was exempt from this command of God, and his parents were legally excluded from any claim on him. The scribes emphasized that his vow was unalterable (cf. Num. 30) and held priority over his family responsibilities. So they no longer let him do anything for his parents.

7:13. By their tradition they nullified the Word of God. Nullify translates akyrountes, from akyroō, used in the papyri for annulling contracts. To sanction religious donations at the expense of violating God's command regarding one's duty to parents was to set human tradition above God's Word.

The "Corban" vow was only one example of many other things like it (e.g., restrictive Sabbath rules; cf. 2:23–3:5) where scribal tradition distorted and obscured the Old Testament.

c. Jesus' explanation of real defilement (7:14-23)

At this point Jesus gave a more direct reply to the defilement question (cf. Mark 7:5). He addressed the crowd first (vv. 14-15) and gave a general principle applicable to everyone. Then He explained the principle to His disciples privately (vv. 17-23).

7:14-16. Following a solemn call to attentive hearing and careful consideration by everyone (cf. 4:3), Jesus disclosed to the crowd the true source of defilement. Negatively, Nothing outside a man (generic, "person") by going into him can make him "unclean" (cf. 7:2). Jesus spoke in a moral not a medical sense. A person is not defiled morally by what he eats even if his hands are not ceremonially washed.

Positively What comes out of a man (person; cf. vv. 21-23) makes him "unclean." A person is defiled morally by what he thinks in his heart even though he may scrupulously observe outward purity rituals. So Jesus contradicted the Rabbinic view by stating that sin proceeds from within and not from without (cf. Jer. 17:9-10). He also demonstrated the true spiritual intent of the laws regarding clean and unclean food in the Mosaic Law (cf. Lev. 11; Deut. 14). A Jew who ate "unclean" food was defiled not by the food, but by His disobeying God's command.

7:17. After they left the crowd and entered the house (probably in Capernaum; cf. 2:1-2; 3:20), His disciples asked for an explanation of the parable given in 7:15. Their failure to understand Jesus' words and works is emphasized throughout 6:32–8:26 and is traced to their hardness of heart (cf. 6:52; 8:14-21).

7:18-19. Jesus' question, Are you so dull? is literally, "So then are you also without understanding?" It showed that they, like the crowd, did not comprehend His teaching despite the instruction He already gave them.

Jesus amplified the negative truth that nothing . . . from the outside of a person can defile him morally (cf. v. 15a). The reason is that food (or any other item) does not enter his heart, the control center of the human personality, and thereby affect his moral nature. Rather, it enters his stomach (a nonmoral agent).

The concluding sentence of verse 19 is an editorial comment by Mark (cf. 2:10, 28; 3:30; 13:14), to emphasize the significance of Jesus' statement for his Christian readers in Rome, some of whom may have been confused over Jewish food laws (cf. Rom. 14:14; Gal. 2:11-17; Col. 2:20-22). He simply pointed out that Jesus declared all foods "clean" for Christians. The early church was slow to grasp this truth (cf. Acts 10; 15).

7:20-23. Jesus repeated and amplified the positive truth that what comes out of a person is what defiles him morally (cf. v. 15b). This is confirmed by noting what things come from within, out of a person's heart (cf. v. 19).

The general term translated evil thoughts precedes the verb in the Greek text and is viewed as the root of various evils which follow. Evil thoughts generated in a heart unite with one's will to produce evil words and actions.

The catalog of evil Jesus gave has a strong Old Testament flavor and consists of 12 items. First, there are six plural nouns (in Gr.) depicting wicked acts viewed individually: sexual immorality (porneiai, "illicit sexual activities of various kinds"); theft (klopai); murder (phonoi); adultery (moicheiai, illicit sexual relations by a married person); greed (pleonexiai, "covetings"), insatiable cravings for what belongs to another; malice (ponēriai, "wickednesses"), the many ways evil thoughts express themselves.

Second, there are six singular nouns depicting evil dispositions: deceit (dolos), cunning maneuvers designed to ensnare someone for one's personal advantage; lewdness (aselgeia; cf. Rom. 13:13; Gal. 5:19; Eph. 4:19; 2 Peter 2:2, 7), unrestrained and unconcealed immoral behavior; envy (opthalmos ponēros, lit., "an evil eye," a Heb. expression for stinginess; cf. Prov. 23:6), a begrudging, jealous attitude toward the possessions of others; slander (blasphēmia), injurious or defaming speech against God or man; arrogance (hyperēphania, used only here in the NT), boastfully exalting oneself above others who are viewed with scornful contempt; and folly (aphrosynē), moral and spiritual insensitivity.

All these evils defile a person, and have their source from inside, from one's heart. So Jesus took the focus of attention away from external rituals and placed it on the need for God to cleanse one's evil heart (cf. Ps. 51).

5. THE CURE OF THE SYROPHOENICIAN WOMAN'S DAUGHTER (7:24-30) (MATT. 15:21-28)

This is the first of three events Mark recorded from Jesus' third excursion beyond the borders of Galilee (for the three excursions see Mark 4:35; 5:20; 6:32-52; 7:24–8:10). On this journey He actually went out of Palestine, apparently for the only time. These events in Gentile territory are an appropriate sequel to Jesus' teaching in verses 1-23 and a fitting preview of the proclamation of the gospel to the Gentile world (cf. 13:10; 14:9).

7:24. Jesus left that place, probably Capernaum and went to the vicinity of Tyre, a Mediterranean seaport city in Phoenicia (modern Lebanon) about 40 miles northwest of Capernaum. Because of excellent, early Greek manuscript support, the words "and Sidon" (cf. NIV marg.) should be included (cf. v. 31).

Jesus went there not to minister publicly to the people but to secure privacy, previously interrupted (cf. 6:32-34, 53-56), in order to instruct His disciples. That is why He did not want anyone to know He was there. But He could not conceal His presence since news of His healing power had preceded Him (cf. 3:8).

7:25-26. An unnamed woman, whose little daughter was demon-possessed (cf. 1:23; 5:2), came immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) and fell at His feet, an expression of deep respect as well as personal grief over her daughter's condition (cf. 9:17-18, 20-22, 26). She kept asking Jesus to drive the demon out of her daughter.

Mark stressed the woman's non-Jewish identity: she was a Greek, not from Greece, but a Gentile by culture and religion. She was a Syrophoenician born in Phoenicia, part of the province of Syria. Matthew called her a "Canaanite woman" (Matt. 15:22).

7:27. Jesus' reply was appropriate to His purpose for being there (cf. v. 24), and was on a level the Gentile woman could grasp. It was cast in figurative language: the children represented His disciples (cf. 9:35-37); the children's bread represented the benefits of His ministry to them; and the dogs (lit., "little dogs," house pets, not outdoor scavengers) represented the Gentiles (not in a derogatory sense here).

Jesus was telling the woman that His first priority in being there was to instruct His disciples. It is not appropriate to interrupt a family meal to give the dogs food from the table. So it was not appropriate for Him to interrupt His ministry to His disciples to give His services to her, a Gentile. But Jesus' reluctance to help stimulated her faith.

Other interpreters understand a broader theological meaning in Jesus' words: the children (unbelieving Israel) must be fed (Jesus' mission); their bread (special privileges including first claim on Jesus' ministry) must not be thrown to the dogs (Gentiles) because their time for feeding (worldwide proclamation of the gospel) had not yet come. Though this view is true theologically, it overplays Mark's point.

7:28. The woman accepted Jesus' statement with the words, Yes, Lord ("Sir," a title of respect). She realized He had the right to refuse her request. However, feeling no insult in the analogy He used, she pressed it a little further: Even the dogs under the table eat the children's crumbs.

Her point was that the dogs get some food at the same time as the children and thus do not have to wait. There need be no interruption in His instructing the disciples for all she humbly requested was a crumb, a small benefit of His grace for her desperate need.

7:29-30. Because of such a reply, which demonstrated her humility and faith, Jesus told her to go home (cf. 2:11; 5:34; 10:52), and assured her that the demon had left her daughter. The words

"has left" (perf. tense) indicate the cure was already complete.

When she returned home, she found that her child was resting peacefully and the demon was gone. This is the only miracle recorded in Mark that Jesus performed at a distance without giving any vocal command.

6. THE HEALING OF THE DEAF MAN WITH DEFECTIVE SPEECH (7:31-37)

This miracle is recorded only by Mark. It concludes a narrative cycle, 6:32–7:37, with the people's confession about Jesus (7:37). This event prefigured the opening of the disciples' "ears" (cf. 8:18, 27-30). A second narrative cycle begins in 8:1 and climaxes in the disciples' confession (8:27-30).

7:31-32. Jesus left . . . Tyre (cf. v. 24) and went north 20 miles through Sidon, a coastal city, and then turned southeastward, avoiding Galilee, to a place on the eastern side of the Sea of Galilee within the region of the Decapolis (cf. 5:20).

Some people there begged Jesus to place His hand (cf. 5:23) on a man who was deaf and could hardly talk (mogilalon, "speaking with difficulty"). This rare word occurs only here and in the Septuagint of Isaiah 35:6, a passage promising the coming of God's rule on earth. This promised intervention was already taking place in Jesus' ministry (cf. Mark 7:37; 1:15).

7:33-35. In healing this man, Jesus used sign language and symbolic acts (which Mark did not explain) that uniquely suited the man's needs and caused him to exercise faith. Jesus took him aside privately (cf. 6:32) in order to communicate one-to-one with him apart from the crowd. By touching his ears and tongue, spitting (on the ground) and looking up to heaven (to God; cf. 6:41), Jesus conveyed what He was going to do. His deep sigh may have reflected compassion for the man but it was likely Jesus' strong emotion as He battled the satanic powers that enslaved the suffering man.

Then Jesus gave the Aramaic command Ephphatha! meaning Be opened! (lit., "be completely opened") This word could easily be lip-read by a deaf person. This Aramaic word may indicate that the man was not a Gentile.

Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) at Jesus' command the man's ears were opened, his tongue was loosened, and he could speak clearly. Defective speech usually results from defective hearing, both physically and spiritually.

7:36. The more Jesus commanded (lit., "kept commanding") the people to be silent, the more they kept proclaiming the news (cf. 1:44-45; 5:20, 43). He wanted to minister in the Decapolis region without being regarded as a popular "Miracle-worker."

7:37. Jesus' miracle left the people overwhelmed with amazement (exeplēssonto; "struck out, overwhelmed"; cf. 1:22; 6:2; 10:26; 11:18) beyond all measure (hyperperissōs, a forceful adverb used only here in the NT).

The crowd's climactic confession is a general statement about their understanding of Jesus, based on previous reports (cf. 3:8; 5:20). The words the deaf and the dumb are plural in Greek, viewing them as two classes of people. Even should be rendered "both." Mark probably intended an allusion to Isaiah 35:3-6 in the crowd's confession.

7. THE FEEDING OF THE 4,000 (8:1-10) (MATT. 15:32-39)

In Mark 8:1-30 Mark presented a series of events that parallels his sequence in 6:32–7:37. Despite the replay of events and teaching, the disciples were still slow to "see and hear" who Jesus really is (cf. 8:18). In both narrative cycles the feeding of a multitude played an important role (cf. 6:52; 8:14-21).

8:1-3. During Jesus' ministry in the Decapolis region (cf. 7:31), another large crowd gathered (cf. 6:34), probably both Jews and Gentiles.

After listening to Jesus' teaching three days, they had nothing to eat. They were weakened by hunger so that if Jesus would send them home hungry, they would collapse on the way as some had come a long distance.

Jesus had compassion on them in their physical need (cf. 6:34) and called the disciples' attention to it (contrast 6:35-36). He took the initiative to feed the multitude who chose to forgo food in order to be nourished by His words.

8:4-5. The disciples' question highlighted their slowness in comprehending the significance of Jesus' presence with them in a new crisis. It also showed their inadequacy to meet the need; yet they indirectly referred the matter back to Jesus (contrast 6:37).

Jesus' question concerning the amount of bread available clearly indicated His intentions, and was an invitation for the disciples to use the resources they had—seven loaves. They also had "a few small fish" (cf. 8:7; Matt. 15:34).

8:6-7. The feeding of this crowd occurred much like the feeding of the 5,000 (cf. 6:39-42). The Greek participles translated taken and given thanks (eucharistēsas; cf. 14:23), and the verb broke are in the aorist tense, expressing decisive acts, whereas the verb gave is in the imperfect, showing that Jesus "kept on giving" the bread to His disciples for distribution (cf. 6:41). He did the same thing with a few small fish.

8:8-9a. In abrupt fashion Mark stressed the sufficiency of the miracle (all ate and were satisfied), the abundance of the provision (seven basketfuls of food remained), and the large size of the crowd (about 4,000 men besides women and children; cf. Matt. 15:38).

The baskets (spyridas) on this occasion differed from those used in feeding the 5,000 (kophinoi, Mark 6:43; cf. 8:19-20). They were rope or mat baskets sometimes large enough to carry a man (cf. Acts 9:25). Thus the 7 basketfuls (perhaps a basket for each loaf used) of Mark 8:8 likely held more than the 12 basketfuls of 6:43.

8:9b-10. Dismissing the crowd, Jesus immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) entered a boat with His disciples and crossed the Sea of Galilee to the region of Dalmanutha, a town (also called Magadan; cf. Matt. 15:39) near Tiberias on the lake's western side (cf. Mark 8:13, 22).

8. THE PHARISEES' DEMAND FOR A SIGN (8:11-13)

8:11. The religious authorities (cf. 3:22-30; 7:1-5) came and began to question (syzētein, "to dispute, debate") Him. They wished to test (from peirazō; cf. 1:13; 10:2; 12:15) Him, to get Him to prove the source of His authority (cf. 3:22-30; 11:30; Deut. 13:2-5; 18:18-22). They were seeking (from zēteō; cf. Mark 11:18; 12:12; 14:1, 11, 55) from Him a sign from heaven, one with divine authorization. In the Old Testament a "sign" was not so much a demonstration of power as an evidence that an utterance or action was authentic and trustworthy (cf. TDNT, S.V. "sēmeion," 7:210-6, 234-6). The Pharisees did not demand a spectacular miracle, but that Jesus give unmistakable proof that He and His mission were authorized by God. They believed quite the opposite (cf. 3:22).

8:12. Jesus sighed deeply (cf. 7:34) and asked a rhetorical question that reflected His distress at their obstinate unbelief. The words this generation denoted the nation of Israel represented by those religious leaders (cf. 8:38; 9:19; 13:30). They continually rejected God's gracious dealings with them (cf. Deut. 32:5-20; Ps. 95:10). Miraculous is not in the Greek text.

With a solemn introductory formula (I tell you the truth; cf. Mark 3:28) and a Hebrew idiom of strong denial (cf. Ps. 95:11; Heb. 3:11; 4:3, 5), Jesus rejected their demand: No sign will be given to "this generation." Matthew cited the only exception, "the sign of Jonah" (Matt. 16:4), that is, Jesus' resurrection (cf. Matt. 12:39-40).

In Mark, there is a distinction between a miracle (dynamis) and a sign (sēmeion). The former evidences God's presence and power in Jesus. An appeal for a miracle can be a legitimate expression of one's faith (e.g., Mark 5:23; 7:26, 32). But such an appeal is illegitimate if it arises out of unbelief, as was true of the Pharisees.

8:13. Jesus' indignation was evident by His abrupt departure. He crossed the Sea of Galilee to the northeastern shore once more. This ended His public ministry in Galilee.

9. THE DISCIPLES' FAILURE TO UNDERSTAND JESUS' WORDS AND DEEDS (8:14-21)

8:14. Their hasty departure (v. 13) probably accounts for the disciples' failure to bring bread. They had no food in the boat except for one loaf, a sufficient amount with Jesus on board (cf. 6:35-44).

8:15. With the encounter near Tiberias (vv. 11-13; the site of Herod's palace) still fresh in His mind, Jesus warned (lit., "kept giving orders to"; cf. 7:36) them to be continually on guard against the yeast of the Pharisees and that of Herod Antipas.

A small amount of yeast can affect a large amount of bread dough when they are mixed. Yeast was a common Jewish metaphor for an invisible, pervasive influence. It often, as here, connoted a corrupting influence. In this context the yeast referred to a gradual increase of unbelief. This lay behind the Pharisees' request for a sign even though their minds were already made up (cf. 8:11-12; 3:6). So it was with Herod (cf. 6:14-16; Luke 13:31-33; 23:8-9). As indicated by Jesus' question (Mark 8:12), this attitude had affected the whole nation of Israel, and He warned His disciples against it. In contrast, He called them to faith and understanding without signs (cf. vv. 17-21).

8:16. The disciples totally ignored Jesus' reference to the Pharisees and Herod. They heard "yeast" and assumed Jesus spoke of their bread shortage.

8:17-18. Jesus' rebuke is expressed in five penetrating questions that showed their persistent lack of spiritual understanding (cf. 4:13, 40; 6:52). Since He was aware of their discussion (cf. 8:16), His rebuke was not because of their failure to grasp the meaning of His warning (v. 15), but at their failure to understand the meaning of His presence with them. Their hearts were hardened (cf. 6:52). They had eyes but failed to see and ears but failed to hear (cf. Jer. 5:21; Ezek. 12:2). In this sense, they were no better than those "outside" (cf. Mark 4:11-12). They also had short memories.

8:19-20. The questions about the two miraculous feedings (cf. 6:35-44; 8:1-9) indicated that the disciples had failed to comprehend the meaning of what they had seen, and to discern who Jesus really is.

8:21. The climactic question, Do you still not understand? was more of an appeal than a rebuke. The emphasis on "understanding" (vv. 17-18, 21) expressed the goal of Jesus' words and works which had not yet been reached.

10. THE HEALING OF THE BLIND MAN AT BETHSAIDA (8:22-26)

This miracle and its structural parallel (7:31-37) are the only miracles recorded in Mark alone. It is the only recorded two-stage miracle which Jesus performed. Sight was a widely used metaphor for understanding. This miracle depicts the correct but incomplete understanding of the disciples.

8:22. When Jesus and the disciples arrived in Bethsaida Julias (cf. v. 13; 6:32), some people brought a blind man and begged Him to touch him with healing (cf. 5:23; 7:32).

8:23-24. Jesus led the man outside the village, probably to establish a one-to-one relationship with him (cf. 7:33) and to avoid publicity (8:26). In general Jesus' miracles were public events (cf. 1:23-28; 32-34; 3:1-12; 6:53-56; 9:14-27; 10:46-52). But there are three exceptions in Mark (5:35-43; 7:31-37; 8:22-26). The latter two may teach that a true understanding of Jesus comes through a personal relationship with Him apart from the crowd's opinions.

The touch of saliva and Jesus' hands (cf. 7:33) conveyed His intentions and stimulated the blind man's faith. At first the healing was only partial: He looked up (cf. 8:25) and saw people (lit., "the men," perhaps the Twelve) moving in a blur like trees walking around. Jesus' unusual question, Do you see anything? indicated that this was intentional on His part (not a weakness in the man's faith). It was a fitting follow-up to His rebuking the disciples (vv. 17-21). The man was no longer totally blind, but his sight was still poor. How like him were the disciples!

8:25. Then Jesus put His hands on the man's eyes again. He looked intently (from diablepō; v. 24 has a form of anablepō); his sight was restored, and he began to see (from emblepō) everything clearly. Now his sight was perfect. This was the outcome the disciples could anticipate despite difficulties in the process.

8:26. Apparently the man did not live in Bethsaida since Jesus sent him home with the admonition, Don't go into the village (i.e., "Don't go there first"). This is likely another instance of a command for silence in order to safeguard His planned activity (cf. 1:44-45; 5:43; 7:36).

D. Conclusion: Peter's confession that Jesus is the Christ (8:27-30) (Matt. 16:13-20; Luke 9:18-21)

At the center of his Gospel Mark placed Peter's confession that Jesus is the Messiah. Up to this point the underlying question had been, "Who is He?" After Peter's declaration on behalf of the Twelve, Mark's narrative is oriented toward the Cross and the Resurrection. From now on, the underlying double question was, "What kind of Messiah is He, and what does it mean to follow Him?" This crucial passage is the point to which the first half of the book leads and from which the second half proceeds.

8:27. Jesus took His disciples about 25 miles north of Bethsaida (cf. v. 22) to the villages around Caesarea Philippi, a city located at the source of the Jordan River on the southern slopes of Mount Hermon. It was in the tetrarchy of Herod Philip, who gave it his own name to distinguish it from the Caesarea on the Mediterranean coast.

On the way (en tē hodō; cf. 1:2; 9:33-34; 10:17, 32, 52) Jesus asked the disciples what people were saying about Him. Often Jesus' questions were springboards for new teaching (cf. 8:29; 9:33; 12:24-25).

8:28. Their response was the same as that given in 6:14-16: John the Baptist . . . Elijah . . . one of the prophets. All three responses were wrong, indicating that Jesus' identity and mission remained veiled from the people.

8:29. Then more directly and personally Jesus asked the disciples, Who do you say I am? The emphasis is on you, those He had chosen and trained. Peter, acting as the Twelve's spokesman (cf. 3:16; 9:5; 10:28; 11:21; 14:29), declared openly, You are the Christ, the Messiah, God's Anointed One (cf. 1:1).

Their open confession of Him at this point (cf. John 1:41, 51) was necessary because people in general were failing to discern His true identity, the religious leaders were strongly opposed to Him, and He was about to give the disciples additional revelation about Himself that would have costly implications for them. It was essential that the question of His identity be firmly settled. This affirmation of faith in Jesus was the anchor of their discipleship despite their temporary failures and defections (cf. Mark 14:50, 66-72).

Mark gave Peter's confession in its simplest, most direct form (cf. Matt. 16:16-19) to focus on Jesus' teaching on the nature of His messiahship (cf. Mark 8:31; 9:30-32; 10:32-34, 45).

8:30. Jesus sternly warned (lit., "ordered"; cf. 1:25; 3:12) them not to tell anyone He is the Messiah. People had thought up many false ideas about the concept of the "Messiah." The promised Davidic Messiah (cf. 2 Sam. 7:14-16; Isa. 55:3-5; Jer. 23:5) was commonly thought to be a political, nationalistic figure destined to free the Jews from Roman domination (cf. Mark 11:9-10). But Jesus' messianic mission was broader in scope and far different in nature. So He was reluctant to use this title (cf. 12:35-37; 14:61-62), and the disciples were not yet ready to proclaim the true meaning of His messiahship.

Jesus knew He is God's Anointed One (cf. 9:41; 14:62), so He accepted Peter's declaration as correct. However, because of the disciple's misunderstandings (cf. 8:32-33), He commanded silence (cf. 1:44) until He could explain that as Messiah it was necessary for Him to suffer and die in obedience to God's will (cf. 8:31).

VI. Jesus' Journey to Jerusalem (8:31–10:52)

The fourth major section of Mark's Gospel is set in the framework of His journey from Caesarea Philippi in the north, where Jesus was confessed as Messiah, to Jerusalem in the south, where He fulfilled His messianic mission (cf. 8:27; 9:30; 10:1, 17, 32; 11:1; also cf. 14:28; 16:7).

Jesus explained the nature of His messianic vocation and its implications for those who wish to follow Him. There is a balanced tension between His veiledness in suffering and His future revelation in glory. The structure of this section revolves around three Passion predictions: 8:31–9:29; 9:30–10:31; 10:32-52. Each unit includes a prediction (8:31; 9:30-31; 10:32-34); a reaction by the disciples (8:32-33; 9:32; 10:35-41); and one or more lessons in discipleship (8:34–9:29; 9:33–10:31; 10:42-52).

A. The first Passion prediction unit (8:31–9:29)

1. JESUS' FIRST PREDICTION OF HIS DEATH AND RESURRECTION (8:31)
(MATT. 16:21; LUKE 9:22)

8:31. After Peter declared that Jesus is the Messiah (v. 29), He . . . began to teach them what this meant. This marked a turning point to new content in His teaching.

Contrary to popular messianic expectations, Jesus had not come to establish an earthly messianic kingdom at that time. Instead He declared that the Son of Man must suffer many things (cf. Isa. 53:4, 11), be rejected by the Jewish authorities, be killed, and after three days ("on the third day"; cf. Matt. 16:21; Luke 9:22) rise again (Isa. 52:13; 53:10-12). This introduced to the disciples a new element in God's kingdom program for which they were not prepared (cf. Mark 8:32). "Must" (dei, "it is necessary") denotes compulsion. In this context it refers to the compulsion of God's will, the divine plan for Jesus' messianic mission (cf. 1:11). This prediction shows His submission to it (cf. 14:35-36).

Three groups—the elders (influential lay leaders), chief priests (Sadducees, cf. 12:18, including former high priests), teachers of the Law (scribes, mostly Pharisees)—constituted the Sanhedrin, the Jewish supreme court which met in Jerusalem (cf. 11:27; 14:53).

Though Peter identified Him as "the Christ" (8:29), Jesus did not discuss the title or the issue of His identity. Rather, He focused on His mission and used the designation "the Son of Man." This expression has appeared only twice before in Mark (cf. 2:10, 28). Both times Mark used it to show the significance of an event for his Christian readers. From now on it occurs more often but only when Jesus talked about Himself (cf. 8:31, 38; 9:9, 12, 31; 10:33, 45; 13:26; 14:21 [twice], 41, 62).

This title especially suited Jesus' total mission. It was free of political connotations, thus preventing false expectations. Yet it was sufficiently ambiguous (like a parable) to preserve the balance between concealment and disclosure in Jesus' life and mission (cf. 4:11-12). It combined the elements of suffering and glory in a way no other designation could. It served to define His unique role as Messiah.

2. PETER'S REBUKE AND JESUS' COUNTERREBUKE (8:32-33) (MATT. 16:22-23)

8:32-33. In contrast with previously veiled allusions (cf. 2:20), Jesus spoke plainly, in unambiguous terms, about the need for His death and resurrection.

Peter clearly understood Jesus' words (8:31), but could not reconcile his view of "Messiah" (v. 29b) with the suffering and death Jesus predicted. So Peter began to rebuke Him for this defeatist approach.

Peter's reaction, which the other disciples probably shared, was a satanic attempt similar to the wilderness temptation (cf. 1:12-13), to divert Jesus from the Cross. Jesus . . . rebuked (cf. 8:32) Peter for the benefit of them all. This was not a personal attack. The words, Out of My sight, are literally, "Go away behind (after) Me." This is probably not a command to Peter to take his proper place as a disciple (contrast 1:17; 8:34), for Jesus named Satan as the source of Peter's thoughts.

Peter was an unwitting spokesman for Satan because he was setting his mind (phroneō means "to have a mental disposition for"; cf. Col. 3:2) not on the things of God, His ways and purposes (cf. Isa. 55:8-9), but on the things of men, human values and viewpoints. The way of the Cross was God's will and Jesus refused to abandon it.

3. JESUS' TEACHING ON THE MEANING OF DISCIPLESHIP (8:34–9:1) (MATT. 16:24-28; LUKE 9:23-27)

A suffering Messiah had important implications for those who would follow Him. This section contains a series of short sayings concerning personal allegiance to Jesus (cf. Mark 9:43-50; 10:24-31). The main statement (8:34) is followed by four explanatory (gar, "for") clauses (vv. 35-38) and a concluding assurance (9:1). This instruction was part of the disciples' preparation for future ministry. It also provided encouragement for Mark's readers who were facing persecution in Rome.

8:34. Jesus summoned the crowd, interested onlookers (cf. 4:1, 10-12; 7:14-15), along with His disciples and addressed them both. His words, If anyone (not just the Twelve) would come after Me (cf. 1:17) indicated that Jesus was talking about their following Him as disciples (cf. 1:16-20). He then stated two requirements which, like repent and believe (cf. 1:15), are bound together.

Negatively, one must deny himself decisively ("deny" is an aorist imper.) saying no to selfish interests and earthly securities. Self-denial is not to deny one's personality, to die as a martyr, or to deny "things" (as in asceticism). Rather it is the denial of "self," turning away from the idolatry of self-centeredness and every attempt to orient one's life by the dictates of self-interest (cf. TDNT, s.v. "arneomai," 1:469-71). Self-denial, however, is only the negative side of the picture and is not done for its own sake alone.

Positively, one must take up his cross, decisively ("take up" is also an aorist imper.) saying yes to God's will and way. Cross-bearing was not an established Jewish metaphor. But the figure was appropriate in Roman-occupied Palestine. It brought to mind the sight of a condemned man who was forced to demonstrate his submission to Rome by carrying part of his cross through the city to his place of execution. Thus "to take up one's cross" was to demonstrate publicly one's submission/obedience to the authority against which he had previously rebelled.

Jesus' submission to God's will is the proper response to God's claims over self's claims. For Him it meant death on the cross. Those who follow Him must take up their (not His) cross, whatever comes to them in God's will as a follower of Jesus. This does not mean suffering as He did or being crucified as He was. Nor does it mean stoically bearing life's troubles. Rather, it is obedience to God's will as revealed in His Word, accepting the consequences without reservations for Jesus' sake and the gospel (cf. 8:35). For some this includes physical suffering and even death, as history has demonstrated (cf. 10:38-39).

In Jesus' words, Follow Me, "follow" is a present imperative: "(So) let him keep following Me" (cf. 1:17-18; 2:14; 10:21, 52b; cf. "daily" in Luke 9:23). Saying no to self and yes to God is to continue all through one's following Jesus (cf. Rom. 13:14; Phil. 3:7-11).

8:35. Verses 35-38 each begin with the explanatory Greek gar (for, trans. only once in the NIV). These verses explain Jesus' requirements in verse 34, focusing on entrance into discipleship, leaving one's old allegiance to this life (the crowd), and pledging allegiance to Jesus as a disciple.

Paradoxically a person who wants to save (from sōzō, "preserve") his life (psychēn, "soul, life") will lose it; he will not be saved to eternal life. But a person who loses (lit., "will lose") his life (psychē) for the sake of Jesus and the gospel (cf. 1:1) will save (from sōzō, "preserve") it; he will be saved to eternal life (cf. comments on 10:26-27; 13:13).

Jesus made a word play on the terms "lose" and "life" (psychē). The psychē on one hand is one's natural physical life but it also refers to one's true self, the essential person that transcends the earthly sphere (cf. 8:36; Matt. 10:28; TDNT, s.v. "psychē," 9:642-4). One who decides to maintain a self-centered life in this world by refusing Jesus' requirements (Mark 8:34) will ultimately lose his life to eternal ruin. Conversely a person who will "lose" (give over, "deny himself") his life (even literally, if necessary) in loyalty to Jesus and the gospel (cf. 10:29) by accepting His requirements (8:34) will actually preserve it forever. As a follower of Jesus, he is heir to eternal life forever with God (cf. 10:29-30; Rom. 8:16-17).

8:36-37. Jesus used penetrating rhetorical questions and economic terms to show the supreme value of eternal life and to reinforce the paradox of verse 35.

For (gar, confirming v. 35) what good (lit., "benefit, profit") is it for a man (generic, "person") to gain the whole world, all earthly pleasures and possessions, if this were possible, and yet forfeit (lit., "suffer the loss of") his soul (psychēn) not gaining eternal life with God? The expected answer: "It is no good!" (Cf. Ps. 49, esp. vv. 16-20.)

For (gar, confirming Mark 8:36) what can a man (generic, "person") give in exchange for his soul (psychēs), for eternal life with God? The answer: Nothing, because having "gained the world" he has in the end irrevocably lost eternal life with God, with nothing to compensate for it.

8:38. Structurally this verse parallels and complements verse 35 by carrying the thought to its ultimate consequence.

For (gar, confirming v. 35) a person who is ashamed of (denies) Jesus and His words (cf. 13:31) in this adulterous (spiritually unfaithful) and sinful genera- tion (genea; cf. 8:12; Matt. 12:39; Isa. 1:4; Hosea 1:2), the Son of Man (cf. comments on Mark 8:31) will also be ashamed of him when (lit., "whenever") He comes in His Father's glory (visibly invested with God's splendor), with the holy angels (cf. 13:26-27).

Clearly Jesus (cf. "Me, My") and the Son of Man are the same Person (cf. 14:41b-42, 62). The veiled reference to His future role as Judge was appropriate because of the crowd's presence.

To be "ashamed" of Jesus is to reject Him (cf. 8:34-35a) and to retain allegiance to "this generation" because of unbelief and fear of the world's contempt. In return, when Jesus comes in glory as the awesome Judge, He will refuse to claim those as His own (cf. Matt. 7:20-23; Luke 13:22-30), and they will experience shame (cf. Isa. 28:16; 45:20-25; Rom. 9:33; 10:11; 1 Peter 2:6, 8).

9:1. This verse is the positive side of 8:38 (cf. Matt. 10:32-33; Luke 12:8-9) and provides a reassuring conclusion to this section (Mark 8:34–9:1).

The words And He said to them (cf. 2:27) introduce an authoritative statement by Jesus. He predicted that some who stood there listening to Him would not (lit., "by no means," ou mē) taste death before (lit., "until") they saw a powerful display of God's kingdom. The words "taste death" are a Hebrew idiom for experiencing physical death, like a fatal poison that all must take sooner or later (cf. Heb. 2:9).

Several interpretations have been suggested for the meaning of the kingdom of God come with power: (a) Jesus' transfiguration, (b) Jesus' resurrection and Ascension, (c) the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4) and the spread of Christianity by the early church, (d) the destruction of Jerusalem by Rome in A.D. 70, and (e) the second coming of Jesus Christ.

The first of these is the most reasonable view in this context. The specific time reference in the following account of Jesus' transfiguration (Mark 9:2a) indicates that Mark understood a definite connection between Jesus' prediction (v. 1) and this event. Jesus' transfiguration was a striking preview and guarantee of His future coming in glory (cf. 2 Peter 1:16-19).

4. JESUS' TRANSFIGURATION (9:2-13) (MATT. 17:1-13; LUKE 9:28-36)

a. His glory displayed (9:2-8)

This event confirmed Peter's confession (8:29) and fulfilled Jesus' prediction (9:1). It also served as a prelude to Jesus' Passion (14:1–16:8). Despite His impending death (8:31-32), He assured them by this event that His return in glory (8:38b) was certain and that their commitment to Him was well-founded (8:34-37). Future glory would follow present suffering for Him and them.

9:2-4. The words, after six days link the transfiguration to Jesus' prediction in verse 1. The event occurred on the seventh day after the prediction—a day reminiscent of fulfillment and special revelation (cf. Ex. 24:15-16).

Matthew gave the same time sequence but Luke stated that the transfiguration occurred "about eight days" later (Luke 9:28). Luke's general reference reflects an alternate method of measuring time in which part of a day was counted as a whole day (see comments on Luke 9:28).

Jesus selected Peter, James, and John (cf. Mark 5:37; 14:33) and took them up a high mountain where they were all alone (kat' idian; cf. 4:34). The unnamed location was probably a southern ridge of Mount Hermon (ca. 9,200 feet) about 12 miles northeast of Caesarea Philippi (cf. 8:27; 9:30, 33). This is preferable to Mount Tabor in Galilee. The "high mountain" was an appropriate site in view of God's previous self-disclosure to Moses and Elijah on Mount Sinai (Horeb; cf. Ex. 24:12-18; 1 Kings 19:8-18).

Jesus was transfigured in the presence of the three disciples (cf. 2 Peter 1:16). "Transfigured" (metemorphōthē, cf. Eng. "metamorphosis") means "to be changed into another form," not merely a change in outward appearance (cf. Rom. 12:2; 2 Cor. 3:18). For a brief time Jesus' human body was transformed (glorified) and the disciples saw Him as He will be when He returns visibly in power and glory to establish His kingdom on earth (cf. Acts 15:14-18; 1 Cor. 15:20-28; Rev. 1:14-15; 19:15; 20:4-6). This was dramatically portrayed by the supra-earthly whiteness of His clothes—a comment unique to Mark, probably reflecting Peter's eyewitness report.

Two significant Old Testament men, Elijah and Moses, appeared miraculously and were conversing with Jesus (cf. Luke 9:31). Mark's mentioning Elijah first is likely due to his emphasis on Elijah in this context (cf. Mark 8:28; 9:11-13). Moses, in the role of Israel's deliverer and lawgiver, represented the Law. Elijah, defender of Yahweh worship and the future restorer of all things (Mal. 4:4-5), represented the Prophets. Both were prominent mediators of God's rule to the nation of Israel (cf. Ex. 3:6; 4:16; 7:1; Deut. 18:15-18; 1 Kings 19:13; Acts 7:35). Their presence attested Jesus' role as the Messiah.

9:5-6. Peter's impulsive response, using the Hebrew title Rabbi (cf. 11:21; 14:45; also cf. "Teacher" in 4:38; 9:17; 10:35; 13:1), indicates that he did not understand this event. He said it was good for them to be there, implying that he wished to prolong the glorious experience. His idea that they build three shelters (tents of meeting, booths; cf. Lev. 23:33-43), one each for Jesus, Moses, and Elijah, confirms this and may imply that he viewed all three as being equal in importance. Thinking the kingdom had come, Peter felt it appropriate to build booths for the Feast of Tabernacles (Zech. 14:16). Unwittingly or not, Peter (cf. Mark 8:32) was again resisting the suffering which Jesus had said would precede the glory.

Mark's explanatory (gar, "for") comment is set off as a parenthesis. It shows that Peter, as spokesman, responded inappropriately because (gar) they were so frightened (ekphoboi, "terrified," a strong adjective used only here and in Heb. 12:21 where it is trans. "fear"; cf. the verb phobeomai, "be afraid," in Mark 4:41; 16:8) by this dazzling display of supernatural glory.

9:7-8. God the Father's response to Peter's suggestion set forth the true meaning of this event. The cloud that enveloped them (Jesus, Moses, Elijah) signified God's awesome presence (cf. Ex. 16:10; 19:9) and from it came His commanding voice. Once again, as at Jesus' baptism, the Father placed His unqualified endorsement on His beloved Son (cf. comments on Mark 1:11). Jesus' sonship sets Him above all other men including Moses and Elijah.

Listen to Him (pres. imper.), actually means, "Be obedient to Him." This reflects the prophecy of Deuteronomy 18:15 (cf. Deut. 18:19, 22 also) and serves to identify Jesus as the new and final Mediator of God's rule in its present and future form (cf. Ps. 2:4-7; 2 Peter 1:16-19). Jesus succeeded Moses and Elijah, who suddenly disappeared leaving no one except Jesus. Their work was done and they were superseded. Jesus, not Moses or Elijah, is now God's authorized Ruler and Spokesman.

b. His command to silence (9:9-10)

9:9. On their descent from the mountain Jesus told the three disciples to keep silent about what they had seen till after His resurrection. Their misunderstanding of His messianic mission (8:29-33) was still evident at the transfiguration (cf. 9:5-6, 10; and comments on 8:30).

This was Jesus' last command to silence recorded by Mark and the only one on which He set a time limit. This implied that a time of proclamation (cf. 13:10; 14:9) would follow this period of silence. Only from the perspective of the Resurrection would they understand the transfiguration and thus be able to proclaim its meaning correctly.

9:10. The three disciples were perplexed by Jesus' command. They kept discussing among themselves . . . what "rising from the dead" meant. They believed in a future resurrection, but were puzzled by the unexpected announcement of Jesus' death and resurrection.

c. His declaration about Elijah (9:11-13)

9:11. The presence of Elijah at the transfiguration (v. 4), the confirmation of Jesus as Messiah (8:29; 9:7), and His reference to the Resurrection (v. 9) suggested that the end of all things was near. If so, where was Elijah who must come first to prepare the nation spiritually for the Messiah's coming? (cf. Mal. 3:1-4; 4:5-6) Perhaps the disciples thought Elijah's work of renewal would mean the Messiah would not need to suffer.

9:12-13. In reply, Jesus made two things clear. First, He acknowledged on the one hand that Elijah does come (lit., "is coming") first (before the Messiah) and restores ("is going to restore") all things through spiritual renewal (Mal. 4:5-6). On the other hand this does not remove the necessity for the Son of Man to suffer much and be rejected (cf. Ps. 22; Isa. 53, esp. v. 3).

Second, however (but in Gr. is a strong adversative), Jesus declared that indeed Elijah has come already. In a veiled way Mark recorded how Jesus identified John the Baptist as the one who fulfilled at Jesus' First Advent the role function expected of the end-time Elijah (cf. Mark 1:2-8; Matt. 17:13; Luke 1:17). Jesus gave John his true significance which John did not even recognize about himself (cf. John 1:21; comments on Matt. 11:14).

The expression, They have done to him everything they wished, denotes the ruthless, arbitrary suffering and death John experienced at the hands of Herod Antipas and Herodias (cf. Mark 6:14-29). In like manner Elijah suffered persecution at the hands of Ahab and Jezebel (cf. 1 Kings 19:1-3, 10). What these antagonists did to Elijah and John, people hostile to God would do to Jesus.

John the Baptist fulfilled the Elijah prophecy (Mal. 4:5-6) typically at Christ's First Advent. Yet Malachi's prophecy (Mal. 4:5-6) indicates that Elijah himself will also appear just before Christ's Second Advent (cf. Rev. 11).

5. THE CURE OF A DEMON-POSSESSED BOY (9:14-29)

This episode of desperate human need and the disciples' failure contrasts sharply with the glory of the transfiguration. It shows the reality of living in the world in the absence of Jesus.

The disciples from whom help could be expected (cf. Mark 6:7) were powerless. Mark 9:28-29 provides the key to understanding this incident. In Jesus' absence they must live and work by faith in God, expressed through prayer. The extended account (in contrast with Matt. and Luke) and the vivid details once again suggest the input of Peter's eyewitness report.

9:14-15. When Jesus and the three disciples (cf. v. 2) returned to the other nine disciples, they saw a large crowd gathered around the nine and Law teachers arguing with them. The subject of the dispute is not stated.

As soon as (euthys; cf. 1:10) the crowd saw Jesus they became greatly amazed (exethambēthēsan, "alarmed"; cf. 14:33; 16:5-6) and ran to greet Him. Their astonishment was not due to some afterglow from the transfiguration (cf. 9:9) but to the unexpected yet opportune presence of Jesus in their midst.

9:16-18. Jesus asked the nine what the argument was about. A man in the crowd, the father of the demon-possessed boy, explained the situation to Jesus. Respectfully addressing Jesus as Teacher (cf. v. 5), the father said he had brought his son to Jesus for healing because the boy was possessed by a spirit (cf. comments on 1:23-24) who deprived him of his power of speech (and hearing; cf. 9:25). Also the demon often convulsed him with violent seizures symptomatic of epilepsy. The demon's attempts to destroy the lad (cf. vv. 18, 21-22, 26) show again the purpose of demon possession (cf. comments on 5:1-5).

The father's appeal to the disciples to exorcise the demon was legitimate because Jesus had given them authority over evil spirits (cf. 6:7).

9:19. Jesus addressed the crowd but especially His disciples with deep emotion (cf. 3:5; 8:12). O unbelieving generation emphasizes the characteristic cause of all spiritual failure—lack of faith in God (cf. 9:23; 10:27). The rhetorical questions further reflect Jesus' continued distress over His disciples' spiritual dullness (cf. 4:40; 6:50-52; 8:17-21). Yet He intended to act with power where they had failed, so He commanded, Bring the boy to Me.

9:20-24. When the demonic spirit saw Jesus, he immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) threw the lad into a violent seizure, reducing him to utter helplessness (cf. 9:18).

In reply to Jesus' compassionate inquiry, the father said his son had experienced such pathetic and near-fatal convulsions from childhood. The lad's condition was long-standing and critical. The words, If You can do anything, indicate that the disciples' inability to expel the demon (v. 18) had shaken the father's faith in Jesus' ability.

Jesus took up the father's words of doubt, If You can, to show that the point was not His ability to heal the boy but the father's ability to trust in God who can do what is humanly impossible (cf. 10:27). Jesus then challenged the father not to doubt: Everything is possible for him who believes (cf. 9:29). Faith sets no limits on God's power and submits itself to His will (cf. 14:35-36; 1 John 5:14-15).

The father's response was immediate (euthys). He declared his faith (I do believe), but also acknowledged its weakness: Help me overcome my unbelief! This brings out an essential element of Christian faith—it is possible only with the help of the One who is its Object.

9:25-27. When Jesus saw that a curious crowd was converging on the scene (apparently He had withdrawn briefly), He rebuked ("ordered"; cf. 1:25) the evil (lit., "unclean"; cf. 1:23, 34) spirit with two commands: come out . . . and never enter him again.

With a final burst of violence on his victim and a scream of rage (cf. 1:26), the demon fled. The boy lay limp in utter exhaustion looking like a corpse so that many concluded, He's dead. But Jesus . . . lifted him . . . up. Mark's parallel wording in the account of the raising of Jairus' daughter (cf. 5:39-42) suggests that breaking from Satan's power is like passing from death to life. To accomplish this in a final, irreversible sense necessitated the death and resurrection of Jesus Himself.

9:28-29. These verses conclude this incident and explain why the disciples failed. After going indoors (lit., "into the house"; cf. 7:17; the location is unnamed) the disciples asked Jesus privately (kat' idian; cf. 4:34) why they could not expel the demon.

Jesus explained, This kind—probably demonic spirits in general rather than a special type of demon—can come out only (lit., "is not able to come out by anything except . . .") by prayer. The disciples had failed because they had not prayerfully depended on God's power. Apparently they had trusted in past successes (cf. 6:7, 13) and had failed.

Nearly all major ancient Greek manuscripts have "prayer and fasting" at the end of 9:29 (NIV marg.). Perhaps the words were added early by some scribes to the textual tradition to support asceticism. But the words, if original, refer to a practical means of focusing one's attention more fully on God for a specific purpose, for a limited period of time.

B. The second Passion prediction unit (9:30–10:31)

1. JESUS' SECOND PREDICTION OF HIS DEATH AND RESURRECTION (9:30-31) (MATT. 17:22-23A; LUKE 9:43B-44)

9:30-31. Jesus and His disciples left that place (cf. vv. 14, 28, probably near Caesarea Philippi) and were passing through northeastern Galilee (cf. 1:9), heading toward Capernaum (9:33). This was the first leg of their final journey southward to Jerusalem. Jesus wanted to keep their presence from becoming known because His public ministry in Galilee had ended and now He wished to prepare His disciples for the future.

His coming death was a constant theme of His teaching on this journey. He said that He, the Son of Man (cf. 8:31) would be betrayed to both Jews and Gentiles. "Betrayed" (paradidotai) means "deliver up" or "hand over." It was used both of Judas' betrayal of Jesus (3:19; 14:41; Luke 24:7) and of God's delivering up Jesus to death for the redemption of sinners (Isa. 53:6, 12; Acts 2:23; Rom. 8:32). The latter idea is probably intended here, suggesting that the implied Agent of the passive verb is God, not Judas.

2. THE DISCIPLES' LACK OF UNDERSTANDING (9:32) (MATT. 17:23B; LUKE 9:45)

9:32. The disciples failed to understand what Jesus meant (cf. v. 10) and were afraid to inquire further. Perhaps this was because they remembered Jesus' rebuke of Peter (8:33) or, more likely, because His words had a devastating effect on their hopes for a reigning Messiah.

3. JESUS' LESSONS ON THE MEANING OF DISCIPLESHIP (9:33–10:31)

This section has two geographical settings. First, Jesus taught His disciples in a house in Capernaum, Galilee (9:33-50). Second, Jesus resumed a public as well as a private teaching ministry in Judea and Perea (10:1-31).

a. The essence of true greatness (9:33-37) (Matt. 18:1-5; Luke 9:46-48)

9:33-34. Jesus and His disciples came to Capernaum for the last time after an absence of several months (cf. 8:13, 22, 27). When they were in the house (cf. 2:1-2; 3:20; 7:17) Jesus candidly asked them what they were . . . arguing about on the road (en tē hodō, "on the way"; cf. comments on 1:2). Once again His pointed question opened the way for additional teaching (cf. 8:27, 29).

The disciples were ashamed to admit they had argued about who was the greatest among them. Matters of rank were important to the Jews (cf. Luke 14:7-11) so it was natural for the disciples to be concerned about their status in the coming messianic kingdom. Perhaps the privileges given to Peter, James, and John (cf. Mark 5:37; 9:2) fueled the argument. Whatever its cause, it showed that the Twelve did not understand or accept what Jesus' Passion prediction (cf. v. 31) meant for them.

9:35. After sitting down, the recognized position of a Jewish teacher (cf. Matt. 5:1; 13:1), Jesus summoned the Twelve. He taught them the essence of true greatness: If anyone wants (cf. Mark 8:34) to be first, to have the highest position among the "great" in God's kingdom, he must be the very last (lit., "he shall be last of all," by deliberate, voluntary choice) and the servant of all. Here "servant" (diakonos) depicts one who attends to the needs of others freely, not one in a servile position (as a doulos, a slave). Jesus did not condemn the desire to improve one's position in life but He did teach that greatness in His kingdom was not determined by status but by service (cf. 10:43-45).

9:36-37. To illustrate servanthood Jesus set a little child from the home (cf. v. 33, perhaps Peter's child) among the disciples. To be a "servant of all" included giving attention to a child, the least (cf. "the very last," v. 35) significant person in Jewish as well as Greco-Roman society which idealized the mature adult (cf. TDNT, s.v. "pais," 5:639-52).

Jesus took the child in His arms (cf. 10:13-16). To welcome, that is, to serve or show kindness to (cf. 6:11; Luke 9:53) one of these little children, who represented the lowliest disciple (cf. Mark 9:42), in Jesus' name (on His behalf) is equivalent to welcoming Jesus Himself (cf. Matt. 25:40 and comments on Mark 6:7). But to do this was not to welcome Jesus only but also the heavenly Father who sent Him to earth (cf. John 3:17; 8:42). This gives dignity to the task of serving others.

b. The rebuke of a sectarian attitude (9:38-42)

9:38. Jesus' words (v. 37) prompted John (cf. 3:17; 5:37; 9:2), addressing Him as Teacher (cf. 4:38; 9:5), to report an attempt by the disciples to stop an anonymous exorcist from driving out demons in Jesus' name (cf. comments on 1:23-28; 5:6-7). They did this because he was not one of them; he was a disciple but not one of the Twelve commissioned by Jesus to do this work (cf. 6:7, 12-13). It was not the man's misuse of Jesus' name (as in Acts 19:13-16) that troubled them but rather his unauthorized use of the name. Furthermore, he was successful (in contrast with the nine; Mark 9:14-18). This incident revealed the Twelve's narrow exclusivism.

9:39-40. Jesus told them to stop hindering this exorcist because no one performs a miracle (dynamin, a mighty "deed") in His name and then immediately turns around and publicly speaks evil of Him.

Jesus' acceptance of this man was reinforced by the maxim, Whoever is not against us is for us (cf. the reverse of this in Matt. 12:30). "Against us" and "for us" leave no room for neutrality. If one is working for Jesus, in His name (cf. Mark 9:38), he cannot work against Him at the same time.

Though this man did not follow Jesus in exactly the same way as the Twelve, he nevertheless followed Him truly and stood against Satan.

9:41. With a solemn affirmation (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) Jesus broadened His words (in 9:39-40) to include activity besides exorcism. Even one who performs the smallest act of hospitality in Jesus' name (cf. v. 37), such as giving a cup of water to someone because he belongs to Christ will certainly not (ou mē, emphatic negation) lose his reward. He will ultimately be recompensed by participation in God's kingdom (cf. v. 47; 10:29-30; Matt. 25:34-40), not on the basis of merit (a good deed) but because of God's gracious promise to people of faith (cf. Luke 12:31-32). Jesus' use of the title "Christ" instead of "Son of Man" is rare in the Synoptic Gospels.

9:42. This verse concludes the thought in verses 35-41 and sets the stage for verses 43-50. Jesus sternly warned anyone who would deliberately turn somebody away from believing in Him. The punishment for such an offense was so severe that it would be better for him to be drowned in the sea before he could cause one of these little ones who believe in Jesus (i.e., lowly disciples, including children, who are immature in faith; cf. vv. 37, 41) to sin.

The verb "cause to sin" (skandalisē; cf. v. 43) must be understood from a future judgment viewpoint (cf. vv. 43-48). It refers to enticing or provoking a disciple to turn away from Jesus, resulting in serious spiritual damage. The undeveloped faith of the exorcist (v. 38) or anyone else who acts in Jesus' name (v. 41) should be encouraged rather than ruined by harsh criticism or sectarian bias.

The large millstone (mylos onikos, lit., "donkey millstone") was a heavy, flat stone turned by a donkey when it was grinding grain; this differed from the small hand mill (mylos) used by women (Matt. 24:41). Punishment by drowning someone this way was no doubt familiar to Jesus' disciples (cf. Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 14. 15. 10).

c. The snare of sin and the radical demands of discipleship (9:43-50) (Matt. 18:7-9) 9:43-48. These strong words warn disciples about the danger of letting themselves be led astray. Jesus reinforced the demands of discipleship (cf. 8:34-38; 10:24-31) in hyperboles (cf. TDNT, s.v. "melos," 4:559-61).

If (ean, "whenever," indicating a real possibility) the activity of your hand, an instrument of inward inclinations (cf. 7:20-23), causes you to sin (skandalisē, "should entice you to fall away"; cf. 9:42) then cut it off. Jesus meant a disciple should take prompt, decisive action against whatever would draw him away from his allegiance to Him. The same is true of the foot and the eye, for temptations come through various means. Whatever tempts a disciple to cling to this world's life must be removed much as a surgeon amputates a gangrenous limb.

It is better to be a disciple and to enter eternal life (cf. 10:17, 30) in God's future kingdom (9:47), and to do so maimed, minus earthly possessions that have been renounced, than to be an unbeliever. An unbeliever retains his allegiance to this world, refuses eternal life with God on His terms, and so will be thrown into hell (geennan; vv. 45, 47).

The Greek word geenna ("Gehenna," trans. "hell") is transliterated from two Hebrew words meaning "Valley of Hinnom," a place south of Jerusalem where children were once sacrificed to the pagan god Molech (2 Chron. 28:3; 33:6; Jer. 7:31; 19:5-6; 32:35). Later, during the reforms of Josiah (2 Kings 23:10) the site became Jerusalem's refuse dump where fires burned continually to consume regular deposits of worm-infested garbage. In Jewish thought the imagery of fire and worms vividly portrayed the place of future eternal punishment for the wicked (cf. the apocryphal Judith 16:17 and Ecclesiasticus 7:17). Jesus used the word geenna in 11 of its 12 New Testament occurrences (the one exception is James 3:6).

Where the fire never goes out is probably Mark's explanation of Gehenna for his Roman readers. The worm (internal torment) and the unquenchable fire (external torment) (quoted from the LXX of Isa. 66:24) vividly portray the unending, conscious punishment that awaits all who refuse God's salvation. The essence of hell is unending torment and eternal exclusion from His presence.

9:49. This enigmatic statement, unique to Mark, is difficult to interpret. About 15 possible explanations have been suggested.

An explanatory "for" (gar, not trans. in the NIV) and the word "fire" link this verse to verses 43-48. Everyone may be explained in one of three ways: (1) It could refer to every unbeliever who enters hell. They will be salted with fire in the sense that as salt preserves food so they will be preserved throughout an eternity of fiery judgment. (2) "Everyone" could refer to every disciple living in this hostile world. They will be "salted with fire" in the sense that Old Testament sacrifices were seasoned with salt (Lev. 2:13; Ezek. 43:24). Disciples, living sacrifices (cf. Rom. 12:1), will be seasoned with purifying fiery trials (cf. Prov. 27:21; Isa. 48:10; 1 Peter 1:7; 4:12). The trials will purge out what is contrary to God's will and preserve what is consistent with it. (3) "Everyone" could refer to every person in general. All will be "salted with fire" in a time and manner appropriate to their relationship with Jesus—for nonbelievers, the preserving fire of final judgment; for disciples, the refining fire of present trials and suffering. This last view seems preferable.

9:50. "Salt" links this verse to verse 49. Salt is good, useful. Salt as a condiment and a preservative was common in the ancient world. It was a necessity of life in Palestine, so it had commercial value.

The main source of salt in Palestine was from the area southwest of the Dead (Salt) Sea. The coarse, impure salt from the saline deposits of this area was susceptible to deterioration, leaving savorless saltlike crystals as residue. If (ean, "whenever"; cf. v. 43) it loses its saltiness, its savory quality, it cannot be regained so such salt is worthless.

Have salt in yourselves (pres. imper.) points to the disciples' need to "have salt" which is good (not worthless) within themselves continually. Here "salt" depicts what distinguishes a disciple from a nondisciple (cf. Matt. 5:13; Luke 14:34). A disciple is to maintain his allegiance to Jesus at all costs and to purge out destructive influences (cf. Mark (9:43-48).

The second command, Be at peace (pres. imper.) with each other is based on the first command and rounds out the discussion provoked by the disciples' strife (vv. 33-34). In essence Jesus said, "Be loyal to Me and then you will be able to maintain peace with one another instead of arguing about status" (cf. Rom. 12:16a; 14:19).

d. The permanence of marriage (10:1-12) (Matt. 19:1-12; Luke 16:18)

10:1. On Jesus' final journey to Jerusalem, He left that place, Capernaum in Galilee (cf. 9:33), and went into . . . Judea west of the Jordan River and then across the Jordan into Perea on the east side.

Because of His popularity in these areas (cf. 3:8) He drew crowds of people around Him again and as was His custom (cf. 1:21-22; 2:13; 4:1-2; 6:2, 6b, 34; 11:17; 12:35) He taught them again. The second "again," left untranslated in the NIV, was included for emphasis. Thus He resumed His public ministry (cf. 9:30-31).

Though Jesus' later Judean and Perean ministries covered a span of about six months, Mark recorded only some of the closing events which probably occurred in Perea (cf. 10:2-52 with Luke 18:15–19:27).

10:2. A group of Pharisees questioned Jesus about divorce in order to test (from peirazō; cf. 8:11; 12:15b) Him. They wanted Him to give a self-incriminating answer that would arouse opposition against Him. Perhaps He would contradict Deuteronomy 24:1-4 (cf. Mark 10:4). All Pharisees agreed that this Old Testament passage permitted divorce, that only the husband could initiate it, and that divorce implied the right to remarry. But they disagreed on the grounds of divorce. The strict view of Rabbi Shammai allowed divorce only if a wife were guilty of immorality; the lenient view of Rabbi Hillel allowed a husband to divorce his wife for almost any reason (cf. Mishnah Gittin 9. 10). Perhaps Jesus would take sides in this dispute and thereby split the ranks of His followers. Or perhaps He would offend Herod Antipas as John the Baptist had done (cf. 6:17-19) and be arrested since He was under Herod's jurisdiction in Perea. Herod had married his half-niece Herodias despite the decrees in Leviticus 18.

10:3-4. Jesus' counterquestion set aside the casuistry of Rabbinic interpretation and directed the Pharisees to the Old Testament (cf. 7:9, 13). The verb command indicates He asked about Mosaic legislation on the divorce issue.

In response, they summarized Deuteronomy 24:1-4, the basis for their divorce practices. They believed that Moses permitted a husband to divorce his wife if he protected her from the charge of adultery by writing out a certificate of divorce in the presence of witnesses, signing it, and giving it to her (cf. Mishnah Gittin 1. 1-3; 7. 2). In ancient Israel adultery was punishable by death, usually stoning (cf. Lev. 20:10; Deut. 22:22-25), when guilt was clearly established (cf. Num. 5:11-31). By Jesus' time (ca. A.D. 30) the death penalty was dropped (cf. Matt. 1:19-20; TDNT, s.v.

"moicheuō," 4:730-5), but Rabbinic law compelled a husband to divorce an adulterous wife (cf. Mishnah Sotah 1. 4-5; Gittin 4. 7).

10:5. Moses wrote . . . this Law (Deut. 24:1-4), Jesus said, in view of their hardheartedness, their obstinate refusal to accept God's view of marriage. Moses acknowledged the presence of divorce in Israel but did not institute or authorize it.

10:6-8. Jesus then contrasted their view of marriage with God's view from the beginning of Creation (Jesus quoted both Gen. 1:27 and 2:24). God made them, the first couple, Adam and Eve, distinctly male and female yet fully complementary to each other. A man shall leave behind his parents, shall be united to his wife, and the two—man and woman—will become one flesh. As "one flesh" they form a new unit comprising a sexually intimate, all-encompassing couple just as indissoluble in God's present Creation order as a blood relationship between parent and child.

So (hōste, "so then") they are no longer two, but one (lit., "one flesh," a one-flesh unit). Marriage is not a contract of temporary convenience which can be readily broken; it is a covenant of mutual fidelity to a lifelong union made before God (cf. Prov. 2:16-17; Mal. 2:13-16).

10:9. Jesus then added a prohibition. Therefore, in light of verses 6-8, what God has joined together as one flesh, let man not separate (chōrizetō, pres. tense; cf. this Gr. verb in 1 Cor. 7:10, 15). "Man" (anthrōpos, probably meaning the husband) is to stop disrupting marriage through divorce. Marriage is to be a monogamous, heterosexual, permanent one-flesh relationship. Jesus indirectly confirmed John the Baptist's courageous pronouncement (cf. Mark 6:18), contradicting the Pharisees' lax views.

10:10-12. Later, when Jesus' disciples questioned Him privately about this subject in the house (cf. 7:17), He added, Anyone who divorces (apolysē, "releases," same word in 15:6, 9, 15) his wife and marries another woman commits adultery against her, his first wife (cf. Ex. 20:14, 17). According to Mark 10:12, which is unique to Mark, the same applies to a woman who divorces her husband and marries another man. These words were significant for Mark's Roman readers since under Roman law a wife could initiate divorce. Though not allowed under Jewish law such action was sometimes practiced in Palestine (e.g., Herodias, 6:17-18).

Divorce violates God's Creation ordinance, but does not dissolve it. Jesus left open the possibility of divorce for sexual immorality as demanded by Jewish law in New Testament times (10:4). But remarriage, though permitted under Rabbinic law, was here forbidden by Jesus (cf. TDNT, s.v. "gameō, gamos," 1:648-51; "moicheuō," 4:733-5). (Many interpreters believe that Jesus gave one exception to this. See comments on Matt. 5:32; 19:1-12.) God's desire for a "broken" marriage is forgiveness and reconciliation (cf. Hosea 1–3; 1 Cor. 7:10-11).

e. The reception of God's kingdom in childlike trust (10:13-16)

This episode complemented Jesus' teaching on marriage and offset the Pharisees' opposition (Mark 10:2-12). It probably took place "in the house" (v. 10). The incident came to be used in later church history in connection with infant baptism but without clear warrant from the passage.

10:13. People—mothers, fathers, older children, and others—were bringing little children (paidia, those ranging from babies to preteens, cf. same word in 5:39; a different word brephē, meaning infants and young children, is used in Luke 18:15) to Jesus in order that He might touch them, a visible means of conveying God's blessing on their future lives (cf. Mark 10:16). The disciples rebuked them (cf. 8:30, 32-33) and tried to keep them from going to Jesus. They probably thought children were unimportant (cf. 9:36-37) and should not waste His time—another instance where they thought only in human-cultural categories (cf. 8:32-33; 9:33-37).

10:14. Jesus . . . was indignant (cf. v. 41) at the disciples' interference (cf. 9:38). This verb of strong emotional reaction is unique to Mark who highlighted Jesus' emotions more than the other Gospel writers (cf. 1:25, 41, 43; 3:5; 7:34; 8:12; 9:19). Jesus' sharp double command—Let (lit., "start allowing") the little children come to Me, and do not hinder (lit., "stop preventing") them—was a rebuke to the disciples (who had rebuked the people!).

Jesus welcomed the children because the kingdom of God, God's present spiritual rule in people's lives (cf. comments on 1:14-15), belongs as a possession to such as these. All, including children, who come to Jesus in childlike trust and dependence, are given free access to Jesus.

10:15. In a solemn pronouncement (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) Jesus developed the truth in 10:14. Whoever will not receive God's kingdom as a gift now with the trustful attitude of a child will never (emphatic negative, ou mē, "by no means") enter it. He will be excluded from its future blessings, specifically eternal life (cf. vv. 17, 23-26). God's kingdom is not gained by human achievement or merit; it must be received as God's gift through simple trust by those who acknowledge their inability to gain it any other way (cf. comments on 1:15).

10:16. Jesus' loving action (cf. 9:36) vividly illustrated that His blessing is freely given to those who receive it trustingly. The intensive compound verb blessed (kateulogei, imperf., occurring only here in the NT) emphasizes the warmhearted fervor with which Jesus blessed each child who came to Him.

f. The rejection of God's kingdom by trust in riches (10:17-27)

This event probably took place as Jesus was leaving the house (cf. Mark 10:10) somewhere in Perea. The rich man illustrated those who fail to acknowledge their own inability to gain eternal life and to receive it as God's gift (cf. vv. 13-16).

10:17. As Jesus was setting out on His way (cf. comments on 8:27) to Jerusalem (10:32) a man, influential, wealthy, and young (cf. Matt. 19:20, 22; Luke 18:18), came running to Him. His eager approach, kneeling posture, sincere form of address (Good Teacher, not used by Jews to address a Rabbi), and profound question revealed his earnestness and respect for Jesus as a spiritual Guide.

This man's question indicated that he viewed eternal life as something to be achieved by doing good (in contrast with Mark 10:15; cf. Matt. 19:16) and also that he felt insecure about his future destiny. References to eternal life (mentioned in Mark only in 10:17, 30), "entering God's kingdom" (vv. 23-25), and being "saved" (v. 26) all focus on the future possession of life with God, though a person enters it now by accepting God's rule in his earthly life. John's Gospel emphasizes the present possession of eternal life.

10:18. Jesus challenged the man's faulty perception of good as something measured by human achievement. No one is good, absolutely perfect, except God alone, the true Source and Standard of goodness. The man needed to see himself in the context of God's perfect character. Jesus' response did not deny His own deity but was a veiled claim to it. The man, unwittingly calling Him "good," needed to perceive Jesus' true identity. (Later, however, he dropped the word "good," v. 20.)

10:19-20. In answering the man's question directly, Jesus quoted five commandments from the so-called "second table" of the Decalogue (cf. Ex. 20:12-16; Deut. 5:16-20) but in a different order. Obedience to those commands dealing with human relationships are more easily verified in a person's conduct than are the earlier commands (Ex. 20:3-8). The command, Do not defraud, not a part of the Decalogue and occurring only in Mark, may represent the 10th commandment (Ex. 20:17). But more likely, it is an appropriate supplement to the 8th and/or 9th commandments (Ex. 20:15-16) applicable to a wealthy person (cf. Lev. 6:2-5; Mal. 3:5).

The man's reply shows he firmly believed he had kept these commandments perfectly (cf. Phil. 3:6) since he was a boy, since age 12 when he assumed personal responsibility for keeping the Law as a "son of the Law" (bar Mitzvah; cf. Luke 2:42-47). Perhaps he had expected Jesus to prescribe something meritorious that he needed to do to make up for any lack.

10:21-22. With a penetrating look (from emblepō; cf. 3:5), Jesus saw beneath the rich man's religious devotion to his deepest need and loved him, something mentioned only in Mark (cf. comment on 10:14). The one necessary thing he lacked was unrivaled allegiance to God, since wealth was his god (v. 22). He was devoted to it rather than God, thereby breaking the first commandment (Ex. 20:3).

Jesus commanded two things: (1) The man was to go, sell all his assets, and give to the poor, thereby removing the obstacle blocking him from eternal life, namely, self-righteous achievement coupled with a love for money. (2) Also Jesus told him to follow (pres. imper.) Him to Jerusalem and the Cross. The way to eternal life was in turning from trust in self-attainments and earthly securities to trust in Jesus (cf. Mark 10:14-15).

The man, saddened by Jesus' directives, went away. This particular form of self-denial—to sell all—was appropriate in this situation but is not a requirement for all prospective disciples.

10:23-25. When Jesus told the disciples that it is hard . . . for the rich to enter God's kingdom, they were amazed (ethambounto, "surprised"; cf. 1:27; 10:32) because in Judaism riches were a mark of God's favor and thus an advantage, not a barrier, in relation to God's kingdom. Only here in the Synoptic Gospels did Jesus address the Twelve as children (cf. John 13:33), reflecting their spiritual immaturity.

In light of their surprise Jesus repeated and clarified His original statement. If the words "for those who trust in riches" (NIV marg.) are omitted, Mark 10:24 (which is unique to Mark) applies to everybody who is confronted with the demands of God's kingdom. If included, they explain the rich man's difficulty and expose the danger of trusting in riches.

The humorous comparison (v. 25) employs a memorable Jewish proverb to depict the impossible. It is easier by comparison for a camel, the largest animal in Palestine at that time, to go through the eye of a common sewing needle (the smallest opening) than for a rich man who trusts in his riches to enter God's kingdom.

10:26-27. Jesus' statement (v. 25) greatly amazed (exeplēssonto, "astounded, struck out of their senses, overwhelmed"; cf. 1:22; 6:2; 7:37; 11:18) the disciples. They carried it to its logical conclusion: If it is impossible for a rich man to enter God's kingdom, Who then can be saved? (delivered to life eternal; cf. 10:17, 30)

Jesus offset their concern by declaring that salvation is impossible with men—beyond their human merit or achievement—but not with God. It is not beyond His power to bring about because all things necessary for people's salvation—rich and poor alike—are possible with God (cf. Job 42:2). What people cannot effect, God can and does by His grace (cf. Eph. 2:8-10).

g. The rewards of discipleship (10:28-31) (Matt. 19:27-30; Luke 18:28-30)

10:28. Acting as spokesman (cf. 8:29) Peter presumptuously reminded Jesus that the Twelve, unlike the rich man (we is emphatic in Gr., suggesting the contrast), had left everything to follow Him (cf. 1:16-20; 2:14; 10:21-22). The implication was, "What recompense shall we get?" (cf. Matt. 19:27) Again this reflected the disciples' tendency to think of material honors in God's kingdom (cf. Mark 9:33-34; 10:35-37; Matt. 19:28-29).

10:29-30. In another solemn affirmation (I tell you the truth; cf. v. 15; 3:28) Jesus acknowledged that their allegiance to Him and the gospel (cf. 1:1; 8:35) entailed a break with old ties—home, loved ones, or property (fields), as the case may be (cf. 13:11-13; Luke 9:59-62). But to everyone who makes the break Jesus promised that all these things will be replaced a hundredfold by new ties with fellow disciples (cf. Mark 3:31-35; Acts 2:41-47; 1 Tim. 5:1-2) in this present Age, the time period between Jesus' First and Second Advents. Then in the Age to come, the future Age following Jesus' return (from a NT viewpoint), each will receive the ultimate recompense—eternal life (cf. Mark 10:17).

In verse 30 the word "father" (cf. v. 29) is omitted since God is the Father of the new spiritual family (cf. 11:25). The words with them (the rewards), persecutions are added realistically by Mark alone. As Jesus said later (10:43-45) discipleship involves service, which often includes suffering. This was relevant to Mark's Roman readers who faced persecution. This fact helped remove the temptation to associate with Jesus simply for the rewards (cf. v. 31).

10:31. This "floating saying" (cf. these same words in other contexts: Matt. 20:16; Luke 13:30) could be intended as (a) a warning against Peter's presumption (Mark 10:28), (b) a confirmation of Jesus' promise (vv. 29-30), or most likely, (c) a summary of Jesus' teaching about the servant nature of discipleship (cf. 9:35;

10:43-45). Rewards in God's kingdom are not based on earthly standards such as rank, priority, or duration of time served, personal merit, or sacrifice (cf. Matt. 20:1-16), but on commitment to Jesus and following Him faithfully.

C. The third Passion prediction unit (10:32-45)

1. JESUS' THIRD PREDICTION OF HIS DEATH AND RESURRECTION (10:32-34) (MATT. 20:17-19; LUKE 18:31-34)

10:32a. Jesus and His disciples continued on their way up from the Jordan Valley (cf. v. 1) to Jerusalem, the first mention of their destination. Jesus was leading them, in accord with Rabbinic custom. This detail unique to Mark points to Jesus as the One who leads His people both in suffering and in triumph (the same verb is trans. "go[ing] ahead of" in 14:28 and 16:7).

His steadfast determination in the face of impending danger astonished (ethambounto, "surprised"; cf. 10:24; 1:27) the disciples; indeed those who followed were afraid (ephobounto; cf. 4:40-41; 6:50; 11:18; 16:8). Here Mark probably had one group—the Twelve—in mind. In 10:46, he indicated the presence of another group.

10:32b-34. Once again Jesus gathered the Twelve (cf. 3:13-15) around Him and revealed what would soon happen to Him. This third prediction is the most precise and comprehensive of the three Mark recorded (cf. comments on 8:31; 9:30-31; also see 9:12). Because He understood the Old Testament (cf. Ps. 22:6-8; Isa. 50:6; 52:13–53:12; Luke 18:31) and was aware of the contemporary religio-political climate (cf. Mark 8:15), He was well capable of making this explicit prediction.

Jesus used eight future-tense verbs, implying certainty, in describing the coming events. The new elements were that the Son of Man (cf. comments on 8:31) will be betrayed (cf. 9:31) into the hands of the Jewish leaders, the Sanhedrin (cf. 8:31). They would condemn Him to death (cf. 14:64) at the hands of the Gentiles (the Romans) since the Sanhedrin lacked the power to exercise capital punishment (cf. 15:1, 9-10). Before executing Him (15:24-25), the Romans would mock Him (cf. 15:18, 20), spit on Him (cf. 15:19), and flog Him (cf. 15:15)—indications that His death would be by crucifixion (cf. Matt. 20:19). But the promise of resurrection offered hope for the future.

2. THE ESSENTIAL MEANING OF DISCIPLESHIP (10:35-45) (MATT. 20:20-28)

10:35-37. James and John (cf. 1:19; 5:37; 9:2) approached Jesus privately, addressing Him as Teacher (cf. 4:38; 9:5). They asked for the places of highest honor and authority in His glory, the messianic kingdom rule which they expected He was about to establish openly (cf. 8:38; 9:1-2; 13:26). One of them wished to sit at His right, the highest assigned position, and the other at His left, the next highest place in a royal court (Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 6. 11. 9).

Matthew added that their mother came with them and spoke for them (Matt. 20:20-21). She was Salome, probably a sister of Jesus' mother (cf. Matt. 27:56; Mark 15:40; John 19:25). If so, then James and John were Jesus' first cousins. Perhaps they hoped their family ties would help their cause.

10:38-39. Jesus told them they did not realize what was involved in their ambitious request. To ask for a place of honor in His glory was also a request to share His suffering since the one is a requisite to the other.

Jesus' question called for a negative response because the sufferings and death facing Him were unique to fulfilling His messianic mission. The cup was a common Jewish metaphor either for joy (cf. Pss. 23:5; 116:13) or for divine judgment against human sin, as here (cf. Ps. 75:7-8; Isa. 51:17-23; Jer. 25:15-28; 49:12; 51:7; Ezek. 23:31-34; Hab. 2:16; Zech. 12:2). Jesus applied this figure to Himself for He was to bear the wrath of God's judgment against sin in place of sinners (cf. Mark 10:45; 14:36; 15:34). He would drink the "cup" voluntarily.

The figure of baptism expresses a parallel thought. Being under water was an Old Testament picture of being overwhelmed by calamity (cf. Job 22:11; Ps. 69:2, 15; Isa. 43:2). Here the "calamity" Jesus faced was bearing the burden of God's judgment on sin which involved

lytron (noun)	Ransom, price of release	(Matt. 20:28; Mark 10:45)
lytroomai (verb)	To ransom, to free by paying a ransom price	(Luke 24:21; Titus 2:14; 1 Peter 1:18)
lytrōsis (noun)	Act of freeing by paying a ransom price	(Luke 1:68; 2:38; Heb. 9:12)
apolytrōsis (noun)	A buying back, a setting free by paying a ransom price	(Luke 21:28; Rom. 3:24; 8:23; 1 Cor. 1:30; Eph. 1:7, 14; 4:30; Col. 1:14; Heb. 9:15; 11:35) overwhelming sufferings culminating in His death (cf. Luke 12:50). He was to be baptized by God who placed these sufferings on Him (Isa. 53:4b, 11). James and John may have thought Jesus was describing a messianic battle and their confident reply, We can, showed their willingness to fight in it. But their reply also showed that they had not understood Jesus' words. So Jesus applied the same cup and baptism figures to them but in a different sense. In following Him they would share His sufferings (cf. 1 Peter 4:13) even to death but not in a redemptive sense. His prediction was fulfilled: James was the first apostle to be martyred (cf. Acts 12:2), whereas John, who endured many years of persecution and exile, was the last apostle to die (cf. John 21:20-23; Rev. 1:9).

10:40. Jesus denied their request for positions of honor. Such places were not within His jurisdiction to give. But He assured James and John that God the Father (cf. Matt. 20:23) will assign those positions to those for whom the places of honor have been prepared.

10:41-44. When the other 10 disciples found out about James and John's private attempt to gain preferential status, they became indignant (cf. v. 14) with them. This jealous reaction indicates that they also harbored those selfish ambitions. To avert disharmony among the Twelve and to reemphasize the meaning of true greatness (cf. 9:33-37) Jesus contrasted greatness in this world's kingdoms with that in God's kingdom. The contrast is not between two ways of ruling but between ruling (good or bad) and serving.

Gentile rulers . . . lord it over them, dominating and oppressing their subjects, and exercise authority over them, exploiting them. But it is not to be this way with Jesus' followers who are under God's rule. Whoever aspires to become great among you, let him be your (pl.) house servant (diakonos), one who voluntarily renders useful service to others.

Whoever aspires to be first (lit., "first among you") let him be a slave (doulos), one who forfeits his own rights in order to serve any and all (cf. comments on 9:35-37). A disciple is to serve others, not his own interests, voluntarily and sacrificially.

10:45. Jesus Himself is the supreme Example of true greatness (in contrast with v. 42). The Son of Man (cf. comments on 8:31) voluntarily veiled His glory (cf. 8:38; 13:26) and came as God's Servant (cf. Ps. 49:5-7; Isa. 52:13–53:12; Phil. 2:6-8) not . . . to be served by others but to serve them (cf. Mark 2:17; 10:46-52; Luke 22:27). The climax of His service was His death as a ransom for many. He did this voluntarily, sacrificially, vicariously, and obediently (cf. comments on Mark 15:34).

"Ransom" (lytron) occurs only here and in Matthew 20:28 in the New Testament. As "the price of release" it refers to a payment to effect the release of slaves or captives from bondage. It also includes the concept of substitution (cf. TDNT, s.v. "lyō," 4:328-35). People are captives under the power of sin and death (cf. Rom. 5:12; 6:20) from which they cannot free themselves. Jesus' substitutionary death paid the price that sets people free (cf. Rom. 6:22; Heb. 2:14-15). (See the chart, "New Testament Words for Redemption.")

The preposition "for" (anti), used in Mark only here, reinforces the idea of substitution. It means "instead of, in the place of" (cf. Matt. 2:22; Luke 11:11; 1 Peter 3:9). Jesus gave His life (psychēn) in the place of many (cf. Mark 14:24 where hyper, "for," is used).

"Many" is used in the inclusive sense of "all" (cf. 1:32-34; Isa. 53:10-12). It emphasizes how a large number derive redemptive benefit from the single sacrifice of the One Redeemer (cf. Rom. 5:15, 18-19). Jesus' death as a ransom extended beyond His own people to all peoples (cf. 1 Tim. 2:5-6).

D. Conclusion: The faith of blind Bartimaeus (10:46-52) (Matt. 20:29-34; Luke 18:35-43)

This is the last healing miracle Mark recorded. It concludes his special section on discipleship (Mark 8:31–10:52) and is an excellent illustration of its meaning (cf. 10:52b). It also signifies that the disciples, despite their misunderstandings (cf. 8:32-33; 9:32; 10:35-41), would have clear sight (i.e., understanding) as Jesus opened their eyes to the full implications of His messiahship.

The vividness of the account (e.g., v. 50) suggests that it was an eyewitness report from one such as Peter. The three Synoptic Gospels record this event with some divergent details. Matthew mentioned two blind men (Matt. 20:30), and Luke placed the incident at Jesus' approach to Jericho instead of His exit (Luke 18:35). Probably two blind men were involved but Mark and Luke focused on one, perhaps the more vocal or well known. Also there were two Jerichos—an old and a new city—and the healings could have occurred as the crowd was leaving old Israelite Jericho (Matt. 20:29; Mark 10:46) and entering new Herodian Jericho (Luke 18:35), though the evidence that old Jericho was inhabited at that time is not certain.

10:46. Jesus and His disciples left Perea (cf. v. 1), crossed the Jordan, and came to Jericho in Judea. The Jericho of New Testament times, built by Herod the Great as the site for his winter palace, was about 5 miles west of the Jordan River, 1 mile south of the Old Testament city (Josh. 6; 2 Kings 2:4-5, 15-18), and 18 miles northeast of Jerusalem.

As they and a large crowd, probably Passover pilgrims en route to Jerusalem (cf. Ps. 42:4; Mark 14:1-2), were leaving Jericho, presumably the old city, they saw a blind beggar, Bartimaeus, an Aramaic name meaning the Son of Timaeus. Only Mark recorded his name, suggesting that perhaps Bartimaeus was known in the early church. He was sitting beside the road begging, a common sight near wealthy Jericho.

10:47-48. When Bartimaeus was informed that Jesus of Nazareth (cf. 1:24) was passing by, he clamored for His attention and relentlessly shouted for Jesus to have mercy on him (cf. Pss. 4:1; 6:2). No doubt he had heard reports that Jesus restored sight. When many people kept rebuking (cf. Mark 10:13) him to silence him, he cried out more intensely. They probably regarded him as a nuisance and may have resented any possible delay. They may also have been opposed to what he was shouting.

Son of David, occurring here for the first time in Mark, designated the Messiah as David's Descendant (2 Sam. 7:8-16) and became a recognized title of the Messiah-King (cf. comments on Mark 12:35-37; also cf. Isa. 11:1-5; Jer. 23:5-6; Ezek. 34:23-24; Matt. 1:1; 9:27; 12:23; 15:22; Rom. 1:3). Bartimaeus' using that title probably indicated that despite his physical blindness he believed Jesus of Nazareth was Israel's Messiah, in contrast with the blind unbelief of most Jews. Later he addressed Jesus more personally ("Rabbi," Mark 10:51) and followed Him (cf. v. 52b). Jesus did not silence him, implying He accepted the title.

10:49-52a. Jesus did not ignore Bartimaeus but directed that he be called, a reproof to those (perhaps including the disciples) who were attempting to silence him (cf. v. 14). In Jesus' determined movement toward Jerusalem He had time to serve someone in need (cf. vv. 43-45).

The crowd encouraged the beggar: Cheer up! (tharsei, "be courageous"; cf. 6:50) On your feet! (lit., "rise") He's calling you. This motivated Bartimaeus to toss aside his outer cloak which was spread before him to collect alms, jump up, and come to Jesus.

Jesus' question was not designed to get information but to encourage Bartimaeus to articulate his need and express his faith. Bartimaeus' simple response, Rabbi, I want to see, declared his confident trust in Jesus' ability. "Rabbi" (Rhabbouni) is an emphatic, personal form meaning, "My Lord, my Master" (cf. John 20:16).

Jesus acknowledged his faith: Go . . . your faith has healed (sesōken, "saved") you. Faith was the necessary means, not the efficient cause of his healing (cf. comments on Mark 5:34). Bartimaeus' physical "salvation" (i.e., deliverance from darkness [blindness] to light [sight]) was an outward picture of his spiritual "salvation" (cf. Ps. 91:14-16; Luke 3:4-6).

10:52b. Immediately (euthys, cf. 1:10; contrast 8:22-26) Bartimaeus received his sight and began to follow Jesus along the road (en tē hodō, "on the way"; cf. comments on 1:2). Though he accompanied Jesus to Jerusalem, perhaps to offer a thanksgiving sacrifice in the temple, he also became a "follower" in the sense of a loyal disciple (cf. 8:34). Bartimaeus pictured discipleship clearly. He recognized his inability, trusted Jesus as the One to give him God's gracious mercy, and when he could "see" clearly he began to follow Jesus.

VII. Jesus' Ministry in and around Jerusalem (11:1–13:37)

The fifth major section of Mark's Gospel presents Jesus' ministry in and around Jerusalem. He denounced the Jewish religious leaders for rejecting God's messengers, especially the last One, God's Son. Jesus also warned of God's impending judgment on Jerusalem and the nation.

The section revolves around three or four days (11:1-11, Sunday; 11:12-19, Monday; 11:20–13:37, Tuesday and probably Wednesday). Precise temporal links are missing between 11:20 and 13:37, suggesting that Mark arranged this material topically, not in strict chronological order (cf. 2:1–3:6). If so, he intended it to be a select summary of Jesus' teaching, some of which took place on Tuesday and some on Wednesday of His Passion Week (cf. 14:49). The Passion narrative opens with a new chronological starting point (cf. 14:1). The chronological framework for 11:1–16:8 is one week, extending from Palm Sunday to Easter Sunday.

A. Jesus' entry into Jerusalem (11:1-11)

Mark's account of this event exhibits vivid detail but is somewhat restrained in proclaiming Jesus as the Messiah (cf. comments on Mark 1:43-44; 8:30-31). Only later (probably after Jesus' resurrection) did His disciples fully understand.

11:1a. Less than a mile southeast of Jerusalem was the village of Bethphage (lit., "house of unripe figs") and about two miles out was Bethany (lit., "house of dates or figs") on the eastern side of the Mount of Olives, a high ridge about two miles long known for its many olive trees. In Bethany, the last stopping place on the desolate and unsafe road from Jerusalem to Jericho (cf. 10:46), was the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus (John 11:1), which generally served as Jesus' abode when He was in Judea (cf. Mark 11:11). Bethany was also the home of Simon the Leper (14:3-9).

11:1b-3. Jesus sent two . . . disciples (cf. 14:13) into the village ahead of (katenanti, "opposite," perhaps across the Mount of Olives from Bethany) them, presumably Bethphage, to find immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) on entry, an unbroken colt of a donkey. They were to untie it and bring it to Jesus. Matthew included mention of the mother with her colt (see comments on Matt. 21:2).

If anyone challenged them they were to say, The Lord needs it and will send it back here (to the village) shortly (euthys, "without delay"; cf. Mark 1:10). It is generally assumed that Jesus here referred to Himself by the title "Lord" (kyrios; cf. 5:19) not to the colt's owner.

11:4-6. Mark recorded the disciples' carrying out Jesus' instructions (cf. vv. 2-3), demonstrating the detailed accuracy of His prediction. This highlighted the untying of the colt, which Jesus may have intended as a messianic sign (cf. Gen. 49:8-12).

Had Jesus made prearranged plans with the colt's owner, or did this event reflect His supernatural knowledge? A later parallel situation (cf. Mark 14:13-16) may support the first view, but the large amount of detail Mark included on securing the colt (11:2-6) convincingly favors the second view. Even so, the colt's owner probably had had previous contact with Jesus.

The amount of detail Mark recorded here implies an eyewitness report; possibly Peter was one of the two disciples sent on this errand (cf. Introduction).

11:7-8. The disciples put their outer cloaks on the colt as a makeshift saddle. Jesus mounted the previously unridden colt and began His ride into Jerusalem. Many people entered into the excitement of the moment and spontaneously paid Him tribute by spreading their outer cloaks before Him on the dusty road (cf. 2 Kings 9:12-13). Others spread green branches (stibadas, "leaves or leafy branches") cut from surrounding fields. Palm branches are mentioned in John 12:13.

11:9-10. The chiastic (a-b-b'-a') arrangement of these verses suggests antiphonal chanting by two groups—those who went ahead of Jesus and those who followed Him. They chanted Psalm 118:25-26. At the annual Passover festival (cf. Mark 14:1), the Jews chanted the six "ascent" psalms (Pss. 113–118) to express thanksgiving, praise, and petitions to God.

Hosanna, a transliteration of the Greek word which is itself a transliteration of the Hebrew hôšî 'âh nā', originally was a prayer addressed to God, meaning "O save us now" (cf. Ps. 118:25a). Later it came to be used as a shout of praise (like "Hallelujah!") and then as an enthusiastic welcome to pilgrims or to a famous Rabbi. Hosanna in the highest, in highest places, likely means "Save us, O God, who lives in heaven." Its use here probably reflects a mixture of all these elements due to the nature of the crowd.

The acclamation, Blessed (lit., "May . . . be blessed") calls for God's gracious power to attend someone or to effect something. He who comes in the name of the Lord (as God's representative and with His authority) originally referred to a pilgrim coming to the festival. Though these words are not a messianic title, this crowd of pilgrims applied them to Jesus, perhaps with messianic overtones (cf. Gen. 49:10; Matt. 3:11) but they stopped short of identifying Jesus as the Messiah.

The coming kingdom (cf. comments on Mark 1:15) in association with David reflected the peoples' messianic hope for the restoration of the Davidic kingdom (cf. 2 Sam. 7:16; Amos 9:11-12). But their enthusiasm was for a ruling Messiah and a political kingdom, not realizing and not accepting the fact that the One peaceably riding on the colt was their Messiah (cf. Zech. 9:9), the suffering Messiah whose kingdom stood near because of His presence with them. For most people, then, this moment of jubilation was simply part of the traditional Passover celebration—it did not alarm the Roman authorities or initiate a call for Jesus' arrest by the Jewish rulers.

11:11. After entering Jerusalem Jesus . . . went to the temple (hieron, "the temple precincts"; cf. vv. 15, 27), not the central sanctuary (naos; cf. 14:58; 15:29, 38). He carefully surveyed the premises to see if they were being used as God intended. This led to His action the next day (cf. 11:15-17). Since it was near sunset when the city gates were closed, Jesus went out to Bethany (cf. v. 1a) with the Twelve for the night.

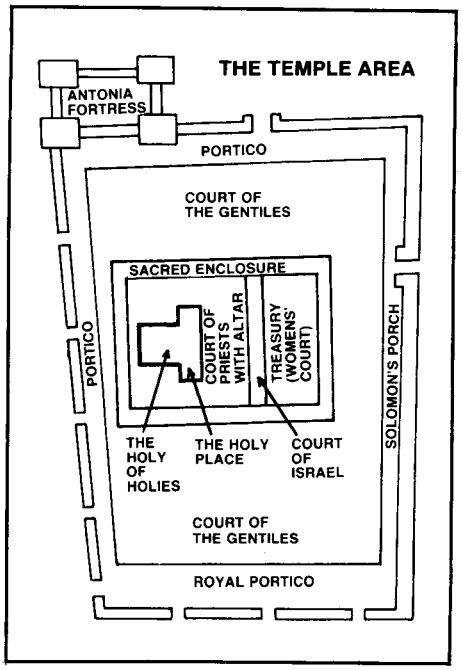
B. Jesus' prophetic signs of God's judgment on Israel (11:12-26)



This section has a "sandwich" structure (cf. 3:20-35; 5:21-43; 6:7-31). The account of Jesus' judgment on the fig tree (11:12-14, 20-26) is divided by the account of His cleansing the temple precincts (vv. 15-19). This structure suggests that each episode helps explain the other. Like the fig tree, Israel flourished with the "leaves" of ritual religion but lacked the "fruit" of righteousness God demanded. Both episodes signify God's impending judgment on Israel for religious hypocrisy (cf. comments on 7:6). Matthew telescoped the incidents into two separate, successive accounts without the precise time intervals Mark noted (Matt. 21:12-17, 18-22).

1. JESUS' JUDGMENT ON THE UNPRODUCTIVE FIG TREE (11:12-14) (MATT. 21:18-19)

11:12-13. Next day, early Monday morning, after leaving Bethany for Jerusalem (cf. v. 1a) Jesus was (lit., "became") hungry. From a distance Jesus saw a wayside fig tree in leaf, with full green foliage, and went to see if it had any fruit. But it had nothing but leaves. Mark explained that it was not the season for figs.

The time of year was Passover (cf. 14:1), the middle of the month of Nisan (April). In Palestine fig trees produced crops of small edible buds in March followed by the appearance of large green leaves in early April. This early green "fruit" (buds) was common food for local peasants. (An absence of these buds despite the tree's green foliage promising their presence indicated it would bear no fruit that year.) Eventually these buds dropped off when the normal crop of figs formed and ripened in late May and June, the fig season. Thus it was reasonable for Jesus shortly before Passover (mid-April) to expect to find something edible on that fig tree even though it was not the season for figs.

11:14. Jesus' strong denunciation of the tree, which Peter later regarded as a curse (v. 21), was a dramatic prophetic sign of God's impending judgment on Israel, not an angry reaction because Jesus was hungry and found no food. The promising but unproductive fig tree symbolized Israel's spiritual barrenness despite divine favor and the impressive outward appearance of their religion (cf. Jer. 8:13; Hosea 9:10, 16; Micah 7:1). This is aptly illustrated in Mark 11:27–12:40.

2. JESUS' JUDGMENT ON THE MISUSE OF THE TEMPLE (11:15-19) (MATT. 21:12-17; LUKE 19:45-46)

This event is recorded in all three Synoptic Gospels. John recorded an earlier cleansing of the temple at the beginning of Jesus' public ministry (cf. comments on John 2:13-22).

11:15-16. When Jesus arrived in Jerusalem, He went into the temple area (hieron; cf. v. 11), the large outer court of the Gentiles surrounding the inner sacred courts of the temple itself. (See the sketch of the temple.) No Gentile was allowed beyond this outer court. In it the high priest Caiaphas had authorized a market (probably a recent economic innovation) for the sale of ritually pure items necessary for temple sacrifice: wine, oil, salt, approved sacrificial animals and birds.

Money from three sources circulated in Palestine in New Testament times: imperial money (Roman), provincial money (Greek), and local money (Jewish). Money changers provided the required

Tyrian (Jewish) coinage for the annual half-shekel temple tax (Ex. 30:12-16) required of all male Jews 20 years of age and up. This was in exchange for their Greek and Roman currency, which featured human portraits considered idolatrous. Though a small surcharge was permitted in these transactions, dealings were not free from extortion and fraud. In addition (according to Mark 11:16) people loaded with merchandise were taking shortcuts through this area, making it a thoroughfare from one part of the city to another.

Jesus was outraged by this blatant disregard for the temple area specifically set apart for Gentile use. So He overturned the money changers' tables and the dove-sellers' benches, and would not allow people to use the area as a thoroughfare. Other certified markets were available elsewhere in the city.

11:17. Jesus' daring action captured peoples' attention and He taught (lit., "began teaching") them about God's purpose for the temple. Using a question expecting a positive answer, He appealed to Old Testament authority for His action (quoting Isa. 56:7b verbatim from the LXX).

Only Mark extended the quotation from Isaiah to include the words for all nations. God desired that both Gentiles and Jews use the temple as a place of worship (cf. John 12:20). This was especially relevant to Mark's readers in Rome.

By contrast you (emphatic), the insensitive Jews, have made it, the court of the Gentiles, a den of robbers. It was a refuge for fraudulent traders (cf. Jer. 7:11) instead of a house of prayer (cf. 1 Kings 8:28-30; Isa. 60:7) for both Jews and Gentiles.

By this action Jesus as the Messiah claimed greater authority over the temple than that of the high priest (cf. Hosea 9:15; Mal. 3:1-5).

11:18-19. When the religious leaders (cf. comments on 8:31; 11:27; 14:1, 43, 53) heard about this, they began seeking (cf. 12:12; 14:1, 11) the best way to kill Him without creating a major uprising. Mark alone explained (gar, for) that they were afraid of Him because of His authoritative appeal to the crowds. The whole crowd of Passover pilgrims from all parts of the ancient world was amazed (exeplēsseto, "astounded, struck out of their senses, overwhelmed"; cf. 1:22; 6:2; 7:37; 10:26) at the content of His teaching (cf. 1:27). His popularity with the people kept the Jewish authorities from arresting Him immediately. That evening (Monday) they, Jesus and the Twelve, left Jerusalem and presumably went to Bethany (cf. 11:11).

3. THE WITHERED FIG TREE AND A LESSON ON FAITH AND PRAYER (11:20-26) (MATT. 21:20-22)

11:20-21. These verses form the sequel to verses 12-14. Next morning, Tuesday, as Jesus and His disciples were returning to Jerusalem, they saw the same fig tree (v. 13) but it was withered from the roots, completely dried up, fulfilling Jesus' words (v. 14).

Addressing Jesus as Rabbi (cf. 9:5), Peter spoke of the tree's condition with great surprise probably because the tree's total destruction was much more severe than Jesus' words the previous day (11:14) indicated. Though Jesus did not explain the meaning of the event, many believe that it was a vivid picture of God's impending judgment on Israel (cf. comments on vv. 12-14).

11:22-24. Jesus exhorted the disciples, Have faith in God. Faith that rests in God is unwavering trust in His omnipotent power and unfailing goodness (cf. 5:34).

Following a solemn introduction (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28), Jesus said in a hyperbole that whoever says to this mountain, the Mount of Olives representing an immovable obstacle, Go, throw yourself (lit., "be uprooted" and "be thrown") into the sea (the Dead Sea, visible from the Mount of Olives), it will be done for him by God. The one condition is, negatively, absence of doubt and positively, belief, unwavering trust in God, that the petition will be granted. Such faith contrasted with Israel's lack of faith.

Therefore, because believing prayer taps God's power to accomplish the humanly impossible (cf. 10:27), Jesus exhorted His disciples to believe that they have already received whatever they request in prayer. Faith accepts it as good as done even though the actual answer is still future.

Jesus made this promise on the recognized premise that petitions must be in harmony with God's will (cf. 14:36; Matt. 6:9-10; John 14:13-14; 15:7; 16:23-24; 1 John 5:14-15). This enables faith to receive the answers God gives. God is always ready to respond to obedient believers' prayers, and they can petition Him knowing that no situation or difficulty is impossible for Him.

11:25-26. A forgiving attitude toward others as well as faith in God is also essential for effective prayer. When a believer stands to pray, a common prayer posture among Jews (cf. 1 Sam. 1:26; Luke 18:11, 13), and if he has anything against anyone, a grudge against an offending believer or nonbeliever, he is to forgive that one of the offense.

This is to be done in order that his Father in heaven (the only Marcan occurrence of this phrase, but frequent in Matt.) may "also" (kai in Gr.) forgive him his sins (lit., paraptōmata, "trespasses," only occurrence in Mark), acts that sidestep or deviate from God's truth.

Divine forgiveness toward a believer and a believer's forgiveness toward others are inseparably linked because a bond has been established between the divine Forgiver and the forgiven believer (cf. Matt. 18:21-35). One who has accepted God's forgiveness is expected to forgive others just as God has forgiven him (Eph. 4:32). If he does not, he forfeits God's forgiveness in his daily life.

C. Jesus' controversy with the Jewish religious leaders in the temple courts (11:27–12:44)

Mark likely packaged the five episodes in 11:27–12:37 around the theme of conflict between Jesus and various influential religious groups (similarly, cf. 2:1–3:5). A contrast between self-righteous religion and wholehearted devotion to God concludes the section (12:38-44). The temple area was the focal point of Jesus' ministry during His final week (cf. 11:11, 15-17, 27; 12:35, 41; 13:1-3; 14:49). The controversies serve as a summary of Jesus' teaching during Tuesday and Wednesday of that week. They depict the religious leaders' growing hostility toward Him.

1. THE QUESTION CONCERNING JESUS' AUTHORITY (11:27–12:12)

Jesus' credentials were questioned by representatives of the Sanhedrin. His response placed them in an embarrassing dilemma (11:27-33) and His Vineyard Parable exposed their rejection of God's messengers (12:1-12).

a. Jesus' counterquestion about John's baptism (11:27-33)

11:27-28. On Tuesday morning (cf. v. 20) Jesus and His disciples entered Jerusalem again (cf. vv. 11-12, 15). In the temple courts (heirō; cf. vv. 11, 15) Jesus was confronted by representatives of the Sanhedrin (cf. comments on 8:31; 14:43, 53; 15:1). As guardians of Israel's religious life they asked two questions: (1) What was the nature of His authority (cf. 1:22, 27); what were His credentials? (2) Who was the source of His authority? Who authorized Him to do this? "This" (lit., these things) refers to His purging the temple the previous day (cf. 11:15-17) and probably more generally to all His authoritative words and deeds which drew much popular acclaim (cf. v. 18; 12:12, 37). Their questions indicate that Jesus had not openly stated that He is the Messiah, a significant point in view of Mark's "secrecy motif" (cf. comments on 1:43-45; 12:1, 12).

11:29-30. Jesus' counterquestions, a common Rabbinic debating technique (cf. 10:2-3), made His answer to them depend on their answer to Him. It focused the issue: Was John's baptism and his whole ministry (cf. 1:4-8; 6:14-16, 20) from heaven (of divine origin; cf. 8:11), or from men? (of human origin) Jesus implied that His own authority came from the same source as John's which indicates there was no rivalry between them. The leaders' conclusion about John would reveal their conclusion about Him.

11:31-32. Jesus' question placed these religious leaders in a dilemma. If they answered, From heaven, they would incriminate themselves for not believing John and supporting his ministry (cf. John 1:19-27). They would stand self-condemned for rejecting God's messenger. They would also be forced to acknowledge that Jesus' authority came from God (cf. Mark 9:37b). This answer, though true, was unacceptable because of their unbelief.

But if they answered, From men (lit., "But shall we say, 'From men'?"), the implications were obvious: they would deny that John was commissioned by God and discredit themselves before the people. Mark explained, They feared the people (cf. 12:12) because everyone regarded John as a genuine prophet, God's spokesman (cf. Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 18. 5. 2). The people viewed Jesus this way too (cf. Matt. 21:46). This latter answer, though false, was the one they preferred but found unacceptable because of the people.

11:33. Since neither option was acceptable they pleaded ignorance in an attempt to save face. So Jesus was not obligated to answer their question. His question (cf. v. 30) implied that His authority, like John's, was from God.

By suspending judgment, these religious leaders showed that they really rejected John and Jesus as God's messengers. Throughout their history most leaders of Israel repeatedly rejected God's messengers, a point Jesus made in the following parable (12:1-12).

b. Jesus' Parable of the Vineyard Owner's Son (12:1-12)

This parable reflects the social situation of first-century Palestine, especially Galilee. Wealthy foreign landlords owned large land estates which they leased to tenant farmers. The tenants agreed to cultivate the land and care for the vineyards when the landlords were away. A contract between them designated that a portion of the crop was to be paid as rent. At harvesttime the owners sent agents to collect the rent. Inevitably tension arose between the absentee owners and the tenants.

12:1a. This brief summary statement (cf. introduction to 2:1-2) introduces the single parable (cf. introduction to 4:1-2) Mark recorded here. Jesus addressed it to them, the Sanhedrin interrogators who were plotting against Him (cf. 11:27; 12:12). It exposed their hostile intentions and warned them of the consequences.

12:1b. The details of the vineyard's construction are derived from Isaiah 5:1-2 (part of a prophecy of God's judgment on Israel), as the vineyard is a familiar symbol for the nation of Israel (cf. Ps. 80:8-19).

A man, a landlord (cf. Mark 12:9), planted a vineyard, analogous to God's relationship to Israel. The wall for protection, a pit beneath the winepress to gather the juice of the pressed grapes, and a watchtower for shelter, storage, and security, show the owner's desire to make this a choice vineyard. Then he leased it to tenant farmers, vinegrowers, representing Israel's religious leaders, and went away on a journey probably to live abroad. He was an absentee owner.

12:2-5. The owner sent three servants—agents representing God's servants (the prophets) to Israel—to the tenant farmers to receive a share of the fruit as rent at harvesttime (lit., "at the right time," i.e., the vintage season of the fifth year; cf. Lev. 19:23-25). But the tenant farmers behaved violently. They seized the first servant . . . beat him, and sent him away empty-handed. They seriously wounded the second servant and insulted him. They killed the third servant.

The long-suffering owner also sent many others, some of whom were beaten and others . . . killed. Time and again God had sent prophets to Israel to gather fruits of repentance and righteousness (cf. Luke 3:8) but His prophets were abused, wounded, and killed (cf. Jer. 7:25-26; 25:4-7; Matt. 23:33-39).

12:6-8. The owner still had one messenger to send, a son, whom he loved (lit., "a beloved son"—a designation representing God's Son, Jesus; cf. 1:11; 9:7). Last of all, a phrase unique to Mark, he sent his son, expecting the tenant farmers to give him the honor denied his servants.

The son's arrival may have caused the tenants to assume that the owner had died and this son was his only heir. In Palestine at the time, a piece of land could be possessed lawfully by whoever claimed it first if it was "ownerless property," unclaimed by an heir within a certain time period (cf. Mishnah Baba Bathra 3. 3). The tenant farmers assumed that if they killed the son they could acquire the vineyard.

So they conspired together and killed him and threw him out of the vineyard. Some say this predicts what would happen to Jesus: He would be crucified outside of Jerusalem, expelled from Israel in a climactic expression of the leaders' rejection of Him. But this presses the parable's details too far here. It is better to see the throwing of the son's dead body over the wall without burial as a climax to their wicked indignities. Mark's emphasis of their rejection and murder of the son took place within the vineyard, that is, within Israel.

12:9. Jesus' rhetorical question invited His audience to share in deciding what action the owner should take. He affirmed his listeners' answer (cf. Matt. 21:41) by alluding to Isaiah 5:1-7 again. This was a strong appeal for those plotting His death to consider the serious consequences of their actions. He saw Himself as the "only Son" sent by God (John 3:16).

The rejection of the owner's son was really a rejection of the owner who would come with governmental authority and kill the murderous tenants and give the vineyard to others. Likewise the Jewish leaders' rejection of John the Baptist and of Jesus, God's final Messenger, was a rejection of God Himself. This would inevitably bring His judgment on Israel and would transfer their privileges to others temporarily (cf. Rom. 11:25, 31).

12:10-11. Jesus sharpened the application of the parable to Himself as the Son and extended its teaching by quoting verbatim Psalm 118:22-23 (Ps. 117 in the LXX), a familiar text recognized as messianic elsewhere (Acts 4:11; 1 Peter 2:4-8). The figure changed from the son/tenants of the parable to the stone/builders of the psalm, making possible a parabolic allusion to Jesus' resurrection and exaltation. A slain son cannot be revived but a rejected stone can be retrieved and used.

The quotation begins where the parable ended. The stone (Jesus, like the son), which the builders (the Jewish religious leaders, like the tenant farmers) rejected has become the capstone ("cornerstone," NIV marg.; lit., "head of the corner"). This was considered the most important stone of a building. This dramatic reversal of the builders' decision and exaltation of the rejected stone was God's sovereign doing, a remarkable thing. God overrules in amazing ways rebellious human attempts to block His purposes.

12:12. They, the Sanhedrin representatives (11:27), were seeking (cf. 11:18) to arrest Him because they realized Jesus had addressed the parable against them ("with reference to" or directed "toward" them). But fearing the excitable Passover crowd, they left Him alone and departed.

The fact that Jesus' adversaries understood this parable is a new development (cf. 4:11-12), suggesting that at Jesus' initiative the "secret" of His true identity would soon be openly declared (cf. comments on 1:43-45; 14:62).

2. THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE POLL TAX (12:13-17)

12:13. Despite Jesus' warning to His Sanhedrin adversaries in the preceding parable, they continued their campaign against Him by sending some . . . Pharisees (cf. 2:16) and Herodians (cf. 3:6) to catch Him in His words (lit., "by means of a word," i.e., an unguarded statement they could use against Him; cf. 10:2). The word translated "catch" (argeusōsin, found only here in the NT) was used to describe catching wild animals with a trap. Later (NIV), though implied, is not in the Greek text; no time reference is given.

12:14-15a. Addressing Jesus as Teacher (cf. 4:38; 9:5), they used carefully chosen remarks designed to hide their true motives and to prevent Jesus from evading their difficult question. They acknowledged He was honest and impartial, courting no one's favor, because He paid no attention to who they are (lit., "You do not look at the face of men," a Heb. expression; cf. 1 Sam. 16:7). Then they asked, Is it right, legally permitted by God's Law (cf. Deut. 17:14-15), to pay taxes to Caesar, the Roman emperor, or not? Should we pay (dōmen, "Shall we give") or shouldn't we?

"Taxes" (kēnson) was a Latin loanword meaning "census." It referred to the annual poll tax (head tax) demanded by the Roman emperor from all Jews since A.D. 6, when Judea became a Roman province (Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 5. 1. 21). The money went directly into the emperor's treasury. This tax was unpopular because it typified the Jews' subjugation to Rome (cf. Acts 5:37).

The Pharisees objected to the tax, but expediently justified its payment. They were concerned about the religious implications of their question. The Herodians supported foreign rule through the Herods and favored the tax. They were concerned about the political implications of their question. Obviously the question was designed to place Jesus in a religious and political dilemma. A yes answer would antagonize the people and discredit Him as God's Spokesman. No messianic claimant could sanction willing submission to pagan rulers. A no answer would invite retaliation from Rome.

12:15b-16. Jesus immediately detected their hypocrisy, the malicious intent beneath their pretense of an honest inquiry. He exposed it with a rhetorical question about why they were trying to trap (peirazete, "test"; cf. 10:2) Him. Then He asked them to bring Him a denarius (cf. 6:37) so He might look at it, to use it as a visual aid. The common Roman denarius, a small silver coin, was the only coin acceptable for imperial tax payments.

When Jesus asked them to tell Him whose portrait and inscription were on it, they replied, Caesar's. The portrait (eikōn, "image") was probably that of Tiberius Caesar (reigned A.D. 14–37; see the list of Roman emperors at Luke 3:1) and the inscription read in Latin: "Tiberius Caesar Augustus, Son of the Divine Augustus" and on the reverse side: "Chief Priest." This inscription originated in the imperial cult of emperor worship and was a claim to divinity, which was particularly repulsive to Jews.

12:17. But to use Caesar's coinage was to acknowledge his authority and the benefits of the civil government it represented and consequently the obligation to pay taxes. So Jesus declared, Give (apodote, "give back"; cf. v. 14) to Caesar what is Caesar's (lit., "the things belonging to Caesar"). This tax was a debt they owed to Caesar for use of his money and the other benefits of his rule.

Jesus had made His point but significantly He added, and give back to God what is God's (lit., "the things belonging to God"). This could refer to "paying" God the temple tax due Him (cf. Matt. 17:24-27), but Jesus probably meant it as a protest against the emperor's claim to deity. Indeed the emperor must receive his due, but not more than that; he must not receive the divine honor and worship he claimed. Those are due only to God. People are "God's coinage" because they bear His image (cf. Gen. 1:27) and they owe Him what belongs to Him, their allegiance. This, not the poll tax, was the crucial issue to Jesus. His questioners continued to be greatly amazed (exethaumazon, imperf. tense of a strong compound verb found only here in the NT) at Him. This incident was especially relevant to Mark's Roman readers for it indicated that Christianity did not foster disloyalty to the state.

3. THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE RESURRECTION (12:18-27) (MATT. 22:23-33; LUKE 20:27-40)

12:18. The Sadducees . . . came to Jesus with a question in another attempt to discredit Him (cf. 11:27; 12:13). It is generally believed that they were the Jewish aristocratic party whose members came largely from the priesthood and the upper classes. Though less numerous and popular than the Pharisees, they occupied influential positions on the Sanhedrin, the Jewish supreme court and generally cooperated with the Roman authorities. They denied the truths of the resurrection, future judgment, and the existence of angels and spirits (cf. Acts 23:6-8). They accepted only the Books of Moses (the Pentateuch) as authoritative and rejected the oral traditions observed as binding by the Pharisees. This is Mark's only reference to the Sadducees.

12:19-23. After formally addressing Jesus as Teacher (cf. v. 14), they gave a free rendering of the Mosaic regulation concerning levirate (from Latin, levir, "husband's brother") marriage (cf. Deut. 25:5-10). If a husband died without leaving a male heir his (unmarried) brother (or, if none, his nearest male relative) was to marry his widow. The first son of that union was given the name of the dead brother and was considered his child. This was to prevent extinction of a family line and thereby kept the family inheritance intact.

The Sadducees made up a story about seven brothers who successively fulfilled the duty of levirate marriage to their first brother's wife but all seven died childless. Then the woman died also. They asked Jesus, At the resurrection whose wife will she be? Clearly they were ridiculing belief in the resurrection.

12:24. Using a two-pronged counterquestion expecting a positive answer in Greek, Jesus cited two reasons why they were in error (planasthe, "you are deceiving yourselves"; cf. v. 27): (a) they did not know the Scriptures—their true meaning, not merely their contents; and (b) they did not know the power of God—His power to overcome death and give life. Then Jesus amplified each reason starting with the second (v. 25) and then the first (vv. 26-27).

12:25. The Sadducees wrongly assumed that marriages would be resumed after the resurrection. In resurrection-life people will neither marry (contract a marriage) nor be given in marriage (have a marriage arranged by parents). Rather, like the angels in heaven they will be immortal beings in God's presence.

Marriage is necessary and suitable for the present world order, in which death prevails, in order to continue the human race. But angels, whose existence the Sadducees denied (cf. Acts 23:8), are deathless and live in a different order of existence where they have no need for marital relations or reproduction of offspring. Their lives center totally around fellowship with God. So it will be in the afterlife for human beings rightly related to God.

The Sadducees did not grasp that God will establish a whole new order of life after death and resolve all apparent difficulties connected with it. In short, their question was irrelevant.

12:26-27. The Sadducees wrongly alleged that the idea of a resurrection was absent from the Pentateuch. But Jesus, using a question expecting a positive answer, appealed to the Book of Moses, the Pentateuch, and spoke of the burning bush (Ex. 3:1-6).

In this passage God identified Himself to Moses, affirming, I am the God of Abraham . . . Isaac, and . . . Jacob (Ex. 3:6). God implied that the patriarchs were still alive and that He had a continuing relationship with them as their covenant-keeping God, even though they had died long before. This demonstrates, Jesus concluded, that He is not the God of the dead, in the Sadducean understanding of death as extinction, but of the living. He is still the patriarchs' God which would not be true had they ceased to exist at death, that is, if death ends it all. And His covenant faithfulness implicitly guarantees their bodily resurrection.

Jesus' answer clearly affirmed the fact of life after death. Apparently He assumed that this was enough to prove that the resurrection of the body will occur as well. In Hebrew thought people are regarded as a unity of the material (body) and immaterial (soul/spirit). One is incomplete without the other (cf. 2 Cor. 5:1-8). Thus authentic human existence in the eternal order of life demands the union of soul/spirit with the body (cf. Phil. 3:21). Both bodily resurrection and life after death depend on the faithfulness of "the God of the living."

Jesus' final remark, recorded only by Mark, emphasized how seriously mistaken (planasthe, "you are deceiving yourselves"; cf. Mark 12:24) they were to deny the resurrection and life after death.

4. THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE GREATEST COMMANDMENT (12:28-34) (MATT. 22:34-40)

12:28. One of the Law teachers (cf. 1:22), had heard Jesus' discussion with the Sadducees (12:18-27) and was impressed with His good answer to them. This suggested he was probably a Pharisee.

He came with no apparent hostile or hidden motive to appraise Jesus' skill in answering a much-debated subject in scribal circles. Traditionally the scribes spoke of 613 individual commandments of the Mosaic Law—365 negative ones and 248 positive ones. While they believed all were binding, they assumed a distinction between weightier and lighter statutes and often attempted to sum up the whole Law in a single unifying command.

In light of this debate, this Law teacher asked Jesus, Which (poia, "what kind of") commandment is the most important (prōtē, "first") of them all?

12:29-31. Jesus' reply went beyond the debated lighter/weightier classifications to a statement of the most important command and its inseparable companion, which together summarize the whole Law.

He began with the opening words of the Shema (from Heb., "Hear!" [šᵉma'], the first word of Deut. 6:4). This creed

(Num. 15:37-41; Deut. 6:4-9; 11:13-21) was recited twice daily—morning and evening—by devout Jews. It asserted the basis of Jewish faith: The Lord (Heb., Yahweh), namely, our God, Israel's covenant-keeping God, the Lord is One, that is, unique (cf. Mark 12:32).

The command, Love (lit., "you shall love") the Lord your God (Deut. 6:5), calls for a volitional commitment to God that is personal, comprehensive, and wholehearted. This is emphasized by the repeated words with (ex, "out of," denoting source), all (holēs, "the whole of"), your (sing.), and the various terms relating to the human personality—heart (control center; cf. Mark 7:19), soul (self-conscious life; cf. 8:35-36), mind (thought capacity), and strength (bodily powers). The Hebrew text does not mention "mind"; the Septuagint omits "heart"; but Jesus included both terms, stressing the comprehensive nature of the command (cf. 12:33; Matt. 22:37; Luke 10:27).

Jesus then spoke of a similar commitment to one's neighbor by quoting a second inseparable (cf. 1 John 4:19-21) and complementary command. Love (lit., "you shall love") your neighbor (plēsion, "one who is nearby," a generic term for fellowman) as, in the same way as, yourself (Lev. 19:18). The love a person has naturally for himself is not to focus solely on himself—a constant tendency—but should be directed equally toward others.

No (Gr., "no other") commandment is greater than these two because wholehearted love to God and one's neighbor is the sum and substance of the Law and the Prophets (cf. Matt. 22:40). To fulfill these commands is to fulfill all others.

12:32-34a. These verses are unique to Mark. Apparently they instructed his readers who struggled with the relationship between spiritual reality and ceremonial ritual (cf. comments on 7:19).

The scribe (cf. 12:28) recognized the accuracy of Jesus' answer and voiced his approval, viewing Him as an excellent Teacher (cf. vv. 14, 19). He restated Jesus' answer, carefully avoiding mention of God (not in the Gr. text but supplied in the NIV) in keeping with the typical Jewish practice of avoiding unnecessary use of the divine name out of great respect for it. The words, There is no other but Him, come from Deuteronomy 4:35. He also substituted the word understanding for "soul" and "mind" (cf. Mark 12:30).

He made the bold statement that the double command of love is much more important than all burnt offerings (fully consumed sacrifices) and sacrifices (those partly consumed and partly eaten by worshipers; cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Prov. 21:3; Jer. 7:21-23; Hosea 6:6; Micah 6:6-8).

He had responded wisely, and Jesus probably stimulated further thought by declaring, You are not far ("not far" is emphatic in Gr.) from the kingdom of God (cf. Mark 1:15; 4:11; 10:15, 23). This man had the kind of spiritual understanding (cf. 10:15) and openness to Jesus that brought him near to embracing God's kingdom, His spiritual rule over those related to Him by faith. Whether he entered this relationship is not known.

12:34b. Jesus had effectively thwarted all attempts to discredit Him and had exposed the hostile motives and errors of His opponents so skillfully that nobody else dared ask Him any more questions.

5. JESUS' QUESTION CONCERNING MESSIAH'S SONSHIP (12:35-37) (MATT. 22:41-46; LUKE 20:41-44)

12:35. Later while teaching in the temple courts (tō hierō; cf. 11:11), Jesus asked what the Law teachers meant when they said that the Christ, the expected Messiah, is ("simply" is implied) the Son (Descendant) of David, who would be the triumphant Deliverer (cf. 10:47). The Davidic sonship of the Messiah was a standard Jewish belief (cf. John 7:41-42) firmly based on the Old Testament Scriptures (cf. 2 Sam. 7:8-16; Ps. 89:3-4; Isa. 9:2-7; 11:1-9; Jer. 23:5-6; 30:9; 33:15-17, 22; Ezek. 34:23-24; 37:24; Hosea 3:5; Amos 9:11). Jesus added that it is equally true that the Messiah is David's Lord. The Law teachers' view was correct but incomplete (cf. similarly, Mark 9:11-13). The scriptural view held far more than just their narrow nationalistic hopes.

12:36-37a. To prove that the Messiah is David's Lord, Jesus quoted what David himself speaking by (under the controlling influence of) the Holy Spirit declared in Psalm 110:1. This clearly argues for both the Davidic authorship and the divine inspiration of this psalm. He said: The Lord (Heb., Yahweh, God the Father; cf. Mark 12:29) said to my (David's) Lord (Heb., 'Ădōnāy, the Messiah): Sit at My (the Father's) right hand, the place of highest honor and authority, until (or "while"; cf. 9:1; 14:32) I (the Father) put Your (the Messiah's) enemies under Your (the Messiah's) feet, bringing about their subjugation (cf. Josh. 10:24; Heb. 10:12-14).

The unassailable fact was that David called the Messiah Lord. This raised a problem: How then, or in what sense, can (estin, "is") He (the Messiah, David's Lord) be his (David's) Son? Jesus' rhetorical question pointed His listeners to the only valid answer: the Messiah is David's Son and David's Lord at the same time. This strongly implies that the Messiah is both God (David's Lord) and man (David's Son; cf. Rom. 1:3-4; 2 Tim. 2:8). He will restore the future Davidic kingdom on earth (2 Sam. 7:16; Amos 9:11-12; Matt. 19:28; Luke 1:31-33).

No doubt Jesus deliberately raised this issue so that His listeners might relate it to Him. It carried a bold yet veiled reference to His true identity which the Jewish leaders probably caught but did not accept (cf. comments on Mark 12:12; 14:61-62). (Interestingly the NT has more references and allusions to Ps. 110 than to any other single OT passage [cf., e.g., Acts 2:29-35; Heb. 1:5-13; 5:6; 7:17, 21].)

12:37b. In contrast with the Jewish leaders who had been trying to trap Jesus with subtle questions (cf. v. 13), the large Passover crowd was listening all along to His teaching with delight, though not necessarily with comprehension.

6. CONCLUSION: JESUS' CONDEMNATION OF HYPOCRISY AND COMMENDATION OF TRUE COMMITMENT (12:38-44)

Jesus' denunciation of the Law teachers' conduct (vv. 38-40) concludes Mark's account of His public ministry and signals Jesus' final break with the Jewish religious authorities. This contrasts sharply with His recognition of a widow's genuine devotion to God (vv. 41-44) which resumes His teaching to His disciples (cf. v. 43) and forms a transition to His prophetic discourse (chap. 13).

a. Jesus' condemnation of hypocrisy (12:38-40) (Matt. 23:1-39; Luke 20:45-47)

12:38-39. Jesus kept warning people to Watch out (cf. 8:15) for those (implied in the Gr. construction) Law teachers who sought praise from men and abused their privileges. Many but not all Law teachers acted this way (cf. 12:28-34).

They liked to (a) go around in flowing robes, long white linen garments with fringes worn by priests, Law teachers, and Levites; (b) be greeted in the marketplaces with formal titles—Rabbi (teacher), master, father (cf. Matt. 23:7; Luke 20:46)—by the common people who respected them highly; (c) have the most important synagogue seats, those reserved for dignitaries, situated in front of the chest containing the sacred scrolls of Scripture and facing the whole congregation; and (d) have the places of honor at banquets, special evening meals at which they were seated next to the host and received preferential treatment.

12:40. Since first-century Law teachers got no pay for their services (Mishnah Aboth 1. 13; Bekhoroth 4. 6) they depended on the hospitality extended to them by many devout Jews. Unfortunately there were abuses. The charge, they devour widows' houses, was a vivid figure of speech for exploiting the generosity of people of limited means, especially widows. They unethically appropriated people's property. In addition, they made lengthy prayers in order to impress people with their piety and gain their confidence.

Jesus condemned their ostentatious conduct, greed, and hypocrisy. Instead of pointing people's attention to God they claimed it for themselves under the pretense of piety. Teachers such as these will be punished most severely (lit., "will receive greater condemnation"; James 3:1) at God's final judgment.

b. Jesus' commendation of a widow's commitment to God (12:41-44) (Luke 21:1-4)

12:41-42. From the court of the Gentiles (cf. 11:15) where He conducted His public teaching, Jesus entered the court of the women. Against the wall of this court were 13 trumpet-shaped collection receptacles for receiving worshipers' freewill offerings and contributions (Mishnah Shekalim 6. 5).

From a vantage point opposite (katenanti; cf. comments on 11:2) one of these receptacles Jesus was observing how (pōs, "in what way") the Passover crowd was putting their money into the temple treasury (lit., "the receptacle").

In contrast with many wealthy people who gave large amounts (lit., "many coins" of all kinds—gold, silver, copper, and bronze), one unnamed poor widow gave two lepta (Gr.). A lepton was the smallest bronze Jewish coin in circulation in Palestine. Two lepta were worth 1/64 of a Roman denarius, a day's wage for a laborer (cf. 6:37). For his Roman readers Mark stated their value in terms of Roman coinage, namely, a fraction of a penny.

12:43-44. With solemn introductory words (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) Jesus said that she had given more . . . than all the others. The reason was (gar, "for, because") the others gave out of their material wealth at little cost to them, but the widow out of her poverty gave everything. Proportionally she had given the most—all she had to live on. In giving to God sacrificially she completely entrusted herself to Him to provide her needs.

She could have kept back one coin for herself. A Rabbinic rule stating that an offering of less than two lepta was not acceptable related to charitable gifts and does not apply here. Jesus used her example to teach His disciples the value God places on wholehearted commitment. Their own commitment to Jesus would soon be severely tested (cf. 14:27-31). This incident also illustrates Jesus' total self-giving in death.

D. Jesus' prophetic Olivet Discourse to His disciples (chap. 13) (Matt. 24:1–25:46; Luke 21:5-36)

This chapter, known as the Olivet Discourse as Jesus gave it on the Mount of Olives, is the longest unit of His teaching recorded by Mark (cf. Mark 4:1-34).

Jesus predicted the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem (13:2) which prompted the disciples to inquire about the timing of "these things" (v. 4). Apparently they associated the destruction of the temple with the end of the Age (cf. Matt. 24:3). In reply Jesus skillfully wove together into a unified discourse a prophetic scene involving two perspectives: (a) the near event, the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70); and (b) the far event, the coming of the Son of Man in clouds with power and glory. The former local event was a forerunner of the latter universal event. In this way Jesus followed the precedent of Old Testament prophets by predicting a far future event in terms of a near future event whose fulfillment at least some of His hearers would see (cf. Mark 9:1, 12-13).

This indicates Jesus anticipated a period of historical development between His resurrection and His second coming (cf. 13:10; 14:9). Nearly two millennia have passed since the fall of Jerusalem, and the end has not yet come. This prophetic information was set within a framework of (a) warnings against deception and (b) exhortations to vigilant obedience during the intervening time of missionary outreach, persecution, and socio-political upheavals. There are 19 imperatives in 13:5-37, and in each case the hortatory element (second person verbs: vv. 5b, 7a, 9a, et al.) arises out of Jesus' instruction about the future (third person indicative verbs: vv. 6, 7b-8, 9b-10, et al.). The verb "be on guard" (blepete) occurs four times at significant points throughout the discourse (vv. 5 ["Watch out," NIV], 9, 23, 33). This was to encourage His followers to maintain steadfast faith and obedience to God throughout the present Age.

In Mark's narrative, the Olivet Discourse is a bridge between Jesus' controversies with the religious authorities (11:27–12:44) and the Passion narrative (14:1–15:47) which culminated in His arrest and death. It disclosed to His disciples that the religious establishment which opposed Him and would eventually condemn Him to death would itself fall under God's judgment.

1. SETTING: JESUS' PREDICTION OF THE TEMPLE'S DESTRUCTION (13:1-4) (MATT. 24:1-3; LUKE 21:5-7)

13:1. As Jesus was leaving the temple area (hierou; cf. 11:11) probably on Wednesday evening of Passion Week (cf. the introduction to 11:1–13:37) one of His disciples addressed Him as Teacher

(cf. 4:38; 9:5) and with awe and admiration called attention to the massive stones (lit., "Behold, what manner of stones") and the magnificent buildings in the temple, that is, the sanctuary itself with its various courts, balconies, colonnades, and porches.

The Jerusalem temple (not fully completed until ca. A.D. 64) was built by the Herodian dynasty to win Jewish favor and to create a lasting Herodian monument. It was considered an architectural wonder of the ancient world. It was built with large white stones, polished and generously decorated with gold (Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 15. 11. 3-7). It covered about 1/6 of the land area of old Jerusalem. To the Jews nothing was as magnificent and formidable as their temple.

13:2. Jesus' response was a startling prediction of the total destruction of all these great buildings. The whole complex would be completely leveled—literally, "stone will certainly not (ou mē) be left here upon stone." Jesus' use of the emphatic double negative (ou mē) twice stressed the certainty of His words' fulfillment.

This ominous prediction is the sequel to Jesus' judgment on the misuse of the temple (cf. 11:15-17; Jer. 7:11-14). As in Jeremiah's day so again the destruction of the temple by a foreign power would be God's judgment on rebellious Israel.

This prediction was fulfilled literally within the span of a generation. In A.D. 70, after the temple area was burned contrary to Titus' directives, he ordered his Roman soldiers to demolish the whole city and level its buildings to the ground (Josephus Jewish Wars 7. 1. 1).

13:3-4. Going across the Kidron Valley to the top of the Mount of Olives (cf. 11:1a), Jesus and His disciples sat down opposite the temple. The Mount of Olives rises about 2,700 feet above sea level but is only about 100 feet higher than Jerusalem. West of the mount lay the temple and the city.

The four disciples Jesus called first (cf. 1:16-20) asked Him privately (kat' idian; cf. 6:32) for more information about His prediction. Only Mark recorded their names. Often in Mark a question from the disciples introduced a section of Jesus' teaching to them (cf. 4:10-32; 7:17-23; 9:11-13, 28-29; 10:10-12).

The disciples' question, perhaps voiced by Peter (cf. 8:29), is expressed in two parts: (a) When will these things (destruction of the temple [13:2] and other future events [note the pl.]) happen, and (b) What will be the sign that they (lit., "these things") are all about to be fulfilled? The verb "fulfilled" (synteleisthai, "be accomplished") denotes the final consummation, the end of the present Age (cf. v. 7; Matt. 24:3).

Having only the perspective of Old Testament prophecy (e.g., Zech. 14), the disciples saw no long interval between the temple's destruction and the end-time events climaxing in the coming of the Son of Man. They assumed that the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple were some of the events at the end of the present Age and would inaugurate the messianic kingdom. They wanted to know when this would happen and what visible sign would indicate that fulfillment was about to take place.

2. PROPHETIC DISCOURSE IN JESUS' ANSWER TO HIS DISCIPLES' QUESTIONS (13:5-32)

The conditions associated with the impending local crisis of Jerusalem's fall foreshadow those connected with the worldwide end-time crisis. Thus Jesus' words, relevant to His first disciples, remain so for all disciples who face similar conditions throughout this Age.

He first answered their second question regarding "the sign" (v. 4b) in two ways: negatively, by warning them against false signs of the end (vv. 5-13), and positively, by stating the notable event that inaugurates unparalleled tribulation and by describing the Second Advent (vv. 14-27). Then He answered their first question regarding "when" (v. 4a) in a parable (vv. 28-32).

a. His warnings against deception (13:5-8) (Matt. 24:4-8; Luke 21:8-11)

13:5-6. Watch out (blepete, "take heed, be on guard") is a call to vigilance repeated throughout the discourse (cf. vv. 9, 23, 33; v. 35 has a different verb). Jesus warned His disciples to be on guard against messianic impostors. Many false messiahs (cf. v. 22) will arise in crisis times, making use of His name (His title and authority), claiming, I am He (lit., egō eimi, "I am"). This claim to deity is expressed in the formula of God's own self-revelation (cf. 6:50; Ex. 3:14; John 8:58). They will lead many people astray (cf. Acts 8:9-11).

13:7-8. Second, Jesus warned His disciples against misinterpreting contemporary events such as wars and natural disasters as indications that the end is at hand. They were not to be alarmed and thereby diverted from their work whenever they would hear of wars (sounds of battle close at hand) and rumors (lit., "reports") of wars far away. It is necessary (dei, by divine compulsion; cf. 8:31; 13:10) that these things come about. They fall within God's sovereign purposes, which include permitting wars as a consequence of human rebellion and sin. But the end—of the present Age and the establishing of God's rule on earth—is still to come (lit., "is not yet").

This is confirmed (gar, "for") and expanded: Nation will rise (lit., "shall be raised," i.e., by God; cf. Isa. 19:2) in armed aggression against nation. In addition there will be earthquakes and famines, suggesting divine judgment. Yet these ("these things") are just the (lit., "a") beginning of birth pains. The words "birth pains," the sharp pains preceding childbirth, picture divine judgment (cf. Isa. 13:6-8; 26:16-18; Jer. 22:20-23; Hosea 13:9-13; Micah 4:9-10). They refer to the period of intense suffering preceding the birth of the new Age, the messianic kingdom.

This emphasis—"the end is still to come" (Mark 13:7d) and "these [things] are the beginning of birth pains" (v. 8c)—suggests that an extended period of time will precede "the end." Each generation will have its own wars and natural disasters. Yet all these events fall within God's purposes. Human history is heading toward the birth of the new Messianic Age.

b. His warnings about personal dangers while under persecution (13:9-13) (Matt. 24:9-14; Luke 21:12-19)

These "floating sayings" (cf. their use in other contexts: Matt. 10:17-22; Luke 12:11-12) are linked by the word paradidōmi ("to hand over," Mark 13:9, 11 ["arrested," NIV], 12 ["betray," NIV]). Jesus probably said these words several times, not just here on the Mount of Olives. His purpose here was to prepare His disciples for suffering because of their allegiance to Him.

13:9. With the admonition, Be on your guard (blepete; cf. v. 5), Jesus warned His disciples to be alert against wrongful retaliation under persecution. They would be handed over for trial to the local councils (lit., "sanhedrins"), local Jewish courts held in the synagogues. And they would be publicly flogged, that is, beaten with 39 strokes (cf. 2 Cor. 11:24), in the synagogues as heretics (cf. Mishnah Makkoth 3. 10-14). Because of their loyalty to Jesus Christ they will stand (lit., "be made to stand") before Gentile civil authorities, that is, provincial rulers (cf. Acts 12:1; 23:24; 24:27), as witnesses to them (cf. comments on Mark 1:44; 6:11). Their witness to the gospel during their defenses would become, in God's final judgment, incriminating evidence against their persecutors.

13:10. The gospel must (dei, "out of [divine] necessity"; cf. v. 7; 8:31) first be preached ("proclaimed") to all nations (emphatic word position in Gr.), all peoples worldwide (cf. 11:17; 14:9).

In proclaiming the gospel the disciples would be persecuted but they must not despair and give up. Despite all opposition, it is a priority in God's plan for this Age and will be accomplished in accordance with His purposes. It is the responsibility of each generation (cf. Rom. 1:5, 8; 15:18-24; Col. 1:6, 23). But preaching the gospel worldwide does not require or guarantee its worldwide acceptance before or at the end of the Age (cf. Matt. 25:31-46).

13:11. Whenever the disciples are arrested (from paradidōmi; cf. v. 9) and brought to trial for preaching the gospel, they are not to be anxious beforehand about what to say in giving a defense. They are to speak whatever God (implied) gives them to say at that moment (cf. Ex. 4:12; Jer. 1:9). The Holy Spirit would do the speaking; He would enable them to say the right things at the right times with boldness despite their natural fears. This assistance, however, did not guarantee acquittal.

13:12-13. Opposition will come through official channels (vv. 9, 11) and also through close personal relationships.

It will be so severe that family members—brother versus brother, father versus child, and children versus parents—will betray (from paradidōmi; cf. vv. 9, 11) each other to hostile authorities, thereby causing Christian members to be put to death. Because of their allegiance to Jesus (lit., "on account of My name"; cf. v. 9), His disciples will be hated continually by all men, that is, all kinds of people, not just hostile authorities or family members (cf. Phil. 1:29; 3:11; Col. 1:24; 1 Peter 4:16). He who stands firm (lit., "he who has endured," viewing one's life as completed), who has remained loyal to Jesus Christ and the gospel (cf. Mark 8:35) to the end (eis telos, adverbial phrase; an idiom meaning "completely, to the limit"; cf. John 13:1; 1 Thes. 2:16) of his life on earth, will be saved (cf. Mark 8:35; 10:26-27). This "saved" one will experience God's salvation in its final form—glorification (contrast usage in 13:20; cf. Heb. 9:27-28). Perseverance is a result and outward sign, not the basis, of spiritual genuineness (cf. Rom. 8:29-30; 1 John 2:19). A person genuinely saved by grace through faith (cf. Eph. 2:8-10) endures to the end and will experience the consummation of his salvation.

These words of warning were pertinent to Mark's Roman readers who were threatened by persecution for their allegiance to Jesus. Such suffering could be more readily endured when viewed in the context of God's plan for worldwide evangelism and vindication. (Cf. comments on Matt. 24:13.)

c. Jesus' portrayal of the coming crisis (13:14-23)

Jesus then answered the disciples' second question (Mark 13:4b) positively (vv. 14-23).

Some interpreters limit the events of this section to the chaotic years preceding Jerusalem's fall (A.D. 66-70). Others relate them exclusively to the Great Tribulation at the end of this Age. But the details suggest that both events are in view (cf. Matt. 24:15-16, 29-31; Luke 21:20-28). The conquest of Jerusalem is theologically (not chronologically) attached to the end-time events (cf. Dan. 9:26-27; Luke 21:24). The expression "the abomination that causes desolation" is the link between the historical and eschatological perspectives (cf. Dan. 11:31 with Dan. 9:27; 12:11). These "near" tribulations foreshadowed the "far" Tribulation of the end time.

13:14. The sign that "these things" were about to be fulfilled (cf. v. 4b) was the appearance of the abomination that causes desolation (lit., "the abomination of desolation"; cf. Dan. 9:27; 11:31; 12:11; Matt. 24:15), standing where it does not belong, a reference to the temple sanctuary. More precise identification may have been politically dangerous for his readers. Mark's exhortation, Let the reader understand, was a decoding signal urging them to recognize the significance of Jesus' words in light of their Old Testament context (cf., e.g., Dan. 9:25-27).

The word "abomination" denoted pagan idolatry and its detestable practices (Deut. 29:16-18; 2 Kings 16:3-4; 23:12-14; Ezek. 8:9-18). The phrase "the abomination of desolation" referred to the presence of an idolatrous person or object so detestable that it caused the temple to be abandoned and left desolate.

Historically, the first fulfillment of Daniel's prophetic use of the expression (Dan. 11:31-32) was the desecration of the temple in 167 B.C. by the Syrian ruler Antiochus Epiphanes. He erected an altar to the pagan Greek god Zeus over the altar of burnt offering and sacrificed a pig on it (cf. apocryphal 1 Maccabees 1:41-64; 6:7; and Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 12. 5. 4).

Jesus' use of "the abomination of desolation" referred to another fulfillment—the temple's desecration and destruction in A.D. 70. When (lit., "whenever") His disciples, those present and future, see this desecration take place, it is a signal for people in Judea to escape to the mountains beyond the Jordan River in Perea.

Josephus recorded the occupation and appalling profaning of the temple in A.D. 67-68 by Jewish Zealots, who also installed a usurper, Phanni, as high priest (Josephus Jewish Wars 4. 3. 7-10; 4. 6. 3). Jewish Christians fled to Pella, a town located in the Transjordanian mountains (Eusebius Ecclesiastical History 3. 5. 3).

The events of 167 B.C. and A.D. 70 foreshadow a final fulfillment of Jesus' words just prior to His Second Advent (cf. Mark 13:24-27). Mark used the masculine participle "standing" (hestēkota, masc. perf. part.) to modify the neuter noun "abomination" (bdelygma; v. 14). This suggests that "the abomination" is a future person "standing where he (NIV marg.) does not belong."

This person is the end-time Antichrist (Dan. 7:23-26; 9:25-27; 2 Thes. 2:3-4, 8-9; Rev. 13:1-10, 14-15). He will make a covenant with the Jewish people at the beginning of the seven-year period preceding Christ's second coming (Dan. 9:27). The temple will be rebuilt and worship reestablished (Rev. 11:1). In the middle of this period (after 3½ years) the Antichrist will break his covenant, stop temple sacrifices, desecrate the temple (cf. Dan. 9:27), and proclaim himself to be God (Matt. 24:15; 2 Thes. 2:3-4; Rev. 11:2). This launches the terrible end-time events of the Great Tribulation (Rev. 6; 8–9; 16). Those who refuse to be identified with the Antichrist will suffer severe persecution and be forced to flee for refuge (Rev. 12:6, 13-17). Many—both Jews and Gentiles—will be saved during this period (Rev. 7) but many will also be martyred (Rev. 6:9-11).

13:15-18. When this crisis breaks, the person on the roof of his house (cf. 2:2-4) must not take time to go inside to retrieve any possessions. The person working out in the field must not take time to go back to another part of the field or his house to get his cloak, an outer garment that protected against cold night air.

Jesus expressed compassion for pregnant women and nursing mothers forced to flee under such difficult circumstances. He exhorted His disciples (cf. 13:14) to pray that this (lit., "it"; cf. v. 29)—the coming crisis necessitating their flight—will not happen during the winter, the rainy season when swollen streams would be difficult to cross.

13:19. The reason their flight was urgent and hopefully would be unhindered is that those (lit., "those days") will be days of distress (lit., "will be a tribulation," thlipsis; cf. v. 24) unequaled from the beginning of Creation until now . . . never (ou mē; cf. v. 2) to be equaled again. At no time in the past, present, or future has there been or will there be such a severe tribulation as this.

This unprecedented distress was true of but not restricted to the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. Josephus Jewish Wars preface; 1. 1. 4; 5. 10. 5). Jesus looked beyond A.D. 70 to the final Great Tribulation (thlipsis; cf. Rev. 7:14) prior to the Second Advent. This is supported by these facts: (a) Mark 13:19 echoes Daniel 12:1, an end-time prophecy; (b) the words "never to be equaled again" indicate that another crisis will never be like this one; (c) "those days" link the "near" future with the "far" future (cf. Mark 13:17, 19-20, 24; Jer. 3:16, 18; 33:14-16; Joel 3:1) (d) the days will be terminated (Mark 13:20).

13:20. If the Lord (Yahweh God; cf. 12:29), had not already decided in His sovereign plan to cut short (terminate, not reduce the number of) those days (lit., "the days"; cf. 13:19), no one would survive (esōthē, "would be saved"; cf. 15:30-31), that is, be delivered from physical death; this is in contrast with 13:13. But God set limits on the duration of the end-time Tribulation, because of the elect, those redeemed during "those days," whom He has chosen for Himself (cf. Acts 13:48). While all this proved true indirectly in A.D. 70, the language of this verse suggests God's direct intervention in judgment, an unmistakable characteristic of the end-time Tribulation (cf. Rev. 16:1).

13:21-22. At that time (tote, "then"; cf. vv. 26-27) in the middle of "those days" (cf. v. 19) of severe affliction and flight, if someone should claim that the Christ (Messiah) was here or there, His disciples were not to believe it (the fallacious claim, or possibly "him," the person), and turn aside from taking refuge. Jesus explained that many false Christs (messiahs; cf. v. 6) and false prophets would appear and perform miraculous deeds that would seem to validate their claims. Their purpose would be to mislead the elect (cf. v. 20), believers in the true Messiah. The clause if that were possible shows that they will not succeed.

13:23. Again Jesus exhorted His disciples, Be on . . . guard (blepete; cf. vv. 5, 9) for deceptive pitfalls in crisis days.

d. Jesus' portrayal of His triumphant return (13:24-27)

13:24-25. The word But (alla) introduces a sharp contrast between the appearance of false messiahs who will perform miraculous signs (v. 22) and the dramatic coming of the true Messiah in those days (cf. vv. 19-20; Joel 2:28-32) following that distress (thlipsin, "tribulation"; cf. Mark 13:19). These phrases indicate a close connection with verses 14-23. If these verses apply exclusively to the events of A.D. 70 then Jesus Christ should have returned shortly thereafter. That He did not return then supports the view that verses 14-23 refer to both the destruction of Jerusalem and the future Great Tribulation before Christ will return.

A variety of cosmic disorders involving the sun . . . moon, and stars will immediately precede the Second Advent. Jesus' description is fashioned from Isaiah 13:10 and 34:4 without His quoting exactly from either passage. This vividly refers to observable celestial changes in the physical universe.

The last statement—the heavenly bodies (lit., "the powers that are in the skies") will be shaken—may refer to: (a) physical forces controlling the movements of the celestial bodies which will be thrown out of their normal course, or (b) spiritual forces of evil, Satan and his cohorts, who will be greatly disturbed by these events. The first view is preferred.

13:26. At that time (tote, "then"; this Gr. word is also used in vv. 21, 27 though the NIV does not trans. it in v. 27) when the cosmic events just mentioned have taken place, men (generic, "people") living on the earth then will see the Son of Man (cf. 8:31, 38) coming in clouds or "with clouds." The "clouds of heaven" signify divine presence (cf. 9:7; Ex. 19:9; Ps. 97:1-2; Dan. 7:13; Matt. 24:30b). He will exercise great power and display heavenly glory (cf. Zech. 14:1-7). This is Jesus' personal, visible, bodily return to the earth as the glorified Son of Man (cf. Acts 1:11; Rev. 1:7; 19:11-16). Jesus described it in the familiar but elusive language of Daniel 7:13-14. His triumphant return will bring an end to the veiled nature of God's kingdom in its present form (cf. comments on Mark 1:15; 4:13-23).

13:27. Also at that time (tote, "then," omitted in the NIV; cf. vv. 21, 26) the Son of Man will send forth (cf. 4:29) His angels (cf. 8:38; Matt. 25:31) and gather His elect (cf. Mark 13:20, 22) from the four winds. The "four winds" means from all directions, a reference to people living in all parts of the world, as emphasized by the last two phrases (v. 27). None of the elect will be left out. Though not stated, this would appear to include a resurrection of Old Testament saints and believers martyred during the Tribulation (cf. Dan. 12:2; Rev. 6:9-11; 20:4). Nothing is said here about those not among the elect (cf. 2 Thes. 1:6-10; Rev. 20:11-15).

The Old Testament often mentioned God's regathering of dispersed Israelites from the remotest parts of the earth to national and spiritual unity in Palestine (Deut. 30:3-6; Isa. 11:12; Jer. 31:7-9; Ezek. 11:16-17; 20:33-35, 41). At the time of the Second Advent Israelites will be regathered around the triumphant Son of Man, judged, restored as a nation, and redeemed (Isa. 59:20-21; Ezek. 20:33-44; Zech. 13:8-9; Rom. 11:25-27). Also all the Gentiles will be gathered before Him (Joel 3:2) and like a shepherd He will separate "the sheep" (the elect) from "the goats" (Matt. 25:31-46). These redeemed Jews and Gentiles will enter the millennial kingdom, living on the earth in natural bodies (Isa. 2:2-4; Dan. 7:13-14; Micah 4:1-5; Zech. 14:8-11, 16-21).

Identifying "the elect" in this context as Gentiles and Jews who come to believe in Jesus as the Messiah during the final Tribulation period (cf. Rev. 7:3-4, 9-10) is compatible with a pretribulational view of the Rapture of the church, the body of Christ (cf. 1 Cor. 15:51-53; 1 Thes. 4:13-18). Since the church will be spared from God's final judgment on the earth (cf. 1 Thes. 1:10; 5:9-11; Rev. 3:9-10), the church will not go through the Tribulation. This preserves the imminence of the Rapture for present-day believers and gives added emphasis to Jesus' exhortation, "Watch!" (cf. Mark 13:35-37) But since Jesus' disciples had no clear understanding of the coming church (cf. Matt. 16:18; Acts 1:4-8), He did not mention this initial phase of God's end-time program separately.

Some interpreters, however, hold to a posttribulational view of the Rapture. They identify "the elect" here as the redeemed of all ages—past, present, and future. This requires the resurrection of all the righteous dead at the end of the Tribulation and together with all living believers they will be caught up (raptured) to meet the returning Son of Man who descends to the earth at that time. Thus the church, the body of Christ, remains on earth during the Tribulation period, is supernaturally protected as an entity through it, is raptured at the end of it, and immediately returns to the earth to participate in the Millennium. But in light of the preceding discussion on Mark 13:17 and the following discussion on verse 32, the pretribulational viewpoint is preferred.

e. His parabolic lesson from the fig tree (13:28-32)

13:28. The disciples' first question (v. 4a) was, "When will these things happen?" Jesus exhorted them to learn a lesson (lit., "the parable"; cf. introduction to 4:1-2) from the fig tree. Though the fig tree was sometimes used as a symbol for Israel (11:14), Jesus did not intend such a meaning here (in Luke 21:29 the words "and all the trees" are added). In contrast with most of Palestine's trees, fig trees lose their leaves in winter and bloom later in the spring. Thus whenever the stiff, dry, winter twigs become tender, softened due to the rising sap, and leaves appear, then observers know that winter is past and summer is near.

13:29. This verse applies the lesson of verse 28. Whenever you (emphatic position in Gr.), the disciples in contrast with others, see these things (cf. vv. 4, 23, 30), the events described in verses 14-23, then you know that the impending crisis (cf. v. 14) is near in time, in fact, right at the door. This was a common figure for an imminent event. If alert to these events the disciples have sufficient insight to discern their true meaning.

The unstated subject of the Greek verb "is" could be rendered "He" (the Son of Man) or preferably it ("the abomination that causes desolation," v. 14).

13:30-31. With solemn introductory words (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) Jesus declared that this generation will certainly not (ou mē, emphatic double negative; cf. 13:2) come to an end until (lit., "until which time") all these things (cf. vv. 4b, 29) have taken place. "Generation" (genea) can refer to one's "contemporaries," all those living at a given time (cf. 8:12, 38; 9:19), or to a group of people descended from a common ancestor (cf. Matt. 23:36). Since the word "generation" is capable of both a narrow and a broad sense, it is preferable in this context (cf. Mark 13:14) to understand in it a double reference incorporating both senses. Thus "this generation" means: (a) the Jews living at Jesus' time who later saw the destruction of Jerusalem, and (b) the Jews who will be living at the time of the Great Tribulation who will see the end-time events. This accounts best for the accomplishment of "all these things" (cf. vv. 4b, 14-23).

Jesus' assertion (v. 31) guarantees the fulfillment of His prophecy (v. 30). The present universe will come to a cataclysmic end (cf. 2 Peter 3:7, 10-13) but Jesus' words—including these predictions—will never (ou mē; cf. Mark 13:2, 30) pass away. They will have eternal validity. What is true of God's words (cf. Isa. 40:6-8; 55:11) is equally true of Jesus' words, for He is God.

13:32. Though it will be possible for some to discern the proximity of the coming crisis (vv. 28-29), yet no one knows the precise moment when that day or hour will arrive (cf. v. 33) except the Father. Not even the angels (cf. 1 Peter 1:12) nor the Son know. This openly expressed limitation on Jesus' knowledge affirms His humanity. In His Incarnation Jesus voluntarily accepted human limitations, including this one (cf. Acts 1:7), in submission to the Father's will (cf. John 4:34). On the other hand Jesus' use of "the Son" title (only here in Mark) instead of the usual "Son of Man" revealed His own awareness of His deity and sonship (cf. Mark 8:38). Nevertheless He exercised His divine attributes only at the Father's bidding (cf. 5:30; John 8:28-29).

The words "that day or hour" are widely understood to refer to the Son of Man's second coming (Mark 13:26). But that event will climax a series of preliminary events. In light of Old Testament usage and this context (vv. 14, 29-30) it is preferable to understand "that day" as referring to "the day of the Lord."

The "day of the Lord" includes the Tribulation, the Second Advent, and the Millennium (cf. Isa. 2:12-22; Jer. 30:7-9; Joel 2:28-32; Amos 9:11; Zeph. 3:11-20; Zech. 12–14). It will begin suddenly and unexpectedly (cf. 1 Thes. 5:2), so no one except the Father knows the critical moment.

In the pretribulational view of the future (cf. comments on Mark 13:27) the coming of the Lord for His own (the Rapture) will occur before the 70th week of Daniel. The Rapture is not conditioned by any preliminary events. It is therefore an imminent event for each generation. The Parable of the Absent House Owner (vv. 34-37) along with Matthew's corresponding account (cf. Matt. 24:42-44) support this view. It precludes all date-setting and lends urgency to Jesus' exhortations to be watching and working till His return.

3. JESUS' EXHORTATION TO VIGILANCE (13:33-37)

13:33. Because no one knows when (cf. v. 4a) that time, the appointed time of God's intervention ("that day," v. 32), will come, Jesus repeated His admonition, Be on guard! (blepete; cf. vv. 5, 9, 23) and added, Be alert! (agrypneite, "be constantly awake")

13:34-37. The Parable of the Absent House Owner, unique to Mark, reinforces the call to constant vigilance and defines it as a faithful fulfillment of assigned tasks (cf. Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 19:11-27).

Before going away on a journey the Owner put his servants (collectively) in charge of carrying on the work of his house. He gave each one his own task and ordered the doorkeeper who controlled all access to the house to keep watch (grēgoreite, pres. tense; cf. Mark 13:33).

Jesus applied this parable to His disciples (vv. 35-37) without distinguishing between the doorkeeper and the other servants. They all are responsible to keep watch, to be alert to spiritual dangers and opportunities (cf. vv. 5-13) because no one knows when (cf. v. 33) the Owner (kyrios) of the house, who indirectly represents Jesus Himself, will return. The night represents the time of the Owner's (Jesus') absence (cf. Rom. 13:11-14). He could return at any time, so they should be constantly watching in view of the danger that if (lit., "when") the Owner, Jesus, comes suddenly, He should find them sleeping (spiritually negligent), not watching for His return. Such vigilance is the responsibility not only of the Twelve (cf. Mark 13:3) but also of every believer in every generation during this present Age. Believers should be watching and working (cf. v. 34) in light of the certainty of His return, though its time is unknown except to the Father.

The reference to the four watches corresponds to the Roman system of reckoning time. The evening was 6–9 P.M.; the midnight watch was 9 P.M. till midnight; when the rooster crows was the third watch (midnight till 3 A.M.); and dawn was 3–6 A.M. (These names of the watches were derived from their termination points.) This differs from the Jewish system of dividing the night into three watches. Mark used the Roman system for his readers' benefit (cf. 6:48).

VIII. Jesus' Suffering and Death in Jerusalem (chaps. 14–15)

The sixth major section of Mark's Gospel, the Passion narrative, includes Jesus' betrayal, arrest, trial, and death by crucifixion. It provides the necessary historical and theological perspective for various themes mentioned earlier in the Gospel: (a) Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God (1:1; 8:29); (b) His conflicts with the religious authorities (3:6; 11:18; 12:12); (c) His rejection, betrayal, and abandonment by those close to Him (3:19; 6:1-6); (d) His disciples' failure to understand His messianic office clearly (8:31–10:52); (e) His coming as the Son of Man to give His life a ransom for many (10:45).

The narrative reflects how the early Christians turned to the Old Testament (esp. Pss. 22; 69; Isa. 53) to understand the meaning of Jesus' suffering and death and to explain the ignominious course of events to their Jewish and Gentile contemporaries (cf. 1 Cor. 1:22-24).

A. Jesus' betrayal, the Passover meal, and His disciples' desertion (14:1-52)

This division consists of three cycles of events (vv. 1-11, 12-26, 27-52).

1. THE PLOT TO KILL JESUS AND HIS ANOINTING IN BETHANY (14:1-11)

Like other passages in Mark the first cycle of events in this division also has a "sandwich" structure (cf. 3:20-35; 5:21-43; 6:7-31; 11:12-26; 14:27-52). The account of the conspiracy by the religious leaders and Judas (vv. 1-2, 10-11) is divided by the account of Jesus' anointing in Bethany (vv. 3-9). In this way Mark emphasized the striking contrast between the hostility of those who plotted His death and the loving devotion of one who recognized Him as the suffering Messiah.

a. The leaders' plot to arrest and kill Jesus (14:1-2)

14:1a. Mark's Passion narrative begins with a new chronological starting point (cf. introduction to 11:1-11), the first of several time notations that link the following events. The chronology of the Passion Week events is complicated partly because two systems of reckoning time were in use, the Roman (modern) system in which a new day starts at midnight and the Jewish system in which a new day begins at sunset (cf. 13:35).

The Passover, observed in Jerusalem (cf. Deut. 16:5-6), was an annual Jewish festival (cf. Ex. 12:1-14) celebrated on Nisan (March-April) 14-15 (which most say was Thursday-Friday of Jesus' Passion Week). Preparations for the Passover meal (cf. Mark 14:12-16)—the highlight of the festival—included the slaughter of the Passover lamb which took place near the close of Nisan 14 by Jewish reckoning, Thursday afternoon. The Passover meal was eaten at the beginning of Nisan 15, that is, between sunset and midnight Thursday evening. This was followed immediately by the festival of Unleavened Bread celebrated from Nisan 15-21 inclusive, to commemorate the Jews' exodus from Egypt (cf. Ex. 12:15-20).

These two Jewish festivals were closely related and in popular usage were often designated as the "Jewish Passover Feast" (an eight-day festival, Nisan 14-21 inclusive; cf. Mark 14:2; John 2:13, 23; 6:4; 11:55). So Nisan 14, the day of preparation, was commonly called "the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread" (cf. Mark 14:12; Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 2. 15. 1). The words only two days away are literally, "after two days." To the Jews, with their inclusive way of counting, "after two days" would mean "on the day after tomorrow." Reckoning from Nisan 15 (Friday) two days prior would be Nisan 13 (Wednesday), and "after two days" means "after Wednesday and Thursday."

14:1b-2. The Jewish religious leaders, Sanhedrin members (cf. 8:31; 11:27; Matt. 26:3), had already decided that Jesus must be put to death (cf. John 11:47-53). But their fear of a popular uprising kept them from seizing Him openly. So they kept seeking (ezētoun, imperf. tense; cf. Mark 11:18; 12:12) for some sly way (lit., "how to seize Him by deceit"), by a cunning covert strategy, to do it. However, because of the large Passover crowds it was still unwise to risk a riot by many potential supporters of Jesus, especially impetuous Galileans. So the leaders determined not to seize Him during the Feast, the full eight-day festival, Nisan 14-21 inclusive (cf. 14:1a). Apparently they planned to arrest Him after the crowds had gone, but Judas' unexpected offer (cf. vv. 10-11) expedited matters. Thus God's timetable was followed.

b. Jesus' anointing in Bethany (14:3-9)

This anointing episode is not to be equated with an earlier anointing in Galilee (Luke 7:36-50). However, it is the same episode recorded in John 12:1-8 though there are some significant differences. One difference concerns when the event occurred. John stated that it happened "six days before the Passover," that is, the beginning of the Passover festival, Nisan 14 (Thursday). This means it occurred the previous Friday. Mark's placement seems to suggest that the episode occurred on Wednesday of Passion Week (cf. Mark 14:1a). In light of this it seems reasonable to follow John's chronology and to conclude that Mark used the incident thematically (cf. introduction to 2:1-12; 11:1-11) to contrast the responses of this woman and Judas. Consequently the time reference in 14:1 governs the leaders' concern to arrest Jesus, not this event.

14:3. While . . . in Bethany (cf. comments in 11:1a) Jesus was being honored with a festive meal in the home of . . . Simon the Leper, a man apparently cured by Jesus previously (cf. 1:40) and well known to the early disciples. The unnamed woman was Mary, sister of Martha and Lazarus (cf. John 12:3). She came with an alabaster jar, a small stone flask with a long slender neck, containing about a pint of costly perfume (lit., "ointment") made of pure (unadulterated) nard, an aromatic oil from a rare plant root native to India.

Mary broke the slender neck of the stone flask and poured the perfume over Jesus' head. John wrote that she poured it on Jesus' feet and wiped them with her hair (cf. John 12:3). Both are possible since Jesus was reclining on a dining couch at the table (cf. Mark 14:18). Anointing a guest's head was a common custom at festive Jewish meals (cf. Ps. 23:5; Luke 7:46) but Mary's act had a greater meaning (cf. Mark 14:8-9).

14:4-5. Some of the disciples, led by Judas (cf. John 12:4), voiced angry (cf. Mark 10:14) criticism of this apparent wasteful extravagance. In their view the act was uncalled for because the perfume . . . could have been sold for more than a year's wages (lit., "more than 300 denarii," roughly a year's wages; cf. comments on 6:37) and the money given to the poor. This was a legitimate concern (cf. John 13:29), but here it concealed the disciples' insensitivity and Judas' greed (cf. John 12:6). So they were scolding (same verb in Mark 1:43) her, a comment unique to Mark.

14:6-8. Jesus rebuked Mary's critics and defended her action, calling it a beautiful thing (lit., "a good [kalon, 'noble, beautiful, good'] work"). Unlike them, He saw it as an expression of love and devotion to Him in light of His approaching death as well as a messianic acclamation.

The contrast in verse 7 is not between Jesus and the poor but between the words always and not always. Opportunities to help the poor will always be present and the disciples should take advantage of them. But Jesus would not be in their midst much longer and opportunities to show Him love were diminishing rapidly. In a sense she had anointed His body beforehand in preparation for its burial.

14:9. Prefaced by a solemn introductory saying (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) Jesus promised Mary that wherever the gospel (cf. 1:1) is preached throughout the world (cf. 13:10) her deed of love would also be told along with the gospel in memory of her. This unique promise looked beyond His death, burial, and resurrection to the present period of time when the gospel is being preached.

c. Judas' agreement to betray Jesus (14:10-11)

14:10-11. These verses complement verses 1-2 and heighten the contrast with verses 3-9. Judas Iscariot (cf. 3:19), one of the Twelve (cf. 3:14), went to the influential chief priests (cf. 14:1) and offered to betray (paradoi; cf. v. 11; 9:31) Jesus to them. He suggested doing it "when no crowd was present" (Luke 22:6). This would avoid a public disturbance, which was the priests' primary concern (cf. Mark 14:2). They welcomed this unexpected offer, one they would have never dared solicit. They promised to give him money (30 pieces of silver, in response to his demand; cf. Matt. 26:15). So Judas was seeking (ezētei; cf. Mark 14:1) the right opportunity, without the presence of a crowd, to hand Him over (paradoi; cf. v. 10; 9:31) into their custody.

Why did Judas offer to betray Jesus? Various suggestions have been made, each of which may contain an element of truth: (1) Judas, the only non-Galilean member of the Twelve, may have responded to the official notice (John 11:57). (2) He was disillusioned by Jesus' failure to establish a political kingdom and his hopes for material gain seemed doomed. (3) His love for money moved him to salvage something for himself. Ultimately he came under satanic control (cf. Luke 22:3; John 13:2, 27).

In Judas' life one finds an intriguing combination of divine sovereignty and human responsibility. According to God's plan Jesus must suffer and die (Rev. 13:8); yet Judas, though not compelled to be the traitor, was held responsible for submitting to Satan's directives (cf. Mark 14:21; John 13:27).

2. THE PASSOVER MEAL AS THE LAST SUPPER (14:12-26)

The second cycle of events in this chapter also has three parts (vv. 12-16, 17-21, 22-26).

a. The preparation of the Passover meal (14:12-16)

14:12. The time designation, on the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, would be Nisan 15 (Friday), strictly speaking. However, the qualifying clause (a common feature in Mark's time notations; cf. 1:32, 35; 4:35; 13:24; 14:30; 15:42; 16:2) referring to the day Passover lambs were slaughtered indicates that Nisan 14 (Thursday) was meant (cf. comments on 14:1a).

Since the Passover meal had to be eaten within Jerusalem's walls, the disciples asked Jesus where He wanted them to go and make preparations (cf. v. 16) for the meal. They assumed they would eat this "family feast" with Him (cf. v. 15).

14:13-15. This episode is structurally parallel to 11:1b-7. It may reflect another instance of Jesus' supernatural knowledge. However, the need for security (cf. 14:10-11), the disciples' question (v. 12), and Jesus' subsequent directives seem to indicate that He had carefully reserved a place in advance where they could eat the Passover meal together undisturbed.

Jesus and His disciples were probably in Bethany (cf. 11:1a, 11). Thursday morning He sent two of them—Peter and John (cf. Luke 22:8)—into Jerusalem with instructions for locating the reserved room. For security reasons (cf. Mark 14:11; John 11:57) the participants remained anonymous and the location was kept secret.

A man carrying a jar of water would meet the two disciples, presumably near the eastern gate. This unusual, eye-catching sight suggests that it was a prearranged signal because normally only women carried water jars (men carried wineskins). They were to follow this man, apparently a servant, who would lead them to the right house. They were to tell the owner . . . The Teacher (cf. Mark 4:38) asks: Where is My guest room. . . ? The single self-designation "Teacher" implies Jesus was well known to the owner and the possessive pronoun "My" implies His prior arrangement to use the room.

He (autos, the owner "himself") would show them a large Upper Room, built on the flat ceiling, furnished (with a dining table and reclining couches), and set up for a banquet meal. The owner also may have secured the necessary food including the Passover lamb. The two disciples were to prepare the meal for Jesus and the other disciples (cf. 14:12) there. Tradition claims this was Mark's home (cf. comments on vv. 41-52; also Acts 1:13; 12:12) and the owner was Mark's father.

14:16. Presumably preparing the Passover meal involved roasting the lamb, setting out the unleavened bread and wine, and preparing bitter herbs along with a sauce made of dried fruit moistened with vinegar and wine and combined with spices.

These Passover preparations on Nisan 14 (Thursday) imply that Jesus' last meal with His disciples was the regular Passover meal held that evening (Nisan 15 after sunset) and that He was crucified on Nisan 15 (Friday). This is the consistent witness of the Synoptic Gospels (cf. Matt. 26:2, 17-19; Mark 14:1, 12-14; Luke 22:1, 7-8, 11-15). The Gospel of John, however, indicates that Jesus was crucified on "the day of preparation" (John 19:14). This was the Passover proper and also the preparation for the seven-day Feast of Unleavened Bread, which was sometimes called the Passover Week (cf. Luke 22:1, 7; Acts 12:3-4; see comments on Luke 22:7-38).

b. Jesus' announcement of His betrayal (14:17-21)

14:17. That (Thursday) evening, the beginning of Nisan 15 (cf. v. 1a), Jesus and the Twelve arrived in Jerusalem to eat the Passover meal which began after sunset and had to be finished by midnight. Mark abbreviated the events of the meal (cf. Luke 22:14-16, 24-30; John 13:1-20) in order to focus attention on two incidents: (a) Jesus' announcement of His betrayal as they dipped bread and bitter herbs into a bowl of fruit sauce together (Mark 14:18-21), and (b) His new interpretation of the bread and wine just after the meal (vv. 22-25).

14:18-20. It was customary to recline on dining couches during a festive meal (cf. 14:3; John 13:23-25); in fact, it was a first-century requirement for the Passover meal, even for the poorest people (cf.

Mishnah Pesachim 10. 1). While they were . . . eating, dipping bread into the bowl (cf. Mark 14:20) before the meal itself, Jesus, with solemn introductory words (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28), announced that one of the Twelve would betray Him (cf. 14:10-11).

The added words, one who is eating with Me, unique to Mark, allude to Psalm 41:9 where David laments that his trusted friend Ahithophel (cf. 2 Sam. 16:15–17:23; 1 Chron. 27:33), who shared table fellowship with him, had turned against him. To eat with a person and then betray him was the height of treachery.

This thought is reinforced in Mark 14:19-20. The disciples were deeply grieved. One by one (even Judas; cf. Matt. 26:25) they sought to clear themselves. The form of their question in Greek (lit., "It is not I, is it?") expects a reassuring negative answer from Jesus. But He declined to name the offender to the group. (The identification in Matt. 26:25 was doubtless made only to Judas.)

Jesus repeated His disclosure that His betrayer was one of the Twelve . . . one who was dipping bread into the same bowl with Him. His announcement emphasized the treachery of the betrayal and also gave the betrayer an opportunity to repent.

14:21. On the one hand (Gr., men) the Son of Man (cf. 8:31) will go, that is, He must die, in fulfillment of Scripture (e.g., Ps. 22; Isa. 53). His death was according to God's plan not simply because of the betrayer's action. But on the other hand (Gr., de) woe, a lament denoting heartfelt pity, to that man, literally, "through whom the Son of Man is being betrayed." The betrayer was acting as Satan's agent (cf. Luke 22:3; John 13:2, 27). So awful a destiny awaited him that it would have been better for him if he (lit., "that man") had not been born. Though he acted within God's plan, the betrayer remained morally responsible (cf. Mark 14:10-11). This woe contrasts sharply with Jesus' promise in verse 9.

c. The institution of the Lord's Supper (14:22-26)

This is the second key incident Mark selected from the events of the Passover meal (cf. comments on Mark 14:17). Before this meal was eaten in Jewish homes the head of the house explained its meaning regarding Israel's deliverance from slavery in Egypt. As host, Jesus probably did so to prepare His disciples for a new understanding of the bread and wine.

14:22. While they were eating (cf. v. 18), apparently before the main part of the meal but after Judas had left (John 13:30), Jesus took bread (arton, an unleavened flat cake), gave thanks (eulogēsas; cf. Mark 6:41), broke it to distribute it, and gave it to them with the words, Take it (and "eat" implied); this is My body.

Jesus spoke of literal things—the bread, wine, His physical body (sōma), and blood—but the relationship between them was expressed figuratively (cf. John 7:35; 8:12; 10:7, 9). The verb "is" means "represents." Jesus was physically present as He spoke these words, so the disciples did not literally eat His body or drink His blood, something abhorrent to Jews anyway (cf. Lev. 3:17; 7:26-27; 17:10-14). This shows the impropriety of the Roman Catholic view of the eucharist (transubstantiation), that the bread and wine are changed into Christ's body and blood.

14:23. Similarly, after the meal (cf. 1 Cor. 11:25), Jesus took the cup containing red wine mixed with water, gave thanks (eucharistēsas; cf. Mark 8:6-7; hence the word "eucharist"), and offered (lit., "gave") it to them, and they all drank from it. Assuming Jesus followed the established Passover ritual this was the third of four prescribed cups of wine ("the cup of thanksgiving"; cf. 1 Cor. 10:16) which concluded the main portion of the meal. Presumably He did not drink the fourth cup, the cup of consummation. Its significance still lies in the future when Jesus and His followers will be together again in His kingdom (Luke 22:29-30; see comments on Mark 14:25).

14:24. Jesus explained the meaning of the cup: This (the wine) is (represents) My blood of (i.e., which inaugurates) the covenant, which (blood) is poured out for (hyper, "in behalf of, instead of") many, a reference to His vicarious, sacrificial death for mankind (cf. 10:45). Just as sacrificial blood ratified the Old (Mosaic) Covenant at Sinai (cf. Ex.

24:6-8), so Jesus' blood shed at Golgotha inaugurated the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31-34). This promises forgiveness of sins and fellowship with God through the indwelling Spirit to those who come to God by faith in Jesus.

The word diathēkē ("covenant") refers not to an agreement between two equals (denoted by synthēkē) but rather to an arrangement established by one party, in this case God. The other party—man—cannot alter it; he can only accept or reject it. The New Covenant is God's new arrangement in dealing with people, based on Christ's death (cf. Heb. 8:6-13). The spiritual blessings Israel expected God to grant in the last days are now mediated through Christ's death to all who believe. The physical blessings promised to Israel, however, are not being fulfilled now. They will be fulfilled when Christ returns and establishes His millennial reign with Israel in her land.

14:25. Jesus seldom spoke about His death without looking beyond it. Using solemn introductory words (I tell you the truth; cf. 3:28) He vowed that He would not (ouketi ou mē, "certainly not any more"; cf. 13:2) drink again of the fruit of the vine, in this festive way until that day (cf. 13:24-27, 32) in the future when He will drink it anew. He will enjoy renewed table fellowship with His followers in a qualitatively new (kainon) existence (cf. Isa. 2:1-4; 4:2-6; 11:1-9; 65:17-25) in the kingdom of God (cf. comments on Mark 1:15), the Millennium established on earth when Jesus Christ returns (cf. Rev. 20:4-6).

14:26. The Hallel (praise) Psalms were sung or chanted antiphonally in connection with the Passover—the first two (Pss. 113–114) before the meal, the remaining four (Pss. 115–118) after it to conclude the evening observance. Such verses as Psalm 118:6-7, 17-18, 22-24 gain added significance on Jesus' lips just before His suffering and death.

Since their conversation after the meal included Jesus' discourse and prayer (John 13:31–17:26), it was probably near midnight when He and the Eleven (minus Judas) finally left the Upper Room and the city. They crossed the Kidron Valley (cf. John 18:1) to the western slopes of the Mount of Olives (cf. Mark 11:1a) where Gethsemane was located (14:32).

3. JESUS' PRAYER BEFORE HIS ARREST AND THE DISCIPLES' DESERTION (14:27-52)

The third cycle of events in this division has a "sandwich" structure like many other passages in Mark (cf. 3:20-35). The account of Jesus' prediction of His disciples' desertion (14:27-31) and its fulfillment at His arrest (vv. 43-52) is interrupted by the account of Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane (vv. 32-42). In this way Mark emphasized that Jesus faced His final hour of testing alone with His Father, without human sympathy or support.

a. Jesus' prediction of the disciples' desertion and Peter's denial (14:27-31) (Matt. 26:31-35; Luke 22:31-34; John 13:36-38)

Whether this episode took place in the Upper Room (as Luke and John indicate) or on the way to Gethsemane (as Matt. and Mark imply) is difficult to determine. Mark apparently used it thematically without an explicit chronological connection in anticipation of the subsequent events he wished to highlight (e.g., Mark 14:50-52, 66-72). Matthew, however, included a temporal connection (Matt. 26:31, tote, "then"). Perhaps Jesus gave this prediction in the Upper Room relating it only to Peter (as in Luke and John), and repeated it on the way to Gethsemane (as in Matt.) telling it to the Eleven and especially to Peter.

14:27. The verb translated fall away (skandalisthēsesthe) means to take offense at someone or something and thereby turn away and fall into sin (cf. 4:17; 6:3; 9:42-47). Jesus predicted that all 11 disciples would take offense at His sufferings and death. To avoid the same treatment they would "fall away," denying association with Him (cf. 14:30) and desert Him (cf. v. 50). Their loyalty would temporarily collapse.

Jesus applied Zechariah 13:7 to this situation: I (God the Father) will strike (put to death) the Shepherd (Jesus), and the sheep (the disciples) will be scattered in all directions. The interpretive change from the command "Strike" (Zech. 13:7) to the assertion "I will strike" suggests that Jesus viewed Himself as God's suffering Servant (cf. Isa. 53: esp. Isa. 53:4-6).

14:28. Jesus immediately countered His desertion prediction with the promise of a post-Resurrection reunion (cf. 16:7; Matt. 28:16-17). As the risen Shepherd He would precede His flock into Galilee, where they had lived and worked and were called and commissioned by Jesus (Mark 1:16-20; 3:13-15; 6:7, 12-13). They were to "follow" the risen Lord who would continue to lead His people in their future tasks (cf. 13:10; 14:9).

14:29-31. As before (cf. 8:32) Peter focused on the first part of Jesus' prediction (14:27), ignoring the second part (v. 28). He insisted that he was an exception—all the rest might fall away as Jesus predicted (v. 27) but he would not (lit., "but not I," the word "I" is emphatic by position). Peter claimed greater allegiance to Jesus than all the others (cf. "more than these"; John 21:15).

Prefaced by solemn introductory words (I tell you the truth; cf. Mark 3:28) Jesus emphatically told Peter that his failure would be greater than the others despite his good intentions. That same night before the rooster crows twice, before dawn, Peter would not only desert Jesus but actually disown (aparnēsē, "deny"; cf. 8:34) Him three times. The "cockcrow" was a proverbial expression for early morning before sunrise (cf. 13:35). Only Mark mentioned the rooster crowing twice, a detail probably due to Peter's clear recollection of the incident. (The major Gr. ms. evidence is split over including the word "twice" but the more strongly attested words "the second time" in 14:72 provide confirmation that Mark wrote "twice" here.)

Jesus' pointed reply caused Peter to protest even more emphatically (an adverb used only here in the NT) that he would never (ou mē, emphatic negation) disown Jesus even if he must (deē; cf. 8:31) die with Jesus. The others echoed Peter's affirmation of loyalty. They implied Jesus' prediction was wrong, but a few hours later they showed He was right (14:50, 72).

b. Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane (14:32-42) (Matt. 26:36-47; Luke 22:39-46)

This is the third time Mark portrayed Jesus in prayer (cf. Mark 1:35; 6:46). In each case Jesus reaffirmed His commitment to God's will. Though Satan is not mentioned directly, he was no doubt present, giving the event the character of a temptation scene (cf. 1:12-13). The Synoptics give five renderings of Jesus' prayer, all similar but with minor variations. Jesus probably repeated the same request in different ways (cf. 14:37, 39).

14:32-34. Jesus and the 11 disciples came to Gethsemane (lit., "press of oils," i.e., a press for crushing oil out of olives). It was a gardenlike enclosure in an olive orchard near the foot of the Mount of Olives (cf. v. 26; John 18:1). This secluded spot known also to Judas was one of their favorite meeting places (cf. Luke 22:39; John 18:2).

Jesus told His disciples—perhaps as He often had done—to sit down near the entrance and wait, literally, "until I have prayed." Then He selected Peter, James, and John (cf. Mark 5:37; 9:2) to go along with Him.

As the four walked into the "garden" Jesus became noticeably distressed (from ekthambeō, "to be alarmed"; cf. 9:15; 16:5-6) and troubled (from adēmoneō, "to be in extreme anguish"; cf. Phil. 2:26). He told the three that His soul (psychē, inner self-conscious life) was overwhelmed with such sorrow (perilypos, "deeply grieved"; cf. Mark 6:26) that it threatened to extinguish His life. This prompted Him to tell them to remain where they were and keep watch (grēgoreite; cf. 14:38), be alert. The full impact of His death and its spiritual consequences struck Jesus and He staggered under its weight. The prospect of alienation from His Father horrified Him.

14:35-36. Moving forward a short distance from the three and gradually prostrating Himself on the ground (cf. Matt. 26:39; Luke 22:41) Jesus prayed (prosēucheto, "was praying") aloud with great emotion (Heb. 5:7). His prayer lasted at least an hour (cf. Mark 14:37) but Mark recorded only a brief summary of it, first in narrative form (v. 35b), then in a direct quotation (v. 36).

In essence Jesus requested that if possible the hour might pass from Him. The words "if possible" (first-class condition in Gr.) do not express doubt but a concrete supposition on which He based His request. He made His request on the assumption that the Father was able to grant it. The issue remained whether it was God's will to do so (cf. Luke 22:42).

The metaphor "the hour" denoted God's appointed time when Jesus would suffer and die (cf. Mark 14:41b; John 12:23, 27). The corresponding metaphor, this cup, referred to the same event. The "cup" means either human suffering and death or more likely, God's wrath against sin, which when poured out includes not only physical but also spiritual suffering and death (cf. Mark 10:38-39; 14:33b-34). In bearing God's judgment the sinless Jesus endured the agony of being "made sin" (cf. 15:34; 2 Cor. 5:21).

The double title Abba (Aram., "My Father") Father (Gr., patēr) occurs only two other times (Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6). "Abba" was a common way young Jewish children addressed their fathers. It conveyed a sense of familial intimacy and familiarity. The Jews, however, did not use it as a personal address to God since such a familar term was considered inappropriate in prayer. Thus Jesus' use of Abba in addressing God was new and unique. He probably used it often in His prayers to express His intimate relationship with God as His Father. Abba here suggests that Jesus' primary concern in drinking the cup of God's judgment on sin necessarily disrupted this relationship (cf. Jesus' words of address, Mark 15:34).

What did Jesus mean by requesting that the hour "might pass" and that the Father take the cup from Him? The traditional answer is that Jesus asked to avoid "the hour" hoping, if possible, that it would bypass Him and that the cup would be removed before He must drink it. According to this view Jesus prayed a prayer of submission to God's will as He went to the cross. Some interpreters, however, contend that Jesus asked to be restored following "the hour," hoping, if possible, that it would pass on by after it came and that the cup would be removed after He had drained it (cf. Isa. 51:17-23). In this view, Jesus prayed a prayer of faith that the Father would not abandon Him forever to death under divine wrath but would remove it and resurrect Him.

Though not problem-free (e.g., John 12:27), the traditional view is preferred in light of the contextual factors just discussed, other passages (Matt. 26:39, 42; Luke 22:41-42; Heb. 5:7-8), and the final qualifying statement in Mark 14:36: Yet (lit., "but") the final answer, is not what I (emphatic) will but what You (emphatic) will. Jesus' human will was distinct from but never in opposition to the Father's will (cf. John 5:30; 6:38). So He acknowledged that the answer to His request was not governed by what He desired but by what the Father willed. God's will entailed His sacrificial death (cf. Mark 8:31) so He resolutely submitted Himself to it. His deep distress passed from Him but "the hour" did not (cf. 14:41b).

14:37-41a. The emphasis in Mark's narrative now shifts from Jesus' prayer to the three disciples' failure to stay awake (cf. vv. 33-34). Thrice Jesus interrupted His praying and returned to where they were only to find them sleeping. The first time He addressed Peter as Simon, his old name (cf. 3:16), and chided him for his failure to watch for even one hour. Then Jesus exhorted all three, Watch, be alert to spiritual dangers, and pray, acknowledge dependence on God, so that you will not fall (lit., "come") into temptation. This anticipated the testings they would face at His arrest and trial (cf. 14:50, 66-72). On the one hand (Gr., men) the spirit (one's inner desires and best intentions) is willing or eager (e.g., Peter, vv. 29, 31), but on the other hand (Gr., de) the body (lit., "flesh"; a person in his humanness and inadequacies) is weak, easily overwhelmed in action (e.g., Peter, v. 37).

After going back and praying the same petition (cf. v. 36) Jesus returned and again found them sleeping. To His words of rebuke they had nothing appropriate to say (cf. 9:6).

Following a third prayer session, Jesus returned and again found them sleeping. His words (Are you still sleeping and resting?) could be a convicting question (NIV), an ironic but compassionate command (KJV), or an exclamation of surprised rebuke. In light of verses 37, 40, the first option seems preferable. Three times Peter failed to watch and pray; three times he would fall into temptation and disown Jesus. This warning applies to all believers, for all are susceptible to spiritual failure (cf. 13:37).

14:41b-42. Probably a short time occurred between verse 41a and 41b. Jesus' word Enough! (i.e., of sleeping) aroused the disciples. Then He announced, The hour (cf. v. 35) has come. The Son of Man (cf. 8:31) was about to be betrayed (cf. 9:31) into the hands

(control) of sinners, specifically, hostile Sanhedrin members. His betrayer, Judas, had arrived. Instead of fleeing, Jesus and the three disciples (no doubt now joined by the other eight) advanced to meet Judas. The issue that prompted Jesus' prayer had been settled (cf. 14:35-36).

c. Jesus' betrayal and arrest and the disciples' desertion (14:43-52) (Matt. 26:47-56; Luke 22:47-53; John 18:2-12)

14:43. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10), while Jesus was still speaking to His disciples, Judas came with . . . a crowd of Roman soldiers (cf. John 18:12) armed with short hand swords and the temple police armed with clubs (cf. Luke 22:52). Judas had guided them to Gethsemane (cf. John 18:2) and to Jesus (cf. Acts 1:16) at night so He could be arrested without commotion (cf. Mark 14:1-2). The Sanhedrin (cf. comments on 8:31) issued the warrant for His arrest. The high priest likely secured the aid of the Roman troops.

14:44-47. Judas had given the armed band a signal (a kiss) that would identify the One they were to arrest. They were to lead Him away under guard to prevent His escape. When Judas entered the "garden," he at once (euthys; cf. 1:10) went to Jesus, greeted Him as Rabbi (cf. 4:38; 9:5) and kissed Him fervently (intensive compound verb). A kiss on the cheek (or hand) was a common gesture of affection and reverence given to a Rabbi by his disciples. But Judas used it as a token of betrayal.

Since Jesus offered no resistance He was easily seized and arrested. No charges are stated in Mark's account; nevertheless the legality of His arrest according to Jewish criminal law was assumed since the Sanhedrin authorized it. His apparent defenselessness continued to veil His true identity publicly.

Mark recorded a single-handed attempt at armed resistance by an unnamed bystander (Peter; cf. John 18:10). The Greek wording implies Mark knew who it was. As one of two disciples with a sword (cf. Luke 22:38), Peter drew it and struck Malchus, the servant of the high priest, Caiaphas. But Peter managed to cut off only his right ear (cf. John 18:10, 13). Only Luke recorded that Jesus restored it (cf. Luke 22:51). Peter's attempted defense of Jesus was a wrong deed in a wrong place.

14:48-50. Though He offered no resistance Jesus did protest to the religious authorities for the excessive display of armed force marshaled against Him as if He had been leading a rebellion (lit., "as though they came out against an armed robber"). He was not a revolutionary who acted in stealth but a recognized religious Teacher. Every day that week He appeared openly among them in Jerusalem teaching (cf. 11:17) in the temple courts (hierō; cf. 11:11) but they did not arrest Him (cf. 12:12; 14:1-2). Their arresting Him like a criminal at night in a secluded place showed their cowardice. But this happened so that the Scriptures would be fulfilled (cf. Isa. 53:3, 7-9, 12).

When Jesus' response made it clear that He would not resist His arrest, the disciples' loyalty and their confidence in Him as the Messiah collapsed. Everyone ("all," emphatic by position) deserted Him and fled (cf. Mark 14:27). No one remained with Jesus to share His suffering—not even Peter (cf. v. 29).

14:51-52. This unusual episode, unique to Mark, supplements verse 50 emphasizing the fact that all fled, leaving Jesus completely forsaken. Most interpreters believe that this young man (neaniskos, a person in the prime of life, between 24 and 40 years of age) was Mark himself. If so, and if he was the son of the house owner (vv. 14-15; cf. Acts 12:12) that night's events may have occurred as follows. After Jesus and His disciples left Mark's father's house after the Passover, Mark removed his outer cloak (cf. Mark 13:16) and went to bed wrapped in a linen sleeping garment (lit., "cloth"). Shortly afterward a servant may have aroused him with the news about Judas' treachery since Judas and the arresting force had come there looking for Jesus. Without stopping to dress Mark rushed to Gethsemane perhaps to warn Jesus, who had already been arrested when Mark arrived. After all the disciples fled, Mark was following Jesus and His captors into the city when some of them seized Mark, perhaps as a potential witness, but he fled from them naked, leaving his linen sleeping garment in someone's hands. So no one remained with Jesus—not even a courageous young man who intended to follow Him.

B. Jesus' trials, crucifixion, and burial (14:53–15:47)

This division also consists of three cycles of events: Jesus' trials (14:53–15:20), crucifixion (15:21-41), and burial (15:42-47).

1. JESUS' TRIALS BEFORE THE SANHEDRIN AND PILATE (14:53–15:20)

Jesus was tried first by the religious authorities and then by the political authorities. This was necessary because the Sanhedrin did not have the power to exercise capital punishment (John 18:31). Each of the two trials had three hearings. (See the chart, "Jesus' Six Trials," at Matt. 26:57-58.)

a. Jesus' trial before the Sanhedrin and Peter's threefold denial (14:53–15:1a)

Jesus' trial before the Jewish religious authorities included a preliminary hearing by Annas (John 18:12-14, 19-24), an arraignment before Caiaphas, the high priest, and the Sanhedrin at night (Matt. 26:57-68; Mark 14:53-65), and a final verdict by the Sanhedrin just after dawn (cf. Matt. 27:1; Mark 15:1a; Luke 22:66-71).

(1) Jesus in the high priest's residence and Peter in the courtyard (14:53-54; Matt. 26:57-58; Luke 22:54; John 18:15-16, 18, 24). 14:53. Jesus' captors led Him under guard from Gethsemane back into Jerusalem to the residence of the high priest, Joseph Caiaphas (cf. Matt. 26:57), who held this office from A.D. 18 to 36 (see the chart on Annas' family at Acts 4:5-6).

The 71-member Sanhedrin (cf. comments on Mark 8:31), including the presiding high priest, was hastily assembled in an upstairs room (cf. 14:66) for a plenary night session. This was an "informal" trial that required a "formal" ratification after dawn (cf. 15:1) to satisfy strict Jewish legal procedure allowing trials only in the daytime. A quorum consisted of 23 members (Mishnah Sanhedrin 1. 6) but on this occasion the majority were probably there even though it was around 3 A.M. on Nisan 15 (Friday), a feast day.

This hasty night meeting was deemed necessary because: (1) In Jewish criminal law it was customary to hold a trial immediately after arrest. (2) Roman legal trials were usually held shortly after sunrise (cf. 15:1) so the Sanhedrin needed a binding verdict by daybreak in order to get the case to Pilate early. (3) With Jesus finally in custody they did not want to delay proceedings, thereby arousing opposition to His arrest. Actually they had already determined to kill Him (cf. 14:1-2); their only problem was getting evidence that would justify it (cf. v. 55). Perhaps also they wished to have the Romans crucify Jesus to avoid the people's blaming the Sanhedrin for His death.

Some have questioned the legality of a capital trial on a feast day in light of certain Rabbinic legal ordinances. However, the Rabbis justified the trial and execution of serious offenders on a major feast day. That way, they argued, "all the people will hear and be afraid" (Deut. 17:13; cf. Deut. 21:21; cf. TDNT, s.v. "pascha," 5:899-900). Normally in capital cases a conviction verdict could not be legally determined until the following day.

14:54. Peter (cf. vv. 29, 31, 50) regained enough courage to follow Jesus at a distance, right inside the courtyard of the high priest. This was a central quadrangle with the high priest's residence built around it (cf. John 18:15-18). Peter sat there with the guards, the temple police, and warmed himself at a charcoal fire (lit., "facing the light" of the fire, so his face was illuminated; cf. Mark 14:67) because of the cold night air. He wanted to know what would happen to Jesus (cf. Matt. 26:58).

(2) Jesus' trial before the Sanhedrin (14:55-65; Matt. 26:59-68). The material in this section probably rests on the report of one or more Sanhedrin members who were secretly sympathetic to Jesus or who were against Him originally but later came to believe in Him (cf. Acts 6:7).

14:55-56. The Sanhedrin began their deliberations by seeking evidence (lit., "testimony") against Jesus in order to justify a death sentence but they found none (lit., "were not finding any"). They did not lack witnesses because many were testifying falsely against Him, but their testimony was invalid because their statements (lit., "testimonies") did not agree (lit., "were not equal"). Various unverified charges were made and numerous discrepancies arose in testimony on the same charge. Perhaps these witnesses were already on call prior to Jesus' arrest but did not coordinate their stories. In Jewish trials the witnesses served as the prosecution, giving their testimonies separately. Convicting a person for a crime, the Mosaic Law required precise agreement in the testimony of at least two witnesses (Num. 35:30; Deut. 17:6; 19:15).

14:57-59. In due time some witnesses ("two"; cf. Matt. 26:60) declared they had heard Jesus say: I (egō, emphatic) will destroy this man-made temple (naon, "the sanctuary"; cf. Mark 11:11), and in three days will build another (allon, "another" of a different kind), not made by man. Yet even in this testimony there were unspecified discrepancies, so Mark labeled it false.

Jesus had made a cryptic statement similar to this (John 2:19) but He was referring to the "temple" of His body (cf. John 2:20-22). These witnesses, like those present at the time, misinterpreted His words as a reference to the Jerusalem temple. Destruction of a worship place was a capital offense in the ancient world (Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 10. 6. 2). Though their testimony was invalid, it opened the way for questions about Jesus' identity (Mark 14:61) and led to the taunt recorded in 15:29.

14:60-61a. The high priest Caiaphas asked Jesus two questions to get information that could be used against Him. In Greek the first question expects a positive answer: "You are going to answer Your accusers, aren't You?" The second question expected an explanation from Him: "What is the meaning of the charges these witnesses are making against You?" But Jesus remained silent and gave no defense (cf. Isa. 53:7). His silence frustrated the court and brought its proceedings to a standstill.

14:61b-62. The high priest changed tactics and asked (lit., "kept asking") Jesus pointedly, Are You (emphatic) the Christ (the Messiah; cf. 1:1; 8:29), the Son of the Blessed One? The title "Blessed One," found in this sense only here in the New Testament, is a Jewish substitute for "God" (cf. Mishnah Berachoth 7. 3). These two titles of Jesus both refer to His claim to be the Messiah.

Jesus unequivocally answered, I am, that is, "I am the Messiah, the Son of God." This is the first time in Mark's Gospel that He openly declared He is the Messiah (cf. comments on 1:43-44; 8:29-30; 9:9; 11:28-33; 12:12). In proof of this—something the Jews expected the true Messiah to provide—Jesus made a startling prediction. Applying words from Psalm 110:1 and Daniel 7:13 to Himself, He stated, And you (His human judges) will see the Son of Man (cf. Mark 8:31, 38) sitting at the right hand, exalted to the place of highest honor and authority (cf. 12:36), of the Mighty One (lit., "the Power"), a Jewish substitute title for "God" (cf. 14:61), and coming on (lit., "with") the clouds of heaven to judge (cf. 8:38; 13:26). The fact that they "will see" this did not mean Jesus would return in their lifetimes. Rather it referred indirectly to bodily resurrection in judgment before the exalted Son of Man who will one day judge those who were judging Him. Then it will be unmistakably clear that He is God's Anointed One, the Messiah.

14:63-64. By tearing his clothes, probably his inner garments rather than his official robes, the high priest showed that he regarded Jesus' bold declaration as blasphemy. To him, Jesus' words dishonored God by claiming rights and powers belonging exclusively to God (cf. 2:7). This symbolic expression of horror and indignation was required of the high priest whenever he heard blasphemy. His reaction also expressed relief since Jesus' self-incriminating answer removed the need for more witnesses.

The Mosaic Law prescribed death by stoning for blasphemy (Lev. 24:15-16). Without further investigation the high priest called for a verdict from the Sanhedrin. Since there were no objections they all condemned Him (cf. Mark 10:33) as worthy (enochon, "guilty, liable"; cf. 3:29) of death.

14:65. Some Sanhedrin members showed their contempt through mockery and physical abuse. To spit in someone's face was an act of total repudiation and gross personal insult (cf. Num. 12:14; Deut. 25:9; Job 30:10; Isa. 50:6). On account of His messianic claims they blindfolded Him, struck Him with their fists and demanded that He prophesy who hit Him. This reflects a traditional test of messianic status based on a Rabbinic interpretation of Isaiah 11:2-4. The true Messiah could judge such matters without the benefit of sight (cf. Babylonian Talmud Sanhedrin 93b). But Jesus refused to submit to their test and remained silent (cf. Isa. 53:7; 1 Peter 2:23). When He was returned to the temple guards (cf. Mark 14:54), they followed their superiors' example and continued beating Him with open-handed slaps on the face (cf. Luke 22:63-65).

(3) Peter's threefold denial of Jesus (14:66-72; Matt. 26:69-75; Luke 22:55-62; John 18:15-18, 25-27). All four Gospels record this episode with variations, but without contradicting each other. Mark's vivid account probably came from Peter. It resumes Mark 14:54, showing that Peter's ordeal coincided with Jesus' interrogation before the Sanhedrin. After this denial account Mark resumed his report of the Sanhedrin's action (cf. 15:1a).

Her charge correctly identified Peter as a disciple but he denied (ērnēsato; cf. 8:34; 14:30) it, refusing to acknowledge his relationship to Jesus out of fear for his safety. His denial was a common Jewish legal expression, literally, "I neither know nor understand what you (emphatic) are saying." To avoid further exposure he went out into the entryway, the covered passageway leading to the street.

Nearly all major ancient Greek manuscripts and early versions include the words "and the rooster crowed" (NIV marg.; KJV) at the end of verse 68. This evidence plus the strongly attested words "the second time" in verse 72 favor inclusion of these words. Since only one rooster-crowing is mentioned in the parallel passages (cf. Matt. 26:74; Luke 22:60; John 18:27) these words were probably omitted from Mark very early by some scribes to conform to the parallels. But Mark was simply more specific than the other Gospels, probably because of Peter's vivid recollection. Apparently this first rooster-crowing held no significance for Peter since it happened every morning (cf. Mark 13:35b; 14:72).

14:69-71. The same servant girl along with others (cf. Matt. 26:71; Luke 22:58) saw Peter in the entryway and again identified him to the bystanders as one of Jesus' disciples. Again he denied (lit., "kept denying," imperf.) it.

About an hour later (cf. Luke 22:59) the bystanders (again, in Gr.) confronted Peter with the charge, Surely (lit., "truly," despite his denials) you are one of them (the disciples), for ("because") you are ("also," in Gr.) a Galilean. Galileans spoke an Aramaic dialect with noticeable differences in pronunciation (cf. Matt. 26:73). So they concluded he was a follower of that heretic Galilean, Jesus.

The fact that Peter began to call down curses on himself and that he swore to them does not mean he used profanity. Rather he placed himself under God's curse if he were lying to them and put himself under oath, as in a courtroom, to confirm the veracity of his denial. Carefully avoiding the use of Jesus' name Peter emphatically denied any knowledge of this Man they were talking about.

14:72. Peter's third denial in less than two hours was immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) punctuated by the rooster's second crowing (cf. 14:68, NIV marg.). This time he suddenly remembered Jesus' prediction of his denial made earlier that night (vv. 29-31). Peter also saw Jesus looking down at him (Luke 22:61). Overwhelmed, he broke down and wept.

In contrast with Judas (Matt. 27:3-5) Peter's remorse opened the way for true repentance and a reaffirmation of his loyalty to Jesus as the risen Lord (cf. Mark 16:7; John 21:15-19). Peter had a faith in Jesus that could be renewed, but Judas did not.

(4) The Sanhedrin's verdict at dawn (15:1a; Matt. 27:1; Luke 22:66-71). 15:1a. Immediately (euthys; cf. 1:10) after daybreak—between 5 and 6 A.M., probably on Friday, April 3, A.D. 33—the whole Sanhedrin (cf. 14:53) led by the chief priests formalized their condemnation of Jesus and reached a decision, a plan of action for getting a guilty verdict from the Roman governor.

Though the Sanhedrin could pronounce a death sentence it could not exercise capital punishment. So a condemned prisoner had to be turned over to the Roman authorities for a death sentence to be carried out (cf. John 18:31; TDNT, s.v. "synedrion," 1:865-6). The Roman governor could either ratify or rescind the Sanhedrin's death sentence (cf. John 19:10). If rescinded, a new trial had to be conducted before a Roman court in which the Sanhedrin had to prove that the defendant had committed a capital crime under Roman law. Since the charge of blasphemy (cf. Mark 14:64) was not punishable by Roman law it was not mentioned in the following trial. In its place the Sanhedrin substituted a charge of treason, turning Jesus' acknowledgment that He was the Messiah into a traitorous political claim that He is "the King of the Jews" (cf. 15:2; Luke 23:2). The Roman court surely could not ignore that charge.

b. Jesus' trial before Pilate and the Roman soldiers' abuse (15:1b-20)

Jesus' trial before the Roman political authorities also had three hearings: (a) an initial interrogation by Pilate (cf. Matt. 27:2, 11-14; Mark 15:1b-5; Luke 23:1-5; John 18:28-38); (b) an interrogation by Herod Antipas (cf. Luke 23:5-12); (c) a final arraignment before Pilate, Barabbas' release, and the crucifixion verdict (cf. Matt. 27:15-26; Mark 15:6-20; Luke 23:13-25; John 18:39–19:16).

Before the Sanhedrin Jesus was condemned for blasphemy under Jewish law, but here He was tried for treason under Roman law. On both occasions He was sentenced to die, in conformity with God's will (cf. Mark 10:33-34).

(1) Pilate's interrogation and Jesus' silence (15:1b-5; Matt. 27:2, 11-14; Luke 23:1-5; John 18:28-38). 15:1b. The Sanhedrin had Jesus bound and led through the city from Caiaphas' residence (cf. 14:53) probably to Herod's palace where they handed Him over to Pilate for execution of the death sentence.

Pontius Pilate, the fifth Roman prefect (a title later changed to "procurator," i.e., imperial magistrate) of Judea held office A.D. 26–36. He was a harsh governor who despised the Jews (cf. Luke 13:1-2). Normally he resided in Caesarea by the Mediterranean Sea, but he came to Jerusalem on special occasions such as the Passover festival to help maintain order. Presumably he stayed in Herod's palace as was customary for provincial governors rather than in the Antonia Fortress near the temple. If so, Jesus' civil trial was held there.

15:2. Pilate had sole responsibility for the Roman court's decisions. The proceedings, usually held in public, opened with an indictment by the plaintiff followed by the magistrate's interrogation and further testimony from the defendant and other witnesses. When all the evidence was in, the magistrate usually consulted with his legal advisers and then pronounced the sentence, which had to be carried out immediately.

Instead of confirming the Sanhedrin's death sentence (cf. John 18:29-32) Pilate insisted on hearing the case. Only one of three accusations that had already been made (cf. Luke 23:2) merited Pilate's attention, namely, Jesus' alleged claim to be "a king." So Pilate asked Jesus, Are You (emphatic) the King of the Jews? To Pilate such a claim was tantamount to treason against Caesar, a crime punishable by death.

Jesus gave a cryptic reply, literally, You (emphatic) say (so), that is, "The designation is yours." It is best understood as a yes answer but with a qualification attached. As Messiah, Jesus is the King of the Jews but His concept of kingship differed from that implied in Pilate's question (cf. John 18:33-38).

15:3-5. Since Jesus' initial response provided no solid basis for a capital conviction under Roman law Pilate returned to His accusers to gain more information. The chief priests (cf. v. 1a) seized the opportunity to bolster their case by pressing multiple charges against Jesus.

Again Pilate tried to get Jesus to respond to His accusers and defend Himself against their charges but to his utter amazement Jesus remained absolutely silent (cf. Isa. 53:7; lit., "He answered no longer nothing"; ouketi ouden, emphatic negative). Such silence was rare in a Roman court. It seemed to confirm Pilate's initial feeling that Jesus was not guilty.

Mark included only two short utterances by Jesus—one to Caiaphas (Mark 14:62) and one to Pilate (15:2). Jesus' silence highlights the fact that He, the Son of Man, suffered and died within God's sovereign plan (cf. comments on 8:31).

Learning that Jesus was a Galilean and hoping to avoid making a judgment against Him, Pilate sent Him to Herod Antipas, governor of Galilee (cf. 6:14), also in Jerusalem at the time. But Herod soon returned Him to Pilate. Only Luke recorded this middle phase of the civil trial (cf. Luke 23:6-12).

(2) Pilate's futile attempts to gain acquittal for Jesus (15:6-15; Matt. 27:15-26; Luke 23:13-25; John 18:39-40; 19:1, 13-16). 15:6. Each year during the Passover festival it was the governor's custom as a sign of goodwill to release a prisoner selected by the people (cf. v. 8). Though no explicit reference to the custom occurs outside the New Testament it was consistent with Rome's conciliatory attitude toward subject peoples on local matters. Instead of granting Jesus an acquittal, Pilate chose to grant the customary Passover amnesty, thinking the people would request Jesus' release (cf. v. 9).

15:7. While suppressing an uprising in Jerusalem, the Roman authorities had arrested Barabbas (from Bar Abba, "son of the father"), a notorious freedom fighter, robber (John 18:40), and murderer, along with other insurrectionists. He may have been a Zealot, a nationalist who stirred up opposition against Rome. Now he was awaiting execution.

15:8-11. During the trial proceedings a sizable crowd had gathered in the palace forum (cf. v. 16). The people approached Pilate's elevated judgment seat and asked him to grant the annual Passover amnesty (cf. v. 6). Many of them were probably supporters of Barabbas.

Pilate saw this as an opportunity to show his contempt for the Jews, especially their leaders. He offered to release to them the King of the Jews (cf. v. 2). He recognized that the chief priests had turned Jesus over to him not out of loyalty to Rome but out of envy and hatred. Pilate hoped to achieve Jesus' release and thus undo the religious leaders' scheme.

But Pilate's plan did not work. The chief priests incited the emotional crowd to pressure him into releasing Barabbas instead of Jesus. Apparently they knew that the Sanhedrin had already condemned Jesus (cf. 14:64). Strangely, Pilate failed to consider that the crowd would never side with him against their own leaders (cf. John 19:6-7).

15:12-14. Since the crowd had rejected Pilate's offer and requested the release of Barabbas, he inquired ("again" is in the Gr.) about what they wanted done with the One they called the King of the Jews. Pilate did not accept this title for Jesus but his question implied he was willing to release Jesus also if they wished. But without hesitation they shouted back, Crucify Him! The punishment that once awaited Barabbas was now thrust on Jesus.

Pilate challenged them to state the crime which made Jesus guilty enough to be crucified. But they persistently cried out all the louder, Crucify Him! Pilate considered the clamor of the crowd an acclamation, legally indicating a decision by popular demand. Thus Jesus must be pronounced guilty of high treason, a capital offense normally punishable by crucifixion in Roman provinces.

15:15. Though he believed Jesus was innocent (cf. v. 14) Pilate followed political expedience rather than justice. Wishing to satisfy the people lest they complain to Emperor Tiberius—thereby putting his position in jeopardy (cf. John 19:12)—Pilate released Barabbas to them . . . had Jesus flogged, and sentenced Him to death by crucifixion.

A Roman flogging was a brutal beating that always preceded the execution of a capital sentence on male offenders, though it could also be a separate punishment (cf. TDNT, s.v. "mastigoō," 4:517-9). The prisoner was stripped, often tied to a post, and beaten on the back by several guards using short leather whips studded with sharp pieces of bone or metal. No limit was set on the number of blows. Often this punishment was fatal.

Pilate had Jesus flogged in hope that the people would take pity and be satisfied. But this also failed; they still insisted He be crucified (cf. John 19:1-7).

(3) The Roman soldiers' mockery of Jesus (15:16-20; Matt. 27:27-31; John 19:2-12). 15:16. After the flogging of Jesus, presumably outside in the public square, the Roman soldiers took Him, battered and bleeding, into (esō, "inside") the palace (lit., "courtyard"; cf. same word in 14:54, 66). The rendering "palace" is justified due to Mark's explanatory comment, that is, the Praetorium, equating the two places. The Latin loanword, Praetorium, meant the governor's official residence (cf. Matt. 27:27; John 18:28, 33; 19:9; Acts 23:35).

Once inside they summoned the whole company (speiran, Gr. for the Latin "cohort") of soldiers. Ordinarily a cohort was 600 men, 1/10 of a 6,000-soldier legion. But in this case it may have been an auxiliary battalion of 200-300 soldiers that had accompanied Pilate to Jerusalem from Caesarea.

15:17-19. In ludicrous imitation of a vassal king's regal robes and gilded headwreath, the soldiers dressed Jesus in a purple robe, a faded military cloak, and pressed a crown of thorns, perhaps palm spines, on His head. With this "crown" the soldiers unwittingly pictured God's curse on sinful humanity being thrust on Jesus (cf. Gen. 3:17-18). Matthew noted that they also placed a staff in His hand as a mock scepter (Matt. 27:29).

Then they ridiculed Him with contemptuous words and insulting actions in mock homage to a king. The derisive greeting Hail (Rejoice), King of the Jews, paralleled the formal Roman plaudit, "Ave, Caesar." The NIV words, again and again reflect the imperfect tense of the Greek verbs. The soldiers kept striking Jesus with a staff, probably His mock scepter, on His thorn-crowned head. They kept spitting on Him (cf. Mark 14:65) and bending their knees in mock submission to royalty. In all this they acted out of contempt not so much for Jesus personally but for their subject nation which had long desired a king of its own.

15:20. The soldiers then removed the mock royal attire and dressed Him in His own clothes. Then they, a four-soldier execution squad (cf. John 19:23) under the command of a centurion, led Him outside the city to crucify Him.

Jesus' suffering before the Roman authorities was exemplary for Mark's readers who would be subjected to similar ridicule before pagan authorities (cf. comments on Mark 13:9-13).

2. JESUS' CRUCIFIXION AND DEATH (15:21-41)

Death by crucifixion was one of the cruelest forms of capital punishment ever devised. Mark's account of Jesus' physical sufferings is vivid but restrained. They were secondary to His overwhelming spiritual anguish (cf. 14:36; 15:34). (For the order of events, see the "Harmony of Events at Jesus' Crucifixion," at Matt. 27:32-38.)

a. Jesus' crucifixion and the crowd's mockery (15:21-32) (Matt. 27:32-44; Luke 23:26-43; John 19:17-27)

15:21-22. Customarily a condemned man carried the patibulum of his own cross, that is, the crossbeam weighing about 100 pounds, through the city streets out to the place of crucifixion. Jesus started to carry His (cf. John 19:17) but was so weak from being flogged that His strength gave out near the city gate. The soldiers randomly seized a passerby named Simon and forced him to carry the beam the rest of the way.

Simon was a native of Cyrene, an important coastal city of North Africa that had a large Jewish colony (Acts 2:10). He was either an immigrant living near Jerusalem or more likely, a pilgrim who had come to Jerusalem for the Passover festival but had to stay in the country at night because there was no room in the city. Only Mark mentioned Simon's sons, Alexander and Rufus, suggesting that they were disciples known to his readers in Rome (cf. Rom. 16:13).

The soldiers took Jesus to the place outside but near the city wall (cf. John 19:20) called Golgotha, a Greek transliteration of an Aramaic word meaning The Place of the Skull. The word "Calvary" comes from the Latin Vulgate rendering Calvaria, a variation of calva, "a skull." Golgotha was a rounded, rocky knoll (not a hill or mountain) vaguely resembling the shape of a human skull. Its exact location is uncertain. It was either at the present Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the traditional site dating from the fourth century, or "Gordon's Calvary," a more recent suggestion. The traditional site is more probable.

15:23-24. According to Rabbinic tradition certain Jerusalem women provided sedative drinks for those about to be crucified, to decrease their pain (cf. Prov. 31:6-7). On arrival at Golgotha, they, presumably the Roman soldiers, offered (lit., "were attempting to give") Jesus such a drink, wine mixed with myrrh, a plant's sap having anesthetic properties. But after He had tasted it (cf. Matt. 27:34) He refused it, choosing rather to face suffering and death in full control of all His faculties.

With restrained simplicity Mark wrote, And they crucified Him. His Roman readers needed no elaboration and he offered none. Normally a condemned man was stripped (except possibly for a loincloth), laid on the ground, and both outstretched forearms were nailed to the crossbeam. Then this beam was raised and fastened to an upright post already stuck in the ground and the victim's feet were nailed to it. A wooden peg partway up the post on which the victim sat helped support his body. Death from extreme exhaustion and thirst was painful and slow and usually came after two or three days. Sometimes death was hastened by breaking the victim's legs (John 19:31-33).

A victim's personal belongings became the property of the execution squad. In Jesus' case the four-man squad (cf. John 19:23) cast lots, probably dice, for His clothes—an inner and outer garment, a belt, sandals, and perhaps a head covering—to see what each one would get. Unwittingly they fulfilled Psalm 22:18, another aspect of Jesus' humiliation.

15:25. Using the Jewish method of counting hours from sunrise (and sunset) Mark alone recorded that Jesus' crucifixion took place at the third hour, that is, 9 A.M. This seems to conflict with the time reference "the sixth hour" in John 19:14. But John probably used the Roman (modern) method of counting hours from midnight (and noon); thus he put Jesus' trial before Pilate at "about the sixth hour," that is, approximately 6 A.M. The interval between 6 and 9 A.M. was filled with the soldiers' mockery (cf. Mark 15:16-20), Pilate's verdict on the two robbers (cf. 15:27), and preparations for the crucifixions.

15:26. It was a Roman custom to write the name of the condemned man and a description of his crime on a board and attach it to his cross (John 19:19). All four Gospels record the words of Jesus' notice but with minor variations, probably because it was written in three languages (John 19:20). Mark recorded only the official charge against Him . . . THE KING OF THE JEWS (cf. Mark 15:2, 12). Pilate's wording was intended as an insult to Jewish aspirations for independence (cf. John 19:21-22).

15:27-28. Pilate had Jesus crucified between two robbers who, like Barabbas, were perhaps guilty of insurrection (cf. v. 7; John 18:40). They may have been convicted of treason at the same time as Jesus because they were familiar with His case (Luke 23:40-42).

Unwittingly Pilate's action fulfilled Isaiah 53:12, which is cited in Mark 15:28 (NIV marg.; KJV; cf. Luke 22:37).

15:29-30. Again Jesus was subjected to verbal abuse (cf. 14:65; 15:17-19). Passersby hurled insults at Him (lit., "kept slandering Him"). Shaking their heads refers to a familiar gesture of derision (cf. Pss. 22:7; 109:25; Jer. 18:16; Lam. 2:15). They taunted Him for His alleged claim regarding the temple (cf. Mark 14:58). If He could rebuild the temple in three days (a great feat), then surely He could save (from sōzō, "deliver or rescue"; cf. 5:23, 28, 34) Himself from death by coming down from the cross (a lesser feat).

15:31-32. Similarly the Jewish religious leaders mocked Jesus indirectly in conversations among themselves. Their long-standing desire to kill Him was successful at last (cf. 3:6; 11:18; 12:12; 14:1, 64; 15:1, 11-13). Their words He saved (from sōzō) others refer to His healing miracles, which they could not deny (cf. 5:34; 6:56; 10:52). But they ridiculed Him because He seemed powerless to save (from sōzō; cf. 15:30) Himself. Ironically their words expressed a profound spiritual truth. If Jesus was to save others, delivering them from the power of sin, then He could not save (rescue)

Himself from the sufferings and death appointed to Him by God (cf. 8:31).

They also mocked Jesus' messianic claims (cf. comments on 14:61-62) replacing Pilate's words "King of the Jews" (cf. 15:26) with King of Israel. They challenged Him to prove His messianic claim by a miraculous descent from the cross so they could see the compelling evidence and believe that He is God's Messiah. The issue, however, was not lack of evidence but unbelief.

The two men crucified with Jesus also joined in reviling Him. But one of them soon stopped and asked Jesus to remember him in His kingdom (Luke 23:39-43).

b. Jesus' death and the accompanying phenomena (15:33-41) (Matt. 27:45-56; Luke 23:44-49; John 19:28-30)

Climactically Mark recorded five phenomena that accompanied Jesus' death: (a) darkness (Mark 15:33), (b) Jesus' cry, "My God . . ." (v. 34), (c) Jesus' loud cry (v. 37), (d) the temple curtain torn from top to bottom (v. 38), and (e) the Roman centurion's confession (v. 39).

15:33. Jesus hanged on the cross for three hours in the daylight (9 A.M. till noon) and then at the sixth hour (noon) total darkness engulfed the whole land (Palestine and environs) until the ninth hour (3 P.M.; cf. comments on v. 25). The darkness, whether caused by a sudden dust-laden wind, or thick clouds, or, more likely, a miraculous solar eclipse, was probably a cosmic sign of God's judgment on human sin (cf. Isa. 5:25-30; Amos 8:9-10; Micah 3:5-7; Zeph. 1:14-15) which was placed on Jesus (cf. Isa. 53:5-6; 2 Cor. 5:21). Specifically it pictured God's judgment on Israel who rejected His Messiah, the Sin-Bearer (cf. John 1:29). The darkness visualized what Jesus' cry (Mark 15:34) expressed.

15:34. Mark (and Matthew) recorded only this one of Jesus' seven sayings from the cross. At the ninth hour (3 P.M.), Jesus cried . . . Eloi, Eloi (Aram. for the Heb., 'Ēlî, 'Ēlî), lama sabachthani? (Aram.; from Ps. 22:1) Mark translated the saying into Greek for his readers, which in English means, My God, My God, why (lit., "for what [reason]") have You forsaken (lit., "did You abandon") Me?

This was more than the cry of a righteous Sufferer affirming His faith that God would cause Him to triumph (contrast Ps. 22:1 with Ps. 22:28). Nor did Jesus merely feel abandoned. Instead, Jesus' cry combined (a) abandonment by God the Father in a judicial not relational sense, and (b) a genuine affirmation of Jesus' relationship to God. Bearing the curse of sin and God's judgment on sin (cf. Deut. 21:22-23; 2 Cor. 5:21; Gal. 3:13) He experienced the unfathomable horror of separation from God, who cannot look on sin (cf. Hab. 1:13). This answers Jesus' question, "Why?" Dying for sinners (Mark 10:45; Rom. 5:8; 1 Peter 2:24; 3:18), He experienced separation from God.

Also Jesus' cry affirmed His abiding trust, reflected in the words, "My God, My God." This is the only one of Jesus' recorded prayers in which He did not use the address "Abba" (cf. Mark 14:36). Far from renouncing Him, Jesus claimed the Father as His God. He died forsaken by God so that His people might claim God as their God and never be forsaken (cf. Heb. 13:5).

15:35-36. Some Jewish bystanders apparently misunderstood or more likely, as a mockery, deliberately misinterpreted Jesus' cry as a call to Elijah. Popular Jewish belief held that Elijah came in times of distress to deliver righteous sufferers.

Probably in response to Jesus' additional words "I thirst" (John 19:28-29) a bystander, likely a Roman soldier, soaked a sponge with wine vinegar diluted with a mixture of eggs and water, a common inexpensive beverage, and raised it on a stick to Jesus' mouth so He could extract some refreshment from it (cf. Ps. 69:21). Jesus' cross was probably higher than normal, holding Him two or three feet off the ground. If the drink prolonged His life, the spectators would have a chance to see if Elijah would take Him down.

In Mark the words Leave Him alone were spoken by the soldier to the bystanders just before he offered a drink to Jesus. The verb is plural, "You (pl.) leave. . . ." In Matthew 27:49 the same words are spoken by bystanders to the soldier apparently while he was giving Jesus the drink. The verb is singular, "You (sing.) leave. . . ." Both expressed the taunt about Elijah coming to rescue Him.

15:37. Jesus' loud cry (Luke 23:46) before He breathed His last indicated that He did not die the ordinary death of one who was crucified (cf. Mark 15:39). Normally such a person suffered extreme exhaustion for a long period (often two or three days) and then lapsed into a coma before dying. But Jesus was fully conscious to the end; His death came voluntarily and suddenly. This accounts for Pilate's surprise (cf. v. 44).

15:38. Simultaneous with Jesus' death the curtain (veil) of the temple (naou, "sanctuary"; cf. 11:11) was torn in two from top to bottom. The passive verb and the direction of the tear indicate that this was God's action. It was no doubt observed and reported by the priests (cf. Acts 6:7) who at that moment were conducting the Jewish evening sacrifice. This could have been the outer curtain hung between the sanctuary itself and the forecourt (Ex. 26:36-37) or the inner curtain separating the holy place from the most holy place (Ex. 26:31-35). If it was the outer curtain, then the tear was a public sign confirming Jesus' words of judgment on the temple, later fulfilled in A.D. 70 (cf. Mark 13:2). Probably the inner curtain was torn, for it was a sign that Jesus' death ended the need for repeated sacrifices for sins, and opened a new and living way of free and direct access to God (Heb. 6:19-20; 9:6-14; 10:19-22).

15:39. The centurion who stood nearby facing Jesus and observing these unusual happenings (cf. vv. 33-37) was the Gentile Roman officer in charge of the execution squad (cf. v. 20) and thus accountable to Pilate (cf. v. 44). Only Mark used the Greek word kentyriōn ("centurion"), a transliteration of the Latin word referring to a commander of 100 soldiers (also vv. 44-45). All other New Testament writers used the equivalent Greek word hekatontarchos, also translated "centurion" (e.g., Matt. 27:54). This provides additional evidence that Mark wrote to a Roman audience (see Introduction).

The manner of Jesus' death, especially His last loud cry (cf. Mark 15:37), prompted the centurion to declare, Surely (lit., "truly," despite all insults to the contrary; cf. Matt. 27:40; John 19:7), this Man was, from the centurion's perspective, the Son of God.

The Roman officer probably did not use the phrase "the Son of God" in its distinctive Christian sense, as a reference to Jesus' deity (cf. Luke 23:47). Because of his pagan background he probably viewed Jesus as an extraordinary "divine man" much like the Roman emperor who was acclaimed "son of God" (cf. comments on Mark 12:16). Consequently some interpreters translate the phrase with an indefinite article, "a son of God" (NIV marg.). However, Mark regarded the declaration in its distinctive Christian sense; the centurion unwittingly said more than he knew.

The centurion's confession is the climax of Mark's revelation of Jesus' identity (cf. comments on 1:1; 8:29-30). This confession by a Gentile Roman officer contrasts with the mocking response of those mentioned in 15:29-32, 35-36. This Gentile's confession also exemplifies the truth of the torn curtain.

15:40-41. In addition to the mocking crowd and the Roman soldiers, some devoted women were also (in Gr.) carefully observing from a distance all that occurred. Earlier in the day—probably before the sixth hour (noon; v. 33)—they had stood "near the cross" (John 19:25-27).

Mary Magdalene's surname indicates she was from Magdala, a village on the Sea of Galilee's western shore. Jesus had released her from demon possession (Luke 8:2; she is not the sinful woman of Luke 7:36-50). The second Mary (the "other Mary"; Matt. 27:61) is distinguished from the others by the names of her sons James the younger (lit., "the small one," in stature and/or age) and Joses, who apparently were well known in the early church. Salome, whose name appears only in Mark (Mark 15:40; 16:1), was the mother of Zebedee's sons, the disciples James and John (Matt. 20:20; 27:56). She was probably the sister of Jesus' mother whom Mark did not mention (John 19:25).

When Jesus was in Galilee these three women used to follow (imperf. tense) Him from place to place and used to care for ("serve," imperf.) His material needs (cf. Luke 8:1-3). Many other women who did not accompany Him regularly were also there. They had come . . . to Jerusalem for the Passover festival with Jesus, perhaps hoping He would establish His messianic kingdom (cf. Mark 10:35-40; 15:43).

Mark mentioned the women as eyewitnesses of the Crucifixion in anticipation of their eyewitness role at Jesus' burial (15:47) and His resurrection (16:1-8). Their devotion surpassed that of the 11 disciples who had deserted Him (14:50). Mark may have intended these words as an encouragement to faithful discipleship among women in the church at Rome.

3. JESUS' BURIAL IN A NEARBY TOMB (15:42-47)
(MATT. 27:57-61; LUKE 23:50-56; JOHN 19:38-42)

15:42-43. Jesus' burial officially confirmed His death, an important point in early Christian preaching (cf. 1 Cor. 15:3-4). The designation Preparation Day is used here as a technical name for Friday, the day before the Sabbath (Saturday) as Mark explained to his non-Jewish readers. Since no work was allowed on the Jewish Sabbath, Friday was used to prepare for it. This reference confirms that Jesus was crucified on Friday, Nisan 15 (cf. comments on Mark 14:1a, 12, 16). "Evening" referred to the hours between mid-afternoon (3 P.M.) and sunset, when Friday ended and the Sabbath began.

Under Roman law the release of a crucified man's corpse for burial was determined only by the imperial magistrate. Usually such a request by a victim's relatives was granted, but sometimes a body would be left on a cross to decay or be eaten by predatory animals or birds and the remains were thrown into a common grave. Jewish law required a proper burial for all bodies, even those of executed criminals (cf. Mishnah Sanhedrin 6. 5). It also dictated that those hanged were to be taken down and buried before sunset (cf. Deut. 21:23).

Aware of these regulations, Joseph of Arimathea went to Pilate and requested Jesus' body for burial. He did this as evening approached (lit., "when evening had already arrived," i.e., probably about 4 P.M.). This gave urgency to his intended action.

Though Joseph probably lived in Jerusalem he was originally from Arimathea, a village 20 miles northwest of the city. He was a wealthy (Matt. 27:57), reputable member of the Council (bouleutēs), a non-Jewish designation for the Sanhedrin. He had not approved of the Sanhedrin's decision to kill Jesus (Luke 23:51). He was personally waiting for the kingdom of God (cf. Mark 1:15) which suggests he was a devout Pharisee. He regarded Jesus as the Messiah though so far he was a secret disciple (John 19:38).

But he took courage and went to Pilate boldly, a description unique to Mark. His action was bold because: (a) he was not related to Jesus; (b) his request was a favor that would likely be denied on principle since Jesus had been executed for treason; (c) he risked ceremonial defilement in handling a dead body; (d) his request amounted to an open confession of personal loyalty to the crucified Jesus which would doubtless incur his associates' hostility. He was a secret disciple no longer—something Mark impressed on his readers.

15:44-45. Pilate was amazed (ethaumasen, "astonished"; cf. 5:20) that Jesus had already died (cf. comments on 15:37). He summoned the centurion in charge of the Crucifixion (v. 39) to find out from a trusted source if the report were true. Once he was assured that Jesus was dead, Pilate gave (lit., "gave as a gift," i.e., without requiring a fee) the body (to ptōma, "the corpse") to Joseph. Pilate's favorable response to Joseph's request was exceptional; perhaps it arose from his belief that Jesus was innocent (cf. vv. 14-15). Only Mark recorded Pilate's questioning of the centurion, thereby highlighting to his Roman readers that Jesus' death was confirmed by a Roman military officer.

15:46-47. Joseph undoubtedly had servants help him to accomplish a proper burial before sunset, a time span of about two hours. Nicodemus, a fellow Sanhedrin member, joined in, presumably by prearrangement (John 19:39-40).

After Jesus' body was removed from the cross, it was probably washed (cf. Acts 9:37) before it was wrapped tightly in strips of linen cloth with aromatic spices placed between the wraps. All this was in accord with Jewish burial customs (John 19:39-40).

Then the body was carried to a nearby garden and placed on a stone shelf inside Joseph's own previously unused tomb (Matt. 27:60; John 19:41-42) hewn out of rock. The tomb was sealed shut with a circular flat stone that rolled down a sloping groove till it was securely in front of the entrance to keep out intruders. To roll that stone back up again would require the strength of several men.

Two women who had witnessed Jesus' death (cf. Mark 15:40) saw (lit., "were observing," imperf. tense) with interest where He was buried. Apparently the other women had returned home to prepare for the Sabbath, a day on which they rested (Luke 23:56).

IX. Jesus' Resurrection from the Dead near Jerusalem (16:1-8) (Matt. 28:1-8; Luke 24:1-12; John 20:1-10)

The four Gospel accounts of the Resurrection contain various differences in recorded details (e.g., the number and names of the women who came to the tomb, the number of angelic messengers who appeared, and the women's reactions to the Resurrection announcement). None of the writers reported all the data; they were free (within veritable limits) to summarize, particularize, and emphasize different aspects of the same event. The various recorded differences reflect the natural effect of this unique event on different eyewitnesses, thereby confirming the Resurrection as a historical event. (See the chart, "Forty Days—from Resurrection to Ascension," at Matt. 28:1-4.)

A. The women's arrival at the tomb (16:1-5)

16:1. The Sabbath, Saturday (Nisan 16), concluded at sunset and the new Jewish day, Sunday (Nisan 17), began. That evening after sunset the women who had witnessed Jesus' death and burial (cf. 15:40, 47) bought spices, aromatic oils, to anoint Jesus' body (lit., "Him") the next morning. This indicates that they did not expect Jesus to rise from the dead (cf. 8:31; 9:31; 10:34).

Spices were poured over a dead body to counteract the odor of decay and as a symbolic expression of loving devotion. Embalming was not a Jewish custom.

16:2-3. Very early on the first day of the week (Sunday, Nisan 17) just after sunrise the women went to the tomb. They left home while it was still dark (cf. John 20:1) and got to the tomb shortly after sunrise.

Two of them knew that a large stone had been rolled in front of the tomb's entrance (cf. Mark 15:47). Only Mark recorded their concern over the practical problem of getting it rolled back. Evidently they were not aware of the official sealing of the tomb or the posting of a guard (cf. Matt. 27:62-66).

16:4-5. When the women arrived on the scene, they looked up toward the tomb and immediately noticed that the stone . . . had been removed, for (gar; cf. 1:16) it was very large and thus easily seen.

The women entered the tomb's outer room that led to the inner burial chamber. They were startled to see a young man (neaniskon; cf. 14:51) sitting to their right probably in front of the burial chamber. The unique circumstances, the accompanying description, and the revelatory message (16:6-7) indicate that Mark viewed him as an angelic messenger sent from God even though Mark called him a young man, as he appeared to the women. The white robe pictured his heavenly origin and splendor (cf. 9:3).

Luke (24:3-4) and John (20:12) mentioned the presence of two angels, the number necessary for a valid witness (cf. Deut. 17:6); but Matthew (28:5) and Mark referred to only one, presumably the spokesman.

The women were alarmed (exethambēthēsan; cf. Mark 9:15; 14:33) when they encountered the divine messenger. This compound verb of strong emotion (used only by Mark in the NT), expresses overwhelming distress at what is highly unusual (cf. 16:8).

B. The angel's announcement (16:6-7)

16:6. Sensing the women's distress, the angel commanded them, Don't be alarmed (cf. same verb, v. 5). They were looking for (zēteite, "seeking") the dead body of Jesus, the Man from Nazareth who had been crucified, expecting to anoint it (cf. v. 1). But the angel announced, He has risen! ("He was raised"; ēgerthē, pass.) indicating that the Resurrection was God's act, a New Testament emphasis (cf. Acts 3:15; 4:10; Rom. 4:24; 8:11; 10:9; 1 Cor. 6:14; 15:15; 2 Cor. 4:14; 1 Peter 1:21). His body was not there as they could easily see. The tomb was empty!

The angel's message clearly identified the Risen One as the Crucified One, both referring to the same historical Person, and it revealed the meaning of the empty tomb. The certainty of the Resurrection rests on the angel's message from God which people then and now are called on to believe. The historical fact of the empty tomb confirms it.

16:7. The women were given a task. They were to go and tell Jesus' disciples that they would be reunited with Him in Galilee. The words and Peter, unique to Mark, are significant since much of Mark's material likely came from Peter. He was singled out not because of his preeminence among the disciples but because he was forgiven and still included in the Eleven despite his triple denial (cf. 14:66-72).

The message that Jesus was going ahead of (from proagō) them into Galilee recalled the reunion He had promised (cf. the same verb in 14:28). His followers would see Him there which implies a Resurrection appearance (cf. 1 Cor. 15:5). This does not refer, as some say, to His second coming. Mark's journey motif (cf. introduction to Mark 8:31; also 10:32a) did not end with Jesus' death, for the risen Jesus continued to lead His followers.

These women were the first to hear the news of Jesus' resurrection but their reports were disregarded initially as women were not considered eligible witnesses under Jewish law. The disciples did not go to Galilee immediately. Jesus' additional appearances to them in the Jerusalem vicinity were necessary to convince them of the reality of His resurrection (cf. John 20:19-29).

C. The women's response to the news of Jesus' resurrection (16:8)

16:8. The women . . . fled from the tomb because (gar; cf. 1:16) they were trembling (tromos, a noun) and bewildered (astonishment, ekstasis; cf. 5:42). For a time they said nothing to anyone (Matt. 28:8) a double negative expression in Greek unique to Mark, because (gar) they were afraid (ephobounto; cf. Mark 4:41; 5:15, 33, 36; 6:50-52; 9:32; 10:32).

Their response was similar to Peter's at the transfiguration (cf. 9:6). The object of their fear was the awesome disclosure of God's presence and power in raising Jesus from the dead. They were overwhelmed with reverential fear and reduced to silence.

Several interpreters believe that Mark concluded his Gospel at this point. The abrupt ending is consistent with Mark's style and punctuates his development of the themes of fear and astonishment throughout his Gospel. The reader is left to ponder with awe the meaning of the empty tomb as interpreted by the angel's revelatory message (cf. the following comments on 16:9-20).

X. Disputed Epilogue (16:9-20)

The last 12 verses of Mark (16:9-20) known as "the longer ending of Mark" constitute one of the most difficult and most disputed textual problems in the New Testament. Were these verses included or omitted in Mark's original text? Most modern English translations call attention to the problem in some way such as adding an explanatory footnote at verse 9 (NASB), setting this section apart from verse 8 with an explanatory note (NIV), or printing the whole section in the margin (RSV).

The external evidence includes the following: (1) The two earliest (fourth century) uncial manuscripts (Sinaiticus and Vaticanus) omit the verses though their respective scribes left some blank space after verse 8, suggesting that they knew of a longer ending but did not have it in the manuscript they were copying. (2) Most all other manuscripts (fifth century on) as well as early versions support the inclusion of verses 9-20. (3) Several later manuscripts (seventh century on) and versions supply a "shorter ending" after verse 8 which is clearly not genuine but all these manuscripts (except one) continue on with verses 9-20. (4) Early patristic writers—such as Justin Martyr (Apology 1. 45, ca. A.D. 148), Tatian (Diatessaron, ca. A.D. 170), and Irenaeus who quoted verse 19 (Against Heresies 3. 10. 6)—support the inclusion of these verses. However, Eusebius (Questions to Marinus 1, ca. A.D. 325) and Jerome (Epistle 120. 3; ad Hedibiam, ca. A.D. 407) said verses 9-20 were missing from Greek manuscripts known to them. (5) An Armenian manuscript of the 10th century attributed verses 9-20 to "the presbyter Ariston," probably Aristion, a contemporary of Papias (A.D. 60–130) who was purportedly a disciple of the Apostle John. (6) If Mark ended abruptly at verse 8, then it is easy to see why some early copyist(s) wanted to provide a "suitable" ending for the Gospel from other authoritative sources. However, if verses 9-20 were part of the original, it is difficult to see why the early copyists would have omitted it.

Internal evidence includes this data: (1) The transition from verse 8 to verse 9 involves an abrupt change of subject from "women" to the presumed subject "Jesus" since His name is not stated in verse 9 of the Greek text. (2) Mary Magdalene is introduced with a descriptive clause in verse 9 as though she had not been mentioned already in 15:40, 47 and 16:1. (3) About ⅓ of the significant Greek words in verses 9-20 are "non-Marcan," that is, they do not appear elsewhere in Mark or they are used differently from Mark's usage prior to verse 9. (4) The Greek literary style lacks the vivid, lifelike detail so characteristic of Mark's historical narrative. (5) Mark would have been expected to include a Resurrection appearance to the disciples in Galilee (14:28; 16:7), but the appearances in verses 9-20 are in or near Jerusalem. (6) Matthew and Luke parallel Mark until verse 8 and then diverge noticeably, suggesting that Mark began its literary existence without verses 9-20.

Equally astute and conscientious interpreters differ widely in their evaluations of this data and reach opposing conclusions. Those who include these verses in light of the preponderance of early and widespread external support must still account satisfactorily for the internal evidence which appears to distinguish these verses from the rest of the Gospel. And those who omit these verses must still account for their early and widespread attestation externally and give a suitable reason for Mark's seemingly abrupt conclusion at verse 8. Four possible solutions for this have been suggested: (1) Mark finished his Gospel but the original ending was lost or destroyed in some way now unknown before it was copied. (2) Mark finished his Gospel but the original ending was deliberately suppressed or removed for some reason now unknown. (3) Mark was unable to finish his Gospel for some reason now unknown—possibly sudden death. (4) Mark purposely intended to end his Gospel at verse 8.

Of these options, numbers 1 and 2 are unlikely even though the view that the original ending was accidentally lost is widely accepted. If Mark's Gospel was a scroll manuscript rather than a codex (leaf form of book) the ending would normally be on the inside of the scroll and less likely to be damaged or lost than the beginning of the scroll. If the incompleteness of Mark is assumed, number 3 is the most probable option but due to its very nature it cannot be confirmed. In light of Mark's use of the theme "fear" in relation to Jesus' followers (cf. v. 8), many modern interpreters incline toward option 4.

A final conclusion to the problem probably cannot be reached on the basis of presently known data. A view which seems to account for the relevant evidence and to raise the least number of objections is that (a) Mark purposely ended his Gospel with verse 8 and (b) verses 9-20, though written or compiled by an anonymous Christian writer, are historically authentic and are part of the New Testament canon (cf. similarly the last chapter of Deut.). In this view, very early in the transmission of Mark's Gospel (perhaps shortly after A.D. 100) verses 9-20 were added to verse 8 without any attempt to match Mark's vocabulary and style. Possibly these verses were brief extracts from the post-Resurrection accounts found in the other three Gospels and were known through oral tradition to have the approval of the Apostle John who lived till near the end of the first century. Thus the material was included early enough in the transmission process to gain recognition and acceptance by the church as part of canonical Scripture. These verses are consistent with the rest of Scripture. The development of the theme of belief and unbelief unifies the passage.

A. Three of Jesus' post-resurrection appearances (16:9-14)

This section contains three of Jesus' post-resurrection appearances before His Ascension. (See the chart, "Forty Days—from Resurrection to Ascension," at Matt. 28:1-4.)

1. HIS APPEARANCE TO MARY MAGDALENE AND HIS FOLLOWERS' UNBELIEF (16:9-11) (JOHN 20:14-18)

16:9-11. These verses turn abruptly to Mary Magdalene's return visit to the tomb while it was still early (cf. "very early," v. 2) that same morning. Though mentioned three times previously in Mark (cf. 15:40, 47; 16:1), she was described here for the first time as the Mary out of whom Jesus had expelled seven demons (cf. Luke 8:2). Jesus appeared, made Himself visible, to her first. This suggests that people could not recognize Jesus in His resurrected state unless He deliberately revealed Himself to them (cf. Luke 24:16, 31).

Mary went and told those who had been with Him that she had seen Jesus. This designation for Jesus' followers was not used earlier in Mark or in the other Gospels (but cf. Mark 3:14; 5:18). The clause probably refers to Jesus' disciples in general (cf. 16:12), not just the Eleven (cf. Acts 1:21). They all were mourning and weeping over Jesus' death, a description unique to this account.

On hearing that Jesus was alive and . . . had been seen (etheathē, not used elsewhere in Mark) by Mary, the disciples refused to believe (ēpistēsan, a verb not used elsewhere in Mark) her report (cf. Luke 24:11). Apparently a short time later Jesus appeared to the other two women, confirming the angel's announcement and urging them to tell His disciples (cf. Matt. 28:1, 9-10).

2. HIS APPEARANCE TO TWO FOLLOWERS AND THE UNBELIEF OF THE REST (16:12-13)

16:12-13. These verses summarize the story about the two Emmaus disciples (Luke 24:13-35). The words two of them indicate that they were part of the group who disbelieved Mary's report (cf. Mark 16:10-11). While they were out walking, going from Jerusalem into the country, Jesus appeared (cf. v. 9) to them in a different form (hetera morphē, "a form of a different kind"). This could mean that He took on a form different from that in which He appeared to Mary Magdalene or, more likely, that He appeared to them in a form different from that in which they had previously recognized Him as Jesus. When they returned to Jerusalem and reported the event to the rest of the disciples, they did not believe their report either (cf. v. 11). Apparently, despite affirmative statements (cf. Luke 24:34), the disciples initially seemed to regard Jesus' post-resurrection appearances as apparitions (cf. Luke 24:37).

3. HIS APPEARANCE TO THE ELEVEN AND HIS REBUKE OF THEIR UNBELIEF (16:14) (LUKE 24:36-49; JOHN 20:19-25)

16:14. Later (hysteron, a comparative adverb not used elsewhere in Mark) on the evening of the same day (cf. v. 9) Jesus appeared to the Eleven themselves while they sat eating (their evening meal is implied in Luke 24:41-43). He rebuked (ōneidisen, a strong verb not used of Jesus elsewhere) their unbelief and hardness of heart (sklērokardian; cf. Mark 10:5) because they refused to believe the testimony of eyewitnesses to His resurrection earlier that day. By hearing about Jesus' resurrection (before seeing Him) they learned what it was like to believe the testimony of eyewitnesses. This would be necessary for all those to whom they would preach in their coming missionary outreach.

B. Jesus' commission to His followers (16:15-18) (Matt. 28:16-20)

16:15. Later Jesus gave His disciples His great missionary commission: Go into all (hapanta, "the whole," emphatic form) the world and preach (kēryxate, "proclaim"; cf. 1:4, 14) the good news (euangelion, "gospel"; cf. 1:1) to all creation, that is, to all people.

16:16. In response to the preaching of the gospel, whoever believes and is baptized, a baptized believer (lit., "the one who believed and was baptized"), will be saved (sōthēsetai; cf. comments on 13:13) by God (implied) from spiritual death, the penalty of sin. A single Greek article governs both substantival participles, linking them together in describing the inward, efficacious reception of the gospel by faith (believing) and the outward, public expression of that faith in water baptism.

Though the New Testament writers generally assume that under normal circumstances each believer will be baptized, 16:16 does not mean that baptism is a necessary requirement for personal salvation. The second half of the verse indicates by contrast that one who does not believe the gospel will be condemned by God (implied) in the day of final judgment (cf. 9:43-48). The basis for condemnation is unbelief, not the lack of any ritual observance. Baptism is not mentioned because unbelief precludes one's giving a confession of faith while being baptized by water. Thus the only requirement for personally appropriating God's salvation is faith in Him (cf. Rom. 3:21-28; Eph. 2:8-10).

16:17-18. These verses list five kinds of signs (sēmeia; cf. comments on 8:11) which would attend those who believe. "Signs" are supernatural events attesting the divine origin of the apostolic message (cf. 16:20). The signs authenticated the faith the early believers proclaimed, not the personal faith that any one of them exercised. In light of this and historical evidence it is reasonable to conclude that these authenticating signs were normative only for the apostolic era (cf. 2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:3-4).

In fulfilling their commission (cf. Mark 16:15) believers would be given the ability to do miraculous things in Jesus' name (cf. comments on 6:7, 13; 9:38-40). They would drive out demons, thereby demonstrating Jesus' victory over Satan's realm. The Twelve (cf. 6:13) and the Seventy had already expelled demons, and this ability continued in the apostolic church (cf. Acts 8:7; 16:18; 19:15-16). They would speak in new tongues, presumably a reference to intelligible foreign languages not previously known to the speakers. This was demonstrated at Pentecost (cf. Acts 2:4-11) and later in the life of the early church (cf. Acts 10:46; 19:6; 1 Cor. 12:10; 14:1-24).

In the Greek the first two clauses in Mark 16:18 may be understood as conditional clauses with the third clause as the conclusion. An interpretive rendering would be, "And if they be compelled to pick up snakes with their hands and if they should be compelled to drink deadly poison, it shall by no means (ou mē, emphatic negative; cf. 13:2) harm them." This promise of immunity by divine protection in either situation refers to occasions when persecutors would force believers to do these things. This does not warrant voluntary snake-handling or drinking of poison, practices not attested in the early church. Since Paul's encounter with a snake at Malta was unintentional (cf. Acts 28:3-5), the New Testament records no actual instance of either of the experiences described here.

As a final kind of authenticating sign they would put their hands on sick people and they would get well. Healing by this means is mentioned in Acts 28:8 and the gift of healing was exercised in the early church (cf. 1 Cor. 12:30).

C. Jesus' Ascension and the disciples' ongoing mission (16:19-20) (Luke 24:50-51; Acts 1:9-11)

16:19-20. These verses consist of two closely related parts. On the one hand (Gr., men) the Lord Jesus—a compound title not found in the Gospels except in Luke 24:3—after His post-resurrection ministry (a 40-day period; cf. Acts 1:3) was taken up into heaven (by God the Father, implied). There He sat down at the right hand of God, His place of honor and authority (cf. comments on Mark 12:36-37a). The reality of this was confirmed to the early believers by Stephen's vision (cf. Acts 7:56). In one sense Jesus' work on earth was finished.

On the other hand (Gr., de) His work on earth in another sense continued through the disciples who went out from Jerusalem and preached (ekēryxan, "proclaimed"; cf. Mark 1:4, 14; 16:15) the gospel everywhere. At the same time the risen Lord was working with them by empowering them, and confirming His Word, the gospel message, by the signs (cf. 16:17-18) that accompanied it. The signs authenticated their message (cf. Heb. 2:3-4). This task of proclaiming the gospel still goes on through disciples empowered by the risen Lord.

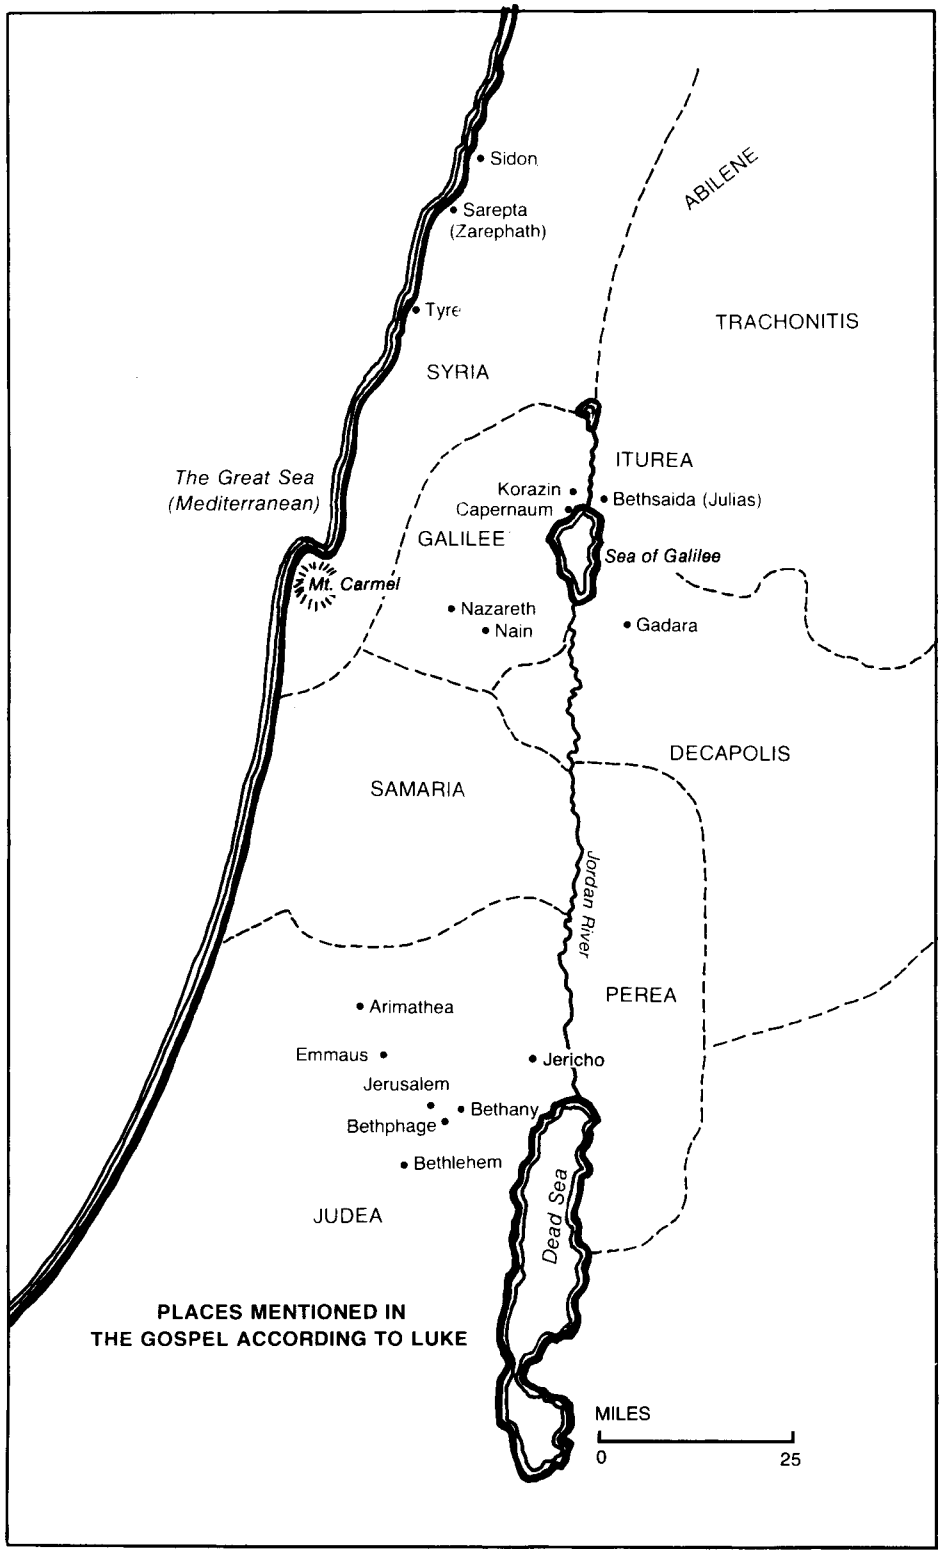
LUKE

John A. Martin

INTRODUCTION

Author. The two books attributed to Luke (Luke and Acts) make up about 28 percent of the Greek New Testament. Luke is not mentioned by name in either book. The only places where his name occurs in the New Testament are in Colossians 4:14; 2 Timothy 4:11; and Philemon 24. Luke also referred to himself directly in the "we" sections of Acts (16:10-17; 20:5–21:18; 27:1–28:16).

Luke must have been a Gentile for Paul differentiates him from the Jews (Col. 4:10-14). Paul wrote that, of his fellow-workers, Aristarchus, Mark, and John were the only ones who were Jews. The others (Epaphras, Luke, and Demas) were therefore probably Gentiles. Paul referred to Luke as a physician (Col. 4:14), a fact which many try to corroborate from passages in Luke and Acts. Until modern times church tradition uniformly has held Luke to be the author of Luke and Acts. According to tradition Luke was from Antioch, but it is impossible to verify this claim.



Sources. Luke claimed to be a historian (Luke 1:1-4). He carefully researched his material for specific reasons. He consulted eyewitnesses for information (1:2). He may have gathered certain details, such as facts on Jesus' youth, from Mary herself (cf. 2:51). Luke also seemed to have had contacts with the Herodian court (cf. 3:1, 19; 8:3; 9:7-9; 13:31; 23:7-12). Scholars do not agree on which sources Luke used in writing his Gospel. He may have reworked various source materials at his disposal in order to create a unified whole, written in his style, which reflected his purpose. All this, of course, was done under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

Date and Place. A number of dates have been suggested for the writing of Luke. If Acts were written before the time of Nero's persecution (A.D. 64)—which seems evident by the fact that Acts closed with Paul still alive and in prison—then the Book of Luke must have been written several years before that, for Acts was subsequent to Luke. Though it is impossible to pinpoint a specific date, a time of composition between A.D. 58 and 60 fits well.

Luke gave no clues as to the place where he wrote his Gospel. Thus any statement on the matter would be mere speculation. Some suggest that Luke wrote from either Caesarea or Rome.

Purposes. Luke had two purposes in writing this book. One was to confirm the faith of Theophilus, that is, to show that his faith in Christ rested on firm historical fact (1:3-4). His other purpose was to present Jesus as the Son of Man, who had been rejected by Israel. Because of this rejection, Jesus was also preached to Gentiles so that they could know the kingdom program of God and attain salvation.

Gentile Character of the Book. Several lines of evidence point to the conclusion that Luke wrote primarily for Gentiles. First, Luke frequently explained Jewish localities (4:31; 8:26; 21:37; 23:51; 24:13). This would be unnecessary if he were writing to Jews. Second, he traced Jesus' genealogy (3:23-38) all the way back to Adam (rather than to Abraham, as in Matthew's Gospel). The implication is that Jesus was representing all mankind rather than just the Jewish nation. Third, Luke referred to Roman emperors in designating the dates of Jesus' birth (2:1) and of John the Baptist's preaching (3:1). Fourth, Luke used a number of words which would be more familiar to Gentile readers than the comparable Jewish terms found in Matthew's Gospel. An example is Luke's use of the Greek didaskalos rather than rabbi for "teacher."

Fifth, Luke used the Septuagint when quoting from the Old Testament. He has relatively few direct quotations, though the book is filled with allusions. The quotations and references are in 2:23-24; 3:4-6; 4:4, 8, 10-12, 18-19; 7:27; 10:27; 18:20; 19:46; 20:17, 28, 37, 42-43; 22:37. All these except 7:27 are based on the Septuagint. The quotation in 7:27 appears to be taken neither from the Greek Septuagint nor the Hebrew Masoretic text but from some other text. Sixth, little is said about Jesus' fulfilling prophecies because that theme was not nearly so important to Gentile readers as it was to Jewish readers. Luke has only five direct references to fulfillment of prophecy and all but one (3:4) are found in the teaching of Jesus to Israel.

Luke's Relationship to Matthew and Mark. Luke is one of the Synoptic Gospels, having much material in common with Matthew and Mark. However, Luke has a lengthy section in which much of the material is unique to his book (9:51–19:27). He also presented unique material in the birth narratives of John and Jesus and the record of Jesus at age 12 (1:5–2:52). It is assumed that Luke knew of and used both Matthew and Mark or sources common to Matthew and/or Mark. The differences in narrative sequence and accounts presented can be explained on the basis of the purposes of the various authors. Though the accounts are historical, the purpose of each of the writers was theological. (For more on the relationships of the Synoptic Gospels see the Introduction to the Book of Matt. and the Introduction to the Book of Mark.)

Characteristics of the Book. 1. Luke emphasized the universal message of the gospel more than the other Gospel writers. He often wrote about sinners, the poor, and outcasts from Jewish society. He also referred many times to Gentiles who shared in the blessings of the Messiah. Samaritans were presented as coming to faith in the Messiah. And Luke wrote frequently of women and children and their faith.

2. Luke's Gospel gives a reader a more comprehensive grasp of the history of the period than the other Gospels. He presented more facts about the earthly life of Jesus than did Matthew, Mark, or John.

3. Luke emphasized forgiveness (3:3; 5:18-26; 6:37; 7:36-50; 11:4; 12:10; 17:3-4; 23:34; 24:47).

4. Luke emphasized prayer. At many points in His ministry Jesus prayed (3:21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:18, 29; 22:32, 40-41).

5. Luke noted the individual's place in coming to repentance. He stressed the action which must come from each individual who followed Jesus. Examples include Zechariah, Elizabeth, Mary, Simeon, Anna, Martha, Mary, Simon, Levi, the centurion, the widow of Nain, Zacchaeus, and Joseph of Arimathea.

6. Luke said more about material things than did any other author in the New Testament. He did not always present the poor as being righteous, but he did say that the self-sufficient rich, who regarded riches more highly than Jesus, were unable to enter into the salvation Jesus offered.

7. Luke often spoke of joy that accompanies faith and salvation (1:14; 8:13; 10:17; 13:17; 15:5, 9, 32; 19:6, 37).

COMMENTARY

I. The Prologue and Purpose of the Gospel (1:1-4)

1:1-4. Luke is the only one of the four Gospel writers who stated his method and purpose at the beginning of his book. He was familiar with other writings about Jesus' life and the message of the gospel (v. 1). His purpose was to allow Theophilus to know the certainty of the things he had been taught by writing out an orderly account (v. 3; cf. v. 1) of the events in Christ's life.

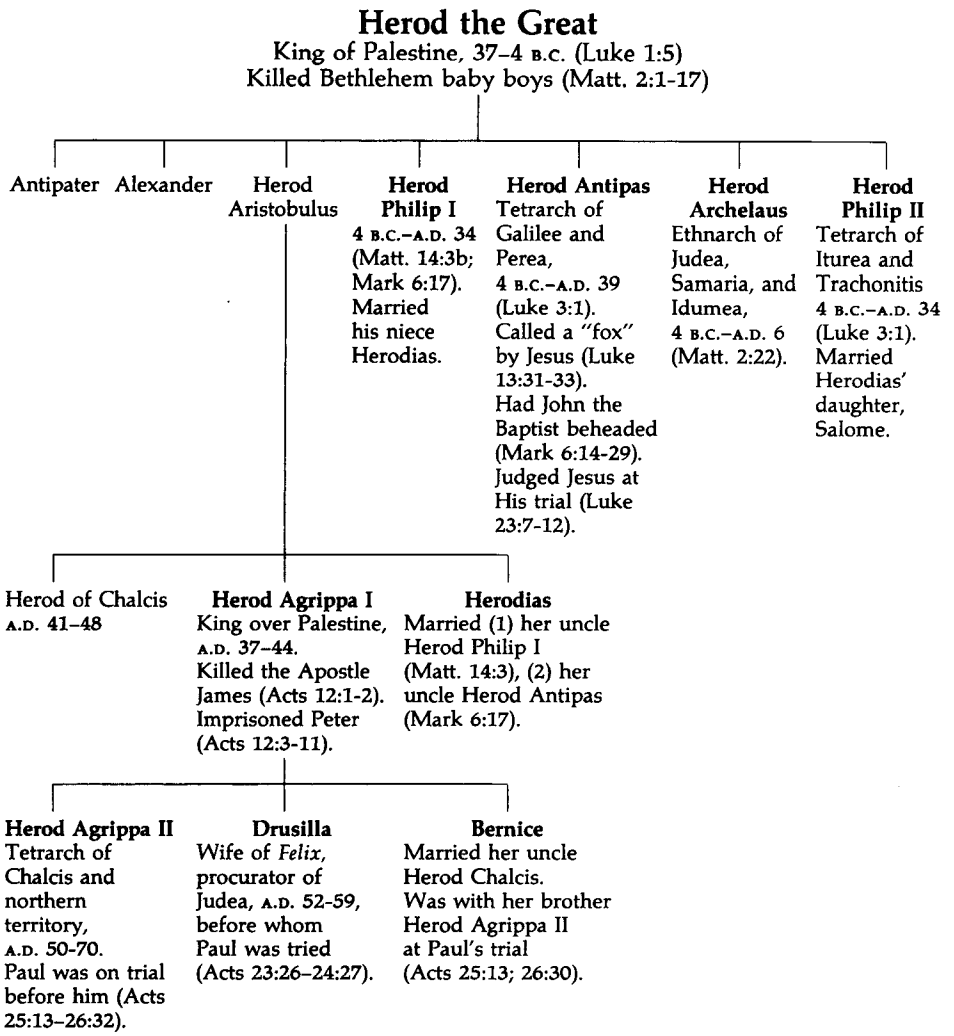
Luke carefully identified himself with the believers (v. 1). Some have suggested that Luke may have been among the 72 Jesus sent out on the missionary journey (10:1-24) because of his notation that the things were fulfilled among us. However, the next statement that these "things" (i.e., accounts and teachings) were handed down orally by the eyewitnesses of Jesus would negate that possibility. Luke implied that he was not an eyewitness but a researcher. He was thorough and exact in his research, having investigated for his account everything from the beginning, that is, from the first of Christ's life.

"Theophilus" (lit., "lover of God") was a common name during the first century. Who this man was is open to conjecture. Though it has been suggested that Luke used the name for all who are "lovers of God" (i.e., the readers of his Gospel narrative), it is better to suppose that this was a real individual who was the first recipient of Luke's Gospel and who then gave it wide circulation in the early church. Apparently he was an official of some kind, for he was called most excellent (cf. Acts 23:26; 24:3; 26:25, which use the same Gr. term, kratiste).

II. The Births and Maturations of John and Jesus (1:5–2:52)

A. The announcements of the births (1:5-56)

Luke arranged the material in this section and the following sections in a form which compared John's birth and maturation with Jesus' birth and maturation. In both cases the parents were introduced (vv. 5-7 and 26-27), an angel appeared (vv. 8-23 and 28-30), a sign was given (vv. 18-20 and 34-38), and a woman who had no children became pregnant (vv. 24-25 and 42).



1. THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE BIRTH OF JOHN (1:5-25)

a. The introduction of John's parents (1:5-7)

1:5-7. John's parents were a priest named Zechariah and Elizabeth, who was also a descendant of Aaron. John therefore was by lineage one who was to become a priest. His parents lived when Herod the Great ruled as king of Judea, from 37 to 4 B.C. (See chart on the Herods.) They were godly people, or upright (dikaioi, "righteous"), observing all the Lord's commandments. They were both well along in years and thus had no prospect of children. This fact was a constant embarrassment to Elizabeth as is evident from her statement later on (v. 25). God's allowing a barren woman to have children occurred several times in the Old Testament (e.g., the mothers of Isaac, Samson, and Samuel).

b. The angel's announcement to Zechariah (1:8-23)

1:8-9. Luke recorded that Zechariah's division was on duty. This division was one of 24 groups of priests, drawn up in David's time (1 Chron. 24:7-18). The priests in each division were on duty twice a year for a week at a time.

Names in boldface appear in the New Testament.

Zechariah was of the division of Abijah (Luke 1:5; cf. 1 Chron. 24:10).

Zechariah was chosen by lot (elache) to be the priest who offered the incense. Because of the large number of priests this would be the only time in Zechariah's life when he was allowed to perform this task. As elsewhere in Scripture (e.g., Es. 3:7), the sovereignty of God is stressed even in matters which seem like chance, as in the casting of a lot.

1:10-11. While Zechariah was inside at the altar of incense, a crowd gathered to pray. The incense for which Zechariah was responsible symbolized the prayers of the entire nation. At that particular moment Zechariah was thus the focal point of the entire Jewish nation.

At that unique moment in Zechariah's life an angel of the Lord appeared . . . standing where Zechariah was praying beside the altar of incense.

1:12-13. The purpose of the appearance of the angel of the Lord was to announce the birth of a son to Zechariah and Elizabeth. Zechariah was gripped with fear (lit., "fear fell on him"). In Luke, many people responded with fear or awe (phobos) when confronted with mighty acts of God (cf. 1:30, 65; 2:9-10; 5:10, 26; 7:16; 8:25, 37, 50; 9:34, 45; 12:4-5, 32; 21:26; cf. 23:40). Because of the angel's response, Do not be afraid, Zechariah; your prayer has been heard, it may be inferred that Zechariah was praying for a son, or possibly even for the coming of the Messiah and that the birth of John would be a partial answer to his prayer. The angel told Zechariah what to name his son. This was also the case when the angel appeared to Mary (1:31).

1:14-17. The angel not only gave the name of the son, but also detailed six aspects of John's character.

1. He will be a joy and delight to you (v. 14). Luke frequently used the word "joy" in his accounts in Luke and Acts, often linking it closely with salvation. An illustration of this is in Luke 15, where three times joy and rejoicing came because something lost had been found, a picture of salvation. And John the Baptist's ministry brought joy to the Israelites who believed his message of repentance for the forgiveness of sins (3:3).

2. He will be great in the sight of the Lord. The expression "in the sight of" (enōpion) is characteristic of Luke. Though it appears 35 times in Luke and Acts, it is used only one other time in the other Gospels (John 20:30).

3. He is never to take wine or other fermented drink. Later John voluntarily took on himself a Nazirite vow, refusing to drink anything fermented (Num. 6:1-21). Luke did not specifically state that John would fulfill all aspects of the Nazirite vow. Instead, John would avoid taking any wine perhaps to support his contention that his message was urgent. Another way he emphasized the urgency of his message was to dress, act, and eat like Elijah the prophet (cf. Matt. 3:4; 2 Kings 1:8).

4. He will be filled with the Holy Spirit even from birth. "From birth" is literally "from his mother's womb." When Mary visited Elizabeth before John was born, the baby leaped in her womb. The ministry of the Holy Spirit was important to Luke, and he often went to great length to show His empowering and enabling ministry. Both of John's parents were filled with the Spirit (Luke 1:41, 67).

5. Many of the people of Israel would he bring back to . . . God. Crowds of Israelites did turn to the Lord through John's ministry (Matt. 3:5-6; Mark 1:4-5).

6. He will go on before the Lord. John the Baptist was the Lord's forerunner, announcing His coming in the spirit and power of Elijah. Luke here referred to two passages in Malachi which speak of messengers: a messenger was to be sent to clear the way before the Lord (Mal. 3:1), and Elijah's return was promised before the day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5-6) to restore the hearts of the fathers to their children. Zechariah apparently understood that the angel was identifying John the Baptist with the messenger in Malachi 3:1, for in his song of praise he noted that John would "go on before the Lord to prepare the way for Him" (Luke 1:76; cf. 3:4-6). Jesus affirmed that John was the fulfillment of Malachi 3:1 (Matt. 11:10) and stated that John would have fulfilled Malachi 4:5-6 if the people had accepted his message (Matt. 11:14).

1:18-20. Zechariah had doubts that such a thing could take place because both he and Elizabeth were old. But the angel, identifying himself as Gabriel, reassured Zechariah that this good news was from the Lord. When Gabriel appeared twice to Daniel (Dan. 8:16; 9:21), both times he gave Daniel instruction and understanding. He did the same here with Zechariah, as can be inferred from the song of praise and trust which Zechariah uttered later (Luke 1:67-79). Zechariah's inability to speak till the fulfillment of Gabriel's message was, to some degree, a punishment for his unbelief. But it was also a sign. A sign in the Old Testament was often associated with a confirming observable phenomenon which accompanied a word of prophecy. For the next nine months Zechariah's attempts to speak would prove the reality of Gabriel's message.

1:21-23. When Zechariah finally came out of the temple, he was able to make the waiting people realize that he had seen a vision. He then returned home in Judah's hill country after completing his temple duty.

c. Elizabeth's pregnancy (1:24-25)

1:24-25. After . . . Elizabeth became pregnant . . . for five months she remained in seclusion. Most likely, this was because of the excitement of the surrounding people to her pregnancy

(v. 25). Mary may have been the first person other than Zechariah and Elizabeth to know the news which the angel had delivered (v. 36).

Luke did not say in verse 25 if Elizabeth knew about the destiny of her son at this time. However, because she knew that his name was to be John (v. 60) even before Zechariah was able to speak, he probably communicated his entire vision in writing. Elizabeth was overjoyed that she was finally able to have a baby.

2. THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE BIRTH OF JESUS (1:26-56)

a. The introduction of Mary and Joseph (1:26-27)

1:26-27. In the sixth month, that is, when Elizabeth was in her sixth month of pregnancy, God sent . . . Gabriel to Nazareth.

Mary had not yet had sexual contact with a man, for Luke called her a virgin (parthenon; cf. 1:34) and noted that she was pledged to be married to . . . Joseph (cf. 2:5). In Jewish culture then a man and woman were betrothed or pledged to each other for a period of time before the actual consummation of their marriage. This betrothal was much stronger than an engagement period today, for the two were considered husband and wife except that they did not live together till after the wedding.

b. The angel's announcement of Jesus' birth to Mary (1:28-38)

1:28-31. The angel said that Mary was highly favored (kecharitōmenē, a part. related to the noun charis, "grace"; the verb charitoō is used elsewhere in the NT only in Eph. 1:6). Also Mary had found favor (charis, "grace") with God. Obviously God had bestowed a special honor on her. She was a special recipient of His grace.

Gabriel's admonition (Luke 1:30-31) was the same as to Zechariah: Do not be afraid, for you will have a Son (cf. v. 13). As with John (v. 13b), the naming was by the angel (v. 31).

1:32-33. The angel predicted five things about Mary's Son.

1. He will be great.

2. He will be called the Son of the Most High (cf. v. 76). The Septuagint often used the term "Most High" (hypsistou) to translate the Hebrew 'elyôn (cf. v. 76). Mary could not have missed the significance of that terminology. The fact that her Baby was to be called the "Son of the Most High" pointed to His equality with Yahweh. In Semitic thought a son was a "carbon copy" of his father, and the phrase "son of" was often used to refer to one who possessed his "father's" qualities (e.g., the Heb. trans. "son of wickedness" in Ps. 89:22 [KJV] means a wicked person).

3. He will be given the throne of His father David. Jesus, as David's descendant, will sit on David's throne when He reigns in the Millennium (2 Sam. 7:16; Ps. 89:3-4, 28-29).

4. He will reign over the house of Jacob forever. Jesus' reign over the nation Israel as her King will begin in the Millennium and continue on into the eternal state.

5. His kingdom will never end. These promises must have immediately reminded Mary of the promise of Yahweh to David (2 Sam. 7:13-16). David understood the prophecy as referring not only to his immediate son (Solomon) who would build the temple, but also to the future Son who would rule forever. David stated that Yahweh had spoken of the distant future (2 Sam. 7:19). Mary would have understood that the angel was speaking to her of the Messiah who had been promised for so long.

1:34-38. Mary did not seem surprised that the Messiah was to come. Rather, she was surprised that she would be His mother since she was a virgin (lit., "since I do not know a man"). But the angel did not rebuke Mary, as he had rebuked Zechariah (v. 20). This indicates that Mary did not doubt the angel's words but merely wanted to know how such an event would be accomplished. The answer was that the Holy Spirit would creatively bring about the physical conception of Jesus (v. 35). This miraculous conception and Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ was necessary because of His deity and preexistence (cf. Isa. 7:14; 9:6; Gal. 4:4).

Like Zechariah, Mary was given a sign: Elizabeth . . . is going to have a child. Mary affirmed her part in her Son's subsequent birth by assenting to the plan of God: May it be to me as You have said. She willingly submitted to God's plan, calling herself the Lord's servant (doulē, "slave"; cf. Luke 1:48).

c. Mary's visit to Elizabeth and her return home (1:39-56)

1:39-45. After learning of the sign, Mary . . . hurried to see Elizabeth. Elizabeth and Zechariah lived in a town in the hill country, which probably referred to the hilly region surrounding Jerusalem. As Mary arrived, Elizabeth's baby leaped in her womb for joy, and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Spirit. Zechariah also was later filled with the Holy Spirit (v. 67). Prior to the day of Pentecost, believers were filled with the Holy Spirit for specific tasks.

Elizabeth's loudly spoken words, Blessed (eulogēmenē, lit., "well spoken of") are you among women, carry the idea that Mary is the most honored of all women. Elizabeth called her the mother of my Lord. In Luke the term "Lord" (kyrios) often describes Jesus. It has a double meaning. "Lord" would be more important for a Greek reader than would the term "Christ" (meaning "Messiah"), for the Gentiles had not been anxiously awaiting the Messiah. On the other hand the Septuagint often used the word "Lord" (kyrios) to translate Yahweh. Again (v. 45) Elizabeth said Mary was blessed (makaria, "happy") because she believed what God had told her. This suggests that Mary visited Elizabeth not with a skeptical attitude but rather joyously, to confirm what had been announced to her.

1:46-55. In response to the situation at hand Mary recited a song which praised God's favor on her and her people. "The Magnificat," as the song is called, consists almost entirely of Old Testament allusions and quotations. The same is true of the songs of Zechariah and Simeon (vv. 1:68-79; 2:29-32). Mary's song has similarities to Hannah's song (1 Sam. 2:1-10). First, Mary praised God for His special favor on her (Luke 1:46-50). Mary saw herself as part of the godly remnant that had served Yahweh. She called God my Savior (sōtēri mou) showing an intimate acquaintance with Him. She spoke of His faithfulness (v. 48), power (v. 49), holiness (v. 49), and mercy (v. 50). Second, Mary praised God for His special favor on Israel (vv. 51-55). Through the Child that she was to bear, God was being merciful to Abraham and his descendants. Mary was aware that the birth of her Child was a fulfillment of the covenant promises to Abraham and his people.

1:56. Mary stayed with Elizabeth for about three months, apparently until John was born (cf. v. 36). Mary then returned home. The Greek has the words "her home," indicating that she was still a virgin and was not yet married to Joseph.

B. The births and boyhoods of John and Jesus (1:57–2:52)

As in the previous section (1:5-56) here also the records of the births were arranged by Luke in a parallel fashion. The emphasis is on the birth of Jesus, which is described in greater detail than the birth of John.

1. THE BIRTH AND MATURATION OF JOHN (1:57-80)

a. John's birth (1:57-66)

1:57-66. The record of John's birth is given in a single verse (v. 57), with friends sharing in the joy. Several verses then focus on and emphasize the obedience of Zechariah and Elizabeth. The old couple was careful to follow the Law in the circumcision of the boy. Though others objected, Elizabeth said that he was to be named John, which Zechariah confirmed in writing. The fact that Zechariah immediately was able to speak amazed the crowd. As was true of each person in the account, Zechariah was praising (eulogōn, "was blessing"; cf. eulogēmonē in v. 42) God. Word then spread through the whole hill country (in the Jerusalem area) that this was an unusual child. The people continued to note that the Lord's hand was with him. Years later, when John began his preaching ministry, many went out from this district who no doubt remembered the amazing events surrounding his birth (Matt. 3:5).

b. Zechariah's prophecy and psalm (1:67-79)

1:67-79. This psalm, known as "the Benedictus," is filled with Old Testament quotations and allusions. Zechariah expounded four ideas.

1. Zechariah gave an exhortation to praise . . . God (v. 68a).

2. Zechariah noted the reason God should be praised—He has come and has redeemed His people (v. 68b).

3. Zechariah described the deliver-

Tiberius (A.D. 14–37)

Caligula (A.D. 37–41)

Claudius (A.D. 41–54)
An extensive famine occurred in his reign (Acts 11:28). He expelled Jews from Rome, including Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:2).

Nero (A.D. 54–68)
He persecuted Christians, including the martyrdoms of Paul and Peter. He is the Caesar to whom Paul appealed for a fair trial (Acts 25:8, 10-12, 21; 26:32; 27:24; 28:19).

ance for Israel through the Messiah (vv. 69-75). The Messiah was to be Israel's horn of salvation (v. 69). The horns of an animal symbolized its power. Thus the Messiah would be strong and would deliver the nations from her enemies (v. 74). Of special import in these verses is the mention of His holy covenant, the oath God swore to our father Abraham (vv. 72-73; cf. Gen. 22:16-18).

4. Zechariah prophetically described the ministry John would have (Luke 1:76-79). Zechariah had understood the message of the angel, so he foretold that John would be the one to go on before the Lord to prepare the way for Him (cf. Isa. 40:3; Mal. 3:1). He would be a prophet of the Most High (Luke 1:76; cf. v. 32). Verse 77 may refer to the Lord rather than to John. However, John did preach the same message of forgiveness of . . . sins (cf. 3:3).

c. John's growth and seclusion (1:80)

1:80. As John grew, he became strong in spirit, that is, in human spirit he had an inner vitality and fortitude. His living in the desert till the time of his public appearance was not normal for a young person. But because of the special mission which John knew from an early age he would perform, he chose to follow the role of Elijah (cf. v. 17) by living in a desolate area. For in only a brief period of time John's ministry would catapult him into prominence.

2. THE BIRTH AND MATURATION OF JESUS (CHAP. 2)

a. Jesus' birth (2:1-7)

2:1-2. Jesus' birth was dated by Luke as falling in the reign of Caesar Augustus, who was officially made the ruler of the Roman Empire in 27 B.C. and ruled to A.D. 14. (See the list of Roman emperors.) Because Herod the Great's reign ended in 4 B.C., Jesus was born before that time. The mention of Quirinius as governor of Syria poses a problem. He was governor in A.D. 6–7, much too late for Jesus' birth. Therefore does the word first (prōtē) refer, as in the NIV, to a first, that is, an earlier, census by Quirinius? If so, one would have to posit a previous governorship for Quirinius at about 4 B.C. Perhaps a better solution is to take "first" to mean "before," as it does, for example, in John 15:18. Luke 2:2 would then read, "this was the census that took place before Quirinius was governor of Syria" (i.e., before A.D. 6).

2:3-5. For the census Joseph and Mary went to Bethlehem, Joseph's ancestral home. Joseph was a descendant of David (cf. 1:27), who was born in Bethlehem. Some have argued that it seems strange that people were not registered in the places where they currently lived. However, other instances of the same practice are known (see I. Howard Marshall, The Gospel of Luke, pp. 101-2). Mary accompanied Joseph for several reasons. The couple knew she would have the Baby during the time Joseph was gone, and they most likely did not want to be separated at that event. Also both of them knew that the Child was the Messiah. They also would have known that the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2).

2:6-7. The Child was born during their time in Bethlehem. The fact that Jesus was called Mary's firstborn implies that later she had other children. The couple was housed in quarters which were not private. According to tradition, they were in a cave near the inn. The Child was placed . . . in a manger, from which livestock fed. Being wrapped in strips of cloth was important, for this was the way the shepherds would recognize the infant (v. 12). Some infants were bound up in that way to keep their limbs straight and unharmed.

b. The shepherd's worship of the baby (2:8-20)

2:8-14. An announcing angel and other angels appeared at night to a group of shepherds and heralded the birth of the Savior in the town of David, that is, Bethlehem (v. 4). The shepherds may have been caring for lambs which were destined for sacrifice during the time of Passover. The appearance of the angel and of the radiant glory of the Lord . . . terrified them. The Greek for "terrified" (lit., "they feared a great fear") stresses the intensity of this fear.

The angels' message was comforting. The shepherds were told not to be afraid (cf. 1:13, 30). The message was that "a Savior," Christ the Lord, was born. This was good news of great joy. Throughout Luke "joy" (chara) is often associated with salvation. This news was to be proclaimed to all the people. These were specifically the people of Israel, but perhaps Luke also hinted that the Savior would be for all mankind. The angel was then joined by a great company of other angels engaged in praising God in the highest. The NIV's on earth peace to men on whom His favor rests is preferred to the KJV's "good will toward men." God's peace is not given to those who have good will, but to those who are recipients of God's good will or favor.

2:15-20. The shepherds went to see the Baby, and they told what the angels had related to them. The shepherds understood that the angels were speaking for the Lord. They believed the message and went to confirm it for themselves. This was much like the action of Mary after she had heard the message of Elizabeth. Such an attitude contrasts sharply with that of the religious leaders who knew where the Baby was to be born but did not take the time or the effort to confirm it for themselves (Matt. 2:5).

After seeing the Baby, the shepherds were the first messengers to proclaim the arrival of the Messiah: they spread the word. Those who heard . . . were amazed (ethaumasan). The theme of amazement at the proclamation of the Messiah runs throughout the Book of Luke. (The Gr. verb thaumazō, "to be amazed, to wonder, to be astonished," occurs in Luke 1:21, 63; 2:18, 33; 4:22; 8:25; 9:43; 11:14, 38; 20:26; 24:12, 41. Two other words for amazement were also used by Luke; see 2:48.) Mary reflected on this momentous event in history. Of all the women of Israel she was the mother of the Messiah! The shepherds returned glorifying and praising God, much as the angels had done (vv. 13-14).

c. Jesus' circumcision (2:21)

2:21. Mary and Joseph carried out the pronouncement of the angel by naming their Son according to the word which had come to her before the Baby's conception (1:31) and to him after the Baby's conception (Matt. 1:18-21). The name Jesus is very fitting for it is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua which means "Yahweh is salvation" (cf. Matt. 1:21). As was the custom, Jesus was circumcised on the eighth day (Lev. 12:3), perhaps in Bethlehem.

d. The presentation of Jesus to the Lord (2:22-38)

(1) Mary and Joseph's offering. 2:22-24. The couple was required by the Law not only to have Jesus circumcised (Lev. 12:3), but also to present their firstborn to God (Ex. 13:2, 12) 33 days later and to bring an offering for Mary's purification after childbirth (Lev. 12:1-8).

The offering which they presented for her purification showed that they were a poor couple. They could not afford a lamb, so they bought a pair of doves or pigeons, which were all they could afford. They traveled the short distance from Bethlehem to Jerusalem for the presentation and purification at the temple.

(2) Simeon's prophecy and blessing of the family (2:25-35). 2:25-26. Simeon had been told by the Holy Spirit that he would not die till he had seen the Messiah. Simeon was righteous (dikaios) and devout (eulabēs, "reverent") before God. Unlike the religious leaders, he was waiting for the consolation of Israel, that is, the Messiah, the One who would bring comfort to the nation (cf. "the redemption of Jerusalem," v. 38). The notation that the Holy Spirit was upon Simeon reminds one of the Old Testament prophets on whom the Holy Spirit came. Since Anna was "a prophetess" (v. 36), Simeon was probably also in the godly prophetic tradition of Israel. The special revelation from the Holy Spirit about seeing the Messiah was apparently unique and perhaps came because of Simeon's intense desire for the Promised One.

2:27-32. On seeing the Child and picking Him up, Simeon . . . praised God, the response of godly people toward the Messiah throughout the Gospel of Luke. He then uttered a psalm of praise extolling God for fulfilling His promise by bringing salvation. The Messiah is the Source of salvation, as His name Jesus indicates. In all three of the hymns of thanksgiving and praise recorded by Luke in his first two chapters (1:46-55, 68-79; 2:29-32) lie the deep significance of the births of John and Jesus for the salvation of Israel and the world. Simeon noted that the Messiah was to be for the Gentiles as well as for Israel. The idea of salvation for the Gentiles is set forth many times in the Gospel of Luke.

2:33. The words of Simeon caused Mary and Joseph to marvel (thaumazontes; cf. comments on v. 18). Though they had been told that their Son was the Messiah, perhaps they had not comprehended the scope of His ministry to the entire world—to the Gentiles as well as to the people of Israel.

2:34-35. Simeon revealed to Mary that her Son would be opposed (a sign . . . spoken against) and that she would be hurt greatly. Her grief would be like a sword piercing her soul. The Son would cause the falling and rising of many in Israel. Throughout His ministry Jesus proclaimed that the only way to the kingdom, something the nation had long sought, was to follow Him. The ones who did so would receive salvation; they would "rise." But the ones who did not believe Him would not receive salvation; they would "fall." These consequences would reveal what they thought about Mary's Son.

(3) Anna's thanks to God. 2:36-38. This godly woman from the prophetic tradition continued the work Simeon had started. Anna was 84 years old and had devoted herself completely to the Lord's service in the temple since her husband had died years before. She announced to all who were looking forward to the redemption of Jerusalem (cf. v. 25) that the Messiah had come. The word about Jesus was likely known throughout the entire city as people either believed or disbelieved the words of the old prophet and the widowed prophetess.

e. Jesus' growth in Nazareth (2:39-40)

2:39-40. Joseph and Mary then returned with Jesus to their home in Nazareth of Galilee, about 65 miles north of Jerusalem, where Jesus grew up. Luke omitted Jesus' sojourn in Egypt from his account (cf. Matt. 2:13-21) since it was not his purpose to show the early rejection of the Messiah. In Nazareth He was first rejected after He publicly declared that He was the Messiah. The preparation for His ministry took place in that town as He continued to grow up. Luke noted that He became strong and was filled with wisdom (sophia). His growth in wisdom was mentioned later (Luke 2:52). Luke also portrayed Jesus as the Source of wisdom for His followers (21:15). Jesus had the grace or favor (charis) of God . . .

upon Him. Luke also reiterated that characteristic in 2:52. The wisdom and favor from God were evident before He reached the age of 12.

f. Jesus' visit to the temple (2:41-50)

2:41-50. By the time Jesus was 12 years old, He understood His mission on earth. As was their custom, Mary and Joseph went yearly to Jerusalem to observe the Feast of the Passover. The one-day Passover was followed by the seven-day Feast of Unleavened Bread (Ex. 23:15; Lev. 23:4-8; Deut. 16:1-8). The entire eight-day festival was sometimes called the Passover (Luke 22:1, 7; John 19:14; Acts 12:3-4). On the return home from their trip to Jerusalem, His parents did not realize He was not with them until they had gone some distance. After three days they found Him in the temple courts. The "three days" refer to the time since they had left the city. They had traveled one day's journey away from the city (Luke 2:44); it took them a second day to get back; they found Him on the following day. When Jesus was found, He was interacting with the teachers of the Law, listening and asking intelligent questions. Everyone . . . was amazed (existanto, "beside themselves in amazement"; cf. 8:56) at His understanding and His answers. When Mary and Joseph saw Him, they were astonished (exeplagēsan, "struck out of their senses," perhaps with joy; cf. 4:32; 9:43). In response to Mary's question about why He had treated them in this manner, Jesus drew a sharp distinction between them and God, His true Father (2:49). His statement confirmed that He knew His mission and that His parents also should have known about His mission. However, His parents did not understand this.

g. Jesus' continued growth (2:51-52)

2:51-52. Luke was careful to point out that Jesus was obedient to Joseph and Mary in case his readers would think otherwise from the previous paragraph. Mary treasured all these things in her heart, reflecting on and remembering her 12-year-old's words, even though she did not understand them. Perhaps Luke received these details about the early years of Jesus from Mary herself or from someone in whom she had confided. Jesus continued to grow (proekopten, lit., "cut one's way forward," i.e., "increased") in every way (spiritually, mentally, and physically) and had favor with God and men (cf. v. 40).

III. The Preparation for Jesus' Ministry (3:1–4:13)

This section paves the way for the major message of the Gospel of Luke—Jesus' ministry in Galilee and His ministry on the way to Jerusalem (4:14–19:27).

A. The ministry of John the Baptist (3:1-20) (Matt. 3:1-12; Mark 1:1-8)

As noted earlier (Luke 1:80) John the Baptist lived a life of seclusion till his meteoric rise in public prominence and his sudden fall by the edict of Herod.

1. THE INTRODUCTION OF JOHN (3:1-6)

3:1-2. John's message began in the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, that is, A.D. 29. Tiberius ruled over the Roman Empire from A.D. 14 to A.D. 37. Pontius Pilate was appointed governor of Judea in A.D. 26 and ruled to A.D. 36. He was generally opposed to the Jewish people over whom he ruled. The Herod here is Herod Antipas who ruled from Tiberius over Galilee from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. His brother Philip ruled to the east of the Jordan from 4 B.C. to A.D. 34. (See chart on the Herods at 1:5.) Herod's capital was at Caesarea Philippi. Little is known about Lysanias who ruled in Abilene, northwest of Damascus. John's ministry also began in the time of Annas and Caiaphas. Annas was the high priest from A.D. 6 to A.D. 15 but was deposed by the Roman authorities. Eventually his son-in-law, Caiaphas, was placed in the position (A.D. 18-36). The Jews continued to recognize Annas as the rightful high priest though Caiaphas functioned in that role (cf. comments on Acts 4:5-6, and see chart there on Annas' family; also cf. comments on Luke 22:54; Acts 7:1).

Luke noted that the word of God came to John . . . in the desert. The Old Testament is filled with similar phrases as God called specific prophets to perform tasks. Luke had previously noted that John remained in the desert until his public appearance (1:80).

3:3-6. John's message was a baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins. John's baptism was associated with repentance, that is, it outwardly pictured an inner change of heart. The word "for" (eis) refers back to the whole "baptism of repentance." The baptism did not save anyone, as is clear from what follows (vv. 7-14). Repentance was "unto" (lit. rendering of eis; cf. comments on Acts 2:38) or resulted in sins forgiven. Since John's function was to be Christ's forerunner, so also his baptism prefigured a different baptism (Luke 3:16). Luke noted that John's baptizing work was in the country around (perichōron) the Jordan. Because John was visibly taking on himself the role of Elijah, it is possible that he picked this area on the lower Jordan because that was where Elijah spent his last days (cf. 2 Kings 2:1-13). Luke quoted from Isaiah 40:3-5 concerning John's ministry. Isaiah was writing of God's smoothing the way for the return of the exiles from Babylon to Judah. But all three Synoptic Gospel writers applied Isaiah's words to John the Baptist.

Isaiah wrote, "A voice of one calling: 'In the desert, prepare the way for the Lord.' " But Matthew, Mark, and Luke each wrote, A voice of one calling in the desert—the words "in the desert" going with the "voice" rather than with the preparing of the way. Why? Because they quoted from the Septuagint. Of course both are true—the voice (of John the Baptist) was in the desert, and the desert was to be smoothed.

When a king traveled the desert, workmen preceded him to clear debris and smooth out the roads to make his trip easier. In Luke the leveling of the land was a figurative expression denoting that the way of the Messiah would be made smooth because through John a large number of people were ready to receive Jesus' message (cf. Luke 1:17).

Typical of Luke's emphasis on the universal availability of the gospel are his words in 3:6, And all mankind will see God's salvation.

2. THE MESSAGE OF JOHN (3:7-14)

Luke recorded the message of John in ethical terms. John's teaching was that one's life proves whether or not he has truly repented (cf. the Book of James). Ethical teaching was important to Luke for he wrote frequently about helping the oppressed and the poor.

3:7-9. John challenged the people to bring forth fruit as an indication of their belief. John's address to the people was harsh: You brood of vipers! Apparently some were coming with the belief that baptism alone could insure salvation. John was alerting them to the stark realities of life. One must face the fact that wrath was coming. John was clear that being a member of the nation of Israel would not save anyone (v. 8; cf. John 8:33-39; Rom. 2:28-29). An ax is ready to cut down trees that do not bear good fruit so they can be burned. Likewise judgment was extremely close to anyone who did not evidence ("produce good fruit") a genuine repentance (Luke 3:8).

3:10-14. The crowd, tax collectors, and soldiers all asked, What should we do (vv. 10, 12, 14) to give evidence of genuine repentance? (Cf. similar questions in 10:25; 18:18.) In response John told the people to be (a) generous (3:11), (b) honest (v. 13), and (c) content (v. 14).

A person showed his repentance by being generous with the necessities of life—clothing and food. A tunic (chitōn) was a shirtlike garment. Often people wore two if they had them.

Tax collectors, notorious for their dishonesty in collecting more than required and pocketing it for themselves (cf. 5:27-32), exemplified the need for honesty. And soldiers, known and hated for always trying to get more money (by extorting it and blaming others for it), were examples of the need to be content and gentle.

3. THE ROLE OF JOHN (3:15-17)

3:15-17. Luke had previously explained what John's function was to be (1:17, 76). But the crowds who thronged out to hear John began to wonder if John might possibly be the Christ. John distinguished between his own baptism and the Messiah's baptism: John's baptism was with water, but the Messiah would baptize with the Holy Spirit and with fire. The Apostle John presented Jesus not only as the Spirit-baptized One but also as the baptizing One (John 20:22). Ultimately the fulfillment of the baptizing work of the Spirit was seen on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4). The baptizing "with fire" may refer to the purifying aspect of the baptism of the Spirit (Acts 2:3), or it may refer to the purifying work of judgment that the Messiah will accomplish (Mal. 3:2-3). The latter seems more probable in view of the work of judgment described in Luke 3:17 (cf. v. 9).

4. THE PREACHING AND IMPRISONMENT OF JOHN (3:18-20)

3:18-20. Scholars debate the dates of John the Baptist's imprisonment and death. It is likely that John began his ministry about A.D. 29 (cf. v. 1), that he was imprisoned the following year, and that he was beheaded not later than A.D. 32. His entire ministry lasted no more than three years—about one year out of prison and two years in prison. (For details on John's imprisonment and death by beheading see Matt. 14:1-12; Mark 6:14-29; Luke 9:7-9, 19-20.)

B. The baptism of Jesus (3:21-22) (Matt. 3:13-17; Mark 1:9-11; John 1:29-34)

All four Gospels record this momentous occasion in the life of Jesus which signaled the beginning of His public ministry. Luke condensed the account more than the other Gospel writers. The purpose of the baptism was to anoint Jesus with the Spirit and to authenticate Him by the Father for beginning His ministry. Each Person of the Godhead was involved in the activity of the Son on earth, including His baptism. The Son was baptized, the Holy Spirit descended on Him, and the Father spoke approvingly of Jesus. In His baptism Jesus identified Himself with sinners though He was not a sinner.

3:21. Only Luke stated that at Jesus' baptism He was praying. Luke presented Jesus as praying in or before many occasions in His life (v. 21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:18, 29; 22:32, 40-44; 23:46). When Luke recorded that heaven was opened, he was conveying the idea that God was breaking into human history with revelation—sovereignly declaring that Jesus is His Son.

3:22. Since the dove was a symbol of peace or freedom from judgment (Gen. 8:8-12), the Holy Spirit's presence like a dove signified that Jesus would bring salvation to those who turn to Him. The voice of God authenticated Jesus by alluding to Psalm 2:7 and Isaiah 42:1.

C. The genealogy of Jesus (3:23-38) (Matt. 1:1-17)

The genealogy of Jesus, recorded by Luke immediately after His authentication in baptism by the Father, further shows the sovereign hand of God in preparing the events of the world so that the Messiah could accomplish the Father's will.

3:23. Luke recorded that Jesus . . . was about 30 years old when He began His ministry. Luke was not unsure of the age of Jesus when the ministry began. Luke had carefully investigated everything from the beginning (1:3), so it is unlikely that he would not have uncovered the age at which Jesus began His ministry. Though Bible students debate when Jesus' ministry began, the year A.D. 29 may be the best. Luke apparently used the term "about 30" to indicate that He was well prepared for ministry. In the Old Testament 30 was often the age when one's ministry began (Gen. 41:46; Num. 4; 2 Sam. 5:4; Ezek. 1:1). Luke's clarity on the fact of the Virgin Birth is seen in his notation that Jesus was the Son, so it was thought, of Joseph.

3:24-38. Verses 23-38 list 76 names including Jesus and Adam and excluding God. Contrary to Matthew's genealogy, Luke's genealogy begins with Jesus and works back to God. Matthew began with Abraham and worked forward to Jesus in three sets of 14 generations. Other differences exist between the two genealogies. Luke included 20 names prior to Abraham, and he stated that Adam was "the son of God."

In addition Luke's and Matthew's lists from David to Shealtiel (during the time of the Exile) differ. That is because the lists trace different lines. Luke traced David's line through Nathan, whereas Matthew traced it through Solomon. Following Shealtiel's son, Zerubbabel, the lists once again differ until both lists unite at Joseph whom, Luke noted, was "thought" to be the father of Jesus. Little doubt exists that Matthew's genealogy traced the kingly line of David—the royal legal line. The question is, What is the significance of Luke's genealogy? Two main possibilities exist.

1. Luke was tracing the line of Mary. Many interpreters argue that Luke was giving the genealogy of Mary, showing that she also was in the line of David and that therefore Jesus was qualified as the Messiah not only through Joseph (since he was the oldest legal heir) but also through Mary.

2. Luke was tracing the actual line of Joseph. This view maintains that the legal line and the actual line of David through which Jesus came met at Joseph, the supposed father of Jesus. In this view Jacob, Joseph's uncle, would have died childless and therefore Joseph would have been the closest living heir. Thus Joseph and then Jesus would have been brought into the royal line.

Both views have problems which are difficult to answer, not the least of which is the fact that the two genealogies meet at Shealtiel and Zerubbabel and then split a second time only to come together at Joseph and Jesus. (Cf. comments on Matt. 1:12.) Regardless of one's view it is important to note an important aspect of the theology Luke expressed in his genealogy. He related Jesus not only to Abraham but all the way back to Adam and to God. This is an indication of the universal offer of salvation, which is common to his Gospel—that Jesus came to save all people—Gentiles as well as the nation of Israel (cf. Luke 2:32).

D. The temptation of Jesus (4:1-13) (Matt. 4:1-11; Mark 1:12-13)

1. JESUS' LEADING BY THE SPIRIT INTO THE DESERT (4:1-2)

4:1-2. Luke then picked up the account of the preparation of the Lord's ministry where he left off in 3:23. Jesus was full of the Holy Spirit (cf. 3:22; 4:14, 18). Interestingly the Spirit led Him into the desert, where for 40 days He was tempted by the devil. The traditional site of Jesus' temptation is a barren area northwest of the Dead Sea. The "40 days" motif is prominent in the Old Testament (cf. Gen. 7:4; Ex. 24:18; 1 Kings 19:8; Jonah 3:4). It is not by accident that Jesus' temptation continued for 40 days, just as Israel's wanderings and temptation continued for 40 years in the wilderness. Jesus' responses to Satan's temptations by quoting from Deuteronomy, chapters 6 and 8, confirm that He was thinking about the experience of the nation in the wilderness. And yet, though the Israelites were miraculously fed in the desert, Jesus ate nothing.

2. JESUS' TEMPTATION IN THE AREA OF PHYSICAL NEED (4:3-4)

4:3-4. Since Jesus was extremely hungry and in need of food (v. 2), it is not surprising that the devil first tempted Jesus to turn a stone into bread for His sustenance. Jesus countered this temptation by quoting Deuteronomy 8:3, in which Moses had reminded the people of the manna which God had given them. Though the manna was on the ground, it still was a test of faith for the people. They had to believe that God's Word was trustworthy for their existence. If it was not God's will for them to live they certainly would have died; therefore they did not live by bread alone. Likewise Jesus, knowing God's Word, knew of the plan which was before Him and was trusting in the Father and His Word for sustenance. Jesus knew He would not die in the wilderness.

3. JESUS' TEMPTATION IN THE AREA OF GLORY AND DOMINION (4:5-8)

4:5-8. What Matthew recorded as the second and third temptations were reversed by Luke. This may indicate that there were continual temptations in these areas. The second temptation Luke recorded was an appeal to Jesus to be in control of all the kingdoms of the world. The condition was that Jesus must worship (proskynēsēs, lit., "bend the knee to") the devil. Though Jesus would have world rulership, He would be depending on Satan—rather than on God the Father and His plan. Jesus again referred to Moses to combat a temptation. In that passage (Deut. 6:13) Moses warned the people about their attitude when they finally were to get into the land and achieve some glory and dominion. The temptation for them would be to praise themselves and forget to worship God. Jesus, by quoting the verse, showed that He would not make that mistake. He would give God the credit and not take it for Himself. He would not fail as Israel had failed.

4. JESUS' TEMPTATION IN THE AREA OF THE TIMING OF HIS MINISTRY (4:9-12)

4:9-12. The devil tried to get Jesus to change the timing and structure of His ministry. Jesus knew He must go to the cross and die for the sins of the world. He knew that He was the Suffering Servant (Isa. 52:13–53:12). The devil challenged Jesus to throw Himself off the highest point of the temple. This was perhaps at the southeastern corner of the wall overlooking the deep Kidron Valley below. Satan meant that the nation, seeing Jesus' miraculous protection from such a jump, would immediately accept Him. The devil even quoted Psalm 91:11-12 to show that the Messiah would be kept safe from harm.

However, Jesus was aware of the implication. To receive the acceptance of the people without going to the cross would be to question whether God was really in the plan at all. That was exactly the situation Moses wrote about in Deuteronomy 6:16, which Jesus quoted. Moses referred back to a time when the people wondered whether God was really with them (Ex. 17:7). But Jesus was confident of the fact that God was with Him and that the Father's plan and timing were perfect. So Jesus would not fall for Satan's temptation.

5. SATAN'S DEPARTURE FROM JESUS (4:13)

4:13. The devil departed, not permanently, but only until a latter more opportune time.

IV. The Ministry of Jesus in Galilee (4:14–9:50)

Jesus' early ministry was primarily in Galilee, though from John 1–4 it is known that He did have an early ministry in Judea and Jerusalem before His Galilean ministry. Two purposes of the Galilean ministry were to authenticate Jesus and to call the disciples who would follow Him.

A. The initiation of Jesus' ministry (4:14-30) (Matt. 4:12-17; Mark 1:14-15)

These 17 verses serve as Luke's summary of what happened throughout the entire ministry of Jesus: Jesus declared Himself to be the Messiah (Luke 4:21); the Jewish hearers proved themselves to be unworthy of God's blessings (vv. 28-29), and the gospel would also go to the Gentiles (vv. 24-27).

1. JESUS' RECEPTION IN GALILEE (4:14-15)

4:14-15. Returning to Galilee, Jesus was in the power (dynamei, "spiritual ability") of the Spirit. The Spirit had descended on Him (3:21-22), He had been led by the Spirit into the desert (4:1), and now He ministered "in the power of the Spirit." The Spirit's power was the source of Jesus' authority, which Luke set forth in chapters 4–6. The initial response was positive. The news about Him spread and as they heard Him teach in their synagogues . . . everyone praised Him.

2. JESUS' REJECTION IN HIS HOMETOWN, NAZARETH (4:16-30)

4:16-30. Jesus initially was a popular Teacher, so when He went back to His hometown, it was natural for Him to teach in synagogues. It was the custom in the synagogue for a man to stand while he was reading the Scriptures but then to sit while explaining the portion he had read. The portion of Scripture Jesus read was Isaiah 61:1-2, a messianic passage. He concluded His reading with the words, to proclaim the year of the Lord's favor—stopping in the middle of the verse without reading the next line in Isaiah 61:2 about God's vengeance. When Jesus added, Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing, the implication was clear. Jesus was claiming to be the Messiah who could bring the kingdom of God which had been promised for so long—but His First Advent was not His time for judgment. The crowd was fascinated at His teaching—The eyes of everyone . . . were fastened on Him (Luke 4:20). Jesus' words plainly stated that the offer of the favorable year of the Lord (i.e., the kingdom time) was being made to them through Him (v. 21).

The people were amazed (ethaumazon, "wondered, marveled"; cf. comments on 2:18) at His gracious words (lit., "words of grace"), but they immediately began to question the authority with which He could say these things. How could Joseph's Son—the Boy they saw grow up in their town—be the Messiah? Jesus, sensing their opposition (4:23-24), noted two instances in which God's prophets ministered miraculous acts of grace to Gentiles while Israel was in unbelief—Elijah and the widow of Zarephath (vv. 25-26; cf. 1 Kings 17:8-16), and Elisha and Naaman the Syrian leper (Luke 4:27; cf. 2 Kings 5:1-19).

Jesus' mention of Gentiles rather than Jews having God's blessing caused the people to be furious (Luke 4:28). They attempted to kill Him, but He walked right through the crowd (v. 30). Luke no doubt described a miraculous escape from the angry crowd. This pattern is seen throughout the rest of Jesus' ministry: Jesus went to the Jews; they rejected Him; He told of Gentile participation in the kingdom; some Jews wanted to kill Him. But He was not killed until the proper time, when He chose to die (23:46; cf. John 10:15, 17-18).

B. The authentication of Jesus' authority (4:31–6:16)

The people of Nazareth and others in Galilee who heard of Him wondered by what authority He made His statements. So Jesus authenticated His authority by healing and teaching. And because of who He is and what He taught, He had the authority to call disciples. In this section Jesus performed three sets of healings, and after each one He called one or more disciples (5:1-11, 27-32; 6:12-16).

1. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY BY HEALING AND TEACHING (4:31-44)

a. Jesus' healing of a man with an unclean spirit (4:31-37)
(Mark 1:21-28)

4:31-37. Jesus went . . . to Capernaum, which He later made His home since His own hometown, Nazareth, had rejected Him. Capernaum was also the home of Peter and Andrew (v. 38). Again the people were amazed (exeplēssonto, lit., "struck out of their senses" [also used in 2:48; 9:43]; cf. ethaumazon, "wondered, marveled," 4:22, cf. v. 36) at His teaching (v. 32) for His message had authority. To authenticate that authority, Jesus performed a series of healing miracles which showed that His teaching in Nazareth was true (cf. vv. 18-19). A man with a demon, an evil spirit, was in the synagogue. It has been suggested that since Luke was most likely writing to people with a Greek background, he was clarifying the fact that this demon was evil since the Greeks thought there were both good and evil demons. This demon recognized Jesus, calling Him not only Jesus of Nazareth but also the Holy One of God (v. 34). In the Gospels crying out with a loud voice seems to be characteristic of those who were demon-possessed. Jesus' exorcism of the demon (v. 35) amazed the crowd (lit. "amazement [thambos] came on all," v. 36). The crowd noted that Jesus had authority (exousia) and power (dynamei) over demons (cf. 9:1), and this caused His fame to spread (4:37). This was Jesus' third miracle. (See the list of His miracles at John 2:1-11.)

b. Jesus' healing of Simon's mother-in-law (4:38-39)
(Matt. 8:14-15; Mark 1:29-31)

4:38-39. Both Mark and Luke related that the next miracle occurred immediately after the first miracle in the synagogue. Simon's mother-in-law had a severe fever. At Jesus' word the fever . . . left her. In each of these cases the cause of the difficulty was removed and the person had no side effects. The demon left without hurting the man (v. 35), and the fever left so that Simon's mother-in-law could immediately serve them (v. 39). She was not left in a weakened condition.

c. Jesus' healing of the sick and the demon-possessed (4:40-41)
(Matt. 8:16-17; Mark 1:32-34)

4:40-41. The news about Jesus' authority over sickness spread quickly so that same night people began coming to Him for healing. They came when the sun was setting, when the Sabbath Day was ending. It would have been unlawful to carry the sick before then. As the demons came out of many people, they were shouting, You are the Son of God! The reason for Jesus' rebuke was that He did not come to earth so that demons could acknowledge Him as the Christ, that is, the Messiah. Instead, He came to be acknowledged by people.

d. Jesus' statement about His wider ministry (4:42-44)
(Mark 1:35-39)

4:42-44. Jesus pointed out to the people that He had a ministry to fulfill (cf. v. 18). He had a mission to the rest of the nation of Israel. The reception Jesus received at Capernaum contrasted greatly with His reception in His hometown of Nazareth. The people of Capernaum wanted Him to stay, but He needed to preach the good news of the kingdom of God elsewhere also.

The main emphasis in Jesus' ministry was on preaching, not healing. Though

He had compassion on people, His healing ministry was usually to authenticate what He was saying (cf. Matt. 11:2-6). Luke's point that He kept on preaching in the synagogues of Judea should be interpreted in that light. "Judea" (Ioudaias) probably refers to the whole nation (the land of the Jews), not just the southern portion. Luke's point was that wherever Jesus went He constantly taught that He was the Messiah who had come to proclaim the favorable year of the Lord (Luke 4:18-19).

2. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY BY CALLING HIS FIRST DISCIPLES (5:1-11)
(MATT. 4:18-22; MARK 1:16-20)

The incident recorded here is obviously not the first time Jesus had been in contact with the men whom He called to be His disciples. Luke already had stated that Jesus had healed Simon's mother-in-law which denotes previous contact with Simon and Andrew. This seems to be at least the third time Jesus had contact with these men. In John 1:41 Andrew told Peter that he had found the Messiah. Apparently the men at first did not follow Jesus on a "full-time" basis, for in Mark 1:16-20 (also Matt. 4:18-22) Jesus called Simon, Andrew, James, and John. Mark recorded that that call was before Jesus entered the synagogue in Capernaum and healed a man who was demon-possessed. It is no wonder Peter invited Jesus home after the synagogue incident.

Now, sometime later, Peter and the others were still fishermen. It was at this point, now that Jesus had established His authority (Luke 4:31-44), that He called these men to full-time discipleship.

5:1-3. The large throng crowding around Jesus prevented His teaching effectively as He stood by the Lake of Gennesaret, another name for the Sea of Galilee, by a village on the northwest shore. So He went out a short distance in the water in Simon's boat so that they could all listen to the Word of God.

5:4-7. On Jesus' request, Simon put out his nets and caught . . . a large amount of fish. Though Simon, an experienced fisherman, was sure he would not catch anything at that time of the day when the fish were deeper in the lake, he obeyed Jesus' word. This showed a significant amount of faith. The resulting catch began to break the nets, so they filled Simon's and another boat with the fish till both boats . . . began to sink.

5:8-11. The miracle of the fish brought two responses in Peter and the others. They were astonished (lit., "amazement [thambos] seized him and all those with him," v. 9; cf. 4:36) at the large catch of fish, and Peter realized his sinfulness before Jesus (5:8). The result was that Jesus made the fishermen fishers of men. Jesus' teaching, combined with His miraculous acts, showed that He had the authority to call the men and have them respond by leaving everything.

3. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY BY FURTHER HEALING (5:12-26)

The next two healings brought about a confrontation with the religious establishment—the first such conflict recorded in Luke. Both healings authenticated Jesus' claim to be the Messiah (cf. 4:18-21).

a. Jesus' healing of a leper (5:12-16) (Matt. 8:1-4; Mark 1:40-45)

5:12-16. Jesus encountered a man . . . covered with leprosy (lit., "full of leprosy"). Perhaps he was in the final stages of leprosy—a fact which would have been easily discernible in the man's home community. The Law (Lev. 13) commanded strict segregation of a person who had leprosy, for it was a graphic picture of uncleanness. A leprous person could not worship at the central sanctuary; he was ceremonially unclean and therefore cut off completely from the community.

This leper addressed Jesus as Lord (kyrie) as Simon had also done (Luke 5:8). Though the term was often used as one would today use "sir," it seems to have stronger import here. The leper did not doubt the ability of Jesus to heal him, for he said, If You are willing You can make me clean. His only reservation seemed to be Jesus' willingness. According to the Mosaic Law one who was leprous was not to be touched by anyone who was ceremonially clean. When someone clean touched something unclean, the clean became unclean. Luke, in describing Jesus' actions, showed that Jesus was the Source of ceremonial cleansing. If He was the Source of cleansing for that leper, He would also be the Source of ceremonial cleansing for the nation. This theme is carried on into the next healing (vv. 17-26) and into the call of Levi (vv. 27-39). At the touch of Jesus, immediately the leprosy left him. The immediacy of the healing brings to mind 4:35 and 4:39. Healing from leprosy was rare. The Scriptures record only Miriam (Num. 12) and Naaman (2 Kings 5) as having been healed of leprosy (cf. Moses; Ex. 4:6-7). Thus it would have been extremely unusual for a person to present himself before the priest and offer the sacrifices . . . for . . . cleansing. Instructions for an offering for cleansing from leprosy are given in Leviticus 14:1-32. Luke 5:14 emphasized the phrase as a testimony to them. The fact that a man would go to the priest claiming healing from leprosy would alert the religious leaders that something new was afoot in Israel. Why did Jesus command him not to tell anyone? Perhaps for two reasons: (a) The man was to go immediately to the priest to be a testimony. (b) When the news of Jesus' healing power spread, He was constantly besieged by people, which caused Him to have to withdraw (vv. 15-16).

b. Jesus' healing and forgiveness of a paralytic (5:17-26)
(Matt. 9:1-8; Mark 2:1-12)

5:17-26. The healing and forgiving of a paralyzed man was further evidence of Jesus' authority and power to make others ceremonially clean. Luke noted that a number of religious officials were present at the occasion, including some from Jerusalem who perhaps were the most influential. Luke did not portray this healing as happening immediately after the preceding event he had recorded. It is evident that he placed the two accounts side by side as a development in his argument.

The statement, the power (dynamis, "spiritual ability") of the Lord was present for Him to heal the sick, is unique to Luke (cf. Matt. 9:1-8; Mark 2:1-12). Luke used dynamis on several occasions to describe Jesus' healing (cf. Luke 4:36; 6:19; 8:46). A large number of people now accompanied Jesus everywhere because of His works of healing. Thus a group of men who were carrying a paralytic had to take him to the roof of the house, remove some tiles, and let him down in front of Jesus. Jesus linked faith with the miracle (5:20), which was also the case in 7:9; 8:25, 48, 50; 17:19; and 18:42. Presumably the faith of which Jesus spoke (i.e., their faith) also included the paralyzed man (5:20).

Surprisingly Jesus did not immediately heal the man's body; instead, He first forgave his sins. This is extremely important for the argument of this section, for Luke's point was that Jesus had the authority to call disciples, including people (such as Levi) who were not thought of as being righteous (vv. 27-39). The religious leaders immediately began to think that Jesus' words were blasphemy for they rightly associated forgiveness with God (cf. 7:49). Jesus pointed out that the religious leaders were absolutely right. His subsequent healing of the man was incontrovertible proof that He did have the authority . . . to forgive sins and therefore should be accepted as God. Anyone could say, Your sins are forgiven. In that sense it was easier than saying, Get up and walk, for if He did not have the power to heal, all would know it immediately. The result of the forgiveness and the healing was that everyone was amazed (lit., "received amazement") and was full of awe (phobou, "reverential fear,") realizing that they had seen remarkable things (paradoxa, "things out of the ordinary").

4. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY BY CALLING A TAX COLLECTOR (5:27-39)

5:27-39. The call of Levi was the culmination of the previous two miracles. (Levi is named Matthew in Matt. 9:9.) Jesus had shown that He had the authority to make a person ceremonially clean and to forgive sins. Now those two authorities were brought to bear on one who was to become His disciple.

Luke did not mention Levi's duties as a tax collector. But his position alienated him from the religious community of his day (cf. Luke 5:29-31). He was seen as one who betrayed his nation for material gain, for tax collectors gathered money from the Jews to give to the Romans, who were Gentiles, who then did not have to work (cf. 3:12-13). Seemingly Levi would be an unlikely candidate for a disciple of the One who claimed to be the Messiah. Jesus simply spoke the words, Follow Me. Levi broke with his way of life; he left everything and followed Jesus. Levi's response was the same as that of the fishermen (5:11).

Luke's point would have been clear even if he had stopped with the account of Levi's decision to follow Jesus. But in order to drive the point home Luke related events which occurred at a reception which Levi, Jesus' new follower, gave for Jesus. Levi must have been a wealthy man, for a great banquet was prepared at his house and many guests were invited, including a large crowd of tax collectors. The same group of religious leaders who had previously questioned Jesus' authority (v. 21) questioned the propriety of Jesus' association with tax collectors and "sinners." Not only was Jesus associating with people to whom the Pharisees objected, but He also was eating and drinking with them. Eating and drinking with others denotes a fellowship or camaraderie with them. Though the religious leaders complained to Jesus' disciples . . . Jesus answered their objections (vv. 31-32). He noted that it was not His purpose to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Here Jesus was not concerned about discussing who were "the righteous." His point was simply that His mission was to those in need of "repentance"—a change of heart and a change of life (cf. 3:7-14). The Pharisees sensed no need for such a change. Because He had shown authority in the two healings which preceded this account, the implication is that He was also able to fulfill His mission to sinners.

The sentence addressed to Jesus in 5:33 causes some difficulty. If the Pharisees and religious leaders were still talking, it seems strange that they would refer to their own disciples as disciples of the Pharisees. It is possible that this teaching of Jesus is from a different setting but that Luke included it here because it continued the purpose of this section. The accusation was that Jesus and His disciples refused to fast, in contrast with the disciples of John and of the Pharisees, who were seen as righteous people. Jesus' response was that the new way (His way) and the old way (the way of John and the Pharisees) simply do not mix. He gave three examples.

1. A bridegroom's guests (cf. John 3:29) do not fast while he is with them because it is a joyous occasion. They fast later after he is gone.

2. A new unshrunk patch of cloth is not put on an old garment because it will shrink and the tear will be worse.

3. New wine is not put into old wineskins for as it ferments it will break the old skins, which have lost their elasticity, and both the wine and the skins will be ruined.

In each case two things do not mix: a time of feasting and a time of fasting (vv. 34-35), a new patch and an old garment (v. 36), and new wine and old wineskins (vv. 37-38). Jesus was noting that His way and the way of the Pharisees simply are unmixable. The Pharisees would refuse to try the new way for they assumed that their old way was better. Jesus' teaching was considered by the Pharisees and religious leaders to be like new wine, and they wanted no part in it (v. 39).

5. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY OVER THE SABBATH (6:1-11)

In 6:1-11 Luke recorded two incidents that occurred on the Sabbath: " One Sabbath" (v. 1) and "On another Sabbath" (v. 6). Luke's point in bringing the accounts together to form a unit was to show that Jesus had authority over the Sabbath.

a. The disciples' picking of grain on the Sabbath (6:1-5) (Matt. 12:1-8; Mark 2:23-28)

6:1-5. Jesus' disciples began to pick some heads of grain, rub them in their hands, and eat. God allowed people to pick grain from a neighbor's field as they passed through (Deut. 23:25). But the Pharisees, interpreting the Law strictly, held that rubbing the heads together in order to eat the grain constituted threshing, which was not allowed on the Sabbath. Jesus responded to the Pharisees' objection by referring to 1 Samuel 21:1-9. David had approached the priests at Nob and asked for bread. The only food available at the moment was the consecrated bread that only the priests were allowed to eat. David was given the bread, and he and his companions ate it. The parallel in Jesus' teaching was clear. In the interest of survival David and his companions were allowed to be above the Law with the priest's blessing. Christ and His companions were also above the man-made law which the Pharisees proclaimed. Another parallel implicit in Jesus' teaching should not be missed. David, as God's anointed, was being hounded by the forces of a dying dynasty—the dynasty of Saul. Jesus was God's new Anointed One who was being hounded by the forces of a dying dynasty (cf. Luke 5:39). The ultimate conclusion was that Jesus is Lord of the Sabbath, that is, He has authority even over matters of the Law.

b. Jesus' healing of a man on the Sabbath (6:6-11)

6:6-11. This second contention about the Sabbath (cf. the first one in vv. 1-5) seems to have been brought about purposely by the Pharisees and the teachers of the Law. As Jesus was teaching in the synagogue, He encountered a man . . . whose right hand was shriveled. The religious leaders were observing Jesus because they were looking for a reason to accuse Him. As was the case when He was opposed previously by religious leaders, Jesus knew what they were thinking (5:22). He used the situation to show that He has authority over the Sabbath. Jesus said . . . I ask you, which is lawful on the Sabbath: to do good or to do evil, to save life or to destroy it? By this question He showed that refusing to do good on the Sabbath was tantamount to doing evil. If suffering is not alleviated, then one is doing evil to the sufferer.

As the man stretched out his hand at Jesus' command, it was completely restored. Jesus performed no "work" on the Sabbath—He simply spoke a few words and a hand was completely restored. He humiliated the religious leaders and healed the man all at the same time without even breaking the Pharisees' law. It is no wonder that the religious establishment was furious and sought a way to get rid of Him.

6. JESUS' DEMONSTRATION OF HIS AUTHORITY BY CALLING THE TWELVE (6:12-16)
(MATT. 10:1-4; MARK 3:13-19)

6:12-16. Before Jesus chose the 12 disciples, He spent an entire night in prayer. Jesus had a large number of disciples and from those He picked 12 who were to be close to Him. These were specifically called apostles (apostolous) as opposed to the term disciples (mathētas). Disciples were followers, but apostles were those sent out as messengers with delegated authority (cf. "apostles" in 9:10; 17:5; 22:14; 24:10). In Luke's list of the Twelve (as well as Matthew's and Mark's lists) Peter is listed first and Judas Iscariot is last. Bartholomew must be Nathanael (John 1:45), Levi and Matthew are the same man, and Thaddaeus (Mark 3:18) is Judas, son of James. They were now willing to be sent out as apostles, being with Jesus on a full-time basis.

C. Jesus' sermon on the level place (6:17-49)

1. INTRODUCTION TO THE SERMON (6:17-19)

6:17-19. The sermon recorded in verses 17-49 is a shorter version of the Sermon on the Mount recorded in Matthew 5–7. Both sermons are addressed to disciples, begin with beatitudes, conclude with the same parables, and have generally the same content. However, in Luke the "Jewish parts" of the sermon (i.e., the interpretation of the Law) are omitted. This fits well with Luke's purpose. The problem in seeing these accounts as reflecting the same sermon is the place in which the sermon was given. Matthew recorded that Jesus was "on a mountainside" (Matt. 5:1), whereas Luke said Jesus was on a level place (Luke 6:17). The sequence of events solves the problem easily. Jesus went up in "the hills" near Capernaum to pray all night (v. 12). He called 12 disciples to be His apostles. He then went down on a level place to talk and to heal diseases (vv. 17-19). Following that, He went up higher to get away from the crowds and to teach His disciples (Matt. 5:1). The multitudes (Matt. 7:28; Luke 7:1) climbed the mountain and heard His sermon, which explains Jesus' words at the end of the sermon (Matt. 7:24; Luke 6:46-47).

2. THE BLESSINGS AND THE WOES (6:20-26)

Jesus began His sermon with a series of blessings and woes on His listeners. The items are placed in two sets of four—four blessings and four woes which parallel each other.

a. The blessings (6:20-23)

6:20-23. The term "blessed" (makarioi) was common in the Gospels; it occurs more than 30 times. All but 2 of the occurrences are in Matthew and Luke. Originally in Greek usage the word described the happy estate of the gods above earthly sufferings and labors. Later it came to mean any positive condition a person experienced. Unlike the biblical authors, the Greek authors drew happiness from earthly goods and values. In the Old Testament the authors recognized that the truly blessed (or happy) individual is one who trusts God, who hopes for and waits for Him, who fears and loves Him (Deut. 33:29; Pss. 2:12; 32:1-2; 34:8; 40:4; 84:12; 112:1). A formal beatitude was an acknowledgement of a fortunate state before God and man (Ps. 1:1; Prov. 14:21; 16:20; 29:18).

Beatitudes in the New Testament have an emotional force. They often contrast a false earthly estimation with a true heavenly estimation of one who is truly blessed (Matt. 5:3-6, 10; Luke 11:28; John 20:29; 1 Peter 3:14; 4:14). All secular goods and values are subservient to one supreme good—God Himself. This is a reversal of all human values. The Beatitudes present the present in the light of the future (cf. Luke 23:29).

Jesus spoke of four conditions in which people are blessed or happy when they are following Him. Blessed are you who are poor . . . blessed are you who hunger now . . . blessed are you who weep now, and blessed are you when men hate you (6:20-22). In each case a clause is added that explains why such a person is blessed or happy. A poor person is happy because his is the kingdom of God. Matthew referred to "the poor in spirit" (Matt. 5:3), but Luke simply wrote "poor." Jesus' hearers were physically poor. Luke already mentioned twice that those who followed Jesus left everything (Luke 5:11, 28).

Jesus' explanation about their inclusion in "the kingdom of God" is mentioned because they were following the One who was proclaiming His ability to bring in the kingdom. They were staking everything they had on the fact that Jesus was telling the truth. They were following His new way (5:37-39). Jesus' words were not a promise that every poor person had a part in the kingdom of God; instead His words were a statement of fact for His followers. They were poor and theirs was the kingdom of God. They were much better off being poor, following Jesus, and having a part of the kingdom of God than being rich and not having a part of the kingdom. That is why they were blessed.

The next two explanatory phrases have future fulfillments. The hungry will be satisfied, and the ones who weep will laugh. The apostles who would hunger and weep because they followed Jesus would eventually be vindicated for their faith in Him.

The final beatitude concerned persecution because of the Son of Man. This was to become a natural course of events for the apostles. They would be hated, excluded, insulted, and rejected. Yet they would be happy ("blessed") because of their reward in heaven and because they were following in the train of the prophets (i.e., those who spoke for God; cf. 6:26).

b. The woes (6:24-26)

6:24-26. In contrast with the disciples who had given up everything to follow Jesus were the people who would refuse to give up anything to follow Him (cf. 18:18-30). These were the rich, the well-fed, the ones who laugh, who were popular. They did not understand the gravity of the situation which confronted them. They refused to follow the One who could bring them into the kingdom, and therefore Jesus pronounced woes on them. These woes were the exact reversal of their temporal benefits. And they are the exact opposites of the blessings and rewards of Jesus' followers, cited in 6:20-23.

3. TRUE RIGHTEOUSNESS (6:27-45)

a. True righteousness revealed by love (6:27-38)

6:27-38. Jesus mentioned seven aspects of unconditional love. These actions, not done naturally by human nature, require supernatural enabling—and are thus proof of true righteousness:

(1) Love your enemies.
(2) Do good to those who hate you.
(3) Bless those who curse you.

(4) Pray for those who mistreat you.
(5) Do not retaliate (v. 29a).
(6) Give freely (vv. 29b-30).
(7) Treat others the way you want to be treated (v. 31).

This kind of love marks one off as distinctive (vv. 32-34), and as having the same characteristics as the heavenly Father (v. 35).

Jesus then taught His followers a fundamental principle of the universe—what one sows he will reap (vv. 36-38; cf. Gal. 6:7). Jesus outlined five areas which were proof of the sowing and reaping theme, mentioned so often in Scripture: (1) Mercy will lead to mercy (Luke 6:36). The disciples were exhorted to have the same merciful attitude God displayed toward them.

(2) Judgment will lead to judgment (v. 37a).

(3) Condemnation will lead to condemnation (v. 37b).

(4) Pardon will lead to pardon (v. 37c).

(5) Giving will lead to giving (v. 38). It is simply a fact of life that certain attitudes and actions often reflect back on the individual.

b. True righteousness revealed by one's actions (6:39-45)

6:39-45. Jesus explained that a person is not able to hide his attitude toward righteousness. It is obvious that if a person is blind he will lead another into a pit (v. 39). He will not be able to hide the fact that he is not righteous for he will lead others astray. Jesus also noted that a person becomes like the one whom he emulates (v. 40). Therefore His disciples should emulate Him. One must rid himself of a sin before he can help his brother with that sin (vv. 41-42). And often one's own sin is greater than the one he criticizes in someone else—a plank compared with a speck of sawdust. The point is that one cannot help someone else become righteous if he is not righteous himself. To seek to do so is to be a hypocrite.

Jesus also pointed out that a man's words will eventually tell what kind of man he is (vv. 43-45). Just as people know the kind of tree by the fruit it bears, so people know from what a person says whether he is righteous or not. In this case fruit stands for what is said, not what is done: out of the overflow of his heart his mouth speaks.

4. TRUE OBEDIENCE (6:46-49)

6:46-49. Outward expression is not nearly so important as obedience (v. 46). It is not enough to call Jesus Lord, Lord. A believer must do what He says. Those who hear His words and act on them are secure—like a man building a house . . . on rock (vv. 47-48), and those who hear His words and do not act on them are destroyed—like a man who built a house . . . without a foundation (v. 49). The disciples had already acted on His words to some extent by following Him. (This is the first of Jesus' parables recorded in the Gospel of Luke. See the list of Jesus' 35 parables at Matt. 7:24-27.)

D. Jesus' ministry in Capernaum and surrounding cities (chaps. 7–8)

In this section is an interchange between the ministry of Jesus in miraculous signs (which again authenticated that He is the Messiah: 7:1-17, 36-50; 8:22-56) and His teaching (which has authority based on the message He was proclaiming: 7:18-35; 8:1-21). Luke emphasized His teaching, which has authority because of the symbolic miraculous events which show that Jesus is the Messiah.

1. JESUS' MINISTRY IN THE MIDST OF SICKNESS AND DEATH (7:1-17)

Here Luke recorded two miracles—a centurion's servant healed and a dead boy raised—as a basis for belief in authority (vv. 22-23).

a. Healing a centurion's servant (7:1-10) (Matt. 8:5-13; John 4:43-54)

7:1-10. After Jesus' sermon (chap. 6), which was given outside of town, He entered Capernaum, His adopted hometown where He performed many of His messianic signs. A centurion in the Roman army was a commander of a century, a group of 100 soldiers. This centurion in Capernaum, unlike most Roman soldiers, was well liked and respected by the Jewish people in and around Capernaum because he loved them and built them a synagogue (7:4-5). This centurion's servant . . . was extremely sick and about to die (v. 2). The centurion had faith that Jesus would heal the servant. Perhaps the reason he sent Jewish elders to present his request was that he doubted that Jesus would have heeded a Roman soldier's request. Matthew 8:5-13 records the same event, but Matthew did not record the sending of messengers. He presented the account as if the centurion were present himself. Matthew was reflecting what the centurion meant when he noted that his messengers do his bidding as if he were there himself (Luke 7:8).

The centurion realized that his request was brash and that he really was not worthy to see Jesus (v. 7). Jesus was amazed (ethaumasen; cf. comments on 2:18) at the centurion and said, I have not found such great faith even in Israel. The concept of faith is extremely important throughout chapters 7 and 8. It is vital to believe who Jesus is (i.e., the Messiah) and what He said. The exercise of faith by Gentiles also becomes prominent later in Luke's book.

b. Raising a widow's son (7:11-17)

7:11-17. Luke recorded the raising of the widow's son from the dead so that the ensuing interchange between Jesus and John the Baptist's disciples (vv. 18-23) would have more force.

A large crowd went along with Jesus as He traveled from Capernaum to Nain (v. 11). Nain was about 25 miles southwest of Capernaum. A large crowd was also with the funeral procession carrying the coffin of a dead young man, the only son of his mother. The woman was now completely alone and seemingly unprotected, without a close male relative. Help for widows is a major theme in both the Old and the New Testaments, especially under the covenant as related in Deuteronomy. Jesus' heart went out to her and He immediately began to comfort her. The verb "heart went out" translates esplanchnisthē, a verb used numerous times in the Gospels to mean pity or sympathy. It is related to the noun splanchna, "inner parts of the body," which were considered the seat of the emotions. This noun is used 10 times (Luke 1:78; 2 Cor. 6:12; 7:15; Phil. 1:8; 2:1; Col. 3:12; Phile. 7, 12, 20; 1 John 3:17). The woman and the others in the funeral procession must have had faith in Jesus for when He touched the coffin . . . those carrying it stood still. At Jesus' command the previously dead man sat up and began to talk—solid proof that he was truly alive. As a result the people were all filled with awe (phobos; cf. comments on 1:12), they praised God, they thought Jesus was a great prophet (thinking, no doubt, of the ministries of Elijah and Elisha), they noted that God had come to help His people (cf. Isa. 7:14), and the news about Jesus spread.

2. JESUS' TEACHING THAT HIS DEEDS AUTHENTICATE HIS MINISTRY (7:18-35) (MATT. 11:2-19)

Luke's purpose in recording the two previous miracles (7:1-17) was to lead up to the interchange between John's disciples and Jesus. It was important for people to believe in Jesus—His works and His words—for both showed that He is the Messiah.

a. John the Baptist's request for clarification of Jesus' ministry (7:18-23)

7:18-23. This event happened while John was in prison (Matt. 11:2). John had had a meteoric ministry which lasted for no more than a year. John expected that the Messiah would set up the kingdom as he had been announcing. But suddenly John found himself in prison and in danger of being put to death, and still the kingdom had not come. Thus John was anxious concerning the Messiah. He knew the Old Testament well and knew of the works of the Messiah—but he did not see the kingdom coming. He sent two disciples to ask Jesus, Are You the One who was to come, or should we expect someone else? The disciples of John approached Jesus at the very time Jesus cured many who had diseases, sicknesses, and evil spirits, and gave sight to many who were blind. Jesus, who was performing messianic miracles, reminded John's disciples of Isaiah 61:1-2 which He had read in Nazareth. Jesus' miraculous deeds pointed to the fact that He is the Messiah. His point was that one should not fall away (skandalisthē, lit., "to be trapped" and thus "to let oneself be ensnared away from") on account of Him. One had to have faith in His message and His works. Neither Matthew nor Luke recorded the reaction of John the Baptist after his disciples returned to him.

b. Jesus' condemnation of Israel for rejecting John's ministry and His ministry (7:24-35)

7:24-28. Jesus used the occasion of John the Baptist's inquiry to teach the people about John's ministry and to commend him. He noted that John was not convictionless, like a reed blowing in the wind. Nor was he dressed luxuriously. Instead, he was rightly understood by the people to be a prophet. Jesus added that John was more than a prophet in that he, as prophesied in Malachi 3:1, was also the Messiah's forerunner. In Malachi 3:1-2 two messengers are spoken of. One is the forerunner, revealed here as John the Baptist, and the other is "the Messenger of the Covenant" who will purify His people, that is, the Messiah Himself.

Jesus paid John a great compliment by stating that no one was greater than John. And yet the one who is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he. Jesus was not declaring that John was not a part of "the kingdom of God," for John had been preaching the same message of repentance for the forgiveness of sins. Jesus was saying that being a great prophet is not nearly so great as being a member of the kingdom. Implied also is the fact that citizens of the kingdom have a distinct advantage over the prophets who were seen as great men of God in the Old Testament. Citizens of the kingdom will be under the New Covenant and have the Law of God written on their hearts (Jer. 31:31-34). Even the least person in the kingdom will have a greater spiritual capacity than John the Baptist himself.

7:29-30. Luke showed deep division in the thinking of the people who listened to Jesus' words. Those who had been baptized by John, that is, had repented of their sins and had been baptized to show their sincerity, agreed with Jesus and acknowledged that God's way was right. In contrast, the Pharisees and experts in the Law rejected God's purpose for themselves. By refusing to be baptized by John they showed that they did not accept his message of repentance or accept the kingdom. Thus they rejected God's plan of salvation for them. The ironic fact was that the Pharisees and the experts in the Law were the ones who should have known best about the ministry of the forerunner (John) and the Messiah (Jesus).

7:31-35. The editorial interjection by Luke (vv. 29-30) into the narrative account explains the following five verses. Since the religious leaders were rejecting the message of John and of Jesus, the Lord told a short parable to explain their treatment. When Jesus mentioned the people (anthrōpous) of this generation He was not speaking of the people (laos) mentioned in verse 29 who accepted His message. Instead the people in His parable were the religious leaders of verse 30, the rejecters of John and Jesus. Jesus described them as capricious children who wanted others to respond to their music. They were not satisfied with the behavior of either John or Jesus. John was too much of an ascetic, and Jesus was too much of a libertine (in the Pharisees' definition of the term). Neither extreme could make the religious leaders happy. Jesus applied the parable by stating that wisdom is proved right by all her children. The ones who were following Jesus and John were proof enough of the correctness of their teaching.

3. JESUS' MINISTRY TO A SINFUL WOMAN (7:36-50)

This passage illustrates the principle Jesus laid down in verse 35. A Pharisee named Simon is contrasted with a sinful woman, who received forgiveness (v. 47) and salvation (v. 50).

7:36-38. Simon (v. 40), a Pharisee, invited Jesus to . . . dinner, perhaps to trick Him in some way. It was the custom of the day when one had a dinner party to provide for the guests' feet to be cleaned before the meal. Because most roads were unpaved and the normal foot attire was sandals, it was common for people's feet to be dusty or muddy. As pointed out later in the episode, Simon did not provide for Jesus' feet to be cleaned at the beginning of the dinner party (v. 44). For special dinner parties recliners or couches were provided for the guests to use while eating.

A woman arrived at the dinner after she learned that Jesus was eating there. She had lived a sinful life, and was probably a prostitute in the community. Her life was known enough for the Pharisee to characterize her as a sinner (v. 39). She was not an invited guest at the dinner gathering, but came in anyway with a jar of perfume. Her presence was not unusual for when a Rabbi was invited to someone's house others could stop by and listen to the conversation. As the woman stood behind Jesus, her tears began to fall on His feet. It was a normal sign of respect to pour oil or perfume on someone's head. Perhaps the woman felt unworthy to anoint Jesus' head, so she anointed His feet. Such an act would have amounted to a large financial outlay for the woman who apparently was not wealthy. She also bent over Jesus and wiped her tears off His feet . . . with her hair. She constantly kissed His feet (the Gr. verb katephilei is the imperf. tense suggesting continuous past action), a sign of the utmost respect, submission, and affection. Jesus pointed out later that the host, in contrast, had done none of these things to His head (v. 46) or even given Him water for His feet (v. 44), whereas the woman was constantly anointing His feet.

The passage does not state why she was weeping. It may have been because she was seeking repentance. Or she may have been weeping for joy at the opportunity of being around the One she obviously considered to be the Messiah.

7:39. The host thought that Jesus could not possibly be a prophet, for if He were He would have known that the woman was a sinner. And He then would not have let her touch Him, for a touch by a sinner brought ceremonial uncleanness.

7:40-43. Jesus, knowing Simon's thoughts (cf. 5:22), taught in a parable that a person who is forgiven much loves more than a person who is forgiven little. In the parable one man was forgiven a debt 10 times greater than another man—500 denarii compared with 50 denarii. These were huge debts, for one denarius coin was worth a day's wages. When asked which one would love the lender more, Simon rightly responded that the one who was forgiven the larger debt would naturally be more inclined to greater love. Jesus then applied the parable to the woman.

7:44-50. The woman had been forgiven much and therefore she loved Jesus very much. Jesus was not implying that the Pharisee did not have much need for forgiveness. His point was that "a sinner" who is forgiven is naturally going to love and thank the One who has forgiven her. Simon's treatment of Jesus differed vastly from the woman's. She was evidencing that she loved Jesus for she realized that she had been forgiven much. She realized that she was a sinner and in need of forgiveness. In contrast, Simon saw himself as pure and righteous and therefore did not need to treat Jesus in a special manner. In fact, he did not even extend to Jesus the normal courtesies of that day: greeting a male by a kiss on the cheek, and anointing a guest's head with a small portion of oil. In effect he did not seem to think Jesus could do anything for him, for he did not consider Jesus a prophet (v. 39).

But the woman was not forgiven because of her love; rather, she loved because she was forgiven (vv. 47-48). Her faith brought her salvation: Your faith has saved you; go in peace (cf. 8:48). Her faith in turn caused her to respond in love. The other dinner guests wondered who Jesus is since He forgave sins (cf. 5:21). Though Jesus in this interchange with Simon never explicitly stated His claim to be the Messiah, He spoke as He did because He is the Messiah.

4. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT VARIOUS RESPONSES TO HIS MINISTRY (8:1-21)

a. A close band of followers who responded positively (8:1-3)

8:1-3. Much as the woman had responded positively to Jesus, in contrast with Simon the Pharisee (7:36-50), so others responded positively to the message of the kingdom which Jesus was proclaiming and some responded negatively (8:4-15). The believers included the Twelve and a number of women who had been recipients of Jesus' healing power, including Mary (called Magdalene; i.e., Mary from Magdala in Galilee) from whom seven demons had come out. Often in Scripture the number seven is used to denote completion. Apparently Mary had been totally demon-possessed. Joanna, who was the wife of one of Herod's officials, was also singled out, as was Susanna. These three and many other women were helping to support them (i.e., Jesus and the Twelve) out of their own means. This would have been viewed as a scandalous situation in Palestine in that day. However, like the forgiven woman (7:36-50), these women had also been forgiven much and they loved much. They were responding positively to Jesus' message about His kingdom.

b. Various responses illustrated by the Parable of the Sower (8:4-15) (Matt. 13:1-23; Mark 4:1-20)

8:4. Jesus gave this parable and its explanation to show that a number of responses are possible to the Word of God. Luke noted that a large crowd was gathering from many towns. The crowd presumably included people who would respond in the four different ways which Jesus was going to set forth in the parable. This parable is perhaps a warning to His hearers that obstacles would be ahead of them.

8:5-8. Farmers sowed seed by scattering it by hand over plowed soil. The seed of this farmer landed on four kinds of soil. Some of the seed fell along the path and was eaten by birds.

Other seed fell on rock (i.e., thin soil covering a ledge of rock) and therefore withered (v. 6).

Still other seed fell on soil which also supported thorns and therefore the plants were choked out (v. 7).

Still other seed fell on good soil and brought forth a good crop (v. 8).

Jesus ended His parable by calling out, He who has ears to hear, let him hear. The term called out denotes that Jesus was making the major point of His short discourse. Jesus used "He who has ears to hear, let him hear" on several occasions when telling parables (Matt. 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 8:8; 14:35). The expression describes the fact that spiritual people can discern the intended spiritual meaning of a parable. The implication is that unspiritual people would understand no more than the parable's surface meaning.

8:9-10. Jesus' disciples had asked Him what the parable meant. But before He told them its meaning, He explained why He used the parabolic form of teaching. People who were spiritually discerning, that is, were following Him and acknowledging His message as true (such as those in 7:36-8:3) would have the knowledge of the secrets of the kingdom of God. But others who were not responding to Jesus' message of the kingdom would not understand the parable (cf. 1 Cor. 2:14). In support of this Jesus quoted Isaiah 6:9—the people heard what He said but did not understand it. Jesus' speaking in parables was actually an act of grace to those listening to Him. If they refused to acknowledge Him as Messiah, their judgment would be less severe than if they had understood more (cf. Luke 10:13-15).

8:11-15. Jesus explained the parable to His disciples. The seed is the Word of God. The words which were being preached by the Living Word, Jesus, was the same message John the Baptist had been preaching. The people's responsibility was to accept the message which both Jesus and John were preaching.

Four kinds of people are represented by the four soils. All four kinds receive the same news. The first group consists of those who hear but do not believe at all, because of the work of the devil (v. 12).

The second group are those who listen and rejoice but then do not stick with the truth of the message for they have no root (v. 13). The fact that they believe for a while but . . . fall away means that they only accept the facts of the Word mentally and then reject it when "the going gets rough." It does not mean they lose their salvation, for they had none to lose.

The third group are those who listen but never come to maturity (v. 14). These may be those who are interested in Jesus' message but who cannot accept it because of their devotion to material things—life's worries, riches, and pleasures.

The fourth group consists of those who listen, retain the Word, and . . . produce a crop (v. 15), that is, they bear spiritual fruit, evidence of their spiritual life. Their hearts were changed for they were noble and good.

As Jesus' ministry progressed, it was evident that each of these groups surfaced: (1) The Pharisees and religious leaders refused to believe. (2) Some people rallied around Jesus because of His miracles of healing and feeding but refused to stay with His message (e.g., John 6:66). (3) Others, such as the rich ruler (Luke 18:18-30), were interested in Jesus but would not accept Him because of the strong pull of materialism. (4) Others followed Him and were committed to His Word regardless of the cost (e.g., 8:1-3).

c. The need to respond positively to His teaching (8:16-18)
(Mark 4:21-25)

8:16-18. This short parable is a logical extension of the Parable of the Sower. The emphasis is once again on hearing or, as it is put here, on listening (v. 18). If one understands the Word of God his life should reflect that understanding (cf. v. 15). Just as one does not light a lamp in order to hide it (cf. 11:33-36), so also a person is not given "the secrets of the kingdom of God" (8:10) in order to keep them secret. The disciples were to make known the things Jesus was telling them. The people who followed Jesus were to consider carefully (v. 18) how they listened. If they heard and responded with genuine belief (cf. v. 15), then they would receive more truth. If they did not receive what they heard, they would lose it.

d. The response of Jesus' earthly family (8:19-21)

8:19-21. The logical outcome of the preceding teaching (vv. 1-18) is that a person who understands (and therefore puts into practice) the things Jesus was saying was rightly related to Him. Jesus' mother and brothers arrived to see Him. These brothers were undoubtedly sons of Mary and Joseph who were born after Jesus. Joseph had no sexual relations with Mary until after the birth of Jesus (Matt. 1:25). The implication is that after Jesus' birth Mary and Joseph engaged in normal marital relations and had a number of children. Thus these "brothers" were Jesus' half-brothers.

Jesus was informed that some blood relatives wanted to see Him (Luke 8:20). In His answer Jesus did not negate His relationship with His family. Rather, He positively stated that His affiliation with those who hear the Word of God and put it into practice is like a family relationship. In addition, Jesus' remarks showed that the gospel is not limited to a people, the Jews, but is for all who believe, including Gentiles. Once again the importance of hearing God's Word is central; this time, however, the admonition is that the Word must be "put . . . into practice." James, Jesus' half brother, must have learned the lesson well, for he wrote about obeying the Word instead of merely listening to it (James 1:22-23).

5. JESUS' MINISTRY THROUGH A SERIES OF MIRACLES (8:22-56)

Luke had previously recorded events that authenticated Jesus' authority (4:31–6:16). Here again an authentication was necessary. Jesus had been teaching that one must listen carefully to His words and carry them out. Now He authenticated His words in ways that only the Messiah could do. Jesus showed His power over three aspects of the created world: the natural realm (8:22-25), the demonic realm (vv. 26-39), and sickness and death (vv. 40-56).

a. Jesus' power over the natural realm (8:22-25)
(Matt. 8:23-27; Mark 4:35-41)

8:22-25. While Jesus and His disciples were sailing across the Sea of Galilee to a less-inhabited area, a storm arose which caused their boat to take on water and to be in peril. Sudden storms would whip the lake into a frenzy very quickly. Jesus was asleep so the disciples went and woke Him for they were afraid of drowning. Jesus rebuked the storm, and chided them for their fear and their lack of faith in Him. He had already told them they would be crossing over to the other side of the lake (v. 22). This was an excellent opportunity for them to act on God's Word that Jesus had been teaching (vv. 1-21). When Jesus rebuked the storm, the lake calmed immediately (which normally does not occur after a storm). The disciples were in fear and amazement (cf. vv. 35, 37).

b. Jesus' power over the demonic realm (8:26-39)
(Matt. 8:28-34; Mark 5:1-20)

8:26. Whereas Matthew wrote that Jesus met two demon-possessed men (Matt. 8:28-34), Luke wrote about only one of the two. There is some confusion as to the place where the miracle occurred. What is meant by the region of the Gerasenes? Apparently the area was named for the small town Gersa (now the ruins of Khersa) on the eastern shore, across the lake from Galilee. Matthew mentioned "the region of the Gadarenes" (Matt. 8:28), which was named for the town Gadara, about six miles southeast of the lower tip of the Sea of Galilee. Perhaps the territory around Gersa belonged to the city of Gadara (cf. comments on Mark 5:1).

8:27-29. When Jesus stepped ashore, He was confronted by a man who was demon-possessed. The man's manner of life showed that he was totally under the demon's control. He did not take part in normal human amenities (v. 27) and was often forced by the demon to go into solitary places (v. 29). As with most "demonized" individuals in the Gospels, this man was shouting at the top of his voice. The demon recognized Jesus, for the man called Him Jesus, Son of the Most High God. The words, Don't torture me show that the demon recognized that Jesus had control over him even though men could not (v. 29).

8:30-33. In answer to Jesus the demon said that his name was Legion, a Latin term denoting a group of about 6,000 Roman soldiers. The point of the name was that a large number of demons were inhabiting the man. The demons asked that Jesus not torment them (Matt. 8:29 adds "before the appointed time") by asking that they not be sent into the abyss, which was thought of as a place of the dead. The abyss was also thought of as a "watery place," which made the outcome of this encounter all the more ironic and climactic. At the request of the demons Jesus let them enter into a large herd of pigs nearby which immediately rushed over a cliff into the lake and were drowned. Thus the request not to be sent into the abyss was granted by Jesus, but they were sent to a watery place anyhow.

8:34-37. The effect of the miracle on the people of the area was fear (vv. 35, 37; cf. 7:16; 8:25). This fear was enough to cause them to ask Jesus to leave.

8:38-39. In contrast with those people the previously demon-possessed man was, on Jesus' command, spreading the news of what had happened to him. This was the first recorded witness of Jesus in a Gentile area.

c. Jesus' power over sickness and death (8:40-56)
(Matt. 9:18-26; Mark 5:21-43)

This section (chaps. 7–8) begins with Jesus ministering to people in sickness and death (7:1-17). It closes with the same theme. However, the healings described in 8:40-56 bring the section to a climax because of the rich symbolism concerning Jesus' ability to make others clean while not becoming ceremonially unclean Himself.

8:40-42. Jairus, a ruler of the synagogue, pled with Jesus for the life of his only daughter, who was dying. The fact that a ruler of a synagogue would come to Jesus showed that people were beginning to acknowledge who Jesus is—that He is indeed the Messiah. A synagogue ruler was in charge of the synagogue services and was responsible for maintaining and cleaning the building. Other synagogue rulers in the New Testament were Crispus (Acts 18:8) and Sosthenes (Acts 18:17).

8:43-48. The story of Jairus is momentarily broken off by Luke who recorded what happened on the way to heal Jairus' daughter. A woman in the crowd had been subject to bleeding for 12 years. Interestingly, Jairus' only daughter was about 12 years old, and this woman's illness had extended for 12 years. Her hemorrhaging made the woman ceremonially unclean (Lev. 15:25-30), and anyone who touched her would also be ceremonially unclean. In contrast to the fact that no one could heal her is the fact that when she touched Jesus' cloak . . . immediately her bleeding stopped. Jesus' question, Who touched Me? does not imply that He was ignorant of the situation. He wanted the woman to reveal herself and openly express the faith which caused her to touch Him. The woman's faith became public when she fell at His feet. (This reminds one of another woman who expressed her faith at the feet of Jesus [Luke 7:36-50].) The woman's faith had healed her (8:48)—faith that Jesus could make her ceremonially clean and therefore faith that He really is the Messiah. Jesus told her, Go in peace, just as He had recently said to a sinful woman (7:50).

8:49-56. The story now returned to Jairus. Jesus had just been touched by someone who was considered ceremonially unclean. In spite of the fact that Jairus was informed that his daughter had died, he had faith that she would be resurrected (v. 50). That faith was partly expressed in the fact that he allowed Jesus to come into his house after He had touched an unclean woman.

After Jesus had raised Jairus' daughter from the dead, she was given something to eat. This proved that she was restored to normal health and not to a long convalescence (cf. a similar situation with Peter's mother-in-law; 4:39). In this case the parents were astonished (exestēsan, "beside themselves in amazement"; cf. 2:47), but were not fearful. Jesus' command not to tell others about the miracle must have stemmed from His desire not to be openly proclaimed as the Messiah until His formal proclamation in Jerusalem.

E. Jesus' teaching of His disciples (9:1-50)

Luke's section on Jesus' Galilee ministry closes with several important events through which Jesus taught His disciples. For Luke, the events in this chapter, though important, are not the crux of his argument. Jesus' journey to Jerusalem is, for Luke, the highlight of His ministry. The events recorded in this chapter form a climax to this portion of Jesus' ministry (4:14–9:50) and a bridge to His journey to Jerusalem, which begins in 9:51.

1. THE SENDING OF THE TWELVE (9:1-6) (MATT. 10:5-15; MARK 6:7-13)

9:1-6. Jesus gave the Twelve two assignments on the mission to which He sent them. They were to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick. They were able to carry out that mission because Jesus gave them power (dynamin, "spiritual ability"; cf. 4:14, 36; 5:17; 6:19; 8:46) and authority (exousian, "the right to exercise the power") over the demonic realm and the physical realm of diseases. Jesus had just shown His power over both of these realms (8:26-56). Their healing ministry was to authenticate their preaching ministry. The fact that the Twelve healed in Jesus' authority and power showed that He was the Messiah who could bring in the kingdom. Therefore it was necessary that people believe the Twelve. People would evidence their belief in the Twelve—and thus in the Messiah—by showing hospitality to these men who were ministering in Jesus' authority.

This helps explain Jesus' rather strange instructions (9:3-5) concerning a method of their ministry. The mission was not to be long—they came back to report to Jesus (v. 10). Why were the Twelve not to take supplies or money with them? This was because of the brevity of their mission and also because people's reactions to them would indicate whether or not the nation was accepting Jesus' claim as the Messiah. People who believed the message and the messianic healings would be glad to share with the Twelve. People who did not believe would be judged (vv. 4-5). If a town rejected the Twelve the latter were to shake the town's dust off their feet. When Jews returned home from a Gentile country, they would shake the dust off their feet to signify their breaking ties with the Gentiles. In this way the Twelve signified that certain Jewish townspeople were like Gentiles who would not listen or believe. Jesus was thus giving the entire area opportunity to believe His message and mission. Luke stated that the Twelve went . . . everywhere, presumably everywhere in the Galilean region rather than everywhere in the nation.

2. HEROD'S QUERY ABOUT JESUS (9:7-9) (MATT. 14:1-2; MARK 6:14-29)

9:7-9. As the Twelve went through the villages and towns, their ministry attracted much attention. Even Herod who was responsible for the region of Galilee as tetrarch (cf. 3:1), heard about their ministry but did not understand it. Herod, who apparently did not believe in resurrection, knew that Jesus could not be John the Baptist for he had previously killed John. Others were saying that Jesus might be Elijah or another of the Old Testament prophets raised from the dead. Luke's point in the account seems to be that everyone, even in the highest levels of government, was talking about the ministry of Jesus and the Twelve.

3. JESUS' FEEDING OF THE 5,000 (9:10-17) (MATT. 14:13-21; MARK 6:30-44; JOHN 6:1-14)

The feeding of the 5,000 is the only miracle of Jesus which is recorded in all four Gospels. In many ways it is the climax of Jesus' ministry of miracles. It was designed to produce faith in His disciples.

9:10-11. Luke now called the Twelve apostles (apostoloi). Jesus had so named them previously (6:13). Presumably the apostles returned to Jesus' home base at Capernaum. Jesus took them to Bethsaida, across the Jordan River to the northeast on the Sea of Galilee. (Others, however, say Bethsaida was a town now known as Tabgha, southwest of Capernaum.) As usual, the crowds . . . followed Him. Jesus continued to preach the message of the kingdom of God. He had sent the Twelve to preach, and He healed those who needed healing. The miracle which immediately followed showed climactically that Jesus is the Messiah, fully able to provide for His people. Herod had raised the issue as to who Jesus is (9:7-9). Later Jesus again raised the same issue (vv. 18-20). The feeding of the 5,000 (vv. 10-17) clinched the truth for the disciples that Jesus truly is the Messiah.

9:12-17. The people who had gathered were apparently not local people for the disciples wanted Jesus to send the crowd away so that they could find food and lodging. This would not have been necessary if the people had lived nearby and could have returned to their homes. When Jesus told His disciples to give the people something to eat, He was showing His men that it was humanly impossible to satisfy the crowd. The disciples admitted this and noted that food would have to be bought for the people if they were to feed them. The disciples stated that there were only five loaves of bread and two fish, clearly inadequate for such a large group of people. The 5,000 men (andres, "males") is no doubt a round figure, not counting the women and children who were present (Matt. 14:21). If the latter were also counted, the total might have been over 10,000.

After having the people sit down in groups of 50s, for ease in distributing the food, Jesus thanked God the Father and gave out the food, using the disciples as waiters. Twelve basketfuls of broken food pieces were collected at the end of the meal, perhaps thus providing a basket of food for each disciple to eat. The word used for baskets (kophinoi) was considered typical of Jewish commerce. The seven baskets from the feeding of the 4,000 (Mark 8:8) were a different kind of basket. Jesus, by this act of provision, had shown Himself sufficient for the nation Israel. He is the One who could provide prosperity if the people would believe His message. This miracle is reminiscent of Elisha when he spoke the Word of the Lord and a small amount of food fed many people, with some left over (2 Kings 4:42-44).

4. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT HIS IDENTITY AND MISSION (9:18-27)
(MATT. 16:13-28; MARK 8:27–9:1)

For the first time in this section Jesus taught His disciples about His ultimate mission—the fact that He had to die.

9:18-21. On this occurrence, which Mark said was on the way north to Caesarea Philippi (Mark 8:27), Jesus initiated the questioning about who people said He was (cf. Luke 9:7-9). Jesus was specifically interested in who the disciples thought He was. Peter, answering for the entire group, affirmed that He is the Christ (i.e., the Messiah) of God. Though some time had passed since the incident of the loaves and fish, the implication from Luke seems to be that it was Jesus' sufficiency in that instance which clinched His identification as Messiah in the disciples' minds. Jesus did not want others to know of this (v. 21) because it was not time for Him to be proclaimed publicly as Messiah. The public proclamation would come about at a later time and it was that proclamation which Jesus spoke about next.

9:22-27. The subject of these verses is death—Jesus' death and His followers' deaths. He pointed out that the Jewish leaders would play a prominent part in His death (v. 22). Jesus also gave His first indication that He would be resurrected (v. 22). Jesus then discussed the deaths of His followers. They were to have the same attitude toward death and life that He had. Each one must deny himself, that is, not think about his own good. Also he must take up his cross daily, that is, admit that the One for whom he carried the cross was right (see comments on 14:27). And he must follow Jesus, even to death.

The words Jesus spoke in this setting must be understood in their historical context. Not long before this the disciples had been actively engaged in telling the nation about the Messiah and His kingdom program. No doubt many thought the disciples were throwing their lives away. They had given up their sources of income and were in danger because they associated with Jesus. Jesus assured His disciples that they were doing the right thing. They had chosen the proper values (9:24-25). People were to respond in faith and identify with that program (v. 4). Those who did not identify with the kingdom program would be rejected (v. 5). In the same manner Jesus noted that if one is ashamed of Him (i.e., will not identify with Him or believe on Him) and His words (i.e., His message), the Son of Man will be ashamed of him in the future. It was vital that the people of that generation side with Jesus and His disciples in order to escape future judgment. That judgment will occur when He comes in His glory and in the glory of the Father and of the holy angels (cf. 2 Thes. 1:7-10).

Jesus added, Some who are standing here will not taste death before they see the kingdom of God. Over the centuries many views on this statement have been suggested. The four most common views are these: (1) Jesus was talking about the beginning of Christian missions at Pentecost. Surely most of the apostles did see the activities on the day of Pentecost for only Judas was dead at that time. However, to identify Pentecost with the kingdom violates much of the Old Testament teaching about the kingdom. (2) Jesus was speaking about the destruction of Jerusalem. However, it is difficult to see in what way that would even symbolize the kingdom of God. (3) Jesus meant that the disciples would not die with Him but would continue to spread the gospel after His death. But it is difficult to see how this would be related to the kingdom in light of the Old Testament with which the disciples were familiar. (4) Jesus was speaking of the three apostles who would accompany Him up the mountain of transfiguration. The transfiguration was a foretaste of the glories of the kingdom. This seems the best view. Luke linked this teaching (Luke 9:27) with the transfiguration account (vv. 28-36).

5. JESUS' TRANSFIGURATON BEFORE THREE DISCIPLES (9:28-36)
(MATT. 17:1-8; MARK 9:2-8)

9:28-31. About eight days later Jesus . . . took three of His apostles up onto a mountain to pray. But Mark wrote that the event occurred after six days (Mark 9:2). The two accounts are not contradictory if one understands Mark as speaking of the intervening days and Luke as including the days of Jesus' teaching as well as the day on which the transfiguration took place. The transfiguration may have occurred on Mount Hermon near Caesarea Philippi (cf. Mark 8:27), though some say it was Mount Tabor. At the transfiguration three events occurred:

1. Jesus' face and clothes became as bright as a flash of lightning. This would have immediately reminded those present of Moses' face shining with a bright light when he received the tablets of the Law (Ex. 34:29-35).

2. Moses and Elijah appeared and spoke with Jesus. The bodies of Moses and Elijah were never found. God buried Moses' body (Deut. 34:5-6), and Elijah did not die but was taken up to heaven (2 Kings 2:11-12, 15-18). These two men represent the beginning and the end of Israel, for Moses, as the Lawgiver, founded the nation, and Elijah is to come back before the great and terrible day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5-6).

3. Moses and Elijah spoke about His departure (exodon, "going out or away") which He was about to bring to fulfillment at Jerusalem. "Departure" referred to Jesus' leaving the world through which He would bring salvation—much as Yahweh had brought deliverance to Israel in its Exodus (departure) from Egypt. This departure was to be fulfilled in Jerusalem. From this point on, Jesus indicated several times that He was headed toward Jerusalem (Luke 9:51, 53; 13:33; 17:11; 18:31). Jesus did not want His miracles widely publicized at that time, for the fulfillment had to be at Jerusalem. This was confirmed by Elijah's and Moses' words.

9:32-33. Three disciples were with Jesus. This number is reminiscent of Moses' three companions—Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu—who saw God (Ex. 24:9-11). Peter, James, and John were very sleepy at the beginning of the transfiguration. Later these three and the others fell asleep while Jesus was praying in the garden (Luke 22:45). As the disciples woke up, they were overwhelmed with the glory of the situation.

They realized they were in a kingdom setting which triggered Peter's idea that they build three shelters. Peter may have been thinking of the Feast of Booths, a feast of ingathering long associated with the coming kingdom (cf. Zech. 14:16-21). Peter seemed to have assumed that the kingdom had arrived.

Luke editorially inserted that Peter did not know what he was saying. The thought is not that Peter misunderstood the significance of the kingdom setting—he was correct in that. The problem was that he forgot Jesus' prediction that He would suffer (Luke 9:23-24).

9:34-36. While Peter was speaking, a cloud . . . enveloped them. Grammatically the word "them" could refer to the three disciples or to all six people (Jesus, Moses, Elijah, and the three disciples). But more likely it refers to Jesus and the heavenly visitors, with the disciples being those who were afraid. A cloud was often a symbol of God's divine presence (Ex. 13:21-22; 40:38). Perhaps the disciples thought Jesus was being taken away from them, and they would never see Him again.

As was the case at Jesus' baptism (Luke 3:22), so here a voice spoke to those witnessing the event: This is My Son, whom I have chosen; listen to Him. Those familiar with the Old Testament, as the disciples were, doubtless immediately recognized the reference (in the words "listen to Him") to Deuteronomy 18:15 with its messianic prediction of a Prophet greater than Moses. The people were to listen to (i.e., obey) the Prophet.

Suddenly the disciples saw that Jesus was alone. At that time they did not tell anyone what they had seen. The experience at the transfiguration fulfilled Jesus' prediction (Luke 9:27). Three of the disciples did see a manifestation of the kingdom of God before they died (cf. 2 Peter 1:16-19).

6. JESUS' HEALING OF THE EPILEPTIC BOY (9:37-43)
(MATT. 17:14-18; MARK 9:14-27)

9:37-43. The transfiguration may have occurred at night, for Luke noted that the next day the four descended from the mountain and a crowd met Jesus. A man begged Jesus to look at his demon-possessed son, whom the other disciples had been unable to help. In stark contrast with the disciples, only Jesus could help the boy—just as He is the only One who can help the world. The disciples were powerless without Him. After the boy was healed, the crowd was amazed (exeplēssonto, "struck out of their senses"; cf. 2:48; 4:32) at the greatness of God.

7. JESUS' TEACHING OF HIS DEATH (9:44-45)

9:44-45. In the midst of the amazement by the crowd, Jesus taught the disciples a second time that He would die by being betrayed into the hands of men. But they did not understand as it was hidden from them. Apparently the disciples were still confused as to how Jesus, with His glorious power, could experience a humiliating death. Nor could they put together the crowd's reaction to His miracles and His prediction that the nation would turn against Him and kill Him.

8. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT GREATNESS (9:46-50)

9:46-50. This section (9:1-50) ends with Jesus' teaching concerning the disciples' attitude toward greatness. He had been revealed to them as the Messiah who would bring in the kingdom. Perhaps this fact precipitated the disciples' argument about their greatness in that kingdom. Jesus set forth the principle that the one who is the greatest is the one who is least among you. This same attitude of service characterized Him, the Messiah who was willing to go to the cross for all people.

Coupled with this discussion on greatness was John's attempt to stop someone else who was driving out demons in Jesus' name. John's reason was that the man was not one of us. John must have thought that the disciples' own greatness was diminished if others who were not of the Twelve could also cast out demons. Jesus' reply, Whoever is not against you is for you, suggested that the Twelve were not to see themselves as God's exclusive representatives. Rather they should have rejoiced that the power of God was being manifested on earth by others as well. If they manifested that attitude, it would show that they were truly trying to be of service to the Messiah.

V. The Journey of Jesus toward Jerusalem (9:51–19:27)

This lengthy section of Luke comprises two parts: (1) the rejection of Jesus by most on His journey toward Jerusalem (9:51–11:54) and (2) Jesus' teaching His followers in view of that rejection (12:1–19:27).

The previous section (4:4–9:50) dealt with Jesus' authentication in His Galilean ministry. In this next section authentication was no longer the issue. The issue was now acceptance. Jesus was not accepted by most of the nation. Therefore He began to teach His followers how they should live in the face of opposition.

A. The rejection of Jesus by most on His journey toward Jerusalem (9:51–11:54)

This section begins with Jesus' rejection by people in a Samaritan village (9:51-56). Of course it was expected that Samaritans would reject Him, but that rejection set the pattern for what followed. The rejection climaxed when Jesus was accused of having demonic power (11:14-54).

1. JESUS AND THE SAMARITANS (9:51–10:37)

a. Jesus' rejection by a Samaritan city (9:51-56)

9:51-56. After the transfiguration (vv. 9:28-36), in which Moses and Elijah spoke with the Lord concerning His departure from Jerusalem, Jesus resolutely set out for Jerusalem. Jesus made several trips to Jerusalem, but Luke telescoped them to make his point that Jesus had to get to Jerusalem to present Himself as the Messiah and then depart. On His way, He sent messengers on ahead, but the Samaritans did not welcome Him, because He was heading for Jerusalem. Conflict between Jews and Samaritans had been going on for several hundred years. The reaction of the disciples, James and John in particular, was to destroy them by fire . . . from heaven. They were thinking, no doubt, of Elijah (2 Kings 1:9-12), who destroyed by fire those who were opposing God's work. Jesus, on the other hand, called for tolerance. The implication is not that it was right to oppose Jesus and His followers. The Samaritans who rejected Jesus would be judged for their rejection. However, there were more important things to take care of. Jesus had to move along toward Jerusalem.

b. Jesus' teaching that discipleship takes radical commitment (9:57-62) (Matt. 8:19-22)

Luke introduced three people who wanted to join Jesus on His journey to Jerusalem.

9:57-58. A man approached and wanted to follow where they were going. Jesus' response was that a person desiring to follow Him must give up what others consider necessities. Jesus had no home of His own nor did His followers. They were on their way to Jerusalem where Jesus would be put to death.

9:59-60. Jesus called the next man with the same words with which He had called His disciples (5:27). The man's reply that he first wanted to go and bury his father has been variously interpreted. Some maintain that the man's father was dead already. It would seem strange if that was the case for he would certainly have been engaged in the burial procedure already. It is more likely that the man's father was ready to die. His request was to let him wait just a little while before following Jesus. Perhaps the man also wanted to receive the inheritance from his father's estate. Jesus' response, Let the dead bury their own dead, implies that the spiritually dead can bury the physically dead. The point was that proclaiming the kingdom of God was so important that it could not wait. Of course if the man had left and followed Jesus, it would have caused a scandal in the community. But that was less important than proclaiming the kingdom and following the Messiah. A disciple must make a radical commitment.

9:61-62. The third man simply wanted to go home and say good-by to his family. Elijah had allowed Elisha to do this very thing when Elisha was plowing (1 Kings 19:19-20). Jesus' words underscore the fact that His message of the kingdom of God was more important than anything else—even family members. The message and the Messiah cannot wait. Jesus' message was more important than Elijah's message and demanded total allegiance. Jesus' servants should not have divided interests, like a farmer who begins plowing and looks back. Since Jesus was on His way to Jerusalem, the man had to make up his mind right then as to what he was going to do. Interestingly Luke did not record the outcome of any of Jesus' conversations with the three men.

c. Jesus' sending of the messengers to spread the Word (10:1-24)

This section contains instructions similar to those given to the Twelve in 9:1-6. On His way to Jerusalem Jesus was sending out messengers to all the towns in order to give people opportunities to accept His message. Only Luke records this incident.

(1) The choosing of the 72 (10:1-16). 10:1-12. Jesus gave instructions to the 72. Some Greek manuscripts in verses 1 and 17 have "70" and others have "72." Both readings have strong support. The 72 were people other than the Twelve, who apparently remained with Jesus on His journey. The 72 were to prepare the way so that when Jesus came into a town, it would be ready for Him. When Jesus stated, Ask the Lord . . . to send out workers, He implied that the ones asking were also to be workers (v. 2). Their mission was dangerous (v. 3) and required haste (v. 4). The 72 were supported by those who accepted their message (v. 7). Through hospitality people would show whether or not they believed the message of the kingdom. To the believing cities the message was to be, The kingdom of God is near you. The Messiah was coming, and He could bring in the kingdom. Even the cities that rejected the message were to be told that the kingdom was near. (For the meaning of wiping dust off their feet, see comments on 9:5).

10:13-16. Jesus warned the surrounding towns against rejecting the 72 because that meant rejecting Jesus and the Father (v. 16). Jesus singled out two cities—Korazin and Bethsaida, both of which were located in the area of Jesus' early ministry of miracles on the north side of the Sea of Galilee. He also singled out His adopted hometown, Capernaum, which also had been a site of His miraculous works. The message was clear: those cities (no doubt representative of others as well) were to be more severely judged than pagan cities, such as Tyre and Sidon (cf. Sodom, v. 12) which did not have the benefit of the Lord's miraculous works and words.

(2) The return of the 72. 10:17-20. When the messengers came back, they were excited that even the demons had submitted to them in Jesus' name. This was true because of the authority Jesus had given them. They had such authority because Satan's power had been broken by Jesus. He answered them, I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven. Jesus was not speaking of Satan being cast out at that precise moment, but that his power had been broken and that he was subject to Jesus' authority. However, Jesus said the cause for their joy should not be what they could do in His name but in the fact that their names were written in heaven. The personal relationship of a believer with God should be the cause of his joy. The authority given to these workers and the promise of no harm from snakes and scorpions was given for this particular situation.

(3) Jesus' rejoicing in the Spirit (10:21-24; Matt. 11:25-27). 10:21-24. Jesus was full of joy through the Holy Spirit (cf. the joy of the 72, v. 20). Luke frequently mentioned the Holy Spirit's ministry in Jesus' life. The three Persons of the Godhead are clearly seen: Jesus the Son was doing the Father's will in the power of the Holy Spirit. Each had a specific function (vv. 21-22).

The people who were following Jesus were not the important people of the nation; they were not considered the wise and learned. They had become like little children to enter into the kingdom, and thus they knew the Son and the Father. The disciples were living in an opportune day which many Old Testament prophets and kings longed to see—the day of the Messiah.

d. Jesus' teaching on one's neighbor (10:25-37)

10:25-37. The Parable of the Good Samaritan is perhaps the most well-known Lucan parable. It must be interpreted on two levels. The first level is the plain teaching that a person, like the Samaritan, should help others in need (v. 37). If one has the heart of a neighbor, he will see and help a neighbor. However, in the context of the rejection of Jesus, it should also be noted in this parable that the Jewish religious leaders rejected the man who fell among the robbers. A Samaritan, an outcast, was the only one who helped the man. Jesus was like the Samaritan. He was the outcast One, who was willing to seek and to save people who were perishing. He was directly opposed to the religious establishment. The theme is reminiscent of Jesus' words to the Pharisees (7:44-50). The theme of Jesus' going to those who needed Him became more and more evident.

An expert in the Law asked Jesus, Teacher . . . what must I do to inherit eternal life? This question surfaced on several occasions (Matt. 19:16-22; Luke 18:18-23; John 3:1-15). The question in this case was not sincere, as can be seen from two points in the text: (1) The lawyer wanted to test Jesus. (He called Jesus "Teacher," didaskale, Luke's equivalent of a Jewish Rabbi.) (2) After Jesus answered the man's question, Luke recorded that the man wished to justify himself (Luke 10:29).

Jesus answered his question with two other questions (v. 26), driving the Law expert back to the Old Testament Law. The expert answered correctly by quoting from Deuteronomy 6:5 and Leviticus 19:18. One must love . . . God and one's fellowman in order to keep the Law properly. Jesus affirmed that if the man did this, he would live.

The man's response should have been to ask, "How can I do this? I am not able. I need help." Instead, he tried "to justify himself," that is, to defend himself against the implications of Jesus' words. So he tried to move the focus off himself by asking, And who is my neighbor?

Jesus answered by telling the Parable of the Good Samaritan. The road from Jerusalem to Jericho descends approximately 3,000 feet in about 17 miles. It was a dangerous road to travel for robbers hid along its steep, winding way. A priest, one expected to love others, avoided the wounded man, probably a fellow Jew.

Levites were descendants of Levi but not of Aaron, and they assisted the priests (Aaron's descendants) in the temple.

The Samaritans were scorned by the Jews because of their mixed Jewish and Gentile ancestry. It is ironic, then, that a Samaritan helped the half-dead man, dressing his wounds, taking him to an inn, and paying his expenses. By asking Which . . . was his neighbor? (Luke 10:36) Jesus was teaching that a person should be a neighbor to anyone he meets in need. The ultimate Neighbor was Jesus, whose compassion contrasted with the Jewish religious leaders who had no compassion on those who were perishing. Jesus wrapped up His teaching with the command that His followers were to live like that true neighbor (v. 37).

2. JESUS' TEACHING THAT ATTENTION TO HIM IS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING IN LIFE (10:38-42)

10:38-42. The focus of this passage is not that people should be unconcerned with household chores, but that the proper attitude toward Jesus is to listen to Him and obey His words. The village where Martha opened her home to Him was Bethany (John 11:1–12:8), a few miles east of Jerusalem. Jesus stayed in Bethany during His final week on earth. A sharp contrast was portrayed between the two sisters. Mary . . . sat and listened to Jesus, while Martha made preparations for a meal. The phrase, only one thing is needed (Luke 10:42), refers to listening to His words, which Mary had chosen to do. The same theme is seen in 8:1-21.

3. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT PRAYER (11:1-13)

11:1. Jesus prayed at every major crisis point in His life. He prayed at the time of His baptism (3:21), and at the time of the choosing of His disciples (6:12). He was often alone praying (5:16; 9:18) and also prayed with others around (9:28-29). He prayed for Simon (22:32), and He prayed in the garden before His betrayal (22:40-44). He even prayed on the cross (23:46). One of His disciples, impressed with Jesus' life of prayer, asked Jesus to teach them to pray.

a. Jesus' model prayer (11:2-4) (Matt. 6:9-15)

11:2-4. In this model prayer Jesus began with an intimate direct address, Father. This was somewhat characteristic of the way Jesus referred to God in His prayers (cf. 10:21). He then made five requests. The first two dealt with God's interests. The first request was that God's name be hallowed (hagiasthētō, from hagiazō, "to set apart or sanctify" or, as here, "to treat as holy"). Thus the request was for God's reputation to be revered by men.

The second request was Your kingdom come. John the Baptist, Jesus, the Twelve, and the 72 had been preaching about the coming of God's kingdom. When a person prays for the coming of the kingdom, he is identifying with the message of Jesus and His followers.

The third request was for daily bread. Bread is a general term denoting nourishing and filling food. Thus the request is for food that is necessary to sustain life for the day.

The fourth request concerned man's relationship to God—the forgiveness of sins. Luke had already linked the forgiveness of sins to faith (7:36-50). In asking for forgiveness of sins a person expresses his faith that God will forgive him. Such a person then evidences his faith by forgiving others.

The fifth request is, lead us not into temptation. But why pray such a prayer since God does not want people to sin? The meaning is that Jesus' followers are to pray that they be delivered from situations that would cause them to sin. His disciples, contrary to the Law experts (10:25-29), realized that they were easily drawn into sin. Therefore Jesus' followers need to ask God for help to live righteous lives.

b. Jesus' teaching about prayer through two parables (11:5-13)

11:5-8. The first parable concerns persistence in prayer. It is common in Luke for good lessons to be taught from bad examples (cf. 16:1-9; 18:1-8). In contrast with the man who did not want to be bothered, God wants His people to pray to Him (11:9-10). So Jesus encouraged people to be persistent in prayer—not to change God's mind but to be steadfast in praying and to receive their needs.

11:9-13. The second parable noted that the heavenly Father gives His children what is good for them, not what harms them. Jesus encouraged the people of God to ask. He noted that natural fathers give good food to their children rather than something that would harm them (some fish may look like snakes, and the body of a large white scorpion could be mistaken for an egg). How much more will the heavenly Father give what is good to His children.

Jesus stated that this good gift is the Holy Spirit, the most important gift that followers of Jesus would receive (cf. Acts 2:1-4). The heavenly Father gives both heavenly gifts and earthly gifts. Believers today are not to pray for the Holy Spirit because this prayer of the disciples (for the Holy Spirit) was answered at Pentecost (cf. Rom. 8:9).

4. THE INCREASED REJECTION OF JESUS (11:14-54)

This section contains a record of the high point of the rejection of Jesus and His message. After the record of this rejection Luke began to record Jesus' words as to how disciples should live in the midst of rejection.

a. Jesus accused of demonic power (11:14-26)
(Matt. 12:22-30; Mark 3:20-27)

In Luke the terms "demon" and "demons" occur 16 times and "evil spirit(s)" ("unclean spirit[s]" in KJV) occurs 8 times. Jesus always had authority over the demons—a sign of His messianic power (7:21; 13:32). The demons themselves recognized that authority (4:31-41; 8:28-31), and Jesus' enemies did too (11:14-26). Jesus gave others power over demons (9:1), and His authority over demons amazed the crowds (4:36; 9:42-43).

11:14-16. After seeing Jesus cast out a demon from a person who was mute . . . some among the crowd suggested that He did it by demonic power, that is, by the power of Beelzebub. This name given to the prince of demons, clearly Satan, originally meant "lord of the princes," but had been corrupted to a pun denoting "lord of the flies" (cf. 2 Kings 1:2). The charge was that Jesus was possessed by Satan himself. A second group wanted Jesus to show a sign from heaven. They were probably not sincere in their request as Luke linked them with the former group and noted that they were testing Him.

11:17-20. Jesus gave a twofold response. First, He said it would be ridiculous for Satan to drive out his own demons, for then he would be weakening his position and kingdom. Second, Jesus pointed out the double standard of those who were accusing Him. If their followers drove out demons, they claimed it was done by the power of God. Thus since Jesus cast out demons, it too must be by God's finger, that is, His power. Therefore the kingdom of God has come to you.

11:21-22. Jesus' parable of the strong man and the stronger man has been variously interpreted. In view of the context (vv. 17-20) the strong man refers to Satan, and the stronger man to Christ Himself. When it was that Christ attacked and overpowered Satan is not stated by Luke. Luke may have had in mind Jesus' temptation experience, or the Resurrection, or perhaps the ultimate binding of Satan. The point of the parable, however, is that Jesus is the stronger One, and therefore He has the right to divide up the spoils. In this case the spoils include formerly demon-possessed people who no longer belong to Satan.

11:23-26 (Matt. 12:43-45). Jesus stated that it was impossible to be neutral in the battle between Christ and Satan. The people who were watching had to make up their minds. If they thought Jesus was casting out demons by the power of Satan, then they were actively against Him.

Jesus' words recorded in Luke 11:24-26 are difficult. Probably He was referring to the man who was formerly demon-possessed and was making him a symbol of everyone who was demon-possessed. It was vital that this man also accept what Jesus was saying about His being the Messiah, or he would end up in a condition . . . worse than the first. Matthew recorded that Jesus compared this situation to what would happen to the generation of people who were listening to Him (Matt. 12:45).

b. Jesus' teaching on the observance of God's Word (11:27-28)

11:27-28. This teaching is similar to that in 8:19-21. Family relationships are not the most important things in life. A woman noted that it must have been wonderful to have been Jesus' mother. The idea of physical relationship was more important in that day. The whole nation took pride in the fact that they descended from Abraham (cf. John 8:33-39). Jesus pointed out that a physical relationship was unimportant compared with hearing and obeying the Word of God. As Luke emphasized, the gospel is not limited to Israel but is for all who trust in Christ.

c. Jesus' refusal to give a sign (11:29-32) (Matt. 12:38-42; Mark 8:11-12)

11:29-32. The Pharisees asked Jesus for a sign (Matt. 12:38; Mark 8:11) which Luke did not mention. A sign was a confirming miracle which showed that the spoken message was true. The crowds were not willing to believe Jesus' words without external confirmation.

Jesus' response was that no sign would be given . . . except the sign of Jonah (Luke 11:29). This sign has been interpreted in at least two ways: Many say it was the physical appearance of Jonah, for perhaps his skin was bleached white by the sea monster's inner juices. However, nothing in the context hints at this. "The sign of Jonah" must have been the words (cf. "preaching," v. 32) Jonah spoke about his miraculous preservation by God when he was at the point of death. The people of Nineveh believed what Jonah said, even if they had no physical evidence. Jesus' words about the Queen of the South lend strength to this interpretation. The queen traveled a great distance to listen to Solomon's wisdom (1 Kings 10). She acted on what she heard, without any external confirmation. The point is clear: the generation that was listening to Jesus' words did not have as much faith as some Gentiles who listened to the words of God in previous eras. Therefore even Gentiles will stand up at the judgment with this generation and condemn it. Jesus affirmed that something (neut., not masc.) greater than Solomon (Luke 11:31) and greater than Jonah was present (v. 32). That something was the kingdom of God, present in the person of Jesus. Thus the people should listen and believe without a sign.

d. Jesus' stress on responding to His teachings (11:33-36)

11:33-36. Jesus often taught His disciples through parables. Because they had been listening to Him they had light shining on them (v. 36). Thus they should share that light (v. 33). When a person's eyes (like lamps) react properly to light, he can function normally. Being receptive to Jesus' teachings would show that they were full of light (vv. 34, 36) and were benefiting from His teachings (cf. comments on 8:16-18).

e. Jesus accused and questioned by the Pharisees (11:37-54)

11:37-41. A Pharisee invited Jesus to dinner. Jesus did not engage in the ritual washing before the meal, which completely surprised . . . the Pharisee. Jesus focused on greed, a characteristic of the Pharisees, and said that they should be as concerned with the cleansing of the inside as they were with washing the outside of the body. One indication that they were clean on the inside would be their willingness to give material things to the poor. This meant not that their act of giving would atone for their sins, but that it would show a proper relationship to the Law and to God.

11:42-44. Jesus next pronounced three woes (pronouncements of condemnation) on the Pharisees for disregarding justice and the love of God. They were bound up in the ritual of the Law, tithing even small garden herbs. This made them hypocrites (cf. 12:1). They were filled with pride, loving the most important seats in the synagogues. And rather than guiding the people aright, they caused people who followed them to be contaminated, just as unmarked graves, when walked on, would defile a Jew without his knowing it (Num. 19:16). The Pharisees feared contamination from ritual uncleanness, but Jesus pointed out that their greed, pride, and wickedness contaminated the entire nation.

11:45-52. Jesus then pronounced three woes on the Law . . . experts (vv. 46-47, 52). They placed burdens on others which effectively kept them away from the way of knowledge. And they built tombs for the prophets, thus identifying with their forefathers who killed . . . the prophets. Outwardly they seemed to honor the prophets, but God knew that inwardly they were rejecting the prophets. So they would be held responsible for the blood of all the prophets. The blood of Abel and the blood of Zechariah refers to the killing of innocent men involved in serving God. Abel was the first innocent victim (Gen. 4:8), and Zechariah the priest (not the writing prophet, though see Matt. 23:35) was the last martyr in the Old Testament (2 Chron. 24:20-21; Chron. was last in the OT Heb. order). Jesus' indictment became even more severe when He noted that not only were they themselves staying away from knowledge (i.e., Jesus' teaching) but were also taking away the key, that is, they were keeping the knowledge from others (cf. Luke 13:14).

11:53-54. The Pharisees and lawyers began to oppose Jesus fiercely. They were constantly questioning Him, plotting against Him, and hoping to catch Him saying something wrong.

B. Jesus' teaching of His followers in view of the rejection (12:1–19:27)

Jesus first taught several truths to His inner circle of disciples (12:1-53), and then taught several things to the multitudes (12:54–13:21). Jesus taught about people of the kingdom (13:22–17:10), and about the attitude of the disciples in view of the coming kingdom (17:11–19:27).

1. JESUS TEACHING HIS INNER CIRCLE OF DISCIPLES (12:1-53)

a. Jesus' teaching about witnessing without fear (12:1-12)

12:1-3. Jesus first stated that it is foolish to be hypocritical because eventually everything will be made known (cf. 8:17). So the disciples should be open, not two-faced, about the way they lived. He warned them to guard against the yeast of the Pharisees, that is, their teaching, for it is hypocrisy. In the Scriptures yeast often refers to something evil (cf. Mark 8:15).

12:4-12 (Matt. 10:28-31). Jesus went on to teach that His disciples (My friends) should be fearless (Luke 12:4, 7; cf. v. 32) because God would take care of them. Instead of fearing men who could kill their bodies (cf. 11:48-50), they should fear God, the One who has the power to throw one into hell. This follows as a natural corollary of 12:2-3—God knows everything. The disciples were far more valuable to God than sparrows, which were sold for a small amount (five birds for two pennies). The word for "penny" is assarion, a Roman copper coin worth about 1/16 of a denarius (a day's wage), and used only here and in Matthew 10:29. Since God takes care of common little birds (cf. Luke 12:22), He will also care for His own, even knowing the number of their hairs.

The point of verses 8-10 is that disciples must make a choice. To acknowledge denotes the fact that the disciples recognized Him as the Messiah and therefore they had access to the way of salvation. Those who did not acknowledge Him were denying themselves the way of salvation. Jesus carried the logic one step further, noting that one who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven. In Matthew 12:32 Jesus linked this activity with the Pharisees who were rejecting the work of Jesus. Apparently the Pharisees were being convicted by the Holy Spirit that Jesus was indeed the Messiah, but were rejecting His witness. They could never be forgiven because they were rejecting God's only means of salvation. (In contrast to that, a number of Jesus' own brothers who initially rejected Him [John 7:5] later came to faith [Acts 1:14] and were forgiven even though they had spoken against the Son of Man.)

Jesus then promised the disciples (Luke 12:11-12) that when they were arraigned and brought before officials because of their preaching and teaching (cf. Acts 4:1-21), the Holy Spirit would teach them what to say. In contrast to Jesus' enemies, who blasphemed the Holy Spirit, Jesus' followers would be helped by the Holy Spirit.

b. Jesus' teaching about greed (12:13-21)

12:13-21. This passage explains Jesus' teaching to guard against all kinds of greed. Someone wanted Jesus to instruct his brother to divide up the inheritance which was due him in an equitable way. Jesus' point was that life does not consist in having many possessions. The disciples needed to learn the lesson that life is more important than material things. To explain this teaching Jesus told a parable about a rich man who continued to build bigger and bigger barns to store all his grain and . . . goods. His attitude was that he would have an easy life because he had everything he could possibly want or need. God's response in the parable was that the man was foolish (You fool!) because when he died that night his goods would do nothing for him. They would simply pass on to someone else. Such a person is not rich toward God (cf. 1 Tim. 6:6-10; James 1:10). Luke returned to this subject in chapter 16.

c. Jesus' teaching about anxiety (12:22-34) (Matt. 6:25-34)

The section builds to a climax in verse 31 when the disciples were instructed to seek God's kingdom. In building to that climax Jesus said three things about anxiety.

12:22-24. Jesus first noted that anxiety is foolish because life consists of far more than what one eats or wears (cf. v. 15). Jesus again referred to birds (cf. vv. 6-7) to point out that since His disciples were more valuable than ravens, which God feeds, He cares for them. (Unlike sparrows, ravens were not sold for they are scavengers.)

12:25-28. Jesus next pointed out that worry is foolish because it cannot change the situation. Not one hour can be added to one's life so it is ridiculous to worry. Again Jesus went to the natural realm (lilies and grass) to point out that God takes care of what belongs to Him.

12:29-31. Finally Jesus pointed out that worry is foolish because worry is the attitude of pagans. The pagan world is concerned with the material things of life and not with life's ultimately important spiritual realities. On the other hand one who pursues spiritual matters (seeking God's kingdom) will also receive from God material provisions.

12:32-34. Jesus then told His disciples not to fear (cf. vv. 4, 7). He compared them to a little flock, a seemingly defenseless group which could be preyed on. To make them even more defenseless Christ instructed, Sell your possessions and give to the poor. (Luke later came back to this subject in chaps. 16 and 19.) This is also what the early church did (Acts 2:44-45; 4:32-37). Jesus' point was that if His followers had a treasure on earth they would think about it. But if they instead had a treasure in heaven, which is safe from theft and decay by moths, and were "rich toward God" (Luke 12:21), they would be concerned with matters pertaining to the kingdom and therefore would not be in a state of anxiety.

d. Jesus' teaching about readiness (12:35-48)

In this section Jesus told two parables (vv. 35-40 and 42-48) which were joined by a question by Peter (v. 41). The second parable expands and explains the first.

12:35-40. Jesus taught that the disciples should be ready because the Son of Man will come at a time when they will not be expecting Him. The parable describes a scene in which several servants were waiting for their master to return from a wedding banquet. The point was that they had to remain constantly vigilant so that the master would be able to come into the house whenever he might arrive at home. If they are watching (v. 37) and ready (v. 38), their master will serve them. The second watch was from 9 P.M. to midnight, and the third watch was from midnight to 3 A.M. The point of the words about the thief (v. 39) is the same—the disciples must "be ready" for "the Son of Man will come" unexpectedly.

12:41. Peter's question holds the two parables together. Peter wanted to know the extent of the first parable's meaning. Was it addressed only to the disciples or to everyone?

12:42-48. Jesus did not answer Peter's question directly. Instead these verses indicate that He was talking primarily about the leadership of the nation at that time. The religious leaders were supposed to be managing the nation for God until He brought in the kingdom. However, they failed in that task; they were not looking expectantly toward the kingdom. Because of the penalty exacted (vv. 46-47), Jesus must not have been speaking about believers who were not ready. He seems to have been referring to the nation's leaders who would be present at the time of the coming of the Son of Man. Faithless ones (v. 47) will be judged more severely than those who, though wicked, do not know about the coming of the Son of Man (v. 48a). Unbelievers with a great knowledge of God's revelation will have to answer for their lack of response to that revelation.

e. Jesus' teaching about being misunderstood (12:49-53)

12:49-53. To be Jesus' disciple might mean being misunderstood even by one's own family. Ultimately His ministry would bring not peace . . . but division because some would accept what He was saying and others would reject it. His ministry would be like a fire which devours (v. 49). Jesus longed for the purpose of His ministry to be accomplished. His life and death would be the basis for His judging Israel. That judgment, like fire, would purify the nation. The baptism He spoke of no doubt referred to His death which He said would be completed (v. 50). Jesus' mission actually did result in the kind of family divisions of which He spoke here (vv. 52-53). Families have been divided and loyalties broken. Jewish believers are still ostracized from their families and friends. However, to be a disciple one must be willing to undergo such problems.

2. JESUS' TEACHING OF THE MULTITUDES (12:54–13:21)

After Jesus spoke directly to His disciples, He turned His attention to the multitudes. In this section six events occurred in which the crowds played a major part. They were now the focal point in Jesus' ministry.

a. Jesus' teaching about signs (12:54-56)

12:54-56. Jesus taught the crowds that they needed to be sensitive to interpret the things they were seeing. Though they had been observing His ministry they were not able to ascertain that He was truly the Messiah. He made the point that they, with no trouble, could interpret natural signs (western clouds and south winds—the appearance of the earth and the sky). But they could not discern spiritual signs. They should discern what was going on right in their midst—He was offering the kingdom and they were not responding properly to His offer.

b. Jesus' illustration of the law court (12:57-59)

12:57-59. Jesus used an illustration of a law court to drive home the point that people need to be rightly related to God. Even in the earthly sphere it makes sense to try hard to be reconciled with an opponent—even on the way . . . to the magistrate—in order to avoid being thrown into prison and having to pay the last penny. How much more important it is to "be reconciled" when the opponent is God! (The word for "penny" is leptos, used only here and in Mark 12:42; Luke 21:2. It was a Jewish copper coin worth about 1/8 of a cent.)

c. Jesus' teaching on perishing (13:1-5)

13:1-5. Jesus taught the crowds that calamity can happen to anyone because all are human. Jesus cited two common instances about destruction. The first concerned some Galileans who were killed by Pilate while they were offering sacrifices. The second concerned 18 seemingly innocent bystanders in Siloam who were killed when a tower . . . fell on them. Jesus' point was that being killed or not being killed is no measure of a person's unrighteousness or righteousness. Anyone can be killed. Only God's grace causes any to live. This point is brought out in verses 3 and 5—unless you repent, you too will all perish. Death is the common denominator for everyone. Only repentance can bring life as people prepare to enter the kingdom.

d. Jesus' parable of the fig tree (13:6-9)

13:6-9. To illustrate His point Jesus taught in a parable that if fruit does not show in one's life, judgment will come. A fig tree requires three years to bear figs, but since this one did not produce, the owner said, Cut it down. His vineyard keeper asked him to give it one more year. This parable illustrates the point made in verses 1-5 that judgment comes on those who do not repent. Here Jesus took the thought one step further and noted that fruit must be present (cf. Matt. 3:7-10; 7:15-21; Luke 8:15). A visible change must be seen in the life of one who claims to trust the Messiah. If there is no visible change that person, like the figless fig tree, is judged.

e. Jesus' healing of a woman (13:10-17)

Jesus illustrated His teaching by healing a woman on a Sabbath. This episode is the last time in the Gospel of Luke Jesus taught in a synagogue. The term "hypocrites" is extremely important in the narrative. Toward the beginning of this section (12:54–13:21) Jesus had called the crowds and the leaders of the people "hypocrites" (12:56). Here at the end of the section He again called them "hypocrites" (13:15). Jesus' point was that the crowds and the leaders were not really interested in what God could and would do in their lives.

13:10-13. Luke described the woman as one who had been crippled by a spirit for 18 years and "bound" by "Satan" (v. 16). Without denying the historicity of the event, it must be pointed out that there is obvious symbolic value in Luke's placing this miracle at this point in the narrative. It was Jesus' mission among the people of the nation to loose them from crippling influences and bring them to uprightness. Here was a graphic example of Jesus' touch, bringing the woman to a position of uprightness. Jesus healed her by His words (Woman, you are set free from your infirmity) and by touching her. Immediately she straightened up and praised God. This act of praising God was the proper response to the work of Jesus (cf. 2:20; 5:25-26; 7:16; 17:15; 18:43; 23:47). It showed that people were understanding His mission.

13:14. In contrast to the proper response which the woman evidenced, the synagogue ruler was indignant because Jesus had not followed the Law as that ruler interpreted it. He appealed to the crowd to reject Jesus' miracle. This attitude supports what Jesus had already said about religious leaders keeping others from entering the kingdom (11:52).

13:15-17. Jesus pointed out that a person is much more important than an animal, and His enemies saw nothing wrong in helping their animals on the Sabbath (cf. 14:5). The total hypocrisy and foolishness of the thinking of the religious leaders was obvious. As a result Jesus' opponents were humiliated but the crowds were delighted.

f. Jesus' teaching about the kingdom of God (13:18-21)

13:18-21. This passage is actually a hinge between Jesus' teaching of the multitudes (12:54–13:21) and His teaching about the people of the kingdom (13:22–17:10). Some feel that in these brief parables about the Mustard Seed (a mustard tree, from a tiny seed, grows as tall as 12-15 feet in one season!) and the Yeast Jesus was teaching something positive about the kingdom. It seems better, however, to understand these parables as teaching something undesirable. Like pervading yeast, evil will enter the Age and become all-pervasive. This seems to be true since Luke placed this teaching immediately after the synagogue leader's rejection of Jesus' work on the Sabbath.

3. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT THE PEOPLE OF THE KINGDOM (13:22–17:10)

In this section Luke recorded Jesus' teachings concerning who is and who is not a member of the kingdom. Throughout this section the theme of entering into the kingdom is often symbolized as taking part in a feast or banquet (13:29; 14:7-24; 15:23; 17:7-10). The kingdom was yet to come. Those who enter are those who respond positively to God by accepting the Messiah and His kingdom message.

a. Jesus' teaching that most of Israel will be excluded from the kingdom (13:22-35)

13:22-30. Jesus taught that many from Israel will not be in the kingdom whereas many from outside Israel will be. Someone asked Jesus if only a few people were going to be saved. Apparently His followers were somewhat discouraged that His message of the kingdom was not sweeping the nation as they thought it would. They saw that Jesus continually met opposition as well as acceptance. Jesus' teaching was clear—a person must accept what He was saying in order to enter the kingdom. To a Jewish mind salvation was related to the kingdom, that is, a person was saved in order to enter into God's kingdom.

Jesus responded to the person's question with a story of a man who was giving a feast (symbolic of the kingdom, v. 29). After he closed the door to the banquet, no one else could come in for they were too late (v. 25). In fact, the host of the feast actually called them evildoers (v. 27). The latecomers responded that they had eaten and drunk with the host and that he had taught in their streets (v. 26), an obvious reference to Jesus' ministry among the people of that generation. Jesus' point in telling the story was that the people had to respond to His invitation at that time, for a time would come when it would be too late and they would not be allowed in the kingdom.

Jesus spoke directly, telling the crowds that judgment would come on those who refused His message: There will be weeping . . . and gnashing of teeth and they will be thrown out, that is, not allowed to enter the kingdom. (On "weeping and gnashing of teeth" see comments on Matt. 13:42.) But godly ones in the nation (represented by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets) will be in the kingdom of God.

These remarks were revolutionary to Jesus' hearers. Most of them assumed that because they were physically related to Abraham they would naturally enter into the promised kingdom. However, His next words were even more revolutionary—in fact devastating—to those who assumed that only the Jewish nation would be involved in the kingdom. Jesus explained that Gentiles would be added to the kingdom in place of Jewish people (Luke 13:29-30). People coming from the four corners of the world represent various population groups. Those listening to Jesus' words should not have been surprised by this teaching because the prophets had often said the same thing. However, Jews in Jesus' day believed that Gentiles were inferior to them. When Jesus had begun His ministry in Nazareth, His teaching of Gentile inclusion had so maddened the crowd that they tried to kill Him (4:13-30). The Jewish people considered themselves to be first in every way, but they would be last, that is, they would be left out of the kingdom. In contrast, some Gentiles, considered last, would be in the kingdom and would really be first in importance (13:30).

13:31-35 (Matt. 23:37-39). In response to a warning from some Pharisees . . . Jesus said that He had to reach Jerusalem because He was appointed to die there. There is debate concerning the Pharisees' report about Herod wanting to kill Jesus. Throughout Luke, the Pharisees are presented in a negative light. Why would the Pharisees have wanted to protect Jesus in this instance? It seems best to understand the incident as the Pharisees' pretext to get rid of Jesus. Jesus had publicly stated that His goal was to reach Jerusalem, and He was well on His way. Thus the Pharisees were apparently trying to deter Him from His task, to scare Him into setting aside His goal.

Jesus' response, Go tell that fox, indicates that He saw the Pharisees as Herod's messengers who would report back to him. Jesus stated that He had a mission to perform (Luke 13:32). This Herod was Herod Antipas (see the chart on the Herods at 1:5).

When Jesus said, Today and tomorrow and the next day, He was not saying that He would arrive in Jerusalem in three days. The point was that He had a mission in mind and that He would continue on the schedule He had set for Himself. The goal was Jerusalem where He would die. He must present Himself publicly to the religious authorities and then be put to death.

It was at this point that Luke recorded the rejection of Jerusalem (representing the nation) by Jesus (13:34-35). Jesus lamented for the city and longed to protect it as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, that is, tenderly and lovingly, even though the people were not willing. His entire ministry up to this point had been to offer the kingdom to the nation. But since the nation, which had even killed the prophets, had rejected His words, He would now reject them. Jesus stated, Your house is left to you desolate (aphietai, "abandoned"). "House" probably refers not to the temple, but to the whole city. Though He would continue to offer Himself as the Messiah, the die was now cast. The city was abandoned by the Messiah.

Jesus noted (quoting Ps. 118:26) that the people of the city would not see Him again till they said that He was the Messiah. The crowd did quote this verse when Jesus entered the city in His Triumphal Entry (Luke 19:38), but their religious leaders disapproved. Ultimately this truth will be proclaimed when Jesus comes again and enters the city as the millennial Ruler.

b. Jesus' teaching that many outcasts and Gentiles will be in the kingdom (14:1-24)

This section continues the thought of 13:22-35 but explains it from another angle. Rather than the excluded ones being the main subject, the ones included in the kingdom are now discussed. Contrary to His hearers' expectations, Jewish outcasts and Gentiles will make up a large portion of the kingdom's population.

14:1-6. Jesus had been invited to eat on the Sabbath at the house of a prominent Pharisee where there was also a man who was suffering from dropsy. Dropsy is a condition of excess fluid in the tissues of the body, caused perhaps by a type of cancer or possibly liver or kidney problems. The man was probably invited to the Pharisee's house in order to see what Jesus would do. Jesus immediately took the initiative in the situation and asked the host and other guests whether it would be lawful to heal the man on the Sabbath. Apparently Jesus' question disarmed the crowd, for all of them remained silent. Jesus went ahead and healed the man. He said that the guests would help a son or an ox in distress on the Sabbath, so it was totally appropriate to heal this poor individual. Jesus was setting the stage for the discussion to follow concerning those who were considered ceremonially unclean and therefore unable to enter the kingdom.

14:7-11. Looking around, Jesus noticed how the guests picked the places of honor. The closer a person was to the host, the greater was that guest's position of honor. As people entered the room in the Pharisee's house where the table was spread, they must have scrambled for seats at the head of the table. The parable Jesus then told was designed to get them to think about spiritual realities in relation to the kingdom message He had been preaching.

Verse 11 records the point of Jesus' parable: Everyone who exalts himself will be humbled, and he who humbles himself will be exalted. This recalls Jesus' earlier statement that those who are last will be first and those who are first will be last (13:30). The Pharisees, assuming they would have important positions in the kingdom, would be humiliated if they were pushed aside for someone else (14:9). However, if they would humble themselves, then they would perhaps be honored (v. 10).

14:12-14. Then Jesus spoke to His host, telling him that if he would invite the outcasts of society (the poor, the crippled, the lame, the blind)—people who could never repay him for his generosity—this would show that he was ministering to them for the Lord's sake and not his own (cf. Matt. 6:1-18; James 1:26-27). He would be laying up for himself treasures in heaven (Matt. 6:20) and would be becoming rich toward God (Luke 12:21). Inviting the outcasts would not make the man righteous; it would testify that he was in a righteous standing before God. This is shown by Jesus' statement that the repayment would not come at the present time but at the resurrection of the righteous.

14:15-24 (Matt. 22:1-10). Jesus then told a parable about a great banquet. One of the diners expressed a blessing on everyone who would eat . . . in the kingdom. This person was assuming that he and the other people present would all be present in the kingdom. Jesus took the opportunity to use the feast motif to explain that many of the people there would not be present in God's kingdom. In their places would be many outcasts and Gentiles. The host in the parable invited many guests. However all those invited began to give excuses for not going. The excuses were supposedly valid—the need to see about a recently purchased field, or to try out recently purchased oxen, or to be with one's recently married bride (Luke 14:18-20).

The host became angry and commanded that people in the streets and alleys of the town . . . the poor, the crippled, the blind, and the lame—be invited. Jesus was referring to those members of the Jewish community who were considered inferior and ceremonially unclean as was the man with dropsy He had just healed (vv. 2-4).

When the host learned that there was still room for more, he commanded that others be invited from the roads and country lanes (v. 23). These people outside the city were probably Gentiles, those outside the covenant community. The host then stated that none of the originally invited guests would get a taste of his banquet.

This parable at a banquet about another banquet reinforced His previous teaching that He would abandon Jerusalem (13:34-35). The people who originally had been offered a share of the kingdom had rejected it, so now the message was going out to others including Gentiles. The excuses seemed good to those who gave them, but they were inadequate for refusing Jesus' kingdom offer. Nothing was so important as accepting His offer of the kingdom, for one's entire destiny rests on his response to that offer.

c. Jesus' warning against thoughtless discipleship (14:25-35)

14:25-27. The setting then changed: large crowds were traveling with Jesus. Jesus intended to impress on the people their need to examine their resolve to follow Him. He was on His way to die on the cross. Ultimately everyone did desert Him when He was alone in the garden and then arrested and put on trial.

To emphasize that discipleship is difficult, Jesus said that one must hate his own family and even his own life in order to be His disciple. Literally hating one's family would have been a violation of the Law. Since Jesus on several occasions admonished others to fulfill the Law, He must not have meant here that one should literally hate his family. The stress here is on the priority of love (cf. Matt. 10:37). One's loyalty to Jesus must come before his loyalty to his family or even to life itself. Indeed, those who did follow Jesus against their families' desires were probably thought of as hating their families.

The second difficult qualification Jesus stressed was that one must carry his (i.e., his own) cross and follow Jesus (Luke 14:27; cf. 9:23). When the Roman Empire crucified a criminal or captive, the victim was often forced to carry his cross part of the way to the crucifixion site. Carrying his cross through the heart of the city was supposed to be a tacit admission that the Roman Empire was correct in the sentence of death imposed on him, an admission that Rome was right and he was wrong. So when Jesus enjoined His followers to carry their crosses and follow Him, He was referring to a public display before others that Jesus was right and that the disciples were following Him even to their deaths. This is exactly what the religious leaders refused to do.

14:28-33. Using two illustrations, Jesus then taught that discipleship must include planning and sacrifice. The first illustration concerned a tower (vv. 28-30). Before a person begins to build, he should be sure he will be able to pay the full cost of the project. Jesus' followers must also be sure they are willing to pay the full price of discipleship.

The second illustration concerned a king who went out to battle. The king should be willing to sacrifice a desired victory if he senses he is unable to win. This principle of sacrifice is also important in the realm of discipleship: one must be willing to give up everything for Jesus. The people who were following Jesus throughout the countryside of Israel had done that. They had given up possessions and employment, knowing that the message Jesus was proclaiming was the most important thing on earth.

14:34-35. Jesus climaxed His teaching on discipleship by proclaiming that salt is good only as long as it contains the characteristics of saltiness. If it loses its saltiness, it has no value at all and is thrown out. The same is true of disciples. They must contain the characteristics of discipleship—planning and willing sacrifice—or they are of no value at all.

d. Jesus' teaching about the hopeless and sinners in the kingdom (chap. 15)

Jesus combated the religious leaders by teaching again that some who were considered to be hopeless and sinners will be in the kingdom. Here are perhaps the best known of Jesus' parables—The Lost Sheep, The Lost Coin, and The Prodigal Son. All three parables teach the same message—that God is vitally concerned with the repentance of sinners. But the third story goes beyond the others, applying that truth to the situation in which Jesus found Himself—being accepted by the outcasts of society while being rejected by the religious leaders.

15:1-2. Much to the disgust of the religious leaders, Jesus associated with those who were thought of as hopeless and "sinners." The opposition to Jesus was once again, as almost always in Luke, the Pharisees and the teachers of the Law. Because of this opposition Jesus told three parables. All three speak of things or a person being lost and then found, and of rejoicing when the lost is found.

Some view these parables as teaching a believer's restoration to fellowship with God. One cannot lose something he does not own, they reason, so the first two parables must represent children of God who come back to Him. Also, a son is already a son, so the third parable must be teaching that people who are believers can be restored to fellowship with God.

Others understand the parables to teach that lost people (i.e., people who are not believers) can come to Christ. This view seems preferable for two reasons: (1) Jesus was speaking to Pharisees who were rejecting the message of the kingdom. Their objection was that sinners were coming to Jesus and believing His message. In no way could these two groups be adequately represented in the third parable if the point of the parable is a restoration to fellowship by a believer. (2) Verse 22 indicates that the son who came back received a new position which he did not have before. The Jews were God's "children" in the sense that they had a special covenant relationship to Him. But each individual still had to become a believer in God. It was their responsibility to accept the message Jesus was preaching—that He was the Messiah and that He would bring in the kingdom for the nation.

15:3-7. The Parable of the Lost Sheep teaches that there is . . . rejoicing in heaven when a sinner . . . repents. Jesus was not saying the other 99 sheep were not important. Instead, He was emphasizing that the one sheep not in the fold corresponded with the sinners with whom Jesus was eating (vv. 1-2). The 99 righteous persons refer to the Pharisees who thought themselves righteous and therefore in no need to repent.

15:8-10. The Parable of the Lost Coin teaches that there is rejoicing in the presence of the angels when a sinner . . . repents. This is the same message as the first but it emphasizes the thoroughness of the search. The woman continued to sweep the house and search carefully until she found the coin which was a thing of great value. A drachma, a Greek silver coin referred to only here in the New Testament, equaled about a day's wages. The point would have been clear to Jesus' listeners: the sinners with whom He was associating were extremely valuable to God. (Cf. similar wording in vv. 6, 9.)

Jesus then told the Parable of the Lost Son and His Older Brother to explain that God is inviting all people to enter the kingdom.

15:11. A man . . . had two sons; the contrast between his sons is the point of the parable.

15:12-20a. This section of the parable describes the actions of the younger son. He requested an unusual thing when he asked his father to give him his share of the estate. Normally an estate was not divided and given to the heirs until the father could no longer manage it well. This father acquiesced to his son's demand and gave him his share of the inheritance. The younger son took that wealth, went far away, and squandered it in wild living, involving himself presumably, as his older brother said, with prostitutes (v. 30). The hearers immediately would have begun to understand the point of the story. Jesus had been criticized for associating with sinners. The sinners were considered people who were far away from God, squandering their lives in riotous living. In contrast with the younger son, the older son continued to remain with the father and did not engage in such practices.

A famine occurred and the second son ran out of money so that he had to work for a foreigner feeding pigs, something detestable to a Jew. Perhaps the far country was east of the Sea of Galilee where Gentiles tended pigs (cf. 8:26-37). In his hunger he longed for the pods—the food he fed the pigs. As a Jew, he could have stooped no lower. The pods were probably carob pods, from tall evergreen carob trees.

In this low condition, he came to his senses (15:17). He decided to go back to his father and work for him. Surely he would be better off to work for his father than for a foreigner. He fully expected to be hired by his father as a servant, not to be taken back as his son.

15:20b-24. The third section of the parable describes the father's response. He had been waiting for his son to return, for while he was still a long way off the father saw him. The father, full of compassion for his son, ran to him, and hugged and kissed him. The father would not even listen to all of the young son's rehearsed speech. Instead the father had his servants prepare a banquet to celebrate the son's return. He gave the son a new position with a robe . . . a ring . . . and sandals. Jesus intentionally used the banquet motif again. He had previously spoken of a banquet to symbolize the coming kingdom (13:29; cf. 14:15-24). Jesus' hearers would have easily realized the significance of this feast. Sinners (whom the young son symbolized) were entering into the kingdom because they were coming to God. They believed they needed to return to Him and be forgiven by Him.

15:25-32. The parable's final section describes the attitude of the older brother, who symbolized the Pharisees and the teachers of the Law. They had the same attitude toward the sinners as the older son had toward the younger son. The older brother, coming home from working in the field and hearing what was happening, got angry. Similarly the Pharisees and teachers of the Law were angry with the message Jesus was proclaiming. They did not like the idea that people from outside their nation as well as outcasts and sinners in the nation were to be a part of the kingdom. Like the older son who refused to go to the feast, the Pharisees refused to enter the kingdom Jesus offered to the nation.

Interestingly the father went out and pleaded with the older brother to go to the feast. Likewise, Jesus ate with Pharisees as well as sinners. He did not desire to exclude the Pharisees and teachers of the Law from the kingdom. The message was an invitation to everyone.

The older brother was angry because he had never been honored with a feast even though, as he said, All these years I've been slaving for you and never disobeyed your orders (v. 29). Those words betrayed the fact that the older brother thought he had a relationship with his father because of his work. He served his father not out of love but out of a desire for reward. He even thought of himself as being in bondage to his father.

The father pointed out that the older son had had the joy of being in the house all the time, and now he should rejoice with the father in his brother's return. The words, You are always with me and everything I have is yours, suggest the religious leaders' privileged position as members of God's Chosen People. They were the recipients and guardians of the covenants and the Law (Rom. 3:1-2; 9:4). Rather than feeling angry, they should rejoice that others were joining them and would be a part of the kingdom.

e. Jesus' teaching about wealth and the kingdom (chap. 16)

This chapter includes two parables about wealth. The first parable (vv. 1-13) was spoken primarily to the disciples (v. 1). The second parable (vv. 19-31) was addressed to the Pharisees because of their response (vv. 14-18) to the first parable.

16:1-8a. Jesus told this Parable of the Unjust Manager to teach that His disciples must use their wealth for kingdom purposes. The application (vv. 8b-13) follows the parable (vv. 1-8a).

In the parable a rich man . . . called his manager to give an account of his dealings. The rich man had heard that the manager was not handling the wealthy owner's finances wisely. In Jesus' day managers were often hired by wealthy people to care for the finances of their estates. Such a manager would be comparable to a modern-day financial planner or trustee who controls the finances of an estate for the purpose of making more money for that estate. The money did not belong to the manager but was his to use for the estate. Apparently the manager was wasting those goods as the younger son had wasted his father's goods (15:13).

At the beginning of the parable the rich man viewed his manager as irresponsible rather than dishonest (16:2). The manager was fired. But then, in order to make friends who might later hire him, the ex-manager charged the rich man's two debtors less than what they actually owed—400 instead of 800 gallons of olive oil, and 800 instead of 1,000 bushels of wheat. The manager's thinking was reflected in his statement, When I lose my job here, people will welcome me into their houses (v. 4).

When the rich man heard what he had done, he commended the dishonest manager because he had acted shrewdly. The dishonest manager had not done a good thing. But he had been careful to plan ahead, using material things to insure a secure future. Jesus was not teaching that His disciples should be dishonest. He was teaching that they should use material things for future spiritual benefit. This was a good lesson from a bad example.

16:8b-13. In three ways Jesus applied the parable to His disciples who had to live with nonbelievers in the world. First, one should use money to win people into the kingdom (vv. 8b-9). Jesus said, The people of this world are more shrewd in dealing with their own kind than are the people of the light. Here Jesus set His disciples apart from the dishonest manager. The dishonest manager was a person of "this world," seeking a way to make his life more comfortable. The disciples, "the people of the light" (cf. 11:33-36; Eph. 5:8), should act in a shrewd (wise, not dishonest) manner. Jesus plainly taught that the people of light should use worldly wealth (Luke 16:9). Jesus also used the word "wealth" (mamōna) later (v. 13) when He affirmed that one "cannot serve both God and money." In verse 9 Jesus was saying that one is to use wealth, not store it up or be a servant of it. Wealth should be a disciple's servant, not vice versa. The disciples were to use wealth to gain friends, the same reason the dishonest manager used the rich man's wealth. The disciples would then be welcomed into eternal dwellings. The disciples' wise use of wealth would help lead others to believe the message of the kingdom and bring them to accept that message.

Jesus' second application is in verses 10-12. If one is faithful in his use of money, then he can be trusted with greater things. True riches (v. 11) seem to refer to the kingdom's spiritual riches of which the disciples will partake.

The third application Jesus drew from the parable was that a person cannot serve both God and money (v 13). As masters the two are mutually exclusive. Love for money will drive one away from God (1 Tim. 6:10); conversely, loving God will cause one not to make money his primary concern in life.

16:14-18. The Pharisees, who loved money, reacted negatively to Jesus' teaching about it. They were sneering at Jesus because they saw Him as a poor man being followed by other poor men and yet having the nerve to teach about money. Jesus responded that God knows the hearts of people and is not impressed with their outward appearances or their wealth. Though the Pharisees justified themselves (v. 15; cf. 15:7) God, who judges the inward man, will be the ultimate Judge. The Pharisees misunderstood the blessings of God's covenant.

They apparently assumed that a person's wealth was God's blessing in return for his righteous conduct. They completely neglected the fact that many righteous people in the Old Testament lacked material things, while many unrighteous people had plenty.

Luke 16:16-18 is included with Jesus' teaching about money to the Pharisees because it illustrates what Jesus had just said about the Pharisees justifying themselves but really being judged by God. Jesus stated that since the time of John the Baptist, He had been announcing God's kingdom. People, including the Pharisees (cf. 14:15 and comments on Matt. 11:12), were attempting to force their way into it.

However, in spite of justifying themselves, the Pharisees were still not living according to the Law. Jesus spoke of divorce as an example. To divorce and remarry constituted adultery. (Jesus gave one exception to this. See comments on Matt. 5:32; 19:1-12.) Some Pharisees took a loose view of divorce. It was acknowledged that a man should not commit adultery. But if a man wanted another woman, many of the Pharisees condoned divorcing his present wife for no good reason and marrying the desired woman. In this way they thought adultery did not take place. However, as Jesus pointed out, this was a perfect example of justifying themselves in the eyes of men but not being justified before God (Luke 16:15). The religious leaders were not actually living according to the Law. Jesus pointed out the importance of the Law (v. 17), which showed that the people should live by it.

16:19-21. Jesus then told the Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus to show that being rich should not be equated with being righteous. The rich man had everything he wanted. Purple referred to clothes dyed that color, and fine linen was worn for underclothes; both were expensive.

A poor man, a crippled beggar named Lazarus, had nothing. One lived in luxury for himself, the other in abject poverty with hunger and poor health (sores). Perhaps Jesus picked the name Lazarus because it is the Greek form of the Hebrew name which means "God, the Helper." Lazarus was righteous not because he was poor but because he depended on God.

16:22-23. In the course of time both men died. Lazarus went to Abraham's side while the rich man . . . was buried and was in hell, a place of conscious torment (vv. 24, 28). Hadēs, the Greek word often translated "hell," is used 11 times in the New Testament. The Septuagint used hadēs to translate the Hebrew šᵉ'ôl (the place of the dead) on 61 occasions. Here hadēs refers to the abode of the unsaved dead prior to the great white throne judgment (Rev. 20:11-15). "Abraham's side" apparently refers to a place of paradise for Old Testament believers at the time of death (cf. Luke 23:43; 2 Cor. 12:4).

16:24-31. The rich man was able to converse with Abraham. He first begged to have Lazarus sent over to give him some water. Abraham replied that that was not possible and that he should remember that during life he had everything he wanted while Lazarus had had nothing. Even so, the rich man had never helped Lazarus during the course of his life. Furthermore, a great chasm separated paradise and hades so that no one could cross from one to the other. The rich man next begged that Lazarus be sent to earth to warn his brothers. It was his contention that if one came back from the dead then his brothers would listen (v. 30). Abraham replied that if they refused to listen to the Scriptures (Moses and the Prophets represent all the OT; cf. v. 16), then they would refuse to listen to one who came back from the dead.

Jesus was obviously suggesting that the rich man symbolized the Pharisees. They wanted signs—signs so clear that they would compel people to believe. But since they refused to believe the Scriptures, they would not believe any sign no matter how great. Just a short time later Jesus did raise a man from the dead, another man named Lazarus (John 11:38-44). The result was that the religious leaders began to plot more earnestly to kill both Jesus and Lazarus (John 11:45-53; 12:10-11).

f. Jesus' teaching about obligations toward men and God (17:1-10)

17:1-4. Jesus taught about the obligations His disciples had toward other people (vv. 1-4) and God (vv. 6-10). Followers of Jesus are not to cause people to sin. In this life sin cannot be eradicated—such things are bound to come. But a disciple would be better off drowned by a millstone (a heavy stone for grinding grain) tied around his neck, than to bring spiritual harm (skandalisē, "to cause to sin") to these little ones (people who, like little children, are helpless before God; cf. 10:21; Mark 10:24). Presumably the sinning referred to is lack of faith in the Messiah. Jesus had already noted that the Pharisees were not only refusing to enter the kingdom but were also keeping others from entering (Luke 11:52).

Not only are Jesus' followers not to cause others to sin; they also are to counteract sin by forgiving others (17:3-4). One should rebuke a brother if he sins. If he repents, he is to be forgiven even if he sins and repents over and over. The words seven times in a day denote a completeness—as often as it happens.

17:5-10. Jesus also taught that His followers have responsibilities toward God. The first responsibility is to have faith. When the disciples asked Jesus for more faith, He answered that they needed not more faith but the right kind of faith. Even the smallest amount of faith (like a mustard seed, the smallest seed; cf. 13:19) could do amazingly miraculous things, such as uprooting a mulberry tree, a tree with deep roots (17:6).

The disciples' second responsibility toward God was humble service (vv. 7-10). They should not expect special praise for doing things they were expected to do. A servant does not get special praise from his master for doing his job. Likewise disciples have certain responsibilities which they are to fulfill in humility as God's unworthy (achreioi, "good for nothing," used elsewhere only in Matt. 25:30) servants.

4. JESUS' TEACHING ABOUT THE KINGDOM AND THE ATTITUDES OF HIS DISCIPLES (17:11–19:27)

In this section Luke brought together a series of events in the life of Jesus on His way to Jerusalem. The events teach the kind of attitude disciples should have in view of the coming kingdom.

a. A leper returned (17:11-19)

17:11-14. Jesus was on His way to Jerusalem . . . along the border between Samaria and Galilee. When asked for help by 10 lepers, He healed them from a distance. This was the second time in the Book of Luke that lepers were healed (cf. 5:12-16). As in the former case, Jesus instructed the men to show themselves to the priests. On their way they were cleansed from the disease and were made ceremonially clean.

17:15-19. Only one of the men—a foreigner, that is, a Samaritan—came back to thank Jesus. This one understood the significance of what had been done for him. He was praising God and he threw himself at Jesus' feet, a posture of worship. He apparently understood that Jesus is God, for he placed faith in Him. Whether or not he understood that Jesus is the Messiah is not mentioned by Luke. The lack of gratitude by the other nine was typical of the rejection of His ministry by the Jewish nation. He alone had the power to cleanse the nation and make it ceremonially clean. However, the nation did not respond properly to Him. The nation accepted the things that Jesus could do (such as heal them and feed them), but it did not want to accept Him as Messiah. However, those outside the nation (such as this Samaritan leper—a person doubly repulsive to the Jews) were responding.

b. Jesus's teaching about the presence of the kingdom (17:20-37) (Matt. 24:23-28, 37-41)

17:20-21. Jesus was asked by the Pharisees when the kingdom of God would come. This was a logical question to ask, for He had been preaching for quite some time that the kingdom was at hand. Jesus responded to the question in two ways. First, He said that the Pharisees would not be able to tell of the coming of the kingdom through their observations. Second, he told them that the kingdom was in their midst. The term within you is often misunderstood. The Pharisees were rejecting Him as the Messiah and were not believers. (They were distinct from the disciples Jesus addressed beginning in v. 22.) Thus it would not make sense for Jesus to have told the Pharisees that the kingdom of God was within them as if it were some sort of spiritual kingdom. It is better to translate the phrase "within you" (entos hymōn) as "in your midst." Some feel that the force of the expression is "within your possession or within your reach." Jesus' point was that He was standing right in their midst. All they needed to do was acknowledge that He is indeed the Messiah who could bring in the kingdom—and then the kingdom would come.

17:22-25. Jesus then gave His disciples several facts about the kingdom. First, He said that a time would come when the disciples would long to see Him return, but they would not see it (v. 22). Second, He said that when the kingdom would come everyone would know it (vv. 23-24). It will not be a hidden (i.e., only an inner, spiritual) kingdom. It will be a kingdom that the whole world will know. His appearing will be like the lightning (cf. Matt. 24:27, 30). Third, Jesus told the disciples He must suffer before the kingdom comes (Luke 17:25).

17:26-27. Next Jesus compared the coming of the kingdom to the coming of the flood in Noah's day and to the coming of judgment on Sodom (v. 29). By bringing up these two events, Jesus was stressing the judgmental aspect of the kingdom. When He will establish His kingdom, people will be judged to see if they will be allowed to enter it. In this section (17:26-35) Jesus was not speaking about the Rapture but about the judgment before entering the kingdom.

Jesus reminded His disciples that people in Noah's day were not prepared for the Flood, and therefore they were completely destroyed (Gen. 6).The same problem will exist when the kingdom comes—people will not be ready.

17:28-33. In the same way the materialistic, indifferent people of Sodom (eating and drinking, buying and selling, planting and building) were not prepared for God's judgment (Gen. 19). They were living in sin, oblivious to God. Therefore they were destroyed. Jesus reminded His followers that people should not be attached to their material things at the time of the coming of the kingdom for they, like Lot's wife, will be judged accordingly. People who are working or relaxing on their roofs (many of which are flat in Palestine) should not try to get things out of their houses. Nor should those working in the fields go to their houses to save their possessions. Any delay could be fatal. Thus whoever tries to keep his life (Luke 17:33) by going back for his goods (v. 31) will lose it.

17:34-36. Jesus stated that some will be taken into judgment. In some parts of the world it will be nighttime (people will be in . . . bed); in other parts it will be daytime (people will be doing daily tasks, such as grinding grain). The taking away means taken into judgment, not taken up in the Rapture. The ones left are those who will enter into the kingdom. (Some mss. add the words of v. 36, "Two men will be in the field; one will be taken and the other left." Most likely the verse was inserted to harmonize this passage with Matt. 24:40.)

17:37. The disciples questioned where these people would be taken. Jesus' cryptic answer, Where there is a dead body, there the vultures will gather—has been interpreted variously. It seems best to understand that Jesus was reaffirming that these people would be taken into judgment. Much as a dead body causes vultures to "gather" on it, so dead people are consigned to judgment if they are not ready for the kingdom (cf. Matt. 24:28; Rev. 19:17-19).

c. Jesus' teaching about prayer (18:1-14)

These verses include two of Jesus' parables about prayer. One was addressed to the disciples (vv. 1-8), and the other (vv. 9-14) to "some who were confident of their own righteousness."

18:1-8. Jesus told the Parable of the Unjust Judge to teach persistence in prayer: that they, His disciples, should always pray and not give up. Verses 2-5 contain the parable itself. A widow continued to go before an unjust judge to plead for justice in her case. He continually refused to "hear" her case, but finally he decided to give her justice so that she would not wear him out with her complaining. Jesus interpreted the parable (vv. 6-8), pointing out that if the unjust judge would give justice, then imagine how God (the just Judge) will see that they get justice, and quickly. Jesus' question, When the Son of Man comes, will He find faith on the earth? was not spoken out of ignorance. Nor was He questioning whether all believers would be gone when He returns. Instead, He asked the question to spur the disciples on to faithfulness in prayer, to encourage them to keep on in their praying. This is another good lesson from a bad example (cf. 16:1-13).

18:9-14. The purposes of the Parable of the Prayers of the Pharisee and the Tax Collector were to show that one cannot trust in himself for righteousness and should not view others with contempt (v. 9). The Pharisee's prayer was concerned with telling God what a good man he was, for not only did he keep the Law by fasting and tithing (v. 12), but also he considered himself better than other people (v. 11). He was using other people as his standard for measuring righteousness.

On the other hand the tax collector used God as his standard for measuring righteousness. He realized that he had to throw himself on the mercy of God for forgiveness.

Jesus' application of the parable echoed His teaching in 13:30. It is necessary for people to humble themselves before God to gain forgiveness, and those who are proud (everyone who exalts himself) will be brought low (humbled) by God.

d. Jesus' teaching about childlikeness (18:15-17)
(Matt. 19:13-15; Mark 10:13-16)

18:15-17. Luke placed this short section here to follow up on the message of the previous parable. Jesus had taught that it was necessary to be humble before God. In these verses He compared that humility to childlikeness: Let the little children come to Me, and do not hinder them, for the kingdom of God belongs to such as these. In these words Jesus was stating that a person must come to Him in humility in order to enter the kingdom. Children come with expectation and excitement. They come realizing that they are not sufficient in themselves. They depend totally on others. If these same attitudes are not present in adults, they can never enter into the kingdom.

e. Jesus' teaching that wealth is a hindrance to the important issues of life (18:18-30)

18:18-20. A certain ruler (who was very wealthy, v. 23) came to Jesus to talk about how to inherit eternal life. This man was perhaps a member of the Sanhedrin or perhaps an official in a local synagogue. "To inherit eternal life" meant to enter the kingdom of God (cf. John 3:3-5). The man wanted to know what actions (what must I do) would make him right with God.

The man had called Jesus Good Teacher. Jesus responded that God alone is good, that is, only God is truly righteous. Apparently the man thought Jesus had gained a measure of status with God by His good works. Jesus was implying that if He were truly good, then it would be because He is God. This, then, is another of Jesus' claims of deity.

Jesus responded to the man's question by instructing him to keep the seventh, sixth, eighth, ninth, and fifth commandments (Ex. 20:12-16), each of which pertain to man's relationship to man. (The first four of the Ten Commandments pertain to man's relationship with God.)

18:21-22. The ruler's reply that he had kept all these since childhood was probably correct. He may have been a model citizen.

Jesus then told the man one other thing he needed to do: he needed to follow Jesus, and in order to do that he had to give the money from his possessions to the poor. This action would touch on the 10th commandment against coveting, which included the idea of greed and holding onto things which are one's own as well as wanting things that belong to others. It was at this point that the man faltered.

Jesus' reasoning was clear: (a) one must keep the Law perfectly in order to inherit eternal life (cf. James 2:10). (b) Only God was good—truly righteous. (c) Therefore nobody can obtain eternal life by following the Law (cf. Rom. 3:20; Gal. 2:21; 3:21). The only course of action left to an individual is to follow Jesus in order to obtain eternal life.

18:23-25. The ruler was not prepared to take that step (but contrast Zacchaeus, 19:8). The ruler was more attached to his wealth than to the idea of obtaining "eternal life" which he had so nobly asked about at the beginning of his conversation with the Lord. Jesus responded that riches are a hindrance to one's obtaining eternal life. Riches often cloud a person's thinking about what is truly important in life. Jesus used a common hyperbole of something that is impossible—a camel going through the eye of a needle (belonēs, a sewing needle, not a small door in a city gate). Likewise it is most difficult (but not impossible; cf. Zacchaeus, 19:1-10) for a rich person to be saved.

18:26-27. The disciples were dumbfounded. They had the mistaken impression, like the Pharisees, that wealth was a sign of God's blessing. If a person such as the ruler could not be saved, Who then can be saved? Jesus, by His reply, did not rule out all wealthy people from salvation. He noted that God can do the impossible.

18:28-30. In response to the disciples' sacrifice in following Him, expressed by Peter, Jesus affirmed that they would be amply rewarded. Though they had left their families (cf. 14:26-27), their reward would consist of many times as much in this age and also eternal life. Jesus was obviously referring to the community of believers who would share with the disciples during their ministries. Those believers became a closely knit family, all sharing together, so that none had any need (Acts 2:44-47; 4:32-37).

f. Jesus' teaching about His resurrection (18:31-34)
(Matt. 20:17-19; Mark 10:32-34)

18:31-34. Each time Jesus . . . told His followers about what would happen to Him in Jerusalem, He got more explicit. At this point He laid out the events which would come to pass. He clearly stated the involvement of Gentiles in His trial and death. This was important because Luke did not want his readers to think that the Gentiles were guiltless in Jesus' death. The whole world was guilty of the death of the Savior. But the disciples could not comprehend any of this. They still thought the kingdom would come almost immediately. So they did not know what He was talking about.

g. Jesus and a blind man (18:35-43)

In this passage and the next (Luke 19:1-10) are two examples of how the nation should have responded to the Messiah. In each case the person who did respond was an outcast from the mainstream of Judaism.

18:35-38. Near Jericho a certain blind man, hearing all the commotion around him as Jesus was passing by . . . asked those around him what was going on. When he was told it was Jesus of Nazareth, he immediately realized that the Messiah was there, for his words, Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me! presupposed that he knew Jesus is the Messiah.

Great symbolic value is here in Luke's account. The man was a beggar sitting by the side of the road, waiting for something to happen. He was blind and could do nothing to improve his condition. The Messiah came through his town (as He had walked through many towns). Immediately the blind man recognized Him as the Messiah, the One who could save him from his blindness. Spiritual outcasts, unable to help themselves, far more readily recognized the Messiah and asked for His help than did the Jewish religious leaders.

18:39. Those in front tried to make him keep quiet. Similarly the religious leaders tried to keep people from believing on Jesus. But the opposition caused the man to be even more adamant in his faith.

18:40-43. In stating his desire to see, the man was confident that Jesus, the Messiah, had the power to heal him. When Jesus said, Your faith has healed you, He was not saying that the man's faith possessed some power. The man had faith in the Messiah, and it was the Messiah's power that had healed him (cf. 7:50; 17:19). In the same way, if the nation had faith in the Messiah, their faith would have healed them of their spiritual blindness. As a result of the man's healing, he and all the people who saw the miracle praised God.

h. Jesus and Zacchaeus (19:1-10)

A second person in Jericho came to faith in Jesus. Zacchaeus, like the blind man, was considered outside the normal Jewish system because of his activities for Rome as a tax collector (cf. 5:27; 18:9-14). Zacchaeus responded to Jesus' message in precisely the opposite way the rich ruler had responded (18:18-25). Zacchaeus, also wealthy (19:2), knew he was a sinner.

When Jesus called on him, he responded with a greater enthusiasm than Jesus had asked for. This account is also a commentary on Jesus' words that with God all things are possible (18:25-27), for Zacchaeus was a wealthy person who found salvation.

19:1-4. This incident seems ludicrous. Here was Zacchaeus, a wealthy and probably influential man, running ahead of the crowd and climbing a sycamore-fig tree (cf. Amos 7:14) to get a chance to see . . . Jesus. Luke may have been presenting Zacchaeus' actions as a commentary on Jesus' words that unless people become like little children they cannot enter the kingdom of God (Luke 18:17).

19:5-6. Jesus already knew Zacchaeus' name and all about him. He instructed the tax man to come down immediately for Jesus wanted to stay at his house. This was more than Zacchaeus had hoped for, so he welcomed Him gladly. The word "gladly" (chairōn) is literally "rejoicing." Luke used this verb (and the noun chara) nine times (1:14; 8:13; 10:17; 13:17; 15:5, 9, 32; 19:6, 37) to denote an attitude of joy accompanying faith and salvation.

19:7-10. As usual, many complained (began to mutter) because Jesus had gone to be the guest of a "sinner" (cf. 15:1). But Zacchaeus stood up and voluntarily announced that he would give half of what he owned to the poor and repay fourfold all he had wronged. He publicly wanted the people to know that his time with Jesus had changed his life. Interestingly he parted with much of his wealth, similar to what Jesus had asked the rich ruler to do (18:22).

Jesus' words, Today salvation has come to this house, did not imply that the act of giving to the poor had saved Zacchaeus, but that his change in lifestyle evidenced his right relationship before God. Zacchaeus, a son of Abraham by birth, had a right to enter the kingdom because of his connection with Jesus. That was Jesus' mission—to seek and to save those who are lost (cf. 15:5, 9, 24).

i. Jesus' teaching on stewardship of responsibilities (19:11-27)
(Matt. 25:14-30)

This parable brings to a close the section of Jesus' teaching in response to rejection (Luke 12:1–19:27). It also concludes the subsection of Jesus' teaching about the coming kingdom and the attitudes of His disciples (17:11–19:27). Jesus' disciples should be like the grateful ex-leper (17:11-19), persistent in prayer (18:1-14), childlike (18:15-17), like the former blind man (18:35-43), and like Zacchaeus (19:1-10) as opposed to the rich ruler (18:18-25).

This Parable of the 10 Minas sums up Jesus' teaching to the disciples. Each disciple had duties given to him by Jesus, and each was to carry out his responsibilities. But the parable was addressed not only to disciples. It was also addressed to the nation at large, to show that it too had responsibilities. If the nation did not turn to Jesus, it would be punished.

19:11. Jesus gave this parable because . . . the people with Him thought He was going to reinstitute the kingdom immediately. Since they were close to Jerusalem, Jesus wanted to dispel any disappointment on the part of His followers.

19:12-14. The man of noble birth obviously represented Jesus. Because His followers thought the kingdom was to be set up immediately, Jesus said the nobleman in the parable had to go to a distant country to have himself appointed king and then to return. He would have to leave them before the kingdom would be set up. Before leaving, he called 10 of his servants and gave them 10 minas, 1 apiece. A mina was about three months' wages, so its value was considerable. They were to invest the money while he was gone. Another group of people, His subjects, did not want him to be . . . king. Obviously this group represented the religious leaders in particular and the nation in general.

19:15-26. When the king . . . returned, he called the servants in to find out what they had done with the money he had entrusted to them. The first two servants had used the money to be productive for the king. One had earned another 10 minas (v. 16), and the second had earned another 5 minas (v. 18). Each of these servants was commended by the king and given a reward commensurate with the amount of money earned (vv. 17, 19).

Another servant had done nothing with the mina given to him. His words to the king, You are a hard man; you take out what you did not put in and reap what you did not sow, were used against him by the master (v. 22). If he were right then he should have at least banked the money—then the king would have received his money back with interest. The implication was that the servant did not really expect the king to come back. He was not at all concerned about the king's return so he did not bother with the king's business. Matthew related that the third servant was thrown out of the kingdom (Matt. 25:30). This indicates that this servant really belonged to the group of people who did not want the king to reign over them (Luke 19:14). His money was taken away and given to the one who had done the most for the king.

19:27. In contrast with the two servants who had expected the king's return, the enemies of the king were put to death in the king's presence. The analogy of this parable was clear to Jesus' hearers. Jesus was going away to receive a kingship. When He returned, He would establish His kingdom. Until that time His followers were to fulfill the responsibilities He gave them. On His return He would reward the faithful commensurate with their service to Him, and His enemies would be judged before Him.

VI. The Ministry of Jesus in Jerusalem (19:28–21:38)

Jesus' goal was to go to Jerusalem to present Himself to the religious leaders as the Messiah. Now he arrived in Jerusalem and ministered there. This section is divided into two parts: (1) Jesus entered Jerusalem and was presented as the Messiah (19:28-44); (2) He entered the temple and taught there for several days (19:45–21:38). Those present would have clearly understood that He was presenting Himself as the Messiah, capable of bringing in the kingdom.

A. Jesus' entry into Jerusalem as Messiah (19:28-44) (Matt. 21:1-11; Mark 11:1-11; John 12:12-19)

Up to this time Jesus had not sought to be openly called Messiah. But now He allowed it and even encouraged it. Everything He did over the course of these days was designed to call attention to the fact that He is the Messiah.

1. THE PREPARATION FOR ENTRY (19:28-34)

19:28-34. Luke noted that it was now time for Jesus to go up to Jerusalem and He prepared His way for the entry. Jesus had come from Jericho (18:35–19:10) and was a short distance from Jerusalem at Bethphage and Bethany. At that point He stopped until the way could be prepared so that when He entered the city people would know He was presenting Himself as the Messiah. His command to two of His disciples was to find a colt and bring it here. Jesus was fulfilling Zechariah 9:9-10, which predicted the Messiah would ride on a donkey (cf. comments on Matt. 21:2, which refers to a donkey and a colt). As is evident (Luke 19:38) the crowds would understand the message behind the symbolism. Apparently even the owners of the colt understood for they allowed the donkey to go with the disciples when they were told, The Lord needs it.

2. JESUS' ADVANCE INTO THE CITY (19:35-40)

19:35-40. Jesus advanced down the west side of the Mount of Olives (v. 37) toward the city and was praised by the crowd as their Messiah. The act of spreading their cloaks on the road (v. 36) in front of Jesus was a sign of respect. The whole crowd of disciples (mathētōn) began joyfully to praise God . . . for all the miracles (dynameōn, "evidences of spiritual power") they had seen. These believers quoted (v. 38a) from Psalm 118:26, a messianic psalm of praise. The Pharisees understood the meaning of what was going on, for they told Jesus to rebuke His followers, so they would stop calling him Messiah or King.

Jesus responded that there must be some proclamation that He is the Messiah. If not, even inanimate objects (stones) would be called on to testify for Him. All history had pointed toward this single, spectacular event when the Messiah publicly presented Himself to the nation, and God desired that this fact be acknowledged.

3. JESUS' PROPHECY ABOUT JERUSALEM (19:41-44)

19:41-44. Jesus showed compassion on Jerusalem but He also foretold that days would come when it would lie in ruins. Jesus rejected Jerusalem because Jerusalem rejected Him. He wept over the city because its people did not understand the significance of what was going on that day—that national acceptance of Him on that day would bring them peace. Because the people did not recognize the time of God's coming to them (v. 44), the city would be totally destroyed. Roman soldiers did this starting in A.D. 70.

B. Jesus in the temple (19:45–21:38)

Jesus cleansed the temple, disputed there with the religious leaders (20:1–21:4), and then told His disciples what would happen in the end times (21:5-36).

1. JESUS' CLEANSING OF THE TEMPLE (19:45-46)
(MATT. 21:12-13; MARK 11:15-17)

19:45-46. Jesus cleansed the temple twice—once at the beginning of His ministry (John 2:13-22), and again at the end of His ministry. Matthew, Mark, and Luke recorded the latter but said nothing of the former. Because of Jesus' role as Messiah, His bringing ceremonial cleanliness to the nation was logical at both the beginning and the end of His ministry. In both cases His teaching in the temple was disregarded by the religious leaders.

Jesus quoted from Isaiah 56:7 and Jeremiah 7:11 as He was driving out the people who were selling in the temple. Mark adds that the buyers and money changers were also driven out, as well as people who were apparently taking shortcuts through the temple compound in their business dealings (Mark 11:15-16). Money changing was done because only certain coinage was then accepted in the temple from those who bought animals for sacrifices. The religious leaders made money off the system of buying and selling animals for sacrifice (thus making the temple a den of robbers). Also they led the people into mere formalism. A pilgrim traveling to Jerusalem could go to the temple, buy an animal, and offer it as a sacrifice without ever having anything to do with the animal. This led to an impersonalization of the sacrificial system. The commercial system was apparently set up in the area of the temple which had been designated for devout Gentiles to pray and so was disrupting Israel's witness to the surrounding world.

2. JESUS' TEACHING IN THE TEMPLE (19:47–21:38)

The two parts of this section—Jesus disputing in the temple (20:1–21:4) and His teaching His disciples (21:5-36)—are bracketed by an introduction (19:47-48) and a conclusion (21:37-38). The introduction and conclusion show that the people were amazed at His teaching and liked to listen to Him, whereas in contrast the chief priests, leaders, and teachers of the Law wanted to kill Him (19:47).

a. The crowd's delight (19:47-48)

19:47-48. Jesus taught daily in the temple to the delight of the crowds. They hung on His words, but the religious leaders wanted to kill Him. Yet they feared the crowds (cf. 20:19; 22:2; Acts 5:26).

b. Jesus' disputing in the temple (20:1–21:4) (Matt. 21:23–23:37; Mark 11:27–12:44)

As a logical outcome of Jesus' cleansing of the temple, the religious leaders again rejected Him, and conflict arose. Jesus had upset the normal "religious" atmosphere of the temple, which led the religious leaders to question His authority.

20:1-8 (Matt. 21:23-27; Mark 11:27-33). The religious leaders asked Jesus where His authority came from. The chief priests were the temple officials; the teachers of the Law, often called "scribes," were made up of both Pharisees and Sadducees; and the elders may have been laymen who were political leaders. They asked two questions: By what authority was He acting, and who gave Him this authority? (Luke 20:2) The first question dealt with the kind of authority Jesus was using. Was He a prophet, a priest, or a king? No doubt the words doing these things referred to His cleansing the temple. The second question dealt with who was backing Him. Did Jesus believe that He was acting on His own or was He acting for some group?

Jesus responded with a question. He asked them about the authority behind

John's baptism. The religious leaders had disapproved the baptizing work of John, for John had humiliated them and had taken away some allegiance from their religious system (Matt. 3:7-10). Because the crowds venerated John the Baptist, the religious leaders were afraid to deny his authority and therefore refused to answer Jesus' question (Luke 20:7; cf. 19:48). So Jesus therefore refused to tell . . . by what authority He had cleansed the temple. The implication was that He was doing His work with the same authority—God in heaven—by which John the Baptist baptized.

20:9-19 (Matt. 21:33-46; Mark 12:1-12). Jesus then told a parable to describe His authority. A parable about a vine was not new for Israelites. Isaiah had used the figure to refer to the nation (Isa. 5:1-7), and the symbolism would have been clear to the hearers. The owner of a vineyard sent three servants to gain fruit from his vineyard (Luke 20:10-12). But the tenant farmers . . . beat each of the three. Finally he sent his son, whom they killed so that they could gain the inheritance (vv. 13-15). Jesus then asked his listeners a rhetorical question, What then will the owner of the vineyard do to them? He answered His own question—He would kill those tenants and give the vineyard to others (v. 16).

This culminated all of Jesus' messages concerning the fact that Gentiles and outcasts would be added to the kingdom whereas many from Israel would not be allowed to enter. The crowd responded with a strong statement of negation—May this never be! (mē genoito; used several times by Paul in Rom.) They understood the implications of what Jesus was saying: the Jewish system was being set aside because the religious leaders were rejecting Him. Luke pointed out the seriousness of the situation by recording that Jesus looked directly at them and quoted from Psalm 118:22, a verse which noted that a seemingly insignificant thing (a stone thrown away by stone masons) was really the most important thing (this stone became the capstone).

Jesus' point was that He, the most important element in the Jewish nation, was being rejected, but ultimately would be supreme. He also would be the means of judgment (Luke 20:18). The severity of Jesus' words struck home. The teachers of the Law and the chief priests wanted to kill Him because they knew He had spoken this parable against them. But again they feared to take any action because of the people (cf. 19:47-48; 22:2).

20:20-26. Since the religious leaders were afraid to do anything to Jesus because of the people (v. 19), they kept a close watch on Him. They were hoping to catch Him in some teaching that the crowds would not like, which would allow them to prosecute Him legally. Some spies asked Jesus a question about taxes: Is it right for us to pay taxes to Caesar or not? But this question was not merely about money. It pertained to politics and religion as well. If Jesus gave either a yes or a no answer He would lose support. If He said it was proper to pay taxes to Caesar, a foreign ruler (viz., Tiberius Caesar, A.D. 14–37), the zealots (who opposed Roman rule and favored Jewish autonomy) would be offended by His answer. If He answered that it was not proper to pay taxes (which the religious leaders might have suspected because He had been teaching about the kingdom), then the Romans would be displeased and the religious leaders would be able to turn Him over to their authority.

Jesus, pointing to the portrait and inscription of Caesar on a denarius coin (cf. 7:41; 10:35), answered in the affirmative: Give to Caesar what is Caesar's. But He also used the occasion to teach that one should give to God the thing that bears His image—oneself (and to God what is God's).

This astonishing answer silenced the spies (20:26). Interestingly the religious leaders used this incident against Jesus in His trial. But they totally misrepresented His position, charging that Jesus opposed payment of taxes to Caesar (23:2).

20:27-40. The Sadducees denied all supernatural occurrences including resurrection (v. 27; cf. Acts 23:8). Their question on resurrection, therefore, was not to elicit information but to find a way to make Jesus look foolish by presenting an extreme hypothetical case. They posited a situation in which a woman married each of seven brothers after each previous brother had died. The idea behind such an occurrence was the Hebrew concept of the Levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5-10) in which an unmarried man would marry his dead brother's widow who was childless in order to have children in his name. Then the Sadducees asked, At the resurrection whose wife will she be?

First, Jesus said, there will be no marriage in the resurrection (Luke 20:34-36). This showed (a) that the present Age contrasts sharply with the Age to come; and (b) when people are resurrected, they will be like the angels, being God's children and children of the resurrection. Jesus did not say that resurrected people become angels. His point was that they, like angels, will be immortal. Thus there will be no further need for procreation, and the marriage relationship will not be necessary.

Second, Jesus pointed out that there certainly will be a resurrection (vv. 37-38). He referred to an incident when the Lord told Moses that He is the God of the patriarchs (Ex. 3:6). Jesus appealed to Moses because the Sadducees wrongly taught that Moses' teachings did not reveal a resurrection. The statement that the Lord is the God of the patriarchs should have shown the Sadducees that the patriarchs were still alive (He is . . . the God . . . of the living), even though those words were uttered several hundred years after the last patriarch's death. God was preserving them alive for future resurrection.

The teachers of the Law and the Sadducees were at odds with each other because of conflicting beliefs. The former applauded Jesus' refutation of the Sadducees' doctrine (Luke 20:39). The result of the conversation was that everyone was afraid to ask Jesus any more questions.

20:41-44. Jesus then took the offensive and asked a question of the people around Him. The question concerned the nature of the Messiah—How is it that they say the Christ is the Son of David? Jesus then quoted from Psalm 110:1, in which David called the Messiah my Lord and said that He was exalted by being at Yahweh's right hand, the place of prominence. Two points are evident in these words of Jesus. First, the Son of David is also David's Lord (Luke 20:44) by the power of the resurrection. (In Acts 2:34-35 Peter used the same verse from Ps. 110 to prove that Jesus' superiority is based on His resurrection.) Second, David must have realized that the Son, who was to be the Messiah, would be divine, for David called Him Lord.

20:45-47. Jesus' words were designed not only to teach His disciples but also to instruct the crowds (v. 45). Jesus pointed out the dichotomy between what the teachers of the Law taught and what they practiced. Their lives were bound up in greed and pride—they desired: (a) display (flowing robes), (b) attention (greeted in the marketplaces), (c) prominence (important seats in the synagogues and . . . at banquets), and (d) more money, taking from those who did not have much (e.g., widows). Their pompous lengthy prayers were thus hypocritical. Jesus stated that these teachers would be punished most severely. Those who have greater knowledge are held more accountable (James 3:1).

21:1-4. Following naturally what Jesus had just said about the teachers of the Law and their attitude toward widows, He pointed to a poor widow who was putting into the collection all her meager resources (two lepta, each worth about ⅛ cent; cf. 12:59; Mark 12:42). The percentage of what she gave was larger than all the others. So Jesus' point was that her gift, though small, was more because she gave out of her poverty . . . all she had to live on.

c. Jesus' teaching in the temple about the end times (21:5-36)
(Matt. 24:1-44; Mark 13:1-31)

In this section, which parallels the Olivet Discourse (Matt. 24–25), Jesus taught His followers what would happen immediately before His return to set up the kingdom. Being ready for the kingdom was the purpose of this teaching (Luke 21:34-36); thus the Rapture is not in view in this passage. As with all prophecy in Scripture, the teaching had immediate application to the hearers. They were to live righteous lives because of events which would occur in the future.

21:5-7. Some of the disciples were impressed with the temple and were remarking about its beautiful craftsmanship. Jesus' comment that a time was coming when not one stone will be left on another immediately brought a question to the disciples' minds. Their question, recorded by Luke, concerned the destruction of the temple (v. 7). Matthew also recorded another question about the signs of the end of the Age (Matt. 24:3). The disciples wanted to know what things would take place before the temple complex fell.

21:8-19. Jesus told His disciples about three things that would start to occur before the destruction of the temple, by Titus and the Roman army in A.D. 70, and one that would occur later.

First, Jesus said others would claim to be Messiah (v. 8). He gave this warning so that the disciples would not be deceived.

Second, Jesus said that wars would occur (vv. 9-10). When these things happened, the disciples were not to be frightened, for the end would not come right away.

Third, Jesus added that tremendous earthquakes would occur, causing famines (loimoi) and pestilences (limoi; v. 11). But these events do not fit between Jesus' day and the fall of Jerusalem. These fearful events and great signs from heaven refer to the Great Tribulation which will precede the return of the Lord to the earth.

Fourth, Jesus taught that persecution of believers would be common and severe. The disciples did undergo persecution by the authorities (cf. Acts 2–4). Because of Jesus' prediction in Luke 21:9-11, it seems that His words in verses 12-17 refer not only to the situation which would confront the disciples before the fall of Jerusalem but also to what will confront believers during the time of the Great Tribulation (cf. vv. 25-36). The same kinds of persecution would be present at both times—imprisonment (vv. 12-15), betrayal (v. 16), and hatred (v. 17). The persecution the original disciples would experience was a precursor to the ultimate persecution which future disciples would undergo.

Jesus' next two statements (But not a hair of your head will perish, and By standing firm you will save yourselves; vv. 18-19) have confused many. Some interpret these phrases as speaking of spiritual realities in a believer's life. Ultimately even though a believer dies, he or she will be protected eternally by God. However, it appears that Jesus was speaking here of salvation as entering into the kingdom alive (cf. Matt. 24:9-13). To "save yourselves" by "standing firm" means that believers show that they are members of the believing community in opposition to those who turn away from the faith during times of persecution (Matt. 24:10). The ones who are saved are those who are preserved by God's sovereign power (cf. Matt. 24:22).

21:20-24. Jesus then returned to the disciples' original question about when the temple would be destroyed. In these five verses He noted that Gentile domination included the destruction of Jerusalem which would come about when the city was surrounded by armies. Gentile domination would continue until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled (v. 24). The times of the Gentiles' domination over Jerusalem actually began when the Babylonians took the city and the nation into Captivity in 586 B.C. Jerusalem will again fall under Gentile domination in the Tribulation (Zech. 14:1-2) just before the Messiah returns to restore Jerusalem. It is that restoration of which Jesus spoke next (Luke 21:25-28).

21:25-28. Here Jesus first noted that cosmic signs will precede the coming of the Son of Man and will cause people to be terrified. The sun, moon, and stars . . . will be shaken, and the sea will roar and toss, signifying that the world will be in a chaotic state, out of control. Second, Jesus told about the coming of the Son of Man Himself. He drew His terminology from Daniel 7:13-14, in which Daniel saw "one like a Son of Man" coming with clouds and glory and receiving the kingdom from the Ancient of Days (i.e., God the Father). Jesus' point was that the Son of Man will come to receive the kingdom—the same kingdom He had been proclaiming since the beginning of His ministry. When these things begin to occur, His followers will lift up their heads, a symbol of rejoicing, because their redemption (i.e., safety in the kingdom brought by the returning King) will be drawing near.

21:29-33. In the Parable of the Fig Tree Jesus taught that one can tell what is coming by watching the signs. By looking at fig leaves sprouting in April, they know that summer is near. Similarly when the Great Tribulation comes, people will know that the kingdom of God is near.

The clause, this generation (genea) will certainly not pass away until all these things have happened, has caused much controversy. Some think Jesus was telling His disciples that their generation would see the destruction of the temple. That interpretation stems primarily from verses 5-7 in which the discussion pertained to the temple's destruction. However, because of verse 31 (in which Jesus spoke of the coming of the kingdom of God), and because of Matthew 24:34, it seems preferable to say His words refer to the generation living at the time of the cosmological events that will just precede His second coming. That generation will actually see the founding of the kingdom of God—something every generation of Jewish citizens has longed for throughout the nation's history.

21:34-36. Jesus warned His disciples to be ready at all times. Though a believer will be able to anticipate the coming of the kingdom by the signs, it is possible to get so entangled with the affairs of life that some will not be ready for the kingdom when it comes—unexpectedly (v. 34) and universally (v. 35)—and therefore will not enter the kingdom. It was against this wrong attitude that Jesus said, Be careful (v. 34) and be always on the watch (v. 36).

d. The crowd's reaction (21:37-38)

21:37-38. The crowd reacted to Jesus' teaching with amazement. Jesus spent the nights on the Mount of Olives, and each morning returned to the temple in Jerusalem to teach. The people were so taken with His teaching that they would arrive early in the morning to get an opportunity to hear Him. Apparently they were understanding His teachings about the coming of the kingdom in a way they had not understood before.

VII. The Death, Burial, and Resurrection of Jesus (chaps. 22–24)

A. The death and burial of Jesus (chaps. 22–23)

In this section Luke brought out the highpoint of the Messiah's rejection by the religious leaders of the nation, acting for the entire nation and for the world. Luke also emphasized Jesus' innocence in a number of ways not mentioned by the other Gospel writers: (a) Luke recorded that Pilate three times declared Jesus' innocence (23:4, 14, 22). (b) To Pilate's words Luke added the witness of Herod (23:15). (c) Luke contrasted Jesus with Barabbas, who had been put into prison because of insurrection and murder (23:25). (d) Jesus was declared to be innocent by the thief who confessed his sin and the justice of his own punishment (23:39-43). (e) The centurion confessed that Jesus was righteous (23:47). (f) The multitude beat their breasts, an act which showed that they knew He was innocent (23:48).

1. THE AGREEMENT BY JUDAS TO BETRAY JESUS (22:1-6)

(MATT. 26:1-5, 14-16; MARK 14:1-2, 10-11; JOHN 11:45-53)

22:1-6. Luke recorded that the death of Christ occurred at the time of the Passover, the annual celebration of the time lambs had been slain in Egypt, when God spared the Israelites but punished the Egyptians (Ex. 12:1-28). On the relationship of the Feast of Unleavened Bread to the Passover, see comments on Luke 22:7 and John 19:14. The religious leaders were afraid of the people (cf. Luke 19:47-48; 20:19), but were still trying to get rid of Jesus. The initiative for the betrayal rested on Judas. Satan entered Judas (cf. John 13:27) and he was willing to betray Jesus for money. Satan's taking part in Jesus' death was actually his own downfall, for through dying Jesus conquered Satan and death (Col. 2:15; Heb. 2:14).

2. THE PREPARATION BY JESUS FOR DEATH (22:7-46)

Luke's account of Jesus' preparation for His death includes two parts: Jesus' final ministry to His close disciples at the Passover meal (vv. 7-38), and Jesus' final hours praying alone in the garden (vv. 39-46).

a. Jesus at the Passover meal (22:7-38) (Matt. 26:17-35; Mark 14:12-31; John 13:1-38)

The Synoptic Gospels speak of the meal Jesus ate with His disciples as the Passover meal. But the Gospel of John indicates Jesus died on the cross at the exact time that lambs were slain in preparation for the nation's Passover meals (John 19:14). But this can be explained by the fact that the Feast of Unleavened Bread was a seven-day feast following the one-day Feast of the Passover, but sometimes all eight days were called "the Passover" (Luke 2:41; 22:1; Acts 12:3-4) or the seven days were the "Passover Week" (John 19:14) A different explanation is that Jews in the first century followed two calendars in observing the Passover. According to this view Jesus and His disciples observed one date, eating the Passover meal before His crucifixion, whereas most of the nation, including the Pharisees, followed the other calendar in which the Passover lambs were slain on the very day of Jesus' death.

(1) The disciples' preparation for the meal. 22:7-13. Even during these final preparations for His death Jesus was doing miraculous things. In this instance He told Peter and John exactly what they would find when they went about the preparations of the Passover. It would be easy to recognize a man carrying a jar of water because women usually carried the water from the wells to their houses. The two disciples were to tell the person who owned the house that the Teacher wanted to use the guest room to eat the Passover with His disciples. The owner of the house must have been a believer in Jesus, for he let the disciples make preparations for the meal at his house.

(2) Jesus' teaching during the meal (22:14-38). 22:14-20. Jesus taught His men that His death would mean the beginning of the New Covenant. The symbolism about the bread and the fruit of the vine was given to show that Jesus' body and blood were necessary to institute the New Covenant.

Jesus' final teaching about the kingdom occurred at this final feast. Throughout the Book of Luke feasting has symbolic value. Jesus and His disciples, now called apostles (cf. 6:13; 9:10; 17:5; 24:10), were reclined at the table.

Jesus enjoyed the fellowship of those men who had believed His message of the kingdom. They were the ones who had followed Him, knowing that He was truly the Messiah. They were the ones who had left everything in order to follow Him. They had been called to a radical form of discipleship. Jesus announced that this was the last Passover He would eat with them until all that it means would find fulfillment in the kingdom of God (22:16; cf. v. 18). Many events in the Old Testament, including the Passover, pointed toward the ministry of Jesus and the kingdom He was to inaugurate. When His kingdom would arrive, the Passover would be fulfilled for God would have brought His people safely into their rest.

The bread and the wine were common, not only at Passover meals but also at every meal in that culture. Those elements symbolized His "body," the sacrifice for the entire nation, and His "blood." He was the sacrificial Lamb who was to take away the sin of Israel and of the entire world (John 1:29). The New Covenant (spoken of many times in the OT but highlighted in Jer. 31:31-34), which was a prerequisite for the Kingdom Age, was instituted by Jesus' sacrifice (Luke 22:20). The New Covenant provided for the regeneration of the Israelite nation and the Holy Spirit's indwelling individuals in the nation. Believers in the Church Age also participate in those spiritual blessings of regeneration and the indwelling Spirit (1 Cor. 11:25-26; 2 Cor. 3:6; Heb. 8:6-7).

22:21-23. Jesus now revealed that the betrayer was one of the gathered disciples who was eating the Passover meal. Judas' accountability and God's sovereign plan for Jesus' death are seen together (v. 22). Jesus had to die, for His death was the basis of salvation for all mankind and the only means for lifting the curse of sin. But the betrayer was accountable for his actions. Apparently the disciples had trusted Judas completely, for they had no idea who would do such a thing (v. 23).

22:24-30. The disciples' arguing about which of them was considered to be greatest is surprising in view of what Jesus had just said about one of them betraying Him. Jesus then told them that such thinking is like that of pagans. The followers of the Messiah should not think about such things. Rather than wanting to be the greatest, His followers should each desire to be the one who serves. For Jesus was among them as One who serves (diakonōn, "serves in a lowly way," v. 27). The disciples should desire to be like Jesus. Ultimately they will have places of honor in the kingdom because they were with Jesus in His trials. They will fellowship with Him, and sit on thrones judging Israel's 12 tribes (cf. Matt. 19:28).

22:31-34. Jesus revealed that Peter would deny Him three times that same night, before the rooster crows. However, He assured Peter that in spite of Satan's desire to sift the disciples (you is pl. in the Gr.) like wheat (i.e., to put them through difficult times), Peter's faith would not fail. He would be restored (turned back), and would be the leader of the disciples (i.e., the leader of the group of brothers). Peter protested, thinking that he was strong, stating that he would even go to prison or to death for Jesus.

22:35-38. Jesus pointed out to His disciples that they had never lacked anything while they were with Him and were sent out to minister for Him (cf. 9:3). However, now that He was to be taken away from them, they would have to make preparations for their ministries including a purse . . . a bag, and . . . a sword for personal protection. Jesus was about to die and be numbered with the transgressors, a quotation from Isaiah 53:12.

When the disciples responded that they had two swords, Jesus replied, That is enough. This response has been interpreted in at least four ways: (1) Some understand the words as a rebuke to the disciples. If that were the case, then Jesus was saying, "Enough of this kind of talk!" (Leon Morris, The Gospel according to St. Luke: An Introduction and Commentary, p. 310) (2) Others understand the words to denote the fact that even two swords are enough to show human inadequacy at stopping God's plan for the death of Christ. Swords could not stop God's purpose and plan. (3) Jesus may simply have been saying that two swords were adequate for the 12 of them. (4) Others see the clause in conjuction with the quotation from Isaiah and understand Jesus to mean that by possessing two swords they would be classified by others as transgressors or criminals. This fourth view seems preferable.

b. Jesus on the Mount of Olives (22:39-46)

The account of Jesus' praying in Gethsemane is recorded in the Synoptic Gospels but not in John. However, John recorded that Jesus went to "an olive grove" because Jesus "often met there with His disciples" and Judas "knew the place" (John 18:1-2). There may be deep signficance to the fact that in some of His final hours Jesus faced temptation (Luke 22:46) in a garden. Man fell into sin because of temptation in a garden (Gen. 3). And man's deliverance from sin comes about in spite of further temptation in a garden. Jesus, the "last Adam" (1 Cor. 15:45), did not fall into temptation but followed the will of God which the first Adam failed to do.

22:39-44. Luke says the place was the Mount of Olives. Matthew and Mark refer to the place as Gethsemane, which means "olive press." The "garden" was a grove of olive trees on the Mount of Olives (John 18:1, 3).

Jesus . . . prayed fervently for the trial to pass, but He submitted Himself to His Father. Because the disciples slept, Jesus was alone praying and being buffeted by the temptation to forsake the Father's plan, which was that the Son must go to death and bear the sins of the whole world. The words of His prayer showed that He was concerned not with His own interests but with the interests of the Father (Luke 22:42). Only Luke recorded that an angel ministered to Jesus in the garden (v. 43). Jesus was in anguish with His sweat being like drops of blood falling to the ground. Luke may have been alluding to God's words to Adam that he would earn his food by the sweat of his brow (Gen. 3:19).

22:45-46. Jesus found His disciples . . . asleep, exhausted from sorrow. The disciples were most depressed because of Jesus' teaching that He would die. They were not only in physical danger, which was bound to come on them, but also they may have faced spiritual danger as the temptation raged in the garden. Twice Jesus told them to pray that they would not fall into temptation (vv. 40, 46).

3. THE BETRAYAL OF JESUS (22:47-53)
(MATT. 26:47-56; MARK 14:43-50; JOHN 18:3-11)

22:47-53. Luke recorded three elements in the betrayal and arrest of Jesus. First, Jesus knew that Judas would betray Him (vv. 47-48). A large crowd including the religious leaders (v. 52) and soldiers (John 18:12) came into the grove with Judas leading them. Judas had agreed on a sign for the people who had come with him—he would kiss the One they were to arrest. Jesus, by His words, showed that

He already knew all about the betrayal, including Judas' secret sign.

Second, Jesus had compassion for people even in the midst of His own arrest (Luke 22:49-51). After Peter cut off the ear of the high priest's servant (named Malchus, John 18:10), using one of the two swords the disciples possessed (Luke 22:38), Jesus healed the man.

Third, Jesus pointed up the hypocrisy of the religious leaders (vv. 52-53). Jesus asked them why they had not arrested Him during the day as He taught in the temple. The reason was obvious, that out of fear of the people they looked for a way to arrest Him secretly (19:48; 20:19; 22:2). Thus He could tell them, This is your hour—when darkness reigns (v. 53). Not only were they coming out under the cover of darkness, but they were also acting as the forces of darkness to kill the Messiah. The garden experience must have ended by about 2:30 A.M., for the six trials of Jesus were completed by morning and Jesus was on the cross by 9:00 A.M. The arrest in the garden was illegal for it was done at night and was accomplished through a hired accuser.

4. THE TRIALS OF JESUS (22:54–23:25)

Jesus faced six trials in all: three before Jewish officials, and three before Roman officials (see the list of these trials at Matt. 26:57-58). Luke recorded only two of the three Jewish trials.

a. At the house of the high priest (22:54-65) (Matt. 26:57-75; Mark 14:53-54, 65-72; John 18:12-18, 25-27)

22:54. Jesus was taken into the house of the high priest, who was Caiaphas (Matt. 26:57; John 18:13; cf. comments on Luke 3:2, and see the chart on Annas' family at Acts 4:5-6). But Jesus first was taken to Caiaphas' influential father-in-law, Annas (John 18:13). Peter, remaining true to his word up to this point (Luke 22:33), followed the Lord even though it could have meant death for him.

22:55-62. Within several hours Peter denied Jesus three times, as He had foretold (v. 34). Peter's denials got progressively more vehement (vv. 57-58, 60). After the rooster crowed, Jesus turned and looked straight at Peter. The combination of events along with Jesus' look caused Peter to remember the words Jesus spoke earlier in the evening. Peter realized what he had done. His bitter weeping showed he was heartbroken over the fact he had denied Jesus.

22:63-65. While at the house of the high priest, Jesus began to be mistreated by the men who were guarding Him. They mocked Him and beat Him. Blindfolding Him, they mockingly asked Him to prophesy by telling who hit Him. Apparently they knew of His claims, but they had a misunderstanding of true prophecy.

b. At the council of the elders (22:66-71) (Matt. 26:59-66; Mark 14:55-64; John 18:19-24)

22:66-67a. The council of the elders (also known as the Sanhedrin) was the Jewish nation's official judicial body. This council was their final court of appeals. If the council found Jesus guilty, it was the last word—the nation found Him guilty. They met at daybreak since it was illegal to assemble at night. The council wanted to know if Jesus was the Christ, that is, if Jesus was truly presenting Himself as the Messiah. At this point they were not interested in other charges. Since the council knew that Jesus had been presenting Himself as the Messiah, they may have been giving Him an opportunity to recant. Or perhaps they were trying to shame Him in front of His followers.

22:67b-70. Jesus affirmed His authority as Messiah, the One who, after His death, resurrection, and Ascension, would be seated at the right hand of the mighty God, the place of honor (cf. Ps. 110:1; Acts 2:33; 5:31; Eph. 1:20; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22). Also He plainly told the council that He is the Son of God.

22:71. The council decided they had received all the testimony they needed. In their view Jesus was guilty of blasphemy. So they were ready to hand Him over to the Roman authorities. The council could give a guilty verdict, but the Jews at that time were not allowed to impose the death penalty. Only Rome could sentence to death. Even though Jesus had performed messianic miracles, the leaders of the nation refused to believe. They acted on behalf of the nation in rejecting Christ.

c. Before Pilate (23:1-7)
(Matt. 27:1-2, 11-14; Mark 15:1-5; John 18:28-38)

23:1-7. The council agreed to take Jesus to the Roman authorities. On arriving before Pilate, governor of Judea (3:1; cf. 13:1), the Jewish authorities charged Him falsely. They said He opposed paying taxes to Caesar, but Jesus had said the opposite (20:25). And the blasphemy charge—He claims to be Christ, a king—was worded to sound as if Jesus was an insurrectionist (23:2). Pilate stated clearly that Jesus was innocent (v. 4). However, because the Jewish leaders kept insisting that Jesus was guilty, Pilate sent Him to Herod, "tetrarch of Galilee" (3:1), who was also in Jerusalem at that time.

d. Before Herod (23:8-12)

23:8-12. Jesus had told Pilate who He is (v. 3), but He repeatedly refused to answer Herod who merely wanted to see Him perform some miracle. Herod showed his true feelings toward Jesus by joining in the mockery, dressing Him up as a false king. Herod then sent Jesus back to Pilate, without passing any judgment on the case.

e. Before Pilate for sentencing (23:13-25)

23:13-17. Pilate told the people there was really nothing he could do but punish Jesus and release Him because he found no basis for the charges against Him. Jesus had done nothing to deserve death. (V. 17, missing from many mss., is not in the NIV.)

23:18-25. In spite of the fact that Jesus had been proved by the Roman authorities to have done nothing deserving of death, the Jews yelled out that a known insurrectionist, Barabbas, should be released in place of Jesus. Amazingly the people were willing to have an insurrectionist and a murderer in their midst rather than the Messiah. They would rather be with a well-known sinner than with the One who could forgive their sins. Pilate desired to release Jesus, affirming His innocence for a third time, but he finally gave in to their demand . . . and surrendered Jesus to their will.

5. THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS (23:26-49)

Crucifixion was a common method of carrying out the death sentence in the Roman Empire. It was probably the most cruel and painful method of death the Romans knew. Crucifixion was reserved for the worst criminals; by law a Roman citizen could not be crucified. Crucifixion was usually a long slow process, but Jesus died in a remarkably short period of time for He voluntarily "breathed His last" (v. 46).

23:26-31. A man named Simon, from the town of Cyrene in North Africa, was forced to carry Jesus' cross part of the way to the Crucifixion site. On the way Jesus warned the people of their coming persecution. Because Jesus was going to the cross, the kingdom was being postponed and times of tribulation would come on the nation (cf. Hosea 10:8; Rev. 6:15-17). Jesus' message was being rejected when He was physically present. How much more it would be rejected in coming years! (Luke 23:31)

23:32-43. Luke did not state, as did Matthew and John, how the events of Jesus' death fulfilled Old Testament Scriptures. Luke's purpose, instead, was to show that Jesus was the forgiving Messiah even as He died. Jesus asked the Father to forgive those who were killing Him (v. 34), and He forgave one of the men sentenced to die with Him (v. 43). Even in death Jesus had power to make people right with God. And yet the rulers . . . sneered (v. 35) the soldiers . . . mocked (vv. 36-37), and one of the criminals crucified with Him insulted Him (v. 39).

23:44-49. Luke noted four things that occurred at the time Jesus died. First, two symbolic events took place while Jesus was on the cross. Darkness came over the whole land for three hours, from the sixth hour (noon) until the ninth hour (3:00 P.M.). Jesus had already told those who arrested Him that "this is your hour—when darkness reigns" (22:53). Darkness was reigning because of His crucifixion. The other symbolic event was the tearing in two of the curtain of the temple, which separated the holy of holies from the rest of the temple. The curtain divided people from the place where God had localized His presence. The tearing from top to bottom (Matt. 27:51) symbolized the fact that now, because of Jesus' death, people had freer access to God as they no longer had to go through the sacrificial system (cf. Rom. 5:2; Eph. 2:18; 3:12). Jesus was the only Sacrifice needed to enable people to have a proper relationship with God.

Second, Luke noted that Jesus' death occurred because He willed it. Breathing His last (Luke 23:46), He voluntarily gave up His life (John 10:15, 17-18).

Third, even a Roman centurion noted that Jesus was a righteous Man, that is, not guilty (Luke 23:47). He too praised God, as did many others in Luke's Gospel.

Fourth, the people who witnessed His death mourned (vv. 48-49).

6. THE BURIAL OF JESUS (23:50-56)
(MATT. 27:57-61; MARK 15:42-47; JOHN 19:38-42)

23:50-56. All four Gospel writers presented details about Jesus' burial in order to demonstrate that Jesus was truly dead. All the preparations for His burial would have been unnecessary if Jesus had not really died. The death of the Messiah was needed or there could not have been the Resurrection.

Interestingly whereas the council had demanded Jesus' death one member . . . Joseph, disagreed. Waiting for the kingdom of God, he believed that Jesus is the Messiah. He was a secret disciple of Jesus (Matt. 27:57; John 19:38). Out of love for Jesus, he buried Him in his own tomb (Matt. 27:60).

Jesus died on the Preparation Day (which most assume was Friday) before the Sabbath.

B. The resurrection and appearances of Jesus (chap. 24)

The final chapter of Luke records the experiences of a number of people who had firsthand experiences with the risen Messiah. In each case the people were depressed because of Jesus' death. But after meeting with Him, they were joyful and praised God. (See the list of Jesus' post-resurrection events at Matt. 28:1-4.)

1. THE WOMEN AND THE APOSTLES (24:1-12)

24:1-9. The first people to learn of the resurrection of Jesus were the women who had been faithful in following Him. They found out about the Resurrection first because of their devotion to Him. For after His death they brought more spices for His burial on the first day of the week (cf. 23:55-56). They did not find the body they were looking for. Instead they saw two men in clothes that gleamed like lightning, an obvious reference to angelic beings. These men reminded them of the words Jesus had spoken about His crucifixion and resurrection (9:31; 18:31-34). The women went to report to the apostles and others what they had seen (24:9).

24:10-12. The apostles did not believe the report the women brought them because their words seemed . . . like nonsense. This was because they had seen Jesus' death and had seen His body placed in the grave. But Peter ran to the tomb and found what the women had described. Still he did not understand what had happened.

2. JESUS' APPEARANCES TO HIS FOLLOWERS (24:13-49)

In these two appearances—to two men (vv. 13-35) and to the gathered disciples (vv. 36-49)—Jesus taught His followers from the Old Testament the things that had been accomplished among them. It was not until after Jesus had explained from the Old Testament that the Messiah had to die that His followers began to understand what had occurred the past few days.

a. Jesus' appearance to the two men (24:13-35) (Mark 16:12-13)

24:13-16. Two of Jesus' followers were walking to Emmaus, which is about seven miles (northwest) from Jerusalem. They were talking . . . about the things that had happened, that is, the report that Jesus had been resurrected (vv. 19-24). When Jesus joined them, they did not recognize Him.

24:17-24. When Jesus asked them to tell Him what they were discussing, the men related the view about Jesus that most of the nation believed at that time. The men, one of whom was Cleopas, said they were talking about Jesus of Nazareth. Cleopas commented that their fellow companion must be the only one living in all of Jerusalem who did not know what had happened. By this question Luke got across the point that Jesus' ministry and death were known to everyone in the city and in most of the nation. The entire nation was responsible to accept the Messiah.

The two men added that the chief priests and our rulers handed Him over to . . . death. Along with many others these two men thought that Jesus was the One who was going to redeem Israel, that is, be the Messiah and bring in the kingdom (cf. Simeon's words in 2:30 and Anna's in 2:38). They even related that they had heard a report of the Resurrection directly from some . . . women. But despite all this, their faces were downcast (24:17).

24:25-27. Jesus chided them for not understanding and believing. He explained from Moses and all the Prophets what had been said about Him. He implied that these disciples should have understood from the Old Testament what had happened.

24:28-35. It was not until after Jesus had broken bread with them that their eyes were opened and they recognized Him. Their experience with Jesus caused them to hurry back to Jerusalem (seven miles) and affirm the Resurrection to the Eleven and others who were meeting together. The two men now acknowledged the truth of the reports about Jesus' resurrection for they had recognized Him themselves. The disciples who were meeting together now had at least three reports of the Resurrection: the women, Peter, and Cleopas and his companion. But still they did not understand (cf. v. 38).

b. Jesus' appearance to the gathered followers (24:36-49)
(Matt. 28:16-20; Mark 16:14-18; John 20:19-23)

In this appearance three things about Jesus are evident.

24:36-43. First, Jesus proved to His followers that He had really been resurrected. Not only did He stand in their presence so they could see Him and His wounds (vv. 39-40), but He also ate food (a piece of broiled fish) before them to show that He was not a ghost.

24:44-47. Second, Jesus showed His followers all the facts written . . . in the Old Testament about the Messiah. The Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms are the three divisions of the Old Testament sometimes referred to in Jesus' day. (More often, however, Moses and the Prophets were said to comprise the OT; e.g., v. 27.) In other words He showed them from different parts of the Old Testament (e.g., Deut. 18:15; Pss. 2:7; 16:10; 22:14-18; Isa. 53; 61:1) that He is the Messiah and that He must suffer and rise from the dead (Luke 24:46; cf. v. 26). Because of His death and resurrection, the message of repentance and forgiveness of sins could be preached in His name to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem for they were witnesses of His death and His rising from the dead. This became the outline for Luke in his second book (cf. Acts 1:8).

24:48-49. Jesus commanded His followers to remain in the city of Jerusalem until they had received power from on high, a clear reference to the Holy Spirit (cf. Acts 1:8), who was promised by the Father.

3. JESUS' PARTING FROM HIS FOLLOWERS (24:50-53)
(MARK 16:19-20)

24:50-53. In the vicinity of Bethany, that is, on the Mount of Olives, Jesus was taken up into heaven (cf. Acts 1:9-11). The disciples responded with worship and great joy and kept praising God in the temple. As seen frequently in Luke, believers repeatedly responded to Jesus with joy (cf. comments on Luke 2:18) and praise. This attitude set the stage for Luke's next volume which began with Jesus' followers remaining in Jerusalem until the Holy Spirit came (Acts 1:4-14).

INTRODUCTION

Authorship

Internal evidence. In the strict sense of the term, the Fourth Gospel is anonymous. No name of its author is given in the text. This is not surprising because a Gospel differs in literary form from an epistle or letter. The letters of Paul each begin with his name, which was the normal custom of letter writers in the ancient world. None of the human authors of the four Gospels identified himself by name. But that does not mean one cannot know who the authors were. An author may indirectly reveal himself within the writing, or his work may be well known in tradition as coming from him.

Internal evidence supplies the following chain of connections regarding the author of the Fourth Gospel. (1) In John 21:24 the word "them" refers to the whole Gospel, not to just the last chapter. (2) "The disciple" in 21:24 was "the disciple whom Jesus loved" (21:7). (3) From 21:7 it is certain that the disciple whom Jesus loved was one of seven persons mentioned in 21:2 (Simon Peter, Thomas, Nathanael, the two sons of Zebedee, and two unnamed disciples). (4) "The disciple whom Jesus loved" was seated next to the Lord at the Last Supper, and Peter motioned to him (13:23-24). (5) He must have been one of the Twelve since only they were with the Lord at the Last Supper (cf. Mark 14:17; Luke 22:14). (6) In the Gospel, John was closely related to Peter and thus appears to be one of the inner three (cf. John 20:2-10; Mark 5:37-38; 9:2-3; 14:33). Since James, John's brother, died in the year A.D. 44, he was not the author (Acts 12:2). (7) "The other disciple" (John 18:15-16) seems to refer to the "disciple whom Jesus loved" since he is called this in 20:2. (8) The "disciple whom Jesus loved" was at the cross (19:26), and 19:35 seems to refer to him. (9) The author's claim, "We have seen His glory" (1:14), was the claim of someone who was an eyewitness (cf. 1 John 1:1-4).

Putting all of these facts together makes a good case for the author of the Fourth Gospel having been John, one of the sons of a fisherman named Zebedee.

External evidence. The external evidence is the traditional ascription of authorship which has been well known in the church. Polycarp (ca. A.D. 69–ca. A.D. 155) spoke of his contact with John. Irenaeus (ca. 130–ca. 200), the bishop of Lyons, heard Polycarp and testified that "John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, had himself published a Gospel during his residence in Ephesus in Asia" (Against Heresies 3. 1). Polycrates, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and other later fathers support this tradition. Eusebius was specific that Matthew and John of the apostles wrote the two Gospels which bear their specific names (The Ecclesiastical History 3. 24. 3-8).

Place of Origin. The external tradition is strong that John came to Ephesus after Paul had founded the church and that he labored in that city for many years (cf. Eusebius The Ecclesiastical History 3. 24. 1). Supporting this tradition is the evidence of Revelation 1:9-11. When John was in exile on Patmos, an island off the coast of Asia Minor, he wrote to seven Asian churches, the first of which was Ephesus. That the Fourth Gospel was originally published at Ephesus is a good probability.

Date. The date for the Gospel of John was probably between A.D. 85 and 95. Some critics have attempted to assign a date as late as A.D. 150 on the basis of the book's alleged similarities to Gnostic writings or because of a supposed long development of church theology. Archeological finds supporting the authenticity of the text of John (e.g., John 4:11; 5:2-3), word studies (e.g., synchrōntai, 4:9), manuscript discoveries (e.g., P^{52}), and the Dead Sea Scrolls have given powerful support to an early dating for John. So it is common today to find nonconservative scholars arguing for a date as early as A.D. 45–66. An early date is possible. But this Gospel has been known in the church as the "Fourth" one, and the early church fathers believed that it was written when John was an old man. Therefore a date between 85 and 95 is best. John 21:18, 23 require the passing of some time, with Peter becoming old and John outliving him.

Purpose. The purpose of the Gospel of John, stated in 20:31, was to record Jesus' "signs" so that readers would come to believe in Him. Doubtless the author had other purposes as well. Some have argued that John wrote against synagogue Judaism, or the Gnostics, or the followers of John the Baptist. Some think John wrote to supplement the other Gospels. John's Gospel has a clear evangelistic purpose (as do the other Gospels), so it is no accident that it has been greatly used in the history of the church for that purpose.

The Glory of the Fourth Gospel. In introductions to the Fourth Gospel many writers have a section entitled "The Problem of the Fourth Gospel." The Fourth Gospel has been the great problem in modern New Testament studies. But what is that problem? One critic claimed many years ago that Jesus in the Synoptics (Matthew, Mark, Luke) is historical but not divine, and that in the Fourth Gospel He is divine but not historical. This, however, is clearly an unwarranted distinction, for the Gospel of John begins with a plain statement of the full deity of the Word made flesh (1:1, 14). And the Gospel nearly ends with Thomas' confession, "My Lord and my God" (20:28). Jesus Christ is both "divine" (Deity) and historical (One who actually lived on the earth). So what is a problem to many critics is actually the chief glory of the church.

Also, contrary to what some have argued, the Synoptic writers, as well as John, present a divine Messiah. But John's Gospel is so clear and pointed in his Christology that his theology has greatly enriched the church. The text, "the Word became flesh" (1:14), became the central focal point of the early church fathers' meditation and study. John presented the Incarnation—God manifest in the flesh—as the foundation of the gospel. This is the "glory," not the "problem," of the Fourth Gospel.

John's Distinctive Portrait. When one compares the Gospel of John with the other three Gospels, he is struck by the distinctiveness of John's presentation. John does not include Jesus' genealogy, birth, baptism, temptation, casting out of demons, parables, transfiguration, instituting of the Lord's Supper, His agony in Gethesemane, or His Ascension. John's presentation of Jesus stresses His ministry in Jerusalem, the feasts of the Jewish nation, Jesus' contacts with individuals in private conversations (e.g., chaps. 3–4; 18:28–19:16), and His ministry to His disciples (chaps. 13–17). The major body of the Gospel is contained in a "Book of Signs" (2:1–12:50) which embraces seven miracles or "signs" which proclaim Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God. This "Book of Signs" also contains great discourses of Jesus which explain and proclaim the significance of the signs. For example, following the feeding of the 5,000 (6:1-15), Jesus revealed Himself as the Bread of Life which the heavenly Father gives for the life of the world (6:25-35). Another notable and exclusive feature of the Fourth Gospel is the series of "I am" statements that were made by Jesus (cf. 6:35; 8:12; 10:7, 9, 11, 14; 11:25; 14:6; 15:1, 5).

The distinctiveness of this Gospel must be kept in perspective. The Gospels were not intended as biographies. Each Gospel writer selected from a much larger pool of information the material which would serve his purpose. It has been estimated that if all the words from the lips of Jesus cited in Matthew, Mark, and Luke were read aloud, the amount of time taken would be only about three hours. Since the ministry of Jesus lasted about three years, a three-hour sample of His teaching is a small amount. Each Gospel records certain miracles or parables and

Jesus' Seven "Signs" in the Gospel of John

1. Changing water into wine in Cana (2:1-11)
2. Healing an official's son in Capernaum (4:46-54)
3. Healing an invalid at the Pool of Bethesda in Jerusalem (5:1-18)
4. Feeding the 5,000 near the Sea of Galilee (6:5-14)
5. Walking on the water of the Sea of Galilee (6:16-21)
6. Healing a blind man in Jerusalem (9:1-7)
7. Raising dead Lazarus in Bethany (11:1-45)

2. "I am the Light of the world" (8:12).
3. "I am the Gate for the sheep" (10:7; cf. v. 9).
4. "I am the Good Shepherd" (10:11, 14).
5. "I am the Resurrection and the Life" (11:25).
6. "I am the Way and the Truth and the Life" (14:6).
7. "I am the true Vine" (15:1; cf. v. 5).

omits others. The focus of the Gospels is the good news of Jesus' death and resurrection. The Gospels have been called "Passion narratives with extended introductions." That is, they center on Christ's death (e.g., Mark 11–16) with only enough information (e.g., Mark 1–10) to explain the nature of the One who ministered and died.

The following facts are known about John's relationship to the Synoptic Gospels. John, Zebedee's son, was Peter's co-worker in Jerusalem during the early years of the church (Acts 3:1–4:23; 8:14; 12:1-2). Further, John was called one of the "reputed . . . pillars" of the Jerusalem church (Gal. 2:9). The Jerusalem church was led by the apostles, and James the brother of Jesus with Peter and John often took the initiative (Acts 3:1; 4:3-21; 8:14-24; 15:7-11, 13-21). During the early years of the Jerusalem church a certain fixed core of apostolic teaching and preaching developed. After a great multitude were converted, "they devoted themselves to the apostles' teaching" (Acts 2:42). Later the number of men who believed grew to about 5,000 (Acts 4:4). It would be necessary for a system of instruction to be set up. This would center around Jesus' messianic fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies, particularly His ministry and Passion. In particular the commands of Jesus—His "oral Torah"—were to be taught (Matt. 28:20).

According to fairly strong church tradition, Mark's Gospel is directly related to Peter's preaching. Acts 10:36-43 seems to reinforce this tradition, for many have seen the Marcan outline in this example of Peter's preaching. Since Peter's preaching is basically the outline and content of the Gospel of Mark, John—having been with Peter for many years—would have been completely familiar with this body of truth.

This core of early apostolic Jerusalem preaching and teaching came to be written down by Mark who helped Peter in his later ministry. After John was in Jerusalem for many years (perhaps 20) he went to Asia Minor and settled in Ephesus. When John wrote his Gospel he provided, by the Spirit of God, a rich supplement to the early Jerusalem core. Thus John's distinctive portrait of Jesus contains 93 percent original material in comparison to the Synoptics. As John wrote, he was aware that even his contribution contained only a small fraction of what could be said (John 20:30-31; 21:25). (For more on the interrelatedness of the Gospels see the Introduction to Matthew and the Introduction to Mark.)

The Text. The Greek text of the Fourth Gospel, as well as that of the entire New Testament, is in very good condition. The reader of the NIV will notice certain changes in some places in comparison to the KJV. This reflects the fact that in the years since the publication of the KJV in 1611 new manuscripts and new theories pertaining to textual transmission have enabled scholars to do a better job in ascertaining what the original writings, though not extant, actually said. The two most notable places where the NIV varies from the KJV in John are 5:3b-4 (which is in the NIV marg.) and 7:53–8:11 (which is set off from the main body of the NIV text). These will be discussed in the commentary.

The Structure and Theme. The key word in the Gospel of John is "believe" (pisteuō), which occurs 98 times. The Greek noun "faith" (pistis) does not occur. (A few times, however, the NIV translates the Gr. verb with the Eng. "put . . . faith in.") The Greek verb pisteuō is frequently used in the present tense and in participial forms. Apparently John wanted to stress an active, continuous, and vital trust in Jesus. The book can be divided into the following main sections: Prologue (1:1-18), Book of Signs (1:19–12:50), Farewell Instructions (chaps. 13–17), Passion and Resurrection (chaps. 18–20), Epilogue (chap. 21). The Prologue sets forth the theological introduction, which enables readers to understand that the words and deeds of Jesus are the words and deeds of God manifest in the flesh. The Book of Signs records seven miracles which reveal the Father's glory in the Son. The miracles with their explanatory discourses progressively draw out two responses: faith, and unbelief and hardening in sin.

As Jesus' public ministry closed, irrational unbelief was the people's major response (12:37). Jesus in His farewell instructions prepared His own for His coming death and His followers' future ministry. The culmination of unbelief is evident in the Passion section, and the faith of the disciples is evident in the Resurrection account. The Epilogue completes the Gospel by showing the plans of the Lord for His disciples.

I. The Prologue (1:1-18)

All four Gospels begin by placing Jesus within a historical setting, but the Gospel of John is unique in the way it opens. The Book of Matthew begins with the genealogy of Jesus that connects Him to David and Abraham. Mark starts with the preaching of John the Baptist. Luke has a dedication of his work to Theophilus and follows that with a prediction of the birth of John the Baptist. But John begins with a theological prologue. It is almost as if John had said, "I want you to consider Jesus in His teaching and deeds. But you will not understand the good news of Jesus in its fullest sense unless you view Him from this point of view. Jesus is God manifest in the flesh, and His words and deeds are those of the God-Man."

The prologue contains many of the major themes of the Gospel which are later reintroduced and developed more fully. The key terms include "life" (v. 4), "light" (v. 4), "darkness" (v. 5), "witness" (v. 7), "true" (v. 9), "world" (v. 9), "Son" (v. 14), "Father" (v. 14), "glory" (v. 14), "truth" (v. 14). Two other key theological terms are "the Word" (v. 1) and "grace" (v. 14), but these important words are used in John only in this theological introduction. "Word" (Logos) does occur elsewhere in the Gospel but not as a Christological title.

A. The Logos in eternity and time (1:1-5)

1:1. As far back as man can think, in the beginning . . . the Word was existing. The term "Word" is the common Greek word logos, which meant "speaking, a message, or words." "Logos" was widely used in Greek philosophical teaching as well as in Jewish wisdom literature and philosophy. John chose this term because it was familiar to his readers, but he invested it with his own meaning, which becomes evident in the prologue.

The Word was with God in a special relationship of eternal fellowship in the Trinity. The word "with" translates the Greek pros, which here suggests "in company with" (cf. the same use of pros in 1:2; 1 Thes. 3:4; 1 John 1:2). John then added that the Word was God. Jehovah's Witnesses translate this clause, "The Word was a god." This is incorrect and logically is polytheism. Others have translated it "the Word was divine," but this is ambiguous and could lead to a faulty view of Jesus. If this verse is correctly understood, it helps clarify the doctrine of the Trinity. The Word is eternal; the Word is in relationship to God (the Father); and the Word is God.

1:2. The Word has always been in a relationship with God the Father. Christ did not at some point in time come into existence or begin a relationship with the Father. In eternity past the Father (God) and the Son (the Word) have always been in a loving communion with each other. Both Father and Son are God, yet there are not two Gods.

1:3. Why is there something rather than nothing? That is a great question in philosophy. The Christian answer is God. He is eternal, and He is the Creator of all things. And the Word was the agent of Creation (cf. 1 Cor. 8:6; Col. 1:16; Heb. 1:2). All Creation was made by the Word in relation with the Father and the Spirit. John stressed the work of the Word. He came to reveal the Father (John 1:14, 18); and the work of revelation began in Creation for Creation reveals God (Ps. 19:1-6; Rom. 1:19-20).

1:4. Life is man's most important asset. To lose life is tragic. John affirmed that in the ultimate sense, life is in Christ. Man's spiritual and physical life come from Him. (For John's teaching on life, cf. 5:26; 6:57; 10:10; 11:25; 14:6; 17:3; 20:31.) Jesus, the Source of "life" (cf. 11:25), is also the light of men (cf. 8:12). Light is commonly used in the Bible as an emblem of God; darkness is commonly used to denote death, ignorance, sin, and separation from God. Isaiah described the coming of salvation as the people living in darkness seeing a great light (Isa. 9:2; cf. Matt. 4:16).

1:5. Light's nature is to shine and dispel darkness. Darkness is almost personified in this verse: darkness is unable to overpower light. By this, John summarized his Gospel record: (a) Light will invade the dominion of darkness. (b) Satan the ruler and his subjects will resist the light, but they will be unable to frustrate its power. (c) The Word will be victorious in spite of opposition.

B. The witness of John the Baptist (1:6-8)

1:6. In addition to the eternal Word, a man came on the stage of history: his name was John. This John did not author this Gospel but was the great forerunner of Jesus known as John the Baptist. He was sent from God, which was the secret of his importance. Like the Old Testament prophets he was equipped and commissioned by God for special ministry.

1:7. The word witness (both as a noun [martyria] and verb [martyreō]) is important in this Gospel (cf. v. 15, 32, 34; 3:11, 26; 5:31-32, 36-37; 18:37; 19:35; etc). (See the chart with the comments on 5:33-34.) John the Baptist was sent for people's benefit to be an additional pointer to the truth of Jesus, the Revealer of the Father. People in sin are in such darkness that they need someone to tell them what is light. John's goal was that all men might come to trust in Jesus.

1:8. John the Baptist was great, but he . . . was not the Light. Some evidence suggests that the movement begun by John the Baptist continued after his death and even after the death and resurrection of Jesus (4:1; cf. Mark 6:29; Luke 5:33). Twenty years after Jesus' resurrection (cf. Acts 18:25; 19:1-7) Paul found about 12 disciples of John the Baptist in Ephesus. A Mandaean sect still continues south of Baghdad which, though hostile to Christianity, claims an ancestral link to the Baptist.

C. The coming of the Light (1:9-13)

1:9. This has been called the Quaker's text because of that group's erroneous use of it and their stress on the "inner light." The words was coming (erchomenon) may refer to every man (as in the NIV marg.) or to Christ, the true Light (as in the NIV text). The latter is preferred, for it suggests the Incarnation.

Christ gives light to every man. This does not mean universal salvation or general revelation or even inner illumination. Instead, it means that Christ as the Light shines (phōtizei) on each person either in salvation or in illuminating him with regard to his sin and coming judgment (3:18-21; 9:39-41; cf. 16:8-11).

1:10. The world (kosmos) means the world of men and human society which is now in disobedience to God and under the rulership of Satan (cf. 14:30). The Logos came among people in the Incarnation, but mankind did not recognize its Maker (cf. Isa. 1:2-3). The failure to recognize (egnō, "know") Him was not because God's nature was somehow "hidden" in people, as some suggest. Rather, it is because of human ignorance and blindness, caused by sin (John 12:37).

1:11. In some ways this is one of the saddest verses in the Bible. The Logos went to His own home but He had no welcome. Jesus went to His own people, the nation Israel, but they as a whole rejected Him. In rejecting Him, they refused to accept Him as the Revelation sent by the Father and refused to obey His commands. Isaiah long before had prophesied of this Jewish national unbelief: "Who has believed our message?" (Isa. 53:1)

1:12. That unbelief, however, was not universal. Some received Jesus' universal invitation. To all who accepted Jesus as the Revealer of the Father's will and as the Sacrifice for sin, He gave the right to become children of God. The word "right" (exousian) is a needed improvement over the KJV's "power," and "children" (tekna) is better than the KJV's "sons." People are not naturally children of God but can become so by receiving the gift of the new birth.

1:13. The new birth does not come by natural descent (lit., "of bloods"), nor is it the result of a human decision (lit., "the will of the flesh," i.e., the natural human desire for children), nor is it the result of a husband's will. The birth of a child of God is not a natural birth; it is a supernatural work of God in regeneration. A person welcomes Jesus and responds in faith and obedience to Him, but the mysterious work of the Holy Spirit is "the cause" of regeneration (3:5-8).

D. The Incarnation and revelation (1:14-18)

1:14. The Word (Logos; cf. v. 1) became flesh. Christ, the eternal Logos, who is God, came to earth as man. Yet in doing so, He did not merely "appear" like a man; He became one (cf. Phil. 2:5-9). Humanity, in other words, was added to Christ's deity. And yet Christ, in becoming "flesh," did not change; so perhaps the word "became" (egeneto) should be understood as "took to Himself" or "arrived on the scene as."

"Flesh" in this verse means a human nature, not sinfulness or weakness. In the Greek the words lived for a while among us recall God's dwelling with Israel in the Old Testament. The word "lived" is eskēnōsen, from skēnē ("tabernacle"). Much as God's presence was in the tabernacle (Ex. 40:34), so Jesus dwelt among people.

We have seen most naturally implies that the author was an eyewitness. His glory refers to the unique splendor and honor seen in Jesus' life, miracles, death, and resurrection. The one and only Son (monogenous; cf. John 1:18; 3:16, 18; 1 John 4:9) means that Jesus is the Son of God in a sense totally different from a human who believes and becomes a child of God. Jesus' sonship is unique for He is eternal and is of the same essence as the Father. The glorious revelation of God which the Logos displayed was full of grace and truth, that is, it was a gracious and truthful revelation (cf. John 1:17).

1:15. John the Baptist gave a continuing testimony to Jesus. The present tense of the Greek verbs testifies and cries out stresses this. Jesus was younger and began His ministry later than John. But John said that because of His preexistence (and thus His true nature) He . . . has surpassed me.

1:16. The Word made flesh is the source of grace (charin), which is the sum total of all the spiritual favors God gives to people. The words we . . . all refer to Christians and include John the author. Because of the fullness of His grace . . . one blessing after another (charin anti charitos, lit., "grace in place of grace") comes to Christians as waves continue to come to the shore. The Christian life is the constant reception of one evidence of God's grace replacing another.

1:17. The greatness of the old dispensation was the giving of the Law by God through His servant Moses. No other nation has had such a privilege. But the glory of the church is the revelation of God's grace and truth . . . through Jesus Christ (cf. v. 14).

1:18. The statement No one has ever seen God (cf. 1 John 4:12) may seem to raise a problem. Did not Isaiah say, "My eyes have seen the King, the LORD Almighty"? (Isa. 6:5) God in His essence is invisible (1 Tim. 1:17). He is One "whom no one has seen or can see" (1 Tim. 6:16). But John 1:18 means, "no one has ever seen God's essential nature." God may be seen in a theophany or anthropomorphism but His inner essence or nature is disclosed only in Jesus.

God the only Son is literally "the unique God" or "the only begotten God" (monogenēs theos; cf. monogenous, "the one and only" in v. 14). John was probably ending his prologue by returning to the truth stated in verse 1 that the Word is God. Verse 18 is another statement affirming Christ's deity: He is unique, the one and only God. The Son is at the Father's side, thus revealing the intimacy of the Father and the Son (cf. the Word was "with God," vv. 1-2). Furthermore, the Son has made . . . known (exēgēsato, whence the Eng. "exegeted") the Father. The Son is the "exegete" of the Father, and as a result of His work the nature of the invisible Father (cf. 4:24) is displayed in the Son (cf. 6:46).

II. Jesus' Manifestation to the Nation (1:19–12:50)

This major part of John's Gospel describes the public ministry of Jesus to the nation Israel. It is a "book of signs," a narrative of seven of Jesus' miracles that point to Him as the Messiah. Along with the signs are public discourses explaining the significance of the signs and two long private interviews (chaps. 3–4).

A. Jesus' early ministry (1:19–4:54)

1. EARLY TESTIMONIES TO JESUS (1:19-34)

a. John's first witness (1:19-28)

1:19. As in the Synoptic Gospels, the ministry of John the Baptist was so influential that the authorities in Jerusalem decided to investigate him. The Jews is the author's title for the city's leaders. The priests and Levites went to ask about his baptism and what he claimed for himself.

1:20-21. John said, I am not the Christ (i.e., the Messiah). (See comments on vv. 40-41 about the meaning of the title "Messiah.") This was his confession, as stressed by the repetition of the verb (in Gr.) confessed.

Interestingly in response to their questions John's answers were progressively shorter: "I am not the Christ" (v. 20); I am not (v. 21); No (v. 21). He did not want to talk about himself, for his function was to point to Another. John had an Elijah-type ministry. He appeared on the scene suddenly and even dressed like Elijah. He sought to turn people back to God as Elijah did in his day. And Malachi had predicted that Elijah would return before Messiah's coming (Mal. 4:5). Therefore many speculated that John was Elijah. The Prophet was expected because of Deuteronomy 18:15 (referring to Christ; cf. John 1:45). Some wrongly understood that the coming "prophet" was to be distinct from the Messiah (v. 24; 7:40-41).

1:22-23. John replied that he was not any of the expected prophetic figures. He explained, however, that his ministry was described in the Old Testament. He was the voice (phōnē), while Jesus is the Word (Logos). John's function was one of preparation, and it was carried on in the desert. (On the meaning of John's quotation from Isa. 40:3, see the comments on Matt. 3:3.)

1:24-25. The Pharisees were an important sect of Judaism. They numbered about 6,000 and were most influential. They held a strict interpretation of the Law and embraced many oral traditions. The Pharisees were the only minor group to survive the Jewish war of A.D. 66-70, and their teachings formed the basis for Talmudic Judaism. Their question to the Baptizer was, in essence, "Since you have no official title, why are you baptizing?"

1:26-27. John knew that his baptizing work was only anticipatory. He explained that another One was coming who was unknown to them. That coming One is so great that John considered himself unworthy to do even the lowliest service for Him (such as untying His sandals).

1:28. The site of Bethany on the other side of the Jordan River is now unknown. (It is not to be confused with another Bethany, home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus, near Jerusalem.) As early as A.D. 200, Origen, when visiting Palestine, could not find it. A probable site is opposite Jericho.

b. John's second witness (1:29-34)

1:29. John's second witness started at the beginning of a series of days (cf. The next day in vv. 29, 35, 43; and "On the third day" in 2:1) when Jesus' first disciples were called and came to faith. John identified Jesus as the Lamb of God (cf. 1:36; 1 Peter 1:19). The connection to the Old Testament sacrifices is probably general. The sin offering which bore the sins of the nation on the Day of Atonement was a goat (Lev. 16). Daily offerings were normally lambs, but they did not atone for sin. The Passover lamb (Ex. 12) and Isaiah's mention of the Messiah's likeness to a lamb (Isa. 53:7) may have been in John's mind. John, by the Holy Spirit, saw Jesus as the sacrificial Victim who was to die for the sin of the world (cf. Isa. 53:12).

1:30-31. John repeated here what he had said earlier about Jesus (vv. 15, 27). John's fame was to be superseded by that of Jesus, whose priority stems from His preexistence: He was before me. But why did John say, I myself did not know Him? Though John and Jesus were related, as Mary and Elizabeth were relatives (Luke 1:36), nothing is known of any contacts between them in their years of childhood and adolescence. John did not know that Jesus was the coming One until He was revealed by the Father. All John knew was that he was to prepare the way for Him by baptizing with water. God would send His Man to Israel in His good time.

1:32. The baptism of Jesus is not recorded in John's Gospel, but the material of the Synoptic Gospels is assumed (see "John's Distinctive Portrait" in the Introduction). The Fourth Gospel does not state that this descent of the Spirit like a dove occurred at Jesus' baptism. The significant thing is that the invisible Spirit came from heaven and manifested Himself in a bodily (dovelike) form. John saw the Spirit as a dove remain on Jesus (cf. Isa. 11:2; Mark 1:10).

1:33. John had been told by God (the One who sent him) that when this sign of the dove would occur, the Person so marked out by the Spirit's coming and presence would be the One who would baptize by that same Holy Spirit. Cleansing by water is one thing, but the cleansing produced by the Spirit is of another order. Later at Pentecost, 50 days after Jesus' resurrection, the baptism with the Holy Spirit brought in a new Age (Acts 1:5; 2:1-3), the Church Age, the "Age of the Spirit" (cf. 1 Cor. 12:13).

1:34. John's testimony was that this is the Son of God. The prophesied Davidic King was God's Son (2 Sam. 7:13), and the messianic King is uniquely the Son of God (Ps. 2:7). The title "Son of God" goes beyond the idea of obedience and messianic King to that of Jesus' essential nature. In the Fourth Gospel this title is not applied to believers. They are called "children" (tekna; e.g., John 1:12) while "Son" (hyios) is used only of Jesus.

2. THE DISCIPLES OF JESUS (1:35-51)

a. Jesus' first disciples (1:35-42)

1:35-36. The next day refers to the second day in this series (cf. vv. 29, 35, 43; 2:1). The most likely reason for this chronological notation is that the author had a particular interest in narrating how some disciples came from their positions as adherents in John's party to faith in Jesus. The verb tenses in 1:35-36 are unusual. John was there (lit., "stood," perf. tense) while Jesus was passing by (pres. tense). The action in God's economy was shifting from John's baptism to the ministry of Jesus. John pointed his disciples to Jesus as God's Lamb (cf. comments on v. 29).

1:37. Two of John's disciples heard the witness of the Baptist and followed Jesus. The word "followed" probably has a double meaning here. They followed Him in the sense of literal walking and also as His disciples, that is, they turned their allegiance to Jesus that day.

1:38. The first words the disciples heard from Jesus were, What do you want? In one sense Jesus was asking a simple question and the disciples responded with a request for information as to where He lived. But the author seemed to imply more. Perhaps Jesus was also asking, "What are you seeking in life?" The word translated staying (menō) is a favorite word of John's. This Greek word occurs here in his writings for the first time. Of the 112 New Testament passages in which it occurs, 66 are in his writings—40 in the Gospel of John, 23 in 1 John, and 3 in 2 John (William F. Arndt and F. Wilbur Gingrich, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1957, pp. 504-5). Sometimes, as here, it means "to stay or dwell" in a place; a few times it means "to last or continue"; but more often it has a theological connotation: "to remain, continue, abide" (e.g., John 15:4-7).

1:39. Jesus' words of invitation were, Come . . . and you will see. A person must first come to Him; then he will see. In addition to their seeing where He stayed, these words may possibly also have a deeper theological implication. The two disciples remained with Him that day, beginning at the 10th hour. That hour was 4 P.M. or 10 A.M., depending on whether the Fourth Gospel counted days from 6 A.M. (as the Synoptics customarily did) or from midnight or noon. The 10 A.M. times seems better and was the official Roman usage (cf. comments on 4:6; 19:14).

1:40-41. Andrew, one of the two disciples who followed Jesus, was the first proclaimer of Jesus as the Messiah. In Hebrew, "Messiah" means "the anointed One," which in Greek is translated Christ (ho Christos). The idea of "the anointed One" comes from the Old Testament practice of anointing priests and kings with oil. This was symbolic of the Spirit and pointed to the future One who would come (cf. Isa. 61:1). The title "Messiah" came to be used of the future Davidic King (cf. Matt. 1:1; John 6:15). In bringing his brother Simon Peter to Christ, no man did the church a greater service than Andrew. Andrew appeared two more times in John (6:4-9; 12:20-22); both times he was bringing someone to Jesus. The unnamed disciple is commonly held to be John the son of Zebedee, a brother of James and author of this Gospel. In Mark 1:16-20 two pairs of brothers (Simon and Andrew, James and John) who were fishermen were called by Jesus.

1:42. When Jesus . . . looked at Simon (cf. v. 47), He knew the man's character and destiny. Jesus gave him the Aramaic name Cephas. Peter is the Greek translation of Cephas ("rock"). Simon's name in Hebrew was probably Simeon (Gr. in Acts 15:14; 2 Peter 1:1; cf. NIV marg.). No reason is given here for the change of his name from Simon to Cephas. The common understanding is that his name indicates what God by His grace would do through him. He would be a rock-like man in the church during its early years (cf. Matt. 16:18; Luke 22:31-32; John 21:15-19; Acts 2–5; 10–12).

b. Jesus' call of Philip and Nathanael (1:43-51)

1:43-44. Though the first disciples were from Galilee, Jesus had called them in Judea where they were with the Baptist. On His way north to Galilee, He called Philip to be His disciple. Philip's hometown of Bethsaida was on the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee (called "Bethsaida in Galilee" in 12:21). Also Andrew and Peter were born there. Politically, Bethsaida was in lower Gaulonitis in the territory of Herod Philip (Josephus The Antiquities of the Jews 18. 2. 1). Philip's name is Greek but his nationality cannot be inferred from that fact.

1:45. Philip's testimony to Nathanael stressed that Jesus is the Promised One of whom Moses (Deut. 18:18-19; cf. John 1:21, 25) and the prophets (Isa. 52:13–53:12; Dan. 7:13; Micah 5:2; Zech. 9:9) wrote. Surprisingly Philip called Jesus . . . the son of Joseph. But this is what the disciples would have believed at this time. Yet Nathanael would soon recognize that He is "the Son of God" (John 1:49).

1:46. Nathanael momentarily stumbled over the lowly origin of the Messiah. Nazareth! Can anything good come from there? Nathanael knew of the poor reputation of Nazareth. Surely the Messiah would come from Jerusalem, Hebron, or some other prominent city. Jesus' condescension still remains a puzzle to many people. How can the Logos be a Man? Philip was wise enough not to argue, he gently invited his friend to meet Jesus: Come and see. He knew that Nathanael's questions would then be resolved.

1:47. Jesus, having supernatural knowledge (cf. v. 42), called Nathanael . . . a true Israelite, in whom there is nothing false (dolos, "deceitful") unlike Jacob (cf. v. 51 with Gen. 28:12).

1:48. Nathanael was puzzled as to how Jesus knew about him. Jesus said He knew exactly what Nathanael was doing before Philip came up to him; he was under the fig tree. This expression often meant to have safety and leisure (cf. 1 Kings 4:25; Micah 4:4; Zech. 3:10). Perhaps here the fig tree was a place for meditation (cf. comments on John 1:50-51). Psalm 139 elaborates on the theme of God's knowledge of a person's life in every detail.

1:49. Jesus' supernatural knowledge moved Nathanael to confess Him as the Son of God and the King of Israel. This does not mean that Nathanael at this early date fully understood the Trinity or the Incarnation. Rather He understood Jesus to be the Son of God in the messianic sense (cf. Ps. 2:6-7). This future Davidic King would have God's Spirit on Him (Isa. 11:1-2) and thus would have supernatural knowledge.

1:50-51. Jesus promised Nathanael a greater basis for belief, probably referring to the miracles in chapters 2–13. From 1:48, 51 it can be inferred that Nathanael was meditating on Jacob's life, particularly on the incident recorded in Genesis 28:12. Jacob saw the angels going up and down a ladder. But Nathanael would see . . . the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man. Just as Jacob saw angels from heaven communicating with earth, so Nathanael (and the others; though you is sing. in John 1:50, the you in v. 51 is pl.) would see Jesus as the divine Communication from heaven to earth. The Son of Man, replacing the ladder, is God's link with earth (cf. Dan. 7:13; Matt. 26:64). Perhaps Jesus was also indicating that He is the new "Bethel," God's dwelling place (Gen. 28:17; John 1:14).

As the Son of Man, Jesus left heaven to come to the earth. Jesus used the term "Son of Man" of Himself more than 80 times. It speaks of His humanity and suffering and His work as "the ideal Man." I tell you the truth ("Verily, verily," KJV; lit., "Amen, Amen") occurs 25 times in John and always calls attention to important affirmations: 1:51; 3:3, 5, 11; 5:19, 24-25; 6:26, 32, 47, 53; 8:34, 51, 58; 10:1, 7; 12:24; 13:16, 20-21, 38; 14:12; 16:20, 23; 21:18. Interestingly this double "Amen" does not occur in the Synoptic Gospels.

3. JESUS' FIRST SIGN (2:1-11)

Jesus' first miracle in the Gospel of John was a private one, known only to His disciples, some servants, and probably Jesus' mother. If Matthew had not yet been called to be one of the Twelve, this may explain why the miracle is not recorded in the Synoptics. Of the four Gospel writers only John was there. John used the word "signs" (sēmeiōn, v. 11) because he was seeking to draw attention away from the miracles as such and to point up their significance. A miracle is also a "wonder" (teras), a "power" (dynamis), and a "strange event" (paradoxos).

This turning water into wine was the first of 35 recorded miracles Jesus performed. (See the chart listing those miracles, the places where they happened, and the references in the Gospels.)

2:1. On the third day probably means three days after the calling of Philip and Nathanael. (Cf. the sequence of days suggested by "the next day" in 1:29, 35, 43.) It would take a couple of days to reach Cana in Galilee from Bethany near Jericho of Judea (1:28). Cana was near Nazareth, though its exact location is unknown. Jesus' mother was there, but John did not give her name (cf. 2:12; 6:42; 19:25-27). In his Gospel, John never named himself or the mother of Jesus. (Jesus' mother went to the home of the beloved disciple John [19:27].)

2:2-3. Oriental wedding feasts often lasted seven days. The feast followed the groom's taking of his bride to his home or his father's house, before the consummation of the marriage. When the supply of wine was used up, Mary turned to Jesus in hope that He could solve the problem. Did Mary expect a miracle? In the light of verse 11 this is not likely. Mary had not yet seen any miracles done by her Son.

2:4-5. The word woman applied to His mother may seem strange to a modern reader, but it was a polite, kind expression (cf. 19:26). However, the clause, Why do you involve Me? was a common expression in Greek that referred to a difference in realms or relations. Demons spoke these words when they were confronted by Christ ("What do You want with us?" [Mark 1:24]; "What do You want with me?" [Mark 5:7]). Mary had to learn a painful lesson (cf. Luke 2:35), namely, that Jesus was committed to God the Father's will and the time for His manifestation was in the Father's hand. My time has not yet come or similar words occur five times in John (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). Later the fact that His time had come is mentioned three times (12:23; 13:1; 17:1). Mary's response to the servants (Do whatever He tells you) revealed her submission to her Son. Even though she did not fully understand, she trusted Him.

2:6-8. The water in the six . . . water jars (of 20 to 30 gallons each) was used for Jewish purification rites before and after meals (cf. Matt. 15:1-2). The contrast between the old order and the new way is evident (cf. John 4:13; 7:38-39).

Probably the water jars were outside. The master of the banquet, in charge of the festivities, would not know he was drinking from the purification jars. For a Jew this would be unthinkable. The servants dipped out the water, which had become wine.

2:9-10. As the master of the banquet tasted the . . . wine, he found it to be superior to what they had been drinking. In contrast with a common custom in which the best wine was served first and the lesser quality later, he affirmed that this wine, served last, was the best. The significance of this miracle is that Christianity is an advance over Judaism. God has kept the best gift—His Son—until now.

2:11. The significance of the miracle was explained by John as a manifestation of Christ's glory. In contrast with the ministry of Moses who turned water into blood as a sign of God's judgment (Ex. 7:14-24), Jesus brings joy. His first miracle was a gracious indication of the joy which He provides by the Spirit. The sign points to Jesus as the Word in the flesh, who is the mighty Creator. Each year He turns water to wine in the agricultural and fermentation processes. Here He simply did the process immediately. The 120 gallons of fine wine were His gift to the young couple. The first miracle—a transformation—pointed to the kind of transforming ministry Jesus would have (cf. 2 Cor. 5:17). The disciples put their faith in Him. This initial faith would be tested and developed by a progressive revelation of Jesus, the Logos. At this point they did not understand His death and resurrection (John 20:8-9) but they did know His power.

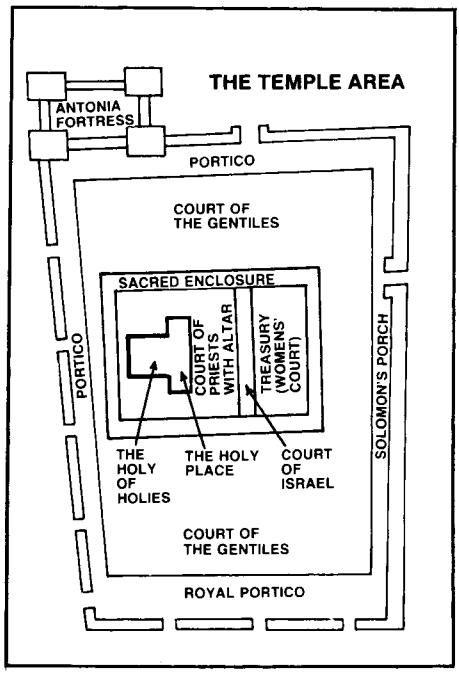
4. JESUS' CAPERNAUM VISIT (2:12)

2:12. Jesus' move to Capernaum on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee for a few days marks an interlude in His life. Though Capernaum is northeast of Cana, He went down because of the decline in land elevation toward the sea. Capernaum became His home base (cf. Matt. 4:13; Mark 1:21; 2:1). From this point on He seemed to be alienated from His family (Mark 3:21, 31-35; John 7:3-5) and His hometown of Nazareth (Mark 6:1-6; Luke 4:14-30).



5. JESUS' FIRST MINISTRY IN JERUSALEM (2:13–3:21)

a. Jesus' cleansing of the temple (2:13-25)

John recorded a cleansing of the temple at the beginning of Jesus' ministry whereas the three Synoptics recorded a temple cleansing toward the end of His public ministry (Matt. 21:12-13; Mark 11:15-16; Luke 19:45-46). Probably there were two cleansings, for there are differences in the narrations. John was undoubtedly aware of the Synoptics, and he supplemented them. The first cleansing caught the people by surprise. The second cleansing, about three years later, was one of the immediate causes of His death (cf. Mark 11:15-18).

2:13-14. As was the custom for the Jewish people (Ex. 12:14-20, 43-49; Deut. 16:1-8) Jesus went up to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover (cf. two other Passover feasts—one in John 6:4 and one in John 11:55; 12:1; 13:1). This reminded them of God's grace in delivering them from the bondage in Egypt. It was a fitting time for His ministry.

The temple courts refer to a large courtyard, the Court of the Gentiles, surrounding the temple enclosure. (See the sketch of the temple.) The buying and selling of animals in the area was probably rationalized as a convenience for the pilgrims coming into Jerusalem. But abuses developed, and the pilgrim traffic became a major source of income for the city. With money to be made, worship easily became corrupted. The money changers were another convenience for the pilgrims. Temple dues had to be paid in the acceptable Tyrian coinage, and a high percentage was charged for changing coins.

2:15. Malachi predicted that One would come suddenly to the temple to purify the religion of the nation (Mal. 3:1-3). In moral indignation Jesus started a small stampede of the sheep and cattle, and overturned the tables.

2:16. Jesus protested the turning of His Father's house into a market. He did not protest the sacrificial system itself. The purpose of the sacrifices was in danger of being lost. In the second cleansing of the temple toward the end of His ministry, Jesus' attack was sharper. Then He called the temple area "a den of robbers" (Luke 19:46; cf. Jer. 7:11). Jesus frequently referred to God as "My Father." Only through Jesus can the Father be known. "No one knows the Father except the Son and those to whom the Son chooses to reveal Him" (Matt. 11:27).

2:17. Jesus' disciples remembered Psalm 69:9, which speaks of the fact that the Righteous One would pay a price for His commitment to God's temple. This zeal for God would ultimately lead Him to His death.

2:18-19. The Jews—either the Jewish authorities or the merchants—demanded some proof for His right to challenge the existing order ("Jews demand miraculous signs," 1 Cor. 1:22). But instead of giving in to their demand, Jesus gave a veiled saying. As with His parables in the Synoptics, one purpose of an enigmatic saying was to puzzle the hearers who opposed Him. He desired that His hearers ponder the saying in order to perceive its significance. Destroy this temple is in the form of a command, but the sense is ironic or conditional. At Jesus' trial He was accused of saying He could destroy the temple and raise it again in three days (Matt. 26:60-61). A similar charge was made against Stephen (Acts 6:14).

2:20-21. Herod the Great decided to replace the temple of Zerubbabel because it was not of the same glory as that of Solomon's (Hag. 2:3). Since work on Herod's temple began in 20 or 19 B.C., 46 years bring the date to A.D. 27 or 28. The work on the whole temple complex continued until around A.D. 63. The statement of the Jews meant either that the sanctuary was completed in 46 years or else one phase had been completed. How then, the Jews asked, could He rebuild it in three days? That would be impossible! The Greek words for and You are emphatic, suggesting their contempt for Him. Of course by the temple Jesus meant His body which, after his death, would be resurrected in three days.

2:22. Even Jesus' own disciples did not understand His enigmatic saying at first. It took the light of the Resurrection to illuminate it. They did not see the need for His death, so they did not think along these lines until after the event. Nor did they understand the Scriptures which speak of the Messiah's suffering and death (Isa. 52:12–53:12; Luke 24:25-27).

2:23. While . . . in Jerusalem during the Passover, Jesus did other signs which John chose not to describe. The effect of these miracles (which were probably healings) was to elicit faith on the part of many people. They believed in His name, that is, they trusted in Him. This was not necessarily saving faith as the next verse implies. They believed He was a great Healer, but not necessarily a great Savior from sin.

2:24-25. Jesus knew that a temporary excitement or a faith based on signs was not sufficient. Many of the early followers later turned back when He did not take up the role of a political king (cf. 6:15, 60, 66). Until His death and resurrection and the coming of the Holy Spirit, the foundation for faith was not fully laid. Having supernatural knowledge, Jesus does not need human help to evaluate men. As God, He sees beyond the superficial to people's hearts (1 Sam. 16:7; Ps. 139; Acts 1:24). John 3 and 4 give illustrations of this truth. He knew Nicodemus' need, and He told the Samaritan woman about her past (4:29). The connection of chapter 3 to chapter 2 is evident (cf. in a man [2:25], and "Now there was a man" [3:1]).

b. Jesus' interview with Nicodemus (3:1-21)

3:1. Nicodemus represented the best in the nation. He was a teacher (v. 10), a Pharisee, and a member of the Sanhedrin, the Jewish ruling council. The Sanhedrin had 70 members who were responsible for religious decisions and also, under the Romans, for civil rule. Two Sanhedrin members who appear in a favorable light in the New Testament are Joseph of Arimathea (19:38) and the Rabbi Gamaliel (Acts 5:34-39; 22:3). The Sanhedrin put Jesus on trial (Luke 22:66). Nicodemus later rebuked the Pharisees for condemning Jesus without hearing Him (John 7:50-51), and he helped Joseph of Arimathea bury Jesus (19:39-40).

3:2. Why did Nicodemus go to Jesus at night? Because of fear? Because it was the normal time for visits? Because he wanted a time of uninterrupted conversation without the distractions of the ever-present crowds? John did not say why. And yet nighttime has a sinister tone in the Fourth Gospel (cf. 9:4; 11:10; 13:30; 19:39). Nicodemus began, Rabbi, we know You are a Teacher who has come from God. "We" probably means the favorable ones on the council. The titles "Rabbi" and "Teacher" are polite and flattering on one hand, but they showed Nicodemus' inadequate comprehension of who Jesus is. The words "from God" are in an emphatic position in the Greek.

The signs had pointed out Jesus as God's Man (God was with Him), and Nicodemus wanted to talk to Him as one Rabbi to another.

3:3. But Jesus was not on the same level with Nicodemus. He is "from above" (anōthen; v. 31); therefore Nicodemus must be born "from above" (v. 3, NIV marg.; anōthen). To be born again or born "from above" (anōthen has both meanings; e.g., "from above" in 19:11 and "again" in Gal. 4:9) is to have a spiritual transformation which takes a person out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God (cf. Col. 1:13). The kingdom is the sphere or realm of God's authority and blessing which is now invisible but will be manifested on earth (Matt. 6:10).

3:4. Nicodemus was certain Jesus did not mean something absurd (such as a reincarnation or a second physical birth), but yet he did not grasp the nature of regeneration.

3:5. Various views are given to explain Jesus' words about being born of water and the Spirit: (1) The "water" refers to the natural birth, and the "Spirit" to the birth from above. (2) The "water" refers to the Word of God (Eph. 5:26). (3) The "water" refers to baptism as an essential part of regeneration. (This view contradicts other Bible verses that make it clear that salvation is by faith alone; e.g., John 3:16, 36; Eph. 2:8-9; Titus 3:5.) (4) The "water" is a symbol of the Holy Spirit (John 7:37-39). (5) The "water" refers to the repentance ministry of John the Baptist, and the "Spirit" refers to the application by the Holy Spirit of Christ to an individual.

The fifth view has the merit of historical propriety as well as theological acceptability. John the Baptist had stirred the nation by his ministry and stress on repentance (Matt. 3:1-6). "Water" would remind Nicodemus of the Baptist's emphasis. So Jesus was saying that Nicodemus, in order to enter the kingdom, needed to turn to Him (repent) in order to be regenerated by the Holy Spirit.

3:6-7. There are two distinct realms: one is of fallen man (the flesh) and the other is of God (the Spirit). A fallen person cannot regenerate himself; he needs a divine operation. Only God's Holy Spirit can regenerate a human spirit.

People should not stumble at or reject the importance of Jesus' words. They must be born from above. The necessity is absolute and is universally binding.

3:8. This verse contains a wordplay which cannot be adequately expressed in English. The Greek word pneuma means both wind and Spirit. The work of the Spirit (pneuma) is invisible and mysterious like the blowing of the wind (pneuma). Man controls neither.

3:9-10. Nicodemus asked . . . how this spiritual transformation takes place. Jesus answered that Nicodemus, as the teacher of Israel (the Gr. has the article "the"), ought to know. The Old Testament prophets spoke of the new Age with its working of the Spirit (Isa. 32:15; Ezek. 36:25-27; Joel 2:28-29). The nation's outstanding teacher ought to understand how God by His sovereign grace can give someone a new heart (1 Sam. 10:6; Jer. 31:33).

3:11. But Nicodemus was ignorant of the realm of which Jesus spoke. He represented the nation's unbelief and lack of knowledge. Jesus, like the prophets, spoke to the nation about divine themes but the Jews rejected His witness. "Witness" (or testimony; martyrian) is a common word in John's Gospel (see the chart at 5:33-34).

3:12. Since Nicodemus could not grasp the basic teaching of regeneration which Jesus presented in earthly analogies, how could he understand and believe the more abstract heavenly matters such as the Trinity, the Incarnation, and Jesus' coming glorification?

3:13. No one has ever gone into heaven and then come back to earth, able to give clear teaching about divine matters. The one exception is Jesus who is the Son of Man (cf. 1:50-51; Dan. 7:13; Matt. 26:64). He is the "Ladder" between heaven and earth with access to both realms (cf. comments on John 1:50-51). He "descended" in the Incarnation and "ascended" in the Ascension. He also was in heaven before the Incarnation, and therefore knows the divine mysteries.

3:14-15. The thought of elevation to heaven (v. 13) leads to the thought of Jesus being lifted up (cf. 8:28; 12:32). Moses raised a bronze snake on a pole as a cure for a punishment due to disobedience (cf. Num. 21:4-9). So Jesus would be lifted up on a cross for people's sin, so that a look of faith gives eternal life to those doomed to die.

3:16. Whether this verse was spoken by John or Jesus, it is God's Word and is an important summary of the gospel. God's motivation toward people is love. God's love is not limited to a few or to one group of people but His gift is for the whole world. God's love was expressed in the giving of His most priceless gift—His unique Son (cf. Rom. 8:3, 32). The Greek word translated one and only, referring to the Son, is monogenē, which means "only begotten," or "only born-one." It is also used in John 1:14, 18; 3:18; and 1 John 4:9. On man's side, the gift is simply to be received, not earned (John 1:12-13). A person is saved by believing, by trusting in Christ. Perish (apolētai) means not annihilation but rather a final destiny of "ruin" in hell apart from God who is life, truth, and joy. Eternal life is a new quality of life, which a believer has now as a present possession and will possess forever (cf. 10:28; 17:3).

3:17. Though light casts shadows, its purpose is to illuminate. Though those who do not believe are condemned, God's purpose in sending His Son is salvation (to save), not damnation (to condemn). God does not delight in the death of the wicked (Ezek. 18:23, 32). He desires that everyone be saved (1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Peter 3:9).

3:18. The instrumental means of salvation is believing in the finished work of Jesus on the cross. But people who reject the light of the Logos are in the dark (1:5; 8:12) and are therefore already under God's judgment. They stand condemned. They are like those sinful, dying Israelites who willfully rejected the divine remedy (Num. 21:4-9). A believer in Christ, on the other hand, is under "no condemnation" (Rom. 8:1); he "will not be condemned" (John 5:24).

3:19. Men love darkness not for its own sake but because of what it hides. They want to continue undisturbed in their evil (ponēra, "wicked"; cf. v. 20 which has a different word for evil) deeds. A believer is also a sinner (though a redeemed one), but he confesses his sin and responds to God (cf. 1 John 1:6-7). In the ultimate sense, man's love of darkness rather than God the Light (John 1:5, 10-11; 1 John 1:5) is his love for idols. He worships and serves "created things rather than the Creator" (Rom. 1:25).

3:20. Just as natural light shows up what is otherwise unseen, so Christ the Light exposes people's deeds as "evil." (The word "evil" here is phaula ["worthless"], also used by John in 5:29.) Unbelievers have no ultimate meaning of life, no worthy motivation, no adequate goal, and a destiny of doom. Yet everyone who does evil hates the light (as well as loves darkness, 3:19). He fears that if he comes to the light his deeds will be seen as worthless, and he would need to turn from them.

3:21. Jesus is like a magnet. His people are drawn to Him and welcome His revelation. Though the light rebukes their sin, they respond in repentance and faith. They live by the truth (cf. 2 John 1-2, 4; 3 John 1, 4). By regeneration they live differently than their former lives of darkness. Their new lives are by faith in Jesus and His Word. And the Spirit, working in their lives, gives them new power, goals, and interests (2 Cor. 5:17; Eph. 2:10).

6. THE FINAL TESTIMONY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST (3:22-30)

3:22-24. For a short time the ministry of John the Baptist overlapped Jesus' ministry. Thus the Judean countryside must have been alive with the teaching of both these great preachers of repentance and God's kingdom. Both John and Jesus had disciples, large crowds followed both of them, and both baptized. The statement that Jesus "baptized" (vv. 22, 26) probably means He was overseeing the baptizing done by His disciples (4:2). The site of Aenon near Salim is unknown today but a likely location is about midway between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea (and about three miles east of Shechem). Both groups were baptizing and thus two "reform" movements were popular. This was before John was put in prison (3:24). This statement reveals how the Fourth Gospel supplements the Synoptics. It implies that readers knew about John's imprisonment from reading the other Gospels (Matt. 14:1-12; Mark 6:14-29; Luke 3:19-20) or from common church tradition.

3:25. The zealous disciples of John the Baptist found themselves at a disadvantage in an argument. A certain Jew asked why he should join John's group. He (and others; cf. "They" in v. 26) argued about ceremonial washing. Since there were Essene lustrations and Pharisaic washings, why should Jews follow another washing, John's baptism? Besides, the group following Jesus was larger (v. 26).

3:26. John's disciples may have been angry and jealous. (They were interested in John's movement and were not committed to Jesus.) They complained that Jesus, of whom John had testified, had now captured the nation's attention. They longed for the former days when everyone went to hear John (Mark 1:5).

3:27. John's greatness is revealed in his reply. He said, A man can receive only what is given him from heaven. God is sovereign in bestowing His blessings on one's ministry. If Jesus' movement was expanding, then it must have been in the will of God. This principle of God's sovereignty is stressed in John (cf. 6:65; 19:11) as well as elsewhere in the New Testament (e.g., 1 Cor. 4:7).

3:28. John also reminded his disciples that they were forgetting part of his teaching. For he had clearly taught that he was not the promised Messiah but was only sent ahead by God to do a work of preparation for the Messiah (1:8, 15, 20, 23).

3:29-30. In Jesus' growing influence, John found his own joy fulfilled. He illustrated this for his disciples by referring to a custom at Near Eastern weddings. The friend of the bridegroom was only an assistant, not the main participant in the marriage. The assistant acted on behalf of the bridegroom and made the preliminary arrangements for the ceremony. His joy came when he heard the bridegroom coming for his bride. John the Baptist's work was to prepare for the arrival of Christ, the "Groom." John baptized only with water, not with the Spirit. Therefore Jesus must become greater and John must become less. This was not merely advisable or fortuitous; it was the divine order. John willingly and with joy accepted Jesus' growing popularity as God's plan.

7. THE TESTIMONY OF JOHN THE EVANGELIST (3:31-36)

The quotation marks in the text of the NIV are a modern innovation and the judgment of translators. The original Greek manuscripts did not have any quotation marks. As the NIV margin indicates, the closing quotation marks could be placed after verse 30 rather than at the end of verse 36. It seems better to view this section (vv. 31-36) as the testimony of John the Evangelist because the theological exposition about the Father and the Son is more a feature of Christian theology than a part of John the Baptist's testimony.

3:31. Here John the Evangelist developed the theme about the supremacy of Jesus, which John the Baptist spoke of to his followers (vv. 28-30). Since Jesus has come from heaven, His words surpass those of any religious teacher. Each human teacher is limited by his earthly boundaries (he belongs to the earth and is from the earth). But the Logos from heaven is above all; He is preeminent (Col. 1:18).

3:32. What Jesus spoke came from His previous vision of and communion with the Father in heaven (cf. 1:1, 14). Yet in spite of this clear reliable witness, mankind as a whole has rejected His message (cf. 1:11).

3:33. The message of Jesus has not been universally rejected as verse 32 by itself might indicate. One who receives it gives his attestation or certification to the fact that God is truthful (cf. v. 21). To reject this testimony is to call God a liar (1 John 5:10).

3:34. Jesus gives the perfect truth of God as He speaks the words of God, because He has the full endowment of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit without limit. The Old Testament prophets had the Spirit only for limited times and for limited purposes.

The Apostle John referred to Jesus as the One whom God has sent. Thirty-nine times the Gospel of John refers to Jesus being sent from God (vv. 17, 34; 4:34; 5:23-24, 30, 36-38; 6:29, 38-39, 44, 57; 7:16, 28-29; 8:16, 18, 26, 29, 42; 9:4; 10:36; 11:42; 12:44-45, 49; 13:16, 20; 14:24; 15:21; 16:5; 17:3, 18, 21, 23, 25; 20:21). This affirms Jesus' deity and heavenly origin, as well as God's sovereignty and love in initiating the Son's Incarnation (cf. Gal. 4:4; 1 John 4:9-10, 14).

3:35. The relationship between the Son and the Father is one of loving intimacy and complete confidence. The Son is endowed with all authority to accomplish the Father's purposes (5:22; Matt. 28:18).

3:36. Man has only two options: trust in the Son or reject the Son (cf. vv. 16, 18). Unbelief is tragic ignorance but it is also willful disobedience to clear light. God's wrath is mentioned only here in the Fourth Gospel (but cf. Rev. 6:16-17; 11:18; 14:10; 16:19; 19:15). "Wrath," God's necessary righteous reaction against evil, remains (menei) on the unbeliever. This wrath is future but it also exists now. Endless sin and disobedience will result in endless punishment (Matt. 25:46).

8. JESUS' MINISTRY IN SAMARIA (4:1-42)

a. Jesus' interview with a Samaritan woman (4:1-26)

4:1-3. In Greek these verses are one long sentence, introducing the reader to a second long interview by Jesus. The words, When the Lord learned of this (v. 3), are actually the first phrase in Greek in verse 1. The sudden prominence of Jesus, evidenced by the growth of His followers, caused the Pharisees to take special notice of Him. Since Jesus was working on God's schedule, He knew how His ministry would end. Until that appointed time, He must live carefully, so He withdrew from the conflict until His "hour" (7:6, 8, 30; 8:20; cf. 12:23; 13:1; 17:1). He left Judea (cf. 3:22) and went back . . . to Galilee.

This second interview is another illustration of the fact that "He knew what was in a man" (2:25). The Samaritan woman contrasts sharply with Nicodemus. He was seeking; she was indifferent. He was a respected ruler; she was an outcast. He was serious; she was flippant. He was a Jew; she was a despised Samaritan. He was (presumably) moral; she was immoral. He was orthodox; she was heterodox. He was learned in religious matters; she was ignorant. Yet in spite of all the differences between this "churchman" and this woman of the world, they both needed to be born again. Both had needs only Christ could meet.

4:4. He had to go through Samaria. This was the shortest route from Judea to Galilee but not the only way. The other route was through Perea, east of the Jordan River. (See the two routes on the map.) In Jesus' day the Jews, because of their hatred for the Samaritans, normally took the eastern route in order to avoid Samaria. But Jesus chose the route through Samaria in order to reach the despised people of that region. As the Savior of the world He seeks out and saves the despised and outcasts (cf. Luke 19:10).

"Samaria" in New Testament times was a region in the middle of Palestine, with Judea to the south and Galilee to the north. Samaria was without separate political existence under the Roman governor. The people were racially mixed and their religion resulted from syncretism and schism from Judaism. Its center of worship was Mount Gerizim. Even today in Israel, a small group of Samaritans maintain their traditions.

4:5-6. The village of Sychar was near Shechem. Most identify the site with modern Akar but others point to Tell-Balatah. Sychar was between Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim. A well near Sychar today may be the same as Jacob's well. The plot of ground which Jacob gave to Joseph is mentioned in Genesis 48:21-22. Jacob had purchased it years earlier (Gen. 33:18-20). Jesus, tired from walking, sat down by the well. It was about the sixth hour, which according to Roman time reckoning would have been 6 P.M. (See comments on John 1:39; 19:14.) Jesus being truly human, experienced thirst, weariness, pain, and hunger. Of course He also possesses all the attributes of Deity (omniscience, omnipotence, etc.).

4:7-8. With His disciples in the city buying food, Jesus did a surprising thing: He spoke to a Samaritan woman, whom He had never met. She was of the region of Samaria, not the town of Samaria. The woman was shocked to hear a Jewish man ask for a drink from her. The normal prejudices of the day prohibited public conversation between men and women, between Jews and Samaritans, and especially between strangers. A Jewish Rabbi would rather go thirsty than violate these proprieties.

4:9. Surprised and curious, the woman could not understand how He would dare ask her for a drink, since Jews did not associate with Samaritans. The NIV margin gives an alternate translation to the Greek sentence with the word synchrōntai ("associate" or "use together"): the Jews "do not use dishes Samaritans have used." This rendering may well be correct. A Rabbinic law of A.D. 66 stated that Samaritan women were considered as continually menstruating and thus unclean. Therefore a Jew who drank from a Samaritan woman's vessel would become ceremonially unclean.

4:10. Having captured her attention and stimulated her curiosity, Jesus then spoke an enigmatic saying to cause her to think. It was as if He had said, "Your shock would be infinitely greater if you really knew who I am. You—not I—would be asking!" Three things would have provoked her thinking: (1) Who is He? (2) What is the gift of God? (3) What is living water? "Living water" in one sense is running water, but in another sense it is the Holy Spirit (Jer. 2:13; Zech. 14:8; John 7:38-39).

4:11-12. She misunderstood the "living water" and thought only of water from the well. Since Jacob's well was so deep how could Jesus get this living water? Today this well is identified by archeologists as one of the deepest in Palestine. Are You greater than our father Jacob? she asked. In Greek this question expects a negative answer. She could not conceive of Him as greater than Jacob. Her claim "our father Jacob" is interesting in light of the fact that the Jews claim him as the founder of their nation. That well had great tradition behind it but, she wondered, What does this Stranger have?

4:13-14. Jesus began to unveil the truth in an enigmatic statement. This water from Jacob's well would satisfy only bodily thirst for a time. But the water Jesus gives provides continual satisfaction of needs and desires. In addition one who drinks His living water will have within him a spring of life-giving water (cf. 7:38-39). This inner spring contrasts with the water from the well, which required hard work to acquire. Jesus was speaking of the Holy Spirit who brings salvation to a person who believes and through Him offers salvation to others.

4:15. The woman could not grasp this dark saying because of her sin and materialism. All she could understand was that if she had a spring she would not get thirsty and would not have to work so hard.

4:16-18. Since she was not able to receive His truth (1 Cor. 2:14), Jesus dealt with her most basic problem. (Apparently she never served Him a drink. He forgot His own physical need in order to meet her spiritual need.) Jesus suggested she get her husband and bring him back with her. This suggestion was designed to show her that He knew everything about her (cf. John 2:24-25). Her marital history was known to this Stranger, including the fact that she was living in sin. Thus in a few words Jesus had revealed her life of sin and her need for salvation.

4:19-20. Her response was most interesting! Jesus was not just a passing Jewish Rabbi. Since He had supernatural knowledge, He must be a prophet of God. But instead of confessing her sin and repenting, she threw out an intellectual "red herring." Could He solve an ancient dispute? Samaritan religion held that the one place of divinely ordered worship was on top of nearby Mount Gerizim, whereas the Jews said it was on the temple mount in Jerusalem. Who was right in this controversy?

4:21. A time is coming (cf. v. 23) referred to the coming death of Jesus which would inaugurate a new phase of worship in God's economy. In the Church Age, because of the work of the Spirit, worship is no longer centered in temples like those on Mount Gerizim and Mount Zion.

4:22. Jesus was firm in His declaration of the issues involved. The Samaritan religion was confused and in error: You Samaritans worship what you do not know. They were not the vehicle for the salvation of mankind. Israel was the nation chosen by God to have great privileges (Rom. 9:4-5). When Jesus said, Salvation is from the Jews, He did not mean that all Jews were saved or were especially pious. "Salvation is from the Jews" in the sense that it is available through Jesus, who was born of the seed of Abraham.

4:23. With the advent of the Messiah the time came for a new order of worship. True worshipers are those who realize that Jesus is the Truth of God (3:21; 14:6) and the one and only Way to the Father (Acts 4:12). To worship in truth is to worship God through Jesus. To worship in Spirit is to worship in the new realm which God has revealed to people. The Father is seeking true worshipers because He wants people to live in reality, not in falsehood. Everybody is a worshiper (Rom. 1:25) but because of sin many are blind and constantly put their trust in worthless objects.

4:24. God is Spirit is a better translation than the KJV's "God is a Spirit." God is not one Spirit among many. This is a declaration of His invisible nature. He is not confined to one location. Worship of God can be done only through the One (Jesus) who expresses God's invisible nature (1:18) and by virtue of the Holy Spirit who opens to a believer the new realm of the kingdom (cf. 3:3, 5; 7:38-39).

4:25. The Samaritans expected a coming messianic leader. But they did not expect Him to be an anointed king of the Davidic line, since they rejected all the Old Testament except the Pentateuch. Based on Deuteronomy 18:15-18, they expected a Moses-like figure who would solve all their problems. The Samaritan woman now understood a part of what Jesus said. She wistfully longed for the messianic days when the Messiah would explain everything.

4:26. This self-declaration by Jesus Himself—I . . . am He (the Messiah)—is unusual. Normally in His ministry in Galilee and Judea (cf. 6:15) because of political implications, He veiled His office and used the title "Son of Man." But with this Samaritan the dangers of revolt by national zealots were not a problem.

b. Jesus' instruction of His disciples (4:27-38)

4:27-30. The woman, excited by Jesus' statement about Himself and because of the arrival of the disciples, left and went to the village. In her joy of discovery she forgot her water jar. It was more important to her now to share her new faith. Her words A Man who told me everything I ever did, were bound to stir interest. Perhaps in that village some who heard her had been partners in her past life. Perhaps they wondered, Could this One also know about us?

Could this be the Christ? she asked them. More literally, her question was, "This couldn't be the Messiah, could it?" The question expected a tentative negative answer. She framed the question this way, in all probability, because she knew the people would not respond favorably to a dogmatic assertion from a woman, especially one of her reputation. Just as Jesus had captured her attention by curiosity, so she raised the people's curiosity. They decided to investigate this matter.

4:31-32. As the disciples spoke with Jesus, they sensed something had happened. Before, He was tired and thirsty. But now food and drink were not important to Him. His mood had changed. They offered Him food, but He gave them instruction. I have food to eat that you know nothing about is another of His enigmatic statements.

4:33-34. The disciples' misunderstanding set the stage for Him to clarify His statement. As usual, the disciples were confined to thinking materialistically. Jesus said, My food . . . is to do the will of Him who sent Me. This does not mean Jesus had no need of physical food, but rather that His great passion and desire was to do God's will (cf. 5:30; 8:29). He knows that man does not live by bread alone, but "by every word that comes from the mouth of the Lord" (Deut. 8:3). His priority is spiritual, not material. It is the Father's work which must be done (cf. John 17:4).

4:35. Farmers have a period of waiting between their sowing and their reaping. Four months more and then the harvest was probably a local proverb. But in the spiritual realm there is no long wait. Jesus has come so now it is the day of opportunity. All that is needed is spiritual vision and perception. If the disciples would look around, they would see people with spiritual hunger. The Samaritans in their white garments coming from the village (v. 30) may have visually suggested a wheat field ripe for harvest.

4:36-38. As reapers, the disciples had the great and rewarding privilege of leading people to faith in Christ. Others had already done the work of sowing. This perhaps refers to the ministry of the Old Testament prophets or to John the Baptist's ministry of preparation. Both kinds of workers—the sower and the reaper—get their pay. Reapers harvest the crop for eternal life, that is, Jesus' disciples were involved in ministry to others, in the issue of death and life (2 Cor. 2:15-16).

Harvesttime in the ancient world was a time of joy (Ruth 3:2, 7; Isa. 9:3). There is also great joy at the time of salvation (cf. Luke 15:7, 10, 32). The disciples had the greater joy of seeing the completion of the process (John 4:38). A sower has a harder time because he sees no immediate fulfillment. John the Baptist stirred a nation to repent but he died before the day of Pentecost, when the disciples in great joy saw thousands come to faith in Jesus.

c. The repentance of the Samaritans (4:39-42)

4:39. The little revival among the Samaritans is notable because the theme of natural rejection by Israel had been sounded (1:11) as well as the note of a wider ministry (3:16; cf. Acts 1:8). The testimony of the woman, though, from one point of view was unnecessary ("not that I accept human testimony," John 5:34); yet it was effective. That Jesus knows what is in a person and that He has comprehensive knowledge of one's life is an indication of His deity (Ps. 139; John 1:47-49; 2:24-25).

4:40-41. The witness of the woman led to the Samaritans' personal confrontation with Jesus. He stayed with them two days. The word "stayed" (from menō, "to remain, to abide") is a favorite Johannine theological term (cf. 3:36; 6:56; 15:4; etc.; and comments on 1:38). Because of His words many more became believers.

"Words" is singular in Greek ("His word"). His message was the cause of their faith. Personal testimony plus the message of Jesus is still God's means of salvation.

4:42. Faith based simply on the testimony of another is only secondary. True faith moves to its own experience and confrontation with Jesus. We have heard for ourselves is the more adequate basis. Jesus is the Savior of the world, not in the sense that everyone will be saved (universalism) but that His light shines for all (1:9). The light is not limited to the nation Israel, but is for "every nation, tribe, people, and language" (Rev. 7:9).

9. THE OFFICIAL'S SON (4:43-54)

4:43-45. After His two-day ministry in Samaria, Jesus and His disciples continued north into Galilee. Now Jesus Himself had pointed out that a prophet has no honor in his own country. This proverbial saying mentioned by Jesus (cf. Matt. 13:57; Mark 6:4) is cited by the author John. Is His "own country" Judea or Galilee? Or is His "own country" heaven, with His being rejected in His "own land" Israel? Generally Galilee was more favorable to Him, but even there men tried to kill Him (Luke 4:18-30). John was perhaps preparing his readers for the upcoming rejection; he may have been saying that even with the warm reception Jesus received in Galilee, He still was not really accepted (cf. John 2:24-25; 4:48). They had been impressed by His clearing the temple at the Passover feast (2:13-22) and His miracles (2:23). But the people's enthusiasm for the Healer (cf. Mark 5:21, 24b) did not always indicate they had faith in Him (Mark 6:1-6).

4:46-47. The certain royal official is not identified. He could have been a Gentile or a Jew, a centurion, or a minor official in Herod's court. Possibly he was a Jew because Jesus included him among the people who desire signs and wonders (v. 48; cf. 1 Cor. 1:22). His son had been sick, and undoubtedly he had exhausted all the local means at his disposal. Failure of position and money to solve his problem drove him from Capernaum to the village of Cana, 20 to 25 miles away, hoping that the Healer would save his son from death.

4:48. Jesus' address to him, though sharp, was necessary. A faith built only on miraculous signs is not a complete faith (cf. 2:23-25). Many (you people) hesitate to believe in Jesus apart from seeing miraculous signs (sēmeia) and wonders (terata). Faith in Jesus is absolutely necessary, but not all believers are given public portents (cf. Matt. 16:1-4; 1 Cor. 1:22).

4:49. The official was in no position emotionally to argue his case theologically. All he could plead for was mercy, for his child was at the point of death.

4:50. Jesus' calm reply to the official's desperate request created a crisis. Jesus announced, You may go. Your son will live. If the official really believed that Jesus could make a difference in Capernaum, he must also believe Him now in Cana. So he took Jesus at His word and left.

4:51-53. On the way back the official must have pondered Jesus' promise every step of his journey. His servants met him with good news. His boy was living. The official asked when his son recovered. The healing was no accident, for it occurred at the exact moment Jesus made His promise to him. It was at the seventh hour, which by Roman time was 7:00 in the evening. The man's faith grew, and he brought all his household to faith. The lesson of this incident is that Jesus' power is able to save from death even at a great distance. His Word has power to work; people are simply to believe His Word.

4:54. Both signs in Galilee (changing the water into wine [2:1-11] and healing the official's son) demonstrate that Jesus is the Promised One. Yet both signs had a certain hidden aspect to them. Only the disciples and some servants saw His miracle at the wedding, and this healing was not in public view.

B. Jesus' controversy in Jerusalem (chap. 5)

1. JESUS' HEALING OF A PARALYTIC (5:1-15)

5:1. Jesus . . . later returned to Jerusalem for a feast. The feast is not named (some mss. read "the feast"), but it may have been the Passover. Jesus attended three other Passovers (2:23; 6:4; 11:55). John probably intended only to give a reason why Jesus was in Jerusalem.

5:2. To the north of the temple area was a pool . . . called Bethesda (see the map showing the pool's location). The excavations of a pool near the Sheep Gate have uncovered five porticoes or covered colonnades, confirming the accuracy of the description given here in the Fourth Gospel. The pool was actually two pools next to each other.

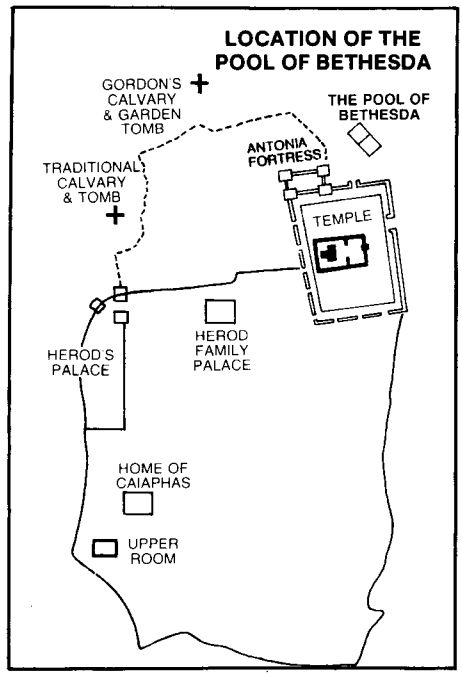
5:3a. The great number of disabled people pictures the sad spiritual plight of the world.

5:3b-4. The earliest manuscripts omit these words which appear to be a late insertion to explain why the pool water was "stirred" (v. 7). People believed that an angel came and stirred it. According to local tradition, the first one in the water would be healed. But the Bible nowhere teaches this kind of superstition, a situation which would be a most cruel contest for many ill people. No extant Greek manuscript before A.D. 400 contains these words.



5:5. Jesus picked a certain invalid on a Sabbath Day (v. 9) at a feast time, a man who had been afflicted for 38 years. John did not say what kind of physical problem he had or if he was an invalid from birth. In any case his condition was hopeless.

5:6. The word learned does not mean that Jesus received facts from others. It means that He perceived the situation by His knowledge (the Gr. is gnous, "knowing"; cf. 1:48; 2:24-25; 4:18). Jesus' seemingly strange question, Do you want to get well? was designed to focus the man's attention on Him, to stimulate his will, and to raise his hopes. In the spiritual realm man's great problem is that either he does not recognize he is sick (cf. Isa. 1:5-6; Luke 5:31) or he does not want to be cured. People are often happy, for a while at least, in their sins.

5:7. The man replied that he lacked not the desire but the means to be healed. Without strength and without friends, he could not be helped when the pool water was stirred. He had tried but without success.

5:8. Jesus then said . . . Get up! Pick up your mat and walk. His command carried with it the required enablement. As with dead Lazarus (11:43), Jesus' word accomplished His will. This illustrates conversion. When people obey His command to believe, God works in and through His Word.

5:9-10. God's supernatural power was evident in the man's instantaneous cure. He picked up his mat and walked. Muscles long atrophied were completely restored. Isaiah prophesied that in the days of the Messiah the lame would "leap like a deer" (Isa. 35:1-7). Here in Jerusalem was a public sign that the Messiah had come.

The Sabbath was a central issue in the conflicts between Jesus and His opponents (cf. Mark 2:23; 3:4). The Mosaic Law required that work cease on the seventh day. Additional laws were added by later Jewish religious authorities, which became very complicated and burdensome. These human traditions often obscured the divine intention in God's Law. "The Sabbath was made for man" (Mark 2:27) so that he could have rest and a time for worship and joy. The Jews' rigid tradition (not the Old Testament) taught that if anyone carried anything from a public place to a private place on the Sabbath intentionally, he deserved death by stoning. In this case the man who was healed was in danger of losing his life.

5:11. The healed man realized this difficulty and tried to evade any responsibility for violating tradition by saying he was just following orders.

5:12-13. The authorities were naturally interested in the identity of this fellow who told the invalid to violate their rules. But the man . . . had no knowledge of Jesus. This seems to be a case in which healing was done in the absence of faith. The invalid was chosen by Jesus as an act of grace because of his need and also to display God's glory in him. Jesus then had slipped away into the crowd (cf. 8:59; 10:39; 12:35), so momentarily He was unknown.

5:14-15. Jesus later found the healed man in the temple area. This implied that Jesus sought him out in order to speak to him. The ex-paralytic seemed to have no gratitude to Jesus: his conduct put him in a bad light. Jesus' warning (Stop sinning or something worse may happen to you) does not mean that his paralysis was caused by any specific sin (cf. 9:3), though all disease and death come ultimately from sin. The warning was that his tragic life of 38 years as an invalid was no comparison to the doom of hell. Jesus is interested not merely in healing a person's body. Far more important is the healing of his soul from sin.

2. THE DISCOURSE (5:16-47)

5:16. Jesus was doing these things on the Sabbath. In addition to the case of the invalid's healing (5:1-15), John later recorded the cure of a blind man on the Sabbath (chap. 9). The grain-picking (Mark 2:23-28), the healing of a shriveled hand (Mark 3:1-5), curing a woman who had been crippled for 18 years (Luke 13:10-17), and healing a man with dropsy (Luke 14:1-6)—all these took place on the Sabbath. As seen in these passages, Jesus' theology or philosophy of the Sabbath differed from that of His opponents. His opponents in the controversy were progressively humiliated while the crowds favored Him. The opponents' response was to persecute Jesus by opposing Him and trying to kill Him (John 5:16, 18; 7:19, 25).

5:17. God rested on the seventh day (Gen. 2:2-3) from His work of Creation. But Jesus pointed to the continuous work of God as a justification for His Sabbath activity. God sustains the universe, begets life, and visits judgments. It is not wrong for His Son to do works of grace and mercy on the Sabbath. The words My Father should be noted. Jesus did not say "your Father" or even "our Father." His opponents did not miss His claim to Diety.

5:18. The Sabbath controversy was enough to cause them to hate Jesus, but the implication of His claim that God is His own Father was impossible for them to accept. To them, God has no equals. Jesus' claim, in their thinking, was a monstrous blasphemy. To be equal with God suggested, they thought, two gods and therefore polytheism. To make oneself "equal with God" was a claim of arrogant independence. In the Talmud four persons were branded as haughty because they made themselves equal to God: pagan rulers Hiram, Nebuchadnezzar, Pharaoh, and the Jewish King Joash.

5:19. Jesus explained that He is not independent of or in opposition to the Father. His activity is not self-initiated. The Father directs and has sent the Son. The Son's activity imitates the Father, and the Two always work together. (See comments on 1:51 for the clause I tell you the truth.)

5:20. The Son is in no way independent of or in rebellion against the Father. Their relationship is one of continuous love. The Son is not doing simply a part of God's will; He has a full disclosure of all the Father's works. By the Father, the Son will do even more amazing works than physical healings.

5:21. One of the prerogatives of Deity is the right over life and death. (A king of Israel asked Naaman, "Am I God? Can I kill and bring back to life?" [2 Kings 5:7]) One of Jesus' "greater" works (John 5:20) is the giving of life. The Son gives life to whom He is pleased to give it, just as He chose to heal one man out of a crowd of disabled people. The giving of life includes spiritual (eternal) life and a resurrected body. The resuscitation of Lazarus (chap. 11) would illustrate both.

5:22. The Son's ability to give life is coupled with His right to judge mankind (cf. v. 27). The Father has placed this eschatological prerogative in Jesus' hands.

5:23. Jesus' unity with His Father is so complete that the honor of God is tied to Jesus. To reject or dishonor God the Son is to reject and dishonor God the Father.

5:24. Since Jesus has the unity and divine prerogatives mentioned in verses 19-23, to trust His message and His Father is to have in the present time eternal life (cf. 3:36). No judgment will come in the future (he will not be condemned [cf. 3:18; Rom. 6:13; 8:1] because he has already passed from one realm—death—into another—life [cf. Eph. 2:1, 5]). Only once elsewhere (in 1 John 3:14) is the phrase "passed from death to life" used.

5:25. Jesus' life-giving power can call a person out of the grave (11:43), everyone from their tombs (5:28-29), or anyone in spiritual death (v. 24) to eternal life. (The words, a time is coming, occur four times in John: 4:21, 23; 5:25, 28.)

5:26-27. Jesus' discourse now returned to the two central prerogatives of God: life (vv. 21, 24-26) and judgment (cf. vv. 22, 24-25, 27). Jesus has both because the Father . . . has given Him both. This giving is both eternal and temporal. In Himself Christ, the Logos, has life as an eternal gift of the Father (1:4), but in the Incarnation authority to judge was also delegated to Jesus. As the Son of Man (cf. Dan. 7:13), authority is given to Him.

5:28-29. Jesus said His hearers should not be amazed at His claim that right now those who believe pass from death into life (v. 24), because in the future there will be a universal physical resurrection at His command. This universal resurrection is clearly taught in Daniel 12:1-2. Other passages show that the resurrection to life, "the first resurrection," will occur in stages (the church at the Rapture, and Tribulation saints at the Lord's second coming at the end of the Tribulation), and that the resurrection of those who will be condemned will occur at the end of the Millennium (Rev. 20:11-15). John 5:28-29 is one of the few passages in this Gospel which expressly teaches eschatology.

The words those who have done good and those who have done evil (ta phaula, "worthless things"; cf. 3:20) by themselves might imply a salvation by good deeds or damnation because of evil deeds, but a consideration of John's theology as a whole forbids this (cf. 3:17-21; 6:28-29). Those who are truly born again do live a different kind of life. They obey Him (14:15), they abide in Him (15:5-7), and they walk in the light (8:12; 1 John 1:7). They are saved by the Lamb of God who, as their substitutionary Sacrifice, takes away the penalty of their sin. Salvation is by faith in Christ. Damnation is because of rejection of God's Son (John 3:36).

5:30. This verse is transitional; it concludes the section on Jesus' unity with the Father (vv. 19-30). The section ends the way it began, with the point that the Son can do nothing apart from the Father (cf. v. 19). His judgment, as everything He does, is from the express will of the Father. He is the perfect Spokesman for the Father and His effective Executive. Jesus' will is to do the Father's will (cf. 4:34; 8:29), which shows that He has the same nature.

5:31-32. The thought in this discourse moves from that of Jesus' unity with the Father to that of the Father's witness to Jesus. John 5:31 and 8:14 appear to be contradictory. But they speak to different issues. In 5:31, Jesus' point was that if He bore witness to Himself, this witness would not be accepted by the Jewish authorities. They would see it as an arrogant claim of self-exaltation. Yet in another setting (8:14), self-authentication is perfectly valid because an individual is the only one who knows his own full experience. Jesus affirmed that He did not seek an independent self-authentication. He was content to submit to the Father's will and to let the Father authenticate Him.

5:33-34. As stated earlier (see 1:7), the concept of witness or testimony is important in John's Gospel. The chart on the preceding page reveals John's stress on this subject in his various writings.

John the Baptist's function was that of a witness. A good witness tells the truth as he knows it. John's witness to Jesus had an abiding character (has testified in the Gr. is in the perf. tense). Jesus did not need human testimony, but John's work helped people because in their darkness he pointed them to the light. John's work was that you may be saved. His great popular movement was only an anticipatory one, in which he pointed to Jesus as the Lamb of God.

5:35. John was only a lamp, not the true Light (1:9). The Jewish nation for a short time was stirred by and rejoiced in his ministry. For a moment they thought the Messianic Age was dawning. Even though his preaching had some stinging rebukes, there was a great popular excitement about his message. The people thought that though Israel might be disciplined, their enemies would be destroyed.

5:36. Though John the Baptist was a great voice for God, he did not do any miracles (10:41). The "signs" were specific works which God had assigned for the Son to do. These miracles were predicted in the Old Testament (Isa. 35:5-6). Jesus' work was a clear manifestation that God was with Him and that He worked through Him (cf. Nicodemus' words [John 3:2]; Jesus' logic [Mark 3:23-29]; and the lesson from an ex-blind man [John 9:30-33]).

5:37-38. Jesus' witness is His Father. The Father . . . has Himself testified concerning Me. But when and how did or does the Father give this witness? The possibilities include: (1) at Jesus' baptism (Matt. 3:17), (2) at the transfiguration (Matt. 17:5), (3) at the Triumphal Entry (John 12:28), (4) in Jesus' works (3:2), (5) in people's minds or hearts (6:45). Most likely Jesus was referring to the inner work of God in which He impresses on people's consciences that Jesus is the Truth (6:45; 1 John 5:9-12). Jesus' opponents are ignorant of God. They have no vision of God and no communication with Him. His Word is His message of salvation. This message had not been received by them (does not dwell [menonta, from menō, "remain, abide"] in them) because they had rejected Jesus.

5:39-40. The Jewish religious leaders studied the Old Testament with great diligence. They believed that if one could comprehend the words of the text, he would gain a share in the world to come. They considered those ignorant of the Law to be under a curse (7:49). Similarly many people today think Bible study is an end in itself rather than a function leading to the knowledge of God and godliness. Somehow a veil was over the minds of these Jewish scholars (2 Cor. 3:15), and they failed to see that Jesus is the Promised One. He is the fulfillment of the Old Testament sacrificial system, the true righteous Servant of Yahweh, the coming Prophet, the Son of Man, the Davidic King, and the promised Son of God and great High Priest. In spite of the clarity of the revelation, they refused to come to Him for life (cf. John 3:19-20).

5:41-42. The Jews may have thought that Jesus was upset because He was not officially endorsed by the leaders. But He denied that idea. They thought they knew His motivation, but in contrast He knew them and the cause of their unbelief (cf. 2:24-25): they did not have the love of God (i.e., love for God, not love from God) in their hearts. The great command is that people should love God (Ex. 20:4; Deut. 6:5); the great sin is that they reject Him and love and serve "created things" (Rom. 1:25).

5:43-44. Two things evidenced their lack of love for God. (1) They rejected Christ, the Father's "Representative." To insult or reject one's ambassador is the same as rejecting him. (2) They accepted false teachers or prophets. This reveals a lack of affinity with the truth. An additional failure was their desire for acceptance and approval from sinful men while ignoring the favor and the will of the only God. True faith was impossible because they were seeking the wrong object: man, not God.

5:45-47. Jesus came as the Savior, not as the Judge (cf. 3:17). It was unnecessary for Him to accuse the people. Moses, whom they claimed to follow, would condemn them because they had broken the covenant he instituted and missed the Person he wrote about. On whom your hopes are set implies that they thought salvation would come by their good deeds in keeping the Law.

If the Jews really believed Moses, they would believe Christ, for Moses wrote about Him. Jesus here did not refer to any specific passage (cf. Gen. 3:15; 22:18; 49:10; Num. 24:17; Deut. 18:15) or to any specific types (such as the Passover, the manna, the rock, the offerings, or the high priesthood). He simply assumed the Old Testament clearly points to Him. Since Moses' revelation was rejected (cf. Luke 16:29-31), Jesus' words were rejected also. Later Jesus said that Isaiah had written about Him (John 12:41).

C. Jesus' revelation in Galilee (6:1–7:9)

1. JESUS' SIGNS ON THE LAND AND THE LAKE (6:1-21)

a. Jesus' feeding of the 5,000 (6:1-15)

The miracle of the feeding of the 5,000 is the only sign recorded in all four Gospels (besides Jesus' resurrection). This fact alone points to its importance. The significance of the sign was expounded by the Lord in a long discourse (vv. 22-71). The miracle was spectacular, and it caused a peak in the people's messianic expectations. But in its aftermath many of His followers no longer followed Him (v. 66).

6:1-2. Though some time after this is indefinite, it can be learned from the Synoptics that Herod Antipas had killed John the Baptist (Mark 6:14-29; cf. John 3:24), the disciples had preached throughout Galilee (Mark 6:7-13, 30-31), multitudes of people were curious about Jesus, and Herod Antipas was seeking Jesus (Luke 9:7-9). So the time between the events in John 5 and 6 was probably six months. From verses 1-2 it seems that Jesus had gone to the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee with His disciples for rest. This lake was also called the Sea of Tiberias (cf. 21:1), named for a town on the lake's west shore built by Herod Antipas. But a crowd gathered even in this "solitary" (cf. Matt. 14:13; Mark 6:32) and "remote place" (Matt. 14:15).

6:3-4. The mention of the hillside or "the mountain" (NASB) may indicate an intended parallel to Moses' experience on Mount Sinai (cf. vv. 31-32). The notice that the Jewish Passover feast was near is theological and only secondarily chronological. The people were thinking in terms of blood, flesh, lambs, and unleavened bread. They longed for a new Moses who would deliver them from Roman bondage.

Since this was the second Passover John mentioned (cf. 2:13, 23), and since he mentioned at least one other Passover (13:1 [5:1 refers to an unnamed feast of the Jews]), Jesus' ministry extended for about three years. The events in chapter 6, then, took place about one year before He was crucified.

6:5-6. Jesus' question to Philip—Where shall we buy bread for these people to eat?—was not for information but was part of His program of educating the disciples. Philip was from Bethsaida (1:44) which was the closest town, and he would know the local resources. The answer to Jesus' question was that it was impossible, humanly speaking, for thousands of people to get bread late in the day from the little neighboring villages. John wrote, as he thought back on the incident, that Jesus was asking this to test Philip. God tests people to refine their faith, never to tempt them to do evil (cf. Gen. 22:1-18; James 1:2, 13-15; 1 Peter 1:7).

6:7. The amount needed was a large sum of money: literally, "200 denarii." One denarius was the wage for a day's work; this would have been eight months' wages. Even if the bread had been available, the disciples did not have nearly that much money. The disciples were supported by people who responded to Jesus' ministry (cf. Mark 6:7-13).

6:8-9. Andrew, in contrast with Philip, had gone into the crowd to determine its resources (cf. Jesus' command, "Go and see"; Mark 6:38). All he could come up with was a little boy's lunch. Man's inability set the stage for a manifestation of Jesus' compassion and power. The barley loaves recall the Prophet Elisha's feeding of 100 men with 20 barley loaves (2 Kings 4:42-44). But here was One far greater than Elisha.

6:10-11. As the Good Shepherd, Jesus made the "sheep" (Mark 6:34) sit down in green pastures (cf. Ps. 23:2). According to Mark 6:40, the people were seated in groups of 50 and 100. This made the crowd easy to count and the food easy to distribute. Five thousand men were there, plus women and children (Matt. 14:21). Thus probably more than 10,000 people were fed.

Since the area was desolate and the time was Passover, Jesus was like Moses with the people in the wilderness who needed a miraculous feeding. The miracle itself was not described by John. Jesus . . . gave thanks, but no eucharistic implications are obvious as many argue in this chapter. Among devout Jews the giving of thanks was the norm before and after meals. As Jesus distributed the food (with the aid of the disciples [Mark 6:41]), the miraculous multiplication took place.

6:12-13. The words, when they had all had enough to eat, show that John intended to stress that a miracle took place. Some scholars try to explain away the miracle by saying that this was merely a sacramental or symbolic meal. Others say the "miracle" was in the people's sharing. But these rationalizations are far from the clear meaning of John's words.

The disciples' gathering of the 12 baskets of fragments was part of their education, to show them that He is more than adequate for their needs. Later He appealed to their spiritual stupidity (cf. Mark 8:17-21). Even though the disciples were closer to Jesus than the crowds, they too were in spiritual blindness (Mark 6:52).

6:14-15. Seeing this miraculous sign (sēmeion), the people recalled Moses' prediction that a Prophet like him would arise (Deut. 18:15). Moses had fed the people. Moses had led them out of bondage. Jesus had fed the people. Jesus could lead the people out of the hated Roman bondage.

The people saw His sign, but they did not perceive its meaning. They wanted to seize Him and make Him King. This marks the highpoint of Jesus' popularity and a great temptation for Him. Could He have the kingdom without the Cross? No. Jesus' kingdom would be given to Him by the Father (cf. Ps. 2:7-12; Dan. 7:13-14). It will not come from this world (John 18:36). The path of the Father's will lies in another direction. Before He can be the reigning Lion of Judah, He must be the Lamb who bears the sin of the world (1:29).

b. His walking on the water (6:16-21)

6:16-17. According to Mark 6:45, Jesus compelled His disciples to get into the boat and go to Bethsaida while He dismissed the crowds. From Bethsaida they went on toward Capernaum. Both villages are at the north end of the Sea of Galilee. His disciples went down to the lake, for the land is hilly and high on the east side. As they got out on the lake, the sun went down and the wind picked up. Jesus was up in the hills praying while watching them in their toil (Mark 6:45-48).

6:18-19. The west wind, which often picks up at evening, caught them in the open water. They were headed directly into it and found themselves making little progress. They were "straining at the oars" (Mark 6:48). The Sea of Galilee is notable for its sudden and severe storms. They had rowed three or three and a half miles, so they were in the middle of the lake. They were terrified to see a figure walking on the water. They thought it was a ghost (Mark 6:49). Rational explanations have included the idea that Jesus was walking on the sand by the shore or floating on a large beam or log, but neither notion does justice to the text. This occurred in the "fourth watch" of the night, that is, between 3 and 6 o'clock in the morning (Matt. 14:25; Mark 6:48).

6:20-21. The clause It is I is literally "I Am," and was used by Jesus (in 8:58) with strong theological meaning. In this setting it seems to mean only that Jesus was identifying Himself. When the disciples recognized Him, they welcomed Him into the boat. By the words and immediately the boat reached the shore another miracle is probably intended. The two signs on the land and the lake reveal Jesus as the Provider of a "bread" which gives life (as the next section will expound) and as the Savior who intercedes for and protects His own. He intervenes in their times of troubles and brings them to safety.

2. HIS THEOLOGICAL DISCOURSE (6:22-71)

6:22-25. The crowd who had been fed were still on the eastern shore of the sea. They saw Jesus compel His disciples to get into the one boat which was there. But since Jesus did not get into the boat, the crowd supposed that He had stayed in the area. After some time they realized He was no longer there. Some boats from Tiberias landed, so the people decided to seek Jesus in the Capernaum region and got into the boats. The people's question, When did You get here? introduces His long discourse in Capernaum (v. 59). Jesus did not explain how or when He crossed the lake, for His walking on the water was a private sign for the disciples only.

6:26. Jesus began with the solemn words, I tell you the truth (cf. comments on 1:51). Jesus spoke these words four times in this discourse (6:26, 32, 47, 53). This drew attention to the importance of what He was about to teach. He rebuked them for their materialistic motivation and their lack of spiritual perception. They saw miraculous signs, but to them it was only an easy meal. They failed to see what it signified.

6:27. When Jesus said, Do not work for food that spoils, He was not condoning laziness. Rather He was saying that people should expend their efforts for what will last forever. "Man does not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes from the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4). Physical food is short-lived but spiritual food leads to eternal life. The Son of Man (who has access to heaven [John 3:13]) will give people this spiritual food, which is ultimately Christ Himself (6:53). God the Father Himself authenticated Jesus' claim that He is true heavenly "food."

6:28. The people recognized that Jesus was saying God had a requirement for them. They would do God's requirement if He would inform them what it was. They believed that they could please God and thus obtain eternal life by doing good works (cf. Rom. 10:2-4).

6:29. Jesus' response to their question was a flat contradiction of their thinking. They could not please God by doing good works. There is only one work of God, that is, one thing God requires. They need to put their trust in the One the Father has sent. Because of their sin people cannot please God by doing good works for salvation (Eph. 2:8-9; Titus 3:5). God demands that people recognize their inability to save themselves and receive His gift (Rom. 6:23).

6:30-31. In response the people demanded a miraculous sign (sēmeion; cf. "Jews demand miraculous signs" [1 Cor. 1:22]). They thought God's order is see and believe. But the divine order is believe and see (cf. John 11:40). They did not have faith or spiritual perception, but they understood that Jesus was proclaiming something new.

His coming was claimed as an advance over Moses. They reasoned, "If You are more than Moses, do more than Moses." The crowd that asked for a sign from Jesus must have felt that the feeding of the 5,000 did not compare with Moses' gift of bread from heaven. They remembered the divine gift of manna (Ex. 16; Num. 11:7). They thought Jesus' feeding was less significant because manna fed the whole nation for 40 years. But they missed two things. First, many of the Israelites who were fed 40 years did not believe. The important thing is not the magnitude of the sign but the perception of its significance (cf. Luke 16:29-31). Second, both Moses and Jesus were authenticated by God's signs; therefore both should be listened to and believed.

6:32. In a solemn revelation (I tell you the truth; cf. vv. 26, 47, 53) Jesus corrected their ideas in three ways. (1) The Father, not Moses, gave the manna. (2) The Father, was still giving "manna" then, not merely in the past. (3) The true Bread from heaven is Jesus, not the manna. Thus the supposed superiorities of Moses and his sign vanish. Manna was food for the body, and it was useful. But Jesus is God's full provision for people in their whole existence. Jesus repeatedly said He had come down from heaven (vv. 32-33, 38, 41-42, 50-51, 58).

6:33. God is the Source of all life. The Son has life in Himself (1:4; 5:26) and He has come to give real and lasting life to people. Sin cuts them off from God, who is Life, and they die spiritually and physically. Christ has come down from heaven to give life to the world. Jesus is thus the genuine Bread of God.

6:34. As yet, the crowd did not perceive that Jesus is the genuine Bread which He had been describing. Like the woman at the well (4:15), they asked for this better food. And they wanted it continually (from now on), not like the manna which lasted for 40 years.

6:35. I am the Bread of Life. This corrected two more errors in their thinking: (1) The food of which He spoke refers to a Person, not a commodity. (2) And once someone is in right relationship to Jesus, he finds a satisfaction which is everlasting, not temporal. This "I am" statement is the first in a series of momentous "I am" revelations (cf. 8:12; 10:7, 9, 11, 14; 11:25; 14:6; 15:1, 5). "Bread of Life" means bread which provides life. Jesus is man's necessary "food." In Western culture, bread is often optional, but it was an essential staple then. Jesus promised, He who comes to Me will never go hungry, and he who believes in Me will never be thirsty. The "nevers" are emphatic in Greek.

6:36. Jesus then rebuked the crowd for their lack of faith. They had the great privilege of seeing Him and yet they did not believe. Seeing does not necessarily lead to believing (cf. v. 30).

6:37. Jesus then gave the ultimate explanation of their lack of faith: the Father works sovereignly in people's lives. There is an election of God which is the Father's gift to the Son. The Son has no concern that His work will be ineffective, for the Father will enable people to come to Jesus. Jesus has confidence. But people may have confidence also. (Cf. the crippled man's response to Jesus' question, "Do you want to get well?" [5:6-9]) One who comes to Jesus for salvation will by no means be driven away (cf. 6:39).

6:38-39. Jesus then repeated His claim about His heavenly origin. The reason He came down from heaven was to do the will of the Father who sent Him. The Father's will is that those whom He gives to the Son will not suffer a single loss and all will be raised to life in the resurrection (cf. vv. 40, 44, 54). This passage is strong in affirming the eternal security of the believer.

6:40. This verse repeats and reinforces the ideas of the previous verses. One who looks and believes on Jesus for salvation has his destiny secure. The divine decree has insured it (cf. Rom. 8:28-30). He has eternal life (John 6:47, 50-51, 54, 58) and will be raised at the last day (cf. vv. 39, 44, 54).

6:41-42. The Jews, hostile unbelievers, grumbled because of Jesus' proclamation of His heavenly origin. Like their ancestors in the wilderness, these Jews murmured (Ex. 15:24; 16:2, 7, 12; 17:3; Num. 11:1; 14:2, 27). Their thinking was seemingly logical: one whose parents are known could not be from heaven (cf. Mark 6:3; Luke 4:22). They were ignorant of His true origin and full nature. They said He was the son of Joseph, but they did not know of the Virgin Birth, the Incarnation. He had come down from heaven because He is the Logos (John 1:1, 14).

6:43-44. Jesus made no attempt to correct their ignorance other than to rebuke their grumbling and to point them to the drawing and teaching ministry of God. They are not in a position to judge Him. Without God's help any assessment of God's Messenger will be faulty. No one can come to Jesus or believe on Him without divine help. People are so ensnared in the quicksand of sin and unbelief that unless God draws them (cf. v. 65), they are hopeless. This drawing of God is not limited to a few. Jesus said, "I . . . will draw all men to Myself" (12:32). This does not mean that all will be saved but that Greeks (i.e., Gentiles; 12:20) as well as Jews will be saved. Those who will be saved will also be resurrected (cf. 6:39-40).

6:45. In support of this doctrine of salvation by God's grace, Jesus cited the Old Testament. The quotation, They will all be taught by God, is from the Prophets, probably Isaiah 54:13, though Jeremiah 31:34 has the same thought. This "teaching" of God refers to His inner work that disposes people to accept the truth about Jesus and respond to Him. Everyone who listens to and learns from God will come to and believe in Jesus.

6:46. Yet this secret teaching of God is not a mystical connection of people with God directly. Knowing God comes only through Jesus, the Logos of God (cf. 1:18). As one is confronted by Him and hears His words and sees His deeds, the Father works within him.

6:47-48. These two verses summarize Jesus' teaching in the debate. I tell you the truth occurs here for the third of four times in this passage (cf. vv. 26, 32, 53). He who believes is in Greek a participial construction in the present tense, meaning that a believer is characterized by his continuing trust. He has everlasting life, which is a present and abiding possession. Jesus then repeated His affirmation, I am the Bread of Life (see comments on v. 35).

6:49-50. Manna met only a limited need. It provided temporary physical life. The Israelites came to loathe it, and ultimately they died. Jesus is a Bread of a different kind. He is from heaven and gives life. A person who eats of that Bread will not die.

6:51. Since Jesus is the Bread of Life, what does "eating" this Bread mean? Many commentators assume that Jesus was talking about the Lord's Supper. This passage may well illuminate the meaning of the Lord's Supper, in relation to Christ's death. But since the Last Supper occurred one year later than the incidents recorded in this chapter, eating His flesh and drinking His blood should not be thought of as sacramentalism. "Eating" the living Bread is a figure of speech meaning to believe on Him, like the figures of coming to Him (v. 35), listening to Him, (v. 45), and seeing Him (v. 40). To eat of this Bread is to live forever (cf. vv. 40, 47, 50, 54, 58). Jesus' revelation about the Bread was then advanced in that not only is the Father giving the Bread (Jesus), but also Jesus is giving Himself: This Bread is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. Salvation is by the sacrificial death of the Lamb of God (1:29). By His death, life came to the world.

6:52. As often happens, Jesus' teaching was not understood (cf. 2:20; 3:4; 4:15; 6:32-34). A violent argument started in the crowd regarding what He meant. Their perception remained at a materialistic level. They wondered, How can this Man give us His flesh to eat?

6:53-54. This revelation by Jesus is marked out as important by the fourth use of the phrase, I tell you the truth (cf. vv. 26, 32, 47). Sacramental interpretations appeal to the words eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood as evidence that Jesus was speaking of the eucharist. As stated earlier, the basic objection to this approach is historical: Jesus did not institute the Communion service until a year later. Drinking "His blood" is another bold figure of speech. The Jews knew the command, "You must not eat . . . any blood" (Lev. 3:17; cf. Lev. 17:10-14). And yet blood was the means of atonement. It is the blood that makes atonement for one's life (Lev. 17:11). Jesus' hearers must have been shocked and puzzled by His enigmatic words. But the puzzle is unlocked by understanding that Jesus was speaking of His making atonement by His death and giving life to those who personally appropriate Him (cf. John 6:63). Faith in Christ's death brings eternal life (cf. vv. 40, 47, 50-51) and (later) bodily resurrection (cf. vv. 39-40, 44).

6:55. Just as good food and drink sustain physical life, so Jesus, the real (reliable) spiritual food and drink, sustains His followers spiritually. His flesh and blood give eternal life to those who receive Him.

6:56-57. One who partakes of Christ enjoys a mutual abiding relationship with Christ. He remains (menei) in Christ, and Christ remains in him. Menō is one of the most important theological terms in John's Gospel (cf. comments on 1:38). The Father "remains" in the Son (14:10), the Spirit "remains" on Jesus (1:32), and believers "remain" in Jesus and He in them (6:56; 15:4). The implications of this "remaining" are many. A believer enjoys intimacy with and security in Jesus. Just as He has His life from the Father, so believers have life because of Jesus.

6:58-59. Jesus gave this discourse on the Bread of Life in the synagogue in Capernaum. He often spoke in Jewish synagogues, where men had opportunities to give expositions and exhortations (Mark 6:1-6; Luke 4:16-28; Acts 13:15-42). The services were not as formal as those of traditional American churches; "laymen" usually spoke. The conclusion to Jesus' exposition and exhortation, based on the manna incident from Exodus 16, repeats the major themes: Moses' bread did not give lasting life (salvation does not come by the Law); God has given the genuine life-giving Bread . . . from heaven; those who trust Jesus have eternal life.

6:60. As the people began to understand His teaching, they found it to be totally unacceptable. Besides the hostile Jewish leaders, many of the Galilean disciples turned away from Him. The popular enthusiasm for Jesus as a political Messiah (v. 15) was then over. They saw that He was not going to deliver them from Rome. He might be a great Healer, but His words were a hard (i.e., harsh) teaching. Who could accept it, that is, obey it? How could they personally appropriate Him?

6:61-62. Jesus knew His audience (cf. 1:47; 2:24-25; 6:15). Aware that they were grumbling (cf. v. 41), He asked what was so offensive to them. (Offend in Gr. is skandalizei.) Paul wrote that the crucified Messiah was a "stumbling block" (skandalon) to the Jews (1 Cor. 1:23). The Ascension of the Son of Man is also an offense. But His glorification is His heavenly vindication. He was crucified in weakness but He was raised in power (1 Cor. 15:43).

6:63. After His Ascension Jesus gave the Holy Spirit (7:38-39; Acts 1:8-9). The Holy Spirit, poured out in the world, gives life (salvation) to those who believe. Without the Holy Spirit, man (flesh) is utterly unable to understand Jesus' person and His works (John 3:6; 1 Cor. 2:14). Though the crowds assessed Jesus' words as "hard" (John 6:60), actually His words . . . are spirit and . . . life. That is, by the work of the Holy Spirit in an individual, Jesus' words provide spiritual life.

6:64. The life Jesus gives must be received by faith. The words do not work automatically. From the start Jesus knew which followers were believers and which ones were unbelievers. This is another evidence of His supernatural knowledge (cf. 1:47; 2:24-25; 6:15).

6:65. Jesus had taught that divine enablement was necessary for people to come to faith (v. 44). The apostasy here (v. 66) should not be surprising. Believers who remain with Jesus evidence the Father's secret work. The unbelieving crowds are evidence that "the flesh counts for nothing" (v. 63).

6:66. His rejecting their desire to make Him their political king; His demand for personal faith; His teaching on atonement; His stress on total human inability and on salvation as a work of God—all these proved to be unpalatable for many people. They gave up being His disciples ("disciples" here refers to followers in general, not to the 12 Apostles; this is evident in v. 67).

6:67. You do not want to leave too, do you? He framed this question to encourage their weak faith. The Twelve were affected by the apostasy of the many, and Jesus used that occasion to refine their faith. They did not fully understand His words either and would not until after the Resurrection (20:9).

6:68-69. Peter, as a spokesman, gave his confession of faith. The path may be difficult, but he was convinced that Jesus' words lead to life. No one else has the gift of eternal life. "We have believed and have known" is a better translation of the Greek perfect tenses (NIV: We believe and know). Peter was confident of the apostles' commitment to Jesus as the Holy One of God. This title is unusual (a demon addressed Jesus that way; Mark 1:24). It suggests Jesus' transcendence ("the Holy One") and His representation of the Father ("of God"); thus it is another way of confessing Him as Messiah. Peter knew this by a special work of the Father (cf. Matt. 16:17).

6:70-71. Jesus then asked, Have I not chosen you, the Twelve? John's Gospel does not record Jesus' choice of the Twelve. He assumed his readers knew the Synoptics or common church tradition (cf. Mark 3:13-19). This choice was not election to salvation, but was Jesus' call to them to serve Him. Yet, He said, one of you is a devil! In the light of John 13:2, 27, Satan's working in Judas was tantamount to Judas being the devil. In 6:70 the Greek does not have the indefinite article "a," so it could be translated "one of you is Satan (devil)." Jesus' knowledge of Judas (who was called Judas Iscariot because his father was Simon Iscariot) was still another example of His omniscience (cf. 1:47; 2:24-25; 6:15, 61). Later in the Upper Room, Jesus again said one of the Twelve would betray Him (13:21). John called Judas "the traitor" (18:5). The disciples later could reflect on this prophecy of His and be strengthened in their faith. Judas was a tragic figure, influenced by Satan; yet he was responsible for his own evil choices.

3. THE MINISTRY IN GALILEE (7:1-9)

This section prepares the way for another confrontation of Jesus with His opponents in Jerusalem. This ministry in relative obscurity in Galilee provides a delay in the coming conflict.

7:1. After this is a vague time reference. Since the events recorded in chapter 6 took place shortly before the Passover (6:4), that is, in April, and the Feast of Tabernacles (in October) was now near (7:2), about six months were spent by Jesus in His ministry in Galilee. Galilee was safer because His enemies were in Judea . . . waiting to take His life.

7:2. The Feast of Tabernacles was one of the three great Jewish feasts. Josephus called it their holiest and greatest feast (The Antiquities of the Jews 8. 4. 1). This feast, also called the Feast of Ingathering, was a time of thanksgiving for harvest. It was a happy time; devout Jews lived outdoors in booths made of tree branches for seven days as a reminder of God's provision in the desert during their forefather's wanderings. The feast also signified that God dwells with His people.

7:3. Jesus' brothers, sons of Mary and Joseph after Jesus' birth, were at this time unbelievers (cf. Mark 3:21, 31-35; 6:3; John 7:5). They logically argued that the messianic question could not be settled in Galilee, as Jerusalem was the religious capital. The popular Feast of Tabernacles would be the right time for Jesus to present Himself as the Messiah. If He would display His powers in Judea, He might be able to recapture the lost crowds.

7:4-5. It did not seem rational to Jesus' brothers for Him not to show off His glory. If He really was what He claimed to be, they reasoned, He should publicly demonstrate it. They advised Him to display Himself in a powerful, brilliant way: Show Yourself to the world. But God's way was a public display on a cross of humiliation. John explained that even His own brothers did not believe in Him. This sad note sounds again (cf. 1:10-11; 12:37). Proximity to Jesus, either in a family or as a disciple, does not guarantee faith.

7:6-7. Jesus responded that His time differed from theirs. They could come and go without any sigificance; for them any time is right. But He always pleased the Father, so His time movements were those the Father desired. It was not yet time for the public manifestation (the Cross). Several times John noted that Jesus' time had not yet come (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). Then in His intercessory prayer, just before the Cross, He began, "Father, the time has come" (17:1; cf. 12:23, 27; 13:1).

The world was not dangerous to the brothers of Jesus because they were part of it (the world cannot hate you). But the world hated Jesus because He is not of it. He had come into it as Light and pointed out its sin and rebellion against the Father. The world has its religions, its programs, its plans, its values, but Christ witnessed that it is all evil (ponēra, "wicked"). Partly because of this, He lived carefully in order to fulfill the Father's will.

7:8-9. I am not yet going up to this Feast is clearly the thought in light of verse 10. However, most Greek editions of the New Testament omit the word "yet," because it is considered a difficult reading, but it is more likely in the original. If Jesus said, "I am not going up to the Feast," was He lying since He did go to the Feast? (v. 10) No, He simply meant that He was not going up to the Feast "right then," as they suggested. Jesus then for a time stayed in Galilee, doing the tasks of ministry which the Father had ordained.

"Going up" may have a geographical meaning (since Jerusalem is in the hills) as well as a theological meaning (going back to the Father).

D. Jesus' return to Jerusalem and the resumption of hostility (7:10–10:42)

1. THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES (7:10–8:59)

a. The anticipation of the feast (7:10-13)

7:10. Because of plots to kill Him (vv. 1, 25) Jesus made a covert entry into the city. It was not yet the time for His messianic manifestation (the Cross).

7:11-13. While Jesus' enemies were searching for Him, people were debating this controversial Teacher. The opposition against Jesus was growing. A widespread whispering (lit., "grumbling"; cf. 6:41, 61), occurred. (Cf. the Israelites' grumbling in the wilderness.) The charge, He deceives the people, had ominous tones for the penalty for this, according to Talmudic law, was death by stoning. Since the whole crowd was Jewish, fear of the Jews meant fear of the religious leaders.

b. Jesus at the feast (7:14-36)

7:14-15. The first three days passed without anyone seeing Jesus. The crowds wondered if He would come and perhaps claim to be the Messiah. Then halfway through the Feast He began teaching in the temple courts. As the official religious leaders listened to Him along with the crowds they were amazed (cf. Mark 1:22). His teaching was learned and spiritually penetrating. Yet He had never been a disciple in any Rabbinic school. They wondered how this could be possible.

7:16-17. The religious authorities figured that either a person studied in a traditional school or else he was self-taught. But Jesus' reply pointed to a third alternative. His teaching was from God who had commissioned Him (cf. 12:49-50; 14:11, 24). Jesus was God-taught, and to know Jesus properly one must be God-taught (6:45). In order to evaluate Jesus' claim, one must desire to do God's will. Since Jesus is God's will for man, people must believe in Him (6:29). Faith is the prerequisite for understanding. Without faith it is impossible to please God (Heb. 11:6).

7:18. If Jesus were only self-taught (speaking on His own) or a genius, then His ministry would be self-exalting. But He did not seek honor for Himself. The true goal of man should be to glorify (honor) God and enjoy Him forever. Jesus is what man ought to be. His purpose is to represent His Father correctly (1:18). He is a Man of truth (i.e., reliable; cf. 6:28; 8:26) without any injustice.

7:19. The audience boasted in Moses' Law (9:28). Jesus attacked their self-confident religion. They assumed they were Law-keepers. But their hearts (inner thoughts) were full of evil (Mark 7:6-7, 20-22; Matt. 5:21-22). He knew them (John 2:24-25), and that their hatred would lead to murder.

7:20. Instead of repenting because His light had rebuked their darkness (3:19-20), they insulted Him, saying He was demon-possessed. People had said the same of John the Baptist (Matt. 11:18). Jesus had told His half-brothers the world hated Him (John 7:7), because "everyone who does evil hates the light" (3:20). To call Jesus, who is sent from God, demon-possessed is to call light darkness (cf. 8:48, 52; 10:20). They denied His accusation that they were trying to kill Him. But earlier they were in fact trying to do that very thing (5:18). (Cf. Peter who denied he would deny Jesus; Mark 14:29.)

7:21-23. The one miracle (lit., "work") Jesus referred to was His healing of the paralytic at the pool of Bethesda, which He had performed in Jerusalem at His last visit (5:1-18). This started a fierce controversy. Circumcision is a religious rite that predated Moses. Abraham circumcised as a sign of the covenant (Gen. 17:9-14). But Moses gave Israel circumcision in the sense of establishing it as part of the Levitical system. Under the Mosaic Law, "On the eighth day the boy is to be circumcised" (Lev. 12:3). If that day fell on a Sabbath, circumcising a boy would seemingly violate the Sabbath Law of rest. Yet the Jews circumcised on the Sabbath. Therefore, Jesus argued, if care for one part of the body was permitted, then certainly the healing of a whole body (that of the paralytic) should be allowed on the Sabbath. Hence they had no reason to be angry with Him.

7:24. Their problem was that they understood the Scriptures only superficially. They majored in minors and missed the intents of many passages (cf. Matt. 23:23; John 5:39-40). They were judging by mere appearances. Their superficial understanding was caused by their hostility against God's Representative. In their darkness they erred. Jesus called them to make a right judgment; ultimately this was a call for them to repent.

7:25-26. Some of the local people were amazed at His bold public teaching. They knew of a plot to kill Him. Yet the leaders were not doing what they said they would do. Why? Had the authorities changed their minds? People were confused over the lack of leadership in the nation. They felt that if He was a deceiver, He should be locked up, or if He was the Messiah, they should accept Him.

7:27. The crowds assumed that Jesus (this Man) was only a Galilean carpenter from the city of Nazareth. They also believed that the Messiah (the Christ) would be unknown until His public appearing. A reader of the Gospels recognizes the irony. Jesus is more than a Galilean; He is the Logos who was virgin-born in Bethlehem. Yet He was relatively unknown until His manifestation (the Cross and the Resurrection).

7:28-29. Cried out introduced a solemn announcement (cf. 1:15; 7:37; 12:44). He responded to their supposed knowledge of Him (7:27) with irony. He is from the Father. God is true ("reliable"; cf. v. 18; 8:26) and had sent Jesus.

Whereas His enemies did not know Jesus or God (1:18; cf. Matt. 11:27), Jesus knows the Father because of His origin (John 1:1, 14, 18) and divine mission.

7:30. Jesus' rebuke of the Jerusalemites stirred them to attempt to seize (piazō, "arrest"; cf. vv. 32, 44; 8:20; 10:39) Him. But the Father had ordered a time and place for His manifestation (His death), and until then all things would work in concert toward that goal. They could not lay a hand on Him because the Father's hand was over Him.

7:31. The exposure of Jesus and His teaching moved many in the crowd to believe on Him. They logically thought that His miraculous signs marked Him out as unusual. Certainly the Messiah could not do any more miracles than this Man. But the crowd's faith in Jesus as Messiah was tentative and was not linked to belief in His atoning death.

7:32. Since many in the crowd were turning to Jesus, they would set aside the Pharisees' traditional teachings (cf. Mark 7:1-23). The Pharisees, as the guardians of Jewish traditions (see comments on the Pharisees, John 1:24-25), realized something needed to be done about Jesus soon. The chief priests were leading priests, not just high priests. Arrest is the same Greek word (piazō) as "seize" in 7:30, 44; 8:20; 10:39.

7:33. While the plan to arrest Him proceeded, Jesus continued to teach. The nation had only a short time to decide about Him. This time was determined not by the authorities but by God. When He had completed God's plan for His earthly life, He would return to the Father.

7:34. You will look for Me is a prophecy that the Jewish nation will long for her Messiah. She is doing this now, not knowing that Jesus is her Messiah. Later she will weep for Him (Zech. 12:10-13; Rev. 1:7). The time of spiritual opportunity is now. A time will come when it is too late. He went bodily to heaven where unbelievers cannot come (cf. John 8:21). So people today do not have the unique opportunity people had when Jesus was speaking to them face to face.

7:35. Once more the words of Jesus were an enigma to the Jews (cf. vv. 15, 31, 41-42). Where could He possibly go that they could not find Him? Because they were of the earth, they could think only earthly thoughts (cf. Isa. 55:8). During some of that period the Jewish people lived in Palestine whereas others migrated throughout the Roman Empire and beyond, as far east as Babylonia. They were scattered among the Greeks. "Greeks" means not just people of Greece or Greek-speaking peoples but generally non-Jews or heathen (cf. "Greek" and "Jew" in Col. 3:11). The question then was, Will Jesus go teach the heathen? Without the Jews realizing it, this question was prophetic of the spread of the gospel after Jesus' Ascension.

7:36. The crowd, after pondering what Jesus meant, simply repeated their questions. They did not understand His words.

c. The last day of the Feast (7:37-52)

7:37. The Feast of Tabernacles was celebrated with certain festival rituals. One was a solemn procession each day from the temple to the Gihon Spring. A priest filled a gold pitcher with water while the choir sang Isaiah 12:3. Then they returned to the altar and poured out the water. This ritual reminded them of the water from the rock during the wilderness wanderings (Num. 20:8-11; Ps. 78:15-16). It also spoke prophetically of the coming days of Messiah (cf. Zech. 14:8, 16-19). The Feast's seventh and last day was its greatest (cf. Lev. 23:36). Jesus stood, in contrast with the Rabbis' usual position of being seated while teaching. Said in a loud voice (cf. John 1:15; 7:28; 12:44) was a way of introducing a solemn announcement. His offer, Come to Me and drink, was an offer of salvation (cf. 4:14; 6:53-56).

7:38. Streams of living water will flow from within one who believes in Jesus. That is, he will have a continual source of satisfaction, which will provide life continually (cf. 4:14). When Jesus added, As the Scripture has said, He did not identify the Old Testament passage(s) He had in mind. But He may have thought of Psalm 78:15-16 and Zechariah 14:8 (cf. Ezek. 47:1-11; Rev. 22:1-2).

7:39. John explained that the "living water" (v. 38) was the coming gift of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit within a believer satisfies his need of God, and provides him with regeneration, guidance, and empowerment. In the earliest Greek manuscripts, the words, Up to that time the Spirit had not been given, are simply, "for there was not yet Spirit." This cannot be taken in an absolute sense since the Spirit had actively worked among people in the Old Testament era. Jesus referred to the special baptizing, sealing, and indwelling work of the Spirit in the Church Age, which would start on the day of Pentecost (Acts 1:5, 8). Jesus said He would "send the Spirit" to His followers (John 15:26; 16:7). "The Spirit had not [yet] been given" to indwell believers permanently (cf. Ps. 51:11). That happened after Jesus was glorified, that is after His death, resurrection, and Ascension. "Glorified," "glory," and "glorify" are used frequently in John's Gospel (John 7:39; 11:4; 12:16, 23, 28; 13:31-32; 14:13; 15:8; 16:14; 17:1, 4-5, 10).

7:40-41. The crowd continued to debate Jesus' identity. Some saw Him as the Prophet mentioned by Moses (Deut. 18:15, 18). He would speak God's words to people but not in the awesome display of Mount Sinai from which Moses spoke. Jesus is indeed that predicted Prophet (Acts 3:22), but many rejected Him as such. Some said Jesus is the Christ, that is, the Messiah, but others rejected that idea because He came from Galilee (cf. John 7:52).

7:42. According to Samuel and Isaiah (2 Sam. 7:16; Isa. 11:1) the Messiah was to be born into a Davidic family. Micah predicted that He would be born in Bethlehem . . . David's hometown (Micah 5:2). Jesus is from a Davidic family (Matt. 1:1-17; Luke 3:23-38; Rom. 1:3) and was born in Bethlehem (Matt. 2:1-6), but the crowd ignorantly overlooked those facts.

7:43-44. The crowd's divided opinion about Jesus enabled Him to continue His ministry without immediate arrest (seize, piazō, is the same word for "arrest" in v. 32, and is also used in v. 30; 8:20; 10:39). Many of the people held a favorable opinion of Jesus even though they did not personally commit themselves to Him (cf. 7:12, 31, 40-41). His enemies had to be careful lest a riot would result. So for a time, no one touched Him. Twice later the Jews were again divided over Jesus (9:16; 10:19-21).

7:45-46. The temple guards, who were sent to arrest Jesus (v. 32) returned without Him. Responding to the question Why? the guards answered, No one ever spoke the way this Man does. Literally this is, "Never spoke thus a man," which implies that the guards sensed that He was most unusual or perhaps more than a man. The Gospels often reveal Jesus as a most impressive Teacher and Speaker (e.g., Matt. 7:29; 22:46). Though Jesus was opposed, many of those who heard Him were moved by Him (cf. John 7:15; 12:19).

7:47-48. The Pharisees' question to the guards, Has any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed in Him? reveals their pride. They thought they were too educated (v. 15) to be taken in by a deceiver. Ironically a number of the rulers did believe (12:42; 19:38-39). The Pharisees were jealous of Jesus' great popularity ("The whole world has gone after Him" [12:19]).

7:49. The Pharisees explained Jesus' popularity among the populace by suggesting that the people were too ignorant to recognize Jesus as a deceiver. The crowd (this mob), according to the Pharisees, did not know the Law. They did not study it, so they could not obey it. And since they did not obey it, they were under God's curse (Deut. 28:15). The irony of the situation was that the Pharisees, not the mob, were under God's wrath because they rejected God's revelation in Jesus (John 3:36).

7:50-51. The Mosaic Law (Deut. 1:16-17) and Rabbinic law stipulated that a person accused of a crime should get a fair hearing. Nicodemus appeared as a fair-minded man who did not want the Sanhedrin to make a false or hasty judgment. He had personally spoken with Jesus and knew He was from God (John 3:1-3; cf. 12:42; 19:38-39).

7:52. Even though Nicodemus was a respected teacher in the nation (3:10), he was insulted by the other members of the Sanhedrin. Their prejudice and hatred against Jesus were already strong enough to overthrow reason. The Sanhedrin accused Nicodemus of being as ignorant as the Galileans. A prophet does not come out of Galilee, they argued. So the messianic Prophet cannot be a Galilean (cf. 7:41).

Note on 7:53–8:11

7:53–8:11. Almost all textual scholars agree that these verses were not part of the original manuscript of the Gospel of John. The NIV states in brackets that "The earliest and most reliable manuscripts do not have John 7:53–8:11." The style and vocabulary of this passage differ from the rest of the Gospel, and the passage interrupts the sequence from 7:52–8:12. It is probably a part of true oral tradition which was added to later Greek manuscripts by copyists. For more discussion on the subject and an exposition of the passage, see the Appendix before the John Bibliography.

d. The Light of the world discourse (8:12-59)

A major feature of the Feast of Tabernacles was the lighting of giant lamps in the women's court in the temple (see the diagram). The wicks were made from the priests' worn-out garments. The light illuminated the temple area and the people gathered to sing praises and dance. The light reminded the Jewish people of how God was with them in their wanderings in the wilderness in a pillar of cloud which turned to fire at night (Num. 9:15-23).

8:12. This discourse continues Jesus' public teaching in the city of Jerusalem in the temple area. How fitting that during the Feast of Tabernacles, when the large lamps were burning, Jesus . . . said, I am the Light of the world (cf. 1:4, 9; 12:35, 46). The world is in darkness, a symbol of evil, sin, and ignorance (Isa. 9:2; Matt. 4:16; 27:45; John 3:19). "Light" in the Bible is a symbol of God and His holiness (Acts 9:3; 1 John 1:5). Jesus is "the Light," not merely a light or another light among many lights. He is the only Light, "the true Light" (John 1:9), for the whole world. When Jesus said, Whoever follows Me, He meant whoever believes and obeys Him (cf. 10:4-5, 27; 12:26; 21:19-20, 22). Jesus was speaking of salvation.

Coming to Christ for salvation results in a different kind of life. A believer will never walk in darkness, that is, he will not live in it (cf. 12:46; 1 John 1:6-7). He does not remain in the realm of evil and ignorance (John 12:46) for he has Christ as his Light and salvation (cf. Ps. 36:9).

8:13. Again the Pharisees challenged His claim. Since He appeared as His own witness, they said His testimony was not valid. Self-authentication is sometimes unacceptable. The Law required two witnesses to establish a fact in capital offenses (Deut. 17:6; 19:15; John 8:17). Rabbinic tradition rejected self-testimony.

8:14. Sometimes, however, self-authentication is the only way to truth. Sometimes an individual is the only one who knows the facts about himself. And only God can give testimony to Himself. Jesus was competent to give a true witness of Himself because as God He has a comprehensive knowledge of His origin and destiny (7:29). In spite of what the Pharisees thought they knew about Jesus, they were ignorant of His heavenly origin and destiny (cf. 7:33-34), and thus were invalid judges of Him.

8:15. The Pharisees, Jesus said, judged by human standards, that is, they were limited by superficial appearances. They saw only His flesh, not His deity, so they misjudged Him. By contrast, Jesus did not come to judge people but to save them (3:17). When He does judge in the future, He will simply execute the Father's will according to truth and the Law (cf. 5:27, 45). He Himself will pass judgment on no one.

8:16. Jesus' judging was totally unlike theirs. Theirs was biased and limited. His was not His own because of His unique union with the Father. Nor was His witness alone; He spoke with divine authority.

8:17-18. In your own Law may refer to Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15 (or to Rabbinic laws), which speak of the necessity of two witnesses. In Jesus' case only God could authenticate Him. God the Son and God the Father are the required two Witnesses. The Father sent Jesus and authenticated Him by the signs (miracles) He performed.

8:19. Jesus' teaching on God as His Father was unique (cf. 5:18), and the Jews were puzzled by His familiar way of talking about Him. The Pharisees asked Him, Where is Your Father? Was He talking about God, or (as they supposed) His human father? Their ignorance of Jesus showed their ignorance of God, for Jesus is the Revelation of the Father (cf. 1:14, 18; 14:7, 9).

8:20. Jesus spoke these words while teaching in the temple area near the place where the offerings were put. This was probably in the women's court (see the diagram at 8:12; cf. Mark 12:41-42). Jesus went there and instructed the people. No one seized (piazō, "arrested") Him (cf. John 7:30, 32, 44, 10:39) because, as John repeatedly pointed out, Jesus was working on God's time schedule to accomplish the Father's will (cf. 2:4; 7:6, 30; 12:23, 27; 13:1; 17:1).

8:21. Just as His time was short, so their opportunity for trusting in Him was limited. Soon He would go back to His Father and they could not follow Him there (cf. 7:33-34). You will die in your sin. The singular "sin" is that of rejecting the One who offers salvation (cf. 16:9). They would "die" because they continued living in the realm of sin, remaining under its power. Physical death would be their prelude to eternal separation from God.

8:22. Their question, Will He kill Himself? was both a misunderstanding and an ironic prophecy. They wondered if He would commit suicide and thus be unreachable. (Earlier they thought He meant He would go teach non-Jews in other lands [7:35].) Though Jesus did not kill Himself, He did lay down His own life (10:11, 18).

8:23. Jesus pointed out His heavenly origin and His real home (from above . . . not of this world). They belong here (from below . . . of this world), but He does not.

8:24. Jesus said twice they would die in their sins (cf. this pl. with the sing. "sin" in v. 21). If they would reject the Sin-Bearer (1:29), they would continue in the realm of sin. If they would reject Jesus as the revelation of God, they would miss their only hope for salvation. I am the One I claim to be in Greek is the enigmatic "I Am," which is a self-designation for God in certain contexts (cf. Isa. 43:10-11, LXX).

8:25. This revelation of Jesus as "I Am" only confused the Jews. And His words about their sins probably angered them. Who are You? they asked. He replied, Just what I have been claiming all along. This is the NIV's translation of a problematic Greek sentence. (Other translations make it a question or an exclamation.)

8:26-27. Jesus could have said much more and even condemned His hearers, but His purpose in coming was to give them and the world the message from the One who sent Him. This message is certainly true because the Sender is reliable (cf. 7:18, 28). John added that the people did not understand that Jesus was referring to the Father. God was unknown to them so they missed Jesus (cf. 1:18).

8:28. Jesus was now unknown to them. Only the Crucifixion (when the Son of Man would be lifted up; cf. 3:14; 12:32) would enable them to see Him for who He really is. He did not mean that all will be saved, but that the Cross would reveal that Jesus is God's Word (the Logos) to man, and that what He taught was just what the Father . . . taught Him.

8:29. Jesus' union with the Father is one of love and continual obedience (cf. 4:34; 5:30). Though people reject Jesus, the Father will never abandon Him. Jesus is never alone, and even on the cross the Father glorified Him (cf. 16:32; 17:5).

8:30. In spite of widespread unbelief and official rejection, the ministry of Jesus did bring many to faith (cf. 7:31). Yet this faith would need to be tested and refined. The words many put their faith in Him contrast with the next verse. Though large numbers of people responded to Jesus, many people fell away.

8:31-32. Jews who had believed Him indicates that some paid attention to Jesus' words without necessarily committing themselves to Him personally (cf. 6:53). It was possible to "believe" in the message of repentance and the coming kingdom without being born again. Continuing in the truth is the sign of true followers and learners (disciples). If they really grasped His message, they would find salvation truth. Knowing this salvation truth would liberate them from their bondage in sin.

8:33. Their response indicated that they had not grasped Christ's message. Even though they were under Rome, they insisted that as Abraham's descendants they were free men. How could Jesus free them when they were not slaves? They had no sense of their bondage to sin.

8:34. Three times in this chapter (vv. 34, 51, 58) Jesus said, I tell you the truth (cf. comments on 1:51). The very act of committing sin reveals that the one doing the act is under the power and authority of sin. Sin is personified as a cruel master. Paul used the same illustration (Rom. 6:15-23).

8:35. Just as Ishmael, Abraham's slave son, was cast out of the house (Gen. 21:8-21), so those in sin are in danger. Isaac was a son who belonged and therefore remained in the house. Were they like Ishmael, or Isaac? The issue was not physical genealogy but spiritual kinship.

8:36. Jesus is the true Son and seed of Abraham (Gal. 3:16). He remains in the house and is over it (Heb. 3:6). People can become truly free by becoming sons of God by faith in Christ, the Son (Gal. 3:26).

8:37. Physically the Jews of course are the descendants of Abraham. Yet this same crowd was seeking to kill Jesus, Abraham's true Son, thus showing that they were not Abraham's spiritual descendants (cf. Rom. 2:28-29; 9:6, 8; Gal. 3:29). They were rejecting His message (My word).

8:38. Jesus spoke what He had seen in the Father's presence (cf. v. 28). Thus His words are God's truth. But the people had no affinity for His words because they listened to their father (Satan; v. 44) and followed him. As yet Jesus had not identified their father, but the implication was becoming plain.

8:39. To counter the thrust of Jesus' argument, the Jews claimed Abraham as their spiritual father. But Jesus responded by stating that spiritual descendants of Abraham do what Abraham did, that is, they believe and obey God. They should respond in faith to the heavenly messenger and do what He says. John the Baptist had earlier warned the Jews against the danger of trusting in their Abrahamic lineage (Luke 3:8).

8:40. But they were rejecting the heavenly Messenger and seeking to kill the One who told them God's Word. Abraham did not do that; he was obedient to God's commands (cf. Gen. 12:1-9; 15:6; 22:1-19).

8:41. The Jews' works were different, so their father (cf. v. 38) must also be different. They could seek to evade Jesus' logic only by denying an illegitimate human paternity and claiming a heavenly one. In their denial, We are not illegitimate children, they may have been casting aspersions on Jesus' birth.

8:42. Love is a family affair (1 John 5:1). If the Jews really had God as their Father and really loved Him (the Gr. assumes they did not), then they would have loved Jesus because He came from God. Jesus again affirmed His position as God's Representative: the Father sent Him.

8:43. Jesus the Logos speaks to people, but their fundamental opposition to Him caused them to misunderstand His language. Unable to hear means a spiritual inability to respond. The rendering what I say is literally, "My word" (logos). Paul later wrote that "the man without the Spirit does not accept the things that come from the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him" (1 Cor. 2:14).

8:44. The devil is the enemy of life and truth. By a lie he brought spiritual and physical death to mankind (cf. Gen. 3:4, 13; 1 John 3:8, 10-15.) He still distorts truth (there is no truth in him . . . he is a liar and the father of lies) and seeks to lead people away from God, the Source of truth and life (2 Cor. 4:4). Since these Jews wanted Jesus' death and since they rejected the truth and embraced the lie, their family solidarity with Satan and his desires was certain. How different from having Abraham as their father!

8:45. Jesus, in contrast with them, lives in truth and proclaims it. Since unbelievers love darkness not light (cf. 3:19-20), and falsehood not reality, they reject Jesus.

8:46. Many accusations had been made against Jesus (cf. 7:12b, 20). But He is so committed to doing God's will ("I always do what pleases Him" [8:29]) that it is impossible to show any connection between Jesus and sin: Can any of you prove Me guilty of sin? Since this is so, they should have recognized His divine origin. His second question, Why don't you believe Me? is answered in the next verse.

8:47. Belonging to God is the basis for hearing Him. To hear God is not a matter of being able to discern audible sounds but of obeying the heavenly commands. Jesus' hearers absolute rejection of the heavenly Word was a clear reflection that they did not belong to God (lit., "are not of God").

8:48. Samaritans were a mixed race with a religion the Jews considered apostate (cf. comments on 4:4). To call Jesus a Samaritan was to use a term of abuse, referring to a heretic or one with a faulty worship. Their charge that Jesus was demon-possessed (cf. 7:20; 8:52; 10:20) suggested they thought He was mad, unclean, and evil. How ironic that after He said their father was the devil (8:44), they said He was demon-possessed!

8:49-50. Jesus' claims were not those of a demon-possessed person. He was seeking not self-exaltation but the honor of His Father. Their attempt to dishonor Him was an attack on His Father. (Cf. Hanun's attack on David's messengers, which was an insult against the king; 2 Sam. 10:1-6.)

When accused, Jesus did not seek to justify Himself (cf. John 8:54). He committed His case to the heavenly Judge, knowing that even if people judge the Son falsely, the Father will reverse their verdict and vindicate Him.

8:51. Again Jesus said, I tell you the truth (cf. comments on 1:51). Keeps My Word is another way of expressing a positive response to His revelation. (Similar expressions are "hear" His Word [5:24] and "hold" to His teaching [8:31].) It means to observe, pay attention to, or to fulfill. A person who obeys Jesus will never see death, that is, he will not be eternally separated from God (cf. 3:16; 5:24).

8:52-53. His opponents thought that He meant physical death. To taste death means to experience death (Heb. 2:9). So they concluded that since Abraham and the prophets had died, He must be insane or demon-possessed (cf. John 7:20; 8:48; 10:19). In Greek their first question in 8:53 expected a negative answer: "You are not greater than our father Abraham who died, are You?" The irony is that of course He is. But He had not come to proclaim His greatness.

8:54. If He honored Himself (cf. v. 50), His glory would have no value. The Father . . . is the One who will do the work of vindication. Yet the hostile unbelievers claimed a relationship to God. It is obvious that they were in error. Jesus' Father is God; their father was Satan.

8:55. In the deepest intimacy Jesus has a relationship and union wih God but His enemies did not. Jesus knows (oida, "to know inherently or intuitively") the Father, but they did not know (ginōskō, "to come to know by experience or observation") Him. For Him to deny this would be to lie just as they were lying. Jesus did know the Father and obey Him (keep His Word; cf. v. 52).

8:56. The unbelieving Jews were not Abraham's descendants spiritually (v. 39). But here when Jesus referred to your father Abraham He meant they were physically related to him. Abraham rejoiced to see My day, that is, the messianic salvation which God promised ("all peoples on earth will be blessed through you"; Gen. 12:3). Abraham by faith was granted a son Isaac, through whom the Seed (Christ) would come. How much of the messianic times God revealed to His friend Abraham is unknown. But it is clear that he knew of the coming salvation and he rejoiced in knowing about it and expecting it.

8:57. The unbelievers objected that one so young (not yet 50 years old) could not have seen Abraham. (Nothing should be inferred about Jesus' age from this remark.) They could not understand how Abraham and Jesus could have possibly had any visual contact.

8:58. Jesus then affirmed His superiority over the prophets and Abraham. Abraham came into being; but when he was born, Jesus was already existing. I Am is a title of Deity (cf. Ex. 3:14; Isa. 41:4; 43:11-13; John 8:28); the Jews' response (v. 59) showed they understood it that way. Jesus, because of His equality with God (5:18; 20:28; Phil. 2:6; Col. 2:9), existed from all eternity (John 1:1).

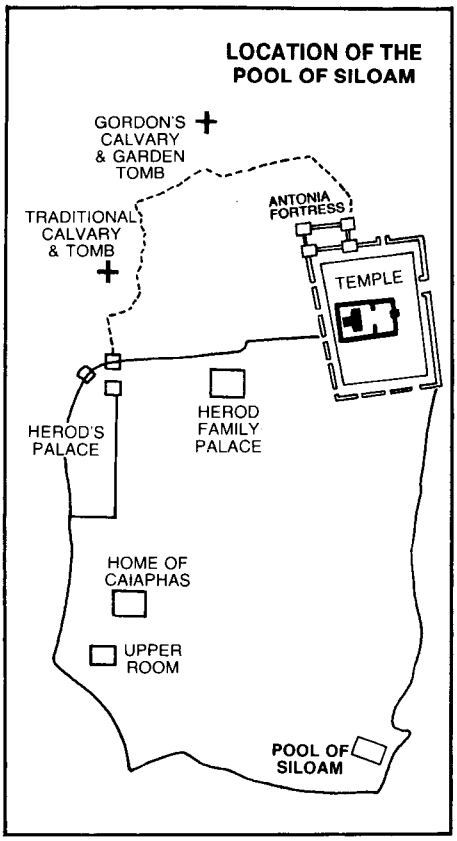
8:59. Jesus' clear affirmation of His deity evoked a crisis. They had to decide whether He was what He claimed or was a blasphemer (cf. 5:18). Stoning was the normal punishment for this sin. The words, but Jesus hid Himself, could refer to a supernatural means of escape. The NIV's slipping away (lit., "He went out") implies ordinary means (cf. 5:13; 10:39; 12:36). Once again His time had not yet come (cf. 2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20).



2. THE HEALING OF A MAN BORN BLIND (CHAP. 9)

Isaiah predicted that in messianic times various signs would occur. The Messiah would "open eyes that are blind" (Isa. 42:7; cf. Isa. 29:18; 35:5). Jesus often healed the blind (cf. Matt. 9:27-31; 12:22-23; 15:30; 20:29-34; 21:14). This miracle in John 9 is notable because Jesus had just proclaimed Himself as "the Light of the world" (8:12). As a public demonstration of His claim, He gave sight to a man born blind.

9:1. As He went along in the city of Jerusalem, Jesus saw a man with congenital blindness. Jesus' choice of this individual is significant (cf. 5:5-6). He is Sovereign in His works. That the man was blind from birth pointed out his seeming hopelessness. This illustrates man's spiritual blindness from birth (9:39-41; 2 Cor. 4:4; Eph. 2:1-3).

9:2-3. The disciples faced a theological problem. Believing that sin directly caused all suffering, how could a person be born with a handicap? Therefore either this man . . . sinned in his mother's womb (Ezek. 18:4) or his parents sinned (Ex. 20:5). Jesus therefore answered, Neither this man nor his parents sinned. These words do not contradict the universal sinfulness of man (cf. Rom. 3:9-20, 23). Instead Jesus meant that this man's blindness was not caused by some specific sin. Instead the problem existed so that . . . God could display His glory in the midst of seeming tragedy (cf. Ex. 4:11; 2 Cor. 12:9).

9:4-5. Day means the time allotted for Jesus to do God's will (to do the work of Him who sent Me). We includes the disciples and by extension all believers. Night is the limit set to do God's works. In Jesus' case it was His coming death. As the Light of the world Jesus gives people salvation (cf. 8:12). After His death, His disciples would be His lights (cf. Matt. 5:14; Eph. 5:8-14), bringing Christ to others.

9:6-7. Jesus placed clay (mud with . . . saliva) on the man's eyes. Interestingly man was made from this same substance—the dust of the earth (Gen. 2:7). Jesus probably used the clay as an aid to develop the man's faith, not as a medicine. Jesus' making of clay broke the Rabbinic regulations against kneading clay on the Sabbath (cf. John 9:14). Jesus then told the man, Wash in the pool of Siloam (this word means Sent). This is located at the southeast corner of Jerusalem (see the map), where Hezekiah's tunnel channeled water inside the city walls from the Gihon Spring. The man was "sent" there and Jesus was the One "sent" by the Father. The man . . . washed and went home seeing!

9:8-9. People argued over whether he was the same man who used to sit and beg. If so, it was incredible that he could see. Perhaps, they said, it was a case of mistaken identity. But he himself insisted, I am the man.

9:10-12. But if he were the same man, how was this possible? He gave a simple and factual account of how the miracle occurred. He referred to the Lord as the Man they call Jesus. Since he was blind at the time of the miracle, he had no idea where Jesus went.

9:13-14. Since this miracle was so unusual, the people brought the man to the Pharisees, who were highly respected in religious matters. To the Pharisees, healing (unless life was in danger) and making or kneading clay violated the Sabbath Law.

9:15-16. When the Pharisees . . . asked him about his situation, he briefly told what happened (cf. v. 11). The Pharisees believed that since Jesus "violated" the Sabbath He was a false prophet turning the people away from God (Deut. 13:3-5). So they concluded, This Man is not from God. Later they said Jesus was "a sinner" (John 9:24). Others concluded that the signs were so impressive that a sinner could not do them. (Of course a false prophet could do deceptive signs [cf. 2 Thes. 2:9].) The Pharisees then were divided (cf. John 7:43; 10:19).

9:17. The healed blind man's opinion was that Jesus is a prophet. Old Testament prophets sometimes performed miracles which marked them out as God's men.

9:18-20. The Jews still could not believe this man had been blind. Surely some mistake had been made. So they sent for his parents, who affirmed that he was their son who had been born blind.

9:21-23. But the parents . . . were afraid to hazard any opinions about the cure or the Healer. The Pharisees and other Jewish authorities (the Jews) had already . . . decided that Jesus was not the Messiah. Those who held such a heresy would be excommunicated from the synagogue. (Some scholars argue that this verse was added later by an editor, but there is nothing unthinkable about this kind of persecution during Jesus' ministry.) The parents shifted the pressure from themselves by noting that their son was of legal age to testify for himself (vv. 21, 23).

9:24. The authorities tried to pressure the healed man into withdrawing his testimony about Jesus: Give glory to God (cf. Josh. 7:19; 1 Sam. 6:5; Jer. 13:16) was a call to admit his guilt in siding with Jesus, whom they called a sinner. When they said We know, they were pressuring him. Unbelief often claims to be scientific, but here it was just stubborn and willful.

9:25-26. His witness was clear, and he refused to deny what he knew for certain: I was blind, but now I see! They asked him to go over the story again, hoping to find some contradiction in the man's report.

9:27. The ex-blind man got impatient. He had already told how he was healed (v. 15), but they did not listen to him. That is, they rejected it. He sarcastically asked if their request for him to repeat his report indicated that they had changed their hearts. Were they inquiring because they were interested in becoming Jesus' disciples?

9:28-29. The idea of this illiterate beggar sarcastically suggesting they were interested in Jesus was more than their pride could take. They insulted him and then claimed that they were Moses' disciples. Jesus to them was an unknown. We don't even know where He comes from. Yet they claimed to know Moses who, Jesus said, wrote about Him (5:46).

9:30-33. The beggar proceeded to teach them since they admitted ignorance of Jesus' origin. The irony is strong for the reader knows His origin (1:14, 18). According to the beggar's logic, this miracle was notable and unique. He said that no one had ever heard of . . . a man born blind receiving sight. He reasoned that God grants not the requests of sinners but those of the righteous (cf. Elijah, James 5:16-18). Therefore this Man, he said, is from God. Otherwise He could do no miracles.

9:34. Upstaged by a beggar, they could only insult him again and throw him out of the synagogue (cf. v. 22). They reasoned that his blindness must have been due to some specific "sin" (they forgot the Book of Job). But they were irrational. How could anybody be steeped in sin at birth? Everybody is born with a sinful nature (Ps. 51:5; Rom. 5:12), but a baby can hardly commit numerous acts of sin moments after it is born!

9:35. Taking the initiative again (cf. v. 6), Jesus found the former blind man.

Do you (emphatic in the Gr.) believe in the Son of Man? This was a call to commitment. "Son of Man" is a title of Messiah which includes a rich background (cf. Dan. 7:13; and comments on Mark 2:10).

9:36-37. The beggar responded that he was willing to believe but he was ignorant. Jesus then disclosed Himself and gave the beggar the necessary knowledge for faith. Faith involves an act of the will, based on information.

9:38. After Jesus revealed that He is the Son of Man, the man responded in faith (Lord, I believe) and worshiped Him. His worship of Jesus replaced his worship in the synagogue. The Jews had cast him out of the synagogue, but Jesus does not cast out those who come to Him (6:37). One goal of salvation is worship of the One who saves (4:23).

9:39. Does this verse contradict 3:17? According to that verse (and 12:47) Jesus was not sent "to condemn the world." But here Jesus said, For judgment I have come into this world. Jesus meant He came to pronounce decisions on the ungodly, like a judge (cf. 5:22, 27). The blind who come to sight are those who, admitting their helplessness and inability, trust Jesus for salvation. Those who see and become blind are those whose self-trust and pride blinds them to the wonders of Jesus. He does not condemn them by making them blind; they blind themselves by rejecting Him and Satan contributes to that blinding (2 Cor. 4:4).

9:40-41. Some of the Pharisees . . . asked, literally, "We also are not blind, are we?" They expected a negative answer because they assumed that certainly they, of all men, possessed spiritual perception. Sin constantly deceives people so they live in falsehood. Jesus replied, If the Pharisees were blind to spiritual things absolutely, they might have claimed ignorance as a defense. But their claims and pretentions of spiritual insight (you claim you can see) and leadership made them culpable. They were responsible for their sins because they sinned willfully. It is dangerous to be a teacher of spiritual truths (cf. 3:10; Rom. 2:19-24; James 3:1).

3. THE GOOD SHEPHERD DISCOURSE (10:1-21)

The discourse on the Good Shepherd continues the same setting as in chapter 9. Comparing people to a shepherd and his sheep was common in the Middle East. Kings and priests called themselves shepherds and their subjects sheep. The Bible makes frequent use of this analogy. Many of the great men of the Old Testament were shepherds (e.g., Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David). As national leaders, Moses and David were both "shepherds" over Israel. Some of the most famous passages in the Bible employ this motif (cf. Ps. 23; Isa. 53:6; Luke 15:1-7).

Jesus developed this analogy in several ways. The connection with the preceding chapter is seen in Jesus' contrast of the Pharisees with the man born blind. The Pharisees—spiritually blind while claiming insight (John 9:41)—were false shepherds. As the True Shepherd, Jesus came to seek and to heal. His sheep hear and respond to His voice.

10:1-2. Verses 1-5 describe a morning shepherding scene. A shepherd enters through a gate into a walled enclosure which has several flocks in one sheep pen. The enclosure, with stone walls, is guarded at night by a doorkeeper to prevent thieves and beasts of prey from entering. Anyone who would climb the wall would do it for no good purpose.

10:3-4. By contrast, the shepherd has a right to enter the sheep pen. The watchman opens the gate, and the shepherd comes in to call his own sheep by name (out from the other flocks). Shepherds knew their sheep well and gave them names. As sheep hear the sound of their owner's familiar voice, they go to him. He leads them out of the pen till his flock is formed. Then he goes out toward the fields with the sheep following him.

10:5-6. If a stranger enters the pen, the sheep run away from him because his voice is not familiar. The point of this figure of speech consists in how a shepherd forms his flock. People come to God because He calls them (cf. vv. 16, 27; Rom. 8:28, 30). Their proper response to His call is to follow Him (cf. John 1:43; 8:12; 12:26; 21:19, 22). But this spiritual lesson was missed by those who heard Jesus, even though they certainly understood the local shepherd/sheep relationship. In their blindness, they could not see Jesus as the Lord who is the Shepherd (cf. Ps. 23).

10:7-9. Jesus then developed the shepherd/sheep figure of speech in another way. After a shepherd's flock has been separated from the other sheep, he takes them to pasture. Near the pasture is an enclosure for the sheep. The shepherd takes his place in the doorway or entrance and functions as a door or gate. The sheep can go out to the pasture in front of the enclosure, or if afraid, they can retreat into the security of the enclosure. The spiritual meaning is that Jesus is the only Gate by which people can enter into God's provision for them.

When Jesus said, All who ever came before Me were thieves and robbers, He referred to those leaders of the nation who cared not for the spiritual good of the people but only for themselves. Jesus the Shepherd provides security for His flock from enemies (whoever enters through Me will be saved, or "kept safe"). He also provides for their daily needs (the sheep come in and go out, and find pasture).

10:10. The thief, that is, a false shepherd, cares only about feeding himself, not building up the flock. He steals sheep in order to kill them, thus destroying part of the flock. But Christ has come to benefit the sheep. He gives life which is not constricted but overflowing. The thief takes life; Christ gives it to the full.

10:11. Jesus then developed the sheep/shepherd figure in a third way. When evening settled over the land of Palestine, danger lurked. In Bible times lions, wolves, jackals, panthers, leopards, bears, and hyenas were common in the countryside. The life of a shepherd could be dangerous as illustrated by David's fights with at least one lion and one bear (1 Sam. 17:34-35, 37). Jacob also experienced the labor and toil of being a faithful shepherd (Gen. 31:38-40). Jesus said, I am the Good Shepherd (cf. John 10:14). In the Old Testament, God is called the Shepherd of His people (Pss. 23:1; 80:1-2; Ecc. 12:11; Isa. 40:11; Jer. 31:10). Jesus is this to His people, and He came to give His life for their benefit (cf. John 10:14, 17-18; Gal. 1:4; Eph. 5:2, 25; Heb. 9:14). He is also the "Great Shepherd" (Heb. 13:20-21) and "the Chief Shepherd" (1 Peter 5:4).

10:12-13. In contrast with the Good Shepherd, who owns, cares, feeds, protects, and dies for His sheep, the one who works for wages—the hired hand—does not have the same commitment. He is interested in making money and in self-preservation. If a wolf attacks (harpazei, lit., "snatches away"; cf. this same verb in v. 28), he runs away and his selfishness causes the flock to be scattered. Obviously he cares nothing for the sheep. Israel had many false prophets, selfish kings, and imitation messiahs. The flock of God suffered constantly from their abuse (Jer. 10:21-22; 12:10; Zech. 11:4-17).

10:14-15. In contrast with a hired workman, the Good Shepherd has an intimacy with and personal interest in the sheep (cf. vv. 3, 27). I know My sheep stresses His ownership and watchful oversight. My sheep know Me stresses their reciprocal knowledge of and intimacy with Him. This intimacy is modeled on the loving and trusting mutual relationship of the Father and the Son. Jesus' care and concern is evidenced by His prediction of His coming death for the flock. Some shepherds have willingly died while protecting their sheep from danger. Jesus willingly gave His life for His sheep (vv. 11, 15, 17-18)—on their behalf as their Substitute (Rom. 5:8, 10; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Peter 2:24; 3:18). His death gives them life.

10:16. The other sheep . . . not of this flock refers to Gentiles who would believe. His coming death would bring them also to the Father. They too will listen to My voice. Jesus continues to save people as they hear His voice in the Scriptures. Acts 18:9-11 illustrates how this works out in the history of the church. "I have many people in this city" (i.e., Corinth), the Lord told Paul. One flock and one Shepherd speaks of the church with believers from Jewish and Gentile "sheep pens" in one body with Christ as Head (cf. Eph. 2:11-22; 3:6).

10:17-18. Again Jesus predicted His death, saying four times that He would voluntarily lay down His life (vv. 11, 14, 17-18). The Father has a special love for Jesus because of His sacrificial obedience to the will of God. Jesus predicted His resurrection twice (He would take . . . up His life again [vv. 17-18]) and His sovereignty (authority) over His own destiny. His death was wholly voluntary: No one takes it from Me. Jesus was not a helpless pawn on history's chessboard.

10:19-21. For the third time Jesus' teaching divided the people (cf. 7:43; 9:16). Many in this hostile crowd judged Him to be demon-possessed and raving mad (cf. 7:20; 8:48, 52). But others figured that He was not demon-possessed, for how could a demon open the eyes of the blind? (cf. 9:16)

4. THE FINAL PUBLIC TEACHING (10:22-42)

John then recorded a final confrontation of Jesus with the hostile Jerusalem crowd (vv. 22-39), followed by His withdrawal beyond Jordan (vv. 40-42) because of attempts to kill Him.

10:22-23. The Feast of Dedication is nowadays called Hanukkah or the Feast of Lights. It commemorates the reconsecration of the temple by Judas Maccabeus in 165 B.C. after its desecration in 168 B.C. by Antiochus IV (Epiphanes). The time for the eight-day feast was in December. It was winter. The feast reminded the Jewish people of their last great deliverance from their enemies. Solomon's Colonnade was a long covered walkway on the east side of the temple. Two months had elapsed since Jesus' last confrontation with the Jews (7:1–10:21) at the Feast of Tabernacles (7:2), which was in October. Jesus again returned to the temple area.

10:24. The Jews gathered around Him. Actually they "closed in (ekyklōsan) on Him." The hostile Jerusalem leaders were determined to pin Him down so they surrounded Him. His enigmatic sayings plagued them, and they wanted Him to declare Himself on their terms. How long will You keep us in suspense? they asked. "Keep us in suspense" is literally "hold up our soul." They insisted, If You are the Christ, tell us plainly.

10:25-26. Jesus responded that the miracles (lit., "works"; cf. vv. 32, 38) He had done are clear evidence that He is from the Father (cf. Isa. 35:3-6; John 3:2; 9:32-33). He is the One the Father sent, but He did not match their expectations. He was no Judas Maccabeus nor would His ministry be like Moses'. Their problem was a lack of spiritual perception and faith. But you do not believe because you are not My sheep is a simple statement of fact about their conduct. It also reminds one of the ultimate mystery of God's election (cf. 6:37).

10:27. Jesus' flock is responsive to His teaching. They listen to His voice (vv. 3-5, 16). They have an intimacy with Jesus (I know them; cf. vv. 3, 14), they understand His message of salvation, and they follow Him (vv. 4-5). To follow Him means to obey the Father's will as Jesus did.

10:28. This is one of the clearest statements in the Bible that one who believes in Jesus for salvation will never be lost. Believers sin and stumble, but Jesus as the perfect Shepherd loses none of His flock (cf. Luke 22:31-32). Eternal life is a gift (John 3:16, 36; 5:24; 10:10; Rom. 6:23). If one has it, he has it eternally. They shall never perish is a strong affirmation in the Greek: ou mē apolōntai eis ton aiōna ("they will indeed not ever perish"; cf. John 3:16, mē apolētai, "never perish"). The security of the sheep is found in the ability of the Shepherd to defend and preserve His flock. Such security does not depend on the ability of the frail sheep. No one can even snatch His sheep out of His hand. "Snatch" is harpasei, related to harpax ("ravenous wolves, robbers"). This is a fitting word here for the same verb (harpazei) is used in 10:12, "the wolf attacks" (lit., "snatches away").

10:29. My Father, who has given them to Me, is greater than all. That is, no one is strong enough to snatch any of Jesus' flock from the Father's hand (or from Jesus' hand, v. 28). As the NIV margin states, verse 29a in many early Greek manuscripts reads, "What My Father has given Me is greater than all." The thought of the verse in either case is that the Father who is omnipotent secures the flock by His power and protection. God's plan of salvation for Jesus' flock cannot be aborted.

10:30. When Jesus said, I and the Father are One, He was not affirming that He and the Father are the same Person. The Son and the Father are two Persons in the Trinity. This is confirmed here by the fact that the word "One" is neuter. Instead, He was saying They have the closest possible unity of purpose. Jesus' will is identical to the Father's regarding the salvation of His sheep. And yet absolute identity of wills involves identity of nature. Jesus and the Father are One in will (and also in nature for both are God; cf. 20:28; Phil. 2:6; Col. 2:9).

10:31-32. The hostile crowd reacted and attempted to stone Jesus (cf. 8:59) because they understood the implications of His claim. Jesus' courage was displayed in His calm question: Which of His many great miracles (lit., "works"; cf. 10:25, 38) from the Father was their reason for wanting to stone Him?

10:33. They claimed that they found no objection in His works. (Yet His healings on the Sabbath had angered them [5:18; 9:16].) They said they objected because He, a mere man, claimed to be God. This, they said, was blasphemy. And yet, ironically, Jesus, who is God, did become Man (1:1, 14, 18). Jesus did not walk around Palestine saying "I am God," but His interpretation of the Sabbath and His words about His union with the Father revealed His claim of oneness in nature with God.

10:34. Jesus' response to their objection requires a bit of insight into the methods of argument common in Rabbinic discussions. He first directed them to the Old Testament: in your Law. Normally "the Law" refers to the first five books. But here it means all the Old Testament, for Jesus quoted from the Psalms. It was "your" Law in the sense that they gloried in their possession of it, and also in the sense that they should submit to its authority over them. Psalm 82 speaks of God as the true Judge (Ps. 82:1, 8) and of men, appointed as judges, who were failing to provide true judgment for God (Ps. 82:2-7). "Gods" in Psalm 82:1, 6 refers to these human judges. In this sense, God said to the Jews, You are gods. In no way does this speak of a divine nature in man.

10:35. As seen in verse 34, Jesus argued that in certain situations (as in Ps. 82:1, 6) men were called . . . "gods." The Hebrew word for God or gods is 'ĕlōhîm. This word is used elsewhere (e.g., Ex. 21:6; 22:8) to mean human judges. Jesus added to His argument the words, and the Scripture cannot be broken, so that no one could evade its force by saying an error was in the Scriptures. This important text clearly points up the inerrancy of the Bible.

10:36. Jesus now completed His argument. Since the inerrant Bible called their judges "gods," the Jews could not logically accuse Him of blasphemy for calling Himself God's Son since He was under divine orders (set apart) and on God's mission (sent into the world).

10:37-38. Though the Jews were reluctant to believe Jesus' words, God was giving them miracles (lit., "works"; cf. vv. 25, 32), which he was doing through Jesus. These signs were given for their learning so that by pondering their significance they might recognize Jesus' oneness with the Father (the Father is in Me, and I in the Father). Nicodemus had recognized this for he said, "No one could perform [those] miraculous signs . . . if God were not with Him" (3:2).

10:39. Again an attempt was made to seize (from piazō) Him (cf. 7:30, 32, 44; 8:20), perhaps to bring Him to trial. Once again, since it was not God's time, He escaped (cf. 5:13; 8:59; 12:36). No explanation is given as to how He escaped.

10:40-42. Because of their hostility, Jesus went . . . across the Jordan to Perea, which had been the location of John the Baptist's activity (1:28). Jesus' ministry here was received much more favorably, probably because the Baptist had prepared the people there. John, even though dead, was still having influence in people's lives as they remembered his witness. Though John never performed a miraculous sign (sēmeion), the people believed his witness about Jesus. By contrast, the hostile Jerusalem crowd had seen His signs and yet disobeyed. In Perea many trusted Jesus as Savior.

E. The great sign at Bethany (11:1-44)

This climactic miracle of raising Lazarus from the dead was Jesus' public evidence of the truth of His great claim, "I am the Resurrection and the Life." Death is the great horror which sin has produced (Rom. 5:12; James 1:15). Physical death is the divine object lesson of what sin does in the spiritual realm. As physical death ends life and separates people, so spiritual death is the separation of people from God and the loss of life which is in God (John 1:4). Jesus has come so that people may live full lives (10:10). Rejecting Jesus means that one will not see life (3:36) and that his final destiny is "the second death," the lake of fire (Rev. 20:14-15).

11:1-2. This Lazarus is mentioned in the New Testament only in this chapter and in chapter 12. Bethany (cf. 11:18) is on the east side of the Mount of Olives. Another Bethany is in Perea (cf. 1:28). Luke added some information on the two sisters Mary and Martha (Luke 10:38-42). This Mary . . . was the same one who later (see John 12:1-10) poured perfume on the Lord and wiped His feet with her hair. However, John may be assuming that the original readers of his Gospel already had some knowledge of Mary (cf. Mark 14:3-9).

11:3. The sisters assumed, because of the Lord's ability and His love for Lazarus, that He would immediately respond to their word about Lazarus' illness and come.

11:4. Jesus did not go immediately (see v. 6). But His delay was not from lack of love (cf. v. 5), or from fear of the Jews. He waited till the right moment in the Father's plan. Lazarus' sickness would not end in death, that is, in permanent death. Instead Jesus would be glorified in this incident (cf. 9:3). This statement is ironic. Jesus' power and obedience to the Father were displayed, but this event led to His death (cf. 11:50-53), which was His true glory (17:1).

11:5-6. In spite of Jesus' love for all three (Martha and her sister and Lazarus), He waited two more days. Apparently (vv. 11, 39) Lazarus was already dead when Jesus heard about him. Jesus' movements were under God's direction (cf. 7:8).

11:7-10. His disciples knew that His going to Judea, would be dangerous (10:31). So they tried to prevent Him from going. Jesus spoke in a veiled way to illustrate that it would not be too dangerous to go to Bethany. In one sense He was speaking of walking (living) in physical light or darkness. In the spiritual realm when one lives by the will of God he is safe. Living in the realm of evil is dangerous. As long as He followed God's plan, no harm would come till the appointed time. Applied to people then, they should have responded to Jesus while He was in the world as its Light (cf. 1:4-7; 3:19; 8:12; 9:5). Soon He would be gone and so would this unique opportunity.

11:11-12. Jesus then said, Our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep. The word "friend" has special significance in Scripture (cf. 15:13-14; James 2:23). This "sleep" is the sleep of death. Since the coming of Christ the death of a believer is regularly called a sleep (cf. Acts 7:60; 1 Cor. 15:20; 1 Thes. 4:13-18). Dead Christians are asleep not in the sense of an unconscious "soul sleep," but in the sense that their bodies appear to be sleeping. The disciples wrongly assumed that Jesus meant Lazarus had not died, but was sleeping physically (cf. John 11:13) and was on his way to recovery: If he sleeps, he will get better.

11:13-15. As was often the case in the Gospels, Jesus was speaking about one thing but the disciples were thinking about another. The words Lazarus is dead, and for your sake I am glad I was not there seem shocking at first. But if Lazarus had not died, the disciples (and readers of all ages) would not have had this unique opportunity to have their faith quickened. Lazarus' death was so that you may believe.

11:16. Didymus means "twin." Thomas is often called "doubting Thomas" because of the incident recorded in 20:24-25. But here he took the leadership and showed his commitment to Christ, even to death. That we may die with Him is ironic. On one level it reveals Thomas' ignorance of the uniqueness of Christ's atoning death. On another level it is prophetic of many disciples' destinies (12:25).

11:17. Apparently Lazarus had died soon after the messengers left. Jesus was then a day's journey away. Since Palestine is warm and decomposition sets in quickly, a person was usually buried the same day he died (cf. v. 39).

11:18-19. The fact that Bethany was less than two miles from Jerusalem points up two things. It explains why many Jews from Jerusalem were at the scene of this great miracle (vv. 45-46). It also prepares the reader for the coming climax which was to take place in the great city. When a person died, the Jews mourned for a prolonged period of time. During this period it was considered a pious duty to comfort the bereaved.

11:20-22. Martha, the activist, went . . . to meet Jesus while Mary, the contemplative sister, waited. (Cf. Luke 10:39-42 for a similar portrayal of their personalities.) Martha's greeting is a confession of faith. She really believed that Jesus could have healed her brother if He had been there. No criticism of Jesus seems to be implied since she knew her brother was dead before the messengers got to Jesus. Her words But I know . . . God will give You whatever You ask might imply by themselves that she was confident Lazarus would be resuscitated. But her actions in protest at the tomb (John 11:39) and her words to Jesus (v. 24) contradict that interpretation. Her words may be taken as a general statement of the Father's blessing on Jesus.

11:23-24. Your brother will rise again. Since the word "again" is not in the Greek it is better to omit it in the translation. This promise sets the stage for Jesus' conversation with Martha. She had no thought of an immediate resuscitation but she did believe in the final resurrection at the last day.

11:25-26. I am the Resurrection and the Life. This is the fifth of Jesus' great "I am" revelations. The Resurrection and the Life of the new Age is present right now because Jesus is the Lord of life (1:4). Jesus' words about life and death are seemingly paradoxical. A believer's death issues in new life. In fact, the life of a believer is of such a quality that he will never die spiritually. He has eternal life (3:16; 5:24; 10:28), and the end of physical life is only a sleep for his body until the resurrection unto life. At death the spiritual part of a believer, his soul, goes to be with the Lord (cf. 2 Cor. 5:6, 8; Phil. 1:23).

11:27. Martha gave a great confession of faith in Christ. She agreed with Jesus' exposition about eternal life for those who believe in Him. Then she confessed three things about Jesus. He is (a) the Christ ("Messiah"), (b) the Son of God—which is probably a title of the Messiah (cf. 1:49; Ps. 2:7)—and (c) the One who was to come into the world (lit., "the Coming One"; cf. John 12:13). She believed that Jesus is the Messiah who came to do God's will, but as yet she had no hint of the coming miracle regarding her brother.

11:28-30. Martha then told Mary that Jesus the Teacher was asking for her. He evidently wanted to have a private conversation with Mary. His purpose was probably to comfort and instruct her. "The Teacher" is a notable title for it was unusual for a Jewish Rabbi to instruct a woman (cf. 4:1-42).

11:31-32. Mary's sudden departure to see Jesus caused the crowd of Jewish comforters to follow her. So a private session with Jesus became impossible. Reaching Jesus, Mary fell at His feet. This is significant, for on a previous occasion she had sat at Jesus' feet listening to His teaching (Luke 10:39). Her greeting to Jesus was the same as her sister's (John 11:21). She felt the tragedy would have been averted if He had been present. Her faith was sincere but limited.

11:33-34. In great contrast with the Greek gods' apathy or lack of emotion, Jesus' emotional life attests the reality of His union with people. Deeply moved may either be translated "groaned" or more likely "angered." The Greek word enebrimēsato (from embrimaomai) seems to connote anger or sternness. (This Gr. verb is used only five times in the NT, each time of the Lord's words or feelings: Matt. 9:30; Mark 1:43; 14:5; John 11:33, 38.)

Why was Jesus angry? Some have argued that He was angry because of the people's unbelief or hypocritical wailing. But this seems foreign to the context. A better explanation is that Jesus was angry at the tyranny of Satan who had brought sorrow and death to people through sin (cf. 8:44; Heb. 2:14-15). Also Jesus was troubled (etaraxen, lit., "stirred" or "agitated," like the pool water in John 5:7; cf. 12:27; 13:21; 14:1, 27). This disturbance was because of His conflict with sin, death, and Satan.

11:35-37. Jesus' weeping differed from that of the people. His quiet shedding of tears (edakrysen) differed from their loud wailing (klaiontas, v. 33). His weeping was over the tragic consequences of sin. The crowd interpreted His tears as an expression of love, or frustration at not being there to heal Lazarus.

11:38-39. Disturbed emotionally (cf. comments on deeply moved, in v. 33), He came to the tomb. Tombs were often cut into limestone making a cave in the side of a wall of rock. A stone was placed over the entrance. Jesus commanded that the stone door be taken away. To do so was to risk defilement. But obedience was necessary if Jesus' purpose was to be realized. The scene was highly dramatic. The crowd watched and listened. Mary was weeping and Martha objected because after four days putrefaction had set in.

11:40. Jesus reminded Martha of His earlier promise (vv. 25-26; cf. v. 4). If she believed His word that He is the Resurrection and the Life and trusted Him, God would be glorified. But unless the sisters had trusted Jesus, permission would not have been given to open the tomb.

11:41-42. With the stone taken away, the tension mounted. What would Jesus do? He simply thanked His Father for granting His request. He knew He was doing the Father's will in manifesting His love and power. His prayer of thanksgiving was public, not so that He would be honored as a Wonder-Worker but so He would be seen as the Father's obedient Son. The granting of His request by the Father would give clear evidence to the people that He had been sent by the Father and would cause the people to believe (cf. Elijah's prayer; 1 Kings 18:37).

11:43-44. On other occasions Jesus had said that men would hear His voice and come out of their graves (5:28) and that His sheep hear His voice (10:16, 27). After His brief prayer He called (ekrauga-sen, lit., "shouted loudly") in a loud voice. This verb is used only nine times in the New Testament, eight of them in the Gospels (Matt. 12:19; Luke 4:41; John 11:43; 12:13; 18:40; 19:6, 12, 15; Acts 22:23).

Jesus shouted only three words: Lazarus come out! Augustine once remarked that if Jesus had not said Lazarus' name all would have come out from the graves. Immediately, the dead man came out. Since he was wrapped in strips of linen, a special work of God's power must have brought him out. Jesus' directive to the people, Take off the grave clothes, enabled Lazarus to move on his own and at the same time gave evidence that he was alive and not a ghost.

This event is a marvelous picture of God's Son bringing life to people. He will do this physically at the Rapture for church saints (1 Thes. 4:16), and at His return for Old Testaments saints (Dan. 12:2) and Tribulation saints (Rev. 20:4, 6). Also He now speaks and calls spiritually dead people to spiritual life. Many who are dead in sins and trespasses believe and come to life by the power of God (Eph. 2:1-10).

F. The plot to kill Jesus (11:45-57)

11:45-47a. Jesus' revelation of Himself always produces two responses. For many of the Jews, this miracle was clear proof of Jesus' claim. In response they trusted Him. But others were only hardened in sin or confused. They went to His enemies, the Pharisees, and reported what had happened. This miraculous sign was so significant that the chief priests and the Pharisees decided to call an emergency session of the Sanhedrin (see comments on 3:1 on the Sanhedrin). Doubtless they felt that Jesus was some kind of magician who by secret arts was deceiving the people.

11:47b-48. The council expressed its inability to solve the problem by continuing to do what they had been doing. Official disapproval, excommunication, and counterteaching were not stopping Jesus' influence. The outcome would be insurrection and the Romans would crush the Jewish revolt; taking away both our place (i.e., the temple) and our nation.

11:49-50. Caiaphas was the high priest that year (cf. 18:13-14, 24, 28). Originally the high priest held his position for a lifetime, but the Romans were afraid of letting a man gain too much power. So the Romans appointed high priests at their convenience. Caiaphas had the office from A.D. 18 to 36. His contempt was expressed in his words, You know nothing at all! His judgment was that this Man must be sacrificed if the nation was to continue in Rome's favor. The alternative was destruction of the Jewish nation in war (11:48). But their rejection of Jesus did not solve the problem. The Jewish people followed false shepherds into a war against Rome (A.D. 66–70), which did in fact destroy their nation.

11:51-53. John by God's Spirit recognized a deep irony in Caiaphas' words. As the high priest, Caiphas pointed to the last sacrificial Lamb in a prophecy he did not even know he made. Caiphas meant Jesus had to be killed, but God intended the priest's words as a reference to His substitutionary atonement. Jesus' death would abolish the old system in God's eyes by fulfilling all its types and shadows. His death was not only for Jews but also for the world, thus making a new body from both (cf. Eph.

2:14-18; 3:6). The Sanhedrin then decided to kill Jesus.

11:54. Jesus . . . withdrew from Bethany to a village 15 or so miles to the north called Ephraim. The little village provided a place for rest and it was close to the wilderness of Judea in case it was necessary to escape.

11:55-57. Jewish pilgrims went up to the Passover feast at Jerusalem and looked for Jesus. Previously (2:13-25) He had attended the national festivals during which time He publicly taught in the temple area. Would He continue this pattern of ministry? Large crowds gathering in the city kept looking for Him. The religious authorities gave orders for anyone to report if he found out where Jesus was so they could arrest Him.

G. The conclusion of Jesus' public ministry (12:1-36)

1. THE ANOINTING (12:1-8)

John in chapter 12 concluded his record of Jesus' public ministry with (a) the account of Mary's anointing of Jesus (which set the stage for His coming sacrifice), (b) His Triumphal Entry, and (c) the prediction of His death.

12:1-2. The time schedule now was more definite and critical: It was six days before the Passover. Jesus went back from Ephraim (11:54) to Bethany, where Lazarus lived, and attended a dinner in His honor. Mark wrote that the place was Simon the Leper's home (Mark 14:1-11). The dinner must have been a joyous occasion with Mary, Martha, and Lazarus there. The relationship of this family to Simon is not known, but it must have been close since Martha served.

12:3. The pure nard was a fragrant oil prepared from the roots and stems of an aromatic herb from northern India. It was an expensive perfume, imported in sealed alabaster boxes or flasks which were opened only on special occasions. Mary's lavish gift (a pint) expressed her love and thanks to Jesus for Himself and for His restoring Lazarus to life. The house was filled with the fragrance. This is one of John's many side comments which indicate that he was an eyewitness of much of Jesus' ministry.

12:4-5. Judas Iscariot . . . objected to this lavish waste (in his viewpoint). His objection—that money from the sale of the perfume should have been given to the poor—was not honest (cf. v. 6). According to Mark (14:4-5) the other disciples picked up his criticism and rebuked her harshly. Evil quickly spreads, and even leaders can be carried along by Satan's tools. The value of the perfume was a year's wages (lit., "300 denarii") perhaps a lifetime of savings.

12:6. John with the hindsight of history was able to state why Judas said this. Judas, evidently the group's treasurer (cf. 13:29), would pocket some of the benevolence money for himself. Whereas Mary gave openly and sacrificially, Judas wanted to hoard money for himself secretly and selfishly. He even betrayed Jesus for money—30 pieces of silver (the price of a gored slave; cf. Ex. 21:32; Zech. 11:12-13).

12:7-8. Normally anointing was something festive. But in this case the anointing was in anticipation of His burial. Living by God's Word, Jesus knew that as the suffering Servant, He must endure pain, die, and be buried (cf. Isa. 53:9).

So He immediately defended Mary's act of love and devotion. You will always have the poor among you is not a divine endorsement of poverty or an encouragement to do nothing about poverty. Instead, Jesus was saying that the causes of poverty are many and people will always have occasions to help the poor (Mark 14:7). But the opportunity to show love to Jesus on earth was limited. You will not always have Me, that is, here on earth (cf. John 12:35; 13:33; 14:3-4).

2. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY (12:9-19)

12:9-11. Jesus was such a controversial Person that it was impossible for Him to be near Jerusalem and remain unnoticed. From all over the country, people came to the Passover feast. Many sought out Jesus (cf. 11:56) and also . . . Lazarus. Because Lazarus had been restored, many . . . Jews believed in Jesus. So the chief priests planned to kill two men—Jesus and Lazarus!

12:12-13. A wild enthusiasm over Jesus broke out. Thousands of Galilean pilgrims had come to the Passover, and they had seen many of His mighty works. Previously He had rejected the role of a political Messiah (6:15) but, they thought, perhaps now was the right moment. Jerusalem was the city of the great King and He was coming to it. Waving their palm branches, symbols of victory, the people were shouting (ekraugazon; cf. comments on 11:43) Hosanna! "Hosanna" in Hebrew means "Please save" or "Save now" (cf. Ps. 118:25). It came to be a shout of praise. Quoting Psalm 118:26, they ascribed messianic titles to Him: He who comes (lit., "the Coming One"; cf. John 11:27) and the King of Israel.

12:14-15. Jesus' riding into the city on a young donkey was a sign of peace (cf. comments on Matt. 21:2, which speaks of Jesus riding on a donkey and a colt). He did not ride a war horse or carry a sword or wear a crown. Nor did He ride in a wheeled vehicle, as did many kings. His manner of entry fulfilled Zechariah's prophecy which contrasted Jesus' coming (Zech. 9:9) with the coming of Alexander the Great (Zech. 9:1-8). Daughter of Zion is a poetic way of referring to the people of Jerusalem, the city built on Mount Zion. Here, in quoting Zechariah 9:9, John called Jesus Israel's King.

12:16. The disciples, though close to Jesus and participants in these events, did not understand them. They lacked the perspective of the Cross and the Resurrection (when He was glorified). They were unaware that Zechariah's prophecy had been written about Him. Their faith was weak and they needed the ministry of the Holy Spirit (16:12-14).

12:17-18. The size of the crowd kept increasing. The news of the great miraculous sign—Lazarus raised from the dead—spread through the city, and other groups surged out to meet Him. It was a day of great popular acclaim, but sadly the people had little spiritual perception.

12:19. The mass reception of Jesus made the plans of the Pharisees impossible. They "were looking for some sly way to arrest Jesus and kill Him. 'But not during the Feast,' they said, 'or the people may riot' " (Mark 14:1-2). Pessimistically they acknowledged, The whole world has gone after Him. Irony is again evident, for most of those people did not really believe in Jesus.

3. THE GREEKS AT THE FEAST (12:20-36)

12:20. The mention of Greeks is significant. They were the wanderers of the ancient world and the seekers of truth. These Greeks were probably God-fearers who attended Jewish synagogues and feasts. Their coming was symbolic of the coming of Gentiles to worship God through Christ (cf. 10:16).

12:21-22. Why did the Greeks approach Philip about seeing Jesus? Perhaps because Philip had a Greek name. Or he may have had some contact with Greeks from the Decapolis area. Philip went to . . . Andrew, and Andrew and Philip . . . told Jesus. Since crowds of people probably wanted to speak with Jesus, the disciples may have tried to do some screening (cf. Luke 18:15-16).

12:23-24. Jesus had been moving toward His decisive hour (cf. 2:4; 4:21, 23; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). The coming of the Greeks confirmed that the hour has come for the Son of Man to be glorified (cf. 12:23; 13:1; 17:1). For most people death is their humiliation. But for Jesus death was His means of entry into glory. His willingness to die for others' sins in obedience to the Father (Isa. 53:10, 12) brought Him renown (glory; cf. John 12:16; 17:1, 5). I tell you the truth introduces a solemn affirmation. The analogy of a kernel of wheat "dying" in the ground and producing many seeds teaches that death is necessary for a harvest.

12:25-26. The wheat analogy (v. 24) illustrates a general paradoxical principle: death is the way to life. In Jesus' case, His death led to glory and life not only for Himself but also for others.

In the case of a disciple of Jesus, the principle is similar. A disciple must hate his life in this world. To "hate his life" means to be so committed to Christ that he has no self-centeredness, no concern for himself. On the other hand the man who loves his life will lose it. Anything in life can become an idol including goals, interests, and loves (cf. Luke 12:16-21; 18:18-30). A believer should undergo a spiritual death to self (Rom. 6:1-14; 2 Cor. 5:14-15; Gal. 6:14).

Being a servant of Jesus requires following Him. Many of Jesus' original servants did follow Him—in death. According to tradition, the early disciples died as martyrs. Jesus' word was thus a prophecy and also a promise. His true disciples (those who serve Him) follow Him in humiliation and later in honor or glory (Rom. 8:17, 36-39; 2 Tim. 2:11-13).

12:27-28a. Jesus instructed His disciples on the cost of commitment to the Father's will by disclosing His emotions. He was in turmoil (tetaraktai, "stirred, agitated"; cf. 11:33; 14:1) because of the prospect of being made sin (2 Cor. 5:21) in His death. In view of His turmoil, should He shrink back and ask for deliverance from this hour? Certainly not, for His Incarnation was for the very purpose of bringing Him to this hour (cf. John 12:23; 13:1; 17:1). Jesus willingly expressed His submission to the will of the Father in the words, Father, glorify Your name! So also believers in difficulty should stand and embrace His will—desiring that His name be glorified—in spite of conflicting emotions.

12:28b-29. The Father then spoke from heaven in a thunderous voice, confirming His working in Jesus both in the past and in the future. The voice was audible but not all understood it (cf. v 30; Acts 9:7; 22:9).

12:30-31. The voice from heaven confirmed faith in the spiritually perceptive but to the unspiritual it was only a noise (1 Cor. 2:14). Jesus' death on the cross was a judgment on the world. Evil was atoned for. The world's goals, standards, and religions were shown to be folly. The Cross was also the means of Satan's defeat (Rev. 12:10). The prince of this world (i.e., Satan; cf. John 14:30; 16:11), Jesus said, will be driven out. His power over people by sin and death was defeated and they can now be delivered out of his domain of spiritual darkness and slavery to sin (Col. 1:13-14; Heb. 2:14-15).

12:32-33. Jesus' words, When I am lifted up from the earth, refer not to His Ascension but to His crucifixion (cf. 3:14; 8:28). He knew how He would die—by being "lifted up" on a cross. Jews, however, normally stoned those they considered worthy of death (cf. Stephen's death, Acts 7:58-60).

Jesus said that at the cross He would draw all men to Himself. He did not mean everybody will be saved for He made it clear that some will be lost (John 5:28-29). If the drawing by the Son is the same as that of the Father (6:44), it means He will draw indiscriminately. Those saved will include not only Jews, but also those from every tribe, language, people, and nation (Rev. 5:9; cf. John 10:16; 11:52).

12:34. The crowd was puzzled. If the Messiah is the Son of Man, then He should be here forever, they reasoned. Daniel 7:13-14 spoke of the Son of Man's everlasting dominion. Perhaps the people wondered if He was making a distinction between the Messiah (Christ) and the Son of Man. Did He use the term "Son of Man" differently than its sense in Daniel 7:13? They seemed to understand that Jesus was predicting His death, but they could not see how that was possible, if He was the Messiah.

12:35-36. The crowd thought on intellectual difficulties, but Jesus confronted them with the fact that the issue was moral. Their time of opportunity was limited. He is the Light for the world (1:4, 9; 8:12; 12:46), but the day of His public ministry was almost over (v. 23). The darkness of night was coming in which evil powers would hold sway over people. The man who walks in the dark means an unbeliever who stumbles through life without knowing what life is all about and where it is headed (cf. 3:19; 8:12; 1 John 1:6). Their privilege was to trust in the Light (i.e., in Jesus) and become sons of Light (i.e., His disciples; cf. Rom. 13:12; Eph. 5:8, 14; Col. 1:13-14; 1 Thes. 5:5; 1 John 1:7; 2:10). Once again Jesus supernaturally vanished from them (cf. John 5:13; 8:59; 10:39).

H. Jewish national unbelief (12:37-50)

1. JOHN'S EXPLANATION (12:37-43)

12:37. John from the beginning of his Gospel (1:11) had sounded the theme of national unbelief. John now explained that in spite of all Jesus' miraculous signs (sēmeia), they still would not believe in Him. Their unbelief was irrational, as sin always is.

12:38. The Jews' national, irrational unbelief had been predicted by Isaiah the prophet. The clearest Old Testament passage concerning the suffering Servant (Isa. 53:1-12) began by stating that Israel would not perceive God's revelation in and through the Servant. Who has believed our message and seen His arm . . . revealed? implies that only a few have believed (quoting Isa. 53:1).

12:39-40. Then John again quoted from Isaiah (6:10) to explain that the nation as a whole was unable to believe. Because they constantly rejected God's revelation, He had punished them with judicial blindness and deadened . . . hearts. People in Jesus' day, like those in Isaiah's day, refused to believe. They "would not believe" (John 12:37); therefore they could not believe (v. 39). Similar illustrations of God's punishing of persistent sin by hardening are common (Ex. 9:12; Rom. 1:24, 26, 28; 2 Thes. 2:8-12).

12:41. In a vision Isaiah . . . saw "the Lord Almighty" (lit., "Yahweh of hosts," or "Yahweh of armies"; Isa. 6:3). John wrote that this glory Isaiah saw was Jesus' glory. The implication is startling: Jesus is Yahweh! (Cf. John 1:18; 10:30; 20:28; Col. 2:9.) Jesus in His nature is God (but God the Son is distinct in person from God the Father and God the Spirit). Isaiah spoke about Him, for many of Isaiah's prophecies predicted the coming Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth (e.g., Isa. 4:2; 7:14; 9:6-7; 11:1-5, 10; 32:1; 42:1-4; 49:1-7; 52:13–53:12; 61:1-3). Earlier Jesus had said that Moses wrote about Him (John 5:46).

12:42-43. In spite of massive national unbelief, the situation was not hopeless. God always has a remnant. Many individuals in high places did believe in Jesus, but for fear of being put out of the synagogue they did not openly confess Him. They feared men's opinions and loved men's praise . . . more than God's praise.

2. JESUS' EXHORTATION (12:44-50)

When and where Jesus spoke these words is not indicated. This seems to be a general summary of Jesus' manifestation of Himself to the nation.

12:44-46. Cried out (ekraxen, "called out," not wept; cf. 1:15; 7:28, 37) indicates the importance of the issues before the nation. Jesus is the perfect manifestation of God, the One who sent Him (1:18; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3), so that to believe in Jesus is to believe in God. People do not have two objects of faith: God and/or Jesus. When one sees Jesus, he sees the Father who sent Him (cf. John 12:41; 14:9). Jesus came to lead people out of Satan's kingdom of darkness into God's kingdom of love and light (cf. 1:4, 9; 8:12; 12:35; Col. 1:13-14).

12:47-50. Since Jesus is God's Word (Logos) to people, God spoke decisively and finally in Him (Heb. 1:1-3). The issue is the command of the Father. To obey the Father is to come to eternal life (John 12:50). To reject the Father's word—which is Jesus' very word (v. 48; cf. v. 50b; 7:16; 14:10, 24)—is to abide in death. Moses predicted the coming of the great Prophet (One who would speak for God). Moses said, "You must listen to Him" (Deut. 18:15). Condemnation at the last day is the penalty for rejecting the One whom the Father sent (Deut. 18:18-19; John 3:18, 36; 5:24).

The purpose of God's revelation in Jesus is positive: He came to save, not to judge (12:47; cf. 3:17 and comments on 9:39). But rejection of God's Revelation inevitably brings a hardening in sin and ultimately God's judgment.

In speaking of Jewish national unbelief John balanced his theological explanation with Jesus' serious exhortation to the nation to repent. In the words of Moses, these "are not just idle words for you—they are your life" (Deut. 32:47).

III. Jesus' Preparation of His Disciples (chaps. 13–17)

A. The Last Supper (13:1-30)

1. JESUS' WASHING OF HIS DISCIPLES' FEET (13:1-17)

John's Gospel reports more of the content of Jesus' instructions to His disciples than do the other three Gospels. Chapters 13–17 concentrate on His teachings on that fateful night in which He was arrested. Before the instruction, Jesus washed His disciples' feet and predicted His betrayal.

13:1. Jesus knew that the time had come (cf. 2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 12:23, 27; 17:1) for Him to leave this world and go to the Father. Jesus' death and resurrection were now imminent. He had come to die in obedience to the Father's will. His coming was also an act of love for all mankind (3:16). But He has a special love for His sheep: He loved His own. Then He showed them the full extent of His love. His humble service (13:1-17), His teaching (13:18–17:26), and finally His death (chaps. 18–19) are in view. All three revealed His love.

13:2-4. At the evening meal before the Passover, the devil had already prompted Judas Iscariot . . . to betray Jesus. Jesus had predicted this (6:70-71). Later Satan actually entered Judas (13:27). Yet God was in control of all events leading to Jesus' death. Jesus knew (cf. vv.

1, 18) His sovereign authority, His origin, and coming destiny; yet He voluntarily took the place of a slave, washing the feet of His disciples. His action contrasts sharply with their self-seeking (cf. Matt. 20:20-24; Mark 9:33-34; Luke 22:24-30) and pictures His whole ministry on earth (cf. Phil. 2:5-8).

13:5. Foot-washing was needed in Palestine. The streets were dusty and people wore sandals without socks or stockings. It was a mark of honor for a host to provide a servant to wash a guest's feet; it was a breach of hospitality not to provide for it (cf. 1 Sam. 25:41; Luke 7:40-50; 1 Tim. 5:10). Wives often washed their husbands' feet, and children washed their parents' feet. Most people, of course, had to wash their own feet.

13:6-8. Peter sensing Jesus' reversing of their natural roles, asked why He, Peter's Lord, should wash the feet of His servant Peter. In Peter's question the word You is emphatic in the Greek. Jesus said that later (after His death and resurrection) Peter would understand.

No . . . You shall never wash my feet, Peter replied. Apparently he did not feel that Jesus should act like a servant toward Peter. This is another case of Peter's thoughtless speech (cf. Mark 8:32; 9:5). Jesus responded, Unless I wash you, you have no part with Me. This does not mean, "Unless you are baptized you cannot be saved," but, "Unless I wash your sins away by My atoning death (cf. Rev. 1:5) you have no real relationship to Me" (cf. 1 John 1:7).

13:9-10. Peter continued to miss the spiritual lesson, but he was certain of his desire to be joined to Jesus. Therefore he asked Jesus to wash his hands and head as well as his feet. Jesus answered, A person who has had a bath needs only to wash his feet; his whole body is clean. (Some Gr. mss. omit the words "his feet.") Roman Catholics sometimes have interpreted verse 10 to mean that after infant baptism only penance is needed. A preferable interpretation is that after salvation all one needs is confession of sins, the continual application of Jesus' death to cleanse one's daily sins (cf. 1 John 1:7; 2:1-2). When Jesus added that not every one of you is clean, He was referring to Judas (cf. John 13:11, 18). This suggests that Judas was not converted.

13:11. Judas had rejected the life-giving, cleansing words of Jesus (cf. 6:63; 15:3), so he was yet in his sins. Judas did have his feet literally washed, but he did not enter into the meaning of the event. John stressed Jesus' supernatural knowledge (cf. 2:25; 4:29) of Judas' deception.

13:12-14. After giving this object lesson in humility the Lord questioned the disciples in order to draw out the significance of the lesson: Do you understand what I have done for you? He asked them (cf. v. 7). Teacher (didaskalos) and Lord (kyrios) show that Jesus is on a higher level than they. Yet He had done a humble service for them. Meeting others' needs self-sacrificially is what they ought to do too.

13:15-16. The foot-washing was an example (hypodeigma, "pattern"). Many groups throughout church history have practiced literal foot-washing as a church ordinance. However, present culture in many lands does not call for the need to wash dust from the feet of one's guests. Whereas the Lord's Supper was practiced by the early church as an ordinance, it apparently did not practice foot-washing as an ordinance in church gatherings. This passage emphasizes inner humility, not a physical rite. A Christian widow's practice of "washing the feet of the saints" (1 Tim. 5:10) speaks not of her involvement in a church ordinance but of her humble slavelike service to other believers. Not to follow the example of Jesus is to exalt oneself above Him and to live in pride. No servant is greater than his master (cf. John 12:26).

13:17. God blesses His servants not for what they know but for their responses to what they know. Christian happiness (you will be blessed) comes through obedient service (if you do them, i.e., these things Jesus commanded).

2. JESUS' PREDICTION OF HIS BETRAYAL (13:18-30)

13:18-19. Jesus had just said that blessedness comes through obedience (v. 17). Now He added that there would be no blessedness for one of the disciples. His selection of Judas was not an accident or a failure in God's plan. Jesus chose a betrayer among His 12 disciples (cf. 6:70-71) in order to fulfill the Scripture, namely, Psalm 41:9. As David was betrayed by his trusted table companion Ahithophel, who then hanged himself

(2 Sam. 16:20–17:3, 23), so Judas, Jesus' close companion, betrayed Him and then hanged himself. Though Judas' deed was foreknown by God, he was fully culpable. The fact that Jesus knew all this in advance (before it happens) and that it fit the Scriptures helped the disciples after the fact to believe God sent Jesus (John 13:19; cf. 14:29).

13:20. As Jesus has a high and holy dignity because of His commission from the Father, so the disciples represented Jesus. Anyone who accepted the disciples was thus accepting Jesus, the One they represented, and in turn that person was also accepting the Father.

13:21. Jesus was troubled in spirit. The word "troubled" is etarachthē ("stirred or agitated"), the same word used of Jesus in 11:33; 12:27 (also used by Jesus in 14:1, 27). Being human, Jesus was troubled over Judas' soon betrayal of His love and friendship. Being divine, Jesus knew in advance that it would happen. Jesus sensed the spiritual hardness and deadness which sin had produced in Judas. The word testified and the formula I tell you the truth stress the solemn announcement of Jesus' words.

13:22. That anyone in this close fellowship could do this to Jesus was almost beyond comprehension. Judas had covered his tracks so well that none of the others suspected him.

13:23-24. Simon Peter, the leader and perhaps the most emotional disciple, wanted to deal with the traitor. Luke (22:38, 49-50) mentioned that the disciples had two swords! The disciple whom Jesus loved was evidently John, the author of this Gospel (cf. Introduction). John and Judas were reclining next to Jesus, but Peter's position at the table was not near enough to ask Jesus privately. So he motioned to John and asked him to ask Jesus whom He meant.

13:25-27. By leaning John could touch Jesus, so he asked . . . Lord, who is it? Giving the morsel to Judas was an uncaught sign of recognition to John, but it was also the Lord's final extension of grace to Judas. A host's giving a morsel of bread to a guest was a sign of friendship. How ironic that Jesus' act of friendship to Judas signaled Judas' betrayal of friendship.

Satan entered into him (cf. v. 2) is one of the most terrible expressions in the Scriptures. Satan now used Judas as his tool to accomplish his will. Do quickly is literally "do it more quickly," which may imply Jesus' words spurred Judas to act in God's proper timing.

13:28-30. Since no one grasped the significance of Jesus' words, even the beloved disciple must have missed the intent of the sop until later. As Judas . . . went out, no one thought anything but good of him. They assumed that he, as the group's treasurer (cf. 12:6), was going to buy food for the Passover feast or to give something to the poor. He had deceived his peers but not Jesus. And it was night in any other Gospel might simply be a time notice, but in John's Gospel it probably also has symbolic significance. Judas was leaving the Light (8:12; 12:35, 46) and going out into the darkness of sin (3:19).

B. Jesus' coming departure (13:31-38)

13:31-32. After the departure of Judas, the events leading to Jesus' death fell into place quickly. Jesus was then free from the tension which Satan in Judas had produced. Also the long tension building up toward His death (Luke 12:50) would soon be over. The words glorified and glorify occur five times in these two verses. Jesus' unique glory was revealed in His death. The Father was also glorified in Jesus' death because God's love, His condescension, and His righteousness were made known (cf. John 1:14; Rom. 3:21-26). The words God . . . will glorify Him at once looked ahead to the Resurrection and the Ascension.

13:33. My children translates teknia, ("little children"; the diminutive of tekna, "children"). This term of love expressed Jesus' concern for them. It is used only here by Jesus in this Gospel. John used it seven times in his first epistle (1 John 2:1, 12, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21), and Paul used it once (Gal. 4:19). Jesus announced once again that He would be gone and they would not be able to find Him (cf. Matt. 23:29; John 7:34; 8:21; 12:8, 35). This was true in both His death and His Ascension.

13:34-35. The 11 disciples would survive in His absence by obeying His example of love. The command is new in that it is a special love for other believers based on the sacrificial love of Jesus: As I have loved you, so you must love one another. Christians' love and support for one another enable them to survive in a hostile world. As Jesus was the embodiment of God's love, so now each disciple should embody Christ's love. This love is a sign to the world as well as to every believer (1 John 3:14).

13:36-38. Peter, quick to speak, picked up on what Jesus had said about going away (v. 33). He wanted to know where Jesus was going (cf. Thomas' similar request; 14:5). Peter's love was such that he wanted to be with Jesus. But Jesus replied that it was not possible right then for Peter to be with Him. Peter could not conceive of any situation that would make Jesus' words necessary. He was certain that his love and courage were up to any challenge, including death. I will lay down my life for You, he affirmed. But Peter did not know himself as well as he thought, nor did he know the satanic power at work against him (cf. Luke 22:31-32). Jesus' prediction of Peter's defection (you will disown Me three times) must have completely shocked the other disciples. They may have wondered if Peter was the traitor (cf. John 13:21-25).

C. Jesus, the Way to the Father (14:1-14)

The disciples were completely bewildered and discouraged. Jesus had said He was going away (7:34; 8:21; 12:8, 35; 13:33), that He would die (12:32-33), that one of the Twelve was a traitor (13:21), that Peter would disown Him three times (13:38), that Satan was at work against all of them (Luke 22:31-32), and that all the disciples would fall away (Matt. 26:31). The cumulative weight of these revelations must have greatly depressed them.

14:1-2. To comfort the disciples, Jesus gave them several exhortations along with promises. Do not let your hearts be troubled, He said. "Troubled" is tarassesthō ("stirred, agitated") from the same verb translated "troubled" in 11:33; 13:21; 14:27. One's heart is the center of his personality. Each believer is responsible for the condition of his heart (cf. Prov. 3:1, 3, 5; 4:23; 20:9). By a firm trust in God the Father and Jesus the Son, they could relieve their soul-sorrow and be sustained in their coming tests. When Jesus said, Trust in God; trust also in Me, He was probably giving commands, not making statements (see NIV marg.). Death should not be a terror to them because Jesus was leaving to prepare a place for them in heaven, the Father's house.

14:3-4. I will come back refers here, not to the Resurrection or to a believer's death, but to the Rapture of the church when Christ will return for His sheep (cf. 1 Thes. 4:13-18) and they will be with Him (cf. John 17:24). Jesus said nothing about the nature of the place where He was going. It is sufficient that believers will be with the Father and Jesus (cf. 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23; 1 Thes. 4:17). The disciples knew how to get to heaven. He told them, You know the way to the place where I am going. Throughout His ministry, Jesus had been showing them the way, but as Thomas indicated (John 14:5), they did not fully understand.

14:5-6. Thomas' statement (We don't know where You are going) and his question (So how can we know the way?) reflected the perplexity of the Eleven (cf. Peter's similar question; 13:36). They would remain puzzled until His death and resurrection and until the advent of the Spirit. They had all the information but they could not put it together.

Jesus' words, I am the Way and the Truth and the Life, are the sixth of Jesus' seven "I am" statements in the Gospel of John (6:48; 8:12; 10:9, 11; 11:25; 14:6; 15:1). Jesus is the "Way" because He is the "Truth" and the "Life." As the Father is Truth and Life, Jesus is the embodiment of God so people can come to the Father (cf. 1:4, 14, 18; 11:25). By His words, No one comes to the Father except through Me, Jesus stressed that salvation, contrary to what many people think, is not obtainable through many ways. Only one Way exists (cf. Acts 4:12; 1 Tim. 2:5). Jesus is the only access to the Father because He is the only One from the Father (cf. John 1:1-2, 51; 3:13).

14:7. The first sentence in this verse may either be a promise ("If you really knew Me, you will know My Father as well") or a rebuke (If you really knew Me, you would know My Father as well). The Lord seems to be rebuking them for a failure to understand His person and mission (cf. 8:19). The following dialogue (14:8-9) indicates a failure on the disciples' part. From now on, you do know Him is a promise, which looks beyond the Cross and the Resurrection (cf. 20:28, "My Lord and my God").

14:8-9. Philip expressed a universal desire of mankind: to see God (cf. Ex. 33:18). In a perverted form this desire leads to idolatry. Philip was probably longing for a theophany (cf. Ex. 24:9-10; Isa. 6:1) or some visible display of God's glory. Jesus' statement, Anyone who has seen Me has seen the Father (cf. John 12:45), is one of the most staggering claims He ever made. The Father is in Jesus and Jesus perfectly reveals Him (1:18). Hence no theophany was necessary, for by seeing Jesus they were seeing the Father!

14:10-11. The proof of the union of Jesus and His Father is threefold. They should believe Jesus (a) because of His character (I am in the Father [cf. v. 20] and . . . the Father is in Me); (b) because His words are the Father's (The words I say to you are not just My own (cf. 7:16; 12:49-50; 14:24); and (c) because the miracles reveal God's working through Him (the Father, living in Me . . . is doing His work. . . . believe on the evidence of the miracles themselves; cf. 5:36). One of the key elements in John's Gospel is the stress on the signs as gracious pointers to faith (cf. 5:36; 10:25, 38; 11:47; 12:37; 20:30-31).

14:12-14. The apostles would not necessarily do more stupendous miracles than Jesus did (e.g., feeding 5,000) but their outreach would be greater (e.g., Peter in one sermon had 3,000 converts). This was possible because Jesus had gone to the Father and had sent the Spirit. Miracles are important, but some evangelists have done even greater things than these by preaching the good news to many thousands of people.

In My name (vv. 13-14) is not a magical formula of invocation. But the prayers of believers, as Christ's representatives doing His business, will be answered. John expanded this teaching in his first epistle. He wrote, "If we ask anything according to His will . . . we have what we asked of Him" (1 John 5:14-15). To ask Me for anything in My name means to ask according to His will (cf. "in My name" in John 15:16; 16:23-24, 26). The word "Me" is omitted in some Greek manuscripts but it is probably correct here. Prayers in the New Testament are usually addressed to God the Father, but prayer addressed to the Son is proper also (e.g., Stephen's prayer to the "Lord Jesus" [Acts 7:59]). The goal of answered prayers is to bring glory to the Father. Also bearing fruit glorifies the Father (John 15:8).

D. Jesus' promise of the Counselor (14:15-31)

14:15. The disciples' love for Christ is revealed in their obeying His commands (cf. vv. 21, 23; 1 John 2:3; 3:22, 24; 5:3). Christ has set the pattern of love and obedience (John 14:31); His disciples are expected to follow (13:15-16).

14:16-17. This is the first of several passages on the Holy Spirit in the Upper Room Discourse. Up to this point in John's Gospel, little has been said about the Holy Spirit. The words to Nicodemus (3:5-8) were private and 7:39 pointed ahead to Pentecost. The Holy Spirit is to be the Counselor (paraklētos; also used in 14:26; 15:26; 16:7; for its meaning see comments on 16:7). In a sense He has now replaced Jesus' physical presence; and He mediates God to believers. The Spirit is in a believer forever (cf. Rom. 8:9). He is also the Spirit of Truth (lit., "Spirit of the truth"; cf. John 15:26; 16:13) and thus would guide the apostles. He is invisible (the world cannot accept Him because it neither sees Him nor knows Him), yet He is real and active. Without a radio, radio waves go unnoticed. The Holy Spirit is unnoticed by the unsaved who have no spiritual life. The disciples had some experience with the Spirit (doubtless in preaching and miracle-working) but now His working would be much more intimate.

Why did Jesus say that the Holy Spirit will be (fut. tense) in them? Because in Old Testament times the Spirit came on some believers for special enablement, but after Pentecost He indwells every believer permanently (Rom. 8:9; 1 Cor. 12:13).

14:18-19. What did Jesus mean when He said, I will come to you? Was He referring to (1) His resurrection, (2) the Rapture, (3) the death of a believer, (4) a mystical experience, or (5) the Holy Spirit's coming at Pentecost? Views 1 and 5 seem best. Verse 19 favors view 1 since the disciples did see Him after His resurrection. His resurrection is also the pledge of their resurrection (Because I live, you also will live; cf. 1 Cor. 15:20-21) and the foundation of a new life.

14:20-21. On that day refers to the day of Pentecost when the outpoured Spirit gave evidence of Jesus' Ascension to the Father. (Some, however, take the "day" to refer to Jesus' resurrection, the basis for believers' assurance.) The Spirit would come into believers (v. 17), and would teach them of their union with Jesus (you are in Me, and I am in you) while He manifested Christ in them.

Christian love is manifested as a believer obeys the Lord's words (cf. vv. 15, 23). The rewards of loving Him are great: (a) the Father will show His love to him (cf. v. 23), and (b) the Son will love him and show Himself to him. This passage does not teach a "works" religion, but rather that one who believes and obeys Christ's Word is loved by the Lord. Saving faith results in obedience (cf. "the obedience that comes from faith," Rom. 1:5).

14:22. Judas (not Judas Iscariot) may have been the same man called Thaddaeus (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18). He was puzzled that Jesus would manifest Himself to them and not to the world (cf. John 14:19a).

14:23-24. Jesus answered that He and the Father will not manifest themselves to those who are disobedient to His teaching. Obedience grows out of love for Jesus and His Word (cf. vv. 15, 21; 1 John 2:3; 3:22, 24; 5:3). And as a result, the Father and the Son abide (make Our home) with him. "Home" is monēn, the singular of plural monai, translated "rooms" in John 14:1. This word occurs in the New Testament only in those two verses. To rebel against Jesus' word is to rebel against God the Father who sent Him. Jesus' words were not His own, as He had said previously (12:49; 14:10).

14:25-26. What Jesus said in the days of His earthly ministry was only partially understood. Three things were needed for the apostles to understand Jesus' person and mission: (1) His death had to occur. (2) He had to rise again to vindicate His claim and demonstrate His victory. (3) The Spirit had to come (He would be sent by the Father . . . in My name, i.e., in Jesus' place and for Him) and interpret the meanings of Jesus' words and deeds. The Spirit, Jesus said, will teach you all things and will remind you of everything I have said to you. This verse is addressed to the apostles. The context limits the "all things" to the interpretation and significance of His person and work. The Spirit worked in their minds, reminding them of His teaching and giving them insight into its meaning (cf. 2:22; 7:39; 20:9).

14:27. In New Testament times the normal way to say good-bye was Peace (šālôm in Heb.). In His death Jesus provided a legacy for His disciples: My peace I give you. They would have "peace with God" (Rom. 5:1) because their sins were forgiven and the "peace of God" (Phil. 4:7) would guard their lives. The world is unable to give this kind of peace. Fear of death (Heb. 2:14-15) and fear of the future are removed as Jesus' followers trust in Him. Thus they need not be troubled (cf. John 11:33; 13:21; 14:1).

14:28. If the disciples had been more mature in their love for Jesus, they would have been glad for His departure. But their love was still selfish at this point. Jesus was in His humiliation on earth, but by going back to the Father He would be exalted in glory (cf. 13:31-32) and He will come back (cf. 14:3).

Arians and Jehovah's Witnesses argue from the statement, The Father is greater than I, that Jesus is a lesser god. But this would make Jesus a created being or would lead to polytheism, both of which are clearly unbiblical. The Father and the Son share the same essence (cf. 1:1-2; 14:9; 20:28). The Father and the Son are "One" in purpose and essence (10:30). Thus the Father is greater in office or glory than the Son was in His humiliation.

14:29-31. Fulfilled prophecy is a great comfort and support to believers (cf. Isa. 46:8-10). Jesus had predicted His death and resurrection many times (e.g., Mark 8:31-32; 9:31). When this came to pass, after their initial shock, it would greatly help their faith. His teaching time was now limited because Satan, the prince of this world (cf. John 12:31; 16:11), was moving his forces against Jesus through Judas (cf. 13:2, 27). And yet Satan had no hold on Jesus. Sin leads to death (Rom. 5:12, 21a; 6:16), and sin and death give Satan a hold over people (cf. Heb. 2:14-15; Rev. 12:10). But since Jesus is sinless, Satan cannot claim Him for his kingdom of darkness. Satan thought Jesus' death was a victory for him, but actually it was Jesus' victory over Satan (John 16:11; Col. 2:15).

Because Jesus loves the Father, He did exactly what the Father . . . commanded (cf. John 10:18; 12:49-50) including being "obedient to death" (Phil. 2:8). Then He said, Come now; let us leave. Jesus had been with the disciples in the Upper Room. He now prepared to go to the Garden of Gethsemane on the Mount of Olives. Whether Jesus' words in John 15–17 were spoken in the room or on the way to the garden is uncertain, but probably they were given in the room.

E. The Vine and the branches (15:1-10)

Jesus now instructed His disciples on three vital relationships. Disciples are to be rightly related to Jesus (vv. 1-10), to each other (vv. 11-17), and to the world (vv. 18–16:4). Disciples have three respective duties: to remain (abide), to love each other, and to testify.

15:1. I am the true Vine (cf. v. 5). This is the last of the seven great "I am" statements in John (cf. comments on 6:35). Israel was God's choice vine on which he lavished care and attention (Ps. 80:8; Isa. 5:1-7; Jer. 2:21; 6:9; Ezek. 15; 17:5-10; 19:10-14; Hosea 10:1; 14:8). He longed for fruit, but the vine (Israel) became degenerate and produced rotten fruit. Therefore Jesus, as "the true Vine," fulfills what God had intended for Israel. The Father is the Gardener who cultivates and protects the Vine.

15:2. He (i.e., the Gardener, the Father) desires fruit, which is mentioned eight times in this chapter (vv. 2 [thrice], 4 [twice], 5, 8, 16). A progression is seen: fruit (v. 2), more fruitful (v. 2), and "much fruit" (vv. 5, 8). The fruit which God desired from Israel was loving obedience, righteousness, and justice (Isa. 5:1-7). Every branch in Me that does not bear fruit He cuts off. The phrase "in Me" does not mean the same thing as Paul's words "in Christ." Here it is part of the metaphor of the Vine and seems to mean, "every person who professes to be My disciple (a 'branch') is not necessarily a true follower." A branch that bears no fruit is obviously dead. Therefore, like Judas, it is cut off. (See comments on John 15:6.) Every year in Palestine gardeners prune their vines. They cut off the dead wood which has no life in it and trim the living branches so that their yield will be greater.

15:3. The disciples had been cleansed by Jesus and His message, but one, Judas, was not cleansed (cf. 13:10-11).

15:4. Fruitfulness is the result of the Son's life being reproduced in a disciple. The disciple's part is to remain. The word remain, a key word in John's theology, is menō which occurs 11 times in this chapter, 40 times in the entire Gospel, and 27 times in John's epistles. What does it mean to remain? It can mean, first, to accept Jesus as Savior (cf. 6:54, 56). Second, it can mean to continue or persevere in believing (8:31 ["hold" is remain]; 1 John 2:19, 24). Third, it can also mean believing, loving obedience (John 15:9-10). Without faith, no life of God will come to anyone. Without the life of God, no real fruit can be produced: Neither can you bear fruit unless you remain in Me.

15:5-6. A disciple's continual abiding with Jesus (If a man remains in Me)—and the indwelling of Jesus in a believer (and I in him)—result in abundant fruit (cf. v. 8). But those who do not believe face disaster. A branch without life is dead and cut off (v. 2). It is worthless and therefore is thrown into the fire and burned. What did Jesus mean by these symbolic words about vine branches being burned? These words have been interpreted in at least three ways: (1) The "burned" branches are Christians who have lost their salvation. (But this contradicts many passages, e.g., 3:16, 36; 5:24; 10:28-29; Rom. 8:1.) (2) The "burned" branches represent Christians who will lose rewards but not salvation at the judgment seat of Christ (1 Cor. 3:15). (But Jesus spoke here of dead branches; such a branch is thrown away and withers.) (3) The "burned" branches refer to professing Christians who, like Judas, are not genuinely saved and therefore are judged. Like a dead branch, a person without Christ is spiritually dead and therefore will be punished in eternal fire (cf. Matt. 25:46). Judas was with Jesus; he seemed like a "branch." But he did not have God's life in him; therefore he departed; his destiny was like that of a dead branch.

15:7-8. In contrast with verse 6, the emphasis in these verses is positive: remain with Jesus and bear much fruit. Effective prayer is based on faith in Christ and on His words remaining in believers. Christ's words condition and control such a believer's mind so that his prayers conform to the Father's will. Since his prayer is in accord with God's will, the results are certain—it will be given you (cf. 1 John 5:14-15). Fulfilled prayers bring glory to the Father because, like Jesus, His disciples are doing the heavenly Father's will (cf. "Your kingdom come, Your will be done on earth" [Matt. 6:10]).

15:9-10. A believer is motivated by the wonder of Jesus' love, which is patterned after the Father's love in its quality and extent. Remain in My love might seem to be mystical but Jesus makes it very concrete. Obedience to the Father's commands is the same for a disciple as it was for the Son (cf. 14:15, 21, 23; 1 John 2:3; 3:22, 24; 5:3). Active dependence and loving obedience are the proper paths for all of God's children.

F. Jesus' friends (15:11-17)

15:11. Jesus had great joy in pleasing His Father by living a fruitful life (cf. Heb. 12:2). The purpose of His teaching is to give man an abundant life, not a joyless existence (John 10:10). The commands for His disciples to obey are for their joy (cf. 17:13).

15:12. One primary command was given by Jesus to believers: they must have mutual love (Love each other; this is repeated in v. 17). Christians grow by caring for and nurturing each other. The standard for that love is Christ's example of humble sacrificial service: as I have loved you.

15:13-14. The most a person can do for his friend is to die for him; such a death is a clear demonstration of love. Jesus demonstrated His love (v. 12b) by dying for His friends, those who obey Him. Abraham was called God's "friend" (2 Chron. 20:7; Isa. 41:8) because he obeyed God. Like close friends, Abraham and God communicated well with each other (cf. Gen. 18:17).

15:15-17. A servant (lit., "slave") does not have a close relationship with his master, as friends do. Normally, a slave does what he is told without understanding his master's mind or business. Since Jesus had opened Himself to His disciples, the title "slave" did not fit their relationship. (When Paul spoke of himself as "a servant [lit., slave] of God" [Rom. 1:1], he had a different idea in mind. He meant he willingly and humbly served and obeyed God.) Jesus called His disciples friends because He had disclosed His Father's revelation to them.

Jesus then reminded them that contrary to the common practice of disciples picking a teacher, Jesus had chosen them (cf. John 15:19). The purpose of His choosing was so that they would produce lasting fruit. He chose them for a mission, and His Father would answer their requests in order to accomplish that mission (whatever you ask in My name; cf. v. 7; cf. "in My name" in 14:13-14; 16:23-24, 26). Friendship with Jesus involves the obligation of brotherly love: Love each other (cf. 15:12).

G. The world's hatred (15:18–16:4)

15:18. Friendship with God results in enduring the world's hatred. Conversely, being friends with the world is to be God's enemy (James 4:4). Jesus alerted His disciples to the fact of the world's hatred. The world in John's Gospel is the system of organized society hostile to God, which is under Satan's power (John 14:30). Believers might be surprised by this hostility (1 Peter 4:12-13), but they should remember that Jesus was hated from His birth (when Herod the Great sought to kill Him) to His death on the cross.

15:19. A fundamental reason for the world's hatred of a Christian lies in their differences (cf. 1 Peter 4:4; Rom. 12:2). A believer, having left the kingdom of darkness and having been transferred into the kingdom of God's Son (Col. 1:13), has a different joy, purpose, hope, and love. He now has certainty, truth, and a standard for life. Christians have been chosen (cf. John 15:16) out of the world system by Christ and they now belong to Him. Since they do not belong to the world . . . the world hates them.

15:20-21. Jesus reminded His disciples of a statement He had made earlier: No servant is greater than his master (cf. 13:16). Previously He was referring to their need to imitate His humble service. But the principle has other applications. Christians are to identify so closely with Jesus that they share in His sufferings (they will persecute you also). On the positive side, some people followed and obeyed Jesus' teaching, so they also responded to the apostles' message. The root cause of the world's hatred against the disciples is their identification with Jesus. They hate Jesus because they are ignorant of God, the One who sent Him.

15:22-23. Jesus came as the Revelation of God. If Jesus had not come, their sin would not be so great. The statement, they would not be guilty of sin (cf. v. 24), must not be taken absolutely as 16:9 shows (cf. 3:19; 9:41). Before Jesus' coming people might have pleaded ignorance as an excuse for sin (cf. Acts 17:30). But now that the Light has come, those who willfully reject it have no excuse. The revelation in Jesus and by Jesus is so tied to the Father that to hate Jesus is to hate God (cf. John 15:24b).

15:24-25. These two verses amplify the thought in verses 22-23. Jesus' miracles were so distinctive that their import was unmistakable. The Jewish nation should have honestly confessed, "No one could perform the miraculous signs You are doing if God were not with Him" (3:2). But the nation as a whole rejected both Jesus and the Father because in their sins they loved darkness rather than light (3:19). The nation thought it was serving God in rejecting Jesus (16:2-3) but in reality it was serving Satan (8:44). Sin is basically irrational. Their hatred of Jesus was without any rational cause which also fits the pattern of hatred for righteous people, as seen in those who hated David (Pss. 35:19; 69:4; 109:3).

15:26-27. In the face of the opposition and hatred of the world a believer might be tempted to try to escape from the world or to be silent in it. Monasticism, extreme separation, and lack of witnessing have been too common in the church's history. Jesus encouraged His disciples by the promise of the Spirit's work in the world. As the work of Jesus was to promote the Father and not Himself, so the Spirit will witness to Jesus as the Messiah (He will testify about Me). And what He says is true for He is the Spirit of Truth (cf. 16:13). As the Counselor (cf. 14:26; 16:7), He presents God's truth to the world. The Spirit is sent from the Father (cf. 14:26), just as the Son was sent from the Father. Yet this mysterious work of the Spirit is not done in isolation from the church. The apostles were to bear witness to the facts that they came to know: You also must testify. As the apostles witnessed, the Holy Spirit persuaded, and people were saved. The same combination of human obedience to the divine command (Acts 1:8) coupled with the witness of the Spirit is needed in every generation.

16:1-2. The disciples may have wondered why Jesus was telling them about the world's hatred and persecution. Jesus, anticipating this question, indicated that expecting trouble beforehand would help them remain in the path of God's will. (He gave a second reason in v. 4.) The disciples would face excommunication and even death. Remembering that Jesus was ostracized and martyred and that He had predicted the same for His apostles would help fortify them. The earliest Christians were Jews (Acts 2:11, 14, 22), but quite soon after the church began to grow and spread, it was quickly thrust outside the synagogue (ca. A.D. 90). Persecution unto death occurred in the case of Stephen (Acts 7:59), James (Acts 12:2), and others (Acts 9:1-4). Some people throughout church history have been motivated to persecute believers because of a misguided zeal for God. They think they are offering a service to God (cf. Rom. 10:2).

16:3-4. The world will persecute Jesus' followers because they have not known the Father or Me. They do not recognize the Father at work in the words and deeds of Jesus. The Jewish people, for example, had a certain knowledge of God through the Law, but that knowledge was not a saving knowledge for God said their "hearts go astray and they have not known My ways" (Ps. 95:8-10).

Jesus gave this warning to His disciples about coming persecution in order to strengthen their faith. By recognizing His knowledge of the future they would grow in their confidence in Him. Jesus did not give them this warning before because the world's hatred was directed against Him. He shielded them with His personal presence, but now they would be His body on earth (Eph. 1:22-23).

H. The Spirit's work (16:5-15)

16:5-6. Learning of Jesus' departure brought depression to the disciples. They were obsessed by their coming personal loss of His immediate physical presence. If they could have understood why He was going and to whom He was going, then they would have rejoiced. Later (v. 22) Jesus predicted that their time of sorrow would be suddenly transformed into great joy. Jesus' statement, Now I am going to Him who sent Me, should have led the disciples to ask questions, but they didn't (Even Thomas [14:5] did not ask, Where are You going?) Their preoccupation with their own problems prevented their understanding the crucial nature of the time ("now") and the momentous significance of the events (His death, burial, resurrection, and Ascension).

16:7. The departure of Jesus was necessary—though painful and difficult—for the disciples. In fact, His leaving was profitable and beneficial (the meaning of the Gr. sympherei, here rendered good). Without His departing (which included His death, burial, resurrection, and Ascension) there would have been no gospel. Atonement for sin was necessary for Jesus to save His people from their sins (Matt. 1:21). Also unless he departed there would have been no glorified Lord to send . . . the Counselor (the Holy Spirit) to apply the atonement. "The Counselor" translates the Greek paraklētos. This word was used of legal assistants who pleaded a cause or presented a case. This Counselor is the promised Spirit who came into the world in a new and distinctive sense on the day of Pentecost.

16:8. One of the Spirit's new ministries was to convict the world of guilt in regard to sin and righteousness and judgment. Conviction is not the same as conversion but is necessary to it. The words "convict . . . of guilt" translate the one word elenxei, "to present or expose facts, to convince of the truth." The Spirit works on the minds of the unsaved to show them the truth of God for what it is. Normally this process includes human aid (cf. 15:26-27).

16:9. Sin is rebellion against God and this rebellion reached its climax in the crucifixion of Jesus. Today the greatest sin is the failure to believe in Jesus (cf. 3:18; 15:22, 24). Most people do not readily admit to being guilty of sin. They will admit to failures or vices or even crimes. However, sin is against God, and people have suppressed the truth of God (cf. Rom. 1:18, 21, 25, 28). The mighty working of the Holy Spirit is necessary to convince and convict people of their desperate plight.

16:10. In crucifying Jesus, the Jewish people showed that they thought He was unrighteous, that only a wicked person would be hanged on a tree and thus be under God's curse (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13). But the Resurrection and the Ascension vindicated Jesus as God's righteous Servant (Acts 3:14-15; Isa. 53:11). The Spirit convicts men of their faulty views of Jesus when the gospel with its stress on the Resurrection is proclaimed (1 Cor. 15:3-4).

16:11. The third area of the Holy Spirit's convicting work concerns judgment. The death and resurrection of Jesus were a condemnation of Satan (12:31; Col. 2:15), the prince of this world (cf. John 14:30). By Jesus' death, He defeated the devil, who held "the power of death" (Heb. 2:14). (Though defeated at the Cross, Satan is still active [1 Peter 5:8]. But, like a condemned criminal, his "execution" is coming [Rev. 20:2, 7-10].)

People in rebellion should take note of Satan's defeat and fear the Lord who holds the power to judge. As the fact of coming judgment (both Satan's and man's) is proclaimed, the Spirit convicts people and prepares them for salvation (cf. Acts 17:30-31).

16:12-13. The disciples were not able to receive any more spiritual truth at that time. Their hearts were hardened, their concern was for their own preeminence in an earthly kingdom, so they saw no need for Jesus' death. Sorrow over His departure and dismay over the prophecy of a traitor among them, along with the prediction of their own desertion, rendered them insensitive to more spiritual truth. But . . . the Spirit of Truth (cf. 15:26) would come after Jesus' death to lead the apostles into the truth about Jesus and His work.

The Spirit, Jesus said, would not teach the disciples on His own (i.e., on His own initiative) but would teach only what He hears from the Father. This points up the interdependence of the Persons in the Trinity. The Father would tell the Spirit what to teach the apostles about the Son.

Also the Spirit would teach what is yet to come. This statement helps one understand the promise, He will guide you into all truth (lit., "all the truth"). This was a promise to the apostles that their partial understanding of the person and work of Jesus as the Messiah would be completed as the Spirit would give them insight into the meanings of the soon-to-come Cross and the Resurrection as well as truths about Jesus' return (cf. 1 Cor. 2:10). The New Testament books are the fulfillment of this teaching ministry of the Spirit.

16:14-15. Because Jesus is the Logos, the revelation of the Father (or as Paul expressed it, "the image of the invisible God" [Col. 1:15]), all that belongs to the Father is also the Son's. The Spirit of Truth brought glory to Jesus as He revealed to the apostles things pertaining to the person and work of the Logos (taking from what is Mine and making it known to you). The Spirit worked in the apostles' minds so that they could perceive, understand, and teach about the Savior.

I. The prediction of changes (16:16-33)

Jesus' instruction of His disciples shifted at this point from the Spirit's future work to what the immediate future would hold for them. Someday Jesus will reappear, but sorrow, pain, and spiritual failure would be the apostles' lot first. Then, however, joy, prayer, and peace will be their portion.

16:16. The words in a little while were bewildering to the disciples (and also possibly to the initial readers of John's Gospel). Also the prediction, you will see Me, was not immediately understood. Did Jesus refer (a) to the coming of the Holy Spirit or (b) to His Second Advent or (c) to His brief, 40-day ministry between His resurrection and His Ascension? The last interpretation fits this passage best.

16:17-18. The disciples were confused about the time interval. The words they kept asking (Gr. imperf. tense) indicate that considerable dialogue took place among the disciples without their arriving at an answer. They could not reconcile Jesus' statements because He said: (a) In a short time they would not see Him, (b) they would see Him, and (c) He was going to the Father. Only His death, resurrection, post-resurrection ministry, and Ascension would make it all clear.

16:19-20. As a Master Teacher, Jesus understood the confusion among His students. He did not clarify His teaching; He knew it would all come into focus with the passage of time and with the aid of the Spirit's teaching ministry (cf. vv. 12-13). I tell you the truth (cf. comments on 1:51) introduces a solemn prediction that their coming grief would be followed by joy. His death would be bitter agony for them but the world would be happy over it. However, the very event, the death of the Messiah, which would cause them to weep and mourn would bring them gladness: your grief will turn to joy. His resurrection and the Spirit's work of interpretation would enable them to know that He had to die so that they could have forgiveness of sins. Later the church would rejoice in His death (cf. 1 Cor. 1:23; 2:2).

16:21-22. Jesus illustrated the truth of pain replaced by joy by the pain of childbirth followed by the joy of new life when a child is born. The disciples were entering the process of pain (your time of grief), but the light of joy was just ahead. When they saw Him after His resurrection, their joy erupted—joy that will never end since He died to sin once but now lives forever (cf. Rom. 6:9-10; Luke 24:33-52; Heb. 7:24-25).

16:23-24. The forthcoming events brought about changed relations. Since Jesus would not be with them physically (in that day means after His Ascension), they would not be able to ask Him questions. But the Holy Spirit would help them (vv. 13-15).

I tell you the truth again introduced an important statement. They would be His ambassadors and therefore had the right to ask the Father for whatever they needed to accomplish His will. The words in My name are not a magical formula which enable the user to get his will done; instead those words tied the requests to the work of the Son in doing the Father's will (cf. "in My name" in 14:13-14; 15:16; 16:24, 26). Up to this point the disciples had not prayed in the name of Jesus. Now they are to do this since Jesus' death and the Spirit's coming would enable them to enter into God's new program of the Church Age. Answered prayer brings complete joy (cf. 15:11; 16:22) because God is at work in them.

16:25. Though Jesus was a Master Teacher and taught His disciples for three years by example and word, yet their perception of His revelation of the Father remained limited (14:9; cf. 2:22; 6:60; 13:7, 15-17). Veiled utterances (His speaking figuratively) would give way to plain speech. In His post-resurrection teaching (cf. Acts 1:3) the Son spoke plainly about the Father (cf. John 14:25-26).

16:26-27. The coming new day would give the disciples intimacy with the Father and clarity of understanding. The disciples would have direct personal access to the Father by the name of, that is, through Jesus (cf. "in My name" in 14:13-14; 15:16; 16:24). Jesus would no longer need to pray on their behalf since they could ask for themselves. This truth does not negate the promise of Christ's intercessory work in overcoming a believer's sin (cf. Rom. 8:34; 1 John 2:1-2). The disciples were now in a personal love-and-faith relationship with the Father. Only children have this privilege of access to their Father (Rom. 5:2).

16:28. Jesus summarized His mission in one sentence: His Incarnation (I came from the Father), His humiliation (and entered the world), and His resurrection, Ascension, and exaltation (now I am leaving the world and going back to the Father). This is what the disciples had come to believe.

16:29-30. The response of the disciples to the Lord's teaching was that now they understood and believed. They felt the teaching was so plain that recognizing Jesus' omniscience (You know all things) and divine origin (You came from God) was their only proper response.

16:31-32. Though the disciples were honest and sincere in their affirmations of faith (v. 30), Jesus knew their limitations far better than they did (cf. 2:24-25). The words You believe at last! could also be translated "Do you now believe?" (NIV marg.) This seems to capture the thought better. They did believe but it was not complete faith or strong faith until after the death and resurrection of Jesus and the advent of the Spirit. You will be scattered is a fulfillment of Zechariah's words which spoke of the Shepherd (the Messiah) smitten by decree of the Lord Almighty, which resulted in the scattering of the sheep (Zech 13:7). In spite of the disciples' loyalty, faith, and love, they soon failed Him miserably. His prediction, You will leave Me all alone, was fulfilled by all His disciples deserting Him (Matt. 26:56) when He was arrested and by Peter's denial (John 18:17, 25-26). Yet the Father had not forsaken Him; I am not alone for My Father is with Me (cf. 8:29; Pss. 23:4; 73:25-26), though the Father did forsake Jesus when He was on the cross (Matt. 27:46).

16:33. Jesus' instructions about these things (chaps. 14–16) were intended to sustain them, to give them peace in Him. Believers have a dual existence: they are in Christ and in this world. In union with Jesus, His disciples have peace, but the world exerts a hostile pressure. The world system, the enemy of God and His people, opposed Jesus' message and ministry (cf. 1:5, 10; 7:7). But Jesus won the victory over the system; He has overcome the world. As the "strong man" who came and ruined Satan's kingdom (Matt. 12:25-29), Jesus is the Victor. Jesus wanted the disciples to remember this fact and to rejoice in His victory. Take heart! means "Be courageous." (In the NT the word tharseō ["take heart, be courageous, cheer up"] was spoken only by the Lord [Matt. 9:2, 22; 14:27; Mark 6:50; 10:49; John 16:33; Acts 23:11].) Because He won they, in union with Him, can win also (Rom. 8:37).

J. Jesus' intercession (chap. 17)

1. JESUS' REQUESTS FOR HIMSELF (17:1-5)

Following the symbolic washing of the disciples' feet (13:1-30) and His private instruction of the apostles (14–16), Jesus prayed. This prayer in John 17 has been called "the Lord's high-priestly prayer," and "the Lord's prayer."

Jesus had ended His teaching of the disciples with a shout of victory: "I have overcome the world" (16:33). This was in anticipation of His work on the cross. Throughout His ministry Jesus' work was done in obedience to the Father's will (cf. Luke 4:42; 6:12; 11:1; Matt. 26:36). As He turned again to His Father, He prayed first for Himself (John 17:1-5), then for His apostles (vv. 6-19), and finally for future believers (vv. 20-26).

17:1. Jesus could approach God in prayer because of Their Father-Son relationship. He began His prayer with the word Father (cf. Matt. 6:9) and used that word three other times in this prayer (John 17:5, 21, 24) as well as "Holy Father" (v. 11) and "Righteous Father" (v. 25). The time, Jesus said, has come. The divine plan of redemption was at God's appointment. Several times before this Jesus' time had not come (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). But now it had arrived (cf. 12:23; 13:1).

Jesus then prayed, Glorify Your Son (cf. 17:5). This request for glorification included sustaining Jesus in suffering, accepting His sacrifice, resurrecting Him, and restoring Him to His pristine glory. The purpose of the request was that the Father would be glorified by the Son, that God's wisdom, power, and love might be known through Jesus. Believers too are to glorify God (v. 10); in fact, this is the chief end of man (Rom. 11:36; 16:27; 1 Cor. 10:31; Eph. 1:6, 12, 14; cf. Westminster Larger Catechism, Question 1).

17:2. The words, You granted Him authority over all people, indicate that Jesus' prayer request was in accordance with the Father's plan. The Father has ordained the rule of the Son over the earth (cf. Ps. 2). So the Son has the authority to judge (John 5:27), to take up His life (10:18), and to give eternal life to all those whom the Father gave Him. Five times in this prayer Jesus referred to His own as those the Father gave Him (17:2, 6 [twice], 9, 24).

17:3. Eternal life, as defined here by Jesus, involves the experience of knowing the only true God through His Son (cf. Matt. 11:27). It is a personal relationship of intimacy which is continuous and dynamic. The word know (ginōskōsin) here in the present tense, is often used in the Septuagint and sometimes in the Greek New Testament to describe the intimacy of a sexual relationship (e.g., Gen 4:1, "lay"; Matt. 1:25, "had . . . union"). Thus a person who knows God has an intimate personal relationship with Him. And that relationship is eternal, not temporal. Eternal life is not simply endless existence. Everyone will exist somewhere forever (cf. Matt. 25:46), but the question is, In what condition or in what relationship will they spend eternity?

17:4-5. Jesus' prayer for Himself was based on His completed work (cf. 4:34)—I have brought You glory (cf. 17:1)—which assumed His obedience to death (Phil. 2:8). Even though the Cross was future, it was a certainty. He repeated His request for a return to His pristine glory with the Father (cf. John 17:1) based on the certainty of the finished work on the cross.

This "work" the Father gave Him to do is one of five things in Jesus' prayer which the Father "gave" the Son: (a) work (v. 4), (b) believers (vv. 2, 6, 9, 24), (c) glory (vv. 5, 24), (d) words (v. 8), and (e) a name (vv. 11-12). The Son, in turn, gave believers God's words (vv. 8, 14) and God's glory (vv. 22, 24).

2. JESUS' INTERCESSION FOR THE APOSTLES (17:6-19)

Jesus prayed for His disciples before He chose them (Luke 6:12), during His ministry (John 6:15), at the end of His ministry (Luke 22:32), here (John 17:6-19), and later in heaven (Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25). This prayer of intercession reveals Jesus' concern and love for His apostles.

17:6-8. The little flock of disciples was given by the Father to the Son (cf. vv. 2, 9, 24). They had been separated out of the world ("world" occurs 18 times in this chap.: vv. 5-6, 9, 11 [twice], 13, 14 [thrice], 15, 16 [twice in the Gr.], 18 [twice], 21, 23-25). This separation was by the electing work of the Father, in which the apostles had been given as a gift to Jesus Christ (cf. 6:37). With the words, They have obeyed Your Word, Jesus praised His disciples for responding to the message of God in Jesus Christ. The disciples were not perfect, but they had the right commitment. Their faith in Jesus was a trust in His union with the Father (17:8). This faith in Jesus was manifested in their obedience to His words because they believed in His divine mission (cf. 16:27).

17:9-10. Christ's prayer (in vv. 6-19) was particularly for the Eleven, though it applies to all believers (cf. v. 20). At this point He was not praying for the world in its hostility and unbelief. This prayer is for two things: (a) the disciples' preservation ("protect them," v. 11) and (b) their sanctification ("sanctify them," v. 17). The world is not to be preserved in its rebellion or sanctified in its unbelief. Jesus prayed this request because of God's ownership of them by creation and election (they are Yours). Jesus' words, All I have is Yours, and all You have is Mine, reveal His claim to unity, intimacy, and equality with the Father.

In the old economy, God dwelt among people and showed His glory. In Jesus, God's glory was displayed (cf. 1:14). Then Christ's disciples glorified Him: Glory has come to Me through them. And now in the Church Age the Holy Spirit glorifies the Son (16:14) and believers are also to glorify the Son (Eph. 1:12).

17:11. Jesus would soon depart to the Father and leave His disciples in the world. They had to stay in the world to carry out God's plan in spreading the good news of redemption and in planting the church. With the formation of the church, the history of the world has become, in a sense, "a tale of two cities": the city of God and the city of man.

Since the disciples would be in the world, Jesus prayed for their protection. The hostility against God which fell on Jesus would now fall on the tiny band of apostles, and subsequently on many of Jesus' followers. Jesus, in calling on His Holy Father, pointed up God's distinction from sinful creatures. This holiness is the basis for believers' separation from the world. He would protect them from the sin and enmity of the world by the power of His name (cf. Prov. 18:10). In Bible times a person's name stood for the person. (In John 17:6, 26 the NIV translates the Gr. "Your name" by the word "You.")

Why did Jesus pray for their preservation? It was to promote the unity of the believers, patterned after the unity of the Father and the Son: so that they may be one as We are One (cf. vv. 21-22). The unity here seems to be that of will and purpose. By being protected from the world they would be unified in their desires to serve and glorify the Son.

17:12. As the Good Shepherd, Jesus took care of the flock entrusted to Him by the Father. But Judas was an exception. He is here called the one doomed to destruction (lit., "the son of perdition"). Judas was never a sheep and his true character was finally manifested (cf. 13:11; 1 John 2:19). He was a "dead branch" (cf. comments on John 15:2, 6). Judas did what he wanted (he sold Jesus). Yet he was an unwitting tool of Satan (13:2, 27). Even people's volitionally free acts fit into God's sovereign plan (cf. Acts 2:23; 4:28). Thus Judas' betrayal of Jesus fulfilled (i.e., filled up in a larger sense) the words in Psalm 41:9 about David's betrayal by his friend.

17:13. The words of comfort spoken by Jesus (I say these things) to His disciples were of great benefit to them. Following His Passion, they would recall His words and experience the full measure of His joy. Joy came to them because they knew from His words that He had conquered the evil one and brought eternal life to them.

17:14. Jesus' intercession for the disciples continued with a reminder of (a) their value and (b) their coming danger. They were valuable because they had received the Word of God: I have given them Your Word (cf. "I gave them the words You gave Me," v. 8). They were in danger because the satanic world system hated them. It hated them because they are not a part of it. As believers share Jesus Christ, "Everything in the world—the cravings of sinful man, the lust of his eyes, and the boasting of what he has and does" (1 John 2:16) loses its attractiveness. A believer's commitment shows the world's values to be trash or dung (cf. Phil. 3:8). Therefore the world hates the exposure of its sham values (cf. John 3:20).

17:15. God's plan was not to remove the disciples from danger and opposition (take them out of the world) but to preserve them in the midst of conflict. Though Jesus would soon be taken out of the world (v. 11), His followers are to remain in it. Like Daniel in Babylon (Dan. 1-2; 4-6) and the saints in Caesar's household (Phil. 4:22), God intends for His followers to be witnesses to truth in the midst of satanic falsehood. Satan, the evil one (cf. Matt. 5:37; 1 John 5:19), as head of the world system, seeks to do everything possible to destroy believers (cf. Rev. 2:10; 12:10) but God's plan will prevail. Christians must not take themselves out of the world but remain in meaningful contact with it, trusting in God's protection while they witness for Jesus.

17:16-17. Just as Jesus did not belong to the satanic world system (I am not of it; cf. v. 14), so believers do not. They belong to the heavenly kingdom (Col. 1:13) because of their new births (cf. John 3:3). Jesus had prayed for protection for His disciples (17:11). Now His second petition for them was for their sanctification. Sanctify means "set apart for special use." A believer is to be distinct from the world's sin, its values, and its goals.

The means of this sanctifying work is God's truth. The truth is communicated in the Word, which is both personal and propositional. As the message about Jesus was heard, believed, and understood, the disciples' hearts and minds were captured. This change in their thinking resulted in changes in their living. The same is true of believers today. As they appropriate God's Word to their lives, they are sanctified—set apart for God and changed in their living in order to honor God (cf. 15:3). God's message set the apostles apart from the world so that they would do His will, not Satan's.

17:18. Jesus is the model for every believer. He was in the world but He was not of the world (vv. 14b, 16b). He was sent . . . into the world on a mission by His Father. So believers are sent . . . into the world on a mission by the Son, to make the Father known (cf. 20:21). Inasmuch as Jesus' prayer for the disciples was not limited to the immediate apostles (cf. 17:20), this passage is similar to the Great Commission (Matt. 28:18-20). Each Christian should view himself as a missionary whose task is to communicate God's truth to others.

17:19. For the benefit of the disciples, Jesus sanctified Himself. In what sense did Jesus need to sanctify Himself? Was He not already set apart to God and distinct from the world? Yes, but this sanctification refers to His being separated and dedicated to His death. And the pupose of His death was that they too may be truly sanctified. The words "truly sanctified" are literally "sanctified in truth." This probably means that God's truth is the means of sanctification (cf. comments on v. 17). The purpose of the death of Christ is to dedicate or separate believers to God and His program.

3. JESUS' INTERCESSION FOR FUTURE BELIEVERS (17:20-26)

17:20. The final portion of Jesus' prayer (vv. 20-26) was for future believers who would come to Him through the message of the apostles. In the Church Age all Christians have come to Christ directly or indirectly through the apostles' witness. Jesus knew His mission would succeed. He would die and be raised, He would send forth the Spirit, the apostles would preach, people would be converted, and the church would be formed. As each high priest of Israel bore the names of the tribes before the presence of God in the tabernacle and the temple (cf. Ex. 28:9-12, 21-29), so now Jesus, the great High Priest, carried future believers into the holy presence of His heavenly Father (cf. Heb. 4:14–5:12; 7:24–8:2).

17:21. Jesus requested unity for future believers (cf. vv. 11, 22). This verse is a favorite of promoters of the present ecumenical movement. Admittedly the divided church is in many ways a scandal. The cure, however, is not institutional union. Jesus was not praying for the unity of a single, worldwide, ecumenical church in which doctrinal heresy would be maintained along with orthodoxy. Instead, He was praying for a unity of love, a unity of obedience to God and His Word, and a united commitment to His will. There are great differences between uniformity, union, and unity.

All believers belong to the one body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:13) and their spiritual unity is to be manifest in the way they live. The unity Christ desires for His church is the same kind of unity the Son has with the Father: just as You are in Me and I am in You (cf. John 10:38; 17:11, 23). The Father did His works through the Son and the Son always did what pleased the Father (5:30; 8:29). This spiritual unity is to be patterned in the church. Without union with Jesus and the Father (they . . . in Us), Christians can do nothing (15:5). The goal of their lives is to do the Father's will.

The disciples' union with Jesus as His body will result in people in the world believing in the Father: that You have sent Me (cf. 17:23).

17:22-23. The glory which Christ gave the church may refer to the glory of the Cross (cf. vv. 1-5). As the church received and pondered the significance of Jesus' atoning work, it would be united in God's purposes and redemptive plan. Again the union of Christians (that they may be one) is likened to the unity the Son has with the Father (as We are One; cf. vv. 11, 21). This union is further linked by Christ's indwelling of believers (I in them).

The goal of the unity of believers with each other and with God is twofold: (a) that the world will believe in the Son's divine mission (know that You sent Me), and (b) that the world will sense that God's love for believers is deep, intimate, and lasting as is His love for His unique Son (cf. v. 26).

17:24. The communion and fellowship which disciples have with Jesus in this life will increase in eternity. The goal of a believer's salvation is future glorification which includes being with Jesus (cf. 14:3; Col. 3:4; 1 Thes. 4:17). Jesus' last testament and will (I want, thelō) is that His disciples enter into (see) His glory (Heb. 2:10). This glory was what Jesus had from the Father and would again have (John 17:5). His testament was sealed by His death and resurrection. Since His will is identical to the Father's (4:34; 5:30; 6:38), it will certainly come to pass.

17:25-26. Jesus' prayer for believers ends with a call to the Righteous Father. The word translated "righteous" here does not occur often in John's Gospel (cf. 5:30; 7:24). Its significance here seems to be in Jesus' praise of the Father for His work of revelation (cf. Matt. 11:25-26). The Father is right (righteous) and the world is in the wrong (the world does not know You). Jesus has known, revealed (John 17:6), and glorified (v. 4) the Father, and so should Christians. The essence of God is love (1 John 4:8). Jesus made the Father and His love known to the world by His death. And the Father made known His love for the Son by raising Him to glory. Jesus' purpose in revealing the Father was that Christians would continue to grow in that love (that the Father's love for the Son may be in them) and to enjoy the personal presence of Jesus in their lives (that I Myself may be in them).

Jesus' petitions for believers are four: preservation (John 17:11), sanctification (v. 17), unity (vv. 11, 21-22), and participation in Jesus' glory (v. 24). This prayer is sure to be answered (cf. 11:42; 1 John 5:14).

IV. Jesus' Passion and Resurrection (chaps. 18–20)

A. The arrest of Jesus (18:1-11)

18:1. Jesus left the room where He ate the Last Supper with His disciples and crossed the Kidron Valley, to the east. The Kidron, the modern Wodi en-Nar, is a valley or torrent bed which starts north of Jerusalem and passes between the temple mount and the Mount of Olives on its way to the Dead Sea. David was betrayed by a friend (Ahithophel) while crossing the Kidron and going up to the Mount of Olives (2 Sam. 15:23, 30-31). So too Jesus was betrayed by His "trusted friend" Judas while crossing the Kidron and going to the Mount of Olives. The olive grove was a place where Jesus and His disciples came each night to bivouac when they were in Jerusalem (Luke 21:37). During festival times (e.g., the Passover) thousands of Jews flocked to the Holy City and most of them had to stay in tents or other temporary shelters.

18:2-3. "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil" (1 Tim. 6:10). So it is not surprising that Judas . . . betrayed Jesus for money (John 12:4-6; Matt. 26:14-16). Judas was not an unusual monster but a common man caught in a common sin (greed) which Satan used to accomplish his purpose. Judas knew the habits of Jesus, and his deed stands out in black contrast with Jesus' unselfish love. The soldiers . . . officials from the chief priests, and Pharisees united in their hostility toward Jesus. The detachment of Roman soldiers was a cohort (speiran, 10th part of a legion), which here included about 600 men. They were probably commanded to pick up this insurrectionist who claimed to be some kind of king.

18:4. Jesus was conscious of all the events coming on Him. He was not taken by surprise, but was a willing voluntary sacrifice (10:14, 17-18). Earlier in His ministry Jesus was unwilling to be made a popular king (6:15). The scene in 18:4 is one of intense drama and irony. Judas came with soldiers and religious leaders to take Jesus by force. But Jesus stood alone (the disciples had fallen asleep; Luke 22:45-46); though unarmed, He was in command. In the darkness of the night, He could have fled as all the disciples would soon do (cf. Mark 14:50). But instead He gave Himself up.

18:5-6. His words I am He (lit., "I Am") startled them and they . . . fell backward to the ground, struck no doubt by the majesty of His words (cf. 7:45-46). The phrase I am is ambiguous and could refer to Jesus' deity (Ex. 3:14; John 8:58). Or it may simply have been Jesus' way of identifying Himself (as in 9:9).

18:7-9. As the Good Shepherd, Jesus laid down His life for the sheep (10:11). His protection of the apostles was a perfect illustration of His substitutionary atonement. He died not only for them but instead of them. As the Good Shepherd He did not lose any of His sheep but fulfilled His Father's will for the apostles (6:38) and fulfilled His own prophetic Word (6:39).

18:10. Peter had promised that he would die for Jesus (Matt. 26:33-35) and he thought he perhaps could save Jesus or at least go down fighting. Undoubtedly he was better at fishing than at swordplay, for he no doubt tried to take off the head of the high priest's servant . . . Malchus not just his ear. Both Luke (22:50) and John recorded that it was his right ear which is an incidental evidence of the historical reliability of these Gospel books. (Luke added that Jesus healed the man's ear [Luke 22:51], an amazing touch of love for His enemies!) Peter's blind loyalty was touching, but it missed God's plan. Zeal without knowledge in religion often leads men astray (cf. Rom. 10:2).

18:11. Earlier that same night Jesus had rebuked Peter (13:6-11). Now He rebuked him again, this time for not understanding God's will. In spite of constant teaching about His approaching death (3:14; 8:28; 12:32-33; cf. Luke 9:22) the disciples did not understand its need (cf. Luke 24:25). The cup which the Father had given Jesus refers to the suffering and death He would experience under God's wrath against sin (Ps. 75:8; Isa. 51:17, 22; Jer. 25:15; Ezek. 23:31-33). The words the cup the Father has given Me indicated that Jesus saw all the things coming on Him as part of God's sovereign plan. His rhetorical question to Peter was designed to prod Peter's thinking. Jesus had come to do the Father's will and so He must now embrace it.

B. The religious trial and Peter's denials (18:12-27)

18:12-14. When Jesus was arrested, it was dark and late at night. Jesus had already had a long day. His disciples were so exhausted by the schedule and the pressures that they had fallen asleep. But for Jesus, the time while they were sleeping was a deep crisis in prayer and agony (Mark 14:33-41; Luke 22:44). Now Jesus was bound and in the hands of His enemies. He was alone since His disciples had been scattered (Matt. 25:56; John 16:32).

The religious trial began (cf. the list of Jesus' six trials at Matt. 26:57). The words, They . . . brought Him first to Annas, provide information not given in the other Gospels. Annas had been appointed high priest by Quirinius, governor of Syria, in A.D. 6 and remained until he was deposed by Valerius Gratus, procurator of Judea, in A.D. 15. According to the Jewish law the high priestly office was for life, but the Romans did not like the concentration of power in one person so they frequently changed high priests. Annas was succeeded by five of his sons and by his son-in-law Caiaphas (see the chart at Acts 4:6; cf. Luke 3:2). Evidently Annas remained the power behind the throne; a preliminary investigation was carried out by him before Jesus' formal religious trial. Caiaphas was the high priest that year, that is, that fateful year of Jesus' death. John reminded his readers of Caiaphas' unconscious prophecy (John 11:49-52).

18:15-16. After the immediate fright in the olive grove, when the mob took Jesus and the disciples ran, two disciples returned and followed the Lord and His enemies back across the Kidron and into the city. They were Simon Peter and another disciple. The other disciple is unknown but he may well have been John, son of Zebedee (cf. 20:2; 21:20, 24). This disciple knew the high priest and therefore had access into the high priest's courtyard. Thus he was in a unique position to know what was going on and to enable Peter to get into the courtyard.

18:17-18. Peter's denial before the servant girl was a striking contradiction to his earlier boast to lay down his life for Jesus (13:37), and his show of offense in cutting off Malchus' ear (18:10). Evidently the other disciple was also in danger (perhaps greater) but he did not deny Jesus. Peter stood by the fire . . . warming himself in the cold spring evening, Jerusalem being about 2,500 feet above sea level. This little detail about the cold evening is another indication that the author of this book was an eyewitness.

18:19. The events in the narrative in verses 12-27 are like a drama presented on two stages. Stage one was set (vv. 12-14) while the action on stage two went on (vv. 15-18). Then the action shifted back to stage one (vv. 19-24), and then returned to the other stage (vv. 25-27).

The preliminary investigation of Jesus may be likened to what might happen today when an arrested person is first brought into a police station. Annas questioned Jesus about people who held His views and about the nature of His teaching. If an insurrection was feared (cf. 11:48), these would be normal questions.

18:20-21. Jesus responded that He had no secret cult or organization. He had an inner circle of disciples but the character of His teaching was not private. He taught in the open and in public places (in synagogues or at the temple). The people knew what He taught so if there was a question concerning what He taught, answers were readily available. Jesus did not have two kinds of truths or teaching. He was innocent unless proven guilty. Therefore they should produce witnesses if they had something substantial against Him. Of course, they had no clear accusation so they sought some way to trick Him or catch Him in a trap.

18:22-24. One of Annas' assistants did not like Jesus' answer so he struck Him in the face. The preliminary hearing had several illegalities, and this was one of them. It was improper to try to induce self-accusation, and it was wrong to hit an unconvicted person. Jesus' response concerned not the manner of His speech (Is that any way . . . ?) but the substance of His teaching (If I said something wrong . . .). It was easier to evade the truth or to silence the One who spoke the truth than to attempt to answer the truth. Truth has a self-evident power of persuasion and those who oppose it find it difficult to deny. Jesus pressed this point and exposed their hypocrisy. They knew the truth but loved error. They saw the light but loved darkness (cf. 3:19; Rom. 1:18). Following this preliminary interview, Annas sent Jesus on to his son-in-law Caiaphas (cf. John 18:13). (The NIV text is more probable than the NIV marg.)

18:25-27. In this section Peter denied the Lord for the second and third times. Peter's betrayal is reported in all four Gospels, which indicates something of the importance the Gospel writers saw in this defection of the disciples' leader. Since all men fail and even many noted Christians stumble greatly, the record of Peter's denials (and his subsequent restoration; cf. chap. 21) is of great pastoral comfort. The final denial was prompted by a question by a relative of the man Malchus, whom Peter had tried to kill in the garden. Just after Peter denied Jesus the third time, the Lord looked on him (Luke 22:61) and he went out weeping bitterly (Luke 22:62). Then a rooster began to crow (cf. Matt. 26:72-74), which fulfilled Jesus' prophecy (John 13:38). (Mark wrote that a rooster crowed twice; see comments on Mark 14:72.) A rooster crowing and Baalam's donkey speaking reveal God's sovereignty and the movement of all things in His plan and timing.

C. The civil trial (18:28–19:16)

18:28-29. Each of the Gospel writers had a special emphasis in his presentation of Jesus' trial, death, and resurrection. John seems to supplement the material of the first three Gospels. Only he reported the interview with Annas, and he reported the interview with Pilate in much more detail and psychological insight. John did not report the trial before the Jewish Sanhedrin (Mark 14:55-64) with the charge of blasphemy. (See the list of Jesus' six trials at Matt. 26:57.)

Since the Jewish council did not have the legal right to put Jesus to death, the case had to be brought before the Roman governor, Pontius Pilate (A.D. 26–36). Normally the governor lived in Caesarea, but during the great feasts it was prudent for him to come to Jerusalem in case a riot or insurrection took place. Passover was particularly dangerous because emotions ran high as the Jews remembered their deliverance from bondage.

The location of the palace of the Roman governor is disputed. It could have been at the Antonia Fortress on the north side of the temple area or at one of Herod's two palaces on the west of the city. The Jews would not enter a Gentile house (in this case the governor's palace), but they could go into the courtyard or under the colonnades. It is ironic that the Jewish leaders were concerned with ritual uncleanness while they planned murder! So Pilate came out to the Jews (probably to a courtyard) and began an informal inquiry.

18:30-31. The Jews' reply to Pilate revealed the hostility between them. (Pilate was hated by them for his harshness and the fact that he was a Gentile ruling over them. Pilate despised them and eventually in the year A.D. 36 they were able to get Pilate recalled to Rome.) At this time Pilate refused to be their executioner. He knew what was going on. He had seen the Triumphal Entry a few days earlier. He knew that envy was the cause of their accusation against Jesus (Matt. 27:18). So Pilate decided to play a game with the Jews with Jesus' life as the prize. He refused to do anything without a sufficient charge. The Jews' accusation of blasphemy would be difficult to prove and would not impress Pilate as worthy of death under Roman civil law. The Jews seem to have lost the official right to execute but in certain cases people were stoned (cf. Acts 6:8–7:60). Jesus was popular, and the Sanhedrin wanted Him dead and, if possible, killed by the Romans. The Sanhedrin could condemn, but only the Romans could execute legally.

18:32. John explained why Jesus was delivered by the Jews to the Romans. Jewish executions were normally by stoning, which broke bones. The Roman method of execution was crucifixion. It was necessary for three reasons for Jesus to be crucified by the Romans at the instigation of the Jews: (a) to fulfill prophecies (e.g., that none of His bones be broken; cf. 19:36-37); (b) to include both Jews and Gentiles in the collective guilt for the deed (cf. Acts 2:23; 4:27); (c) by crucifixion, Jesus was "lifted up" like "the snake in the desert" (cf. comments on John 3:14). A person under God's curse was to be displayed (hanged) on a tree as a sign of judged sin (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13).

18:33-34. Pilate had a private interview with Jesus (vv. 33-38a). He realized that the Jews would not normally turn over one of their own to the hated Romans so something was strange about this case. According to Luke (23:2) they accused Jesus of three things: subverting the nation, opposing payment of taxes to Caesar, and claiming to be "Christ, a King." Pilate began by asking Jesus if He was the King of the Jews. Jesus asked Pilate if he had that idea on his own or if others (Jews) talked to him. Jesus here asked Pilate if he was concerned that He was some political threat to Rome, that is, a revolutionary.

18:35-36. Pilate sarcastically replied with a question as to whether he was a Jew or not. Of course he was not interested in Jewish questions, but only in matters pertaining to civil government. It must have hurt Jesus deeply to have Pilate press the point that it was the Jews, His own people, and their own religious leaders who had accused Him. In his prologue John had sounded this sad theme, "He came to that which was His own, but His own did not receive Him" (1:11). Jesus replied that Rome need not fear a political insurrection. He was not a zealot or a revolutionary guerrilla leader. His kingdom is not like that. It is not of this world; it is from another place, that is, heaven. Therefore it comes not by rebellion but by submission to God. Its source was not from men's acts of violence but from a new birth from heaven which transferred a person out of Satan's kingdom into God's kingdom (cf. Col. 1:13; John 3:3).

18:37. Since Jesus spoke of a kingdom, Pilate seized on the word "king." You are a king, then? Jesus answered that question in the affirmative, and then clarified that His kingdom is not like Rome's. It is a kingdom of truth which overshadows all kingdoms. He said, Everyone on the side of truth listens to Me. Jesus in a few words asserted His divine origin (I was born . . . I came into the world) and ministry (to testify to the truth). Later He became Pilate's judge.

18:38. Pilate's question, What is truth? has echoed down through the centuries. How his question was intended is problematic. Was it a wistful desire to know what no one could tell him? Was it philosophical cynicism concerning the problem of epistemology? Was it indifference to anything so impractical as abstract thought? Or was it irritation at Jesus' response? These are all possible interpretations of his words. But the significant thing is that he suddenly turned away from the One who is "the Truth" (14:6) without waiting for an answer. Pilate's declaration of Jesus' innocence is important. He would die like a Passover lamb, a male in its prime without blemish (Ex. 12:5).

18:39-40. Having displayed a lack of interest in truth, Pilate then revealed a lack of commitment to justice. He lacked the courage of his convictions. If Jesus was innocent of all charges, then Pilate should have set Him free. Instead, Pilate began a series of compromising moves to avoid dealing with an inconvenient truth in a difficult circumstance. First, when Pilate found out Jesus was from Galilee, he sent Him to Herod (Luke 23:6-7). Second, Pilate tried to appeal to the crowd (John 18:38), hoping to bypass the desire of the chief priests and elders. Knowing Jesus was popular, he thought the crowd would prefer Jesus to Barabbas. But the leaders proved to be persuasive (cf. Matt. 27:20). The offer to release . . . Barabbas who was guilty of murder and insurrection showed poor judgment for a person responsible for Rome's interests.

19:1-3. Third, Pilate . . . had him flogged. Pilate's action, according to Luke (23:16), was another attempt at compromise. He hoped the crowd would be satisfied with a little blood. Roman flogging was done with a leather whip with bits of metal at the ends. Such flogging often killed a person. The flogging, the mocking crown of thorns and purple robe, the ridiculing in hailing Him King of the Jews, and the physical blows on His face—these were all part of Jesus' deep humiliation as He was identified with human sin as the Servant of the Lord (cf. Isa. 50:6; 52:14–53:6). (Matthew and Mark added that the soldiers spit on Jesus [Matt. 27:30; Mark 15:19].) The thorns on His head are mindful of the curse of thorns caused by human sin (Gen. 3:18).

19:4-5. Again Pilate's attempt to free Jesus by an appeal to the crowd missed the mark. Their taste for His blood was beyond recall. Pilate's words, Here is the Man! (KJV, "Behold the Man!" Latin, Ecce homo) have become famous. It is strange that several of Pilate's statements have become immortal. Jesus by that time must have appeared as a pathetic figure, bloody and wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe.

19:6-7. The Jewish leaders displayed their hatred of Jesus and shouted for His death. Crucifixion was a shameful death, usually reserved for criminals, slaves, and especially revolutionaries. Pilate at first refused to be the executioner, but then the leaders brought forth their real reason: He claimed to be the Son of God. According to the Law the charge of blasphemy (Lev. 24:16) called for death, if it could be proven. About the same time Pilate's wife sent him strange words: "Don't have anything to do with that innocent Man, for I have suffered a great deal today in a dream because of Him" (Matt. 27:19).

19:8-11. Pilate's response was one of fear. As a pagan he had heard stories of humanlike gods who visited men and judged them. Perhaps the solemn majesty of Jesus with His claims of truth began to convict his conscience. Jesus' refusal to answer Pilate's question, Where do You come from? fulfilled the words of prophecy in Isaiah 53:7.

Pilate had his opportunity for truth and was found wanting. Disturbed by Jesus' silence, he asked, Don't You realize I have power . . . ? True, Pilate had some power, but he was a pawn. Yet he was responsible for his decisions (cf. Acts 4:27-28; 1 Cor. 2:8). In reality, God is the only One who has ultimate and full power. Pilate, Jesus said, was under God and therefore responsible to Him: The one who handed Me over to you is guilty of a greater sin. In this statement was Jesus referring to Judas, Satan, Caiaphas, the priests, or the Jewish people? Perhaps Caiaphas is the best choice since he is the one who handed Jesus over to Pilate. Pilate was guilty (cf. the words in the Apostles' Creed, "suffered under Pontius Pilate"). But Jesus put more weight on Caiaphas as the responsible one (cf. John 11:49-50; 18:13-14).

19:12-13. Pilate, probably under conviction, wanted to free Jesus but the Jews now tried a new attack. To let Jesus go free, they argued, would be disloyalty to Caesar. The title friend of Caesar (Latin, amicus Caesaris) was an important consideration. Tiberius was on the throne and he was sick, suspicious, and often violent. Pilate had plenty to cover up and he did not want an unfavorable report to go to his boss. If he had to choose between showing his loyalty to Rome or siding with a despised and strange Jew, there was no question in his mind. The dilemma had to be resolved so Pilate made the official decision.

19:14-16. The sixth hour, by Roman reckoning of time, could indicate 6 A.M. (some scholars, however, take it to mean noon; cf. comments on 1:39; 4:6). This was the day of preparation for the Passover Week (i.e., Friday). That day was the Passover proper, the day on which Christ died. But it was also the preparation for the seven-day Feast of Unleavened Bread, which followed immediately after the Day of Passover, and which was sometimes called the Passover Week (cf. Luke 2:41; 22:1, 7; Acts 12:3-4; see comments on Luke 22:7-38).

Pilate said, Here is your King (KJV, "Behold your King!"). This is another example of irony. (John is the only Gospel writer who mentioned this incident.) Pilate did not believe Jesus was their King, but to spite the Jews he called Jesus the King of the Jews. John saw this as significant, for Jesus would die for His people as the King of His people, as the Messiah. Pilate could not resist goading the Jews: Shall I crucify your King? As if Rome would not crucify a Jewish king! The Jewish rejoinder, We have no king but Caesar, was full of irony. The rebellious Jews claimed loyalty to Rome while disclaiming their Messiah (cf. Ps. 2:1-3).

D. The Crucifixion (19:17-30)

19:17-18. Carrying His own cross, Jesus went out. These words fulfill two Old Testament symbols or types. Isaac carried his own wood for the sacrifice (Gen. 22:1-6) and the sin offering used to be taken outside the camp or city (cf. Heb. 13:11-13). So Jesus was made sin (2 Cor. 5:21). Golgotha in Aramaic (The place of the skull) was probably called this because the hill with its stony barren top looked like a skull. The two others who were crucified with Jesus are mentioned to make understandable the following sequel in which their legs were broken but not those of Jesus (cf. John 19:32-33). Luke added that the two were "criminals" (Luke 23:32-33), and Matthew called them "robbers" (Matt. 27:44).

19:19-20. The game between Pilate and the priests continued with the writing of the notice (Gr., titlon; Latin, titulus) which was usually attached to a criminal's cross. It read, JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS. Since the sign was written in three languages—Aramaic, Latin, and Greek—and the Crucifixion was in a public place, all who could read saw a clear proclamation.

19:21-22. The chief priests naturally did not want this to be proclaimed as a fact. They wanted Jesus to die for claiming to be the Jews' King. So they protested to Pilate to change the superscription. Pilate refused to do so. Doubtless he felt he had done enough dirty work for the leaders of the nation, and he enjoyed his little joke against them. His haughty answer, What I have written, I have written, completes a series of amazing utterances by Pilate (cf. 18:38; 19:5, 14-15; Matt. 27:22). Irony was also shown by John, who recognized that Pilate wrote those words but that God wanted His Son to die with this proclamation on His cross. The words in another sense are a fitting judgment on the life of Pilate. He had played his part and had his moment of truth. He, a Gentile, would be judged accordingly by the King of the Jews!

19:23-24. The soldier's activity in stripping Jesus and dividing His clothes was part of the customary cruelty of those times. Clothes were handmade and therefore expensive in comparison with clothes today. The executioners received the pieces as their due. The seamless tunic (undergarment) may be significant as the type of garment which the high priest wore, yet John did not expound on this point. John saw the significance in the fulfillment of Psalm 22:18, in which the poetic parallelism in that verse was fulfilled in two separate acts: (a) They divided My garments and (b) they cast lots for My clothing. That Jesus died naked was part of the shame which He bore for our sins. At the same time He is the last Adam who provides clothes of righteousness for sinners.

19:25-27. In stark contrast with the cruelty and indifference of the soldiers, a group of four women watched with love and grief. The anguish of Jesus' mother fulfilled a prophecy of Simeon: "A sword will pierce your own soul too" (Luke 2:35). Seeing her sorrow Jesus honored His mother by consigning her into the care of John, the beloved disciple. His brothers and sisters being in Galilee, were not in a position to care for or comfort her. The words of Jesus to Mary and the beloved disciple were His third saying from the cross (the first one recorded by John). In the other Gospels Jesus had already given a respite to the Roman executioners (Luke 23:24) and a pardon to one thief (Luke 23:42-43).

19:28-29. Jesus' fourth of seven sayings from the cross, "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?" is not recorded by John (cf. Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34). John recorded the fifth saying, I am thirsty. The wording in John 19:28 indicated that Jesus was fully conscious and was aware of fulfilling the details of prophecies (Pss. 42:1-2; 63:1). The paradox of the One who is the Water of life (John 4:14; 7:38-39) dying in thirst is striking. Giving Him wine vinegar, a sour wine, fulfilled Psalm 69:21. Putting the vinegar-soaked sponge on the end of a hyssop plant stalk seems odd. Perhaps this detail points to Jesus dying as the true Lamb at Passover, for hyssop was used in the Passover ceremonies (cf. Ex. 12:22).

19:30. The sixth word or saying that Jesus spoke from the cross was the single Greek work tetelestai which means It is finished. Papyri receipts for taxes have been recovered with the word tetelestai written across them, meaning "paid in full." This word on Jesus' lips was significant. When He said, "It is finished" (not "I am finished"), He meant His redemptive work was completed. He had been made sin for people (2 Cor. 5:21) and had suffered the penalty of God's justice which sin deserved. Even in the moment of His death, Jesus remained the One who gave up His life (cf. John 10:11, 14, 17-18). He bowed His head (giving His seventh saying, "Father, into Your hands I commit My spirit" [Luke 23:46]) and then dismissed His spirit. This differs from the normal process in death by crucifixion in which the life-spirit would ebb away and then the head would slump forward.

E. The burial (19:31-42)

19:31-32. In the only known archeological find of a crucifixion, which came to light in 1968, the skeletal remains revealed that the lower legs had been shattered by a single blow. This illustrates this passage. Because of the Law (Deut. 21:22-23) a body was not to remain exposed on a tree (or cross) overnight and certainly not on a Sabbath. A person so executed was under God's curse and his body if left exposed would defile the land (cf. Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13).

The smashing of the lower leg bones was called in Latin the crurifragium. This caused death to occur fairly quickly by shock, loss of blood, and inability to breathe (the chest cavity would bear the pressure of the body's weight after the legs were broken). Without this procedure, a person could live for many hours or even days. This crurifragium was done to the two thieves on each side of Jesus.

19:33-34. Jesus had already died so His legs were not broken. Instead, just to make sure, a soldier pierced Jesus' side with a spear. The result was a sudden flow of blood and water. This flow has been interpreted in various ways. Some have seen this as evidence that Jesus died of a broken heart so that His pericardium was full of blood and serum. Others see a symbolic or sacramental significance of the stream which heals people. More likely, it indicates that Jesus was a real human who died a real death. Possibly the spear struck the stomach and the heart, which accounted for the flow. The one who saw this (v. 35) saw saving significance in the sign. At the time of the writing of this Gospel, Gnosticism and Docetism were current problems. These ideologies denied the reality of the Incarnation and of His death. But the blood and water are firm answers against those heresies.

19:35-37. This section relates the testimony of the eyewitness who is also most probably the writer of this Gospel, John the disciple (cf. 13:23; 21:20-24). The value of His testimony is an important claim of truth, given so that others may grasp the facts and discern their significance (cf. 20:31). John explained that soldiers not administering the crurifragium to Jesus but simply piercing His side fulfilled two specific prophecies or types.

Jesus, as the true Passover Lamb, did not have any of His bones . . . broken (Ex. 12:46; Num. 9:12; Ps. 34:20) and people in the future will look on the pierced One (Zech. 12:10; cf. Rev. 1:7).

19:38-39. Joseph of Arimathea was rich (Matt. 27:57) and was waiting for the kingdom (Mark 15:43). (Arimathea was about 20 miles northwest of Jerusalem.) Though a member of the Sanhedrin, the Jewish council, he was "a good and upright man who had not consented to their decision" (Luke 23:50-51). After a crucifixion the Romans usually left the dead body to the beasts of prey. This lack of proper burial was the final humiliation in a crucifixion. But Jews removed exposed bodies (cf. comments on John 19:31-32).

Joseph got permission to bury Jesus' body. He along with another influential man (Nicodemus; cf. 3:1; 7:51) made the necessary arrangements. About 75 pounds of myrrh and aloes was an extensive amount of spices, used in preparing the body for burial. Perhaps Nicodemus now understood the teaching of Jesus that He would be lifted up and that a man could look in faith to Him and live (cf. 3:14). Both men who had been secret disciples now became manifest.

19:40-42. Because it was almost the Sabbath (which began at sundown) the burial had to take place quickly. Jewish burial customs did not involve mummification or embalming, which took out the blood and body organs. Their normal process was to wash a body and cover it with cloth and aromatic oils or spices. The NIV translation of othoniois as strips of linen has some support (cf. William F. Arndt and F. Wilbur Gingrich, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1957, p. 558). However, some Roman Catholic scholars argue for the translation "cloth wrappings" since Matthew refers to a linen cloth in which Jesus' body was wrapped (Matt. 27:59, sindōn).

Recent discussion on the Shroud of Turin has raised considerable controversy. The translation "strips of linen" would argue against the authenticity of the shroud. But at this time, because of the uncertainties of Jewish burial practices, the meaning of othoniois, and the Shroud of Turin, dogmatism should be avoided. Jesus' body was placed in a new tomb in a private garden, not in a cemetery. Matthew wrote that this was Joseph's "own new tomb that he had cut out of the rock" (Matt. 27:60). Isaiah prophesied that the Messiah, the suffering Servant, though despised and rejected by men, would be with the rich in His death (Isa. 53:9).

The burial of Jesus is part of the gospel ("He was buried," 1 Cor. 15:4). Its significance lies in the fact that it was the completion of Jesus' suffering and humiliation. It also pointed up the reality of His death and set the stage for His coming bodily resurrection. Also, in Jesus' burial He identified with believers who will die and be buried.

Joseph and Nicodemus' act of love and respect for the body of Jesus was for them dangerous, costly, and without any personal gain. The service of Christians for their living Lord should be equally courageous and sacrificial, for their labor is not in vain (1 Cor. 15:58).

F. The empty tomb (20:1-9)

John's Gospel comes to a conclusion with a proclamation of Jesus' victory over death (chap. 20) followed by an epilogue (chap. 21). Each Gospel writer stressed certain aspects of the events. John began with a testimony of how he came to personal faith in the Resurrection by considering the evidence found in the open tomb.

20:1-2. The first day of the week, Sunday, Mary of Magdala and other women (cf. we in v. 2) came to the tomb. "Mary of Magdala" is a translation of the same Greek words which elsewhere are rendered "Mary Magdalene" (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1, 9; Luke 24:10). Her devotion to Jesus, living and dead, was based on her gratitude for His delivering her from bondage to Satan. She had been an observer at the cross and now was the first person at the grave. This tomb had been closed with a large rock door (Mark 16:3-4) and had been sealed by the authority of the Roman governor Pontius Pilate (Matt. 27:65-66). The women were amazed to see an open and apparently empty tomb. They ran and told Peter and the beloved disciple (cf. John 19:26) that a terrible thing had occurred. They assumed that grave robbers had desecrated the tomb.

20:3-9. Peter and John started a footrace to the tomb. John beat Peter to the garden and looked in the tomb. It was not quite empty for John saw the grave clothes. Perhaps his first thought was that the women had made a mistake! He bent over and looked (blepei) in but did not enter the tomb, probably for fear of defilement. When Peter . . . arrived he rushed in and saw (theōrei, "beheld attentively") the grave clothes and the separate burial cloth. He must have remained inside puzzled at what he saw. After a period of time John went in and saw (eiden, "perceived"—the third Gr. word for "see" in these verses) the significance of the grave clothes and believed. Peter must have been thinking, "Why would a grave robber have left the clothes in this order? Why take the body of Jesus?" But John perceived that the missing body and the position of the grave clothes was not due to a robbery. He realized that Jesus had risen from the dead and had gone through the grave clothes. The tomb was open not to let Jesus' body out but to let the disciples and the world see that He rose.

This section of John's Gospel (20:1-9) is a powerful eyewitness testimony which strikes the perceptive reader as being psychologically and historically true. John commented (v. 9) that even after a long period of teaching by Jesus the disciples still did not understand from Scripture that Jesus had to rise from the dead (cf. Pss. 16:10-11; 110:1, 4; Isa. 53:11-12).

G. Jesus' appearance to Mary (20:10-18)

20:10-14. Jesus' first resurrection appearance was to Mary of Magdala, out of whom He had cast seven demons (Luke 8:2). (For a list of His resurrection appearances see Matt. 28.) The disciples returned to their homes while Mary remained outside the tomb crying. John must not have yet told her that Jesus was risen. He probably was too stunned and puzzled to say anything significant. Mary looked into the tomb and saw two individuals who were angels. In the Bible when angels appeared to people, the angels looked like men; they did not have halos or wings. In certain visions, winged beings appeared (e.g., Isa. 6) but the norm for angels was that they were in human-like forms.

Because of her grief Mary did not notice anything unusual. Their question and her answer set the stage for the greatest "recognition scene" in all of history (perhaps the second greatest is "I am Joseph"; cf. Gen. 45:1-3). The appearance of Jesus to Mary was so unexpected that she did not realize that it was Jesus. The fact that He appeared to Mary rather than to Pilate or Caiaphas or to one of His disciples is significant. That a woman would be the first to see Him is an evidence of Jesus' electing love as well as a mark of the narrative's historicity. No Jewish author in the ancient world would have invented a story with a woman as the first witness to this most important event. Furthermore, Jesus may have introduced Himself to Mary first because she had so earnestly sought Him. She was at the cross while He was dying (John 19:25), and she went to His tomb early on Sunday morning (20:1).

20:15-16. Mary talked with Jesus but still did not realize who He was. Some suggest that Jesus' appearance was changed; others say she had a temporary "blindness" as did the Emmaus Road disciples who "were kept from recognizing Him" (Luke 24:16) until His act of disclosure. Others say that possibly the tears in her eyes kept her from recognizing Him.

Jesus said to her, Mary. As the Good Shepherd, He calls His sheep by name (cf. John 10:3) and "they know His voice" (10:4). Immediately she recognized Him! She responded with the cry Rabboni! (which means my Teacher)

20:17-18. She may have embraced Him physically, for the Lord responded, Do not hold on to Me, for I have not yet returned to the Father. Go instead to My brothers and tell them. . . . These words spoke of a new relationship, new relatives, and a new responsibility. Many wanted to "hold onto" Jesus. The KJV translation "Touch Me not," has caused many interpreters to wonder why He could not be "touched." The NIV translation is more accurate, for He certainly was not untouchable (cf. Matt. 28:9; John 20:27). Mary had lost Jesus once before (at His crucifixion) and it was natural to fear the loss of His presence again.

Jesus said, in effect, "This (the physical contact) is not My real presence for the church. A new relationship will begin with My Ascension and the gift of the Holy Spirit to the church." Jesus then explained the fact of the new relatives. He called His disciples His brothers. Earlier He had said they were friends: "I no longer call you servants . . . instead, I have called you friends" (15:15). Believers in Jesus become a part of Jesus' family with God as their Father (cf. Heb. 2:11-12; Rom. 8:15-17, 29; Gal. 3:26). Mary's new responsibility was to testify to His risen presence. She was the recipient of four special graces: to see angels; to see Jesus risen; to be the first to see Him alive; and to be a proclaimer of the good news. Christians today are also the recipients of special grace; they too are given this new responsibility to witness to the world (cf. Matt. 28:16-20).

Jesus' words, I am returning to My Father indicate His unique sonship. Mary and the other women told the news to the disciples, but according to Luke, they did not believe her or the other women "because their words seemed to them like nonsense" (Luke 24:11; cf. Luke 24:23).

H. Jesus' appearance to His disciples (20:19-23)

20:19-20. The disciples had almost been arrested with Jesus. They remained under the fear of death at the hands of the Jews (i.e., the Jewish authorities), so they met in secret at night, with fear, behind locked doors. (What a contrast with their boldness about seven weeks later on the day of Pentecost!) Jesus passed through the door, as indicated by the fact that when the doors were locked, He came and stood among them (cf. v. 26). This showed the power of His new resurrection body. But His body had substantial form and continuity with His pre-Cross body (cf. v. 27). His first words, Peace be with you! were a conventional greeting similar to šālôm in Hebrew. But the words were now invested with a deeper and fuller meaning (cf. 14:27; 16:33; Rom. 5:1; Phil. 4:7).

Seeing the wounds in His pierced hands and side, they were overjoyed (though at first they were frightened, as Luke stated [Luke 24:37-44]). What a change from their fear and despondency!

20:21-23. Jesus then recommissioned the disciples as His apostles: He was sending them as His representatives, as the Father had sent Him (cf. 17:18). They were sent with His authority to preach, teach, and do miraculous signs (Matt. 28:16-20; Luke 24:47-49). For their new commission they needed spiritual power. So He breathed on them and said, Receive the Holy Spirit. The image and wording of breathing on them recalls God's creative work in making Adam (Gen. 2:7). Now this post-Resurrection "breathing" was a new kind of creative work for they would soon become new creations (Eph. 2:8-10). This reception of the Spirit was in anticipation of the day of Pentecost and should be understood as a partial limited gift of knowledge, understanding, and empowerment until Pentecost, 50 days later.

Forgiveness of sins is one of the major benefits of the death of Jesus. It is the essence of the New Covenant (cf. Matt. 26:28; Jer. 31:31-34). Proclaiming the forgiveness of sins was the prominent feature of the apostolic preaching in the Book of Acts. Jesus was giving the apostles (and by extension, the church) the privilege of announcing heaven's terms on how a person can receive forgiveness. If one believes in Jesus, then a Christian has the right to announce his forgiveness. If a person rejects Jesus' sacrifice, then a Christian can announce that that person is not forgiven.

I. Jesus' appearance to Thomas (20:24-29)

20:24-29. In his Gospel, John has traced the development of unbelief, which culminated in Jesus' enemies crucifying Him. Conversely, John also traced the disciples' development of faith, which was now climaxed in Thomas. The disciples were affirming Jesus' resurrection to Thomas (told in v. 25 is elegon, an imperf. tense which indicates their continual activity). But he remained unconvinced. He wanted bodily proof of Jesus' risen state. The reappearance of Jesus a week later provided the opportunity Thomas wanted. Again . . . Jesus miraculously entered a room with locked doors (cf. v. 19). He asked Thomas to touch Him (cf. "showed" in v. 20) and to stop doubting and believe. This was a forthright challenge to a personal commitment.

Thomas' response, My Lord and My God! is the high point of the Gospel. Here was a skeptical man, confronted by the evidence of Jesus' resurrection. He announced that Jesus, the Man of Galilee, is God manifest in the flesh. Thus the truths in the first chapter were realized personally in this apostle (1:1, 14, 18). The Resurrection (a) demonstrated that what Jesus predicted about His being raised was true (Mark 8:31; 9:9, 31; 10:34; John 2:19), (b) proved that Jesus is the Son of God (Rom. 1:4) and was sent by God ("vindicated by the Spirit," 1 Tim. 3:16), (c) testified to the success of His mission of salvation (Rom. 4:25), (d) entitled Jesus to a position of glory (1 Peter 1:11), and (e) proclaimed that Jesus is the "Lord" (Acts 2:36).

Jesus then pronounced a blessing on all who would come to faith without the help of a visible, bodily manifestation to them (John 20:29; cf. 1 Peter 1:8). This blessing comes to all who believe on the basis of the proclaimed gospel and the evidences for its validity. Believers living today are not deprived by not seeing Him physically; instead, they are the recipients of His special blessing: Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed.

J. The purpose of the book (20:30-31)

20:30-31. John explained His purpose in writing this Gospel, that people might contemplate and perceive the theological significance of Jesus' miracles (sēmeia, "signs"). Many people today ignore, deny, or rationalize Jesus' miracles. Even in Jesus' day some people attributed them to God whereas others attributed them to Satan (3:2; 9:33; Matt. 12:24). To ignore, deny, or rationalize them in that day was impossible because the miracles were manifold and manifest. John indicated He was aware of the Synoptic miracles: Jesus did many other miraculous signs. In fact, 35 different miracles are recorded in the four Gospels (see the list at John 2:1-11). John selected 7 for special consideration in order that people might come to believe that Jesus is the Christ, the promised Messiah, and the Son of God. (The NIV marg. reading, "may continue to believe," is probably not the correct textual reading; the NIV text correctly renders the Gr. by the words may believe.)

V. The Epilogue (chap. 21)

John's purposes in this final chapter are (a) to reveal how Jesus reinstated Peter after his great fall, and (b) to correct a serious error about the Lord's return. The chapter also provides additional clues to the identity of the author. Some critics have argued that this chapter is anticlimactic after the great conclusion in chapter 20, and therefore was written by another (anonymous) writer. But the linguistic evidence does not support this notion. In addition, other great books of Scripture have appendixes after reaching a grand climax (cf., e.g., Rom. 16 following Rom. 15:33). Thus John 21 is neither without value nor out of harmony with other Bible books.

A. Jesus' appearance by the lake (21:1-14)

21:1-3. An angel had promised that Jesus would meet with His disciples in Galilee (Matt. 28:7). It was significant evidence for Jesus to manifest Himself in a different location and at a later time (cf. Acts 1:3). (The Sea of Tiberias is another name for the Sea of Galilee; cf. comments on John 6:1.) The disciples had gone to Jerusalem and had experienced a tumultuous series of events: the Triumphal Entry, the expectation of a new kingdom, a betrayal by a trusted friend, near arrest, denial of Jesus by their leader Peter, the agonizing crucifixion of Jesus, the Resurrection, and the manifestations of the risen Lord. Understandably they were confused and unsure of the future.

Peter went fishing since he may have misunderstood the Lord's commission (20:22). Peter also had a family to support and undoubtedly had a sense of failure over his sin in denying the Lord. His leadership quality is evident in that six other disciples went with him. Their lack of success without Jesus' aid (cf. 15:5) and their great catch with His help gave them direction for their new lives.

21:4-6. Early in the morning the disciples failed to recognize Jesus . . . on the shore either because of distance or lack of light. He called out to them, Friends, haven't you any fish? The word "friends" (paidia) is literally, "little children" or perhaps "lads." In response to His authoritative voice and instruction (v. 6), they hauled in a huge catch of fish (cf. v. 11). This similarity to an earlier miracle (Luke 5:1-11) enabled the disciples to identify the Lord and to recognize

His ability to do great signs after His resurrection.

21:7-9. This revelation of Jesus and His power to His disciples dawned first in the beloved disciple, who exclaimed, It is the Lord! (cf. 20:28) John had also been first to discern the significance of the grave clothes (20:8). Hearing John's word, Peter immediately jumped into the water, and apparently swam to Jesus. This is typical of his impulsive nature (he went first into the tomb; 20:6). This psychological insight into Peter's character reinforces the historical reliability of John's eyewitness testimony. Peter's action contrasts strikingly with the time he started to sink in the water (Matt. 14:30). Jesus had prepared a breakfast of charcoaled fish with bread for the hungry disciples.

21:10-11. Mention of the large fish, 153 in all, has given rise to all kinds of allegorical and symbolic interpretations. But probably John mentioned the number as a matter of historical detail. With a group of men fishing, the common procedure would be for them to count the fish they caught and then divide them equally among the fishermen. A spiritual lesson here is that great blessing comes to one's efforts when he follows the Lord's will.

21:12-14. When Jesus invited them to eat with Him, none of them asked who He was for they knew it was the Lord. The fact that both Mary (20:14) and the Emmaus Road disciples (Luke 24:13-35) did not immediately identify the Lord may indicate some difference in the Lord's resurrection appearance here. Yet the identification was so certain that all the disciples knew it was Jesus. Their meal together stamped an indelible impression on their minds. Years later in his preaching Peter spoke of himself as a reliable witness who ate and drank with Jesus after His resurrection (Acts 10:41). The third time means Jesus' third appearance to the apostles, which John narrated (cf. John 20:19, 24 for the other two appearances).

B. Jesus' reinstating of Peter (21:15-23)

21:15-17. Earlier Peter had denied Jesus beside a fire (18:18, 25). Now beside another fire he was restored publicly.

Jesus called him Simon Son of John, as He had when He first met Peter (1:42). Jesus asked him, Do you truly love Me more than these? What did Jesus mean by "these"? Jesus probably was referring to the disciples, in light of Peter's proud statement that he never would fall away no matter what others did (Matt. 26:33, 35; Luke 22:33; John 13:37). Jesus' threefold question and threefold commission of apostolic mission contrast directly with Peter's three denials. Three times Peter said he did not even know the Lord (18:17, 25, 27); now three times he said he loved the Lord (21:15-17). No matter how great a person is, he may fall (cf. 1 Cor. 10:12). But God's grace and forgiveness will restore the repentant. This provision of grace would be important, for the church would soon face great persecution and even church leaders would waver in their commitments.

Three times Jesus commissioned Peter to care for the flock: Feed My lambs; (v. 15); Take care of My sheep (v. 16); Feed My sheep (v. 17). Some Roman Catholics assume that this asserts Peter's primacy, but this is foreign to the passage (cf. 1 Peter 5:2). In Jesus' three questions of love (agapas, agapas, and phileis) and His three commands of duty (boske, "tend"; poimaine, "herd, lead to pasture"; boske) various Greek synonyms are used. Since it is difficult to see any consistent distinctions that John intended, most scholars see these as stylistic variations.

21:18-19. I tell you the truth (cf. comments on 1:51) introduces a solemn prediction of Peter's coming crucifixion. In old age Peter was tied to a cross and had his hands stretched out (cf. 1 Clement 5:4; 6:1; Eusebius The Ecclesiastical History 2. 25). Obedience to Jesus' command, Follow Me, is the key issue in every Christian's life. As Jesus followed the Father's will, so His disciples should follow their Lord whether the path leads to a cross or to some other difficult experience.

21:20-23. Peter, having been informed about God's plan for his life, naturally wondered what the future held for his friend John, the disciple whom Jesus loved. Jesus sharply rebuked Peter for being curious about God's will for another's life: What is that to you? You must follow Me. Some disciples can be easily distracted by unnecessary questions about God's secret will; as a result they neglect God's plainly revealed will. God's plans for Christians vary and His reasons are not often made known. Peter was to commit himself to God's plain commands to him.

John then corrected a faulty inference made by some believers that John would not die. Interestingly Jesus' last words recorded by John in this Gospel refer to His return. Of course, Jesus gave no indication when He would return. The false rumor about Jesus' words to Peter show the possibility of misunderstanding God's promises. Christians must seek to understand God's Word accurately.

C. The colophon (21:24-25)

21:24-25. The Fourth Gospel ends with information about its composition. The beloved disciple is identified as the author (cf. comments on "Authorship" in the Introduction). The first sentence in verse 24 may have been someone other than John, but the wording sounds Johannine (cf. 19:35). These things most likely refer to the entire Gospel. The words, We know that his testimony is true, were probably written by someone other than John. They are an endorsement, perhaps by the Ephesian church, or a testimony from the early church as a whole. They were certainly in a position to know the facts better than any generation since then.

The final verse—with its statement about the world not having room for all the books that could be written about Jesus' deeds—may seem at first glance to be an exorbitant overstatement. (The I seems to suggest John as the author of this verse though that is uncertain.) Yet the Gospels record only a small sample of Jesus' words and works. Someone has estimated that a person can read aloud Jesus' words recorded in the Gospels in only about three hours. But if all that the infinite Son of God said and did in His Incarnation were pondered, the resulting commentary would be endless.

APPENDIX

The Story of the Adulteress (7:53–8:11)

Five questions need to be considered before commenting on this story: (1) Is it Scripture? (2) Was it written by John? (3) Is it ancient and true, that is, historical? (4) Is it canonical? (5) If it was not originally part of John's Gospel, why is the material placed before 8:12 in most English Bible versions? Questions 1 and 4 are closely related but are not identical. As to question 1, the consensus of New Testament textual scholars is that this section was not part of the original text. For Protestants who accept that judgment, this fact settles the issue of canonicity (question 4): the passage is not part of the biblical canon. However, for Roman Catholic scholars canonicity means that this passage is authoritative because it is in the Vulgate. So even though the passage may not have been part of John's original manuscript, Catholics nevertheless accept the passage as having God's authority because the Vulgate includes it. Question 2, on the passage's Johannine origin, is also tied to question 1. Not only do many Greek manuscripts lack these verses, but those that do include them often mark them with asterisks or obeli. In addition various ancient Greek manuscripts include the passage in five different locations (after John 7:36, after 7:44, after 7:52, after 21:25, and after Luke 21:38). Both the textual evidence and stylistic data in the passage indicate that this is non-Johannine material.

Most commentators answer question 3 (Is it historical?) by yes. If this judgment is correct, then this is a rare extrabiblical authentic tradition about Jesus. John alluded to other things Jesus did (John 21:25) so this story may be one of those events. The answer to the fifth question seems to be that the material was placed before 8:12 in most Bible versions because the contents of this section relate well to two statements of Jesus in chapter 8 ("I pass judgment on no one" [8:15], and "Can any of you prove Me guilty of sin?" [8:46]).

7:53. This verse shows that this story was a continuation of some other material. The original connection is now lost.

8:1-2. Since Jesus regularly taught in the temple courts . . . the people daily gathered to hear Him. As Luke wrote, "Each day Jesus was teaching at the temple, and each evening He went out to spend the night on the hill called the Mount of Olives, and all the people came early in the morning to hear Him at the temple" (Luke 21:37-38).

8:3-6a. Jesus' teaching was interrupted by some teachers of the Law and . . . Pharisees. They held a strict application of the Law to life. The woman, who may have been married, was caught in adultery. According to the Law there had to be two witnesses to confirm the guilt of a person accused of a crime (Deut. 19:15). Being caught in the act of intercourse normally seems unlikely, so the religious leaders may have deliberately planned to catch her in the act. The man should have been brought in with the woman, but perhaps he had escaped. The purpose of bringing this woman before Jesus was to discredit Him as a Teacher. If He condemned her, He would lose favor with the common people. If He did not, He would be disagreeing with Moses.

8:6b-8. Many have tried to guess what Jesus wrote on the ground. Some suggest He wrote the sins of the accusers. Others propose that He wrote the words of Exodus 23:1, "Do not [be] a malicious witness." Still others say He simply traced His finger in the dust while preparing to respond, but that seems unlikely. Since it is impossible to know, any conjecture is fruitless. His response—that only one who is without sin can judge—pointed to their own sinfulness and at the same time to Himself as the only competent Judge because of His sinlessness (cf. John 8:16). Then He wrote on the ground again.

8:9-10. While Jesus was still stooped down, His authoritative word (cf. Matt. 7:28-29) struck conviction of sin in their hearts. The older ones left first, perhaps because they had the wisdom to recognize the sin in their hearts and lives. Since the witnesses and the accusers left, the legal case against the woman was dropped.

8:11. Jesus' words again reveal Him as the Master Teacher. He rebuked sin but He gave the woman hope for a new life. Theologically Jesus could forgive her sin because he has that authority (cf. Mark 2:8-12) and because He is the Lamb of God who bore "the sin of the world" (John 1:29). Besides having the divine ability to forgive her sin, His manner of dealing with her was gracious. He was revealed to her as the One who is "full of grace" (1:14).

ACTS

Stanley D. Toussaint

INTRODUCTION

Among the New Testament writings, Acts stands out as singular and unique. This claim is made on the basis of several considerations. For one, it is the only historical sequel to the four Gospels in the canonical writings. No other narrative in the New Testament continues the accounts given by the four evangelists.

Furthermore, this book forms a background and setting for most of Paul's writings. Bruce writes, "But it is Luke that we have to thank for the coherent record of Paul's apostolic activity. Without [Acts], we should be incalculably poorer. Even with it, there is much in Paul's letters that we have difficulty in understanding; how much more there would be if we had no Book of Acts" (F.F. Bruce, Commentary on the Book of the Acts, p. 27).

The Book of Acts gives today's Christians basic information and insights into the early church. Luke portrays the tensions, persecutions, frustrations, theological problems, and hopes confronting the neophyte bride of Christ. How great would be the church's lack without the material in Acts!

In addition, Acts marks the transition from the work of God provincially among the Jews to His establishment of the universal church. In a real sense the reader goes from Jerusalem to the uttermost part of the world in these 28 chapters.

Besides all these, Acts presents a stimulating challenge to every Christian today. The zeal, the faith, the joy, the commitment, and the obedience of those early saints is an example to all believers. It is crucial for followers of Jesus Christ to be as intimately acquainted with this book as possible. As Rackham affirms, "We can hardly overestimate the importance of the Acts of the Apostles" (Richard Belward Rackham, The Acts of the Apostles, p. xiii).

Title of the Book. The earliest extant evidence for the name "Acts" is found in an anti-Marcionite Prologue to the Gospel of Luke, a work dated between A.D. 150 and 180. How or why it received this title is open to speculation.

It must be conceded that "Acts" is not an accurate title because the book by no means contains all the acts of all the apostles. Only Peter and Paul are emphasized. The great Apostle John is mentioned, but none of his words are recorded. The death of John's brother James is given in one brief sentence (Acts 12:12).

The work more accurately could be titled "Certain Acts of Certain Apostles." However, the title "The Acts of the Apostles" is so well established it identifies this work of Luke very well.

Purpose of Acts. Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit Luke certainly had a purpose in writing. What was he intending to accomplish? To put it another way,

Miracles by Peter and Paul

	Peter
Acts 3:1-11	Healed a man lame from birth
5:15-16	Peter's shadow healed people
5:17	Success caused Jewish jealousy
8:9-24	Dealt with Simon, a sorcerer
9:36-41	Raised Dorcas to life
	Paul
14:8-18	Healed a man lame from birth
19:11-12	Handkerchiefs and aprons from Paul healed people
13:45	Success caused Jewish jealousy
13:6-11	Dealt with Bar-Jesus, a sorcerer
20:9-12	Raised Eutychus to life

why did he select the materials he chose for the book? To this question there are two answers.

On the one hand some say the primary purpose is a historical one; on the other hand some say the goal is apologetic, that is, it is a written defense. All acknowledge there are subsidiary ends, but the question revolves around its primary purpose.

The view that the purpose of Acts is a Pauline apologetic is buttressed by the amazing set of parallels between Peter and Paul (see chart "Miracles by Peter and Paul").

Perhaps Luke intended in this way to defend Paul's apostleship; Paul certainly did not rate behind Peter in power and authority. This may also account for the three accounts of Paul's conversion (chaps. 9; 22; 26). But though there are striking parallels between Peter's and Paul's ministries, the vindication of Paul's apostleship can hardly be the book's primary purpose. There is just too much in the book that would be extraneous to this goal. How does the appointment of the Seven in Acts 6 or the detailed description of the shipwreck in Acts 27 further that end?

Most recognize that Acts shows the universality of Christianity. Is this its primary purpose? The gospel goes to Samaritans, the Ethiopian eunuch, Cornelius, Gentiles at Antioch, poor and wealthy, educated and uneducated, women and men, the high and lofty as well as those in humble positions. This approach also helps explain the emphasis on the Jerusalem Council described in Acts 15. However, this again does not explain certain elements in the book such as the choice of Matthias in Acts 1 or the selection of the Seven in Acts 6.

The question remains, what is the primary purpose of Acts? F.F. Bruce, a representative of those who believe the goal is an apologetic one, affirms, "Luke is, in fact, one of the first Christian apologists. In that particular type of apologetic which is addressed to the secular authorities to establish the law-abiding character of Christianity he is absolutely the pioneer" (Bruce, Acts, p. 24; cf. F.J. Foakes Jackson and Kirsopp Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, vol. 2, Prolegomena II: Criticism. Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1979, pp. 177-87). There is much in Acts to substantiate the idea that the book was written to defend Christianity before Roman rulers.

The persecution in Acts is always religious except in two locations—Philippi (chap. 16) and Ephesus (chap. 19). In both of these the opposition was due to vested interests. In every other case the persecutions arose from Jewish sources.

It may be debated, however, whether the primary purpose of Acts is apologetic, even though much in the book substantiates that view. Why include the shipwreck of Acts 27, for instance? Another objection to the concept of an apologetic purpose is the close association of Luke's Gospel with Acts. It is patently clear that Luke-Acts is a two-part work; Acts 1:1 is evidence enough of this. Acts, then, can hardly be apologetic in its primary purpose because there is little in the Gospel of Luke which reveals such an intention.

By far the most popular view of the purpose of Acts is the one which states that it is a historical one. According to this approach Luke's goal was to record the spread of the gospel message from Jerusalem to Judea to Samaria and to the ends of the earth (1:8). Barclay asserts, "Luke's great aim was to show the expansion of Christianity, to show how that religion which began in a little corner of Palestine had in a little more than 30 years reached Rome" (William Barclay, The Acts of the Apostles, p. xvii). This explains the transition from a Jewish ministry to a Gentile one, and from Peter to Paul. In addition, this view suits the historical outlook of Acts 1:1 with Luke 1:1-4. The prologue of Luke 1:1-4 is that of a historian like Herodotus, Thucydides, or Polybius. It is quite clear that Luke was writing history in both books.

But is Luke only a historiographer? Luke-Acts is history but it is also intensely theological and especially eschatological. The Book of Acts opens with an eschatological question (1:6) and concludes with eschatological terminology ("the kingdom of God," 28:31). In addition there is a stress on God's sovereignty. In spite of intense opposition of every kind, the Word of God spreads and people respond. Nothing can stop the steady growth of Christianity. The purpose of the Book of Acts may be stated as follows: To explain with the Gospel of Luke the orderly and sovereignly directed progress of the kingdom message from Jews to Gentiles, and from Jerusalem to Rome. In Luke's Gospel the question is answered, "If Christianity has its roots in the Old Testament and in Judaism, how did it become a worldwide religion?" The Book of Acts continues in the vein of the Gospel of Luke to answer the same problem.

Alongside this worldwide progression there is an emphasis on eschatology in both Luke and Acts. The prophetic expression kingdom of God occurs in Luke 32 times and in Acts 6 times besides the allusions to God's kingdom in 1:6 and 20:25 (cf. 1:3; 8:12; 14:22; 19:8; 28:23, 31). In addition there are many references to eschatology in other terminology and by inference (1:11; 2:19-21, 34-35; 3:19-25; 6:14; 10:42; 13:23-26, 32-33; 15:15-18; 17:3, 7, 31; 20:24-25, 32; 21:28; 23:6; 24:15-17, 21, 25; 26:6-8, 18; 28:20). Obviously, the church in the present Age is heavily accented, but the church also is seen as an heir of the kingdom. It may be concluded, then, that Luke shows how the kingdom message moved from mostly Jews to mostly Gentiles and from Jerusalem to Rome.

This progression is directed in an orderly and sovereign way. One theme that runs as a heavy cord in the fabric of the book is God's sovereignty. In spite of strong opposition, under the Lord's direction the Word of the Lord grew and spread. Thus the purpose of Luke in writing Acts is to show how it is God's intention for His millennial kingdom to include a population of believers taken from Jews and Gentiles during this Age.

If this purpose statement is accepted, it does not rule out the previous suggestions. It includes both Peter and Paul as prime characters, Peter the minister to the circumcised, and Paul to the uncircumcised. The universality of the gospel is part of Luke's emphasis in both his Gospel and here in Acts. Certainly the progression of the book, declared in 1:8, fits into this statement. All of these contribute to the overall purpose of Luke in penning this work.

Sources Luke May Have Used. Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit Luke probably used a number of sources. First and primary were his own personal experiences. This is most clearly seen in the "we" sections of Acts (16:10-40; 20:5–28:31). A second source of information would have been Paul, with whom Luke spent much time. The apostle's conversion and his experiences in ministry undoubtedly would have been discussed by the two in their time together. A third source is seen in the other witnesses whom Luke contacted (cf. 20:4-5; 21:15-19). In Acts 21:18-19 James is mentioned as being one with whom Luke met. James certainly would have been able to convey information about the very first chapters in Acts! In fact, the early chapters of Acts seem to betray an Aramaic source. Furthermore, while Paul was incarcerated for two years in Caesarea (24:27), Luke would have been free to carry out thorough investigative work in Palestine (Luke 1:2-3). Having carefully researched eyewitness accounts, Luke, by the Spirit's direction, penned the Book of Acts.

Date of the Book. The writing of Acts must have taken place before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Certainly an event of such magnitude would not have been ignored. This is especially true in light of one of the basic themes of the book: God's turning to the Gentiles from the Jews because of the Jews' rejection of Jesus Christ.

Luke scarcely would have omitted an account of Paul's death, traditionally dated from A.D. 66–68, if it had occurred before he wrote Acts.

Nor did Luke mention the Neronian persecutions which began after the great fire of Rome in A.D. 64.

Furthermore, a defense of Christianity before Nero by using the Book of Acts to appeal to what lower officials had ruled regarding Paul would have had little point at the time of the Neronian antagonism. At that time Nero was so intent on destroying the church, the defense set forth in Acts would have had little effect in dissuading him.

The date usually accepted by conservative scholars for the writing of Acts is around A.D. 60–62. Accordingly the place of writing would be Rome or possibly both Caesarea and Rome. At the time of writing Paul's release was either imminent or had just taken place.

Outline of the Book. The outline used in this study is the result of using two keys in Acts. The first and most obvious one is the theme verse, Acts 1:8, "But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes on you; and you will be My witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth."

The second key is the use Luke makes of "progress reports" which are sprinkled throughout the book (cf. 2:47; 6:7; 9:31; 12:24; 16:5; 19:20; 28:30-31). Because Luke does not use a precise formula there is some debate as to the location of other progress reports (cf. 2:41; 4:31; 5:42; 8:25, 40; etc.). However, these other statements either do not have the same sense of summary or they lack finality.

The beautiful correlation of these two factors—the key verse of Acts 1:8 and the seven progress reports—form the basis of the following outline.

OUTLINE

I. The Witness in Jerusalem (1:1–6:7)
  A. The expectation of the chosen (chaps. 1–2)
    1. The introduction (1:1-5)
    2. The internment at Jerusalem (1:6-26)
    3. The inception of the church (chap. 2)

  Progress report no. 1: "And the Lord added to their number daily those who were being saved" (2:47).

  B. The expansion of the church at Jerusalem (3:1–6:7)
    1. Opposition to the church (3:1–4:31)
    2. Correction in the church (4:32–5:11)
    3. Progression in the church (5:12-42)
    4. Administration in the church (6:1-7)

  Progress report no. 2: "So the Word of God spread. The number of disciples in Jerusalem increased rapidly" (6:7).

II. The Witness in all Judea and Samaria (6:8–9:31)
  A. The martyrdom of Stephen (6:8–8:1a)
    1. The arrest of Stephen (6:8–7:1)
    2. The address of Stephen (7:2-53)
    3. The attack on Stephen (7:54–8:1a)
  B. The ministry of Philip (8:1b-40)
    1. In Samaria (8:1b-25)
    2. To the Ethiopian eunuch (8:26-40)
  C. The message of Saul (9:1-31)
    1. The conversion of Saul (9:1-19a)
    2. The conflicts of Saul (9:19b-31)

  Progress report no. 3: "Then the church throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria . . . was strengthened; and [it was] encouraged by the Holy Spirit, it grew in numbers, living in the fear of the Lord" (9:31).

III. The Witness to the Extremity of the Earth (9:32–28:31)
  A. The extension of the church to Antioch (9:32–12:24)
    1. The preparation of Peter for a universal gospel (9:32–10:48)
    2. The preparation of the apostles for a universal gospel (11:1-18)
    3. The preparation of the church at Antioch for a universal gospel (11:19-30)
    4. The persecution of the church at Jerusalem (12:1-24)

  Progress report no. 4: "But the Word of God continued to increase and spread" (12:24).

  B. The extension of the church in Asia Minor (12:25–16:5)
    1. The call and dedication of Barnabas and Saul (12:25–13:3)
    [First missionary journey, chaps. 13–14]
    2. The circuit in Asia Minor (13:4–14:28)
    3. The conference at Jerusalem (15:1-35)
    4. The confirmation of the churches in Asia Minor (15:36–16:5)
    [Second missionary journey, 15:36–18:22]

Progress report no. 5: "So the churches were strengthened in the faith and grew daily in numbers" (16:5).

C. The extension of the church in the Aegean area (16:6–19:20)
   1. The call to Macedonia (16:6-10)
   2. The conflicts in Macedonia (16:11–17:15)
   3. The crusade in Achaia (17:16–18:18)
   4. The conclusion of the second missionary journey (18:19-22)
   5. The conquest of Ephesus (18:23–19:20)
   [Third missionary journey, 18:23–21:16]

Progress report no. 6: "In this way the Word of the Lord spread widely and grew in power" (19:20).

D. The extension of the church to Rome (19:21–28:31)
   1. The completion of the third journey (19:21–21:16)
   2. The captivity at Jerusalem (21:17–23:32)
   3. The captivity at Caesarea (23:33–26:32)
   4. The captivity at Rome (chaps. 27–28)

Progress report no. 7: "Paul . . . welcomed all who came to see him. Boldly and without hindrance he preached the kingdom of God and taught about the Lord Jesus Christ" (28:30-31).

COMMENTARY

I. The Witness in Jerusalem (1:1–6:7)

A. The expectation of the chosen (chaps. 1–2)

1. THE INTRODUCTION (1:1-5)

1:1-2. In the first two verses of this book Luke looked back to his Gospel. Theophilus may have been Luke's patron who financed the writing of Luke and Acts. At any rate he was a believer in Christ. These two books would confirm and instruct Theophilus, as well as the church of Christ, in the faith (cf. Luke 1:1-4).

The verb began indicates that Acts continues the account of the ministry and teaching Christ began on earth. He is still working and teaching through His people today.

The reference to the Lord's Ascension in Acts 1:2 looks back to Luke 24:51.

Two commandments were given by the Lord before He returned to heaven: (1) the apostolic band was to remain in Jerusalem (Acts 1:4; cf. Luke 24:49); (2) they were to go into the world as witnesses (Acts 1:8; cf. Luke 10:4; 24:47). These instructions may have seemed contradictory but they were to be obeyed sequentially.

1:3. The Lord's post-resurrection appearances attested the reality of the Resurrection. Christ gave many convincing proofs of this. The word "proofs" (tekmēriois) occurs only here in the New Testament and looks at demonstrable evidence in contrast with evidence provided by witnesses. In other words, the Resurrection was proven by touch, sight, and feel (cf. Luke 24:39-40; 1 John 1:1).

For 40 days after His resurrection the Lord appeared to the apostles and discussed the kingdom of God with them. What is meant by this term? God has always ruled over the world and especially in Israel (Dan. 2:47; 4:3, 25-26, 32, 34-37; 5:21; 6:25-27; Pss. 5:2; 84:3; 89:6-18; 103; etc.). However, a time is coming, commonly called the Millennium, when God will burst into human history in a spectacular way to establish His rule on earth. This is what is meant by the term "kingdom of God" (cf. comments on Matt. 3:2; 13:10-16). Though this topic was the subject of much of the Lord's teaching and preaching before the Cross, He saw fit to discuss it further during His 40 days of post-resurrection ministry.

1:4. The promised gift from the Father, also anticipated in Luke 24:49, was quite obviously the Holy Spirit (cf. Acts 1:5; John 14:16; 15:26; 16:7).

1:5. Indeed John had predicted a Spirit baptism by the Lord Jesus. The greatness of Christ was seen in the fact that John identified people with himself by water baptism; Christ Jesus would join His followers to Himself by the Holy Spirit. The word baptized, which normally means "dipped or immersed," here has the idea of "uniting with" (cf. 1 Cor. 10:1-2). The Lord made the same prediction of Spirit baptism that John made (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; cf. Acts 11:16).

2. THE INTERNMENT AT JERUSALEM (1:6-26)

a. The Ascension (1:6-11)

1:6. The disciples' question, Lord are You at this time going to restore the kingdom to Israel? is most illuminating.

The sentence is introduced by the connective so (men oun), which associates the thought of verse 6 with verse 5. In the disciples' minds the outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the coming of the promised kingdom were closely associated. And well they should be, because the Old Testament frequently joined the two (cf. Isa. 32:15-20; 44:3-5; Ezek. 39:28-29; Joel 2:28–3:1; Zech. 12:8-10). When Christ told the disciples of the soon-coming Spirit baptism, they immediately concluded that the restoration of Israel's kingdom was near in time (cf. comments on "restore" in Acts 3:21).

1:7. Some conclude from the Lord's response that the apostles had a false concept of the kingdom. But this is wrong. Christ did not accuse them of this. If the followers of the Lord Jesus had an incorrect view, this would have been the time for Him to correct it. The fact is, Christ taught the coming of an earthly, literal kingdom (cf. Matt. 19:28; Luke 19:11-27; 22:28-30). Acts 1:3 states that the Lord instructed the disciples about the kingdom; He certainly gave them the right impression as to its character and future coming. What Jesus discussed here (v. 7) was the time of the coming of the kingdom. The Greek word for times (chronous) basically describes duration of times, and the word for dates (kairous) refers to both length of times and kinds of times (as in, e.g., "hard times"). The disciples were not . . . to know either the times or the critical periods the Father had set by His . . . authority. Later, further revelation would be made concerning these (cf. 1 Thes. 5:1).

1:8. This verse contrasts (alla, but) with verse 7. Instead of knowing the times or dates, the apostles were to be Christ's witnesses to the ends of the earth. This they were to do after they had been supernaturally empowered by the Holy Spirit.

The meaning of the clause you will be My witnesses is subject to question. Is this a command, or is it a simple statement of fact? Grammatically the words may be taken either way, but because of 10:42 (cf. 4:20) it is clearly an imperative in the future tense.

Probably "the ends (sing., 'end' in the Gr. text) of the earth" looks to Rome, the proud center of world civilization in the Apostolic Age, a significant distance from Jerusalem (more than 1,400 miles, as the crow flies).

1:9-11. These verses describe the Lord's Ascension but they also anticipate His return. He will come back in a cloud, bodily, in view of people (Rev. 1:7), and to the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4)—the same way the apostles saw Him go.

The Ascension of Christ marked the conclusion of His ministry on earth in His bodily presence. It also exalted Him to the right hand of the Father (Acts 2:33-36; 5:30-31; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 12:2). At the same time the Ascension meant that the continuing work of Christ on earth was now placed in the hands of His disciples (Acts 1:1-2, 8).

It was imperative that the Ascension occur so that the promised Comforter could come (cf. John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7; Acts 2:33-36). The Holy Spirit would empower the disciples as they ministered the gospel and waited for the kingdom.

b. The supplication in the Upper Room (1:12-14)

1:12-14. A Sabbath Day's walk was about 3,000 feet or a bit more than half a mile (cf. Ex. 16:29; Num. 35:5). The Mount of Olives is this short distance east of Jerusalem.

The apostles were gathered upstairs. Large groups normally would meet in upper stories because the largest rooms were upstairs (cf. Acts 20:8-9). The lower stories had smaller rooms so that their walls would bear the weight of the upper stories.

The prayer (1:14) may be specific prayer for the promise referred to in verse 4. In the Greek "prayer" has the article. The disciples were following the instruction suggested by Jesus (Luke 11:13). However, since the day of Pentecost, it is not necessary for Christians to pray for the Holy Spirit (cf. Rom. 8:9).

Evidently the Lord's resurrection led to the conversion of the brothers of Jesus

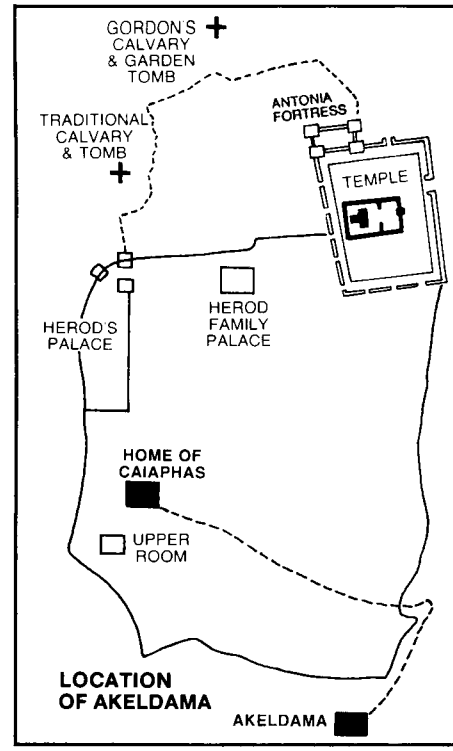
c. The completion of the apostolate (1:15-26)

1:15. Peter, leader of the apostolic band, stood up among the group of some 120 who were gathered together in Jerusalem. Obviously there were far more followers elsewhere (cf. 1 Cor. 15:6).



1:16-17. Peter's allusion to the Old Testament shows his high view of the Scriptures. The Psalms were inspired by the Holy Spirit speaking through the mouth of David. Peter's assessment was that the Scripture had to be fulfilled. The verb "had to" is from dei, which is used of logical or divine necessity.

Peter said that David prophesied of Judas. But when did David discuss Judas Iscariot? Certainly he did not refer to him directly or name him. In the Psalms the Messiah is anticipated as the ideal King; therefore the royal psalms, which discuss the King of Israel, often anticipate Christ. Likewise the enemies of the royal psalmist became the enemies of the Messiah. Therefore Judas was predicted in Psalms 69:25 and 109:8 as Acts 1:20 states. Both of these psalms are royal imprecatory psalms (cf. Ps. 41:9).

1:18-19. Though Judas himself did not personally buy a field, he did so indirectly. The priests used the betrayal money Judas flung into the temple to make this purchase in Judas' name (Matt. 27:3-10).

The account of Judas' violent end in Acts 1:18 seems to contradict Matthew 27:5, which starkly says he "hanged himself." One explanation is that Judas' intestines quickly became swollen and distended after he hanged himself, so he burst open. Another explanation, more probable, is that Judas hanged himself over a cliff and the rope or branch of the tree he was using broke. When he fell to the rocks below, he "burst open."

Akeldama is Aramaic for Field of Blood. The exact location of that field is unknown, but traditionally it is believed to be near the Greek Orthodox Church and Convent of Saint Oniprius, where the Valley of Hinnom joins the Kidron Valley, southeast of Jerusalem (see map).

1:20. On Peter's quotation of Psalms 69:25 and 109:8 in reference to Judas, see comments on Acts 1:16-17.

1:21. Once again (cf. v. 16) Luke used the verb dei, translated it is necessary, to show logical or divine necessity. Interestingly the apostolate saw fit to replace the vacancy left by Judas, but later when the Apostle James died (12:2) no record was given of a successor being appointed. Evidently it was necessary to replace Judas' position because he had vacated his place of promise, referred to in Matthew 19:28. There the Lord promised the apostles they would sit on 12 thrones reigning over Christ's kingdom of Israel when He returns to reign on Planet Earth (cf. Rev. 21:14).

1:22. The importance of the Resurrection is seen in the requirement that the replacement must be a witness . . . of His resurrection. The resurrection of the Lord Jesus is a cornerstone of the Christian faith (cf. 1 Cor. 15).

1:23-26. With two men to choose from, Joseph (alias Barsabbas and Justus) and Matthias, the apostles did two things: they prayed (acknowledging the Lord's omniscience; cf. Ps 139:1-6; John 2:25;

4:29) and they drew lots. Probably the two names were written on stones placed in a container. When the stones were shaken out of the container, the first stone to fall out was considered the Lord's choice.

This is the last time in the Bible lots were said to be used to determine God's will. A couple of observations are in order. First, no moral question was involved here. It was a matter of making a choice between two men who were apparently equally qualified. Second, this procedure may have come from Proverbs 16:33 which says the decision of lots is from the Lord.

Some feel the choice of Matthias was a wrong one. It is contended that this was a poor method of choosing and Paul should have filled the vacancy left by Judas' apostasy. However, those who believe Matthias was a proper selection argue that Matthew 19:28 is Jewish in its orientation and Paul was to minister to Gentiles (Gal. 2:9). Furthermore Luke, Paul's friend and companion, acknowledged the Twelve as an official group (Acts 2:14; 6:2). Finally, there is no sense or spirit of censure in the Acts account on the selection of Matthias.

3. THE INCEPTION OF THE CHURCH (CHAP. 2)

a. The descent of the Holy Spirit (2:1-13)

2:1. The day of Pentecost was an annual feast that followed the Feast of Firstfruits by a week of weeks (i.e., seven weeks, or 49 days) and therefore also was called the Feast of Weeks (cf. Lev. 23:15-22). The name "Pentecost," of Greek derivation, means 50 because it was the 50th day after the Firstfruits feast (Lev. 23:16).

Where the followers of Christ were gathered at this time is not definitely known. Luke simply wrote, They were all together in one place. Perhaps they were in the temple precincts. However, the place is called a "house" (Acts 2:2), an unlikely designation for the temple, though it may be referred to as a house (cf. 7:47). If they were not assembled at the temple, they must have been near it (cf. 2:6).

2:2-3. The references to "wind" and "fire" are significant. The word for "Spirit" (pneuma) is related to pnoe, the word translated "wind" here. It also means breath. Both nouns—"spirit" and "wind" or "breath"—are from the verb pneō, "to blow, to breathe." The sound like the blowing of a violent wind . . . from heaven points to the power of the Holy Spirit and the fullness of His coming.

The tongues of fire portray the presence of God. Several times in the Old Testament God displayed Himself in the form of flames (Gen. 15:17; Ex. 3:2-6; 13:21-22; 19:18; 40:38; cf. Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16).

No believer there was exempt from this experience, for the flames separated and came to rest on each of them.

2:4. The filling with the Holy Spirit is separate from the baptism of the Spirit. The Spirit's baptism occurs once for each believer at the moment of salvation (cf. 11:15-16; Rom. 6:3; 1 Cor. 12:13; Col. 2:12), but the Spirit's filling may occur not only at salvation but also on a number of occasions after salvation (Acts 4:8, 31; 6:3, 5; 7:55; 9:17; 13:9, 52).

An evidence of the baptism of the Holy Spirit was other tongues (heterais glōssais; cf. 11:15-16). These were undoubtedly spoken living languages; the word used in 2:6, 8 is dialektō, which means "language" and not ecstatic utterance. This gives insight into what is meant by "tongues" in chapters 2; 10; 19; and in 1 Corinthians 12–14.

This event marked the beginning of the church. Up to this point the church was anticipated (Matt. 16:18). The church is constituted a body by means of Spirit baptism (1 Cor. 12:13). The first occurrence of the baptism of the Spirit therefore must indicate the inauguration of the church. Of course Acts 2:1-4 does not state that Spirit baptism took place at Pentecost. However, 1:5 anticipates it and 11:15-16 refers back to it as having occurred at Pentecost. The church, therefore, came into existence then.

2:5-13. Jews of the "diaspora" (dispersion; cf. James 1:1; 1 Peter 1:1) were . . . in Jerusalem for the feast. Perhaps they were bilingual, speaking both Greek and their native languages. They were dumbfounded to hear Jews from Galilee speaking the languages of peoples surrounding the Mediterranean Sea.

It is a question whether only the Twelve spoke in tongues or all 120.

Several factors support the idea of only the Twelve being involved in this phenomenon: (1) They are referred to as Galileans (Acts 2:7; cf. 1:11-13). (2) Peter stood up with "the Eleven" (2:14). (3) The nearest antecedent of "they" in verse 1 is the "apostles" in 1:26. However, a problem with this view is that the number of languages listed in 2:9-11 is more than 12. But one apostle could have spoken more than one language, in sequence. Still it is possible that all 120 spoke in tongues. Since the majority of them were from Galilee they could have been called Galileans. The references to the Twelve would have indicated they were the leaders of the 120.

The topic the people discussed in all these languages was the wonders of God. It seems they were praising God. Their message was not one of repentance; it was not the gospel.

Unable to explain this miracle away, the Jewish unbelievers were puzzled, and some resorted to scoffing and asserted, They have had too much wine. The word "wine" (gleukous) means new sweet wine.

b. The discourse of Peter (2:14-40)

This sermon has basically one theme: Jesus is the Messiah and Lord (v. 36). Peter's discourse may be outlined as follows:

I. This is the fulfillment of prophecy (vv. 15-21)
  A. A defense (v. 15)
  B. An explanation (vv. 16-21)
II. Jesus is the Messiah (vv. 22-32)
  A. His works attest that He is the Messiah (v. 22)
  B. His resurrection attests that He is the Messiah (vv. 23-32)
III. Jesus, the glorified Messiah, poured forth the Holy Spirit (vv. 33-36)
IV. Application (vv. 37-40)

2:14-15. Peter began with a rebuttal of their accusation of drunkenness. It was only 9 in the morning (lit., "the third hour of the day"; days began at 6 A.M.), far too early for a group of revelers to be inebriated!

2:16-21. Instead of being drunk the believers were experiencing what was described in Joel 2. In Peter's words, This is what was spoken by the Prophet Joel. This clause does not mean, "This is like that"; it means Pentecost fulfilled what Joel had described. However, the prophecies of Joel quoted in Acts 2:19-20 were not fulfilled. The implication is that the remainder would be fulfilled if Israel would repent. This aspect of contingency is discussed more fully in the comments on 3:19-23.

2:22. Jesus' miracles, Peter said, were God's way of verifying Jesus' claims to you, the Jews (cf. 1 Cor. 1:22; 14:22).

2:23. The point of this verse is clear: the Crucifixion was no accident. It was in God's set purpose (boulē, "plan") and was God's determined will, not merely His inclination. It was a divine necessity (cf. 4:28). When Peter referred to you, he meant Jews; and by wicked men he perhaps meant Gentiles because the word "wicked" means lawless (anomōn). Both Gentiles and Jews were implicated in Christ's death. Many times the apostles accused the Jews of crucifying Jesus (2:23, 36; 3:15; 4:10; 5:30; 7:52; 10:39; 13:28), though the apostles also held the Gentiles culpable (2:23; 4:27; cf. Luke 23:24-25).

2:24. The resurrection of the Lord is a basic doctrine in Acts (v. 32; 3:15, 26; 4:10; 5:30; 10:40; 13:30, 33-34, 37; 17:31; 26:23). Here is another indication that He is the Messiah for it was impossible for death to keep its hold on Him (John 20:9).

2:25-35. These verses include four proofs of the Lord's resurrection and Ascension: (a) The prophecy of Psalm 16:8-11 and the presence of David's tomb (Acts 2:25-31), (b) the witnesses of the Resurrection (v. 32), (c) the supernatural events of Pentecost (v. 33), and (d) the Ascension of David's greater Son (Ps. 110:1; Acts 2:34-35).

The word translated grave in verses 27 and 31 is hadēs, which means either the grave (as here) or the underworld of departed spirits.

Peter's point is that since David, the patriarch and prophet was dead and buried, he could not have been referring to himself in Psalm 16:8-11; hence he was writing about the Christ ("Messiah") and His resurrection. The oath (Acts 2:30) looks back to Psalm 132:11 (cf. 2 Sam. 7:15-16). God . . . raised . . . Jesus to life, and exalted Him (cf. Acts 3:13; Phil. 2:9) to the Father's right hand (cf. Acts 5:30-31; Eph. 1:20; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22). Thus Jesus had the authority to send the promised Holy Spirit (Acts 1:5, 8; John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7), whose presence was evidenced by what they saw ("tongues of fire," Acts 2:3) and heard ("a violent wind," v. 2), and the apostles speaking in other languages (vv. 4, 6, 8, 11).

Just as David was not speaking of himself in Psalm 16:8-11, so in Psalm 110:1 he was not speaking of himself. David was not resurrected (Acts 2:29, 31) nor did he ascend to heaven (v. 34). The Lord is Yahweh God who spoke to my (David's) Lord, who is Christ, God's Son.

On five occasions in Acts some of the apostles said they were witnesses of the resurrected Christ (v. 32; 3:15; 5:32; 10:39-41; 13:30-31). They knew whereof they spoke!

2:36. Here is the conclusion of Peter's argument. The noun Lord, referring to Christ, probably is a reference to Yahweh. The same word kyrios is used of God in verses 21, 34, and 39 (cf. Phil. 2:9). This is a strong affirmation of Christ's deity.

2:37. Verses 37-40 contain the application of Peter's sermon. The verb cut (katenygēsan) means "to strike or prick violently, to stun." The convicting work of the Spirit (cf. John 16:8-11) in their hearts was great.

Their question had a ring of desperation about it (cf. Acts 16:30). If the Jews had crucified their Messiah and He was now exalted, what was left for them to do? What could and must they do?

2:38-39. Peter's answer was forthright. First they were to repent. This verb (metanoēsate) means "change your outlook," or "have a change of heart; reverse the direction of your life." This obviously results in a change of conduct, but the emphasis is on the mind or outlook. The Jews had rejected Jesus; now they were to trust in Him. Repentance was repeatedly part of the apostles' message in Acts (v. 38; 3:19; 5:31; 8:22; 11:18; 13:24; 17:30; 19:4; 20:21; 26:20).

A problem revolves around the command "be baptized" and its connection with the remainder of 2:38. There are several views: (1) One is that both repentance and baptism result in remission of sins. In this view, baptism is essential for salvation. The problem with this interpretation is that elsewhere in Scripture forgiveness of sins is based on faith alone (John 3:16, 36; Rom. 4:1-17; 11:6; Gal. 3:8-9; Eph. 2:8-9; etc.). Furthermore Peter, the same speaker, later promised forgiveness of sins on the basis of faith alone (Acts 5:31; 10:43; 13:38; 26:18).

(2) A second interpretation translates 2:38, "Be baptized . . . on the basis of the remission of your sins." The preposition used here is eis which, with the accusative case, may mean "on account of, on the basis of." It is used in this way in Matthew 3:11; 12:41; and Mark 1:4. Though it is possible for this construction to mean "on the basis of," this is not its normal meaning; eis with the accusative case usually describes purpose or direction.

(3) A third view takes the clause and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ as parenthetical. Several factors support this interpretation: (a) The verb makes a distinction between singular and plural verbs and nouns. The verb "repent" is plural and so is the pronoun "your" in the clause so that your sins may be forgiven (lit., "unto the remission of your sins," eis aphesin tōn hamartiōn hymōn). Therefore the verb "repent" must go with the purpose of forgiveness of sins. On the other hand the imperative "be baptized" is singular, setting it off from the rest of the sentence. (b) This concept fits with Peter's proclamation in Acts 10:43 in which the same expression "sins may be forgiven" (aphesin hamartiōn) occurs. There it is granted on the basis of faith alone. (c) In Luke 24:47 and Acts 5:31 the same writer, Luke, indicates that repentance results in remission of sins.

The gift of the Holy Spirit is God's promise (cf. 1:5, 8; 2:33) to those who turn to the Lord, including Jews and their descendants and those who are far off, that is, Gentiles (cf. Eph. 2:13, 17, 19). Acts 2:38-39 put together the human side of salvation ("repent") and the divine side (call means "to elect"; cf. Rom. 8:28-30).

2:40. Peter's words in this verse look back to verses 23 and 36. Israel was guilty of a horrendous sin; individual Jews could be spared from God's judgment on that generation if they would repent (cf. Matt. 21:41-44; 22:7; 23:34–24:2). They would be set apart to Christ and His church if only they would be disassociated from Israel.

c. The description of the first church (2:41-47)

2:41. Three thousand who believed were baptized, thus displaying their identification with Christ. This group of people immediately joined the fellowship of believers.

2:42. The activity of this early church was twofold. The believers first continued steadfastly (proskarterountes, "persisting in or continuing in"; cf. 1:14; 2:46; 6:4; 8:13; 10:7; Rom. 12:12; 13:6; Col. 4:2) in the apostles' teaching or doctrine. The second was fellowship, which is defined as the breaking of bread and . . . prayer. The omission of "and" between "fellowship" and "to the breaking of bread and to prayer" indicates the last two activities are appositional to fellowship.

Perhaps the breaking of bread included both the Lord's Table and a common meal (cf. Acts 2:46; 20:7; 1 Cor. 10:16; 11:23-25; Jude 12).

2:43. Wonders (terata, "miracles evoking awe") and miraculous signs (sēmeia, "miracles pointing to a divine truth") authenticated the veracity of the apostles (cf. 2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:3-4). The apostles performed many such "signs and wonders" (Acts 4:30; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6, 13; 14:3; 15:12). Christ too had performed many "wonders" and "signs"—and also "miracles" (dynameis, "works of power").

2:44-45. The selling of property and the common possession of the proceeds may imply that the early church expected the Lord to return soon and establish His kingdom. This may explain why the practice was not continued. Holding everything in common was not socialism or communism because it was voluntary (cf. 4:32, 34-35; 5:4). Also their goods were not evenly distributed but were given to meet needs as they arose.

2:46-47. The activities described in verses 42-47 would tend to separate the church from traditional Judaism even though every day (cf. v. 47) they continued (proskarterountes; cf. v. 42) to meet together in the temple courts.

One of the subthemes of Acts is joy, because a victorious church is a joyful one. This is seen in verses 46-47 and numerous other times (5:41; 8:8, 39; 11:23; 12:14; 13:48, 52; 14:17; 15:3, 31; 16:34; 21:17). In their fellowship they broke bread in their homes and ate together (cf. 2:42) with joy. (The word praising [ainountes] is used only nine times in the NT, seven of them by Luke: Luke 2:13, 20; 19:37; 24:53; Acts 2:47; 3:8-9; Rom. 15:11; Rev. 19:5).

With the first of seven summary progress reports (cf. Acts 6:7; 9:31; 12:24; 16:5; 19:20; 28:30-31) Luke brought this section of Acts to a close: each day others were being saved. The church grew rapidly right from the start!

B. The expansion of the church at Jerusalem (3:1–6:7)

1. OPPOSITION TO THE CHURCH (3:1–4:31)

a. The occasion (chap. 3)

3:1. Apparently there were several times for prayer at the Jerusalem temple—9 A.M., 12 noon, and 3 P.M. Perhaps the hour of 3 P.M. is stated here because it helps explain 4:3.

3:2. The description of a man crippled from birth emphasizes his hopeless condition. He was more than 40 years old (4:22). People carried him every day to the temple gate named Beautiful so that he could beg. This may have been the eastern gate of the temple area that led from the court of the Gentiles into the women's court.

3:3-11. God's supernatural healing of the crippled man through Peter and John (v. 7), together with his exuberant response (v. 8), attracted a crowd amazed (filled with wonder and amazement) at what had taken place. They ran and assembled at Solomon's Colonnade, a portico of columns running the length of the east side of the outer court (cf. 5:12). Two other cripples were healed in Acts (9:32-34; 14:8-10).

3:12. Peter assessed the situation and used it as an opportunity to preach. His message included: (a) an explanation (vv. 12-16) and (b) an exhortation (vv. 17-26).

3:13-15. Peter attributed the power for healing to Jesus, here described as God's Servant (cf. v. 26; 4:27, 30). This term recalls the title "Servant of Yahweh" in Isaiah 42:1; 49:6-7; 52:13; 53:11. Interestingly forms of the verb handed . . . over (paradidōmi) are used twice in Isaiah 53:12 in the Septuagint. This lowly Servant (cf. Phil. 2:6-8) was exalted (glorified; cf. John 12:23; 17:1; Acts 2:33; Phil. 2:9; Heb. 1:3-4, 8) by the God of the Jews' ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (cf. Gen. 32:9; Ex. 3:6, 16; Matt. 22:32; Mark 12:26; Luke 20:37; Acts 7:32). Peter emphasized with sledgehammer effect three contradictions in the people's conduct (3:13-15). First, he said the Jews demanded Christ's death when Pilate . . . had decided to let Him go. Second, the Jews disowned the Holy and Righteous One and demanded the release of a murderer. Third, Israel killed the Author of life but God raised Him from the dead. Peter's titles of Christ are interesting: "His Servant Jesus," "the Holy and Righteous One" (cf. Heb. 7:26), and "the Author of life" (cf. John 10:10). In the third title the irony is strong: they killed the Author of life but He was raised to life from the dead! (On Jesus' resurrection, see comments on Acts 2:24. On witnesses of the Resurrection, see 2:32.)

3:16. The crippled man's healing came because of his faith in the name of Jesus. Faith was also evident in many of those whom Jesus healed (e.g., Mark 5:34; 10:52; Luke 17:19). In Bible times a person's name represented him and his characteristics. In Acts, Luke spoke of "the name" (of Jesus) at least 33 times (cf. Acts 2:21, 38; 3:6, 16; 4:7, 10, 12, 17-18; 5:28, 40-41; etc.).

3:17-18. Peter's exhortation begins here. The people with their leaders (cf. Luke 23:13) had acted in ignorance (cf. Acts 17:30; Eph. 4:18; 1 Peter 1:14) in the sense that they did not recognize who Jesus really is. So God gave them further opportunity to repent. Though they crucified Him in ignorance, the suffering of Christ fulfilled Old Testament prophecies (cf. Acts 17:3; 26:23).

3:19-21. Peter's exhortation, as in his Pentecost sermon (2:38), was to repent. Was Peter saying here that if Israel repented, God's kingdom would have come to earth? This must be answered in the affirmative for several reasons: (1) The word restore (3:21) is related to the word "restore" in 1:6. In 3:21 it is in its noun form (apokatastaseōs), and in 1:6 it is a verb (apokathistaneis). Both occurrences anticipate the restoration of the kingdom to Israel (cf. Matt. 17:11; Mark 9:12). (2) The concept of restoration parallels regeneration when it is used of the kingdom (cf. Isa. 65:17; 66:22; Matt. 19:28; Rom. 8:20-22). (3) The purpose clauses are different in Acts 3:19 and 20. In verse 19 a so that translates pros to (some mss. have eis to) with the infinitive. This points to a near purpose. The two occurrences of that in verses 19b and 20 are translations of a different construction (hopōs with subjunctive verbs), and refer to more remote purposes. Thus repentance would result in forgiveness of sins, the near purpose (v. 19a). Then if Israel as a whole would repent, a second more remote goal, the coming of the kingdom (times of refreshing at the second coming of Christ) would be fulfilled. (4) The sending of the Christ, that is, Messiah (v. 20) meant the coming of the kingdom. (5) The Old Testament "foretold these days" (v. 24; cf. v. 21). The Old Testament prophets did not predict the church; to them it was a mystery (Rom. 16:25; Eph. 3:1-6). But the prophets often spoke of the messianic golden age, that is, the Millennium.

This offer of salvation and of the Millennium pointed both to God's graciousness and to Israel's unbelief. On the one hand God was giving the Jews an opportunity to repent after the sign of Christ's resurrection. They had refused the "pre-Cross" Jesus; now they were being offered a post-Resurrection Messiah. On the other hand Peter's words underscore Israel's rejection. They had been given the sign of Jonah but still they refused to believe (cf. Luke 16:31). In a real sense this message confirmed Israel's unbelief.

Some Bible scholars oppose the view that the kingdom was offered by Peter. They do so on the basis of several objections: (1) Since God knew Israel would reject the offer, it was not a legitimate offer. But it was as genuine as the presentation of the gospel to any nonelect person. (2) This puts kingdom truth in the Church Age. However, church truth is found before the church began at Pentecost (cf. Matt. 16:18; 18:17; John 10:16; 14:20). (3) This view leads to ultradispensationalism. But this is not a necessary consequence if this offer is seen as a transition within the Church Age. Acts must be seen as a hinge book, a transition work bridging the work of Christ on earth with His work through the church on earth.

In conclusion, Acts 3:17-21 shows that Israel's repentance was to have had two purposes: (1) for individual Israelites there was forgiveness of sins, and (2) for Israel as a nation her Messiah would return to reign.

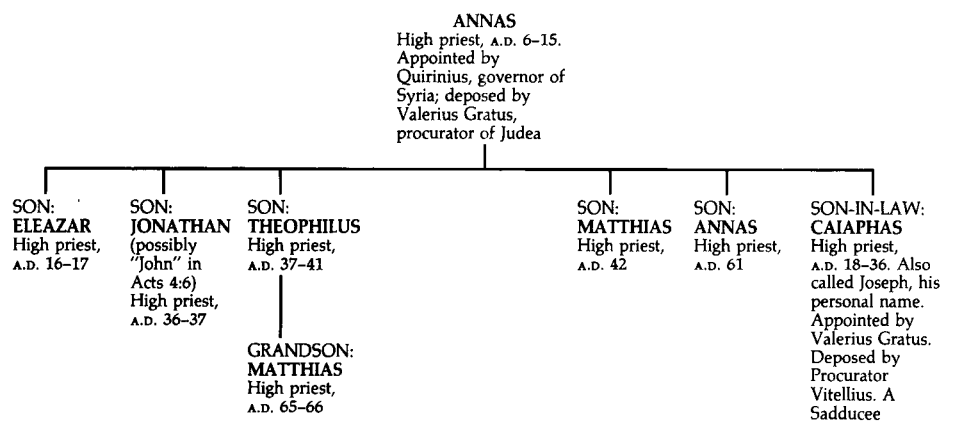
3:22-23. Here Jesus is portrayed as the "New Testament Moses" in fulfillment of Deuteronomy 18:15-19 (cf. John 6:14). Christ will come not only with deliverance as Moses did, but He will also judge as Moses did (cf. Lev. 23:29 with Deut. 18:19; also cf. Num. 14:26-35).

3:24-25. Peter's mention of Samuel as the next prophet after Moses (cf. 13:20) clearly implies that Joshua did not fulfill Deuteronomy 18:15.

All the prophets (cf. Acts 3:18, 21) in one way or another wrote about these days, that is, the Messianic Age. The Jews were heirs of the prophets of the Abrahamic Covenant given to Abraham (Gen. 12:2-3; 15:18-21; 17:1-8; 22:18) and confirmed to the Jews' fathers (e.g., Isaac [Gen. 26:41]). The Jews then could be blessed if they, like Abraham, believed (cf. Rom. 3:28-29; 4:3; Gal. 3:6-7). In fact all peoples would be blessed through Abraham (cf. Gen. 12:3; Rom. 4:12, 16; Gal. 3:29; Eph. 3:6).

3:26. Jesus, God's Servant (cf. v. 13; 4:27, 30), was sent . . . first to you, that is, to the Jews. This chronological pattern was followed throughout the Gospels and Acts (cf., e.g., Matt. 10:5; Acts 13:46; Rom. 1:16). The reason for this is that the establishing of the kingdom depended and still depends on Israel's response (cf. Matt. 23:39; Rom. 11:26).

b. The incarceration (4:1-22)



4:1-2. Involved in this apprehension of Peter, John, and the healed man (v. 14), were the priests and the captain of the temple guard and the Sadducees. Since the captain of the temple guard was responsible for maintaining order in the temple, it is no surprise that he, along with the priests and Sadducees, interrupted Peter and John in order to disband the mob (cf. 3:11).

The priests were primarily Sadducees in their religious affiliation (5:17); so the principal accusers were Sadducees. These people were distinguished by several characteristics: (a) a disbelief in a bodily resurrection and a denial of the existence of angels or spirits (23:8); (b) loyalty to the Roman government; (c) a desire to maintain the status quo; (d) an association with the wealthy class; and (e) adherence only to the Pentateuch. The Sadducees were greatly disturbed by Peter and John's preaching because it directly opposed the Sadducees' denial of the resurrection and would also shake the establishment.

4:3. The two apostles were incarcerated overnight because it was already evening, that is, late afternoon (cf. 3 P.M. in 3:1), too late for a trial.

4:4. One of the subthemes of Acts is the growth of God's Word in spite of opposition. Like a juggernaut the message irresistibly moved ahead. Two leading apostles were bound, but the Word of God cannot be bound! (Cf. 28:30-31; Phil. 1:12-14.)

Annas' Family

4:5-6. Luke's careful description of the Jewish leaders underscores the pomp and power of this assembly. Simple fishermen were in the midst of the highest leaders in the land! The rulers, elders, and teachers of the Law included the Sanhedrin, the Jewish supreme court (cf. v. 15). Annas was Caiaphas' father-in-law. Annas had been high priest from A.D. 6 to 15, and was deposed. His son-in-law Caiaphas was priest from A.D. 18 to 36. But apparently Annas, being something of a priestly statesman, was still thought of by the Jews as their high priest. (See the chart on Annas' family. Cf. comments on Luke 3:2; John 18:13; Acts 7:1.) The assembly had examined Jesus on trial; now, ironically, they were facing two of Jesus' prominent—and bold—followers! Nothing is known of the John and Alexander mentioned here.

4:7-10. When Peter and John were brought before the Sanhedrin, and were asked the basis of their authority, Peter, the spokesman, was filled with the Holy Spirit (cf. 2:4). This is Peter's fourth speech already in the Book of Acts! Speaking with irony, he said, in effect, "Are we on trial for doing a good deed to a cripple?" The miracle was done not in their power, but by the name of Jesus Christ (cf. 3:16; 4:7, 12, 17-18). Though they had crucified Jesus, God had raised Him from the dead (cf. 2:23-24; 3:15).

4:11. The One who healed the cripple was the Stone which the builders rejected. Here Peter quoted Psalm 118:22. The background of this verse is disputed. The rejected stone (Ps. 118) may be (a) an actual building stone, (b) the nation of Israel, or (c) David. Or it may also be a proverb with no specific application. Most probably, to David the rejected stone in Psalm 118:22 meant Israel, a nation spurned by other nations. At any rate, the verse finds its ultimate fulfillment in Christ Jesus who is the "ideal" Israel (cf. Isa. 5:1-7; Matt. 2:15; 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; 1 Peter 2:7). The rejected Stone (Christ rejected by the nation in their crucifying Him) is the Capstone, the resurrected Lord.

4:12. The word salvation goes back to Psalm 118 which Peter had just quoted, for it is a prominent theme there. Verses 22-29 in that psalm anticipate millennial deliverance. In Acts 4:12 Peter was speaking not only of individual justification, but also of national salvation, predicted in Psalm 118.

The rulers were thus put on the defense! They had rejected the only Savior of Israel and they were preventing the completion of God's building. Thus no other way of salvation is available to people (cf. John 14:6; 1 Tim. 2:5).

4:13-14. The authorities were astonished (cf. 3:10) that Peter and John . . . unschooled (agrammatoi, "illiterate") and ordinary (idiōtai) men, spoke with such courage. Courage (parrēsia, "boldness" or "courage to speak openly and frankly") is another theme prominent in Acts (2:29; 4:13, 29, 31; 28:31; cf. the verb "to speak boldly" in 9:27-28; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 19:8; 26:26). The Sanhedrin, realizing that Peter and John had been with Jesus (cf. John 7:15), were silenced. The apostles were thus experiencing what Christ had promised (Matt. 10:19-20; Luke 12:11-12; 21:12-15).

4:15-17. Significantly the authorities could not and did not deny the reality of the miracle. They deliberately refused to mention the word "Jesus"; they referred to Him as this name (cf. the high priest's same refusal in 5:28).

Perhaps Luke obtained this information about what went on behind the closed doors from someone such as Nicodemus or Paul. Even though Paul was not a Sadducee, he probably would have had access to such information.

The Sanhedrin, the supreme court and administrative body of the Jews, consisted of 71 members, including the high priest. Most of them were Sadducees. In Acts this was the first of four times some of Jesus' followers were brought before the Sanhedrin (cf. Peter and the apostles, 5:27; Stephen, 6:12; and Paul, 22:30).

4:18-22. When Peter and John were commanded . . . not to speak or teach at all in the name of Jesus, they rejoined that they must obey God rather than human authorities (cf. 5:29). They were simply being witnesses as Christ had commanded them (1:8). The authorities threatened them (apparently with punishment if they continued to preach Jesus) and released them. They were afraid to punish them then because all the people were praising God (cf. 3:9; 5:26).

c. The supplication (4:23-31)

Three movements may be discerned in this prayer of the early church: (1) God is sovereign (v. 24). (2) God's plan includes believers' facing opposition against the Messiah (vv. 25-28). (3) Because of these things they petitioned God to grant them boldness to preach (vv. 29-30).

4:23-24. Interestingly the believers (Peter and John's own people), faced with persecution, acknowledged God's sovereign creative power.

4:25-27. The words by the Holy Spirit through the mouth of . . . David point up, as do many passages, the divine inspiration of Scripture through human agents (cf. 28:25). Acts 4:25-26 contains a quotation from Psalm 2:1-2, which is prophetic of the Tribulation. In a preliminary sense Peter saw the opposition to the Messiah, God's Anointed One (tou Christou; cf. "anointed," Acts 4:27)—predicted by David in Psalm 2—as fulfilled in the early church. The parallels are obvious.

Nations (ethnē, Acts 4:25) compare with Gentiles (ethnesin, v. 27); peoples (laoi, v. 25) compare with people of Israel (laois Israēl, v. 27); kings (v. 26) compare with Herod (v. 27); and rulers (v. 26) compare with Pontius Pilate (v. 27).

4:28-30. Just as God's sovereign power and will had decided beforehand that Christ should be opposed, so now Peter and John prayed for God's power to be manifested in great boldness for the apostolic church. They also petitioned the Lord for supernatural ability to heal and to perform miraculous signs (sēmeia; cf. 2:43) and wonders (terata; cf. 2:43) through the name of . . . Jesus.

4:31. The Lord's answer to the believers' prayer for boldness was preceded by a shaking of their meeting place. The answer also included a supernatural filling with the Holy Spirit (cf. v. 8). When Luke, as here, used a verb form to refer to believers being filled with the Spirit, he usually said the filling was bestowed sovereignly by God. This is in distinction to the imperative in Ephesians 5:18 which states that Christians are responsible for being Spirit-filled.

2. CORRECTION IN THE CHURCH (4:32–5:11)

a. The division of goods (4:32-37)

Luke had two reasons for including this passage here. For one thing he used it to introduce Barnabas to his readers. A common technique of Luke was to introduce a character quickly in a minor role and then later bring him on stage in a major role. This he did with Barnabas.

Luke's second purpose in these verses was to show how Barnabas and the rest of the church contrasted with Ananias and Sapphira (chap. 5). The generosity of the church and especially Barnabas differed markedly from the selfishness of that husband-wife team.

4:32-35. The believers were unified not only spiritually (one in heart and mind) but also materially (cf. 2:44-45 and comments there). Their selling of their goods was voluntary and the distribution was according to need. The Lord answered their prayer for boldness (4:29) for the apostles kept on testifying of Christ's resurrection. Grace (v. 33) is one of numerous times that word occurs in Acts (e.g., 6:8; 11:23; 13:43; 14:3, 26; 15:11, 40; 18:27; 20:24, 32; etc.).

4:36-37. Joseph was nicknamed Barnabas which means Son of Encouragement, evidently because of his character and ability to encourge those who were downhearted.

How could a Levite own property as Barnabas did? Were not Levites prohibited from owning property? (Num. 18:20, 24) The answer may be that whereas the Levites were not to hold land in Israel, they could own land elsewhere. Apparently Barnabas, being from the island of Cyprus, owned land there. It is also possible that his wife owned land in Israel and that they together sold it. Most probably the restriction in Numbers 18:20, 24 was no longer observed, as seen in the case of Jeremiah (cf. Jer. 1:1; 32:6-15).

b. The deceit of Ananias and Sapphira (5:1-11)

This story is reminiscent of Achan in Joshua 7 (cf. Num. 15:32-36; 16:1-35).

5:1-2. The sin of Ananias and his wife Sapphira is explained in verses 3-4, 9. They could have retained the proceeds from their sale of property, of course, but in collusion with each other they had lied, saying they had given all the money when actually they had given only a part of the money.

The phrase the apostles' feet is the same as in 4:35, 37 and throws Ananias' action into bold contrast with Barnabas' action.

5:3. In response Peter accused Ananias by saying, Satan has . . . filled your heart. The verb translated "filled" is eplērōsen, from plēroō, which here has the idea of control or influence. The same verb is used in the command, "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18). Ananias, a believer, was influenced by Satan, not the Spirit! The fact that Peter asked, How is it. . .? implies that Satan had gained control because Ananias had not dealt with some previous sin in his life.

5:4. Peter referred to Ananias' lying "to the Holy Spirit" (v. 3); now Peter referred to his lying to God. This is an affirmation of the Holy Spirit's deity.

The fact that believers had the right to keep their money shows that this was not Christian socialism. It was a free-will arrangement for the support of the church, used only temporarily because evidently the early church expected Christ to come in their generation.

5:5-6. When Ananias heard this, he fell down and died. As Peter wrote later, judgment begins "with the family of God" (1 Peter 4:17). This is a case of "sin that leads to death" (1 John 5:16). This discipline was severe because it was an example, as Achan was an example to Israel (cf. 1 Cor. 10:6).

5:7-10. Then Sapphira, not aware of her husband's sudden death, also lied about the amount they got for the land.

Peter accused Sapphira of agreeing with Ananias to test the Spirit of the Lord. "To test the Holy Spirit" is to see how much one can get away with before He judges; it means to presume on Him, to see if He will perform His Word, or to stretch Him to the limits of judgment (cf. Deut. 6:16; Matt. 4:7).

5:11. As a result of the discipline of this couple, all the believers and unbelievers who heard about it felt great fear, a consequence already stated in verse 5 and repeated here for emphasis (cf. 19:17).

The purpose of this account in the narrative is manifold: (1) It revealed God's displeasure with sin, particularly dishonesty, in His body, the church. (2) It marked the church off as distinct from Israel, for such discipline was not seen in Israel. The word church (used here for the first time in Acts) refers to the universal church here and in 9:31 and 20:28, and to local congregations in 11:26 and 13:1. (3) It indicated God was at work in this new group.

3. PROGRESSION IN THE CHURCH (5:12-42)

a. The authentication of the apostles (5:12-16)

This paragraph prepares readers for what follows. Such activity could hardly go unnoticed!

5:12. Once again the apostles were used by God to perform many miraculous signs and wonders (cf. comments on 2:43). Interestingly the regular meeting place of the early Jerusalem church was in the temple at Solomon's Colonnade, where people gathered after they had heard of the lame man's healing (3:11).

5:13. This verse probably means that no hypocrite or unbeliever dared joined them. The case of Ananias and Sapphira frightened them too much!

The words no one else are literally, "none of the rest" (tōn loipōn oudeis). The words "the rest" are used of the lost (trans. "others" in Luke 8:10; cf. Rom. 11:7; Eph. 2:3; 1 Thes. 4:13; 5:6).

5:14. In spite of the reluctance of the unsaved to join the group of believers, more and more men and women believed in the Lord and were added to their number. Rapid numerical growth was a phenomenon of the early church (cf. 2:41, 47; 4:4; 6:1, 7; 9:31).

5:15-16. Miraculous signs (cf. v. 12) confirmed the Word of God in the midst of the young church. This shows God's sovereign sanction of the church, following His discipline of it. Many people revealed not only their confidence in the apostles to heal, but also their superstition. They thought it was Peter's shadow itself which fell on the sick that would heal them.

The apostles' divinely given power to heal and to exorcise demons accords with the Lord's promise to them (Matt. 10:8; Mark 16:17-18).

b. The second detention and release of the apostles (5:17-20)

5:17-20. After this second apprehension and incarceration of the apostles—apparently all 12 of them—God supernaturally released them and commanded them by means of an angel to continue the public proclamation (in the temple courts, near the church's gathering place; cf. v. 12) of the full message of this new life (lit., "all the words of this life," an unusual way to refer to the gospel). In Acts this is the first of three miraculous jail miracles (cf. Peter, 12:6-10; Paul and Silas, 16:26-27).

c. The examination and defense of the apostles (5:21-32)

5:21a. The obedience of the apostles to the angel's directive (v. 20) is evident. Though their sleep was abbreviated the preceding night, at daybreak they entered the temple courts (cf. v. 20).

5:21b-25. The facts recorded in these verses are filled with irony: (1) The guards were carefully keeping empty jail cells secured (vv. 21b-23). (2) The highest powers of Israel were gathered to judge prisoners they did not have. (3) While the frenzied leaders were deliberating as to what had happened to the men who had been in their custody, they were told the apostles were preaching in the courts of the temple. The captain of the temple guard and the chief priests (cf. 4:1) were puzzled (diēporoun, lit., "were perplexed," or "were at a loss") as to how to explain the locked but empty cells. Perhaps they also wondered what would come of them for losing their prisoners! (Cf. 16:27-28.)

5:26-27. The captain and the jail officers carefully recaptured the apostles (without using force, for fear of arousing the anger of the populace) and brought the apostles . . . before the Sanhedrin for questioning. (On the Sanhedrin, see comments on 4:15; cf. 6:12; 22:30.)

5:28. Use of the pronoun this twice underscores the high priest's reluctance to pronounce the name of Jesus (cf. "this name," 4:17). Obviously his hatred of Christ Jesus was great!

5:29. Here Peter reiterated a basic principle already affirmed in 4:19-20. The converse is also true: Christians are to obey their governments unless it is a sin to do so (cf. Rom. 13:1-7; 1 Peter 2:13-17).

5:30-31. This response by Peter and the apostles about Jesus' resurrection must have infuriated the Sadducees (cf. 4:1-2; 5:17; 23:8). Yet it was the same message Peter, once again the apostles' spokesman, had preached before: (a) they had killed Jesus, but God . . . raised Him from the dead (cf. 2:23-24, 36; 3:15; 4:10); (b) they could have forgiveness of sins (cf. 2:38; 10:43; 13:38; 26:18) by turning to Him in repentance (cf. 2:38; 3:16; 4:12; 8:22).

5:32. The apostles were well aware of their responsibility for they asserted, We are witnesses of these things (rhēmatōn, "words, sayings," or "things"). Furthermore, the Holy Spirit was corroborating their testimony by supernaturally enabling them to preach with boldness and to perform miracles. This same Spirit is given to all who believe in Christ (Rom. 8:9).

d. The liberation of the apostles (5:33-42)

5:33. The fury of the leaders toward the apostles could have been expected. The leaders wanted to put them to death. Their opposition followed the same pattern as their hostility to the Lord a few weeks earlier. Characteristically opposition grows, and so it did here.

5:34-35. The venerated Gamaliel, a Pharisee and teacher, influenced the Sanhedrin not to oppose the apostles. He spoke not from sympathy for the church, but from insight into God's sovereign working on earth (cf. v. 39).

5:36. Nothing is known of this Theudas with his 400 insurrectionists, whose cause came to naught. Though Josephus, a Jewish historian of the first century, described a rebellion led by a Theudas, that insurrection was later and much larger. Furthermore, that rebellion followed the one led by the Judas described in verse 37.

5:37. The insurrection led by Judas the Galilean was Gamaliel's second illustration. Josephus gave a rather full account of this movement which led to the execution of Judas, but also spawned further rebellion.

5:38-39. Here is the conclusion and main thrust of Gamaliel's speech. Seeing what would come of this movement would tell them if it were of human origin or from God. Interestingly this speech was, in one sense, an apologetic for the church of Jesus Christ given by a representative of the church's enemies: to try to stop God's work would be like fighting against God!

5:40. Not considering it adequate simply to admonish the apostles, the council had them flogged and ordered them not to speak in the name of Jesus (on Jesus' "name" see comments on 3:16). The flogging was evidently punishment for the apostles' disobedience to their earlier prohibition (cf. 4:18, 21; 5:28).

5:41-42. In spite of the bloody beating, the apostles left the Sanhedrin, rejoicing. Here again the theme of joy is evident in the Book of Acts (cf. comments on 2:46-47). A victorious church rejoices in God's working in spite of persecution—and even on account of it, as here. The apostles were honored to be suffering disgrace for the name (on "the name" see 3:16; cf. 1 Peter 4:14, 16). Later, Peter encouraged Christians to "rejoice" when they would "participate" in sufferings on behalf of Christ (1 Peter 4:13; cf. 1 Peter 2:18-21; 3:8-17).

Luke's object in writing Acts 5:17-42 was to show how Israel as a nation was continuing down its tragic path of rejecting Jesus as its Messiah.

4. ADMINISTRATION IN THE CHURCH (6:1-7)

6:1. The Grecian Jews could not speak Aramaic, the native tongue of Jews living in Israel. They probably were reared outside the land and were bilingual, speaking both Greek and their native tongues (cf. 2:5-11). Probably Gentile proselytes to Judaism who later became Christians were also in this group. The native Jews were also bilingual in that they spoke Aramaic and Greek (cf. 21:40). In the Jewish world tensions existed between the Grecian Jews and the Aramaic-speaking Jews; tragically these strains were brought into the church.

6:2. The tables (trapezais) may refer to tables used for serving food or to money tables, that is, banks. Probably it was used here to refer to the place where funds and supplies were administered for the widows.

The Twelve recognized their proper priorities in the ministry of the Word of God and prayer (cf. v. 4).

6:3-4. The apostles mentioned three qualifications for those who would be enlisted to serve: they must (a) be full of the Spirit and (b) be full of wisdom (cf. v. 10). In addition they were to (c) be known for these things, that is, the previous two qualifications were to be their reputations. All three were necessary for the handling of finances. (Faith, v. 5, is not another qualification, for belief is simply the means of being filled with the Holy Spirit.)

Selecting seven men may go back to the tradition in Jewish communities where seven respected men managed the public business in an official council.

By choosing these seven, the Twelve could give their attention to prayer and the ministry of the Word (cf. v. 2).

6:5. The suggestion of the Twelve pleased the whole group of the disciples. Significantly all seven men had Greek names, implying they were Hellenists. Nicolas, the last one named, was not even a Jew but was a convert to Judaism and then to Christianity. The early church evidently felt the problem of the unintentional neglect of Grecian Jewish widows would be best solved by the Hellenistic Jews; certainly they would not neglect the Aramaic-speaking widows.

The introduction of these seven (cf. 21:8) prepares readers for the ministries of Stephen and Philip, the first two men listed. Furthermore, the reference to Grecian Jews looks ahead to the wider spread of the gospel outside the circle of Jerusalem and Judea. (Nothing else is known about the other four: Procorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas.)

6:6. Though the Christian community selected the Seven, they were commissioned by the apostles. This was done by prayer and the laying on of hands. The practice of laying hands on others was a gesture signifying commissioning and granting of authority (cf. 8:17-19; 13:3; 19:6; 1 Tim. 4:14; 5:22; Heb. 6:2).

Were these the first deacons? Which church office is in view here? Three answers are given to these questions.

(1) Some say these were the first deacons. Several factors are used to support this viewpoint. First, the office of deacon is assumed in Paul's letters (cf. Phil. 1:1). If Acts 6:1-6 is not an account of their beginning, it is argued, when and where did deacons originate? Second, several words related to deacon (diakonos) are found here: "distribution" (lit., "service") in verse 1 is diakonia, and "to wait" in verse 2 is diakonein. However, these men were never called "deacons" (diakonoi) as such. Much later they were called "the Seven" (21:8). Furthermore, the words "distribution" and "wait" do not seem to have a technical sense here. These words in the Greek New Testament are commonly used in a nonspecialized sense.

(2) Others hold that these were precursors to the office of elder. This is not a common interpretation, but it gains its support from 11:30, which refers to relief money being given to the elders. If deacons handled these funds earlier (chap. 6), it is argued, they must have later become the elders (chap. 11). However, the office of elder has its origin in the Jewish synagogue.

(3) A third view is that these seven men held a temporary position for the purpose of meeting a specific need. This seems to be the best approach for a couple of reasons. First, these men were chosen for a particular task, not an overall one. Second, they were in a temporary responsibility because of the communal nature of the church at Jerusalem. Even so, these men do illustrate the role and function of the office of deacons.

6:7. This verse contains another of Luke's progress reports. The church was rapidly growing in numbers (cf. 2:41, 47; 4:4; 5:14; 6:1; 9:31), with even many Jewish priests becoming believers (obedient to the faith; cf. Rom. 1:5). With the appointment of these men, readers are prepared for the work of Stephen and Philip and the proclamation of the gospel outside Jerusalem.

II. The Witness in All Judea and Samaria (6:8–9:31)

A. The martyrdom of Stephen (6:8–8:1a)

1. THE ARREST OF STEPHEN (6:8–7:1)

Stephen's ministry, arrest, and trial are strikingly similar to the Lord's.

6:8. Like Christ and the apostles, Stephen was full of God's grace and power (cf. 4:33; Luke 2:40, 52). Interestingly Stephen was "full of" or controlled by five factors: the Spirit, wisdom, faith, grace, power (Acts 6:3, 5, 8). What an outstanding leader! Furthermore, he did great wonders and miraculous signs (cf. 2:22; Luke 24:19; also cf. Acts 2:43). These evidences of God's grace were in addition to his responsibilities in the daily ministration to the widows.

6:9-11. The Synagogue of the Freedmen was perhaps comprised of those who themselves or whose forebears had been set free from being prisoners of war or from slavery. Precisely who they were is not known for sure.

The members of this synagogue were from three divergent areas—North Africa (Cyrene and Alexandria were two of its leading cities), Asia (the western portion of modern-day Turkey), and Cilicia. Possibly this was the assembly Paul attended because Tarsus was located in the province of Cilicia.

Besides being one of the Seven and a wonder-worker, Stephen was also a skilled debater. His opponents could not stand up against his wisdom or the Spirit by which he spoke (cf. "full of the Spirit and wisdom" in v. 3 and "full of . . . the Holy Spirit" in v. 5 and 7:55).

To remove Stephen, the men of the synagogue covertly induced men to make an accusation against him. Like those who complained against the Lord Jesus, they charged Stephen with blasphemy (cf. Matt. 26:65).

6:12-14. These words were sufficient to arouse the laity and leaders to apprehend Stephen and accuse him before the Sanhedrin. This is the third of four times in Acts when the Lord's followers stood before this Jewish court; the others were Peter and John (4:15), Peter and the apostles (5:27), and Paul (22:30).

The false witnesses were not necessarily outright liars. Stephen had probably said the things they accused him of; however, they misrepresented the intentions and imports of his statements (cf. Matt. 26:61; Mark 14:58; John 2:19). The Lord Himself predicted the destruction of the temple (Matt. 24:1-2; Mark 13:1-2; Luke 21:5-6), though He never said He would do it. The other half of the allegation against Stephen involved the temporary nature of the Mosaic system. Undoubtedly he saw the theological implications of justification by faith and the fulfillment of the Law in Christ. Furthermore, if the gospel was for the whole world (Acts 1:8), the Law had to be a temporary arrangement.

6:15. All . . . the Sanhedrin—all 71 of them—looked intently at Stephen to see his response. They saw that his face was like that of an angel. Evidently his face glowed with glory (cf. Moses' face, Ex. 34:29, 35).

7:1. The high priest mentioned here possibly is Caiaphas, the same one who presided over the trials of the Lord (Matt. 26:57; Mark 14:54; Luke 22:53; John 18:13, 24; cf. comments on Acts 4:5-6).

2. THE ADDRESS OF STEPHEN (7:2-53)

7:2-53. This is the longest recorded message in Acts, which shows the importance Luke attached to it. Stephen, a Grecian Jew, by his life and words prepared the way for the gospel to reach outside the pale of Judaism.

But what did Stephen say in this powerful discourse that resulted in his death? Though he touched on the accusations made against him, Stephen did not give a legal defense of himself. Rather, he set forth Israel's past history and God's past workings in order to vindicate Christianity.

In this discourse three ideas run like cords through its fabric:

1. There is progress and change in God's program. God was creative and innovative in His dealings with humans and particularly with Israel. Stephen developed this thought in five points: (a) The promise to Abraham (vv. 2-8). From working with the entire human race, the Lord sovereignly called Abraham, father of the Jews, from Mesopotamia to the land of promise, and gave him 12 great-grandsons who became the progenitors of Israel's 12 tribes. (b) The sojourn of Joseph (vv. 9-16). This move to Egypt was the fulfillment of God's prediction recorded in verses 6-7. It too was a radical change for Jacob's descendants. (c) The deliverance under Moses (vv. 17-43). A major portion of Stephen's discourse pertained to Moses and the Exodus, another important aspect of Israel's history. (d) The building of the tabernacle (vv. 44-46). Constructing the tabernacle so that it was portable implied it was temporary. (It was called the tabernacle of Testimony because it testified to God's presence among them.) (e) The construction of the temple (vv. 47-50). Even the temple was to be a symbol of God's presence and not the very home of God.

In God's workings with the nation from Abraham to Solomon there was innovation and change. The point is clear: If God changed so many things in Israel's history, who is to say that the Law and the temple were permanent?

2. The blessings of God are not limited to the land of Israel and the temple area. Some of Israel's greatest favors were bestowed apart from the temple and the land.

Stephen gave four examples: (a) Israel's patriarchs and leaders were blessed outside the land. Abraham was called in Mesopotamia and given promises before he lived in Haran (vv. 2-5). In Egypt . . . Joseph found favor with Pharaoh because God was with him (vv. 9-10). Moses was commissioned by God in Midian (vv. 29-34). To substantiate the fact that God blessed Moses while he was in Midian, Stephen carefully recounted that two sons were born to Moses there. (b) The Law itself was given outside the land: Moses was in the congregation in the desert (v. 38). (c) The tabernacle was built in the desert. The tabernacle was with them in the desert (v. 44). In fact the Jews brought it with them when they took the land (v. 45). (d) Even the temple, though in the land, was not to be limited in its theology. How could the temple be God's dwelling place when the Scripture declares, Heaven is My throne, and the earth is My footstool? (v. 49; Isa. 66:1)

3. Israel in its past always evidenced a pattern of opposition to God's plans and His men. This is the main point of Stephen's discourse, as its climax affirms (Acts 7:51-53). You are just like your fathers: You always resist the Holy Spirit! This theme is seen throughout the message, but there are some definite specifics. (a) Instead of going directly from Mesopotamia to the Promised Land, Abraham tarried in Haran (vv. 2-4). (b) Joseph was sold by his brothers into slavery in Egypt (v. 9). (c) Moses was rejected by the Israelites (vv. 23-29). It is highly significant that both Joseph and Moses were not accepted until their second appearances

(vv. 13, 35-36). The parallel with Christ could not have escaped Stephen's hearers. (d) Israel rejected true worship by turning to idols (vv. 39-43). Her blatant unbelief was seen in idolatry, a sin which the Jews of the Apostolic Age particularly abhorred. As a result God judged the nation by sending her into Exile in Babylon (v. 43). (e) The people of Israel missed the point of the temple (vv. 48-50). The strong and clear assertion of Stephen (v. 48) implies that the Jews believed the temple was God's dwelling place on earth, the Jewish counterpart to Mount Olympia. Indeed the temple was to be a place of worship and prayer; but it was not God's home (cf. 1 Kings 8:23-53).

Stephen's three main points in this discourse fit together. Since there is progression in God's program and since His blessings are not limited to the temple, Israel had better be careful not to "resist" (Acts 7:51) His workings as they had in the past. They would withstand God's purpose by refusing to see His work in the church and His blessing outside the borders of Israel. This defense related specifically to the accusation made against Stephen in 6:11-14.

A chronological problem exists in 7:6, where Stephen said Israel would be enslaved and mistreated 400 years. For in Galatians 3:17 Paul implied that the period of time from the Abrahamic promise in Genesis 15:13-16 to Mount Sinai was 430 years. The difference between the 400 and 430 years can easily be accounted for by understanding that Stephen used round numbers. Another explanation is that the 400 years was the actual time of bondage whereas the 430 years described the time from the confirming of the covenant in Genesis 35:9-15 to the Exodus, which occurred in 1446 B.C. The main problem, however, is the time Israel spent in bondage in Egypt. If Galatians 3:17 means it was 430 years from the promise given to Abraham (Gen. 15) to the Exodus, the time in Egypt would then be 215 years. However, if Acts 7:6 is taken at face value the bondage was 400 years. Perhaps the best solution is to say Paul was looking at periods of time. The promises were given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. These three patriarchs were all recipients of God's promise. The promise was reconfirmed in Genesis 46:1-4 to Jacob at Beersheba as he was on his way to Egypt. From that point (the end of God's giving promises to the patriarchs) to the Exodus was 400 years. (Cf. Harold W. Hoehner, "The Duration of the Egyptian Bondage," Bibliotheca Sacra 126. October–December 1969:306-16.)

Another apparent discrepancy in Stephen's discourse is in Acts 7:14. Stephen stated that 75 persons were in Jacob's family, but the Hebrew text has "70" in both Genesis 46:27 and Exodus 1:5. In both places the Septuagint has 75. It is commonly said that Stephen, a Greek-speaking Jew, would have used the Septuagint and therefore was making only an "honest" mistake. This difficulty, however, can be resolved in other ways. One of the most widely accepted solutions is to recognize that the Hebrew text includes Jacob, Joseph, and Joseph's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (a total of 70), but that the Septuagint omits Jacob and Joseph but includes Joseph's seven grandchildren (mentioned in 1 Chron. 7:14-15, 20-25). This is supported by the Hebrew in Genesis 46:8-26 which enumerates 66 names, omitting Jacob, Joseph, and Joseph's two sons. Another solution is that the Septuagint's 75 includes the 66 plus the 9 wives of Jacob's 12 sons (Judah's and Simeon's wives had died and Joseph's wife was in Egypt).

Acts 7:16 contains another apparent discrepancy. Stephen's words imply that Jacob was buried at Shechem whereas the Old Testament clearly affirms that he and his wife Leah (and his parents Isaac and Rebekah and his grandparents Abraham and Sarah) were interred in the Cave of Machpelah at Hebron (Gen. 49:29–50:13). However, the bodies buried at Shechem did not include Jacob but did include those of Joseph and his brothers. Joseph was buried first in Egypt but was reburied in Shechem (Gen. 50:26; Ex. 13:19; Josh. 24:32). True, Joshua 24:32 refers only to Joseph's bones, but evidently his brothers were also buried at Shechem (though Josephus states otherwise). The pronoun their (Acts 7:16), then, does not include Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but looks back to the words our fathers in verse 15 and refers to Joseph and his brothers.

Stephen's phrase, the tomb that Abraham had bought from the sons of Hamor at Shechem (v. 16), presents another problem. Actually Jacob, not Abraham, bought the plot of ground (Gen. 33:19). This may be explained by saying that Abraham in a sense did purchase the property in the person of his grandson. Abraham would be given title to Shechem through Jacob.

This favorable allusion to Shechem, the "capital" of the Samaritans, would not please Stephen's audience. But his reference to Samaria prepares readers for the next step in the outreach of the gospel (Acts 8).

3. THE ATTACK ON STEPHEN (7:54–8:1A)

7:54-56. The response of the religious authorities to Stephen's message was easily predictable: They were furious (cf. 5:33) and gnashed their teeth at him.

Instead of being intimidated, Stephen, full of the Holy Spirit (cf. 6:3, 5, 10), saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God. The Lord Jesus normally is seated at the Father's right hand (Ps. 110:1; Rom. 8:34; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3, 13; 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22). The standing position may imply that the Lord Christ was standing to welcome Stephen.

Acts 7:56 is a climactic verse in this chapter for several reasons. First, it repeats the claim Christ made at His trial before the high priest (Mark 14:62). Just as His claim resulted in His being accused of blasphemy, so also these words brought a violent response toward Stephen. Second, the term Son of Man is filled with significance. This is the last time it is used in the New Testament and it is the only time in the Gospels and Acts when it is not spoken by the Lord Jesus. This expression, Son of Man, shows that Jesus is the Messiah for it comes from Daniel 7:13-14. It is definitely eschatological. (See additional comments on "the Son of Man" at Mark 8:31.) Third, Acts 7:56 combines two great messianic passages—Daniel 7:13-14 and Psalm 110:1. Daniel 7:13-14 emphasizes the universal aspect of the Lord's rule. He is not simply a Jewish ruler; He is Savior of the world. Psalm 110:1 presents the Messiah as being at God's right hand. Besides stressing power and position, this also shows acceptance. Christ is therefore the Mediator (cf. 1 Tim. 2:5), thus proving that people have access to God by means other than the temple and its priests.

7:57-58. The response of the Sanhedrin was immediate and violent. They quickly saw the theological implications of Stephen's doctrine—Israel was guilty; the Law was temporary; the temple must be done away—so they dragged him out of the city and began to stone him. Blasphemy was to be punished by death (Lev. 24:16). The Jews' martyring Stephen is ironic because their forefathers, having worshiped "Moloch" (Acts 7:43), should have been put to death, according to Moses (Lev. 20:2).

A young theologue named Saul agreed that Stephen should be stoned. The witnesses laid their clothes at his feet. This meant Saul was giving his approval by guarding their clothes (Acts 8:1; 22:20).

7:59-60. In words reminiscent of the Lord's, Stephen committed his spirit to the Lord and prayed for his enemies (cf. Luke 23:34, 46). Luke recorded the fact of his death by simply writing, he fell asleep. For a Christian, his body (not his soul) sleeps in death (cf. John 11:11; 1 Thes. 4:13, 15).

8:1a. The words giving approval (syneudokōn) indicate active approval, not just passive consent (cf. Rom. 1:32). This gives fuller meaning to Saul's deed in Acts 7:58.

B. The ministry of Philip (8:1b-40)

1. IN SAMARIA (8:1B-25)

a. The persecution of the church (8:1b-3)

Chapter 8 is closely linked with chapters 6 and 7. The subject of persecution begun in 6 is continued in 8. Furthermore, the personality of Saul, introduced in 7, is also found in 8. There is a close connection between Philip (chap. 8) and Stephen (chaps. 6–7) because both belonged to the Seven (6:5). Even the order of their two names in 6:5 is followed in the sequence of the narrative in 6:8–8:40.

8:1b. On that day indicates that the persecution of the church was signaled by Stephen's martyrdom. It implies that Jewish leaders approved of Stephen's execution. Israel was in the process of confirming its tragic choice to reject Jesus as her Messiah.

The fact that all the Jerusalem believers except the apostles were scattered throughout Judea and Samaria was God's method of fulfilling the mandate of 1:8. The word "scattered" (diesparēsan), also used in 8:4, comes from the verb speirō, used to refer to sowing seed (Matt. 6:26; 13:3-4, 18; 25:24, 26; Luke 8:5; 12:24; etc.) This statement also prepares the way for the ministry of Philip in Samaria (Acts 8:4-25).

Though Luke refers to "all," he could not have included everyone, for the church continued on in Jerusalem. From the context it may be concluded that the primary objects of persecution were the Greek-speaking Jews. They would have been easily identifiable and would have been associated with Stephen.

Why the apostles did not leave the city is not stated. Perhaps their sense of obligation to the church in Jerusalem kept them there. The Jerusalem church undoubtedly became more Jewish with the evacuation of people who would be more sympathetic with Stephen. At the same time this persecution deepened the cleavage between the church and Judaism.

8:2-3. These verses contrast sharply with each other. Godly men buried Stephen and mourned deeply for him. On the other hand Saul began to destroy the church. The word for "destroy" (elymaineto, used only here in the NT) appears in the Septuagint in Psalm 79:13 (80:13 in Eng. texts) about wild boars that destroy (NIV, "ravage") a vineyard. Saul's zeal was so great against Christians that it was as if he were wildly raging against them (cf. Acts 9:1, 13). In violence he dragged off men and women (cf. 9:29; 22:4-5) and beat them (22:19; 26:11). This caused havoc in Jerusalem (9:21). Saul's own later imprisonment as an apostle for Christ contrasted with his imprisoning these followers!

Stephen's martyrdom together with the ensuing persecution of the church confirmed Israel's unbelief and her obstinate refusal to accept Jesus as her Redeemer.

b. The proclamation of the message (8:4-8)

8:4. In the Greek this verse begins with "therefore on the other hand" (men oun, not trans. in the NIV). Because of persecution believers were scattered (cf. v. 1) and the Word of God spread (cf. Rom. 8:28; 2 Cor. 2:14; Phil. 1:12-14). This is another evidence of God's sovereign control; in spite of opposition the Word of God grew (cf. Acts 12:24; 19:20).

8:5. Philip, a Grecian Jew and therefore more broadminded than Aramaic-speaking Jews in Israel (cf. 6:1), went to the Samaritans. Samaria is north of Jerusalem, but Luke said Philip went down because Samaria is lower in elevation than Jerusalem. The significance of Philip's ministry in this unnamed city is seen when Matthew 10:5-6; Luke 9:52-54; and John 4:9 are compared with Acts 8:5.

8:6-7. Philip's proclamation of Christ was confirmed by miraculous signs (sēmeia; cf. v. 13) so that they all paid close attention to what he said. The miracles (casting out evil spirits, i.e., demons, and healing paralytics and cripples [cf. 3:1-10]) authenticated his message (cf. 2:43).

8:8. Once again the gospel resulted in great joy (cf. comments on 2:46-47).

c. The professions of faith (8:9-13)

8:9-10. Many traditions revolve around Simon the sorcerer. It is alleged: (a) that he was the founder of the Gnostic heresies, (b) that he went to Rome and perverted Christian doctrine there, and (c) that he became involved in a miracle contest with Peter and lost. At any rate, this Simon of Samaria did practice sorcery in the city and amazed all the people of Samaria. Because of his "sorcery," the ability to exercise control over nature and/or people by means of demonic power, people called him the Great Power. They may or may not have thought of him as possessing deity. At any rate Simon boasted that he was someone great, and the people of Samaria believed him. Furthermore, he accepted their adulation.

8:11-12. Simon's magic means his sorcery, his demonic powers (the Gr. words for "practiced sorcery" and "magic" are related). When Philip came to Samaria, he preached the good news of the kingdom of God and the name (cf. 3:16) of Jesus Christ. The term "the kingdom of God" refers to the coming kingdom (cf. 1:3, 6). "The name of Jesus Christ" looks to His position as Messiah (cf. 8:5, "the Christ," lit., the Messiah). In other words, the message meant that some Samaritans would become heirs of the Millennium by faith in Jesus, the Messiah.

As an evidence of their faith the Samaritans were baptized, both men and women (cf. "men and women" in v. 3). The contrasts and comparisons between Simon and Philip are striking. Both performed miracles, Simon by demonic power and Philip by divine power. Simon boasted and welcomed acclaim to himself, but Philip proclaimed Christ. People were amazed at Simon's magic, but people were converted to Christ by Philip's ministry.

8:13. Amazingly Simon himself believed and was baptized. Now rather than people following Simon, he followed Philip! His response must have had a profound effect on his own followers.

Was Simon saved? Luke did not specify this clearly, so it is difficult to be dogmatic. But seven facts suggest that Simon probably was not born again: (1) The verb "believe" (pisteuō) does not always refer to saving faith. Simon's faith could have been like that of the demons in James 2:19, merely intellectual assent. (2) Furthermore, faith based on signs is not a trustworthy faith (cf. John 2:23-25; 4:48). (3) In addition, Luke never stated that Simon received the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:17-18). (4) Simon continued to have a self-centered interest in the display of miraculous power (vv. 18-19). (5) The verb "repent" (metanoeō) used in verse 22 is normally addressed to lost people. (6) The word "perish" (eis apōleian) employed in verse 20 is strong. It is related to the word "perish" in John 3:16. (7) The description of Simon in Acts 8:23 is a better description of a lost man than of one who is saved (cf. Deut. 29:18). Still one cannot be dogmatic on this point. The Lord knows those who are His (2 Tim. 2:19).

d. The proof of the work (8:14-17)

8:14-17. It was necessary for the apostles in Jerusalem to commission Peter and John to Samaria for several reasons. Normally the Holy Spirit baptizes, indwells, and seals at the moment of faith, but in this instance the delay served several purposes: (1) Peter and John's prayer (for bestowing of the Holy Spirit) and their laying on of hands (resulting in the coming of the Spirit) confirmed Philip's ministry among the Samaritans. This authenticated this new work to the Jerusalem apostles. (2) Also this confirmed Philip's ministry to the Samaritans. This message Philip had preached was validated by the coming of the Spirit, a mark of the coming kingdom (cf. v. 12; Jer. 31:31-34; Ezek. 36:23-27; Joel 2:28-32). (3) Perhaps the most important aspect of God's withholding the Spirit till apostolic representatives came from the Jerusalem church was to prevent schism. Because of the natural propensity of division between Jews and Samaritans it was essential for Peter and John to welcome the Samaritan believers officially into the church. The contrast between John's attitude here and in Luke 9:52-54 is significant.

e. The perversion of the truth (8:18-24)

8:18-19. The clause Simon saw that the Spirit was given implies there was some external manifestation to evidence the coming of the Holy Spirit. Possibly it was speaking in tongues, though the Scripture does not say so (cf. 2:4; 10:45-46; 19:6).

The term simony, which is the buying or selling of things considered religious or sacred such as an ecclesiastical office, comes from Simon's desire to purchase the ability to impart the Holy Spirit to others.

Luke's purpose in including this incident with Simon was to show the superiority of Christianity over the occult and demoniacs. Several times this kind of conflict took place in Acts, and Christ was always the Victor (13:6-12; 16:16-18; 19:13-20; 28:1-6).

8:20. Peter's response to Simon's request was one of outrage. May your money perish with you!

The reason for such strong language was Simon's failure to understand grace, the free nature of God's salvation and blessings. Peter explained his strong language by saying, You thought you could buy the gift of God with money!

8:21-22. The language of this verse, You have no part or share in this ministry (logō, "word, matter"), implies Simon was not a Christian. (For similar terminology see Deut. 12:12; 14:27. Just as the Levites had no inheritance in the Promised Land, so also Simon had no portion in the matter of salvation.) The adverb perhaps does not mean God is reluctant to forgive sin. The question was whether Simon would repent of his heart's intention.

8:23-24. The allusion to bitterness (lit., "gall of bitterness," cholēn pikrias) seems to refer to Deuteronomy 29:18, which speaks of idolatry and bitter apostasy (cf. Heb. 12:15). Simon had been captivated by false doctrine and sin. Simon's response may have been genuine or simply an outcry of fear. At least he was apprehensive about the outcome of his tragic request (Acts 8:18-19).

f. The promotion of the work (8:25)

8:25. Peter and John were so convinced of God's working among the Samaritans that when they returned to Jerusalem they too shared the gospel with Samaritans, in fact, in many Samaritan villages. This was a remarkable thing for these Jewish apostles to do!

2. TO THE ETHIOPIAN EUNUCH (8:26-40)

a. The command (8:26)

8:26. Though Luke gave no record of God's commanding Philip to preach to the Samaritans (v. 5), God did sovereignly direct Philip toward Gaza (see the map at Acts 9). The highway is referred to as the desert road. The expression may refer to a desert road or a desert city. Ancient Gaza was destroyed in 93 B.C. and the city was rebuilt nearer the Mediterranean in 57 B.C. The old city was called Desert Gaza. The Greek for the angel's command could be translated, "Arise and go to the south to the road . . . that goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza. This is desert." This reference to the road in 8:36 may imply that the road, not the city, was in a deserted area.

b. The contact (8:27-30)

8:27. The Ethiopian eunuch is described rather fully as an important official in charge of all the treasury of Candace, queen of the Ethiopians. "Ethiopia" here refers not to modern-day Ethiopia but to ancient Nubia, the region from Aswan in southern Egypt to Khartoum, Sudan. Candace was a title given to the queen-mother, as Pharaoh was used of the king of Egypt. Governmental power rested in the hands of Candace, for the royal son, worshiped as an offspring of the sun, was therefore above such mundane activities as ruling over a nation. Rulership was therefore vested with the queen-mother. The fact that this eunuch had gone to Jerusalem to worship is interesting. The Law prohibited eunuchs from entering the Lord's assembly (Deut. 23:1). However, Isaiah 56:3-5 predicts great blessing for eunuchs in the Millennial Age. Evidently this eunuch was a worshiper of Yahweh though not a full-fledged proselyte.

8:28-30. The eunuch's wealth is revealed in the simple description sitting in his chariot. As this finance officer was riding, he was reading from the Book of Isaiah. Since it was customary to read aloud, Philip could have easily heard the portion of Scripture the eunuch was reading (v. 30). Interestingly Philip was guided first by an angel (v. 26) and then by the Holy Spirit (v. 29).

c. The conversion (8:31-35)

8:31-35. The quotation from Isaiah 53:7-8 was perplexing to the eunuch. Welcoming the opportunity to have Philip explain the passage, he invited the apostle into his chariot. The Ethiopian knew the passage described an individual, but was it Isaiah or someone else? Philip seized the opportunity to present the good news about Jesus from Isaiah 53 (cf. John 5:39).

d. The consequences (8:36-40)

8:36-39. The first consequence of Philip's evangelization was the eunuch's conversion. His response, Why shouldn't I be baptized? indicates that water baptism was the seal of a personal decision to trust in Christ (cf. Matt. 28:19). The second result was joy, for the eunuch . . . went on his way rejoicing. A third result was a further outreach of the gospel to one who was neither Jew nor Samaritan, but a Gentile (African) worshiper of Yahweh who was not a full-fledged proselyte to Judaism. Possibly the eunuch was uncircumcised. (As indicated in the NIV marg., Acts 8:37 is included only in late Gr. mss. and therefore was probably not in the original ms.)

When the baptism was completed the Spirit of the Lord suddenly took Philip away, and the eunuch did not see him again. Whatever happened to the Ethiopian eunuch after that is unknown.

8:40. Philip, however, appeared at Azotus. This city is the same as Ashdod, an ancient Philistine capital. As he traveled to Caesarea he proclaimed the gospel in all the towns along the way (see Azotus and Caesarea on the map at chap. 9). Evidently Philip then settled in Caesarea for he was still there about 20 years later (cf. 21:8). Significantly an evangelist may be resident or itinerary; Philip carried on both types of ministries.

The area around Azotus and Caesarea was later visited by Peter (9:32-43). Even though Philip the evangelist resided in Caesarea, the Lord called Peter from Joppa to give the gospel to Cornelius in Caesarea (chaps. 10–11).

C. The message of Saul (9:1-31)

The conversion of Saul (Paul) is believed by some to be the most important event in the church since Pentecost. Luke certainly considered Saul's conversion significant for he recorded it three times in Acts (chaps. 9, 22, 26).

The record of Saul's conversion at this juncture prepares readers for the gospel going to Gentiles (chap. 10). The apostle to the Gentiles (Gal. 2:8; Eph. 3:8) was preceded in this ministry by Peter's evangelization of Cornelius and his household.

The account of Saul's Damascus Road experience may be recorded here also to relate it to Stephen's martyrdom. Stephen's discourse seemed to have spurred Saul to renewed efforts to stamp out Christianity (Acts 8:1-3). If the doctrine propagated by Stephen was correct, then the Law was in jeopardy. So Saul, zealous as he was, went on persecuting the church (cf. Gal. 1:13; Phil. 3:6).

But Saul the persecutor was about to become Paul the apostle of Jesus Christ! His background and qualifications suited him eminently for the work to which God had called him: (1) He knew the Jewish culture and language well (Acts 21:40; Phil. 3:5). (2) Because he was reared in Tarsus he was well acquainted with the Greek culture and its philosophies (Acts 17:22-31; Titus 1:12). (3) He possessed all the privileges of a Roman citizen (Acts 16:37; 22:23-29; 25:10-12). (4) He was trained and skilled in Jewish theology (Gal. 1:14). (5) Because he was capable in a secular trade he was able to support himself (Acts 18:3; 1 Cor. 9:4-18; 2 Cor. 11:7-11; 1 Thes. 2:9; 2 Thes. 3:8). (6) God gave him zeal, leadership qualities, and theological insight.

1. THE CONVERSION OF SAUL (9:1-19A)

a. The conviction of Saul (9:1-9)

9:1a. The adverb still looks back to 8:3. While the gospel was reaching farther outside of Jerusalem, Saul was continuing his relentless persecution of the church.

9:1b-2. So great was Saul's hatred for the church that he went to the high priest and asked him for letters to the synagogues in Damascus. Damascus (see its location on the map) was not under the control of Judea, Galilee, or the Decapolis. What jurisdiction would the high priest have over synagogues in Damascus? This is usually answered by saying Rome recognized the right of extradition when the high priest in Jerusalem demanded it. But this can also be explained in another way. At that time Damascus may have been under the Nabatean king, Aretas IV (cf. 2 Cor. 11:32-33). In order to gain favor with the anti-Roman Jews, Aretas, who hated the Romans, would have conceded this favor to the high priest.

The mention of "synagogues in Damascus" indicates that Christianity was still closely associated with Judaism (in James 2:2 the word "meeting" renders the Gr. synagōgēn, "synagogue"). Mention of Damascus shows that Christianity had spread rapidly.

Strangely, Saul referred to Christianity as the Way, a term used only in Acts (19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22).

9:3-4. Saul both heard the voice of the Lord Jesus and saw Him (cf. 9:17, 27; 22:14; 26:16; 1 Cor. 9:1; 15:8). Though there is no explicit statement of Saul's seeing Christ, it is implicit in the reference to a light from heaven. It was fundamental to Saul's apostleship that he saw the resurrected Lord (cf. 1 Cor. 9:1).

The question, Why do you persecute Me? (cf. Acts 9:5) is filled with significance for it shows the union of Christ with His church. The Lord did not ask, "Why do you persecute My church?" The reference to "Me" gave Saul his first glimpse into the great doctrine of Christians being in Christ. This same truth was implied earlier by Luke when he wrote that the Lord continues His work on earth in the church (1:1). Also Ananias' lie to Peter was a lie to the Holy Spirit (5:3). Luke, with Paul, saw Christ and the church as the Head and its body.

9:5. Some interpret "Lord" in Saul's question, Who are You, Lord? (kyrie) as "Sir." It is possible for this noun to have this meaning, as it does in Matthew 13:27; 27:63; John 4:11; Acts 10:4; and elsewhere. However, there is too much that is supernatural in this passage to use the mere human vocative, "Sir." Even though Saul did not immediately recognize this One as Jesus, he must have acknowledged a supernatural being. Jesus then identified Himself to Saul: I am Jesus (cf. 9:17).

The words, "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks" (KJV), are not in the better and earlier Greek manuscripts. But this statement is found in Acts 26:14.

9:6. The resurrected Lord commanded Saul, Go into the city and you will be told what you must do. This does not mean that Ananias (v. 10) taught Saul the doctrine of justification, as some claim. Instead, Saul was told he must proclaim the gospel, which would involve suffering (vv. 15-16; 22:10, 15; 26:16-20). The Lord Himself gave Saul the truth of justification by faith on the Damascus Road; Acts 26:18 is clear on that point (cf. Gal. 1:11-12).

9:7. An apparent discrepancy stands between verse 7 and 22:9. In 9:7 Luke recorded that the men who traveled with Saul . . . heard the sound (phōnēs), but in 22:9 Luke wrote that "they did not understand the voice" (phōnēn). Literally, that clause in 22:9 may be translated, "They did not hear the sound." The NIV correctly translates the verse, because the verb "to hear" with the genitive case may mean "to hear a sound" and with the accusative case "to hear with understanding." The genitive case is employed in 9:7, and the accusative is used in 22:9. So the travelers with Saul heard the sound (9:7) but did not understand what Christ said (22:9).

9:8. If Saul's "thorn in the flesh" was eye trouble (cf. comments on 2 Cor. 12:7), this may have been the prelude of it. At any rate there is a sharp contrast between Saul in Acts 9:1 and 8. One moment he was storming up the road, determined to capture and imprison Christians. Soon thereafter he was led like a child by the hand into Damascus. God's grace is often displayed in great powerful acts and in apparent catastrophes.

9:9. The three days of blindness, fasting, and praying (v. 11) were a time of waiting. Saul still had not received the message God had promised him (v. 6).

b. The contrition of Saul (9:10-19a)

9:10-14. By means of a vision God instructed a reluctant Ananias to restore Saul's sight. He was to go to Saul where he was staying with a man named Judas whose house was on Straight Street. It was one of the two parallel streets that ran from the western to the eastern wall. The first reference to Saul's birthplace—Tarsus—is given in verse 11 (see the map; cf. comments on v. 30).

Interestingly believers were first called saints in the Book of Acts here (v. 13). The church is comprised of "set-apart ones" (hagiois; cf. "saints" in Rom.

1:1; Eph. 1:1; Phil. 1:1). From Acts 9:14 it is evident that the news of Saul's coming to persecute believers in Damascus had preceded his arrival, and Ananias feared what Saul might do.

9:15. The Lord assured Ananias . . . This man is My chosen instrument to carry My name before the Gentiles and their kings and before the people of Israel. Saul was to become Paul, the apostle to the uncircumcised (Rom. 11:13; Gal. 2:2, 7-8; Eph. 3:8), including kings (cf. Governor Felix [Acts 24:1-23], Governor Porcius Festus [24:27–25:12], King Herod Agrippa II [25:13–26:32], and possibly Emperor Nero [25:11]). The apostle, of course, also ministered to "the people of Israel" (cf. 9:20; 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2, 10, 17; 18:4, 19; 19:8; 26:17-20; Rom. 1:16). How amazing that the one who persecuted Christians so violently should himself be transformed into a witness of the gospel—and such a dynamic, forceful witness at that!

9:16. The partial fulfillment of this prediction is seen in Saul's inventory of his suffering (2 Cor. 11:23-27).

Three times in as many verses the conversation between Ananias and the Lord included the word name (Acts 9:14-16; cf. 3:16).

9:17. Brother Saul—what words of encouragement these must have been to Saul! The first recorded man to call Saul a Christian brother was Ananias. A more complete statement of Ananias' words is given in 22:14-16. Ananias' apprehension of Saul was turned to love for Saul because of the Lord's directive. Ananias identified with Saul by placing his hands on him.

Saul's being filled with the Holy Spirit clearly followed his conversion (cf. 4:8, 31; Eph. 5:18).

9:18. In his healing from his blindness something like scales fell from Saul's eyes, and he could see again. The word "scales" (lepides, from the verb lepō, "to peel") was used of the scales of fish and crocodiles. As in several previous conversions recorded in Acts, water baptism followed conversion (8:12, 38).

After this event Ananias disappeared from the narrative and is not mentioned again except in chapter 22 where Paul recounted his own conversion.

9:19a. The three days without food or drink, in addition to the shock of his "exposure" to the resurrected Christ, left Saul weak. However, several things helped him regain his strength: his encounter with Ananias, his healing, his filling with the Spirit, his water baptism, and his taking some food.

2. THE CONFLICTS OF SAUL (9:19B-31)

a. The confession of Saul (9:19b-22)

9:19b-20. After only a few days with the Christians in Damascus Saul began to preach in the synagogues that Jesus is the Son of God. Preaching to Jews in their synagogues was also his strategy on his missionary journeys (the first journey—13:5, 14; 14:1; the second journey—17:2, 10, 17; 18:4; the third journey—18:19; 19:8). Acts 9:20 includes the only occurrence of the phrase "Son of God" in Acts. On the Damascus Road the first thing Saul learned was who Jesus is.

9:21. The Jews were astonished. This response is understandable. The Greek verb existanto is literally, "they were beside themselves; they were struck out of their senses"; several other people had the same response to Jesus (Mark 2:12; 5:42; 6:51). This word is used in Acts five times (2:7; 8:13; 9:21; 10:45; 12:16). Saul's intense persecution campaign had raised havoc in Jerusalem (cf. 8:3; 22:19; 26:11).

9:22. Saul used his theological training to good advantage in pressing home the truth that the Lord Jesus is the Messiah. He had gone to Damascus to persecute the church; he ended up preaching Jesus. What a contrast! What grace! No wonder the Damascus Jews were baffled (synechynnen, "bewildered, confused," from syncheō, used in the NT only in 2:6; 9:22; 21:27, 31).

b. The conspiracies against Saul (9:23-31)

(1) In Damascus. 9:23-25. One of the themes in Acts, underscored in this paragraph, is the Jewish leaders' opposition to the gospel. It is clear from 2 Corinthians 11:32-33 that this was a joint effort of the Jews and the governor under King Aretas (a Nabatean), though the Jews were the prime movers. Saul's followers, aware that the Jews conspired to kill him . . . lowered him in a basket outside the wall since the city gates were guarded. Saul's plans for persecuting Christians in Damascus took a strange turn; he had entered the city blind and left in a basket! Ironically he became the object of persecution.

The reference to "followers" (mathētai, lit., "disciples") shows that Saul was already having a fruitful ministry. He was a gifted leader.

Luke in compressing the narrative omits Saul's brief sojourn into Arabia, mentioned by Paul in Galatians 1:17. Probably this occurred between Acts 9:22 and 23. The purpose of Paul's time in Arabia is unknown. Possibly he went there to evangelize, but the area was sparsely populated and it was Saul's strategy to go to populous metropolitan centers. He may have left Damascus to reduce the church's persecution. Or, more probably, he went to Arabia to meditate and study.

(2) In Jerusalem (9:26-30). 9:26-28. Saul had left Jerusalem an inveterate enemy of Christianity to persecute the church in Damascus; but in God's sovereign grace he joined the believers and preached the gospel in that very city. He joined the work in Jerusalem, but the believers there refused to trust him (cf. Ananias' similar fear, v. 13). In Damascus Saul needed a friend, Ananias; in Jerusalem he needed another, Barnabas. He whose name means "Son of Encouragement" (4:36) proved to be that for Saul. Barnabas is seen in Acts on four other occasions. (a) 11:22-24; (b) 11:30; 12:25; (c) 13:1-2, 50; 14:12; (d) 15:2, 12, 22, 25, 37. The believers in Jerusalem, convinced by Barnabas that Saul had in fact been converted, allowed Saul to stay with them. In Damascus he preached fearlessly in the name of Jesus, and in Jerusalem he was speaking boldly in the name of the Lord (cf. comments on "boldly" in 4:31).

9:29. Saul talked and debated with the Grecian Jews, thus continuing the work of Stephen (cf. 6:8-10). Evidently Saul's debating ability proved to be too much for the Grecian Jews as they attempted to assassinate him.

9:30. The brothers (cf. v. 17) at Jerusalem then escorted Saul to Caesarea, the seaport about 65 miles away by road, and sent him to his hometown, Tarsus. An ancient city, then over 4,000 years old, Tarsus was an intellectual city in the Roman Empire. (For a brief survey of significant events in Tarsus' history, see V. Gilbert Beers, The Victor Handbook of Bible Knowledge. Wheaton, Ill.: Scripture Press Publications, Victor Books, 1981, p. 555.)

Saul's movements in chapter 9 may be summarized as follows:

1. Jerusalem (vv. 1-2)
2. Damascus (vv. 3-22)
3. Arabia (Gal. 1:17)
4. Damascus (Acts 9:23-25; Gal. 1:17; 2 Cor. 11:32-33)
5. Jerusalem (Acts 9:26-29; Gal. 1:18-20)
6. Caesarea (Acts 9:30)
7. Tarsus (v. 30; Gal. 1:21-24)

(3) The conclusion. 9:31. In the phrase the church throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria the word "church" is singular. Luke was obviously speaking of the universal church as it was dispersed in the Holy Land.

So strong was Jewish antagonism to Saul and his ministry that after he left the area the church enjoyed a time of peace.

The church was still confined to Jews, half-Jews (the Samaritans), and proselytes to Judaism who became Christians (with the one exception of the eunuch from Ethiopia, 8:26-40). But all was in readiness for the extension of the church to a new segment of the world's population.

With this third of seven progress reports on the spiritual and numerical growth of the church (cf. 2:47; 6:7; 12:24; 16:5; 19:20; 28:30-31), Luke brought this section of his book to a conclusion.

III. The Witness to the Extremity of the Earth (9:32–28:31)

A. The extension of the church to Antioch (9:32–12:24)

1. THE PREPARATION OF PETER FOR A UNIVERSAL GOSPEL (9:32–10:48)

a. Peter at Lydda (9:32-35)

9:32-35. Peter was last mentioned in 8:25 when he was returning to Jerusalem from Samaria with John. Peter was involved in an itinerant mission around Judea which brought him to Lydda. Lydda, mentioned only here in the New Testament, is today called Lod; Israel's international airport is just north of the city. Peter later carried on an extensive traveling ministry, evident from 1 Corinthians 9:5. This is also implied from the addressees of his first epistle (1 Peter 1:1). Philip had preceded Peter to the area in and around Caesarea (Acts 8:40).

The miraculous healing of Aeneas, a paralytic who had been bedridden for eight years, was the occasion for many to come to faith in Christ. Three times in Acts, Luke used the words turned to the Lord to refer to salvation (9:35; 11:21; 15:19). The gospel was beginning to attract a wider audience, for many in this coastal region were Gentiles. Sharon is the fertile plain along the coast of Palestine, about 10 miles wide and 50 miles long. Lydda was on the southeastern edge of the plain. This miracle was Peter's second healing of a cripple (cf. 3:1-10; also cf. 14:8-10).

b. Peter at Joppa (9:36-43)

9:36-38. While Peter was at Lydda, a well-beloved Christian woman (a disciple) in Joppa by the name of Dorcas . . . died. Her name means "gazelle" in Greek as does its counterpart Tabitha in Aramaic. She was known for her help to the poor. Because the cities of Lydda and Joppa are only about 12 miles apart two men were sent from Joppa to call Peter. (For a brief statement on Joppa's history see Beers, The Victor Handbook of Bible Knowledge, p. 559.) No one had been raised from the dead in the early church so far as the records of Acts declare, but the faith of the believers was so great they expected the Lord to use Peter to resurrect Dorcas.

9:39-41. When Peter arrived, he sent the weeping widows and other believers out of the upstairs . . . room, prayed on his knees for Dorcas, and commanded her to arise (cf. Mark 5:41). To avoid ceremonial defilement (cf. Lev. 21:1; Num. 5:2; 9:6-10; 19:11), Peter did not touch her until after God restored her to life.

9:42-43. This miracle, like previous ones, led many to believe in the Lord (2:43, 47; 4:4; 5:12, 14; 8:6; 9:33-35). After this miracle Peter remained in Joppa for some time (lit., "sufficient days") with a tanner named Simon. His house was "by the sea" (10:6).

This passage (9:32-43) shows the excellent preparation given Peter for his ensuing experience with Cornelius. (1) Two outstanding miracles confirmed his ministry; God was with him in a special way. (2) He was ministering in an area that was partially Gentile. (3) His living in the home of Simon the tanner was significant. Tanners were considered to be ceremonially unclean because they were constantly in contact with the skins of dead animals (Lev. 11:40).

c. Peter and Cornelius (chap. 10)

The importance of this event is seen in the fact that Luke recounts it three times—here in Acts 10, again in chapter 11, and finally in 15:6-9. The geographic extension of the gospel in Acts is an initial fulfillment of Jesus' words in Matthew 8:11: "Many will come from the east and the west, and will take their places . . . in the kingdom of heaven."

(1) The vision of Cornelius (10:1-8). 10:1. By separate visions both Peter and Cornelius were prepared for this momentous happening. Cornelius and his vision are described first. Cornelius was a centurion, a Roman officer in charge of 100 soldiers, in the Italian Regiment, consisting of 600 soldiers. In the New Testament centurions are consistently viewed in a favorable light (cf. Matt. 8:5-10; 27:54; Mark 15:44-45; Acts 22:25-26; 23:17-18; 27:6, 43). Centurion Cornelius became one of the first Gentiles after Pentecost to hear the good news of Jesus Christ's forgiveness.

10:2. From the description of Cornelius as devout (eusebēs, used only here and in v. 7; 2 Peter 2:9) and God-fearing ("righteous and God-fearing," Acts 10:22), it can be inferred he was not a full-fledged proselyte to Judaism (he had not been circumcised, 11:3), but he did worship Yahweh. Evidently he attended the synagogue and to the best of his knowledge and ability followed the Old Testament Scriptures. Nevertheless, he had not entered into New Testament salvation (cf. 11:14).

10:3-6. The time reference, 3 in the afternoon, may refer to a Jewish time of prayer (cf. 3:1). If so, the Lord approached Cornelius by means of an angel while he was at prayer (cf. 10:9). Later Cornelius called this angel "a man in shining clothes" (v. 30). Cornelius responded to the angel by asking, What is it, Lord? Perhaps "Lord" (kyrie) here means "Sir"

(cf. comments on 9:5). This soldier's piety was evidenced by his prayers and his generous giving to the poor (cf. 10:2). The angel instructed him to send for Simon . . . Peter at the home of Simon the tanner (cf. 9:43).

10:7. When the angel who spoke to him had gone, the centurion called three of his men—two servants and a military aide, also a devout man (eusebē; cf. v. 2). Undoubtedly these three had been influenced by Cornelius' devotion.

10:8. He told them everything that had happened. Related to the Greek participle used here (exēgēsamenos) is the English noun "exegesis." The verb means he "explained" everything.

The three went off to Joppa, some 33 miles south of Caesarea (v. 24), to bring Peter back to Cornelius.

(2) The vision of Peter (10:9-16). 10:9. That Peter prayed morning and evening may be assumed, for those were normal times of prayer. In addition he prayed at noon. Prayer three times a day was not commanded in the Scriptures, but Peter followed the example of pious men before him (cf. Ps. 55:17; Dan. 6:10). Peter went up to the (flat) roof to pray; this would have given him privacy.

10:10-12. While hungry, Peter fell into a trance in which God gave him a vision of a sheet coming down to earth with all kinds of . . . animals . . . reptiles . . . and birds.

10:13-14. When God commanded Peter to eat of these animals, his response was, Surely not, Lord! Significantly his refusal ("surely not") was mēdamōs, a more polite and subjective term than oudamōs ("by no means," used only in Matt. 2:6). This was the third time in Peter's career that he directly refused God's will (cf. Matt. 16:23; John 13:8).

Peter knew from the Law that he should not eat unclean animals (Lev. 11). But could he not have killed and eaten the clean animals and left the unclean? Probably Peter understood the command to include them all. Or possibly the large sheet contained only unclean animals.

10:15. Do not call anything impure that God has made clean. This rebuttal gives Mark 7:14-23 more meaning (cf. 1 Tim. 4:4). It is generally recognized that Mark wrote down Peter's words. In retrospect Peter must have recognized that Jesus as the Messiah cleansed all goods from ceremonial defilement.

10:16. Why did Peter refuse three times to eat the unclean foods? For one thing, this indicated emphasis. But more than that it revealed certainty and truth. Here was one place where Peter was being scrupulous beyond the will of God. His intentions were good, but he was being disobedient. Also, was there some link here with Peter's threefold denial (John 18:17, 25-27) and with his three affirmations of his love for the Lord? (John 21:15-17)

(3) The visit of the messengers (10:17-23a). 10:17-22. In marvelous timing and by the coordination of the sovereign God the three messengers and Peter met. The Holy Spirit, who told Peter about the arrival of the three men, may have been the One whose unidentified voice Peter heard earlier (vv. 13, 15).

The men . . . from Cornelius spoke highly of him (cf. vv. 2, 4) and conveyed to Peter their purpose in coming.

10:23a. Then Peter invited the men into the house to be his guests. Since Peter had been waiting for his noon meal (cf. v. 10), he undoubtedly now shared it with his visitors. Perhaps he was already beginning to discern the lesson of his vision!

(4) The visitation of Gentiles (10:23b-43). 10:23b. By the time Peter and his guests finished lunch it must have been too late to start back to Caesarea that day. The next day they began the almost-two-day trip. (Cornelius' emissaries had left Caesarea after 3 P.M. one day [vv. 3, 8] and arrived at noon two days later [vv. 9, 19]. Cf. "four days ago" in v. 30.)

Peter took with him some of the brothers from Joppa. The two-by-two motif is common in the Gospels and Acts; Christian workers often went out by twos. In this debatable situation at least six people accompanied Peter (11:12). So there would be seven witnesses to attest to what would transpire.

10:24. Cornelius was so confident that Peter would come and he was so expectant of Peter's message that he called together his relatives and close friends.

10:25-26. When Peter arrived, Cornelius prostrated himself before the apostle in worship. The verb prosekynēsen means "he worshiped" and is here translated in reverence. Peter, refusing this kind of obeisance, urged Cornelius to stand up, for, he said, I am only a man myself.

10:27-29. Peter was well aware of the consequences of his fellowshiping with Gentiles in their homes (cf. 11:2-3), but he had learned the lesson of the vision well. The command to eat unclean animals meant he was not to call any man impure or unclean. So he came without protest.

10:30-33. After Cornelius recounted the circumstances that brought Peter to his house he said, Now we are all here in the presence of God to listen to everything the Lord has commanded you to tell us. What a divinely prepared audience!

10:34-35. These words of Peter were revolutionary. They swept away the prejudice and indoctrination of generations of Judaism. However, Gentile salvation certainly was a doctrine known in the Old Testament (cf. Jonah; Gen. 12:3). In the Old Testament the Jews were God's Chosen People, the special recipients of His promises and revelation. Here Peter stated that God's program was reaching out to the world through the church.

There is considerable debate about Peter's words that God accepts men from every nation who fear Him and do what is right. This does not teach salvation by works because a person's first responsibility before God is to fear Him, which is tantamount to trusting Him and reverencing Him. It is the New Testament parallel to Micah 6:8. Furthermore, God's acceptance of such people refers to His welcoming them to a right relationship by faith in Christ (cf. Acts 11:14).

10:36-37. Peter then outlined the career of Christ (vv. 36-43), the sovereign Lord of all, through whom God sent . . . the good news of peace. Bible students have often observed how this parallels the Gospel of Mark almost perfectly. Mark began with John's baptism and traced the ministry of the Lord Jesus from Galilee to Judea to Jerusalem and finally to the Crucifixion, Resurrection, and the Great Commission.

10:38. The word Messiah means "Anointed One"; so when Peter said, God anointed Jesus of Nazareth he was saying, "God declared Him the Messiah" (cf. Isa. 61:1-3; Luke 4:16-21; Acts 4:27). This declaration occurred at the Lord's baptism (cf. Matt. 3:16-17; Mark 1:9-11; Luke 3:21-22; John 1:32-34). Isaiah spoke of the Anointed One performing great deeds (Isa. 61:1-3), and as Peter declared, He went around doing good and healing all who were under the power of the devil.

10:39-41. Peter affirmed that he and his associates were personal eyewitnesses of all Jesus did. They, that is, the Jews . . . killed Him by hanging Him on a tree, an ignominious form of execution. Earlier Peter had told Jews in Jerusalem, "You killed the Author of life" (3:15); to the rulers he said, "You crucified" Him (4:10); and to the Sanhedrin he replied, "You killed" Him "by hanging Him on a tree" (5:30). And Stephen too told the Sanhedrin, "You . . . have murdered Him" (7:52). On five occasions in Acts, the apostles said they were witnesses of the resurrected Christ (2:32; 3:15; 5:32; 10:41; 13:30-31). After Christ's resurrection the disciples ate and drank with Him (cf. John 21:13). This was proof that the resurrected Lord Jesus was no bodiless phantom and it explains how Christ was seen (Acts 10:40).

10:42-43. Peter made it clear that Christ's ministry results either in judgment (v. 42) or salvation (v. 43). The key phrase is, Everyone who believes in Him. This Greek construction consists of a present participle with an article, which is almost the equivalent of a noun (in this case "every believer in Him"). The key element in salvation is faith, belief in Christ. This message of forgiveness of sins (cf. 2:38; 5:31; 13:38; 26:18) through faith in the Messiah was spoken of by the prophets (e.g., Isa. 53:11; Jer. 31:34; Ezek. 36:25-26).

(5) The vindication by the Spirit (10:44-48). 10:44-45. Peter's message was rapidly concluded by the sovereign interruption of the Holy Spirit who came on all those who heard Peter's message about Jesus and believed. The six (cf. v. 23; 11:12) circumcised believers . . . were astonished (exestēsan; "they were beside themselves"; cf. 9:21) at this evidence of equality of Gentiles with Jewish believers.

10:46. The sign which God used to validate the reality of Gentile salvation was speaking in tongues. (For the significance of tongues-speaking in Acts, see the comments on 19:1-7.)

10:47-48. Peter quickly discerned at least three theological implications of what had happened: (1) He could not argue with God (11:17). (2) Cornelius and his household, though uncircumcised (11:3), were baptized because they had believed in Christ, as evidenced by their receiving the Holy Spirit. The order of these events was believing in Christ, receiving the Holy Spirit, speaking in tongues, and being baptized in water. (3) The reality of Cornelius' conversion was confirmed by Peter's staying with him several days, probably to instruct him more fully in his newfound faith.

2. THE PREPARATION OF THE APOSTLES FOR A UNIVERSAL GOSPEL (11:1-18)

a. The accusation (11:1-3)

11:1-2. The response on the part of Jewish Christians was mixed. The expression circumcised believers (also used in 10:45) evidently describes Christians who still held to the Law of Moses (cf. 15:5; 21:20; Gal. 2:12).

11:3. The accusation lodged against Peter was that he went into the house of uncircumcised men and ate with them. The primary problem was not his preaching to Gentiles but his eating with them (cf. Mark 2:16; Luke 15:2; Gal. 2:12). This gives even greater significance to Peter's vision (Acts 10:9-16). Eating with someone was a mark of acceptance and fellowship (cf. 1 Cor. 5:11). This problem could have caused a serious break in the church.

b. The answer (11:4-17)

11:4-14. Peter recounted to the circumcised believers in Jerusalem briefly what had occurred (cf. chap. 10), including his vision (11:5-7), his response to it (vv. 8-10), and the trip to Cornelius' house (vv. 11-14).

11:15-16. In recounting what happened next, Peter made an important identification of the day of Pentecost with the Lord's prediction of Spirit baptism (1:4-5). Luke did not state specifically in chapter 2 that Pentecost was that fulfillment, but Peter here pointedly said so by the phrase at the beginning (cf. 10:47, "just as we have," and 11:17, "the same gift as He gave us"). The Church Age, then, began on the day of Pentecost.

11:17. Peter's defense did not rest on what he himself did, but on what God did. God had made no distinction between Jew and Gentile, so how could Peter?

c. The acquittal (11:18)

11:18. With Peter the saints recognized that the conversion of Gentiles was initiated by God and that they should not stand in His way. This response had two ensuing and significant results. First, it preserved the unity of the body of Christ, the church. Second, it drove a huge wedge between Church-Age believers and temple-worshipers in Jerusalem. Before this the common Jewish people looked on Christians with favor (cf. 2:47; 5:13, 26), but soon thereafter the Jews opposed the church. This antagonism is attested by Israel's response to the execution of James (12:2-3; cf. 12:11). Perhaps this concourse with Gentiles was a starting point of the Jewish opposition.

3. THE PREPARATION OF THE CHURCH AT ANTIOCH FOR A UNIVERSAL GOSPEL (11:19-30)

a. The cosmopolitan nature of the church (11:19-21)

This is a crucial hinge in the Acts account. For the first time the church actively proselytized Gentiles. The Samaritans of chapter 8 were partly Jewish; the Ethiopian eunuch on his own was reading Isaiah 53 on his return from Jerusalem; and even Cornelius took the initiative in seeking the gospel from Peter's lips. But here the church took the first steps to take the message to uncircumcised Greeks.

11:19. The narrative reaches back to Stephen (8:1-2) to point to still another result of his martyrdom. His death had helped move the gospel into Samaria (cf. the similarity between 8:4 and 11:19). Also Stephen's death had incited Saul to persecute the church more vigorously (8:3) and he consequently was converted (9:1–30). Now a third result from Stephen's martyrdom was the spreading of the gospel to Gentile lands (Phoenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch).

11:20. The reference to Antioch in Syria prepares the reader for the importance of this city in the subsequent narrative. This city, one of many bearing the same name, was the third largest in the Roman Empire behind Rome and Alexandria. Located on the Orontes River 15 miles inland, it was known as Antioch on the Orontes. Beautifully situated and carefully planned, it was a commercial center and the home of a large Jewish community. In spite of the fact that it was a vile city, with gross immorality and ritual prostitution as part of its temple worship, the church at Antioch was destined to become the base of operations for Paul's missionary journeys. The Roman satirist, Juvenal, complained, "The sewage of the Syrian Orontes has for long been discharged into the Tiber." By this he meant that Antioch was so corrupt it was impacting Rome, more than 1,300 miles away.

This amazing step forward for the gospel to the Gentiles (Greeks at Antioch) was accomplished by unnamed helpers of the faith. Nevertheless this was a bold and critical move by these believers from Cyprus, the island not too far from Antioch, and Cyrene, a city in North Africa (cf. Matt. 27:32; Acts 2:10; 6:9; 13:1).

11:21. The clause believed and turned to the Lord does not necessarily refer to two separate actions. The Greek construction (an aorist participle with an aorist finite verb) often indicates that the two actions are simultaneous. This clause, then, means, "in believing, they turned to the Lord."

b. The confirmation of the church (11:22-26)

11:22. Such an important move on the part of the church could not escape the attention of the mother church in Jerusalem. Earlier the Jerusalem apostles sent Peter and John to check up on Philip's ministry in Samaria. Now the Jerusalem saints sent Barnabas all the way to Antioch, over 300 miles north. The selection of that delegate was of crucial importance; and Barnabas was a wise choice for several reasons. First, he, like some of these Christian ambassadors, was from Cyprus (4:36; 11:20). Second, he was a generous man (4:37) and therefore thoughtful of others. Third, he was a gracious gentleman as attested by his nickname (4:36) and Luke's testimony about him (11:24).

11:23. Barnabas could not escape the conclusion that God was genuinely at work in Antioch, and as Luke often noted there was the response of joy. True to his nickname, Son of Encouragement (4:36), he encouraged the believers (cf. 14:22). (Barnabas is also mentioned in 9:27; 11:25, 30; 12:25; 13:1-2, 7, 43, 46, 50; 14:3, 12, 14, 20; 15:2, 12, 22, 25, 35-37, 39; 1 Cor. 9:6; Gal. 2:1, 9, 13; Col. 4:10.)

11:24. Three things were said about Barnabas: he was a good man, he was full of the Holy Spirit, and he was full of faith (Stephen too was full of faith and the Holy Spirit; 6:5). Luke wrote this description of Barnabas after the confrontation between Paul and Barnabas, recorded in 15:39. Since Luke was Paul's traveling companion, this statement about Barnabas must have been Paul's assessment as well.

11:25. The work in Antioch grew to such proportions Barnabas needed aid, and he could think of no one better suited for the work than Saul who was living in Tarsus (cf. 9:30). Possibly some of the sufferings and persecutions Paul described in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27 took place while he was in Tarsus. This may also be where Paul had the revelation described in 2 Corinthians 12:1-4. Based on Acts 22:17-21, some think that Saul was already ministering to Gentiles when Barnabas contacted him to bring him to Antioch.

11:26. Barnabas and Saul ministered a full year in Antioch, teaching great numbers of people. The church was continuing to grow numerically (cf. 2:41, 47; 4:4; 5:14; 6:1; 9:31; 11:21, 24).

Jesus' disciples were first called Christians at Antioch. The ending "-ian" means "belonging to the party of"; thus "Christians" were those of Jesus' party. The word "Christians" is used only two other times in the New Testament: in 26:28 and 1 Peter 4:16. The significance of the name, emphasized by the word order in the Greek text, is that people recognized Christians as a distinct group. The church was more and more being separated from Judaism.

c. The charity of the church (11:27-30)

11:27. Believers from Jerusalem with the gift of prophecy came down from Jerusalem to Antioch. (Though going north, they went "down" because Jerusalem is on a much higher elevation than Antioch.)

11:28. Agabus, also mentioned again in 21:10-11, prophesied that a severe famine would spread over the entire Roman world. This was actually a series of severe famines that struck various sections of the Roman Empire during the reign of Emperor Claudius (A.D. 41–54.) This same Claudius later expelled Jews from Rome (18:2). (See the list of Roman emperors at Luke 2:1.)

11:29-30. The Christians at Antioch, each according to his ability (cf. 1 Cor. 16:2; 2 Cor. 9:7), sent money to the believers in Judea. This expression of love undoubtedly bound the two churches together (cf. Rom. 15:27).

When Barnabas and Saul brought the gift to Judea, they gave the gift to the elders. This is the first mention of church elders in Acts and significantly they received finances. Evidently they had ultimate oversight over all aspects of the ministry. Later Paul and his companions presented the offering of the churches of Achaia, Macedonia, and Asia Minor to the elders of the Jerusalem church. This may have happened when Paul arrived in Jerusalem (Acts 21:18; though this verse doesn't refer to offering money).

Though there is some question about it, this famine visit in 11:27-30 is probably the same one referred to in Galatians 2:1-10.

4. THE PERSECUTION OF THE CHURCH AT JERUSALEM (12:1-24)

The purpose of this section of Acts is to confirm Israel's rejection of the Messiah. Luke has skillfully woven this theme throughout the entire book and it can be seen up to this point in 4:1-30 (esp. 4:29); 5:17-40; 6:11–8:3; 9:1-2, 29. This animosity of Israel set the stage for the first missionary journey.

a. The martyrdom of James (12:1-2)

12:1-2. Artfully, Luke contrasted the love of the church at Antioch for the saints at Jerusalem with the coldhearted enmity of Herod and the Jews for the church.

The Herod mentioned here is Agrippa I, a ruler popular with the Jews for he was partly Jewish, being of Hasmonean descent. His kingdom covered basically the same area as that of his grandfather Herod the Great. He was known for doing everything possible to curry the favor of the Jews, so he found it politically expedient to arrest Christians and to execute James, the brother of John. Herod Agrippa I died in A.D. 44. His son, Herod Agrippa II, was king of Judea from A.D. 50–70. Paul was on trial before Agrippa II and his sister Bernice (25:13–26:32). (See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5.)

b. The imprisonment and escape of Peter (12:3-19)

This incident clearly indicates that the church was an identifiable group which had become hated and despised by the Jews.

12:3-4. The execution of James pleased the Jews so Herod apprehended and incarcerated Peter . . . during the Feast of Unleavened Bread. This seven-day spring feast followed immediately after the Passover. Herod intended to bring out Peter for public trial after the Passover. The "Passover" here referred to the combined eight-day festival, the Passover itself followed by the seven days of unleavened bread. For at least two reasons Herod would find it expedient to execute Peter. First, Peter was known as the leader of the church, and second, he had fraternized with Gentiles.

Herod made certain that Peter's imprisonment was secure by handing him over to be guarded by four squads of four soldiers each! Probably this means two were chained to Peter, one on each side and two were standing guard outside (cf. vv. 6, 10). The four squads probably were each on guard for six hours each. Evidently the authorities remembered Peter's earlier escape (cf. 5:19-24) and Herod did not want that to happen again.

12:5. So Peter was kept in prison, but the church was earnestly praying to God for him. The contrast is obvious: Peter was bound, but prayer was loosed!

12:6. Peter was so trusting the Lord that he was sound asleep the night before his trial (cf. 1 Peter 2:23; 5:7). He did not fear for his life because Christ had said he would live to an old age (John 21:18).

12:7-10. This is the second time an angel helped Peter escape (cf. 5:17-20). Awakening Peter, the angel told him to get dressed and follow him out of the prison. Supernaturally God caused the chains to fall off his wrists, kept the guards asleep, and opened the iron gate.

12:11. One of the subthemes of Acts is the outreach of the gospel in spite of opposition. This is seen in Peter's release. When Peter came to himself, braced by the night air, he acknowledged God's deliverance for him from Herod and the Jews. He now knew this was no vision (v. 9).

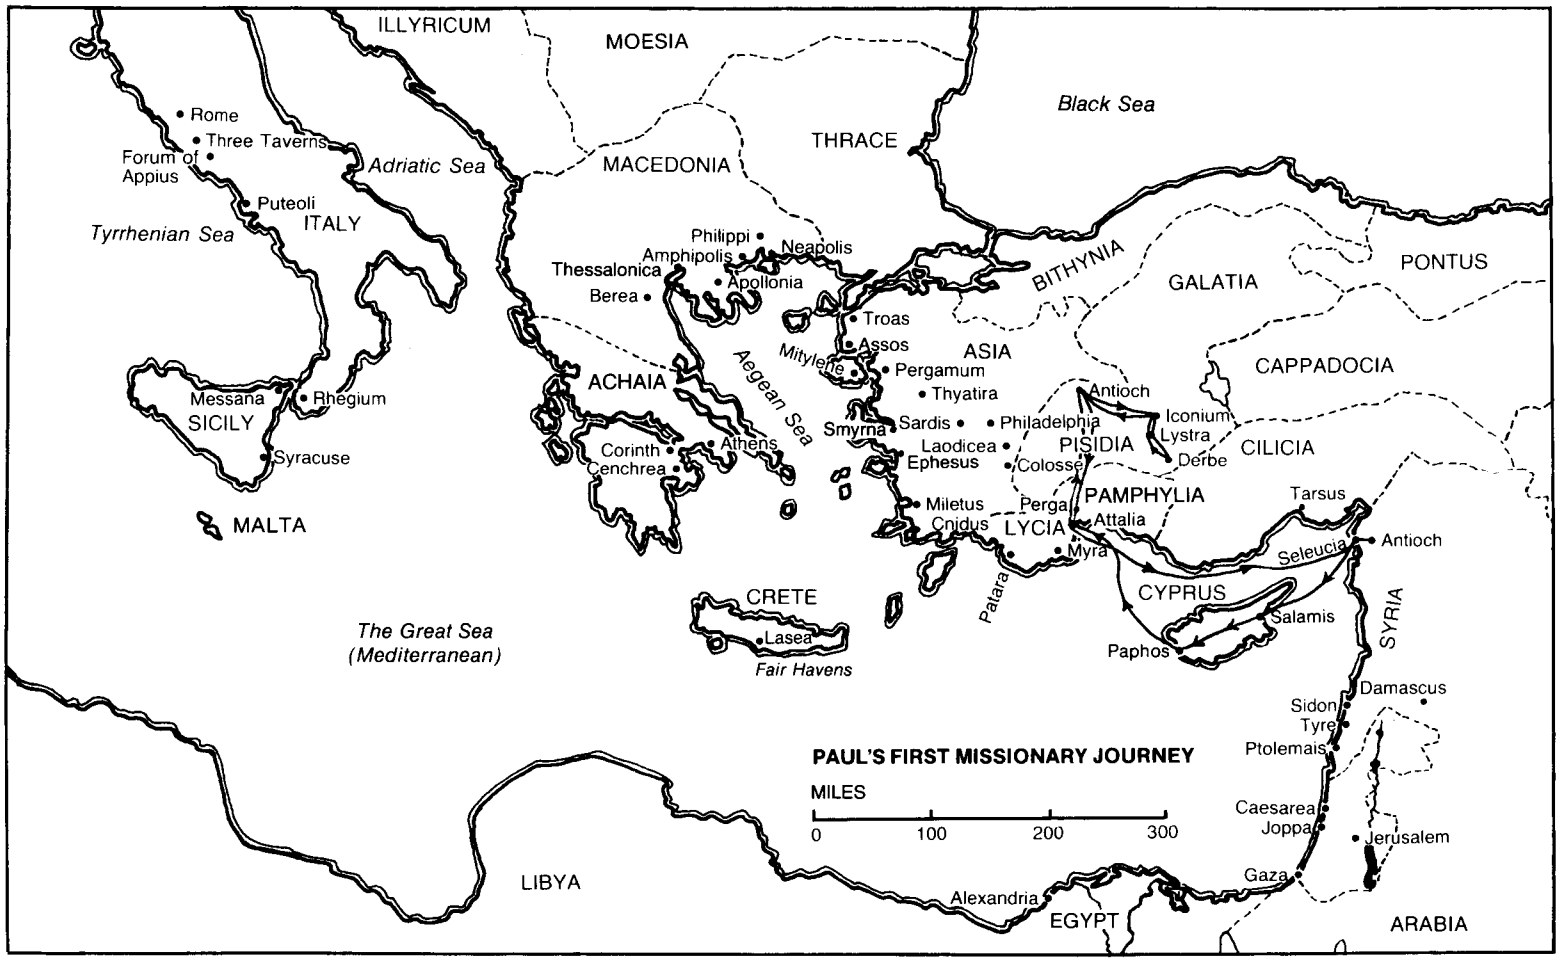
12:12. This verse introduces the reader to John Mark who figures prominently in Paul's first missionary journey. Evidently his mother Mary was a woman of prominence and means. Probably her house was a principal meeting place of the church, so it must have been spacious. Because John Mark's father is not named, Mary may have been a widow. This same Mark is considered to be the writer of the Gospel bearing his name (cf. Mark 14:51-52; 1 Peter 5:13).

12:13-17. The story of Peter's unsuspected arrival at John Mark's home is filled with humor and human interest. Joy in the Book of Acts is also evident here in the servant girl . . . Rhoda who answered Peter's knock and recognized his voice. Though the saints were praying earnestly (v. 5) for Peter's release, they did not expect an answer so soon! When Rhoda insisted, Peter is at the door! they replied, You're out of your mind. It must be his angel. This statement implies a belief in personal angels, that is, angels who are assigned to individuals (cf. Dan. 10:21; Matt. 18:10). It also suggests a belief that an angel may look like the person with whom he is identified!

When they saw Peter, they were astonished (exestēsan; cf. 9:21). Peter's mention of James indicates that James had a place of prominence in the Jerusalem church. Quite clearly this James was the Lord's half brother.

After making himself known to the brothers, Peter left for another place. Where this was is not known. It is possible, because of 1 Peter 1:1, to say he went to Asia Minor. Later Peter was at Antioch of Syria (Gal. 2:11). Paul referred to Peter's itinerant ministry (1 Cor. 1:12; 9:5).

12:18-19. After an investigation of Peter's escape, Herod . . . cross-examined the guards and ruthlessly ordered their executions. Herod no doubt justified such harshness by reasoning that guards whose prisoners escape are irresponsible and unreliable. Yet Herod lost 16 guards by his actions (cf. v. 4). Herod then left Judea to stay for a while in Caesarea, the capital of the Roman province of Judea, from which Roman governors governed the nation.



c. The death of Herod Agrippa I (12:20-23)

12:20-23. Tyre and Sidon were in Herod's dominion and for some reason had incurred his wrath. Because these cities depended on Galilee for grain, they desired to make peace with Herod Agrippa. Probably they bribed Blastus, a trusted personal servant of the king, to work out a reconciliation. On the appointed day when Herod was delivering a speech, the people honored him as a god, and the Lord God judged him with death. This was in A.D. 44. This account parallels that given by Josephus in his Antiquities of the Jews (19. 8. 2). After Herod's death, Felix and Festus, successively, were the governors of Judea.

Three of Herod's children figure prominently in the later narrative of Acts—Drusilla, the wife of Felix (24:24-26); Bernice (25:13, 23), and Herod Agrippa II (25:13–26:32).

d. The prosperity of the church (12:24)

12:24. But the Word of God continued to increase and spread (cf. similar wording in 6:7; 13:49; 19:20). In spite of opposition and persecution the Lord sovereignly prospered the work of His church. With this progress report Luke brought another section of his work to a conclusion (cf. 2:47; 6:7; 9:31; 12:24; 16:5; 19:20; 28:30-31). From Antioch the gospel message was now ready to go to Asia Minor.

B. The extension of the church in Asia Minor (12:25–16:5)

1. THE CALL AND DEDICATION OF BARNABAS AND SAUL (12:25–13:3)

12:25. After depositing the famine relief money with the elders at Jerusalem (11:27-30), Barnabas and Saul returned to Antioch. They took with them John . . . Mark (cf. 13:5), a cousin of Barnabas (Col. 4:10) from Jerusalem (Acts 12:12).

[First missionary journey, chaps. 13–14]

13:1. The church at Antioch now became the base of operation for Saul's ministry. Jerusalem was still the mother church, but the missionary church was Antioch on the Orontes River. Furthermore, Peter was no longer the central figure; Saul became that.

The diversity in the backgrounds of the leaders of the church at Antioch shows the cosmopolitan nature of the church. Barnabas was a Jew from Cyprus (4:36). Simeon was also a Jew, but his Latin nickname Niger not only indicates he was of dark complexion but also that he moved in Roman circles. He could be the Simon of Cyrene who carried Christ's cross (Matt. 27:32; Mark 15:21), but this is highly debatable. Lucius was from Cyrene in North Africa (cf. Acts 11:20). Manaen had high contacts for he had been reared with Herod the tetrarch, actually Herod Antipas, who beheaded John the Baptist and who treated the Lord so shamefully at His trial (see the chart on the Herod family at Luke 1:5). One in that court (Manaen) became a disciple; the other (Herod) an antagonist! At the end of the list, for he was last on this scene, was Saul, a Jew trained in Rabbinical schools. Despite their variegated backgrounds, these men functioned as one.

Perhaps the name of Barnabas appears first in the list because as the delegate from the mother church in Jerusalem he held the priority position.

13:2. Evidently God made His will known by means of the "prophets" in the church (cf. v. 1). Frequently in Acts the Holy Spirit gave directives to God's leaders (e.g., 8:29; 10:19; 13:4). Here He directed the five, while they were worshiping . . . and fasting, to set apart for Him Barnabas and Saul. Once again the principle of two men working together is underscored. The verb "set apart" (aphorizō) is used of three separations in Saul's life—at his birth he was separated to God (Gal. 1:15); at his conversion he was set apart for the gospel (Rom. 1:1); and in Antioch he was separated for a specific service (Acts 13:2).

13:3. The church leaders placed their hands on Barnabas and Saul and sent them off. The laying on of hands identified the church with their ministry and acknowledged God's direction for them (cf. Ananias' identifying himself with Saul by laying hands on him, 9:17). Two of the choicest were sent on this significant mission.

2. THE CIRCUIT IN ASIA MINOR (13:4–14:28)

a. At Cyprus (13:4-12)

13:4. Directed by the Holy Spirit (cf. v. 2) they first went down to Seleucia, a seaport 16 miles from Antioch, and sailed from there to Cyprus. This island, known in the Old Testament as Kittim (Gen. 10:4), was the homeland of Barnabas (Acts 4:36). This implies Barnabas was the leader of the party (cf. the order of names in 13:2, 7).

13:5. Salamis was the largest city in the eastern half of Cyprus. Evidently a large number of Jews resided there, for Barnabas and Saul proclaimed God's Word . . . in the . . . synagogues, not "a" synagogue.

There was wisdom in going to these religious centers: (1) It gave priority in that generation to the Jews receiving the gospel first (cf. Rom. 1:16; Acts 13:46; 17:2; 18:4, 19; 19:8). (2) Gentiles in the synagogues would be a fruitful field for sowing the gospel because they would already be acquainted with the Old Testament and its anticipation of the Messiah.

John Mark, a cousin of Barnabas (Col. 4:10), was with them as their helper (cf. Acts 12:25). What is meant by the term "helper" (hypēretēn) is debated. Probably he instructed new converts, assisted in baptisms (cf. 1 Cor. 1:14-17), and helped in any way he could.

13:6. The results of the ministry in Salamis are unstated. Paphos, 100 miles southwest of Salamis and the seat of the provincial government, was their next point of ministry. What took place here is of great significance in the progression of the gospel to Gentiles.

At Paphos, Barnabas and Saul met a Jewish sorcerer and false prophet named Bar-Jesus. The word "sorcerer" (magos) could describe a counselor or honorable gentleman (e.g., the "Magi" in Matt. 2:1, 7, 16) or it could refer to a fraudulent wizard, as here. It is related to the verb "practice sorcery" (mageuō) used of Simon (Acts 8:9).

13:7. It so happened that Bar-Jesus was an attendant of the proconsul, Sergius Paulus. This sorcerer was greatly threatened by the intelligent proconsul's interest in the gospel. Proconsuls were governors appointed by the Roman senate; procurators, on the other hand, were appointed by the emperor. Three Judea procurators are mentioned in the New Testament: Pontius Pilate (A.D. 26–36), Antonius Felix (A.D. 52–59?), and Porcius Festus (A.D. 59–62).

13:8. The sorcerer . . . tried to turn the proconsul from the faith.

The name Elymas is something of a problem. Probably it is a Semitic word meaning "sorcerer," which was given or taken by him as a nickname.

13:9. At this juncture Saul, now for the first time called Paul, stepped to the fore and assumed leadership. He probably was more aggressive and also knew Gentile minds better than Barnabas. From this point on Paul was the leader and his name preceded Barnabas' name except when they were in Jerusalem (15:12, 25) and in 14:14.

Furthermore, the Roman name Paul was used from here on; the Jewish name Saul was used only when he in his personal testimonies referred to his former life (22:7; 26:14).

13:10. In Aramaic, Bar-Jesus means "Son of Jesus." But Paul told him that instead of being a son of Jesus ("Jesus" means "Yahweh is salvation"), Elymas was a child (huie, lit., "son") of the devil. Paul lashed at him with strong language: Bar-Jesus was an enemy of everything that is right (lit., "righteousness"), he was full of . . . deceit (dolou) and trickery (rhadiourgias, "unscrupulous mischief, work that easily deceives," used only here in the NT) and perverting the right ways of the Lord. Sorcery, exercising power by the help and control of demons, had led him into all kinds of deception of others and distortion of the truth. The occult is indeed dangerous.

This is the second of four incidents of conflict with and victory over demonic powers in the Book of Acts (cf. 8:9-23; 16:16-18; 19:13-17).

13:11-12. In judgment Paul inflicted a temporary blindness on Elymas. This is the first of Paul's recorded miracles and it was performed in conflict with a Jew over giving the gospel to a Gentile.

Seeing this miracle, Sergius Paulus' interest in the Word of God (v. 7) blossomed into genuine faith in Christ. Interestingly the Greek names of this proconsul and of the apostle were the same: Paulus.

This incident is significant for three reasons: (1) It marks the beginning of Paul's leadership in this journey; verse 13 refers to "Paul and his companions." (2) From this point on the ministry took on an even more decidedly Gentile slant. (3) It is filled with figurative nuances. A Gentile with the name Paul accepted the message while a Jew opposed it. The Jews' blindness pictured the judicial blinding of Israel (cf. 28:26-27). Luke by this means emphasized the transitional nature of the Book of Acts. On one hand Gentiles became the primary object of the gospel, and on the other God temporarily turned from the Jews and thus judged them.

b. At Pisidian Antioch (13:13-52)

(1) The defection of John Mark.

13:13. Barnabas' greatness is displayed by his willingness to let Paul be the leader. So Paul and his companions sailed to Perga in Pamphylia. But John (i.e., John Mark) left them and returned to Jerusalem. What caused Mark to desert is open to speculation: (1) Perhaps he was disillusioned with the change in leadership. After all, Barnabas, the original leader, was John Mark's cousin. (2) The new emphasis on Gentiles may have been too much of an adjustment for a Palestinian Jew like Mark. (3) Possibly he was afraid of the dangerous road over the Taurus Mountains to Antioch which Paul was determined to travel. (4) There is some evidence Paul became quite ill in Perga, possibly with malaria, as the city of Perga was subject to malarial infections.

Furthermore, Paul preached to the people of Galatia "because of an illness" (Gal. 4:13). The missionary party may have gone inland to higher ground to avoid the ravages of malaria and Mark in discouragement over this may have returned home. (5) Some think Mark was homesick. His mother may have been a widow (Acts 12:12); perhaps Mark became lonesome for her and home. Whatever the reason, Paul considered it a defection and a fault (cf. 15:38).

(2) The discourse on the first Sabbath (13:14-41). 13:14. This Antioch was actually in Phrygia but was known as Pisidian Antioch because it was so near Pisidia. Like other cities—such as Lystra, Troas, Philippi, and Corinth—Antioch was a Roman colony. Paul visited these cities because they were located at strategic points.

13:15. The first opportunity for Paul and Barnabas to preach came in the synagogue. In the Sabbath service it was customary to read two portions of the Old Testament—one from the Law (the Pentateuch) and one from the Prophets. "The Law and the Prophets" means the entire Old Testament (cf. Matt. 5:17; 7:12; 11:13; 22:40; Luke 16:16; Acts 24:14; 28:23; Rom. 3:21). Evidently Paul and Barnabas had made themselves known to the rulers of the synagogue before the meeting. After the Scripture reading they were invited to share a message of encouragement for the people.

13:16-25. Paul seized the opportunity to present the fulfillments of Old Testament expectations of the Messiah in Jesus. Luke recorded a number of "sample sermons" of Paul in Acts (cf. 14:15-17; 17:22-31; 20:18-35). This, the first recorded discourse of Paul and the most completely preserved, illustrated how Paul preached to an audience grounded in the Old Testament.

The message may be divided into three parts by the three occurrences of direct address (13:16, 26, 38) and outlined as follows: (1) the anticipation of and preparation for the coming of the Messiah (vv. 16-25), (2) the rejection, crucifixion, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus (vv. 26-37), and (3) the application and appeal (vv. 38-41).

The apostle began with the vocatives, Men of Israel and you Gentiles who worship God (v. 16). This address embraced both Jews and Gentiles. Probably the Gentiles were not full-fledged converts to Judaism. And yet, though they revered the Yahweh of Israel (cf. vv. 26, 43), they did not have New Testament salvation. (The phrase trans. "devout converts to Judaism" in v. 43 should be trans. "worshipers." It refers to pagan worshipers but not full-fledged proselytes to Judaism. In Acts the phrase is used in almost a technical sense.)

In surveying the history of Israel, Paul mentioned the key events and people: the stay in Egypt (v. 17), the Exodus (v. 17), the 40-year wilderness sojourn (v. 18), the Conquest and possession of Palestine (v. 19; the seven nations in Canaan which God overthrew are listed in Deut. 7:1), the period of the Judges (Acts 13:20), and the monarchy under Saul and David (vv. 21-22). Mention of David made an easy transition to refer to the Savior Jesus (v. 23) and to His harbinger John the Baptist (vv. 24-25). (Cf. Stephen's message in 7:2-47.) The 450 years (13:20) includes the oppression in Egypt (400 years), the wilderness sojourn (40 years), and the Conquest of Canaan under Joshua (10 years).

13:26-37. Paul, like Peter (2:23, 36; 3:15; 4:10; 5:30; 10:39) and Stephen (7:52), directly blamed the Jews for killing Jesus. His resurrection, frequently spoken of by His followers in Acts, was witnessed for many days. This is the fifth time in Acts that the apostles stated that they were witnesses of the resurrection of Jesus Christ (2:32; 3:15; 5:32; 10:39-41; 13:30-31).

Do the words by raising up Jesus (v. 33) refer to His resurrection or to His exaltation? It probably refers to the latter for several reasons: (1) When the Resurrection is mentioned in the next verse it is explained as being from the dead. (2) The same verb "raise up" (anistēmi) is used in the sense of elevation in 3:22, 26; 7:37 ("send," NIV). (3) A synonym (egeirō) is used in 13:22 to refer to David's promotion to kingship. (4) The primary reason for taking it to refer to Jesus' exaltation is the meaning of Psalm 2:7. This Old Testament passage, quoted by Paul (Acts 13:33), described the anointing of the King, which will find its ultimate fulfillment in the Millennium.

Paul confirmed the fact of Jesus' resurrection from the dead by quoting from Isaiah 55:3 and Psalm 16:10 (Acts 13:34-35). Earlier Peter had argued similarly from Psalm 16:10 (see comments on Acts 2:25-32).

13:38-39. Forgiveness of sins was mentioned frequently by the apostles in Acts (cf. 2:38; 5:31; 26:18). Acts 13:39 gives the thesis of Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, which was probably written shortly after his first missionary journey and before the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15). (See the chart "Paul's Epistles, Written on His Journeys and during His Imprisonments.")

13:40-41. Habakkuk 1:5, quoted in Acts 13:41, is an appropriate warning against impending judgment. Judah, the prophet had said, would fall to Babylon (Hab. 1:6), which would be God's doings. Here Paul left unnamed the source of the judgment on the unbelieving Jews in his day. Paul's warning: believe or be judged.

(3) The disputation on the second Sabbath (13:42-52). 13:42-43. The leaders were interested in Paul's message and desired to hear more. Some were disposed to accept the gospel; Paul and Barnabas . . . urged them to continue in the grace of God.

13:44-45. On the next Sabbath . . . the Jews (i.e., Jewish leaders), moved by jealousy . . . talked abusively against what Paul was saying ("abusively" renders the Gr. participle blasphēmountes).

13:46. To combat this Jewish opposition Paul and Barnabas answered them boldly, We had to speak the Word of God to you first. Apostolic preaching was noted for its boldness (cf. comments on 4:13).

It was necessary that the apostles go to the Jews first for a number of reasons. First, the coming of the earthly kingdom depended on Israel's response to the coming of Christ (cf. Matt. 23:39; Rom. 11:26). Second, only after Israel rejected the gospel could Paul devote himself to the Gentiles. Third, the message of Jesus is fundamentally Jewish in that the Old Testament, the Messiah, and the promises are all Jewish. (On "the Jew first," cf. Acts 3:26; Rom. 1:16.)

So Paul turned to the Gentiles in Antioch. This pattern was repeated in city after city until Paul reached Rome (cf. Acts 13:50-51; 14:2-6; 17:5, 13-15; 18:6; 19:8-9). There for the final time in the book the Apostle Paul turned from Jews to Gentiles (28:23-28).

13:47. In thus turning to the Gentiles Paul and Barnabas saw an outworking of the prophecy of Isaiah 49:6, I have made you a light to the Gentiles. This Old Testament passage has at least three applications—to Israel (Isa. 49:3), to Christ (Luke 2:29-32), and to Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles.

13:48. The Gentiles rejoiced in this turn of events and all who were appointed for eternal life believed. It is difficult to miss the doctrine of God's election here; the words "were appointed" come from the verb tassō, a military word meaning "to arrange" or "to assign." Luke used it here to show that God's elective decree included Gentiles.

13:49-51. The good news was shared so that the Word of the Lord spread through the whole region (cf. 6:7; 12:24; 19:20). But the Jews had contacts in high places and used these to stir up persecution against Paul and Barnabas, who in conformity with the Lord's instruction (Matt. 10:14) shook the dust from their feet in protest and left the city.

13:52. Joy was again a fruit of the gospel (cf. v. 48; 2:46). In addition they were filled . . . with the Holy Spirit (cf. 2:4).

c. At Iconium (14:1-6)

14:1-2. This paragraph (vv. 1-6) confirms the events which occurred in Pisidian Antioch. The Spirit of God was clearly prospering the apostles' ministry, as evidenced by their preaching so effectively that a great number of Jews and Gentiles believed. But again there was opposition (cf. growth and opposition in 13:49-50). The result of that opposition is seen in 14:6.

14:3. The NIV renders the connective oun (normally trans. "therefore") with the word So. This conjunction is a bit of a problem. It may suggest that the time in which the opposition arose (v. 2) provided further opportunity for preaching. Or it may indicate that the opposition was an evidence of God's working in the hearts of the people (cf. 1 Cor. 16:8-9), thus leading to further preaching. Probably the latter is to be preferred.

Again apostolic boldness is evident (cf. Acts 4:13; 13:46).

The reference to miraculous signs and wonders was further confirmation of God's endorsement of this ministry (cf. 2:43; 4:30; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6, 13; 15:12). Later Paul referred to these miracles to validate the reality of the gospel among the Galatians (Gal. 3:5). This, of course, assumes the South Galatian view of the term "Galatia" in that epistle. (See the Introduction to Gal. for a discussion of the South and North Galatian views.) On the confirming nature of miracles, see comments on 2 Corinthians 12:12 and Hebrews 2:3-4.

14:4. The apostolic band was referred to as apostles. And so they were, for the word means "those sent with authority as representatives of another," and these men had been sent out by the church of Antioch on the Orontes River (13:3) with the church's authority.

14:5-6. When Paul and Barnabas learned of a plot . . . to mistreat . . . and stone them, they fled to . . . Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. Luke's accuracy as a historian has been vindicated here. Though Iconium was also a Lycaonian city its citizens were primarily Phrygian. In location and nature Lystra and Derbe were Lycaonian (cf. "Lycaonian language," v. 11).

d. At Lystra (14:7-20a)

(1) The superstition of the Gentiles (14:7-18). 14:7. Paul and Barnabas did not go to Lystra and Derbe simply to escape persecution; they also went to preach the gospel. The verbal construction they continued to preach the good news emphasizes continuity of action over a period of time.

14:8. Lystra, a Roman colony, was the home of at least one hopeless cripple. The dire circumstances of this man are seen in the repeated idea: crippled in his feet . . . lame from birth . . . had never walked. Apparently there was no Jewish synagogue in Lystra, so God used a different thrust, the healing of this helpless cripple, to bring the gospel to these people. This is the third time in Acts a cripple was healed (3:1-10; 9:33-35).

14:9-10. Paul's healing of this infirm man closely parallels Peter's healing in chapter 3. In each case the cripple was lame from birth (3:2; 14:8); both Peter and Paul gazed at the one to be healed (3:4; 14:9); and both healed men responded by jumping and walking (3:8; 14:10). This shows Paul was equal to Peter in his apostleship (cf. Introduction).

14:11-13. The response of the Lycaonian folk was one of pagan credulity. Because the people spoke in their native language, Paul and Barnabas could not understand what they were saying. Attributing deity to Barnabas and Paul probably can be traced to a legend about Zeus and Hermes visiting an aged Lystrian couple named Philemon and Baucis, who were abundantly rewarded for their hospitality.

Zeus was the chief god and Hermes the messenger equivalent to the Roman gods Jupiter and Mercury, respectively. Why then would Barnabas be referred to as Zeus when Paul was the leader? The answer is that Paul was the spokesman and would therefore be called Hermes and Barnabas, the more retiring of the two, would be seen as Zeus, the dignified, behind-the-scenes god.

In one spontaneous movement the priest of Zeus . . . brought bulls and wreaths to the city gates so the people could offer sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas. The wreaths were woolen garlands placed on the sacrificial animals.

14:14. When the two apostles discerned what was happening, they were horrified. Their tearing of clothes was a way of showing strong aversion to blasphemy. Usually rips were made four or five inches into the neckline of the garment.

14:15-18. This message, evidently preached by both apostles (pl. verb in the Gr.) is another sample sermon. It illustrates how these early preachers approached superstitious heathen. By contrast, the first of Paul's messages demonstrated how he preached to those well acquainted with the Old Testament (cf. 13:16-41).

After disclaiming their own deity, they urged their hearers to turn from their cultic gods to the one true and living God. This God, Creator of all, is therefore supreme over all (cf. 17:24; Rom. 1:19-20). He is recognizable not only from His creating rain and crops but also by His beneficial providence in giving food and joy.

Some interpret Acts 14:16 to mean that God will not judge the heathen who lived before the Apostolic Age. However, verse 16 must be taken with verse 17. Up to the time of the church, God gave no direct revelation to the nations (i.e., Gentiles) so they were responsible only for their reactions to the general revelation discernible in Creation (cf. comments on 17:27, 30 and Rom. 1:18-20).

(2) The stoning of Paul. 14:19-20a. Once again some Jews proved to be enemies of the gospel of grace, and turned the crowd, which had just tried to make Paul and Barnabas gods, against them so they stoned Paul. This is the second of five times a crowd was incited because of Paul's ministry (cf. 13:50; 16:19-22; 17:5-8, 13; 19:25-34). Whether or not Paul was dead is not stated; probably he was unconscious and at death's door (cf. 2 Cor. 12:2-4). At any rate his recovery was so rapid as to be miraculous. The reference to Paul's stoning (2 Cor. 11:25) undoubtedly had this incident in view (cf. 2 Tim. 3:11).

e. At Derbe (14:20b-21a)

14:20b-21a. The apostles' ministry here, in the most remote and easterly of the cities reached in Asia Minor on this journey, was successful. The gospel met no great opposition and a large number of disciples were won over to the Lord Jesus (cf. 20:4).

f. The return to Antioch of Syria (14:21b-28)

14:21b-22. Tarsus, Paul's hometown, was only about 160 miles farther on from Derbe, but the two apostles retraced their steps in Asia Minor in order to confirm the churches so recently established.

By warning and by promise, Paul and Barnabas strengthened (cf. 15:32, 41) and encouraged the believers. Previously Barnabas had encouraged the believers in Antioch of Syria (11:23). The warning consisted of a prediction of many hardships and the promise was the anticipation of entering the kingdom of God. The latter term certainly describes the eschatological reign of Christ on earth.

14:23. The believers were given not only edification but also organization. Paul and Barnabas appointed elders for them in each church. These elders were not novices in the faith (1 Tim. 3:6); they were probably Jews who came out of the synagogues where they had been steeped in the Scriptures. Thus elders from the synagogues became elders in the churches.

14:24-28. When the apostles returned to Antioch (retracing their steps through the provinces of Pisidia and Pamphylia and preaching in Perga; cf. 13:13-14), they gave to the sending church a full report of all that God had done. The clause, how He had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles, is most important: (a) It shows the gospel had gone to Gentiles. (b) It was a "by-faith" message and not by works of the Law. (c) God did it, for He opened the door.

Thus ends the first missionary journey which lasted between one and two years and in which Paul and Barnabas traversed more than 700 miles by land and 500 miles by sea. But more than that, it demolished the wall between Jews and Gentiles (cf. Eph. 2:14-16). The two apostles had been committed by the church at Antioch to God's grace (cf. Acts 15:40) and they saw His grace at work (cf. "grace" in 13:43; 14:3).

Probably Paul wrote the Book of Galatians from Antioch shortly after his first missionary journey and before the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15).

3. THE CONFERENCE AT JERUSALEM (15:1-35)

a. The dissension concerning circumcision (15:1-2)

15:1-2. The men who came down from Judea to Antioch may well be the same ones referred to in Galatians 2:12. They insisted circumcision was essential for justification. Perhaps they based their theology on such passages as Genesis 17:14 and Exodus 12:48-49.

At any rate, they were sure to cause a severe schism in the church, so their teaching brought Paul and Barnabas into sharp dispute and debate with them.

The men from Judea were dogmatic in their doctrine in spite of the fact they had no authority from the church in Jerusalem. How they explained the case of Cornelius (Acts 10) or the work of Barnabas (11:22-24) is left unstated. Perhaps they felt Cornelius' case was unique and the believers in Antioch in chapter 11 were too insignificant to use as examples. Now the movement was becoming overwhelming and this was their way of protesting.

The church at Antioch felt it was wise to discuss the matter with the apostles and elders in Jerusalem. So they commissioned Paul and Barnabas for the task and wisely sent some other believers along as witnesses. These witnesses would protect Paul and Barnabas against being accused of distorting the facts.

b. The discussion concerning circumcision (15:3-12)

15:3-4. As the men in the delegation made their way to Jerusalem they reported the good news of Gentile conversions to the brethren in Phoenicia and Samaria. Once again the response of a believing church was joy! (cf. 2:46) Furthermore, the church in Jerusalem with its leaders welcomed Paul and Barnabas; this was scarcely the response of the antagonists.

15:5. The issue was stated forthrightly by the believing Pharisees. Significantly circumcision also involved keeping the whole Old Testament Law as Paul later wrote (Gal. 5:3). The method of justification ultimately determines the method of sanctification (cf. Col. 2:6).

15:6-9. The apostles and elders met to consider this question. In addition many other believers were present (cf. vv. 12, 22).

The problem was no small one; there was much discussion (zētēseōs, meaning "inquiry, debate, questioning"; trans. "debate" in v. 2; "controversies" in 1 Tim. 6:4; "arguments" in 2 Tim. 2:23 and Titus 3:9). Peter wisely permitted this to continue for a time lest the impression be given that the results were a foregone conclusion. The date of this council is generally taken to be A.D. 49. When Peter referred to God's choice of Cornelius some time ago he was looking back about 10 years (Acts 10:1–11:18). The issue of whether to accept Gentiles was settled then and there. This was evidenced, Peter said, because God gave the Holy Spirit to them (10:44-46) just as He did to the Jews (2:4; 11:15). So God made no distinction between believing Jews and Gentiles. All are accepted by faith.

15:10. Requiring Gentiles to be circumcised to obey the Mosaic Law would have had two results: (a) the Jews would test (peirazete) God (cf. Deut. 6:16) and (b) they would put on the necks of the disciples an unbearable yoke (cf. Matt. 23:4). To "test" God is to see how far one can go with God (cf. Acts 5:9). Putting a yoke on the disciples' necks was an appropriate way to state the second result, for "taking the yoke" was used to describe Gentile proselytes coming into Judaism. It spoke of an obligation.

In discussing the question Peter referred not only to Gentiles but also to all believers coming under the Law. The term "disciples" was used of both Jews and Gentiles.

15:11. The statement, We are saved, just as they are, is amazing. A Jew under the Law would say the opposite and in reverse order ("they are saved as we are"), but one who knew God's grace, as Peter did, would not say that. Salvation for anyone—Jew or Gentile—is by God's grace (v. 11) and is by faith (v. 9; cf. Gal. 2:16; Eph. 2:8).

15:12. Barnabas and Paul, who next addressed the assembly, described the miraculous signs and wonders (sēmeia and terata; cf. 2:43 [see comments there]; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6, 13; 14:3) that God had done among the Gentiles through them. These would especially convince the Jews (cf. 1 Cor. 1:22) so they listened in silence. This response implied they would not argue against the testimonies of Peter, Paul, and Barnabas.

c. The decision concerning circumcision (15:13-29)

15:13-14. James, evidently the head of the church at Jerusalem, then took the floor and issued a summary statement. He was Jesus' half brother and wrote the Epistle of James.

He began by discussing Peter's experience (Acts 10). In referring to Peter as Simon, James used a name which would be logical in its setting in Jerusalem (actually the Gr. has Symeōn, an even more Jewish spelling, used only here and in 2 Peter 1:1 in the NT).

The phrase at first is crucial because it affirmed that Paul and Barnabas were not the first to go to the Gentiles. As Peter had already said (Acts 15:7-11) the question had actually been settled in principle (chaps. 10–11) before Paul and Barnabas went on their first journey.

15:15-18. Quite properly the council desired more than the testimony of experience. They wanted to know how it corresponded with the witness of the Scriptures. This was the ultimate test.

To prove that Gentile salvation apart from circumcision was an Old Testament doctrine, James quoted from Amos 9:11-12. Several problems are involved in this quotation.

One problem involves the text. James here quoted a text similar to the Septuagint (the Gr. OT) that differs from the Hebrew text. The Hebrew of Amos 9:12 may be translated, "That they may possess the remnant of Edom and all the nations who are called by My name." But James used the noun of men (or "of mankind"), not "Edom," and the verb seek, not "possess."

The Hebrew consonants for "Edom" and for "Adam" are identical ('dm). The confusion in the vowels (added much later) is easy to understand. The only distinction in the Hebrew between "possess" (yāraš) and "seek" (dāraš) is in one consonant. The text James used may well represent the original.

Another problem, the major one, involves interpretation. What did Amos mean when he wrote these verses, and how did James use the passage? Several observations need to be noted before the passage is interpreted: (1) James did not say Amos 9:11-12 was fulfilled in the church; he simply asserted that what was happening in the church was in full agreement with the Old Testament prophets. (2) The word "prophets" is plural, implying that the quotation from Amos was representative of what the prophets in general affirmed. (3) James' main point is clear: Gentile salvation apart from the Law does not contradict the Old Testament prophets. (4) The words After this are neither in the Masoretic text nor the Septuagint; both have "in that day." Any interpretation of the passage must consider these factors.

Bible students interpret these verses in one of three ways. Those who hold to amillennial theology say the rebuilt house (skēnēn, "tent") of David is the church which God is using to preach to the Gentiles. While this view at first appears plausible, several factors oppose it. (1) The verb return (anastrepsō) used in Acts 15:16 means an actual return. Luke used it only in 5:22 ("went back") and here (he did not use it in his Gospel); in both occurrences it describes a literal, bodily return. Since God's Son has not yet returned bodily, this rebuilding has not taken place. (2) Christ's present ministry in heaven is not associated with the Davidic throne elsewhere in the New Testament. He is now seated at the right hand of God (Ps. 110:1; Rom. 8:34; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3; 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22). When He returns He will sit on David's throne (2 Sam. 7:16; Ps. 89:4; Matt. 19:28; 25:31). (3) The church was a mystery, a truth not revealed to Old Testament saints (Rom. 16:25; Eph. 3:5-6; Col. 1:24-27); so the church would not be referred to in Amos.

A second view of the passage is commonly held by premillenarians. According to this view there are four chronological movements in this passage: the present Church Age ("taking from the Gentiles a people for Himself," Acts 15:14), the return of Christ to Israel (v. 16a), the establishing of the Davidic kingdom (v. 16b), and the turning of Gentiles to God (v. 17). While this does interpret these verses in a logical fashion, this approach has some difficulties. (1) The quotation begins with the words "After this." Premillenarians assert James used this phrase to suit his interpretation of the passage. But since the quotation begins with "after this" James must be quoting the sense of Amos 9:11. Therefore this phrase looks back, not to Acts 15:14, but to Amos 9:8-10, which describes the Tribulation ("a time of trouble for Jacob," Jer. 30:7). (2) If the temporal phrase "after this" refers to the present Age in Amos 9:11, Amos would then have predicted the church in the Old Testament.

A third view, also premillennial, may be more plausible. James simply asserted that Gentiles will be saved in the Millennium when Christ will return and rebuild David's fallen tent, that is, restore the nation Israel. Amos said nothing about Gentiles needing to be circumcised. Several factors support this interpretation: (1) This fits the purpose of the council. If Gentiles will be saved in the Kingdom Age (the Millennium), why should they become Jewish proselytes by circumcision in the Church Age? (2) This approach suits the meaning of "in that day" in Amos 9:11. After the Tribulation (Amos 9:8-10) God will establish the messianic kingdom (Amos 9:11-12). James (Acts 15:16) interpreted "in that day" to mean that "at the time when" God does one (the Tribulation) He will then do the other. In that sense James could say "After this." (3) This interpretation gives significance to the word "first" in verse 14. Cornelius and his household were among the first Gentiles to become members of Christ's body, the church. Gentile salvation will culminate in great blessing for them in the Millennium (cf. Rom. 11:12). (4) A number of prophets predicted Gentile salvation in the Millennium, as James stated in Acts 15:15 (e.g., Isa. 42:6; 60:3; Mal. 1:11).

15:19-21. As a result of this theological discussion James set forth a practical decision. It was his considered judgment (krinō, lit., "I judge") that the church should not make it difficult (parenochlein, "to annoy"; used only here in the NT) for the Gentiles. This parallels in thought the sentiments of Peter expressed in verse 10. Instead (alla, "but," a strong adversative conjunction) James suggested they draft a letter affirming an ethic which would not offend those steeped in the Old Testament.

The Gentiles were to abstain from three items: (a) food polluted by idols, (b) sexual immorality, and (c) the meat of strangled animals and . . . blood. Many Bible teachers say these are only ceremonial matters. The food polluted by idols is explained in verse 29 as "food sacrificed to idols" (cf. 21:25). This then, it is argued, looks at the same problem Paul discussed (1 Cor. 8–10). The abstinence from sexual immorality is explained as referring to the marriage laws of Leviticus 18:6-20. The prohibition against eating blood is taken to refer to Leviticus 17:10-14. All three prohibitions according to this interpretation look back to the Jewish ceremonial Law.

However, it seems better to take these as moral issues. The reference to food polluted by idols should be taken in the sense of Revelation 2:14, 20. It was a usual practice among Gentiles to use an idol's temple for banquets and celebrations. Paul also condemned the practice of Christians participating in these (1 Cor. 10:14-22). Fornication was such a common sin among the Gentiles that it was an accepted practice. The problem of immorality even persisted among Christians all too often, as is witnessed by the New Testament injunctions against it (cf. 1 Cor. 6:12-18, where Paul was evidently answering arguments in favor of immorality). The third prohibition goes back further than Leviticus 17; it looks back to Genesis 9, where God established the Noahic Covenant, a "contract" still in effect today. There God gave people the privilege of eating flesh but the blood was to be drained from it.

All three prohibitions in Acts 15:20 are best taken in an ethical or moral sense. If this be so, they are still the responsibility of Christians today, even to the point of not eating blood sausage and raw meat. By not attending temple banquets, or being involved in fornication, or eating meat with blood in it, the Gentile Christians would be maintaining high moral standards and would keep from offending their Jewish brothers. There were Jews in every city who would be offended by Christians not following these strictures. These Israelites were well acquainted with these moral issues.

15:22. The whole church (cf. v. 12) was permitted to express itself on this issue. Interestingly two witnesses were delegated to attend Paul and Barnabas for the protection of both sides (v. 2). They would "confirm by word of mouth" what was written (v. 27). No one could claim there were poor communications about this delicate issue.

Silas was one of these two men. This is in keeping with Luke's style of bringing someone on the scene unobtrusively who later becomes a main character (cf. v. 40). These two leaders, also "prophets" (v. 32), may have represented two groups in the Jerusalem church—Judas, probably a brother of Joseph (cf. 1:23), for the Hebrew section; and Silas, a Roman citizen (cf. 16:37), for the Hellenists.

15:23-29. The letter, sent by the apostles and elders, confirmed the findings of the council. The church's admiration for Barnabas and Paul is evidenced by the words our dear friends and their acknowledging that Paul and Barnabas had risked their lives for the name (cf. comments on 3:16) of our Lord Jesus Christ (cf. 13:50; 14:5, 19). Significantly the letter referred to the Holy Spirit as the "Prime Mover" in this discernment of truth.

d. The delegation among the Gentiles (15:30-35)

15:30-35. The contingent from Jerusalem together with Judas and Silas went down to Antioch (Antioch is on a lower elevation than Jerusalem) and delivered the letter. The brothers in Antioch were encouraged by the letter, and also by Judas and Silas, the prophets, who encouraged the church still further and strengthened them by a lengthy message.

The saints in Antioch appreciated the ministry of Judas and Silas and sent them off with blessings. The word peace expressed a desire for well-being in all areas of their lives.

Verse 34 is omitted by several important Greek manuscripts. Perhaps a scribe added it later to explain the choice of Silas (v. 40).

In the following months Paul and Barnabas continued to minister to the saints in Antioch.

4. THE CONFIRMATION OF THE CHURCHES IN ASIA MINOR (15:36–16:5)

[Second missionary journey, 15:36–18:22]

a. The contention between Paul and Barnabas (15:36-41)

15:36-41. Later when Paul proposed to Barnabas a return trip to confirm the churches established on their first journey, Barnabas wanted to take . . . Mark with them. Paul disagreed with this suggestion because Mark had deserted them earlier, in Pamphylia (cf. 13:13). The argument became such a sharp disagreement (paroxysmos, "provoking, stirring up, arousing," the root of the Eng. "paroxysm") that they parted company. The Lord overruled in this dissension for through it two missionary journeys instead of one were formed—one to Cyprus with Barnabas and Mark, and the other to Syria and Cilicia and ultimately Europe with Paul and Silas. Probably both Paul and Barnabas were right in their assessments of Mark. It may have been too soon for Mark to venture out with such a pro-Gentile apostle as Paul, but Barnabas certainly and correctly saw good raw material in his cousin Mark (cf. Col. 4:10; 2 Tim. 4:11; Phile. 24; 1 Peter 5:13). Paul later spoke of Barnabas in positive terms (1 Cor. 9:6; Col. 4:10). The Apostle Paul owed much to Barnabas and it appears they remained friends despite their contention over Mark.

Neither Mark nor Barnabas are seen again in the Book of Acts; the same is true of Peter following the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15).

Paul's choice of Silas, whose Roman name (in Gr.) was Sylvanus (2 Cor. 1:19; 1 Thes. 1:1; 2 Thes. 1:1; 1 Peter 5:12), was a wise one: (1) He was an official representative of the Jerusalem church in taking to Antioch the decree of the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15:22). (2) He was a Roman citizen (16:37). (3) He was a prophet (15:32). (4) The church at Antioch knew him well, so both Paul and Silas were commended by the brothers to the grace of the Lord. (5) Because Silas served as Peter's amanuensis, it may be concluded he was skilled in the Greek language (cf. 1 Peter 5:12). The ministry of Paul and Silas involved their strengthening the churches (cf. Acts 14:22; 15:32).

b. The conscription of Timothy (16:1-5)

16:1-3. Timothy, whose home was Lystra, was of mixed parentage; his mother was Jewish and his father was a Greek. Probably Timothy had been converted under Paul's ministry during the apostle's first visit to Lystra (cf. 1 Tim. 1:2). Some suggest he had been led to the Lord by his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice (2 Tim. 1:5). At any rate, he became Paul's protegé. Because of Timothy's good reputation (Acts 16:2) Paul wanted to take him along on the journey, probably as a helper as Mark had been. There was a problem, however. The Jews to whom Paul would be preaching the gospel would be offended if a man with a Jewish mother was uncircumcised. So Timothy was circumcised. Apparently he had been uncircumcised because of his father's influence.

This appears to contradict Paul's thinking in Galatians 2:3-5 where he refused to let Titus be circumcised. The situations, however, were different. In Galatians 2 the issue was the method of justification; here it was a question of not giving offense (cf. 1 Cor. 9:19-23). The Jerusalem Council, of course, had determined circumcision was not necessary for salvation (Acts 15:10-11, 19). In Acts 16 Paul acted as he did for the sake of the ministry; it was a wise move.

16:4. As they traveled from town to town, they delivered the decisions reached by the Jerusalem Council (15:23-29). Assuming Paul wrote Galatians after the first missionary journey, but before the Jerusalem Council, the report of the decision would be strong confirmation of the gospel which he preached and about which he wrote.

16:5. With another "progress report" (cf. Introduction), Luke brought another section of his book to a close. The word strengthened (estereounto, "being made solid or firm") differs from its synonym epistērizō ("to strengthen"; 14:22; 15:32, 41).

C. The extension of the church in the Aegean area (16:6–19:20)

1. THE CALL TO MACEDONIA (16:6-10)

16:6-7. God's guidance was at first negative. Evidently the missionary party first attempted to go to the western province of Asia whose leading city was Ephesus. So they went throughout the region of Phrygia and Galatia (cf. 18:23). Possibly this should be understood as the Phrygian region of Galatia. They then proceeded north to eastern Mysia and tried to enter Bithynia, but again they were prevented from doing so by the Spirit of Jesus. How these hindrances were accomplished is not stated. It may have been circumstances, a word of prophecy, a vision, or some other phenomenon. At any rate, God planned for people in both Ephesus and Bithynia to hear the gospel at a later time (cf. 18:19-21, 24–19:41; 1 Peter 1:1).

16:8-9. Finally, at Troas, a seaport city on the Aegean Sea near the ancient site of Troy, God gave positive direction by means of a night . . . vision to Paul. Macedonia was a Roman senatorial province, corresponding roughly to northern Greece today.

16:10. The first of the we sections begins here in Acts, indicating that Luke joined the party of Paul, Silas, and Timothy. The how, why, and precise location of Luke's joining the group are left unstated.

2. THE CONFLICTS IN MACEDONIA (16:11–17:15)

a. At Philippi (16:11-40)

(1) The conversion of Lydia (16:11-15). 16:11. The journey from Troas to Samothrace and to Neapolis, the seaport city for Philippi, was a rapid one, implying that the wind was with them (cf. 20:6 where the trip in the opposite direction took five days).

16:12. From Neapolis the missionaries traveled the 10 miles on the Via Egnatia, the Egnatian Road to Philippi, which Luke described as a Roman colony and the leading city of that district of Macedonia. Quite clearly Luke displayed pride in the city he came to love. Some say he grew up and attended medical school there. Philippi, originally named Crenides ("Fountains"), was taken by Philip of Macedon and renamed after him. In 168 B.C. Philippi became a Roman possession. After Mark Antony and Octavian defeated Brutus and Cassius, the assassins of Julius Caesar, near Philippi in 42 B.C., the city was made into a Roman colony. This gave it special privileges (e.g, fewer taxes) but more importantly it became like a "transplanted" Rome (cf. comments on Philippi in the Introduction to Phil.). The primary purpose of colonies was military, for the Roman leaders felt it wise to have Roman citizens and sympathizers settled in strategic locations. So Octavian (who became Caesar Augustus, the first Roman emperor, in 27 B.C.) settled more colonists (primarily former soldiers) at Philippi after his defeat of Antony at Actium, on Greece's west coast, in 31 B.C.

16:13. The Jewish population at Philippi must have been limited, for there was no synagogue there; 10 Jewish males were required for a synagogue. A place of prayer (cf. v. 16), which may have been a place in the open air or a simple building, was located by the Gangites River about a mile and one-half west of town.

To the women . . . gathered there, the missionaries presented the gospel.

16:14. Lydia was a seller of purple cloth. This purple color came from a shellfish, the murex, or from the root of a plant. She was from Thyatira, a city known for its commerce in Asia Minor (cf. comments on Thyatira in Rev. 2:18-29). She was a worshiper of God, a term used for Gentiles (e.g., Cornelius [Acts 10:2] and those in Thessalonica [17:4] and Athens [17:17]) who were not proselytes to Judaism but who did worship Yahweh. Even so, they were not in the New Testament church, the body of Christ. The Lord opened her heart (cf. Luke 24:45) to respond to Paul's message. Again Luke stressed the sovereignty of God in salvation (cf. Acts 13:48).

16:15. Lydia was then baptized, apparently soon after her faith in Christ. The members of her household probably refer to servants as well as to her children, if she was a widow. Other persons in the New Testament who along with their "household" members came to Christ include Cornelius (10:24, 44), the Philippian jailer (16:31), Crispus (18:8), Aristobulus (Rom. 16:10), Narcissus (Rom. 16:11), and Stephanas (1 Cor. 1:16).

That she was a woman of considerable means is evidenced by the size of her house. It would have to be ample enough to house four men as well as her household without embarrassment (cf. Acts 16:40).

(2) The deliverance of the soothsayer. 16:16-18. Some men were exploiting a demon-possessed slave girl for her ability to predict the future. The English words, a spirit by which she predicted the future, translate two Greek words, "a spirit, a python." This concept goes back to the Greek city of Delphi where the god Apollo was believed to be embodied in a python snake. The original priestess at Delphi was purported to be possessed by Apollo and thereby able to predict the future; therefore anyone possessed by the python spirit could foretell coming events. No doubt an actual demon gave such a person predictive powers. Demons took advantage of people's worship of false gods (cf. 17:23; 1 Cor. 10:20).

The girl attached herself to Paul and the others and was shouting (imperf. tense) who they were (servants of the Most High God) and what they preached (the way to be saved). Though her statements were true, the gospel of Christ would be damaged by an association with a demon-possessed slave girl. So after many days . . . Paul exorcised the demon, speaking directly to the spirit. (Other cases of victory over the occult in Acts are recorded in 8:9-24; 13:6-12; 19:13-20.)

(3) The conversion of the jailer (16:19-34). 16:19-21. Each Roman colony was governed by two leaders called douviri in Latin. The term magistrates translates stratēgois, the Greek equivalent for the Latin word.

The charge of the slave girl's owners against Paul and Silas was obviously prejudicial. Shortly before this incident the Emperor Claudius had expelled the Jews from Rome (18:2). Philippi, a Roman colony, would have caught this flavor of anti-Semitism. This also helps explain why Timothy and Luke were not taken before the authorities. Timothy was a half-Gentile (16:1) and Luke was probably a Gentile.

Furthermore, Paul and Silas were accused of disrupting the city . . . by advocating customs unlawful for . . . Romans to accept or practice. Rome permitted the peoples of its colonies to have their own religions but not to proselytize Roman citizens. The civil leaders could not distinguish between Judaism and Christianity (cf. 18:14-15), so they would see the preaching of Paul and Silas as a flagrant infraction of imperial law.

16:22. Impelled by the crowd . . . the magistrates ordered them to be stripped and beaten. The verb translated "beaten" is from rhabdizō, which means "to beat with a rod." This was one of the three beatings Paul referred to in 2 Corinthians 11:25, the only other place where this verb occurs in the New Testament.

16:23-24. Paul and Silas were severely flogged and then thrown into prison. What a reception in the first European city where they preached the gospel! The jailer with his strict orders was not going to take any chances so he put them in the inner cell (possibly a dungeon, at least the most secure cell) and fastened their feet in stocks.

16:25. Paul and Silas singing in the inner prison gives special significance to the theme of joy in Acts (cf. Ps. 42:8; "at night His song is with me"). Their praying and singing was heard not only by God but also by the other prisoners.

16:26. This supernatural deliverance reminds the reader of the parallel experiences of Peter (cf. 5:18-20; 12:3-11). This was certainly an unusual midnight experience in a prison—the earth quaking, the prison shaking, doors flying open . . . chains falling off.

16:27-28. Because the jailer was responsible for any escaped prisoners (cf. 12:19), he drew his sword . . . to kill himself. But Paul, seeing what was about to happen, reassured him that the prisoners had not escaped. Perhaps the other prisoners were so impressed with the God of Paul and Silas that they did not dare flee!

16:29-30. Going into Paul and Silas' cell, the jailer . . . trembling . . . asked, Men, what must I do to be saved? This question was filled with significance. He must have understood what he was asking. Undoubtedly he had heard the story of the slave girl and how she had announced these men to be servants of God with the message of salvation (v. 17). Possibly also the prayers and singing of Paul and Silas (v. 25) had reached his ears. The awesome earthquake with the subsequent opportunity for the prisoners to escape and Paul's reassuring words all moved him to ask for the way of salvation.

16:31-32. Verse 31 is a key passage on the message of faith. All that is needed for justification is faith in the Lord Jesus. The jailer had asked what he should do. The answer was that he need perform no works; he only needed to believe in Jesus who is the Lord.

The words and your household mean those members of his house who were of sufficient age to believe would be saved (cf. v. 34) as they trusted Christ. Each member had to believe to be saved.

16:33. The jailer . . . washed the wounds of Paul and Silas (cf. v. 23)—an amazing thing for a jailer to do for his prisoners. Then by water baptism he and all his family gave testimony to the washing away of their sins.

16:34. The jailer took the former prisoners home and fed them! And his family was joyful. Once again the evidence of the victorious gospel was joy.

(4) The deliverance of Paul and Silas (16:35-40). 16:35-36. Apparently the jailer brought Paul and Silas back to prison. What prompted the magistrates to change their minds is left unstated. Perhaps the earthquake jarred their senses, or maybe on further reflection they realized how unjust they had been.

16:37-40. Paul's demand that the magistrates escort him and Silas out of prison appears to be vindictive. But it probably was designed to spare the young church in Philippi from further harassment. It certainly would place the believers in a far more secure position before the officials.

But why did Paul wait so long to mention his Roman citizenship? Perhaps the uproar at the trial (vv. 19-22) kept him from being heard. Or maybe Paul purposely waited till the most propitious time to give out this information. Born a Roman citizen (22:28), Paul had certain rights, including a public hearing. And no Roman citizen was supposed to be scourged.

In only two places in Acts was Paul harmed or threatened by Gentiles—in Philippi and in Ephesus (19:23-41). In both instances people were losing money in vested interests and in each case Paul was vindicated by a Roman official. After their prison release, Paul and Silas . . . met with the believers at Lydia's house (cf. 16:15).

With Paul's departure the first we section ends, indicating Luke remained on at Philippi (cf. they in 16:40).

b. At Thessalonica (17:1-9)

17:1. The journey from Philippi to Thessalonica was about 100 miles with Amphipolis and Apollonia at approximately 30-mile intervals on the Via Egnatia. Evidently there were no Jewish synagogues in the two towns where Paul did not stop. A synagogue provided an excellent point of contact for the gospel (cf. v. 10) so Paul remained at Thessalonica, modern Saloniki, to preach.

17:2. The reference to three Sabbath days does not mean the missionary band stayed only three weeks in Thessalonica. Paul carried on the work with a Jewish emphasis for three Sabbaths and then turned to Gentiles and ministered to them for some weeks after that. This was the situation for three reasons: (1) The Philippian church sent money to Paul at least twice during this visit (Phil. 4:15-16), implying a longer lapse of time than three weeks. (2) In addition, Paul supported himself by manual labor (1 Thes. 2:9; 2 Thes. 3:7-10). This may indicate that considerable time elapsed before the aid from Philippi arrived. (3) Most of the converts at Thessalonica were not from the synagogue but were Gentiles steeped in idolatry (cf. 1 Thes. 1:9).

17:3-4. Paul and Silas' ministry in presenting the crucified and resurrected Jesus as the Christ (the Messiah) met with response: some . . . Jews, many God-fearing Greeks (cf. 16:14, where the same Greek word is used of Lydia, who is called "a worshiper of God"; cf. the same word in 17:17), and not a few prominent women (cf. v. 12). The gospel message was received by people of various nationalities and social positions.

17:5. Luke evidently included this incident to reemphasize the continued Jewish rejection. Jason probably had provided lodging for Paul and Silas. The Jews were intent on finding Paul and Silas in order to bring them out to the crowd. Thessalonica was a free city which meant it was sovereign in its local affairs and not subject to provincial administration in such matters. Besides local rulers, Thessalonica also had its own local assembly called the dēmos, the word translated "crowd" here (see the NIV marg.; cf. 19:30 ["crowd"], 33 ["people"] where the noun also occurs).

17:6-7. Because the mob could not find Paul and Silas they grabbed Jason and some other believers and accused them before the city officials (politarchas, lit., "city rulers"). In Macedonian cities these magistrates formed the city council. The charge was specifically against Jason (possibly a relative of Paul; cf. Rom. 16:21) for harboring men who had caused trouble all over the world—obviously an exaggeration—and defied Caesar's decrees, saying that there is another King, One called Jesus. This latter accusation is significant for it shows Jews were behind the whole mob scene (cf. Acts 17:5); only they would have known enough about Paul's theology to make such a charge. (Jews also accused Jesus of claiming to be "a king"; Luke 23:2.) Furthermore it reflects Paul's proclamation. As the Thessalonian Epistles indicate, Paul proclaimed that the messianic kingdom will be established at the return of Christ (1 Thes. 3:13; 5:1-11; 2 Thes. 1:5-10; 2:14; cf. Luke 23:2; John 18:33-37).

17:8-9. The crowd and the politarchs were in turmoil (etaraxan, "agitated, disturbed, troubled"; cf. John 11:33; Acts 16:20) probably because they could not find Paul and Silas (17:6), the source of the city's problem. Probably the bond-posting was to guarantee that Paul and Silas would leave town and not return. If more trouble arose, Jason and the others would lose their money. This may explain why Paul was prohibited from returning (1 Thes. 2:18). In spite of this, the Christians at Thessalonica kept on boldly proclaiming the gospel (1 Thes. 1:7-10; cf. 2:14-16).

c. At Berea (17:10-15)

17:10. Under cover of night (cf. Paul's other nighttime escape; 9:25) the brothers sent Paul and Silas away to Berea. Perhaps Timothy accompanied them or he may have joined them at Berea later (cf. 17:14). Berea was about 46 miles southwest of Thessalonica on the eastern slopes of a mountain. Berea was also on the way to Achaia, the province that corresponds to southern Greece today. Sopater was from Berea (20:4). As usual, Paul and Silas went to the . . . synagogue (cf. 17:2, 17; 18:4, 19; 19:8).

17:11-12. The Berean Jews were of more noble character than the Thessalonians. They welcomed Paul's message with great eagerness and examined the Scriptures every day to see if what Paul said was true. This differed from the Jews in Thessalonica only some of whom believed (v. 4), whereas most of them were jealous of Paul and stirred up trouble. The Bereans' interest in the Word resulted in many conversions of both Jews and Greeks. Interestingly prominent . . .women in both Thessalonica and Berea received Christ (vv. 4, 12).

17:13-14. Once again Jewish unbelievers (from Thessalonica) forced the expulsion of Paul. Stirring is from the same Greek word used in verse 8 to speak of being "in turmoil." Silas and Timothy remained at Berea to help establish the fledgling church, while Paul went on south.

17:15. Whether Paul went to Athens by boat or by land is not known. In either case some brothers accompanied Paul to guarantee his safe arrival. Paul told the friends to instruct Silas and Timothy to join him in Athens as soon as possible.

It is clear from 1 Thessalonians 3:1-2, 6 that Silas and Timothy did rejoin Paul at Athens. Silas likewise was commissioned by Paul to leave Athens and then meet him at Corinth (cf. Acts 18:1-5).

3. THE CRUSADE IN ACHAIA (17:16–18:18)

a. At Athens (17:16-34)

17:16. The glory of Greece in the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. was fading in Paul's day and even Athens, the proud center of Hellenism, was past its bloom. Even so, it was still a vital cultural center with a world-famous university. Many of its famous buildings were built during the days of its leader Pericles (461–429 B.C.). Beautiful as were the architecture and art forms, Paul could not enjoy them because he was greatly distressed to see that the city was full of idols. The art of Athens was a reflection of its worship. The intellectual capital of the world was producing idolatry.

17:17. In this city Paul waged spiritual warfare on two fronts, the synagogue and the marketplace. In the synagogue he no doubt used his normal approach, proving from the Old Testament Scriptures that Jesus is the Messiah (cf. vv. 2-3). In that synagogue were Jews and God-fearing Gentiles (cf. v. 4). In the marketplace (agora, the center of civic life) where philosophers debated and presented their views, Paul reasoned . . . with those who happened to be there.

17:18. The primary antagonists of Paul in the agora were the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. The Epicureans, who followed Epicurus (341–270 B.C.), said the chief end of man was pleasure and happiness. This pleasure, they believed, is attained by avoiding excesses and the fear of death, by seeking tranquility and freedom from pain, and by loving mankind. They believed that if gods exist they do not become involved in human events.

The Stoics, on the other hand, were followers of Zeno (ca. 320–ca. 250 B.C.) and got their name from the painted portico or stoa, where he traditionally taught in Athens. Pantheistic in their view, they felt a great "Purpose" was directing history. Man's responsibility was to fit himself and align himself with this Purpose through tragedy and triumph. Quite obviously this outlook, while it produced certain noble qualities, also resulted in inordinate pride and self-sufficiency.

When these philosophers encountered Paul, they began to dispute with him. Some of them asked, What is this babbler trying to say? "Dispute" is syneballon (lit., "to throw with," i.e., to toss ideas back and forth). This differs slightly from what Paul did in the synagogues. There he reasoned (dielegeto, "discussed, conversed," v. 17; cf. the same word in v. 2; 18:4, 19; 19:8). The word translated "babbler" is spermologos (lit., "seed-picker"). It described someone who, like a bird picking up seeds, took some learning here and some there and then passed it off as his own. Others remarked, He seems to be advocating foreign gods. This response was due to their inability to grasp Paul's doctrine of Christ and the Resurrection; it was totally foreign to their thinking (cf. 17:31-32).

17:19-21. Areopagus, literally, "Hill of Ares," was the meeting place of the Council of the Areopagus, the supreme body for judicial and legislative matters in Athens. In the Apostolic Age its power had been reduced to oversight over religion and education.

There is some question as to where this council met in Paul's time. Some think it met on the traditional Mars Hill behind the agora and immediately west of the Acropolis. Others say it met in the Stoa Basileios, a building in the agora. The council wanted to know about Paul's new teaching, which was strange to their ears. In Athens, the ancient world's intellectual center, the Athenians and foreign residents loved to debate the latest ideas. This openness gave Paul an opportunity to preach his message.

17:22. Beginning with this verse (and continuing through v. 31) is another of Paul's "sample sermons" (cf. 13:16-41; 14:15-18; 20:18-35). This one shows how Paul addressed intellectual pagans. The thrust of his message is clear: the Creator God, who has revealed Himself in Creation, has now commanded all to repent, for everyone must give an account to Jesus Christ whom God raised from the dead.

Paul's discourse includes three parts: (a) the introduction (17:22-23), (b) the unknown God (vv. 24-29), and (c) the message from God (vv. 30-31).

Paul began wisely by acknowledging they were very religious. These two words translate the Greek deisidaimonesterous from deidō ("to fear or revere"), daimōn ("deities, evil spirits"), and stereos ("firm, hard"). The idea is that the Athenians were firm and rigid in their reverencing of their deities. This was a carefully chosen word. Hearing it, the men of Athens would have thought of their deities or gods. But Paul subtly implied that their deities were evil spirits or demons, not gods. Behind idols are demons (cf. comments on 16:16).

17:23. The Athenians, who feared they might overlook venerating some deity they did not know about, dedicated an altar TO AN UNKNOWN GOD. When Paul referred to this, he did not emphasize the altar but their ignorance of the true God.

17:24. Because God made everything, He is supreme over all—the Lord of heaven and earth (cf. 14:15; cf. Ps. 24:1). Such a great God does not live in humanly constructed temples, as the Athenians assumed their Greek gods did (cf. Stephen's words in Acts 7:48-50).

17:25. God is above human temples, but He is also self-sufficient and is not sustained by human provisions. This truth would appeal to the Epicureans who believed that what god or gods existed were above human events.

The last part of the verse, dealing with God's providing people with life (cf. v. 28) and material needs (cf. 14:17), suited the Stoic philosophy of aligning their lives with the "Purpose" of the Cosmos. Paul was thus beginning where his listeners were and was leading them from their inadequate concepts of the truth.

17:26. From one man refers back to Adam. This would be a blow to Athenian pride; they were sourced in the same original Creation as everyone else! One purpose of this Creation was to populate the planet (Gen. 1:28).

This sovereign God has omnipotently decreed the history (the times) and boundaries (the exact places) for the nations (cf. Deut. 32:8). Greece was not the only nation on earth!

17:27. One of God's purposes in revealing Himself in Creation and history is that people would seek Him (cf. Rom. 1:19-20). Though sovereign (Acts 17:24), He is also immanent and not so far removed that He cannot be found.

17:28. To buttress his point Paul apparently quoted from Epimenides, the Cretan poet (whom Paul also quoted later in Titus 1:12): For in Him we live (cf. Acts 17:25), and move, and have our being. Also Paul quoted the poet Aratus, from Paul's homeland Cilicia: We are His offspring. This second quotation was from Aratus' work Phainomena. All people—Athenians along with all others—are God's offspring, not in the sense that they are all His redeemed children or in the sense that they all possess an element of deity, but in the sense that they are created by God and receive their very life and breath from Him (v. 25). The Athenians' very creation and continued existence depended on this one God whom they did not know! No such claim could ever be made of any of the scores of false gods worshiped by the Greeks.

17:29. The conclusion is inevitable: since humans have been created by God, the divine Being, He cannot possibly be in the form of an idol, an image conceived and constructed by man (cf. Rom. 1:22-23). ("Divine being" translates theion, lit., "divine nature," used frequently in classical Gr., but in the NT only here and in 2 Peter 1:3-4). This would be a revolutionary concept to the Athenians, whose city was "full of idols" (Acts 17:16) and "objects of worship" (v. 23).

17:30. God overlooked human ignorance revealed in idol-making, that is, He was patient. Though people are under His wrath (Rom. 1:18) and are without excuse because of natural revelation (Rom. 1:19-20), God "in His forbearance (anochē, 'holding back, delay') left the sins committed beforehand unpunished" (Rom. 3:25). This parallels Acts 14:16, "In the past, He let all nations go their way" (cf. comments there). All through time the Gentiles were responsible for the general revelation given to them; now with the worldwide proclamation of the gospel, the Gentiles are also responsible to special revelation. That response is to obey God's command to repent of their sins.

17:31. At this point Paul introduced a distinctively Christian viewpoint. His reference to the Man clearly looks to Daniel 7:13-14 which speaks of the Son of Man. This One, appointed by God the Father, will judge the world with justice (cf. John 5:22). The authentication of Christ's person and work was His resurrection. Here again the resurrection of Jesus was preached. The idea of resurrection (cf. Acts 17:18, 32) was incompatible with Greek philosophy. The Greeks wanted to get rid of their bodies, not take them on again! A personal judgment was also unpalatable to Greeks. The gospel message struck at the center of the Athenians' needs.

Interestingly Paul (vv. 30-31) discussed the topics of sin ("to repent"), righteousness ("justice"), and judgment ("He will judge"), the same areas in which Jesus said the Holy Spirit would convict people (John 16:5-11).

17:32-34. To a Greek it was nonsense to believe a dead man could be raised from the grave to live forever, so some of them sneered. Others with more discretion said they wanted to hear Paul again on this subject. As a result a few men became followers of Paul and believed, including even Dionysius, an Areopagus member (i.e., a council member; cf. comments on v. 19), and a woman named Damaris. Other women converts in Acts include Lydia (16:14-15), a few prominent women in Thessalonica (17:4), and a number of prominent Greek women in Berea (v. 12).

Was Paul's ministry at Athens a failure? This is difficult to assess. There is no record of a church being founded in Athens. Paul later referred to the household of Stephanas (1 Cor. 16:15) in Corinth as "the first converts" (lit., "firstfruits") of Achaia. (Athens was in Achaia.) How could this be if some were converted in Athens, as Acts 17:34 asserts? Probably the solution is found in thinking of Stephanas as the firstfruits "of a church" in Achaia. Also possibly the term "firstfruits" can be used of more than one person.

If no church was begun in Athens, the failure was not in Paul's message or method but in the hardness of the Athenians' hearts.

b. At Corinth (18:1-18)

18:1. Without explaining the circumstances Luke simply stated, After this, Paul left Athens and went to Corinth. The cities of Athens and Corinth, though only 50 miles apart, were quite different. Athens was noted for its culture and learning, Corinth for its commerce and profligacy. Corinth was located just south of a narrow isthmus which joined the peninsula called Peloponnesus to Achaia to the north. Land trade moving north and south went through Corinth as did sea trade going east and west. Corinth possessed two seaport cities—Lechaeum two miles to the west on the Gulf of Corinth which opened to the Adriatic Sea, and Cenchrea, seven miles to the southeast which brought trade from the Aegean Sea. The southern tip of the Peloponnesus Peninsula was dangerous for ocean travel, so ships would put into port at one of Corinth's seaports and have their cargoes carried across to the other side of the isthmus for shipping there.

In 146 B.C. the Romans razed Corinth. However, its strategic location would not permit the city to die. It was rebuilt a century later in 46 B.C.

As one would expect from a city supported by commerce and travelers, Corinth was marked by profligate and licentious living. It was a center for the worship of Aphrodite, the goddess of love, who promoted immorality in the name of religion.

Politically, Corinth was a Roman colony and capital of the province of Achaia.

Some insights into Paul's emotions as he came to Corinth are seen in 1 Corinthians 2:1-5. His acknowledged weakness, fear, and much trembling may have been due to several factors: (1) He came alone. (2) The difficulties he had faced since coming to Macedonia may have filled him with apprehension as to what would happen in Corinth (cf. Acts 18:9-10). (3) Even in a world hardened to profligacy Corinth held a reputation for its sexual license.

The fact that Paul came to Corinth alone may account for his having baptized some people in that city, a practice he normally delegated to others (cf. 1 Cor. 1:14-17).

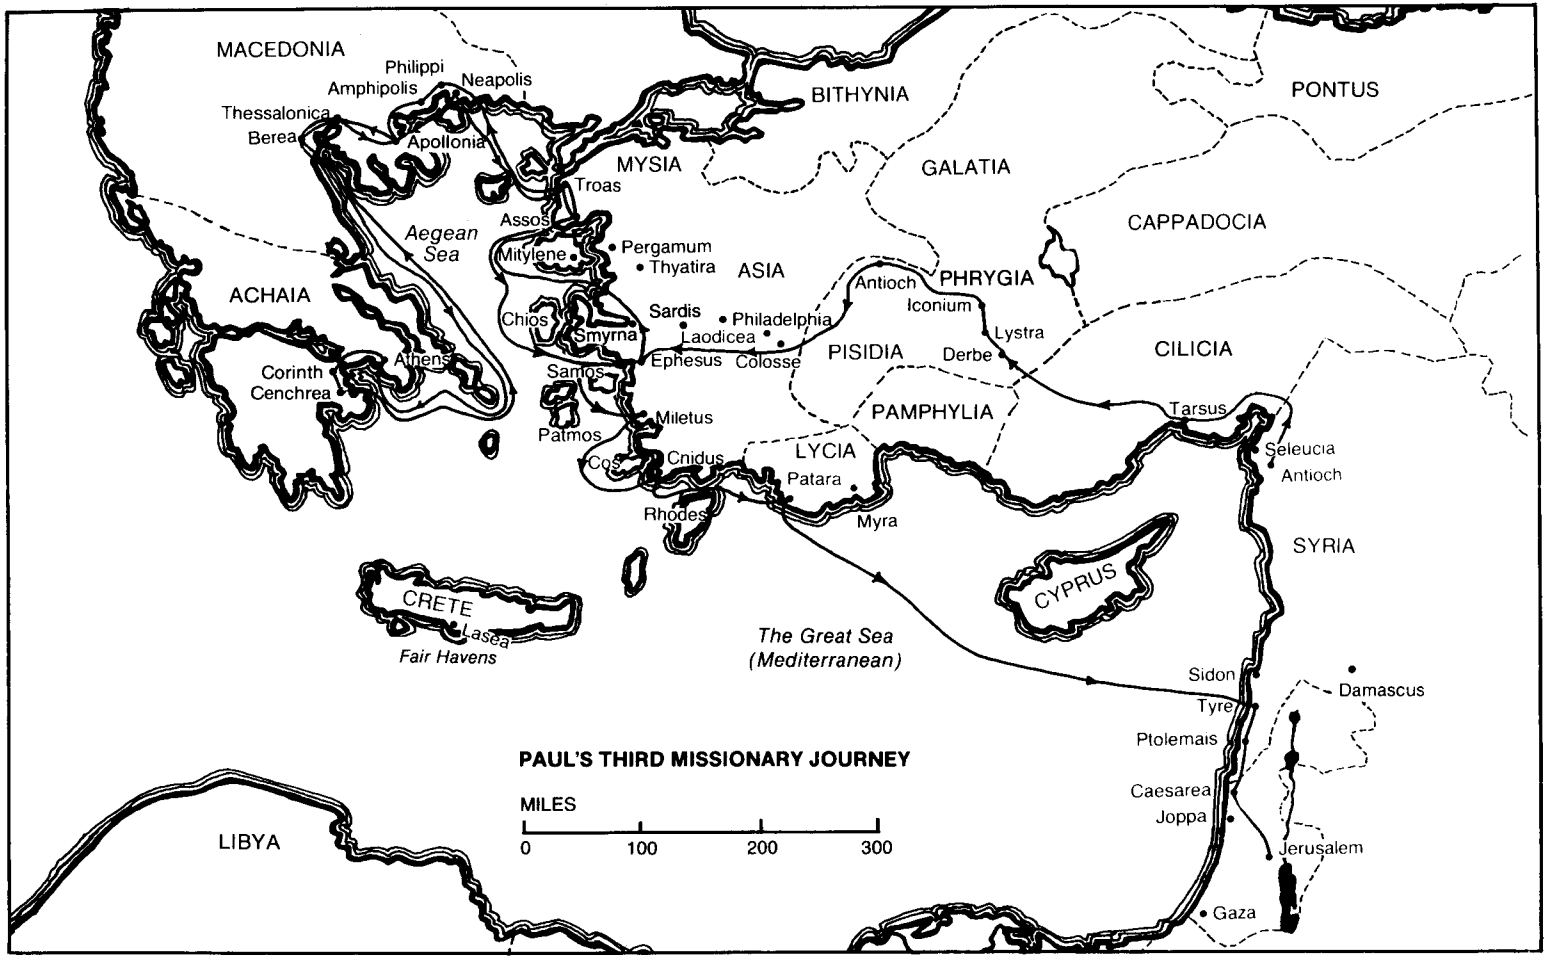
18:2. In Corinth Paul met Aquila and his wife Priscilla. Aquila was a Jew, originally from Pontus, a province in northeast Asia Minor south of the Black Sea. Displaced from Rome because of an edict in A.D. 49 or 50 from Claudius for all the Jews to leave Rome, Aquila and Priscilla had come to Corinth to ply their trade. (Claudius reigned from A.D. 41 to 54; see the list of Roman emperors at Luke 2:1.) Suetonius (A.D. 69?–140), a biographer of Roman emperors, described what may have been the occasion for such a decree. In his Life of Claudius (25. 4) he referred to the constant riots of the Jews at the instigation of Chrestus. Possibly the name Chrestus is a reference to Christ.

Whether Aquila and Priscilla were Christians before they met Paul is not known. Because Aquila was called "a Jew" did not mean he knew Christ (cf. Apollos, a Jew; Acts 18:24). Nor can it be argued that Paul lived with them because they were believers; he stayed with them because they were tentmakers (v. 3).

Several times Priscilla's name is given before Aquila's (vv. 18-19, 26; Rom. 16:3). This may be due to her noble family background.

18:3. Their mutual trade was tent-making. The term used here is skēnopoioi, which some say includes working in leather. Perhaps leather was used in the tents as was goat's hair, for which Paul's home province of Cilicia was well known.

As is still common in the Middle East, a workman's shop was downstairs and his living quarters upstairs.



18:4. Once again Paul, according to his custom, began his work of evangelism in the synagogue (cf. 9:20; 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2, 10, 17; 18:19; 19:8).

18:5. With the arrival of Silas and Timothy . . . from Macedonia (cf. 17:14-15), Paul devoted himself exclusively to preaching. The verb translated "devoted . . . exclusively" is syneicheto (from synechō) which here in the passive means "to be constrained." Several factors about Silas and Timothy's arrival encouraged Paul: (1) The pair evidently brought financial aid from Macedonia (cf. 2 Cor. 11:9; Phil 4:15). Because of this monetary gift it was no longer necessary for Paul to pursue a trade and he could give himself totally to the work of the gospel. (2) The good news about the steadfastness of the Thessalonian church refreshed Paul (cf. 1 Thes. 3:6-8). (3) Their companionship would have been an encouragement to the apostle.

His message was the same as the one he learned on the Damascus Road: Jesus is the Christ, that is, the Messiah (cf. Acts 2:36; 3:18, 20; 17:3; 18:28).

18:6. Once again is seen the pattern of Jewish opposition to the gospel, followed by Paul's subsequent turning to the Gentiles (cf. 13:7-11, 46; 14:2-6; 17:5; 19:8-9; 28:23-28).

Paul's shaking out his clothes parallels Paul's and Barnabas' shaking dust from their feet (13:51). When Paul said, Your blood be on your own heads, he was referring to their destruction and their own responsibility for it (cf. Ezek. 33:1-6).

18:7-8. After Paul left the synagogue, he found a fortunate location for preaching the gospel to the assembly of the saints next door in the house of Titius Justus. He was probably a Gentile, for he is called a worshiper of God (cf. 16:14; 17:4). In addition, Crispus, the synagogue ruler, with his family believed. He would have been well acquainted with the Old Testament Scriptures, and his conversion undoubtedly was an impetus for many more Corinthians to be converted.

18:9-11. Some threatening circumstances must have prompted this vision from the Lord. Perhaps this was God's response to Paul's vow (cf. v. 18 and the comments made there). The Lord urged Paul to keep on ministering in Corinth, assuring him that no . . . harm would come. No doubt Paul welcomed this word because of recent attacks against him in other cities (cf. 17:5, 13) and in Corinth itself (18:6). Paul obediently followed the Lord's direction and stayed for a year and a half (cf. v. 18), second only in length to his two to three years in Ephesus (19:10; 20:31).

Interestingly the word used for people in 18:10 is laos, often used of God's people Israel. Quite clearly, the Lord's plans for the world meant that the church temporarily was to take the place of His Chosen People, the Jews (cf. Rom. 11:11-21).

18:12. Verses 12-17 form a critical point in Luke's apologetic. It is important first because of who Gallio was, a Roman proconsul, governor of Achaia. Any judgment pronounced by him would establish legal precedent. Furthermore, Gallio was a brother of Seneca (4 B.C.?-A.D. 65), a philosopher of great influence in Rome.

The unbelieving Jews were not about to stop opposing Paul (cf. v. 6). They united and brought him into court.

18:13-15. The Jews charged Paul with persuading the people to worship God in ways contrary to the Roman law. Rome did not permit the propagation of new religions. Judaism was an accepted and established belief. These Jews were saying in effect that Christianity was a new and different cult, distinct from Judaism.

However, Gallio saw it differently. To him Christianity came under the aegis of Judaism and therefore was not a matter to be settled in a civil court. This decision was crucial for it was tantamount to legitimatizing Christianity in the eyes of Roman law.

18:16-17. The spontaneous outburst of violence against Sosthenes, the synagogue ruler, betrayed the spirit of anti-Semitism that lay just beneath the veneer of society in Corinth. The Gentiles in Corinth wanted nothing of the Jews' contentions. Sosthenes had evidently become ruler of the synagogue in place of Crispus and had led in the Jews' charge against Paul. He may well be the same Sosthenes who was later converted to Christianity and was referred to in 1 Corinthians 1:1.

Such a minor incident was of no concern to Gallio. Though there was violence, he was unconcerned about religious matters.

18:18. The actual length of Paul's stay in Corinth is unclear because the 18 months (v. 11) may be dated from the time of Paul's vision (vv. 9-10) or it may include all of Paul's time in Corinth (from v. 5 on).

Paul then left Corinth, heading for his sending church, Antioch on the Orontes River in Syria. But before he left he had his hair cut off at Cenchrea, Corinth's southeastern port, because of a vow he had taken. When Paul made this vow is unstated. He may have made it when he left Troas for Macedonia, or at the beginning of his ministry at Corinth, or more likely, before the Lord gave him the vision (vv. 9-10). During the vow Paul would have let his hair grow. Now the time of the Nazirite vow was over (after about a year and a half), and Paul got a haircut at Cenchrea (cf. Num. 6:1-21).

Josephus wrote about some Jews who immediately after a misfortune, shaved their heads and refused to offer sacrifices for 30 days (Jewish Wars 2. 15. 1). If this is the case Paul would have cut his hair at the beginning of his vow. But this is somewhat improbable because there is no mention of an illness or other affliction (unless 2 Cor. 12:7-9 fits in here).

While Paul was at Corinth he penned 1 and 2 Thessalonians (see the chart at Acts 13:38-39).

4. THE CONCLUSION OF THE SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY (18:19-22)

18:19. Priscilla and Aquila accompanied Paul as far as Ephesus. Evidently Silas and Timothy remained in Macedonia and Achaia to oversee the churches there. Why Priscilla and Aquila moved to Ephesus is not known. Probably it was for the sake of the gospel.

As in every city where there was a synagogue Paul went in and reasoned with the Jews (cf. 9:20; 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2, 10, 17; 18:4; 19:8).

18:20-21. Unlike the obstinate refusal of the Jews in other synagogues to believe, those in Ephesus desired further interchange with Paul. However, he was more inclined to press on homeward. Some Greek manuscripts add that Paul's desire to go to Jerusalem in haste was to keep a feast. If this is accurate, probably Paul wanted to observe the Passover.

18:22. After landing at Caesarea on the Palestinian coast—a voyage of about 500 miles from Ephesus—Paul went up (to Jerusalem) and greeted the church and then went down to Antioch. "Going up" and "going down" are almost technical terms that refer to going to and leaving Jerusalem's higher elevation.

5. THE CONQUEST OF EPHESUS (18:23–19:20)

[Third missionary journey, 18:23–21:16]

a. The initiation of Paul's third journey (18:23)

18:23. With great brevity Luke covered the first part of the apostle's third missionary journey. Obviously Luke's aim was to emphasize Paul's ministry in Ephesus. On Paul's way to Ephesus he ministered in Galatia and Phrygia (cf. 16:6), strengthening all the disciples. No doubt many of them were converts from his second missionary journey. For this reason the incident of 18:24-28 is used to introduce Paul's work in Ephesus.

b. The instruction of Apollos (18:24-28)

This episode (18:24-28) and the following (19:1-7) underscore the transitional nature of this phase of church history. It may be assumed from 19:1-7 that Apollos had not received Christian baptism and probably had not received the Holy Spirit.

This section of Acts also indicates that Christianity is the logical outgrowth of the Old Testament and of John the Baptist's ministry. In fact, the message of Paul is superior to that of the spiritual giant John the Baptist. Though John's message had reached as far as Alexandria and Ephesus, John's work was brought to fruition only in Christ.

18:24. What took place in verses 24-28 occurred after Paul left Ephesus

SPEAKING IN TONGUES IN ACTS

PASSAGE	TONGUES-SPEAKERS	AUDIENCE	RELATED TO SALVATION	PURPOSE
2:1-4	The 12 Apostles and others	Unsaved Jews	After salvation	To validate (for Jews) the fulfillment of Joel 2
10:44-47	Gentiles (Cornelius and his household)	Saved Jews (Peter and others) who doubted God's plan	The same time as salvation	To validate (for Jews) God's acceptance of Gentiles
19:1-7	About 12 Old Testament believers	Jews who needed confirmation of the message	The same time as salvation	To validate (for Jews) Paul's message

(v. 21) and before he returned (19:1). During this interval a church had been started, probably under the influence of Aquila and Priscilla. To this church came the gifted Apollos from Alexandria in northern Africa. As a Jew, he knew the Scriptures, that is, the Old Testament, well.

18:25. His doctrine regarding Jesus was accurate but deficient. Probably this means Apollos did not know about the Holy Spirit's baptism. John's baptism symbolized cleansing by God because of repentance toward God (cf. 19:4). But Christian baptism pictures union with Christ in His death, burial, and resurrection by means of Spirit baptism (cf. Rom. 6:3-10; 1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:27; Col. 2:12).

18:26. Rather than correct Apollos publicly, Priscilla and Aquila . . . invited him to their home and explained to him the way of God (cf. "the way of the Lord," v. 25) more adequately.

18:27-28. Armed with this new doctrine Apollos crossed the Aegean Sea to Achaia (probably at Corinth) where he was mightily used. He vigorously refuted the Jews demonstrating from the Scriptures (which he knew well, v. 24), that Jesus is the Messiah. This was Paul's approach as well (v. 5). So forceful was Apollos' ministry that factious believers at Corinth formed an Apollos party (1 Cor. 1:12). There is no indication that Apollos promoted such a faction and Paul nowhere held him accountable for it.

c. The influence of the gospel (19:1-20)

(1) With the 12 (19:1-7). 19:1-2. Ephesus became Paul's base of operation during his third missionary journey. Ephesus was the home of the Temple of Artemis, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. The temple, according to its ruins, was 239′ wide and 418′ long, four times the size of the Parthenon in Athens! As a commercial center, Ephesus was the leading city of the province of Asia. Its present-day extensive ruins reveal the glory of its past. However, the Caÿster River silted its harbor full and the site was later abandoned. During Paul's time the city was approaching its zenith.

Arriving in this metropolitan area from the interior road (perhaps a shorter route than others), Paul . . . found some disciples. What Luke meant by the term "disciples" is unclear. Normally Luke used it of Christians; it may have that meaning here because Paul's question included the words when you believed (i.e., believed in Jesus Christ).

The answer of these disciples is also enigmatic. When they said, No, we have not even heard that there is a Holy Spirit, they probably meant they had not heard He had been given or was being given. A similar construction is used in the Greek in John 7:39. Furthermore, John the Baptist had clearly predicted the coming work of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; cf. John 1:32-33).

19:3-4. Like Apollos (18:25) these Ephesian disciples knew only of John's baptism, a sign of repentance toward God (Matt. 3:2, 6, 8, 11; Mark 1:4-5; Luke 3:8). Paul told them that John pointed to Jesus Christ as the One in whom they should believe (Matt. 3:11-12; Mark 1:7-8; Luke 3:16-17).

19:5. This is the only place in the New Testament that refers to anyone being rebaptized. Quite clearly, John's ministry was anticipatory; Christ is the fulfillment of all things.

19:6. The laying on of hands may have been in conjunction with the baptism or more probably afterward. As a result the Holy Spirit came on these disciples and they spoke in tongues and prophesied. The subject of tongues in Acts confirms Paul's statement that tongues "are a sign . . . for unbelievers" (cf. comments on 1 Cor. 14:22). The purpose of tongues was to overcome unbelief. The accompanying chart compares the usages of tongues-speaking in Acts and points up its purpose.

It should also be noted that the reception of the Holy Spirit in Acts does not follow any set pattern. He came into believers before baptism (Acts 10:44), at the time of or after baptism (8:12-16; 19:6), and by the laying on of apostolic hands (8:17; 19:6). Yet Paul declared (Rom. 8:9) that anyone without the Holy Spirit is not a Christian. Quite obviously the transitional Book of Acts is not to be used as a doctrinal source on how to receive the Holy Spirit (cf. comments on tongues, 1 Cor. 13:8–14:25).

19:7. The reference to 12 men does not imply, as some have suggested, that the church is the new Israel. If there is any significance to the number, it is that this fullness of the Spirit is yet to be experienced by Israel (cf. Ezek. 36:26-27; Joel 2:28-32; Zech. 12:10-14).

(2) In the synagogue. 19:8. In accord with his promise (18:21) Paul did return to the Ephesus synagogue and spoke boldly there for three months. Three months in a synagogue without a riot was something of a record for Paul. Perhaps the cosmopolitan nature of Ephesus caused the Jews there to be more tolerant. On the apostles' boldness, see comments on 4:13.

The topic of his discussion was the kingdom of God which obviously included the person and work of Christ but also must have anticipated His millennial reign (cf. 1:3, 6).

(3) In the school of Tyrannus (19:9-12). 19:9. Once again the old pattern of Jewish opposition arose (cf. 18:6). This time the Jews publicly maligned the Way (on "the Way," cf. 9:2; 19:23; 22:4; 24:14, 22). So Paul left them.

After he led the believers out of the synagogue he taught daily in the lecture hall of Tyrannus. Apparently Tyrannus made his lecture hall available to traveling teachers. One Greek manuscript adds that the school was available from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M., when most people would have their noon meal and an afternoon "siesta." This tradition is probably correct. The rest of each day Paul worked with his own hands (20:34).

19:10. Paul ministered in Ephesus for two years. But according to Acts 20:31, he was there for three years. Since it was customary to count part of a unit of time as a whole, his ministry was actually between two and three years.

So effective was this work that the gospel emanated throughout the province of Asia, on the west coast of modern-day Turkey. During this time the churches at Colosse, Laodicea, and Hierapolis were founded (Col. 4:13). Some believe all seven churches of Revelation 2–3 were started at this time, but this cannot be asserted dogmatically.

19:11-12. These feats of Paul parallel the miracles of Peter in 5:15-16. Quite clearly God's hand of blessing and endorsement was on Paul. Apparently the handkerchiefs and aprons were tangible symbols of God's power through His apostle; these objects had no magical powers in themselves. Certainly this is no basis for people trying to repeat such miracles today. As seen many times in Acts, miracles confirmed the work of the apostles (2:43; 4:30; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6, 13; 14:3; 15:12; cf. 2 Cor. 12:12; Heb. 2:3-4).

The mention of evil spirits bridges this portion with the next incident (Acts 19:13-20).

(4) With exorcism and sorcery (19:13-20). One of the themes of Acts is the victory of Christ over occultism (cf. 8:9-24; 13:6-12; 16:16-18). This incident is another example of His power over demons.

19:13. Some itinerant Jewish exorcists who obviously used a variety of chants and methods tried to invoke Jesus' name over demon-possessed people.

19:14. Sceva is said to be a Jewish chief priest. But perhaps he merely claimed to be, and Luke simply recorded his boast. Or Sceva may have actually been a chief priest whose seven sons had gone astray into exorcism.

19:15. Some significance may be attached to the variation in the verbs for "know" used here by the evil spirit (i.e., the demon). He said, Jesus I know (ginōskō, "to know by interaction and experience"), and he added, Paul I know about (epistamai, "to know about, to understand"). But the demon did not know Sceva's sons.

19:16. Instead of being exorcised of this demon, the possessed man became supernaturally strong and overcame all seven (amphoterōn normally means "both" but may also signify "all"), beating them. The seven ran out of the house naked and bleeding. Demons can sometimes cause those they possess to have unusual physical power (cf. Mark 5:3-4).

19:17-18. The result was fear (or awe, phobos) on the part of both Jews and Gentiles (cf. 5:5), and high esteem for Jesus' name (in contrast with the attempted use of His name for exorcism; cf. 19:13). Many Christians had also been involved in sorcery and spiritism and they openly confessed their evil deeds. The noun translated "deeds" is praxeis, which probably describes magical spells and formulas. Giving out these secrets would cause them to lose their power.

19:19. Furthermore, many publicly burned their manuals of sorcery. In sorcery, people by the assistance of demons sought to gain power over others. The word translated drachmas is actually argyriou and simply means "silver"; consequently the value of the coins is unknown. But 50,000 silver coins was a large sum.

19:20. The cleansed church became a powerful and growing church. (The spreading of God's Word is also mentioned in 6:7; 12:24; 13:49.) With this sixth "progress report" Luke brought another section of his book to a conclusion (cf. 2:47; 6:7; 9:31; 12:24; 16:5; 28:30-31).

D. The extension of the church to Rome (19:21–28:31)

1. THE COMPLETION OF THE THIRD JOURNEY (19:21–21:16)

a. The disturbance at Ephesus (19:21-41)

19:21. This verse sets the tone for the remainder of the book. Paul's sights were now set on Rome (via Jerusalem) with the ultimate goal of reaching Spain (Rom. 1:15; 15:22-24). Luke made no reference to Spain because one of his purposes in writing Acts was to trace the spread of the gospel up to Paul's being in Rome, center of the Roman world. Several have observed how Luke's Gospel focuses in on Jerusalem, whereas Acts emphasizes the message going out from Jerusalem to Rome. These two cities seem to be the focal points of Luke-Acts.

The NIV simply says Paul decided whereas the Greek has etheto ho Paulos en tō pneumati, "Paul purposed in the spirit." This may mean Paul's own spirit or the Holy Spirit. Since the verb means "purposed," not "was led," it may refer to Paul's human spirit.

First, however, he desired to visit the churches of Macedonia and Achaia. The purposes of this itinerary were (a) to confirm the churches and (b) to take up an offering for the saints in Jerusalem.

19:22. Timothy, who was last seen with Paul in Corinth (18:5), once again came on the scene. He and Erastus were sent . . . to Macedonia, evidently to prepare for Paul's coming. Paul also mentioned Erastus in 2 Timothy 4:20.

19:23-24. Before Paul's departure and as an incentive for him to leave Ephesus there was a riot. On the words the Way, see comments on 9:2.

In only two incidents recorded in Acts did Gentiles oppose Paul: (a) here and (b) in the case of the Philippian fortune-teller (16:16-24). In both cases the opposition was because of vested monetary interests.

Actually two goddesses in Asia Minor were named Artemis. The one, a goddess worshiped in Greek culture whose counterpart in Rome was Diana, was the virgin goddess of the hunt. The other was Artemis of the Ephesians, a many-breasted goddess of fertility. Probably the original "statue" was a meteorite that resembled a woman with many breasts (cf. 19:35).

Silver craftsmen made statues (silver shrines) of this Ephesian goddess, but because of the power of the gospel their business had gone bad.

19:25-27. Demetrius (v. 24), a silversmith, assembled the other craftsmen and appealed to them on the basis of both business (our trade will lose its good name) and religion (the temple of the great goddess Artemis will be discredited). The appeal on the basis of the cult of Artemis was obviously hypocritical; his concern was simply financial. Artemis was worshiped in many cities besides Ephesus. Obviously Paul's view that man-made idols are not gods would ruin their thriving idol-making business.

19:28-29. The silversmiths, enraged at Paul by Demetrius' speech, instigated a riot and rushed to the Ephesian theater, the largest place for an assembly of people in the city, capable of seating 25,000. As tokens of opposition the people seized Gaius and Aristarchus (cf. 20:4). Gaius was a common name; so it is doubtful this is the same man mentioned in Romans 16:23 and 1 Corinthians 1:14. Aristarchus is also mentioned in Acts 20:4 and 27:2. Evidently the two escaped with little or no injury.

19:30-31. These verses are important not only for what they directly state but also for what they imply. Paul was eager to defend the gospel, ready to take on his opponents! But the Christians did not let him. Even some of the officials of the province would not let him get caught in the riot. They were Asiarchs (lit., "rulers of Asia"), in charge of the community's political and religious welfare. They would be on good terms with Rome and therefore would evidence Christianity's good standing with the government.

19:32-34. Luke's sense of humor is seen in this passage. Ironically most of the people did not even know why they were there. Because the Jews were monotheists and strongly opposed to idols, they thrust Alexander to the front in order to issue a disclaimer. The reduction in Artemis' idol business was not their fault! However, anti-Semitism took over, the mob refused to listen to a Jew, and they chanted in frenzy for about two hours, Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!

19:35-39. The term city clerk (grammateus, lit., "scribe") does not do justice to this man's position. Actually he was the chief executive officer of the city. When he appeared, the people listened.

He first appealed to the position of Ephesus as the guardian of Artemis' temple and to her heaven-sent image. The latter assertion may be a subtle rebuttal of the statement (v. 26, "man-made gods are no gods at all"). Artemis, he argued, was not man-made. So why should they be concerned with Paul's preaching? Second, the town clerk asserted the innocence of Gaius and Aristarchus, thereby exonerating Paul as well (v. 37). Third, he pointed out the legal methods of obtaining a hearing—through the courts . . . proconsuls, and a legal assembly (vv. 38-39). This assembly was not legal.

19:40-41. Finally, the unnamed official warned of the political implications of the commotion in the city. They would be hard-pressed to give Rome a legitimate explanation of this riot, and the city could be deprived of some of its liberties because of it. So Paul was cleared of any misdeeds, religious or political.

While Paul was at Ephesus, he wrote 1 Corinthians as well as an earlier letter to the Corinthians that is not part of the biblical canon (cf. 1 Cor. 5:9). In addition he made a third visit to Corinth which is unrecorded in Acts (cf. 2 Cor. 12:14; 13:1; see "Contacts and Correspondence" in the Introduction to 2 Cor.).

b. The departure from Macedonia and Achaia (20:1-6)

20:1-2. This segment of the third missionary journey is covered briefly by Luke. Second Corinthians 2:12-13; 7:5-7 gives further information about Paul's stop at Troas for evangelistic purposes and of his desire to see Titus for a report on the Corinthian church. Subsequently Paul went to Macedonia (cf. Acts 19:21), met Titus, and wrote 2 Corinthians.

During this time Paul probably ministered as far as Illyricum, corresponding roughly to modern-day Yugoslavia (Rom. 15:19; cf. 2 Cor. 10:13).

20:3. During the apostle's three-month stay in Achaia he wrote Romans (cf. Rom. 15:23–16:2) from Corinth.

The plot by the Jews . . . against Paul was evidently to assassinate him on board ship and dispose of his body at sea. Somehow the insidious plan became known to Paul and he decided not to go directly to the eastern Mediterranean but to go back through Macedonia. Possibly he had wanted to be in Jerusalem for Passover; now the best he could hope for would be Pentecost (Acts 20:16).

20:4-6. The mention of these seven men implies what is stated elsewhere: Paul was concerned for the collection for the saints in Jerusalem. As representatives of various churches they carried funds. Three men were from Macedonia (Sopater . . . Aristarchus, and Secundus) and four were from Asia Minor (Gaius . . . Timothy . . . Tychicus [cf. Eph. 6:21; Col. 4:7; 2 Tim. 4:12; Titus 3:12], and Trophimus [cf. Acts 21:29; 2 Tim. 4:20]). Their rendezvous point was Troas. In Acts 19:29 Gaius is said to be "from Macedonia," whereas in 20:4 he is said to be from Derbe. Probably these are two different men (cf. a third Gaius, from Corinth; 1 Cor. 1:14).

In Acts 20:5-6 Luke resumed another we section. Luke was left at Philippi in chapter 16 and evidently remained there until this point. Then he rejoined the party to accompany Paul to Jerusalem. The Feast of Unleavened Bread was in the spring. They made the 150-mile trip from Philippi to Troas in five days.

c. The discourse at Troas (20:7-12)

20:7. This is the clearest verse in the New Testament which indicates that Sunday was the normal meeting day of the apostolic church. Paul stayed in Troas for seven days (v. 6) and the church met on the first day of the week. Luke's method of counting days here was not Jewish, which measures from sundown to sundown, but Roman, which counted from midnight to midnight. This can be stated dogmatically because "daylight" (v. 11) was the next day (v. 7).

Probably the church met at night because most people had to work during the day. Because Paul was leaving them, possibly for the final time, he prolonged his discourse until midnight.

20:8-10. The presence of many lamps would contribute to a soporific atmosphere because the lamps consumed oxygen. Probably crowded conditions exacerbated the condition.

A young man named Eutychus (lit., "fortunate") proved to be true to his name. Luke, the physician, affirmed that Eutychus was picked up dead after he had fallen from a third-story window. It was normal for the larger rooms to be on the top floor of a building (see comments on 1:13). After the manner of Elijah and Elisha (1 Kings 17:21; 2 Kings 4:34-35), Paul embraced Eutychus and the young man came alive.

20:11-12. As part of the meal they participated in the Lord's Supper (broke bread and ate; cf. v. 7), and the meeting continued until dawn. Eutychus, the fortunate young man (cf. vv. 9-10), was taken home alive.

d. The discourse at Miletus (20:13-38)

20:13-15. Evidently Paul remained in Troas longer than he originally planned (v. 7). To compensate for the delay he sent the rest of the party on ahead. The journey across land from Troas to Assos is much shorter than by sea. By this arrangement Paul was able to stay a bit longer in Troas. They sailed from Assos to Mitylene . . . Chios . . . Samos and Miletus. The voyage to the last three stops took one day each.

20:16-17. Paul avoided a stop in Ephesus because he was in a hurry to reach Jerusalem, if possible, by the day of Pentecost. He knew it would take far too long to say good-bye to his many friends in Ephesus. Miletus was some 30 miles by land south of Ephesus, so he sent for the Ephesian church's elders to come there. Evidently his ship had a layover of several days in the port of Miletus.

20:18. Here begins another "sample sermon" of Paul (cf. 13:16-41; 14:15-17; 17:22-31), this one given to Christian leaders, men he loved deeply. This discourse has three parts: (a) a review of Paul's past three-year's ministry in Ephesus (20:18-21), (b) a description of the present situation (vv. 22-27), and (c) the future responsibilities of the Ephesian elders (vv. 28-35).

20:19. In Ephesus, as elsewhere, the Jews had plotted against Paul, though the riot recorded in Acts 19 emphasizes opposition from Gentiles. Here Luke referred to the plots by the Jews, but he did not detail them (cf. Paul's words in 1 Cor. 15:30-32; 16:9; 2 Cor. 1:8-10).

20:20. Paul's ministry from house to house (cf. 2:46) is contrasted with his public ministry and probably refers to house churches. If so, each elder was possibly the overseer of a house church. Paul both preached and taught.

20:21. In the Greek the words repentance and faith are joined together by one article. This may imply that these two words stress two aspects of trust in Christ (cf. 2:38). When a person places his faith in Christ, he is then turning from (repenting of) his former unbelief. This is the same message for both Jews and Greeks (i.e., Gentiles; cf. 19:10; Gal. 3:28).

20:22. Here Paul began to describe present circumstances (vv. 22-27). The NIV words, compelled by the Spirit, are literally, "bound in the Spirit" (dedemenos . . . tō pneumati). Probably this refers to the Holy Spirit's guidance in the apostle's life (cf. Luke 2:27; 4:1; Acts 8:29; 10:19; 11:12; 16:6-7). Paul's reason for going to Jerusalem, though not stated, evidently was to take the offering from churches to the poor saints in Jerusalem (24:17; cf. comments on 21:12-14).

20:23. Already Paul had been warned by the Holy Spirit—that is, evidently by people with the Spirit-given gift of prophecy—that prison and hardships awaited him in Jerusalem. He anticipated troubles in Jerusalem when he wrote Romans 15:30-31. Yet he was determined to go there (cf. Acts 19:21; 20:16).

20:24-25. When these verses are read together, it becomes clear that the preaching of the kingdom and the gospel of God's grace are related. God's work of grace enables believing Gentiles to have both the privilege of salvation and of entering the Lord's millennial reign.

Because of the warning to Paul (v. 23) he concluded that the Ephesian elders would not see him again. The NIV translation, none of you, is a bit strong. The Greek refers to "all" of them (as a group) not seeing Paul again (lit., "all of you [as a group] will never see me again"). He did not say no one of them would see him again (cf. the pl. verb in v. 38). His ambition was to finish the race, which later he said he did (2 Tim. 4:7).

20:26-27. In conformity with Ezekiel 33:1-6, Paul declared himself to be innocent of the blood of all men in Ephesus (cf. comments on Acts 18:6). He preached to "all men" (cf. "all the Jews and Greeks . . . in the province of Asia," 19:10). And the content of His preaching was all of God's will (boulēn, "purpose, plan"; cf. 2:23; 4:28; 13:36; Eph. 1:11; Heb. 6:17). Interestingly Paul used several words in referring to his role in communicating the gospel: (a) "preach" (Acts 20:20) and proclaim (v. 27), both from anangellō ("proclaim, announce"); (b) "taught" (from didaskō, "teach," v. 20); (c) "declared" (v. 21) and "testifying" (v. 24), both from diamartyromai ("solemnly bear witness to"); (d) declare (martyromai, "testify," v. 26).

20:28. In verses 28-35 Paul turned to the future responsibilities of the elders in Ephesus. First, they were to guard (prosechete, "attend to" in the sense of taking care of) themselves and all the flock. Significantly before they could provide for the flock they had to care for their own spiritual well-being.

Here the elders are described as overseers (episkopous, from the verb episkopeō, "to look for, to care for"). The term "elders" has primarily Jewish antecedents and stresses the dignity of the office, whereas "overseers" is mainly Greek in its derivation and emphasizes the responsibility of the office, namely, "to look after" others.

The value of the flock, over which the elders were to be shepherds (poimainein, pres. tense infinitive; cf. 1 Peter 5:2), is underscored by Paul's calling it the church of God (i.e., the church that is owned by God) and by his referring to its purchase (cf. Ps. 74:2) by His own blood. Nowhere does the Bible speak of the blood of God the Father. The Greek here can read "by the blood of His own," that is, His own Son. The Greek word for bought means "acquired, obtained."

20:29-31. These verses explain the need for the command to elders to guard themselves and the flock (v. 28). False teachers, called savage wolves, would enter the flock, or even some of their own would distort the truth. This warning is attested by subsequent references to the church at Ephesus (1 Tim. 1:6-7, 19-20; 4:1-7; 2 Tim. 1:15; 2:17-18; 3:1-9; Rev. 2:1-7). Again Paul urged the leaders, Be on your guard! He had repeatedly warned them of the danger of doctrinal error. In fact he had done so with tears (cf. Acts 20:19).

20:32. Paul then committed them first to God and then to the Word of His grace. Though trust in God is essential, it must be accompanied by obedience to His Word. This will lead to edification (it will build you up) and to an inheritance among all those who are sanctified (cf. 26:18; Eph. 1:18; Col. 1:12; 1 Peter 1:4).

20:33-34. Paul worked to provide for himself and for others (cf. 18:3; Eph. 4:28).

20:35. Hard work also enabled Paul to help the weak (cf. 1 Thes. 5:14). The words of the Lord, It is more blessed to give than to receive, are not found in the four Gospels. They represent an oral tradition passed on to the early church.

20:36-38. The elders' deep love for Paul is displayed here. The remainder of the trip to Jerusalem (21:1-25) is filled with details of such expressions of love for Paul. Why did Luke linger on these points? He did this to contrast the response to Paul in Gentile lands with that of the Jews in Jerusalem.

e. The dissuasions from Miletus to Jerusalem (21:1-16)

21:1. Each of these stops—from Cos to Rhodes to Patara—evidently represented one day's sea journey (cf. 20:13-15).

21:2. Rather than remain on board a boat which put into port each evening Paul boarded a ship which evidently was larger and would make the journey to Phoenicia with no stops.

21:3-4. Going south of Cyprus they landed at Tyre where the ship was to unload its cargo, a task which took a week (v. 4). The persecution of the early church in Jerusalem had scattered the believers to Phoenicia (11:19), so Paul sought out believers there.

Through the Spirit the believers at Tyre urged Paul not to go on to Jerusalem. In view of the phrase, "through the Spirit," was Paul wrong in pursuing his course to Jerusalem? Probably he was not violating God's will for several reasons: (1) Acts 20:22 and 21:14 imply it was God's will for Paul to continue on to Jerusalem (cf. 19:21). (2) The comfort given by God (23:11) implies Paul had not stubbornly refused the Lord's will. (3) In 23:1 Paul declared he had lived in all good conscience to that day.

Probably, then, the words "through the Spirit" (21:4) mean they knew through the Spirit that Paul would suffer in Jerusalem (cf. 20:23); therefore, concerned for his safety, they tried to dissuade him.

21:5-6. This was Paul's first contact with this church at Tyre, and yet after only one week there was a strong bond of love. The departure scene is not as poignant as the one at Miletus (20:37), but it was meaningful.

21:7. The ship then proceeded 20 miles south to Ptolemais, modern Acre or Akko, for a one-day stop. Probably the church there began as a result of the persecutions mentioned in 11:19, as did the church in Tyre.

21:8-9. The 40-mile trip to Caesarea may have been by land or by sea; probably it was the latter because the overland route was rather difficult and the port at Caesarea was commodious.

Paul's host there was Philip the evangelist. He was one of the Seven (cf. 6:1-5) who ministered to widows in Jerusalem. His evangelistic work was described in chapter 8. Evidently he had settled in Caesarea (cf. 8:40), even though it was the most Roman city in Israel, and had lived there for some 20 years when Paul arrived.

He had four unmarried (parthenoi, lit., "virgins") daughters who had the gift of prophecy. This spiritual gift, evident in the early church, was not limited to men (cf. 1 Cor. 11:5). Their apparent silence in view of all the other prophecies regarding Paul's suffering in Jerusalem is surprising.

21:10-11. Agabus, a prophet introduced in 11:28, came down from Judea, evidently from Jerusalem, for it was his home and Caesarea was in the province of Judea. Dramatically he illustrated how Paul would be bound in Jerusalem. Prophets often symbolized their predictions (cf. 1 Kings 11:29-31; Isa. 20:2-4; Jer. 13:1-7; Ezek. 4). The fact that Paul would be imprisoned was known by several including Paul himself (Acts 20:23).

21:12-14. After the people heard that prophecy, they pleaded with Paul not to go up to Jerusalem (cf. v. 4). Even Luke joined in the plea, as indicated by the use of we here. But the apostle would not be dissuaded.

Though Luke did not say so, apparently one reason this trip to Jerusalem was important to Paul was that he was taking an offering to the Jerusalem believers (cf. 24:17; Rom. 15:25-27; 1 Cor. 16:1-4; 2 Cor. 8:13-14; 9:12-13; Gal. 2:10). Paul wanted to make this presentation of money in order to fortify one of his basic doctrines, the unity of Jew and Gentile in Christ (Eph. 2:11-22; 3:6).

21:15-16. The distance from Caesarea to Jerusalem is about 65 miles, a two-day journey by horse. Some think the home of Mnason was at a halfway point where Paul and his party may have spent the night. More probably, Mnason was a resident of Jerusalem. Interestingly Mnason was from Cyprus, the island where Barnabas was born.

2. THE CAPTIVITY AT JERUSALEM (21:17–23:32)

a. The detention of Paul (21:17-36)

(1) The vow of Paul (21:17-26).

21:17-19. As soon as possible Paul and his party had an audience with James, head of the church at Jerusalem (cf. 15:13-21), and with all that church's elders. Luke only mentioned Paul's report of what God had done among the Gentiles through his ministry (cf. 14:27). Obviously Paul at this point also turned the large offering for the saints at Jerusalem (24:17) over to James in the presence of the elders. Probably because Luke's emphasis was on the gospel going from the Jews to the Gentiles, he omitted this matter of money.

21:20-21. When the leaders of the Jerusalem church heard of Paul's ministry among the Gentiles, they praised God. Undoubtedly included in this was thanksgiving for the Gentile offering to the believing Jews in Jerusalem (see comments on vv. 12-14).

While there was rejoicing over Paul's report, there was also apprehension about Paul's reputation among believing Jews who were zealous for the Law. A patently false report had gone out concerning Paul. It was true Paul taught Gentiles that it was religiously inconsequential whether they circumcised their sons or not and he did not teach them Jewish customs. However, he never taught Jews . . . not to circumcise their sons or to disregard Jewish customs.

21:22-24. James and the elders suggested that Paul join in the purification rites of four men who had taken a vow and pay their expenses. This was for the purpose of placating Jewish believers. Whether Paul's actions accomplished this is left unstated. That was beside Luke's purpose.

The details of this vow are unknown; it can only be surmised exactly what Paul was to do. The four men evidently had a Nazirite vow. At the conclusion of their vow some costly sacrifices were required of each man (cf. Num. 6:13-17). These men evidently were too poor to pay for them. Paul was asked to underwrite the expense of their sacrifices and thereby display his sympathy with the zealots of the Law.

Was Paul wrong in entering into this arrangement, which was a specific part of the Law? For several reasons it may be said he was not: (1) Paul himself had previously taken a Nazirite vow (Acts 18:18). (2) Later he unashamedly referred to this incident before Felix (24:17-18). (3) This action on Paul's part only confirmed one of the principles of his ministry which was to become like a Jew to win the Jews, and to become like one under the Law to win those under it (1 Cor. 9:20). (4) One of Paul's goals for the Jerusalem trip, along with relief of the poor, was the unifying of Jews and Gentiles. (5) Paul was not denying the finished work of Christ by offering animal sacrifices. The epistles Paul had already written by this time (Gal., 1 and 2 Thes., 1 and 2 Cor., Rom.) make it clear that such a denial was incomprehensible. He must have looked on these sacrifices as memorials. After all, this will be the significance of millennial sacrifices (Ezek. 43:18–46:24; Mal. 1:11; 3:3-4). (6) Paul later asserted he did not violate his own conscience (Acts 23:1).

21:25-26. The decision of the Jerusalem Council was once again iterated (cf. 15:20, 29). The elders assured Paul that their plan (mentioned in 21:23-24) did not conflict with the council's earlier decision. Paul then followed the elders' suggestion and purified himself with the four men (vv. 23-24). This did not conflict with Paul's teaching that Jews and Gentiles cannot be brought under the Law to be saved. This was a matter of Jewish custom, not of salvation or of sanctification.

(2) The violence of the people (21:27-36). 21:27. This opposition to Paul came not from believers but from unbelieving Jews. A riot was instigated by some Jews from the province of Asia, a place where the gospel had enjoyed great success. These men, in Jerusalem for the Feast of Pentecost, immediately recognized their old nemesis in the temple and incited the whole crowd and seized him. This is the sixth time a crowd was incited because of Paul's ministry (14:19; 16:19-22; 17:5-8, 13; 19:25-34).

21:28-29. The patently false charges they brought against Paul were similar to those raised against Stephen (6:11, 13-14). When they accused Paul of bringing Greeks into the temple area they were assuming a falsehood. Such an act in Jewish eyes would have defiled their holy place. Gentiles were permitted into the court of the Gentiles but no farther. Two inscriptions have been found on a balustrade separating the court of the Gentiles from the rest of the temple area. These warned Gentiles they would have themselves to blame for their deaths which would certainly ensue if they would proceed beyond the barrier (cf. Eph. 2:14).

So deep was this feeling that the Romans gave permission to Jews to fulfill this death sentence, even if the intruder was a Roman citizen.

21:30. The whole city was galvanized into action; they seized Paul and dragged him from the temple. Here the "temple" evidently refers to the court of the men. After they had brought Paul out, immediately the gates were shut so that no one could proceed beyond the court of the Gentiles and thus defile the temple.

21:31-32. Adjoining the temple area to the northwest was the Fortress of Antonia with two flights of steps leading into the outer court of the temple (see the sketch of the temple area and the fortress). Troops were stationed there, and more were added during Jewish feast days. They were part of the Roman Tenth Legion. The commander of the troops at the fortress, Claudius Lysias (cf. 23:26), at once took some officers and soldiers and ran down to the crowd. "Commander" is chiliarchos, leader of a thousand soldiers (25:23). The "officers" (hekatontarchas, lit., "rulers of hundreds" or centurions) indicates at least 200 soldiers were involved since the noun is plural.

21:33-36. These men rescued Paul, who was promptly arrested (epelabeto, "laid hold of," the same verb trans. "seizing" in v. 30) by the commander who ordered him to be bound with two chains. So great was the confusion and violence Paul had to be carried by the soldiers. The crowd . . . kept shouting, Away with him! In the same city a crowd had shouted similar words against the Lord Jesus (Luke 23:18; John 19:15).

b. The defense of Paul (21:37–23:10)

(1) Before the mob (21:37–22:29).

21:37-38. The commander, surprised that Paul could speak Greek, had supposed the apostle to be an Egyptian insurrectionist who had not yet been apprehended by the Romans. Evidently this Egyptian rebel was unable or refused to speak Greek.

Josephus wrote of an Egyptian impostor who claimed to be a prophet. He said this Egyptian had gathered 30,000 followers (Luke with accuracy states 4,000; Josephus had a tendency to inflate numbers) and in A.D. 54 came to the Mount of Olives promising his adherents that the walls of Jerusalem would collapse at his command. Instead, the Roman army promptly marched on them, killed some and captured others, while the remainder were scattered. The Egyptian escaped.

Undoubtedly the people of Israel would have liked to lay their hands on this character who had caused so much trouble. When Lysias saw the riot in the temple, he assumed the center of the attention was this Egyptian and that the Jews were venting their wrath on him.

21:39-40. Paul assured the commander he was a Jew (with rights to be in the temple) and also a citizen of Tarsus, where he learned Greek. Tarsus was a city which enjoyed a good reputation, particularly for being an educational center. As yet Paul had not revealed his Roman citizenship (cf. 22:23-29).

When Paul was granted permission to speak to the mob, he addressed them in Aramaic, the common language of Palestinian Jews, used throughout the Middle East at that time. He stood on the stairs of the fortress overlooking the crowd below.

Paul's defense was in three parts: (a) his conduct before his conversion (22:1-5), (b) his conversion (22:6-16), and (c) his commission to minister (22:17-21).

22:1. The vocatives Brothers and fathers with which Paul began his speech are those Stephen used (7:2). Stephen's speech and martyrdom had a lasting impression on Paul! (cf. 8:1)

22:2. When they heard him speak to them in Aramaic, they quieted down.

Undoubtedly the Jews in the land were pleased if not surprised that a Jew of the Dispersion, as Paul was, could speak Aramaic as well as Greek. So they settled down and listened.

22:3-9. How much of Paul's rearing took place in Jerusalem (cf. 26:4) is not known. The verb translated brought up is from anatrephō, which may also mean "educate." One of his mentors was the beloved and esteemed Gamaliel (cf. 5:34).

Paul's point here is obvious. He had been thoroughly committed to the Law and to stamping out Christianity. On the Way, see comments on 9:2 (cf. 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14). His determination was so deep that only a radically supernatural transformation could change his viewpoint. He recounted the events of his conversion (22:6-9; cf. 9:1-6).

22:10-11. The statement, There you will be told all that you have been assigned to do (cf. 9:6), looks ahead to Paul's future ministry and anticipates his words in 22:14-15.

22:12-13. The Jewish viewpoint of this address is seen in Paul's description of Ananias. He was a devout observer of the Law and highly respected by all the Jews living there. These facts about him are not given in Acts 9. Brother reflects the same outlook seen in 22:5 where Jews in Damascus were called the "brothers" of the Jews in Jerusalem.

22:14-15. The reference to seeing Christ, the Righteous One, is important because it qualified Paul to be an apostle (cf. 1 Cor. 9:1; 15:8). The term "Righteous One" was also used by Stephen (Acts 7:52). The all men to whom Paul was to present the gospel included Gentiles, kings, and Jews (9:15).

22:16. Two questions revolve about this verse. First, when was Paul saved—on the Damascus Road or at Judas' house? Several factors suggest he was saved on the Damascus Road: (1) The gospel was presented to him directly by Christ (Gal. 1:11-12), not later by Ananias. (2) Already (Acts 22:10) Paul said he had submitted in faith to Christ. (3) Paul was filled with the Spirit before his baptism with water (9:17-18). (4) The Greek aorist participle, epikalesamenos, translated calling on His name refers either to action which is simultaneous with or before that of the main verb. Here Paul's calling on Christ's name (for salvation) preceded his water baptism. The participle may be translated, "having called on His name."

Second, what then do the words wash your sins away mean? Do they teach that salvation comes by water baptism? Because Paul was already cleansed spiritually (see comments in preceding par.), these words must refer to the symbolism of baptism. Baptism is a picture of God's inner work of washing away sin (cf. 1 Cor. 6:11; 1 Peter 3:21).

22:17-18. Paul's departure from Jerusalem, according to 9:29-30, was because of the advice of Christian brothers. Actually a combination of divine revelation (22:17-18) and human direction led Paul to go to Tarsus.

22:19-20. Paul's rejoinder to the Lord shows he thought the Jews would be impressed by the radical change in his life; after all, he had been most zealous in persecuting believers (8:3; 9:2; 22:4-5; 26:11), even taking part in the martyrdom of Stephen (7:58; 8:1).

22:21-22. When Paul mentioned his commission to preach to the Gentiles, the mob was moved to instant rage and violence. Preaching to Gentiles could not have caused such a response because the religious authorities of Israel had preached to Gentiles (cf. Matt. 23:15). Paul's message that infuriated the mob was that Jews and Gentiles were equal without the Law of Moses (cf. Eph. 2:11-22; 3:2-6; Gal. 3:28).

This response is important to the argument of the Book of Acts. It indicates the Jews in Jerusalem had irrevocably refused the gospel of Jesus Christ and had sealed their fate. Less than 20 years later in A.D. 70 the city of Jerusalem became rubble and ruin (cf. Matt. 24:1-2; 21:41; 22:7). This, of course, does not mean Israel will not be restored in the future (cf. Rom. 11:26).

22:23-24. The people in the mob threw off their cloaks and flung dust into the air as expressions of intense anger. The commander who could not understand Aramaic was confused by everything that was going on. He was determined to get to the bottom of it all, even if it meant flogging Paul.

This flogging is different from Paul's beating with rods at Philippi and on two other occasions (2 Cor. 11:25; Acts 16:22-23). Nor was it the same as the Jewish 39 lashes administered with the long whips, a punishment Paul had received five times (2 Cor. 11:24). The Roman scourge was inflicted with shorter whips embedded with pieces of metal or bones and attached to a strong wooden handle. It could kill a man or leave him permanently crippled. This was the punishment Christ received (Matt. 27:26), leaving Him unable to carry His cross.

22:25-27. By law a Roman citizen not proven guilty of a crime could not be flogged. Paul called the centurion's attention to this fact by a question. When this was reported to the commander he was incredulous that Paul in his circumstances, the object of such hatred by the Jews, could be a Roman citizen.

22:28. During the reign of Emperor Claudius (A.D. 41–54; see the chart on Roman emperors at Luke 2:1) it was possible to purchase Roman citizenship. Those in government who sold this privilege could feather their nests with the bribery money. In contrast with the commander . . . Paul was born a citizen because his parents were citizens.

22:29. The commander, knowing he had put Paul . . . in chains, was fearful that Rome would learn he had violated Roman law. The chains probably were those that would hold him for flogging. Paul as a citizen was in chains at a later time (26:29).

Could not anyone avoid flogging by simply claiming to be a Roman citizen? Perhaps; but if a person falsely claimed to be a citizen, he was liable to the death penalty.

(2) Before the Sanhedrin (22:30–23:10). 22:30. By this time the commander knew the accusations against Paul were Jewish (cf. vv. 23-29), and the best way to unearth these was to have a hearing before the Sanhedrin. If the prisoner was found innocent he could be released, but if the charges were valid the case could be remitted to the procurator, the Roman governor (cf. 23:26-30).

23:1-2. The setting for this brief trial is given here. After Paul claimed all good conscience in his ministry (cf. 24:16; 1 Cor. 4:4), the high priest Ananias ordered those standing near Paul to strike him on the mouth. Ananias' response is in keeping with what is known about him from Josephus, who described him as insolent, hot-tempered, profane, and greedy. Ironically, at the beginning of Paul's ministry another Ananias helped him receive his sight.

23:3-5. Paul's outburst was triggered by the high priest's illegal command. How could the priest violate the Law while sitting as judge over one who supposedly had transgressed the Law? Jewish law presumed the accused to be innocent until proven guilty. Like a whitewashed wall, Ananias looked all right on the outside but was weak and deteriorating inwardly. Jesus too in His trials was struck on the mouth and challenged the legality of it (John 18:20-23).

Paul's statement, Brothers, I did not realize that he was the high priest, presents a problem. This could hardly be because of poor eyesight because Paul had "looked straight (atenisas, lit., 'looked intently') at the Sanhedrin" (Acts 23:1). Paul's words could be irony in which he was saying he could not recognize such a violent man as priest. However, the word "brothers" (v. 5) renders this interpretation improbable. Possibly there was such confusion the high priest was not identifiable. Certainly he was not wearing his priestly garments. It is also probable Paul did not know Ananias personally because the apostle had not had contact with the Sanhedrin for many years. The high priesthood changed hands frequently (see the chart on Annas' family at 4:5-6).

At any rate, Paul recognized the position of the high priest even if he did not respect the priest as a person.

23:6-9. In such a scene justice was impossible. Recognizing this, Paul changed his tactics completely and stated his hope in the resurrection of the dead along with the Pharisees (on this hope, cf. 24:15; 26:6-7; 28:20). This immediately disrupted the proceedings because it started an argument between the Pharisees and the Sadducees (cf. 4:1-2). By using this clever tactic, Paul divided his enemy. Amazingly the Pharisees defended Paul, a fellow Pharisee.

23:10. Paul was in more danger in the midst of the Jews than he was in a Roman prison. So again he was brought up the steps to the army barracks at the Antonia Fortress (cf. 21:35).

c. The danger to Paul (23:11-32)

23:11. The importance of this vision was not only in its comfort and encouragement (cf. 18:9-10) but also in the confirmation it gave of Paul's plans to go to Rome. The gospel of Christ would literally go from Jerusalem to Rome by means of the Apostle Paul. This was the fourth vision the Lord gave Paul (cf. 9:4-6; 16:9; 18:9-10).

23:12-13. So great was the hatred for Paul, the very next morning . . . 40 fanatical Jews formed a conspiracy and bound themselves with an oath not to eat or drink until they had killed him (cf. the crowd's efforts to kill him; 21:31). The verb for taking an oath is anathematizō (whence the Eng. "anathema"), which means a person binds himself under a curse if he does not fulfill his oath. Presumably these men were later released from this oath by lawyers because Paul's circumstances changed through a dramatic series of events.

23:14-15. The complicity of the chief priests and elders in this plot reveals both their lack of a legitimate case against Paul and their base characters. The fanatic zeal of the 40 men is also seen because a number of them would certainly be killed in overcoming Paul's guards, should their plan be carried out.

23:16-22. Paul's unnamed nephew somehow heard about the plot of the 40 and was able to get to the barracks to tell Paul and then the commander. Many unresolved questions come to mind. Was Paul's nephew a Christian? How did he secure this information? Did Paul's sister live in Jerusalem? If Paul had relatives living in Jerusalem, why did he not stay with them?

The nephew was a young man (vv. 17-19, 22). This Greek word neanias, used in verse 17, was earlier used of Paul (7:58) and Eutychus (20:9). It may refer to a man in his twenties or thirties. (Neaniskos, a synonym of neanios, is used in 23:18 and 22. In v. 19 the NIV has "young man" but the Gr. does not.) When the fortress commander heard of this plan, he cautioned Paul's nephew not to tell anyone he had reported this.

23:23-24. The commander decided to get Paul away from this danger spot. So he made every possible provision for Paul's security in his escape. First, he sent Paul in the company of more than 470 men—two . . . centurions . . . 200 soldiers (a centurion was over 100), 70 horsemen, and 200 spearmen. Second, they began the journey under cover of nightfall at 9 P.M. In addition, Caesarea would be a far more secure place, not as subject to a riot as was Jerusalem. For the third time(!) Paul left a city surreptitiously, at night (cf. Damascus, 9:25; Thessalonica, 17:10).

23:25-30. When a prisoner was forwarded to a superior, the subordinate officer was required to accompany the subject with a written statement of the case.

This letter from Claudius Lysias presents the essentials of the case. The commander bent the truth in saying he rescued Paul (v. 27) because he actually learned from a subordinate that Paul was a Roman citizen (22:26). He also discreetly omitted any reference to his preparing to have Paul flogged (cf. 22:25, 29).

The importance of this document is seen in 23:29 where the commander declared Paul to be innocent. Compare similar comments by Gallio (18:14-15), the city executive of Ephesus (19:40), Pharisees (23:9), Festus (25:25), and Herod Agrippa II (26:31-32).

23:31-32. The journey to Antipatris from Jerusalem was more than 35 miles. This must have been a forced march because they arrived by the next day. The terrain from Jerusalem to Lydda or Joppa (modern-day Lod; cf. 9:32-43), seven or eight miles before Antipatris, was difficult and would provide suitable cover for an ambush party. Once the entourage was in Antipatris the soldiers were no longer needed. The remaining 27 miles to Caesarea could be traversed with less danger.

3. THE CAPTIVITY AT CAESAREA (23:33–26:32)

a. Paul's defense before Felix (23:33–24:27)

23:33–35. When the cavalry and Paul arrived, Felix held a minor preliminary interrogation. Felix was the procurator (governor) of Judea about A.D. 52–58. He is one of three Roman procurators mentioned in the New Testament. The others are Pontius Pilate (A.D. 26–36) and Porcius Festus (A.D. 58–62). Felix married Drusilla (24:24), a sister of Herod Agrippa

II, the Agrippa in 25:13–26:32. (See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5.)

After Felix learned Paul was from Cilicia he determined to hear the case. Evidently a case could be tried in the province of the accused or in the province in which his alleged crime took place. The question actually involved "what sort of (poias) province" Paul was from. At this time Cilicia was not a full province but was under the legate of Syria, for whom Felix was a deputy. The legate would not want to be bothered with such a small case as this. Furthermore, Felix would not want to incur the Jews' wrath by forcing them to present their case against Paul in his hometown Tarsus, a city so far away. Felix could make only one decision and that was to hear the case. But witnesses against Paul would have to be present (cf. Acts 23:30).

24:1. The high priest himself went down to Caesarea as well as some of the elders of the Sanhedrin. They had hired an attorney (rhētoros, "a public speaker, orator," used only here in the NT), Tertullus, who was to present the case before Felix.

24:2-4. The lawyer spent almost as much time on his introduction as he did on the specific charges against Paul. His description of Felix was obviously fawning flattery, for Felix was known for his violent use of repressive force and corrupt self-aggrandizement. Felix had been a slave, won his freedom, and curried favor with the imperial court. Tacitus, a Roman historian, bitingly summed up Felix's character with the terse comment, "He exercised royal power with the mind of a slave."

24:5-8. The accusations were three: (1) Paul was a worldwide troublemaker, stirring up riots everywhere. (2) He was a leader of the Nazarene sect. (3) He attempted to desecrate the temple.

The first charge had political overtones because Rome desired to maintain order throughout its empire.

The second charge was also concerned with the government because Tertullus made it appear that Christianity was divorced from the Jewish religion. Rome permitted Judaism as a religio licita (a legal religion), but it would not tolerate any new religions. By describing Christianity as a "sect" (haireseōs, "faction, party, school"; whence the Eng. "heresy") of the Nazarenes, the attorney made Paul's faith appear to be cultic and bizarre.

Desecrating the temple also had political overtones because the Romans had given the Jews permission to execute any Gentile who went inside the barrier of the temple (cf. 21:28). At this point Tertullus modified the original charge made in 21:28. There Paul was accused of bringing a Gentile (Trophimus the Ephesian) into the temple courts; here Paul is said to have attempted desecration. The truth was severely damaged in the clause so we seized him, the implication being they took Paul to arrest him. (The NIV marg. gives some words that are added in vv. 6-8 in a few less-reliable Gr. mss.)

24:9-10. After the Jews had agreed to the veracity of their prosecuting attorney's charges, Paul was given an opportunity to answer.

His introduction was much shorter and truthful. He implied Felix knew the situation in Judea well enough to make an accurate decision.

24:11. Paul gave several points in his own defense. First, he had not been in Jerusalem long enough to instigate a riot. In fact one of his purposes for being in Jerusalem was to worship, to observe the Feast of Pentecost (20:16). Another reason was developed in 24:17-18.

24:12-13. Second, even Paul's calumniators could not cite an instance when he instigated a riot in the city.

24:14-16. Third, he worshiped the God of Israel in full conformity with the Law and . . . the Prophets (cf. 26:22; 28:23). (On the term "the Law and the Prophets" see Matt. 5:17.) Furthermore his faith was not in a sect but in Christianity, which was known as the Way (cf. Acts 9:2; 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:22). His hope in the resurrection (cf. 23:6; 26:6-7) was the same as that of his accusers (Paul assumed a number of them were Pharisees). By this Paul meant Christianity was an outgrowth of the Old Testament. Further, Paul always sought to keep his conscience clear (cf. 23:1). "Clear" translates aproskopon (lit., "not causing to stumble, or not offending"), used only two other times in the New Testament, both by Paul (1 Cor. 10:32; Phil. 1:10).

24:17. This is the only time in Acts Paul's goal of bringing an offering to Jerusalem from the Gentile churches is mentioned. Luke did not stress this because it was not a major factor in his argument. However, it was most important to Paul as is evidenced by his frequent allusions to it in his epistles (Rom. 15:25-28; 1 Cor. 16:1-4; 2 Cor. 8:13-14; 9:12-13; Gal. 2:10).

What did Paul mean when he said he went to Jerusalem . . . to present offerings? Perhaps he meant he "entered the temple to present offerings" (cf. Acts 24:18). But more probably he meant he offered thank offerings for God's blessings on his ministry.

24:18. Again Paul affirmed that he was not the instigator of a disturbance (cf. v. 12); his accusers were!

24:19-21. Finally, Paul said his genuine accusers were not present, the Jews from the province of Asia who made the original false allegations and incited the riot in the temple (cf. 21:27). Since the Sanhedrin had not found him guilty (23:1-9), Tertullus' speech did not really contain any legitimate charges.

24:22. How Felix knew about Christianity can only be surmised. Probably he heard about it from Drusilla, his wife, who was a daughter of Herod Agrippa I and a sister of Herod Agrippa II. Because she was a Jewess (v. 24) she would know about the Way. Besides this, Felix could scarcely have ruled in Judea for several years without learning something about the faith of the early church.

Rather than make a decision which would have been unfavorable to the religious authorities he adjourned the proceedings. He said, When Lysias the commander comes . . . I will decide your case. Whether Claudius Lysias (cf. 23:25-30) ever came to Caesarea or not was beside the point; the case had been postponed indefinitely.

24:23. Felix, evidently aware of Paul's innocence, granted him a limited amount of freedom as a prisoner under the guardianship of the centurion. Later another centurion gave Paul similar freedom in Sidon (27:3).

24:24-26. Felix must have taken a brief trip with his wife, Drusilla. When they returned, Felix sent for Paul who spoke about faith in Christ Jesus. Felix was brought under conviction when Paul discoursed on righteousness, self-control, and the judgment to come. Well he should, for his marriage to Drusilla was his third and he had to break up another marriage to secure her. His regime was marked by injustices that contrasted with the righteousness of God. And he was a man grossly lacking in self-control.

The duplicity and greed of Felix is seen in his desire to be bribed by Paul.

24:27. To placate the Jews, Felix left Paul in prison even though he knew Paul was innocent. Felix eventually lost his position because he was cruelly intemperate in putting down a Jewish and Gentile conflict in Caesarea.

b. Paul's defense before Festus (25:1-12)

25:1. This section (vv. 1-12) is crucial because in it Paul appealed to Caesar. It sets the direction for the remainder of the book and also shows how the apostle reached Rome.

Little is known of Porcius Festus, Roman procurator of Judea, A.D. 58–62, but what history discloses is favorable. His desire to rule well is attested by his going to Jerusalem three days after arriving in the province. No doubt he had heard of the volatile nature of that city!

25:2-3. One item heavy on the minds of the religious authorities was a trial for Paul. They knew their case was so weak that the only way they could rid themselves of him was by ambush while he was being transferred from Caesarea to Jerusalem.

25:4-5. Evidently Festus felt their request was unreasonable so he promised to reopen the case in Caesarea. Paul was already there and Festus was returning there.

25:6-7. The scene of previous trials repeated itself. Luke added, however, that the charges were many and serious.

25:8-9. After Paul briefly and categorically denied the allegations against him, Festus asked the prisoner if he would be willing to go . . . to Jerusalem for another trial. Festus had changed his mind on this (cf. vv. 4-5), apparently feeling this would be a suitable compromise to placate the Jews. Also he was realizing he did not know how to handle this kind of religious case (v. 20).

25:10. Paul would have nothing to do with this switch for several reasons: (1) The journey from Caesarea to Jerusalem would be most dangerous. The 40 Jews who two years before (cf. 24:27) had taken an oath to murder Paul (23:13-14) would probably have gotten out of their oath somehow by then, but they would still want to kill Paul. (2) The possibility of a fair trial in Jerusalem was remote. (3) He had already languished as a prisoner in Caesarea for some two years.

The charges brought against Paul were civil (they said he had done wrong to the Jews); therefore the present court where Festus represented Caesar, was the proper one.

25:11. The charges were serious enough to demand a death penalty. If the accusations were true, Paul said, he was willing to die. He interpreted Festus' suggestion that he go to Jerusalem (v. 9) as tantamount to delivering Paul over to the Jews, even though the trial would be conducted by Festus.

25:12. There is some debate as to whether Festus was legally bound to remand the case to Caesar (Nero, who reigned from A.D. 54–68), or if he could have chosen to handle the case himself. If Festus had decided to hear the case and made a negative decision, Paul could still have appealed to Caesar. But Festus probably had no alternative but to transfer the case to Rome. So after he had conferred with his council, he announced that in view of Paul's appeal, he must go to Caesar.

c. Paul's defense before Agrippa II (25:13–26:32)

25:13. The King Agrippa referred to here was Agrippa II, son of Herod Agrippa I (12:1) and a great-grandson of Herod the Great (Matt. 2:1). (See the chart on the Herods at Luke 1:5.) At this time he was a young man of about 30 years of age and the ruler of territories northeast of Palestine with the title of King. Because he was a friend of the Roman imperial family he was awarded the privilege of appointing the Jewish high priest and also had been made the custodian of the temple treasury. His background made him eminently qualified to hear Paul; he was well acquainted with the Jews' religion (cf. Acts 25:26-27).

Agrippa II and his sister Bernice, came to Caesarea to pay their respects to Festus. Though Bernice had a tendency to support the Jews she lived a profligate life. She had an incestuous relationship with Agrippa, her brother.

25:14-21. Festus reviewed his dealings with Paul's case which had been left to him by Felix. Festus frankly confessed he was incapable of handling the case (v. 20). In particular he did not understand Paul's insistence on the resurrection of Christ (v. 19).

25:22. The rehearsal of the situation had its desired effect on Agrippa. The Herodian family was useful to Rome for its knowledge of Jewish affairs and Agrippa's insights would be helpful to Festus.

25:23-24. The petty King Agrippa and his sister Bernice used this occasion to display their position, clothes, and ceremony. Luke undoubtedly was contrasting the lowly prisoner Paul in the audience room with Agrippa and Bernice and the high-ranking officers and the leading men of the city. Because five cohorts (each cohort had a thousand soldiers) were stationed at Caesarea, five high-ranking officers were there (chiliarchoi, lit., "commanders of a thousand"; cf. 21:31). Festus told Agrippa that the Jews urged that Paul should die.

25:25-27. The statement in verse 25 is significant because it shows that Festus, like Felix before him, found Paul had done nothing deserving of death (cf. 23:9, 29; 26:31).

It would look bad for Festus to send Paul to Caesar with no clear charges against him. Festus believed that Agrippa, with his knowledge of Jewish customs and laws, could help Festus write out some charges that would be specific enough for Caesar Nero to consider.

Two interesting terms for Roman royalty are found in this chapter, the first of which is Sebastos meaning "revered" or "august" and used in the New Testament only in 25:21, 25; 27:1. In chapter 25 it is translated "Emperor" and in 27:1 it is rendered "Imperial."

The other term is kyrios meaning "lord." In 25:26 "the lord" is translated His Majesty. Both Augustus and Tiberius refused this title for themselves because they felt it exalted them too highly;

however, by the time Paul made his appeal to Caesar, Nero was on the throne and "lord" was used much more commonly of the Caesar. Though Nero did accept the title of "lord," he had not yet gone to the excesses that characterized his reign later. At this juncture Nero was reputed to be a fair-minded ruler.

26:1. Paul had already made his defense to Festus (25:6-12), so now the apostle directed his address to Agrippa. Furthermore, the purpose of this speech was for Agrippa's information.

The motioning of the hand was evidently after the manner of orators of that time. This speech has a number of parts: (1) complimentary remarks (26:2-3), (2) Paul's early life in Judaism (vv. 4-8), (3) his zeal in opposing Christianity (vv. 9-11), (4) his conversion and commission (vv. 12-18), (5) his ministry (vv. 19-23), (6) his verbal jousts with Festus and Agrippa (vv. 24-29).

26:2-3. Paul was sincere in these compliments because he knew Agrippa was indeed well acquainted with all the Jewish customs and controversies, in addition to being a practicing Jew.

In contrast with Tertullus who promised a brief speech before Felix (24:4), Paul implied his defense might be more lengthy. This is the climax of all Paul's defenses recorded in Acts (cf. 22:1-21; 23:1-8; 24:10-21; 25:6-11).

26:4-8. In summary, Paul asserted that from his early life he lived . . . according to and for the hope of Israel (vv. 6-7; cf. 23:6; 24:15; 28:20). (On his living in Jerusalem, see 22:3.) He stated that this hope involved the resurrection from the dead. This is why Christ quoted Moses (Ex. 3:6) to defend the doctrine of the Resurrection (Matt. 22:32). Because Yahweh is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, people must be resurrected in order to receive the promise God made to them. Likewise the promises made to the Jews demand they be resurrected in the coming Messianic Age.

Paul's reference to the 12 tribes of Israel shows the error of British-Israelism with its "10 lost tribes of Israel" (cf. Matt. 19:28; Luke 22:30; James 1:1; Rev. 7:4-8; 21:12).

26:9-11. Besides being committed to Judaism, Paul had also been fanatic in his opposition to Christianity (cf. 8:3; 9:2; 22:4-5, 19). His casting votes against imprisoned Christians does not necessarily mean Paul was a member of the Sanhedrin. It may simply mean he agreed with the Sanhedrin's action (cf. 8:1; 22:20).

When Paul apprehended Christians he tried to force them to blaspheme, that is, to recant their belief in Jesus.

26:12-18. As Paul recounted his conversion (cf. 9:1-19; 22:1-21) he once again told of the light . . . brighter than the noonday sun (22:6). For the first time the reader is informed that the language of the heavenly voice was Aramaic, though it was implied because the spelling of Saul's name in 9:4 and 22:7 was Aramaic.

Some believe that the statement, It is hard for you to kick against the goads, means Paul had guilt feelings and was violating his conscience in persecuting believers in Christ. However, Paul wrote later that in spite of his blaspheming, violence, and persecution of the church he was shown mercy because he was acting in ignorance and unbelief (1 Tim. 1:13). Kicking the goads evidently referred to the futility of his persecuting the church.

The statement of Paul's commission (Acts 26:18) closely resembled the work of the Messiah, predicted in Isaiah 35:5; 42:7, 16; 61:1. As a representative of the Lord Jesus Christ, Paul did figuratively what the Lord Jesus will someday do on earth literally. Spiritually Paul had led many from the darkness of sin (John 3:19; 2 Cor. 4:4; Eph. 4:18; 5:8; Col. 1:13) to light in Christ (John 12:36; 2 Cor. 4:6; Eph. 5:8; Col. 1:12; 1 Thes. 5:5). This salvation releases from Satan's power (John 8:44; Heb. 2:14) and gives forgiveness of sins (Acts 2:38; 5:31; 10:43; 13:38; Eph. 1:7; Col. 1:14) and a spiritual inheritance (Rom. 8:17; Col. 1:12) with those who are sanctified, that is, those who are positionally set apart to God by His redeeming work (cf. 1 Cor. 1:30; Heb. 10:10; 13:12).

26:19-23. Paul's statement in verse 20 is something of a problem. He said he had preached to those in Damascus, then to those in Jerusalem and in all Judea. But Paul wrote the Galatians he was unknown in the churches of Judea (Gal. 1:22). Many have felt that there was an early textual corruption and that the Greek text should read, "To those in Damascus, then to those in Jerusalem, and throughout every country, both to Jews and Gentiles." Admittedly the present Greek text is rough (it changes from the dative case to the accusative), but this textual emendation is extremely speculative and unnecessary.

Probably Paul first summarized his ministry to the Jews and then described his work among Gentiles. He affirmed much the same in Acts 26:17-18. In other words Paul's statement here is not to be taken in strict chronological sequence but as a general overview of his ministry. First, he preached to Jews and then to Gentiles, in conformity with 1:8. Both groups needed to repent and turn to God. Frequently in Acts the apostles spoke of repentance (2:38; 3:19; 5:31; 8:22; 11:18; 13:24; 17:30; 19:4; 20:21).

Furthermore, Paul asserted, his message was a fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies (26:22; cf. 24:14; 28:23), concerning the death and resurrection of the Messiah. Frequently in Acts, the apostles also spoke of Christ's resurrection.

26:24-29. Festus, with his Greek outlook, thought the doctrine of the Resurrection was impossible (cf. 17:32; 23:6-7), so he interrupted Paul, though the apostle had already made his primary points. Festus said that Paul was out of his mind, that his education was driving him insane.

But Paul clearly asserted his sanity and then turned once again to Agrippa. None of this—that is, Christ's death and resurrection and the beginning of the church—could have escaped Agrippa's attention. He was well-schooled in Judaism, and Christianity was no esoteric secret society.

Finally Paul pressed the issue with a forthright question, King Agrippa, do you believe the prophets? (cf. 26:22) I know you do (cf. Paul's witness to Felix, 24:24).

Now Agrippa was in a corner. If he accepted the prophets he would be forced to admit Christ Jesus fulfilled them. His only escape was to parry the question with an interrogative of his own.

The NIV translation of 26:28 catches the spirit of Agrippa's question well. It was probably a joking rebuttal of Paul.

Paul took his response seriously, for he loved people for the Lord's sake. Even if it took a long time to win Agrippa to Christ, Paul was willing to take the time. He replied that he prayed that Agrippa and all who were listening to him would become like him (i.e., a Christian), except for these chains. (This is the first mention of chains on Paul since 22:29.) So Paul's defense came to a conclusion.

26:30-32. Already others had said Paul was innocent: Pharisees (23:9); Claudius Lysias, the commander in Jerusalem (23:29); and Governor Festus (25:25). Now Agrippa, a man of power, well-trained in Judaism and sympathetic with Jews, stated, This man could have been set free, if he had not appealed to Caesar.

4. THE CAPTIVITY AT ROME (CHAPS. 27–28)

a. The sea journey (chap. 27)

Why did Luke go into such lengthy detail about the voyage from Caesarea to Rome? There is no easy answer. (1) It may simply be a device to emphasize Paul's journey to and his arrival at Rome. As the Gospel writers stressed the Lord's final approach to Jerusalem and His last days there to heighten the impact of His death and resurrection, so Luke climaxed his Luke-Acts work with the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom to Gentiles in the Roman capital.

(2) Luke may have used the example of great ancient epics of his day which commonly employed the theme of a storm and shipwreck. This would parallel the modern use of a chase scene in a movie or television drama. The problem with this view is a simple one. How does this contribute to Luke's purpose in writing? Simply following the example of ancient epics would not really add to the book.

(3) Possibly the writer desired to show a parallel with Jonah and his storm (Jonah 1:4-15). After Jonah lived through the storm by miraculous means he preached to a large Gentile capital city. The comparison with Paul is obvious.

(4) The purpose of this account is to show God's sovereign protection and direction in Paul's ministry. It was God's will for the apostle to minister the gospel in Rome.

(5) It was Luke's intention to show Paul's leadership and thereby to underscore the fact that God's program had become primarily Gentile and therefore Paul was God's man of the hour. In the account Paul certainly does come off as the one who is in control even in the spheres of ocean travel and shipwreck.

(6) Some think the story is something of an allegory. In the Old Testament the sea was portrayed as an enemy; so here it figures opposition to the spread of the gospel. In spite of all antagonism the good news of the kingdom will survive and will ultimately reach its predetermined goal. But this is so allegorical it is a highly improbable view.

The answer to the question of Luke's great emphasis on the journey to Rome may be a combination of answers 1, 3, 4, and 5, though it is difficult to be dogmatic.

27:1. Who and how many other prisoners accompanied Paul to Rome is an unanswered question. Nor is the reader informed as to why the others were being taken to the capital city.

The centurion . . . Julius, who is a primary character in this account, belonged to the Imperial Regiment, an honorary title given to certain troops. "Imperial" translates Sebastēs, meaning "revered" (cf. comments on 25:25). A "centurion" commanded 100 soldiers (cf. 10:1; 21:32 ["officers" in NIV]; 22:25-26; 23:17, 23; 24:23).

Use of the pronoun we indicates Luke accompanied Paul on this journey.

27:2-3. Adramyttium, the home base of the ship, was east-southeast of Troas in northwest Asia Minor. Evidently the ship was making its last journey to its base before the stormy winter sailing season set in. Apparently the centurion wanted to find a ship bound for Rome along the way or to get to the Egnatian Road and use it to transport the prisoners.

Aristarchus evidently accompanied Paul to be his helper. Aristarchus stayed with Paul during his Roman incarceration (Col. 4:10; Phile. 24).

Interestingly Paul had friends in Sidon, the ship's first port of call after leaving Caesarea. The kindness of this centurion is mindful of another centurion's kindness (Acts 24:23).

27:4-8. The information in these verses points up the difficulty of sailing from east to west in the Mediterranean Sea. The prevailing winds blew from the west so the ships would sail to the east of Cyprus and proceed with difficulty along the southwest coast of Asia Minor and to the east of Crete. When Paul sailed in the opposite direction, the ship took a more direct route (21:1-3).

In Myra, a port city on the south coast of Asia Minor, the centurion found an Alexandrian ship sailing for Italy. This was a grain ship (27:38) large enough to carry 276 passengers (v. 37). Egypt was Rome's breadbasket. The grain ships would commonly sail north to Asia Minor and then make their way west across the Mediterranean using the islands for as much protection as they could obtain from them.

Paul's journey on this second ship took him from Myra toward the island of Cnidus and then southwest to the south side of Crete, to a place called Fair Havens. The Cretans were known for their laziness and depravity (Titus 1:12). Later Paul wrote to Titus to appoint elders for that island's churches (Titus 1:5).

27:9-12. The Fast referred to here was probably the Day of Atonement which occurred in late September to early October. After that time of year the unsettled weather patterns over the Mediterranean Sea made sailing hazardous. In those days sea traffic ceased by early November.

Paul was perhaps included in the ship's council because of his experiences in travel (cf. 2 Cor. 11:25, "three times I was shipwrecked") and his natural leadership. Contrary to Paul's advice the majority (Acts 27:11) decided it best to sail on to a more commodious harbor and to winter there. The authority rested ultimately in the hands of the centurion because grain ships were considered to be in government service. So they sailed along the southern coast of Crete. They hoped to reach the harbor of Phoenix.

27:13-17. Once caught by a sudden Northeaster, a hurricane-like wind, they could not remain in the protection of Crete and were driven helplessly into the open sea. Cauda, a small island 25 miles south of Crete, provided a brief respite from the teeth of the wind. While they were south of the island they hauled in the lifeboat which was normally pulled in tow but now was probably full of water.

What is meant by they passed ropes under the ship itself to hold it together is not positively clear. It probably means the sailors encircled the boat with ropes so that the beams would not separate and leak more water from the pressure of the sea and storm.

The sandbars of Syrtis were located off Libya of North Africa. The Greek word translated sea anchor is skeuos and literally means "vessel" or "equipment," so it could refer to any gear. Probably, however, it was an anchor.

27:18-26. The storm raged on; so the next day they threw the cargo overboard and the day after that the ship's tackle. So awesome was the storm that after many days, they gave up all hope of getting out of the situation alive.

The passengers and probably also the crew had gone . . . without food for a number of days. Perhaps the storm had destroyed much of the supplies; some evidently were seasick; and perhaps many were too discouraged to eat (cf. v. 33). After Paul reminded them of the advice he gave earlier at Crete (cf. v. 10), he encouraged them with a message from God. This was not the first time a vision had lifted Paul's spirits (cf. 18:9-10; 23:11); in fact, in the Jerusalem vision (23:11) God promised Paul not only safety there but ultimately a safe journey to Rome. Here too God (through an angel) promised that Paul would stand trial before Caesar. Twice Paul urged his shipmates (all 275 of them; cf. 27:37) to keep up their courage (vv. 22, 25). The verb "to keep up one's courage" (euthymeō) is used only three times in the New Testament—twice here and in James 5:13 ("to be happy"). The verb has the idea of having good feelings or being in good spirits. Even as a prisoner Paul did not hesitate to make known his faith in God.

27:27-32. The Adriatic Sea was a term used in New Testament times of the sea not only between Italy and Greece but also south of Italy and Sicily to Malta. After two weeks in the storm the sailors finally sensed they were coming to some land. The water was becoming shallower (from 120 feet to 90 feet). Their soundings were made by throwing into the water a line with lead on it (bolisantes, "took soundings," is lit., "heaving the lead") and thereby judging the water's depth. As they came into even shallower water they dropped four anchors. Paul warned the centurion that the sailors attempting to escape needed to stay with the ship (cf. v. 24). The soldiers cut . . . the lifeboat loose which meant that all aboard could only depend on the Lord God for deliverance.

27:33-35. Because of Paul's confidence in the Lord to keep them all safe (v. 24), he encouraged them to eat (vv. 33-34). He then took some bread, unashamedly thanked God for it, and broke it and started eating. Though this sounds like an observance of the Lord's Table, it probably was not. Most of those 276 people were not Christians. Rather it was a public testimony by Paul of his faith in the God and Father of the Lord Jesus as well as a practical expedient of eating in order to muster strength for the ordeal ahead.

27:36. Two problems were mentioned in verse 33—the people had "gone without food" for a fortnight and also had "been in constant suspense." But now they were all encouraged (lit., "they became of good spirits," euthymoi; cf. vv. 22, 25) and ate some food themselves—solving the two problems in verse 33.

27:37-38. This grain ship not only carried cargo but also had 276 passengers and crew members. The number of prisoners (v. 42) is not stated. This was not an excessively large ship, for Josephus wrote about a ship which he boarded to Italy which carried 600 passengers.

27:39-40. Seeing a bay with a sandy beach at dawn, they decided to try running the ship aground. They cut away the anchors and rudders . . . hoisted the foresail, and headed for the beach. The word "rudders" (pēdaliōn) literally describes the blades of oars and refers to paddle rudders extending from the sides of the ship. These were tied while the ship was at anchor.

27:41. The ship struck a sandbar which the sailors had not seen. Because of the beating of the waves, the back of the ship was broken to pieces while the bow was stuck in the sand.

27:42-44. Because soldiers were accountable with their own lives for any prisoners who escaped (cf. 12:19; 16:27) they planned to kill the prisoners to prevent any of them from swimming away and escaping. For the soldiers this was simply a matter of self-preservation.

The centurion, however, wanted to spare Paul's life. He saw the value and trustworthiness of this prisoner and so forestalled the soldiers' plan. Obviously God was sovereignly at work to spare Paul for ministry at Rome and to guarantee the fulfillment of his prediction (v. 24). In the cold rain (28:2) the passengers (soldiers and prisoners) and crewmen who could swim were urged to swim ashore, while the rest held onto the ship's debris.

As Paul had predicted, the ship was lost (27:22), they ran aground on an island (v. 26), and no one perished (v. 22).

b. The sojourn at Malta (28:1-10)

28:1-2. They were shipwrecked on Malta, a small island 60 miles south of Sicily. Malta had good harbors and was ideally located for trade. In two weeks the storm had carried them 600 miles west of Fair Havens, Crete. The islanders translates hoi barbaroi (lit., "the barbarians"), a Greek term used to refer to non-Greek-speaking people. This does not mean the people were savages or uncultured, but that their civilization was not Greek-oriented. They showed . . . unusual hospitality to the victims of the shipwreck, building them a fire and welcoming them.

28:3. Because the weather was cold (v. 2) a snake would be stiff and lethargic. Of course the heat of the fire would drive a viper from the flames and also make it more active.

28:4-6. Seeing that Paul was bitten by the snake the islanders concluded he was a murderer, now getting justice. But when he was unaffected by the viper's bite (with not even any swelling of his hand), the islanders superstitiously said that Paul was a god. No doubt Paul's response to this, though not recorded, was similar to his reaction at Lystra (14:8-18).

28:7-10. Publius took Paul and others (us included Luke) to his estate . . . for three days. One benefit of Paul's ministry was the healing of Publius' father (who had fever and dysentery) and the rest of the sick on the island. Interestingly Paul, besides not being harmed by the viper, was used by God to heal others. No wonder the islanders honored the shipwrecked men in many ways, even giving them supplies before they set sail three months later (v. 11). These supplies were no doubt given in gratitude for Paul's services.

c. The summation of service at Rome (28:11-31)

28:11. Since the crew and passengers left Crete in October or November ("after the Fast," 27:9) and were in the storm two weeks, their three months' stay on Malta brought them through the winter into February or March. In that time they saw another ship docked at the island. Because it was of Alexandrian origin, it too was probably a grain ship (cf. 27:6, 38) from Egypt that had spent the three months of winter, when it was too dangerous to sail, at a seaport on Malta. Probably it was at the Valletta harbor.

The twin gods Castor and Pollux on the ship's figurehead were the heavenly twin sons of Zeus and Leda according to Greek mythology; supposedly they brought good fortune to mariners. If their constellation, Gemini, was seen during a storm it was an omen of good luck. Possibly Luke included this detail to contrast the superstition of the people of Malta, Rome, Greece, and Egypt with Christianity.

28:12-14. The journey was carefully traced by Luke: from Malta to Syracuse, Sicily; to Rhegium (today Reggio) on the "toe" of Italy; to Puteoli (today Pozzuoli), 152 miles south of Rome; and finally to Rome itself. Puteoli was an important commercial seaport halfway between Rhegium and Rome. At Puteoli Paul and his companions found some brothers. This is significant because it shows that the gospel had already spread from Rome to this Italian seaport. No doubt a church had been planted in Rome by Roman Jews who had gone to the Pentecost feast, heard Peter's sermon, were saved, and returned home with the good news (2:10). Paul accepted the believers' invitation to spend a week with them. Perhaps the centurion was in charge of unloading the ship or else had to spend a week in Puteoli on some other business.

28:15. The Christians at Rome soon heard of Paul's coming, so they traveled as far as the Forum of Appius (a market town 43 miles from Rome) and the Three Taverns (33 miles from Rome) to meet him and his companions. The noun apantēsin, translated as an infinitive "to meet," was used in Greek literature of an entourage coming out of a city to meet an official going to the city. It is also used in 1 Thessalonians 4:17, which speaks of believers being "caught up . . . to meet (apantēsin) the Lord in the air." Like an entourage, believers will go up at the Rapture into the clouds to meet Jesus, their Savior and Lord, coming from heaven to take them to Himself. Paul looked forward to joining that group.

At the sight of these men Paul thanked God and was encouraged (lit., "received courage," tharsos; the verb tharseō is used in the LXX of people in distress who were then encouraged; cf. comments on Mark 6:50). At last God was bringing Paul to Rome. And the welcome of fellow believers, whom he had never met, uplifted his soul. So they proceeded on the Appian Way, "the queen of the long roads," to the city of Rome.

28:16. Because he was a trusted prisoner, Paul was allowed to live by himself, with a soldier to guard him. Paul's residence was in a rented house (v. 30).

28:17-20. The climax of the book is found in these closing verses (vv. 17, 24) which speak of another rejection of the gospel and of Paul's taking the message to Gentiles (v. 28).

As usual Paul first spoke with the Jews (cf. 9:20; 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2, 10, 17; 18:4, 19; 19:8). In this case he called . . . the leaders to meet with him because he could not go to their synagogues.

In his presentation Paul made several significant points: (1) He was innocent of damaging the Jews or their customs (28:17). (2) The Roman authorities in Judea thought Paul was innocent (v. 18; cf. 23:29; 25:25; 26:31-32). (3) Paul's only recourse was to appeal to Caesar because the Jews refused to deal with Paul justly (28:19; cf. 25:11). (4) This fourth point is a major one: he was not pressing charges against Israel; he only wanted to be acquitted (28:19). (5) His primary objective in calling the leaders was to talk with them about the hope of Israel. This term and concept was used by Paul a number of times in the last part of Acts (cf. 23:6; 24:15; 26:6-7). The hope of Israel was more than a resurrection; it meant fulfillment of the Old Testament promises to Israel (cf. 26:6-7). Paul firmly believed Jesus is the Messiah of Israel who will return someday and establish Himself as the King of Israel and Lord of the nations (cf. 1:6).

28:21-22. The response of the leaders was ambivalent: they said they knew nothing about Paul and their only reports about Christianity (this sect) were negative. One wonders if they were being truthful. How could Jewish leaders be unaware of Jews in Rome who had become Christians and also of the existence of tensions between the church and Judaism in Jerusalem? It is quite possible they had heard nothing of Paul, but they probably knew more than they acknowledged about Christianity. They were interested in hearing Paul's views since they knew that people were talking against his message.

28:23-24. In the Jewish leaders' second meeting with Paul, they were much more definitive in their responses to the gospel. This time they came in even larger numbers. The discussion was also longer. All day long Paul spoke of the kingdom of God and tried to convince them about Jesus from the Law of Moses and from the Prophets (cf. 24:14; 26:22).

The term "kingdom of God" includes the death and resurrection of Christ as its basis but also looks ahead to Christ's reign on earth. It is clearly eschatological in significance (cf. 1:3-6; 8:12; 14:22; 19:8; 20:25; Luke 1:33; 4:43; 6:20; 7:28; 8:1, 10; 9:2, 11, 27, 60, 62; 10:9, 11; 11:2, 20; 12:31-32; 13:18, 20, 28-29; 14:15; 16:16; 17:20-21; 18:16-17, 24-25, 29-30; 19:11; 21:31; 22:16, 18, 29-30; 23:42, 51). To the Jews the concept of the Messiah dying for sins as an atonement and the teaching of justification by faith as the way of entering the kingdom sounded strange.

The Jews were divided in their responses. Some were convinced . . . but others refused to believe (Acts 28:24). In Greek the verb "convinced" is in the imperfect tense and may be rendered, "began to be convinced," that is, they were not fully convinced. The same verb, used in verse 23, is translated, "tried to convince."

28:25-27. The disagreement among the Jewish leaders in Rome about Paul's message showed that they were not amenable to the gospel. With prophetic insight Paul applied the words of Isaiah (6:9-10) to his own contemporaries. Obstinate refusal to believe results in calloused hearts, deafened ears, and spiritually blinded eyes. This had happened to Israel both in Isaiah's day and in Paul's (cf. Rom. 11:7-10). Interestingly Paul ascribed Isaiah's words to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit (cf. Acts 4:25).

28:28. At the climax of this book and now for the final time the gospel focus was turned toward Gentiles. From Jerusalem to Rome most Jews rejected it and in city after city the message was then directed to non-Jews. Now in the capital of the Roman world the same phenomenon occurred; so it will be until the fullness of Gentiles comes (Rom. 11:19-26).

28:29. Some Greek manuscripts add, "After he said this, the Jews left, arguing vigorously among themselves" (NIV marg.). Probably this verse should not be included in the text, though this undoubtedly was their response (cf. v. 25).

28:30-31. These verses are Luke's final "progress report" (cf. 2:47; 6:7; 9:31; 12:24; 16:5; 19:20). With freedom in his own rented quarters Paul . . . preached God's kingdom. This eschatological expression indicates not only that Jews and Gentiles alike are justified by faith but also that Gentiles with Jews will participate in the millennial kingdom (cf. comments on 28:23).

One question commonly raised pertains to Paul's activities after this two-year captivity. What happened? Perhaps no charges were filed in Rome and Paul was released. The Jews would know they had no case against Paul outside of Judea and so would be reluctant to argue their cause in Rome.

Probably Paul returned to the provinces of Macedonia, Achaia, and Asia and then turned west to Spain according to his original plans (Rom. 15:22-28). Then he ministered once more in the Aegean area where he was taken prisoner, removed to Rome, and executed.

During this two-year period Paul wrote what are commonly called his "Prison Epistles"—Ephesians, Colossians, Philemon, and Philippians (see the chart "Paul's Epistles, Written on His Journeys and During His Imprisonments," at Acts 13:16-25).

While Paul was in Rome during this incarceration the gospel was not bound. He spoke boldly (cf. comments on Acts 4:13). The last word in the Greek text of Acts is the adverb akōlytōs which means without hindrance. Men may bind the preachers, but the gospel cannot be chained!

And so it was that the kingdom message under God's sovereign control went from Jew to Gentile, and from Jerusalem to Rome.

ROMANS

John A. Witmer

INTRODUCTION

This letter is the premier example of the epistolary form of writing, not only in the Pauline body of material and in the New Testament but also in all of ancient literature. It stands first in every list of the Apostle Paul's writings though it was not first in time of composition. This bears witness to the importance of the work both in its theme and in its content. It may also reflect the significance of the location of the letter's first readers, the imperial capital of Rome. In addition a possible tie grows out of the fact that the Book of Acts ends with Paul in Rome so that his letter to the Romans follows naturally in the order of Bible books.

Authorship. That Paul is the author of this letter is denied by almost no one. Even the ancient heretics admitted Romans was written by Paul. So do the modern (19th century and later) radical German critics, who deny many other facts in the Scriptures. Paul identified himself as the author by name, of course (1:1); but that is no guarantee of the acceptance of his authorship, since he did that in all his letters, including those for which his authorship is questioned or denied. In Romans Paul referred to himself by name only once, in contrast with several of his other letters; but a number of other internal details support Paul's authorship. He claimed to be of the tribe of Benjamin (11:1; cf. Phil. 3:5). He sent greetings to Priscilla and Aquila (Rom. 16:3), whom Paul had met in Corinth (Acts 18:2-3) and left in Ephesus (Acts 18:18-19) on his second missionary journey. Paul referred to his journey to Jerusalem with the love gift from the churches in Macedonia and Achaia (Rom. 15:25-27), facts confirmed in the Book of Acts (19:21; 20:1-5; 21:15, 17-19) and the epistles to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:1-5; 2 Cor. 8:1-12; 9:1-5). And Paul mentioned several times his intention to visit Rome (Rom. 1:10-13, 15; 15:22-32), a fact also confirmed in the Book of Acts (19:21). These confirming coincidences between Romans and Acts in particular support Paul as the author of this letter.

Unity. Acceptance of the unity and integrity of Romans is another matter, however. A number of critics from Marcion to the present have questioned chapters 15 and 16 or parts of both as belonging to the letter. Chapter 16 is a special target, in part because of Paul's greetings to Priscilla and Aquila (v. 3), who were last seen settled in Ephesus (Acts 18:19, 26). But the couple had previously lived in Italy (Acts 18:2) and had left only because of an imperial decree. Their return to Rome when circumstances permitted is reasonable. The major Greek manuscripts support the unity of the letter, a position endorsed by the overwhelming consensus of scholarship.

Recipients. A valid question does exist concerning the identity of the recipients of this letter. Paul simply addressed it "to all in Rome who are loved by God and called to be saints" (Rom. 1:7); he did not address it to "the church in Rome." That a church did exist in Rome is obvious, because Paul sent greetings to the church that met in the home of Aquila and Priscilla (16:5). Probably several churches were in Rome; perhaps this multiplicity of churches is why Paul addressed the letter to "the saints" instead of to "the church."

Were these believers in Rome Jews or Gentiles in ethnic background? The answer is both. Aquila, for example, was a Jew (Acts 18:2), as were Andronicus, Junias, and Herodion, all three identified as Paul's relatives (Rom. 16:7, 11). According to Josephus and others a large Jewish colony lived in Rome (cf. Acts 28:17-28). But Rome was a Gentile city, the capital of a Gentile empire in which all Jews, believing and unbelieving, formed a small minority. In addition, though Paul never failed to witness and to minister to Jews, his calling from God was to be "the apostle to the Gentiles" (Rom. 11:13; cf. 15:16). So it is reasonable to conclude that his readers were mostly Gentile in background.

This conclusion is supported by evidence in the letter. Paul addressed Jews directly (2:17), and he included Jewish Christians with himself when he spoke of "Abraham, our forefather" (4:1, 12). On the other hand Paul directly said, "I am talking to you Gentiles" (11:13). Several additional passages indicate that Gentile Christians made up a segment of his readers (11:17-31; 15:14-16). In fact the implication from 1:5, 13 is that Paul considered the Christian community in Rome predominantly Gentile.

Since the Apostle Paul had not yet visited Rome, how had the Christian faith been introduced to the city? Apparently no other apostle had yet reached Rome, in the light of Paul's stated purpose to be a pioneer missionary and to open virgin territory to the gospel (15:20). In particular, it is evident that Peter was not in Rome at that time because Paul expressed no greetings to him, a grievous error if Peter indeed were there.

Perhaps a partial answer to the founding of the church at Rome is the fact that "visitors from Rome" (Acts 2:10) were in the crowd that witnessed the miracle of Pentecost and heard Peter's sermon. Some of them probably were among the 3,000 converts that day and returned to Rome as believers in Jesus Christ to propagate their faith. Other believers migrated to Rome through the years since Pentecost, for Rome was a magnet that drew people from all over the empire for business and other reasons. Aquila and Priscilla are good examples. They had lived in Italy before (Acts 18:2), and undoubtedly returned as soon as circumstances permitted. Phoebe (Rom. 16:1-2), apparently the courier of this letter, is another example. She did not go to Rome primarily to deliver Paul's letter; she delivered Paul's letter because she was making a trip to Rome. In fact, Phoebe's planned trip to Rome was undoubtedly the specific occasion for Paul's writing this letter. Humanly speaking, Paul seized this opportunity to communicate with a group of Christians he was deeply interested in and planned to visit as soon as possible.

Just as Paul's absence of greeting to Peter in chapter 16 is evidence that Peter was not in Rome at the time, so his numerous greetings to individuals (28 persons are named or referred to, plus several groups) reveal the impact of Paul's ministry on the establishment and the development of the church in Rome. Many of the believers there were Paul's converts or associates in other parts of the empire. As a result Paul had a proprietary interest in the Christian community of Rome. He considered the church there one of his, as this letter bears witness.

Place and Date. Though Paul never named the city, it is obvious that he wrote this letter from Corinth, Cenchrea (16:1) being its eastern harbor. The letter was written at the close of Paul's third missionary journey during the "three months" he was in Greece (Acts 20:3) just before his return to Jerusalem with the offering from the churches of Macedonia and Achaia for the poor believers there (Rom. 15:26). After leaving Corinth, Paul was in Philippi during the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Acts 20:6) and desired to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (Acts 20:16). The letter was written, therefore, in the late winter or early spring of A.D. 57 or 58.

Purposes. While Phoebe's projected trip to Rome (Rom. 16:2) was undoubtedly the specific occasion for Paul's writing this letter, he had several objectives in writing. The most obvious was to announce his plans to visit Rome after his return to Jerusalem (15:24, 28-29; cf. Acts 19:21) and to prepare the Christian community there for his coming. The believers in Rome had been on Paul's heart and prayer list for a long time (Rom. 1:9-10) and his desire to visit them and to minister to them, unfulfilled to this point, was finally about to be satisfied (1:11-15; 15:22-23, 29, 32). Therefore Paul wanted to inform them of his plans and to have them anticipate and pray for their fulfillment (15:30-32).

A second purpose Paul had for writing this letter was to present a complete and detailed statement of the gospel message he proclaimed. Paul was eager "to preach the gospel also to you who are at Rome" (1:15) and he wanted them to know what it was. As a result in this letter Paul accomplished what Jude desired to do, "to write to you about the salvation we share" (Jude 3). Perhaps Jude was kept from doing this because Paul already had, for Romans certainly is a very full and logical presentation of the Triune Godhead's plan of salvation for human beings, from its beginning in man's condemnation in sin to its consummation in their sharing eternity in God's presence, conformed to the image of God's Son, the Lord Jesus Christ.

A third purpose for writing this letter is not as obvious as the first two. It is related to the tension between the Jewish and the Gentile segments in the Christian community at Rome and a possible conflict between them. Paul was hounded in his ministry by the Judaizers, who followed him from city to city and sought to lead his converts away from liberty in the gospel (Gal. 5:1). The letter to the Galatians is Paul's classic though not his only response to the Judaizers. Their attacks on Paul incorporated physical violence about the time this letter to the Romans was written (Acts 20:3). Whether the Judaizers had reached Rome before Paul or not, the Jew-versus-Gentile issue looms large in this letter. Paul did not take sides, but he carefully set forth both sides of the question. On the one hand he emphasized the historical and chronological priority of the Jews—"first for the Jew, then for the Gentile" (Rom. 1:16; cf. 2:9-10). He also stressed the "advantage . . . in being a Jew" (3:1-2; 9:4-5). On the other hand he pointed out that "since there is only one God" (3:30), He is the God of the Gentiles as well as the God of the Jews (3:29). As a result "Jews and Gentiles alike are all under sin" (3:9) and alike are saved by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and His redemptive and propitiatory sacrifice. Furthermore, in order to bring believing Gentiles into His program of salvation, extending His grace to all human beings, God temporarily halted His specific program for Israel as a chosen nation, since that nation through its official leaders and as a whole had rejected in unbelief God's Son as the Messiah. During this period God continues to have a believing "remnant chosen by grace" (11:5) "until the full number of the Gentiles has come in" (11:25) and God takes up again and fulfills His promises to Israel as a nation.

Related to the Jewish-Gentile tension that runs throughout this letter is a muted but definite undertone that questions God's goodness and wisdom and justice as seen in His plan of salvation. No complaints against God are voiced, but they are implied. As a result this letter to the Romans is more than an exposition of Paul's "gospel of God's grace" (Acts 20:24), a declaration of God's plan of salvation for all human beings by grace through faith. It is a theodicy, an apologetic for God, a defense and vindication of God's nature and His plan for saving people. It sets God forth "to be just and the One who justifies the man who has faith in Jesus" (Rom. 3:26). It exults in "the depth of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge of God" (11:33) and challenges the readers, "Let God be true, and every man a liar" (3:4).

Theme. Growing out of Paul's three purposes for writing this letter (especially the latter two purposes), is the theme of the work. In the simplest and most general terms it is "the gospel" (1:16). More specifically it is "a righteousness from God" which "is revealed" in that gospel and is understood and appropriated "by faith from first to last" (1:17). This "righteousness from God" is first the righteousness God Himself possesses and manifests in all His actions; and second, it is the righteousness that God gives to human beings by grace through faith. This involves an imputed righteous standing before God (justification) and an imparted righteous practice and a progressively transformed lifestyle, the latter due to the regenerating and indwelling Holy Spirit of God (regeneration and sanctification). Practice is consummated and conformed to standing (glorification) when a believer in Jesus Christ through death and resurrection or through translation—"our adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies" (8:23)—stands in the presence of God "conformed to the likeness of His Son" (8:29). God's program of salvation for people will not fail because it is His work, and "He who began a good work in you will carry it on to completion until the day of Christ Jesus" (Phil. 1:6).

COMMENTARY

I. Introductory Matters (1:1-17)

A. Epistolary greetings (1:1-7)

The customary formula for letters in ancient times included (a) naming and identifying the author, (b) naming and

Paul's Introductions to His Epistles

Epistle	Paul's Titles	Paul's Companions	Addressees	Greetings
Romans	Paul, a servant of Christ Jesus, called to be an apostle and set apart for the gospel	—	To all in Rome who are loved by God and called to be saints	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ.
1 Corinthians	Paul, called to be an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God	our brother Sosthenes	To the church of God in Corinth, to those sanctified . . . together with all those everywhere who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
2 Corinthians	Paul an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God	Timothy our brother	To the church of God in Corinth, together with all the saints throughout Achaia	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
Galatians	Paul an apostle—sent not from men nor by man, but by Jesus Christ and God the Father, who raised Him from the dead	and all the brothers with me	To the churches in Galatia	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
Ephesians	Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God	—	To the saints in Ephesus, the faithful in Christ Jesus	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
Philippians	Paul . . . servants of Christ Jesus	Timothy	To all the saints in Christ Jesus at Philippi	Grace and peace to you from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
Colossians	Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God	Timothy our brother	To the holy and faithful brothers in Christ at Colosse	Grace and peace to you from God our Father.
1 Thessalonians	Paul	Silas and Timothy	To the church of the Thessalonians in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ	Grace and peace to you.
2 Thessalonians	Paul	Silas and Timothy	To the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ	Grace and peace to you from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.
1 Timothy	Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the command of God our Savior and of Christ Jesus our hope	—	To Timothy, my true son in the faith	Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.
2 Timothy	Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, according to the promise of life that is in Christ Jesus	—	To Timothy, my dear son	Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.
Titus	Paul, a servant of God and an apostle of Jesus Christ	—	To Titus, my true son in our common faith	Grace and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Savior.
Philemon	Paul, a prisoner of Christ Jesus	Timothy our brother	To Philemon our dear friend and fellow worker, to Apphia our sister, to Archippus our fellow soldier, and to the church that meets in your home	Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

identifying the recipient, and (c) a word of salutation. Paul followed this formula in this letter to the Romans despite the lengthy digression precipitated by the word "gospel." The same formula is used in all the New Testament letters except Hebrews and 1 John. (See the chart, "Paul's Introductions to His Epistles.")

1:1. Paul identified himself first as a servant of Christ Jesus. "Servant" (doulos) means slave, a person owned by another. Paul wore this title gladly (Gal. 1:10; Titus 1:1), reveling in the Old Testament picture of a slave who in love binds himself to his master for life (Ex. 21:2-6).

Paul also identified himself as an apostle—one sent with delegated authority (cf. Matt. 10:1-2)—a position to which he was called. (Lit., the Gr. is, "a called apostle.") This calling was from God (Acts 9:15; Gal. 1:1), though it was acknowledged by men (Gal. 2:7-9). It involved being set apart (from aphorizō; cf. Acts 13:2) for the gospel of God, the message of good news from God that centered on "His Son" (Rom. 1:2, 9) which Paul was "eager to preach" (v. 15) without shame (v. 16). This setting apart did not keep Paul from making tents to support himself and his companions (Acts 20:34; 1 Thes. 2:9; 2 Thes. 3:8) nor from mingling freely with all levels of pagan society. It was a setting apart to something—a commitment and dedication, not from things in isolation like the Pharisees. (Interestingly the word "Pharisee" means "separated one" in the sense of being isolated and segregated.)

1:2. The phrase Holy Scriptures refers obviously to the Old Testament and occurs only here in the New Testament (2 Tim. 3:15 uses different Gr. words for "holy" and "Scriptures"). Paul did not quote any prophets where the gospel was promised, but Philip's use of Isaiah 53:7-8 with the Ethiopian eunuch is a good example (Acts 8:30-35; cf. Luke 24:25-27, 45-47).

1:3-4. God's good news concerns His Son, identified as Jesus Christ our Lord. This asserts Christ's deity as basic to His person and prior to His Incarnation, since His identification with David's line "came to be," a literal rendering of the participle genomenou, translated was. He was genuinely human too, as His tie with David and His resurrection from the dead show. That resurrection declared Him to be the Son of God because it validated His claims to deity and His predictions that He would rise from the dead (John 2:18-22; Matt. 16:21). This declaration was made through (lit., "in accord with") the Spirit of holiness. This is the Holy Spirit, and not, as some have suggested, Christ's human spirit.

1:5-7. Paul's ministry from Jesus was among all the Gentiles, which included the Romans, whom Paul addressed not as a church but as individual believers. Paul was the human agent (from and for Christ he received grace and apostleship, i.e., "the grace of apostleship"; cf. 12:3; 15:15) but the calling (God's summons to salvation; cf. 8:28, 30) came from the Lord and set his readers apart as "saints." Obedience and faith are often linked (cf. 15:18; 16:26; also cf. 1 Peter 1:2). Just as Paul was a "called" apostle, so the believers in Rome were called to belong to Jesus Christ (lit., "called of Jesus Christ") and called to be saints (lit., "called saints").

Paul's salutation like that in all his epistles, expressed the desire that they enjoy God's grace and peace.

B. Establishing rapport (1:8-15)

1:8-15. Paul made a practice of beginning his letters with a word of thanks to God, a specific prayer, and a personal message to the recipients. For the Romans he rejoiced that news of their faith had spread all over the world, a hyperbole meaning throughout the Roman Empire. His constant intercession for them (vv. 9-10) had the new note of petition for his projected visit, a heart-desire of long standing that finally was definitely on Paul's agenda (v. 10; cf. 15:23-24). This visit would be mutually beneficial spiritually; he desired to minister for three purposes: (a) to the strengthening of the Romans (1:11; to impart . . . some spiritual gift means either to exercise his own spiritual gift on their behalf or to bestow on them spiritual favors, i.e., blessings); (b) to see some spiritual fruit (a harvest, v. 13) among them and, in turn, (c) to be strengthened by them (v. 12). In this sense Paul's ministry at Rome would be the same as in other centers of the empire.

As a result of his "apostleship" (v. 5) to the Gentiles Paul felt obligated (lit., "I am a debtor") to the entire human race to proclaim God's good news (vv. 14-15). The word translated non-Greeks is literally, "barbarians," all other human beings from the viewpoint of the Greeks (cf. Col. 3:11). Parallel to it is the word foolish (anoētois; cf. Titus 3:3) in the next couplet, which has the significance of uncultured. Paul's sense of debt to the Gentile world produced an eagerness (I am so eager, Rom. 1:15) to evangelize it, including Rome, capital of the empire.

C. Emphasizing theme (1:16-17)

1:16. Paul's eagerness to evangelize sprang also from his estimate of his message, the gospel. (This is the fourth of five times Paul used the word "gospel" in these opening verses: vv. 1, 9, 15-17.) Many consider this the theme of the letter, which it is in one sense. At least Paul gladly proclaimed it as God's panacea for mankind's spiritual need. He identified it as the infinite resources (dynamis, "spiritual ability") of God applied toward the goal of salvation in the life of everyone who believes regardless of racial background. He recognized, however, a priority for the Jew expressed in the word first, which has sufficient textual support here and is unquestioned in 2:9-10.

Because the Jews were God's Chosen People (11:1), the custodians of God's revelation (3:2), and the people through whom Christ came (9:5), they have a preference of privilege expressed historically in a chronological priority. As the Lord Jesus stated it, "Salvation is from the Jews" (John 4:22). In Paul's ministry he sought out the Jews first in every new city (Acts 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2, 10, 17; 18:4, 19; 19:8). Three times he responded to their rejection of his message by turning to the Gentiles (Acts 13:46; 18:6; 28:25-28; cf. comments on Eph. 1:12). Today evangelism of the world must include the Jews, but the priority of the Jews has been fulfilled.

1:17. The theme of the letter is expressed in the phrase a righteousness from God is revealed. The subjective genitive (lit., "of God") identifies this as a righteousness that God provides for people on the basis of and in response to faith in the gospel (cf. 3:22). (NIV's by faith from first to last renders the Gr. ek pisteōs eis pistin, lit., "out of faith in reference to faith.") Such a righteousness is totally unachieveable by human efforts. This righteousness is not God's personal attribute, however, since it comes "from God," it is consistent with His nature and standard. Robertson happily calls it "a God kind of righteousness" (A.T. Robertson, Word Pictures in the New Testament. Nashville: Broadman Press, 1943, 4:327). In response to faith this righteousness is imputed by God in justification and imparted progressively in regeneration and sanctification, culminating in glorification when standing and state become identical. "Righteousness" and "justify," though seemingly unrelated in English, are related in Greek. "Righteousness" is dikaiosynē, and "justify" is dikaioō. Paul used the noun many times in his epistles, including 28 times in Romans (1:17; 3:21-22, 25-26; 4:3, 5-6, 9, 11, 13, 22; 5:17, 21; 6:13, 16, 18-20; 8:10; 9:30; 10:3-6 [twice in v. 3], 10; 14:17). And Paul used the Greek verb 15 times in Romans (2:13; 3:4, 20, 24, 26, 28, 30; 4:2, 5; 5:1, 9; 6:7; 8:30 [twice], 33). To justify a person is to declare him forensically (legally) righteous. "Declared righteous" is the way the NIV translates dikaioō in 2:13 and 3:20 and "freed" is NIV's rendering in 6:7.

Paul's closing words in 1:17, The righteous will live by faith, are a quotation from Habakkuk 2:4, also quoted in Galatians 3:11 and Hebrews 10:38. As a result of faith (cf. "believes" in Rom. 1:16) in Christ, a person is declared "righteous" (cf. 3:22) and is given eternal life. What a marvelous work of God!

II. God's Righteousness Revealed in Condemnation (1:18–3:20)

The first step in the revelation of the righteousness that God provides for people by faith is to set forth their need for it because they are under God's judgment. The human race stands condemned before God and is helpless and hopeless apart from God's grace.

A. Condemnation against pagan humanity (1:18-32)

This section looks at the human race prior to the call of Abram and the establishment of a special people of God. This situation persisted in the pagan world of the Gentiles as distinct from the Jews.

1. REASONS FOR CONDEMNATION (1:18-23)

God never condemns without just cause. Here three bases are stated for His judgment of the pagan world.

a. For suppressing God's truth (1:18)

1:18. This verse serves as a topic sentence for this entire section. In addition, it stands in contrastive parallel to verse 17. The continuing revelation (the verb is being revealed is in the pres. tense) of the wrath of God is an expression of His personal righteousness (which also "is being revealed," Gr., v. 17) and its opposition to human sinfulness. Therefore people need the continuing revelation of "a righteousness from God" (v. 17) that He provides. God's wrath is directed against all the godlessness (asebeian, "lack of proper reverence for God") and wickedness (adikian, "unrighteousness") of men, not against the men as such. (God's wrath will also be revealed in the future; cf. 2:5.) God hates sin and judges it, but loves sinners and desires their salvation.

Failure to give God His due inevitably results in failure to treat people, created by God in His image, the right way. Conversely, people (in their unrighteousness toward others) continue to suppress (katechontōn, lit., "holding down") the truth (cf. 1:25; 2:8) concerning both God and man. People had God's truth but suppressed it, refusing to heed it. And these wicked ones did this in an attitude of wickedness (en adikia). This suppression of the truth is Paul's first reason for God's condemnation of the pagan world.

b. For ignoring God's revelation (1:19-20)

These verses declare that knowledge concerning God is available to all. This knowledge is called natural revelation because it is seen in the created world, is accessible to the entire human race, and is not soteriological, dealing with salvation effected by Christ.

1:19. Paul called this knowledge plain (phaneron), which means visible or clear. This is true because God has made it plain (ephanerōsen, the verb related to the noun phaneron). Some scholars translate the phrase to them as "in them," insisting that verse 19 is speaking of the knowledge of God within the being of man through conscience and religious consciousness. Preferable is the position that verse 19 states the fact of natural revelation and verse 20 explains the process. One support for this view is the word "for" which begins verse 20 and indicates a tie between the verses.

1:20. "What may be known about God" (v. 19) is now called God's invisible qualities and identified as His eternal power and divine nature. Since "God is spirit" (John 4:24), all His qualities are invisible to physical eyes and can be understood by the human mind only as they are reflected in what has been made, that is, in God's creative work. The self-existent God, however, is the Creator of all things, and therefore since the Creation of the world His "invisible qualities" have been clearly seen. Paul may have intended a play on words between the noun translated "invisible qualities" (aorata) and the verb translated "clearly seen" (kathoratai) because they share a common Greek root. Both the verb "clearly seen" and the participle "being understood" are in the present tense, which emphasizes the continuous nature of the action. The word theiotēs, translated "divine nature," occurs only here in the New Testament and embraces the properties which make God God. Creation, which people see, reveals God's unseen character—the all-powerful Deity. An Old Testament parallel to these verses is Psalm 19:1-6.

Paul's conclusion to this description of natural revelation is important—men are without excuse. The witness to God in nature is so clear and so constant that ignoring it is indefensible. Their condemnation is based not on their rejecting Christ of whom they have not heard, but on their sinning against the light they have.

c. For perverting God's glory (1:21-23)

1:21. This reason for God's condemnation of the pagan world builds on the preceding one just as that one built on the first. The relationship is seen in the use of the same Greek connective (dioti) at the beginning of verses 19 and 21, in the latter translated for. People's suppression of the truth is seen in their rejecting the clear evidence of God as the sovereign Creator and their perversion of that knowledge into idolatry.

The clause although they knew God refers to an original experiential knowledge of God such as Adam and Eve had both before and after the Fall. How long this knowledge of God continued before it was perverted is not stated, but God was known by people. This fact makes human actions all the more reprehensible. One would suppose that to know God would be to honor Him, but these people neither glorified Him as God nor gave thanks to Him. They turned from the very purpose for which God made them: to glorify Him for His Person and thank Him for His works. With such willful rebellion against God it is little wonder that their thinking became futile (emataiōthēsan, lit., "became worthless, purposeless"; cf. Eph. 4:17) and their foolish (asynetos, "morally senseless"; cf. Rom. 1:31) hearts were darkened (cf. Eph. 4:18). When truth is rejected, in time the ability to recognize and to receive truth is impaired (cf. John 3:19-20).

1:22-23. When the true Source of wisdom is rejected (cf. Ps. 111:10), people's claim to be wise is an idle boast. Progressively they became fools (emōranthēsan, lit., "became stupid"), a reality demonstrated by the worship as gods of idols in the forms of people and animals (cf. Rom. 1:25). The ultimate irony in humanity's refusal to glorify the true God is the insanity or stupidity of idolatry described in Isaiah 44:9-20. Man's refusal to acknowledge and glorify God leads to a downward path: first, worthless thinking; next, moral insensitivity; and then, religious stupidity (seen in idol-worship).

2. RESULTS OF CONDEMNATION (1:24-32)

In a real sense the results of God's condemnation on rebellious humanity are nothing more than the natural consequences of suppressing truth, ignoring revelation, and perverting God's glory. However, God did more than simply let nature take its course. God acted to abandon (the thrice-mentioned "gave them over" [vv. 24, 26, 28] is paredōken, "abandoned") people to expressions of a corrupt lifestyle that deserved God's wrath and the sentence of death (v. 32).

a. Abandoned to fornication (1:24-25)

1:24. One aspect of mankind's corruption (to which God actively let people go) was sexual profligacy. The frequency of live-in lovers, wife-swapping, and group sex parties today only confirms this result of God's abandonment. Sex within marriage is a holy gift from God, but otherwise sex is impurity (lit., "uncleanness") and the degrading of . . . bodies by using them contrary to God's intent.

1:25. In a sense this verse repeats the truth of verse 23, but it expresses more. The truth of God is not only the truth concerning God but also God's truth concerning all things, including mankind. This truth is that people are creatures of God and can find true fulfillment only in worshiping and obediently serving God the Creator. A lie (lit., "the lie") on the other hand says that the creature—angelic (Isa. 14:13-14; John 8:44) or human (Gen. 3:4-5)—can exist independent of God, self-sufficient, self-directing, and self-fulfilling. Mankind made himself his god in place of the true God. Because God the Creator is forever praised (in contrast with creatures who are undeserving of worship), Paul added Amen. This word transliterates in both Greek and English the Hebrew word meaning "so let it be." As an affirmation, not a wish, it places approval on what has just been said (cf. comments on 2 Cor. 1:20).

b. Abandoned to sexual perversion (1:26-27)

1:26-27. Also God gave them over to shameful lusts (lit., "passions of disgrace"). This involved, as the text states, both sexes engaging in homosexual instead of heterosexual relationships. Women deliberately exchanged natural relations (with men in marriage) for unnatural ones (with other women). This is the second "exchange" the unregenerate made (cf. v. 25). Men . . . were inflamed with lust (orexei, "sexual lust," used only here in the NT and differing from the more common word for lust in v. 26).

The words translated women and men in these verses are the sexual words "females" and "males." Contemporary homosexuals insist that these verses mean that it is perverse for a heterosexual male or female to engage in homosexual relations but it is not perverse for a homosexual male or female to do so since homosexuality is such a person's natural preference. This is strained exegesis unsupported by the Bible. The only natural sexual relationship the Bible recognizes is a heterosexual one (Gen. 2:21-24; Matt. 19:4-6) within marriage. All homosexual relations constitute sexual perversion and are subject to God's judgment. Such lustful and indecent acts have within them the seeds of punishment (due penalty).

c. Abandoned to depraved lifestyle (1:28-32)

1:28. Pagan humanity's rebellion also included the rejection of the knowledge (epignōsei, "full knowledge"; cf. v. 32) of God. In a sense they put God out of their minds. God's responding judgment was abandonment (cf. vv. 24, 26) to a depraved (adokimon, "disapproved") mind, which expressed itself in attitudes and actions that ought not to be done (lit., "what is unfitting or improper," a technical Stoic word).

1:29-31. The mental vacuum created by dismissing God was filled (the perf. tense implies filled full) with four forms of active sin: wickedness (adikia; cf. v. 18), evil (ponēria), greed, and depravity (kakia, "badness or malice"). These four in turn express themselves in 17 more specific types of wickedness. The first two, envy and murder, sound much alike in Greek: phthonou and phonou. Also the four vices in verse 31 each begin with the Greek letter alpha ("a" in Eng.).

1:32. This whole pattern of evil becomes the lifestyle of people who continue to do (pres. tense implies continuing or habitual action) these very things in open defiance of God, a defiance aggravated (a) by fully knowing (epignontes; cf. v. 28) that such things deserve death and (b) by encouraging others in the same lifestyle. Such extremity of human rebellion against God fully warrants God's condemnation.

B. Condemnation according to divine standards (2:1-16)

1. TRUTHFULNESS (2:1-4)

2:1. In any generalization such as the preceding blanket indictment of pagan humanity (1:18-32) exceptions to the rule always exist. Obviously some pagans had high ethical standards and moral lifestyles and condemned the widespread moral corruption of their contemporaries. In addition the Jews morally stood in sharp contrast with the pagan world around them and freely condemned the Gentiles. Both groups of moralists might conclude that God's condemnation did not apply to them because of their higher planes of living. But Paul insisted that they also stood condemned because they were doing the same things for which they judged others.

Therefore, Paul declared, at whatever point you judge the other, you are condemning yourself. Everyone in the entire human race has turned away from God and commits sins even though there are differences of frequency, extent, and degree. In addition the entire human race, especially moral pagans and the Jews, stood condemned before God (and have no excuse [cf. 1:20]) because God's judgment is based on three divine standards—truth (2:2-4), impartiality (vv. 5-11), and Jesus Christ Himself (vv. 12-16)—which are absolute and infinite, condemning every person.

2:2-3. The first divine standard of judgment is truth. Nowhere in Scripture is God identified as "Truth" as He is as "Spirit" (John 4:24), "Light" (1 John 1:5) and "Love" (1 John 4:8, 16), though Jesus did call Himself "the Truth" (John 14:6). But God is called "the God of truth" (Ps. 31:5; Isa. 65:16). Truth—absolute, infinite truth—is unquestionably one of God's essential attributes. As a result when God's judgment of people is declared to be based on (lit. "according to") "truth," no escape from that judgment is possible for anyone. All are without "excuse" (Rom. 2:1) and without "escape." One may be moral and he may even judge his contemporaries as totally enmeshed in a depraved lifestyle, but yet he is judged by God because he does the same things (cf. v. 1).

2:4. By not exacting His divine penalty on sinful humanity immediately, God is displaying the riches of His kindness (chrēstotētos, "benevolence in action," also used of God in 11:22; Eph. 2:7; Titus 3:4), tolerance, and patience (cf. Acts 14:16; 17:30; Rom. 3:25). God's purpose is to lead people toward repentance—a return to Him—through His kindness. (This word for "kindness" is chrēstos, a synonym of chrēstotētos, also trans. "kindness," used earlier in the verse.) Both words mean "what is suitable or fitting to a need." Chrēstos is used of God in Luke 6:35 and 1 Peter 2:3 and of people in Ephesians 4:32. Not realizing (lit., "being ignorant of") God's purpose, people showed contempt for (kataphroneis, "you thought down on") God's attributes and actions (cf. "suppress the truth," Rom. 1:18). People knew of God's Being through natural revelation (1:19-21, 28), but did not know the purpose of His kindness.

2. IMPARTIALITY (2:5-11)

2:5-6. Why are people ignorant of God's intention to be kind? (v. 4) And why do they despise it? It is because of their stubbornness (lit., "hardness"; sklērotēta, whence the Eng. "sclerosis") and their unrepentant heart(s). So God's wrath against people's sins is being stored up like a great reservoir until the day when it will all be poured forth in His righteous judgment. On that day God will give to each person according to what He has done (quotation of Ps. 62:12 and Prov. 24:12). God's judging will be based on the standard of truth (Rom. 2:2) and it will be impartial (v. 11).

2:7-11. God will bestow eternal life on those who by persistence in doing good seek (pres. tense, "keep on seeking") glory, honor, and immortality. On the other hand wrath and anger will be the portion of the self-seeking . . . who reject (lit., "keep on disobeying") the truth and follow (pres. tense, "keep on obeying") evil (adikia, "unrighteousness"; cf. 1:18). Each one who does ("keeps on producing") evil will receive trouble and distress, whereas each one who does ("keeps on working") good will have glory, honor (cf. "glory and honor" in 2:7), and peace. This just recompense by God is without regard to ethnic background or any other consideration except what each person has done.

A person's habitual conduct, whether good or evil, reveals the condition of his heart. Eternal life is not rewarded for good living; that would contradict many other Scriptures which clearly state that salvation is not by works, but is all of God's grace to those who believe (e.g., Rom. 6:23; 10:9-10; 11:6; Eph. 2:8-9; Titus 3:5). A person's doing good shows that his heart is regenerate. Such a person, redeemed by God, has eternal life. Conversely a person who continually does evil and rejects the truth shows that he is unregenerate, and therefore will be an object of God's wrath.

The statement first for the Jew, then for the Gentile (lit. "Greek") does not imply special consideration for Jews. Instead, in the light of the divine standard of impartiality (God does not show favoritism), it emphasizes that the entire human race is dealt with by God.

The phrase "the day of God's . . . judgment" (Rom. 2:5) taken by itself may seem to lend support to the idea of a single general judgment of all humanity. However, the Scriptures do not support such a concept. This phrase must be interpreted in conjunction with passages which clearly indicate that several judgments of different groups occur at different times (cf. judgment of Israel at Christ's Second Advent, Ezek. 20:32-38; the judgment of Gentiles at Christ's Second Advent, Matt. 25:31-46; the great white throne judgment, Rev. 20:11-15). The focus of this passage is on the fact that God will judge all peoples, not on the details of who will be judged when.

3. JESUS CHRIST (2:12-16)

2:12. God's impartiality in judgment is also seen in the fact that He will deal with people in accordance with the dispensation in which they live. "The Law was given through Moses" (John 1:17), which marks the beginning of the dispensation of Law. The Law was provided for God's Chosen People Israel, and the Gentiles were considered outside the Law. Therefore Paul declared, All who (lit., "as many as") sin apart from the Law (lit., "without Law") will also perish apart from the Law. Gentiles who sin will perish, but the Law of Moses will not be used as a standard of judgment against them. On the other hand the Jews who sin under (lit., "in the sphere of") the Law will be judged by the Law. The Gentiles are not excused from God's judgment, but they will not be judged according to the standard (the Mosaic Law) that was not given to them.

2:13. Reading the Mosaic Law was a regular part of each synagogue service, so that Jews were those who hear the Law.

However, being recognized as righteous was not the automatic concomitant of being a Jew and hearing the Law. Those who will be declared righteous (a forensic action usually trans. "justified," e.g., 3:24; see comments on 1:17 on "justify") are those who obey the Law (lit., "the doers of the Law"). James made the same point (James 1:22-25). Again (cf. comments on Rom. 2:7-10) God does not give eternal life or justification to those who perform good works, but to those who believe (trust) in Him and whose conduct reveals their regenerate hearts.

2:14-15. The Jews looked down on the Gentiles partly because they did not have the revelation of God's will in the Mosaic Law. But, as Paul pointed out, there are moral Gentiles who do by nature things required by the Law. Such persons show that the Law is not to be found only on tablets of stone and included in the writings of Moses; it is also inscribed in their hearts and is reflected in their actions, consciences, and thoughts. The Law given to Israel is in reality only a specific statement of God's moral and spiritual requirements for everyone. Moral Gentiles by their actions show that the requirements (lit., "the work") of the Law are written on their hearts. This is confirmed by their consciences, the faculty within human beings that evaluates their actions, along with their thoughts that either accuse or excuse them of sin. This is why Paul called such Gentiles a law for themselves (v. 14).

Conscience is an important part of human nature, but it is not an absolutely trustworthy indicator of what is right. One's conscience can be "good" (Acts 23:1; 1 Tim. 1:5, 19) and "clear" (Acts 24:16; 1 Tim. 3:9; 2 Tim. 1:3; Heb. 13:18), but it can also be "guilty" (Heb. 10:22), "corrupted" (Titus 1:15), "weak" (1 Cor. 8:7, 10, 12), and "seared" (1 Tim. 4:2). All people need to trust the Lord Jesus Christ so that "the blood of Christ" might "cleanse [their] consciences" (Heb. 9:14).

2:16. The Greek text of this verse begins with the phrase "in the day." The words this will take place are not in the Greek but are supplied to tie this verse back to the main idea of this section (vv. 5-13), namely, God's righteous judgment (v. 5). Verses 14-15 are actually a parenthetic idea (as indicated in the NIV). This was brought to mind by verse 13 and the Jewish prejudice against the Gentiles. The certainty of divine judgment is emphasized by the words God will judge (lit., "God judges"). The Agent of divine judgment is Jesus Christ (cf. John 5:22, 27; Acts 17:31). This judgment will deal with men's secrets (lit., "the hidden things of men") and will reveal those things and prove God's judgment right (cf. 1 Cor. 4:5). Paul's gospel is not the standard of God's judgment. The idea is that the righteous judgment of God is an essential ingredient of the gospel Paul preached and a reason for trusting Jesus' finished redemption.

In this section (2:1-16) God is seen as the Creator-Sovereign of the universe conducting the moral government of His human creatures. God's absolute standards are known. God punishes the wicked and rewards the righteous impartially according to their works, which reveal their hearts. Since no human being—Jesus Christ excepted—can be declared righteous (justified) by God on the basis of his own merit, every human is condemned by God. At this point in Paul's argument the way a person can secure a righteous standing before God has not yet been presented. Here the emphasis is on the justice of God's judgment, leading to the conclusion that nobody on his own can be declared righteous by God.

C. Condemnation against unfaithful Jews (2:17–3:8)

1. CONDEMNATION BECAUSE OF THEIR HYPOCRISY (2:17-24)

2:17-20. Paul undoubtedly had the Jews as well as moral Gentiles in mind in the group he addressed as "you who pass judgment on someone else" (v. 1). But there he did not refer to them by name as he did here—if you call yourself a Jew (lit., "if you are named a Jew"). In Greek this is a first-class conditional sentence in which the conditional statement is assumed to be true. Paul was addressing individuals who were truly called Jews and who, in fact, gloried in that name. This fact is followed by a list of eight other moral and religious details in which the Jews gloried in their sense of superiority to the Gentiles, all of these included as part of the "if" clause (vv. 17-21a).

The verbs used in this list are all in the present tense or have the force of the present, which emphasizes the habitual nature of the action: (1) The Jews rely on the Law; they put their confidence in the fact that God gave it to them. (2) The Jews brag about their relationship to God (lit., "boast in God"; cf. v. 23), which means they glory in their covenantal ties with God. As a result of these two things the Jews (3) know His will (they have an awareness of God's desires and plan) and they (4) approve of (dokimazeis, "to test and approve what passes the test") what is superior (diapheronta, "the things that differ and as a result excel"; the same Gr. word in Phil. 1:10 is trans. "what is best"). They have a concern for spiritually superior standards. These abilities of Jews exist because they (5) are instructed (lit., "are being instructed") by the Law. Their catechetical lessons as youths and the regular reading of the Law in the synagogues provided this continuing instruction.

Though the next verb (in Rom. 2:19) continues the first-class conditional structure begun in verse 17, it also marks a transition of thought. It is the perfect tense of a verb which means "to seek to persuade," in which tense it has the meaning "to believe." (6) Many Jews were convinced and as a result believed certain things about themselves in relationship to Gentiles. Paul listed four of these: a guide for the blind, a light for those who are in the dark, an instructor (paideutēn, "one who disciplines, a trainer") of the foolish, and a teacher of infants. (7) This belief by Jews rested in their having in the Law the embodiment (morphōsin, "outline, semblance"; used elsewhere in the NT only in 2 Tim. 3:5) of knowledge and truth (the Gr. has the definite article "the" with both nouns: "the knowledge and the truth").

2:21-24. Without doubt as Paul enumerated this list of moral and religious distinctives, he got repeated affirmative responses from his Jewish readers. The Jews gloried in their special spiritual position, which contrasted with the Gentiles. The apostle then summed up all these distinctives in the clause, (8) You, then, who teach others. Then Paul asked the question, Do you not teach yourself? This question is followed by a series of questions on specific prohibitions in the Law—against stealing, committing adultery, hating idols—each of which a Jew ("you" throughout Rom. 2:17-27 is sing., not pl.) was guilty of doing after telling others not to do those things. Paul indicted such a Jew for hypocrisy: You who brag about ("are boasting in"; cf. v. 17) the Law, do you dishonor God by breaking the Law? An honest Jew would have to respond to Paul's questions by admitting his guilt and his hypocrisy. Paul did not condemn this hypocrisy of the Jews on his own authority; he quoted their own Scriptures (the close of Isa. 52:5, in the LXX). Their hypocrisy dishonored God; also it caused Gentiles to blaspheme God. "Why should we honor God," Gentiles may have reasoned, "when His Chosen People do not follow Him?"

2. CONDEMNATION BECAUSE OF THEIR TRUST IN RITES (2:25-29)

The Jews trusted not only in the Law of Moses, as the preceding paragraph shows (vv. 17-24), but also in circumcision as the sign of their special covenantal relationship with God. But Paul argued that trust in the rite itself was meaningless and was a basis for God's judgment.

2:25-27. Circumcision has value if you observe ("are practicing") the Law. Conversely, if you break the Law (and they did), you have become as though you had not been circumcised. In the Greek this second part of verse 25 is interesting: "If you are a lawbreaker, your circumcision has become a foreskin." In other words a Jewish lawbreaker is just like a Gentile lawbreaker; the Jews' rite of circumcision counts for nothing.

The opposite is also true. If those who are not circumcised (lit., "if the foreskin," a word used by Jews as a slang expression for a Gentile; cf. the comments on v. 25) keep (phyllasē, "guard" and therefore "keep" or "observe"; cf. 1 Tim. 5:21) the Law's requirements (and apparently some Gentiles did), will they not be regarded as though they were circumcised? Paul concluded that a Gentile who obeys ("fulfills") the Law judges a Jew who, despite his having the written code and circumcision, is a lawbreaker. A Gentile who obeys what the Law requires, even though he does not know the Law (Rom. 2:14) is in God's sight similar to a circumcised Jew. This thought would be revolutionary for Jews who considered themselves far superior to Gentiles (cf. vv. 17-21).

2:28-29. These verses form the conclusion to the entire section that begins with verse 17. Being a true or geuine Jew is not a matter of outward or external things (such as wearing phylacteries, paying tithes, or being circumcised). Genuine circumcision is not the physical rite itself. Rather, a genuine Jew is one inwardly and true circumcision is . . . of the heart and by the Spirit. The NIV has rendered the Greek words "in spirit" as "by the Spirit," as though they refer to the Holy Spirit. However, it is better to understand this verse as saying that circumcision of heart fulfills "the spirit" of God's Law instead of mere outward conformity to the Law. Some Jews followed the Law's regulation outwardly, but their hearts were not right with God (Isa. 29:13). A circumcised heart is one that is "separated" from the world and dedicated to God. The true Jew receives his praise . . . not from men (as did the Pharisees) but from God, who sees people's inward natures (cf. Matt. 6:4, 6) and discerns their hearts (cf. Heb. 4:12).

3. CONDEMNATION BECAUSE OF THEIR UNBELIEF (3:1-8)

3:1-2. A characteristic mark of Paul's style, particularly in this letter to the Romans, is to ask and answer an obvious question his discussion has raised in his readers' minds. The natural response to the preceding material (2:17-29) is, What advantage (perrison, "overplus"), then, is there in being a Jew? Expressed in other words the question is, What value (ōpheleia, "advantage") is there in circumcision? The first question pertains to Paul's words in 2:17-24, and the second question to his words in 2:25-29. Paul's response is immediate and direct: Much in every way! He was not saying that being a Jew or being circumcised had no gains.

By the phrase First of all Paul suggested that he was going to list a number of items, though actually he stated only one. He did this same thing elsewhere (1:8; 1 Cor. 11:18). In this case the item he stated is the most important and in a sense includes any others that could have been mentioned. The Jews have been entrusted (the Gr. past tense could be rendered "were entrusted") with the very words (logia, pl. of logos, "word" or "statement") of God. This can refer to the entire Old Testament but here it probably means just the promises and commands of God. Yet, though in that privileged position, the Jews were unable to live up to God's standards.

3:3-4. The fact that the chief benefit of being a Jew was being "entrusted with the very words of God" raised another question. What if some did not have faith? This verb "did not have faith" also means "be unfaithful." This is preferred since the same verb is rendered "entrusted" in verse 2. It is true that some Jews did not believe the promises of God, but also some Jews were unfaithful to their trust. Will their lack of faith (this noun can also mean "unfaithfulness," which is preferred here) nullify God's faithfulness? To that possibility Paul responded, Not at all (mē genoito, "Let it not be," a frequent exclamation by Paul; cf. vv. 6, 31; 6:1, 15; 7:7, 13; 11:1, 11). Though some Jews did not believe or were unfaithful (evidenced by their sinful conduct mentioned in 2:21-23, 25), God remains faithful to His Word (cf. Deut. 7:9; 1 Cor. 1:9; Heb. 10:23; 11:11; 1 Peter 4:19). This concept of God's faithfulness in spite of Israel's unbelief is developed more fully in Romans 9–11.

Paul continued, Let God be true and every man a liar. This means, "Let God keep on being true even though every man becomes a liar." This idea is taken from Psalm 116:11. As still further support, Paul quoted Psalm 51:4.

3:5-6. The apostle then pursued his argument with additional questions. The first is, What shall we say to the idea that the Jews' unrighteousness served to accentuate God's righteousness? Could they conclude that God's wrath on Jews is therefore unjust? Paul immediately interjected, I am using a human argument, and responded with the answer, Certainly not! (mē genoito, the same response as in v. 4; cf. v. 31) If that were the case, that God were unfair in judging unfaithful Jews, then He would be barred from judging the world. And of course, that could not be. So, since God will judge the world (cf. 2:5) He will not be unfair in extending His wrath on guilty Jews (cf. 2:11).

3:7-8. A second question is this: If someone's lack of truth enhances God's truthfulness, how can God in fairness condemn (lit., "judge") him as a sinner? In other words, since sin seemingly benefits God, how could He turn around and judge sinners for their sin? Paul raised these two questions, which are examples of unsaved people's casuistry, because some opponents were falsely accusing him of advancing them and proclaiming, Let us do evil (lit., "the evil things") that good (lit., "the good things") may result. The apostle did not reply to these slanders. He assigned such persons to God and simply observed, Their condemnation (krima, "judgment") is deserved. Later, however, he did discuss a similar question (6:1). To suggest, as did these two questions (3:5, 7), that God is unfair in condemning sin is to blaspheme the very nature of God. Such persons who question God's condemning are therefore themselves condemned!

D. Condemnation against all human beings (3:9-20)

In this section Paul concluded not only his indictment of the Jews but also the first section of his discussion that God's righteousness is revealed in condemnation against the sinful human race.

1. ALL ARE UNDER SIN (3:9-18)

3:9. Paul asked, What shall we conclude then? and, Are we any better? The exact meaning of this Greek verb proechometha (used only here in the NT) is difficult to determine. It seems best to take the question as coming from Jewish readers to whom Paul has just been writing and to translate it, "Are we preferred?" Both the material preceding and Paul's answer (Not at all!) support this solution. "Not at all" is literally "not by any means." This is not Paul's characteristic mē genoito, used in verses 3, 6, 31, and elsewhere. Jews have advantages over Gentiles (2:17-20a; 3:1-2), but God does not give them preferential treatment.

As evidence that the Jews have no preferred position, Paul stated that he had previously accused both Jews and Gentiles as all under sin, that is, they stand under sin's power and control and under the condemnation that results from it (cf. 1:18; 2:5). The order of accusation was first Gentiles (1:18–2:16) and then Jews (chap. 2). This order is reversed here because the Jews were most recently discussed.

3:10-12. To validate his accusation that everybody is "under sin" Paul quoted in verses 10-18 from six Old Testament passages. Romans 3:10-12, taken from Psalm 14:1-3, makes the point that all people without exception are not righteous (cf. Rom. 1:18, 29-31), do not understand God (cf. 1:18b, 28) nor seek (lit., "seek out") Him, have turned away from Him (cf. 2:5; Isa. 53:5), are worthless (from achreioō, "become useless," used only here in the NT), and do not do good (chrēstotēta, "kindness," or "benevolence in action"; cf. 2 Cor. 6:6; Gal. 5:22; and comments on Rom. 2:4). Apart from the indwelling Holy Spirit people cannot exhibit this fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22). They have no inner spiritual capacity whereby they can normally and automatically exercise genuine kindness toward others. Instead sin causes them to be selfish and self-centered.

These seven condemnatory phrases end with the words not even one, which are also in Romans 3:10. This repetition stresses that not a single exception in the human race (except, of course, the Son of God) can be found.

Though Paul did not quote Psalm 14:2, "The Lord looks down from heaven on the sons of men," that verse is significant, for what follows in that psalm is God's indictment of humanity.

3:13-18. These verses describe the vileness and wickedness of various parts of the human body, indicating figuratively that every part contributes to a person's condemnation. In sequence these quotations are taken from Psalm 5:9 (Rom. 3:13a); Psalm 140:3 (Rom. 3:13b); Psalm 10:7 (Rom. 3:14); Isaiah 59:7-8 (Rom. 3:15-17); and Psalm 36:1 (Rom. 3:18). They pertain to three actions: talking (throats . . . tongues . . . lips . . . mouths; vv. 13-14), conduct (feet; vv. 15-17) and seeing (eyes; v. 18). Their speech is corrupt (open graves; cf. James 3:6), dishonest (deceit; cf. Ps. 36:3), damaging (poison; cf. James 3:8), and blasphemous (cursing and bitterness; cf. James 3:9-10). From talking of sin, they commit sin, even to the point of quickly murdering (cf. Prov. 1:11-12, 15-16). As a result they and others are destroyed materially and spiritually, are miserable, and know no inner peace (cf. Isa. 57:21). All this is summarized in Paul's words, There is no fear of God before their eyes. Fearing God (i.e., reverencing Him by worship, trust, obedience, and service) is the essence of a godly person (cf. Job 28:28; Prov. 1:7; 9:10; Ecc. 12:13). So for a Jew not to fear God was the height of sin and folly. In these verses (Rom. 3:10-18) Paul left no basis whatsoever for Jewish readers to say that his point that Jews are sinners contradicts the Old Testament!

2. ALL ARE CONSCIOUS OF SIN (3:19-20)

3:19-20. Paul concluded his discussion with a final statement to the Jews concerning the purpose and ministry of the Law. He included himself with his Jewish readers when he said, Now we know. The principle is obvious: the Law's pronouncements are to those who are under the Law. The Law was not a special talisman that the Jews could obey or ignore as they wished; they were "under" it and accountable to God (cf. Jews and Gentiles being "under sin," v. 9). The Law's ministry was so that every mouth may be silenced (lit., "stopped"), and the whole world held accountable (lit., "become answerable") to God. No one can argue in his own defense that he is not under sin. The Law points up God's standards and illustrates people's inability to live up to them.

Finally, the Law is not a way for a person to be declared righteous (justified) in His sight (cf. 3:28). That was not its purpose (Acts 13:39; Gal. 2:16; 3:11). Instead, the Law was given so that through it we become conscious (lit., "through the Law is full knowledge") of sin (cf. Rom. 5:20; 7:7-13). The Mosaic Law is an instrument not of justification but of condemnation.

III. God's Righteousness Revealed in Justification (3:21–5:21)

In God's condemnation of the human race His own personal infinite righteousness was revealed along with the fact that not a single human being—the Lord Jesus Christ excepted—has ever or will ever be able to meet that standard and be accepted by God on his own merit. Now in this second major section of Romans Paul discussed God's "provided righteousness" for people through Jesus in justification. Justification is a forensic declaration of righteousness as a result of God's imputing to believers Christ's righteousness, provided by God's grace and appropriated through faith.

A. Provided righteousness explained (3:21-31)

3:21. By the words but now Paul introduced a sharp contrast with what preceded. He had just affirmed, "No one will be declared righteous in His [God's] sight by observing the Law" (v. 20). This is now followed by the statement, Apart from Law (in the Gr. this phrase is in the emphatic first position) a righteousness from God . . . has been made known (i.e., made plain). This in essence repeats the words of 1:17a. But Paul added the fact that the Law and the Prophets testify to this fact. What Paul was introducing about God's righteousness was not foreign to the Old Testament. "The Law and the Prophets" was often used of the entire Old Testament (see references at Matt. 5:17), the Law referring to the first five books and the Prophets, the other books. In Romans 4 Paul illustrated this truth from the Law (Abraham: Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:1-3, 9-23) and from the Prophets (David: Ps. 32:1-2; Rom. 4:4-8).

3:22. The first part of this verse is not a new sentence in the Greek; it is an appositional clause, and could be rendered, "a righteousness from God through faith." These words reminded Paul again of the Jewish insistence on their special position before God. As a result he added, There is no difference (cf. 10:12), introduced in the Greek by the word "for" to tie it to what precedes. Any prior privilege the Jews had is gone in this Age when God is offering a righteous standing before Him to all sinful people on the basis of faith in Christ alone. Since all are "under sin" (3:9), salvation is available "to all" on an equal basis.

3:23. Paul explained that "no difference" existed among human beings because all have sinned. The Greek is literally, "all sinned" (pantes hēmarton). The same two Greek words are used in 5:12 (cf. comments on that verse). Since the entire human race was plunged into sin with Adam, all (whether Jews or Gentiles) are sinners. It is impossible to say there is a "difference," that the Jews' privileges (2:12-21; 3:1) exclude them from God's condemnation.

Not only did all sin, but also all fall short. This single Greek verb is in the present tense, stressing continuing action. It can be translated "keep on falling short." The simple fact is that as a sinner not a single human being by his own efforts is able to measure up to the glory of God. God's glory is His splendor, the outward manifestation of His attributes. God desires that humans share that splendor, that they become like Him, that is, Christlike (cf. "glory" in 5:2; 2 Cor. 3:18; Col. 1:27; 2 Thes. 2:14). Yet their sin keeps them from sharing it.

3:24. In view of man's sin God has stepped in with His provided righteousness, because all who believe are justified (the pres. tense may be trans. "keep on being declared righteous," i.e., each person as he believes is justified). "Justify" (dikaioō) is a legal term, meaning "declare righteous" (not "make righteous"; cf. Deut. 25:1). See comments on Romans 1:17 on Paul's frequent use of this verb and its related noun "righteousness."

God's justification of those who believe is provided freely (dōrean, "as a free gift," i.e., without charge) by His grace. God justifies by the instrument of His grace, His unmerited favor. Grace too is a favorite word of Paul's, used by him in Romans 24 times (in the Gr.). But God would not declare a person righteous without an objective basis, without dealing with his sin. That basis is the redemption that came by Christ Jesus. The Greek word for "redemption" is apolytrōsis, from lytron, "a ransom payment." Apolytrōsis is used 10 times in the New Testament (Luke 21:28; Rom. 3:24; 8:23; 1 Cor. 1:30; Eph. 1:7, 14; 4:30; Col. 1:14; Heb. 9:15). (See the chart, "New Testament Words for Redemption" at Mark 10:45.) The death of Christ on the cross of Calvary was the price of payment for human sin which secured release from the bondage of Satan and sin for every person who trusts God's promise of forgiveness and salvation.

3:25a. God presented Him, Christ, as a Sacrifice of atonement. The Greek word for "Sacrifice of atonement" is hilastērion, rendered "propitiation" in the KJV and the NASB. This noun is used elsewhere in the New Testament only in Hebrews 9:5 for the mercy seat (NIV, "the place of atonement") of the tabernacle's ark of the covenant. There a goat's blood was sprinkled on the Day of Atonement to cover (atone) Israel's sins (Lev. 16:15), and satisfy God for another year. Jesus' death is the final sacrifice which completely satisfied God's demands against sinful people, thus averting His wrath from those who believe. (The verb hilaskomai, "to satisfy by a sacrifice, to propitiate," is used in Luke 18:13 ["have mercy"] and Heb. 2:17 ["make atonement"]. And the related noun, hilasmos, "propitiation," appears in 1 John 2:2; 4:10.)

Christ, God's propitiatory Sacrifice for sin, was "presented" (lit., "set forth"), in contrast with the tabernacle's mercy seat which was hidden from view. This work of Christ is through faith in His blood (cf. Rom. 5:9). It is appropriated by faith (cf. 3:22). By the death of Jesus and the shedding of His blood the penalty for sin has been paid and God has been satisfied or propitiated. The phrase "in (or by) His blood" probably should go with "a sacrifice of atonement," not with "through faith." A believer places His faith in Christ, not in His blood as such.

3:25b-26. God's purpose in Christ's death was to demonstrate His justice (i.e., God's own judicial righteousness, dikaiosynēs; cf. comments on 1:17) because in His forbearance (anochē, "holding back, delay") He had left the sins committed beforehand unpunished (cf. Acts 17:30). Why did God not always punish sins in the past? Does this mean He is not righteous after all? Previously Paul said God was forbearing because He wanted to lead people to repent (Rom. 2:4). Here God is said to be forbearing because He anticipated His provision for sins in the death of Jesus Christ. Such forbearance was an evidence of His grace (cf. Acts 14:16; 17:30), not of His injustice.

Paul was so insistent that God's righteousness be recognized that (Rom. 3:26) he repeated (from v. 25) the words to demonstrate His justice (dikaiosynēs, "righteousness"). God's purpose in the redemptive and propitiatory death of Jesus Christ was so that He could be seen to be just (dikaion, "righteous") and the One who justifies (dikaiounta, "the One who declares righteous") the man who has faith in Jesus. God's divine dilemma was how to satisfy His own righteousness and its demands against sinful people, and at the same time how to demonstrate His grace, love, and mercy to restore rebellious, alienated creatures to Himself. The solution was the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, God's incarnate Son, and the acceptance by faith of that provision by individual sinners. Christ's death vindicated God's own righteousness (He is just because sin was "paid for") and enables God to declare every believing sinner righteous.

3:27-28. After explaining God's provided righteousness for sinners, Paul considered five questions (in Gr.) which he anticipated his readers might ask. Two are in verse 27, two in verse 29, and the other in verse 31. The first is, Where, then is boasting? How can Jews have any boasting in their special position? (2:17-20, 23) Paul's response was abrupt: It is excluded ("completely shut out").

Since justification is by grace (3:24) through faith (vv. 22, 25-26), boasting because of one's accomplishments (works) is ruled out. This prompted a second question: On what principle? ("Law" here in the Gr. means "principle.") On that of observing the Law? (lit., "through works") Paul's response was, No (lit., "not at all," an intensive form), but on that of faith. Doing works (i.e., observing the Law) is no basis for boasting for the Law cannot justify. It was not given for that purpose (cf. v. 20). The apostle then summarized, For we maintain (the verb logizometha, "to reckon," here has the idea of coming to a settled conclusion) that a man is justified ("declared righteous") by faith (cf. vv. 22, 25-27) apart from observing the Law (lit., "apart from works of Law").

3:29-30. The next two questions cover the same issue of Jewish distinctiveness from a different angle. Because the Gentiles worshiped false gods through idols, the Jews concluded that Yahweh, the true and living God (Jer. 10:10), was the God of Jews only. That was true in the sense that the Jews were the only people who acknowledged and worshiped Yahweh (except for a few proselyte Gentiles who joined with Judaism). But in reality Yahweh, as the Creator and Sovereign of all people, is the God of all people. Before God called Abraham and his descendants in the nation Israel to be His Chosen People (Deut. 7:6) God dealt equally with all people. And even after God's choice of Israel to be His special people, God made it plain (e.g., in the Book of Jonah) that He is the God of everyone, Gentiles as well as Jews. And now since there is "no difference" among people for all are sinners (Rom. 3:23) and since the basis for salvation has been provided in the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ, God deals with everyone on the same basis. Thus there is only one God (or "God is one"). Paul no doubt had in mind here the "Shema" of Israel: "Hear, O Israel: The LORD [Yahweh] our God ['Ĕlōhîm], the LORD [Yahweh] is One" (Deut. 6:4). This one God over both Jews and Gentiles will justify all who come to Him regardless of background (circumcised or uncircumcised) on the same human condition of faith.

3:31. The final question is, Do we, then, nullify the Law by this faith? Paul responded in his characteristic expletive, Not at all! (mē genoito, "Let it not be"; cf. comments on v. 4) and then explained, Rather, we uphold the Law. The purpose of the Mosaic Law is fulfilled and its place in God's total plan is confirmed when it leads an individual to faith in Jesus Christ (cf. v. 20; Gal. 3:23-25). Paul repeatedly affirmed that faith, not works of the Law, is the way of salvation. He wrote the word "faith" eight times in Romans 3:22-31! (See vv. 22, 25-28, 30 [twice], and 31.)

B. Provided righteousness illustrated (chap. 4)

The Apostle Paul had presented his case that God declares people righteous on the principle of faith instead of works. If his position is true, he should be able to illustrate it from the past. This he did with Abraham, the patriarch of Israel (cf. John 8:39), and David as well (cf. comments on "the Law and the Prophets," Rom. 3:21).

1. BY FAITH NOT WORKS (4:1-8)

4:1. Paul introduced his illustration of Abraham with the first of six occurrences of the question, What then shall we say? (6:1; 7:7; 8:31; 9:14, 30) He referred to Abraham as our forefather. ("Forefather" is used only here in the NT.) Undoubtedly this was to distinguish Abraham's physical ancestry from his spiritual fatherhood, mentioned later in 4:11-12, 16. What had this patriarch discovered in this matter? What lesson could Paul's readers learn from the biblical record of Abraham's experience?

4:2-3. The Rabbis taught that Abraham had a surplus of merit from his works that was available to his descendants. Paul built on that idea and agreed that, assuming that Abraham was justified by works, he had something to boast about (cf. boasting or bragging in 2:17, 23; 3:27). But, Paul insisted, his boasting could only be before other people, not before God. If a person could establish his finite righteousness by works—though that was impossible—he could never boast of it in God's presence. Paul then turned to an authority his readers would acknowledge and asked, What does the Scripture say? He quoted Genesis 15:6, which states that Abraham's faith in God and His promise was credited to him as righteousness. Because he believed, God imputed righteousness to his account ("credited," elogisthē, from logizomai, is an accounting term). Paul had quoted this verse before (Gal. 3:6).

4:4-5. The apostle then discussed the significance of this Scripture quotation. He pointed out that a worker's wages are what are owed him because he earned them, and are not graciously given to him as a gift. Conversely, a person who is not working but is believing on (these participles are in the pres. tense) God who justifies the wicked (asebē, "the ungodly, impious"; cf. 5:6), his faith is credited as righteousness (cf. 4:3). Abraham was the latter kind of person as the Scripture stated. He was justified not because he worked for it but because he trusted God.

4:6-8. This fact about Abraham was also true of David, whose description of God's gracious dealing with him Paul quoted from Psalm 32:1-2. A person, like David, to whom God credits righteousness apart from works, is blessed. Such a person's sins are forgiven and covered. And instead of his sin credited (logisētai) to his account, God credits (logizetai; cf. Rom. 4:3) righteousness to him.

2. BY FAITH NOT RITES (4:9-12)

4:9-10. Paul again raised the question of the Jews' special position (cf. 2:17-21a; 3:1-2). The way the question is worded in the Greek suggests the answer, that this blessedness is for the uncircumcised (Gentiles) as well as for the circumcised (Jews). But in response Paul turned again to the example of Abraham. He repeated the authoritative scriptural declaration that Abraham was declared righteous on the basis of his faith. Then Paul asked whether Abraham's justification occurred before or after he was circumcised. Answering his own question, Paul stated, It was not after, but before! (The Gr. has lit., "not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.") Abraham's age when he was declared righteous (Gen. 15:6) is not stated. But later when Hagar bore him Ishmael, he was 86 (Gen. 16:16). After that, God instructed Abraham to perform the rite of circumcision on all his male descendants as a sign of God's covenant with him; this was done when Abraham was 99 (Gen. 17:24). Therefore the circumcision of Abraham followed his justification by faith by more than 13 years.

4:11-12. Therefore, Paul argued, the sign of circumcision was a seal of Abraham's being declared righteous because of his faith which he received while he was still uncircumcised (lit.,"in uncircumcision"). Circumcision, as a "sign" or "seal," was an outward token of the justification Abraham had already received. God's purpose was that Abraham be the father of all who believe and are thereby justified. This included both the uncircumcised (Gentiles) and the circumcised (Jews). Jews must do more than be circumcised to be right with God. They must also walk in the footsteps of . . . faith, like Abraham (cf. 2:28-29). Obviously, then, the rite of circumcision, which many Jews rely on for salvation, contributes in no way to one's status before God. It gives them no special standing before Him because they must be declared righteous on the basis of faith in God.

3. BY FAITH NOT THE LAW (4:13-17)

4:13. The Jews also considered the Mosaic Law, a special revelation of God's standards for human conduct, as the basis for their special standing before God. Therefore Paul turned next to it, declaring, It was not through Law ("not" is emphasized by its position at the beginning of the Gr. sentence) that Abraham and his offspring (lit., "seed") received the promise that he would be heir of the world.

God's promise in Genesis 12:1-3 preceded the giving of the Law by several centuries (cf. Gal. 3:17). Being "heir of the world" probably refers to "all peoples on earth" (Gen. 12:3), "all nations" (Gen. 18:18), and "all nations on earth" (Gen. 22:18), for through Abraham and his descendants all the world is blessed. He is thus their "father" and they are his heirs. These promises of blessing are given to those to whom God has imputed righteousness, and this, Paul added once again, is by faith. Believers of all ages are "Abraham's seed," for they enjoy the same spiritual blessing (justification) which he enjoyed (Gal. 3:29). (However, God has not abrogated His promises to Abraham about his physical, believing descendants, the regenerate nation Israel, inheriting the land [Gen. 15:18-21; 22:17]. These promises still stand; they will be fulfilled in the Millennium.)

4:14-15. As Paul explained, if Jews could become heirs by obeying the Law, then faith has no value (kekenōtai, "it has been made empty"; cf. the noun kenos, "empty, without content," in 1 Cor. 15:10, 58). Also the promise is worthless (katērgētai, "has been made invalid"). The reason this would be true is that Law brings wrath (lit., "the Law keeps on producing wrath") as a consequence of disobedience. No one can keep the Law fully; therefore God, in wrath against sin, judges those who disobey.

Paul then stated a related general principle: And where there is no law, there is no transgression. A person may still be sinning in his action, but if there is no command prohibiting it his action does not have the character of a transgression, an overstepping of a prohibition (cf. Rom. 5:13).

4:16. Paul then drew his conclusion. Therefore (lit., "On account of this") the promise comes by (ek, "out of") faith so that it may be by (kata, "according to the standard of") grace. Responding in faith to God's promise is not meritorious, since the promise springs from His grace, His disposition of favor toward those who deserve His wrath. The human exercise of faith is simply the prerequisite response of trust in God and His promise. Since faith and grace go together, and since the promise is by grace, the promise can be received only by faith, not by the Law.

Another reason the promise is by faith is so that it may be guaranteed to all Abraham's offspring, not only the Jews (those . . . of the Law) but to all who exercise faith in God. If the promise were fulfilled for those who keep the Law, then no Gentiles (or Jews either) could be saved! But this cannot be, because Abraham . . . is the father of us all, that is, all who believe (cf. "our" in v. 1; also cf. Gal. 3:29).

4:17. Paul then supported his conclusion in verse 16 with scriptural authority, quoting God's covenantal promise from Genesis 17:5. The fact that believers in this Church Age are identified with Abraham and God's covenant with him does not mean that the physical and temporal promises to Abraham and his physical descendants are either spiritualized or abrogated. It simply means that God's covenant and Abraham's response of faith to it have spiritual dimensions as well as physical and temporal aspects (cf. comments on Rom. 4:13). The quotation is in effect a parenthesis. Therefore the latter part of verse 17 connects with the close of verse 16: "He is the father of us all . . ." in the sight of God. (The words He is our father are not in the Gr., but are added in the NIV for clarification.) God . . . gives life to the dead and calls things that are not (lit., "the nonexisting things") as though they were (lit., "as existing").

Identifying God in this way obviously refers to God's promise in Genesis 17 following the statement quoted above that Abraham and Sarah would have a son of promise when Abraham was 100 and Sarah was 90 (Gen. 17:17, 19; 18:10; 21:5; cf. Rom. 4:19). That he would be the ancestor of many nations seemed impossible in his and Sarah's childless old age.

4. BY FAITH IN GOD'S PROMISE (4:18-25)

4:18. Though humanly there was no hope of ever having a child, the old patriarch believed God's Word. Against all hope, Abraham in hope believed. God honored his faith, and he became the father (ancestor) of many nations. This was in accord with God's promise, So shall your offspring be (a quotation of Gen. 15:5).

4:19. Verses 19-21 restate in specific details the first part of verse 18 about Abraham's hope. Abraham without weakening in his faith . . . faced the fact (lit., "considered carefully") that his body was as good as dead (some Gr. mss. add the word "already"), a reference to the patriarch's advanced age (Gen. 17:17; 21:5). Abraham also considered carefully that Sarah's womb was also dead. She was unable to conceive a child, as had been demonstrated through their life together (cf. Gen. 16:1-2; 18:11) and as was certainly true for her at age 90 (Gen. 17:17).

4:20-21. In spite of the humanly impossible situation, Abraham did not waver through (lit., "by") unbelief. "Waver" (diekrithē) means "to be divided" (sometimes trans. "doubt," as in James 1:6). The patriarch was strengthened in his faith (lit., "was empowered [enedynamōthē, from endynamoō] by means of faith"). God, responding to Abraham's faith, empowered him and Sarah physically to generate the child of promise. Also he gave glory to God, that is, he praised God by exalting or exclaiming His attributes. Abraham was fully persuaded that God had power (dynatos, "spiritual ability") to do what He had promised. What confidence in God this spiritual forefather possessed! He "in hope believed" (Rom. 4:18); he was not weak in faith despite insuperable odds (v. 19); he was not divided in his thinking by unbelief (v. 20a); he was empowered by faith (v. 20b); and he was fully persuaded God has the ability to do what He had said (v. 21).

4:22. Paul concluded his illustration about Abraham by saying, This is why (dio kai, "wherefore also") it was credited to him as righteousness. Abraham's response of faith to God and God's promise to him was the human requirement for God's justifying Abraham, for God's declaring that Abraham stood righteous before Him. No wonder God credited such faith with righteousness!

4:23-24. Verses 23-25 apply the truth about justification and its illustration in Abraham to the apostle's readers—from the believers in Rome who first read this letter to people today. The divine declaration of Abraham's justification was written not for him alone, but also for us, to whom God will credit righteousness. Such an act of justification, however, is not for everyone. It is for us who believe in Him who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead (lit., "out from dead ones"; cf. 6:4; 8:11). Repeatedly in this chapter Paul referred to Abraham and other believers having righteousness credited to them because of their faith (4:3, 5-6, 9-11, 23-24).

4:25. Mentioning the Lord Jesus led Paul to state again the Savior's central place in God's program of providing righteousness for sinful people by grace through faith. Both Christ's death and His resurrection are essential to that work of justification. He was delivered over (by God the Father; cf. 8:32) to death for our sins (lit., "on account of or because of" [dia with the accusative] "our trespasses" [paraptōmata, "false steps"; cf. 5:15, 17, 20; Eph. 2:1]). Though not a direct quotation, these words in substance are taken from Isaiah 53:12 (cf. Isa. 53:4-6). Also He was raised to life for ("on account of" or "because of" [dia with the accusative]) our justification. Christ's death as God's sacrificial Lamb (cf. John 1:29) was to pay the redemptive price for the sins of all people (Rom. 3:24) so that God might be free to forgive those who respond by faith to that provision. Christ's resurrection was the proof (or demonstration and vindication) of God's acceptance of Jesus' sacrifice (cf. 1:4). Thus because He lives, God can credit His provided righteousness to the account of every person who responds by faith to that offer.

In chapter 4, Paul presented several irrefutable reasons why justification is by faith: (1) Since justification is a gift, it cannot be earned by works (vv. 1-8). (2) Since Abraham was justified before he was circumcised, circumcision has no relationship to justification (vv. 9-12). (3) Since Abraham was justified centuries before the Law, justification is not based on the Law (vv. 13-17). (4) Abraham was justified because of his faith in God, not because of his works (vv. 18-25).

C. Provided righteousness enjoyed (5:1-11)

5:1. The apostle now turned to a presentation of the experiential results (suggested by the connective oun, trans. therefore) of the believers' justification—

God's declaring them righteous—on the basis of faith (cf. 3:21–4:25). The participial clause since we have been justified (cf. 5:9) through faith describes antecedent action to the main clause, we have peace (echomen) with God. Some of the important Greek manuscripts read, "Let us have peace (echōmen) with God." This seems to be the preferred reading. If so, then the sense is, "Let us keep on having (in the sense of enjoying) peace with God." Peace has been made by God through our Lord Jesus Christ (cf. Eph. 2:14a), which fact is demonstrated by God's justification. A believer is not responsible for having peace in the sense of making it but in the sense of enjoying it.

5:2. The Lord Jesus, besides being the Agent of the believer's enjoyment of peace with God, is also the One through whom we have gained access (prosagōgēn, "privilege of approach" to a person of high rank; used elsewhere only in Eph. 2:18; 3:12) by faith into this grace in which we now stand. Though the phrase "by faith" is not supported by the best Greek manuscripts, it is the human means of the access. Believers in Christ stand in the sphere of God's grace (cf. "grace" in Rom. 3:24) because Christ has brought them to this position. He is their means of access.

In the Greek text the sentence, And we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, is coordinate to the clause, "We have peace" (5:1). Like that clause, this one too may be translated, "Let us keep on rejoicing." Because of Christ, Christians eagerly anticipate the time when they will share Christ's glory, in contrast with their falling short of it now (3:23). In that sense He is "the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27; cf. Rom. 8:17-30; 2 Cor. 4:17; Col. 3:4; 2 Thes. 2:14; Heb. 2:10; 1 Peter 5:1, 10). Certainly such a prospect is cause for joy and even boasting! (Kauchōmetha, "rejoice," is lit., "boast" or "exult," here in a pure sense; this Gr. word is also used in Rom. 5:3, 11 where it is trans. "rejoice.")

5:3-4. Believers can enjoy the peace with God that has been achieved and the glorious future in God's presence that awaits them. But how should they react to the experiences of life that are often adverse and difficult? They are to rejoice in their sufferings. The word "rejoice" is kauchōmetha, the same word in verse 2. "Sufferings" is thlipsesin, "afflictions, distresses, pressures." James wrote along the same line: "Consider it pure joy, my brothers, whenever you face trials of many kinds" (James 1:2). This is more than mere Stoic endurance of troubles, even though endurance or steadfastness is the first result in a chain-reaction outgrowth from distress. This is spiritual glorying in afflictions because of having come to know (from oida, "to know by intuition or perception") that the end product of this chain reaction (that begins with distress) is hope. Suffering brings about perseverance (hypomonēn, "steadfastness," the ability to remain under difficulties without giving in; cf. Rom. 15:5-6; James 1:3-4). Only a believer who has faced distress can develop steadfastness. That in turn develops character (dokimēn ["proof"] has here the idea of "proven character"), which in turn results in hope. As believers suffer, they develop steadfastness; that quality deepens their character; and a deepened, tested character results in hope (i.e., confidence) that God will see them through.

5:5. A believer's hope, since it is centered in God and His promises, does not disappoint him. "Disappoint" means "put to shame because of disappointment" in unfulfilled promises. This affirmation concerning hope in God is a reflection of Psalm 25:3, 20-21 (cf. Ps. 22:5; Rom. 9:33; 1 Peter 2:6). The reason this hope (resulting finally from affliction) does not disappoint is that God has poured out His love into our hearts. God's love, so abundant in believer's hearts (cf. 1 John 4:8, 16), encourages them on in their hope. And this love is poured out by (better, "through," dia with the genitive) the Holy Spirit, whom He has given us. The Holy Spirit is the divine Agent who expresses to a believer the love of God, that is, God's love for him. The reality of God's love in a believer's heart gives the assurance, even the guarantee, that the believer's hope in God and His promise of glory is not misplaced and will not fail. This ministry of the Holy Spirit is related to His presence in believers as the seal of God (Eph. 4:30) and as the earnest or down payment of their inheritance in glory

(2 Cor. 1:21-22; Eph. 1:13-14). Later Paul wrote that the Holy Spirit Himself has been poured out in believers (Titus 3:6). Each believer has the Spirit of Christ (Rom. 8:9) in the sense that He is indwelt by the Holy Spirit (cf. 1 John 3:24; 4:13).

5:6-8. Having mentioned the pouring out of God's love, Paul now described the character of God's love, which explains why its pouring out assures believers of hope. God demonstrated His love by the death of His Son, Jesus Christ. This demonstration was first, at just the right time (cf. Gal. 4:4). Second, it was when we were still powerless (asthenōn, "without strength, feeble"; cf. John 5:5). Third, it was for (hyper) the ungodly (asebōn, "impious"; cf. Rom. 4:5). Clearly Christ's death was a substitutionary death, a death in place of others. The Greek preposition hyper often means "on behalf of," but occasionally it means "in place of," its meaning here. This is clear from the statement in 5:7, which also has hyper. A person willing to die for a righteous man or for a good man obviously is offering himself as a substitute so that the righteous or good man can continue to live. This is the highest expression of human love and devotion. However, God's love contrasts with human love in both nature and degree, because God demonstrates ("keeps on showing") His own love for us in this: While we were still sinners, Christ died for us (hyper, "in our place"). Though a few people might possibly be willing to die to save the lives of good people, though that is rare, Christ went well beyond that. He died in the place of the powerless ("feeble," v. 6), the ungodly (v. 6; 4:5), sinners (5:8), and even His enemies! (v. 10).

5:9-11. The participle translated have . . . been justified ("declared righteous") ties these verses to the argument at the beginning of the chapter (cf. v. 1). The immediate connection, however, is with what preceded (vv. 6-8). God gave proof of His love by having Christ die in the place of humans "while we were still sinners." Because of the sinner's response by faith (v. 1) to Christ's sacrifice on the cross, God has declared him righteous. Certainly that now-declared-righteous person will not be forsaken by God's love, which has been poured out effusively in his heart. Since the divine dilemma of justification (3:26) has been solved on the basis of Jesus' shed blood (cf. 3:25), certainly Jesus Christ will see that justified sinners will be saved from God's wrath. Believers will never be condemned to hell (John 5:24; Rom. 8:1) nor will they be the objects of God's coming Tribulation wrath (1 Thes. 1:10; 5:9).

Here this same truth is repeated in different words (Rom. 5:10). Reconciliation, the third great achievement of Jesus' sacrificial death on Calvary, is presented (also v. 11). This great triumvirate—redemption (3:24; 1 Cor. 1:30; Gal. 3:13; Eph. 1:7); propitiation (Rom. 3:25 [NIV: "sacrifice of atonement"]; 1 John 2:2; 4:10 [NIV: "atoning sacrifice"]); reconciliation (Rom. 5:10-11; 2 Cor. 5:18-20; Col. 1:22)—is totally the work of God, accomplished through the death of Jesus Christ. Redemption pertains to sin (Rom. 3:24), propitiation (or satisfaction) pertains to God (3:25), and reconciliation is for people (cf. we were reconciled). Reconciliation is the removal of enmity that stands between people and God (cf. "enemies" in 5:10; Col. 1:21). Reconciliation is the basis of restored fellowship between people and God (cf. 2 Cor. 5:20-21).

If (Rom. 5:10) may be rendered "since"; it assumes that the reconciliation through the death of His Son is true. In addition, reconciliation was done when we were God's enemies (lit., "being enemies"). Since reconciliation was accomplished by Jesus' death, certainly His life is able to insure the complete and final salvation of believers. "His life" is His present life (not His life on earth) in which He intercedes (Heb. 7:25) for believers. He died for His enemies; surely He will save those, His former enemies, who are now fellowshiping in Him. Because Christians, God's reconciled ones, share in Christ's life, they will be saved. Not only is future salvation assured, but we also rejoice in God ("but also boasting [kauchōmenoi] in God") here and now. This is what Paul already exhorted believers to do (Rom. 5:1-3). The assurance and guarantee of it all is the fact that through . . . Christ . . . we have now received reconciliation (lit., "the reconciliation"). Since God has reconciled godless enemies to Himself, they should enjoy that peace with Him.

D. Provided righteousness contrasted (5:12-21)

5:12. Paul had now finished his description of how God has revealed and applied to humans His provided righteousness on the basis of the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ received by faith. One thing remains to be done—to present the contrastive parallelism between the work of Jesus Christ (and its results in justification and reconciliation) and the work of another man, Adam (and its results in sin and death). Paul began by saying, Therefore (lit., "because of this"; cf. 4:16), and started his comparison, just as; but he became concerned by other matters and did not return to the comparison until 5:15. Paul explained that sin (in Gr., "the sin") entered (eisēlthen, "entered into") the world through one man; and, in accord with God's warning (cf. Gen. 2:16-17), death (in Gr., "the death") through sin. God's penalty for sin was both spiritual and physical death (cf. Rom. 6:23; 7:13), and Adam and Eve and their descendants experienced both. But physical death, being an outward, visible experience, is in view in 5:12-21. Paul concluded, And in this way death ("the death") came to all men. "Came" is diēlthen, literally "passed or went through" or "spread through." Eisēlthen, "entered into" (the first clause in the verse) means that sin went in the world's front door (by means of Adam's sin); and diēlthen, "went through," means that death penetrated the entire human race, like a vapor permeating all of a house's rooms. The reason death spread to all, Paul explained, is that all sinned.

The Greek past (aorist) tense occurs in all three verbs in this verse. So the entire human race is viewed as having sinned in the one act of Adam's sin (cf. "all have sinned," also the Gr. past tense, in 3:23). Two ways of explaining this participation of the human race in the sin of Adam have been presented by theologians—the "federal headship" of Adam over the race and the "natural or seminal headship" of Adam. (Others say that people merely imitated Adam, that he gave the human race a bad example. But that does not do justice to 5:12.)

The federal headship view considers Adam, the first man, as the representative of the human race that generated from him. As the representative of all humans, Adam's act of sin was considered by God to be the act of all people and his penalty of death was judicially made the penalty of everybody.

The natural headship view, on the other hand, recognizes that the entire human race was seminally and physically in Adam, the first man. As a result God considered all people as participating in the act of sin which Adam committed and as receiving the penalty he received. Even adherents of the federal headship view must admit that Adam is the natural head of the human race physically; the issue is the relationship spiritually. Biblical evidence supports the natural headship of Adam. When presenting the superiority of Melchizedek's priesthood to Aaron's, the author of Hebrews argued that Levi, the head of the priestly tribe, "who collects the 10th, paid the 10th through Abraham, because when Melchizedek met Abraham, Levi was still in the body of his ancestor" (Heb. 7:9-10).

5:13. Though sin entered human experience through the act of Adam's sin (in which the entire human race participated seminally), sin expressed itself repeatedly in people's actions (cf. Gen. 6:5-7, 11-13) from the point of its entrance "until" (not before, as the NIV has it) the Law was given. However, as Paul had already said, "Where there is no Law there is no transgression" (Rom. 4:15). This does not mean that sin does not exist unless there is a Law. It means that sin does not have the character of being a transgression apart from Law and therefore sin is not taken into account (lit., "imputed, reckoned") as such.

5:14. The fact that sin did exist during the period from Adam to the Law is proved by the fact that death reigned from the time of Adam to the time of Moses (lit., "from Adam until Moses"). And death also reigned over people who had not broken a command as did Adam (cf. "death reigned," v. 17, and "sin reigned in death," v. 21). Adam had disobeyed a specific command of God (Gen. 2:17) and committed a transgression, something that his descendants did not do when they sinned till other specific commands from God were received. But yet all Adam's descendants had sinned with Adam (Rom. 5:12), and therefore death did reign (cf. Gen. 5:5, 8, 11, 14, 17, 20, 27, 31). Since death was present, that proved all had sinned in Adam (cf. comments on Rom. 5:12).

The mention of Adam by name (cf. "one man," v. 12) brought Paul back to the point of referring to him, who was a pattern of the One to come. A parallelism exists between Adam and Jesus Christ as heads of groups of human beings (cf. 1 Cor. 15:45-49), but the parallelism is more contrastive than comparative.

5:15. The details of the parallelism between Adam and Christ (begun by Paul in v. 12 with the words "just as") are given in verses 15-17. The apostle made clear the contrastive nature of the parallelism by stating, But the gift (charisma, "grace-gift") is not like the trespass. What Christ "gives" contrasts with what Adam did, his "trespass" (paraptōma, "false step"; also mentioned in 4:25; 5:16-18, 20). The point of the first contrasting parallel is the degree—how much more. The trespass of the one man brought physical death to the many, in this case the entire human race to date with two exceptions—Enoch and Elijah. By contrast, God's grace—and the gift (viz., righteousness, as stated in v. 17; cf. v. 16) that came by the grace of the one Man, Jesus Christ—abounded to the many! If this latter "many" is identical with the first (the many who died, which is possible, but is not required by the text) and constitutes the entire human race, then "God's grace and the gift" by means of "grace" abound in the sense of reaching and being available to all people, but not necessarily being appropriated by all.

5:16. Here Paul presented a second contrasting parallelism; this one is different in kind. He began by emphasizing the contrast: Again, the gift of God is not like the result of the one man's sin. Literally, the Greek is, "Also not as through the one who sinned is the gift." Obviously here a noun paralleling "the gift" is missing in the text. Some suggest "the judgment" from what follows; others the transgression, or the death, or the condemnation. It seems best to leave it indefinite as does the Greek text and to translate it by "the result" (as does the NIV) of that which happened.

Paul continued, The judgment followed ("was out of") one sin (lit., "one," i.e., Adam) and brought condemnation. God passed judgment (krima) on Adam and he (and the entire human race) received condemnation (katakrima, "punishment"; katakrima occurs elsewhere only in v. 18 and 8:1). But, by contrast, the gift (charisma, "grace-gift," i.e., righteousness, 5:17; cf. v. 15) followed ("was out of") many trespasses and brought justification (dikaiōma, "a declaration of righteousness," also used in 1:32, 2:26; 5:18; 8:4). God's grace, as Paul stated repeatedly, beginning in 3:24, is the basis of a person's being justified, declared righteous. And this was in the face of "many trespasses" (paraptōmatōn; cf. 5:15, 17-18, 20). One man (Adam) trespassed (v. 15) God's command, and everyone since has repeatedly overstepped God's instructions.

5:17. The third contrasting parallelism (cf. vv. 15-16) combines the two preceding ones and involves both a difference in degree (how much more; cf. v. 15) and a difference in kind ("death" and "life"; cf. v. 16). The first-class condition in the first part of the verse assumes the statement to be true, if (since) death reigned (cf. v. 20) through that one man. This fact is confirmed by verses 12 and 14. Death is a tyrant, ruling over people and bringing every person under its fear and into its grip (cf. Heb. 2:15).

As a result it also is true that those who receive God's abundant provision of grace and of the gift (cf. Rom. 5:15) of righteousness reign in life through the one Man, Jesus Christ. The Lord Jesus is the Agent of all of God's provision for people. Whereas death reigns like a tyrant over all, believers in Christ, who receive God's grace, reign in life. In the one case people are dying victims under a ruthless ruler; in the other they themselves become the rulers (cf. Rev. 1:6) whose kingdom is one of life! The fact that it is "those who receive" God's grace and gift emphasizes that the provision made for all in Christ's sacrificial death and offered to all by God must be appropriated by an individual by faith to become effective (cf. "received" in John 1:12).

5:18-19. In these verses Paul concludes his basic parallelism between Adam and Jesus Christ begun in verse 12 and the contrasts between them in verses 15-17. Paul reduced the contrast to the briefest possible statement. Consequently (lit., "so then"), just as the result of one trespass (paraptōmatos, "false step"; cf. vv. 15-17, 20) was condemnation (katakrima, "punishment"; cf. v. 16) for all men, so also the result of one act of righteousness was justification that brings life for all men. The "one righteous act" (lit. Gr.) was Christ's death on the cross. One trespass (Adam's sin) is contrasted with one righteous act (Christ's sacrifice). The result of Adam's sin (everyone under God's condemnation) is contrasted with the result of Christ's work (justification offered to all). One brought death; the other brings life. Once again the "all men" in the first half of the sentence includes the entire human race (cf. "all men" in v. 12, and "the many" in the first half of v. 15). This implies the same dimensions for the "all men" in the second half of the verse (cf. "many" in the second halves of vv. 16, 19). The provision in the one righteous act, therefore, is potential and it comes to the entire human race as the offer and opportunity which are applied only to "those who receive" (v. 17).

The same conclusion is stated in different words in verse 19, where Adam's act is called disobedience and the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ is called obedience. As a result the many (cf. first halves of vv. 15, 18) were made (lit., "stand constituted as") sinners (cf. 11:32). In the second half of 5:19 the many means "those who receive" (v. 17; cf. "many" in the second half of v. 16). They are not simply declared righteous (the verb dikaioō is not used here), but they will be made righteous in the process of sanctification, culminating in glorification in God's presence. The word "made" (from kathistēmi) means "stand constituted as," the same verb used in the first half of verse 19 in the words "were made sinners."

5:20-21. A remaining question in this discussion is, Where does the Mosaic Law fit into all this and why? Paul explained, The Law was added so that the trespass (paraptōma, cf. vv. 15-19) might increase ("abound"). The word "added" should be rendered "came in beside," for it translates the verb pareisēlthen. Two similar verbs, eisēlthen and diēlthen, were used in verse 12. Galatians 2:4 is the only other place in the New Testament that uses the Greek verb for "came in beside."

Is the statement in Romans 5:20a a purpose or a result clause? The coming of the Mosaic Law (clearly meant here in light of vv. 13-14) did result in the abounding of "the trespass" (the consequence of any law), but (also in the light of vv. 13-14 and 4:15) the Mosaic Law came in "so that" (purpose) abounding sin might be recognized as abounding trespass.

The result was that where sin increased (lit., "abounded"; cf. 5:20) grace increased all the more ("overflowed superlatively"; cf. "overflow" in v. 15). What a contrast! No matter how great human sin becomes, God's grace overflows beyond it and abundantly exceeds it. No wonder Paul wrote that God's grace "is sufficient" (2 Cor. 12:9). God's goal (hina, so, introduces a purpose clause) is that His grace might reign through righteousness (the righteousness of Christ provided for people) to bring eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Once again Paul spoke of reigning in connection with life. In verse 17 those who received God's gift "reign in life" through Christ. Here God's grace is personified as reigning and bringing eternal life.

By the time the Apostle Paul had reached this point he had not only described how God's provided righteousness is revealed in justification but he also was anticipating how it is to be revealed through regeneration and sanctification.

IV. God's Righteousness Revealed in Sanctification (chaps. 6–8)

God's provided righteousness involves more than declaring believers righteous on the basis of faith. In Romans the first clue to this fact is in 5:5: "God has poured out His love into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, whom He has given us." The presence of the Holy Spirit within believers and God's reproduction of an attribute of His (His love) in believers speak of their new natures and their new lives. This new kind of life, with the sanctifying ministry of the Holy Spirit, is now discussed at length by Paul in chapters 6–8.

Contrasts between Adam and Christ in Romans 5:15–21

	One Man (Adam)	One Man (Christ)
v. 15	One man's trespass → many died	One Man's grace → gift of grace (righteousness) to many
v. 16	One (Adam) → judgment and condemnation	Many trespasses → gift → justification
v. 17	Through one man's trespass → death reigned	Through one Man Jesus Christ → believers reign in life
v. 18	One trespass → condemnation for all men	One act of righteousness → justification offered to all men
v. 19	Disobedience of one → many constituted sinners	Obedience of One → many constituted righteous
v. 21	Sin reigned in death	Grace reigns to bring eternal life

A. Ground of sanctification (6:1-4)

6:1-2. The questions that open this section demand reflection. A review of God's provision by grace through Jesus Christ should elicit praise to God. But the teaching on God's justification of sinful people (3:21–5:21) and the statement of 5:20 in particular might lead some to suggest what Paul expressed: Shall we go on sinning so that grace may increase? Some may have reasoned that since grace increases "all the more" when sin abounds, then believers ought to sin more so they could experience more grace! The apostle voiced this idea only to reject it vehemently: By no means! (mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4) In no way is the abundance of God's grace designed to encourage sin.

Then Paul explained why such a thought cannot be entertained. The fact is, Christians died to sin (cf. 6:7, 11). The Greek aorist (past) tense for "died" suggests a specific point when the action occurred, at salvation. Death, whether physical or spiritual, means separation, not extinction (cf. vv. 6-7, 14). Death to sin is separation from sin's power, not the extinction of sin. Being dead to sin means being "set free from sin" (vv. 18, 22). That being true, Paul asked, How can they live in it any longer? Obviously believers cannot live in sin if they died to it.

6:3-4. Paul explained in more detail the spiritual basis for his abrupt declaration, "We died to sin" (v. 2). Whether the Roman Christians knew it or not, the fact is that all of us who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death. The question here is whether Paul had in mind Spirit baptism (1 Cor. 12:13) or water baptism. Some object to taking Romans 6:3 as Spirit baptism because that verse speaks of being "baptized into Christ" whereas 1 Corinthians 12:13 speaks of Spirit baptism placing the believer into Christ's body. Of course, both are true: the believer is "baptized" (placed into) Christ and also into the body of Christ, and both are done by the Holy Spirit.

Others take Romans 6:3 to refer to water baptism, but the problem with that is that it seems to suggest that baptism saves. However, the New Testament consistently denies baptismal regeneration, presenting water baptism as a public attestation to an accomplished spiritual work (cf., e.g., Acts 10:44-48; 16:29-33). The spiritual reality Paul spoke of is that by faith believers are "baptized (placed) into Christ" and thereby are united and identified with Him. This spiritual reality is then graphically witnessed to and pictured by believers' baptism in water. The one baptism (by water) is the visible picture of the spiritual truth of the other baptism (identification with Christ; cf. Gal. 3:27, "baptized into Christ . . . clothed with Christ").

This is supported by the statement, We were therefore buried with Him through baptism into death. Christ's burial shows that He actually died (cf. 1 Cor. 15:3-4). Christians' "burial" with Christ shows that they in fact died with Him to their former sinful ways of living. The purpose of their identification with Christ in His death and burial is that just as Christ was raised from the dead (lit., "out from dead ones"; cf. Rom. 4:24; 8:11) through the glory (a synonym for God's power; cf. Eph. 1:19; Col. 2:12) of the Father, we too may live a new life (lit., "so also in newness of life we should walk about"). The Greek word "newness" (kainotēti) speaks of life that has a new or fresh quality. The resurrection of Jesus was not just a resuscitation; it was a new form of life. In the same way the spiritual lives of believers in Jesus have a new, fresh quality. Also, a believer's identification with Jesus Christ in His resurrection, besides being the start of new spiritual life now, is also the guarantee of physical resurrection.

This work of God at salvation in identifying a believer with Christ's death, burial, and resurrection—thus separating him from sin's power and giving him a new quality of life—is the basis of the Holy Spirit's continuing work in sanctification.

B. Attitudes for sanctification (6:5-23)

Sanctification begins with regeneration, the implanting of spiritual life in a believer. From that starting point sanctification is God's progressively separating a believer from sin to Himself and transforming his total life experience toward holiness and purity. The process of sanctification for a believer never ends while he is on earth in his mortal body. It is consummated in glorification when that believer through death and resurrection or through the Rapture stands in the presence of God "conformed to the likeness of His Son" (8:29). A believer's identification with Jesus Christ by faith is both the ground and the goal of sanctification. The process of translating that identification into the daily experience of progressive sanctification, however, demands three attitudes of mind and action on a believer's part. These Paul discussed in 6:5-23.

1. RECKON (6:5-11)

The first attitude for sanctification demanded of believers is to "count" (pres. imper., "keep on counting") themselves dead to sin but alive to God in Christ Jesus (v. 11). Being able to reckon something as true, however, depends on knowing and believing certain things. These things to know and believe are stated in verses 5-10.

6:5-7. The first clause should be translated, "Since (not if) we have become united in the likeness of His death," because the statement is assumed to be true and is true. It affirms the certainty of the second clause of the sentence, which promises that believers are united with Christ in the likeness of His resurrection. As a result we know (ginōskontes suggests experimental or reflective knowing, not intuitive knowledge as in eidotes in v. 9) that our old self was crucified with Him. Literally, the last portion of this sentence is, "our old man was crucified together," obviously with Christ. A believer's "old man" is the person as he was spiritually before he trusted Christ, when he was still under sin (3:9), powerless and ungodly (5:6), a sinner (5:8), and an enemy of God (5:10). ("Old self" or "old man" does not refer to the sin nature as such. The Bible does not teach that the sin nature was eradicated at salvation or is ever eradicated in this life.)

The "old man" was "crucified" with Christ (cf. "baptized into His death," 6:3; and "united with Him in His death," v. 5) so that the body of sin might be rendered powerless. The phrase "the body of sin" does not mean that a human body is sinful in itself. It means that one's physical body is controlled or ruled by sin (cf. comments on "body of death" in 7:24). This was the condition of each believer before his conversion. But now at salvation the power of controlling sin is broken; it is "rendered powerless" or ineffective (katargēthē; trans. "nullify" in 1 Cor. 1:28).

The next clause (Rom. 6:6b-7) in effect explains the first clause (v. 6a). In his unregenerate state a believer was enslaved to sin. But his "old man" was crucified (identified) with Christ, and that is the basis for deliverance from enslavement to sin. Anyone who has died has been freed from sin. The words "has been freed" are a loose rendering of dedikaiōtai, literally, "has been justified or declared righteous." The perfect tense of this verb describes a past action with a continuing effect or force. Sin no longer has the legal right to force its mastery and control on a believer, for he has died with Christ.

6:8-11. These verses state much the same truth as verses 5-7 and in the same format, beginning with if ("since"). Those who by faith receive Jesus Christ and are identified with Him have died with Christ (cf. vv. 3, 5). Because this is true, we believe (pres. tense, "we keep on believing") that we will also live with Him. The sharing of the resurrection life of Christ begins at the moment of regeneration, but it will continue as a believer shares eternity with the Lord. Again as a result we know (eidotes, "intuitive knowledge," perceiving a self-evident truth [cf. v. 15], not ginōskontes, "experimental or reflective knowledge" as in v. 6) that Christ's resurrection was a removal from the sphere of physical death to an unending spiritual form of life. Having experienced physical death once and having been removed from its realm by resurrection life, Jesus cannot die again (lit., "dies no more"). In resurrection Jesus Christ was victorious over death (Acts 2:24) and death no longer has mastery (kyrieuei, "rules as lord"; cf. Rom. 6:14) over Him as it does over all other human beings (John 10:17-18).

Paul summarized this discussion by stating that Jesus in His physical death . . . died to sin (i.e., in reference to sin) once for all (ephapax; cf. Heb. 7:27; 9:12; 10:10). This stands in opposition to the doctrine and practice of the so-called perpetual sacrifice of Christ in the Roman Catholic Mass. Contrariwise, the life He lives, He lives (pres. tense, "keeps on living") to God. Resurrection life is eternal in quality and everlasting in duration. Furthermore, God is its Source and also its Goal. What is true of Jesus Christ in reality and experience, believers who are identified with Him by faith are commanded to reckon true for themselves. They are to count themselves dead to (in reference to) sin but alive to God. Since they are dead to its power (Rom. 6:2), they ought to recognize that fact and not continue in sin. Instead they are to realize they have new life in Christ; they share His resurrection life (cf. Eph. 2:5-6; Col. 2:12-13).

2. YIELD (6:12-14)

6:12. The attitude of mind that a believer has died to sin must be translated into action in his experience. Paul commanded, Therefore do not let sin reign (pres. imper., "do not let sin continue to reign") as it did before salvation. The present imperative negative can also be translated, "Stop letting sin reign." When sin reigns in people's lives and bodies, they obey its evil desires. Sin enslaves (v. 6), making a person subject to his own desires. Epithymia refers to "longings" or "desires," which may be either good or evil, depending on how the word is used. Here, in the case of sin, the desires are evil. In your mortal body means that sin manifests itself through one's physical actions in this body. The Greek here stresses that the body is mortal or dying. Perhaps this suggests the foolishness of giving in to the desires of a body that is transitory and decaying. To give in to a dying master is strange indeed.

6:13. Actually this verse repeats the command of verse 12 in more specific terms. Do not offer (lit., "do not continue to present," or "stop presenting") the parts of your body (lit., "your members"; cf. v. 19) to sin, as instruments (hopla, frequently in military context, "weapons" or "armor"; cf. 13:12; 2 Cor. 6:7; 10:4) of wickedness (adikias, "unrighteousness" in contrasting parallelism with righteousness, later in Rom. 6:13). On the contrary, in sharp contrast, Paul commanded, offer (aorist imper., "present once and for all"; also used in v. 19) yourselves to God, as those who have been brought from death to life (lit., "as if being alive out from dead ones"; cf. John 5:24) and offer the parts of your body (lit., "and your members") to Him as instruments (hopla) of righteousness (dikaiosynēs). A related passage is Paul's exhortation, "Offer your bodies as living sacrifices . . . to God"

(Rom. 12:1). Because they were once dead in sin (cf. Eph. 2:1) but have been given new life (Rom. 6:11) believers ought to live for God. Their bodies should be used not for sin (v. 12) or unrighteousness (v. 13) but for promoting righteousness (cf. "bodies" and "body"; 7:5, 23; 1 Cor. 6:15).

6:14. God's design is that sin shall not be your master (kyrieusei; "shall not rule as lord"; cf. v. 9). The reason this should not happen is that you are not under Law, but under grace. Paul had already explained that "the Law was added so that the trespass might increase" (5:20), and elsewhere he declared, "The power of sin is the Law" (1 Cor. 15:56). If believers were still under the Law, it would be impossible to keep sin from exercising mastery. But since believers are "under grace," this can be done by following Paul's instructions.

3. SERVE (6:15-23)

6:15-16. The mention that believers are "under grace" (v. 14) raised another aberrant idea that the apostle refuted. The question is, Shall we sin because we are . . . under grace instead of the Law? The Greek aorist (past) tense here may have the sense of committing an act of sin now and then, in contrast to living a life of sin as stated in verse 1. Paul's response was the same as before (v. 2): By no means! (mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4) Again he proceeded to explain why that idea cannot be accepted. He asked, Don't you know ("perceive intuitively" a self-evident truth; cf. 6:9) that in effect there is no middle ground between being a slave to sin and a slave to obedience to God. As the Lord Jesus said, "No one can serve two masters. . . . You cannot serve both God and money" (Matt. 6:24; Luke 16:13). Paul also pointed out that being a slave to sin leads to death (cf. Rom. 6:21, 23). This is not physical death only or even spiritual death only, but death in general as the natural consequence and inevitable concomitant of sin (cf. Gen. 2:17). On the other hand being a slave to obedience (to God and His gospel obviously) leads to righteousness (again righteousness in the general sense as equivalent to eternal life or glorification). Death is the normal consequence of sin (which is disobeying God); righteousness is the normal consequence of obeying God and living for Him.

6:17-18. This discussion reminded the Apostle Paul of what the grace of God had already accomplished in his readers' lives and he burst forth in praise. Before they responded to the gospel they had been slaves to sin, but they wholeheartedly (lit., "out from hearts," thus inwardly and genuinely, not merely externally) obeyed (cf. "obedience" in 1 Peter 1:2) the form of teaching to which they were entrusted. Hearing the teaching of God's Word, they committed themselves to those truths. That commitment was evidenced by their response to the gospel and their being baptized. The result was that they have been set free from sin and have become slaves (past tense in Gr.) to righteousness (cf. Rom. 6:22). This is positional and must be manifested in daily experience, but it demonstrates again that there is no middle ground. Christians are not to give in to sin because they are dead to it and no longer slaves of it. It is totally contrary to God's plan for slaves of righteousness to become enslaved to sin!

6:19. To talk of being "enslaved" to righteousness and to God is not correct in one sense, Paul wrote, because God does not hold His children in bondage. But the word "slavery" appropriately describes an unregenerate person's relationship to sin and to Satan. So Paul used "slavery" for contrasting the relationship of the believer as well. Before developing this idea further, the apostle in effect apologized for its use—I put this in human terms (lit., "I am speaking in human fashion")—because you are weak in your natural selves (lit., "your flesh"). Apparently Paul felt that his readers' spiritual perception was feeble so he used this terminology from human experience. Then he basically repeated the ideas of verses 16-17. Unsaved Romans had offered their bodies to impurity and to ever-increasing wickedness (lit., "lawlessness"; cf. 1:24-27; 6:13). They had voluntarily become enslaved! But Paul exhorted believers now to offer themselves as slaves to righteousness leading to holiness (perfect holiness, as the end of the process [cf. v. 22]) in contrast with their former impurity.

6:20-23. Paul once again stated that slavery to sin and to righteousness are mutually exclusive (cf. vv. 13, 16). But he went on to indicate the superiority of being enslaved to righteousness and God. The benefit (this Gr. word is usually trans. "fruit") of enslavement to sin was that it produced things that a believer is now ashamed of. But even worse, "the end of those things is death" (lit. trans.).

Responding to the gospel by faith and accepting Jesus Christ completely reverses things for an individual. He is now . . . set free from sin (cf. v. 18) and has been enslaved to God with the result that he has the benefit of holiness (cf. v. 19), the subject of chapters 6–8. The sinful life gives no benefit (6:21), but salvation gives the benefit of a holy, clean life (v. 22). Whereas the "end" (telos) or result of sin is death (v. 21), the "end" of salvation is eternal life. Paul then summarized these contrasts. The wages (the Gr. word opsōnia originally meant a soldier's pay) of sin is death (eternal death here, in contrast with "eternal life" in v. 23b). This death is eternal separation from God in hell, in which unbelievers suffer conscious torment forever (Luke 16:24-25). This is the wages they have earned and deserve because of their sin (cf. Rom. 5:12; 7:13). By contrast, the gift (charisma, "grace-gift") of God is eternal life (cf. John 3:16, 36). Eternal life is a gift that cannot be earned (cf. Eph. 2:8-9; Titus 3:5).

Three times in this chapter Paul wrote that sin results in death (Rom. 6:16, 21, 23). But believers have been set free from sin (vv. 18, 22) and are no longer slaves to it (vv. 6, 20) but are "slaves to righteousness" (vv. 16, 18-19; cf. v. 13). Because they are alive to God (v. 11) and have eternal life (v. 23) they should present themselves to Him (vv. 13, 19) and live accordingly, not letting sin master them (vv. 6, 11-14, 22).

C. Conflict in sanctification (chap. 7)

It is one thing for a believer to understand that his identification with Jesus Christ means that he has died to sin (6:2) and to count or reckon that to be true (6:11). But it is something else for him to deal with the sin nature that remains within and its efforts to express itself in his thoughts and actions. This is the internal conflict in the area of sanctification that every believer faces.

1. THE BELIEVER AND THE LAW (7:1-6)

7:1-3. Verses 1-6 relate to 6:14, the intervening verses (6:15-23) being a digression raised by the question in 6:15. The statement that a believer identified with Jesus Christ in His death is no-longer "under Law" (6:14) should not have surprised Paul's readers because they were men who know the Law. This statement should not be restricted to Jewish believers in the church at Rome because Gentiles also knew the principle that the Law has authority (kyrieuei, "rules as lord"; cf. 6:9, 14) over a man only as long as he lives. This is a self-evident truth, which Paul then illustrated by marriage. A married woman (lit., "the under-a-man woman") is bound (perf. tense, "has been bound and stands bound") to her husband as long as he is alive. But if her husband dies (in Gr., a third-class condition indicating a real possibility) she is released (perf. tense, "has been and stands discharged") from the law of marriage (lit., "from the law of the man"). She is bound to him by marriage as her husband while he lives, and obviously his death frees her from that marriage.

Then Paul continued the illustration, pointing out that if a wife marries (lit., "if she comes to") another man while her husband is still alive she is called (future tense, "shall be publicly known as") an adulteress. Conversely, on the death of her husband she is free from that marriage (cf. 7:2). So she is not an adulteress if she marries (lit., "even though she comes to") another man. A widow who marries again is not guilty of adultery.

7:4-6. In these verses Paul applied his illustration of marriage to a believer and the Law. He said, You also died (lit., "you were put to death," as was true of Jesus) to the Law. Just as a believer "died to sin" (6:2) and so is "set free from sin" (6:18, 22), so he also died to the Law and is separated and set free from it (6:14; cf. Gal. 2:19). As a wife is no longer married to her husband when he dies, so a Christian is no longer under the Law. This separation was through the body of Christ, that is, because of Christ's death on the cross.

As a result Christians belong to another, to Him who was raised from the dead (cf. Rom. 6:4, 9). This One of course is the Lord Jesus Christ. In a sense believers are united to Him as His bride (Eph. 5:25). God's purpose in all this is in order that we might bear fruit to God (cf. Rom. 6:22; Gal. 5:22-23; Phil. 1:11). Only a person who is spiritually alive can bear spiritual fruit, that is, holy living (cf. John 15:4-5). A person who is married to Christ can bear spiritual progeny. Paul moved from the second person plural (you) to the first person plural (we), including himself along with his readers.

The apostle continued, For when we were controlled by the sinful nature (lit., "For when we were in the flesh"; sarx often means sin nature; cf. Rom. 7:18, 25) the sinful passions aroused by the Law were at work in our bodies. This describes a believer before he was saved (cf. 6:19). The Law by its prohibitions aroused sinful passions, as explained in 7:7-13. In that sense unsaved Gentiles were "under" the Law. Consequently their progeny was not "fruit to God" (v. 4) but fruit for death. Sin, Paul repeatedly affirmed, leads to death (5:15, 17, 21; 6:16, 21, 23; 7:10-11, 13; 8:2, 6, 10, 13).

But now, being identified with Christ, believers are dead to the Law. Like a widow released from marital obligations, so believers are released from the Law and its arousal to sin. The purpose of this release "from the Law" is so that they may serve (a better rendering is "be slaves"; cf. "slave[s]" in 6:6, 16 [thrice], 17-18, 20, 22) in the new way of the Spirit, and not in the old way of the written code. The word "Spirit" may be "spirit" (lowercase "s") to contrast with the written document, the Law. The thought then is that believers do not live by the "oldness" of the Law but by the "newness" of a regenerated spirit. Or "Spirit" may refer to the Holy Spirit, the Source of new life. (Cf. comments on "the Spirit" and "the letter," 2 Cor. 3:6.)

2. THE LAW AND SIN (7:7-13)

The involvement of the Mosaic Law in the discussion of a believer's identification with Christ and death to sin raises a question about the Law's relationship to sin.

7:7-8. Is the Law sin? Paul's response again was a vehement denial. Certainly not! (mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4) The Law arouses sin (7:5) but that does not mean the Law itself is sin. In fact, Paul said later, the Law is holy (v. 12) and spiritual (v. 14). Paul went on to explain that the Law made sin known (cf. 3:19-20). Then to be specific, he mentioned coveting. The Law's prohibition, Do not covet (Ex. 20:17; Deut. 5:21), makes people want to covet all the more. Paul knew sin as a principle and specifically, covetousness as an expression of it, and that knowledge came through the Law. Paul described how it worked. The indwelling principle of sin, seizing the opportunity (lit., "taking a start point" [aphormēn, a base for military operations or for an expedition]) afforded by the commandment (cf. Rom. 7:11), produced in me every kind of covetous desire. The Law is not the cause of the act of sin; the principle or nature of sin within an individual is. But the Law's specific commandments stimulate the sin principle into acts that violate the commandments and give those acts the character of transgression (4:15; cf. 3:20; 5:13b, 20a). As Paul concluded, Apart from Law, sin is dead. This does not mean that sin has no existence without the Law (cf. 5:13), but that without the Law sin is less active, for the Law arouses "sinful passions" (7:5).

It is significant that, beginning with verse 7 and continuing through this chapter, the Apostle Paul turned to the first person singular, presenting his personal experience. Up to this point he had used the third person, the second person, and even the first person plural. But now he described his own experience, allowing the Holy Spirit to apply the truth to his readers.

7:9-12. Some generalize the words, Once I was alive apart from Law, to refer to the experience of mankind in the period between the Fall and the giving of the Mosaic Law. But there is no basis for this. Evidently the apostle was speaking of his personal experience as a child and perhaps even a youth prior to his awareness and understanding of the full impact of God's commandments. The clause, but when the commandment came, does not speak of the giving of the Mosaic Law, but the dawning of the significance of the commandment ("Do not covet") on Paul's mind and heart before his conversion. The result was that the principle of sin within made its presence and power known (it sprang to life) in his violations of the commandment. As a result Paul died spiritually (cf. 6:23a) under the sentence of judgment by the Law he had broken. The commandment not to covet was given to help people see how to live, but it actually produced death because of the sin in human hearts.

Repeating from 7:8 his description of sin's relationship to the commandment, Paul declared that sin . . . deceived me. Apart from the Law, the principle of sin was dormant and inactive; but using the commandments of the Law, it demonstrated its controlling force over one's actions. So this sin deceived him (exēpatēsen, "led [him] astray"; cf. 2 Cor. 11:3; 1 Tim. 2:14) and put him to death (lit., "killed" him), not physically but spiritually. Sin is like a personal enemy within (cf. Gen. 4:7). The Law, instead of being sin (Rom. 7:7), is holy, and the commandment not to covet (which, as a part of the Law, represents the whole) is holy, righteous, and good.

7:13. Paul then considered still another possible misunderstanding in his effort to clarify the relationship of sin and the Law. Taking the last-mentioned quality of the commandment ("good"), he asked, Did that which is good, then, become death to me? Once again his immediate response was a vehement denial (By no means! mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4), followed by an explanation. The principle of sin, not the Law, becomes death to an individual (5:12). But sin uses the commandment, the good thing, as an agent or instrument to keep on producing death in a person and thereby sin is seen as utterly (lit., "exceedingly") sinful. The internal principle or nature of sin uses the specific commandments of the Law of God—in part and in the whole; a "holy, righteous, and good" thing in itself—to manifest its true nature as opposed to God and to demonstrate its power within individuals.

3. THE BELIEVER AND SIN (7:14-25)

7:14. Understanding the conflict in personal sanctification involves seeing the relationship between a believer and his indwelling sin. In verse 14 Paul made a transition from the previous subject (vv. 7-13) to the next one. The statement, The Law is spiritual (cf. v. 12), is not only the conclusion of Paul's previous argument but also an accepted fact among people. The Law comes from God who is Spirit (John 4:24) and expresses God's will for human living. Paul, using himself as the example, said the problem is that I am unspiritual (sarkinos, "fleshy, made of flesh"). In addition he was sold as a slave (perf. tense, "had been sold and remained in that state") to sin (lit. "under the sin"; cf. "under sin" in Rom. 3:9).

In relating his personal experience in 7:14-25 Paul consistently used the present tense whereas he had used the imperfect and aorist tenses. Obviously he was describing his present conflict as a Christian with indwelling sin and its continuing efforts to control his daily life. The clause, "sold under sin" (KJV), describes an unregenerate person; but sin also resides in a believer, who is still subject to sin's penalty of physical death. As a result, indwelling sin continues to seek to claim what it considers its property even after one has become a Christian.

7:15-17. At the start Paul confessed, I do not understand what I do (lit., "what I am producing I do not know"). He was like a little boy whose honest answer to why he did something wrong is, "I don't know." A person's actions are at the dictate of someone or something besides himself that he really does not understand and cannot explain. Paul continued to present this quandary he faced: For what I want to do I do not do (lit., "For what I am wishing, that I am not doing," prassō) and conversely, What I hate I do (lit., "What I am hating that I am doing," poiō). No difference of emphasis can be put in this verse on the two Greek verbs translated "do" (even though such difference is significant elsewhere), because the occurrence of those two verbs is reversed in verse 19. This statement can be made by an unregenerate person in his highest moral and ethical moments, but it can also be said by a regenerate person. There is no reason to conclude that Paul was not describing his experience as a believer at that time. Paul said, I agree that the Law is good. Here the Greek word for "good" is kalos, "beautiful, noble, excellent," whereas in verse 12 it is agathē, "useful, upright." Because of this evidence, Paul concluded, It is no longer I myself who do it (lit., "no longer am I myself producing it"; cf. v. 15) but it is sin living in me (lit., "but the dwelling-in-me sin"). This does not mean Paul was avoiding personal responsibility for his actions; he was speaking of the conflict between his desires and the sin within him.

7:18-20. Paul's experience convinced him that "the Law is good" (v. 16). But he also concluded, I know that nothing good lives in me. Then he hastened to explain that by the phrase "in me" he meant in my sinful nature (sarki, "flesh"; cf. vv. 5, 25). This is not literal physical or material flesh, but the principle of sin that expresses itself through one's mind and body.

As support for this conclusion Paul explained, For I have the desire to do what is good ("For to wish is present with me" [or "is lying beside me"]), but I cannot carry it out (lit., "but to produce the good is not"). Paul then repeated in slightly different words the statement of verse 15b, and then in verse 20 he repeated in effect his statement in verse 17. Paul recognized that even as a believer he had an indwelling principle of sin that once owned him as a slave and that still expressed itself through him to do things he did not want to do and not to do things he desired to do. This is a problem common to all believers.

7:21-23. Paul was a person who tried to learn from his experiences, so now he concluded, I find this law at work. This is not the Mosaic Law, of course, but a principle drawn from experience. Also in 8:2 "law" (nomos) means principle. This law or principle is the reality of ever-present evil in an individual whenever he wants to do good. Paul held fast to the fact that, as he said, In my inner being I delight in God's Law (cf. 7:25). "In my inner being" is literally, "according to the inner man." (The "inner man" is used in the Gr. NT also in 2 Cor. 4:16 and Eph. 3:16.) Delight in God's Law was the psalmist's response, stated repeatedly in Psalm 119 (e.g., vv. 16, 24, 47; cf. Ps. 1:2). Because of regeneration, a believer has a new nature or capacity for loving spiritual truths. Yet, recognizing the facts of experience, Paul said he saw another law or principle at work within him. This is the principle of sin. Paul called it "sin living in me" (Rom. 7:17, 20), "evil" right there with me (v. 21), and "the sinful nature" (vv. 5, 18, 25).

This principle is continually doing two things: waging war against the law of the believer's mind and making him a prisoner of the law of sin at work within his members. The indwelling principle of sin is constantly mounting a military campaign against the new nature, trying to gain victory and control (cf. "slave" in vv. 14, 25 and "slaves" in 6:17, 19-20), of a believer and his actions. The new nature is called "the law" of the "mind" (noos; cf. 7:25) because it has the capacity for perceiving and making moral judgments. Further, despite a believer's identification with Jesus Christ's death and resurrection and his efforts to have Christ-honoring attitudes and actions, he cannot in his own power resist his indwelling sin nature. In and of himself he repeatedly experiences defeat and frustration.

7:24-25. Paul expressed that frustration in his exclamation, What a wretched man I am! Significantly Paul's description of himself is part of John's picture of the church of Laodicea—"wretched" (Rev. 3:17). The apostle then asked, Who will rescue me from this body of death? Paul recognized that as long as he was in his mortal body he would face the conflict with the indwelling sin principle and would have defeat in his own strength. Here he wrote of the "body of death"; in Romans 6:6 he wrote of the "body of sin." These mean that sin works through one's human body (cf. 6:6, 12-13, 19; 7:5, 23), bringing death (6:16, 21, 23; 7:10-11, 13; 8:10). Paul's answer to this question was triumphant and immediate: Thanks be to God—through Jesus Christ our Lord! Paul in this answer was looking to the final triumph of Jesus Christ for His people. Just as believers are identified with Him in His death and resurrection by faith here and now, so they will join their resurrected and exalted Lord for all eternity in new bodies, free forever from the presence of sin (8:23; Phil. 3:20-21). Meanwhile, in this life, Paul concluded, I myself in my mind (noi; cf. noos in Rom. 7:23) am a slave (lit., "am serving as a slave") to God's Law, but in the sinful nature (sarki, "flesh"; cf. vv. 5, 18, where sarki, from sarx, is also trans. "sinful nature") a slave to the law of sin (cf. "slave to sin," v. 14). While awaiting freedom from the presence of sin, believers still face conflicts between their regenerated minds (or new natures or capacities) and their sin natures or capacities.

D. Power for sanctification (8:1-17)

8:1. The question naturally arises, Must a believer spend his whole life on earth frustrated by ongoing defeats to indwelling sin? (7:21-25) Is there no power provided to achieve victory? The answer to the first question is no and to the second, yes. In chapter 8, Paul described the ministry of the indwelling Holy Spirit of God who is the source of divine power for sanctification and the secret for spiritual victory in daily living. But first Paul reminded his readers that therefore—since deliverance is "through Jesus Christ our Lord" (7:25)—no condemnation (katakrima, "punishment") awaits those who are in Christ Jesus, as a result of their faith and identification with Him (cf. 6:13; John 5:24). They are justified, declared righteous, and therefore stand in His grace (Rom. 5:2) and not under His wrath (1:18), and possess eternal life (5:17-18, 21). Christ is the sphere of safety for all who are identified with Him by faith. In the better Greek manuscripts, 8:1 ends here. The words "who do not live according to the sinful nature but according to the Spirit" were probably transcribed from verse 4.

8:2. The word because (gar, "for"), connects through (lit., "in") Christ Jesus in this verse with the identical phrase "in Christ Jesus" in verse 1. (In the Gr. word order of the sentence in v. 2, "in Christ Jesus" follows the law of the Spirit of life.) If 7:7-25 is Paul's testimony of his struggle as a believer with indwelling sin, then "the Spirit of life" is the Holy Spirit of God, not the spirit of the new nature each believer receives. The Holy Spirit is the Member of the Godhead who regenerates every believing individual (Titus 3:5) and bestows new life (John 3:5-8), the resurrection life of Christ (Rom. 6:4, 8, 11). Romans 8:2 has the second mention of the Holy Spirit since 5:5, but He is mentioned 18 more times through 8:27. This law ("principle"; cf. 7:23) set me free (the Gr. aorist tense suggests a once-for-all act of freedom at salvation) from the law of sin and death. That principle is called the principle "of sin and death" because sin, as Paul said repeatedly, produces death (5:15, 17, 21; 6:16, 21, 23; 7:10-11, 13; 8:6, 10, 13). As the principle of sin it contrasts with the Spirit; as the principle that brings death it also contrasts with the Spirit who gives life. For the pronoun translated me some Greek manuscripts read "us" and others "you" (sing.). The difference is incidental; the truth stated applies to every believer.

8:3-4. Having stated the fact of freedom, Paul then explained how it is achieved. He declared again the impossibility of attaining freedom over sin through the (Mosaic) Law. It was powerless to free from sin. Not that the Law was weak in itself (as many translations suggest), for it was good (7:12). But because of sinful human nature, the Law could not deliver from sin. The words "sinful nature" translate sarx (lit., "flesh"), which can mean either human sinful corruption or human weakness (cf. 7:5, 18, 25; 8:4-5, 8-9, 12-13).

God accomplished deliverance over sin, however, by sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful man (lit., "likeness of flesh of sin"). Jesus was sent not in sinful flesh but in the likeness of it. His human nature was protected and preserved from the indwelling principle of sin that has plagued all other human beings since Adam (cf. Luke 1:35). He was also sent, literally "concerning or for sin" (peri harmartias, not as the NIV has it, to be a sin offering). In other words He came to do something about sin. What He did was to condemn it; by His death on the cross, He condemned sin (katekrinen, "passed a judicial sentence on it"; cf. katakrima, "punishment," Rom. 8:1) so that those in Christ are not condemned. The goal of this was so that the righteous requirements of the Law—a life of holiness (Lev. 11:44-45; 19:2; 20:7)—could be fully met as believers do not live according to the sinful nature but according to the Spirit. The provision of deliverance from the power of sin is through the death of Jesus Christ, but experiencing it in one's daily conduct comes through the controlling power of the Holy Spirit.

8:5-8. In these verses Paul answered the implied question, What does it mean to live according to the sinful nature and according to the Spirit? He explained that the former means having their minds set on (phronousin, pres. tense, "keep on being mindful of or aspiring for") what that nature desires. An unbeliever cares only for his sinful interests and has no regard for God. The exact opposite is true of those who live according to the Spirit. They aspire for or have their minds set on what the Spirit desires. The sinful nature and the indwelling Spirit are in conflict (Gal. 5:17).

But what difference does it make whether a person is mindful of the flesh or of the Spirit? Again Paul explained. The mind (phronēma, "mind-set, aspirations"; cf. Rom. 8:6b-7) of sinful man (tēs sarkos, "of the flesh") is death, that is, it is equivalent to death, or it leads to death in all its forms (physical and spiritual). On the other hand the mind (phronēma, "mind-set, aspirations") controlled by the Spirit (lit., "of the Spirit") is life (eternal resurrection life) and peace immediately (5:1) and ultimately. In 8:7-8 Paul focused only on the sinful mind (phronēma tēs sarkos, "mind-set, aspirations of the sin nature"; cf. v. 6) to explain why he said (v. 6) that it ends up in death: (1) It is hostile to God (cf. 5:10); (2) it does not submit (pres. tense, "is not submitting") to God's Law; and (3) it cannot do so. The result is that those controlled by the sinful nature cannot (pres. tense, "are not able to") please God. The unsaved lead lives that are totally void of spiritual life and ability. A believer, then, who gives in to his sin nature is acting like the unsaved (cf. 1 Cor. 3:3).

8:9-11. After speaking objectively about the two types of persons, Paul now addressed his readers directly. You, however, are controlled not by the sinful nature but by the Spirit (lit., "But you are not in the flesh but in the Spirit"), if (eiper, "if, as is the fact"; cf. v. 17) the Spirit of God lives (pres. tense, "is dwelling") in you (cf. v. 11). The indwelling Holy Spirit gives a believer a totally different life (2 Cor. 5:17). The opposite, however, is also true: If anyone does not have the Spirit of Christ, he does not belong to Christ (lit., "this one is not of Him"). Since only the Holy Spirit gives spiritual life, a person cannot be related to Christ apart from the Spirit.

The interchange of the titles "Spirit of God" and "Spirit of Christ" argues for the deity of Jesus Christ. This statement also makes it clear that the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit is the identifying mark of a believer in Jesus Christ (cf. 1 John 3:24; 4:13). Another significant fact is that Romans 8:10 equates the indwelling presence of Christ (Christ is in you) with the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit (vv. 9, 11). This adds further support to the biblical doctrine of the Trinity. Verse 10, like verses 9b and 11, is a conditional statement in which in Greek the condition is assumed to be true; if can be understood as "since" or "because." As a result of Christ's indwelling presence, your body is dead (or, "subject to death"; cf. 7:24) because of sin, yet your spirit is alive because of righteousness. Because of God's imputed righteousness, a believer is alive spiritually. The eternal, spiritual life of God is implanted by the indwelling Holy Spirit and Jesus Christ here and now, even though a believer's body is mortal.

Then Paul wrote about an even better promise (8:11). Since God raised Jesus from the dead (lit., "out from dead ones"; cf. 4:24; 6:4), God promises believers in whom His Spirit . . . is living (cf. 8:9) that He will also give life to their mortal bodies through His Spirit. In other words, God promises spiritual resurrection life now (6:4, 8, 11) for each believer's mortal body and physical resurrection in the future for that mortal body (6:5; 1 Cor. 6:14; 15:42, 53; 2 Cor. 4:14).

8:12-14. Paul drew a conclusion and made an application from his previous discussion. Therefore . . . we have an obligation. Each believer's responsibility is a positive one—to live each day in the control and power of the Holy Spirit. But first Paul expressed this truth negatively—not to the sinful nature, to live according to it. Each Christian is to refuse to follow the inclinations and desires of his sin nature. He is to deny the efforts of that nature to impose its lifestyle on him (cf. Titus 2:12). The reason is that a sinful manner of life results in death. This does not suggest that a believer who sins will face eternal death in hell; instead, it means he will not enjoy his spiritual life. He will seem like an unsaved person (1 Cor. 3:1-4) and will be unable to enjoy the indwelling presence of the Spirit. You will die is literally, "you are about to die," or "you are at the point of dying."

On the other hand, if by the Spirit you put to death (pres. tense, "are putting to death") the misdeeds of the body, you will live. A few Greek manuscripts have "flesh" instead of "body." But the body is the vehicle by which one's sin-nature expresses itself (cf. Rom. 6:6, 13). Only by the Holy Spirit's power can a believer put to death the sins of his former life (cf. Eph. 4:22-31; Col. 3:5-9). This is what Paul referred to when he said "count yourselves dead to sin" (Rom. 6:11).

Paul then continued his explanation. Those who are led (pres. tense, "are being led") by the Spirit of God are sons of God. Many Bible students see no difference between the word translated "sons" in 8:14 and the word translated "children" in verse 16. However, in verse 16 the Holy Spirit's indwelling presence attests the believer's birth relationship to God (tekna, "children," is lit., "born ones"). But in verse 14 the Holy Spirit's control and direction attests the believer's privileges in God's family as a "son" (huios means a child mature enough to take on adult family privileges and responsibilities). A son in God's family is led by God's Spirit.

8:15-17. In contrast with the control of sin, which enslaves to the point of fear, believers have received the Spirit of sonship. The word translated "sonship" (huiothesias) means "placing as a son" and is frequently translated "adoption" (as in, e.g., v. 23). Believers are adopted sons (Gal. 4:5; Eph. 1:5), not slaves (Gal. 4:7); so they need not be enslaved to sin or in fear. In New Testament times adopted sons enjoyed the same privileges as natural-born sons. So, instead of cowering in slave-like fear, Christians can approach God in an intimate way calling Him Abba,* Father. "Abba" is a Greek and English transliteration of the Aramaic word for father (used elsewhere in the NT only in Mark 14:36; Gal. 4:6). Besides being adopted into God's family as sons, believers also are His children (tekna, "born ones") by the new birth (John 1:12; 1 John 3:1-2). And the Holy Spirit, who gives believers life, testifies with (not to) their spirit(s) of the fact of the new birth.

In many families children inherit their parents' estates; each child is an heir and the children together are co-heirs. Similarly, since Christians are God's children, they are His heirs (cf. Gal. 4:7), and they are co-heirs with Christ. They are recipients of all spiritual blessings (Eph. 1:3) now, and in the future they will share with the Lord Jesus in all the riches of God's kingdom (John 17:24; 1 Cor. 3:21-23). Sharing with Jesus Christ, however, involves more than anticipating the glories of heaven. For Jesus Christ it involved suffering and abuse and crucifixion; therefore being co-heirs with Christ requires that believers share in His sufferings (cf. John 15:20; Col. 1:24; 2 Tim. 3:12; 1 Peter 4:12). In fact believers do share in His sufferings; if indeed translates eiper, which means "if, as is the fact" (cf. Rom. 8:9). Then after the suffering they will share in His glory (2 Tim. 2:12; 1 Peter 4:13; 5:10).

E. Goal of sanctification (8:18-27)

8:18. In one sense this verse is the conclusion of the preceding paragraph in which believers are assured of being heirs of Christ's coming glory. However, Paul reminded his readers that sharing in the glory of Christ in the future required sharing "in His sufferings" in this life. But after careful figuring (Logizomai, I consider) Paul concluded that our present sufferings are far outweighed by the glory that will be revealed in (as well as to and through) us. This future glory is so great that present sufferings are insignificant by comparison. Also the glory is forever, whereas the suffering is temporary and light (2 Cor. 4:17). Certainly this truth can help believers endure afflictions. Romans 8:18 also serves as a topic sentence for the following discussion on the relationship between believers and the whole Creation, both in their afflictions and in their future glory.

8:19-21. The interrelationship of man with the physical creation of which he is a part and in which he lives was established in God's sentence of judgment on Adam after the Fall (Gen. 3:17-19). In Romans 8:19-21 Paul demonstrated that this relationship has a future aspect in connection with God's program of salvation for people. He declared, The Creation waits in eager expectation (lit., "for the strained expectation [apokaradokia is used only one other time in the NT, in Phil. 1:20] of the Creation keeps on eagerly awaiting") for the sons of God to be revealed. The verb for "eagerly waits" (apekdechomai) is used seven times in the New Testament, each time to refer to Christ's return (Rom. 8:19, 23, 25; 1 Cor. 1:7; Gal. 5:5; Phil. 3:20; Heb. 9:28). The revealing of the sons of God will occur when Christ returns for His own. They will share His glory (Rom. 8:18; Col. 1:27; 3:4; Heb. 2:10), and will be transformed (Rom. 8:23). All of nature (inanimate and animate) is personified as waiting eagerly for that time.

The reason for this eager anticipation is stated in verse 20. For the Creation was subjected to frustration. The Greek word mataiotēti ("futility, frailty, purposelessness"; cf. Eph. 4:17; 2 Peter 2:18) describes the change and "decay" (cf. Rom. 8:21) that prevails in all created things. This was not a voluntary subjection because the created world as such had no choice. Instead it was a decree of God, the sovereign Creator, who subjected it. (This probably refers to God, not, as some have suggested, to Adam.) And yet it was in hope, that is, in anticipation of a coming day when the "frustration" would be removed (cf. vv. 24-25). God judged the totality of His Creation along with people for their sin (Gen. 3:14, 17-19).

When God's program of salvation for people is completed and the children of God together experience their glorious freedom from sin, Satan, and physical decay, then the Creation itself will be liberated from its bondage to decay. God had cursed the physical Creation as a part of His judgment on people for sin because of their position and authority over the Creation as God's representatives (Gen. 1:26-30; 2:8, 15). Similarly, since God's program of salvation for people is one of a new Creation (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15), the physical world also will be re-created (Rev. 21:5). This will take place in two stages. First will be the renovation of the present cosmos in conjunction with the return to earth of the Lord Jesus and the establishment of the messianic kingdom on earth (Isa. 11:5-9; 35:1-2, 5-7; 65:20, 25; Amos 9:13). The second stage will be creation of "a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. 21:1; cf. 2 Peter 3:7-13).

8:22-23. In one sense verse 22 is an appropriate conclusion to the preceding paragraph, summing up the present cursed state of the physical creation. Paul said, We know (oidamen, continuing state of knowledge that grows out of perception) that the whole Creation has been groaning as in the pains of childbirth (lit., "keeps on groaning together and keeps on travailing together") right up to the present time. The emphasis on "together" in these verbs does not include believers in Christ, who are specifically mentioned in verse 23, but involves the various parts of the natural Creation. At the same time verse 22 introduces this new paragraph, which sets forth the hope of future deliverance from suffering under the curse of sin.

Paul had begun this section by referring to the believers' "present sufferings" (v. 18), a subject to which he returned in verse 23. Believers are described as the ones having the firstfruits of the Spirit. This is an appositional use of the genitive and means that the Holy Spirit is "the firstfruits" (aparchēn) of God's work of salvation and re-creation in believers. Elsewhere the Holy Spirit is called "a deposit (down payment or earnest) guaranteeing our inheritance" (Eph. 1:14; cf. 2 Cor. 1:22), a similar idea. A farmer's "firstfruits" were the initial harvesting of his first-ripened crops. This first installment was a foretaste and promise that more harvest was to come. Similarly God the Holy Spirit, indwelling believers, is a foretaste that they will enjoy many more blessings, including living in God's presence forever.

Because of "present sufferings" (Rom. 8:18) believers, like the Creation, groan inwardly (cf. v. 22; 2 Cor. 5:2) as they wait eagerly (from apekdechomai, the same word used of the Creation in Rom. 8:19 and of the manifestation of hope in v. 25) for their adoption as sons, which is identified as the redemption of their bodies. The word "adoption" (huiothesian, "placing as a son"; trans. "sonship" in v. 15) describes a believer's legal relationship to God as a result of God's grace received by faith. (Regeneration, however, describes a believer's relationship to God as a result of the new birth.) Israel had received adoption by God (9:4), a reality undoubtedly growing out of her covenantal ties with God (Deut. 7:6-9). In one sense each believer has already received the adoption because he has "received the Spirit of sonship" (lit., "adoption," Rom. 8:15) and is a son of God (Gal. 4:6-7). At the same time, as Romans 8:23 states, believers still anticipate their adoption in its completeness, which is said to be "the redemption" (apolytrōsin; etymologically the Gr. word describes a release or deliverance or manumission achieved by a ransom payment [lytron]; cf. comments on 3:24) of their bodies. This is called the revelation of the sons of God (8:19) and "the glorious freedom of the children of God" (v. 21). It will occur at the Rapture of the church when believers will be raised and transformed with glorious bodies (1 Cor. 15:42-54; 2 Cor. 5:1-5; Phil. 3:20-21; 1 Thes. 4:13-18). Paul called that day "the day of redemption" (Eph. 4:30).

8:24-25. God has promised that a believer's body will finally be delivered from sin and its effects by the work of His Son. Those who respond by faith to that promise have hope, a confident expectation of that bodily redemption (cf. Gal. 5:5). This is the final step of salvation and it was in that anticipation that we were saved. The redemption of the body (Rom. 8:23) obviously has not yet occurred (Who hopes for what he already has?), but it is hoped for and eagerly anticipated (wait is from apekdechomai; cf. vv. 19, 23) with steadfast endurance (patiently is lit., "through endurance") in present sufferings (v. 18).

8:26-27. These verses point out that believers are not left to their own resources in their sufferings (v. 18) and groaning (v. 23). The Spirit helps (pres. tense, "keeps on helping") us in (the Gr. here does not have the words rendered "us in") our weakness. It is not that the Spirit helps in those occasional times when Christians are weak; their state is one of weakness and the Spirit continually helps them. The Greek word for weakness (astheneia) may include physical, emotional, and spiritual disability (cf. comments on James 5:14) evidenced by inward "groaning" (Rom. 8:23). "Helps" translates synantilambanetai, a rich word that pictures someone helping another carry a heavy load. (It is used elsewhere in the NT only in Luke 10:40.)

One evidence of their weakness is the fact that believers do not know what they ought to pray (lit., "what we should pray as it is necessary"). In their weakness both the content and the manner of proper prayer eludes them, but the Spirit Himself comes to their rescue and intercedes (pres. tense, "keeps on interceding") for us with groans that words cannot express. Natural Creation groans (Rom. 8:22) and believers groan (v. 23), and so does the Holy Spirit. This has nothing to do with praying in tongues, as some suggest. The groaning is done by the Holy Spirit, not believers, and is not stated in words. The help the Spirit gives (v. 26) is His interceding. "Intercedes" translates hyperentynchanei, which occurs only here in the New Testament; it means "approaches or appeals to someone." The One who searches our hearts is God (1 Sam. 16:7; Heb. 4:13), and He knows (oiden, "knows perceptively or intuitively") the mind of the Spirit, because the Spirit intercedes (entynchanei; cf. Rom. 8:26) for the saints in accordance with God's will. Even though the Spirit's words are not expressed, the Father knows what the Spirit is thinking. This is an interesting statement about the Father's omniscience and the intimacy within the Trinity. The Lord Jesus continually intercedes for believers in God's presence (v. 34; Heb. 7:25) and the Holy Spirit also intercedes on their behalf! Though believers are ignorant of what to pray for and how to voice those requests, the Spirit voices their requests for them.

F. Certainty of sanctification (8:28-39)

This section on the doctrine of a believer's sanctification (vv. 28-39) logically follows the discussion of its goal or end (vv. 18-27). To discuss the goal of sanctification—a believer's hope, which he awaits eagerly and steadfastly—is pointless unless realizing that goal is certain. God provided that certainty and confirms the believer's hope, since sanctification from its beginning in regeneration to its completion in glorification is ultimately God's work, which believers appropriate by faith (cf. Phil. 1:6).

8:28. Believers, Paul began, know of sanctification's certainty, and that knowledge is gained by spiritual perception. Christians know intuitively (oidamen)—though they may not always fully understand and sense it experientially—that in all things God works for the good of those who love Him (lit., "to the ones who love God He works all things together unto good"). The things themselves may not be good, but God harmonizes them together for believers' ultimate good, because His goal is to bring them to perfection in His presence (cf. Eph. 1:4; 5:27; Col. 1:22; Jude 24). Even adversities and afflictions contribute to that end. The active voice present tense of the verb synergei ("He works together") emphasizes that this is a continuing activity of God. And His working is on behalf of "those who love Him," who are further identified as the ones who have been called according to His purpose. It is significant that a believer's love for God follows God's calling of him and is undoubtedly the product of the indwelling Holy Spirit (cf. Rom. 5:5; 1 John 4:19). The word for "purpose" is prothesin, God's plan (Paul used the same word in Rom. 9:11; Eph. 1:11; 3:11). "Called" means more than being invited to receive Christ; it means to be summoned to and given salvation (cf. Rom. 1:6; 8:30).

8:29-30. These verses give Paul's explanation of what it means to be one who has "been called according to His purpose" and why God keeps on working all their experiences together to their benefit (v. 28). Believers are those God foreknew. This does not mean simply that God foreknows what believers will do, but that God foreknows them. Nor does divine foreknowledge merely mean an awareness of or acquaintance with an individual. Instead it means a meaningful relationship with a person based on God's choice (cf. Jer. 1:4-5; Amos 3:2) in eternity before Creation. "He chose us in Him before the Creation of the world" (Eph. 1:4).

This eternal choice and foreknowledge involves more than establishing a relationship between God and believers. It also involves the goal or end of that relationship: Those God foreknew He also predestined to be conformed to the likeness of His Son (cf. 1 John 3:2). The entire group that is brought into relationship with God in His eternal plan by divine foreknowledge and choice is predestined (proōrisen, "predetermined"; cf. Eph. 1:5, 11). God determined beforehand the believers' destiny, namely, conformity to the image of Jesus Christ. By all saints being made like Christ (ultimate and complete sanctification), Christ will be exalted as the Firstborn among many brothers. The resurrected and glorified Lord Jesus Christ will become the Head of a new race of humanity purified from all contact with sin and prepared to live eternally in His presence (cf. 1 Cor. 15:42-49). As the "Firstborn" He is in the highest position among others (cf. Col. 1:18).

Between the start and finish of God's plan are three steps: being called (cf. Rom. 1:6; 8:28), being justified (cf. 3:24, 28; 4:2; 5:1, 9), and being glorified (cf. 8:17; Col. 1:27; 3:4), and in the process not a single person is lost. God completes His plan without slippage. "Glorified" is in the past tense because this final step is so certain that in God's eyes it is as good as done. To be glorified is another way of saying that God's children will be "conformed" to His Son; and that is God's ultimate "purpose." No longer will they "fall short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

8:31-32. It is astounding to realize that God's plan of salvation for people is a program that reaches from eternity past to eternity future which God will carry out perfectly. Recognizing this, Paul asked and answered (in vv. 31-39) seven questions to drive home the truth that a believer's eternal salvation is completely secure in God's hands. The first question is general, What, then, shall we say in response to this? (cf. 4:1; 6:1; 9:14, 30) The obvious response to 8:28-30 would be to say "Hallelujah," or to stand in open-mouthed amazement.

This leads to a series of six more specific questions. The first is, If God is for us, who can be against us? Obviously, Satan and his demonic hosts are against believers (cf. Eph. 6:11-13; 1 Peter 5:8), but they cannot ultimately prevail and triumph over believers. God is the self-existent One and the sovereign Creator and, since He is for believers, no one can oppose believers successfully. He is for believers to the extent that He . . . did not spare His own Son, but gave Him up for us all. The word "spare" (epheisato, from pheidomai) is the same word used in the Septuagint in Genesis 22:12 where the NIV translates it "withheld." God said to Abraham, "You have not withheld your son." Then God directed Abraham to spare Isaac and to offer a ram as a substitute (Gen. 22:2-14), whereas God offered His own Son as the Sacrifice for sin (John 1:29). In view of this supreme act of God's grace, How will He not also, along with Him, graciously give us all things? Since God gave the greatest Sacrifice of all, His own Son, He will certainly not hesitate to give believers all other things pertaining to and leading to their ultimate sanctification (cf. 2 Peter 1:3).

8:33-34. The next two questions Paul raised and answered are forensic or legal in nature. Who will bring any charge (enkalesei, "make a formal accusation in court; press charges"; cf. Acts 19:40; 23:29; 26:2) against those whom God has chosen? Satan is identified as "the accuser" of God's people (Rev. 12:10; cf. Zech. 3:1). His accusations are valid, because they are based on the believer's sinfulness and defilement. But Satan's accusations will be thrown out of court, because it is God who justifies. The Judge Himself declares the accused person righteous on the basis of his faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. 3:24; 5:1). As a result all accusations are dismissed and no one can bring an accusation that will stand.

The related question is, Who is He that condemns? The Greek participle ho katakrinōn can have a future sense, "will condemn," which seems preferable here. (Cf. katakrima, "condemnation, punishment" in 8:1.) Jesus Christ is God's appointed Judge (John 5:22, 27; Acts 17:31), so Paul answered this question by stating, Christ Jesus. But Jesus is the very One whom the believer has trusted for salvation. Furthermore, He is the One who died—more than that (lit., "but more") who was raised to life—who is at the right hand of God (cf. Luke 22:69; Acts 2:33; 5:31; Eph. 1:20; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3, 13; 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; 1 Peter 3:22) and is also interceding for us. The Lord Jesus Christ is indeed the Judge, but He is also the One with whom each believer is identified by faith. As a result he is a believer's Sacrifice for sin (cf. Rom. 5:8; 8:32), his new life (a believer shares in Christ's resurrection life; 6:4, 8, 11; Eph. 2:5-6; Col. 2:13), his Intercessor (cf. Heb. 7:25; also the Holy Spirit intercedes, Rom. 8:26-27) and his Defense (1 John 2:1). Certainly the Judge will not condemn His own who are in Him by faith! (cf. Rom. 8:1) 8:35-37. Paul's final questions are in verse 35: Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? The context (vv. 37, 39) shows that "the love of Christ" is His love for believers (not their love for Him; cf. 5:5). The apostle suggested seven things a believer might experience (Paul experienced all of them; 2 Cor. 11:23-28) that some might think could come between a believer and Christ's love—trouble (thlipsis, "pressure or distress"; mentioned frequently by Paul in 2 Cor.) or hardship (stenochōria, lit., "narrowness," i.e., being pressed in, hemmed in, crowded) or persecution or famine or nakedness or danger or sword. These things—stated in increasing intensity—do not separate Christians from Christ; instead they are part of the "all things" (Rom. 8:28) God uses to bring them to conformity to His Son. Then Paul quoted Psalm 44:22 to remind his readers that in this life the people of God must face much affliction (cf. John 16:33) including even martyrdom for some. In the early days of the church one or more Christians were martyred every day, or faced the possibility of it. Their persecutors valued Christians' lives as nothing more than animals to be butchered.

In all these adversities (cf. "all things" in Rom. 8:28 and "all things" in v. 32 with all these things in v. 37), rather than being separated from Christ's love, believers are more than conquerors (pres. tense, hypernikōmen, "keep on being conquerors to a greater degree" or "keep on winning a glorious victory") through Him who loved us. Jesus Christ and His love for believers enable them to triumph (cf. 2 Cor. 2:14).

8:38-39. Paul then ended his discussion on believers' safety in Jesus Christ and the certainty of their sanctification with a positive declaration—For I am convinced (perf. tense, "I stand convinced"; cf. 15:14) that nothing can separate believers from the love of God (God's love for them, not their love for God; cf. v. 35). Paul's list of 10 items begins with death, where the list of 7 items in verse 35 ended. These elements in God's universe include the extremes of existence: (1) death and (2) life (in either death [2 Cor. 5:8-9] or life, believers are in God's presence); the extremes of created spiritual armies: (3) angels and (4) demons (angels would not and demons could not undo God's relationship with His redeemed ones); the extremes in time: (5) the present and (6) the future (nothing known now, e.g., the hardships listed in Rom. 8:35, or in the unknown time to come); spiritual enemies: (7) powers (perhaps Satan and his demons; cf. Eph. 6:12; or possibly human governments); the extremes in space: (8) height and (9) depth (nothing overhead or underneath can suddenly come swooping down or up to sever believers from God's love); and (10) everything in the entire created realm. Absolutely nothing in His Creation can thwart His purpose for believers in Christ. What a climactic way to affirm the certainty of believers' salvation!

V. God's Righteousness Revealed in Sovereign Choice (chaps. 9–11)

Since God is the self-existent Being who is the Creator of everything that exists outside Himself, He is sovereign and can therefore use and dispose of His Creation as He wishes. This sovereignty reveals not only His personal righteousness but also His provided righteousness.

A. God's sovereign choice enunciated (9:1-29)

Paul here discussed God's sovereign choice because of a practical problem. The Jews gloried in the fact that as Israelites they were God's Chosen People (Deut. 7:6; cf. Rom. 2:17-20a; 3:1-2). But now in God's program of salvation in the church, Jewish involvement was decreasing while Gentile participation was becoming dominant. Had God, then, abandoned the Jewish people? This is ultimately explained by God's sovereign choice, a principle which has always been in operation even within the Chosen People of Israel and between Israel and other nations. Now this principle operates in God's purposes for Israel and the church and in His dealings with Jews and Gentiles within the church.

1. ISRAEL'S PRIVILEGES (9:1-5)

9:1-5. By repetition in positive and negative terms (internally attested by the witness of his own conscience [cf. comments on 2:15] in the presence of the Holy Spirit) Paul affirmed his deep anguish of heart over the rejection of the gospel by the vast majority of Jews. His desire for their salvation was so strong that he was at the point of wishing (imperf. tense, I could wish) that he were cursed and cut off from Christ for his kinsmen, the Israelites.

Paul then listed seven spiritual privileges which belonged to the people of Israel as God's chosen nation: the adoption as sons (cf. Ex. 4:22), the divine glory (cf. Ex. 16:10; 24:17; 40:34; 1 Kings 8:11), the covenants (Gen. 15:18; 2 Sam. 7:12-16; Jer. 31:31-34), the receiving of the Law (Deut. 5:1-22), the temple worship (latreia, "sacred service," which may also include service in the tabernacle), and the promises (esp. of the coming Messiah). Also the Israelites were in the line of promise from its beginning in the patriarchs (cf. Matt. 1:1-16; Rom. 1:3) to its fulfillment in the Messiah, who is God over all, forever praised! Amen. This is a clear affirmation of the deity of Messiah. Some take these words as a separate sentence (see NIV marg.), but the NIV text seems preferable.

2. THE CHOICE ILLUSTRATED (9:6-18)

a. Isaac over Ishmael (9:6-9)

9:6-9. The failure of the Jews to respond to the gospel of Christ did not mean God's Word had failed. Instead this rejection was simply the current example of the principle of God's sovereign choice established in the Old Testament. Paul reminded his readers of a truth he had presented earlier: For not all who are descended from Israel are Israel, that is, spiritual Israel (cf. 2:28-29).

Then Paul gave three Old Testament illustrations of God's sovereignty (Isaac and Ishmael, 9:7b-9; Jacob and Esau, vv. 10-13; and Pharaoh, vv. 14-18). The first two show that God made a sovereign choice among the physical descendants of Abraham in establishing the spiritual line of promise. Ishmael, born to Hagar (Gen. 16)—and the six sons of Keturah as well (Gen. 25:1-4)—were Abraham's descendants (sperma), but they were not counted as Abraham's children (tekna, "born ones") in the line of promise. Instead, as God told Abraham (Gen. 21:12), It is through Isaac that your offspring will be reckoned (lit., "in Isaac seed [sperma] will be called to you"). Paul repeated the principle for emphasis in different words: It is not the natural children (lit., "the born ones of the flesh") who are God's children (tekna, "born ones of God"), but it is the children (tekna) of the promise who are regarded as Abraham's offspring (sperma). To be a physical descendant of Abraham is not enough; one must be chosen by God (cf. "chosen" in Rom. 8:33) and must believe in Him (4:3, 22-24). God's assurance that the promise would come through Isaac, not Ishmael, was given to Abraham: At the appointed time I will return, and Sarah will have a son (a somewhat free quotation of Gen. 18:10 from the LXX).

b. Jacob over Esau (9:10-13)

9:10-13. The second Old Testament illustration of God's sovereign choice is drawn from the second generation of Jewish ancestry. Apparently God purposed to establish this principle clearly at the beginning of His relationship with His Chosen People. This illustration emphasizes God's sovereignty even more than the first since it involves God's choice of one twin over another. (In the case of Abraham's sons, God chose the child of one woman over the child of another woman.) In addition, in the case of Rebecca's children God's choice was indicated before the twins were born or had done anything good or bad. This demonstrated that God's sovereign choice was not by works, even foreseen works, but by Him who calls (cf. "called" in 1:6; 8:28, 30). God's plan (8:28; 9:11), and not man's works (4:2-6), is the basis of His election. Rebecca was informed, The older will serve the younger (cf. Gen. 25:23), a divine choice confirmed by God's declaration, Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated (cf. Mal. 1:2-3). Esau, the older, did not actually serve Jacob, his younger twin; but Esau's descendants, the Edomites, did (cf. 1 Sam. 14:47; 2 Sam. 8:14; 1 Kings 11:15-16; 22:47; 2 Kings 14:7). God's "love" for Jacob was revealed in His choice of Jacob and God's "hatred" for Esau was seen in His rejecting Esau for the line of promise. Hatred in this sense is not absolute but relative to a higher choice (cf. Matt. 6:24; Luke 14:26; John 12:25).

c. Pharaoh (9:14-18)

9:14-18. With the words, What then shall we say? (cf. 4:1; 6:1; 8:31) Paul introduced the question undoubtedly in his readers' minds, Is God unjust in choosing Isaac over Ishmael, and Jacob over Esau? The Greek negative particle (mē) with a question implies a negative response. Paul responded in his usual emphatic way, Not at all! (mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4) The issue in such matters is not justice but sovereign decision, as God's word to Moses (Ex. 33:19) quoted by Paul indicates. As the sovereign God, He has the right to show mercy to whomever He chooses. In fact, He is not under obligation to extend mercy to anyone. Therefore experiencing His mercy does not . . . depend on man's desire (lit., "the one willing") or effort (lit., "the one running"). No one deserves or can earn His mercy.

The Apostle Paul then presented his third illustration, the Egyptian Pharaoh of the Exodus. To him God said through Moses, I raised you up (i.e., brought you onto the scene of history) to display My power in you and that My name might be proclaimed in all the earth (cf. Ex. 9:16). God's power (cf. Rom. 9:22) was demonstrated as He freed the Israelites from under Pharaoh's hand. And other nations heard about it and were awed (Ex. 15:14-16; Josh. 2:10-11; 9:9; 1 Sam. 4:8). It is significant that Paul introduced this quotation with the words, For the Scripture says, for he equated the words of God with the words of Scripture. Paul concluded, God has mercy on whom He wants to have mercy (cf. Rom. 9:15) and He hardens whom He wants to harden ("make stubborn"; cf. Ex. 4:21; 7:3; 9:12; 10:27; 14:4, 8; cf. 14:17). Because of God's choice, Pharaoh then hardened his own heart (Ex. 7:13-14, 22; 8:15, 19, 32; 9:7, 34-35). All this shows that God chooses and works sovereignly, but not arbitrarily. Yet Pharaoh was responsible for his actions.

3. THE CHOICE EXPLAINED (9:19-29)

9:19-21. Once again Paul anticipated the questioning response of his readers: Then why does God still blame us? (The Gr. word trans. "then" probably goes with the preceding statement rather than this question, though this also makes good sense.) For who resists (perf. tense, "has taken and continues to take a stand against") His will? (boulēmati, "deliberate purpose") These questions are still raised by those who reject the biblical doctrine of God's sovereignty. If God makes the choices, how can He hold man responsible? Who can go against what He does?

In response Paul reaffirmed the reality of God's sovereignty and the effrontery of such questions. But who are you, O man, to talk back to God? (cf. Isa. 45:9) Man, the created one, has no right to question God, the Creator. Paul then quoted a clause from Isaiah 29:16: Shall what is formed say to Him who formed it, Why did You make me like this? Drawing an analogy between the sovereign Creator and a potter, Paul asked, Does not the potter have the right to make out of the same lump of clay some pottery for noble purposes (lit., "one vessel [pot or vase] unto honor") and some for common use? (lit., "unto dishonor") Obviously a potter from the same pile takes some clay to form a finely shaped and decorated vase and takes other clay to make a cooking pot (cf. Jer. 18:4-6). And the clay has no right to complain! The sovereign Creator has the same authority over His creatures, especially in light of man's origin from dust (Gen. 2:7).

9:22-26. Having stated that God is like a potter, Paul now applied this illustration to God's sovereign purpose for different people. He stated the two alternatives as conditional clauses (What if. . . ?) and left unstated the obvious common conclusion: Does not God have that right? The one alternative is that God . . . bore with great patience (cf. 2 Peter 3:9) the objects (lit., "vessels"; cf. Rom. 9:21) of His wrath—prepared for destruction (apōleian, "ruin"). The perfect participle "prepared" describes past action with a continuing result or state. "Prepared" may be reflexive ("prepared themselves"), but it seems preferable to take it as passive ("were prepared"). The thought is that they have been and are in a state of readiness or ripeness to receive God's wrath. The objects of God's wrath are the unsaved (1:18), who will suffer eternal judgment (John 3:36). God has patiently endured their antagonism to Him (cf. Acts 14:16; Rom. 3:25), but their judgment is coming. Those who oppose Him and refuse to turn to Him (Matt. 23:37) are then "prepared" by Him for condemnation. They are "storing up [God's] wrath" against themselves (Rom. 2:5). In hell they will experience His wrath, and His power will be made known (cf. 9:17). God does not delight in wrath, and He did not choose some people to go to hell. Choosing (v. 22) should be rendered "willing." Some are prepared by God for eternal judgment not because He delights to do so, but because of their sin. In view of their sin, which makes them "ripe" for destruction, God is willing to exhibit His wrath, and He will do so at the proper time.

The other alternative relates to God's dealings with the objects (lit., "vessels"; cf. v. 21) of His mercy. God chose them as such in order to make the riches of His glory known and He prepared them in advance for glory (cf. 8:29-31; Col. 1:27; 3:4). The verb "He prepared in advance" (Rom. 9:23) is proētoimasen, "He made ready beforehand," which God does by bestowing salvation. (The word "prepared" in v. 22 is katērtismena, "are made or prepared or ripened.")

Up to this point Paul had been speaking conditionally and objectively, but in verse 24 he was more direct—even us—because he and his readers were some of the vessels of mercy sovereignly chosen by God. God not only chose them but He also called them, including Jews and Gentiles. The point is that God's sovereign choice was manifested not only in the Jews' ancestry (in Isaac and Jacob, vv. 6-13), but also in Paul's generation and today. To back up his conclusion and particularly the part about Gentiles, Paul quoted two verses from Hosea (2:23; 1:10). God directed Hosea to give his children symbolic names—one son Lo-Ammi (not my people) and the daughter Lo-Ruhamah (not . . . loved). These represented God's abandonment of the Northern Kingdom of Israel to the Assyrian Captivity and Exile (Hosea 1:2-9).

God was not permanently casting away the people of Israel, however. In the verses quoted by Paul God promised to restore them as His beloved and as His people. By ethnic heritage the Gentiles were not God's people, so Paul was led by the Spirit of God to apply these verses to Gentiles—and Jews also—who were sovereignly chosen by God and called to be His people in Christ. The quotation of Hosea 2:23 is rather free with the order of the clauses reversed to fit the application to Gentiles. Paul was applying these verses from Hosea to the Gentiles, not reinterpreting them. He was not saying that Israel of the Old Testament is part of the church.

9:27-29. Here Paul quoted Old Testament verses to support the fact that God in His sovereign choice and calling always includes a Jewish segment, though it is a minority. The passages quoted (Isa. 10:22-23 and 1:9, both from the LXX) make it clear that in God's judgment on rebellious Israel He by sovereign choice preserves and saves a remnant. Those promises were fulfilled in the Captivity and Exile of both Israel and Judah and in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 and will also be fulfilled in the national end-time deliverance of Israel (Rom. 11:26-27). Even today the same principle is true. Jews who become members of the church, the body of Christ, are what Paul later called "a remnant chosen by grace" (11:5), which included himself (11:1).

B. God's sovereign choice applied (9:30–10:21)

1. ISRAEL'S STUMBLING (9:30–10:4)

9:30-33. Once again Paul asked his familiar rhetorical question, What then shall we say? (cf. 4:1; 6:1; 8:31; 9:14) preparatory to his summation of this situation. His identification of the Gentiles (lit., "the nations") as the ones who have obtained . . . a righteousness that is by (ek, "out from") faith is interesting. As Paul stated later, the church included Jewish as well as Gentile believers (11:1-5), but by the time of Paul's third missionary journey the increasing rejection of the gospel by the Jews and the predominance of Gentiles in the church led the apostle to speak of "the Gentiles" as antithetical to Israel. The latter pursued ("kept on pursuing") a Law of righteousness, but has not attained it. "A Law of righteousness" refers to the Mosaic Law (cf. 7:7, 12, 14). To seek to attain righteousness by observing the Law requires that it be kept perfectly (cf. James 2:10). Why did Israel not attain it? Because they pursued it not by (ek, "out from") faith but as if it were by (ek, "out from") works. The Israelites did not admit their inability to keep the Law perfectly and turn by faith to God for forgiveness. Instead a few of them kept trying to keep the Law by their own efforts. Consequently they stumbled (cf. Rom. 11:11) over the "stumbling Stone." The Lord Jesus Christ, "the stumbling Stone" (cf. 1 Peter 2:4-8), did not conform to the Jews' expectations, so they rejected Him instead of responding to Him by faith. To show that God anticipated this, Paul quoted from Isaiah 8:14 and 28:16 (cf. Rom. 10:11), combining the two statements to indicate the two contrasting reactions by men to the Stone that God placed in Zion (cf. "Zion" in 11:26).

10:1-4. Having stated the fact of Israel's stumbling in the preceding verses, Paul now explained the reason for that stumbling. But first, in words reminiscent of the opening verses of chapter 9, the apostle expressed his deep personal spiritual burden for the salvation of the people of Israel. Perhaps with his own experience in mind (cf. Acts 26:11; Gal. 1:13-14; Phil. 3:4-6) Paul affirmed, For I can testify (pres. tense, "I testify, bear witness") about them that they are zealous for God. Israel was called "the God-intoxicated people." Paul had to acknowledge, however, that their zeal is not based on (lit., "according to") knowledge (epignōsin, "intensive, full knowledge"). The Jews obviously had knowledge of God but not full knowledge. Otherwise they would not have stumbled over Christ by seeking to gain righteousness on the basis of works.

Paul continued his explanation of Israel's failure and their misguided zeal. Since they did not know (the participle agnoountes means "being ignorant," here in the sense of not understanding) the righteousness that comes from God. The NIV implies that the people of Israel did not understand the God-provided righteousness expounded in this letter to the Christians in Rome (cf. Rom. 1:17). That may be true, even though they should have known from their own Scriptures (cf. Gen. 15:6; Ps. 32:1-2). But here preferably the righteousness in view is the righteousness God requires for people to be accepted by Him, which is God's own infinite righteousness. The Jews did not really understand God's own infinite righteousness, which is why they were continuing to seek to establish their own

(cf. Isa. 64:6). Little wonder then that they did not submit to ("place themselves under") God's righteousness, that is, the righteousness God provides through Christ by faith. The Greek in Romans 10:4 includes the coordinating particle gar, "for" (not trans. in the NIV). It introduces a statement that is crucial to Paul's explanation of Israel's stumbling—Christ is the end of the Law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes. The word translated "end" (telos) stands in the emphatic first position in the Greek sentence. It means that Christ is the designed end (termination) or Purpose-Goal of the Law (cf. Gal. 3:24), the Object to which the Law pointed.

The Law did not and could not of itself provide righteousness before God for individuals (cf. Rom. 3:20; 7:7). But Christ fulfilled the Law (Matt. 5:17-18) by keeping it perfectly during His sinless life (cf. John 8:46) and then gave His life in payment for the penalty of sin and the broken Law (cf. Eph. 2:15; Col. 2:13-14). The Law then pointed to Him as the Source of the God-provided righteousness it could not supply (Gal. 3:24). A godly Jew who trusted Yahweh and followed the Levitical system, including the sin offering and the trespass offering, would most likely be inclined to respond to Christ by faith and would receive God's righteousness (i.e., be justified; Acts 13:39; Rom. 3:24; 4:3, 5). He then could meet the requirements of the Law by the indwelling Holy Spirit (8:4). Conversely, a Jew who sought by works to establish his own righteousness would not recognize Christ as "the end of the Law" and would stumble over Him.

2. GOD'S GRACIOUS OFFER (10:5-15)

10:5-8. In presenting God's gracious offer of salvation in Christ and the provision of righteousness by faith, Paul first stated the contrast of the by-works approach to achieving righteousness. He wrote, Moses describes (lit., "writes") the righteousness that is by the Law. Then Paul quoted Leviticus 18:5, The man who does these things will live by them. If a Jew were to receive righteousness by keeping the demands of the Law, that would be human achievement; it would not be from God. However, a Jew would need to keep the entire Law perfectly all his life—an impossible task (James 2:10). But then Paul also quoted Moses in support of his righteousness-by-faith position centered in Christ as "the end of the Law" and the means by which righteousness is available for everyone who believes. It does not seem appropriate that Paul was merely borrowing Moses' words and applying them to something foreign in Moses' thought. This suggests, then, that righteousness . . . by faith is not a new concept, but had been proclaimed to Israel by Moses.

The material Paul quoted in Romans 10:6-8 is taken somewhat freely from Deuteronomy 30:12-14 with clauses quoted here and there. The material in Deuteronomy was part of Moses' charge to the generation of Israel about to enter the land of Canaan. This exhortation was the conclusion of Moses' prophetic description of God's dealing with Israel. Blessing was promised for faith and obedience, and chastisement would result from rejection and disobedience. If Israel forsook God, Moses said, she would face worldwide dispersion and affliction. When the people then finally do turn to God in faith, He will restore them to blessing, prosperity, and prominence among the nations (Deut. 30:1-10). The point of Moses' exhortation (Deut. 30:11) is that the generation to whom he was speaking had the message (it was very near you and in your mouth, Deut. 30:14) and could respond by faith (in your heart, Deut. 30:14) and walk with God in obedience. Since the Israelites in Moses' day had the message, they did not need to ask that it be brought down from heaven or that someone "cross the sea to get it" (Deut. 30:13). Instead, the word (Moses' instructions) was "near" them (Deut. 30:14).

In effect, Paul indicated that the same truth applied to his generation, with the added fact that Christ had come in the flesh (John 1:14) and had been resurrected. Therefore there was no need for anyone to ask to bring Christ down (in His Incarnation) or to bring Christ up from the dead; He had already come and had been resurrected. The message of righteousness by faith in Paul's day was "near" his readers (available to them) and this was "the word" (rhēma, "saying") of faith he was proclaiming (rhēma, "the spoken word" is also used in Eph. 5:26; 6:17; 1 Peter 1:25). Thus the gospel, "the word of faith," is available and accessible.

10:9-13. In these verses Paul stated the content of that message concerning faith. Confessing with the mouth that Jesus is Lord is mentioned first to conform to the order of the quotation from Deuteronomy 30:14 in Romans 10:8. The confession is an acknowledgement that God has been incarnated in Jesus (cf. v. 6), that Jesus Christ is God. Also essential is heart-faith that God raised Him from the dead (cf. v. 7). The result is salvation. The true order is given in verse 10: For it is with your heart that you believe and are justified (lit., "it is believed unto righteousness"), and it is with your mouth that you confess and are saved (lit., "it is confessed unto salvation"). Yet these are not two separate steps to salvation. They are chronologically together. Salvation comes through acknowledging to God that Christ is God and believing in Him.

Paul then (v. 11) supported his position by requoting part of Isaiah 28:16 (cf. Rom. 9:33), adding the Greek word translated everyone. God responds with the gift of provided righteousness to each individual who believes. Then Paul reminded his readers of God's impartiality, as he did when discussing human sinfulness (3:22). Just as all who sin will be judged, so all who believe will be saved and richly blessed. This conclusion also is supported by a quotation from Joel 2:32: Everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved. To call on the Lord means to pray in faith for salvation. (On the significance of the "name," see comments on Acts 3:16.)

10:14-15. After proclaiming God's gracious offer in Christ, Paul confronted the natural questions that arise, each additional question building on the key verb from the preceding question. God's promise of salvation to "everyone who calls" on Him (v. 13) begins the process. How, then, can they call on the One they have not believed in? Previously, to call on the Lord was equated with trusting Him or believing in Him (cf. vv. 11 and 13), but here it follows the believing. When one believes in Christ, he "calls" on Him. Believing, in turn, is based on hearing, and hearing is based on someone preaching . . . and how can they preach unless they are sent? (Since the Gr. word kēryssō, "preach," means "to be a herald, to announce," it is not limited to proclamation from a pulpit.) Carrying God's gracious offer involves human beings whom God has brought to Himself and then uses as His heralds. They share God's message of salvation because He will save everyone who calls on His name. Paul quoted from Isaiah 52:7 concerning the eagerness of the bearers of good news. Those who bear it have beautiful . . . feet, that is, their message is welcome. In Isaiah 52:7 the messenger announced to Judah that God had ended their Exile in Babylon (cf. Isa. 40:9-11). But Paul applied Isaiah 52:7 to the Jews of his day to whom the gospel was being given.

3. ISRAEL'S REJECTION (10:16-21)

10:16-18. Paul had made it clear that God's gracious offer of righteousness by faith was given to all, Jews and Gentiles alike (cf. v. 12). His focus in this chapter, however, has been on the people of Israel and their response to that offer (cf. v. 1). Therefore when he wrote, But not all the Israelites (the Gr. text simply says "all") accepted the good news, he obviously had in mind the Jews' failure to respond. ("Accepted" translates hypēkousan, a compound of the verb "to hear." It means "to hear with a positive response," and so "to obey, to submit to.") This is borne out by Paul's confirming quotation of Isaiah 53:1: Lord, who has believed our message? This failure of the Jews to respond to the good news was true in Jesus' days on earth (John 12:37-41) and in Paul's day as well. However, the indefinite "all" of the Greek text (Rom. 10:16) is appropriate, because the response to the gospel among the Gentiles was also far less than total. Paul explained, Consequently, faith comes from hearing the message (lit., "is out from hearing"; cf. v. 14) and the message is heard through the word of Christ (lit., "and the hearing is through the saying [rhēmatos; cf. v. 17] concerning Christ"). The Greek word akoē ("hearing") can mean the thing heard (the message; v. 16) or the act or sense of hearing (v. 17).

Someone, however, might insist that the Jews were not given adequate opportunity to hear the message. So, Paul said, But I ask ("say"), Did they not hear? He then quoted Psalm 19:4, concerning God's general revelation in the cosmic heavens (cf. Rom. 1:18-20). However, that psalm also discusses God's special revelation in the Old Testament (Ps. 19:7-11). Paul's obvious answer to his question is that Israel had ample opportunity by both general and special revelation to respond to God. Certainly she heard.

10:19-21. With these verses the argument takes a turn. The apostle anticipated another objection. Someone might argue, "Yes, Israel heard but she did not understand that God purposed to offer righteousness by faith to all mankind, including Gentiles." So Paul wrote, Again I ask (lit., "But I say"), did Israel not understand? (egnō, "know") His answer this time was from two Old Testament quotations, one as early as Moses (Deut. 32:21) and the second by Isaiah (Isa. 65:1). Both Old Testament leaders wrote about God's turning to the Gentiles, whom the Jews thought had no understanding (asynetō, "senseless"; cf. Rom. 1:21, 31). And yet concerning Israel, God has been gracious in spite of her disobedience (a quotation of Isa. 65:2). Israel's continuing rebellious and unbelieving disobedience was judged by God's turning to the Gentiles (Rom. 10:20; cf. Acts 8:1-8, 10). At the same time God has not withheld salvation from Jews. He has held out His hands, imploring them to return to Him.

C. God's sovereign choice fulfilled (chap. 11)

To this point in this major section of Romans (chaps. 9–11) God's personal righteousness and His provided righteousness for people has been displayed primarily in Israel's rejecting Christ and rebelling against God, and in God's choosing and turning to Gentiles in grace. These themes continue in this chapter, but God's sovereign choice also involves His restoring Israel and His being magnified thereby.

1. IN ELECTION OF GRACE (11:1-10)

11:1-6. Paul's transition from chapter 10 is seen in the repetition of his rhetorical clause "I ask" (10:18-19). I ask then is literally, "Therefore, I say." The apostle's question is, Did God reject His people? In Greek the question is asked to elicit a negative reply: "God did not reject His people, did He?" This is reinforced by Paul's characteristic negative ejaculation, By no means! (mē genoito; cf. comments on 3:4) Then Paul presented himself as his first proof. He had responded by faith to Jesus Christ and had received God's provided righteousness, and yet he was an Israelite (cf. Phil. 3:5) and of the tribe of Benjamin. Though small, Benjamin was a significant tribe (Saul, Israel's first king, was from Benjamin). If God could save Paul (Acts 9; 22; 26), He certainly could save other Jews (1 Tim. 1:15-16). Then he positively declared, God did not reject His people (quoted from 1 Sam. 12:22; Ps. 94:14), whom He foreknew (proegnō, "had a meaningful relationship with"; cf. Amos 3:2; and cf. comments on Rom. 8:29). God had chosen Israel as His covenant people from eternity past and entered into a relationship with them that will never be destroyed (cf. Jer. 31:37).

Paul's second proof that God has not rejected His people was taken from Israel's history during Elijah's ministry. The prophet was deeply depressed, having fled for his life from Jezebel. Paul said, Elijah . . . appealed to (entynchanei, "petitioned"; trans. "intercedes" in Rom. 8:27 and "is . . . interceding" in 8:34) God against Israel. Paul then quoted part of the prophet's complaint (1 Kings 19:10, 14), reversing the order of the details quoted and concluding with Elijah's lament, I am the only one left, and they are trying to kill me. Elijah considered himself the only believing person left in Israel. Paul asked, And what was God's answer (lit., "the divine response") to him? God was not limited to one fearful, depressed prophet; He had reserved for Himself a godly remnant in Israel that numbered 7,000 (1 Kings 19:18). The preservation of the faithful remnant was a work of God.

After the historical illustration Paul drew a conclusion for his day: So too, at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace (lit., "a remnant according to the election of grace has come to be"). Paul was only one of many in his generation elected to faith from the people of Israel. In every generation of the church "a remnant chosen by grace" has been called from among the Jews. Paul added that this choice is totally by God's grace (cf. Eph. 2:8-9) and he emphasized the antithesis between grace and works (cf. Rom. 4:4-5; 9:30-32).

11:7-10. Paul then discussed what "a remnant chosen by grace" out of Israel meant for the people as a whole. The situation was ironic. The Jews zealously sought to be accepted by God on the basis of works and the righteousness of the Law (cf. 10:2-3). However, they were not accepted by God; only the elect were, because of God's sovereign choice by grace. The others were hardened (cf. 11:25). What it means to be hardened is seen from Paul's explanatory and supporting quotations. The first is taken from both Deuteronomy 29:3-4 and Isaiah 29:10, and indicates that hardening involves spiritual drowsiness (stupor is the rendering of katanyxeōs, "a numbness resulting from a sting"), blindness, and deafness (cf. Isa. 6:9-10). The second quotation (in Rom. 11:9-10) is of Psalm 69:22-23, which predicts that the very things which should have been the source of nourishment and blessing to Israel (table means their blessings from the hand of God, which should have led them to Christ; cf. Gal. 3:24) became the occasion for their rejection of God (a snare and a trap, a stumbling block; cf. Rom. 9:32-33) and God's judgment (retribution) on them. Because they refused to receive God's truth (cf. Isa. 6:9-10; John 5:40) their backs will be bent under the weight of guilt and punishment forever.

2. IN GENTILES (11:11-24)

11:11-12. Paul asked still another question he anticipated from his readers. Did they stumble (cf. 9:32) so as to fall beyond recovery? Literally, the Greek says simply, "Did they stumble so that they fell?" But the tense of the verb "fell" and its contrast with the verb translated "stumble" imply the idea of falling beyond recovery. Once again the question in Greek was worded to elicit a negative answer, and for the 10th and last time in Romans, Paul responded, Not at all! (mē genoito; cf. 3:4, 6, 31; 6:2, 15; 7:7, 13; 9:14; 11:1) "They" refers to "the others" (v. 7), the majority of the people of Israel, excluding the "remnant chosen by grace" (v. 5).

Israel experienced not a permanent fall, but a stumbling. It served at least two divine purposes: (a) to offer salvation . . . to the Gentiles, and (b) to make Israel envious (lit., "to the provoking of them to jealousy"; cf. Deut. 32:21). Twice already in his ministry Paul had turned away from unbelieving Jews to the Gentiles (Acts 13:46; 18:6), and he would do so at least once more in Rome (Acts 28:25-28). In so doing he was fulfilling these purposes of God. But Paul was convinced that Israel's transgression (paraptōma, "false step," which seems to fit with "stumble"; cf. paraptōma, trans. "trespass" in Rom. 5:17-18, 20) was temporary. So he looked beyond its immediate results (riches for the world and . . . riches for the Gentiles) to the possibility of its removal (how much greater riches will their fullness bring!). "World" here means mankind, not the physical world (cf. "world" in 11:15). Certainly the world has been enriched spiritually because of so many Gentiles coming to Christ (cf. comments on "reconciliation" in v. 15). But even greater riches will be enjoyed by Gentiles after the conversion of Israel at the Lord's return (cf. v. 26). Israel's "fullness" suggests a large-scale conversion (cf. "full number [lit., 'fullness'] of the Gentiles," v. 25).

11:13-15. Paul then singled out a part of the Christian community at Rome, saying, I am talking to you Gentiles. Though writing, Paul used terms referring to oral communication, a fact with implications for the inspiration of the Scriptures. Paul then affirmed his special position as the apostle to the Gentiles (cf. Acts 9:15; Gal. 1:16; 2:7-8; Eph. 3:8), and declared, I make much of (lit., "I glorify" or "I magnify") my ministry. Part of Paul's purpose for magnifying his service to the Gentiles was to provoke to jealousy his fellow Jews (Rom. 11:11), resulting in the salvation of some of them (cf. 9:1-4; 10:1). Any such Jews won to Christ would be part of the "remnant chosen by grace." Then Paul reminded his Gentiles readers that Israel's rejection meant the reconciliation of the world in the purpose of God. Because Israel rejected Christ, the gospel was taken to these Gentiles. In Scripture reconciliation is a work of God in the death of Christ which does not actually restore an individual to fellowship with God but provides the basis for him to be restored to fellowship (cf. 2 Cor. 5:18-20). This statement serves to explain the meaning of the phrases "riches for the world" and "riches for the Gentiles" in Romans 11:12. (When a person comes to Christ by faith God's work of reconciliation is appropriated to him and he then has fellowship with God and the spiritual enmity is removed.)

Because Paul was convinced that Israel's stumbling is temporary, he asked, What will their acceptance be but life from the dead? (lit., "out from dead ones") This question explains the clause, "How much greater riches will their fullness bring" (v. 12). Israel's "acceptance" of Christ is related to "the first resurrection" (Rev. 20:4-6), the resurrection of life (John 5:29, KJV). The first resurrection includes dead and living saints at the Rapture (1 Thes. 4:13-18), martyred Great Tribulation saints raised at Christ's return (Rev. 20:4, 5b), and believing Old Testament saints (Dan. 12:1-2). The second resurrection will include all the wicked dead to be judged at the great white throne judgment (Rev. 20:5a, 12-13). The teaching that there will be one general resurrection of all humanity at one time fails to take these distinctions into account.

11:16. Paul was convinced that Israel's stumbling is temporary rather than permanent and that the nation will be restored as God's people. With two illustrations Paul showed why he believed this. His first illustration was taken from God's instructions to Israel to take "a cake from the first of [their] ground meal and present it as an offering" (Num. 15:20) after they entered the land of Canaan and reaped their first wheat harvest. This offering was to be repeated each year at their harvests. The cake made from the first ground meal of the wheat harvest was sanctified or made holy by being offered to God. As Paul explained, If the part of the dough offered as firstfruits (lit., "If the firstfruits") is holy, then the whole batch is holy (lit., "the lump is also"). Paul's second illustration was that of a tree: If the root is holy, so are the branches.

In both illustrations the principle is the same: what is considered first contributes its character to what is related to it. With a tree, the root obviously comes first and contributes the nature of that type of tree to the branches that come later. With the cake presented to the Lord, the flour for the cake is taken from the ground meal, but that cake is formed and baked first and presented as a firstfruit. Since it is set apart to the Lord first, it sanctifies the whole harvest. The firstfruits and the root represent the patriarchs of Israel or Abraham personally, and the lump and the branches represent the people of Israel. As a result Israel is set apart (holy) to God, and her "stumbling" (rejection of Christ) must therefore be temporary.

11:17-21. In the apostolic generation God put aside as a whole the people of Israel, an action Paul described as one in which some of the branches have been broken off. The apostle then spoke directly to Gentile Christians: And you (sing.), though a wild olive shoot, have been grafted in among the others and now share in the nourishing sap from the olive root (lit., "have become a copartner of the root of the fatness of the olive"). To be so blessed by God and His grace, however, is no reason to boast, which Paul warned against. Since they were like "a wild olive shoot" grafted to a regular cultivated olive tree, they were indebted to Israel, not Israel to them. "Salvation is from the Jews" (John 4:22).

Normally a branch of a cultivated olive tree is grafted into a wild olive tree, the opposite of what Paul spoke of here. But he knew that grafting the wild into the cultivated was not the norm (though it was done), for later he said it was "contrary to nature" (Rom. 11:24).

To reinforce his warning Paul declared, You do not support the root, but the root supports you. The root of the tree is the source of life and nourishment to all the branches, and Abraham is "the father of all who believe" (4:11-12, 16-17). So Gentile believers are linked to Abraham; in one sense they owe their salvation to him, not vice versa.

The apostle anticipated the rebuttal a Gentile believer might make: Branches were broken off so that I could be grafted in. Though that was not the real reason the branches were broken off, Paul accepted the statement for the sake of argument. Then he pointed out that the real reason the branches were broken off was Israel's unbelief and that any Gentile as a grafted-in branch stands (cf. 5:2) by faith. Therefore Paul warned Gentile Christians individually again, Do not be arrogant (lit., "Do not think high" of yourself; cf. 12:16) but be afraid, have a proper fear of God.

Paul reminded them, For if God did not spare the natural branches, Israel, He will not spare you either. In Greek this is a first-class condition in which the conditional statement beginning with "if" is assumed to be true. As clearly stated in the previous verses, this speaks of Israel's "fall" (11:11), "loss" (v. 12), and "rejection" (v. 15), for "the branches have been broken off" (v. 17) "because of unbelief" (v. 20). This section (vv. 11-21) explains the righteousness of God's sovereign choice. If God is righteous in temporarily putting aside Israel as a whole for unbelief, He certainly could put aside the Gentiles for boasting and haughtiness.

11:22-24. In these verses Paul summarized his whole discussion of God's sovereign choice in temporarily putting Israel aside corporately and proclaiming righteousness by faith to all mankind. Consider (ide, "see, behold") therefore the kindness (chrēstotēta, "benevolence in action"; also used of God in 2:4; Eph. 2:7; Titus 3:4) and sternness of God. "Sternness" translates apotomian, used only here in the New Testament (cf. the adverb apotomōs in 2 Cor. 13:10 ["be harsh"] and Titus 1:13 ["sharply"]). God's sovereign choice involved severity toward the Jews who stumbled (fell; cf. Rom. 11:11) in unbelief and were hardened (v. 25), but that same decision displayed the goodness of God toward individual Gentiles. God's continuing His goodness to the Gentiles depends on their continuing in His kindness. If Gentiles do not continue in God's kindness, they also will be cut off. This does not suggest that a Christian can lose his salvation; it refers to Gentiles as a whole (suggested by the sing. you) turning from the gospel much as Israel as a nation had done.

Conversely for the people of Israel, if they do not persist (lit., "continue") in unbelief, they will be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again. At issue is not God's ability but God's decision. God sovereignly chose to put Israel aside corporately because of unbelief and to extend righteousness by faith to everyone. This demonstrates His decision to graft Gentiles into the spiritual stock of Abraham (cf. 4:12, 16-17; Gal. 3:14).

Obviously, therefore, if the unbelief which caused Israel's rejection by God is removed, God is able and will graft the people of Israel (the natural branches) back into the spiritual stock to which they belong (their own olive tree). After all, as Paul wrote earlier, "Everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved" (Rom. 10:13).

The "olive tree" is not the church; it is the spiritual stock of Abraham. Believing Gentiles are included in that sphere of blessing so that in the Church Age both Jews and Gentiles are in Christ's body (Eph. 2:11-22; 3:6). Yet someday Israel as a whole will turn to Christ (as Paul discussed in Rom. 11:25-27). This passage does not teach that the national promises to Israel have been abrogated and are now being fulfilled by the church. This idea, taught by amillenarians, is foreign to Paul's point, for he said Israel's fall is temporary. While believing Gentiles share in the blessings of the Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:3b) as Abraham's spiritual children (Gal. 3:8-9), they do not permanently replace Israel as the heirs of God's promises (Gen. 12:2-3; 15:18-21; 17:19-21; 22:15-18).

3. IN ISRAEL'S SALVATION (11:25-32)

11:25-27. Israel's corporate stumbling, which is temporary, not permanent, is called a mystery. In Scripture a mystery is not a truth difficult to understand, but a truth previously unrevealed (and therefore unknown) which is now revealed and publicly proclaimed (cf. Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:26; at Matt. 13:10-16, see the chart that lists NT mysteries). Paul wanted to make sure his Gentile readers knew about the mystery concerning Israel in God's sovereign choice. God's purpose was so that you may not be conceited (lit., "wise in yourselves"). God's sovereign plan to put Israel aside temporarily in order to show grace to Gentiles is no basis for conceit on the part of the Gentiles; it is designed to display further the glory of God.

God purposed that some from all nations should by faith receive the righteousness provided by grace. In order to achieve this goal Israel's relationship as God's Chosen People was rescinded for a time and Israel is now experiencing a hardening in part until the full number (plērōma, "fullness") of the Gentiles has come in. There is a fullness for Israel (Rom. 11:12) and a fullness for the Gentiles. God is now "taking from the Gentiles a people for Himself" (Acts 15:14).

In Romans 11:25 are two specific facts about Israel's hardening (cf. vv. 7-8): (a) it is partial, "in part" (because throughout this time "there is a remnant chosen by grace," v. 5), and (b) it is temporary (because it will end when God's sovereignly chosen number of Gentiles has been saved).

"Hardening" is pōrōsis ("hardening, dulling"); it differs from the verb sklērynei ("hardens") used of Pharaoh (9:18) and the noun sklērotēta ("stubbornness," lit., "hardening," 2:5). The first noun (pōrōsis) refers to dullness, the second suggests stubbornness.

After "the fullness of the Gentiles" (11:25, KJV) the partial hardening of Israel will be removed and all Israel will be saved, that is, "delivered" (in the OT "saved" often means "delivered") from the terrible Tribulation by the Messiah, the Deliverer. To confirm this, Paul quoted from Isaiah 59:20-21 and 27:9. The statement, "All Israel will be saved" does not mean that every Jew living at Christ's return will be regenerated. Many of them will not be saved, as seen by the fact that the judgment of Israel, to follow soon after the Lord's return, will include the removal of Jewish rebels (Ezek. 20:34-38). Following this judgment God will then remove godlessness and sins from the nation as He establishes His New Covenant with regenerate Israel (cf. Jer. 31:33-34).

11:28-29. Here Paul summarized God's dealings with Israel and with the Gentiles. In order for God to bring the gospel to Gentiles He had to deal with Israel corporately as enemies. But in relation to God's choice (election) of Abraham and His covenant with him and the patriarchs, Israel is beloved. Because God chose Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (cf. 9:6-13), He loves the nation and will carry through on His promises. This is another reason Israel's hardening must be temporary (cf. 11:15, 22-25) and she must finally be saved corporately: God chose her. And God's gifts and His call are irrevocable (lit., "for not repented of are the grace-gifts and the calling of God"). He does not revoke what He has given or whom He has chosen ("call" means election and salvation; cf. 1:6; 8:30).

11:30-32. The Gentiles to whom Paul wrote were at one time disobedient to God, but in this Age of Grace Gentiles (you) have now received mercy. When Adam disobeyed (5:19) all were constituted sinners because all humanity sinned in Adam (5:12). (Cf. "disobedient" in Eph. 2:2; 5:6; and "disobedience" in Heb. 4:6, 11.) Israel (they) is now corporately disobedient to God so that when God's mercy to the Gentiles (you) reaches its full number (Rom. 11:25), Israel will again receive mercy (cf. vv. 26-27). God's ultimate purpose is to have mercy on . . . all. To do so justly God has bound (synekleisen, "enclosed, shut in on all sides") all men over to disobedience. "All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (3:23). "Jews and Gentiles alike are all under sin" (3:9), so that "there is no difference" (3:22). When the Gentiles rejected God and disobeyed Him (1:17-21), God chose Abraham and his descendants as His special people. Now the disobedience of the Jews enables God to show mercy to the Gentiles. Then, when that purpose is achieved, He will again show mercy to Israel corporately.

4. TO GOD'S GLORY AND PRAISE (11:33-36)

11:33-36. As Paul ended his discussion on the revelation of God's righteousness in His sovereign choice, he burst forth in a doxology of praise to God. He exclaimed, Oh, the depth of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge of God! The plan of God for the salvation of all people demonstrates God's infinite knowledge and His ability to use it wisely. God has revealed some of His judgments and His paths ("ways") so that people may know them, but it is humanly impossible to exhaust them. Beyond tracing out translates the one word anexichniastoi, which means "incapable of being traced by footprints." In Ephesians 3:8, its only other use in the New Testament, it is rendered "unsearchable" and refers to the riches of Christ.
