JOHN 13

Jesus washes the feet of his disciples and requires them to imitate his example of humility and love, 1-

17. He declares that one of them will betray him and points out Judas as the traitor to John by a token, 18-26. Satan enters into Judas, who leaves the company, 27-30. Jesus speaks of his glorification as at hand and enjoins his disciples to love one another, 31-35. He forewarns Peter, who avows his readiness to die with him, that before the cock crows he will thrice deny him, 36-38.

The Mosaic law commanded men to "love their neighbor as themselves;" this implied that reciprocal and social love of believers of which our Lord spake: but this was now to be explained with new clearness, enforced by new motives and obligations, illustrated by a new example, obeyed in a new manner, and carried to a new extent. They were required to love each other for his sake and in imitation of him, "even as I have loved you," and be ready on all occasions to lay down their lives for each other. By this the primitive Christians were particularly known among the Gentiles: "See, said they, how they love one another; and are ready to lay down their lives for each other" (Tertulian, in Apol.). JOHN 14

Jesus encourages his disciples to believe in God and in him and promises them mansions in heaven, 1-3. He shows that he is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, 5, 6; and that he is one with the Father, 7-11. He promises them power to do even greater works than he had done and that he will grant all the prayers offered in his name, 12-14. He requires obedience as the proof of their love and promises to give them the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, and much security and comfort, in communion with the Father and with him, as coming and making their abode with those that love him, 15-26. He leaves his peace with them, and shows that his return to his Father was a proper ground for their rejoicing, 27-29, he informs them of his approaching conflict with the prince of this world in obedience to the Father, 30, 31.

Two of the words are exalted to the place of emphatic adjectives, which are thus raised to equal importance with the subject itself. Here, the sense is "I am the true and living way." Of course, Christ is the "truth" as He is also the "life," but this is not what is stated in this verse. Here, only one subject is in question: "the way"; and the other two nouns are used to define its true nature and character (B673). JOHN 15

Jesus, by the parable of himself as the true vine and his disciples as the branches, shows the necessity of union and communion with him in order to fruitfulness; illustrates the conduct of God towards his church; and exhorts his disciples to abide in him, 1-8. He shows the greatness of his love to them, 9-15; and that he has chosen them, that they may bring forth fruit which may remain, 16. He commands them to love one another and warns them to expect hatred and persecution from the world, which hates both him and his father, 17-25. He promises the Comforter, to confirm the testimony which they should bear to him, 26, 27.

Jesus again warns his disciples to expect persecution, 1-3. He states that he foretells these things because he is about to leave them, kindly noticing their sorrow and assuring them that this will be expedient for them, as he will send the Comforter, 4-7. He explains the nature and effects of the Spirit's influences, 8-15. He intimates his own death, resurrection, and ascension, with assurances that their sorrow should soon be turned into joy and that their prayers in his name should be accepted, 16-28. They profess their faith in him: he foretells that they will desert him in his extremity of suffering yet promises them his peace amidst their tribulation in the world, 29-33.

For other instances of this figure see Jn 21:12. 2 C 5:19. Re 17:16. The use of ekeinos, the masculine personal pronoun, surely marks the personality of the Holy Spirit. The fact that Greek employs grammatical gender, unlike English, which employs natural gender, all the more emphatically points to the personality of the Holy Spirit, since in Greek "spirit" or pneuma is neuter, and most naturally would require "it." John's departure from grammatical gender to indicate natural gender emphasizes the personality of the Holy Spirit. See Jn 14:26. 15:26. 16:8, 13, 14, where this phenomenon occurs. Some MSS. and authorities (Tischendorf's 8th edition of his Greek N.T.) read os, "who is the earnest of our inheritance" at Ep 1:14, in reference to the Holy Spirit of promise, ver. 13. Compare Ro 8:16, 26, where "the Spirit itself" reflects grammatical gender, and does not deny the personality of the Holy Spirit. See Ro 8:27, "he maketh intercession." Spirit. Jn 3:32. 7:16-18. 8:38. 12:49. not speak of himself. The Holy Spirit works to glorify Christ (ver. 14), he does not draw attention to himself. Just as any reading of Old Testament Scripture which fails to find Christ "in all the Scriptures" (Lk 24:27n, 44) is defective, so any work or ministry alleged to be that of the Holy Spirit, which in balance draws more attention to him or gives more emphasis to him or his manifestations and gifts than to Christ, is similarly defective. Regularly studying Scripture by means of well-chosen cross references will assist the student of the Bible to maintain the necessary and proper biblical balance in all things (Jn +*5:39. Is +*8:20n. *43:10n. Mk 7:9. Ac +*17:11. √20:27, 32. Ph 1:9, 10. Col 1:10. 2 T +*1:7. √3:16, 17. 2 P +*1:20n). The study of Scripture in this manner will soon reveal to earnest students any imbalance or wrong perception of biblical truth on their part, if they are willing to take the Bible as the sole authority for faith and practice (Ps √119:18. Is +*8:20n). This method of Bible study is "self correcting" (2 T 2:15. +*3:16), the surest corrective for the human tendency to fall into error or go off on tangents (Ga 1:6. Ep 4:14. Col 1:23. 2:7. 1 T 4:16). Note that neither Jesus nor the Holy Spirit presume to speak on their own, but speak as directed by God the Father. In this, therefore, they are both subordinate to the Father (Jn 6:38n), and the Holy Spirit is subordinate to the Son. Jn +7:17. but. Jn 5:19. he will show. Jn 15:15. Jl +*2:28. 14. He. ſ96G2, Ge +2:18. While in some texts it could be argued that the use of the masculine personal pronoun ekeinos is grammatically justified because parakleetos (Paraclete, Comforter) may be considered as the antecedent, this is not the case here or in ver. 13. "Indeed O Paraklatos is as much personal, as ekeinos. In fact all the language is manifestly personal: 'He,' 'the Comforter,' 'the Spirit of truth,' 'is sent,' 'comes,' 'bears witness,' etc. as in other places he is said to hear, speak, command, forbid, etc." (Thomas Scott). Some who would attempt to deny the validity of this evidence to prove the personality of the Holy Spirit are forced to use the same class of evidence when they are pressed to prove the personality of Satan, or of God himself, thus exposing the fatal flaw of inconsistency in their handling of the Scriptural evidence (2 C √4:2) pertaining to the personality of the Holy Spirit. JOHN 17

Jesus prays the Father to glorify him, that he may glorify the Father, and give eternal life, which is found in knowing the Father and the Son, to his disciples, 1-5; to preserve the apostles in unity of faith and love after his ascension, 6-12; and from the world and all evil, 13-16; and to sanctify them by the truth, 17-19. He intercedes for them and all who should believe in him through their word that they might be united in love, admitted to the most intimate communion with the Father and the Son, and be brought to share his glory in heaven, 20-26.

JOHN 18

Jesus retires to a garden, and Judas leads a company thither to apprehend him, 1-3. At the word of Jesus, the officers, soldiers, and company fall to the ground, 4-6. Jesus, yielding up himself, requires that his disciples be dismissed, 7-9. Peter cuts off Malchus's ear and Jesus reproves him, 10, 11. Jesus is bound, led away to Annas, and then to Caiaphas, 12-14. Peter is admitted into the palace and then denies Christ, 15-18. Jesus is examined by the high priest and struck by an officer, 19-24. Peter again twice denies him, 25-27. Jesus is brought before Pilate and declares that his "kingdom is not of this world," 28-37. Pilate testifies to his innocence and offers to release him; but the Jews prefer Barabbas the robber, 38-40.

JOHN 19

Jesus is scourged, crowned with thorns, and mocked by the soldiers, 1-3. Pilate declaring his innocence, the Jews charge him with calling himself the "Son of God," 4-7. Pilate, after further examination, desires to release him, but overcome with the clamors of the Jews, delivers him to be crucified, 8-16. He is led to Golgotha and crucified between two robbers, 17, 18. The title placed over his cross, which Pilate refuses to alter, 19-22. The soldiers part his garments, 23, 24. Jesus affectionately commends his mother to the care of John, 25-27; and, receiving vinegar to drink, he expires, 28-30. The legs of the robbers are broken to hasten their death, but Jesus being previously dead, his side is pierced by a soldier, and thus the Scriptures are fulfilled, 31-37. Joseph of Arimathea, assisted by Nicodemus, buries him, 38-42.

Pilate neither did nor could say this seriously; for crucifixion was not a Jewish but a Roman mode of punishment. The cross was made of two beams, either crossing at the top, at right angles, like a T, or in the middle of their length, like an X; with a piece on the center of the transverse beam for the accusation, and another piece projecting from the middle, on which the person sat. The cross on which our Lord suffered was of the former kind, being thus represented on all old monuments, coins, and crosses. The body was usually fastened to the upright beam by nailing the feet to it, and on the transverse (or horizontal) piece by nailing the hands; and the person was frequently permitted to hang in this situation till he perished through agony and lack of food. This horrible punishment was usually inflicted only on slaves for the worst of crimes. That Christ was crucified on a cross, and not on a so-called "torture stake" or single upright pole, is proven by the fact that Jn 20:25 refers not to a single nail piercing both hands, as would be if Jesus had been crucified upon a single upright stake, but to the print of the nails, showing that each hand was nailed separately to the cross-arm, as usually portrayed. has been satisfactorily accounted for by Dr. Townson; who supposes that, as it was written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, it might have slightly varied in each language; and that, as St. Luke and St. John wrote for the Gentiles, they would prefer the Greek inscription, that St. Matthew, addressing the Jews, would use the Hebrew, and that St. Mark, writing to the Romans, would naturally give the Latin. JESUS. ver. 3, 12. JOHN 20

Mary Magdalene goes to the sepulchre and, discovering that the stone was taken away, runs to tell Peter and John, who hasten thither. They find not the body but only the graveclothes in exact order, 1-10. Mary as she weeps sees two angels, and afterwards Jesus, who sends her to inform the apostles, 11-18. Jesus meets them as assembled in the evening and speaks peace to them, 19-23. Thomas, who was absent, remains resolutely incredulous, 24, 25. Jesus again meets the assembled disciples, and satisfies Thomas, who confesses him as "his Lord, and his God," 26-29. "These things were written, that we might believe, and

... have life through his name," 30, 31.

1. first. ver. *19, 26. Ac *20:7. 1 C *16:2. Re 1:10. cometh. Mary Magdalene, as well as Peter, was evidently at the sepulchre twice on the morning of the resurrection. The first time of her going was some short time before her companions, the other Mary and Salome (Mt 28:1); and observing that the stone had been removed, she returned to inform Peter and John. In the meantime, the other Mary and Salome came to the sepulchre, and saw the angel, as recorded by Matthew and Mark. While these women returned to the city, Peter and John went to the sepulchre, passing them at some distance, or going another way, followed by Mary Magdalene, who stayed after their return. This was her second journey; when she saw two angels, and then Jesus himself, as here related; and immediately after Jesus appeared to the other women, as they returned to the city (Mt 28:9, 10). In the meantime Joanna and her company arrived at the sepulchre, when two angels appeared to them as the one angel had done the other women (Lk 24:1-10). They immediately returned to the city, and by some means found the apostles before the others arrived, and informed them of what they had seen; upon which Peter went a second time to the sepulchre, but saw only the linen clothes lying (Lk *24:12). Lk 22:31, 32. went into. Gr. eiseelthen eis. To signify the actual entering into a place, notice Greek repeats the preposition eis, into, by attaching it as a prefix to the verb, and repeating it after the verb. This grammatical construction serves to distinguish the mere approach to a place, as distinct from entering into it. Examples of this construction may be seen at Mt 8:5 (of entering the city Capernaum); 12:4 (of David entering the house of God); 24:38 (of Noah entering the ark). Mk 1:21 (of Jesus entering into the synagogue); 2:1; 3:1; *5:13 (of unclean spirits entering the swine); 6:56; *7:17 (into a house), 24; 11:2 (entered into a village); 11:11 (entered Jerusalem and the temple); 16:5 (entering into the sepulchre). Lk 1:40. 4:38 (entered Simon's house). 6:6; 7:1, 44; 8:30 (of demons entering the man), 33 (demons entering into swine); 9:34 (entered a cloud on the mount of transfiguration), 52 (entered a Samaritan village); 10:38; 17:12, 27 (Noah entering the ark); 22:3 (Satan entered Judas), 10. Jn 4:38 (entered into their labors); 13:27 (Satan entered Judas); 18:1 (entered the garden of Gesthemene), 33 (Pilate entered the judgment hall). Ac 3:2, 8; 5:21; 9:17 (Ananias entered into the house where Saul was); 10:24; 11:8 (of Peter, who states no unclean food ever entered his mouth), 12; 16:40; 18:19; 19:30 (entered in unto the people); 21:8 (entered house of Philip), 26 (entered the temple); 23:16 (entered the castle); 25:23. Ro 5:12 (sin entered the world); He 4:6, 10 (enter into his rest); 9:12, 24. Ja 5:4 (entered into the ears). 2 J 7. The significance of all this is that those who assert that baptism is not by immersion claim that this expression is never used of going into the water for baptism: the expressions used simply mean they went down to and came up from the water, but never entered into the water in the sense of being immersed. Thus the Reverend G. W. Hughey writes "When the Greeks wished to specifically express motion into a place by the force of the preposition eis, they used it both before and after the verb. Instances of this often occur, as 'eiselthen eis,' or 'eiserchomai eis.' We have numerous examples of this usage, both in the New Testament and in the Septuagint. We have a striking example of this usage in John's account of the resurrection of our Lord: John 20:4, 'and came first to (eis) the sepulchre,' ('elthe protos eis mnemion'); verse 6, 'Then cometh Simon Peter following him and he went into the sepulchre,' 'eiselthen eis to mnemion.' " And again, "In not a single example of its use with baptidzo do we have this usage. This is a most significant fact" (The Scriptural Mode of Christian Baptism, pp. 128, 129).

23. Whose soever. ✓184C, Mt +4:9. lit. "If the sins of any ye forgive." A condition of the third class. Only God has the power to forgive sins (Mk 2:8). Jesus asserted his authority and power to forgive sins (Mk 2:10), thus indirectly asserting his deity. There is no evidence that Jesus by this statement intended to convey this power to Peter alone, the other apostles exclusively, or their alleged successors, for not just the twelve disciples but other men and women were gathered in the upper room (ver. 19. Lk 24:48, 49. Ac 1:15). Rather, every Christian who shares the message of God's terms of forgiveness recorded in the Bible does the work of authoritatively announcing the goodness of God (Ro ✓11:22) by declaring the grounds of the forgiveness of sins (Ac ✓10:43), so securing their remission (Ja ✓5:19, 20); and by declaring the severity of God (Ro ✓11:22), sharing God's terms of judgment (Jn ✓3:18, 36. Ac ✓4:12. 17:31. 1 C 5:4, 5. 6:9, 10. 2 C 5:✓11, 20), so authoritatively pronouncing the grounds of their retention (Mt +*12:31, 32. 1 J 5:16). sins ye. ✓121I1, Ge +3:7. remit. ✓121I2, Ge +2:17. The disbelief of the apostle is the means of furnishing us with a full and satisfactory demonstration of the resurrection of our Lord. Throughout the divine dispensations every doctrine and every important truth is gradually revealed; and here we have a conspicuous instance of this progressive system. An angel first declares the glorious event; the empty sepulchre confirms the women's report. Christ's appearance to Mary Magdalene showed that he was alive; that to the disciples at Emmaus proved that it was at least the spirit of Christ; that to the eleven showed the reality of his body; and the conviction given to St. Thomas proved it the self-same body that had been crucified. Incredulity itself is satisfied; and the convinced apostle exclaims in the joy of his heart, "My Lord and my God!" ver. *16, *31. Jn 1:49. ✓5:23. *9:35-38. Jsh +*5:14. Jg +*6:22. 1 S 20:12. 29. Jesus saith. Notice what Jesus did not say: he did not disclaim or deny the truth of the confession Thomas just made. Thomas called Jesus God. If Jesus is not God, then here is a most dreadful and unexplained omission of needful correction on the part of Jesus, who by not correcting the impression made by this confession is guilty of perpetrating an untruth on all future generations of believers who receive this unexplained testimony. But such failure on the part of Jesus is impossible, as being entirely out of character with his absolute truthfulness (Jn 14:2, 6). Peter abruptly declined the well-meaning worship of Cornelius (Ac 10:25, 26). Paul and Barnabas were acclaimed as gods come down in the likeness of men at Lystra, but they strenuously denied this ascription of deity to themselves (Ac 14:11-18). When John fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed him things to come, the angel rebuked him, and refused to receive worship (Re 22:8, 9). But Herod, acclaimed as a god, was eaten of worms for not giving the glory to the true God (Ac 12:23). Jesus suffered no such rebuke from the Father, thus the Father confesses the truth of the claims of his Son, and those who refuse the truth of the testimony of Thomas are refusing to "honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him" (Jn √5:23). Jesus did not correct, but commended the testimony of Thomas, as the following words plainly show. seen. ƒ171J15, Ge +42:1. hast believed. ver. 31. Jn 5:44. blessed. ver. 8. Jn 4:48. The eye-witness testimony of Thomas satisfies for all time the need for testimony to the physical resurrection of Christ from the dead. No further continuing or repeated experience is necessary to establish the fact of the resurrection, for it is an established principle of law that eyewitness testimony, preserved in writing, is valid for all time, and the event or circumstance does not need to be repeated. This answers the frequent plea of skeptics that they have not been given the same opportunity to verify the resurrection offered to Thomas. That the doubt of Thomas was completely removed is sufficient testimony to remove all similar doubt on the part of all future skeptics, so that they are without excuse. Ro √10:9, 10.

Jesus appears to some of his disciples at the Sea of Tiberias, makes himself known by a miraculous draught of fishes, and eats with them, 1-14. He thrice demands of Peter whether he loves him, and thrice requires him to show his love, by feeding his lambs and sheep, 15-17. He foretells Peter's martyrdom, commanding him to follow him, 18, 19; and reproves his curiosity concerning John, who showed his readiness in the same way to follow him, 20-23. The truth of John's testimony affirmed, and it is stated that Jesus did many miracles besides, even too numerous to be all recorded, 24, 25.

Ecclesiaticus 47:15. Basnage (Hist. des Juifs, l. iii. c. 1. sec. 9) gives a very similar hyperbole taken from the Jewish writers, in which Jochanan is said to have "composed such a great number of precepts and lessons, that if the heavens were paper, and all the trees of the forests so many pens, and all the children of men so many scribes, they would not suffice to write all his lessons." ACTS

The sacred writer addresses his narrative to Theophilus, 1. Christ being risen, instructs his disciples; commands them to wait at Jerusalem, for the promise of the Holy Spirit; and ascends towards heaven in their sight, 2-9. Two angels assure them, that he would come again in like manner, 10, 11. The apostles and disciples at Jerusalem continue in prayer, with one accord, 12-14. Peter calls on them to appoint another apostle instead of Judas, in whose awful doom the scripture had been fulfilled, 15-22. Matthias is chosen by lot, accompanied with prayer, 23-26.

He 6:2. 9:10. +*10:22. Re 19:13. with water. Notice the expression "with water," as opposed to "in water." New Testament baptisms were performed by applying water to the person or object, not by placing the person or object in the water (Mk +*7:4n). Baptism was a rite of purification (Jn 3:23, 25), and as instituted by Christ, symbolized the believer's reception of the Holy Spirit, and the cleansing of the heart from sin by the blood of Christ (Ac 22:16 w Re 1:5. He 10:22). The mode was sprinkling or pouring, never immersion (Ac 2:41n), for to immerse a person or object into standing (as opposed to running or "living," Le 14:5, 6, 50, 51, 52. 15:13) water would render the water unclean. The New Testament speaks of one baptism (Ep 4:5), yet we find reference to ritual baptism, requiring water; real baptism; baptism of the Holy Spirit; and baptisms (He 6:2) mentioned in the plural, probably purifications. Ritual baptism is performed by one person upon another person; that is, there is a human administrator of the rite, using the natural element water. Ritual baptism must be distinguished from (1) the real baptism performed once by the Holy Spirit without human hands upon every believer at the time faith is placed in Christ (Ac 11:17n. Ro +*8:9n, 11. 1 C 12:13), no doubt the one baptism referred to by Paul (Ep 4:5), of which ritual or water baptism is the mere symbol; (2) the indwelling of the Holy Spirit (Ro +*8:9n), which is the permanent nonrepeatable experience of every believer which takes place at the moment of salvation when faith is placed in Christ; (3) the miraculous gift-producing supernatural baptism of the Holy Ghost experienced only during the lifetime of the original apostles (Ac 8:16n); and (4) the filling of the Spirit which is a repeatable experience (Ep +*5:18n). Many verses which are understood by the casual reader as references to ritual baptism will be seen, upon closer examination, to refer to real baptism, and can be so distinguished by the fact that (1) no human administrators are mentioned in connection, (2) the element water is not mentioned in the immediate context, and most important, (3) the result accomplished by the baptism goes far beyond what can be legitimately claimed for a humanly administered ritual (Mk 16:16. Jn 3:5. Ro 6:4. 1 C √12:13. Ga *3:27. Col 2:12). Failure to observe such distinctions has resulted in a distortion of this ordinance of Christ into something it was never intended to be, such as (1) the means of regeneration, termed "baptismal regeneration;" (2) an essential requirement for salvation, a command of Christ, obedience to which is absolutely necessary for salvation and the remission of sins, a command which if not obeyed renders salvation impossible (Mk 16:16n. Ac 2:38n. 11:17n). George N. H. Peters has wisely written "It is the part of kindness to point out the opinion that we regard erroneous, and to sustain our own by an appeal direct to Scripture, and no one who holds to the supremacy of Scripture will object to this; but to direct attention to the opinion of others merely to ridicule the same and to call into question the honesty, veracity, etc., of its upholders is unworthy of a student and of a Christian" (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, p. 111). 6. Lord. Mt +*24:3, 4. Jn 21:21, 22. they asked. Mt *20:21. Lk 24:21. wilt thou. Jesus had just been speaking for forty days of the kingdom of God (ver. 4), and no doubt the content of his discussions prompted this question. Christ's answer must not be understood to be a denial of the hope reflected in this question, a hope firmly founded upon the provisions of the Davidic Covenant and the predictions of the prophets (Is √11:11n. +*55:3), but a confirmation of it. If the disciples were mistaken in this hope, this would have been a most opportune time to correct them, but Christ did not (Jn 14:2. 20:29n. Ro √15:8). Yet, misunderstanding this, many expositors have gone far astray in their understanding of the prophetic plan of God revealed in Scripture. Misunderstanding on this point is virtually fatal to understanding Biblical prophecy as a whole. A typical example of this misunderstanding is the comment of Thomas Walker, "They were still hankering, apparently, after a Jewish earthly monarchy. They interpreted what He had said about "the kingdom of God" (ver. 3) after an earthly and carnal manner, and they misunderstood His statement about "not many days hence" (ver. 5) as referring to a speedy establishment of a visible monarchy. It needed Pentecost to revolutionize completely their ideas and to spiritualize their conceptions. They even appear to have understood the promise of the coming of the Holy Ghost as the advent of some supernatural power for the promotion of a Jewish kingdom" (Commentary on Acts, pp. 9, 10). How far mistaken the otherwise excellent commentator Thomas Walker is on this point may be readily established by consulting the Scripture references pertaining to the Davidic Covenant furnished in the note above, and the references furnished for the word "restore" below. To suggest that the disciples were mistaken or carnal in their view is contrary to Mt 13:11, and to suggest they changed their viewpoint to a more spiritual one after Pentecost is an assertion which can find no support in Scripture. Rather, this very so-called carnal viewpoint is the focal point of Peter's message recorded in Ac 3:19-21 spoken after Pentecost (see also Ac 13:34 and 15:16), and is spoken of by Paul in Romans ch. 9-11, particularly Ro +√11:1, 2, 26. Peters calls attention to numerous passages in Paul's writings which are Jewish in conception, in which Paul speaks of Jesus as the Messiah, "locating the fulfillment of the promises held by the Jews to the future coming of this Jesus, by employing the language and ideas of the Jews applied to the Messiah" (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 1, p. 439). This is positive proof that there was no change, as alleged above, in the apostolic view of the kingdom after Pentecost. Peters cites the following passages of Paul: Ro 8:19-23. 11:1-32. 13:11, 12, etc. 1 C 1:7, 8. 4:5, 8. 6:2, 3, 9, 14, etc. 2 C 1:14. 3:16. 7. not for you. Much caution should attend the application of this text. While it has rightfully been applied as a warning against setting dates for the return of Christ, it must not be understood to mean that the time of his Second Advent will be unknown, for in Daniel (Da +*9:26, 27) the precise means of determining the very day of His coming is revealed (Mt 24:42n), and though not understood by us at the present time, will be understood by those who know the Scriptures (Da 11:33n) at the time appointed. Even the time of the rapture may be known approximately, otherwise there would have been no point for Christ to give the signs of its approach, no point to warning us to watch, lest the day come upon us unawares (Lk 21:34-36), and Paul could not have written what he did in 1 Th 5:4-6. In this matter, Peters points out, "Three extremes are to be avoided: (1) to fix definite, positive time; (2) to ignore the signs; (3) and to encourage any interpretation or application that forbids or hinders a daily posture of watching" (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, p. 114). Add to this a fourth, that of neglecting to earnestly study the entire subject because of the extremes and mistakes of others. Ac *17:26. Dt +*29:29. Da *2:21. Mt *24:36. Mk +*13:32. Lk √21:24. 19. it was known. Ac 2:22. Mt 28:15. in their. Luke's expression, "Their proper tongue," is supposed to exclude himself from the Jewish nation. By way of undesigned coincidence, Paley has pointed out that in Colossians it is implied that Luke is not "of the circumcision," in saying that Aristarchus, Marcus, and Justus were "of the circumcision" (Col 4:11), that Epaphras, Luke, and Demas, mentioned separately, were not (Col 4:12-14). The words "their proper tongue" are taken to be the words and observation of Luke the historian, and not a part of Peter's speech, in the midst of which they are found. Such words would not have been used by a Jew, but are suitable to the pen of a Gentile writing concerning Jews. This coincidence is so remote from all possibility of design, that it stands as substantial evidence of the historicity of Acts, and the authenticity of Paul's epistle. Such an obscure relationship would not be the product of a forger, who would want validating relationships to be evident on the surface, or they might be missed by the intended audience, and furnish no evidence for authenticity of his document. The evidential strength of any observed undesigned coincidence is directly proportional to its obscurity. The less obvious the coincidence, the stronger evidence it furnishes for authenticity (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 146, 147. See related notes on Ac 11:29. +*12:12n). tongue. ACTS 2

The day of Pentecost being come, the Holy Spirit is poured out on the assembled disciples, with "a sound as of a mighty wind;" while "cloven tongues as of fire" rest on each of them, 1-3. They speak divers languages, in the hearing of multitudes from many nations, who are come together on the occasion; at which most are amazed, but some deride, 4-13. Peter shows, that this is the fulfillment of a prophecy of Joel, 14-21; that Jesus, whom they had crucified, was risen from the dead, according to the prophecy of David, 22-32; and that being ascended into heaven, and exalted at the right hand of God, he had poured out the Holy Spirit, to demonstrate that he was the promised Messiah, 33-36. They are pricked to the heart, and inquire what they must do, 37. Peter exhorts and encourages them to repent, and to be baptized in the name of Jesus, 38-40. Three thousand are added to the church, 41. They continue stedfast in the faith, 42. Many miracles are wrought by the apostles, 43. The disciples have all things in common, and abound in love, joy, and praise; while numbers are daily added to them, 44-47.

38. Repent. The English text does not adequately convey the grammar of this verse. When the grammar is understood, the verse no longer can be used to support any view of baptismal regeneration or baptismal remission of sin. The phrase "every one of you" is mistakenly understood to be the subject of the verbs "repent" and "be baptized," with the phrase "for the remission of sins" modifying this alleged compound predicate. There are three clauses in this verse: (1) Ye: understood subject, second person, plural number. repent: verb, aorist tense, active voice, imperative mood, second person, plural number. (2) every one of you: subject, third person, singular number. be baptized: verb, aorist tense, passive voice, imperative mood, third person, singular number. for the remission of sins. modifying phrase, expressing the ground or basis of the baptism commanded (if understood of ritual water baptism), or the result (if understood of real baptism) of the baptism received. (3) ye. subject, second person, plural number. shall receive. verb, future tense, indicative mood, passive voice, second person, plural number. the gift of the Holy Ghost. direct object of the verb. Note particularly in the above analysis that the first and third clauses agree with each other in that both are in the second person and plural number for their subject and verb. The second clause does not agree in person and number of its subject and verb with the preceding or following clause. This makes it impossible to make "every one of you," which is third person singular, the subject of both "repent" (second person plural) and "be baptized" (third person singular), for subjects and verbs must agree in person and number. A. T. Robertson observes that this change in person and number "marks a break in the thought here that the English translation does not preserve" (Word Pictures, vol. 3, p. 34). Peter thus commanded all in his audience to repent. Upon repentance, each individual was then to be baptized on the basis that the specific individual's sin had been remitted upon their placing faith upon the name of Jesus Christ. Since the first and third clauses agree in person and number, the thought is that reception of the Holy Spirit is the consequence of faith upon the name of Christ, not ritual water baptism. The force of this conjunction is neglected or misunderstood by some interpreters. The word "and" marks the gracious relation of cause and effect, as in the grammatical parallel at Ac 3:19, "Repent and be converted." The Holy Spirit who gives repentance does, therewith, confer baptism for the remission of sins (J. W. Dale, Christic Baptism, p. 142). This of itself proves that the reference is to real, not ritual water, baptism. be baptized. The traditional understanding of this command is that it refers to ritual water baptism. An alternate view is that this is a reference to real baptism by the Holy Spirit. The correctness of the alternative view is established by the fact that (1) water is not mentioned in the context. (2) The baptism is not "into water" but, literally, upon the name of Jesus Christ. (3) Believing upon Jesus Christ is the ground upon which remission of sins is received. (4) Ritual water baptism is never in Scripture said to secure for us the remission of sins, only real baptism possesses such efficacy. (5) This real baptism takes the penitent sinner out of a state of guilt and places him into (eis) a new state of remission. This placement is permanent, and can hardly be symbolized by a momentary dipping in water, for the relationship established is permanent (Col 2:12n). (6) Only real baptism by the Holy Spirit can produce the change in condition always marked by the term "baptize" (1 C 10:2n) when the subject is spiritual baptism. Ac *8:12, 36-38. 13:24. *16:15, 31-34. +*22:16. Mt +*3:11n. Mk +*16:16. Jn +*3:5. T 3:5. He +*10:22. 1 P *3:21, 22. in. Gr. epi, lit. upon. With the dative case, as here, epi means "upon (ground, reason)" (Professor Harrison, Greek Prepositions, p. 266, cited by J. W. Dale, Christic Baptism, p. 138). Eric Sauer states "Under the influence of a psalm and a prophecy which speak of the Messianic 'cornerstone' and 'foundation' (Ps 118:22. Is 28:16), Christ is described as the foundation of our life of faith 'upon' (Gr. epi) Whom we believe (1 P 2:6. Ro 10:11)" (From Eternity to Eternity, p. 46). Dale gives some additional instructive examples. From the apocryphal book of Judith (12:7), epi occurs in conjunction with the verb baptize in the expression "baptized herself upon the fountain." The preposition expresses that upon which Judith rested when she baptized herself. Every "fountain" as "a lip," an edge, on which one can stand and be baptized. Clement of Alexandria (I. 1352) says: "It is a custom of the Jews to be baptized upon (Gr. epi) a couch." The preposition points out that upon which the Jew rested when he received baptism; he rested upon a couch. Mt 3:13, Jesus came from Galilee toward, more literally, upon, the Jordan, meaning that when he reached it he rested upon it (every river, like every fountain, has "a lip," an edge, a bank, upon which one can stand) to be baptized. "These examples present a physical basis on which the baptized rested. The case under consideration (Ac 2:38) exhibits the moral basis upon which the soul must rest in receiving the baptism into the remission of sins" (Christic Baptism, p. 145). Dale explains "the soul to be baptized out of guilt into the remission of sins must rest, not upon repentance (as any meritorious or ultimate ground), but must rest upon that NAME, 'which is the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved,' Jesus Christ," and "every penitent sinner, resting upon Jesus Christ, as an atoning Redeemer, shall thereby be baptized into the remission of sins" (p. 145). Lk 24:47g. Ac 16:31g. 1 C 3:11. the name. The question often arises, why is not the trinitarian formula of baptism given in Mt 28:19 utilized by the apostles in the book of Acts? Of several answers which have been proposed, the best sees this shortened expression as the figure of speech √171S11. Synecdoche of the Part, whereby a part is put for the whole, a shortened expression for the fuller expression. It seems to be that the apostles indeed did use the full formula, but simply referred to the act of baptism by the shorter phrase "in the name of Jesus Christ," "in the name of the Lord Jesus," or even shorter, "in the name of the Lord," in common with the wider practice of that day of being baptized "in the name" of one's spiritual teacher, as John's disciples were (Ac 19:3), just as John, as well as Jesus, taught his disciples to pray, Lk 11:1, evidently in a distinct manner. Thus the expression pertains more to this distinctiveness than to the precise formula employed. "As Waterland well puts it, 'The meaning is that the apostles baptized into the faith and religion of Christ, in that method and according to that form which our Lord Himself had prescribed'" (cited in Thomas Walker, commentary on Acts, p. 54. The citation is from Daniel Waterland, Works, vol. 2, Sermon viii, "Christ's Divinity Proved from the Form of Baptism," p. 173). Waterland continues, "The Apostles administered Christ's, not John's baptism; that baptism which Christ had appointed; St. Luke expresses it briefly by baptizing 'in the name of Christ;' not because it ran in his name only, but because it was instituted by his authority. Thus the practice of the Apostles is reconciled with the commission given them" (p. 173). Other answers which have been proposed are less satisfactory. Some suggest that the trinitarian formula was never used, but this would appear to place the disciples in direct disobedience to what our Lord commanded. To escape this difficulty, some (often in the name of "right division" of Scripture:

2 T 2:15. 1 Th 4:2n) would refer the practice of baptism within narrow dispensational limits—the time of the establishment of Jewish Christian churches in the early part of Acts—suspending the validity of baptism for the church age, reserving it to the millennial kingdom, a view totally out of harmony with the general practice of Bible believing Christians throughout church history. This view depends upon artificially dividing Scripture (1 Th 4:2n. 2 T 2:15n) in a manner unauthorized by its own content, by principles undiscoverable by the proverbial independent Bible reader on a desert island with no denominational "helps" to guide him, a quite sound rule for determining whether a teaching is truly Biblical (Is +*8:20n. Ac 17:11). Such a view contradicts the Bible doctrine of the perpetuity of the ordinance establishing ritual baptism (Mt 28:19n). Still further astray is the "Jesus only" viewpoint, which suggests there is one God, "Jesus," who is the Father and the Holy Spirit, into whose single name we are to be baptized. While maintaining the deity of Christ, this view is faulty by denying the existence of three distinct persons in the Godhead. Attempting to prove Jesus and the Father are one and the same person, some misapply such Scripture as Jn 10:30 and 14:7, 9, for Christ's own appeal to the Father as a witness distinct from Himself is fatal to this view (Jn 5:36-38). Ac *8:12, 16. 10:48. *19:4, 5. Mt +√28:19. Ro 6:3. 1 C 1:13-17. for. Gr. eis. Some would make this expression equivalent to the expression in Mt 26:28, where the same words "for the remission of sins" are found. This assumes that the preposition "for" (Gr. eis) possesses the same meaning wherever it occurs. Here eis expresses either the "ground or basis" for the baptism, namely, the remission of sins consequent upon repentance and believing upon the name of Christ, or far better, the result of the real (not ritual) baptism attending true repentance and faith upon Christ. In Mt 26:28, eis expresses the aim or purpose of the death of Christ. When eis expresses purpose (as Mt 26:28), grammarians term this the telic use of eis. J. W. Dale asserts "The telic use of eis with baptidzo (baptize) may, very confidently, be declared to have no existence, whether in the Scriptures or out of the Scriptures" (Christic Baptism, p. 144). In other words, Dale asserts that the preposition eis is never used to express purpose in conjunction with the verb "baptize" in either Classical or Biblical (Koine) Greek. Dale cites a passage from Clement of Alexandria (II. 1212), "they baptize out of (ek) chastity into (eis) fornication," commenting "Who would think of translating this phrase, 'They baptize out of temperance unto, for, in order to, fornication'?" (Christic Baptism, p. 144). Dale asserts "it is impossible for eis to reach over baptized and receive a telic character from Repent exclusively" (p. 139). Thus the grammar forbids the notion that repentance is "in order to the remission of your sins." The preposition eis in this verse (Ac 2:38) is one of the most debated prepositions in all the Word of God. But merely compiling long lists of scholars who translate or explain this preposition in a particular manner to defend the mistaken assertion that eis can only mean "unto" (or "in order to," "with a view to," "to the end that," "for," etc.) is not sound linguistic practice. A list of scholars is no more valid than the validity of logic and evidence which they marshal to support their positions (2 S 5:23n): the honor of the names cited or their number have no bearing on the strength of their case. The scholars cited do not necessarily affirm that this must be the rendering here, particularly if they are not discussing the doctrinal implications which such a translation supports. The preposition eis may mean "because of," as at Mt 12:41. It may also mean "as a sign or profession of," as at Mt +*3:11n. 28:19. 1 C 1:13. 10:2. Notice that in the last four passages cited, the preposition eis occurs in the same grammatical construction and with reference to the same subject, baptism. The preposition eis may be understood here to mean "the ground or basis of" (as in Mt 10:41. *12:41. See related notes at Mt 26:28n. Mk +*1:4n), or it may legitimately be understood to indicate the result of believing upon the name of Jesus Christ. Each of these alternatives is certainly to be preferred to the view that we are baptized in order to receive remission of sins, a viewpoint contrary to the rest of the Word of God, and incompatible with Greek grammar, for eis never possesses a telic sense (expressing purpose, as when rendered "for") in conjunction with the verb baptize. It is a fallacy, if not absurdity, to hold that a word in Greek or Hebrew must in every occurrence be translated by the same English word, or to suggest that at every occurrence of a word it always possesses exactly the same meaning. A reference to the classifications of the words "soul" and "spirit" (Mt +2:20n. +8:16n) will demonstrate that single words may have numerous and quite different meanings. This holds true for every part of speech. When translating from one language to another no word in one language possesses precisely the same range of meaning, connotation, and denotation as a single usually equivalent word of the other language, neither does it function with precisely the same or equivalent idioms (Ac +*8:39n. 10:11n. 1 J 2:19n). This text is a favorite of those who teach the mistaken doctrine of baptismal regeneration (along with Mk 16:16. Jn 3:5. Ac 22:16. Ga 3:27. 1 P 3:21). Lewis Sperry Chafer's remark regarding the tendency to build a whole system of belief upon one text applies equally well to those who build such a system upon several chosen texts of Scripture, "A certain type of mind seems able to construct all its confidence on an erroneous interpretation of one passage and to be uninfluenced by the overwhelming body of Scripture which contradicts that interpretation" (Systematic Theology, vol. 3, p. 380). There was no adequate source of water available to such a crowd for this purpose. While "there were abundant pools of water in and about Jerusalem, in some of which bathing was certainly allowed (Jn 5:4. 9:7)" (Lyman Abbott, cited in J. W. Shepherd, Handbook on Baptism, p. 117), nothing in the text or the argument informs us how these facilities were made available for Christian use. Those who argue that there was certainly water enough to handle the many sacrifices offered at the passover (J.W. Shepherd, Handbook on Baptism, pp. 117, 118, citing Robert Halley, The Sacraments, Part I, p. 318) fail to show how three thousand persons were permitted to enter the temple to use its facilities for such a purpose. Did such a crowd come prepared for this exigency with a change of clothing? Were the men and women provided separate changing areas? And how could 12 disciples immerse so many in an afternoon, even if the facilities were available? To suggest, as Abbott, that though the 3000 were baptized immediately, Scripture doesn't specifically state they were all baptized on the same day (J.W. Shepherd, p. 117, citing Lyman Abbott, Comm. on Acts 2:41), is an unprovable assertion based upon an inference required by his theory, not deducible from the text, which directly to the contrary explicitly states "and the same day there were added...." The evidence would seem to require that some mode other than immersion be employed on this, if not every, occasion of baptism in the New Testament (see related notes on Ac 1:5n. +*22:16). added. ver. 47. ACTS 3

Peter and John, at the temple, heal one who had been lame from his birth, 1-8. The people, being astonished, throng around them, 9-11. Peter declares, that this miracle had been wrought by the power, and through faith in the name of Jesus, whom they and the other Jews had delivered to be crucified, but whom God had raised from the dead, 12-16; he supposes that they did it ignorantly, and shows that God had thus fulfilled the scripture, 17, 18; he exhorts them to "repent and be converted, that their sins" may be pardoned, and they made partakers of the promised blessing, 19, 20; and refers them to Moses and all the prophets, whose predictions were fulfilled in Jesus the Savior, whom God had sent to bless them, in turning them from their iniquities, 21-26.

ACTS 4

The priests and Sadducees imprison Peter and John, 1-3. The signal success of their preaching, 4. When brought before the council, Peter boldly declares, that the late cure had been wrought in the name of Jesus, the only Savior, whom the rulers had rejected, 5-12. The council, unable to answer, dismiss them with a threatening charge to speak no more in the name of Jesus, which they avow themselves bound to disregard, 13-22. They return to their company; and all unite in prayer, for boldness in preaching, and that miracles of mercy might confirm their testimony, 23-30. The house being shaken, they are all filled with the Holy Spirit, and emboldened to speak the word of God, 31. The harmony and charity of the whole company, who had all things in common; the miraculous assistance granted to the apostles; and the pious liberality of Barnabas and others who had possessions, in selling them, to distribute to the needy, 32-37.

ACTS 5

Ananias and Sapphira, combining to tempt the Holy Spirit by a lie in respect of land sold by them, at Peter's word fall down dead, 1-11. The apostles work many and great miracles, and have much success in their ministry, 12-16. The rulers cast them all into prison, 17, 18. An angel releases them, and directs them to preach openly in the temple, 19, 20. They are at length brought before the council; and, being examined, they boldly bear testimony to Jesus, as exalted to be a Prince and Savior, 21-32. The rulers, being "cut to the heart," purpose to slay them, but are restrained by the counsel of Gamaliel, 33-39. The apostles are beaten, and dismissed with injunctions, not to speak any more in the name of Jesus, 40. They rejoice in their sufferings, and proceed diligently in preaching Jesus the Christ, 41, 42.

This is what was called Solomon's porch: it was a most noble structure, supported by a wall 400 cubits high, and consisting of stones of a vast bulk, being 20 cubits long, and 6 cubits high. It was probably left standing because of its grandeur and beauty; and Josephus speaks of it as continuing even to the time of Albinus and Agrippa.

ACTS 6

On occasion of the murmurings of the Grecians, seven persons, chosen by the church, under the direction of the apostles, are appointed by them to superintend the daily ministration to the poor; that none might be neglected, and that the apostles might "give themselves to the word of God and to prayer," 1-6. The word of God greatly prevails, 7. Stephen, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, confutes those who disputed against him, 8-10. They suborn witnesses, who, before the council, falsely accuse him of blasphemy against the law and the temple, 11-14. His face shines like the face of an angel, 15.

ACTS 7

Stephen, being required to answer before the council, shows how God called Abraham, and promised Canaan to him and his seed, 1-8; how Joseph was sold by his brethren, and Jacob with his family went down into Egypt, 9-16; that when they were oppressed by the Egyptians, Moses was born, and brought up by Pharaoh's daughter, 17-22; that attempting to deliver Israel he was rejected, and fled into Midian, 23-29; that at length he was sent to be their deliverer, 30-36; that he prophesied of Christ, received the law for Israel, and was grieved by their rebellion and idolatry, 37-43; that they had "the tabernacle of witness," till Solomon built the temple, 44-47; yet, according to the prophets, "the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands," 48-50. He boldly accuses the council and the nation of imitating the rebellion and persecution of their ancestors, who rejected and slew the prophets; and charges them with murdering Christ, in violation of their own law, 51-53. Being "cut to the heart," they hasten to stone him; while he, favored with a vision of Christ, and calling on him to receive his soul, and pardon his murderers, falls asleep, 54-60.

From Ge 11:26, it appears that Abraham was born when Terah was 70 years of age; and he departed from Haran when 75 (Ge 12:4); while Terah lived to the age of 205 years (Ge 11:32). Instead of 205, however, the Samaritan has 145, which reconciles this discrepancy; but it is not improbable, that Abram was in reality born when his father Terah was 130 years old; and that he is merely mentioned first in Ge 11:26 by way of dignity. he removed. ver. 43. 5. he gave. Ge *23:2-4. Ps 105:11, 12. He +*11:9, 10, 13-16. him. The point is, that the promise was made personally to Abraham that he would himself inherit the promised land, but Abraham himself never personally possessed the land God promised to him. It is for this reason that God, who cannot lie, must resurrect Abraham and bring him personally into the promised land in order for the Abrahamic Covenant to be fulfilled. How many Bible scholars have failed to notice the explicit statement of Scripture here, which declares that Abraham did not receive the inheritance, and have taught the opposite, and worse, have spiritualized and transformed the covenants into something they were never meant to be, taking to themselves or the church the blessings promised to Abraham and the Jews, but very carefully leaving the curses to Israel, literally interpreted at that (see related notes at Jsh √21:43n. 1 K √4:21n. To remove this glaring discrepancy, Markland interprets para, from, as it frequently signifies with a genitive, and renders, "And were carried over to Sychem; and afterwards from among the descendants of Emmor, the father, or son, of Sychem, they were laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought for a sum of money." This agrees with the account which Josephus (Ant. l. ii. c. 8) gives of the patriarchs; that they were carried out of Egypt, first to Sychem, and then to Hebron, where they were buried. Ge 50:25. 59. Stephen. T#439. Mt +10:16 (T#660). +11:29 (T#62). calling upon. Upon whom was Stephen calling? Those who deny the deity of Christ are caught upon the horns of a fatal dilemma. If "God," then Stephen addresses Jesus as God. If "Lord," then Jesus is being directly addressed in prayer, an act of worship due only to God. In the New Testament, prayers, invocations, or doxologies are not uniformly and invariably addressed exclusively to God the Father. Thomas addressed Jesus as God (Jn +*20:28). The disciples worshipped Christ directly as he went up into heaven (Lk 24:51, 52). Paul prayed to the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ jointly: Ro 1:7. 1 C *1:3. 2 C 1:2. Ga 1:3. Ep 1:2. 6:23. Ph 1:2. Col 1:2. 1 Th 1:1. 3:11. 2 Th 1:2. 2:16, 17. 1 T 1:2. 2 T 1:2. T 1:4. Phm 3. So John prayed to the Father and Son jointly, 2 J 3, and to all three persons of the Godhead alike, Re 1:4, 5. Paul also prayed to Christ singly: Ro 16:20, 24. 1 C 16:23. Ga 6:18. Ph 2:19, 24. 1 Th 5:28. 2 Th 3:16, 18. 1 T 1:12. 2 T 4:14, 17, 18, 22. Some devotional acts Paul performed towards the Holy Ghost singly: Ro 9:1. 15:30. See Paul's noted doxology to Christ, Ro *9:5. Peter put up his doxologies to Christ: 1 P 2:3, 4. *4:11. 2 P ✓3:18. See the whole creation join in the same common doxology to the Father and the Son, not to the Father through the Son, Re *5:11-13 (Daniel Waterland, Works, Vol. 4, pp. 8, 9). "Christ is to be worshipped with religious worship by men (Ac 7:59. 9:14. Jn ✓5:23. Re 5:8); either singly and by himself, or jointly with the Father in the same acts of worship. He is therefore God by nature, and not by office only, appointment, or designation. The worship of him must of consequence stand upon the same foot whereon Scripture has founded all religious worship; upon his real and essential divinity, his being God, Jehovah, Almighty, etc. which he must be because he is adorable; and which if he be, then the worship of him comes within the reason, intent, and even the letter of the law about worship. And it is very observable how the Scripture rule of worship exactly harmonizes with what the same Scripture teaches of the divinity of God the Son. For as, on the one hand, his claim of worship confirms the doctrine of his divinity; so, on the other hand, his divine titles and attributes confirm his claim of worship: and thus is Scripture uniform, consistent, and harmonious throughout" (Daniel Waterland, Works, vol. 3, "The Scriptures and the Arians Compared," pp. 295, 296). ACTS 8

Saul well approves the murder of Stephen; and the disciples, "except the apostles," are dispersed by persecution, 1. Devout men bury Stephen and lament over him, 2. Saul makes havoc of the church, 3, 4. Philip preaches in Samaria, and has great success, 5-8. Simon, who had long bewitched the people by sorceries, believes and is baptized, 9-13. Peter and John, being sent thither, by prayer and imposition of hands confer the gift of the Holy Ghost, 14-17. Simon, offering money for the like power, is by Peter rebuked, warned, and called to repent, 18-24. The apostles, having preached in the cities of Samaria, return to Jerusalem, 25. Philip is sent by an angel into the desert of Gaza, 26; where he meets with an eunuch, treasurer of Candace queen of Ethiopia, returning in his chariot from Jerusalem, and reading the prophecy of Isaiah, 27, 28. By a divine monition he joins the chariot, and preaches Jesus to the Ethiopian, 29-35; who, professing faith in him as "the Son of God," is baptized, 36-38. The Spirit conveys away Philip, who preaches in the cities on the sea coast, till he comes to Cesarea: and the eunuch returns home rejoicing, 39, 40.

An objection to infant baptism has been founded on this statement, for it makes no mention of infants or children. Such an objection is not only precarious, it is invalid. It fails to take into account that an abstract statement of fact cannot be used to deny specifics which are not mentioned. The account of Joshua's destruction of Ai (Jsh 8:25, 26) makes no mention of children or infants: would any dare to assert that the city of twelve thousand contained no infants? When a thousand men and women fled to and were destroyed in the tower of Shechem (Jg 9:49), were there no children? Or the city of Thebez which fled to its tower (Jg 9:51), yet no children mentioned? Clearly the fact that children or infants are not specified does not preclude their presence and participation (see Hibbard, Christian Baptism, Part I, pp. 254-257). See related notes (Ge 6:5, √121N1. 1 P 3:21n).

16. he was. This probably indicates that the accompanying supernatural baptism of the Holy Spirit evidenced by the miraculous gifts was conveyed only through the ministry of the original apostles and Paul, but not through the evangelists, and was therefore limited to their lifetime, perhaps even to the time before the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. This baptism of the Holy Spirit must be distinguished from the filling of the Holy Spirit for service, still possible for every believer (see the related notes on Ac 1:5n. 2:41n. +*4:8n. Ro +*8:9n. Ep +*5:18n), and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, experienced by every true believer in Christ (Ro +*8:9, 11. 1 C √12:13). The baptism of the Holy Spirit was given as a sign to Israel (and by nature a sign must be temporary, or it would lose its effect as a sign), and as an earnest, to validate the claims of the apostles and of our Lord, that they indeed had the power and authority to bring in the restoration of Israel as promised by the prophets. The fulfillment of the promise and the establishment of the kingdom of God is postponed until the Second Advent, delayed until, and conditioned upon, the repentance of Israel (Ac +√3:19-21), when the gifts and the signs will be in evidence again (Jl √2:28n). If the word desert refer to the road, then we must understand that the latter route is intended" (Thomas Walker). "Besides the ordinary road from Jerusalem by Ramleh to Gaza, there was another, more favorable for carriages (Ac 8:28), further to the south, through Hebron, and thence through a district comparatively without towns, and much exposed to the incursions of people from the desert" (McClintock and Strong, vol. 3, art. It is probable, that we should refer ereemos, "desert," not to Gaza, but to odos, the "way;" though Gaza was situated at the entrance of the desert (Arrian, Exped. Alex. l. ii. c. 26), and the ancient city was in ruins, being destroyed by Alexander (Strabo, l. xvi). Thus, "we must understand that Philip was instructed to take the less frequented route via Hebron mentioned above" (Thomas Walker). Mt 3:1-3. Lk 3:2-4.

In his puzzlement over the meaning of this Scripture, the Ethiopian had the humility and desire to receive instruction through a human instrument to learn its meaning. In our own efforts to understand Scripture, we must not neglect to make careful use of Bible study tools produced by godly men, and the writings and researches of devout scholars whose scholarship and industry we cannot hope to duplicate. There is no necessity to reinvent the wheel. It is the height of egotism to suppose that we can go ourselves to the Bible alone, and learn all that God has for us in His Word, never utilizing cross references, concordances, commentaries and specialized topical studies, as though the Holy Spirit never assisted the labors of the writers and scholars that have gone before us. God will hold us responsible not only for what we know, but for what we could have known had we made the proper and diligent use of the means He has made available to us. Proper spiritual growth is dependent upon our careful and systematic study of the Word of God. A mere reading of the Bible, good and necessary as that is, is not enough. Nor is it satisfactory to derive all of our spiritual food from the labors of others, such as pastors, as valuable as they are. We are to search the Scriptures for ourselves, and test the teaching of others by the Word of God (Is +*8:20n. Ac ✓17:11). 36. came unto. The chariot stopped in the water. "The position of the chariot in relation to the water is of vital importance. This must, primarily, be determined by epi. The chariot stands wherever epi ti udor puts it. This may be either upon, over, the water (the wheels in the water of a streamlet running across the road), or immediately adjacent to the water. Winer says, epi means upon, above, on the shore; beside, near, in local sense is not established" (J. W. Dale, Christic and Patristic Baptism, p. 185). a certain water. Gr. epi ti udor, to some water. The pronoun ti has sometimes a diminutive sense, and so here. "They came to a little water," etc. (F. G. Hibbard, Christian Baptism, Part 2, p. 104). J. A. Alexander notes here "not to a certain water, which might seem to mean a well known lake or stream, of which the region seems to have been wholly destitute, but, as the Greek words properly denote, to some water, the indefinite expression, like that in Ac 5:2, suggesting naturally the idea of a small degree or quantity" (Comm. on Acts, p. 348). That this water was small in quantity may be determined because, additionally, (2) the region was desert (ver. 28, not merely wilderness or uninhabited land. The region is the same as where Abraham and Isaac dug wells, and their herdmen strove, saying "the water is ours," Ge 26:19, 20, in the valley of Gerar). (3) The Eunuch was surprised to see water, as shown by his exclamation "See! water," "where it might have been least expected" (Alexander). (4) "The promptitude and urgency for baptism; implying that if this spot should be passed by no other such spot might be found on the road. Everything said and implied points to a limited quantity of water" (James W. Dale, Christic and Patristic Baptism, p. 185). Dt 21:4, 6. See. 38. chariot to stand still. Luke's vivid picture is of the chariot stopping in the shallow water of the spring or wady. went down. The Greek term katebeesan pertains to dismounting from the chariot, not descent into the water. Observe the use of this term elsewhere (Jg 4:15, LXX. Mt ✓14:29). Keeler notes that whenever the two words anabaino and katabaino appear together in context, the motion in all such cases is directly down and up (R. F. Keeler, Christian Baptism, p. 235. Keeler cites numerous examples: katabaino: Jg 4:15. Ex 3:8. 19:11. Nu 11:17. Dt 28:24. 2 K 1:11, 12. Ps 72:6. Is 55:10. Ezk 26:16. 27:29. Mt 3:16 (descending). 7:25. ✓14:29. 27:40. 28:2. Mk 15:32. Re 7:2. 8:4. 11:7, 12. 14:11). There is no provision in the text for walking away from the chariot several steps or some distance to go into the water: they both dismounted from the chariot directly into the water. However deeply the chariot was in the water, that is how deep Philip and the Eunuch were in the water (see ver. 36n). both. Here the argument for immersion fails, for the evidence that the eunuch was immersed must apply with equal force to Philip, and this no one would maintain. into the water. "The implication is, if they stepped down 'into the water' that it was so trifling in depth as to make it unnecessary to change the position of the chariot; certainly no one would step down out of a chariot into water two feet nine inches in depth; which they must have done, if at all, at one step, for there is no second step in the record beyond that which brought them out of the chariot" (Dale, p. 186). katebasan eis to udor does not require entrance into the water: Lk 8:23, a storm of wind came down to, not into the lake. Jn 5:4, an angel went down into the pool, and whoever first stepped into, neither phrase requiring a walking step by step into deeper water, or taking anything more than just one step within the water, and their entrance into the water certainly cannot signify that they were immersed. See further on the note to Jn 20:6. and he baptized. Thomas Walker notes on Ac 2:41 that "the contention that the Greek word "baptize" always means "immerse" is not borne out by Holy Scripture. For example, it is used in Mk 7:4; Lk 11:38 of pouring water over the limbs; in 1 C 10:1, 2, of the Israelites passing through the Red Sea where they were certainly not immersed; and in Ac 1:8 of the effusion of the Holy Ghost on the disciples" (Comm. on Acts, p. 57). Even if it could be proven that baptizo means immerse (and this cannot be proven), this would not satisfy the case, for though the word would then mean to place entirely beneath the water, there is nothing in this Greek verb which allows for being taken back out of the water, a problem which is fatal to the theory. Jn *3:22, 23n. 4:1.

39. were. Mt *3:16. Mk 1:10g. come up. The same word is used in verse 31 of Philip mounting the chariot, only here it is plural, indicating that both men re-mounted the chariot, the precise reverse of their both disembarking the chariot discussed in the note on ver. 38. With as much certainty that it can be affirmed that the Ethiopian re-entered the chariot, it can be affirmed that so did Philip, for the term applies equally to both. If the word means that they walked from the deeper to the shallower water, then they are both left standing there, and the chariot went on without them. out of. The Greek preposition ek does not necessitate the uniform meaning "to come out from within a place, object, group, or substance." The word ek also has the sense "from" with no indication of having been within: Mt 12:42, the Queen of Sheba came from (ek) the uttermost parts of the earth; Mt 27:38, the thieves crucified on (ek) Christ's right hand and left were in no sense prior to the cross "in" or "within" Christ; the preposition ek is used here by way of Greek idiom. Mk 11:20, the fig tree dried up from (ek) the roots. Lk 1:71, saved from (ek) our enemies, and from (ek) the hand of all that hate us. Jn 5:24, passed from (ek) death unto life. Jn 6:64, Jesus knew from (ek) the beginning. Jn 6:66, From (ek) that time many of his disciples went back. Jn 8:23, Ye are from (ek) beneath. Jn 8:42, For I proceeded forth and came from (ek) God. Jn 9:1, He saw a blind man which was blind from (ek) his birth. Jn 10:32, Many good works have I showed you from (ek) my Father. Jn 12:27, Father, save me from (ek) this hour. 12:32, "from the earth" does not specify Christ was in the earth. Jn 13:4, He riseth from (ek) supper. Jn 19:23, Now the coat was without seam, woven from (ek) the top throughout. R. F. Keeler remarks, "Do not these passages prove that from is a true meaning of ek? Neither eis nor ek proves that they were in the water at all" (Christian Baptism, pp. 232, 233). Ac 12:7, the chains fell off (ek) from his hands or wrists: not out of, but from his hands; they could not have fallen out of, unless he had held them in his hands. Ac 28:3, the viper hung on (ek) his hand, and Paul shook it off into the fire (ver. 5). Thus ek need indicate no more than that the action of mounting up into the chariot began within the water, even if only the toe of the sandal of Philip or the Eunuch touched the water's edge. The preposition ek may therefore have different significations, just as argued for the preposition eis and for the same reasons, at Ac 2:38n. If the preposition ek can have but a single, uniform meaning, then this proves too much for the case of some who would so argue, for the preposition occurs with two significances at 1 J 2:19, or the case for unconditional "eternal security" generally advocated by many who also accept immersion is demolished, for "they went out from (ek) us," showing that they were not "of (ek) us." But if ek means only "out" from being within a place, object, substance, or group, then these individuals must have been within the group from which they left in the fullest sense: they thus had been genuine believers who apostatized if ek can have no lesser degree of significance in the first clause. ACTS 9

Saul, having sought and obtained letters from the high priest, sets out for Damascus, to persecute the disciples, 1, 2. Drawing near the city, he is surrounded by a light from heaven, and, falling to the earth, hears Jesus expostulating with him, 3-5. He submits, and is led blind to Damascus, where he continues three days, without sight or food, 6-9. Ananias is directed in a vision to go to him; by whom he is restored to sight, and baptized, 10-18. Immediately he preaches in the synagogue, with great boldness, 19-22. The Jews seek to kill him, but he escapes from them, 23-25. He goes to Jerusalem, and is by Barnabas introduced to the apostles, 26-28. Preaching boldly in the name of Jesus, his life is in danger, and he is sent to Tarsus, 29, 30. The church has rest, and is edified and multiplied, 31. Peter heals Eneas at Lydda, 32-35; and at Joppa raises Tabitha from the dead, 36-43.

ACTS 10

Cornelius, a devout centurion in Caesarea but a Gentile, being directed by an angel, sends for Peter to instruct him, 1-8; who in the mean time is prepared by a vision, 9-16; and, being commanded by the Spirit, he, attended by certain disciples, accompanies the messengers, 17-23. Cornelius renders undue honor to Peter, who declines it, 24-26; and shows the occasion of his sending for him, avowing the readiness of himself and his friends to receive the word of God from him, 27-33. Peter preaches to them Jesus, and salvation by faith in him, 34-43. The Holy Spirit is poured out on the company, as on the apostles on the day of Pentecost; and Peter commands them to be baptized, 44-48.

This city, once an obscure fortress called Strato's Tower, was built and superbly decorated by Herod the Great, and called Caesarea, in honor of Augustus Caesar, to whom he dedicated it in the 28th year of his reign (Josephus, Ant. l. xv. xvi.). It was situated on the shore of the Mediterranean, between Joppa and Dora, with a haven, rendered by Herod the most convenient on the coast: according to Ibn Idris and Abulfeda, 30 miles from Jaffa, or Joppa, 32 from Ramlay, and 36 from Acco, or Ptolemais; and according to Josephus, 600 stadia, or 75 miles, from Jerusalem (Ant. l. xiii. c. 19. Bel. l. i. c. 3), though the real distance is probably not more than 62 miles. Nothing now remains of the former splendor of Caesarea: the supposed sites of the ancient edifices are mere mounds of indefinable form; the waves wash the ruins of the mole, the tower, and the port; the whole of the surrounding country is a sandy desert; and not a creature except beasts of prey, resides within many miles of this silent desolation (See Buckingham's Travels, pp. 126-138, and Dr. E. (Ernst Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, p. 359). "The form of interrogation here used (with meeti) is equivalent to a strong negation. 'Surely no one will now venture to forbid, etc.' (Compare Mt 7:16. Mk 4:21. Lk 6:37. Jn 4:49.) The same verb which, applied to persons, means forbid, when applied to things, is better rendered by withhold, as in Lk 6:29, where to take is supplied by the translators" (J. A. Alexander, Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles, vol. 1, p. 417). forbid. Just as Abraham was justified by faith, having believed God, and had righteousness imputed to him (Ge 15:6) before the institution of circumcision (Ge 17:10, 23. 21:4. Ro 4:10), and before any other associated outward act of obedience on his part (Ge 22:12-18. Ro *4:2, 3. He ¢11:8 w Ge 12:1, 4), and is so accounted "the father of all them that believe" (Ro 4:11), so Cornelius and his household believed and received remission of sins, as evidenced by the Holy Spirit coming upon him and all his, before they underwent the rite of water baptism. This dismisses the view of those who believe that ritual water baptism is essential to salvation (Mk 16:16n. Jn 3:5) or the remission of sins (Ac 2:38n), for Cornelius and his household received the Holy Spirit on the basis of their faith before they were water baptized. Since there is no evidence in the New Testament that after Christ's resurrection any unsaved individual was the recipient of the Holy Spirit, it can be confidently affirmed that Cornelius and his household were saved before experiencing water baptism; indeed, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the mark of a true believer (Ro +*8:9, 11), and the case of Cornelius proves that the Holy Spirit is received before the rite of water baptism. Shedd notes "the phraseology implies that the baptismal water was brought into the room. 'Can any man forbid the water (to hudor), that these should not be baptized?' This phraseology would be unnatural, if the water in question were in a river, pond, or reservoir; but natural, if it were in a vessel" (W. G. Ga √3:27. to be baptized. Where were Cornelius and his household baptized? According to ver. 27, they were inside the home of Cornelius, where many were gathered. There is no notice of their having gone anywhere else to have the rite performed. Therefore, the evidence suggests that in this case Cornelius and his household were baptized in his own home. This corresponds to several other cases in Acts: Saul or Paul in a chamber at Damascus (Ac 9:17, 18), the baptism of Lydia, away from her home and from change of raiment at Philippi (Ac 16:14, 15), the Jailor at midnight in a prison (Ac 16:33, 34), the baptism of "the twelve" without warning or preparation at Ephesus (Ac 19:1-7). While the theory of immersion rests upon a sufficient quantity of water represented by a river (Mk 1:9n) and much water (Jn 3:23n) alleged in the baptism of John, the ritual baptisms under Christianity present not a single circumstance (excepting that of the Ethiopian Eunuch, Ac 8:36-39n) to which appeal could be made to prove a dipping into water (J. W. Dale, Christic Baptism, p. 182). See related notes (Ac 1:5n. 2:41n. 8:36-39n). Ro ◐+*6:3, 4n. Ga 3:27. the name. Ac +*2:38n. *8:16. Then prayed. Ac 16:15. Jn 4:40.

Peter is blamed by those of the circumcision, for going among the Gentiles, 1-3. He satisfies them, by relating the whole transaction; and they "glorify God, who had given to the Gentiles repentance unto life," 4-18. The gospel having spread to Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch, 19-21; Barnabas is sent to Antioch, who rejoices over the converts, and exhorts them to persevere, 22-24. He goes to fetch Saul from Tarsus, and many are instructed at Antioch, where the disciples are first called Christians, 25, 26. Agabus foretells a famine; and the disciples at Antioch send relief to their brethren in Judea, by Barnabus and Saul, 27-30.

Camararius would render the word othonee by mappa, a table napkin, and Daniel Heinsius, by a shepherd's bag, or sack, in which they were accustomed to put food, platters, trenchers, and other things. It was a type of the Christian church, separated from the world; the living creatures of all kinds of which it was full, were the people of all nations included in the church; it was knit at the four corners, to show that they were gathered together from the four quarters of the globe; it descended from heaven, in the same manner as the New Jerusalem is represented in the Apocalypse, to intimate, that though the church exists in the world, it is not of the world, but of celestial origin; and the drawing back of it into heaven was designed to teach us, that, as the Church has its origin from heaven, so it shall return victorious thither. In this representation, the condition of believing Gentiles is described: they were about to constitute one Church with the believing Jews, and be made partakers of the heavenly inheritance. See a dissertation by Bernard Duysing, Critici Sacri, vol. xiii. pp. 610-620. Jones' Works, vol. iii. pp. 44, 45. It should be noted, however, that this inheritance, though heavenly in its nature as being from heaven and under its authority, is the ultimate theocratic kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, which shall be established at the Second Advent here upon the earth (He +*11:16n). The participle rendered "when (we) believed" refers alike to "them" and to "us" (Thomas Walker). Notice it does not say that the Spirit was conferred upon their being circumcised, the point of the controversy, but upon their faith, that spiritual gifts were received. It is at the point of faith, not circumcision or ritual water baptism, that a person is saved and receives the Holy Spirit. There is no basis in Scripture to teach that the Holy Spirit gives his gifts to an unsaved individual at the point of his placing faith in Christ, but that the individual is not truly saved until after he has received water baptism. This is the point to the debate question, Do you baptize an alien sinner (an as yet unsaved person), or a saved person? The command of our Lord is to make disciples first, then baptize them (Mt +*28:19). Nowhere in Scripture are we authorized to baptize unsaved individuals in order to save them; they are baptized as a public confession to the fact that they have been saved. In this sense the Bible teaches believer's baptism, not unbeliever's baptism, as well expressed by P. W. Grant's title, Christian Baptism the Baptism of Christians. The Spirit is conferred upon Jew or Gentile alike upon their faith in Christ. Ac +10:43. 1 C √12:13. Ep 1:13. +*4:4. the Lord Jesus Christ. Ac +1:21. +*10:36. 15:26. 20:21. 28:31. what. ACTS 12

King Herod persecutes the church; kills James, the brother of John; and imprisons Peter, 1-4; who, in answer to unceasing prayer, is delivered out of prison by an angel, 5-17. Herod puts the keepers to death; and leaving Jerusalem goes to Caesarea, 18, 19. Proudly receiving the honor due to God alone, he is smitten by an angel, and dies miserably, 20-23. The word of God prospers, 24. Barnabas and Saul return to Antioch, 25.

12. considered. Ac 14:6g. he came. Ac 4:23. 16:40. house of Mary. There is an indirect clue not furnished in Acts that Barnabas and Mark are related to one another, for in Col 4:10 it is mentioned that Mark is the son of the sister of Barnabas. The history (Ac 15:37, 39) mentions the fact of Barnabas's adherence to Mark, but not the reason of it; this is supplied by Paul incidentally in his epistle: Mark was his near kinsman (Col 4:10). Mark's mother, thus referred to, must have been a person of some repute. So when Peter was delivered from prison, he went to her house, "where many were gathered together praying." These are undesigned coincidences, depicting real transactions among real persons, marking the authenticity and historicity of these corresponding records. Paley notes that this "air of reality and business, as well as of seriousness and conviction, which pervades the whole" of Paul's letters and Luke's history are qualities that reveal on nearly every page "the language of a mind actuated by real occasions, and operating upon real circumstances." This "air of reality and business," of "seriousness and conviction," argues powerfully of the truthfulness of the record for anyone who is sensible to these qualities. This proof of authenticity is "not to be deemed occult or imaginary because it is incapable of being drawn out in words, or of being conveyed to the apprehension of the reader in any other way than by sending him to the books themselves" (Horae Paulinae, p. 197). Paley further notes that Paul's epistles "are connected with his History by their particularity, and by the numerous circumstances which are found in them." The History and Epistles are independent documents unknown to, or at least unconsulted by, each other. Yet the substance, and frequently very minute details of the History are recognized in the Epistles by allusions and references. These allusions and references cannot be imputed to design, nor, without a foundation in truth, be accounted for by accident. They are "hints and expressions and single words dropping as it were fortuitously from the pen of the writer, or drawn forth, each by the occasion proper to the place in which it occurs, but widely removed from any view to consistency or agreement. These, we know, are effects which reality naturally produces, but which, without reality at the bottom, can hardly be conceived to exist" (Horae Paulinae, pp. 197, 198). No forger would devise them, for undesigned coincidences, like these found in Scripture, being difficult to observe, would be largely unnoticed by the great mass of readers and students, and could not serve his purpose. I have made these available once again to Bible students in this new edition of the Treasury of Scripture Knowledge because of their evidential value for apologetics, and because their very nature relates to the kind of close Bible study which the cross references in the Treaury make possible. The alert student will find many on his own, and as

R.A. Torrey's "Introduction" to previous editions of the Treasury states, the Treasury "greatly strengthens faith" and "emphasises the truth by bringing in a multitude of witnesses" (see related notes on ver. 17n. Both refer to his prominence in the Church at Jerusalem, and his stationary residence there. He is spoken of as if he were a leader in Jerusalem, in Ga 1:19 and 2:9. This idea agrees with Ac 12:17 and 21:17, 18, where he is referred to as the head of the Church there; and in the council regarding circumcision of the Gentiles, James was the person who closed the debate. This proves the truth of the circumstances, and confirms all the parts of the narrative that relate to it (see further related note on undesigned coincidences at ver. 12). Ac 15:13. *21:18. ACTS 13

Barnabas and Saul, by the command of the Holy Spirit, are set apart from among other teachers at Antioch with fasting and prayer, and sent forth to preach the gospel, 1-3. Attended by John Mark, they arrive at Cyprus, and preach at Salamis, 4, 5. At Paphos, Elymas the sorcerer, opposing them, is smitten with blindness, and the deputy, Sergius Paulus, believes, 6-12. They pass through Pamphylia (where Mark leaves them) to Antioch in Pisidia, 13, 14. Saul, now named Paul, preaches in the synagogue, showing that Jesus is the Messiah, through whom all believers are pardoned and justified; and warning his hearers not to reject him, 15-41. The Gentiles desire to hear the word again; and some Jews and proselytes join Paul and Barnabas, 42, 43. Almost the whole city throng to hear the word, 44. The envious Jews gainsay and blaspheme; and the apostles turn to the Gentiles, of whom many believe, 45-49. The Jews raise a persecution, and drive Paul and Barnabas away, who go to Iconium, 50, 51. The disciples are filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit, 52.

ACTS 14

Paul and Barnabas preach with success at Iconium; and, being driven thence by the Jews, they preach at Lystra, 1-7. They heal a man who had been a cripple from his birth, 8-10. The priests and people attempt to sacrifice to them as gods, and are hardly restrained by their most earnest expostulations, 11-18. Paul is stoned, at the instigation of the Jews from Antioch and Iconium, and left for dead; but reviving, he goes with Barnabas to Derbe, 19, 20. They return to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the churches, and ordaining elders in each of them, 21-23. Passing through Pisidia, Pamphylia, and Perga, they sail to Antioch in Syria, and rehearse to the church what things God had wrought by them, 24-28.

ACTS 15

Dissensions having been excited, in the church at Antioch, about circumcising the Gentile converts; Paul and Barnabas are sent to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles and elders on the question, 1, 2. They arrive at Jerusalem, and the apostles and elders assemble, 3-5. Peter declares his opinion, 6-11. Paul and Barnabas report what God had done by them among the Gentiles, 12. James decides against circumcising the Gentile converts, but proposes some rules for their conduct, 13-21. Letters are sent by messengers, accompanying Paul and Barnabas, to the churches, with the determination of the council, and that of the Holy Spirit also; which are received with joy, 22-31. Judas and Silas, the messengers, abide at Antioch, and labor there, 32-35. Paul and Barnabas propose to revisit the churches which they had planted; but are separated by a sharp contention about John Mark; and set out to preach the gospel in different directions, 36-41.

ACTS 16

Paul and Silas come to Derbe and Lystra, and Paul, having circumcised Timothy, takes him for an assistant, 1-3. They deliver the apostolic decree to the churches, which are established, and increased in numbers, 4, 5. Having gone through Phrygia and Galatia, the Spirit forbids them to preach in Asia and Bithynia, and they come to Troas, 6-8. A vision directs them to go into Macedonia, and they arrive at Philippi, 9-12. Lydia, being converted, entertains them, 13-15. Paul casts out a spirit of divination, 16-18; and, in consequence, he and Silas are seized, scourged, imprisoned, and put in the stocks, 19-24. They pray and sing praises; and an earthquake opens the doors of the prison, and looses their bonds, 25, 26. The jailor, prevented by Paul from killing himself, is converted, with his family, 27-34. Paul and Silas, being set at liberty, refuse to leave the prison, till requested by the magistrates, 35-39. They comfort the brethren and depart, 40.

This far in the account we know not that she has a family. "The act of her baptism cannot be separated from that of her family. Now if her family were of mature age, capable of attention to the word spoken, how is it that they are not mentioned with her, as attending, since they are mentioned with her as receiving baptism? ...there cannot be a clearer instance to warrant the baptism of those children who have not attended to the word preached" (C. Had oikos in reference to persons been rendered family, New Testament teaching on infant baptism would have been clear. Oikos never means a married pair not having children, or the parents distinct from the children. It sometimes refers to the children distinct from the parents (1 C 1:16 w 16:15, 17), for Paul baptized the family of Stephanus, but not Stephanus himself. He salutes the family of Onesiphorus (2 T 1:16. 4:19), who was apparently absent from them. Oikos sometimes designates the family and absolutely excludes servants or household, as Noah (He 11:7. 1 P 3:20). Oikos designates not only minors, but children in the youngest possible state of life (1 T 3:4, 12). It has reference to babes and sucklings, infants, in 1 T 5:14, where "guide the house" is oikodespotein, literally despotize the offspring or family, mentioned in connection with "younger women...bear children." Those who ask for Bible evidence for infant baptism have it right here. It is impossible that there would be no infants in all the households which were baptized in the record of Acts and elsewhere in the New Testament (Lydia, the Philippian Jailor, Stephanas, are the instances most generally noted; frequently overlooked are the instances of Cornelius, Crispus, Onesiphorus, Aristobulus, and Narcissus). Since the word itself requires the idea of infants (1 T 5:14n), and several household baptisms included all of the family, infants must have been included. There is no suggestion that they left the confines of his home or the jail at midnight to find sufficient water for immersion. When forced to be violators, however, they must expect to suffer the consequences (Ro 13:4). Jesus urged following a course of action, whenever possible, which did not bring undue hardship, persecution, or reprisal, especially when living under repressive governments (Mt 5:39-42). ACTS 17

Paul preaches at Thessalonica; and some, both Jews and Greeks, believe, 1-4. The unbelieving Jews raise disturbances, and trouble the rulers, 5-9. Paul and Silas are sent by night to Berea, 10. The Bereans ingenuously attend to the word, and "search the scriptures daily: therefore many believe," 11, 12. The Jews of Thessalonica follow Paul and Silas to Berea, to stir up persecution, 13; Paul is conducted to Athens, 14, 15. His zeal is excited by the excessive idolatry of that city; and he disputes in the synagogue, and the forum with the philosophers, 16-18. He is brought before the Areopagus, 19-21. He preaches the living God, the Creator and Lord of all, as hitherto unknown to the Athenians, 22-29. He calls on them to repent; because God will judge the world by Jesus, whom he has raised from the dead, 30, 31. Some mock, others purpose to hear him again, and a very few believe, 32-34.

It was a noble mart, and the most populous of all Macedonia; and it still retains somewhat of its ancient splendor, being five miles in circumference, and containing a population of upwards of 60,000 persons (See the travels of Dr. Clarke, etc.). ver. 11, 13. It is implied in 1 Th 2:9, 10, that Paul dwelt at Thessalonica a long time; but from this text (Ac 17:2) it seems that he spent there only "three sabbath days." The apparent discrepancies disprove design, and are not difficult to reconcile. It is expressly stated that this was the time during which Paul went in unto the Jews, and that does not preclude the supposition that thereafter he preached to the Gentiles, until his success provoked the Jews, who were "filled with envy," to assault Jason's house, where Paul dwelt (Ac 17:5). It was Paul's custom in every place first to address the Jews, and afterwards to turn to the Gentiles (Ac 13:46. 18:6, 11. 19:9, 10. Ro +*1:16). In 1 Th 1:9, it is stated that Paul's preaching converted many idolatrous Gentiles (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 154-156). Ac 17:15, 16. 18:1. 1 Th 3:1. Athens was the most celebrated city of Greece, not merely for political greatness and military power, but for the learning, eloquence, and politeness of its inhabitants, and for the cultivation of the arts and sciences. It was situated in a delightful plain of Attica, on the Saronic gulf, opposite the eastern coast of Peloponnesus, in a sort of penninsula formed by the two rivers, the Ilissus and Cephisus, about 35 miles east of Corinth, and four miles from the sea. 16. Cir. A.M. 4058. A.D. 54. Paul waited. It is not stated in Acts that Timothy joined Paul at Athens; but the supposition that he did so is not inconsistent with several things there stated: (a) that Paul sent for Timothy and Silas to come to him (Ac 17:15); (b) that "Paul waited for them at Athens" (Ac 17:16); (c) that Paul did not leave Athens abruptly. Thus an event, omitted from the History but necessary to make it complete, is supplied in 1 Th 3:2-7, which mentions Timothy at Athens, and that Timothy was sent from Athens to Thessalonica. The undesigned coincidence consists in the Epistle providing a circumstance which supplies the omission in the History, witnessing to their mutual historicity and authenticity. (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 151-153). See Ac 12:12n for related notes on undesigned coincidences. ver. 15. his spirit. Gr. pneuma, ƒ121A2, Mt +26:41n. ƒ121A2, Ps +51:10. ACTS 18

Paul goes to Corinth, meets with Aquila and Priscilla; works with them as a tentmaker; and preaches, first to the Jews, 1-5; and, when they opposed and blasphemed, to the Gentiles with more success, 6-8. Encouraged by a vision, he remains there a long time, 9-11. The Jews bring him before Gallio, the proconsul who refuses to attend to such questions, 12-17. Paul returns by Ephesus to Jerusalem, goes from thence to Antioch, and revisits the churches which he had planted, 18-23. Apollos preaches at Ephesus: and being more fully instructed by Aquila and Priscilla, he goes to Achaia, where he labors very successfully, 24-28.

Ac 2:9. 1 P 1:1. lately come from. Aquila and Priscilla are greeted in Ro 16:3. Paul met them in Corinth (Ac 18:2) just after they had left Rome. They are found in Ephesus in Ac 18:19-26, where they instructed Apollos, and where they had a church which met in their home (1 C 16:19). These incidental notices fix the time of writing of some of Paul's epistles. Aquila and Priscilla are back in Rome when Paul wrote Romans (Ro 16:3). There was ample time for this: (a) Paul's stay in Ephesus after writing 1 Corinthians; (b) the time he spent in Macedonia (Ac 20:2); (c) the three months he spent in Greece, toward the close of which he wrote Romans. The points by which the time is noted are so intricate that an impostor could not have avoided going wrong. The praise of Aquila and Priscilla for their devotion agrees with what is said in Acts; but the notices in Acts are too indirect as material for a forger, and yet without the Acts the picture would have been impossible (see related notes at ver. 18 and Ac 12:12). Women may teach other women and children, as in a Sunday school, and if this case of Priscilla may be generalized, Paul's injunctions do not prohibit the private instruction of men in a private home, as in a home Bible study, particularly if done jointly with their husbands. Since other Scripture informs us that churches met in homes (2 J +*10), specifically the home of Aquila and Priscilla (Ro √16:3-5), the evidence is that women are permitted to teach men even in church. Paul's injunction may be limited to the circumstance where women are placed in a position where they teach with binding authority over men. Note that women prophesied (Ac 2:17. 21:9. 1 C +*11:5) and participated in group prayer meetings (Ac 1:14. 12:12, 13), so the command to silence is not absolute. 1 C 11:5n. ◐+*14:34n. 1 T +*2:11, 12. they took. 1 S *9:27. ◐+√25:17. 2 K +*5:13. ACTS 19

Paul, arriving at Ephesus, finds disciples who knew only John's baptism; and, having instructed them, and baptized them in the name of Christ, he confers on them the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, 1-7. He preaches, first in the synagogue; and then very successfully in a school for two years, God confirming his word by miracles, 8-12. Certain Jewish exorcists, attempting to cast out a devil in the name of Jesus, are driven away naked and wounded, 13-17. Many, who had used magical arts, are converted, and burn their books, 18-20. Paul purposing to go into Macedonia, and then to Jerusalem, and afterwards to Rome, sends friends before him, 21, 22. Demetrius, and the silversmiths at Ephesus, raise a mob against him, to support their gainful traffic and the worship of Diana; and this is attended with great uproar and confusion, 23-34. The town clerk, with great difficulty and address, appeases it, 35-41.

This statement corresponds with 1 C 16:9, "a great door and effectual," as pointing to the place where 1 Corinthians was written. Every note of place in the Epistle is consistent with the supposition that Paul wrote it before leaving Ephesus: "fought with the beasts" (1 C 15:32); "churches of Asia" (1 C 16:19); "Aquila and Priscilla" (1 C 16:19), who were then at Ephesus (Ac 18:11, 26); "I will tarry at Ephesus" (1 C 16:8), "a great door and effectual" (1 C 16:9), compared with "so mightily grew the word" (Ac 19:20), and the complaint of Demetrius (Ac 19:26); "many adversaries" (1 C 16:9), compared with "divers were hardened" (Ac 19:9). The agreement is complete, but there is no trace of design. See related notes listed at Ac 12:12. the word. ver. 10. Ac +15:35. 1 Th *2:13.

Paley remarks "If the passage in the Epistle was taken from that in the Acts, why was Spain put in? If the passage in the Acts was taken from that in the Epistle, why was Spain left out? If the passages were unknown to each other, nothing can account for their conformity but truth" (Horae Paulinae, p. 36). See related notes at Ac 12:12. ACTS 20

Paul and his friends go into Macedonia and Greece, and return to Troas, 1-6; where, as Paul preaches long, Eutychus falls from a window, and is taken up dead: but he is restored to life; and the apostles and disciples break bread, and converse till daybreak, 7-12. Paul and his friends sail to Miletus, 13-16. He sends for the elders of Ephesus, 17. He states to them his ministry, conduct, and prospects; exhorting, warning, and instructing them with great fervency, and faithful love, and "commending them to God and the word of his grace," 18-35. He prays with them; and takes a most affectionate farewell, leaving them in great sorrow, because they should see his face no more, 36-38.

Romans was written immediately before Paul set forward on this journey; these words in Acts were uttered by him when he had proceeded as far as Miletus. The two passages, without any resemblance between them that could induce us to suspect that they were borrowed from one another, represent the state of Paul's mind regarding the outcome of this journey, in terms of substantial agreement (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, p. 38). As Paul continued on this journey his fears increased, for the Holy Spirit testified regarding the bonds and affliction which awaited him at Jerusalem (Ac 21:4, 11). Lk *18:31-33. Jn 13:1. 18:4. Paley suggests this was Paul's inference from the prophecies he had received concerning the bonds and afflictions which awaited him at Jerusalem, about which he shows such anxiety (ver. 22n). Paul probably did revisit Ephesus, for at Rome he wrote to the Philippians that he expected to go to them shortly (Ph 2:24); and he asked Philemon at Colosse to prepare him a lodging, as he expected soon to join him (Phm 22). Paul could hardly go from Rome to Colosse, or from Colosse to Philippi, without taking Ephesus in his way. These hints that make it probable that Paul did visit Ephesus after his liberation at Rome constitute an undesigned coincidence (Paley, Horae Paulinae, p. 164). There are a number of other church titles in the New Testament (Ro *16:4, 5, 16. 1 C 16:1, 19. 2 C 8:1. Ga 1:2, 22. Col 4:16. 1 Th 1:1. He *12:23. 2 J +*10. Re 22:16). In thirty-eight chapters, Ambrose Serle discusses as many additional more general titles of the church in his volume The Church of God. of God. Manuscript authority for this reading is about equally divided between it and "of the Lord." Alford, who favored the reading "the Lord" in his first two editions, changed to "of God" in his last edition, and gives significant reasons to support his change of view. In favor of regarding "church of the Lord" as the original it may be argued (1) some busy scribe may have written at the side, as so often occurs, "God," and over time this gloss by degrees would become adopted into the text and supersede the original word, or become combined with it; (2) since the expression "church of the Lord" is not found elsewhere in the writings of Paul, this reading would have been corrected to make it conform to the very usual one, "church of God"; (3) possible, but very unlikely, the alteration may have been made solely in the interests of orthodoxy. In favor of regarding "church of God" as the original reading, Alford states "If 'God' was the original, but one reason can be given why it should have been altered to 'Lord,' and that one sure to have operated. It would stand as a bulwark against Arianism, an assertion which no skill could evade, which must therefore be modified. If 'God' stood in the text originally, it was sure to be altered to 'Lord.' The converse was not sure, nor indeed likely, from similar reasons, the passage offering no stumblingblock to orthodoxy." In further support of "church of God," Pauline usage favors this reading; is it probable that Paul would here use an expression which he or the other apostles are not recorded as having used anywhere else? In most of the places where Paul uses "church of God," he uses it in a precisely similar manner, in a position of peculiar solemnity or as the consummation of a climax (1 C 10:32. 15:9. Ga 1:13. 1 T 3:5, 15). The present passage loses by the substitution of "Lord" the peculiar emphasis which its structure and context seem to require. Therefore, since it is more likely that the alteration should have been to "Lord" than to "God," more likely that the speaker would have used "God" than "Lord," and more consonant to the evidently emphatic position of the word, Alford states he has decided for the reading of the received text, "church of God" (Greek Testament, vol. 2, p. 230, 231, on Ac 20:28). Bengel favored "church of God" as the original reading, but notes significantly that if "Lord" is to be received into the text, it means, parallel to Old Testament usage, the "Church of Jehovah" (Word Studies, vol. 1, p. 888). F. H. A. Scrivener notes that the Patristic evidence slightly favors "church of God," a large number of MSS. support the conflate reading "church of the Lord and of God," a reading which vouches for the presence of "God" in the earliest codices. The preponderance in favor of "church of God," "undoubtedly the harder form, is very marked," and coupled with the reasoning of Alford, there remains very little room for hesitation (Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, vol. 2, pp. 374-377). Frederick Nolan relates that some of the editions of the church fathers have been "notoriously corrupted, as it is conceived, by the Arians." But he shows that the genuine works of Ignatius follows the Byzantine text, "church of God." Ireneus follows the received text, for he is discussing the subject of the mysteries of the Church (Iren. adv. Haer. Lib. iii. cap. xiv. p. 201). "Now, as there was no mystery in our Lord's purchasing the Church with his blood, but a great mystery in 'God's purchasing it with his own blood,' Ireneus's allegation of this passage appears to me to be perfectly irrelevant, unless that primitive father read, with Ignatius and the Vulgar Greek, 'the church of God, which he purchased with his own blood'" (An Inquiry into the Integrity of the Greek Vulgate, or Received Text of the New Testament, pp. 516-518). or, the Lord. Scrivener protests strongly against the interpretation found in Darby's New Translation, which renders this phrase "the blood of his own," and the suggestion of Dr. Hort (Notes, p. 99), who would render "through the blood that was His own," i.e. as being His Son's, for even Hort admits, "this general sense, if indicated, is not sufficiently expressed in the text as it stands" (Scrivener, Introduction, vol. 2, p. 377). J. H. Moulton supports such a rendering, suggesting the grammatical usage is similar to the use of o idios without a noun expressed, as in such passages as Jn 1:11; 13:1; Ac 4:23; 24:23 (Grammar, vol. 1, p. 90). Such a rendering, Nigel Turner asserts, is a "theological expedient," and is not the natural way to take the Greek (Grammatical Insights, p. 15). If this had been the intended force of the statement, either Paul or Luke would have placed "Son" in the text. A. T. Robertson explains "Through the agency of (dia) his own blood. Whose blood? If tou theou (God) is correct, as it is, then Jesus is here called "God" who shed his own blood for the flock. It will not do to say that Paul did not call Jesus God, for we have Ro 9:5; Col 2:9 and T 2:13 where he does that very thing, besides Col 1:15-20 and Ph 2:5-11" (Word Pictures, vol. 3, p. 353). B. B. Warfield notes, with regard to citing Ro 9:5 and T 2:13, "when it is objected that these are disputed passages, it is just to remind the objector that this will exclude his original statement as well as our rebuttal of it" (Textual Criticism, p. 188), a fallacy in logic akin to asserting "there are no absolutes," which, if true, negates the assertion. Consistent with this speech to the Ephesian elders are Paul's statements in his letters that he maintained himself by his own labor in Thessalonica (2 Th 3:8, 9); that of the churches in Macedonia, only the Philippians gave him aid (Ph 4:15); and correspond as to his reason, to be an example, to support the weak. The sentiment in the Epistle and that in the speech recorded in the History are so alike, though the words show so little of imitation or resemblance, that the agreement cannot be explained without supposing the speech and letter to have really proceeded from the same person (Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 158, 159). ACTS 21

Paul and his friends leave Miletus, and arrive at Tyre; where, finding disciples, they stay seven days, and part from them with prayer, kneeling down on the seashore, 1-6. They proceed to Caesarea, to the house of Philip the evangelist, whose four daughters prophesy, 7-9. Agabus foretells that Paul will be bound at Jerusalem: he is not however dissuaded from going thither, 10-16. Arriving at Jerusalem, he reports, to James and the elders, the success of his labors among the Gentiles, 17-19. He is persuaded to purify himself at the temple, with four men who had a vow, 20-26; where he is set upon by some Jews from Asia, and in danger of being slain in a tumult, but is rescued by the chief captain; who binds him with chains, and leads him to the castle, 27-36. He requests, and is permitted, to speak to the people, 37-40.

An undesigned coincidence here demonstrates the conformity between the argument of Paul's epistle to the Romans and this history of Paul in Acts. Here in the history he is charged with having taught the Jews to forsake Moses. This is a very natural inference from Paul's teaching in Romans, that justification is by faith alone, and not by the works of the law. His object in the Epistle was to put Gentiles on an exact parity with Jews. The effect (here in Acts) is entirely consistent with the cause (in the Epistle); but the consistency is indirect and obviously undesigned (see listing of related notes at Ac 12:12). 2 Th 2:3g. Moses. ⁄121A6, Lk +16:20. saying. ver. 28. ought not. Ac 15:19-21. Ro 2:28, 29. 1 C 7:18, 19. to walk. ver. 24. Mk 7:5. Ga 2:14. customs. Ac +6:14.

That is, in furnishing sacrifices; which was a common and very popular act among the Jews. ACTS 22

The apostle declares, before the people, the place of his birth, his education, his zeal against the gospel; his conversion, and his commission from Jesus to preach to the Gentiles, 1-21. At the mention of the Gentiles, the people furiously exclaim against him; and the chief captain orders his soldiers to examine him by scourging, 22-24; which he avoids, by pleading the privilege of a Roman citizen, 25-29. He is brought before the council, 30.

6. And it came. It is evident that the apostle considered his extraordinary conversion as a most complete demonstration of the truth of Christianity; and when all the particulars of his education, his previous religious principles, his zeal, his enmity against Christians, and his prospects of secular honors and preferments by persecuting them, are compared with the subsequent part of his life, and the sudden transition from a furious persecutor to a zealous preacher of the gospel, in which he labored and suffered to the end of his life, and for which he died a martyr, it must convince every candid and impartial person that no rational account can be given of this change, except what he himself assigns; and consequently, if that be true, that Christianity is Divine. It was this very consideration which led to the conversion of Lord Lyttelton in the last century. George Lyttelton, together with Gilbert West, both skeptics, determined to assault the truth of Christianity, persuaded that the Bible was an imposture. Lyttelton chose the Conversion of Paul and Mr. West the Resurrection of Christ for the subject of hostile criticism. In the process each was converted to firm belief in the truth of the Bible and Christianity, and each produced what are still unanswerable defenses of the Bible. Lyttelton wrote Observations on the Conversion of Saint Paul, West wrote Observations on the History and Evidence of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Of Lyttelton's production, Dr. Samuel Johnson forcibly and justly says, it is "a treatise to which infidelity has never been able to fabricate a specious answer." Lyttelton's masterful argument, which opens with the proposition "The conversion and apostleship of St. Paul alone, duly considered, was of itself a demonstration sufficient to prove Christianity to be a divine revelation," is analyzed and condensed by J. L. Campbell in volume two of The Fundamentals, pp. 353-366. In his argument Lyttelton shows that Paul (1) was not an impostor deliberately proclaiming what he knew to be false with intent to deceive; (2) was not imposed upon by an overheated imagination, and (3) was not deceived by the fraud of others. "Unless, therefore, we are prepared to lay aside the use of our understanding and all the rules of evidence by which facts are determined, we must accept the whole story of Paul's conversion as literally and historically true. We have therefore the supernatural, and the Christian religion is proved to be a revelation from God" (Campbell, The Fundamentals, vol. 2, p. 365). that. Paul was water baptized in a standing position in a Jewish home. Nothing in this record or the parallel accounts suggests Paul went to a place where there was sufficient water for immersion. Jewish households had no provision for immersions, and even the six waterpots at the wedding of Cana would be insufficient for such a purpose (Jn 2:6n). Ac +*2:38. +8:12. ‖9:18. It was not the ritual water of literal baptism that washed away Paul's sins, but the blood of Christ. This is certain from Scripture, for Re √1:5 asserts that the blood of Christ has washed us from our sins. Now if we ask the question, "Which washing is the real, and which the symbolic, washing of our sins?" the only answer possible is that the blood cleansing is real, the water symbolic. Ritual baptism symbolizes the washing away of sins by the blood of Christ. This is the basis for asserting that ritual baptism symbolizes what is accomplished by the Holy Spirit in real baptism (Ac 1:5n). ACTS 23

Paul, pleading his conscientiousness before God, is smitten at the command of the high priest, whom he reproves for his injustice, 1-3. Being censured for it, he excuses the sharpness of his language, 4, 5. Declaring himself a Pharisee, in respect of the resurrection, a division in the council is excited, 6-9. The chief captain, fearing lest he should be torn in pieces, conveys him back to the castle, 10. The Lord favors Paul by a most encouraging vision, 11. Forty Jews conspire to murder him; binding themselves by oath, not to eat or drink till they have done it, 12, 13. They avow their purpose to the chief priests, and secure their concurrence, 14, 15. The conspiracy is discovered to Paul, and from him to the chief captain, 16-22; who sends Paul, under a strong guard, and with a letter, to Felix the governor at Caesarea, 23-35.

Soon after the holding of the first council at Jerusalem, Ananias, son of Nebedenus, was deprived of the high priest's office, for certain acts of violence, and sent to Rome, whence he was afterwards released, and returned to Jerusalem. Between the death of Jonathan, who succeeded him and was murdered by Felix, and the high priesthood of Ismael, who was invested with that office by Agrippa, an interval elapsed in which this dignity was vacant. This was the precise time when St. Paul was apprehended; and the Sanhedrin being destitute of a president, Ananias undertook to discharge the office. It is probable that Paul was ignorant of this circumstance. Ac 24:16, 17. Thou. Ex ⟩22:28. 2 S 19:21. Ec *10:20. Ro *13:1-4. T 3:1, 2. 2 P *2:10, 13-17. Ju 8, 9.

it true, what is acknowledged. And thus in these matters the Pharisaic and the Christian faith are one (F. W. Grant, p. 114, 115). Paul affirms "I am a Pharisee." Thus Scripture teaches the doctrine of conscious existence after death. Lk +*24:37.

Such execrable vows as these were not unusual among the Jews, who, from their perverted traditions, challenged to themselves a right of punishing without any legal process, those whom they considered transgressors of the law; and in some cases, as in the case of one who had forsaken the law of Moses, they thought they were justified in killing them. They therefore made no scruple of acquainting the chief priests and elders with their conspiracy against the life of Paul, and applying for their connivance and support; who, being chiefly of the sect of the Sadducees, and the apostle's bitterest enemies, were so far from blaming them for it, that they gladly aided and abetted them in this mode of dispatching him, and on its failure they soon afterwards determined upon making a similar attempt (Ac 25:2, 3). If these were, in their bad way, conscientious men, they were under no necessity of perishing for hunger, when the providence of God had hindered them from accomplishing their vow; for their vows of abstinence from eating and drinking were as easy to loose as to bind, any of their wise men or Rabbies having power to absolve them, as Dr. Lightfoot has shown from the Talmud (Hieros, Avodah Zarah, fol. 40). 1 S 14:24, 27, 28, 40-44. ACTS 24

The high priest and elders go to Caesarea; and, by Tertullus, accuse Paul before Felix, 1-9. Paul makes his defense, refutes the charges brought against him, and gives an account of his own conduct, 10-21. Felix defers the matter, and shows favor to Paul, 22, 23. Paul reasons before Felix, and Drusilla his wife, concerning "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," till "Felix trembles," and postpones the subject to a convenient opportunity, 24, 25. He hopes in vain for a bribe to release Paul; and at length, being superseded in his government, he leaves him in prison, to please the Jews, 26, 27.

2. Seeing. Felix, bad as he was, had certainly rendered some services to Judea. He had entirely subdued a very formidable banditti which had infested the country, and sent their captain, Eliezar, to Rome (Josephus, Ant. l. xx. c. 6. Bel. l. ii. c. 22); had suppressed the sedition raised by the Egyptian impostor (Ac 21:38); and had quelled a very afflictive disturbance which took place between the Syrians and Jews of Caesarea. But, though Tertullus might truly say, "by thee we enjoy great quietness," yet it is evident that he was guilty of the grossest flattery, as we have seen both from his own historians and Josephus, that he was both a bad man, and a bad governor. ver. 26, 27. Note that the term "judge" is used in a broader sense in Scripture than in our common parlance; it is often equivalent to ruler or king (see Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, pp. 352-361). This has an important bearing upon our conception of Christ returning to judge the earth at the Second Advent. The judgeship of Christ is not limited to passing sentence, but constitutes his reign as king over the earth. Ac 18:15. Ex 18:14-16. 1 S 2:25. 8:5, 6, 20. 2 S 15:4. Is +*16:5. Da 9:21. ACTS 25

The Jews accuse Paul to Festus, first at Jerusalem, and then at Caesarea, 1-7. He answers for himself, and appeals to Caesar, 8-11. His appeal is admitted, 12. Festus being visited by king Agrippa, opens the matter to him, who desires to hear Paul, 13-22. Paul is brought forth before a most splendid assembly; and Festus states his case to them, 23-27.

The Julian law condemned those magistrates, and others, as violators of the public peace, who had put to death, tortured, scourged, imprisoned, or condemned any Roman citizen who had appealed to Caesar. This law was so sacred and imperative, that, in the persecution under Trajan, Pliny would not attempt to put to death Roman citizens, who were proved to have turned Christians, but determined to send them to Rome, probably because they had appealed (Ep. l. x. ep. 97). ver. 10, 21, 25. Four years afterwards, Claudius removed him from that kingdom to a larger one; giving him the tetrarchy of Philip, that of Lysanias, and the province which Varus governed. Nero afterwards added Julius in Perea, Tarichea, and Tiberias. Claudius gave him the power of appointing the high priest among the Jews; and instances of his exercising this power may be seen in Josephus (Ant. l. xx. c. 7. sec. 8, 11). He was strongly attached to the Romans, and did everything in his power to prevent the Jews from rebelling; and when he could not prevail, he united his troops to those of Titus, and assisted at the siege of Jerusalem. ACTS 26

Paul, before Agrippa, Festus, and their attendants, declares his manner of life and his hope as a Pharisee, 1-8; his zeal in persecuting the church, 9-11; his wonderful conversion, and call to the apostleship, 12-18; and his subsequent preaching and testimony to Christ, according to the scriptures, 19-23. Festus claims that he is mad, but he mildly denies the charge, 24, 25; and addresses Agrippa, who owns himself "almost persuaded to be a Christian," 26-28. Paul expresses his earnest desire, that every one present were altogether Christians, 29. Agrippa and the company agree with Festus, that Paul is innocent, 30-32.

Paul, attended by some friends, sails as a prisoner towards Rome, and is kindly used by the Centurion sent with him and other prisoners, 1-8. He foretells the danger of the voyage, but is not believed, 9-11. Sailing against his advice, the company are exposed to a most violent and long continued tempest, and are in extreme danger, 10-20. Paul, encouraged by an angel, assures them that all their lives shall be preserved, but that the ship shall be wrecked, 21-26; the whole of which exactly comes to pass, 27-44.

27. the fourteenth. ver. 18-20. driven. ver. 15, 17. Adria. i.e. the Adriatic Sea, *S#99g. Adria, strictly speaking, was the name of the Adriatic gulf, now the Gulf of Venice, an arm of the Mediterranean, about 400 miles long and 140 broad, stretching along the eastern shores of Italy on one side, and Dalmatia, Sclavonia, and Macedonia on the other. But the term Adria was extended far beyond the limits of this gulf, and appears to have been given to an indeterminate extent of sea, as we say, generally, the Levant. It is observable that the sacred historian does not say "in the Adriatic gulf," but "in Adria" (that is, the Adriatic sea, pelagos being understood); which, says Hesychius, was the same as the Ionian sea; and Strabo says that the Ionian gulf "is a part of that now called the Adriatic." But not only the Ionian, but even the Sicilian sea, and part of that which washes Crete, were called the Adriatic. Thus the scholiast on Dionysius Periegetis says, "they call this Sicilian sea Adria." And Ptolemy says that Sicily was bounded on the east by the Adriatic, upo Adrioi, and that Crete was bounded on the west by the Adriatic sea, upo tou Adriatikou pelagos. the shipmen. ver. 30. 1 K 9:27. Or, "the bands of the rudders;" for large vessels in ancient times had two or more rudders, which were fastened to the ship by means of bands or chains, by which they were hoisted out of the water when incapable of being used. These bands being loosed, the rudders would fall into their proper places, and serve to steer the vessel into the creek, which they had in view. and hoised. Is 33:23.

Some, however, with the learned Jacob Bryant, are of opinion that this island was Melita in the Adriatic gulf, near Illyricum; but it may be sufficient to observe, that the course of the Alexandrian ship, first to Syracuse and then to Rhegium, proves that it was the present Malta, as the proper course from the Illyrian Melita would have been first to Rhegium, before it reaches Syracuse, to which indeed it need not have gone at all.

ACTS 28

The whole company, having escaped to the island Melita, are humanely entertained by the inhabitants, 1, 2. A viper fastens on Paul's hand, which he shakes off into the fire, without harm; and the people, who at first supposed he was a murderer, believe that he is a god, 3-6. Publius, the chief man of the island, entertains them all three days, 7. Paul heals the father of Publius, and many other sick persons; and they meet with much respect and kindness, 8-10. Paul and his company depart; and having arrived within some miles of Rome, they are met by brethren from that city, 11-15. Paul is entrusted to a soldier, and dwells in his own lodging, 16. He sends for the chief of the Jews, and shows them the occasion of his coming, 17-22. He proves to a large company, from the scriptures, that Jesus is the Christ, 23. Some believe, and others do not, 24. He solemnly warns the unbelievers, and shows that the Gentiles would receive his word, 25-29. He continues during two years, to preach the gospel in his own hired house, without interruption, 30, 31.

That is, the chain with which he was bound to the "soldier that kept him," (ver. 16); a mode of custody which Dr. Lardner has shown was in use among the Romans. It is in exact conformity, therefore, with the truth of St. Paul's situation at this time, that he declares himself to be "an ambassador in a chain," en alusei, (Ep. 6:20); and the exactness is the more remarkable, as alusis, a chain, is no where used in the singular number to express any other kind of custody. See Paley's Horae Paulinae, pp. 130, 131. In Col 4:3 a different expression is used, "I am in bonds" being expressed by the verb dedemai. But Colossians and Ephesians were certainly written by the same person; and if an impostor had designedly borrowed the word alusis in the one place, he would also have done so in the other. ROMANS

ROMANS 1

The apostle shows his apostolical authority, and the great subject of his ministry, 1-5. He salutes the Christians at Rome, 6, 7; thanking God on their account, and praying for them; especially that he might come and preach among them, 8-15. The gospel is the power of God to salvation, and shows the only way of justification, 16, 17. All men of every nation are exposed to the wrath of God, for acting in opposition to the light afforded them, 18-23. A just but awful description of the Gentile world, as given up, by the just displeasure of God, to the grossest idolatries, the most degrading licentiousness, and the most atrocious iniquities, 24-32.

Those who judge others, and yet transgress themselves, are inexcusable, and cannot escape the judgment of God, 1-6. The measure of his dealings with Jews and Gentiles as it will appear at the day of judgment, 7-16. The apostle solemnly expostulates with the Jews, who trusted in the law, and yet broke it; and shows that external forms will not profit, without a renewed heart and internal piety, which God would accept even in the uncircumcised, 17-29.

Paul (ver. 12) clearly states that those without the law will yet perish without the law. How can a man be justly condemned if he has never heard the gospel? Paul answers, every man has a conscience, and no one has ever lived up to what he knows to be right. Every man knows he ought to do certain things, and ought not do certain other things, evidenced every time he passes judgment on the actions of others (Ro 2:1). Yet, no man can honestly claim that he has lived up to what he believes he ought to do. On this basis, God can judge a man, and find him wanting, because no man has ever lived up to the light of his own conscience. Is God being fair? Scripture elsewhere teaches that God is absolutely just (Ge +*18:25), and will reward every man according to his works (Ro +2:6), and there will be degrees of punishment (Lk +*12:47, 48). If only those who reject the gospel are lost, it would be safer not to preach the gospel. If a person could be saved without hearing the gospel, simply because he has not heard, then it would logically be safer not to preach the gospel, so that no one would hear, and all would be saved! There would be no reason for any missionary effort. But the command of Christ is to preach the gospel to every creature, because only through faith in Christ can one have salvation (Jn √14:6. Ac √4:12). The Bible does not teach that most men will be saved; rather, Jesus himself said most will be lost, and only a few saved (Mt +*7:14). In Mere Christianity (Part I), C. S. Lewis has a masterful argument based largely on this passage in Romans, proving the existence of God on the basis of man's sense of moral absolutes (his sense that he ought to do some things, and ought not do other things), for only God could be the source of such universal belief and conviction based upon them. excusing. 2 C +7:11g.

ROMANS 3

The advantages which the Jews possessed, 1, 2. The unbelief of some does not render the faith of God of no effect, 3, 4; who is just in punishing sin, though he takes occasion from it to display his own glory, 5-8. Passages from the Old Testament adduced to prove that the Jews, as well as others, are "all under sin," 9-19; so that no flesh is justified by the deeds of the law, 20. The "righteousness of God without the law" is "unto all and upon all that believe," without any difference, 21, 22. As all have sinned, whether Jews or Gentiles; all must be justified by the free grace of God, through faith in Christ, and the redemption of his blood, that God may be glorified, and boasting excluded, 23-30. This establishes the law, 31.

ROMANS 4

Justification by faith proved, from the example of Abraham; and the words of David, 1-8. Abraham was justified before circumcision (which was "the seal of the righteousness of faith"), that he might be the father of all believers, whether circumcised or not, 9-12. The promise was not given to him through the law, else it had been void; but, being "of faith by grace," it is sure to all his spiritual seed, in every age and nation, 13-17. The nature and strength of that faith, by which he was justified, 18-22. This was recorded, not for his sake only, but to show that all who believe in Christ, as crucified and risen, are justified in like manner, 23-25.

ROMANS 5

They who are justified by faith have peace with God, rejoice in hope, and rejoice and glory in tribulations, 1-5. The abundant love of God to them when sinners and enemies, in "reconciling them to himself by the death of his Son," assures them of final salvation, and excites them to rejoice and glory in him, 6-11. As sin and death come upon all men by Adam; so the grace of God, which justifieth unto life, with all concurrent blessings, comes more abundantly on all believers by Jesus Christ, 12-19. The law proved an occasion to the abounding of sin unto death; but this made way for the still greater abounding of grace, as "reigning through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ," 20, 21.

ROMANS 6

Believers cannot "sin on that grace may abound," as some would object; being "dead to sin," according to the meaning of baptism, which represents their conformity to Christ in his death, burial, resurrection, and living unto God, 1-10. They should reckon themselves to be "dead to sin and alive to God," 11; and, as not being "under law, but under grace," they must not suffer "sin to reign in their bodies," but yield them to God, as "instruments of righteousness," 12-15. Being "made free from sin, and become servants to righteousness," they should serve righteousness wholly, 16-20. The service of sin is unfruitful, shameful, and destructive; but the servants of God have their "fruit unto holiness, and the end eternal life," 21, 22. This is the free gift of God in Christ; but death is the wages of sin, 23.

4. we are. ver. 3. Col +*2:12, 13. 3:1-3. 1 P *3:21. buried. Since only baptism into water by immersion constitutes a burial in water, this passage is held by many to be proof that immersion is the Scriptural mode of Christian baptism. Further evidence for immersion includes the fact that John baptized "in Jordan" (Mt 3:6) or, more specifically, "in the river of Jordan" (Mk 1:5). It is also recorded that John baptized where there was "much water" (Jn 3:23), required for immersion, but unnecessary if the mode were sprinkling or pouring. The language used of Jesus that he came "up out of the water" would indicate he was immersed in the water. Similar language is used in regard to the baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch, for he likewise is said to have "come up out of the water" (Ac 8:39). As to the assertion that there was insufficient water in Jerusalem for the 3000 persons baptized on the day of Pentecost, there were the pools of Siloam and Bethesda available, to name but two specifically mentioned in Scripture as being in the vicinity. As for the provision that was made for appropriate privacy and a change of clothing, Ralph P. Martin (Worship in the Early Church, p. 101) sees this alluded to in the metaphor of "divestiture and re-clothing" in a number of passages (Ro 13:14. Ga 3:27. Ep 4:21, etc. Col 2:11, 12. 3:3, 9. 1 P 3:20—4:1). That Cornelius and Paul were baptized in private homes does not rule out immersion as the mode. As for Paul, A. T. Robertson asserts he was baptized probably by Ananias, "possibly in the pool in the house of Judas as today water is plentiful in Damascus" (Word Pictures, vol. 3, p. 121, on Ac 9:18), just as Naaman alluded to the plentiful water available there (2 K 5:12). Just so, the Philippian jailor's baptism "apparently took place in the pool or tank in which he bathed Paul and Silas (De Wette) or the rectangular basin (impluvium) in the court for receiving the rain or even in a swimming pool or bath (kolumbethra) found within the walls of the prison (Kuinoel)" (A. T. Robertson, Word Pictures, vol. 3, pp. 262, 263, on Ac 16:34). As this passage links burial to baptism, following the Lord in water baptism necessarily requires immersion into water to meet the requirements of the symbolism set forth by Paul. It may also be argued in favor of immersion that the meaning of the original word baptizo was to immerse. Thomas J. Conant asserts "The word baptizein, during the whole existence of the Greek as a spoken language, had a perfectly defined and unvarying import. In its literal use it meant, as has been shown, to put entirely into or under a liquid, or other penetrable substance, generally water, so that the object was wholly covered by the inclosing element" (The Meaning and Use of Baptizein, p. 187, 188). Alexander Carson asserts that baptizo "always signifies to dip; never expressing anything but mode" (Baptism: Its Mode and Subjects, ch. 2, sec. 10, p. 55). Contemporary scholarship reflected in the work of G. Kittel and Geoffrey Bromiley supports the view that baptizo means immerse; baptismos is said to denote only the act, defined as "immersion or baptism"; baptisma denotes the institution (TDNT, vol. 1, p. 530; TDNT abridged in one volume, p. 94; see Bromiley's article on baptism in Baker's Dictionary of Theology, "Immersion was fairly certainly the original practice and continued in general use up to the Middle Ages," p. 83). The New Testament presents a regular pattern of believer's baptism involving the sequence of "hearing," "believing," and "being baptized" (Ac 2:37, 38. 2:41. 8:12, 13. 8:35, 36. 10:44. 11:14, 15. 16:14, 15. 16:32, 33. 18:8. 19:5). Since infants are unable to "hear" and "believe," infant baptism does not appear to be a practice sanctioned by the New Testament, either by specific example or by direct command. The command to baptize disciples (Mt 28:19) is of perpetual obligation for the church until the return of Christ, for there is no word (whether by direct command, specific example, or necessary inference) in later revelation in the epistles which repeals this ordinance. Christ's command specifically pertains to ritual water baptism, for the disciples were commanded to be the administrators of such baptism; if this were a reference to baptism of the Holy Spirit, human administrators would not be involved, for no human being can baptize another human being by or into the Holy Spirit, for this is done by the sovereign act of God when a person believes in Christ (Ro 8:9, 11. 1 C 12:13). Gr. baptisma, S#908g, Mt +3:7. After comparing the various terms used in the New Testament (dip, pour, sprinkle, and wash), J. W. Shepherd concludes: (1) In the New Testament there is no record of the sprinkling of unmixed water. (2) The only provision for sprinkling in the New Testament is the "sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." (3) Water of separation, blood mingled with water, and blood are the only materials said to be sprinkled. (4) In no case whatever is baptizo or bapto translated by pouring or sprinkling. (5) While the New Testament speaks of the pouring of oil, ointment, water, oil and wine, the Holy Spirit, the wine of God's wrath, and vials of wrath, it says nothing about the pouring of water on any person for any purpose whatever. (6) After this careful and critical examination of the New Testament in Greek and English, I conclude that there is not a single case of the pouring or sprinkling of unmixed water on any person or object for any religious purpose whatever" (Handbook on Baptism, Part IV, Appendix, Chapter 7, p. 462). For a listing of all the Greek words translated by the English terms mentioned above (dip, pour, sprinkle, and wash), see the subject index entry, "Baptism, related terms." that. ver. 9. ROMANS 7

The believer's state, "as dead to the law," and united to Christ that he may serve God "in newness of Spirit," as illustrated by the law concerning marriage, 1-6. Through the depravity of human nature, the moral law, though "spiritual, holy, just, and good," can only occasion sin and death, 7-13. The painful conflict of those, who "delight in the law of God," but are not able to keep it, 14-24; and their prospect of deliverance by Christ, 25.

ROMANS 8

Those who are in Christ, and walk after the Spirit, are free from condemnation, 1-4. The carnal mind, and the spiritual mind distinguished, so that they only are the children of God, who have the Spirit of Christ, are "led by the Spirit," and mortify the flesh, 9-14. "The Spirit of adoption" testifies with their spirit, and marks them as children and heirs of God; though now exposed to suffering, 15-18. The creation, through man's sin, is subject to vanity, and waits for deliverance at "the manifestation of the children of God," 19-22; who "groan being burdened," and are saved in hope, and patiently expect deliverance, 23-25; the Holy Spirit aiding their prayers, and thus rendering them acceptable, 26, 27. All things work together for the good of those who love God, as "called according to his purpose," which springs from their predestination to life, 28-31; and is secured by the death, resurrection, and intercession of Christ, 32-34. Nothing shall separate them from the love of God through Christ, 35-39.

Gifford remarks "'To be in Christ' does not mean in St. Paul's writings 'to be dependent on Christ' (a common classical usage), nor merely...to be His follower or disciple, as Pythagoreans or Platonists were followers of their several masters. It implies that living union which Christ Himself first made known (Jn 14:19, 20). What St. Paul affirmed at Athens of all mankind in their natural relation to God (Ac 17:28), he applies in a higher sense to the spiritual union of believers with Christ. In Ga 3:26-28, we see both the inward and outward means of this union, namely, faith and baptism. In speaking of this union, St. Paul never uses the name 'Jesus' alone nor first, but gives prominence to the Divine dignity and saving power of 'Christ'" (Comm. on Romans, p. 146). Ro +*16:7. Schneider (TDNT, vol. 7, pp. 601, 602) points out that this sighing does not take place in us; it is the sighing of the Holy Spirit who, as our Paraclete, intercedes for us according to God's will. This is not, then, a reference to the sighing of Christians in prayer, or to speaking in tongues during prayer, or to inarticulate ecstatic speech. The groaning of the Spirit takes place not in response to our prayer, but when we are not able to pray, when we do not know what we ought to pray for. In ver. 22 Paul speaks of the sighing of creation; in ver. 23 of all Christians; here, of the Holy Spirit. T#1246. Ro 7:24. Ex 2:23, 24. Jb 23:1-4. ROMANS 9

The apostle deeply laments the unbelief of his countrymen, and declares his willingness to endure any thing for their salvation, 1-3. He shows the privileges of Israel as a nation, 4, 5; and the difference between Israelites according to the flesh, and the true Israel, 6-8. He illustrates his subject by the example of Isaac, Jacob and Esau, and of Pharaoh; and thus shows the freeness of the mercy of God, and his holy but absolute sovereignty in all his dispensations, 9-18. He answers objections to his doctrine, 19-23; proves it from the prophets, 24-29; and evinces, that the Jews come short of the blessing (which the Gentiles obtained by faith), because "they sought it by the works of the law," and rejected Christ, 30-33.

The rendering and punctuation given in the A.V. applying this expression to Christ is strictly correct according to the context, as well as Greek grammar and usage. Gifford asserts "It is the natural and simple construction, which every Greek scholar would adopt without hesitation, if no question of doctrine were involved. This cannot be said for any other construction" (Comm. on Romans, p. 178). Jb +*19:26. Je 23:6. Jn 1:1. +*20:28. Ac +*20:28. 1 C +*2:8. Col 2:9. T √2:13. He +*1:8. 1 J 5:20. blessed. Strictly speaking, as Gifford observes, this is "not a doxology at all: but a solemn declaration of Deity, exactly similar in form to 2 C 11:31; compare Ro 1:25." A. T. Robertson comments, "A clear statement of the deity of Christ following the remark about his humanity. This is the natural and the obvious way of punctuating the sentence. To make a full stop after sarka (or colon) and start a new sentence for the doxology is very abrupt and awkward" (Word Pictures, vol. 4, p. 381). Re-punctuating the verse by placing a period after "flesh" and taking the whole clause as a doxology to the Father is (1) totally inappropriate to the context, and (2) in violation of Greek grammar which requires that wherever eulogatos (blessed) occurs in a doxology, it stands first (Gifford). It may safely be affirmed that any translation which fails to make this an ascription of deity to Christ does so for strictly doctrinal reasons. Ro √1:25. Ps 72:19. 89:52. 104:35. Mk +*14:61. What have you to say? Or, indeed, we may treat it as the Ellipsis of a prior member, in which case verse 22 would commence "(what reply hast thou to make), if God, willing to show his wrath," etc. (B54).

ROMANS 10

The apostle again shows his earnest desire of Israel's salvation; testifying that they had zeal, stating wherein it was erroneous, and distinguishing between the righteousness of the law, and that of faith, 1-11. He maintains that Jews and Gentiles are, in this respect, on equal terms, 12, 13; that the gospel must be preached to the Gentiles in order to their believing in Christ; and that the prophets had foretold the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, 19-21.

ROMANS 11

The apostle shows, that God had not so cast off Israel, but that a remnant would be saved, "according to the election of grace," by grace, not by works, 1-6; while the rest would be blinded, as foretold by the prophets, 7-10. He predicts that this exclusion would not be final; and states the consequences to the Gentiles, both of the fall of the Jews, and of their recovery, 11-15. He cautions the Gentile converts not to boast against the Jews, but humbly to profit by this example of God's severity and goodness; and foretells glorious times, which would at length arrive, 10-32. He adores the depths of God's wisdom, and the glory of his unsearchable judgments, his underived all-sufficiency, and his universal and absolute sovereignty, 33-36.

Many interpreters (including Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, Proposition 173, Observation 3, p. 95. See also He 11:39, 40) understand this to refer to the specific number of individuals who are to be saved before Christ returns. But this view is not strictly supportable by any other Scripture (unless Re 6:11). Rather, as Paul is referring to specific prophecies already given in the Old Testament, the term "fulness" must be understood as the figure Metonymy of the Adjunct (ƒ121N2, Ge +34:29), where fulness is put for wealth, as predicted (Is √60:5mg. 61:6). When Christ returns as the Deliverer and rescues Israel from the confederated armies gathered against Jerusalem, Israel will be converted, and reap the wealth of the nations that were arrayed in battle against her. Johannes Munck suggests that the "fulness of the Gentiles" was the goal toward which Paul was striving, namely, "the full dissemination of the gospel to the Gentiles," which, when completed, allows for the end to come (Mt 24:14), the revelation of Antichrist (2 Th 2:3, 4), and the return of Christ to judge and to save (Christ and Israel, p. 134). But prophecy conditions the return of Christ not on the successful spread of the gospel to the Gentiles, but upon the repentance and conversion of Israel (Ac +√3:19-21. See related notes, Is √11:11n). The completion of the spread of the Gospel is predicted to take place after the return of Christ, not before (Is +√66:19), accomplished by Jewish evangelists at the start of the Millennium. ver. 12. ROMANS 12

The apostle exhorts Christians "by the mercies of God," to devote themselves to him; and avoiding con formity to the world, to be conformed to his holy will, 1, 2; to think humbly and soberly of themselves, as members of one body in Christ, 3-5; to exercise faithfully their different gifts, and perform the duties of their several stations, for the common benefit, 6-8; to mutual love, diligence, patience, hope, prayer, hospitality, compassion, and condescension, 9-16; to a peaceable, forgiving, and becoming conduct towards all men; and to a persevering kindness to enemies, as vengeance belongeth unto God, 17-21.

6. gifts. These gifts may be compared with those listed at 1 C 12:8-10 and Ep 4:11. There appears to be an intended correspondence between the order of the gifts listed in ver. 6-8 and the admonitions which follow in ver. 9-15. Each admonition suits the problem area experienced by persons who possess the associated gift. It is probable that every believer possesses just one spiritual gift (1 P 4:10). Studying these gifts with the additional clues furnished by the associated admonitions may help individual believers identify their gift. Ro *1:11. 8. exhorteth. See corresponding admonition in ver. 12. Persons who possess the gift of exhortation might find the study of the cause/effect relationships discussed at Ps +√9:10n helpful. It is less offensive and more effective in counseling to approach a person's problem through a Biblically defined root cause, rather than to directly confront the effect in their life, when attempting to lead them to a Biblical solution to their problem. Rather than provoke resistance to our help by confronting individuals directly about their lack of trust in God, it might be more effective to develop their knowledge of God's character, a knowledge of which permits us to trust Him. A study of the cause/effect relationships related to counseling problems would prove very fruitful. A good start toward a collection of suitable texts for such a study will be found in the note at Ps +√9:10n. Ac +*4:36. 13:15. 15:32. 20:2. 1 C +*14:3. 1 Th 2:3. 1 T +*4:13-16. 2 T 4:2. The apostle strongly inculcates subjection to rulers, the payment of tribute, and rendering to all their dues, 1-7. He exhorts to love of each other, as the fulfilment of the second table of the law, 8-10; and in the near prospect of complete salvation, to put away all the works of darkness, and seek in all things to be conformed to the Lord Jesus, 11-14.

ROMANS 15

In condescension to the weak, the strong ought to give up their own inclination, for the good of others, after the example of Christ, 1-3. All scriptures were written for our instruction, 4. The apostle prays for love and harmony among believers, in the worship of God, 5-7; shows that the scriptures foretell the union of Jews and Gentiles in the service of God; and subjoins a fervent prayer, 8-13. He exhorts the Christians at Rome, as the apostle of the Gentiles, 14-16; and states his extensive labors and usefulness, 17-21. He avows his purpose of visiting Rome, in his way to Spain; desires their prayers in respect of his previous journey to Jerusalem, with the contributions of the Gentile converts, 22-32; and again prays for them, 33.

It was distinguished into two parts; Liburnia north, now Croatia; and Dalmatia south, still retaining the same name. The account of St. Paul's second visit to the peninsula of Greece, Ac 20:1, 2, says Dr. Paley, leads us to suppose that, in going over Macedonia, he had passed so far to the west, as to come into those parts of the country which were contiguous to Illyricum, if he did not enter Illyricum itself. The history and the Epistle therefore so far agree; and the agreement is much strengthened by a coincidence of time; for much before the time when this epistle was written, he could not have said so, as his route, in his former journey, confined him to the eastern side of the peninsula, a considerable distance from Illyricum. Paley alludes to Lardner, who incidentally on this point is citing Biscoe, who maintains that this is "a general confirmation of the whole history of his travels in the book of the Acts" (Lardner, Works, vol. 5, A History of the Apostles and Evangelists, p. 522), thus constituting a most remarkable undesigned coincidence. The three points mentioned here (ver. 25, 26), (1) contributions in Macedonia, (2) contributions in Achaia, (3) Paul's intended journey to Jerusalem, are found in incidental hints in three other writings. Ac 20:2, 3, mentions the visit to Macedonia and Greece, and the voyage to Syria, but not the contributions. Ac 24:17-19 mentions the collection, but not the places. 1 C 16:1-4 mentions a collection at Corinth. 2 C 8:1-4 mentions the liberality of the Macedonians. 2 C 9:2 mentions the liberality of the Achaians. The time in all is the same. It is incredible that a forger, writing the Epistle, could have inserted this passage for the purpose of securing conformity with the other writings. It is in the highest degree improbable that this conformity could be the effect of contrivance and design, for if this were done to countenance his forgery, the forger did it for the purpose of an argument which would not strike one reader in ten thousand. Coincidences so circuitous as this answer not the ends of forgery; are seldom, I believe, attempted by it. Only by a close and attentive collation of the three writings could a forger have picked out the circumstances which he has united in this Epistle, and by a still more accurate examination determined them to belong to the same period. The introduction of the passage in context is perfectly apt and natural. It arises by a junction as easy as any example of writing upon real business can furnish. What could be more natural that Paul, writing to the Romans, should speak of the time when he hoped to visit them, should mention the business which then detained him, and that he purposed to set forwards upon his journey to them when that business was completed (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 23-28, 215.

ROMANS 16

The apostle commends Phebe to the Christians of Rome; and sends salutations to many by name, 1-16. He warns them against those who caused divisions and offences, 17-20. He names several brethren, who joined in their salutations of them, 21-23. He concludes with prayers for them, and ascriptions of glory to God, 24-27.

3. Greet. Had the notes of time in this epistle fixed the writing of it to any date prior to St. Paul's first residence at Corinth, the salutation of Aquila and Priscilla would have contradicted the history, because it would have been prior to his acquaintance with these persons. If they had fixed it during that residence at Corinth, during his journey to Jerusalem, or during his progress through Asia Minor, an equal contradiction would have been incurred, because, during all that time, they were either with St. Paul, or abiding at Ephesus. Lastly, had they fixed this epistle to be either contemporary with the first epistle to the Corinthians, or prior to it, a similar contradiction would have ensued, for they were then with St. Paul. As it is, all things are consistent. The points by which the time is noted are so intricate that an impostor could not have avoided going wrong. Thus may be observed the danger of scattering names and circumstances in writings like the present, how implicated they often are with dates and places, and that nothing but truth can preserve consistency (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 28-31. See listing of related notes at Ac 12:12n). Priscilla. 2 S +=20:16. Ac *18:+2, etc., 18, 26. 1 C +*16:19. 2 T *4:19. my helpers. ver. 9, 21. 2 Ch=29:34. 1 C 16:16. 2 C 4:5. 8:23. This praise of Aquila and Priscilla for their devotion agrees with what is said in Acts; but the notices in Acts are too indirect as material for a forger, and yet without the Acts the picture would have been impossible. In Acts 18:2 we are told they were Jews; we learn from Acts that Paul met them in Corinth, that for some time he abode in the same house with them; that the unbelieving Jews raised an insurrection against Paul; we may conclude that through all this contest Aquila and Priscilla adhered to St. Paul, for when he left the city, they went with him (Ac 18:18). Under these circumstances, it is highly probable that they should be involved in the dangers and persecutions which St. Paul underwent from the Jews, being themselves Jews; and, by adhering to St. Paul in this dispute, deserters, as they would be accounted, of the Jewish cause. They were entitled to "thanks from the churches of the Gentiles" because they had stood with Paul in the matter of admitting Gentiles to parity of religious situation with the Jews (Paley, Horae Paulinae, p. 32. What city? Here by undesigned coincidence the place where the Epistle of Romans was written is indicated. The city is undoubtedly Corinth, for Erastus is said to have "abode at Corinth" (2 T 4:20). This supposition is consistent with other statements: for example, that Paul was about to carry contributions from Greece to Jerusalem (Ro 15:25, 26); that a collection had been going on in Corinth (1 C 16:3); that he intended sailing from Greece direct to Syria (Ac 20:3). If the coincidences had been designed, the author would not have left in doubt of what city Erastus was chamberlain, or from what city the epistle was written, the setting forth of which was absolutely necessary to the display of the coincidence, if any such display had been thought of: nor could the author of the Epistle to Timothy leave Erastus at Corinth from anything he might have read in the Epistle to the Romans, because Corinth is nowhere in that Epistle mentioned either by name or description (William Paley, Horae Paulinae, pp. 33, 34, 216. 1 CORINTHIANS

1 CORINTHIANS 1

The apostle salutes the church at Corinth, 1-3; thanks God for the grace and gifts conferred on the Christians residing there, 4-7; and expresses his confidence respecting their salvation, 8, 9. He exhorts them to unity, and reproves their dissensions, 10-16. "The preaching of the cross is foolishness to them that perish, but the power and wisdom of God," to the salvation of believers, 17-25. To exclude boasting, God has not called the wise, the mighty, or the noble; but the foolish, the weak, and those whom man despises, 26-29. Christ is "made of God," in those who are in him, "Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption," that we may glory in the Lord alone, 30, 31.

1 CORINTHIANS 2

The apostle declares, that he had not come among the Corinthians "with excellency of speech and wisdom," but had preached Christ crucified, with plainness and humble diffidence; that their "faith might stand in the power of God" alone, 1-5. The gospel contains the hidden "wisdom of God" in bringing men to glory, which could not be discovered by any human sagacity, 6-9; but God by his Spirit had revealed it, 10-13. "The natural man" cannot receive it, because it is spiritually discerned: but "he that is spiritual" judgeth all things, "and is judged of no man," 14-16.

13. not. ver. 1, 4. 1 C *1:17-19. 2 P 1:16. 1 J 2:20. the words. This is a specific claim to verbal inspiration. Divine inspiration of Scripture is asserted also at 2 T 3:16, as is the divine inspiration of the Scripture writers, 2 P 1:21. Failure to accept the Bible's own testimony to itself has closed this Book to so-called "modern scholarship" (a misnomer if ever there was one!). Much modern scholarship is dishonest, for instead of explaining the Bible, it attempts to explain away the Bible, refusing to honestly come to grips with its claims and message. In an effort to escape the Bible's obvious message, dishonest scholarship has tried to deny its authenticity and authorship, ascribing, for example, the books of Moses to multiple late authorship; denying the unity of Isaiah; asserting that the gospels, particularly John, are of late origin, and do not reflect the so-called "historical Jesus," but views and traditions of the early Church of the third or fourth century—not explaining, of course, how books can be quoted or translated before they were written, or how such stupendous claims could be foisted upon a gullible public long after the possibility of disproof by eyewitnesses has passed. The only way to get at the message of the Bible is to be completely open to its message. To approach Scripture with humanistic and naturalistic (i.e. anti-theistic) presuppositions is to try to twist Scripture to fit a world view which it most emphatically will not support. The only valid approach to Scripture is to be honest to its claims and message and grant its right to set forth a theistic, supernaturalistic world view. To deny the possibility of miracle (as Hume and his modern counterparts) is to deny the possibility of history, for both are based upon the record of eyewitness testimony, and such denial is absurd. There are more pathways to truth and knowledge than an arbitrarily narrowly defined so-called "scientific method." Like missing the right exit on a freeway, continued advance in the wrong direction is not progress; genuine progress will require a return to where we went wrong, and a fresh start in the right direction. Much "scholarship" needs to recognize it has pursued a wrong path, and recognize that it needs to return to sound principles of former generations of reverent, truthful, believing scholarship. It is neither truthful nor fair scholarship to approach a work of literature from a consistently unsympathetic and hostile world view in the attempt to legitimately understand its message. Rather, in our attempt to understand a work of literature, we must let it speak for itself. The task of scholarship is to place the reader as close as possible in sympathetic relationship to the viewpoint of the original writer and recipients of the literary work, and not to attempt to explain it away in an effort to force it to agree with popular contemporary philosophical presuppositions. While the preceding explanation of the words involved has validity, it is not strictly correct for this context. Would "natural man" be in contrast with "intellectual man" or "rational man"? Rather, "natural man" refers to unrenewed or unregenerate man, without the Holy Spirit; Hodge states "spiritual, when used in the New Testament of persons, never means intellectual. It always means one under the influence of the Holy Spirit. It therefore must have that meaning here" (p. 43). 1 C ◐3:1. 15:44, 46. Je +*13:23. Ja 3:15. Ju 19g. receiveth not. ƒ175B, Ge +21:16. 1 CORINTHIANS 3

The apostle shows that he could not impart to the Corinthians the deeper mysteries of the gospel, because they were carnal, 1-3; as it appeared from their dissensions, 4. All true ministers are servants to one Lord, 5; who employs them in cultivating his field, and in building his temple, 6-9. The apostle had laid the only true Foundation, and others should take care what they build on it: for their work would be tried as by fire, 10-15. Christians are the temple of God, and it would be extremely perilous to defile that temple, 16, 17. Worldly wisdom is foolishness with God: and none ought to glory in men; for all things belong to those who are Christ's, 18-23.

1 CORINTHIANS 4

The apostles, and preachers of the gospel, should be accounted of, as ministering servants to Christ, and "stewards of the mysteries of God;" and they are required as such to be faithful, 1, 2. They must be left to the judgment of the Lord at his coming, 3-5. The apostle exhorts the Corinthians, not to be puffed up for one against another, as all have their different endowments from God, 6, 7. He contrasts their vainglory and supposed proficiency; with his own despised and afflicted state, and lowly conduct, 8-13. He warns them, as their only "father in Christ," and exhorts them to imitate him, 14-16. For this purpose he had sent Timothy unto them, 17; and intended to come himself: and to make trial of the power of those who opposed him, 18-21.

1 CORINTHIANS 5

The apostle sharply reproves a scandalous incest, protected from censure, in the church at Corinth, 1, 2. By the authority of Christ he orders the excommunication of the incestuous person, 3-5. He shows that the leaven of sin must be purged out, in order to keep the true "passover," by faith in Christ, 6-8. Scandalous professors of Christianity must be shunned, more decidedly than those without, 9-13.

1 CORINTHIANS 6

The Corinthians are reproved for going to law before heathen magistrates, instead of settling their differences among themselves, 1-6, and for selfishness and dishonesty, 7, 8. Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor thieves, nor covetous persons, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall "inherit the kingdom of God," 9, 10. Some of the Corinthians had been such, but they were "washed, and sanctified, and justified," 11. All lawful things are not expedient, 12. Christians, whose bodies are members of Christ, and the temple of the Holy Spirit, must flee fornication, as a sin against their own bodies, 13-19; that, as bought with a price, they may glorify God in body and soul, 20.

In the New Testament we have always idios aneer, never idios gunee, "his own wife;" which is the more remarkable, as no such an expression occurs in the Septuagint. For, during that dispensation, things were on a different footing. The words rendered "his own wife" are, teen eauton gunee; for there was not the same reason for the explicitly strong restriction, on that side, which is contained in the word idios. This is absolutely decisive against polygamy; and places the husband and the wife entirely on the same ground; and as much forbids him to take another woman, as it does her to cohabit with another man. wife. Ge +*2:18.

This is not an ethical holiness, but a covenant holiness. From the whole context it appears that the apostle regards the children as being in the Covenant of Grace in distinction from the world. To them belong the promises of the Covenant of Grace which can all be summarized in that one phrase, 'to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee,' Ge *17:7. Ac +*2:39" (William Masselink, Why Thousand Years, p. 80). There is no evidence in Scripture to suggest that Jesus, in establishing his church, determined to confer a lesser standing to children under the New Covenant than they had under the Old Covenant. "They are included in the church, and have a right to be so regarded. The child of a Jewish parent had a right to circumcision, and to all the privileges of the theocracy. So the child of a Christian parent has a right to baptism and to all the privileges of the church, so long as he is represented by his parent; that is, until he arrives at the period of life when he is entitled and bound to act for himself. Then his relation to the church depends upon his own act. The church is the same in all ages. And it is most instructive to observe how the writers of the New Testament quietly take for granted that the great principles which underlie the old dispensation, are still in force under the new" (Charles Hodge, Comm. on 1 Corinthians, p. 117). In respect of things offered to idols; humble "love" is preferable to that "knowledge which puffeth up," 1-3. We know that idols are nothing; for we worship only one God, through one Lord and Mediator, 4-6; yet this knowledge, and the liberty connected with it, may be so used as to enfeeble or stumble weak believers, 7-11. In this case we sin against Christ, 12. The apostle would rather for ever abstain from meat, than stumble a weak brother, 13.

1 CORINTHIANS 9

St. Paul asserts and proves his apostolical authority, 1-3; and shows that the ministers of the gospel have a right to marry; and, with their families, to be supported by the people, 4-14; yet, he had not availed himself of this right; and had in many things waved the exercise of his liberty, in order to promote the salvation of souls, 15-23. Alluding to the conduct of the contenders in the public games, he proposes to them the example of his own exceeding earnestness in securing the incorruptible crown, 24-27.

Paul has used illustrations from human life, from Old Testament Scripture, and from the teaching of Christ himself in the New Testament in his argument (ver. 14n). 1 CORINTHIANS 10

When Israel came out of Egypt, they all shared in those things, which were sacramental signs of spiritual blessings; yet most of them died in the wilderness, 1-5. Their example is recorded as a warning to professed Christians, not to imitate their crimes, 6-12. God will not suffer his servants to be tempted, so as to have no way of escape, 13. They must flee from idolatry, 14. They cannot have fellowship with Christ and believers, in the Lord's supper; and with idolaters, in those sacrifices which are offered to devils, 15-22. In the use of things lawful, the good of others should be consulted, 23-30; that all may be done to the glory of God, and without giving any occasion of falling to men, 31-33.

2. baptized. Gr. baptizo, Mt +3:6. ƒ96A3, Lk +2:5. This, of course, is a metaphorical baptism; there is no possible reference to immersion here. In the historical account, the Israelites passed through the sea on dry ground; only the Egyptians were immersed. Neither were the Israelites immersed in the cloud; the cloud remained behind the Israelites to separate and protect them from the pursuing Egyptians. These considerations entirely sustain James W. Dale's conclusion, "Whatever is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state, or condition of any object, is capable of baptizing that object; and by such change of character, state, or condition does, in fact, baptize it" (Classic Baptism, p. 354). Dale amplifies this conclusion thus: "Whatever act is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state, or condition, of any object, by placing it in a state of physical intusposition, is capable of baptizing that object; and whatever influence is capable of thoroughly changing the character, state, or condition, of any object, by pervading it and making it subject to its own characteristic, is capable of baptizing that object; and by such changes of character, state, or condition, these acts and influences do, in fact, baptize their objects" (Judaic Baptism, p. 57). In what sense is this historical event a baptism? There was no administrator of baptism; was there then self baptism? If so, bapto not baptizo is the proper word (Carson, p. 30). There was no modal act of dipping. The only act was marching. There was no momentary covering of the dipped object; it lasted from the evening until the morning watch. There was no faith in the candidates for this baptism: the Scripture shows the multitude rampant with unbelief. In this very remarkable baptism is exhibited "the most magnificent spectacle of infant baptism that the rolling ages have ever witnessed" (Dale, Judaic Baptism, p. 300). 1 C 1:13-16. Ex 14:31. Jn 9:28, 29. He 3:2, 3. unto Moses. or, into Moses. Israel was baptized into Moses, and not unto Moses, to bring them thoroughly under his influence, subject to his leadership in his divine mission, attested to by the miracle. Dale concludes, "the baptism of Israel into Moses expresses their full subjection to his controlling influence" (Christic Baptism, p. 310). In this class of baptism, baptism has reference to the influence which results, "And the people believed the Lord and his servant Moses" (see Dale, Judaic Baptism, pp. 306-314). Ex √14:31. Dt 18:15. Mt 28:19, 20. Jn 5:46. Ga +*3:27. in the cloud. or, by the cloud. en, "in," expresses agency, and is better rendered "by," as Ne √9:12. Ps √77:20. 78:14, where the Greek Septuagint uses en, rendered "by" and "with" in connection with this very miracle. in the sea. or, by the sea. The Israelites were not "in the sea," but the dry sea bed, yet here Paul again is speaking instrumentally, not locally, best rendered "by the sea," expressing the agency required for the baptism into Moses. If taken at all in a local sense, "in the cloud and in the sea" must be transferred in its reference from the Israelites to the power of Jehovah, which certainly was by miracle in them. By means of this double miracle the Israelites were influenced to fully acknowledge the often doubted and questioned divine mission of Moses, justifying the declaration that they were now baptized into him (see Dale, Christic Baptism, pp. 295, 296). Similarly, our baptism into Christ signifies our submission to Him as Lord, as being made fully subject to Him (Ac +√10:36. Ro √10:9).

1 CORINTHIANS 11

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to imitate him, as he imitated Christ, 1. He praises them for observing his injunctions, 2. He gives directions concerning men and women prophesying, 3-16. He blames them for abuses in their religious assemblies; especially for their divisions, 17-19; and their profanation of the Lord's supper, 20-22; reminding them of the first institution of it; and showing the danger, and the painful effects arising from the partaking of it unworthily, 23-34.

Some interpreters take this admonition literally, denying any limitation to the original cultural context was intended; others, probably more correctly, consider the admonition's specifics pertain to the then existing culture, but believe the principles underlying these admonitions are applicable for all time to culturally parallel or equivalent situations. Of necessity, there is a cultural modification of the Apostle's regulation when it is applied to wearing a hat or scarf instead of an Eastern veil (which covered the face, 2 C 3:13), a modification which can boast no Scriptural authority, and which negates the normative as opposed to the relative application of the commandment. Thus, whether a woman wears a covering in church is a matter of conscience, subjection to her husband's desire, the local spiritual authority, and her understanding of Scripture; but that she must not dress in the manner of a prostitute, if in her culture such persons have a distinctive dress, is undeniable. 1 CORINTHIANS 12

The apostle instructs the Corinthians in the origin, nature, variety, and use, of "spiritual gifts," 1-11. He illustrates the subject, by showing how the members in the human body perform their several functions, for the benefit of the whole, 12-26: and applies this to the church, and its different orders of ministers, and members, 27-30. He concludes with exhortation, 31.

3. give you to understand. Paul here gives a test, stated both negatively and positively, for determining the source—demonic or divine—of spiritual gifts. Negatively, the counterfeit source refuses to positively confess the deity of Christ, is self-exalting, and disorderly, and stems from the soulish nature of man; positively, the true source confesses the full deity of Christ, is self-effacing, and orderly, and stems from the spiritual nature in man (Jn 4:24). As many spiritual gifts had been paralleled by demons in the false worship of pagan deities in Corinth, with which these Gentile Christians had been most familiar (ver. 2), they needed a test to distinguish false spirituality from the true. Paul's subsequent discussion affirms the unity of the Body of Christ (ver. 13), and the sovereignty of the Holy Spirit who according to His discretion distributes gifts to every believer. Paul gives further admonition and direction for the use of these gifts, that everything in the congregation may be done "decently and in order" (1 C 14:40). 1 C 15:1g. no man. Mk *9:39. The word kurios, Lord, is that by which the word Jehovah is commonly rendered in the Greek version of the Old Testament. To say Jesus is the Lord, therefore, in the sense of the apostle, is to acknowledge him to be truly God. No one can truly believe and openly confess that Jesus is God manifest in the flesh unless he is enlightened by the Spirit of God (Hodge). Thus only those enlightened by the Holy Spirit can recognize Jesus as Jehovah. Belief in the full deity of the Lord Jesus is the positive test of orthodoxy given by the apostle. 1 C √2:8. √15:47. Ne +*9:6. Mt *7:21-23. Lk *6:46. Jn +*8:24. +√20:28. Ac +√10:37. 11:21n. 13. by. Gr. en. Mt *3:11. Mk 1:8. Lk 3:16. Jn 1:33. Ac 1:5. 11:16. The Greek preposition en, frequently rendered "in," is instrumental here, indicating agency, and so correctly translated "by," designating who performs the baptism. Thus five times in this chapter (ver. 3, 3, 9, 9, 13) en is used not of the receiving element, but is instrumental, indicative of agency, though here appearing in its accustomed relation to baptism. The preposition does not indicate the ideal element, but the source of the baptism. The agency originates in withinness, an aspect of agency or influence which is profoundly characteristic of the New Testament (see "in Christ," Ro +*8:1n. Also 1 C +*10:2n). Dale notes, "The ground of the use of en to pneumati (as also of en Christo, in Christ) "in the Spirit," is the influence inseparable from withinness, where one thing is enveloped in another thing. Generally it is the inclosing substance that influences the inclosed; sometimes it is the reverse.... Both forms of influence are freely used in Scripture. Christians are said to be in Christ and Christ in them (Ro 8:1; Col 1:27). So it is said of the Spirit; "If the Spirit of God dwell in you" (Ro 8:9), "For David said (en to pneumati to agio) in the Holy Ghost" (Mk 12:36). This withinness is for the sake of influence" (Christic Baptism, p. 320), Ro √8:11. "It is in this aspect that the Holy Spirit always appears as the agent in baptism. While Christ is declared to be the Baptizer he is declared so to be on the ground that he, himself, is 'in the Holy Spirit,' and thus invested with the power of the Spirit, does baptize by the Spirit" (J. W. Dale, Christic Baptism, pp. 319, 320). Mt 3:11, 16. Mt *12:28. Jn 1:32, 33. 3:34. Ac *2:33. one Spirit. Gr. pneuma, Mt +3:16. Mt ◐+1:20. Ep 2:18. are we. lit. were we. In Greek the tense is first aorist passive indicative, and so a reference to a definite past event with each of them (A. T. Robertson, Word Pictures, vol. 4, p. 171. Robertson goes on to make this past event their water baptism, with which I firmly disagree, for the reasons given in the following note. It would hardly suit Paul's theme of the unity of the body to make this a reference to water baptism which at Corinth had been such a source of divisiveness (1 C 1:11-17). This past event must have been their regeneration, with which event Scripture teaches the baptism in this verse coincides, thus forming a "double baptism," discussed next under the words all baptized). all baptized. Gr. baptizo, Mt +3:6. This baptism is not accomplished by a human administrator, but divine, the Holy Spirit himself. The result is placement into the one body (Ep +*4:4). The efficacy is complete and total, for it infallibly extends to "all" who have truly placed their faith in Jesus as Lord (ver. 3). This stated universality forbids the application or restriction of this verse to any "second work of grace" subsequent to initial salvation. This unfailing and universal efficacy goes beyond the power of any humanly administered ordinance (Ac ◐8:13, 21), and is therefore a reference to real, not ritual, baptism (Ac 1:5n). Notice that water is not to be found in this verse or the immediate context. It is the baptism of all individual regenerate persons who are under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and subject to the Lordship of Christ (ver. 3). It is a baptism of unification, by the distribution of appropriate and varied gifts to every member of the body of Christ, as distinguished from the baptism of regeneration (T 3:5) which unites the individual soul to Christ and makes one a participant in his redemption. Thus the Holy Spirit continues this work of double baptism (of the individual "into Christ," and of "all into one body") until this wondrous work of placing Jews and Gentiles into one body is complete (Dale, Christic Baptism, p. 323). 1 C +*10:2. The assertion that the following verb given to drink "points to a conscious, voluntary reception of the Spirit on the part of each Spirit-baptized Christian, not something which automatically happens to him" (The Layman's Commentary on the Holy Spirit, John Rea, editor, on this text) must be rejected, since it denies the universality of "all." The universality of "all" forbids the limitation of the following "made to drink" to those who have become "Spirit-baptized Christians" as distinguished from those who allegedly have not; no such division into separate classes of Christians is contemplated here by Paul, who is establishing the grounds of unity, not diversity, of believers in the one body. made to drink. ⁄108B, Je +15:16. ✻S#4222g. This verb has the same tense in Greek as the preceding verb "were baptized," first aorist passive indicative, and therefore refers to a one-time non-repeatable event or experience in the past, when these Christians (ver. 3) individually received the Holy Spirit in regeneration for salvation (Jn √4:10, 14. √7:37-39. T √3:5). It is, therefore, a reference to the inward reception of the indwelling Holy Spirit at conversion. 1 C 2:12. 3:2. +*6:19. SS 5:1. Is *41:17, 18. *55:1. Zc 9:15-17. 30. do all. ⁄85C, Ge +18:14. As in ver. 29, the Greek mee expects and requires a negative answer. This settles, once and for all, the question as to whether speaking in tongues is the evidence of having the Holy Spirit. Since all believers do not speak in tongues, it can serve as no such universal evidence. Yet all believers have the Holy Spirit (ver. 13. Ro 8:9, 11), and all believers have been baptized into the one body by the Holy Spirit (ver. 13). speak with tongues. Speaking in tongues was a highly prized gift at Corinth, but was of little use without an interpreter. The miraculous gift of tongues was a gift of speaking a known language which one had not learned naturally; tongues were not outbursts of ecstatic gibberish. Paul consistently places this troublesome gift at the bottom of the list, signifying its low priority. It is very probable that this gift, along with the rest of the miraculous or supernatural gifts discussed in this chapter and chapter 14, served a very temporary revelatory and confirmatory purpose while the early church was being founded by the original apostles, before the writing of the New Testament. In particular, tongues as a gift was intended to provoke Israel to jealousy, a sign to unbelieving Jews because it was a specific fulfillment of prophecy (1 C 14:21, citing Is 28:11, 12), warning them of their impending judgment for rejecting the truth. Since Israel was scattered and the nation and temple destroyed in A.D. 70, it is doubtful that this gift would serve this purpose beyond that date, and so would cease. This may explain why tongues are not mentioned in Paul's later epistles. Supposed modern manifestations of these gifts are likely counterfeit (being evidence of "experience centered," instead of "Bible centered" or "Christ centered" Christianity, Is 65:5n, placing an overemphasis upon the Holy Spirit, Jn 16:13n, and so failing to maintain the Biblical balance of truth, Ac 2:24n. Is 43:10n). Watchman Nee has written a volume (The Latent Power of the Soul) which wisely cautions that many supposed manifestations of the Holy Spirit are in reality counterfeit productions of the human spirit. Spiritual gifts are predicted to reappear in the last days after the Great Tribulation and the final restoration of Israel (Jl +*2:28n). Their supposed presence in the church today is at least problematical. Clearly the revelatory gifts are out of place now that God's written revelation is complete. Anyone who now claims to be receiving revelatory knowledge from God who is not getting it directly from the written word of God in the Bible is adding to the word of God, which is forbidden by Scripture itself (Pr 30:6. Re 22:18).

They shall make themselves cease or automatically cease of themselves (Word Pictures, vol. 4, p. 179). D. A. Carson notes that the argument to prove that tongues will cease "of themselves," built upon the fact that the verb is in the middle voice, is flawed exegetically; no one would argue that when Jesus commanded the sea to be calm and the storm to cease that the winds subsided of themselves, yet the verb (ceased) used in Lk 8:24 is in the middle voice (Carson, Exegetical Fallacies, pp. 77-79). Some interpreters believe this passage teaches the passing away or cessation of the miraculous gifts. Those of the Pentecostal or Charismatic persuasion believe these gifts continue to the present, are valid for today, and have been in greater evidence in all sectors of the church in recent times. In view of the fact that tongues was a sign gift to unbelieving Jews (1 C 14:21, 22), its purpose may have been served by the time of the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. This gift is not mentioned in Paul's later writings. When the book of Revelation was written (no later than A.D. 95), the New Testament was complete. The gift of tongues could no longer serve as a revelational gift (Re 22:18). The gift may be among those reinstituted at the Second Advent (Jl 2:28n). See related notes (1 C 12:30n. 14:27n. 1 CORINTHIANS 14

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to follow after love; and shows that prophecy, as most conducive to edification, is to be preferred to "speaking with tongues," 1-5. Speaking in a language, which the hearers do not understand, resembles indistinct musical sounds, and is of no use to the hearers, 6-11. All gifts should be used in the most edifying manner, 12-20. Tongues are intended to convince unbelievers; but prophesying is more useful in the public assembly, and to strangers who resort thither, 21-25. Rules for the orderly exercise of spiritual gifts in the church, 26-33. Women are forbidden to speak in the public assemblies of the church, 34, 35. A reproof of the self-sufficiency of some teachers at Corinth, 36-38. Gifts must be exercised, and all things done "decently and in order," 39, 40.

It is not taken from the LXX., from which it varies as much as any words can differ from others where the general meaning is similar. It accords much more with the Hebrew; and may be considered as a translation from it; "only what is said of God in the third person, in the Hebrew, is here expressed in the first person, with the addition of legei Kurios, saith the Lord."—Dr. Randolph. ver. 34. The "silence" demanded here is not absolute; it applies specifically to teaching whenever it places a woman in authority over men. This command to silence is a command of the Lord (ver. 37) for all churches of the saints (ver. 33). The grounds of authority for this command, given more explicitly in 1 T 2:11, 12 and 1 C 11:2-16, are (1) the law of God, considered in (a) the order of creation of man and woman (Ge 2:18, etc. 1 C 11:8, 9); (b) the submission of woman to the headship of man (1 C 11:8, 9. 1 T 2:11), though like the subordinate relationship of Jesus the Son of God to God the Father, this by no means denies their equality before God (1 C +*11:3. Ga 3:28); (c) the complete or thorough deception of the woman (2 C 11:3g. 1 T 2:14g), in apparent reference to the disastrous consequences of reversing God's order of submission and headship. (2) the universality of the command, uniformly given and enforced in all the churches (ver. 37) and by all the apostles (1 C 11:16, "we," "churches of God"). (3) the need for such command to maintain due order in the churches (ver. 40). To suppose that this command is for Paul's time only, for a particular condition in the culture of that day, is to neglect the specific teaching of the grounds of the command, grounds which are not local and situational but normative, and therefore valid for all time. Paul does not base his argument upon cultural factors which change over time or place, but upon the unchanging relationships determined by God at creation, the very argument Jesus adopted in answering the question about divorce in Mt 19:4, 5. Both Paul and Jesus in their arguments cite the pre-fall condition of man. 1 C ◐✓11:5, 13. Pr +*19:13. Is +*58:13. Jl ◐2:29. Some of the following references are adduced to show that in the spontaneous atmosphere of the Jewish synagogue, the men often spoke out in a disruptive fashion during the message, raising questions or voicing objections. Some interpreters suppose this was the circumstance to which Paul's admonition to keep silence was addressed. Paul, however, as noted above, grounds his prohibition on the principle that a woman is never in the congregation to assert authority over a man. This being the issue, the prohibition does not pertain to forbidding women to disrupt the service with objections and questions, but pertains to the implicit assertion of authority over a man that being in a position of public teaching implies. The Levites were the appointed teachers under the Law (2 Ch +15:3. 35:3n. He 7:11), were always men, and under the law possessed binding authority (Ml 2:7) by virtue of their office (Mt 23:2, 3). To refuse to heed their teaching or rulings was a very serious punishable offence (Dt ✓17:8-13). Placing a woman in such a public position of authority over men is entirely out of place, for she is to look to the man as her head, not the man look to her. Lk 4:28, 29. Jn +*7:30. 1 CORINTHIANS 15

The apostle states that gospel, which he had preached at Corinth, and shows how fully the resurrection of Christ had been demonstrated, 1-11. He proves that the resurrection of the dead is inseparable from that of Christ; and that the denial of it is subversive of Christianity, and of all the hopes of Christians, 12-19: but "Christ, the First-fruits," being risen, all others shall arise in due order; till death the last enemy being subdued, the kingdom shall be delivered up to the Father, 20-28: otherwise it would be in vain for any to risk their lives, as the apostle did, 29-32. He warns and reproves the Corinthians, refutes objections, and illustrates his doctrine, 33-41; shows some things relating to the general resurrection; contrasts the first and the second Adam, and shows the change which will be wrought both in the dead, and those who shall at that time be found living, 42-53. As death will at length be thus swallowed up in victory, he triumphs in hope over death and the grave through Christ, 54-57; and concludes with an animated exhortation, to steady and persevering diligence, in the work of the Lord, 58.

Mt 24:13, 14). Furthermore, the single English word "end" is used to render two significantly different Greek words: here, it is telos (✻S#5056g, Mt +10:22), but in some passages it is suntelia (✻S#4930g, Mt +24:3). Figure of speech Ellipsis (Absolute: of the Nominative), whereby the subject must be supplied from the nature of the subject alone, or from what is elsewhere expressed, Ge +14:20. The nominative or subject of this verb is not Christ, but by a common scriptural idiom in which the verb is used without any personal nominative, the verb has reference to the purpose of God elsewhere expressed in His Word (see Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 159, Obs. 3, p. 635). Compare for the grammatical, as opposed to rhetorical, discussion of this construction: Samuel G. Green, Handbook to the Grammar of the Greek New Testament, pp. 101 (sec. 101), 166, 167 (sec. 170, 171). W. H. Moulton, Grammar, vol. 1, p. 58, 74, 226, 236. Moulton, Idiom Book, pp. 27-29. Note Paul's intentional obscurity here to avoid endangering the persons addressed who lived in the potentially hostile political environment of the Roman Empire (see other instances of obscurity at the related notes on 2 Th 2:7 and He 12:27). Peters (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 1, p. 260, Proposition 40, Observation 6, note; pp. 270, 271; pp. 626, 627) notes that Jesus, and the New Testament writers taken as a whole, manifest the same reserve in their teaching regarding the kingdom of God, depending upon the hearer's or reader's knowledge of the Old Testament covenants, promises, and prophecies for information as to its details, and for the same reasons. Two additional instances of intentional obscurity are the very discreet terminology Peter used in his message recorded at Ac 3:19-21, and the use of indirect citations of Old Testament prophecies by the Apostle John in the Revelation (see especially the references to Ps 2 and Da 7 in Re 11:15-19). These citations would serve, for his original intended audience, as a kind of triggering mechanism to remind his hearers of the related context and associated well known prophecies, references which would escape notice and not be understood should the book fall into hostile hands, ever ready to charge the Christians with political intrigue against the Roman authority (Jn 11:48. Ac 17:7). This feature may also account, in part, for John's placing the prophecy of the new heaven and earth in an apparently postmillennial chronological position, when his readers, who would be most familiar with the other Bible predictions relating to this event, were certainly aware that every other mention of this event in prophecy places it in a premillennial chronological setting (see related note, 2 P 3:12n). That citations of the Old Testament were sometimes used as a "triggering mechanism" to remind the reader of their associated context seems quite evident when one considers the context of Matthew's citation (Mt 2:18) of Jeremiah, for he cites Je 31:15, but if one considers verses 16 and 17, the relevance of the quotation is evident, for Jeremiah is predicting that the children will return to this very land in resurrection, a most appropriate consolation for those who lost children at the hand of Herod. The effectiveness of such a device becomes more probable when one considers carefully the extensive background knowledge of the Scriptures possessed by even the common people in Israel during New Testament times (T#1122, Jn +√6:14). To limit his reign contradicts all covenant and prophecy. The Millennial reign is not terminated by the close of the thousand years. The declaration that Christ rules with his saints during the thousand years does not limit the reign to this period, but only asserts that this reign begins with this period (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 159, Obs. 1, p. 631). What ends is the reign over his enemies, all of which, even the last enemy, death, shall be destroyed by the end of the Millennium. The one thousand year period called the Millennium marks the length of time Satan is bound, and the length of time after the completion of the first resurrection during which the "rest of the dead" await the second resurrection (Re 20:5, 7), and it most certainly must not be understood to mark the end of the eternal reign of Christ, which would be a contradiction in terms. 2 S +*7:16. They will be subject as servants to their Lord, as creatures to their Creator: he will be subordinate only, as a Son to a Father, and as partaking of the same common dominion with him over the whole creation. The Son therefore is represented in the heavenly Jerusalem, as making but one temple (Re 21:22) with the Father, and one light (Re 21:23), and seated on the same throne (Re 22:1, 3). It is absurd to imagine that the Son will be more subject than he is now, that his triumphant state shall come short of his militant, and that he is to decrease, when all his saints and servants are to increase." "There is nothing in all this that intimates any natural or necessary subjection of two of the Divine Persons to one; nor any inequality of nature or perfections amongst them: but there is a natural supremacy of order belonging to God the Father; and to him, as Fountain of the Deity, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, proceeding from him, are referred" (Waterland, Works, vol. 4, p. 24). 1 C 12:6. 29. what. ver. 16, 32. Mt *20:22. Ro +*6:3, 4. shall they. Paul's shift to the third person here seems to disassociate himself from this belief or practice. The practice of baptism for the dead may have been a short-lived error of a small group of the Corinthians who, rightfully awed by the power of the resurrection, supposed its benefits could be made available (akin to the benefit derived by infants born into a family where at least one parent was a believer, 1 C 7:14) by a kind of substitutionary baptismal rite to close friends or relatives who had lately died without receiving an opportunity to hear the saving message of Christ. which are baptized. That is, probably, as Ellis and Dr. Doddridge interpret, "who are baptized in the room of the dead," referring to the case of those who presented themselves for baptism immediately after the martyrdom of their brethren or friends; as if fresh soldiers should enlist and press forward to the assault, to supply the places of those who had fallen. A. T. Robertson remarks that this passage remains a puzzle, noting that over thirty different interpretations have been suggested, perhaps no one of which is certain to be correct. Tertulian tells of some heretics who took it to mean baptized in the place of dead people (unsaved) in order to save them. (Word Pictures, vol. 4, pp. 192, 193). Whatever Paul may here refer to, this obscure text furnishes no basis upon which to base a doctrine of baptism for the dead. The point of Paul's argument is, that if there are those who do baptize for the dead (whatever that might have meant—the precise meaning has apparently been lost to us), it shows that they by so doing acknowledge the truth that there shall be a resurrection, or there is no possible point to their practice. It is not necessary to the validity of Paul's argument that this practice, whatever it was, be assumed to be correct. Ac *8:1-3, 12. for the dead. ƒ96F2, Ge +4:10. Without the article, "for (the) dead" denotes dead persons, people who are dead (Dt 14:1. Mt 22:33. Mk 9:10. Lk 16:30, 31. 24:46. Jn 20:9. Ac 10:41. 26:23. Ro 6:13. 10:7. 11:15. EWB (B41-44) shows that this verse (29) follows immediately upon verse 19 in the literary structure, the intervening verses serving as a parenthesis. By a different punctuation of the original text, and the supply of an ellipsis, this text may be understood to say "What shall they do who are being baptized? It is for the dead if the dead rise not at all!" If Christ be not raised, well may those who are being baptized into Christ's burial be asked, "What shall they do?" Truly, "It is for the dead." For they will remain dead, as corpses. In this life they "die daily" (ver. 31); in death they perish (ver. 18); and are thus "of all men most miserable" (ver. 19).

There are two classes of people who will live eternally upon the earth: (1) the saints, who as co-heirs with Christ (Ro +*8:17) are given glorified bodies (1 C 15:52), who possess the kingdom (Da 7:18) and rule over the kingdom (Re 20:4, 6) as its inheritors (Mt 25:34); (2) natural people, described here as "flesh and blood" who are the eternal subjects of the kingdom, who eternally perpetuate the natural race of earthly men in the flesh (Ps 72:5. Is 59:21. Ezk *37:25. Lk 1:32, 33. 2 P *3:13n). These two distinct and separate classes are symbolized by the "barren woman" and the "married woman" (Is +*54:1), the latter depicting the body of Christ, the glorified saints, who are a fixed number, and do not increase (Lk 20:35). The "barren woman," representing Israel, depicts those who will live on the earth in the flesh and continue to multiply, eventually surpassing in number the glorified saints (see Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, pp. 130-140). "Flesh and blood" refers to the natural people in the flesh who are subjects of the kingdom (See Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 573), who will live forever on the earth (2 P +*3:13n). Ph *1:23) have confused the "kingdom of God" with heaven, which it is not. Neither is the church the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven (Is 60:21n). The kingdom of God or Heaven is the future permanent and eternal (Da 7:14. Re 11:15) earthly reign of Jesus Christ in a theocratic kingdom whose capital is Jerusalem (Je 3:17. Mi 4:7. Zp 3:15), a reign which extends to all the earth (Zc 14:9), in fulfillment of the Abrahamic and Davidic Covenants (Ac +√7:5; Is +√55:3). The kingdom of God is identical to the kingdom of heaven. Those (particularly dispensationalists) who make a distinction between the "kingdom of heaven" and the "kingdom of God" have confused the "kingdom of God" with the "sovereignty of God." The Jehovah's Witnesses, who make much of this text, fail to note the one essential requirement to enter the earthly kingdom, the new birth (Ezk 36:25, 26. Jn √3:3, 5, 7n. Ac +√3:19-21), a requirement which they deny, which is proof enough that they, like the unbelieving Jews of Jesus's day, will have no part or place in it (Mt +*8:11, 12). 1 C +√6:9. Jn +√3:3, 5, 7. This "last trump" must not be equated with the seventh trumpet of Re 11:15, nor is "last" to be understood absolutely, for the trumpet of Mt 24:31 is clearly after the tribulation (Mt 24:29) and coming of Christ. J. Finis Dake (Annotated Reference Bible, p. 189 of the N.T., col. 4, note q) suggests the "last trump" in this text is the last of two trumps at the pretribulation rapture: at the first trump, the dead in Christ will be raised to immortality (1 Th 4:16); at the second or last trump the living believers will be changed to immortality and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air (1 C 15:52. 1 Th 4:17). This rapture cannot be mid or post tribulational, for then the warnings to watch, be ready, and not be caught off guard (Lk +√21:36. T 2:13, 14. He 9:28) would be pointless, for when the tribulation begins, those who know the Bible will be aware of the fact and be able to ascertain the precise time of the Second Advent by referring to Daniel's prophecy (Da +*9:27). the trumpet. Le +=23:24. Those who believe that death is the utter extinction of being, a concept utterly incompatible with the use of the word throughout the Bible, must logically deny the possibility of future existence by means of resurrection. If man is all mortal and death returns the whole man "to dust as it was," then man is extinct—there is "dust" but no man. Before man was formed it was all dust, and after he returns to it, it is all dust again—all dust, no man. Hence, under this view, a resurrection of man is impossible. All is dust "as it was" before man existed, and there can no man exist again except by means of creation (Mt +*10:28. 1 Th +*4:16n). The doctrine therefore which makes man all mortal and death his extinction, is the most palpable denial of a resurrection conceivable. Is ◗25:8. Lk √20:36. He *2:14, 15. D. B. Byers (Physical Death Not the Penalty, chapter 4) observes that if physical death were the threatened penalty (Ge 2:17), (1) then Adam and Eve would have had to immediately die physically. (2) Man was capable of physical immortality after the fall, a fact utterly incompatible with the notion that physical death was the penalty, Ge 3:22-24. (3) Forgiveness and the new birth do not exempt believers from physical death, therefore such death cannot be the penalty. (4) If physical death is the penalty, then all who die physically have paid the penalty and are entitled to heaven, apart from the sacrifice of Christ or any belief in it. (5) God exacts a double satisfaction, that of Christ's death, and that of the individual who has died physically. (6) Since all men are not subject to physical death, some excluded by translation, living believers by rapture, physical death cannot be the penalty, as some are subject and others are not to physical death. is sin. Ro *6:23. the strength. Ro 3:19, +20. *4:15. 5:13, 20. 6:14. *7:5-13. 1 CORINTHIANS 16

The apostle directs the Corinthians, in what way to make collections for the Christians at Jerusalem, 1-4; states his intentions about visiting them, 5-9; commends Timothy, who was coming to them, 10, 11; shows that Apollos declines visiting them at present, 12; exhorts them to vigilance, stedfastness, and love, 13, 14, recommends the household of Stephanas to their special regard, 15, 16; expresses his satisfaction at the coming of certain persons from Corinth, 17, 18; and, after salutations from the churches, concludes in the most awful, yet affectionate manner, 19-24.

2 CORINTHIANS

2 CORINTHIANS 1

The apostle salutes the Corinthians, 1, 2; and blesses God for consolations proportioned to his tribulations, and deliverance in extreme danger, lately vouchsafed to him; being intended for the benefit and comfort of others also, as well as an earnest to him of future deliverances, 3-11. He rejoices in the testimony of his conscience; and expresses his confidence of their attachment to him, which had induced him to purpose a journey to Corinth, 12-16. His delay of this journey did not arise from fickleness, 17, 18. He states the stability of the promises of God through Christ, and the security of believers, 19-22; and declares, that he had postponed his visit from lenity towards the Christians at Corinth, 23, 24.

2 CORINTHIANS 2

The apostle shows his purpose, of not coming to Corinth in heaviness; and states the grief with which he had written his former epistle, 1-4. He directs the Corinthians to forgive and restore the incestuous person; as he had forgiven him in Christ's name, 5-11. His uneasiness, at not finding Titus at Troas, had induced him to go directly into Macedonia, 12, 13. He blesses God for the joy and triumph, which had attended his faithful preaching of the gospel in every place, which he distinguishes from that of "many who corrupt the word of God," 14-17.

2 CORINTHIANS 3

To obviate the charge of self-commendation; the apostle shows, that the conversion of the Corinthians was a sufficient attestation of Christ given to his ministry, 1-3. He ascribes all his sufficiency and success to God, 4, 5; and shows the glory of the gospel to be superior to that of the law, 6-11: declaring that his plain speaking according to the nature of his ministry, which was less obscure than that of Moses, 12-14; stating the blindness of the Jews, which would be removed when they turned to the Lord, 15, 16; and describing the liberty and progressive holiness, which arose from faith in Christ, and the illumination of the Holy Spirit, 17, 18.

2 CORINTHIANS 4

The apostle declares his unwearied zeal and conscious integrity in preaching the gospel, 1, 2. "The god of this world blinds the minds" of unbelievers, against the light of the divine glory of Christ; which God imparts, by shining into the hearts of his people, 3-6. The weakness and sufferings of the apostle redounded to the praise of the power of God, 7-12. He states the supports, motives, and prospects of glory, by which he and his helpers were induced to persevere without fainting, 13-18.

2 CORINTHIANS 5

The apostle declares, that the assured hope and earnest desire of being present with the Lord, when absent from the body, rendered him indifferent as to this life, 1-8: that he labored to approve himself to Christ, in the prospect of a future judgment, 9, 10; "knowing the terror of the Lord," he conscientiously persuaded men, 11: that he said this, not as boasting, but to furnish the Corinthians with an answer to false pretenders, 12; that the love of Christ constrained him to live no longer to himself, but to Christ; and made him dead to all other regards, 13-16: that all who are in Christ are new creatures, 17: that God, in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, had reconciled him and other faithful preachers, and had "committed to them the ministry of reconciliation," 18, 19: and that as ambassadors, they in the stead of Christ, besought men to be reconciled to God, through his righteousness and atonement, 20, 21.

This is not a reference to a temporary body possessed in the third heaven during the intermediate state, for that would not be eternal. It must, therefore, be a reference to the resurrection body, glorified. Paul here, as elsewhere (Ro 8:30. He 12:22, 23), passes over the intermediate state, referring rather to the inheritance at the Second Coming (see Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 125, observation 8, p. 240). in the heavens. Thus the change to a resurrected, glorified body occurs on earth (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 241). The more usual interpretation of this passage, that it teaches we receive temporary bodies in heaven immediately after death, is faulty, because it makes the future resurrection of the body unnecessary and redundant.

2 CORINTHIANS 6

The apostle earnestly exhorts the Corinthians, not to receive the grace of God in vain, but to seek salvation without delay, 1, 2. He most pathetically shows, by what labors, sufferings and patient endurance he, and his brethren, sought to render their ministry approved, 3-10. He assures them, that he spake of this the more freely, out of the great love, which he bare to them, 11, 12; requiring the like affection from them, 13. He warns them against intimate connections with unbelievers, seeing Christians are the temples of the living God, 14-16; and encourages them, by the promises of being received as the children of God, to separate from sinners and from sin, 17, 18.

"We are not fellow-workers with God, but with our brethren; with you, not with him, should be the words supplied, if any" (B126, 127). The verse should read "But working together (or as fellow-workers with you), we exhort also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." beseech. See on 2 C 5:20. 10:1. Mt 23:37. Ro +*12:1. 2 CORINTHIANS 7

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to follow after holiness, encouraged by the preceding promises, 1; and to receive him, who had done nothing to forfeit their esteem, but had great love for them and confidence in them, 2-4. He shows what comfort, under his troubles, Titus's good account of them gave him, 5-7; so that he does not repent of having grieved them by his former Epistle, considering the happy effects of their godly sorrow, 8-11. He wrote to approve his care of them as in the sight of God, 12; and he rejoices, especially, in the joy of Titus, and in his affection for them, as excited by their good conduct, which was answerable to the apostle's former boasting concerning them, 13-16.

2 CORINTHIANS 8

The apostle sets before the church at Corinth the liberality of the poor Christians in Macedonia, 1-5; and excites them to imitate this liberality, toward the poor saints in Judea; that they might abound as much "in this grace" as in other things; and show the sincerity of their love, as animated by the self-abasing and self-denying love of Christ to them, 6-9. They had before shown a readiness to this contribution, which would be graciously accepted by the Lord, 10-15. He commends to them Titus, and two other brethren, whom he had engaged in this service; and who were on many accounts worthy of their peculiar regard, 16-24.

That is, the charitable contributions for the saints of Judea; respecting which Doctor Paley has some excellent remarks. There is, he observes, a circumstance of nicety in the agreement between the two Epistles, which I am convinced, the author of a forgery would not have hit upon, or which, if he had hit upon it, he would have set forth with more clearness. The Second Epistle speaks of the Corinthians as having begun this eleemosynary business a year before (ver. 10. 2 C 9:2). It appears, however, from other texts in the Epistle, that the contribution was not yet collected or paid; for brethren were sent from St. Paul to Corinth "to make up their bounty" (2 C 9:5). They are urged to "perform the doing of it" (ver. 11), and every man was urged to "give as he purposed in his heart" (2 C 9:7). The contribution, therefore, was in readiness, yet not received from the contributors; was begun, was forward long before, yet not hitherto collected. Now this representation agrees with one, and only with one, supposition, namely, that every man had laid by in store, had already provided a fund, from which he was afterwards to contribute—the very case which the first Epistle authorizes us to suppose to have existed; for in that Epistle, St. Paul had charged the Corinthians "upon the first day of the week, every one of them, to lay by in store, as God had prospered him" (1 C *16:2). 2 CORINTHIANS 9

The apostle assigns his reasons for sending the brethren beforehand, to make up the collections of the Corinthians, notwithstanding his confidence in them, 1-5. He encourages their cheerful liberality; under the figure of sowing seed, from which they might expect from God a large increase, to enable them to sow still more abundantly to his glory, 6-11; for such services, not only supply the wants of the saints, but excite them to abundant thanksgivings to God, and fervent love to their benefactors, and prayers for them, 12-14. He concludes the subject by "thanking God for his unspeakable gift," 15.

2 CORINTHIANS 10

The apostle entreats the Corinthians not to leave him any cause to exert his spiritual power, "and the weapons of his warfare," "which were mighty through God" for man's salvation, in rebuking those who despised his person and ministry, 1-6; assuring them, that when he came, he should be found as powerful in deeds, as he was in writing when absent, 7-11: and contrasting his own conduct, with the ostentatious boastings and ambitious intrusions of the false teachers, 12-18.

2 CORINTHIANS 11

The apostle excuses his self-condemnation; because he used it out of "godly jealousy" over those at Corinth, whom he had espoused to Christ; lest false teachers should pervert them, as Satan did Eve, 1-3. Their new teachers had not preached another Savior, or another Spirit, or another gospel, than he had done, 4. He was not at all inferior to the "chiefest apostles;" for though "rude in speech," he was not so "in knowledge," 5, 6. He declined being chargeable to the Corinthians, not from want of love, but to counteract his opposers, 7-12; who were "false apostles, ministers of Satan," though apparently "ministers of righteousness;" even as "Satan transforms himself into an angel of light," 13-15. As many gloried, and were borne with, even while overbearing and rapacious; he would, though reluctantly, "glory also," 16-20. A most extraordinary account of his abundant labors, dangers, sufferings, and deliverances, 21-33.

2 CORINTHIANS 12

The apostle relates extraordinary revelations made to him: which had rendered such humiliating and distressing experiences necessary, as constrained him to glory, only in his own infirmities and trials, and in the all-sufficient power and grace of Christ, 1-10. As his apostleship had been fully proved, the Corinthians ought to have commended him, and not to have compelled him to self-commendation, 11-13. He was about to visit them again; but was determined to adhere to his disinterested conduct; and to spend himself in fervent love to them, though they should on that very account love him the less, 14, 15. He shows that those, whom he had sent to them, had acted in the same disinterested manner, 16-19, and expresses his fears, that he should be humbled, as well as compelled to use severity; by finding many who had grossly offended, and had not repented, 20, 21.

If it had been only a trance or ecstacy, he could not have doubted whether he was in the body or no. For in all such visions the soul and body remain united. St. Paul says he was caught up; his only doubt is whether this rapture was a translation of his body and soul together, or a translation of his disembodied spirit alone. This sentence, therefore, shows that the soul, when separated from the body, has powers of perception. If not, it could not be a matter of doubt with St. Paul, whether he was out of the body or no, when he was translated to heaven and to Paradise, and heard what he did there. It therefore confirms the doctrine, that the soul, when separated from the body by death, does not sleep (Greek Testament, vol. 3, p. 179). Mt +*10:28n. 2 CORINTHIANS 13

The apostle declares his expectation and purpose of inflicting miraculous punishments on those who persisted in opposing his authority, 1-4. He exhorts the people to self-examination, 5; and to disarm him of his power to use sharpness, by their previous repentance, 6-10. He concludes with exhortations, salutations, and benedictions, 11-14.

The Hyperbaton by which the pronoun heautous, yourselves, is placed at the beginning of the sentence (the object before the subject), shows the emphasis which is to be placed upon it, and tells us that this is the serious irony of a grieved heart, and not a general command. These Corinthian saints, having been beguiled by the Jewish enemies of the apostle to question his apostleship, actually sought a proof of Christ speaking in him! So he meets their questionings with another question: Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me...YOURSELVES examine ye, if ye are in the faith; YOURSELVES prove ye. Know ye not that Jesus Christ is in you except ye be reprobates?" The answer to this question, thus ironically put, would prove them to be the seals of his ministry, and the real proof of his apostleship. Here is no command for the saints today, no admonition to practice continual self-examination and introspection, to see whether they are in the faith; for Christ is in them. Read the words in connection with the context, and the force of this solemn Irony will be at once seen: and it will be used no more to vex and perplex God's dear children, by taking words which refer to their state to upset their standing, which is perfect and complete "in Christ" (B812). whether. 1 C 16:13. GALATIANS

GALATIANS 1

Paul asserts his divine appointment to the apostolical office, 1. He salutes the churches of Galatia, and praises God, 2-5. He sharply reproves the Galatians for so soon turning aside to a false gospel; and denounces an awful curse on all who preach any other doctrine, than that which they had received from him, 6-10. He declares that he had his authority and instructions from Christ; and shows what his conduct had been before his conversion, and what it was afterwards, 11-24.

Individual Christian believers are here deemed competent to judge the doctrinal correctness of the preaching of an inspired apostle or even an angel from heaven, a very clear assertion of the Bible doctrine of the perspicuity of Scripture. This doctrine holds that, in all essential matters pertaining to faith and practice, the Bible is clearly understandable upon careful study to even the humblest believer, without the interposition of an institutional or ecclesiastical authority to interpret the Scriptures for him. Closely allied to this is the doctrine of the right and necessity of private judgment, which holds that the individual is responsible directly to God for his beliefs, and that God will hold him responsible only to believe what is taught in Scripture, apart from the teachings of humanly devised creeds and institutions, or unwritten traditions however hoary with age. The doctrines of perspicuity and private judgment having been clearly established as scriptural (see the following reference passages and their notes), the conclusion to be drawn is that the ultimate authority in spiritual or doctrinal matters is the written word of God found in the Bible, not the teachings of any man or group of men. Thus there can be no "one true church," for any church is only "true" insofar as its teachings rest squarely upon and are in accordance with the teachings of the inerrant and infallible verbally inspired word of God in the Bible. GALATIANS 2

The apostle shows for what purpose he, after many years, again went up to Jerusalem, 1, 2; and that Titus, who attended him was not circumcised; lest the freedom of the Gentile converts from the law should be doubted, 3-5. No additional knowledge or authority was communicated to him by the other apostles; but they acknowledged his divine mission to the Gentiles, 6-10. At Antioch, he openly withstood Peter; who dissembled, as to communion with the Gentile converts, for fear of some from among the Jews, and induced others to dissemble, 11-13; expostulating with him, because he, who himself sought justification by "faith in Christ," led others to seek it by the works of the law, 14-16. The apostle, by the law was "become dead to the law, that he might live to God;" being "crucified with Christ, yet living, Christ living in him; and he living by faith in Christ, and not frustrating the grace of God," 17-21.

GALATIANS 3

The apostle sharply reproves the Galatians, for departing from that gospel which had been fully preached to them, and confirmed by the gift of the Holy Spirit, 1-5. He proves the doctrine of justification by faith alone, from the example of Abraham, and the testimony of scripture, 6-9; from the curse of the law, and the redemption of Christ, 10-14; and from the Abrahamic covenant, which the law could not disannul, 15-18. He states the use of the law, in connection with the covenant of grace; shows that all men are by the law shut up under sin, till Christ releases them; and describes the law as a schoolmaster to bring men to him, that they may be justified by faith, 19-24; and that all believers are delivered from the law, and made the spiritual seed of Abraham by faith in Christ, 25-29.

"Law" does not have the Greek article here, or in ver. 2, 5, or in Ga 2:16. When "law" lacks the Greek article, it no longer is a reference exclusively to the Mosaic law, but to law or rule as principle (See note on Ro 4:15). So while Paul as a Jew writing to Jews is doubtless alluding to the law of Moses, his assertion applies to any requirement of obedience to "law" or "rule" to merit salvation, and in principle is not limited to Mosaic law. Any system of belief which makes salvation depend upon what we do for God instead of what God in grace has already done for us violates this principle, and those who so depend upon works in any sense have fallen from grace (Ga 5:4), and cannot be saved as long as they are resting upon such a principle for salvation. Good works and obedience are the necessary and essential fruit and evidence of saving faith, not its ground (Ro 16:26. Ep 2:10. T 3:8. He +*5:9. Ja 2:17). Since Scripture does not explicitly make the distinction between ceremonial and moral law, that cannot be the intended distinction here by the use and non-use of the Greek article. Hogg and Vine assert (Comm. on Galatians, Ga 2:16, p. 88) "the Apostle asserts the freedom of the Christian from the law of Moses in its totality, making no distinction as between ceremonial and moral." ver. 2, 5. GALATIANS 4

The ancient church had been under the law, as a young heir under a guardian, 1-3. Christ came to "redeem those that were under the law," and to give believers both Jews and Gentiles "the adoption of sons," 4-7. The apostle shows how absurd the conduct of the Galatians was; in that, after having been delivered from idolatry by the gospel, they willingly subjected themselves to the bondage of the law: and he expresses his doubts concerning them, 8-11. He tenderly expostulates with them, for becoming alienated from him, to whom they had expressed the most fervent love; ascribes this to the influence of false teachers; and shows the ardor of his soul in longing for their salvation, 12-20. He illustrates the subject of the two covenants, by showing, that the history of Sarah and Isaac with Hagar and Ishmael was an allegorical representation of them, 21-31.

Under the former dispensation, females were not recognized as heirs except by special enactment (Nu 27:7, 8). But now they are recognized as sons, and have all the rights, privileges, and inheritance of sons. Every regenerate soul (male or female, infant or adult) is in the gospel language called a "son," and "if a son then an heir of God through Christ." Under the Gospel only sons are baptized. "Ye are all sons (Greek) of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Ga 3:26); "ye are all one (man) in Christ Jesus" (Ga 3:28; the word one in Greek is masculine gender); Ro 8:14; Ga 4:6; 1 Th 5:5 "all sons (Greek) of the light and sons of the day;" He 2:10; 12:5, 6, 7. The expression "daughters of the Lord" is not found in New Testament language. The apparent exception in 2 C 6:18 is a quotation from the Old Testament (Thomas Gallaher, Baptism, p. 303). Figure of speech Allegory; or, Continued Metaphor and Hypocatastasis: continued comparison by representation or implication. In metaphor, comparison by representation, the comparison is substituted; in hypocatastasis, comparison by implication, the comparison is implied. Allegory thus differs from Parable, which is continued simile, comparison by resemblance, wherein the resemblance is stated. An allegory always refers to the past, whether fictitious or historical, and brings out further teaching from past events beyond the facts of what took place. GALATIANS 5

The apostle exhorts the Galatians to stand fast in their Christian liberty; and shows that, by being circumcised they would in fact renounce Christ; as in him "nothing availeth but faith which worketh by love," 1-6. He disclaims the preaching of circumcision himself, and condemns it in others, 7-12. He cautions them not to abuse their liberty, but "by love to serve one another;" for "love is the fulfilling of the law," 13-15. Exhorting them to "walk in the Spirit," he states the conflict between the flesh and the spirit, 16-18. He enumerates the words of the flesh, and the fruits of the Spirit, 19-23. He shows that true Christians have "crucified the flesh;" again calls on the Galatians to walk in the Spirit; and warns them against vain glory and envy, 24-26.

There is nothing delicate in it. It is offensive to white-fingered and white-cheeked and white-livered people who sit in their easy-chairs and read these burning words today. They blush when they read them (Ga 1:8, 9), and they blush more when they read that passage farther on in the Epistle to the Galatians in which Paul says: 'I wish that those who unsettled you on the subject of circumcision would go off and castrate themselves! Possibly in that way they would lose all further interest in the subject.' They think that such language ought not to be used in the presence of ladies. Paul was not thinking about the ladies when he dictated those words. He was hot with anger against the Judaizers who were making trouble for him through all the Gentile field. He had to say something which would stop it; and he did. His righteous anger brought about a righteous result" (Paul and His Epistles, p. 51). ver. 10. Ga 1:8, 9. Ge *17:14. Ex *12:15. 30:33. Gr. prasso, Jn +5:29n. Prasso is the verb for habitual practice (our very word, in fact), not poieo for occasional doing. The habit of these sins is proof that one is not in the Kingdom of God and will not inherit it.—Gentile churches were peculiarly subject to these sins. But who is not in danger from them? (A. T. Robertson, Word Pictures, vol. 4, p. 313). The apostle John makes this same distinction between the commission of individual acts of sin from time to time and the habit of willfully practicing the sin, but does this by means of distinctions in the Greek tenses employed, rather than in the use of distinctive synonyms, as Paul. GALATIANS 6

The apostle exhorts the Christians in Galatia to restore the fallen with meekness, and to bear each other's burdens, according to "the law of Christ," 1, 2; to beware of self-deception, 3-5; to provide for their teachers; and to persevere without wearying in every good work; being assured that every one will reap as he has sowed, 6-10. He shows the carnal motives and glorying of the Judaizing teachers, 11-13; and determines to "glory in the cross of Christ" alone, by which he is "crucified to the world, and the world to him," 14. Nothing in Christ avails, but a new creation, 15. He prays for peace on "the Israel of God;" desires that none of them would further trouble him, who, as an old soldier, bare the scars of his warfare; and he commends them to the grace of Christ, 16-18.

Dt 14:1), and supposed to be protective. This explains Paul's use of the word in Ga 6:17. Paul regarded his wounds and scars received in the service of his Lord and God as not only being marks of his servitude, but marks implying that he was under God's protection (Ex 13:9, 16. Is 49:16. Ezk 9:4). Therefore he says, beware how you trouble me! (this explains the word "for"). See also Re 14:1; 7:2; 9:4 (E. W. EPHESIANS

EPHESIANS 1

The apostle salutes the Ephesians, 1, 2. He blesses God for the spiritual blessings which he had conferred on them and him, as "chosen in Christ," and "predestinated to the adoption of children," 3-5; as "accepted in the Beloved," "through the redemption of his blood," and "his grace abounding towards them, in all wisdom," 6-8; as gathered, and made heirs with his people, "to the praise of his glory, by first trusting in Christ," 9-12; as "sealed by the Spirit of adoption, the Earnest of their inheritance," 13, 14. He thanks God for them, and prays that God would more completely illuminate them, and give them deeper experience of the grace and comforts of the gospel, 15-18; "according to the mighty power, by which Christ had been raised from the dead," and exalted as "Head over all things to his church," 19-23.

EPHESIANS 2

The apostle shows the Christians at Ephesus their former ruined state, as dead in sin, slaves of Satan and "children of disobedience," among whom he and all believers once were, being "by nature the children of wrath, even as others," 1-3. All who do not perish are saved "by grace," "in Christ," "through faith;" and are "created unto good works," 4-10. The Gentiles were once "without Christ, without hope, without God;" but by the special grace of God, through the atonement of Christ, all who believed were brought nigh, and reconciled to God; had access to him; and were formed into one church with Jewish converts, the ritual law being taken away by the death of Christ, 11-18. Thus they became one family and temple, a habitation of God through the Spirit, 19-22.

EPHESIANS 3

Paul, the prisoner of Christ for the Gentiles, 1; shows, that the mystery concerning their salvation, which was before concealed, had been made known to him by revelation, 2-7; and to him, "who was least of all saints, was this grace given, that he should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ," 8, 9; that "the principalities and powers in heavenly places" might, in the church, discover "the manifold wisdom of God;" while, "according to his eternal purpose," Jews and Gentiles had "access with boldness, by Jesus Christ," 10-12. He desires that the Ephesians may not faint, because of his tribulations for them, 13. fervently prays, that they may be abundantly strengthened, enlightened, sanctified, and comforted, 14-20; and concludes with most animated praises, 21.

EPHESIANS 4

The apostle exhorts his brethren to a consistent walk in humility and love, as united by manifold most endearing bonds, 1-6; to a peaceful improvement of gifts and endearments, and performance of duties, for the good of the church; from regard to the ascended Savior, and the nature of his communications and appointments, for the edification of his saints, 7-16; to a conduct peculiarly distinguished from that of the Gentiles around them; being taught by Christ, dead to sin, and continually more and more renewed to the divine image, 17-24; to avoid deceit and anger, 25-27, to labor in what was good; and so to shun dishonesty, and to practice charity, 28; to use their tongues in holy discourse, and not in unholy, 29; to beware of grieving the holy Spirit, 30; and to meekness, kindness, and forgiveness, after the example of the love of God in Christ, 31, 32.

Since there is but one body and one hope, the teaching of Jehovah's Witnesses that there is a heavenly hope available only to 144,000 and an earthly hope available to the rest of mankind is certainly mistaken, for it obviously sets forth two hopes and makes two bodies, an earthly and a heavenly, in contradiction to this clear Scripture. Since the scope of the immediate context shows Paul is writing of the spiritual unity of the church, this reference to baptism has no bearing upon the mode of Christian baptism. On this text Alexander Carson asserts that as believer's baptism "cannot possibly extend to infants, if there is such a thing as infant baptism, there must be two baptisms. If then, there is but one baptism, there can be no infant baptism" (Baptism: Its Mode and Subjects, p. 212). As relevant to the exposition of this text as the assertion that the moon is made of green cheese! Some wrongly assume that to accept sprinkling, pouring, and immersion as baptism means that would make three baptisms; therefore, since immersion is alleged to be the only biblical mode, immersion, as the only valid mode of baptism, must be the "one baptism." In the same manner as there are expressly stated to be two circumcisions, one with hands, which is the sign (Ro 4:11) of the real, made without hands (Ro 2:29. Col 2:11), Scripture teaches there are at least two baptisms: ritual baptism with water, and real baptism by the Holy Spirit. Since ritual baptism is the mere symbol of real baptism, the "one baptism" of this passage must refer to real baptism, by which we are all placed in the one body (1 C √12:13). Paul is not contradicting himself or the rest of Scripture when he speaks here of one baptism, since there is only one real, spiritual baptism which places all believers into the one body. J. W. Dale (Christic Baptism, p. 349) enumerates twelve distinctly different non-Jewish baptisms mentioned in connection with Christianity in the New Testament: (1) Baptism into repentance, Ac 2:38. He 6:2. (2) Baptism into the remission of sins, Ac 2:38. (3) The personal covenant baptism of Christ to "fulfill all righteousness," Mt 3:15. (4) The personal baptism of Christ by the Holy Ghost "without measure" in order to the fulfilment of this covenant engagement, Jn 3:34. (5) The personal baptism of Christ in the actual fulfilment of this covenant engagement, by baptism into penal death upon the Cross, Mt 20:22. Lk 12:50. (6) The baptism of the Apostles by the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, endowing them with gifts and power for the Apostleship, Ac 1:5. 2:4. (7) The ritual, symbol baptism of the Samaritans "into the name of the Lord Jesus," Ac 8:12, 16. (8) The baptism of Cornelius and friends by the Holy Ghost endowing with miraculous gifts, but diverse from the kindred baptizing endowment of the Apostles, in that these gifts were not such as to qualify for the Apostleship, Ac 10:47, 48. (9) Baptism into Moses, 1 C 10:2n. (10) Baptism into Paul, 1 C 1:13. (11) Baptism "by one Spirit into one body," including regeneration and endowment, without either of which there can be no membership in the body of Christ, 1 C √12:13. (12) Baptism "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," which is consequent upon and the consummation of baptism "into Christ," Mt 28:19. Used of gluttony and venery (Ju 4), carnality, lasciviousness (2 C 12:21. Ga 5:19. Ep 4:19. 2 P 2:7). Used in the plural (Ro 13:13) of wanton acts or manners, as filthy words, indecent bodily movements, unchaste handling of males and females (Thayer, Lexicon, p. 79, 80). Trench argues the word encompasses more than sexual deviancy, that it depicts "one who acknowledges no restraints, who dares whatsoever his caprice and wanton petulance may suggest" (Synonyms, Sec. 16, p. 56). *S#766g: Mk +*7:22. EPHESIANS 5

The apostle exhorts the Ephesians to imitate the love of God in Christ, 1, 2, to avoid all uncleanness, covetousness, and improper discourse, which draw down the wrath of God upon "the children of disobedience," 3-6; to have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness;" but, as the "children of light," to reprove them, 7-14; to walk with wisdom and circumspection, 15-17; not to seek exhilaration by excess of wine, but to "be filled with the Spirit," speaking and singing Psalms and praises to God, 18-20; and to submit to one another, in the several relations of life, 21. The duties of wives and husbands, enforced and illustrated by the mutual love of Christ and his church, 22-33.

There is a sermon in the mood, tense, voice and number of this verb: it is imperative mood, indicating a command; it is present tense, which in Greek represents aspect denoting continuous action—we are to be constantly or continuously filled; it is passive voice, indicating we are to allow this to be done to us; it is plural in number, meaning it applies to all believers. There is much needed corrective doctrinal instruction in the grammatical cases which this passive verb governs: the Dative case designates the filler, here, the Holy Spirit, necessitating an improvement in the English rendering to show we are filled not with but BY the Spirit; the Genitive case denotes what the vessel is filled with. When the verb "fill" is in the active voice, a third case, the Accusative, designates the vessel or whatever is filled. Note that the Holy Spirit is never said to fill us with Himself, but with gifts specified in the immediate context; here, gifts other than wine, gifts specified by the participles in the following verses, speaking (in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs), singing, giving thanks, and submitting. The filling of the Holy Spirit is always a reference to a filling with His gifts for service. He does not fill us with Himself, but with His gifts. Attention to these details will show how greatly mistaken are the popular conceptions of the Holy Spirit and His work. These mistaken conceptions, though taught with great sincerity, frequently supported by an appeal to misconstrued or misinterpreted experience, are in great error. Such mistaken notions lack Biblical authority because they are not based upon an accurate understanding of Scripture (Is +*8:20n. Mk √12:24. 2 T √2:15). Lk 1:15. Ac +2:4. with the. 1 S 10:6. EPHESIANS 6

The apostle exhorts children and parents to their respective duties, 1-4; and also servants and masters, 5-9. He animates his brethren to resist their spiritual enemies, by putting on and using diligently "the whole armor of God," 10-17, and by persevering prayer; supplicating for all saints, and for him especially, that he might preach the gospel with all boldness, 18-20. He commends Tychicus to them, and concludes with affectionate salutations, 21-24.

Ep 5:29g. Dt +*6:20. Is 28:9. 38:19. 2 T +✓3:15. admonition. Gr. nouthesia, Trench explains, "is the training by word—by the word of encouragement, when this is sufficient, but also by that of remonstrance, of reproof, of blame, where these may be required" (Synonyms, p. 112); "whatever is needed to cause the monition to be taken home, to be laid to heart, is involved in the word" (p. 113, 114). Lightfoot discusses nouthesia (admonition) in its relation to teaching (didaskein) in his comments on Col 1:28, where the terms occur together, speaking of them as complimentary aspects of the preacher's duty, related to one another as repentance is to faith: "warning to repent, instructing in the faith" (Ac 20:21). Jg ◐8:16. 2 S ◐2:24. 3:13, LXX. 1 C +*10:11. T 3:10g. of the Lord. Charles Hodge on this phrase states "Children are not to be allowed to grow up without care or control. They are to be instructed, disciplined, and admonished, so that they be brought to knowledge, self control, and obedience. This whole process of education is to be religious, and not only religious, but Christian. It is 'the nurture and admonition of the Lord,' which is the appointed and only effectual means of attaining the end of education. Where this means is neglected or any other substituted in its place, the result must be disastrous failure. The moral and religious element of our nature is just as essential and universal as the intellectual. Religion therefore is as necessary to the development of the mind as knowledge. And as Christianity is the only true religion, and God in Christ the only true God, the only possible means of profitable education is the nurture and admonition of the Lord" (Comm. on Ephesians, p. 360). 1 S ◐3:13. ◐8:3. 1 K ◐1:6. 2 Ch +*26:4. PHILIPPIANS

The apostle addresses the saints at Philippi with the bishops and deacons, 1, 2: showing his thankfulness to God for their "fellowship in the gospel," to that time; his love to them; and his confidence in them as to the future, 3-8; and giving a summary of the blessings for which he prayed in their behalf, 9-11. He informs them, that his imprisonment at Rome had conduced "to the furtherance of the gospel," 12, 13: so that many had been rendered more bold in preaching it; in which he greatly rejoices, though some did it from corrupt motives, 14-18; knowing that this "will turn to his salvation, through their prayers, and by the Spirit," and trusting that "Christ will be magnified in his body, whether by life or death," 19, 20. He declares that he is prepared for either event; that "to depart, and be with Christ, would be far better" for him; but that, as his life would be useful to them, he doubts in his choice, and supposes that he shall live, and be set at liberty, that he may further their joy of faith, by coming to them, 21-26. He exhorts them to walk worthy of their profession; to be of one mind "in striving for the gospel;" and to suffer cheerfully for Christ, as they had already been called to do, 27-30.

Paul says to die is "gain," and this he says while living. If death resulted in annihilation or soul sleep, it is unaccountable how one with the mind of Paul while living would prefer that. Rather, contrary to the teaching of annihilationists, Paul expects upon death to go immediately to be with Christ—not to lie mouldering in the grave, "to depart into forgetfulness, and be with Christ when he woke up," insensible of the time that intervened (see related notes on Da 12:2. 1 C 15:54). 23. in a strait. 2 S 24:14. 1 Ch 21:13. Lk 12:50. Ac +18:5. 2 C 6:12. betwixt two. This does not mean he was equally indifferent to the two things, and desired a third, for he specifically states he is in a strait betwixt two. The alternatives are clearly (1) to remain in the flesh and (2) to die. The immediately corresponding advantages are (1) to benefit the Philippians in their spiritual growth or (2) to depart this life in death and be immediately with Christ, which Paul for himself would prefer. Annihilationists and materialists find it necessary to wrest this plain scripture, and in a vain effort to maintain their system against its logic, mangle Paul's clear statement by affirming a third alternative, his desire to depart, which they claim is not a departure at all, but a reference to the returning and being with Christ. But if this were so, they are hard pressed to explain how Paul could affirm to the Philippians that it is better for him to remain in the flesh than for Christ to return. By dividing this third alternative, Jehovah's Witnesses introduce a fourth, asserting Paul's departure is a releasing, that is, "his own releasing to be with Christ at his return and the Lord's releasing of himself from heavenly restraints to return as he promised" (New World Translation with references, 1984 revised edition, Appendix 5D, p. 1578), which by their doctrine occurred at the second presence of Christ (Appendix 5B, pp. 1576, 1577) in 1914 (Bible Topics for Discussion, p. 4; Make Sure of All Things, topic "Chronology," pp. 89, 90, of 1965 edition). a desire. Lk 2:29, 30. Jn 13:1. 2 C √5:8. 2 T √4:6. to depart. Gr. to analusai, *S#360g, only here and Lk 12:36 (return). ƒ88, Ge +15:15. Paul uses a beautiful euphemism for death, employing a Greek word which itself contains a Metaphor, to loose anchor. A. T. Robertson states "One may note here that Paul speaks as if he expected to be with Jesus at death without an interval. The word 'depart' (analusai, loosen up. The intransitive sense of depart is common in Polybius and the papyri, see p. 36 of Moulton and Milligan, Vocabulary, etc.) was variously used, for a ship's departure, for breaking up camp, and for death. Paul himself uses a similar word (kataluthee) for death under the figure of breaking up camp or striking a tent (2 C 5:1). And in 2 T 4:6 he speaks of his own death again with the same word (analuseos) as here" (Paul's Joy in Christ, p. 97, 98). See the related noun derived from this verb, *S#359g, analusis, which occurs at 2 T 4:6 (departure). Vine states for *S#360g, analuo, "lit., to unloose, undo (ana, up, or again), signifies to depart, in the sense of departing from life, Ph 1:23, a metaphor drawn from loosing moorings preparatory to setting sail, or, according to some, from breaking up an encampment, or from the unyoking of baggage animals" (Expository Dictionary, vol 1, p. 294, 295). For *S#359g, analusis, Vine states "an unloosing (as of things woven), a dissolving into separate parts (English analysis), is once used of departure from life, 2 T 4:6, where the metaphor is either nautical, from loosing from moorings (thus used in Greek poetry), or military, from breaking up an encampment" (Expository Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 295). Compare the related word kataluo (*S#2647g, Mt +5:17 "destroy," rendered "dissolved" in 2 C 5:1, used of the death of the body). Since the noun derived from the verb used here is likewise used by Paul of his "departure" or death (2 T 4:6), it should be so understood here of his death, as his death is the immediate subject of the context. F. W. Grant observes "And it is true that it sometimes means 'return,' but not so often as 'depart,' so that an Annihilationist alone could tell us why it should be so translated here. The reason being only in the exigencies of a theory, which must bend Scripture to its need, or be convicted of open opposition to it" (Facts and Theories as to a Future State, p. 119). A modern example of just such an explanation may be found in Appendix 5D of the 1984 revised edition of the Jehovah's Witnesses New World Translation with references, p. 1578; p. 3591 of the six volumes in one edition of 1963; or pp. 780, 781 of the Christian Greek Scriptures, 1951 edition. Bullinger, being a materialist, and therefore an annihilationist, supports the mistaken view discussed above with the following comments. "Having a desire unto the return": i.e., (lit.) unto the to return (i.e. the returning of Christ). 'Analuo,' to loosen back again, but always from there to here; hence, to return (not from here to there, which would be to depart). See the only occurrences of the verb: Lk 12:36. Tobit 2:1. The meaning is that the Apostle knew not which to choose, whether to live or to die. His living would be better for them than his dying, but not better than a third thing which pressed him out of the other two, viz., the return of Christ, which was "far better" than either" (B492). Bullinger explains this figure in support of his annihilationist position as follows. "In verse 20, the apostle had been speaking of glorifying God "by life, or by death." For, if he lived, it would be "Christ," and if he died, it would be "gain" to him, and would release him and give him rest from all his labors. The real conclusion is that if he continued to abide in the flesh it would be better for them. But this conclusion is interrupted by the mention, parenthetically, of a third thing, which made him unable to say which of the two (living or dying) he would really prefer, because this third thing was so much better than either of the other two; for it was—the return of Christ. Then, having mentioned this, he takes up the statement again, repeating the beginning of verse 22 ("in the flesh") and continuing it in verse 24. Verse 22:—"But if I live in the flesh, [this is the fruit of my labor (yet what I shall choose I wot not, (23) for I am being pressed out of (ek) these two, having a strong desire unto the return, and to be with Christ, which is a far, far better thing): but to remain in the flesh] is more needful for you" (i.e., than dying—not better than Christ's return)" (B206, 207). Bullinger then cites 1 Th 4:17 to show that "and so shall we ever be with the Lord" proves our being with the Lord will only occur at the return of Christ: "There is, therefore, no other way of being 'with the Lord.' The Spirit of God would not have written one thing to the Thessalonians and a different thing to the Philippians" (B207). Bullinger's view is mistaken, being forced by his materialist position. His identification of the figure Epanalepsis is undeniable, but he is otherwise mistaken in (1) his forced identification of "to depart" with the figure Antimereia (compare another theologically forced identification, Ps 16:10n); (2) his strained definition of "depart" as "unto the to return" (B492), and (3) his introduction of a "third thing" into Paul's argument.

The apostle, by the most affecting topics, exhorts his brethren to humble, condescending, and self-denying love, 1-4; after the example of Christ, in his incarnation, humiliation, and death on the cross, as introductory to his glorious exaltation, 5-11. He exhorts to diligence, "in working out their own salvation," as depending on the grace of God, 12, 13; and to profess the gospel, and adorn it among their neighbors, by a harmless and blameless example; in such a manner, that he might rejoice with them at the day of Christ, in the success of his labors, 14-16. He assures them that he should joyfully become a martyr for their sakes; and he exhorts them to rejoice with him, 17, 18. He hopes to send Timothy to them shortly, whom he highly commends, 19-23; as he does also Epaphroditus, their messenger to him; who had been sick, and was grieved that they had heard it; and who, as God had mercifully restored him, longed to return to them, 24-27. The apostle therefore sends him back; and exhorts them highly to value him and such as he, seeing he had "disregarded his life, to supply their lack of service," 28-30.

He *1:3, 6, 8. +*13:8. of God. This is a clear assertion on Paul's part of the deity of Christ. Daniel Waterland gets to the crux of the controversy by setting forth two series of texts. The first series includes Is 43:10. 44:8. 45:5. 46:9, which declare that God is one, and to him none can be likened. The second series includes Jn 1:1. Ro 9:5. Ph 2:6. He 1:3, 8, which declare that Jesus Christ is God. The consequences of the Arian scheme are that if the texts of Isaiah exclude the Son, he is altogether excluded, and is no God at all. He cannot, upon Arian principles, be the same God, because he is not the same Person: he cannot be another God, because excluded by the Isaiah texts. If, therefore he be neither the same God, nor another God, it must follow, that he is no God. This is the difficulty which lies against the Arian scheme, and which Arians have not sufficiently attended to. It will not do to make Jesus Christ "a god" in a lesser sense, reserving only to the Father the title of supreme God, for neither Isaiah, nor the first commandment, allow for such a distinction. If they had allowed such a distinction, then in what sense would the worship of Baal and Ashteroth be considered idolatry, if they were merely looked upon as inferior deities, and served with a subordinate worship? The Old Testament texts cannot mean that there is merely no other Supreme God; but absolutely no other: and therefore our blessed Lord must either be included and comprehended in the one Supreme God of Israel, or be entirely excluded with the other pretended or nominal deities. In no case have the Arians proved—what must be proved if their understanding is to be received as correct—that texts which designate God the Father as the "only true God" (Jn 17:3) or "one God" (1 C 8:6) are meant to teach that the Son is absolutely excluded also from such designations, just as the Son is emphatically designated one Lord (Ep 4:5) without design to exclude the Father from being Lord also (see Daniel Waterland, Works, vol. 1, pp. 275-280). Waterland observes that the tactics of Arians in his day were to industriously run from the point, misrepresent our sense, and artfully conceal their own—characteristics which have not changed from his day to ours. Jesus must either be entirely excluded by the Isaiah texts, or not at all: and if he be not excluded, he is comprehended in the one Supreme God, and is one with him. Arians produce texts to show that the Father singly is the Supreme God, and that Christ is excluded from being the Supreme God: but I insist upon it, that you misunderstand those texts; because the interpretation you give of them is not reconcilable with other texts; and because it leads to such absurdities, as are too shocking even for yourself to admit. In short, either you prove too much, or you prove nothing (Waterland, vol 1, p. 278, 281). Subsisting in the form of God proves his nature and essence to be divine. John Daille states "As then the Lord Jesus, before He took our flesh, was in the form of God, it necessarily follows that He was truly God, no one being able to have the glory of God but He who had His nature also. And what the apostle adds, that He was "equal with God," clearly also determines the same thing; it being evident that if the Son were a creature, He could not be equal to God; every creature being of necessity infinitely below the nature, power, and majesty of the Creator" (Comm. on Philippians, Sermon 9, pp. 91, 92). thought. The Greek word harpagmos may bear either of two meanings: (1) in the active sense, the act of seizing, robbery; (2) in the passive sense, a thing held as a prize. The orthodox position may accept of either meaning, but the Arian position requires the latter meaning only, which is the reason they contend so strongly for it. The former meaning may be understood in the sense "Who because He was subsisting in the essential form of God, did not regard it as any usurpation that He was on an equality of glory and majesty with God, but yet emptied Himself of that co-equal glory"; the latter meaning may be understood in the sense "Who though He was subsisting in the essential form of God, yet did not regard His being on an equality of glory and majesty with God as a prize and a treasure to be held fast, but emptied himself thereof" (Vine, Expository Dictionary, vol. 3, p. 216, citing Gifford, The Incarnation, pp. 28, 36). Waterland offers the following explanatory paraphrase for the second view: "Who being essentially God (and consequently having a rightful claim to be honored equally with God), yet did not covet or desire to be so honored, did not insist upon his right; but, for the greater glory of God, and for the good of others, chose rather (in the particular instance of his incarnation) to wave his pretensions, and, in appearance, to recede from them" (Works, vol. 2, p. 110). But Christ, the second man, the last Adam, did not think it a matter to be grasped at in this way, "but humbled Himself," and through suffering and death reached His exaltation (B496). Seven steps downward in the Savior's humiliation are followed in verses 9-11 by seven steps upward in His glorification (B433). Is 40:25. 45:5. Zc 13:7. Ml 3:6. Jn +*5:18n. Re 1:17.

Waterland explains "we are not to suppose that he lost anything which he had before; or that he ceased to be in the form of God, by taking on him the form of man. No: he had the same essential glory, the same real dignity, which he ever had, but among men concealed it; appeared not in majesty and glory like to God, but divested himself of every dazzling appearance, and every outward mark of majesty and greatness, condescending to appear, and act, and converse as a man, like unto us in all things, sin only excepted" (Works, vol. 2, pp. 111, 112). Various kenosis theories have since been devised in an attempt to define what Christ "emptied himself" of—some asserting that he emptied himself of his divine nature, exchanging it for a human nature (thus denying the doctrine of the two natures in Christ); others assert that he gave up some of his divine attributes (such as omniscience, omnipotence, essential holiness—and so could sin, though he did not, though Scripture clearly affirms Christ was not able to sin, He 4:15); or his prerogatives as deity. Waterland's observation that Christ gave up only the visible manifestation of his glory is the one explanation fully verified by Scripture. Ex=40:34. Mk +9:12g. Jn √17:5. PHILIPPIANS 3

The apostle exhorts to joy in the Lord, and gives cautions against false teachers, 1, 2; shows that the church of real Christians are the true "circumcision," 3; and that he had better grounds of carnal confidence than most of those who trusted in the law, or inward distinctions, 4-6; but he had learned to count all his gain loss for Christ; yea, that he still counted all things, as loss and dung, compared with the knowledge of Christ, and the "righteousness of God by faith" in him, 7-9; desiring also to know the power of his resurrection, and to be conformed to him, even in suffering and death; if so be he might attain to the resurrection of the just, 10, 11. He owns, that he was not yet perfect, but that he anxiously and earnestly sought "the prize of the high calling of God," 12-14. He exhorts to an imitation of his example, 15-17; as many, professing Christianity, "walked after the flesh," in the way of destruction, 18, 19; with whom he contrasts true Christians, their heavenly conversation, and their expectation of Christ to raise their "vile body," and render it "like to his glorified body," 20, 21.

The apostle affectionately exhorts and encourages the Christians at Philippi to stedfastness in the faith, concord among themselves, and joy in the Lord, 1-4; and to moderation, confidence in God, constant prayer and thanksgiving, and positive themes for thought, 5-9. He declares his joy in the Lord, on account of their renewed care of him, in sending by Epaphroditus a supply for his wants, 10; for, though he had learned, and was able, "through Christ strengthening him," to be content in any station; they had done well in communicating with him in his affliction, 11-14. Indeed, they alone had formerly thus communicated with him: and he rejoiced that they were thus fruitful; as it would redound to their own profit; being a spiritual sacrifice particularly acceptable to God through Christ, who would abundantly supply all their needs, 15-19. To him he ascribes eternal glory, 20; and concludes with salutations and benedictions, 24-28.

COLOSSIANS

COLOSSIANS 1

The apostle salutes the saints at Colosse, 1, 2; thanks God for the good account which he had heard from Epaphras, of their faith and love, 3-8; shows, how he prayed for their increasing knowledge, holiness, patience, joy, and gratitude for redeeming love, 9-14; declares in exalted terms the personal and mediatorial glory of Christ, 15-20; by whom they, who were once enemies, were now reconciled to God; and would be eternally saved, if they continued in the faith of the gospel, of which Paul was made a minister, 21-23; who rejoiced in all his labors and sufferings for their sakes, as the apostle of the Gentiles, 24-27; and labored earnestly, "according to the mighty power of God in him," 28, 29.

2. To. Is +*8:20n. Ro +*1:7. the saints. The term agios, saint, properly denotes a holy person, separated from sin, and consecrated to God, probably from agos, a thing sacred, purity; and such the gospel requires every man to be, and such every true believer is. To restrict it here to those who adhered to the purity of the Christian faith in opposition to the Judiazing Christians, greatly impoverishes and debases the sense, as Dr. Doddridge well remarks. Taking it in the sense of those few holy persons canonized by the church and now in heaven is of course a wholly mistaken and unscriptural view of the term. See on Ps 16:3. 1 C *1:2. Ga 3:9. If "firstborn" invariably means "born first," then how can Israel (Ex 4:22), David (Ps 89:27), and Ephraim (Je +√31:9), and Christ (Ro 8:29. Col 1:15, 18. He 1:6. Re 1:5) all be called by God "my firstborn"? Therefore, use of the term firstborn in reference to Christ says nothing concerning his origin, but declares his position, rank, and office. Logically, if all things have been created by Christ, then he of necessity is uncreated, an absolute proof of His deity. This explains why the Jehovah's Witnesses in their New World Translation felt constrained, for doctrinal reasons, to make the unwarranted addition to the Word of God at this verse by adding "other" so as to read "all other things," making a lame attempt to justify such an addition by a reference to Lk 11:41, 42 or 13:2, 4. In the early editions (1950, 1951, and six volumes bound in one, 1963) of their translation, "other" was not even included in brackets, as it now is—a change perhaps prompted by the harsh criticism of many Bible scholars. ver. 17, 20. COLOSSIANS 2

The apostle shows how earnestly he prayed for the Colossians, and the churches which had not seen him; that they might be united in love, and thus comforted; and that they might attain to a clear knowledge of the mysteries of Christ, and not be seduced by deceivers, 1-4. He rejoices, as if he saw "their order, and the stedfastness of their faith;" and exhorts them to perseverance and thankfulness, 5-7; warning them against vain philosophy and human traditions; and showing that they were complete in Christ, 8-10; having in him the true circumcision, of which baptism was the external sign, 11-13. For God "had quickened them with Christ," having forgiven their sins, and abolished the law of ordinances, by his cross, 14; on which he triumphed over principalities and powers, 15. They ought not then to submit to legal impositions, which were shadows of Christ, 16, 17; nor be induced, by vain pretences, to worship angels, or to any other observances of voluntary humility, will-worship, and self-imposed austerity, 18-23.

Ep 2:10-18. circumcision of Christ. The juxtaposition of baptism and circumcision in this passage (ver. 11, 12) clearly shows that there is an intended relationship between them (Ga ✓4:25n). As the circumcision is spiritual, so the baptism is spiritual. Here, circumcision is unmistakably equated with Christian baptism, in such a manner as to affirm that baptism now takes the place of circumcision as the initiatory rite into membership in the Body of Christ. Real baptism corresponds to circumcision of the heart; ritual baptism to circumcision with hands; circumcision under the Old Covenant and baptism under the New Covenant is the seal of the Abrahamic Covenant, associated with the Promise, not the Law, and therefore not done away in Christ, who fulfilled the Law, but not yet the Promise. Just as there is a similarity between the Jewish Passover and the Lord's Supper, so is there intended similarity between Circumcision and Baptism. As the Lord's Supper was given to Gentile converts instead of the Passover, so Baptism was given to them instead of Circumcision. The law required of worthy partakers of the Passover (Ex ✓12:48), "let ALL his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it." A man's own personal circumcision was not sufficient passport to the Passover Table. Not only must the father of the family be circumcised, but his whole family or oikos. Thus in the New Testament the whole oikos (Ac +*16:15n), family, was baptized because in Christ there is neither male nor female, no distinction in behalf of either sex (Ga 3:28). Perhaps more accurately, all believers, male or female, are in the New Testament regarded as sons (Ga 4:7). Thus the objection that circumcision cannot prefigure baptism because it applies only to males is mistaken on two counts: (1) every female under the Old Covenant is represented by a male (Ge 1:27. 2:18, 24. Ex √12:48. ◐34:15, 16. Dt ◐7:3. Jg ◐14:3), regarded as circumcised, and qualified to partake of the Passover; (2) under the New Covenant, all believers partake of the "adoption of sons" (Ga +*4:5), and are spoken of, without exception, as sons (Ga +*4:7n).

12. Buried. Gr. sunthaptomai, *S#4916g, only here and Ro 6:4. This Greek word is thought by many to be decisive in regard to the mode of Christian baptism. But the word would better have been translated "entombed," then the term would not have been interjected into the baptism debate. There is no possible likeness between immersion into water and the mode of burial of the dead. When Christ was buried, he was not placed under six feet of earth, but wrapped like a mummy and laid on a shelf in a cave above ground. Roman burial involved burning the body, and placing the ashes in an urn kept in a tomb or a room prepared for the purpose. Hughey asks "Can any likeness be seen between our mode of burial and immersion? If there is any likeness at all between baptism and such a mode of burial, it would be to baptism by pouring, for the earth is poured upon the body, and not the body plunged into the earth. Plainly there can be no physical likeness between any of these modes of burial and immersion in water" (The Scriptural Mode of Christian Baptism, p. 194). The concept of "burial in water" may be possible in English, but in Greek this word is never used with reference to water. In this passage, and its near-parallel in Romans 6:4, water is not mentioned. The reference is to real baptism, not ritual, and those who are buried with Christ stay buried. There is no resurrection out of that into which believers were buried, for such would be apostasy from Christ. Those who favor immersion as a mode do not practice immersion, but dipping, for to leave the person immersed would be as fatal to the person as it is to their theory. To bring the issue of water baptism into Romans 6 or Colossians 2 is to extract from the message of Paul a meaning he did not intend, so as to totally miss the significance of the doctrinal truth he wished to convey. Baptism into Christ's death is not a momentary dipping, but the permanent placement in the grave where Christ was laid of every believer in his permanent union with Christ. As a result of the misapplication of these two passages by immersionists, this central message of Paul in Romans is often missed—perhaps accounting for the prevalence of such defective views of our death to sin, union with Christ, and his Lordship over our lives. 2 K 24:6n. Ps +51:2 (T#32). Mt 3:5, 6, 16. Jn 3:23. Ac 8:38, 39. Ro 6:4◐n (T#39-1), 5. He ◐+10:22 (T#39-2). baptism. The baptism of this verse and the circumcision of ver. 11 are one and the same thing. As the circumcision is spiritual and made without hands, so is the baptism. This is a reference to real baptism by the Holy Spirit, not ritual baptism in water (Ac +*1:5n). The burial is not into water but into the benefits of Christ's death. This baptism is accomplished by the Holy Spirit when an individual places faith in Christ (1 C √12:13n). "The being baptized into anything is the being brought under, and saturated with its influence and power" (W. R. Nicholson, Popular Studies in Colossians: Oneness With Christ, p. 195). This follows logically from the fact that justification does not admit of repetition, and that the pardon granted in justification "involves the removal of all guilt and of every penalty" (L. Berkhof, Systematic Theology, p. 514). Confession of sin for the believer does not restore him to salvation, but to fellowship with God (1 J 1:9). If continued salvation depended upon complete confession, then by this theory the failure to confess one sin through oversight would result in loss of salvation, which is contradictory to the possibility of assurance of salvation, our placement as sons and joint-heirship with Christ (Jn 1:12. Ro 8:17. Ga +*4:5, 7n), and the close connection between (1) justification and glorification (Ro +*8:29, 30); (2) present suffering and future glory (Ro 8:17. 2 T 2:12); (3) remission of sin and future inheritance (Ac +*26:18); (4) justification and hope of glory (Ro 5:1, 2). Bengel notes "used here significantly, for the several days of the week are called Sabbaths, Mt 28:1; therefore Paul intimates here the removal of all distinctions of days; for he never wrote more openly of the Sabbath. Christ, after he himself, the Lord of the Sabbath, had come, or before his suffering, clearly taught the liberty of the Sabbath; but he asserted it more openly by Paul after his resurrection. Nor has it yet been clearly defined what is due to the Sabbath, what to the Lord's day; but this has been left to the measure of every one's faith. The Sabbath is not commended, is not enjoined; the Lord's day is mentioned, not enjoined. A stated day is useful and necessary to those who are engrossed in worldly concerns. They who keep a continual Sabbath enjoy greater liberty. The Sabbath is a type even of eternal things, He 4:3, 4; yet its obligation does not therefore continue in the New Testament, otherwise the new moons should be retained, Is 66:23" (Word Studies, vol. 2, p. 463). Some argue that the Sabbath, like the tithe, is a pre-Mosaic institution, and therefore our obligation to observe it did not cease with the abolition of the Mosaic law (Ep 2:15) upon the death and resurrection of Christ and the beginning of the New Covenant under grace. In answer to this argument is Paul's very clear statement here, that we are to let no one judge us in respect to the keeping of the sabbath. Furthermore, those who would place us under legalistic obligations of the law, Mosaic or not, are guilty of the Galatian heresy, a heresy which results in spiritual death and loss of salvation (Ga 2:21. 5:2-4). Nowhere in the Word of God is the Mosaic Law given as binding to the Gentiles (Ac 15:5, 10, 19, √24. √21:25. Ro 2:14. 3:2. Ep 2:12). Sabbath observance needs to be left where the inspired apostle has placed it—as a matter of individual conscience, conviction, and preference—but never as an obligation to be imposed upon others (Ro 14:5). So with tithing: in all of the apostolic appeals for Christian giving for a multitude of purposes, never once is recourse had to making the tithe obligatory for the Christian, whether by direct appeal to the law, by precept, or example (Mt ◐23:23n. Lk √11:41n, 42n). The proper basis of appeal for Christian giving is found in Ph 4:17, where Paul urges as a proper motive the eternal reward which accrues to our account as the result of our Christian giving. The apostle exhorts Christians to "seek" and "set their affections on things above," as risen with Christ, and as following him to heaven, 1-4; to mortify all carnal lusts, to put away malice, and to seek conformity to Christ in holiness, 5-11; especially in love of each other, readiness to forgive injuries, and gratitude to God, 12-15; to "let the word of Christ dwell in them richly;" to abound in grateful praises; and to "do all things in the name of Christ," 16, 17. He gives exhortations to wives and husbands, 18, 19; to children and parents, 20, 21; and to servants, 22-25.

It is now called Eski-hissar, the old castle; and besides the whole surface within the city's wall being strewed with pedestals and fragments, the ruins of an amphitheater, a magnificent odeum (a small roofed theater for musical or dramatical performances), and other public buildings, attest its former splendor and magnificence. 1 THESSALONIANS

1 THESSALONIANS 1

The apostle salutes the church at Thessalonica, 1; and shows how he thanked God on their behalf, and prayed for them; remembering the fruits of their faith, love, and patient hope, as evidences of their "election of God," 2-4. He speaks, more particularly, concerning the happy effects of his success among them: for, "receiving the word in much affliction," copying the example of their teachers, and setting good examples to others; their conversion from idols to the service of the true God, and their patient waiting for Jesus, the Deliverer "from the wrath to come," speedily became known in every place, 6-10.

1. Paul. 2 Th 1:1, 2. Silvanus. Silas, or Silvanus, and Timothy, did not come to the Apostle, when driven from Thessalonica and Berea, till after his arrival at Athens, nor did they continue with him in that city, being sent speedily back to Thessalonica (1 Th 3:1. Ac 17:10-15); which shows that this epistle could not have been written from Athens, but from Corinth, where they afterwards rejoined him (Ac 18:1-6). The genitive, however, may be, by Anti- mereia, faithful service, loving labor, and hopeful patience. But if the figure is Antiptosis, then it means a working faith (i.e. a faith which is manifested by its works), a laborious love, and patient hope. Probably all three interpretations are correct! Some take it to refer to the wrath of God against the unsaved (Jn +*3:36), but others, probably more correctly, take it to mean the time of wrath called the Great Tribulation which is yet future. The reference to the Great Tribulation is confirmed by (1) the immediately preceding reference to "waiting for his Son," a statement which would lack connection if the wrath were that of God against unbelievers, (2) the mention of deliverance, which, allied closely with the similar term in Ro 11:26, certainly designates deliverance from tribulation foretold in Old Testament prophecy (Zp +*2:3), and promised by Christ (Lk +*21:36). If the identification of the "wrath to come" with the great tribulation is correct, then the pre-tribulation rapture position would be the correct prophetic position. This of itself would not answer the question whether the Rapture is promised for all believers, or only to those who are "counted worthy" (Lk +*21:36). The doctrine of the "one body" (Ep 4:4n), the declaration that "we shall all be changed" (1 C 15:51), and the extension by promise and prophecy of blessings equally to all believers (Ps +*149:9) argue for all to be raptured, as against the various partial rapture theories. However, the presence in Scripture of repeated warnings to be faithful and ready, and the exhortation of our Lord to pray that we might be counted worthy, suggest the real possibility that some believers will not be counted worthy, otherwise there would be no point to the warnings, if qualification were universal and automatic. 1 Th 2:16. √5:9. 1 THESSALONIANS 2

The apostle reminds the Thessalonians of his affectionate, faithful labors, and holy manner of life, among them, 1-12. He expresses his satisfaction, as to the manner in which they had received the gospel; and their constancy amidst persecution, 13, 14: and speaks of the guilt and ruin of the unbelieving Jews, especially for opposing the gospel's being preached to the Gentiles, 15, 16. He shows his joy on the account of the Thessalonians, his desire of seeing them again, and his hope of a joyful meeting at the coming of Christ, 17-20.

The apostle shows, that his care for the Christians at Thessalonica had induced him to send Timothy, to establish and encourage them, 1-5; whose good report concerning them had been a great comfort to him in his distresses, 6-8. He thanks God, in their behalf, and shows how earnestly he desires to see them, 9, 10; and prays, that he may be enabled to visit them; and for their growth in holiness and love, and perseverance to the end, 11-13.

Paul consistently sought to conserve his gains and minimize losses through careful followup of his converts (Ac 15:36. 20:31, 32. Compare He +*3:12, 13). In our day more attention needs to be paid to spiritual growth following initial conversion. So much attention has been focused upon the "birth" that little has been done to insure growth of new believers. As a result, as many are lost silently out the "back door" as are currently being won and brought in through the front door. Warmly introduce newcomers to the fellowship to strong believers who will exercise continuing love and hospitality toward them (Ro +*12:13. 1 P *4:9, 10) to facilitate the development of deep Christian relationships (Ro +*12:5). Rather than be so efficient in dropping inactive members from the church roll, we ought to be careful to exercise our responsibility in caring for (1 T +*3:5) and feeding the sheep, seeking out the ones who have left the fold, winning them back to active life in the body of Christ, rather than abandoning them to the world, the flesh, or the devil. See related notes (Jon 4:11n. He 3:13n. 6:9n). See on 1 Th 2:1, 11-13, 19, 20. Is *49:4. Ga 2:2. +*4:11. Ph +*2:16. in vain. It does not appear from this remark that Paul taught or believed in unconditional eternal security. See the "if" in ver. 8. To what purpose are the warnings to believers in Scripture, if what is warned against is not possible in the first place? We need to exercise care in formulating our doctrinal systems that we do not wrest Scripture by arbitrarily denying even the possibility of what so many texts repeatedly warn against: doctrinal (1 C +*15:2) or moral (1 C +*6:9, 10) apostasy. The apostle earnestly exhorts his brethren, to increasing in diligence in obeying Christ, 1, 2: and to chastity, and integrity in all things: as God had called them to holiness: and those who despised these admonitions, would despise God himself, 3-8. He calls on them to "abound more and more in love" of one another, 9, 10; to be industrious in their respective callings, 11, 12; and to moderate their sorrow for deceased believers, 13; from assured expectation of the coming of Christ to raise the dead in Christ, to change living believers, and receive them by the Rapture to himself, 14-18.

The assertion that Paul never quotes the words of Christ is false (ver. 15. Ac 20:35. 1 C √9:7n, 14n. 11:23-26. 1 T 5:18); so also the assertion that his teaching was not founded upon any of the teaching of our Lord given during the earthly ministry in Palestine. On the contrary, Paul carefully distinguishes the basis of authority for his teaching, whether the known teaching of Jesus himself (see the reference passages below), the teaching of the law (1 C 14:34), or divinely inspired teaching granted Paul by the Holy Spirit (Ro 16:25. 1 C 7:40. Ga 1:12). Careful attention to this matter will serve as a proper corrective to the mistaken teaching of some that the Old Testament is not authoritative for the church, or that the teaching of our Lord's earthly ministry in the gospels does not pertain to this dispensation. Paul taught that all scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable (2 T +√3:16, 17); that the Old Testament was written for our learning (Ro +*15:4); to it Paul appeals as the ground of authority for his teaching for New Testament church practice and doctrine (1 C 14:34. 1 T 2:12-14); he cites the very words of Christ in Mt 10:10 at 1 T 5:18, calling them scripture. Peter calls the writings of Paul scripture, 2 P 3:16. Beware, therefore, of that false teaching in the name of "rightly dividing the word of truth" (apparently misread by some as "rightly subtracting") which would take whole portions of the Word of God, such as the Sermon on the Mount, the commands of Christ (1 J +*2:3n), or even the whole of Christ's earthly teaching ministry before the cross, not to mention all of Paul's early epistles written before the alleged founding of the church after Acts ch. 28, and render them inapplicable for teaching and instruction for the church today. Such an approach is certainly condemned by the consistent warning of scripture (Dt 4:2. 12:32. Pr 30:6) not to "take away from the words" of this book, lest God take away "his part out of the book of life" (Re +*22:19). 1 C √7:◐6, *10, ◐12, ◐25, ◐40.

This, of course, is an unwarranted inference which fails to take into account Paul's own inspired prediction regarding the great apostasy and the coming of Antichrist given in 2 Th ch. 2, events which Paul certainly did not suppose were to be compressed into his own lifespan. The fact that Christ revealed to Peter certain events which would transpire in his life (Jn 21:18-23), as well as to Paul (Ac 9:15. 20:23, 24. 27:24), must not be understood to deny the doctrine of the imminency of the return of Christ. Robertson notes Paul "was alive, not dead, when he wrote" (Word Pictures, vol. 4, p. 32). Paul sometimes associates himself with the living (as here, and Ph 3:20. T 2:12, 13), and sometimes with the dead, (as 1 C √6:14. 2 C √4:14. 5:8. Ph 1:21-24. 2:17. 2 T 4:6-8). By such words Paul simply associates himself with the class of the living to which he then belonged, as opposed to the dead, and was not making a statement about how soon Jesus would return, a secret which God has kept in his own counsel (Dt +*29:29. Mt 24:36. Mk +*13:32. Ac +*1:7), as Hogg and Vine well observe (Comm. on 1 Thessalonians, p. 138). ver. 17. 1 Th 5:10. Ps 66:6. Ho 12:4. Mt 16:28n. Mk 9:1. Lk 9:27. Is +*24:6. Mt +*7:14. Lk 18:8. the coming. Gr. parousia, Mt +24:3. 1 Th +2:19. Parousia has the basic meaning of presence or arrival, used in later Greek secular literature of the official visit of a king or ruler. In the New Testament it is used nontechnically of presence (1 C 16:17. 2 C 10:10. Ph 1:26. 2:12); of coming or arrival (2 C 7:6, 7. Ph 1:26); and in a technical eschatological sense of the second coming of Christ, with the connotation of ultimate presence (Mt +24:3n, 27, 37, 39. 1 C 15:23. 1 Th 2:19. 3:13. 4:15. 5:23. 2 Th 2:1, 8. Ja 5:7, 8. 2 P 1:16. 3:4, 12. 1 J 2:28). Hogg and Vine note that the usual translation, "coming," is misleading, for other Greek words are better so translated (erchomai, Lk 12:45. 19:23. eleusis, Ac 7:52. eisodos, Ac 13:24). "...whereas these words fix the attention on the journey to, and the arrival at, a place, parousia fixes it on the stay which follows on the arrival there" (Comm. on Thessalonians, p. 87. See also Boyce Blackwelder, Toward Understanding Thessalonians, p. 85). The word parousia does not itself denote either secrecy or invisibility (Mt 24:3n). Hogg and Vine further note (p. 88) that when used non-prophetically of Christ, parousia refers to a defined period (2 P 1:16, the transfiguration, see Mt 17:1-8). Where it is used prophetically, parousia refers to the time beginning with the descent of the Lord from heaven into the air (1 Th 4:16, 17), and ending with his revelation and manifestation to the world (2 Th 1:7). "The Parousia of the Lord Jesus is thus a period with a beginning, a course, and a conclusion. The beginning is prominent in 1 Th 4:15; 5:23. 2 Th 2:1. 1 C 15:23. Jehovah's Witnesses argue from this text that Jesus is the archangel Michael, since Michael is the only archangel named in Scripture. This of course is shaky inference indeed, opposed to very clear declarations of Scripture as to the two natures in Christ. The motivation for such identification is to remove the basis for the doctrine of the deity of Christ and the Trinity. But such wresting of Scripture will not stand up to careful comparison of Scripture. In He 2:16 it is declared that Jesus "took not on him the nature of angels," but took on in his incarnation "the seed of Abraham." As Paul asserts Christ before the incarnation was in the form of God, Christ could not have been an archangel in time past; Scripture declares that Jesus during his earthly life "became flesh" (Jn 1:14) and was made in the likeness of men (Ph 2:7), and now as man is in heaven (1 T 2:5). These direct assertions of Scripture leave no room before, during, or after the incarnation for Jesus Christ to have been or to have since become an archangel: he is truly man, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily (Col 2:9). The Jehovah Witness doctrine regarding the person of Christ also fails in that it requires the discontinuity of the person of Michael the archangel, and is subject to the same fatal objection noted in their doctrine of the mortality of the soul, namely, that not resurrection but new creation must take place in reconstituting the person, so that the same person does not exist before and after (see note on Mt +*10:28n. Compare 1 C 15:54n). The apostle Peter could not truthfully assert, as he did, that it was "this same Jesus" who is now exalted to the right hand of the Father, if he believed Jesus is now Michael (Ac +*2:36). Perhaps Jehovah's Witnesses would be helped to perceive the invalidity of their logic if we apply the same logic to the succeeding phrase: since Christ is to return with the "trump of God," He must be God. While on other grounds this can be proven true, Jehovah's Witnesses would rightly object to the logical form of such an argument here; and for the same reasons they find it invalid, their own argument identifying Jesus with Michael fails. does not teach a single general resurrection of the righteous with the wicked at the end of the world (Jn x6:39), as so often taught. Here reference is made to the resurrection of the "dead in Christ," not all the dead. Daniel asserts that "many of," not "many," and certainly not "all" that sleep in the earth shall awake. While "many" by a figure of speech may sometimes stand for "all" (Mt 26:28n), such cannot be so for the phrase "many of" which is different (See Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 126, Observation 2, who cites Dr. Hody to this effect, p. 245). Clearly the wicked are resurrected at another time, which Scripture elsewhere teaches is after a one thousand year interval, at the end of the Millennium (Re 20:5). Since the resurrection of the wicked is not mentioned here, this resurrection has exclusive reference to the righteous, a fact utterly opposed to a simultaneous resurrection of all the dead (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol 2, p. 297). The Rapture is clearly pretribulational, for Paul's purpose is to comfort (ver. 18) the Thessalonians by calling attention to this glorious prospect and blessed hope (T √2:13). Paul corrects the mistaken view of the Thessalonians again in the second epistle by showing that the day of Christ was not at hand. Logically, this must refer to the fact that they had been taught and correctly understood that the day of Christ was secret in its initial stage—at least unknown to the world, and not the public manifestation of Christ at his return in glory, or they could not have been confused about the day of Christ having already transpired, or being already present, without their having had a part in it, 2 Th 2:1. Paul argues they could know that the day had not yet come because the Rapture had not taken place (2 Th 2:1), nor had the great apostasy and the revelation of the Antichrist transpired (2 Th 2:3, 8). Careful students of prophecy have noted that the Second Advent of Christ takes place in two stages: at the first stage Christ's coming for his saints is unobserved by the world (Is 26:20. Zp 2:3. Mt +*24:42n. 1 Th 5:2. 2 Th 2:1. 2 P 3:10); the last stage, when Christ comes with his saints, is most public and visible (Jl 3:11. Zc +*14:5. Mt +*24:30. Re +*1:7. 19:14). The timing of the first stage is not revealed; the Rapture is imminent: it could take place at any time. The second stage takes place at the end of the Great Tribulation, therefore the precise timing will be known (Mt +*24:42n. Da 9:27. 12:7). Because many prophetic events take place between the two stages, the time interval may be greater than the usually postulated seven years. The amount of time between the Rapture and the onset of the Tribulation is apparently unrevealed. 1 K 18:12. 2 K 2:11, 16. Ps +*7:6, 7. Is 57:1. Jl 2:32. Zp +*2:3. Mt 11:12g. 13:19g. Ellicott explains "the clouds forming the element with which they would be surrounded, and in which they would be borne up to meet their coming Lord." "...upon which the glorified and luciform body will be caught up in the enveloping and upbearing clouds" (Comm. on Thessalonians, p. 65, 66). There is no indication of any intervening Millennium on earth between Resurrection and heavenly glory" (Greek Testament, vol. 2, p. 19). His misunderstanding is grounded in his failure, among other things, to note that only the righteous are spoken of as being included in this resurrection. His careful observation earlier on the same passage, that the "circumstances of the Second Advent, and of the Last Judgment, appear to have been prefigured by those of the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai" is carefully drawn, except for the mistaken connection with the Last Judgment, and independently confirms Peters, cited below. Further confirmation of such connections is provided by the study of "Antitypical Parallels" alluded to by Peters (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 121, Observation 8, note 28, point 4, p. 191), but developed fully by others as in Antitypical Parallels; or, The Kingdom of Israel and of Heaven, by "Gershom" (Major General J. E. Goodwyn), London: S. W. Partridge, 1866, pp. xxiv, 1-501. Jn +*12:26. with the Lord. Paul, having accomplished his purpose of comfort by asserting that the living saints would rejoin deceased believers at the Rapture, abruptly stops the discussion. No doubt the Thessalonians had received much fuller instruction from Paul about prophecy when he was with them in person. We are left to infer from other Scripture where the saints will go once they are raptured. The usual view is that Christ takes the saints back to the third heaven, some believe forever, others suppose for the seven years of the Tribulation. Interestingly enough, Paul does not say here, nor does Scripture elsewhere state, that the saints return to heaven. Peters cogently argues (See the following references, which I have carefully noted, as they are not represented in the indexes in Ac +*7:5n. Ep +*1:11n. He +*11:13, 16n). Peters establishes at length and in great detail that the saints will be taken by Christ to some secure appointed place upon earth (Dt +*33:2) to organize and prepare for the establishment of the kingdom, when believers will receive their training and appointments (Jn +*14:2) to posts of rulership and responsibility (Ps 149:4-9. When the preparation is complete, Christ will march (Dt +*33:2. Is *63:1-6) upon his enemies, then victorious will ascend the Mount of Olives (Zc 14:3-5) and enter Zion (Is *1:27. +*51:11. +*59:20. In Greek the words underlying "wholly" and "whole" demonstrate the figure Homoeopropheron, or Alliteration: holoteleis and holokleeron. Jsh +*14:8. Ja 1:4. your whole. Gr. holoteleis, ✻S#3648g, only here and Ja 1:4 (entire). Paul in this text does not use the word "holomereis, 'in all your parts,' followed by the summing up of those parts, spirit, soul, and body; but that it reads holoteleis, which refers, not to the parts, but to the final end, telos" (Abraham Kuyper, The Work of the Holy Spirit, p. 491, note. Also cited by J. I. Marais, ISBE, vol 4, p. 2496), thus a reference to man as a unity. Paul speaks here of "body," "soul," and "spirit" by way of periphrasis to represent the whole man. This text and He 4:12 appear to teach man is trichotomous, that he consists of three distinct elements: body, soul, and spirit. Yet no one argues on the basis of Lk 10:27 that man's being consists of four or five elements: (body), heart, soul, strength, mind. Careful comparison of Scripture with Scripture will show that man is dichotomous (Ro +*8:10), and that soul and spirit are but two different aspects of the same conscious non-material eternal part of man. That they are the same element in man is proven by the fact that the terms soul and spirit are used interchangeably (Ge +*2:7). The terms soul and spirit are used with a wide degree of meaning in Scripture (see for soul, Mt +*2:20n; for spirit, Mt +*8:16n), but it is possible to affirm absolutely that the soul is not the body (Mt +*10:28n), contrary to the frequent affirmation of materialists like the Jehovah's Witnesses. That soul and spirit as they comprise the "hidden man of the heart" are immortal is absolutely affirmed by Peter (1 P +*3:4), for the Greek word aphthartos, rendered "not corruptible" is rendered "immortal" at 1 T 1:17, and the closely related noun form of this word, aphtharsia, is rendered "immortality" at Ro 2:7 and 2 T 1:10. Yet some quibble may be raised that aphthartos is best translated "incorruptible," and that the rendering immortal and immortality is best reserved for athanasia, which occurs at 1 C 15:53, 54 and 1 T 6:16. Yet by the rule that things equal to a third thing are equal to each other, the Corinthian passage shows that the bodies of dead saints must put on incorruption, and the living saints who are mortal must put on immortality: but since both the living and the dead are one body (Ep 4:4) in Christ, at the Rapture (1 Th 4:15-17) the final form of existence for both groups is identical. Since the dead saints are raised to incorruption and the living saints ("mortals") are changed and put on immortality, incorruption and immortality are in this case one and the same thing in final result, and the objection that "incorruption" is not "immortality" has no force. For if the living are granted immortality, but the dead only incorruption, then living believers have an advantage over the dead in Christ, which is contrary to Paul's argument in 1 Th 4:13-18, for such a concept is the very error Paul wrote to correct in the Thessalonian church. Perhaps the term "immortality" with its meaning of deathlessness was reserved by Paul to living believers since they shall never experience physical death, and applied to their bodies, not their souls or spirits, both of which latter are never said in Scripture to be subject to natural (as opposed to spiritual) death in any case. The apostle salutes the Church of the Thessalonians, 1, 2; thanks God for their growth in faith and love; encourages their perseverance under persecutions, by the prospect of the coming of Christ; and shows how glorious he will then appear in the destruction of all unbelievers, and the complete salvation of his people, 3-10. He prays for their perfect sanctification, and meetness for heavenly felicity, by the grace and for the glory of God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, 11, 12.

Faith is one of the seeds of the kingdom: this the Apostle had sowed and watered, and God gave an abundant increase. Their faith was multiplied, and their love abounded: and this was not the case with some distinguished characters only; it was the case with every one of them. For this the apostle felt himself bound to give continual thanks to God on their behalf, as it was "meet" and right. the charity. 1 Th +3:12.

2 THESSALONIANS 2

The apostle warns the Thessalonians against groundlessly supposing that the day of Christ was at hand, 1, 2, and shows that it must be preceded by a great apostasy; in which "the man of sin," by his blasphemies, usurpations, and impostures, would cause the destruction of numbers, and then sink himself into perdition, 3-12. He thanks God for his special and effectual grace shown in choosing and calling the Christians at Thessalonica, "unto salvation and glory," 13, 14. He exhorts them to steadfastness, 15; and prays that they may be "comforted, and established in every good word and work," 16, 17.

Figure of speech Ellipsis (Absolute: of the Nominative), whereby the subject of the verb must be supplied from the nature of the subject alone, or from what is elsewhere expressed, Ge +14:20. See 1 C 15:24n. Hogg and Vine note the nominative of ginomai is not expressed in the original (Thessalonians, p. 261). Just who or what will be taken out of the way has puzzled interpreters. The most usually suggested options are (1) human government, (2) the church, (3) the Holy Spirit, (4) God. Several considerations, faithfully applied, will narrow down the possibilities to the correct choice. First, who or whatever this was or is was already known, already existing. Second, whatever is the correct choice must correspond to identifiable prophecy in the Old Testament. Third, Paul is intentionally being obscure here, probably to protect himself and the Christians he is addressing from adverse political persecution (Jn 11:48. Ac 17:7). Similar reticence to protect the parties concerned is reflected in the fact that the synoptic gospels do not mention the resurrection of Lazarus; only John records this event, presumably long after any possible harm might occur to Lazarus himself. Paul uses similar obscurity at 1 C 15:24-28. This factor of obscurity immediately rules out the possibility that the reference is to God, the Holy Spirit, or the Church, for if any of these were what he meant, he could have unhesitatingly named any of them without risk. Grammatical considerations also remove God, the Church, or the Holy Spirit from consideration. In this passage two grammatical genders are used of the restrainer: neuter gender, and masculine gender. If the Holy Spirit were the intended reference, Paul would have consistently used the neuter gender. Since the Holy Spirit is omnipresent (Ps 139:7, 8), and does not merely indwell believers, the removal of the saints at the Rapture does not constitute his removal. His removal is not suggested here or elsewhere in Scripture. As many are to be saved during the Tribulation (Re 7:14. 15:2-4. 20:4), his presence is essential (Ro 8:9). If the Church were Paul's intended reference, Paul would have consistently used the feminine gender, for in Greek the word "church" is feminine in its grammatical gender. Note that this does not mean that the church is feminine in any sense, or that it is thereby called a woman, for Greek grammatical gender has no necessary connection with natural gender (see note on Jn 16:13n). The reference is not to the Church, for if this were the case, the Church must be present during the first half of the Tribulation, until the Antichrist is revealed, yet this cannot be, for the Church is raptured (1 Th 4:17n) before the Tribulation begins. But the masculine and neuter gender does fit the future government (neuter gender) and its king (masculine gender). This leaves human government as the only remaining choice of those given. But the reference is not to human government in general, for prophecy nowhere states that such government will cease just prior to the revelation of the Antichrist. Rather, Paul has a specific reference to biblical prophecy in mind, Da √7:8, 24, where Daniel speaks of the Antichrist defeating three kings which until that time restrained his power. That Paul's reference is to prophecy in the book of Daniel is confirmed by his reference to Daniel in ver. 4, and his statement in ver. 5, which indicates that when he was present with the Thessalonians he had been teaching them about Bible prophecy from the book of Daniel. out of the way. ƒ108H3, Mt +13:49.

2 THESSALONIANS 3

The apostle requests the prayers of the Thessalonians, especially for the success of his ministry; expresses his confidence respecting them; and prays for them, 1-5. He charges them to censure and withdraw from disorderly walkers, who neglected their own business, and intermeddled in that of others; interspersing suitable arguments, directions, and exhortations, 6-15. He concludes with benedictions, 16-18.

1 TIMOTHY

1 TIMOTHY 1

The apostle salutes Timothy, 1, 2; reminds him for what purpose he was left at Ephesus, 3, 4; shows that "the end of the commandment is love, from a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith," 5; from which some having swerved, in attempting to preach the law had perverted it, 6, 7. The law is good; but is intended to condemn transgressors, 8-10; which accords with the gospel also, 11. With deep humility and thankfulness, the apostle speaks of his own conversion, and the encouragement given by it to sinners in every age; and ascribes glory to God, 12-17. He charges Timothy to maintain faith and a good conscience; and mentions some, who had renounced the truth, and whom he had delivered unto Satan, 18-20.

1 TIMOTHY 2

The apostle enjoins prayers, and thanksgivings, to be made for all men; especially for kings and rulers to "God our Savior, who is willing that all should be saved," 1-4. There is "one God, and one Mediator, Jesus Christ, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time," 5, 6. He declares his appointment, as the teacher of the Gentiles, 7: gives directions concerning prayer, and the modest apparel of women, 8-10; prohibits them to teach, and requires them to be in subjection, 11, 12; as the man was first created, and the woman was first seduced into sin, 13, 14. Thayer gives the definition "what is given in exchange for another as the price of his redemption, ransom" (Lexicon, p. 50). Friedrich Buchsel in the TDNT notes that the word is a rare form, but represents a direct reference to Mk 10:45 expressed in the more elegant and forceful style of Greek found in the Pastoral epistles (TDNT, vol. 4, p. 349). A. T. Robertson states, speaking of the Greek preposition anti in reference to Mt 20:28 and Mk 10:45, "These important doctrinal passages teach the substitutionary conception of Christ's death, not because anti of itself means "instead," which is not true, but because the context renders any other resultant idea out of the question. Compare also antilutron uper panton by Paul (1 T 5:6) where both anti and uper combine with lutron in expressing this idea" (A Grammar of the Greek New Testament, pp. 573, 574). The Jehovah Witness New World Translation renders antilutron as "corresponding ransom." According to Jehovah Witness theology, following the pattern set by Charles T. Russell, Christ's ransom corresponded exactly to Adam, and Christ atoned for but one man, Adam, in whom we were all comprehended (He 7:10). Thus "one unforfeited life could redeem one forfeited life and no more." As F. W. Grant wryly remarks in reviewing this system, it smacks of the merchant, "with simply a clever plan for making a very large purchase with a very little money; and this trader's wit Mr. Russell credits to God as divine wisdom," but such a view of the atonement constitutes "a dreadful estimate or blasphemy of the divine nature, and in which Christ's life is valued at just the worth of any other man's!" (Facts and Theories as to a Future State, pp. 587, 588). The flaw in Russellism's atonement is at least twofold: (1) Scripture nowhere states Christ was Adam's substitute; this is a false deduction from Ro 5:18, 19, the commercial theory of the atonement taken to its extreme; (2) this passage does not state Christ gave his life a ransom for Adam, but Christ gave himself a ransom for all, as the very next words in the verse indicate. Le 5:15, 16. 6:4, 5. Ps 69:4. Mt *20:28. Jn 17:23, 24. for all. The Calvinistic doctrine of the limited atonement does not accord with the declaration of this verse, and the attempts to get around the obvious sense of this passage show the flaw to be in that system of interpretation which necessitates explaining away this text (2 P 1:20n). 1 TIMOTHY 4

The apostle foretells a great apostasy, and corruption of Christianity, in after times, 1-3; shows that "every creature of God is good," 4, 5; and directs Timothy, in respect of his doctrine and personal conduct, that he may preach and live in such a manner as "to save himself and those that hear him," 6-16.

Those who teach unconditional eternal security need to consider whether the direct statements of Scripture affirm apostasy is possible. One cannot logically be said to depart, fall away, or apostatize from a faith which one never held in the first place. Paul is addressing these warnings to believers, not unbelievers. One must not appeal to an isolated text such as Jn 10:28, and force it to teach unconditional security, when such a statement in its context is clearly said of those who Jesus declares "hear my voice" and "follow me" (Jn 10:27). A text like Jn 5:24 shows by the use of the present tenses in the Greek that the promise is to those who keep on hearing and believing (Jn 3:16n). In the context of Romans 8, the subject of apostasy is not in view. A text like Ro 8:30 is not addressing the unconditional security of the believer but the certainty of our glorification with Christ, despite how difficult our present circumstances might seem. In context (Ro 8:17) such confidence relates directly to our eternal inheritance with Christ as co-heirs in his earthly Messianic kingdom, an inheritance which is not rendered less certain because of present trials and tribulations, but more certain, for our reward and position is only increased by our perseverance (Mt +*5:11, 12). One does not apostatize every time a sin is committed. Moral apostasy consists of willfully persisting in known sin (1 C +*6:9-11. He 10:26. 1 J 3:9). Although one is never said in Scripture to be saved over and over again, or to be born again more than once, this fact does not remove the validity of all the warnings to believers against both moral and doctrinal (1 C +*15:2) apostasy. Certainly there would be no point in warning believers against what was impossible (1 Th 3:5n). While the Bible emphatically teaches the eternal security of the believer (Mt 24:13n), and makes the security of salvation in no sense dependent upon good works to stay saved, this security belongs to believers who continue to place their faith in Christ for salvation, not unconditionally to persons who by a single act of faith allegedly "received Christ" but have since departed from the faith doctrinally or morally. That eternal security is not unconditional is proved by (1) repeated warnings to believers against doctrinal and moral apostasy; (2) the presence of "if" clauses (2 P +*1:10); (3) Paul's repeated concern that his labor not be in vain (1 Th 3:5n); (4) recorded instances of individuals who departed from true faith (He +*10:38); (5) that believing or saving faith is always represented in Greek as a continuing active faith, not a single or one time act of faith (Jn 3:16n). (6) Jesus said it is possible to stop believing (Lk +*8:13). To suggest, as many contemporary expositors do, that the warnings against apostasy in the book of Hebrews were addressed only to Jewish Christians who were in danger of forsaking Christianity and falling back into Judaism, and therefore cannot apply to believers today, is at best a shaky assumption, and at worst is taking away from the Word of God by wrongly rendering its warnings inapplicable to present day believers. As the warnings against apostasy are addressed with greater frequency to the Gentile Christians addressed in Paul's epistles (1 C +*15:2), such an argument has no force. To deny the force of the warning in Hebrews 6:4-6 by relegating the Apostle's argument to a "reductio ad absurdum," or reduction to an absurdity, is begging the question, as Spiros Zodhiates does in a footnote in his otherwise excellent work (The Hebrew-Greek Key Study Bible, pp. 1496, 1497). Few readers of that day or this would be in position to appreciate such a display of the niceties of rhetoric as the argument necessarily supposes was the author's intention. Such interpreters, in their mistaken effort to support the theory of unconditional eternal security, ignore, suppress, or explain away all contrary evidence. Such a procedure is invalid because, by its practice, the interpreter makes it impossible for God to assert a contrary truth. No matter how God might choose to express such a truth, the interpreter intent on defending this mistaken theory would explain the language away. An example of a clever but mistaken attempt to escape the logical consequences of this passage (1 T 4:1) is the effort to redefine the Greek terms for apostasy used here and at 2 Th 2:3 to mean "stand aloof from," making the reference to be to persons who were never believers, but simply those who associated with the Christians (Spiros Zodhiates, The Hebrew-Greek Key Study Bible, p. 1468, note on 2 Th 2:3). Zodhiates' redefinition also involves him in the exegetical "word study" fallacy discussed by D. A. Carson as "The Root Fallacy" (Exegetical Fallacies, pp. 26-32). Such a redefinition is rendered necessary by the exigencies of the theory of unconditional eternal security, as Zodhiates' ensuing arguments using Jn 10:28, Ro 8:38, 39, etc., show. This view is in error for the word "apostasy," in Greek, apostasia, in its religious use necessarily includes a prior turning to God (Heinrich Schlier, TDNT, vol. 1, p. 513, note 4), a concept rendered certain here by the next words "from the faith." 19. Against an elder. Every servant of Christ must exercise diligence in living absolutely above reproach (Ac +*6:3. Ro 14:22. 1 Th +*5:22. T *2:8), lest the ministry be blamed (2 C +*6:3). Yet despite such care, misunderstandings and ugly situations will arise (Lk 16:1n. 2 T *3:12), frequently from lack of communication between the accuser and the accused. Words and actions are consistently misread, and wrong motives assigned, which in the imagination of the accuser run wild and rampant with no foundation in reality. And it takes but little effort to find two "witnesses" to agree in a false accusation. Any person in the church, whether elder, pastor, teacher, or custodian, will have repeated and sometimes painful experiences where his words or actions will be misinterpreted, and taken completely out of context. The corrective for such problems is to teach forthrightly the penalty Scripture assigns for the false accuser (Dt *19:18, 19). Teach the necessity of godly forbearance and suspension of judgment until all concerned parties have been fully heard, the evidence is in, and all due process appeal procedures have been exhausted. Teach the need to keep channels of communication open in both directions (1 S +*25:17. 2 K +*5:13). Teach the proper response to correction (Ps 25:9. +*141:5. Pr +*9:8, 9. Jn 15:20, 21), as well as the proper means of offering it (Le +*19:17. Pr 27:6. Ro +*12:8n. Ga √6:1. Ep +*6:9). Teach the requirement that scrupulous adherence to every principle of due process be maintained (Le +*19:13, 15. Jn +*7:51. Col 4:1). Christians in positions of management in the workplace need to follow the same principles in maintaining proper employer/employee relations. receive not. Accusations against an elder which cannot be substantiated by credible, disinterested witnesses are not even to be investigated, but ignored, suppressed, and silenced. 1 TIMOTHY 6

The duty of servants to unbelieving and to believing masters, 1, 2. Timothy must shun those, as corrupters of the gospel, who teach things contrary to the apostle's doctrine, 3-5. The advantage of godliness with contentment, 6-8. The mischiefs arising from the love of money, 9, 10. The apostle exhorts Timothy to flee from these evils; to "follow after righteousness," and "to fight the good fight of faith," 11, 12; and most solemnly charges him to be faithful till the coming of Christ, 13, 14. He ascribes glory to the eternal God, 15, 16. Timothy must charge the rich to avoid pride, and confidence in wealth; and to abound in liberality, as seeking a treasure in heaven, against the time to come, 18, 19; and he must adhere to the faith, avoiding profane and vain controversies, 20, 21.

2 TIMOTHY 1

The apostle affectionately salutes Timothy with thanksgiving and prayer, 1-3, and expresses a great desire of seeing him, 4; remembering his faith, and that of his grandmother and mother, 5. He exhorts him to stir up the gift of God which was in him, 6. He charges him not to be ashamed of the divine testimony, or of him the Lord's prisoner; but to prepare for suffering; as having been saved, and called by the grace of God, according to the gospel, which fully reveals life and immortality, 7-10. Of this, Paul had been made an apostle; for which cause he suffered, without being either ashamed or afraid, as he knew the power of him in whom he trusted, 11, 12. He exhorts Timothy to steadfastness and faithfulness, 13, 14; shows that those of Asia had turned from him, 15; and commends the diligent and courageous kindness of Onesiphorus; praying fervently that he and his family might find mercy from God at the last day, 16-18.

2 TIMOTHY 2

Timothy is exhorted to appoint faithful ministers; and to courage, fidelity, and patience, as "the good soldier of Christ," 1-7; in remembrance of Christ as risen from the dead, 8; in imitation of the apostle's example, 9, 10; and in assured faith and hope, 11-13. He must warn the flock against false teachers and vain controversies; studying, as an approved workman, "rightly to divide the word of truth," 14-16. The pernicious effects of the error of Hymeneus and Philetus, 17, 18: yet "the foundation of God stands sure," and "all who name the name of Christ" should "depart from iniquity," 19. Some are vessels of honor, others of dishonor; but Timothy must seek to be the former, 20, 21. He is taught what to flee and what to follow after, 22; to shun disputatious questions; and to instruct opposers with meekness, in hopes of their being recovered from the snare of the devil, 23-26.

"rightly dividing" is the rendering of a single Greek word, orthotomeo, *S#3718g, only here. Vine notes the word is from orthos, straight, and temno, to cut, "the meaning passed from the idea of cutting or dividing, to the more general sense of rightly dealing with a thing. What is intended here is not dividing Scripture from Scripture, but teaching Scripture accurately" (Expository Dictionary, vol 1, p. 327). The word occurs in the Septuagint at Pr 3:6 and 11:5, where the English has "direct." The reference is not to dividing up Scripture into dispensations, and applying to ourselves only what is allegedly valid for this dispensation. Neither is it dividing Scripture on the basis of to whom it was originally addressed or spoken of, the Jew, the Gentile, or the Church of God (citing 1 C 10:32, pressing this text far beyond the bounds of its legitimate meaning and application in context), for all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable (2 T √3:16). While all Scripture may indeed not be about us, it is all for our learning (Ro +*15:4), and we have no right by such arbitrary distinctions to eliminate from our careful consideration whole sections of the Word of God. The emphasis is not upon "right division" (which in the practice of some is "wrong subtraction," 1 Th 4:2n), but on "correct interpretation." In context Paul is directing Timothy not to strive about words to the subverting of the hearers, but to handle the Word of God accurately so as to teach them the truth. Pr 25:12. 2 TIMOTHY 3

The apostle foretells grievous times "in the last days," through the atrocious wickedness of those, who would retain "the form, without the power of godliness," 1-5; and the devices and opposition of false teachers, 6-9. He proposes his own example to Timothy, 10-13; exhorting him to continue in the faith, 14; and showing the excellency, authority, and sufficiency of the sacred scriptures which Timothy had known from his youth, 15-17.

This grammatical construction involves two predicate adjectives connected by and. The Revised Version (1881) changes one of these predicate adjectives to an attributive position, which is incorrect. The revisers do not misconstrue this construction in the other passages where it occurs. For the same grammatical construction see Ro 7:12. 1 C 11:30. 2 C 10:10. 1 T 1:15. 2:3. 4:4, 9. He 4:12, 13. In the Authorized Version text this "is" is given in italics, showing there is no word for it in the Greek, and it has therefore to be supplied. The Revised Version (1881) omits this "is," and reads "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable," thus suggesting that some Scriptures are not inspired. The American Standard Version (1901) follows the Revised Version (1881); the New American Standard Version (1960) gives this rendering as a possibility in its margin. There are nine other passages which present exactly the same construction in Greek, and not one of these has been altered by the revisers (of 1881). Had they done so in the same manner as they have done in this case, the result would have been as follows: Ro 7:12, The holy commandment is also just. 1 C 11:30, Many weak are also sickly. 2 C 10:10, His weighty letters are also powerful. Similarly with the other passages, which are 1 T 1:15 (the faithful saying is also worthy of all acceptation). 2:3 (this good thing is also acceptable). 4:4 (every good creature of God is also nothing to be refused), 9. He 4:12 (the living word of God is also active), 13 (all naked things are also opened). "It is true that the A.V. rendering is given in the margin of the R.V., but it is difficult to see why that should be disturbed" (Companion Bible). This is another instance where the Scripture's own teaching about itself has been adversely affected in some modern translations (see Jn 5:39n and 8:31). inspiration. T#40. 2 TIMOTHY 4

The apostle solemnly charges Timothy to be diligent and faithful in his ministry, 1, 2; as before long, men would "not endure sound doctrine," 3, 4; and as he, Paul, had nearly finished his work, was about to suffer martyrdom, and receive the crown of righteousness, 5-8. He presses Timothy to come to him, and to bring Mark with him, as he was almost left alone; and gives him information, direction, and caution, requesting his cloak, books, and especially the parchments, 9-13. Paul warns against Alexander the coppersmith; Paul's imprecatory prayer beseeching God to reward Alexander according to his works, 14, 15. He shows Timothy, how his brethren had forsaken him, and how the Lord had supported him, when called to answer before his persecutors; expressing his confidence in God for the future, 16-18; and he concludes with salutations and benedictions, 19-22.

I have somewhere read, but cannot now recall the source or the scholar alluded to, that although some have wrongfully said of such a text as this that it is unworthy of divine inspiration to have been included in Holy Writ, yet this text has been blessed to guide the life of at least one important Bible scholar to pursue a life of study which has since blessed multitudes of Christians, for, having determined to give up his library and scholarly study, he was impressed by this passage not to do so. TITUS

TITUS 1

The apostle shows the nature and importance of his office, and salutes Titus, 1-4. He states for what purpose Titus had been left in Crete, 5; and what manner of persons should be ordained to the ministry, 6-9. He exposes the dangerous principles and the selfishness of the false teachers, "whose mouths must be stopped," 10, 11: and the bad national character of the Cretians; whom Titus must "sharply rebuke" and instruct, that "they may be sound in the faith," 12-16.

Readers of English translations and versions often mistakenly attribute the modern English connotation of a greater or lesser degree of doubtfulness, uncertainty, or contingency to "hope," a connotation which the biblical usage of this word most emphatically does not contain. TITUS 2

The apostle directs Titus to instruct the people in their several relative duties, for the honor of the gospel; to exemplify them in his own conduct, and to take heed to his doctrine, 1-8; to teach servants to be obedient and upright, that "in all things they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior," 9, 10. He enforces his exhortations, by showing the holy tendency and efficacy of the gospel, and charges Titus to act with authority and firmness, 11-15.

Tribulation, or is it the appearance of Christ "in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" after the Tribulation? Misunderstanding this verse, some interpreters fail to recognize this is a reference to Christ's pretribulational "glorious appearing" for the Church (Mt 17:2. Jn √14:3. √17:5, 24. 1 Th √4:17. 1 J √3:2), to be carefully distinguished from His "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (Mt 24:30) after the Great Tribulation at the open manifestation of the Second Advent. Paul presented the doctrine of the Rapture as a source of present comfort to the Thessalonians (1 Th 4:18). It could hardly be a source of comfort to them if Paul taught that they must endure the Great Tribulation first! A careful study of the details of prophecy confirms the doctrine of the imminent and secret pretribulation Rapture as the logical outcome of the proper combination of prophetic detail. Peters (Theocratic Kingdom) and other careful students of prophecy before and since have shown (1) that prophecy must be interpreted consistently in a literal manner; (2) that such a literal interpretation necessitates a distinction between the Church and Israel (Is 60:21n); (3) maintaining and observing the distinction between the Church and Israel guards against applying the Great Tribulation, called in Scripture the time of Jacob's trouble (Je 30:7) to the Church; (4) that no event of prophecy is said to occur before the first stage of the Second Advent, for to interpose any event, such as the Great Tribulation, introduces a snare to put us off our guard (see Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, p. 102); (5) Scripture most certainly does predict specific events which occur prior to the last stages of the Second Advent, such as the coming of Elijah (Ml 4:5, 6), but such events occur in the interim between the first or secret stage of the advent, and its final or open public stage, and so do not precede the Rapture; (6) that the number of events revealed in Scripture to take place on "the last day" (Jn +*6:54n) when Christ returns at the second advent are simply too numerous to compress into a single event occupying but one literal twenty-four hour day; (7) that since the events are so numerous, the second advent may be divided loosely into at least two stages (see the note on the known and unknown time of Christ's coming, Mt 24:42), which must not be misrepresented as a second and third coming, any more than prophecies of the First Advent that Christ would come as a babe to Bethlehem yet ride triumphantly to Jerusalem on a colt constitute that a first and second coming; (8) that the many passages relating to the return of Christ may be distinguished in their reference to his public manifestation in glory to the earth after the Tribulation with his saints, and the imminent return for his saints prior to the Great Tribulation; (9) careful readers have certainly noted that some passages present the world as proceeding with its affairs in very normal times ("peace and safety," 1 Th 5:3. "all things continue," 2 P 3:4) when the return of Christ comes as a surprise, while other passages represent the time immediately preceding his return as a time of great tribulation, suffering, and terror (Lk 21:26. Re 6:16), everyone very much aware of his advent (Mt 24:30); (10) many other lines of proof are developed in Peters' work, including specific prophecies (Mi 7:15) which specify a period of time involving years for the accomplishment of all the related events; (11) a consideration of the prophecies of the First Advent and their manner of accomplishment will show that their fulfillment was pre-eminently literal, occupied at least 33 years, could not be compressed into a single day, yet if they were to be interpreted by the principles advocated by amillenialists for the Second Advent prophecies, we could hardly have expected a suffering Savior who was literally born of a virgin in Bethlehem, and who was crucified on a cross, for by their principles all such specific details of prophecy must not be pressed for a literal fulfillment. T 1:2. 3:7. Ac √24:15. Ro 5:5. *8:19, 24, 25, 29. 15:4+*4, 13. Ga *5:5. Col +*1:5, 23, 27. 1 Th 2:16. He 6:18, 19. 1 P +√1:3, 4. 1 J √3:3. and. ↗93A, Ge +1:26. By Hendiadys, the "blessed hope" and "the glorious appearing" are not two things, but one: our hope is the glorious appearing (B669). The "glorious appearing" may well be one with the rapture, for Christ at the Rapture will appear gloriously for his saints. Walvoord notes, "While the appearing of the glory of Christ to the world and to Israel will not be fulfilled until the Second Coming to establish the kingdom on earth, the church will see the glory of Christ when she meets him in the air" (John F. Walvoord, The Rapture Question, p. 74). the glorious appearing. ↗24N, Ge +17:5. The preparations required to come with his saints require Christ to have first come for his saints; therefore, the blessed hope and glorious appearing may be applied to the Rapture of the Church prior to Christ's return in "power and great glory" (Mt 24:30), when we will be with him and share in his glory (Zc +*14:5. Ju 14, 15). The rewarding of the saints (Lk +*14:14), their appointment to positions of authority (Jn +*14:2, 3), their training and organization for posts (Mt 25:21, 23. Lk 22:29, 30) in the eternal earthly kingdom (Da 7:13. Re 11:15) of Christ, not to mention such diverse events as are comprehended in Old Testament prophecies such as Christ's pleading with Israel in the wilderness (Ezk 20:35, 36) and speaking "comfortably unto her" (Ho 2:14), and his victorious march against his enemies on the way to Jerusalem (Is 63:1-4), then his victory over the hosts gathered against Judah and Jerusalem (Zc 9:14. 12:7, 8), all require his literal physical personal presence upon the earth (Re 11:17n. 16:5) before he comes to Zion (Is +*51:11) for the victory ascent to the Mount of Olives (Zc 14:4), which are all events that take place prior to the final public victorious manifestation of Christ in clouds of glory (Mt +*24:30) with his saints (Zc +*14:5. Col 3:4. Ju 14, 15), when every eye shall see him (Re +*1:7). Now it is just such attention to prophetic details which enables the careful student to entertain a correct view of the several aspects or stages of the second advent. Of course the contention of some that this is "grasshopper theology" or "hop-skip-and-jump" prooftexting is directly refuted by the examination of the location and extent of prophecies regarding the first advent, which are likewise widely scattered through the Old Testament, and are nowhere found in a systematic arrangement (T#1874-1976). That Christ and the apostles taught Scripture by such a comparison of widely scattered texts is evident from the occurrence of composite quotations in the New Testament (Mt +*27:9n). Jb +*19:25-27. Robertson notes that as early as 1798 Granville Sharp laid down a rule which has not since been successfully discredited, that when two nouns (either substantive or adjective, or participle) of the same case are connected by "and" (kai, in Greek), nouns of personal description (respecting office, dignity, affinity, or connection, and attributes, properties, or qualities, good or ill), if the article "the" in any of its cases precedes the first of the said nouns or participles, and is not repeated before the second noun or participle, the second noun always relates to the same person that is expressed or described by the first noun or participle: i.e. it denotes a farther description of the first named person. This principle is not claimed, however, for proper names or to the plural number. Thus "the apostle and high priest of our confession" is one person, Jesus (He 3:1). John is referred to as "your brother, and companion" in Re 1:9, a reference to just one person. Such expressions as "the God and Father" (Ro 15:6. 1 C 15:24. 2 C 1:3. 11:31. Ga 1:4. Ep 5:20. Ph 4:20. 1 Th 1:3. 3:11, 13. Re 1:6) and "the Lord and Father" (Ja 1:27. 3:9) are all used of one person, not two. So likewise "the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 P 2:20. 3:2) is a reference to one person. The introduction of the word "our" in 2 P 1:11 and 3:18 does not affect the idiom. Following the same principle for the identical construction in Greek for 2 P 1:1, "our God and Savior Jesus Christ" is a reference to a single person, not two. So here at T 2:13, the same construction is correctly rendered "our God and Savior Jesus Christ," and the reference is to one person, not two. Attention to this construction thus yields two texts in support of the Deity of Christ that were not evident in some English translations (see Robertson, The Minister and His Greek New Testament, "The Greek Article and the Deity of Christ," pp. 61-68). When the Greek article occurs before both nouns, two persons are meant, as "let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican," two separate persons are implied (Mt 18:17, cited by William Hendrickson, Comm. on 1-2 Timothy and Titus, p. 374). Those who deny the validity of this grammatical principle are faced with the problem that if two persons are meant, then Paul is predicting the simultaneous glorious advent of both the Father and the Son at Christ's second coming. Although the advent of the Father is supportable from other prophecies (Da ◐7:22. Zc √14:5. Ep *1:10), the simultaneous advent of the Father and the Son is not usually incorporated into the prophetic system of those who understand this passage to refer to two persons. Ne 1:5. 9:32. TITUS 3

The apostle inculcates on Christians, subjection to rulers, and good behavior to all men, 1, 2; from the consideration of their own sinfulness and their salvation by God's mercy through Christ, 3-8. He cautions Titus to avoid disputes; and shows him how to deal with heretics, 9-11: and, directing him to meet him at Nicopolis, and giving instructions about other matters, 12-14, he concludes with salutations, 15.

PHILEMON 1

The apostle salutes Philemon, 1-3; declares his joy at hearing of his faith and love, 4-7; earnestly and pathetically entreats him to receive into favor his fugitive servant, Onesimus, now become, by the apostle's ministry, a consistent believer, 8-21; desires him to provide for him a lodging, as he expected to be speedily released, 22; and concludes with salutations and benedictions, 23-25.

HEBREWS 1

The writer declares the essential deity and mediatorial glory of the Son of God, by whom the Father speaks to men under the gospel dispensation, 1-4. He adduces several scriptures to prove that the Messiah was to be far greater than the angels, and worshipped by them as their Creator and Lord, 5-14.

HEBREWS 3

The great superiority of Christ above Moses is proved and illustrated, 1-6. The Hebrews are solemnly warned not to copy the example of their unbelieving ancestors, who perished in the wilderness, 7-19.

This clause is often popularly understood to support "trichotomy," the doctrine that "soul" is distinct and discrete from "spirit," and that man is a trinity consisting of body, soul, and spirit. There can be no proper analogy drawn between the Divine Trinity of the Godhead who are equal in power and glory and of the same substance, and an alleged trinity in the human nature of body, soul and spirit, for to which person of the Trinity shall "body" be equated, when the body is considered inferior to the soul and spirit? Likewise, soul being considered inferior to spirit, to which person of the Trinity shall each be equated? The analogy, when pressed, breaks down immediately, and if held, is a fruitful source of heresy, as it has been throughout church history, though not all trichotomists are heretics! Elsewhere in Scripture man is consistently spoken of as "dichotomous" (Ro +*8:10), consisting of two elements, body and soul, sometimes expressed body and spirit, the soul and spirit being the same element. Here, the text in the original does not say soul is divided from spirit, but that soul and spirit are divided from the joints and marrow, speaking of man as dichotomous. Others understand the text to mean "the piercing of the soul and the spirit, even to their joints and marrow" (Strong, Systematic Theology, p. 485), and point out it is not stated that there is a "dividing between soul and spirit" but a dividing of, indicated in Greek by "a series of genitives, each one in itself naming something which is divided" (J. Oliver Buswell, A Systematic Theology of the Christian Religion, Vol. 1, p. 243). See related notes (Ge 2:7n. 1 Th 5:23n). 1 C 15:44. Ph 1:27. 1 Th 5:23. Ju 19. soul. Jn 8:46. 2 C ✓5:21. 1 P +*2:22. 1 J *3:5. without sin. or, excepting sin, or, sin apart. Scripture teaches the impeccability of Christ. In answer to the question "Was Christ able not to sin, or not able to sin?" the Scripture teaches Christ was not able to sin. Since he possessed two natures (1 Th 4:16n), a human nature and a divine nature, which nature was in control? Logically, the divine nature must have been in control of the human nature. Since Jesus was both God (Jn +*20:29n) and man (Ph 2:7. 1 T 2:5), and it is impossible for God to sin or to be tempted with evil (T 1:2n. Ja ✓1:13), Jesus could not sin, neither could he be tempted with evil, for there was nothing of our sinful nature in him to which Satan could appeal (Jn 14:30). Though he was tempted in all points like as we, yet this temptation was never to sin. His human nature was subject to weariness and hunger, and the suffering of death, but never sin. Had Jesus been able to sin while on earth in his human nature, but merely did not, then he is still able to sin in the human nature which he still possesses, and the divine plan of redemption is ever in jeopardy—a doctrine incompatible with Scripture. Thus the significance of the qualifying phrase "without sin" can be understood to teach Jesus not only did not sin, was able not to sin, but, possessed of a divine nature, could not sin. HEBREWS 6

The apostle purposes to lead the Hebrews forward in the knowledge of Christ, 1-3. He shows the desperate state of apostates, 4-6; and illustrates it by a simile of barren land, which no culture improves, 7, 8: but declares his favorable opinion of the Hebrew Christians, and his desire of their fruitfulness and diligence, in order to their assured hope to the end, 9-12. He expatiates on the security of the covenant of grace, as confirmed to Abraham by the promise and oath of God, for the strong consolation of all future believers, 12-20.

The following five-fold description of the true believer is scarcely if ever equaled elsewhere in the pages of Scripture as to detail or extent, and most certainly can apply only to persons who were once genuinely saved. If such a description were to occur in any other context but this, there would be no question as to its application to true believers. This text furnishes a near-perfect measure of one's theological system: if you must work strenuously to avoid the clear implication of the text in an effort to prove these were not true believers, your system stands convicted as incorrect at this point, and the effort to explain this passage away is the hallmark of those who are guilty of mishandling the word of God in order to maintain their preconceived doctrinal system (2 C +*4:2. 2 T +*2:15). were once. 6. If. lit. And. 1 C +*15:2. 2 P +*1:10. fall away. The Scripture frequently warns against the possibility of apostasy as a very real danger. Logically, only real believers can apostatize, unbelievers cannot. These warnings in Hebrews must not be explained away as applicable only to Hebrew Christians who were at that time in danger of falling back into Judaism, if only because the same warnings are given with equal urgency to the Gentile Christians to whom Paul wrote in his several epistles (1 C +*15:2). Nor can these individuals arbitrarily be classed as those who professed a relationship with Christ but who were never really genuinely saved (1 J 2:19n), for the Holy Spirit has closed off this possibility as completely as it is possible to do so with the language used in the preceding description identifying just who these individuals were. He *3:10, 11. +*12:15. Nu 3:4. Is √1:28. Jn 6:66. ◐√10:27, 28. Ac 1:25. Ga 5:4. 1 T +√4:1n. 2 P 2:15, 22. 1 J *2:19, 20. Ju *5. to renew. This is hardly a description of a Christian who has momentarily backslidden (Ps 37:24. Pr *24:16. Ju 24), but rather of the inveterate apostate who, though once truly trusting in Christ for salvation, has through moral (1 C +*6:9-11) or doctrinal (1 C +*15:2) apostasy fallen away from Christ. If such a person has ceased to believe in Christ (Lk +*8:13), and no longer places faith in what Christ did on the cross for him (2 T 2:12, 13), there is no other sacrifice for sin to which he can appeal for salvation. Being removed from the only possible grounds for hope and salvation, it is impossible to renew such a person again on the basis of any other hope. This passage does not teach that it is impossible for the person who has sinned to repent and turn back to Christ, if he wills to do so (Jn 6:37). It teaches that there is no other possible alternative to which the person who has turned away from Christ for salvation can turn (Jn √14:6. Ac √4:12). Continuing to put Christ to an open shame by their flagrant disregard of His sacrifice, they cannot be renewed to repentance. See on ver. 4. Ps +*51:10, 11. Pr *21:16. *29:1. Is 1:28. (10) daily study of God's Word: Jsh *1:8. Ps +*1:2. Ac +√17:11. The book of 1 John would make a most suitable place for the new Christian to begin the study of God's Word. Read a chapter each day of 1 John on Monday through Friday every week for an entire month in order to begin to learn and master its contents. From time to time look up the cross references given in the Treasury of Scripture Knowledge for a favorite or striking verse encountered in that day's reading. The book of 1 John, in discussing the several characteristics of true believers (1 J 5:13n), incidentally mentions many additional things that accompany salvation. Further reading of the gospels of Mark and John, Paul's shorter letters, such as Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians, and the concurrent reading of a chapter each day from the Old Testament book of Proverbs (read for each day the chapter number which corresponds with that day's calendar date) would provide, in about that order, an appropriate spiritual diet for a new believer. Beyond this, reading of Matthew, Luke, Acts, and the book of Romans is suggested. Once a new believer is familiar with all these books of Scripture, reading in any other books as personal interest may lead would then be profitable. In addition to the consecutive reading of whole books of the Bible, the study of particular subjects in the Bible is essential. Topics recommended for priority study are the following Treasury notes and references: Is +√8:20n (T#46). Ps +102:18 (T#49). Ga +√1:8n (T#1120). HEBREWS 7

The superiority of Melchisedec's typical priesthood, above that of Aaron, proved and illustrated, 1-10. It was intended, that the priesthood should be changed, and consequently that the ritual law of Moses should be disannulled, when the Messiah came; that a better covenant and priesthood might take place, 11-18. This was needful, for the more perfect state of the church, and for the salvation of all who come to God by Jesus Christ, to the uttermost, and forever, 19-28.

This cannot mean different or diverse immersions, for under the Mosaic system different modes of purification were required, such as washing, sprinkling, and rinsing. The apostle, when writing that the Levitical institutes consisted "ONLY" of meats and drinks, and diverse baptisms, could not have meant that lustrations consist ONLY of immersion. Besides, he applied the adjective diphorois, different, to qualify the noun baptisms. This makes good sense if we suppose the noun to be generic, as purifications, but is absurd if we take the noun as specific, like immersion. Those who argue that the "one baptism" of Ep 4:5 proves their doctrine of one mode of baptism have to reckon with this passage, where "different baptisms" certainly proves different modes (See F. G. Hibbard, Christian Baptism, Part Two, p. 214). He 6:2g. +*10:22. Ex 29:4. 30:19-21. 40:12. Le 14:8, 9. *16:4, 24. *17:15, 16. 22:6. Nu 19:7-21. Dt 21:6. 23:11. washings. Gr. baptismos, ✻S#909g, Mk +7:4. Ex *40:31, 32. Le *8:6, 12. He 6:2. Jn 2:6. 3:25. carnal ordinances. or, ordinances of the flesh, or ordinances of the person. That is, the baptisms or Jewish purifications spoken of are restricted to those ceremonies which had an application to the body of the worshipper, not the rites for the purification of cups, skins, clothes, vessels, etc. This is clear from the context, which contemplates the effect that these ordinances were to have upon the conscience of the worshipper. It is clear from their being called ordinances of the flesh. It is clear from the antithesis drawn in the apostle's argument: the blood of bulls, and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctified to the purifying of the flesh, but the blood of Christ shall purge your conscience from dead works, etc. (ver. 13, 14). The fact established, then, that the ordinances spoken of as "baptisms" are with reference only to the body of the worshipper, the manner of the mode commanded for the administering of those Jewish purifications is of great significance in determining the meaning conveyed by baptismos. The question becomes, is immersion ever enjoined, under any circumstances, as necessary to effect a purification of a person? No immersions of persons are enjoined under the Mosaic ritual. No washings of persons are enjoined by the Hebrew word tabal (✻S#2881h, 2 K 5:14), the Hebrew word understood by some to mean or require immersion, nor by any word that denotes immersion; but without exception washings or purifications are enjoined by the word rahats (✻S#7364h, Ex 29:4), which denotes to wash or purify, without any reference to mode. The word rahats and its usual Greek equivalent in the Septuagint, louo, denote the application of water to the person or thing, and not of the thing or person to the water, as immersion would require. These words are synonymous with the English wash, but they are not synonymous with bathe. The Hebrew rahats is rendered by the Septuagint sometimes by louo, which denotes the washing of the body; by nipto, which also means to wash, and is used to denote washing of hands or feet; and sometimes by pluno, which is used to denote the washing of clothes, accomplished by treading them in water in a trough; and once it is translated by cheo, to flow, to pour forth, to shed. The word used to enjoin the washing of clothes, in the Old Testament, is kabas, which primarily means to tread, to trample with the feet; and hence, to wash, to cleanse, etc., as garments, by treading them in a trough; and finally, to wash in any way. It is sometimes used in a figurative sense, as Ps 51:2, 7; Je 2:22; 4:14; Ml 3:2. The Septuagint sometimes uses pluno which means to wash clothes, to render the Hebrew shatap (✻S#7857h, Le +15:11), to gush, to pour out, to rush, to overflow; hence, to wash, rinse, as Ezk 16:9, "wash away thy blood"; Jb 38:25, "outpouring" of waters; Pr 27:4, anger is an "outpouring." This word is generally translated rinse in English, where it denotes washing of hands, or vessels, as in Le 15:11, 12. When in English the word bathe occurs, this does not enjoin immersion, for the original Hebrew term in every such case denotes only to wash. The most usual practice in the Old Testament was to sprinkle, as alluded to in He 9:13, and Nu 19:20 (See F. G. Hibbard, Christian Baptism, pp. 86-90, 210-213). "Salvation" or "the salvation" was a Biblical term derived from the prophets (Is 25:9) descriptive of the times of Millennial blessing to be experienced when the throne and kingdom of David should be restored under Messiah (Is +*55:3). The kingdom of the Messiah and salvation were in the Jewish mind convertible terms (Mk 15:43 w Lk 2:25). From Origen's time to the present the term "salvation" has been too exclusively applied to the present life and the intermediate state. If we turn to the apostolic teaching we find, on the other hand, a full and free adoption of the Jewish phraseology (Ac 1:6n), without placing upon it another and widely differing interpretation, and its direct reference to the future, when, as prophets teach, it will be realized. The salvation which the apostles preached is related to the fulfillment of the covenant and restoration of the nation of Israel (Lk √1:69-75. Ro +*15:8). This salvation, whatever the earnest might be in the present or intermediate state, is declared by the apostles to be still future. What a contrast exists between the present prevailing spiritualistic, indefinite modern conceptions of "salvation," and the correct belief based on the oath-bound covenants. What an astonishing change, when "the Christ," "the kingdom," and even "salvation" itself are transformed from their covenanted and predicted meaning. The most selfish and mystical conceptions are adopted in preference to the simple truth (See Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 3, Proposition 196, Observation 1, pp. 449, 450). HEBREWS 10

The inefficacy of the legal sacrifices is shown from the frequent repetition of them, 1-4. The abolition of them, and the substitution of the sacrifice of Christ, was foretold by the psalmist, 5-9; and is that by which believers obtain eternal remission, 10-18. Exhortations to faith, prayer, and constancy in the gospel; and to love and good works, 19-25. The danger of willfully renouncing Christ, after having received the knowledge of the truth; with solemn warnings, expostulations, and encouragements, 26-39.

There were essential defects in these sacrifices. 1st.—They were not of the same nature with those who sinned. 2nd.—They were not of sufficient value to make satisfaction for the affronts done to the justice and government of God. 3rd.—The beasts offered up under the law could not consent to put themselves in the sinner's room and place. The atoning sacrifice must be one capable of consenting, and must voluntarily substitute himself in the sinner's stead: Christ did so. The nature and requirements of Christ's office as our substitute in his work of redemption through His death on the Cross absolutely require of Him that He be divine. A substitute must meet at least these six qualifications: (1) He must honor and obey the law which those for whom he substitutes are dishonoring and disobeying, as highly as though it had never been broken, so that justice will not be injured. Ge 18:25. Ps 40:7, 8. Is 42:21. Jn *8:46. This demands the impeccability of Christ (He +*4:15). (2) Though giving perfect obedience to the law that is being broken, he must yet suffer its full penalty as though he had been the supreme criminal against it, so that mercy will not be injured. He 7:26. Is 53:3. 2 C *5:21. (3) He must do his work as a substitute voluntarily and without the slightest pressure from without, so that he himself will not be injured. He 12:2. Jn √10:18. (4) He must have the absolute and inherent right thus to dispose of himself, so that no one else will be injured. Christ has the inherent right thus to dispose of himself, provided He is Creator and not creature. No creature, not even the highest and greatest of the sinless angels, has any right over his own life. It belongs to, and is therefore wholly at the disposal of, the Creator. When Christ died, obedient to death (Ph 2:8), though he voluntarily dismissed His spirit (Lk 23:46), no man taking his life from him, yet he did not thereby commit suicide, but the very opposite. For when one suicides, he thrusts himself unbidden into the presence of God, having no right to take his life because he cannot bring it back again. No creature could qualify under this fourth requirement, for none has the right to lay his life down. Moreover, if God should grant any sinless creature that right, and he should lay his life down by the permission of God, here then would be God giving a creature instead of Himself, and this would wholly remove Him, and therefore His love, from the transaction. For love is self-giving, not the giving of someone else. God could never show His love without giving Himself (Ge 22:8). If Christ is not actually God Himself, manifest in the flesh (1 T 3:16), He was but a creature, and as such, wholly unable to qualify at this point. This fourth requirement of a substitute thus demands the deity of Jesus Christ. (5) A substitute must be able fully to represent and answer for both God and man in his work as a substitute, so that neither party to the transaction will be injured. In meeting this fifth requirement, Christ is fully able to answer for and represent both God and man, if He IS both God and man. That Christ is both God and Man is shown by His ability to render wholly acceptable service to God as, on the one hand, He represents Him in maintaining His Law to the last jot and tittle in qualifying before Him on behalf of the sinless; and on the other hand, as He represents man in receiving the penalty of the Law on behalf of the sinful. For no one ought to answer for man's sins but man; and no one can answer for them but God. Reason therefore demands the virgin birth of Jesus Christ. God must be his Father, else He cannot be God, just as a woman must be His mother, else He cannot be Man. Herein lies the philosophy of the incarnation. This is why the Mighty God tabernacled in the flesh. (6) His work as a substitute must be of such intrinsic moral worth as forever to satisfy the utmost demands of perfect righteousness and holiness, so that the principles of equity will not be injured. Christ's work as substitute was of such intrinsic moral worth as to present to God a value sufficient to cover the moral needs, not only of his own holy Law in bringing it up out of dishonor, but also of the whole sinful world. Here once more reason demands the deity of the substitute, and the Scripture declares it. And such is what gave His work its worth; such worth did His work have that no injury could ever come to the eternal principles of equity and righteousness inherent in God's holiness. Christ's suffering was the perfect satisfaction given to the justice of God by the infinite merit of the holiness of the selfsame God (Ge 22:8), who Himself became the substitute to meet on man's behalf His own just requirements. It was no third party (such as the Arians claim Michael the Archangel to be, 1 Th 4:16n) coming in between God and the sinner and changing His wrath to love. It was God Himself expressing His love, at infinite cost to Himself, in a way that gave full satisfaction both to the justice and the mercy which must be demanded by a holy and loving God. Christ did not merely offer a corresponding ransom for the sin of Adam (1 T 2:6n), for not only does his death atone for Adamic sin, but his blood has purged our sins (He 1:3), for Christ did not taste death for Adam only, but He "tasted death for every man" (He 2:9). This Christ could not do, were He merely man—even perfect man, for "None can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him: (For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever:) That he should still live for ever, and not see corruption" (Ps 49:7-9). So at most, were Christ merely human, He could redeem but one man—and no more—if He himself were perfectly sinless. But as it is in truth, Christ is not merely a ransom for the sin of Adam, but He gave Himself "a ransom for all" (1 T 2:6), and this is absolute testimony for the deity of Christ: Only an infinite Savior could pay an infinite Sacrifice (adapted from J. E. Conant, No Salvation Without Substitution, Chapter 7, "The Nature of Substitution," pp. 112-131). ver. 11. Ho 14:2. Jn *1:29. Ro 11:27. 1 J *3:5.

Ought there not to be agreement between the thing done within and that which is the outward emblem of it in mode? If the inward, spiritual washing can be and is done by sprinkling or affusion, cannot and ought not the outward washing which represents it be done by affusion? Would not this be the appropriate way to represent it? It seems to me that no argument could be made clearer to prove anything than the argument here is to prove that the religious washing of baptism is Scripturally performed by affusion" (G. W. 25. Not forsaking. The unsteady professor has no spiritual home. No church is sound enough for him; none wholly molded to his taste. Like the wandering bird, he is always on the wing. Any one place is too strait for him. The accustomed food, even though coming down from heaven, is "loathed as light bread" (Nu 21:5). His vitiated appetite leaves him often on the sabbath morning undecided whom to hear, his own will being his only guide. He is anxious to hear from all; and, as the sure result, he learns from none (2 T 3:7). In this self-willed delusion the form and substance of the Church is destroyed. It is not a few wandering sheep, but a fold and a shepherd; not a heap of loose scattered stones, but stones cemented, fitted into their several places; and "the building thus fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Ep 2:21, 22). The Church is "terrible" not in her single members, but "as an army with banners" (SS 6:10); close in rank, where each soldier keeps his own place. The individual profession, in the stead of collective unity, is a purely schismatical spirit, the essence of pride and selfishness (Charles Bridges, Proverbs, p. 509, on Pr 27:8). Ex 34:24. 39. these all. ƒ166, Mt +1:17. The apostle in the early part of the chapter having given us a general account of the grace of faith, proceeds to set before us some illustrious examples of it in Old Testament times. The leading instance and example of faith recorded is that of righteous Abel: one of the first saints and the first martyr for religion—one who lived by faith and died for it, and therefore a fit pattern for the Hebrews to imitate. It is observable that the Holy Spirit has not thought fit to say any thing here of the faith of our first parents; and yet the church of God has generally, by a pious charity, taken it for granted that God gave them repentance and faith in the promised seed; that he instructed them in the mystery of sacrificing, that they instructed their children in it, and that they found mercy with God, after they had ruined themselves and all their posterity. But God has left the matter still under some doubt, as a warning to all who have great talents given to them, and a great trust reposed in them, that they do not prove unfaithful, since God would not enroll our first parents among the number of believers in this blessed calendar (Matthew Henry). having obtained. Exhortations to constancy, patience, and diligence, deduced from the abundant testimony of former believers, from the example of Christ, and from the loving intent and salutary effect of the Lord's corrections, 1-13; to peace and holiness, and to jealous watchfulness over ourselves, and each other, enforced by the case of Esau, 14-17; to an obedient reception of the gospel, and reverential worship of God, from the superior excellency of the promised inheritance of the eternal kingdom, and the proportionately greater guilt and danger of neglecting it, 18-29.

HEBREWS 13

Exhortations to brotherly love, hospitality, and compassion; to chastity, contentment, and trust in God, 1-3; to recollect the faith, examples, and happy end of deceased pastors, 4-7; remembering that Christ is unchangeable and eternal, 8; to watchfulness against false doctrines, regard to the sacrifice of Christ, willingness to bear reproach for him, thanksgivings to God, liberality to men, subjection to vigilant and faithful teachers, and prayer for the apostle, 9-19. An earnest prayer to the "God of peace," through the great Shepherd, and the blood of his covenant, for the Hebrews; and concluding salutations, 20-25.

The apostle addresses "the twelve tribes, which were scattered abroad," 1. He exhorts them to joyful patience under trials, 2-4; and to ask wisdom of God in faith, with an unwavering mind, 5-8. He counsels the poor and the rich, 9-11; and shows the happiness prepared for those who endure, 12. Men are tempted to sin, not by God, but by their own lusts, 13-15. Every good gift comes from the unchangeable God, of which good gifts regeneration is especially mentioned, 16-18. Cautions against pride, loquacity, anger, and malice, 19, 20: admonitions to receive the word of God in meekness, and to reduce it to practice, 21-25. The necessity of bridling the tongue, 26. The nature of true religion, 27.

JAMES 2

Caution against partial regard to the rich, and contempt of the poor, especially in places of worship, as contrary to the law of love, 1-9. The transgression of one commandment violates the whole law, 10-12. No mercy will be shown to the unmerciful, 13. As love, shown by words alone, is worthless; so faith without works is dead and unprofitable, 14-20. This is illustrated by the examples of Abraham and Rahab, 21-26.

JAMES 4

Wars and contentions spring from the lusts of the human heart, which produce the most fatal effects, and always end in disappointment, 1, 2; because men do not ask good gifts from God; or because "they ask amiss," 3. "The friendship of the world is enmity against God," 4. "The spirit that is in us lusteth to envy" and pride; but "God resisteth the proud, and showeth favor to the humble," 5, 6. Exhortations to repentance and submission to God, 7-10. Cautions against destruction and censoriousness, and against carnal security; with instructions to consider the uncertainty of life, and to trust God in every undertaking, 11-17.

1 PETER

1 PETER 1

The apostle addressed the strangers of the dispersion in Pontus, etc., with salutations, and thanksgivings to God for his abundant mercy, and the inestimable blessings bestowed on them, 1-5. He shows the nature and benefit of their trials, and the joy by which they were counterbalanced, 6, 7. Through faith, they loved and rejoiced in an unseen Savior, and received his salvation, 8, 9. The ancient prophets had most diligently inquired into this salvation; angels desired to look into it; and the Holy Spirit confirmed and prospered the preaching of it by the apostles, 10-12. This should animate Christians to a holy and circumspect conduct, as the worshippers of a holy God, 13-17; and as redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, through whom they believed and hoped in God, 18-21. Exhortations to the pure and fervent love of Christians to one another; being brethren by regeneration, through the Word of God, which, as "an incorruptible seed," "endureth forever," in the endeared relation thus formed, and in all things, 22-25.

1 PETER 2

Christians are exhorted to lay aside selfish and angry passions; that they may long for "the sincere milk of the word," and grow by it, having "tasted that the Lord is gracious," 1-3. The preciousness of Christ, the chief corner stone, to believers as builded on him, by faith, and thus made a holy temple and a spiritual priesthood, according to the scriptures; while unbelievers stumble and perish, 4-8. The sacred character and invaluable privileges of believers, as called out of darkness into light, to show forth the praises of God, 9, 10. The apostle beseeches them to abstain from fleshly lusts, and by their good conversation to glorify God among the Gentiles, 11, 12. He enforces obedience to magistrates, 13-17, and that of servants to their masters; exhorting them to suffer patiently even for well-doing after the example of Christ, and from love to him, 18-25.

1 PETER 3

Exhortations to wives and husbands, concerning their respective duties, 1-7; and to all Christians to live in amity, to forgive injuries, to be constant under persecutions, to profess and defend the truth with meekness; and to maintain a good conscience: enforced, by the nature of their calling, their privileges, and the example of Christ, 8-18. The case of those to whom Christ, by his Spirit in Noah, had preached, who yet perished in the deluge; and that of Noah and his family saved in the ark: an emblem of the destruction of the wicked, and the salvation of those, who had not only the sign of baptism, but the thing signified by it, through a risen and glorified Redeemer, 18-22.

The Greek article to in the dative case is omitted by many modern textual authorities, but most certainly is the correct text. No apostle would assert that Jesus Christ died physically but was raised as a spirit being (rendered, following the modern Greek textual authorities, by the New World Translation, "made alive in the spirit"), for such an assertion is a denial of the most basic or fundamental doctrine of the gospel, the physical, bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ on the third day (Jn +*2:19, 21. Ro 10:9, 10. 1 C 15:4). Scripture asserts the physical death of the body of Christ, but not the death of his or anyone else's spirit, so that not spirits but bodies are made alive by resurrection. The resurrection of Christ is attributed to each member of the Trinity by Scripture (Jn 2:19 and 10:18. Ac 2:24, 32. 1 P 3:18 and Ro 8:11). Spirit. Gr. pneuma, Mt +3:16; see Ro ◐+1:4. Christ, as God, had gone, by his Spirit, inspiring his servant Noah, to denounce the approaching deluge, and preach repentance to incorrigible antediluvians, who perished in their sins, and whose "spirits" were in "the prison" of hell, when the apostle wrote; being confined there till the judgment of the great day. This appears to be the genuine sense of the passage, as it is perfectly agreeable to the whole of the context. This passage does not teach Christ's alleged "descent into hell," to preach the gospel to those who had never heard (Ezk 16:55), as some mistakenly interpret. In this text only the antediluvians are mentioned as having been preached to: does anyone assert that when Christ allegedly went to hades to preach to the unsaved dead that he selectively preached only to those who had been living in Noah's day in the time before the flood? Scripture positively forbids the notion that there is any second chance for salvation after death (He +*9:27). Christ upon his death went to paradise, according to his promise to the dying thief (Lk 23:43). Ps +*16:9-11. Jn 20:17. He 9:12. and preached. Ps 68:18. Ep 4:9. spirits. In the antitype it is the blood of Christ (of which water is the type), and Christ himself (of which the ark is the type), by which we are saved—saved from sin and everlasting death" (Christian Baptism, p. 285). baptism. ƒ101, Dt +32:42. This is a reference to real, not ritual baptism, for ritual baptism does not save us, it being only a humanly administered ordinance, and Peter's parenthetical words seem expressly given to guard against such a misapplication of his words to the ritual ordinance. Real baptism accomplished by the Holy Spirit saves us, placing us in the body of Christ, and applying the cleansing blood of Christ to our hearts (Ac +*1:5n. +*22:16. 1 C 12:13. T 3:5. He 10:22. Gr. eperoteema. As used by Peter, eperoteema appears to answer to the passive participle (paul) of shael, viz. something asked for; (hence applied to anything borrowed. See 2 K 6:5). That which is sought for by an interrogation being an answer, eperoteema by an obvious metonymy would mean "answer" (B. W. Newton, Baptism, p. 86). This is therefore an instance of ƒ121C2E. Figure of speech Metonymy of the Cause, where the thing or action is put for that which is the effect or product of it, in certain verbs, here of asking, where the verb eperoteema which means an interrogation is put for the answer to such interrogation. Compare 2 K 6:5 (borrow) and 1 S 1:28 (lent). For other instances of this figure see Jb +19:25. Some (as Benjamin Wills Newton, The Doctrine of Scripture Respecting Baptism, pp. 36, 45, 51, 58, 114, 136) have urged this text as proof against infant baptism: "even if it were specially revealed to us that any particular infant or infants were in a state of salvation, yet we should not be authorized to baptize them until they could themselves return 'the answer of a good conscience unto God'" (p. 58). Such an objection is founded upon the error of confounding what is asserted in the abstract with an application made in the concrete, or specific instance. The error would be quickly perceived were any one to assert that when "God saw the wickedness of man" (Ge 6:5, ⌐121N1. See for this figure Ge +31:54), women were not included, for only the masculine gender is employed. Every one sees that it is the fact, in the abstract—the fact of a general depravity of morals—that is asserted, without any attempt to distinguish between the comparative corruption of the sexes. A distinction is therefore to be made between a general question and a given case: language applicable to an abstract question cannot be applied to a specific case. In this case Peter is speaking of adults, but such language cannot exclude the applicability of baptism to infants or children. Language is often addressed to adults which seems only appropriate to them, and yet that same language does not imply an exclusion of infants (see Ac 8:12n). Circumcision is sometimes spoken of in language applicable only to adults (Dt 10:16. Ro 2:28, 29), but such language cannot be used to exclude the ordinance from its applicability to infants (See Hibbard, Christian Baptism, Part I, pp. 257-260). 2 K 6:5 (borrowed). Exhortations to cease from sin, in conformity to Christ who had suffered for it; and to live holy lives, though reproached for it; in expectations of a future judgment, 1-6; to sobriety, watchfulness, and prayer; because "the end of all things is at hand," 7; and to love, hospitality, and a due improvement of talents, as the stewards of God, and in order to glorify him, 8-11. Encouragements to patience, and confidence in God, amidst persecutions; with cautions and instructions, 12-19.

1 PETER 5

The apostle exhorts "the elders to feed the flock of God," willingly, cheerfully, disinterestedly, and humbly; and to be examples to it; expecting from the chief Shepherd, at his appearance, an unfading crown of glory, 1-4. He requires the younger to submit to the elder; and all of them to be "clothed with humility," "casting all their care on" God, 5-7; and to be "sober and vigilant;" and steadfastly, by faith, to "resist the devil," and bear tribulation, 8, 9. He concludes with prayers, salutations, and benedictions, 10-14.

2 PETER

2 PETER 1

The apostle salutes his brethren, 1, 2. He shows the blessings to which God had called them; and earnestly exhorts them to diligence in every good work, in order to make "their calling and election sure;" intermixing suitable warnings and encouragement, 3-11. He states, that, aware of his approaching martyrdom, he is the more diligent, in thus admonishing them, that they might remember these things after his decease, 12-15. He urges the evidence of what he had seen and heard "in the holy mount," in confirmation of his testimony concerning the power and coming of Christ, 16-18; referring them to the "more sure word of prophecy," 19; and instructing them, concerning the interpretation and source of it, 20, 21.

T 1:14. cunningly devised. This verse contains one of the most significant texts for apologetics to be found in the Word of God. Christian faith is not a blind leap into the dark, but is established upon firm evidence, for unlike other world religions, Christianity "rests on definite, historical facts and events—facts and historical events of such nature that if they really took place, the religion is true, and established by so direct, so strong and so great a variety of independent and converging proofs that it has been said again and again by great lawyers that they cannot but be regarded as proved under the strictest rules of evidence used in the highest American and English courts" (Irwin H. Linton, A Lawyer Examines the Bible, p. 16). Linton states that he had never found a single unbelieving lawyer or layman who had made a careful, lawyer-like, two-sided investigation of the claims of the Bible and its Christ. He was never able to find a single unbeliever who had read carefully even one of the old classics on the Christian Evidences.

Professor G. W. Wright has said, "All history is fragmentary. Each particular fact is the center of an infinite complex of circumstances. No man has intelligence enough to insert a suppositious fact into circumstances not belonging to it, and make it fit exactly. This only Infinite Intelligence could do. A successful forgery, therefore, is impossible if only we have a sufficient number of the original circumstances with which to compare it" (cited in Fred John Meldau, 57 Reasons, p. 37). Linton cites Simon Greenleaf to the same effect: "Every event which actually transpires has its appropriate relation and place in the vast complication of circumstances of which the affairs of men consist: it owes its origin to the events which have preceded it, is intimately connected with all others which occur at the same time and place, and often with those of remote regions, and in its turn gives birth to numberless others which succeed. In this almost inconceivable contexture and seeming discord there is perfect harmony; and while the fact which really happened tallies exactly with every other contemporaneous incident related to it in the remotest degree, it is not possible for the wit of man to invent a story which, if closely compared with the actual occurrences of the same time and place, may not be shown to be false" (Linton, pp. 53, 54). "In a number of concurrent testimonies, where there has been no previous concert (utterly negatived in the case of the Gospels by the apparent but completely reconciled discrepancies between them. Linton) there is a probability distinct from that which may be termed the sum of the probabilities resulting from the testimony of the witnesses; a probability which would remain even though the witnesses were of such character as to merit no faith at all. This probability arises from the concurrence itself. That such a concurrence should spring from chance is as one to infinity; that is, in other words, morally impossible. If, therefore, concert be excluded, there remains no cause but the reality of the fact" (Linton, citing George Campbell against Hume, p. 55). "Now, in historical researches, a reconciled inconsistency becomes a positive argument. First, because an impostor generally guards against the appearance of inconsistency; and secondly, because when apparent inconsistencies are found, it is seldom anything but truth renders them capable of reconciliation. The existence of the difficulty proves the want or absence of that caution which usually accompanies the consciousness of fraud; and the solution proves that it is not the collusion of fortuitous propositions which we have to deal with, but that a thread of truth winds through the whole, which preserves every circumstance in its place" (Linton, p. 88, citing Paley. See further related notes on undesigned coincidences listed at Ac 12:12n).

We now come to an argument for the credibility of the facts contained in Scripture which has never been answered and never can be. Infidels have repeatedly been challenged to answer it but they have never even made the attempt. It is the argument of Leslie in his Short and Easy Method with the Deists. This argument rests solely upon the peculiarity of Christian evidence, already mentioned, by which the truth of the religion is indissolubly connected with certain matters of fact which could originally be judged of by the senses, and also upon the fact that there exist in the Church certain ordinances commemorative of those facts. Thus the truth of our religion seems to be embodied in institutions that now exist, and in observances that pass before our eyes. The object of Leslie is to show, from the nature of the case—for here we make very little reference to written testimony—that the matters of fact stated could not have been received at the time unless they were true, and that the observances could never have been originated except in connection with the facts. In showing this, he lays down four rules, and asserts that any matter of fact in which these four rules meet must be true, and challenges the world to show any instance of any supposed matter of fact, thus authenticated, that has ever been shown to be false. His four rules are these: (1) That the matter of fact be such that men's outward senses, their eyes and ears, may be judges of it. (2) That it be done publicly, in the face of the world. (3) That not only public monuments be kept up in memory of it, but some outward actions be performed. (4) That such monuments, and such actions, or observances, be instituted, and do commence from the time that the matter of fact was done.

The first two rules. The first two rules make it impossible for any such matter of fact to be imposed upon men at the time, because every man's eyes, and ears, and senses, would contradict it. For example, if any man should affirm that all the inhabitants of this city yesterday, or last year, walked to Governor's Island and returned on dry ground, while the water was divided and stood in heaps on each side of them, it would be impossible that he should be believed, because every man, woman, and child would know better. It would be one of those things respecting which the unlearned and the young could judge as well as the learned and more experienced. Equally impossible is it that the children of Israel, of that generation, should have believed that they passed through the Red Sea, or went out and gathered manna every morning, or drank water from the rock, or that the law was given with the terror and solemnity described in the Bible, if these things did not happen. Not less impossible is it that the five thousand should have believed they were fed by Christ; or that the relatives of Lazarus, and the Jews who knew him, should have believed that he was raised from the dead, or the parents and friends of the man born blind, that he was made to see; or that the multitudes before whom he healed the lame, and the sick of every description, should have believed that these events took place, if they did not. These miracles are of such a nature that, unless they were really wrought, it is impossible they should have been believed at the time. Leslie further says: "Therefore it only remains that such matter of fact might have been invented some time after, when the men of that generation wherein the thing was said to be done are all past and gone; and the credulity of after ages might be imposed upon to believe that things were done in former ages which were not."

The last two rules. And for this the last two rules secure us as much as the first two rules in the former case; for, whenever such a matter of fact came to be invented, if not only monuments were said to remain of it, but likewise that public actions and observances were constantly used ever since the matter of fact was said to be done, the deceit must be detected by no such monuments appearing, and by the experience of every man, woman, and child, who must know that no such actions or observances were ever used by them.

For example, suppose I should now invent a story of such a thing done a thousand years ago; I might perhaps get some to believe it; but if I say that not only such a thing was done, but that, from that day to this, every man, at the age of twelve years, had a joint of his little finger cut off; and that every man in the nation did lack a joint of such a finger; and that this institution was said to be part of the matter of fact done so many years ago, and vouched as a proof and confirmation of it, and as having descended without interruption, and been constantly practiced, in memory of such a fact, all along from the time that such matter of fact was done;—I say it is impossible I should be believed in such case, because everyone could contradict me as to the mark of cutting off the joint of the finger; and that, being a part of my original matter of fact, must demonstrate the whole to be false.

Application to the books of Moses. The case here put is not stronger than that either of the books of Moses, or of the New Testament. For, at whatever time it might have been attempted to impose the books of Moses upon a subsequent age, it would have been impossible, because they contain the laws and civil and ecclesiastical regulations of the Jews, which the books affirm were adopted at the time of Moses, and were constantly in force from that time; and because they contain an account of the passover, which they assert to have been observed in consequence of a particular fact. If, then, a book had been put forth at a particular time, stating that the Jews had obeyed certain very peculiar laws, and had a certain priesthood, and had observed the Passover from the time of Moses, while they had never heard of these laws, or of this priesthood, or of a Passover, it is impossible the book should have been received. Nothing could have saved such a book from scorn or utter neglect.

Application to the New Testament. But what the Levitical law, and the priesthood, and the passover were to the Jews, baptism, and the Christian ministry, and the Lord's Supper are to Christians. It is a part of the records of the Gospels that these were instituted by Christ; that they were commanded by Him to be continued till the end of time, and were actually continued and observed at the time when the Gospels purport to have been written—that is, before the destruction of Jerusalem. But if these books were fictions invented after the time of Christ, there would have been at that time no Christian baptism, nor order of Christian ministers, nor sacrament of the supper, thus derived from His appointment; and that, alone, would have demonstrated the whole to be false. Our books suppose these institutions to exist; they give an account of them; and it is impossible they should have been received where they did not exist. It is, therefore, impossible that these books should have been received at the time the facts are said to have taken place, or at any subsequent time, unless those facts really did take place. We now regard the sacrament of the supper as an essential part of the religion; it was so regarded by our fathers; nor can we conceive that it should have been otherwise up to the very time when the religion was founded. Thus we have a visible sign and pledge of the truth of our religion, handed down, independently of written testimony, from age to age; and the force of which age has no tendency to diminish.

Strength of the evidences. Perhaps we do not sufficiently dwell on the great strength of which the Christian evidences derive from this proof, or notice the contrast it makes between the evidence for the facts of Christianity and those of ordinary history. Not only is it impossible to point out any statement of fact, substantiated by these four marks, that can be shown to be false, but none of the best authenticated facts of ancient history have them all. The Fourth of July, as observed by us, may illustrate the effects of such commemorative ordinances as guarding against false historical accounts. For any man to have invented the New Testament after the time of Christ, and to have attempted to cause it to be received, would have been as if a man had written an account of the revolution, and of the celebration of this day from the first, when no revolution was ever heard of, and no one had ever celebrated the Fourth of July. Nor, when such a festival was once established, would it be possible to introduce any account of its origin essentially different from the true one. But the case of the Christian religion is much stronger; because we have several different institutions which must have sprung up at its origin; because baptism and the Lord's Supper have occurred so much more frequently; and because the latter has always been considered the chief rite of a religion to which men have been more attached than to liberty or to life.

Credible because no others. But again: our books are credible because there are no others. That such a movement as Christianity must have been, involving the origin of so many new institutions, and such ecclesiastical and social changes should have originated at such a time and in such a place, and that no written documents should have been drawn forth by it, is incredible. And that the true account should have perished, leaving not a single vestige behind it, and that false ones, and such as these, should have been substituted, is impossible. Of the origin of such institutions we should expect some account. That of our books is adequate and satisfactory. There is nothing contradictory to it, for even spurious writings confirm the truth of our books, and there is no vestige of any other (Linton, pp. 161-164, citing Mark Hopkins, who is citing Leslie). fables. 1 T +1:4. the power. Mt *28:18. Understanding "its own" fits the immediate context of taking heed to the more sure word of prophecy, and the manner of taking heed is to interpret the individual prophecies of Scripture in the light of every other prophecy which bears upon the same theme. "Private" is an unfortunate rendering of the Greek word idios (S#2398g), a word which occurs 113 times in the Greek New Testament, most often rendered "his own" (48 times) and "their own" (13 times), but nowhere else rendered "private," though rendered by the word "privately" 8 times. This rendering has been used to attack the Biblical doctrine of the perspicuity of Scripture (Is +*8:20n) and to deny the duty of each individual believer to exercise the right of private judgment to determine for himself the correctness of a proposed interpretation of Scripture (Je +*23:28n). While Scripture elsewhere teaches the individual to maintain fellowship with other believers (He 10:25), to "hear the church" (Mt 18:17), to "hold the traditions which ye have been taught" (2 Th 2:15), and to "obey them that have the rule over you" (He 13:17), yet he must do so only insofar as such teachers are faithful to the written Word of God. The final authority in spiritual matters is never an organization or church, but the written Word of God as found in the Bible, correctly interpreted. The Bible warns that followers of false teachers will share in their reward (Ezk +*14:10n). The final obligation remains for each individual to judge truth for himself (Ro 14:12). This, then, is the major justification for the right of private judgment, for God holds each of us individually and directly accountable to him and his Word. We cannot pass off our responsibility to others by saying "I simply believed what my church taught me" (Is +*8:20n. Ezk 14:10n). "Private" is better rendered "its own," so that we then read "no Scripture is of its own interpretation." The meaning is that every statement in Scripture must be understood in the light of what the rest of Scripture teaches which bears upon the same theme. Of absolute importance to the correct interpretation of Scripture is to make a full and proper induction of all related passages, and develop from them an interpretation which accounts for and agrees with the whole. This is the very opposite of the deductive approach, which comes to the Bible with a predetermined belief (whether a creedal statement, a system of doctrine or philosophy, any "ism"—whether Calvinism, Arminianism, dispensationalism, amillennialism, Russellism, liberalism, humanism, scientism, etc.) which already has decided what the Bible can or must teach, then searches its pages for supporting "proof texts." Such an approach is grievously in error (Mk √12:24), and can be detected by its tendency to ignore, suppress, explain away, or circumvent those texts which do not "fit" the system. Adherents of deductive systems are in danger of wresting Scripture to their own destruction (2 P 3:16), and handling Scripture deceitfully (2 C 4:2). Those who adhere to a deductive approach to Scripture are marked by an inability to come to the Bible with an open mind, ready to adjust their belief to what is newly learned. In fact, such persons are unable to freely study Scripture and grow in their knowledge, for they have adopted a closed system of belief, which can never admit to anything new to be learned, or admit a former mistake in understanding, the correction of which is based upon additional light received by a fresh study of the Word of God. Certainly such an attitude toward Scripture makes it a closed book, and is the very opposite of that humility required for the reception of spiritual truth (Ps 25:9. 119:18). Jn *16:13. interpretation. Gr. epilusis, *S#1955g, only here, from *S#1956g, epiluo, Mk 4:34 (expounded); Ac 19:39 (determined). Vine defines epilusis to mean "to loose, solve, explain, denotes a solution, explanation, lit., a release. '(of private) interpretation,' i.e., the writers of Scripture did not put their own construction upon the 'God-breathed' words they wrote" (Expository Dictionary, vol. 2, p. 268). An understanding of the principles of the correct interpretation of Scripture is of supreme importance. Formally known as the science of biblical hermeneutics, the correct application of such principles is essential to arrive at the correct interpretation of Scripture. Most wrong interpretations of Scripture will be found to violate one or more of the following ten general rules of interpretation: (1) Interpret the words and sentences of an author literally unless such an interpretation results in a contradiction, absurdity, or nonsense. Be very careful not to label as nonsense what might merely be strange or contrary to your own personal point of view or frame of reference. Sometimes the immediate context will indicate a non-literal interpretation must be understood ("trees clapped their hands," Is 55:12). In such cases watch for the literal truth or meaning which is being figuratively expressed. (2) Do not attribute a meaning to a text that would be foreign to the knowledge or understanding of the author or the original audience, or give a meaning which would be outside the purpose of the original author (Thus there are no trains or flying saucers in the Bible). (3) Do not interpret one statement in the Bible in a way which makes it contradict another part. All the parts must agree without contradictions. Authors write to be understood, not to confuse their audience. Sometimes an author may write an intended ambiguity. Sometimes our own perception of the truth, or our knowledge of the cultural context which produced a document, is incomplete, and our own deficiency of knowledge may lead us to find ambiguity, paradox, and contradiction where there is none. An author, particularly when treating of philosophical and religious subjects, may intentionally introduce paradox (determinism versus free will). (4) A correct interpretation takes account of all the material in the text, and all related material in other texts of the Bible. You cannot legitimately pick and choose separate statements and combine them arbitrarily (The Bible says, Judas went and hanged himself; go and do thou likewise; what thou doest, do quickly). You cannot leave out material which, if included, would require or necessitate a change in the interpretation. Whenever an interpretation involves the comparison of two or more subjects, the interpretation must take into account not only the similarities but also the differences which may exist. (5) Read what comes before and after the verse you are interpreting. A correct interpretation always fits into the scope, meaning, and purpose of the surrounding passage or context. A text out of context is a pretext. (6) An interpretation must be in harmony with the grammar of the sentences involved, and in harmony with the meanings of the words which make up the sentences. (7) Always interpret obscure, difficult texts in the light of other passages on the same topic which are clear in meaning. (8) A correct and authoritative interpretation must be based upon what the text itself says, not upon what someone else claims it says. (9) All that is required to establish an interpretation as correct is evidence (which is in harmony with these rules) from the text sufficient to convince an adequately informed, neutral, unbiased person. (10) When there are two differing interpretations of a passage, if the interpretations are contradictory, they cannot both be correct. One or the other interpretation must be wrong, or they may both be wrong, but they cannot both be right. A correct interpretation must comply with the rules of interpretation; an incorrect interpretation will always be found not to comply with the rules.

2 PETER 2

The apostle foretells the coming of false teachers; showing in general their corrupt principles and selfishness, and the fatal effects of their influence, 1-3. He adduces the severity of God in punishing apostate angels, the inhabitants of the old world, and those of Sodom, with his kindness to Noah and Lot, in proof that he would certainly preserve his people, and execute vengeance on the wicked, 4-9. A more particular account of the seducers above mentioned, of their vile character and practices, and of the hopeless conditions of many, who were deceived by them, 10-22.

2 PETER 3

The apostle reminds his brethren of the promised coming of Christ; and predicts that scoffers will ridicule their expectation of that event, 1-4; being willingly ignorant of the truth in that respect, 5-7. He shows the reason of its being delayed, and the awful manner, circumstances, and consequences of it; with exhortations and encouragements to diligence and holiness, 8-14. He shows that "his beloved brother Paul" had taught them the same doctrine; commends his epistles; and shows how "ignorant and unstable men wrested" some parts of them, as they did "the other scriptures, to their own destruction," 15, 16: and concludes with warning the readers against seducers; and exhorting them to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ," 17, 18.

Ac 20:16. 22:18) the verb "hasting" (Gr. speudo) is intransitive; but here it is transitive to correspond with "looking for," and means to be eager or earnest for a thing. It qualifies the "looking for" and not the "coming" itself: looking for, yes—and earnestly looking for that coming too. We cannot hasten that day, which is fixed in the counsels of God. This is the figure Hendiadys, "earnestly looking for," with the emphasis on earnestly. See on ver. 10. 1 C 1:8. Ph 1:6. He +*9:28. coming. 13. according to his promise. Peter specifically states that these predictions are "according to his promise." To properly understand the predictions, we must carefully consider the promise to which he refers. The only passages of the Old Testament which refer to the creation of a new heavens and earth preceded by a destruction by fire are found in Isaiah 65:17-19 and 66:16, 17, *22. Interpreters differ widely in their understanding of these predictions. Some advocate a post-millennial conflagration which totally destroys the earth, supposing that after the Millennium God will create a new heaven and a new earth, which will exist forever in the eternal ages which follow the Millennium. This view is radically defective in a number of points. First, the conflagration is placed by Peter and by Isaiah prior to the millennial reign of Christ, for the wicked and the scoffers continue right down to this time of destruction, the purpose of which (2 P 3:7) is stated to be the destruction and perdition of ungodly men. Such a purpose is incongruous to the conditions established by Christ during the Millennium. Second, Scripture declares that this earth will last forever, so it will never be totally destroyed (Ec +*1:4). Third, Christ's kingdom is established upon the earth, the saints are to inherit the earth, and this kingdom and this inheritance are to last forever, and will never be destroyed (Da +*7:14. Mt +*5:5. Ep +*1:11n. He *9:15. 1 P *1:4n. Re *11:15). Therefore, to suggest that this earth will be destroyed at the end of the Millennium is to contradict the oath-bound covenants and promises of God (Is +*55:3). The end of the Millennium does not mark the end of Christ's kingdom (1 C +*15:24n), but marks the duration of the binding of Satan and of the time before the resurrection of the rest of the dead (Re 20:3, 5). The time of the conflagration is therefore established as premillennial. The time of this fire corresponds to the harvest, when the tares shall be burned up (Mt 13:30, 39, 40), but this harvest (Re 14:14-20) occurs under the seventh trumpet preceding the Millennial age (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 516). The extent of the conflagration must not be understood to be such as to make this present earth uninhabitable, or to totally destroy all animate life on earth. Although Peter's language, if taken apart from other predictions in Scripture, may appear to be universal in its scope, yet it must be remembered that universal language in Scripture is often used where a limitation is to be understood (Ge +*7:19n. 1 K √18:10), and in this instance this single passage in 2 Peter must not be taken in a sense to contradict the rest of the prophecies in the Word of God, especially when Peter expressly refers these predictions to well-known Scripture promises, promises which do not necessitate a universal and unlimited destruction. Other predictions describe a change and a shaking, but not absolute destruction for this period (Ps 102:25-27. He 1:10-12. +*12:26). The fact that eternal generations of human beings in the flesh (Ps 72:5. 89:4, 29, 36, 37. 102:28. 145:13. 146:10. Is 34:17. 51:8. *59:21. 60:15. 65:23. 66:22. Je 33:22. Ezk *37:25. Lk 1:32, 33) will live on this earth after the Second Coming of Christ proves that not all people will be destroyed. Those who argue that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom" (1 C 15:50n) forget that these natural generations are subjects of the kingdom, not inheritors, for only the resurrected saints in glorified bodies are co-heirs with Christ in His eternal kingdom (Ro +*8:17). The Greek word denotes a renewal or restoration of something previously existing (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 499). heavens and. Perhaps because the creation of a new heavens and earth is mentioned in Re 21:1, a text which occurs after the prediction of the Millennium (Re 20:3-7) and the Great White Throne Judgment (Re 20:11-15), many interpreters make the new heaven and earth postmillennial. Since all concede the new heavens and earth are preceded by the conflagration mentioned by Peter, interpreters argue that the conflagration must be postmillennial. However, the three references (Is 65:17 and 66:22. 2 P 3:13. Re 21:1) are to the same new heavens and earth, to one event, not two events separated by a millennium, for the "first" not "second" heaven and earth were passed away (Re 21:1). The references to the conflagration by Peter were proven to be premillennial. The new heavens and new earth must also be premillennial, since they immediately follow upon the conflagration. The fact that the new heavens and earth are mentioned in Revelation after a passage describing the Millennium and Great White Throne Judgment is no sure proof that the new heavens and earth are postmillennial, because it is very common in Scripture for prophecies and even histories to be out of chronological sequence (See √107. Hysterologia, Ge +10:5). The predictions of a new heaven and earth in Isaiah are seen in context to be premillennial, for the millennial blessedness immediately follows upon their creation (Is 65:17-25). wherein dwelleth. 2 P 1:11. 1 JOHN 1

The apostle declares, what he had seen and heard of Christ, the Word of Life; that others might have fellowship with him, and with God and Christ, and might share his joy, 1-4. He shows that those who have communion with God, and are cleansed from sin by the blood of Christ, walk in the light of holiness, 5-7; and that the faithfulness and righteousness of God are engaged for the pardon and cleansing of those who "confess their sins;" but that all who "say they have no sin," or "have not sinned," are deceived or deceivers, 8-10.

Those who claim they are perfectly pure, and as holy in heart and life as the law of God required are certainly deceived in a most awful manner; the truth is not in them, or they could never have fallen into a mistake, which implied gross ignorance of God, of his spiritual law, and of their own hearts. 1 JOHN 2

The apostle warns his "dear children" not to sin: yet points out to them Christ, the Advocate with the Father, and the propitiation for their sins, and the sins of the world, 1, 2. He shows that the knowledge of Christ, and union with him, must be evidenced by obeying and imitating him, and by love of the brethren; that thus "the love of God is perfected in us;" and that those are deceived, blind, and hypocritical, who live in hatred and malice, 3-11. He warns believers of every age and attainment, against "the love of the world," showing the vanity of all that is in the world, compared with the eternal happiness of those who do the will of God, 12-17. He cautions them against many antichrists, who fatally seduce some professed Christians, 18, 19; declares that the unction of the Holy Spirit is the effectual preservative against them, 21, 22; points out to them the true doctrine of Christ, and exhorts them to adhere to his truth, and abide in him, in expectation of his coming; and to prove their regeneration by an habitual righteous conduct, 23-29.

Note that this word is plural; it cannot be confined exclusively, therefore, to the single command of Christ to "love one another" (Jn 13:34), as so many would have it. John is countering the problem of antinomianism, a heresy very much still with us, that lessens our obligation to obey God since we are saved by grace alone. This tendency is so much a part of evangelical thinking, that I fail to find a single work devoted to a serious, exhaustive study of the commands of Christ. I thought I would find at least a comprehensive list of such commands in A Complete Index to the Thought and Teachings of Christ by W. S. Harris, but the topic is dismissed under the relevant heading "Commandments and Precepts of Christ" with the statement "These are incorporated in other subjects" (p. 36). Of these commandments, R. F. Horton states "notwithstanding the unsystematic form in which the precepts are given, the commandments of Jesus constitute a complete and sufficient code of morality." Horton further notes "All His commandments center in His person. They are defined by His character and practice. They are explained by the fundamental truths which He reveals. And they can only be obeyed by virtue of that supernatural indwelling of His Spirit which it is His peculiar promise to give." Horton concludes, "But the most remarkable fact about these commandments of Jesus is that the world, in its moral progress, never gets beyond them. It is not possible to bring any moral truth discovered since which was not already contained in His code." Most devastating is Horton's observation that "there is a Jesuitry of the conscience always at work; indolence and unbelief are constantly finding modes of slipping through the meshes of Christ's commandments. Few, perhaps, would venture to say that His demands are impossible, but many cover their failures by a vague notion that the standard is ideal rather than practical (and here Horton cites Bruce in a footnote, "To many, the creed which resolves all religion into impracticable ideals is very convenient. It saves a world of trouble and pain; it permits them to think fine thoughts, without requiring them to do noble actions; and it substitutes romancing about heroism in the place of being heroes." Training of the Twelve, p. 379), and are content if they obey the Ten Commandments without any special thought concerning the commandments of their Lord. Then the substitution of a doctrinal system and theoretical tests of orthodoxy for the plain truth of Jesus that He would judge men by the degree in which they had kept His commandments, has transferred the momentum of the religious life from the moral to the metaphysical sphere. Thus, in accepting the truth that faith in Jesus Christ, without works, justifies, Protestants have often failed to notice that without obedience to His commandments there can be no genuine faith in Jesus Christ" (The Commandments of Jesus, p. 362, 365, 368, 371, 372). Robertson "they went out from our membership" and "they were not of us in spirit and life." Robertson points out that a similar difference in the meaning of the preposition ek is seen in Jn 17:14, "of the world" in the sense of likeness, and Jn 17:15, "out of the world" in the sense of origin (Word Pictures, vol. 6, p. 215). He +*10:39. they were not all. A common error in the application of this verse is to assert that all those who turn back (1 T +*4:1n) from true faith in Christ were never saved, and were never true believers in the first place. This view is not in accord with the rest of Scripture, however, for it fails to (1) recognize the instances where true believers "stopped believing" (Lk +*8:13. 1 T +*1:19, 20); (2) recognize the seriousness of the warnings against apostasy throughout God's Word (1 C +*15:2), and (3) define apostasy biblically or logically, for one cannot fall from a faith which was never possessed (1 T +*4:1n. He 6:4-6. 2 P 2:20). While John applies his statement to "all," the "all" refers in context specifically to false teachers, who taught the Gnostic heresy, whom he called antichrists. No doubt many false teachers of today deserve this identification, as Robertson suggests, but in no way can this passage be stretched to include all individuals who have ever turned away or apostatized from Christ, to assert that none of them were ever really saved. On other themes careful interpreters rightly assert that we must take into account all Scripture which bears on a subject, and arrive at a position which agrees with the whole body of applicable evidence. They properly caution not to overgeneralize or explain all possibilities on the basis of a single prooftext. This very interpretive fallacy has fostered a whole host of error ranging from minor matters of doctrine to absolute heresy, and is used by some to support: (1) sinless perfection: one who is born of God cannot commit sin (1 J 3:9); (2) baptismal regeneration (Jn 3:5); (3) ritual water baptism required for salvation (Ac 2:38n); (4) baptism unto repentance (Ac 2:38); (5) ritual water baptism symbolizes the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ (Ro 6:4); (6) the alleged spiritual nature of the kingdom of God (Lk 17:21); (7) the "church" as "spiritual Israel" has replaced natural Israel in the plan of God (Ro 2:28, 29. Ga 6:16); (8) there is no conscious existence after death (Ps +*146:4. Ec +*9:5); (9) no one goes to heaven at death to be with Christ (Jn 3:13. Ac 2:34. 1 C 15:50. Ph 1:23n), (10) but sleeps until the resurrection (Da +*12:2n), (11) unaware of any passing of time, explaining the sense of going immediately to be with Christ (2 C 5:8. Ph 1:23n); (12) since there is only one God (Dt 6:4), the Father (1 C 8:4, 6), Jesus cannot be God because he called God the Father his God (Jn 20:17), and the only true God (Jn 17:3), thus excluding himself; (13) God dispenses his truth by means of his "faithful and true servant," the one true church, and outside of this divinely provided earthly visible organization there can be no salvation (Mt 24:45); (14) No individual has the right to interpret the Bible for himself, for Scripture is not "of any private interpretation" (2 P 1:20). The most apt description of this interpretive error I have found is that of Lewis Sperry Chafer, who wrote "A certain type of mind, however, seems able to construct all its confidence on an erroneous interpretation of one passage and to be uninfluenced by the overwhelming body of Scripture which contradicts that interpretation" (Systematic Theology, vol. 3, p. 380). 1 JOHN 3

The apostle breaks out in admiration of the love of God, in making us his children, and giving us present privileges with the hope of an inconceivable felicity; and shows that all who have this hope "purify themselves as he is pure," 1-3. He shows how the children of God, and the children of the devil, may be distinguished, 4-10. He exhorts his readers to "love one another," contrasting this love with the example of Cain, and warning them to expect the hatred of the world, 11-13. He points out "the love of the brethren," as distinguishing evidence of conversion; explains the nature and effects of it, contrasting it with enmity and selfishness; and enforces the practice of it, by the example of Christ, 14-17. He exhorts his readers to love "in deed and in truth," and shows that confidence in God is connected with the consciousness of upright obedience, 18-24.

Robertson, Word Pictures, vol. 6, p. 223). This is not a declaration that the Christian possesses sinless perfection, or is unable to commit a sin, but a declaration that a Christian does not freely and habitually practice sin, or live a life of sin. Had the apostle John intended to teach sinless perfection, he would have selected the second aorist or first aorist active infinitive here. Robertson observes, "A great deal of false theology has grown out of a misunderstanding of the tense of hamartanein here. Paul has precisely John's idea in Ro 6:1 epimenomen tei hamartiai (shall we continue in sin, present active linear subjunctive) in contrast with hamartesomen in Ro 6:15 (shall we commit a sin, first aorist active subjunctive)" (Word Pictures, vol. 6, p. 223). See the related notes for other examples of the present tense used to represent habitual practice of sin (1 T 5:20n. He 6:6n). Supply ellipsis, (we know that). God is greater. God knows us better than we know ourselves. Our feelings of assurance are not a certain guide to the security or status of our salvation. God is greater than our feelings, and knows our hearts absolutely. When in doubt, our hearts would dwell on the negative evidence, glossing over the positive fruit that our spiritual life has shown. "This would seem to make God's knowing all things not the cause of his condemning us more than our hearts do, but the reason why he spares us. He knows all our weaknesses, and his greater knowledge of our motives and infirmities will prevent Him from condemning or accusing us" (W. Graham, The Spirit of Love, p. 232). Graham prefers, however, the interpretation that if our own heart condemn us, much more will God condemn us, for God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, a view supported, says Graham, by the following verse. Haupt (Comm. on 1 John, p. 223), however, argues convincingly that the former view is correct; that "God is greater than our heart" in respect to his greater tenderness, not severity, for this is the ground of the consolation ("assure," mg. persuade, ver. 19, which Haupt shows means soothe). So Wescott, who summarizes the meaning of the passage: "The sense within us of a sincere love of the brethren, which is the sign of God's presence with us, will enable us to stay the accusations of our conscience, whatever they may be, because God, who gives us the love, and so blesses us with His fellowship, is greater than our heart; and He, having perfect knowledge, forgives all on which the heart sadly dwells" (Comm. on 1 John, p. 118). Haupt suggests that what the heart sadly dwells upon is its failure to measure up absolutely to the standard of "doing righteousness," ver. 7. 1 J 4:4. Jb 33:12. Jn 10:29, 30. 1 C *4:4. 1 JOHN 4

The apostle warns Christians against those who falsely professed to be inspired; and gives directions for distinguishing the Spirit of truth from that of error, 1-6. He exhorts them to "love one another," from the example of God in giving his Son for sinners; and from various considerations, tending to show the necessity, benefit, and efficacy of this sacred affection, 7-21.

The apostle shows the connection between faith in Christ, regeneration, love to God and his children, obedience to his commandments, and victory over the world, 1-5. He states the manifold testimonies, by which the doctrine of Christ is proved; and declares the inseparable union between faith and eternal life, 6-13. He reminds Christians of the Lord's readiness to hear their prayers, for themselves and each other, 14, 15; gives an intimation of "a sin unto death," and the regenerate man's security against committing it, 16-18; he strongly marks the difference between the "world that lieth in wickedness," and true believers, 19, 20; and cautions Christians against idolatry, 21.

Jn 8:13, 14. the Father. The genuineness of the latter part of this verse, and the first clause of the next, it is well known has divided the opinions of learned men for nearly four centuries, nor is it yet decided. It is certainly wanting in many of the ancient MSS. and versions; and is not quoted by many of the Fathers: but the number of MSS. collated is but small, only about 400; it exists in some ancient confessions of faith and liturgies; is quoted by numerous Latin Fathers; and appears necessary from the connection in which it stands. It also seems more probable that the Arians should silently omit it in their copies, or that it should be left out by mistake, than that the trinitarians should forge and insert it; for the latter would only gain one argument for a doctrine which is abundantly taught in other Scriptures; but if it was admitted as the Word of God, all the ingenuity and diligence of opponents could scarcely avoid the inference naturally deducible from it. Contemporary scholarship, however, fails to support this reading in any form, suggesting it was added to a late Greek manuscript made for the purpose to influence Erasmus to include it in his Greek text, for Erasmus had promised he would include the text if even one Greek manuscript could be found which contained it. 2 JOHN

The apostle addresses, with expressions of affectionate regard, and with salutations, "the elect lady and her children," declaring his joy in their good behavior, 1-4. He exhorts them to brotherly love and obedience, 5, 6. He warns them against deceivers, that neither they, nor he, may lose their full reward, 7, 8; and against giving the least countenance to those, who did not bring the true doctrine of Christ, 9-11. He hopes to see them shortly, and concludes with salutations, 12, 13.

John affirms Jesus Christ at his Second Advent "is coming in the flesh": i.e., in his human nature, the same Jesus, in like manner as he went into heaven. See related notes (Mt 16:27n. 1 J 4:2n). Peters affirms the validity of applying this text to the Second Advent, not the first, citing Alford and other scholars (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 1, p. 570; vol. 2, p. 347, 698. vol. 3, p. 49). So B. F. Westcott states "The thought centers upon the present perfection of the Lord's manhood which is still, and is to be manifested, and not upon the past fact of His coming, 1 J 4:2" (The Epistles of St. John, p. 229). Scripture affirms He is coming to the earth (Zc 14:4. Re +*5:10n), to reign upon the earth (not merely over it from heaven) from Jerusalem (Is √24:23. Mi +*4:7). Christ will be personally present (Ps 102:16. Is +*24:23. Mi +*4:7. Ac +*3:20, 21) in his humanity (Mt 16:27n) to rule forever (Lk +*1:32, 33) over his kingdom, his inheritance, which is upon earth (Mt +*5:5. 6:10. Ro 4:13. Ep +*1:11n. 2 T +*4:18n. He 11:16n. 1 P 1:4n). The throne of David, which Christ inherits (Lk 1:32), is upon earth (Am +√9:11. Zc 1:16, 17. 2:12. Ac 15:16), not in heaven (See Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 1, Proposition 52, Observation 12, pp. 350-351). Zc 13:6. Jn 3:31g. 11:27g. 21:14. Ac +*1:11. 1 C 15:1-23, 35g. Ph *3:21. 3 JOHN

The apostle addresses Gaius, with good wishes, commendations, and exhortations to persevere, in his liberal and zealous support of those who went forth to preach the gospel, 1-8. He cautions him against the presumptuous and malicious designs of Diotrephes; and highly commends Demetrius, 9-12. Giving intimations of an intended visit, he concludes with salutations, 13, 14.

JUDE

The address and salutation; and the writer's purpose in the epistle, namely, to establish Christians against certain false teachers, who were men of a very bad character, and to excite them to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," 1-4. The example of the Israelites who perished in the wilderness, that of fallen angels, and that of Sodom, are adduced, as showing the danger to which those who apostatized, or perverted the gospel, were exposed, 5-7. The vile character of these seducers further shown, and their doom denounced; with reference to some traditions, concerning Michael contending with the devil about the body of Moses; and an ancient prediction delivered by Enoch, concerning the "day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," 8-16. Warnings, counsels, and exhortations suited to the occasion, whereby the godly, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit and prayers to God, may persevere and grow in grace and keep themselves and recover others out of the snares of the deceivers; and a concluding ascription of glory "to the only wise God our Savior," 17-25.

REVELATION

REVELATION

The source and design of the book; with a blessing pronounced on those who duly attend to it, 1-3. The apostle salutes the seven churches in Asia; ascribes glory to God; and predicts the coming of Christ to judgment, with the terror and distress of his enemies, 4-7. The Lord declares his own eternity and omnipotence, 8. The place, time, and circumstances of John's vision; with what he heard of the words, and saw of the glory, of Christ; and the commandment given him to write these things to the churches, 9-20.

8. I am. This text, according to Daniel Waterland, "is to be interpreted (with all antiquity) of God the Son," which he proves (1) from the context; (2) from antiquity; (3) from the weaknesses of the reasons for applying this text to the Father. As to the context, all acknowledge that verse 7 applies to the Son; there is insufficient contextual warrant for making a sudden shift in this verse to avoid the application of divine titles to the Son, as the Arians argue for. As to antiquity, both ante-Nicene and post-Nicene writers concur in applying this text to Christ, such that "never were men more unanimous than the ancients were in this matter; there being no one exception, on record, against it." As to reasons for applying this text to the Father, some argue that since in verse 4 the title "which is, which was, and which is to come" applies to the Father, the same title used here must likewise. But this fails to recognize that the same titles are often given to both, as the title "Alpha and Omega" most certainly is (Re 1:11, 17. 2:8. 22:13. See related note on Re 3:14). The objection that the title "the Almighty" is always in Scripture applied to the Father, never the Son, is mistaken, for (1) "it is mere groundless presumption to suppose that as often as that title is applied to the one God in the Old Testament, it is applied to the Father only: since it may often be understood indifferently either of Father, or Son, or of the whole Trinity"; (2) "there are several texts of the Old Testament, which we have good reason to believe are to be understood particularly of God the Son. Psalm 24 has by the primitive Fathers been interpreted of Christ. The title Lord of hosts (Kurios dunameon), applied to Christ in that Psalm, is equivalent to Almighty (Kurios pantokrator), as the LXX Interpreters render the same words indifferently by one or other, as may easily be seen in a multitude of instances, by looking into Trommius's Concordance." John himself in his Apocalypse, Re 4:8, alluding to Is 6:3, where it reads "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts," gives not Kurios dunameon, (or sabaoth), but Kurios o Theos o pantokrator, Lord God Almighty. John likewise applies the title "Lord of hosts" to Christ, as can be seen by comparing Jn 12:41 with Is 6:5. Compare Zc 2:8 and 12:5, 10 with Jn 19:34, 37. "These instances are sufficient to check the confidence of such as roundly affirm, without a syllable of proof, that the title of pantokrator, Almighty, is in holy Scripture applied always to the Father only" (Waterland, Works, vol. 2, Sermon VI, "Christ's Divinity proved from his Titles," pp. 141-143; "A Second Defence of Some Queries," pp. 562-565). Waterland continues his argument at length with the astute observation, that the arguments used by the Arians to deny the eternity of the Son left no remaining valid arguments to assert the eternity of the Father. Most of the preceding and original references of the Treasury assume that "Lord's day" refers to the Christian Sabbath, the first day of the week, or Sunday. However, such an interpretation is open to the objection that (1) such a meaning has no relevance to the context; (2) the term is never so applied in Scripture, where the day of Christian worship is uniformly called the "first day of the week"; (3) such an interpretation does not agree with the Patristic understanding of the verse; (4) the interpretation is a reading back into the text of a term subsequently applied to Sunday. The term "Lord's day" is better understood as John's way of expressing the common Hebrew term "day of the Lord," in a manner in Greek which places the emphasis upon "Lord's" (by placing it in an initial position) in the same manner as the Hebrew expression places emphasis upon "Lord" (by placing it in the final position) in "day of the Lord." Supposing the expression refers to Sunday cannot account for the presence of the Greek article "the" used in the expression. When the article is lacking, there are several possible explanations to account for the fact, but when an interpretation cannot account for the presence of the Greek article, the interpretation stands self-condemned (J. B. Smith, Comm. on Revelation, Appendix 5, p. 320). The expression "on the Lord's day" would better be translated "in the Lord's day," as a reference to this specific prophetic time period. The Greek preposition en is more usually rendered "in," only once in Revelation is it translated "on," in the expression "on the earth," Re 5:13. Everywhere else where en is followed by the word "day" it is rendered "in" (Re 2:13. 9:6. 10:7. 11:6. 18:8). Understanding this term to refer to the "day of the Lord" emphasizes that the events which transpire in the third division of the book ("things which shall be hereafter") are events which take place during the "day of the Lord," a future time which begins at the Great Tribulation and concludes with the judgment of the Great White Throne at the end of the Millennium, and specifically ties in the prophecies of this book with the rest of Scripture relating to this coming day. This being the case, a more appropriate set of relevant references reflecting this understanding follows (For "day of the Lord": Is 13:6. Ac 2:20. 1 Th 5:2. 2 Th 2:2. 2 P 3:10. For "the last days": Is 2:2. For "in that day": Is 2:11. For "day of the Lord of hosts": Is 2:12). A careful comparison of the Scripture passages adduced may well show that the "day of the Lord" does not start with the beginning of the tribulation, or the beginning of Daniel's Seventieth Week, as commonly held, but some time in the latter half of this week, a time marked by cosmic disturbances which immediately precede the onset of the "day of the Lord" (Joel *2:30, 31. REVELATION 2

The epistle of Christ to the angel of the church of Ephesus; consisting of a commendation and reproof, a call to repentance, a solemn warning, and a gracious promise to those who overcame, 1-7. That to Smyrna, replete with commendation, and encouraging exhortations to faithfulness under tribulation, 8-11. That to Pergamos; in which are warnings against the Nicolaitans, threatenings of judgments on the impenitent, and promises to the victorious, 12-17. That to Thyatira, nearly of similar import, 18-29.

Those who watch not merely for the sun, but for the morning star, properly heed the cautions and injunctions relating to the posture of watching" (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 317). In another place Peters states "We have in the 'Morning Star' an implied reference to the first stage of the Advent, the thief-like coming for the saints, and to obtain it indicates that we are worthy of the better resurrection, or (if living) of the translation. The mention of this in such a connection is also exceedingly significant of the exaltation of the saints to coheirship with the Christ when the morning breaks" (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 418). REVELATION 3

The epistle of Christ to the angel of the church of Sardis; consisting of reproofs, exhortations, warnings, and promises to the pious remnant, 1-6. That to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, replete with encouragement, 7-13. That to Laodicea; comprising severe rebukes of lukewarmness and spiritual pride; connected with instruction, counsels, calls to repentance, invitations, and promises, 14-22.

Sardis, the once proud capital of Lydia, and the residence of its opulent monarchs, is now reduced to a wretched Turkish village called Sart, the habitation of herdsmen, buffaloes, and oxen, situated at the foot of mount Tmolus, on the banks of the Pactolus, between 30 and 40 miles east from Smyrna. The ruins of Sardis are peculiarly grand, and lift up their heads, as if to assert their ancient glory; but it now contains not a single Christian family. Re +1:16. he that. His thief-like coming occurs at the day of the Lord. Since Paul tells the Thessalonians they were well acquainted with the prophetic truth concerning the day of the Lord, this day is not to be identified with the Rapture, about which Paul did need to write to clarify their understanding. The day of the Lord begins with the Great Tribulation, and ends with the close of the Millennium. Those who shall "not escape" (1 Th 5:3) are those who are not brethren, who fail to watch and pray (Lk +*21:36), are not counted worthy to escape, and therefore go on into the tribulation period (see J. B. Smith, A Revelation of Jesus Christ, Appendix 8, pp. 328, 329). Re 16:15. Mt *24:42-44. Lk 12:39, 40. 1 Th *5:2. 2 P *3:10. not know. Mt 24:42n. *25:13. Mk *13:32n, 33, 36. Philadelphia, so called from its founder, Attalus Philadelphus, still exists in the town called Allah-shear, "the city of God," "a column in a scene of ruins." It is situated on the slopes of three or four hills, the roots of mount Tmolus, by the river Cogamus, twenty-seven miles E.S.E. from Sardis, about long. 28 degrees 40 minutes, lat. 38 degrees 23 minutes. The number of houses is said to be about 3000, of which 250 are Greek, the rest Turkish; and the Christians have twenty-five places of worship, five of them large and regular churches, a resident bishop, and twenty inferior clergy. Some who favor a post-tribulational rapture of the church understand the primary force of this preposition to mean "out from within" (Robert Gundry, The Church and the Tribulation, p. 55). Gundry asserts "the preposition ek appears in John's writings approximately 336 times, far more often than in the writings of any other NT author. There is not a single instance where the primary thought of emergence, or origin, cannot fit, indeed, does not best fit the thought of the context. Surely the invariability of meaning in such a high number of occurrences establishes the Johannine usage" (p. 57). Gundry's unexamined universal assertion is not supported by a careful examination of the particular instances. We have met this claim for a universal meaning for ek in other connections, and fully proved by the citation of specific instances, that ek may sometimes mean not "out of," as from within, but from, as here (Ac 8:39n). J. B. Smith points out that if ek means "out of," in the sense of being preserved in the hour of temptation, applying this construction to the acclaimed parallel in Jn 17:15, "shouldst keep them out of (the evil one)," the words "would really mean safe in the evil one, that is, safe in the devil. Thus the absurdity of such an interpretation becomes apparent" (Comm. on Revelation, Appendix 10, p. 333). A much more satisfactory parallel is Jn √12:27, which, taken with its parallels (Mt 26:38. Mk 14:36. Lk 22:42. Jn 18:11. Ps 42:5, 6) proves that, when Jesus in his human nature prayed "remove this cup from me," and the parallel or equivalent request, "save me from this hour," he was not praying to be spared during the hour, but to be kept from it, which settles the meaning of the expression here. Ps 27:5. 32:6. Jn √12:27. 17:15g. Ro +*5:9. 2 C 1:10. 1 Th +*1:10. 2 P 2:9. the hour. Re 2:10. of temptation. Da +*12:1. Zp 1:14-18. Mt √24:21, 22. come upon. The use of this phrase shows this testing is not to be confined to "an hour of trial or tribulation upon the churches of John's day" (Dake), for no such world-encompassing tribulation occurred in John's day. Rather, this time of testing "may be equated with the tribulation yet to come," which proves that the Philadelphian church, "as well as the other churches, is representative of the church universal" (J. B. Smith, Comm. on Revelation, p. 88). Re 13:3, 8. Mk 14:9. Lk 2:1. Ro *1:8. to try. Is *24:17. Da +*11:35. *12:10. Zc *13:9. Mk *13:13, 19. Ja *1:3, 12. 1 P *4:12. that dwell. This is a favorite Arian prooftext, cited to prove that Jesus is not eternal, but had a beginning, Jesus being understood by them to be the first-created creature of God, through whom God created all else in the universe. The underlying Greek word, arche, may be understood in a passive sense, and rendered "the beginning," as the A.V., or more correctly understood in the active sense, and rendered "the beginner," source, origin, or principle of creation. Since God is eternal, and Jesus is God, the passive sense is not suited to the context, as being out of harmony with the many representations of Christ John has already given, whereby he in citing or alluding to Old Testament passages has applied to Jesus Christ in the book of Revelation what is in the Old Testament spoken of Jehovah (see related notes at Ac 11:21n. Col 1:16n. 1 P +*2:3n). Herman Gebhardt states "that qualities, actions, and conditions which belong specifically to God, are also ascribed to Christ, and to Him only," and "in Old Testament expressions things which otherwise belong to God are frequently affirmed of Christ. It is said of Christ that 'His head and His hairs were white like wool,' Re 1:14; and in Da 7:9, God is so represented. The eyes of Christ are as a flame of fire, Re 1:14; 2:18; 19:12; and in the same words God's omniscience is symbolized as directed with holy indignation against all unrighteousness, Da 10:6. The feet of Christ are 'like unto fine brass, as if they burned in an oven,' Re 1:15; 2:18; the same image represents God's power in treading down the wicked, Da 10:6; Ezk 1:7. The voice of Christ is as the voice of many waters, Re 1:15; and we find a similar representation of God's power against His enemies, Da 10:6; Ezk 1:24; 43:2; Ps 93:3. Christ's countenance is as the sun shining in his strength, Re 1:16; and so it is said of God, Da 10:6 (compare Jg 5:21). The seer fell down before Christ as if dead, Re 1:17; a similar effect was wrought by the appearance of God, Ex 33:20; Is 6:5; Ezk 1:28; Da 8:17, 18; 10:7-9. Christ says, 'I am He that searcheth the reins and hearts, and will give unto every one of you according to your works,' Re 2:23; and we read that 'the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins,' Ps 7:9, and that He 'renders to every man according to his work,' Ps 62:12. Christ says, 'As many as I love I rebuke and chasten,' Re 3:19; and in Pr 3:12 we read 'whom the Lord loveth He correcteth.' Christ calls Himself 'the Amen,' Re 3:14; and the same expression is used of God, Is 65:16. The Lamb has 'seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth,' Re 5:6; and in Zc 4:10 we read of 'the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.' According to Re 7:17, the Lamb will feed His people, and lead them to fountains of living waters; and the same thing is said of Jehovah in Is 49:10. What is said of the anger of Christ, Re 19:15 (compare Re 14:10, 14-16), is drawn from a similar passage respecting God in Is 63:1-6. The 'vesture dipped in blood,' worn by Christ, Re 19:12, is said to have been worn by God, Is 63:1, 2" (The Doctrine of the Apocalypse, pp. 85, 86). Gebhardt asks, "What exposition is demanded by the laws of language? Without further delay I reply, that had the seer written 'the beginning of the creatures (ktismata) of God,' or had he written 'the first, or the first-born, or the first-fruit (protos, prototokos, aparxee) of the creation of God,' then the expression might be understood to denote the first created, or that which precedes all things, the first creature in time and rank. But the seer has written ee arkee tees ktiseos tou theou, which can mean nothing else than principium creationis, the principle, the en o, di ou, eis o, of the creation of God. After this affirmation of the literal sense, I may remark that it finds confirmation in Re 1:17, 18; 2:8" (p. 92, 93). "Are not all the expressions concerning Christ, quoted above, so many proofs that John, by 'the beginning of the creation of God,' cannot have meant the earliest and greatest of creatures, but a being above creation?" (Gebhardt, The Doctrine of the Apocalypse, p. 93). Waterland defines Arkee (beginning), "that is, author or efficient cause" (Works, vol. 2, p. 53). T#961‡. Re 21:6. 22:13. Ge 1:1. 49:3, LXX. REVELATION 4

John, in vision, beholds heaven open, and the glory of God, as seated on an exalted throne, 1-3; surrounded by twenty-four elders, and four living creatures, who unite in adoring Him, as the Creator and Lord of all, 4-11.

This text, however, cannot prove anything about the Rapture, for to apply this to the Rapture one must take John to be a type of the church, the call to "come up hither" a type of the shout-command at the Rapture, and the third heaven as the destination of believers at the Rapture, all of which are tenuous connections at best. One cannot base a doctrine on a type, and proof of the timing of the Rapture must rest upon the direct statements of Scripture elsewhere. There is no need to search the Apocalypse for a direct mention of the pretribulation Rapture of the church, when the doctrine is clearly stated elsewhere. After all, the church or repentance is not mentioned in the entire gospel of John, but that need not be cause for concern that the doctrine of repentance or the church suffers thereby. Re 11:12. Ex ▸19:16, 20, 24. 24:12. 34:2, 3. 1 Th ?=4:13-18. and I. Re 1:19. 22:6. Jn 16:13. things which. This phrase is crucial to understanding the structure of the book of Revelation. In the light of Revelation 1:19, this phrase marks the third grand division of the book as the "things which must be hereafter." Interpreters differ widely in their understanding of the book of Revelation. Four major schools or systems of interpretation have been (1) the preterist, which takes all the events in the book to have been fulfilled in John's own day, the position held by many respected scholars and critics; (2) the historicist, which understands the prophecy to be in continuous fulfillment from John's day to the end of history; (3) the idealist, or spiritual scheme of interpretation, which takes the prophecies not as prophetic of future events but places a "spiritual" interpretation upon them, believing they reveal timeless truth about the conflict between good and evil, the spiritual history of the church, the ultimate victory of Christ over the powers of darkness, and are meant to provide spiritual comfort in times of trial; (4) the futurist, which holds that the majority of the book deals with end-time events which are still future. Most Bible-believing Christians today would probably opt either for the historicist or the futurist position of interpretation. The historicist position, reflected in the original notes of the Treasury, suffers from the inability of interpreters of this school to establish a specific verifiable criterion of judgment whereby positive identification for the fulfillment of specific prophecies can be proved to be historically fulfilled by specific events in world history, in historical instances of fulfillment to which most of the interpreters of this school could agree. The method requires the student of Revelation to go outside the Bible and seek for the fulfillment of predictions in the past events of world history, and to one not well taught in history the method is impossible to carry out, leaving the book of Revelation largely closed to the ordinary reader. The futurist position suffers, in the opinion of some, because it makes the book largely inapplicable to the original readers of the book, or to anyone since then, since the events are all placed in the future. A sufficient answer to such an objection is that the practical object of prophecy is to motivate us to holy living in watchful expectation of our Lord's return (Lk +✓21:36. 2 P ✓3:14), and Scripture itself teaches us that we have "a more sure word of prophecy" to serve as a light in dark times (2 P 1:19). All Bible prophecy was written with both a near and a distant vantage point. A prophet predicted some things which transpired during his own lifetime, as verification that he was a true prophet of God (Dt 18:22), but also spoke of things in the distant future, which only the passing of time could verify (see the excellent discussion of these matters in R. B. Girdlestone, The Grammar of Prophecy, Chapter 3, "Tests of the Truth of Prophecy," pp. 16-24). The futurist position is the only position which can be entirely consistent in interpreting the prophecies of the book of Revelation in harmony with the rest of the prophecies of the Bible. Any system of prophetic interpretation, to be correct, must follow a consistent principle of literal interpretation for all of Scripture (using the same principle for prophetic as is used for non-prophetic portions), and must appeal to Scripture (not tenuous and unsubstantiated historic parallels) for its justification (Is +*8:20). What John writes in Revelation corresponds to the predictions in the Old Testament (Is 11:11n), the prophetic Discourses of Christ himself, such as the most significant Olivet discourse in Matthew 24 and parallels, and the prophetic teaching of the apostle Paul (T 2:13n). Futurists, consistent with the divinely provided divisions of the book of Revelation (Re 1:19), place the events of chapters 4-22 in the future, understanding them to be events particularly connected with the Seventieth Week of Daniel's prophecy (Da +*9:27n), and the time of the Great Tribulation. Futurists are correct in understanding Bible prophecy to be a self-consistent whole, and interpret the book of Revelation in the light of the rest of the covenants and prophecies of Scripture, and find the explanation of the book of Revelation to be contained in the rest of Scripture, and the method of interpretation which is most satisfactory to be a comparison of Scripture with Scripture (2 P 1:20n). REVELATION 5

The apostle beholds a sealed book, which none could open, and he weeps on that account, 1-4. He is assured by one of the elders, that the Lamb had prevailed to open it; who accordingly comes and takes it, 5-7. He hears the living creatures and the elders adoring the Redeemer; while angels, and all creatures, join in the praises of "him who sits on the throne, and of the Lamb that was slain," 8-14.

Most modern authorities omit "us," though it has considerable, if not overwhelming, authority in the MSS. Alford notes that it is more likely to have been inserted, considering the prevalent early interpretation of the elders as apostles and prophets, than omitted because they were imagined to be angels. For similar constructions with ek and the object not expressed, see Mt 25:8; 1 J 4:13. Tregelles retains "us," remarking "in verse 9, eemas, "us," should certainly be read. There was an opinion, many years ago, that it rested on but slight authority. This arose through an error in a reprint of Griesbach's text; so that he was supposed to have excluded it. On this misprint interpretations were based. Now of all collated MSS. the Codex Alexandrinus alone omits eemas (and this is thought to have some support from the Ethiopic version); and one MS. has eemon instead. The consent of the ancient versions has much weight in a case of this kind. It is surprising that some later editors have omitted it only on the authority mentioned" (S. P. Tregelles, The Hope of Christ's Second Coming, p. 69, 70 note). Hoskier, the greatest authority on the Greek text of the book of Revelation, calls this omission "and that huge blunder at v. 9" when listing a few of the solecisms of the Alexandrian MSS., further remarking, "Surely we ought not to be asked ever to follow A alone (as we have at v. 9, more is the pity)" (H. C. Hoskier, Concerning the Genesis of the Versions of the N.T., p. 392, 393). A further issue in interpretation for some seems to be that this is one of the clearest texts to show that the twenty-four elders are saints, redeemed believers in heaven, significant evidence that they represent the raptured church in heaven during the tribulation period. Alexander Reese, opposing the pretribulation rapture, evidently placed much weight on this mistaken omission of "us," to support the view that the elders cannot represent the redeemed, acknowledging, however, that the ancient readings of this passage do indicate the elders to be of the redeemed, stating "Certainly these words seem conclusive that here we have the redeemed" (The Approaching Advent of Christ, p. 92). But even with a change of the pronouns involved (some modern critics supplying "them" here and in verse 10, in reference to the last word in verse 8, "saints") it is clear elsewhere that the twenty-four elders are redeemed men (Re 1:1. 5:5-7. 7:13-15. *19:10. *22:8, 9). For a fine and very complete discussion of this matter see J. B. Smith (Comm. on Revelation, Appendix 11, pp. 334-339). Re 14:4, 6. Ex 14:10, 30. Le 25:30, 54. Is 47:4. 53:11. *62:12. By Hendiadys, "a great priestly kingdom." Two words used, one thing meant. priests. ✓96F2, Ge +4:10. The plural form "priests" is put by Heterosis for the singlular, denoting greatness. Therefore, it is proper to worship the Son, even as it is proper to worship the Father, for here it has been shown that Father and Son receive the same worship. 1 Ch *29:11-13. Ps 62:11. Mt 6:13. REVELATION 6

The opening of six of the seven seals, and the emblematic discovery of future events made after each of them, 1-17.

1. when. ver. 16. See on Re 5:5-7. the seals. Re 5:1, 5-7. noise of thunder. Re 4:5. 10:3, 4. 11:19. 14:2. 19:6. Ex 19:16. Jb *37:5. Ezk 1:24, 25. 10:5. one of. ver. 3, 5, 7. Re 4:6, 7. Ac 4:20. the four. ver. 6. Re +4:6. Come. ✓171J14, Jon +1:3. In verses 1, 3, 5, and 7, the verb "and see" is not in many modern critical Greek texts. In this case the verb "come" is used in the sense of "go," as a command from the throne to the horsemen, rendered "saying, Go! and I saw and behold a white horse...and he went forth."

2. a white. This seems to be a representation of the person and dignity of Christ, and the mild and beneficent triumphs of his gospel over all the powers of paganism. In contrast to the preceding original Treasury note (which reflects the historicist school of interpretation, Re 4:1n), H. B. Swete states (in reference to the rider and white horse of Re 19:11) that "the two riders have nothing in common beyond the white horse.... A vision of the victorious Christ would be inappropriate at the opening of a series which symbolizes bloodshed, famine, and pestilence" (The Apocalypse of St. John, p. 86). The rider on the white horse is more probably to be identified as the Antichrist. If this is not Antichrist, then Revelation does not place Antichrist on the scene of events before the middle of Daniel's Seventieth Week (in Re ch. 13), and the rider is virtually unidentifiable. The first seal corresponds to Mt 24:4, 5 (the false Messiah or Antichrist). Re ◐19:11, 14, 19, 21. Zc ◗1:8. ◖6:2, 3, etc., ◖6. Mt 24:4, 5, 23, 24. Jn 5:43. 2 C 11:13-15. horse. Jb 39:19, 25. 4. I heard. Re 9:16. the number. Ps +*68:11. Is +*27:6. +*66:19. of them. Dt +*4:30. an hundred and forty and four thousand. What is the significance of the number? Reginald T. Naish, in his volume Spiritual Arithmetic, suggests that since this number contains the square of twelve, it "is naturally associated with that number, which is perfect government. It emphasizes it, and expresses spiritually the fact that perfect government of the life is only possible through the agency of the Holy Spirit. Hence it may well be called, the number of the Spirit-guided life." In Ge 1:2, the Hebrew word translated "move" (rachaph) has a numerical value or gematria of 288, or 144 x 2. Its next occurrence is Dt 32:11, where it is translated "fluttered." Naish states "In both these passages the gracious work of the heavenly dove, the Holy Spirit of God, is described." Other occurrences of this number are to be found in the word "eastward" (Ge 2:8) in the phrase "eastward in Eden," showing that God intended man "should live a life of perfect government, a wonderful garden life, bringing forth the fruit of the Spirit, and finding their chief joy in communion with their loving God." The cubic capacity of the ark, found by multiplying its three dimensions of 300 cubits, 50 cubits, and 30 cubits, was 450,000 cubic cubits, a number whose prime factors are 5x5x5x5x5x144. The number appears here in Re 7:4 of the number "sealed by the Holy Spirit before God's judgments fall on earth. It does not of course mean that this identical number are saved in that time of tribulation. It is only using the numbers 144 and 10 in the spiritual sense in which these numbers are used through Scripture to tell of those who by the power of the Holy Spirit are kept from that time of trouble." The same number occurs in Re ch. 14. "Again, we are given a symbolical picture of those who have yielded their lives wholly to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. They are taken up to be with Christ, their Savior, before the actual 'harvest of the earth' is reaped" (Spiritual Arithmetic, pp. 107-109).

Who are the 144,000? The Jehovah's Witnesses teach that the 144,000 is the body of spirit-begotten believers who have a "heavenly hope" (Ro 8:24. Ep 4:4. Col 1:5. He 7:19. 1 P 1:3. 1 J 3:3). All other believers can have only an "earthly hope" (Jb 14:7. Je 31:17.

Ac 26:6). Once the Watchtower organization had more than 144,000 adherents, the teaching was developed that the "great multitude" mentioned later in the chapter (ver. 9) referred to those Christians who had only an earthly hope. Jehovah's Witnesses teach that members of the "great multitude" who have only an earthly hope do not need to be born again (see related note, Jn 3:7). Peters remarks "It is a matter of amazement how coolly and deliberately men can appropriate Scripture to themselves which relates to the future. Sects, at various times, have professed to be those sealed ones" (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 323, note 1). Not considering that the number sealed refers to a time yet future, Jehovah's Witnesses claim the number represents the total number of those who can be born again and have a heavenly hope. How long would it take for the apostolic church of the New Testament to reach the size of 144,000 converts? Suppose we assume that the first converts were zealous witnessing Christians during the lifetime of the apostles. Suppose each convert was able to win just one person to Christ each year of his new life in Christ, and that each of these converts continued to win an additional convert each year. Take into account only the growth theoretically possible for the new converts won by the original group of 5,000 converts mentioned in the book of Acts. Exclude from consideration any additional converts won through the ministry of the apostles (Paul, Barnabas, Apollos, and the original twelve disciples) to compensate for any of the original 5000 who may not have been active soul winners. In the year A.D. 33, the size of the church would be 5,000. In 34 A.D., 10,000; 35 A.D., 20,000; 36 A.D., 40,000; 37 A.D., 80,000; 38 A.D., 160,000—assuming each new convert continued to win one additional convert per year. Thus before Paul began his first missionary journey in A.D. 45, the New Testament church could easily have surpassed the figure of 144,000 genuine converts. If any converts beyond that figure were limited to an earthly hope without opportunity for new birth and "heavenly hope," this most certainly would be reflected in the teaching of the New Testament epistles of Peter or Paul. The earliest of Paul's epistles was written in A.D. 52 or 54, fourteen or more years after the time the New Testament church exceeded the 144,000 maximum number the Jehovah's Witnesses teach can have a heavenly hope. Is this situation reflected in the writings of Paul? At the time Paul wrote 2 Thessalonians (A.D. 52 or 54), he specifically confirms that the "falling away" or apostasy had not yet occurred (2 Th 2:3). This Scripture evidence would lead us to believe that the vast body of believers had remained faithful. What few that fell away during this time would be more than made up by any converts won beyond the first five years after Pentecost. If the claim of Jehovah's Witnesses that the heavenly hope is limited to 144,000 has any validity, the significance of that hope for anyone today is purely historical, for since this number was reached within five years of Pentecost, no person alive today could possibly lay claim to be one of that fixed number, not even the leaders of the Watchtower in Brooklyn, New York. Following Jehovah Witness doctrine to its logical conclusion, the apostle Paul must have been mistaken in his theology, for he continued to emphasize the "heavenly hope" and the necessity of the "new birth" (1 C 6:2. 2 C 5:17. Ga 6:14) long after the "heavenly class" was complete in number. The 144,000 of Revelation 7:4 and 14:1 do not pertain to persons who have lived before now, but to a specific group in the future. The book of Revelation supplies its own outline in Re 1:19. The 144,000 are mentioned well after Re 4:1, where the third grand division of the book pertaining to "things which must be hereafter" commences. Therefore, these events must take place during the "day of the Lord" (Re 1:10n), after the Rapture of the church (1 Th 4:16-18), and during the Great Tribulation. The 144,000 are all males (Re 14:4), and are all Jews (Re 7:4, "of all the tribes of the children of Israel"). Scripture speaks of three categories of persons its contents concern: the Jews, the Gentiles, and the church of God (1 C 10:32). What is stated in Re 7:4 pertains to Israel—it cannot pertain to any other group. The names of the tribes of Israel are nowhere in Scripture ever applied to the Gentiles or the church of God. Furthermore, the 144,000 are not the only saints in heaven. They were preceded by all those who died in Christ before the Rapture (2 C +*5:8. 1 Th 4:14). They are preceded by those who have been martyred for Christ (Re *6:9-11). There are five raptures in the first resurrection; the 144,000 constitute only one of these five. The five raptures are: (1) Christ and the saints in Jerusalem at his first resurrection, 1 C 15:20, 23. Mt 27:52, 53. Ep 4:8-10. (2) Afterward, they that are Christ's at his coming, 1 C 15:23, 51-54. Lk +*21:34-36. Jn +*14:1-3. 2 C 5:1-8. Ep 5:27. Ph 3:11, 20, 21. Col 3:4. 1 Th 2:19. 3:13. 4:13-17. 5:9, 23. 2 Th 2:1, 7. Ja 5:7, 8. 1 P 5:4. 1 J 2:28. 3:2. (3) The 144,000 Jews saved in the first 3 1/2 years of the tribulation (of Daniel's 70th week), caught up to heaven as the manchild, Re 12:5. 14:1-5. Is 66:7, 8. Da 12:1. (4) The great multitude of tribulation saints saved after rapture number two above, during Re 6:1—19:21. (5) The rapture of the two witnesses, ending the first resurrection which began with the resurrection of Christ, Re 11:7-11. 1 C 15:20, 23. The 144,000 do not comprise the totality of all saints possessing a "heavenly hope" throughout this age. All of the 144,000 are on the earth at the same time. This is evidenced by the fact that they are as a group "sealed" and protected from the tribulation by the angel. The 144,000 do not constitute the "little flock." The "little flock" is comprised of all born-again believers. The flock is little because there are "few that be saved" (Mt +*7:14). The term "flock" is used in the New Testament for the true church made up of born-again believers (Ac 20:28). The "other sheep" are the Gentile Christians who, in addition to the Jewish believers, are now being constituted one body in Christ, the church (Ac 10:45. 15:7, 17. Ep +*4:4). The Great Tribulation is still future, and pertains to Israel. The church is raptured prior to the manifestation of the Antichrist, 2 Th 2:8n, and prior to the Great Tribulation (Jn 14:1-3. 1 C 15:51, 52. Ph 3:21. 1 Th 4:16-18. 2 Th +*1:7. 2:1. T +*2:13n). Christ's Second Advent occurs at the end of tribulation, when Christ personally destroys the Antichrist. Since it is certain that Antichrist is destroyed before the Millennium, this proves absolutely that Christ's coming is premillennial (2 Th 2:8n). At the Second Advent, Christ returns visibly in power and great glory (Mt +*16:27n) with his saints to rule over His eternal kingdom on this earth (Da +*7:13, 14. Zc 14:5, 9. 2 T +*4:1n). Since the rapture of the Church and the Great Tribulation are future, and the 144,000 are protected during the first half of the Tribulation, the 144,000 must constitute a group that is yet future, and cannot pertain to any denomination or other religious group of today. REVELATION 8

The seventh seal is opened; and, after a short silence, seven angels appear with seven trumpets prepared to announce approaching judgments; with reference to Christ's intercession, and the prayers of his saints, 1-6. The sounding of four of the trumpets, with the emblematical predictions following each of them; and an intimation of more awful calamities, under the other three, 7-13.

REVELATION 10

The apostle in vision beholds a mighty Angel, with a little book open in his hand; and hears the voice of seven thunders, which he was ordered to seal up, 1-4. The angel swears by the eternal Creator, that at an appointed time, when the seventh trumpet shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, 5-7. The apostle receives and eats the little book, 8-11.

Ep 3:3-9. should be finished. This "mystery" which is to be finished involves (1) the resolution of the problem of evil, which was first manifest in the Garden of Eden, as the first sin seemingly interrupted the purpose for Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The fall brought the attendant curse upon man and all creation, the curse now announced to be removed. The prophets speak unitedly of the coming messianic kingdom as a time of regeneration, restitution, and restoration, when earth will be restored to its paradaisical state, a time when the curse is removed (Re +*22:3. Ge +*3:15. Is 11:6-9. +*60:21. Zc 14:11. Ac +✓3:19-21). (2) the resolution of the apparent paradox of election and free will, and a clarification to us of the orderings of providence (1 C 13:12. Ep +*1:11). (3) the consumation of the mystery of godliness, involving the human and divine cooperating in establishing the Davidic theocratic kingdom (Is +*54:1. Mt 22:41-46. Jn +*1:51.

1 C +*15:50n. Ep 1:10. 1 T +*3:16). (4) the completion of our redemption and the establishment of our inheritance (Mt 19:27-30. Ro +*8:23. Ep +*1:11n. +*4:30. He +*9:28n. 1 J √3:2). (5) the pre-tribulational, premillennial personal appearance of Christ for believers to prepare the organization of, and to set up, his kingdom before its open, public manifestation (Dt +*33:2. Is 11:11n. 1 C 15:51, 52. 1 Th +*4:16-18. T +*2:13n. Re +*11:17n, 18). (6) the accomplishment of divine vengeance and retribution in the Day of the Lord (Is +*61:2. +*63:4. Re +*1:10). (7) the open revelation of Christ, the overthrow of Antichrist, the investiture of the kingdom, the exaltation of the saints, the overthrow of Satan (Da +*7:13, 14. Lk 10:18. Col +*3:4. 2 Th 1:10. +*2:8. Re 20:10). Because this finishing occurs at the beginning of the seventh trumpet (which itself is clearly premillennial), the finishing is necessarily premillennial, not postmillennial. The theme of all the prophets is the fulfillment of the covenants and promises in the "sure mercies of David" in establishing the messianic kingdom, which is the kingdom of God upon earth, as our eternal inheritance (Is +*55:3. Mt +*5:5. Ac 1:3, 6. +*13:34. 15:14-18. 28:31. Ro +*4:13. +*8:17). Re +*16:17. 17:17. Dt √32:43. Ps 102:13-22. Ezk √39:8. Da 9:24, 27. 12:7. as he. Is +*65:17. Da 7:25, 26. Am +*3:7. REVELATION 11

The apostle is directed to measure the temple, the altar, and the worshippers; but to leave "the outer court to the Gentiles"; with a prediction of their prevalence for forty-two months, 1, 2. Power is given to two witnesses, who prophesy in sackcloth, during twelve hundred and sixty days, 3-6. The beast makes war upon them, and slays them: but after three days and a half, overtake their enemies, 13, 14. The seventh trumpet sounds; and the announcement is made of the glorious events which shall follow, including the great power of God and the eternal reign of Christ, the anger of the nations, the wrath of God, the resurrection of the righteous, the time of their rewards, and the destruction of the earth-destroyers, 15-18. An introduction to the prophecies of the subsequent chapter, 19.

This seventh trumpet is the last of this series of seven, but not the last absolutely, and is not to be confused with the "last trump" of 1 C 15:52n. Chronologically, the trumpet of Mt 24:31 must follow this seventh trumpet of Revelation, for it occurs after the Tribulation, at the open manifestation of Christ's Second Advent (Mt 24:30), which in the book of Revelation is recorded in Re 19:11-16, which is after the time expressed here. REVELATION 12

The apostle sees in vision a travailing woman, watched by a red dragon, that he might devour her offspring: she is delivered of a son; he is caught up to the throne of God, and she flees into the wilderness, 1-6. Michael overcomes, and casts out Satan; joy in heaven on that occasion; and woe denounced on the earth, through Satan's rage and malice, 7-12. The dragon persecutes the woman; she having wings given her flies into the wilderness, and is preserved from his unwearied and varied efforts, 13-17.

Ga *4:4. brought forth. Is ▸66:7. manchild. Interpreters vary widely in their understanding of who the manchild is. Many believe that this verse is retrospective, and that the manchild refers to the birth of Christ. More probably, the manchild refers to a group of resurrected saints (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 285). J. Finis Dake has argued ably that the group of saints involved are the 144,000 of chapter 7. This group is found in heaven in chapter 14, and this passage appears to provide the Rapture that brought them there. That this is not a reference to Christ seems evident, for this occurs in the section past Re 4:1, which has to do with future events. Christ's ascension did not occur in the middle of Daniel's Seventieth Week. The basis for identifying the manchild with Christ is that he was born of a woman, but in this passage the woman is Israel, not Mary, for it is Israel that is predicted to flee for protection into the wilderness (ver. +*6. Ob +*3). That the manchild is to rule with a rod of iron is taken by many to indicate that this is a reference to Christ, for He will do so. But Scripture clearly shows that Christ (Ps 2:8), the manchild (Re 12:5), the church saints (Re 2:26, 27), the tribulation saints (Re 20:4-6), and indeed all the saints (Ps +*149:6-9) are to so rule, so this does not necessarily indicate that the manchild is Christ. Numerical values were assigned to all the letters of the Greek alphabet by the Greeks themselves, ranging from 1 for alpha to 800 for omega. See the tables for the Hebrew and Greek alphabets giving the numerical values assigned in E. W. Bullinger, Number in Scripture, pp. 48, 49. The number six has identifiable spiritual significance (Da 3:1n). It has long been known that several of the names of Satan, for example, have mathematical values evenly divisible by the number thirteen. "Dragon" has a numerical value of 975, or 13x3x5x5. "Tempter" has a numerical value of 1053 (13x3x3x3); a place value of 91 (13x7); and a total value of 1144 (13x11x2x2x2). "Belial" has a numerical value of 78 (13x3x2); a place value of 39 (13x3); a total value of 117 (13x3x3). "Murderer" has a numerical value of 1820 (13x7x5x2x2). "Serpent" has a numeric value of 780 (13x3x2x2x5). The phrase in Re 12:9, "called the devil and satan" has a numerical value of 2197 (13x13x13). That this many names of Satan should all demonstrate the factor thirteen seems beyond what is reasonable to attribute to mere chance.

Beyond the spiritual significance of the numbers in the Bible, is another interesting and valuable study which involves the mathematical structure of the original Greek and Hebrew text of the Scripture. It often appears that the mathematical structure of the original text, taken by sentences, not verses, possesses a structure where the number seven is the consistent or predominant factor. Seven is a consistent prime factor in the numerical value of the sentence, in the place value of the sentence, and in the total value of the sentence. By "factor" is meant what in mathematics is called the "prime factor," a set of numbers which are divisible by themselves and one only, which multiply to give a specific number. Every number has only one set of prime factors, and these may be found listed in standard mathematical tables (such as the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Mathematical Tables, Volume 5, Factor Table, giving the complete decomposition of all numbers less than 100,000, prepared by J. Peters, A. Lodge, and others, London, 1935, 1963). The numerical structure is displayed in the prime factors of the numbers involved, and I have shown these in parentheses in the examples above and below. The numerical value is simply the sum of all the arithmetical values of the Greek or Hebrew letters in the sentence. The place value is the sum of the individual letter place values (which in Greek range from 1 to 24, the Greek alphabet having 24 letters). The total value is simply the sum of the numerical and place values. The sentence "But remember Lot's wife" (Lk 17:32) contains five words in Greek. Their numerical value is 3374 (7x2x241); place value is 322 (7x2x23); total value is 3696 (7x2x2x2x2x3x11). Romans 10:13, "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" contains eight words in Greek. Their numerical value is 4459 (7x7x7x13); place value is 490 (7x7x2x5); total value is 4949 (7x7x101). Romans 10:17, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" contains eleven words in Greek. Their numeric value is 3276 (7x2x2x3x3x13); place value is 420 (7x2x2x3x5); total value is 3696 (7x2x2x2x2x3x11). Romans 11:26, 27, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins" contains 23 words in Greek. Their numeric value is 12180 (7x3x2x2x5x29); place value is 1176 (7x7x2x2x2); total value is 13356 (7x3x2x2x3x53).

Just as the names and titles of Satan frequently possess a significant mathematical structure, so Christ's titles often possess significant structure. In the passage just cited (Ro 11:26), the title "the Deliverer" possesses an extensive structure involving the number five. The name "Jesus" has a numerical value of 888, which is quite a contrast to 666. The number 8 has spiritual significance (Mi 5:5n). It is unlikely that this many instances of structure by seven could occur by chance in such a limited section of text as Romans chapter 11. The frequency with which this mathematical phenomena is found is greater than what can be attributed statistically to chance, and is believed by many who have devoted considerable time and study to the subject to be an evidence of design, supporting the Bible claim to divine inspiration. I am indebted to Mr. G. E. Hoyer, formerly of Chicago, Illinois, with whom I have studied for over twenty-five years, for my knowledge of this subject. Much more could be said about the usefulness of this research. The results of this study have a bearing upon deciding consistently matters of orthography (spelling). Findings of this research lend support to some texts in the Greek New Testament which have been marked as doubtful, but space allotment in this reference work will not allow more than this brief sampling of the evidence. Acts 8:37, marked doubtful in some modern translations, has a numerical value of 16170 (7x7x3x11x2x5); a place value of 1617 (7x7x3x11); a total value of 17787 (7x7x3x11x11). I found, upon my own investigation, that the text of 1 P 3:18 with the article in the dative case ("raised by the Spirit") possesses a consistent structure by seven: the numerical value of this text is 13230 (7x7x3x3x3x2x5); the place value is 1281 (7x3x61); the total value is 14511 (7x3x691). There is no structure when the article is omitted. In my file I have perhaps 100 examples of this pervasive structure by seven for texts from the New Testament. Mr. Hoyer has, I would suppose, several times this number which I have seen in his files.

On the supposition that perhaps this structure could be found in any Greek literature of the period, I tested sample passages from the LXX., the Apostolic Fathers, sample passages from Scripture Parallels in Ancient Classics, and entire books and chapters from the Old Testament Apocrypha. The results were comparatively meager. The closest and best example I have found of "structure" is in the Epistle of Jeremy, verse 13, which has a numeric value of 9163 (7x7x17x11); a place value of 952 (7x17x2x2x2); a total value of 10115 (7x17x17x5). I do not argue from this example that this verse is "inspired," however. Neither do I conclude that texts in the Bible which do not contain this structure are uninspired. Examining the text in Jeremy for what Mr. Hoyer has called "detail structure," even this text does not possess the richness to be found in every New Testament example he has shown me. That I should be able to find an occasional random text which has in all three values a multiple of seven is not beyond the realm of statistical possibility, for theoretically something less than one sentence in every forty-nine samples should have such a structure. Mr. Hoyer has found for the New Testament far more examples than can be attributed to this normal chance distribution, and his examples seem to demonstrate a grammatical and orthographical consistency which supports the thesis of intentional design. For example, the name "David" has several possible spellings in Greek, according to accepted MSS. evidence, but only one of these alternatives (Daueid) is consistently selected in such texts as Mt 9:27, which has a numerical value of 1456 (7x2x2x2x2x13); place value of 189 (7x3x3x3); total value of 1645 (7x5x47). So for Mt 12:23, which has a numerical value of 6664 (7x7x2x2x2x17); a place value of 756 (7x2x2x3x3x3); a total value of 7420 (7x2x2x5x53). When a different spelling of "David" is selected for these texts, they no longer possess a discernible mathematical structure. I call attention to these facts because it ought to be more generally recognized that there is much more to know and understand about even apparently insignificant matters related to the Bible than most people—even scholars—are aware, and to offer the caution that one must not arbitrarily dismiss the validity of a branch of study without having thoroughly personally investigated the subject (Ps 25:9. Jn 7:24, √51). To my knowledge none of this research has been published, as the research is incomplete and still in progress. There are other books which have appeared in the past which are related to this subject, but apparently none pursue the study with the mathematical consistency and rigor of Mr. Hoyer's work. The common flaw underlying many studies of this subject appears to be the arbitrary selection of evidence. Given a large enough mass of raw data, one could find many amazing "patterns" and combinations if one looked long enough, and devised enough ways of finding them. The common regard for thirteen as an "unlucky" number is based upon this flaw, for instances are gathered which favor the hypothesis, but those that do not are ignored. For the spiritual significance of this number in the Bible see Ge 14:4, where at its first mention it is associated with rebellion.

Another flaw which may be present in the work of Del Washburn and Jerry Lucas (in their work titled Theomatics), is their rather cavalier attitude toward Greek grammar, particularly in their conceptual understanding of the use and non-use of the Greek article. They state "There is not a Greek scholar or theologian alive that can prove that the definite Greek article has any meaning (interpretive significance) whatsoever" (Theomatics, p. 340). While it must be candidly admitted that the use and non-use of the Greek article is not fully understood, my years of study of American English linguistics lead me to confidently affirm that our knowledge and understanding of English grammar is no better. Contemporary scholars are not in complete agreement as to the significance of the Greek article in some of its uses (D. A. Carson in Exegetical Fallacies, p. 84, criticizes R. H. Lenski as "notoriously unreliable" when Lenski attempts to distinguish articular nomos to represent Mosaic law, anarthrous nomos to represent the principle of law; see my related notes on Ro 4:15 and Ga 3:10; see Boyce W. Blackwelder, Light from the Greek New Testament, p. 148, where he has a fine study of the issue, "The Article and 'Law.'" For a related scholarly study, see Arthur Wakefield Slaten, Qualitative Nouns in the Pauline Epistles and Their Translation in the Revised Version, particularly pages 35-40. The authors of Theomatics have misquoted Dana and Mantey. They cite in quotation marks as from Dana and Mantey "in rare cases it is possible that the writer employed the article at random" (Theomatics, p. 341), whereas Dana and Mantey actually wrote "It is precarious to suppose in any instance that a writer is employing an idiom at random, though in rare cases this is possibly true" (Manual Grammar, p. 143). Lucas and Washburn point to William Webster as "A perfect example of a scholar trying to attach a mystical significance to the article," citing Dana and Mantey's quotation of Webster. Though Dana and Mantey state "This analysis is doubtless more exact and detailed than the facts will support, but it certainly shows admirable discrimination," Lucas and Washburn comment "Webster was hard-pressed to establish a rule and fails to do so" (Theomatics, p. 341). Both Dana and Mantey as well as Lucas and Washburn err in regard to "the facts will support," if they mean to imply that William Webster was unable to adduce satisfactory evidence to support his distinctions, for this fine Cambridge scholar devotes nearly forty lines of index to the uses of the Greek article in his Greek Testament with notes Grammatical and Exegetical, vol. 2, p. 869). My acquaintance with Mr. Hoyer has taught me to respect the advances in Greek scholarship represented by the work of Nigel Turner and others, and not dismiss so quickly the intricacies of Greek grammar as being superfluous or insignificant (See related notes on the Greek article at Mt 27:54. Jn 1:1. See entries under "Nigel Turner" in the index).

In the examples I have cited above of mathematical structure found in the text of the Greek New Testament using the procedures refined by Mr. Hoyer in his lifetime of research on the subject, the mathematical pattern is exact (not based upon "neighbor values" as found in the works of Ivan Panin and Jerry Lucas, though the Lucas volume provides valuable mathematical and statistical justification for ascribing design even if their use be allowed), and is found consistently in the same manner for every passage, so I believe Mr. Hoyer's basic research possesses greater validity than the other approaches alluded to. What has all this to do with ascertaining the meaning of 666? I believe that this number will be found in the manner described, commonly referred to as gematria, and not by the many other approaches esoteric followers of mysticism have devised to find this number, or in contemporary occurrences of this number allegedly found on Social Security checks, computer bar codes, etc., so prevalent in the literature of prophetic sensationalism (2 K 20:11n).

I am well aware that most serious Bible scholars would place these matters of the symbolism of numbers and the alleged mathematical structure of the Greek text in the same class as prophetic sensationalism. Oswald T. Allis has written a booklet titled Bible Numerics, which criticizes the whole subject, particularly the work of Ivan Panin. Allis also authored the article on "Numerics, Bible" in Baker's Dictionary of Theology, edited by Everett F. Harrison, 1960, p. 381. The writings of John J. Davis (Biblical Numerology, 1968; Contemporary Counterfeits, pp. 23-29) are quite critical of this approach. Davis limits his acknowledgment of any symbolic use of number in Scripture to the number seven (Biblical Numerology, p. 116). E. C. Colwell, famous as a Greek scholar, wrote a little book on Bible study which contains some pointed paragraphs against the work of Ivan Panin. Colwell claims such structures as Panin found can be found anywhere, and adduces an example from the opening paragraph of Gone with the Wind (The Study of the Bible, p. 109). I have analyzed the same passage using the procedures Mr. Hoyer adopts for the Greek text of the N.T., only giving mathematical values for the English alphabet in a similar fashion to those given by the Greeks. No mathematical structure is evident. I have also tried numerous verses from the King James Version and other English translations, and have yet to find a single example in English which possesses structure. No doubt one could be found, if enough examples were tested—but I have run out of time. I do not believe the strictures of Allis, Colwell, and Davis, among others, entirely apply to the study as Mr. Hoyer has pursued it, though no doubt there are broader philosophic grounds for objecting to any such study (no matter what evidence might be produced in its support) which would lead them to reject any validity that might be claimed for it. But that noted scholars can be decidedly wrong is evident when one compares the interpretations of Bible prophecy expressed by Allis in his Prophecy and the Church with those of George N. H. Peters in his three volume study, The Theocratic Kingdom of Our Lord Jesus, the Christ. Rather than commit the logical fallacy of appeal to authority, I submit the evidence given in this extensive note (which could easily be extended to book length) to the judgment of the reader. For further study of the number 666 see the fascinating information in David Chilton's commentary on the book of Revelation, The Days of Vengeance, pp. 344-352.

Westcott and Hort read, after some MSS., "stone" here, but such a reading without a modifying word such as "precious" (timion) is impossible, and manifestly an error, as Hoskier, roundly criticizing Hort's defective note on this passage, points out, charging that Hort "caused the Revisers to invent Scripture, as at Re 15:6: 'arrayed with precious stone'" (H. C. Hoskier, Concerning the Genesis of the Versions of the N.T., vol. 1, p. 388). Bruce M. REVELATION 16

The first angel pours out his vial on the earth, and the worshippers of the beast are plagued with a noisome sore, 1, 2; the second, on the sea, which becomes blood, 3; the third, on the rivers and fountains, which also become blood; and the angel of the waters celebrates the justice of God, in thus visiting bloody persecutors, which is confirmed by one from the altar, 4-7. The fourth angel pours his vial on the sun; and men, scorched with fire, blaspheme God, 8, 9; the fifth, on the seat of the beast, with the miseries caused, and the blasphemies excited, 10, 11. The sixth angel pours his vial on the Euphrates, to prepare the way of eastern kings, 12. Three unclean frogs, from the mouth of the beast, stir up kings to war against God, 13, 14. A warning that Christ comes as a thief. Blessed are they that watch, 15. The seventh angel pours his vial into the air, and the last plagues are tremendously finished on Babylon, etc. 16-21.

REVELATION 18

A mighty angel announces the fall of Babylon, and its utter desolation, because of its abominations, 1-3. A voice from heaven calls on the people of God to come out of her, lest they should be involved in her destruction, 4-8. The kings and merchants connected with her lament her fall, 9-19. The apostles and prophets are called to rejoice over it, 20. Her final and total overthrow first signified by a millstone cast into the sea; and then is emphatically described, 21-24.

REVELATION 19

The apostle hears in vision all the servants of God praise him with loud acclamations, 1-6. The marriage of the Lamb, 7-9. John, about to worship the angel, is reproved, and forbidden, 10. Christ and his followers, on white horses, are seen obtaining great and decisive victories, and utterly destroying all opposers, especially the beast and the false prophet and their adherents, who are cast alive into a lake of fire and brimstone, 11-21.

When followed by the accusative case it means merely to do homage or obeisance to another, as from man to man. This shows that divine worship will be actually offered to the Beast (13:4, 4, 15. 16:2. 19:20); though the Accusative case is also used of the worship of the Beast (Re 9:20. 13:8, 12. 14:9, 11. 20:4). In the other passages where proskuneo occurs the case is not shown on account of some other part of speech being used with the verb (E. W. Bullinger, Apocalypse, pp. 594, 595). Mt ◐+*14:33. REVELATION 20

An angel binds Satan, and imprisons him in the abyss, for a thousand years, 1-3. The reign of Christ with his saints commences during the time Satan is bound, until the resurrection of the rest of the dead at the end of the thousand years, 4-6. Satan, being loosed, again deceives the nations, Gog and Magog, and excites terrible war against the saints, 7, 8. The assailants are destroyed by fire from heaven, and Satan cast into hell, 9, 10. Christ raises the rest of the dead to final judgment, with the condemnation and punishment in the lake of fire of all who are not written in the book of life, 11-15.

The first resurrection must not be spiritualized into the new birth experienced in this life by every believer, for such is not called a resurrection in Scripture. "First" is here a term of priority, and the first resurrection includes all the several resurrections of the righteous dead which have occurred, many students having enumerated at least five such resurrections which are included in the "first resurrection" (see related note listing these at Re 7:4). Alford remarks, "As regards the text itself, no legitimate treatment of it will extort what is known as the spiritual interpretation now in fashion. If, in a passage where two resurrections are mentioned, where certain persons lived at the first, and the rest of the dead only at the end of a specified period after that first—if, in such a passage, the first resurrection may be understood to mean spiritual rising with Christ, while the second means literal rising from the grave; then there is an end of significance in language, and Scripture is wiped out as a definite testimony to anything. If the first resurrection is spiritual, then so is the second, which I suppose none will be hardy enough to maintain; but if the second is literal, so is the first, which, in common with the whole primitive church and many of the best modern expositors, I do maintain, and receive as an article of faith and hope" (Cited in Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, p. 291, from Alford, vol. 4, p. 732). REVELATION 21

The new heaven and the new earth, and the inheritance of overcomers, 1-7. Dreadful warning of the second death for unbelievers, 8. The new Jerusalem, descending out of heaven to earth, with a full description thereof, 9-22. The city needs no sun, the glory of God being her light, 23. The redeemed dwell in the presence, light, and glory of God and the Lamb, and the kings of the earth bring their riches unto it, 24-27.

1. a new heaven. ver. 5. Dt ✓11:21. Is ✓65:▸17-19. ✓▸66:22. Ep 1:10. 2 P ✓3:13n. for the first. Most interpreters understand the new heaven and new earth to be postmillennial, as this description succeeds the account of the last judgment. It is necessary, however, in interpreting prophecy to take into account all that the rest of the prophets have written. If this is done, it will be seen that the new heaven and new earth are distinctly revealed to be premillennial in the only other passages which contain the prediction (Is 65:17-19. 66:22. 2 P ✓3:13n). Every student of prophecy knows that there are numerous instances of prophecies given out of their chronological sequence. The order of events must be determined by a careful comparison of all the related Scripture. Many times in Scripture it will be noticed that a succeeding prophecy is really a further explanation, elaboration, and expansion of what has been mentioned on the same topic previously (this, in fact, is the fundamental feature which must be understood to discover the meaning of prophecy, and makes the study of its details by the comparison of Scripture, and a thorough induction of all related evidence, absolutely essential). Just because a prediction is mentioned in a context subsequent to another prediction, does not necessitate a corresponding chronological relationship between them. This feature, common to prophecy and history (✓107. Hysterologia, Ge +10:5), is to be seen in the opening chapters of Genesis, where the account in chapter two is an expansion of what was more briefly given in chapter one. As to this feature being a negation of the evidential value of predictive prophecy, as Scott maintains at this place in his commentary, one need only consider the fact that the many predictions regarding the first advent of Christ are nowhere stated in chronological order, but their evidential value is not diminished by this circumstance. If the contrary view is insisted upon, holding that the first heaven and earth are passed away in a great conflagration which destroys all natural life, and all spiritual life continues in the new heaven and earth after the Millennium, then such a view contradicts the oath bound covenants and the promises of God that Christ will reign personally on this earth for ever upon the throne of David, for the earthly kingdom of God ruled by Christ is to last for ever, not merely one thousand years, and this earth, not some other, is to be our eternal inheritance. REVELATION 22

The river of the water of life, 1. The tree of life, 2-4. The light of the city of God is himself, 5-8. The angel attests these things to be faithful and true, and again forbids John to worship him, 6-9. Christ himself shows the apostle, that the state of men would soon be unchangeably fixed, by his coming to judgment, 10-12. He declares who would enter heaven, and who would be excluded, 13-15. He urgently invites all who are athirst, yea all who are willing, to accept of his salvation, 16, 17. Nothing may be added to the Word of God, nor taken therefrom, 16-19. The apostle desires the speedy advent of Christ; and concludes with a benediction on his readers, 20, 21.

Silence of Scripture, alleged. (1) Allegedly, the Sabbath is not mentioned during the Patriarchal age, but see Ge 29:27, where a reference is made to a week, which necessarily implies a division of time into seven days, the first of which would be a sabbath. See also Ex 16:26n. In Ge 15:10 the manner of making a covenant is described, but is not clearly mentioned again until Je 34:18, though possibly alluded to at Dt 29:12mg and Jsh 9:7. Does such silence indicate the practice did not continue those long ages? Then why and how would Jeremiah mention it—out of the blue? (2) A chief Arian argument against the Trinity is that the word "Trinity" does not occur in the Bible, but this is true of many matters connected with Bible truth. The term "rapture" is not in the Bible either, nor "age of accountability," nor "eternal security." Some other things not named in the Bible in terms with which we speak of them today include shekinah glory, theophany, incarnation, supernatural, battle of armageddon, personality, spiritual Israel, last judgment or general judgment, second coming, legalism, intermediate state, infant baptism, believer's baptism, to follow the Lord in baptism, baptism in or into water, real or ritual water baptism. Watson remarks "So the word Trinity is not to be found in Scripture, but there is there that which is equivalent to it." "Though the word infant baptism is not in Scripture, yet the thing is," Body of Divinity, p. 381. (3) Tithing is often said not to be mentioned in the New Testament, but see Mt 23:23. (4) Infant baptism, but see Ac 16:15n. (5) Mode of water baptism, but see Ro 6:4n and Col 2:12n. (6) Use of musical instruments in New Testament worship, 1 Ch 16:42n; Ep 5:19n. (7) No mention in Scripture is to be found of women receiving the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (8) There is no command or example in the New Testament to baptize adults that come from Christian homes. (9) There is no express command to worship God on Sunday, or to observe Sunday as the Sabbath, but see 1 C +*16:2. (10) The virgin birth is not mentioned in the Gospel of Mark, but neither is Christ's birth mentioned there at all. And so instances could be multiplied, such as the fact that repentance is not mentioned in the Gospel of John, etc. (11) The Gospel of John says nothing about Christ having cast out devils. (12) Only Luke records the raising of the son of the widow of Nain. Only John records the raising of Lazarus. (13) Only John mentions the healing of the man at the pool of Bethesda. (14) Where is it ever in Scripture explicitly stated that Jesus ever laughed or made use of humor? Does that mean that we are not to do so? See on Mt +*6:2n. (15) Where does Paul in his epistles ever refer to the resurrection of the unjust? But see Acts 24:15.

Single mention or alleged obscure source no ground to reject clear Scripture statement. Mt 19:9n. (1) Note the single mention of taking rest outside of the observance of the Sabbath (Mk 6:31). Would this indicate that we must all be "workaholics"? (2) Where is it explicitly stated in Scripture that Jesus ever laughed or made use of humor? But see on Mt 6:2n. (3) The conception of Christ as the antitype of the mercy seat is found only in Ro 3:25. (4) The Old Testament figure of the "Rock" is applied to Christ only at 1 C 10:4. (5) The only instance of the Old Testament figure of "the serpent" applied to Christ is found at Jn 3:14. (6) Only at 1 C 10:2 is the New Testament idea applied to Old Testament history, "baptized into Moses." (7) It has been alleged by some interpreters (though incorrectly) that St. Paul never applies theos as a predicate to Christ. See Ro 9:5n. (8) The institution of the Lord's Supper and the appearances of the risen Christ appear in the whole of Paul's epistles only once each. (9) The Holy Spirit is mentioned as being eternal only once (He 9:14). (10) Only in one passage, in an allegedly very obscure book, does Scripture state that there will be a Millennium (Re 20:6), though certainly there the assertion is very clear and unequivocal, and is repeated several times.
