Notes to the Reader

The following explanatory notes are intended to help readers get the full measure of usefulness from the Concise Dictionary of World History.

- The two types of entries. This dictionary includes both textual entries and chronologies. Textual entries give essential information about a particular topic. Chronologies cover selected broad topics, such as countries and major wars. Both kinds of entries are positioned alphabetically under the topic name.

  The two types of entries complement each other and make it possible for the reader to locate many kinds of information by name or by date. Items listed in chronologies tend to be short, without the details about specific events already covered in textual entries. For instance, a reader who has turned to the chronology for the United States, and who wants to know more about the War of 1812, will find full details in the textual entry for that war. Conversely, the reader who has looked up the textual entry for the Stamp Act can consult the United States chronology to see how the Act fits in with the other major events leading up to the American Revolution.
- Cross-references. In any given entry, readers are directed by cross-references to other entries that have a significant amount of amplifying information. In most cases (q.v.) is used after the name of an important related entry where more information can be found. At times, See also is used as well. However, so many entries are interrelated (and therefore have some sort of amplifying information) that if all cross-references had been noted, the text of the book would have bristled with them. To avoid this problem, an effort was made in writing entries to use specific names of events, people, etc., as they appear in this dictionary. Thus, if readers come across an unfamiliar name, they will be able to turn to the entry under that name for more information.

  In the case of biographical names, an additional aid to the reader has been provided. Whenever a person's first initial and last name are given in an entry, it means the dictionary contains a separate entry for that individual. A first name given in full, along with the last name, indicates there is no other separate entry.
- Variant names. A special effort has been made to include variant spellings of names, alternate names, and pseudonyms. These variants appear inside angle brackets—⟨ ⟩—after the boldfaced entry name and will be helpful to readers, should they have occasion to do further research on the topic. Other sources may list information under one of the variant forms, and in such cases it is necessary to know what they are. On the other hand, the reader may have or remember only a variant form of a name when turning to this dictionary; for this situation, cross-references to the main entry itself have been provided for each variant name.

Preface

The Concise Dictionary of World History is a new and comprehensive basic reference for world history, complete in one volume. It is both a convenient sourcebook and a guide to a vast accumulation of facts, including thousands of people, places, events, and other items of historical import. Indeed, the amount of information contained in this dictionary is staggering, and ranges across the entire course of recorded human history. In all, there are some 10,000 alphabetically arranged entries, plus 7,000 chronologically arranged items, covering world history from the beginnings of civilization to the present day. This broad scope, and the straightforward alphabetical format, make the dictionary an invaluable reference for any reader with an appreciation of history, for students, for writers and editors, and, of course, for historians and other scholars.

The prime consideration in organizing this dictionary was to provide maximum accessibility to specific bits of historical information. Other sources, to one degree or another, may contain related information. For example, a reader in search of a certain fact or date might consult a multivolume encyclopedia, a chronology, or a commentary on the history of a country or of a period. But all too often readers are forced to resort to an index to find the particular information they want; then, after skimming a page or two of text, they may find nothing more than a passing mention.

The problem of ready access to historical information for reference uses provided the idea for this book: to create an index to world history. Thus, the Concise Dictionary of World History is a compilation of names and terms in world history arranged in alphabetical order, with significant information relating to each entry name given immediately after it. The entries focus on the significant historical details connected with the entry name. This "index" approach has made it possible to cover a very wide range of names and terms in a single, compact volume.

In addition, there are chronologies for selected broad topics (major countries, major wars, and other types of entries) that are located alphabetically by entry name. Items in a chronology contain the name of an event or a person, a brief explanatory note, and the related date.

The chronologies serve two purposes. First, they provide invaluable cross-references to alphabetically arranged textual entries. Many of the names of events and people that are treated in textual entries appear in the chronologies. Thus, for example, readers who want to look up an event that occurred in French history during the nineteenth century, but who cannot remember the name of the event, have only to refer to the appropriate section of the chronology for France. And then, after locating the name, they can turn to the textual entry for further information.

Second, the chronologies also provide an element of continuity by placing specific events within the larger framework of a country's history or, in the case of a battle, within the war. Further, the chronologies cover historically significant events that do not have names, such as important elections, changes in government, or acquisition of new territories by a country.

The Concise Dictionary of World History does focus on the political history of the world's great nations and ancient states. But the object was, as nearly as possible, to bring together in a single volume all types of information related to the study and appreciation of history, and the scope extends well beyond the province of political history to the arts, religion, science, and other areas. Readers will find geographical entries helpful, especially those for ancient places and historic regions. The many biographical entries on literary figures, artists, scientists, religious and biblical figures, social reformers, and others identify important individuals and their major contributions. Religion, a major force in shaping both society and history, is covered in numerous entries on religious groups and movements. Other entries cover major social, intellectual, and artistic movements. In addition, the Concise Dictionary of World History offers a potpourri of other useful reference information, including definitions of historical terms, entries for major buildings and monuments, and even a selection of mythical and legendary figures.

The Concise Dictionary of World History was compiled from a wide range of reference works and other sources, including general encyclopedias, historical references, biographical dictionaries, geographical dictionaries, and commentaries on world history, national history, and historical periods. In most cases at least three sources were used in compiling each entry, and the material from these sources was cross-checked to insure both accuracy and completeness. Disagreements among sources arose, to be sure, and considerable time was spent in resolving these differences. In a number of cases, areas of general uncertainty or major disagreement were noted, but it was not possible to dwell on questions of debate or interpretation among historians.

Compiling this dictionary was a long and demanding process, necessarily involving many people. Each one deserves a special measure of thanks for his or her contribution and concern for doing the best job possible. Those who were involved directly in preparing the manuscript are listed on the staff page. The staff at Macmillan also deserves recognition for the work they did in bringing a large and unwieldy manuscript through production to this handsome, finished book. Charles Levine, director of General Reference Books, handled the inevitable problems of a project of this size with aplomb and good humor. His able and efficient assistant, Glady Villegas, helped keep things running smoothly. Copy editing supervisor Lorraine Steurer and her assistant Jane Low, and copy editors Louise and Edward Lindemann, Mary Donchez, Dominick Anfuso, and Felice Sabbagh did a fine job of weeding out inconsistencies of style and giving the manuscript a final polish. Proofreader Lorraine Veach did an admirable job of reading and correcting typographical errors in the mass of galleys that made up this book.

Finally, I want to thank the Macmillan Publishing Company for giving me the opportunity to compile this new reference for world history.

Abano, Pietro d' 1250?–1316? Italian doctor and philosopher. Abano sought to reconcile Arabian medical theory and Greek philosophy in his Conciliator differentiarium. Though he established Padua as a center for medical study, he was twice denounced by the Inquisition.

Abbadides ⟨Abbadids⟩ Arab Muslim dynasty that briefly ruled (1023–91) Seville, Spain. They were in power from the collapse of the caliphate of Córdoba to the occupation of Seville by the Almoravides.

Abbadids See Abbadides

Abbas I ⟨Abbas the Great⟩ 1557–1628? Shah of Persia (1587–1628). He defeated the Uzbeks and Turks, regained Persian territory, and established Isfahan as Persia's capital. Under his reign, the arts, public works, and trade flourished.

Abbas II ⟨Abbas Hilmi Pasha⟩ 1874–1944. Last Egyptian khedive (1892–1914), successor to his father, Tewfik Pasha. He unsuccessfully opposed British control of Egypt and was deposed at the beginning of WW I, when Britain made Egypt a protectorate.

Abbas, Ferhat 1899–. Algerian statesman and nationalist movement leader. He was the first president of the Algerian provisional government (1958) and president of the Constituent Assembly when Algeria gained independence from France (1962–63).

Abbas Hilmi Pasha See Abbas II

Abbasid ⟨Abbaside⟩ ⟨Abbasside⟩ Dynasty of Muslim caliphs who ruled the Empire of the Caliphate (750–1258), successors to the Umayyad caliphs (q.v.). The line was established (750) when Abu Muslim revolted and defeated the last Umayyad caliph, Marwan II (d. 750). During the reign of the 37 Abbasid caliphs, the capital was moved from Damascus to Baghdad. The caliphs' real power declined, the empire slowly disintegrated into petty kingdoms, and finally fell to the Mongols (1258). The caliphate was subsequently removed to Egypt. (See also Caliphate, Empire of.) Notable Abbasid caliphs included:

ABU-AL-ABBAS	750–754
AL-MANSUR	754–775
HARUN AL-RASHID	786–809
AL-MAMUN	813–833

abbey Usually a self-contained religious community of monks or nuns, consisting of several buildings, including a church, living quarters, and work spaces. Important to the development of the Benedictine order (q.v.), abbeys became centers for learning and the arts, as well as worship, in medieval times.

Abbey Theatre Irish theater and theatrical company formed by the Irish National Theatre Society. The society was founded (1902) by J.M. Synge, W.B. Yeats, and others. Since then many leading actors and playwrights have been associated with the theater.

ABC Powers Collective name for Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, which arose from their joint action on Latin American affairs in the early 20th cent.

Abdali Sultanate Former quasi-independent territory, a part of Yemen (southern) since 1967. The sultanate won its freedom from Yemen in 1728 and was ruled independently until 1839. Thereafter, by treaties with the British, it became part of the Aden Protectorate and ultimately of Yemen (southern).

Abd al-Kadir 1807–83. Algerian rebel leader. From 1832 to 1844 he struggled against French rule in Algeria. His army was finally driven into Morocco, was defeated (1844) at Isly, Morocco, and forced to surrender (1847).

Addallah See Abdullah

Abd Allah ⟨Khalifa, the⟩ ⟨Abdullah et Taaisha⟩ 1846–99. Sudanese rebel leader. The successor to Muhammad Ahmed, he led Sudanese independence forces to many victories against Egypt. He was decisively defeated by the British at Omdurman (1898).

Abd al-Malik ⟨Abdul-Malik⟩ *c*646–705. An Umayyad caliph (685–705), successor to his father, Marwan I. He conquered rival caliphs and thus unified Islam. He instituted monetary and postal reforms and made Arabic the official language.

Abd'al-Medjid See Abdul Mejid

Abd-al-Mumin ⟨Abdul-Mumin⟩ 1094?–1163. A Berber Muslim leader, founder of the Almohade Empire (q.v.). A disciple of Almohade leader Muhammad ibn Tumart, he defeated (1147) the Almoravides, established Marrakesh as his capital, and extended his empire through North Africa and Muslim Spain.

Abd-ar-Rahman See Abd-er-Rahman

Abd-el-Krim 1882?–1963. Moorish rebel leader. He successfully fought the French and Spanish in Morocco, only to be defeated by their combined forces (1926).

Abd-er-Rahman ⟨Abdu-r-Rahman⟩ ⟨Abd-ar-Rahman⟩ 1778–1859. Sultan of Morocco and Fez (1822–59). His efforts to expand his influence in Algeria led to defeat in war with France (1844). Activities of Moroccan pirates led to conflict with other European nations.

Abd er-Rahman I ⟨Abd-ar-Rahman I⟩ 731–788. First Umayyad emir of Córdoba (756–788) in Muslim Spain. The only survivor of the Abbasid massacre of his family in 750, he seized power in Córdoba. He later repulsed Charlemagne's invasion at Roncesvalles (778), in defense of his emirate.

Abd er-Rahman III ⟨Abd ar-Rahman⟩ 891–961. Umayyad emir of Córdoba (912–929) in Muslim Spain and its first caliph (929–961). Under his rule the city's military and cultural importance was greatly enhanced.

Abdul-Aziz 1830–76. Ottoman sultan (1861–76). His repudiation (1875) of the interest on loans from European nations led to foreign takeover of Ottoman finances. Revolts and independence movements further shook the Ottoman Empire and he was deposed by Midhat Pasha.

Abdul-Hamid I 1725–89. Ottoman sultan (1774–89), successor to his brother, Mustafa III. During his reign, Ottoman power dwindled through two of the Russo-Turkish Wars (q.v.), which established Russian supremacy in the Crimea.

Abdul-Hamid II 1842–1918. Ottoman sultan (1876–1909), successor to Murad V. His reign saw the continuing decline of the Ottoman Empire, the Russo-Turkish War (1897), and Armenian massacres (1894–96). His despotic rule was curbed (1908) by a revolt of the Young Turks.

Abdullah ⟨Abdallah⟩ 545?–*c*570. Muslim patriarch, father of Muhammad.

Abdullah ⟨Abdullah ibn Hussein⟩ 1882–1951. First king (1946–51) of newly independent Jordan. During the Arab-Israeli War (1948–49), he took the West Bank of the Jordan River and subsequently annexed the territory. He was assassinated (1951).

Abel Biblical son of Adam and Eve, killed by his older brother Cain.

Abelard, Peter ⟨Abailard, ~⟩ ⟨Abeilard, ~⟩ 1079–1142. French theologian and philosopher. A teacher of wide reputation at Notre Dame in Paris, he applied Aristotelian logic to questions of faith. He secretly married a student, Héloïse, and was subsequently mutilated by thugs hired by her angry uncle. Abelard then became a monk at Saint Denis and Héloïse became a nun. Then his Theologica, an analysis of the Trinity, was condemned as heresy (1121), and he was thereafter hounded by charges of heresy.

Abell, Kjeld 1901–61. Danish playwright noted for his innovations in stage technique.

Abensberg-Eckmuhl, Battles of Victory for Napoleon (Apr. 23, 1809) over Austrian forces during the Napoleonic Wars (1803–15). The Austrians, under Archduke Charles Louis (1771–1847), sought to take advantage of Napoleon's difficulties in the Peninsular War to liberate occupied German states. To that end Charles launched (Apr. 10) an attack into Bavaria with a force of nearly 200,000 soldiers, while also calling for a general revolt by German states. He was met by nearly 180,000 allied French troops under Napoleon. In the ensuing battles at Abensberg, Eckmuhl, and Landshut (Apr. 19–23), Napoleon split the Austrian force and compelled it to retreat southward. Though he failed to decisively defeat the Austrians, Napoleon nevertheless prevented a general rebellion of German states.

Abercromby, Sir Ralph 1734–1801. British general. He served in the Seven Years' War (1756–63) and distinguished himself in Holland while commanding a British retreat during the French Revolutionary Wars (1792–1802). He was killed while leading an expedition against the French in Egypt.

Aberdeen, George Hamilton-Gordon, 4th earl of 1784–1860. British statesman who served twice as foreign secretary (1834–35, 1841–46), and as prime minister (1852–55). As foreign secretary, he settled two boundary disputes between the US and Canada by concluding the Webster-Ashburton Treaty (1842) and the Oregon Treaty (1846). As prime minister, he was unable to prevent British involvement in the Crimean War (1853–56).

Aberhart, William 1878–1943. Canadian politician who advocated Social Credit, or cash payments to citizens by the government. He helped to organize the Social Credit party in Alberta and served as Alberta's premier (1935–43), but was unable to implement his programs.

Abiathar Biblical high priest of Israel. He survived the massacre of his family by Doeg, and later was a loyal supporter of David.

Abigail Biblical wife of Nabal and David. She persuaded David not to take vengeance upon Nabal, and, after his death, married David.

Abijah ⟨Abijam⟩ *fl. c*915 BC. Second king of Judah, successor to his father, Rehoboam, and grandson of Solomon. During his brief reign, he warred against Jeroboam I.

abolition Worldwide movement for an end to slavery, and an important issue in US history. Abolition was an outgrowth of the concern for human rights that arose during the Enlightenment of the 18th cent. In Britain, the abolition movement began in the late 18th cent. and brought about laws ending slavery throughout the British Empire by the early 19th cent. British abolitionists, such as W. Wilberforce, first won passage of laws (1807) against the trading of slaves and then, by the Abolition Act of 1833, succeeded in having slavery itself abolished throughout the empire. At about the same time in South America, former Spanish colonies were establishing their independence and, as they did so, abolished slavery within their respective borders.

In the US, however, a system of slavery had become an integral part of the southern plantation economy and abolition was stubbornly resisted by southern states. By 1820, the political debate between antislavery (northern) and proslavery (southern) states had resulted in the Missouri Compromise. This compromise plan sought to keep the number of antislavery and proslavery states (and thus the number of Senate seats) equal. But keeping the balance was difficult at a time when new states were being added to the Union.

The abolitionist movement (as distinct from moderate antislavery elements) began in the North in the 1830s, through the efforts of such men as C. Finney, T. Weld, and W. Garrison. The abolitionists were generally extremists, and, though their firey campaigns were at first unpopular even in the North, they gained strength and spurred the political debate over slavery. By 1850, the doctrine of maintaining an equal number of antislavery and proslavery states had proved unworkable. It was replaced by a new compromise formula called Popular Sovereignty (q.v.) This doctrine was embodied in two bills, the Compromise of 1850 and the Kansas-Nebraska Act (q.v.), and seemed to resolve the issue for a time in the 1850s. But the conflict between extremist abolitionists and southern slaveholders only worsened. Violence erupted in Bleeding Kansas and the Harper's Ferry raid (q.v.) and, finally, the newly formed Republican Party adopted an openly antislavery platform. The election (1860) of A. Lincoln, a Republican and antislavery moderate, provoked southern states into secession and civil war. Though it was not without tremendous cost, the American Civil War (q.v.) finally ended slavery in the US (formally accomplished by the Emancipation Proclamation and the 13th Amendment). By the end of the 19th cent., the spread of antislavery sentiment had resulted in the abolition of slavery in most other parts of the world. Slavery continues to exist in parts of Asia and Africa.

Absalon ⟨Axel⟩ *c*1128–1201. Danish archbishop and statesman. An adviser to Danish kings, he helped establish Denmark's independence from the Holy Roman Empire. He also figured in the introduction of canon law into Denmark and in the founding of Copenhagen.

absolutism Government by authority of the king alone. This form of government was prevalent in Europe from the 15th to 18th cent. It evolved gradually as monarchs overcame limits on their personal power (imposed by the church and the nobility). Absolute monarchies, typified by the rule of French King Louis XIV, were largely brought to an end in Europe by the upheavals of the French Revolution and post-Napoleonic years.

abstract expressionism ⟨New York School⟩ Artistic movement. Developed in New York in the 1940s, it was the first major artistic movement in which Americans played a dominant role. Among the early abstract expressionists were M. Rothko, W. de Kooning, and J. Pollock.

Acadia Former French colony in North America. It included what are now the coastal Canadian provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, as well as parts of Maine. The French founded their first permanent settlement at Port Royal (1605) and, soon after, the territory began passing back and forth between France and England. Following the War of Spanish Succession (1701–14), most of the territory came under permanent English control (by the Peace of Utrecht, 1713). British distrust of the French settlers led to mass resettlement (1755, 1758) in other colonies. The last French possessions in Acadia passed to the English by the Treaty of Paris (1763).

Achaea ⟨Achaia⟩ Historic region of ancient Greece located in the north Peloponnesus. Though Achaea is said to have once extended over most of the Peloponnesus and southeast Thessaly, it was only a small territory in the north from the 6th to 4th cent. BC. During this period, and near the end of Macedonian domination (4th-3d cent. BC), towns of this region formed the Achaean League. Following the Roman conquest of Greece, Achaea was made part of a Roman province (146 BC).

Achaean League Two confederations of Greek cities, the second being regarded as an ancient model of federal government. The first (5th-4th cent. BC) was formed by Achaean towns for defense against pirates. The second (280–146 BC) was originally made up of Achaean cities allied to overthrow Macedonian rulers. By 227 BC other Greek cities, including Athens, had joined the league, and in that year Sparta declared war on the league. The league was forced to give up resistance to Macedonian control in return for help against Sparta. During the Macedonian War, however, the league sided with the Romans and subsequently came to control most of the Peloponnesus. However, the Romans became suspicious of Achaean designs and in 146 BC ended the confederation, creating a Roman province in its place.

Achaemenes See Achaemenidae

Achaemenidae ⟨Achaemenids⟩ Ancient Persian dynasty founded in the 7th cent. BC by King Achaemenes. The line includes the founder of the Persian Empire, Cyrus the Great, and provided kings of the empire during its ascendancy (from 550 BC). The last king of the dynasty was Darius III, killed during the conquest of Persia by Alexander the Great (330 BC).

Acheson, Dean Gooderham 1893–1971. A presidential adviser and US secretary of state (1949–52) influential in implementing the Marshall Plan and in establishing the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He also developed the policy of "containment" of communism.

Achilles Mythical Greek hero, the leading Greek warrior during the Trojan War. His mother had attempted to make him immortal by dipping him in the river Styx, but failed to bathe the heel by which she held him. During the Trojan War, Paris shot Achilles in the heel and killed him (thus, "Achilles' heel").

Achinese War War (1873–1904) between Dutch colonial forces and the Muslim kingdom of Achin in northern Sumatra. By the Sumatra Treaty (1871), the British recognized Dutch hegemony over Sumatra in return for Dutch claims to the Gold Coast, Africa. The Dutch subsequently moved against the Achinese (1873), who had long resisted Dutch control and were actively engaged in piracy. The Dutch defeated the sultan of Achin that year, but local leaders carried on a protracted and costly guerrilla war, which lasted until 1904.

Acre ⟨Akko⟩ City of ancient Palestine, now located in northwest Israel. Founded before 1500 BC, it is mentioned in the Bible and was an important port under the Romans. Conquered by the Arabs (AD 638), it subsequently was held by the crusaders (AD 1104–87, 1191–1291). The Ottoman Turks controlled the city from 1517 to 1918, when it was captured by the British. The Israelis annexed the city (1949) after the Arab-Israeli War (1948).

Acre, Battle of 1. Victory for crusaders (July 12, 1191) during the Third Crusade (1189–92). Acre, defended by Saladin, was forced to surrender after a long siege (1189–91) by Christian forces. English king Richard I massacred nearly 3,000 Muslim prisoners. 2. Muslim victory (May 18, 1291) that marked the end of Christian crusaders' presence in the Holy Land. In April, 1291, Egyptian Mamelukes laid siege (with 160,000 troops) to Acre, then one of the few remaining Christian strongholds. Despite efforts to reinforce the city, it fell, and its surviving defenders were killed. Within a few months, the last of the crusaders had been killed or driven out of the Holy Land.

Acropolis The citadel, or elevated portion, of ancient Greek cities, usually reserved for defensive or religious purposes. The best known acropolis is that of Athens, built during the 5th cent. BC. Its remains are considered one of the architectural treasures of the world and include such famous buildings as the Parthenon and Erechtheum.

Actium, Battle of Decisive naval battle fought (Sept. 2, 31 BC) off the west coast of Greece, in which Octavian defeated Antony and Cleopatra. By his victory, Octavian became sole ruler of the Roman Empire. The battle was brought on by Antony's dalliance with Cleopatra. Though both sides had deployed land and sea forces, Antony engaged Octavian at sea. Routed by Octavian's fleet, Antony and Cleopatra managed to escape and returned to Egypt.

Act of Abjuration Dutch declaration of independence (July 26, 1581). Following years of revolt, the Dutch finally declared their independence from Spain and its Hapsburg king, Philip II. The act listed grievances against Philip and asserted that he had forfeited rights to rule the Dutch United Provinces.

Act of Settlement British act (June 12, 1701) establishing line of succession for the crown. Following the death of the last Stuart heir to the throne, Parliament by this act passed the crown to the House of Hanover (to the granddaughter of James I, Sophia, or her heirs). In addition, the act excluded Catholics from succession and further stipulated that the monarch belong to the Church of England, that he not leave Britain without permission from Parliament, that he not involve Britain in wars to defend his foreign territories, that he not appoint foreigners to government posts, and that he appoint judges for life (or until they were found guilty of misconduct).

Act of Six Articles Series of laws passed by the English Parliament (1539) at the instigation of Henry VIII, concerning the doctrine of the Church of England. The acts upheld transubstantiation, condemned clerical marriage and Communion under both species, and sanctioned private masses and confession. They were repealed in the subsequent reign of Edward VI.

Act of Supremacy Two acts of Parliament that gave the English king supreme authority over the Church of England and thus broke ties with Rome. The first, in 1534, made Henry VIII head of the church in England, and the second, in 1559, vested this authority in Elizabeth I.

Act of Union 1. Act (effective 1536) that united Wales with England. 2. Act (effective May 1, 1707) that united Scotland with England. 3. Act (effective Jan. 1, 1801) that united Great Britain and Ireland. The union with Ireland was dissolved by Anglo-Irish treaty (Dec. 6, 1921), which gave Ireland dominion status and created Northern Ireland as a separate state under British control. 4. British act (effective 1841) that united Upper and Lower Canada. It preceded the British North America Act (q.v.).

Adam Biblical first man, who lived with Eve in the Garden of Eden. He is an important theological figure in the Jewish and Christian faiths. Expelled with Eve from the garden for eating an apple from the tree of knowledge of good and evil, he was said to have lived 930 years and to have fathered Cain, Abel, and other offspring.

Adams, Abigail Smith 1744–1818. Wife of Pres. J. Adams (m. 1764) and mother of Pres. J.Q. Adams. Her letters are a colorful and detailed source of political and social history.

Adams, Brooks 1848–1927. American historian, son of C. F. Adams. He advanced his theory of the growth and decay of civilization according to lines of commerce in The Law of Civilization and Decay. He predicted the supremacy of the US and Russia in world affairs.

Adams, Charles Francis 1807–86. An American diplomat, son of Pres. J.Q. Adams. He played a key role in maintaining England's neutrality during the American Civil War and in negotiating the Alabama Claims (q.v.) with England.

Adams, Henry Brooks 1838–1918. American historian, son of C. F. Adams. His works have earned him a major place in American letters. Among them are: History of the United States of America, Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres, and The Education of Henry Adams.

Adams, James Truslow 1878–1949. American historian. Adams wrote many books on American history including The Founding of New England, which won the Pulitzer Prize (for history) in 1922, and The Adams Family. He was editor of the Dictionary of American History.

Adams, John 1735–1826. 2nd US president (1797–1801), successor to G. Washington, and 1st vice-president (1789–97). A leading Massachusetts patriot and political theorist in the years before independence, he was a delegate to the First and Second Continental Congress, recommended G. Washington as commander of the Continental Army, helped draft the Declaration of Independence, carried out diplomatic missions in Europe, and helped negotiate the Treaty of Paris (1783), which ended the American Revolution. Serving as Washington's vice-president, Adams aligned himself with the Federalists (q.v.), who advocated a strong central government. Adams' term as president saw near war with France, brought about by the American rapprochement with Britain, and a bitter struggle between Federalists and Jeffersonian Republicans. Events during his administration included: the XYZ Affair (1797); the Treaty of 1800 (or Treaty of Mortefontaine, Sept. 30, 1800), which ended the American alliance with France formed in 1778; passage of the Alien and Sedition Acts (1798); the Kentucky and Virginia Resolutions (1798–99); and Fries's Rebellion (1799). Adams was defeated by T. Jefferson in the election of 1800, sometimes also referred to as the Revolution of 1800.

Adams, John Quincy 1767–1848. 6th US president (1825–29), successor to J. Monroe. The son of former Pres. J. Adams, he served in various diplomatic posts from 1794, became a Federalist senator (1803–08), helped negotiate the Treaty of Ghent (1814), and became secretary of state (1817–25) under Pres. J. Monroe. In this last post he was involved in the purchase of Florida from Spain (1819) and was instrumental in formulation of the Monroe Doctrine (1823). Adams won the presidential election of 1824, though the four-way race was decided in the House of Representatives. Outraged Jacksonian Democrats (A. Jackson had won the popular vote) waged a bitter feud with Adams for the next four years and thereby greatly reduced the effectiveness of his administration. He was also involved in a controversy over the American System (q.v.) for protective tariffs, which resulted in passage of the Tariff of Abominations and the rise of the nullification controversy. Adams, defeated by Jackson in 1828, served as a congressman (1831–48) and became an antislavery spokesman.

Adams, Samuel 1722–1803. American statesman during the Revolutionary War era. He led radical opposition to British taxation in the American colonies, played a leading role in the Boston Tea Party, and served in the Continental Congress (1774–81). He signed the Declaration of Independence.

Adonis Beautiful youth in Greek mythology, loved by both Aphrodite and Persephone. On Adonis' death, Zeus decided he should spend part of his time underground with Persephone and part aboveground with Aphrodite. This gave rise to the yearly cycle of plants, with which Adonis is associated.

Adoptionism Christian heresy, similar to Nestorianism. It originated in the 2d and 3d cents. and reappeared in Spain in 782. Adoptionists maintained that Jesus was born human and assumed divinity only after baptism and "adoption" by God. Adoptionist views were also advanced (12th cent.) by P. Abelard.

Adrian I d. 795. Roman Catholic pope (772–795), successor to Stephen IV. He called upon Charlemagne to defeat the Lombards (773), then threatening Rome. Thereafter, the pope maintained a close alliance with Charlemagne, and Charlemagne established a protectorate over papal lands. Adrian confirmed decrees of the Second Council of Nicaea (787).

Adrian IV d. 1159. The only English pope (1154–59), born Nicholas Breakspear, successor to Anastasius IV. He crowned Frederick I (1155) Holy Roman Emperor but later came into conflict with him. Adrian's supposed donation of Ireland to Henry II of England is disputed.

Adrianople ⟨now Edirne⟩ City (pop. 46,000) located in northwest Turkey. It was founded by Emperor Hadrian (AD *c*125) and suffered many conquests because of its strategic location. It was variously conquered by the Visigoths, crusaders, and Ottoman Turks, and figured in the Russo-Turkish Wars (captured from the Turks, 1829, 1878) and Balkan Wars (captured from the Turks, 1813). It was restored to Turkey in 1923. See also events below.

Adrianople, Battle of ⟨Hadrianople, ~⟩ 1. Victory (July 3, AD 323, at Adrianople, now in Turkey) for Constantine I, ruler of the Western Roman Empire, during the Roman Civil Wars. Constantine defeated Licinius, emperor of the East. Roughly 50,000 soldiers were involved on each side and some 20,000 were killed. 2. Major Visigoth victory (Aug. 9, AD 378) over the Romans at Adrianople, now in Turkey. The Visigoths, under their chief, Fritigern, routed a force of 30,000 Romans under Emperor Valens. Valens and 20,000 Romans were killed. Emperor Theodosius I was subsequently forced to come to terms with the Visigoths (382).

Adrianople, Treaty of ⟨Edirne, ~⟩ Treaty (Sept. 14, 1829, at Adrianople, now in Turkey) between Russia and Turkey, ending the Russo-Turkish War (1828–29). By its terms, Russia won possession of territories along the Black Sea (including the mouth of the Danube); the Dardanelles and other Turkish waters were opened to Russian merchant ships; autonomy was recognized for Serbia, Moldavia, and Wallachia; and Greece was granted almost complete independence.

Adullamites British political faction. The Adullamites were Liberals in Parliament who joined with Conservatives (1866) to defeat the Reform Bill of 1866. The bill would have expanded the electorate and thus stirred fears of the evils of democracy among the Adullamites.

Adventists Protestant churches that preach the second coming of Jesus and the formation of his 1,000-year (millennial) kingdom. The origins of the Adventist churches can be traced to the teachings of an American, W. Miller, who preached the coming of the end of the world in 1843. Miller's followers formally adopted (1845) their belief in the second coming of Christ, and in subsequent years organized various Adventist sects. The largest, the Seventh-Day Adventists, was formed officially in 1863 and is dedicated to missionary work.

He is known to have fought at the battles of Marathon and Salamis (490, 480 BC), and later won a prize for his play The Persians (*c*484). Thereafter, he gained a wide reputation and made many important innovations in Greek theater, including the introduction of a second actor and the use of scenery and costumes. Among his other extant works are Seven Against Thebes, Prometheus Bound, and the great Oresteia trilogy (Agamemnon, The Choëphoroe, and The Eumenides).

Aesculapius See Asclepius

Aesop fl. 6th cent. BC. Famous Greek fable writer and possibly only a legendary figure. Fables attributed to him include The Fox and the Grapes and The Hare and the Tortoise. His fables are noted for their wit and moral instruction.

aesthetics ⟨esthetics⟩ In philosophy, the study of the nature of beauty in works of art. Ancient Greek philosophers, such as Plato and Aristotle, were concerned with the nature of art and beauty. But aesthetics as a distinct study began about the 15th cent. AD, when art evolved from a craft into a profession. Two basic positions on the nature of beauty are: the objective view, in which beauty is inherent in the work; and the subjective view, in which beauty is a matter of pleasing the individual observer.

Aetolia Ancient region of west central Greece. Its major cities included Calydon and Thermum, and it became important in Greek history with formation of the Aetolian League (q.v.). It became a Roman possession after the league had collapsed (189 BC).

Aetolian League Confederation of cities in ancient Greece, similar in nature to the Achaean League. Organized by Aetolian cities in 4th cent. BC, it resisted Macedonian conquest late in that century. Then, as an ally of Macedonia (280 BC), the league extended its control over central Greece, including Boeotia. Attacks on the Achaean League (220 BC) brought war with Macedonia and defeat of the Aetolians by the Macedonians. The league next sided with the Romans against Macedonia (200–197). A dispute with the victorious Romans, however, led to war (192) and final defeat of the league (189) by the Romans.

Affair of the Diamond Necklace Famous scandal (1785–86) in the court of French king Louis XVI that helped precipitate the French Revolution. A prominent French nobleman, Cardinal de Rohan (1734–1803), was tricked by a young adventuress into believing that Queen Marie Antoinette wanted to purchase an expensive diamond necklace secretly. Hoping to curry favor with the queen, Cardinal de Rohan purchased the necklace on credit and gave it to the adventuress. The scandal broke when the jeweler attempted to collect. The cardinal was eventually acquitted, the adventuress escaped, and the king and queen were thoroughly disgraced by the incident.

Affair of the Spanish Marriages A political affair surrounding the marriages (1846) of Spanish queen Isabella II (to her cousin Francisco de Asís [1822–1902], duke of Cadiz) and of Isabella's sister Luisa Fernanda (to Antoine, duke of Montpensier [1824–90], son of French Bourbon king Louis-Philippe). The marriages violated agreements (1843, 1845) between England and France that Isabella would marry within the Neapolitan and Spanish branches of the Bourbon house and that her sister would not marry a French prince until after Isabella had married and borne children. The matches were a result of Spanish distrust of British intentions in Spain, notably about possible support of the Progresistas, who sought to reinstate the Constitution of 1812. The affair was protested by British viscount H. Palmerston, who declared them contrary to provisions of the Treaty of Utrecht. The marriages caused a serious breach in British-French relations.

Afghanistan Republic located in south central Asia. Afghanistan is strategically located on the main route to India and has thus been invaded and conquered many times. Great Britain and Russia vied for control of the region in the 19th cent., with Britain gaining the advantage until 1919, when its weakening colonial position in Asia led to Afghan independence. In 1978, a Communist government was established by a coup d'état and thus fostered close ties with the Soviets. In the late 1970s, the Soviets invaded Afghanistan, ostensibly to support the government. The Soviet occupation led to a prolonged guerrilla war by Afghan rebels. Key dates in the history of Afghanistan include:

3D CENT. BC–7TH CENT. AD Afghanistan came under control of various rulers, including the Kusana and Sassanidae.

Agincourt, Battle of Important English victory over the French (Oct. 25, 1415), at Agincourt, France) during the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). English king Henry V, claiming the French throne, had invaded France and, after some fighting, decided to withdraw to Calais. His force of 14,000 lightly equipped archers was intercepted by the French constable Charles d'Albret and 50,000 heavily armored soldiers. Bogged down by a muddy battlefield, the French became easy targets for the archers. Losses were 5,000 French to 200 Englishmen. Henry went on to Calais, but the battle opened the way for later English conquests in France.

Agis I *c*11th cent. BC. King of Sparta and, according to legend, founder of the Agiad dynasty. The Agiad line was one of two (with the Eurypontids) important dynasties of Spartan kings.

Agis II *d. c*399 BC. King of Sparta (*c*427–399 BC). Agis commanded the Spartan army during the Peloponnesian War (431–404 BC) and won a major victory against Argos at the Battle of Mantinea (418 BC).

Agis IV *d. c*240 BC. Spartan king (*c*244–240 BC). He attempted to strengthen Sparta through several unsuccessful reforms, for which he was tried and executed.

agnosticism Belief that one can never prove or disprove the existence of God. It is distinct from atheism, which rejects the existence of God. The term "agnostic" was coined (1869) by T.H. Huxley and implies a skepticism of man's ability to know the true nature of the world. "Agnostic" can also be used in a nonreligious sense. Among proponents of forms of agnosticism were H. Spencer, A. Comte, and I. Kant.

agrarian laws Ancient Roman laws to regulate land ownership and ensure just distribution of the considerable public lands that came into Roman hands by conquest. In 367 BC C. Licinius attempted to limit the holdings of any single owner. This law was a dead letter by the time T. and G. Gracchus sought to allow greater plebeian ownership (133–121 BC). The edict of Domitian (AD 82), confirming existing land titles, marked the end of efforts at just distribution of land.

Agrarian party ⟨now Centre party⟩ Finnish political party. This party was founded (1866) by Count Arvid Posse (1820–1901) to demand new methods of taxation and military quartering.

Agrarian Reform Act ⟨Stolypin Land Reform⟩ Reform measures allowing individual Russian peasant families to own land that formerly belonged to peasant communes (mirs). Decreed by Prime Minister P. Stolypin (Nov. 22, 1906) and confirmed and expanded by the Duma (1910–11), they were designed to create an independent, landowning peasantry that would support the czarist autocracy.

Alabama State in the US South, the 22d state. Alabama was first explored by the Spanish under H. de Soto (1540) and first permanently settled by the French at Mobile (1711). The region passed to Britain (1763) and then was divided between Spain and the newly created US (1783). The rest of the territory was obtained as part of the Louisiana Purchase (1803). Alabama became a state (1819) and seceded (1861) during the Civil War. Slavery was abolished in 1865. The present state constitution was adopted in 1901.

Alabama Claims US government claims against Britain. The damages claimed were caused by Confederate cruisers, notably the Alabama, that had been built during the American Civil War in neutral Britain. After the Civil War, the US sought payment for damages from Britain for direct and indirect losses caused by the ships. By the Treaty of Washington (1871), the British submitted to arbitration. The tribunal disallowed claims for indirect losses but awarded the US $15.5 million for direct losses (1872). The settlement helped define the role of a neutral.

Alabama Platform Plan advanced by southern political leader W. Yancey (1848), in opposition to the Wilmot Proviso. It called for protection of slavery in lands ceded to the US by Mexico and would have forbidden territorial legislatures to outlaw slavery.

Albertus Magnus, Saint ⟨Albert the Great, Saint⟩ *c*1200–1280. Scholastic theologian and philosopher. He helped introduce the works of Aristotle in Europe, promoted the study of natural science, and advanced the use of the scientific method. One of his students was Thomas Aquinas.

Albigenses Christian heretical sect that flourished (12th–13th cents.) in southern France. Named for the city of Albi, the Albigenses were predominantly Cathari (q.v.). Extreme ascetics, they believed in the Manichaean dualism of good and evil. The Albigensian Crusade was mounted against them (1208). Following this, the medieval Inquisition was instituted (1233) against them, and with it began a century-long persecution that finally eliminated the sect.

Albigensian Crusade Crusade (1208–13) against heretics in southern France. The crusade was largely directed against the Cathari and Waldenses, reformist sects that had arisen in opposition to church corruption and that then enjoyed the favor of noblemen in southern France. Pope Innocent III proclaimed the crusade (1208), which amounted to an invasion of southern France by the barons of northern France under S. Montfort. In 1209 Montfort massacred some 20,000 inhabitants of Beziers and, by his victory (1213) at Muret, broke the power of the heretics. Fighting continued, however, and Monfort died (1218) at the siege of Toulouse. The conquest was completed by French king Louis IX, who, by the Peace of Paris (1229), acquired Toulouse. The subsequent medieval Inquisition eliminated heretical sects in southern France by the 14th cent.

Alexander ⟨Alexander of Battenberg⟩ 1857–93. Prince of Bulgaria (1879–86). With czarist support, he became first prince of the new autonomous state of Bulgaria. His annexation of Eastern Rumelia led to war with Serbia (1885) and to his forced abdication in 1886.

Alexander 1888–1934. Yugoslavian king (1921–34). He played a major role in unifying Yugoslavia at the end of WW I. The regent of Serbia, he created an unstable kingdom (1918) embracing the rival ethnic groups of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. A constitutional monarchy was established in 1921, but increasing disorders forced him to abolish it (1929) in favor of a dictatorship. He instituted a new constitution in 1931. Alexander was assassinated by a Croatian terrorist in 1934.

Alexander 1876–1903. King of Serbia (1889–1903), successor to his father, Milan. His authoritarianism, his suspension (1894) of the liberal constitution, and his scandalous marriage led to his assassination by the military.

Alexander 1893–1920. King of Greece (1917–20), successor to his father, Constantine I, when the latter was forced to abdicate by the Allies during WW I. The government was actually run by Venizelos, his premier.

Alexander I 1078?–1124. King of Scotland (1107–24), successor to his brother Edgar. He ruled the northern part of Scotland, while his brother David ruled the south. He suppressed a clan rebellion (1115).

Alexander I 1777–1825. Russian czar (1801–25), successor to his father, Paul I. After defeats at Austerlitz and Friedland, he submitted to Napoleon's Continental System, under the Treaty of Tilsit (1807). But he later repulsed Napoleon's invasion of Russia (1812), marched into Paris (1814), and, by his defeat of Napoleon, became one of the most important rulers in Europe. In his early years, he instituted many liberal reforms. After 1814, however, he was influenced by the Pietism of J. Krüdener. This led to his formation of the Holy Alliance and support for conservative and reactionary policies, especially those of C. Metternich.

Alexander II 1818–81. Russian czar (1855–81), successor to his father, Nicholas I. Shortly after his accession, he negotiated an end to the Crimean War (1853–56) and instituted many liberal reforms, including the Edict of Emancipation (1861) and the limited local government of the Zemstvo (q.v.). His reforms, however, failed to prevent the rise of the populist Narodniki movement in the 1860s, and his attempts to suppress it led to his assassination. During his reign he brutally suppressed a Polish rebellion (1863), formed the Three Emperors' League, extended Russian territories in central Asia, and engaged in the Russo-Turkish Wars (1877–78).

Alexander III See Alexander the Great

Alexander III ⟨Orlando Bandinelli⟩ d. 1181. Italian-born pope (1159–81), successor to Adrian IV. With help from the Lombard League, he managed to assert papal authority over Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I and forced him to sign the Treaty of Vienna (1177). He also opposed Henry II of England, canonized Thomas à Becket, and received Henry's penance for Becket's murder.

Alexander III 1241–86. King of Scotland (1249–86), successor to his father, Alexander II (1198–1249). He married a daughter of English king Henry III and resisted Henry's attempt to control Scotland. During his reign, Scotland finally won from Norway the permanent control of the Hebrides and the Isle of Man (1266).

Alexander III 1845–94. Russian czar (1881–94), successor to his father, Alexander II. He became czar after his father's assassination and instituted reactionary policies that included an increase in police repression and censorship. The power of the Zemstvos was sharply curtailed, national minorities were forced to undergo Russification, and religious minorities were persecuted.

Alexander VI 1431?–1503. Spanish-born pope (1492–1503), successor to Innocent VIII, and a symbol of papal corruption during the Renaissance. A member of the Borgia family, he is said to have won election to the papacy through bribery. As pope, he proclaimed division of Spanish and Portuguese possessions in the New World (1493) (see Treaty of Tordesillas), successfully resisted an invasion of Italy by French king Charles VIII (1494), ordered the execution of G. Savonarola (1498), and began a censorship of books (1501). Throughout his reign he pursued the aggrandizement of his family's fortunes.

Alexander Balas d. 145 BC. King of Syria (150–145 BC), who came to power by slaying Demetrius I, the Seleucid king. He named Jonathan Maccabaeus governor of Palestine and was later killed in battle by Demetrius II, son of Demetrius I.

Alexander, Harold Rupert Leofric George, 1st Earl of Tunis 1891–1969. British field marshal who directed the British evacuation at Dunkirk (1940) during WW II. He subsequently led British forces in Burma, North Africa, Sicily, and southern Italy, and was made commander in chief of British Mediterranean forces in 1944.

Alexander Nevsky *c*1220–63. Russian prince and military hero. He defeated the Swedes at the Battle of the Neva (1240) and the Teutonic Knights at the Battle of Lake Peipus (1242).

Alexander of Battenberg See Alexander

Alexander of Hales d. 1245. English theologian and philosopher. A Franciscan, he taught at the University of Paris. His teachings contained elements of Aristotle's philosophy and influenced Franciscan scholasticism.

Alexander Severus AD 208?–235. Roman emperor (AD 222–235), successor to his cousin Heliogabalus. Considered a just ruler, he stopped persecution of the Christians during his reign and successfully fought against Persia (232).

Alexander the Great ⟨Alexander III⟩ 356–323 BC. Macedonian king (336–323 BC), successor to his father, Philip II. One of the world's greatest conquerors, he created a vast empire extending from Greece to northern India, and, by his conquests, helped spread Greek civilization throughout the ancient world. Soon after becoming king, Alexander crushed revolts in Thrace, Illyria, and Thebes. His rule in Greece thus established, he began his epic military expedition (334–324 BC) with some 37,000 soldiers and the initial objective of conquering Persia. He met and defeated the Persians at the battles of Granicus (334) and Issus ([in Syria] 333), laid siege to and finally took Tyre (332) to complete conquest of Phoenicia, marched unopposed into Egypt (332–331), and there founded the great city of Alexandria (332). He again defeated the Persians at the Battle of Gaugamela (331), sent Persian king Darius III into flight, and sacked the Persian capital of Persepolis (331). He continued eastward to Media (330) and central Asia, where he conquered the Scythians (329). Despite open discontent in his army (over his acceptance of Persian manners), Alexander invaded India

(327). After the Battle of Hydaspes (326), he took control of Punjab and, his men unwilling to go farther, returned to Persia (324). He subsequently consolidated Macedonian control of his conquests and attempted to integrate Greeks and Persians by, among other things, ordering his soldiers to marry Persian women. The hero of these great conquests, and such legendary feats as cutting the Gordian Knot (q.v.), died shortly after a prolonged banquet in 323. (See also Macedonia.)

Alexandra 1844–1925. Queen consort of English king Edward VII (m. 1863) and mother of King George V.

Alexandra Feodorovna 1872–1918. Last czarina of Russia, consort of Nicholas II (1894–1918). Her unfailing loyalty to the hated Rasputin and her disastrous meddlings in politics helped bring about the Russian Revolution. A Hessian princess, she came under Rasputin's sway when he seemed able to control her son's hemophilia. While Nicholas was at the front in WW I, she took control of the government (1915) and began replacing government ministers with favorites of Rasputin. This discredited the government and opened the way for the October Revolution (1917). She was shot, with Nicholas and her children, by revolutionaries.

Alexandria Egypt's second largest city (pop. 2,318,700) and a major center for cotton and other manufactures and exports. Founded in 332 BC by Alexander the Great, it became one of the largest and greatest cities of antiquity. The Ptolemies (q.v.) ruled their Egyptian-based empire from there (323–30 BC), and it became a principal center of both Hellenistic and Jewish culture. It attracted scholars such as Aristarchus of Samothrace, who collated Homer's texts; the geometer Euclid; and the astronomer Claudius Ptolemy, originator of the Ptolemaic System (q.v.). The Greek Septuagint (Old Testament) was translated there. Alexandria boasted antiquity's best libraries, as well as the tall lighthouse considered one of the Seven Wonders of the World. The city was captured by J. Caesar (47 BC) and incorporated into the Roman Empire by Augustus (30 BC). In Christian times it was the seat of one of the four major patriarchates, and great churchmen such as Saint Athanasius were bishops there. Alexandria declined after Arab conquerers moved Egypt's capital to Cairo (AD 969). The city was captured in modern times by Napoleon (1798), then by the British (1801), and afterward began to regain its former importance.

Alexandrian School Egyptian Christian school. Founded at Alexandria in the mid-2d cent. AD, it was the first Christian institution of higher learning and philosophy. It sought to reconcile Christianity with Greek culture and to advance orthodox Christian teachings.

Alexis 1629–76. Russian czar (1645–76), successor to his father, Michael. Alexis established a legal code that recognized serfdom, warred against Poland (1654–67) and Sweden (1656–61) (see Northern War), acquired part of the Ukraine and Kiev, approved the schismatic reforms of Nikon (q.v.), and put down S. Razin's peasant revolt (1670–71).

Alexius I Comnenus 1048–1118. Byzantine emperor (1081–1118), successor to Nicephorus III by his overthrow, and first of the Comnenian rulers. Alexius restored the crumbling Byzantine empire that, when he took power, was threatened by invasions and internal dissent. He defended against Norman invasions (1081–85), contained the Seljuk Turks, repulsed invasions by a tribe of nomadic Turks (1091), and put down rebellions in Crete and Cyprus. His request for aid from the West against the Turks resulted in proclamation of the First Crusade (1096).

Alexius III Angelus d. 1210. Byzantine emperor (1195–1203) who deposed his brother Isaac II. Following the overthrow, crusaders (see Fourth Crusade) attacked the Byzantine capital of Constantinople (1203) and reinstated Isaac II. Isaac's son, Alexius IV, was installed as coemperor, and Alexius III died in exile.

Alexius V d. 1204. Byzantine emperor (1204), son-in-law of Alexius III Angelus. He overthrew coemperors Isaac II and Alexius IV. The army of the Fourth Crusade (q.v.) deposed him, sacked Constantinople (1204), and established the Latin kingdom of Constantinople (q.v.).

Alfonsine Tables ⟨Alphonsine ~⟩ Astronomical data on the planets. This updating of Ptolemy's work was commissioned by Alfonso X and was completed in 1252. T. Brahe later proved them incorrect.

Alfonso I 693?–757. Christian king of Asturias (739–757). When the Berbers rebelled (741) in Muslim Spain, Alfonso was able to conquer Galicia, León, and Santander.

Alfonso I ⟨~ the Battler⟩ d. 1134. Christian king of Aragon and Navarre (1104–34). Noted for warring against the Moors, he captured Saragossa (1118) and led a raid into Andalusia (1125). He encouraged Christian settlement in his kingdom.

Alfonso I ⟨~ Henriques⟩ 1111?–1185. First king of Portugal (1139–85). The son of Henry of Burgundy, Count of Portugal, he engaged in wars (1128–39) against the Moors and rulers of León and Castile to establish an independent kingdom. He was crowned after his victory over the Moors at Ourique (July 25, 1139). He continued fighting and captured Lisbon in 1147.

Alfonso II ⟨~ the Fat⟩ 1185–1223. King of Portugal (1211–23), successor to his father, Sancho I. He helped defeat the Moors at Las Navas de Tolosa (1212). He quarreled with the church and was excommunicated by Honorius III.

Alfonso III ⟨~ the Great⟩ 838?–911? Christian king of Asturias (866–911?), who fought numerous battles against the Moors and greatly extended his kingdom.

Alfonso III 1210–79. Portuguese king (1248–79), successor to his brother, Sancho II. He completed the unification of Portugal by driving the Moors from Algarve (1249). He instituted political, financial, and commercial reforms.

Alfonso IV 1291–1357. King of Portugal (1325–57), successor to his father, Diniz. He aided Alfonso XI of Castile in his victory over the Moors at Tarifa (1340). But his approval of the murder of his daughter-in-law, I. Castro, led to a revolt by his son (later Pedro I).

Alfonso V ⟨~ the Noble⟩ 994?–1027. Spanish king of León (999–1027), successor to his father, Bermudo II. Under his reign, the city of León passed from Moorish to Spanish control.

Alfonso V ⟨~ the Magnanimous⟩ 1396–1458. King of Aragon and Sicily (1416–58), successor to his father, Ferdinand I. He conquered Naples and made himself its king in 1442. Thereafter, he held court in Naples and became involved in Italian affairs.

Alfonso V ⟨~ the African⟩ 1432–81. Portuguese king (1438–81), husband of Juana la Beltraneja. He won major victories against the Moors in North Africa but failed to advance his wife's claim to Castile. He was decisively defeated by rival claimants, Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand, at the Battle of Toro (1476).

Alfonso VI 1030–1109. Christian king of León (1065–1109) and Castile (1072–1109). His advances into Muslim territories brought about the takeover of Muslim Spain by the Almoravids. El Cid was active during Alfonso's reign.

Alfonso VI 1643–83. Portuguese king (1656–83), successor to his father, John IV. Mentally impaired, he let Count Castelho Melhor rule. He was ousted by his wife and his brother, later Peter (Pedro) II. During Alfonso's reign, Spain recognized (1668) Portugal's independence.

Alfonso VII 1104–57. King of León and Castile (1126–57). He warred frequently against the Muslims but was unable to prevent Alfonso I from establishing an independent Portugal (1139).

Alfonso VIII ⟨~ the Noble⟩ 1155–1214. Spanish king of Castile (1158–1214), successor to his father, Sancho III. In 1195, he was defeated by Muslim Almohades, and Castile was invaded by León and Navarre. He recovered and later led allied Spanish forces to a major victory over the Moors at Las Navas de Tolosa (1212).

Alfonso X ⟨~ the Wise⟩ 1221–84. Spanish king of Castile and León (1252–84), successor to his father, Ferdinand III. He conquered Cádiz and Cartagena from the Moors, sought unsuccessfully to become Holy Roman Emperor (1257–75), and encouraged culture and learning. He promulgated the Siete Partidas, a great compilation of laws.

Alfonso XI ⟨~ the Avenger⟩ 1311–50. Spanish king of Castile and León (1312-50), successor to his father, Ferdinand IV. Made king at age one, he assumed power in 1325. He led the Spanish to victory over the Moors at the Battle of Algeciras, now in Morocco (1344).

Alfonso XII 1857–85. Spanish king (1874–85), son of Isabella II. Forced into exile (1868) by a revolution, he was proclaimed king in 1874. He returned to Spain (1875), restored order, and consolidated the power of the monarchy.

Alfonso XIII 1886–1941. King of Spain (1886–1931), successor to his father, Alfonso XII. His reign was marked by political and social instability. He supported the military coup of Primo de Rivera (1923) and went into exile (1931) with the establishment of the Second Republic.

Algeciras Conference Meeting of European powers (Jan.-Apr., 1906) in Algeciras, Morocco. Germany sought unsuccessfully to reduce French and Spanish influence in Morocco. By the agreement here, France and Spain received increased authority and control of Moroccan financial, commercial, and police affairs.

Alger, Horatio 1834–99. American author of more than 100 books for boys, featuring poor youths who, through hard work, clean living, and a stroke of luck, achieve success. His books were immensely popular in the late 19th cent.

Algeria Republic located in northwest Africa. Its capital is Algiers. Originally inhabited by Berbers, Algeria successively came under control of the Carthaginians, Romans, Byzantines, and Ottoman Turks. By the 17th cent. it was a center of pirate activity (see Barbary States), which continued until the French invaded Algeria and made it a colony. Its Muslim heritage, and rising nationalistic sentiment, contributed to a major struggle in the 1950s between the ruling European colonists and the Muslim majority. It ended with establishment of the Republic of Algeria in 1962. Key dates in the history of Algeria include:

9TH–5TH CENTS. BC Algeria (roughly ancient Numidia) came under domination of Carthage.

AD 396–430 St. Augustine was bishop at Hippo.

AD 429 Algeria devastated by invasion of Vandals from Spain.

6TH CENT. Byzantine Empire established rule over northern Algeria.

7TH CENT. Muslim Caliphate Empire captured region; Berber tribesmen converted to Islam and adopted Arabic language and customs.

10TH CENT. Fatimid Muslim dynasty began its climb to power in northeastern Algeria.

15TH CENT. Spain conquered coastal Algeria; Turkish pirates aided Algerians against the Spanish.

16TH CENT. Turkish pirates, with Ottoman aid, drove out the Spanish; Algeria came under Ottoman rule.

1671 Dey of Algiers became autonomous ruler of Algeria; region became center for piracy and slave trade in the Mediterranean.

1816 Continued acts of piracy led British to bombard Algiers.

1830–37 French invaded Algeria and gained control of coastal Algeria; the Berber leader Abd al-Kadir continued resistance in the country's interior.

1847 Abd al-Kadir forced to surrender to French.

1848 Algeria made French territory; Europeans began large-scale colonial settlement.

1900 Algeria gained self-government in administrative and financial matters; European colonists controlled the government.

1920s–1940s Rise of nationalistic sentiment among discontented Muslims.

1945 Muslim nationalist uprising led to severe repression by French; thousands of Muslims killed.

1947 Statute of Algeria passed by French national assembly, granting greater autonomy to Algerian Muslims; many of its articles were never implemented.

1958 Demonstrations against concessions to Muslims staged by French colonials and military in Algeria; this led to political crisis in France and contributed to C. de Gaulle's return to power.

1962 Accord signed by French government and GPRA, calling for cease-fire and eventual Algerian independence under Muslim majority rule.

1962 Algerians voted (July 1) for independence; France recognized Algeria as an independent state.

1963 A. Ben Bella became president; consolidating power, he began implementing leftist programs.

1965 Ben Bella deposed by Houari Boumédienne, who established a revolutionary council to govern the country.

1971 Boumédienne nationalized French petroleum interests in Algeria.

1974–76 Algeria established closer relations with the US; became a major oil and gas exporter to US.

1980–81 Algeria, as intermediary, played a deciding role in negotiations during the hostage crisis in Iran.

Algiers Algerian capital (pop. 2,200,000) and a major North African port. Founded by Muslims (10th cent.) on the site of a Phoenician city called Icosium, it became important under the Ottoman Turks as a base for the Barbary pirates. Several military expeditions were sent against the city (16th–19th cents.), including an American force under S. Decatur (1815). French conquest of Algeria began there (1830). The city figured in WW II as an Allied headquarters and in the revolt (1958) that ended the French Fourth Republic.

Alhambra Moorish palace and fortress overlooking Granada, Spain, and built during the 13th and 14th cents. The finest example of Moorish architecture in Spain, it was damaged after the Moors were expelled from Spain (1492). Restoration began in 1828.

Ali 600?–661. Fourth Muslim caliph (656–661), successor to Uthman and son-in-law of Muhammad. He was the husband of Fatima, but his right to succeed to the caliphate was disputed. This resulted in the great split between Shiite supporters of Ali and the Sunnite Muslims. A devoted follower of Muhammad, he was challenged after his accession by Muawiya and was murdered by fanatics. (See also Muslim Civil Wars.)

Alien and Sedition Acts Four laws passed (1798) by US Congress. Ostensibly passed to control French aliens at a time when the French revolutionary government was becoming increasingly belligerent, the laws were an attempt by the Federalist party to stifle opposition from Jeffersonian Republicans. The Jeffersonians were sympathetic to the French Revolution and relied heavily on votes of recent immigrants. The alien laws raised to 14 years the residence needed for naturalization, and gave Pres. J. Adams power to arrest and deport aliens. The sedition act forbade criticism of the government. It resulted in the conviction of 10 Republicans and precipitated the Kentucky and Virginia Resolutions.

America Name for the two continents of the Western hemisphere, North America and South America, and used more specifically to refer to the US. The term was coined (1507) by the German teacher Martin Waldseemüller in memory of Amerigo Vespucci.

American Anti-Slavery Society Abolitionist organization founded (1833) by W. Garrison. The group grew rapidly in the North during the 1830s. It split (1839) over Garrison's radical policies, including his denunciation of the Constitution, though local-level groups carried on into the 1850s.

American Bill of Rights See Bill of Rights

American Civil Liberties Union ⟨ACLU⟩ American legal-action group. Founded in 1920, the ACLU has involved itself in controversial law cases over such civil rights as freedom of speech and assembly. Notable cases include the Scopes Trial and Brown vs. Board of Education.

American Civil War Sectional conflict (1861–65) in the US, fought between the southern agricultural states, whose plantation economies were dependent upon Negro slave labor, and the industrial North with its strong antislavery sentiment. Many complex issues contributed to the outbreak of war, but chief among them were the question of slavery, the authority of the federal government, and states' rights. (For events leading up to the war, see UNITED STATES, 1820–60.) The war took some 600,000 lives and caused great destruction and hardship. But it forced an end to slavery and preserved the Union. Key events in the Civil War include:

1860 A. Lincoln elected president (Nov. 6).

1860 South Carolina seceded from the Union (Dec. 20) as a result of Lincoln's election.

1861 Crittenden Compromise, a final attempt at preserving the Union, failed.

1861 Confederates fired on Union supply ship, attempting to relieve Fort Sumter in Charleston (South Carolina) Harbor (Jan. 9); Union ship withdrew.

1861 Mississippi seceded (Jan. 9), followed by Florida (Jan. 10), Alabama (Jan. 11), Georgia (Jan. 19), Louisiana (Jan. 26), and Texas (Feb. 1).

1861 A congress convened (Feb. 4) by representatives of seceding states, at Montgomery, Alabama; created provisional government of Confederate States of America and elected J. Davis its president.

1861 Confederate president Davis called for 20,000 volunteers for the Confederate army (Apr. 8).

1861 Confederate forces under Gen. P. Beauregard fired on Fort Sumter, forcing its surrender and opening hostilities of the Civil War (Apr. 12–14).

1861 Lincoln made a call for 75,000 Union volunteers (Apr. 15) and ordered a blockade of ports of the seceding states (Apr. 19); maintained throughout the war, the blockade seriously hampered but never completely stopped the flow of goods from overseas.

1861 Virginia seceded from the Union (Apr. 17), followed by Arkansas (May 6), North Carolina (May 20), and Tennessee (June 8).

1861 Confederate forces under generals Beauregard and J. Johnston routed the Union army at First Battle of Bull Run (July 21), in northern Virginia.

1861 Bull Run dashed Union hopes for a speedy victory; new Union strategy included continuing the naval blockade of the South, taking control of the Mississippi River (to split the Confederacy), and capturing Richmond, the Confederate capital.

1861 Confederates captured Springfield, Missouri, after winning the Battle of Wilson's Creek (Aug. 10).

1861 Gen. G. McClellan named (Nov.) commander of the Union army; he formed the Army of the Potomac.

1861 Trent Affair involving British steamer stopped (Nov. 8) by Union naval ship; US came to brink of war with Britain over seizure of Confederate envoys.

1862 Union campaign in the West began with fight to take key states of Kentucky and Tennessee; Union advance into Kentucky began with victory at Battle of Mill Springs (Jan. 19); Gen. Grant's forces then captured key Confederate defensive positions of Fort Henry and Fort Donelson (Feb. 6–16); Confederates abandoned Nashville and eventually retreated across Tennessee toward Shiloh.

1862 Legal Tender Act passed for issue of $150 million in greenbacks.

1862 Fight to keep Missouri secure for the Union won at Battle of Elkhorn Tavern, Arkansas (Mar. 7–8), as Union forces continued successful advance; upper Mississippi secured by Union victories at New Madrid (Mar. 13) and Island Number 10 (Apr. 8) in Missouri.

1862 Union ironclad Monitor fought Confederate ironclad Merrimac to a draw at Hampton Roads, Virginia (Mar. 9); engagement proved the value of ironclad warships.

1862 Grant's forces, pursuing the retreating Confederates in southern Tennessee, were badly bloodied but victorious at the Battle of Shiloh (Apr. 6–7); Confederates lost key leader, Gen. A. Johnston, in the battle; Union forces next captured Corinth, northern Mississippi, and forced the Confederates eastward; Memphis, Tennessee, fell to Union armies next (June 6).

1862 In the east, Union's Peninsular Campaign (Apr.–July) to capture the Confederate capital of Richmond, Virginia, proved unsuccessful; Union troops led by Gen. McClellan reached the outskirts of Richmond but were outmaneuvered by Gen. R.E. Lee's Confederate forces: Lee made commander of the Army of Northern Virginia (June); Union forces withdrawn to Washington.

1862 Admiral D. Farragut's Union fleet captured New Orleans (Apr. 28) from the Confederates; this victory capped a series of successful Union naval operations in which strategic points on the Confederate coastline were captured; fall of New Orleans also meant Confederates along Mississippi could be pressured from both north and south.

1862 New Union army advance toward Richmond defeated at second Battle of Bull Run (Aug. 29–30); Lee advanced into Maryland and threatened Washington, D.C., until suffering a bloody defeat at the Battle of Antietam (Sept. 17); Lee retreated into Virginia and, after delays, Union armies engaged him at the Battle of Fredericksburg (Dec. 13); Union forces were badly defeated and went into winter quarters.

1862–63 Vicksburg Campaign in Mississippi (Nov.–July); led by Gen. Grant, Union forces captured last Confederate positions on the Mississippi River and thus cut the Confederacy in two; the victory (July 4) marked a major turning point in the war.

1863 Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation (Jan. 1).

1863 New Union advance in the east, led by Gen. J. Hooker, halted at Battle of Chancellorsville, Virginia (May 2–4); Confederate Gen. Stonewall Jackson fatally wounded; Union troops retreated to Fredericksburg.

1863 Gen. Lee invaded the North, crossing into Pennsylvania (June).

1863 Battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania (July 1–3); Union forces under Gen. G. Meade were victorious in what is considered the decisive battle of the war; Lee forced to withdraw to Virginia.

1863 Draft riots in New York City (July).

1863 In the west, after Grant's victory at Vicksburg (July 4), fighting was centered around Chattanooga, in eastern Tennessee; Union forces took Chattanooga (Sept. 9) but were defeated at the Battle of Chickamauga, Georgia (Sept. 19–20); forced to retreat to Chattanooga, they were besieged by Confederates under Gen. B. Bragg; but Gen. Grant was finally victorious in the Battle of Chattanooga (Nov. 23–25), thus securing Tennessee for the Union and setting the stage for an invasion of Georgia.

1864 Gen. Grant named commander in chief of all Union armies (Mar.); Gen. Sherman made commander in the west; Grant was to attack Lee's army in Virginia while Sherman was to attack Gen. J. Johnston and take Atlanta.

1864 Battle of the Wilderness in Virginia (May 5–6) opened Grant's campaign against Lee; defeated by the Confederates, Grant moved southeastward, where he was again repulsed in bloody fighting at Spotsylvania Courthouse (May 8–21); Grant continued south toward Richmond and again suffered heavy losses at the Battles of Cold Harbor (June 1–June 12).

1864 Atlanta Campaign; led by Gen. Sherman, Union forces invaded Georgia (May 7) and marched for Atlanta; despite delaying tactics of Gen. J. Johnston, Sherman forced the Confederates to give up Atlanta (Sept. 2).

1864 Union troops defeated (June 10) by Confederate raiders at the Battle of Brice's Cross Roads in Mississippi.

1864 Petersburg Campaign begun (June 15) by Gen. Grant; after Cold Harbor, Grant attempted to bypass Lee's army and attack Petersburg, which defended the south approach to Richmond; Lee was barely able to move to defend Petersburg and the battle degenerated to a 10-month siege by Union armies.

1864 Gen. J. Early dispatched (July) by Lee to conduct raids behind Union lines; Early threatened Washington briefly; Union Gen. P. Sheridan was victorious against Early in battles in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, including Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek (Sept. 19–Oct. 19); Early was thereafter forced to withdraw from the strategic Shenandoah Valley.

1864 President Lincoln reelected (Nov.), partly because of Sherman's capture of Atlanta.

1864–65 Sherman's March to the Sea (Nov. 15–Dec. 21); leading 60,000 Union soldiers, Sherman marched southeast across Georgia, laying waste to all in his path; Savannah was taken (Dec. 21); Sherman then turned north, took Columbia, South Carolina (Feb. 17, 1865) and Goldsboro, North Carolina (Mar. 19, 1865).

1865 Thirteenth Amendment, abolishing slavery in the US, passed by Congress (Feb. 1); ratified (Dec.).

1865 Hampton Roads Peace Conference (Feb. 3), unsuccessful attempt to negotiate an end to the war.

1865 Lee made overall Confederate commander (Feb. 6).

1865 Final phase of the Petersburg Campaign; Gen. P. Sheridan defeated Confederates at Battle of Five Forks (Apr. 1), crippling Confederate position at Petersburg, Virginia.

1865 Grant captured Petersburg, Virginia (Apr. 2), and occupied Richmond (Apr. 3).

1865 Appomattox Courthouse (Apr. 9); pursued by Grant, Gen. Lee was finally surrounded and forced to surrender at Appomattox Courthouse, effectively ending the war.

1865 Lincoln assassinated (Apr. 14).

American Colonization Society An organization founded in the US (Dec., 1816) to transport Negro freedmen to Africa. The society's colonization efforts led to the founding of Liberia. Organized chiefly by Robert Finley (1772–1817), the society established a successful colony (1821) at what was to become Monrovia, Liberia, and subsequently transported several thousand Negro freedmen to Africa. By the 1830s, however, such resettlement plans had become unpopular in the US and the society declined after 1840.

American Expeditionary Force The collective name for American soldiers who fought in Europe during WW I. Commanded by Gen. J. Pershing, they entered combat Oct., 1917, and left France Aug., 1919.

American Federation of Labor–Congress of Industrial Organizations ⟨AFL–CIO⟩ Important US labor-union federation formed by the merger of the AFL and the CIO in 1955. The AFL was formed (1886) as a federation of autonomous national and local craft unions. It opposed the socialism and political activism of the Knights of Labor, and under the leadership of S. Gompers significantly improved the lot of US workers. In the 1930s a split developed over the old system of organizing workers by craft (rather than by industry) and, in 1937, ten unions were expelled from the AFL. These unions formed the CIO, which soon became a powerful new federation of industrial unions. G. Meany was named AFL–CIO president (1955) when the two federations merged.

American Fur Company Fur company (incorporated in 1808) by J. J. Astor to compete with British chartered companies in the Great Lakes region, Canada, and the American Northwest. The company helped open the Great Lakes region and the West to settlers and became one of the first American trusts.

American Indians See separate entries under names of indian tribes and nations.

American Labor party Short-lived US political party founded (1936) in New York by labor leaders and liberals. The party generally supported national and local candidates who favored New Deal social legislation, and until the early 1940s it figured in New York politics. The party split (1944) over its Communist element. The anti-Communist faction formed the Liberal Party (1944) and effectively broke the party, which disbanded in 1956.

American Revolution ⟨War of Independence⟩ Military conflict (1775–83) between Britain and its American colonies that resulted in American independence and creation of the United States. The military phase of this great rebellion was the culmination of a gradual split between Britain and the colonies that had been growing for decades over political and economic issues. (For events leading up to the war, see United States 1750–75.) The American victory in the war meant the loss of a major element in the British colonial empire, but Britain compensated for it by gaining control of India. The revolution had far-reaching international repercussions as well. A functioning democracy was established and it thus provided some impetus for other revolutionary struggles, notably in France and later in Spanish America. Key events in the war include:

1775 P. Revere's ride (Apr. 18).

1775 Battles of Lexington and Concord (Apr. 19) outside Boston, the opening hostilities of the American Revolution.

1775 Fort Ticonderoga in New York captured (May 10) by E. Allen and B. Arnold.

1775 Second Continental Congress convened (May 10); appointed (June 15) G. Washington commander of Continental Army.

1775 Battle of Bunker Hill near Boston, first major battle of the revolution (June 17); British took position but at great cost; British failed to break colonials' siege of Boston.

1775 In Canada, American forces captured Montreal (Nov. 12).

1775–76 Quebec campaign in Canada; Continental forces unable to capture Quebec.

1776 T. Paine published Common Sense, calling for American independence.

1776 American colonials defeated (Feb. 27) Loyalists in the Battle of Moore's Creek Bridge; British occupation of North Carolina thwarted.

1776 G. Washington took Dorchester Heights overlooking Boston (Mar. 16); Colonial siege finally forced British evacuation (Mar. 17) of Boston.

1776 Battle of Charleston, South Carolina (June 28); colonials repulsed British attackers.

1776 Declaration of Independence proclaimed (July 4) by Congress; colonies now committed to seeking full independence.

1776 British landed on Long Island, New York; won Battle of Long Island (Aug. 27); Washington retreated to Manhattan.

1776 Battle of Harlem Heights (Sept. 16); colonials successfully delayed advance of Howe's troops up the Hudson.

1776–77 Washington launched his surprise raid into New Jersey; crossed Delaware (Dec. 25) and took 918 prisoners in victory at the Battle of Trenton (Dec. 26); routed by British column at the Battle of Princeton (Jan. 3); took up winter quarters at Morristown, New Jersey, forcing British to withdraw to New York.

1777 British plan to cut the colonies in two during 1777; Gen. Burgoyne and Lieut. Col. St. Leger to mount two-pronged attack from Canada, linking up at Albany, New York, from the east and west.

1777 Gen. Burgoyne's forces, marching south from Montreal, captured Fort Ticonderoga (July 5); continued southward advance.

1777 Gen. Howe meanwhile left New York (July 23) and struck westward to capture Philadelphia, the colonials' capital.

1777 Americans halted St. Leger's forces at Fort Schuyler in central New York (Aug. 3–23); St. Leger forced to return to Canada without having linked up with Burgoyne.

1777 Raiding party from Burgoyne's column badly defeated (Aug. 16) at the Battle of Bennington, Vermont.

1777 Battle of Brandywine (Sept. 11) near Philadelphia; Gen. Howe defeated Washington's Colonial forces; British captured Philadelphia soon after (Sept. 26).

1777 First Battle of Saratoga fought (Sept. 19); colonials successful in holding lines against Burgoyne's forces at Freeman's Farm.

1777 Battle of Germantown (Oct. 4), unsuccessful attack by Washington on British near Philadelphia.

1777 Second Battle of Saratoga (Oct. 7); American victory at Bemis Heights ended the British attempt to split the colonies in two; Gen. Burgoyne surrendered (Oct. 17); marked a turning point in the war.

1777 Articles of Confederation passed (Nov. 15) by Congress.

1777–78 Washington wintered with troops at Valley Forge under conditions of severe hardship; Gen. von Steuben drilled the soldiers into an efficient fighting force.

1778 American victory at Saratoga convinced French to openly support American cause (from Feb. 1778); troops, supplies, and war fleet to be sent.

1778 Carlisle Commission, unsuccessful British peace mission (Apr. 12).

1778 Sir H. Clinton became British commander in chief; concerned about the arrival of the French, he evacuated Philadelphia (June 18) and marched for New York City.

1778 Gen. Washington attacked Clinton's troops in New Jersey, but the Battle of Monmouth (June 28) was indecisive; Clinton withdrew to New York City.

1778 Wyoming Massacre (July 3), bloody defeat of American settlers by superior British force in Pennsylvania.

1778 Cherry Valley Raid (Nov. 11) in New York by Tories and Indians.

1778 British shifted their offensive to the south; Savannah, Georgia, captured (Dec. 28).

1779 Spain entered war against Britain (June).

1779 Capt. John Paul Jones captured the British ship Serapis (Sept. 23).

1780 British Gen. C. Cornwallis launched Carolina campaign, initially successful attempt to gain control of these southern colonies.

1780 Battle of Charleston, South Carolina (May 12), led to British occupation.

1780 Plot by B. Arnold to turn West Point over to the British uncovered (Sept.); Arnold fled to the British side.

1780 Battle of Camden (Aug. 16), one of the worst American defeats of the war; enabled the British to invade North Carolina.

1780 Battle of Kings Mountain, North Carolina (Oct. 7), victory of American over British troops.

1781 Mutinies by colonial troops in Pennsylvania and New Jersey put down.

1781 Articles of Confederation ratified (Feb.)

1781 Yorktown campaign (Sept. 28–Oct. 19), final campaign of the war; Continental forces aided by a French fleet trapped British forces under Lord G. Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, and compelled Cornwallis's surrender; marked virtual end of military conflict in colonies.

1782 British Parliament sanctioned opening of negotiations (Mar. 5); B. Franklin, J. Jay, and J. Adams negotiated for the Americans and won very favorable terms (Nov. 30) in a preliminary treaty (incorporated in the Treaty of Paris).

1783 Treaty of Paris signed (Sept. 3), formally ending war and recognizing US independence.

1783 British troops evacuated (Nov. 25) from New York City.

Amundsen, Roald 1872–1928. Norwegian explorer, first to reach the South Pole (Dec. 14, 1911). With Umberto Nobile (1885–1978), he was also one of the first to fly over the North Pole (1926).

Anabaptists Christian sects that arose in Europe during the 16th-cent. Protestant Reformation. Anabaptists generally rejected infant baptism in favor of adult baptism, favored separation of the church and state, and opposed the use of force. The movement is said to have begun (*c*1520) in Zurich, Switzerland, and, despite persecutions by both Catholics and Protestants, spread rapidly. A sect in Moravia gave rise to the Hutterites, and a sect in The Netherlands became Mennonites.

anarchism Theory that advocates complete individual freedom, especially from control by government or other outside authority. Based on the belief that such restrictions corrupt mankind, philosophic anarchism, advanced (19th cent.) by P. Proudhon, seeks nonviolent evolution toward an anarchistic society. Extreme anarchists, beginning with the Russian revolutionary M. Bakunin, have favored terrorism to advance their cause. This violent aspect became commonly associated with anarchism after a series of violent acts (such as the Haymarket Square riot, 1886) and political assassinations, including those of French president M. Carnot (1894), Italian king Humbert I (1900), US pres. W. McKinley (1901), and Greek king George (1913).

Anastasius I AD *c*430–518. Byzantine emperor (AD 491–518), successor to Zeno. He drove the Isaurians from Constantinople, built a wall for defense against the Slavs and Bulgars, and instituted tax and social reforms. His adherence to Monophysitism was opposed by Rome.

Andorra Tiny principality (pop. 35,000) located in the Pyrenees Mountains, between France and Spain. Its origins can be traced back to Carolingian times. Emperor Charles II is said to have granted overlordship (9th cent.) of Andorra to the Spanish bishop of Urgel, a claim contested by French nobles until the present arrangement of joint suzerainty was agreed to in 1278. French king Henry IV inherited French rights to Andorra, which subsequently passed to French presidents. The people of Andorra speak Catalan and are governed by a semifeudal system.

Andrada e Silva, José Bonifácio de ⟨José Bonifácio⟩ 1763?–1838. Brazilian statesman considered the father of Brazilian independence. He supported independence from Portugal and establishment (1822) of a Brazilian monarchy under Pedro I. He served (1822–23) as prime minister.

Andrássy, Count Guyla (Julius) 1823–90. Hungarian statesman and a principal figure in formation of the Dual Monarchy (1867). A leader of the abortive Hungarian revolt against Austria (1848–49), he eventually sought the compromise of the Dual Monarchy and became Hungary's first prime minister (1867–71). Later, as foreign minister of Austria-Hungary (1871–79), he was responsible for the unpopular occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (1878) and arranged the important Dual Alliance (1879) between Germany and Austria-Hungary.

André, John 1751–80. British army officer during the American Revolution. He conspired with B. Arnold to arrange the surrender of West Point to the British. Captured (1780) before the plan could be accomplished, he was hanged as a spy.

Angevin 1. Another name for the Plantagenet kings of England (1154–1399), the first three of whom were also counts of Anjou (thus Angevin). Ties between the French and English lines began with the marriage (1129) of Goeffry IV, count of Anjou, and Matilda, daughter of English king Henry I. Their son became Henry II, king of England and count of Anjou. With this dual title, King Henry II, Richard I, and John successfully ruled England and large domains on the Continent as well. These domains, including Brittany, Normandy, Anjou, Aquitaine, Maine, and Touraine, were almost entirely lost to the French by the end of King John's reign (1216). 2. Name for rulers who were descendants of the French House of Anjou in several collateral lines. They ruled variously over Hungary, Poland, Naples, and parts of France (13th–15th cents.).

Anglo-Afghan Wars ⟨Afghan Wars⟩ 1. First ~ War (1838–42) in which the British invaded Afghanistan from India, deposed the Afghan ruler Dost Muhammad and installed their puppet. A rebellion against the British broke out (1841), forced their retreat from Kabul, and ended in a massacre of British troops (1842). Dost Muhammad was restored (1842). 2. Second ~ War (1878–80) between Britain and Afghanistan. Concerned about Russia's increasing influence in Afghanistan, the British again invaded from India and forced the Afghan ruler to accept the Treaty of Gandamak (1879). A rebellion against the British broke out (Sept. 3, 1879). A new emir quelled the rebellion and, though he did not challenge the 1879 treaty, he continued to counter British influence by befriending Russia. 3. Third ~ War (May 10–Aug. 8, 1919) in which the Afghans attempted to invade British India. Hoping to end British influence in Afghanistan, Afghan emir Amanullah launched a religious war. His plan to provoke Muslims in India to an uprising against the British failed, and his forces were soon forced out of India. Amanullah succeeded, however, in negotiating the Treaty of Rawalpindi (Aug. 8), by which the British recognized Afghan independence.

Angola ⟨People's Republic of Angola⟩ Angola is an independent state located in coastal southwest Africa. Its capital is Luanda. Long a Portuguese colony, Angola was once a major source of slaves used in Portuguese Brazil. Significant development of the colony began after WW II and Angola was the last of Portugal's African possessions to win independence (1975). Subsequently a Soviet-backed faction gained control of the country, though guerrilla resistance continues. Key dates in the history of Angola include:

1482 Northern coast discovered by Portuguese navigator Diogo Cão.

1641–48 Dutch briefly controlled Angola.

1885 Borders of Portugal's colony established by Treaty of Berlin.

1902 Portugal gained control of the interior by conquering the native Mbundu kingdom.

1951 Angola made a Portuguese overseas province; industrial development and immigration encouraged.

1961 Native resistance to colonial government began; various groups engaged in guerrilla warfare and established competing governments in exile.

1972 Angola made an autonomous state under Portuguese supervision; guerrilla resistance continued.

1973 Legislative elections for new government held.

1974 New government in Portugal (1964) ceased fighting against rebels in Angola; ordered Angolan independence.

1975 Angolan independence declared (Nov. 11); struggle for control of government between US-backed and Soviet-backed rebel groups.

1976 Soviet-backed Movement for Liberation of Angola (MPLA) gained control (with help of Cuban troops, from Oct. 1975); resistance by rival groups continued, however.

1976 US military aid to rebel forces in Angola ended.

1977–78 Refugees from Zaire launched invasions from Angola; Soviet-backed regime denied involvement.

1982 Diplomatic contacts with Western powers (Portugal and US) reported.

Anna Ivanovna 1693–1740. Empress of Russia (1730–40), daughter of Ivan V, and successor to her cousin Peter II. Made empress by the supreme privy council, she ruled as an autocrat, and her reign was marked by repression and terror. She relied largely upon Ernst Johann Biron (1690–1772) to rule the country. The War of the Polish Succession and the Russo-Turkish War (1736–39) took place during her reign.

Annam Historic region and ancient kingdom in central Vietnam, with origins in the 2d millennium BC. The territory became a Chinese kingdom (111 BC), and the Chinese were not driven out until AD 939. In 1472 the Champa kingdom to the south was added to Annam. From the 16th to 18th cent., the kingdom was divided between the Le and Nguyen dynasties. It was reunited, with French help (1802), as the empire of Vietnam and by 1884, Annam had become a French protectorate. In 1887 it became part of the French Union of Indochina.

Annapolis Convention US convention (Sept. 11, 1786) at Annapolis, Maryland, attended by delegates from Delaware, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Called to discuss commercial difficulties created by the Articles of Confederation, the convention led to the Constitutional Convention (1787), which drafted the US Constitution.

Anne 1665–1714. English queen (1702–07) and queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1707–14), successor to William III. The last Stuart monarch and the daughter of James II, she acquiesced in the overthrow of her father in the Glorious Revolution. Throughout her reign, which saw intense rivalry between Tories and Whigs, she was influenced by Sarah Jennings (1660–1774), duchess of Marlborough, and (after 1710) by A. Masham. During her reign, Great Britain was formed by the Act of Union with Scotland (1707), the succession of the Hanoverian kings was ensured by the Act of Settlement (1701), and England became embroiled in the War of Spanish Succession (1701–14).

Anne, Saint fl. 1st cent. BC. Wife of Saint Joachim and mother of the Virgin Mary. She is the patron saint of Brittany and of Quebec, Canada, and of women in labor.

Anne of Austria 1601–66. French queen, wife of King Louis XIII (m. 1615), and daughter of Spanish king Philip III. On her husband's death (1648), she became regent for her son, Louis XIV, with Cardinal Mazarin as minister. Her regency was marked by rebellions of the Fronde (q.v.).

Anne of Brittany 1477–1514. Duchess of Brittany and queen consort to French kings Charles VIII (1491–98) and Louis XII (1499–1514). As sole heir to Brittany (1488), she tried desperately to guarantee its independence from France but was forced to marry first Charles, then Louis. During her lifetime she did maintain Brittany's independence, but her daughter's marriage to Francis I finally resulted in its annexation by France (1532).

Anne of Cleves 1515–57. Fourth queen consort of Henry VIII of England. Henry married her in Jan., 1540, to form an alliance with the Protestant Schmalkaldic League to forestall an attack on England by Catholic powers. The attack failed to materialize, and the marriage was dissolved in July, 1540.

annexation Act by which a nation or state declares sovereignty over territory formerly outside its borders. Usually accompanied by military conquest or threat of it, annexation is distinct from cession, in which a state acquires territory by treaty or purchase.

Anouilh, Jean 1910–. A French playwright. Anouilh's internationally popular plays include Antigone, Waltz of the Toreadors, Becket, and The Lark.

Anselm, Saint *c*1033–1109. Archbishop of Canterbury, Doctor of the Church, and founder of scholasticism (q.v.). He advanced a theory of the atonement of Christ and originated the ontological proof of God's existence.

Antaeus In Greek mythology, the son of Poseidon and Gaea. A giant, he was invincible as long as he touched the earth. Hercules killed him by lifting him into the air and crushing him.

Antarctica The 5th largest continent, located almost entirely within the Antarctic Circle. Antarctica was not discovered until modern times. The British captain J. Cook was the first to sail within the Antarctic Circle (1772–75). American, British, and Russian expeditions all claim the first actual sighting (1820) of Antarctica. In subsequent years of the 19th cent., the coastal regions of the continent were explored by many, including the Scotsman J. Ross (1839–43). The Norwegian R. Amundsen reached the South Pole first (Dec. 14, 1911), followed a month later by British R. Scott (Jan. 17, 1912), whose party perished returning. The American admiral R. Byrd conducted important investigations in the 1930s. During the International Geophysical Year (1957–58), scientists from 56 nations exhaustively studied the continent. Twelve nations established stations there, and, in 1959, signed the Antarctic Treaty (q.v.).

Antarctic Treaty International agreement (1959) by which twelve nations designated Antarctica an independent, demilitarized, scientific research zone. The US and the USSR were among the signatories of the 30-year treaty.

Anti-Corn-Law League An organization formed (1839) in England to repeal the Corn Laws, grain import duties that kept the price of bread high. Under the leadership of R. Cobden and others, the league organized support among farmers and workers and eventually won Prime Minister R. Peel to their cause. Parliament repealed the Corn Laws in 1846.

Antietam, Battle of ⟨Sharpsburg, ~⟩ Bloody victory (Sept. 17, 1862) for Union forces during the American Civil War (1861–65). The battle turned back a Confederate invasion of the North that threatened Washington, D.C. The Confederates, numbering 65,000 soldiers under Gen. R.E. Lee, crossed the Potomac into Maryland shortly after the Second Battle of Bull Run. They were defeated (Sept. 17) at Antietam Creek (near Sharpsburg) by 85,000 Union soldiers under Gen. G. McClellan, following preliminary engagements (Sept. 14–15). Union casualties numbered about 12,000, while Confederate losses ranged variously from 9,000–14,000.

Anti-Federalists American political group, opponents of a strong central government. Initially they opposed adoption of the Constitution in 1789, and afterward favored strict interpretation of it. After 1793 they became known as the Jeffersonian Republican party, then as the Democratic-Republicans.

Antigone In Greek legend, the daughter of Oedipus. She buried the body of her brother Polynices, against orders given by her uncle Creon. In Sophocles' play Antigone she was buried alive for her disobedience.

Antigonids A dynasty that ruled ancient Macedonia and parts of Greece from 276 and 168 BC. It was established by Antigonus II, a grandson of Alexander the Great's general, Antigonus I. The dynasty prevailed until clashes with Rome resulted in defeat of the last of the dynasty, Perseus, at Pydna (168 BC).

Antigonus I ⟨Antigonus Cyclops⟩ 382?–301 BC. Macedonian general under Alexander the Great, founder of the Antigonids, and important figure in the Wars of the Diadochi (q.v.). He was made governor of Phrygia in 333 BC and, after Alexander's death, expanded his domains throughout Asia Minor, Syria, and Mesopotamia. He pronounced himself king (306), and was killed at the Battle of Ipsus (301).

Antigonus II ⟨Antigonus Gonatas⟩ 319?–239 BC. Macedonian king (276–239 BC), grandson of Antigonus I. He seized control of Macedonia (276), withstood attacks by Pyrrhus and Ptolemy II, won the Chremonidean War (266–262), and briefly united Greek territories under Macedonian control.

Antigonus III ⟨Antigonus Doson⟩ d. 221 BC. King of Macedonia (227–221 BC). He was regent for Philip V, son of Demetrius II, and in 227 declared himself king. Siding with the Achaean League, he defeated Spartan king Cleomenes III at Sellasia (222). He formed a Hellenic League (224) to further Macedonian hegemony in Greece.

Anti-Masonic party First American third party, formed (1826) to oppose election of Freemasons to public office. The disappearance and presumed murder of a writer who was planning to reveal secrets of the fraternal order of Freemasons caused a major scandal. The Freemasons' refusal to cooperate in the investigation resulted in the founding of the Anti-Masonic party in New York, and, in 1832, the party won many congressional seats. By 1834, however, Anti-Masons had been absorbed into the new Whig party. The Anti-Mason national nominating convention at Baltimore (1831) was the first ever held and became the model for such political conventions in America.

Antinoüs AD *c*110–130. Favorite of Emperor Hadrian and his constant companion. After Antinoüs drowned in the Nile, Hadrian founded the city of Antinoöpolis and built many temples in his honor.

antinomianism Doctrine that some Christians, by virtue of their special faith, do not have to obey the moral laws of the Old Testament. The Antinomian controversy first appeared during the 16th-cent. Protestant Reformation as a doctrinal dispute involving one of M. Luther's fellow reformers, J. Agricola. Opposed by M. Luther, Agricola recanted by 1540. Subsequently, some radical Anabaptists and several sects in 17th-18th–cent. England were accused of antinomianism.

Antioch Historic city in what is now southeast Turkey. Founded by the Syrians (*c*300 BC), the city was located on important trade routes. It was conquered by the Romans (64 BC), and under them became a cultural center. The city became one of the three original patriarchates and was important in the early history of the Christian church. From the 6th cent. to the 16th, the city was conquered by various powers and figured in the Crusades. When it fell to the Ottoman Turks (1516), it was of little importance. It was made part of Syria in 1920 and was restored to Turkey in 1939.

Antiochus I ⟨~ Soter⟩ *c*324–*c*261 BC. Seleucid king of Syria (280–*c*261 BC), successor to his father, Seleucus I. His reign was troubled by internal strife, attacks by the Gauls, and the first Syrian War (q.v.), in which he lost Phoenicia and other territories. He is noted as a great builder of cities.

Antiochus II *c*287–247 BC. Seleucid king of Syria (*c*261–247 BC), successor to his father, Antiochus I. He waged the second Syrian War (q.v.), a continuation of wars against Egypt that began under his father's reign. He secured peace and recovered much lost Syrian territory, however, by marrying Berenice, daughter of his enemy, Ptolemy II.

Antiochus III ⟨~ the Great⟩ 242–187 BC. Seleucid king of Syria (223–187 BC), successor to his brother Seleucus III. He waged the fourth Syrian War (q.v.), extended the Seleucid Empire eastward into India, but was defeated in a struggle with Rome. After invading Greece, he was defeated by the Romans at Thermopylae (191) and Magnesia (190) and thus lost all territories west of Mount Taurus.

Antiochus IV ⟨~ Epiphanes⟩ d. 163 BC. Seleucid king of Syria (175–163 BC), successor to his brother Seleucus IV. He conquered most of Egypt (169–168) but was forced to withdraw by Rome. His efforts to introduce Greek institutions and religion in Judaea led to the revolt of the Maccabees (q.v.).

Antipater d. 319 BC. Macedonian general who served as regent in Macedonia (334–323 BC) during the Asian campaign of Alexander the Great. As regent after Alexander's death, he defeated rebellious Greek city-states in the Lamian War (q.v.). He maintained the last vestiges of central authority in the Macedonian Empire until his death, which was followed by the Wars of the Diadochi.

antipope Pope of the Roman Catholic church elected in opposition to the legitimate pope. Antipopes were elected for a variety of reasons, including doctrinal disputes, power struggles between the church and secular rulers, and historic divisions within the church (i.e., Babylonian captivity, Great Schism). Antipopes were elected as early as AD *c*217 (Hippolytus) and the last was elected 1439 (Felix V).

Antirent War ⟨Helderberg War⟩ Rebellion (1839–46) by tenant farmers in upper New York State against a system of perpetual leases (the patroon system). The revolt was provoked by the Van Rensselaer family's attempt to collect $400,000 in back rent and finally resulted in an end to the patroon system.

Anti-Saloon League American temperence organization founded (1893) at Oberlin, Ohio, and established as a national organization in 1895. It sought legislative prohibition of the sale of liquor and became a major factor in the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment.

anti-Semitism Historically persistent prejudice (or open hostility) toward Jews. This prejudice at first stemmed from religious differences between Jews and Christians, but from the late 19th cent. it was largely based on supposed racial differences. Anti-Semitism in this form became the basis for A. Hitler's systematic extermination (1939–45) of six million Jews during WW II. Arab hatred of the Israelis, ostensibly based on political grounds, has brought hatred of the Jews into the post-WW II, modern era.

Antisthenes d. 365 BC. Greek philosopher. Antisthenes was a follower of Socrates and founded the Greek school of Cynics (q.v.).

Antoine, André 1858–1943. French actor, manager, and critic, influential in French theater. He founded the Théâtre Libre in Paris (1887) and there presented naturalistic plays. He also opened the Théâtre Antoine (1897) and later was director of the Odéon in Paris.

Antoninus Pius ⟨Titus Aurelius Fulvus Boinonius Arrius Antoninus⟩ AD 86–161. Roman emperor (AD 138–161), successor to Hadrian. One of the "five good emperors," he continued the period of general prosperity and built the Antonine Wall.

Antonius, Marcus See Antony

Antony ⟨Antonius, Marcus⟩ ⟨Marc Antony⟩ *c*83–30 BC. Roman soldier, political leader, and ally of J. Caesar. His love affair with Cleopatra (q.v.) is near legendary. A courageous soldier, he served with Caesar in Gaul (54 BC), became a tribune (49), and joined Caesar in the civil war against Pompey (notably at the Battle of Pharsalus [48], in which Pompey was defeated). He became consul with Caesar (44) and, after Caesar's assassination, forced the conspirators to flee Rome. Antony for a time opposed both the Senate and Caesar's heir, Octavian (later Augustus Caesar). But after gaining the support of Lepidus, Antony came to terms with Octavian, and the three (Octavian, Antony, and Lepidus) formed the Second Triumvirate, with Antony ruling Asia. There followed the murders of hundreds of senators and the Battle of Philippi (42), resulting in the deaths of Cassius and Brutus. Antony then began (*c*42) his affair with Cleopatra, was forced to leave Egypt (40), and at Rome married Octavian's sister. He soon returned to Egypt and Cleopatra, however, and, by his dissolute life-style, alienated both Octavian and the Senate. Octavian attacked and defeated Antony at Actium (31), and, when Octavian pursued him to Alexandria, both Antony and Cleopatra committed suicide (30).

Antwerp Belgian city (pop. 197,000), a commercial center and important European port. A Norman fort in the 9th cent., it was chartered in 1291 and rose to prominence (15th cent.), when it replaced Bruges as a center for the cloth trade. By the 16th cent., it was the most important commercial and financial center in Europe. By the mid-17th cent., however, the city had suffered a number of reverses, including conquest by Spain and the closing of its port by the Peace of Westphalia (1648), and it declined quickly. Napoleon reopened the port (1795), and in the 19th cent. it again began to prosper. The Germans captured it in WW I (1914–18) and WW II (1940–44).

Anu Ancient Babylonian god, the leading member of a triad of gods with Enlil and Ea. They were the gods of heaven, earth, and water, respectively.

Anvari ⟨Anwari⟩ *c*1126–*c*1189. Persian poet. Anvari was renowned for both his lyric and satirical skills. His works are collected in the Divan.

Anvil, Operation ⟨Operation Dragoon⟩ Allied invasion of southern France (Aug. 15, 1944) during WW II. This landing by the American Seventh Army and the French First Army met little resistance and quickly linked up with Gen. G. Patton's forces in Switzerland.

Anville, Jean Baptiste Bourguignon d' 1697–1782. French geographer and cartographer whose maps of ancient and medieval geography are noted for their accuracy. His work led to great improvements in mapmaking.

Anzio Historic town in central Italy. A Roman resort in ancient times, it was the birthplace of Caligula and Nero. In WW II, the Allied landings (Jan., 1944) here and at Nettuno met stiff German resistance, which stalled the drive to Rome.

Apache Indians American Indian tribes of the US Southwest. Apaches were farmer-warriors and are believed to have migrated to the Southwest from Canada about AD 1000. Some tribes, however, were also driven south from the Midwest plains by the Comanche and Ute as late as the 18th cent. Apaches attacked Spanish colonials from the 17th cent. and engaged in the bloody Apache and Navaho wars against Americans in the 19th cent. The Apaches formerly consisted of many subgroups, including Jicarilla, Chiricahua, Coyotero, and Kiowa.

apartheid Racial segregation policy enforced by the white supremacist government of the Republic of South Africa. White domination of native Africans has been part of government policy since creation of the South African state (1910). But apartheid, aiming at complete physical separation of the races, was articulated by the Afrikaner National Party government in 1948. Since then the government has resettled part of the native black population in rural "homelands," designated for blacks only, and otherwise strictly regulates them. South Africa was forced out of the British Commonwealth (1961) because of its apartheid policies.

Apelles fl. 4th cent. BC. Greek painter, considered the greatest of his time. He was court painter to Philip II and Alexander the Great. None of his works survives and he is known only because of his great reputation.

Aphrodite Greek goddess of love, fertility, and beauty, identified with the Roman Venus. Aphrodite won the apple of discord from Paris, and this led to the Trojan War. She was mother of Aeneas and a lover of Adonis.

Apocalypse, Four Horsemen of the See Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

Apollinaire, Guillaume 1880–1918. French poet, a leading figure in the Paris avant-garde movement. His poetry was experimental and his only play, Les Mamelles de Tirésias, was an early experiment in surrealism.

Apollinarianism Christian heresy that began with Apollinarius of Laodicea (d. AD 390?). Apollinarius taught that because of Jesus' divine nature, he was not truly human and therefore did not possess both perfectly human and perfectly divine natures. This heresy was condemned by the Council of Constantinople (AD 381).

Apollo ⟨Phoebus Apollo⟩ Greek god, one of the leading gods of Olympus. He was the god of archery, healing, music, and prophecy, and was also known in Roman religion as Apollo. His chief temple was at Delphi, and, as Phoebus Apollo, he was the god of light. He was later identified by the Greeks with Helios, the sun god.

Apollodorus fl. 5th cent. BC. Athenian painter. He is believed to have introduced the technique of shading light and color in painting. None of his works survives.

Apollonius of Perga fl. 3d cent. BC. Greek mathematician. His treatise on conic sections is a major mathematical work of antiquity. It contains first use of the terms "parabola," "hyperbola," and "ellipse."

Apollo program US program to land a man on the moon. Inaugurated May, 1961, by Pres. J. Kennedy, the program included a number of preliminary missions and several moon landings. Apollo 8 was the first manned moon orbit (Dec., 1968), and Apollo 11 was the first moon landing (July 20, 1969). In the latter, Astronaut N. Armstrong became the first man to walk on the moon. Apollo 17 (Dec., 1972) was the last flight of the program. (See also Space Exploration.)

apostle One of the twelve disciples chosen by Jesus to act as the principal missionaries of Christianity. The twelve are Peter, Andrew, John, James (son of Zebedee), James (son of Alphaeus), Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Thaddaeus, Matthew, Simon, and Matthias (who replaced Judas Iscariot). Early Christian missionaries, who were primarily responsible for founding the church in a country, are also referred to as apostles. Thus, Saint Patrick is the apostle of Ireland.

Apostolic Constitutions A compilation of early Christian ecclesiastical law. At first thought to be the work of the apostles, they are now believed to have been written by a 4th-cent. Syrian author. They provide valuable insight into the practices of the early Christians.

Arab-Israeli War 1. First ~ War (1948–49) between Israeli and allied Arab states (Egypt, Syria, Transjordan, Iraq, and Lebanon). War broke out after the creation of the Israeli state (May 14, 1948). The Arabs at first gained territories in the southeast and captured Old Jerusalem. A four-week UN-negotiated truce (June, 1948) was followed by Israeli offensives and finally a cease-fire (Jan. 7, 1949), by which time the Israelis had regained most of the lost territories. Separate armistice agreements (not formal treaties) were negotiated with the Arab states in early 1949. As a result of the war, some 400,000 Palestinian Arabs from the former Palestine fled to neighboring Arab countries. These refugees gave impetus to renewed Arab-Israeli conflicts and creation of the Palestine Liberation Organization. 2. Second ~ War (Oct.-Nov., 1956) between Israel and Egypt. Taking advantage of international tensions created by G. Nasser's nationalization of the Suez Canal (q.v.), Israeli forces, led by M. Dayan, invaded (Oct. 29) the Sinai Peninsula. In five days of fighting, up to the Nov. 6 cease-fire, the Israelis captured nearly all the Sinai east of the canal. The Israelis turned the captured territories over to UN forces (1957), accepting guarantees of Israeli access to the Gulf of Aqaba. 3. Third ~ War ⟨Six-Day War⟩ (June 5–10, 1967) between Israel and the Arab states of Egypt, Syria, and Jordan. Provoked by border incidents and Egypt's closing of Israeli access to the Gulf of Aqaba, the Israelis attacked the Arab countries (June 5). They knocked out the Arab air capability, then took the Sinai, the West Bank, Old Jerusalem, and the Golan Heights. The war ended June 10, though no treaties were negotiated. 4. Fourth ~ War (Oct. 6–25, 1973) between Israel and allied Arab states (Egypt and Syria, supported by Iraq, Libya, and Jordan). In a surprise move on the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur the Egyptians attacked across the Suez Canal and the Syrians attacked from the north. The Israelis fell back initially but pushed back the Arabs on both fronts, finally even gaining a foothold on the east bank of the Suez. Though fighting continued sporadically on the Syrian front (ending May 31, 1974), the Israelis agreed (Jan 18, 1974) to limited withdrawal and establishment of a UN peacekeeping force.

Arab League Loose federation of Arab countries founded (1945) to promote Arab unity and interests. Frequently rendered impotent in political matters because of internal divisions, the league has been more successful in economic and administrative affairs. It failed (1948) to prevent formation of Israel, instituted a mutual defense pact (1950), and since then has been largely ineffective in the crises brought on by Arab-Israeli wars. The original members include Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Yemen. Since 1945, other Arab nations and the PLO have joined. Egypt was outsted (Mar., 1979) after signing peace accords with Israel.

Aranjuez, Revolt of Spanish rebellion (Mar. 17–19, 1808) at Aranjuez, in central Spain. Rioting here forced the dismissal of Prime Minister M. Godoy and the abdication of Charles IV during Napoleon's invasion of Spain (1807–08).

Araucanian Wars Warfare (16th cent.) between Spanish conquistadors and the fierce Araucanian Indians in Chile. Outbreaks of violence began in the 1530s, and, in 1541, P. Valdivia fended off Araucanian attacks and founded Santiago. The Indians again threatened Santiago after massacring (1553) Valdivia's expedition farther south. Spanish forces ultimately forced the Indians southward but never conquered them. The Araucanians rose again (19th cent.) when settlers threatened these homelands in the south. They were finally defeated (1870) by the Chilean Army.

archaeology The study of past human cultures through the recovery and analysis of material remains. Archaeology is broadly divided into the study of prehistoric and historic cultures and is also divided into particular periods or cultures, such as Egyptian, Greek, and Roman. Archaeology as a science began with the 15th-cent. interest in Greek sculpture. Since then, such important discoveries as Pompey and Troy, the deciphering of Egyptian hieroglyphics, and the finding of the Dead Sea Scrolls have contributed greatly to archaeologists' knowledge of ancient cultures. Archaeologists now employ sophisticated methods for excavating and dating artifacts and draw on a wide variety of scientific disciplines in the analysis of their finds.

archons Magistrates in ancient Greece. Originally they had political, religious, and military powers in the city-states (especially Athens), but by the 5th cent. BC their roles had been reduced to judicial functions. The first archons were chosen from among the aristocracy. As the office declined in importance, however, eligibility was extended to other classes, and, in the 5th cent. BC, all citizens were eligible to hold the office.

Arctic Region surrounding the North Pole, including northern parts of North America, Europe, and Asia. The first known exploration of the region may have been by the Greek Pytheas (4th cent. BC). Subsequently Irish monks (9th cent. AD) and Norse Vikings (10th cent. AD) were in Iceland. Following the voyages of J. Cabot, European exploration began in earnest, stimulated largely by the search for Northeast and Northwest passages to Asia. Other explorers followed, including M. Frobisher, V. Bering, H. Hudson, J. Franklin, F. Nansen, and R. Amundsen. R. Peary became the first to reach the Pole (1909), and R. Byrd flew over it (1926). In 1958, the nuclear submarine Nautilus made the first voyage under the polar icecap.

Ardashir I ⟨Artaxerxes⟩ d. AD *c*241. King of Persia (AD *c*226–*c*241), who founded the Sassanidae dynasty. He overthrew the Parthian king, established Zoroastrianism as the state religion, expanded his empire, and warred against Roman emperor Alexander Severus (AD 231–233).

Areopagus Council of elders in ancient Athens. Formed sometime after 1000 BC and composed of former archons (magistrates) of Athens, the Areopagus functioned as a legislative body and guardian of Athenian laws. Under Draco, the council had judicial powers in murder cases, and, under Solon, its judicial powers were broadened (594 BC). However, Solon reduced its legislative functions and instituted the Boule, or Council of 400, for these functions.

Ares Greek god of war and one of the chief gods of Olympus. He is identified with the Roman god Mars.

Argentina Republic located in southern South America. Its capital is Buenos Aires. First colonized by the Spanish in the 16th cent., Argentina gained its independence in 1816, overcame years of political turmoil, and by the late 19th cent. had become a leading nation of South America. Key events in the history of Argentina include:

1516 Río de la Plata, major coastal river delta region, discovered by Juan Díaz de Solís.

1536 Spanish established settlement at what is now Buenos Aires.

1776 Buenos Aires made seat of a viceroyalty that ruled regions of Argentina, Paraguay, Bolivia, and Uruguay.

1806–7 British force attacked and occupied Buenos Aires, forcing the viceroy to flee; Argentine forces expelled the British the following year and repelled a second British force.

1810 Argentine revolutionaries refused to recognize Spanish king Joseph Bonaparte, installed by Napoleon; revolutionaries deposed the viceroy (May 25) and established a ruling junta; the rebels later broke with representatives of deposed King Ferdinand VII, thereby instigating war with the royalists.

1810–13 Revolutionaries tried unsuccessfully to liberate all of viceroyalty; royalist forces retained control of what is now Uruguay, Paraguay, and Bolivia, however.

1816 Congress of Tucuman declared complete independence from Spain (July 9); United Provinces of Río de la Plata formed from liberated territories.

1819–20 Civil war between leaders from Buenos Aires, who wanted strong central government, and leaders from other provinces, who favored federal system of government; political turmoil continued into the 1830s.

1825–27 Argentina successfully aided Uruguayans in war against Brazil; this led to Uruguay's independence.

1835 J. Rosas assumed dictatorial powers as governor of Buenos Aires Province; rapidly extended his control over other Argentine provinces through reign of terror; united Argentina under his firm control until 1852.

1852 Rosas overthrown by J. Urquiza.

1853 Argentine constitution adopted; Argentine Republic proclaimed; Urquiza became first president.

1854–59 Buenos Aires Province seceded from the republic; defeated and forced to return five years later.

1862 Buenos Aires made capital of Argentina.

1880–86, 1896–1904 Julio Argentino Roca became president; rapid development of Argentina during his presidencies.

1902 Long-standing border dispute with Chile settled.

1914–18 Argentina remained neutral during WW I.

1916–22, 1928–30 Radical party led by H. Irigoyen came to power; instituted many reforms but provoked growing opposition.

1930 Pres. H. Irigoyen overthrown by conservatives, led by Gen. José Uriburu, as economic problems caused by the Great Depression mounted.

1938 Radicals under Roberto Ortíz returned to power; kept Argentina neutral during WW II though fascist groups were active.

1943 Military coup; ruling military junta included Col. Juan Perón.

1946–55 J. Perón established popular dictatorship; regime marked by reduction of civil and political liberties.

1949 Perón secured new constitution allowing him to succeed himself as president.

1955 Military forced ouster of Perón; new government faced serious economic problems as well as the problem of dealing with Perón's followers (Peronistas).

1966 Military seized power to prevent Peronistas from gaining office; Gen. Juan Carlos Ongania in office as president (1966–70).

1971 Ban on political parties (since 1966) ended.

1972 Juan Perón returned to Argentina (Nov. 17) after 17-year exile.

1973 First elections since 1965; Héctor J. Cámpora, a Peronista, won presidency.

1973 President Cámpora resigned (July 13) to allow Perón to run for presidency.

1973–74 President J. Perón in office as elected president; his wife Isabel elected vice-president.

1974 Mass arrests (May) in Tucuman province begun to counter left-wing opposition to the Perón government.

1974 Perón died in office (July); his wife succeeded him as president.

1974 President Isabel Perón declared (Nov.) a state of siege following outbreak of numerous terrorist attacks.

1976 President Perón overthrown (Mar.) and arrested in military coup; Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafaél Videla became new president.

1977 Inflation reported near 350% for previous year.

1981–82 Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri in office as president.

1982 Falkland Islands War (Apr.–June); Argentine invasion force driven off islands by British troops.

1982 Galtieri ousted (June) after Argentina lost Falkland Islands War.

Arginusae, Battle of Sea battle during the Peloponnesian War. The Spartan Navy, under Callicratidas, was defeated by the Athenians, under Conon, off the Arginusae Islands in the Aegean Sea (406 BC.). Callicratidas was killed and over half of the Spartan ships were sunk.

Ariadne In Greek mythology, the daughter of King Minos of Crete. She loved Theseus and helped him to slay the Minotaur. Later abandoned by Theseus, she wedded the god Dionysus.

Arianism Christian heresy (4th cent. AD) concerning the nature of Christ in relation to God. Arianism was the subject of a great controversy in the East, provoked (*c*318) by an Alexandrian priest, Arius (d. 336). Arius' teachings, which held that Christ was not of the same divine nature as God, were condemned at the First Council of Nicaea (1st ecumenical). The controversy continued, however, and a number of factions arose in opposition to the orthodox Christian Nicene party. These factions were supported by Constantius II, Roman ruler in the East, and, when he became sole emperor (350), he imposed Arianism throughout the empire. The accession of orthodox Christian rulers in the West (Gratian) and East (Theodosius I) brought an end to the controversy within the empire. The First Council of Constantinople (381) was convened and affirmed the Nicene formula. Arianism survived among Germanic tribes until the mid-7th cent.

Ariosto, Ludovico 1474–1533. Italian epic and lyric poet. His major work, the Orlando Furioso, an epic based on the story of Roland, is considered a Renaissance masterpiece.

Aristarchus of Samos fl. 3d cent. BC Greek astronomer believed to have been the first to maintain that the earth revolves around the sun. He is also said to have deduced that night and day are caused by the earth's rotation.

Aristides *d. c*468 BC. Athenian general and statesman, a commander at the Battle of Marathon, for which he was made chief archon. Later ostracized for opposition to Themistocles, he returned to fight with Athens at Salamis (480 BC) and Plataea (479). He was founder of the Delian League (478).

aristocracy Government by a special or privileged class of people, often the landed or very wealthy, considered especially worthy of ruling. It is theoretically distinct from oligarchy, in that power is wielded for the best interests of the state, not for personal gain. In modern times the term is often used to denote the privileged class itself. The governments of Athens (to the 5th cent. BC), Sparta, and Rome (during the Republic) are examples of government by aristocrats.

Aristophanes *c*448–*c*388 BC. Athenian dramatist, considered the greatest writer of ancient Greek comedy. Little is known of Aristophanes' life, but his comedies provide a revealing picture of the society, the literature and the politics of his day. His plays range from an attack on the Peloponnesian War to a satire on Socrates. He is believed to have written about 40 plays, of which 11 survive. They include The Birds, The Frogs, Lysistrata, The Clouds, The Acharnians, and The Knights.

Aristotelianism The great body of Aristotle's teachings and subsequent additions and interpretations that have accrued to it since Aristotle's lifetime (4th cent. BC). Aristotelianism flourished within and greatly influenced many cultures outside Greece. Many of Aristotle's fundamental doctrines continue to be influential in modern times. Aristotelianism spread from Greece to Rome, and, after the fall of Rome, Aristotle's teachings were lost in the West. Aristotelianism flourished (from 9th cent. AD) among the Arabs, however, and was reintroduced to the West by Muslim and Jewish scholars (12th and 13th cents.). Through the works of Saint Thomas Aquinas (13th cent.), who synthesized Aristotelian rationalism and Christian thought, Aristotelianism greatly influenced the course of medieval scholasticism and Roman Catholic theology. (See also Aristotle.)

Aristotle 384–322 BC. Macedonian Greek philosopher and scientist, one of the great thinkers of all time. His works in philosophy, science, ethics, and esthetics had a major influence on the development of civilization in the West. Aristotle studied (367–347 BC) under Plato at the Academy in Athens and later tutored (342–335?) Alexander the Great. Returning to Athens in 335, he opened a school (the Lyceum) and taught there until just before his death. His works, lost in the West after the fall of Rome, were reintroduced by Arab scholars in the 9th cent. and formed the basis of scholasticism (q.v.). In his time, Aristotle and his followers, known as Peripatetics, stressed the importance of observation, the necessary correlation of theory to fact, and the value of logic. Aristotle's works, actually compiled from lecture notes two centuries after his death, include Organon, on logic; Nicomachean Ethics, on moral philosophy; Metaphysics, on fundamental metaphysical concepts; Politics; Poetics, on esthetics; Constitution of Athens, on Athenian government; and works in the sciences. (See also Aristotelianism.)

Arizona US state (pop. 2,717,900) in the Southwest. Originally inhabited by Pueblo, Apache, and Navaho Indians, the region was explored by the Spanish in 1539. Although Indians successfully prevented permanent settlements in the region until the 18th cent., it was ruled as part of New Spain (1598–1821) and part of independent Mexico (1821–48). By the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden Purchase (1848, 1853), it became US territory. The defeat of the Apaches (late 19th cent.) brought a rise in ranching operations there, and in 1912 Arizona became the 48th state. The state constitution was passed in 1911.

Arkansas 25th US state (pop. 2,285,500), located in the south-central part of the country. The region was explored by the Spanish (1541), and the first permanent settlement, Arkansas Post (1682), was established by the French. Settled for a time under the Mississippi Scheme (*c*1720), the region changed hands between the French and Spanish before the US bought it in the Louisiana Purchase (1803). It was established as a separate territory (1819), and then became a state (1836). The region was settled in the early 1800s, and during the Civil War it joined the Confederacy (1861). Resistance to enfranchisement of Negroes held up readmission to the Union until 1868. The current state constitution was passed in 1874.

Arkwright, Sir Richard 1732–92. English inventor of the cotton spinning frame and other power-driven weaving devices. He was a major figure in the development of the factory system of textile production in England.

Arles, Council of Roman Catholic church council (AD 314). Constantine I convened this council in Gaul to deal with the Donatists (q.v.). It again condemned the Donatists and affirmed the supremacy of Rome.

Arlington, Henry Bennet, 1st earl of 1618–85. An English statesman. As secretary of state (1662–74) under King Charles II, he became a leading member of the Cabal (q.v.). In 1674 he was impeached for corruption and pro-Catholicism. Acquitted, he resigned.

Armada See Spanish Armada

Armageddon Biblical place where, at the end of the world, the forces of evil on earth will war against the forces of God. It is believed that the ancient city of Megiddo, Palestine, site of numerous battles, was the model for Armageddon.

Armagnacs Faction of French noblemen whose war with the Burgundians (1411–18) for control of France figured in the Hundred Years' War. The Armagnac faction was formed by Bernard VII, count of Armagnac, following the murder of Louis d'Orléans (1407) in a struggle for control of the French throne. A Burgundian, John the Fearless, was in power when civil war broke out (1411) between the two factions. The Armagnacs seized control in 1413 but became embroiled in the defense of France against an invasion by English king Henry V. John the Fearless was subsequently able to regain control of the government (1418) and thereupon massacred the Armagnacs. John was assassinated (1419) and King Charles VII came to power. Charles' alliance with the Burgundians (1435) assured the Armagnacs' final decline. (See also Burgundians.)

Armenia Region and former kingdom of Asia Minor, located in northeast Turkey and southwest Russia. The Armenian people settled the area before the 6th cent. BC, and Armenia became an independent kingdom in 189 BC. The Romans soon conquered it (69–67 BC). Armenia was first to adopt Christianity as a state religion (AD 303), and in the 4th–5th cents. AD suffered persecutions at the hands of the Zoroastrian Persians. Armenia was subsequently conquered by many different peoples until the 16th cent., when the Ottoman Turks took over the region. From 1894 to 1915, Armenians suffered sporadic massacres by the Turks. During WW I, they revolted and established an independent Armenia (1918). By 1921, however, Armenian territory had been divided and annexed by the USSR and Turkey.

Armenian church ⟨also called the Gregorian church⟩ Eastern Christian sect and Armenian national church. Founded (AD 303) in the kingdom of Armenia, it was the first Christian state church. It broke with Rome after the Council of Chalcedon (451) in a dispute over Monophysitism. The church, though it has renewed ties with Rome, maintains a largely autonomous status.

Arminianism Christian theological movement. Begun (*c*1603) by Dutch religious reformer J. Arminius, the movement opposed Calvinists' extreme belief in predestination. Instead, the Arminians asserted free will was fully compatible with God's sovereignty over man. Arminians issued (1610) the Remonstrance, a statement of their position, and were condemned by the Dutch Synod of Dort (1618–19). Arminianism, however, later influenced J. Wesley and Methodist doctrine.

Arminius d. AD *c*19. Chief of German tribes, once a Roman citizen. He disgraced the Roman Empire when his forces surprised and decimated a Roman army (AD 9) commanded by Varus in the Teutoburg Forest, east of the Rhine River. Arminius was later badly beaten in battle (AD 16) against Germanicus Caesar.

Arminius, Jacobus ⟨Jacob Harmensen⟩ 1560–1609. Dutch theologian who opposed the Calvinist view of predestination and whose doctrines became known as Arminianism (q.v.).

armistice A temporary halt in fighting, mutually agreed upon by belligerents. Strictly speaking, a general armistice does not end the state of war. This is technically accomplished by a peace treaty. In fact, however, armistices ended both WW I (Nov. 11, 1918) and the Korean War (July 27, 1953) and each was a form of peace treaty.

Armstrong, John 1758–1843. American general, politician, and diplomat. He authored the Newburgh Letters (1783), anonymous letters written during the American Revolution demanding payment of soldiers' back pay. Later, as secretary of war (1813–14), he was blamed for military reverses in the War of 1812, including the British capture of Washington, D.C.

Armstrong, Neil Alden 1930–. American astronaut. On July 20, 1969, Armstrong became the first man to set foot on the moon. As part of the Apollo 11 flight, he and E. Aldrin remained on the moon's surface for twenty hours, collecting samples and data.

Army of the Green Standard Army in China established during the Ch'ing dynasty (1644–1912). At one time it numbered 600,000 men (stationed throughout the empire) and acted as a supplementary army to the military force established by the Banner System. It deteriorated in strength, however, and proved ineffective against rebels in the Taiping Rebellion (1860–65).

Arnauld ⟨Arnault⟩ ⟨Arnaut⟩ French family whose members were leaders of Jansenism. They include Antoine Arnauld (1612–94), his sister Jacqueline Marie Arnauld (1591–1661), and his brother Robert Arnauld d'Andilly (*c*1588–1674).

Arnhem, Battle of German victory (Sept. 17–25, 1944) in WW II. During the Allied drive across Europe, British and Polish airborne troops made a heroic but unsuccessful attempt to seize control of a bridge across the Rhine at Arnhem, The Netherlands.

Arnold, Benedict 1741–1801. US general and notorious traitor during the American Revolution. His brilliant campaigns at Lake Champlain (1776) and at Saratoga (1777) did not earn him the recognition he coveted. Disaffected, he attempted (1780) to surrender West Point to the British. The plot was uncovered; his accomplice, Major J. André, was executed; and Arnold fled to the British.

Arnold, Matthew 1822–88. English poet and critic, one of the great English literary figures of his day. An inspector of schools (1851–86) and an Oxford professor (1857–67), he published his first volume of poetry in 1849. He subsequently published collected works, such as Other Poems and New Poems, and works of literary and social criticism, such as Essays in Criticism and Culture and Anarchy.

Arnold, Thomas 1795–1842. English educator. His reforms as headmaster of the Rugby School influenced the English system of public education. He was the father of Matthew Arnold.

Arnold of Brescia *c*1090–1155. Italian monk and religious reformer. Opposed to church wealth and corruption, he supported a republican uprising in Rome, and in 1155 was arrested, tried, and executed.

Arnulf *c*850–899. King of the East Franks (887–899) and Holy Roman Emperor (896–99). He overthrew his uncle, Holy Roman Emperor Charles III, and became king of the Germans, defeated the Normans (891), invaded Italy at Pope Formosus' invitation, and captured Rome (895). He was crowned emperor by the pope (896) and was the last Carolingian emperor.

Aroostook War US-Canadian border controversy. Residents of Maine and New Brunswick were involved in a dispute over rival claims to the Aroostook Valley in 1838–39, though there was no actual bloodshed. The question was settled by the Webster-Ashburton Treaty (1842).

Árpád *c*840–907. Magyar chief and Hungarian national hero. He led his people from Asia into what is now Hungary (*c*890) and founded the line of Hungarian kings known as the Árpád dynasty (ruled 997–1301).

Arras, Battle of 1. French victory (Aug. 24–25, 1654) at Arras, France, over Spanish forces in the last years of the Thirty Years' War. The French broke a Spanish siege of Arras, killing some 3,000 soldiers. 2. Unsuccessful British offensive (Apr. 9–May 3, 1917) at Arras, France, during WW I. The offensive, intended to draw German forces northward, was commanded by British Field Marshal D. Haig. Losses were 75,000 Germans and 84,000 British.

Arras, Treaty of 1. In 1435, French king Charles VII and Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy, concluded a treaty that reconciled the Burgundians with the monarchy and ended the Burgundian alliance with England (under the Treaty of Troyes). 2. In 1482, French king Louis XI signed a treaty with Maximilian I (later Holy Roman Emperor), providing for the marriage of his son to Maximilian's daughter. France got Artois and Franche-Comté, which it returned (1493) when the marriage was called off.

Arriaga, Manuel José de 1842–1917. Portuguese politician. A leader in the revolt (1910) that deposed King Manuel II, he was the first president (1911–15) of the republic. He resigned (1915), following royalist uprisings.

Arsacidae ⟨Arsacids⟩ ⟨Arshakuni⟩ Dynasty of Parthian rulers. Founded by Arsaces I (*c*250 BC), who overthrew the Seleucids, the dynasty ruled over Persia and Mesopotamia. The Arsacidae kings ruled until the Sassanidae conquest (AD *c*226). Noted rulers of the dynasty were Mithradates I and II (reigned 171–138 BC, 123–88 BC).

Artaxerxes I d. 425 BC. Persian king (465–425 BC), successor to his father Xerxes I. He put down revolts in Egypt and Bactria, and fought the Athenians. He is noted for his toleration toward Judaism.

Artaxerxes II *d. c*359 BC. Persian king (404–*c*359 BC), successor to his father, Darius II. Under his rule Persia lost control of Egypt, and his brother Cyrus the Younger led an unsuccessful uprising (ending 401 at Cunaxa) against him. Conflicts with the Greek city-states also erupted, and Persian hegemony in Greece was established by the King's Peace (386 BC).

Artaxerxes III d. 338 BC. Persian king (*c*359–338 BC), successor to his father, Artaxerxes II. He won power by murdering many of his relatives, and his reign was marked by cruelty and bloodshed. He conquered Egypt (343 BC) and checked the decline of the Persian Empire.

Arthur I 1187–1203? Duke of Brittany. On the death of his uncle, English king Richard I, his claim to the throne was usurped by his uncle, King John. Arthur was imprisoned (1202) by John, who is also believed to have murdered him.

Arthur, Chester Alan 1830–86. US president (1881–85), the 21st, successor to Pres. J. Garfield following his assassination (1881). A prominent New York lawyer, he was early identified as a machine politician because of his association with New York Republican party boss Sen. Roscoe Conkling (1829–88). Although he had been allied with the Stalwarts faction (q.v.), Arthur became the Republican nominee for vice-president, as running mate to Garfield, and entered office with him (1881). There was concern Arthur might corrupt the national government with machine politics. But when he became president (Sept. 19, 1881), he reassured an anxious public and governed with integrity throughout his tenure. During his presidency, the Pendleton Civil Service Act (1883) was passed and the Star Route Frauds came to trial. He did not seek reelection and died soon after he left office.

Arthurian legend The exploits of the legendary British King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table, as developed in medieval romances and adventure stories. Prominent elements of the legend include Arthur's life and conquests; the legend of Merlin; Sir Lancelot's affair with Arthur's wife, Queen Guinevere; the quest for the Holy Grail and the exploits of Sir Galahad, Parsifal, and others; Arthur's death from wounds sustained in battle with Mordred (his nephew and enemy); and the final ruin of Camelot. The legends are thought to derive from Celtic myths. Among the major works in the Arthurian cycle are Historia Regnum Britanniae (*c*1135) by Geoffrey of Monmouth, Roman de Brut (*c*1155) by Wace, works by Chrétien de Troyes, and Morte d'Arthur by Sir T. Malory.

Articles of Confederation First Constitution of the US (1781–89), which established a confederation of the original thirteen states. Though a central government was created by the articles, real power resided with the states. The ultimate failure of this system led to creation of a strong federal government. The articles were drafted (1776) by J. Dickinson, were passed (Nov. 15, 1777) by the Continental Congress, and became effective Mar. 1, 1781. They kept the Continental Congress as the confederation's central government and theoretically gave it power to control national and international affairs. But the Congress lacked enforcement powers, and by 1786 it was clear a new form of government was needed. The articles were superseded (1789) by the Constitution, drafted at the Constitutional Convention (1787).

Articles of Schwabach Seventeen Protestant articles of faith drawn up (1529) by M. Luther and others at Schwabach, Bavaria. These articles subsequently formed the basis of the Augsburg Confession (q.v.).

Artigas, José Gervasio 1764–1850. Uruguayan revolutionary leader and national hero. He fought in the revolution (1811) against Spain and then against the junta governing the United Provinces. He established control over areas now in Uruguay and Argentina (1814–20) but was forced into exile by a Portuguese invasion from Brazil.

art nouveau Artistic style. Art Nouveau developed in the late 19th cent. and early 20th cent. as a reaction against the excesses of Victorian art. It emphasized the use of lines, as typified by works of P. Gauguin and H. Toulouse-Lautrec.

Asculum, Battle of ⟨Ausculum⟩ 1. Victory (279 BC) for Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, over the Romans in what is now southeast Italy. Some 40,000 soldiers under Pyrrhus defeated an equal force of Romans at great cost. Casualties numbered 6,000 Epirots to 3,500 Romans, giving rise to the expression "Pyrrhic victory." 2. Victory (89 BC) for Rome in the Social War (q.v.). The revolt against Rome led by the Marsi and other tribes centered, in the south, at Asculum and was marked by a massacre of Roman citizens there (90 BC). The Romans retook the city (89 BC) and soon after ended the war by extending citizenship to the rebellious tribes.

Ashanti, Empire of ⟨Asante, ~⟩ African kingdom in what is now central Ghana. The Ashanti people occupied the region by the 13th cent. and, in the second half of the 17th, King Osei Tutu created the empire, with his capital at Kumasi. The Ashanti continued to expand their empire, supplying (18th cent.) the British and Dutch with slaves from conquered peoples. Wars with the British in the 1820s, 1860s, and 1870s led first to a British takeover (1896), then annexation to the British Gold Coast colony (1901).

Aspern-Essling, Battle of Battle (May 21–22, 1809, near Vienna) during the Napoleonic Wars. Austrian archduke Charles Louis, commanding 80,000 soldiers, defeated Napoleon's army of 80,000 men. Austria lost 24,000 men, the French over 20,000, including Marshal J. Lannes. It was Napoleon's most serious defeat up to that time.

Asquith, Herbert Henry, 1st earl of Oxford and Asquith 1852–1928. British statesman and prime minister (1908–16), successor to H. Campbell-Bannerman. A liberal member of Parliament from 1886, he became an influential party spokesman and helped return the liberals to power in 1905. He was chancellor of the exchequer (1905–08). As prime minister, he instituted old-age pensions (1908) and unemployment insurance (1911). Following a crisis over the budget, he won passage of the Parliament Act of 1911, by which the House of Lords lost its veto powers. Asquith's advocacy (1912) of Irish Home Rule precipitated a crisis in Ireland. Britain entered WW I under his guidance but military setbacks led to his ouster in 1916. He continued as Liberal Party leader until 1926.

Assad, Hafiz al- 1928–. Syrian general and president (1971–). Assad was a defense minister who became Syria's president (Feb. 22, 1971) after leading a coup d'état. He is considered a strong supporter of the PLO.

Assassin Member of secret Muslim order that, by its practice of murdering all enemies of the order, terrorized the Muslim world (11th–13th cents.). It was founded (*c*1090) by Hasan ibn al-Sabbah (d. 1124) after the capture of Almut, a fort in Persia (now Iran). From this base the order, an offshoot of the Ismaili sect of Islam, spread throughout Persia and into Syria. Its followers in Persia were said to have murdered caliphs, generals, and statesmen of the Abbassid caliphate before the order fell to Mongol invaders (1256). The Syrian branch fell (1272) to the Mamelukes of Egypt.

Assembly of Notables French assembly called (Feb., 1787) in the years prior to the French Revolution (1789–99). It was convoked by Finance Minister Charles Calonne (1734–1802) to approve a land tax needed to keep the government out of bankruptcy. The assembly refused to give its approval, as had the Parliament, and forced Calonne's ouster. The assembly was dissolved May, 1787.

Assyria An ancient Near Eastern empire that, at its height (9th–7th cents. BC), included lands in present-day Arabia, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Syria, Palestine, and Turkey. Assyria's original capital, Ashur —named after the city's principal god—was located on the upper Tigris River as early as the 3d millennium BC. From Ashur Assyrians expanded by means of successive military conquests. Innovative and effective soldiers and organizers of what they conquered, they were legendary in antiquity for their cruelty. Their greatest expansion began with Tiglath-Pileser III, who subdued Babylonia. Sargon II defeated Israel (722 BC) and deported the inhabitants. The wars of his successor, Sennacherib, with his vassal, Hezekiah of Judah, are mentioned in the Bible. Under Ashurbanipal, Assyria reached its height (7th cent. BC). The cuneiform library collected about this time, and excavated from the ruins of the Assyrian capital at Ninevah, constitutes one of the best sources of knowledge about the ancient Near East. Early in the reign of Ashurbanipal, Egypt broke away from the empire in a revolt led by Psamtik I. Thereafter the decline was rapid. The Medes and the Babylonians conquered Ninevah itself in 612 BC.

Aston, Francis William 1877–1945. An English physicist. He developed the mass spectrograph and discovered a number of isotopes. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Chemistry in 1922.

Astor, John Jacob 1763–1848. American merchant, financier, and founder of the Astor family fortune. In 1808, he formed the American Fur Company (q.v.), which came to monopolize US fur trade and is considered the first American trust.

Astor, Nancy Witcher Langhorne, Viscountess Astor 1879–1964. A British politician. She was the first woman to sit in the House of Commons (1919–45) and was identified with the "Cliveden set," a group of British leaders who sought to appease fascist powers in the 1930s.

Asturias, Kingdom of Former Spanish kingdom (718–910) located in northwestern Spain. Fleeing the Muslim invasion of Spain, Visigothic nobles formed this northern kingdom as the last Christian stronghold in Spain. In succeeding centuries it served as the starting point for the Christian reconquest of Spain and became known as the kingdom of León and Asturias.

Astyages fl. 6th cent. BC. Last king of the Median Empire (584–*c*550 BC). He was overthrown by Cyrus the Great, who thereby founded Persia.

Asunción Capital (pop. 435,000) of Paraguay. It was founded 1536 or 1537 and was the major city in the Rio de la Plata region until the rise of Buenos Aires.

Asurbanipal See Ashurbanipal

Aswan ⟨Assuan⟩ ⟨Assouan⟩ Egyptian city (pop. 217,000) in Upper Egypt. Called Syene in ancient times, it was once a trading center and stone quarry, supplying stone for the great works of the Pharaohs. Nearby are the Aswan Dam (completed 1902) and the Aswan High Dam (completed 1970).

Atahaulpa d. 1533. Last Inca ruler before the Spanish conquest of Peru. He overthrew his brother Huascar (1532) and made himself ruler of the Inca Empire in Peru. He was captured (1532) and executed by the Spanish conquistadors under F. Pizarro.

Atalanta In Greek mythology, a beautiful huntress who challenged her suitors to beat her in a footrace. Hippomenes won by dropping golden apples, which Atalanta stopped to retrieve. The two were changed into lions after defiling a shrine of Cybele.

Atatürk, Kemal 1881–1938. Turkish soldier, statesman, and president (1923–38), considered the founder of modern Turkey. He was a leading figure in the Young Turks and other nationalist groups from 1908. By 1921 he headed a nationalist army, which repulsed a Greek invasion (1919–22) and subsequently overthrew the sultan (1922). He abolished the sultanate (Nov. 1, 1922), and, during his long term as president of the republic, he instituted many reforms aimed at westernizing Turkey.

Athaliah fl. 9th cent. BC. In the Old Testament, the wife of Jehoram and mother of Ahaziah. She succeeded Ahaziah and became queen of Judah, slaying all the royal children but Jehoash. An uprising resulted in her death and the succession of Jehoash.

Athanagild d. 567. Visigothic king of Spain (554–567). He became king by an alliance with Byzantine emperor Justinian I and restored peace within his domains by ending persecution of Catholics. He was father of Frankish queens Brunhilda and Galswintha.

Athanasius, Saint AD *c*293–373. Patriarch of Alexandria (AD 328–373) and Doctor of the Church. He attended the First Council of Nicaea and became the chief defender of Nicene orthodoxy against Arianism. He was several times exiled for his beliefs.

atheism Philosophical doctrine. Atheists deny the existence of God or any other supernatural power. The term was used by the ancient Greeks, though atheism did not become significant in the Western world until the 18th cent. Among the noted exponents of atheism are P. Holbach, L. Feuerback, and R. Ingersoll.

Athelstan ⟨Aethelstan⟩ d. 939. Saxon king (924–39), successor to his father, Edward the Elder. He defeated a confederation of his opponents at Brunanburh (937) and became the first Saxon ruler of all England.

Athena ⟨Pallas Athena⟩ Greek goddess, the goddess of wisdom, arts and crafts, and war. She was protectress of cities, especially Athens, which was named for her. She is identified with the Roman Minerva.

Athenian League, Second. Another name for the second period (378–338 BC) of the Delian League (q.v.), an alliance of Greek city-states dominated by Athens.

Athens Historic city (pop. 867,000), capital of Greece. Athens was a focal point of ancient Greek culture, noted as a center of the arts and learning. Many of the temples and other buildings of the ancient city remain as classic works of architecture. The democratic form of government developed in the city-state of Athens is considered the forerunner of modern democracy. Great philosophers (Socrates, Plato, Aristotle) taught there and the masters of Greek drama (Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, and Aristophanes) were all Athenians. Inhabited before 3000 BC, Athens rose as a dominant city-state in ancient Greece during the 5th cent. BC. Its power was broken by its archrival, Sparta, during the Peloponnesian War at the end of the 5th cent. Athens continued for a time as a cultural center, but it never again attained its former greatness. (See also Greece.) Key events in the history of Athens include:

c700 BC Athens became leader of 12 towns in Attica.

683 BC Hereditary kingship abolished in Athens; archons to serve one year.

621 BC Draco's law code; first Athenian law code established harsh system of justice.

594 BC Solon made archon amid grave social crisis; Draconian code reformed; involuntary servitude for debt (serfdom) abolished; reforms laid basis for democracy.

561–527 BC Pisistratus in power as tyrant; rapid expansion of city begun; temple construction started.

508 BC Cleisthenes instituted his reforms; established Athenian democracy.

490–479 BC Persian Wars; Athens and the other city-states ultimately repulsed the Persian invaders.

490–480 BC Themistocles in power; built up Athenian navy and (in 478 BC) rebuilt the city's fortifications.

c480–c380 BC Greek drama flourished at Athens during this period.

480 BC Athens destroyed by Persian king Xerxes; rebuilt soon after.

480 BC Athenian navy won a great victory over the Persians at Salamis.

478 BC First Delian League formed by Athens to protect against Persians.

460–429 BC Pericles in power; fostered Athenian golden age and made Athens the political and cultural center of Greece.

454 BC Treasury of the Delian League transferred to Athens; Athens dominated other city-states of the league.

447 BC Construction of the Acropolis began.

431–404 BC Peloponnesian War against Sparta; victorious Spartans forced Athens to tear down its defenses; imposed rule of Thirty Tyrants (404 BC); Athens never regained former power.

403 BC Athenians overthrew the Thirty Tyrants; rebuilt defenses.

399 BC Socrates forced to poison himself.

395–387 BC Corinthian War; Athens defeated Sparta.

378 BC The Second Delian League formed by Athens.

357–355 BC Social War; Athens forced to recognize independence of allies it had once dominated.

338 BC Battle of Chaeronaea; Macedonians conquered Athens.

c335 BC Aristotle opened his school, the Lyceum, at Athens.

323–322 BC Lamian Wars; unsuccessful revolt against Macedonian rule; Athens reduced to a provincial city; became a center of Hellenic culture.

197 BC Athens came under Roman control, after Romans defeated Macedonians.

86 BC Roman general Sulla sacked Athens, after Athenians opposed Rome in the Mithridatic War.

FROM AD 395 Visigoths captured city (AD 395) as Roman power declined; Athens entered a long period of obscurity in which it passed to Byzantines and later the Turks (15th cent.)

1687–88 Parthenon badly damaged in war between Ottoman Turks and Venice.

1834 Athens became capital of independent Greek kingdom; city largely rebuilt in following years.

1941–1944 German occupation of city during WW II.

Atkinson, Sir Harry Albert 1831–92. A British-born prime minister (1876–77, 1883–84, 1887–90) of New Zealand. While serving as prime minister and in other government posts, he encouraged local farming and industry, abolished provincial governments, and established a centralized government.

Atlanta Capital (pop. 425,000) of Georgia, in the US South, founded 1837. A major commercial center, it was a strategic supply and rail center during the Civil War. Captured (Sept. 2, 1864), the city was burned (Nov. 15, 1864) before Gen. W. Sherman's march to the sea. It became the permanent state capital in 1877.

Atlanta, Battle of See Atlanta Campaign

Atlanta Campaign Series of battles (May 7–Sept. 2, 1864) fought by Union forces to capture Atlanta, Georgia, during the American Civil War (1861–65). Atlanta's capture was an important factor in the reelection of Pres. A. Lincoln. Gen. W. Sherman began moving his 100,000-man army from Chattanooga toward Atlanta on May 7. He was opposed in a long series of battles by Gen. J. Johnston (replaced by Gen. J. Hood, July 17), commanding a smaller Confederate force. These battles included engagements at Kennesaw Mountain (June 27), Peachtree Creek (July 20), Atlanta (July 22), and Ezra Church (July 28). Thereafter Sherman began heavy bombardment of the city and gradually extended Union positions around it. Sherman forced Gen. Hood to abandon the city, and occupied it Sept. 2, 1864.

Atlanta Compromise Plan for racial harmony. In a speech given (1895) at Atlanta, Georgia, black spokesman B.T. Washington advocated friendly but separate social existences for America's blacks and whites. Whites applauded the speech, but disapproving blacks later founded the Niagara Movement (1905).

Atlantic, Battle of the Prolonged contest for control of the Atlantic during WW II. The German Navy, far smaller than the British and French navies at the outset of the war, soon resorted to submarine warfare. Allied losses of cargo shipping were heavy during the early part of WW II. But, by mid-1943, the Allies were clearly winning the battle against German submarine wolf packs, by using the convoy system and antisubmarine warfare techniques.

Atlantic Charter WW II declaration (Aug. 14, 1941) by British prime minister W. Churchill and US pres. F. Roosevelt that outlined a program for world peace. The principles of the Atlantic Charter were later incorporated (1942) into the UN Charter. The joint declaration resulted from meetings between the two leaders held aboard naval vessels in the Atlantic. Though the US was still officially neutral, it pledged, with Britain, to: forgo territorial gains; restore sovereignty to governments conquered by force; make basic raw materials available to all nations; promote improvement of economic and social conditions worldwide; ensure freedom from fear and want; maintain freedom of the seas; and work toward eliminating war.

Atlantis Legendary Greek island in the Atlantic Ocean, mentioned by Plato. Atlantis and its highly developed civilization supposedly sank beneath the sea after an earthquake.

Atlas In Greek mythology, a Titan (q.v.), the son of Iapetus and Clymene, and brother of Prometheus. He led the Titans in unsuccessful war against the gods and was condemned to hold the heavens upon his shoulders.

atomic bomb Weapon of great destructive power, using energy that results from the splitting of atoms. It was developed by the US in a crash program (Manhattan Project, from 1940) during WW II. The first atomic bomb was exploded (July 16, 1945) at the New Mexico testing grounds. Two bombs were subsequently dropped on Japan (Hiroshima, Aug. 6, and Nagasaki, Aug. 9, 1945), which forced Japan's surrender and opened the age of nuclear warfare.

atomism Scientific doctrine. Atomism holds that the universe is composed of individual particles that are invisible and indestructible. First put forward by such ancient Greek thinkers as Leucippus and Democritus, the theory gained importance among European scientists from the 17th cent. on.

atomists Early school of Greek philosophy, adherents of atomism (q.v.).

Aton ⟨Aten⟩ Egyptian god. Aton was worshiped as a sun god and sole creator of the world during the rein of Egyptian king Ikhnaton. One of the earliest recorded instances of monotheism, this worship of the single god Aton ended with the restoration of the god Amon after Ikhnaton's death.

Atreus In Greek mythology, king of Mycenae and father of Agamemnon and Menelaus. Rivalry with his brother, Thyestes, over the Mycenaean throne resulted in the seduction of Atreus' wife by Thyestes and the murder of Thyestes' sons by Atreus. Atreus was later killed by Thyestes' last son, Aegisthus.

Attica Region surrounding Athens in ancient Greece, located in what is now east-central Greece. The early history of the region is uncertain. Greek legend tells of the unification of 12 independent Attic towns by Theseus to form the city-state of Athens. From the 13th cent. BC onward, Athens was the preeminent city of Attica, and, from the 5th cent. BC, the region came under Athenian control. Other Attic cities include Marathon and Eleusis.

Attila AD 406?–453. King of the Huns (AD 434–53), notorious as the leader of savage barbarian hordes from central Asia that attacked the Roman Empire. Called the "Scourge of God," he became ruler of the Huns with his brother Bleda in 434. Though East Roman emperor Theodosius II had agreed (AD 434) to pay the Huns tribute, Attila and Bleda nevertheless attacked (441) the eastern Roman provinces. They ravaged the countryside and finally agreed (443) to a treaty that trebled monies paid by the Romans. After murdering Bleda (445), Attila became sole ruler of the Huns and again attacked (447–50) the Romans. In 450, Roman emperors Marcian and Valentinian III refused Attila his tribute. Attila, with an army of some 500,000 barbarians, invaded Gaul (451), unsuccessfully laid siege to Orléans, and was defeated (451) at the Battle of Châlons by the Romans and Visigoths. He withdrew to Hungary, then ravaged northern Italy (452), and was forced to break off the invasion before reaching Rome. He died a short time later.

Attlee, Clement Richard, 1st Earl 1883–1967. British statesman and prime minister (1945–51). A social worker and member of the Fabian Society in his early years, he headed the British Labour party (1935–55). As prime minister, he instituted many important Socialist reforms, including founding of the National Health Service and nationalization of the Bank of England, utilities, and basic industries. His administration also saw Britain's granting of independence to India (1947), Pakistan (1947), Burma (1948), Palestine (1948), and Ceylon (1948, now Sri Lanka).

Auckland Major city (pop. 149,000) and port in New Zealand, situated on the North Island. Founded in 1840, it was the capital of New Zealand until 1865.

audiencia Court of Spain during the late medieval period. It had administrative and judicial powers, and figured prominently in Spain's American colonies, where it helped check abuses of authority by colonial government officials.

Audubon, John James 1785–1851. American ornithologist and artist, best known for his drawings of North American birds in The Birds of America.

Augean stables See Augeas

Augeas In Greek mythology, the owner of the Augean stables, in which he kept vast herds of cattle. Hercules' sixth task was to clean the stables, unaided, in a day. This he did by diverting a river through them.

Augsburg, Diet of Meeting convened (Apr. 8, 1530) by Holy Roman Emperor Charles V to convince rebellious Lutheran noblemen to help turn back a Turkish invasion of the empire. The meeting failed to win over the Lutherans. The Augsburg Confession (q.v.) was presented during this council. Other diets held at Augsburg include those of 1547–48 (see Augsburg Interim) and 1555 (see Augsburg, Peace of).

Augsburg, League of Pact formed (July 9, 1686) against France by Holy Roman Emperor Leopold I and his allies prior to the War of the Grand Alliance (1688–97). Leopold entered into the defensive alliance with Holland, Sweden, Spain, Bavaria, the Palatinate, and Saxony. The league was replaced (1689) by the Grand Alliance.

Augsburg, Peace of A convention established (Sept. 25, 1555) at Augsburg, Bavaria, providing for an end to religious conflicts of the Reformation within the Holy Roman Empire. The settlement allowed individual states to decide whether Catholicism or Lutheranism was to be practiced in their territories and determined that Catholics and Lutherans should migrate to states where their faith had been adopted. Though Calvinists were not included in the agreement, the settlement halted religious conflicts in the empire for some 50 years.

Augsburg Confession A statement of the basic doctrines of the Lutheran church, presented (1530) at the Diet of Augsburg. The creed was largely written by P. Melanchthon and remains the authoritative statement of the Lutheran faith. The 28 articles were drawn up to provide a statement of principles that could be accepted by the Holy Roman Empire's Roman Catholics and that would put an end to false claims about Lutheran doctrine.

Augsburg Interim Provisional settlement issued (May 15, 1548) by Holy Roman Emperor Charles V in an unsuccessful attempt to halt disputes between Catholics and Lutherans within the empire. Lutherans, however, objected to the terms and adopted (1548) a counterproposal, the Leipzig Interim.

augur A Roman prophet who interpreted omens and signs believed to be warnings from the gods. Augurs were held in high esteem until Theodosius abolished the College of Augurs (AD *c*391).

Augusta US city (pop. 22,000), capital of Maine. Founded as a trading settlement in the 17th cent., it was incorporated in 1797. It became the state capital in 1831.

Augusta, Treaty of Treaty (1773) between the colony of Georgia and the Cherokee and Creek Indians. The Indians gave up two tracts of land, the sale of which was to pay off debts to white merchants.

Augustan Age Period of great literary flowering in Rome (usually, 27 BC–AD 14; also 43 BC–AD 17). With the preceding Ciceronian Period, it forms the Golden Age of Roman literary history. During this period, many of the greatest figures in Latin literature wrote under the patronage of Emperor Augustus and his adviser Maecenas. Among the classics completed in this age are Vergil's Aeneid, parts of Horace's Odes and Epistles, Propertius' elegies, Livy's History of Rome, and Ovid's Metamorphoses. By extension, Augustan Age also refers to a literary flowering in other nations (i.e., 18th-cent. England and 17th-cent. France).

Augustine, Saint AD 354–430. Great Christian thinker and a Father of the Church. He first became a follower of Manichaeanism, was converted to Christianity by Saint Ambrose (AD 387), and subsequently became bishop of Hippo in Africa (AD 396). A Neoplationist, his teachings brought together Christian religion and Greek philosophical traditions. Among his important works are attacks on Manichaeanism, Donatism, and Pelagianism. His most famous works include Confessions and The City of God.

Augustine of Canterbury, Saint *d. c*605. Italian, first archbishop of Canterbury, known as the Apostle of England. He and forty other Benedictine monks went to England (597) and there converted King Aethelbert. Augustine established a church and monastery at Canterbury.

Augustinians Broadly, name applied to religious orders in the Roman Catholic church that follow the Rule of Saint Augustine (concerning monastic life). More specifically, it refers to three religious orders: Augustinian Canons, an order of Roman Catholic clerics (formed 11th cent.); Augustinian Hermits, formed (1256) by the unification of autonomous Italian monasteries; and the Augustinian Recollects, a reformist offshoot (16 cent.) of the Augustinian Hermits.

Augustus ⟨orig. Gaius Octavius⟩ ⟨adopted name Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus⟩ ⟨sometimes called Octavian⟩ 63 BC–AD 14. First Roman emperor (27 BC–AD 14). A grandson of J. Caesar's sister, he became Caesar's adopted son and heir (44 BC). After Caesar's assassination (44 BC), he began a long struggle for power. He formed the Second Triumvirate (43) with M. Antony and M. Lepidus and became ruler in the West. He then avenged Caesar's death by defeating M. Brutus and C. Cassius at Philippi (42) and Pompey at Mylae (36). He eliminated Lepidus (32) and defeated M. Antony (31) at Actium, and thus became sole ruler of the empire. He maintained the outward republican forms and ruled as "first citizen" until 27, when he accepted the title Augustus. His reign was marked by prosperity and stability, administrative reforms, consolidation of power in Rome, and the establishment of Pax Romana. The month August and the Augustan Age are both named after him.

Augustus II ⟨Augustus the Strong⟩ 1670–1733. King of Poland (1697–1733) and elector of Saxony (1694–1733). He provoked the Northern War (1700–21) with Sweden to gain possession of Livonia and, defeated, was forced to abdicate (1706) by the Treaty of Altranstadt. He was restored (1709) after Russia, an ally, defeated Sweden.

Augustus III 1696–1763. King of Poland (1734–63) and elector of Saxony (1733–63), successor to his father, Augustus II. A patron of the arts, he left affairs of state to his ministers. He supported Austria in the War of the Austrian Succession and the Seven Years' War.

Aulic Council Court and advisory council of the Holy Roman Empire. Established (*c*1498) by Maximilian I, it was intended to assist the emperor in executive matters. It eventually became a powerful judicial court of appeals, however, and functioned until the fall of the empire (1806).

Aungzeya See Alaungpaya

Aurangzeb ⟨Aurungzebe⟩ 1618–1707. Mogul emperor of India (1658–1707), successor to his father, Shah Jehan. A fanatical Muslim, he brought the Hindu-Muslim Mogul Empire to the height of its power. Though his reign brought great prosperity, his persecution of the Hindus brought about numerous rebellions among the Sikhs, Rajputs, Jats, and especially the Marathas. The empire broke up shortly after his death.

Aurelian ⟨Aurelianus, Lucius Domitius⟩ AD *c*212–275. Roman general and emperor (AD 270–275), successor to Claudius II. One of the great Roman emperors, he briefly restored the disintegrating empire. Though forced to give up Dacia to the Goths, he stopped the barbarian advance at the Danube, reestablished Roman rule in the East (272) by capturing Zenobia and Palmyra, and restored Roman rule over Europe by defeating Tetricus (274), his rival for control of the region. He was assassinated while on a military campaign against the Persians. Aurelian's Wall, a 12-mile-long defensive fortification around Rome, was begun by him.

Ausgleich Facilitating agreement (Feb., 1867) that created the Austro-Hungarian Dual Monarchy. Following Austria's defeat in the Austro-Prussian War (1866), negotiations between the two monarchies (in progress since 1864) were stepped up. The compromise agreement was finally reached. By its terms, the two states maintained separate ministries and parliaments, shared military and foreign-policy responsibilities and common expenses. Austrian king Francis Joseph was crowned king of Hungary (June 8, 1867).

Austen, Jane 1775–1817. English novelist famous for her comedies of manners. Her novels treat middle-class English life and are noted for their sharp insights into character and society. Her works include Sense and Sensibility, Pride and Prejudice, Mansfield Park, Emma, and Persuasion.

Austerlitz, Battle of ⟨The Battle of the Three Emperors⟩ Great victory by Napoleon (Dec. 2, 1805) over the combined Russian and Austrian forces during the Napoleonic Wars. It was the first battle of the War of the Third Coalition. Napoleon, with 68,000 soldiers, engaged the 83,000-man force under Czar Alexander I and Emperor Francis II near Austerlitz (now Slavkov, Czechoslovakia). By his brilliant plan and its execution, Napoleon crushed and scattered the superior force. Austro-Russian losses, including prisoners, were some 26,000 to Napoleon's 9,000 casualties. The defeat forced Russia to withdraw from Austria, and Austria to sign the Treaty of Pressburg (1805).

Austin US city (pop. 345,000) and capital of Texas. It was made capital of the republic of Texas in 1839 and became capital of the state in 1870.

Austin, Stephen Fuller 1793–1836. An American pioneer who founded Anglo-American settlements in Texas in the 1820s, when the region was under Mexican jurisdiction. He is known as the Father of Texas.

Australasia Term sometimes used to denote certain islands in the South Pacific, including Australia, New Zealand, New Guinea, and other islands in the region. It is also used as an equivalent term for Oceania.

Australia ⟨Commonwealth of Australia⟩ Australia is the smallest continent and is located between the Pacific and Indian Oceans. Its capital is Canberra. The Commonwealth is made up of the states New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, and Tasmania, and two territories, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory. Long a member of the British Commonwealth, Australia was originally settled by the British as a penal colony. Key dates in the history of Australia include:

1601 Portuguese sailor Manuel Godhino de Eredia believed to have sighted Australia.

1606 Spaniard Luis Vaez de Torres believed to have sighted Australia.

1606 Dutch explorers aboard the ship Duyfhen sighted Queensland.

1633 A. Tasman discovered Tasmania.

1688 Englishman W. Dampier explored western coast and landed at King Sound.

1770 Captain J. Cook explored Botany Bay; claimed eastern Australian coast for Britain.

1788 First British penal colony established at present-day Sydney.

1804–30 European settlers nearly eliminated Tasmanian aborigines in Black War.

1824 Brisbane founded as a penal colony.

1829–50 Britain claimed entire continent (1829); Australian Colonies Government Act granted limited self-government (1850).

1851 Gold strike in Victoria brought rush of new immigrants and marked beginning of period of rapid development.

1862 Explorer John McDouall Stuart became first to cross the continent.

1897–98 Constitution drafted.

1901 Constitution put into effect; Australian colonies federated.

1902 Immigration Restriction Act limited influx of non-Europeans.

1913 Construction of capital, Canberra, begun.

1931 United Australia Party formed.

1939–45 World War II; Australia joined the Allies; Allied victories in Coral Sea and elsewhere forestalled possible invasion of Australia by Japanese.

1950–53 Korean War; Australia sent troops to bolster UN forces.

1954 Australia joined SEATO.

1965–75 Vietnam War; Australian troops joined US and South Vietnamese forces in the fight against the Communists.

1972 Political crisis over continuing economic problems of inflation and recession.

1975 Governor-general Sir John Kerr dissolved parliament (Nov.) and called for new elections amid continuing fiscal difficulties.

1975 Malcolm Fraser takes office as prime minister.

1980 Prime Minister Fraser instituted government spending cutbacks and incentives for the private sector; economic problems nevertheless continued into the 1980s.

Austrasia East Frankish kingdom from 6th to 8th cent., roughly consisting of parts of eastern France, western Germany, and The Netherlands. It was formed (511) when King Clovis I divided the Merovingian Empire between his sons. There followed a long series of wars between rulers of Austrasia and neighboring Neustria, especially between queens Brunhilda and Fredegunde, that gradually eroded royal power in Austrasia. Following the reign of Dagobert I, real power rested with the mayor of the palace in the Austrasian capital of Metz. As mayor, Pepin III seized power (751) from the Merovingians and thus founded the Carolingian line of kings.

Austria Republic located in central Europe. Its capital is Vienna. Austria's history began with Charlemagne's establishment (8th cent.) of an Eastern March (Österreich) in the region. Later elevated to a duchy within the Holy Roman Empire, it came under the rule of the House of Hapsburg. Austria dominated the government of the Holy Roman Empire (q.v.) from the 15th cent. and became the leading power of Europe for a time. Austria played a pivotal role in the outbreak of WW I, but by that time control over its vast, ethnically mixed empire had greatly declined. The history of modern Austria began at the end of the war, when the empire was dissolved and a republic, greatly reduced in size, was established. Key dates in the history of Austria include:

LATE 8TH CENT. Charlemagne established Eastern March in region of what is modern Austria.

1156 Austria made a duchy by Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I.

1282 House of Hapsburg gained possession of Austria; Hapsburgs greatly increased Austria's power, importance, and holdings.

1438 Albert II, a Hapsburg, became Holy Roman Emperor; thereafter, Hapsburgs controlled the imperial crown until just before the empire was dissolved (1806).

1526 Austria gained control of Bohemia and much of Hungary, uniting these lands under the Austrian crown within the Holy Roman Empire.

1529 Ottoman emperor Suleiman the Magnificent laid siege to Vienna for the first time, thus beginning long period of military rivalry with Austria.

FROM 1517. Protestant Reformation and attempts to halt its spread resulted in period of instability.

1524–26 Peasants' War sparked by Protestantism.

1591–1606 Fifteen Years' War fought with the Ottoman Empire.

1618–48 Thirty Years' War.

1648 Peace of Westphalia ended Thirty Years' War and reduced powers of the Holy Roman Emperor over states in the empire; Hapsburg Austria began its rise as a major power.

1682–99 Austro-Turkish War fought between Austria and her allies and the Ottoman Empire.

1701–14 War of the Spanish Succession.

1713 Austria gained control of the Spanish Netherlands by the Peace of Utrecht.

1736–39 Austria joined Russia in Russo-Turkish War.

1740 Maria Theresa succeeded to rule of the Hapsburg domains through the Pragmatic Sanction; her succession led to the War of the Austrian Succession (1740–48).

1756–63 Seven Years' War.

1772, 1793, 1795 Austria gained eastern lands through the Partitions of Poland.

1787–92 Austrians joined Russians in Russo-Turkish War.

1791 Declaration of Pillnitz issued (Aug. 27) by Austria and Prussia; contributed to outbreak of the French Revolutionary Wars.

1792–1815 Austria embroiled in French Revolutionary Wars and Napoleonic Wars.

1804 Collapse of Holy Roman Empire imminent; Francis II became the first emperor of Austria, as Francis I, and gave up the imperial crown; Holy Roman Empire dissolved two years later.

1815 Congress of Vienna established Austria as the leading power in the German Confederation replacing the Holy Roman Empire.

1815–1848 C. von Metternich, Austrian foreign minister, flourished as the leading European statesman; helped promote era of conservatism and repression of liberal nationalistic movements in post-Napoleonic Europe.

1848 Hapsburg rule threatened by revolutions of 1848; Hapsburgs were able to restore authority throughout the empire.

AUG. 14, 1865 Convention of Gastein gave Austria control of Holstein; Prussia got Schleswig.

1866 Austro-Prussian War fought (June 15–Aug. 23); led to Austria's defeat and exclusion from the German Confederation; established Prussia's dominance over German states after long rivalry with Austria.

1867 Ausgleich agreement made possible the formation of the Dual Monarchy, creating two theoretically separate kingdoms, Austria and Hungary under one king; political unrest within the empire mounted in subsequent years, however.

1914 Archduke Ferdinand, Austrian heir apparent, assassinated by Serbian nationalist at Sarajevo; subsequent Austrian demands on Serbia led to outbreak of WW I.

1914–18 World War I; Austria allied with Central Powers.

1916–18 Charles I reigned as last Austro-Hungarian emperor.

1919 Treaty of Saint-Germain concluded (Sept. 10) by Allied powers; established republic of Austria and abolished Austro-Hungarian monarchy; Austrian territory greatly reduced; union with Germany forbidden.

1920 M. Hainisch became first president of the newly formed republic of Austria.

1920s Economic disasters following WW I led to rising political turmoil, notably between Socialists and monarchists; ascendancy of National Socialists began late in the decade.

1932 Engelbert Dollfuss became chancellor; opposed Nazism and union with Germany but adopted elements of fascism in the government.

1934 Dollfuss assassinated by Austrian Nazis.

1934–38 Kurt von Schuschnigg in office as chancellor (1934); unable to resist growing Nazi pressure for Anschluss (union) with Germany; resigned.

1938 German troops occupied Austria (Mar.); Hitler made Austria part of the Third Reich.

1939–45 World War II.

1945 Austria occupied by Allied forces at end of WW II and divided into zones of occupation.

1945–50 Karl Renner served as president of the Austrian government.

1955 Allied occupation ended (May 15) by Austrian State Treaty; Austrian sovereignty recognized by major powers.

1970– Bruno Kreisky, a Socialist, in office as chancellor; Socialists now dominant party, after long rivalry with conservative People's party.

Austrian State Treaty Treaty (May 15, 1955) between Austria and the WW II Allies. The treaty ended the Allied occupation of Austria and halted discussions on plans for dividing it.

Austrian Succession, War of the (1740–48.) This complex war involved the major European powers in a general and largely indecisive conflict. The war broke out after the death of Holy Roman Emperor Charles VI (1740), a member of the powerful Hapsburg family. It was fought over succession to the vast Hapsburg family domains (centered on Austria), although other political rivalries were involved (notably between France and Britain). Long before his death, Charles had issued the Pragmatic Sanction of 1713, naming his daughter, Maria Theresa, as heir to the Hapsburg lands (but not the imperial title). During his lifetime, Charles labored tirelessly to win general support in Europe for her succession. But on Charles's death, Maria was seen as too weak to retain control of the domains, and rival claimants disputed her succession. When war broke out, France, Prussia, Spain, Bavaria, and Saxony took up arms against Austria, ruled by Maria. Britain under George II sided with Austria. An ongoing war between Britain and Spain (War of Jenkins' Ear) merged into the general conflict, which also spread to French and British colonies (King George's War in North America) and later to Britain (second revolt of the Jacobites). Exhaustion, not decisive victory, eventually ended the war. Maria was recognized as heir to Hapsburg domains and her husband, Francis I, was elected Holy Roman Emperor. Prussia (the real winner) won Silesia from Austria and emerged as a major power. Key events include:

1740–42 Frederick the Great of Prussia started the war by invading and occupying the Austrian territory of Silesia (First Silesian War).

1741 Charles Albert of Bavaria, a rival claimant to Maria's Hapsburg domains, led his forces against Austria and captured Prague in Bohemia.

1741 Charles Albert elected Holy Roman Emperor Charles VII.

1741 Britain, fearing the French would gain control in Europe if Austria collapsed, sided with Austria.

1742 Austria conquered Bavaria and pushed into Bohemia; Prussia withdrew from the war after Austria ceded a large part of Silesia to it.

1743 French retreat (1742–43) was capped by British king George's victory over the French at the Battle of Dettingen (June 27); Saxony made peace with Austria.

1744–45 King Frederick of Prussia, fearing a too powerful Austria, joined Emperor Charles VII and France against Austria (called Second Silesian War); Prussia soon put on the defensive, however.

1745 Bavaria forced out of war following the death of Emperor Charles VII.

1745 Battle of Fontenoy (May 11) in Flanders; France defeated Austria and her allies and began to invade the Austrian Netherlands.

1745 Britain concluded peace with Prussia; Maria Theresa's husband became Holy Roman Emperor Francis I.

1745 Treaty of Dresden (Dec. 25) ended war with Prussia; Prussia recognized Francis I as emperor and Austria confirmed Prussian possession of Silesia.

1746 Britain forced to withdraw troops to contend with French-backed revolt of the Jacobites; France completed conquest of the Austrian Netherlands.

1748 Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle signed (Oct.); provided for end of war and mutual restitution of most conquered territory, though Prussia retained Silesia.

Austro-Hungarian Monarchy See Dual Monarchy

Austro-Prussian War (Seven Weeks' War) War (June 15–Aug. 23, 1866) between Prussia (with Italy) and Austria (with Hanover, Bavaria, and most other German states). The war resulted in Austria's exclusion from the German Confederation (reorganized as the North German Confederation, q.v.) and thus opened the way to the eventual unification of Germany under Prussian domination. The war was precipitated by Prussian chancellor O. Bismarck to gain those ends for Prussia. Bismarck first provoked a crisis with Austria over administration of the Schleswig-Holstein region in spring, 1866 and, claiming Austrian violation of the Convention of Gastein (q.v.), sent (June 6) Prussian troops into Holstein. In subsequent fighting the Italians lost to Austrian forces opposing them in Italy, but the Prussians displayed remarkable military efficiency and quickly defeated Austrian forces in the north. One Prussian army took Hanover (June 27–29) and, on another front in Bohemia, delivered the final crushing blow (July 3) to Austria at the Battle of Sadowa (q.v.). The war was formally ended by the Treaty of Prague, which, in addition to providing for the North German Confederation, ended Austrian hegemony in Italy.

Austro-Turkish War A war (1682–99) between Austria (and her allies) and the Ottoman Empire. Taking advantage of unrest in Hungarian territories, the Turks invaded Austria and besieged Vienna (July-Sept., 1683). Poland and other states of the Holy League (formed 1684) joined the war against Turkey. Despite reverses, they won notable victories against the Turks, including the Battle of Zenta (1697). The Turks sued for peace and agreed (1699) to the Treaty of Karlowitz (q.v.).

authoritarianism Political system based on blind submission of individuals to a central authority, either a single leader or small group of them.

autocracy System of government in which a single ruler has absolute power over the entire government.

auto-da-fé During the Inquisition, a public ceremony in which judges read the sentences imposed on those convicted of religious infidelity. Such ceremonies, often very elaborately staged, were held from 1481 to as late as 1815.

Autumn Harvest Uprising Chinese peasant revolt inspired by Communist forces (Sept., 1927). Mao Tse-tung was among the leaders of the revolt, which involved peasants and Communist regulars in the Hunan-Kiangsi region. Though it failed, Mao gained both experience and the conviction of the importance of peasant discontent to the Communist movement.

Avalon In Arthurian legend, the island to which King Arthur, mortally wounded in his last battle, was taken. It is sometimes identified with Glastonbury in Somerset, England.

Avars Nomadic Asian peoples. The Avars seem to have come from the Caucasus. They conquered and occupied large areas of Russia and Hungary, forming a powerful empire (c6th to 8th cent.). They were defeated by Charlemagne (805).

Aventine secession Italian political crisis. On June 10, 1924, 150 non-Fascist members withdrew from the Chamber of Deputies to protest B. Mussolini's Fascist government. Reacting to the Matteoti Crisis (q.v.), the deputies demanded an end to the use of violence in suppressing dissent.

Azariah See Uzziah

Aztec Empire Empire of the Aztecs, a relatively civilized American Indian people, once located in central Mexico. At the time of the conquest of Mexico by H. Cortes (1519–21), the chief Aztec city was Tenochtitlán (founded *c*1325). The Aztecs migrated to this region from the north (*c*11th cent.) and, through a series of alliances and conquests (12th–16th cents.), gained control over neighboring peoples. Their economy was based on the cultivation of corn, they were skilled builders and craftsmen, they had a system of picture-writing, and their religion pervaded all aspects of life. They practiced human sacrifice and their chief god was Huitzilopochtli, a god of war. The Spaniards were able to conquer the numerically superior Aztec forces, led by Montezuma, because the Spanish possessed guns and horses, because they found willing allies among native peoples of the region, and because the Aztecs regarded the Spanish as descendants of the god Quetzalcoatl. (See also Cortes, Hernando.)

Baal Canaanite fertility god and king of the gods, mentioned frequently in the Bible. The worship of Baal was not limited to the Canaanites. He was worshiped in various forms as a local god in Semitic communities throughout the Near East, as well as in Egypt, Greece, and Phoenicia. In the early history of Israel, worship of Baal conflicted with the worship of the one true god, Yahweh, and was condemned by the Hebrew prophets.

Baal Shem-Tob ⟨Eliezer, Israel ben⟩ *c*1700–60. Russian-born founder of the Hasidim, a Jewish sect.

Baber ⟨Babar⟩ ⟨Babur⟩ ⟨orig. Zahir ud-Din Muhammad⟩ 1483–1530. Mongol soldier, poet, and founder of the Mogul Empire in India. Descended from Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, he first tried unsuccessfully to take Samarkand from the Uzbeks. He was, however, successful in Afghanistan and established a kingdom there (1504). In 1525–26 he led a small invasion force into India and, following the capture of Delhi (1526), proceeded to conquer most of northern India. These conquests formed the Mogul Empire (q.v.).

Babeuf, François Noël 1760–97. French revolutionary of the late 18th cent. whose ideas of economic egalitarianism foreshadowed modern socialism. He is sometimes called the first socialist theorist. Seeking economic justice, he organized a secret society to overthrow the Directory (1796), but his "conspiracy of equals" was discovered and he was executed.

Babington, Anthony 1561–86. English conspirator. He joined a plot (1586) to murder Queen Elizabeth I and place Mary, Queen of Scots, on the throne. The plot was discovered and Babington was executed. Evidence of Mary's complicity led to her execution.

Babism Originally a sect of Shi'ite Muslims that flourished briefly during the 19th cent. and gave rise to Bahaism (q.v.). An ascetic doctrine, it fused elements of various teachings, including Shi'ite, Gnostic, and Sufi doctrines. It spread throughout Persia, following proclamation of the arrival (1844) of the prophet, or Bab, in the person of Mirza Ali Muhammad. Persecution of Babists soon began (1845) and the Babists withdrew from the Islamic fold (1848). Uprisings against the Persian shah finally resulted in a massacre of Babists at Teheran and the execution of the Bab (1850). A successor, Baha Allah, fled Teheran and by 1863 formed Bahaism as an offshoot of Babism.

Babur See Baber

Babylon Ancient city of Mesopotamia and one of the most important cities of antiquity. Established by the 3d millennium BC, it gained importance in the early 2d millennium BC when Hammurabi made it the capital of the kingdom of Babylonia. During this period, it became the commercial center of the region. Destroyed (*c*689 BC) by Sennacherib, it was rebuilt and reached its height in the 7th–6th cents. BC, under the rule of Nebuchadnezzar II. Babylon became famous for its splendor, and its Hanging Gardens were one of the Seven Wonders of the World. Babylon fell (538 BC) to the Persians under Cyrus the Great and was later conquered (331 BC) by Alexander the Great. In the early 3d cent. BC its importance was largely eclipsed by the rise of Seleucia as commercial center of the region.

Babylon, Hanging Gardens of See Hanging Gardens of Babylon

Babylonia Term sometimes used collectively to refer to the city-state civilizations that flourished as early as the 3rd millennium BC in the valley of the Tigris and the Euphrates. More specifically, it refers to the empires centered on the city of Babylon. The first great empire was that of Hammurabi (*c*1830–1530 BC), which saw the issuance of the Code of Hammurabi and the appearance of the Babylonian ziggurat, or step-towered temple. Babylonia was then dominated by the Kassites (*c*1530–1150 BC), the Aramaeans (*c*1100–1000 BC), and, from the 10th cent., by the Empire of Assyria (q.v.). A Babylonian ruler, Nabopolassar, ended Assyrian rule (625 BC) and joined the Medes in the capture of Assyria's capital, Nineveh (612 BC). His son Nebuchadnezzar defeated the Egyptians at the great Battle of Carchemish in 605 BC, and a new Babylonian Empire, sometimes called the Chaldaean Empire, was formed. It included Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, and Cilicia. These were the days of legendary Babylonian glory when the Hanging Gardens were built. It was during this period that the Jews were deported from Judah to Babylon (the Babylonian captivity). Cyrus the Great of Persia began his attacks on Babylonia around 547 BC and Babylon fell to the Persian Empire in 538 BC.

Babylonian captivity ⟨Exile⟩ ⟨Captivity⟩ Name of important periods in the history of Israel and the Roman Catholic church. 1. In the history of Israel, the mass deportation of prominent Jews to Babylon, following Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Jerusalem and destruction of the temple (586 BC). When Cyrus the Great overthrew the Babylonian Empire (*c*538 BC), he allowed the Jews to return. Many thousands, but not all of them, did so. The end of the 70-year captivity prophesied in the Bible was marked by completion of the new temple (516 BC). 2. In the history of the Roman Catholic church, the Avignon papacy, the period (1309–76) during which the popes resided at Avignon, in what now is France. The first pope to make his residence at Avignon was Clement V, who sought a better location from which to conduct the papacy. The seventh and last Avignon pope, Gregory XI, left Avignon (1376) to reestablish the papacy at Rome (1377). The Great Schism (see Schism) followed.

Bacchylides fl. 5th cent. BC. Greek lyric poet. The nephew of Simonides of Ceos, he was a contemporary of Pindar. Fragments of his epicinian odes were discovered in 1896.

Bach, Alexander 1813–93. Austrian minister of justice (1848) and of the interior (1849–59). He instituted the Bach system of centralized authority, characterized by both police repression and social and economic reforms.

Bach, Karl Philipp Emanuel 1714–88. German composer, son of J. S. Bach.

Bach, Johann Christian 1735–82. German composer, the son of J. S. Bach. Bach's musical style influenced later composers, including W. Mozart.

Bach, Johann Christoph See Bach, Johann Sebastian

Bach, Johann Sebastian 1685–1750. German composer, the most illustrious member of a celebrated musical family and one of the great composers of all time. Orphaned by the age of 19, Bach showed his musical talents early under the tutelage of his brother Johann Christoph Bach (1671–1721). After serving variously as an organist, concertmaster, and musical director, he became musical director of the church and music school of St. Thomas in Leipzig, where he spent the rest of his life. In his lifetime he composed a vast number of works, including instrumental and vocal pieces and a large body of religious compositions. Among his best-known works are The Well-Tempered Clavier, St. Matthew Passion, Mass in B Minor, the Goldberg Variations, and the Brandenburg Concertos.

Bach, Wilhelm Friedemann 1710–84. A German composer. The eldest son of J. S. Bach, he was a celebrated composer and organist in his day, but wrote down few of his compositions.

Bacon, Francis 1561–1626. English philosopher, statesman, and essayist. He is credited with making important advances in inductive logic, which later encouraged the general advancement of science. In his day Bacon was noted for both his meanness and his great intelligence. His public career as a member of Parliament (from 1584) and lord chancellor (1618–21) ended with his conviction for taking bribes. His most important works include De Augmentis Scientiarum, Novum Organum, and The New Atlantis.

Bacon, Roger 1214?–1294? English philosopher and Franciscan monk. He was an important proponent of experimental science and wrote many descriptions of experiments, including one that revealed the formula for gunpowder for the first time in Europe. Bacon's interests ranged over all branches of science, including alchemy and astronomy, and he wrote an important encyclopedic work on science, Opus Majus. This work, however, was condemned by the Franciscans, and Bacon was imprisoned (1277?) for ten years.

Bacon's Rebellion Uprising in colonial Virginia (1676) led by Nathaniel Bacon (1647–76). The rebellion was provoked by Gov. W. Berkeley's colonial policies, including his refusal to protect colonists from attacks by Indians, with whom he had a lucrative fur trade. Bacon raised an army of 300 colonists and defeated the Indians. Declared a rebel by the governor, Bacon marched on Jamestown, captured it, and forced the governor to flee. A short time later, however, Bacon died of malaria and the rebels disbanded. Gov. Berkeley returned to exact a bloody revenge on the colonists.

Bactria Ancient country, located in what now are northern Afghanistan and southern USSR. An important focal point for trade between Western and Eastern civilizations, it was conquered by the Persians *c*545 BC. Conquered next by Alexander the Great (328 BC), it was made part of the Seleucid Empire. It became an independent Greek kingdom (256 BC) and during the next century expanded to include parts of Afghanistan, Pakistan, and central Asia. After 130 BC, Bactria fell to various conquerors and never again rose to power.

Baghdad ⟨Bagdad⟩ Iraqi capital city (pop. 3,205,600) and the nation's industrial center. The site of important cities since Mesopotamian times, the present city was founded (762) as the capital of the Abbasid caliphs. During the 8th and early 9th cents., Baghdad reached the height of its commercial and cultural prosperity as one of the greatest Islamic cities. Its decline began in the 9th cent. and was completed by successive conquests. Part of the Ottoman Empire (1638–1917), it was taken by the British (1917) and became the capital of the new kingdom of Iraq (1920). The Iraqi republic was established by a coup in Baghdad in 1958.

Baha Allah ⟨Baha Ullah⟩ 1817–92. Persian religious leader. A disciple of the Bab, he declared himself the Promised One and successor to the Bab, and founded (1863) Bahaism.

Bahaism Religion founded (1863) by Baha Allah and now practiced throughout the world. Bahaism is an offshoot of Babism, of which Baha Allah was once a follower. After persecution and exile of the Babists by the Persians, Baha Allah declared himself (1863) the Promised One, or manifestation through which men could know God. The religion was spread throughout the world by his son and successors. Among its major tenets are that God is knowable only through his manifestation; the unity of all religions; the need for world peace; and universal government.

Bahamas ⟨properly Commonwealth of the Bahamas⟩ Island chain and independent nation (pop. 240,000) in the Atlantic, southeast of Florida. The Bahamas were the site of C. Columbus' first landing (1492) in the New World (probably at San Salvador). The islands were first settled by the English in the mid-1600s. Long a base for pirates such as Blackbeard, the Bahamas were not freed of them until the early 1700s. Spanish claims to the islands were relinquished to England by the Treaty of Paris (1783). The Bahamas were a base for blockade runners during the Civil War and rum runners during Prohibition. The islands were granted independence in 1973.

Baliol, Edward de ⟨Balliol, ~⟩ d. 1363. King of Scotland and son of John de Baliol. With English support he invaded Scotland (1332), defeated David II, and was made king. He soon after lost his crown, regaining it with the support of Edward III, to whom he ceded several Scottish counties and, in 1356, his title.

Baliol, John de ⟨Balliol, ~⟩ 1249–1315. King of Scotland (1292–96). Gaining the crown through the support of Edward I, he swore fealty to Edward but later allied with France (1295), renounced his fealty (1296), and was defeated by Edward.

Balkan Entente Mutual defense agreement (1934) between Greece, Romania, Turkey, and Yugoslavia, to provide protection from other Balkan countries. It was voided by German aggression in WW II.

Balkan Peninsula Peninsula in southeastern Europe, roughly bounded by the Adriatic, Aegean, and Black seas. Occupied by Ottoman Turks in the 14th and 15th cents., the area was the site of struggles for independence in the late 19th cent. and was the setting for the Balkan Wars and the events leading to WW I.

Balkan War 1. First ~ War (Oct. 18, 1912–May 30, 1913) between the Ottoman Empire and the Balkan League (Bulgaria, Greece, Montenegro, and Serbia). Taking advantage of Ottoman involvement in war with Italy (Tripolitan War), the Balkan League declared war on the Ottomans and, in a rapid series of victories, overran nearly all Ottoman domains in Eastern Europe. Fighting was halted by an armistice (Dec. 3, 1912), then resumed (Jan., 1913) when peace negotiations broke down. Hostilities continued until early May, and the war was brought to a close by the Treaty of London (May 30, 1913). In the treaty, the Ottomans lost all but a small part of their European territories, which were divided among members of the league and the newly formed state of Albania. The treaty, however, did nothing to ease international tensions that led to the outbreak of WW I. 2. Second ~ War (June 29–July 30, 1913) between Bulgaria and Serbia (soon joined by Romania, Greece, and the Ottomans). The Treaty of London left Serbia disgruntled because territories it wanted were joined to the newly formed Albania. Serbia thereupon quarreled with Bulgaria, hoping to gain part of the Macedonian territory awarded to Bulgaria by the treaty. Bulgaria retaliated by launching a surprise attack (June 29, 1913) against Serbia and its ally, Greece. Romania and the Ottomans entered the war and in a brief war helped to utterly defeat Bulgaria. By the Treaty of Bucharest (Aug. 10, with Serbia, Romania, and Greece) and by the Treaty of Constantinople (Sept. 29, with the Ottomans), Bulgaria was stripped of most of the territories it had won in the previous war. This war heightened further international tensions that led to WW I.

Baltic Entente Pact (Sept. 12, 1934) signed by Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia. The three states sought mutual defense against Nazi Germany.

Baltic States Name for former countries of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, which were located east of the Baltic Sea. The territory was under Russian rule from the 1700s. After WW I and the Baltic War of Liberation, the three independent countries were formed (1918) but were retaken by Russia in 1940 and incorporated into the USSR. The term "Baltic States" sometimes includes Finland and Poland.

Baltic War of Liberation War (1918–20) in which the Baltic States (Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia) repulsed attacks by both the Russians and Germans and thereby maintained their newly won independence. All three Baltic states declared independence from Russia after the revolution of 1917 and soon after became embroiled in warfare. Lithuania declared independence (Feb. 16, 1918) and, with German aid, was able to defeat the invading Bolsheviks. The short-lived Treaty of Brest-Litovsk (Mar., 1918) ended fighting until Germany collapsed at the end of WW I. The Bolsheviks again invaded Lithuania (after Nov., 1918) and were again defeated, this time with Polish aid. By the Treaty of Moscow (1920), Lithuanian independence was recognized. In Latvia, German occupying forces prevented formation of a national government and army immediately after the Russian Revolution. After Germany's defeat in WW I, however, Latvia proclaimed independence (Nov. 18, 1918) and was invaded (Jan., 1919) by the Bolsheviks. The Bolsheviks were soon forced out by a combined German-Latvian force. The Germans then made an unsuccessful attempt to take over and were defeated by Latvian forces. By the Treaty of Riga (1920), Russia recognized Latvian independence.

Estonia proclaimed independence (Nov. 28, 1917) and soon came under Bolshevik attack. Germany occupied Estonia (Dec., 1917) to stop the Russian advance and, by the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk (1918), the Russians recognized Estonian independence. At the close of WW I, however, the Germans withdrew (Nov., 1918) from Estonia and the Russians again invaded (Nov. 22, 1918). They were driven out, with British help (Jan., 1919) and, by the Treaty of Tartu (Feb., 1920), Russia recognized Estonian independence.

Baltimore City (pop. 786,800) in northern Maryland. The largest city in Maryland, it was founded in 1729. The defense of Fort McHenry here during the War of 1812 inspired The Star-Spangled Banner by F. Key.

Bangladesh ⟨formerly East Pakistan⟩ South Asian republic (pop. 88,660,000) on the Bay of Bengal. With India and Pakistan, it was part of the Mogul Empire (1526–1857), then became a part of British India (1857–1947). In 1947, Bangladesh became East Pakistan, the eastern province of Pakistan. In 1971 East Pakistan declared its independence, which it achieved following war between India and Pakistani forces in East Pakistan (Dec., 1971). Pakistan recognized Bangladesh in 1974. Coups in 1975, 1981, and 1982 shook the government and brought the military to power.

Bangorian Controversy Religious controversy over powers of the Church of England. The controversy stemmed from a sermon delivered (1717) before King George I by the bishop of Bangor (Wales), Benjamin Hoadly (1676–1761). In it Hoadly challenged the disciplinary and judicial powers of the church. Supporters of the church's authority and Hoadly's defenders published some 200 pamphlets over a period of several years, disputing the issue.

Bao Dai ⟨Nguyen Vinh Thuy⟩ 1913–. Last Vietnamese emperor (1925–45). He initially attempted reform in Vietnam but was thwarted by French colonial rule. Forced to abdicate (1945) by Ho Chi Minh, he returned in 1949 to rule, but his authority was eclipsed by his weak rule and the growing strength of the Viet Minh.

Baptists Protestant Christian denomination. Baptists permit baptism of believers only (as opposed to infant baptism) and practice baptism by immersion. The Baptist churches originated amid members of the English Separatist (Independents) movement and began (*c*1608) with the teachings of John Smyth, or Smith (*c*1570–1612). Baptists soon formed two distinct groups: the General Baptists, following J. Arminius' doctrines of the general atonement of Christ; and the Particular Baptists, following the stricter teachings of J. Calvin. The two groups merged in 1891. The first Baptist church in America was founded (1639) at Providence, Rhode Island, by R. Williams, who had been banished from Massachusetts for opposing infant baptism. The subsequent spread of Baptist churches in America was greatly accelerated during the Great Awakening. Baptist sects include the Seventh Day Baptists, who observe Calvinist doctrine and celebrate the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath.

Barbarelli, Giorgio See Giorgione

barbarian Greek term for a stranger or foreigner, later applied by the Romans to Germanic tribes.

barbarian invasions Name given to the conquest of portions of the Western Roman Empire by tribes from the north. By the 4th cent. AD Rome's power had declined, allowing Germanic tribes to seize and settle in northern Roman provinces. The Visigoths crossed the Danube (AD 376) and, led by Alaric, sacked Rome (410). His successor, Ataulf, sought to fuse Roman elements into a Visigothic kingdom. Rome was nearly sacked (451) by the Huns under Attila, and was sacked (455) by the Vandals under Gaiseric. The Germanic tribes under Odoacer deposed (476) Romulus Augustulus, last Roman emperor of the West, and the Western Empire ceased to exist. Other groups to seize Roman territory included the Ostrogoths, Burgundians, and the Franks.

Barbarossa II ⟨Khair ed-Din⟩ 1466?–1546. Turkish corsair who seized Algiers (1518) from Spain, conquered Tunis (1534), and raided the coasts of Greece, Spain, and Italy.

Barbary States Name for the North African states of Tripoli, Morocco, Tunis, and Algeria during the 16th to 19th cents. A notorious center for pirates, the region was also called the Barbary Coast. Despite a major military campaign mounted (1541) by Holy Roman Emperor Charles V, Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli fell to the Ottoman Turks in the 16th cent. Semi-independent states within the empire, they became a haven for privateers, the Barbary pirates, who raided ships and coastal towns for booty and slaves. Morocco also became a pirate base. Attacks by European powers and the US (see Tripolitan War) on the Barbary States brought its decline. Piracy ended with the French conquest of Algeria (from 1830).

Barbizon school School of realistic French landscape painting (19th cent.) founded by Théodore Rousseau (1812–67) and Jean François Millet (1814–75). It contributed to the development of realism in French painting.

Barons' War Rebellion (1263–67) by English barons against the arbitrary rule of King Henry III. Henry precipitated the uprising by refusing to abide by the Provisions of Oxford and of Westminster. Led by S. de Montfort, the barons at first forced Henry's submission (1263). Fighting was renewed (1264) after the barons rejected the Mise of Amiens, arbitration in favor of Henry. Victorious at the Battle of Lewes (1264), Montfort became virtual ruler of England and summoned (1265) a representative parliament that was a model for the House of Commons. Montfort was defeated and slain by Prince Edward at the Battle of Evesham (1265), and baronial resistance ended in 1267.

baroque Artistic and architectural style, which flourished in Europe and England in the 17th and 18th cents. It was characterized by fluidity of movement and grandness of scale. It arose in Italy (*c*1600) and thereafter spread throughout Europe, taking on distinctive national characteristics in each area. Among the leading artists and architects in this period were (in Italy) Caravaggio and G. Bernini; (in France) N. Poussin; (in Flanders) P. Rubens; (in Holland) Rembrandt and Vermeer; (in Spain) Velasquez and (in England) Van Dyck and C. Wren. The term baroque also applies to a musical style developed in this period.

Barrackpore Mutiny Mutiny (Nov. 2, 1824) of Indian troops at Barrackpore, India, during the first Burma War (1824–26). Indian troops, holding serious grievances against British commanders, refused to obey orders and were subsequently fired upon by European troops. The massacre fostered deep resentment that contributed to the Indian Mutiny (1857–58).

Basel ⟨Basle⟩ Swiss city. Founded by the Romans, Basel is now the chief railroad junction in Switzerland. It became an episcopal see (7th cent.) and joined the Swiss Confederation (1501). Basel is a major economic and cultural center.

Basel, Confession of Name of two statements of Reformation doctrine. 1. First ~. Statement drafted by J. Oecolampadius (1531) and revised by Oswald Mycanius (1488–1552). 2. Second ~. Name sometimes applied to the first Helvetic Confession, written (1536) by Heinrich Bullinger (1504–75) and others and adopted by the Swiss Reformed church.

Basel, Council of Council of the Roman Catholic church convened (1431–49) at Basel, noted for its struggle with Pope Eugene IV over the issue of conciliarism vs papal supremacy. The council made a number of reforms and by the Compactata of Prague (1436) found a settlement for the Hussite question. Eugene, after attempting to come to terms with the conciliarists by making numerous concessions, summoned the Council of Ferrara-Florence (1437) to deal with other church matters. The few bishops remaining at Basel declared Eugene a heretic and replaced him (1439) with antipope Felix V. The struggle continued until Pope Nicholas V, successor to Eugene, was recognized as the legitimate pope. Felix abdicated (1449) and the council at Basel was dissolved.

Bauhaus School of design founded (1919) at Weimar, Germany. Originally headed (1919–28) by architect W. Gropius, the school sought to overcome divisions between the arts, crafts, and modern industry. To do this, students were given multidisciplinary training. The economical, geometric designs that became associated with the school proved unpopular with the Nazis, who closed the school (1933). Gropius and other Bauhaus associates, including L. Mies van der Rohe and L. Moholy-Nagy then carried the Bauhaus movement to the US, where Bauhaus design had been well received.

Bautzen, Battle of Battle (May 20–21, 1813) in the Napoleonic Wars fought at Bautzen (now in East Germany). Napoleon's French army of 140,000 troops defeated a Russo-Prussian army of some 90,000. Though a victory for Napoleon I, French losses were greater than Russo-Prussian casualties.

Bavaria West German state. Originally inhabited by Celts, it was conquered by the Romans (1st cent. BC), then by Germanic peoples ending with the Franks. In 788 it became part of Charlemagne's empire. One of the main duchies of the Holy Roman Empire in medieval Germany, Bavaria passed in 1180 to the house of Wittelsbach, which held it until 1918. It became a kingdom (1806) under Maximilian I and joined the German empire in 1871. Bavaria became a socialist republic (1918) and joined the Weimar Republic, but lost its independence with the rise (1933) of Nazi Germany. In 1949 Bavaria became part of the German Federal Republic.

Bay of Islands War War (1844–47), usually considered part of the first Maori War (q.v.), between European settlers and Maori natives in New Zealand. After the massacre of Europeans at Wairu (1843), a native rebellion began (1844) in the Bay of Islands region of northern New Zealand. Led by Maori chief Hone Heka, some 1,000 natives took part in the rebellion, caused by the natives' anger at declining profits from trade. They attacked settlements in the north (from 1845) until their revolt was quashed (1847) by Gov. Sir George Grey (1812–98).

Bay of Pigs invasion Unsuccessful invasion (Apr. 17, 1961) of Cuba by Cuban exiles. Organized by the US CIA, the invasion was a major embarrassment to the newly elected Kennedy administration and was an important event leading up to the Cuban missile crisis (1962). Planned (from May, 1960) under the Eisenhower administration and approved by Kennedy shortly after his inauguration, the invasion was an outgrowth of worsening relations between the US and Cuba's F. Castro. Some 1,500 Cuban exiles took part in the invasion (along Cuba's southern coast), which was intended to spark a general uprising. The invasion failed, in part because Kennedy apparently refused to allow air cover. Many of the invaders were captured, and 1,113 survivors were ransomed back to the US by the Cubans for food and medicine (1962).

Beethoven, Ludwig van 1770–1827. German composer, one of the greatest composers of all time. Beethoven was tutored first by W. Mozart and then by F. Haydn (1792–94) in Vienna, then the center of the music world. Beethoven soon rose to be the preeminent composer of his day. His personal life, however, was marked by the onset of his deafness (*c*1801) and his stormy relationship with his nephew, then his ward. Beethoven, through his brilliant and emotional compositions, transcended the limitations set by classical style and set the stage for the works of the later Romantic period. Among his greatest works are his nine symphonies, including No. 3, the Eroica, originally written by him to honor Napoleon, and No. 9, which includes a choral finale based on F. von Schiller's Ode to Joy. His major works also include the Moonlight Sonata, Missa Solemnis, and the opera Fidelio.

Benedict, Saint *d. c*547. Italian monk. He founded the Benedictine order and the monastery at Monte Cassino. The Rule of St. Benedict is the basis of Western monasticism. (See also Benedictines.)

Benedictines ⟨Order of Saint Benedict⟩ Roman Catholic monks, followers of the rule of St. Benedict. Established by St. Benedict (early 6th cent.), the rule forms a traditional basis for western monasticism. It provides for a practical, well-balanced communal existence, stressing worship, study, and manual labor. St. Benedict patterned the rule after his now famous monastery founded (*c*529) at Monte Cassino. With the aid of Pope Gregory I, St. Augustine, and others, the rule of St. Benedict was spread throughout Western Europe and England. Thereafter, Benedictine abbeys remained predominant until the 12th cent., declined for a time, and almost disappeared during the Reformation (16th cent.). The Benedictine abbeys in their ascendency served not only to spread Christianity throughout Europe but also to preserve Latin culture (Benedictines faithfully copied books as part of their duties) in a period of great instability. The Cluniac order and Cistercians are outgrowths of Benedictine reform movements.

Benin ⟨People's Republic of Benin⟩ ⟨formerly Dahomey⟩ Small coastal republic in west-central Africa (est. pop. 2,800,000). In precolonial times, the region was dominated by warring tribal kingdoms, such as Great Ardra, Little Ardra, and Abomey (later called Dahomey). These wars produced, and later were often fought to produce, slaves that were sold to European slave traders. A part of what was called the Slave Coast (q.v.), the region was supplying some 20,000 slaves a year by the end of the 17th cent. and continued to be important in slave trade until the 19th cent. The French were firmly established in the region by 1863 and conquered the kingdom of Dahomey (1892–93). Subsequently the French ruled the territory as a protectorate until 1899, when it was made part of French West Africa (q.v.). It was made a French overseas territory (1946), an autonomous member state of the French Community (1958), and an independent state (Aug. 1, 1960). The country was torn by social and economic problems as well as by numerous changes of government. A military coup in 1963 was followed by several short-lived governments (1965, 1967, 1969), by two unsuccessful attempts at elections (1968, 1970), and finally by an 11-man military government (after a coup in 1972). Stability was restored with the installation of Lt. Col. Mathieu Kerekou (ruled 1972–). He renamed the country Benin in 1975.

Bill of Rights 1. English bill enacted 1689, one of the key documents of English constitutional law. It established the supremacy of Parliament, ending a long struggle for power with the English kings. The bill largely reiterated the terms of the Declaration of Rights (1688), drawn up at the close of the Glorious Revolution and signed by William III and Mary II as a condition for accession to the throne. The provisions stemmed from abuses of royal power under James II and included required parliamentary consent for suspension of laws, raising taxes, and maintaining an army. They also provided for the right to petition the king, the free election and operation of Parliament, and a variety of judicial reforms. Royal succession was also established and Roman Catholics barred from the throne. 2. The first ten amendments to the Constitution of the US (all adopted 1791). Concern for the protection of basic rights of individuals sparked strong opposition to ratification of the Constitution, and amendments guaranteeing such rights were promised to win its ratification. Bishops' Wars 1. First ~ (1639). Brief war between the Scots and English king Charles I in the years prior to the English Civil War (1642–49). Charles's attempt (1637) to force Anglican liturgy on the Presbyterian Scots resulted in the Solemn League and Covenant (1638) and the seizure of Edinburgh castle (1639). The war was ended without actual fighting by the Peace of Berwick (1639), in which Charles made concessions to the Scots. 2. Second ~ (1640). Brief war between the Scots and English king Charles I just prior to the English Civil War (1642–51). The Presbyterian Scots reaffirmed the covenant and, amid the crisis caused by the Short Parliament in England, the Scots invaded northern England (1640). Following their victory at Newburn on the Tyne (Aug. 28), they occupied Northumberland and Durham. By the Treaty of Ripon (Oct. 26), Charles ended the war and agreed to make cash payments to the Scottish army. This, however, necessitated calling of the Long Parliament (1640), which in turn brought on the civil war.

Bismarck, Otto Eduard Leopold von ⟨Iron Chancellor⟩ 1815–98. Prussian statesman, who brought about German unification and become first chancellor of the German empire (1871–90). A member of the Prussian Diet (1847–50) and Prussian minister to the Diet of the German Confederation at Frankfurt (1851–59), he was made Prussian premier (1862). Thereafter he put into action plans for the unification (by "blood and iron") of Germany under Prussian domination. He precipitated the Austro-Prussian War (1866) and, with Austria defeated, created the North German Confederation (1866). To further unification, he provoked (by publication of the Ems Dispatch) the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71) and was named (1871) chancellor of the new German empire under King William I. He subsequently involved Germany in an intricate web of alliances (Three Emperors' League, Dual Alliance, Triple Alliance, Triple Entente) by which he became the leading European statesman. As chancellor he instituted many internal administrative reforms and, in an effort to combat the Socialists, set up the first comprehensive social security plan. He was forced to resign (1890) after the accession of William II.

Bithynia Ancient country located in what is now northwestern Turkey. The territory was originally occupied by Thracian tribes and from the 6th cent. BC it was nominally controlled by Persians and then by Macedonians. An independent kingdom after 297 BC, it flourished briefly with its capital at Nicomedia. Following its decline it became a province of Rome (74 BC).

Black and Tans Name applied to members of the British auxiliary police force sent to Ireland (1920) to make reprisals against Irish revolutionaries. Their brutality raised the anger of the Irish and the indignation of the British, and contributed to establishment of the Irish Free State (1921). They derived their name from the colors of their uniforms.

Blackbeard ⟨Edward Teach⟩ ⟨Edward Thatch⟩ d. 1718. English pirate. He is believed to have been an English privateer during the War of Spanish Succession (1701–14) and to have subsequently turned to piracy. He raided from the West Indies to the Virginia coast (1716–18) and was finally killed while trying to elude capture.

Black Code ⟨Code Noir⟩ French edict, issued (1685) by King Louis XIV to govern the treatment of slaves and freed blacks in the French holdings in the West Indies.

Black Codes Generally, local laws in the US that from the 17th to 19th cents. regulated the conduct and punishment of Negro slaves; and specifically, laws passed by Southern states immediately after the Civil War to regulate freed blacks. The post-Civil War laws varied, though in general they aimed at maintaining the sharp divisions between blacks and whites. Blacks were permitted to marry and own personal property but land-ownership restrictions, oppressive work laws, mandatory segregation of public facilities, and other provisions effectively blocked their emancipation. In the North the laws were regarded as disguised slavery and helped bring on the programs of Radical Republicans and the Reconstruction era.

Blackfoot Indians American Indian tribes of the Algonquin family, who flourished in the Great Plains region of the US and Canada in the 18th and 19th cents. For a time successful against the encroachments of white civilization, the tribes were eventually forced to sign treaties with the US government. Reduction of the buffalo herds brought mass starvation and near destruction to the Blackfeet in the later 19th cent.

Black Friday US financial panic (Sept. 24, 1869), caused by speculators J. Gould and J. Fisk, who were attempting to corner the gold market. On discovering the scheme, President U. Grant flooded the market with government gold to break the corner. This remedy, however, precipitated a panic on the securities market and left thousands ruined. Another day of financial panic (Sept. 18, 1873) is also called Black Friday.

Black Hand Secret criminal society. Organized in Sicily, it flourished there in the late 19th cent., and spread to the US, where it became prominent for a time in the early 20th cent. The society in Sicily was ruthlessly suppressed under B. Mussolini.

Black Hawk War Brief war (1832) between the US and a band of Sac and Fox Indians led by Black Hawk. The conflict arose over the forced cession of Sac and Fox lands in Illinois to the US, called for by a disputed 1804 treaty. Black Hawk refused to leave the lands until forced to move west of the Mississippi in 1831. In 1832 he led a band of 1,000 starving warriors, women, and children back to Illinois and was met by a combined force of militia and US regulars. Pursued into Wisconsin, he was defeated in the Battle of Bad Axe River and all but 150 of his band were massacred.

Bleeding Kansas Name applied to the US territory of Kansas during the local war (1854–59) between proslavery and antislavery factions there prior to its admission as a state. The Kansas-Nebraska Act (1854) left to the voters the question of extending slavery into Kansas (Popular Sovereignty). Soon after its passage, Free-Soilers (antislavery "Jayhawkers") and proslavery men ("Border Ruffians") from Missouri streamed into the state. Violence between the two sides was narrowly averted in the Wakarusa War (Dec. 1855), caused by the murder of an antislavery man. However, there followed the sack (May 21, 1856) of Lawrence, Kansas by proslavery men, the Pottawatomie Massacre, and numerous other bloody skirmishes. The violence continued until the Wyandotte Constitution was adopted (1859). Kansas was admitted as a free state (1861).

Blenheim, Battle of Major Anglo-Austrian victory (Aug. 13, 1704) in the War of the Spanish Succession (1701–14). A combined Anglo-Austrian force of 52,000 (under J. Churchill, duke of Marlborough, and Eugene of Savoy) surprised and defeated some 60,000 French and Bavarian troops (under French Marshal Comte Camille de Tallard, 1652–1728) at the Bavarian village of Blenheim. Anglo-Austrian casualties numbered 12,000. Franco-Bavarian losses were some 15,000 casualties and 13,000 captured. The battle eliminated Bavaria from the war and marked the beginning of France's decline as a military power in Europe.

Boeotia Ancient region of Greece. It became prominent with the creation of the Boeotian League (*c*550 BC), which under the domination of Thebes, engaged in a power struggle with Athens. Boeotia's decline began with the league's defeat by Philip of Macedon (338 BC). Boeotia was the birthplace of the poets Hesiod and Pindar.

Boeotian League In ancient Greece, a confederacy of city-states of Boeotia. Founded *c*550 BC, it was dominated by Thebes and ruled by a form of federal government. The league opposed Sparta in the Corinthian War (395–387 BC), allied itself with Athens to defeat Sparta (379 BC), and suffered in the Third Sacred War (355–346 BC). Defeated with Athens by the Macedonians (338 BC), it was dissolved (335 BC) by Alexander the Great after an unsuccessful revolt.

Boer Name applied to early settlers of South Africa, especially those of Dutch or Huguenot descent. Their descendants are now usually called Afrikaners. The first Boers were settled near the Cape of Good Hope (1652) by the Dutch East India Company. After British annexation of the region (1815), the Boers resisted British authority, abandoned the colony, and set out on what is known as the Great Trek. They fought the British in the Boer War (1899–1902), but their territories were finally absorbed into the Union of South Africa.

Boer War ⟨South African War⟩ War (1899–1902) between the Boers of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic (Transvaal), and Great Britain. Tensions between the Boers and the British, caused by conflicts of territorial claims in South Africa, were further aggravated by discovery (1886) of gold in the Transvaal and subsequent influx of prospectors and settlers, mainly British subjects. In order to protect their holdings, the Boers passed laws unfavorable to foreigners. The Jameson Raid (q.v.) of 1895 led P. Kruger, president of the South African Republic, to conclude a military alliance (Mar. 17, 1896) with the Orange Free State. The situation continued to deteriorate, and the Boers declared war (Oct. 12, 1899). The Boers claimed early victories but in 1900 heavy British reinforcements, under command of Lord H. Kitchener, began to turn the tide. Kruger fled (1900) to Europe to secure intervention on the Boers' behalf, but was unsuccessful. Great Britain annexed the Transvaal (Sept., 1900), but a vicious guerrilla war continued until 1902. The war was ended by the Treaty of Vereeniging (May 31, 1902), by which the Boers yielded to British sovereignty in return for promises of representative government in the future and indemnities for war damages.

He was secretary for war (1704–08) during the War of Spanish Succession and later arranged the ouster (1714) of R. Harley as leader of the Tory ministry. He fled Britain on the accession of George I (1714). Returning some years later, he turned to writing and became an associate of Pope and Swift.

Bolívar, Simón 1783–1830. Venezuelan revolutionary and hero in the South American movement for independence from Spain. The son of wealthy parents, he took an early part in the Venezuelan revolution (1810). Following Spanish victories (1812), he led a military force that briefly recaptured Venezuela (1813). Final success came in the following years. He liberated New Granada (1819) in the Battle of Boyaca, then Venezuela (1821), Ecuador (1822), Peru (1824), and Upper Peru (later Bolivia, so named after him) (1825). In 1819 he was proclaimed president of Great Colombia (eventually including Colombia, Ecuador, and Venezuela). Though his plans for a united South America gave rise to Pan-Americanism, Bolívar was unable to hold Great Colombia together. His assumption of dictatorial powers (1828) failed to prevent secession of Venezuela and Ecuador and in 1830 he resigned.

Bolivia ⟨Republic of Bolivia⟩ Bolivia is an independent state located in west central South America. Its capital is Sucre. Bolivia was ruled by Indians and Incas until the Spanish conquests in the 1530s. Colonial rule was ended in the 1820s through the efforts of Simón Bolívar, for whom the country is named. Political unrest, rebellions, and coups have plagued Bolivia from the time of its independence. Key dates in the history of Bolivia include:

1538 Incan Empire conquered by H. Pizarro; Bolivia became part of the viceroyalty of Peru.

1545 Silver discovered; native Indians forced to work in mines as colonial settlers rushed to exploit the region.

1776 Region annexed to the new viceroyalty of La Plata.

1809 Uprising in Chuquisaca marked beginning of revolt against Spanish colonial rule.

1824 S. Bolívar and A. de Sucre led successful military campaign against Spanish royalists in Peru and Bolivia; Battle of Ayacucho (near Lima, Dec. 9) ended royalist resistance.

1825 Bolivia declared independence from Spain (Aug. 6).

1826 Constitution drafted by S. Bolívar adopted; Sucre became first president.

1836 A. Santa Cruz seized power in Peru and invaded Bolivia; Peru and Bolivia joined as a federal republic with Santa Cruz as leader.

1839 Chile, opposed to the federation, defeated Santa Cruz at the Battle of Yungay (Jan.) and thus ended the federation.

1866–74 Treaties established 24th parallel as Chile-Bolivian border.

1879–84 War of the Pacific with Chile; Bolivia lost all coastal territories.

1880 New constitution adopted; failed to halt political turmoil.

1899 Brazil seized rubber-rich Acre region (in eastern Bolivia) after revolt by Brazilian settlers there.

1903 Brazil received 70,000 sq. mi. of Acre region by the Treaty of Petropolis.

1904 Treaty with Chile granted Bolivia free access to the sea.

1932–35 Chaco War, undeclared border war with Paraguay over Chaco region.

1934–37 Col. David Toro in power after a series of coups; he seized Standard Oil holdings and mining company profits.

1940 Gen. Enrique Peñaranda elected president under new constitution (adopted 1938); elections followed short-lived attempt to establish totalitarian state (1939).

1943 Peñaranda joined Allies in WW II; ordered conscription of laborers to work in mines to produce strategic raw materials.

1943 National Revolutionary Movement (MNR) seized power after widespread strikes by workers protesting oppressive working conditions.

1944–46 MNR leader Gualberto Villarroel in office as president; established totalitarian state.

1946–51 Conservative elements seized power; put down MNR-backed rebellions and attempted to prevent duly-elected MNR candidate from taking office in 1951.

1952–64 V. Paz Estenssoro, MNR candidate who won elections, in office after MNR seized power.

1951–56 Estenssoro nationalized tin-company holdings, initiated agrarian reforms, and extended civil rights to Indians.

1964 Military seized power in the wake of economic problems and rise of terrorist groups.

1967 Government troops, battling guerrilla movement since 1965, killed Che Guevara.

1967 New constitution adopted.

1970 Gulf Oil Company holdings nationalized (with compensation).

1971–78 Col. Hugo Banzer Suárez in power after series of coups (1969–71).

1978–80 New round of military coups and political unrest followed contested presidential election.

1980 Gen. Luis García Meza seized power (July 17) after presidential elections failed to produce a clear winner.

1981–82 Meza's harsh rule resulted in a military takeover and rapid succession of military rulers.

Bolivian National Revolutionary Movement (MNR) Political group (founded 1941) that fostered a social revolution in Bolivia during the 1950s. Following a general rebellion (Apr. 9–11, 1952), exiled MNR leader V. Paz Estenssoro became president (1952–56) and instituted sweeping economic and social reforms. These included universal suffrage, nationalization of tin mines, land reforms, and disbanding of the army and militia. The reforms bred runaway inflation, however, and by the early 1960s the government abandoned the revolution for a program of fiscal austerity.

Bollandists Name of a group of Belgian Jesuits who are charged with the continuous updating of the Acta Sanctorum, the collected lives and legends of the Roman Catholic saints. The group is named after Jean de Bolland (1596–1665), the editor who completed (1643) the first volumes. Except for the period 1794–1837, Bollandists have been revising the great work continuously since 1643.

Bolshevik Party Conference Name sometimes used for a congress of the Russian Social Democratic Workers party, convened (1912) at Prague by N. Lenin. In an effort to maintain the unity of his own Bolshevik faction, Lenin used the occasion to permanently split the party and forced the Menshevik faction to form a separate party organization.

Bolsheviks One of the two important factions of the Russian Social Democratic Workers' party. The faction originated under N. Lenin during the second congress of the Social Democratic Workers' party (1903) at Brussels and London. Generally, the Bolsheviks wanted to establish a dictatorship of the proletariat immediately after the revolution they anticipated would come. Their opponents, the Mensheviks, believed an intermediate stage of bourgeois rule was needed before workers took power. The split subsequently widened and in 1912 Lenin formed the Bolsheviks as a small but distinct revolutionary party. Following the February Revolution and Lenin's return to Russia (1917), the Bolsheviks became increasingly popular with the workers. By controlling the Moscow and Petrograd Soviets the Bolsheviks were able to become the ruling power in the government after the October Revolution. Lenin first shared power with other factions but gradually eliminated rival parties. Bolsheviks were officially named Russian Communist Party (Bolsheviks) in 1918 and Communist Party of the Soviet Union in 1952.

Bombay Indian city (pop. 5,968,000), capital of Maharashtra state and a major port and industrial center. Native Indian settlements date from the 12th cent. and the site of the modern city was ceded to the Portuguese *c*1534. The British acquired control (1661) and for nearly two centuries Bombay was Indian headquarters of the East India Company. The opening of the Suez Canal assured the city continuing prosperity.

Bonus Army ⟨~ Marchers⟩ ⟨~ Expeditionary Force⟩ Mass gathering of US WW I veterans (spring-summer of 1932) at Washington, D.C., during the Great Depression. The unemployed and impoverished veterans (estimated variously at 12–20,000) camped in Washington to press their demand for immediate payment of a WW I bonus of about $1,000 each (due to be paid in 1945). The Senate defeated (June 17) a bill for immediate payment and Pres. H. Hoover ordered (July 28) removal of the marchers. US Army troops under Gen. D. MacArthur drove the marchers out and burned their camps. The bonus was finally paid in 1936.

bootlegging Usually, illegal trafficking in alcohol, especially in the US during Prohibition (1920–33). Though the illegal manufacture and sale of alcohol was known before Prohibition, it became a burgeoning industry during the Prohibition years. Bootlegging involved smuggling from foreign countries, illegal manufacture within the US, and distribution through illegal "speakeasies." The profits from these lucrative operations helped to establish organized crime in the US and spawned widespread police and political corruption. Activities of bootleggers and the general disregard for dry laws forced the repeal of Prohibition (1933).

Borah, William Edgar 1865–1940. American politician. An isolationist US Senator (1907–40), he opposed the Versailles Treaty and US entry into the League of Nations but supported international disarmament and the Kellogg-Briand Pact.

Bordeaux French seaport (pop. 226,000) and a center of the French wine trade. Known to the Romans as Burdigala, it became the seat of the dukes of Aquitane (11th cent.), prospered under English rule (1154–1453), and served several times (1870, 1914, 1940) as the seat of provisional French governments.

Borodino, Battle of Narrow victory (Sept. 7, 1812) for Napoleon during the Russian invasion of the Napoleonic Wars. In the battle some 120,000 retreating Russian troops under Gen. M. Kutuzov made their last defense of Moscow at the village of Borodino. The Russians managed to hold off Napoleon's force of 130,000 soldiers in the day-long battle but retreated during the night. The French suffered 30,000 casualties and the Russians 45,000. After the battle Napoleon was able to march unopposed into Moscow, but he had lost his chance to destroy the Russian army.

Bosch, Hieronymus ⟨Jerom Bos⟩ *c*1450–1516. Dutch painter, noted for the bizarre and grotesque. His works include The Crowning with Thorns and The Garden of Earthly Delights.

Bosnia and Herzegovina Historic region, now part of Yugoslavia. Once part of the Roman province of Illyricum, it was settled by Serbs and Croatians (7th cent.). After the 12th cent. it came under Hungarian domination. By the late 15th cent. the region had fallen to the Turks, who controlled it until the Bosnian Rebellion (1875). After the Russo-Turkish War, Austria-Hungary occupied the region (1878), then annexed it (1908), thereby precipitating the Bosnian Crisis. The assassination (1914) of Archduke Ferdinand in Sarajevo led to WW I, after which the territory was annexed (1918) to Serbia. In 1946 it became one of the six constituent republics of Yugoslavia.

Bosnian crisis International crisis caused by Austria-Hungary's annexation (Oct. 6, 1908) of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The incident contributed to tensions that led to WW I, by straining relations between Austria-Hungary and Russia and by arousing Serbian nationalism. Austria-Hungary had occupied the territories since the Russo-Turkish War (1877–78). When Austria-Hungary announced formal annexation, Russia sided with Serbians in protest. Germany supported Austria-Hungary and threatened war, and Russia, humiliated, backed down.

Bosnian Rebellion Revolt (1875) in Bosnia against Ottoman rule. The uprising, which began in nearby Herzegovina, gained support from Serbia, and culminated in the Serbo-Turkish War of 1876–78.

Bossuet, Jacques Bénigne 1627–1704. French bishop and orator, considered one of the great French orators. He attacked F. Fenelon and Quietism, and figured in the Gallican controversy.

Boston US city, (pop. 563,000) the capital of Massachusetts. Established in 1630 by J. Winthrop, Boston played a leading role before and during the American Revolution. It was the site of the Boston Massacre (1770), the Boston Tea Party (1773), the Battle of Bunker Hill (1775), and the siege of Boston (1775–76), which forced British evacuation. A cultural and educational center, it is called the "Athens of America."

Boston, Siege of American military victory (1775–76) during the American Revolution. Shortly after the battles of Lexington and Concord (Apr. 19, 1775), Colonial forces began a siege of Boston, then held by the British. Installation by the Continental Army of artillery on Dorchester Heights (Mar., 1776) forced British evacuation of the city (Mar. 17).

Boston Massacre Incident (Mar. 5, 1770) leading up to the American Revolution (1775–83), in which British troops fired into a crowd of rioting colonials in Boston. The Townshend Acts, and the quartering of British troops in Boston to enforce them, led to frequent harassment of the soldiers by Boston colonials. On Mar. 5, a group of nine soldiers was threatened by a crowd of 50–60 angry colonials. The soldiers opened fire and killed five, including Crispus Attucks (1723?–70), who is sometimes called the leader of the mob. The soldiers were later tried and acquitted on charges of murder, though two were found guilty of manslaughter, and most of the Townshend Acts were repealed.

Boston Tea Party Famous incident (Dec. 16, 1773) leading up to the American Revolution. American colonists had protested the tea tax imposed by British Parliament in the Townshend Acts and had blocked delivery of tea at New York and Philadelphia. At Boston, however, Gov. T. Hutchinson demanded payment of the tax. A group of some 50 colonists, disguised as Indians and including S. Adams and P. Revere, boarded three British ships in Boston harbor and threw their cargoes of tea overboard. Parliament responded with the Intolerable Acts, closing the port of Boston.

Boswell, James 1740–95. Scottish author, diarist and famous biographer of S. Johnson. A lawyer from 1776, he sought to befriend the great men of his time and first met Johnson in 1763. He became famous with publication of his Account of Corsica (1768) and joined Johnson's literary club (1773). His classic Life of Samuel Johnson was published in 1791. Boswell's literary reputation was further strengthened by discovery (1927) of his voluminous journals, in Ireland.

Bosworth Field, Battle of Tudor victory (1485) over the Yorkists, ending the Wars of the Roses in England. Some 5,000 rebel troops under Henry Tudor (later Henry VII) engaged 15,000 Yorkists under King Richard III. Treachery and disorganization led to Richard's defeat and death in battle. Henry thus gained the throne and founded the Tudor dynasty.

Bounty*, HMS English ship aboard which occurred the celebrated mutiny on Apr. 28, 1789. The ship, under the command of Capt. W. Bligh, was carrying a cargo of breadfruit trees from Tahiti to the West Indies. Led by the mate Fletcher Christian (fl. late 18th cent.), the crew mutinied and set the captain and 18 others adrift. The remainder of the crew is believed by some to have founded a colony at Pitcairn Island.

Bourbon Powerful French royal family whose descendants were rulers of France, Spain, Kingdom of Two Sicilies, and Parma. The family can be traced back to a 9th-cent. French nobleman, Adhemar (or Aimar). The founder of the royal line was Robert of Clermont (1256–1318), a son of French King Louis IX. Robert married (1272) the Bourbon heiress, Beatrice. The elder line thus formed became extinct (1527) with the death of Charles, duke of Bourbon. But a collateral line, Bourbon-Vendôme, produced Henry IV (ruled 1589–1610), the first of a long line of Bourbon kings of France. King Louis XIV's brother, Philippe, duke of Orleans (1640–1701), founded the Orléans (Bourbon) line and Louis' grandson, Philip, duke of Anjou, founded the Bourbon-Spain line as King Philip V. Bourbon rule of France was uninterrupted until the French Revolution (1789–99), when King Louis XVI was deposed (1792) and guillotined. During the Bourbon Restoration, Louis XVI's brother ruled as Louis XVIII. His successors, Charles X and Louis Philippe (Bourbon-Orléans) were the last Bourbon kings of France. Thereafter claims to the throne by royal pretenders of the Bourbon line continued until extinction of the line with the death (1883) of H. Chambord. Royal claims then passed to the Orléans line. (See also Bourbon-Spain, Bourbon-Sicily, Bourbon-Parma.) Bourbon Kings of France were:

Louis XIII	1610–43
Louis XIV	1643–1715
Louis XV	1715–74
Louis XVI	1774–92
Louis XVII	1793–95 (never ruled)
Louis XVIII	1814–24
Charles X	1824–30
Louis Philippe	1830–48 (Bourbon-Orléans)

Bourbon, Charles, duke of Bourbon 1490–1527. Constable of France under Francis I. He supported Holy Roman Emperor Charles V against Francis in the Italian Wars.

Bourbon-Parma A branch of the Bourbon family of French royalty. The line was established as a branch of Bourbon-Spain in 1748 when Philip, a son of Spanish king Philip V, was made duke of Parma and Piacenza. The line survived until 1859 when Robert, 5th duke of Parma, lost his title.

Bourbon-Sicily Line of rulers in southern Italy, a branch of the French Bourbon family. Established by Ferdinand I, who was made king of Naples (1759) and ruled the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (1816–25), it lasted until 1860, when the kingdom was incorporated into Italy.

Bourbon-Spain Line of rulers in Spain, a branch of the French Bourbon family. Established with the sucession (1700) of King Philip V, the grandson of French King Louis XIV, it has continued, with interruptions, to the present as the royal family of Spain. The rulers are:

Louis I	1724
Philip V	1724–46 (restored)
Ferdinand VI	1746–59
Charles III	1759–88
Charles IV	1788–1808
Ferdinand VII	1808
Ferdinand VII	1814–33 (restored)
Isabella II	1833–68
Alfonso XII	1874–85
Alfonso XIII	1886–1931
Juan Carlos I	1975–

bourgeoisie Originally, French merchants and craftsmen in medieval times, who, as a class, occupied the economic and social middle ground between landowners and peasants. With the breakup of feudal society, the rise of capitalism and the advent of the Industrial Revolution, the bourgeoisie came to include a wide range of groups of entrepreneurs, such as bankers, factory owners, merchants, and professionals. By K. Marx's theory of class struggle, society consists of the capitalist bourgeoisie pitted against the wage-earning workers, or proletariat (q.v.).

Brest-Litovsk, Treaty of Short-lived peace treaty signed (Mar. 3, 1918) by Russia and the Central Powers. This treaty ended war between Russia and the German allies but was rendered void by the defeat of Germany and the general armistice ending WW I late in 1918. Russia, weakened by revolution, and now under N. Lenin's leadership, was forced to accept humiliating terms. By the treaty Russia gave up Poland, the Baltic States, and part of Belorussia, and recognized the independence of Finland, the Ukraine, and Georgia.

Brazil Republic located in eastern South America. Its capital is Brasilia. Brazil was colonized and settled by the Portuguese and was seat of the Portuguese monarchy from 1808 to 1821. Brazil became an independent empire in 1822. Development of the country was largely accomplished by slave labor imported from Africa. Although the monarchy established a plan for gradual emancipation, the abolition of slavery (1888) by Isabel, daughter of the emperor, alienated the planters and led to the establishment of the Republic of Brazil in 1889. Key dates in the history of Brazil include:

1500 P. Cabral claimed Brazil for Portugal.

1521–57 Portuguese king John III expanded Portuguese influence in Brazil.

1532 First permanent Portuguese colony established at São Vicente.

1555 French Huguenot settlement established in Rio de Janeiro Harbor.

1567 Portuguese forced Huguenots out and founded Rio de Janeiro.

1930 Julio Prestes elected to presidency (Mar. 11).

1930 Revolution in Brazil (Oct.) broke out before Prestes' inauguration; Getulio Vargas made acting president; Vargas moved to block Prestes and his supporters, the Paulistas, from gaining power.

1932 Paulistas staged unsuccessful revolt against Vargas' rule.

1934 Brazilian National Constituent Assembly passed new constitution and made Vargas president.

1937 New constitution issued by Vargas, who took personal control of the government; federal power greatly increased.

1942 Brazil entered WW II on the side of the Allies.

1945 Vargas overthrown (Oct.).

1946 New constitution passed (Sept.).

1950–54 Vargas elected president; presidency marked by economic and political turmoil; forced to resign.

1955–60 Juscelino Kubitschek in office as elected president (1955); began the construction of Brasilia.

1961–64 João Goulart in office as president; parliamentary government instituted (1961–63) during his presidency but presidential government restored in 1963; military forced Goulart's resignation (1964).

1964–67 Gen. Humberto Castelo Branco served as president; exercised special powers and dissolved all political parties; new constitution passed (1967).

1967–74 Period of political unrest; government dominated by succession of military leaders; outbreaks of terrorism by leftists increased.

1974–79 Gen. Ernesto Geisel in office as president.

1977 Government canceled US military aid, charging interference in its domestic affairs.

1977 President Geisel suspended Congress to stifle growing opposition.

1978 Constitutional reforms gave limited freedoms to people, though military government left many restrictions in force.

1979– Gen. João Baptista da Figueiredo in office as president; economic problems (especially high inflation) and pressure for return to democracy continued into 1982.

Brétigny, Treaty of ⟨Calais, ~⟩ Treaty (May 8, 1360) between France and England temporarily ending the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). The treaty was a result of the French defeat at the Battle of Poitiers (1356), in which French King John II had been taken prisoner. By the treaty John was released on payment of 3 million gold crowns. France also ceded territories to England, including Aquitane, Gascony, and Calais. In return English King Edward III dropped claims to the French throne. The peace was short-lived and within 13 years France reconquered nearly all territories lost in the treaty.

Buchanan, Franklin 1800–74. American naval officer. An organizer and first superintendent (1845–47) of the US Naval Academy, he became the senior naval officer of the Confederacy (1862–64) during the American Civil War. He was captured at the Battle of Mobile Bay (1864).

Buchanan, James 1791–1868. 15th US president (1857–61), successor to F. Pierce. The American Civil War (1861–65) broke out in the last months of his administration. Prior to his election, he was a congressman (1821–31), a senator (1834–45), secretary of state (1845–49) and (variously) a US diplomat. Though personally against slavery, he advocated maintaining the balance between slave and free states. To that end he supported such measures as the Compromise of 1850 and helped formulate the controversial Ostend Manifesto (1854). His part on the latter won him the backing of the South and the presidential election in 1856 as a Democrat. As president he enraged Northern abolitionists by supporting enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Laws and the pro-slavery Lecompton Constitution in the Bleeding Kansas controversy. The Harpers Ferry Raid (1859) increased North-South tensions and, with the Democratic party split, A. Lincoln won the election (1860). In the last months of his administration, Buchanan opposed South Carolina's secession (Dec., 1860) and the seizure of federal forts, but took no decisive action.

After attaining it he spent the rest of his life teaching others.

Buddhism Religion that originated with the teachings of Buddha in India during the 6th cent. BC. Buddhism arose in opposition to Hinduism, though it shares concepts of bondage in cycles of birth, suffering, and death and escape from this cycle through attainment of nirvana. Many schools of Buddhist thought sprang from Buddha's teachings, though all accept Buddha's fundamental doctrine of the Four Noble Truths (existence is suffering; suffering has a cause within the self; one may be freed of suffering; following the precepts of the Eightfold Path ends suffering and leads to nirvana). The two main schools of Buddhist thought in modern times arose from a split that developed in the 4th cent. BC. The two schools are Mahayana and Theraveda. Though Buddhism has virtually disappeared in India, it is prevalent in Japan, Korea, China, Tibet, and in Southeast Asia. See also Tibetan Buddhism, Pure Land Buddhism, Zen Buddhism. Key events in the spread of Buddhism include:

*c*528 BC Buddhism founded; Siddhartha, after six years of wandering in search of spiritual truth, discovered enlightenment (*c*528 BC) while meditating at Buddha Gaya (now in northeast India); articulated his Four Noble Truths in first sermon soon after; as Buddha, spent the rest of his life spreading his teachings.

*c*483 BC Buddha died; his teachings at first spread orally by his followers.

*c*340 BC Various factions among the rising Buddhist movement split into two great sects; these eventually became the Mahayana (Greater Vehicle) and the Theraveda or Hinayana (Lesser Vehicle), the major divisions of modern Buddhism.

*c*273–*c*232 BC Indian Emperor Asoka promoted the spread of Buddhist teachings; had "Rock Edicts," containing Buddhist principles, engraved on stones and pillars throughout the Maurya empire; sent Buddhist missionaries to Ceylon and elsewhere.

2D–1ST CENTS. BC Various Buddhist schools put their own versions of Buddhist teachings in written form; Pali Canon, earliest surviving example of them, written (*c*29–17 BC) by the Theraveda school (in Ceylon).

Bulge, Battle of the ⟨Ardennes, ~⟩ Unsuccessful German counterattack (1944–45) on Allied positions in Belgium during WW II. It was the last major German offensive on the Western Front. German armored divisions under Marshal G. von Rundstedt launched their surprise attack (Dec. 16) during a period of bad weather in the Ardennes, southern Belgium, in hopes of splitting the Allied forces and of taking the strategic port of Antwerp. They drove 60 miles into Allied territory, creating a "bulge" in the lines. Allied resistance, notably the heroic stand by an American division at Bastogne under command of Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe (1898–1975), helped to stall the Germans. Improved flying weather allowed Allied air forces to support counterattacks, forcing the Germans to retreat (Jan.).

Bunker Hill, Battle of ⟨Breed's Hill, ~⟩ Victory (June 17, 1775) for American colonials over the British early in the American Revolution (1775–83). The first major battle of the war, it proved the Colonial militia could stand up to the British regulars and thus aided the cause of the revolution. The Colonial militia had laid siege to Boston soon after the war began. To block the first British attempt to break the siege, Col. W. Prescott and some 1,000 militiamen were sent (June 16) to fortify Bunker Hill, north of Colonial Boston. The following afternoon, 3,000 British troops, sent by Gen. T. Gage, attacked the fortifications (actually located on nearby Breed's Hill). The colonials, ordered by Prescott to hold fire until they saw "the whites of the enemy's eyes," withstood two British charges. Out of ammunition, they were forced to retreat on the third. The British sustained heavy casualties (about 1,000 to 450 Americans) and failed to break the siege.

Burgundians French political faction that engaged in civil war (1411–18) against the rival Armagnacs for control of France in the 15th cent. The conflict began (1407) when John the Fearless, duke of Burgundy, murdered his rival, Louis, duke of Orléans (brother of the insane French king Charles VI), in a struggle for control of the French throne. John's opponents, the Armagnacs, were so named after their leader Bernard VII, count of Armagnac. He was the father-in-law of Charles, the new duke of Orléans. The conflict led to English intervention (1415) under Henry V, who defeated the duke of Orléans at Agincourt (Oct. 25, 1415) and reconquered Normandy. The civil war thus became part of the Hundred Years' War. The Burgundians captured Paris (1418) and massacred many Armagnacs. John the Fearless was later assassinated (1419) while negotiating with the dauphin (later Charles VII) of France. John's son, Philip the Good, then signed the Treaty of Troyes (1420), allying the Burgundians with the English and declaring English king Henry V regent of France. The ascendancy of the Burgundians came when Philip signed the Treaty of Arras (1435), by which he recognized the new king Charles VII as rightful king of France and allied with him against the English. The power of the Armagnacs declined thereafter.

Burgundy Historic region of eastern France. Settled (AD 5th cent.) by the Germanic Burgundians, it came under the rule of the Merovingians (6th cent.), and was partitioned several times before being reunited (933) as the Second Kingdom of Burgundy. It entered its period of greatest power as a duchy under the rule of Philip the Bold (1342–1404), who received it (1364) from his father John II of France. Philip's descendents greatly increased its territories. After the death of Charles the Bold (1477), most of its possessions passed to the Hapsburgs, but the duchy itself was incorporated into France, remaining a province until its division in the French Revolution.

1960 Civilian government restored after U Nu's faction won elections.

1962 Gen. U Ne Win overthrew civilian government; established military dictatorship; nationalized industry; kept rebel groups in check though they remained active into the 1970s.

1974 People's Assembly formally empowered (Mar. 2) under new constitution creating socialist republic; 12-year rule by military coalition ended; U Ne Win remained in power.

1981 U San Yu replaced the aging U Ne Win as president.

Burma War ⟨Burmese War⟩ ⟨Anglo-Burmese War⟩ 1. First ~ War (1824–26) brought on by a Burmese invasion (1823) of eastern territories in British India. The British invaded Burma (1824), and took Rangoon easily. Despite stiffening resistance, British forces moved northward and eventually defeated the Burmese army (1825). By the Treaty of Yandabo (Feb. 24, 1826), the Burmese ceded western provinces to British India, including Arakan and Assam. 2. Second ~. War (1852) brought on by friction between the Burmese monarchy and British traders in Burma. The British invaded (1852) Burma, captured all of the south, but did not advance to the north. The British annexed (Jan., 1853) the province of Pegu and a revolution in the north brought the accession of King Mindon Min, who did not challenge the British conquests. 3. Third ~. War (1885–86) in which the British completed their conquest of Burma and ended the rule of the Konbaung dynasty. The invasion of the remaining independent northern territories was provoked by continuing friction between British traders and the Burmese monarch, Thibaw (1858–1916, reigned 1878–85). Thibaw surrendered late in 1885 and the British formally annexed Burma (Jan. 1, 1886), though guerrilla warfare against the British continued for several years.

His many important works include A Vision of Judgment, Beppo, Don Juan and Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

Byzantine Empire The Byzantine Empire was the successor state to the Roman Empire after the fall of the Western Roman Empire (AD 476). It corresponds to the Eastern Roman Empire (created by the division of the Roman Empire into the Western and Eastern empires, AD 395). It became the last bastion of Roman and Hellenic culture. For centuries after the Western Empire collapsed, the Byzantine Empire withstood the onslaughts of such groups as the Vandals, Goths, Persians, Seljuk and Ottoman Turks, thereby insuring a relatively peaceful period for the reorganization of Europe. It preserved Roman and Greek traditions and contributions, such as the legal code Corpus Juris Civilis, made a lasting imprint on Western civilization. Key dates in the history of the Byzantine Empire include:

AD 330 Roman emperor Constantine I rebuilt city of Byzantium as Constantinople, making it seat of the Roman Empire.

AD 395 Roman Empire permanently divided at death of Theodosius; his son Arcadius succeeded as emperor of the Eastern (or East Roman) Empire.

AD 476 Fall of Western Roman Empire; Eastern Empire survived as the Byzantine Empire, successor state to Roman Empire.

AD 476–477 Reign of Zeno the Isaurian (474–481) challenged by the usurper, Basiliscus.

6TH CENT. AD Rise of Blues and Greens, rival political factions, within the empire.

527–565 Justinian I reigned; one of the great rulers of the Byzantine Empire; ordered compilation of the legal code Corpus Juris Civilis (529–535); empire reached its height under Justinian, including in its domains Italy, part of North Africa, and southern Spain.

532 Constantinople heavily damaged in Nika Riot of Blues and Greens against Justinian; attempt to overthrow Justinian failed.

532 Construction of Hagia Sophia begun; one of the masterpieces of Byzantine architecture, it was but a part of the great building program under Justinian.

533–534 North Africa brought under Byzantine control when Byzantine general Belisarus defeated Vandals.

535 Belisarus began reconquest of Italy (from Ostrogoths), later completed by Narses.

540 Persians invaded Syria.

552–554 Byzantine general Narses defeated the Ostrogoths, led by Totila, in Italy; brought Italy under firm Byzantine control.

610–641 Heraclius I reigned; assumed power after Phocas was overthrown.

622–627 Heraclius warred against and decisively defeated the Persians, who had intermittently threatened the empire from 540 and who had conquered much of the southern empire from 611.

626 Constantinople successfully resisted attacks by Slavs and Avars.

FROM 634 Rise of the Muslim Caliphate Empire; Muslims began rapid expansion of their empire, taking over considerable Byzantine territory.

637–642 Muslim caliphs continued expanding their empire; Jerusalem fell (637) and Byzantine Egypt was lost (642).

638 Heraclius' attempt to resolve religious controversy over Monophysitism gave rise to new heresy, Monotheletism.

673–678 Muslim Arab threat to Byzantine Empire reached its height; Constantinople withstood siege by Arabs throughout the period and finally won peace settlement (678).

695–717 Period of anarchy and unrest in which the army gained power and named a succession of emperors; empire raided by Arabs and a new enemy, the Bulgars; order restored by Leo III.

698 Muslim Arab caliphs completed conquest of Byzantine territories in North Africa (begun 647).

717–741 Leo III reigned; put down revolts by army and restored order; founded Isaurian dynasty; began controversy over iconoclasm (726).

741–775 Constantine V reigned; advocated iconoclasm, lost control of Italy; warred against Bulgars (755–764).

751–756 Lombards conquered the Exarchate of Ravenna, Byzantine foothold in Italy; Franks called in by pope to aid against Lombards and thereby began alliance of popes in Rome and European monarchs.

780–797 Irene, mother of Emperor Constantine VI, held real power during his reign; overthrew him (797).

787–843 Iconoclastic controversy; temporarily ended by Council of Nicaea (787); revived again in 815; the ban on icon worship was finally rescinded in 843.

797–802 Irene reigned as first Byzantine empress; refused to recognize Charlemagne's empire as successor state to Western Roman Empire (800).

813–820 Leo V reigned; repelled Bulgar attack on Constantinople; forced Bulgars to accept peace treaty (817).

860s Saints Cyril and Methodius began their missionary work among the Slavs.

869–870 Council of Constantinople; Photius, patriarch of Constantinople and leader of Byzantine opposition to the primacy of Rome, was excommunicated by the council; Ignatius, called to succeed him, attempted to heal growing split between Eastern and Western churches.

867–886 Basil I reigned; founded Macedonian dynasty (867–1057); introduced legal code; his reign marked a golden age in Byzantine history; Basil rebuilt Byzantine military strength; his armies and navy generally successful against Muslim Arabs.

886–912 Leo VI reigned; compiled Basilica, the Byzantine legal code; warfare against the Bulgarians (from 889).

900s Rise of feudalism in the empire; feudal revolts against the emperors in this century proved unsuccessful.

913–959 Constantine VII reigned; Bulgarians seriously threatened Constantinople; warfare with Russian princes.

969–976 John I reigned; forced the Russians out of Bulgaria and, advancing against the Muslim Arabs, took parts of Syria.

976–1025 Basil II reigned; won final submission of Bulgarians (1018) after decisive victory against them (1014).

1042–54 Constantine IX reigned with wife Zoë; Seljuk Turks began to drive Byzantines from Asia Minor; empire began to crumble.

1042 Normans began attacks on Byzantine territories in southern Italy; eventually won control of Sicily and Naples to form Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (1091).

1054 Schism between Roman and Eastern Orthodox churches became permanent.

1081–1118 Alexius I Comnenus reigned; established the Comnenian dynasty (1081–1185); defended the empire against Norman invasions led by Robert Guiscard.

1096 Era of the Crusades began; Byzantine emperors, threatened by Seljuk advances, forced to contend with potentially dangerous force of European Christians sent to fight the Seljuks in the Holy Land.

1143–80 Manuel Comnenus reigned; averted war with Christians on Second Crusade; extended Byzantine hegemony over Hungary, notably after conquering Dalmatia (1168); accepted unfavorable peace after war with Venice (1176); attempted to promote ties with the Western church.

1185–95 Isaac II reigned; acceded after leading a revolt; collapse of central authority began as petty nobles gained power; Normans defeated but revolt by Bulgarians resulted in creation of a new Bulgarian kingdom (1185).

1204 Crusaders (on Fourth Crusade) captured Constantinople; Latin Empire of Constantinople established after sack of Constantinople.

1204–05 Baldwin I reigned as first Latin emperor of Constantinople.

1206 Theodore I Lascaris founded the empire of Nicaea after the fall of the empire to the crusaders.

1228–61 Baldwin II reigned as last Latin emperor of Constantinople.

1244 Mongol incursions into Asia Minor began.

1261 Michael VIII Paleologus (ruled 1261–82) reconquered Constantinople, effectively ending Latin Empire of Constantinople; Byzantine Empire reestablished.

1300s Ottoman Turks began their rise to power in northwestern Asia Minor, expanding their empire at the expense of the Byzantines.

1340s Serbs, led by Stephen Dushan, rose to power and threatened the Byzantine empire.

1341–47 War between John V and John VI for control of the empire; both Turks and Serbs called in to help; war set the stage for the final collapse of the empire; by 1391 the Turks had begun their attacks on Constantinople, the last vestige of Byzantine Empire.

1453 Constantinople fell to the Ottoman Turks; Constantine XI, last Byzantine emperor (1448–53), fell defending the city; Byzantine Empire ceased to exist.

Byzantium Ancient Greek city once located on the site of Constantinople. It gave its name to the Byzantine Empire, of which Constantinople later became capital. Founded 7th cent. BC by Megarian Greeks, it became an important commercial city. It was conquered (AD 196) by the Romans and, by order of Constantine I, the city was later rebuilt (AD 330) as Constantinople.

Caesar The famous family of the Julian clan of ancient Rome and, for a time, title of Roman rulers. The line begins with Sextus Julius, who was praetor in 208 BC. Its two most famous members are Julius and Augustus Caesar. After AD 68, the name "Caesar," with "Augustus," became a title taken by emperors who were not of the family. This tradition lasted to the time of Hadrian, who adopted only the title "Augustus."

Caesar, Julius *c*102–44 BC. Great Roman statesman and general. Caesar strengthened Rome's control over the empire by replacing the Roman oligarchy with a dictatorship and by pacifying Italy and the provinces. He extended the empire throughout Gaul and devised the Julian calendar, the basis of the modern calendar. Caesar aligned himself with the popular party during his early career and, in 60 BC, sought the consulate of Rome. Frustrated by Senate opposition, he formed the First Triumvirate with Crassus and Pompey and thus became consul in 59 BC. He was then named proconsul of Gaul and Illyricum (58) and became a military hero as commander of Roman armies in the Gallic Wars (58–51). Crassus' death ended the triumvirate (53) and set Pompey, now sole consul, against Caesar. In 49, Caesar led his armies from Gaul against Pompey. Crossing the Rubicon, he marched unopposed to Rome, and was made dictator. Caesar emerged victorious from the ensuing military exploits (49–45) in the provinces against Pompey's army and in 44 was named dictator for life. But his dictatorial powers had aroused bitter resentment in Rome. On the Ides of March (Mar. 15) 44, Caesar was assassinated by a band of conspirators which included Brutus, Cassius, and Casca. (For further details on Caesar's exploits, see Rome, 60–44 BC; Gallic Wars.)

Calhoun, John Caldwell 1782–1850. American statesman, vice-president (1825–29, 1829–32), and champion of the Old South. A nationalist and supporter of the War of 1812, he became secretary of war (1817–25) and then served as vice-president under J. Q. Adams and A. Jackson. He became a supporter of states' rights, and, breaking with Jackson over the Eaton Affair (q.v.) and nullification (q.v.), he resigned the vice-presidency. After winning passage (1832) of the controversial Ordinance of Nullification in South Carolina, he served in the US Senate (1832–43, 1845–50), where he worked to protect the interests of the South and oppose abolition of slavery. His debates with D. Webster are famous.

California US state on the Pacific coast (pop. 23,668,600), the 31st state. Spanish explorer J. Cabrillo claimed the lower coast for Spain (1542), and Sir F. Drake claimed the region north of San Francisco (1579) for the English. Gaspar de Portola established a permanent settlement at San Diego (1769), and settlement by Americans did not begin until the 1840s. The Mexican governor of the region was driven out in 1845, and, during the Mexican War (1846–48), the territory was occupied by US troops. It was ceded to the US by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (q.v.). The gold rush of 1848 increased population, and California became a state in 1850. Its constitution has been in effect since 1880.

Caligula AD 12–41. Roman emperor (AD 37–41), successor to Tiberius and notorious as a despotic ruler. Though his father, mother, and two brothers were rumored to have been put to death by Tiberius, Caligula befriended and ultimately succeeded him. At first a popular figure, he is sometimes said to have gone mad after a serious illness (AD *c*38). Tales of his subsequent ruthless cruelties and eccentric behavior are legion, and he squandered the great wealth of the treasury. He was assassinated.

caliph Ruler of the Muslim state founded by the prophet Muhammad (7th cent.). The caliphate was established on Muhammad's death (632) and was invested with absolute temporal and spiritual powers. Caliphs reigned over the Empire of the Caliphate (q.v.) from 632 until its conquest by the Mongols in 1258. The first four caliphs, Abu Bakr, Umar, Uthman, and Ali, were descendants of Muhammad and are called the Orthodox Caliphs. Their reign was broken in 661 when Muawiya took the caliphate by force and established the Umayyad dynasty (q.v.). The Abbasid line later replaced the Umayyads

Caliphate, Empire of Muslim theocracy established in western Arabia (7th cent.) by the prophet Muhammad. After Muhammad's death (632), the original Muslim state was rapidly expanded into a great empire by his successors, the caliphs, who held both temporal and spiritual powers. Two great dynasties ruled this empire, the Umayyads and their successors, the Abbasids. At its greatest extent, the Muslim Empire stretched from Afghanistan in the east, across the Mideast and North Africa, and up into Spain. But divisions among the Arab Muslims over religious and political matters, and strains caused by inclusion of so many diverse peoples within the Muslim world, seriously weakened the empire. These problems set the stage for the empire's final decline and eventual collapse before the invading Mongols (1258). Key events in the history of the empire include:

c613 Muhammad began preaching at Mecca in western Arabia.

622 Hejira (July 15–16), Muhammad's flight from Mecca to escape enemies of his teachings; marked beginning of Muslim era; Muhammad established following at Medina.

624–625 Muhammad's followers defeated a force from Mecca at Badr, but were themselves defeated at Uhud.

628 Opposed by the Jews at Medina, Muhammad condemned them and conquered the oasis of Khaibar, which they had held.

630–632 Muhammad marched into Mecca with 10,000 followers (632); tradition of pilgrimage established; Muhammad, now secure in his position as prophet, also established tradition of jihad (holy war) against nonbelievers and thus paved the way for the great expansion of the empire; raids against Byzantines to north conducted.

632 Muhammad died (June 8); caliphate established.

632–634 Abu Bakr, Muhammad's father-in-law, became first of the four patriarchal caliphs; suppressed revolts and established Muslim military power.

634–644 Umar I, second patriarchal caliph; Persian lands to north (modern Iraq) conquered (c635); Jordan, Palestine, and Syria taken from Byzantines after Battle of Yarmuk (636); northern advance stopped at edge of Byzantine Anatolia; Byzantine Egypt conquered (640–645).

644–656 Uthman, third patriarchal caliph; completed conquest of Persia (651); launched expeditions to Cyprus and North Africa; discontent within Muslim world led to his assassination.

656–661 Ali, fourth patriarchal caliph and husband of Fatima, Muhammad's daughter; first Muslim Civil War broke out when Muawiya opposed Ali's succession.

661 Hasan, Ali's son, appointed caliph after Ali was assassinated; Hasan soon after submitted to Muawiya.

661–680 Muawiya reigned as first caliph of the Umayyad dynasty (reigned 661–750); he restored order after civil war and made Damascus capital of the Muslim Empire; great expansion of the empire accomplished by his Umayyad successors.

674–680 Raids against Byzantine Empire became a protracted war in which the Muslims seriously threatened Constantinople.

680–683 Yazid I, Muawiya's son, became caliph; opposition in Arabia to domination by Syrian Muslims provoked Yazid's attacks on Medina and Mecca; set stage for second civil war.

683–692 Second Muslim Civil War.

684 Power struggle within Islamic leadership led to division of Islam into Shi'ite and Sunni (orthodox) Muslims.

685–692 Abd al-Malik succeeded as caliph; made peace with the Byzantines and then set about subduing various rebel groups involved in civil war; rival caliph (Ibn az-Zubayr) in Arabia was slain in battle at Mecca (692), thus ending the civil war.

692–705 Remainder of al-Malik's reign marked by his consolidation of power, building of the Dome of the Rock at Jerusalem (691), renewed war with the Byzantines, the capture of Carthage (698), and conquest of Byzantine North Africa.

711–714 Muslims from North Africa raided Visigothic kingdom in Iberia; quickly brought about collapse of the kingdom.

732 Muslim invaders drove Christians in Iberia far to the north (into modern northern Spain); Muslims halted by Charles Martel at Battle of Poitiers (in modern France) and never again advanced northward from Spain.

716–717 Arab Muslims mounted their last major attack on Byzantine Constantinople; attackers withdrawn after the death of Caliph Suleiman (reigned 715–717).

724–743 Hisham reigned as caliph; his reign was marked by the end of rapid territorial expansion under the Umayyad dynasty, and general peace and prosperity; Muslim Empire now extended from Afghanistan in the east, across the Arabian Peninsula and North Africa, and into Spain in the west; a Berber revolt (740–742) greatly reduced territories in North Africa that were held by the Arabs; period of decline followed Hisham's reign.

747–750 Revolt of Abu Muslim; by taking advantage of discontent among various Arab groups, Abu Muslim succeeded in fomenting a general rebellion that resulted in the overthrow of the Umayyad dynasty; Abbasid dynasty established by abu-al-Abbas as Saffan (reigned 750–54).

750–1258 Abbasid dynasty reigned; moved government from Damascus (Syria) to Baghdad (Iraq) in 763; period marked by deepening split between Sunni (orthodox) and Shi'ite Muslims, increasing influence of Persians (later Turks) in the Muslim world, and the consequent decline in power of the old Arab ruling class; Abbasid caliphs took on a stronger religious image as imams.

750 Abd-ar-Rahman I was the only Umayyad to escape executions that followed the Abbasid takeover; he made his way to Muslim Spain and established (755) the Umayyad line there (ruled until 1031).

754–775 Al-Mansur reigned as caliph; killed Abu Muslim and thus sparked unsuccessful revolts; moved capital to Baghdad (c763), which developed into the leading Muslim city; his reign was marked by stability and prosperity.

786–809 Harun al-Rashid reigned as caliph; luxury of his court immortalized in Thousand and One Nights; but rebellion and unrest were common in Syria, Egypt, and in far eastern reaches of empire; Harun issued the Meccan documents (802), which set forth his ill-fated plan to divide the empire in two on his death.

809–813 Third Muslim Civil War; broke out after Harun's death, between rulers of new eastern and western empires; Abd Allah al-Mamun emerged victorious.

813–833 Al-Mamun reigned as caliph; golden age of Muslim Arab culture; al-Mamun warred against Byzantines, put down revolts in Egypt, Syria, and Armenia; ordered translation of Greek texts; attempted to heal rift between Sunni and Shi'ite Muslims.

842–847 Al-Wathiq reigned as caliph; unsuccessfully tried to halt rising influence of non-Arabs (Persians, Turks) by returning to pro-Arab orthodox Sunni policies.

861–945 Breakdown of central authority; period of widespread rebellion and unrest; provincial rulers in the east and west became largely autonomous; political and military leadership taken over by the amir (from 945); caliphs reduced to spiritual figureheads largely dependent upon the amirs.

929 Umayyad ruler Abd-ar-Rahman III took advantage of weakened Abbasid caliphate to declare himself first caliph of Muslim Spain.

945–1055 Buyids, a dynasty of Persians, in power as amirs; though they favored the Shi'ite Muslims, they nevertheless maintained the Sunni caliphs in power.

969–1171 Fatimids, an extremist Shi'ite sect vehemently opposed to the Abbasids, conquered Egypt (969) and established the Fatimid dynasty there; actively attempted to overthrow Abbasids while they remained in power.

1008–31 Fourth Muslim Civil War; fought in Spain, it resulted in the end of the Umayyad dynasty rule there.

1055–92 Seljuk Turks, zealous Sunni Muslims, rose to power as their eastward migration increased their numbers in the empire; led by Togrul Beg, the Seljuks ousted (1055) the Buyid amirs from power, restored Sunni power, and themselves assumed temporal powers as sultans; Seljuk power reached its zenith under Malik-shah (1072–92), and thereafter conflicts among the sultans gave increased power to the Abbasid caliphs.

1095–1291 Era of the Crusades; rise of Saladin, who suppressed the Fatimids in Egypt (1171), as the great leader of Muslim forces against the crusaders.

1258 End of the Empire of the Caliphate; Mongol conqueror Hulagu Khan overran the empire and destroyed the capital of Baghdad; last reigning caliph, al-Musta'sim (ruled 1242–58), killed.

c1261–1517 Abbasid line lived on in Egypt, but held no real power; line ended by Ottoman Turk conquest of Egypt (1517).

Calixtines See Utraquists

Calixtus II ⟨Callistus II⟩ ⟨orig. Guido of Vienne⟩ d. 1124. French-born pope (1119–24), successor to Gelasius II. He forced Holy Roman Emperor Henry V to accept the Concordat of Worms (1122) and thereby ended the Investiture Controversy.

Calixtus III ⟨Callistus III⟩ ⟨orig. Borja, Alfonso de⟩ 1378–1458. Spanish-born pope (1455–58), successor to Nicholas V. He failed in his attempts to raise a crusade against the Turks. Calixtus III was also the name of an antipope to Alexander III (1168).

Calvin, John 1509–64. French theologian and, as founder of Calvinism, one of the great figures of the Protestant Reformation. Able at debating, Calvin at first studied law. He became a Protestant (1533), and was forced to leave France because of religious persecution. Later (at Basel, 1536) he completed his great theological work Institutes of the Christian Religion, which systemized Protestant dogma. He next went to Geneva (1536) to establish a theocracy according to his Calvinistic doctrines. Expelled from Geneva (1538) and then recalled (1541), Calvin struggled until 1555 to establish his absolute supremacy there. He was involved in noted controversies against the Lutherans and the Anabaptists, as well as in the trial and burning of M. Servetus (1553).

Calvinism 1. The body of religious teachings advanced by J. Calvin and his followers. Calvinism arose during the 16th-cent. Reformation and differed from Lutheranism in placing the church above the state, in emphasizing predestination and the notion of grace, and in developing a theology of the covenant (pact with God). Calvinistic doctrines were important in the development of English Puritanism, Scottish Presbyterianism, and the theocratic communities of early New England Puritans. Other noted Calvinists include J. Knox and J. Edwards. 2. Name for the body of doctrines that form the basis of the Reformed and Presbyterian churches.

Cambacérès, Jean Jacques Régis de 1753–1824. French revolutionary statesman. He was second consul under Napoleon (1799–1804), and, from 1804, archchancellor of the French empire. He played an important role in formulating the Code Napoléon.

Cambodia Republic located in Southeast Asia. Its capital is Phnom Penh. Cambodia's early history was shaped in part by early Hindu and Buddhist influences. The Khmer Empire flourished in Cambodia from the 6th to 15th cents. and at its peak made Cambodia the leading empire in the region. As the Khmer Empire declined, Cambodia suffered numerous attacks from neighboring states, and finally in the 19th cent. became a French protectorate. After achieving independence (1953), Cambodia became increasingly embroiled in the conflict in Vietnam, its traditional enemy. The Vietnam War had drastic repercussions in Cambodia, and political and social instability continued into the 1980s. Key dates in the history of Cambodia include:

C3D–5TH CENTS. AD Funan Empire flourished in Cambodia; Hinduism and other elements of Indian culture introduced.

C6TH CENT. AD Funan Empire overrun by Khmer people from the north; Khmer Empire established in Cambodia.

9TH–13TH CENTS. Khmer Empire rose to its height; extended its power through much of Southeast Asia.

12TH–13TH CENTS. Angkor Wat and Angkor Thom built.

13TH CENT. Buddhism introduced.

13TH–15TH CENTS. Khmer Empire declined; lost territories in increasing attacks from Siam in the west and Annam in the east; collapse came in 15th cent.

1863 French established protectorate over Cambodia.

1887 Cambodia made part of French colonial Indochina.

1941–55 Norodom Sihanouk reigned as king.

1940–45 WW II; Japanese troops entered Cambodia (1940) and held real power there; French Vichy government was allowed to remain until 1945, when the Japanese ousted the French from all Indochina.

1945 French reestablished control in Cambodia following WW II.

1946 Cambodia became autonomous within the French Union.

1953 Cambodia became independent.

1954 Cambodia invaded by Vietminh, Communist forces fighting against French rule in neighboring Vietnam.

Canada Country located in the northern part of North America. Its capital is Ottawa. Canada was explored and settled by both English and French and its history reflects the influence of both nations, as well as the struggle of French- and English-speaking Canadians to overcome their differences. Canada was threatened by invasion from the US during the American Revolution and again during the War of 1812, but since that time has had peaceful and friendly relations with the US. Created by the unification of 4 provinces in 1867, Canada has grown into a federation of 10 provinces. Key dates in the history of Canada include:

1000 Leif Ericsson, Norse explorer, believed to have landed somewhere on Canadian coast.

1497 J. Cabot explored Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

1534–35 J. Cartier discovered Gulf of St. Lawrence, St. Lawrence River; established French claims to the area.

1583 England discovered and claimed Newfoundland.

1605 Port Royal, first permanent settlement in Canada, founded by S. de Champlain; French colony of Acadia established in following years.

1608 S. de Champlain founded Quebec.

1629–32 English took Quebec (1629); it was returned to France in 1632; fur trade exploited in subsequent years.

1663 French government dissolved Company of New France and assumed rule of French territories in Canada.

1670 Hudson's Bay Company formed by English for colonization and trade in Canada; was prominent in the early development of Canada.

1689–97 King William's War; French and English launched attacks on each other's settlements in Canada; began series of wars for control of North American colonies.

1696 France defeated the Iroquois Confederacy.

1702–13 Queen Anne's War; British captured Port Royal and other French territories.

1713 Britain acquired most of Acadia, Newfoundland, and territory around Hudson Bay through Peace of Utrecht.

1744–48 King George's War.

1755 Many French Acadians deported by British for refusing oath of loyalty to the king.

1756–63 French and Indian War fought; British defeated French on Plains of Abraham (1759) and took Quebec; Montreal fell to British (1760); conflict ended by Treaty of Paris (1763), by which all French territory in Canada passed to Britain.

1774 Quebec Act passed (June 22) by British Parliament; established permanent government in Canada, granted concessions to French-speaking people of Quebec.

1775–83 Canada remained loyal to the king during the American Revolution; Quebec later became a haven for Loyalists fleeing the US after the Revolution.

1783 North West Company founded for Canadian fur trade; later rivaled Hudson's Bay Company.

1791 Constitutional Act divided Quebec into English-speaking Upper Canada (now Ontario) and French-speaking Lower Canada (now Quebec).

1812–15 War of 1812 between the US and Britain; several invasions of Canada repulsed.

1818 Convention of 1818 established Canadian-US border.

1821 North West Company merged with Hudson's Bay Company, ending bitter competition and some violence.

1837 Unsuccessful attempt to overthrow the government by W. L. Mackenzie and some 800 followers; Mackenzie's escape to the US resulted in the Caroline Affair.

1839 Lord Durham's Report to British Parliament; following revolts in both Upper and Lower Canada for reform, Lord Durham investigated and recommended union of the provinces and establishment of effective government.

1841 Upper and Lower Canada united.

1846 Dispute with US over Canada's boundary in the Oregon Country settled.

1848–51 Clear Grits movement.

1854 Clergy Reserves secularized after long controversy.

1864 Charlottetown Conference held to discuss unification of all Canadian provinces.

1864 Quebec Conference held (Oct. 10–27) by delegates from provinces of British North America; drafted resolutions that were the basis for establishment of unified Canada.

1866–67 Westminster Conference in London laid basis for British North America Act.

1867 British North America Act; provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick unified and became the dominion of Canada.

1867–73 Sir J.A. Macdonald served as first prime minister; guided nation through crucial early years.

1867 Canada First Movement organized to promote Canadian nationalist spirit.

1869–70 Riel's Rebellion in western Canada against government.

1870 Red River Settlement joined Canada as province of Manitoba.

1873 Prince Edward Island became Canadian province.

1873 Pacific scandal helped bring down J. Macdonald's Conservative government.

1873–96 Long economic depression.

1878–91 Macdonald back in office as prime minister; instituted policy of trade protectionism to ease effects of depression; began construction of Canadian Pacific Railway.

1884–85 Riel's Rebellion in Saskatchewan against government.

1885 Canadian Pacific Railway completed; east and west coasts linked by rail.

1888 Jesuit Estates Act passed.

1890s European immigrants began arriving in large numbers.

1896–1911 Sir W. Laurier served as first French-Canadian prime minister; wheat-producing Prairie provinces settled; economic prosperity restored.

1897 Great Klondike gold rush began.

1905 Alberta and Saskatchewan became provinces of Canada.

1911–20 Sir R. Borden served as prime minister; won independent representation for British dominions in the League of Nations (1919).

1914–18 WW I; Canada joined Allies and actively participated in war effort.

1921–30 W.L. Mackenzie King served as prime minister.

1930–40 Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, Canadian Socialist party, and Social Credit movement gained support during the Depression.

1931 British Commonwealth of Nations created; Canada gained equal status with Britain and other members of the Commonwealth; Canadian autonomy formalized.

1935–48 Mackenzie King back in office as prime minister.

1939–45 WW II; Canada joined Allies and played an active role in the war effort.

1949 Newfoundland became Canadian province.

1949 Canada became founding member of NATO.

1957–63 John G. Diefenbaker served as prime minister; brought Conservatives to power for first time since 1930s.

1959 St. Lawrence Seaway opened.

1960s French separatist movement in Quebec became major political controversy.

1963–68 Lester Pearson served as prime minister; Liberals returned to power.

1968–79 Prime Minister P. Trudeau in office; a Liberal and French-Canadian, he faced a worsening crisis over French separatism in Quebec; favored bilingualism, opposed separatism.

1970 Diplomatic relations with China established.

1970 Trudeau utilized (Oct. 16) War Measures Act to halt kidnappings by French-Canadian separatists.

1975 Prime Minister Trudeau imposed wage and price controls (1975–78) in the face of worsening economic problems.

1979 Economic problems forced Prime Minister Trudeau to dissolve Parliament (Mar. 26) and call for new elections.

1979–80 Joe Clark (Progressive Conservative) became prime minister after defeating Trudeau's Liberal faction in the elections.

1980 Trudeau restored to office of prime minister, succeeding Clark.

1980 Referendum to implement Quebec separatism defeated (June) in Quebec provincial vote; serious threat to Canadian unity averted.

1982 Constitution Act signed by Queen Elizabeth (Apr. 17); provided for legal autonomy of Canada and replaced the British North America Act as the instrument of Canadian government; Canada to remain in Commonwealth and to continue to recognize British monarch.

Canada Company British land company. At the instigation of author J. Galt, the company was organized (1826) to generate revenue to compensate settlers' losses arising from the War of 1812. The company sold government lands in northern Canada and helped promote colonization there.

Canary Islands Seven islands in the Atlantic Ocean off the northwest coast of Africa (pop. 1,275,000) which now make up two provinces of Spain. Once called the Fortunate Isles, they have long been a stopping place for travelers from many parts of the world. In 1402, they were settled by the Spanish kingdom of Castile, and they have remained under Spanish control since then.

canon law System of regulations for governing the clergy and the church. The Roman Catholic church, the Eastern Orthodox church, the Anglican churches, and independent Eastern Christian churches all have accumulated bodies of canon law. The Roman Catholic canon law is by far the most extensive. It includes laws issued by popes, ecclesiastical councils, and bishops (for local matters). Canon law can be traced back to the early papal decretals (1st cent. AD). The subsequent profusion of canon laws led to efforts at systemizing them, as in Gratian's works, the corpus of canon law (Corpus juris canonici, 1580) and the code of canon law (Codex juris canonici, 1917). Canon laws of the Church of England, known as the Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical, were issued 1603–04. (For canon law of the Eastern churches, see Oriental canon law.)

Charles IV	1322–28

capitalism Economic system in which property, means of production, and financial institutions are privately owned and which is driven by the profit motive. Theoretically based on free enterprise and unregulated competition, capitalism can be traced back to the 16th cent., when mercantilism rose to replace feudalism. Capitalism flourished, however, with the coming of the Industrial Revolution (18th cent.) and spawned such notable capitalist theoreticians as A. Smith. Social inequities and theoretical weaknesses perceived by K. Marx gave rise to socialism in the 19th cent. By the 20th cent., the archetypal capitalistic notion of unregulated enterprise (never fully realized) had given way to a host of social reforms and regulatory bodies imposed by national governments.

Capitol See Capitoline Hill

Capitol Domed building in Washington, D.C., that houses the US Senate and House of Representatives. It is the symbolic center of the federal government. Begun in 1793 from plans submitted by W. Thornton, the unfinished building was burned by the British (1814) during the War of 1812. Work on it began again that year and was finally completed (1830) by C. Bulfinch, the sixth architect involved in its construction. It was subsequently enlarged (1851–65) by Thomas U. Walter (1804–87).

Capitoline Hill ⟨Capitol⟩ One of the seven hills of Rome and the historic center of the city. It is the site of the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus and the Tarpeian Rock, from which criminals were thrown to their death.

Captivity See Babylonian Captivity

Capua Town in southern Italy and once a prosperous city of ancient Rome. Originally an Etruscan town, it fell to the Romans (*c*340 BC) and prospered following the construction of the Appian Way. The scene of Spartacus' revolt (73 BC), it was destroyed by the Vandals (AD 456) and the Muslims (840). The modern city was built in 856 and was subsequently the scene of many battles, including heavy fighting during WW II (1943).

Capuchins Roman Catholic order of Franciscan monks, properly the Friars Minor Capuchin. The order was established (*c*1525) in Italy by Matteo da Bascio (*c*1495–1552) as a movement for reform of the Catholic church. Its friars were expected to live a life of poverty. The movement became widespread, and in subsequent years they rivaled the Jesuits in importance within the church.

Carabobo, Battle of Battle (June 24, 1821) in northern Venezuela that established Venezuelan independence from Spain. A combined force of 6,500 rebels under S. Bolívar and J. Paez attacked and crushed a smaller Spanish force, led by Gen. Miguel de la Torre. Soon afterward, Bolívar liberated the capital, Caracas.

Caracalla ⟨Marcus Aurelius Antoninus⟩ AD 188–217. Roman emperor (AD 211–217), notorious for his ruthless brutality. He and his brother Geta succeeded their father, Septimius Severus. Caracalla, however, killed Geta and ordered a massacre of some 20,000 of his brother's followers (AD 212). He also granted citizenship to all free men within the empire in order, it is believed, to increase tax revenues.

Caracas Venezuelan capital city (pop. 2,800,000). Founded (1567) by the Spanish, it became a prosperous city in Spain's American colonies. The revolution for Latin American independence from Spain began (1810) in the city and Venezuela's independence from Spain was declared there (July 5, 1811). The city passed between rebel and Spanish control until S. Bolívar took Caracas for the last time in 1821, after which it became the capital of Venezuela.

Caractacus ⟨Caratacus⟩ ⟨Caradoc⟩ fl. AD 50. British chieftain, a son of Cymbeline. He led the British against Roman invaders (AD 43–50) but was finally defeated and captured by Emperor Claudius' forces.

Carausius, Marcus Aurelius 245?–293. Roman general. Placed in command of a Roman fleet in Gaul, he revolted and set himself up as emperor in Britain (*c*287–293). He was killed by one of his ministers during an invasion ordered by Roman emperor Maximian.

Caravaggio ⟨Michelangelo Merisi⟩ 1573–1610. Italian artist who influenced the development of baroque art through his naturalistic paintings. His noted works include Death of the Virgin and the Fortune Teller.

Carbonari Italian secret society formed in the kingdom of Naples in the early 19th cent. Carbonari groups came to stand for freedom from foreign rule. The lodges first appeared during, and soon opposed, the reign of J. Murat (1808–15), the Neapolitan king installed by Napoleon. The lodges spread throughout Italy and, in the post-Napoleonic years, opposed Austrian domination. By 1830, however, the Carbonari were drawn into the movement for Italian unification, the Risorgimento, and disappeared. In the 1820s, Carbonari lodges were also active in Spain and France.

Carchemish, Battle of Battle (605 BC) in which Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar defeated the Egyptian king Necho II along the Euphrates River, in what is now Syria. The defeat cost Egypt its territories in Syria.

Cárdenas, Garcia López de See Coronado, Francisco Vásquez de

Cárdenas, Lázaro 1895–1970. Mexican soldier and president (1934–40). Cardenas fought in the 1913 revolution, and, as president, he aroused much opposition by nationalizing foreign-owned properties (including oil fields) and by breaking up large estates to give land to small farmers. The latter reform established government-owned communal farms (the Ejido system).

Cardigan, James Thomas Brudenell, 7th earl of 1797–1868. British general during the Crimean War (1853–56). He led the now famous charge of the Light Brigade at the Battle of Balaklava (1854). The disastrous cavalry maneuver is said to have been caused by a mixup in orders.

cardinal In the Roman Catholic church, an ecclesiastical rank second only to the pope. Cardinals act as advisers to and emissaries of the pope and, as members of the Sacred College of Cardinals, elect the pope.

Cardozo, Benjamin Nathan 1870–1938. American jurist and associate justice of the US Supreme Court (1932–38). He was an influential jurist, whose wide reputation stemmed from his term as a New York State appeals court judge (1914–28) and his books on jurisprudence.

Carelton, Guy, 1st Baron Dorchester 1724–1808. British general and governor of Quebec four times between 1766 and 1796. Commander of British troops in Canada during the American Revolution, he defeated the Americans during the Quebec Campaign (1775–76). He became commander of British forces in America and served to the end of the Revolution (1782–83).

Carlisle Commission ⟨Peace Commission of 1778⟩ British peace overture during the American Revolution (1775–83). Surprised by their defeat at Saratoga (1777), the British sent F. Howard, 5th earl of Carlisle, to America to offer the colonials a negotiated settlement. On June 17, however, the Continental Congress responded by demanding complete independence and withdrawal of all British forces, and thus rejected the British peace offer.

Carlism See Carlists

Carlists Supporters of Don Carlos (1788–1855) and his descendants as rightful heirs to the Spanish throne (after 1833). Carlists represented a conservative element in support of traditional monarchy and the church, and, though greatly diminished in number, they continue to be a factor in rural Spain. The movement known as Carlism began when Don Carlos claimed the throne on the death of his brother, King Ferdinand VII, by the terms of the Salic Law. Ferdinand, however, had set aside (1832) the Salic Law to ensure succession of his daughter, Isabella II. Ferdinand's death thus provoked the Carlist Wars (1833–39, 1873–76) and other lesser Carlist uprisings. The direct line of Carlist claimants ended in 1936, though Carlists supported Don Juan (1913–), son of Alfonso XIII, as his successor. Don Juan's son, Juan Carlos, became king of Spain on Gen. F. Franco's death (1975).

Carlist Wars 1. Civil War (1833–39) in Spain, the Carlists' rebellion against the government of Queen Isabella II. Supporters of Don Carlos, a rival claimant to the throne, rebelled soon after the accession of Isabella. Their strength lay in northern rural Spain, especially the Basque Provinces and Navarre, Aragon, and Catalonia, where opposition to a liberalized and centralized monarchy was strongest. The Carlists' attempt to capture Madrid failed (1837), however, and after a mutiny, the Carlist commander joined (1839) Gen. B. Espartero, commander of government forces. The war ended with the Convention of Vegara and Don Carlos' departure from Spain. 2. Civil war (1873–76) in Spain, a rebellion by Carlists against the newly formed republic. Following abdication of King Amadeus and creation of the republic (1873), Carlists in northern Spain again rebelled. The bloody war involved the Basque Provinces and Catalonia, Aragon, and Valencia, and ended (1876) when Don Carlos VII (1848–1909) fled Spain.

Carloman 751–771. Co-ruler of the kingdom of the Franks (768–71), successor, with his brother Charlemagne, to their father, Pepin the Short. Carloman ruled the eastern half of the kingdom, which, on his death, was seized by Charlemagne.

Carloman 828–880. German king (876–880), son of Louis the German. He was king of Bavaria and Carinthia, and of Italy (877–80), but he failed in his claim to the crown of the Holy Roman Empire.

Carloman d. 884. Co-ruler (879–882) of the West Frankish Kingdom. With his brother Louis III, he succeeded his father, King Louis II (the Stammerer), and became sole ruler on his brother's death (882).

Carlos, Don See Carlists

Carlos de Austria, Don 1545–68. Spanish prince and son of King Philip II. Accused of conspiring to murder his father, he was tried and died soon afterward in prison. His father was rumored to have murdered him. He is the subject of Schiller's tragedy Don Carlos.

Carlotta 1840–1927. Empress of Mexico (1864–67), the wife of Maximilian from 1857. She was sent to Europe (1866) to seek aid for the fight against republican revolutionaries then opposing her husband. She failed, became insane, and was confined in Belgium.

Carlowitz, Treaty of See Karlowitz, Treaty of

Carlsbad Congress See Carlsbad Decrees

Carlsbad Decrees ⟨Karlsbad ~⟩ Measures recommended (Aug. 31, 1819) by German ministers for suppression of liberal agitation within the German Confederation. The ministers met at the Carlsbad Congress, convened (Aug. 6) by C. von Metternich, following the murder of the German writer August von Kotzebue (1761–1819) by a student. They resolved on press censorship, supervision of universities to suppress liberal student organizations, and establishment of a central committee to investigate revolutionary conspiracies. The measures failed to check the growth of liberalism.

Carlson, Evans Fordyce 1896–1947. American soldier, WW II leader of "Carlson's Raiders," a guerrilla unit famous for attacks (1942) on Makin Island and Guadalcanal.

Carlyle, Thomas 1795–1881. Scottish essayist and historian, one of the most influential social critics of his day. He gave up teaching in 1819 and, after publishing works on the German romantics, wrote Sartor Resartus, in which he established his characteristic literary style. He moved to London (1834) and there wrote his great French Revolution and other works, including Chartism, and History of Frederick the Great.

Carman, William Bliss See Confederation group

Carmathians See Karmathians

Carmelites One of the four important Roman Catholic orders of mendicant friars. The order was begun (c1155) by a group of European hermits under Saint Berthold on Mount Carmel in Palestine. Approved 1226 by Pope Honorius III, the order moved to Europe after the crusaders were forced out of the Holy Land. There the Carmelites abandoned (13th cent.) hermitism and became mendicant friars. A movement to return to a more rigorously ascetic existence was begun (1562) by Saint Theresa and Saint John of the Cross. In 1593 it became the independent order of Discalced Carmelites.

Carmona, António Oscar de Fragoso 1869–51. Portuguese president (1926–51). A general, he took part in the military coup of 1926 and became president of the provisional government that year. He was subsequently elected president and established, with A. Salazar as premier, dictatorial control of Portugal.

Carnap, Rudolf 1891–1970. A German-born American philosopher. He is noted as a leading advocate of logical positivism and for his works on the philosophy of language, including The Logical Syntax of Language, Logical Foundations of Probability, and Introduction to Symbolic Logic and Its Applications.

Carnegie, Andrew 1835–1919. Scottish-born American steel magnate and philanthropist. Between 1873 and 1900 he built the Carnegie Steel Company into one of the country's largest steel manufacturing concerns. Following its sale to US Steel Corporation (1901), he turned to philanthropy and endowed numerous libraries and educational institutions.

Carnot, Lazare Nicolas Marguerite 1753–1823. French revolutionary. He was known as the "Organizer of Victory" for his skills at organizing and directing the army during the French Revolutionary Wars. He was a member of the Committee of Public Safety and the Directory, and served in various posts under Napoleon.

Carnot, Marie François Sadi 1837–94. French president of the Third Republic (1887–94). His term was marked by troubles with G. Boulanger and the Panama Scandal (1892). He was assassinated by an Italian anarchist.

Carnot, Nicolas Léonard Sadi 1796–1832. French physicist, son of L. Carnot. A pioneer in the science of thermodynamics, he is sometimes referred to as a founder of that field.

Caro, Joseph ben Ephraim ⟨Karo, ~⟩ 1483–1575. Jewish scholar, an authority on the Talmud. He wrote Shulhan Aruk, an important codification of Jewish law and customs.

Carol I 1839–1914. German prince and first Romanian king (1881–1914). He won Romania's independence from the Ottoman Turks at the Congress of Berlin (1878) and, on becoming king, instituted programs to modernize the country.

Carol II 1893–1953. Romanian king (1930–40), successor to his son, Michael. After renouncing his right of succession (1925), he returned to Romania (1930), ousted his son, and had himself proclaimed king. He contested attempts by the fascist Iron Guard to take control after 1938 but was forced to abdicate in 1940.

Carolina campaign British campaign (1780–81) to subdue the Carolinas during the American Revolution. A military failure, the campaign contributed to the subsequent final British defeat (1781) at Yorktown (q.v.). After the capture (May, 1780) of Charleston, South Carolina, by Sir H. Clinton, British forces under Gen. C. Cornwallis moved north. At Camden, South Carolina, they routed (Aug. 16) Colonial forces under Gen. H. Gates. Gates retreated to North Carolina, but Cornwallis was defeated (Oct. 7) by guerrillas in the Battle of King's Mountain. Gates was replaced as commander in the South by Gen. N. Greene. The British suffered another defeat in the Battle of Cowpens (Jan. 17, 1781), but gained a nominal victory (Mar. 15, 1781) at Guilford Courthouse, and a victory (Sept. 8) at Eutaw Springs. Nonetheless, Cornwallis was obliged to retreat to Charleston and afterward shifted fighting to Virginia, thus setting the stage for the Yorktown campaign.

Caroline* Affair Destruction (Dec. 29, 1837) of an American vessel by Canadian forces during their effort to quash a rebellion by W. Mackenzie. Mackenzie and his rebels, opposed to Britain's planned union of Upper and Lower Canada, had retreated to Navy Island in the Niagara River. They were being supplied by American sympathizers via the steamer Caroline. On Dec. 29, Canadian forces crossed into US territory and destroyed the Caroline, killing one American. The incident resulted in counterthreats of war by both the US and British governments.

Caroline of Brunswick 1768–1821. Wife of English king George IV. She married George (1795) while he was still a prince, but by the next year the two were separated. She fought successfully George's attempt to end the marriage by divorce, but was nevertheless barred from the coronation. She died a few weeks later.

Carolingians Dynasty of Frankish kings that ruled the Carolingian Empire and successor states until the 10th cent. The line was founded by Pepin of Landen (d. 640), who was mayor of the palace of Austrasia for the Merovingian king Dagobert I. Succeeding generations continued to rule as mayors of the palace, though they in fact had the power of kings. It was not until Pepin the Short deposed (751) the last Merovingian that the Carolingians took the title of king. Pepin's son, Charlemagne, vastly expanded Austrasia and created the Carolingian Empire. Shortly after Charlemagne's death, the empire was divided (843) among his three sons into the west, the east, and Francia Media. By 870 almost all of Francia Media had been absorbed by the east and west empires and the Carolingian family was clearly divided into French and German lines.

Pepin of Landen	628–640
Pepin of Heristal	687–714
Charles Martel	715–741

Carondelet, Francisco Luis Hector, baron de *c*1748–1807. Spanish colonial governor of Louisiana and West Florida (1791–95). He is noted for having strained relations between the US and Spain by forming alliances with Indians against the US. He also attempted to stir up separatist movements among Kentucky frontiersmen.

Carpenter, Malcolm Scott 1925–. American astronaut. Carpenter was the second American to orbit the earth (May 24, 1962).

carpetbagger In the US South during Reconstruction (1865–77), a derisive term for politicians and adventurers from the North. Carpetbaggers were generally believed to have moved south after the Civil War (with no more possessions than fitted into a carpetbag) to take advantage of newly enfranchised Negro voters. Many northerners who went south did so to help Negros through the transition from slavery to freedom. However, numerous unscrupulous opportunists among them helped corrupt Reconstruction governments in the South.

Carpocrates See Carpocratians

Carpocratians Gnostic sect founded 2d cent. AD by the Alexandrian philosopher Carpocrates. Carpocratians rejected the divinity of Jesus and believed that all men had once been united with God. They were notorious libertines who argued that religious regulations only hindered them in attaining spiritual perfection. The sect survived to the 6th cent. AD.

Carranza, Venustiano 1859–1920. Mexican revolutionary and political leader. Carranza joined F. Madero in his revolt (1910) against P. Díaz, and then fought V. Huerta when he overthrew Madero (1913). Carranza headed the provisional government (1914–17) and during this time successfully countered uprisings by F. Villa and E. Zapata. He accepted the constitution of 1917, served as president (1917–20), and was killed after trying to prevent A. Obregón from taking office as president.

Carrera, Rafael 1814–65. Guatemalan revolutionist and dictator (1840–65). He brought the Central American Federation to an end by declaring Guatemala's independence (1838), reestablished the power of the church in Guatemala, and dominated the affairs of other Central American states.

Carrhae, Battle of Parthian victory (53 BC) over Roman invaders in what is now southern Turkey. During the wars of the First Triumvirate, Crassus invaded Parthia with a large army. His force was routed and he was killed, leaving Pompey the effective ruler of Rome.

Carrick's Ford, Battle of Union Victory (July 14, 1861) in West Virginia during the early skirmishes of the American Civil War (1861–65).

Carroll, Lewis ⟨pseud. of Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge⟩ 1832–98. English writer, mathematician. He is best known as the author of two famous children's books, Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass.

Carson, Kit (prop. Christopher) 1809–68. Celebrated American frontiersman. Carson first won notoriety as a guide on J. Fremont's exploratory treks through the West (1842–45). He became a noted Indian fighter and later an Indian agent in the Southwest.

Cartagena Spanish port city (pop. 146,900) and major naval base. Founded (243 BC) by Carthaginian general Hasdrubal, it became the center of Carthaginian power in Spain and later flourished under Roman control (from 209 BC). It was held by the Moors until conquest by the Spanish Christians (13 cent.), and was developed into a major naval base by Spanish king Philip II (16th cent.).

cartel An agreement among manufacturers and suppliers of similar products to fix prices, limit supplies, and otherwise manipulate a market in order to increase profits. A cartel may be either domestic or international in scope. Cartels were important in Germany from the late 19th cent., and especially after WW I. (For domestic cartels in the US, see trust.)

Carter, James Earl See Carter, Jimmy

Carter, Jimmy ⟨Carter, James Earl⟩ 1924–. Thirty-ninth president of the US (1977–81). An Annapolis graduate and navy officer, he was a moderately liberal Georgia legislator (1962–66), and was elected governor of Georgia in 1970. Although almost unknown nationally and without major backing, he managed by a brilliant grassroots campaign to defeat Republican G. Ford handily in the 1976 presidential election. President Carter tried to project a populist image as president and to add the common touch to the presidency. His major achievement in office was perhaps the personally negotiated Camp David accords that led to the 1979 peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, ending a state of war lasting over 30 years. Important events during the Carter administration included the return of the Panama Canal (q.v.) to Panama, the continuing "energy crisis" brought about by the decision of the OPEC nations to raise oil prices (from 1974), the "nuclear accident" caused when radioactive gases escaped from the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania (1978), and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan (1979), which prompted President Carter to embargo grain and technology exports to Russia and call for US withdrawal from the Moscow Olympic games. He was criticized for his handling of the Hostage Crisis *(q.v.)*and US Mideast policy suffered as a result of this incident and the Iranian revolution that spawned it. These stresses of the late 1970s, combined with a deteriorating economy, contributed to Carter's defeat on Nov. 4, 1980, by R. Reagan.

Carteret, Philip 1639–82. English colonial governor, the first governor of New Jersey (1665–76). He became governor of East New Jersey (1676–82) after the colony was divided.

Cartesianism Philosophical doctrine first articulated by R. Descartes. It held that there is an absolute division between the mind (thinking) and the material world (matter). Mind, matter, and God were all considered innate. Descartes's mind/matter dualism arose from his famous proposition, "I think, therefore I am." The philosophy was further developed and modified by Nicolas de Malebranche (1638–1715), B. Spinoza, and others.

Carthage Ancient city-state of North Africa, located near modern Tunis. Founded, according to tradition, by Dido of Tyre (9th cent. BC), it rose to prominence in the 6th-5th cents. BC and established control over Sardinia, Malta, the Balearic Islands, and much of North Africa and Sicily. Rivaling Rome for control of the Mediterranean, Carthage engaged Rome in the First Punic War (264–241 BC), by which it lost Sicily. Subsequently conquering much of Spain, under Hamilcar Barca and Hasdrubal, it fought the Second Punic War (218–201 BC), and was defeated by Rome despite the brilliant campaign of Hannibal. The Third Punic War (149–146 BC) brought final destruction of Carthage and razing of the city. A new city founded by J. Caesar rose to become Rome's administrative center in Africa. Captured (AD 439) by the Vandals under Gaiseric, it was recovered (AD 553) by the Byzantines, and destroyed by the Arabs (AD 698).

Carthusians Small order of Roman Catholic monks, founded (1084) in France by Saint Bruno. Belonging to a strict and contemplative order, the monks live in private cells within their monasteries and meet with one another only during worship and communal meals. Since its founding, the order has never undergone reform.

Cartier, Sir Georges Étienne 1814–73. Canadian statesman. A leading French-Canadian advocate of federation, he became joint prime minister of Canada (1858–62) with Sir J. Macdonald (1858–62) and later served in the government of unified Canada.

Cartier, Jacques 1491–1557. His discovery and exploration of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the St. Lawrence River (1534–35) laid the basis for French claims in Canada.

Cartwright, John 1740–1824. English reformer known as the "Father of Reform." A radical who supported the American colonists, he was noted for advocating parliamentary reform, universal manhood suffrage, and abolition of slavery.

Caruso, Enrico 1873–1921. Italian operatic tenor, one of the most famous opera singers of all time. From 1903, he appeared chiefly at New York's Metropolitan Opera House.

Carver, George Washington 1864–1943. American agricultural scientist. A former slave, he won a wide reputation as Tuskegee Institute's director of agricultural research. He is noted for discovering new uses for such crops as peanuts, soybeans, and sweet potatoes.

Carver, John *c*1576–1621. English Puritan and Pilgrim. He was a prosperous merchant in London who made financial arrangements for the Pilgrim colony in New England. He sailed with the Mayflower and became first governor of the colony at Plymouth (1620).

Casablanca Largest Moroccan city (pop. 1,371,300), a seaport and commercial center. Built by the Portuguese on the site of an earlier city, it was destroyed by an earthquake (1755). Rebuilt by the Moroccans (1757), it was developed into a prosperous commercial seaport by the French after 1912. During WW II, it was one of three landing points in the Allied invasion of North Africa (1942).

Casablanca Conference Meeting (Jan. 14–24, 1943) during WW II between US president F. Roosevelt, British prime minister W. Churchill, and others at Casablanca. Held shortly after the city's capture, the meeting resulted in a joint declaration to prosecute the war against the Axis powers until their unconditional surrender.

Cassander 354?–297 BC. Macedonian king (305–297 BC), the son of Antipater. One of the Diadochi, who fought for control of the Greek empire after the death of Alexander the Great (323 BC), he became the dominant figure in the struggle by 318 and king in 305. He rebuilt the city of Thebes.

Cassandra Daughter of Trojan king Priam in Greek mythology. She took the gift of prophecy from Apollo and then spurned him. Apollo, in revenge, decreed that no one should believe her prophecies.

Cassel, Battle of Battle (1328) in which French king Philip VI defeated the rebellious communes of Flanders and reestablished French rule.

Cassini, Jean Dominique ⟨~, Giovanni Domenico⟩ 1625–1712. Italian-born French astronomer. Among his many discoveries concerning the sun and planets was his identification of four moons of Saturn.

Cassiopeia Mother of Andromeda in Greek mythology. She was transformed into the constellation Cassiopeia because she boasted of her daughter's beauty.

Cassirer, Ernst 1874–1945. German philosopher, a leader of the Neo-Kantian Marburg school. He studied the relationship between culture and man's symbolizing activity.

Cassius ⟨Cassius Longinus, Gaius⟩ d. 42 BC. He was a principal conspirator against J. Caesar and one of his assassins (44 BC). He killed himself after his armies were defeated by M. Antony at the Battle of Philippi.

Cassius Longinus, Gaius See Cassius

caste system System for hereditary division and ranking of groups within a society, especially in Hindu India. An individual is born into the caste, is required to take up the caste occupation (warrior, farmer, priest), and must marry within the caste. The caste system in India dates back to the period of Brahmanism (q.v.) and now consists of thousands of castes based on occupation. Originally, however, there were four great castes, Brahmans (priests and scholars), Kshatriyas (rulers and warriors), Vaisyas (farmers and merchants), and Sudras (laborers, servants, and peasants). The fifth caste, considered to be outside society, was that of the Untouchables (menial laborers and outcasts). The system has thus far resisted forces opposing it, including the rise of Buddhism (a reaction against it), the period of British domination, industrialization, and the efforts of M. Gandhi. Untouchability, however, was abolished by law in 1949.

Castile, Blanche of See Blanche of Castile

Castile, Eleanor of See Eleanor of Castile

Castile, kingdom of Historic Spanish kingdom, formed from territories the Christian kings captured from the Moors (8th-9th cents.). After two centuries of claims and counterclaims León was permanently united with Castile (1230). Then, in 1479, Castile was unified with Aragon under Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand. This new kingdom formed the basis of modern Spain.

Castillon, Battle of French victory (July 17, 1453) over the English, ending the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). French forces, responding to a revolt in Guyenne, laid siege to the town of Castillon in southwest France. English forces, some 6,000, under John Talbot, 2d earl of Shrewsbury (1413–60), were sent by English king Henry VI to take advantage of the revolt. Shrewsbury attacked the French siege force prematurely (July 17), and his army was routed. Guyenne was back in French control by Oct., 1453, the remaining British troops having left France.

Castlereagh, Robert Stewart, 2d Viscount 1769–1822. British statesman, noted for his term as foreign secretary (1812–22). He played a major role in organizing the Grand Alliance, which defeated Napoleon and was an important figure in the Congress of Vienna (1814–15), which subsequently carved up the French Empire.

Castor and Pollux Twin brothers in Greek and Roman mythology. Castor was known as a horseman and Pollux was a boxer. Referred to as the Dioscuri, they were the patrons of sailors.

Castracani, Castruccio 1281–1328. Italian nobleman. As the lord of Lucca, he led the Ghibellines of Tuscany in successful battles against Florence. Holy Roman Emperor Louis IV created him a duke in 1327.

Castro, Cipriano 1858–1924. Venezuelan president (1901–08), successor to Ignacio Andrade. Castro seized control of the government (1899). His refusal to honor foreign debts led to a blockade (1902) by Germany, Italy, and France. He was overthrown by J. V. Gómez.

Castro, Cristóbal Vaca de fl. 1540–45. Spanish colonial administrator, sent to Peru (1541) to settle the feud between F. Pizarro and Diego de Almagro (1520–42). Finding Pizarro dead, he assumed the governorship and put down Almagro's rebellion. He was succeeded (1544) by N.

Vela and then imprisoned for 12 years on false charges of embezzlement.

Castro, Fidel 1926–. Cuban premier (1959–) and central figure in the Cuban Revolution. An opponent of Cuban dictator F. Batista, he led an unsuccessful revolt (July 26, 1953), organized the 26th of July Movement (q.v.), and failed again (1956) at a revolt. From his mountain bases, however, he led a guerrilla movement that finally overthrew Batista (Jan. 1, 1959). Thereafter he established a totalitarian government, instituted sweeping economic and social reforms (including nationalization of industry and collective agriculture), entered the Communist sphere, and announced a policy of exporting revolution. His rule has been marked by the Bay of Pigs Invasion, Cuban Missile Crisis, economic failures, growing isolation from other Latin American countries, the involvement of Cuban troops in African revolutionary movements, and the mass emigration (1980) of Cuban "boat people" to the US.

Castro, Inés de d. 1355. Spanish noblewoman. A noted beauty, she was the beloved mistress of Dom Pedro, the future Peter I of Portugal. She was murdered on orders given by his father, King Alfonso IV. The tragic incident is a recurrent theme in Portuguese literature.

Catalan Company European mercenary soldiers (14th cent.). Led by R. de Flor, the Catalans were employed by Byzantine emperor Andronicus II to fight Turkish invaders. They defeated the Turks, then ravaged the country themselves for several years.

Cateau-Cambrésis, Treaty of Treaty concluded (1559) between France, Spain, and England. It ended the long struggle for control of Italy (1494–1559). Hostilities began with the Italian Wars (1494–1559) between France and Spain, with England joining the fighting occasionally as Spain's ally. By the treaty, Spain's dominance over Italy was recognized, thus initiating a long period of control by Spain's Hapsburg rulers. France also restored Savoy to Spain, agreed to an adjustment in the border of the Spanish Netherlands, and returned Corsica to Genoa. French possession of Calais was confirmed by England.

Cathari Christian heretics of a variety of sects that once flourished in Western Europe (11th-14th cents.). Influenced by the Bogomils (q.v.) and Paulicians (q.v.), the Cathari were exponents of Manichaean Dualism, in which God ruled over the spiritual world and Satan ruled over the material world. By the mid-12th cent., the Cathari had churches in Italy and France. In southern France, where they were most numerous, they were called Albigenses and were the object of the 13th-cent. Albigensian Crusade (q.v.). This and the subsequent persecution of the Inquisition put an end to the heretical sects.

Cathay Name used to refer to China in medieval times. M. Polo established the term in popular usage through descriptions of his journey to the region. The term generally applied to what is now northern China.

Cather, Willa Sibert 1876–1947. American novelist. She is best known for her stories of frontier life, of which O Pioneers! and My Ántonia are noted examples.

Catherine I 1684?–1727. Russian empress (1725–27). The mistress of Czar Peter I (the Great), she became his second wife (1712). She was crowned empress-consort (1724), and, on her husband's death, she succeeded him on the throne (1725). The government during her reign was dominated by A. Menshikov.

Catherine II ⟨Catherine the Great⟩ 1729–96. German-born Russian empress (1762–96), successor to her husband, Peter III, by his overthrow. An able and ambitious leader, she was an important figure in Russia's emergence as a European power. She conspired with a lover, Gen. Grigori Orlov (1734–83), to usurp and murder (1762) her unpopular husband. She made many important administrative reforms, but it was her involvement in European wars and politics that most benefited Russia. She won control of Poland by installing a lover as king (Stanislaus II), and then took the lion's share of territory in the Partitions of Poland. With her lover G. Potemkin she devised the Greek Project to dismember the Ottoman Empire. After the Russo-Turkish War (1768–74), she annexed the Crimea (1783). She was a noted patron of the arts and friend of the Encyclopedists.

Catherine de Médicis 1519–89. French queen (1547–59) as wife of King Henry II and ruler of France as regent (1560–74) to her second son, King Charles IX. She became regent on the death of her first son, King Francis II (1560), and during the religious conflicts that dominated her regency, alternately allied herself with Protestants and Catholics. She took part in planning the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day (1572). Her third son, Henry III, succeeded to the throne in 1574.

Catherine of Alexandria, Saint d. AD 307? Christian martyr and virgin, of Alexandrian birth. She is said to have been condemned to death by the Roman emperor for professing her Christian faith.

In what was considered a miracle, the torture wheel broke and she was beheaded instead.

Catherine of Aragon 1485–1536. Spanish-born English queen. Catherine was the daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, wife of Henry VIII (m. 1509), and mother of Mary Tudor. Henry's attempt to annul their marriage (from 1527) resulted in a break with the Roman Catholic church. This culminated in his marriage to Anne Boleyn (1533) and formation of the Church of England.

Catherine of Braganza 1638–1705. Portuguese noblewoman, wife of English king Charles II (1662–85). A Roman Catholic, she was unpopular in England and was accused (by T. Oates) of trying to poison her unfaithful husband (1678). She returned to Portugal some years after her husband's death.

Catherine of Siena, Saint 1347–80. Italian mystic and one of the influential figures of the medieval church. She gained a wide reputation for her dedication to the needy. She is said to have influenced Pope Gregory XI to end the Babylonian Captivity (1376).

Catherine of Valois 1401–37. French noblewoman and wife (m. 1420) of English king Henry V. She was mother of Henry VI by the king. After Henry's death (1422) she had a son by a Welsh nobleman, Owen Tudor (d. 1461). That son became father of Henry VII, first of the Tudor kings.

Catholic Emancipation Movement in Britain to end discrimination against Catholics which was imposed by English law and which included forfeiture of inherited land and exclusion from Parliament. Reform measures were passed in the late 18th cent., and by the Catholic Emancipation Act (Apr. 13, 1829) Catholics were given nearly full equality.

Catholic Emancipation Act See Catholic Emancipation

Catholic League ⟨League⟩ ⟨Holy League⟩ League of French Roman Catholics formed (1576) by Henry duke of Guise and aided by Spanish king Philip II, to suppress Protestantism during the French religious wars. It opposed the accession of Henry of Navarre to the French throne as Henry IV, but, weakened over the years, was unable to block Henry's coronation (1594).

Catholic Reformation ⟨Counter-Reformation⟩ Name of the 16th-cent. religious reform movement within the Roman Catholic church. Spurred by the widespread gains of the Protestant Reformation (q.v.) in Europe, forces within the Roman Catholic church which had long advocated reform began to exert greater influence. Decisive moves toward reform began with the convening (1545) of the Council of Trent by Pope Paul III. The council met in three different sessions (1545–47, 1551–52, 1562–63) to reformulate Catholic doctrine with greater precision and to reform abuses and corruption that had given rise to Protestantism. The council reaffirmed the Roman Catholic teaching on the seven sacraments and on the importance of church tradition alongside the Scriptures. In the practical realm, the council established the modern seminary system for training priests and thus provided the means to eliminate many of the abuses by the clergy. The council's liturgical reforms lasted virtually intact until replaced by those of the Second Vatican Council (1962–65). Great reforming popes of the Catholic Reformation included Paul III; Paul IV, who thoroughly reformed abuses in the Roman Curia; Pius IV; and Saint Pius V, who reformed the Roman missal and breviary. An important element in the Catholic Reformation was the reform of religious orders, such as that effected by Saint Theresa of Avila and Saint John of the Cross within the Carmelite order, and the founding of new orders, notably the Jesuits. These religious orders, especially the Jesuits, spread the spirit of the Catholic Reformation, founded new schools, and helped to wrest converts from Protestantism. The foreign and military policies of Catholic rulers in Europe, such as Holy Roman Emperor Charles V and his son Philip II of Spain, were often conducted according to imperatives inspired by the Catholic Reformation. But the religious and educational reforms that came out of this reform movement had more lasting effects.

Catiline *c*108–62 BC. Roman politician and conspirator. Barred from the consulship (66 BC) on charges that were later proved false, he was subsequently accused of plotting (65) a rebellion. He was acquitted and ran again (63) for the consulship against Cicero. Defeated, he organized the Conspiracy of Catiline (q.v.).

Cato the Censor See Cato the Elder

Cato the Elder ⟨Cato the Censor⟩ ⟨name of Marcus

Porcius ~) 234–149 BC. Roman statesman and champion of the traditional way of life in Rome. He resisted the influence of Greek civilization in Rome and promoted a return to the simple, idealistic, and moral life of old Rome. He staunchly opposed the Scipio family, an embodiment of Hellenistic influences, and as censor instituted many measures aimed at reforming Roman life. His public career included terms as consul (195 BC) and censor (184). His repeated demand for an attack on Carthage helped bring about the Third Punic War (149–146).

Cato the Younger ⟨Cato Minor⟩ ⟨name of Marcus Porcius ~) 95–46 BC. Roman statesman and great-grandson of Cato the Elder. He was a highly regarded leader of the Optimates, conservative aristocrats, and actively opposed J. Caesar and his allies. He joined in the armed resistance to Caesar and killed himself following Caesar's victory at the Battle of Thapsus (46 BC).

Catton, Charles Bruce 1899–1978. American historian noted for his works on the American Civil War. He won the Pulitzer Prize (1954) for his book A Stillness at Appomattox.

Catullus, Gaius Valerius 84?–54? BC. Roman lyric poet, regarded as the greatest of ancient Rome. He is best remembered for his love poems to a woman he named Lesbia (perhaps Clodia, q.v.).

Catulus, Gaius Lutatius fl. 3d cent. BC. Roman consul (242 BC) and general. He was commander of the Roman fleet that defeated the Carthaginians off the Aegates islands (241). The action ended the First Punic War (264–241).

Catulus, Quintus Lutatius d. 87 BC. Roman general and consul (102 BC). Together with co-consul Marius, Catulus defeated the Cimbri (101 BC). Marius received sole credit, however, and Catulus later supported L. Sulla against him.

Catulus, Quintus Lutatius *d. c*60 BC. Roman politician and consul (78 BC). The son of Q. L. Catulus, he helped Pompey put down a revolt by M. Lepidus (77? BC). An opponent of J. Caesar, he accused Caesar of taking part in the Conspiracy of Catiline. Caesar in turn accused him of embezzlement.

Central African Republic Republic located in central Africa. Its capital is Bangui. First explored and occupied (1890s) by the French, it became the French colony of Ubangi-Shari (1894). It was joined (1906) with Chad into an administrative unit and became (1910) part of French Equatorial Africa. In 1920, Chad became a separate colony. Ubangi-Shari became a French territory in 1946, and in 1958, it became autonomous as the Central African Republic. It became fully independent on Aug. 13, 1960. Its first president, David Dacko, was overthrown (1965) in a military coup headed by Col. Jean-Bédel Bokassa, who made himself emperor. Bokassa's ruthless and arbitrary rule was ended (1979) by another coup, and Dacko was reinstalled as president. Dacko was overthrown in a military coup (Sept. 1, 1981) and Gen. André Kolingba became head of state.

Central American Union ⟨Central American Federation⟩ ⟨United Provinces of Central America⟩ Confederation (1823–38) of Central American states, including Guatemala, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Costa Rica. The states were part of the Mexican Empire (1822–23) until A. Iturbide was ousted (Feb., 1823). Soon after the union was formed, civil war broke out between liberals and conservatives, and liberal leader Francisco Morazán (1799–1842) became president (1829). He ruled until Indian rebels, led by R. Carrera, captured Guatemala City (1838) and thereby dissolved the union. Numerous subsequent attempts at reunification have failed.

Central Committee In the USSR, governing body of the Communist party. The Central Committee was formed (1912) to determine Bolshevik policy. After the Bolsheviks took control of the Russian government, the Central Committee established (1919) the Politburo and the Secretariat as well as the Orgburo (absorbed by the Secretariat, 1952). Although the Central Committee is nominally the highest governing body in the Communist party, policy-making and administrative functions have been largely taken over by the Politburo and the Secretariat.

Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) US intelligence agency. It was formed (1947) under the National Security Act and replaced the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), organized during WW II. In addition to information gathering, the agency has at times been involved in the internal affairs of foreign countries. These activities became a source of controversy in the 1960s and 1970s and included involvement in the Bay of Pigs Invasion, in the war in Laos, and in Chile during Allende's regime.

O'Higgins, defeated the Spanish forces north of Santiago and occupied that city soon afterward. O'Higgins was then named ruler, but Chilean independence was not proclaimed until a year later.

Chaco Peace Conference See Chaco War

Chaco War Bloody war (1932–35) between Bolivia and Paraguay over possession of the Gran Chaco, a lowland plain in central South America. The war was precipitated by Bolivia's need for a coastal port and the discovery of oil in the Chaco. Sporadic fighting began (1928), and, by 1932, full-scale war had broken out. Early gains by the numerically superior Bolivian forces were wiped out by Paraguayan victories, under Lt. Col. José Estigarribia (1888–1940). Paraguay declared war formally (1933), and, after heavy fighting (1934), its forces drove (1935) into Bolivian territory. Bolivia rallied to counterattack, regained the initiative, and agreed to a truce (1935). Three years of negotiations at the Chaco Peace Conference resulted in a treaty (1938) by which Paraguay won most of the contested Chaco. Bolivia was granted a corridor to and a port on the Paraguay River. About 100,000 soldiers were killed in the war.

Chad (Tchad) Republic located in north central Africa. Its capital is N'Djamena. The region of modern Chad was explored by Arab traders in the 7th cent. The Muslim empire of Kanem, later known as Bornu, was established by peoples from North Africa in the 13th cent. and was dominant in the region until the rise of the rival empires of Wadai and Bagirmi (16th–17th cents.). The French began their conquest of Chad in the early 1890s and made it part of the French Congo in the early 1900s. In 1920, Chad became a separate French colony. It became a French territory in 1946 and voted (1958) for self-rule within the French Community. Chad became independent on Aug. 11, 1960. Muslim tribes in the north began (1966) a guerrilla war that continued until 1973. Chad was severely affected by a drought in the 1960s and 1970s. From 1975, Chad was in a state of turmoil with various groups fighting for control of the government. Libyan troops brought an end to the fighting in 1980, and in 1981 an international peace-keeping force had replaced the Libyans.

Chaeronea Ancient Boeotian town in what is now Greece. The birthplace of Plutarch, it was the site of two battles important in ancient times. On Sept. 1, 338 BC, Macedonian king Philip II defeated the armies of Athens and Thebes and thereby established Macedonian control over Greece. In 86 BC some 30–40,000 Romans under L. Sulla defeated the 110,000-man army of Mithridates VI during the First Mithridatic War.

Chakkri dynasty ⟨Chakri ~⟩ Ruling dynasty of Thailand from 1782. The line was founded by Chao P'ya Chakkri, who was instrumental in repulsing the Burmese invasions of the late 18th cent. and who ruled as King Rama I (1782–1809). The line of Chakkri kings remains unbroken to modern times, though the king today is no more than a figurehead. Notable rulers of the dynasty include King Mongkut (Rama IV, 1851–68), King Chulalongkorn (Rama V, 1868–1910), and King Prajadhipok (Rama VII, 1925–35), who advocated creation of a constitutional government. The current Thai king is Bhumibol Adulyade (1927–) (Rama IX, from 1946).

Chalcedon, Council of Fourth ecumenical council (AD 451) of the early Christian church, held in Chalcedon (now in Turkey). Convened by Eastern Roman emperor Marcian, the council reversed the council of Ephesus, condemned Eutyches and his Monophysitism (q.v.), proclaimed the dual nature (human and divine) of Christ as formulated by Pope Leo I, and issued letters against Nestorius.

Chalcis ⟨Chalkis⟩ Greek city. In ancient times it was the most important city on the island of Euboea. It was settled by the Ionians, and later defeated neighboring Eretria in the Lelantine Wars (7th cent. BC). Conquered by the Athenians (*c*506 BC), it remained under their control until 411 BC, and later flourished under the Romans. Chalcis founded many colonies in ancient times.

Chaldaea See Chaldea

Chaldea ⟨Chaldaea⟩ Originally, the region south of Babylonia. After the Chaldean Empire (second Babylonian Empire) was established (625 BC) by Nabopolassar, Chaldea included the whole of Babylonia. The empire prospered under Nabopolassar's son, Nebuchadnezzar II, and was subsequently conquered by the Persians (538 BC). (See also Babylonia.)

Chaldiran, Battle of Victory (Aug. 23, 1514) for the Ottoman Turks, under Selim I, during an invasion of Persia. Selim led his force of 50,000 men into Persia against the Safavid ruler Ismail I. The invasion was part of a holy war proclaimed by Selim I against the heretical Shi'ite Muslim sect.

Châlons, Battle of One of the decisive battles of history, fought near Châlons-sur-Marne, France, in June, AD 451. The Roman general Aëtius (AD 396?–454), allied with the Visigoths, defeated Attila the Hun and prevented his conquest of Western Europe.

Chamberlain, Arthur Neville 1869–1940. British statesman and prime minister (1937–40) in the years leading up to WW II, successor to S. Baldwin. A Conservative member of Parliament from 1918, he at first pursued a policy of appeasement toward the Fascists and Nazis by recognizing Italy's takeover of Ethiopia (1938) and acceding to Hitler in the Munich Pact (1938). He also ordered a speed-up of British rearmament, however, and when Hitler invaded Poland (1939), he declared war on Germany. The British defeat in Norway (1940) forced his resignation.

Chamberlain, Sir Austen 1863–1937. A British statesman, son of J. Chamberlain. As foreign secretary (1924–29) to S. Baldwin, he played a major role in negotiating the Locarno Pact (1925). He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1925.

Chamberlain, Joseph 1836–1914. British statesman. As colonial secretary (1895–1903), he formulated the policy of imperial preference for colonial trade (1902). His tenure was marked by the Boer War (1899–1902).

Chamberlain's Men British theatrical company. W. Shakespeare wrote for and acted in this troupe, which was organized in 1594. It performed frequently at the Globe Theatre and was designated the King's Men by James I (*c*1603).

Chambers, Sir William 1726–96. English architect of the Palladian school. One of the most important English architects of his day, he designed Somerset House (1776) in England and wrote A Treatise on Civil Architecture.

Chambers, William 1800–83. Scottish publisher. With his brother, Robert (1802–71), he founded the publishing firm of W.R. Chambers (after 1832). The company published educational and reference works, among them Chambers' Encyclopedia.

Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, count of 1820–83. French nobleman and Bourbon claimant to the throne as Henry V. After the fall of Napoleon III (1871), there was a brief movement toward restoration of the Bourbon monarchy. Chambord's outspoken hatred of the revolution, however, defeated the movement (1874), and the Third Republic was formally instituted.

Chamoun, Camille 1900–. Lebanese political leader, president (1952–58). He was a Christian and an advocate of pro-West policies. Muslim opposition to his administration resulted in the Lebanese Crisis (q.v.).

Champa Ancient kingdom (2d–17th cents.) of the Chams, located in what is now south and central Vietnam. Formed (2d cent. AD) during the disintegration of the Chinese Han dynasty, the kingdom was known to the Chinese as Lin-yi. Thereafter it came under the influence of India, was reconquered and ruled by China (5th–6th cents.), warred with neighboring Annam (q.v.) and the Khmer Empire, and succumbed to Annamese domination in the 14th cent. The kingdom was completely absorbed by Annam by the 17th cent.

Champion's Hill, Battle of Union victory (May 16, 1863) during the American Civil War (1861–65). Some 15,000 Union soldiers, led by Gen. U. Grant, defeated 17,500 Confederate soldiers, led by Gen. J. Pemberton, at this Mississippi town. Union losses were nearly 2,500, Confederate, 3,800. Grant subsequently advanced to Vicksburg.

Champlain, Samuel de 1567–1635. French explorer called the father of New France. He made his first voyage to Canada in 1603 and later founded colonies and explored the region (1604–07). He founded Quebec (1608) and was colonial governor of New France (1633–35).

Champollion, Jean François 1790–1832. French Egyptologist, the founder of Egyptology. Working with the Rosetta Stone (q.v.), he was largely responsible for finding the keys to deciphering Egyptian hieroglyphics (1821).

Chancellorsville, Battle of Confederate victory (May 2–4, 1863) over Union forces during the American Civil War (1861–65). The victory resulted in the Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania and the Battle of Gettysburg. A 130,000-man Union army, under Gen. J. Hooker, advanced (May 1) to Chancellorsville, Virginia, and was defeated there by a 60,000-man Confederate force, led by Gen. R.E. Lee. However, Confederate Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson was wounded in the battle and died later. Union losses were 17,000, Confederate 12,000.

Chandler, Raymond Thornton 1888–1959. An American author of detective stories, including The Big Sleep and Farewell, My Lovely.

Chandragupta ⟨Candragupta⟩ d. 286? BC. Indian emperor (*c*321–*c*297 BC), founder of the Maurya Empire. Through his conquests he created an empire that included most of India. He subsequently turned back an invasion by Seleucus I (305 BC) and established an effective administrative system. He is said to have abdicated in 297 to become a Jainist monk.

Chandragupta I ⟨Candragupta I⟩ d. AD 330? Indian king (AD 320–330?). He founded the Gupta dynasty, and, through marriage, vastly extended his domains in northern India.

Chandragupta II ⟨Candragupta II⟩ ⟨Vikramaditya⟩ d. AD *c*415. Ruler (AD *c*380–*c*415) of the Gupta kingdom in northern India. He extended his domains to the west and south by conquests. His reign marked a high point in the Hindu arts.

Chang Ch'ien d. 114 BC. Chinese minister and explorer under Han dynasty emperor Wu Ti. Sent on official missions into central Asia, he provided the Chinese with knowledge of the cultures in Bactria, Parthia, and India.

Chang Hsüeh-liang 1898–. Chinese warlord of Manchuria (1928–31). Forced to withdraw to China by the Japanese (1931), he was responsible for the Sian Incident (1936).

Chang Kuo-t'ao 1897–. Chinese political leader, a founding member of the Chinese Communist party. He lost a power struggle with Mao Tse-tung during the Long March (1935) and defected to the Chinese Nationalists.

Chang Ling AD *c*33–156? Founder of Taoism in China. Once a faith healer, he taught that sin is the source of bodily ills. His cult was known as the Five Pecks of Rice (q.v.).

Chares 3d cent. BC. Greek sculptor. He created the Colossus of Rhodes, one of the Seven Wonders of the World, and is said to be the founder of the Rhodian school of sculpture.

Charlemagne ⟨Charles the Great⟩ ⟨Charles I⟩ *c*742–814. King of the Franks (768–814) and emperor (800–814) of the vast Carolingian Empire in Western Europe, united by his conquests. The son and successor of Pepin the Short, he first succeeded (768) with his brother Carloman as coruler of the Frankish domains, then became sole ruler (771) on Carloman's death. Thereafter he conquered the Lombards (773–774) in response to Pope Adrian's request for aid against them, subdued the Saxons (772–785), failed (778) in his invasion of Muslim Spain, annexed Bavaria (788), and conquered the Avars in the region of the Danube (by 798). He was crowned by Pope Leo III (Christmas Day, 800) as emperor of the (reconstituted) Western Roman Empire in return for preventing the pope's ouster by unruly Romans. His coronation formed the basis for the later creation of the Holy Roman Empire, though Byzantine emperor Michael I recognized Charlemagne (812) only as emperor of the Carolingian Empire (and not as Emperor of the Western Roman Empire). Under Charlemagne's rule an effective administrative system was developed, commerce, education, and building were promoted, and his capital at Aix-la-Chapelle became a cultural center.

Charles I See Charlemagne

Charles I ⟨Charles of Anjou⟩ 1226–85. French nobleman, king of Naples and Sicily (1266–85), son of French king Louis VIII. He won the throne of Naples and Sicily by conquest and, in subsequent years, vastly extended his territories. His harsh rule, however, led to the Revolt of the Sicilian Vespers (1282).

Charles I 1288–1342. Hungarian king (1308–42), son of Charles II of Naples and founder of the Hungarian Angevin line. He reorganized the army and stimulated trade. Under his rule, Hungary regained its status as a major power.

Charles I 1600–49. English king (1625–49), successor to his father, James I. His firm belief in the divine right of kings and consequent struggles with Parliament resulted in the English Civil War (1642–49). Charles's marriage to the unpopular French Catholic Henrietta Maria and his wars against Spain and France only added to his differences with Parliament. The struggle began soon after his accession and was characterized by bold maneuvers on both sides: Parliament refused Charles money grants until he agreed to end arbitrary practices; Charles briefly relented, agreeing to the Petition of Right (1628), then dissolved Parliament (1629) and ruled without it, raising money by a variety of means. Charles rigorously pursued religious uniformity, and his attempt to impose Anglican liturgy in Scotland embroiled him in the Bishops' Wars (1639–40). This brought on a need for money and prompted calling of the Short and Long parliaments (1640), which in turn resulted in the English Civil War. Defeated, Charles was tried and executed (1649).

Charles I 1863–1908. Portuguese king (1889–1908), successor to Louis I. Charles vied with Britain and Japan for African colonial territories and contended with unrest at home. A revolt (1906) prompted him to grant Prime Minister João Franco (1855–1929) dictatorial powers. This resulted in a revolt (1908) and in his assassination.

Charles I 1887–1922. Last ruler of the Austro-Hungarian Empire (1916–18), successor to Emperor Francis Joseph. He acceded during WW I and tried to open negotiations for peace (1916). He likewise failed in a plan to keep the dual monarchy united, and in 1918 Hungary and Czechoslovakia declared independence.

Charles II (king of Hungary) See Charles III of Durazzo

Charles II ⟨Charles the Bald⟩ 823–877. King of the West Franks (France) (843–877) and emperor of the West (875–877), a son and successor to Louis I (the Pious). With Louis the German, he made the Oath of Strasbourg (842), and subsequently agreed to redivision of the empire by the Treaty of Verdun (843) and the Treaty of Mersen (870). He then succeeded to the imperial crown (875).

Charles II 1248–1309. King of Naples (1285–1309), successor to his father, Charles I (1226–85). He was defeated (1302) in the War of the Sicilian Vespers to regain Sicily (begun in his father's reign).

Charles II ⟨Charles the Bad⟩ 1332–87. King of Navarre (1349–87). He was noted in his day as a treacherous intriguer who conspired against his father-in-law, John II, among others.

Charles II 1630–85. English king (1660–85), successor (after the English Restoration) to his father, Charles I. His restoration (1660) brought a period of relative stability after the fall of the Protectorate. Following the English Civil War, by agreements with the Scots, he was crowned (1651) Charles II, and invaded England. Defeated (1651) by O. Cromwell, he fled to the Continent, where he remained until his restoration. Though he favored Catholicism and religious toleration, he was forced by public sentiment and acts of the Cavalier Parliament to accept strict laws of uniformity (Clarendon Code and Test Act) and to rescind his two declarations of indulgence (1662, 1672). Charles nevertheless continued his efforts in behalf of Catholicism, established his pro-Catholic Cabal (1667–74) ministry, and entered into secret (and unsuccessful) agreements with the French (Treaty of Dover, 1670). The Popish Plot (1678), defaming Catholics, led to an attempt by Parliament to block the succession of Charles's Catholic brother, James II. Charles dissolved Parliament (1681), ruled without it, and, after the Rye House Plot (1683), gained popularity. During his reign, Britain also entered the Triple Alliance (1668) and was involved in the Second and Third Dutch Wars.

Charles II 1661–1700. Last Spanish Hapsburg king (1665–1700), successor to his father, Philip IV. His reign was marked by the continued decline in Spain's power and the War of Devotion (q.v.) and the War of the Grand Alliance (q.v.). His choice of Philip of Anjou (Philip V) as successor led to the War of Spanish Succession (1701–14).

Charles III ⟨Charles the Fat⟩ 839–888. Frankish emperor of the West (881–887) and king of the East (882–887). He briefly reunited Charlemagne's empire (885–887) but proved a weak ruler. His overthrow by Arnulf (887) began the final breakup of Charlemagne's empire.

Charles III ⟨Charles the Simple⟩ 879–929. French king (893–923), proclaimed king in opposition to, and successor to, King Eudes. He ended Norse raids by ceding (911) territory to them (now part of Normandy), and added Lorraine to the French kingdom (911). He was deposed in 923.

Charles III ⟨Charles of Durazzo⟩ 1345–86. King of Naples (1381–86) and Hungary (1385–86) as Charles II. A member of the Angevin line, he succeeded Joanna I in Naples by deposing her and putting her to death. He was assassinated soon after being elected to succeed King Louis I of Hungary.

Charles III 1716–88. Spanish king (1759–88), successor to Ferdinand VI. An "enlightened despot," he instituted many beneficial administrative reforms. His reign was marked by defeat in the Seven Years' War (1756–63) and Spain's participation in the American Revolution (after 1779).

Charles IV ⟨Charles the Fair⟩ 1294–1328. French king (1322–28), successor to his brother Philip V and last of the Capetian kings. He won (1327) a part of Aquitaine from the English, who then controlled the territory.

Charles IV 1316–78. German king (1346–78). Elected Holy Roman Emperor in opposition to Louis IV (1346), he succeeded him (1347) but was not crowned until 1355. He issued the Golden Bull of 1356 and thus established a constitutional basis for his rule of the empire.

Charles IV 1604–75. Duke of Lorraine. Charles attempted to resist domination by the French kings by means of plots and intrigues, and thus lost control of his domains several times. He supported Spanish involvement in the Fronde (q.v.).

Charles IV 1748–1819. Spanish king (1788–1808), successor to his father, Charles III. A weak ruler, he relied on M. de Godoy to run the government. His reign was marked by two invasions by the French (1794, 1807) and domination by Napoleon. He was forced to abdicate in 1808.

Charles V ⟨Charles the Wise⟩ 1337–80. French king (1364–80), successor to his father, John II. As regent for his father (1356–60), he put down the Jacquerie revolt. As king, he ruled France during its recovery from the early phase of the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). He consolidated the power of the monarchy, strengthened the military, instituted reforms, and regained almost all the territories lost to the English.

Charles V 1500–58. Spanish king (1516–56, as Charles I, succeeding Ferdinand II) and Holy Roman Emperor (1519–56, as Charles V, succeeding Maximilian I). A Hapsburg, he was one of the most powerful European kings, ruling over a vast inherited empire that included much of Europe and all of Spain's New World possessions. Charles's reign was marked by involvement in the Italian Wars (1494–1559) against France and by attempts to stop M. Luther and the Protestant Reformation. In addition to the events of the Italian Wars, Charles's reign saw the brief Revolt of Communeros (1520–21); his Diet of Worms (1521), banning Lutheranism; rebellions in Germany, such as the Peasants' War (1524–26), and the rise of the Lutheran Schmalkaldic League; war against the Ottoman Turks; the Council of Trent (1545) and the Counter-Reformation; the defeat (1547) of the Schmalkaldic League and the Diet of Augsburg (1547–48); and the unsuccessful Augsburg Interim (1548). Charles abdicated (1556) in Spain to his son Philip II and in the Holy Roman Empire to Ferdinand I.

Charles V ⟨Charles Leopold⟩ 1643–90. Duke of Lorraine. Deprived of his duchy by Louis XIV, Charles became a successful field marshal for the Holy Roman Emperor. He aided the defense of Vienna (1683) and drove the Turks from Hungary (1685).

Charles VI ⟨Charles the Well-Beloved⟩ ⟨Charles the Mad⟩ 1368–1422. French king (1380–1422), successor to his father, Charles V. He suffered fits of insanity and could not rule by himself. His reign was marked by war between the Armagnacs and Burgundians, the English invasion of France (1420), and the Treaty of Troyes (1420).

Charles VI 1685–1740. Austrian Holy Roman Emperor (1711–40), successor to his brother Joseph I and last of the direct Hapsburg line. A pretender to the Spanish throne, he precipitated the War of Spanish Succession (1700–14). His accession as emperor (1711) soon ended this conflict, though he again warred against Spain as a member of the Quadruple Alliance (1718–20). In wars with the Ottoman Empire (1716–18, 1736–39), he won and then lost territory in Hungary and Serbia. He lost the War of Polish Succession (1733–35). His attempt to ensure succession of his daughter Maria Theresa to Hapsburg domains (by the Pragmatic Sanction of 1713) led to the War of Austrian Succession (1740–48).

Charles VII ⟨Charles the Well-Served⟩ 1403–61. French king (1422–61), successor to his father, Charles VI. From the time of the Siege of Orléans (1429) to the Battle of Castillon (1453), he gradually forced the English out of France and thus finally ended the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). He also issued the Pragmatic Sanction (1438).

Charles VII ⟨Charles Albert⟩ 1697–1745. Holy Roman Emperor (1742–45), successor to Charles VI. On the death of Charles VI, he became embroiled in the War of Austrian Succession (1740–48) and died before peace was restored.

Charles VIII 1470–98. French king (1483–98), successor to his father, Louis XI. He initiated the Italian Wars (1494–1559) with an abortive invasion of Italy, in which he hoped to conquer the kingdom of Naples. He was defeated at the Battle of Fornovo (1495).

Charles IX 1550–74. French king (1560–74), successor to his brother, Francis II. The Wars of Religion (q.v.) began during his reign. Under pressure from his mother, Catherine de Medici, he ordered the Massacre of St. Barholomew's Day (1572), in which thousands of Huguenots were killed.

Charles IX 1550–1611. Regent of Sweden (1592–94, 1599–1604) and king (1604–11). He opposed the Catholic king Sigismund III (of Poland and Sweden), defeated him in battle (1598), and restored Lutheranism in Sweden. He precipitated a long period of wars with Poland (1600–60) and provoked the Kalmar War (1611–13).

Charles X 1757–1836. French king (1824–30), successor to King Louis XVIII. He took part in the counterrevolutionary Wars of the Vendée. As king he vainly tried to reestablish the ancien régime. His last prime minister, A. de Polignac, provoked the July Revolution (1830).

Charles X Gustavus 1622–60. Swedish king (1654–60), successor to his cousin Queen Christina. He led Sweden in the First Northern War (1655–60). He died while treaties, advantageous to Sweden, were being concluded.

Charles XI 1665–97. Swedish king (1660–97), successor to his father, Charles X Gustavus. By the Riksdag of 1682, he established an absolute monarchy in Sweden. His reign was marked by treaties concluding the First Northern War (1655–60) and by Sweden's participation in the Third Dutch War (1672–78).

Charles XII 1682–1718. Swedish king (1697–1718), successor to his father, Charles XI. He proved himself a brilliant military leader during the Second Northern War (1700–21), but his ambitious plans ultimately cost Sweden its status as a major power.

Charles XIII 1748–1818. Swedish king (1809–18) and first king of a united Sweden and Norway (1814–18). Successor to his nephew, Gustavus IV, he ruled Sweden under a constitution that limited his powers. During his reign, Finland was ceded to Russia (1809) and Sweden and Norway were united (1814).

Charles XIV John ⟨orig. Bernadotte, Jean Baptiste Jules⟩ 1763–1844. French general and king of Sweden and Norway (1818–44), successor to Charles XIII. A French marshal under Napoleon, he was elected crown prince of Sweden (1810), and from that time virtually ruled Sweden. He turned against Napoleon and helped defeat him at Leipzig (1813). He then forced Norway into union with Sweden (1814). His subsequent reign was marked by a period of relative peace.

Charles XV 1826–72. King of Sweden and Norway (1859–72), successor to his father, Oscar I. A popular ruler, he supported the creation of a bicameral legislature (1866).

Charles Albert See Charles VIII

Charles Albert 1798–1849. A Sardinian king (1831–49), a member of the Savoy family. A liberal-minded ruler during the Risorgimento, he warred against Austria twice and was defeated both times, first at Custozza (1848) and again at Novara (1849). He abdicated after his second defeat.

Charleston US port city (pop. 69,510) in South Carolina. Founded (1670) by the English colonizer William Sayle (d. 1671), it was a major southern port during Colonial times. It figured in the American Revolution and Civil War (see Battles of Charleston). The attack (1861) on Fort Sumter (q.v.) in Charleston harbor marked the beginning of fighting in the Civil War.

Charleston US city (pop. 64,000), capital of West Virginia. It was incorporated in 1794 and first became the capital of the state from 1870 to 1875. In 1885 it became the permanent capital.

Charleston, Battle of 1. American victory (June 28, 1776) over the British during the American Revolution (1775–83). American colonel W. Moultrie successfully defended his garrison on Sullivan's Island in the Charleston, South Carolina, harbor during an attack by British warships. 2. Major British victory (May 12, 1780) during the American Revolution (1775–83). Following a six-week siege by some 16,000 soldiers under Sir H. Clinton, the British forced the surrender of Charleston, South Carolina, and some 7,000 American defenders under Gen. B. Lincoln. The British then launched their invasion of the Carolinas. They held the city until Dec. 14, 1782. 3. ⟨Siege of Charleston⟩ Prolonged Union effort to capture this South Carolina city during the American Civil War (1861–65). Following capture of Fort Sumter (q.v.) by the Confederacy, Charleston harbor was blockaded by the Union Navy and, after 1863, was bombarded by Union forces. It did not fall to Union forces (taken Feb. 18, 1865) until Sherman's March to the Sea.

Charlottetown Conference Preliminary meeting (Sept., 1864) of delegates from Canadian provinces to discuss unification of Canada. The conference was followed by the Quebec Conference (q.v.). Originally called to discuss federation of the Maritime Provinces, the conference was attended by delegates of other provinces, who promoted a plan for a general union.

chartered companies Companies created by special government charter for the purpose of colonization and trade in foreign lands. The companies were especially important (16th-17th cents.) in the creation of Europe's vast overseas colonial empires. Chartered companies were frequently empowered to govern as well as explore and colonize these new lands and thus figured in the early history of the US, Canada, India, and Africa. Their functions, however, were eventually absorbed by the home governments. See separate entries for the following major trading companies:

Charter of 1814 ⟨charte constitutionnelle⟩ Constitution issued (June 14, 1814) by French king Louis XVIII, following his restoration to the throne at the end of the Napoleonic era. Louis promulgated the constitution at the urging of C. Talleyrand and other advisers. It established a constitutional monarchy with a bicameral legislature and guaranteed civil liberties and religious toleration established under Napoleon's reign. Catholicism was made the state religion. The charter was rewritten in 1830.

Charter to the Nobility Charter (May, 1785) guaranteeing the rights and prerogatives of the Russian nobility. Issued by Catharine II (the Great), the charter extended these rights to the nobility as a corporate body and eliminated earlier distinctions between old and new nobility. By its terms the nobility were granted the rights of assembly, petition of the monarch, and trial by their peers. It also gave them powers over their serfs, excluded them from mandatory service to the state, and exempted them from personal taxes.

Chartism Mass movement (1838–48) for political reform which arose among workingmen in Britain. The movement was centered around demands for reforms set forth in the People's Charter, drafted by William Lovett. They included universal male suffrage, voting by ballot, and elimination of property qualifications for members of Parliament. Spawned by a severe depression and unpopular revisions of the Poor Laws, the movement briefly became nationwide. Chartist petitions were submitted to Parliament (1838, 1840, 1848), and all were rejected. Chartist riots in May, July, and Nov., 1839 resulted in arrests of Chartist leaders and a decline in the movement. It revived briefly in 1848, but a return of prosperity brought the final decline of the movement.

Chase, Salmon Portland 1808–73. American public official and 6th chief justice of the US Supreme Court (1864–73). He was a founder of the Free Soil and Republican parties and secretary of treasury under Pres. A. Lincoln (1861–64). Chase proposed the plan for the national banking system (1863), presided over the impeachment proceedings against Pres. A. Johnson (1868), and was several times a candidate for president.

Chase, Samuel 1741–1811. American patriot, Supreme Court associate justice (1796–1811), and signer of the Declaration of Independence. T. Jefferson's failed attempt to have him impeached for political reasons (1805) helped establish the court's traditional independence from political influence.

Chateaubriand, François René, vicomte of 1768–1848. French writer and diplomat, a founder of French romanticism. His life was enmeshed with the upheavals of the French Revolution, and he variously served the monarchists, Napoleon, and the Restoration. His first great literary success, however, came (1802) with publication of The Genius of Christianity. His many other works include the novels Atala and René, and his memoires, Mémoires d'outre-tombe.

Chateauguay, Battle of British victory (Oct. 26, 1813) during the War of 1812. A small contingent of British troops intercepted and defeated the advance party of an American invasion force, led by Gen. W. Hampton, as it neared its objective of Montreal, Canada. The defeat turned back the American invasion of Canada.

Chattanooga, Battle of Union victory (1863) at Chattanooga, Tennessee, during the American Civil War (1861–65). One of the important Union victories, it was the culmination of the Chattanooga Campaign (1863) and gave the North undisputed possession of that strategic city. The Army of the Cumberland, under Gen. W. Rosecrans, was besieged (Sept., 1863) at Chattanooga by Confederate forces, under Gen. B. Bragg, after the Battle of Chickamauga Creek. By November, Gen. U. Grant had replaced Rosecrans and had mustered some 60,000 men to face Bragg's 50,000. He began the attack late in November with units under Gen. W. Sherman, Gen. J. Hooker, and Gen. G. Thomas. On Nov. 24, Hooker cleared Lookout Mountain (Battle Above the Clouds) of Confederates. On Nov. 25, Thomas moved up Missionary Ridge and routed the Confederates. Bragg was forced to retreat into Georgia and sustained losses of 7,000 men to the Union's 6,000.

Chatterton, Thomas 1752–70. English poet. Recognized as a forerunner of the romantic movement, he was largely unrecognized in his own time. He committed suicide at age 17.

Chaucer, Geoffrey 1340?–1400. Early English poet, author of The Canterbury Tales and one of the most important figures in English literature. Born into a middle-class family, Chaucer won the favor of King Edward III, subsequently held various court-appointed administrative posts, and even undertook a number of diplomatic missions (during the 1370s). Chaucer's literary works are usually divided into three periods. The early period (ending 1370) reflects a French influence and includes his first major work, the Book of the Duchesse. The middle period shows an Italian influence (Boccaccio, Dante) and includes House of Fame, Parlement of Foules, Legend of Good Women, and Troilus and Criseyde. The late period (after 1387) includes his masterpiece, Canterbury Tales.

Chaumette, Pierre Gaspard 1763–94. French revolutionary. As procurator general of the Commune of Paris, he instituted social reforms, including improvements in hospitals and treatment of the poor. He was executed by M. Robespierre for advocating the Cult of Reason.

Chautauqua movement Adult education system. Similar to the Lyceum, it was begun (1873) in Chautauqua, New York, by John Vincent (1832–1920) and Lewis Miller (1829–99). It supports summer lectures and classes in the arts, sciences, and humanities.

Chaykovsky, Nikolai Vasilyevich 1850–1926. A Russian Socialist. Chaykovsky established (1875) an unsuccessful utopian commune in Kansas. Returning to Russia, he opposed the Bolshevists and headed (1918–20) the counterrevolutionary, White Russian government at Archangel.

Checkers Speech Emotional television address on Sept. 23, 1952, in which R. Nixon preserved his position as vice-presidential candidate and won new support for the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket. Nixon answered charges that he had benefited from a fund raised by California friends by pointing to his modest personal circumstances, noting his wife's "Republican cloth coat" and his dog, Checkers.

checks and balances The principle of government whereby power is divided among executive, legislative, and judicial branches, in order to prevent excesses and abuses of power. The theory of the separation of powers was articulated in Montesquieu's The Spirit of Laws (1748) and was applied to government in the US Constitution (q.v.) in 1789.

Cheever, John 1912–1982. American novelist and short-story writer whose works depict life in 20th-cent. suburban America. Among his works are The Wapshot Chronicle and Bullet Park.

Cheka Russian secret police unit. The Cheka was organized in Dec., 1917 to combat counterrevolutionary activity. It was granted power of execution in 1918. After 1922 it was replaced by the GPU (q.v.).

Chekhov, Anton Pavlovich 1860–1904. Russian playwright and short-story writer, one of Russia's great literary figures. A practicing physician until forced to retire by a chronic case of tuberculosis, he first won fame with stories such as Ward Number Six and The Steppe. From 1898 he began writing plays, which were produced by the Moscow Art Theater and which are now world famous. Among them are The Sea Gull, Uncle Vanya, and The Cherry Orchard.

Cheng Ch'eng-kung 1624–62. Chinese pirate and soldier. Cheng's pirates supported rulers of the Ming dynasty against the invading Manchu. Forced to abandon the mainland by the Manchu conquests, he captured Taiwan from the Dutch (1661) and established a short-lived government there.

Chennault, Claire Lee 1890–1958. American general. He organized (1941) the volunteer air-combat unit called the Flying Tigers, which fought in China, and headed conventional US air-combat units there later in WW II.

Ch'en Tu-hsiu 1879–1942. Chinese scholar and Communist leader. Ch'en, an advocate of sweeping cultural revolution, was a leader of the May Fourth Movement (q.v.) and a principal founder of the Chinese Communist party.

Chénier, André Marie de 1762–94. French poet, sometimes called the greatest of 18th-cent. France. He was guillotined during the Reign of Terror in France and is perhaps best known for his Élégies.

Cherokee Indians North American Indian tribe once located in the US Southeast. First visited by the Spanish (mid-16th cent.), they were subsequently friendly with British settlers until the mid-18th cent. The tribal population was cut in half by a smallpox epidemic (*c*1750), and, after 1760, hostilities against the settlers began. During the American Revolution (1775–83), the Cherokees allied themselves with the British royalists, and engaged in sporadic warfare (1776–81). Their defeat and loss of territories in subsequent treaties began the process of their removal from the Southeast. By the Indian Removal Act, the Cherokee were forcibly removed (1838) to Oklahoma. The long trek under Chief J. Ross cost thousands of lives and was called the Trail of Tears. In Oklahoma the Cherokee became one of the Five Civilized Tribes. The tribe disbanded in 1906.

Cherry Valley Raid Raid (Nov. 11, 1778) on a village in upper New York during the American Revolution (1775–83). The Iroquois Indians, led by J. Brant, joined with W. Butler and Butler's raiders in this attack, which left the town destroyed.

Chersonese, Tauric Ancient city in the Crimea, near modern Sevastopol. Founded (6th cent. BC) by the Ionian Greeks, it was an important trading center in ancient times and continued to flourish under the Romans and Byzantines. It fell into ruin in the 14th cent.

Chersonese, Thracian ⟨Chersonesus⟩ Geographical region, known as the Gallipoli Peninsula, it is located in European Turkey. It was a major grain-producing region in ancient times and was crossed by major trade routes.

Chesapeake US frigate. On June 22, 1807, the British ship Leopard stopped her off the Virginia coast, searched her for British deserters, and forcibly removed four crewmen. This incident, the "Chesapeake Affair," increased anti-British sentiment in the US in the years before the War of 1812. When, during the War of 1812, the Chesapeake was attacked and boarded (June 1, 1813) outside of Boston harbor by crewmen of the British warship Shannon, American commander J. Lawrence uttered his famous cry, "Don't give up the ship!"

Cheyenne Indians North American Indian tribe, once located in the Great Plains. Pressed by hostilities with other tribes, the Cheyenne migrated from Minnesota and, by the early 1800s, had settled in the Black Hills. By 1851, part of the tribe had moved south, and the Cheyenne were split into northern and southern tribes. Discovery of gold (1858) on tribal lands in Colorado brought on war with the whites. The southern Cheyenne were generally subdued by Gen. G. Custer after his destruction of the Washita River village (1868). The northern Cheyenne and Sioux combined to massacre Custer's forces at Little Bighorn (1876). They surrendered in 1877 and were removed to Oklahoma Chia-ching 1507–66. Chinese emperor (1522–66). During his reign, China was plagued by Mongol invasions, raids by Japanese pirates, and rebellions. He ceded Macao to Portugal (1557).

Chia-ch'ing 1760–1820. Unpopular Chinese emperor (1796–1820), successor to his father, Ch'ien Lung. He put down the White Lotus Rebellion and suppressed piracy, but his measures to replenish the treasury proved unpopular.

Chiang Ch'ing 1914?–. Chinese Communist political leader and the wife of Mao Tse-tung. In 1966 she became a leading figure in the Cultural Revolution (q.v.), and remained an important political figure into the 1970s. Following Mao's death, she fell from power and was finally put on trial (Nov. 20–Dec. 29, 1980) with the Gang of Four (q.v.) for abuses during the Cultural Revolution.

Chiang Chung-cheng See Chiang Kai-shek

Chiang Kai-shek ⟨Chiang Chung-cheng⟩ 1887–1975. Chinese Nationalist general and leader, who headed the governments of China (1928–49) and of the exiled Nationalists on Taiwan (after 1949). A trained military leader, Chiang took part in the Chinese Revolution of 1911, rebellions against the government of Yuan Shih-kai, and served (from 1918) in Sun Yat-sen's Nationalist Kuomintang government. He began the Northern Expedition (1926–28), took control of the Kuomintang (Sun had died 1925), broke with the Communists (1927), warred against them in the Chinese Civil War (1927–49), and established the Nationalists as rulers of China (1928–49) until the Communist takeover. He held power under various titles, and, after being seized in the Sian Incident (1936), agreed to an alliance with the Communists against the threat of Japanese invasion. He then led a loosely united China during the Sino-Japanese War (1937–45) and WW II, but, after 1945, resumed civil war against the Communists. This time the Communists gained the upper hand, and by 1949 he and his Nationalist government had been forced into exile on Taiwan. Chiang's subsequent fortunes declined with those of his government on Taiwan. After enjoying two decades of US support, his government was expelled (1971) from the UN in favor of the Communist People's Republic of China.

Chile Republic located on the southwestern coast of South America. Its capital is Santiago. Chile gained its independence from Spain in 1818 but its growth was slow until the late 19th and early 20th cents., when its rich deposits of nitrates and copper came under the control of foreign companies. Chile's political history has been one of struggle between conservative and liberal factions. The 20th cent. saw the rise of Communist and Socialist organizations as powers in the political scene. In 1970 Salvador Allende Gossens became the first Marxist to be elected chief executive of a government in the Western Hemisphere. He died in 1973 during a military coup. Key dates in the history of Chile include:

1540s–50s Spanish under Pedro de Valdivia founded Santiago (1541), Concepción (1550), Valdivia (1552), and other settlements in Chile.

16TH CENT. Conquistadors fought Araucanian Wars against Indians in central Chile.

1817 Argentine rebel José de San Martín and the Chilean rebel B. O'Higgins led rebel force from Argentina into Chile; began expulsion of Spanish royalists from Chile with victory at Battle of Chacabuco (Feb. 12); B. O'Higgins named director general.

1818 O'Higgins proclaimed Chilean independence (Feb. 12).

1818 José de San Martín defeated the Spanish in final battle of Maipú (1818); Chilean independence firmly established.

1818–23 O'Higgins governed Chile; opposition to his rule led to his resignation.

1833 New constitution adopted; led to eventual establishment of strong, centralized representative government in Chile.

1879–83 Chile emerged victorious in War of the Pacific (1879–83); conflict ended by the Treaty of Ancon (1883); Chile awarded valuable territories from Bolivia and Peru.

1883–1929 Tacna-Arica Controversy, prolonged territorial dispute with Peru; ultimately resolved along lines suggested by US Pres. H. Hoover.

1886–91 J. Balmaceda served as president; his liberal reforms caused civil war and his ouster; parliamentary dictatorship ruled until adoption of 1925 constitution.

1891 Baltimore Incident (Oct. 16) threatened war with US.

1920–25 A. Alessandri Palma served as president; assisted in creation of a new constitution (1925).

1927–31 Carlos Ibáñez del Campo served as president; promoted labor and educational reforms.

1930s Great Depression caused great hardship in Chile; promoted the rise of Socialist and Marxist groups that sought to alter Chilean government and economic system.

1946–52 Gabriel González Videla served as president; administration sought to solve Chile's economic ills and took measures against Communists.

1952–58 C. Ibáñez del Campo served second time as president.

1958–64 Jorge Alessandri served as president; administration marked by continuing economic trouble.

1964–70 Eduardo Frei Montalvo served as president; introduced numerous reforms; government took controlling interest in US mines in Chile.

1970–73 S. Allende, a Communist, became president; nationalized copper companies and other industries; sought to institute Socialist program in Chile.

1971 Diplomatic relations established (Jan. 5) with China.

1971 Congress blocked Allende's planned governmental reforms; measures would have created unicameral legislature and increased presidential powers.

1972 Allende imposed martial law (Oct. 12) in 13 provinces to deal with truckers' strike.

1973 Military staged unsuccessful coup (June 29) against Allende government.

1973 Military coup overthrew Allende government (Sept. 11); President Allende died under suspicious circumstances; US CIA implicated in attempts to destabilize the government.

1973 Gen. Augusto Pinochet Ugarto became president (Sept. 13); instituted right-wing dictatorship firmly opposed to Marxists.

1976 OAS accused military government of police terrorism.

1978 Government lifted state of siege in force since military takeover.

1980 New constitution adopted.

1981 Pinochet elected president under new constitution; civilian president to be elected at close of Pinochet's eight-year term.

Ch'in Fourth dynasty of Chinese rulers (221–207 BC). During this dynasty, warring Chinese states were unified into the first Chinese empire. The unification was effected (by 221 BC) by Emperor Shih Huang Ti (q.v.), leader of a petty kingdom in the northwest that rose to power during the Chou period. As emperor, he ended feudalism and established an administrative system that became a model for succeeding dynasties. He built the Great Wall (q.v.). His son, who succeeded him, was overthrown in a rebellion (207) that brought the Han dynasty (q.v.) to power.

Chin ⟨Tsin⟩ Name of Chinese dynasty (AD 265–419). It was founded by General Ssu-ma Yen (d. 290), who briefly united China after the period of the Three Kingdoms. After his death, the empire was destroyed by the Revolt of Eight Kings and by foreign incursions. The period up until the outbreak of the revolts is called the Western Chin (AD 265–317). The subsequent period, Eastern Chin (AD 317–419), saw establishment of the capital at Nanking and creation of a kingdom in southern China. The north during this period was generally ruled by barbarian invaders.

China ⟨People's Republic of China⟩ Communist republic located in east central Asia. Its capital is Peking. Archaeological evidence indicates China had an advanced civilization as early as the 3d–2d millennium BC and it seems to have spread from the Yellow River valley. Legends tell of great rulers of ancient times, notably: Fu Hsi, the mythical first ruler of China who supposedly taught people how to fish, hunt, and domesticate animals in 2900 BC; Shen Nung, the second ruler, who taught them farming skills and established an agricultural society; and Huang Ti, the third ruler, who was credited with many innovations, ranging from the introduction of mathematical calculations to the building of boats. The later Hsia dynasty of Chinese rulers remains shrouded in legend and it is with the Shang dynasty that the known history of China—backed by significant archaeological evidence—begins. Key events in the history of China include:

c2200–c1766 BC Hsia dynasty, legendary first dynasty of rulers, said to have been founded by Yü the Great.

c1766–1122 BC Shang dynasty ruled; first dynasty identified by archaeological evidence; relatively advanced civilization with extensive farming, chariots, and bronze weapons.

1122–221 BC Chou dynasty in power; classical age of Chinese literature in which Confucius, Lao-tze, and Mencius flourished; Bronze Age culture reached its height and iron was introduced; period also noted for political turmoil and development of feudalism in China.

485 BC Equal-field system established to distribute land.

481–221 BC Warring States period ended Chou dynasty rule; empire divided into petty kingdoms; frequent warfare and corruption characterized the period, which also saw the rise of Confucianism.

255–210? BC Reign of Shih Huang Ti; as ruler of the Ch'in kingdom in the northwest, he extended his control over the warring states, abolished feudalism and created (221) the first unified Chinese empire; began construction of the Great Wall.

213 BC Burning of the Books ordered by Emperor Shih Huang Ti.

202 BC–AD 220 Han dynasty reigned; restored order after death of Shih Huang Ti; empire greatly expanded, especially by Wu Ti; Chinese Examination System introduced and Confucianism was promoted; Buddhism introduced from India; silk trade developed and many cultural advances made.

2 c CENT. BC Explorer Chang Ch'ien traveled through India and Greece; brought back knowledge of these cultures.

AD 9–25 Han dynasty briefly overthrown by Wang Mang, a government official.

c1ST CENT. AD Chang Ling founded Taoism.

AD c100 First Chinese dictionary compiled.

AD 105 Paper invented.

AD 184–204 Rebellion of the Yellow Turbans; contributed to final overthrow of Han dynasty (AD 220).

AD 220–589 Six Dynasties period followed the collapse of the Han dynasty; each of the dynasties had its capital at Nanking; period marked by warfare between petty kingdoms, rise of Buddhism and Taoism, significant cultural advances, and a resurgence of feudalism.

AD 220–264 Three Kingdoms period immediately after the fall of the Han dynasty was marked by bloody wars, intrigues, and individual heroism; empire was divided into the Wu, Wei, and Shu Han kingdoms.

AD 304–439 Ascendancy of Sixteen Kingdoms in northern border region.

589–618 Sui dynasty reigned; reunited China, began construction of Grand Canal, refortified Great Wall.

618–907 T'ang dynasty, founded by Li Yüan; Confucianism revived, printing developed, and the civil service system refined.

684–704 Wu Hou reigned as empress of China; Korea conquered (655).

712–756 T'ang Hsüan Tsung reigned; instituted reforms and fostered great prosperity.

755 T'ang dynasty nearly overthrown in revolt by An Lu-shan; rulers never regained former power.

907–960 Five Dynasties and Ten Kingdoms period; five short-lived dynasties ruled from the end of the T'ang to the rise of the Sung; marked by chaos.

960–1279 Sung dynasty in power; after order was restored, there followed a period of great cultural flowering and such innovations as printing with movable type and first use of gunpowder; commerce flourished; the dynasty finally collapsed before the Mongol invasions, begun by Genghis Khan (c1206) and completed by Kublai Khan.

1260–1368 Yüan dynasty, founded by Kublai Khan, ruled China; established capital at Peking, completed Grand Canal and made numerous other advances.

c1275–1292 Marco Polo in China during his famous journey.

1368–1644 Ming dynasty in power, last of native Chinese emperors; restored traditional Chinese culture and made many conquests (later lost these territories); Spanish and Portuguese traders entered China.

1403–24 Yung-Lo reigned; annexed Annam, moved his capital from Nanking to Peking and brought Ming dynasty empire to its zenith.

1644 Ch'ing forces (from Manchuria) seized control of China after they were called in by Ming emperor to put down a rebellion.

1644–1912 Ch'ing dynasty (Manchu) in power, last dynasty of emperors; they greatly expanded the empire but during the 19th cent. succumbed to incursions by foreign powers and internal dissent.

1662–1722 K'ang-hsi extended China's rule to Taiwan, Tibet, and Outer Mongolia.

1673–81 Revolt of the Three Feudatories against the Manchu dynasty quashed.

1704 Pope intervened in Rites Controversy among Roman Catholic missionaries in China.

1735–96 Ch'ien-lung reigned; brought empire to its greatest extent.

1759 "Canton system" established to control activities of foreign traders in China; marked restriction of foreign trade by government that lasted into the next century.

1796–1804 White Lotus Rebellion led by Buddhist adherents against Manchu rule; contributed to ultimate collapse of Manchu dynasty.

1813 Chia-ch'ing's failure to end corruption and high taxes resulted in a siege of the palace.

1839–42 First Opium War fought against Britain; China defeated and forced to cede Hong Kong and make trade concessions to British; other European powers forced similar concessions soon after.

1850–64 Taiping Rebellion, unsuccessful but devastating uprising against Ch'ing rule; became model for later Nationalist and Communist revolts.

1856–60 Second Opium War fought against France and Great Britain; China defeated and forced to allow opium trade and make substantial concessions.

c1861–c74 Self-strengthening movement, unsuccessful attempt to modernize and Westernize China.

1870 Tientsin Massacre, 20 Frenchmen killed by mob of Chinese.

1871–81 Russia occupied Chinese territory in Ili Crisis.

1883–85 Sino-French War ended in French control of Vietnam and other Indochina domains.

1894–95 Sino-Japanese War fought with Japan over control of Korea; China defeated and forced to grant substantial concessions to Japan.

1895 Sun Yat-sen led an abortive revolution in Canton.

LATE 1890s Foreign powers established spheres of influence in China, effectively dividing the country among themselves.

1898 Short-lived Reform Movement of 1898 attempted Westernization.

1899–1900 US enunciated Open Door Policy to maintain equal trading privileges between foreign powers operating in China and to guarantee the sovereignty of the Chinese government.

1900–01 Boxer Rebellion against foreign influence.

1911 Chinese Revolution of 1911 (Oct.–Dec.) sparked by Sun Yat-sen; long rule of Ch'ing dynasty formally ended soon after (1912) with emperor's abdication.

1911 Sun named president of new government (Dec.).

1912 Boy emperor abdicated and China declared a republic (Feb. 12).

1912 Sun resigned (Feb. 15) to unite country behind new leader, Yüan Shih-kai; Yüan soon after established a repressive regime.

1915 Japan presented its Twenty-one Demands, seeking virtual domination of China; China forced to concede to most of the demands.

1917 China joined Allies in WW I.

1917–26 Rise of warlord states followed death of President Yüan; Sun Yat-sen headed the nationalist Kuomintang faction and won control of the southern provinces.

1922 Nine-Power Treaty signed; Japanese withdrew from Chinese territory.

1924–27 United Front, alliance between Chinese Communist Party and Kuomintang.

1926–28 Chiang Kai-shek, now leader of the Nationalist Kuomintang, conducted the successful Northern Expedition against warlords.

1927 Chiang split with the Communists; long civil war between nationalist Kuomintang and Communists (1927–49) began.

1927 Autumn Harvest Uprising, unsuccessful Communist peasant revolt (Sept.).

1928 Northern Expedition ended in victory; Chiang Kai-shek set up nationalist government at Nanking.

1931 Mukden Incident, pretext used by the Japanese to invade and occupy Manchuria.

1931–34 Kiangsi Soviet, the Communist opposition government to Chiang Kai-shek's nationalist Kuomintang government, set up in southwest by Mao Tse-tung and Chu Teh.

1966–69 Cultural Revolution; government purged and radical ideology spread throughout the populace in a period of great turmoil.

1971 US Table Tennis Team visited China; marked efforts to normalize US-Chinese relations.

1971 Lin Piao, Mao's heir apparent, was killed in a plane crash (Sept. 12).

1971 Admission of China to UN approved (Oct.); Taiwan expelled.

1972 US restrictions on trade with China eased; US Pres. Nixon visited China as part of effort to normalize relations.

1976 Premier Chou En-lai died (Jan. 8); Hua Kuo-feng succeeded him as a compromise between radicals and moderates.

1976 700,000 reported dead in major earthquake in northeast China (July).

1976 Mao died (Sept. 9); Premier Hua Kuo-feng became party chairman, succeeding Mao.

1976 Chiang Ch'ing, Mao's widow, and other radicals arrested.

1978 Technical state of war ended by friendship treaty with Japan.

1979 Full diplomatic relations with US established (Jan. 1).

1979 Troops ordered across border into Vietnam to punish the Vietnamese for their involvement in Cambodia (Feb.).

1979 National People's Congress endorsed new criminal law code (first under Communist regime) and popular elections for local people's congresses.

1979 Government officially criticized the Cultural Revolution and, while not denouncing Mao, sought to end cult worship of him.

1980 Central Committee ordered removal of most images of Mao then on public display.

1980 Mao's widow and nine other radicals tried in public show trials (Nov. 20–Dec. 29) as government continued shift from radicalism.

1981 Hua Kuo-feng, Mao's hand-picked successor as party chairman, resigned; Gen. Hu Yao-pang named as Hua's successor.

1982 US agreed to limit arms sales to Taiwan in order to continue policy of friendly relations toward China.

Chinese Civil War War (1945–49) that culminated a long struggle between Kuomintang (Nationalist) Chinese and the Communist Chinese for control of China. The civil war is generally considered to have begun in 1945, soon after the end of WW II. But Communist and Nationalist forces had been fighting in China intermittently since 1927. In 1926–27 the Communists had helped Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang forces take power from the warlords (provincial military rulers). After his victory in 1927, however, Chiang Kai-shek purged Communists from the Kuomintang, formed his Nationalist government, and began military expeditions against Communist strongholds. From 1931, the Kuomintang was also forced to contend with Japanese expansionism that later resulted in the Sino-Japanese War (q.v.). The Kuomintang finally drove the Communists out of the region south of the Yangtze River, precipitating the Communists' famous Long March (1934–35) to strongholds in northwest Shensi province. Mao Tse-tung emerged as the Communist leader during the march. Despite their differences, Kuomintang and Communists at times organized a temporary common front against the invading Japanese, notably in 1937 when the Red Army was ostensibly incorporated into the Chinese army. China entered WW II as an ally, but a controversy developed when US Gen. J. Stilwell urged Chiang Kai-shek to commit more of his troops to fighting against the Japanese, instead of the Chinese Communists. At the end of WW II, both Kuomintang and Communist forces moved to take over territories formerly occupied by the Japanese. US Gen. G. Marshall was dispatched to China to attempt reconciliation between the two forces (Dec., 1945). But by Apr., 1946, widespread fighting had resumed, in which the Kuomintang was initially successful. Nationalist victories culminated in the capture of the Communist capital of Yenan (Mar. 19, 1947), but the tide of the war subsequently turned in favor of the Communists. They gained control of Manchuria by the end of 1947 and captured Peking on Jan. 15, 1949. The Communists kept up the pressure and by July Chiang Kai-shek was forced to begin withdrawing the remnants of his Kuomintang forces to Taiwan. The Communists proclaimed the People's Republic of China on Oct. 1, 1949, while the Nationalists formally established their government on Taiwan on Dec. 8, 1949.

Chinese Communist party Ruling political party of the People's Republic of China. Founded (1921) by Ch'en Tu-hsiu and Li Ta-chao, it first joined the Chinese Kuomintang government but was expelled (1927) by Chiang Kai-shek. Thus there began the long struggle between the Communists and the Kuomintang, the Chinese Civil War (q.v.). The party maintained a precarious existence in China and was forced to make the famous Long March into northern China. Led by Mao Tse-tung (after 1935), it thrived in the north and established its own government. It effected a truce (1936) with the Kuomintang in the face of Japanese aggression and conducted a guerrilla war against the Japanese during WW II. In 1945 it resumed war with the Nationalists, and forced them out of the mainland in 1949. Since that time the Communist party has remained the dominant power in China.

Chinese Examination System A system of civil service examinations long in use in the Chinese Empire. Candidates were tested in their knowledge of the Confucian classics. The system began around 124 BC under the Han emperor Wu Ti (156–87 BC), and was expanded in the T'ang and Sung dynasties. The system helped maintain the stability of China for over 2,000 years, and was not abolished until 1905 amid a movement to modernize China.

Chinese exclusion acts US legislation passed (1882–94) to prohibit Chinese immigration. Chinese (particularly laborers) began emigrating to the Pacific coastal region by the mid-19th cent. The Burlingame Treaty (1868) further encouraged this influx of cheap labor until resentment among US workers came to a head. Congress passed the first exclusion act in 1882, banning Chinese immigration for 10 years. Subsequent acts (1888, 1892) violated treaties with China, and by a new treaty (1894), immigration was banned for another 10 years. The ban continued until 1924, when new immigration laws shut out all Asians. The exclusion acts were repealed in 1943.

Chinese Revolution of 1911 Uprising that succeeded in overthrowing the last (Ch'ing, or Manchu) dynasty of Chinese emperors and establishing a Chinese Republic. The revolution broke out in Wuhan on Oct. 11, 1911, after army officers were implicated in the secret revolutionary society T'ung-meng-hui (Combined League Society), headed by Dr. Sun Yat-sen. On being discovered, the officers forced their commander to rebel against Manchu troops and the rebellion spread from province to province. The imperial family fled (Dec., 1911), and the boy emperor, Hsüan T'ung (Pu-Yi), abdicated on Feb. 7, 1912. The government passed into the hands of a national assembly at Nanking which had elected Sun the first president of the Chinese Republic (Dec. 30, 1911). China officially became a Republic on Feb. 12, 1912. Sun soon resigned (Feb. 15, 1912) in order to unite the country behind Yüan Shih-kai, a former Manchu military leader who had come to terms with the rebels. In office, however, Yüan sought to increase his power. He was opposed by the (Nationalist) Kuomintang party (founded 1912), which favored a parliamentary system with an elected prime minister. Elections established the Kuomintang as the strongest party in the parliament (convened Apr. 8, 1913), and when Yüan attempted to consolidate his power, the Kuomintang started a second revolution (July 10). Yüan crushed the revolt and, finally, dissolved parliament (Jan. 10, 1914). Yüan ruled until his death (1916), though his power was checked somewhat by provincial military rulers. Following Yüan's death, the military rulers, who came to be called "warlords," vied for control of China. They thus prevented establishment of an effective central government until the rise of the Kuomintang, under Chiang Kai-shek's leadership, some years later. (See also Chinese Civil War.)

Ch'ing ⟨Manchu⟩ Last dynasty of emperors of China (ruled 1644 to 1912). The Ch'ing dynasty was founded (1636) in the Manchurian provinces. Called in (1644) by the Ming emperor to recapture Peking from the bandit Li Tzu-ch'eng, the Manchu seized power for themselves and installed Ch'ing emperor Shun Chih. By 1683 all China had been conquered and a government by Manchu and former Ming officials was in complete control. During the dynasty's long reign, China's territory and population were increased threefold. Emperor Ch'ien Lung expanded Chinese domains to their greatest point in the 18th cent., but, in the 19th cent., incursions by European powers and internal dissent began to weaken the empire. By 1912 the successful Chinese Revolution of 1911 had overthrown Emperor Pu-Yi, last of the Ch'ing rulers.

chivalry Code of moral and ethical conduct that developed during feudal times in Europe (12th–15th cents.). Central to the code was the feudal knight, who exhibited the ideal qualities of piety, loyalty to his feudal lord, courtesy and courtly (platonic) affection for ladies of the court, and valor on the field of battle. Chivalry flourished in the 12th and 13th cents., especially during the Crusades. It declined as an ideal of conduct by the 15th cent., when military campaigns were more openly waged for gain than for reasons of honor or religious duty. The chivalric code was central to the popular medieval romances of the Arthurian legend (q.v.).

Chmielnicki, Bogdan ⟨Khmelnitsky, Bogdan⟩ 1593–1657. Zaporozhe Cossack leader. He led the rebellion of the Ukrainians against Polish domination (1648–54). With Russian aid, he successfully resisted Polish armies, and, in 1654, the Ukraine was declared an autonomous Russian protectorate.

Chocim, battles of ⟨Khotin, ~⟩ 1. Polish victory (Aug.-Sept., 1621) over the Ottoman Turks, ending a brief war between the two (1620–21). The war was sparked by Polish intervention in Moldavia, and, in 1621, the Turks, under Osman II, invaded Poland. Polish forces, raised by Sigismund III, met the Turks at Chocim and successfully withstood Turkish attacks for over a month. 2. Polish victory (Nov., 1673) over the Ottoman Turks, ending a brief war between the two (1672–76). The Turks, allied with Ukrainian Cossacks (then in rebellion against Poland) invaded the Ukraine (1672) and initially forced Poland to negotiate. Polish forces regrouped under John Sobieski (later King John III) and attacked the Turks at Chocim, Moldavia. The Poles largely destroyed the 25,000-man Turkish army garrisoned there and turned the tide of the war.

Chomsky, Avram Noam 1928–. American writer, linguist, and teacher. Chomsky developed his revolutionary theory of generative grammar in such books as Current Issues in Linguistic Theory, Cartesian Linguistics, and Language and Mind.

Chopin, Frédéric François 1810–49. Polish-born composer of the romantic school, famous for his compositions for the piano. A child prodigy, he first performed publicly on the piano at age eight. He left Poland permanently (1831) for Paris, and during an affair with G. Sand (1836–47) wrote his 24 preludes for the piano. Other works for the piano include numerous mazurkas, nocturnes, and polonaises.

Chou Third dynasty of rulers (*c*1122 BC–*c*221 BC) in China and the Chinese classical age. The Chou people, dominant in the Wei River valley, invaded the Chinese Kingdom and overthrew (*c*1122 BC) Chou Hsin, the Shang dynasty ruler. Wu Wang became the first emperor and founder of the Chou dynasty, which lasted for nearly a millennium. The dynasty is traditionally divided into two periods. The Western Chou (*c*1122–771) lasted until the capital of Hao (near modern Sian) was overrun by local lords and their barbarian allies. The Eastern Chou dynasty (771–221) then established itself at Lo-yang. The Eastern Chou dynasty is subdivided into the Ch'un Ch'iu (722–481) and the Warring States (481–221) periods, and eventually fell to rulers of the Ch'in dynasty. The Chou period was a time of great cultural flowering. The Five Classics were written and Confucius, Lao-tze, and Mencius, among others, spread their teachings.

Chouan, Jean See Chouans

Chouans Peasant bands in western France that rebelled (1793) against the revolutionary government during the French Revolution (1789–99). Named after their leader, Jean Chouan (pseud. of Jean Cottereau, 1757–94), they later were led by G. Cadoudal and took part in the Wars of the Vendée (1793–96) and other risings. Though their guerrilla activities were largely suppressed by Napoleon, small uprisings (the "Petite Chouannerie") continued until Napoleon's downfall (1815).

Chou En-lai 1898–1976. Chinese Communist leader, premier (1949–76) and foreign minister (1949–58). A founder of the Chinese Communist party, he served (1924–27) with other Communists in the Kuomintang's nationalist revolution. During the subsequent civil war (1927–49), in which the Kuomintang turned against the Communists, he participated in the Long March. A leading Communist official thereafter, he helped bring the Communists to power in 1949. Later, as foreign minister, he headed delegations to the Geneva and Bandung conferences. He is said to have exercised a moderating influence during the Cultural Revolution and to have been responsible for the Sino-American rapprochement in the 1970s.

Chou Hsin *c*1154–*c*1122 BC. Last Shang dynasty emperor of ancient China. He was notorious for his cruelty and debauchery, and his overthrow (1122) brought the Chou dynasty to power.

Chou Kung fl. 12 cent. BC. Chinese statesman, brother of Emperor Wu Wang. A wise and just man, he became the model for Chinese rulers and officials of succeeding generations. He served as regent of the empire on his brother's death and wrote the Chou Li, a code of laws for the Chou state.

Chremonidean War War (*c*266–262 BC) fought by Athens and Sparta against Macedonian rule. Spurred on by promises of aid from Egyptian king Ptolemy II, the Athenians and Spartans rebelled (266 BC) against King Antigonus II. The Spartans were badly defeated (265), and the Athenians yielded (262) after a two-year siege by the Macedonians. The Macedonians subsequently established new military outposts in the region.

Christadelphians Small religious denomination (Brothers of Christ), founded in America by John Thomas (1805–71) *c*1848. They believe that Christ will return to establish a theocracy at Jerusalem. They refuse to vote, hold office, or engage in warfare.

Christian I 1426–81. King of Denmark and Norway (1450–81) and Sweden (1457–64), founder of the Oldenburg line. He warred against the Swedes (1451–57) to press his claim to the Swedish throne, took possession of Schleswig and Holstein (1460), and was deposed from the Swedish throne (1464). In his last attempt to retake the throne (1471), Christian was repulsed by S. Sture.

Christian II 1481–1559. Danish king of Denmark and Norway (1513–23) and Sweden (1520–23), successor to his father, King John. His reign marked the final breakup of the Kalmar Union (1523). An unpopular king, he at first succeeded in bringing rebellious Sweden back into the Union (1520). He ordered the Stockholm Bloodbath (1520), however, and, by the popular reaction against him, helped bring on Swedish independence (1523). At that time Denmark also rebelled and deposed him.

Christian III 1503–59. King of Denmark and Norway (1534–59). With Sweden, he helped break the power of the Hanseatic League (1536), established the supremacy of the Danish navy in Northern Europe, made Lutheranism the state religion in Denmark and Norway (1536), and reduced Norway's status to that of a province of Denmark.

Christian IV 1577–1648. King of Denmark and Norway (1588–1648). He strengthened the navy, industry, and commerce in his kingdom. He successfully waged the Kalmar War (1611–13), but his invasion of Germany during the Thirty Years' War (1618–48) proved disastrous. Following a defeat by the Swedes, he was forced to yield power to the nobility.

Christian V 1649–99. King of Denmark and Norway (1670–99). Popular with his people, he advanced commoners into the ranks of the nobility. Until 1676, he was largely guided by one such nobleman, P. Griffenfeld, who led him into an unsuccessful war (1675–79) with Sweden. The monarchy became absolutist during his reign.

Christian VII 1749–1808. King of Denmark and Norway (1766–1808). He was mentally unstable, and his physician, J. Struensee, largely controlled the government until his execution (1772). Thereafter, other advisers and finally Christian's son, Frederick VI, held power.

Christian VIII 1786–1848. King of Denmark (1839–48). Elected king of Norway (1814), he permitted adoption of a liberal constitution, attempted to break the union of Norway with Sweden, and was forced to abdicate (1814) by the Swedes. As Denmark's king, he reformed the penal system.

Christian IX 1818–1906. King of Denmark (1863–1906), successor to Frederick VII. His war with Austria and Prussia (1864) ended in defeat and loss of the provinces of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg. His reign was marked by agitation for liberal constitutional reforms.

Christian X 1870–1947. King of Denmark (1912–47), successor to his father, Frederick VIII. He granted women the right to vote (1915), and, by his refusal to flee the invading Nazis in WW II, became a symbol of Danish resistance.

Christianity General term used to describe the religion that arose in Palestine (1st cent. AD) from the life and teachings of Jesus Christ and that has spread to nearly every part of the world. Historically, it has been the predominant religion in the West for many centuries and had an enormous influence on the development of Western civilization, especially in literature, art, architecture, and music. Christianity is based on the New Testament (q.v.), which records the acts and teachings of Jesus, and the Old Testament is regarded as sacred and authoritative Scripture. Christian doctrine was further refined by a series of "creeds" promulgated in the course of early church history. Together, these beliefs attempted to reflect Jesus Christ's own revelations about God and the salvation of mankind. Apostles chosen by Jesus constituted the early leadership of the church, or "assembly" of his followers. The church perpetuated the teachings of Jesus, claimed the authority to interpret them authentically, and administered the sacraments, believed to have been established by Jesus for the spiritual benefit of the faithful. However, disagreements among Christians about Jesus' teachings occurred as early as New Testament times. Major doctrinal crises usually resulted in "little churches" that split off from the main church and maintained "heresies," such as Arianism, Monophysitism, Nestorianism, Donatism, and so on. These were condemned by the main tradition, and most of the dissident Eastern and African churches had split from the church by the end of the Council of Chalcedon (AD 451). Bitter disputes over such issues as Iconoclasm caused the final split (1054) between the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches. Some centuries later, Christianity was again divided by the Protestant Reformation, which followed M. Luther's rebellion (1517) against the authority of the church. Protestantism arose from this split and became, with the Roman Catholic church and the Orthodox Eastern church, one of the three main branches of Christianity. In modern times, especially since the 1920s, adherents of the ecumenical movement have been active in attempting to overcome the differences that separate these three branches. (See also Roman Catholic church; Protestantism; Reformation; Orthodox Eastern church; names of sects.)

Christian Science ⟨prop. Church of Christ, Scientist⟩ Religion founded (1879) by M. Eddy. Christian Scientists believe the evils of the material world, such as illness, sin, and death, are mere illusions that can be overcome by faith alone. Thus, Christian Scientists have frequently gained notoriety by refusing medical help. M. Eddy experienced a miraculous healing herself (1866), and organized the mother church in Boston (1892). Since then the faith has spread to many countries around the world.

Christian Socialism Socioreligious movement that began in mid-19th-cent. England. A reaction against the social inequities of capitalism, Christian Socialists were more concerned about the sufferings of the poor in an industrial society than about expropriation of privately owned factories and property. An outgrowth of the failed Chartism movement, this form of socialism spawned a number of workingmen's associations, cooperative ventures, and some reforms during the 1850s. By the late 19th cent., the movement had spread to the US and Germany. In Germany, Christian Socialist parties became involved in anti-Semitic activities and were officially condemned there (1894).

Christie, Agatha 1890–1976. English writer, one of the most successful mystery writers of all time. Among her works are Ten Little Indians, The Mousetrap, and Witness for the Prosecution.

Christina 1626–89. Queen of Sweden (1632–54), successor to her father, Gustavus II. An eccentric woman, she abdicated in favor of her cousin Charles X (1654). She was unsuccessful in her attempt to regain the crown after his death in 1660.

Christophe, Henri 1767–1820. Haitian rebel and ruler. Born a slave, he joined the rebellion against French rule led by F. Toussaint L'Ouverture. He became provisional leader of Haiti (1807), and then, in a subsequent civil war, formed a kingdom in the north (1811). Haiti was reunified on his death.

Christopher, Saint 3d cent. AD. Martyr whose existence is historically uncertain. He is said to have carried a small child across a river, discovering partway across that he could barely hold up the child. After the crossing, the child revealed himself as Christ, carrying the weight of the world in his hands. Christopher is the patron saint of travelers.

Chrysler's Farm, Battle of ⟨Crysler's Farm, ~⟩ Battle (Nov. 11, 1813) during the War of 1812. British forces defeated a superior American force north of the St. Lawrence and thus halted the American advance against Montreal.

Chrysostom, Saint John AD *c*347–407. Clergyman and one of the fathers of the Greek church. He became archbishop of Constantinople (AD 398–403) and, for a time, enjoyed wide influence and fame for his eloquence. Popular with the common people, he was banished to Armenia (404).

Chu Hsi, ⟨Chu Hi⟩ 1130–1200. Chinese Neo-Confucian philosopher, one of China's most important commentators on Confucianism. Until 1905, public officials were required to have a thorough knowledge of his works on Confucianism, The Four Books, to pass the civil service examination. Though he believed that human nature in reality was less than good, he taught that an individual's essential goodness could be brought out by study of the classics. His teachings were also influential in Japan and Korea.

Chuikov, Vasily Ivanovich 1900–82. Russian general. He commanded the stubborn Russian defense of Stalingrad (1942) during WW II, accepted the German surrender of Berlin (1945), and commanded Russian forces in Germany (1949–53).

Chu-ko Liang AD 181–234. Chinese soldier and government minister, credited with helping Liu Pei found the Shu Han dynasty (see Han). A military, mathematical, and organizational genius, he is celebrated in Chinese legend and literature.

Chulalongkorn ⟨Rama V⟩ 1853–1910. King of Siam (1868–1910). Educated by an English governess, he carried out the modernization programs begun by his father, King Mongkut. He abolished slavery (1874), reorganized the government to centralize authority, and managed to maintain Siam's independence by playing the British and French against each other.

Ch'un Chiu A period in Chinese history (722–481 BC), a subdivision of the Chou dynasty (q.v.). Also called the "Spring and Autumn Period," it was marked by the rise of small, quarreling states.

Chung Te ⟨Abahai⟩ 1592–1643. Manchurian ruler (from 1627) and founder of the line that became the Ch'ing dynasty (q.v.). He began the Manchu conquest of the Ming dynasty but died before it could be completed (1644).

Churches of Christ American Protestant churches, most numerous in the American South and West. Fundamentalist and evangelical, they are an offshoot of the Disciples of Christ, and broke away from that body *c*1840.

Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer 1874–1965. British statesman, author, and prime minister (1940–45, 1951–55). He is regarded as one of the outstanding figures of the 20th cent. for his brilliant leadership of Britain during WW II. A soldier and well-known journalist by the time he was elected to Parliament (1900), he was a Conservative party member throughout most of his career. He served in a variety of government posts, including first lord of the admiralty (1911–15), colonial secretary (1921–22), and chancellor of the exchequer (1924–29). Churchill recognized and spoke out against the threat of Nazi Germany and was next appointed to the admiralty (1939). He became prime minister (1940) when N. Chamberlain's government was ousted for its handling of the war with Germany. During the war years, he rallied the British to the war effort, lobbied for help from the US (then neutral), and helped write the famous Atlantic Charter (1941). Subsequently, he figured in the conferences of the Allies at Casablanca (1943), Quebec (1943), Cairo (1943), Teheran (1943), Yalta (1945), and Potsdam (1945). In the postwar years, Churchill was out of power (1945–51), though he spoke vigorously against the menace of the USSR (coining the phrase "iron curtain"). Prime minister again in 1951, he retired in 1955 but continued as a member of Parliament until 1964. He received the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1953.

Church of England ⟨Anglican Church⟩ The Christian, national church of England and mother church of the Anglican Communion. It is headed by the king (or queen) and the archbishops of the two traditional provinces, Canterbury and York. Though the church retains much of the structure and liturgy of the Roman Catholic church (it was united with Rome until the reign of Henry VIII), its doctrines are largely an outgrowth of the Protestant Reformation. These doctrines are set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, the Thirty-Nine Articles, the Catechism, and Books of Homilies. Key dates in the history of the church are:

2d–5th cents. Christianity was established in Britain during the Roman occupation.

5th cent. Christianity declined during the Anglo-Saxon invasions that followed the Romans' departure; vestiges of Christianity survived as the Celtic church.

597 Saint Augustine began conversion of the Anglo-Saxons.

601 Saint Augustine became the first archbishop of Canterbury; first cathedral built.

735 York became an archbishopric.

1066 The Norman conquest marked the beginning of closer ties with Rome, the arrival of clerics from continental Europe, and the rise of clerical influence in secular matters.

1170 Thomas à Becket martyred after long struggle with King Henry II to maintain church prerogatives against royal authority.

c1529–34 Henry VIII brought to a head a long struggle for power between the monarchy and the pope; he demanded the pope's assent to his divorce from Catherine of Aragon.

1533 Pope Clement VIII refused his sanction to the divorce and excommunicated Henry; T. Cranmer named archbishop of Canterbury.

1534 Henry obtained passage of the Act of Supremacy in Parliament; it named him head of the English church and thus created the Church of England; no doctrinal changes were made.

1536–39 Henry seized the property of the monasteries.

1539 Henry obtained passage of the Act of Six Articles to check the spread of Lutheranism; there followed persecutions of both Lutherans and Catholics, who refused to recognize Henry as head of the church.

1547 King Edward VI repealed the Act of Six Articles and introduced Protestant doctrines in the church.

1549 Book of Common Prayer was issued; revised (1552); first Act of Uniformity passed requiring clergy to conform to rites in Book of Common Prayer; other Acts of Uniformity passed 1551, 1559, and 1662.

1552 The Forty-two Articles, concerning Anglican doctrine, were published by T. Cranmer.

1555–58 Mary I briefly restored Roman Catholicism during her reign; papal authority was reestablished in England; Protestants were persecuted.

1559 Independent national church of England reestablished by Elizabeth I; Act of Supremacy reenacted.

1563 The Thirty-nine Articles of Faith (replacing the Forty-two Articles) were published to complete Elizabeth's refounding of the church; the church thus established was a compromise and incorporated largely Protestant dogma with Catholic structure and liturgy (in English); the reforms failed to satisfy Protestant extremists and gave added impetus to such dissenters as Nonconformists, Puritans, Separatists, Brownists, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists.

1604 Hampton Court Conference (q.v.) held.

1611 King James (authorized) version of the Bible was completed.

1625–49 Reign of Charles I; Charles, an absolutist, aroused opposition among Puritans and other groups by his high-handed measures, intended to bring about religious uniformity; his attempt to impose episcopacy led to the Solemn League and Covenant (q.v.) in Scotland (1638).

1642–49 English Civil War—political and religious struggle between Royalists (Anglicans and Catholics) and Parliamentarians (Puritans and Presbyterians).

1649–60 Victorious Puritan Parliamentarians established the Commonwealth and Protectorate (q.v.); the Church of England was disestablished for a time.

1660 Charles II restored to the throne; the reaction against Puritanism began.

1661 Modern version of the Book of Common Prayer adopted.

1661–65 Clarendon Codes, harsh measures to promote uniformity with the Church of England, were enacted, giving new impetus to the Nonconformists.

1688 King James II attempted to reestablish Catholicism in England; the archbishop of Canterbury refused to read James's order of toleration in all churches; James was deposed and replaced by the Protestants, William and Mary, in the Glorious Revolution (1688).

1689 English Bill of Rights was passed, with measure excluding Catholics from the monarchy.

1701 Act of Settlement, stipulating that the monarch must belong to the Church of England, was passed.

1717 Bangorian Controversy began (during George I's reign).

c1729 Movement that resulted in the Methodist Church was begun by J. Wesley; the movement arose amid a new concern for evangelicalism in the Church of England (18th cent.)

1799 Anglican Church Missionary Society, an outgrowth of evangelicalism, was founded.

1829 Catholic Emancipation Act passed, ending long-standing restrictions on Catholics.

c1833 Rise of the Oxford Movement, which sought a return to Roman Catholic ritual and dogma in the Anglican church.

20th cent. Rise of the ecumenical movement.

1919 Church Assembly, a church legislative body, was formed.

1982 Pope John Paul II visited Britain; meetings with Anglican church leaders marked significant step in effort to reestablish ties between the English church and Rome.

Church of Scotland National church (Presbyterian) of Scotland. Movement toward a Protestant national church in Scotland began (1557) with the signing of the First Covenant by Scottish nobles. Under the guidance of J. Knox, the movement came under Calvinist influence, and Knox figured in the drafting (1560) of the Book of Discipline, which outlined the church's Presbyterian organization. The church's legal position was ratified (1592) by Parliament, but James VI (after 1603, English king James I) and his successors in Scotland sought to reimpose the episcopacy. This led to the resistance by the Covenanters (q.v.) during the 17th cent. Existence of the church was guaranteed (1707) by the union of England and Scotland. The church suffered a number of secessionist movements, notably the Free Church of Scotland (1843) and the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland (1847), which merged (1900) into the United Free Church of Scotland. The latter rejoined the Church of Scotland in 1929.

Church of the New Jerusalem ⟨New Church⟩ Religious society formed by the followers of E. Swedenborg. The first church appeared in England in 1788. Followers believe in achieving self-realization through an understanding of Swedenborg's commentaries on the Scriptures.

churrigueresque Relating to a Spanish architectural style. Introduced by Charles II's royal architect, Don José Churriguera (1650–1723), it was a highly ornate adaptation of Renaissance and baroque styles.

Chu Teh 1886–1976. Leading Chinese Communist general. He participated in the Chinese Revolution of 1911, and, following the break between Nationalists and Communists (1927), he joined with Mao Tse-tung to form the Communist army. He became general of all Communist forces (1931–54) and, after the Communist victory in China (1949), served in high government posts.

Cicero, Marcus Tullius ⟨Tully⟩ 106–43 BC. Great Roman orator, statesman, philosopher, and man of letters. His orations, especially the Orations Against Catiline and the Philippics, are important in the study of Latin. An ardent republican, he was elected consul (63 BC) and exposed the famous Conspiracy of Catiline (63 BC). He was exiled (58) for executions he ordered as a result of the conspiracy, and was then recalled (57). He was a staunch defender of the republic during the Roman Civil Wars and opposed J. Caesar. After Caesar's assassination, he delivered the famous Philippics (44–43) against his enemy, M. Antony. He was put to death (43) by Octavian at Antony's insistence.

Ciceronian Period Latin literary period (70–43 BC) It marked the first great stage of Latin literature and was greatly influenced by the technique and style of Cicero. It was followed by the Augustan Age (q.v.).

Cid, the ⟨El Cid⟩ ⟨Cid Campeador⟩ *c*1040–99. Spanish soldier and hero. His real name was Rodrigo Díaz de Vivar. He fought valiantly in wars between the kingdoms of Castile and Navarre but was banished from Castile (1081). Thereafter, he was a soldier of fortune under the Moors of Saragossa and had many adventures. He conquered Valencia (1094) and ruled it until his death.

Cimabue, Giovanni *d. c*1302. Italian painter. His paintings, mostly on religious themes, reflect the change in Italian medieval painting from the once-dominant formal Byzantine style to the more natural style of later artists. He is said to have been Giotto's teacher.

Cimber, Lucius Tillius Roman conspirator, one of J. Caesar's assassins (44 BC). He distracted Caesar with a petition and then held him during the stabbing.

Cimbri Germanic tribe that invaded Rome (2d cent. BC) after being forced out of their homelands to the north. They were victorious in several engagements before being annihilated by Marius and Q. Catulus at Campi Raudii (101 BC).

Cimmerians Ancient people of the northern Black Sea region who flourished briefly in the 7th cent. BC. Mentioned by Homer, they were apparently forced (late 8th cent.) southward by the Scythians into what is now Turkey. There they conquered Phrygia and invaded Lydia (7th cent.). Defeated decisively by the Lydians late in the 7th cent., they disappeared from history.

Cimon d. 449 BC. Athenian soldier-statesman, noted for his victories against the Persians. He distinguished himself at the Battle of Salamis (480 BC). As commander of Athenian forces, he won a great victory over the Persians at Eurymedon River (466), in which he defeated both their naval and land forces. His popularity declined when he became leader of the pro-Spartan faction in Athens.

Cincinnatus fl. 5th cent. BC. Roman hero, consul (460 BC) and dictator (458 BC). According to traditional accounts, he was made dictator to rescue the Roman army from annihilation by the Aequi, and, once that was accomplished, gave up his power to return to farming.

Cinna, Lucius Cornelius d. 84 BC. Roman consul (87–84 BC) and a leader of the popular party. Elected consul under L. Sulla, he tried to rescind some of Sulla's reforms after Sulla left to fight Mithridates VI in the east. With Marius, he overcame Sulla's supporters at Rome and massacred them. He became sole consul on Marius' death (86 BC), and was murdered by his soldiers shortly before Sulla's return.

Cinq-Mars, Henri Coiffier, marquis de 1620–42. French courtier and conspirator in the court of Louis XIII. Ambitious for power, he plotted against Louis' minister, Cardinal Richelieu. One plan, which involved a secret pact with Spain, was uncovered and ended with his execution.

Cinque Ports Confederation (11th–15th cents.) of English port cities located on the English Channel. The confederation provided ships and personnel to the crown for defense of England. Its importance declined rapidly after the formation of the royal navy (late 15th cent.) under Henry VII. The original five ports were: Hastings, New Romney, Hythe, Dover, and Sandwich.

Ciompi, Revolt of the Revolt (1378) by lower-class workingmen (ciompi) in Florence. Government in Florence was dominated by the major guilds, which had successfully excluded such lesser guilds as that of the wool workers. Inequities and economic hardships imposed by this system sparked the revolt (July, 1378). It resulted in formation of a short-lived government in which all guilds were represented. Major guilds regained control by 1382.

Circe Sorceress in Greek mythology. Daughter of Helios, she lured sailors to her island and changed them into animals. Odysseus forced her to change his sailors back into human form.

Cisalpine Republic Republic in north Italy set up (1797) and controlled by Napoleon. It included Milan, Modena, Parma, Bologna, Ferrara, Romagna, and later Venetia. It became Napoleon's kingdom of Italy (1805), and was dissolved by the Congress of Vienna (1815).

Cistercians Order of Roman Catholic monks founded (1098) in France by Saint Robert. An outgrowth of the Benedictine order, the Cistercians were reformers. They rebelled against the laxity that had overtaken the Benedictine order by returning to the strict, ascetic life of the first Benedictines. Both Saint Stephen Harding and Saint Bernard of Clairvaux influenced the development of the order, the latter being largely responsible for its rapid spread during the 12th cent. By the 14th cent., however, it weakened and declined, and this set the stage for later reform movements in the order, notably by the Trappists. Begun (1664) at La Trappe, France, this movement fostered still stricter observance of the ascetic life and became a permanent division of the Cistercian order.

city-state ⟨Greek polis⟩ A city and surrounding lands governed as an autonomous state by its citizens. Though city-states appeared in other civilizations, they were especially important in the history of ancient Greece. Such city-states as Athens, Sparta, and Thebes came to dominate whole regions of Greece. For purposes of mutual defense, the city-states formed confederacies, such as the Delian and Peloponnesian leagues. Ultimately, however, the city-states and their leagues were no match for the centralized power of the Macedonian and Roman empires.

civilistas South American political parties. Active in Peru and Brazil (late 19th-early 20th cents.), the civilistas were primarily made up of merchants, bankers, and landowners who opposed control of their governments by the military. The antimilitary policies of the civilistas were partly responsible for Peru's defeat in the War of the Pacific (1879–84).

Civil Rights Act Name of several US laws. 1. Passed (1866) over Pres. A. Johnson's veto, the act gave Negroes full rights as citizens and was designed to counter Black Codes enacted by Southern states after the Civil War. The constitutionality of the act was questioned, however. Once its provisions had been confirmed by passage of the 14th Amendment, Congress reenacted the bill (1870). 2. Passed (1871) to enforce the 14th and 15th Amendments, particularly in regard to Ku Klux Klan terrorism and discrimination in public establishments. It was ruled (1883) unconstitutional in part. 3. Passed (1875) to require equal accommodations in public facilities. It was struck down (1883). 4. Passed (1957) to establish a civil rights commission to investigate infringements of Negro voting rights. 5. Passed (1964) to end discrimination of all kinds, including religious and sex discrimination. It was a sweeping measure, though it was used first to attain civil rights for blacks. It forbade discrimination in public places, schools, and employment. 6. Passed (1968) to end housing discrimination.

civil rights movement US social reform movement of the late 1950s and early 1960s that secured wide-ranging legal rights for American blacks (and other minorities). Among the federal acts passed as a result of this movement were the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964, banning discrimination in employment, schools, and public accommodations; the 1965 Voting Rights Act, guaranteeing blacks the right to vote; and the 1968 housing bill, banning discrimination in housing. After the American Civil War and emancipation from slavery, blacks became the object of discriminatory laws (Jim Crow laws, q.v.) and practices. The Jim Crow laws created separate white and black societies in the South and elsewhere, despite passage of the 13th, 14th, and 15th constitutional amendments and the civil rights acts of the Reconstruction period. The Supreme Court established the principle of separate but equal facilities by its decision in Plessy vs. Ferguson (1896). The NAACP later pressed the cause of black civil rights but the basic principle of "separate but equal" stood until the 1950s, when the Supreme Court banned school segregation in its decision on Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka (1954). The popular civil rights movement began a year later after a black woman, Mrs. Rosa Parks, refused to move to the back of a bus in Montgomery, Alabama (Dec. 5, 1955). Out of this incident came a nonviolent protest movement against discrimination, organized by such groups as Rev. Dr. M. L. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). Sit-ins, freedom rides, and other nonviolent protests culminated (1963) in the March on Washington (q.v.). In subsequent years these protests, and the commitment of presidents J. F. Kennedy and L. Johnson to civil rights, led to passage of the sweeping civil rights legislation of the 1960s. As this legislation was being passed, however, splits developed within the civil rights movement and began the period of its decline. By 1966 advocates of black power came to the fore to challenge the concepts of nonviolence and racial harmony that had been so important in rallying support among blacks and whites for civil rights. Rioting by blacks in major cities across the country, the assassination of Dr. King (Apr. 4, 1968), and the fanatical militancy of such splinter groups as the Black Panthers ended the organized civil rights movement by the close of the 1960s.

Clarendon Code Four laws enacted (1661–65) during the reign of King Charles II to suppress Nonconformists and other sects dissenting from the established (Anglican) Church of England. The laws were passed shortly after Charles's restoration, during the ministry of E. Hyde, 1st earl of Clarendon, though he opposed them. The acts were: Corporation Act (1661), requiring all municipal officers to be Anglican; the Act of Uniformity (1662), requiring all clergymen to accept and use the Anglican Book of Common Prayer; the Conventicle Act (1664), forbidding assembly (of more than five) for worship of faiths other than Anglican; and the Five-Mile Act (1665), forbidding Nonconformists to come within five miles of any town. Charles attempted unsuccessfully to moderate the laws by his declarations of indulgence (1662, 1672).

Clark, George Rogers 1752–1818. American Revolutionary war commander. Clark commanded volunteer units in Kentucky and environs (the Old Northwest) during the American Revolution (1775–83) and secured this frontier against British and Indian attacks. He was a brother of W. Clark.

Clark, Mark Wayne 1896–. American general. He was Fifth Army Commander in North Africa and Italy (1943–44) during WW II and commander of UN troops in Korea (1952–53).

Clark, William 1770–1838. American explorer. With his friend, M. Lewis, he undertook a three-year journey of exploration (1804–06) through the newly acquired lands of the Louisiana Purchase to the Pacific Northwest. The maps and journals compiled by Lewis and Clark contributed greatly to knowledge of the region.

Clarke, John 1609–76. English-born preacher, one of the founders of Rhode Island. Driven out of Massachusetts Bay colony for siding with A. Hutchinson and the antinomianism (q.v.) cause, he helped found Portsmouth (1638) and Newport (1639). With R. Williams, he returned to England and helped secure a royal charter for Rhode Island.

classical 1. In music, the period from *c*1750 to *c*1820. The classic period was presaged by the decline of baroque forms and the appearance of rococo, or preclassical compositions, in the early 18th cent. The classic period saw the development of the sonata form, the rise of instrumental over vocal music, and evolution of the characteristic classical mediums: the symphony, string quartet, instrumental sonata, and solo concerto. Among the many notable composers of this period are W. Mozart, F. Haydn and L. Beethoven. 2. In literature, the body of poetic, dramatic, and prose works written by ancient Greeks and Romans. The classic period in Greece ranges from about the 6th cent. to the 4th cent. BC, and in Rome from the 1st cent. BC to 2nd cent. AD.

classical revival See Neoclassicism classicism Term applied to the imitation of the aesthetic values (such as simplicity, symmetry, and harmony of form) found in the art, architecture, and literature of ancient Greece and Rome. Revival of these values began during the Renaissance and influenced many artists, among them Michelangelo and Raphael. Classicism led to the formation of the 16th-cent. French literary group the Pléiade, and influenced such 16th- and 17th-cent. English writers as J. Dryden and A. Pope. The Napoleonic age saw the growth of classical imitation in the classical revival. Classicism also influenced art and architecture in continental Europe, England, and the US in the 19th cent. It continues to be a force in 20th-cent. architecture and the arts.

Claudian ⟨Claudianus⟩ d. 408? Alexandrian-born Latin poet. Claudian was the last of the great Latin classic poets. The Rape of Prosperine is one of his best-known epic poems.

Claudianus See Claudian

Claudius I ⟨Germanicus, Tiberius Claudius Drusus Nero⟩ 10 BC–AD 54. Roman emperor (AD 41–54), proclaimed successor to Caligula. Not considered a strong ruler, he nevertheless added Mauretania (AD 41–42) and Britain (after AD 43) to the Roman Empire.

Claudius II ⟨Claudius, Marcus Aurelius⟩ AD 214–270. Roman emperor (AD 268–270), successor to Galenius. He led Roman forces in an important victory over invading Goths at Naissus (AD 269).

Claudius, Marcus Aurelius See Claudius II

Clausewitz, Karl von 1780–1831. Prussian general and noted writer on military strategy. His famous book On War advocated "total warfare" against every possible enemy target, including civilians and private property.

Clausius, Rudolf Julius Emmanuel 1822–88. A German mathematical physicist. He is considered a pioneer in thermodynamics and introduced the concept of entropy.

Clay, Henry 1777–1852. American statesman. Three times an unsuccessful presidential candidate (1824, 1832, 1844), he was a congressman from Kentucky (1811–14, 1815–21, 1823–25), secretary of state (1825–29), and Whig party senator (1831–42, 1849–52). As a congressman he formulated his American System (q.v.), helped pass the Missouri Compromise (1820), and was instrumental in J. Q. Adams' election as president. He helped end the Nullification Controversy by the Compromise Tariff of 1833, and, by the Compromise of 1850, tried to prevent civil war.

Clayton, John M. See Clayton-Bulwer Treaty

Clayton Antitrust Act US bill passed (1914) to supplement the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act (1890). It specified as antitrust violations corporate practices not covered in the previous bill, including rebates, interlocking directorates, intercorporate stock holdings, and price discrimination. The act exempted labor and agricultural organizations from the provisions and also included restrictions on the use of injunctions in labor disputes.

Clayton-Bulwer Treaty Treaty signed (1850) by the US and Britain guaranteeing that neither country would attempt to dominate or colonize the territories of Central America. Negotiated by US secretary of state John M. Clayton (1796–1856) and British diplomat Sir Henry Bulwer (1801–72), the treaty was designed to maintain the neutrality of a proposed canal (later the Panama Canal) through the Central American isthmus. The treaty was both vague and highly controversial, however, and was finally superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty (1901), which made possible a US-controlled canal.

Clear Grits Political faction (1848–51) in western Canada (now Ontario). Followers demanded legislative representation by population and rejected pro-Catholic policies on the Clergy Reserves (q.v.). G. Brown was a leading figure in the party, which eventually merged with other groups to form the Liberal party.

Cleisthenes ⟨Clisthenes⟩ fl. 6th cent. BC. Athenian statesman who established democracy in Athens. A member of the politically active Alcmaeonidae family, he was chief archon in 525–524 BC. In 508 BC, he took advantage of a political crisis over Sparta to institute his reforms, which broke the power of the landed aristocrats and the tribes. A principal feature of his new system was the establishment of political districts (demes) by region rather than by social status. He is said to have instituted the practice of ostracism.

Clemenceau, Georges 1841–1929. French premier (1906–09, 1917–20). Known as "the Tiger," he rallied French forces in WW I and thereby played an important role in the Allied victory. He took part in founding the French Third Republic (1870), and later was implicated in the Panama Scandal. His first government was ousted over his handling of a miners' strike. His second government fell because he failed to press for harsh terms from Germany in negotiations for the Treaty of Versailles (1919).

Clemens, Samuel Langhorne See Twain, Mark

Clement I, Saint ⟨Clement of Rome⟩ AD 30?–100? Pope (AD 90–99 or 88?–97) and first apostolic father. One of the earliest popes, Clement is reputed to have written the Epistle to the Corinthians contained in the New Testament.

Clement III See Guibert of Ravenna

Clement V ⟨Got, Bertrand de⟩ 1264–1314. French-born pope (1305–14). Clement moved the papacy from Rome to Avignon, France, and thus began the Babylonian captivity (q.v.). Under pressure from French king Philip IV, he called the Council of Vienne (1311) and dissolved (1312) the Knights Templars (q.v.).

Clement VI ⟨Roger, Pierre⟩ 1291–1352. French-born pope (1342–52) at Avignon, France. Clement's reign was marked by the outbreak of the Black Plague, and he is remembered for his attempts to protect Jews, then being accused of causing the plague.

Clement VII (antipope) See Robert of Geneva

Clement VII ⟨Medici, Giulio de⟩ 1478–1534. Italian-born pope (1523–34). Clement was caught in the power struggle between French king Francis I and Holy Roman Emperor Charles V. In 1527, Charles invaded Italy, sacked Rome, and imprisoned Clement. Clement also refused (*c*1527) Henry VIII his divorce from Catherine of Aragon, and thus set the stage for the break between the English church and Rome.

Clement VIII ⟨Aldobrandini, Ippolito⟩ 1536–1605. Italian-born pope (1592–1605). Clement absolved French king Henry IV of excommunication after he rejected Protestantism (1593) and moderated the influence of the Spanish kings on the church.

Clement XI ⟨Albani, Giovanni Francesco⟩ 1649–1721. Italian-born pope (1700–21). Clement condemned Jansenism and, embroiled in the struggle for the Spanish throne, failed to avert the War of Spanish Succession (1701–14).

Clement XIV ⟨Ganganelli, Lorenzo⟩ 1705–74. Italian-born pope (1769–74). To avoid schism with Spain and France, he dissolved (1773) the Society of Jesus (Jesuits), then regarded by the kings as a threat to their power.

Clement, Jacques 1567–89. French monk, a Dominican. Clement assassinated (1589) French king Henry III for choosing a Protestant as his successor.

Clement of Alexandria d. AD *c*215. Greek Christian theologian and teacher at the Alexandrian School. He was the teacher of the Christian philosopher Origen and a prolific writer. He fled Alexandria during the persecution of Christians under Severus.

Clement of Rome See Clement I, Saint

Cleomenes I *d. c*489 BC. King of Sparta (*c*519–491 BC). He is remembered for his interference in Athenian politics (notably his attempt to oust the Athenian leader Cleisthenes to undo his democratic reforms) and for his cruelty in battle against Argos (*c*494), during which some 6,000 enemy soldiers were slaughtered.

Cleomenes III d. 219 BC. King of Sparta (*c*235–221 BC). He established the supreme authority of the king by abolishing the Spartan ephorate (five elected magistrates) and enacted other reforms. He was successful in warfare against the Achaean League (227–222) until the league allied itself with Macedon. His subsequent defeat (222) by Antigonus III at Sellasia marked the fall of Sparta to the Macedonians.

Cleon d. 422 BC. Athenian politician and soldier. Cleon began his career by opposing Pericles and is generally remembered as a demagogue. He distinguished himself in battles against the Spartans during the Peloponnesian Wars (431–404 BC) and was killed in battle.

Cleopatra 69–30 BC. Queen of Egypt (51–49, 48–30 BC), noted beauty celebrated for her love affairs with J. Caesar and M. Antony. Wedded by custom to her brother, Ptolemy XIII, she was ousted from power by him (49). Caesar, then pursuing Pompey in Egypt, fell in love with her and restored her to power (48 BC). With Ptolemy XIII dead, she nominally married another brother, Ptolemy XIV, and became Caesar's mistress, bore him a son, Cesarion, and lived with Caesar at Rome (from 46) until his assassination (44). She then met and entranced Antony (42) and they lived together until 40, when Antony was forced to return to Rome and marry the sister of Octavian (later Augustus). Cleopatra by this time had had twin children by Antony. Antony and Cleopatra again became lovers in 36 and their affair was both dissolute and unpopular in Rome. Octavian at last sent an army to destroy Antony and Cleopatra. Octavian was victorious at the Battle of Actium (31) and the two lovers fled to Alexandria. There, with Octavian approaching, she is said to have induced Antony to commit suicide. She then tried to captivate Octavian and, seeing he was unmoved and intended to display her in his triumph at Rome, killed herself.

Cleopatra's Needles Two red granite Egyptian obelisks, marked with hieroglyphics and dating from *c*1500 BC. They stood first in Heliopolis and then were moved (*c*14 BC) to Alexandria. Today one stands in London, the other in New York City.

Clergy Reserves Canadian land grants to the church. The British Constitutional Act (1791) specified that land be set aside for Protestant clergy. From the early 19th cent., however, disposition of the lands was disputed. The Anglican Protestant churches claimed all the land for themselves, while other denominations contested the claim. The land was finally redesignated for secular use (1854) and large cash payments were made to the churches (including the Roman Catholic church).

Clermont See Fulton, Robert

Clermont, Council of Church council (1095, at Clermont, France), in which Pope Urban II preached the First Crusade. The Byzantine Empire was at that time being reduced by Muslim conquests and Emperor Alexis I requested aid from the pope. At the council Urban II urged French knights to take up the cause, citing Muslim persecutions, the Muslim capture of the Holy Land, and the possible material gain of such a venture. The response was enthusiastic and Raymond IV accepted the first of the crosses distributed by Urban.

Cleveland US port city (pop. 573,800) on Lake Erie in Ohio. Once part of the Western Reserve, Cleveland was planned in 1796 and incorporated as a village in 1814. It expanded rapidly in the 1820s as the Erie and Ohio canals opened important water routes and it soon became a major transportation and industrial center.

Cleveland, Stephen Grover 1837–1908. (nicknamed the Great Obstructionist) 22d and 24th US president (1885–89, 1893–97), successor to C. Arthur, B. Harrison. A former governor of New York and a reform Democrat, he was elected to his first term amid a popular movement to end corrupt government. As president, he opposed political bosses, fought "pork barrel" legislation and implemented the Pendleton Civil Service Act of 1883. The fight for lower tariffs, however, loomed as the major issue of his first administration. He subsequently lost the election (1888) to Harrison over the issue. Reelected (1892) when the Populist party split the vote, his second administration was devoted largely to ending the economic depression that resulted from the Panic of 1893 (q.v.). During his second term, Cleveland failed to prevent passage of the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Act (1894, raising tariffs), forced repeal of the Sherman Silver Purchase Act (1893), used federal powers to break the Pullman Strike (1894), became involved in the Venezuela Boundary Dispute (q.v.), and expanded powers claimed under the Monroe Doctrine as a result of it. Continuing economic problems and the rising power of the free-silver movement, resulted in his failure to win renomination (1896).

Cleves, Anne of See Anne of Cleves

Clifford of Chudleigh, Thomas Clifford, 1st Baron 1630–73. English statesman. A Catholic member of the Cabal ministry under Charles II, he was forced to resign when the Test Act (1673) banned Catholics from holding office.

Clinton, George 1739–1812. American statesman and vice-president (1805–1812), Clinton served as first governor of New York (1777–95) and first proposed the Erie Canal. He died during his (second) term as vice-president, under J. Madison.

Clinton, Sir Henry 1738?–95. British general during the American Revolution (1775–83). He served under Gen. W. Howe early in the war, then succeeded him as British commander (1778–81). He evacuated Philadelphia (1778) and later captured Charleston (1780), but his failure to provide timely support for Gen. C. Cornwallis in the Yorktown Campaign (q.v.) was blamed for the final British defeat in the war. He resigned his command (1781) after Cornwallis surrendered in the South.

Cold Harbor, Battle of Battle (June 1–12, 1864) during the American Civil War (1861–65). Fought during Gen. U. Grant's drive toward Richmond, the battle pitted over 100,000 Union soldiers against some 59,000 Confederates, led by Gen. R. E. Lee. The Confederates stopped the Union advance in stiff fighting and finally forced Grant to turn away from Richmond toward Petersburg.

Cold War Name for the international rivalry that developed between the US and the USSR after WW II. The Cold War period saw the division of the world into sharply defined Western and Communist spheres of influence, domination of world politics by the US and USSR as superpowers, East-West political and propaganda struggles, the continuing threat of nuclear war (from the 1950s), and outbreaks of limited warfare between pro-Western and pro-Communist forces. Suspicions about Stalin's designs for expansion of the Communist world were aroused after WW II by his transformation of Soviet-occupied Eastern Europe into a network of Communist satellite states. In a famous speech (Mar. 15, 1946) at Fulton, Missouri, former British prime minister W. Churchill pointed to the "iron curtain" that had descended across Europe. The following year US President H. Truman announced the Truman Doctrine (Mar. 12, 1947) to counter threatened Communist takeovers in Greece and Turkey. This was followed by announcement of the Marshall Plan to provide for the recovery of war-torn Europe and to counter Communist expansionism there. The last years of the 1940s were marked by the US-Soviet confrontation in the Berlin blockade and airlift (from 1948), formation of NATO (1949), and the Communist takeover in China (1949). The 1950s saw increased Communist activity in Southeast Asia, the Korean War, formation of the Communist Warsaw Pact (1955), a continuing US policy of "containing" Communism, the rise of the nuclear arms race and the threat of "massive retaliation." At the same time, however, possibilities of a "thaw" in Cold War tensions were seen in the death of Soviet leader J. Stalin (1953), N. Khrushchev's de-Stalinization policy, the limited successes of the Geneva Summit Conference (1955), and the exchange of official visits in 1959 (Vice-President R. Nixon to USSR; Khrushchev to US). The early 1960s brought renewed tensions, however. The building of the Berlin Wall (1961) and the Cuban Missile Crisis temporarily halted moves toward better East-West relations. But a trend of more far-reaching importance in the 1960s was the breakup of rigid divisions between pro-West and Communist-bloc countries. The Sino-Soviet split (1960) led to a deep rift in the Communist bloc (later exploited by the US). The costly and unsuccessful Vietnam War not only cost the US considerable power and prestige but it also led to divisions among Western nations. The 1970s saw a turning away from the hard-line divisions of the Cold War period in favor of a new policy of détente (q.v.). The US opened relations with China, increased trade and other economic ties with the USSR, and entered into nuclear arms limitation talks. Policies of détente by no means eliminated mistrust and competition between the superpowers, however. Events of the late 1970s and early 1980s, such as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the crisis over Solidarity in Poland, and the movement for a military defense buildup in the US produced a marked "chill" in US–Soviet relations.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 1772–1834. A leading English romantic poet and critic. Once called a "damaged archangel" by C. Lamb, Coleridge wrote his most important poems during his friendship with W. Wordsworth (1797–*c*1802). Together they published (1798) Lyrical Ballads, an important work in the English romantic movement which contained Coleridge's famous "Rime of the Ancient Mariner." Coleridge also wrote during this period the poems "Kubla Khan," "Christabel," and "Dejection: An Ode." Addicted to opium by 1800, he moved to London (1816), where the habit was brought under control and he completed his notable Biographia Literaria.

Colet, John 1467?–1519. British theologian. A leading humanist and scholar, he influenced such scholars as D. Erasmus and T. More, and founded (1509) St. Paul's school in London.

Colette 1873–1954. French novelist, whose works are noted for their minute observation and descriptive intensity. Among her works is the novel Gigi.

Coligny, Gaspard de 1519–72. Soldier and prominent French Huguenot. Fearful of Coligny's influence over the young King Charles IX, Catherine de Médicis instigated his murder in the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre.

Cologne City (pop. 976,800) in West Germany on the Rhine River. Made a Roman colony (AD 50) by the emperor Claudius, it was made an archdiocese by Charlemagne and flourished as a member of the Hanseatic League. After a period of decline it was annexed to Prussia (1815) and rose to become a major commercial and cultural center. Cologne was heavily damaged during WW II.

Colombia Republic located in northwestern South America. Its capital is Bogotá. Colombia's coast was first explored (1502) by C. Columbus and Spanish settlements were established in the area soon after. In the early 18th cent. the area, known as New Granada, was incorporated into the larger viceroyalty of New Granada and in 1819 was liberated from Spanish rule by S. Bolívar's victory at Boyacá. Much of Colombia's modern history has been marked by conflict between conservative and liberal factions, which have sought to determine the nation's political character. Key dates in the history of Colombia include:

1538 G. Jiménez de Quesada conquered Colombia for Spain; founded Bogotá.

EARLY 16TH CENT. Audencia of New Granada, including area of modern Colombia, established.

1717–39 New Granada joined with areas later forming modern Ecuador, Panama, and Venezuela to form viceroyalty of New Granada.

1780–81 Revolt of the comuneros presaged independence movement.

1810 Uprising in Bogotá (July 20); marked beginning of New Granada's war for independence.

1819 S. Bolívar's victory (Aug. 7) in the Battle of Boyacá secured the independence of New Granada Audencia from Spanish rule.

1819 New nation of Greater Colombia (Gran Colombia) proclaimed; included New Granada, Ecuador (after 1822), Panama, and Venezuela.

1821 New Constitution adopted; Bolívar became first president of Greater Colombia.

1831 Greater Colombia dissolved (1830); New Granada, including area of modern Panama, became republic of New Granada; struggle began between conservatives, favoring strong central government and Roman Catholic church, and liberals, favoring federalism and anticlericalism.

1851–52 Slavery abolished.

1858 Provinces of New Granada reorganized as independent states within confederation known as Granadina.

1863 Civil war between liberal and conservative factions broke out (1861); victorious liberals formed United States of Colombia.

1867–80 Period of civil wars between liberal and conservative factions; conflict ended by election (1880) of R. Núñez, a moderate, as president and formation of a liberal-conservative coalition.

1885 Liberal uprising against federal government defeated.

1886 Republic of Colombia established; abolished sovereign states in favor of central government; Roman Catholic church made state church.

1899–1902 Colombia plunged into civil war; conservative faction regained power after three years of conflict.

1903 Hay-Herrán Treaty negotiated to establish US control over what was to become the Panama Canal Zone; treaty rejected by Colombian Congress.

1903 Uprising in Panama; US sent troops to aid Panamanians against Colombia; US recognized Panamanian independence and soon after completed treaty with Panamanians for Panama Canal.

1914 Thomson-Urrutia Treaty negotiated; Colombia recognized Panamanian independence and received special privileges in the Canal Zone and an indemnity from the US.

1930 Liberals in power for the first time in over two decades; held presidency until 1946 though reform programs failed to solve the social and economic problems.

1941 WW II; Colombia joined the Allies.

1948 Liberal leader Jorge Eliécer Gaitán assassinated in Bogotá (Apr. 9); led to violent conflict in Bogotá and elsewhere in Colombia.

1948–58 La Violencia; violence in Bogotá marked the beginning of period of civil unrest and repressive rule that resulted in the deaths of some 200,000 persons.

1950 Liberal party withdrew from presidential election (1949); conservative Laureano Gómez became president.

1953 G. Rojas Pinilla seized power in military coup.

1957 Military junta ousted Rojas Pinilla, ending his brutal and corrupt reign as dictator.

1957 National Front, a liberal-conservative coalition, formed; coalition formed to end unrest and was to remain in effect until 1974 with conservative and liberal presidents alternating every four years (from 1958).

1958 Alberto Lleras Camargo elected National Front president.

1966–70 National Front president Carlos Lleras Restrepo in office; his highly successful administration put through political reforms and greatly improved the economy.

1974–78 Liberal President Alfonso López Michelsen in office following first free elections in over 20 years.

1978 Liberal President Julio César Turbay Ayala in office.

1981 Government captured or killed top leaders of M-19 urban guerrilla group; offer of amnesty for followers failed.

1982 Belisario Betancur Cuartas, a Conservative, in office as president.

colonialism Policy or program by which a state seeks political or economic control over other territories. In ancient times the Phoenicians, Greeks, and Romans all established colonies to expand their trade and culture, often populating them with their own citizens. In medieval times, especially the 13th cent., Italian city-states such as Venice and Genoa followed the same pattern. During the 15th to 17th cents., Portugal, Spain, England, France, and the Netherlands all established extensive colonial empires, both in the New World and in the East. By the 18th cent., however, Britain had acquired control of India, Canada, and other territories and, despite loss of the American colonies, ranked as the greatest European colonial power. France lost one colonial empire in the 18th-cent. colonial wars with Britain and acquired another empire in Africa in the 19th cent. The efforts of Japan, Germany, and Italy to become colonial powers in the late 19th and early 20th cents. contributed to the outbreak of both WW I and WW II. In the Spanish-American War, the US acquired Caribbean territories and the Philippines. The breakup of the Spanish and Portuguese empires in South America began in the early 19th cent., when most colonies there won independence. The main period of decolonization, however, began after WW I, when colonial rule came to be considered temporary and necessary only for the development of the colony. Decolonization proceded rapidly after WW II, when colonial empires broke up and former colonies gained independence. (See also imperialism.)

Colorado West central state of the US (pop. 2,888,800), the 38th state. The territory was first explored and claimed by the Spanish (18th cent.) and the French. The eastern, French portion, was sold to the US with the Louisiana Purchase (1803), and the rest was ceded by Mexico in the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (1848). Settlers came in great numbers with the discovery of gold at Cherry Creek (1858). Colorado became a territory (1861), and statehood was granted in 1876.

Colosseum (Coliseum) Amphitheater situated in Rome, the scene of gladiatorial combat and, by tradition, the arena for Christian martyrdom. Completed in AD 80, it could seat about 50,000.

Colossus of Rhodes Massive bronze statue of the sun god Helios that stood in the harbor of Rhodes (Greece) (280–*c*225 BC). One of Seven Wonders of the World, it was destroyed by an earthquake.

Colt, Samuel 1814–62. American arms developer who invented (1835) the first successful revolving-magazine pistol, the Colt revolver.

Columba, Saint (Columcille) 521–597. Irish priest and saint. He established a monastery in Scotland (563), from which he spread Christianity throughout northern Scotland.

Columbia American city (pop. 99,300), capital city of South Carolina. Founded (1786) as the state capital, Columbia was burned by Gen. W. Sherman (1865) during the Civil War. It is a major commercial and cultural center.

Columbia The world's first reusable space ship, called the "space shuttle." Despite minor malfunctions, it flew into earth orbit in both April and November, 1981, and glided back to safe landings at Edwards Air Force Base, California. Further successful flights were made March, July 1982.

Columbus American city (pop. 565,000), the capital of Ohio (from 1816). Its proximity to rich agricultural areas and sources of raw materials has contributed to its growth as a major industrial and transportation center.

Columbus, Bartholomew See Santo Domingo

Columbus, Christopher 1451–1506. Genoese navigator in the service of Spain, credited with the discovery (1492) of America. Though the Vikings are believed to have previously landed (*c*1000) in North America, it was Columbus' voyage that opened the great epoch of European exploration and colonization in the New World. Columbus became an experienced navigator while serving the Genoese and Portuguese, and his idea of sailing west to Asia was not new. It was not until 1492, however, that the Spanish monarchs Ferdinand and Isabella agreed to finance his venture. He left Spain (Aug. 3, 1492) with three ships, (the Santa Maria, Niña, and Pinta) and landed on the island of San Salvador in the Bahamas Oct. 12, just over two months later. Believing he had reached islands east of Japan, he briefly explored the Caribbean and then returned to Spain later in October. Three other voyages followed (1493, 1498, 1502), on which he discovered other Caribbean islands and reached the South American coast. Unable to administer the Spanish colony in the New World, he was removed as governor (1500), and died shortly after his disastrous fourth voyage (1502–04).

Columcille, Saint See Columba, Saint

Comanche Indians North American Indian tribe. A nomadic offshoot of the northern Shoshone Indians, they moved south and established themselves (18th cent.) as the dominant group in the southern Great Plains. Noted for their excellent horsemanship and skill in combat, they successfully defended their lands against settlers for many years. They were finally defeated, and relocated on reservations in Oklahoma after several bloody engagements in the 1870s.

Combes, Émile 1835–1921. French politician. As premier (1902–05), he brought about the separation of church and state.

Combination Acts British antiunion laws. The Combination Acts of 1799 and 1800 outlawed trade unions and punished those who joined or aided them. The laws were repealed in 1824, restored the next year, and then ignored.

Comenius, John Amos 1592–1670. Czech clergyman and noted educational reformer. He is known best for his Didactica magna, which sets forth his theory of universal education for men and women.

Commager, Henry Steele 1902–. American historian. Commager's numerous works include The American Mind, The Era of Reform, The Blue and the Gray, and Majority Rule and Minority Rights.

Committee of Public Safety French revolutionary committee, set up by the National Convention (Apr. 6, 1793) to supervise the executive bodies of the Convention. From July, 1793 to July, 1794, the Committee ruled France, mobilized the nation, and instituted the Reign of Terror under the domination of its principal member, M. Robespierre. Robespierre was overthrown July, 1794, but the Committee continued, much weakened, until establishment of the Directory (1795).

Committees of Correspondence Committees set up (1763–75) by towns, cities, and legislatures in Colonial America. Formed originally to communicate with other American colonies about opposition to British laws (Sugar Act, Stamp Act), they helped promote Colonial unity and organization of the Continental Congress. Notable among them was the Boston committee, formed (1772) by S. Adams; and the Virginia committee (formed 1773), on which T. Jefferson and P. Henry served. The Boston committee directed the Boston Tea Party (1773).

Commodus AD 161–192. Roman emperor (AD 180–192), successor to his father, Marcus Aurelius. On his father's death, Commodus cut short his military campaign against the Germans and began a life of dissipation in Rome. He was strangled by an arena wrestler named Narcissus.

Commodus, Lucius Celnolus See Verus, Lucius Aurellus

common law Term applied to the legal system prevalent in England and in other countries orginally colonized by England. It is based upon a history of judicial precedent in which court decisions were derived from common custom and reason rather than statutes.

Commonweal of Christ See Coxey's Army

commonwealth Term for an organized community that exists through consent of the governed. The term was frequently used by such 17th-cent. political theorists as T. Hobbes and J. Locke. In English history, the term "commonwealth" refers to the period (1649–60) when the English monarchy was abolished and England governed as a commonwealth. (See also Protectorate.)

Commonwealth of Nations, British See British Commonwealth of Nations

commune Term once applied to medieval towns that achieved self-government by rebellion or by charter. Communes were generally formed in areas where royal authority was weak.

Commune of Paris (Paris Commune) 1. Governmental body during the French Revolution (1789–99). Originally formed (1789) as the elected city government of Paris (under Mayor Jean Sylvain Bailly, 1736–93), the Commune became a vehicle for radical extremists in the revolution. Under the leadership of J. Hébert and P. Chaumette, it vied with the Committee of Public Safety and the National Convention for control of the revolutionary government. Executions of its leaders during the Reign of Terror weakened the Commune's power, and it was finally abolished (1794) in the Thermidorian reaction. 2. Short-lived rebel government formed (1871) in Paris. Opposed to policies of A. Thier's Government of National Defense, and particularly the humiliating peace terms accepted after the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71), Parisian workers rose in rebellion (Mar. 18, 1871). A government was formed by the revolutionaries (mostly radical republicans) and enacted some short-lived reforms. Government troops reentered the city and, in what is known as Bloody Week, crushed the revolt by May 28. More than 17,000 men, women, and children were executed and thousands of others were arrested in what amounted to reprisals against the working class by the bourgeoisie and aristocracy.

communism Political philosophy based upon the principle of collective ownership of both property and means of production. Communists view history from the perspective of class struggle and seek to establish a classless society, in its most ideal form a "dictatorship of the proletariat." The idea of a communal society, a fundamental element of communist thought, dates back to the ancient Greeks and was advanced by Plato in his philosophical work the Republic. T. More in his famous work Utopia (1516) promoted the idea of a communal society and T. Münzer, leader of the Anabaptists, advanced the ideal of a religious communal society during the unsuccessful Peasants' War (1524–25). The Industrial Revolution (q.v.) and the severe economic hardships suffered by workers gave rise to socialism in the late 18th and early 19th cents. Modern communism then emerged from the socialist movement (see Socialism), first as a radical wing of socialism and finally (early 1900s) as a separate and distinct ideology of revolution and collective ownership. The fundamental rivalry between communist and capitalist societies has been a factor in world history since the creation of the first Communist state (USSR, 1917). After WW II it led to the tensions of the Cold War (q.v.). See also Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (from 1917), Marxism, Leninism, Stalin-

ism. Key events in the history of Communism include:

1848 Communist Manifesto written by K. Marx and F. Engels; introduced concept of historic necessity of revolution as a result of class struggle; initially a statement of radical Socialist principles, it became the cornerstone of communist ideology.

1864 First International formed at London; a Socialist labor federation, it was split by a power struggle between Marx and the anarchist N. Bakunin (1876).

1870s Spread of Socialist parties in Europe.

1880s–90s Split widened between advocates of gradual ("evolutionary") socialism and exponents of revolutionary socialism (communism).

1889 Second International formed at Paris; federation of Socialist and labor groups committed to eventual social revolution.

1896 Anarchists, extreme radicals, ousted from Second International; Marxist doctrine of inevitable revolution reaffirmed, however.

1898 German evolutionary Socialist E. Bernstein called for a revision of Marxist ideology and denied historical necessity of revolution.

1903 Russian Social Democratic Labor Party founded (Mar.) by Russian Marxists at Minsk.

1903 N. Lenin forced Russian Social Democratic Labor Party to split into Bolshevik (revolutionary) and Menshevik (gradualist) factions; split led to formation of the Communist party when Bolsheviks seized control of the Russian Revolution (1917).

1914 Second International collapsed as Socialist groups split along nationalist lines at the outbreak of WW I.

1915 Zimmerwald Conference of Socialists denounced WW I as imperialistic; this stand was attacked by Lenin's leftist factions, which wanted to transform the war into a civil war against the bourgeoisie.

1916 Spartacus party formed in Germany; became nucleus of German Communist party after WW I.

1917 Russian Revolution; Lenin's Bolsheviks seized power (Oct.) and thus established Russia as the first Communist state. Communist dictatorship of Russia instituted.

1918 Bolsheviks formed Communist Party in Russia; Lenin's ideology dominant under his leadership (to 1924).

1919 Communists formed Third International, or Comintern, to spread Communist revolution worldwide; break between Socialists and Communists complete.

1921 Chinese Communist party founded.

1920s Lenin died (1924); J. Stalin began to consolidate personal power in the USSR; moved party away from ideology of world revolution and began ideological struggle with L. Trotsky.

1929–38 Trotsky expelled from the USSR (1929); Stalin concentrated on establishment of model Communist state in the USSR; secured complete control of Communist party in series of purge trials (late 1930s) and thus established his totalitarian state.

1941–45 The Soviets joined Allied nations during WW II after Russia was invaded (1941) by Nazi Germany.

1943 Comintern dissolved to promote alliance with Allies during WW II.

1945 Relations between the Communists and the West deteriorated at the end of WW II; Soviets established satellite states in Eastern Europe; Cold War began.

1949 Chinese Communists came to power on Mainland China, forcing nationalists to flee to Taiwan.

1950–53 Korean War, first major armed conflict stemming from the Cold War ideological rivalry between East and West.

1956 Destalinization; Soviet premier N. Khruschchev denounced Stalinism at 20th party congress; attack contributed to uprisings against Communist regimes in Poland and Hungary.

1960 Relations between Soviets and Communist China disintegrated; led to major ideological split within Communist world.

1960–75 Vietnam War, second major conflict arising from Cold War rivalry between East and West.

1966–69 Cultural Revolution in China; ultraradical Chinese Communist factions sought to impose extremist ideology throughout government and society.

1970s Soviets joined US in promoting détente, policy aimed at lessening tensions between non-Communist and Communist nations; resulted in diplomatic and economic ties between various nations of the two blocs.

Communist Manifesto Fundamental statement of Communist revolutionary doctrine, written (1848) by K. Marx and F. Engels. It proposed that workers around the world join together and fight to put control of business and government in the hands of the proletariat. These doctrines had few international consequences until the rise of the Russian Communist party during the Russian Revolution (1917).

Communist party ⟨Communist Party of the Soviet Union⟩ Political party that rules the Soviet Union. It was founded (1903) by N. Lenin at the party congress of the Russian Social Democratic party in London. Lenin headed the Bolshevik (q.v.) faction, the radical wing of the party, which stood in opposition to the more moderate Mensheviks. It became the ruling party in Russia following the Russian Revolution and subsequent seizure of power by the Bolsheviks (1917). Comnenus Family name of a line of Byzantine rulers, who reigned in the 11th and 12th cents. The line was founded by Manuel Eroticus Comnenus (fl. 11th cent.), a general under Byzantine emperor Basil II. A branch of the family later ruled the empire of Trebizond. The Comnenian rulers of the Byzantine Empire were:

Isaac I	1057–59
Alexius I	1081–1118
John II	1118–43
Manuel I	1143–80
Alexius II	1180–83
Andronicus I	1183–85

Company of the Merchants of the Staple ⟨Merchant Staplers⟩ Association of English merchants who controlled the country's wool exports from the 13th through the 16th cents. Its name came from the practice of gathering all exports into one town, called the "staple," to minimize export duties. Its influence waned with increased domestic use of wool and the resulting decline in exports.

Compromise of 1850 Series of bills passed (1850) by US Congress to settle the crisis over extension of slavery into new territories. The compromise measures, arranged by H. Clay and S. Douglas and supported by D. Webster, prevented secession of the South for some years but failed to resolve the fundamental question of slavery. The crisis was brought on (1849) by California's petition to be admitted to the union as a "free" state. The compromise, intended to balance the interests of the North and South, included California's admission as a free state, the eventual admission of Utah and New Mexico with the slavery question to be determined by popular sovereignty, the abolition of slave trade in Washington, D.C., and a strict fugitive-slave law. The peace was short-lived. The doctrine of popular sovereignty contributed to the armed conflicts of Bleeding Kansas and the fugitive-slave law aroused bitter opposition in the North.

Comstock, Henry Tompkins Paige See Comstock Lode

Comstock Lode Site of major US silver deposits, near Virginia City, Nevada. It was named for Henry Tompkins Paige Comstock (1820–70), who claimed (1859) sections of the lode but sold his claim before its value was discovered. It produced great amounts of silver and contributed to the settlement of Nevada and California, but was depleted and abandoned by *c*1898.

Comte, Auguste 1798–1857. French philosopher, founder of positivism and an important figure in the development of sociology. He described his system for attaining a stable society in the modern world in his work The Course of Positive Philosophy. Another important work in the development of positivism is his System of Positive Polity.

Comunero* movement Spanish republican rebellion. The uprising took place (1520–21) in the cities of Castile in reaction to the autocratic rule of Charles V. Though Charles crushed the rebellion, he subsequently modified his policies. Similar comunero revolts occurred later in Paraguay (1723–35) and in New Granada (1780–81).

conciliarism Medieval religious theory. It held that a general council of the Roman Catholic church possessed greater authority than the pope and had the power to depose him. Both Vatican councils (1870, 1962–65) reaffirmed papal supremacy.

Concini, Concino d. 1617. Italian adventurer in France. The favorite of Queen Marie de Médicis, he held great influence in the early reign of King Louis XIII and was made marshal of France. His intrigues, however, aroused the wrath of Louis, by whose order he was assassinated.

concordat Binding treaty between an ecclesiastical authority (usually the pope) and a secular one. It carries the force of international law.

Concordat of Bologna French-papal agreement, (Aug. 18, 1516) by which Pope Leo X ceded to French king Francis I extensive control over the French church.

Concordat of 1801 Agreement between Napoleon and Pope Pius VII ending the break between the Roman Catholic church and the revolutionary government of France. The church was reestablished in France, church property confiscated during the revolution was to remain in private hands, and archbishops and bishops were to be nominated (for appointment by the pope) by the French government. The concordat remained in force until 1905, when anticlericalism in France brought about legal separation of church and state.

Concordat of Worms An agreement concluded (1122) between Holy Roman Emperor Henry V and Pope Calixtus II, to end the Investiture Controversy. By its terms, the power to appoint bishops and abbots was divided between emperor and pope. Elections of bishops or abbots were to take place in the presence of the emperor or his representative. The emperor was to decide contested elections. Those elected were to be first invested with secular duties and privileges by the emperor, and then consecrated with spiritual rights and obligations by the pope. In Burgundy and Italy, however, investiture by the emperor was to follow consecration by the pope. Although the concordat gave the pope spiritual authority over the emperor, it did not end the rivalry between the two.

Condé, House of Line of French nobles. A branch of the powerful Bourbons, its members bore the title "prince of Condé," beginning in the 16th cent. with Louis I de Bourbon (1530–69), a leader of the Conspiracy of Amboise. The line became extinct in 1830.

Condé, Louis II de Bourbon, prince de ⟨the great Condé⟩ 1621–86. French general. Though loyal to the court at the outset of the Fronde (q.v.), he fell into disfavor. He then led a rebel army during the Fronde of the princes.

Condé, Louis Joseph de Bourbon, prince de 1736–1818. French general and leader of the army of Condé, a corps of French émigrés formed to overturn the French Revolution.

Condorcet, Antoine Nicolas, marquis of 1743–94. French philosopher. His most famous work predicted the perfectibility of mankind. An active supporter of the French Revolution, he died in prison at the hands of the extremist Jacobin faction.

condottieri Italian mercenaries. Employed by medieval Italian city-states in their frequent feuds, they often changed sides to the highest bidder and proved ineffective in combat. Engagements between rival condottieri bands were noted for their lack of bloodshed.

Confederacy ⟨Confederate States of America⟩ Secessionist government of the South during the US Civil War (1861–65). A provisional government was formed (Feb., 1861) shortly after the secessions began, and a permanent government for the eleven states of the Confederacy was installed Feb., 1862. J. Davis was president and A. Stephens vice-president. The Confederate constitution was adopted Mar., 1861, and Richmond was made the capital July, 1861. The Confederacy carried on all domestic and foreign governmental functions for the duration of the war. In the foreign arena, the South failed in its attempt to force European powers into an alliance by withholding cotton exports. The failure of King Cotton as a weapon proved to be a crucial setback. At home, the largely agricultural South was at a disadvantage against the more populous, industrial North. Soon after war began, there developed manpower shortages (even with conscription), material shortages caused by the Union blockade of the South, and serious inflation caused by lack of adequate financial reserves. Despite the Confederacy's determined and often heroic military stand, it was finally forced to surrender to the North at Appomattox Courthouse (Apr., 1865). The Confederate States, with dates of their secession and reentry to the Union, are:

South Carolina	Dec., 1860–June, 1868
Mississippi	Jan., 1861–Feb., 1870
Florida	Jan., 1861–June, 1868
Alabama	Jan., 1861–June, 1868
Georgia	Jan., 1861–July, 1870
Louisiana	Jan., 1861–June, 1868
Texas	Feb., 1861–Mar., 1870
Virginia	Apr., 1861–Jan., 1870
Arkansas	May, 1861–June, 1868
North Carolina	May, 1861–June, 1868
Tennessee	June, 1861–July, 1866

Confederation Government Confederation government of Bolivia and Peru (1836–39). The confederation was opposed by Chile and Argentina and fell after defeat of its forces by Chile at Yungay (Jan. 20, 1839).

Confederation group Canadian literary group of the late 19th cent. Its members were noted for their celebration of Canada's natural beauty, and included the poets William Bliss Carman (1861–1929) and Charles G. D. Roberts (1860–1943).

Confederation of Bar League of Polish nobles formed (1768) at Bar (then in Poland) to oppose Russian domination of Polish internal affairs. The league formed after Polish king Stanislaus II acceded to the wishes of Catherine II of Russia and granted religious equality to Poland's non-Roman Catholic minority. The nobles, among them C. Pulaski, were finally defeated by Russian armies in 1772, despite assistance from Turkey and France. The war with Russia culminated in the first Partition of Poland (1772).

Confederation of Radom League of Polish nobles. Formed (June 23, 1767) with Russia's support, it was a confederation of groups opposed to the reform measures of Polish king Stanislaus II. The league was a contributing factor in events leading up to the first Partition of Poland (1772).

Confederation of the Rhine League of German states (1806–13) organized by Napoleon. He formed the league, after defeating the Austrians at the Battle of Austerlitz (1805), to counter the two major German powers, Austria and Prussia. The league ultimately included almost all the German states except Austria and Prussia. On joining, each of the states gave up its allegiance to the Holy Roman Empire. The major states that joined the league included Bavaria, Württenberg, Baden, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Nassau. The league collapsed after Napoleon's defeat in Russia but nevertheless played a part in the later unification of modern Germany.

Conference of Genoa Meeting (Apr. 10–May 19, 1922) of 29 European nations and five British Commonwealth countries at Genoa, Italy. The conference was held to discuss resumption of trade between Europe and the new Soviet government and plans for financing post-WW I reconstruction. Other questions soon dominated the conference, however, including repayment for foreign property seized by the Soviets during their revolution, repayment of the Russian war debt, and repayment for damages inflicted by the Allied military expedition into Russia after the revolution. The Treaty of Rapallo (1922), a separate pact between Russia and Germany, forced the adjournment of the conference.

Conference of Lausanne 1. Meetings (Nov., 1923–July, 1924) between Allied powers and the Ottoman Empire, leading to the Treaty of Lausanne. 2. Meetings (June–July, 1932) to discuss repayment of war debts from WW I. Attended by Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, and Japan, the conference scrapped the Young Plan for war reparations by Germany, such repayment having been made impossible by worldwide economic depression. The new plan called for repayment of a reduced sum, but was ultimately rejected (1932) by the US Congress. Germany subsequently made no payments and the Nazi government later repudiated the debt.

Conference of San Remo International conference held (Apr. 19–26, 1920) at San Remo, Italy. Representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, and Greece completed the draft of the later peace treaty of Sèvres with Turkey and created British mandates in Palestine and Iraq, and French mandates in Syria and Lebanon.

Confucianism Chinese moral and ethical philosophy that has played a major role in much of China's history. Confucianism is based on classical writings and precepts dating to the early period of Chinese history. These precepts were systematized by Confucius (551–479 BC) and modified and developed by later Chinese philosophers. Originally an ethical system, Confucianism adopted metaphysical elements from Buddhism, Taoism, and other systems, notably with the advent of Neo-Confucianism (10th–13th cents.). It greatly influenced the Chinese imperial government, and Confucian traditions were perpetuated by the Chinese Examination System (q.v.). Confucianism declined with the opening of China to the West (19th cent.) and has been virtually eliminated from political life by the Chinese Communists. Key dates in the history of Confucianism include:

23D–3D CENTS. BC Elements of what became Confucian thought developed during Hsia (23d–18th cents. BC), Shang (18th–12th cents. BC), and Chou (12th–3d cents. BC) dynasties.

8TH–3D CENTS. BC Chou dynasty declined under pressure from barbarian invasions; political disintegration and rise of feudalism altered traditional Chinese life.

551–479 BC Confucius lived; sought to reestablish order through traditional political and moral teachings; believed by tradition to have expanded and ordered such thought in works including Wu Ching (Five Classics) and I Ching (Classic of Changes).

479 BC Confucius died; subsequent scholars compiled aphorisms attributed to him in Lun yü; some 70 disciples continued his teachings.

372–289 BC Mencius lived; advanced Confucian thought and carried on vigorous debates with opposing philosophical schools.

3D CENT. BC Hsun-tzu lived; opposed Mencius' teaching that humanity's nature was basically good and advocated strong hierarchy of society; contributed to rise of Legalists, whose teachings supported strong imperial rulers.

221–207 BC Confucian thought declined with unification of China under Ch'in dynasty, which drew upon Legalist teachings.

206 BC–AD 220 Confucianism restored during rule of Han dynasty.

156–87 BC Han emperor Wu Ti reigned; established Confucianism as official philosophical school. Chinese Examination System, based on knowledge of Confucian thought, adopted for testing civil servants.

C1ST CENT. AD Confucianism split into two schools: the Old Text School, which placed emphasis on the original Classical texts; and the New School, which incorporated later texts and teachings, including Taoist thought.

1ST CENT. AD Shrines to Confucius constructed; Confucius became subject of veneration.

3D CENT. AD Fall of Han Dynasty (AD 220); Confucianism declined with rising political disorder in China.

3D–6TH CENTS. AD Buddhism and Taoism gained in importance as Confucianism declined.

581–907 China reunited during Sui (581–618) and T'ang (618–907) dynasties; Confucianism regained its position of importance; new edition of Wu Ching issued during early T'ang (7th cent.).

960–1279 Rise of Neo-Confucianism during Sung dynasty; incorporated metaphysical elements from Taoism and Buddhism.

1130–1200 Chu Hsi lived; greatest exponent of Neo-Confucian thought.

1472–1529 Wang Yang-ming lived; developed school of thought emphasizing introspection and intuition which increasingly opposed the rigid institutional form of Confucianism adopted by the Ming dynasty.

19TH CENT. Confucian traditions challenged by Western influences on Chinese life.

1858–1927 K'ang Yu-wei lived; attempted to incorporate Western thought into framework of Confucianism; sought unsuccessfully to modernize China in Hundred Days of Reform (1898).

1905 Chinese Examination System abolished in move toward modernization.

1911–12 Chinese imperial rule ended by Nationalist Revolution; Confucianism as an institution severely crippled.

1949 Communists came to power in China; Confucian teachings suppressed.

Confucius 551–479 BC. Famous Chinese philosopher whose teachings form the basis for Confucianism. Confucius was a social reformer who hoped to create a just society by his teachings on morality and government. Little is known of his life. Born to a poor family in eastern China, he educated himself and became known for his scholarship. He served in an official post for a time and then turned (c495 BC) to travel, and gathered a small circle of disciples. Through them he hoped to bring an end to the constant wars and tyrannical governments so prevalent in his time. Soon after the death of Confucius, the disciples compiled his teachings in the Analects, which was studied as a basic text in China for two thousand years.

Congo ⟨People's Republic of the Congo⟩ ⟨formerly French Congo⟩ Republic located in Equatorial Africa. Its capital is Brazzaville. The Congo's coastal region was first explored (15th cent.) by the Portuguese. In the 1870s, the region north of the Congo River was explored by Savorgnan de Brazza (1852–1905), who founded Brazzaville (1880) and established a French claim in the region. The same year he negotiated with the native Bateke and established a French protectorate over the area, which became known as the French Congo and, later, Middle Congo. In 1910, the Congo was made part of French Equatorial Africa. It became (1946) a French overseas territory and was granted autonomous rule (1958). The Congo became independent on Aug. 15, 1960, with Fulbert Youlou in office as its first president. An uprising in 1963 led to a change in government and the introduction of Communist economic and political systems. An army coup brought Maj. Marien Ngouabi to power in 1968. He was assassinated in 1977. A new constitution was adopted (1979) and a treaty with the USSR was concluded (1981).

Congregationalism System of church organization in which local churches govern themselves. Congregational churches are usually Protestant and are most numerous in the US and Britain. Congregationalism arose (16th–17th cents.) in Britain as a reaction to the established Church of England and first appeared among the followers (Brownists) of Robert Browne (c 1550–1633). Congregationalists in the early 17th cent., then known as Independents, suffered persecutions until 1689, when the Act of Toleration was declared. The movement spread to America (1620) with the Pilgrims, and the first Congregational church was built (1629) at Salem, Massachusetts. Since then Congregationalism in both the US and Britain has undergone periods of expansion and decline. From the 19th cent., groups of these churches have tended to form unions and broad fellowships while maintaining the autonomy of the local congregation.

Congress Kingdom of Poland ⟨Congress Poland⟩ Kingdom of Poland created (May 3, 1815) by the Congress of Vienna after Napoleon's fall. The Russian czar was designated ruler of the kingdom, though Congress Poland was granted a constitution, a legislative diet, and the right to maintain an army. Polish resistance to the czar's domination led to the November Insurrection (1830–31) and January Insurrection (1863–64). Both revolts were unsuccessful and resulted in severe repression and eventual reduction of the kingdom to a Russian province 1864. Poland was ultimately recreated as an independent state after WW I.

Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle Meeting (Oct.–Nov., 1818) of members of the Quadruple Alliance (Britain, Austria, Prussia, Russia) and France at Aix-la-Chapelle (now Aachen, Germany). The powers resolved (Oct. 9) to withdraw the forces occupying France since Napoleon's defeat and to restore France to full sovereignty. The congress was one of several meetings in which the major powers shaped the conservative policy (as in the Holy Alliance), which prevailed in Europe immediately after the Napoleonic era.

Congress of Berlin Meeting of European powers called (1878) to renegotiate the Treaty of San Stefano and deal with British and Austro-Hungarian dissatisfaction with terms forced on the Ottoman Empire by Russia after the Russo-Turkish War (1877–78). Headed by O. von Bismarck, the meeting resulted in the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878), which cost Russia much of what it had gained in the earlier treaty. Austria-Hungary was to occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina; Britain was to occupy Cyprus; and Montenegro, Serbia, and Romania were recognized as independent. An autonomous Bulgaria (much smaller than that sought by Russia) was created under Ottoman suzerainty. Russia gained control over Ottoman territories in Asia and the Balkans.

Congress of Chilpancingo Mexican revolutionary congress (convened Sept., 1813) at Chilpancingo, Mexico. It declared Mexican independence from Spain (Nov., 1813) and promulgated Mexico's first constitution (Oct. 22, 1814).

Congress of Laibach Meeting (Jan.–May, 1821) of European powers. A continuation of the Congress of Troppau (1820), it was held at Laibach, Yugoslavia, and was attended by representatives of the Holy Alliance (Austria, Prussia, and Russia), Great Britain, France, and other, lesser states. Despite opposition by the French and British, the congress sanctioned armed intervention (by C. Metternich's Austrian forces) to put down liberal revolutions in Naples and Piedmont. The congress was a victory for Metternich's conservative policies, which supported absolutist monarchies.

Congress of Paris Conference (Feb.–Mar., 1856) of Austria, France, Great Britain, the Ottoman Empire, Russia, and Sardinia, to end the Crimean War. The congress culminated with the Treaty of Paris (q.v.).

Congress of Troppau Conference (Oct.–Dec., 1820) at Troppau, Austria (now Opava, Czechoslovakia), to consider European action against the uprisings in Spain and the Two Sicilies. The Russian and Austrian emperors attended, the latter accompanied by C. Metternich, but Britain and France sent lower-ranking representatives and refused to subscribe to the protocol threatening armed intervention against insurgents. (See also Congress of Laibach.)

Congress of Tucumán Argentine Congress that met in Tucumán and declared (July 9, 1816) Argentine independence from Spain. The Congress pursued the idea of an independent South American monarchy but was unable to impose an effective government structure. It was ultimately forced to disband (1820) by local caudillos.

Congress of the United States The legislative branch of the US government, consisting of the Senate and the House of Representatives. As established by Article I of the Constitution, Congress is empowered to "make all laws" necessary for the execution of the power "vested by [the] Constitution in the government of the United States." The Senate, the upper house, consists of two senators from each state, named by state legislatures until the 17th Amendment provided (1913) for their election by direct popular vote. Senators serve terms of six years and one-third of the members are elected every two years, making the Senate a continuing body. The vice-president of the United States is the presiding officer of the Senate and has a vote in case of a tie. When the vice-president is absent, his place is taken by a president pro tempore, who is fourth in line of succession to the US presidency. The House of Representatives, the lower house, consists of 435 members apportioned according to population, each state being entitled to at least one. Representatives serve for two years, and the entire body is elected anew every two years. The House is presided over by a speaker, nominated by the party currently enjoying a majority and elected by the House. The speaker is third in line of succession for the US presidency. Legislation must be approved by both houses. Money bills and impeachment proceedings originate only in the House. The Senate confirms presidential appointments (by a simple majority), ratifies treaties (by a two-thirds majority), and tries impeachment cases. Congress is required by the Constitution to hold an annual session which, since the passage of the 20th Amendment (1933), begins on Jan. 3 of each year. Legislation, once it has passed both houses, must be signed by the president within ten days, or it becomes law automatically, unless Congress adjourns in the meantime. Two-thirds majorities are needed in both houses to override a presidential veto. Since 1803 the US Supreme Court has effectively exercised a power implied, but not specified, in the Constitution, of invalidating congressional legislation on grounds that it is unconstitutional. If this occurs, Congress must redraft the bill or initiate a constitutional amendment (which must be approved by three-fourths of the states) to secure the legislation it wishes.

Congress of Verona Conference held (Oct. 20–Dec. 14, 1822) between the major European powers. The congress authorized French intervention in the Spanish revolution against Ferdinand VII, but British opposition led to failure of the congress system.

Congress of Vienna International congress (Sept., 1814–June, 1815) called to reorganize Europe following the fall of Napoleon. The agreements reached at this convention shaped Europe's political structure for much of the 19th cent. Principal nations at the congress were France, Austria, Prussia, Russia, and Great Britain, although numerous smaller nations were represented. Major settlements reached at the congress included establishment of the borders of France and confirmation of the restoration of Bourbon king Louis XVIII to the French throne; confirmation of Ferdinand VII as king of Spain; establishment of the German Confederation from the remnants of the Holy Roman Empire; the reestablishment and enlargement of the Swiss Confederation; and the restoration of the Austrian monarchy. Austria lost Belgium, the Austrian Netherlands, and other territories, but was compensated with new lands, including Lombardy-Venetia, Dalmatia, and the Tyrol. Prussia gained substantial portions of the Rhine and Saxony. Poland was divided among Austria, Prussia, and Russia, and a new Polish kingdom (Congress Kingdom of Poland) was placed under Russian rule. A new kingdom of The Netherlands was established, and the kingdom of Sardinia restored. Sweden received Norway, Russia kept Finland, and Great Britain retained possession of Cape Colony, Ceylon, Malta, and other territories. The Papal States were restored, but the congress did nothing to advance the unification of Italy.

Connecticut Wits ⟨Hartford Wits⟩ Group of American poets in and around Hartford, Connecticut, who flourished in the years immediately after the American Revolution. Largely composed of Yale instructors and students who were conservative Federalists, they collaborated to produce a number of political satires in verse. Their works, written in the style of earlier British poets, were aimed at the liberalism of Jeffersonian Democrats and included The Anarchiad and The Political Greenhouse. Leading members included J. Barlow and Timothy Dwight (1752–1817).

conquistadores Spanish military adventurers who led the Spanish exploration and conquest of the New World. Among them were F. Pizzaro and H. Cortés.

Conrad I d. 918. Elected German king (911–918). His reign was marked by instability and rebellions inspired by feudal lords.

Conrad II *c*990–1039. Elected German king and Holy Roman Emperor (1024–39). The first of the Salian emperors, he stabilized and strengthened his domain.

Conrad III *c*1093–1152. Elected German king (1138–52), first of the Hohenstaufen line. His contest with Lothair II over the crown of the Holy Roman Empire led to struggles between the Guelphs and Ghibellines.

Conrad IV 1228–54. Elected German king (1237–54), son of Emperor Frederick II. One of the last Hohenstaufen rulers, he continued his father's struggle with Pope Innocent IV for control of Italy.

Conrad, Joseph 1857–1924. Polish-born author, considered one of the greatest English novelists. Once a merchant seaman, he wrote stories of adventure reflecting his maritime experiences. Among the best known are Lord Jim and Heart of Darkness.

Conrad von Hotzendorf, Franz, Graf 1852–1925. Austro-Hungarian field marshal. He served as chief of staff (1906–11, 1912–17) of Austro-Hungarian forces before and during WW I, but was dismissed during the war for opposing the peace initiatives of Emperor Charles I.

conservatism Belief in preserving the stability of the existing order. Conservatives oppose broad reforms (though not necessarily all reform) that may cause upheavals of the social or political system and thus often oppose liberalism. Conservatism of the 19th cent., a reaction against the French Revolution (1789–99), was articulated in the works of E. Burke and others. It was characterized by support for rule by the king and the propertied class and opposed liberal republicanism of the rising bourgeoisie. In modern times, conservatism has come to favor such things as freedom from the regulation of business and opposes extension of the welfare state.

Conservative party (Canada) See Progressive Conservative party

Conservative party Major British political party (formed 1832), a coalition of middle-class interests. Though it represents a conservative viewpoint, the party has traditionally favored moderate social and political reforms. The successor to the Tory party, it was formed after passage of the Reform Bill (1832). Under the leadership of Sir R. Peel, the Conservatives began courting the rising business class, and Peel's Tamworth Manifesto (1834) was written to that end. Peel headed the first Conservative government of Britain (1834–35), and thereafter Conservatives have been in and out of power up to modern times. Among the Conservative governments were: 1841–46 under Peel; 1874–80 under B. Disraeli; 1885–1905 (except 1886, 1892–95) under R. Salisbury and A. Balfour; 1922–29 (except 1924) under A. Law and S. Baldwin; 1935–40 under S. Baldwin and N. Chamberlain; 1940–45 (coalition government) under W. Churchill; 1951–64 under Churchill, A. Eden, H. Macmillan, and A. Douglas-Home; 1970–74 under E. Heath; and 1979– under M. Thatcher.

Conspiracy of Amboise Unsuccessful plot (1560) by French Protestants (Huguenots) to kidnap King Francis II and put an end to the influence of the Catholic Guise family. Led by the Bourbon prince Louis I de Bourbon Condé, they planned to seize the king and members of the Guise family at Amboise. They were discovered, however, and some 1,200 Huguenots were massacred.

Conspiracy of Catiline Abortive attempt (63–62 BC) to overthrow the Roman government during Cicero's consulship. Organized by Catiline after losing his bid (63 BC) for the consulship, the conspiracy was revealed to Cicero by Fulvia, Catiline's mistress. Cicero then denounced Catiline in the Senate in the first of four famous orations against him. Catiline fled Rome and Cicero had those conspirators remaining behind arrested and executed without due process. Cicero was later exiled for this. Catiline and his army of rebels meanwhile were caught trying to escape to Gaul. The rebels were defeated in battle and Catiline was slain.

Constable, John 1776–1837. Leading 19th-cent. English landscape artist. He strongly influenced the French Romantics.

Constance 1152–98. Wife of Holy Roman Emperor Henry VI (m. 1186). She served (1197–98) as regent for her son, and assured his accession to the throne as Emperor Frederick II.

Constance, Council of Council (1414–18) of the Roman Catholic church that ended (1417) the Great Schism. The council (part of which is called the 16th ecumenical council) also issued (1415) the Sacrosancta, which confirmed the supremacy of the church council over the pope (Conciliarism). When the council convened, there were three popes—Gregory XII, John XXIII, and Benedict XIII. After issuing the Sacrosancta, it deposed John (1415), negotiated Gregory's resignation, and deposed Benedict (1417), to end the Schism. Martin V was then elected (1417) pope. The council also declared the Hussite movement heretical and had J. Huss and Jerome of Prague burned at the stake (1415, 1416).

Constance, Peace of Peace treaty (June 12, 1446) between Zurich (and its ally, Holy Roman Emperor Frederick IV) and neighboring Swiss cantons, ending a war for control of disputed territories.

Constance, Treaty of Treaty (1183), by which Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I made peace with Pope Alexander III and with the Lombard towns. By its terms the Lombard towns gained virtual autonomy, but Frederick retained nominal suzerainty.

Constans I AD 320 or 323–AD 350. Roman emperor (AD 337–350), successor to his father, Constantine I. After the death (AD 340) of his brother Constantine II, he became sole ruler of the Western Roman Empire.

Constant de Rebecque, Benjamin 1767–1830. A Swiss-born French author and politician. A widely known liberal pamphleteer in France, he wrote Adolphe, an early psychological novel.

Constantine 1868–1923. Greek king (1913–17 and 1920–22). His refusal to support the Allies in WW I forced his first abdication, and his disastrous war with Turkey, the second.

Constantine I ⟨~the Great⟩ ⟨orig. Constantinus, Flavius Valerius Aurelius⟩ AD 280?–337. Roman emperor (AD 306–337) who helped make Rome a Christian state. On the death (AD 306) of Constantinus I, Constantine's father and co-emperor with Galerius, there followed a long struggle among rival claimants to the throne. On the eve of the Battle of Milvian Bridge (312) against his last rival, Constantine had a vision, accepted Christianity, and by his subsequent victory in battle became emperor in the West. By his Edict of Milan (313) with co-emperor Licinius, he confirmed Christianity as a lawful religion. He emerged victorious from battle with Licinius (323) and thereby became sole ruler of the Roman Empire. He convened the First Council of Nicaea (325) to resolve the dispute over Arianism and strengthen Christianity. He moved the imperial capital to Byzantium, which he rebuilt (330) as the city of Constantinople.

Constantine II AD 316–340. Son of Constantine I and co-emperor (AD 337–340) of the Roman Empire. He was killed while trying to seize territories controlled by his brother Constans I.

Constantine IV d. 685. Byzantine emperor (668–685). He halted Muslim attacks on Constantinople but was forced to give up northern territory to the Bulgars.

Constantine V 718–775. Byzantine emperor (741–775), successor to his father, Leo III. His advocacy of Iconoclasm and opposition to monasticism eventually cost the Byzantine Empire its control over Rome and the rest of Italy.

Constantine VI b. c770–797. Byzantine emperor (780–797), successor to his father, Leo IV. His mother, Irene, ruled as regent (780–790) and as co-ruler (792–97) but deposed and blinded him.

Constantine VII ⟨Porphyrogenitus, Constantine⟩ 905–959. Byzantine emperor (913–959) and scholar, son of Leo VI. His writings concerned the history and politics of his empire. His reign was marked by legal and land reforms, and war with Bulgarians and Russian princes.

Constantine VIII See Basil II

Constantine XI ⟨Palaeologus, Constantine⟩ d. 1453. Last Byzantine emperor (1449–53), successor to his brother John VIII. He died during the Great Siege of Constantinople, in which the Turks completed their conquest of the Byzantine Empire.

Constantinople (now Istanbul) Former capital of the Byzantine Empire and of the Ottoman Empire. Located in what now is Turkey, it has been named Istanbul since 1930. Known in ancient times as Byzantium, the city was renamed Constantinople (AD 330) by Constantine the Great, who established it as the capital of the Roman Empire. It became capital of the Byzantine Empire after the fall of the Western Roman Empire (AD 476). The city flourished under Byzantine rule. It was sacked by crusaders (1204) during the Fourth Crusade and became the nucleus of the Latin Kingdom of Constantinople (q.v.). The Ottoman Turks, under Muhammad II, conquered it and thereby overthrew the Byzantine Empire (1453). The city remained capital of the Ottoman Empire through WW I. During the subsequent occupation (1918–23) by Allied forces, the last Ottoman sultan was deposed (1922), and Ankara became capital of the new republic of Turkey.

Constantinople, Councils of 1. First Council of ~ (AD 381) (2d ecumenical council). Called by Roman emperor Theodosius I, the council condemned Arianism and Apollinarianism, reaffirmed the Council of Nicaea (AD 325) and the Nicene Creed, and issued a doctrinal statement on the Holy Ghost as an equal in the Trinity of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. 2. Second Council of ~ (AD 553) (5th ecumenical council). Convened by Byzantine emperor Justinian I, the council condemned Nestorianism and approved Justinian's edict of 544 on the heresy. 3. Third Council of ~ (680–681) (6th ecumenical council). Called by Byzantine emperor Constantine IV, the council condemned Monotheletism, issued a doctrinal statement on the existence of separate will and operation in both the human and divine natures of Christ, and condemned Pope Honorius I as a Monothelite. The Quinisext Council is considered part of this council in the West. 4. Fourth Council of ~ (869–870) (8th ecumenical council in the West). Called at the recommendation of Byzantine emperor Basil I, the council excommunicated Photius, rival of Saint Ignatius of Constantinople for the patriarchy of Constantinople.

Constitution*, the See Old Ironsides

Constitution Act See Canada (1982)

Constitutional Union party American political party. Composed mainly of former Know-Nothings and Whigs, it nominated J. Bell as presidential candidate in the 1860 election. It carried Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, but soon after disappeared as a political force.

Constitution of the United States Document empowering the federal government of the US. In addition to defining the form and system of government, it describes the basic liberties of American citizens and basic laws of the land. Drafted and signed (Sept. 17, 1787) at the Constitutional Convention (q.v.), the Constitution was designed to remedy the shortcomings of the Articles of Confederation (q.v.), by providing for a strong central government. The Constitution went into effect (Mar. 4, 1789), following ratification by 11 (9 required had ratified by June 21, 1788) of the original 13 states. The Bill of Rights, a set of 10 amendments to the Constitution, was passed (Sept. 25, 1789) and ratified (Dec. 15, 1791). The 2 remaining states ratified the Constitution after passage of the Bill of Rights. Amendments in the Bill of Rights are listed below. The Constitution consists of a Preamble, the following seven articles, and the Amendments to the Constitution listed below them.

Article I Describes the organization, powers, and limitations of the legislative branch.

Article II Empowers the president and executive branch (q.v.) and describes the duties of the president and means by which he is to be elected.

Article III Empowers the judicial branch (q.v.) and defines jurisdictions of the Supreme Court and lower courts.

Article IV Describes the relationship of states to the federal government, as well as to other states.

Article V Describes the method of amending the Constitution.

Article VI Declares the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land, which no state may abridge.

Article VII Describes the ratification process.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

Bill of Rights (all adopted 1791).

Amendment I guarantees freedom of religion, speech, the press, petition, and assembly.

Amendment II guarantees the right to bear arms.

Amendment III restricts quartering of soldiers.

Amendment IV protects against illegal search and seizure.

Amendment V guarantees due process and rights of the accused.

Amendment VI guarantees the accused a speedy trial and other rights during trial.

Amendment VII guarantees the right to a jury trial in civil suits.

Amendment VIII protects against imposition of excessive bail and cruel and unusual punishment.

Amendment IX reserves for the people rights not enumerated in the Constitution.

Amendment X reserves for the states or the people powers not enumerated in the Constitution.

Subsequent Amendments

Amendment XI limits the jurisdiction of federal judiciary (ratified 1798).

Amendment XII revises procedures for electing the president and vice-president (ratified 1804).

Amendment XIII abolishes slavery (ratified 1865). This and the following two amendments resulted from the Civil War.

Amendment XIV reaffirms the right of citizens to representation and equal protection under the law. It also bans insurgents (namely Confederates) from government office, and invalidates debts incurred by them (ratified 1868).

Amendment XV guarantees the right to vote, regardless of race or creed (ratified 1870).

Amendment XVI empowers the federal government to collect the income tax (ratified 1913).

Amendment XVII changes the procedure for electing senators from election by state legislatures to direct popular election (ratified 1913).

Amendment XVIII bans alcoholic beverages (ratified 1919). See also Prohibition.

Amendment XIX guarantees women the right to vote (ratified 1920). See also Woman's Suffrage.

Amendment XX revises the term of office for the president, vice-president, and Congress (to eliminate the lame duck Congress (q.v.) (ratified 1933). It also fixes the line of succession in the event of the president's death in office.

Amendment XXI repeals Prohibition (ratified 1933).

Amendment XXII establishes the two-term limit on the presidency (ratified 1951).

Amendment XXIII provides for voting and representation rights for the District of Columbia (ratified 1961).

Amendment XXIV bans poll taxes (ratified 1964).

Amendment XXV provides for presidential succession and replacement of the vice-president (ratified 1967).

Amendment XXVI lowers the voting age to 18 (ratified 1971).

Constitutional Convention ⟨Federal Constitutional Convention⟩ ⟨Philadelphia Convention⟩ US convention called (May 25–Sept. 17, 1787) at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and presided over by G. Washington. The convention was called by Congress to amend the Articles of Confederation, which had proved ineffective in dealing with the political and economic problems besetting newly independent America. Delegates from 12 states (Rhode Island sent no delegates) drafted and signed (Sept. 17, 1787) the Constitution of the United States of America after much debate (see Virginia and New Jersey Plan). The convention then dissolved and the Constitution was sent to the 13 states for ratification. There ensued a major struggle by the Federalist party, supporters of the Constitution, to secure its enactment into law. This came with ratification (June, 1788) by New Hampshire, the ninth state to do so.

Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical See canon law

Constitutions of Clarendon Sixteen ordinances issued (1164) by English king Henry II to limit the power of the Catholic church. These measures were opposed by Thomas à Becket, and his murder (1170) by the king's supporters forced Henry to modify the ordinances.

Constitutions of Melfi ⟨Liber Augustalis⟩ Administrative law code given (1231) to the kingdom of Sicily by Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. One of the important legal documents of the Middle Ages, it established a strong and efficient central government in the kingdom.

consul Name given the two chief magistrates of the ancient Roman republic. Consuls wielded virtually royal powers although their term of office was limited. The position was the highest achievable by private citizens.

Consulate French government (1799–1804) established after overthrow of the Directory in the coup d'état of 18 Brumaire. Under the Consulate, three consuls—one of whom was Napoleon—ruled France, until Napoleon's assumption (1804) of the title "emperor."

Continental Army American army during the American Revolutionary War authorized by the Second Continental Congress and placed under the command of Gen. G. Washington on June 15, 1775. This force had arisen spontaneously around Boston following the Battles of Lexington and Concord (q.v.). Numbering around 20,000 at its maximum, the army was trained by Washington and led to victory (1781) over the British.

Continental Congress Legislature and interim government (1774–89) for the 13 colonies (later states) during the American Revolution and postwar years until adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The First Continental Congress, brought about by Colonial opposition to the Intolerable Acts (especially among Committees of Correspondence and the Sons of Liberty), was convened (Sept. 5–Oct. 26, 1774) at Philadelphia, with P. Randolph presiding. It opposed J. Galloway's conciliatory plan, created the Continental Assocation to halt trade with Britain, and sent a list of colonists' grievances to King George III. The Second Continental Congress was convened (May 10, 1775–Dec. 20, 1776) at Philadelphia, with Randolph (and later J. Hancock) as president. The Congress created the Continental Army (May 31, 1775), appointed G. Washington commander (June 15), rejected Lord North's plan for peaceful settlement, opened American ports in defiance of British acts, and adopted the Declaration of Independence (July 4, 1776). During the war, subsequent sessions, held at Philadelphia (except 1776–77, 1777–78), were characterized by disputes between Congress and the military. After adoption of the Articles of Confederation (1781), the inability of the congress to govern effectively led to the Annapolis and Constitutional conventions and eventual adoption of the Constitution.

Continental Divide ⟨Great Divide⟩ Continental barrier marking a division between eastward- and westward-flowing river systems. Specifically, in North America, the term refers to the Rocky Mountain chain.

Continental System French economic plan (1806–12) adopted by Napoleon (in the Berlin Decree) to freeze trade with England during the Napoleonic Wars. Russia's refusal to conform to it led to Napoleon's invasion of Russia (1812). The plan also contributed to outbreak of the War of 1812.

Contreras, Battle of Battle (Aug. 19–20, 1847) of the Mexican War. A decisive victory for American forces under Gen. W. Scott over Mexican soldiers under Gen. A. de Santa Anna, it was fought during the American drive on Mexico City.

Conventicle acts English religious acts (1593, 1664). Created to suppress dissension within the Anglican church, they were repealed by the Toleration Act (1689).

Convention of Akkerman Treaty (Oct. 7, 1826) forced on the Ottoman Turks by the Russians and signed at Akkerman, Russia. By its terms, the Turks granted Serbia autonomy, gave Russia rights to oversee the autonomy of Moldavia and Walachia, and granted Russia navigation and commercial rights in Turkish domains.

Convention of 1818 US-British border agreement (Oct. 20, 1818) establishing the 49th parallel as the US-Canadian border from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains and providing for open occupation of Oregon territory for 10 years.

Convention of Gastein Austro-Prussian agreement (Aug. 14, 1865) settling administration of Schleswig-Holstein, seized (1864) from Denmark. Prussia administered Schleswig and Austria administered Holstein.

Convention of Kloster-Zeven Agreement signed (Sept. 8, 1757) by the duke of Cumberland near Zeven, in Hanover, following his defeat by the French in the Seven Years' War. The convention, allowing French occupation of Hanover, was repudiated by the British government.

Convention of Sintra Agreement (Aug. 30, 1808) between British and French forces in Portugal during the Peninsular War. Much criticized in Britain, it allowed the French to return home with their arms, baggage, and booty.

Convention of Vergara (Bergara, ~) Agreement (Aug. 31, 1839) ending resistance by Spanish Carlists to the rule of Queen Isabella II.

Convention Parliament English Parliament (Apr. –Dec., 1660). It restored Charles II and the Stuart monarchy to the English throne, following Charles' signing of the Declaration of Breda (q.v.), and thus began the Restoration (q.v.) period.

Conway, Thomas See Conway Cabal

Conway, Treaty of See Llewelyn ab Gruffydd

Conway Cabal American Revolutionary plot. Several dissatisfied American officers, including Gen. Thomas Conway (1735–1800?), sought unsuccessfully to replace G. Washington with H. Gates as head of the Continental Army.

Cook, James 1728–79. English navigator famed for his exploratory voyages in the Pacific and Antarctic. In command (1768–71) of the ship Endeavour, he discovered and charted New Zealand and the eastern coast of Australia, and circumnavigated the globe. On his second voyage (1772–75), commanding the Resolution and the Adventure, he explored the Antarctic coast and discovered New Caledonia. His third voyage (1776–79), to discover a northwest or northeast passage, ended with his murder by Hawaiian natives.

Cooke, Jay 1821–1905. American financier. He founded (1861) Jay Cooke and Company, which marketed federal bonds during the Civil War. Its failure (Sept. 18, 1873) caused the Panic of 1873.

Coolidge, Calvin 1872–1933. The 30th US president (1923–29), successor to W. Harding. Coolidge was governor of Massachusetts (1919–21) when he won national attention by using the state militia to break the Boston police strike (1919). Shortly thereafter he was nominated as the Republican vice-presidential candidate, and entered office with Pres. W. Harding. As vice-president, he was not part of Harding's inner circle and was not involved in the Teapot Dome scandal (q.v.). After Harding's death (1923) he became the president and quickly restored public confidence in government. Reelected (1924), he refused to run again in 1928. His administration was characterized by probusiness policies; presidential vetoes of farm-relief legislation; conservative fiscal policies stressing economy in government and tax cuts; and encouragement of speculative stock market booms, which finally resulted in the stock market crash of 1929.

coolie A Chinese or Indian laborer. Coolies were indentured laborers sent during the 19th cent. to work in the US, West Indies, and other places where cheap labor was needed.

Cooper, James Fenimore 1789–1851. The first major American novelist. A sailor and US naval officer (1806–11), he married (1811) and took up the life of a gentleman. He won fame with publication (1821) of his second book, The Spy, and thereafter began his Leatherstocking Tales of frontier life. This series included The Pioneers, The Last of the Mohicans, The Prairie, The Pathfinder, and The Deerslayer.

Cooper, Leon N. See Bardeen, John

Cooper, Leroy Gordon, Jr. 1927–. American astronaut. One of the seven original astronauts, he made the last flight of the Mercury program, aboard Faith 7 (May, 1963).

Cooper, Peter 1791–1883. US manufacturer, inventor, and philanthropist. He constructed the early locomotive "Tom Thumb" and founded Cooper Union, a college in New York City.

Co-operative Commonwealth Federation Canadian political party active in the 1930s and 1940s. Formed (1932) during the Depression, the party advocated creation of a socialist state by democratic means. It was strongest in the western provinces and won control (1944) of the government of Saskatchewan. The party continued to dominate Saskatchewan but declined in the other provinces after WW II.

Copenhagen Capital city (pop. 699,300) of Denmark. Denmark's commercial and cultural center, it was first fortified (1167) by Archbishop Absalon, chartered (1254), and several times attacked by the Hanseatic League. It became Denmark's capital in 1443. It was bombarded by the British (1801, 1807) during the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars and was occupied by the Germans (1940–45) during WW II.

Copenhagen, Battle of British naval victory (Apr. 2, 1801) against the Danish fleet at Copenhagen. The battle stemmed from the French Revolutionary Wars. Denmark had joined (1800) the League of Armed Neutrality along with Russia, Sweden, and Prussia. In addition to proclaiming their neutrality, the four nations also agreed to ignore British rules governing maritime activities of neutrals. Though the British did not declare war, they nevertheless sent a fleet under Lord H. Nelson on a raid against the Danish. The British destroyed the Danish fleet at Copenhagen.

Copernicus, Nicholas 1473–1543. Polish astronomer, considered the founder of modern astronomy. On the basis of his observations and calculations, he advanced the then revolutionary idea that the earth rotated on its axis and that the planets, including the earth, revolved around the sun (the Copernican system). Educated in astronomy at the University of Krakow, he was appointed (1497) canon of the cathedral at Frauenburg, East Prussia. In subsequent years he began to develop his heliocentric theory, opposing the traditional, earth-centered theory. By 1530, he had largely completed his book on the theory, On the Revolutions of the Celestial Spheres (De revolutionibus orbium coelestium), but delayed the start of publication until 1540. He is said to have received the first bound copy just before his death (1543).

Copland, Aaron 1900–. American composer. His works, reflecting American themes and traditions, include the ballets Rodeo, A Lincoln Portrait, and Appalachian Spring.

Copper Age The stage in the development of civilization when pure copper came into use. The Copper Age is considered the early part of the Bronze Age. The earliest known use of copper (*c*6500 BC) occurred in the Near East, and by *c*3500 BC copper metallurgy was well known throughout the region. Copper was in general use by *c*3000 BC, and this is commonly considered the beginning of the Bronze Age. The use of bronze began *c*2400 BC and became widespread after 2000 BC.

Copperhead Derogatory American political term applied to northern Democrats who either opposed the Civil War or sympathized with the South.

Coptic church Christian church of Egypt. The church has only a small following in a country that has been predominantly Islamic since the 7th cent. Formed in early Christian times, it adheres to Monophysitism and has been independent of the Roman Catholic church since AD 451, when the Council of Chalcedon declared Monphysitism a heresy. A still smaller church, the Catholic Coptic church, rejoined the Roman Catholic church in 1741.

Coral Sea, Battle of the US-Japanese naval and air battle (May 7–8, 1942) in the southwest Pacific during WW II. The US assembled a task force to meet a Japanese fleet involved in a planned invasion of Port Moresby, New Guinea. US carrier planes sank a Japanese carrier the first day. In a battle fought solely by carrier planes the next day, the US sustained heavy losses (including one carrier sunk) but turned back the Japanese for the first time in the war.

Corbeil, Treaty of Treaty (May 11, 1258) signed by French king Louis IX and James I of Aragon. It settled territorial claims of France and Aragon, with terms favorable to France.

Corday, Charlotte 1768–93. Frenchwoman, the assassin of French revolutionary leader J. Marat (July 13, 1793). She stabbed Marat in his bath because of his persecution of the Girondists, with whom she sympathized.

Cordeliers Political club formed (1790) during the French Revolution. Officially known as the Society of the Friends of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, it was founded to denounce abuses of power. It soon became a formidable political power under the leadership of G. Danton and others. The Cordeliers were involved in the deposing of King Louis XVI, and later, under the more radical influence of J. Hébert and J. Marat, brought down (1792–93) the moderate Girondists. Under Hébert's leadership the club adopted extreme radicalism, and for a time Hébert rivaled M. Robespierre for power. The club dissolved when Hébert was executed (1794) during the Reign of Terror.

Córdoba ⟨Cordova⟩ Spanish city, capital of Córdoba province. Founded by the Carthaginians, it flourished as the capital of a Muslim caliphate (756–1031). It is renowned for its great Moorish mosque, later converted into a cathedral.

Córdoba, Treaty of Treaty (Aug. 24, 1821) signed by Mexican revolutionary forces and Spanish colonial authorities at Córdoba, Mexico. The treaty established Mexican independence.

Corfu Declaration Proclamation (July 20, 1917) calling for creation of Yugoslavia at the end of WW I. Meeting at Corfu, Greece, representatives of the Serbian government-in-exile, the Croats, and the Slovenes put aside long-standing differences and announced a planned union of their states under Serbian king Peter I. Montenegro joined the union (Nov. 26) after the ouster of King Nicholas I, who had opposed it. The new kingdom was formally proclaimed Dec. 4, 1918.

Corinth Ancient Greek city. Settled (9th cent. BC) by Dorians, it became a major city-state in the Peloponnesus and the leading commercial center of Greece. Corinth played a major role in the Persian Wars (499–479 BC) and allied with Sparta against Athens in the Peloponnesian War (431–404 BC). It fought against Sparta in the Corinthian War (395–387 BC), and became a member of the Achaean League (243 BC). Destroyed (146 BC) by the Romans, it became a Roman colony (44 BC). Subsequently occupied by the Ottoman Turks, the Venetians, and again by the Turks, it was completely destroyed (1858) by earthquake. Modern Corinth stands northeast of the ancient site.

Corinth, Battle of Battle (Oct. 3–4, 1862) of the American Civil War, at Corinth, Mississippi. Union forces under W. Rosecrans defeated Confederate units under S. Price and E. Van Dorn in two days of heavy fighting.

Corinthian order Greek architectural style, the last of the three major styles of classical Greek architecture. An ornate style, it influenced later Roman and Renaissance styles.

Corinthian War War (395–387 BC) against Spartan domination, fought by Athens and her allies (Corinth, Argos, and Thebes). At the instigation of Persia, then at war with Sparta, the allied city-states went to war against Sparta. The Spartans won initial victories—the battles of Nemea and Coronea—but suffered a major defeat at the hands of the Persians in a naval battle at Cnidus (all 394 BC). Athens subsequently began to rebuild its former empire by taking over former Spartan possessions. Sparta thus was forced to sue for peace with the Persians, and finally accepted the King's Peace (387 BC).

Coriolanus fl. 5th cent. BC. Legendary Roman patrician, said to have received his surname by capturing the Volscian city of Corioli. He later led the Volscians against Rome and spared it from destruction only because of the tearful pleas of his wife and mother.

Cornelia fl. 2d cent. BC. Roman matron, the mother of Tiberius and Gaius Gracchus. To a patrician matron discussing jewelry, she is said to have pointed to her sons and said, "These are my jewels."

Cornelius, Pope See Novatian

Corn Laws Series of English laws regulating export and import of grain, to maintain a stable supply of domestic grain. Opponents of the laws formed (1839) the Anti-Corn Law League, and in 1846 Parliament, led by R. Peel, repealed the laws.

Cornwallis, Charles Cornwallis, 1st Marquess 1738–1805. British general and statesman. He led British forces in the Carolina and Yorktown campaigns (q.q.v.) and his surrender at Yorktown, Virginia (1781), effectively ended fighting in the American Revolution. As governor general of India (1786–93, 1805), he instituted (1793) the Cornwallis Code for governance of India.

Cornwallis Code ⟨Bengal System⟩ Administrative reforms adopted (May 1, 1793) by the British East India Company for the government of Bengal, India. The system, named after Governor General C. Cornwallis, was adopted elsewhere in India and remained in effect until 1833. By the code, administration was separated into commercial, revenue, and judicial departments. Private trade was strictly forbidden, and adequate salaries were paid to administrative personnel. Though the system introduced a measure of stability, it also excluded Indians from important posts.

Coronado, Francisco Vásquez de 1510–44. A Spanish explorer of what became the US Southwest. Seeking treasure cities, Coronado led an expedition (1540–42) north from Mexico into Texas, and from there through Oklahoma to Kansas. García López de Cárdenas led a party of Coronado's men on a side trip and discovered the Grand Canyon (1540).

Coronea, Battle of 1. Boeotian victory (447 BC) over Athens during the First Peloponnesian War. The Athenian defeat led to reestablishment of the Boeotian League. 2. Battle (394 BC) during the Corinthian War, a Spartan victory over the coalition of city-states allied against it.

Coronel, Battle of German naval victory (Nov. 1, 1914) off Coronel, Chile, during WW I. The German squadron under Admiral Graf von Spee decisively defeated an inferior British squadron under Sir Christopher Cradock (1862–1914), who went down with his flagship.

corporative state Economic system, first employed by the Italian Fascist government of B. Mussolini. It involved government control of the national economy while retaining elements of capitalism, and was adopted in part by Nazi Germany and by Spain under F. Franco.

Corpus Juris Canonici See canon law

Corpus Juris Civilis ⟨Justinian Code⟩ Roman legal code issued (529–535) by order of Byzantine emperor Justinian I. The voluminous work provided a systematic and comprehensive code of Roman law and greatly influenced later European legal systems. It consisted of four major parts: the Codex, a compilation of existing imperial ordinances; the Digesta, or Pandecta, a collection of extracts of written legal opinions on laws; the Institutiones, a manual on Roman law; and the Novellae, a compilation of imperial laws instituted by Justinian.

Cortes Spanish national assembly, which derives its name from the legislative assemblies formed (12th cent.) in various Spanish states.

Cortes, Hernando ⟨Cortez, ~⟩ 1485–1547. Spanish conqueror of Mexico (1519–21). He joined with D. Velázquez in conquering Cuba (1511) and was chosen by him to lead a military expedition into Mexico. Setting out (1519) with only 550 men, and ignoring Velázquez' orders for his recall, he conquered Mayan Indian tribes and then marched on the Aztec capital of Tenochtitlán (later Mexico City). By 1521 he had defeated both the Aztec Empire and the forces Velázquez had sent against him. He was, however, replaced (1526) by J. Ponce de León as governor of New Spain, a post King Charles V refused to restore to him.

Cossacks Russian peasant-soldiers, noted as cavalrymen in the Russian imperial armies. Cossacks in the 15th cent. were escaped serfs from Poland and Russia who formed independent settlements on the Ukrainian frontier. From the 16th cent. Cossack bands were in the service of Polish and Russian sovereigns and by the 18th cent. were under Russian domination. Although they lost their traditional autonomy, they eventually became a privileged military class in the Russian Empire. By the 1900s there were some 12 Cossack units, named for the geographic regions they occupied, including the Don and Kuban Cossacks. Cossacks were frequently used to put down rebellions. They fought the Bolsheviks during the Russian Civil War (1918–22). Under the new regime they lost their special privileges and their villages were turned into Communist collectives.

Costa e Silva, Artur da 1902–69. Brazilian president (1967–69). Head of a military regime that had seized power (1964) in Brazil, he initially attempted reforms but in 1968 dissolved congress and assumed dictatorial powers.

Costa Rica Republic located in Central America, bordered on the east by the Caribbean Sea and the west by the Pacific Ocean. Its capital is San José. Originally a Spanish colony, Costa Rica has a democratic constitutional government, and has enjoyed relative political stability throughout much of its history. Key dates in the history of Costa Rica include:

1502 Columbus discovered Caribbean coast; named it Costa Rica (rich coast).

c1563 Region subdued and brought under captaincy general of Guatemala.

1821 Declared independence from Spain (Sept. 15).

1822–23 Forced to join Mexican empire under A. de Iturbide.

1823–38 Iturbide's empire collapsed; Costa Rica joined United Provinces of Central America.

1848 Republic declared.

1857 Helped to defeat the filibuster W. Walker in Nicaragua.

1874 Banana cultivation introduced; coffee previously dominated agriculture.

1896 Disputed territory on boundary with Nicaragua awarded to Costa Rica.

1899 United Fruit Company founded to exploit the banana trade.

1917–19 Frederico Tinoco in office after overthrowing elected president Alfredo Gonzáles; US opposition brought his overthrow.

1918 Entered WW I on Allied side.

1941 Joined Allies in WW II.

1948 Disputed presidential election between Otilio Ulate and Rafael Calderón Guardia resulted in brief civil war; military junta, led by Col. José Figueres Ferrer seized power; Guardia's attempted invasion failed (Dec.).

1949–53 Ulate in office as president after new constitution was adopted (1949).

1951 Attempted coup by Guardia thwarted.

1951 Costa Rica joined the Organization of American States.

1953–58 Figueres in office as elected president.

1958–62 Mario Enchadi Jiménez in office as president after UN-supervised elections.

count European rank of nobility, equivalent to the German Graf and the English earl. The title derives from the Latin comes, originally an official in the Roman republic.

Count's War ⟨Feud of the Counts⟩ War of succession (1533–36) in Denmark. By confirming succession of Christian III, the war confirmed the Protestant Reformation in Denmark-Norway (then united under Christian) and established hereditary succession to the throne. On the death of King Frederick I (reigned 1523-33), Christian, a Lutheran and the legitimate heir, was opposed by Count Christopher of Oldenburg. Christian had the services of the Swedish navy, while Christopher had the support of Danish nobles and populace. The tide of the war turned in Christian's favor by 1535, when Christopher's army and naval forces were destroyed. Christopher finally surrendered (July 28, 1536) at Copenhagen.

Couthon, Georges 1755?–94. French revolutionary. He crushed a counterrevolution in Lyon (1793) and helped M. Robespierre conduct the Reign of Terror. He was guillotined after the coup d'état of 9 Thermidor (July 27, 1794).

Covenanters Scottish Presbyterians who, during crises in the 16th–17th cents., were sworn to defend their church by a solemn covenant. The first covenant was signed (1557) when Protestants opposed the Catholics in a struggle for power in Scotland. The National Covenant was signed (1638) to oppose Charles I's episcopal reforms and resulted in the Bishops' Wars (1639–40). By the Solemn League and Covenant (1643), the Scots became allies of the Parliamentarians in the early phase of the English Civil War. The Parliamentarians eventually turned against the Scots and defeated them (1650–51). After Charles's restoration (1660), renewed attempts at suppressing Presbyterianism led to rebellions and royal persecutions until the Glorious Revolution (1688).

Coward, Sir Noel 1899–1973. Playwright, actor, and composer. His sophisticated comedies included Hay Fever, Private Lives, and Blithe Spirit. He also produced the film Brief Encounter.

Cowell, Henry Dixon 1897–1965. American composer, one of the leading avant-garde American composers. He introduced the use of "tone clusters," several adjacent piano keys struck simultaneously.

Crane, Stephen 1871–1900. American writer. One of the pioneers of American realism, he is known best for his Civil War novel The Red Badge of Courage.

Cranmer, Thomas 1489–1556. English clergyman. He aided Henry VIII in dissolving his marriage to Catherine of Aragon and was appointed (1533) archbishop of Canterbury. Subsequently, he supported Henry variously as head of the Church of England and in Henry's other divorces. He compiled the Book of Common Prayer (1549) and played a major role in writing the Forty-two Articles. On the accession of Catholic Queen Mary he was burned for heresy.

Crashaw, Richard 1612–49. English poet noted for his religious poetry. A convert to Roman Catholicism, Crashaw traveled to France (1644), then to Italy, where he was influenced by the baroque style of art. His works include the volume Steps to the Temple.

Crassus, Lucius Licinius 140–91 BC. Roman politician and orator. He sponsored a law banishing those who had not legally attained Roman citizenship. The law was a major cause of the Social War.

Crassus, Marcus Licinius d. 53 BC. Roman politician. One of the wealthiest Romans, he suppressed (71 BC) the slave revolt led by Spartacus, and joined with J. Caesar and G. Pompey in the first Triumvirate (60 BC). His death while fighting the Parthians led to a power struggle between Caesar and Pompey.

Crazy Horse d. 1877. American Sioux Indian chief of the Oglala tribe. He was a leader in the defeat of Gen. G. Custer at the Battle of Little Bighorn (1876).

Creasy, Sir Edward Shepherd 1812–78. English historian. Creasy's major works include Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World and The History of the Ottoman Turks.

Crécy, Battle of Battle (Aug. 26, 1346) of the Hundred Years' War, at Crécy, France. English king Edward III led a force of some 10,000 to a decisive victory over about 20,000 French led by Philip VI. The English then advanced to besiege Calais.

Crédit Mobilier of America US railroad construction company involved in a major American financial scandal (1872). The scandal revolved around construction of the Union Pacific Railroad (1865–69), partly funded by federal loans and grants and partly by a Union Pacific bond issue.

Between 1865 and 1869, directors and principal stockholders of Union Pacific allowed exorbitant payments for construction to be made to Crédit Mobilier, which they owned. Crédit Mobilier in turn paid others for actual construction and thereby realized millions in profits. Union Pacific capital was thus systematically drained off and by 1869 the company was deeply in debt. The scandal broke during the 1872 presidential election campaign, when it was revealed that US congressman Oakes Ames (1804–73) and other politicians were involved in the corrupt dealings.

Creek Indians North American Indian tribe that once inhabited parts of Georgia and Alabama. In Colonial times, the Creek generally fought alongside English settlers in wars against the Spanish and Apache Indians, formed the unsuccessful Creek Confederation, and were defeated in the Creek War (1813–14). They were moved to Indian Territory in the 1830s. There the Creek became one of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Creek War War (1813–14) between the Creek Indians and the US. The Creek, British allies in the War of 1812, were stirred up by the Shawnee chief Tecumseh and began the war by massacring (Aug. 30, 1813) about 500 Americans at Fort Mims, Georgia. Gen. A. Jackson was sent with some 5,000 soldiers to subdue the Creek. After winning initial battles, Jackson put an end to the war by his decisive victory (Mar. 27, 1814) at the Battle of Horseshoe Bend. The Creek subsequently signed the Treaty of Fort Jackson (Aug. 9, 1814), giving up most of their tribal lands.

Creon Legendary Greek figure, the uncle of Oedipus. As regent of Thebes he rewarded Oedipus's victory over the Sphinx by giving him the kingdom and the hand of Jocasta, Oedipus's mother. As king of Thebes, Creon killed Antigone for disobeying him (by burying her brother Polynices).

Crépy, Treaty of ⟨Crespy, ~⟩ Treaty (Sept. 18, 1544, at Crépy, northern France) between Holy Roman Emperor Charles V (also king of Spain) and French king Francis I, ending wars between them (1521–44). By its terms Charles gave up claims to Burgundy, and Francis relinquished claims to Naples, Flanders, and Artois.

Crete Greek island. Crete was the center of the Minoan civilization (q.v.) and one of the earliest advanced cultures. By the 16th cent. BC it had spread its culture and influence to the Greek mainland and throughout the eastern Mediterranean and had established dynastic centers at Cnossos and Phaistos, its major cities. After the fall of the Minoans (*c*1400 BC), Crete was resettled by Dorian Greeks. It became an important commercial center and, in the 3d cent. BC, a haven for pirates. Annexed (67 BC) by Rome, it later became part of the Byzantine Empire, passed to Venice (1204) during the Fourth Crusade, and then to the Ottoman Turks (1715). Rivalry between Greece and Turkey for control of Crete led to the Greco-Turkish War (1897) and establishment (1898) of a semiautonomous state under European occupation. Crete declared its union with Greece (1908) and was officially annexed in 1913. During WW II, it was captured (May, 1941) by the Germans in the first successful major airborne operation.

Crimea Russian region, now part of the Ukrainian SSR. A peninsula extending from the Ukraine to the Black Sea, it has been conquered many times in history. It was the site of the Crimean War (1853–56).

Crimean War War in southeastern Europe (1853–56) fought by Russia against the Ottoman Turks and their allies, France, Britain, and Sardinia. A long series of Russo-Turkish Wars (q.v.) had resulted in Russian expansion in southeast Europe at the expense of the Turks. In the 19th cent., European powers became concerned over the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire (see Eastern Question). Rivalries between France (a long-time ally of the Ottomans) and Russia finally provided the spark that led to war. British and French troops bore the brunt of fighting and the allies were ultimately victorious. The war broke Russian dominance in southeastern Europe. Key events in the Crimean War include:

1851–53 France challenged Russia's position as custodian of Christian holy places within the Ottoman Empire; it sought special considerations for Latin Christian churches from the Ottoman Turks; these were granted (1852) and the Russians, who favored Greek Orthodox Christians, were roused to action.

1853 Russian Czar Nicholas I delivered ultimatum to Turkish government (May); Russian demands refused; Russian forces occupied (July) Moldavia and Walachia (now in Romania).

1853 Ottoman Empire declared war on Russia (Oct. 23).

1854 France and Britain declared war on Russia (Mar.).

1854 Russia withdrew from Moldavia and Walachia under pressure from Austria; Austrian army moved into the region (Aug.).

1854 British and French forces landed on the Crimean Peninsula on the north coast of the Black Sea; victorious in the Battle of Alma River (Sept. 20) soon after; Russian forces withdrew to Sevastopol.

1854 Allied forces began siege of Sevastopol, key Russian position on Black Sea (Oct.).

1854 Battle of Balaklava fought (Oct. 25); Russians failed to break siege of Sevastopol but inflicted heavy casualties on the British; this battle inspired Tennyson's famous poem Charge of the Light Brigade.

1854–55 Military action halted during winter; severe conditions suffered by the war casualties led to Florence Nightingale's celebrated nursing efforts.

1855 Sardinia declared war against Russia (Jan.).

1855 Nicholas died (Mar.); Alexander II became Russian czar; moved to negotiate an end to the war.

1855 Russian forces marching to relieve Sevastopol defeated at Battle of Chernaya River (Aug. 16).

1855 Allied forces besieging Sevastopol captured Malakhov fortress (Sept. 8); Russians forced to evacuate Sevastopol (Sept. 11).

1856 Treaty of Paris (Mar. 30) formally ended hostilities.

Crime of '73 Name for the US government's move (1873) to stop minting the silver dollar. The action was vigorously opposed by Populists and other advocates of free silver (q.v.). The 1878 Bland-Allison Act (q.v.) restored the silver dollar as legal tender.

Cripps Mission Unsuccessful diplomatic mission (Mar. 22-Apr. 12, 1942) to India, in which the British government offered eventual independence in exchange for India's support during WW II. With India in the midst of its long drive for independence and with the Japanese threatening invasion of India from the East, the British sent Sir Stafford Cripps (1889–1952) to negotiate for India's help in fending off the Japanese. Indian leader M. Gandhi opposed the plan for phased independence after the war and the Indian National Congress rejected it (Apr. 11). The Congress later called (Aug. 8) for immediate independence. The subsequent arrest of its leaders resulted in mass demonstrations and an official ban on the Congress.

Crispi, Francesco 1819–1901. Italian statesman. He aided G. Garibaldi in the conquest of Sicily (1860) and served as Italian premier (1887–91, 1893–96).

Crispin and Crispinian, Saints fl. 3d cent. Christian martyrs, patron saints of shoemakers, whose trade they followed. Said to have been brothers, they were beheaded by order of Roman emperor Maximilian.

Crittenden Compromise Unsuccessful legislation proposed (Dec., 1860) in a final attempt to avert the US Civil War. Put forward by Kentucky senator John J. Crittenden (1787–1863), the measures attempted to rework the Missouri Compromise (1820). Crittenden sought to continue the Fugitive Slave Laws, uphold the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty in new territories, and sanction slavery in the District of Columbia. The measure was defeated in the Senate by one vote (Mar., 1861).

Croatia Historic region now a constituent republic of Yugoslavia. Settled by Croats in the 7th cent., it formed a union with Hungary (1102). Its Westernization and acceptance of Christianity set it apart from the Slavs. It was conquered by the Turks (16th cent.) and by Napoleon (1809–13). In 1918, the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes joined to form Yugoslavia. There has been periodic agitation in Croatia for greater autonomy.

Croce, Benedetto 1866–1952. Italian philosopher, historian, critic, and statesman. Founder (1903) of the journal La Critica, he strongly opposed Fascism and was a leader of the Liberal party after WW II.

Crockett, David 1786–1836. American frontiersman and politician. He fought against the Creek Indians in the War of 1812 and was a member of Congress (1827–31, 1833–35). He died at the Alamo.

Croesus d. 546? BC. Last king of Lydia (560–546 BC), successor to his father, Alyattes, and famed for his great wealth. He was defeated in battle by Cyrus the Great at Sardis (546).

Croker, Richard 1841–1922. Irish-born American politician. He was leader (1886–1902) of New York's Tammany Hall.

Cromwell, Oliver 1599–1658. British soldier and statesman, a hero of the English Civil War (1642–49) and head of government during the Commonwealth and Protectorate (1649–58). A leader of the Parliamentarians before the outbreak of war, he later distinguished himself as a military commander (eventually second in command of the New Model Army) at such battles as Marston Moor (1644), Naseby (1645), Preston (1648), and Worcester (1651). He ordered King Charles I's execution (1649), and on formation of the Commonwealth (1649) became its leader. He invaded and subdued Ireland (1649) and Scotland (1650–51). Taking on dictatorial powers, he dissolved (1653) the Rump Parliament and others in following years. After the failure of his Barebones Parliament, he was made (1653) Lord Protector, thus establishing the English Protectorate, but was unable in his last years to form a stable parliamentary government. Two years after his death the Convention Parliament restored (1660) the English monarchy. He failed in his attempts to form an international Protestant league, concluded the first of the Dutch Wars, and added Jamaica and Dunkirk to the English possessions.

Cromwell, Thomas, earl of Essex 1485?–1540. English statesman. He served as secretary to Cardinal Wolsey and later rose to become chief counselor to King Henry VIII. In Henry's service he played a major role in the Protestant Reformation, and arranged the king's marriage to Anne of Cleves. Henry's dissatisfaction with the match contributed to Cromwell's downfall and beheading.

Crusade (See also individual crusades.) Principally, the medieval wars undertaken (11th–13th cents.) by European Christians to reconquer the Holy Land from the Muslims. Brought on by Seljuk conquests in the region and appeals for aid from Byzantine emperor Alexius I, the First Crusade was preached (1095) by Pope Urban II at the Council of Clermont. Thereafter the crusades became a popular vehicle for spiritual and material gain throughout Europe and resulted in nine (including the Children's Crusade) major expeditions against the Muslims. The term "crusade" was later used in reference to military expeditions, sanctioned by the pope, against heretics and others.

Crusade, Children's Ill-fated crusade (1212) by unarmed children to free the Holy Land. Supported by church authorities after the disgrace of the Fourth Crusade, it included contingents from France and Germany. In France, some 30,000 youths, led by the visionary peasant boy Stephen of Cloyes, left by ship (Aug., 1212) from Marseilles. Those who survived passage to Alexandria were sold into slavery. The German group of 20,000 youths, led by the German boy Nicholas of Cologne, marched across the Alps to Italy. Most, however, died or deserted along the way.

Crusade, First Holy war (1096–99) by European Christians to aid the Byzantines in the recapture of the Holy Land from the Muslims (Seljuks). The only successful crusade, it resulted in formation of the Crusader States (see below). Wandering preachers, notably Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless, spread the message of the crusade in Europe and raised hordes of peasant followers. These disorganized bands marched (1096) to Constantinople, robbing villages and massacring Jews along the way. They were quickly thrown into battle against the Muslims (and killed) in Asia Minor. Organized contingents of crusader knights arrived at Constantinople (late 1096), where Byzantine king Alexis I demanded an oath of loyalty from them. Fighting against Muslims began the next year and included victories for the crusaders at Nicaea (1097), Dorylaeum (1097), and Antioch (1098). Finally, some 20,000 crusaders marched to Jerusalem, took the city (July 15, 1099), and massacred Muslims and Jews. The crusade ended with the Battle of Ashkelon (Aug. 12, 1099), when crusaders defeated an army of Egyptian Muslims near Jerusalem. The crusaders set up the Crusader States, including the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem, the Principality of Antioch, and the counties of Edessa (under Baldwin, later Baldwin I of Jerusalem) and Tripoli (under Raymond IV).

Crusade, Second Holy war (1147–49) fought by European Christians after the Muslims captured Edessa (1144) from the crusaders. Preached by Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, the crusade involved a combined force of 140,000, led by Holy Roman Emperor Conrad III and French king Louis VII. The Germans and French departed for Constantinople (Apr., 1147), pillaged Byzantine territories along the way, and were quickly sent to Asia Minor by Byzantine emperor Manuel I. The Germans were nearly wiped out in a surprise attack at Dorylaeum (Oct., 1147) and the French were likewise reduced by the Muslims. The remnants of the two forces combined (1148) and unsuccessfully attacked Damascus (1148). They were badly mauled in the ensuing retreat. Conrad left for Europe (1148) and Louis' departure (1149) brought the crusade to an end.

Crusade, Third Holy war (1189–92) fought by European Christians after the capture (1187) of Jerusalem by the Egyptian sultan Saladin. Preached by Pope Gregory VIII, the crusade was led by Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I, English king Richard I, and French king Philip II. Frederick died on the way, and Richard and Philip arrived (1191) to join the siege at Acre (under way since 1189). The city was taken (July, 1191), and after a quarrel with Richard, Philip returned to France. Richard negotiated a truce (1192) with Saladin, in which the Christians retained only a small part of the former kingdom of Jerusalem and access to Jerusalem. The crusade ended with Richard's departure (Oct., 1192).

Crusade, Fourth Holy war (1202–04) fought by European Christians, originally directed against Muslim conquerors of the Holy Land. This crusade brought the crusades into discredit and ended with the formation of the Latin Empire of Constantinople. Preached by Pope Innocent III, the crusade was led by French noblemen. Assembling at Venice (1202), they agreed, in return for passage to the Holy Land, to help Venice capture the city of Zara on the Adriatic. For this they were briefly excommunicated by the pope. The crusaders, promised money and aid, again diverted from their mission and moved to reinstate deposed Byzantine emperor Isaac II (d. 1204). The crusaders arrived at Constantinople and put Isaac (1203) on the throne, only to see him overthrown (1204) by Alexis V. The crusaders thereupon sacked the city and set up the Latin Empire (1204), ending, for a time, the existence of the Byzantine Empire.

Crusade, Fifth Holy war (1218–21) fought by European Christians against Muslim Egypt. Preached by Pope Innocent III, the crusade was led by papal legate Cardinal Pelagius, Hungarian king Andrew II, and John of Brienne. Crusaders attacked (May, 1218) Damietta on the Nile delta and, following a long siege, captured (Nov., 1219) the city. Their long-delayed advance up the Nile (July, 1221) foundered in the rising flood waters of the river, and the crusaders were forced ultimately to evacuate Egypt (Sept., 1221).

Crusade, Sixth Holy war (1228–29) undertaken by Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. After failure of the Fifth Crusade, Frederick was obliged to take some action. He set out in 1227, was excommunicated by Pope Gregory IX for delaying, and continued to Acre where he negotiated (1229) a 10-year treaty with the Egyptians without engaging in any hostilities. Despite opposition from Christian factions in Jerusalem, he was crowned king of the city (1229) and returned to Europe. Unrest between these factions ensued and Turkish and Egyptian Muslims retook the city (1244).

Crusade, Seventh Holy war (1248–54) undertaken by French king Louis IX. With the support of Pope Innocent IV, Louis embarked (1248) and attacked Egypt (May, 1249) with a force of 15,000 soldiers. Damietta (on the Nile delta) fell to the Christians again (1249) but further advances toward Cairo (1250) met with disaster. Louis was captured (and later ransomed) and many of his soldiers were massacred. Damietta was evacuated, and Louis spent the next four years in Jerusalem (to 1254) in attempts to gain release of his captured soldiers and to better fortify Christian positions in the Holy Land.

Crusade, Eighth Last of the holy wars (1270), undertaken by French king Louis IX. With the rise of Mameluke sultan Baybars (reigned 1260–77), the Muslims began renewed conquests of Christian territories in the Holy Land. Louis began preparations in 1267 (Antioch fell in 1268) and departed July, 1270. He landed at Tunis, but his force was struck by disease. Louis died and his army withdrew. Subsequently (in what is sometimes called the Ninth Crusade), Prince Edward (later Edward I) landed at Acre (1271), concluded a treaty (1272) with the Muslims, and withdrew. Muslim conquests continued, however, and the last Christian outpost in the Holy Land was lost (1291) at the Battle of Acre. Thereafter crusaders withdrew to Cyprus.

Crusade, Ninth Name sometimes given to the final phase of the Eighth Crusade (q.v.).

Crystal Palace Famous English exhibition hall. Constructed of iron and glass, it was built at Hyde Park for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and was reerected near London, where it stood until razed by fire (1936).

Cuba Island republic located in the West Indies. Its capital is Havana. First discovered (1492) by C. Columbus and colonized by Spain, it became the center for Spanish colonization in the New World and was the last Spanish stronghold to gain independence (19th cent.). Cuba came under increasing US domination after the Spanish-American War, until F. Castro's successful revolution in 1959 turned the island into a strategic Communist stronghold in the West. It became a base for the promotion of revolutions in Latin America, in the 1960s. Key dates in the history of Cuba include:

1492 C. Columbus discovered Cuba.

EARLY 1500s Spanish began colonization of Cuba; used island as base for colonial expansion in the New World.

1763 British occupied Havana (1762) during Seven Years' War; Spanish control of Cuba restored by Treaty of Paris.

1868–78 Ten Years' War against Spanish rule; revolt ended in failure.

1886 Slavery abolished.

1895 New war against Spanish rule, led by José Martí, began.

1898 US government and citizens outraged by accounts of Spanish brutality in Cuba; war fever reached height with the sinking of US battleship Maine in Havana harbor (Feb.).

1898 Spanish-American War; Spain defeated, Cuba made independent under US military control.

1901 In US, the Platt Amendment placed Cuba under US protection and stated that US could intervene in Cuba militarily.

1902 Estrada Palma became first president of Cuba.

EARLY 1900s Massive US investment in Cuba began; led to uprising in Cuba and US military intervention (1906–09); US again intervened in 1912, 1917.

1925–33 Gerardo Machado served as president; instituted numerous reforms but became increasingly repressive and was overthrown (1933) by Fulgencio Batista.

1933–59 Batista regime; Batista controlled Cuban politics from 1933 to 1952; seized power (1952) and established a dictatorship.

1934 US scrapped unpopular Platt Amendment.

1953 F. Castro staged unsuccessful uprising the year after Batista seized power.

1956 Castro began guerrilla war, centered in Oriente province, against Batista.

1958 US cut off military aid to Cuba.

1959 Batista fled Cuba (Jan. 1); Castro marched triumphantly into Havana, beginning Cuban revolution.

1959–61 Castro's revolution grew increasingly Communist in orientation; thousands were arrested, many executed; property, notably US holdings, was confiscated; US broke diplomatic relations (Jan., 1961).

1961 Castro openly avowed communism.

1961 Bay of Pigs invasion (Apr.) by US-backed Cuban exiles was crushed.

1962 Cuba expelled from council of Organization of American States.

1962 Cuban Missile Crisis (Oct.).

1973 Agreement with US for return of hijackers marked a shift toward better relations with the US.

1975 Cuban troops in Angola to support Marxist regime.

1977 US eased some restrictions on trade and travel to Cuba.

1978 Cuban troops in Ethiopia to aid Marxist regime there.

1978 Castro agreed to allow emigration of political prisoners to US; 50,000 others with relatives outside Cuba also allowed to leave.

1980 Cuban boat people; Castro, angered by swarms of refugees anxious to leave Cuba, opened a port to boats from US; refugees, including Cuban criminals, transported to US by tens of thousands (Apr.–Sept.).

Cuban Missile Crisis US-USSR Cold War confrontation (Oct. 22, 1962–Jan. 7, 1963) over installation of ballistic missiles in Cuba. The crisis nearly precipitated nuclear war between the US and the USSR. After the US-backed Bay of Pigs Invasion (1961), Soviet chairman N. Khrushchev authorized installation of the missiles on Cuban soil. US president J. Kennedy proclaimed a naval quarantine of Cuba (Oct. 22, 1962) after learning of the sites and publicly warned that an attack from Cuban bases would mean US retaliation against Russia itself. Khrushchev gave in to US demands for withdrawal of the missiles (Oct. 28) and the US promised not to invade Cuba. The US lifted its quarantine (Nov. 20) and, in a formal note to the UN (Jan. 7, 1963), the US and Russia announced the end of the crisis.

Cuban Revolution Phase of modern Cuban history that began on Jan. 1, 1959, with the overthrow of the regime of F. Batista by F. Castro and his band of insurgents. Castro, heading his 26th of July Movement (q.v.), had earlier attempted to invade Cuba with a force of revolutionaries (Dec., 1956), but his forces had been defeated and scattered. A small band hid out in the Sierra Maestra Mountains, conducting guerrilla actions and acquiring new recruits, until Castro was finally able to take over. His immediate efforts to install a socialist government brought quick US reactions in the form of an economic and sugar boycott and, later, the disastrous Bay of Pigs Invasion (q.v.). Soviet support of the Cuban Revolution brought about (Oct., 1962) the Cuban Missile Crisis (q.v.), when the USSR tried to install offensive missiles there. Cuba became a virtual Soviet satellite, and over the years has pursued a policy of "exporting" revolution by its involvement in political upheavals in Latin America and even Africa (Angola). Castro's style of socialism remained highly personal despite his dependence on the Soviet bloc.

cubism Artistic movement. A reaction against realism and impressionism, cubism reduced all objects to their basic geometrical shapes. Famed cubists include P. Picasso and G. Braque.

Cuchulain Legendary Irish warrior, noted for his great strength. According to one legend, he single-handedly defended Ulster against an attack by the combined armies of Ireland.

Culpeper, John See Culpeper's Rebellion

Culpeper's Rebellion American Colonial uprising (1677–79). Led by John Culpeper (fl. 1677), Carolina colonists rebelled against restrictive British trade laws and established their own government (1677–79).

Cult of Reason Short-lived extremist anti-Catholic movement during the French Revolution led by P. Chaumette, J. Hébert, and others. Chaumette staged the first worship ceremony for the cult in Notre Dame Cathedral and he later ordered Paris churches closed. The cult was abolished (1794) and its leaders executed by Robspierre.

Cultural Revolution ⟨Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution⟩ Chinese political movement (1966–69) headed by Mao Tse-tung and intended to help purge the Chinese Communist party of bourgeois or capitalist elements. Implemented by brigades of young people known as Red Guards, the movement spread to touch every facet of life in China and seriously damaged China's cultural, industrial, and political development.

Cyprus Island republic (pop. 630,000) in the Mediterranean, site of Mt. Olympus. Populated since Neolithic times (*c*4000–3000 BC), its development was strongly influenced after 1500 BC by Greece. Conquered many times, including by the Ottoman Turks (1571), Cyprus was placed under British administration (1878) and was annexed by Britain (1914). It gained independence in 1960. Continuous strife between Greek Cypriots (80 percent of pop.) and Turkish Cypriots (18 percent) led to serious clashes between Greece and Turkey. A military coup (July 15, 1974) resulted in the ouster of President Makarios by rebels seeking union with Greece. Turkey invaded Cyprus (July 20) to protect the Turkish Cypriots and took half of the island. Makarios became president again (Dec. 7) and Turkish Cypriots withdrew to a sector in the north. The situation remains unresolved.

Cyrus the Great d. 529 BC. Persian king (*c*550–529 BC), founder of the Persian Empire. He overthrew the Median king Astyages (*c*550 BC), conquered Lydia (*c*546 BC) and Babylonia (538 BC), and extended his empire into Asia. He freed the Jews in Babylonia, ending the Babylonian Captivity.

Cyrus the Younger d. 401 BC. Persian prince, son of Darius II. After his brother Artaxerxes II became king (404 BC), Cyrus conspired against him. Raising an army against Artaxerxes, he was defeated and killed in the Battle of Cunaxa.

Czechoslovakia Federal republic located in central Europe. Its capital is Prague. Czechoslovakia was formed (1918) during the dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Empire at the end of WW I. Czechoslovakia included the historic regions of Bohemia, Moravia, and Slovakia as well as Ruthenia, which became part of the Soviet Union in 1945. Czechoslovakia was dismembered on the eve of WW II (1938–39) by Germany, Poland, and Hungary and was reestablished (1945) at the end of the war. Key dates in the history of Czechoslovakia include:

1916 Czechoslovak National Council formed (Jan.) for creation of independent nation.

1918 Czech National Council proclaimed itself the government in the Czech lands (Oct. 28) and formed union with Slovakia (Nov. 14); Tomáš Masaryk became first president of Czechoslovakia.

1919 Republic of Czechoslovakia recognized by Allied powers and Austria, by Treaty of St. Germain (Sept.).

1920 Treaty of Trianon (June); Hungary recognized Czechoslovakia, and Ruthenia was added to its territory.

1920–21 Little Entente, defensive pact formed by Czechoslovakia, Romania, and Yugoslavia.

1930s In Germany, rise of A. Hitler as dictator coincided with rise of German nationalist agitation in northwestern Czechoslovakia (Sudetenland) for union with Germany.

1935 Masaryk resigned as president; succeeded by Eduard Beneš.

1938 Hitler's demands in Czechoslovakia led to crisis in Europe; war temporarily averted by Munich Pact (Sept. 29); major European powers agreed to cession of Sudetenland to Germany.

1938 Beneš resigned as president (Oct. 5); succeeded by Emil Hácha; Czechoslovakia reorganized as federated republic of Czecho-Slovakia (Nov.).

1938 Poland occupied part of Czechoslovakia (Oct.).

1939 Germany and Hungary completed dismemberment of Czechoslovakia (Mar.); Germany declared protectorate over Bohemia and Moravia and occupied Slovakia; Hungary annexed Ruthenia, renamed Carpatho-Ukraine.

1940 Beneš established Czech government-in-exile in London during WW II.

1945 Czechoslovakia reconstituted at end of WW II; Ruthenia (Carpatho-Ukraine) incorporated into Soviet Union (July); Beneš again became president of Czechoslovakia (Oct.).

1946 Communist Party became leading political party in Czechoslovakian national elections.

1948 Communists secured virtual control of Czech government (Feb.).

1948 Jan Masaryk, non-Communist foreign minister, died (Mar. 10) in fall from window; death called suicide by government.

1949 New constitution establishing Czechoslovakia as a People's Democratic Republic, modeled on Soviet lines (May 9); Beneš resigned as president (June 7); constitution signed into law (June 8) by his successor, Communist Party leader Klement Gottwald.

1950–52 Series of government and party purges instituted to consolidate Communist Party control in Czechoslovakia.

1957–68 Antonin Novotný served as president.

1968 Alexander Dubček became Communist Party leader (Jan.), replacing A. Novotný; Ludvík Svoboda made president (Mar.); Prague Spring, program of liberalization, began under Dubček's direction.

1968 Warsaw Pact forces led by Soviet army invaded Czechoslovakia (Aug. 20); most of the Prague Spring reforms instituted were reversed.

1969 Dubček ousted as party leader (Apr.).

1970 Dubček expelled from Communist Party (June).

1975 Gustav Husak in office as president.

1977 Over 200 Czech intellectuals signed a petition demanding compliance with human rights provisions of the Helsinki agreement; hundreds of others added their signatures as police began arresting those who signed (Jan. 6); sporadic arrests continued into the early 1980s.

Czechoslovak National Council Nationalist organization of Czechs and Slovaks. Formed (Jan., 1916) by T. Masaryk, E. Beneš, and others, it became the first provisional Czech government when the republic was established (Nov. 14, 1918).

Daniel An Old Testament prophet, taken captive to Babylon (605 BC). He interpreted dreams for Nebuchadnezzar, became an official, and had to be delivered from the lion's den where he had been thrown by Darius for disobeying an edict.

Daniels, Josephus 1862–1948. American statesman and journalist. He was editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, secretary of the navy under W. Wilson, and ambassador to Mexico under F. Roosevelt.

Danilo I 1677–1735. Montenegrin leader, the last elected prince-bishop of Montenegro. The post was made hereditary to the prince-bishops' nephews thereafter. He formed a military alliance with Russia in order to help preserve Montenegrin independence against the Turks.

Danilo II 1826–60. Montenegrin prince-bishop. Danilo secularized his post, retaining his princely title but transferring his religious duties to an archbishop. He continued to fight the Turks, but his internal reforms provoked dissent and he was assassinated.

D'Annunzio, Gabriele 1863–1938. Italian poet, dramatist, novelist, and soldier. His poetry was richly sensual; in other writings he espoused Fascism. He was an Italian hero in WW I and afterward occupied Fiume for Italy (1919–21) in defiance of the Treaty of Versailles.

Dante Alighieri 1265–1321. Italian poet, and author of The Divine Comedy, one of the greatest masterpieces of Western literature. Dante, through his works, helped to establish the Italian vernacular as the literary language of Italy. Raised in Florence, he was exiled (1302) after a factional struggle among the Guelphs, of which he was a member. He wandered through various Italian cities until sometime after 1313, when he settled in Ravenna. The Divine Comedy, partly inspired by a continuing romantic devotion to a woman thought to be Beatrice Portinari, consists of three parts: Hell, Purgatory, and Paradise. In this epic poem, he journeys to each of the three, guided through the first two by Vergil (q.v.) and through heaven by Beatrice.

Danton, Georges Jacques 1759–94. A leading figure in the French Revolution, Danton was noted as a powerful orator and has been portrayed variously as a great patriot and an unscrupulous politician. He was a leader of the Cordeliers (founded 1790), and vigorously supported wars of national defense against foreign powers while serving in the Legislative Assembly (1791–92.) He claimed to have played a role (nature uncertain) in the storming of the Tuileries Palace (Aug. 1792) and subsequent overthrow of the monarchy, then arose as a leading figure in the new government. He was elected to the new National Convention (1792), voted for the execution of Louis XVI, and became leader of the Jacobin Club (Mar. 1793). He was a leader of the Committee of Public Safety (Apr.–July, 1793) and was in power when the Girondists (June) were expelled from the Convention. Excluded from the new Committee of Public Safety (soon dominated by Robespierre), Danton became a leader of forces (later called Indulgents) seeking to moderate radicalism of the revolution and excesses of the Reign of Terror. He was finally arrested by Robespierre and guillotined (Apr. 5, 1794).

Danzig (Gdańsk) Polish city (pop. 364,300) and major Baltic seaport. First mentioned in the 10th cent., it joined the Hanseatic League (13th cent.). It alternated between being a free city and a part of Prussia. A. Hitler's demand that it be returned to Germany in 1939 was the immediate cause of his invasion of Poland, precipitating WW II. The city again rose to prominence as a center of labor unrest (1980–81), fostered by Solidarity (q.v.).

Daphne In Greek mythology, a nymph, daughter of a river god. She rejected all suitors, including Apollo, and was changed into a laurel tree to escape him.

Dario, Ruben ⟨Sarmiento, Felix Ruben Garcia⟩ 1867–1916. Nicaraguan-born poet and journalist. A leader of Modernismo, he strongly influenced modern Spanish-language writers with works such as Azul (1888).

Darius I ⟨~ the Great⟩ *c*549–486 BC. Persian king (521–486 BC) and successor to Cambyses II, after defeating a false claimant, Magian Gomates. Darius, a member of Achaemenid (q.v.) dynasty, proved a great ruler. He extended the Persian Empire into northern India and Europe, and in battle against the Scythians he invaded Macedonia and Thrace (515). He was, however, unsuccessful in his efforts against the Greek city-states during the Persian Wars (q.v.). Noted as a great builder and administrator, he created an effective administrative organization based on a system of satrapies.

Darius II ⟨Darius Nothus⟩ d. 404 BC. Persian king (423–404 BC), illegitimate son of Artaxerxes. He spent much time suppressing revolts, formed an alliance with Sparta against Athens (*c*412 BC), and lost Egypt (410 BC).

Darius III ⟨Codomannus, Darius⟩ d. 330 BC. Last king of Persia's Achaemenid (q.v.) dynasty (336–330 BC). He was defeated by Alexander the Great at Granicus (334), Issus (333), and Gaugamela (331). He fled, only to be murdered by one of his satraps, Bessus.

Dark Ages A period of European history between the decline of Roman civilization and the rise of medieval Christian civilization. It is often dated from AD 476–800, or, more generally, between AD *c*500 and *c*1000. (See also Middle Ages.)

Darlan, Jean François 1881–1942. French admiral, member of H. Pétain's cabinet in the Vichy government (q.v.). He negotiated an armistice with the Allies in North Africa independently of Vichy (1942) and then was assassinated by an antifascist.

Darnley, Henry Stuart, Lord 1545–67. Scottish lord. Darnley was the second husband of Mary, Queen of Scots, and father of James I of England. After his implication in the murder of Mary's secretary David Rizzio (1533?–66), he was himself assassinated.

Darrow, Clarence Seward 1857–1938. American lawyer. He was defense counsel in controversial trials such as that for US Socialist E. Debs in the 1894 Pullman strike (q.v.); for Chicago thrill killers Leopold and Loeb (1924); and in the 1925 Scopes Trial (q.v.) on the teaching of evolution, where he was opposed by W. J. Bryan.

Dartmouth College case US Supreme Court decision (1819). The court ruled that New Hampshire could not forcibly alter the charter or character of Dartmouth College. This ruling applied the sanctity-of-contracts principle to a state-issued charter and powerfully reinforced the Constitution's contract clause as a protection of private property against state encroachment.

Darwin, Charles Robert 1809–82. English naturalist, who established Darwinism (q.v.) as the reigning scientific theory of biological evolution. Though he did not originate the concept of evolution, his many observations and explanations of the mechanisms of natural selection provided the first widely accepted basis for the theory. A grandson of E. Darwin, he first became convinced of gradual evolution while serving (1831–36) as a naturalist aboard HMS Beagle. He subsequently began a long period of research and observation. Prodded by the work of A. Wallace, who reached (1858) the same conclusions independently, Darwin published (1859) his famous On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection. He supplemented this with many other works, notably The Descent of Man.

Darwin, Erasmus 1731–1802. English physician and grandfather both of C. Darwin and F. Galton.

In his writings such as Zoonomia (1794–96), he anticipated later evolutionary principles.

Darwinism Theory of biological evolution developed by C. Darwin (mid-19th cent.) and now accepted, with some modifications, as the reigning scientific theory of evolution. Though the idea of evolution was not new, Darwin's theory explained the mechanisms which established it in the scientific community. The theory posed radical implications for religious thinkers and philosophers. Darwinism supplanted the then widely accepted theory of a special creation of each species. It postulated three mechanisms: heredity, by which features of a species are passed to succeeding generations; variety (now understood as mutation), the process by which new features are developed; and natural selection (later dubbed "survival of the fittest"), through which new characteristics become dominant by being tested in the environment.

Dathan An Old Testament chieftain. Dathan was a Reubenite who joined in a conspiracy with Korah (q.v.).

Daudet, Alphonse 1840–97. French writer. He was noted for his gentle, humorous portrayal of provincial life in the south of France, as in Lettres de Mon Moulin (1869).

Daudet, Léon 1867–1942. French writer and journalist, son of A. Daudet. He cofounded the royalist paper L'Action Française (1907) and was known for his polemics against his times, which he considered decadent.

Daugherty, Harry Micajah 1860–1941. American politician and US attorney general (1921–24) under W. G. Harding. He was tried but not convicted of a conspiracy to defraud the US government (1927) because of his alleged involvement in the Teapot Dome (q.v.) and other scandals.

Daumier, Honoré 1801–79. French caricaturist, painter, and lithographer. His work satirized the bourgeoisie, and he was briefly imprisoned for depicting King Louis Philippe as Gargantua, but he is considered a major realistic artist.

Daun, Leopold, Graf von 1705–66. Austrian soldier. Field marshal during the Seven Years' War (1756–63), he twice defeated Frederick the Great's Prussian army (1757 and 1758) but was defeated at Torgau (1760). He advocated a classic war of maneuver.

dauphin Title of the heir to the French throne. It was first given to the future Charles V by his grandfather Philip VI (1350) when the latter acquired the southeastern province of Dauphiné from which the title was taken.

Dauphiné Former French frontier province in the southeast. Its capital was Grenoble. Formerly ruled by the counts of Vienne, it was purchased by the French crown in the mid-14th cent.

David *d. c*973 BC. Second king of Israel (*c*1013–*c*973 BC), one of the great figures in the Old Testament, and an ancestor of Jesus. A heroic figure for both Christians and Jews, David is the subject of such famous biblical narratives as the David and Goliath story. Many of the psalms are also attributed to him. David succeeded Saul as king of the Hebrews, after first serving and then warring against him. As king, David forged the confederation of Hebrew tribes into a unified kingdom and fixed his capital at Jerusalem.

David I 1084–1153. King of Scotland (1124–53), son of Malcolm III and Saint Margaret. He defended his niece Matilda's claims to the English throne against Stephen, but was defeated in 1138 at the Battle of the Standards. He introduced the Anglo-Norman feudal system into Scotland and founded many monasteries.

David II ⟨David Bruce⟩ 1324–71. King of Scotland (1329–71). Son of Robert the Bruce. When Scotland was successfully invaded by E. de Baliol, he was exiled to France (1334–41). He tried to invade England (1346) after regaining the throne but was routed at the Battle of Neville's Cross (q.v.), captured, and held prisoner until 1357. Most of the rest of his reign was spent trying to pay off his ransom.

David, Jacques Louis 1748–1825. French painter, founder of the French classical school. He was court painter to Louis XVI but then supported the French Revolution. Later he was Napoleon's court painter. One of his best-known works is The Assassination of Marat (1793). He dominated French painting for a generation.

David, Saint d. 588? Patron saint of Wales. He founded many churches and monasteries and moved the seat of ecclesiastical government to Mynyw (Menevia), today Saint David's. The national Welsh festival is still celebrated on his feast day of Mar. 1.

Davis, David 1815–86. American jurist and statesman. Davis was frequently presiding judge when A. Lincoln practiced law, and was named by him to the US Supreme Court (1862). He later served as US senator from Illinois.

Davis, Jefferson 1808–89. American soldier, statesman, and president of the Confederacy (1861–65) during the US Civil War. A Mississippi senator (1847–51) and soldier in the Mexican War, he became US secretary of war (1853–57). Again in the Senate (1857–61), he led the Southern bloc until Mississippi seceded. As Confederate president (provisional, 1861, and elected 1862), he attempted to form a strong central government. This policy and his attempts to manage the army personally led to many disputes within the Confederate government. Davis was captured (1865) by Union soldiers after Lee's surrender and was imprisoned for two years.

Davis, John ⟨Davys, John⟩ *c*1550–1605. English navigator who made three voyages (1585–87) in search of the Northwest Passage (q.v.) during which he discovered Davis Strait. He discovered the Falkland Islands in 1592. He was killed by Japanese pirates while sailing near Singapore.

Davis, John William 1873–1955. American lawyer and politician. He was a West Virginia congressman (1911–13), US solicitor general (1913–18), and ambassador to England (1918–21). In 1924, he was the Democratic compromise candidate for president, chosen on the 103d ballot after a deadlocked convention; but he was easily defeated by C. Coolidge in the election.

Davis, William Morris 1850–1934. American geographer and geologist. He formulated the theory of land change through cycles of erosion, introduced the term "peneplain" to describe a rolling lowland, and wrote The Coral Reef Problem (1928).

Davout, Louis Nicolas 1770–1823. French general. He fought successfully for Napoleon at Austerlitz (1805), Auerstedt (1806), and Wagram (1809), and joined the Russian campaign (1812–13). He was Napoleon's minister of war during the Hundred Days (1815).

de Gaulle, Charles 1890–1970. French general and first president (1959–69) of the Fifth Republic. A WW I veteran and a brigadier general, he opposed the armistice (1940) with Germany after the fall of France and organized the Free French forces in London (1940). He became copresident (1943) with H. Giraud of the French Committee of National Liberation at Algiers and, by mid-1944, had made himself sole president. He returned to France (Aug., 1944) amid the Allied victories and served briefly as president of the provisional French government (Nov., 1945-Jan., 1946). He was recalled (May, 1958) to lead France out of the crisis over Algerian independence, and after passage (Nov. 1958) of a new constitution created the Fifth Republic, he was elected president. He supported Algerian independence, though rebellions by the French in Algeria delayed it until 1962. During his long tenure, de Gaulle sought to restore France's waning prestige. He ended French participation in NATO (1966), developed a French nuclear-weapons program, blocked Britain's entry into the Common Market, and pursued an independent foreign policy that included establishing closer ties with China and Russia. His government survived serious student and labor unrest (May, 1968) but he was forced to resign (1969) after his referendum on political reforms was defeated.

Delaware US state (pop. 595,200) in the Middle Atlantic region; the first state. Originally inhabited by the Delaware Indians, the area was explored by H. Hudson in 1609 and was settled by the Dutch (1631) and the Swedes (1638). The English took control of the region in 1664 and it was granted to W. Penn as part of Pennsylvania (1682). Delaware broke ties with Pennsylvania and became an independent state (1776) and was the first state to ratify the US Constitution (1787). Its constitution was adopted in 1897.

Delaware Indians American Indian tribe. A branch of the Algonquins, they lived mainly in the New York-New Jersey-Pennsylvania area.

They were conquered by the Iroquois (1720) and later driven westward by settlers.

De la Warr, Thomas West, Baron 1577–1618. The first English governor of Virginia (1610). Delaware Bay and the state of Delaware are named for him.

Delcassé, Théophile 1852–1923. French foreign minister (1898–1905, 1914–15). He contributed to the Entente Cordiale (q.v.) with England and the establishment of other European alliances in the years before WW I.

De Leon, Daniel 1852–1914. US Socialist leader and writer. He was the Socialist Labor Party candidate for New York governor (1891) and edited its journal, The People. He was a doctrinaire Marxist and, in 1905, helped found the Industrial Workers of the World (q.v.).

Delescluze, Charles 1809–71. French radical and journalist. He participated in the February Revolution of 1848, and later opposed Napoleon III. A leader of the 1871 Paris Commune (q.v.), he died fighting on the barricades.

Delft City in The Netherlands (pop. 86,800). Founded in the 11th cent., it flourished as a commercial center (16th and 17th cents.) and was famous for its pottery (delftware) and for paintings of it by 17th-cent. native son J. Vermeer.

Delhi ⟨Old Delhi⟩ Indian city (pop. 3,287,900) in north central India, adjacent to the city of New Delhi. Delhi came to prominence when Shah Jahan made it the capital of the Mogul Empire (1638). Extensive construction followed, including the Red Fort, within which was the famed Peacock Throne. Delhi was sacked (1739) by the Persian Nadir Shah, who removed the Peacock Throne. Occupied (1803) by the British, Delhi was a center for the Sepoy uprising of 1857. It served as the capital of India (1912–31) until the inauguration of New Delhi.

Delhi Pact 1. British-Indian agreement. On March 5, 1931, M. K. Gandhi agreed to discontinue Indian civil disobedience against Britain and join in the Round Table Conferences in return for the release of nonviolent political prisoners. 2. ⟨Nehru-Liaqat Pact⟩ An agreement between India and Pakistan concluded on April 8, 1950, whereby refugees were allowed to move back and forth to settle property, abducted women and loot were restored, forced conversions were canceled, and minority rights guaranteed.

Delhi sultanate The first Muslim Empire in India (1192–1398). It was established by the conquest of Delhi by Mohammed of Ghor (1192). His general, Qutb ud-Din, established the "slave dynasty" (so called because he and some of his successors were former military slaves) that ruled until 1290. It was succeeded by the Khalji dynasty, which ruled until 1320, brought almost the entire subcontinent under the Delhi sultanate's sway and steadily repulsed the Mongols. Revolts and a loss of territory began in the Tughluq dynasty (1325–98). With the capture of Delhi by Tamerlane (1398), the sultanate disintegrated. Only local rulers remained until the establishment (16th cent.) of the Mogul Empire.

Delian League League of Greek city-states originally constituted (478 BC) to oppose invasion of Greece by the Persian Empire. The league's headquarters and treasury were on the island of Delos, but Athens maintained its leadership in the league, which at its height included about 140 members. It was slowly transformed into an Athenian empire in which members attempting to secede, such as Naxos (c470 BC), were subdued by Athenian forces. The league's treasury was eventually transferred to Athens (454 BC). The league came to an end with the decisive defeat of Athens (404 BC) by Sparta in the Peloponnesian War (q.v.). It was revived as the second Athenian confederacy (378 BC) but was destroyed by Philip of Macedon's defeat of Athens (338 BC).

Delilah Old Testament woman. Delilah, a Philistine, tricked Samson into revealing that the secret of his strength was in his long hair. She then betrayed him to her people.

Delisle, Guillaume 1675–1726. French cartographer. Delisle is often called the father of modern cartography. His maps corrected many long-standing errors, and he was appointed court geographer by Louis XV.

Della-Cruscans Members of an English poetical movement. These English poets lived in Italy in the late 18th cent., publishing highly romantic, sentimental verse under Italian pseudonyms.

Della Robbia, Luca 1400?–1482. Italian Renaissance sculptor. A Florentine, Della Robbia was greatly admired for his sculpture gallery of boys and angels (cantoria) in the Florence cathedral. He founded a family studio famous for enameled terra cotta works.

Delorme, Philibert 1510?–1570. French Renaissance architect. He designed the Château d'Anet for Diane de Poitiers, the great gallery of Chenonceaux, and the Tuileries, commissioned by Catherine de Médicis.

Delos Greek island in the Aegean Sea and legendary birthplace of Artemis and Apollo. It was a commercial center until conquered by Mithridates VI (88 BC) and subsequently abandoned.

Delphi A town in Phocis, Greece, at the foot of Mount Parnassus. It was the seat of the Delphic oracle, which prophesied from the 7th cent. BC until it was silenced by the Christian Roman emperor Theodosius (4th cent. AD). The oracle was believed to speak for the god Apollo through a priestess in a trance.

demagogue In ancient Greece, a leader of the popular party or cause of the common people. In modern times, it refers to any political leader who plays upon the passions of the masses for personal gain.

deme Ancient Greek territorial division. A deme was a subdivision of districts or villages, smaller than a city-state.

Demeter In ancient Greek religion, goddess of agriculture, daughter of Cronus and Rhea. She was the mother of Persephone, who was abducted by Pluto.

Demetrius See also Dmitri

Demetrius I *c*337–283 BC. King of Macedon (294–288 BC), a son of Antigonus I. He commanded his father's army and helped to rebuild his empire during the wars of the Diadochi (q.v.). Finally driven out by Lysimachus and Pyrrhus, he had to surrender to Seleucus I (285). His son, Antigonus II, later regained Macedon.

Demetrius I ⟨Soter, Demetrius⟩ *c*187–150 BC. King of Syria (162–150 BC). During the reign of his father, Seleucus IV, he lived in Rome as a hostage. He escaped and took the throne after killing his cousin Antiochus V, whose father, Antiochus IV, had usurped the throne from Seleucus; but he was defeated by another usurper, Alexander Balas, in league with the Maccabees.

Demetrius II d. 229 BC. King of Macedon (239–229 BC). Macedon was seriously weakened by his constant and losing warfare with the Aetolian League and the Achaean League. Antigonus III succeeded him.

Demetrius II ⟨Nicator, Demetrius⟩ *d. c*125 BC. King of Syria (145–139 and 129–125 BC). The son of Demetrius I, he deposed Alexander Balas, who had previously deposed his father. He was captured (139 BC) and held by the Parthians for 10 years, but was released and resumed his reign. He reaffirmed Judaean independence, freeing the Jews from Syrian taxation.

De Mille, Cecil Blount 1881–1959. American motion-picture producer who made the first US feature film, The Squaw Man (1913). He also produced film epics such as The Ten Commandments (1923, remade 1956).

democracy Form of government based on rule by the people, though that rule may be exercised in various ways. The classic example of early democracy is that of the ancient Greek city-state Athens. It was a direct democracy, in which all citizens participated in government by their vote. That system worked because the total number of citizens was small and a large part of the populace (slaves and women) was denied citizenship. Athenian democracy, and the democratic assemblies of the early Roman republic, represented short-lived experiments in government by the people. Both gave way to imperial forms of government and it was not until the 18th–19th cent. that the democratic form of government began to flourish. Social and political concepts (representative assemblies, natural rights, and the social contract) developed from the Middle Ages onward and contributed to the development of modern democracy. The gradual ascendancy of parliamentary government in Britain, the American Revolution, and the French Revolution were important in its implementation and rapid spread during the 18th to 20th cents. Modern democracy is generally a representative democracy: government is run by representatives of the people, elected and fully accountable to them. This form of government is often accompanied by a constitution that empowers the government and enumerates the rights of the people (constitutional democracy). In the West, notions of personal freedoms and individual rights are fundamental elements of the concept of democracy. The so-called peoples' democracy of communist countries, however, is based on the contention that economic democracy (economic equality, collective ownership) is of overriding importance.

Democratic Centralists Opposition group that attempted to check the growth of bureaucratization and authoritarianism within the Russian Communist party after the Russian Revolution. The 7th Soviet Congress (Dec., 1919) ostensibly endorsed the group's aims. But when no progress was realized, Centralists presented a Declaration of Forty-six to the Politburo (Oct. 15, 1923). However, J. Stalin subsequently defeated all further opposition at the 15th Party Congress (Dec., 1927).

Democratic League Chinese political group. Founded in 1941, it sought a middle ground between the Chinese Communists and Nationalists. After WW II, its membership divided between the two groups.

Democratic party One of the two major American political parties. It was founded (1792) by T. Jefferson under the name of Democratic Republicans. It adopted its present name with the popular victory (1828) of President A. Jackson. Badly split over the slavery issue, it lost its dominant position and became the minority party from 1860 until the election (1912) of W. Wilson, except for the elections (1884, 1892) of G. Cleveland. The election (1932) of F. D. Roosevelt inaugurated a long period of Democratic dominance that usually included its control of one or both houses of Congress, even under Republican presidents. The party originally favored limited federal government and state and local rights, but this policy was completely reversed in the 20th cent., when it became the party of federal intervention and "big government." The party has been consistent throughout its history, however, in favoring populism, low tariffs, cheap money, and the perceived interests of the common man, while opposing big business, industrial concentrations, and rigid monetary and fiscal standards.

Democratic Republicans See Democratic party

Democritus *c*460–*c*370 BC. Ancient Greek materialistic philosopher who expanded on the atomic theory of his teacher Leucippus. He held that everything is composed of indestructible atoms of matter whose motion explained the creation of the universe.

Demosthenes 384?–322 BC. Athenian and the greatest Greek orator. A professional speech writer, he turned to politics in 355 BC. By his speeches he warned the Athenians against King Philip of Macedon, who was becoming a threat to their liberty. Later he struggled against the pro-Macedonian faction in Athens. He poisoned himself after taking part in an unsuccessful revolt (323) against Macedonian rule. His speeches include the three Philippics (against King Philip), the Olynthiacs, and On the Crown.

Deng Xiaoping See Teng Hsiao-p'ing

Denikin, Anton Ivanovich 1872–1947. Russian general. He succeeded General L. G. Kornilov (1918) as supreme commander of the White Army, which unsuccessfully fought the Bolshevik forces until its defeat in 1920.

Denis, Maurice 1870–1943. French artist. He was a leader of the Symbolist movement and a member of the Nabis group (q.v.) of painters, and is especially known for his religious works and murals and book illustrations.

Denis, Saint 3d cent.? Patron saint of France and traditional first bishop of Paris. He was martyred by decapitation on Montmartre during the persecution by Roman emperor Valerian, and is represented in traditional Christian art carrying his head in his hands.

Denmark Constitutional monarchy located on the northern coast of Europe. Its capital is Copenhagen. The region was inhabited by Scandinavian peoples (Norse) from prehistoric times and a ruling dynasty emerged at the end of the 8th cent. The Danes were subsequently involved in invasions of England (9th–11th cents.), helped colonize Greenland, Iceland, and Atlantic Islands, and were for a time united with neighboring Sweden and Norway. A constitutional monarchy was established in Denmark in the mid-19th cent. Key events in Denmark's history include:

9TH–11TH CENTS. Danes participated in Viking raids on Western Europe; invaded England in the reign of King Alfred (reigned 871–99).

*c*910–*c*985 Harold Bluetooth reigned; first Christian king of Denmark (after 960), who claimed to have unified kingdom.

1013 Conquest of England, by Sweyn, son of Harold Bluetooth.

1018–35 Denmark, Norway, and England united under King Canute the Great.

1080–86 Canute IV reigned; attempted an invasion of Norman England (1085).

1157–82 Waldemar I (the Great) reigned; he overcame rival claimants to the throne and restored order after a period of civil war; began eastward expansion of Danish empire at the expense of the Wends (Slavs).

1202–41 Waldemar II reigned; extended Danish control over northern Europe to Estonia in the east; initiated many domestic and legal (Jutland Code) reforms and strengthened the monarchy; divided Denmark into great feudal estates.

1282 Eric V forced by nobles to accept the Great Charter and share his power with annual parliaments and a Council of Nobles.

1320–26 Christopher II reigned; nobles forced him to agree to further limitations of royal powers.

1340–75 Waldemar IV reigned; restored Denmark as a leading power; forced to submit to the Treaty of Stralsund (1370), granting the Hanseatic League extensive commercial rights.

1380 Iceland united with Denmark.

1397 Kalmar Union formed by Queen Margaret; united Denmark, Norway, and Sweden under the Danish crown.

1448–81 Christian I founded the Oldenburg dynasty; the present ruling family traces descent to him. He united Schleswig and Holstein with the Danish crown.

1513–23 Christian II reigned; notoriously cruel, he ordered Stockholm Bloodbath of Swedish nobles; driven out of Sweden (1521) and deposed (1523) by Danes.

1523 Sweden won independence from Denmark.

1533–36 Counts' War, war of succession confirming the Protestant Reformation in Denmark-Norway.

1535–39 Christian III reigned; Lutheranism established as state religion.

1611–13 Denmark defeated Sweden in the Kalmar War.

1618–48 Thirty Years' War; Sweden rose as the dominant Scandinavian power and acquired Danish territory.

1648–70 Frederick III reigned; Denmark badly defeated in renewed war with Sweden (1657–60); in the (first) Northern War forced to accept Treaty of Copenhagen (1660), settling modern boundaries of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; in subsequent years, Frederick instituted absolute monarchy in Denmark.

1665 P. Griffenweld wrote the King's Law, justifying absolute monarchy.

1700–21 Northern War.

1788 Serfdom abolished, and peasant ownership promoted thereafter.

1803–15 Napoleonic Wars; Denmark sided with Napoleon; lost Norway to Sweden and Pomerania to Prussia (1815).

1848–63 Frederick VII reigned; liberal movement, gaining support since the 1830s, ascendent during his rule.

1848–51 War with Prussia over status of Schleswig; Denmark forced to agree to make no efforts to increase ties with region.

1849 Liberal constitution enacted; constitutional monarchy established.

1863–1906 Christian IX reigned; liberals lost power to conservatives; industrialization begun in 1850s proceeded rapidly and, along with agrarian reforms, brought Denmark a period of great prosperity.

1864 War with Prussia and Austria; Denmark annexed Holstein (1863) and thus abrogated agreement of 1851; defeated soon after war broke out (1864), Denmark lost Schleswig and Holstein by the Treaty of Vienna.

1866 New constitution promulgated; gave conservatives more power by increasing the power of the upper house (Landsting), which became more powerful than the lower house (Folketing).

1912–47 Christian X reigned.

1914–18 Denmark neutral in WW I.

1915 Constitutional reforms enacted.

1918 Universal suffrage enacted.

1918 Iceland granted independence, though Danish monarch continued as titular head of state.

1920 Denmark joined the League of Nations.

1920 Northern part of Schleswig united with Denmark following a plebiscite.

1939 Denmark signed nonaggression pact with Nazi Germany.

1939–45 WW II; Denmark occupied by Germans (1940); Danish underground actively resisted Nazis; Danish minister in Washington put Greenland under US protection; Denmark liberated by British (1945).

1944 Iceland voted for independence from Denmark, ending a union that began in 1380.

1945 Joined UN.

FROM 1945 Social Democratic party became the leading political force in Denmark.

1947–72 Frederick IX reigned.

1949 Became founding member of NATO (Apr. 4).

1953 New constitution; established constitutional monarchy with unicameral legislature (Folketing); constitution amended to allow succession of female heir.

1972 Denmark joined the Common Market.

1972 Margrethe II succeeded to the throne.

1973–75 Social Democrats out of power; election defeat resulted from high taxes.

1975–82 Anker Jorgensen, a Social Democrat, in office as prime minister.

1982 Poul Schlüter, Conservative party leader, in office as prime minister.

Denver US city (pop. 491,400), capital of Colorado and its largest city. On the South Platte River, it is a transportation hub with mining, agricultural, and tourist industries. It was formed in 1860, becoming a boom town after the discovery of gold and silver.

Deogaon, Treaty of Indian-British treaty. In it on Dec. 17, 1803, Raghuji Bhonsla II of Maratha ceded much of his land, and almost all his power, to the British East India Company.

De Quincey, Thomas 1785–1859. English writer famous for his essays. He wrote, notably, Confessions of an English Opium Eater.

Derby, Edward George Geoffrey Smith Stanley, 14th earl of 1799–1869. English statesman. He supported national education for Ireland, abolished West Indian slavery as colonial secretary (1833), became a leader of the Conservative party, and was three times prime minister (1852, 1858–59, 1866–67).

dervish The friar, or male religious, of Islam. Although they form religious communities or fraternities—which were very important in the Middle Ages—they do not take vows. Some dervishes, such as howling or whirling dervishes, favor extreme practices. Others favor mystical practices.

Desargues, Gérard 1593–1662. French mathematician and a founder of modern geometry. He worked on conic sections and developed the theorem on the perspective of two triangles that is named for him.

Descartes, René 1596–1650. French philosopher, mathematician, and scientist, who is called the father of modern philosophy. By his famous proposition, "I think, therefore I am (Cogito, ergo sum)," he oriented philosophy toward problems of epistemology and formulated a philosophical dualism of mind and body. His thinking greatly influenced rationalist philosophers and spawned Cartesianism. In mathematics, Descartes is said to have founded analytic geometry and developed the Cartesian coordinates and Cartesian curves. His most important works are Discourse on Method, The Meditations, and The Principles of Philosophy.

Desiderius d. after 774. Last Lombard king of Italy. Pope Adrian I requested aid from Charlemagne after Desiderius threatened Rome. Desiderius was defeated at Pavia (774) by Charlemagne, who assumed the title "King of the Lombards" and sent Desiderius to a monastery. This event strengthened ties between the Roman Catholic Church and the Frankish kings.

Desiderius Erasmus See Erasmus

De Smet, Pierre Jean 1801–73. French Jesuit missionary who won the trust of Indians in the American midwest and later served as a mediator in disputes between Indians and settlers.

Des Moines US city (pop. 191,000), capital of Iowa. First established as Fort Des Moines (1843), it became the capital in 1857. It is a center for communication and industry in the heart of the Corn Belt.

Desmond, earls of Title of Irish nobility first given to Maurice Fitzgerald (1329). The title was last borne by Gerald Fitzgerald, the 15th earl, who rebelled against Queen Elizabeth (1579), was at large for some four years but was finally captured and killed (1583).

Desmoulins, Camille 1760–94. French revolutionist and journalist. His speech of July 12, 1789, roused the crowd to attack the Bastille two days later. He published two notable revolutionary newspapers, but during the Reign of Terror (q.v.), he failed to support M. Robespierre completely, and he was guillotined, with G. J. Danton, as a moderate.

De Soto, Hernando *c*1500–42. Spanish explorer. De Soto explored what is now the southern United States and is believed to be the first white man to cross the Mississippi River. He died of fever and was buried in the river.

Despenser, Hugh le d. 1265. Medieval justiciar, or high royal judicial officer, of England. Despenser sided with the barons in the Barons' War (q.v.) against Henry III (1263). He was killed at the battle of Evesham. His namesake son and grandson both served the king against the barons.

Despenser, Hugh le ⟨called the Elder⟩ 1262–1326. English adviser to King Edward II, created earl of Winchester. He and his son dominated the king until the uprising of the barons under R. de Mortimer and Queen Isabella. They were then hanged for rapacity.

Despenser, Hugh le ⟨called the Younger⟩ d. 1326. English courtier. He and his father supported Edward II and both were banished (1321). Upon their return, Hugh continued to provoke quarrels with R. de Mortimer and Queen Isabella, and was hanged after the latter came to power.

Dessalines, Jean Jacques *c*1758–1806. Emperor of Haiti (1804–06). Born a slave, he fought in the insurrection under F. D. Toussaint L'Ouverture (1791). He expelled the French with British help (1803) and declared himself Emperor Jacques I (1804). He was assassinated because of his cruelty.

destalinization USSR political program instituted (Feb. 24–25, 1956) by N. Khrushchev at the Communist party's 20th Congress. In his now famous Secret Speech, Khrushchev denounced the excesses of J. Stalin's regime, particularly the political purges of the 1930s, and called for moderation in party rule and an end to the political terrorism identified with Stalin's rule. The campaign destroyed the cult image of Stalin as the all-wise leader of international communism and helped spark the outbreak of political and intellectual turmoil in Hungary and Poland in 1956.

détente French term meaning "relaxation," adopted as an English word in the late 1960s to describe efforts to ease Cold War tensions between the US and USSR. The Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) that began in Nov., 1969, and the resulting treaties, were major initiatives that fostered détente. The heyday of détente was 1972–78. US–Soviet relations cooled after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in Dec., 1979, and the repression by the Polish government in Dec., 1981, which threatened to revive the Cold War (q.v.).

Detroit US city (pop. 4,344,140). The largest city in Michigan, it is the "automobile capital of the world." It began (1701) as a French settlement, was captured by the British (1760), and ceded to the US (1796). In the War of 1812, it was surrendered by W. Hull (1812) to the British, but retaken by W. H. Harrison in 1813. From 1837 to 1847, it was the state capital.

Deucalion In Greek mythology, the son of Prometheus. He and his wife Pyrrha survived the flood, sent by Zeus, in an ark that landed on Mount Parnassus, whence they repopulated the earth.

Deulino, Truce of A treaty concluded in the winter of 1618–19 that brought about a 14-year truce in the fighting that broke out during Russia's Time of Troubles (q.v.). The Polish king Sigismund III had taken advantage of the troubles to try to place his son on the throne of Muscovy. By this treaty, Poland retained Smolensk, while Russia received back important hostages. No final settlement was reached until the Treaty of Polianov (1634), when Poland recognized Michael Romanov as the legitimate czar.

Deuteronomic Reform Religious reform movement in the kingdom of Judah (*c*621 BC). The movement was begun by King Josiah after a law code, believed to be that contained in the biblical book of Deuteronomy, was found in the temple at Jerusalem. Reforms included elimination of pagan worship in rural areas and centralization of worship in Jerusalem.

Deuteronomy In the Bible, the last of the five books of the law (the Pentateuch). It contains a summary of the history of God's dealings with Israel; of the law believed delivered to Moses, including the Ten Commandments (q.v.), songs and speeches of Moses, and the account of his death.

Devolution, War of War (1667–68) in which the French king Louis XIV attempted to conquer the Spanish Netherlands, later The Netherlands (q.v.). The war stemmed from Louis' marriage to Marie Thérèse, daughter of the Spanish king Philip IV. When Philip failed to pay her dowry, Louis claimed the Spanish Netherlands as his wife's rightful inheritance. His claim was made on the basis of an old law of "devolution." Louis' armies, under H. Turenne, overran (1667) the Spanish Netherlands and Franche-Comté. The Netherlands organized the Triple Alliance (q.v.) in 1668 and forced Louis' armies to retire by the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle (q.v.). The French, however, again invaded The Netherlands in the Third Dutch War.

Devonshire, Spencer Compton Cavendish, 8th duke of 1833–1908. British statesman. Originally a Liberal, he broke with W. E. Gladstone over Irish Home Rule (q.v.), and led Parliament in defeating that issue on several occasions.

Dewar, Sir James 1842–1923. British chemist and physicist. He invented the Dewar flask, which prevented heat loss, and studied the properties of matter at low temperatures. He liquefied (1898) and solidified hydrogen (1899).

De Wet, Christiaan Rudolph 1854–1922. Boer general. He wrote The Three Years' War (1902) about his service in the Boer War of 1899–1902 (q.v.). In 1914, he led a rebellion against South Africa's entrance into WW I.

Dewey, George 1837–1917. American admiral who defeated the Spanish squadron in Manila Bay during the Spanish-American War (1898). Only eight Americans were wounded, while eight Spanish ships were destroyed.

Dewey, John 1859–1952. American philosopher and educator. A professor at Columbia and other American universities in the years from 1888 to 1930, he was an early and important exponent of pragmatism (q.v.). In addition, his theories on education had an important influence on the progressive-school movement. He was a prolific writer; his works include Essays in Experimental Logic, Experience and Nature, and Art as Experience.

Dewey, Melvil 1851–1931. US librarian who founded the Dewey Decimal System for the classification of library books. This system classifies subjects using numbers from 000 through 999, designating more specific subjects with decimal points.

Dewey, Thomas Edmund 1902–71. American politician. He was governor of New York (1942–54) and ran as Republican candidate for president in 1944 and 1948, when he unexpectedly lost to H. Truman.

Diadochi Macedonian generals who, as successors of Alexander the Great, battled each other in the wars of succession (323–281 BC) that broke up the Macedonian Empire. Called the Wars of the Diadochi, these hostilities began with a struggle for the regency and quickly became battles for the throne itself. They were continued by succeeding generations of the generals and, by 281 BC, resulted in the formation of distinct empires under the Seleucids (q.v.) in Asia Minor, the Ptolemys (q.v.) in Egypt, and Antigonids (q.v.) in Macedonia. Among the Diadochi were Perdiccas, Antipater, Craterus, Seleucus I, Ptolemy I, Antigonus I, Eumenes, Demetrius I, and Lysimachus.

Diaghilev, Sergei Pavlovich 1872–1929. Russian ballet producer. He founded the Ballet Russe (1909), which revolutionized the dance by integrating music and scene in its productions and worked with artists such as the composer I. Stravinsky and the choreographer V. Nijinsky.

dialectical materialism Doctrine of Marxism, or communism, which holds that all reality is independent of the human mind and is reducible to matter. History proceeds through the clash of opposing forces that become resolved into new syntheses. All human history is a class struggle characterized by exploitation on the part of those who own the means of production; but the dialectical movement of history, it is held, will eventually result in the overthrow of capitalism by the proletariat of workers, and a classless society will ensue. This philosophy was expounded through the writings of K. Marx and F. Engels. (See also Marxism.)

Díaz, Porfirio 1830–1915. Mexican soldier and president (1877–80, 1884–1911). Born of poor parents, he served in the Mexican War (q.v.), the War of Reform (1857–60), and the wars against Maximilian. In subsequent years, he led rebellions against the elected government and, after overthrowing S. Lerdo de Tejada, was elected president. In his long term of office, he established firm control over political machinery, used harsh measures to suppress insurrections, and opened Mexico to foreign exploitation. He was overthrown (1911) by F. Madero.

Dickinson, Emily 1830–86. One of the great American poets. The daughter of a Massachusetts lawyer, she spent much of her life as a recluse in her father's house. She devoted herself to writing letters and poems, ultimately completing over 1,000 poems. Of these, she allowed fewer than a dozen to be printed in her lifetime. Her genius was recognized with the posthumous publication of her poems, beginning in 1890.

Dickinson, John 1732–1808. American statesman. A member of the Continental Congress (1774–76), he was against the Declaration of Independence. He wrote the Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania (1767–68) protesting the Townshend Acts (q.v.).

dictator In ancient Rome, dictators were chosen by the consuls of the Roman Republic (q.v.) in times of emergency. They wielded great power but were limited to six-month terms and were held accountable for their decisions. The term is applied in modern times to authoritarian leaders who assume extraordinary powers, with or without legislative sanction, such as A. Hitler or B. Mussolini.

Diderot, Denis 1713–84. French Enlightenment philosopher, editor of the great French Encyclopédie, and man of letters. As editor of the Encyclopédie (1745–72), he arranged for contributions from all the important French writers (later known as the Encyclopedists (q.v.) of his day and created one of the chief works of the philosophes (q.v.). Diderot was also a novelist (Rameau's Nephew), dramatist, and innovative critic of art. His philosophical works include Thoughts on the Interpretation of Nature and Elements of Physiology.

Dido In Roman mythology, the founder of Carthage (q.v.). She threw herself on a funeral pyre either to escape marrying an African king or, according to Vergil, because she was deserted by Aeneas.

Dien Bien Phu, Battle of Vietnamese victory over France (May 7, 1954) during the Indochina war. The battle concluded with the surrender of the French fortified outpost at Dien Bien Phu in a northwestern valley of Vietnam. Hoping to lure the guerrilla forces of the Vietminh (q.v.) into a pitched battle in which artillery would be decisive, the French general Henri Navarre concentrated some 15,000 men in a fortified camp. But the Vietnamese general V. Nguyen Giap surrounded it with some 40,000 troops, brought up his own artillery, and, after a long siege (Nov., 1953–May, 1954), left 2,293 dead, 5,134 wounded, and took more than 10,000 prisoners in all. The French were compelled to leave Indochina after a big-power conference at Geneva in July, 1954, which partitioned Vietnam along the 17th parallel. This battle is considered one of the greatest victories ever won by a former colony over a colonial power.

Dieppe raid An experimental commando attack by the Allies during WW II (Aug. 19, 1942) on the French coastal town of Dieppe. More than two-thirds of the mostly Canadian troops were lost.

diplomatic revolution ⟨reversal of alliances⟩ European foreign-policy conditions leading to the Seven Years' War (q.v.) also brought about (1756) changes in long-established alliances. The year preceding the war saw the alliance of France with Austria and Russia, and of Britain with Prussia, and the estrangement of Britain from Russia, which fought on the side of Austria and France in the war.

Dirac, Paul Adrien Maurice 1902–. English physicist. He developed a version of quantum mechanics and shared a Nobel Prize in Physics with E. Schrödinger (1933). He and E. Fermi developed the Fermi-Dirac statistics.

Directory Executive body (1795–99) of the French First Republic during the French Revolution. It consisted of five directors nominated by the Council of Five Hundred (q.v.) and elected by the Council of Ancients. Embroiled in struggles with the councils and plagued with infighting among the directors, the Directory succumbed first (1797) to the coup d'état of 18 Fructidor and finally (1799) to the coup of 18 Brumaire, in which Napoleon took power. The Directory was then replaced with the Consulate.

Dirksen, Everett McKinley 1896–1969. American statesman. Dirksen served Illinois as a Republican congressman (1933–49) and senator (1950–69). Generally a conservative, he nevertheless led Democratic President L. Johnson's fight for the Civil Rights and Voting Rights acts of 1964–65.

Disarmament Conference International conference held in Geneva (1932–37) for the purpose of preventing general rearmament. It was attended by members of the League of Nations as well as by the United States and USSR. Deadlocks ensued over the definitions of war materials and over refusal of various countries to accept parity. France refused to accept limitations. Germany, already limited in armaments by the Treaty of Versailles (q.v.), contended that it had a right to rearm unless other nations disarmed to an equivalent level. The conference adjourned for five months (1933). When it reassembled, Germany had passed under Nazi control and withdrew (Oct. 14) from the conference and the League of Nations. The conference was thenceforth without significance, though it met sporadically until May, 1937.

Disciples of Christ ⟨Campbellites⟩ American Protestant body, founded by former Presbyterians Thomas and Alexander Campbell *c*1810. They preached unity among all Christians, with the Bible as their only guide. They became known as the Christian Churches and officially adopted this name in 1957.

Disraeli, Benjamin, 1st earl of Beaconsfield 1804–81. British author, statesman, and Conservative prime minister (1868, 1874–80), succeeding (respectively) E. Derby and W. Gladstone. A controversial figure, Disraeli pursued an aggressive foreign policy in the interests of British imperialism. He was a noted author when he became (1837) a member of Parliament and there became a leader of the young Conservative (Tory) faction. He aggressively opposed the prime minister and member of his own party, Sir R. Peel, on the repeal of the Corn Laws (q.v.) in 1846 and thereby helped bring down Peel's government. He subsequently served as chancellor of the exchequer (1852, 1858–59), worked for passage of the Reform Bill of 1867 to enfranchise a large bloc of working-class voters, and served briefly as prime minister (1868). Though many social reforms were instituted, Disraeli's second term as prime minister (1874–80) was dominated by foreign-policy matters. These included formal annexation of Fiji (1874) and Transvaal (1877), purchase of controlling interest in the Suez Canal (1875), the Anglo-Afghan War (1878–79), and involvement in the continuing power struggle between the Ottoman Empire and Russia in the eastern Mediterranean.

District of Columbia US federal district (pop. 648,000) co-extensive with the city of Washington, on the Potomac River between Virginia and Maryland. Established by congressional acts (1790–91), the region was chosen by G. Washington as the seat of the federal government. The government moved there (June 10, 1800) from Philadelphia during the presidency of J. Adams. The town of Georgetown was consolidated with Washington (1878), which is governed by a presidential commission. Residents of the district won the right to vote in presidential elections (1961) by the 23d Amendment and the right to elect its own mayor by adopting a new charter (1974).

Doctors' Plot Russian Stalinist conspiracy. On January 13, 1953, J. Stalin announced that 10 prominent Russian doctors were American agents who were plotting to murder Communist leaders. Stalin died before the trials, and most of the accused were released.

Doctrinaires French royalist political writers who gave their name to any abstract, dogmatic thinker by the manner in which they defended the restored French monarchy (1815–30). They included, notably, F. Guizot.

Doctrine of Lapse One of the policies used by the British East India Company (19th cent.) to justify annexation of native kingdoms in India. By it, a failure in the direct royal line of succession meant that direct control of the state passed to the company. Parts of the Maratha states were annexed in this way. This doctrine was used in conjunction with the doctrine of paramountcy, by which the company justified interference in states that were being misgoverned.

Dodecanese Greek island group in the Aegean Sea (pop. 121,000). It belonged to the Ottoman Empire (16th cent. to 1912), then to Italy until 1947, when it was ceded to Greece. Rhodes is the administrative center.

Dodge City American city. Located on the Arkansas River in Kansas, Dodge City's location on the Santa Fe Trail (q.v.) made it a rowdy cowboy town in the latter half of the 19th cent. It is now a major tourist attraction.

Don Pacifico affair Incident (1850) in which the British government seized Greek ships in Piraeus (Athens) harbor in support of the claims of a British subject, David Pacifico, against the Greek government. It was considered an extreme example of the bellicose foreign policy of Lord Palmerston, who was obliged to promise Queen Victoria that he would inform her of his actions after the French and Russians protested the incident.

Doppler, Christian Johann 1803–53. Austrian physicist. He discovered that the frequency of light and sound waves seems to vary according to the distance of the source from the observer, a phenomenon now called "Doppler's principle."

Doria, Andrea 1468–1560. Genoese admiral of an ancient Genoese princely family. He fought for Francis I of France between 1522 and 1528, but then switched allegiance to the emperor Charles V. He established a virtual dictatorship over Genoa (1529), and fought sea battles in alliance with the empire against both Turks and Barbary pirates. He was one of the great Italian seamen. The ocean liner Andrea Doria (sunk [1956] in the Atlantic) was named after him.

Dorians People of ancient Greece who settled in the Peloponnesus (*c*1100 BC), replacing the Achaean Greeks. They established colonies in Crete, Italy, Sicily, and Asia Minor.

Doric order Greek architectural style. Doric is the earliest style of Greek art and architecture (7th cent. BC). Its columns, which had no base, were marked by 20 sharp-edged flutes, culminating in a characteristic curved-mold capital. Doric columns predominated in such ancient structures as the Parthenon (q.v.) and the Colosseum (q.v.).

Dornier, Claudius 1884–1969. German aircraft designer and builder. He initiated all-metal airplanes and made seaplanes such as the Do X (1929) which carried 169 passengers from Germany to New York on its maiden flight (1931). Dornier bombers were Luftwaffe standards in WW II.

Dorr, Thomas Wilson 1805–54. American crusader for universal manhood suffrage. During the agitation against the Rhode Island Charter, which restricted the franchise to property-owners, both Dorr's followers and their rivals called their own constitutional conventions and set up rival governments of Rhode Island (1841–42). Even after the adoption of a new constitution, Dorr was sentenced to life for treason but was later pardoned.

Dorylaeum, battles of 1. First ~. Crusader victory over the Seljuk Turks fought at Dorylaeum (near modern Eskişehir, Turkey) on July 1, 1097, during the First Crusade (q.v.). The first column of the Crusader army, consisting of some 10,000 men under Bohemond, was attacked by a huge Turkish army. Reinforcements arrived and the Turks were routed, suffering some 30,000 casualties to about 4,000 Crusader casualties. 2. Second ~. Turkish victory over a German army led by Conrad III of Hohenstaufen in Oct., 1147, during the Second Crusade (q.v.). Only Conrad and some knights were able to fight their way out of an ambush in which the Crusader army was decimated by Turkish archers. The defeat contributed to the failure of the Second Crusade.

Dos Passos, John Roderigo 1896–1970. American realistic author of the trilogy U.S.A. (1937), made up of The 42d Parallel, 1919, and The Big Money.

Dost, Muhammad 1793–1863. Emir (ruler) of Afghanistan (1826–63). His attempts to play off the Russians against the British embroiled him with the latter in the first of the Afghan Wars (1839–42), but an accommodation with the British was finally reached in 1855.

Dostoyevsky, Feodor Mikhailovich 1821–81. Russian novelist and one of the world's great writers. His The Brothers Karamazov is a classic. He first gained recognition (1846) as a writer with Poor Folk but was exiled (1849) to Siberia for his association with a radical group. On returning (1859) from Siberia, he again took up writing and completed his most important works. Among them are Notes from the Underground, Crime and Punishment, The Idiot, and The Possessed.

Doubleday, Abner 1819–93. Reputed originator of baseball and Civil War officer. A 1908 commission concluded that he indeed invented baseball as we know it, in 1839, at Cooperstown, N.Y., but its conclusions are still disputed by some.

Doughty, Charles Montagu 1843–1926. English traveler and author. He published the classic Travels in Arabia Deserta (1888), based on his original observations of Arab life.

Douglas Noble family prominent in Scottish history for more than 700 years. The family figured in the border wars between Scotland and England and members were variously earls, marquises, and dukes of Douglas, Angus, Hamilton, Queensberry, and Morton. The origins of the family are uncertain, though the Douglases were among the ancestors of the Stuart (q.v.) line of Scottish kings. In modern times, a descendent of the Douglas family, Sir A. Douglas-Home, was British prime minister (1963–64). Among the prominent members of the family were: William of Douglas (d. 1298), 1st lord of Douglas, a leader of J. de Baliol's forces; Sir James Douglas, lord of Douglas (1286–1330), great commander under Robert I the Bruce; William Douglas, 1st earl of Douglas (*c*1327–84), engaged in border wars with the English; James Douglas, 2nd earl of Douglas and Mar (*c*1358–88), raided across English border, was killed at the battle of Otterburn; Archibald Douglas, 3d earl of Douglas (*c*1328–1400), made the family the most powerful in Scotland; Archibald Douglas, 4th earl of Douglas (*c*1369–1424), who joined the French against the English in 1423; Archibald Douglas, 5th earl of Douglas (*c*1391–1439), who rose to great power under James II; William Douglas, 6th earl of Douglas (1423–1440), beheaded with his brother by James II to break the family's power; William Douglas, 8th earl of Douglas (*c*1425–52), murdered by James II after regaining some family lands; James Douglas, 9th earl of Douglas (1426–88), rebelled against James II and thus lost family lands to the Angus line; Archibald Douglas, 5th earl of Angus (*c*1449–1514), opposed James III and became chancellor under James IV; Archibald Douglas, 6th earl of Angus (*c*1489–1557), married Scottish dowager queen, Margaret Tudor, and for a time gained control of Scotland; Archibald Douglas, 8th earl of Angus (1555–88), joined an English-backed invasion of Scotland and forced James to restore his family lands.

Douglas, Clifford Hugh 1879–1952. English engineer and economist. He authored the theory of Social Credit (q.v.) and served as reconstruction adviser to the government of Alberta, Canada (1935), which was dedicated to his theories.

Douglas, David 1798–1834. Scottish botanist. He traveled early throughout North America studying its plants. The Douglas Fir which he observed (*c*1825) is named for him.

Douglas, Gawin 1474?–1522. Scottish poet and Bishop of Dunkeld. He is known for doing the first English translation of the Aeneid and is considered one of the greatest early Scottish poets.

Douglas, Sir James 1803–77. Canadian colonial governor. He built Fort Victoria on Vancouver Island (1843), where he became governor (1851). He was also appointed governor of British Columbia (1858–1863).

Douglas, Stephen Arnold 1813–61. American statesman, a great orator and central figure in the national debate over slavery in the years prior to the American Civil War. A Democrat from Illinois, he was a congressman (1843–47) and senator (1847–61). As a senator he was a proponent of expansionism and became chairman of the Committee on Territories. He thereby held an important position in the North-South struggle over slavery, then centered on the question of extending slavery to new US territories. He formulated the doctrine of popular sovereignty, was instrumental in passage of the Compromise of 1850 (q.v.), and proposed what became the 1854 Kansas-Nebraska Act (q.v.). He engaged in the notable Lincoln-Douglas debates during the senatorial election (1858), when he defeated Lincoln, but was narrowly defeated by Lincoln in the presidential election (1860).

Douglas, William Orville 1898–1980. US Supreme Court justice (1939–75). Douglas was appointed to the Supreme Court by F. D. Roosevelt. He was consistently liberal on most matters, such as civil rights, the first amendment, civil liberties, and the environment.

Douglas-Home, Sir Alexander Frederick 1903–. British statesman. He entered Parliament as a Conservative (1931), was secretary to N. Chamberlain (1937–39), foreign secretary (1960–63). On becoming prime minister (1963–64), replacing H. Macmillan, he had to renounce his Scottish peerage.

Douglass, Frederick 1817–1895. American abolitionist who escaped slavery in 1838. Taught to read by a former owner, he lectured in the US and Britain, edited an abolitionist newspaper, organized two regiments of Massachusetts Negroes in the American Civil War, and finally wrote Life and Times of Frederick Douglass (1882).

Douhet, Giulio 1869–1930. Italian general. He was an early advocate of strategic bombing and an independent air force whose theories influenced German and Italian tactics in the Spanish Civil War (q.v.).

Doumer, Paul 1857–1932. French statesman. He was president of the French Third Republic (1931–32) until his assassination by the insane Russian émigré P. Gorgoulov. A. Lebrun succeeded him.

Doumergue, Gaston 1863–1937. French politician. He was first elected to the Chamber of Deputies (1893) as a Radical-Socialist, served in several ministries, and was elected president of the Third French Republic (1924–31). He later served briefly as a "strong man" premier (1934) as a result of the turmoil surrounding the Stavisky Affair (q.v.).

Dover American city, capital of Delaware (pop. 17,500). Founded in 1683 on order of W. Penn, it has been the capital since 1777 and is the seat of Kent county.

Dover City in New Hampshire (pop. 21,000). It was the first permanent settlement in New Hampshire (1633), and was a center of the industrial revolution in New England based on water power.

Dover, Treaty of Anglo-French secret treaty. On May 22, 1670, Charles II of England secretly agreed to aid French King Louis XIV in his plans for expanding French domains. In return, Louis was to provide money that would free Charles from financial dependence on Parliament. By this agreement, Louis XIV broke up the Triple Alliance (q.v.) against him and paved the way for the Third Dutch War (q.v.).

Dow, Herbert Henry 1866–1930. American chemist. Dow patented many chemical processes, including the extraction of bromine and magnesium from brine. He founded the Dow Chemical Corporation.

Dowie, John Alexander 1847–1907. Scottish founder of what he called the Christian Catholic Church (1896). He preached faith healing and, in 1901, established Zion City in Illinois, where he ruled his followers as a benevolent despot until deposed (1905).

Dowson, Ernest Christopher 1867–1900. English poet. One of the Decadents (q.v.), he is remembered for the lines, "I have been faithful to thee, Cynara, in my fashion."

Doyle, Sir Arthur Conan 1859–1930. English author who created the famous detective character Sherlock Holmes. The first Holmes book was A Study in Scarlet (1887); it introduced his friend, Dr. Watson, and his home on Baker Street.

Dozsa Rebellion Hungarian peasant revolt (1514). Gyorgy Dozsa led 100,000 peasants against the taxes and oppression of the nobility (1514). The revolt was crushed, the peasants condemned to servitude, and Dozsa executed.

Draco ⟨Dracon⟩ fl. 621 BC. Athenian lawgiver and politician. His laws were very severe, death being prescribed for most crimes. He also transferred responsibility for punishment of murder from the victim's family to the state. The adjective "draconian" refers to him.

Dracon See Draco

Draft riots Mass rioting (July 13–16, 1863) in New York City during the American Civil War (1861–65). The riots were provoked by a new and unpopular draft act for Union armies. Laborers especially resented a provision that allowed the rich to buy deferments and also feared that newly freed blacks would take their jobs. The rioters, mostly foreign-born Americans, ransacked draft stations, burned buildings, looted stores, and attacked Negroes. Police and state militia finally quelled the riots but not before some 500–1,000 people had been injured and $1.5-2 million worth of property was damaged.

Drago, Luis See Drago Doctrine

Drago Doctrine International law proposal advanced by Luis Drago (1859–1921) at the Hague Conference (1907). It forbade the use of military force by one country to recover debts owed by another, but was not accepted.

Dragoon European soldier of the late 16th to early 20th cents. Dragoons were trained as both cavalry and foot soldiers.

Drake, Edwin Laurentine 1819–80. American oilman. He drilled the first oil-producing well in the US, at Titusville, Pennsylvania (1859).

Drake, Sir Francis 1540?–1596. English navigator and adventurer, regarded as the greatest of the Elizabethan seamen. From 1572, Drake undertook a number of raiding missions against Spanish colonies in the Americas, which made him rich and famous. On one such expedition (1577–80), to raid Spanish colonies on the Pacific coast of South America, he captured great riches and by his westward return became the first Englishman to circumnavigate the earth. In 1588 he served as vice-admiral against the Spanish Armada. His invasion of Portugal (1589) failed, and he died during a raid on the West Indies.

Drang nach Osten ⟨Drive to the East⟩ German phrase describing Germany's historic desire to expand eastward. It was last cited by A. Hitler to justify his aggression toward such countries as Poland, Czechoslovakia, and, ultimately, Russia.

Dreyfus Affair Controversy over the French army's refusal to recognize the false conviction of Capt. A. Dreyfus for treason. The affair dominated French political life from Dreyfus' conviction (1894) to his final exoneration (1906). Dreyfus, an Alsatian of Jewish background, was convicted on the evidence of a document supposedly written by Dreyfus, offering military intelligence to the German military attaché. Later it was discovered that Major F. Esterhazy had written the document. Esterhazy was acquitted by a court-martial (1898), prompting E. Zola, a supporter of Dreyfus, to publish his open letter J'Accuse, accusing the judges of acquitting Esterhazy in order to protect the army. In 1898 it was learned that another document apparently incriminating Dreyfus was in fact forged by Major Hubert Henry (1846–98), who confessed to the forgery and committed suicide. Dreyfus was retried, but, incredibly, was once again convicted. In order to settle the matter, Pres. E. Loubet pardoned Dreyfus (Sept., 1899), and in 1906 a court of appeals exonerated Dreyfus. He was reinstated in the army. The affair polarized French society for more than a decade. Traditionalists and Catholics tended to support the army, as did anti-Semites. Dreyfus gained the support of liberals such as E. Zola and G. Clemenceau. As a result of the affair, the anticlerical Radical party came to power in France.

Du Barry, Marie Jeanne Bécu, countess 1743–93. French mistress of King Louis XV. Though not greatly involved politically, she held a position of influence in Louis' court. She was guillotined during the French Revolution.

Dubček, Alexander 1921—. Czechoslovakian political leader whose liberal reforms led to the Soviet-sponsored invasion of Czechoslovakia (1968). Dubček fought with the Slovakian Resistance forces against the Germans in WW II. After the war he rose through Communist party ranks and in Oct., 1967, became first secretary of the party. His subsequent easing of censorship, rehabilitation of political prisoners, and program of democratization alarmed the Soviet Union, which with other Warsaw Pact countries invaded Czechoslovakia (Aug. 20–21, 1968). Dubček was forced to make political concessions to the Soviets and his reform program was gradually dismantled. Dubček became (Jan., 1970) ambassador to Turkey, and soon after disappeared from the political scene.

Dublin Capital city (pop. 566,000) of the Republic of Ireland. Captured by the Danes (9th cent.), it was conquered by the English in 1171. It was the scene of many struggles for Irish independence, notably the 1803 uprising led by R. Emmet and the Easter Rebellion of 1916.

Dukhobors ⟨Doukhobors⟩ ⟨Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood⟩ ⟨since 1939, Union of Spiritual Communities of Christ⟩ Religious sect that originated in southern Russia during the 18th cent. Made up largely of peasants, the sect refused to recognize the authority of church or state and believed in individual revelation. They developed flourishing communes in the 19th cent. but were several times forcibly moved eastward in conflicts with the czarist government. Some 7,000 Dukhobors were allowed to emigrate (1898–99) to western Canada, where their eccentric beliefs (including refusal to pay taxes) caused sporadic conflicts with government authority.

Dulles, John Foster 1888–1959. US secretary of state (1953–59). A prominent international lawyer and diplomat, he was appointed secretary of state by President D. Eisenhower. Thereafter he promoted, and was identified with, America's Cold War policies. He was a proponent of collective security agreements (Southeast Asia Treaty Organization) and massive nuclear retaliation to counter the threat of communism. He also backed the National Chinese and helped formulate the Eisenhower Doctrine.

Duluth, Daniel Greysolon, Sieur ⟨Du Lhut, Daniel Greysolon, Sieur⟩ 1636–1710. French explorer in North America. He explored the Lake Superior region (1678) and northern Minnesota (1680), where the city of Duluth is named for him.

Dunkirk Seaport on northern coast of France near the Belgian border. It was the site of the heroic evacuation (May 29–June 4, 1940) of some 340,000 British and French troops trapped by the advancing Germans early in WW II. The two-pronged German invasion of Belgium (May) encircled the British and French divisions by May 20 and an attempted Allied breakout to the south (May 21–23) was defeated. With the Germans closing in and their only escape being to cross the English Channel, the British organized (May 29) what became a makeshift armada of transports and civilian craft, and every available boat was pressed into service. The success of the evacuation was in large part due to the Royal Air Force, which provided air cover for the evacuation. Though the evacuation proved a remarkable feat, huge stores of heavy equipment and material had to be left behind.

Dunois, Jean, comte de *c*1403–68. French general, natural son of Louis, duke of Orléans. During the Hundred Years' War, he served the Dauphin (later Charles VII), defended Orléans until relieved by Joan of Arc (1429), and helped to capture Paris (1436).

Dutch Wars Three wars (1652–54, 1664–67, 1672–78) conducted principally by England and France against the United Provinces (later The Netherlands). The cause of the first two wars was the trade rivalry between England and the Dutch. The third war was the result of the expansionist aims of French king Louis XIV and ultimately involved several European powers. The war ended with the United Provinces intact and the acquisition of territories from Spain and others. Key dates include:

1652–54 First Dutch War.

1651 Navigation Act passed by English Parliament to curtail Dutch trade with English colonies; led to outbreak of war.

1652 English fleet under R. Blake engaged the Dutch (May), marking the opening of the first Dutch War.

1652 Dutch defeated the English at Dungeness (Nov.), thereby gaining control of the English Channel.

1653 Dutch concluded (Jan.) treaty with Denmark, effectively ending English trade in the region.

1653 English fleet victorious over the Dutch at Portland (Feb.); Dutch fleet withdrew.

1653 English defeated the Dutch at Gabbard's Shoal (June) and began blockade of Dutch ports.

1653 Dutch Admiral Maarten Tromp attempted unsuccessfully to break English blockade off Texel (July 31) and was killed.

1654 Treaty of Westminster signed (Apr.) between England and the United Provinces, thus ending the first Dutch War; England won favorable terms, including payment for losses.

1664–67 Second Dutch War.

1664 English attacked Dutch possessions in Africa and the North American colony of New Netherland, thus opening hostilities of the second Dutch War.

1665 England declared war on the United Provinces (Mar.).

1665 English forces defeated the Dutch at battle of Lowestoft (June).

1666 French declared war on England (Jan.) but made little effort to support the Dutch.

1666 Dutch were victorious over the English fleet at the Battle of the Downs (June 1–4).

1666 English fleet victorious over the Dutch (Aug.); began to sink Dutch merchant shipping.

1667 Dutch destroyed English fleet docked on Thames River (June); followed outbreak of plague (1665) and Great Fire of London (1666).

1667 Treaty of Breda signed (July 31), ending the second Dutch War; provisions largely favorable to the Dutch, but the English gained the colonies of New Netherland.

1672–78 Third Dutch War.

1670 Treaty of Dover concluded between English king Charles II and French king Louis XIV, thus preparing the way for third Dutch War.

1672 France invaded the United Provinces (May) from the south, opening hostilities of the third Dutch War.

1672 Dutch opened the dikes at Amsterdam, flooding the region and halting French advance.

1672 Dutch fleet victorious over the English and French at Battle of Southwold Bay.

1672 William of Orange became leader of the United Provinces after an uprising against the government.

1673 Spain, the Holy Roman Empire, and Lorraine joined the war against France (and its ally Sweden); French driven out of the United Provinces by year's end.

1674 England ceased hostilities against the Dutch; France continued the war and gained several victories.

1675 France recovered Alsace region by Marshal Turenne's victory at the Battle of Turckheim (Jan. 5).

1675 Swedes defeated in the Battle of Fehrbellin (June 28).

1675 Austrians defeated French at the battles of Sasbach and Altenheim, near the Rhine (July 27–Aug. 1); French Marshal Turenne killed. French retreated across the Rhine.

1676 Dutch and Spanish fleets defeated in battles in the Mediterranean.

1678 French captured Ghent and Ypres.

1678–79 Treaties of Nijmegen signed, ending the war; terms generally favorable to France; United Provinces gained back all its territory.

Dust Bowl US region in the southern Great Plains famous during the Great Depression. Once a fertile prairie region, the area was ravaged in the early 1930s by great dust storms that stripped off the topsoil and made farming impossible. Brought on by a combination of severe drought, poor farming practices, and the prevailing high winds in the region, the dust storms forced thousands of farmers in parts of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado to desert their farms. Conservation measures have since greatly reduced the area susceptible to dust storms.

Eastern Question Broad term referring to the series of international conflicts and crises (19th–20th cents.) brought on by the breakup of the Ottoman Empire. Control of the Eastern European territories of the Ottoman Empire was of key importance to various European powers, notably Russia, whose interest in the region dated from the late 16th cent. In the 19th cent., competing interests and growing instability of the region led to a series of shifting alliances among European powers to take over or prevent the takeover of various parts of the region. At various times the countries involved included Russia, Austria, Prussia, Britain, France, and, later, Germany. The crises were numerous and included the Russo-Turkish Wars, the War of Greek Independence, the Crimean War, the Bosnian Rebellion, the Bosnian Crisis, and the Balkan Wars. The Eastern Question ended with WW I and the collapse of the Ottoman Empire, although the region remained unstable.

Ecuador Republic located on the west coast of South America. Its capital is Quito. The country has a history of political instability and has had nearly 50 presidents since it gained independence in the 19th cent. There has been a long-standing rivalry between Ecuador's two principal cities, Quito in the highlands and Guayaquil on the coast. Quito is the traditional center of the conservative faction, which favors landowners and the church. Guayaquil is home of the liberals and radical revolutionaries. Key events in the history of Ecuador include:

1000 Indian kingdom of Quito formed; later absorbed into the Inca Empire of Peru.

1532 Spanish conquistador F. Pizarro conquered region.

1534 Spanish conquistador P. de Alvarado attempted unsuccessfully to conquer Ecuador, as discord among Spanish broke out.

1540 Pizarro's brother, Gonzalo, rebelled against Spain, ruled independently for nine years.

1548 Spanish forces reconquered the territory; executed Gonzalo Pizarro.

1563 Became a presidency (administrative district) of the Viceroyalty of Peru.

1809 First unsuccessful revolt against Spain.

1822 Rebel commander A. Sucre decisively defeated Spanish forces at the Battle of Pichincha; Ecuador gained independence; region made part of S. Bolívar's Great Colombia.

1830 Ecuador became an independent state after the breakup of Great Colombia.

1830–35 Juan José Flores, a conservative, in office as president; civil war broke out between liberals and conservatives (1833).

1832 War with Colombia; Ecuador failed to gain Colombian border territories it sought; border disputes with Colombia and Peru persisted for more than a century after.

1895 Revolution of 1895; conservatives ousted and liberals began long period of control of government; many liberal reforms enacted.

1907–11 Liberal constitutional reforms made during the second presidency of Eloy Alfaro, (1907–11).

1925 Military takeover; inaugurated a series of regimes headed by rival military juntas; 12 presidents were in office between 1931 and 1940.

1941 Border war with Peru; dispute resolved by arbitration; Peru awarded most of the territory by treaty (1944).

1944 Revolution in Guayaquil returned to office Dr. José María Velasco Ibarra (who had been deposed as president by the military in 1935); he remained in office until 1947.

1945 Ecuador joined the UN.

1948 Galo Plaza Lasso, a former ambassador to the US, elected in free elections to the presidency; remained in office to 1952.

1956–60 Camilo Ponce Enriquez in office as president; first conservative in power in over half century.

1960 Ecuador repudiated treaty (made in 1944) awarding Peru border territory.

1966 Military junta removed from power; civilian government to be installed.

1968–72 Velasco Ibarra in office as president; his fifth time in office (from 1934).

1970 President Velasco Ibarra assumed dictatorial powers amid prolonged fighting between students and police.

1970s Ecuador claimed 200-mile limit on its territorial waters; seized several US fishing boats; US cut off aid.

1972 President Velasco Ibarra deposed by military to prevent holding of elections scheduled for June (Feb. 15).

1975 Right-wing military coup attempt crushed (Sept. 1).

1978 New constitution restored civilian government.

1979–81 Jaime Roldós Aguilera in office as president.

1981 Two-month border war with Peru broke out (Jan. 28).

1981 US tuna boat seized for violating Ecuador's claimed 200-mile territorial limit; it was released after one month.

1981 Osvaldo Hurtado Larrea in office as president after President Aguilera was killed in a plane crash (May 24).

ecumenical council In the Roman Catholic church, a general council called by the pope (before 1123, called by the emperor) to decide doctrinal questions and other church matters. The council's decisions must be approved by the pope before the council is considered ecumenical and its findings become binding. Of the 21 councils recognized by the Roman Catholic church as ecumenical, the Orthodox Eastern church recognizes only seven of the councils (excluding the Fourth Council of Constantinople) held before the schism of 1054. The ecumenical councils are the councils of:

1. Nicaea, First (AD 325)
2. Constantinople, First (AD 381)
3. Ephesus (AD 431)
4. Chalcedon (AD 451)
5. Constantinople, Second (553)
6. Constantinople, Third (680–681)
7. Nicaea, Second (787)
8. Constantinople, Fourth (869–870)
9. Lateran, First (1123)
10. Lateran, Second (1139)
11. Lateran, Third (1179)
12. Lateran, Fourth (1215)
13. Lyons, First (1245)
14. Lyons, Second (1274)
15. Vienne (1311–12)
16. Constance (1414–18)
17. Basel & Ferrara-Florence (1431–45)
18. Lateran, Fifth (1512–17)
19. Trent (1545–63)
20. Vatican, First (1869–70)
21. Vatican, Second (1962–65)

ecumenical movement Movement seeking the unification of all the Protestant churches in the world and, eventually, the unification of all Christians. Its origins date to the 19th cent. and the formation of such groups as the Evangelical Alliance (1846). The movement became international with the establishment of the World Missionary Conference (1910), and gained momentum with the founding of the International Missionary Council (1921) and the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work (1925). The leading force for ecumenism today is the World Council of Churches, which held its first assembly in 1948 and merged (1961) with the International Missionary Council. In the US, a number of Protestant groups have merged to form the United Church of Christ. Further dialogue among Christian churches, aimed at final reunification, was encouraged by the Second Vatican Council.

edda Ancient Icelandic literary works (13th cent.) in two parts. The Prose Edda, by Snorri Sturluson, is a textbook of Icelandic poetry. The Poetic Edda is a valuable collection of poems giving the text of Scandinavian myths.

Eddy, Mary Baker 1821–1910. American religious leader and founder of the Christian Science church (q.v.). She wrote Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures and the Church Manual and founded the Christian Science Monitor (1908).

Eden, Robert Anthony 1897–. British statesman. He was prime minister (1955–57), but was forced to resign after he ordered military intervention in the Suez Canal crisis (1956).

Edgar ⟨Eadgar⟩ 943?–975. King of the English (959–975), son of Edmund I. He supported reforms of the English monasteries which brought about a return to strict observance of the Benedictine rule. He was formally crowned king (973, at Bath) in the first coronation for a king of all England.

Edgar Atheling 1050?–1130? English prince, grandson of Edmund Ironside. Chosen king after the defeat of King Harold at the Battle of Hastings, he was forced to submit to William the Conqueror (1066). After taking part in unsuccessful rebellions, he made peace (1074) with William.

Edict of Emancipation Edict issued in Russia (Mar. 3, 1861) by Alexander II, freeing the serfs. By its terms, serfs (about one-third of the Russian population) were granted personal freedom and rights to an allotment of land, to be paid for over a 49-year period. Failure of this land-allotment system helped foment the Russian Revolution. The author of the edict is believed to have been Vasily Drosodov Philaret (*c*1782–1867), long an advocate of the abolition of serfdom.

Edict of January See L'Hôpital, Michel de

Edict of Milan Decree (AD 313) that granted religious toleration of Christians within the Roman Empire. Issued by Constantine, emperor of the West, and Licinius, emperor of the East, it established a lasting policy of toleration within the empire. It also ordered restoration of property confiscated from Christians.

Edict of Nantes Declaration of religious toleration in France (Apr. 13, 1598) at the close of the Wars of Religion. King Henry IV attempted to restore peace between the Protestant Huguenots and Catholics by granting Protestants greater freedom. By the edict, Huguenots were allowed the same civil and social rights as Catholics, though they were not allowed to hold religious services in Paris. The edict was denounced by the Catholics. The eventual revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV (Oct. 18, 1685) stripped Protestants of all rights and resulted in a mass emigration of Protestants to other European countries and to America.

Edinburgh Capital city of Scotland (pop. 463,900). The city was chartered (1329) by Robert I (the Bruce) and became capital of Scotland (1436). It lost prestige when King James of Scotland succeeded (1603) to the English throne as James I and when, by the Act of Union (1707), the Scottish national government was dissolved. The city later flourished as a cultural center (18th–19th cents.).

Edinburgh, Philip Mountbatten, duke of 1921–. Consort of British queen Elizabeth II. They were married Nov. 20, 1947, and he was made a prince in 1957.

Edinburgh, Treaty of Treaty (July 6, 1560) between England, France, and Scotland, signed to ease the strife between Protestants and Catholics in Scotland. It provided for a withdrawal from Scotland of both French troops (supporting the Catholics) and English troops (supporting the Protestants).

Edington, Battle of Battle (878) in which Alfred the Great, Anglo-Saxon king of Wessex, decisively defeated the invading Danes. Wessex thus remained the only Anglo-Saxon kingdom to resist the Danes successfully and became the center from which the Anglo-Saxon kings would reconquer England (10th cent.).

Edison, Thomas Alva 1847–1931. Famous American inventor, one of the great inventors of the modern world. An industrious youth, with no formal education, he eventually held over 1,000 US patents. Among his many important inventions were the first practical phonograph (1877), the electric light bulb (1878), a complete system to supply and distribute electricity, an improved storage battery, the mimeograph, and the Kinetoscope. His discovery of the Edison effect led to the creation of the electron tube. The many companies Edison formed eventually became the General Electric Company.

Edmund, Saint 1170?–1240. English archbishop of Canterbury (1233–40). Involved in struggles with King Henry III, he managed to force concessions and reforms from Henry for a time. Ultimately, however, Henry prevailed, and Edmund resigned as archbishop (1240).

Edmund Ironside d. 1016. King of the English (1016), successor to his father, Ethelred the Unready. After his father's death, he led the resistance against the invading Danes under King Canute. Edmund was killed at the Battle of Assandun (1016).

Edward I 1239–1307. English king (1272–1307), successor to his father, Henry III. He consolidated the power of the crown at the expense of the barons and the clergy, annexed Wales, and engaged in wars for control of Gascony and Scotland. Crowned (1274) after his return from the Ninth Crusade, he conquered and annexed Wales by the Statute of Wales (1284). From 1290 until his death, he was involved in wars to control Scotland (against J. de Baliol, W. Wallace, and Robert Bruce). He established (1303) English claims to Gascony by a treaty with Philip IV. By various statutes, he limited the authority of church courts to clerical matters, and, by the Statutes of Westminster (1275–90), he limited the power of the feudal lords. He also convened (1295) the Model Parliament.

Edward II 1284–1327. King of England (1307–27), successor to his father, Edward I. He was a weak ruler whose favorites (notably P. Gaveston) angered the barons, and he was defeated in wars for control of Scotland by Robert Bruce at the Battle of Bannockburn (1314). His wife, Isabella, with R. de Mortimer, deposed him.

Edward III 1312–77. English king (1327–77), successor to his father, Edward II. He usurped (1330) the regency controlled by his mother and R. de Mortimer, 1st earl of March, and began the long series of wars with France known as the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). He also engaged in indecisive wars against Scotland. His reign saw the rising power of the Commons in Parliament, the ravages of the Black Plague (1348–49, 1362, 1369), the resultant labor shortages that helped end serfdom, and enactment of laws to curb papal authority over the English church.

Edward IV 1442–83. King of England (1461–70, 1471–83), successor to Henry VI. He led the Yorkist party against the Lancastrians in the Wars of the Roses (1455–85), and, after being forced to flee England (1470), returned to depose Henry VI. Both Henry and the Lancastrian leader R. Neville, earl of Warwick, were put to death.

Edward V 1470–83. King of England (1483), successor to his father, Edward IV. He was arrested and believed murdered by his uncle, the duke of Gloucester. The duke thereupon succeeded him as Richard III.

Edward VI 1537–53. English king (1547–53), successor to his father, Henry VIII. Administration was left to his regents, E. Seymour and John Dudley (1532?–88), duke of Northumbria, who ousted Seymour in 1549. During Edward's reign, Protestant reforms were introduced to the newly created Church of England by publication of the Forty-Nine Articles (1553) and the first Book of Common Prayer (1549). Dudley arranged for Edward to name Lady J. Grey to succeed him.

Edward VII 1841–1910. English king (1901–10), successor to his mother, Queen Victoria. As king he promoted Anglo-French relations (1904).

Edward VIII 1894–1972. King of England (1936), successor to his father, George V. Edward abdicated the throne when objections within the government to his proposed marriage with the twice-divorced Wallis Warfield Simpson threatened a constitutional crisis. Thereafter known as the duke of Windsor, he married Mrs. Simpson (1937).

Edwards, Jonathan 1703–58. American Congregationalist theologian, who initiated the Great Awakening (q.v.) revival movement in America. He wrote Freedom of the Will (1754).

Edward the Black Prince 1330–76. Son and heir of Edward III of England. During the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453), he defeated and captured French king John II at the Battle of Poitiers. He subsequently ruled Aquitaine (1363–72), and died before his father.

Edward the Confessor d. 1066. King of England (1042–66). Raised among the Normans, he nevertheless succeeded his Danish half brother, Harthacanute. He struggled with the Dane Godwin (q.v.) because he favored the Normans during his reign. On Edward's death, Norman claims to the throne resulted in the Norman Conquest (q.v.).

Edward the Elder d. 924. Anglo-Saxon king of Wessex (899–924), successor to his father, Alfred the Great. He largely completed a campaign, begun (917) with his sister, Aethelflaed, to drive the Danes from England. At his death he controlled Mercia, East Anglia, and Northumbria.

Edward the Martyr d. 978. Anglo-Saxon king of the English (975–78), successor to his father, Edgar. He was said to have been murdered by his stepmother, Aelfrida.

Eeckhout, Gerbrand van den ⟨Eckhout, Gerbrand van den⟩ 1621–74. Dutch artist, pupil of Rembrandt. He was noted for biblical scenes and portraits.

Egbert d. 839. King of Wessex (802–839). By his victory over Mercia (825) at Ellendune, he ended Mercia's domination of Wessex and thus initiated the rise of Wessex as the dominant power in England. At his death he was recognized as overlord of Kent, Surrey, Sussex, Essex, East Anglia, and Northumbria.

Egeria Roman goddess, a water spirit. She was associated with Diana, childbirth, and prophecy, and was counselor to her husband, King Numa Pompilius (q.v.).

Eginhart See Einhard

Egmont, Lamoral, count of 1522–68. Flemish statesman and hero. With Count P. Hoorn, he opposed persecutions of Protestants in the Spanish Netherlands by Spanish king Philip II. Both were subsequently executed, which resulted in the outbreak of the revolt against Spanish rule in The Netherlands.

Egypt ⟨Arab Republic of Egypt⟩ Country located in northeastern Africa. Its capital is Cairo. The Nile River flows (south to north) through Egypt to the Mediterranean Sea. Civilization developed in the fertile Nile valley in extremely ancient times and had reached a high degree of organization by 3100 BC. At that time a unified kingdom was created by joining Lower Egypt (essentially, the region of the Nile delta in the north) and Upper Egypt (region south of Cairo). Ancient Egyptian civilization flourished for nearly two millennia thereafter (about 2700–1000 BC) before beginning the period of final decline. Egyptian history (up to Alexander's conquest in 332 BC) is generally divided into 30 dynasties, corresponding to the ruling dynasties reckoned to have been in power during each period. Dates, especially before 2000 BC, are at best approximations.

Alexander the Great's conquest of Egypt (332 BC) marked the beginning of continuous domination by foreign powers that lasted into the 20th cent. During that time the Egyptians absorbed first Hellenic Greek, then Roman, and finally Muslim cultural influences from their rulers. Muslim culture, which was brought to Egypt by Arab conquerors (7th cent. AD), remains dominant in modern Egypt, which is Arabic-speaking. Modern Egypt has played an important role in Mideast affairs. Until the late 1970s it was the leading center of Arab unity and of implacable opposition to Israel. Then in 1978–79 Egypt became the first Arab nation to establish diplomatic relations and enter into formal peace agreements with Israel. Key events in the history of Egypt include:

c3400 BC Egyptians began using primitive hieroglyphic writing.

c3100 BC Menes united Upper and Lower Egypt under his rule; built Memphis as his capital; founded 1st dynasty, which consisted of five kings.

c3100–c2890 BC 1ST DYNASTY.

c2890–c2700 BC 2D DYNASTY; little-known period in which Hetepsekhemui reigned as first king; advances in technology, government, and the arts continued, setting the stage for the Old Kingdom; last king of dynasty, Khasekhemui, reunified Egypt after period of struggle.

c2700–c2200 BC Old Kingdom Period; first period of Egyptian greatness and the age during which the pyramids were built.

c2700–c2613 BC 3D DYNASTY; founded by Sanakht, of whom little is known.

c2650? Zoser flourished as king; Imhotep, his minister, credited with directing the construction of the first step pyramid (of cut stone) outside Memphis; Zoser's reign also marked by advances in government and first cultural flowering; southern border established at First Cataract on the Nile.

c2613–c2500 BC 4TH DYNASTY; founded by Snefru. This was the dynasty of kings who built the first true pyramids.

c2613–c2589 BC Snefru reigned; government administration reached high degree of refinement; raids conducted into Nubia and Libya, and the Sinai said to have been conquered; pyramid construction techniques were refined and first true pyramid built at Dahshur, near Cairo.

c2589–c2566 BC Khufu reigned; he built the Great Pyramid at Giza, the largest of all pyramids; his reign marked a high point in the power of Egyptian kings and he was revered as both king and god.

c2555–? BC Khafre reigned; built second great pyramid at Giza; great Sphinx believed to have been carved in Khafre's image during this period.

c2500 BC Menkaure reigned; traditionally regarded as a just ruler; Menkaure's reign is believed to mark the beginning of the decline of the king's power; he built the smallest of the three pyramids at Giza; sculpture reached high degree of refinement.

c2500–c2345 BC 5TH DYNASTY; rise of sun worship, centered on shrine of sun god, Ra, at Heliopolis; during this period, central authority of the king weakened as provincial rulers gained power; scribes active and papyrus scrolls indicate detailed administrative organization of temples; Pyramid Texts date from this time.

c2345–c2200 BC 6TH DYNASTY; founded by King Teti; powerful local rulers continued to rise; this led to the breakup of the Egyptian kingdom at the end of the dynasty.

c2343?–c2294 BC Pepi I reigned; the son of Teti, Pepi was forced to fight a rival for the throne; he sent military expeditions to Nubia and Palestine; extensive trade with Byblos (in modern Lebanon).

c2294–c2200 BC Pepi II reigned; he succeeded to throne at age six and ruled for 94 years, according to tradition; kingdom, weakened by rise of provincial nobles, collapsed soon after his death, bringing an end to the Old Kingdom Period.

c2200–c2040 BC First Intermediate Period; kingdom divided among local rulers, who vied with one another to expand their domains; centers of power established at Heracleopolis (Middle Egypt) and Thebes (Upper Egypt), resulting in the ascendancy of Thebes and reunification of Egypt under its rulers.

c2200–c2130 BC 7TH–10TH DYNASTIES.

c2130–c2000 BC 11TH DYNASTY; kings ruled from Thebes and gradually expanded their power; Mentuhotep II began final struggle with Heracleopolis and by his victory (2040 BC) reunited Upper and Lower Egypt.

c2040–c1786 BC Middle Kingdom Period; kings ruled as feudal lords over the powerful nobles; period marked by Golden Age of Egyptian literature and art, and flourishing commerce; hieroglyphic writing system refined.

c2000–c1970BC Amenemhet I reigned; founded 12th dynasty by seizing power from Mentuhotep III in about 2000 BC; established capital at Ithtowe, near Memphis; conquered lower Nubia, advancing border of Egypt to Second Cataract of the Nile; developed contacts with Asiatic peoples.

c1970–1926 BC Sesostris I reigned; crushed an attempted takeover in which his father, Amenemhet I, was killed; waged successful campaigns in Nubia and Libya; brought about a period of prosperity.

c1926–c1897 BC Amenemhet II reigned; mines in Nubia and Sinai yielded gold and copper; contacts with Greek culture on Crete established.

c1897–c1878 BC Sesostris II reigned; reclamation of the Fayyum depression (south of Cairo) began; later became one of Egypt's most fertile agricultural regions.

c1878–c1849 BC Sesostris III reigned; a powerful ruler, he instituted administrative reforms and curbed the power of the nobles; built fortifications at Second Cataract to secure Egypt's southern border.

c1849–c1801 BC Amenemhet III reigned; prosperity reached its zenith and the arts flourished; reclamation of the Fayyum continued; extensive trade with foreign lands brought influx of foreign peoples.

c1786–c1570 BC Second Intermediate Period (13TH–17TH DYNASTIES); the end of the 12th dynasty (c1786 BC) marked the rise of the vizier, the king's chief officer of state, as the real ruler of Egypt; the viziers continued in power until the rise of the Hyksos, an Asiatic people that had gradually settled parts of Egypt; Hyskos ruled as kings of the 15th and 16th dynasties.

c1650–c1570 BC 17TH DYNASTY; this dynasty arose at Thebes and gradually restored control of Egypt to native rulers, thus ending the Second Intermediate Period; the final reunification of Egypt under native rule was completed by Amasis I, founder of the 18th dynasty.

c1570–c1085 BC New Kingdom Period; last period of Egyptian greatness, in which the ancient empire reached its height; it was marked by establishment of a law code, the building of magnificent temples, and the great military conquests of the Egyptian kings.

c1570–c1320 BC 18TH DYNASTY, the greatest of all Egyptian dynasties.

c1570–c1546 BC Amasis I reigned; expulsion of the Hyksos was completed (1570) and Egypt was again united under a single native ruler; Amasis wed his sister, following practice established by previous dynasty.

c1546–c1526 BC Amenhotep I reigned; extended Egyptian territories southward into Nubia and sent military expeditions into Asia; began New Kingdom practice of burial in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings.

c1526–c1512 BC Thutmose I reigned; extended Egyptian control to the Fourth Cataract of the Nile in the south and sent a military expedition deep into Syria.

c1512–c1504 BC Thutmose II reigned; married his half-sister, Hatshepsut, who wielded real power during his reign; she later became regent to Thutmose III.

c1504–c1450 BC Thutmose III reigned; his conquests in Syria and the Sudan greatly increased Egyptian power and wealth.

c1450–c1425 BC Amenhotep II reigned; led successful campaigns to maintain Egypt's hold on Syria.

1425–1417 BC Thutmose IV reigned; conducted successful military expeditions into Nubia and Syria.

c1417–c1379 BC Amenhotep III reigned; built temples at Thebes and elsewhere; married Tiy, a commoner; military gained considerable influence during his reign.

c1379–c1362 BC Ikhnaton reigned; during his reign he instituted monotheistic worship of the god Aton and attempted to eliminate the traditional worship of Amon; change sparked a cultural revolution, though worship of Amon was restored soon after Ikhnaton's death.

c1361–c1352 BC Tutankhamen reigned; the boy king was forced to restore Amon worship; the capital of Egypt was reestablished at Thebes; Tutankhamen's tomb, containing great riches, was discovered virtually intact in AD 1922.

c1348–c1320 BC Horemheb reigned; appointed military men to government posts; appointed Ramses I his heir.

c1320–c1200 BC 19TH DYNASTY.

c1320–c1318 BC Ramses I reigned; founded the 19th dynasty.

1318–1304 BC Seti I reigned; conquered Libyans and invaded Syria in an attempt to check the advance of the Hittites.

c1304–c1237 BC Ramses II reigned; his long reign was marked by prosperity and unsuccessful campaigns against the Hittites; he was a noted temple-builder and was probably the king who enslaved the Hebrews.

c1288–1299 BC Battle of Kadesh, inconclusive attack by Ramses II on Hittites in Syria.

c1236–c1223 BC Merneptah reigned; defeated attacks by the Libyans and Sea Peoples; records of his reign contain the earliest mention of Israel, and many believe him to have been king at the time of the Hebrew Exodus from Egypt.

c1210–c1200 BC Seti II reigned; came to the throne after period of rule by a usurper; period of anarchy (c1210–c1200 BC) followed his death.

c1200–c1085 BC 20TH DYNASTY; founded by Setnakht (ruled 1200–1198 BC), who restored order.

c1198–c1167 BC Ramses III reigned as the last of the great Egyptian kings; successfully defeated attacks by Libyans and seaborne assaults by the Sea Peoples; other groups of Sea Peoples (Philistines) settled in Palestine, then Egyptian territory; economic decline began in Ramses' reign and, combined with the increasing power of Theban priests, helped erode the power of subsequent kings in the dynasty.

c1085–332 BC Period of decline and foreign domination followed the end of the New Kingdom Period (c1085 BC).

c1085–c945 BC 21ST DYNASTY; called the Tanite dynasty; the capital was located at Tanis, in the Nile delta region; priests at Thebes gained great power, and little is known of the kings that reigned in this period; Egypt lost control of its Asian empire and of Nubia.

c945–c745 BC 22D DYNASTY; called the Libyan dynasty, it was founded by Sheshonk I, member of a Libyan family in Egypt; the capital became Bubastis; attempts to foster relations with priests at Thebes were only partly successful.

c745–c712 BC 23D–24TH DYNASTIES; period of civil war and political chaos; 23d dynasty (in south) recognized by Thebes; Libyans attempted to establish control over south; invasion by Piankhi (c730 BC), a Kushite, and his withdrawal; Libyans again controlled north, maintaining capital at Sais (24th Saite dynasty) until c712.

c712–c663 BC 25TH DYNASTY; called the Ethiopian Dynasty, it was founded by Shabaka, who conquered all Egypt; the Ethiopian kings had only nominal allegiance of the Libyan and Egyptian nobles in the north, however, and could not meet the rising threat of the Assyrians.

c689–c663 BC Taharka reigned; gave support to Palestine in its revolt against Assyria; defeated (671 BC) by Esarhaddon, who drove him out of Egypt; Taharka managed to regain the south (as far as Thebes) and held it against attack by the Assyrian Ashurbanipal.

c663–c525 BC 26TH DYNASTY.

c663–c609 BC Psamtik reigned; appointed governor by the Assyrians, he launched a successful rebellion and regained Egyptian independence; established his capital at Sais, in the delta region, and reunited Egypt; encouraged influx of Greeks and thereby established Greek influence in Egypt.

c609–c593 BC Necho reigned; he took advantage of the collapse of Assyrian Empire (at the hands of the Babylonians) to conquer Syria and Palestine (c612 BC); Necho was, however, defeated by the Babylonian Nebuchadnezzar at Carchemish (605 BC) and thereafter withdrew to Egypt.

588–570 BC Apries reigned; he warred unsuccessfully against the Babylonians in Syria; an unsuccessful campaign in Libya led to a period of civil war and the overthrow of Apries.

c525–c404 BC 27TH DYNASTY; Egypt conquered by Persian king Cambyses (c525 BC), who founded the 27th dynasty; Egypt administered as a Persian satrapy (province).

c486 BC Egyptians in delta region rebelled against Persian rule; Persian king Xerxes I broke the revolt and reduced Egypt's status within the empire.

c465–c450 BC New revolt in delta region; Egyptians, with aid from Greeks, held out for some years.

404–399 BC 28TH DYNASTY; formed by successful revolt after death of Persian king Darius II; capital established at Sais.

399–380 BC 29TH DYNASTY; new dynasty came to power through power struggle; capital established at Mendes.

380–343 BC 30TH DYNASTY; founded by Nekhtnebf I, after he seized power (380 BC); he succeeded in turning back an invasion by Persia (374 BC); Persian King Artaxerxes III reconquered Egypt (343 BC) and put an end to the dynasty.

332 BC Alexander the Great conquered Egypt; Egypt began period of rule by Macedonian Greeks.

332 BC Alexandria founded by Alexander the Great; city later became a leading center of Hellenistic culture.

323 BC Ptolemy, one of Alexander's generals, became governor of Egypt on Alexander's death; friction between Alexander's heirs, among whom the Macedonian empire had been divided, led to the Wars of the Diadochi; as the wars continued, the heirs gradually assumed the role of kings in their respective domains.

321 BC Ptolemy defeated Perdiccas in the wars and thereby strengthened his position as ruler of Egypt.

312 BC Ptolemy defeated Antigonus I, his former ally, in the Wars of the Diadochi.

306 BC Demetrius defeated Ptolemy in a naval battle off Salamis, but his ally Antigonus I failed in his land invasion of Egypt.

305–285 BC Ptolemy I reigned over Egypt, Libya, and other lands after proclaiming himself king; founded the great library of Alexandria and made the city a center of Hellenistic culture and trade; founded Ptolemaic dynasty.

301 BC Battle of Ipsus; Antigonus' defeat and death in battle, in which Ptolemy I did not participate, ended serious threat to Ptolemy's rule in Egypt.

285–246 BC Ptolemy II reigned; he built the museum at Alexandria, continued to foster the arts and learning, and commissioned the translation of the Hebrew Old Testament into Greek (Septuagint); revived earlier Egyptian rulers' practice of marrying their sisters.

276–272 BC First Syrian War; Ptolemy II defeated the Seleucids under Antiochus I.

260–255 BC Second Syrian War.

246–222? BC Ptolemy III reigned; dynasty at the height of its power, with the Egyptian navy controlling the eastern Mediterranean.

245–241 BC Third Syrian War; Ptolemy gained Mediterranean coastal domains in Syria and southern Asia Minor.

221–205 BC Ptolemy IV reigned; the decline of the dynasty began with his rule.

221–217 BC Fourth Syrian War; Ptolemy IV defeated Seleucids under Antiochus I and gained Coele Syria.

205–181?BC Ptolemy V reigned; possessions in the eastern Mediterranean coastal region lost to Syria in the fifth Syrian War (201–195 BC).

180–145 BC Ptolemy VI reigned; unable to halt an invasion (170 BC) by Antiochus IV of Syria, he was forced to share power with his wife, Cleopatra, and his brother (later Ptolemy VII); a war between Ptolemy VI and his brother brought the first intervention by Rome in Egyptian affairs.

145–116 BC Ptolemy VII reigned; he seized power from Ptolemy VI, married, then drove off the widow of Ptolemy VI; after putting down a revolt led by her (130–127 BC), he ruled with great cruelty and drove the scholars out of Alexandria.

116–107 BC Ptolemy VIII reigned; he was driven out of Egypt by his brother and coruler, Ptolemy IX.

107–88 BC Ptolemy IX reigned; he held power after driving Ptolemy VIII out of Egypt; was himself overthrown by Ptolemy VIII (88 BC).

88–81 BC Ptolemy VIII reigned after regaining the throne from Ptolemy IX.

80 BC Ptolemy X; deposed by a mob at Alexandria after he murdered his stepmother (who was also coruler).

80–51 BC Ptolemy XI reigned; an ineffective and hated ruler, he was deposed by rebellious Alexandrians (58 BC); he was restored by the Romans (55 BC).

51–47 BC Ptolemy XII reigned; Ptolemy XI left Egypt to his children, Ptolemy XII and Cleopatra (VII); Ptolemy XII deposed Cleopatra (49 BC).

48 BC Cleopatra began her famous love affair with Caesar, then in Egypt; he undertook the Alexandrine War to restore her to the throne, and in the fighting her brother, Ptolemy XII, was killed (47 BC).

47–44 BC Ptolemy XIII reigned; he was married to his sister, Cleopatra, and installed on the Egyptian throne by Caesar.

44 BC Cleopatra had Ptolemy XIII murdered so that her son by Caesar could become king.

44–30 BC Ptolemy XIV reigned; he was co-ruler with his mother, Cleopatra, until he was slain by Octavian.

42–30 BC Cleopatra, hoping to advance Egypt's fortunes, pursued her love affair with Marc Antony; the liaison was unpopular in Rome, especially after Antony was married to Octavian's sister; friction between Antony and Octavian (later Augustus) mounted and led to inevitable conflict between the two leaders of the Roman world at the Battle of Actium.

31 BC Octavian defeated Antony and Cleopatra at Actium; Antony and Cleopatra committed suicide (30 BC).

30 BC Ptolemy XIV killed by Octavian; Egypt became a Roman province.

30 BC–AD 639 Egypt under Roman rule; as a major source of Rome's grain supply, Egypt retained a special status within the empire; local government remained in hands of Egyptian bureaucrats and Egypt enjoyed relative peace and prosperity, even as Rome suffered political upheavals.

2D CENT. AD Alexandrian School founded.

AD c185–c254 Origen lived; became leading theologian of the early Greek church.

C3D CENT. AD Spread of the Coptic language among Egyptians; use of Greek alphabet and borrowed Greek words to replace some earlier Egyptian words.

AD c293–373 Saint Athanasius, an Egyptian, lived; led struggle against Arianism in the Christian church.

4TH CENT. AD Land gradually became concentrated in large estates, as a result of excessive taxes imposed by Romans.

4TH CENT. AD Christianity became dominant religion of Egypt.

AD c375–44 Saint Cyril of Alexandria lived; figured prominently in struggle against Nestorianism.

AD 395 Permanent division of the Roman Empire into Eastern and Western empires; Egypt administered as part of the Eastern Empire.

AD 476 Fall of the Western Roman Empire; Roman domination of Egypt continued under the Byzantine (Eastern Roman) rulers; Christianity flourished.

616 Egypt conquered by Persians under Khosru II; reverted to Byzantines on the death of Khosru II (628).

639–642 Muslim conquest of Egypt.

642–1882 Muslim rule of Egypt began under the Arab caliphs of the Empire of the Caliphate; during this period Egypt gradually adopted Arab language, Islamic religion and culture.

661–750 Umayyad caliphs ruled Egypt as part of the Empire of the Caliphate; colonization by Arabs and incentives for those who adopted Islam gradually reduced following of Christian church.

706 Arabic made official language of Egypt, replacing Coptic language.

747–750 Revolt of Abu Muslim: general rebellion in the Empire of the Caliphate; brought the Abbasid dynasty of caliphs to power.

750–969 Abbasid caliphs ruled over Egypt.

829–830 Unsuccessful rebellion by Copts and others against Abbasid rule; subsequent repressive measures against Copts spurred conversion to Islam.

868–905 Tulunid dynasty in power; Ahmad ibn Tulun, a Turk, made governor by the Abbasid caliph; Tulun quickly asserted autonomy of Egypt and took control of Syria; Egypt prospered.

905 Muslim caliphs restored their control over Egypt.

935–969 Ikhshidid dynasty of governors reigned; reasserted Egyptian autonomy; internal unrest in Egypt beginning in 968 paved the way for the Fatimid conquest.

969–1171 Fatimid rule in Egypt; Fatimids, a Shi'ite sect of Islam, had already gained control of most of North Africa before taking Egypt; they subsequently attacked the Abbasid caliphs and took control of Syria and part of Mesopotamia.

969 Cairo founded by Fatimids; made Egypt a center of Islamic religion.

FROM 1047 Breakup of the Fatimid empire; territories in east and west gained independence.

1099 Jerusalem captured by Christians on First Crusade; marked further decline of Fatimid power.

1167–69 Syrian armies invaded Egypt to aid Fatimids in regaining control; Saladin, a Syrian commander, made vizier of Egypt by Fatimids.

1169–93 Saladin reigned in Egypt; in 1171 he ended Fatimid rule and restored Egypt to the Abbasid caliphs; founded Ayyubid dynasty in Egypt; asserted Egyptian autonomy after 1174 and brought under his control Syria, part of Mesopotamia, Yemen, the Hejaz, and after 1187 much of the Holy Land.

1169–1250 Ayyubid dynasty in power in Egypt; Saladin divided his empire among his heirs at his death; this resulted in breakdown of central authority; to meet challenge of Christian Crusaders, last of Ayyubid rulers purchased Turkish slaves, Mamelukes, to fight in his army; Mamelukes seized power in 1250.

1187 Saladin conquered Jerusalem in his campaign to drive Christians from Holy Land; this prompted the Third Crusade by Christians.

1189–92 Third Crusade; Christians ultimately negotiated truce with Saladin, in which they were granted access to Jerusalem.

1217–21 Fifth Crusade; Christian forces attacked and invaded Egypt; withdrew following defeat in attack on Cairo.

1228–29 Sixth Crusade; Egyptians concluded treaty with Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II, giving him control of Holy Land (1229).

1244 Egyptians and Turks reoccupied Jerusalem.

1248–54 Seventh Crusade; Christians invaded Egypt and were routed during advance on Cairo.

1250–1517 Mamelukes reigned in Egypt; Mamelukes, Turkish slaves in Egyptian army, took advantage of power struggle among Ayubbids to seize power; with the subsequent collapse of the Empire of the Caliphate (1258) before the Mongol invasions, Mameluke Egypt became a Muslim center.

1260–77 Baybars I reigned as Mameluke sultan of Egypt.

1260 Mamelukes defeated (Sept. 3) the Mongols at the Battle of Ayn Jalut, checking their western advance.

1261 Abbasid caliphs permitted to establish themselves in Cairo, following the Mongol conquest of the Empire of the Caliphate.

1270–72 Eighth Crusade; prompted by Mameluke conquests in the Holy Land, it ended in negotiated settlements (1271–72).

1291 Mameluke armies won the Battle of Acre, driving the last of the Crusaders from the Holy Land.

1293–1341 al-Malik an-Nasir reigned as sultan; Mamelukes concluded treaty with the Mongols (1323); period of general peace and prosperity ensued; Mameluke decline began after death of al-Malik.

1517 Ottoman sultan Selim I conquered Egypt.

1517–1882 Ottomans ruled Egypt; Egypt, reduced to a province, was exploited and declined; Mamelukes continued to wield power as beys (local rulers) under the Ottoman viceroy; the beys of Egypt gained power and eventually asserted the autonomy of Egypt.

1786–87 Ottoman troops sent to Egypt to reassert control over the Mameluke beys; troops withdrawn after failing to break power of beys.

1768–73 Ali Bey in power; called himself sultan and secured Ottoman recognition of his autonomy.

1798–1801 Napoleon launched French invasion of Egypt during the French Revolutionary Wars; campaign, which ended in disaster, had been calculated to disrupt British colonial trade and threaten India; French driven out by combined British and Ottoman force.

1799 Napoleon's troops discovered Rosetta stone.

1801–05 Ottomans failed in their attempt to reassert control in Egypt; soldier, Muhammad Ali, became viceroy after a revolt (1805) against the Ottoman viceroy.

1805–49 Muhammad Ali reigned as virtually independent viceroy of Egypt; instituted sweeping reforms, undertook economic development (beginning industrialization), and laid foundations of modern Egyptian state.

1811 Muhammad Ali ordered massacre of Mameluke leaders to break the power of this faction.

1811–18 Muhammad Ali's Egyptian troops defeated the fanatical Wahabi sect; restored the Hejaz and central Arabia to Ottoman control.

1820–21 Northern Sudan conquered; Egyptian control in region expanded under Ali's successors.

1825–28 Egyptian forces fought against rebels in Greece, following request from the Ottoman sultan for aid; Egyptian successes in campaign brought European intervention; Egyptians forced to withdraw.

1831–40 Egyptians occupied Syria; declining Ottoman Empire unable to repel invasion; European powers, concerned about the collapse of the Ottoman Empire, forced Egyptians to withdraw (1840).

1841 Hereditary right to Egyptian sultanate granted to Muhammad Ali by the Ottoman sultan.

1848–54 Abbas I reigned as Egyptian sultan; halted Westernization policy and opposed European influence.

1854–63 Muhammad Said Pasha reigned; instituted many reforms to modernize Egypt; construction of Suez Canal began (1859); reforms and canal proved costly and later ruined Egyptian finances; first foreign loan arranged through British.

1863–79 Ismail Pasha reigned; attempted to finish modernization program; undertook extensive building and floated huge loans, creating massive government debt; completed the ruin of Egypt's finances; hired Europeans to command military campaigns to conquer the Sudan (1870s).

1869 Suez Canal completed.

1875 Ismail Pasha, confronted with Egypt's worsening financial situation, was forced to sell Egypt's shares in the Suez Canal to the British, who thereby gained controlling interest.

1876 Debt commission established by British and French to manage Egyptian finances; Ismail Pasha forced to submit to this intervention by Europeans.

1878 Europeans appointed to head some government ministries.

1879 Ismail Pasha deposed, partly through influence of French and British.

1879–92 Tewfik Pasha reigned; European control firmly established, and French and British remained in government posts; nationalist uprisings against Europeans led to establishment of direct British administration of Egypt (1882).

1881–82 Nationalist uprisings led by Arabi Pasha.

1882 Nationalist riots at Alexandria (June 12); British bombarded Alexandria (July) and landed troops; nationalists defeated and Cairo occupied (Sept.); British assumed sole control over Egypt.

1883 Organic Law, reorganizing the Egyptian government, issued by British; legislative assemblies with only advisory powers created; British ruled through resident consul general.

1883–98 Revolt in the Sudan; rebels initially led by Muhammad Ahmed (the Mahdi) seized control of the Sudan; massacred Sir C. Gordon's forces at Khartoum (1885); rebels controlled Sudan until reconquest by Lord Kitchener (1896–98).

1888 Suez Canal Convention signed by European powers to guarantee neutrality of Suez Canal.

1892–1914 Abbas II reigned; failed in attempt to break British control (1893); during his reign, the nationalist movement reasserted its opposition to both British occupation and rule of Abbas II.

1898 Fashoda Crisis with France; British, completing conquest of Sudan, encountered French in region (1898); French and British subsequently reached agreement defining spheres of influence in region.

1899 Anglo-Egyptian condominium established joint British-Egyptian rule in eastern Sudan (until 1956).

1902 Aswan Dam completed.

1914–18 WW I; war declared against Ottoman Empire; British declared Egypt a protectorate (1914) and deposed Abbas II.

1917–22 Fuad I reigned as sultan; made major gains in freeing Egypt of British rule.

1918 Nationalist Wafd Party founded by Sa'd Zaghlul and others.

1919 Nationalist revolt, fueled by harsh British administration during WW I; British troops used to quell revolt.

1921 Nationalist unrest; Europeans attacked and nationalist leaders deported as talks on Eygptian independence continued.

1814, Charter of See Charter of 1814

1812, War of War (June 18, 1812–Jan. 8, 1815) between the US and Britain, largely provoked by British harassment of US shipping. During the prolonged conflict between Britain and Napoleonic France, both sides set up naval blockades, and American trade suffered badly. While the Chesapeake affair (q.v.) and other incidents turned Americans against the British, US response was limited to a series of ineffective trade embargo measures, including the Nonimportation Act (1806), the Embargo Act (1807), and the Nonintercourse Act (1809). Widespread suspicion that the British had provoked Indians to attack Americans at the Battle of Tippecanoe (1811) and subsequent efforts by "war hawks" (q.v.) in Congress led to a declaration of war by President J. Monroe (June 18). There followed a three-pronged attack on Canada. This initial attack failed and resulted in the surrender of Detroit (Aug. 16, 1812) by Gen. W. Hull. The American navy succeeded in capturing the British warships Guerrière and Macedonian, among others, in 1812, though the British soon regained control of the seas. But on Lake Erie, Commodore O. Perry captured a British fleet (Sept., 1813) and thereby made possible the American victory at the Battle of the Thames (Oct., 1813) and the burning of Toronto. In 1814, American victories at the battles of Chippawa and Lundy's Lane in Canada and an abortive British invasion of New York under Sir G. Prevost ended in retreat behind the respective borders. The British amphibious invasion (Aug.-Sept., 1814) in the South resulted in the capture and burning of Washington, D.C. But again, after failing to capture Fort McHenry (q.v.) in nearby Baltimore (Sept. 14), the British withdrew. Meanwhile, dissatisfaction with the war on both sides led to negotiations and the Treaty of Ghent (q.v.), officially ending the war (Dec. 24, 1814). News of the treaty, however, arrived only after A. Jackson's decisive victory over the British at the Battle of New Orleans (Jan. 8, 1815).

Eighth Crusade See Crusade, Eighth

Eighth Route Army Chinese Communist army, formed in 1937 and led by Chu Teh. It engaged in guerrilla warfare against the Japanese invaders (1937–45) in China and worked in collaboration with the Nationalist government. The unit became part of the Communist People's Liberation Army after the war.

Einhard ⟨Eginhart⟩ *c*770–840. Frankish historian. He was a favorite in the court of Charlemagne and wrote the biography Life of Charlemagne.

Einstein, Albert 1879–1955. German-born American theoretical physicist, one of the most important scientists of all time, who developed the theory of relativity and made important contributions to the quantum theory. While earning a doctorate (1905) at the University of Zurich and working (1902–09) in a Swiss patent office, Einstein formulated three great theories: the special theory of relativity, in which he postulated the equivalence of mass and energy ($E = mc^2$); his theory of Brownian motion; and his theory on the photoelectric effect. He developed his general theory of relativity (1913–16), and achieved wide recognition (1919) when part of the theory was confirmed by independent observation. Forced to leave Germany (1933), he emigrated to the US, and was for the remainder of his life a member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, New Jersey. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Physics in 1921.

Einthoven, Willem 1860–1927. Dutch physiologist. He developed the electrocardiograph (1903).

He was awarded the Nobel Prize in physiology in 1924.

Eisenhower, Dwight David 1890–1969. Thirty-fourth US president (1953–61), succeeding President H. Truman, and supreme commander of Allied forces during WW II. Eisenhower's two terms as president were marked by a period of general peace and prosperity, his conservative domestic policies, the Cold War, and a US policy aimed at "containment" of communism. Once an aide to D. MacArthur, Eisenhower rose quickly during WW II to become US commander in North Africa (1942), Allied commander in North Africa (1942–43), and supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe (1943–45). A brilliant organizer of military forces, he commanded the massive Normandy invasion (1944) and subsequent Allied drive across Europe, which brought an end to the war in Europe. In the postwar years he served in various military posts and, as first NATO commander (1950–52), organized these forces. In 1952 he ran for the presidency as a Republican and, during his first term (1953–57), ended the Korean War (1953), organized SEATO (1954), and attended the Geneva Conference (1955). His second term (1957–61) was marked by the rise of the civil rights movement (federal troops forcibly desegregated schools in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957), the Eisenhower Doctrine (q.v.), the Lebanese crisis (1958), the Cuban Revolution (1959), and the U-2 crisis (1960).

Eisenhower Doctrine Statement of US foreign policy articulated (Jan. 5, 1957) by President D. Eisenhower in the wake of the Suez crisis. In it he offered economic and military assistance to any Mideast country in need of aid to resist Communist aggression.

Eisenstein, Sergei Mikhailovich 1898–1948. Russian film director, considered a pioneer in film technique. Among his classics are Potemkin, Ten Days That Shook the World, and Alexander Nevsky.

Eisner, Kurt 1867–1919. German Socialist. He organized the revolution that overthrew the monarchy in Bavaria (1918) and became prime minister of the short-lived Bavarian republic. He was assassinated soon afterward.

Eleanor of Aquitaine 1122?–1204. Queen consort of Louis VII of France (1137–52) and Henry II of England (1152–89). For supporting her sons in revolt against Henry, she was put into confinement by Henry (1173–85). She was adviser to her sons King Richard I and King John of England.

Eleanor of Castile d. 1290. Queen consort of English king (m. 1254) Edward I and daughter of Ferdinand III of Castile. She joined Edward on a crusade (1270–72) and there prevented his death.

Eleatic school One of the important pre-Socratic schools of philosophy. It is believed to have been founded (5th cent. BC) by Parmenides, and was centered at Elea, a Greek colony in Italy. The Eleatics denied conventional notions of reality, believing instead in an infinite, changeless "Being." Principal exponents of Eleaticism were Parmenides, Zeno and Elea, Melissus of Samos (fl. 5th cent. BC), and Xenophanes, once thought to be the founder of the school.

electoral college In the US, the body of electors chosen from each state to select the next president. Though they usually vote for the candidate who won the majority of popular votes in their state, they are not constitutionally obliged to do so, and presidents have won elections with less than the majority popular vote. Various plans have been advanced to change the system, including election by direct popular vote.

electors Ecclesiastical and secular German princes. From the 13th cent. to the collapse of the Holy Roman Empire (1806), these princes of various German states elected the king of Germany, who then became the Holy Roman Emperor.

Electra In Greek legend, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. With her brother, Orestes, she avenged the murder of their father by Clytemnestra and her lover Aegisthus.

Eleusinian Mysteries In ancient Greece, an important secret religious ritual honoring Demeter and Persephone. The ritual originated in Eleusis, and after *c*600 BC was celebrated in nearby Athens. Initiation into the mysteries eventually became open to all Greek citizens. The ritual itself was divided into two parts: the Lesser Mysteries, honoring the return of Persephone, were celebrated each year in February; and the Greater Mysteries, honoring Demeter, were held once every five years in early fall. Celebration of the Greater Mysteries involved a mass procession from Athens to Eleusia, where a secret ritual, still unknown today, was performed.

Eliezer, Israel ben See Baal Shem-Tov

Elihu In the Old Testament, the comforter of Job, who advises Job to accept God's will.

Elijah ⟨Elias⟩ *fl. c*875 BC. Biblical Hebrew prophet. He worked to end worship of the god Baal during the reign of King Ahab and his wife Jezebel.

Elijah ben Solomon 1720–97. Lithuanian Jewish scholar. Elijah opposed Hasidism (q.v.) as unscholarly and divisive. His teachings include commentaries on the Old Testament, Talmud, Mishnah, Midrash, cabala, and halakah.

Eliot, Charles William 1834–1926. American educator, president of Harvard University (1869–1909), and editor of the Harvard Classics.

Eliot, George ⟨Evans, Mary Ann⟩ 1819–80. English novelist. Her psychological novels, considered among England's greatest, include Adam Bede, The Mill on the Floss, and Silas Marner.

Eliot, Sir John 1592?–1632. English parliamentary leader. Eliot championed free speech and other liberties in Parliament, brought impeachment charges against the duke of Buckingham, the king's favorite, and promoted the Petition of Right (q.v.). Charles I imprisoned him.

Eliot, John 1604–90. English Colonial missionary. His work with Indians in Massachusetts led to his translation of the Bible into their native language. It was the first Bible printed (1661) in North America.

Eliot, Thomas Stearns 1888–1965. American-born English poet, dramatist, and critic who was a leading modernist and one of the great poets of this century. He settled in London (1914) and there began writing his early poems while working as an editor. He became a British citizen in 1927. His works include poems, such as The Waste Land, Ash Wednesday, and Four Quartets, plays, and critical works. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1948.

Eliseus See Elisha

Elizabeth See Isabeau of Bavaria

Elizabeth 1596–1662. Queen of Bohemia (1619–20) as wife of Frederick the Winter King (m. 1613). She was noted for beauty and for the misfortunes she suffered after Frederick was deposed.

Elizabeth ⟨Petrovna, Elizabeth⟩ 1709–62. Empress of Russia (1741–62) by her overthrow of young Ivan VI. Advised by her chancellor, Bestuzhev-Ryumin, she rid Russia of German influence and opposed Prussia in the Seven Years' War.

Elizabeth 1837–98. Empress of Austria (1854–98) and queen of Hungary (1867–98) as wife of Emperor Francis Joseph (m. 1854). She was assassinated by an Italian anarchist.

Elizabeth 1843–1916. Queen of Romania (1881–1916), wife of Carol I (m. 1869). Using the pseudonym Carmen Sylva, she wrote books in four languages, including Pensées d'une reine and The Bard of Dimbovitza.

Elizabeth I 1533–1603. English queen (1558–1603), successor to Mary I. Elizabeth's reign saw a period of increasing commercial activity, England's rise as a naval power, the beginnings of English exploration and colonization in the New World, and a period of great literary activity. The dominant aspect of her reign, however, was the restoration of Protestantism and her struggle with Catholics at home and abroad. She reestablished the Church of England by winning passage of the Act of Supremacy and the Act of Uniformity (1559) and promulgated (1563) the Thirty-Nine Articles (q.v.) of the Anglican faith. The subsequent Catholic rebellions and plots against Elizabeth resulted in increasingly repressive measures against them, as well as in the execution (1587) of the Catholic Mary Queen of Scots, whose accession the conspirators sought. Though Elizabeth agreed with France to a mutual military withdrawal from Scotland by the Treaty of Edinburgh (1560), she nevertheless supported Protestants against the Catholics there. Likewise, she offered support to French Protestant Huguenots and help to Protestants in the revolt of The Netherlands against Spain. Her anti-Catholic policies and encouragement of raids by English privateers on Spanish shipping finally provoked Philip II of Spain to mount an unsuccessful attempt to invade England and end Protestantism there (see Spanish Armada). The last years of her reign were marked by a revolt led by her favorite, R. Devereaux, 2d earl of Essex. (See also Great Britain [1558–1603]; Elizabethan Age.)

Elizabeth II 1926–. British queen (1952–), successor to her father, George VI. She entered the direct line of succession upon abdication of her uncle, Edward VIII (1936), married (1947) Philip Mountbatten (1921–), duke of Edinburgh, and was crowned June 2, 1953. Though her role is largely symbolic and ceremonial, Elizabeth enjoys great popularity with her subjects. Political events during her reign include the Suez Canal crisis (1956) and religious turmoil in Northern Ireland.

Elizabeth, Saint In the Bible, the mother of John the Baptist and cousin of the Virgin Mary.

Elizabeth, Saint 1207–31. Hungarian princess, daughter of King Andrew II, and wife of Louis IV of Thuringia. She devoted herself to the poor and sick and was canonized in 1235.

Elizabethan Age Period of English history, specifically the reign of Elizabeth I (1558–1603). England enjoyed many years of general peace and prosperity and rose as a great naval power during this period. But it was most remarkable as a golden age of English literature. W. Shakespeare, E. Spenser, and C. Marlowe all belong to this time. Early 17th-cent. literature, produced during the reign of James I, is sometimes included in this period, though it is more specifically called Jacobean.

Elizabeth of Valois 1545–68. Spanish queen (1559–68), daughter of French king Henry II. She married (1559) Philip II, though she was originally intended for his son Don Carlos.

1886 Constitution enacted.

1931–44 Gen. Maximiliano Hernández Martínez in power as dictator; he overthrew (1931) the first freely elected president in 20 years.

1939 New constitution adopted.

1944 Martínez fled as unrest spread (1944); turmoil continued in subsequent years; Maj. Oscar Osorio in power (1949–56) after military coup.

1962–67 Julio Adalberto Rivera in office after period of continuing instability; free elections restored.

1969 Soccer War fought with Honduras.

1970 Demilitarized zone established along border with Honduras.

1972–77 National Conciliation Party candidate Arturo Armando Molina in office as president; was appointed by National Assembly after elections produced no clear winner.

1977–79 Gen. Carlos Romero in office as president; violence and charges of voting fraud during elections.

1979 Violence between government forces and leftist rebels flared; 23 killed when police fired on demonstrators outside a cathedral in San Salvador (May 8).

1979 Romero declared state of siege; constitution suspended (May 24).

1979 Romero deposed (Oct. 15) by civilian and military junta; junta failed in attempt to end violence and came under attack by both leftist and rightist extremists.

1980 Civilian junta members resigned (Jan.).

1980 Four American women missionaries murdered (Dec. 4); US suspended aid pending investigation.

1981 José Napoleón Duarte became president; US aid restored; major offensive by leftists failed.

1981 US Pres. R. Reagan sent military advisers; increased military and economic aid.

1982 Rightists gained majority in Constituent Assembly during elections; Alvaro Alfredo Magaña named president.

Emancipation, Edict of See Edict of Emancipation

Emancipation Proclamation Famous proclamation issued (Sept. 22, 1862) during the American Civil War by President A. Lincoln. It declared all slaves in the Confederacy to be free (as of Jan. 1, 1863) and was issued by Lincoln as a wartime measure in his capacity as commander in chief of the military. It did not apply to slaves outside territories held by rebels (ultimately freed by other legislation), but nevertheless granted theoretical freedom to some three million Negroes. The proclamation, brought about partly by pressure from northern abolitionists, marked a change in Lincoln's policy from simple restoration of the Union (and maintenance of the status quo on slavery) to a more definitive antislavery policy. Formal abolition of slavery in the US was finally accomplished by adoption (1865) of the 13th Amendment.

Emanuel I See Manuel I

Embargo Act US legislation (Dec. 22, 1807) halting all exports from the US. During the Napoleonic Wars (1803–15), both Britain and France declared blockades of each other and thereby interfered with American commerce. The Embargo Act was President T. Jefferson's attempt to use economic pressure to force both Britain and France to recognize the neutral shipping rights of American merchants. The act, even with additional legislation passed in 1808 and 1809, proved both unenforceable and economically disastrous for the US. Britain and France were largely unaffected. With New England nearing open rebellion, the Nonintercourse Act was passed (1809), resuming all foreign trade except that with Britain and France. Legislative trade restrictions were effectively ended with Macon's Bill No. 2 (Mar. 23, 1810).

Emboabas, War of the Brief civil war (1708–09) in eastern Brazil. Established settlers, called paulistas, fought European newcomers, called emboabas, who flocked to the area during a gold rush. When the emboabas won, the paulistas moved westward, and discovered new gold deposits.

Emerson, Ralph Waldo 1803–82. American poet, essayist, and lecturer who greatly influenced American thought. A Harvard student at age 14, he later traveled in Europe (1832–33), where he met such leading Romantic poets as Coleridge and Wordsworth. Returning to the US, he began writing actively (1835). He soon published his essay Nature, which established him as a leading exponent of Transcendentalism. In following years, he wrote, lectured widely, and was a member of the Massachusetts literary circle that included H. Thoreau and N. Hawthorne. He gained widespread recognition in the 1840s with his two volumes of essays, which included the celebrated Self-Reliance.

Emigrant Aid Company New England company (active 1854–57) formed to promote settlement of Kansas territory by antislavery settlers. Organized (1854) just before passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act, the company was designed to ensure that Kansas would not become a slaveholding state, an issue to be decided by a popular vote (see popular sovereignty). The company sent over 1,000 abolitionist settlers to Kansas, who later figured in the Bleeding Kansas (q.v.) incident.

empiricism A school of philosophy holding that all valid human knowledge is derived from experience. Although the concept of empirical knowledge has been known since ancient Greek times, the school began its classical development in Britain (18th cent.), especially in the writings of J. Locke, G. Berkeley, and D. Hume. Empiricists oppose rationalism, with its defense of intuition, innate ideas, or a priori knowledge. Some form of empiricism lies at the base of most modern philosophies of science.

Empson, William 1906–. English poet and critic. He wrote an influential critical work, Seven Types of Ambiguity. His poetry, known for its wit and intellect, includes The Gathering Storm.

Ems dispatch Telegram sent to Prussian chancellor O. von Bismarck by King Wilhelm I of Prussia (later German emperor Wilhelm I) on July 13, 1870. The French ambassador had sought assurances from Wilhelm that no member of his family would seek the Spanish throne. Wilhelm refused to give such an assurance and then telegraphed a report of his conversation with the ambassador to Bismarck. Bismarck, however, wanted a test of strength with France. He edited the telegram to make it appear that France had been insulted and published it. Predictably, France then declared war on July 19, thus beginning the Franco-Prussian War (q.v.).

encomienda System for supplying Indian laborers in Spanish colonial America (16th–18th cents.). The encomienda (entrustment) specified that a Spanish settler would receive a certain number of Indian laborers, in return for which he would protect them and instruct them in Christianity. The system resulted in great hardships for the Indians despite attempts at reform (16th cent.).

English Civil War ⟨Great Rebellion⟩ Armed conflict (1642–49) between forces of the English Parliament and those of monarchy, under Stuart king Charles I. The war was caused by a complex of political and religious problems. The absolutism of King Charles (and of James I before him) brought an ongoing struggle for power between the king and Parliament to a head. Attempts to impose religious uniformity aroused Puritans and Independents against the government as well. In general, the war pitted the Royalists, composed of the aristocracy, the Anglicans, and Catholics, against Parliamentarians, including the gentry, merchants, and artisans. During the war O. Cromwell emerged as the leading figure of the parliamentary army and the army became a stronghold of Puritan sentiment. Cromwell became leader of the government (see Commonwealth and Protectorate) created after the monarchy was abolished. The monarchy was reestablished in 1660. (See also Great Britain.) Key events in the war include:

1625 Charles I succeeded to the throne; his belief in divine right of kings led to a continuation of struggle between king and Parliament which had embroiled the reign of his predecessor, James I.

1626 Parliament dissolved by Charles because it had limited his right to collect customs duties and had impeached his favorite, G. Villiers, duke of Buckingham.

1628 Charles I convened a new Parliament in order to raise needed money.

1628 Petition of Right presented to Charles by Parliament; listed his abuses of power; Charles agreed to demands to get money.

1629–40 Charles ruled without Parliament for 11 years.

1634 Charles extended ship-money tax, a device for raising money without Parliament, from coastal towns to entire kingdom.

1638 Solemn League and Covenant signed by Scottish Presbyterians after Charles attempted to impose Anglican liturgy in Scotland.

1639 First Bishops' War; Charles warred with Scotland over his attempt to impose Anglican liturgy there; Charles forced to reconvene Parliament to get funds for war.

1640 Short Parliament convened; dissolved by Charles after it demanded reforms.

1640 Second Bishops' War with Scotland; Charles was defeated and forced to agree to monetary payments to Scots.

1640 Long Parliament convened, brought about by Charles's need for money; Parliament passed numerous fundamental reforms, including law prohibiting dissolution of Parliament without its consent; Charles agreed to reforms.

1641 Grand Remonstrance issued against Charles by Parliament; Parliament demanded control over the army, church reform, and appointment of royal ministers acceptable to it.

1642 Charles tried to have J. Pym and other leaders of parliamentary opposition arrested (Jan.); break between Parliament and Royalists nearly complete.

1642 Nineteen Propositions issued (June) by Parliament and rejected by Charles; preparations for war began on both sides, with Royalists generally concentrated in north and Parliamentarians in the south.

1642–46 First Civil War.

1642 Battle of Edgehill (Oct. 23) fought; first major battle of war proved indecisive.

1643 Parliament secured an alliance with Scotland by promising to establish Presbyterianism as the state church in England (Sept.); Scottish troops then joined fighting.

1644 Battle of Marston Moor (July 2); O. Cromwell and his regiment (called Ironsides) inflicted a disastrous defeat on the Royalists.

1645 Self-Denying Ordinance passed; all members of Parliament (except Cromwell) resigned their commands in army (Apr.).

1644–45 Parliamentary army reorganized into the New Model Army; Puritan influence became predominant in the army.

1645 Cromwell victorious over Charles in the Battle of Naseby (June 14); Royalist resistance nearly broken.

1646 Battle of Stowe-on-the-Wold (Mar. 26); Royalists beaten in this last battle of the First Civil War.

1646 Charles surrendered himself to the Scots (May 5).

1647 Charles turned over to Parliament by the Scots (Jan.).

1647 Growing independent and Puritan religious opinion in the army made consensus impossible on the parliamentary side; Presbyterians began to turn back to royalism.

1647 Army refused order by Parliament to disband; seized King Charles (June 4); Cromwell joined rebelling army faction, which then attempted to negotiate with Charles; army occupied London (Aug. 6) to impose policies on Presbyterian members of Parliament.

1647 King Charles escaped to the Isle of Wight (Nov.); concluded agreement with Scotland, now disaffected by the radicalism of the English Parliamentarians; Scottish armies to fight for Royalist cause.

1648–49 Second Civil War, brief but complex struggle; pitted Scotland against England, Parliament against the Royalists, and Independents against Presbyterians.

1648 Parliamentary forces quelled uprisings in various parts of the kingdom.

1648 Battle of Preston; Cromwell and his parliamentary army defeated the invading Scottish army (Aug. 17–19); marked end of fighting in the Second Civil War.

1648 King Charles again seized by the army (Dec.).

1648 Pride's Purge; parliamentary army, under Cromwell's control, expelled pro-Royalist Presbyterians from Parliament (Dec.); remaining members constituted Rump Parliament.

1649 Instrument of Government (temporary) issued by army (Jan. 20).

1649 King Charles beheaded after trial (Jan. 30); monarchy abolished and Commonwealth proclaimed the day of Charles's execution; Cromwell became head of state.

enlightened despot Monarch whose power, though absolute, was theoretically based on the rule of reason. The doctrine of enlightened despotism arose during the 18th-cent. Enlightenment.

Enlightenment ⟨Age of Reason⟩ Intellectual movement of the 18th cent., centered in France but extending throughout Europe and to America. Characterized by an abiding belief in rationalism, science, and natural laws, it fostered radically new views that challenged accepted religious, political, and social doctrines. The Enlightenment was an outgrowth of the 17th-cent. advances in science and philosophy (especially the work of J. Locke, I. Newton, and R. Descartes), and many of the ideas of the Enlightenment were embodied in the American and French revolutions. The Encyclopedists (q.v.), philosophes (q.v.), physiocrats (q.v.), and numerous individual literary and intellectual figures were important to the Enlightenment. Commonly associated with the Enlightenment were: (in France) J. Rousseau, F. Voltaire, D. Diderot, and C. Montesquieu; (in Britain) A. Smith, J. Bentham, D. Hume, and E. Gibbon; (in Germany) G. Lessing, M. Mendlessohn, and J. von Herder; (in America) T. Paine, T. Jefferson, and B. Franklin. (See also deism.)

Ethical Culture movement A nonsectarian movement founded by F. Adler (1876) in New York City. It seeks the advancement of moral systems based on ethics rather than on religious doctrine.

ethics Branch of philosophy concerned with good and evil as it relates to human conduct. Among the ancient Greeks, Socrates equated virtue with knowledge, while both Plato and Aristotle grounded it in the nature of humanity. Aristotle further held that virtue contributed to achievement of man's proper end and advocated following the "golden mean" to attain it. The Judeo-Christian tradition equated the good with the will of God, and, in the teachings of such philosophers as Saint Thomas Aquinas (13th cent. AD), its attainment was linked with the realization of humanity's proper end. I. Kant (18th cent.), with his categorical imperative, tried to establish an absolute ethical standard independent of religion. Philosophers of the rationalist school grounded ethics in the human conscience, while empiricists tied it to human experience.

Ethiopia (formerly Abyssinia) Ethiopia is a Socialist state located in northeast Africa, and bordered on the north by the Red Sea. Its capital is Addis Ababa. Ethiopia has one of Africa's longest recorded histories and by tradition traces its government back to about the 11th cent. BC and to the rule of King Menelik I, believed to be the son of Solomon and Sheba. The region was early dominated by Egypt and, in the 8th cent. BC, Ethiopians conquered much of Egypt and controlled it to about the 7th cent. BC. Key dates in Ethiopia's history include:

1ST CENT. AD Kingdom of Aksum flourished in region; recorded history of Ethiopia began.

4TH CENT. AD Bishop Frumentius introduced Christianity.

6TH CENT. AD Conquered what is now Yemen in Arabia; period of commercial prosperity and cultural flowering followed.

650 Muslims drove Ethiopians from Arabia; cut off from rest of world by Muslim conquest of North Africa, Ethiopia sank into obscurity for a thousand years.

1520 Portuguese visited Ethiopia.

1530–43 Portuguese aided Ethiopians in repulsing invasion by Somalis.

1855 Ethiopia reunified by King Theodore II.

1868 King Theodore imprisoned British diplomats; British invaded, Theodore committed suicide.

1889–1911 Menelik II reigned; expanded borders of Ethiopia.

1889 Addis Ababa became capital.

1895–96 Italy invaded in the Ethiopian War; Menelik defeated Italy, and Ethiopian independence was recognized.

1916–30 Zauditi, Menelik's daughter, became empress; her cousin Ras Taffari ruled as regent.

1930 Zauditi died; Ras Taffari crowned emperor Haile Selassie I.

1931 Haile Selassie granted country a constitution and a parliament.

1934–35 Italy invaded and conquered Ethiopia in Italo-Ethiopian War; League of Nations unable to halt Italy's aggression.

1936 Haile Selassie forced into exile.

1936 Ethiopia annexed to Eritrea and Italian Somaliland to form Italian East Africa.

1941 WW II; British forces captured Ethiopia (1941); Haile Selassie restored.

1952 UN placed Eritrea (eastern coastal region) under Ethiopian rule.

1955 New constitution adopted.

1960 Coup attempt (Dec.); Haile Selassie restored by the army.

1969 Eritrean Liberation Front started violent campaign for secession of Eritrea.

1970 Guerrilla activity in Eritrea resulted in declaration of state of emergency.

1974 Serious unrest caused by long drought and resulting famine; resignation of the cabinet; Haile Selassie named a moderate, Endalkachew Makonnen, prime minister; agreed to call constitutional convention.

1974 Army took control of Addis Ababa (June).

1974 Makonnen overthrown (July), arrested, later executed; succeeded by Michael Imru.

1974 Haile Selassie peacefully deposed (Sept. 12); placed under palace arrest; US military aid halted.

1974 Armed forces committee proclaimed Ethiopia a Socialist state with one political party, the Supreme Progressive Council (Dec. 20).

1975 All lands and businesses nationalized.

1975 Haile Selassie died (Aug. 27).

1975 Government troops battled Eritrean guerrillas as fighting intensified.

1977 Gen. Teferi Benti, chairman of Provisional Military Council, shot and killed during a council meeting; Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam became head of state.

1977 American diplomats ordered to leave.

1977 Heavy fighting between government troops and ethnic Somalis in southeastern Ethiopia; Somalia charged with aiding rebels.

1977 Russia ended (Oct.) military aid to Somalia, backed Ethiopia in border war.

1978 Somalis defeated (Mar.) in southeast, Ogaden region; Cuban troops aided Ethiopian victory; government reported successes against guerrillas in Eritrea; fighting against guerrillas nevertheless continued into the early 1980s.

1978 Friendship treaty signed with the Soviets.

Etruria See Etruscans

Etruscans Ancient people who established a flourishing civilization in northern Italy (Etruria) between the 8th and 4th cents. BC. They are believed to have emigrated to Italy from the Near East around the 12th cent. BC. They initiated trade with the Greeks, and their navy virtually dominated the Mediterranean for two centuries (7th–6th cents.). They ruled in Rome (6th cent.) as the legendary "Tarquin kings," but were expelled around 509 BC, according to tradition, after the king's son raped the Roman matron Lucretia. The Romans subsequently defeated them decisively in the Battle of Lake Regullus (496 BC), and began the gradual subjugation of Etruscan cities (completed by 282 BC). The Romans borrowed freely from Etruscan civilization, and the Latin alphabet is derived from the earlier Etruscan writing system.

Euboea Island on the east coast of Greece. Important ancient towns were Khalkis and Eretria. Dominated by Athens (5th cent. BC) and Macedon (from 4th cent.), it was taken by Rome (194 BC). The island passed to various conquerors after Rome's fall and was annexed to Greece in 1830.

Euclid *fl. c*300 BC. Greek mathematician famous for his fundamental contribution to the study of geometry and the development of mathematics. Details of his life are uncertain, but it is known that he taught at the great school of Alexandria in Egypt and that he wrote the celebrated mathematical treatise Elements. The work included a systematic presentation of plane geometry, which long served as the basic text for its study, and treatments of number theory and solid geometry. It was not until the 19th cent. that fundamental departures from his system of plane geometry began to be presented.

Eudes ⟨Odo⟩ *c*860–898. French king (888–898), successor to Charles III (the Fat) in the West Frankish Kingdom. He defended Paris against the Norsemen and was succeeded by his rival, Charles III (the Simple).

Eudes of Lagery See Urban II

Eudoxus of Cnidus 408?–355? BC. Greek astronomer and mathematician known for his explanation of the motion of the planets and calculation of the length of the solar year.

Euergetes, Ptolemy III See Ptolemy III

Eugene III ⟨Montemagno, Bernardo dei Paganelli di⟩ d. 1153. Italian-born pope (1145–53) who was driven from Rome by Arnold of Brescia, the reformer. He preached the unsuccessful Second Crusade (1147–49) while in France.

Eugene IV 1383–1447. Italian-born pope (1431–47), successor to Martin V. His reign was marked by his dispute with the Council of Basel (q.v.) over conciliarism. He convened the Council of Ferrara-Florence (q.v.) in its stead. His opponents unsuccessfully tried to depose him and elected the antipope Felix V.

Eugene of Savoy, Prince 1663–1736. Great French-born general. A brilliant strategist in service of the Holy Roman Empire, he defeated the Turks at Vienna and later drove them from Hungary. He commanded the imperial armies during the wars of Spanish Succession (1701–14) and Polish Succession (1733–35). Among his many victories were the battles of Zenta and Blenheim.

Eugénie ⟨in full, Eugénia Marie de Montijo de Guzmán⟩ 1826–1920. Empress of France (1853–70) as wife of Napoleon III. She fled to England when the empire fell (1870).

Euhemerus *fl. c*330 BC. Greek mythographer whose work Sacred History sought to prove that mythological beings were based on events of historical fact.

Eulenspiegel, Till fl. 14th cent. German folk hero, a peasant and prankster who played wicked, often obscene, tricks on the arrogant. His escapades are the subject of numerous literary and musical works.

Euler, Leonhard 1707–83. Swiss mathematician. Called the most prolific mathematician of all time, he produced works that treated all major branches of mathematics.

Eumanes II See Pergamum

eunuch Male court official who had been castrated. Eunuchs were variously employed as Euric d. AD *c*484. King of the Visigoths (466–484), younger son of Theodoric I. Under Euric, the Visigothic kingdom reached its greatest extent. He ruled most of Spain and southern Gaul and established his capital at Toulouse. He wrote the first Visigothic law code.

Euripides 480?–406 BC. One of the three great tragic poets (with Sophocles and Aeschylus) of ancient Greece. He spent the greater part of his life in Athens, and there entered his tragedies in the annual competition of the festival of Dionysus. He is said to have written 92 plays (of which 18, definitely attributed to him, survive) but won first prize in only four competitions. His writing is generally considered more realistic in tone then that of the other great tragic poets. Among his extant works are Cyclops, Orestes, and Electra.

Europa In Greek mythology, daughter of Phoenix or Agenor. She was carried off by Zeus to Crete and there bore his sons Minos, Rhadamanthus, and Sarpedon.

European Economic Community ⟨Common Market⟩ West European economic association. It was formed in 1957 and its original members were Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, and W. Germany. Its goals were to establish the economic union of member nations and eventually to bring about political union. It has sought to eliminate internal tariffs, institute a uniform external scale of tariffs, achieve free movement of labor and capital from one nation to another, abolish obstructions to free competition, and establish collective trade and transportation policies. In 1973, Great Britain, Ireland, and Denmark joined the organization.

Eutaw Springs, Battle of American Revolutionary War battle (Sept. 8, 1781), part of the Carolina Campaign (q.v.). Some 2,300 Americans under N. Greene narrowly defeated 2,500 British troops under Col. Alexander Stewart, forcing them to retire to nearby Charleston, South Carolina. American casualties were 400, British 693.

Euterpe In Greek mythology, one of the nine Muses, the patroness of flute playing, joy, and pleasure.

Eutyches AD *c*378–*c*452. Archimandrite of the Eastern church in Constantinople. He founded Eutychianism, an early and extreme form of Monophysitism (q.v.), in reaction to Nestorianism. He was condemned for heresy, excommunicated, and banished (AD 451).

Eutychianism See Eutyches

Evangelical Alliance Association of Protestant evangelical Christians of various denominations founded in 1846. The alliance originated in reaction to the Oxford Movement (q.v.) in the Church of England and was formed during a London convention attended by some 800 delegates from evangelical churches in Europe and America. Branch organizations were created in various countries with the aim of promoting unity and the doctrines of evangelicalism. The importance of the alliance has declined in this century.

evangelicalism A term used to describe churches and groups within the Protestant fold that emphasize a strict and literal biblical faith, personal conversion experiences, and pietistic practices. Originally the Lutherans were known as Evangelicals, as distinguished from the Calvinists, who were called "Reformed." But the term was later applied to the new Protestant sects that arose (18th cent.) from Pietism (q.v.) in Europe, Methodism (q.v.) in Britain, and the Great Awakening (q.v.) in the United States. Today such conservative Protestant groups as the Fundamentalists prefer to be called Evangelical rather than Protestant.

Evans, Mary Ann See Eliot, George

Evarts, William Maxwell 1818–1901. American lawyer and statesman. He was counsel for A. Johnson in the impeachment proceedings (1868) and for the Republican party in the Hayes-Tilden dispute over the election of 1876.

Evatt, Herbert Vere 1894–1965. Australian statesman. He was justice of the high court of Australia (1930–40) and led the Australian delegation to conferences on formation of the UN. He served as president of the UN General Assembly (1948–49).

Eve Biblical first woman. She was the wife of Adam and mother of Cain and Abel. In the Bible, she was tricked by a serpent into eating the forbidden apple from the tree of knowledge. She tempted Adam to taste it as well, and thereby caused their expulsion from the Garden of Eden.

Evelyn, John 1620–1706. English author. His Diary (1640–1706) is considered an important source regarding 17th-cent. English life.

Everest, Sir George 1790–1866. British surveyor general of India (1830–43) for whom Mount Everest is named.

Evesham, Battle of Decisive battle (Aug. 4, 1265) that all but ended armed resistance in the Baron's War (1263–67). Edward (later Edward I) defeated and captured S. de Montfort near this town in central England and thereby restored his father, King Henry III, to power.

evolution Biological theory holding that living things have developed gradually from earlier forms. The concept appears in ancient Greek writings by Thales, Aristotle, and others. Scientific advances (17th–19th cents.) tended to support it, but it was C. Darwin's great work On the Origin of Species that eventually brought about its acceptance. The biological theory of evolution conflicts with the religious concept of special creation, which stipulates that God created each species separately, and has led to such controversies as the Scopes Trial (1925). The dispute, notably in the US, continues to the present day.

Ewald, George Heinrich August von 1803–75. German Orientalist and theologian. He is best known for his Hebrew Grammar and History of Israel.

Ewell, Richard Stoddert 1817–72. Confederate general during the American Civil War (1861–65). He served under Gen. S. Jackson and lost a leg at the second battle of Bull Run (1862). Taking over Jackson's command after Jackson was killed in battle, Ewell led R. E. Lee's invasion of Pennsylvania and commanded units in the Battle of Gettysburg, the Wilderness campaign, and the Petersburg campaign.

Exarchate of Italy See Exarchate of Ravenna

Exarchate of Ravenna ⟨Exarchate of Italy⟩ The part of Italy that was taken during the Byzantine conquest of the Ostrogoths and made part of the Byzantine Empire (6th–8th cents.). It was reduced to the area around Ravenna before finally being seized by the Lombards (752).

executive branch The branch or department of modern government, notably in the US, that executes or carries out the laws, as distinguished from the legislative branch, which enacts them, and the judicial branch, which interprets them. These distinctions stem from the theory of checks and balances (q.v.), or separation of powers, whereby absolute power is denied to any single organ of government. In the US, the Constitution grants the president executive powers. However, it specifies only that he shall be commander in chief of the armed forces, that he may make treaties and appoint officers of the government (by and with the consent of the Senate, generally), and that he must report to Congress from time to time on "the state of the union." From this bare outline of presidential executive authority, the development of the power of the modern presidency has been considerable. The president and his administration now command an enormous apparatus of state that makes it possible for him to intervene effectively in nearly every aspect of the society. Presidents H. Truman and L. Johnson were even able to make war without the express consent of Congress—in Korea and Vietnam respectively—by calling these wars "police actions" or by securing only concurring "resolutions" about them from Congress. The 1970s and 1980s have witnessed a trend, arising from Vietnam and the Watergate controversies, toward curbing presidential powers.

Exile See Babylonian captivity existentialism Modern school of philosophy concerned with human beings' relationship to the world around them and which teaches that the actual existence of humanity holds the clue to the meaning of being. Existentialism stems from S. Kierkegaard's revolt against the rationalism of G. Hegel. His work was subsequently built upon by two noted philosophers, M. Heidegger and J. Sartre.

Exodus The escape (*c*13th cent. BC) by the Jews from their enslavement in Egypt. It is an event of great significance in biblical history and is described in the second book (Exodus) of the Old Testament. The book narrates the flight from Egypt under Moses' guidance and includes the crossing of the Red Sea, the trek through the wilderness, and the giving of the Ten Commandments on Mt. Sinai.

Expedition of the Thousand A daring military campaign (Apr.-Oct., 1860) in which G. Garibaldi, with an army of some 1,000 scarcely trained, idealistic volunteers, conquered the Bourbon kingdom of Naples. Garibaldi undertook the campaign in the name of a unified Italian state. Impatient of the cautious diplomatic efforts at unification by Victor Emmanuel II of Piedmont-Sardinia and his minister C. Cavour, Garibaldi landed his force in Sicily on his own and conquered the island (by Aug. 20) after defeating a force of some 20,000 Bourbon troops there. He then crossed to the mainland and marched triumphantly into Naples (Sept. 7). He was prevented from marching on Rome itself by the intervention of the army of Victor Emmanuel II, and soon after turned over conquered Bourbon territories to Emmanuel.

expressionism Twentieth-cent. movement in art and literature that sought to express an inner vision or the essence of a subject by exaggerating or distorting its characteristics. The movement flourished before and after WW I, especially in Germany. The German Max Beckman (1854–1950), Austrian O. Kokoschka, Frenchman G. Rouault, and Lithuanian Chaim Soutine (1894–1943) were all considered notable expressionist painters. In literature, the Irish novelist J. Joyce, the German writer F. Kafka, and, in some of his plays, the American playwright E. O'Neill, were considered expressionist writers. The movement, though itself short-lived, was immensely influential in the subsequent development of painting and writing.

Eyck, Hubert van *c*1366–1425. Flemish painter, believed to be the older brother of Jan van Eyck. Little is known of his life. He is thought to have painted the altarpiece at Ghent.

Eyck, Jan van *c*1390–1441. Flemish painter. Van Eyck was a master of realism, rendering minute detail with great accuracy. His most famous work is Giovanni Arnolfini and His Bride (1434).

Eylau, Battle of Battle (Feb. 8, 1807) during the Napoleonic Wars (1803–15). Napoleon fought this indecisive battle against the combined forces of Russia and Prussia at Eylau (now Bagrationovsk, USSR). Heavy snow contributed to the confusion of battle. France suffered 15,000 casualties, the allies 18,000.

Ezzelino da Romano 1194–1259. Ghibelline leader. The son-in-law of Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II, Ezzelino aided him against the Lombards and became the most powerful man in northern Italy. His rule there was remembered for its cruelty.

F

Fabian Society English Socialist society, founded (1883) by Frank Podmore (1855–1910) and Edward Pease (1857–1955) to gradually advance the Socialist cause from within the existing government framework. Fabians did not advocate revolutionary methods for change. They helped organize a labor-oriented committee (1900), which later became the British Labour party, with which Fabians are affiliated today. Prominent Fabians include G. Shaw and S. Webb.

Fabius Maximus Rullianus, Quintus ⟨Fabius Maximus Rullus, Quintus⟩ *d. c*290 BC. Roman general, consul (five times between 322 and 295 BC) and dictator (315 BC). He won an important victory at Sentinum (295 BC) in the third Samnite War.

Fabius Maximus Verrucosus, Quintus ⟨Cunctator, or the Delayer⟩ d. 203 BC. Roman general, consul (five times between 233 and 209 BC), and dictator (217 BC). The leader of Roman forces at the outset of Hannibal's invasion during the Second Punic War, he is remembered for delaying tactics in which he harassed but did not directly engage the enemy. The strategy was unpopular but was proved correct after his replacement (216) and the subsequent Roman defeat at Cannae (216).

Facta, Luigi See March on Rome

Fahrenheit, Gabriel Daniel 1686–1736. German physicist noted for the invention of the Fahrenheit temperature scale and introduction of the mercury thermometer.

Fa-Hsien fl. AD 399–414. Chinese monk and writer. He traveled throughout India and its neighboring regions and gathered much information about Indian culture, history, and geography. He translated Buddhist religious literature into Chinese.

Faidherbe, Louis Léon César 1818–89. French colonial governor of Senegal (1854–61, 1863–65) and soldier. He strengthened and expanded the colony during his administration.

fair Gathering of merchants and consumers. The fair had its origins in the public marketplaces of ancient Greece and Rome. It grew to be a large periodic event and the major vehicle for trade before the development of transportation. Fairs were often tied to religious festivals and occasions and became so important to both church and state that they were given special powers and privileges. With the rise of commerce and industry in the 17th and 18th cents. and the increasing ease with which people could find things to buy, fairs lost their importance. They have continued into the present in somewhat modified form.

Fairbanks, Douglas 1883–1939. American movie actor and producer. A founder (1919) of United Artists Corp., he was famous for his movie roles as a swashbuckling hero.

Faliero, Marino ⟨Falier or Falieri, ~⟩ 1274–1355. Doge of Venice (1354–55). Involved in a conspiracy by plebians to assassinate the patricians, or nobles, he was executed after a trial by the Council of Ten.

Falkland, Lucius Cary, 2d Viscount *c*1610–43. English writer and Royalist during the English Civil War. A member of the Short and Long parliaments (1640), he failed in his attempts to head off the civil war. He served with Charles I, and, despairing of the war, is said to have welcomed his own death in battle.

Falkland Islands British crown colony (pop. 2,000), located southeast of Argentina. Believed to have been discovered (1592) by British navigator J. Davis, they were settled (18th cent.) by the British and French. French and British possessions were taken over by Spain, though Britain retained formal sovereignty. The islands were then claimed (early 19th cent.) by Argentina after it gained independence from Spain. Britain retook control of the islands (1833). During WW I the British destroyed a German fleet under Graf von Spee near here (Dec., 1914). Argentina unsuccessfully challenged British sovereignty over the islands in the 1982 Falkland Islands War (q.v.).

Falkland Islands, Battle of Naval engagement (Dec. 8, 1914) between British and German fleets, near the Falkland Islands during WW I. The battle led to the destruction of the German fleet and the death of its commander, Graf von Spee.

Falkland Islands War Brief war (1982) between Argentina and Britain over possession of the Falkland Islands. Following years of unsuccessful negotiations with Britain for possession of the islands, the Argentines invaded (Apr. 1–2, 1982) and took control of the islands. A British naval task force arrived off the islands some weeks later and the first British landings began in June. The British took several Argentine strongholds on the islands and, after surrounding the main Argentine contingent at Stanley, forced the nearly 10,000 Argentine troops to surrender (June 14).

Fall, Albert Bacon 1861–1944. US senator from New Mexico (1912–21) and secretary of the interior (1921–23). He was convicted (1929) of receiving bribes in return for leases to oil lands in the Teapot Dome scandal.

Fallen Timbers, Battle of Battle (1794) between American forces under Gen. A. Wayne and Indians of the Northwest Confederation. Fought near present-day Toledo, Ohio, it was a decisive defeat for the confederation and ended concerted Indian resistance to settlement by whites.

Fallières, (Clément) Armand 1841–1931. French statesman. He was president of the Third Republic of France (1906–13).

false decretals Forged ecclesiastical papers. Decretals are religious letters outlining binding church decisions. In the 9th cent., several anonymous French clergymen sought to end Carolingian interference in church affairs by falsifying several documents and inserting into them legitimate decretals. The false decretals, supposedly advancing religious independence from civil authority, were largely believed until the 17th cent.

False Dmitris See Dmitri; Time of Troubles

Family Compact Name of a wealthy group of Canadians who dominated the government in Upper Canada between the late 1700s and mid-1800s. Members of this group controlled both the government ministries and the Legislative Council. Popular reaction to their control centered around questions of patronage, land grants, control of the judiciary, and support for the Anglican church. Following a period of legislative conflict and the Act of Union (1840), reformers won the government. A similar group in French Lower Canada was called the Château Clique.

Family Compact Name of three treaties between the Bourbon rulers of France and Spain. 1. The first ~ (1733) was concluded to counter British commercial supremacy and to check Austrian designs on Italy. 2. The second ~ (1743) provided for continuation of the 1733 alliance. 3. The third ~ (1761) was the most important of these treaties. It brought Spain into the Seven Years' War against Britain. Spain's participation (after 1762) was minimal, however.

fascism Political movement for totalitarian government that began in Italy (*c*1919) under the leadership of B. Mussolini. Fascism is sometimes used more restrictively to refer to the Italian movement, the parallel German movement being distinguished as National Socialism (Nazism). Fascism is characterized by subservience of the individual to the state (in the person of an exalted leader), extreme nationalism, elitism (and especially in Nazism, anti-Semitism), formation of the corporative state (q.v.), militarism, and imperialism. Fascism in Italy was born amid the post-WW I chaos bred by labor unrest and attempts at Communist and Socialist takeover. Mussolini organized (*c*1919) bands of thugs, later called Blackshirts, and, with police backing, brutally suppressed labor agitation in northern Italy. He then created the Fascist party (1921) with the backing of many conservative elements, and took control of the Italian government (Oct. 29, 1922) after the famous March on Rome (q.v.). Thereafter the Facist party remained the ruling party of Italy until the close of WW II. For the rise of fascism in Germany, see National Socialism, and in Spain, see Falange.

Fashoda Incident Diplomatic crisis (1898) between Britain and France over claims to the Sudan. Both countries sought to link their colonies on the African continent by continuous corridors of land. The Sudan represented an intersection of their aims. Defying British claims, the French sent a military contingent from the Congo and occupied Fashoda (now Kodok). The British, under Lord H. Kitchener, arrived two weeks later. The French government, fearing all-out war, withdrew its forces a month and a half later, and subsequently dropped claims to the region (1899) in return for British concessions in the Sahara.

Fates 1. In Greek mythology, three goddesses who controlled the destiny of an individual's life. Clotho spun the thread of life, Lachesis determined its length, and Atropos cut it. 2. In Roman mythology, the Fates (Parcae) were Nona, Decuma, and Morta.

Fathers of the Church Term applied to the early Christian writers whose interpretations of Christian doctrine are generally considered definitive by the church.

Fatima 606?–632. Daughter of Muhammad and wife of Ali. An important figure in Islamic religion, she is by tradition the forebear of the Fatimid dynasty.

Fatimid ⟨Fatimite⟩ Muslim dynasty that ruled (909–1171) an empire in North Africa. Members of the Syrian Shiite sect, the Fatimids claimed the Muslim caliphate as descendants of Muhammad's daughter Fatima. The dynasty was founded by the Syrian Said ibn Husayn. He was proclaimed the Mahdi following rebellions in northwestern Africa and Sicily (909) and ruled there in opposition to the Abbasid caliphs. The Fatimids subsequently reached their greatest power under el-Moizz (reigned 935–975). He conquered Egypt, Palestine, and part of Syria, and built Cairo, which he made his capital. The empire began to disintegrate after his reign, giving way to internal stresses, Norman invasions, the Crusades (11th cent.), and the Abbasids under Saladin.

Fauchard, Pierre 1678–1761. French dentist, considered a founder of modern dental practices. He wrote The Surgeon Dentist, which became a standard work in the field.

Faulkner, William 1897–1962. American novelist. One of the great American writers of the 20th cent., he is celebrated for his novels chronicling life in the imaginary Yoknapatawpha County, Mississippi. Among his best works are The Sound and the Fury, As I Lay Dying, and Absalom, Absalom! He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature (1949) and twice was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction (1955, 1963).

Faunus Ancient Roman god of the forests, crops, and livestock, identified with the Greek god Pan. His female counterpart was Bona Dea.

Faure, Félix 1841–99. French statesman. As president (1895–99), he improved French relations with Russia but came into conflict with Britain over the Fashoda Incident. The Dreyfus Affair occurred during his presidency, and his refusal to reopen the case contributed to friction between pro-Dreyfus and anti-Dreyfus factions.

Faust fl. 16th cent. German doctor who acquired the reputation of a magician who had sold his soul to the devil (Mephistopheles) for knowledge and power. His legend is the basis for numerous literary works, notably the dramatic poem Faust by J. Goethe.

February Manifesto Russian proclamation (Feb. 15, 1899) declaring that the czar had the right to overrule Finland's constitution and rule by edict. Up to that time Finland was ruled as an autonomous duchy within Russia. The manifesto was revoked by Czar Nicholas II (Nov., 1905) during the Russian Revolution of 1905.

February Revolution 1. Revolution in France (1848) that brought about the abdication of King Louis Philippe and creation of the short-lived Second Republic. The king's increasingly reactionary policies, opposition to his unpopular minister F. Guizot, and widespread unemployment caused by a severe economic slump resulted in the revolt, which was precipitated by the banning (Feb. 22, 1848) of an antigovernment banquet. Rioting broke out that day, and the revolution began the next, when government troops fired on demonstrators. The king abdicated (Feb. 24), and the republic was immediately proclaimed. The provisional government was a coalition of moderate republicans, led by A. de Lamartine, and Socialist republicans, led by L. Blanc. It subsequently recognized "the right to work," created (Feb. 26), the national workshops to ease unemployment, and proclaimed universal male suffrage (Mar. 2). The workshops soon failed, however, and mass demonstrations by Socialist republicans aroused fears of a Communist takeover. Moderates were thus victorious in elections for the new National Assembly, and, in the face of new unrest, moved (Mar. 15) to dissolve the national workshops. This precipitated the bloody uprising known as June Days (q.v.). Gen. L. Cavaignac was installed as dictator and restored order. The assembly promulgated a new constitution (Nov. 20), and Louis Napoleon (later Napoleon III) was elected president. Soon after taking office, Napoleon seized power and founded the Second Empire (1852). 2. ~ ⟨March Revolution⟩ The beginning phase of the Russian Revolution (q.v.) in 1917. It was precipitated by bread riots in Petrograd and resulted in the abdication of Czar Nicholas II on Mar. 12, 1917 (old-style dating, Feb. 27). The February Revolution was followed by the October Revolution (q.v.), in which Bolsheviks seized power.

Federal Constitutional Convention See Constitutional Convention

federalism The system of government whereby states or entities unite under a centralized (federal) government, while retaining a measure of autonomy. The federalist system established by the US Constitution (1789) placed foreign affairs, common defense, interstate commerce, and the like under a strong federal government. Existing autonomous governments in the various states that joined the federal union continued to function, though with reduced powers.

Federalist Papers American political essays. They were a series of 85 essays written (1787–88) by A. Hamilton, J. Madison, and J. Jay which urged the ratification of the United States Constitution and expressed the need for a strong central government. Originally written for New York State newspapers, they were collected (1788) as The Federalist. They were an important formative influence in the early years of America's government.

Federalist party American political party, considered America's first organized political party. Formed about the time of the Constitutional Convention (1787), it was led by A. Hamilton. The Federalists espoused a strong central government and a pro-British, anti-French foreign policy. They were opposed by T. Jefferson's Democratic Republicans. G. Washington, though officially neutral, frequently sided with the Federalists. J. Adams, the second US president, was the last Federalist party member to gain the presidency. The party's power declined rapidly after the Hartford Convention.

Fëdor I ⟨Feodor or Fyodor⟩ 1557–98. Russian czar (1584–98), successor to his father, Ivan the Terrible, and last czar of the Rurik dynasty. He was incompetent, and the government was run by his brother-in-law, B. Godunov.

Fëdor II ⟨Feodor or Fyodor⟩ 1589–1605. Russian czar (1605), successor to his father, B. Godunov. He ruled only briefly before being killed in a riot provoked by the nobles, the boyars. He was succeeded by a pretender to the throne, the first of the false Dmitris.

Fëdor III ⟨Feodor or Fyodor⟩ 1656–82. Russian czar (1676–82), successor to his father, Alexis. Under his reign the system of appointing noblemen to military and civil positions on the basis of social rank was abolished (1681 or 1682).

Fellini, Federico 1920–. Italian film director noted for his innovative film techniques and his juxtaposition of realism and fantasy. His films include La Strada and La Dolce Vita.

Felton, Rebecca Latimer 1835–1930. American writer and reformer. She was the first woman to serve in the Senate, serving Oct.–Nov., 1922, as interim appointee from Georgia.

feminism Women's movement to secure political, economic, and social equality with men. Though the concern for equality for women dates back to ancient times, feminism as a movement is rooted in the 18th and 19th cent. Mary Wollstonecraft's Vindication of the Rights of Women (1792) is considered a seminal work, and feminism as an organized movement began at a women's convention at Seneca Falls, New York (July, 1848). The feminist cause, especially in the area of woman suffrage (q.v.), was subsequently carried forward in the US by the National Woman Suffrage Association (led by S. Anthony and E. Stanton) and eventually spread to Europe. By the early 1900s, feminists had gained considerable improvement in the status of women, most notably in achieving the right to vote. A resurgence of feminism in the US occurred in the 1960s, when the movement became known as Women's Liberation. The National Organization for Women (NOW) was formed in 1966 and the late 1960s and early 1970s saw the rise of militant feminism. Though feminists brought about reforms in such areas as abortion and sex discrimination in employment, their campaign in the late 1970s and early 1980s centered on the drive to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment (passed by Congress, 1972). The amendment failed to win ratification in the required number of states by the June, 1982, cutoff date.

Fénelon, François de Salignac de la Mothe 1651–1715. French theologian and writer. His support of quietism led to the condemnation (1699) by Pope Innocent XII of Fénelon's Explanation of the Sayings of the Saints.

Feng Yu-hsiang 1880–1948. Chinese general. Called the "Christian General," he supported Chiang Kai-shek and the Kuomintang in the 1920s but later opposed Chiang's policies.

Fenian movement Irish nationalist movement. A secret revolutionary group organized (*c*1858) to achieve complete Irish independence from Britain, it included groups in both Ireland and America. It actively harassed the British in Britain, Ireland, and America in the 1860s and 1870s. Its activities were frequently betrayed by spies planted within the organization's ranks. It was eventually replaced by the Sinn Fein movement.

Ferber, Edna 1887–1968. American novelist and short-story writer. Among her novels are So Big and Show Boat. She was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction in 1925.

Ferdinand 1861–1948. First czar of Bulgaria (1908–18). He proclaimed Bulgaria's independence from the Ottoman Empire and fought against it in the Balkan Wars. His alliance with the Central Powers in WW I led to his abdication.

Ferdinand 1865–1927. Romanian king (1914–27). By siding with the Allies in WW I, he was able to double Romania's size through postwar peace treaties. He introduced voting and agrarian reforms.

Ferdinand I ⟨Ferdinand the Great⟩ d. 1065. Spanish king of Castile (1035–65) and León (1037–65). He brought much of Spain under his control and began the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, but divided his kingdom among his three sons at his death.

Ferdinand I 1345–83. Portuguese king (1367–83), successor to his father, Peter I. He waged three successive wars to gain the Castilian throne and each time suffered a humiliating defeat.

Ferdinand I 1503–64. Holy Roman Emperor (1558–64), successor to his brother Charles V. He negotiated the Peace of Augsburg (1555) and reformed the Aulic Council (1559).

Ferdinand I 1751–1825. King of the Two Sicilies (1816–25). As king of Naples, Ferdinand had been forced to flee (1799) when Napoleon established the Parthenopean Republic. Reinstated by the British (1815), he became king of the unified kingdom of the Two Sicilies (1816). His reactionary rule led to serious turmoil (1820) and the granting of constitutional government, which he soon abrogated.

Ferdinand II 1578–1637. Holy Roman Emperor (1619–37), king of Bohemia and Hungary, successor to his cousin Matthias. His reign was marked by the Thirty Years' War, in which he attempted to put down a series of rebellions by Protestants which began just after his succession to the Bohemian throne (1618).

Ferdinand II 1810–59. King of the Two Sicilies (1830–59), successor to his father, Francis I. His harsh rule earned him the enmity of many. A revolt (1848) in Palermo led to his approval of a constitution, which he soon ignored. He later bombarded the cities of Palermo and Massina, then in rebellion, and earned the name "King Bomba."

Ferdinand II 1816–85. Titular king of Portugal (1837–53). He became king consort by his marriage (1836) to Maria II, and on her death became regent to his sons Pedro V (1853–55) and Louis (1861).

Ferdinand III 1199–1252. King of Castile (1217–52) and León (1230–52). Ferdinand united Castile with León and recaptured most of Spain from the Moors. He was canonized in 1671.

Ferdinand III 1608–57. Holy Roman Emperor (1637–57), successor to his father, Ferdinand II. A series of defeats at the hands of Protestants forced him to agree to the Peace of Westphalia (1648), ending the Thirty Years' War.

Ferdinand IV 1285–1312. Spanish king of Castile and León (1295–1312), successor to his father, Sancho IV. During his reign, Gibraltar was retaken from the Moors (1309).

Ferdinand V ⟨Ferdinand the Catholic⟩ 1452–1516. Spanish king, king of Aragon (1479–1516), king of Castile and León (1474–1504), and regent of Castile (1504–16). Through marriage and conquest, Ferdinand pursued the unification of Spanish kingdoms into what is now modern Spain. He married Isabella I of Castile (1469) and from 1474 they ruled Castile jointly. He succeeded his father, John II, as king of Aragon (1479), and subsequently conquered Granada from the Moors (1492). He began the Italian Wars against France, conquered Naples (1504), and annexed most of the kingdom of Navarre (1512). His reign saw the voyage of C. Columbus (1492) and the acquisition of rich possessions in the New World. With Isabella, he also instituted the Inquisition and expelled the Jews (1492) and the Moors (1502). Following Isabella's death (1504), he ruled Castile as regent.

Ferdinand VI 1712?–59. Spanish king (1746–59), successor to his father, Philip V. He enacted numerous domestic reforms and ably kept Spain from involvement in the Seven Years' War.

Ferdinand VII 1784–1833. Spanish king (Mar.–May, 1808, 1814–33), successor to his father, Charles IV. He was prevented from having real power by M. de Godoy. Ferdinand forced his father's abdication (1808) but was in turn forced from the throne by Napoleon and imprisoned until 1814. Ferdinand resumed control after Napoleon's ouster from Spain, but his rule was harsh and repressive. His repeal of the Salic Law in favor of his daughter Isabella II led to the first Carlist War. During his reign, Spanish power declined and Spain lost all its possessions in the Western Hemisphere except for Cuba.

Ferdowsi See Firdausi

Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 1919–. American poet. Owner of City Lights bookshop and founder of City Lights Books (publishers), both in San Francisco, he was a leading figure in the Beat movement of the 1950s, and published the works of A. Ginsberg and others. His collections include A Coney Island of the Mind.

Fermat, Pierre de 1601–65. French mathematician. He is considered the founder of the modern theory of numbers.

Fermi, Enrico 1901–54. Italian-American physicist who made major contributions to the then emerging science of nuclear physics and who worked on construction of the atom bomb. During experiments in 1934 to 1937, Fermi became the first to split uranium atoms with neutrons, though he did not know it at the time. In 1938 other scientists found that he had actually split atoms and thus discovered the previously unknown process of nuclear fission. Fermi became part of the secret Manhattan Project in the US during WW II and in Dec., 1942, produced the first controlled nuclear chain reaction. He received the Nobel Prize in Physics in 1938.

Fernandez, Manuel Felix See Guadalupe Victoria

Ferrar, Nicholas 1592–1637. English theologian who established (1626) a small utopian community at Little Gidding. Although initially successful, it was disbanded by Parliament (1647).

Ferrara-Florence, Council of Roman Catholic church council (1438–45) convened to end the schism between the Latin and Greek churches. An extension of the Council of Basel, it was opened at Ferrara but was moved to Florence (1439) because of the plague. Agreement was reached (1439) on the use of the Latin term "Filioque" (q.v.), on the use of unleavened bread in the Eucharist, on the Latin definition of purgatory, and on papal supremacy. Union of the two churches was announced (1439), though many Greeks refused to recognize the union and the schism ultimately continued.

Ferry, Jules 1832–93. French statesman and public official during the Government of National Defense. His education bill (1882) established the French system of public education, free of religious influence. As premier (1880–81, 1883–85) he greatly expanded the French colonial empire in Africa and Indochina.

Fersen, Hans Axel, Count 1755–1810. Swedish soldier and marshal of Sweden. He helped in the unsuccessful attempt to get King Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette out of France at the outset of the French Revolution. Later, as marshal under Gustavus IV, he took part in the wars against Napoleon.

Fertile Crescent Ancient Middle Eastern region stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates in parts of modern Egypt, Israel, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and Iraq. The site of some of the earliest settlements, the region has been conquered numerous times.

Fetterman Massacre Massacre of 80 US soldiers (1866) in Wyoming during the Sioux Wars. Led by Col. William Judd Fetterman (1833?–66), the soldiers ventured off a safe trail and were ambushed by a band of Chief Red Cloud's warriors.

Feud of the Counts See Count's War

feudalism Social system, based on land ownership, that was prevalent in medieval Europe (8th–14th cents.). By this system, a feudal lord granted lesser nobles (vassals) rights to lands (fiefs) within his domains and guaranteed them protection from attack. In return, the vassals swore their loyalty to the feudal lord and provided a specified number of warriors for his army. Vassals, in turn, subdivided their fiefs (subinfeudination), and thus became lords to vassals of progressively smaller fiefs. At the bottom of this complex structure was the feudal manor, which was tenanted by serfs (q.v.), and which by its agricultural output provided the economic base for the feudal system. The feudal system is generally thought to have arisen in Europe in the Frankish Kingdom of Charlemagne (8th–9th cents.). From there, it was spread by Frankish conquests to Spain, Italy, and Germany. It was transplanted to England by the Normans under William the Conqueror and to the Holy Land by rulers of the Crusader States. Though the feudal society at its height (13th cent.) provided a viable means of protection from outside attack, there were inherent weaknesses in the system. Hardships suffered by the serfs were legion. The system of subinfeudination fragmented authority, put the reigning king at the mercy of his vassals, and, by creating a multitude of largely independent petty kingdoms, fostered warfare among them. The rise of powerful monarchs and the growth of a new middle class (merchants and officials), among other factors, helped bring about a gradual decline of feudalism. By the 14th cent., it had largely disappeared, though European society retained vestiges of the system for centuries. Other cultures also experienced periods of feudalism, notably Japan (10th–19th cents.).

Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas 1804–72. German philosopher. Once a student of G. Hegel, he became a proponent of naturalistic materialism. He held that god was a projection or man's inner nature.

Feuillants French political club during the French Revolution. The Feuillants, including A. Barnave, the Marquis de Lafayette, and E. Sieyès, favored a constitutional monarchy but after 1792 were suppressed by the Jacobins.

Fez ⟨Fes⟩ Moroccan city (pop. 325,300), a Muslim holy city. Founded (790) by Idris I, it rose in power as the capital of early sultans. At the height of its power in the 14th-15th cents., it declined after Marrakesh became the capital.

Fianna Fáil Irish political party. Organized under the leadership of E. de Valera in 1926, it was formed to oppose the Irish Free State (est. 1921) and to win complete independence from Britain. It has largely controlled the Irish government since 1932, though its major rival, Fianna Gael, has been in power for short periods and as of 1981 headed the government.

Fichte, Johann Gottlieb 1762–1814. German philosopher. An influential proponent of transcendental idealism in his day, he is also remembered for his patriotic discourses, Addresses to the German Nation.

Ficino, Marsilio 1433–99. Italian philosopher and translator of Greek classics into Latin. He was an important exponent of Platonism in his day.

fief In feudalism, land granted by a lord to a vassal in return for the vassal's knightly service and allegiance. The fief was the cornerstone of feudal society.

Field, Stephen Johnson 1816–99. American jurist, associate justice of the Supreme Court (1863–97). A conservative, he was largely responsible for early interpretations of the 14th Amendment which blocked government regulation of business for many years.

Fielding, Henry 1707–54. One of the greatest of English novelists. He is known best for his classic novel Tom Jones.

Field of Cloth of Gold Name given the place, near Calais, France, where in 1520 English king Henry VIII met French king Francis I to propose an alliance. Little was accomplished.

Fieschi, Sinibaldo de' See Innocent IV

Fifteen Years' War War (1591–1606) between Austria and the Ottoman Empire. After initial Turkish advances against the Austrians, S. Bathory, prince of Transylvania, allied (1595) with Holy Roman Emperor Rudolf II. The Turks invaded Transylvania but were driven out. The Hapsburgs occupied Hungary, but then S. Bocskay, with Turkish aid, fomented a revolt in Transylvania and drove the Hapsburgs from Hungary (1604–06). The war marked the ascendance of Transylvania as a political power, and demonstrated a decline in Ottoman imperial power in Europe.

fifth column Term for subversives who work from within to undermine a nation. During the Spanish Civil War, the fascist Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano (1875?–1951), advancing on Madrid with four military columns, is said to have referred to supporters within the city as his "fifth column."

Fifth Crusade See Crusade, Fifth

Fifth Monarchy Men Puritan extremists in England active during the 17th cent. This sect of millenarians derived its name from belief in a fifth kingdom mentioned in the Book of Daniel. Its followers held that Jesus would return to rule this kingdom (fifth after Assyrian, Persian, Greek, and Roman empires) and that they were appointed to establish the kingdom for him by any means, including force. They rebelled briefly (1657, 1661), but the sect died out following the subsequent execution of their leader.

Fifth Republic Name given the new government of France established with the election (Dec., 1958) of C. de Gaulle as president.

Fifty-four forty or fight Slogan used by Americans who in the 1840s sought annexation of all of the Oregon Territory up to latitude 54° 40′ North, then jointly occupied by Britain and the US. It was used by the Democrats during the successful presidential campaign of J. Polk (1844).

Fiji Island group and republic in the South Pacific. Discovered (1643) by A. Tasman, the islands became a British colony (1874), were granted a constitution (1937), and became an independent republic (Oct. 10, 1970). Fiji was a strategic supply link in Allied operations during WW II.

filibuster Prolonged political debate used by legislators to obstruct passage of bills they oppose but lack the strength to defeat. In the 19th cent. the term was applied to armed adventurers who led private expeditions to Central and South American nations.

filioque Latin term meaning "and from the Son," added by the Latin church (6th cent.) to the Nicene Creed. It provoked a bitter controversy and was a main cause of the schism between the Eastern and Western churches.

Filipepi, Allesandro di Mariano See Botticelli, Sandro

Fillmore, Millard 1800–74. Thirteenth US president (1850–53), successor to Z. Taylor. A political leader in New York State, Fillmore served as US congressman (1833–35, 1837–43), and joined the Whig party in 1834. He became vice-president (1849) under Taylor, the Whig candidate, and president on Taylor's death in office (July 9, 1850). During his administration, Fillmore attempted to steer both his policies and the Whig party on a middle course in the intensifying debate over abolition of slavery. He supported passage of the Compromise of 1850 q.v. and thereby helped delay civil war. But he raised a storm of protest among northern abolitionists when he sought to enforce the Fugitive Slave Act (q.v.), which was part of the compromise. The Whig party was badly split over the slavery issue during the election of 1852. Fillmore failed to win renomination, and the party disintegrated soon after the election. Fillmore subsequently retired from politics except for a brief reappearance (1856) as the Know-Nothing party's presidential candidate.

Fink, Mike 1770?–1823? American frontiersman and folk hero. A celebrated Indian fighter, marksman, and brawler, he was at one time a keelboatman on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

Finland Republic located in northern Europe. Its capital is Helsinki. Finns took over the region by about the 8th cent. Finland came under Swedish control in the 12th cent. and remained subject to the Swedish kings until the Russians conquered the territory during the Napoleonic Wars. Russian control was ended by a successful drive for independence that coincided with the Russian Revolution of 1917. Since that time the neighboring Soviet Union has been a major factor in Finnish history. The Soviets have influenced Finnish politics in the years after WW II, but the government successfully established a neutral stance and maintains relations with both East and West. Key events in the history of Finland include:

7TH–8TH CENTS. Finns, migrating to Finland from the south, forced Lapps to move to far northern region.

1157 Territory conquered by Sweden's king Eric IX, who introduced Christianity; area ruled as part of Sweden until early 19th cent.

c1550 Protestant Reformation; Lutheranism spread throughout the country.

Flanders Historic county located along the North Sea coast and now divided between Belgium and France. Flanders became a countship in 862 and, though dominated by French monarchs, enjoyed a great deal of autonomy in subsequent centuries. Flanders became the leading center of the cloth industry in Europe (13th cent.), and its major cities (Ghent, Ypres, and Bruges) prospered as free communes in manufacturing and trade. Industrialization and prosperity during the 13th and 14th cents. brought a period of rebellion against French domination, alliance with England during the Hundred Years' War, and conquest by the dukes of Burgundy. Flanders passed to the Hapsburgs (1477), came under control of the Spanish Hapsburg kings (1506), and unsuccessfully rebelled (1576–84) against Spanish rule during the revolt of the Low Countries. After 1714, parts of Flanders passed to various powers until 1830, when the final disposition between Belgium and France was completed. Flanders was the scene of heavy fighting during WW I and the British retreat at Dunkirk during WW II.

Four-Power Pacific Treaty International pact (Dec. 13, 1921) by which the US, Great Britain, France, and Japan agreed to respect each other's Pacific territorial rights and to confer peacefully in case of disagreement.

Fourteen Points American peace proposals advanced (Jan. 8, 1918) by US president W. Wilson as a foundation for a lasting peace after WW I. They were: the abolition of secret diplomacy; freedom of the seas; equality of trade among peaceful nations; mutual reduction of armaments; peaceful mediation of colonial disputes; self-determination for USSR possessions; restoration of Belgium; restoration of French territory in Alsace-Lorraine; readjustment of the Italian border; autonomy for the national populations within Austria-Hungary; restoration of Serbia, Montenegro, and Romania; establishment of an independent Poland; self-determination for Turkish possessions and the internationalization of the Dardanelles; and the creation of a "general association of nations" to mediate future disputes. Many of the points as enumerated by Wilson were altered or ignored by the Treaty of Versailles (q.v.), but the 14th point was the foundation for the League of Nations.

France ⟨French Republic⟩ Republic located in Western Europe. Its capital is Paris. France evolved from the West Kingdom of the Franks, which was formed by the division of Charlemagne's empire (843). Development of a powerful French monarchy began in the 10th cent. and culminated in the absolutism of Louis XIV in the 17th–18th cents. By then France had also become a major European power. A flourishing culture developed in France and it has significantly influenced modern civilization in the West, notably in literature and the arts. The French Revolution plunged France into chaos and, as the experiment in liberal republicanism failed, brought Napoleon to power. Under Napoleon, France briefly controlled nearly all of continental Europe. By the time of Napoleon's fall in 1815, the spirit of the French Revolution had been spread throughout Europe and gave rise to liberal, nationalistic movements that flowered in the mid-1800s. France remained politically unstable throughout much of the 19th cent. and was further weakened by the ravages of WW I and WW II. Since WW II France has followed a relatively independent foreign policy, cultivating relations with Third World countries and, in more recent years, with Soviet-bloc countries. (See also French Revolution, French Revolutionary Wars, Napoleonic Wars.) Key events in the history of France include:

c600 BC Celts settled in Gaul (region roughly that of modern France).

c600 BC Marseilles founded by Ionian Greeks as a trading colony.

58–51 BC Romans, led by J. Caesar, conquered Gaul; prospered in subsequent years as a Roman province.

1ST CENT. AD Christianity introduced in Gaul.

3D CENT. AD Invasions of Gaul by Visigoths, Franks, and other barbarian peoples began.

FROM 428 AD Salian Franks gradually took control of northern France.

481 AD Clovis I became leader of the Salian Franks; this marked the beginning of the Merovingian Empire in Gaul.

486 AD Battle of Soissons; Clovis I defeated armies of the last Roman governor of Gaul.

496 AD Clovis defeated the invading Alemanni; converted to Christianity and thereafter became a staunch opponent of Arianism.

500 Clovis attacked but did not conquer Burgundy.

507 Visigoths defeated by Clovis in battle at Vouillé.

511–687 Merovingian Empire divided; on the death of Clovis (511) there followed nearly two centuries of wars and divisiveness; two Frankish kingdoms, Austrasia and Neustria, emerged but their kings had been weakened by the constant wars; the mayors of the palace, who served them, held real power.

c534 Burgundy conquered.

687 Pepin of Heristal, as mayor of the Palace of Austrasia (687–714), conquered Neustria; he thus united the Merovingian Empire under his rule, though the kings remained in title; Pepin was the first of the Carolingians.

715–741 Charles Martel, Pepin's son, became Austrasian mayor of the palace; subdued Neustria and began series of conquests that expanded Frankish domains.

732 Battle of Poitiers; Charles Martel won famous victory over Muslim force advancing from Spain; victory increased his power.

751 Carolingian kingdom founded; Pepin the Short, mayor of the palace from 741, overthrew the Merovingian king and took the crown for himself (751).

754–756 Donation of Pepin; in return for papal sanction for his overthrow of the Merovingians, Pepin aided the pope against invading Lombards in Italy; donated lands conquered from them to the church.

768–814 Charlemagne reigned; by his conquests brought the Carolingian Empire to its greatest extent, including most of modern France, Germany, northern Italy, and the Low Countries.

800 Charlemagne crowned emperor of the (reconstituted) Western Roman Empire by Pope Leo III; coronation, granted in return for aiding pope, established ties between Rome and the European monarchs.

814–840 Louis I (the Pious) reigned as the last ruler of a unified Carolingian Empire.

843 Treaty of Verdun; empire divided into three parts by Louis' heirs: West Frankish kingdom (roughly modern France), East Frankish kingdom (roughly modern Germany), and a narrow middle kingdom that included Italy; middle kingdom (except Italy) largely absorbed by other two in following years.

870 Treaty of Mersen; middle Frankish kingdom (except Italy) divided between West and East Frankish kingdoms.

843–877 Charles the Bald reigned as king of the West Franks; Charles held the imperial crown as (titular) ruler of the Carolingian Empire from 875; beginnings of feudalism appeared during his reign.

877–879 Louis II (the Stammerer) reigned.

879–884 Louis' heirs, Louis III (ruled 879–882) and Carloman (ruled 879–884), reigned in the West Frankish kingdom.

881 Louis III defeated Norse raiders at Saucourt.

881–887 Charles III (the Fat) reigned; he briefly reunited West and East Frankish kingdoms (882–887) but was overthrown; final breakup of the Carolingian Empire.

888–898 Eudes and Charles III (the Simple) chosen as rival kings of the west; Eudes was forced to defend Paris against Norse raiders and fight a civil war with Charles.

898–923 Charles III king in the west; after Eudes' death (898) he ended Norse raids by ceding parts of Normandy to their leader, Rollo (911); deposed by rebellious nobles (923).

922–923 Robert I, a Capetian, named king in opposition to Charles during the revolt; he was killed in battle.

923–936 Rudolph reigned; central authority further weakened by renewed fighting against Norsemen and rivals, as well as against Hungarian invaders.

936–954 Louis IV reigned; embroiled in wars with Hugh the Great, a leader of the nobles who was aided by German king Otto I; Louis finally emerged victorious in 950.

954–986 Lothair reigned; wars with the nobleman Hugh Capet and Holy Roman Emperors Otto II and Otto III (over Lorraine) reduced royal power to almost nothing.

987–996 Hugh Capet reigned, founding the Capetian line of French kings; his domains consisted of the region around Paris; as king of the west, he held only nominal rule over the feudal kingdoms that then comprised France (including Normandy, Brittany, Burgundy, and Aquitaine).

996–1031 Robert II reigned; excommunicated by Pope Gregory V for marrying (996) widow of Eudes; brought Burgundy under the control of French kings (1015).

1031–60 Henry I reigned; embroiled in various wars to maintain his domains and opposed interference by the church.

1060–1108 Philip I reigned; increased royal domains at the expense of feudal lords; unsuccessfully attempted to separate Normandy from English control (after 1066); opposed the reforms of Pope Gregory VII.

1108–37 Louis VI (the Fat) reigned; warred with King Henry I of England over English domains on the Continent; repulsed an invasion by the Holy Roman Emperor Henry V (1124); issued royal charters to towns then beginning a period of rapid growth.

France, Anatole ⟨pseud. of Jacques Anatole Thibault⟩ 1844–1924. French author. One of the leading literary men of his day, he wrote Thais and The Red Lily, among other works. He was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1921.

France, Battle of German offensive (June 5–16, 1940) against France during WW II. After defeating the Belgian and Allied armies in Belgium and forcing the British and Allied armies to evacuate at Dunkirk, the Germans turned to the destruction of the French army. Outflanking the Maginot Line (q.v.), the Germans moved south, taking Paris on June 14 and Verdun one day later. On June 16, French premier P. Reynaud resigned and was replaced by Marshal H. Petain, who immediately called for an armistice. France formally accepted Germany's armistice terms (June 22, 1940) at Compiègne, in the same railway car in which the Germans had accepted armistice terms in WW I.

Franche-Comté Name given to the French county of Burgundy (as distinct from the duchy of Burgundy). It became a possession of the Hapsburgs (16th cent.), and was annexed by France (1678).

Francia, José Gaspar Rodriguez ⟨El Supremo⟩ 1761?–1840. Dictator of Paraguay (1814–40). Joining the government after the bloodless revolt against Spain (1811), he became dictator (1814) and thereafter freely exercised his harsh personal rule.

Francis I 1494–1547. French king (1515–47), successor to his father-in-law, Louis XII. Much of his reign was spent in conflict with Holy Roman Emperor Charles V. Despite his failure to gain the support of English king Henry VIII at the Field of Cloth of Gold (1520), Francis engaged Charles in four wars, largely unsuccessful. During his reign the French Renaissance flowered and J. Cartier explored North America.

Francis I 1708–65. Holy Roman Emperor (1745–65). As duke of Lorraine (1729–37), he ceded his duchy to Poland to end the War of the Polish Succession. His marriage (1736) to Maria Theresa, a stronger personality and Hapsburg heiress, led to his accession as coregent of Austria and Holy Roman Emperor during the War of the Austrian Succession (q.v.). The Seven Years' War (1756–63) was fought during his reign.

Francis I 1777–1830. Italian king of the Two Sicilies (1825–30), successor to his father, Ferdinand I. His reign was marked by corruption and repressive policies.

Francis I (of Austria) See Francis II

Francis II 1453–88. Duke of Brittany (1458–88), successor to his father, Arthur III. Francis struggled to remain independent of France. He joined (1465) the League of the Public Weal against Louis VI and unsuccessfully rebelled against Charles VIII, whom his daughter, Anne of Brittany, later married.

Francis II 1544–60. French king (1559–60), successor to his father, Henry II. The Guise family effectively ruled France during his short reign and used their power to persecute the Huguenots (Protestants). The unsuccessful attempt to break their power was called the Conspiracy of Amboise.

Francis II ⟨Francis I of Austria⟩ 1768–1835. Last Holy Roman Emperor (1792–1806) and king of Bohemia and Hungary, successor to his father, Leopold II. He was also first emperor of Austria (Francis I, 1804–35). A determined opponent of the French Revolution and of Napoleon, he was several times defeated by the French in battles between 1793 and 1806. In 1806 he was compelled to sign the Treaty of Pressburg, which dissolved the Holy Roman Empire.

Franciscans Originally a religious order founded in Italy (1209) by Saint Francis of Assisi and now three separate orders: Friars Minor, Friars Minor Conventual, and Friars Minor Capuchin. The order was founded on rules written by Saint Francis stressing a life of poverty, religious devotion, and dedication to helping others. Francis subsequently rewrote and moderated the rules following the rapid spread of his order. These new rules were formally approved by Pope Honorius III (1223). By the 16th cent. the order had split between the Conventuals, who adhered to the communal life, and the zealously ascetic Observants. The Observants became an independent order (1517) and subsequently gave rise to the Capuchins (1525), whose order was founded on still stricter devotion to the ascetic life. The Franciscans have been prominent in missionary and educational work.

Francis Ferdinand 1863–1914. Austrian archduke (1875–1914). The nephew of Austrian emperor Francis Joseph I, he became heir after the death (1889) of Crown Prince Rudolf. The assassination of Francis and his wife at Sarajevo (June 28, 1914) touched off WW I.

Francis Joseph 1830–1916. Emperor of Austria (1848–1916) and king of Hungary (1867–1916). An absolutist, Francis was forced to yield to constitutional reform (1867) and creation of the Dual Monarchy (q.v.) after a series of military reversals. He allied himself with the Central Powers in WW I.

Francis of Assisi, Saint ⟨b. Giovanni Francesco Bernardone⟩ 1182–1226. Italian monk, founder of the Franciscans and one of the great saints of the Christian church. The son of a merchant, he converted to a life of poverty and religious devotion while still in his twenties. He began preaching as a layman in 1209, and, in that year, with permission from Pope Innocent III, founded the Franciscan order based on his teachings. He made a pilgrimage to Palestine (1219–20) during the Fifth Crusade, and in 1221 gave up leadership of the Franciscans. Following a 40-day fast (1224) at Mount Alverno, he miraculously received the "stigmata," wounds likened to those suffered by Jesus at the Crucifixion. Francis died with the wounds, said to be the first instance of such stigmata. He was canonized in 1228.

Francis of Sales, Saint 1567–1622. French Roman Catholic bishop, Doctor of the Church. He is known for his work in converting French Calvinists and for founding the Order of the Visition for women.

Francis Xavier, Saint 1506–52. Basque Jesuit missionary. Francis and Saint Ignatius Loyola were founding members of the Jesuits. His missionary work took him to India and Japan.

Franck, César Auguste 1822–90. Belgian-French organist and composer of the Romantic school. His best-known work is his Symphony in D minor.

Franco, Francisco 1892–1975. Spanish general and dictator. Made army chief of staff (1934), he took part in the military revolt (1936) at the outset of the Spanish Civil War. Later that year he became leader of the rebel government and, with the aid of German and Italian troops, brought the civil war to an end (1939). Despite the Fascist origins of his ruling Falange party, Franco kept Spain neutral during WW II and maintained a pro-Western policy in the years afterward until his death.

Franconia One of the five historic duchies of medieval Germany (with Saxony, Lotharingia, Swabia, and Bavaria), located in what is now southern W. Germany. Originally part of the Frankish Kingdom, it became the East Frankish or East German Kingdom on the division of the Carolingian Empire (843). It was partitioned (939), creating the duchies of Rhenish Franconia and Eastern Franconia. In subsequent centuries the duchies were further fragmented and divided. The name Franconia now survives as the name of three modern German provinces in Bavaria: Lower, Middle, and Upper Franconia.

Franco-Prussian War War (1870–71) between France and Prussia (with allied German states). The war brought about the unification of the German states under Prussian domination and thus achieved the long-sought goal of Prussian minister O. von Bismarck. Following the Austro-Prussian War (1866), France aggressively sought an opportunity to check the rising power of Prussia. Bismarck, on the other hand, was near to completing the unification of German states. Only the southern states remained outside the North German Confederation (q.v.) and Bismarck hoped to play on anti-French sentiment to bring them into the fold. With both sides thus primed, war was almost inevitable and fighting broke out in Aug., 1870. France suffered a humiliating defeat soon after. Consequences of the war were far-reaching: France rebelled against the monarchy and established the Third Republic (1870); Germany was unified (1871); and French hegemony over continental Europe was ended. Key dates in the war include:

1870 Prince of Prussia's ruling house (Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen) offered Spanish throne; France, concerned about growing Prussian power, threatened war if the prince took the throne; Prussians declined the throne (July 11).

1870 France demanded apology and assurances from Prussian king William I against further consideration of taking the Spanish throne; William I refused (July 13).

1870 Ems Dispatch released (July 13) by Prussian minister O. von Bismarck, contributing to tensions that ended in outbreak of war; Bismarck revised the dispatch, sent to him by King William, to help provoke war.

1870 France declared war on Prussia (July 19).

1870 France mobilized some 200,000 troops, Prussia more than 450,000; southern German states joined Prussian cause against France, as Bismarck had expected (July); Prussians invaded Alsace (Aug. 4).

1870 The Prussians defeated the French in major battles at Weissenburg (Aug. 4), at Worth (Aug. 6), and at Spichern (Aug. 6).

1870 French armies led by Marshal A. Bazaine bottled up at Metz by two German armies; attempts to break out were defeated at Vionville (Aug. 16) and Gravelotte (Aug. 18).

1870 Marching to relieve Metz, the French under Marshal M. de MacMahon and Emperor Napoleon III were surprised by the Germans and driven northward toward Sedan (late Aug.).

1870 Battle of Sedan (Sept. 1), northern France, ended in surrender of French army and downfall of the Emperor Napoleon III.

1870 Paris rebelled upon the news of defeat at Sedan; France declared a Republic; Paris surrounded and besieged by the Germans (Sept. 19).

1870 Marshal Bazaine surrendered his garrison of nearly 180,000 men at Metz (Oct. 27); Paris continued to resist despite worsening famine.

1871 German states formally unified (Jan. 18) into the German Empire; William I of Prussia became king of Germany; these events marked culmination of Bismarck's long effort to achieve unification.

1871 Paris surrendered to Germans (Jan. 28)

1871 French named A. Thiers as head of state (Feb.); preliminary peace treaty approved (Mar. 1).

1871 Commune of Paris, bloody revolt by Paris radicals (Mar.–May) against new government; loyal French troops retook city and inflicted severe reprisals.

1871 Final peace treaty signed at Frankfurt (May 10); France ceded Alsace and part of Lorraine to the German Empire and agreed to pay five billion francs in reparations.

Frankfurt ⟨Frankfurt am Main⟩ Historic German city (pop. 632,600) in West Germany. A Roman town as early as the 1st cent. AD, by the 12th cent. it was the traditional place for the coronation of German kings. A commercial center whose fairs were known throughout Europe by the 13th cent., it is today a prominent industrial, commercial, and financial center.

Frankfurt, Council of Ecclesiastical meeting. Called (794) by Charlemagne, with the approval of Pope Adrian I, to consider the acts by the Second Council of Nicaea, it condemned Adoptionism as well as the worship of graven images.

Frankfurt, Treaty of French-German treaty (May 10, 1871) ending the Franco-Prussian War. France was forced to yield disputed territories in Alsace and Lorraine, to pay a five-billion-franc indemnity, and to suffer German occupation until these terms were met.

Franklin A short-lived, self-governing US state (1784–88) in what is now eastern Tennessee. The lands were ceded by North Carolina to the US government in 1784, but settlers in the territory were determined to enter the Union as a state. They established a government (1785), with J. Sevier as president, and until 1788 continued to press for recognition as a state. The territory was again ceded to the US (1790), and became the state of Tennessee (along with additional lands to the west) in 1796.

Franklin, Benjamin 1706–90. American publisher, author, scientist, statesman, and diplomat, whose wit and wisdom made him one of the most widely known figures of Colonial America. Largely self-educated (he left school at 10), he owned his own newspaper in Philadelphia by 1730 and there published the internationally famous Poor Richard's Almanack (1732–57). He subsequently invented the Franklin stove (*c*1744), conducted his famous experiment with lightning by means of a kite (1752), and invented bifocal eyeglasses (1784). During this period he became widely known in scientific circles for his researches and also served as deputy postmaster general for the American colonies (1753–74). He was a delegate (1754) to the Albany Congress (q.v.), and, after 1757, spent a great deal of time in England serving as an agent on various matters. He returned to America (1775) just prior to the outbreak of the American Revolution, was a delegate to the Second Continental Congress, and helped draft the Declaration of Independence, which he also signed. Sent to France (1776) to win recognition for the republic, he gained a wide following there. He was in England again (1781) to help with peace negotiations to end the Revolutionary War. Once again in America, he helped arrange the compromise at the Constitutional Convention (1787) which resulted in the writing of the Constitution.

Franklin, Sir John 1786–1847. English explorer of the North American Arctic. His expedition (1845) in search of the Northwest Passage ended in disaster when his ships became icebound midway between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Franks Germanic tribe that formed a powerful empire in Gaul after the fall of the Roman Empire. Believed to have originated along the Rhine River, the Franks by the 3d cent. AD had gained in strength and numbers and began a series of invasions into Gaul. Clovis I united the several Frankish tribes (5th cent. AD), adopted Christianity, and conquered much of Gaul from the Romans. He established the Frankish Empire, which flourished under the Merovingian dynasty and later the Carolingian. The Franks reached their height under the rule of Charlemagne (9th cent.), whose empire was divided and eventually became France and Germany. France derives its name from the Franks.

Fraser, James Earle 1876–1953. American sculptor. His best-known works are The End of the Trail and the Indian and buffalo on the US nickel.

Frazer, Sir James George 1854–1941. Scottish classicist and anthropologist. He is known best for his work The Golden Bough.

Fredegund d. 597. Frankish queen. The mistress of King Chilperic I of Neustria, she convinced the king to kill his wife, Galswintha (567), and make her queen. Galswintha, however, was sister of Brunhilda, queen of Austrasia, and the murder of Galswintha caused a long war between Neustria and Austrasia, in which Austrasia was finally victorious.

Frederick I ⟨Frederick Barbarossa⟩ *c*1123–90. Holy Roman Emperor (1155–90), prominent member of the Hohenstaufen family and successor to Conrad III. His reign was marked by attempts to pacify warring German nobles and by several unsuccessful attempts to gain control over Lombardy. He was killed during the Third Crusade.

Frederick I 1372–1440. Elector of Brandenburg (1417–40) and first of the Hohenzollern line. Made elector (1417) by Holy Roman Emperor Sigismund, he secured the future of the Hohenzollern family.

Frederick I 1657–1713. First Prussian king (1701–13), son of Frederick William and his successor as elector of Brandenburg (1688–1713). By promising Prussian military aid in the oncoming War of the Spanish Succession, he won permission from Leopold I to create the kingdom of Prussia (1701).

Frederick II 1194–1250. Holy Roman Emperor (1220–50), king of Germany (1212–20), Sicily (1197–1250), and Jerusalem (1229–50). A Hohenstaufen, he was a grandson of Frederick Barbarossa, whose antipapal policies he continued. He was excommunicated several times, once for seizing the Papal States. His attempts to unify Italy and Germany, largely unsuccessful, were opposed vigorously by the Lombard League. While conducting the Fifth Crusade, he crowned himself (1229) king of Jerusalem. He later frequently referred to himself as "lord of the world." Because of his unceasing struggles with the papacy, the strength of both the Hohenstaufen family and the German nation were weakened. Powerful Italian city-states emerged soon after his death.

Frederick II ⟨Frederick the Great⟩ 1712–86. Prussian king (1740–86), successor to his father, Frederick William I. Under Frederick's leadership, Prussia evolved from a small Germanic state into an international power. A brilliant military tactician, Frederick seized portions of Silesia in the War of the Austrian Succession. Almost defeated in the Seven Years' War (1756–63), Frederick emerged victorious when his admirer Peter III assumed the Russian throne and took Russia out of the war. Frederick promulgated civil, legal, and penal reforms and internal improvements such as roads and canals. A patron of the arts, he enjoyed a long correspondence with Voltaire. Frederick increased Prussian domains through the First Partition of Poland (1772) and engaged in the War of the Bavarian Succession (1778–79) to prevent Prussia's rival, Austria, from gaining power within the Holy Roman Empire.

Frederick III 1415–93. Holy Roman Emperor (1452–93) and king of Germany (1440–93). Frederick set the stage for future Hapsburg domination by marrying (1477) his son Maximilian I to Mary of Burgundy, whereby Burgundy came under Hapsburg rule. He swore German allegiance to Rome, a move that infuriated German nobility.

Frederick III ⟨Frederick the Wise⟩ 1463–1525. Elector of Saxony (1486–1525). He founded the University of Wittenberg (1502), where M. Luther and Melanchthon became professors. He later became Luther's protector (1521) after the Diet of Worms.

Frederick III ⟨Frederick the Pious⟩ 1515–76. Elector palatine (1559–76). A convert to Lutheranism (1546) and then Calvinism (1561), he became a leading figure in the latter movement. He published the Heidelberg Catechism (1563).

Frederick III 1609–70. King of Norway and Denmark (1648–70). Frederick was forced to cede much of his territory to Swedish king Charles X following a war (1657–60). A coalition of burghers and clergy then united to curb aristocratic power, strengthen the monarchy, and help Denmark regain its vitality.

Frederick III 1831–88. Emperor of Germany and king of Prussia (1888). A liberal, Frederick ruled for only 99 days before succumbing to throat cancer.

Frederick IV 1574–1610. Elector palatine (1592–1610). An ardent Lutheran, he helped found (1608) the Protestant Union of Evangelical States and was chosen its first leader.

Frederick IV 1671–1730. King of Norway and Denmark (1699–1730). Frederick was unsuccessful in his attempts to regain southern Sweden. He established an educational system and abolished serfdom.

Frederick V 1723–66. King of Denmark and Norway (1746–66). He took little interest in state, leaving it to his foreign minister. During his reign, trade with Asia and the Americas greatly increased and his kingdom's financial affairs flourished.

Frederick VI 1769–1839. King of Denmark (1808–39) and Norway (1808–14). Frederick's alliance with Napoleon against Britain, resulting largely from the British bombardments (1801, 1807) of Copenhagen, led to the loss of Norway to Sweden through the Treaty of Kiel (1814).

Frederick VII 1808–63. Danish king (1848–63), successor to his father, Christian VIII. His reign was marked by the adoption of a constitution and creation of a constitutional monarchy. He also incorporated into Denmark much of Schleswig-Holstein (1863), thereby precipitating war with Prussia.

Frederick VIII 1843–1912. Danish king (1906–12), successor to his father, Christian IX. He served in the war against Prussia (1864) and had an uneventful reign.

Frederick IX 1899–1972. Danish king (1947–72). Frederick and his father, Christian X, imprisoned (1943–45) by the Nazis in WW II, became symbols of Danish resistance to German occupation.

Frederick Augustus I ⟨Frederick Augustus the Just⟩ 1750–1827. First king of Saxony (1806–27) and elector of Saxony (1763–1806). Defeated by Napoleon (1806), he concluded a separate peace and, as a result, became king. After Napoleon's final defeat, however, the Congress of Vienna (1815) ceded the major part of his kingdom to Prussia.

Frederick Henry 1584–1647. Prince of Orange and stadholder of the United Provinces (1625–47). He regained many Dutch cities from Spain and finally negotiated an advantageous treaty with that country (1647).

Fredericksburg, Battle of Battle (Dec. 13, 1862) of the American Civil War at Fredericksburg, Virginia. Some 78,000 Confederate troops under Gen. R. E. Lee decisively defeated an assault by 120,000 Union troops under command of Gen. A. Burnside, halting Burnside's advance on Richmond. Confederate casualties were 5,000, Union casualties 12,000. Burnside was relieved of command. The battle was as much a boost to Confederate hopes as it was a defeat for Union arms and morale.

Frederick the Fair *c*1286–1330. German king (1314–22) and Austrian duke (1306–30). A disputed election (1314) for the German crown led to war between Frederick and Louis IV of Bavaria. The conflict ended in Frederick's defeat (1322) and retirement to Austria.

Frederick William ⟨Frederick the Great Elector⟩ 1620–88. Elector of Brandenburg (1640–88). Frederick negotiated an armistice to the Thirty Years' War and built a strong army in the interim, ensuring him fair treatment in the Peace of Westphalia. He unified Prussia and secured its sovereignty through a treaty (1657) with Poland.

Frederick William 1771–1815. Duke of Brunswick (1813–15). After Napoleon seized his duchy (1806), he formed the Black Brunswickers in a brave but unsuccessful attempt (1809) to drive out the French. He finally succeeded (1813) but was killed soon after.

Frederick William I 1688–1740. Prussian king (1713–40), successor to his father, Frederick I. Considered a strong ruler, he instituted many reforms and built the Prussian army into a powerful fighting force.

Frederick William II 1744–97. Prussian king (1786–97), successor to his uncle Frederick II. Though he was not considered an exceptional leader during his reign, Prussia continued its territorial expansion, notably at the expense of Poland through the partitions of Poland.

Frederick William III 1770–1840. King of Prussia (1797–1840). A weak king, he was dominated by Napoleon, but he allied himself with Russia and declared war (1813) on France. After the Congress of Vienna he alienated his people by joining the reactionary Holy Alliance.

Frederick William IV 1795–1861. Prussian king (1840–61), successor to his father, Frederick William III. His reign was marked by a brief rebellion (1848) and by his involvement in unsuccessful plans to unify Germany. (See Revolutions of 1848.)

freedmen Term applied to former slaves who were released from bondage. In ancient Rome, freedmen were accorded varying degrees of civil rights.

Freedmen's Bureau US government bureau (1865–72) formed during Reconstruction to help former black slaves and oversee abandoned lands after the Civil War. Headed by Gen. O. Howard, the bureau provided food, medical attention, some semblance of protection, and, later, educational institutions for newly freed slaves in the war-torn South. It failed, however, in its aim to resettle blacks on the abandoned lands. Unpopular among white southerners, it was finally disbanded in 1872.

free enterprise Economic doctrine based on the action of private individuals and companies operating in the marketplace free of government control. It is strongly identified with capitalism.

Free French Name given the military wing of the French Committee of National Defense. It was formed (June 23, 1940) in London by C. de Gaulle to continue French opposition to German occupation after the fall of France (1940) during WW II.

Freeman's Farm, Battle of 1. ⟨Saratoga, First Battle of⟩ First engagement (Sept. 19, 1777) of the Saratoga campaign during the American Revolution. Continental forces under Gen. H. Gates repulsed British forces under Gen. J. Burgoyne, thereby delaying the British advance on Albany. 2. ⟨Saratoga, Second Battle of⟩ ⟨Bemis Heights, Battle of⟩ Battle fought (Oct. 7, 1777) by a British reconnaissance party under Burgoyne and colonials under Gen. B. Arnold at Bemis Heights, near Freeman's Farm. The Americans were victorious.

Freemasons Secret fraternal order, one of the largest in the world. Though the order claims ancient origins, it seems to have developed from fraternities of English and Scottish stonemasons in the Middle Ages. The modern history of the organization dates from the formation of the Grand Lodge in England (1717). The movement spread rapidly throughout Europe and reached America in 1730 or 1733. Today there are independent national Masonic organizations in many countries throughout the world. In addition to their vow of secrecy, Masons generally adhere to a liberal philosophy of equality and religious toleration. They are generally opposed by the Catholic church. In America a reaction against them gave rise to the Anti-Masonic party. Many prominent people have been Freemasons, including 13 US presidents.

free silver American currency-reform movement. Adherents of free silver advocated unlimited coinage of silver as a way to increase the supply of money. Free silver was espoused by populists, progressives, and farmers, and was opposed by eastern financiers, who favored the single gold standard. This controversy led to adoption of the Bland-Allison Act (1878) and the Sherman Silver Purchase Act (1890). The free silver movement figured in American politics in the last half of the 19th and early 20th cents. W. Bryan based his unsuccessful presidential campaigns of 1896 and 1900 on the advocacy of free silver.

Free-Soil party Short-lived US political party (1848–54) organized to oppose extension of slavery into new US territories. Following the defeat of the Wilmot Proviso in Congress, antislavery Whigs, Barnburners, and members of the Liberal party met in Buffalo (1848) and formally organized the party. Their presidential candidate, M. Van Buren, failed to win (1848) but proved to be a decisive factor in the election of President Z. Taylor. Following the Compromise of 1850, the party began to dissolve, and in 1854 it became part of the newly formed Republican party.

Free Territory of Trieste Territory created (1947) after WW II. It divided the Adriatic city of Trieste and environs into zones administered by Britain and Yugoslavia. It was abolished (1954) and its holdings divided between Italy and Yugoslavia.

freethinker Term applied to one whose religious and philosophical opinions are freely arrived at by use of reason, rather than through ecclesiastical authority. The term came into use in the 18th cent. with the rise of deism.

free trade Term applied to commerce conducted without governmental interference in the form of import and export regulations. A. Smith's Wealth of Nations was a strong argument for free trade, which developed as a movement in the 17th and 18th cents.

free will Philosophical concept that holds that man can choose, through his own will, a given action. The concept has long been a subject of both philosophical and religious debate. It opposes the concept of determinism.

Frei Montalva, Eduardo 1911–. Chilean president (1964–70). He was a founder of the Christian Democratic party (1957) and as president introduced many democratic and economic reforms.

Freising, Otto of See Otto of Freising

Frémont, John Charles ⟨The Pathfinder⟩ 1813–90. American explorer, soldier, and an unsuccessful presidential candidate of the new Republican party (1856). He led expeditions in the Rockies (1842) and in Oregon and California (1843–44). In 1845 he took part in the revolt by Californian settlers against Mexico and set up the Bear Flag State. He subsequently became a leader in the conquest of California during the war with Mexico. He made a fortune when gold was discovered on his California property in the 1840s but eventually lost it all in unsuccessful railroad ventures. He served as commander in the West during the Civil War but was removed because of his actions regarding slavery. He was governor of the Arizona Territory (1878–83).

French, Daniel Chester 1850–1931. American sculptor known best for his statue of A. Lincoln in the Lincoln Memorial, Washington, D.C.

French Academy ⟨Académie Française⟩ French cultural society. Dating from the early 1630s and a small informal group of scholars who met weekly to discuss intellectual matters, it was formally established (1835) by Cardinal Richelieu to regulate French language and literature.

French Action ⟨Action Française⟩ French Royalist party. Organized (1898) by extreme conservatives, it supported H. Petain's government during WW

II. Postwar charges of collaboration with the Germans resulted in its decline.

French and Indian War War (1754–63) in North America that became part of the larger European conflict known as the Seven Years' War. The French and Indian War was the last in a series of wars between the British and French for control of territory in what are today Canada and the United States (For more on the earlier wars, see King William's War, Queen Anne's War, King George's War.) The war was sparked by rivalry over the upper Ohio Valley region. The French in the late 1740s sought to link their Canadian and Louisiana possessions by taking control of the Ohio Valley region. This, however, blocked any future westward expansion of the British colonies along the American coast and thus roused the colonists to action. Ultimately, France lost all its Canadian colonies to the British. The war also gave American colonists a sense of being able to defend themselves and contributed to their growing feelings of independence from the British crown. Key dates in the war include:

1748 Ohio Company formed by Virginians to explore Ohio Valley territory to west of American colonies.

1748–49 French built a string of forts in Canada and the Ohio Valley to secure their control of the region.

1753 French commander Marquis Duquesne led force of French troops to occupy the Ohio Valley; G. Washington sent by Virginians to tell them to leave region.

1754 French built Fort Duquesne (at modern Pittsburgh).

1754 G. Washington on military expedition from Virginia against French; built Fort Necessity but was forced to surrender it soon after.

1754 Albany Convention held (June) to coordinate defense plans to deal with French expansion in the western region.

1755 Campaign against French in the Ohio Valley (and Canada) began under British Gen. Braddock.

1755 Braddock was defeated and later died after attack on Fort Duquesne (July 9).

1756 Seven Years' War began in Europe.

1756 French under Gen. L. de Montcalm took British forts Oswego and George.

1757 British Fort William Henry taken by French.

1758 Gen. de Montcalm repulsed British attacks (July) on Fort Ticonderoga.

1758 British captured Louisburg (July 26) in eastern Canada.

1758 Fort Duquesne captured from the French (Nov. 25); renamed Fort Pitt.

1759 Fort Ticonderoga fell to British forces.

1759 Battle of the Plains of Abraham in Canada (Sept. 13); decisive engagement of the war; de Montcalm killed in battle; British captured Quebec (Sept. 18) soon after.

1760 Montreal captured (Sept. 8), ending the war in the Americas.

1763 Treaty of Paris; British possession of French territory in Canada confirmed.

French and Swedish War War (1635–48) conducted by France and Sweden against the forces of the house of Hapsburg and the Holy Roman Empire. The last phase of the Thirty Years' War (1618–48), it was ended by the Peace of Westphalia (1648).

French Cameroon See Cameroon

French Community Organization of French states overseas department, and former territories created by the constitution of the Fifth Republic (1958). Among its members are France, Corsica, French Polynesia, French Guiana, and others. It promotes economic, technical, and cultural exchanges.

French Congo Former French possession, now known as French Equatorial Africa (q.v.).

French East India Company French colonial trading organization established (1664) by J. Colbert to protect French trade interests. It was successful for a time in India under J. Dupleix, less so in America, and was abolished in 1769.

French Equatorial Africa Former federation of French colonies in west central Africa, with its capital at Brazzaville. The first French settlements were established on the Gabon River (1839). French claims were extended by exploration, military ventures, and agreements with other colonial powers until 1887, when the approximate borders of what was then known as the French Congo were established. The federation of French Equatorial Africa was formed (1910), and during WW II it supported the Free French forces. The territories in the federation voted for independence (1958), and in 1960 they became the Central African Republic, and the republics of Chad, Gabon, and the Congo.

French Guiana Overseas department (pop. 63,000) of France, located on the northeast coast of South America. The first permanent settlement was established (1604) at Cayenne, by the French. The colony was captured (1676) briefly by the Dutch during the Dutch Wars, and by 1713 boundary disputes with the neighboring Portuguese were settled. In the 18th cent., Jesuits were expelled, some 14,000 Europeans died in an unsuccessful attempt to establish a new colony, and the colony saw an influx of deportees from France (many of whom died) during the French Revolution. France briefly lost the colony (1809–17) to British and Portuguese forces, and, after abolition of slavery (1848), the colony entered a period of economic decline. It was in 1852 that the first of the penal colonies was established, the most notorious of them, Devil's Island, continuing in use until 1951. The colony was made an overseas department in 1946.

French Morocco Former French protectorate in northwestern Africa. Occupied by the French in the early 1900s, the region became a French protectorate (1912). It was incorporated (1956) with Spanish Morocco and Tangier into the kingdom of Morocco.

French Polynesia French Pacific territory consisting of over one hundred Pacific Ocean islands, the largest of which is Tahiti. Acquired during the 19th cent., the islands were placed under central administration in 1903.

French Revolution Prolonged political and social struggle (1789–99) in France that surrounded the overthrow of the monarchy and establishment of the First Republic. The revolution was caused by a number of factors, chief among them resentment against the ancien régime, the old social order dominated by the king and his nobles, and a prolonged crisis over government finances. The ideas of the Enlightenment (q.v.) and the recent success of the American Revolution also helped provide a climate for the revolution. The revolution began as an attempt to create a constitutional monarchy and in this early phase the moderate bourgeoisie dominated the revolution. But by late 1792 the demands for long-overdue reforms and the sheer inertia of revolution resulted in proclamation of the republic. The republic was consumed by the violence of the revolution. Attacks by other European nations (see French Revolutionary Wars) only multiplied effects of the bitter factional struggles, riots, and counterrevolutionary uprisings. The chaos helped bring the extreme radicals to power and touched off the bloody Reign of Terror. The French succeeded in mustering powerful armies and were victorious against their foreign enemies. However, a succession of attempts to form a stable republican government failed and ended in creation of the Consulate, a dictatorship led by their great military leader, Napoleon. (See also France, Napoleon.) Key events in the revolution include:

1789 States General convened (May 5); representatives of the three estates (clergy, nobility, and commoners) met at Versailles; its intended purpose (to enact fiscal reforms) dwarfed by strong sentiment for sweeping political and social reform.

1789 Jacobins, a political club (faction) formed by delegates to the States General.

1789 Third estate (commoners) insisted it alone represented France; voted to constitute itself as the National Assembly (June 17) after a deadlock developed in the States General over voting procedures.

1789 Tennis Court Oath taken (June 20) by members of the National Assembly after they had been locked out of their meeting hall; meeting in a tennis court, they vowed not to disband until France had a constitution; individual members of other estates joined third estate.

1789 Louis XVI yielded to the National Assembly and ordered that all members of the remaining two estates should join it (June 27).

1789 King Louis concentrated troops around Paris and Versailles; Louis dismissed (July 11) his popular minister, J. Necker, and this along with fears that Louis might disband the National Assembly led to unrest in Paris.

1789 Rioting began in Paris (July 12).

1789 Paris Commune formed (July 13) as revolutionary sentiment spread in French cities; new militia formed in Paris (National Guard) and elsewhere; Lafayette commanded the Paris National Guard.

1789 Storming of the Bastille (July 14), an arsenal and prison; the Great Fear (of reprisals by royalist armies) spread through countryside as peasants refused to pay taxes and attacked estates of noblemen (July–Aug.).

1789 Feudal structure in France abolished by National Assembly (Aug. 4); legal and fiscal equality proclaimed.

1789 Declaration of the Rights of Man adopted by the National Assembly (Aug. 26).

1789 National Assembly wrote a new constitution providing for a constitutional monarchy; (Sept. 10); king's powers sharply limited, unicameral legislature provided for.

1789 Paris mob, consisting mostly of women, stormed the royal palace of Versailles (Oct. 5–6); angered by high bread prices and the king's resistance to Assembly legislation, they forced the king's removal to Paris; National Assembly removed to Paris.

1789 National Assembly confiscated church lands to overcome financial crisis. (Nov. 2); issued assignats, notes backed by these public lands.

1789 Public opinion swayed in favor of revolutionary action by rise of clubs such as the Jacobins and publication of inflammatory political newspapers such as J.P. Marat's L'Ami du Peuple.

1790 Cordeliers, political club formed to prevent abuses of power; J.P. Marat and G. Danton became leaders.

1790 Civil Constitution of the Clergy (July 12); Roman Catholic church reorganized, and clerics to be paid by the state.

1790 King Louis approved the new national constitution creating a constitutional monarchy (July 14).

1790 Assembly imposed (Nov. 27) requirement of oath by clerics as resistance to Civil Constitution of the Clergy mounted; church split over oath and many clerics who refused suffered persecutions.

1791 Reacting to rising revolutionary tide, Louis XVI attempted to flee abroad with the royal family (June 20–21); apprehended at Varennes (June 25) and brought back to Paris a virtual prisoner.

1791 Feuillants, political club formed by moderate Jacobins (June) who opposed abolition of the monarchy.

1791 Paris republicans demanded the king be deposed; massed on the Champ de Mars (July 17), they were fired on by the National Guard (on Lafayette's order) and were dispersed.

1791 Declaration of Pillnitz (Aug. 27); Prussia and Holy Roman Empire agreed to war against France to restore the monarchy, if other powers joined them; declaration angered French and paved the way for war.

1791 Constitution put in force by the Assembly (Sept. 3); King Louis swore to uphold it (Sept. 14).

1791–92 Legislative Assembly in power; convened (Oct. 1), it was initially dominated by moderate Girondists; radical Jacobins among the groups opposed to the Girondists.

1792 Legislative Assembly under Girondist influence declared war on the Austrians (Apr. 20), inaugurating the French Revolutionary Wars. French armies quickly put on defensive by Austrians.

1792 Fall of Girondist ministry (June 13); rapid spread of unrest.

1792 Austro-Prussian armies crossed into France (July 11); radicalism increased in Paris.

1792 Brunswick Manifesto (July 27); Austro-Prussian commander threatened to destroy Paris if the king was harmed; Parisians angered by manifesto.

1792 Storming of Tuileries (Aug. 10); mob instigated by radicals killed the king's Swiss Guard; Legislative Assembly "suspended" the king and formed provisional government headed by G. Danton; new assembly, the National Convention, to be formed.

1792 Lafayette, then in command of units in the revolutionary army, defected (Aug. 19) to the Austrians to escape trial by radicals.

1792 September Massacres (Sept. 2–6) in Paris; prisoners in Paris jails slaughtered as hysteria mounted over approach of Austro-Prussian armies; soon after, French armies turned tide against the enemy.

1792–95 National Convention in power; convened (Sept. 21); dominated first by Girondists, then by Jacobins.

1792 First Republic proclaimed (Sept. 22) by National Convention; monarchy abolished (Sept. 21).

1793 Louis XVI guillotined (Jan. 21) after being tried for treason by the National Convention.

1793 Britain entered war against France (Feb.) and French armies soon after again suffered reverses.

1793 Counterrevolutionary rebellion in the Vendée (western France) began (Mar.)

1793 Émigrés, French royalists who had fled revolutionary France, declared "civilly dead" by Convention; (Mar. 28) émigré property confiscated.

1793 Committee of Public Safety established by National Convention (Apr. 6); at first had limited executive functions.

1793 J. Hébert arrested (May 24) for leading disorders; arrest instigated by Girondists.

1793 Insurrection of radical Enragés; Convention forced to arrest 31 Girondist deputies; this gave the "Mountain" (Jacobins and other left radicals) control of the Convention (June 2), and marked fall of Girondists (moderates) from power.

1793 Girondist deputies sparked revolts in the provinces after being forced to flee Paris (June); revolutionary government restored order by year's end.

1793 New Republican constitution proclaimed (June 22); it did not really take effect because extraordinary power remained in hands of the Committee of Public Safety.

1793 Committee of Public Safety gained dictatorial powers, taking on powers from the Convention and the Paris Commune (July); the Committee thus effectively became ruling body of revolutionary France. Robespierre became Committee member July 27.

1793 C. Corday killed J.P. Marat (July 13) for his persecution of the Girondists.

1793 Universal conscription of males ordered (Aug. 23) as internal revolts and advances of the armies of the First Coalition threatened the revolutionary government; an army of nearly a million men created.

1793–1794 Reign of Terror instituted (Sept.) after sansculottes (radical workers and shopkeepers) invaded the Convention and demanded it do more to prevent counterrevolutionary activities; thousands of royalists, counterrevolutionaries and others were ultimately killed.

1793 Convention formally suspended constitution (of 1793); Committee of Public Safety to head revolutionary government until end of wars with foreign powers; Robespierre, a member of the committee since July 28, gradually took control of it by eliminating his opponents.

1793 Execution of Queen Marie Antoinette (Oct. 16).

1793 Principal Girondists guillotined (Oct. 31); executions averaged 60 per month thereafter.

1793 Anti-Christian Hébertists transformed the Cathedral of Notre Dame into a "Temple of Reason" (Nov. 7).

1793 Worship of God abolished (Nov. 10); Hébertists led anti-Christian movement and proclaimed "Cult of Reason."

1793–1805 French Revolutionary Calendar put in effect (Nov. 24); remained in use to 1805.

1793 Revolutionary dictatorship of France set up by Committee of Public Safety (Dec. 4); committee took power to appoint and dismiss even local officials.

1793 New victories by French armies drove enemy back out of France (Dec.)

1794 J. Hébert, radical leader of the anti-Christian movement, guillotined (Mar. 24) on orders from Robespierre; Hébert was a major opponent of Robespierre, who wanted a more moderate policy on religion.

1794 J. Danton, another leader of opposition to Robespierre, guillotined (Apr. 5) along with his followers; Robespierre leading power of government.

1794 Cult of the Supreme Being proclaimed by Robespierre (June), after Convention instituted a civic religion recognizing a Supreme Being (May 7).

1794 Law of 22 Prairial passed (June 10); allowed only acquittal or death in trials and eliminated most rights of accused; executions increased markedly and aroused sentiment against Robespierre.

1794 Coup d'état of 9 Thermidor (July 27); Convention impeached Robespierre; he was beheaded (July 28) along with his followers; moderates took power and the Thermidorian Reaction began. Terror ended and persecution of the Jacobins began; more radical revolutionary measures rescinded.

1794 Paris Commune abolished (July 27).

1794 Jacobin club closed in Paris (Nov. 12).

1795 Riots over food prices and attack on National Convention (Apr. 1) suppressed by National Guard; reprisals against radical leaders.

1795 New attack on National Convention and riots among workers in Paris (May 20) put down by National Guard; reprisals against suspected Jacobins spread (White Terror).

1795 Churches reopened (May 30).

1795 Revolutionary Tribunal, the court of the Terror, abolished (May 31); justice courts empowered to try treason.

1795 Constitution of 1795 (Aug. 22); executive power rested with five-man Directory; Council of 500 and Council of Elders established.

1795 Insurrection against the Directory suppressed (Oct. 5) by troops commanded by Gen. Napoleon Bonaparte; Napoleon named commander of the Army of the Interior.

1795–99 Directory in power; convened Nov. 2, it presided over the last years of the revolution and pursued a generally moderate course.

1796 Counterrevolutionary uprising of the Vendée and elsewhere again suppressed (Feb.)

1796 Napoleon given command of French armies in Italy; his success in the Italian campaign (from Apr.) made him a national hero.

1797 F. Babeuf executed (May 17); had led (1796) conspiracy of former Jacobins and advocates of what became Socialist doctrines.

1797 Coup of 18 Fructidor (Sept. 4) by the republicans; Directory took on dictatorial powers.

1797 Treaty of Campo Formio (Oct. 17); War of the First Coalition ended, though Britain continued hostilities.

1798 Napoleon given approval to begin what became his disastrous campaign against Egypt (beginning in May).

1798 Coup of 22 Floréal (May 11); election of new council members nullified to block seating of Jacobins; opposition to the Directory, which arranged the nullification, spread.

1799 Coup of 30 Prairial (June 18); Councils, bolstered by newly elected Jacobin members, forced the ouster of three directors; censorship of press ended and radicalism again flourished.

1799 Napoleon returned to Paris (Oct. 16) after leaving his army behind in Egypt.

1799 Coup of 18 Brumaire (Nov. 9); Napoleon, with the aid of directors E. Sieyes and Pierre Roger Ducos, and his brother Lucien, engineered the overthrow of the Directory; established Consulate under his control.

French Revolutionary Calendar Calendar established during the French Revolution, used in France from Nov. 24, 1793, to Dec. 31, 1805. It reorganized the calendar into 12 months of 30 days each. The months were divided into three 10-day "decades" instead of weeks and the five days (or six in a leap year) at the end of the year were holidays. The names of the months were:

Vendémiaire	Germinal
Brumaire	Floréal
Frimaire	Prairial
Nivôse	Messidor
Pluviôse	Thermidor
Ventôse	Fructidor

French Revolutionary Wars Series of wars (1792–1802) between France and various European powers, notably Austria and Britain. (The wars against France between 1803 and 1815 are called the Napoleonic Wars.) The French Revolutionary Wars were sparked by the European monarchs' disapproval of the new revolutionary government, by attempts to restore the monarchy in France, and by the desire of some revolutionary factions to demonstrate the strength of their new government. To defend France, the revolutionary government created what became a powerful army and the wars quickly became a vehicle for the expansion and aggrandizement of France. Britain, which became France's most stubborn enemy, retained supremacy of the seas. The wars brought Napoleon (a hero of the conflict) to power in France, gained France considerable territory and influence in Europe, and brought on the final collapse of the Holy Roman Empire (1806). (See also French Revolution, Napoleon, Napoleonic Wars, France.) Key dates in the wars include:

1791 Declaration of Pillnitz (Aug); Holy Roman Empire and Prussia said they would restore French king Louis XVI, if the other powers would join them.

French Union French political organization (1946–58) that replaced the colonial system. Established by the constitution of the Fourth Republic, it brought France and its overseas territories and protectorates into a loose federation. Former colonies were granted semiautonomous status and had limited representation in the French government. In 1954, Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia broke away from the union, and in 1958 the union was reorganized into the French Community.

French West Africa Former federation of French West African territories that included Dahomey, French Guinea, French Sudan, Ivory Coast, Mauritania, Senegal, Niger, and Upper Volta. Established in 1895, the territories became autonomous republics in 1958, and the federation was abolished in 1959.

Fréron, Louis Marie-Stanislas 1754–1802. French revolutionary. A zealous participant in the Reign of Terror, he was a leader in the successful conspiracy against M. Robespierre (1794) and took part in subsequent Thermidorian reaction against the Jacobins.

Freud, Sigmund 1856–1939. Austrian neurologist and founder of psychoanalysis. Freud pioneered the use of free association in the treatment of psychological problems and explored the effect of childhood impressions and repressed feelings on later behavior. His theories had a major influence on other scientists working in the field, including A. Adler and C. Jung. Both Adler and Jung, however, disagreed with Freud's emphasis on the importance of sexuality as a motivating force in behavior, and they developed their own followings. Freud, however, remains a major force in psychoanalysis. Among his many writings are The Ego and the Id, Totem and Taboo, and A General Introduction to Psychoanalysis.

books dealing with the isolation of man in modern society. Among his works are Escape from Freedom and The Sane Society.

Fronde Two major rebellions by French noblemen, brought about for the most part by their opposition to the growing power of the monarchy. 1. Fronde of the Parlement (Aug., 1648–Apr., 1649). The government's need for more income led the French minister, Cardinal J. Mazarin, and Anne of Austria, regent for young King Louis XIV, to seek approval of a drastic revenue measure. The Parlement of Paris, a special court, rejected the measure, which included forfeiture of magistrates' salaries. Parlement then proposed new limitations on royal authority. This the government answered by arresting some members of Parlement, an act that provoked a popular uprising in Paris (Aug. 26, 1648). The government, then embroiled in the last months of the Thirty Years' War, acknowledged the protest and released the members. With the Thirty Years' War over, however, the government turned against the rebellious nobles. Troops under Louis II de Bourbon, prince de Condé, blockaded Paris (Jan., 1649), but he was unable to break the rebellion. The government therefore accepted (Apr. 1, 1649) the Peace of Rueil, ending the Fronde of the Parlement. 2. Fronde of the Princes (Jan., 1650-Sept., 1653). The prince de Condé, leader of the government troops in the Fronde of the Parlement, soon fell out with the government and was arrested (Jan. 18, 1650). The nobles united for his release, however, and engaged in fighting with government troops in various provinces. Though the government succeeded in putting an end to armed resistance, an alliance of Condé's supporters in Paris won the ouster (Feb., 1651) of the hated minister, J. Mazarin, and obtained Condé's release. However, the intrigues of Anne of Austria, regent to King Louis XIV, soon provoked him to war against the government (Sept., 1651). Condé was unsuccessful in battle and was rescued from total defeat when his army was allowed to enter the city of Paris (July, 1652). Unable to win over the Parlement in Paris, and with support for the Fronde waning, Condé fled France. King Louis returned to Paris (Oct. 21, 1652), recalled Mazarin (Feb., 1653), and crushed the last of the rebels by Sept., 1653. The Fronde of the Princes was the nobles' last major rebellion against the monarchy.

Frontenac, comte de Palluau et de ⟨Louis de Buade⟩ 1620–98. French governor of New France (1672–82, 1689–98). He defeated the warring Iroquois Confederacy (1696), and during the war between England and France he successfully defended the colony against British attack.

Gagarin, Yuri Alekseyevich 1934–68. Soviet astronaut and national hero. The first man to travel in space (Apr. 12, 1961), he orbited for about one and a half hours aboard his spacecraft, Vostok 1, and reached a maximum orbit of 188 miles above the earth. He died in a plane crash.

Gage, Thomas 1721–87. English general during the American Revolutionary War. Appointed commander of British forces in North America (1763), he replaced T. Hutchinson as governor of Massachusetts in 1774. The colony was then on the verge of revolt and, when he ordered the munitions at Concord seized (1775), the full-scale revolution began. He resigned his command after Bunker Hill (q.v.) in 1775.

gag rules Rules of legislative procedure designed to prevent consideration of or debate on certain issues. Gag rules were important in US history from 1836 to 1844, when they were used to block consideration of numerous antislavery petitions in the House of Representatives. J. Q. Adams was a leading figure in the successful drive to repeal the gag rules.

Gainsborough, Thomas 1727–88. Celebrated English landscape and portrait painter, founder of the English school (q.v.). Among his many famous works are The Blue Boy and The Watering Place.

Gaiseric ⟨Genseric⟩ AD *c*390–477. King of the Vandals (q.v.) and Alani (q.v.) (AD 428–477). After leading his people from Spain to Africa (429), he proceeded to conquer the Roman province of Africa and from there won Sardinia, Corsica, and Sicily. In 455 he sacked Rome.

Gaitskell, Hugh Todd Naylor 1906–63. British statesman and Labour party leader (1955–63). The most serious challenge to his leadership came in 1960 when he managed to reverse a party conference vote in favor of unilateral nuclear disarmament.

Gaius 2d cent. AD. Roman jurist. He wrote a voluminous legal text, Institutes, which formed the basis for the later Institutes of Justinian I.

Galahad, Sir Knight of the Round Table in Arthurian Legend, the noblest and purest of all the knights. He was son of Launcelot and Elaine and a hero of the quest for the Holy Grail (q.v.).

Galatea A sea nymph who, when her beloved Acis was killed by a jealous rival, changed his body into the river Acis.

Galatia Ancient region of central Asia Minor, located in area around modern Ankara, Turkey. It was named for the Gauls, who took it in the 3rd cent. BC. Their expansion was stopped by Attalus I. The Romans conquered the area in 189 BC. It became a Roman province in 25 BC.

Galba, Servius Sulpicius 3 BC–AD 69. Roman emperor (AD 68–69), successor to Nero. A provincial governor, he was proclaimed emperor by his troops after an uprising against Nero (AD 68). A short time later he was killed in a rebellion (AD 69) led by his successor, Otho.

Galbraith, John Kenneth 1908–. Canadian-American economist. An influential proponent of Keynesian economics, he was an adviser to President J. Kennedy, and US ambassador to India (1961–63). Among his writings are The Affluent Society and The New Industrial State.

Galilee The northern region of ancient Palestine in what is now northern Israel. It is mentioned frequently in the Bible as Jesus' homeland. After the Romans destroyed Jerusalem (AD 70) it became a stronghold of Judaism. The region was resettled by Zionists late in the 19th cent. and was entirely absorbed by Israel after the Arab-Israeli War (q.v.) of 1948–49.

Galilee, Judas of See Judas of Galilee

Galileo ⟨properly, Galileo Galilei⟩ 1564–1642. Italian mathematician, physicist, and astronomer. One of the world's great scientists, he is regarded as the founder of the experimental method, which is the cornerstone of modern science. Born at Pisa, he discovered the law of pendulums as a student and first won notice by his invention of the hydrostatic balance (*c*1586). He later experimented (*c*1589–92) with falling bodies (not, as in the popular legend, by dropping objects from the tower of Pisa) and disproved the Aristotelian theory that objects of different weights fall at different speeds. This revelation (which aroused great hostility in the scholarly community), his observation of the parabolic path of a projectile, and other discoveries foreshadowed the universal laws of motion formulated by I. Newton. After constructing (c 1610) and perfecting a telescope (invented earlier by the Dutch), Galileo discovered that the moon shines by reflected light, that the Milky Way is composed of individual stars, and that Jupiter was orbited by four moons (12 are now known). His researches confirmed his belief in the Copernican theory (q.v.) and he openly supported (1613) this heliocentric theory. It was condemned by the church (1616) as dangerous and Galileo was warned by church authorities against supporting it. Nevertheless, he published (1632) his Dialogue Concerning the Two World Systems, openly supporting Copernican theory. He was subsequently tried and sentenced to house arrest by the Inquisition. He continued his scientific work, however, and discovered the librations (oscillations) of the moon before his death.

Gall *c*1840–94. American Indian, a Sioux war chief. He was a leader under Sitting Bull during the massacre of G. Custer and his men at the Battle of Little Bighorn (q.v.) in 1876. He ended his war with the whites in 1881.

Gallas, Matthias, graf von 1584–1647. Imperial general (1634–45) of the Holy Roman armies during the Thirty Years' War (q.v.). A commander under A. von Wallenstein, Gallas was involved in his removal (1634) and then succeeded him (1634) as overall commander. His drunkenness and several disastrous defeats finally led to his own removal in 1645.

Gallatin, Albert 1761–1849. Swiss-American US secretary of the treasury (1801–14). Through his insistence on sound fiscal policies he managed a significant, though temporary, reduction in the national debt. The reduction was wiped out by the War of 1812. He played a major role in negotiating the Treaty of Ghent (q.v.) in 1814, which ended the conflict.

Galle, Johann Gottfried 1812–1910. German astronomer who discovered the planet Neptune (1846).

Gallican Articles See Gallicanism

Gallicanism Movement among French Catholics for greater independence from papal authority. Gallicanism can be traced back to the Great Schism (14th cent.) and involved both secular and ecclesiastical matters. The famous Gallican Articles, issued by Louis XIV (1682) and approved by the French clergy, represent the clearest statement of Gallican aims. They proclaimed that the king was not subject to the pope, that the pope was subject to ecumenical councils, that the traditions and customs of the French church were outside the pope's authority, and that the pope's authority in doctrinal matters was binding only with approval of the whole church. Gallicanism was seriously compromised by the state's attack on the church during the French Revolution. Later, the First Vatican Council (q.v.) of 1870 confirmed the opposing philosophy of Ultramontanism and firmly established papal authority. Gallicanism subsequently ceased to be an active movement.

Gallic Wars Series of campaigns conducted by J. Caesar (58–51 BC) leading to the Roman conquest of Gaul. The wars began when Caesar moved against the Helvetii, who attempted to move into southern Gaul. Caesar then defeated (57 BC) the tribes in what is now Belgium, defeated the Veneti (56) in Brittany, and conducted a punitive invasion (55) into Germany. In 54 he invaded Britain (for the second time, the first being in 55) and defeated the Britons under King Cassivellaunus but returned to Gaul soon after. He subsequently put down a rebellion of all Gaul (52 BC), led by Vercingetorix, and the following year reduced all resistance to Roman authority in Gaul. The campaigns gave Caesar immense power and prestige. As commander of a strong army he was able to contest Pompey's authority as leader of Rome. The main source for information on the campaigns is Caesar's own De bello Gallico.

Gallieni, Joseph Simon 1849–1916. French soldier and colonial governor. He played an important role in pacifying the French Sudan and Madagascar (1870–1905). During WW I he played a critical role in the victory of the first Battle of the Marne (q.v.) in 1914.

Gallienus, Publius Licinius Valerianus Egnatius d. AD 268. Roman emperor, coruler with his father Valerian (AD 253–260) and successor to him (260–268). His reign was marked by the widespread revolts of the Time of the Thirty Tyrants (q.v.).

Gallipoli Campaign ⟨Dardanelles Campaign⟩ Allied military operation in Turkey during WW I. The Allies attempted to wrest control of the Dardanelles (q.v.) from Turkey in order to better supply Russia. The campaign was advocated by W. Churchill, backed by D. Lloyd George and Lord H. Kitchener, and commenced on Feb. 19, 1915. After an unsuccessful naval attempt to force the straits, British and French troops were landed on both sides of the straits, notably on the Gallipoli peninsula. The operation became a disaster in which 55,000 Allied troops were lost before the evacuation (Dec., 1915–Jan., 1916). Churchill was obliged to resign as first lord of the admiralty.

Gallitzin, Demetrius Augustine 1770–1840. American Roman Catholic clergyman born a Russian prince. From 1795 to 1840 he was a widely known frontier missionary to settlers in southwestern Pennsylvania.

Galloway, Joseph *c*1731–1803. American loyalist leader during the American Revolutionary War. As a delegate to the Continental Congress

(q.v.) in 1774–75, he proposed a plan for peaceful settlement with Britain. His plan was narrowly defeated, and he later joined the British, becoming superintendent of the Philadelphia port under Gen. W. Howe.

Gallup, George Horace 1901–. American public opinion expert. He developed the Gallup poll, a survey of public opinion. The poll first gained wide notice when Gallup successfully predicted the reelection of President F. Roosevelt in 1936.

Galsworthy, John 1867–1933. English novelist and dramatist. Born of a wealthy family, he is best known for The Forsyte Saga, a series of novels about a well-to-do family in the late 1800s and early 1900s. He also wrote successful plays, including Strife and Loyalties. He won the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1932.

Galt, Sir Alexander Tilloch 1817–93. English-born Canadian statesman. A member of the Canadian parliament from 1849 to 1872, he became an important advocate of confederation of the provinces. Following the 1867 British North America Act (q.v.), he served briefly as finance minister (1867–68) of the newly created dominion.

Galt, John 1779–1839. Scottish novelist. He is best known for his tales of Scottish country life.

Galton, Sir Francis 1822–1911. English scientist. In Hereditary Genius, he presented strong evidence that talent is an inherited characteristic. A grandson of E. Darwin and cousin of C. Darwin, he founded—and coined the term for—the science of eugenics.

Galuppi, Baldassare 1706–85. Italian composer of light operas who is credited with the development of the opera buffa style. His best-known opera is Il Filosofo di Campagna.

Galvani, Luigi 1737–90. Italian physiologist. His controversy with A. Volta over the source of the electricity which induced muscle contractions in frogs' legs through use of dissimilar metals stimulated important research into the nature of electricity. Some terms dealing with electricity are named after Galvani.

Gálvez, Bernardo de *c*1746–86. Spanish colonial governor. As Spanish governor of Louisiana (1777–83), he was largely responsible for Spain's acquisition of British territory in Florida (1783). He became viceroy of New Spain in 1785.

Gálvez, José, Marqués de la Sonora 1720–87. Spanish colonial administrator. As inspector general to New Spain (1765–72), he instituted important reforms in the administration of the colonies.

Gama, Vasco da *c*1469?–1524. Portuguese navigator who first made the sea voyage from Europe to India. His voyage and the trade it opened up with India provided the foundation for the Portuguese Empire. Chosen by King Manuel I to find a route to India, he sailed with four ships in 1497. He rounded the Cape of Good Hope (already explored by 1488) and after enduring both storms and mutinies he reached Calicut in India (1498). He subsequently commanded a fleet of 20 ships on a second voyage to India (1502–03). This time he founded the Mozambique and Sofala colonies on the African coast and, after leading a naval attack, established Portuguese rule over Calicut. Sent to India as a viceroy in 1524, he died soon after arriving.

Gamaliel 1. Jewish rabbi, d. about AD 50. A prominent Pharisee who taught St. Paul (Acts 22) and advised against persecuting the Apostles (Acts 5). 2. ~ of Jabneh. Jewish rabbi, d. AD 115? A grandson of Hillel, and a leader of his people recognized by the Romans, he helped establish the Passover Seder ritual that was substituted for the former Temple sacrifice, interrupted by the destruction of the Temple in AD 70.

Gambetta, Leon 1838–82. French political leader. After the fall of the Second Empire (q.v.) in 1870, he organized a provisional government of national defense, dramatically escaped from Paris in a balloon, and was virtual dictator of France for five months (1870–71). One of the founders of the Third Republic (q.v.) and shapers of its constitution (1875), he served briefly as premier (1881–82).

Gambia West African republic. The smallest African nation, it extends in a narrow strip from the Atlantic along both sides of the Gambia River for about 200 miles. Peanuts are the primary product. It was discovered by the Portuguese (1455) and used by the British as an anti-slave-trade base (1800s). Gambia became a British crown colony in 1843. Periodically governed by Sierra Leone, it became independent in 1965. Pres. Dawda Kairaba Jawara, in office since 1970, was reelected again in 1982.

Gambrinus Legendary Flemish king who is supposed to have invented beer.

Gamow, George 1904–68. Russian-American nuclear physicist and author of popular books on science. He is noted for his work in explaining stellar evolution through principles of nuclear physics.

Gandamak, Treaty of Treaty signed by Amir Yakub of Afghanistan with the British on May 16, 1879, concluding the Second Afghan War (q.v.). By it the British agreed to pay the amir an annual subsidy for their occupation of the Khyber Pass (q.v.), the amir agreed to conduct his foreign relations only through the government of India, and British trade was to be free.

Gandhi, Indira 1917–. Indian prime minister (1966–77, 1980) and daughter of J. Nehru. She succeeded Pres. Lal Bahadur Shastri (1904–66) and presided over India's defeat of Pakistan (1971). Facing a challenge to her 1972 election, she declared a state of emergency (1975) and suspended the 1976 election. She was unseated as prime minister the following year (July 25, 1977) but after new elections she was returned to power several years later (Jan. 14, 1980).

Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand 1869–1948. Indian political leader and national hero who became a symbol of nonviolent protest and of India's independence movement. Educated in both India and Britain, he remained overseas until 1914. On his return, he supported the British government in India during WW I, though he took an increasing interest in Indian home rule. Meanwhile he took up the life of an ascetic and began advocating abolition of the caste system (q.v.) in India. His nonviolent campaigns of civil disobedience (called satyagraha) against various laws soon propelled him to the leadership of the movement for Indian home rule, as well as the Congress party (q.v.). Arrested for organizing a protest against the government salt monopoly, he was released to take part (1931) in the Round Table Conference (q.v.). During the 1930s, the pattern of Gandhi's mass nonviolent protests and subsequent arrests continued. But Gandhi only gained prestige (he was called Mahatma, or "great soul") and he was able to wrest major concessions from the British rulers of India. During the early part of WW II, he began demanding India's complete independence from Britain. This he tried to achieve by refusing Indian support for the British war effort against the Japanese, a tactic that resulted in his internment until 1944. He vigorously supported Britain's postwar plans to grant India's independence, though he was unsuccessful in opposing the partition of India and creation of Pakistan (1947). He was assassinated (Jan. 30, 1948) by a Hindu fanatic during a time of disturbances between Muslims and Hindus.

Ganganelli, Lorenzo See Clement XIV

Gang of Four Four leading figures of the Cultural Revolution (q.v.) in China in 1966–69 who were put on trial (Nov. 20, 1980) along with other radicals. They were charged with a variety of abuses during the Cultural Revolution, including the deaths of some 34,000 people. The leading figure among the four was Chiang Ch'ing, Mao Tse-tung's wife; the trial marked her fall from power.

Garfield, James Abram 1831–81. Twentieth US president (1881), successor to R. Hayes. A former teacher, lay preacher, and Ohio state senator, Garfield distinguished himself as a Union army major general during the American Civil War (1861–65) and served as a Republican US congressman (1863–80). He became the Republican presidential candidate (1880), breaking a deadlock between supporters of J. Blaine and U. Grant at the party convention. On taking office (Mar. 4, 1881), Garfield initiated a political struggle with a Republican faction called the Stalwarts (q.v.) by naming Blaine as secretary of state and initiating action on the Star Route Frauds. After only months in office, Garfield was mortally wounded (July 2, 1881) by a disgruntled office-seeker, Charles J. Giteau, and died Sept. 19.

Garibaldi, Giuseppe 1807–82. Italian soldier and hero of the Risorgimento (q.v.), or unification of Italy. While in his twenties, he was involved in an unsuccessful revolt (1835) in Italy and fled to South America. He became famous there as a leader of rebel forces in Uruguay (1842–46). Garibaldi returned to Italy and joined his friend G. Mazzini in establishing a revolutionary republic at Rome (1849). He became a hero for his leadership of rebel forces against the pope's armies, but was ultimately forced to retreat and flee Italy. Having given up his hopes for an Italian republic, he was willing (1860) to serve the interests of Victor Emmanuel II to further the unification of Italy. That year he undertook his famous conquest of the Kingdom of Two Sicilies with the Expedition of the Thousand (q.v.). In 1861 Victor Emmanuel became king of a united Italy, except for the Papal States. Garibaldi made two reckless and abortive attacks on the Papal States (1862, 1867). In 1874, he became a member of the Italian parliament.

Garigliano, battles of Battles fought near the strategic Garigliano River in south central Italy. 1. On Dec. 28, 1503, 15,000 men under Ferdinand V decisively defeated a French invasion force under Louis XII, forcing the latter to accede to Spanish rule over Naples. 2. From Nov., 1943, to May, 1944, there was heavy fighting here in WW II during the Allied drive on Rome, including the battle for Cassino.

Gaudier-Brzeska, Henri 1891–1915. French sculptor. He was the leading sculptor in the movement known as vorticism (q.v.).

Gaugamela, Battle of ⟨Battle of Arbela⟩ Decisive Macedonian victory (Oct. 1, 331 BC) over the Persians during Alexander the Great's wars of conquest. The battle marked the beginning of the decline of the Persian Empire. Alexander's 47,000 Macedonian troops defeated some 250,000 soldiers under Darius III on the plain of Gaugamela in the territory of ancient Assyria. Losses were 40–90,000 Persians to only 100–500 Macedonians.

Gauguin, Eugène Henri Paul 1848–1903. Famous French painter, a postimpressionist and a principal figure in the development of modern art. He did not begin painting full time until age 35, before then dividing his time between his work as a stockbroker and painting. He was associated with the impressionists until 1888, when he developed his own characteristic style, synthetism. Instead of imitating nature, he created abstracted figures from the primitive subjects and bright colors he used. Despairing of modern civilization, Gauguin went to Tahiti (1891) and thereafter lived in the South Pacific (excepting 1893–95). Among his many famous works are: The Yellow Christ; Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going?; and Tahitian Landscape.

Gaul Ancient name for the area once inhabited by Celts, roughly comprising modern France. Roman Gaul included also parts of northern Italy (Cisalpine Gaul). By the time of Julius Caesar, Rome already ruled the part of Transalpine Gaul that is today Provence. Caesar conquered the rest of Gaul for Rome in the Gallic Wars (q.v.) of 58–51 BC, immortalizing in his account of the wars Gaul's division into "three parts"—Aquitania, Gallia, and Belgica. Gaul flourished as a center of Roman civilization until the collapse of the Western Empire (AD 476) and thereafter came under control of the Franks. Gaul formed the nucleus of the Frankish Merovingian and Carolingian empires.

Gaullists French political term. Gaullists were the supporters of the nationalistic policies of French general (later president) C. de Gaulle. The term was employed to describe de Gaulle's followers during the period of his leadership of the Free French (q.v.) and it was retained to describe the political party organized after 1945 and dominant after the foundation of the Fifth Republic (q.v.).

Gaunt, John of See John of Gaunt

Gauss, Karl Friedrich 1777–1855. German mathematician. He is regarded as one of the greatest of all mathematicians. He had begun producing notable work by the time he was 22 and went on to formulate important theories in mathematics (especially number theory), physics, and astronomy.

Gautier, Théophile 1811–72. French poet and novelist. He was an exponent of pure aestheticism and coined the term "art for art's sake" in the preface to his famous story Mademoiselle de Maupin (1835).

Gaveston, Piers d. 1312. English nobleman, a favorite of King Edward II of England and regent during his absence. An enemy to the barons by his manner and his position, he was several times exiled for short periods. On his return in 1312, however, the barons revolted and executed him.

Gawain, Sir A knight in the Arthurian Legend (q.v.). A nephew of King Arthur, he was at first portrayed as a model of the virtues of knighthood. In later Arthurian literature he is shown to be flawed and lacking in spiritual devotion.

Gempei War Japanese civil war (1180–85) that led to the downfall of the Taira clan as rulers of Japan. The Taira held power in Japan from 1160, after defeating the leader Minamoto Yoshitomo. In 1180 his son, Minamoto Yoritomo, organized dissident Taira clan members and the remainder of the Minamoto clan for a rebellion against Taira authority. The war culminated in the naval battle of Dannoura (1185), in which the Taira were crushed. Yoritomo remained the virtual ruler of Japan, and in 1192 was made shogun, thereby establishing the Kamakura shogunate, which ruled Japan until 1333.

Generation of '98 Spanish intellectual movement. Spain's 1898 defeat in the Spanish-American War fostered an introspective period among Spanish writers and philosophers that ultimately enriched Spanish literature. They included Miguel Unamuno y Jugo (1864–1936), José Martínez Ruiz (1874–1967), and José Ortega y Gasset (1883–1955).

Genêt, Edmond Charles Édouard ⟨Citizen Genêt⟩ 1763–1834. French diplomat. He was sent to the US to win its support in the French revolutionary government's war against Britain. He was unable to sway President G. Washington from a neutral policy and, when he attempted to rally popular support, Washington had him recalled.

Genet, Jean 1910–. French dramatist. Genet was a leading proponent of the Theater of the Absurd, portraying social outcasts in such plays as The Maids, The Balcony, and The Blacks.

Geneva City (pop. 150,100) in Switzerland, capital of Geneva canton, located on Lake Geneva and the Rhône River. A cultural and tourist center, it has often been the scene of international conferences and is known for its manufacture of watches and precision instruments. Originally a center of Celtic Allobroges, it passed through successive rulers, including Roman, Frankish, and Burgundian. It was the home of J. Calvin (16th cent.) and his theocracy, and a center of the Reformation (q.v.). It became a canton of Switzerland in 1815.

Geneva, Robert of See Robert of Geneva

Geneva conferences International meetings. This name refers to several peace-keeping conferences held in the Swiss city. A 1927 meeting tried but failed to achieve a reduction of naval armaments. The Disarmament conference, held primarily between 1932 and 1934, also failed to restrict offensive weaponry and fell apart when A. Hitler withdrew. A 1954 meeting discussed a Korean War armistice and partitioned Indochina, while a 1955 summit meeting among the US, France, Britain, and Russia sought to end the Cold War. A 1958 US-British-Russian meeting was the first of several held to discuss the banning of nuclear tests and nuclear arms limitation.

Geneva Conventions International agreements. From 1864 through 1949, a series of international agreements was reached at Geneva, Switzerland, to regulate and prevent abuses of war and the treatment of prisoners of war. Initiated by the Red Cross, signatory nations agreed to provide humane treatment for all prisoners as well as medical attention for the sick and wounded. Because of WW II abuses, the four conventions signed in Aug., 1949, concerning the sick and wounded, prisoners of war, and civilians in time of war are considered especially important.

Geneva Protocol League of Nations agreement. On Oct. 2, 1924, the assembly of the League of Nations unanimously agreed to make arbitration of disputes mandatory for member nations. However, the protocol became a dead letter when the British cabinet rejected the idea several months later and failed to ratify the protocol.

Geneviève, Saint *c*422–*c*500 or 512. Patron saint of the city of Paris. She is said to have predicted correctly that Paris would remain unscathed by an impending attack by Attila the Hun (451).

Genghis Khan ⟨Jenghiz ~⟩ ⟨Chinghiz ~⟩ ⟨orig. name Temujin⟩ 1167?–1227. Mongol conqueror, who, as leader of notoriously savage Mongol armies, created a vast Asian empire. Named chief of a Mongol tribe while still a youth, he succeeded in conquering other Mongol tribes and in organizing them (1206) into a confederacy. With his capital at Karakorum (in modern Mongolian People's Republic), he invaded (1213–18) and conquered northern China. From 1218 to 1224 he extended his empire in the west, conquering parts of what are now northern India, Iran, Iraq, and southern Russia. By the time of his death, the empire extended from the Korean peninsula in the east to the Black Sea in the west. The empire was subsequently divided among his sons, including Ogadai and Jagatai, and their descendants, including Batu Khan, Hulagu Khan, and Kublai Khan.

Genoa Italian city (pop. 795,000) in northwestern Italy, capital of Genoa province and Liguria. It is a major seaport on the Italian Riviera. It prospered under the Romans, then became an independent city, often involved in fighting with rivals Pisa and Venice. Admiral A. Doria expelled the French (1528) and revived the city. In 1805, Napoleon annexed Genoa to France and the Congress of Vienna joined it to the kingdom of Sardinia in 1815. The damage done during WW II has been repaired and the port modernized. Genoa is the birthplace of C. Columbus.

Gentili, Alberico 1552–1608. Italian jurist who is regarded as one of the earliest writers on international law. He is noted for his works on laws for the conduct of war.

Gentlemen's Agreement Accord (Feb. 24, 1907) between the US and Japan halting the immigration of Japanese laborers into the United States. By this agreement, brought about by pressure from West Coast states, Japan promised to stop further emigration and the US agreed to stop anti-Japanese discrimination.

Gentz, Friedrich von 1764–1832. Prussian political theorist in the Austrian service. He was influential in the realignment of the European powers after the Napoleonic Wars (q.v.), and was chief secretary at the Congresses (q.v.) of Vienna (1814–15), Aix-la-Chapelle (1818), Troppau (1820), and Verona (1822).

Geoffrey IV ⟨Geoffrey Plantagenet⟩ 1113–51. Count of Anjou. He laid claim to and conquered Normandy (1135–44). In 1150 he turned the duchy over to his son, the future English king Henry II.

Geoffrey of Monmouth *c*1100–54. English clergyman and writer. He was author of Historia Regum Britanniae (c1135), a fanciful account of British kings that contained the first account of the legendary King Arthur and widely influenced British literature.

Geoffrey Plantagenet See Geoffrey IV

George I 1660–1727. German-born elector of Hanover and king of Great Britain and Ireland (1714–27), the first of the Hanoverian kings and successor to Queen Anne. An unpopular king, he succeeded under the 1701 Act of Settlement (q.v.). Under his reign Britain entered into the Quadruple Alliance (q.v.) and concluded the 1713 Peace of Utrecht. The king himself was implicated in the South Sea Bubble scandal (q.v.). He was the great-grandson of James I.

George I 1845–1913. Greek King (1863–1913), elected successor to Otto I. His reign was marked by the adoption of a constitution (1864), the acquisition of new territories in Thessaly and Epirus, and an unsuccessful war with the Ottoman Turks (1896–97) over Crete (Greco-Turkish War [q.v.]).

George II 1683–1760. German-born elector of Hanover and king of Great Britain and Ireland (1727–60), a member of the Hanover family, and successor to his father, George I. Under his reign Britain saw the last of the Jacobite rebellions (1745–46), the ouster of Sir R. Walpole, and the beginning of the Seven Years' War (1756–63).

George II 1890–1947. Greek King (1922–23, 1935–47), successor to his father Constantine I. He was forced to leave Greece (1923) and shortly thereafter a republic was proclaimed (1924). Recalled in 1935, he acquiesced to the dictatorship of J. Metaxas (1936) and, in 1941, fled from the invading Germans. He was restored to the throne in 1946, and was succeeded by his brother Paul I (1901–64).

George III 1738–1820. King of Great Britain and Ireland (1760–1820), a member of the Hanover family, and successor to his grandfather, George II. Under his reign Britain enjoyed a period of economic prosperity and cultural activity. At the same time the king's policies led to political instability at home and the American Revolution (q.v.) abroad. By 1784, however, he achieved his goal of breaking Whig control in Parliament with a general Tory victory in the elections. He also oversaw Britain's participation in the French Revolutionary Wars (q.v.), arranged the union of the Irish and English kingdoms (1801), and refused to permit Catholic Emancipation (1801). Suffering what was believed a hereditary disease, he became insane (1810). He was elector and later king of Hanover but he never visited it.

George IV 1762–1830. King of England and Ireland (1820–30), a member of the Hanover family, successor to his father George III. He became regent for his insane father (1810) and under him the Tory party continued in power. His reign saw a marked decline in the influence of the monarchy, thanks to his dissolute ways and to the scandals that surrounded his married life. He was succeeded by his brother William IV.

George V 1819–78. German king, the last king of Hanover (1851–66) and successor to his father, Ernest Augustus (1771–1851). He allied himself with Austria during the Austro-Prussian War (q.v.) and following the Prussian victory his kingdom was taken over and annexed by Prussia. His father, a son of George III of England, had acceded to the throne of Hanover in 1837 when Hanover was separated from Britain at the accession of Victoria.

George V 1865–1936. King of Great Britain (1910–36), successor to his father, Edward VII. He played a moderating role in the crises during his reign and guided Britain through WW I. Among the events of this period were the 1916 Irish Sinn Fein rebellion (q.v.), the 1922 Irish Free State (q.v.) settlement, the formation of the "national" government (1931) and the 1935 Government of India Act (q.v.). A popular monarch, he changed the royal family name from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha to Windsor during WW I.

George VI 1895–1952. King of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (1936–52), successor to his brother Edward VIII. He is noted for his efforts to shore up British morale during WW II. During his reign, India was granted independence (1947). He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth II.

George, Henry 1839–97. American economic reformer. He developed the idea of the single tax (1871). Under this system, designed to eliminate poverty, the government would abolish all taxes except that on land itself.

George, Saint 4th cent.? Patron saint of England. A saint of the Eastern church, he may have been martyred in Palestine around AD 250 or during the great persecutions by Diocletian on Apr. 23, 303. Because of the association of his name with chivalric legends during the Middle Ages, particularly the one about his slaying of the dragon, he became very popular in story and art, was made patron of soldiers and adopted as patron by England, Aragon, and Portugal.

George of Podebrad 1420–71. Bohemian king (1458–71). A leader of the Utraquists (q.v.) in the Hussite Wars (q.v.), he took Prague (1448) and became first regent to King Ladislaus (1453–57) and then king of Bohemia. He successfully resisted a challenge to his throne by the Hungarian king Matthias Corvinus (1469).

Georgia Historic region located on the eastern shore of the Black Sea, now a constituent republic of the USSR. In ancient times the region was known as Colchis (q.v.) and Iberia and was part of the Roman Empire after 65 BC. After the 4th cent. AD the region was involved in wars between the Byzantines and Persians. The process of unifying the region began in the 7th cent. AD. Georgia reached its cultural flowering as a kingdom in the 12th and 13th cents. and then declined as a result of invasions by Mongols and Timurs and wars between the Turks and Persians. From 1801 to 1864 Russia annexed Georgian lands and, after a brief period of independence (1918–21) following the Russian Revolution, Georgia was made a republic within the USSR (1922). J. Stalin was a native of Georgia.

Georgia US state (pop. 5,464,300) and one of the original Thirteen Colonies (q.v.). Georgia was first explored by the Spanish under H. de Soto (1540). The first town, Savannah, was founded (1733) by J. Oglethorpe for the English. Rival claims to the region were settled when Oglethorpe defeated the Spanish at the Battle of Bloody Marsh (1742). Georgia was made a colony in 1754 and ratified the Constitution in 1788. Amid the Yazoo Land Claims (q.v.) controversy, Georgia turned over its western lands to the federal government and established its current boundaries (1802). The Creek and Cherokee Indians were forced to leave the state in the 1830s. The state was ravaged by Sherman's March during the US Civil War and afterward the great plantations were replaced by tenant farmers and sharecroppers. Blacks voted in the Democratic primary for the first time in 1946 and were integrated with whites in the schools after 1961. The state adopted a new constitution in 1945.

Georgian style English architectural style. This formal, neoclassic style, characterized by red brick with white woodwork, was popular in England *c*1715–1820. From there it was transported to colonial America.

Gerhardsen, Einar Henry 1897–. Norwegian statesman. Gerhardsen was a labor leader who was held hostage by the Nazis during WW II. He was the first (1945–51) postliberation Norwegian prime minister, a post he held twice more (1955–63, 1963–65).

Géricault, Jean Louis André Théodore 1791–1824. French painter who rebelled against the classical school and became an important figure in the transition to romanticism in French painting. The Raft of the Medusa (1819) is among his most famous paintings.

German Confederation A loose confederation (1815–66) of 35 independent German kingdoms and 4 free cities formed largely for mutual defense. It was dominated by Austria, and its history was marked by a growing rivalry between Austria and Prussia. Following the destruction of the Holy Roman Empire (q.v.) by Napoleon and the subsequent fall of his French-based empire, the German states were left largely unprotected. The German Confederation was therefore created at the Congress of Vienna (q.v.) in 1815 and a German diet under Austrian presidency was formed. The diet, briefly supplanted (1848–50) by the Frankfurt Parliament, survived until the Austro-Prussian War (q.v.) of 1866 and the formation of the North German Confederation (q.v.).

German East Africa Name of a former German colony in East Africa. The region was first explored by the Germans in 1884 and was declared a protectorate in 1885. In 1891 the German government took direct control of the colony, overcame native rebellions and developed it. Following WW I, it was divided (1919) between Britain and Belgium, becoming Tanganyika and Ruanda-Urundi respectively.

Germanic laws German tribal laws. These were the unwritten, customary laws of the Germanic peoples prior to their contact with Rome. They dealt predominantly with family and property rights and codes of justice and punishment, and were regarded as personal and tribal law, not territorial.

Germantown, Battle of Battle (Oct. 4, 1777) during the American Revolution. Gen. G. Washington attacked this British stronghold near Philadelphia. Though it failed, it was a daring raid and, together with the colonial victory in the Saratoga Campaign, helped convince the French to send aid to the Americans.

Germany Country located in central Europe. It has been divided into East Germany (German Democratic Republic) and West Germany (Federal Republic of Germany) since WW II. The unified German state was formed (19th cent.) from the petty German states that were once part of the Holy Roman Empire. (For history of Germany prior to 1801, see Holy Roman Empire.) By the end of the 19th cent., Germany had emerged as a major military and industrial power. It was deeply involved in the complex series of events that led to WW I and played a major role in the fighting against the Allied powers. Germany was defeated and the harsh terms of the Treaty of Versailles helped create the climate that brought A. Hitler to power. Germany was once again defeated in WW II and the victorious Allies, determined to prevent another war, divided Germany into zones of occupation. Cold War tensions between the Soviet Union and the Western powers hardened the divisions. In the late 1940s the occupation zones of western powers became West Germany (Bonn as capital) and the Soviet zone became East Germany (East Berlin as capital). Divided Germany became a focal point for East-West tensions in subsequent years. Key events include:

1801 Treaty of Lunéville (Feb. 9); Austria and other states of the Holy Roman Empire consented to treaty after being defeated by France; treaty effectively ended the Holy Roman Empire.

1803 Austria and German states formally accepted Napoleon's plan to begin reorganization of the 300 petty states that made up the Holy Roman Empire.

1805–15 Napoleonic Wars; German states suffered much destruction in the wars; French occupation introduced liberalism and aroused German nationalism.

1806 Confederation of the Rhine created (July 12) by Napoleon; completed reorganization of German states; included Bavaria, Baden, Württemberg, and Hesse-Darmstadt.

Gettysburg, Battle of Union victory (1863) at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, during the American Civil War. The series of battles (July 1–3) between some 88,000 Union and 75,000 Confederate soldiers is considered the turning point of the war. Gen. R. E. Lee was forced to break off his invasion of the North (in Pennsylvania since June 17) to meet the threat of the Army of the Potomac under Gen. G. Meade. Advance elements of the two forces met accidentally just outside Gettysburg (July 1) and Union forces were pushed back to Cemetery Hill. Confederate forces did not attack again until late July 2, giving Meade time to position his army on Cemetery Ridge. Following several indecisive battles, Lee ordered a massive attack on the Union center. About 15,000 Confederates led by Gen. G. Pickett attacked Cemetery Ridge in this famous charge (July 3). The failure of this charge and the defeat of J. Stuart's cavalry marked the close of the battle. Lee began his retreat to Virginia late July 4 and Meade did not immediately order his forces to pursue. Casualties were about 23,000 Union soldiers and 20,000 Confederates.

Gettysburg Address Celebrated speech delivered by President A. Lincoln (Nov. 19, 1863) to dedicate a new national cemetery at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. The speech was delivered just five months after the famous Battle of Gettysburg (q.v.) and begins with the famous "Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty . . ." and ended with the now classic characterization of the US government as a "government of the people, by the people, for the people."

Ghana ⟨Republic of Ghana; formerly Gold Coast⟩ Independent state located in western Africa on the Gulf of Guinea. Its capital is Accra. It was frequently visited (after the 15th cent.) by navigators and traders from many European countries and became a center of the slave trade. Dominated by Britain from the 19th cent. until 1960, the country has since experienced considerable political turmoil. Key events in Ghana's history include:

Gilded Age American post-Civil War historical period. Extending from approximately 1869 to 1877, this era was characterized by conspicuous materialism, dubious business and political ethics, and unbounded self-confidence. It took its name from a critical novel (1873) by Mark Twain and US man of letters Charles Dudley Warner (1829–1900).

Gilgamesh Legendary king important in Babylonian mythology who, on the death of his friend Enkidu, sought a plant that would make him immortal. The king's exploits are recounted in the Epic of Gilgamesh. One version was unearthed from the ruins of the library of Assyrian king Ashurbanipal, who ruled in the 7th cent. BC. This written version of the legend is thought to date from *c*2000 BC, and has attracted special interest because of its account of a universal flood that supposedly once engulfed mankind.

Ginsberg, Allen 1926–. American poet and leading member of the Beat movement. He is best known for his 1956 poem Howl.

Giolitti, Giovanni 1842–1928. Italian statesman. He was five times premier between 1892 and 1921 and universal male suffrage (1912) was among the liberal social reforms he fostered. Willing to make alliances with any group that supported his election, he provided the Fascists a firm foothold in the government (1921).

Giorgione ⟨Giorgio Barbarelli⟩ *c*1478–1511. Venetian painter. He was a predominant force in 16th-cent. Venetian painting. Among his works are The Three Philosophers and the Tempesta.

Giotto ⟨Giotto di Bondone⟩ 1266?–1337. Celebrated Florentine painter, sculptor, and architect. One of the greatest painters of the 14th cent., he departed from the traditional Byzantine forms to create a more powerful style of his own, foreshadowing the Renaissance. Among his many famous works are the frescoes in the Arena Chapel in Padua, including Life of Christ, Life of the Virgin, and the Last Judgment.

Giraud, Henri Honoré 1879–1949. French general. During WW II, he was commander (1942) of French forces during the Allied operations to secure North Africa. Following the Casablanca Conference (q.v.), he became copresident (with Gen. C. de Gaulle) of the French Committee of National Liberation (1943). Differences with de Gaulle, however, forced his retirement (1944).

Girondists French political group that figured prominently in the early stages of the French Revolution (q.v.). Composed of well educated, moderate republicans, the group dominated the Legislative Assembly (1791–92). The decline of the Girondists began with the overthrow of the constitutional monarchy (1792) and the formation of the revolutionary National Convention (q.v.). The Convention was dominated by radical Jacobins, called Montagnards, who had the support of the working class. The Girondists' moderate policies and open opposition to the Montagnards put them in disfavor with the populace. Hostility toward Girondists culminated in the execution of many of the party's leaders, including J. Brissot de Warville and P. Vergniaud, at the outset of the Reign of Terror. (See also French Revolution.)

Girtin, Thomas 1775–1802. English painter. He was one of the early masters of watercolor painting and his landscapes helped establish watercolor as a distinct artistic medium.

Glorious Revolution ⟨Bloodless Revolution⟩ In English history the period (1688–89) that saw the overthrow of King James II, the crowning of William of Orange and his wife Mary II, and the final recognition of parliamentary supremacy. James II's Catholicism and the birth (1685) of his Catholic son and heir, James Edward, aroused a united Whig and Tory opposition to his rule. Seven of its leaders offered the English throne to the Dutch prince William and his wife Mary, James II's Protestant daughter. William landed at Torbay in England (Nov. 5, 1688) with some 14,000 men and James fled to France (Dec. 22) after his armies deserted him. The throne was offered to William and Mary under conditions set forth in the British Bill of Rights (1689). These conditions, which assured parliamentary supremacy, were accepted and the two were crowned as joint rulers (1689).

God Supreme being of the Christian, Judaic, and Islamic religions. In each, he is creator and ruler of the world, infinite and eternal, transcendent over the material world and immanent in it, all-seeing and all-knowing, and benevolent and supremely good. By the Old Testament, knowledge of God arose among the Hebrews, first as a tribal god and then as ruler of the world. Knowledge of God as the supreme being (and special protector of the faithful) was then adopted by Christians, and later by Muslims. In the history of the Christian church, there have been a number of important arguments for the existence of God, including: God as the first cause in a world of progressive causes and effects (cosmological argument); God as the planner in a world that operates by a grand design (teleological argument); God as the most perfect human conception, which must therefore exist, since existence is part of that perfection (ontological argument).

Grand Alliance See Grand Alliance, War of the Grand Alliance, War of the ⟨League of Augsburg, War of the⟩ War (1688–97) between France and an alliance of European states. Holy Roman Emperor Leopold I, concerned about the expansionist aims of French king Louis XIV, formed the League of Augsburg (July 9, 1686) with the Palatinate, Bavaria, Saxony, Spain, Sweden, and later, Savoy (1687). While Leopold was embroiled in war against the Turks in the East, however, Louis invaded (Oct., 1688) and ravaged the Palatinate. Leopold responded by forming (May 12, 1689) the Grand Alliance against France, with members of the original league, England's King William III, and the United Provinces (The Netherlands). The war that followed, though centered in the United Provinces, resulted in largely indecisive fighting elsewhere in Europe, in colonial possessions of the belligerents (the American phase was King William's War [q.v.]), and on the high seas. In 1690, the French were victorious at the Battle of Fleurus (q.v.) and in actions in Savoy, but an invasion of Ireland ended in failure. In 1692, the English (with the allied Dutch) navy routed (May 19–23), a French fleet in the Battle of La Hogue, which proved to be the decisive naval battle of the war and which established lasting English naval supremacy over France. Soon after, however, the French were victorious at the Siege of Namur (q.v.) and the Battle of Steenkirk (July 24), in which the English, under William III, were routed. In 1693, the French were victorious at Neerwin-den (July 29) and at Marsaglia (Oct. 4), near the Po River in Savoy. The death (1695) of the leading French commander, Marshal F. Luxembourg, and the strain of the protracted war on all parties, led to negotiated peace (Sept. 30, 1697) by the Treaty of Ryswick (q.v.).

Grand Army Name given the combined French armies (1805–12) under Napoleon. Its great size, excellent training, and organization made Napoleon master of Europe. It was virtually destroyed (1812) during Napoleon's retreat from Russia.

Grand Army of the Republic ⟨GAR⟩ Organization of US Civil War veterans who had served in the Union army or navy. Founded by J. Logan, Richard J. Oglesby (1824–99), and others (1866), the group held its first national encampment at Indianapolis, Indiana, later that year. The group, dedicated to promoting fraternal ties, passage of legislation for veterans' benefits, and service to needy veterans, reached its greatest membership of 400,000 by 1890. It was until 1900 a powerful political bloc within the Republican party, after which time its membership and influence rapidly dwindled. The group's last national encampment was held in 1949 and the organization was dissolved in 1956.

grandee Spanish honorary title, dating to the 13th cent. A title held by the highest rank of Spanish nobility, it conferred such privileges as the right to wear headgear in the presence of the king.

grandfather clause Constitutional clause instituted around the turn of the 20th cent. by Southern states to circumvent the 15th Amendment to the Constitution, guaranteeing suffrage to newly freed blacks. The clause limited voting privileges to those who could vote as of Jan. 1, 1867, and their descendants, thus effectively disenfranchising blacks, who did not have the vote in 1867. The clause was declared unconstitutional in 1915.

Grand Rebel See Sivaji

Grand Remonstrance In English history, a list of grievances presented by the Long Parliament (Dec. 1, 1641) to King Charles I. Charles did not accept them and, in Jan., 1642, he unsuccessfully attempted to arrest leaders of the opposition in the Commons. The Remonstrance widened the rift between king and Parliament and hastened the coming of the English civil war.

Granger movement US agrarian movement of the 19th cent., an outgrowth of a farmers' organization called the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry (founded 1867). Grangers sought to redress farmers' economic grievances through cooperative ventures and political pressure on state legislatures. By the time the movement began to decline (after 1876), they had established many farmers' cooperatives and won passage of Granger laws in Midwest farm states. The laws, designed to control railroads and their shipping rates, led to the famous Granger case, Munn vs Illinois (1876).

Granicus, Battle of the Battle (334 BC) at the Granicus River, now in Turkey. There Alexander the Great won his first major victory against the Persian emperor Darius III.

Grant, Ulysses Simpson 1822–85. Commander in chief of Union armies (1863–65) during the American Civil War and 18th president of the US (1869–77), succeeding A. Johnson. He became a colonel in the Illinois volunteers (1861) at the outbreak of the Civil War and soon distinguished himself in battle. He won increasingly important commands, broke Confederate control of the Mississippi, and cut the Confederacy in half by his victory at Vicksburg (1863). Soon afterward he was named commander in chief and, by his war of attrition, forced R. E. Lee's surrender at Appomattox (1865). Joining the Radical Republicans (q.v.), Grant won the presidential election of 1868 easily and was elected to a second term in 1872. He was a popular and personally honest president, but his term of office was marked by the turmoil of Reconstruction (q.v.) and by the many scandals of the Gilded Age, notably the Crédit Mobilier scandal (q.v.), the Whiskey Ring (q.v.), and the Black Friday (q.v.) financial panic.

Granvelle, Antoine Perrenot de 1517–86. Frenchman in the service of King Philip II of Spain. As prime minister in The Netherlands (c1560–64), he aroused hostility to the Spanish rule there by persecuting Protestants. He relinquished his post on the advice of the king.

Granville, John Carteret, 1st Earl 1690–1763. English statesman. A member of the House of Lords (1730–42), he led the opposition against R. Walpole and finally secured his ouster (1742). As chief minister (1742–44) he himself fell from favor after supporting Maria Theresa in the War of the Austrian Succession.

Grass, Günter 1927–. German writer. He is known best for his first novel, The Tin Drum, a milestone in the development of post-WW II German literature.

Grasse, François Joseph Paul, comte de 1722–88. French admiral. Commanding French fleet sent to aid Colonial forces during the American Revolution, he succeeded in trapping Gen. Cornwallis at Yorktown and contributed to the American victory in the Yorktown Campaign.

Gratian ⟨Flavius Gratian⟩ AD 359–383. Roman emperor of the West (AD 375–383) with his brother Valentinian II. With Saint Ambrose as his adviser, he made himself unpopular by persecuting pagans. He was defeated by the usurper Maximus and was put to death.

Gratian fl. 1140. Italian monk and scholar, regarded as the founder of the science of canon law. He compiled the great collection of canon law, the Decretum Gratiani.

Grattan, Henry 1746–1820. Irish statesman and leader in the fight for Ireland's independence from England. He won legislative independence for Ireland's parliament (1782), fought for Catholic Emancipation, and eloquently opposed the Act of Union that joined England and Ireland (1801).

Gravelines, Battle of Spanish victory (July 13, 1558) over the French, the deciding battle in the dynastic wars known as the Valois-Hapsburg Wars. Some 2,000 French troops were killed. The battle led to the Treaty of Cateau-Cambrésis (1559).

Graves, Robert Ranke 1895–. English poet and novelist. He has published collections of his poetry, novels such as I, Claudius, and critical works.

Great Colombia ⟨Gran Colombia⟩ Former South American republic. Established (1822) by S. Bolívar, it consisted of parts of modern Colombia, Panama, Venezuela, and Ecuador. It lasted until 1830, when Venezuela and Ecuador established their independence.

Great Britain ⟨United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland⟩ Kingdom located in western Europe. It includes England, Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland. The rise of Britain as a modern state dates from the Norman Conquest (1066), and by the late 16th cent. Britain had become a major European power. From the 17th cent. to 19th cent., it acquired a vast colonial empire, gave birth to the Industrial Revolution, and became the world's leading military and commercial power. Though Britain maintained its preeminence in the early 20th cent., competition from other industrialized nations (US, Germany, Japan), the breakup of its worldwide colonial empire, and the two world wars brought an end to its dominance as a world power. Britain played a crucial role in the Allied victories during World War I and World War II. In the years after 1945, Britain divested itself of almost all of its remaining colonial territories. (See also Scotland, Wales, colonialism.) Key events in Britain's history include:

5TH CENT. BC Celts invaded British Isles.

55–54 BC J. Caesar led Roman military expeditions to British Isles, which he called Britannia.

AD 43–84 Roman conquest of Britain; Caractus led revolt against Roman invaders (43–50); Queen Boadicea led another unsuccessful revolt; Roman soldier Agricola conquered north part of England (from AD 78).

AD *c*120–136 Hadrian's Wall built across Britain to protect flourishing Roman towns from attacks by tribes from the north (Scotland).

AD 410 Romans completed their withdrawal from British Isles; troops needed elsewhere to defend empire against barbarian attacks.

5TH CENT. AD Celtic culture flourished after the Roman withdrawal; attacks by Picts from north resisted; invasions by Saxons, Angles, and Jutes (Germanic tribes from the Continent) forced Celtic inhabitants westward into what is now Wales.

6TH–8TH CENTS. Rise of the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy, group of seven small kingdoms formed by invading Anglo-Saxons; included Northumbria, Mercia, Wessex, Essex, Kent, Sussex, and East Anglia; Northumbria (founded *c*547) and Mercia (founded *c*582) chief among them. Period marked by frequent wars between the rival kingdoms.

597 Saint Augustine began Christianization of England; soon after his arrival converted Ethelbert, king of Kent; Ethelbert became first Christian Anglo-Saxon ruler in England.

664 Synod of Whitby; called to decide between Celtic Christianity, then on the rise, and Roman Christianity; decision favored Roman Christianity and thus fostered ties with Christians on the Continent.

787 First raids by the Danes.

802–839 Egbert became king of Wessex; ended supremacy of Mercia by his decisive victory in 825; accepted as king by other kingdoms in the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy, he was the first to unify what later became modern England.

Great Depression Name given the worldwide economic collapse following the US stock market crash of 1929. The stock market failure of 1929 marked the end of the US economic boom of the 1920s, and led to mass failures of businesses and the simultaneous rise of vast unemployment both in the US and in Europe. In the US the Depression reached its lowest point in the early 1930s, and slackened with the New Deal (q.v.) reforms inaugurated by President F. Roosevelt. Full economic recovery did not occur until the opening of WW II. In Europe, the economic failure contributed to the rise of the Nazi party in Germany. (See also United States [1929–39].)

Great Fear Name given to panics (July-Aug., 1789) among the rural peasants in France during the early phase of the French Revolution (1789–99). Peasants, who had stopped paying taxes to local landed aristocrats, were overcome by unfounded rumors that the aristocrats had hired brigands to attack them. This prompted a series of peasant revolts that brought an end to the taxes.

His characteristically distorted figures and use of color, however, did not receive wide recognition until this century. Among his many famous works are Assumption of the Virgin, Burial of Count Orgaz, Crucifixion, Resurrection, and View of Toledo.

Greco-Turkish Wars 1. War (Apr.-May, 1897) between Greece and Turkey over control of the island of Crete, then under Turkish rule. A rebellion on Crete (1896) and a call for union with Greece led to Greek military intervention (1897) on the island. Halted by a blockade established by the European powers, Greece then attacked Turkey (Apr., 1897). After one month of war and several severe defeats, Greece accepted an armistice. 2. War (1921–22) between Greece and Nationalist Turks, led by Kemal Ataturk, who refused to recognize terms of the Treaty of Sèvres (1920) between Greece and the Ottoman Turkish government. Greece invaded Anatolia and, after initial Greek victories, the Turks under Ataturk drove the Greeks out. The was was ended by the Treaty of Lausanne (1923). Greece gave up eastern Thrace, and the two countries exchanged minority populations.

Greece (Hellenic Republic) Country located in southeastern Europe and occupying the southern part of the Balkan Peninsula. Its capital is Athens. Greece is divided into two geographic regions: northern mainland Greece and the southern Peloponnesus. The two are connected by a narrow isthmus. The culture of ancient Greece, which flourished during the 1st millennium BC, has had enormous impact on the development of Western civilization. Greek philosophers, poets, dramatists, scientists, artists, and architects made many fundamental contributions to their respective fields and are still admired in modern times. These great accomplishments were made despite the nearly constant wars between the many Greek city-states that evolved in ancient Greece. These rivalries, notably between Athens and Sparta, finally cost the Greeks their independence, however. The Roman conquest of Greece (2d cent. BC) began a period of decline and foreign domination that lasted until the 19th cent. AD, when the modern Greek state was created. Key events in Greek history include:

3000–1000 BC Aegean civilizations flourished.

After centuries of Turkish domination, Greeks in the Peloponnesus rebelled (Mar. 25, 1821) and proclaimed Greek independence (Jan., 1822). The revolt spread, attracting popular support in Europe and such volunteers as Lord Byron, and the Turks were forced to seek aid from Egypt (1824). The Egyptians and Turks soon occupied much of the southern Peloponnesus, but their advance was slowed by intervention of European powers: first at the Battle of Navarino (Oct., 1827), in which the Egyptian naval forces were routed; then by the outbreak of the Russo-Turkish War (1828–29). The London Conference (1830–31) of European powers set the final terms of Greek independence in the London Protocol (Feb. 3), and Otto I was designated king (1832) by the Treaty of London. The Ottoman Turks recognized the independent kingdom of Greece by the Treaty of Constantinople (1832).

Greek Project Secret plan formulated (1782) by Russia's Catherine the Great for the conquest and dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire. Part of the plan called for creation of a new kingdom of Dacia out of Ottoman domains. The plan won Austrian approval but was never implemented.

Greeley, Horace 1811–72. Celebrated American newspaper editor. He founded the New Yorker (1834) and the New York Tribune (1841). He wielded great influence as editor of the Tribune and after 1850 he became an outspoken critic of slavery. Following the American Civil War he was an unsuccessful opponent of U. Grant in the 1872 presidential elections. He is often remembered for the expression "Go west, young man."

Green, Duff 1791–1875. American journalist. As owner of the United Telegraph, a Washington, D.C., newspaper, he backed A. Jackson for president (1828) and became a member of the Kitchen Cabinet. He later broke with Jackson and supported H. Clay for president (1832).

Green, Hetty 1835–1916. American financier. Green inherited $10 million and increased it to $100 million through astute management. She was considered the wealthiest woman in the world.

greenback Nickname for legal-tender notes issued by the US government during the American Civil War (1861–65). It was not backed by gold and contributed to inflation during the war years. Greenbacks were backed by gold reserves after 1879. (See also Greenback party.)

Greenback party US political party (1874–88) made up largely of farmers who opposed a return to the gold standard. Greenbackers feared that discontinuation of legal-tender notes (greenbacks) and resumption of the gold standard would mean deflation and financial hardship. The party formed after the Panic of 1873 and ran presidential candidates in 1876, 1880, and 1884, though only once polled more than a million votes. With resumption of the gold standard (1879), Greenbackers joined the Free Silver movement and the party declined rapidly.

Greene, Graham 1904–. English novelist and playwright. He is the author of both thrillers and more serious novels, of which Orient Express and The Power and Glory are examples.

Greene, Nathanael 1742–86. American general in the American Revolution. A strategist considered by many to be second only to G. Washington, he figured in the battles at Trenton (1775), Brandywine (1777), and Germantown (1777). From 1780, he was commander in the South. After reorganizing the army there, he led it to victory in the Carolina Campaign.

Greene, Robert 1558?–92. English dramatist, a contemporary of Shakespeare, who wrote a variety of plays, including the comic romance Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

Greenland World's largest island, located in northeastern North America and nominally controlled by the Danish government. It was discovered (*c*982) and colonized by the Norseman Eric the Red. Later, his son Leif Ericsson probably visited North America (Vinland) while sailing to Greenland (*c*1000). Between the 12th and 16th cents., a European colony flourished there and became a Catholic bishopric (*c*1100). The colony subsequently declined and colonists merged with the Eskimo population. Greenland was recolonized from 1721 by the Norwegians and Danes. Denmark got possession of the colony at the Congress of Vienna (1815) and subsequently took greater interest in developing the island. The US established bases there during WW II (some still remain) and in 1953 Greenland was given representation in the Danish parliament. Greenland subsequently won the right of home rule (May 1, 1979) and organized its own parliament.

Green Mountain Boys A militia unit first organized by E. Allen (1770) to protect settlers in the Green Mountains (now Vermont) from speculators who held British grants to their land. From 1775 on, they figured in the revolution. They captured Ticonderoga (1775) and won the Battle of Bennington (1777).

Gregorian calendar Reformed calendar, instituted by Pope Gregory XIII (Oct., 1582). A reformation of the Julian calendar, it established the 365-day year with a leap year of 366. Its effective date of Oct. 5, 1582, according to the Old Style (Julian), thus became Oct. 15, 1582, by the New Style.

Gregorian church See Armenian church

Gregorian Reform Term applied to the program of Roman Catholic religious reform advanced by Pope Gregory VII. The reforms notably included attempts to halt lay investiture, the granting of ecclesiastical authority by temporal rulers. Gregory's policies brought him into fierce conflict with Holy Roman Emperor Henry IV.

Gregory I, Saint ⟨Gregory the Great⟩ *c*540–604. Italian-born pope (590–604), successor to Pelagius II. A Doctor of the Church, he was a celebrated church administrator, noted for his reforms in both church organization and liturgy. He promoted spiritual supremacy of the pope, established the authority of the pope in temporal matters, began the Christianization of Britain (596), and encouraged the spread of monasticism. The Gregorian chant is traditionally ascribed to him.

Gregory VII, Saint ⟨orig. Hildebrand⟩ *c*1020–1085. Italian-born pope (1073–85), successor to Alexander II and one of the great church reformers. In the face of powerful opposition, Gregory undertook reforms to end widespread church corruption. In 1073 he called reform synods, condemned clerical marriage and simony, and appointed legates to oversee enforcement of church laws. His battle for reform focused on lay investiture, which he banned in 1075 and which set German emperor Henry IV against him. He twice excommunicated Henry. In retaliation, Henry appointed antipope Clement III, attacked Rome (1081–83), and forced Gregory to retreat to Salerno (where he died).

Gregory IX ⟨Segni, Ugolino di⟩ 1147?–1241. Italian-born pope (1227–41), successor to Honorius III. A pope of forceful disposition, he twice excommunicated Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II (1227, 1239), organized the office of the Inquisition (1233), and ordered the collection of the Decretals, which furthered codification of canon law.

Gregory XI ⟨Beaufort, Pierre Roger de⟩ 1330–78. French-born pope (1370–78), successor to Urban V. The last of the French popes, he ended the Babylonian captivity by moving the papacy from Avignon to Rome (1377).

Gregory XII ⟨Correr, Angelo⟩ *c*1327–1417. Venetian-born pope (1406–15) during the Great Schism in the Western church, successor to Innocent VII. He was elected to oppose antipope Benedict XIII and was deposed at the Council of Pisa (1409). He resisted the deposition until after the Council of Constance (1415) was convened and Martin V was elected pope.

Gregory XIII ⟨Buoncompagni, Ugo⟩ 1502–85. Italian-born pope (1572–85), successor to St. Pius V. He reformed the Julian calendar, establishing the modern Gregorian calendar (q.v.) in its place, and promoted education of the clergy.

Gregory XVI ⟨Capellari, Bartolomeo Alberto⟩ 1765–1846. Italian-born pope (1831–46), successor to Pius VIII. He was a conservative and proponent of Ultramontanism. He put down a rebellion by the Carbonari (1832) within the Papal States.

Gregory Nazianzus, Saint ⟨Gregory Theologus⟩ AD *c*329?–389. Cappadocian theologian and bishop. One of the four fathers of the Eastern church, he is remembered for his discourses on the Holy Trinity.

Gregory of Nyssa, Saint d. AD 394. Cappadocian theologian and bishop. One of the four Fathers of the Eastern church, he was a leading proponent of orthodoxy at the first Council of Constantinople (AD 381).

Gregory of Tours, Saint 538?–93. French historian and bishop. He wrote the History of the Franks, still regarded as an important historical resource.

Grenville, George 1712–70. British statesman. As chief minister (1763–65) under King George III, he put through the Revenue Act of 1764 and the Stamp Act of 1765, both of which served to stir up sentiment for rebellion in the American colonies.

Grenville, George Nugent Temple, 1st marquess of Buckingham 1753–1813. British statesman, son of G. Grenville. He was lord lieutenant of Ireland (1782–83, 1787–89).

Grenville, Sir Richard 1541?–91. Celebrated English naval hero. His ships carried the first colonists to Roanoke Colony (1585), but he is best remembered as captain of the Revenge. During an abortive raid on Spanish treasure ships off the Azores, the Revenge battled against 15 Spanish warships for a full day before being taken. Grenville died of wounds after the battle.

Grenville, William Wyndham, Baron 1759–1834. British statesman, a son of G. Grenville (1712–70). A leading advocate of Catholic Emancipation, he organized the coalition government known as the Ministry of All Talents (1806–07). British slave trade was abolished under this ministry (1807).

Grévy, Paul Jules 1807–91. French statesman and president (1879–87) during the Third Republic, successor to M. Macmahon. He was forced to resign because of a scandal that broke shortly after his election to a second term.

Grey, Albert Henry George, 4th Earl 1851–1917. British colonial administrator. He was administrator of Rhodesia (1896–97) and governor general of Canada (1904–11).

Grey, Charles, 2nd Earl 1764–1845. British statesman. He was a Whig party leader in the House of Commons and prime minister (1830–34). He obtained passage of the Reform Bill of 1832.

Grey, Sir George See Bay of Islands War

Grey, Lady Jane 1537–54. English queen for nine days (1553), successor to Edward VI. Soon after being crowned, she acceded to Mary I's claim to the throne and was later sentenced for treason. She was executed after her father, H. Grey, duke of Suffolk, took part in Sir T. Wyatt's rebellion.

Grey, Zane 1875–1939. American author who wrote many popular western novels, including Riders of the Purple Sage.

Grey of Fallodon, Edward Grey, 1st Viscount 1862–1933. British statesman. A liberal member of Parliament (1885–1916), he served as foreign secretary (1905–16) and helped guide Britain through the early phase of WW I. He arranged completion of the Triple Alliance (1907) and the Treaty of London (1915).

Grieg, Edvard Hagerup 1843–1907. Norwegian composer who created a distinctive national style.

Grierson, John 1898–1972. British film producer, noted as a leading figure in British documentary films.

Griffenfeld, Peder Schumacher, Count 1635–99. Danish statesman. He wrote the King's Law (1665), which justified Denmark's absolute monarchy, and under Christian V he became chancellor of Denmark (1673–76).

Griffith, Arthur 1872–1922. Irish statesman and president of the Irish Republic (1922). He founded the Sinn Fein (1905) and was a leader in negotiations to establish the Irish Free State (1921).

Griffith, David Lewelyn Wark 1875–1948. American movie director, a pioneer in the field. He introduced many new techniques and was a founder of United Artists (1919). The Birth of a Nation and Intolerance are among his most important films.

Grillparzer, Franz 1791–1872. Austrian dramatist and poet, sometimes called Austria's greatest playwright. The Ancestress and A Dream Is Life are among his successful plays.

Grimké, Sarah Moore and Angelina Emily 1792–1873, 1805–79. American abolitionists and advocates of women's rights. The daughters of a Southern slaveholder, they first spoke out against slavery in 1835 and for women's rights in 1838. They are sometimes regarded as the first to raise the issue of women's rights in America.

Grimm, Jakob and Wilhelm 1785–1863, 1786–1859. German folklorists and philologists. Though they did much original work in the study of the Germanic languages and folklore, they are best known for their collection of tales, Grimm's Fairy Tales.

Grimoard, Guillaume de See Urban V

Grivas, Georgios Theodoros 1898–1974. Greek Cypriot general. Grivas headed EOKA, which led the struggle for freedom from Britain. However, he opposed independence and sought union with Greece. He fled Cyprus when his troops killed several Turkish Cypriots (1967).

Grolier de Servières, Jean, vicomte d'Aguisy 1479–1565. French bibliophile. He collected what became a famous library of 3,000 specially bound books. The collection was finally broken up in 1675.

Gromyko, Andrei Andreyevich 1909–. Soviet foreign minister (1957–) and member of Soviet Central Committee (1956–). He became a diplomat (1939) following The Great Purge of 1938 and was appointed US ambassador (1943–46). He became deputy foreign minister (1946) and delegate to the UN in 1946. As foreign minister, he pursued Cold War policies against Western powers. During the 1970s he played an important part in the Nixon-Brezhnev summit talks.

Groote, Gerhard ⟨Groot, Gerhard⟩ 1340–84. Dutch religious reformer and preacher who opposed scholastic theologians and founded the Roman Catholic order Brethren of the Common Life (*c*1374).

Gropius, Walter 1883–1969. German-American architect, a famous exponent of modern architectural style and founder of the Bauhaus school (q.v.).

Grosseteste, Robert *c*1170–1253. English theologian and scholar. He was a prolific writer on scholarly subjects and, as bishop of Lincoln (1235–53), he both defended church privileges against Henry III and criticized corruption within the Curia.

Grote, George 1794–1871. English historian. His 12-volume History of Greece is considered a classic.

Grotefend, Georg Friedrich 1775–1853. German philologist who became famous for deciphering the Persian Cuneiform script.

Grotius, Hugo 1583–1645. Dutch jurist. He wrote On the Laws of War and Peace (1625), generally considered to be the foundation of international law. In it he contends that nations, as well as individuals, are subject to natural law.

Grouchy, Emmanuel, marquis de 1766–1847. French general. Sometimes said to be responsible for Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo (1815), he failed to keep the main Prussian force from reaching Waterloo.

Grundtvig, Nikolai Frederik Severin 1783–1872. Danish educator, theologian, and writer. He founded the Danish Folk High School (1844), a system of adult education that briefly became popular in European countries.

Grünewald, Mathias ⟨pseud. of Neithart, Mathias Gothardt⟩ fl. 1500–30. German artist, sometimes considered the greatest of the German Gothic painters. The Isenheim altarpiece is among his greatest works.

Guadalajara, Battle of Battle (Mar., 1937) during the Spanish Civil War (1936–39). Spanish Nationalists with a large contingent of allied Italian troops (some 50,000 soldiers in all) began a drive toward Guadalajara in an effort to surround nearby Republican-held Madrid. In subsequent fighting (Mar. 15–18), the Italians were routed by Spanish Republican armies and the Nationalist offensive was halted.

Guadalcanal, Battle of First major Allied counteroffensive (Aug., 1942–Feb., 1943) against the Japanese during WW II. The battle, fought by both land and sea forces, began with the landing of some 16,000 US marines (Aug. 7, 1942) and establishment of a beachhead on the island of Guadalcanal, in the Solomon Islands. Bloody fighting on the island at times saw the marines outnumbered 10 to one, as the Japanese poured reinforcements into the fighting. The naval battles, fought to stem the tide of these reinforcements, continued from Aug. 9 to Nov. 30, when the Allies established naval supremacy. The battle for Guadalcanal ended when the Japanese evacuated some 14,000 troops from the island (Feb. 7–9). Japanese losses were 23,000 dead or missing and 1,000 captured. US losses were 1,600 killed and many thousands more, casualties of battle and disease.

Guadalupe Hidalgo, Treaty of Treaty concluded (Feb. 2, 1848) between the US and Mexico ending the Mexican War (1846–48). According to the treaty, signed at the Mexican town of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the US paid $15 million in return for what was then roughly half of Mexico. It set the US boundary at the Rio Grande and included what are now Texas, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah, and western Colorado. In ratifying the treaty (1848), the Senate rejected a move to add the Wilmot Proviso (q.v.) and thereby fueled the growing debate over the extension of slavery.

Guadalupe Victoria ⟨b. Fernandez, Manuel Felix⟩ 1786?–1843. Mexican general, the first president of Mexico (1824–29). He supported the government of A. de Iturbide and the Plan of Iguala (1821), by which Mexico became independent, but in 1823 joined A. de Santa Anna's revolt against Iturbide.

Guarantees, Law of Italian law (May 13, 1871) which attempted to establish the relationship between the Italian government and the papacy. It guaranteed religious and diplomatic freedom to the papacy, and established an annual income for the pope, but did not restore papal authority to the territories that had been incorporated into Italy. Pope Pius IX did not accept it, and relations between Italy and the papacy were not formalized until the promulgation of the Lateran Treaty of 1929.

Guatemala ⟨Republic of Guatemala⟩ Independent state located in western Central America on the Pacific coast. Its capital is Guatemala City. Guatemala was the home of the ancient Mayan-Quiche civilization, which was conquered by Spain (1523–24). Since its independence in 1821, Guatemala has had a history marked by military dictatorships, coups, border warfare, poverty, and natural disasters. Key events in Guatemala's history include:

1821 Guatemala declared independence from Spain (Sept. 15).

1821–23 A. de Iturbide made Guatemala part of his Mexican Empire.

1823 Guatemala joined Central American Federation.

1838 R. Carrera declared independence from Central American Federation.

1840–65 R. Carrera reigned as dictator.
1859 Treaty set boundary with British Honduras, but Guatemala later disputed terms and laid claim to that territory.
1873–85 Justo Rufino Barrios became president; invaded El Salvador to reestablish Central American Federation; was killed.
1898–1920 Manuel Estrada Cabrera reigned as dictator.
1906 Gen. Manuel Barillas revolted against Cabrera; embroiled most of Central America in warfare; armistice arranged by T. Roosevelt and P. Díaz.
1920 Revolution broke out, forcing Cabrera's resignation; unrest continued over next decade.
1931–44 Gen. Jorge Ubico ruled as dictator; ruled repressively, but ended peonage of Indians and campaigned successfully against corruption.
1945–51 Leftist Dr. Juan José Arévalo in office as president; implemented land and labor reform.
1945 Guatemala renewed its long-standing claims to British Honduras.
1951–54 Jacobo Arbenz Guzmán in office; expropriated large estates, including those of the United Fruit Company.
1954–57 Col. Carlos Castillos Armas in office after leading revolt with secret US help; Guzmán fled to Cuba.
1957 Castillos assassinated; series of coups followed in 1960s.
1960–61 Cuban exiles, to be used later at Bay of Pigs, trained in Guatemala.
1967 Leftist and rightist factions instituted campaign of terrorist violence.
1968 US Ambassador John Gordon Mein killed.
1970–74 Conservative Col. Carlos Araña Osorio in office as president; imposed state of siege to deal with terrorists.
1974–78 Gen. Kjell Langerud García in office as president.
1976 Almost 100,000 killed or injured in major earthquake (Feb. 4).
1977 Britain offered independence to Belize (formerly British Honduras); Guatemala threatened invasion to make good its claim to this territory in long dispute over 1859 treaty.
1978–82 Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas García in office as president; instituted corrupt and brutal regime; US military aid halted (1978).
1981 Guatemala agreed to recognize independent Belize and negotiate territorial claims.
1982 Gen. José Efraín Ríos Montt in power following military coup (Mar. 23); Montt began brutal war against Leftist guerrillas.

Guatemala City Capital city (pop. 1,000,000) of Guatemala, the largest city in Central America. Founded by the Spanish in 1527, it became a colonial capital in 1776 and capital of the independent republic of Guatemala in 1839. Earthquakes greatly damaged the city in 1917 to 1918 and again struck the region around the city in 1976.

Guayaquil Conference Strategy meeting (July 26–27, 1822) between leaders of the South American independence movement. S. Bolívar and J. San Martín met at this Ecuadorian coastal city to discuss joining forces against Spain. They failed to reach an agreement and Bolívar continued to fight alone.

Guelphs and Ghibellines Two opposing political factions prominent during the struggle for control of northern and central Italy (13th–15th cents.) The Guelphs supported the pope and the Ghibellines the German Holy Roman Emperors. The rivalry led to numerous local wars during this period and in Florence a long civil war that ended (1266) with the expulsion of the Ghibellines. By the 14th cent., after the power of Holy Roman Emperors declined in Italy and the papacy was removed to France, the rivalry was important only in local political struggles. (See also Welf.)

Guerrero, Vicente 1783?–1831. Mexican revolutionary and president (1829). From 1810 he led revolutionary forces and became a celebrated guerrilla fighter. After 1822, he joined forces with A. Santa Anna in toppling A. de Iturbide and became vice-president under Guadalupe Victoria. Guerrero was overthrown (1829) by his vice-president, Anastasio Bustamente.

Gueux Dutch revolutionaries. In 1566, Dutch and Flemish nationals petitioned (1566) the ruling Spanish government for redress of grievances by the Compromise of Breda (q.v.), but were dismissed as "ces gueux," (beggars). Adopting the name "Gueux" as a badge of pride, they organized under William the Silent and successfully harassed Spanish shipping, notably at the siege of Leiden (1574).

Guevara, Che ⟨Guevara de la Serna, Ernesto⟩ 1928–67. Argentinian-born Communist revolutionary leader. An important figure in F. Castro's Cuban revolution (1959), he became a renowned leader of revolutionary movements in Latin America. He was captured and killed while leading a guerrilla war in Bolivia (1966–67).

guilds ⟨gilds⟩ Medieval European merchant and craft associations. Guilds originated in Europe (11th cent.) as merchants' associations, formed to protect traveling merchants from bandits. Merchants' guilds became powerful, both economically and politically (12th–13th cents.). They were completely displaced, however, by the rise of the craft guilds and disappeared by the 14th cent. The craft guilds, composed of workers in a particular craft, declined in the 15th cent. as a result of internal disputes and other problems. They disappeared with the rise of capitalism (16th–17th cents.).

guild socialism Movement, centered in Britain, advocating state-owned, worker-controlled industry. It arose briefly in Britain during the early 20th cent. and called for creation of national guilds. Through these guilds, workers were to operate companies while the government was to retain actual ownership. The movement declined rapidly in the early 1920s.

Guilford Court House, Battle of American victory (Mar. 15, 1781) over the British during the Carolina Campaign (q.v.) of the American Revolution (1775–83). The battle was fought at Guilford, North Carolina, between some 4,400 Americans under Gen. N. Greene and 2,200 British under Gen. C. Cornwallis. Losses were light in the five-hour battle, but the engagement is said to have led Cornwallis to abandon the Carolinas to the Americans.

Guinea Name once used by Europeans to refer to the western coastal region of Africa.

Guinea ⟨Republic of Guinea⟩ ⟨formerly French Guinea⟩ Republic located on the coast of West Africa. Capital is Conakry. In precolonial times, the region was divided variously between tribal states, including empires of Mali, Ghana, and Fulani. Portuguese explorers arrived in the 15th cent., and in subsequent centuries the region supplied slaves to the Portuguese, British, and French. In the 19th cent., the French sought to protect trade in agricultural products and declared a protectorate (1849) over part of the region. They gradually expanded their control and established it as a separate colony (1891), though fighting with natives continued until the end of the century. From 1893 to 1895, the colony was known as French Guinea and after 1895 it was administered as part of French West Africa. Then a major bauxite producer, it became an overseas territory of France (1946) and, after voting against joining the French Community (q.v.) in 1958, it achieved full independence. Under Sékou Touré (1922–), president of Guinea since its independence, Guinea first pursued closer relations with Russia and then with the Western powers (from late 1960s). In 1970, Touré successfully repulsed an invasion, launched from Guinea-Bissau, aimed at his overthrow.

Guinea-Bissau ⟨formerly Portuguese Guinea⟩ Coastal West African country. Capital is Bissau. First discovered (1446) by the Portuguese, the region became a center for the slave trade in the 17th and 18th cents. It came under Portuguese control, and its boundaries were established through agreement with France (1886). An independence movement began in Portuguese Guinea in the early 1960s under the leadership of A. Cabral. Rebel forces gained control of parts of the country and in 1973 declared the independence of Guinea-Bissau. Portugal granted independence Sept. 10, 1974. The government was overthrown in a military coup (Nov. 14, 1980).

Guise French Roman Catholic family that played a major role in French politics (16th and 17th cents.). It was founded by Claude de Lorraine (1496–1550), 1st duke of Guise. His daughter, Mary of Guise, was the mother of Mary Queen of Scots. His sons François de Lorraine (1519–63), 2d duke of Guise, and Charles de Guise (1524–74) gained great power in France under Francis II. Their persecution of the Huguenots (Protestants) and rivalry with the Bourbons led to the Conspiracy of Amboise (1560), which they ruthlessly suppressed. Their massacre (1562) of Huguenots at Vassy led to the Wars of Religion (1562–98). François' son, Henri de Lorraine (1550–88), 3d duke of Guise, aided in planning and execution of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day (1572) and formed the Catholic League (1576), which continued persecution of the Huguenots. The line ended with François Joseph de Lorraine, 7th duke of Guise (d. 1675).

Guise, Charles de, Cardinal of Lorraine 1524–74. French Catholic cardinal, son of Claude I, 1st duke of Guise. He and his brother, François, 2d duke of Guise, were the most influential men in the court of Francis II. He is said to have brought the Inquisition to France and is noted for persecution of Protestants.

Guise, Claude de Lorraine, 1st duke of 1496–1550. French Catholic nobleman and soldier. He founded the Guise family, which rose to power in France during the 16th cent. He was created duke of Guise by Francis I in 1527.

Guise, François de Lorraine, 2d duke of 1519–63. French Catholic nobleman and soldier, son of Claude I, 1st duke of Guise. He shared the power of government under Francis II with his brother Charles de Guise and took part in the persecution of French Protestants (Huguenots). Following Catherine de Medici's rise to power, he joined with others in opposing tolerance toward the Huguenots. His troops are said to have sparked the Wars of Religion by a massacre of Huguenots at Vassy (1562).

Gustav line In WW II, the German line of defense in southern Italy, stretching from Pescara to Gaeta. The Allies finally broke through it during their attack on Rome (May 1944).

Gustavus I 1496–1560. Swedish king (1523–60), first of Vasa dynasty. Following the Stockholm Bloodbath, he raised an army of Swedes against the Danish rulers of Sweden and defeated them. He was elected king (1523) and the Kalmar Union (q.v.) was dissolved. He consolidated the power of the monarchy and in 1544 royal succession was made hereditary.

Gustavus II ⟨Gustavus Adolphus⟩ 1594–1632. Swedish king (1611–32), successor to his father, Charles IX. With help from his chancellor, A. Oxenstierna, he pacified the nobles and restored order to Swedish government. He ended the Kalmar War (1613), successfully waged wars against Russia (1613–17) and Poland (1621–29), and proved a skilled leader of Protestant troops in the Thirty Years' War. He was killed at the Battle of Lutzen (1632).

Gustavus III 1746–92. Swedish king (1771–92). His reign is sometimes referred to as the Swedish Enlightenment. He renewed the authority of the monarchy and restored order, instituted important reforms, and entered into a costly war with Russia (1788–90).

Gustavus IV ⟨Gustavus Adolphus⟩ 1778–1837. Swedish king (1792–1809), successor to his father, Gustavus III. He was an unpopular ruler, and his foreign policies proved disastrous for Sweden. He lost Finland to Russia (1808) and was finally overthrown (1809). His heirs were forbidden to succeed him.

Gustavus V 1858–1950. Swedish king (1907–50), successor to his father, Oscar II. He proved to be a popular and able constitutional monarch who maintained Sweden's neutrality through WW I and WW II.

Gustavus VI 1882–1973. Swedish king (1950–73), successor to his father, Gustavus V. During his reign the Swedish Riksdag passed legislation reducing the king's role to that of a figurehead.

Gutenberg Johann *c*1400–68?. German generally regarded as the inventor (in the West) of the method of printing with movable type. Few details of Gutenberg's life are certain but he is thought to have invented his printing method (*c*1438) while living in Strasbourg. Later, in Mainz, he entered a partnership (1450) with a goldsmith, J. Fust, and began printing the Mazarin Bible. He lost his press and type following a suit by Fust (1455). It is believed that Chinese and Korean printing techniques, invented earlier and similar to Gutenberg's, were unknown to Europeans.

Guyana ⟨formerly British Guiana⟩ Independent republic in northeast South America. Capital is Georgetown. The Dutch founded the first settlement (*c*1620) at Essequibo and in the following century both Britain and France founded colonies there. During the Dutch Wars, England captured the region, but the Dutch regained possession by the Treaty of Breda (1667). The region changed hands frequently during the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars, though Britain ultimately gained control of it at the Congress of Vienna (1815). British Guiana was formally created in 1831 and the discovery of gold (1879) there led to an international controversy, known as the Venezuela Boundary Dispute (q.v.), over claims to part of the territory. The movement for independence began after WW II, and a constitution, providing for elections, was adopted in 1952. Britain suspended the constitution (1953) when a pro-Communist government was elected, but new elections in 1957 returned a more moderate government. Despite unrest during the 1960s, elected governments remained in power, and full independence was granted May 26, 1966. A major crisis was averted (1970) when a 12-year truce was negotiated with Venezuela and Surinam over claims to territory in Guyana. Guyana became a republic that same year.

Guyon, Jeanne Marie de la Motte 1648–1717. French mystic and author. An important figure in the religious movement known as quietism, she became embroiled in the controversy surrounding it. She was eventually imprisoned in the Bastille (1695–1702) for her writings.

Guzmán Blanco, Antonio 1829–99. Venezuelan dictator. He was vice-president (1863–68) and following overthrow of the government, he led a counterrevolution. He was subsequently elected president (1870) and, until his overthrow in 1888, he ruled with dictatorial powers.

Hannah ⟨Anna⟩ Biblical mother of Samuel.

Hannibal 247–182? BC. Carthaginian general during the Second Punic War (218–201 BC). The son of Hamilcar Barca, he became (221 BC) commander of Carthaginian forces in Spain and, by his attack on a city allied to Rome, precipitated (218) the Second Punic War. In one of history's most celebrated military maneuvers, he led an army of 40,000 soldiers (with a supply train of elephants) out of Spain and across the Alps to invade Rome itself. He gained major victories over the Romans at Lake Trasimeno (217) and Cannae (216) but was unable to take the city. Recalled (203) to defend Carthage from Roman attack, he was defeated at Zama (202). He later joined Syrian king Antiochus in wars against Rome, but was defeated (182) and poisoned himself.

Hanno fl. 5th cent. BC. Carthaginian navigator who led a fleet of ships along the west coast of Africa for the purpose of establishing new colonies. He eventually founded seven colonies and may have reached Sierra Leone.

Hannover, House of See Hanover, House of Hanoi Capital of Vietnam (597,000). The city has been the capital of the Vietnamese or their conquerors throughout much of their history. It was capital for their Chinese rulers in the 6th or 7th cent. AD, for Vietnamese rulers from the 11th to the 17th cent., for the French (1887–1954), and capital of North Vietnam (1954–76). It was heavily bombed during the Vietnam War (1965–68, 1972).

Hanover, House of ⟨Hannover, ~⟩ German ruling family of Hanover. Descended from the Guelphs, the line acceded to the British throne, through the Act of Settlement (1701), through George I. Succeeding Hanoverian rulers of England were George II, George III, George IV, and William IV. Upon the accession (1837) of Queen Victoria the two kingdoms were separated, Victoria being unable by Hanoverian law to accede to the throne of Hanover.

Hanseatic League Once powerful federation of cities (13th–17th cents.), mainly located in what is now northern Germany. It sought to establish trade monopolies and protect its concerns against piracy, robbery, and intervention by foreign governments. The cities of Lübeck and Hamburg founded (1241) the league. It eventually included over 100 others and virtually controlled trade in the Baltic and North Sea regions. The league established great trading depots, including the Steelyard in London, Bruges, Bergen, and Novgorod. The league reached the zenith of its power with conquest of the Danes and the Treaty of Stralsund (1370). The league gradually declined thereafter, due to being unable to resist the Dutch in the Baltic region, the growing power of other European kingdoms, internal struggles among member cities, and the change in trading patterns brought about by the discovery of the New World. The last meeting of the league was held in 1669.

Hansen, Hans Christian Svane 1906–60. Danish statesman. As foreign minister (1953–60) and prime minister (1955–60) he played a key role in Denmark's economic growth and in its emergence as a major force within NATO.

Hanson, John 1721–83. American Revolutionary War patriot and political leader. Sometimes referred to as the first US president, he was actually a presiding legislative officer called the "president" (1781–82) under the Articles of Confederation.

Hansson, Per Albin 1885–1946. Swedish statesman. As prime minister (1932–46) in the critical Depression and WW II years, he encouraged public works, agricultural projects, and social welfare, and kept Sweden neutral during the war.

Han Wên-kung See Han Yu

Han Yu ⟨Han Wên-kung⟩ 768–824. Chinese official, essayist, and poet. A Confucian, he was an outspoken critic of Taoism and Buddhism, and was once exiled from the emperor's court for his views. His writings earned him the title "Prince of Letters."

Hapsburg ⟨Habsburg⟩ One of the major dynasties of European rulers (13th-20th cents.) Members of the Hapsburg house became rulers of Austria, the Holy Roman Empire, and Spain. The line can be traced back to the 11th-cent. counts of Hapsburg, and in 1273 Rudolf I founded the imperial line. Elected king of the Germans in 1273, he acquired Austria (1278) and made it a hereditary possession (1282). The Hapsburgs ruled as kings of the Germans (rulers not crowned as "emperor" by the pope) with interruptions until 1452, when Frederick III was crowned Holy Roman Emperor. Thereafter the title remained in the family until the empire succumbed to Napoleon (1806). By advantageous marriages and inheritance of family domains, Hapsburg rulers vastly increased their holdings and reached the height of their power (16th cent.) under Emperor Charles V, who was also Spanish King Charles I. The Hapsburg line was divided on his death into Spanish (rulers 1504–1700) and Austrian lines. The Austrian line (known as Hapsburg-Lorraine after 1740) ruled the Holy Roman Empire to 1806 and Austria, Hungary, and Bohemia until 1918.

Hardenberg, Prince Karl August von 1750–1822. Prussian statesman. As chancellor from 1810, he guided Prussia through the turbulent years of the Napoleonic Wars and was responsible for many political and social reforms.

Harding, Warren Gamaliel 1865–1923. Twenty-ninth US president (1921–23), successor to W. Wilson. Harding's administration was notorious for the Teapot Dome (q.v.) scandal. A newspaper publisher and Republican politician in Ohio, he later became a US senator (1915–21). His term as senator was undistinguished, though his congenial manner won him influential friends. Finally, at the deadlocked Republican convention of 1920, Harding was nominated as the compromise candidate for president. He campaigned on a return-to-"normalcy" platform that gained wide appeal in post-WW I America and he won the election easily. Though he was personally an honest man, he surrounded himself with political appointees who proved to be unscrupulous and corrupt. The first years of his administration were marked by a single major administration initiative, the convening of the Washington Conference (1922) for international reduction of naval armament. But in 1923 rumors of scandal began to spread. Harding died while on a tour of the West (Aug. 2, 1923), apparently after receiving reports of the impending revelations. In following months, his appointees in various departments, including Interior, Justice, the Veterans' Bureau, and others, were charged with corruption and negligence. Of the scandals uncovered, Teapot Dome was the worst.

Hardy, Thomas 1840–1928. English novelist and poet, a leading author of the 19th cent. Among his best-known works are Tess of the D'Urbervilles and Jude the Obscure.

Haremhab See Harmhab

Hargreaves, James d. 1778. English inventor who devised the spinning jenny (*c*1764).

Harlan, John Marshall 1833–1911. Associate justice of the US Supreme Court (1877–1911). A noted dissenter and considered a strict constructionist, he dissented in the Supreme Court's decision (1896) upholding "separate but equal" treatment of blacks.

Harlem Heights, Battle of Series of skirmishes (Sept. 16, 1776) in northern Manhattan, New York, during the American Revolution. The skirmishes slowed the British advance north after the Battle of Long Island, and helped Colonial forces to prepare for the coming Battle of White Plains.

Harley, Robert, 1st earl of Oxford 1661–1724. British statesman and leader of the Tory ministry (1710–14) under Queen Anne. As speaker of the house (1701–05) and secretary of state (1704–08) he exercised considerable influence in the government, and with others oversaw British involvement in the War of Spanish Succession. He was made leader of the Tory ministry (1710) by the queen's favor and during his time in power concluded the Peace of Utrecht (1713). Harley was finally ousted through the efforts of his rival, Henry St. John, 1st Viscount Bolingbroke.

Harmensen, Jacob See Arminius, Jacobus

Harmhab ⟨Haremhab⟩ Egyptian pharaoh (*c*1350–1315 BC) and founder of the 19th dynasty. He restored worship of the traditional god Amon and brought about a return of prosperity.

Harmodius and Aristogiton *d. c*514 BC. Athenian tyrannicides. They attempted to assassinate the tyrant Hippias and his brother Hipparchus. The plot failed, though Hipparchus was killed. Harmodius was killed immediately and Aristogiton was killed later. Hippias continued his rule for several years more, but after his overthrow Harmodius and Aristogiton were honored.

Harmonists See Harmony Society

Harmony Society ⟨Harmonists⟩ 19th-cent. Protestant religious sect. Founded in Germany by George Rapp (1757–1847), it practiced celibacy, asceticism, and communal sharing. It founded the villages of Harmony, Pennsylvania (1806), and New Harmony, Indiana (1814). In 1825 it sold its Indiana holdings to R. Owen and moved back to Pennsylvania. It was disbanded in 1906.

Harmsworth, Alfred Charles William, 1st Viscount Northcliffe See Harmsworth, Harold Sidney, 1st Viscount Rothermere

Harmsworth, Harold Sidney, 1st Viscount Rothermere 1868–1940. English publisher. With his brother, Alfred Charles William, 1st Viscount Northcliffe (1865–1922), he built a newspaper publishing empire in Britain that included the Evening News, the Daily Mail, and the Daily Mirror.

Harnack, Adolph von 1851–1930. German theologian. An important church historian, he wrote the influential work The History of Dogma.

Harold I ⟨Harold the Fair-haired⟩ *c*850–*c*933. Norwegian king (*c*860–*c*933). Son of Halfdan the Black, Harold conquered much of Norway and became its first king. During his reign large numbers of Norsemen migrated to Iceland.

Harold II 1022?–66. Last Saxon king of England (1066). Chosen heir by Edward the Confessor, Harold ruled less than a year before his defeat by William, duke of Normandy, at the Battle of Hastings, in which he was killed.

Harold III ⟨Harold the Stern⟩ ⟨Harold Hardrada⟩ d. 1066. Norwegian king (*c*1047–66), successor to Magnus I. He joined with Earl Tostig in an invasion of northern England (1066) and fell with him in battle at Stamford Bridge.

Harold Bluetooth *d. c*985. Danish king. Harold attempted to impose Danish suzerainty over Norway but was defeated. Forced to accept Christianity, he introduced it to Denmark. He was killed in battle by his son Sweyn I.

Harold Hardrada See Harold III

Harold Harefoot d. 1040. English king (1037–40). The illegitimate son of King Canute, he spent much of his reign fighting Canute's legitimate son Hardecanute (1019?–42) for the throne.

Harpers Ferry Raid Raid (Oct. 16–18, 1859) on a federal arsenal at Harpers Ferry, Virginia (now West Virginia), carried out by J. Brown and 21 other abolitionists. Brown and his men captured the arsenal as part of a plan to start a general slave uprising in the South. Their base at Harpers Ferry was to be the nucleus of a new state in the surrounding mountains, where escaping slaves could find refuge. In fact, the raid was a failure and the arsenal was easily recaptured by combined federal troops and local militia. Brown and six of his followers were hanged. However, the incident had a profound effect on the South, which became convinced the abolitionists would stop at nothing. Even though his direct action was generally disapproved, Brown became a martyr of the antislavery cause, as attested by the marching song, John Brown's Body. The incident was a contributing factor in the election of A. Lincoln, the subsequent secession of the slave states of the South, and thus the American Civil War.

Harpy Mythical Greek monster, half woman and half bird.

Harriman, Edward Henry 1848–1909. American railroad magnate and financier. Once a New York City stockbroker, he built a combination of western railroad lines that made him one of the most powerful men in 19th-cent. American railroading.

Harriman, William Averell 1891–. American statesman and diplomat, son of E. H. Harriman. He served in various diplomatic posts since the early 1940s and was chief US negotiator of the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty (1963). Harriman also served as governor of New York (1955–58).

Harris, Joel Chandler 1848–1908. American writer and humorist famous for his Uncle Remus stories.

Harris, Roy 1898–1979. American composer whose symphonies are noted for their American themes.

Harris, Townsend See Harris Treaty

Harrisburg American city (pop. 53,300), capital city of Pennsylvania. Settled in the early 18th cent., it is located in an area rich in iron and coal and is a major steel, rail, and industrial center.

Harrison, Benjamin 1833–1901. Twenty-third US president (1889–93), successor to G. Cleveland. He was a Union officer during the American Civil War and a US senator from Indiana (1881–87). The Republican presidential nominee in 1888, he defeated G. Cleveland in the Electoral College, though Cleveland had almost 100,000 more popular votes. During his administration, the US expanded its influence abroad while at home the economy weakened, setting the stage for the financial Panic of 1893. The first Inter-American Conference was held (fostering the Pan-American movement), and the US participated in the Berlin Conference (1889). Legislation affecting the economy at home included the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (1890), the high, protective McKinley Tariff Act (1890), and the inflationary Sherman Silver Purchase Act (1890).

Harrison, William Henry 1773–1841. Ninth US president (Mar. 4–Apr. 4, 1841), successor to M. Van Buren. Harrison, who caught pneumonia at his inauguration ceremony, was the first president to die in office. He was a leading figure in the development of the Old Northwest (q.v.) and served as governor of the Indiana Territory (1800–12). Harrison became a national figure by defeating Indian chief Tecumseh, then at war against white settlers, at the famous Battle of Tippecanoe (1811). Later, in the War of 1812, he took command of the Old Northwest and reestablished American control of the region, by recapturing Detroit (Sept., 1813) and by his victory at the Battle of Thames River (1813). He then became a US congressman (1816–19), US senator (1825–28), and finally Whig party candidate for president (1840). His successful campaign, best remembered for the slogan "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too," evaded the issues and instead promoted Harrison as the image of a rugged westerner.

Harris Treaty Treaty between the US and Japan signed on July 29, 1858. It provided for unsupervised trade and residence at five Japanese ports, a tariff, and the prohibition of imports of opium. It was negotiated by Townsend Harris (1804–78), first US consul general (1855), and later minister (1859), to Japan.

Hart, Moss 1904–61. American playwright. His many successful productions include the musicals Lady in the Dark and My Fair Lady. He frequently collaborated with G. Kaufman. Their comedy You Can't Take It with You was awarded the 1937 Pulitzer Prize for Drama.

Harte, Francis Bret(t) 1836–1902. American writer, known best for his vivid sketches of California life.

Hartford Convention Meeting of New England Federalist party members held (Dec. 15, 1814–Jan. 4, 1815) in Hartford, Connecticut, during the War of 1812. The convention was brought on by widespread dissatisfaction with the war in New England. Presided over by George Cabot (1752–1823), the meeting was held in secrecy and included delegates from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island. Though the convention rejected outright secession, its final report generally adopted a states' rights position and attacked President J. Madison's policies on trade embargoes and the war. The air of secrecy and the timing of the convention (the war ended soon afterward) aroused popular suspicions of treason and thereby contributed to the downfall of the Federalist party.

Harun-al-Rashid ⟨Harun ar-Rashid⟩ *c*764–809. Fifth Abbasid caliph (786–809) and most famous of the dynasty. A son of Mahdi, he reigned during the height of the Islamic empire, which then included southwestern Asia and northern Africa. His exploits and the splendor of his court at Baghdad are celebrated in The Thousand and One Nights.

Harvey, William 1578–1657. English physician who was first to identify correctly the function of the heart and blood circulation. He published his findings in 1628.

Hasan ⟨Hassan⟩ *c*624–*c*669. Islamic ruler, the 5th caliph (661), and a grandson of Muhammad. He was proclaimed caliph on the death of his father Ali but soon relinquished the title to Muawiyah, who challenged his succession.

Hasan ibn al-Sabbah See Assassin

Hasdrubal d. 207 BC. Carthaginian general, son of Hamilcar Barca and brother of Hannibal. As commander in Carthaginian Spain he fought successfully against the Romans. He was killed while trying to join his forces with those of Hannibal in Italy.

Hassan See Hasan

Hassan II 1929–. Moroccan king (1961–). Hassan suspended Morocco's constitution (1965), but continued unrest forced him to yield to reforms (1971) and a larger role for the parliament.

Hastings, Battle of English-Norman battle (Oct. 14, 1066) in which English king Harold II was defeated and killed by the invading forces of William (the Conqueror), duke of Normandy. William moved on to London, where he was crowned king (Dec. 25). This battle is widely regarded by historians as the most important event in British history, marking the start of Norman influence in England.

Hastings, Warren 1732–1818. British colonial governor. As governor general of India (1774–84), Hastings successfully protected British interests. Upon his return to England he was charged with extortion and mismanagement, but was eventually acquitted.

Hatch acts American laws (1939, 1940). Proposed by Senator Carl Hatch (1889–1963), they limited campaign contributions from individuals and committees and forbade federal employees from campaigning for candidates.

Hatshepsut *d. c*1481 BC. Egyptian queen, wife of Thutmose II. A woman of unusually great power, she ruled Egypt during the reign of her husband, and also as regent for Thutmose III. She brought a period of peace to Egypt.

Hauptmann, Bruno Richard 1899–1936. German-American carpenter, convicted kidnapper of the C. Lindbergh baby. Arrested (1934) after passing some of the $50,000 ransom money paid two years earlier, Hauptmann was convicted after a sensational trial, and was electrocuted (1936).

Hauptmann, Gerhart 1862–1946. German dramatist, novelist and poet, considered a leading figure in German literature. His many works include the plays Before Dawn and The Weavers. He was awarded the 1912 Nobel Prize for Literature.

Haussmann, Georges Eugene, Baron 1809–91. French official and city planner who, under Napoleon III, redesigned the city of Paris.

Havana Capital of Cuba (pop. 1,008,500) and commercial center. Originally called San Cristóbal, it was founded (*c*1515) by Spanish colonists. A key to Spain's New World possessions, it became the capital of Cuba (16th cent.) and continued to grow in importance to the 19th cent.

Hawaii US island state (pop. 965,000), the 50th state. First settled (*c*8th cent.) by Polynesians, the islands were discovered by Capt. J. Cook (1778) and called the Sandwich Islands. The accession (1810) of Hawaiian king Kamehameha I was accompanied by increased foreign trade and growing Western influence. The islands' last ruler, Queen Liliuokalani, was deposed in 1893 and Hawaii was annexed to the US in 1898. The surprise attack (Dec. 7, 1941) on the US naval base at Pearl Harbor led to US entry into WW II. Hawaii became a state in 1959.

Hawkesbury, Baron See Liverpool, Robert Banks Jenkinson, 2d earl of Hawkins, Sir John ⟨Hawkyns, Sir John⟩ 1532–95. English seaman and admiral. The first Englishman to engage in the slave trade (1562), he directed reconstruction of the English fleet and took part in battle against the Spanish Armada.

Hawkyns See Hawkins, Sir John

Hawthorne, Nathaniel 1804–64. American novelist and short-story writer, one of the first great American authors. After 12 years of working in enforced seclusion (from 1825), he produced an unsuccessful first novel and a number of short stories (collected as Twice-Told Tales) that won him some recognition. He married (1842) and thereafter completed his most famous novels, The Scarlet Letter and The House of the Seven Gables. The Scarlet Letter is considered the first American psychological novel.

Hay, John 1838–1905. American statesman and author. Private secretary to A. Lincoln (1861–65), he was secretary of state under presidents W. McKinley and T. Roosevelt (1898–1905). He is chiefly remembered as negotiator of the Open Door Policy and the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

Haya de la Torre, Victor Raúl 1895–. Peruvian political leader and founder (1924) of the Apra Party, a popular radical party in Peru. He was twice an unsuccessful presidential candidate (1931, 1962).

Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty The treaty concluded (Nov. 18, 1903) between the US and newly independent Panama, establishing the US-controlled Panama Canal Zone. Shortly after Colombia rejected (Aug. 12, 1903), the Hay-Herrán Treaty, Panamanian rebels declared Panama's independence (Nov. 3) from Colombia. Two weeks later the US concluded the treaty for the Canal Zone. Terms, negotiated by US Secretary of State J. Hay, were nearly the same as had been offered to Colombia, including a $10-million payment and $250,000 annuity.

Haydn, Franz Joseph 1732–1809. Austrian composer, one of the most important masters of classical music. He made fundamental advances in the symphonic form, the string quartet, and the sonata and thereby profoundly influenced the development of classical music. He wrote most of his great works under the patronage (1761–90) of the Austrian noble house of Esterhazy, and gained recognition throughout Europe. Haydn was known to have influenced his friend W. Mozart and taught L. Beethoven. He wrote over 100 symphonies, including his great Symphony No. 102 in B Flat Major, numerous string quartets, operas, piano concertos, and masses.

Hayes, Helen ⟨Brown, Helen Hayes⟩ 1900–. American actress. An actress since childhood, she has starred in stage, motion picture, television, and radio productions.

Hayes, Rutherford Birchard 1822–93. Nineteenth US president (1877–81), successor to U. Grant. He distinguished himself in the American Civil War and became a congressman (1865–67), governor of Ohio (1868–72), and Republican presidential candidate in 1876. The election, which saw the return of former Confederate states to participation in national politics, appeared to favor Hayes's opponent, S. Tilden. Disputes over returns in four states, however, put the election in the hands of a congressional electoral commission, which ultimately decided the election in Hayes's favor. (See also United States [1876].) Once in office, Hayes worked to end Reconstruction (1865–77). He removed the remaining federal troops from southern states, appointed southerners to government posts, and generally adopted a policy of reconciliation. His attempts at ending civil service corruption embroiled him in a bitter feud with the Stalwart (q.v.) Republican Senator Roscoe Conkling. In the controversy over silver coinage, (see Free Silver), Hayes attempted to block passage of the Bland-Allison Act (q.v.), but his veto was overridden (1878).

Hay-Herrán Treaty Treaty negotiated (1903) between Colombia and the US to establish control over what was to become the Panama Canal Zone. Colombia, then in control of the region, ultimately refused (Aug. 12, 1903) to ratify the treaty. Terms of the treaty negotiated by US secretary of state J. Hay, included a $10-million payment and a $250,000 annuity in return for rights over the canal route. The US soon afterward concluded the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty with the newly formed independent Panamanian government.

Haymarket Square riot American labor riot (May 4, 1886) in Chicago, Illinois. A bomb, exploding at a labor demonstration, killed seven policemen and four civilians, and wounded over 100 others. Eight anarchists were convicted in connection with the bombing. Four were hanged and one committed suicide, and the remaining three were pardoned in 1893.

Hayne, Robert Young 1791–1839. US senator (1823–32) and spokesman for the South. He was D. Webster's opponent in the famous debate (1830) over issues then dividing the North and South.

Hay-Pauncefote Treaty Treaty signed (Nov. 18, 1901) by the US and Britain, which enabled the US to control the proposed Panama Canal. The treaty superseded the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty (1850) with Britain in which the US agreed to joint control of such a canal. Negotiated by US Secretary of State J. Hay, the treaty provided for a canal under US jurisdiction and equal treatment for shipping of all nations, and tacitly permitted fortification of the Canal Zone by the US.

Hays, Arthur Garfield 1881–1954. American lawyer, noted as defense attorney in civil liberties cases. He was defense counsel in the Scopes Trial and in the Sacco-Vanzetti Case.

Hazael fl. 840 BC. King of Damascus who, according to biblical accounts, killed Benhadad and succeeded him. He later conquered Israel and Judah.

Hébert, Jacques René 1755–94. French journalist and revolutionary. A Jacobin and a leader of the sansculottes after his political newspaper became popular with the lower classes, he was involved in the storming of Tuileries Palace (1792) and the overthrow of the monarchy. Soon after he became a member of the Commune of Paris, and was arrested (May, 1793) for aiding the radical movement to oust the (moderate) Girondists from the National Convention. His sansculotte supporters won his release soon after, however, and in June, 1793 Hébert was involved in the riot by working-class radicals that forced the expulsion of Girondists from the National Convention. With the Jacobins now in power, Hébert attempted to force the revolution into ever more extreme measures through his control of the sansculottes, who had forced (Sept., 1793) institution of the Reign of Terror. Hébert, with P. Chaumette, was a leader in the radical de-Christianization program and establishment of the Cult of Reason (q.v.). He was opposed (from mid-1793) by G. Danton and Robespierre, and in Mar., 1794 Hébert was arrested and guillotined along with other Hébertists.

Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich 1770–1831. German idealistic philosopher, one of the most influential 19th-cent. thinkers. He was a professor at Jena, Heidelberg, and, from 1818, at Berlin. Hegel held ultimate reality to be absolute spirit or mind, and hence held that "whatever is rational is real and whatever is real is rational." All things tend to the complete and perfect design of mind by a logical process which Hegel called the "dialectic." In this process an original tendency, or "thesis," gives rise to its opposite tendency, an "antithesis." Both are then resolved into a higher unity, a "synthesis." Hegel analyzed all reality in terms of this dialectic, and it became a favorite tool of subsequent philosophers. K. Marx and F. Engels rejected Hegel's idealism in favor of materialism but nevertheless based Marxism (q.v.) on Hegelian dialectic. Many other philosophers retained Hegel's idealism, however. Hegel's philosophy is set forth in such works as Phenomenology of Mind and, especially, Encyclopedia of the Philosophical Sciences. Hegel's thought was sometimes used by disciples to support a philosophy of extreme German nationalism.

hegira ⟨hejira⟩ Name for Muhammad's forced departure (622) from Mecca and journey to Medina, a pivotal event in the history of Islam. Under a system developed by Omar, 2d caliph, all events of the Muslim era are dated from the beginning of the lunar year (July 16, 622) in which the hegira occurred. Muhammad was driven from Mecca for opposing the local religion (polytheistic) and, once in Medina, established himself in that city. (See also Muhammad.)

Henrietta Maria 1609–69. French wife (m. 1625) of King Charles I of England, and daughter of French King Henry IV and Marie de Médicis. Both her Roman Catholic faith and intrigues with foreign governments on her husband's behalf were factors in the outbreak of the English Civil War.

Henry I ⟨Henry the Fowler⟩ 876?–936. German king (919–936), successor to Conrad I and founder of the Saxon line. He added Lotharingia (Lorraine) to the German kingdom (925), put an end to Magyar raids, and reasserted the authority of the monarchy.

Henry I 1008–1060. Capetian king of France (1031–60). He put down various rebellions and later warred unsuccessfully against William, duke of Normandy.

Henry I ⟨Henry Beauclerc⟩ 1068–1135. King of England (1100–35), successor to his brother, William II. Henry obtained the crown while his older brother, Robert, duke of Normandy, was away on crusade. Henry subsequently defended the crown against an invasion (1101) of England by Robert and later took Normandy from Robert (1106). As king, Henry became embroiled in the investiture controversy (q.v.) with St. Anselm, and a compromise was reached (1107). Henry's efforts to arrange the succession of his daughter, Matilda, resulted in a civil war during the reign of his successor, Stephen.

Henry II 973–1024. Holy Roman Emperor (1014–24) and German king (1002–24). The last Saxon emperor, he recaptured most of the German land taken by Polish king Boleslaus I and extended his influence throughout Italy. He was canonized (1146).

Henry II 1133–89. King of England (1154–89), successor to King Stephen. The grandson of Henry I, son of Matilda and husband of Eleanor of Aquitaine, Henry founded the Plantagenet line. He restored order to strife-torn England, reformed its laws, and established the supremacy of royal courts over local justices. He defined church-state relations with the Constitutions of Clarendon, but his arguments with Thomas à Becket led indirectly to the latter's murder. Henry consolidated English holdings in northern England, Ireland, and Scotland. He was the father of Richard I and John I.

Henry II ⟨Henry of Trastamara⟩ 1333?–79. King of Castile and Leon (1369–79). The illegitimate son of Alfonso XI, he fought his half-brother Peter the Cruel for the throne, and ultimately killed Peter (1369). Henry supported the French in the Hundred Years' War.

Henry II 1519–59. King of France (1547–59), son of and successor to Francis I. Regarded as a weak ruler, he instituted repressive measures against Protestants, added Calais to French domains (1558), and negotiated an end to the Italian Wars (q.v.).

Henry III ⟨Henry the Black⟩ 1017–56. German king and Holy Roman Emperor (1046–56), son and successor of Conrad II. His reign marked the height of the Holy Roman emperor's power. His efforts to reform the church, however, did not succeed.

Henry III 1551–89. French king (1574–89), successor to his brother Charles IX. As duke of Anjou, he aided his mother Catherine de Médicis in planning the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre (1572). His reign was marked by the Wars of Religion that raged in France between the Catholics and Huguenots, and by the War of the Three Henrys (1585–89).

Henry IV 1050–1106. Holy Roman Emperor (1056–1106), successor to his father, Henry III. His reign was marked by a long and unsuccessful struggle with the pope over lay investiture On gaining his majority (1065), Henry moved to restore authority of the crown in the duchies (notably Saxony). His struggle with the church began (1075) when he appointed a number of bishops. Condemned by Pope Gregory VII for the action, Henry declared the pope deposed (1076), only to be himself declared deposed by the pope. Faced with a rebellion against the crown, Henry was forced to submit to the pope and was absolved after doing penance at Canossa (Jan., 1077). However, the German nobles elected Rudolf of Swabia as antiking and a civil war ensued (1077–80), from which Henry emerged victorious. Gregory in the meantime again deposed Henry, who in turn made Clement III antipope. Henry then invaded Italy

(1081–83) and drove Gregory into exile, where he died. The reforming popes who succeeded Gregory supported revolts against Henry (from 1093). In one, Henry was entrapped (1105) by his rebellious son (later Henry V), but he escaped and died the next year. (See also Investiture Controversy.)

Henry IV ⟨Henry of Bolingbroke⟩ ⟨Henry of Lancaster⟩ 1367–1413. English king (1399–1413), a son of John of Gaunt and the first of three kings of the House of Lancaster. He led a successful rebellion against King Richard II (1399), after which he claimed the crown for himself. His reign was marked by rebellions, including those in Wales and Scotland, and the crown's worsening financial troubles.

Henry IV 1553–1610. First Bourbon king of France (1589–1610), successor to Henry III. His reign marked the end of the Wars of Religion (1562–98). Henry was raised a Protestant and, as Henry of Navarre, became nominal leader of the Protestants (Huguenots) in the Wars of Religion after 1569. His subsequent marriage (1572) to Margaret of Valois, sister of Catholic King Charles IX, during a brief peace in the wars nearly proved disastrous. The marriage was opposed by both sides and only days afterward there occurred the Massacre of Saint Bartholomew's Day (q.v.) against Protestants. Henry, who thereupon renounced Protestantism to prevent his own death, was confined at Charles's court (1572–76) until he could effect an escape. Afterward he resumed command of Protestant forces and, in 1584, he became heir to the French throne (by the accession of Henry III and death of his heir). However, the Catholic League (q.v.) bitterly opposed the possible accession of a Protestant, and provoked the War of the Three Henrys (q.v.). Henry was successful in this war and, in 1589, became king by the death of Henry III. The Catholic League warred against him, however, and by its alliance with Spain ultimately forced Henry to once again embrace Catholicism (1593). With that, opposition to Henry began to dissolve and he entered Paris in 1594. He then instituted a policy of reconciliation that resulted (1598) in the Edict of Nantes (q.v.), establishing religious toleration. Henry's subsequent reign was marked by a period of general stability and rebuilding.

Henry V 1081–1125. Holy Roman Emperor (1106–25), successor to his father, Henry IV, and last of the Salian dynasty. After leading a near-successful revolt against his father, Henry succeeded him and began to consolidate his power in the empire. But he soon fell out with Pope Paschal II over the investiture controversy (q.v.), which had plagued his father's reign. In 1111 he captured pope and cardinals at Rome and thereby forced the pope to grant him the right of investiture. The struggle over investiture continued, however, and when Henry lost the support of his bishops, as well as the nobles, he was forced to accept (1122) a compromise measure, the Concordat of Worms (q.v.).

Henry V 1387–1422. English king (1413–22). Allying England with the Burgundians, Henry reopened the Hundred Years' War and led the English to victory in the Battle of Agincourt (1415). He conquered Normandy and Rouen and concluded the Treaty of Troyes (1420), by which he agreed to marry Catherine of Valois, daughter of French king Charles VI. Charles acknowledged him rightful heir to the French throne.

Henry VI 1421–71. King of England (1422–61, 1470–71), the last Lancastrian king of England. Henry, while still an infant, succeeded his father Henry V as king of England and his maternal grandfather Charles VI as king of France. Completely unfit to rule, he lost all English territories in France except for Calais. A period of insanity (1453–54) led to the appointment of Richard, duke of York, as lord protector, and his recovery led to the long struggle for the throne between the houses of York and Lancaster, the Wars of the Roses (q.v.). Richard succeeded in defeating Henry and imprisoning him, and in being named heir apparent to the throne (1460). Richard was killed soon after and his son claimed the throne as Edward IV. Henry fled to Scotland but was restored briefly (1470–71). Captured by Edward's forces, he was imprisoned in the Tower of London, where he was murdered.

Henry VII ⟨orig. Henry Tudor⟩ 1457–1509. English king (1485–1509), founder of the Tudor dynasty, and successor to Richard III. During the period of civil war called the Wars of the Roses, Henry went into exile (1471) in Brittany. The succession (1483) of the unpopular Yorkist, Richard III, made Henry (of the House of Lancaster) a leading contender for the throne. Henry landed in England (1485), defeated Richard at Bosworth Field, and was crowned (1486). By his marriage (1486) to Edward IV's daughter, Elizabeth, he united the houses of York and Lancaster and founded the Tudor line. This also ended the Wars of the Roses. Thereafter Henry foiled Yorkist plots by L. Simnel and P. Warbeck and, despite several attempts at rebellion, generally restored peace after the civil wars. His reign saw the beginnings of English overseas exploration and institution of Poyning's Law (1495).

Henry VIII 1491–1547. English king (1509–47), successor to his father, Henry VII. The early years of Henry's reign were marked by participation with the Holy League (from 1511) in war against France and by the defeat of invading Scottish armies at the Battle of Flodden (1513). When relations with Holy Roman Emperor Charles V soured, Henry briefly attempted reconciliation with the French at the Field of Cloth of Gold (q.v.). But by 1522 Henry was back at war with France. In the meantime, Henry received (1521) the title "Defender of the Faith" from Pope Leo X for his book, written in answer to M. Luther and the emerging Protestant movement. By 1529, however, Henry fell afoul of the church through his efforts to divorce his first wife, Catherine of Aragon. The struggle continued for some years and included Henry's secret marriage to his new love, A. Boleyn (1533), Henry's excommunication (1534), and finally passage of the Act of Supremacy (q.v.), creating the Church of England. In subsequent years, Henry dealt ruthlessly with any opposition, Catholic or Protestant, to his position as supreme head of the church in England. Events of this period included the beheading of his former minister, Sir T. More, and many others, confiscation of monastery lands, suppression of the Pilgrimage of Grace (q.v.), and passage of the Act of Six Articles (q.v.). Events of Henry's later reign included the continuing struggle with the French, a defeat of Scottish forces that resulted in the death of King James V, and a series of new wives that brought the total to six by the time of his death. Edward VI, Elizabeth I, and Mary Tudor were his children.

Henry, Joseph 1797–1878. American physicist. He built the first electric motor (1829) and discovered electrical induction independently of M. Faraday. The henry, the electrical unit of inductance, is named for him.

Henry, O. ⟨William Sydney Porter⟩ 1862–1910. American short-story writer whose stories are noted for their use of irony and surprise endings.

Henry, Patrick 1736–99. American Revolutionary War patriot and orator famous for the words "Give me liberty or give me death," uttered in a speech (Mar., 1775), urging colonists to prepare defenses. A delegate to the Continental Congress (1774–76) and twice governor of Virginia (1776–79, 1784–86), he was an ardent supporter of individual liberties. He played a major role in winning passage of the Bill of Rights.

The commander of German armies during WW I, he emerged as a national hero despite Germany's defeat. In failing health by 1933, he appointed A. Hitler as his chancellor and thus opened the way for Hitler's takeover of the German government.

Hindi Indo-Aryan language. A written variation of Hindustani, Hindi is the official language of India and is spoken by more than 150 million people. It has an extensive literature.

Hinduism Religion practiced by the majority of the people of India. Hinduism in its modern form evolved in stages from ancient Vedism (*c*1500 BC) to Brahmanism, and finally (*c*2d cent. BC) to early Hinduism. During its long development Hinduism has absorbed doctrines, rites, and practices from numerous other religions and sects and has spawned a great number of Hindu sects. Generally, however, Hinduism is characterized by acceptance of the Vedas (sacred texts), by adherence to the caste system (q.v.), by belief in cycles of life, death, and rebirth of the individual, and by the promise of escape from this cycle through enlightenment. Key dates in the development of Hinduism include:

*c*2000–1000 BC Harappa civilization flourished in Indus Valley; developed early religious traditions later incorporated into Vedism, Brahmanism, and ultimately Hinduism.

*c*1500 BC Aryans invaded India from region of Iran; brought new elements to traditional Indian religion and began Vedic period (1500–700 BC).

*c*900 BC Rig-Veda, compiled over a long period, reached its final form; became a sacred Hindu text.

*c*800–500 BC Upanishads written over extended period; these philosophic texts advanced concepts of reincarnation and karma.

*c*700–*c*500 BC Rise of Brahmanism; priestly class of Brahmins gained power; promoted elaborate rituals, philosophical speculations, and eventually the caste system.

*c*600–100 BC Sutras written; established rigid order of conduct and religious ritual and divided society into four classes; caste system arose during this period.

*c*500 BC Buddhism, Jainism, and various sects emerged to challenge traditional Brahmanism, which had lost its hold on the populace; in reaction, elements of Brahmanism, Jainism, and Buddhism were merged; concept of four stages of life introduced during this period.

*c*500 BC–AD *c*100 Mahabharata and Ramayana, great Hindu epics, written (exact dates unknown); period marked beginning of Hinduism as distinct from earlier Brahmanism.

3D–2D CENT. BC Mauryan empire flourished; Buddhism spread at the expense of Brahmanism.

2D CENT. BC Beginnings of Hinduism; rise of sects revering Vishnu and Shiva (Siva) as devotional deities.

4TH CENT. AD Hinduism began period of growth with rise of Gupta empire.

4TH–8TH CENTS. AD Puranas, verse texts dedicated to devotion of individual deities, written during Gupta rule.

7TH–11TH CENTS. Growth of sects devoted to Shiva and Vishnu (devotional Hinduism) contributed to decline of Buddhism in India.

*c*788–*c*820 Sankara, considered leading Hindu philosopher, lived; his teachings formed basis of modern Hinduism.

FROM *c*12TH CENT. Muslim incursions into India brought new Islamic influence to region; Islam incorporated superficially into Hinduism, but Hindu philosophy greatly influenced development of Islam in India.

*c*13TH–15TH CENTS. Bhakti, movement marked by emotional devotion to a personal deity, arose.

19TH CENT. Western influence on Hinduism began as British East India Company took control of India.

1897 Ramakrishna Mission founded by Vivekananda, a disciple of Ramakrishna; mission advanced a simplified form of Hinduism that encouraged social reform and denied the caste system.

1869–1948 M. Gandhi lived; merged traditional Hindu concepts and values into rising Indian nationalist movement; became the leading symbol of Hindu religion in the 20th cent.

1947 India became independent; government of India instituted numerous reforms in subsequent years, among them the outlawing of the caste system.

Hindustan Term meaning "land of the Hindus" and sometimes used to refer to all of India. More often, however, it means the northern part of India. "The Deccan" refers to the southern portion of India.

Hipparchos See Hipparchus

Hipparchus ⟨Hipparchos⟩ fl. 2d cent. BC. Important early Greek astronomer. He is believed to have compiled the first star catalogue and discovered subtle changes in the equinoxes caused by the wobble in the earth's rotation.

Hippias 6th–5th cent. BC. Tyrant of Athens (527–510 BC). After the murder (514 BC) of his brother Hipparchus by Harmodius and Aristogiton, Hippias became an even more repressive ruler. He was overthrown (510 BC) by the Alcmaeonidae and exiled to Persia.

hippies Young nonconformists of the youth counterculture in the US during the 1960s. They claimed to be searching for a nonmaterialistic way of life and experimented with unconventional dress and behavior to set themselves apart from the American middle class. Characteristic of the hippie lifestyle were worn and flamboyant clothing, long hair, use of marijuana and other drugs, and belief in free love and communal living.

Hippocrates *c*460–*c*370 BC. Greek physician, frequently called the "father of medicine." Though little is known of his life, Hippocrates appears to have been a medical writer and teacher of great scientific skill and high moral standards. The Hippocratic Oath, still administered to all new physicians, reflects his medical ethics.

Hippodamus ⟨Hippodamus of Miletus⟩ fl. 5th cent. BC. Greek architect. He planned Pireaus and the city of Rhodes.

Hiram ⟨Huram⟩ 989?–936 BC. Phoenician king of Tyre. A friend of David and Solomon, he helped with the construction of the Temple at Jerusalem.

Hirohito 1901–. Emperor of Japan since 1926, the son and successor to Taisho. His reign was marked by wars against China from the 1930s and Japan's participation in WW II. He accepted unconditional surrender to the US (1945) and a new constitution making him constitutional monarch (1946).

Hiroshima Japanese city, the target of the first atomic bomb (Aug. 6, 1945). The bombing virtually destroyed the city, hastened the end of WW II, and marked the beginning of the age of nuclear warfare.

Hiss, Alger 1904–. US State Department official accused of spying for the Russians. Named by former Communist party member Whittaker Chambers (1901–61) as a conspirator in a Russian spy ring, Hiss was tried and convicted for perjury (1950). R. Nixon figured prominently in the Hiss investigation and the sensational trial was exploited by Senator J. McCarthy.

historiography The study of methods of historical investigation and of writing history.

Hitchcock, Alfred Joseph 1899–1980. British-American film director, famous for such suspense thrillers as North by Northwest, Psycho, and The Birds.

Hitler, Adolf 1889–1945. Austrian-born German dictator (1933–45) and founder of the National Socialist party (Nazis). Hitler's perverse schemes for German world-domination and creation of an ethnically pure "master race" resulted in the outbreak of WW II and the extermination of millions of Jews and other minority groups. A failed artist, Hitler served in WW I and later joined (1919) the German Workers' Party in Bavaria, Germany. He reorganized it (1921) into the National Socialist party (q.v.) and turned it into a nationalistic, paramilitary group. He failed (1923) in his attempt to seize power in Bavaria (Munich Beer Hall Putsch) and, during his short term in prison, started writing Mein Kampf (q.v.), in which he outlined his plans for the Nazi party. The party grew rapidly during the Great Depression, largely because of Hitler's ability to play on hatred of the Jews and Communists in the name of German nationalism. The party's strength in the Reichstag increased greatly as a result, though Hitler lost the 1932 presidential election to P. von Hindenburg. Hindenburg named Hitler (Jan. 30, 1933) as his chancellor, however, and Hitler soon after began to consolidate his power. He succeeded in gaining emergency powers, and in banning the Communists, by blaming the Reichstag Fire (q.v.) on them. He then won passage of the Enabling Act (Mar. 23, 1933), which established the Third Reich (q.v.). Following Hindenburg's death (1934), Hitler became sole ruler of Germany and embarked on his program of expanding German power. He occupied the Rhineland (1936), annexed Austria (1938), occupied Czechoslovakia (1939), and invaded Poland (1939). The last action provoked the outbreak of WW II (q.v.). Despite his remarkable early successes, the tide of the war was clearly against him by 1944. With the Russians entering Berlin the following year, he committed suicide (Apr. 30, 1945) with his wife and former mistress, E. Braun.

Hitotsubashi See Tokugawa Keiki

Hittite Empire Once powerful kingdom in Asia Minor (*c*1600–*c*1200 BC). The Hittites are believed to have discovered the technique of tempering iron and thus figure in the beginnings of the Iron Age (q.v.). The Hittite peoples first appeared (*c*1800 BC) in what is now central Turkey in a migration from the East. They established the Old Kingdom (1600–1400 BC) and during this period Hittite rulers gradually expanded their domains throughout Turkey and into northern Syria. The Hittite ruler Mursilis I even attacked Babylon (*c*1590) and thereby ended the rule of the Amorite kings. The empire reached its greatest power (especially under Suppiluliumas I, [*c*1380–*c*1340]) during the New Kingdom (1400–1200), when it dominated Asia Minor. Toward the end of this period, Hittites under Muwatallis (*c*1306–*c*1282) engaged the Egyptians for control of Syria. This resulted in the famous Battle of Kadesh (1288) and a treaty. Sometime around 1200 BC invasions by Phrygian, Thracian, and Assyrian peoples caused the sudden collapse of the Hittite empire. By *c*700 BC the Assyrians had absorbed the last vestiges of the Hittite empire.

Hoban, James *c*1762–1831. Irish-American architect. He designed and built the White House and was a supervisor in the construction of the Capitol building.

Hobbes, Thomas 1588–1679. British philosopher. A theorist in both natural and political philosophy, he was a friend of such notables as Galileo and B. Jonson. He formulated a mechanistic view of human actions, and his writings on free will and the social contract had an enormous influence on the development of political philosophy. His works include Human Nature and Leviathan.

Hobkirk's Hill, Battle of Battle of the American Revolution (Apr. 25, 1781), in which a force of 900 British troops defeated some 1500 Americans under Col. N. Greene, near Camden, South Carolina.

Ho Chi Minh ⟨pseud. of Nguyen That Thanh⟩ 1890?–1969. Vietnamese Communist leader, one of the foremost Communists of the 20th cent. He left Vietnam in 1911 and until WW II stayed variously in the US, Britain, France, China, and the USSR. He founded the Indochinese Communist party (1930) and was sought by the French soon thereafter as a leader of revolutionary Vietnamese nationalists. During WW II he organized the Viet Minh movement for Vietnamese independence and his guerrilla units fought the Japanese. After the war he proclaimed (1945) Vietnam a republic, of which he became president (1945–54). He was soon embroiled in the Indochina War (1946–54) and the republic was divided into South and North Vietnam. President of the northern sector (1954–69), he organized the National Liberation Front and the Vietcong guerrilla armies, which fought in the south during the protracted Vietnam War (1960–75).

Ho Chi Minh Trail Network of jungle and mountain trails connecting North Vietnam with South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia during the Vietnam War. Much of the network came into use from WW II on, in fighting against the Japanese, French, and the Americans and South Vietnamese. Neither land assaults nor strategic bombing of segments (from 1965) succeeded in preventing the use of the trail to supply the North Vietnamese-Vietcong war effort.

Hofer, Andreas 1767–1810. Austrian patriot. Attempting to keep his native Tyrol under Austrian rule, he led a peasant rebellion that withstood Bavarian and French forces from 1809 to 1810.

Hoffmann, Ernest Theodor Amadeus 1776–1882. German author and composer, known best for his Gothic horror stories.

Hofmannsthal, Hugo von 1874–1929. Austrian poet and dramatist, famous for his librettos to R. Strauss operas, including Der Rosenkavalier and Electra.

Hogarth, William 1697–1764. English painter and engraver. He is known best for "morality pictures," of which Marriage à la Mode is considered his masterpiece.

Hohenheim, Theophrastus Bombastus von See Paracelsus

Hohenlinden, Battle of Battle (Dec. 3, 1800) of the French Revolutionary Wars, at Hohenlinden, southern Germany. Some 110,000 French troops led by J. Moreau defeated an Austrian force of 130,000 under Archduke John, brother of Holy Roman Emperor Francis II. The last major engagement of the War of the Second Coalition, it left only England in opposition to Napoleon.

Hohenstaufen Family of German nobles and rulers of the Holy Roman Empire (1138–1254). The family originated in the 11th cent. with a Swabian count, Frederick (d. 1105). The first Hohenstaufen emperor was Conrad III, crowned 1138. The Hohenstaufen rulers were opposed by the Guelphs and, by their involvement in Italy, eventually brought about the downfall of the family. The family became extinct by the death (1254) of Conrad IV, the execution of Conradin (1268), and the execution of Frederick's illegitimate son, Enzio (1272).

Rulers of the Holy Roman Empire

Conrad III	(king of the Germans, 1138–52)
Frederick I Barbarossa	(emperor, 1155–90)
Henry VI	(emperor, 1191–97)
Philip of Swabia	(king of the Germans, 1198–1208)

Frederick II	(emperor, 1220–50)
Conrad IV	(king of the Germans, 1250–54)

Hohenzollern Family of German nobles that provided rulers of Prussia (1415–1871), brought about a united Germany (1871–1918), and created a line of Romanian kings (1866–1947). The family was begun by the 11th-cent. counts of Zollern. Following the death of Frederick of Hohenzollern (*c*1200), the family split into Franconian and Swabian lines. The fortunes of the Franconian line grew around control of Brandenburg, of which Frederick I became elector (1417). Thereafter the line increased its power and domains and in 1701 Frederick I was crowned king of the new kingdom of Prussia. After the unification of Germany (1871), the Franconian rulers ruled as German kaisers until establishment of the Weimar Republic (1918). The Swabian line, later split into the Hohenzollern-Hechingen and Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen lines. The latter division produced princes and then kings of Romania (1866–1947).

Holland Former county of the Holy Roman Empire that is now divided into two provinces of The Netherlands. Established in 1018, it passed to the house of Wittelsbach (14th cent.) and then to Burgundy (1433). Holland was a leader in commerce, shipbuilding, and the cloth industry in the 16th cent. and led in the fight for Dutch independence.

Hollywood Suburb of Los Angeles, California, and symbolic center of the US movie industry. Hollywood was incorporated in 1903 and the first films were shot there in 1910–11. From the 1920s to 1940s, during the golden age of film, it became the home of movie studios and playground for the stars who worked in them. Major studios began closing after the 1940s, and Hollywood has since become a center for production of radio and television shows.

Holmes, John Haynes 1879–1964. American clergyman and writer. He championed many social causes and was a founder of both the American Civil Liberties Union and National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Sr. 1809–94. American poet and writer and father of O.W. Holmes, Jr. He is known best for his poems Old Ironsides and The Chambered Nautilus and his series of prose works called the "Breakfast-Table" sketches.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Jr. 1841–1935. American jurist and US Supreme Court associate justice (1902–32). Appointed to the court by T. Roosevelt, he became known as the "Great Dissenter" for his dissenting opinions in cases in which the court struck down new laws passed by Congress. Despite his advocacy of such judicial restraint, he developed the "clear and present danger" concept in regard to restrictions on freedom of speech.

Holocaust Name given to the Nazis' systematic attempt to exterminate European Jews (and others) during WW II. A. Hitler established the first concentration camps in Germany soon after taking power in 1933. Originally intended for Hitler's political opponents, they were soon after used to imprison Jews and other groups. After WW II broke out, Hitler began his notorious "final solution" and some of these camps (Dachau, Auschwitz, Buchenwald, and Treblinka among them) became extermination centers. Some 6 million Jews and many others, including other ethnic groups, nationalities, and political opponents, were murdered in these centers. It is estimated that in all the Nazi camps (including POW camps) some 18 to 26 million persons died.

Holowczyn, Battle of Battle (July 4, 1708) in the Northern War at Holowczyn, Russia. The Swedish army under Charles XII defeated the Russian army under Gen. Aleksandr Menshikov during the Swedish invasion of Russia. The Russian scorched-earth policy, however, forced Charles to abandon his march east and move south to the Ukraine.

Holst, Gustav 1874–1934. English composer. He was inspired by such European composers as R. Strauss and I. Stravinsky. His works include the orchestral suite The Planets.

Holy Alliance League formed (Sept. 26, 1815) by Russian czar Alexander I, Austrian king Francis I, and Prussian king Frederick William III. The league was largely an agreement in which the monarchs swore to uphold Christian principles in their kingdoms. A part of the general European realignment after the fall of Napoleon's empire, it was eventually joined by all Christian European rulers except British king George IV. The alliance itself had little direct impact, but it became a symbol of conservative reactionary policies by which monarchs maintained social order and which characterized European politics until the mid-19th cent.

Holy Ghost ⟨Holy Spirit⟩ Third person of the Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) in Christian doctrine. At the First Council of Constantinople (AD 381), the Holy Ghost was held to be a distinct entity, coequal with the Father and the Son.

Holy Grail Legendary cup used by Jesus at the Last Supper. Saved by Joseph of Arimathea after Jesus' crucifixion, it was said to have been taken to Britain, where it was subsequently lost. As the object of religious quests, it is a central theme of the Arthurian Legend (q.v.).

Holy Land Name applied to the middle, eastern region of Palestine. It is so called because of its historical associations with the Christian, Islamic, and Jewish religions.

Holy League 1. Holy League of 1495 formed to repel an invasion (1494) of Italy by French king Charles VIII. Joined by Pope Alexander VI, Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian I, Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, and the cities of Venice and Milan, the league forced Charles to retreat (1496) from Naples. 2. Holy League of 1511 formed to drive French king Louis VII out of Italy during the Italian Wars. It was joined by Pope Julius II, English king Henry VIII, Spanish king Ferdinand V, and the city of Venice, and succeeded in expelling (1512) the French from Milan. The French persisted, however, and the allies eventually made separate peace agreements with France. 3. Holy League of 1526 formed to force Holy Roman Emperor Charles V out of Italy. It was joined by Pope Clement VII, French king Francis I, and the cities of Venice and Milan, and was defeated by Charles. 4. Holy League of 1538 formed to oppose the Schmalkaldic League. It was joined by Holy Roman Emperor Charles V and other German Catholic noblemen. 5. Holy League of 1576 (Catholic League) formed to oppose Protestantism in France during the Wars of Religion. It was first proclaimed by Henri, 3d duc de Guise, in protest to concessions granted the Protestants by King Henry III. Disbanded by Henry after a Protestant uprising, it was re-formed (1585) to oppose Protestant heir to the throne, Henry IV. During the War of the Three Henrys the league controlled France's cities, and, on Henry III's assassination (1589), Henry IV was forced to accept Catholicism (1593) to end the league's resistance.

Holy Roman Empire. Political entity in central Europe from the 10th to 19th cents., which gave rise to the modern states of Germany and Austria. Its history is complex and begins with the Carolingian Empire of Charlemagne. Charlemagne's empire was (from 800) considered the successor state to the Western Roman Empire (defunct since 476) and embraced much of Europe. But it was divided in 843 and central authority soon died out in the two major divisions, the eastern kingdom (roughly, modern Germany) and the western kingdom (roughly, modern France). Otto I restored control in the east and in 962 was crowned emperor of the Romans by the pope. The Holy Roman Empire was thus founded as the reconstituted Western Roman Empire. Otto's coronation also marked the beginning of the often troubled alliance between the emperors and the Roman Catholic popes. In subsequent centuries the empire was torn by struggles with the popes and by the rising power of the princes. In the 13th cent.

the Holy Roman emperors gave up their claims to control Italy and in the 14th cent. they lost effective control over the princely states within the empire. They had direct rule over only their personal domains, though in the case of the Hapsburg emperors (ruled from the 15th cent.) this amounted to considerable territory. The Protestant Reformation, wars with the Ottoman Turks and with France further weakened the empire in the next centuries. Its final collapse was brought on by the French Revolutionary Wars at the end of the 18th cent. (For subsequent history of the region, see Germany, Austria; also Reformation.) Key events in the history of the Holy Roman Empire include:

771–814 Charlemagne reigned as king of the Franks; asserted Frankish control in Italy and expanded the Carolingian Empire eastward, subduing the German tribes.

800 Charlemagne crowned emperor by Pope Leo III; this was taken as revival of the Western Roman Empire, which had collapsed in 476.

814–840 Louis I (the Pious) reigned over the empire; his heirs began struggle that would lead to division of empire.

840–855 Lothair I reigned as emperor; though he retained title of emperor, the Carolingian Empire was divided soon after his accession.

843 Treaty of Verdun; Carolingian Empire divided; Louis the German gained the East Frankish Empire, Charles the Bald gained the West Frankish kingdom, and Lothair received the imperial title (with no sovereignty over other kingdoms), Italy, and a narrow middle section of the Carolingian domains (Lotharingia).

843–876 Louis the German reigned over the East Frankish kingdom (roughly modern Germany).

855–875 Imperial crown passed to Louis II, son of Lothair I; he inherited direct control over Italy only.

870 Treaty of Mersen; Louis the German and Charles the Bald divided the middle kingdom (except Italy), thus bringing East and West Frankish kingdoms to a common border.

875–877 Imperial crown passed to the West Frankish king, Charles II (the Bald), on the death of Louis II.

876 Louis the German died; his East Frankish kingdom divided among his heirs.

881–887 Charles III (the Fat) reigned as imperial emperor, succeeding after period of strife; reunited east under his rule (882).

884–887 Charles III (the Fat) next succeeded (884) to West Frankish throne; Carolingian Empire thus briefly reunited; Charles unable to repulse invasion by Norsemen; deposed in east and west.

887 Arnulf deposed Charles III in the east.

887–899 Arnulf reigned as king of the East Franks; repulsed invasions by Norsemen and Slavs.

896–899 Arnulf reigned as emperor; crowned after pacifying Italy (895) at the pope's request; was last of the Carolingian line of emperors, and no emperor was crowned again until 962.

899–911 Louis the Child reigned as king of the East Frankish kingdom; Magyar raids (from 900) broke down central authority and increased power of feudal lords.

911–918 Conrad I reigned as elected king of east; continuation of Magyar raids, and feuds and rebellions by feudal lords nearly caused complete breakup of eastern kingdom; Lorraine became part of western kingdom.

919–936 Henry I (the Fowler) reigned as elected king of the eastern kingdom; as duke of Saxony he had been ar archfoe of the king; but during his reign he reestablished royal authority in the east; regained Lorraine and decisively defeated the Magyars (933).

936–973 Otto I reigned as German king; completed reestablishment of central authority; regarded as first emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (after 962).

951 First invasion of Italy by Otto; he assumed the title of King of the Lombards.

955 Otto I decisively defeated the Magyars at the Battle of Lechfeld.

960 Otto I subdued the Slavs.

961 Second invasion of Italy by Otto I; he quickly defeated Italian king Berengar II at the request of Pope John XII.

962 Otto crowned emperor by the grateful pope; this marked the beginning of the Holy Roman Empire and the second revival of the Western Roman Empire.

962 Privilegium Ottonianum, agreement concluded (Feb. 13) between Otto and the pope to regulate relations between them; marked the beginning of the long, often troubled relationship between Holy Roman emperors and the popes.

963 Pope John deposed by Otto; Leo VIII installed in his place.

965 John XIII named pope by Otto after Leo VIII died; Romans refused to accept him.

966–972 Otto invaded Italy a third time; subdued the Romans and had some successes against the Byzantines in southern Italy.

973–983 Otto II reigned; imperial control in Italy weakened; Danes revolted in the north and Slavs launched invasions of the empire.

974–978 Revolt by Bavaria (led by Henry the Wrangler); Otto ultimately defeated Henry.

980 Otto defeated French king Lothair, who was attempting to take the duchy of Lorraine.

981–982 Campaign by Otto against Arabs in southern Italy failed.

983–1002 Otto III reigned; installed two popes (Gregory V and Sylvester II) and tried to make Rome capital of the empire; driven out by rebellious Romans in 1001.

1002–24 Henry II reigned as last of the Saxon emperors; crowned 1014; warred against king Boleslaus of Poland and reasserted control over Italy (1021–22).

1024–39 Conrad II reigned as first of the Salian rulers; elected German king after the extinction of the Saxon line, he was forced to put down revolts in Germany and Italy; crowned emperor (1027).

1024–1125 Salian dynasty of emperors in power.

1039–56 Henry III reigned; crowned emperor 1046; imperial power at its height; established border with Hungary that remained fixed for centuries; supported the Cluniac Order and failed in his attempt to reform the church.

1046 Synods of Sutri and Rome; Henry reasserted imperial right to nominate popes and named Clement II in place of three rivals claiming papacy.

1056–1106 Henry IV reigned, crowned emperor 1084; his reign marked the beginning of the Investiture Controversy and the rise of the power of the popes.

1075–76 Reformer Pope Gregory VII condemned Henry for appointing a number of bishops, thus beginning the Investiture Controversy; Henry deposed the pope (1076), while the pope deposed Henry.

1077 Henry forced to submit to the pope and do penance at Canossa to avoid revolt within the empire.

1077–80 Civil war within the empire; Henry victorious against the antiking Rudolf of Swabia.

1081–84 Henry marched against Rome as struggle with Pope Gregory was renewed; crowned emperor by antipope Clement III, whom he installed; Normans, allies of pope, drove Henry out of Rome.

1106–25 Henry V reigned; crowned emperor 1111; he accepted the Concordat of Worms (1122), which ended the Investiture Controversy but not the rivalry between popes and the imperial emperors.

1125–37 Lothair II reigned; elected king (with support of clergy) over rival claimant with hereditary ties to royal line.

1125–35 Civil war between the Welfs (Lothair's supporters) and Waiblingers (supports of the Hohenstaufen family, which claimed the throne on the basis of heredity); the war, won by Lothair, marked the beginning of the long struggle between these factions for control of the throne.

1133 Lothair II crowned emperor after invading Italy (1132–33) to support Pope Innocent II against a rival.

1138–52 Conrad III reigned as first king of the Hohenstaufen line; elected king by German nobles, he was never crowned emperor.

1138–42 Civil war between Conrad and the Welfs; defeated Welfs agreed to peace, but rivalry between Welf and Waiblinger factions continued throughout century.

1147–49 Conrad joined in the Second Crusade; meanwhile the struggle with the Welfs spread disorder throughout the German domains.

1152–90 Frederick I Barbarossa reigned; crowned emperor 1155, he opposed the growing power of the papacy and sought to reimpose imperial control over Italy (launched six invasions of Italy); attempted to check the power of the princes in the empire.

1155 Holy Roman Empire made official name of empire by Frederick.

1156 Austria created as an independent duchy.

1167 Lombard League formed by Lombard cities in northern Italy against Holy Roman Emperor Frederick I.

1189–90 Frederick joined the Third Crusade and died in Asia Minor.

1190 Order of Teutonic Knights formed at Acre during Third Crusade; later became a power in Prussia.

1190–97 Henry VI reigned; crowned emperor 1191; his reign was marked by continuing struggles with the Welfs and by restoration of order in Sicily.

1192–94 English king Richard I held captive by Henry; Richard forced to accept suzerainty of Holy Roman Empire over England and pay a large ransom to obtain his release.

1197–1211 Civil war over succession; Waiblinger Philip of Swabia and Welf Otto IV vied for control; Philip killed (1208) and Otto was deposed after a brief reign.

1212–50 Frederick II reigned; a Hohenstaufen, he opposed the Welfs and continued the struggle with the papacy; imperial control of northern Italy declined.

1214 Battle of Bouvines; Frederick, allied with French king Philip II, defeated the Welf leader Otto IV.

1226 By issuing the Golden Bull of Rimini, Frederick II granted the Teutonic Knights sovereignty over Prussia.

1246 Antiking of Germans named by Pope Innocent IV, who sought to break power of Hohenstaufens and gain control of Italy; warfare in Italy and Germany followed.

1250–54 Conrad IV succeeded his father, but was never crowned emperor; continued struggle with Innocent IV and died as he was about to renew war in Italy.

1254–73 Great Interregnum followed death of Conrad IV; nobles gained power; no recognized German king during this period.

1273–91 Rudolf I reigned as king; he ended the Great Interregnum and founded the Hapsburg line; never crowned emperor; imperial powers declined sharply.

1278 Rudolf defeated Bohemian king Ottocar II and thereby gained core of Hapsburg domains (Austria, Styria, Carniola) that remained in family until the 20th cent.

1279 Papal sovereignty over Papal States recognized by Rudolf; followed recognition of papal sovereignty in southern Italy (1275).

1291 Four Forest Cantons formed league against the Hapsburgs and thus began the struggle for independence of Switzerland.

1292 Adolphe of Nassau elected king of the Germans to prevent crown from becoming hereditary Hapsburg title.

1300s Rise of the Hanseatic League, a league formed by German towns to safeguard and promote commerce as imperial authority declined; league remained powerful until the 15th cent.

1314–47 Louis IV reigned; fought Frederick the Fair (1314–22) for German crown.

1327–30 Louis intervened in Italy, declared emperor by Roman laity (1328).

1347–78 Charles IV reigned; received papal confirmation in 1355 and brought end to long struggle with papacy over Italy.

1348 Black Plague began spreading throughout the empire.

1376–88 First Swabian League formed by German principalities to oppose Charles' increased taxes on cities.

1378–1400 Wenceslaus reigned as king; he was a weak ruler; his reign was marked by warfare between the princes and the imperial cities; deposed in favor of Rupert (ruled 1400–10).

1410–37 Sigismund reigned; was also king of Hungary (1387–1437).

1410 Battle of Tannenberg fought; victory of Polish and Lithuanian forces, who halted eastern advance of Teutonic Knights.

1414 Council of Constance convened at Sigismund's urging; brought Great Schism to an end (1417).

1415 Bohemian religious reformer J. Huss executed for heresy.

1419–34 Hussite Wars, struggle between followers of J. Huss and imperial forces.

1428 Sigismund's campaign failed against the Turks advancing in the east.

1438–39 Albert II reigned; following his election as emperor, the imperial crown became hereditary in the Hapsburg family.

1440–93 Frederick III reigned; last emperor crowned at Rome (1452); obtained Burgundy by marrying his son, Maximilian, to Mary of Burgundy (1477) and thus set stage for great expansion of Hapsburg hereditary domains.

1488–1534 Second Swabian League formed by German principalities.

1493–1519 Maximilian reigned; greatly expanded Hapsburg domains, often at the expense of the empire; attempts to reform administration of empire proved only partly successful as princes sought to maintain their power.

1494–1559 Italian Wars; Maximilian involved the empire in wars there; fought France to regain Burgundian territories in Italy, which he had inherited.

1495 Diet of Worms instituted limited constitutional reforms.

c1498 Aulic Council, emperor's personal council, established by Maximilian I.

1499 Switzerland gained independence from the empire.

1508 Maximilian joined the League of Cambrai in war against Venice, gaining some of its territory.

1513 Maximilian joined Holy League against France.

1516 Hungary and Bohemia added to Hapsburg domains through marriage.

1516 Maximilian's grandson succeeded to the Spanish throne, thus adding Spain and the New World to Hapsburg domains.

1517 Reformation began (Oct.) when M. Luther posted his demands for church reform.

1519–58 Charles V reigned; as king of Spain and Holy Roman Emperor he ruled vast domains but continuing Italian Wars and revolts connected with the Reformation diminished his power.

1521 M. Luther called before imperial Diet of Worms; refused to recant his Protestant teachings.

1522–23 Knight's War, unsuccessful rebellion by knights to ensure ancient privileges against the Reformation.

1524–25 Peasants' War, unsuccessful uprising of peasants and townsmen; denounced by M. Luther and crushed.

1525 Teutonic Knights dissolved by Grand Master Albert of Brandenburg.

1526–29 War with advancing Ottoman Turks, who were successful in Hungary and laid siege to Vienna (1529).

1531 Schmalkaldic League formed by Protestant nobles to oppose the emperor's threats to end Lutheranism by force.

1532 Religious Peace of Nuremberg.

1535 Charles successfully attacked Turkish-held Tunis.

1544–47 Schmalkaldic War against German Protestant powers.

1545–63 Council of Trent; marked beginning of the Counter-Reformation.

1548 Augsburg Interim proclaimed by Diet of Augsburg; Charles V attempted to force a settlement of strife between Catholic and Protestant nobles in the empire.

1555 Peace of Augsburg provided formula for ending conflict between Catholics and Protestants within the empire.

1556 Charles V abdicated Spanish throne to his son Philip.

1556 Charles V abdicated German throne in favor of his brother Ferdinand; Ferdinand subsequently lost control of much of Hungary to the Turks.

1568 Truce concluded with Ottoman Turks by Emperor Maximilian II (reigned 1564–76); emperor agreed to pay tribute to Turks in return for control of part of Hungary.

1576–1612 Rudolf II reigned; Catholic Reformation actively supported, opening way to Thirty Years' War.

1604–06 Hungarians, led by S. Bocksay, revolted against attempts to impose Catholicism in Hungary.

1608–21 Protestant Union formed by Protestant princes to prevent imperial government from reimposing Catholicism.

1612–19 Matthias reigned; failed to ease conflicts between Catholics and Protestants; outbreak of Thirty Years' War.

1618–48 Thirty Years' War; Emperor Ferdinand II (reigned 1619–37) unable to put down revolt by Protestant nobles in Bohemia; war became general European war of religion that seriously weakened the Holy Roman Empire.

1648 Treaty of Wesphalia ending the war; Emperor Ferdinand III (reigned 1637–57) forced to agree to terms that effectively ended central authority of imperial crown; thereafter emperors really controlled only hereditary Hapsburg domains.

1658–1705 Leopold I reigned; empire embroiled in wars.

1672–78 Third Dutch War; Leopold joined coalition against French King Louis XIV.

1682–99 Austro-Turkish War; Ottoman Turks forced to withdraw from almost all of Hungary.

1689–97 War of the Grand Alliance against France.

1701–14 War of the Spanish Succession over claims to the Spanish throne; French Bourbon line succeeded in Spain; Austrian Hapsburgs gained the Austrian Netherlands and Spanish territories in Italy.

1701 Frederick I created the Kingdom of Prussia.

1711–40 Charles VI reigned; tried to ensure succession of his daughter, Maria Theresa, to Hapsburg domains; wars with Turks proved indecisive.

1713 Emperor Charles VI issued the Pragmatic Sanction of 1713 to ensure succession of his daughter, Maria Theresa.

1733–35 War of the Polish Succession.

1740–48 War of the Austrian Succession; Maria Theresa ultimately retained Hapsburg domains and her husband became Holy Roman Emperor Francis I (reigned 1745–65); Prussia, under Frederick II (the Great), emerged as a major power during the war.

1756–63 Seven Years' War; Austrian Hapsburgs failed to regain territories from Prussia while Prussian power increased in Europe.

1765–90 Joseph II reigned; an enlightened despot, he attempted to institute many reforms, but many proved to be short-lived.

1778–79 War of the Bavarian Succession; Joseph thwarted in plan to annex Bavaria to Austria.

1781 Serfdom abolished.

1781 Edict of Toleration issued by Joseph.

1787–92 Austrian participation in the Russo-Turkish War proved fruitless.

1790–92 Leopold II reigned; repealed many of Joseph's reforms.

1792 Declaration of Pillnitz; Leopold joined Prussia in this proclamation against revolutionaries in France.

1792–1806 Francis II reigned as the last emperor of the Holy Roman Empire.

1792–1802 French Revolutionary Wars; Emperor Francis defeated by French.

1801 Treaty of Lunéville, ending wars between the Holy Roman Empire and France; Francis forced to consent to the virtual dissolution of the empire and reorganization of German states.

1804 Francis II became Austrian emperor Francis I.

1804–15 Napoleonic Wars; Austria quickly defeated by Napoleon and forced to consent to the Treaty of Pressburg (1805).

1806 Holy Roman Empire formally dissolved.

Holy Sepulcher Church in Jerusalem built over what are traditionally believed to be the sites of Jesus' crucifixion and tomb. Completed in AD 336, the building was originally a rotunda. It has been destroyed, rebuilt, and remodeled several times. The modern structure dates from 1810.

Holy Spirit See Holy Ghost

holy war A war fought for the advancement or defense of a religion, such as the Crusades, or, in Islam, a Jihad. The Jihad provided the impetus for conquest (of non-believers) that led to the rapid expansion of the Muslim Empire of the Caliphate in the 7th cent.

Homer Ancient Greek poet who is generally regarded as the author of two of the greatest epic poems in Western literature, the Iliad and the Odyssey. Homer was revered in ancient times, though the details of his life are largely a matter of legend and conjecture. Even his authorship of the two great epics has been contested (the "Homeric question"). He is thought to have lived in a Greek colony in Asia Minor in the 9th or 8th cent. BC and, according to one legend, was blind. What is certain, however, is that the two epics profoundly influenced ancient Greek culture and the subsequent development of Western literature.

Homer, Winslow 1836–1910. A leading American artist, he is known best for his paintings of the sea.

Home Rule Irish movement for self-government. Formed (1870) by Isaac Butt (1813–79) and led by C. Parnell (to 1890), the movement included demands for a separate Irish parliament and land reform (see Irish Land Acts). Two Home Rule bills (1886, 1893) were backed by W. Gladstone's British Liberal party, but they failed to overcome Conservative opposition in Parliament. A third Home Rule bill was finally passed (1912), but implementation was delayed by the outbreak of WW I. During the war, radical Irish Republicans came to the fore, and, with the declaration of Irish independence by the Dail Eireann (1918), the Irish Republican Army went into armed rebellion against the British government. The Irish Free State (later the Republic of Ireland) was created in 1921.

Homestead Act US law (passed 1862). The act granted 160 acres of public land to a settler after a five-year occupancy. The movement for land grants to settlers gained momentum after 1835, when land sales were no longer needed to eliminate the public debt. Of great interest to the developing western states, such land grants were promoted by the Free-Soil Party and opposed by the South. By the 1850s the issue of land grants had become related to extension of slavery in the new western territories. It was not until after the secession of southern states and the outbreak of the Civil War (1861–65) that the act passed Congress.

Homestead strike Famous US labor dispute (1892). Following the breakdown of wage negotiations with the Carnegie Steel Company at Homestead, Pennsylvania, members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers went on strike. Company manager H. Frick, however, hired strikebreakers and some 300 Pinkerton detectives to protect them. Strikers shot at the detectives (July 6), and a gun battle broke out in which several were killed and wounded. The state militia was called out to restore order, and the plant was reopened. The strike was officially ended Nov. 20.

Honduras ⟨Republic of Honduras⟩ Independent state located in northern Central America. Its capital is Tegucigalpa. A Mayan culture once flourished in the area (from 4th cent. AD) but by the time Columbus discovered Honduras (1502) it had already declined. Like other Central American republics, Honduras has experienced considerable political turmoil since gaining independence from Spain in 1521. There have been well over 100 coups since that time. Key dates in the history of Honduras include:

1502 Columbus discovered coastal region of Honduras.

1524 P. de Alvarado established coastal settlements.

1539 Honduras became part of the captaincy general of Guatemala.
1821 Honduras proclaimed independence from Spain.
1821–23 Became part of Iturbide's Mexican Empire.
1825–38 Joined Central American Federation.
1838 Became a republic; subsequent history marked by political instability, the struggle between liberals and conservatives, and interference by neighboring countries.
1860 American adventurer and filibusterer William Walker captured in Honduras while on an expedition aimed at Nicaragua.
1863 Alliance with Nicaragua and El Salvador ended in warfare with them.
1874–83 Marco Aurelio Soto in office as president (except 1876); his administration marked by stable government and enactment of reforms.
1883–1911 Long period of unrest and revolution; US Marines finally intervened (1911) during a revolt, led by Manuel Bonilla, and restored order.
1924 Civil war broke out after liberal president López Gutiérrez (1919–24) attempted to hold office after his term; US intervened.
1933–49 Tiburcio Carías Andino in office as president; rebellion put down (1937).
1957 New constitution promulgated.
1957–63 Liberal leader Ramón Villeda Morales in office as president.
1961 Dispute over southeastern border with Nicaragua settled by International Court of Justice.
1963 Villeda Morales overthrown by military junta led by Osvaldo López Arellano.
1965 Twelfth constitution adopted; López Arellano elected president.
1969 Soccer War fought with El Salvador.
1971–75 Ramón Ernesto Cruz elected president (1971); López Arellano ousted Cruz (1972) and held power to 1975.
1975 Bloodless coup (Apr. 22) by Col. Juan Alberto Melgar Castro followed bribery scandal.
1978 Military coup (Aug. 7), by Gen. Policarpo Paz Garcia, ousted Melgar Castro.
1980 Military allowed election of a Constitutional Assembly (Apr.); Paz Garcia formally transferred power to the Assembly (July).
1982 Paz Garcia relinquished power to elected president, Roberto Suazo Córdovo, ending military rule.

Hong Kong British crown colony (pop. 4,900,000) in southeastern China, comprised of Hong Kong Island, Kowloon Peninsula, and the New Territories. Victoria, its capital, is site of one of the world's best harbors. Hong Kong is a major trade and commercial center in the Far East. China ceded Britain the island (1841) and the peninsula (1860), and leased it the New Territories for 99 years (1898). Hong Kong was occupied by the Japanese during WW II.

Honolulu US city (pop. 365,000), capital of Hawaii, on Oahu Island. It is a major seaport and tourist and economic center. Its harbor was discovered (1794) by English captain William Brown. Honolulu was the capital of the kingdom of Hawaii (19th cent.), and later of the territory and (1959) the state of Hawaii. The Japanese bombing of the US naval base there at Pearl Harbor (Dec. 7, 1941) brought about the US entry into WW II.

Honorius I d. 638. Italian pope (625–638), successor to Boniface V. His failure to condemn Monothelitism outright as heresy led to his own posthumous condemnation as a heretic at the Council of Constantinople (680). This in turn led to a controversy over papal infallibility.

Honorius II ⟨Scannabechi, Lamberto⟩ d. 1130. Italian pope (1124–30), successor to Calixtus II. As cardinal, he brought an end to the Investiture Controversy by the Concordat of Worms (1122).

Honorius III ⟨Savelli, Cencio⟩ d. 1227. Roman pope (1216–27), successor to Innocent III. Considered an able administrator, he confirmed the orders of the Dominicans (1216), the Franciscans (1223), and the Carmelites (1226).

Honorius, Flavius AD 384–423. Roman emperor of the West (AD 395–423). A weak ruler, he inherited the western half of the Roman Empire on the death of his father, Theodosius I. During his reign his empire was invaded by Visigoths, who captured Rome (AD 409).

Hood, Thomas 1799–1845. English poet. Though he wrote much in a humorous vein, he is perhaps best remembered for such serious poems as The Song of the Shirt and The Bridge of Sighs.

Hooke, Robert 1635–1703. English physicist and inventor. He is credited with discovering the law of elasticity in solids (*c*1660), now called Hooke's law, and with being the first to use the biological term "cell" (1667).

Hooker, Joseph 1814–79. Union general in the American Civil War. Nicknamed "Fighting Joe," he succeeded (1863) A. Burnside in command of the Army of the Potomac. Following a major defeat at Chancellorsville (1863) and only days before the Battle of Gettysburg, Hooker resigned as commander of the army.

Hooker, Richard 1554?–1600. English theologian. An Anglican clergyman, he wrote Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, a closely reasoned defense against the arguments of Catholics and Puritans.

Hooker, Thomas 1586–1647. Puritan clergyman born in England. One of the founders of Hartford (1636), he was pastor of the colony until his death.

Hoorn, Philip de Montmorency, count of ⟨Horn, ~⟩ 1518–68. Flemish nobleman and soldier. Though loyal to the Spanish rulers of The Netherlands, he opposed the Inquisition and was beheaded.

Hoover, Herbert Clark 1874–1964. Thirty-first US president (1929–33), successor to C. Coolidge. A mining engineer by profession, he became known for his work as head of the US-backed relief agencies in Europe during and after WW I. He next served as US secretary of commerce (1921–29) and in that capacity brought about construction of the Hoover Dam and St. Lawrence Seaway. Picked by the Republican party to succeed Coolidge, he defeated the Democratic contender, A. Smith, in the 1928 election. Only months after he took office, however, inherent weaknesses in the US economy, fostered by his predecessor's policies, culminated in the stock market crash of Oct., 1929 (Black Thursday). As the economic crisis widened into the Great Depression, Hoover maintained an abiding faith in business to restore the economy and private charity to aid the needy. This policy was both unsuccessful and much criticized as the number of unemployed grew to unprecedented proportions. Though Hoover firmly opposed direct federal aid to the unemployed and public works programs, he nevertheless did institute the Federal Farm Board and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (1932). The failure of his policies to check the worsening depression, his expulsion of the Bonus Army (q.v.) from Washington, and the rising tide of bankruptcies, mortgage foreclosures, and bank failures contributed to his defeat by F. Roosevelt in 1932. Thereafter he remained out of politics until after WW II, when he headed two Hoover commissions (1947–49, 1953–55) to investigate government inefficiency.

Hoover, John Edgar 1895–1972. American public official. A sometimes controversial director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (from 1924 to his death), Hoover is credited with turning it into a model law enforcement agency.

Horthy, Miklós von Nagybánya 1868–1957. Hungarian admiral and head of state (1920–44). He defeated the Communist revolutionaries and was named regent to the deposed emperor, Charles I. Horthy later refused to allow Charles to retake the throne and himself ruled Hungary until he was arrested by A. Hitler.

Horus ⟨Hor⟩ Egyptian sky god. He was usually represented as a falcon and his eyes were the sun and the moon. He was the god of goodness and light, and Egyptian kings were believed incarnations of him.

Hoshea Last king of Israel, son of Elah. He assassinated and succeeded Pekah (732? BC). His alliance with Egypt against the Assyrians led to the conquest of Israel by the Assyrians (722? BC).

hostage crisis ⟨American hostage crisis⟩ International crisis (from Nov. 4, 1979) in which Iranian militants seized the US Embassy in Teheran, Iran, and held 52 Americans hostage for 444 days. Following the overthrow (Jan., 1979) of Shah R. Pahlavi in the Iranian revolution, anti-American sentiment in Iran was whipped to a fever pitch. The embassy seizure itself was sparked by the shah's arrival in the US for medical treatment. Militants, suspecting a plot to return the shah to power, captured the embassy (Nov. 4) and took 90 hostages. They later released all but 52 Americans. Their demands included return of the shah and his wealth to Iran, and they threatened to try the hostages as spies. President J. Carter ordered the freezing of Iranian assets in the US (Nov. 14). The seizure had the support of Ayatollah R. Khomeini, who used the incident to consolidate his control over the revolution and publicly humiliate the US. Carter was thwarted in attempts to negotiate the hostages' release, and a military rescue attempt (Apr. 24, 1980) failed, leaving eight US servicemen dead. The shah died (July 27), and negotiations dragged through the 1980 presidential election. Negotiators finally reached an accord (Jan. 19, 1981), but the hostages were not released until a few minutes after R. Reagan was sworn in as US president (Jan. 20).

Houston, Samuel 1793–1863. American frontiersman, soldier, and political official who played a major role in the Texas war for independence. A US congressman (1823–27) and Tennessee governor (1827–29), he lived (1829–33) with the Cherokee Indians after his wife left him. By 1835, however, Houston had become involved in the struggle between American settlers and the Mexicans for control over what is now Texas. As commander of American forces, he eventually routed the Mexicans at San Jacinto (1836) and thereby won Texas' independence. He was president of the territory (1836–38, 1841–44) and, after statehood (1845), became senator (1846–59). Elected governor (1859), he opposed secession and was forced out of office (1861).

Howard Leading English family of noblemen. The duke of Norfolk, who heads the family, is hereditary earl marshal and premier duke of England. The family has a number of cadet branches, including earldoms of Arundel, Northampton, Nottingham, Suffolk, Surrey, Norwich, and Carlisle. The line was founded by William Howard (d. 1308) and gained title (1483) to Norfolk through the marriage of Robert Howard (d. before 1436) to the daughter of T. Mowbray, the first duke of Norfolk. Prominent members of the family include:

Hudson River school Group of American landscape painters and an early school of painting native to America. The school, which stemmed from the European Romantic movement, flourished from 1825 to 1875. It is characterized by but not limited to the dramatic landscapes of the Hudson River region. Among the artists of this school are Thomas Cole (1801–48), Albert Bierstadt (1830–1902), and Thomas Doughty (1793–1856).

Hudson's Bay Company ⟨The Great Company⟩ Chartered corporation (from 1670) that figures prominently in the early development of Canada. Licensed for trade, settlement, and exploration of a vast and vaguely specified region surrounding the Hudson Bay, the company eventually expanded its holdings to the Pacific Coast. It had governmental control and a monopoly over the lucrative fur trade in its domains. Early clashes with the French traders ended with recognition of British sovereignty in Canada (Treaty of Paris, 1763), and bloody conflicts with the rival British North West Company were ended by a merger of the companies (1821). Following the unification of Canada (1869), nearly all the company territory was turned over to the Canadian government, and the company thereafter became a powerful retail and manufacturing concern. It was broken up into Canadian and British organizations in 1930.

Hugh the Great d. 956. French duke, son of Robert I and father of Hugh Capet. Excluded from the succession, he supported the succession of the Carolingian king Louis IV and attempted to rule through him.

Hugo, Victor 1802–85. French writer. Hugo's poetry, plays, and novels occupy a major place in French Romantic literature. His drama Hernani caused riots between classicists and romanticists in 1830, but today he is best remembered for his novels The Hunchback of Notre Dame and Les Misérables. A political republican and member of the National Assembly, Hugo was forced into exile by Napoleon III but returned to Paris in triumph after Napoleon's ouster (1870).

Huguenots French Protestants, important in French history during the 16th and 17th cents. Followers of J. Calvin, Huguenots first suffered persecution at the hands of the French Catholic monarchy shortly after the beginning of the Protestant Reformation (1517). Despite executions and massacres, the movement spread to the French nobility, where it became interrelated with the struggle for political power. Bitter rivalry led to such events as the Conspiracy of Amboise (1560), the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre (1572), and the Wars of Religion (1562–98). A period of toleration followed the Edict of Nantes (1598) and ended with Huguenot uprisings in the 1620s when King Louis XIII attempted to suppress Protestantism. By the Peace of Alais (1629), Huguenots lost their political power, and, under Louis XIV, the Edict of Nantes was revoked (1685). This led to a mass exodus of most Huguenots from France. Civil rights of Huguenots were not restored until 1787. By the Declaration of the Rights of Man (1789) they were granted religious equality.

Hui-neng 638–713. Chinese priest and sixth patriarch of Zen Buddhism. He is known for his introduction of the doctrine of satori, or "sudden enlightenment."

humanism Philosophy or attitude that places mankind and human values, welfare, and creativity at the center of consciousness. Humanism was the philosophy that, beginning in the 14th cent., was a central feature of the Renaissance (q.v.) in Italy, and spread over the rest of Europe in the following three centuries. It represented a shift from the medieval view of the world as an adjunct to God's creation and fostered a new emphasis on the study of man and the world as objects in themselves. It favored a new Platonism (q.v.) over Aristotelianism (q.v.) and Scholasticism (q.v.). It also looked to Greek and Roman models in art, literature, and thought. One of the major results of the early Renaissance in Italy was an intensive search for and study of ancient manuscripts. The Turkish conquest of Constantinople (1453), which drove many Greek-speaking scholars to seek refuge in Italy, gave added impetus to this interest in the ancient world. The great early Renaissance humanists included F. Petrarch, G. Boccaccio, L. Valla, and the host of Italian painters led by Michelangelo and L. da Vinci. Erasmus and T. More were outstanding later humanists. In modern times, humanism has come to mean an agnostic philosophy that regards man as "the measure of all things," as opposed to religious beliefs.

Humphrey, Hubert Horatio 1911–78. US vice-president (1965–69). As a Democratic senator from Minnesota (1949–65), he was a noted orator, liberal leader, and staunch defender of civil rights. While serving as vice-president under L. Johnson, Humphrey defended escalation of the Vietnam War. This was a contributing factor in his narrow loss to R. Nixon in the presidential race of 1968. He was reelected to the Senate (1970) and tried unsuccessfully to win the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972.

Hunan Army ⟨Hsiang Army⟩ Chinese regional army organized (1852) in the province of Hunan by Tsêng Kuo-fan. Its purpose was to help bring an end to the Taiping Rebellion. At its peak the force numbered approximately 125,000 men.

Hundred Days 1. Period in French history (Mar. 20-June 28, 1815) during which Napoleon returned from exile and attempted to reestablish his empire. Escaping exile on the island of Elba, he landed in the south of France (Mar. 1, 1815) and marched north with a small force. By the time he reached Paris (Mar. 20, 1815), he had rallied France behind him and forced King Louis XVIII to abdicate. Once again emperor, he was opposed (from Mar. 25) by a new coalition of nearly all the other European nations. Following the coalition victory over J. Murat at Tolentino (May 3) and subsequent capture of the kingdom of Naples, Napoleon launched an attack (June 14) into Belgium. Napoleon's forces were victorious in the battles of Ligny and Quatre Bras (June 16), but were completely crushed at the great Battle of Waterloo (June 18). Soon after, Napoleon surrendered to the British, and King Louis was restored (June 28), ending the Hundred Days period. (See also Waterloo; Napoleonic Wars.) 2. Period in US history (from Mar. 4, 1933) marking the first months of President F. Roosevelt's administration. Roosevelt was inaugurated (Mar. 4) during the Great Depression, amid economic disaster, great unemployment, and numerous bank failures. During the Hundred Days period his administration initiated much of the legislation for his first New Deal (q.v) program. The term "Hundred Days" has also been applied to the early months of other presidential administrations.

Hundred Years' War Series of related wars (1337–1453) between England and France. The conflict stemmed from English claims to the French throne (based on descent from the Norman conquerer, William I) and the long rivalry over territories on the Continent that were then English possessions. Just before war broke out, France and England were vying for the lucrative wool and cloth trade of Flanders, and English king Edward III was concerned about protecting the English-held duchy of Guienne (in modern France). Edward touched off the war by invading France to take the crown by force. The protracted war that followed was fought mainly in France and devastated the country. The outbreak of the Black Plague only added to the loss of life on both sides. The consequences of the war were far-reaching: English presence on the Continent was all but ended; and the ravages of war contributed to the decline of feudalism, the rise of a middle class, and the emergence of a strong monarchy. Key dates in the history of the war include:

1337 English king Edward III proclaimed himself king of France in opposition to French king Philip VI.

1339 English invaded France through the Low Countries; land war indecisive.

1340 English gained control of the Channel by their victory (June 24) in the naval battle of Sluis.

1345 New English invasion of northern France began.

1346 Battle of Crécy fought (Aug. 26); major English victory over the French.

1346–47 English besieged and captured Calais; victory followed by lull in fighting (to 1355).

1355 English forces led by Edward the Black Prince conquered Bordeaux in southwest France; thereafter English conducted raids in southern France.

1356 Battle of Poitiers (Sept. 19); English routed French forces and captured King John II, who had succeeded to the French throne.

1360 Treaty of Brétigny, ending first period of the Hundred Years' War; England gained Calais and much of Aquitaine from France; French king John returned for a large ransom.

1369–86 Fighting resumed; new French king Charles VI attacked English (1369) using guerrilla war tactics; by 1386 the French had retaken much of the territory held by England.

1396 England and France agreed to a truce, to last for 30 years.

1415 English king Henry V resumed the war by invading France; France embroiled (from 1407) in civil war between Burgundians (pro-English) and Armagnacs over control of the French throne; subsequent alliance between Burgundians and English seriously weakened French position.

1415 Henry V defeated French at Battle of Agincourt; French suffered heavy losses.

1415–19 Normandy conquered; Rouen captured (1419); English gained control of most of northern France.

1420 Treaty of Troyes signed (May 20); by its terms French king Charles VI accepted English king Henry V as heir to the French throne.

1422 Both Henry and Charles died; the French dauphin, Charles's son, declared himself French king Charles VII; the English held that Henry's son, Henry VI, was king; Henry VI controlled the north, Charles VII the south.

1428 English invaded southern France; laid siege to French stronghold of Orléans (Oct.).

1429 French fortunes at low ebb; young visionary Joan of Arc convinced Charles VII to give her command of force to relieve Orléans.

1429 Joan's forces lifted (May) siege of Orléans; tide of war turned in favor of the French; English forces pushed northward.

1429 French won major victory at Battle of Patay (June 18); La Hire routed Shrewsbury's English troops in northern France.

1429 Charles VII crowned (July 17) at Rheims after being encouraged by Joan of Arc.

1430 Joan of Arc captured by Burgundians (then allied with the English); ransomed to the English, she was burned at the stake (1431) as a witch.

1435 Treaty of Arras signed between France and Burgundy, ending the alliance between Burgundy and England and greatly strengthening the French position.

1436 French forces captured Paris from the English; lull in fighting ensued.

1444 Truce of Tours (May 28); fighting halted until 1449.

1449 French began final offensive of war; attacked English in Normandy and Guienne.

1450 Battle of Formigny in northern France (Apr. 15), a decisive French victory.

1450 French completed reconquest of Normandy.

1451 French took duchy of Guienne, except for Bordeaux, from the English.

1453 French captured Bordeaux, marking end of the war; English territories on the Continent (once extensive) now reduced to the city of Calais, which England held until 1558.

Hungarian Revolution of 1956 Brief but bloody rebellion (Oct. 23-Nov. 14, 1956) against Russian domination in Hungary. The revolt was caused by a series of factors, including the movement for reform in Poland, the denunciation of Stanlinism by N. Khrushchev, and the Soviet-aided ouster (July, 1956) of the repressive regime of Matyas Rakosi in Hungary. The revolt was sparked (Oct. 23) when Hungarian forces fired on people demonstrating in Budapest in support of Polish reform and in opposition to Soviet presence in Hungary. Soon the entire country was in revolt. I. Nagy, who as premier had earlier (1953–55) introduced reforms in Hungary, was restored to power (Oct. 24), and János Kádár (1912–) became new head of the Communist party. Nagy immediately instituted liberal reforms, called for Soviet withdrawal from Hungary, took Hungary out of the Warsaw Pact, and sought aid from the UN to secure Hungary's neutrality. Meanwhile Kádár formed a countergovernment and called for Soviet assistance. Russian forces entered Hungary and on Nov. 4 began operations against the revolt. The rebellion was crushed by Nov. 14 and Kádár was installed as the new head of the government. Nagy and others, tricked by promises of safe conduct, were captured, sent to Romania, and executed.

Hungary Republic located in central Europe. Its capital is Budapest. The region of present-day Hungary was part of the Roman provinces of Pannonia and Dacia and was subsequently occupied by Germanic tribes, Huns, Avars, and ultimately the Magyars (9th cent.), who profoundly shaped the history of Hungary. A kingdom from the early 11th cent., Hungary later fell under Ottoman and Austrian Hapsburg domination. Hungarian resistance to Austrian hegemony led to formation (1867) of the Dual Monarchy, or Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. Hungary finally became independent with the collapse of the Austro-Hungarian Empire at the end of WW I and, in 1949, became a People's Republic, modeled along Soviet Communist lines. Key dates in the history of Hungary include:

2D CENT. AD Germanic tribes invaded region; later displaced by the Huns.

5TH–8TH CENT. AD Avars occupied region.

c890 Arpad led Magyars from Asia to Hungary; established Arpad dynasty.

955 Holy Roman Emperor Otto I defeated the Magyars on the Lechfeld; marked the end of Magyars' westward expansion.

1001–38 Stephen I reigned as first crowned king of Hungary; established Christianity in the kingdom.

1077–95 Ladislaus I, a national hero, reigned; conquered Croatia.

1222 King Andrew II (reigned 1205–35) issued the Golden Bull, known as the "Magna Carta of Hungary"; marked rise of powerful magnates (nobles).

1235–70 Bela IV reigned; rule marked by devastating Mongol invasion (1241) and conflict with Austria.

1301 Andrew III, last of the Arpad dynasty, died; period of unrest and civil war.

1308–42 Charles Robert of Anjou reigned as Hungarian King Charles I; strengthened the monarchy, curbed the power of the nobles, and founded the Angevin line in Hungary.

1342–82 Louis I (the Great) reigned; conducted wars against Venice (1346, 1357–58, 1381) and by the Treaty of Turin (1381) gained all of Dalmatia; succeeded to the Polish throne (1370) and thereby made Hungary one of the largest kingdoms in Europe; promoted administrative reforms and commercial prosperity.

1387–1437 Sigismund reigned; began period of rule by foreign kings; his crusade against the Ottoman Turks advancing on fringes of the kingdom failed (1396); elected emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1411); suppressed the Hussites.

1456 John Hunyadi, Hungarian hero, ended Ottoman siege of Belgrade.

1458–90 Matthias Corvinus reigned; successful against the Turks; conquered Bohemia, Lusatia, Moravia, and Silesia, reorganized the government, and made Hungary the dominant power in central Europe.

1490–1526 Period of unrest followed death of Matthias Corvinus; nobles sought to regain power; Zapolya family gained control of Transylvania; Doza Rebellion by peasants broke out (1514); kingdom unable to check continuing advance of Turks.

1526 Battle of Mohacs, Turkish victory over Louis II of Hungary; led to more than 150 years of Turkish domination of central Hungary, Hapsburg domination in the west, and ascendancy of noblemen in Transylvania.

1572–1608 Rudolph II (later Holy Roman Emperor) reigned as king of Hungary; Protestantism had spread among Magyars as a result of the Reformation (especially in Transylvania) and Rudolph began imperial policy of imposing the Catholic Counter-Reformation in Hungary and elsewhere.

1604–06 S. Bokskay led rebellion against Hapsburgs of Holy Roman Empire, then controlling western Hungary; won constitutional and religious rights for Protestants by Peace of Vienna.

1618–48 Thirty Years' War; Hungarian nationalists used opportunities to oppose domination by Hapsburg Holy Roman Empire.

1682–99 Austro-Turkish War; Austrian Hapsburgs gradually pushed Turks out of Hungary; their claim to the Hungarian throne recognized by Hungarian nobles (1687); finally won control of Turkish domains in Hungary (then including Transylvania).

1703–11 Francis Rákóczy led unsuccessful rebellion against Hapsburg rule in Hungary; Hapsburgs then promoted settlement of Hungary by Germans and Slavs.

1740–48 War of Austrian Succession; Hungary supported claims of Maria Theresa to Hapsburg domains.

1806 Holy Roman Empire dissolved as a result of defeat in Napoleonic Wars; power of Austrian Hapsburgs reduced in subsequent post-Napoleonic period; Austrian Hapsburgs retained control over Hungary.

FROM 1815 Rise of liberal nationalist movement began in the post-Napoleonic period.

1848–49 March Laws instituted liberal constitutional monarchy under Hapsburg domination following outbreak of Revolutions of 1848 in Europe; Austrian troops sent into Hungary; L. Kossuth proclaimed Hungary a republic (Apr., 1849).

1849 Austrians victorious (with Russian aid) at the Battle of Temesvar (Aug. 9); battle ended short-lived Hungarian Republic.

1866–67 Austrian power seriously weakened by Austro-Prussian War (1866); Magyar nationalists forced compromise agreement, Ausgleich, establishing Dual Monarchy of Austria-Hungary (1867).

1867–1916 Francis Joseph reigned as king of Austria and Hungary; Austria and Hungary theoretically equal under separate governments; unrest grew among the Hungarian national minorities (Croats, Serbs, and Rumanians).

1873 The cities of Buda and Pest were united.

1914–18 WW I; Hungary, as part of the Austro-Hungarian empire, fought with the Central Powers; hardships of war aroused discontent and brought collapse of the Dual Monarchy (Nov. 11, 1918).

1918 Hungarian People's Republic proclaimed (Nov. 16) at close of WW I; Michael Károlyi became first president.

1919 B. Kun seized power after new government proved unable to check unrest among minorities; he established short-lived, Communist soviet republic of Hungary. (Mar. 21–Aug. 1); invasion by Czechs and Romanians ended the Soviet government.

1919–44 Nicholas Horthy de Nagybanya in power; harsh reprisals against leftists (White Terror) began; he was named regent of a vacant monarchy (1920).

1920 Treaty of Trianon signed (June 4) by Allied Powers after WW I; established new Hungarian state but greatly reduced territory; this later led to alliance with fascist Germany in effort to regain lands.

1932–36 Premier J. Gambos in office; promoted fascism.

1939–45 WW II; Hungary became an ally of Germany; Germany occupied Hungary when it attempted to end participation in war (1943); Soviet forces drove out Germans and occupied the country (Oct., 1944–Apr., 1945) after hard fighting.

1946 Following national elections (1945), a new constitution was adopted.

1947–49 Minority Communist party consolidated its control within the Hungarian government; aided by Soviet forces, it conducted campaigns against anti-Communists and the church.

1948 Cardinal Mindszenty, Roman Catholic primate of Hungary, arrested and convicted in trial staged by Communists; imprisoned until 1956.

1949 Communists gained control of Hungarian government; new constitution adopted (Aug. 10) establishing the Hungarian People's Republic, modeled on Soviet lines.

1949–53 Mátyás Rákosi ruled as premier; his pro-Stalinist policies caused wide unrest and political and economic turmoil.

1953–55 Imre Nagy made premier; moderated Hungary's economic programs but was removed from office.

1955 Hungary joined Warsaw Pact (May 14).

1955–56 Rákosi back in power.

1956 Hungarian Revolt (Oct. 23–Nov. 14), unsuccessful uprising against Russian domination; I. Nagy led new government; declared Hungarian neutrality and withdrew it from Warsaw Pact; revolt crushed by invasion of Russian and other Warsaw Pact forces.

1956 Cardinal Mindszenty, released from prison during revolt, took refuge in US embassy until 1971, when he was allowed out of Hungary.

1956–65 János Kádár in power as premier; led opposition to liberal government of Hungarian Revolution; instituted reforms and purged Stalinist party leaders.

1958 Nagy executed.

1964 Kádár established agreement with Roman Catholic church to improve relations.

1965 Gyula Kallai became premier; Kádár remained in power as party secretary of the Hungarian Socialist Workers party; policies of reform and relaxation of controls continued.

1968 Economic reforms established more liberal economic policies and led to increases in production.

1975 György Lazar in office as premier.

1978 WW II war-debt claims with US settled; US authorities returned Saint Stephen's Crown and other national treasures to Hungary.

Hunkers Faction of New York State Democrats in the 1840s, conservatives who opposed the radical faction called the Barnburners. They followed a line consistent with President J. Polk's policies, favored chartering of state banks and opposed agitation against slavery. They split openly with the Barnburners in the 1846 gubernatorial election. In the 1848 presidential election, antislavery Barnburners joined with the Free-Soil party to support M. Van Buren. This split the Democratic party vote and helped Z. Taylor win the presidency.

Huns Nomadic people of Asia, notorious for their military skills and savagery, who for a time (5th cent. AD) threatened the Roman Empire. The Huns, of uncertain origins, were at times identified with Hsuing-Nu, White Huns, Magyars, and others. Skilled horsemen and archers, they appeared in Eastern Europe AD *c*370, and, fighting in roving bands (hordes), they conquered the Alani, Ostrogoths, and Visigoths. Victories over the latter two peoples caused great migrations eastward. In the 5th cent. AD the Huns occupied Eastern and Central Europe and had reached the borders of the Eastern Roman Empire. By AD 432 a single king of the Huns, Rugilas (Rua or Roas), was exacting tribute from the Romans. His successor, Attila the Hun, launched three invasions into the empire (441, 447, 451). On the first he advanced into the Eastern Empire and threatened Constantinople. On the second he again attacked the Eastern Empire and passed through the Balkans into Greece. On the third he attacked the Western Empire and unsuccessfully attempted to take Gaul. After he was defeated by a combined force of Romans and Visigoths at the Battle of Chalons (451), however, he invaded and briefly ravaged Italy. His death (453) was soon followed by disintegration of his kingdom and the Huns as a unified people.

Hunter's Lodges Secret organizations established (after 1837) in the US along the border with Canada, to overthrow British rule in Canada. They made two notable attacks (Prescott, Ontario, Nov. 11, 1838; Windsor, Ontario, Dec. 4, 1838) but were quickly repulsed.

Hussein ibn Talal 1935–. Jordanian king (1953–), successor to his father, King Talal. During his reign he has maintained a generally moderate stance in the Arab-Israeli conflicts, though he joined with the Arabs in the war of 1967. He successfully put down a revolt by Palestinian guerrillas in Jordan (1970).

Husserl, Edmund 1858–1938. German philosopher who founded the school of thought called phenomenology.

Hussites Followers of J. Huss in Bohemia and Moravia who were involved in a 15th-cent. rebellion against the authority of the Roman Catholic church. Following the execution (1415) of Huss as ordered by the Council of Constance, Hussites split into two groups, the moderate Calixtines, or Utraquists, and the radical Taborites. Despite differences they were allied in seeking approval of the Four Articles of Prague, which called for freedom to preach, communion in both bread and wine, the expropriation of church property, and punishment of mortal sins by civil authorities. They fought together in the Hussite Wars (1415–36) until the church won over the Utraquists with promises of concessions. After the defeat of the Taborites (1434), Utraquists were granted reforms in an agreement known as the Compactata of Prague (1436). The Utraquists eventually split (16th cent.), with one faction joining the evolving Lutheran church and the other the Roman Catholic church.

Hussite Wars Series of wars (1415–36) fought between Hussites and forces of the Holy Roman Empire. Precipitated by the death (1415) of J. Huss and the succession (1419) of the German Holy Roman Emperor Sigismund as king of Bohemia, the wars involved Hussite demands for religious reforms and Bohemian nationalism. Led by J. Zizka, Hussite forces defeated the emperor's armies (1420, 1422). He was succeeded by Procopius the Great (1424), who led the successful resistance to the crusades against them (1426, 1427, 1431) and commanded invasions into Silesia and Saxony (1425–26) and into Franconia (1429–30). The rift between Utraquists and Taborites widened during the wars, however, and in 1433, Utraquists opened negotiations with the Catholic church at the Council of Basel. Utraquists turned against the Taborites (led by Procopius), who refused concessions offered by the church, and civil war broke out in Bohemia. The Taborites were completely defeated (1434) at the Battle of Lipany, ending the wars. Concessions granted to the Hussites were formalized (1436) in the Compactata of Prague, which granted Utraquists the right to communion in both kinds, the right to retain church lands, and the establishment of a separate Bohemian church.

Iceland ⟨Republic of Iceland⟩ Island republic located in the North Atlantic near the Arctic Circle. Capital is Reykjavik. Iceland was settled (9th cent.) by Norsemen. A legislative assembly, the Althing, was established (930), Christianity was introduced (*c*1000), and Iceland recognized Norwegian suzerainty (1264). Iceland then came under Danish control (by the union of Denmark and Norway) in 1380 and, in the mid-16th cent., the Danes imposed Lutheranism. Iceland declined in the 17th and 18th cents., suffering economic exploitation, pirate raids, and a series of volcanic eruptions. It revived in the following century and an independence movement, led by J. Sigurdsson, eventually (1874) resulted in the granting of a constitution and some home rule. Sovereignty was granted in 1918, though by the terms of the Act of Union Iceland remained in personal union with the king of Denmark. The collapse of Denmark in WW II brought occupation by the British and the Americans and, on June 17, 1944, Iceland became an independent republic. In subsequent years, Iceland joined the UN (1946), concluded an agreement (1951) allowing the US to maintain bases there, and engaged in disputes with Britain over fishing rights and territorial waters (1958–61, 1973–76).

Iconoclastic Controversy Religious dispute. The Iconoclasts of the Byzantine Empire opposed the use of images (icons) in religious worship (sanctioned 7th cent.), on the grounds that icons were sacrilegious. Emperor Leo III denounced the use of icons (726) and in subsequent years icon worshippers and iconoclasts were alternately persecuted. The controversy raged throughout the 8th and 9th cents., and was denounced (787) by the Second Council of Nicaea (q.v.), which decreed that icons could be venerated but not worshipped. The controversy was ended (843) with the restoration of icon worship during the reign of Emperor Michael III.

Ictinus Highly acclaimed Greek architect of the 5th cent. BC. He was a chief designer of the Parthenon (q.v.).

Idaho Northwestern state of the US (pop. 943,900), the 43rd state. White men first entered the region with the Lewis and Clark expedition (q.v.) of 1805, and the fur traders soon followed. Idaho was held jointly by the US and Great Britain until 1846, and it became part of the Oregon Territory in 1848. The discovery of gold (1860) and silver (1863) brought many settlers who built up what are ghost towns today. The Idaho constitution was adopted in 1889, and statehood came in 1890. The state is famous for its potatoes, grown in the arid but fertile plateau watered by federal reclamation projects on the Snake River.

Idealism Term in ethics, art, and philosophy. In ethics it is a doctrine that recognizes moral or intellectual ideals as superior to materialistic concerns and seeks perfection in attaining these ideals. In art the aesthetic ideal, the way the subject should appear, is the standard of perfection, and not the mere copying of reality. In philosophy, it refers to schools of thought in which the real world is believed to be nothing more than ideas perceived by the intellect. It is opposed to materialism (q.v.). Idealism has been espoused in one form or another since the times of Plato. Plato held that the ideas were an unchanging reality that existed independently of one's mind. In more recent times, it was held that these ideas (and thus the real world) were created by the mind itself. Noted proponents of idealism in various forms are Plato, G. Berkeley, I. Kant, and G. Hegel.

Ides of March March 15 by the Roman calendar. J. Caesar was assassinated on this day in 44 BC.

Ignatius of Antioch, Saint d. AD *c*107. Syrian Catholic bishop. Ignatius was sent to Rome for execution. En route he wrote seven letters which defined and clarified Catholic beliefs, and are invaluable testimonies to early Christian beliefs.

His writings contain history's first mention of the name "Catholic church," which he describes as ruled by bishops.

Ignatius of Constantinople, Saint 800–877. Greek Catholic patriarch. Ignatius, son of Emperor Michael I, opposed the Iconoclasts in the Iconoclastic Controversy (q.v.). He was ousted by Photius but restored by the Fourth Council of Constantinople (q.v.).

Ignatius of Loyola, Saint 1491–1556. Spanish religious leader. Of noble birth, he entered military service, and was wounded at Pamplona (1521). While convalescing he conceived (from reading lives of the saints) the idea of becoming a soldier for Christ. At the University of Paris he formed the nucleus of the Jesuits, or Society of Jesus (q.v.), a religious order for men organized along military lines. After approval by the pope (1540), the Jesuits with Ignatius as their first general organized the most effective Catholic response to the Reformation (q.v.), dominated and revolutionized European education, and became the largest religious order of modern times.

Igor *c*877–945. Duke of Kiev (912–45), succeeding Oleg. He was the son of Rurik, founder of the first dynasty of Russian czars. He concluded a treaty with the Byzantium (945) after his attempt at conquest was thwarted.

Igor 1150–1202. Russian prince and legendary hero. His defeat in a battle in 1185 inspired the first work of Russian literature, The Song of Igor's Campaign (*c*1187), rendered in a modern English translation by V. Nabokov (1960). It also inspired the famous opera Prince Igor (1869) by Russian composer Alexander P. Borodin (1834–87).

Ikeda, Hayato 1899–1965. Moderate Japanese statesman who was prime minister (1960–1964). He played a large part in Japan's amazing economic recovery following WW II.

Ikhnaton ⟨Akhenaton⟩ ⟨Amenhotep IV⟩ *d. c*1362 BC. Egyptian pharaoh (*c*1379–*c*1362) of the XVIIIth dynasty, successor to his father Amenhotep III. He is renowned for having instituted monotheism in Egypt by forcibly converting his kingdom to the worship of the sun god Aton (q.v.) Despite resistance from the priesthood, he attempted to eradicate all reference to other gods, including Amon (q.v.), and founded a new capital at Akhetaton (now Tel El Amarna). His conversion sparked revolutionary changes in Egyptian art and literature but Ikhnaton's preoccupation with it is believed to have resulted in the loss of extensive territory in the provinces. His successor, Tutankhamen, was forced to restore worship of the old gods. Ikhnaton's reign is referred to as the Amarna Age.

Île-de-France See Mauritius

Île-de-France French region and former province located around Paris. It was the center of the French monarchy's lands from which the modern nation of France evolved.

Iliad and Odyssey Two celebrated Greek epic poems, believed to have been written (*c*9th cent. BC) by Homer. In ancient Greece they were revered as sources for moral and spiritual guidance. In modern times they are considered among the greatest masterpieces of Western literature. The Iliad tells the story of the Trojan War (q.v.), fought to return Helen to her husband, the Spartan King Menelaus. The Odyssey narrates the adventures of Odysseus, a Greek hero, "a man who was never at a loss," during his return to Ithaca after the Trojan War.

Ili crisis Dispute between Russia and China, centering on Ili province in Chinese Turkestan. Russia invaded Ili (1871) to control the advance of a local ruler, Yakub Beg (1820–77). After Yakub Beg's death, Russia restored most of Ili to China (1881), through the Treaty of St. Petersburg (q.v.).

Il-Khan Mongol dynasty that reigned (1258–1353) in Persia (modern Iran). Between 1253 and 1258, the Mongol Hulagu Khan conquered this territory, including the Islamic capital of Baghdad, and founded the Il-Khan dynasty. The dynasty reached its height under Mahmud Ghazan (1295–1304), who became the first Mongol to convert to Islam (Sunni). In subsequent years internal unrest broke the Il-Khan's power and brought their rule to an end by 1353.

Illinois State in the north central US (pop. 11,418,500), the 21st state. French explorers, Marquette and Jolliet, first explored the region (1673), and in 1680 La Salle built Fort Crèvecoeur. The French ceded the area to Great Britain in 1763 after the French and Indian Wars (q.v.). In 1787, the region became part of the Northwest Territory. Illinois became a state in 1818, and the Indians were driven out after the 1832 Black Hawk War (q.v.). The present state constitution was adopted in 1970. The capital is at Springfield. The state's prairie lands constitute one of the country's agricultural heartlands, but it is also one of the principal industrial states.

Illuminati Rationalistic type of religious society founded in Bavaria in 1776 by Adam Weishaupt (1748–1830). It claimed enlightened religious views, but was banned in Bavaria in 1785. The term "illuminati" was also used for other rationalistic-type and anticlerical religious sects from the 16th to 18th cents.

Illyria and Illyricum Illyria was an ancient region on the Adriatic coast, roughly corresponding to parts of Yugoslavia and Albania. The early Illyrians frequently practiced piracy, until they were conquered by the Romans (between 2d and 1st cent. BC). The Romans established it as the province Illyricum, which eventually sent many legionnaires and emperors (Claudius II and Diocletian) to Rome. Illyricum was divided into the provinces of Dalmatia (q.v.) and Pannonia after AD 9.

Illyrian Wars Two successful wars fought by the Romans (229–28, 219 BC) to suppress Illyrian pirates. In gratitude the Greeks admitted the Romans to the Eleusinian Mysteries and Isthmian Games, marking the official recognition by the Greeks of Rome as a civilized power.

impeachment Process of formal accusation of public officials for misconduct in office. Developed from the 14th cent. in the English system, the right of impeachment in the US is vested in the Congress by the US Constitution. President A. Johnson and Supreme Court Justice S. Chase were impeached but subsequently acquitted. A congressional committee voted to ask Congress to impeach President R. M. Nixon over Watergate (q.v.) but he resigned first.

Imperial Conferences Meetings of delegates from dominions within the British Empire (and later, the Commonwealth) held variously between 1907 and 1937. The conferences were called to discuss economic and mutual-defense concerns, though their resolutions were nonbinding until enactment of the 1931 Statute of Westminster (q.v.). After WW II the formal conferences were replaced by policy meetings between prime ministers of Commonwealth countries. Imperial Conferences were held 1907, 1911, 1917–18, 1921, 1923, 1926, 1930, 1932, 1936, 1937. Before 1907 such meetings were called Colonial Conferences and were held 1887, 1897, 1902.

Imperialism In general, the rule over or control of one state by another. More specifically, "imperialism" is used in either of two ways, referring to ancient and modern forms. Ancient imperialism is the process by which early empires were created. This involved military conquest and, to one degree or another, political domination. Ancient imperialism led to creation of the Macedonian, Persian, Roman, Chinese, and numerous other empires. Modern imperialism is the policy by which nations built colonial empires (beginning in 15th–16th cents.). Modern imperialism was at first spurred on by the rewards of increased trade and mineral riches in the Americas, the Indies, and later Africa. However, the industrial age brought new motivations. The great colonial empires of the 18th and 19th cents. were exploited for raw materials and also served as ready markets for the vast quantities of finished goods produced by the industrial nations. Competition between the great colonial powers, notably the British, French, Dutch, Portuguese, and later the Germans, led to instability and frequent wars during the 19th cent. In the 20th cent., however, the rise of nationalism brought new resistance to this form of imperialism and resulted in independence movements within the colonies. The years after WW I, and especially those following WW II, saw the breakup of colonial empires as most former colonies won their independence.

Impressionism French school of painting (*c*1872–1886) whose radical innovations profoundly influenced the development of the visual arts. Reacting against then current standards regarding the primacy of subject matter in painting, a small group of French painters led by E. Manet and C. Monet began experimenting with new techniques. Though members of the group developed highly individualistic styles, they generally created works in which color and form, not the subject matter, predominated. Impressionists exhibited as a group eight times (1874–86) before disbanding and remained out of favor in established art circles until the 1920s. Among the impressionists were E. Manet, C. Monet, C. Pissaro, A. Renoir, and E. Degas.

Inca South American Indian people and their vast empire in the Andes region, which at the time of the Spanish conquest (16th cent.) extended from Ecuador to northern Chile. According to legend, the empire was founded (AD *c*1100) by Manco Capac at what is now Cuzco, Peru. It expanded slowly until the early 15th cent., when a period of rapid conquests began. The empire reached its zenith under the rule of Huayna Capac (1493–1525), who divided the empire between his sons, Atahualpa (q.v.) and Huáscar (q.v.). The two subsequently warred against each other and, when the Spanish conquistador F. Pizarro arrived in South America (1532), Atahualpa had just defeated his brother. After being received by Atahualpa on friendly terms, Pizarro captured and executed him (1533), entered Cuzco, and with his small force easily subjugated this empire of 10–12 million people. At the time of the Spanish conquest the Incas had a well advanced civilization organized in a rigid hierarchy, over which the emperor ruled with absolute (and divine) authority. Inca society was based on agricultural production and its religion centered on sun worship. They were great builders and constructed magnificent cities, such as Machu Picchu, and a system of roads, irrigation, and mountainside terraces. There was also extensive mining and advanced metallurgy. Under the Spanish, the Inca religion was forcibly suppressed, a colonial government was installed, and the native population was drawn away from agriculture for work in the mines and colonial towns.

Incunabula Bibliographical term. Taken from the Latin word for "cradle," the term refers to the earliest of printed books, those dating from before 1500. They include books from the presses of J. Gutenberg, W. Caxton, and so on.

Independence, Declaration of The document in which the 13 American colonies proclaimed their freedom from Britain. Following the initial battles of the American Revolution, it became clear to members of the Second Continental Congress that a negotiated settlement with Britain was no longer feasible. Consequently, R. H. Lee called on the Congress (June 7, 1776) to adopt a statement proclaiming independence. Largely drafted by T. Jefferson, it was formally adopted by Congress on July 4, 1776 (having already been passed on July 2). J. Hancock, president of the Congress, was first of the 56 delegates to sign the document. The day of adoption (July 4) is celebrated as US Independence Day.

Independents ⟨Separatists⟩ 17th-cent. term given to those English Christians who believed that local congregations should have control of their own church affairs, free from civil or ecclesiastical control. The Pilgrims (q.v.) who founded Plymouth in Massachusetts (1620) were Independents. The Puritans who founded the Massachusetts Bay (q.v.) colony (1630) became separatists in New England after they abandoned their attempts to reform the Church of England. Both groups eventually espoused Congregationalism (q.v.). In England, Independents enjoyed their greatest influence during the Commonwealth and Protectorate and were suppressed in subsequent years.

Independent Treasury American treasury system, adopted in 1846, by which public revenues were kept at and disbursed from the Treasury and subtreasury buildings, without using private or state banks. The system ended with passage of the Federal Reserve Act (1913).

India ⟨Republic of India⟩ Country located on the Indian subcontinent in southern Asia. Its capital is New Delhi. India has one of the world's oldest cultures, and such religions as Hinduism, Buddhism, and Jainism were begun in India. India was first unified (4th cent. BC) under the Mauryan dynasty and later empires under the Guptas (4th-6th cent. AD,) and Muslim Moguls (16th–18th cent.) also brought much of India under one ruler. Except for these periods, Indian history was characterized by disunity and warfare between petty states, a fact that enabled the British to gain control over the Indian subcontinent in the 18th–19th cent. The movement for independence from Britain began in the late 19th cent. After a long series of nonviolent protest campaigns led by M. Gandhi, India finally became independent in 1947. Conflicts between the Hindu majority and the considerable Muslim population, however, resulted in creation of two separate states (India and Pakistan) when independence was granted. Key dates in the history of India include:

c2500–c1500 BC Indus Valley civilization flourished along the Indus River in the northwest (modern Pakistan).

c1500 BC Aryans invaded India; swept through Indus Valley and settled in northern Punjab region and along northern Ganges River.

Indian Councils Act British reform act for the government of India enacted on Nov. 15, 1909. It provided for increased Indian self-government in the form of a representative legislature. An earlier act of the same name (1861) reorganized India's executive administration.

Indian Mutiny ⟨Sepoy Rebellion⟩ Widespread revolt (1857–58) by native Indian troops (sepoys) serving in the British East India Company army. The revolt brought about the transfer of authority in India from the company to the British crown (Sept. 1, 1858) and later became a symbol for Indian nationalists. Resentment against East India Company rule had been building for some time, particularly over the company's annexation of native lands and its failure to respect native customs. Hindus and Muslims alike were offended by the introduction of cartridges greased with cow and pig fat and this sparked the mutiny. Indian troops rebelled (May 10, 1857) at Meerut and the bloody revolt (involving massacres of British army officers and European civilians) spread rapidly throughout northern and central India. British forces retook Delhi (Sept. 1857) and Lucknow (Mar. 1858). The revolt was effectively crushed in 1858, though some fighting continued into 1859. As a result of the uprising, the (titular) ruler of the Mogul Empire, Bahadur Shah II, was banished by the British. This formally ended the existence of the Mogul Empire.

Indian National Congress ⟨Congress party⟩ Political party in India. Founded in 1885, it became a vehicle for the Indian independence movement in the early 20th cent. The party was taken over (1917) by militants such as B. Tilak and A. Besant and, under the leadership of M. K. Gandhi, it organized the passive-resistance campaigns (satyagraha) against British domination that continued to the 1940s. The party was disbanded (1942) by the British but reorganized (1945) and became the ruling party of independent India (1947). It was led (1947–64) by J. Nehru until his death and continued as the ruling party under I. Gandhi. Opposition to I. Gandhi, however, finally split (1969) the party into the New Congress Party, supporting I. Gandhi, and the Old Congress Party, supporting Morarji R. Desai, who succeeded Mrs. Gandhi as prime minister between 1977 and 1980 under the banner of a new Janata party. In 1980, Mrs. Gandhi was returned to power as prime minister, at the head of her faction of the Congress Party.

Indian Removal Act US law (1830) implemented by President A. Jackson. It called for the removal of Indian tribes east of the Mississippi and their resettlement in the western territories. During the 1830s some 60,000 Indians were forced to move. Those who resisted were marched under such conditions that, of some 11,000 Cherokees moved, over 4,000 died (1838).

Indian Reorganization Act ⟨Wheeler-Howard Act⟩ US legislation enacted (1934) to improve the economic conditions on American Indian reservations and promote their assimilation into the American mainstream.

Indians, American See under tribal names

Indian Territory US lands set aside (1834) for resettlement of Indian tribes in the West. It once occupied nearly all of what is now Oklahoma. Government policy of removing Indian tribes from the US Southeast was formalized by the Indian Removal Act (q.v.) of 1830. By the Indian Intercourse Act (1834) the western territories were set aside for them. Though the territory became the home of a number of tribes displaced by white settlers, westward expansion eventually forced the government to open even this territory to settlers. The western part was opened in 1889 and, on the admission (1907) of Oklahoma as a state, the territory was abolished.

India-Pakistani Wars Conflicts between India and Pakistan in the years after the British partition of the Indian subcontinent (Aug. 15, 1947). 1. Kashmir clashes. Partition brought on both rival claims to Kashmir and armed conflict. A UN cease-fire negotiated on Jan. 1, 1949, gave India two-thirds, Pakistan one-third, of Kashmir. 2. Rann of Kutch clashes. Fighting in 1965 along the West Pakistan-Gujurat border led to an international arbitration commission award of 90 percent of the Rann of Kutch to India, 10 percent to Pakistan, on Feb. 19, 1968. 3. India-Pakistani War of 1971. Indian aid to East Pakistan's successful effort to achieve independence as Bangladesh (q.v.) led to a full-scale war between India and Pakistan that broke out on Dec. 3, 1971. Pakistan agreed to a cease-fire in the east on Dec. 16, and in the west on Dec. 17. On July 3, 1972, the two countries signed a treaty providing for withdrawal of troops and a commitment to seek peaceful solutions.

Indochina, Federation of ⟨French Indochina⟩ Former federation of states in Southeast Asia including Cochin China, a French colony, and the French protectorates of Annam, Cambodia, Laos, and Tonkin. France had originally gained control in these areas between 1863 and 1894. The Japanese took control during WW II and the French tried to reestablish sovereignty from 1945. However, nationalist groups in Annam, Cochin China, and Tonkin sought independence as the republic of Vietnam from 1945, and plunged the area into war (Indochina War, q.v.). The Geneva Conference (q.v.) of 1954 marked the end of the federation, since it marked the end of French control of the area.

Indochina War ⟨French Indochina War⟩ War (1945–54) fought by Vietnamese Communists and nationalists against occupying armies, most notably the French. Following the Japanese defeat (1945) in WW II, British and Chinese forces occupied the region. At the same time, however, Communist nationalist leader Ho Chi Minh proclaimed the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and began a war against the British and Chinese. French troops reoccupied Indochina (1946) and, after the breakdown of an agreement granting the Vietnamese republic a large measure of autonomy, fighting resumed (late Dec. 1946). This time it was between the French and the Communist nationalist (Vietminh) forces under Vo Nguyen Giap. Heavy fighting continued through 1947. After failing to come to terms with Ho Chi Minh, the French supported creation of an independent Vietnam (within the French Union) with Bao Dai as emperor (Mar. 8, 1949). The Vietminh continued fighting, however, drove the French from northern Vietnam (Oct. 1950), conquered parts of Laos (1953), and broke French military strength (1954) at Dien Bien Phu (q.v.). Geneva Conference accords (signed July 21, 1954) ended the war, provided for partition of Vietnam, and promised elections for reunification by 1956. The US, which had been aiding the Bao Dai regime since 1950, did not sign the accord and thus opened the way for its involvement in the Vietnam War (q.v.), sometimes called the Second Indochina War.

Indo-European Name applied to the large family of languages of Europe and southern and southwestern Asia, believed to have evolved from a common parent language, Proto-Indo-European, spoken sometime before 2000 BC. Indo-Iranian languages such as Persian and Sanskrit are members, as well as the Celtic, Germanic, Greek, Romance, and Slavic languages of Europe.

Indonesia ⟨Republic of Indonesia, formerly Dutch East Indies⟩ Country consisting of islands (Sumatra, Borneo, Java, and others) in the Malay Archipelago in the South Pacific. Its capital is Djakarta (on Java). Most Indonesians are descended from Malay and Papuan peoples. The islands were long under the influence of other cultures, notably the Chinese, Indian, and Muslim (from 14th–15 cent.). The period of European colonial domination began with the arrival of the Portuguese in the 16th cent. Key dates in the history of Indonesia include:

16TH CENT. Portuguese traders arrived to exploit the spice trade; established trading posts (from 1511).

1596–1600 Dutch and English traders arrived.

EARLY 17TH CENT. Dutch succeeded in driving out Portuguese and English; Dutch East India Company controlled region for next two centuries.

1623 Amboina massacre; English settlers executed by Dutch authorities.

1799 Dutch government assumed control of colony from the Dutch East India Company.

1811–16 British seized the territory during the Napoleonic Wars; restored to Dutch control afterward.

1916 Volksraad, an advisory council, formed by Dutch colonial government.

1922 Indonesia incorporated into the Dutch kingdom.

1927 Indonesian Nationalist party formed under Achmed Sukarno; marked rise of nationalist movement.

1942–45 WW II; Japan occupied Indonesia; nominal self-government.

1945 Sukarno took control (Aug.) of islands of Sumatra and Java; he and Muhammad Hatta proclaimed independent republic.

1945–49 War for independence.

1949 Dutch agreed to creation of the Republic of Indonesia; Sukarno elected president, Hatta premier.

1949 Independence granted (Dec. 27).

1956 Hatta fought with Sukarno and resigned.

1958 Unsuccessful revolts in Sumatra, Celebes, and other islands.

1960 Sukarno dissolved Parliament; took firm control of government.

1962 Sukarno seized control of Dutch New Guinea; UN negotiated transfer pending referendum.

1963 Dutch New Guinea transferred to Indonesia as West Irian.

1963–66 War with newly formed Federation of Malaysia; Sukarno launched sporadic guerrilla raids into territory.

1965 Indonesia withdrew from UN as Sukarno developed closer ties with Communist countries; Communist party in Indonesia gained strength.

1965 Communist coup attempted (Sept.) against army, which had powerful voice in government; Gen. Suharto blocked the coup and began taking control of government; relations with West later reestablished.

1965 Widespread massacres of Communists; hundreds of thousands killed (Oct.-Dec.).

1967 Sukarno forced out of office (Mar.) by National Assembly.

1967 Suharto began long term as president; restored order and began aggressive program to rebuild Indonesian economy; his pro-West policies resulted in substantial foreign aid.

1969 West Irian formally annexed.

1976 Pertamina, state-owned oil company, went bankrupt as Indonesian economic problems worsened.

1977 Release of 10,000 political prisoners jailed in 1965.

1978 Government crackdown against opposition criticism (Jan.); newspapers closed, university activity restricted.

1978 Suharto elected to third five-year term as president.

1979 Indonesia established center for Vietnamese "boat people"; provided services on temporary basis only.

Indulgence Catholic theological term for the pardon and remission of temporal punishment due to sin. In the early church, severe penances were imposed upon penitent sinners. As time went on, the church relaxed the actual penalty, granting an "indulgence" instead by which the penitent received the same merit as if he had actually performed the penance. The church claims to be able to do this by drawing upon the storehouse of merit already acquired in the sight of God by the sacrifice of Jesus and by the virtue and penances of the saints. Indulgences are now granted for specific good works performed or prayers said. Abuses which crept into the granting of indulgences, specifically the buying and selling of them, was one of the issues which led to the revolt of M. Luther (1517) at the time of the Reformation (q.v.).

Indulgence, Declaration of 1. A proclamation (1672) by the English king Charles II granting religious toleration for Nonconformists (q.v.). Parliament, however, refused to accept terms of the declaration and voided it. 2. Proclamation (1687) by the English king James II granting religious toleration for Catholics as well as Nonconformists. The resentment this proclamation aroused was one of the causes of the Glorious Revolution (q.v.) of 1688.

Indus Main river of Pakistan, rising in the Himalayas in Tibet and flowing southwest across Pakistan to the Arabian Sea. The use of its waters has been the cause of conflict between India and Pakistan. The prehistoric Indus valley civilization grew up along its banks.

Indus civilization ⟨Mohenjo-daro civilization⟩ Ancient civilization that flourished in the Indus river valley (*c*2500 BC–1500 BC). Excavations at Mohenjo-daro and Harappa in modern Pakistan have revealed a civilization as advanced as those of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia.

Industrial Revolution Period that saw industry become the predominant force in European economic and social life (18th-19th cents.). This era was marked by the shift from agricultural and cottage-industry forms of production to the factory system, the great increase in the use of machinery for production, a population shift that created great urban centers, and the marked dependence of laborers on their employers. The Industrial Revolution began in the British cotton textile industry and is generally dated from 1750 to 1850. Though the use of machinery was not unknown and though some factories were operating before 1750, this period saw the gradual changeover to an industrial society in Britain. Traditionally, certain inventions are associated with the beginning of industrialism, including J. Watt's steam engine, J. Kay's flying shuttle, J. Hargreaves' spinning jenny, S. Crompton's spinning mule, and Edmund Cartwright's power loom (all between 1733 and 1785). In succeeding years the Industrial Revolution spread to other countries: France after 1830; Germany after 1850; and the US principally after 1860.

Industrial union A union or workers' organization known as a "vertical" union because of its acceptance of all types of workers in a given industry, whether skilled or unskilled, and regardless of specialization. Previously unions of a particular craft such as carpenters or fitters had been the norm. Industrial unions developed in Britain in the latter half of the 19th cent.

Industrial Workers of the World ⟨IWW⟩ ⟨Wobblies⟩ Radical labor union active mainly in the US. Founded (1905) in Chicago to promote syndicalism (q.v.), the union was dedicated to the overthrow of capitalism and advocated general strikes and other tactics to gain this end. Composed largely of unskilled industrial workers, it conducted some 150 strikes in the early 1900s. The union's radical aims and opposition to US participation in WW I led to federal government prosecutions (1917–18) and to harassment during the Red Scare (1919). The organization ceased to be important in the 1920s, when its major concern was opposition to the new US Communist party. Leaders of the IWW included E. Debs (1855–1926), William ("Big Bill") Haywood (1869–1928) and D. De Leon (1852–1914).

Ingersoll, Robert Green 1833–99. An American humanistic philosopher, politician, and orator. He was a leading proponent of agnosticism and a critic of the Bible and Christianity.

Ingres, Jean Auguste Dominique 1780–1867. A French painter, one of the leading figures in French classical painting in the 19th cent.

Inkerman, Battle of Battle of the Crimean War (q.v.), fought on November 5, 1854, at Inkerman, east of Sevastopol. There the English and French defeated the Russians, who had unexpectedly attacked the English camp.

Inner Mongolia ⟨Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region⟩ Autonomous region of the present People's Republic of China, located in the steppe region of northeastern China. It is the traditional home of nomadic Mongol tribes.

Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region See Inner Mongolia

Inness, George 1825–94. American landscape painter, whose works were influenced by the Hudson River and Barbizon schools of painting (qq.v.).

Innocent I, Saint d. 417. Italian pope (401–417), who upheld Saint John Chrysostom and condemned Pelagianism (q.v.). Rome was sacked by Alaric I during his pontificate (410).

Innocent II ⟨Papareschi, Gregorio⟩ d. 1143. Roman pope (1130–43). Elected by a minority of cardinals to succeed Honorius II, he was forced to flee Rome. He regained his office in 1138, convened the Second Lateran Council (q.v.) of 1139, and condemned P. Abelard and Arnold of Brescia.

Innocent III ⟨orig. Lotario di Segni⟩ 1161–1216. Italian-born pope (1198–1216), successor to Celestine III. Under Innocent's reign, the papacy achieved its greatest power. Continuing the policies of Gregory VII regarding supremacy of the pope over secular rulers, Innocent became involved in struggles with European kings to enforce his authority. He vied with Holy Roman Emperor Otto IV, excommunicated him (1210), and finally crowned Frederick II in his place (1215). In England, he forced acceptance of his favorite as archbishop of Canterbury and thereby began a struggle with King John. He excommunicated John (1209), ultimately forcing John in 1213 to accept the sovereignty of the pope and to agree to pay him tribute. In addition to asserting papal authority over these and other European sovereigns, Innocent also preached the Fourth Crusade (q.v.), which resulted in the creation of the Latin Empire of Constantinople (q.v.); promoted the Albigensian Crusade (q.v.); called the great Fourth Lateran Council (q.v.); and gave papal approval to the missions of both the Franciscans and Dominicans.

Innocent IV ⟨Fieschi, Sinibaldo de'⟩ d. 1254. Pope (1243–54), who convened the First Council of Lyons (q.v.) in 1245 and fought to maintain papal sovereignty distinct from the Holy Roman Empire and the Hohenstaufen (q.v.) emperors.

Innocent VIII ⟨Cibó, Giovanni Battista⟩ 1432–92. Pope (1484–92), who authorized the Inquisition to bring charges against witches in Germany (1484). He maintained peace with the Ottoman Empire and temporarily halted the Turkish advance into Europe by keeping the brother and rival of Sultan Beyazid II prisoner.

Innocent XI ⟨Odescalchi, Benedetto⟩ 1611–89. Pope (1676–89). Personally saintly, Innocent quarreled with Louis XIV of France over the latter's claim to be able to administer vacant church sees. As a result, the king convoked a synod and issued (1673) the famous four articles on Gallicanism (q.v.). The two also clashed over the king's 1685 revocation of the Edict of Nantes, since Innocent believed that the Protestants had to be tolerated. He also condemned quietism (q.v.).

Inquisition Name of two historic Roman Catholic tribunals. 1. The medieval Inquisition was established (1233) by Pope Gregory X in response to the spread of heretical sects, such as the Albigenses and Waldenses in northern Italy, southern France, and Germany. Judges of the Inquisition were chosen from among the Dominicans to try and judge cases of heresy, then considered intolerable by civil and ecclesiastical authorities alike. If found guilty of heresy, the heretic was turned over to secular authorities for punishment. Though burning at the stake was the ultimate penalty for unrecanted heresy, this penalty was uncommon in medieval times. The usual punishment was penance, fine, or imprisonment. Torture was used in the civil courts of the time and was also admitted in trials for heresy by Innocent IV (1252), despite earlier papal denunciations of torture. During the Catholic Reformation, the functions of the medieval Inquisition were assigned to the Holy Office (1542). Called the Roman Inquisition, it was active against Protestantism and heard charges of heresy against Galileo in what became a famous trial. Its typical function in modern times was the examination of theological writings. The Holy Office was replaced by the Roman Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith in 1965. 2. Spanish Inquisition. This was a quasi-ecclesiastical tribunal established in 1478 by King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella primarily to examine converted Jews, and later converted Muslims, and punish those who were insincere. Pope Sixtus IV reluctantly approved the Spanish Inquisition, which was largely controlled by the Spanish monarchs. The Grand Inquisitor was always a Dominican, however, and the first and most notorious was T. de Torquemada. The Spanish Inquisition was much harsher than the medieval Inquisition and the death penalty was more often exacted, sometimes in mass autos-da-fé. It judged cases of polygamy, seduction, usury, and other crimes, and was active in Spain and her colonies. Estimates of its victims have ranged from less than 4,000 to more than 30,000 during its existence. By the 17th cent. the harshness of the Inquisition was greatly reduced and it was abolished altogether in 1834.

Instruction of Catherine the Great ⟨Nakaz⟩ Document written (1767) by Catherine the Great of Russia, containing her political views, largely borrowed from C. de Montesquieu, to guide a commission convened (1768) to reform the Russian government. The commission did not produce any meaningful reforms.

Instrument of Government English constitution under which O. Cromwell ruled England as lord protector between Dec., 1653 and May, 1657. It vested executive authority in the lord protector and a council of state, created a unicameral Parliament, and disenfranchised all Catholics and rebels. The unwillingness of Parliament to ratify it led to its replacement by the Humble Petition and Advice (q.v.), but it is notable as the first written constitution of a modern European state.

Insull, Samuel 1859–1938. English-born American public-utilities magnate. He worked as secretary to inventor T. A. Edison, and later managed Edison's growing electrical equipment empire. He headed a giant Midwest utility complex until 1932, when economic reverses caused its collapse.

integration See segregation intelligentsia Term applied to the group of 19th-cent., middle-class Russians who were educated and influenced by Western ideas, and who sought social and political reform. The intelligentsia influenced the development of 20th-cent. revolutionary movements in Russia.

International 1. First (1864–81): Socialist labor federation (founded at London, Sept. 28, 1864) that quickly came under the domination of K. Marx. It was called the International Workingmen's Association. While its express purpose was to foment a Socialist workers' revolution, it failed to play an active role in labor unrest of the period. Split (1876) by a power struggle between Marx and the anarchist M. Bakunin, it was largely defunct by 1881. 2. Second (1889–1914): Loose federation of Socialist groups and labor unions (founded at Paris, 1889). Though committed to an eventual Socialist revolution, the group generally supported parliamentary democracy. The anarchists were formally ousted (1896). The chief aim of the international, however, was its opposition to war, and the outbreak of WW I split the organization along national lines. 3. Third ⟨Communist International⟩ ⟨Comintern⟩ (1919–43): Organization of Communist parties (founded at Moscow, Mar., 1919), following the Russian revolution. Formed by Russian Communist leader N. Lenin, the group was intended to oppose other Socialist factions and to foment worldwide revolution. The Comintern, under Soviet domination, became involved in ideological struggles and, in 1943, J. Stalin dissolved the Comintern to ensure Allied support in the fight against Nazi Germany.

International Confederation of Free Trade Unions See labor unions

International Court of Justice UN judicial body organized in 1945 and superseding the Permanent Court of International Justice, the judicial arm of the League of Nations. The idea for an international court stemmed from the Permanent Court of Arbitration, set up (1899) at the Hague Conference q.v.), to provide a peaceful means for settling international disputes. A number of cases were settled by the organization in the years prior to WW I, and in 1921 the Permanent Court of International Justice (World Court) was organized under the auspices of the League of Nations. This court was created to exercise judicial functions (albeit limited by consent of the nations involved) rather than simply offering a forum for negotiation and arbitration. The International Court of Justice replaced this court (1945) after the UN was created and is likewise referred to as the World Court. The court is based at The Hague and consists of 15 judges selected by the UN Security Council and the General Assembly.

International Federation of Trade Unions See labor unions

International Geophysical Year ⟨IGY⟩ 18-month period from July, 1957, through Dec., 1958, devoted to the cooperative study of the earth and its environment by some 66 participating nations. During the IGY, the USSR launched its first satellite, the Van Allen radiation belt was discovered by a US satellite, and important discoveries about the ocean floor were made, as were many new discoveries about Antarctica (q.v.). A 12-nation cooperative agreement on Antarctica was signed as a result of the IGY.

International Monetary Fund International organization, conceived in 1944 at the Bretton Woods Conference (q.v.) and associated with the United Nations as a specialized agency (1945) to help provide stability of international exchange rates and aid member nations in international transactions.

International Style Architectural movement. Popular in Europe and America in the 1920s, it employed modern materials, emphasized smooth, light lines and walls of glass with steel supports.

Among its adherents were W. Gropius and Le Corbusier.

International Workingmen's Association See International (First)

Interregnum, The Great The period in the history of the Holy Roman Empire between the death of the last Hohenstaufen (q.v.) emperor, Conrad IV, in 1254, and the election of the first Hapsburg (q.v.) emperor, Count Rudolf of Hapsburg, in 1273. There was no recognized ruler of Germany during this period, and it was characterized by a growth in the power of the princes.

Intolerable Acts Restrictive acts passed by the British Parliament in 1774 in retaliation for the Boston Tea Party (q.v.). Four acts closed Boston harbor until restitution had been made for the tea destroyed; revoked the Massachusetts charter and established military government; removed British Colonial officials from the jurisdiction of Colonial courts; and provided for the quartering of British troops in occupied dwellings. A fifth act, the Quebec Act, which had been under consideration before, placed the territory between the Ohio and the Mississippi under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. These Intolerable Acts led directly to the convening to the First Continental Congress (q.v.) later in the same year.

Inukai, Ki Tsuyoshi 1855–1932. Japanese politician, president of the Seiyukai party (1929–32), and prime minister (Jan.–May, 1932). His assassination marked the rise of military and end of party control of Japanese government.

Investiture Controversy Power struggle (11th–12th cents.) between the Holy Roman Empire and the papacy. The controversy centered on the rift (from 1075) between Emperor Henry IV and Pope Gregory VII over "lay investiture" and was not finally settled until issue of the Concordat of Worms (q.v.) of 1122. At the time of the controversy, bishops and other clerics had both secular and clerical powers over ecclesiastical domains. Both the emperor and the pope were involved in their installation (investiture), a practice known as lay investiture. The practice led to abuses of the clerical offices and, reacting to a movement for reform, Pope Gregory abolished (1075) lay investiture. In the struggle that followed, Henry was excommunicated, civil war between factions of rebellious nobles broke out (over this and other issues) within the Holy Roman Empire, and Henry attacked Rome (1081–82). Under Emperor Henry V, the controversy continued until a compromise was finally arranged (1122) with Pope Calixtus II in the Concordat of Worms.

Invincible Armada See Spanish Armada

Io Greek mythological daughter of King Inachus of Argos. Beloved of Zeus, she was changed into a heifer by his jealous wife Hera and placed under the watch of the 100-eyed Argus. She is identified with the Egyptian Isis (q.v.), and the Ionian Sea was named for her.

Ion fl. 5th cent. BC. Greek poet. Only fragments of his poems and plays remain, but he was once awarded third prize in a drama competition won by Euripides.

Ionesco, Eugene 1912–. Romanian-born French playwright. In plays such as The Bald Prima Donna (1950) and Rhinoceros (1960) he is considered to have written the purest and most characteristic works in the modern Theater of the Absurd (q.v.).

Ionia Ancient district of Asia Minor on the Aegean Sea in modern western Turkey. Colonized by the Ionian Greeks (c1000 BC), it was taken by Croesus (6th cent. BC) and then by the Persians under Cyrus the Great. The Ionian revolt against Persia resulted in the Persian Wars (q.v.). The Ionian cities fell to Alexander the Great (334 BC) and later to Rome, and were destroyed as Greek cities by the Ottoman conquest (15th cent. AD).

Ionian School Early school of Greek philosophy, composed of philosophers who were active (6th–5th cents. BC) in Ionia. They held divergent views, though in general they attempted to explain the world around them in terms of matter and physical forces. Among the thinkers of this school were Thales, Anaximander, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, Heracleitus, and Diogenes of Apollonia.

Ionic order Greek architectural style. The Ionic is one of the major styles of early Greek architecture. It is characterized by slender fluted columns topped by a scroll-shaped capital, and had developed by the 6th cent. BC.

Iowa State in the north central US (pop. 2,913,400), the 29th state. Originally inhabited by the Sioux Indians, the area was explored by Père J. Marquette (1637–1675), Louis Jolliet (1645–1700), R. de La Salle (1643–87), and Julien Dubuque (1762–1810), who formed the first settlement, Dubuque, in 1833. Iowa was acquired by the US in the Louisiana Purchase (q.v.) of 1803 and became the Iowa Territory in 1838. The rich prairie soil attracted many settlers, and Iowa became a state in 1846. The state constitution was adopted in 1851. Iowa is noted for its abundant corn and other grains. Des Moines is the capital and largest city.

Iphigenia In Greek legend, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, sacrificed by her father at Aulis to save the Greek fleet, becalmed on its way to Troy. In another legend she is saved and carried off to Tauris. Euripides wrote famous plays on both legends.

Ipsus, Battle of Battle fought at Ipsus, in Phrygia, Asia Minor, in 301 BC, in which Antigonus I was slain by Lysimachus and Seleucus. The battle marked the end of Alexander's empire.

Iqbal, (Sir) Muhammad 1873–1938. Indian poet, philosopher, and political leader. He urged the establishment of an independent Muslim state, and is considered the spiritual father of modern Pakistan (q.v.).

IRA See Irish Republican Army

Irala, Domingo Martínez de d. 1556 or 1557. Spanish soldier and first governor of Paraguay (1537–42, 1544–56). He was the first governor in the Americas elected by a free vote of the colonists.

Iranian revolution See Iran (1978)

Iran Republic, located in the Mideast between Iraq and Afghanistan. Its capital is Teheran. "Iran" is the modern name of Persia (since 1935) and its emergence as a modern nation may be said to have begun with the overthrow of the Kajar dynasty (1925) by Reza Shah Pahlavi. Iran has inherited Persian cultural traditions and has long been a center of the Shi'ite sect of the Islamic religion. Under the Pahlevi dynasty, programs to modernize Iran were actively pursued. However, the pace of modernization, as well as discontent with repressive rule by the shahs, led to the Iranian revolution of 1979. Radical Muslim fundamentalists seized control of the government, attacked Western and modernist influences, and set about reviving traditional Muslim society. (For history prior to 1925, see Persia.) Key events in Iranian history are:

1921 Reza Pahlavi, a soldier, took power in a coup ending British control over Iran (then a League of Nations mandate); led military dictatorship.

1925 Reza Pahlavi elected hereditary shah; founded Pahlavi dynasty (in power 1925–79).

1925–41 Reza Shah Pahlavi in power; instituted reforms, promoted industrialization and advance of education.

1935 Name of the country officially changed from Persia to Iran by Reza Shah Pahlavi.

1936 Modernization begun; shah's wife and daughters appeared in public without veils, breaking tradition.

1937 Treaty with Iraq; ceded control of the strategic Shatt al Arab River to Iraq.

1941–45 WW II, Iran occupied by Britain and USSR.

1941 Reza Shah Pahlavi, forced out because of his German ties, abdicated in favor of his son Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlavi (Sept. 16).

Ireland (Republic of Ireland; formerly Irish Free State, Eire) Independent country located in the western part of the British Isles and occupying all but the northeastern section (Northern Ireland) of a large island. Invaded by the Celts in the 4th cent. BC, Ireland was subjected to raids by the Norsemen from the 9th–11th cent. The English took control of Ireland in the 12th cent. and thus began the long struggle between the Irish and their English overlords. The Irish finally gained independence from Britain in 1922. However, the long-standing hatred of the British has found new expression in the movement to unite Protestant Northern Ireland (created in 1920) with the Catholic Republic of Ireland. The movement began in the 1960s and since then the Irish Republican Army (IRA) has waged a brutal terrorist campaign aimed at Irish Protestants and the British. Key dates in the history of Ireland include:

c400 BC Ireland inhabited by Celtic tribes.

1982 Haughey returned to office as prime minister.

Ireland, John 1838–1918. US Catholic leader and first archbishop of St. Paul, Minn. (1888–1918). Ordained in 1861, he became a spokesman for Catholic immigrants, encouraging their integration and westward migration. He favored government support for Catholic schools, and was a spokesman for liberal Catholicism.

Ireland, William Henry 1777–1835. English forger of documents and manuscripts of William Shakespeare. His forgeries were discovered (1796), and he admitted to the hoax.

Irenaeus, Saint AD 125–*c*202. Early Catholic theologian. Irenaeus was bishop of Lyons and a Father of the church. He opposed Gnosticism (q.v.) eloquently in his work Against Heresies, one of the earliest Christian writings to treat doctrine systematically and one of the most important early witnesses to the ancient primacy of Rome over other Christian churches.

Irene *c*752–803. Byzantine empress. She served as regent for her son Constantine VI from 780 to 790 and in 797 deposed him and had him blinded. She opposed the Iconoclasts, and restored use of icons in the Eastern church. She was deposed in 802.

Ireton, Henry 1611–51. English soldier and Parliamentarian. The son-in-law of O. Cromwell, Ireton signed Charles I's death warrant. He later assisted Cromwell in dispossessing the Irish and establishing English settlers.

Irigoyen, Hipólito 1850?–1933. Argentine political leader. As head of the Radical party, he worked for electoral reform, and served as president from 1916 to 1922. Reelected in 1928, he was overthrown in 1930.

Iris Mythological Greek goddess of the rainbow, and messenger of the gods.

Irish Free State Name used by the Republic of Ireland from 1922 to 1937; that is, during the period that Ireland had dominion status within the British Empire. (See also Ireland [1922–1937].)

Irish Land Acts Legislation passed (1870–1903) for the benefit of Irish tenant farmers. The acts, initiated by W. E. Gladstone, were designed to curtail landlord abuse and provide incentives for peasant proprietorship.

Irish Republican Army ⟨IRA⟩ Irish nationalist organization dedicated to the creation of a single unified Irish state. Organized from the elements dispersed during the Easter Rebellion (q.v.) of 1916, it became the political arm of the Sinn Fein (q.v.) party, and opposed dominion status after the creation of the Irish Free State in 1922. It declined after its former supporter E. de Valera took over the Irish government and because of its opposition to the Allies in WW II, and was eventually outlawed by both Irish governments. In 1969, it launched new terrorist measures in Northern Ireland which the British government was not able to quell after a dozen years. However, the IRA was by then split into "officials," advocating a Socialist Ireland by democratic means, and the "provisionals," advocating terrorism.

Iron Act British law passed (1750) to limit the growth of the iron industry in the American colonies. It prohibited construction of slitting and plating mills and steel furnaces. It aimed to increase the export of iron ore from the colonies to Britain but had only a limited success.

Iron Age Period in the development of human culture in which iron came to be used predominantly for making tools and weapons. The Iron Age, which succeeded the Bronze Age (q.v.), began at various times in various locations. Widespread use of iron is generally thought to have begun in the Near East and it was the Hittites (q.v.) who are credited with discovering the technique of tempering iron. Following the breakup of the Hittite Empire (*c*1200 BC), ironworking techniques were spread through Europe and Asia Minor. By the 5th cent. BC, the use of iron was well established in Europe.

Iroquois Confederacy ⟨Iroquois League⟩ ⟨League of Five Nations⟩ Confederation of Indian tribes important in US Colonial history. It was composed of five tribes (a sixth, the Tuscarora, joined *c*1722) which occupied Northeast woodlands from Maine to the Great Lakes region. Formed sometime in the 16th cent., the Confederacy was well organized and proved highly effective in warfare. In the 17th cent., it drove off rival tribes, including the Huron, Neutral Nation, and Erie (qq.v.). In the French and Indian Wars (17th–18th cents.) they generally served British interests against the French. During the American Revolution, the Confederacy split, with most tribes taking the British side. They took part in the Battle of Oriskany, the Wyoming Massacre, and Cherry Valley Raid (qq.v.), but were finally defeated (1779) in New York by an American retaliatory force. Thereafter the Confederacy ceased to be important. The six tribes of the Confederacy were: Mohawk, Seneca, Onondaga, Oneida, Cayuga, and Tuscarora.

Isis Egyptian goddess. Isis was the goddess of nature and fertility. Her worship spread throughout the entire Mediterranean region and was practiced as late as the sixth cent. AD.

Islam One of the world's three great monotheistic religions, with Christianity and Judaism. Islam is the newest of the three and was founded by the prophet Muhammad (q.v.) in the 7th cent. AD. Muslims believe Muhammad was the last of the prophets (ie., Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus) sent by Allah (God). They exult in their submission to and praise of Allah. The Islamic faith, derived from the earlier Judaic and Christian faiths, is based on the Koran (q.v.), the revelations of Allah to Muhammad; the Sunna, collections of sayings of Muhammad (compiled in the 9th cent.); and the principle called Ijma, by which long-established practices are simply accepted as legitimate. The prophet Muhammad during his lifetime laid the foundations of the great Muslim theocratic state, the Empire of the Caliphate (q.v.). After his death, the empire was rapidly expanded to include domains stretching from India, across the Mideast, and into North Africa and served to spread the Muslim faith throughout these regions. A dispute over the succession of the caliph (ruler of the Muslim theocracy) in the 7th cent. gave rise to the two main divisions in the Muslim world: the Sunni (orthodox) and Shi'ite sects (qq.v.). The Shi'ites gave rise to other sects, including the Fatimids, Assassins, Karmathians, and Druses (qq.v.).

Ismail I 1486–1524. Shah of Persia, 1502–24, founder of Safavid dynasty. Established the Shi'ite form of Islam as the state religion, thus incurring the special enmity of the Sunni Turks and Uzbeks, with whom he warred unceasingly. Succeeded by his son Tahmasp I, father of Ismail II.

Ismail II 1551–77. Shah of Persia, 1576–77. (See also Ismail I.)

Ismail Pasha 1830–95. Egyptian ruler under Ottoman suzerainty (1863–79). The Suez Canal was completed during his rule, but his improvement schemes plunged Egypt into debt, and he was forced to sell his canal shares to Britain (1875) and put Egypt's finances under the control of foreign bondholders (1876). He was also known as the Khedive Ismail.

Isocrates 436–338 BC. Athenian orator and rhetorician. A pupil of Socrates, he was perhaps the leading teacher of his day. His 21 surviving discourses are valuable sources of information about Greek life.

Isolationism Policy of noninvolvement in the affairs of other nations. In the US, isolationists often cited the warning of G. Washington (in his farewell address) against "entangling alliances." Isolationist policies generally prevailed in the US during the 19th cent., and especially between WW I and WW II. Enough senators favored isolationism to prevent Senate ratification of the Treaty of Versailles (q.v.), which would have meant an active US role in the League of Nations (q.v.), as proposed by W. Wilson. International aggression, however, forced the US to abandon isolationist policies even before the country's entry into WW II.

Israel Republic located on the eastern Mediterranean coast. Its capital is Jerusalem. The history of modern Israel begins with its creation in 1948, but the movement to establish a Jewish state in Palestine dates to the late 19th cent. and the beginnings of the Zionist movement. Since its creation, Israel has had to contend with hostile Arab neighbors, frequent wars, and in more recent years terrorist attacks by guerrillas of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). Friction between Arabs and Israelis has been one of the factors contributing to Mideast instability. US efforts to settle the differences bore first fruit with the normalization of relations between Egypt (first Arab state to do so) and Israel in the 1970s. (For history of the region prior to 1948, see Palestine; also Israel, Kingdom of; Judah, Kingdom of.) Key dates in the history of modern Israel include:

1897 T. Herzl led first Zionist council at Basel, Switzerland.

1917 Balfour Declaration (Nov. 3) announced British support for a Jewish "National Home" in Palestine.

1922 League of Nations made Palestine a mandate territory of Britain.

1947 UN Special Committee on Palestine issued plan to divide Palestine into separate Arab and Jewish states and establish Jerusalem and environs as an international zone; plan passed (Nov. 29) by UN General Assembly.

1948 Israeli state created (May 14); Tel Aviv became capital.

1948–63 D. Ben-Gurion served as Israel's first prime minister.

1948–49 Arab-Israeli War broke out upon creation of the Israeli state (May 14); 400,000 Palestinian refugees fled from Israel to neighboring Arab states.

1949 Israel admitted to UN (May 11).

1950 Jerusalem officially became capital of Israel (Jan. 23).

1950 Law of Return enacted; provided for automatic citizenship for all immigrant Jews.

1956 Arab-Israeli War (Oct.-Nov.); Israelis invaded Sinai amid Suez Crisis; captured Sinai territory turned over to UN peace-keeping force.

1956 Israeli forces withdrew from the Sinai peninsula (Nov.); UN peace-keeping forces were subsequently moved into area.

1957 Israeli forces completed withdrawal from Gaza strip (Mar.); UN forces moved into area.

1963–69 Levi Eshkol in office as prime minister.

1964 PLO organized; dedicated to reclaiming lands occupied by Israel.

1967 Egyptian president G. Nasser mobilized Egyptian forces (May) and blocked Israeli access to the Gulf of Aqaba.

1967 Arab-Israeli War (June 5–10); Israelis victorious in Six-Day War; Sinai recaptured and the West Bank and Golan Heights taken.

1969 Prime minister L. Eshkol died (Feb. 26).

1969–74 G. Meir in office as prime minister.
1972 Palestinian terrorists killed 11 members of the Israeli Olympic team (Sept. 25) in attack on Olympic Village at Munich, Germany.
1973 Arab-Israeli War (Oct. 6–25); Israelis repulsed attacks by Egyptians and Syrians.
1974 Israeli forces pulled back from front lines in Syrian and Egyptian territory seized in 1973 war; UN forces established a buffer zone.
1974–77 Yitzhak Rabin in office as prime minister.
1976 Entebbe Raid (July 3–4) in Uganda to rescue passengers in airliner hijacked by Palestinians.
1977– M. Begin in office (June 21) as prime minister.
1977 Egyptian president Sadat made a historic state visit to Israel (Nov. 19–21) in the first of a series of peace initiatives between the two nations.
1977 Begin visited Egypt (Dec. 24–26) to continue discussion on possible peace settlement.
1978 Prime Minister Begin signed Camp David Accords (Sept. 17), providing a framework for peace with Egypt.
1979 Begin signed historic formal peace treaty with Egypt (Mar. 26); Israelis to pull out of occupied Sinai in phases (completed 1982).
1981 Israeli fighter planes sent into Iraq (June 7) to destroy a nuclear reactor under construction near Baghdad.
1981 Israel annexed occupied territory of the Golan Heights (Dec. 14).
1982 Lebanese War; Israelis invaded Lebanon (June 6) after long series of PLO attacks launched from inside Lebanon; PLO pushed north and encircled in Beirut; PLO, defeated (Aug.), was allowed to withdraw to various Arab countries.
1982 Massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees in Beirut, Lebanon, by Lebanese Christian militia; failure of Israeli occupation force to prevent massacre caused political crisis in Israeli government; the defense minister was ultimately forced to resign (1983).

Israel, kingdom of Originally, the Old Testament kingdom of the Hebrews ruled by Saul, David, and Solomon. Following the rebellion (c933 BC) by Jeroboam I, the kingdom was divided. The northern part, which was thereafter called Israel, included lands of the 10 northern tribes. The southern part, called Judah (q.v.), included the lands of the tribes of Benjamin and Judah. The kingdom of Israel was overrun (c722) by Assyrians (q.v.) under Sargon II, and many of the inhabitants were carried off. They became known as the Ten Lost Tribes (q.v.).

Issachar Son of Jacob and Leah. He gave his name to one of the 12 tribes of Israel, which ultimately settled west of the Jordan River.

Issus, Battle of Decisive victory (333 BC) for Alexander the Great over the Persians under Darius III during the Macedonian conquest of the Persian Empire. In an effort to check the invasion, Darius led an unsuccessful attack upon the Macedonians on the Issus plain in present-day southern Turkey. The Macedonians reputedly lost 450 men versus tens of thousands of slain Persians.

Istanbul ⟨Constantinople⟩ Turkish city (pop. 3,900,000), capital of Istanbul province, on both sides of the Bosporus. Turkey's chief city, it is a major seaport and commercial center. It began as Byzantium (c660 BC) and Constantine changed its name to Constantinople (q.v.) in 330 AD. It was the Turkish capital until 1922, when it was occupied by the Allies and the Ottoman sultan was deposed. In 1930, the name officially became Istanbul. It is one of the world's great historic cities.

Isthmian Games Greek athletic events. These games were held on the Isthmus of Corinth from 582 BC to the 4th cent. AD in honor of Poseidon. They consisted of both athletic and musical competitions.

Itagaki, Taisuke 1837–1919. Japanese statesman. He played a major role in the 1868 Meiji Restoration (q.v.), founded the Jiyuto (Liberal) party, and worked to bring constitutional reforms to the government.

Italian East Africa Italian African colonies. This was the name given (1936) to the federation of Italian-controlled colonies in Africa composed of Eritrea, Ethiopia, and Italian Somaliland. Italy lost them after WW II.

Italian Wars Series of destructive wars (1494–1559) for control of Italy. The wars, largely fought by France and Spain, resulted in the domination of Italy by the Spanish Hapsburgs. Fighting began with an invasion (1494) of Italy by French king Charles VIII. He took Naples but was forced out of Italy by an alliance of the Holy Roman Empire, Spain, and the pope. French king Louis XII launched another invasion (1499) and took Milan, Genoa, and Naples but was driven out of Naples (1503) by the Spanish. Pope Julius II then organized (1508) the League of Cambrai (q.v.) against Venice. By 1510, however, he had turned against France and formed the Holy League (q.v.) against it. Following some years of fighting, a peace was arranged (1516) by which the French held Milan and Spain kept Naples. Fighting again erupted (1521) between Holy Roman Emperor Charles V and the new French king, Francis I. In the course of battle, Francis was captured (at the Battle of Pavia) and forced to sign the Treaty of Madrid (1526). On being freed, Francis renounced the treaty and formed a new alliance with England, the pope, Venice, and Florence. In this phase of the wars, Charles sacked Rome (May 1527) and forced the pope to come to terms, the French failed in their siege of Genoa, and Francis finally gave up all claims to Italy in the Treaty of Cambrai (1529). Francis fought two other unsuccessful wars against the Spanish outside Italy. By the Treaty of Cateau-Cambrésis (1559), Spain was confirmed as the dominant power in Italy.

Italo-Ethiopian War War (1935–36) in which Italy took control of the independent African state of Ethiopia. It contributed to international tensions that led up to WW II. Following a border incident (Dec. 5, 1934) between Ethiopia and Italian Somaliland, the Italian dictator B. Mussolini ordered an invasion (Oct. 2, 1935). Ignoring calls for arbitration as well as League of Nations sanctions, the Italians advanced slowly against the Ethiopians in the rough terrain. After taking the fortress of Makallé (Nov. 8), they advanced to the capital, Addis Ababa. Troops under Gen. P. Badoglio took the capital (May 5, 1936) and thus ended the war. Italy's disregard for the League of Nations sanctions, and France's and Great Britain's failure to back the sanctions, severely damaged the League's prestige.

Italo-Turkish War ⟨Tripolitan War⟩ War (1911–12) in which Italy established a Libyan colony on the North African coast. As part of its policy of colonial expansion, Italy sought a North African colony and had won approval of its plans from major European powers. In the wake of the Moroccan Crisis (q.v.) of 1911, Italy declared war (Sept. 29, 1911) on Turkey and invaded the province of Tripoli. Tripoli and other coastal towns were taken quickly by forces under Gen. Carlo Caneva (1845–1922), but resistance by the Libyans forestalled a complete conquest. The Italian navy carried hostilities to other Turkish possessions in the Mediterranean, closing the Dardanelles (Apr.–May) and taking Rhodes (May 16) and the Dodecanese Islands (May). Threat of war in the Balkans forced the Turks to negotiate and, by the Treaty of Lausanne (q.v.), the war was ended (Oct. 18) in Italy's favor.

Italo-Yugoslav Treaty Agreement between Italy and Yugoslavia concluded Jan. 27, 1924. By its terms, the city of Fiume (Rijeka), constituted a free city by the Treaty of Rapallo (1920), was incorporated into Italy. Yugoslavia occupied the city in 1945 and Italy ceded it to Yugoslavia in 1947.

Italy ⟨Italian Republic⟩ Country located in southern Europe on the Mediterranean Sea. Its capital is Rome. Italy's history begins with the Romans and for many centuries it was the center of the vast empire of the Romans. After the fall of the Western Roman Empire (5th cent. AD), the Italian peninsula suffered many centuries of divisiveness, wars, and foreign domination. It nevertheless gave birth to the great flowering of Western civilization, the Renaissance. Rome, as the seat of the Roman Catholic popes, was also the spiritual center of Europe for many centuries. The movement for unification of Italy (Risorgimento) began early in the 19th cent. and in 1861 the modern state of Italy achieved unification. Italy fell under the sway of Fascism in the 1920s and was defeated by the Allies in WW II. Italy since the war has had numerous governments and the 1960s and 1970s saw the rise of leftist and Communist factions among Italian voters. (For history of Italy before the 5th cent., see Rome.) Key events in Italian history include:

AD 476–493 Odoacer ruled Italy; deposed last Western Roman emperor, Romulus Augustus (AD 476); virtual ruler until his assassination; Ravenna the capital.

AD 488 Theodoric the Ostrogoth invaded Italy, slew Odoacer, and ruled until his death in 526.

526 Byzantine emperor Justinian I sent forces (led by Belisarius and Narses) to expel the Goths from Italy.

552 Byzantines defeated Goths in Italy at Battle of Busta Gallorum; Goth king Totila killed and Byzantines briefly ruled Italy.

568 Invasion of Italy by the Lombards, another Germanic people, who conquered much of Italy; Byzantines held Exarchate of Ravenna and some other parts of Italy; Lombards did not take Rome, due to the efforts of Pope Gregory the Great.

568–774 Italy under the Lombards; Lombards allowed bishops temporal powers in localities; meanwhile the split between the Eastern church and Rome grew; the Byzantines renewed attempts to drive the Lombards from Italy.

751 Lombards captured the Byzantine capital of Ravenna.

753 Lombards threatened Rome; seeking to consolidate their hold on Italy, they advanced on Rome; Pope Stephen II appealed to the Frankish ruler Pepin the Short for aid against the Lombards.

754–756 Pepin the Short invaded Italy and defeated the Lombards.

756 Donation of Pepin; Pepin gave the pope lands about Rome that he had conquered from the Lombards; the donation became the basis of the Papal States and established the alliance between the pope and the kingdoms of Western Europe.

774 Charlemagne conquered the Lombards, who had again threatened Rome; Charlemagne became king of the Lombards after Desiderius surrendered at the siege of Pavia.

800 Pope crowned Charlemagne emperor of the Romans, thereby reconstituting the Western Roman Empire under Carolingian rule; thus formed alliance between European monarchs and popes.

9TH CENT. Carolingian Empire divided by Treaties of Verdun and Mersen; two great Frankish kingdoms created, East (German) and West (French); a third part, including Italy, later became contested.

9TH–10 CENT. Control of Italy passed to weak rulers; rise of petty kingdoms and frequent wars between them.

917 Arab Muslims conquered Sicily and pillaged Italy.

961–962 Otto I, then asserting his rule over the German states, aided Pope John XII against King Berengar II.

962 Otto I crowned emperor by the pope; Holy Roman Empire (eastern part of former Carolingian empire) then became the successor state to the Western Roman Empire; alliance formed between Otto I and the pope led to years of struggle for control of Italy, over which the popes claimed sovereignty.

11TH CENT. Normans conquered southern Italy and Sicily from the Byzantines and Arabs; these lands, later known as the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, remained under relatively strong rule thereafter and developed independently of the north; northern Italy, ravaged by wars, broke up into petty kingdoms and city-states.

1075–1122 Investiture Controversy, long struggle between reforming popes and the emperors of the Holy Roman Empire; ended by Concordat of Worms.

1130–54 Roger II reigned in the south; consolidated conquered lands, adding Capua, Naples and the Abruzzi; ruled one of the most advanced unified kingdoms of the time; feudal system firmly established there, but not in northern Italy.

12TH CENT. Hohenstaufen rulers of the Holy Roman Empire gained control of southern Italy as successors to the Normans.

12TH–13TH CENT. Lombard League opposed attempts by Holy Roman emperors to force submission of Lombard communes in northern Italy.

1183 Lombard League forced the church and Holy Roman Emperor to recognize its autonomy by the Treaty of Constance.

13TH–14TH CENT. Struggle between Guelphs (supporters of papal control in Italy) and Ghibellines (supporters of Hohenstaufen Holy Roman emperors); strife led to breakdown of central authority in north and central Italy, and the rise of local rulers in the cities; coincided with struggle between popes and Hohenstaufen emperors.

1279 German king Rudolf I, a Hapsburg, ended long struggle between popes and Holy Roman Empire over papal sovereignty in Italy; recognized papal sovereignty in Papal States and in south.

1266 Kingdom of the Two Sicilies conquered by Charles of Anjou, brother of France's king Louis IX.

1282 Angevin rule overthrown by the Sicilian Vespers and Sicily came under the power of the Spanish House of Aragon.

14TH CENT. Babylonian Captivity (1309–78); papacy removed to Avignon, France; control of the Papal States broke down and gave rise to independent cities and merchant republics (Venice and Genoa); French and Spanish warred for control in the south.

1348 The Black Death (bubonic plague), introduced by Genoese sailors coming from the East, ravaged Italy and spread to the rest of Europe.

14th–15th cent. Ruling families came to power in northern Italian cities—Medici in Florence, Visconti and Sforza in Milan, Este of Ferrara, Gonzaga of Mantua, Scala of Verona, etc.; presided over the Renaissance, which began in Italy.

1442 Spanish House of Aragon won complete control of southern Italy (Sicily and Kingdom of Naples) after driving out the French.

1478 Pazzi Conspiracy, abortive attempt to depose L. de Medici from power in Florence.

15TH–18TH CENT. Popes gradually established their authority over the Papal States and extended domains to include most of central Italy.

1494 Charles VIII of France invaded the peninsula, marking the beginning of the Italian Wars.

1494–1559 Italian Wars fought for control of Italy; Spanish Hapsburgs won after years of sporadic warfare.

1508–10 League of Cambrai formed by Holy Roman Empire, Spain, France, and the pope to conquer the Republic of Venice.

1511 Holy League of erstwhile enemies, Spain, Venice, and the pope, founded to drive Louis XII of France out of Italy.

1529 In the Peace of Cambrai, France renounced all territorial claims in Italy.

1559 By the Treaty of Le Cateau-Cambrésis, Spain gained control of both Milan and the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies.

1720 Kingdom of Sardinia created; formed by Savoy, Piedmont, and island of Sardinia under House of Savoy.

MID-18TH CENT. Naples, Sicily, Parma, and Piacenza passed to Spanish Bourbons; Milan, Mantua, Tuscany, and Modena, to Austria.

1792–1802 French Revolutionary Wars; Italy, scene of much fighting, fell to Napoleon.

1797 By the Treaty of Campo Formia, Napoleon established the Cisalpine Republic (Milan) and the Ligurian Republic (Genoa).

1798–99 Roman Republic, a short-lived republic established at Rome.

1805 Napoleon, crowned emperor in 1804, made himself king of an "Italy" consisting of the Cisalpine Republic, Emilia-Romagna, and Venetia.

1806 Joseph Bonaparte made king of Naples.

1808 Joachim Murat, Napoleon's brother-in-law, succeeded as king of Naples.

1808–30 Rise of the Carbonari society in Naples to oppose French domination; later became early supporters of liberal nationalist movement.

1809 Napoleon annexed the Papal States to France.

1815 Congress of Vienna after Napoleon's fall; Papal States restored; Spanish and Austrian rule restored in other parts of Italy.

1815–61 Rise of the nationalist movement (Risorgimento) for unification of Italy.

1816 Kingdom of the Two Sicilies formally created by unification of Sicily and Naples under one crown.

1831 Young Italy movement formed by Italian nationalist G. Mazzini.

1846 Pius IX elected pope; began a series of reforms in the Papal States.

1848–49 Revolutions of 1848; abortive revolts in Rome, Venice, Florence, Naples, and Savoy.

1849–61 Victor Emmanuel II reigned as king of Sardinia, which became the nucleus of the unified Italian state.

1852 Count C. Cavour became Sardinian prime minister.

1859–60 King Victor Emmanuel II, with French aid, drove Austrians out of Lombardy in north; he gained Lombard territories but ceded Savoy and Nice to France.

1860 Garibaldi and his Expedition of the Thousand conquered the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (May–Sept.); territory turned over to Victor Emmanuel II in the name of a united Italy.

1861 Kingdom of Italy formally proclaimed (Mar. 17).

1861–78 Victor Emmanuel II reigned as first king of a united Italy; Venetia, Rome, and part of Papal States still outside the Italian kingdom in 1861.

1861 First Italian parliament convened in Turin by Victor Emmanuel II.

1866 Austro-Prussian War; Italy joined Prussia and thereby gained control of Venetia, formerly Austrian domain.

1870 Victor Emmanuel II seized Rome, then in pope's control; beginning of Roman Question; Italian unification substantially completed.

1878–1900 Humbert I reigned as king of Italy.

1895–96 Italy prosecuted the Ethiopian War, establishing an East African colony.

1900–46 Victor Emmanuel III reigned as king of Italy.

1911–12 Italo-Turkish War; Italy established a Libyan colony on the North African coast.

1912 Universal male suffrage granted.

1915 Italy entered WW I after gaining territorial concessions in the secret Treaty of London.

1919 Italy gained control of former Austrian domains at the end of WW I; was awarded Trieste, southern Tyrol, Istria, and other territories.

1921 Fascist party organized by B. Mussolini.

1922 March on Rome conducted by Fascist followers of B. Mussolini; failure of King Victor Emmanuel III to oppose the movement led to Mussolini's rise to power.

1922 B. Mussolini and Fascist party took control of the Italian government (Oct. 29).

1922 Italian government voted B. Mussolini dictatorial powers for one year to restore order (Nov. 25).

1924 Matteotti Crisis resulted in the Aventine Secession by non-Fascist deputies (June 10); Mussolini suspended constitution and further consolidated power.

He tried to introduce Western ideas learned while on government missions to the US and Europe, and drafted the constitution of Japan in 1889. He was assassinated while serving as resident-general in Korea.

Iturbide, Agustín de 1783–1824. Mexican military leader. He led in the Mexican independence movement and, as Agustin I, ruled as emperor from May 1822 to March 1823.

Ituzaingo, Battle of Decisive Argentine-Uruguayan victory over Brazil, fought in what is now northeastern Argentina on February 20, 1827. Both Argentina and Brazil had claimed what is now Uruguay when they became independent from Spain and Portugal respectively. As a result of this battle, Uruguay was founded as an independent buffer state (1828).

Ivan III ⟨Ivan the Great⟩ 1440–1505. Grand duke of Moscow (1462–1505). He broke the power of Novgorod, exploited divisions between the Tatars of the Golden Horde (q.v.), and captured part of the Ukraine from Lithuania. He laid the groundwork for a strong Russian monarchy.

Ivan IV ⟨Ivan the Terrible⟩ 1530–84. Grand duke of Moscow (from 1533) and first czar of Russia (1547–84). Notorious for cruelty and erratic behavior later in his reign, he nevertheless greatly expanded Russian domains and consolidated the power of the monarchy at the expense of the Boyars. He succeeded (1533) his father, Vasily III, as grand duke and ended his regency (1547) by taking the title of czar. He summoned (1566) the first national assembly, began Russia's expansion to the east by conquering Kazan (1552) and Astrakhan (1556), taking them from the Tatars, and engaged in the long, unsuccessful Livonian War (q.v.) of 1557–82. Siberia was also conquered (1581–83). In 1565 he split the empire, taking part of it as his personal domain (the oprichniki), and then instituted a reign of terror. He executed and exiled Boyars, led a massacre of the inhabitants of Novgorod (1570), and murdered his own son Ivan (1580).

Ivan V 1666–96. Czar of Russia (1682–96). Physically and mentally unfit to rule, he was nominal coruler with Peter I under his sister Sophia's regency. He retained his title after Peter's succession (1689) but never actively ruled.

Ivan VI 1740–64. Czar of Russia (1740–41). A nominal ruler, he was deposed as an infant by Elizabeth, daughter of Peter I, and imprisoned until his assassination more than 20 years later.

Ivory Coast ⟨Republic of Ivory Coast⟩ Republic located in coastal West Africa. Capital is Abidjan. European traders established settlements in the region from the 16th cent. and for a time trade in slaves and ivory flourished. The French made the coastal region a protectorate in 1842 and created the colony of the Ivory Coast (1893), even though native resistance in the interior had not yet been completely broken. Made part of French West Africa (1895), it was held by Vichy government forces in WW II and became a French territory (1946). Ivory Coast next became an autonomous republic (1958) within the French Community. It achieved complete independence (Aug. 7, 1960). Since that time the republic has been under the leadership of President Felix Houphouët-Boigny (1905–), who has maintained a pro-Western policy.

Iwo Jima, Battle of US conquest (Feb. and Mar., 1945) of the principal island of the Volcano Islands, during WW II. Three US Marine divisions assaulted the entrenched Japanese on Feb. 9 after heavy bombardment and killed some 21,000 of them, taking 1,259 prisoners when the fighting ended on March 17. Americans killed totaled 4,189 and there were 15,749 wounded. The raising of the flag on Mount Suribachi on February 23 was considered one of the most memorable incidents of the war in the Pacific.

Jabir ibn Hayyan, Abu Musa ⟨Geber⟩ *c*721–*c*815. Arab alchemist and physician. Numerous writings attributed to him, on the nature of matter, influenced the development of medieval alchemy and chemistry.

Jabneh, Gamaliel of See Gamaliel

Jackson, Andrew 1767–1845. Seventh US president (1829–37), successor to J. Q. Adams. A military hero, frontiersman, and populist, he became the symbol of the movement known as Jacksonian Democracy. A Tennessee lawyer, he rose to prominence as a military commander in the War of 1812. He defeated the Creek Indians in the Battle of Horseshoe Bend (Mar., 1814) in Alabama and won (1815) a decisive victory over the British at the Battle of New Orleans (q.v.). Later, commanding a military force in the first Seminole War (1817–18), he crossed into Spanish-held Florida and provoked an international incident. He served in the US Senate, first in 1797 to 1798, and then from 1823 to 1825. During the latter term, he was an unsuccessful presidential candidate (1824), but by 1828 he had gained sufficient strength to win election to two terms (1828, 1832). Jackson's administration was marked by institution of the spoils system (q.v.); the rise of the Kitchen Cabinet (q.v.) and the Eaton affair that helped break it up; opposition to a protective tariff (favoring the eastern industrialists), which resulted in the nullification doctrine and the resignation (1832) of Vice-President J. Calhoun; the retiring of the public debt (1835); and Jackson's opposition to the Bank of the United States. In this last struggle, Jackson campaigned (1832) against rechartering the bank. On retaking office, he ordered transfer (1833) of federal funds from the central bank to designated state banks. This fueled a land speculation boom in the West. Jackson tried to curb it by ordering (1836) the purchase of all public lands in gold and silver. But the resultant drain on the banks, and mistrust of their bank notes already in circulation, finally led to the financial Panic of 1837.

Jackson, Robert Houghwout 1892–1954. American jurist, who served from 1941 to 1954 as associate justice of the US Supreme Court. He also served as US counsel at the Nürnberg Trials (q.v.).

Jackson, Stonewall See Jackson, Thomas Jonathan

Jackson, Thomas Jonathan ⟨Stonewall Jackson⟩ 1824–63. Confederate general and noted strategist during the American Civil War. Made a brigadier general (May, 1861) under Gen. J. Johnston; Jackson's steadfastness earned him his nickname at the first battle of Bull Run (1861). He further distinguished himself in fighting in the Shenandoah Valley (1862) and then served under Gen. R.E. Lee in the Seven Days' Battles, the second Battle of Bull Run, and Antietam. Made lieutenant commander, he fought at Fredericksburg, and Chancellorsville (qq.v.). He was accidentally killed by his own troops at Chancellorsville.

Jacksonian Democracy Term applied to the political developments accompanying the presidency of A. Jackson (1829–37), including the spoils system (q.v.), universal white male suffrage, and party conventions.

Jack the Ripper fl. 19th cent. English murderer who killed six or seven women in London between Aug. and Nov., 1888. The murders caused a sensation and, despite an exhaustive investigation, his identity has never been satisfactorily proven.

Jacob Biblical patriarch and brother of the disinherited Esau. After wrestling with an angel, his name was changed to Israel. His descendants formed the Twelve Tribes of Israel (q.v.).

Jacobins Political club that rose to prominence as a faction during the French Revolution (1789–99). Centered in Paris, the club at its height of power (1793) had thousands of branch groups throughout France. Under the leadership of M. Robespierre, the group dominated the revolutionary government for a time (1793–94) and was responsible for the Reign of Terror. The club began (1789) as a group of moderate deputies to the National Assembly, though by 1790 bourgeois moderates had swelled their ranks and made the club an important pressure group. Following the overthrow of the king (1792), the club admitted Montagnards (q.v.), and began to espouse more democratic, then radical, revolutionary aims. They opposed and ousted (1793) the Girondists (q.v.) over the prosecution of the French Revolutionary Wars, set up the revolutionary dictatorship, and oversaw the Reign of Terror. The Jacobins fell from power with Robespierre's overthrow on 9 Thermidor (July 27, 1794) and thereafter the club was suppressed.

Jacobite church See Syrian Orthodox church

Jacobites Supporters of English king James II (and his heirs in the Stuart line) after the Glorious Revolution (q.v.) of 1688. Considerable support for James remained after his exile (1688) and was kept alive (1688–1746) by Roman Catholics and disaffected Tories. Jacobites were especially active in Scotland and two unsuccessful rebellions were organized there (1715, 1745). The first Jacobite rebellion ("the fifteen") broke out when George I succeeded to the English throne. Led by J. Erskine, 6th earl of Mar, the Jacobites hoped to install James's son, James Francis Edward Stuart (the Old Pretender), but they were soundly defeated. The second Jacobite rebellion broke out in Scotland. It was led by James's grandson, Charles Edward Stuart (Bonnie Prince Charlie) and was aided by the French, then at war with Britain in the War of Austrian Succession (q.v.). After early victories, Charles's advance into England stalled. His subsequent retreat turned into a rout of the Jacobites at Culloden Moor (Apr. 16, 1746) and thus ended Jacobite resistance.

Jacquard, Joseph Marie 1752–1834. French weaver and inventor. He invented the Jacquard loom, the first machine to weave in patterns.

Jacquerie Revolt (May–June, 1358) by French peasants during the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453). Peasants in northern France rebelled when French nobles demanded increased taxes despite the fact that the countryside had recently been pillaged by English mercenary soldiers. Led by Guillaume Cale (d. 1358) and E. Marcel, the peasants sacked and burned castles. They were defeated less than a month later, however, and thousands were massacred by the vengeful nobles.

Jade Emperor Chinese Taoist supreme deity of the universe believed to inhabit a jade palace.

Jadwiga ⟨Hedwig⟩ 1371–99. Queen of Poland (1384–99). She inherited Poland (and her sister, Hungary) from her father, Louis I. She married Jagiello, grand duke of Lithuania, uniting the two kingdoms. She is a canonized Catholic saint.

Jaffa ⟨Joppa⟩ Mediterranean seaport city, since 1950 incorporated with Tel Aviv (q.v.), Israel. It was prominent in biblical history, during the Crusades, during the Napoleonic Wars, and during WW I, and changed hands many times.

Jaffna, kingdom of Former Tamil kingdom in northern Sri Lanka (Ceylon). It was well established by the 14th cent. and lasted until it was conquered by the Portuguese in the 17th cent. The Tamils, a Dravidian people from India, had settled on the island as early as *c*200 BC.

Jagatai d. 1242. Mongol conqueror and a son of Genghis Khan. He joined in his father's great wars of conquest and, following the death of Genghis Khan, did not oppose the succession of his younger brother, Ogadai, as grand khan. In the division (1227) of the Mongol empire among the heirs of Genghis Khan, Jagatai gained vast domains corresponding roughly to Turkistan and Afghanistan.

Jagello See Jagiello

Jagellon See Jagiello

Jagiello ⟨Jagello⟩ ⟨Jagellon⟩ Dynasty that ruled in Bohemia, Hungary, Lithuania, and Poland in the 14th–16th cents. (in Poland from 1386 to 1572). The dynasty was founded by Jagiello, duke of Lithuania, who took the name Ladislas II of Poland and was a major force in European affairs.

Jagirdar system Indian feudal system introduced (13th cent.) by the sultans of Delhi by which officials received the right to collect revenues from estates in lieu of salaries. The system weakened central authority but survived until Indian independence.

Jahn, Friedrich Ludwig 1778–1852. German teacher and nationalist who founded the Turnverein gymnastic movement, through which he sought to free Germany from Napoleonic rule and instill in young Germans a sense of strength and national identity.

Jainism Indian religion. Arising in the 6th cent. BC as a reaction to the rigidity of the Vedic religion, Jainism was by tradition established by 24 saints, or religious figures, the last being Vardhamana Mahavira. It taught a rigid form of asceticism, a reverence for all living things, and the performance of good acts as means for escaping the cycle of rebirth and achieving Nirvana. At first quite distinct from Hinduism, Jainism eventually incorporated elements of Hinduism. Today many prominent Indians practice Jainism.

Jajau, Battle of Battle fought (June 12, 1707) at Jajau, India, by Bahadur Shah and his brother Azam Shah, over succession to the Mogul throne in India. Bahadur Shah was victorious, and his brother was killed in battle.

Jalal ad-Din ar-Rumi *c*1207–1273. Great Persian Sufi (mystical) poet and founder of an order of dervishes. In the West, his disciples were called whirling dervishes.

Jamaica Island republic in the West Indies, noted as a tourist attraction and source of bauxite. It was discovered by C. Columbus in 1494 and controlled by Spain until captured by the British in 1655. Sugar was a major product until the abolition of slavery (1833). There have been many Negro insurrections. Independence was finally gained Aug. 6, 1962. From 1972–80, Prime Minister Michael Manley pursued a policy of instituting a socialist economy. However, the election of Edward Seaga (1980) brought a return to pro-West, capitalistic orientation.

James I ⟨James the Conqueror⟩ 1208–76. King of Aragon (1213–76). James conquered the Balearic Islands (1229–35), drove the Moors from Valencia (1238), and enabled Castile to recapture Murcia from the Moors (1266).

James I 1394–1437. King of Scotland (1406–37), successor to his father, Robert III. By breaking the power of the nobility and the Highland clans, James established strong monarchical rule in Scotland. He was assassinated by a group of nobles.

James I ⟨James VI⟩ 1566–1625. Scottish king of England (1603–25), successor to Elizabeth I and first of the Stuart line in England. James first succeeded (1567) his mother, Mary Queen of Scots, to the Scottish throne (under a regency) and then succeeded to the English throne. During his reign in England, war with Spain was ended, the Hampton Court Conference (q.v.) was called (1604), the Gunpowder Plot (q.v.) was exposed (1605), and relations between James and the Parliament deteriorated seriously. This last helped bring on the English Civil War some years later. In addition, English colonies at Jamestown and Plymouth were founded (1607, 1620) and the King James Bible was commissioned (1604). The throne of England passed to him by virtue of his descent from Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII.

James II 1430–60. King of Scotland (1437–60), successor to his father, James I. He reestablished the strong monarchy created by his father and attacked English outposts (1460).

James II 1633–1702. English king (1685–88), successor to his brother Charles II. His overthrow during the Glorious Revolution (q.v.) of 1688 established the supremacy of the Parliament in England. James served under his brother Charles after the restoration (1660) and converted to Catholicism (1668). Shortly after being crowned, he put down a rebellion by the Duke of Monmouth (1685) and instituted the Bloody Assizes (q.v.). His penchant for autocratic methods and efforts to promote Catholicism, notably his declarations of indulgence (q.v.), prepared the way for the Glorious Revolution. But it was the birth (1688) of his son and (Catholic) heir that finally precipitated the revolt. James was succeeded by his daughter Mary and her Protestant husband, William III. His attempt to retake the throne was foiled at the Battle of the Boyne (q.v.) in 1690, though Jacobites (q.v.) carried on the cause for him and his heirs until 1746.

James III 1451–88. King of Scotland (1460–88), successor to his father, James II. A weak ruler, he was unable to control his nobles, who rebelled. They defeated and killed James at Sauchieburn.

James IV 1473–1513. King of Scotland (1488–1513), successor to his father, James III. He unified Scotland and allied it with France against Henry VIII of England. He and many of his nobles died in the Battle of Flodden (q.v.).

James V 1512–42. King of Scotland (1513–42), successor to his father, James IV. Assuming power after 1528, he supported Catholicism in Scotland, and allied himself with France against his uncle Henry VIII.

James VI See James I

James, Epistle of See James, Saint, "the Lesser"

James, Henry, Sr. 1811–82. American philosophical and theological writer and the father of novelist H. James, Jr., and philosopher W. James.

James, Henry 1843–1916. American author, who lived most of his adult life in England. His novels reflect the impact of the older, more sophisticated European society, as in The American, The Ambassadors, and The Golden Bowl.

James, Jesse Woodson 1847–82. American outlaw leader of a legendary gang of train and bank robbers in the 1860s and 1870s. James was murdered by Robert Ford, a gang member, for the reward.

James, Saint, "the Greater" d. AD *c*44. One of the Apostles, brother of John and son of Zebedee. He and his brother were called Sons of Thunder because of their zeal. Traditionally he preached Christianity in Spain, where he is venerated as Saint James of Compostela, whose feast (July 25) has for centuries been one of Europe's greatest festivals. According to tradition, he returned to Judaea, where he was martyred.

James, Saint, "the Lesser" d. AD *c*62. One of the Apostles, traditionally identified as the kinsman of Jesus, who became bishop of Jerusalem and is supposed to have been the author of the Epistle of James in the New Testament. According to Josephus, he was stoned to death.

James, William 1842–1910. American philosopher and psychologist, brother of H. James. He published his major work, The Principles of Psychology, in 1890. He was an advocate of the theory of pragmatism (q.v.) and a member of the Harvard faculty until 1907. His other important works include The Will to Believe (1897) and The Varieties of Religious Experience (1902).

Jameson, Sir Leander Starr See Jameson Raid

Jameson Raid Unsuccessful attempt to overthrow (1895) the Boer government of Transvaal. Led by Sir Leander Starr Jameson (1853–1957), the controversial raid was part of a broader scheme to bring all of South Africa under British control. The plan was hatched by C. Rhodes and Jameson and counted on starting a general uprising of Uitlanders, non-Boer foreigners, in Transvaal. To that end Jameson and some 500 armed men invaded Transvaal (Dec. 29, 1895). They were quickly overpowered by Boer forces at Krugersdorp, however, and surrendered (Jan. 2, 1896).

James the Conqueror See James I

Jamestown First North American permanent British settlement. Situated in Virginia on the James River, the former village was founded by the London Company on May 14, 1607. Although repeatedly ravaged by fire, Jamestown was the capital of Virginia until 1699.

Janáček, Leoš 1854–1928. Czech composer whose works reflect his intense interest in Czech folk music. His best-known work was his opera Jenufa.

Janissaries ⟨Janizaries⟩ A special elite corps of the army of the Ottoman Empire, noted for its military successes (15th–16th cents.). Members of the corps were procured by taking the children of Ottoman Christian subjects and training them. By the 18th cent. they had become involved in Ottoman politics. Opposing reform, they revolted (1826), were defeated, and the organization was dissolved.

Janizaries See Janissaries

Jansen, Cornelis 1585–1638. Dutch bishop and theologian. His four-volume work Augustinus (1640) was a major influence in the development of Jansenism.

Jansenism Religious movement (fl. 17th–18th cents.) in the Roman Catholic church, centered in France. Characterized by its emphasis on the doctrines of divine grace and predestination and by its opposition to the Jesuits, Jansenism sought a return to the severity of early Christianity. The movement stemmed from the posthumous publication (1642) of Augustinus, a controversial work by C. Jansen based on the teachings of Saint Augustine. Papal condemnation of Jansenist doctrines began (1653) with Innocent X, and thereafter defense of the movement became a facet of the larger conflict, known as Gallicanism (q.v.), between the pope and French Catholics. Jansenists were finally suppressed (1730) in France, however, when Louis XIV joined the pope in opposing them. Noted Jansenists were Antoine Arnauld, B. Pascal, and P. Quesnel.

January Insurrection ⟨Second Polish Revolution⟩ Revolution by Poles (1863–64) against Russian domination of the Congress Kingdom of Poland. Despite the liberalization of Russian rule in Poland by Czar Alexander II, Polish radicals (mainly students) continued political agitation. When the Polish government sought (Jan., 1863) to draft them into the Russian army, they fled to the countryside and began an armed insurrection. Although badly outnumbered and poorly armed, they gained popular support through their promises of land reform. The revolt thus spread to Lithuania and Belorussia. Receiving only diplomatic support from European powers and unable to institute their reforms, the rebels soon lost popular support. Russia crushed the insurrection, reinstituted direct administration of Poland, and reintroduced harsh measures.

Janus Roman god of beginnings and guardian of doors and archways. He is usually represented as having two faces. The month of January is named after him.

Japan Island country located off the east coast of Asia. Its capital is Tokyo. Throughout much of its early history, Japan was strongly influenced by Chinese culture. A feudal system of government, in which shoguns, or military leaders, held real power, evolved in Japan in the 12th cent. and continued well into the 19th cent. With the 19th-cent. Meiji Restoration, the emperor again held real power and the feudal system was abolished. Japan was rapidly modernized and, by the beginning of the 20th cent., was already a major industrial and military power. Militarists gradually gained control of government, however, and Japan joined the Axis Powers in WW II. Japan was forced to surrender after the US used atomic bombs against it. In the postwar era, Japan again rose as an industrial power and today ranks among the leading industrial nations. Key events in Japanese history include:

660 BC Legendary Emperor Jimmu supposedly founded Japanese Empire; all Japanese emperors traditionally believed descended from him.

AD 360 Legendary Empress Jingo supposedly led an army to invade Korea; contacts with the mainland stimulated the development of Japanese civilization.

AD 430 First imperial court records appear in (then) recently adopted Chinese script.

FROM 5TH CENT. Japan ruled under loose feudal system; Chinese cultural influence strong.

C552 Buddhism brought to Japan from Korea.

604 First Japanese constitution; established administration of imperial domains and created a council.

621 Imperial edict established Buddhism as the official religion of Japan.

794–1185 Heian period; Fujiwara family dominated government as regents; arts flourished.

794 Kyoto made imperial residence; remained capital for almost entire period to 1869.

966–1027 Dictatorship of Michinaga, greatest of the Fujiwaras, considered classical period of Japanese literature and culture.

1156 Hogen War; Minamoto and Taira clans gained power.

1180–85 Gempei War, civil war leading to downfall of Taira clan and rise of Minamoto clan as ruling family in Japan.

1192 Great Minamoto leader, Yoritomo, took the title of shogun, inaugurating military dictatorship and establishing military capital at Kamakura on Tokyo Bay.

1192 Shoguns, military rulers, established as actual rulers in Japan while emperors continued as nominal rulers; system of government continued to 1867, when emperor regained power.

13TH CENT. Zen Buddhism introduced by Dogen.

13TH CENT. Shinran flourished; he founded True Pure Land sect.

1219–1333 Hojo family served as virtual rulers of Japan (in post of regent); period marked by frequent civil wars.

1274 Mongols attempted invasion of Japan.

1281 Mongols again unsuccessful in attempt to invade Japan; fleet broken up by typhoon, which gave rise to kamikaze ("divine wind").

1331–33 Emperor Daigo II (reigned 1318–39) unsuccessfully attempted to break power of shoguns and restore imperial authority; Hojo family, driven out by Daigo, replaced by Ashikaga family.

1338–1578 Muromachi period; Ashikaga shoguns ruled with their capital at Kyoto; period marked by frequent wars between feudal lords; Buddhist church became powerful political and military force; arts flourished; commercial prosperity.

1542 Portuguese made first contact with Japanese.

1549 Saint Francis Xavier began Christian missionary work in Japan.

1568–82 Nobunga, warrior of the Taira clan, gained control of the government and broke the power of the Buddhist church.

1590 Hideyoshi unified Japan under his control as dictator; reorganized the feudal nobility and their lands.

1592, 1596 Hideyoshi twice invaded Korea.

1603 Tokugawa shogunate founded by Ieyasu; capital moved from Kyoto to (modern) Tokyo.

1603–1867 Tokugawa period; capital at Tokyo; rigid feudal system instituted; rise of the samurai, feudal loyalties, and Confucianism; commercial prosperity and the rise of the merchant class.

1612 Persecution of Christians began

1624 Period of isolationism began; travel to and from Europe forbidden; only Dutch traders allowed use of one port, Nagasaki.

1637–38 Shimabara Rebellion by Japanese Catholics.

1720 Ban on European books ended; subsequent years marked by increasing contact with Europeans.

1841–43 Tempo Reforms introduced by Tokugawa shogunate in unsuccessful attempt to return to feudal agricultural society.

1854 US Commodore M. Perry forced Japan to officially end isolation and sign Treaty of Kanagawa (Mar. 3).

1858 Harris Treaty signed, opening five ports to US trade (July 29).

1867 Imperial courtiers allied with landowners forced resignation of last shogun and "restored" the boy emperor Meiji, or Mutsuhito (reigned 1867–1912).

1867–1912 Meiji Restoration; power of emperor restored; period of modernization and Westernization in Japan, during which time Japan rapidly developed its industry and became a world power.

AFTER 1868 Rise of the Zaibatsu, family-controlled cartels.

1871 Feudal fiefs abolished by imperial decree; merchant families ascendant.

1876 Samurai warrior class abolished by imperial decree after system of universal military service was established.

1877 Satsuma Rebellion, unsuccessful revolt by samurai warriors.

1889 Constitution drafted by Prince H. Ito, establishing limited constitutional monarchy with bicameral legislature.

1894–95 Sino-Japanese War fought with China over control of Korea; Japan emerged victorious and gained substantial Chinese concessions; marked beginning of Japanese imperialism.

1899 Rights of extraterritoriality in Japan abandoned by major powers.

1904–05 Russo-Japanese War fought; victorious Japan emerged as a world power; first defeat of European by an Asian power.

1905 Treaty of Portsmouth ended the Russo-Japanese War (Sept. 5); Japan maintained foothold in Manchuria.

1908 "Gentlemen's Agreement" with US by which Japan restricted emigration of laborers.

1910 Japan annexed Korea (Aug.).

1912–26 Emperor Taisho reigned.

1914 WW I; Japan occupied Tsingtao and the German-held Marshall, Caroline, and Mariana islands.

1915 Twenty-one Demands presented to China; sought virtual control of China.

1918–22 Japanese forces played major role in Allied military expedition against revolutionary Red Army in Siberia during Russian Civil War.

1921 Four-Power Treaty signed.

1922 Nine-Power Treaty signed.

1925 Universal manhood suffrage instituted.

1926– Emperor Hirohito reigned.

1929 Japan hard-hit by Great Depression; gave impetus to militarist movement.

1931 Japan overran Manchuria following the Mukden Incident, deliberately provoked by its army there (Sept. 18); soon after, created puppet state of Manchukuo.

1932 Prime minister T. Inukai assassinated; rise of militarists in the Japanese government.

1933 Japan withdrew from League of Nations after a commission criticized its Manchurian policy.

1936 Anti-Comintern Pact signed; was a German-Japanese agreement to oppose the Communist International.

1936 Militarists unsuccessfully attempted coup.

1937–45 Second Sino-Japanese War; culminated in gradual expansion of Japanese influence in China.,

1938 National Mobilization bill passed; gave government control over industry and finance; created Japanese war machine.

1940 Political parties dissolved, following period of increasing police repression.

1940 WW II, Japan joined the Rome-Berlin Axis (Sept.).

1940 "Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere" proclaimed; Japanese troops dispatched to occupy French Indochina.

1941 Neutrality pact signed with Soviets (Sept.).

1941 Gen. H. Tojo became prime minister; militarists thus gained complete control of the government (Oct.).

1941–45 Japan a major participant in WW II; engaged US in Pacific theater, beginning with Pearl Harbor attack (Dec. 7); after initial gains, Japanese were slowly driven back and defeated; final surrender came after US dropped atomic bombs on Hiroshima (Aug. 6) and Nagasaki (Aug. 9).

1945–52 American occupation; forces under Gen. D. MacArthur in complete control; instituted a demilitarization and democratization process; economy recovered slowly.

1946 Emperor Hirohito acceded to a new constitution and the role of constitutional monarch (May).

1948 War crimes trials of militarists concluded.

1951 Peace treaty concluded at San Francisco between Japan and most of her wartime enemies, including the US (Sept.).

1951 Security treaty with the US (renewed 1960, 1970); US to defend Japan against attack; allowed US troops to be stationed there.

1952 Japan regained full sovereignty (Apr. 28).

AFTER 1955 Liberal Democratic party became dominant in Japan.

1958 Japan became a member of the UN.

1960 Widespread protest against US-Japanese security treaty forced Prime Minister Kishi Nobusuke to resign.

1972 US restored Okinawa to Japan (May 15).

1972 Agreement signed in China formally ended state of war between Japan and China (begun Sept. 25, 1937); relations with China resumed.

Jaspers, Karl 1883–1969. German philosopher and psychopathologist and a leading figure in the modern existential movement of philosophy.

Jassy, Treaty of ⟨Iasi⟩ Agreement signed between Russia and Turkey on Jan. 9, 1792, at the end of the Russo-Turkish War (1787–92). The Ottomans regained Moldavia, Walachia, and Bessarabia, while Russia gained a portion of the Black Sea coast and saw her annexation of the Crimea recognized.

Jaurès, Jean 1859–1914. French Socialist leader who helped to found the unified French Socialist party (1905). He opposed the imminent French-German military confrontation of WW I and was assassinated by a fanatical nationalist.

Java Sea, Battle of the Japanese naval victory (Feb. 27–Mar. 1, 1942) during WW II over an Allied force in the Java Sea. A fleet of 14 Dutch, British, Australian, and American ships, under Dutch command, was routed by a superior Japanese force. The Japanese sank all Allied ships but four American destroyers and sustained minimal losses. The victory opened the way to their subsequent conquest of Java.

Jay, John 1745–1829. American founding father. He was president of the Continental Congress (1778). With B. Franklin and J. Adams, he negotiated peace with Britain after the American Revolutionary War. He favored a strong central government and was one of the authors of the Federalist Papers (q.v.). As the first chief justice, he held the states to be subordinate to the federal government in Chisholm vs Georgia (1793)—a decision that provoked the passage of the 11th Amendment, denying authority to the federal courts in suits brought by citizens against states. He negotiated Jay's Treaty (q.v.), the unpopularity of which ruined his chances for the presidency. He later served two terms as governor of New York (1795–1801).

Jayewardene, Junius Richard See Sri Lanka

Jay's Treaty Treaty concluded Nov. 10, 1794, between the US and Great Britain. Though the US won most of the important concessions it sought, the treaty nevertheless aroused a heated controversy in the US and was denounced as a surrender to the British. Negotiated by J. Jay (US) and Lord Grenville (Brit.), the treaty was intended to forestall another war with Britain. It provided for British evacuation of the Northwest Territory, settlement of boundaries between the US and British holdings in North America, compensation for attacks on US shipping, and removal of most restrictions on US commerce within British territories. Restrictions on US trade with the British West Indies were among the provisions that fueled the controversy.

Jeanne d'Arc See Joan of Arc

Jeans, Sir James Hopwood 1877–1946. English mathematical physicist and astronomer. He contributed to the dynamical theory of gases and the tidal theory of planetary evolution and wrote many popular books on astronomy.

Jedda See Jidda

Jefferson, Thomas 1743–1826. Third US president (1801–09), successor to J. Adams. His administration, a victory for the Jeffersonian Republicans, saw the decline of the Federalist party. Earlier, Jefferson was active in the events leading up to the American Revolution. He was a leader in the House of Burgesses (q.v.) in Virginia, helped organize the Committees of Correspondence (q.v.), was a delegate to the Second Continental Congress (1775–76), and wrote the draft of the Declaration of Independence (q.v.). In following years he served as governor of Virginia (1779–81), delegate to the Continental Congress (1783–84), and as secretary of state (1790–93). In the latter post he became the center of the anti-Federalist faction and quarreled with Federalist leader A. Hamilton. Support for his opposition faction, which came to be called the Jeffersonian Republicans, grew in intervening years, and in 1796 Jefferson was elected vice-president (1797–1801). During this period he drafted the Kentucky Resolutions (q.v.) in response to passage of the Alien and Sedition Acts, which were at least partly directed at Jeffersonian Republicans. His support increased, and he became president (election decided in House of Representatives) in 1801 and was reelected in 1804. His term was marked by US participation in the Tripolitan War (q.v.), the Louisiana Purchase (q.v.), the Lewis and Clark expedition (q.v.), prohibition of the slave trade in the US, A. Burr's trial on charges of treason, and conflicts with Britain over attacks on US shipping. Incidents such as that involving the Cheaspeake (q.v.), were an outgrowth of war between Britain and Napoleon, and Jefferson tried unsuccessfully to impose trade embargoes (see Embargo Act) to put a stop to them. The failure of these measures later contributed to the outbreak of the War of 1812 with Britain.

Jeffersonian Republicans First opposition political party in US history and direct ancestor of the present Democratic party (q.v.). Organized in the 1790s around opposition to Federalism (q.v.), it held power nationally between 1801 and 1825 under the presidencies of T. Jefferson, J. Madison, and J. Monroe. It advocated limited government.

Jeffreys of Wem, George Jeffreys, 1st Baron 1645?–1689. English judge under James II, notorious for his vicious and corrupt conduct during the Bloody Assizes, following the 1685 rebellion of James Scott, duke of Monmouth.

Jehoahaz ⟨Joahaz⟩ *d. c*804 BC. King of Israel, son and successor to Jehu. The Bible reports that under him the northern kingdom reached one of its lowest points because he did what was evil (II Kings 13:1–9).

Jehoash ⟨Joash⟩ 1. King of Judah (837?–798? BC). Rescued from death at the hands of Jehu and made king at seven, he reigned 40 years before being assassinated. 2. King of Israel (800?–785? BC). He was son and successor to Jehoahaz, and his reign was supported by the prophet Elisha. At Beth Shemesh he defeated and reduced Judah to vassalage.

Jehoiachin *fl. c*598 BC. King of Judah, successor to his father, Jehoiakim. He ruled only a few months before being captured (597?) by Nebuchadnezzar, carried to Babylon with 10,000 of his people, and imprisoned until the emperor's death.

Jehoiakim *fl. c*600 BC. King of Judah (609–598) and son of Josiah. He deposed his brother with the support of Pharaoh Necho. He later rebelled against the Babylonian Nebuchadnezzar, and died before the Babylonian capture of Jerusalem. Jeremiah prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple during his reign.

Jehoram ⟨Joram⟩ *d. c*843 BC. King of Israel and son of Ahab. With aid from the king of Judah, he suppressed a revolt in Moab. The death of Jehoram and his family at the hands of Jehu marked the end of the family of Ahab.

Jehoshaphat ⟨Josaphat⟩ fl. 9th cent. BC. King of Judah, successor to his father, Asa. He allied himself with Ahab, king of Israel, and was killed in the latter's expedition to capture Ramoth-Gilead from Syria.

Jehovah's Witnesses Religious sect founded in the US by Charles Taze Russell (1852–1916) during the late 19th cent. The Witnesses are noted for their belief in Christ's imminent Second Coming and in their rejection of national allegiances. The members promote their views through the publications The Watchtower, Awake!

Jehu King of Israel (842–815 BC) and legendary chariot driver. He led the revolt against Ahab and his wife, Jezebel, which resulted in their murder because they introduced Baal worship. He also slew kings Jehoram and Ahaziah of Israel and Judah, and was anointed king of the former by the prophet Elijah.

Jellicoe, John Rushworth Jellicoe, 1st Earl 1859–1935. British naval officer who led the British fleet against the German navy at the WW I Battle of Jutland (q.v.) in 1916.

Jemappes, Battle of Battle of the French Revolutionary Wars (q.v.), fought on Nov. 6, 1792, at Jemappes, in southern Belgium. The French defeat of the Austrian army led to French occupation of Belgium.

Jena-Auerstedt, Battles of French victories in related battles fought on Oct. 14, 1806, in the Napoleonic Wars. 1. At Jena, Napoleon flanked and defeated several Prussian and Saxon forces totaling some 48,000 men, with his army totaling some 56,000. Napoleon lost about 5,000 men and pushed on to Weimar; German casualties were 11,000 killed and wounded and 15,000 captured. 2. North, in Auerstedt, on the same day, a 26,000-man French force under Marshal L. N. Davout assaulted a 63,000-man Prussian force. The French lost 8,000 men but killed or wounded 12,000 of the enemy.

Jenkins's Ear, War of War (1739–*c*1743) between England and Spain. The war was soon absorbed by the larger conflict of the War of the Austrian Succession (q.v.). Exclusion of English traders from Spain's American colonies led to smuggling and to a growing resentment against the Spanish. Matters came to a head (1738) when Capt. Robert Jenkins (fl. 1731–39) appeared before Parliament. There he exhibited the remains of his ear, which he claimed the Spanish had cut off (1731) after boarding his ship in the West Indies. War was declared (1739), despite Sir R. Walpole's reluctance. In addition to English attacks (1739–40) on Spanish cities in the Caribbean, there were two attacks (1740, 1743) on St. Augustine (Florida), led by J. Oglethorpe, and a Spanish attack (1742) on Georgia. By 1743, however, hostilities in the Americas had become part of King George's War (q.v.), which was itself a part of the War of the Austrian Succession.

Jenner, Edward 1749–1823. English physician. From 1796 he pioneered the use of vaccination to prevent smallpox, a major step in the development of the science of immunology.

Jennings, Sarah, duchess of Marlborough See Anne, queen of England

Jeremiah ⟨Jeremias⟩ *c*650–*c*570 BC. One of the major Hebrew prophets, whose activities and prophecies are recorded in the Old Testament book named for him. He claimed to have received a divine call to be a prophet in the 13th year of King Josiah (627–626 BC). He preached social justice, warned against Egypt, and counseled the leaders of Judah to accept Babylonian vassalage. He prophesied the fall of Jerusalem and the Temple in the reign of King Jehoiakim (609–598 BC), ascribing these coming calamities to the people's apostasy from God. After the Babylonian captivity (586 BC), he was taken to Egypt, where he died. A personal feature of the prophecies of Jeremiah are his laments at being obliged to preach a message so unpopular that he was constantly threatened with imprisonment and death.

Jeremias See Jeremiah

Jericho Ancient city in Palestine, west of the Jordan River. It was captured and destroyed (*c*1400–1200 BC) by the Israelites under Joshua, according to the Bible. Modern archaeological excavations have shown that the city was several times destroyed and rebuilt during a history of continuous occupation dating back to *c*8000 BC.

Jeroboam I fl. 10th cent. BC. First king of the divided northern kingdom of Israel. He is noted for encouraging idolatry in his kingdom, after successfully leading the revolt against Solomon's successor, Rehoboam (933 BC), which left only the southern kingdom to the house of David.

Jeroboam II fl. 8th cent. BC. King of Israel, successor to his father, Jehoash. He was the last great king of an independent Israel. The prophets Amos and Hosea appeared during his reign.

Jerom Bos See Bosch, Hieronymus

Jerome, Saint AD *c*347–419? Christian scholar and monastic leader. After retreating to the desert for study, he was ordained in AD 378 and became secretary to Pope Saint Damasus (382). From 386, he lived in a Bethlehem monastery, where he wrote several theological works, corresponded with Saint Augustine and other church leaders, and did his monumental translation of the Bible from the original Greek and Hebrew into Latin. This Latin version of the Bible, called the Vulgate (q.v.), remained the official version of the Bible in the Western Catholic church until it was finally replaced by an updated Latin version in 1979.

Jerome of Prague *c*1365–1416. Czech religious reformer who supported the doctrines of J. Wyclif and defended J. Huss at the Council of Constance (q.v.). He was burned as a heretic.

Jerusalem Israeli capital city (pop. 376,000), located in central Israel. Historically, it is important to the Jewish people as the capital of their ancient kingdom of Israel; to the Christians as the site of the Last Supper, the crucifixion, and the resurrection of Christ; and to the Muslims as the place where Muhammad ascended to heaven. Inhabited from the 2d millennium BC (and perhaps earlier), the ancient city was conquered by King David (*c*1000 BC) and became the capital of the kingdom of Israel (q.v.). His son, King Solomon, built the Temple (*c*970 BC) and thereby established the city's importance to the Jewish religion. It was conquered variously in succeeding centuries until 586 BC, when the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar took the city, destroyed the Temple, and instituted the Babylonian captivity (q.v.). Persian king Cyrus returned the city to the Hebrews some years later, and the Temple was rebuilt by 515 BC. From the 2d cent. BC, under the Maccabees (q.v.), the city rose to great prominence, and, after the Roman conquest in 65 BC, the city flourished as the capital of the Roman client king, Herod the Great. This period of Roman control was marked by the crucifixion of Christ, the Jewish Revolts (q.v.), destruction of the city and Temple by the Romans (AD 70), and the rebuilding of the city by Emperor Hadrian. With toleration of Christianity established within the empire, Jerusalem became a Christian center (4th cent. AD). It was conquered (AD 637) by the Muslims (who constructed the Dome of the Rock mosque, q.v.), by the crusaders (who made it the capital of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem, q.v.), and by the Muslim conqueror Saladin (1187). Thereafter the city declined until the 19th cent. During WW I, it was captured (1917) by the British and made the capital of their territory of Palestine. The UN plan for creation of the Israeli state set Jerusalem aside as an internationally administered city, but, during the 1948 Arab-Israeli War, the Arabs occupied the Old City and the Israelis took the New City (made the Israeli capital in 1950). In the 1967 Arab-Israeli War, the Israelis occupied the Old City and annexed it (June, 1967).

Jerusalem, Council of Conference convened by the Apostles in Jerusalem (AD *c*50) concerning the rights of gentile Christians. In the interests of church harmony, it was ruled that the gentiles were exempted from the Mosaic Law observed by the Judaic Christians. Paul and Barnabas pleaded for exemption for the gentile Christians, and Peter agreed. The entire proceedings are described in Acts 15.

Jesus ⟨Jesus Christ⟩ *c*8/6 BC–AD *c*29. Founder of Christianity, recognized by Christians as the Son of God and the Messiah whose coming was prophesied. His life, as set forth in the four Gospels, began with his miraculous birth (celebrated Dec. 25) to Mary at Bethlehem. Jesus was a Jew and was raised in his father's trade of carpentry. He grew up in a period of unrest among the Jews, then chafing under Roman rule. Following his baptism by John the Baptist (q.v.), Jesus realized his divine calling and retired into the wilderness to meditate. Gathering his disciples about him, Jesus then undertook missions to Galilee. The success of these and other missions, the power of his miracles, and his attacks on the Pharisees made Jesus a threat to the governmental and religious authorities of Jerusalem. Thus, when he went to Jerusalem for the last time and created a sensation by ousting the money-changers from the Temple, the authorities sought to eliminate him. After the Last Supper (q.v.), Jesus was betrayed by Judas Iscariot, arrested, and crucified. Blame for the death of Jesus has been a major controversy within the Christian church, some holding the Jewish people accountable, while others (especially in recent times) believe it was the Roman officials. He was entombed that day, and some days later his resurrection (celebrated as Easter) became known in Jerusalem. Thereafter his disciples went forth to spread his teachings, and thus began the Christian era.

Jethro In the Bible, a priest of the Midianites and father-in-law of Moses. He advised Moses to appoint deputies to help govern the people.

Jewish Agency An international political group evolved from the World Zionist Organization. Founded by C. Weizmann (1929), the agency was the primary institution responsible for the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine (1948). It sought world support and oversaw the settlement of Jews in Palestine and functioned as a kind of "government" of the Jews settled there, dealing with the British Mandate authorities.

Jewish Revolts Revolts of ancient Palestine Jews against Roman rule. 1. The first revolt (AD 66–73) resulted in the capture of Jerusalem and the destruction of the Jewish Temple by the Roman general (later emperor) Titus in AD 70. 2. The second revolt (AD 132–135), led by S. Bar Kokhba, was bloodily suppressed by Hadrian, who converted Jerusalem to Aelia Capitolina and forbade any Jew to live in it.

Jews Term generally used to refer to individuals who are either of Jewish parentage or who are followers of the Judaic religion. Within the Jewish community some groups apply stricter limitations on the use of the term. Jew, Hebrew, and Israelite are frequently used interchangeably, but these terms properly refer to peoples of specific historic periods. Hebrew usually refers to the nomadic people who were ancestors of the Jews. Israelite refers to the Hebrews and their descendants who inhabited the Holy Land. It applies to these peoples in the period from their entry into the Holy Land until the end of the Babylonian captivity in 538 BC. Israelites who survived the captivity are called Jews, and this applies to their descendants into modern times. (For history, see Palestine, Judaism, Israel.)

Jezebel fl. 9th cent. BC. In the Bible, Phoenician princess who became the wife of King Ahab of Israel. She encouraged the worship of Baal and was a bitter opponent of the prophet Elijah, who prophesied her downfall. This in fact came about when Jehu triumphed over the house of Ahab; Jezebel was thrown from her window and killed, and her body was eaten by dogs. Her name is used to describe any wicked woman.

Jim Crow laws Laws passed by states in the US South legalizing racial segregation. In the 1880s, following Reconstruction (q.v.), statutes were devised separating blacks from whites in transportation facilities and excluding blacks entirely from specific establishments (housing, schooling, etc.) serving whites. In 1896, the US Supreme Court, in Plessy vs Ferguson, ruled separate but equal facilities constitutional, and the Jim Crow laws were not successfully challenged until after WW II. It wasn't until the ruling in the 1954 Brown vs Board of Education of Topeka case (q.v.) declaring separate educational facilities to be unconstitutional that the doctrine began to be reversed. In 1963, the March on Washington (q.v.) helped lead to the civil rights acts (q.v.) of the 1960s, which effectively outlawed Jim Crow laws and customs. The name is believed to have been taken from a character in a popular minstrel show.

Jimenez de Cisneros, Francisco ⟨Ximenes, Cardinal⟩ 1436–1517. Spanish prelate and statesman. An austere Franciscan, he was confessor to Queen Isabella (1492) and later archbishop of Toledo (1495) and cardinal. He was regent of Spain after the death of Ferdinand (1516) and faced down the nobles while preparing for the accession of Charles I (later the emperor Charles V). A patron of learning, he founded the University of Alcalá (1508) but was also a severe inquisitor general (named 1507).

Jimenez de Quesada, Gonzalo *c*1500–79. Spanish conquistador who conquered Colombia and founded Bogotá (1538).

Jimmu Tenno fl. 660 BC. Legendary first emperor of Japan. Believed to have been a direct descendant of the Sun Goddess, he is regarded as founder of the dynasty of Japanese emperors that still reigns today.

jingoism Term used to describe advocates of extreme nationalistic fervor. It was first applied to those who wanted Britain to intervene on the side of Turkey in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78 and came from a line in a popular song, "We don't want to fight, but, by jingo, if we do, we've got the ships, we've got the men, we've got the money too."

Jinnah, Muhammad Ali 1876–1948. Indian Muslim statesman. He served as head of the Muslim League from 1934 to 1948, led the struggle to establish Pakistan (q.v.), and served as its first governor-general (1947–48).

Joab Old Testament soldier. A nephew of David, he commanded David's army. He was notably brutal in the deaths of Abner, Amasa, and Absalom. He was executed by Solomon.

Joachim, Joseph 1831–1907. Hungarian violinist and composer, noted for his interpretation and performance of works for violin.

Joanna II 1371–1435. Last Angevin queen of Naples. Her reign (1414–35) was marked by numerous intrigues and love affairs and a power struggle between the houses of Anjou and Aragon for control of Naples.

Joan of Arc ⟨Jeanne d'Arc⟩ *c*1412–31. French saint and heroine during the Hundred Years' War (q.v.). A visionary, the young girl became convinced she had a divine mission to aid the French dauphin Charles (later Charles VII) against his opponents, the English and the Burgundians. After persuading Charles to give her troops, she raised the Siege of Orleans (q.v.) in 1429 and won the Battle of Patay (q.v.). Shortly after Charles's coronation, however, she failed in her siege of Paris and was captured by the Burgundians. Turned over to an ecclesiastical court, she was tried as a heretic and was burned at the stake (May 30, 1431). She was canonized in 1920.

Joash See Jehoash

Job Biblical figure. Job, the faithful servant of God, maintains his faith despite incredible trials and the loss of everything he values in his life. Eventually he is restored by God to happiness. The book of Job in the Bible is considered one of the world's most profound attempts to explain why the innocent suffer while the wicked prosper.

Jodl, Alfred 1890–1946. German general. Jodl was Hitler's chief of the armed forces operation staff and a key adviser. He was condemned to death at the Nürnberg Trials (q.v.) for his shooting of hostages and prisoners of war.

Joel *c*5th cent. BC. Old Testament prophet. One of the minor prophets, he foretells the establishment of Jerusalem as a fertile, holy city upon the people's full acceptance of God.

Joffre, Joseph Jacques Césaire 1852–1931. French general and marshal of France. He was commander in chief of the army in WW I (1914–16), and his tactics led to the French victory at the 1914 Battle of the Marne (q.v.).

Johanan ben Zaccai fl. 1st cent. AD. Leader of the Pharisees at Jerusalem. After the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans (AD 70), he founded the academy at Jabne (Jamnia), thus assuring the survival of traditional Judaism.

Johannesburg Largest city (pop. 1,441,000) and commercial center of the Republic of South Africa. Founded in 1886, it is the mining center of the Witwatersrand gold fields in Transvaal province.

John 1167?–1216. King of England (1199–1216). The youngest son of Henry II, he succeeded his older brother, Richard I. He quarreled with the church and saw his kingdom placed under a papal interdict in 1208. He abused feudal custom and was forced by his barons to sign the Magna Carta (q.v.), England's first grant of general liberties, in 1215. During his reign England lost most of its domains on the continent (Angevin empire).

John I *c*925–976. Byzantine emperor (969–976). He recaptured Bulgaria from the Russians and extended Byzantine rule over parts of Syria.

John I ⟨John the Posthumous⟩ 1316. King of France and posthumous son of Louis X. He lived only five days and was succeeded by Louis's brother, Philip V.

John I 1350–95. King of Aragon (1387–95), successor to his father, Peter IV. He was a patron of education, and he adopted a friendly policy toward French politics and customs.

John I ⟨John the Great⟩ 1357–1433. Portuguese king (1385–1433), successor to his half-brother, Ferdinand I, and an illegitimate son of Pedro I. He opposed Castilian claims to the Portuguese throne during the interregnum (1383–85) that followed Ferdinand's death. Following an invasion (1384) by Castilian armies, John was crowned (1385) and went on to win the Battle of Aljubarrota (q.v.) in 1385. This victory marked the turning point in the hostilities (ended formally, 1411) and thus secured Portugal's independence. During his subsequent reign, John concluded an alliance with England (1386) and began the period of Portuguese overseas colonization. One of John's sons was Prince Henry the Navigator.

John I 1358–90. Spanish king of Castile and León (1379–90). He had to defend his throne against a claim by John of Gaunt and ended up marrying off his son and successor to the latter's daughter. He tried to unite the Portuguese and Castilian crowns but was twice defeated by the Portuguese, notably at the Battle of Aljubarrota (q.v.) in 1385.

John I ⟨John Zápolya⟩ 1487–1540. King of Hungary (1526–40) and governor of Transylvania (1511–26). His reign as king was marked by conflict with Ferdinand of Austria, who claimed the throne.

John II ⟨John Comnenus⟩ 1088–1143. Byzantine emperor (1118–43). John occupied himself with regaining lost Byzantine lands and influence. He was successful against the Magyars, Serbs, Petchenegs, and Roger II of Sicily, but was forced to yield trading privileges to Venice.

John II ⟨John the Good⟩ 1319–64. King of France (1350–64), successor to his father, Philip VI. Captured by the English in the Battle of Poitiers (1356) during the Hundred Years' War, he was released in return for hostages. When one hostage escaped, John returned voluntarily to England, where he died.

John II 1397–1479. King of Aragon (1458–79) and Navarre (1425–79), successor in Aragon to his brother Alfonso V. His reign was troubled by civil war and rebellion.

John II 1405–54. Spanish king of Castile (1406–54), successor to Henry III. A patron of the arts, he left governing to a favorite. He was the father of Isabella I.

John II ⟨John the Perfect⟩ 1455–95. King of Portugal (1481–95), successor to his father, Alfonso V. He curbed the power of the nobility, made peace with Spain, and sponsored colonizing expeditions. Bartholomew Dias rounded the Cape of Good Hope (1488) during his reign.

John II 1609–72. King of Poland (1648–68). His reign was called "the Deluge" because of incessant warfare with the Cossacks, Russia, and Sweden. In 1655, Charles X of Sweden nearly overran Poland. After ceding the Ukraine to Russia, John retired to a monastery.

John III ⟨John Ducas Vatatzes⟩ d. 1254. Byzantine emperor of Nicaea (1222–54). John was left only the region of Nicaea by his father-in-law and predecessor, Theordore I Lascaris. John managed to recapture much lost territory but could not regain Constantinople from the Latins.

John III ⟨John the Fortunate⟩ 1502–57. King of Portugal (1521–57). Portuguese influence in Brazil, India, Macao, and the Spice Islands was expanded during John's reign. Domestically, he instituted the Inquisition and involved the Jesuits in higher education. The Portuguese overseas empire reached its apogee during his reign.

John III ⟨John Sobieski⟩ 1624–96. King of Poland (1674–96). John was commander in chief of the Polish army prior to his election as king. His reign was marked by constant warfare with the Turks. For raising the Turkish siege of Vienna (1683) he became known as the champion of Christendom.

John IV d. 1656. King of Portugal (1640–56). John expelled the Spanish from Portugal (1640) and became king. He also ousted the Dutch from Brazil (1654) and allied himself with France against Spain in order to protect his interests. He was the first king of the Braganca (q.v.) line.

John V ⟨John Palaeologus⟩ 1332–91. Byzantine emperor (1341–91), successor to his father, Andronicus III. He was forced to recognize the suzerainty of the Ottoman Turks, who had captured large parts of the empire. He tried to heal the Christian schism between East and West in order to secure Western help against the Turks.

John V 1689–1750. King of Portugal (1706–50). John inherited the War of the Spanish Succession (q.v.) but eventually made peace with France and Spain. Enriched by gold from Brazil, his court was an elegant center of culture. He increased Catholic influence in secular affairs.

John VI ⟨John Cantacuzenus⟩ 1292–1383. Byzantine emperor (1347–54). He was chief adviser to Andronicus III and claimed the regency after the latter's death (1341). He fought and later became coregent with John V through the aid of the Ottoman Turks, thus helping the Turks to gain more power over the empire. He abdicated (1354) and retired to a monastery, where he wrote a history of the period.

John VI 1769–1826. King of Portugal (1816–26). Regent from 1799 for his insane mother, Maria I, he was forced to rule from Brazil (1807–21) because of the Napoleonic Wars and French occupation. He was also forced to recognize Brazilian independence (1825) under his son Dom Pedro I.
