PSALM 32

David shows the happiness of a pardoned sinner, 1, 2; and that penitent confessions alone can relieve the misery of the guilty conscience and make way for comfort, 3-7. He instructs and warns sinners to repent and believers to rejoice in God, 8-11.

PSALM 34

David praises God and exhorts others from his own experience to bless and trust in God, 1-10. He teaches the fear of God and contrasts the privileges of the righteous with the miseries of the wicked, 11-22.

(Title.) A.M. 2942. B.C. 1062. Abimelech. or, Achish. Achish, king of Gath, is probably here called Abimelech because that was a common name of the Philistine kings (see the parallel texts). This is the second of the alphabetical psalms (the first being Ps 25), each verse beginning consecutively with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet. The verse, however, which begins with wav, and which should come in between the fifth and sixth, is totally wanting; but as the 22nd, which now begins with pay, podeh, "redeemeth," is entirely out of the series, it is not improbable that it was originally written oophodeh, "and redeemeth," and occupied that situation, in which connection it reads admirably. PSALM 37

The psalmist persuades to patience and confidence in God and cautions against envy, anger, and discontent, 1-8; the different estate of the righteous and wicked in all their dealings; exhortations to faith, hope, patience, and obedience; and promises to believers under the trials of this evil world, 9-40.

(Title.) This is the third alphabetical psalm. It seems to have been intended as an instructive and consoling ode for the captives in Babylon, who might feel themselves severely tempted when they saw those idolaters in prosperity and themselves in adversity.

William Wilson defines this word (S#6960h) "to hope strongly, to trust, implying firmness and constancy of mind, to hope for, to wait for, to expect anything; to hope that a thing will be effected, and to wait steadily and patiently till it is effected" (Old Testament Word Studies, p. 470). PSALM 38

The psalmist deprecates the wrath of God and describes the sufferings to which his sins had exposed him, 1-10. He complains that his friends deserted him while he was persecuted by his foes, 11, 12. He resigns himself to God and hopes in him while he confesses his sins, shows the character of his enemies, and pleads for deliverance, 13-22.

(Title). This deeply penitential psalm is supposed to have been composed by David under some grievous affliction, either bodily or mental, or both, after his illicit intercourse with Bath-sheba. to bring. Ps 70, title.

David purposes not to offend with his tongue and describes his inward commotion, 1-3. His prayers and meditations on the shortness of life and the vanity of human pursuits, 4-6. His hope in God, with prayer for pardon and comfort before his death, 7-13.

(Title.) A.M. 2970. B.C. 1034. Jeduthun. Jeduthun, probably the same as Ethan, 1 Ch 6:44, was one of the sons of Merari, and is supposed to have been one of the four masters of music, or leaders of bands, belonging to the temple service. It is therefore probable that David, having composed this psalm, gave it to Jeduthun and his company to sing; and it is very likely that it was written on the same occasion as the preceding. PSALM 40

David praises God for deliverance out of deep distress and shows the benefit which would thence be derived to numbers, and the happiness of those who trust in God, 1-5. As a type of Christ (or, Christ speaking by him), he states the inefficacy of legal sacrifices and the efficacy of the Redeemer's obedience, 6-8. He declares that he had published God's righteousness and salvation and pleads for deliverance from urgent troubles and for the confusion of his enemies, with the triumphing of the righteous, 9-17.

(Title.) A.M. 2970. B.C. 1034. This psalm is supposed to have been composed by David about the same time and on the same occasion as the two preceding; with this difference, that here he magnifies God for having obtained the mercy which he sought there. It also contains a remarkable prophecy of the incarnation and sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

David shows the blessedness of those who consider the poor, 1-3. He prays for mercy and complains of the treachery and malice of his enemies and the ingratitude of one who had been his friend, 4-10. He expresses confidence in God and praises him, 11-13.

(Title.) This psalm is supposed to have been written on the same occasion as the three former; to relate to David's affliction and the evil treatment he received from his enemies during its continuance.

PSALM 42

The psalmist thirsts after God, mourns his absence from the sanctuary while amid insulting foes, and recollects with regret former seasons of comfort, 1-4. He struggles against unbelief and despondency, complains unto God, and stays his dejected soul on him, 5-11.

PSALM 43

The psalmist prays that God would judge his cause and restore him to his sanctuary, 1-3. He anticipates his joy and praise which should then take place and encourages himself to hope in God, 4, 5.

(Title.) A.M. 2983. B.C. 1021. This psalm is evidently a continuation of the preceding with the same author; they are written as one in forty-six MSS. The sameness of subject, similarity of composition, and return of the same burden in both are sufficient evidence of this opinion.

PSALM 45

The excellency, dignity, and deity of the Messiah, with his victories and dominion, 1-8. The bride is invited to forsake her father's house, that Christ might delight in her, 10-12. Her glory and excellency by his graces, which shall be remembered and praised forever, 13-17.

(Title.) To the chief. Or, rather, "To the chief musician upon the hexachords, a didactic ode for the sons of Korah, and a song of loves." Shoshannim most probably denotes hexachords, or six-stringed instruments, from shesh, "six;" hence the Persian shashta, a six-stringed lute. This Psalm is supposed by some to be an epithalamium, or nuptial song, on the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter; but with what propriety could Solomon be described as "fairer than the children of men, a mighty warrior, a victorious conqueror," and a prince whose "throne is for ever and ever"? One greater than Solomon is here; and the person described is none other than the Messiah, as is acknowledged by many Jewish writers. The Targum on ver. 3 says, "Thy beauty, malka mesheecha, O King Messiah, is greater than the children of men;" and the apostle expressly quotes it as such, He 1:8, 9. It was probably written by David after Nathan's prophetic address, 1 Ch 17:27. Shoshanim. Ps 69, 80, titles. Maschil. or, of instruction. A Song. SS 1:1, 2, etc. Is 5:1. Ep 5:32.

The psalmist exults in the assurance of protection and consolation from God, 1-5; recounts his wondrous works in Israel's behalf, 6-9; and while God demands submission from all the earth, Israel declares her confidence in him, 10, 11.

(Title.) A.M. 3108. B.C. 896. for. or, of. the sons. Ps 84, 85, 87, titles. Alamoth. or, virgins. 1 Ch 15:20. It has been argued ably and shown conclusively that the psalm titles are generally misplaced: this title should be a subscription for the preceding Psalm 45, as the reference to "virgins" would indicate, such being in harmony with the theme of the preceding psalm. In the two independent psalms found in Scripture, Is 38:9-20, and Hab ch. 3, the pattern (1) superscription, or title proper; (2) the body of the psalm itself; (3) the subscription is clearly displayed. The phrase "To the chief musician" is the subscription of the preceding psalm, not the first line of a psalm. These matters were first discovered by Dr. James W. Thirtle and set forth in his The Titles of the Psalms.

The psalmist calls on all mankind to attend to his instructions, 1-4. He shows that the righteous have no cause to fear in evil times, 5. He exposes the vanity of trusting in riches, 6-13. He contrasts the condition of the prosperous ungodly man with that of the believer, especially in respect of death and the resurrection, 14-20.

PSALM 50

The mighty God comes in awful majesty from Zion, to judge his people in the sight of the assembled world, 1-4. He commands that the saints be gathered to him and declares that the heavens shall declare his righteousness, 5, 6. He delights not in legal sacrifices but in spiritual worship, 7-15. Hypocrites are rebuked and silenced, 16-21. The ungodly are solemnly warned, and salvation is promised to the upright, 22, 23.

PSALM 51

David earnestly prays for mercy, humbly confesses his sins, and laments his original depravity, 1-6. He prays for forgiveness, sanctification, and renewed comfort, that he may glorify God and promote the conversion of sinners, 7-15. He shows that God delights more in a contrite heart than in legal sacrifices, 16, 17. He prays for the prosperity of Zion, 18, 19.

PSALM 63

David earnestly thirsts for God and longs to behold his glory at the sanctuary, 1, 2. Regarding the love of God more than life, he determines to rejoice in praising him, 3-5. By meditation and prayer, he rises to full assurance of protection, success, and exulting joy in God; and predicts the ruin of his enemies, 6-11.

PSALM 68

David prays for, or predicts, the confusion and destruction of the wicked and the joy of the righteous, 1-3. He praises the mercy and majesty of God, especially as shown in bringing Israel out of Egypt into Canaan, 4-14. Under the type of the ark of God taking possession of Zion and the prosperity of Israel, he predicts the ascension of Christ, the rapid success of the gospel, and the punishment of obstinate opposers, 15-31. He exhorts all nations to praise the God of Israel, 32-35.

(Title.) A.M. 2962. B.C. 1042. This magnificent, truly sublime ode is supposed, with much probability, to have been composed by David and sung at the removal of the ark from Kirjath-jearim. 2 S 6:12.

David, as a type of Christ, mingles doleful complaints with fervent prayers for himself and for his people, 1-21. He, as the type of the Redeemer, consigns his enemies to destruction, 22-29. He engages to praise and bless God, calls on the whole creation to join him, and predicts the enlargement and prosperity of Zion, 30-36.

(Title.) Shoshannim. Ps 45, 60, 80, titles. A Psalm. It is uncertain when this psalm was composed; though it is probable that it was written by David during the rebellion of Absalom. It is an exceedingly fine composition; it evidently refers to the advent, passion, and resurrection of our Lord, to the vocation of the Gentiles, and the reprobation of the Jews: see the Marginal References.

PSALM 71

The psalmist professes his trust in God and prays for help to the end and for the confusion of his enemies, 1-13. He resolves to confide in God and praise him, 14-16. He renews his petitions, that he may not be cast off in the decline of life, but may be enabled to transmit to posterity his views of the power and grace of God, 17, 18. He exults in the prospect of complete deliverance, joy, and triumph, 19-24.

PSALM 72

David prays for Solomon and for the Messiah under the type of Solomon; and predicts the peace, righteousness, honor, extent, and duration of his kingdom, as typifying that of the Messiah, 1-17. He ardently blesses God on these accounts and prays that the earth may be filled with his glory, 18-20.

(Title.) A.M. 2989. B.C. 1015. A Psalm. This psalm seems to have been composed by David in his last days, when he had set his beloved son on the throne. "Then," says Calmet, "transported with joy and gratitude, he addressed this psalm to God, in which he prays Him to pour out His blessings on the young king, and upon the people. He then, wrapped up in a divine enthusiasm, ascends to a higher subject; and sings the glory of the Messiah, and the magnificence of his reign." for. or, of. Ps 127, title.

The psalmist, assured that God is good to his people, shows that his faith had almost failed, on seeing the prosperity of the wicked, 1-14. He states how he overcame the temptation in the sanctuary by learning their dreadful end, 15-20. With deep humility he avows his unreserved dependence on God and determines to cleave to him, expecting present support and future glory, 21-28.

PSALM 74

Heavy complaints to God, that in anger he had left his congregation without any encouraging token, while insulting conquerors desolated the sanctuary, 1-9. Earnest pleas, that he would help his people, according to his former powerful works for Israel and in remembrance of his covenant; and thus silence the blasphemies and reproaches of his enemies, 10-23.

PSALM 78

An exhortation to Israel to consider the works and word of God; that what they had learned from their fathers, they might teach their children for the benefit of even their remote posterity, 1-8. A rehearsal of God's love and longsuffering to the unbelieving and obstinate Israelites, 9-11. An abstract of Israel's deliverance from Egypt, passage through the wilderness, settlement in Canaan, and the subsequent events; in which the mercies of God to them are contrasted with an account of their unbelief, apostasies, and idolatries, 12-66. God at length chooses Judah, Zion, and David, 67-72.

(Title.) A.M. 3074. B.C. 930. Maschil. or, A Psalm for Asaph, to give instruction. Ps 74, title. This psalm was probably written, as Calmet and others suppose, by Asaph in the days of Asa, who had gained, by the aid of the Syrians, a great victory over the Israelites, and brought back to the pure worship of God many out of the tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Simeon, 2 Ch ch. 15, 16. It is a poetical abstract or chronological poem of the ancient history of the Hebrews and must have greatly assisted the people in becoming better acquainted with the wonderful deeds of Jehovah in their behalf.

The psalmist complains to God of the desolations of Jerusalem and the cruel insults of the heathen, 1-5. He prays for deliverance and forgiveness; and that the Lord would glorify himself by avenging his people on their oppressors, 6-13.

PSALM 80

The psalmist prays for the tokens of God's special presence with his people and deprecates his displeasure, 1-7. The former and present state of Israel is represented by a vine, planted and flourishing heretofore, but now wasted and trodden down, 8-13. A prayer that the Lord would cause this vine again to prosper, 14-19.

PSALM 81

An exhortation to praise God with psalms and musical instruments, especially on the solemn feasts, 1-3. God ordained this when he delivered Israel from the Egyptians, 4-7. He commands the people to renounce idolatry and trust in him alone, and complains of their disobedience, which had turned to their own loss, 8-16.

PSALM 82

The psalmist reminds magistrates of God's authority over them, reproves their injustice, and urges them to do their duty, 1-4. He exposes their ignorance and wickedness and warns them of their approaching doom, 5-7. He prays for the establishment of God's kingdom, 8.

(Title.) A.M. 3108. B.C. 896. A Psalm. Some refer this psalm to the time of David and others to that of Hezekiah, but it is more probable that it was composed when Jehoshaphat reformed the courts throughout his kingdom, 2 Ch 19:6, 7. of Asaph. or, for Asaph.

Here there is a special use of elohim (just as at Ps 8:5 there is another and different special use of elohim), where elohim refers to divinely appointed magistrates, kings, or judges, as "gods." These officials were not considered deity, for it is explicitly stated (ver. 7) that they shall die like men and are rulers of the people, Ex 22:28. As rulers in Israel only, not the nations, they were "the Lord's anointed" and were thus types of Christ, the great anointed one. If Christ were not truly God, they could not in type have been called gods. In contrast, when Christ is called God, it is in reference to his true deity, in combination with an attribute or action belonging only to the supreme God. William Kay notes that they are called "gods" because God's word came to them (Jn 10:35), "investing them with his prerogative of judgment." Ps 82:1. 86:8. +*138:1. Ex +12:12. 22:8. PSALM 86

David pleads his indigence and the fervor of his devotion in imploring help from the God of grace and mercy, 1-7. He praises God as alone worthy of universal adoration and prophesies that all nations shall thus adore him, 8-10. He prays for teaching and grace, renders thanks for former mercies, complains of his haughty foes, and craves some special token of divine favor, 11-17.

PSALM 89

The psalmist praises God for his covenanted mercies to David, celebrating his greatness, excellency, and wonderful works and showing the felicity of his people, 1-18. He enlarges on the promises of the covenant made with David and his seed, 19-37. He complains of the afflicted state of David's kingdom with earnest prayers and expostulations, 38-51. He concludes with blessing the Lord, 52.

PSALM 90

The psalmist comforts himself by considering the favor of the eternal God to his people, 1, 2. He laments the frailty, sufferings, and shortness of human life as the effects of the wrath of God against the sins of men, 3-11. He prays that these considerations may be wisely improved by him and his people, and entreats God for the comforts of his mercy and for a sensible experience of his power, glory, and favor, with them and their children, 12-17.

PSALM 92

The psalmist shows that it is good to be thankful, to praise God, and to celebrate his perfection and works, 1-5. He contrasts the judgments of God on the wicked with the abiding felicity of the righteous, 6-15.

PSALM 94

The psalmist calls on God to take vengeance on the persecutors of his people, 1-4. He complains of their cruelty and impiety and sharply reproves their atheistical folly, 5-11. He shows the benefits of affliction, attended by divine teaching, and the security of God's people, 12-15. He calls for helpers against evil doers, declares his experience of God's goodness, and foretells the destruction of persecutors, 16-23.

(Title.) A.M. 3416. B.C. 588. Dr. Delaney supposes that this psalm was written by David on occasion of his war with the Ammonites, in consequence of the indignities shown to his messengers; but it is more probable that it was written to bewail the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple.

PSALM 102

The psalmist pours out doleful complaints before the Lord, 1-11. He takes comfort from the eternity of God, 12. He predicts the triumph of Zion, though then desolated, according to the promises of God, at the appointed time and in answer to the prayers of his people, 13-17. He records the mercies of the Lord for the benefit of posterity, 18-22. Conscious of his own weakness, he rests his hope on the unchangeableness of God our Savior, 23-28.

PSALM 103

David earnestly praises God for his plenteous mercy and goodness to him and to Israel, 1-10; for his fatherly compassion to the frailty of those who fear and obey him; and for his constant regard to their posterity, 11-18. He calls on men, angels, and all creatures, to join him in blessing the Lord, the universal sovereign, 19-22.

PSALM 104

The psalmist celebrates the glory of the divine perfections as displayed in creation and providence, 1-32. He determines to meditate perpetually with delight on God and his works and predicts the destruction of the wicked, 33-35.

1. Bless. This sublime poem on the works of God in creation and providence is ascribed to David in the LXX., Vulgate, Ethiopic, Syriac, and Arabic; and as it opens and closes with the same words as the preceding psalm, it is probable that it was composed on the same occasion; it is written as part of it in nine MSS. PSALM 105

An exhortation to praise God, to make known his works, to glory in him, and to seek his favor, 1-7. The story of God's providence over Abraham, 8-15; over Joseph, 16-22; over Jacob in Egypt, 23-25; over Moses delivering the Israelites, 26-36; over the Israelites brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan, 37-45.

(Title.) A.M. 2962. B.C. 1042. It appears from 1 Ch 16, where the former part of this psalm as far as the 16th verse, is found with little variation, that David composed it at the removal of the ark to Mount Zion, and he himself probably enlarged it afterwards with the glorious detail of God's merciful dealings with Abraham and his posterity till their settlement in the land of promise. The Hallelujah which terminates the preceding psalm, is made the title of this by the Septuagint, Vulgate, Arabic, and Ethiopic; and the Syriac considers it a paraphrase on the words, "Fear not, Jacob, to go down into Egypt;" "and teaches us spiritually not to fear when we are obliged to contend with devils; for God is our shield, and will fight for us."

The psalmist praises God, admires the happiness of his people, and prays to partake of it, 1-5. He recapitulates Israel's provocations, from their bondage in Egypt to the time when they were settled in Canaan and imitated the idolatries of the Canaanites, 6-46. He concludes with prayer and praise, 47, 48.

(Title.) As part of the preceding psalm is found in 1 Ch 16, so the first and two last verses of this are found in the same place; and it is highly probable that they were composed upon the same occasion as the former, to which it seems to be a continuation; for as that celebrates the mercies of God to Israel, so this confesses and deplores the rebellions of Israel against Jehovah.

As Matthew Poole notes, the psalmist here does not mention what Moses spake because that was fully known from the history, and because he would throw a veil over Moses's infirmity, imply rather than express his fault. Similar reticence is observed in Chronicles, where David's sin regarding Bathsheba is omitted from the account. This should inform us as to the need for extreme caution in any application we might make of such a passage as Ja 5:16, "confess your faults one to another," particularly since the Apostle Paul expressly forbids discussion of what has been done in darkness (Ep 5:11, 12).

Exhortations to praise God for redemption from captivity and guidance in perilous journeys to a safe habitation, 1-9; for deliverance from prison, 10-16; for recovery from sickness, 17-22; for preservation when in imminent danger of shipwreck, 23-32; and for the care of his providence over the affairs of men, 33-43.

(Title.) A.M. 3468. B.C. 536. The author of this psalm is unknown, but it was evidently written to commemorate the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity. It may easily be perceived that it must have been sung in alternate parts, having a double burden or two intercalary verses often recurring. Bp. Lowth considers it as written "after the method of the ancient pastorals, where, be the subject of their verse what it will, each swain endeavors to excel the other; and one may perceive their thoughts and expressions gradually to rise upon each other." "No doubt," he adds, "the composition of this psalm is admirable throughout, and the descriptive part of it adds at least its share of beauty to the whole: but what is most to be admired is its conciseness, and withal the expressiveness of the diction, which strikes the imagination with inimitable elegance. The weary and bewildered traveller—the miserable captive in the dungeon—the sick and dying man—the seaman foundering in a storm—are described in so affecting a manner, that they far exceed any thing of the kind, though never so much labored."

David, as the type of Christ, complains of the slanders, deceit, and malice of his enemies, 1-5. He predicts the doom of Judas by devoting one person in particular to destruction, 6-20. He complains of his sufferings, prays for relief, and determines to praise the Lord, 21-31.

(Title.) A.M. 2942. B.C. 1062. It is generally supposed that this psalm was composed by David while persecuted by Saul, who was rendered more implacable by the base and malicious calumnies of Doeg and others; though some are of opinion that it was written when David fled from Absalom, and that Ahithophel, rather than Doeg, is the typical person against whom it is principally directed.

La 2:15.

6. Set thou. Dr. Sykes, Michaelis, and others contend that these imprecations are those of David's enemies against himself, and they would render, "Set, say they, a wicked," etc.: but this is rendered highly improbable by the eighth verse being applied by Peter to the traitor Judas, of whom David was certainly not a type (see ver. 20). Bp. Horsley and others, however, render the verbs in the future tense, the first verb alone being in the imperative, justly considering the psalmist as merely uttering prophetic denunciations of God's displeasure against sinners (see also Ps 35:8n. 40:14n. 71:13n). PSALM 110

A prophecy of the Messiah's kingdom, subjects, priesthood, triumphs, and sufferings as introducing them, 1-7.

(Title.) A.M. 2962. B.C. 1042. This psalm was probably composed by David after Nathan's prophetic address, and from the grandeur of the subject and the sublimity of the expressions, it is evident that it can only refer, as the ancient Jews fully acknowledged, to the royal dignity, priesthood, victories, and triumphs of the Messiah.

PSALM 113

The servants of Jehovah are exhorted to praise his glorious majesty, his condescension, and kindness in his kingdom of providence and grace, 1-9.

(Title.) This and the following five psalms form what is called by the Hebrews the great Hallel, or praise, which was sung on their most solemn festivals, particularly after the celebration of the Passover (see Mt 26:30. Mk 14:26). This and the following were probably composed after the return from the captivity.

1. Praise ye the Lord. Heb. Hallelujah. Ps 112:1. Praise, O. Ps 33:1, 2. 103:20, 21. 134:1. 135:1-3, 20. 145:10. Ep 5:19, 20. Re 19:5. the name. ƒ144A4A, Is +30:27. i.e. praise Jehovah himself.

2. Blessed. Ps 41:13. *72:17-19. 106:48. 1 Ch 16:36. 29:10-13. Da 2:20. Ep 3:21. Re 5:13. for evermore. Heb. olam, Ps +18:50.

PSALM 114

The powerful presence of God with Israel when he brought them out of Egypt and led them through the wilderness into Canaan, admired and adored in exalted strains, 1-8.

(Title.) This short, only apparently imperfect psalm, for elegance and sublimity yields to few in the whole book. The composition of it is inexpressibly beautiful, in the highest style of poetry.

PSALM 115

The psalmist calls on God to vindicate his own honor against the reproaches of idolaters, 1-3. He exposes the vanity of idols and the folly of idolaters, 4-8. He exhorts Israel to trust in the Lord, who will not fail to bless his people, 9-18.

(Title.) A.M. 3108. B.C. 896. This seems to be an epinikion, or triumphal song, in which the victory is wholly ascribed to Jehovah; to none can it be referred with more propriety than to that of Jehoshaphat over the confederated forces of his enemies, 2 Ch 20.

The psalmist avows his gratitude to God, who had answered his prayers and brought him out of deep distress, and resolves to worship and serve him all his days, 1-9. He records his temptation to unbelief and his victory over it, 10, 11. He determines to perform his vows and render thanks to God in the most public manner at the sanctuary, 12-19.

PSALM 118

The psalmist exhorts all orders of men in Israel to praise God, 1-4. He shows by his own experience how good it is to trust in the Lord, 5-18. In blessing him for deliverance and advancement, and calling on the people to join in his triumphant praises, he predicts the coming and the kingdom of the Messiah, 19-29.

(Title.) A.M. 2962. B.C. 1042. This psalm was probably composed by David after Nathan's prophetic address and sung by alternate choirs at some public festival. It largely partakes of David's spirit and everywhere shows the hand of a master: the style is grand and sublime, the subject is noble and majestic.

Where the positive is used with the comparative particle ee (in Greek), than, it implies that though there may be in one sense a comparison, yet in another and true sense, there is really no comparison at all. The use of the positive declares that the one case is so, rather than the other, which is not so. For other instances of this figure see Mt 12:7. 18:8. Mk 3:4. Lk 18:14. PSALM 119

This psalm contains a miscellaneous collection of wise maxims, pious ejaculations, holy purposes, gracious experiences, etc. which cannot with ease and simplicity be arranged under any particular heads. There frequently is little connection between one sentence and another, and the whole being, as Mr. Henry remarks, "rather a chest of gold rings, than a chain of gold links." The whole psalm is a majestic hymn to the written word of God, expressing David's love for it and a prayer for grace to carry himself according to it, with an account of God's law, institutions, commandments, testimonies, precepts, word, promises, ways, judgments, name, righteousness, and truth.

(Title.) A.M. 3560. B.C. 444. This psalm, probably composed by Ezra (though many, including Matthew Poole, think it was composed by David), is another of the alphabetical psalms: it consists of twenty-two parts, answering to the number of the Hebrew letters; every part being divided into eight verses, and each verse beginning with that letter which forms the title of the part; that is, the first part of eight verses, with aleph, the second with beth, etc. It is an elegant, important, and useful composition; the chief subjects of which are the excellence of God's laws, and the happiness of those who observe them.

As the bottles in the East were made of skin, it is evident that one of these hung up in the smoke must soon be parched, shrivelled up, lose all its strength, and become unsightly and useless. Thus the psalmist appeared to himself to have become useless and despicable through the exhausted state of his body and mind and by long bodily afflictions and mental distress. Ps 22:15. *102:3, 4. The animals attempt to walk over them, the surface breaks, they fall in, and are taken alive. Thus the psalmist's enemies employed craft as well as power in order to effect his ruin. ver. 78. PSALM 126

The joyful surprise of the Jews when delivered from captivity, 1-3. A prayer for a more complete deliverance, with assurances of a happy event to all the sorrows of God's people, 4-6.

(Title.) A Song of degrees. This psalm evidently appears to have been composed in consequence of the proclamation of Cyrus in favor of the Jews, giving them leave to return to their own land and rebuild their city and temple. Ps 120-125, titles.

David professes humility and resignation and exhorts Israel to hope in God, 1-3.

(Title.) A Song of degrees. Ps 122, 124, 133, titles. Some think that this psalm was composed by David when accused by Saul and his courtiers that he affected the crown, though others refer it to the time of the captivity and consider it a fair account of the manner in which the captives behaved themselves.

PSALM 132

The psalmist pleads David's pious care about a stated residence for the ark and entreats the Lord to take possession of the temple and to bless his priests and people, 1-10. He shows the promises of God to David and to his family, 11-18.

(Title.) A.M. 2962. B.C. 1042. A Song of degrees. Ps 120-131, titles. Some attribute this psalm to Solomon; others refer it to the building of the second temple, but it seems most probable that it was sung at the solemn induction of the ark into the tabernacle of Mount Zion, expressing the holy joy and triumph of that event.

Exhortations to praise God for his goodness, his special kindness to Israel, his power shown in the works of creation and providence, and his judgments on the enemies of his people, 1-14. The vanity of idols and the folly of idolaters exposed, 15-18. All orders of men in Israel are called on to praise the Lord, 19-21.

(Title.) A.M. 3000. B.C. 1004. Bp. Patrick supposes this to be the morning hymn which the precentor called upon the Levites to sing at the opening of the gates of the temple, as the foregoing was sung at the shutting in the evening; but it is more probable that it was composed by Solomon, to be sung at the dedication of the temple.

Exhortations to praise the Lord for his everlasting mercy; for all the blessings of creation, providence, and redemption; and for his glory displayed in them, 1-9; for delivering the Israelites out of Egypt, and bringing them into the Promised Land, 10-26.

(Title.) This psalm is little else than a repetition of the preceding, with the addition of the burden, "for his mercy endureth for ever," at the end of each verse; it was doubtless composed on the same occasion. It seems evidently to have been a responsive song; the first part of the verse being probably sung by the Levites and the burden by the people.

5. To him. The contrivance of the celestial bodies, in their specific gravities, relations, connections, influences on each other, revolutions and in the wonderful adaptation of the atmosphere for the purposes of refracting the light, forming rain, dew, snow, are exhibited the most astonishing displays of the divine wisdom. 9. The moon and stars. The sun is the monarch of day, the state of light; the moon of the night, the state of darkness. The rays of the sun falling on the atmosphere are refracted and diffused over the whole of the hemisphere of the earth immediately under his orb; while those rays of that vast luminary which, because of the earth's smallness in comparison of the sun, are diffused on all sides beyond the earth, falling on the opaque disc of the moon, are reflected back on the lower hemisphere, or the part of the earth opposite the sun. But the reflected light being 50,000 times less in intensity than that of the sun, there is a sufficient distinction between day and night, though each is ruled and determined by one of these two great lights. Ps 8:3. 89:36, 37. Jb 31:26.

David praises the mercy and truth of God, who has answered his prayers, 1-3. He prophesies that all kings shall praise God and rejoice in his ways, 4, 5. He shows the Lord's dealings with the humble and with the proud and professes full confidence in him, 6-8.

(Title.) A.M. 3485. B.C. 519. A Psalm of David. Five MSS. omit ledawid; and the LXX. and Arabic prefix also the names of Haggai and Zechariah; it is probable that it was composed to be sung at the dedication of the second temple.

David contemplates with adoring surprise the omniscience and omnipresence of God, 1-12. He praises him as his all-wise and bountiful Creator and for his numberless mercies, 13-18. He avows his abhorrence of the wicked, prays to be searched, proved, and directed in the right way, 19-24.

(Title.) A.M. 2956. B.C. 1048. A Psalm. This psalm is supposed to have been composed by David when made king of Israel, though some think it was written by him when accused of traitorous designs against Saul. It is a most sublime ode on the wisdom, knowledge, presence, and justice of God: the sentiments are grand, the style highly elevated, and the images various, beautiful, and impressive.

Scripture teaches both the immanence of God (He is everywhere present at the same time) and the transcendence of God (He is separate from the universe, not a part of it, but entirely above it, so that there is an immeasurable, if not infinite, gulf between him in all his perfections and creation); thus to suppose man can become "God" or is "God" is, from a biblical standpoint, absurd (see Ps 8:5n). That men are called "god" or "gods" in Scripture does not suggest man can become or is divine or deity; rather, the Hebrew word "elohim" has multiple meanings and is sometimes used of false gods and idols (2 Ch 35:22n), of divinely appointed (though very mortal, Ps 82:7) judges and magistrates (Ps +82:6n), and is used of angels (Ps +8:5n).

It comes from the sun to the earth, a distance of 95,513,794 miles, in 8 minutes and nearly 12 seconds! Yet, could I even fly upon the wings or rays of the morning light, which diffuses itself with such velocity over the globe from east to west, instead of being beyond thy reach, or by this sudden transition be able to escape thy notice, thy arm could still at pleasure prevent or arrest my progress, and I should still be encircled with the immensity of thy essence. PSALM 143

David earnestly deprecates the severity of God's judgment, 1, 2; complains of his enemies and distresses, 3, 4; and encourages his faith by meditating on the works of God, 5, 6. He fervently prays for comfort, guidance, quickening, and deliverance, 7-11; and foretells the destruction of his enemies, 12.

(Title.) A Psalm. The LXX., Vulgate, Ethiopic, and Arabic state that this psalm was composed by David on the rebellion of his son Absalom. There are several passages in it which agree remarkably well with that period: for then he had most reason to fear lest God should deal with him according to his sins; which he deprecates with such a deep sense of his unworthiness, that it has hence been numbered among the penitential psalms, of which it is the last. In it he prays to God for pardon, ver. 1; acknowledges the impossibility of being saved but by grace, ver. 2; deplores the lamentable effects of sin, ver. 3, 4; comforts himself with a retrospect of God's mercies of old, ver. 5; and prays, in a variety of expressions, for the remission of sin, sanctification, and redemption, ver. 6-12.

David praises God for his goodness to him and his condescension to the human race, 1-4. He prays for the powerful interposition of Jehovah to deliver him from his enemies, 5-8. He promises to praise God, 9, 10. He renews his prayers for personal and public prosperity and shows the happiness of those "whose God is the LORD*," 11-15.*

18. But. This comparison is extremely beautiful, and the sense highly instructive. As the light first tints the east and increases till the sun has attained its meridian splendor, so is the course of a good man: his knowledge, purity, and holiness gradually increase, and the light of his pious example shines more and more, till he is exalted in the heavens to shine as a sun in the full blaze of endless felicity. But the path of the wicked, though they may amuse themselves with many glittering meteors, is thick, gloomy darkness, a compound of ignorance, error, sin, and misery, until at length it terminates, perhaps unexpectedly to themselves, in "the blackness of darkness for ever" (Ju *13). the path. ver. 11. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of the Jehovah's Witnesses declares itself to be God's only true church or organization. It ventures to claim to itself the position of His faithful and wise servant (Mt +√24:45. Lk +*12:42), the sole and exclusive authorized dispenser of divine truth or authoritative Bible interpretation. Just how God got along for 1884 years prior to their founding is not explained. This group appeals to this verse in its literature and teaching to excuse or justify former errors in doctrine or prophetic speculation on the basis that new light has been received. Such an explanation is contrary to the clear teaching of other scripture which declares God is not the author of false prophecy (Dt √18:20-22. Je √14:14). We are commanded "not to be afraid of" the false prophet; rather, the source of spiritual and doctrinal truth and authority must be grounded solely in the written word of God, Is +√8:20, not in any humanly devised religious organization. While our understanding of the truths revealed in God's word must be subject to continual growth and correction as we continue to make His word our careful study, His truth never changes. perfect day. The circumstance of the dart, as applied to the deer, is beautiful and proper, which otherwise we are at a loss to dispose of; and this creature, of all others, was the most proper to be noticed on this occasion; for the usual representation which the Egyptians made of a man overthrown by flattery and fair speeches was the picture of a hart captivated and ensnared by the sound of music. the correction. PROVERBS 8

Wisdom calls to the sons of men to hear her invaluable instructions, 1-11. She recommends herself as the giver of numberless blessings, 12-21. She declares her eternity: she was present at the Creation, as the foundation of Jehovah's counsels and the object of his delight, and as rejoicing in the sons of men, 22-31. She renews her exhortations to hear her words as the only way to obtain life and the favor of the Lord, and to avoid the willful ruin of men's own souls, 32-36.

This verb occurs elsewhere in Proverbs in the following passages: Pr 1:5. *4:5, 7. 15:32. 16:16. 17:16. 18:15. 19:8. 20:14. 22:23. It is frequently rendered by "get" or "buy" (Pr 4:5, 7; Ge 4:1. Pr 23:23; Ge 47:19; Ru 4:4, 8; Je 32:7, 8, 8, 25). The Syriac (compare Lamsa's rendering: "The Lord created me as the first of his creations") and LXX. (compare Charles Thomson's rendering: "The Lord created me, the beginning of His ways, for His works" or the rendering in Bagster's LXX.: "The Lord made me the beginning of his ways for his works") render it "created." This rendering is significant to the Arian controversy of the fourth century and since: is Wisdom a personification of Christ? and if so, is Christ then a created being? If Christ is a created being, then he could not be eternal, or God, as the second member of the Trinity. Since the Hebrew verb does not mean "create," as an examination of its occurrences and renderings will show, this text does not furnish evidence to support the notion that Jesus Christ is, in his pre-incarnate nature, a created being. PROVERBS 18

Maxims about seeking wisdom; avoiding contention, governing the tongue; the mischiefs of pride and sloth; the strong tower of the righteous man, and of the rich man; and the trials or comforts arising from relations and friends, 1-24.

1. Through, etc. or, He that separateth himself seeketh, according to his desire, and intermeddleth in every business. Isaac Leeser translates, "He that separateth himself (from God) seeketh his own desires; at every sound wisdom is he enraged." Ralph Wardlaw observes that the verse is variously rendered, such that opposing translations express an opposite meaning. Wardlaw argues that since this verse is in contrast with verse two, this verse must be taken in a positive sense of a man who loves and pursues knowledge, whereas verse two speaks of the man who undervalues and despises it. Wardlaw explains "Through desire"—that is, the desire of knowledge—"a man having separated himself"—that is, having retired and secluded himself from interruption by the intrusion of companions and the engagements of social life—"seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom" (Ralph Wardlaw, Lectures on The Book of Proverbs, vol. 2, pp. 170, 171). To suggest this verse teaches that the individual has no authority to read and understand Holy Scripture independently of the authority of a religious organization, as the Jehovah's Witnesses maintain in their claim to be Jehovah's exclusive vehicle of divine truth as the "faithful and wise servant" (Mt 24:45), is unacceptable, being in conflict with the direct teaching of Scripture elsewhere regarding the right of private judgment (Ga 1:8n) and the perspicuity of Scripture (Pr +*8:9. PROVERBS 22

The worth of a good name and the dependence of both rich and poor on God, 1, 2. Commendations of prudence, humility, piety, charity, and the proper tuition of children; and cautions against frowardness, iniquity, sloth, intimacy with bad women, and oppression, 3-16. An address to the reader, calling his attention to wisdom; again exhorting him to avoid oppression, friendship with angry men, suretiship, and removing ancient landmarks; and showing the advantages of diligence, 17-29.

The just man rising from his fall is most unwarrantably applied to the perseverance of the saints. The word fall frequently occurs in this book; but always in reference to trouble, not sin (see the parallel passages). The antithesis obviously fixes this meaning (Charles Bridges). "There are plain texts enough to prove every scriptural doctrine. But pressing texts into any particular service, contrary to their plain meaning, not only serves to deceive the inconsiderate, but to rivet the prejudices, and confirm the suspicions of opposers; just as bringing forward a few witnesses of suspicious character would cause all those, however deserving of credit, who should be examined in the same cause, to be suspected also, and create a prejudice against it in the minds of the court and of all present" (Scott). seven times. PROVERBS 26

Divers maxims, concerning fools, 1-12; sluggards, 13-16; intermeddlers with strife, those who do mischief in sport, talebearers, dissemblers, liars, and flatterers, 17-28.

3. A whip for. According to our notions, we should rather say a bridle for the horse and a whip for the ass; but it should be considered that the Eastern asses are not only much more beautiful but better goers than ours; and being active and well broken, they need only a bridle to guide them; whereas their horses, being scarce, and often caught wild, and badly broken, are much less manageable, and need the correction of the whip. 8. bindeth a stone in a sling. Heb. putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones. This probably refers, as Coverdale understands it, to the custom of throwing a stone to the heap under which a criminal was buried. So the Vulgate, "As he who throws a stone to Mercury's heap, so is he who gives honor to a fool." Mercury was a heathen god of highways; and stones were erected in different parts to guide the traveler: hence those lines of Dr. Young,

Death stands like Mercuries in every way;
And kindly points us to our journey's end.

so. ver. 1. Pr 19:10. 30:22.

PROVERBS 30

The title, 1. Agur's confession of sin and ignorance; his inquiry after God, and his cautions about the word of God; his prayer to be delivered from vanity and lies, and from the temptations of wealth and of poverty, 2-9. A caution against accusing servants; and concerning four sorts of wicked persons, 10-14. Four things insatiable, 15, 16. The punishment of those who mock their parents, 17. Four things wonderful and not to be traced out, 18-20. Four things exceedingly troublesome, 21-23. Four things small but wise, 24-28. Four things comely in going, 29-31. A counsel for men to check themselves, when conscious of being wrong, and to avoid forcing wrath and strife, 32, 33.

1. Agur. i.e. gatherer, *S#94h. Agur was probably a public teacher, and Ithiel and Ucal, his pupils; and this was the massa, or oracle, which he delivered, not by his own wisdom but by the Holy Spirit, for the benefit of man; and which, it is probable, was added by "the men of Hezekiah." Jakeh. i.e. obedient, *S#3348h. even. Solomon shows from his own experiments and reflections, the vanity and vexation of mirth, pleasure, riches, and magnificence, 1-11; of wisdom and knowledge, though far preferable to folly, 12-17; of the most successful labors of man; except as the things of the world are used in a proper manner, according to the will of God, and by his special gift, 18-26.

Jb 21:11, 12. Ps 150:3-5. Da 3:5, 7, 15. Am 6:5. The difficult words shiddah weshiddoth are variously rendered. The LXX. have "male and female cup-bearers," with which the Syriac and Arabic and Parkhurst agree; Aquila, "a cup and smaller cups;" Jerome, scyphos et urceolos (Vulgate, urceos), "goblets and pots;" Targum, "warm and cold baths;" others, as M. Desvoeux, "male and female captives;" others, "cooks and confectioners;" others, "a species of musical compositions," derived from Sido, a celebrated Phoenician woman to whom Sanchoniatho attributes the invention of music; but others, with more probability, "wives and concubines;" and siddoth may be in this sense synonymous with the Arabic seedat, conjux from sada, in Conj. V. conjugium inivit. Of the former, Solomon had three hundred, and of the latter, seven hundred; and if they are not mentioned here they are not mentioned at all, which is wholly unaccountable.

ECCLESIASTES 3

The mutability of human affairs, as resulting from the unsearchable, wise, and everlasting purposes of God, and connected with man's duty and interest, 1-15. The abuse commonly made of power; the future account to be rendered; and the way in which men live and die like beasts, without properly considering their immortal souls, 16-21. Men should rejoice in their present duties and comforts, being unable to know things future, 22.

But it may be regarded as a recommendation of a moderate use of worldly things, with a cheerful and contented mind; which may justly be considered as the greatest advantage which can be made of all below the sun: and amidst all changes, such a frame of mind, if the result of right principles, may and ought to be preserved; and it will be the recompense and solace of all our labors and toils. Like things happen to good and bad men till death, 1-3. The near approach of death should induce men to use cheerfully the comforts of life and diligently to perform its duties, 4-10. In all human affairs, probabilities are often strangely crossed, and great calamities befall men unawares, 11, 12. A fact recorded showing that wisdom and usefulness procure little respect or gratitude, notwithstanding the excellency and efficacy of wisdom, 13-18.

1. considered in my heart. Heb. gave, or set to my heart. Ec 1:17. 7:25. 8:16. 12:9, 10. to declare. Though Solomon could not "find out the whole work of God," yet his inquiries led him to make many useful conclusions, which he declared for the benefit of others. And he was assured, from what he had seen and from the well known character of God, "that the righteous, and the wise, and their works" were all "in the hand of God," protected by His power, under his especial care, and safe in His approbation; but that the events of human life were so intricately and mysteriously arranged, that no one could decide from them who were the objects of God's love or displeasure. ECCLESIASTES 11

An exhortation to be liberal and unwearied in doing good, 1-6. The prosperous should expect affliction and death, and beware of future misery, 7, 8; and young persons should remember judgment in their most cheerful hours, 9, 10.

1. Cast. That is, says Bp. Lowth, "Sow thy seed or corn on the face of the waters;" in plain terms, sow without any hope of a harvest:—do good even to them on whom your benefactions seem thrown away. Dr. Jubb has well illustrated it by the following passages:

Vain are the favors done to vicious men;
Not vainer 'tis to sow the foaming deep.
The deep no pleasant harvest shall afford,
Nor will the wicked ever make return.
Theognis, Gnome, 105.

To befriend the wicked is like sowing in the sea.
Phocylides, v. 141.

These, indeed, invert this precept; nor is it extraordinary that they should, "The one, frail human power alone produced, The other, God." thy bread. ƒ121G, Ge +31:1. Dt *15:7-11. ECCLESIASTES 12

An exhortation to early piety, 1. A description of the infirmities of old age and the approach and consequences of death, 2-7. A repeated declaration that "all is vanity;" the preacher's purpose and care in his instructions and the solemn conclusion of his subject, in a charge to fear and obey God as the whole of man, and thus to prepare for judgment, 8-14.

SONG OF SOLOMON

SONG OF SOLOMON 1

The title, 1. The church, or the believer, desires of Christ the tokens of his love, praises him, and expresses her delight in communion with him; confesses that her comeliness is very defective; complains that she had met with ill treatment, and prays to be directed to the resting place of his people, 2-7. He instructs her to follow the footsteps of his flock and comforts her with commendations and promises, 8-11. Mutual gratulations and professions of love between Christ and the church, 12-17.

SONG OF SOLOMON 2

The glory of Christ, the excellency of the church, and the mutual actings of love between them, 1-7. The church hears the voice of her Beloved and has discoveries of his glory, 8, 9. His gracious invitations and encouragements and his command to guard against subtle and mischievous enemies, 10-15. The church glories in her relation to him and longs for the completion of the sacred union, 16, 17.

SONG OF SOLOMON 5

Christ visits his garden, expresses his delight in it, and invites his friends to feast with him, 1. The spouse relates her drowsiness and vain excuses when visited by her Beloved; and that he was withdrawn when she arose to open to him, 2-6. The hard usage she met with from the watchmen, 7. She charges her companions to inform her Beloved that she was sick of love, 8. They inquire after her Beloved; and she describes his manifold excellences, 9-16.

The title, 1. God, by his prophet, charges Judah and Jerusalem with base ingratitude and atrocious wickedness; and describes their deplorable condition, 2-9. He shows his abhorrence of their sacrifices, calls them to repentance with promises of forgiveness, and warns them against obstinate rebellion, 10-20. He laments Zion's degeneracy and the iniquity of her princes; denounces severe vengeance; yet intimates a subsequent recovery of the nation to purity and prosperity, 21-31.

ISAIAH 6

Isaiah, by a vision of Jehovah's glory and the adoring Seraphim, is greatly dismayed: but encouraged by a Seraph touching his lips with a coal from the altar, 1-7. He receives a commission, showing the awful event of his prophetical labors, in the obduracy and ruin of the people; with an intimation of a remnant to be spared, and a holy seed to spring from them, 8-13.

denotes, as Celsius contends, the terebinth. It is an evergreen of moderate size, but having the top and branches large in proportion to the trunk; leaves, like those of the olive, but green intermixed with red and purple; flowers, like those of the vine, growing in bunches, and purple; fruit, of a ruddy purple, the size of a juniper berry, hanging in clusters, very juicy, and containing a single seed of the size of a grape stone; wood, hard and fibrous, from which a resin distills; with an excrescence scattered among the leaves, of the size of a chestnut, of a purple color, variegated with green and white. substance. or, stock, or stem. ISAIAH 7

Ahaz and his people are greatly terrified by hearing that the Syrians and Israelites had confederated against them, 1, 2. Isaiah is sent to assure Ahaz that they should not accomplish their purpose; but be speedily ruined, 3-9. Ahaz refuses to ask a sign of God; and Isaiah predicts the miraculous birth of Immanuel, as a sign or pledge of preservation to David's family, 10-16. A prophecy of judgments to be executed on the land by the Egyptians and Assyrians, 17-25.

8. For the head. Dr. Jubb transposes the former part of ver. 9, and renders, "Though the head of Syria be Damascus; and the head of Damascus Retzin; and the head of Ephraim be Samaria; and the head of Samaria Remaliah's son; yet within threescore and five years Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people." This renders the passage perfectly clear; and the prophecy received its full accomplishment when Esarhaddon carried away the remains of the ten tribes. 2 S 8:6. Syria. i.e. sublime, deceiving; exalted, *S#758h. ISAIAH 8

By the name given to a son of the prophet, the speedy ruin of Syria and Israel, and the invasion of Judah by the king of Assyria, are predicted, 1-8. A formidable confederacy against Judah would be defeated, 9, 10. The Jews are exhorted to fear and trust God, and not to fear man, as the way to safety, when numbers would be ensnared and destroyed, 11-15. The prophet (as a type of Christ), with his disciples, are signs to the people, 16-18. He warns them against diviners; directs them to the word of God as the only test and standard of truth; and predicts the blasphemy and despair of the rebellious, 19-22.

No error is more fundamental, nor more disastrous, than depending upon some external source of authority, whether extra-Biblical writings, or an organization claiming to dispense God's truth. The only source of authority is the written word of God. This word is declared in many ways to be perspicuous—that is, understandable (Dt 30:11n; Ps +102:18, T#49; Pr +*8:9) to the ordinary person, who, with the assistance of the Holy Spirit, together with careful study, may be trusted to come to just and sound conclusions as to the meaning of Scripture. Otherwise how could spiritual truth be made known to "babes and sucklings" (Ps 8:2. Mt 11:25), and how could ordinary listeners be commended for checking the accuracy and truthfulness of an apostle (Ac √17:11), and be charged with the responsibility of judging the message of an apostle, to determine that it was the true gospel (Ga 1:8)? Note that the great doctrinal epistles are specifically addressed to the "saints," that is, the ordinary believers, not to the pastors, bishops, theologians, or authorities of the church (Ro 1:6, 8; 1 C 1:2; Ep 1:1; Ph 1:1; Col 1:2). We shall be judged on the basis of our belief or disbelief in the written word of God (Jn 5:24-47. 12:48); in that day we will not be able to excuse our wrong belief, if such it should prove to be, by an appeal claiming "But I believed what my church, pastor, organization, etc., taught me" (Ezk √14:10. ISAIAH 9

Predictions of deliverance and joy to the people of God, through the incarnation, salvation, and kingdom of Christ, 1-7; of dreadful vengeance on Israel, for their pride, hypocrisy, and impenitent wickedness, and through the success of their enemies, and their own furious contentions, 8-21.

Woes denounced against the rulers for their iniquitous laws and decrees, 1-4. God commissions the Assyrian to punish the Jews; describes and rebukes his insolence and impiety, and predicts the ruin of him and his army, 5-19. He promises mercy to a remnant, attended with righteous judgments on the nations, 20-23. The people are encouraged not to fear the Assyrians; and a prophetical description is given of Sennacherib's progress, and the sudden ruin of his army, 24-34.

Some interpreters suggest the first time was Israel's exodus from Egypt, making the second time refer to Israel's return from the Babylonian captivity. This is not correct. Israel's full restoration was not accomplished with the return from the Babylonian captivity but is still future (Dt 30:4n). The second regathering (the Bible does not predict a third) precedes the restoration. The regathering brings Israel back to the land in unbelief (Zp 2:1, 2) before the rapture (Zp +*2:3) and the great tribulation (Je +*30:7. Da +*12:1). The initial regathering of Israel to the land (Is 54:7. Ezk +*34:13. +*37:25) sets the stage for the further working out of God's prophetic purposes, for even Christ in the Olivet discourse assumes Israel is in the land (Mt 24:15) before the tribulation. The purpose of the regathering and final restoration is to make possible the fulfillment of the Abrahamic and Davidic covenants (Is +*55:3. Ac +*7:5). This regathering (Mt 24:31n) must be distinguished carefully from the final restoration. The following predictions were not fulfilled by the return from Babylon, and therefore relate to the initial regathering in unbelief, the future glorious restoration and final regathering. The regathered and/or restored nation will (1) speak Hebrew (Ne ◐√13:24. Je 31:23. Zp 3:9); (2) return the second time (Is √11:11); (3) no more be removed (Is 60:21. Ezk 37:23-27. Am +√9:15). Since Israel was removed in A.D. 70, long after the return from Babylon, these predictions cannot refer to the return from Babylon, but must refer to a future return. (4) The return of Christ in the first stage of the Second Advent, unobserved by the world, takes place with the resurrection of the righteous dead and the rapture of living believers (1 Th +*4:16n, 17n). (5) The restoration of Israel is contingent upon their final repentance and spiritual awakening (Ezk 39:22. Ho 5:15. Ml 3:7), and will come at the height of the great tribulation when Jerusalem is taken and all hope of survival is gone (Zc 14:2). (6) God responds to the cry of an apparently very small believing remnant (Is +*17:6. 24:13, 14. 30:19. Ps 80:2mg. Zc √13:9). (7) This believing remnant, probably accounting for one third or less of the Jews at that time (Zc 13:8. 14:2) may have been prepared spiritually by careful students of the Bible among them who taught others (Da +*11:33) apart from any officially recognized ecclesiastical organizations, and some of these may be the Jewish evangelists to the world during the tribulation (Is +*27:6). This spiritual response may also be directly related to the appearance of Elijah (Ml 4:5). (8) The repentance of this remnant determines the timing of the Second Advent (Ho 6:1. Ac +*3:19-21). (9) In the final moments of tribulation crisis the question is asked, "Where is their God?" (Jl 2:17). (10) Israel shall cry, "My God, we know thee" (Ho 8:2. Zc 13:9). (11) When Israel's cry ascends, God will hear (Is *30:19). In answer to this prayer the Lord will (12) be jealous for his land and pity his people (Jl 2:18). (13) God will remove the northern army (Jl 2:20). (14) God will put Israel's enemies to flight (Is 59:19). All this is contingent upon Israel's final repentance (Ho 5:15. Ml 3:7, 16, 17. 4:2). (15) When Israel turns from transgression, the Messiah will come to deliver her (Is +√59:19, 20. Lk 21:28. Ac +√3:19-21. Ro +√11:26). (16) God awaits (Is +*30:18) and will plead with them in the wilderness (Ezk 20:35, 36. Ho 2:14) till they acknowledge their guilt and call upon Him (Is +√59:20. Ho 5:15. Jl √2:12, 17, 18). Thus it appears that a portion of the Jews will be in Jerusalem (Ezk 22:19, 20. Zc *14:2) and the rest of the land of Israel, while another portion of the Jews will be in the wilderness (Ezk 20:35, 36. Ho 2:14. Re +*12:6, 14) at this time. A third portion will be scattered throughout the nations of the earth. (17) The words of the prayer (Ps 60:1. Ho 14:2). (18) The swift answer to the prayer (Is +*65:24). (19) God will immediately answer (Is *30:19. Je √33:3). (20) God will defend Judah and Jerusalem against the armies of Antichrist (Zc +*12:8), delivering the tents of Judah first (Zc 12:7). (21) The Lord will be literally seen over them, protecting and defending them, and defeating their enemies (Zc 9:14). (22) They shall know from then on that the Lord is their God (Ezk 39:22. Jl 2:27). Upon this repentance God will (23) take away Israel's judgments, cast out the enemy, be the king of Israel, the Lord in the midst of them, and Israel shall not see evil any more (Zp 3:15). (24) The Messiah will return to the earth before the open manifestation of the Second Advent (Re 11:17n. 16:5) to the region of Sinai (Dt +*33:2. Ps +*68:7, 8. Is +*16:1-5) to organize his kingdom; proceed with judgment upon the enemies of Israel, to Bozrah (Is 34:1-10), for they have sought refuge and have been hidden there (Is +*16:1-5), perhaps at Petra (2 K 14:7n. Is 16:1mg. Je 49:16n. Ezk 35:9n. Ob +*3); Christ proceeds to destroy His enemies (Is 63:1-3), and to march victoriously (Dt 33:2) to Jerusalem, where he will ascend the mount of Olives (Zc 14:4) and come to Zion (Is +*51:11). Israel's return from the wilderness at the start of the Millennium (Ho 2:14-23), led by God, may be referred to this time. (25) All the saints will return with God and Christ at the visible final stage of the Second Advent (Ps +*149:9. Ho +*11:12. Jl 3:11. Ob +*21). (26) This will be a time of great singing and rejoicing (Is 24:14-16. Ho +*2:15. Jl 2:23. Zc +*2:10). (27) As a result of the earthquake at the Second Advent of Christ, the physical features of the land and mount Zion experience topographical changes which will raise Jerusalem to a more eminent position, making it "beautiful for situation" (Ps 48:2), leveling the present surrounding towering mountains like a plain (or, the Arabah, a hollow depression), providing the space needed for the millennial temple (Ezk 42:16n. Zc 14:4, 10). (28) Israel will at last possess the full geographical extent of the land covenanted to Abraham (1 K 4:21n. Is +*26:15. Je +*7:7. +*33:21n. Ac +*7:5. He +*11:13, 39). (29) The captivity will be ended, the commencement of the final and complete regathering begins, and Israel will be a name and a praise among all the nations of the earth (Zp 3:20). (30) Israel will experience a supernatural return, apparently after the tribulation just prior to the millennium (Is 27:12. Ezk 34:12. Am 9:9), to be distinguished from the initial regathering in unbelief. (31) This will be a complete return (Ezk 39:28). (32) Unlike the return from Babylon, this is a worldwide return (Is 43:6. Je 31:8. Ezk 38:8n). (33) It is a return in joy without sorrow (Is 65:19). (34) It includes the return of the resurrected (Ezk 37:12). (35) The land will be crowded (Is 49:19. Zc 2:4. 8:4, 5. 10:9, 10). (36) The millennium is preceded by the universal cleansing of the earth by fire to rid the world of the wicked (Ps 97:3. Is 24:1-6. +*66:24. Jl 2:30. Zp 2:3. Ml 4:1. Mt 3:11, 12. +*13:40-42. 2 Th *1:8. He *10:27. 2 P √3:10-13n). (37) In the land of Israel preparatory cleansing of the land will take place so the millennial temple can be built (Zc 13:1). (38) The millennial temple will be built by the Messiah (Zc 6:12, 13). (39) Christ in victory will judge the nations to determine which nations will be permitted to enter the millennium (Mt +*10:15n. √25:31-46). (40) Jewish evangelists will travel throughout the world to preach the gospel among the unconverted Gentile nations at the beginning of the millennium (Is +√66:19). (41) Thereafter knowledge of the Lord will be universal (Is 54:13. Hab 2:14. Jn +*6:45. He +*8:11). (40) Israel will be the spiritual center of the world (Mi 4:1, 2. Zc *8:3, 22, 23. 14:16). (42) Israel will never suffer God's wrath or fury again (Is 51:22). (43) Israel will dwell in supernatural righteousness (Is +*60:21). (44) Israel will be as though God had never cast them off (Jl +*2:25. Zc +√10:6. Ml 3:4). (45) Through Messiah Israel will be "head of the heathen," with Messiah as king over all the earth, ruling from Jerusalem (Ps 18:43. 110:2. Je 3:17. Mi 4:7. Zp 3:15. Zc *14:9). (46) Israel will "eat the riches of the Gentiles" (Is 61:6). (47) This is what marks the "fulness of the Gentiles" (Ro 11:25). (48) Israel will be a praise among all people of the earth (Is 60:15. 61:9, 11. Zp *3:20. Zc 8:13. Ml 1:11. 3:12). (49) Israel will no more be a reproach among the heathen (Jl 2:19. Zc 8:13). (50) Israel shall never be invaded by foreign powers again (Jl +*3:17. Ml 4:1-3), pertaining of course to the restoration, not necessarily the initial regathering. (51) Israel will "take them captives whose captives they were" (Is 14:2. 60:14. 61:5). (52) Israel will not depart from the Lord (Is 59:21. Je 32:40). The restoration of Israel (53) inaugurates universal peace and righteousness on earth (Is 2:4. Mi 4:3-5. Zc 9:10); (54) results in the restoration of all nature and the removal of the curse (Is √11:6-9. 24:6. 65:25. Ezk 34:25. Ml 4:6. Ac +*3:19. Ro 8:19-23. Re 22:3); and (55) is accompanied by the universal removal of all false religion (Is 45:22. Ho 2:17. Mi ◐*4:5. *5:8, 12, 13. Zc *13:2. Ml *1:11). Ex 15:16, 17℘. Je +*23:8. 29:14. +*31:36. 19. Babylon. Babylon, whose destruction and utter ruin are here predicted, was situated in the midst of a large plain, having a very deep and fruitful soil, on the Euphrates, about 252 miles south-east of Palmyra, and the same distance north-west of Susa and the Persian gulf, in lat. 32 degrees 30 minutes North and long. 44 degrees 20 minutes East. According to Herodotus, it formed a perfect square, each side of which was 120 stadia, and consequently its circumference 480 stadia, or sixty miles; enclosed by a wall 200 cubits high, and fifty wide, on the top of which were small watch towers of one story high, leaving a space between them, through which a chariot and four might pass and turn. On each side were twenty-five gates of solid brass, from each of which proceeded a street, 150 feet broad, making in all fifty streets; which, crossing each other at right angles, intersected the city into 676 squares, extending four stadia and a half on each side, along which stood the houses, all built three or four stories high, and highly decorated towards the street; the interior of these squares being employed as gardens, pleasure grounds. Its principal ornaments were the temple of Belus, having a tower of eight stories, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace, and the famous hanging gardens, or artificial mountains raised upon arches, and planted with large and beautiful trees. Cyrus took it by diverting the waters of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst, and entering by the channel; and the river being never restored to its proper course, overflowed the whole country and made it a morass. Darius Hystaspes afterwards depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates; Xerxes destroyed the temples; the building of Seleucia nearly exhausted it of its inhabitants; a king of the Parthians carried a number of them into slavery, and destroyed the most beautiful parts; so that modern travelers describe it as a mass of shapeless ruins, the habitation of wild beasts. The regions of the dead are laid open to the imagination, and their inhabitants are seen in commotion, at the approach of this proud monarch to join their company: and the mighty kings and captains (especially they whom the kings of Babylon had destroyed), are represented as leaving their several thrones in order to meet him: not to condole with him, or to welcome him; but to insult him as now become like one of them; and as bereft of all his pomp, luxury, music, and mirth; while his poor remains on earth are become company and food for the worms. "This is one of the boldest prosopopoeias that ever was attempted in poetry; and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both" (Bp. Lowth, cited by Scott). Ezk 32:18-32. Mk 9:43-50. Doubtless this is a poetical description, and the imagery is taken from external objects: but we must remember that it has truth for its basis; that the wicked remove at death to a place of misery; and that proud malignant spirits do insult and torment each other (Scott). Re 2:28. 22:16. This properly is a bright and eminent star, which ushers in the sun and the morning; but is here metaphorically taken for the high and mighty king of Babylon. And it is a very usual thing, both in prophetical and profane writers, to describe the princes and potentates of the world under the title of the sun or stars of heaven. Some understand this place of the devil; to whom indeed it may be mystically applied; but as he is never called by this name in Scripture, so it cannot be literally meant of him, but of the king of Babylon, as is undeniably evident from the whole context, which certainly speaks of one and the same person, and describes him as plain as words can do it (Matthew Poole). son of the morning. The title of son is given in Scripture not only to a person or thing begotten or produced by another, but also in general to any thing which is any way related to another; in which sense we read of a son of stripes, Dt 25:2; the son of a night, Jon 4:10; a son of perdition, Jn 17:12; and, which is more agreeable to the present case, the sons of Arcturus, Jb 38:32 (Matthew Poole). weaken. ver. 4-6. 19. thou. The prophet having briefly set forth, in the beginning of this chapter, the deliverance of Judah from captivity, in consequence of the destruction of Babyon, then introduces this triumphant song, the beauties of which are excellently illustrated by Bp. Lowth. A chorus of Jews is first introduced, expressing their astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who had, like his predecessors, oppressed his own, and harassed the neighboring kingdoms; who, with their rulers, are represented under the images of the fir trees and cedars of Lebanon; and who, while the whole earth shouts for joy, utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more, ver. 3-8. The scene is then changed to the regions of the dead; and Hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs, who rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming, and insult him on his being reduced to the same low state of impotence and dissolution as themselves, ver. 9-11. The Jews then resume the speech; address him as the morning star fallen from heaven; and introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs; which are strongly contrasted with his present low and abject condition, ver. 12-15. Then certain persons are introduced, who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out and lying naked on the ground among the slain, covered with wounds, and so disfigured that it is some time before they know him; they accost him with the bitterest taunts, and reproach him with his destructive ambition and cruelty, which have deservedly brought him and his posterity to this ignominious end, ver. 16-20. And, to complete the whole, God is introduced, declaring the utter extirpation of the royal family, the total desolation of the city, the deliverance of his people, and the destruction of their enemies, which He confirms by the awful sanction of His oath, ver. 21-27. cast out. 1 K 21:19, 24. 2 K 9:25, 34-36. ISAIAH 18

A message to Egypt and Ethiopia, probably showing the event of the Assyrian invasion; and a prediction, that they would present oblations to the Lord, 1-7.

1. A.M. cir. 3290. B.C. cir. 714. Woe. Bp. Lowth renders, after Bochart, "Ho! to the land of the winged cymbal;" which he thinks is a periphrasis for the Egyptian sistrum; and consequently, that Egypt, "which borders on the rivers of Cush," is the country to which the prophecy is addressed. If we translate "shadowing with wings," it may allude to the multitude of its vessels, whose sails may be represented under the notion of wings. the land. As, however, heres in Arabic signifies a lion, Conrad Ikenius is of opinion that the place here mentioned is not Heliopolis, as is commonly supposed, but Leontopolis in the Heliopolitan nome, as it is termed in the letter of Onias to Ptolemy (Josephus, Ant. l. xiii. c. 3). The whole passage, from this verse to the end, contains a general intimation of the propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander, and the early reception of the gospel in the same countries. A prophecy of the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, 1-10. The burden of Dumah, 11, 12. The burden of Arabia, 13-17.

1. The burden. The first ten verses of this chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; which is here denominated "the desert of the sea," because the country around it, and especially towards the sea, was a great morass, often overflowed by the Tigris and Euphrates, and only rendered habitable by being drained by a number of canals. Lk +*11:52. Re *1:18. ℳ165. Symbol B769. A material object substituted for a moral or spiritual truth. The stages by which a symbol is reached are: (1) either by Metonymy or Metaphor, one thing is used to represent another; then (2) by Hypocatastasis the one is used to imply the other; and finally (3) it becomes permanently substituted for it as a symbol of it. Here, "key" is used as a symbol of power and authority. With regard to leaven, we have first the thing itself causing fermentation, and therefore forbidden to be used in connection with any sacrifice or offering to the Lord. Then it is used by Metonymy for that which is corrupt (1 C 5:6-8). Then by Implication for corrupt or evil doctrine (Mt 16:6). And finally it is used as the permanent symbol of it (Mt *13:33). Indeed, "leaven" is always used in a bad sense, and of that which is corrupt. In the case of the two wave-loaves, where leaven was to be put into one and not into the other, the exception is significant, and proves the rule. A prediction of the ruin of Tyre, and the extensive consternation occasioned by it, 1-14; of the restoration of Tyre's prosperity, and the conversion of the Tyrians, 15-18.

1. A.M. 3289. B.C. 715. burden. ⁄121L4, Is +22:1. Tyre, whose destruction by Nebuchadnezzar is here foretold, was a city of Phoenicia, on the shore of the Mediterranean, twenty-four miles south of Sidon, and thirty-two north of Accho or Ptolemais, according to the Antonine and Jerusalem Itineraries, about lat. 33 degrees 18 minutes N. long. 35 degrees 10 minutes E. There were two cities of this name; one on the continent called Palae Tyrus, or Old Tyre, according to Strabo, thirty stadia south of the other, which was situated on an island, not above 700 paces from the main land, says Pliny. Old Tyre was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, after a siege of thirteen years, B.C. 573, which he so utterly destroyed, that it never afterwards rose higher than a village. But previous to this, the inhabitants had removed their effects to the island which afterwards became so famous by the name of Tyre, though now consisting only of about 800 dwellings. ISAIAH 28

The prophet threatens the speedy ruin of Ephraim for its pride and drunkenness, 1-4. God will be the Glory and Strength of the residue of his people, 5, 6. The Jews are severely reproved for drunkenness, 7, 8; unteachableness, 9-13; and carnal security, 14, 15. Christ, as the sure Foundation, is promised, 16. The presumptuous security of scorners will end in destruction, 17-22. The wisdom of Providence is illustrated, by the discretion of the husbandman as given by God, 23-29.

1. A.M. 3279. B.C. 725. the crown. This chapter begins a new subject, chiefly relating to the devastations of Israel and Judah by the Assyrian kings. The ancient Samaria being beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley, and then a circle of other hills around it, suggested the idea of a chaplet, or wreath of flowers. ver. 3. ISAIAH 29

A prediction of the distress of Jerusalem by a siege; and of the sudden destruction of the besiegers, 1-9. The Jews are reproved for their insensibility and hypocrisy, and threatened with judgments, 10-16. A promise of happier times, for the scorner and oppressor being cut off, the rest shall be converted, 17-24.

The hearth of the altar is expressly called Ariel by Ezekiel, Ezk 43:15; which is put, in the former part of the verse, for Jerusalem, the city in which the altar was. The subject of this and the four following chapters, says Bp. Lowth, is the invasion of Sennacherib; the great distress of the Jews while it continued; their sudden and unexpected deliverance by God's immediate and miraculous interposition on their behalf; the subsequent prosperous state of the kingdom under Hezekiah; interspersed with severe reproofs and threats of punishment for their hypocrisy, stupidity, infidelity, their want of trust in God, and their vain reliance on the assistance of Egypt; and with promises of better times, both immediately to succeed, and to be expected in the future age. The doom of Sennacherib, 1. The prayers of the pious Jews, 2. The haughty invader, when scattering the nations, becomes a spoil to the invaded, 3, 4. God exalted, and Jerusalem reformed and established, by means of Hezekiah's wisdom and piety, 5, 6. The Jews dismayed and distressed, by the ravages and menaces of the invaders; whom God determines to destroy, that all men may know his might, 7-13. The terror of the hypocrites, contrasted with the confidence of believers, 14-16. The happy event of these dangers and terrors; and the security of Zion, under the protection of God, 17-24.

Predictions of dreadful vengeance and perpetual desolations against Idumea and the enemies of Zion, 1-15. The certainty of the prophecy, 16, 17.

1. Come. This and the following chapter, as Bishop Lowth observes, form one distinct prophecy; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts; the first containing a denunciation of Divine vengeance against the enemies of the people or church of God; the second describing the flourishing state of that church consequent upon those judgments. The event foretold is represented as of the highest importance, and of universal concern; all nations are called upon to attend to the declaration of it; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations who had provoked to anger the Defender of the cause of Zion. By a figure frequently occurring in the prophetical writings, the cities and people mentioned here, who were remarkably distinguished as the enemies of the people of God, are put for those enemies in general. Calmet is of opinion that Sepharvaim was the capital of the Saspires, who, according to Herodotus (l. i. 103. iii. 94. vii. 79), were the only people that inhabited between the Colchians and Medes; and probably the Sarapases, whom Strabo (l. x.) places in Armenia. Hiller considers the name as denoting Sephar of the Parvaim, i.e. Mount Sephar adjacent to the regions of Arabia called Parvaim. But it is more probable, as Wells and others suppose, that Sepharvaim is the Sipphara of Ptolemy, the city of the Sippareni, mentioned by Abydenus (in Eusebius, Praep. Evang. l. ix. 41), and probably the Hipparenum of Pliny (l. vi. c. 30), a city of Mesopotamia, situated upon the Euphrates, near where it is divided into two arms, by one of which, it is probable, it was divided into two parts. 2 K 17:24. and have. The history of the invasion of Sennacherib, observes Bp. Lowth, and the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah's prophecies, is very properly inserted here, as affording the best light to many parts of these prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in the 37th chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah's prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. Sennacherib succeeded his father, Shalmaneser on the throne of Assyria, A.M. 3290, B.C. 714, and reigned only about eight years.

Hezekiah sends to Isaiah entreating him to pray for the people, 1-5. Isaiah encourages him, 6, 7. Sennacherib, going to meet the Ethiopian king, sends a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah, who spreads it before God with fervent prayer, 8-20. Isaiah describes the arrogant impiety, and predicts the ruin, of Sennacherib, 21-35. An angel slays 185,000 of the Assyrians; and Sennacherib is murdered at Nineveh by two of his own sons, 36-38.

(2) A country of Arabia Petraea, bordering upon Egypt, which extended from the northern extremity of the Red Sea along its eastern shore (Compare Ex 3:1 with Nu 12:1. Hab 3:7). (3) Ethiopia Proper, an extensive country of Africa, comprehending Nubia and Abyssinia; being bounded on the north by Egypt, on the east by the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, and on the south and west by various nations of Africa, and extending from about 6 to 24 degrees N. lat. and 25 to 45 degrees E. long. It is probable that it was this latter Cush, or Ethiopia, of which Tirhakah was king; he being in league with his kinsman Sevechus, son of So, or Sabacon, king of Egypt, against Sennacherib, the king of Assyria.

This is an example of how the Hebrew text in Isaiah varies from the text in 2 Kings. Here, the repetition of lands and land has much perplexed interpreters, as J. A. Alexander notes. Young in his translation follows Gesenius who follows J. D. Michaelis and Augusti in giving the masculine suffix a reflexive sense, translating "laid waste all the land and their land," indicating that they had destroyed not only other countries but their own, agreeing with the charge against the king of Babylon in Is 14:20, "thou hast destroyed thy land and slain thy people." But it is better to take this passage in the sense of 2 K 19:17, and regard the differing construction here as a combination of the figures of speech Paronomasia (✓140, Ge +4:25) and Metonymy of Adjunct (✓121J17, Ge +6:11), where the latter word "land" is put for the people inhabiting the lands. The researches of curious travelers in Hindostan, observes Bp. Stock, have lately discovered in that country, three observatories of similar form, the most remarkable of which is to be seen within four miles of Delhi, the ancient capital of the Mogul empire. A rectangled triangle, whose hypotenuse is a staircase (apparently parallel to the axis of the earth), bisects a zone, or coping of a wall, which wall connects the two terminating towers at right and left. The coping itself is of a circular form, and accurately graduated, to mark, by the gnomon above, the sun's progress, before and after noon.

We have here Hezekiah's thanksgiving song, which he penned by divine direction, after his recovery. He might have used some of the Psalms of David his father, as he had appointed the Levites to praise the Lord with the words of David (2 Ch 29:30), but the occasion here was extraordinary. His heart being full of devout affections, he would not confine himself to the compositions he had, though of divine inspiration, but offered up his praises in his own words. The Lord put a new song into his mouth. He put his thanksgiving in writing, that he might review it himself afterwards, for the reviving of the good impressions made upon him by the providential interference—and that it might be recommended to others also for their use upon the like occasion. This verse contains the superscription of the song, as verse 20 contains the subscription, as is frequent in the titles of the psalms.

This affords sufficient clue to the nature of Hezekiah's predicament, and his need of a sign: he was "sick unto death" (ver. 1), surrounded by the Assyrian army, and childless. Hezekiah directs his prayer to the "God of David" (ver. 5), laying claim to the "sure mercies of David" which promised to him an heir for the throne as a provision of the unconditional and irrevocable Davidic Covenant (2 S +*7:15; Ps +*89:28, 33, 37; +*132:11; Is +*55:3; Ac +*13:34; Ro +*11:1, 2, 29). God furnished him a miraculous sign in his distress (whereby the shadow on the dial of Ahaz retreated ten degrees), granted him recovery from sickness and fifteen additional years of life, utterly defeated his enemies, and gave him a son three years later (Manasseh, i.e. one who forgets, a king of Judah remarkable for idolatry and cruelty. 2 K 20:21. 21:1-18. 2 Ch 33:1-20.) Note here Hezekiah's joyful anticipation of providing his son spiritual guidance, and compare a corresponding sentiment of joy upon the birth of children in his song of degree, Ps 128:3. Compare the central Psalm of the song of degrees, Ps +*127:3, selected by Hezekiah for his collection of fifteen songs celebrating the fifteen years promised him.

The word "degrees" means "steps," as noted in verse 8 above, the steps of the dial of Ahaz. There are numerous points of comparison between the experience of Hezekiah and the subject matter of these songs, as may be seen by consulting the references. to the stringed. ISAIAH 40

God commands his prophet and servants to comfort his people, by the assurance that their sins are forgiven, 1, 2. The ministry of John the Baptist foretold and described, 3-8. The glad tidings of the gospel proclaimed; and the tender care of the good Shepherd, 9-11. A sublime representation of the majesty of God, contrasted with the insignificancy and vanity of the human race, as exposing the folly of attempting to liken any to him, 12-26. A gentle rebuke of God's people, for desponding in trouble; and encouraging thoughts suggested to them, 27-31.

ISAIAH 41

Jehovah calls on the nations to consider his works for Israel, and describes the zeal of the idolaters about their idols, 1-7. He gives many promises and predictions of assistance, victory, and prosperity to his people; and of the conversion of the Gentiles, 8-20. He challenges the idols of the nations to foretell future events and accomplish them, as he did; and predicts the conquests of Cyrus, and the deliverance of the Jews from captivity, 21-29.

ISAIAH 43

Promises to Israel of support, deliverance out of trouble, and abundant honor and increase, 1-7. A challenge to idolaters and idols to equal these prophecies, or the miracles wrought by Jehovah for his people, 8-13. Predictions of deliverance from Babylon, attended with the ruin of that city; and of spiritual redemption, 14-21. Heavy charge against Israel, contrasted with the freeness of God's pardoning mercy to them, 22-28.

ISAIAH 44

Jehovah promises to pour out his Spirit on the seed of Israel, and to convert them to himself, 1-5. He declares himself to be the only true and eternal God, and exposes the gross and stupid folly of idolaters, 6-20. He calls on Israel to remember these things; and promises forgiveness and many blessings; especially deliverance by Cyrus from the Babylonian captivity, 21-28.

ISAIAH 45

God promises Cyrus signal success, that he may liberate the Jews, 1-6. He declares his eternal Deity, as the Creator of all things; and promises glorious prosperity to his people, and sharply rebukes those who contended against his appointments, 7-14. The prophet declares his deep counsels, pronounces the confusion of idolaters, and assures Israel of salvation, 15-20. Jehovah reveals himself as "a just God and a Savior;" and swears by himself, that all shall bow to him, and that Israel shall be justified and glory in him, 21-25.

This is the figure Metonymy of the Adjunct, ⁄121S3AA B606. to open. All the streets of Babylon, leading on each side to the river, were secured by two-leaved brazen gates, and these were providentially left open when Cyrus's forces entered the city in the night, through the channel of the river, in the general disorder occasioned by the great feast which was then celebrated; otherwise, says Herodotus (i. 180. 191), the Persians would have been shut up in the bed of the river, as in a net, and all destroyed. The gates of the palace were also imprudently opened to ascertain the occasion of the tumult; when the two parties under Gobrias and Gadatas rushed in, got possession of the palace, and slew the king (Xenophon, lib. vii). However, J. A. Alexander discusses the difficulties in terms of Hebrew syntax of so translating (involving, as it does, an abrupt change from affirmation to interrogation), and concludes "By far the simplest syntax is the common one, which makes the first verb an imperative...and to understand both verbs as conceding an indulgence to those who are addressed. You may ask me concerning things to come, for I am able to inform you; you may trust my children to my care, for I am abundantly able to protect them." "Command" is used in the sense of "giving one authority over any thing or person, or in other words committing it to him, and leaving it at his disposal" (J. A. Alexander). It hardly means for us to boss God around in our prayers, as some mistakenly have understood. Is 5:6. 10:6. +*62:7. Ge 2:16. 32:26. Jg 16:23. Jsh 10:12. Jb 22:28. Ho 12:4.

ISAIAH 46

The idols of Babylon unable to preserve themselves from captivity, 1, 2. The powerful care of God over his people, even to the end, 3, 4. Idols, made with great expense, not to be compared with God, who declares his purposes before he executeth them, especially the deliverance of the Jews by Cyrus, 5-11. The stouthearted far from righteousness, but salvation near to Israel, 12, 13.

ISAIAH 48

The Lord, foreseeing the obstinate idolatry of Israel, had foretold what he was about to do, that his works might not be ascribed to idols, 1-8. He promises to save his people, for his own name's sake, by his almighty power, and by raising up and prospering Cyrus, 9-15. He pathetically shows how happy obedience would have rendered them, 16-19. He calls on the captive Jews to leave Babylon, remembering how their fathers had been supplied in the wilderness; and declares that there is no peace for the wicked, 20-22.

ISAIAH 49

The Messiah declares to the nations his appointment and qualifications for his work; complains of ill success among the Jews, and receives assurances of being "the Light of the Gentiles," and the source of salvation and consolation to vast numbers, 1-13. Zion thinks herself forgotten of God; but is assured of his unchangeable love, and the kings and nations shall be her children, to show her honor and to do her service, 14-23. The redemption of sinners from Satan's power, and Israel from that of Antichrist is predicted, with allusion to the deliverance of the captive Jews, 24-26.

ISAIAH 50

The Lord Messiah shows that the Jews were rejected through their obstinate wickedness and unbelief; declares his power and fitness for his work; and speaks of his voluntary humiliation and patient sufferings, as assured of being delivered, justified, and rendered victorious over all enemies, 1-9. He encourages afflicted and tempted believers, and denounces the ruin of presumptuous transgressors, 10, 11.

ISAIAH 51

God encourages his people, by the example of Abraham, to trust in him; and promises them comfort, 1-3. He contrasts the certainty and perpetuity of his righteousness and salvation with the short continuance of the visible creation and the feebleness of persecutors; and warns his people against the dread of reproach, 4-8. The redeemed call on God to renew his wonderful works in their behalf; and receive assurances of comfort and prosperity, with a rebuke for Zion's unbelief and fear of man, 9-16. Israel, in past and present distresses, is assured of deliverance, and the punishment of her oppressors, 17-23.

ISAIAH 53

The unbelief of the Jews predicted, 1. The meanness of Christ's external appearance; and the contempt and sufferings which he would endure, 2, 3. He would suffer as a sacrifice for the sins of his people; but in perfect holiness and patience, 4-7. Several circumstances predicted, which attended his death, burial, resurrection, and glory; and his success in justifying and saving sinners as his spiritual progeny, 8-10. As a recompense of his sufferings, and the fruit of his intercession, he should rescue a numerous people from Satan's bondage and rule over them as his willing subjects, 11, 12.

ISAIAH 57

The disregarded yet happy death of the righteous a token of approaching judgments, 1, 2. Idolaters, hypocrites, and wicked men cited before God's tribunal, convicted, and threatened with destruction; while none could help them, and while those who trusted

God would be saved, 3-14. Promises to the broken-hearted; causes of the sufferings of God's professed people; and the free grace of the gospel, from which the impenitent are excluded, 15-21.

Here is the main difficulty: so long as sensual repose, instead of spiritual; intellectual effort, instead of devotional; the pleasure of the mere appetites, instead of the pleasure of the soul of God, is the governing principle in our religion, the sabbath will never be kept aright (Daniel Wilson, The Lord's Day, p. 155). As these prophecies evidently relate, or extend, to the times of the Christian dispensation; a cogent argument may be deduced from them, for hallowing the Lord's day. The rule here given implies, that men must not profane that day by doing their ordinary work, or seeking their secular interest; or by spending it in worldly pleasures and recreations, or sloth and animal indulgence; or by vain and trifling conversation: but that they should delight in the sabbath, as a holy day especially consecrated to the Lord, to be spent in the public and private duties of religion; honor it above all other days, and honor God on it and for it. In proportion as we are spiritually minded, we shall hallow, honor, and delight in the sabbaths of God; and, laying aside all employments, pleasures, or discourse which can interrupt our sacred rest in him, we shall seek communion with him in his public and private ordinances: without any other remission, than what is really necessary, or what is a work of love to the souls and bodies of our neighbors and fellow Christians (Scott). If the Divine command was actually delivered at the creation, it was addressed, no doubt, to the whole human species alike, and continues, unless repealed by some subsequent revelation, binding upon all who come to the knowledge of it (William Paley, Moral and Political Philosophy, Book V, ch. 7). 11. Therefore. The subject of this chapter, says Bp. Lowth, is the great increase and flourishing state of the church of God, by the conversion and accession of the heathen nations to it; which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly show that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colors, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of the glories of that perfect state of the church of God, which we are taught to expect in the latter times; when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and the Jews shall be converted and gathered from their dispersions, and the "kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ." thy gates. The language then becomes more energetic, and the images employed more grand and magnificent; and nothing can answer to the glorious description but some future exalted state of the church on earth, or the church triumphant in heaven; though several expressions seem to limit it to the church below. Zc 3:9. Mt +*5:5. Ac +*7:5. for ever. Heb. olam, Ex +*12:24. Note the straightforward promise here that Israel is to inherit the land forever.

Such a promise requires a literal fulfillment, which has not yet been accomplished (He +*11:39); but since God cannot lie (T 1:2), the fulfillment is reserved for the future. This promise, repeated many times and in many ways (Is +*41:9. +*55:3. Ge +*17:8. 2 Ch +*20:7), renders the "church-kingdom" theory (often reflected in the headnotes and chapter or page running heads of various editions of the Authorized Version) utterly false, since such a theory denies the literal fulfillment of these promises to Israel and applies them to the church, or to "spiritual Israel." The inconsistency of such a method of interpretation is readily seen when the blessings are eagerly applied to the church, but the curses are literally applied to Israel! Peters (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 90, footnote 5) states "The great spiritual blessings are promised to the identical people that suffered dispersion from their land, and are so repeatedly linked with a return to the same land from which they were driven, that it is folly to apply these to the Church as now constituted, and not to the time, place, and people for whom they are intended." Peters notes that the multiplicity of prophetic detail forbids any spiritualized application to the Church: "The election of the nation, the rejection for a time, the Theocratic relationship, the absolute promises, the gathering from all countries and bringing into their own land, the personal appearance of the Messiah and effect upon them, the time of this Advent, the distressed condition of the nation, the miraculous attending the conversion and restoration, the aid tendered by Gentiles, the formation into a State, the union of the two nations, the vast multiplication, and a hundred more particulars, are all of such a nature, and so connected, that they forbid any other view." Biblical references for each of these details of predictive prophecy named by Peters will be found in the note for Is 11:11n, or in the index, particularly entries under "Israel." Each school of prophetic interpretation seems quite aware of the interpretative mistakes of the opposing school, while remaining unaware of its own. There are two extremes to be avoided: spiritualization and speculation. Amillennialists wisely caution against speculation, premillennialists rightly caution against spiritualization. Is 11:11n. ISAIAH 62

The prophet, as a type of Christ, shows his zeal in interceding for the performance of God's glorious promises to Israel, 1-5. Vigilant watchmen are promised; who, with believers in general, are excited to the same zeal, 6, 7. God confirms his promises by an oath, 8, 9. Preparations to be made for the coming of his salvation, 10-12.

The very remarkable passage contained in the first six verses of this chapter seems in a manner detached from the rest, and to stand by itself; containing a prophetical representation of the victories of the Messiah over the enemies of his church, here designated by the names of Edom and Bozrah. Though, as Bishop Lowth observes, this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity for supposing that it has been already accomplished. There are prophecies which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God and his people, which remain to be fulfilled: those in Ezk ch. 38 and Re ch. 20 are called Gog and Magog. Jehovah declares his free mercy in the conversion of the Gentiles, and his justice in casting off Israel for unbelief, idolatry, and wickedness, 1-7; shows that he preserved the nation for the sake of a chosen seed to arise out of it; and contrasts the blessedness of his servants with the miseries coming on the unbelieving Jews, 8-15; and predicts the glories and privileges of Jerusalem in the latter days, 16-25.

The fundamental error of the first is that of being "experience centered" instead of "Bible centered" or "Christ centered," and leads to instability, with repeated spiritual "ups and downs." The fundamental error of the latter is that of gnosticism—the claim to exclusive or superior spiritual knowledge or authority (Pr +4:18n. Mt *23:13, 15. +24:45. Lk +*11:52. +12:42. 1 C 8:2. Ga 6:3. Ph *2:3. 3 J *9-11). The remedy for the "experienced centered" error is to become Bible and Christ centered (Jn +*5:39); the remedy for gnosticism is to adopt the Bible as the exclusive spiritual authority (Is +*8:20n), and separate entirely from the literature, fellowship and influence of false teachers (Ps +✓119:63; Pr +✓19:27. The disquisitions and conjectures of the learned, says Bp. Lowth, concerning Gad and Meni, are infinite and uncertain: perhaps the most probable may be, that Gad means good fortune, and Meni, the moon. "But why should we be solicitous about it," says Schmidius. "It appears sufficiently, from the circumstances, that they were false gods; either stars, or some natural object; or a mere fiction. The Holy Scriptures did not deign to explain more clearly what those objects of idolatrous worship were; but chose rather that the memory of the knowledge of them should be utterly abolished. And God be praised, that they are so totally abolished, that we are now quite at a loss to know what sort of things they were." Ge +24:44n. drink offering. Is 5:22. Pr 23:30. Je 7:18. 19:13. 44:17. number. or, Meni. or, fill up mingled wine unto Destiny. Thus a reference to the gods of Fortune and Fate. Arthur Carr, Horae Biblicae, "The Exclusion of Chance from the Bible," remarks that this passage "contains a direct protest by the prophet Isaiah against the worship of Fortune or Good Luck as a divinity," further noting that Isaiah plainly indicates that the Jews of the Exile had been attracted by the cult of Fortune. Evidence of this worship is found in Palestine in the place names of Baal-Gad (Jsh 11:17. 12:7. 13:5) and Migdal-Gad (Jsh 15:37). The name Azgad ("strong is Gad," Ezr 2:12), may indicate that a Jewish family had at one time devoted itself to the service of Fortune. Carr cites Prof. G. A. Smith that this practice of "preparing a table for Gad, and filling up mixed wine to Meni," may be closely connected with the commercial spirit which the Jews imbibed for the first time during the Exile. "The merchants of Mesopotamia had their own patron gods. In completing business contracts a man had to swear by the idols, and might have to enter their temples" (G. A. Smith, Book of Isaiah, ii. 62). In this way the Jewish trader would be drawn into idolatry.—If this conjecture be true, and it carries with it the highest probability, how closely does the whole subject connect itself not only with the commercial transactions of the present day on their speculative side, but with the spirit of gambling generally. It was quite in accordance with the teaching of Holy Scripture that games of chance were repudiated by the stricter Jews (Schurer, ii. 1, 36). It has sometimes been thought difficult to discover a principle on which to base a general condemnation of games of chance. However this may be, a sufficient justification will be found for discountenancing and condemning what Bishop Cosin calls "inordinate gaming," not only in the stern reproof of the prophet (Is 65:11), but in the whole of the remarkable and suggestive contrast presented to the life and literature of pagan civilization by the thought, and utterance, and silence of the Bible (Arthur Carr, pp. 38-46). See Pliny, l. xxxvii. c. 11. tree. or, Asherah. Dt 16:21, grove, or Asherah. 2 K 21:3n. The Asherah was often a wooden pole or pillar, an image of wood, perhaps like a totem pole. It was an idol involved in pagan fertility worship (Ex 34:13), erected beside the altar of Baal (Jg 6:25, 28). It degenerated into phallic worship (Ezk 16:17), the worship of male organs of procreation. In the Authorized Version the word is always rendered "grove" or "groves," but that it cannot be a whole grove of trees may be seen by the fact that the "grove" was brought out of the temple (2 K 23:6), and that they were forbidden to be set up "under any green tree" (2 K +*17:10). Women wove hangings for the Asherah in the temple (2 K 23:7). Male and female prostitutes (Sodomites, Dt 23:17mg) were consecrated to the cult of this goddess. In Ahab's time Elijah slew the prophets of the Asherah along with those of Baal at the river Kishon (1 K 16:33; 18:19-40). eating. Is 65:4. Le 11:2-8. JEREMIAH 2

God reminds Judah and Israel of his former kindnesses; and expostulates with them on their ungrateful, unreasonable, and unexampled apostasies and idolatries, 1-13. Their calamities originate from their crimes, 14-19. Their conduct is a breach of solemn engagements; degeneracy from their pious ancestors; undeniable, and inexcusable; the effect of impetuous lusts, and desperately persisted in, 20-30. It is connected with folly and weary labor, murder and persecution, useless self-justification, and continual changes from one false confidence to another, 31-37.

JEREMIAH 3

God invites Judah to return to him, with intimations of mercy; but with rebukes and expostulations, 1-5. Israel, though rejected for sin, is less criminal than Judah, who had not profited by the judgments inflicted on Israel, 6-11. Both are called to repentance, with gracious promises and predictions, 12-19. The people being sharply reproved, are prophetically represented, as repenting and confessing their sins, 20-25.

JEREMIAH 6

The eagerness of Zion's enemies prophetically described, 1-5. Because of her sins and impenitency, God will prosper them, 6-9. The prophet pathetically declares the sins and miseries of the people, 10-15. Having in vain warned them to repent, he denounces the judgments of God; calls the people to mourning; and predicts their incorrigible obduracy, 16-30.

JEREMIAH 7

JEREMIAH is sent to the temple, to call the Jews to repentance, that they might not be removed, 1-3, to reprove their presumptuous confidence in the temple, while living in gross wickedness, 4-11; and to predict that Jerusalem would be desolated, like Shiloh; and the people carried captive, as Israel had been, 12-15. God directs the prophet not to pray for them. He shows him their idolatries, and the judgments about to come on them, 16-20. He rejects with disdain the sacrifices of the disobedient; and exposes the perverse conduct of the nation, from their departure out of Egypt, 21-28. A call to mourning for the prevailing abominations, and a denunciation of desolating judgments, 29-34.

JEREMIAH 8

A prediction of the indignities, which would be shown to the bones of the idolatrous Jews; and of such miseries, that men would prefer death to life, 1-3. Severe reproofs of the obstinacy, avarice, and shameless wickedness of the people, 4-12. A prophetical description of the dismay occasioned by the Chaldean invasion, 13-17. The grief of the prophet in the prospect of these calamities, 18-22.

This was no uncommon practice at the sacking of cities; and it was the highest expression of hatred and contempt. Horace (Epod. xvi. 11) refers to it, "And her great founder's hallowed ashes spurn, That slept uninjured in the sacred urn" (Francis). See Note on 2 Ch 34:5n. graves. Heb. qeber, Ge +23:4.

4. Moreover. Blayney justly observes, that the change of speakers here requires careful attention. The prophet first, in the name of God, reproves the people, and threatens them with grievous calamities, ver. 4-13. Then, apostrophising his countrymen, he advises them to retire with him to some fortified city, ver. 14-16. God then threatens to bring foes against them, that are irresistible, ver. 17. The prophet next commiserates the daughter of his people, who is heard bewailing her forlorn case; whilst the voice of God breaks in upon her complaints, and shows that all this ruin is brought upon her by her infidelities, ver. 18-20. The prophet regrets that her wounds had not been healed, and laments over her slain, ver. 21—Je 9:1. Shall they. Pr *24:16. Ho *14:1. Am *5:2. Mi √7:8. JEREMIAH 9

The prophet shows the excess of his grief for the miseries of his people, and his abhorrence of their crimes; and also the justice of God in his dealings with them, 1-16. He calls them to lamentation, 17-22. Warnings not to glory in wisdom, strength, riches, or external distinctions, but in the knowledge of God, and of his grace, 23, 24. Wicked Israelites, and uncircumcised Gentiles, will be punished together, 25, 26.

The prophet pleads with God concerning the prosperity of the wicked; appeals to him for his integrity; and prays that they, for whose sins the land was visited, might be selected for punishment, 1-4. God reproves his impatience, warns him to expect heavier trials, describes the wickedness of the people, and denounces sentence against them, 5-13. A prophecy of heavy judgments on the oppressors of the Jews, who would be restored to their own land: and of the calling of the Gentiles; the privileges of the obedient, and the destruction of the disobedient, 14-17.

1. Righteous. ✓169. Synchoresis; or, Concession B970: making a concession of one point in order to gain another. The figure Synchoresis is used when we make a concession of one point in order to gain another. In this case the concession or admission is made, and may be rightly made, in order to gain a point. Synchoresis thus differs from Epitrope (✓83, 1 K 22:15), where we admit something that is wrong in itself for the sake of argument. Synchoresis, therefore, is concession, while Epitrope is admission or surrender. For other instances of this figure see Hab *1:13. Ro 2:17-20. 1 C 4:8. 2 C 10:1. 12:16. Ga 4:15. JEREMIAH 13

The prophet, by the sign of a linen girdle, first worn by him, and then buried and spoiled near Euphrates, and by the simile of bottles filled with wine, predicts the approaching captivity, and the miseries attending it, 1-14. He calls the king, the rulers, and the people to repentance; and mourns over their pride, and in the prospect of their calamities, 15-21. He expostulates with them, concerning their incorrigible obstinacy, 22-27.

A terrible famine in Judah, 1-6. The prophet calls on God to deliver the people, though deeply guilty, for his own name's sake, 7-9. The Lord shows him their wickedness, and forbids him to pray for them, 10-12. The prophet charges the blame on the false prophets, and the Lord includes them also in the threatened vengeance, 13-16. The prophet is ordered to mourn over his people; and he perseveres in interceding for them, 17-22.

1. A.M. 3399. B.C. 605. The word. ✓101, Dt +32:42. This discourse is supposed to have been delivered after the fourth year of Jehoiakim. JEREMIAH 15

God determines (let who will intercede) to pour out many heavy judgments on the Jews, 1-9. Jeremiah complains that he is generally hated; and God promises good to him amidst the calamities of the nation, 10-14. The prophet professes his integrity, and renews his complaints, 15-18. God recalls him to his work, and promises to support and deliver him in the due discharge of it, 19-21.

JEREMIAH 17

The Jews are convicted of idolatry, and condemned to captivity, 1-4. They who trust in man are cursed, and those who trust in God are blessed, 5-8. None but God can search out the extreme deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart, 9, 10. The doom of those who grow rich by injustice, 11. The glory of God, as dwelling among his people, an aggravation of the guilt of such as forsake him, 12, 13. The prophet prays for comfort and salvation; complains of ill usage; protests his fidelity and love to the people; and calls for vengeance on his persecutors, 14-18. A message to the rulers concerning hallowing the sabbath, with conditional promises and threatenings, 19-27.

JEREMIAH 18

By the emblem of a potter and his clay, God shows his absolute right and power over Israel; and the method of his righteous and merciful dealings with the nations, 1-10. The prophet warns the people to repent; expostulates with them on their folly and wickedness, and denounces divine judgments, 11-17. The devices which they devised against him; and his prophetical prayers against them, 18-23.

JEREMIAH 21

Zedekiah sends to inquire concerning Nebuchadnezzar's invasion, 1, 2. He is told that the city shall be destroyed, and that God will fight against both king and people, and show them no mercy, 3-7. The prophet counsels the people to fall to the Chaldeans, as the only way of preserving their lives, 8-10. He exhorts the king and his family to execute justice, 11, 12. He again predicts, that the city would certainly be destroyed, 13, 14.

JEREMIAH 22

The prophet is sent to the king's palace, to exhort him and his people to various duties, with conditional promises and threatenings, 1-9. The people are told not to weep for Josiah; but to lament for Shallum, who was carried captive to return no more, 10-12. Severe rebukes of Jehoiakim, and a dreadful sentence against him, 13-19. The Jews, who had been rebellious in prosperity, would be rendered more pliant by suffering, 20-23. The doom of Jeconiah, and others of David's family, 24-30.

Zedekiah was taken prisoner by Nebuchadnezzar; his sons slain before his eyes; and his eyes being put out, he was carried to Babylon; and we read no more either of him or his posterity. 1 Ch 3:16, 17. Mt 1:12-16. childless. Coniah did have children (1 Ch 3:16, 17. Mt 1:12), but this prediction asserts that he would not have any children who would prosper, sitting upon the throne of Judah. Their title to the throne was not lost, but the experience of occupying the throne at length and prosperously has never been granted to Coniah's descendants. For a fuller discussion see W. W. Barndollar, Jesus' Title to the Throne of David, pp. 88-99. sitting. The line of the Messiah is traced for Joseph's genealogy to David through his son Solomon to Jeconiah, upon whom Jeremiah records the curse that no descendant of his should sit (at length or prosperously) upon the throne of David. But Luke traces Mary's genealogy through David's son Nathan, so that through the virgin birth Jesus's right to "sit upon the throne of David" is unimpaired by this prophecy, as Jeconiah is not in Mary's line to David. The legal title to the throne of David can only be established through the genealogy as given by Matthew, for only Solomon was chosen heir, by divine appointment (1 Ch 22:8-10), of the Davidic throne (1 Ch ✓28:5), not Nathan. As Jesus was the legal son of Joseph, though not the natural son because of the virgin birth, the legal claim of Jesus as the Messiah to the throne of David through the line of Solomon is unimpaired. JEREMIAH 23

A woe is denounced on the corrupt pastors, and the restoration of the scattered flock is predicted, 1-4. A prophecy of the kingdom and righteousness of Christ, and of the gathering of the people to him, 5-8. The wickedness of the nation charged on the priests and false prophets, 9-15. The people are cautioned against hearkening to false prophets, and instructed how to distinguish them; with sharp rebukes and terrible threatenings against them, 16-32. A rebuke of those who made a scoff at the words of the true prophets, 33-40.

19. a whirlwind. As whirlwinds are sometimes fatal to travelers, who overwhelmed by them in the desert, they are elegantly employed to denote the certainty, as well as suddenness, of the destruction of the wicked. Mr. Morier (Second Journey, p. 202), describing the whirlwinds of Persia, says they swept along the country in different directions, in a manner truly terrific, carrying away in their vortex sand, branches, and the stubble of the fields, and really appearing to make a communication between the earth and the clouds. Shedd categorizes this attribute as one of the immanent or intransitive attributes "which do not go forth and operate outside of the Divine essence, but remain internal. Such are immensity, eternity, simplicity, self-existence, etc." (Dogmatic Theology, Vol. 1, p. 337). "The Immensity of God is his essence as related to space. The Divine essence is not measurable, because not included in the limits of space. God's immensity is spiritual, having no extension of substance. By virtue of God's immensity, he is Omnipresent" (Shedd, Dogmatic Theology, vol. 1, pp. 339, 340). 1 K 8:27. 2 Ch 2:6. 6:18. Ps 148:13. Is √57:15. 66:1. Da 4:35. Mt +*28:19n. Ep *1:22, 23.

The false prophets professed that they had revelations from God in supernatural dreams; and they caused this to be rumored abroad. But the Lord declared that it was an imposture: for they only spake their own conjectures, the result of the pride and presumption of their own deceitful hearts. Their purpose, as well as the tendency of their lying predictions, was to seduce the people into forgetfulness of God, and contempt of his word; that they might graft idolatry and superstition on their infidelity, and so render them their attached and submissive followers (Scott). ver. 28, 32. 28. that hath. Heb. with whom is. a dream. ver. 32. Ezk 13:7. The contrast is between the false prophets who have their dreams and the true prophet who has God's word. The opposition between chaff and wheat which follows shows these alleged supernatural dreams for what they are—not divine revelation, but a dream of their own heart, mere chaff, unsuitable and valueless for spiritual sustenance. This is perhaps the clearest and strongest appeal to the perspicuity of Scripture to be found in the Bible, for an appeal is here made for the ordinary believer to discern the difference between the false and the true. A mark of false religion is placement of spiritual and doctrinal authority in any other source than the written word of God found in the Bible—whether the source be an organization and its literature, the writings of a particular teacher or prophet, or a claim to divine authority based upon apostolic succession, or even a line of succession through valid baptisers traced back to John the Baptist! 29. Is not. As fire penetrates, enlivens, illuminates, purifies, consumes, or transforms every substance into its own nature; so the Sacred Word, applied by the Spirit of God, penetrates the conscience, quickens and illuminates the mind, softens and melts the heart, purifies the affections, consumes the dross of sin, and transforms the believer's soul into its own holy nature; and as a hammer, it breaks down the presumptuous confidence of the proud and stouthearted. Dr. Adam Clarke thinks there may be an allusion to the practice, in some countries, of roasting stones containing ore, before they are subjected to the hammer, in order to pulverize them. In Cornwall, they roast the tin stones, by which the arsenic is separated from the ore, and they are then easily reduced to powder in the stamp mill; and, being afterwards washed, the grains of tin sink to the bottom, while the lighter parts go off with the water, and the metal is then procured clean and pure. my word. JEREMIAH 26

JEREMIAH delivers an awful message from God at the temple, and is persecuted by the priests and prophets, 1-9. He pleads his cause before the princes, exhorts them to repent, and warns them not to shed innocent blood, 10-15. The princes acquit him, referring to the example of Micah, 16-19. Urijah, having prophesied in like manner, was persecuted; and having fled into Egypt, was fetched thence by Jehoiakim and slain, 20-23. But Ahikam protects Jeremiah, 24.

The Jewish writers also inform us, that Turnus Rufus, whom Titus had left in command, ploughed up the very foundations of the temple. When Dr. Richardson visited this sacred spot in 1818, he found one part of Mount Zion supporting a crop of barley, and another undergoing the labor of the plough: the soil turned up consisted of stone and lime mixed with earth, such as is usually met with in foundations of ruined cities. It is nearly a mile in circumference; is highest on the west side, and, towards the east, falls down in broad terraces on the upper part of the mountain, as it slopes down towards the brook Kedron (Travels, vol. ii. p. 348). JEREMIAH 27

JEREMIAH is directed to make yokes and bonds; to wear them on his own neck, and to send them to several kings by their ambassadors; with a command to each of them from the Creator of the world, to submit to the king of Babylon, if they would escape destruction, 1-11. He counsels Zedekiah to the same effect; warns him and the people against false prophets; and predicts further desolations, 12-22.

king of Babylon, whom he calls his servant, because he would accomplish an important part of his righteous designs. They, therefore, who would escape the most dreadful judgments, must submit to the God of Israel, by submitting to Nebuchadnezzar; they must hearken to the prophets of Israel, and not to their own diviners; and they must observe, that Nebuchadnezzar, his son, and his grandson, would, whatever opposition should be made, possess the full dominion of these countries, till the appointed time was expired; and then, these haughty conquerors would in their turn become the prey of other powerful conquerors; all of which was most exactly fulfilled. that nation. JEREMIAH 28

Hananiah confidently predicts the speedy ruin of Babylon, and the return of the sacred vessels and the captive Jews, 1-4. Jeremiah expresses his desire that it may prove true; but appeals to the event, 6-9. Hananiah breaks the yoke from Jeremiah's neck, who is sent with yokes of iron to confirm his former prophecies, 10-14. He foretells Hananiah's death, which takes place accordingly, 15-17.

JEREMIAH, by letter, requires the captives at Babylon to accommodate themselves to their condition, and not to believe the false prophets, who assured them of a speedy deliverance, 1-9. He promises them in the name of God, a gracious restoration at the end of seventy years, 10-14. He foretells the destruction of those who remained at Jerusalem, 15-19; and shows the dreadful end of two false prophets at Babylon, 20-23. Shemaiah writes a letter from Babylon, against Jeremiah, 24-29; by whom Shemaiah's doom is foretold, 30-32.

20. Hear. Dr. Blayney thinks there were two letters written by the prophet to the captives in Babylon, and the first ends with this verse. That having heard, on the return of the embassy, that the captives had received his advices favorably, and because they were deceived by false prophets, who promised them a speedier deliverance, he therefore wrote a second letter, beginning with the fifteenth verse, and going on with the twenty-first, etc. (in which order these verses are read in the Septuagint), in which he denounces God's judgments on the three chief of those, Ahab, Zedekiah, and Shemaiah. all ye. JEREMIAH 30

Prophecies of the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their city and temple; notwithstanding their extreme calamities, the justice of their punishment, the failure of all human help, and their own desponding thoughts, 1-18; of their subsequent increase and prosperity under their own rulers; and of the destruction of their enemies and the wicked, 19-24.

1. Cir. A.M. 3417. B.C. 587. The word. Dahler supposes that this prophecy was delivered about a year after the taking of Jerusalem; which appears highly probable. Dr. Blayney justly supposes this and the following chapter to refer to the future restoration of the Jews and Israelites in the times of the Gospel; though also touching at the restoration from the Babylonian captivity. The ninth verse is expressly referred to the times of the Messiah by the Chaldee paraphrast; who renders, "They shall serve before Jehovah their God, and shall obey Messiah the son of David, whom I shall raise up to them." JEREMIAH 32

JEREMIAH is imprisoned, for predicting the destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity of Zedekiah, 1-5. By the command of God he purchases a field, as a token that the Jews should be restored to their inheritances, 6-15. He prays to be further instructed concerning these transactions, 16-25. He is informed of the approaching calamities for the sins of the people, 26-35; and encouraged by predictions and promises of most extensive blessings, spiritual and temporal, to the nation of Israel and to the Israel of God, 36-44.

That there will be blood sacrifices in the future millennial Temple service is set forth in such detail in Scripture that it is not possible to deny their literality. Apparently such sacrifices look back upon the finished work of Christ, as they once looked forward, just as the present ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper look back upon the cleansing of the blood and the death of Christ in history on our behalf. To suggest these references are all to be spiritualized, or to attempt to include them all under the figure of hypocatastasis (ℐ103, Ge +3:13), as suggested by Peters

(Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, Prop. 172, Ob. 7, pp. 89, 90, and note 1, p. 90), is to misread the nature and misapply the purpose of the rhetorical figures of speech found in Scripture. Such a misreading is a double-edged sword, which can be unleashed to undo every other prophetic declaration to prove that it cannot be literally understood, the very opposite of what Peters masterfully argues everywhere else (contrast, e.g., the discussion of the deliverance of the animal kingdom, or lower creation, vol. 2, Prop. 146, Ob. 3, pp. 483-488, and note 4, p. 487) in his most excellent study. It is this aspect of the Davidic covenant that constitutes it the "sure mercies of David." Many interpreters have failed to understand that while every covenant has conditions set upon it, yet this covenant is unconditional as to its ultimate fulfillment, though conditional with respect to any one individual, other than David himself. So in the New Testament, many promises which are unconditional to the body of believers, the elect, or the church as a whole, may yet be conditional with respect to individual believers within that body (Ep 4:30, note that "ye" is plural, thus postulated of the elect as a whole, not of every individual separately, for an occasional individual believer may become an unbeliever through moral [1 C +*6:9, 10. He +*10:26] or doctrinal [1 C +*15:2. 2 J 8-11] apostasy, and so forfeit the benefit promised [He 10:39]: Lk +*8:13. 1 C +*15:2. He +*3:12-14. 2 P +*1:10. *2:20, 21). 2 S √7:10-16. Ps 89:3, 4, 20-37. +*132:11. Is +√55:3. He=6:17, 18. that he. From the destruction of Jerusalem to the present time, a period of nearly eighteen hundred years, the Jews have had neither a king nor any form of government whatever; nor has the office of high priest, or priest of any kind offering sacrifice, been exercised among them during the same period. Hence this must be understood of the spiritual David, Jesus Christ, both the King and High Priest of his church, "the Israel of God" (Ga 6:16), in whom the covenant of royalty with David and his seed, and that of priesthood with Aaron and his seed, have received their full accomplishment; and all the sacrifices of that dispensation were superseded by his "one oblation of himself," the efficacy of which remains for ever. Scott suggests, "Probably, a more literal accomplishment will hereafter be witnessed: but I do not presume to state particularly the events which may be expected." Taking into account the Parallel Passages (ver. 20, 25, 26. Je 31:35-37. Is +*54:9, 10) which so strongly affirm the literal fulfillment of these covenant promises to natural Israel, and understanding their relationship to the Abrahamic Covenant, which has never been literally fulfilled (Je +7:7. Is +26:15. Ac +*7:5. He *11:13, 39), we must understand the fulfillment to be yet future, during the millennium, when the Jews are literally and fully restored to their land, Abraham (Mt +*8:11) and other patriarchs resurrected to experience the fulfillment of the covenanted kingdom in that age. Thus a spiritual fulfillment to the Church intimated in the note above must not be permitted to displace, abrogate, or supersede the covenanted fulfillment to literal restored Israel. JEREMIAH 34

The prophet is sent to assure Zedekiah, that the city will certainly be taken and burned; and that he will be carried to Babylon, and there die in peace, 1-7. The princes and people, having covenanted to set free their enslaved brethren, again reduce them to bondage, 8-11. God by the prophet proclaims liberty to the sword, pestilence, and famine; and predicts the return and success of the Chaldeans, 12-22.

Jonadab, a man of fervent zeal for the pure worship of God, and who lived about three hundred years before this time (2 K 10:15, 16, etc.), had probably practiced these rules himself; and having trained up his children to habits of abstemiousness, he enjoined them and their posterity to adhere to them. In these regulations he seems to have had no religious, but merely a prudential view, as is intimated in the reason annexed to them, "that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers." And this would be the natural consequence of observing these rules; for their temperate mode of living would very much contribute to preserve health and prolong life; and they would avoid giving umbrage, or exciting the jealousy or envy of the Jews, who might have been provoked, by their engaging and succeeding in the principal business in which they themselves were engaged, agriculture and vinedressing, to expel them their country; by which they would have been deprived of the religious advantages they enjoyed. JEREMIAH 36

JEREMIAH, at God's command, causes Baruch to write in a roll all his threatening prophecies, 1-7. Baruch reads the roll publicly; and afterwards to the princes, who counsel him and Jeremiah to hide themselves, 8-19. Jehudi reads it before Jehoiakim, who cuts it in pieces, and casts it into the fire, contrary to the request of the princes; and orders Jeremiah and Baruch to be apprehended: "but the Lord hid them," 20-26. Jeremiah is directed to again write the same things, with "many like words," and a dreadful sentence against the king; which he does by the hand of Baruch, 27-32.

Immediately after this Nebuchadnezzar invaded Judea; and, having besieged Jerusalem, made himself master of it, on the 18th of the ninth month Cisleu, corresponding to our November. So the Alexandrian copy of the LXX. has en melani, and Vulgate atramento, "with ink." Perhaps the princes supposed that Baruch had written his roll from memory; and that it was rather to be considered as his composition, than the substance of Jeremiah's prophecies; and they might ask this apparently frivolous question in order to allay the alarms excited by considering it as the word of God. But Baruch, with great simplicity, so answered their question, as to show that he only acted as Jeremiah's amanuensis, and wrote verbatim what he had dictated.

On the contrary, in the height of summer the nights are as cold as at Paris in the month of March. It is for this reason that in Persia and Turkey they always make use of furred habits in the country, such only being sufficient to resist the cold of the nights. I have travelled in Arabia, and in Mesopotamia (the theater of the adventures of Jacob), both in winter and in summer, and have found the truth of what the Patriarch said, 'That he was scorched with the heat in the day, and stiffened with cold in the night' (Ge 31:40). This contrariety in the qualities of the air in twenty-four hours is extremely great in some places, and not conceivable by those that have not felt it; one would imagine that he had passed in a moment from the violent heats of summer to the depth of winter. Thus it hath pleased God to temper the heat of the sun by the coldness of the night, without which the greatest part of the East would be barren, and a desert." Ge 31:40.

The Chaldeans having left the siege of Jerusalem to meet the Egyptians, Zedekiah sends to desire Jeremiah's prayers; who predicts the certain return and victory of the Chaldeans, 1-10. He is taken up as a deserter, beaten, and put in prison, 11-15. Being privately consulted by Zedekiah, he confirms his former prediction, expostulates with the king, and prevails for some indulgence, 16-21.

JEREMIAH, being accused of disheartening the people by his prophecies, is cast into the miry dungeon of Malchia, 1-6. He is taken out at the suit of Ebed-melech, an Ethiopian, and by him, 7-13. In a private conference, he counsels Zedekiah to save himself and the city, by surrendering, 14-23. Zedekiah requiring him, he conceals what had been discussed in the conference from the princes; and remains in the court of the prison, till the taking of the city, 24-28.

This dungeon, which seems to have belonged to one of Zedekiah's sons, appears to have been a most dreadful place; the horrors of which were probably augmented by the cruelty of the jailor. "The eastern people," observes Sir J. Chardin (cited in Harmer, ch. ix. Ob. 84), "have not different prisons for the different classes of criminals; the judges do not trouble themselves about where the prisoners are confined, or how they are treated, considering it merely as a place of safety; and all that they require of the jailor is, that the prisoner be forthcoming when called for. As to the rest, he is master to do as he pleases; to treat him well or ill; to put him in irons or not; to shut him up close, or hold him in easier restraint; to admit people to him, or to suffer nobody to see him. If the jailor and his servants have large fees, let the person be the greatest rascal in the world, he shall be lodged in the jailor's own apartment, and the best part of it; and on the contrary, if those that have imprisoned a man give the jailor greater presents, or that he has a greater regard for them, he will treat the prisoner with the greatest inhumanity." This adds a double energy to those passages which speak of "the sighing of the prisoner," and to Jeremiah's supplicating that he might not be remanded to the dungeon of Jonathan (ver. 26. JEREMIAH 39

Jerusalem is taken, and burnt; Zedekiah is made prisoner, his sons slain, his eyes put out, and himself carried in chains to Babylon, with the remnant of the Jews; a few poor people excepted, 1-10. Jeremiah is kindly used, by orders from Nebuchadnezzar, 11-14. A message from God to Ebed-melech, assuring him of protection, 15-18.

JEREMIAH, being dismissed by the Chaldeans, returns to Gedaliah, 1-8. The fugitive Jews resort to Gedaliah, who encourages them to cultivate the land, 7-12. Johanan, informing Gedaliah that Ishmael designed to slay him, and proposing to kill Ishmael, is not believed, 13-16.

1. The word. This, and the four following chapters, record the events which occurred in Judea from the taking of Jerusalem to the retreat of the remnant of the people to Egypt; and contain several prophecies of Jeremiah concerning them there; which were "the word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord." It appears that Jeremiah, after being freed from prison, continued among the Jews, till he was bound, with others of them, and carried to Ramah; where he was set at liberty in the manner related. after. Je 39:11-14. Ramah. Je 31:15. 6. Then. It has been doubted whether Jeremiah acted prudently in this decision, as the event seems to indicate the contrary, and as it was the evident meaning of all his predictions that the Jews should not prosper in their own country till the expiration of seventy years. But he was evidently influenced by the most unbounded love to his country, for whose welfare he had watched, prayed, and lived; and he now chose rather to share her adversities, her sorrows, her wants, her afflictions, and her disgrace, than to be the companion of princes, and to sit at the table of kings. His patriotism was as unbounded as it was sincere: he only ceased to live for his country when he ceased to breathe. Je 39:14. Mizpah. Je 41:5-9. Jsh 15:38. 18:26. 13. Johanan. Johanan and his companions seem to have acted honestly in this affair. They had received intelligence of designs formed against Gedaliah's life, and consequently against the whole new settlement. Ishmael, being a branch of David's family, was probably displeased that another was preferred above him; and the king of the Ammonites, out of hatred to the Jews, employed him to slay Gedaliah. But Gedaliah, conscious of his own integrity and benevolence, took the portrait of others from his own mind; and therefore believed evil of no man, because he felt none towards any in his own breast. He may be reproached for being too credulous and confiding; but this only serves to show the greatness of his soul; for a little mind is always suspicious, and ready to believe the worst of every person and thing. See on ver. 6-8.

Johanan and his company desire Jeremiah to inquire of God for them, and promise implicit obedience, 1-6. He charges them with hypocrisy, in asking counsel which they did not mean to follow, 19-22.

In order to induce him to favor them, they applied to him with one consent, in the most respectful and plausible manner: they used language to prepossess him with a favorable opinion of them, and to move his compassion; and, in words expressing great humility, they entreated his prayers in their behalf, and that he would inquire of the Lord what he would have them to do. The prophet readily acquiesced; and doubted not but that he should receive an answer from God, which he would unreservedly declare to them; and they called the Lord to witness that they would implicitly follow his directions. I will pray. Ex *8:29. 1 S √12:23. JEREMIAH 44

God, by his prophet, expostulates with the Jews in Egypt, for persisting in idolatry, after all that they had heard, suffered, and witnessed, 1-10. He denounces their destruction, 11-14. The Jews impiously avow their purpose of cleaving to their idols, and ascribe their miseries to the neglect of them, particularly the "queen of heaven," 15-19. The prophet shows the falsehood of their plea; and, in the name of God, predicts their utter ruin, 20-28; and, for a sign, that also of the king of Egypt, 29, 30.

Forster (in Michaelis Spicileg. Geog. Heb. Ex. P. ii.) says, that there is now a place situated in the vicinity of Pelusium called Safnas, which may be a vistige of the ancient name. It appears to have been the very first town in Egypt, in the road from Palestine, that afforded tolerable accommodation for the fugitives. It was at this place that, according to Jerome and several of the ancients, tradition says the faithful Jeremiah was stoned to death by these rebellious wretches, for whose welfare he had watched, prayed, and suffered every kind of indignity and hardship. 14. So. It is evident from ver. 28, that some Jews were to escape the general destruction in Egypt, and to return into their own country, though but a few; and the same thing is implied in the latter clause of this verse. But the former part excludes from the number of those who should escape every individual of those who are properly termed "the remnant of Judah," those who had willingly and rebelliously "set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to dwell there," on a presumption that they knew better than God how to consult their own restoration. The few, then, who were destined to escape, were to be such as had come into the land of Egypt with Johanan by compulsion, or had previously fled thither, or in some other less offensive manner, and chanced to be there when the storm burst upon them. which are. So the Orphic hymn addressed to the Moon begins, "Kluthi thea basileia," Hear, goddess Queen. And "Ho Xaire, anassa, thea," All hail, Queen, goddess. In Epiphanius, we find some women of Arabia, towards the end of the fourth century, had set up another queen of heaven, the Virgin Mary, too well known since under that name and character, whom they likewise worshipped as a goddess, by holding stated assemblies every year to her honor, and by offering a cake of bread in her name; whence these heretics were called Collyridians, from the Greek kolluris, a cake. Pliny, l. v. c. 9). It was in the neighborhood of Memphis that the famous pyramids were erected, whose grandeur and beauty still astonish the modern traveler: they are about twenty in number; the largest of which is 481 feet perpendicular height, and the area of its basis is on 480,249 square feet, or something more than eleven acres, being exactly the size of Lincoln's Inn Fields in London. The immense ruins between the northern and southern pyramids, and about fourteen miles from Cairo, still called Memf, or Menf, or Menouf, seem to mark the site of this city (See Maillet, p. 265. Xerxes, after his return from his unsuccessful expedition into Greece, partly out of religious zeal, being a professed enemy to image worship, and partly to reimburse himself after his immense expenses, seized the sacred treasures, and plundered or destroyed the temples and idols of Babylon, thereby accomplishing the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah (Is 21:9. 46:1. Je 50:2. 51:44, 47, 52). What God declares, "I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth that which he has swallowed," was also literally fulfilled, when the vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought from Jerusalem and placed in the temple of the temple of Bel, Da 1:2, were restored by order of Cyrus, Ezr 1:7, and again carried to Jerusalem (Bp. Newton, Dis. X).

We have already adverted to the completion of the prophecies respecting the final destruction of Babylon (on Is 13:19n), and shall only add a few more observations, in order to show more clearly the full accomplishment of some of these predictions. Strabo says (l. xvi.) that in his time (about the Christian era) a great part of it was a desert. Jerome says that in his time (cir. A.D. 340) it was quite in ruins, the walls merely serving for an inclosure for wild beasts, for the hunting of the kings of Parthia: and modern travelers universally concur in describing it in a state of utter desolation, and the habitation of wild beasts and noxious reptiles (See Benjamin of Tudela, Itin. p. 76. Texeira, c. 5. Rauwolff, P. ii. c. 6. Della Valle, P. ii. ep. 17. Tavernier, vol ii. b. ii. c. 5. Rich's Two Memoirs on the ruins of Babylon; and Sir R. K. Porter's Travels, vol. ii., pp. 308-400).

Further copious and varied predictions of terrible judgments on Babylon, for her enormous wickedness, 1-58. Jeremiah delivers the book of this prophecy to Seraiah, who is ordered to take this prophecy to Babylon, and to read it there; and then to sink the book in the Euphrates; as a sign that Babylon should thus fall, and rise no more, 59-64.

Xenophon, l. vii). Sir H. Rawlinson has observed that the name of the moon-god, which was identical, or nearly so, with that of the city of Abraham, Ur (or Hur), "might have been read in one of the ancient dialects of Babylon as Shishaki," and that consequently "a possible explanation is thus obtained of the Sheshach of Scripture" (Rawlinson's Herodotus, vol. i. p. 616). Sheshach may stand for Ur, Ur itself, the old capital, being taken (as Babel, the new capital, was constantly) to represent the country. (George Rawlinson in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, vol. iv. p. 2991.) Je 25:26n. Da 5:1-3. the praise. Je 49:25. 50:23. Is 13:19. *14:4. JEREMIAH 52

Zedekiah's wicked reign, and rebellion against the king of Babylon, 1-3. Jerusalem is taken; Zedekiah made prisoner; his sons and nobles are slain; his eyes are put out, and he is carried in chains to Babylon, 4-11. The temple and city are burnt, the sacred treasures, etc. are, with the people, carried to Babylon, 12-23. The nobles are slain at Riblah, 24-27. The numbers, at different times carried captive, 28-30. Evil-merodach shows kindness to Jehoiachin, 31-34.

She appeals to all spectators: "See if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow." This might perhaps be truly said of Jerusalem's griefs; but we are apt to apply it too sensibly to ourselves when we are in trouble and more than there is cause for. Because we feel most from our own burden, and cannot be persuaded to reconcile ourselves to it, we are ready to cry out, Surely never was sorrow like unto our sorrow; whereas, if our troubles were to be thrown into a common stock with those of others, and then an equal dividend made, share and share alike, rather than stand to that we should each of us say, "Pray, give me my own again" (Matthew Henry). LAMENTATIONS 2

The prophet describes, and mourns over, the desolations of Jerusalem and the miseries of the Jews, as brought on them by the just indignation of God, 1-12. He laments over the unequalled sufferings of the people, who, by hearkening to false prophets, are exposed to the cruel insults of their enemies; and he calls on the sufferers to join with him in tears and prayers, 13-19. Zion refers her doleful case to the compassionate consideration of God, 20-22.

LAMENTATIONS 3

The prophet bitterly bewails his complicated sufferings, 1-20. He acknowledges the mercy and truth of God, and the benefit of afflictions, to be a proper ground of patient hope, 21-36. He exhorts his people to submit to the sovereignty of God, and humbly to turn unto him, 37-41. He mingles complaints with confessions of sin, 42-54. He appeals to God against his enemies, and beseeches him to execute judgment upon them, 55-66.

LAMENTATIONS 4

The prophet deplores the ruin of the city and temple; and the extreme misery of the people, especially by famine, 1-12. He ascribes these calamities to the sins of the prophets and priests, and shows how their allies disappointed them, and their enemies pursued them, 13-20. He predicts the termination of Zion's calamities, and judgments upon insulting Edom, 21, 22.

The Hebrew kerach, which generally denotes ice, doubtless here signifies crystal (krustallos, from kruos, cold, ice, and stellomai, to concrete), as it is rendered by the LXX. and Vulgate. It is a very large class of silicious minerals, hard, pellucid, naturally colorless, of regularly angular figures, and of simple plates; not flexible, nor elastic, but giving fire with steel; not fermenting by acid menstrua, but calcinable in a strong fire. There are three orders of pure crystal: the first is perfect columnar crystals, with double pyramids, of eighteen planes, in an hexangular pyramid at each end; the second is that of perfect crystals without a column, of twelve or sixteen planes, in two hexangular pyramids; and the third is that of imperfect crystals, with single pyramids, of ten or twelve planes, in an hexangular or pentangular column. Terrible crystal seems to denote that which was well cut and polished, vividly refracting the rays of light.

EZEKIEL, being made to eat the roll, finds it very sweet, 1-3. God encourages him for the works assigned him, and warns him to be faithful, 4-11. He is carried by the Spirit, in great bitterness, to the captive Jews, and remains with them seven days, 12-15. He is shown his duty and responsibility as a watchman to Israel, 16-21. He is ordered to shut himself up; and is further instructed concerning the hardships which awaited him, and the shutting and opening of his mouth, 22-27.

EZEKIEL 4

The prophet is directed to portray Jerusalem on a tile; and by an iron pan, and by lying on his side before it for a number of days, to represent the siege and taking of that city, 1-8; and to represent the famine, to which the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the captives, would be reduced, by his own coarse, scanty, and ill-dressed diet during those days, 9-17.

Perhaps, however, it may here denote a flat tile, like a Roman brick, which were commonly used for tablets, as we learn from Pliny, Hist. Nat. l. vii. c. 57. even. Je 6:6. 32:31. Am 3:2.

The prophet is ordered to shave off his hair; and to divide, burn, cut, and scatter it, as an emblem of the dealings of God with the Jews, 1-4. The sign applied to Jerusalem and its inhabitants: their enormous crimes exposed, and dreadful judgments denounced, 5-17.

The prophet is, in vision, brought to Jerusalem and to the temple, 1-4. He sees "the image of jealousy" by the gate of the altar; the elders of Israel worshipping base idols in a secret chamber of the temple; women weeping for Tammuz; and men with their backs to the temple, worshipping the sun, 5-16. The Lord appeals to him, whether such abominations do not deserve the severest punishment, 17, 18.

When rubbed it is highly endowed with electricity; a name which the moderns have formed from its Greek name elektron. But, as amber becomes dim as soon as it feels the fire, and is speedily consumed, it is probable that the original chasmal, which Bochart derives from the Chaldee nechash, copper, and melala, gold, was a mixed metal, similar to that which the Greeks called elektron, electrum, as the LXX. and Vulgate render, from its resemblance to amber in color.

The destroyers of Jerusalem are called forth; the visible glory removes to the threshold of the temple; and one is appointed to set a mark on those who mourned over the prevailing abominations, 1-4. The destroyers, by God's command, slay the rest, beginning at the sanctuary, 5-7. God answers the prophet's intercession by showing the people's enormous wickedness, 8-10. The person, employed to mark the remnant, reports that he has executed his commission, 11.

It is now called by the moderns the topaz; it is a very beautiful and valuable gem in its pure and perfect state, though very rarely found so; and the finer pieces of it are in hardness second only to the diamond. The Vulgate, however, in Ezk 1:16, renders, quasi visio maris, "as the appearance of the seas," i.e. azure; and Dr. Geddes (on Ex 28:10) says, that, with Abarbanel, he believes the beryl to be intended. It is a pellucid gem, called by our lapidaries aqua marina, of a sea or bluish green color, found in the East Indies and about the gold mines of Peru. The genuine beryl never receives any other mixture of color; and in its perfect state approaches to the hardness of the garnet.

In Ezk 1:10, instead of "the face of a cherub," it is "the face of an ox:" hence a cherub was in the likeness of an ox, at least as to its head. The extraordinary shape of these angelic beings, which appeared to the prophet in vision, is manifestly symbolical; for it is not to be supposed that these heavenly beings are really thus formed. The four faces, wings, and arms of a man, denote the sublime qualities of these immediate ministers of the Deity; qualities entirely essential to fill up the extent of their duty. The face of a man denotes their intelligence; of a lion, their intrepid courage; of an ox, their patience and perseverance in labor; and of an eagle, their great penetration, their sublime sight into heavenly things, and their readiness to rise up into all that is great and divine. The wings being stretched out, signifies their readiness and rapidity in obeying the commands of their Master; the wings bent down, denotes their profound respect before the Lord of the universe; and the man's arms under the wings, show that zeal produces application and labor (See a Dissertation by the Continuator of Saurin's Historical Discourses).

EZEKIEL is ordered, by removing his goods, and breaking through the wall of his house, to give the people a sign of the taking of Jerusalem, of Zedekiah's flight, and of the captivity of the Jews, 1-16; by eating and drinking with trembling and anxiety, to prefigure the famine, and the consternation of the Jews during the siege, 17-20; and to declare that this ruin was near at hand; as a rebuke to those who profanely spake of it as distant, 21-28.

EZEKIEL 13

EZEKIEL is ordered to prophesy against the false prophets, 1-9; and to expose their folly and wickedness, and the fatal effects of their delusions, to others and themselves, under the emblem of a wall daubed with untempered mortar, and beaten down by a violent storm, 10-16; and against the prophetesses, who, by their signs and lying prognostications, encouraged the wicked in sin, and discouraged the righteous: and to predict their disgrace and ruin, 17-23.

EZEKIEL 14

The elders, who inquired of God, while their hearts were set on idols, are sharply reproved, and warned, 1-5. A call to repentance, with threatenings of temporal and spiritual judgments on many, in order to the reformation of Israel, 6-11. No righteousness of a few individuals would avert the judgments of famine, noisome beasts, sword, or pestilence, from a guilty land; much less these four sore judgments from Jerusalem, 12-21. A promise that a remnant should be preserved, for the instruction and comfort of the captives, 22, 23.

William Whitla, in his Introduction to Sir Isaac Newton's Daniel and the Apocalypse remarks that "The date and genuineness of the book of Ezekiel has not been seriously disputed. He mentions Daniel in chapter 14:14 and following verses, where he is bracketed between two other great Biblical worthies—Noah, Daniel and Job—singled out for their righteousness. And again, in chapter 28:3, when censuring the vanity and presumption of the Prince of Tyre, he ironically says, "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee." Note that Daniel is here singled out for his wisdom and his faculty of revealing secrets. It strikes me that had the prophet only wanted a representative of wisdom he would have chosen Solomon; but no other personality in Biblical history so fitly represents the double qualification of deep knowledge and the power of finding out the most profound or mysterious truths as does Daniel. Thus we have absolutely incontestable testimony that there existed before or during the lifetime of Ezekiel somewhere in Israel a man endowed with these two gifts which are so strikingly manifested in the book whose veracity is challenged, and the name of this person was Daniel. The date of the book of Ezekiel is between 500 and 600 B.C." (p. 75). Mt ✓24:15. Job. Jb *1:5, 8. 42:8, 9. Je +*7:16. 11:14. *14:11, 12. ✓15:1. deliver. ver. 20. EZEKIEL 18

God reproves the Jews for using the proverb of sour grapes, 1-4. He shows his dealings with a righteous man, 5-9; with the wicked son of a righteous father, 10-13; and with the righteous son of a wicked father, 14-18. He will deal with each individual according to his character, 19, 20. The wicked, if he repent, shall live, 21-23; and the righteous, if he apostatize, shall die, 24. He shows the equity of his dealings, and the iniquity of the Jews, 25-29. He earnestly exhorts them to repent, in the prospect of being judged according to their ways, 30-32.

The question here is not whether "soul" designates that immortal part of man's being which consciously outlasts the physical body (Ezk +*18:20n; Ec +*3:19n; +*12:7), is simply another designation for "person," or whether "soul" has reference merely to the physical body. But these issues, while not settled here, are clearly settled elsewhere, and consulting the references will lead to their solution. The immediate question before the prophet is not whether this death is spiritual or physical, whether it is simply a statement that disobedience to the Mosaic law requires capital punishment, but rather whether the children are punished for the sins of their fathers, the mistaken point of the proverb he is disputing. He gives a new proverb to replace the old one: the soul that sinneth, it itself will die. That is, individuals will receive the punishment due for their own sin. Of course it may be legitimately argued that since accounts are not equitably balanced in this life, this necessitates reward and punishment in a future life, in order for God's ways to be "equal" (Ezk 18:25). Therefore the "death" spoken of here is not annihilation, unconsciousness, or extinction, but spiritual death. All persons presently experience physical death: if death were merely a painless extinction, all sinners would suffer precisely the same lack of punishment, and God's ways would not be equal. Rather, Scripture teaches future punishment, punishment which varies in severity according to the degree of responsibility of the individual (See on Lk +*12:48), punishment which is conscious (Lk +16:24; Re 19:20; 20:10) and eternal (Mt +25:46). 20. the soul. Heb. nephesh, Ge +⁄12:5. ⁄171Q1, Ge +12:5. Scripture clearly and emphatically teaches that the "soul" is eternal and immortal, for (1) Christ by his resurrection brought immortality to light, 2 T +*1:10. (2) Christ taught the resurrection of both the righteous and unrighteous, Jn +*5:29. (3) Christ taught that those who had died long before were still alive, Mt +⁄22:32. Moses and Elijah talked with Christ at the Transfiguration, Mt 17:3. (4) Christ taught that the soul cannot be killed, Mt +*10:28, though the body can, thus proving that they are different, as elsewhere taught in Scripture, Jb +*14:22. (5) Christ taught that the dead are conscious, can suffer torment, and can communicate, Lk 16:23, 24, as intimated elsewhere in Scripture, Le 18:27; Dt +*18:10, 11; 1 S 28:7-20; Is 14:9, 11, 16; He 12:23; Re 6:9, 10. (6) At death believers go immediately to be with Christ, 2 C +*5:8; Ph +*3:21; at death the spirit goes immediately to God, Ec +*3:21; +*12:7; Lk +*23:46; Ac 7:59, 60. (7) Eternal life and eternal punishment require the immortality or eternal nature of the soul, Ezk +*18:4n; Mt +*25:46. (8) Since Christ by his death and resurrection abolished death (2 T 1:10), all will be resurrected: some to eternal bliss, and some to eternal shame and everlasting contempt, but both classes will live forever (Da +*12:2): the less undesirable option of annihilation is not offered in Scripture. that sinneth. ver. +*4n, 13. EZEKIEL 20

God refuseth to be inquired of by certain elders of Israel, 1-3. He recapitulates his dealings with the people; and their rebellions in Egypt, 4-9; in the wilderness, 10-26; and in Canaan, 27-29; as imitated by that generation, 30-32. While the rebels will be rigorously punished, a chosen remnant shall be gathered into their own land, as accepted worshippers and humble penitents, 33-44. The destruction of Jerusalem is foretold by a parable of a forest, 45-49.

25. I gave. ✓121I2, Ge +2:17. ✓✓108A4, Ge +31:7. The simple meaning of this place is, that when the Israelites had rebelled against God, despised his statutes, and polluted his sabbaths,—in effect cast him off, and given themselves up wholly to their idols,—then He, in a just judgment for their disobedience, abandoned them, "gave them up to a reprobate mind" (Ro 1:28), and suffered them to walk after the idolatrous, cruel, and impious customs and ordinances of the heathen; by which they were ripened for the destruction which he intended to bring upon them, that they might learn to know God by his judgments, seeing they had despised his mercies. In the same sense God is said judicially to "send a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie," to those who "received not the love of the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness" (2 Th ✓2:10, 11). Here, the Hebrew idiom means God suffered others to give them statutes in their captivity which were not good. The verb "give" has this sense in Ge 31:7. Jg 15:1. 1 S 24:7. 2 S 21:10. It sometimes means "permission," as in Ezk 14:9. Ex 4:21. 5:22. Ps 16:10. Je 4:10. The same idiom occurs in the New Testament (Mt 6:13. 11:25. 13:11. Ro 9:18. 11:7, 8. 2 Th 2:11). ver. 26, 39. 36. Like as. This comparison with the wilderness experience under Moses is thought to imply a like period of time, forty years, during which the rebels are purged, during the personal presence of Jesus Christ in the wilderness with this portion of Israel before his open victorious manifestation in power and glory of the public stage of the Second Advent when he comes with all his saints (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 86). Even E. W. Bullinger supposes that these events will take longer than the seven years of Daniel's final or seventieth week, suggesting that the "Suntelia" is a longer period, which ends with Daniel's last week, the "Telos" (Apocalypse, p. 348; see also pp. 53, 88, 89, 248, 249, 558, 559). Just as John the Baptist held the office of Elijah at the first advent, and introduced Jesus as the Lamb of God, so at the second advent Elijah will be upon the earth (Is 40:3. Ml 4:5, 6), preparing the way of the Lord, for a period of time before the open manifestation, and like the first advent, Jesus will be upon the earth for a period of time before the public manifestation. Some writers suppose that the forty years of Israel in the wilderness is to be combined with the thirty years Christ was upon earth before commencing his public ministry to indicate a period of seventy years or more, with which idea Peters concurs (Vol. 2, p. *108, *315, 318, *336, *338. Vol. 3, p. 18), as necessary to allow time for the necessary events to transpire. Peters alludes to events which "follow the Advent before the overthrow of Antichrist, such as the development of the confederation, the return of a portion of the Jews to Palestine, the doom of the harlot" (Vol. 2, p. 315); he also refers to the "concealed, hidden Coming for specific purposes (viz., to raise, translate, and glorify His saints, to inaugurate the preliminaries of his Kingdom: Da 2:44. Lk 17:20, etc.) which takes place before the events predicted as pertaining to His visible manifestation" (Vol. 2, p. 319). Just as Sinai was the site of the original organization of Israel's theocracy and the giving of the law, etc., so it is possible, in view of the many hints given in Scripture, that this wilderness will be the location of such activity again (Dt +*33:2).
