ESHCOL (Ĕsh′ cŏl) Place name meaning, "valley of grapes," or "cluster." 1. A valley in Canaan that was explored by the twelve Israelites sent to spy out the land (Num. 13:23). From the valley of Eshcol they brought back an exceptionally large cluster of grapes. Apparently the valley was given the name on account of grape clusters such as the one found by the Israelite spies. 2. Brother of Mamre and Aner (Gen. 14:13). He and his brothers were Amorites who were allies of Abram in the defeat of Chedorlaomer.

ESHEAN (Ĕsh′ ē ăn) KJV spelling of Eshan. See Eshan.

ESHEK (Ē′ shĕk) Personal name meaning, "oppression" or "strong." A member of the tribe of Benjamin descended from King Saul (1 Chron. 8:39).

ESHKALONITE (Ĕsh′ kă lŏn īte) Citizen of Ashkelon. See Ashkelon.

ESHTAOL (Ĕsh′ tā ŏl) Place name meaning, "asking (for an oracle)." Town in lowlands of Shephelah of Judah allotted to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:33) but also to the tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:41). Near there, God's Spirit stirred Samson of the tribe of Dan (Judg. 13:25). Samson was buried near Eshtaol (Judg. 16:31). The tribe of Dan sent men from Eshtaol to seek a new homeland (Judg. 18:2–11). Its citizens were kin to the clan of Caleb and to residents of Kiriath-jearim (1 Chron. 2:53). It may be located at modern Irtuf, a mile south of Ishwa.

ESHTAOLITE (Ĕsh′ tă ō līte) Citizen of Eshtaol. See Eshtaol.

ESHTARAH (Ĕsh′ tă răh) NIV spelling of Beeshterah. REB reads "Be-ashtaroth. See Beeshterah.

ESHTAULITE (Ĕsh′ tă ū līte) KJV spelling of Eshtaolite. See Eshtaolite.

ESHTEMOA (Ĕsh tē mō′ ă) Place and personal name meaning, "being heard." The name may indicate an ancient tradition of going to Eshtemoa to obtain an oracle or word of God from a prophet or priest. 1. City in tribal allotment of Judah (Judg.

15:50, with variant Hebrew spelling; see Eshtemoh). God set it aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:14). While living in exile in Ziklag, David sent some of the plunder from his victories to Eshtemoa (1 Sam. 30:28). 2. A member of clan of Caleb in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:17), probably listed as the clan father of those who settled in Eshtemoa. The relation between the two Eshtemoas in 1 Chronicles 4:17,19 is not clear. The city is the modern es-Samu about eight and a half miles south-southwest of Hebron and fourteen miles northeast of Beersheba.

ESHTEMOH (Ĕsh' tē mōh) Variant Hebrew spelling of Eshtemoa (Josh. 15:50). See Eshtemoa.

ESHTON (Ĕsh' tŏn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. A member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:11–12).

ESLI (Ĕs' lī) Personal name of unknown meaning. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:25), spelled Hesli in NAS. Some scholars equate him with Elioenai (1 Chron. 3:23). See Elioenai.

ESPOUSAL See Betrothal.

ESROM (Ĕs' rŏm) KJV New Testament spelling of Hezron. See Hezron.

ESSENES Members of a Jewish sect that existed in Palestine during the time of Christ. They are not mentioned in the New Testament. They were ascetics who practiced community of goods, generally shunned marriage, refrained from attending worship in the Temple, and attached great importance to the study of the Scriptures. Many scholars associate the Dead Sea Scrolls discovered in 1947 with an Essene community. See Dead Sea Scrolls; Qumran.

The ruins of ancient Qumran probably inhabited by Essenes from 130 B.C. until A.D. 70.

ESTHER (Ĕs' thēr) Persian personal name meaning, "Ishtar." Heroine of biblical Book of Esther whose Jewish name was Hadassah. Esther is the story of a Jewish orphan girl raised by her uncle, Mordecai, in Persia. She became queen when Queen Vashti refused to appear at a banquet hosted by her husband, King Ahasuerus. Esther did not reveal that she was Jewish.

The traditional site of the tombs of Esther and Mordecai in the modern country of Iran.

Mordecai heard about a plot against the king's life which he reported through Esther. Haman was made prime minister and began to plot against Mordecai and the Jews because they would not pay homage to him. The king issued a decree that all who would not bow down would be killed. Esther learned of the plot and sent for Mordecai. He challenged her with the idea, "Who knoweth whether those art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther 4: 14). She asked Mordecai and the Jews to fast with her while she decided. She entered the king's presence unsummoned which could have meant her death. The king granted her request.

Haman was tricked into honoring Mordecai, his enemy. At a banquet, Esther revealed Haman's plot to destroy her and her people, the Jews. Haman was hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai. Mordecai was promoted, and Esther got the king to revoke Haman's decree to destroy the Jews. The Jews killed and destroyed their enemies. The book closes with the institution of the festival of Purim.

The Book of Esther The Book of Esther has been placed among the writings in the Old Testament. It, along with four others small books—Song of Solomon, Ruth, Ecclesiastes, and Lamentations, was placed on one scroll called the "Meghilloth" and was used for festival readings. Many scholars feel that the Book of Esther is a short historical novel or short story sprinkled with historical data and names to make its message more urgent and important. Thus it would be comparable to Jesus' parables. Others think it is an attempt to write history with free interspersion of speeches and conversation following the conventions of history writing of its day. Others insist on the historicity of every detail, pointing to Esther 10:2.

The Purpose of the Book The purpose is not clear from a reading of the book. It considers the question of destruction or survival of the Jews under persecution. Though the book deals with religious issues, the name of God is never mentioned in the book. The writer deliberately avoids the name of God. When Esther prepares herself to present herself unrequested into the presence of the king, prayer does not accompany fasting. Also vengeance is more prominent than devotion. An important function of the book is to explain the observance of the festival of Purim. The Purim festival was a Jewish commemoration of deliverance—deliverance of the Jews from the hands of the Babylonians.

If this is the purpose of the book, then that explains the absence of the name of God. The book was intended to be read at the Purim festival—a festival of merrymaking, noise, and conviviality. Thus the major theme of the book, persecution returning on the head of those who initiate it, leads through all the details of the story to the final victory which Purim celebrates.

Theological Teachings Many feel that the religious concepts taught in the book are sub-Christian. Probably the persons who can understand and appreciate the attitudes of Esther are those who have lived through persecution and occupation by others. In times of peace it is incomprehensible and unforgivable that hard suffering creates such rigidity and callousness. Though the book does not mention the name of God, it has a definite theology. Throughout, the book points to justice and indicates that faithfulness to the covenant people is a duty whether it pays or not. Mordecai's insistence that Esther must intervene to save her people is based on the idea that a good Jew must worship and be loyal to the covenant God and to Him alone. To be faithful to Him means to be faithful to His people.

The book teaches the axiom that "the Lord helps those who help themselves." During the days of oppressive persecution the very survival of the people depended upon the Jews doing something. The book shows the sovereignty of God working in a foreign land to preserve His people. It shows God working through people of unpretentious backgrounds as they prove faithful to Him. It shows ultimate punishment for those who oppose God's people. It calls for celebration of God's deliverance.

Outline

I. Humble faithfulness can lead to large responsibilities (1:1—2:18).
  A. Political power of ungodly rulers may be far-reaching (1:1–8).
  B. Protection of personal rights may result in loss of position and rights (1:9–15).
  C. Family relationships and respect cannot be enforced by political means (1:16–22).
  D. Self-giving love and loyalty to family, nation, and God may require hiding one's identity to gain opportunity to serve (2:1–11).
  E. Humble obedience can lead to opportunities to serve (2:2–18).

II. Faithfulness to one's people can be expressed through service to a foreign ruler (2:19—3:15).
  A. Loyalty to one's people does not require participation in conspiracy against foreign rulers (2:19–23).
  B. Loyalty to the foreign ruler does not mean participating in immoral government practices (3:1–2).
  C. Loyalty to God and godly traditions over loyalty to foreign rulers may cause personal and even national persecution (3:3–15).

III. Positions of influence bring responsibility to act for God's people (4:1–17).
  A. Mourning rites are appropriate responses to national danger (4:1–4).
  B. God's people must act and pray in times of danger (4:5–17).

IV. Responsible actions for God are honored by God's actions for His people (5:1—8:17).
  A. Self-giving action is rewarded in unexpected ways (5:1–8).
  B. Human pride leads to rash actions (5:9–14).
  C. Honor comes to God's faithful at the opportune moment (6:1–3).
  D. Human pride often leads to humiliation (6:4–12).
  E. God's people will experience vindication eventually (6:13–14).
  F. Brave action for God's people brings deliverance (7:1–10).
  G. God's providence brings reward for faithfulness and joy to God's people (8:1–17).

V. Celebration through the ages helps God's people remember His salvation and the lessons of history (9:1–32).

VI. Work for God's people can bring new opportunities for service and honor (10:1–3).

Jerry Stubblefield

ETAM (Ē′ tăm) Place name meaning, "place of birds of prey." 1. A rocky crag where Samson camped during his battles with the Philistines (Judg. 15:8–13), conferring there with men of Judah who wanted to bind him and hand him over to the Philistines. The exact location is not known. It must be near Lehi. See Lehi. 2. A town in territorial allotment of tribe of Judah according to earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament but omitted from present Hebrew manuscripts (Josh. 15:59 REB). Rehoboam, king of Judah (931-913 B.C.), fortified the city (2 Chron. 11:6), which seems to indicate that Etam stood between Bethlehem and Tekoa. Rehoboam probably feared attack from Egypt, which had sheltered Jeroboam, king of Israel (2 Chron. 10:2). Pharaoh Shishak did, indeed, attack (2 Chron. 12:2–4). Some scholars think Rehoboam's fortification program came after Shishak's attack. A road ran along the ridge through or near Hebron, Beth-zur, and Bethlehem to Jerusalem. Etam protected the approach to this road from the east. Etam is located at khirbet el-Khohk, southwest of Bethlehem. 3. Member of tribe of Judah and apparently clan father of town of same name associated with Jezreel (1 Chron. 4:3). 4. A village assigned to Simeon (1 Chron. 4:32), though it is not listed in Simeon's tribal territory in Joshua 19:7. It may be modern Aitun, about eleven miles southwest of Hebron.

ETERNAL LIFE The quality of life including the promise of resurrection which God gives to those who believe in Christ. This important term in the New Testament is emphasized in the Gospel of John, but also appears in the other Gospels and in Paul's writings. Eternal life in the New Testament eliminates the boundary line of death. Death is still a foe, but the one who has eternal life already experiences the kind of existence that will never end.

Yet in this expression, the emphasis is on the quality of life rather than on the unending duration of life. Probably some aspects of both quality and duration appear in every context, but some refer primarily to quality of life and others point to unending life or a life to be entered into in the future.

"Quality of life" involves (1) life imparted by God; (2) transformation and renewal of life; (3) life fully opened to God and centered in Him; (4) a constant overcoming of sin and moral evil; and (5) the complete removal of moral evil from the person and from the environment of that person.

Eternal Life As Experience in the Present This term in John has important implications. The one trusting in the Son has eternal life; the one disobeying the Son has the wrath of God abiding on him (John 3:36). Trusting and obeying go together; they leave no room for neutrality. The one who hears Christ's message and believes or trusts in the Father who sent Him has eternal life. This person does not come into condemnation but has passed out of death into life (John 5:24). The perfect tense—one who has passed and remained in the state of having passed from death into life—emphasizes eternal life as a permanent, present reality. But no presumption is possible here. Eternal life is a present reality for the one hearing and trusting (John 5:24).

The bold metaphors of eating and drinking point to active involvement with Christ. "The one eating my flesh and drinking my blood, has eternal life" (John 6:54*a*). (Translations in this article are the author's.) Verse 57 explains: "The one eating me will live because of me." Since Christ is our life, we must make that life part of us by "sharing in Christ," by actively coming to Him and drawing life-giving strength from Him.

Eternal life is defined in Jesus' high priestly prayer: "Eternal life is this: that people be constantly knowing you, the only genuine God and Jesus Christ whom You sent" (John 17:3). The present tense of the verb "to know" indicates that this knowledge is by experience—not from intellectual facts. Genuine knowledge of God by experience brings eternal life. Such experience transforms life.

Eternal Life as Experienced in the Present and Future John compared the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness to the lifting up of the Son of Man on the cross and His exaltation to heaven. People who respond to Christ by constant trust have eternal life (John 3:15). They have healing from something more deadly than snakebite—the destructive effects of sin. Here eternal life involves a present healing, a present reality. But John 3:16 refers both to the present and the future.

Christ defined His true sheep as those who hear or listen to His voice and follow Him (John 10:27). To such disciples, He gives eternal life, and they will not perish (John 10:28). Again, no presumption is possible. Those are secure who persistently listen, hearken, and follow. For such people eternal life is both a present and a future reality.

Eternal Life as a Future Experience "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" the rich young ruler asked. (Mark 10:17; compare Matt 19:16; Luke 18:18). He saw eternal life as a final inheritance. His earnestness moved Jesus, and Jesus loved this young man (Mark 10:21). But he had to make a decision: Would he follow Jesus without his possessions? (Mark 10:22). He answered, "No." He could not part with his possessions first and then follow Jesus.

In Matthew 19:27 Peter asked Jesus, "What then shall be to us?" The disciples had left their dear ones and their possessions to follow Jesus. Jesus promised them loved ones and lands (possessions) with persecutions. Then He added: "And in the coming age, eternal life" (Mark 10:30). Eternal life here refers to an unending future reality.

John 12:20–26 tells of some Greeks who wanted to see Jesus. We do not know how Jesus interacted with these Greeks. We do know He spoke about His death and what it meant to be a disciple: "The one loving his life [or soul] will lose it; but the one hating his life [or soul] in this world will guard the soul unto eternal life" (John 12:25). Jesus here contrasted eternal life with the present life. Believers are to guard their persons or souls by serving Christ and following Him (John 12:26). Such servants will be where Christ is, and the Father will honor them (John 12:26). To be where Christ is means to come into eternal life—a life freed from sin or moral evil.

Paul declared that "the one sowing to the Spirit will reap eternal life from the Spirit" (Gal. 6:8). Eternal life is given by Jesus and the Holy Spirit. This future reality, already experienced to some limited degree in the present, involves the Father, Son, and Spirit. Fellowship in life eternal means fellowship with the Triune God.

A. Berkeley Mickelsen

ETHAM (Ē′ thăm) Place name meaning, "fort." The second station in Israel's wilderness wandering out of Egypt (Ex. 13:20; Num. 33:6–8). The nearby wilderness was called the wilderness of Etham (Num. 33:8). Its precise location is not certain.

ETHAN (Ē′ thăn) Personal name meaning, "long-lived." 1. A man so famous for his wisdom that Solomon's outstanding wisdom could be described as exceeding Ethan's (1 Kings 4:31). Ezrahite may indicate Ethan was at home in Canaan before Israel entered, though this is uncertain. See Ezralite. A list similar to 1 Kings 4:31 appears among the descendants of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:6,8. 2. A Levite and Temple singer (1 Chron. 6:42,44; 15:17) and instrumentalist (1 Chron. 15:19). He is associated with Psalms 88 and 89 in their titles.

ETHANIM (Ĕth′ ȧ nĭm) Canaanite name of the seventh month taken over by Israel (1 Kings 8:2), who also called the month Tishri. This was the first month of the civil year. Ethanim means, "always flowing with water" and refers to the flooding streams fed by heavy fall rains.

ETH-BAAL (Ĕth-bā′ ȧl) Personal name meaning, "with him is Baal." King of Sidon and father of Jezebel (1 Kings 16:31), who married Jeroboam II, king of Israel (793-753 B.C.). Through her influence Baal worship pervaded the Northern Kingdom. See Jezebel.

ETHER (Ē′ thĕr) Place name meaning, "smoke of incense." 1. Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:42). 2. A town occupied by tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:7). Some Bible students identify this with the town in Judah, since Simeon's territory was within Judah's boundaries. Other scholars warn us not to identify the two places. Ether in Judah is modern khirbet Attir, south of Lahav and a mile northwest of Beth Gibrin.

ETHICS The study of good behavior, motivation, and attitude in light of Jesus Christ and biblical revelation. The discipline of ethics deals with such questions as: "What ought I do?" "How should I act so as to do what is good and right?" "What is meant by good?" "Who is the good person?"

Biblical ethics likewise addresses some of the identical questions. While neither Testament has an abstract, comprehensive term or definition which parallels the modern term "ethics," both the Old Testament and the New Testament are concerned about the manner of life that the Scripture prescribes and approves. The closest Hebrew term in the Old Testament for "ethics," "virtue" or "ideals" is the word mûsār, "discipline" or "teaching" (Prov. 1:8) or even derek, "way or path" of the good and the right. The closest parallel Greek term in the New Testament is anastrophē, "way of life, life-style" (occurring nine times in a good sense with 2 Pet. 3:11 being the most significant usage). Of course the Greek terms ethos or ēthos appear twelve times in the New Testament (Luke 1:9; 2:42; 22:39; John 19:40; Acts 6:14; 15:1; 16:21; 21:21; 25:16; 26:3; 28:17 and Heb. 10:25). The plural form appears once in 1 Corinthians 15:33. It is usually translated "conduct," "custom," "manner of life," or "practice."

The Biblical Definition of Ethics is Connected With Doctrine The problem with trying to speak about the ethics of the Bible is that ethical contents are not offered in isolation from the doctrine and teaching of the Bible. Therefore, what God is in His character, what He wills in His revelation, defines what is right, good, and ethical. In this sense then, the Bible had a decisive influence in molding ethics in western culture.

Some have seriously questioned whether there is a single ethic throughout the Bible. Their feeling is that there is too much diversity to be found in the wide variety of books and types of literature in the Bible to decide that there is harmony and a basic ethical stance and norm against which all ethical and moral decisions ought to be made. Nevertheless, when following the claims made by the books of the Bible, some conceive their message to be a contribution to the ongoing and continuous story about the character and will of God. This narrative about the character and will of God is the proper basis for answering the questions: "What kind of a person ought I to be?" "How then shall we live so as to do what is right, just, and good?"

As some have pointed out, the search for diversity and pluralism in ethical standards is as much the result of a prior methodological decision as is the search for unity and harmony of standards. One may not say the search for diversity is more scientific and objective than the search for harmony. This fact must be decided on the basis of an internal examination of the biblical materials; not as an external decision foisted over the text.

Three Basic Assumptions Can ethical or moral decisions rest on the Bible, or is this idea absurd and incoherent? Three assumptions illustrate how a contemporary ethicist or moral-living individual may be able to rest his or her decision on the ethical content of the biblical text from a past age. The three are: (1) the Bible's moral statements were meant to be applied to a universal class of peoples, times, and conditions, (2) Scripture's teaching has a consistency about it so that it presents a common front to the same questions in all its parts and to all cultures past and present; (3) the Bible purports to direct our action or behavior when it makes a claim or a demand. In short the Bible can be applied to all people. The Bible is consistent. The Bible seeks to command certain moral behavior.

To take Scripture's universalizability first: every biblical command, whether it appeared in a biblical law code, narrative text, wisdom text, prophetic text, gospel, or epistle was originally addressed to someone, in some place, in some particular situation. Such particulars were not meant to prejudice their usage in other times, places, or persons. Lurking behind each of these specific injunctions can be found a universal principle. From the general principle a person in a different setting can use the Bible to gain direction in a specific decision.

Are our problems, our culture, and our societal patterns so different that even though we can universalize the specific injunctions from Scripture, they have no relevance to our day? Can we assume consistency between cultures and times for this ethic? All that is required here is that the same biblical writer supplied us elsewhere with a whole pattern of ethical thought that has led up to this contextualized and particular injunction. If we may assume that the writer would not change his mind from one moment to the next, we may assume that he would stand by his principle for all such similar situations regardless of times or culture.

Finally, the Bible claims to command mortals made in the image of God. Whether the ethical materials are in the imperative or indicative moods makes little difference. The writers of Scripture intended to do more than offer information; they purported to direct behavior.

Five Basic Characteristics of Biblical Ethics In contrast to philosophical ethics, which tends to be more abstract and human—centered, biblical morality was directly connected with religious faith. Hence immoral men and women were by the same token irreligious men and women, and irreligious persons were also immoral persons (Ps. 14:1).

Biblical ethics are, first of all, personal. The ground of the ethical is the person, character, and declaration of an absolutely holy God. Consequently, individuals are urged, "Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2).

In the second place, the ethics of the Bible are emphatically theistic. They focus on God. To know God was to know how to practice righteousness and justice.

Most significantly, biblical ethics are deeply concerned with the internal response to morality rather than mere outward acts. "The Lord looketh on the heart" (1 Sam. 16:7) was the cry repeatedly announced by the prophets (Isa. 1:11–18; Jer. 7:21–23; Hos. 6:6; Mic. 6:6–8).

Scripture's ethical motivation was found in a future orientation. The belief in a future resurrection of the body (Job 19:26–27; Ps. 49:13–15; Isa. 26:19; Dan. 12:2–3) was reason enough to pause before concluding that each act was limited to the situation in which it occurred and bore no consequences for the future.

The fifth characteristic of biblical ethics is that they are universal. They embrace the same standard of righteousness for every nation and person on earth.

The Organizing Principle: God's Character That which gives wholeness, harmony, and consistency to the morality of the Bible is the character of God. Thus the ethical directions and morality of the Bible were grounded, first of all, in the character and nature of God. What God required was what He Himself was and is. The heart of every moral command was the theme that appeared in Leviticus 18:5,6,30; 19:2,3,4,10,12,14,18,25, 31,32,34,36,37, "I am the Lord" or "Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy." Likewise, Philippians 2:5–8 agreed: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, . . . yet he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death—even the death of the cross."

The character and nature of the holy God found ethical expression in the will and word of God. These words could be divided into moral law and positive law. Moral law expressed His character. The major example is the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:1–17; Deut. 5:6–21). Another is the holiness code (Lev. 18—20). Positive law bound men and women for a limited time period because of the authority of the One who spoke them. Positive law claimed the peoples' allegiances only for as long and only in as many situations as God's authority determined when He originally gave that law. Thus the divine word in the Garden of Eden, "you must not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil" (Gen. 2:17 NIV) or our Lord's, "Untie [the colt]" (Luke 19:30) were intended only for the couple in the garden of Eden or the disciples. They were not intended to be permanent commandments. They do not apply to our times. A study of biblical ethics helps us distinguish between the always valid moral law and the temporary command of positive law.

The moral law is permanent, universal, and equally binding on all men and women in all times. This law is best found in the Decalogue of Moses. Its profundity can be easily grasped in its comprehensiveness of issues and simplicity of expression. A few observations may help in interpreting these Ten Commandments. They are:

[1] The law has as a prologue. This established the grace of God as seen in the Exodus as the basis for any requirement made of individuals. Ethics is a response to grace in love not a response to demand in fear.

[2] All moral law is doublesided, leading to a positive act and away from a negative one. It makes no difference whether a law is stated negatively or positively, for every moral act is at one and the same time a refraining from a contrary action when a positive act is adopted.

[3] Merely omitting or refraining from doing a forbidden thing is not a moral act. Otherwise, sheer inactivity could count as fulfilling a command, but in the moral realm this is just another name for death. Biblical ethics call for positive participation in life.

[4] When an evil is forbidden in a moral command, its opposite good must be practiced before one can be considered obedient. We must not just refuse to murder, but we must do all in our power to aid the life of our neighbor.

The essence of the Decalogue can be found in three areas: [1] right relations with God (first command, internal worship of God; second, external worship of God; third, verbal worship of God); [2] right relations with time (fourth command), and [3] right relations with society (fifth command, sanctity of the family; sixth, sanctity of life; seventh, sanctity of marriage and sex; eighth, sanctity of property; ninth, sanctity of truth; and tenth, sanctity of motives).

The Content of Biblical Ethics Biblical ethics is based on the complete revelation of the Bible. The Decalogue and its expansions in the three other basic law codes join the Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5—7 and the Sermon on the Plain in Luke 6:17–49 as the foundational texts of the Bible's teaching in the ethical and moral realm. All other biblical texts—the narratives of wrongdoing, the collection of Proverbs, the personal requests of letters—all contribute to our knowledge of biblical ethics. The Bible does not offer a list from which we pick and choose. It hammers home a life-style and calls us to follow.

Several examples of the content of biblical ethics may help to better understand how the character of God, especially of His holiness, sets the norm for all moral decision-making.

Honor or respect for one's parents was one of the first applications of what holiness entailed according to Leviticus 19:1–3. This should come as no surprise, for one of the first ordinances God gave in Genesis 2:23–24 set forth the monogamous relationship as the foundation and cornerstone of the family.

Husband and wife were to be equals before God. The wife was not a mere possession, chattel, or solely a childbearer. She was not only "from the Lord" (Prov. 19:14) and her husband's "crown" (Prov. 12:4), but she also was "a power equal to" him (the word "helper" Gen. 2:18 NIV is better translated "strength, power"). The admonition to honor parents was to be no excuse to claim no responsibility to help the poor, the orphan, and the widow (Lev. 25:35; Deut. 15:7–11; Job 29:12–16; 31:16–22; Isa. 58; Amos 4:1–2; 5:12). The oppressed were to find relief from the people of God and those in authority.

Similarly, human life was to be regarded as so sacred that premeditated murder carried with it the penalty of capital punishment in order to show respect for the smitten victim's being made in the image of God (Gen. 9:5–6). Thus the life of all persons, whether still unborn and in the womb (Ex. 21:22–25; Ps. 139:13–6) or those who were citizens of a conquered country (Isa. 10; Hab. 3), were of infinite value to God.

Human sexuality was a gift from God. It was not a curse, nor an invention of the devil. It was made for the marriage relationship and meant for enjoyment (Prov. 5:15–21), not just procreation. Fornication was forbidden (1 Thess. 4:1–8). Sexual abberrations, such as homosexuality (Lev. 18:22; 20:13; Deut. 23:17) or bestiality (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 18:23–30; 20: 15–16; Deut. 27:21) were repulsive to the holiness of God and thus condemned.

Finally, commands about property, wealth, possessions, and concern for the truth set new norms. These norms went against the universal human propensity for greed, for ranking things above persons, and for preferring the lie as an alternative to the truth. No matter how many new issues were faced in ethical discourse, the bottom line remained where the last commandment had laid it: the motives and intentions of the heart. This is why holiness in the ethical realm began with the "fear of the Lord" (Prov. 1:7; 9:10; 15:33).

The greatest summary of ethical instruction was given by our Lord in Matthew 22:37–39: it was to love God and to love one's neighbor. There also was the Golden Rule of Matthew 7:12. The best manifestation of this love was a willingness to forgive others (Matt. 6:12–15; 18:21–35; Luke 12:13–34).

The New Testament, like the Old, included social ethics and one's duty to the state as part of its teaching. Since God's kingdom was at work in the world, it was necessary that salt and light also be present as well in holy living.

While both Testaments shared the same stance on issues such as marriage and divorce, the New often explicitly adopted different sanctions. Thus, church discipline was recommended in the case of incest in 1 Corinthians 5 rather than stoning.

The main difference between the two Testaments is that the New Testament sets forth Jesus as the new Example of uncompromising obedience to the will and law of God. He came not to abolish the Old, but to fulfill it. The New Testament is replete with exhortations to live by the words and to walk in the way set forth by Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah (1 Cor. 11:1; 1 Thess. 1:6; 1 Pet. 2:21–25).

Some of the motivators to live ethical and moral lives carry over from the previous Testament, but to these are added: the nearness of God's kingdom (Mark 1:15); gratitude for God's grace in Christ (Rom. 5:8); and the accomplished redemption, atonement, and resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 15:20–21). Like the Old Testament, love is a strong motivator; however, love does not take the place of law. Love is not itself the law; it is a "how" word, but it will never tell us "what" we are to do. Love is a fulfillment of the law (Rom. 13:9) because it constrains us to comply with what the law teaches. Thus, love creates an affinity with and an affection for the object of its love. It gives willing and cheerful obedience rather than coerced and forced compliance.

Finally, the content of biblical ethics is not only personal, but it is wide-ranging. The letters of Paul and Peter list a wide range of ethical duties; toward one's neighbors, respect for the civil government, and its tasks, the spiritual significance to work, the stewardship of possessions and wealth, and much else.

The ethic which Scripture demands and approves has the holiness of the Godhead as its standard and fountainhead, love to God as its impelling motivation, the law of God as found in the Decalogue and Sermon on the Mount as its directing principle, and the glory of God as its governing aim. Walter C. Kaiser, Jr.

ETHIOPIA (Ē thī ō′ pī ȧ) The region of Nubia just south of Egypt, from the first cataract of the Nile into the Sudan. Confusion has arisen between the names Ethiopia and Cush. The Old Testament Hebrew (and Egyptian) name for the region was Cush. The ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament, the Septuagint, rendered Cush by the Greek word Ethiopia, except where it could be taken as a personal name. English translations have generally followed the Septuagint in designating the land as Ethiopia and its inhabitants as Ethiopians. In some passages such as Genesis 2:13 and Isaiah 11:11, various English versions alternate between Cush and Ethiopia. See Cush.

The biblical Ethiopia should not be confused with the modern nation of the same name somewhat further to the southeast. In biblical times, Ethiopia was equivalent to Nubia, the region beyond the first cataract of the Nile south, or upstream, of Egypt. This region, with an abundance of natural resources, was known to the Egyptians as Cush and was occupied by them during periods of Egyptian strength. During the New Kingdom (1550–1070 B.C.), Ethiopia was totally incorporated into the Egyptian Empire and ruled through an official called the "viceroy of Cush."

When Egyptian power waned, Nubia became independent under a line of rulers who imitated Egyptian culture. When Egypt fell into a period of chaos about 725 B.C., Nubian kings extended their influence northward. In 715 B.C., they succeeded in establishing control over all of Egypt and ruled as pharaohs of the Twenty-fifth Dynasty. The most influential of these Ethiopian pharaohs was Taharqa (biblical Tirhakah), who rendered aid to Hezekiah of Judah during the Assyrian invasion of Sennacherib in 701 B.C. (2 Kings 19:9; Isa. 37:9).

The Assyrian Empire invaded Egypt in 671 B.C., driving the Ethiopian pharaohs southward and eventually sacking the Egyptian capital Thebes (biblical No-Amon; Nah. 3:8) in 664 B.C. Thereafter, the realm of Ethiopian kings was confined to Nubia, which they ruled from Napata. Ethiopia continued to be an important political force and center of trade (Isa. 45:14). Some time after 300 B.C., Napata was abandoned and the capital moved further south to Meroe, where the kingdom continued for another six hundred years. Excavations in Nubia have revealed numerous pyramid tombs at Napata and Meroe as well as several temples to the Egyptian god Amun.

In New Testament times, several queens of the kingdom of Meroe bore the title Candace. The Ethiopian eunuch to whom Philip explained the gospel was a minister of "the Candace, queen of the Ethiopians" (Acts 8:27 RSV). Candace should be understood as a title rather than a personal name. Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

ETHIOPIAN EUNUCH (Ē thĭ ō′ pī ăn) An unnamed person who was returning to his homeland after having been to Jerusalem to worship (Acts 8:27). He was an official in the court of the queen of Ethiopia. As he traveled, he met Philip the evangelist. Philip had come to the desert area in response to God's call. Philip declared the gospel to the eunuch, and the eunuch received Christian baptism at Philip's hands. His conversion illustrates the Christian faith transcending national boundaries and embracing one whose physical mutilation would have excluded him from full participation in Judaism.

ETHKAZIN (Ĕth kā′ zĭn) Place name perhaps meaning, "time of the chieftain." Town in tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:13). Its location is not known.

ETHNAN (Ĕth′ năn) Personal name meaning, "gift." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:7).

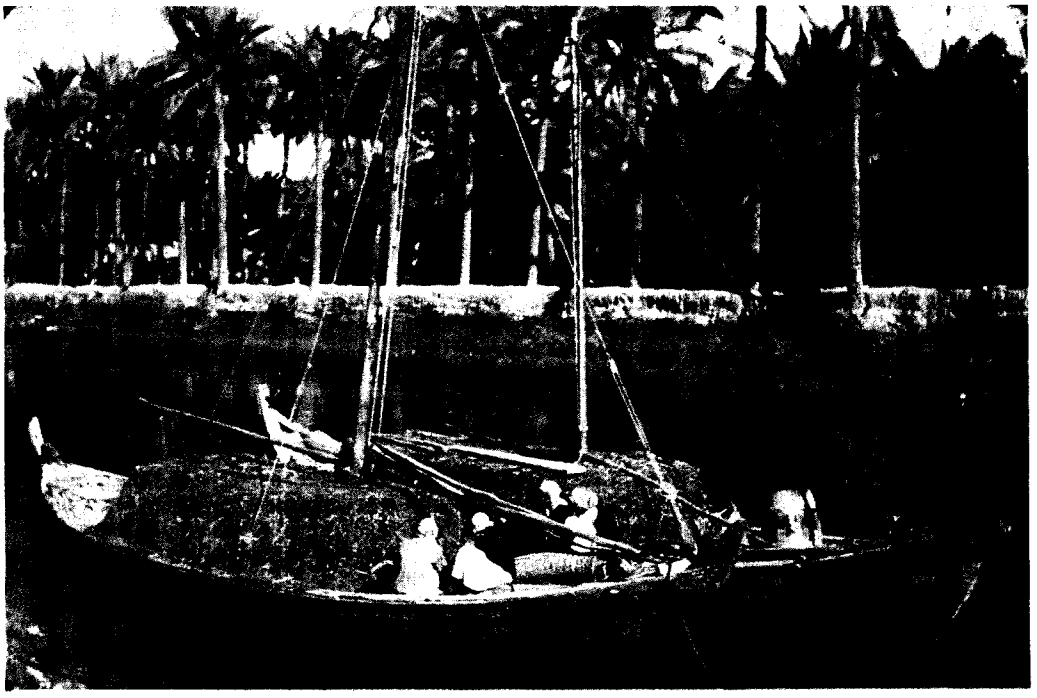
ETHNI (Ĕth′ nī) Personal name meaning, "I will give." Levite, ancestor of Asaph (1 Chron. 6:41).

EUBULUS (Ēu bū′ lŭs) Personal name meaning,

"good counsel." Companion of Paul who sent greetings to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:21).

EUNICE (Ēu′ nīce) Personal name meaning, "victorious." The mother of Timothy (2 Tim. 1:5). Both she and her mother Lois were commended by Paul for their faith. She was a Jewish woman whose husband was a Gentile. No details are known about her conversion to Christianity. See Timothy.

EUNUCH A male deprived of the testes or external genitals. Such were excluded from serving as priests (Lev. 21:20) and from membership in the congregation of Israel (Deut. 23:1). Eunuchs were regarded as especially trustworthy in the Ancient Near East and thus were frequently employed in royal service. By extension, the Hebrew word translated eunuch could be used of any court official (At Gen. 37:36 and 39:1 the reference is to a married man). The Greek term translated eunuch is literally one in charge of a bed, a reference to the practice of using eunuchs as keepers of harems (Esth. 2:3,6,15). Part of Isaiah's vision of the messianic era was a picture of the eunuch no longer complaining of being "a dry tree," one without hope of descendants, because God would reward the faithful eunuch with a lasting monument and name in the Temple which would be far better than sons or daughters (Isa. 56:4–5). Ethiopian eunuch of Acts 8:27 was reading from Isaiah's scroll.



A "eunuch for the sake of the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 19:12) is likely a metaphor for one choosing single life in order to be more useful in kingdom work. Compare 1 Cor. 7:32–34.

EUODIA A female leader in the church at Philippi whose disagreement with Syntyche concerned Paul (Phil. 4:2–3). The name Euodia means either prosperous journey or pleasant fragrance. Euodia and Syntyche were perhaps deacons or else hostesses of house churches that met in their respective homes. Paul commended these women as two who struggled by his side for the spread of the gospel in a way comparable to Clement and other church leaders.

EUODIAS (Ēu ō′ dī ăs) Personal name meaning, "good journey." A member of the church at Philippi (Phil. 4:2). The correct form of the name is generally recognized to be Euodia rather than Euodias. She and another church member, Syntyche, were quarreling with one another, and Paul urged them to resolve their differences. See Philippians.

EUPHRATES AND TIGRIS RIVERS (Ēu phrā′ tēs and Tī′ grĭs) Two of the greatest rivers of Western Asia. They originate in the Armenian mountains and unite about ninety miles from the Persian Gulf to form what is now called the Shatt-al-Arab which flows into the gulf. In ancient times the Tigris flowed through its own mouth into the gulf. The Euphrates and Tigris were included among the four rivers of Paradise (Gen. 2:14).

Boats on the Euphrates River in modern Iraq (ancient Mesopotamia).

The Euphrates was known as "the great river" (Gen. 15:18; Josh. 1:4) or "the river" (Num. 22:5) to the Hebrews. It formed the northern boundary of the land promised by Yahweh to Israel (Gen. 15:18; Deut. 1:7). The Euphrates is mentioned in the Book of Revelation as the place where angels were bound (9:14) and where the sixth vial was poured out (16:12).

A young Iraqi man gazing across the Euphrates River which flows through Iraq and into the Persian Gulf.

The Euphrates is the longest, largest, and most important river in Western Asia. Many significant cities were located on the Euphrates, Babylon being the most important. Others located on its banks were Mari and Carchemish, the latter being the site of a famous battle between Babylon and Egypt in 605 B.C. (Jer. 46:2).

The Tigris is not as prominent in the Bible as is the Euphrates, but it is the site of the major vision of the prophet Daniel (Dan. 10:4). Like the Euphrates, some significant cities were located on its banks. Nineveh, the ancient capital of the Assyrian Empire, was located on its east bank. Farther south was the site of Asshur, religious center and original capital of Assyria.

See Babylon; Nineveh. M. Stephen Davis

EURAQUILO (Ēu răʹ quĭ lō) NAS transliteration of Greek name for northeast wind in Acts 27:14. See Euroclydon.

EUROCLYDON (Ēu rŏcʹ lĭ dŏn) Noun meaning, "southeast wind raising mighty waves." KJV reading of traditional Greek text in Acts 27:14, but most modern translations follow other Greek texts which read Eurakulon, the northeast wind. Whichever reading is correct, the wind created a mighty storm which shipwrecked the ship taking Paul to Rome.

EUTYCHUS (Ēuʹ tỹ chŭs) Personal name meaning, "good fortune." A young man who listened to Paul the apostle preach in Troas (Acts 20:9–10). Overcome with sleep, Eutychus fell from a third floor window sill and was picked up dead. Paul, however, embraced the youth, and Eutychus was restored to life.

EVANGELISM The active calling of people to respond to the message of grace and commit oneself to God in Jesus Christ. While many think of evangelism as a New Testament phenomena, profound concern for all people is also obvious in the Old Testament (1 Kings 8:41–45; Ps. 22:27–28; Isa. 2:2–4). God's care for the first couple after they had sinned, His plan to "bless" all people through the Israelite nation, and His continuing attempts through the prophets and through discipline to forge His people into a usable nation all speak of His concern.

While Israel's influence was primarily national and magnetic in nature, there were instances of individual and external witness (Dan. 3—6; 2 Kings 5:15–18; Jonah 3:1–10). Though Israel was largely a failure in carrying out her mission, the large number of God-fearers at the beginning of the Christian era show that her magnetic attraction and proselyting efforts were not entirely unfruitful.

It is, however, the New Testament which manifests the dynamic thrust of evangelism. While the word "evangelism" does not occur in the Bible, it is woven into the very fabric of Scripture.

Despite its obvious importance, a wide range of opinion seeks to define what it means and what it should include. Definitions range from the extremely narrow to the exceedingly broad.

Evangelism is derived from the Greek word eúaggélion, meaning "gospel" or "good news." The verbal forms of eúaggelízesthai, meaning "to bring" or "to announce good news" occur some fifty-five times (Acts 8:4, 25, 35; 11:20) and are normally translated with the appropriate form of the word "preach." Evangelism has to do with the proclamation of the message of good news.

In the light of the wide range of definitions and the continuing debate, it is well to consider two kinds of definitions. First, many insist on defining evangelism only in the strictest sense of the above New Testament words. It is preaching the gospel, communicating God's message of mercy to sinners. Such a definition places strict limits to arrive at a precise definition of evangelism. It refuses to speak in terms of recipients, results, or methods, laying all its emphasis on the message.

This type of definition is certainly correct, as far as it goes. It would represent the view of many evangelicals concerning evangelism. Many others, however, believe that such definitions are inadequate for the present day and that they are partly responsible for a truncated sort of evangelism too often practiced in the past.

Many would, therefore, prefer what might be described as a "holistic" definition, or one that takes into account the "good news of the kingdom." This might be stated: evangelism is the Spirit-led communication of the gospel of the kingdom in such a way or ways that the recipients have a valid opportunity to accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior and become responsible members of His church. Such a definition takes into account the essential work of the Holy Spirit, the various ways of conveying the good news, holistic concern for the persons involved, the need for actual communication and understanding of the message, and the necessity of productive church membership on the part of the convert.

Luke 8:2–56 shows how Jesus brought the good news. He not only preached; He demonstrated His power over the forces of nature in saving His fearful disciples. He exorcised a demon, healed a poor woman that had hemorrhaged for twelve years, and raised Jairus' daughter from the dead. Clearly he brought the good news by word and deed, and not by word only.

Paul, in similar fashion, described how he had been used to "win obedience from the Gentiles, by word and deed, by the power of signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God so that . . . I have fully proclaimed the good news of Christ" (Rom. 15:18–19 NRSV).

Some warn that such definitions are dangerous, opening the door to an overemphasis on the social dimension of the gospel to the exclusion of the spoken message. Indeed they can be. A complete evangelism will include the verbalized gospel. Balance is a necessity, although different situations may sometimes call for more emphasis on one aspect or the other. The biblical mandate remains "to become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some" (1 Cor. 9:22 NAS).

G. William Schweer

EVE (Ēve) Personal name meaning, "life." The first woman created and thus original ancestor of all people (Gen. 3:20; compare 4:1–2,25). She also faced the serpent's temptation first (3:1; 2 Cor. 11:3; 1 Tim. 2:13–14). Her fall illustrates the ease with which all persons fall into sin (2 Cor. 11:3). See Adam and Eve.

EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT Protracted, continual and eternal judgment.

"Everlasting" immediately calls to mind end-of-time realities. "Punishment" introduces the ideas of wrongdoing and evil. Thus, to wrestle with the idea of "everlasting punishment" is to grapple with notions of time, justice, evil, and the end of time. The Old Testament seldom directly addresses the issue of "everlasting punishment." It emphasizes that God, His attributes, His word, His covenant, His dwelling place, and His possessions are everlasting (for example, Gen. 21:33; Deut. 33:27; Ps. 41:13; Isa. 33:27). "Punishment" in the Old Testament is normally executed within history (plagues, wars, famine, sickness, exile). Though one can find expressions of individual guilt, punishment, and forgiveness in the Psalms, and though one can find the language of universal judgment in the prophets that unfaithful Israel and all the nations of the world will be historically punished—it is not until after the Old Testament that the notions of "eternal punishment" or "everlasting judgment" are fully developed (see 1 Enoch 104:5; Testament of Abraham 11:11; 4 Macc. 9:9; 10:15; 12:12; 13:15; 15:3). Still, the Old Testament builds a foundation with its glimpses, warning of judgment on God's enemies, judgment that can occasionally be described as everlasting (compare Isa. 33:14. Jer. 20:11; 23:40). Daniel 12:2 placed eternal punishment on an individual level.

Part of the early church's teaching (Heb. 6:2), the eternal fate of creation and human beings is bound up with gospel preaching and thus with the end-of-time events of Jesus' death, resurrection and promised return. The opposite of "eternal life," "everlasting punishment" is thought of as an "eternal fire," a "second death," or an "eternal destruction." The language paints a picture of endless suffering, loss, doom, and separation from the presence of God. Such end-of-time trauma befalls the evil, angelic powers which oppose God (Matt. 25:41; Jude 6; Rev. 19:3) and those human beings who willfully continue in "sin"—a decision which demonstrates solidarity with the evil powers (Matt. 25:46; Mark 3:29; Jude 13; Rev. 14:11). The remarkable New Testament teaching is that "everlasting punishment" in some ways has already begun in the revelation of the gospel. The gospel is a present, historical revelation of end-of-time righteousness and wrath (Rom. 1:16–17). To some, the gospel brings eternal life—for others, eternal death (2 Cor. 2:15–16). This eternal judgment which begins with the preaching of the Gospel will be culminated and concluded at the end of time. At the time of Jesus' mighty, majestic, and powerful appearance, all evil will be destroyed; all humans who continued in opposition to God will receive their eternal sentencing (2 Thess. 1:9). Carey C. Newman

EVI (Ē′ vī) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "desire." King of Midian killed in battle by Israelites during wilderness wanderings (Num. 31:8). He apparently ruled as a vassal of Sihon (Josh. 13:21).

EVIL That which is opposed to God and His purposes or that which, defined from human perspectives, is harmful and non-productive.

The Problem of Evil Evil is a major theoretical and practical problem for a Christian. Evil is of two types. First, there is natural evil. There are destructive forces in nature, ranging from earthquakes and tidal waves to cancer. Second, there is moral evil which has its source in the choice and action of humans. This type of evil includes war, crime, cruelty, and slavery.

If God is all-powerful and good, as the Bible affirms, why does He allow evil?

Natural Evil Concerning natural evil, several emphases should be noted. First, moral evil accounts for much of natural evil. In Genesis, evil and suffering appeared only after the Fall (Gen. 3:16–19). By contrast, the original creation is very good (Gen. 1:31). The new heavens and and new earth will have no more suffering (Rev. 21:4). This means that evil and suffering are not eternally inevitable. Rather they are bound up with the actions of sinful humans. Physical suffering and pain and finally death have been introduced as a consequence of the Fall (Gen. 3:16–19).

Second, God disciplines His people collectively and individually, even through natural evil and pain, to bring them closer to His purposes (Prov. 3:11–12; Jer. 18:1–10). This emphasis is also found in the New Testament (Heb. 2:10; 5:8–9; 12:5–11).

Third, personal life cannot develop except in a stable environment. God limited Himself by the establishment of regularity and law. This regularity of nature is an important factor in developing human personality. The earthquake, volcano, and storm, which cause human suffering, all belong to nature's regularity. Some so-called natural evil, therefore, can be attributed to the necessary operation of natural uniformities.

Fourth, natural evils may be used for judgment upon sin. It is deeply ingrained in the Bible that physical evils have been used by God for the punishment of individual and national wickedness. Noah's flood, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the fall of Jerusalem are examples. This does not mean that all physical evils are the punishment of physical sins.

Moral Evil There are also some biblical teachings which help us to understand moral evil from the Christian perspective.

First, God limited Himself in giving people and angels freedom. To be truly human, a person must have the power of choice.

Second, humans used freedom in such a way as to bring in evil. The Bible tells us that with the Fall, humanity's first sin, a radical change took place in the universe. Death came upon mankind (Gen. 2:17; 3:2–3, 19). God pronounced a curse upon mankind which is represented by certain specifics: anguish in childbearing (3:16), male domination over the wife (v. 16), toilsome labor (v. 17), and thorns and thistles (v. 18). These are probably only a sample of the actual effects upon the creation. Paul in Romans 8:22 said that the whole creation has been affected by human sin and is now in bondage to decay.

Third, back of human revolt stood Satan. In Genesis 3 we read that the serpent tempted Eve. Thus, an evil force was present within the creation. It was Satan's appeal which stirred within Adam and Eve the desire which led them to sin. Compare Revelation 12:9.

It is clear, then, that God did not create evil and sin. He merely provided the options necessary for human freedom. People sinned, and before that, the fallen angels, not God.

Fourth, even though evil is because of human revolt and failure, God continues to be active in redeeming people from their self-imposed evil.

Fifth, God deals with evil through judgment and wrath. This judgment can be seen in the Old Testament (Deut. 28:20,21; Isa. 3:11). The wrath of God is not divine vindictiveness, but is dynamic, persistent opposition to sin (Rom. 1:18). Thus, a principle of judgment upon, and annulment of, evil can be discerned at work in history and even in individual lives.

Sixth, God deals with evil through the incarnation, the cross, and the resurrection. The Bible teaches that God Himself in Jesus Christ became the victim of evil so that there might be victory over evil. It is also indicated in such passages as Colossians 1:24; Philippians 3:10; and 2 Corinthians 12:7 that the Christian can bear suffering for others and assist in God's redemptive purpose.

After all the solutions are considered, we still realize that the problem of evil is not completely solved on an intellectual level from our limited human perspective. However, on the practical and experiential level we can say with the apostle Paul that "in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us" (Rom. 8:37).

John P. Newport

EVIL-MERODACH (Ē′ vĭl-mĕ rō′ dăch) Babylonian royal name meaning, "worshiper of Marduk." Babylonian king (562–560 B.C.) who treated Jehoiachin, king of Judah, with kindness (2 Kings 25:27). The Babylonian form of the name is Amel-Marduk. He was the son of Nebuchadrezzar. See Babylon.

EXACTOR The KJV term for a taskmaster or a tax collector used only at Isaiah 60:17. Most often the KJV translated the underlying Hebrew word as oppressor (Job. 3:18; Isa. 3:12; 9:3; 14:2,4; Zech. 9:8; 10:4). Elsewhere the term is translated taskmaster, one who "exacts" labor (Ex. 3:7) or as raiser of taxes (Dan. 11:20). The image is of one who drives people like a mule driver drives his beast (Job 39:7). Isaiah's picture is striking. In the future God is preparing the only "rule" known will be peace, the only "oppression" known will be righteousness (60:17).

EXCOMMUNICATION The practice of temporarily or permanently excluding someone from the church as punishment for sin or apostasy.

Old Testament In the Old Testament, excommunication came as a curse from God as punishment for sin (Deut. 27:26; 28:15; Ps. 119:21; Mal. 2:2–9; 4:6). The Jewish community assumed authority to curse on God's behalf (Num. 23:8; Isa. 66:5). Old Testament terms for excommunication include: Karath, to be excluded or cut off (Ex. 12:15, 19; Lev. 17:4, 9); cherem, banish, devote, or put to destruction (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 27:28–29; Josh. 6:17); and qelalah, desolation or thing of horror (2 Kings 22:19; Jer. 25:18). The covenant community protected itself from curse and temptation by distancing covenant-breakers from the community even to the point of executing them.

New Testament Expulsion from the synagogue was one form of New Testament excommunication. Christians were frequently subject to expulsion, which was punishment for blasphemy or for straying from the tradition of Moses (Luke 6:22; John 9:22; 12:42; 16:2). Many early Christians thus endured excommunication from the worship place of their fathers to be Christians. The apostles practiced excommunication based on the binding and loosing authority Jesus gave to them (John 20:23; Matt. 18:18). See Binding and Loosing. They excommunicated church members for heresy (Gal. 1:8) for gross, deliberate sin (1 Cor. 5; 2 John 7) and perhaps for falling away from church belief and practice (Heb. 6:4–8). The purpose was to purify the church and to encourage offenders to repent (1 Cor. 5:5–6; 2 Cor. 2:6–10; 2 Thess. 3:15). Punishment ranged in scope from limited ostracism to permanent exclusion and may even have included some form of physical punishment if the church continued synagogue practice (Luke 4:28–30; John 8:2–11; Acts 5:1–5; 7:58). New Testament terms for excommunication include: being delivered to Satan (1 Cor. 5:5; 1 Tim. 1:20); anathema or cursed and cut off from God (Rom. 9:3; 1 Cor. 16:22; Gal. 1:8). The New Testament churches apparently used excommunication as a means of redemptive discipline. See Apostasy.

In Church History During the Middle Ages, when church and state became intertwined, excommunication was often used as a political tool. In 1054, the Catholic church was divided into east and west. Each claimed primacy as the true church. They "resolved" the issue by excommunicating each other.

Contemporary In its broadest sense, excommunication now means denial of sacraments, congregational worship, or social contact of any kind. Excommunication is practiced in this manner by both Protestant and Catholic churches. However, the term itself is used mainly in the Catholic church and usually indicates the permanent ban. Lesser punishments are called censures.

Donna R. Ridge

EXECRATION The act of cursing; an object of cursing. The term appears in the KJV twice (Jer. 42:18,44:12), both times in reference to the fate of the remnant who disobeyed God's word and sought safety in Egypt. The text may be understood in at least two ways. First, their name would become an object of cursing (NIV), that is, others would curse the remnant. Alternately, their name might be used as a curse (TEV) in the form "May you be like the remnant whom God destroyed." See Blessing and Cursing.

EXECUTIONER One who puts another to death, especially as a legal penalty. The KJV uses the term only once (Mark 6:27 for the one beheading John the Baptist). Some modern translations prefer a more generic term such as "soldier of the guard" (NRSV, REB) or simply "guard" (TEV). The Old Testament law does not know the role of the representative executioner who acts on behalf of the society. Where "official" executioners are mentioned, they are portrayed as the agents of despotic rulers (Dan. 2:14,24; Mark 6:27). The execution of Jesus is the chief example of such an abuse of power. See Capital Punishment.

EXHORTATION Argument (Acts 2:40) or advice intended to incite hearers to action. The ability to exhort or encourage to action is a spiritual gift (Rom. 12:8) sometimes associated with prophets/preachers (Acts 15:32; 1 Cor. 14:3). Elsewhere mutual exhortation is the responsibility of all Christians (Rom. 1:12; 1 Thess. 5:11,14; Heb. 3:13, 10:24–25). The Hebrew Scriptures provided New Testament preachers with a source of exhortation (Rom. 15:14; Heb. 12:5–6). The synagogue sermon was described as a "word of exhortation" (Acts 13:15). As such it called for applying the truths of the scriptural text to life. Indeed, exhortation is the goal of orderly worship (1 Cor. 14:31). Letters of exhortation were common in the ancient world. Messengers often supplied additional encouragement to supplement the written message (2 Sam. 11:25; Eph. 6:22; Col. 4:8). Two New Testament documents describe themselves as exhortations (1 Pet. 5:12; Heb. 13:22). The effect of the letter of the Apostolic Council was similarly described as exhortation (Acts 15:21). Though it does not designate itself as such, the Epistle of James is an exhortation.

EXILE (Ex' īle) The events in which the northern tribes of Israel were taken into captivity by the Assryians and the events in which the southern tribes of Judah were taken into captivity by the Babylonians. Sometimes the terms "captivity," and "carried into captivity" refer to the exiles of Israel and Judah.

In Old Testament times the Assyrians and Babylonians introduced the practice of deporting captives into foreign lands. Deportation was generally considered the harsher measure only when other means had failed. Rather than impose deportation, Assyria demanded tribute from nations it threatened to capture. As early as 842 B.C., Jehu, king of Israel, was paying tribute to Shalmaneser, king of Assyria. Not until the reign of Tiglath-pileser (745–727 B.C.) did the Assyrians began deporting people from the various tribes of Israel.

In 734 B.C., Tiglath-pileser captured the cities of Naphtali (2 Kings 15:29) and carried away as captives the inhabitants of the tribes of Naphtali, Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:26). In 732, Tiglath-pileser took control of Damascus, the capital city of Syria. At that time he appointed Israel (the Northern Kingdom) her last king—Hoshea (732–723 B.C.). Hoshea rebelled about 724 B.C. and was taken captive by the Assyrians (2 Kings 17:1–6).

Samaria, the capital city of Israel, held out until early 721 B.C. Shalmaneser V (727–722 B.C.) laid seige to the city. The eventual fall of Samaria occurred at the hands of Sargon II (722–705 B.C.). These events marked the end of the ten northern tribes (2 Kings 17:18).

The Assyrians exiled the Israelites into Halah, Gozan, and Media (2 Kings 17:6; 18:11; Obad. 20). The Assyrians brought into Samaria people from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim (2 Kings 17:24; Ezra 4:10). Sargon II recorded that 27,290 Israelites were deported.

The prophets Hosea and Amos had prophesied the fall of Israel. These two prophets proclaimed that Israel's fall was due to moral and spiritual degeneration rather than to the superior military might of the Assyrian nation. Assyria was only the "rod of mine anger"' (Isa. 10:5).

History of the Exile of Judah More than a hundred years before the Babylon Exile, Isaiah, the prophet, had predicted Judah's fall (Isa. 6:11, 12; 8:14; 10:11). In addition, the prophets Micah, Zephaniah, Jeremiah, Habakkuk, and Ezekiel agreed that Judah would fall.

There were three deportations of Jews to Babylon. The first occurred in 598 B.C. (2 Kings 24:12–16). The second deportation took place in 587 B.C. (2 Kings 25:8–21; Jer. 39:8–10; 40:7; 52:12–34). After the second deporation, Gedeliah was appointed governor of Judah by the Babylonians but was assassinated (2 Kings 24:25). A third deportation, a punishment for Gedaliah's assassination, occurred in 582 B.C. (Jer. 52:30).

Life in the Exile meant life in five different geographical areas: Israel, Judah, Assyria, Babylon, and Egypt. We possess little information about events in any of these areas between 587 B.C. and 538 B.C.

1. Israel Assyria took the educated, leading people from the Northern Kingdom and replaced them with populations from other countries they had conquered (2 Kings 17:24). They had to send some priests back to the area to teach the people the religious traditions of the God of the land (2 Kings 17:27–28). Such priests probably served a population which contained poor Jewish farmers dominated by foreign leaders. When Babylon took over the area, they established a provincial capital in Samaria. Leaders there joined with other provincial leaders to stop Zerubbabel and his people from rebuilding the Temple (Ezra 4:1–24). Gradually, a mixed population emerged (Ezra 10). Still, a faithful remnant attempted to maintain worship of Yahweh near Shechem, producing eventually the Samaritan community. See Samaritans.

2. Assyria Exiles from the Northern Kingdom were scattered through the Assyrian holdings (2 Kings 17:6). Apparently, their small communities, isolated from other Jews, did not allow them to maintain much national identity. We do not know what happened to these poeple, thus the popular title—the lost tribes of Israel. Some may have eventually returned to their original homeland. Others may have established the basis of Jewish communities which appear in later historical records.

3. Judah The Babylonians did not completely demolish Judah. They left farmers, in particular, to care for the land (Jer. 52:16). Some citizens who had fled the country before the Babylonian invasion returned to the land after Jerusalem was destroyed (Jer. 40:12). The Babylonians set up a government which may or may not have been dependent on the provincial government in Samaria. Jews loyal to the Davidic tradition assassinated Gedaliah, the governor (2 Kings 25:25). Then many of the people fled to Egypt (2 Kings 25:26; Jer. 43). People remaining in the land continued to worship in the Temple ruins and seek God's word of hope (Lamentations). Many were probably not overjoyed to see Jews return from Babylon claiming land and leadership.

4. Babylon The center of Jewish life shifted to Babylon under such leaders as Ezekiel. Babylon even recognized the royal family of Judah as seen in 2 Kings 25:27 and in recovered Babylonian records. Exiled Jews based their calendar on the exile of King Jehoichin in 597 (Ezek. 1:2; 33:21; 40:1). Jehoiachin's grandson, Zerubbabel, led the first exiles back from Babylon in 538 (Ezra 2:2; Hag. 1:1). Most of the exiles in Babylon probably followed normal Near Eastern practice and became farmers on land owned by the government. Babylonian documents show that eventually some Jews became successful merchants in Babylon. Apparently religious leaders like Ezekiel were able to lead religious meetings (Ezek. 8:1; compare Ezra 8:15–23). Correspondence continued between those in Judah and those in Exile (Jer. 29), and Jewish elders gave leadership to the exiles (Jer. 29:1; Ezek. 8:1; 14:1; 20:1). First Chronicles 1—9, Ezra, and Nehemiah show that genealogies and family records became very important points of identity for the exiles. People were economically self-sufficient, some even owning slaves (Ezra 2:65) and having resources to fund the return to Jerusalem (Ezra 1:6; 2:69).

Still, many longed for Jerusalem and would not sing the Lord's song in Babylon (Ps. 137). They joined prophets like Ezekiel in looking for a rebuilt Temple and a restored Jewish people. They laughed at Babylonian gods as sticks of wood left over from the fire (Isa. 44:9–17; 45:9–10; 46:1–2,6–7; Jer. 1:16; Ezek. 20:29–32). A Babylonian Jewish community was thus established and would exercise strong influence long after Cyrus of Persia permitted Jews to return to Judah. These Jews established their own worship, collected Scriptures, and began interpreting them in the Aramaic paraphrase and explanations which eventually became the Babylonian Talmud, but continued to support Jews in Jerusalem.

5. Egypt Jews fled Jerusalem for Egypt (2 Kings 25:26) despite God's directions not to (Jer. 42:13—44:30). Many Jews apparently became part of the Egyptian army stationed in northern border fortresses to protect against Babylonian invasion. As such, they may have joined Jews who had come to Egypt earlier. Archaeologists have discovered inscriptions at Elephantine in southern Egypt showing a large Jewish army contingent there also. They apparently built a temple there and worshiped Yahweh along with other gods. These military communities eventually disappeared, but Jewish influence in Egypt remained. Finally, a large community in Alexandria established itself and produced the Septuagint, the earliest translation of the Hebrew Bible into Greek.

The Edict of Cyrus in 538 B.C. (2 Chron. 36:22–23; Ezra 1:1–4) released the Jews in Babylon to return to their homeland. Though conditions in the homeland were dismal, many Jews did return. The preaching of Haggai and Zechariah (520–519 B.C.) urged these returning captives to rebuild their Temple in Jerusalem. The Temple was completed in 515 B.C., the date which traditionally marks the end of the Babylonian Exile.

Gary Hardin

EXODUS Israel's escape from slavery in Egypt and journey towards the Promised Land under Moses. The most important event in the Old Testament historically and theologically is Israel's Exodus from Egypt. More than a hundred times in all parts of the Old Testament except the Wisdom Literature, Yahweh is proclaimed as "the one who brought you up from the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." Israel remembered the Exodus as God's mighty redemptive act. She celebrated it in her creeds (Deut. 26:5–9; 1 Sam. 12:6–8). She sang of it in worship (Ps. 78; 105; 106; 114; 135; 136). The prophets constantly reminded Israel that election and covenant were closely related to the Exodus (Isa. 11:16; Jer. 2:6; 7:22–25; Ezek. 20:6,10; Hos. 2:15; 11:1; Amos 2:10; 3:1; Mic. 6:4; Hag. 2:5). (The English word "Exodus" does not occur in the King James Version). The Exodus in the Old Testament was to Israel what the death and resurrection of Christ was to Christians in the New Testament. Just as Israel commemorated her deliverance from Egyptian bondage in the feast of Passover, Christians celebrate their redemption from sin in the observance of the Lord's Supper (Luke 22:1–20; 1 Cor. 11:23–26).

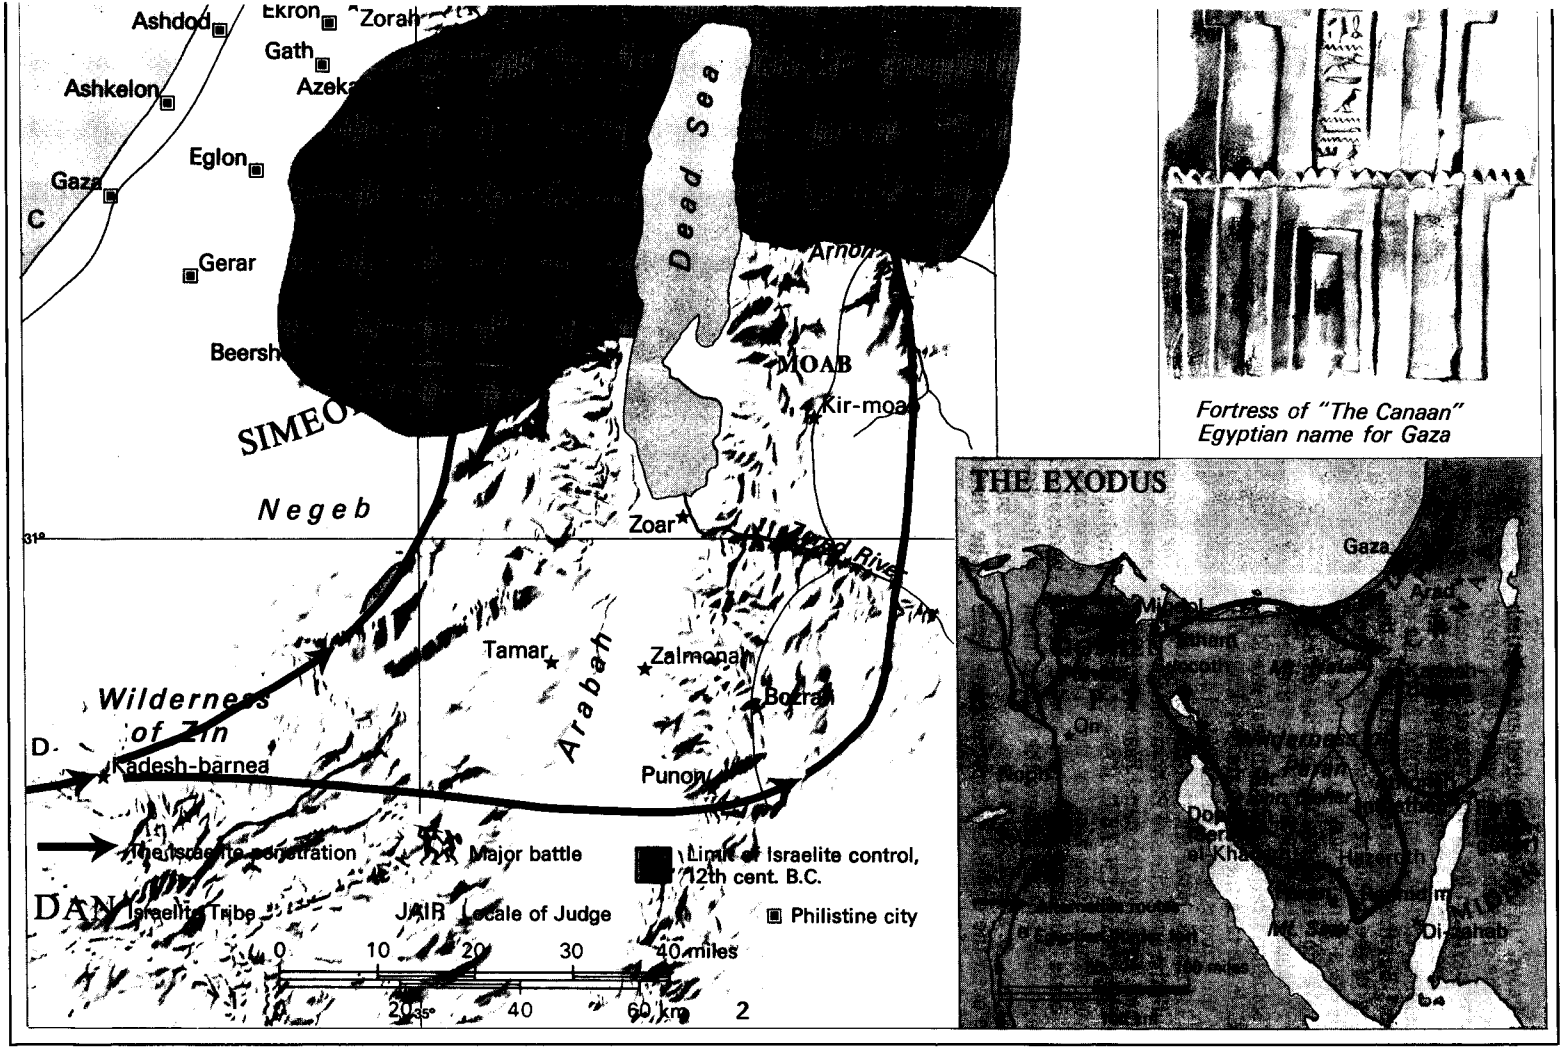
Historicity The only explicit account of the Exodus we have is the biblical account (Ex. 1—15). No extra-biblical witnesses directly speak of the sojourn of Israel's ancestors in the land of the Nile. However, Egyptian sources do confirm the general situation that we find in the end of Genesis and the beginning of the Book of Exodus. There are many reports in Egyptian sources of nomadic people called Habiru coming into Egypt from the east fleeing from famine. Extra-biblical evidence from Egypt indicates that Egypt used slave labor in building projects (Ex. 1:11). At one time the land in Egypt was owned by many landholders; but after the reign of the Hyksos kings the Pharaoh owned most of the land, and the people were serfs of the king (Gen. 47:20). Old Testament scholars accept the essential historicity of the Exodus.

The Nature of the Event Some scholars see the Exodus as the miraculous deliverance of the people of God from the grip of Pharaoh's army at the Red Sea. Others see it as an escape across a sprawling wilderness and sweltering desert of a small mixed band of border slaves. Some argue that the military language in the account indicates that the event was a military skirmish. Such language may be the language of holy war.

The Bible stresses that the Exodus was the work of God. God brought the plagues on Egypt (Ex. 7:1–5). The miracle at the sea was never treated merely as a natural event or as Israel's victory alone. In the earliest recorded response to the event Miriam sang, "Sing to the Lord, for he has triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider he has thrown into the sea" (Ex. 15:21 RSV).

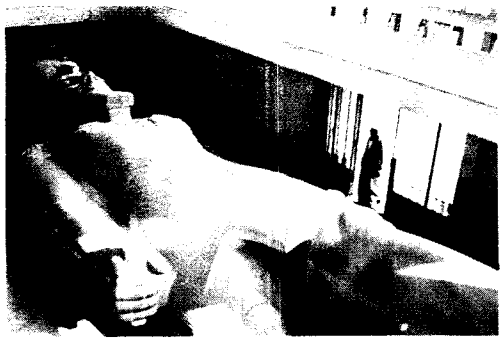
Elements of the wonderful and the ordinary contributed to the greatest Old Testament events. The natural and supernatural combined to produce God's deliverance. The Exodus was both miraculous and historical. An air of mystery surrounds this event as all miraculous events. We are not told when the Exodus occurred. We do not know precisely where it happened since the Hebrew term may have meant the Red Sea as we know it, one of its tributaries, or a "sea of reeds" whose location is unknown. We do not know who or how many may have been involved. The record makes it clear that God delivered Israel from bondage because of His covenant with the patriarchs and because He desired to redeem His people (Ex. 6:2–8).

The Date of the Exodus The Bible does not give an incontrovertible date for the Exodus. First



© carta

THE COMING OF THE ISRAELITES



Philistine warrior

Ashdod
Ekron
Zorah
Gath
Azeka
Ashkelon
Eglon
Gaza
C
Gerar
Beersh
SIMEO
Negeb
Dead Sea
Arnon
MOAB
Kir-moab
Zoar
Zered River
Tamar
Zalmonah
Bozrah
Arabah
Punon
Wilderness of Zin
Kadesh-barnea
D
31°
The Israelite penetration
Major battle
Limit of Israelite control, 12th cent. B.C.
DAN Israelite Tribe
JAIR Locale of Judge
Philistine city
0 10 20 30 40 miles
0 20 35° 40 60 km
2
Fortress of "The Canaan"
Egyptian name for Gaza
THE EXODUS
Gaza
Arad
Qin
Mt. Sinai
Di-Zahab

Kings 6:1 says, "In the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month of Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the Lord." But this verse refers primarily to the beginning of the building of Solomon's Temple and only in a general way to the time of the Exodus. We do not know the precise dates of Solomon's reign. If we use 961 B.C. as the beginning of Solomon's reign, his fourth year would be 957 B.C. If we take the 480 years of 1 Kings 6:1 literally, the Exodus would be dated in 1437 B.C. Exodus 1:11 says, however, that the Israelites in Egypt built the store cities of Pithom and Raamses for Pharaoh. Evidently the name Raamses was not used in Egypt before 1300 B.C. If one of the store cities was named for a king by that name, the Exodus could not have happened before 1300 B.C. Thus some scholars believe the Exodus must have taken place after 1300 B.C.

It has been the opinion of most scholars since the rise of modern Egyptology that the Exodus likely occurred during the reign of Ramses II in the nineteenth dynasty about 1270 B.C., although many Bible students attempt to date it in the earlier eighteenth dynasty about 1447 B.C. Several variations of these dates have been suggested, ranging all the way back to 2000 B.C. None of these attempts to redate the Exodus has gained widespread acceptance. Perhaps the best estimate of the date for the Exodus remains about 1270 B.C., but this is far from a proven fact.

The monumental statue of Ramses II, probably the pharaoh of the Exodus, at Memphis in Egypt.

The Number Involved in the Exodus In our English Bibles Exodus 12:37 says, "And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot, that were men, besides children." For a very long time and for various reasons some Bible scholars have asked: Should the number 600,000 be understood literally? It seems to be an excessively large number. Exodus 23:29–30 and Deuteronomy 7:22 suggest the number was so small that the people would be endangered by wild beasts. Many scholars believe the Hebrew word 'eleph, usually translated "thousand," can also be translated "clan" or "fighting unit." Perhaps this is the meaning in Exodus 12:17. Assuming this, conservative scholars have estimated the number at between 6,000 and 72,000. We may not know the exact date, route, or number of people in the Exodus. But the significant thing is we know and believe that such an event happened and that we interpret it as a saving act of God.

Lake Timsah, possibly the place where the Hebrews crossed the Red Sea.

The lower half of a broken monumental statue of Ramses II at Tanis, the possible start of the Exodus.

The Exodus was the work of God. It was also a historical event involving a superpower nation and an oppressed people. God acted redemptively in power, freedom, and love. When the kingdom of God did not come, the later prophets began to look for a second Exodus. That expectation was fulfilled spiritually in Christ's redemptive act.

Ralph L. Smith

EXODUS, BOOK OF The central book of the Old Testament, reporting God's basic saving act for Israel in the Exodus from Egypt and His making of His covenant with the nation destined to be His kingdom of priests.

Literary Setting The Book of Exodus is the second book of the Old Testament and of the Pentateuch. See Pentateuch for discussion of date and authorship. Exodus builds on the narrative of creation, human sin, divine punishment and renewal, the call of Abraham to bless the world, and the struggles of Isaac and then Jacob to carry out God's call. This ends with Joseph taking his father's family into Egypt to avoid the harsh sufferings of famine. Exodus takes up the story of the children of Jacob in Egypt, now under a new pharaoh and seen as feared foreigners instead of welcomed deliverers from famine. Israel thus became slave laborers in Egypt (ch. 1). God delivered the baby Moses from danger, and he grew up in pharaoh's court as son of pharaoh's daughter. Still he cared for the Israelites. Trying to protect one of his own people, he killed an Egyptian. Thus Moses had to flee to the wilderness of Midian, where he helped seven endangered shepherd girls. He settled among them and married one of the girls. There, God called him at the burning bush of Mount Horeb/Sinai and sent him back to rescue Israel from Egypt (chs. 2—4). With his brother Aaron, he faced a stubborn pharaoh, who refused to release the Israelites. When pharaoh made life harder for Israel, the Israelites griped about Moses. God took this as opportunity to reveal Himself to Israel, to pharaoh, and to the Egyptians. God brought the plagues upon Egypt. Pharaoh stubbornly refused to let Israel go until his firstborn son and the eldest sons of all Egypt died in the final plague. This tenth plague became the setting for Israel's central religious celebration, that of Passover and Unleavened Bread in which Israel reenacted the Exodus from Egypt and rejoiced at God's supreme act of salvation for His people (chs. 5—13). As Israel fled Egypt, the pharaoh again resisted and led his army after them. The miracle of the Red Sea (or perhaps more literally, the Sea of Reeds) became the greatest moment in Israel's history, the moment God created a nation for Himself by delivering them from the strongest military power on earth as He led them through the divided waters of the sea and then flooded the sea again as the Egyptians tried to follow (ch. 14).

After celebrating the deliverance in song and dance (15:1—21), Israel followed God's leadership into the wilderness, but soon the difficult wilderness life proved too hard. The Israelites cried for the good old days of Egypt, even after God supplied their food and drink needs and after He defeated the Amalekites (15:22—17:15). Moses' father-in-law Jethro brought Moses' wife and children back to him in the wilderness and praised God for all that He had done for Moses and the people. Jethro also advised Moses how to organize a more efficient judicial system, relieving Moses of stress (ch. 18). Then Israel came to Sinai, where God called them to become His covenant people, a holy nation to carry out Abraham's mission of blessing the nations. God gave the Ten Commandments and other laws central to the covenant (chs. 19–23), and then confirmed the covenant in a mysterious ceremony (ch. 24). Moses went to the top of the mountain to receive the remainder of God's instructions, especially instructions for building the sacred place of worship, the tabernacle (chs. 24–31). Impatient Israel got Aaron to build an object of worship they could see, so he made the golden calf. The people began worshiping. This angered God, who sent Moses back down to the people. Moses prayed for the people despite their sin, but then saw the people's sinful actions and threw the tablets with the law to the ground, breaking them. Moses again went up and prayed for the people. God punished them but did not destroy them as He had threatened. God showed His continued presence in the Tent of Meeting and in letting His glory pass by Moses (chs. 32–33). God then gave Moses the law on two new tablets of stone and renewed the covenant with the people, providing further basic laws for them. Such intense communication with God brought radiance to Moses' face (ch. 34). Moses then led Israel to celebrate the sabbath and to build the tabernacle (chs. 35—39). Moses set up the tabernacle and established worship in it. God blessed the action with His holy, glorious presence (ch. 40). This provided the sign for Israel's future journeys, following God's cloud and fire.

Theological Teaching In Exodus Israel learned the basic nature of God and His salvation. They also learned the nature of sin, the characteristics of God's leader, the components of worship, and the meaning of salvation. In Exodus Israel learned the identity of the people of God.

God is Ruler of the world, able to act for His people even on the home territory of the world's most powerful political and military force. God chooses to act for the people He elects. God knows the situation of His people even when another nation has forced them into slavery. God saved His people through calling out a leader to communicate God's will and to face their enemies. God empowered the leader at a time of the leader's personal weakness rather than at a time of strength. He worked in the forces of nature to show His unequalled power and to demonstrate His concern for His own people.

Salvation, power, and concern was not all God revealed of Himself. He also showed a holy nature in that special preparations were made to enter His presence. He revealed His great glory, so majestic even the leader could not view it. Most of all, He revealed His will to be present among His people and lead them through their daily activities.

In so doing, He showed the way He expected His people to live, a way of holiness, a way of priesthood among the nations. This way centered on life guided by the Ten Commandments. Such a life reflected the nature of God Himself, who could be identified as "The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty" (Ex. 34:6–7).

God expected His people to live the way of holiness, the way of the Ten Commandments. Failure to do so is sin. Sin centers particularly in giving another god credit for what God has done and in worshiping what human hands have made rather than the true God who allows no images of Himself. To avoid sin, God's people had to follow God's chosen leader, even when the path led through the wilderness and demanded a life-style lacking in some of the food and luxuries they had learned to take for granted. The leader followed God's will and not the people's. In so doing, the leader interceded with God for a sinful people, willing to give up his own place with God in exchange for the people's salvation. Only a leader who communed face to face with God could develop such an attitude. Thus Moses became the leader without parallel for Israel.

The leader's lasting role included the establishment of a worship place and worship practices. God's people gained their identity in worship. The leader showed them when, where, and how to worship.

The people offered worship because They had experienced God's salvation. For them salvation meant physical deliverance in military action against a powerful world enemy. It involved following God's instructions and waiting for God's miraculous help. Salvation set up a relationship between God and the people, a relationship based on God's initiative in delivering the people and on God's initiative in inviting the people into covenant relationship. See Covenant. This meant the people could trust God to lead them through their personal and national history. It also meant that God expected a trusting people to obey Him as He set out the way of life they should follow. Salvation was not just receiving God's salvation. It was following in faith the life-style God described for them.

Outline

I. God Saves His People (1:1—4:17).
   A. God's people face oppression in fear (1:1–22).
   B. God raises up a deliverer for His oppressed people (2:1—4:17).

II. God Sends His Leader on a Difficult Mission (4:18—7:2).
   A. God uses all means to accomplish His will against an ungodly ruler (4:18–26).
   B. God fulfills His angry promise to provide a helper for His leader (4:27–31).
   C. God's leader delivers God's message to pagan leaders (5:1–23).
   D. God promises deliverance to a deaf people (6:1–9).
   E. God reaffirms His insecure leaders (6:10—7:2).

III. God Reveals Himself in Punishing His Enemy (7:3—12:30).

A. God is sovereign over enemy powers (7:3–13).
B. Miracles do not bring belief (7:14–25).
C. Enemy powers seek compromise not conversion (8:1–15).
D. God's power convinces enemy religious leaders (8:16–19).
E. Political deceit cannot defeat God's purposes (8:20–32).
F. God's power is superior to pagan religious symbols (9:1–7).
G. God's power affects people as well as animals (9:8–12).
H. Terror and admission of sin are not adequate responses to the actions of the only God (9:13–35).
I. God's saving acts are to be taught to coming generations (10:1–20).
J. God's will must be followed completely (10:21–29).
K. God distinguishes between His people and His enemies when He punishes (11:1–10).
L. God judges other gods but preserves an obedient people (12:1–13).
M. God's people are to remember and celebrate His deliverance (12:14–28).
N. God punishes His proud, stubborn enemies (12:29–30).

IV. God Reveals Himself by Delivering His People from Bondage (12:31—15:21).
A. God delivers and blesses His people and those who join them (12:31–51).
B. God instructs His people to remember, celebrate, and teach His mighty salvation (13:1–16).
C. God leads and protects His obedient people (13:17–22).
D. God gains glory and evokes faith by saving His troubled people (14:1–31).
E. God's people praise Him for their deliverance (15:1–21).

V. God Provides for His Doubting, Complaining People (15:22—18:27).
A. God promises healing to an obedient people (15:22–27).
B. God reveals His glory and tests His people's faith while meeting their needs (16:1–36).
C. Doubting people test God's presence (17:1–7).
D. God delivers His people and permanently curses their enemy (17:8–16).
E. Foreign relatives testify to God's superiority over all gods (18:1–12).
F. God's people must have effective teaching and administrative leadership (18:13–27).

VI. God Covenants with His People (19:1—20:21).
A. God's covenant is based upon His act of deliverance and upon the people's obedience as a kingdom of priests (19:1–8).
B. God prepares His people for His coming down to make a covenant (19:9–15).
C. God's awesome presence confirms His covenant (19:16–25).
D. The Ten Commandments are God's covenant ground rules for life with Him (20:1–17).
E. Awestruck people need a human mediator with the holy God (20:18–21).

VII. God Gives Civil, Ceremonial, and Criminal Laws to Help His People (20:22—23:33).
A. Instructions for acceptable worship (20:22–26)
B. Treatment of Hebrew slaves (21:1–11)
C. Dealing with a person who injures or kills another person (21:12–32)
D. Justice for damage done to another's property (21:33—22:15)
E. Justice when a virgin is seduced (22:16–17)
F. Punishment for sorcery, bestiality, and idolatry (22:18–20)
G. Care for the stranger, widow, orphan, and poor (22:21–27)
H. Respect for God and human rulers, dedication of children, and being holy (22:28–31)
I. Practice honesty; do not hurt the righteous or innocent (23:1–9).
J. Keep the sabbatic year, the sabbath day, sacred occasions (23:10–19).
K. God will provide spiritual guidance (23:20–33).

VIII. God and His People Must Ratify the Covenant (24:1–18).
A. The people commit themselves to do God's will (24:1–11).
B. God ratifies the covenant with His holy presence (24:12–18).

IX. God Plans to Be Present with His People (25:1—31:17).
A. As their hearts move them, people are to give for God's worship place (25:1–7).
B. God will dwell among His peple in His place of holy worship (25:8—27:21).
C. God's minister mediates His holy presence for a holy people (28:1—29:37).
D. People respond to the holy Presence with sacrificial giving (29:38—30:38).
E. Craftsmen respond to the holy Presence by dedicating God-given skills (31:1–11).
F. People respond to the holy Presence with sabbath worship (31:12–17).

X. God Restores a Sinful People (31:18—34:35).
A. God provides guidelines for life in His presence (31:18).

B. An impatient people break the covenant by making and worshiping other gods (32:1–6).
C. God reacts against a disobedient people in wrath (32:7–10).
D. Intercessory prayer brings divine repentance (32:11–14).
E. Judgment comes to a disobedient people through God's chosen leaders (32:15–29).
F. A mediator's majestic intercession is not sufficient (32:30–35).
G. God withdraws His immediate presence from a sinful people (33:1–4).
H. Mourning and repentance, even by a disobedient people, catch God's attention (33:5–6).
I. Worship at God's chosen place is an essential element in restoring the covenant (33:7–11).
J. The unseeable presence of God reaffirms the covenant relationship (33:12–23).
K. God renews His covenant with His people (34:1–35).

XI. God Honors the Obedience of His People with His Holy Presence (35:1—40:38).
A. God gives His people specific requirements (35:1–19).
B. Obedient people provide resources and skills needed for God's work (35:20—36:7).
C. Obedient people use their resources to build God's dwelling place (36:8—39:43).
D. The leader of God's people prepares for worship (40:1–33).
E. God's presence fills the worship place continually for His obedient people (40:34–38). Trent C. Butler

EXORCISM The practice of expelling demons by means of some ritual act. Although the Hebrew Bible does make reference to demonic beings (Lev. 17:7; Deut. 32:17; Isa. 13:21; 34:14; 2 Chron. 11:15; Ps. 106:37 NRSV), there is no account of demons being cast out of a person or a place. The office of the exorcist, long known in the religious practice of Mesopotamia, is totally absent from the Hebrew Bible. The demons that are mentioned there are usually dreadful earthly beings, sometimes resembling goats or satyrs who live in dry regions. Twice a loan-word, shēdîm (Akkadian: shêdû, "protecting spirit"), is used to describe the foreign gods (Deut. 32:17; Ps. 106:37) and is usually translated "demons" in English.

In the New Testament the demons were earthly powers or spirits allied with Satan. Jesus' power to exorcise is demonstration in the Synoptic Gospels of His power over Satan (Matthew 15:21–28; Mark 1:23–38; 5:1–20; 7:24–30; 9:14–29). Exorcism is included in the list of wonders Jesus performed at Capernaum and in the Galilee (Mark 1:34,39). Mark 3:11 reports that Jesus had to silence the unclean spirits because they recognized Him and proclaimed Him Son of God.

Jesus gave His disciples authority over unclean spirits (Mark 3:14–15; 6:7) which they generally exercised with success (Mark 6:13), but not always (Mark 9:18). Mark 9:38–41 makes reference to someone who did exorcisms in the name of Jesus even though he was not a follower of Jesus. Jesus told the disciples not to forbid him. In another vein, Acts 19:13–16 tells of wandering Jewish exorcists in Ephesus who attempted to exorcise demons in the name of the Jesus preached by Paul but without success.

John says nothing of Jesus exorcising demons, but the issue of demons is not lacking in that Gospel, for His opponents often accused Jesus of being possessed (John 7:20; 8:48–49,52; 10:20). Similarly, in the Synoptics, the scribes accused Him of casting out demons by the power of the prince of demons (Mark 3:22).

The usual technique of exorcism, as shown by contemporary magical papyri, was to adjure the demon (by name, if possible) through the power of one or more gods to depart the one possessed. This was often accompanied by preparations of herbs and the imposition of amulets. Magical words of extended, repeated syllables were also part of almost all exorcistic formulas. By contrast, the exorcisms of Jesus in the Synoptics involved His command without reference to other divine beings (Mark 1:25; 9:25) and with only a single reference to anything like technique in saying about the boy the disciples could not exorcise that the demon involved could only be cast out by prayer (Mark 9:29). Something close to the usual technique of exorcism was demonstrated by the Gerasene demoniac who tried unsuccessfully to exorcise Jesus, calling Him by title and adjuring Him in the name of the Most High God to leave him alone (Mark 5:7). Jesus relied on His own unique power to demonstrate demons had no place or power in His Kingdom. See Miracles; Magic; Healing; Demon. Fred L. Horton, Jr.

EXPIATION, PROPITIATION (Ĕx pī ā´ tion; Prō pī tī ā´ tion) Terms used by Christian theologians in attempts to define and explain the meaning of Christ's death on the cross as it relates to God and to believers. Expiation emphasizes the removal of guilt through a payment of the penalty, while propitiation emphasizes the appeasement or averting of God's wrath and justice. Both words are related to reconciliation, since it is through Christ's death on the cross for our sins that we are reconciled to a God of holy love (Rom. 5:9–11;

2 Cor. 5:18–21; Col. 1:19–23).

Biblical Vocabulary The point of difference in interpretation for theologians has centered on the Greek word hilasmos in 1 John 2:2; 4:10. A look at various translations show the distinctions here: "propitiation" (KJV, NAS); "expiation" (RSV); "atoning sacrifice for our sins" (NIV, NRSV, compare REB); "means by which our sins are forgiven" (TEV). Related Greek words occur in Matthew 16:22; Luke 18:13; Romans 3:25; Hebrews 2:17; 8:12; 9:5. KJV uses various translations of these words: "be merciful," "make reconciliation," "to be a propitiation," "the mercy-seat," "be it far from thee," "I will be merciful."

In Greek writings hilasmos refers to soothing the anger of the gods. In the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament, hilasmos appears in Leviticus 25:9 in the expression, "day of atonement"; in Psalm 130:4 to confess that there is "forgiveness" with God; in Numbers 5:8 in the expression the "ram of the atonement"; and in Ezekiel 44:27 as a "sin-offering." Daniel 9:9 uses the plural form to speak of "forgivenesses" which are a character trait of God.

Some scholars interpret these Old Testament references to mean that God has acted as the subject to cover and forgive sins. He has removed the uncleanness or defilement of sin. Other scholars see God as the object receiving the offering for sin which then in some sense pacifies His anger and meets His holy need for justice. In the New Testament setting, this would mean that on the cross Jesus either dealt with the evil nature of human sin and covered it so that God forgives it, or it means that Jesus satisfied God's holy anger and justice so that forgiven sinners could freely enter the presence of the holy God. Some scholars would see both ideas present in the word hilasmos, so that God in grace initiated the sacrifice of Jesus to provide covering and forgiveness for human sin but that He also received the sacrifice which satisfied His anger and justice.

The background of the idea is the Old Testament sacrificial system. The whole system sought to procure God's favor through obediently following ways He commanded. God promised to show His mercy after His faithful people followed certain ritual requirements. These included the burnt offering (Lev. 1:3–17), the peace offering (3:1–17), the sin offering (4:1—5:13), and the guilt offering (5:15—6:6). None of these dealt with "defiant sins" (Num. 15:20–31), only with "sin through ignorance" (Lev. 4:2). The high point of the sacrificial cult was the annual day of atonement when the sins of the people were laid on a scapegoat by the high priest and the sin-laden animal was then driven into the wilderness to perish (Lev. 16:1–34).

In the Old Testament, the note of grace is clearly present. God did not simply wait for His people to bring before Him the appropriate sacrifices. He took the initiative in specifying which sacrifices would be needed. When Abraham showed willingness to sacrifice Isaac, God Himself supplied the adequate substitute offering (Gen. 22:1–19). The Old Testament repeats its promise that God remains gracious even in our sinning, that He stands ready to forgive even before we are ready to repent (Pss. 78:21–28; 89:28–34; Isa. 65:1–2; Jer. 31:1–3, 31–34; Hos. 6:1–2). God expects people both to repent of sin and to commit themselves to obey His covenant.

The New Testament shows how Jesus fulfilled the Old Testament system of sacrifices and thus replaced it with His own work on the cross. The Old Testament system could not purify the consciences of those who offered them (Heb. 8:7, 13; 10:1–4). In their stead, God provided a perfect Sacrifice, that of His own Son. This sacrifice is eternal, not provisional; it is sufficient to cover or expiate all human sin, not just specific sins (Heb. 7:26–28; 9:25–26). The sacrifice of Jesus Christ on Calvary restored the broken relationship between God and His people and did not need to be repeated. He made reconciliation available to all people in all times. Such reconciliation involves a change both in God's attitude toward us and in our attitude toward God. The cross of Calvary was God's eternal plan to deal with human sin so that John could describe Jesus as the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8). God chose to forgive us before the sacrifice was enacted in history, but His forgiveness could not reach us until this sacrifice took place.

To understand the need for propitiation and for expiation, we have to remind ourselves that the God of the Bible is both holy and loving. His holiness means that sin cannot be condoned. His love signifies that the sinner can be accepted if the claims of divine holiness are recognized. The atoning sacrifice of Christ both satisfies the demands of His holy law and demonstrates His boundless love, the love that goes beyond the law. God was not waiting to be appeased (as in the pagan, Greek conception). Rather, God condescended to meet us on our level to remedy the situation. He provided the sacrificial offering that expiates human sin and makes reconciliation possible. Both Old and the New Testaments proclaim that only God's grace opens the door to salvation. All ritual requirements for sacrifice in the Old Testament are replaced by the sacrifice of the cross, which wipes away the record of our debts to God (Col. 2:14; Heb. 10:14–18). The only sacrifices now required of the Christian are those of praise and thanksgiving, which take the form of worship in spirit and in truth and the obedience of discipleship (Rom. 12:1; Heb. 13:15–16; 1 Pet. 2:5). God calls us to demonstrate our gratefulness for His self-sacrifice by leading lives of holiness, lives that give the world a sign and witness of God's great love for us shown in Jesus Christ.

In conclusion, the doctrine of the atonement includes both the dimensions of propitiation—averting the wrath of God—and expiation—taking away or covering over human guilt. By the expiation of human guilt, the wrath of God is turned away, the holiness of God is satisfied. Yet it is God who in the person of His Son performs the sacrifice of expiation. It is God who in the person of His Son swallows up evil within Himself through vicarious identification with the sin of His people. A sacrifice was necessary to satisfy the demands of His law, but God Himself provided the Sacrifice out of His incomparable love. What human ritual offerings could not do, God has done once for all by giving up His Son for the sins of the whole human race.

See Atonement; Blood; Christology; Salvation.

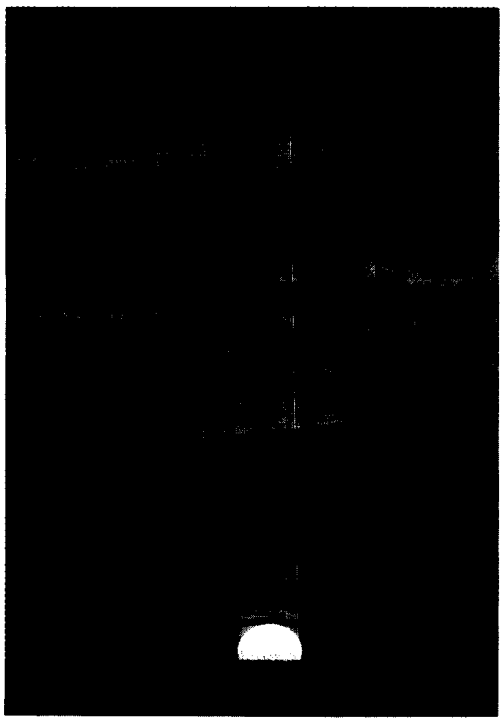
Donald G. Bloesch

EYE The organ of sight. Literal uses. The eyes were especially valued organs. If a master stuck a slave, blinding him in an eye, the slave was to go free as compensation for the eye (Ex. 21:26). The Old Testament law of retribution limited vengeance of personal loss to "an eye for an eye" (Lev. 24:20). Jesus replaced this concept of justice with His requirement of love for enemies (Matt. 5:38). An eye defect disqualified one for priestly service (Lev. 21:20). An exceptionally cruel punishment was to gouge out the eyes of a enemy (Judg. 16:21; 2 Kings 25:7). This act was interpreted as bringing disgrace on the land of the blinded ones (1 Sam. 11:2). The description of Leah's eyes (Gen. 29:17) is of uncertain meaning. The KJV rendering tender can be understood either positively (lovely, NRSV) or negatively (weak, NAS).



Extended uses The Old Testament often speaks of the eye where we would speak of the person, reflecting the Hebrew concept of bodily parts as semi-independent entities. The eye can thus approve actions (Job 29:11). The eyes can be full of adultery (2 Peter 2:14) and can desire (Ps. 54:7) or lust (Num. 15:39; 1 John 2:16). The eyes despise (Esther 1:17), are dissatisfied (Prov. 27:20; Eccl. 4:8), and can dwell on past provocation (Job 17:2). Job even spoke of entering a covenant with his eyes as if they were a second party (31:1). Eyes can be evil, that is, greedy or stingy. Such an evil eye refuses to loan when the sabbatical year is near (Deut. 15:9) and begrudges a brother food (28:54). The evil eye of Matthew 6:23 is often interpreted as an unhealthy eye in contrast to the single (whole, healthy) eye of 6:22. The Matthean context of teaching on treasure in heaven (6:19) and serving mammon or riches (6:24) as well as the usage in Matthew 20:15 suggest that the familiar Old Testament idea of the evil eye as the stingy eye is in mind here also. The eyes can be generous to the poor (Prov. 22:9). The eyes can scorn and mock (Prov. 30:17), spare an enemy (1 Sam. 24:10; Isa. 13:18), or wait for a time to sin (Job 24:15). The eyes can offend (Matt. 5:19), that is, cause someone to sin. Jesus' call to pluck out the offending eye is an exaggerated call to let nothing cause one to sin.

Expressions The "apple of the eye" is a description of the pupil. Proverbs 7:2 called for making God's law the apple of one's eye, that is, something of value to be guarded (kept) carefully. To "make any baldness between your eyes" (Deut. 14:1 KJV) means to shave one's forelocks (NRSV, REB). Bribes blind the eyes of judges causing them to ignore justice (Deut. 16:19; 1 Sam. 12:3). The difficult expression "covering the eyes" (Gen. 20:16 KJV), denotes either compensation for injury (REB), covering the offense (NIV), or else exoneration or some similar term (NRSV, NAS, TEV). In some way Sarah was vindicated; Abimelech and his company could see nothing to criticize in her behavior; and her marriage was saved.

The difficult expression, "daughter of the eye" (Lam. 2:18 NAS margin), rendered "apple of the eye" by the KJV is generally understood as a poetic equivalent for the eye. To see "eye to eye" (Isa. 52:8) is either to see in plain sight (NRSV) or to see with one's own eyes.

Eyes which have been enlightened or brightened (1 Sam. 14:27) are likely an image for being refreshed (REB, TEV). Compare Psalm 13:3. Light of the eyes can parallel strength (Ps. 38:10; compare Prov. 15:30). The Lord's commands could enlighten the eyes (Ps. 19:8) in this sense of giving strength or in the sense of giving understanding.

Sunrise ("eyelids of the morning" in Job 3:9) over the Mediterranean coast of Israel.

To fasten one's eyes (Acts 11:6) is to look closely. Heavy eyes (Mark 14:40) are drowsy eyes. To have one's eyes opened (Gen. 3:5; 21:19) is to be made aware or to recognize. The image of "tearing out ones eyes" (Gal. 4:15) pictures willingness to do anything. Winking one's eyes (Ps. 35:19; Prov. 6:13; 10:10; compare 16:30) is associated with hate, treachery, and trouble-making.

God's eye(s) God's eye or eyes is a frequent picture of God's providential care. God guides with His eye (Ps. 32:8), that is, gives counsel while offering His watchcare. Deliverance from death and famine result from God's watchful eye (Ps. 33:18–19). The image of God's eye(s) ranging throughout the earth (2 Chron. 16:9; Prov. 15:3; Jer. 16:17) symbolizes God's knowledge of all human activity and His control over it. Apocalyptic pictures involving numerous eyes (Ezek. 1:18; 10:12; Rev. 4:6), likewise, reassure of God's awareness of His people's plight wherever they might be.

Other uses The Hebrew term for eye is used in a variety of expressions not related to sight or seeing. The word can be translated spring (Gen. 16:7; Num. 33:9). The term can refer to the (sur)face of the land (Ex. 10:5,15; Num. 22:5,11) or to facets (faces) of a stone (Zech. 3:9). The term is used for the sparkling of wine (Prov. 23:31) perhaps in reference to bubbles that resemble eyes. The word translated "color" in Numbers 11:17 is also a word for eye. Chris Church

EYELIDS OF THE MORNING A phrase meaning "the glow of dawn" used to describe the eyes of Leviathan (Job 41:18). See Leviathan.

EYE PAINT See Cosmetics.

EZAR (Ē′ zär) KJV spelling of Ezer in 1 Chronicles 1:38. See Ezer.

EZBAI (Ĕz′ bā ī) Personal name of unknown meaning. Father of one of David's military leaders (1 Chron. 11:37). The parallel list (1 Sam. 23:35) contains a word of similar appearance—"the Arbite." The Samuel reading may be the original with the Chronicles reading the result of early copying, but no certain decision can be made.

EZBON (Ĕz′ bŏn) Personal name perhaps meaning, "bare." 1. Son of Gad and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:16). Numbers 26:16 has a similar sounding Hebrew name, "Ozni." The Samaritan Pentateuch has a longer Hebrew name of similar sound, so that the precise spelling and pronunciation of the name are not known. Whatever the name, he was one of the Hebrews who entered Egypt with Joseph.

EZEKIAS (Ĕz ĕ kī′ ás) KJV spelling of Ezekiel in the New Testament following the Greek spelling there. See Ezekiel.

EZEKIEL (E zē′ kī ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God will strengthen." A sixth-century B.C. prophet during the Babylonian Exile, son of Buzi (1:3), and priest as well as prophet. He was taken captive to Babylon in 597 B.C. by King Nebuchadnezzar along with King Jehoiachin and 10,000 others, including political and military leaders and skilled craftsmen (2 Kings 24:14–16). He lived in his own house at Tel-Abib near the river Chebar, an irrigation canal that channeled the waters of the Euphrates River into the surrounding arid region.

Ezekiel's call came in 593 B.C., the "thirtieth year" (1:1), probably Ezekiel's age (though it has been interpreted as 30 years since the discovery of the law book in 622, 30 years since Jehoiachin's imprisonment, or a system of Babylonian chronology).

Scholars have long debated whether Ezekiel was in Babylon or Jerusalem during his ministry. The book bearing his name points unmistakably to a Babylonian locale (1:1–3; 3:15; 8:1–3; 33:21). However, it has been argued that since most of the messages were addressed to the people of Jerusalem (16:2; 21:2; 22:2), it would have been meaningless to deliver them to the exiles. Also, some believe his intimate knowledge of events in Jerusalem (for example, his description of worship practices in the Temple, 8:1–18; Pelatiah's death, 11:13) would require that he was in Jerusalem. To resolve the difficulties, some have suggested that he was in Babylon part of the time and in Jerusalem at other times.

All objections to the Babylonian locale can be answered satisfactorily, however. Prophets frequently delivered messages for audiences not present (for example, the messages against foreign nations as in chapters 25—32). Furthermore, the genuine visionary experience (through which Ezekiel claimed to receive his knowledge) cannot be dismissed arbitrarily. Of course, visitors from Jerusalem could have kept him informed about events at home and carried his messages back when they returned. Therefore, there is no need to reject Babylon as the location of Ezekiel's entire ministry.

Ezekiel was married, but little else is known about his family life. His wife died suddenly during the siege of Jerusalem (24:18). Ezekiel continued to preach until at least 571 B.C. (29:17). His ministry can be divided into two phases: (1) 593–587, characterized by warnings of coming judgment on Judah and Jerusalem, and (2) 587–571, a period characterized by messages of encouragement and hope for the future.

Much has been written about Ezekiel's personality. He has been labeled neurotic, paranoid, psychotic, or schizophrenic because of his unusual behavior (for example, lying on one side for 390 days and on the other for 40 days, 4:4–6; shaving off his hair, 5:1–4; and his many visions). A better explanation for his strange behavior is that anyone who conscientiously obeys God will be considered "strange" by some people. Nothing God asked Ezekiel to do seemed too difficult. Only once was he reluctant to obey a command that would have made him ceremonially unclean (4:14). His objection reflected his priestly training.

Historical Background Ezekiel lived in a time of international crisis and conflict.

In 605, a showdown between Egypt and Babylonia at Carchemish established Babylonia as the dominant world power. Judah was able to maintain her independence by transferring her allegiance to Babylonia. During the last century of her existence, Judah was governed by a succession of wicked kings, with one exception. Josiah (640–609 B.C.) was deeply committed to God and instituted sweeping religious reforms during his reign (2 Kings 23:1–25). His son Jehoahaz was deposed by the Egyptians after a three-months' rule and was succeeded by another son, Jehoiakim (609–598 B.C.), who rebelled against his Babylonian overlords. Nebuchadnezzar led an army to quell the insurrection. During the crisis that followed, Jehoiakim died or perhaps was killed by those in his own court. His son Jehoiachin (598–597 B.C.) was taken as prisoner to Babylon after a three-months' rule, along with Ezekiel and others. The last of Judah's kings, Zedekiah (597–587 B.C.), did not heed the warnings of Ezekiel and Jeremiah. He also rebelled, and Nebuchadnezzar led an army that besieged Jerusalem for eighteen months before the city fell.

Difficulties with Understanding the Book The messages of Ezekiel are not easy to understand because of their frequent use of symbolic imagery. The modern reader is not alone in struggling to understand Ezekiel. There is evidence of opposition to the book for liturgical purposes and public reading that continued into the first century A.D., although it had been recognized as part of the canon for several centuries. At one time those under age 30 were not allowed to read the first chapter and chapters 40—48. Rabbi ben Hezekiah burned 300 jars of "midnight oil" in an attempt to harmonize the text. He concluded that he had solved all its problems.

Influence of Ezekiel on the New Testament Allusions to Ezekiel in the New Testament are found most prominently in the Gospel of John and the Book of Revelation. Jesus' presentation of Himself as the Good Shepherd in John 10 surely was intended as a contrast to the wicked shepherd in Ezekiel 34. His comparison of Himself to the vine in John 15 may have had in mind the parable of the vine of Ezekiel 15.

Allusions to Ezekiel are found more frequently in the Book of Revelation than any other New Testament book. The living creatures of Ezekiel 1 reappear in Revelation 4:6–9. The throne of God (Ezek. 1:26–28) is described similarly in Revelation 4:2–3. "Gog, the land of Magog" (Ezek. 38:2) becomes "Gog and Magog" in Revelation 20:8. The Temple vision of Ezekiel 40—48 has several parallels in Revelation 21—22, with its focus on the Holy City Jerusalem and the river flowing from the throne of God.

Jesus' frequent reference to Himself as the Son of man is generally considered to have its origin in Daniel 7:13, but he may have appropriated it from the 93 times God addressed Ezekiel as "son of man."

Stylistic Characteristics of Ezekiel The Book of Ezekiel has been described by scholars as an artistic masterpiece. It contains a number of distinctive stylistic characteristics. Less than 10 percent of the messages are in a poetic format as compared to the frequent use of poetry in Isaiah and Jeremiah.

Few other books in the Old Testament contain such a rich blend of symbolic actions, visions, figurative speech, and allegories to communicate God's messages. There are at least 11 symbolic acts performed by Ezekiel (3:26–27; 4:1–3,4–8,9–17; 5:1–4; 12:1–16,17–20; 21:6,18–23; 24:15–24; 37:15–23). Visions form the content of 17 of the 48 chapters (1–3; 8–11; 37:1–14; 40–48). The imaginative use of figurative language was characteristic of Ezekiel (the watchman, 3:17–21; 33:1–9; a refining furnace, 22:17–22; Tyre as a merchant ship, 27:1–36; Pharaoh as a crocodile, 29:2–5). Ezekiel proclaimed many messages by means of allegory (15:1–8; 16:1–63; 17:1–24; 23:1–49; 24:3–14).

God first appeared to Ezekiel in a storm cloud seated on a throne surrounded by cherubim (1:1–28; 10:15). He commissioned Ezekiel to go to an "impudent children and stiffhearted" (2:4) and gave him a scroll to eat (3:1–3), symbolizing his complete identification with God's Word.

After Ezekiel returned to the exiles in Tel-Abib, God spoke to him again, addressing him as "watchman" (3:17) as a reminder of his responsibility to His people. God imposed silence on him for the next seven and one half years so that he could not speak unless he had a message from God (3:26–27; 33:21–22).

Ezekiel's ministry began with the performance of a series of symbolic acts, all designed to communicate God's warnings of the coming siege of Jerusalem and the scattering of its people (4:1—5:17). Chapters 8—11 contain an extended vision that took Ezekiel to Jerusalem where he saw abominable worship practices in the Temple (8:1–18).

Ezekiel pronounced woes on the false prophets and prophetesses who were leading the people astray (13:1–23). However, he did not exempt each individual from his or her responsibility before God (18:1–32). God told Ezekiel not to weep when his wife died during the siege of Jerusalem to communicate to the people that God's sympathy for His disobedient people was exhausted (24:16–17, 22–24).

Along with all the prophets except Hosea, Ezekiel did not limit his messages to the covenant people. Chapters 25—32 contain a series of messages against the surrounding nations. Though seemingly unrelated to the prophet's task of warning his own people, these messages served as solemn warnings that the covenant people could not expect to escape punishment if God would also punish nations which did not acknowledge Him.

After Jerusalem fell, Ezekiel changed the emphasis of his messages. There was no longer need for warning of impending punishment. Instead, the devastated nation needed encouragement that there was hope for the future. Therefore, the rest of the book, beginning with chapter 33, contains mainly messages of hope. The vision of the valley of dry bones dramatically proclaimed the future resurrection of the nation (37:1–14). The prophecies concerning Gog of the land of Magog gave assurance that God would protect His people from their enemies (38:1—39:29).

The closing vision of the restored community announced hope for God's people in the future (40:1—48:35). These chapters are interpreted by some to be a literal description of the Temple to be rebuilt after the Exile, by some as an allegorical picture of the church, by others as a literal temple to be rebuilt as part of the fulfillment of the dispensational premillennial interpretation of Daniel's seventieth week (Dan. 9:2–27), and by others as an example of apocalyptic language to describe God's coming kingdom in understandable terms of the destruction of wickedness and the establishment of a sanctified people in whose midst God would dwell.

Major Themes Prominent themes of the book include God's presence (1:26–28; 48:35), the sovereign authority of God over all nations (Israel as well as pagan nations), individual responsibility (18:1–32), righteousness (18:5–9), submission to God as the key to blessing (9:4; 16:60–63; 18:30–32; 36:22–38), and hope for the future of the people of God (37—48).

Outline

I. Introduction: Yahweh's Glory Watches Over the Captives in Babylon (1:1–28).
II. The Glory Brings Divine Judgment on Israel. (2:1—24:27)
  A. By calling Ezekiel to be a prophet (2:1—3:27)
  B. By predicting the fall of Jerusalem (4:1—5:17)
  C. By condemning Jerusalem's idolatry and sins (6:1—7:27)
  D. By describing and explaining why the Glory departed from the city (8:1—11:25)
  E. By showing the futility of the nation's leadership (12:1—15:8)
  F. As a means of providing reconciliation (16:1—18:32)
  G. Resulting in the nation's destruction (19:1—23:49)
  H. As seen in two events of unparalleled sadness (24:1–27)
    1. In the siege and destruction of Jerusalem (24:1–14)
    2. In the death of Ezekiel's wife (24:15–27)
III. The Glory Brings Divine Judgment to the Nations. (25:1—32:32)
  A. Against Ammon because of her joy over Israel's distress (25:1–7)
  B. Against Moab because of her failure to recognize Israel's revelatory status (25:8–11)
  C. Against Edom because of her lust for vengeance (25:12–14)
  D. Against Philistia because of her perpetual hostility (25:15–17)
  E. Against Tyre because of her greed for self-gain at Israel's expense (26:1—28:19)
  F. Against Sidon because of her constant threat to Israel's welfare (28:20–26)
  G. Against Egypt because of her pride and deceit (29:1—32:32)
IV. The Glory Brings Restoration to Israel. (33:1—48:35)
  A. Through Ezekiel's faithful role as a watchman (33:1–33)
  B. By means of the messianic leader, "my servant David" (34:1–31)
  C. For the entire land (35:1—36:38)
    1. By the total destruction of Edom (35:1–15)
    2. In the deliverance of Israel (36:1–21)
    3. In the implementation of the new covenant (36:22–38)
  D. To revive the hopeless state of the people who felt they had perished (37:1–28)
  E. By defeating the ungodly forces of the nations under Gog of Magog (38:1—39:29)
  F. Resulting in the pure worship of the restored people (40:1—48:35)
    1. With the throne of Yahweh's glory replacing the ark (40:1—43:12)
    2. With the presence of Yahweh's glory providing far-reaching blessings (44:1—47:12)

3. With a firm inheritance in the land (47:13—48:35) F. B. Huey, Jr.

EZEL (Ē′ zĕl) Place name of uncertain meaning, perhaps, "disappearance." Rock where David hid from Saul and watched for Jonathan's signal (1 Sam. 20:19). He had hidden there previously, an apparent reference to David's escape in 1 Samuel 19:2. In 1 Samuel 20:41 the Hebrew text apparently refers to the same place as the "south side" (NAS), using a word for side which sounds much like Ezel. Early translations and modern translators have sought a different text to read at this point. Thus "the pile of stones there" (TEV; compare NRSV) or "the mound there" (REB). The name and location of the site is uncertain. The point of the narrative is clear: David used a natural hiding place to escape Saul and to gain vital information from his friend, the king's son.

EZEM (Ē′ zĕm) Place name meaning, "mighty" or "bone." Town in Judah's tribal territory but settled by tribe of Simeon (Josh. 15:29; 19:3; 1 Chron. 4:29). KJV spells Azem in Joshua. Ezem is modern Umm el-Azam about fifteen miles south of Beersheba and southwest of Aroer. Archaeologists at tell esh-Sharia about thirteen miles northwest of Beersheba have found a broken piece of pottery with the name Ezem on it.

EZER (Ē′ zer) English spelling of two Hebrew names with different spellings and meanings. The first Hebrew meaning is "gathering" or "pile." Ezer was a leader in Edom and a descendant of Esau (Gen. 36:21,27,30). He was a Horite and lived in Seir or Edom.

The second Hebrew meaning is "help" or "hero." 1. A descendant of Judah (1 Chron. 4:4) in the clan of Caleb. 2. Son of Ephraim and grandson of Jacob. With his brother Elead, he was killed as he tried to take cattle from the inhabitants of Gath (1 Chron. 7:21). Ephraim was born and lived in Egypt with his family (Gen. 46:20). When any of his immediate family would have had opportunity to visit Gath and steal cattle is a difficult question. It may be history of clans of Ephraim and refer to a moment of mourning in the history of families descended from Ephraim. The place in the middle of the list of descendants of Ephraim and ancestors of Joshua points to a time after that of Ephraim himself. Otherwise, a different Ephraim from the son of Jacob is meant, or Ephraim, the son of Jacob, entered Palestine, but the Bible did not preserve a story of his travels. 3. Member of tribe of Gad who joined David's wilderness army before he became king (1 Chron. 12:9). 4. Person who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall. His father had political authority over Mizpah (Neh. 3:19). 5. Temple musician who helped Nehemiah dedicate the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:42, with a slightly different Hebrew spelling). See Ebenezer.

EZION-GABER KJV variant spelling of Ezion-Geber (Num. 33:35–36; Deut. 2:8; 2 Chron. 20:36). See Ezion-Geber.

EZION-GEBER (Ē′ zī ŏn-gĕ′ bĕr) A port city of Edom located on the northern shore of the Gulf of Aqabah. It is first mentioned in the Bible among the cities on the route of the Exodus (Num. 33:35–36; Deut. 2:8). Solomon utilized this city for ship-building purposes. During this time it was a port from which ships manned by Phoenician sailors sailed to Ophir for gold and other riches (1 Kings 9:26–28; 10:11, 22; 2 Chron. 8:17).

Nelson Glueck led excavations of the site of the ancient city and discovered the remains of four towns, the first dating to the time of Solomon. Interestingly, this first city shows evidence of being a carefully laid out complex built at one time according to a plan, rather than gradually. A notable feature of this first town was a series of structures with flues and air ducts in the floors and walls. Gleuck concluded that this city was a refinery for the copper and iron which were mined in the area. However, in 1962 Rothenburg challenged this view and persuaded Glueck that the remains indicate that the city was a large storehouse for grain and supplies.

After the division of the kingdom, the city fell to the kingdom of Judah. It was destroyed probably during the invasion of Palestine by Shishak (925 B.C.). The city was rebuilt by Jehoshaphat, king of Judah who attempted a similar enterprise as Solomon, but with disastrous results (1 Kings 22:48; 2 Chron. 20:35–37). The city was again destroyed in the reign of Jehoram when the Edomites revolted (2 Kings 8:20–22). Azariah rebuilt the city, and according to many scholars it was renamed Elath (2 Kings 14:22; 2 Chron. 26:2), though recent study sees Elath as a separate city. During the reign of Uzziah, the Edomites regained possession of the city. From that time on the city remained under the control of the Edomites. It was abandoned sometime between the eighth and fourth centuries B.C. and was never rebuilt.

Recent archaeological study has questioned the identification of Ezion-geber with tell el-Kheleifeh. Its lack of a good harbor and of the proper pottery finds has led to exploration of the island of Jezirat Faraun, where a natural harbor exists. Also known as Pharaoh's Island and Coral Island, it is seven miles south of modern Eilat and 900 feet offshore from the Sinai Peninsula. The island is 1,000 feet from north to south and 200 feet from east to west. It may have served as the harbor and port, while tell el-Kheleifeh was Elath. See Commerce; Elath. Paul E. Robertson

EZNITE A word of uncertain meaning describing the family or tribal relationship of Adino (2 Sam. 23:8), but most modern translations take a clue from the parallel text in 1 Chronicles 11:11 and from the earliest Greek translation, omitting Adino the Eznite from the text. Compare modern translations. See Adino.

EZRA, BOOK OF (Ĕz′ rà) The name Ezra means "Yahweh helps." Several had the name: a family head in Judah (1 Chron. 4:17), a priest in the return with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:1,13), and a prince at the dedication of Jerusalem's walls built by Nehemiah (Neh. 12:32–33). The most famous is the chief character in the Book of Ezra.

The Book of Ezra is intimately connected with Chronicles and Nehemiah. The connection is so obvious that possibly one person wrote and compiled all three. This unknown person is referred to as the Chronicler.

Ezra and Nehemiah were actually one book in the ancient Hebrew and Greek Old Testament. Each book contains materials found in the other (e.g., the list in Ezra 2 is also in Neh. 7). Each book completes the other; Ezra's story is continued in Nehemiah (chs. 8—10). Both are necessary to the history of Israel. A whole century would be unknown (538–432 B.C.), historically, apart from Ezra and Nehemiah. They are the next chapter of the history recorded in Chronicles.

Ezra lived during the reign of Artaxerxes (7:1), king of Persia, but which one? Artaxerxes I (Longimanus), 465–425 B.C., or Artaxerxes II (Mnemon) 404–359 B.C.? If it is Longimanus, then "the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king" (7:7) was 458 B.C.; but if Mnemon, it was 398 B.C. Scripture possibly intimates that Nehemiah preceded Ezra to Jerusalem. For example, Ezra prayed as though walls were already in place in Jerusalem (9:9), yet they were built by Nehemiah. Also Nehemiah's reforms (Neh. 13) seem to have preceded Ezra's teaching the law and his reforms. There are real problems either way, but it seems logical to stay with the biblical order and date Ezra's journey to Jerusalem in 458 B.C.

Ezra was a priest and a scribe. He descended from Aaron through Phinehas and later Zadok (Ezra 7:1–5; 1 Chron. 6:4–14).

Ezra's purpose for going to Jerusalem was "to study the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach the statutes and ordinances in Israel" (7:10 NRSV). He was well equipped for this task as a priest and scribe. Jerusalem needed the law of God. The permanence of the Jews was threatened by opposition from non-Jews and by the Jews' careless disregard for the things of God. Ezra's teaching was needed to give solidity and strength to the Jewish community struggling against pressures to surrender its ethnic and theological identity.

Ezra was written from this kind of perspective. A variety of sources was used, either by Ezra or by another who gave the book its present form. Jewish tradition is strong that Ezra was the actual author of the entire book, as well as Chronicles and Nehemiah. Vivid details and the use of the first person pronoun permit scholars to speak of the Ezra Memoirs (7:27—9:15).

The book has two major stories, that of Zerubbabel and the group of returnees who rebuilt the Temple (chs. 1—6), and that of Ezra (chs. 7—10, completed in Neh. 8—10). Peculiarities in the book include the naming of Sheshbazzar (ch. 1) as the leader of the first group to return and not Zerubbabel. Two approaches are possible. One is that Sheshbazzar was a real historical person who actually led a small group of anxious Jews to Jerusalem. The other is that Sheshbazzar might have been another name for Zerubbabel. But it seems unlikely that a Jew would have two Babylonian names.

Another peculiarity, found in both Ezra and Nehemiah, is the use of lists. The list in Ezra 2 of those who returned with Zerubbabel is in Nehemiah 7. Other lists include those who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:1–14); "the sons of the priests there were found who had taken strange wives" (Ezra 10:18–43).

Another peculiarity is the Aramaic in Ezra. This was a widely used language of Ezra's era, related to Hebrew, used by Jews and Gentiles alike. Most of the book is written in Hebrew, but there are two large sections of Aramaic (Ezra 4:7—6:18; 7:12–26). The Aramaic generally deals with official correspondence between Palestine and Persia.

The lists and the Aramiac show that the author was determined to use official documents where possible. Establishing the legitimacy of the Jews was an important objective, and these helped do that.

Ezra begins with the story of Sheshbazzar and Zerubbabel and the first Jews to return to Jerusalem from captivity in 538 B.C. Their main objective was to rebuild the Temple. Its foundation was laid in 536 B.C. Then there was a long delay. Haggai and Zechariah (Ezra 5:1) in 520 B.C. had encouraged the people to finish the project, which they did in 515 B.C. (6:14–15), and they "celebrated the dedication of this house of God with joy" (6:16 NRSV).

Almost sixty years passed before Ezra went to Jerusalem (458 B.C.), six decades of silence. He left Persia with "the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe" (7:11), giving him unusual power and authority (7:12–26). As he "viewed the people, and the priests, and [he] found there none of the sons of Levi" (8:15). These were essential for his teaching program to implement the law of God in Jerusalem. During a three-day delay more than 200 "ministers for the house of our God" (8:17) were enlisted. Four months later the group, probably less than 2,000, arrived in the Holy City.

Soon Ezra was informed of the most glaring sin of the Jews, intermarriage with non-Jews, those not in covenant relation with Yahweh (9:2). Ezra was greatly upset (9:3–4). He prayed (9:6–15). In assembly people reached what must have been a heartrending decision: "Let us make a covenant with our God to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them" (10:3). The book concludes with the carrying out of this decision (ch. 10).

Ezra's story reaches its climax in Nehemiah (Neh. 8—10). There he read from "the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel" (Neh. 8:1). A great revival resulted. Ezra is not heard of again.

Ezra's greatest contribution was his teaching, establishing, and implementing "the book of the law of the Lord" (Neh. 9:3) among the Jews.

Ezra evidenced strong theology. He believed in the sovereignty of God, who could use a Cyrus, an Artaxerxes, and a Darius to accomplish His purposes. He believed in the faithfulness of God, who brought home as many exiles as He could. He believed in the sacredness and practicality of the Scriptures; he read them to his people and insisted that their teachings be carried out. He was a person of prayer; note his long confessional prayers (Ezra 9:5–15; Neh. 9:6–37). He was a preacher: he used a pulpit (Neh. 8:4); he publicly read the Scriptures; and he helped to interpret them to his congregation (8:8).

The value of the contributions of Ezra to the Jews is immeasurable. What he did probably saved them from disintegration. His efforts helped guarantee the ethnic and theological continuance of descendants of Abraham. He might not have been the father of Judaism, but he contributed greatly to saving the Jews' identity as a people of God.

Outline

I. God's Worship Must Be Restored (1:1—6:22)
- A. God can use a pagan "to fulfill the word of the Lord." (1:1–4)
- B. God's people respond to God's ways. (1:5–6)
- C. God will recover and reclaim His possessions. (1:7–11)
- D. God's people, by name and as individuals, are important. (2:1–67)
- E. God's people are generous givers for a good cause. (2:68–70)
- F. God's people worship, regardless of the circumstances. (3:1–6)
- G. God's people will give and organize to get a job done. (3:7–9)
- H. God's people praise Him in success or in disappointment. (3:10–13)
- I. God's people must reject some offers of help. (4:1–3)
- J. God's work can be opposed and stopped. (4:4–24)
- K. God's work and workers must be encouraged. (5:1–2)
- L. God's work and workers are in His watchcare. (5:3–5)
- M. God's work may get pagan authorization and support. (5:6—6:12)
- N. God's work must ultimately be completed. (6:13–15)
- O. God's work must be dedicated publicly with joyful celebration. (6:16–22)

II. God's Word Must Be Followed. (7:1—10:44)
- A. God's Word needs skilled teachers and helpers. (7:1–7)
- B. God's Word elicits commitment. (7:8–10)
- C. God's work accepts all the help it can get from many different sources. (7:11–26)
- D. God blesses His workers and expects to be praised. (7:27–28)
- E. God's work warrants good records. (8:1–14)
- F. God's work must enlist trained workers. (8:15–20)
- G. God's work calls for faith, prayer, and humility. (8:21–23)
- H. God's work warrants division of responsibility. (8:24–30)
- I. God's work necessitates good stewardship and generous sacrifice. (8:31–36)
- J. Gross violations of God's Word must be acknowledged. (9:1–5)
- K. Acknowledged sin leads to prayer and confession with deep theological insights. (9:6–15)
- L. God's grace and human confession call for active commitment. (10:1–4)
- M. God's people must act unitedly. (10:5–9)
- N. God's call for the separated life must be made clear by God's leaders to God's people. (10:10–11)
- O. God's way utilizes practical solutions for difficult problems. (10:12–17)
- P. God's way expects "fruit in keeping with repentance" (Matt. 3:8) from all who are guilty. (10:18–44)

D. C. Martin

EZRAH (Ĕz′ răh) Modern translation spelling of Ezra in 1 Chronicles 4:17 to reflect different final letter in Hebrew spelling. This Ezra is a descendant of Judah of which nothing else is known. The spelling of his name may be a Hebrew form, whereas the more common spelling is Aramaic. See Ezra.

EZRAHITE (Ĕz′ rà hīte) A term used to describe the family relationships of Ethan, a famous wise man (1 Kings 4:31). The precise meaning of the Hebrew word is debated. It may mean one born in the land with full citizenship rights and point to a Canaanite origin for Ethan. A related word appears in Exodus 12:19,49; Leviticus 17:15; Joshua 8:33, and other places. See Ethan.

EZRI (Ĕz′ rī) Personal name meaning, "my help." Supervisor of royal farm labor under David (1 Chron. 27:26).

FABLE A short, fictitious story that uses animals or inanimate objects as characters to teach ethical or practical lessons. Typically, the characters are portrayed as having human personality traits that are good or evil. The practical or moral lesson is obvious in the story when these character traits lead to either failure or success. Fables are rarely found in the Bible. There are two clear examples in the Old Testament. The fable of the trees of the forest selecting a king (Judg. 9:8–15) is designed to warn Israel of the dangers in selecting a weak and ruthless king. In 2 Kings 14:8–10 (2 Chron. 25:17–19), there is a fable addressed to Amaziah, king of Judah, about the folly of arrogance. In this story a thistle thinks that it is equal to the giant cedars of Lebanon and gets trampled by a wild beast of the forest. Daniel B. McGee

FACE The front of a person's head. In the Bible several words are translated as "face." In the Old Testament, panim is the most common and has the actual meaning of face. 'Aph (nose) and 'ayin (eyes, aspect) are also at times translated as face. In the New Testament the words used are opsis and prosōpon.

The word "face" has a variety of meanings. It is used literally to refer to the face of man or animals (Gen. 30:40), seraphim (Isa. 6:2), and the face of Christ (Matt. 17:2). Figuratively, it is used in reference to the face of the earth (Gen. 1:29), waters (Gen. 1:2), sky (Matt. 16:3), and moon (Job 26:9). Also, the word "face" is used theologically with regard to the "presence of God" (Gen. 30:17–23). Face may be the physical "face" or the surface seen. Being "face to face" (literally, "eye to eye") is being squared off with each other, front to front, and fully visible (Num. 14:14). The face (eye) of the earth is the visible surface of the earth (Ex. 10:5, 15), and the face of the waters is that surface which is seen (Gen. 1:2).

The word "face" may stand for the entire countenance. It is in the face that the emotions are expressed. The face of the sky expresses the weather, stormy and red, or fair (Matt. 16:2–3). Bowing one's face (nose or face) expresses reverence or awe (Num. 22:31; Luke 5:12). Bowing one's face (nose) toward the ground also includes the involvement of the entire person (1 Sam. 20:41; Matt. 26:39), indicating complete submission. When angry or sad, one's countenance (face) will fall (Gen. 4:5). "A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance (face)" (Prov. 15:13). To express displeasure or disgust, the face is averted or "hid" (Ezek. 39:23; Ps. 102:2); to "seek his face" is to desire an audience (Ps. 105:4). To "set my face against" is to express hostility (Jer. 21:10), while turning away the face shows rejection (Ps. 132:10). To "set their faces to" indicates determination (Jer. 42:17; Luke 9:51). The wicked man "hardeneth his face"(Prov. 21:29), and "covered his face with his fatness" (Job 15:27). When in mourning, the face is covered (2 Sam. 19:4).

Because the face reflects the personality and character of person, the word is frequently translated as "person" (Deut. 28:50; 2 Sam. 17:11; 2 Cor. 2:10), or "presence" (Ex. 10:11). Sometimes it is translated merely as the indefinite pronoun "many" (2 Cor. 1:11). Frequently, the word "face" is translated with the phrase "respect persons," (KJV), or "being partial" (RSV), (Deut. 1:17; Prov. 24:23; Matt. 22:16; Gal. 2:6).

Many idioms and phrases also apply to "the face of God." His face shines (Ps. 4:6), indicating good will and blessing. He sets His face against sinners (Lev. 17:10), and hides His face (Ps. 13:1). Frequently, the word "face" is used in a theological sense with regard to the person or presence of God. Sometimes "face" is translated as "presence" (Gen. 4:16; Ex. 33:14; 2 Thess. 1:9). In the tabernacle, the "shewbread" (KJV) or "Bread of the Presence" (RSV), was a local manifestation of the presence of God. The literal Hebrew reads "bread of the faces." At other times, other words are substituted although the direct meaning is the "face of God." Moses asked to see God's "glory" (Ex. 33:18), but God answered that "thou canst not see my face" (Ex. 33:20). The correlation indicates that in seeing God's face, one would experience His actual presence, and thereby be exposed to God's nature and character. Sinful and non-holy beings cannot survive being in God's holy presence without God's grace or merciful intervention (Ex. 33:17–23). Thus Moses (Ex. 3:6), Elijah (1 Kings 19:13), and the seraphim (Isa. 6:2) hide their faces in God's presence.

See Glory; Shewbread; Presence; Eye.

Darlene R. Gautsch

FACETS NRSV, TEV translation of the Hebrew ayinim, meaning small plane surfaces, especially those on a cut gem (Zech. 3:9). The basic idea of the Hebrew ayin, as reflected in most English versions, is eye. By extension the root can designate a face or surface, hence the translation facet. Some commentators understand the Hebrew root to mean springs of water (compare Gen. 16:7). The translation "eyes" points ahead to "the seven eyes of God which roam throughout the world" (4:10), a symbol of the omniscience or omnipresence of God. The translation "springs" fits well with the idea of the removal of iniquity (3:9b). The eschatological spring or stream is well-known in visions of the Temple (Joel 3:18; Ezek. 47; Zech. 13:1; 14:8). Zechariah 3:9, however, uses the masculine plural form rather than the feminine form used in other references to springs. Perhaps the masuline form is an Aramaism. Some scholars believe the stone was a stone slab occupying the place held by the ark of the covenant in the first Temple. In this case the seven eyes represent the full presence of God in a way corresponding to the ark of the covenant.

FAIR HAVENS (Fair Hā′ vĕns) An open bay on the southern coast of Crete near the city of Lasea. Protected only by small islands, it did not appear to be a safe harbor for winter, so the sailors of the ship carrying Paul to Rome decided to try to reach Phenice. They refused to listen to Paul's warnings and were caught in a ferocious storm (Acts 27:8–20).

FAITH Trusting commitment of one person to another, particularly of a person to God. Faith is the central concept of Christianity. One may be called a Christian only if one has faith.

Our English word "faith" comes from the Latin fides, as developed through the Old French words fei and feid. In Middle English (1150–1475) "faith" replaced a word that eventually evolved into "belief." "Faith" came to mean "loyalty to a person to whom one is bound by promise or duty." Faith was fidelity. "Belief" came to be distinguished from faith as an intellectual process having to do with the acceptance of a proposition. The verb form of "faith" dropped out of English usage toward the end of the sixteenth century.

Old Testament Expressions The word "faith" occurs in the Old Testament only twice in the KJV, eighteen times in the RSV, and sixteen times in the NIV. This discrepancy becomes even more interesting when we note that the RSV and the NIV agree on only five of these verses of Scripture (Deut. 32:51; Judg. 9:16,19; Isa. 26:2; Hab. 2:4), and the KJV concurs with them only on the translation of Habakkuk 2:4. These differences revolve around problems with the translation of two Hebrew roots, mā'al and 'aman.

The first of these roots, mā'al, is a negative term that means "to be deceitful, treacherous, or unfaithful." The RSV, NAS, and the NIV translate this word with the phrase "broke faith" (Deut. 32:51; Josh. 22:16) or with "acted unfaithfully" (Deut. 32:51; Josh. 7:1). The KJV translates this root in those same verses with the word "trespass."

The second root, 'aman, is more difficult to translate because its meaning changes as it passes through the various Hebrew verb forms. There are seven such forms, but this root occurs in only three of them. In the first and most basic verb form the root means to support or nourish and is used of a parent's care for a child. In the second verb-form one encounters a range of meanings having to do with being secure.

Only the third verb form was rendered with the Greek word for faith in the New Testament and in the Septuagint, an early Greek version of the Old Testament originating in Alexandria. 'Aman expresses the idea of stability and steadfastness in this form and is translated as standing firm (Job 39:24, RSV; Isa. 7:9*b* NIV), or "to trust" (a person) or "to believe" (a statement). One stands firm in one's convictions. In relationships, one trusts persons and believes their testimony or promises. Thus, we find no Hebrew noun for "faith" in the Old Testament, only verbs that have been translated with "faith" because of New Testament influence.

If we do not find the noun "faith" in the Old Testament, we surely find the concept named with other words. In the Old Testament faith is described as the "fear of God" (Gen. 20:11; Ps. 111:10; Eccl. 12:13; Mal. 4:2), and in terms of trust (2 Chron. 20:20; Ps. 4:5, Isa. 26:4), and obedience (Ex. 19:5; 1 Sam. 15:22, Jer. 7:23). Faith is a New Testament concept that encompasses and enriches these Old Testament concepts.

Because the Old Testament does not have a word equivalent to the English noun, "faith," does not mean the idea of faith is unimportant for the Old Testament. Habakkuk 2:4 was properly taken by Paul as the center of Old Testament religion. God prepared the way for His people in mercy and grace, then called them to obedience. To accept the responsibilities of God's covenant was to trust His word that He alone was God and to commit one's life to His promises for the present and future. That is faith.

New Testament Expressions The Greek noun, pistis (faith), is related to the verb pisteuo (I have faith, trust, believe). The noun and verb are found virtually everywhere in the New Testament, with the notable exception that the noun is absent altogether from John's Gospel and occurs only once in 1 John. The verb form does not occur in Philemon, 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, or Revelation.

In the New Testament "faith" is used in a number of ways, but primarily with the meaning "trust" or "confidence" in God. This basic meaning is particularly evident in the Synoptic Gospels. Mark 1:15 introduces and summarizes the Gospel with Jesus' charge to his hearers to "repent ye, and believe the gospel." (The word usually translated "believe" in this verse is the verb form of "faith" for which there is no English equivalent. The call is repeated as "Have faith in God," using the noun form, in Mark 11:22.) Thus, Jesus called His hearers to place their confidence in God. It is common in the Synoptics for Jesus to say after healing someone, "thy faith hath made thee whole" (Matt. 9:22; Mark 5:34; Luke 7:50; 8:48.) One's confidence in or allegiance to God makes one whole. John expressed a similar understanding of faith in 6:29 and 14:1 where people are called to have faith in the Christ.

Outside the Gospels faith is related to the keynote concepts of the Christian message: the state of salvation (Eph. 2:8–9), sanctification (Acts 26:18), purification (Acts 15:9), justification or imputed righteousness (Rom. 4:5; 5:1; Gal. 3:24), adoption as children of God (Gal. 3:26).

Each of these comes by faith. As in the Gospels, faith is an attitude toward and relationship with God mediated by Christ Jesus. It is surrender to God's gift of righteousness in Christ rather than seeking to achieve righteousness alone.

Faith is also called a fruit of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:22)—something God creates in a person. In another place "faith" is used quite differently as a gift of the Holy Spirit that is given to some but not to others (1 Cor. 12:8–9). Apparently such special gifts of faith refer to the ability to do great acts for God, what Jesus called moving mountains (Matt. 17:20; 1 Cor. 13:2).

The New Testament sometimes uses "faith" to designate Christianity itself or that which Christians believe (Acts 6:7; Eph. 4:5; Col. 1:23; 1 Tim. 1:19; Jude 3). In this usage it is clear that an element of what we call belief is essential to the personal relationship we are calling "faith." Here it would be well to note Hebrews 11:6 also—"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is. . . . " In this verse also the word translated "believe" is the Greek verb form of "faith." Context here dictates that we understand it in the sense of intellectual acceptance of a proposition, "belief." To have a right relation with God, it is necessary to "believe" that God is, that God has revealed Himself in Christ, and to accept God accepts you.

If faith is the religion itself, it is so in more than an intellectual way. Faith is also the living out of the religion; it is Christianity in action. This is the meaning of "We walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. 5:7). "Walking" represents the totality of one's way of life. Paul wrote that "faith," both in the sense of Christian piety and of the trust and confidence one puts in God, determines action in life. Faith changes the standards and priorities of life. Similarly, using the imagery of a soldier's armor, Paul said that faith is a shield against sin and evil in our lives (Eph. 6:16; 1 Thess. 5:8).

If Christianity itself may be called "the faith," then it is a small step to the New Testament usage of the participle of the verb form of faith to designate Christians. This form is often translated "believers" (it occurs most often in the plural) or "those who believe" (Acts 4:32; Rom. 1:16).

The nearest the New Testament comes to presenting a definition of "faith" per se, is in Hebrews 11:1. Here faith is called "the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen" (RSV). Thus, Hebrews very closely ties faith to Christian hope. The personal conviction of faith encourages the Christian to continue hoping for the fulfillment of the promises of God, but it is not the substance (as in the KJV) of these "things hoped for" in any normal sense of "substance." The "things hoped for" have a reality greater than anyone's hoping for them. Faith is then meant as a sort of foretaste of the hoped for things.

Faith as the Way to Salvation The concept of faith is primarily that of a personal relationship with God that determines the priorities of one's life. This relationship is one of love that is built on trust and dependence. We receive it by trusting the saving work of Jesus. Faith is the basic Christian experience, the decision for Christ Jesus. It is the acceptance of Christ's lordship (i.e., His God-given, absolute authority). In this sense faith is doubly a break from the past: it is one's removal from sin, and it is one's removal from all other religious allegiances (1 Thess. 1:9). As a break from the past, faith is the beginning of relation to God and not an end. It is, especially in Paul's letters, the inauguration of incorporation "in Christ," in which one continues to grow and develop.

If faith is primarily a relationship into which one enters through acceptance of Jesus' authority, it also includes a certain amount of "belief." As a derived use, then, "faith" may also denote the content of what is believed. In this sense faith is the conviction that God acted in the history of Israel and "that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself" (2 Cor. 5:19). In theological usage "the faith" may refer to many more doctrines and dogmas that have been developed since New Testament times, but in the New Testament "that which must be believed" was more limited as Romans 10:9–10 may demonstrate.

Conclusion Faith is what we believe, it is Christianity itself, but primarily it is the relationship we have with God through what Jesus accomplished in His death and resurrection. William L. Self FAITHFUL Steadfast, dedicated, dependable, and worthy of trust. It is derived from the Hebrew root having the basic meaning "to trust (a person)," or "to believe (a statement)." This is the same root that gives us the word "amen." The derived meaning is that the one so described is trustworthy, dependable, trusting, or loyal. Moses was faithful in all God's household (Num. 12:7). "Faithful" is used to describe the relation of God and Israel (Deut. 7:9). The faithful God keeps His covenant, and the faithful people keep His commandments.

In the New Testament the adjective "faithful" is a derivative of the Greek noun meaning "faith." Here we get the translation "faithful" as a natural derivative of faith. Once again the fundamental meaning is that the one so described is trustworthy and loyal. The root idea is that one has fidelity toward another person or toward God. For example, in 1 Corinthians 7:25 Paul commended himself to the Corinthians as one who is "faithful" (KJV) or "trustworthy" (NAS). In Revelation 2:10 the church in Smyrna and subsequent readers are commanded "be thou faithful unto death." And, in Ephesians 1:1 Paul addressed the letter "to the faithful in Christ Jesus." In other cases, however, "faithful" describes God's mode of relation toward persons or toward God's creation.

Many of these passages speak of God as faithful in order to comfort and encourage Christians. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9). "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able" (1 Cor. 10:13). "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it" (1 Thess. 5:24).

The faithful person is steadfast, unchanging, and thoroughly grounded in relation to the other. This sort of fidelity, or faithfulness, is used in both the Old Testament and the New Testament to describe God's relation to the world and to describe the quality of relationship that Israel and Christians are called upon to have with God and with one another.

See Faith; Trust; Trustworthy. William L. Self

FALCON See Birds.

FALL The traditional name for the first sin of Adam and Eve which brought judgment upon both nature and mankind.

In Genesis people are the dominion-havers created in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–28). Man and woman are placed on earth with a commandment to obey (Gen. 1:28). The biblical understanding of dominion suggests a serving stewardship rather than mere power (Matt. 20:25–28).

Sin in the Garden Genesis pictures humans as the special creation of God (2:7) placed in the special garden created by God (2:8–15). Three features are crucial for understanding the human role in the garden: (1) Adam was put in the garden to "dress it and to keep it" (2:15). God provided this vocation for man's fulfillment. (2) The first people were granted great freedom and discretion in the garden. This freedom permitted them to take from the goodness of God's creation (2:16). (3) Yet their freedom and discretion were limited. God prohibited the taking of the fruit from the tree of knowledge of good and evil (2:17). Scholars have pointed out that these three features belong uniquely to humans. Each person faces (1) vocation, (2) freedom, and yet (3) prohibition. Full humanity is experienced only when all three of these are maintained.

The "knowledge of good and evil" would make humans godlike in some way (Gen. 3:5,22). Some Bible students understand the tree to hold (1) all knowledge—that is the complete range of experience. Others claim the tree provides (2) knowledge of a moral nature. Some claim the acquired knowledge was simply (3) sexual experience.

The tree's purpose within the narrative provides a clue toward a more satisfactory explanation. The tree was the object and symbol of God's authority. The tree reminded Adam and Eve that their freedom was not absolute but had to be exercised in dependence upon God. In prideful rebellion the couple grasped for the capacity to be completely self-legislating—establishing an absolute self-directing independence. Such absolute dominion belongs only to God. Their ambition affected every dimension of human experience; for example, they claimed the right to decide what is good and evil.

The Serpent The serpent made a sudden intrusion into the story. The serpent is identified in Genesis only as a creature. Theological reflection has identified him as an instrument of Satan and, thus, legitimately cursed and pictured as the enemy of woman's seed (Gen. 3:14–15). Later Scripture also declares that Satan is the ultimate tempter (1 John 3:8; Rev. 12:9). His presence, however, does not diminish mankind's responsibility. Scripture stipulates that man cannot blame his sin on demonic temptation (Jas. 1:12–15).

The serpent began the conversation with a question that obviously distorted or at least extended God's order not to eat of the tree (Gen. 3:1). The questioner invited the woman to enter into a conversation about God and to treat Him and His word as objects to be considered and evaluated. Moreover, the serpent painted God as one who sadistically and arbitrarily placed a prohibition before the couple to stifle their enjoyment of the garden.

The woman apparently felt inclined to defend God's instruction. In her response to the serpent she included a citation of God's command. The text does not tell us how she or the snake came to know God's command. Adam may have passed on this information that he initially received prior to woman's creation (Gen. 2:17–18). She may thus represent all who receive the word of God through "human" instrumentality but who are nevertheless called to believe (compare John 20:29). She responded with a restatement of God's permission to eat freely of the garden provision (Gen. 3:2). She then told of God's prohibition of that one tree in the middle of the garden. Perhaps anxiety over doubting God's character moved her then to add to God's own words; she extended the instruction to include touching the tree, thereby making her own law. It is interesting that the first challenge to God's word did not involve deletion, but addition by both the serpent and the woman. Mankind's first surrender to temptation began with doubting God's instruction and His loving character.

The woman's willingness to judge and her addition to God's instruction, though seemingly harmless, permitted the serpent boldly to continue with a direct attack on God's character. He declared that the couple would not really die. Instead, he argued that God's motive was to keep the couple from being like God. The serpent claimed that the phrases "your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:5) are God's reasons for giving the prohibitive command; in reality, these phrases express the human reasons for breaking the command. The couple was unhappy with their freedom as long as they thought more could be had. They sought unrestricted freedom—to be responsible to no one, not even God. The serpent seemed sure that eating would produce equality not death.

The woman stood before the tree. Crudely, she saw the fruit was good for food. In a more refined manner she judged it to be pleasant to the eye. More appealing to her vanity still was the newfound faith that it would bring knowledge (Gen. 3:6; compare 1 John 2:16). She ate of the fruit and gave it to Adam who ate as well.

Results of Sin Sin had immediate results in the couple's relationship; the self-first and self-only attitude displayed toward God affected the way they looked at one another. The mutual trust and intimacy of the one-flesh bond (Gen. 2:24) was ravaged by distrust. This does not suggest that the knowledge of good and evil was sexual awareness. Intercourse was the command and blessing of God prior to the fall (Gen. 1:28). In the absence of mutual trust, complete intimacy implies complete vulnerability (Gen. 3:7).

The couple also felt compelled to hide from God when they heard Him walking in the garden. When loving trust characterized the couple's attitude, they were apparently comfortable in God's presence. After their sin, shame appropriately marked their relationships—both human and divine (Gen. 3:8). The sinners could not remain hidden. God pursued, asking, "where art thou" (Gen. 3:9). This may be a normal question, but some see it as God's sorrowful anticipation of what follows. Sinners finally must speak to God. Adam admitted that God's presence now provoked fear, and human shame provoked hiding (Gen. 3:10).

God's next question drew the man's attention away from his plight to his sin (Gen. 3:11). The couple had to face their maker. The man admitted his sin, but only after emphatically reminding God that the woman was instrumental in his partaking. Woman shared equally in the deed, but she quickly blamed the deceiving serpent (Gen. 3:12–13). Along with shame, blame comes quite naturally to humankind.

God moved immediately to punish. The serpent was not interviewed because he was not an image-bearer in whom God sought a representation and relationship. The snake's behavior foreshadowed the reversal of created order and mankind's dominion. Once appealing and crafty, the cursed snake became lower than other animals. The judgment included the strife between snakes and humans. Some believe a fuller meaning of the verse promises Christ's ultimate victory over Satan (Gen. 3:14–15).

The woman's punishment was linked to her distinctive role in the fulfillment of God's command (Gen. 1:28). Her privilege to share in God's creative work was frustrated by intense pain. Despite this pain she would nevertheless desire intimacy with her husband, but her desire would be frustrated by sin. Their mutuality and oneness were displaced by male domination (Gen. 3:16).

Adam's punishment also involved the frustration of his service. He was guilty of following the woman's sinful advice and eating of the forbidden tree (Gen. 3:17). The fruitful efficiency known prior to the Fall was lost. Now even his extreme toil would be frustrated by the cursed earth. The earth was apparently cursed because it was within Adam's domain. This corporate mentality is strange to us, but biblical writers recognize nature's need for redemption (Isa. 24; Rom. 8:19–23; Col. 1:15–20).

Results—Epilogue Man's prerogative to name woman (Gen. 3:20) was a sign of the fallen order, but hope persists. Mankind can carry on because the woman has the capacity to bear children. Hope ultimately emerged from divine determination to preserve His creation. Some may expect God to retreat and leave the sinful people alone to taste the misery that would follow, but grace-giving Yahweh provided clothing for fallen mankind (Gen. 3:20–21).

Yahweh acknowledged the partial truth of the serpent's claim: Adam's and Eve's autonomy had made them like the divine (Gen. 3:5,22). In these circumstances, access to the tree of life is inappropriate. Numerous questions regarding the conditional nature of the tree of life are left unanswered here (Ezek. 47:12; Rev. 2:7; 22:2,14,19). As a tragic judgment, the sinful pair was driven out of the garden, intended by God as His dwelling place. Guardian cherubim protected the garden and the tree (Gen 3:22–24) and, thus, graciously protected people from entering into an infinite period of struggle. The serpent's lie concerning death (Gen. 3:4) became visible. Human sin brought death (Gen. 3:19,22). Some readers question why death did not come "on that day" as God had apparently promised (Gen. 2:17), but the Hebrew expression may mean simply "when" (NIV; compare REB). One should also be reminded of God's grace to allow life to continue and the Hebrew understanding that death involves separation from God as much as physical death (Job 7:21; Ps. 88:5,10–12; Isa. 38:18–19).

New Testament The New Testament writers assumed the fallen state of both humans and nature. Both groan for redemption (Rom. 8:19–23). When comparing Adam and Christ, Paul declared that sin and death gained entrance into the world through Adam and that sin and death are now common to all people (Rom. 5:12; 6:23). Adam may be pictured as a representative of mankind, all of whom share in his penalty (Rom. 5:19).

Randy Hatchett

FALLOW DEER See Animals.

FALLOW GROUND Virgin soil or else soil which has not recently been planted (Jer. 4:3; Hos. 10:12). The central thrust of the prophetic message is clear: the nation Israel, "Jacob", is to return to Yahweh by "cultivating" the covenant values of righteousness and steadfast love. The precise significance of the fallow ground is unclear. Perhaps the unplowed earth represents Israel's failure to do what was needed to keep the covenant. Or perhaps the virgin soil represents a new relationship with God. Here the call is for Israel to abandon the worn out fields of unrighteousness (symbolized by thorns) and to move on to the new, fertile (Prov. 13:23) ground of covenant living.

FALSE APOSTLES A designation for Paul's opponents in 2 Corinthians 11:13, also designated deceitful workers (11:13) and ministers of Satan (11:15). Such "apostles" were characterized as preaching a "rival Jesus" (likely a lordly, miracle-working "success story"), possessing a different spirit (a self-seeking motivation evidenced by a different lifestyle than Paul's), and a different gospel which disregarded the cross (and its corollary of suffering for those who follow Christ). The false apostles appear to have been Jewish Christians (11:22), well-trained in speech (11:6), who perhaps claimed "visions and revelations of the Lord" (12:1) as authenticating marks of apostleship (Compare the role of Paul's Damascus Road experience, Acts 9:15; 22:14–15; 26:16–19). Though they cut in on Paul's missionary territory, the "false apostles" are characterized as boasting (2 Cor. 10:13–16) according to human standards. Their leadership style was oppressive (11:20). In contrast to Paul, these false apostles relied on the Corinthian Christians for financial support (11:7–11,20; 12:14). They perhaps accused Paul of being "paid what he was worth." Paul countered that suffering for Christ was the mark of true apostleship (11:23). Weakness, not dominating power, reveals God's power (11:30; 12:5,9). If the "super-apostles" (11:5; 12:11 NRSV, REB, NIV) are identified with the leaders of the Jerusalem church, they should be distinguished from the false apostles at Corinth. The latter may have claimed the authority of the former.

The false apostles of Revelation 2:2 are characterized as evil men and liars. They should perhaps be identified with the Nicolaitans active at Ephesus (2:6) and Pergamos (2:15), and with the followers of the "false prophetess" at Thyatira (2:20).

FALSE CHRISTS Imposters claiming to be the Messiah (Christ in Greek). Jesus associated the appearance of messianic pretenders with the fall of Jerusalem (Matt. 24:23–26; Mark 13:21–22). Jesus warned His followers to be skeptical of those who point to signs and omens to authenticate their false messianic claims. Jesus also urged disbelief of those claiming the Messiah was waiting in the wilderness or was in "the inner rooms" (perhaps a reference to the inner chambers of the Temple complex). Josephus mentioned several historical figures who might be regarded as false christs: (1) Theudas, who appeared when Fadus was procurator (A.D. 44–46) and summoned the people to the Jordan River wilderness with the promise that he would divide the Jordan like Joshua and begin a new conquest of the land; (2) various "imposters" during the term of Felix (A.D. 52–59) who led crowds into the wilderness with promises of signs and wonders; (3) an "imposter" during the term of Festus (A.D. 60–62) who promised deliverance and freedom from the miseries of Roman rule for those who would follow him into the wilderness; (4) Manahem ben Judah (alias "the Galilean") during the term of Florus (A.D. 64–66) who came to Jerusalem "like a king" and laid seige to the city. These messianic imposters and the barely distinguishable false prophets repeatedly urged the Jewish people to take up armed resistance to Rome or to stay in Jerusalem to fight. In contrast, Jesus urged His disciples to attempt to save themselves by fleeing the city. The Christian inhabitants of Jerusalem remembered this advice when the war with Rome broke out (A.D. 66) and fled to safety in Pella in Trans-Jordan. Some interpreters expect false christs to arise before the future coming of Christ.

FALSE PROPHET A person who spreads false messages and teachings, claiming to speak God's words.

Old Testament While the term "false prophet" does not occur in the Old Testament, references to false prophets are clear. The pages of the Old Testament are filled with men and women who fit the description of a false prophet given in Jer. 14:14 (NAS): "The prophets are prophesying falsehood in My name. I have neither sent them nor commanded them nor spoken to them; they are prophesying to you a false vision, divination, futility and the deception of their own minds." Other examples are in Jeremiah 23:21–33 and Zechariah 10:2. Punishment for prophesying falsely was severe. False prophets were cast away from God's presence and permanently humiliated. They suffered the destruction of their cities (Jer. 7:14–16; 23:39).

A false prophet was also one who prophesied on behalf of another God. A familiar example is the story of Elijah and the prophets of Baal (1 Kings 18:20–39). In a test against Elijah and the true God, the prophets of Baal suffered humiliating defeat.

Israel could not always distinguish between the true and the false prophet as seen in 1 Kings 22;

Jeremiah 28. The prophet could only say, wait and see whose prophecy proves true in history (Deut. 18:22; 1 Kings 22:28; Jer. 29:9). Compare 1 Kings 13.

New Testament Jesus and the apostles spoke many times about false prophets. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus taught about the marks of a false prophet and the consequences of being one (Matt. 7:15–23). He also cautioned His followers to beware of false prophets who would arise during times of tribulation and in the end times (Matt. 24:11,24; Mark 13:22). He said to be careful when the world loves a prophet's words, because a prophet who is false is apt to be popular (Luke 6:26).

The apostles instructed believers to be diligent in faith and understanding of Christian teachings, in order to discern false prophets when they arise (2 Pet. 1:10; 1:19–2:1; 1 John 4:1). The tests of a prophet are: 1) Do their predictions come true (Jer. 28:9)? 2) Does the prophet have a divine commission (Jer. 29:9)? 3) Are the prophecies consistent with Scripture (2 Pet. 1:20–21; Rev. 22:18–19)? 4) Do the people benefit spiritually from the prophet's ministry (Jer. 23:13,14,32; 1 Pet. 4:11)?

Punishments for false prophets were just as severe in the New Testament as they were in the Old. Paul caused a false prophet to be stricken with blindness (Acts 13:6–12), but most other punishments were more permanent in nature. Jesus said the false prophets would be cut down and burned like a bad tree (Matt. 7:19). Second Peter 2:4 describes being cast into pits of darkness. The ultimate punishment appears in Revelation 19:20; 20:10—the false prophet, the beast, and the devil will be thrown into a lake of fire and brimstone and be tormented forever.

See Prophets. Donna R. Ridge

FALSE WORSHIP A broad category of acts and attitudes which includes the worship, reverence, or religious honoring of any object, person, or entity other than the one true God. It also includes impure, improper, or other inappropriate acts directed toward the worship of the true God.

Worship offered to a false object is the most obvious and easily recognized form of false worship. The worship of idols is but a part of false worship in the biblical world. Many times other gods were worshiped, not because of the appeal of the idols or images but out of a false sense of the power of the "god." The most consistent problem with false worship seen in the Old Testament is with the nature or fertility deities—Baals and Ashtaroth, Anath, Astarte—the male and female representations of reproduction and growth. Understanding of the basic form and nature of this kind of false worship has been clarified by discoveries made at Ugarit and the subsequent interpretation and study of these. Baal was commonly believed to have control over growth of all crops and reproduction of all flocks. Many of the forms of this false worship involved sexual acts—activities abhorred in the Old Testament laws. Yet the appeal and practice of these rituals continued, probably because of Baal's reputed power in those areas so intwined with life and livelihood of the ancient Hebrews. During the time of great Assyrian power in the ancient world, even the Hebrews seem to have thought that the Assyrian gods were more powerful than their Yahweh; so they began to worship them. The prophet Zephaniah, who lived and prophesied in this time, condemned those who "worship the host of heaven upon the house tops" (Zeph. 1:5). Associated with this type of worship was the fairly prevalent view in the Old Testament world that a god had his own territory and that he was relatively powerless outside that place. Perhaps the most direct statement of this is in the story of Naaman (2 Kings 5, especially v. 17). After the Syrian commander was cured of his leprosy, he requested a "two mules' burden" of dirt from Israel to take with him to Syria so that he could worship the true God.

The many references to false gods with obviously false worship in the Old Testament coupled with the almost total absence of such in the New Testament might suggest that there was little problem with other gods in the New Testament world. Such is far from true. The world of the first century was filled with religions other than Judaism and Christianity. The presence of falseness in worship because it was directed to false gods continued to be a religious problem. Native national gods and fertility deities similar to Baal and Ashtaroth of the Old Testament period still abounded. A new force was present in the mystery religions—Hellenistic religions which focused on the hope for life beyond death. The Orphic and Eleusinian mysteries were perhaps the most common of these. Emperor worship was a serious challenge in the days of the early church. Probably most Romans saw the emperor cult as merely an expression of patriotism and loyalty to the state. However, the Christian standard was to "render therefore unto Caesar the things which be Caesar's, and unto God the things which be God's" (Luke 20:25). Often the Christian was faced with imperial orders to participate in this kind of false worship. Refusal could bring serious penalties, often execution. In late New Testament times and the years following, Mithraism became the primary competitor with Christianity. This pagan worship of Mithra, represented by sol invictus (the invincible sun) was a powerful challenge to Christianity. Exclusively a male religion, emphasizing power and strength, Mithraism was especially popular in the Roman army.

False worship does not necessarily center in practice of pagan or idolatrous cults. It is often a problem for those who proclaim worship of the one true God. False worship of this sort usually centers in some form of deliberate or unintentional disobedience. Its presence in the Bible extends from the self-exalting disobedience in the Garden of Eden to compromising accommodation with the emperor cult and other pagan religions seen in the Book of Revelation.

The primary forms of false worship are addressed in the Decalogue (Ex. 20): "Thou shalt have no other gods before [in addition to] me" (v. 3)—a command for exclusive loyalty to and worship of Yahweh; "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image" (v. 4a) —a clear requirement of imageless, that is, spiritual worship; and "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain" (v. 7a) —a command to honor in all of life the God whose name the Hebrews claimed and bore.

The Hebrews were guilty of syncretistic or artificially mixed religious practices. The temples built by Jeroboam, son of Nebat, the first king of Israel (the Northern Kingdom) after its break from the Jerusalem-centered Kingdom of Judah, were probably dedicated to such worship. When these temples were established in Bethel and Dan, Jeroboam the King "made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt" (1 Kings 12:28). This mixing of the gold calf—a symbol of Baal—with the worship of the God who delivered the Hebrews from their Egyptian bondage was false worship.

A very similar practice was prevalent in the time of Elijah. In his confrontation with the Baal prophets on Mt. Carmel in the time of Ahab and Jezebel (1 Kings 18:20–46), the prophet of the Lord addressed the assembled people. "How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him" (1 Kings 18:21).

False worship includes trusting in military power (Isa. 31:1), trusting in the "works of your hands" (Jer. 25:7), serving God in order to receive physical and material blessings (as Job's friends), offering unacceptable, tainted or maimed sacrifices to God instead of the best (Mal. 1:6–8). False worship also occurs when one prays, fasts, or gives alms "before men to be seen of them" instead of in sincere devotion to God (Matt. 6:1–18).

The subjects of false and true worship are best presented in Micah 6:8, "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" and in the words of Jesus to the Samaritan woman in John 4:23–24: "true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

See Canaan, Religion and History of; Worship.
Bruce C. Cresson

FAMILIAR SPIRIT See Medium.

FAMILY The basic household unit which provides a person's central relationships, nurture, and support. The basic composition of a family changes from the Old Testament to the New Testament. Therefore, the search for the traditional biblical family is difficult.

Old Testament The span of the Old Testament allowed for much transition in the family. Their understanding of the nature of God as well as of their culture influenced much of the Hebrew family life.

Structure The Old Testament family represents a larger body that the English word suggests. There are two Hebrew words which are used to refer to the family. One word (mishpachah) was used to describe the larger partriarchal clan which included those persons related by blood, marriage, slaveship, and even animals (as found in the fourth commandment, Ex. 20:10). Occasionally even strangers or sojourners could be included in the larger household.

The second word (bayith) was used to suggest the place of residence or household. It had multiple meanings. It represented a clan of descendents

A modern Jewish family (grandfather, daughter, and grandchildren) on an afternoon outing in Tel Aviv.

(Gen. 18:19), or property and persons of a particular place or residence on which and on whom one depended (Job 8:15).

Central to this household was the oldest male relative who was viewed as the "father," master, and ultimate authority, thus signifying the family as the father's house. All who belonged to him and claimed their allegiance to him were considered part of the household and were similar in beliefs and values. In Genesis 7:1 Noah and his household were directed to enter the ark. Beyond the household was the larger clan, the tribe, and the nation which were descendants of Abraham, the origin of the people of Israel.

Relationships With the oldest male as center of the household, he was expected to marry and often have more than one wife (Gen. 38:8–10; Deut. 25:5–10). Polygamy was common, though monogamy was widely practiced in Israel. Abraham, Jacob, and David were all husbands of more than one wife, and they also had concubines which were recognized as a lower status than a wife. See Concubine. Jacob's family numbered sixty-six persons in all, not including his sons' wives (Gen. 46:26). The creation story (Gen. 1–2) modeled the monogamous relationship of one male and one female, as does much of the Bible.

F

The authority of the father was quite significant, even though he may actually have been the grandfather or great-grandfather. His responsibilities included begatting, instructing, disciplining, and nurturing. Abraham had the power to sacrifice his son (Gen. 22). The father could even destroy family members if they enticed him from his loyalty to God (Deut. 13:6–10). However, the father was also to be loving, and the divine mercy of the New Testament was based on the compassionate Old Testament father (Ps. 103).

In the marriage, the male had power over the female or females (Gen. 3:16). They were often considered property of the male. He could have relationships with other women as long as he did not destroy property rights. Therefore, divorce was a male option only. He could divorce for almost any reason. As an example, he might "lose favor" (Deut. 24:1). He simply had to write a note and place her out. Both persons were free to marry again.

The Hebrew "mother" often saw her primary function as having children. The account of creation, however, described the female as being created equal with the male. After the Fall, women were relegated to the child-bearing role. The mother exercised significant authority over family life and often gave directions. Her primary role was to provide love and care for the members. The prophet Isaiah used the image of the mother to describe the compassion of God (Isa. 66:13). The mother was the object of love and honor and is praised in Proverbs 31 for her good works.

Children were very important to the family and were considered proof of God's love (Ps. 127:3–5). They were under absolute authority and control of the father. Sons were especially important and were considered second to the father in significance. Descent was through the male which also determined the perpetuation of the family name and the personality. Therefore, sons were trained in the traditions of the community and in the meaning of wisdom (Prov. 3:12; 13:24; 19:18). Daughters were often considered of secondary importance. The fathers were responsible for arranging marriages for the sons (Gen. 24:4) and writing contracts for the daughters.

Commitment The Old Testament family was close-knit, and family loyalty was very strong. The family was held together around the central dominant figure of the father. Family honor and respect was high. The covenant was central to understanding Old Testament family relationships as well as relationships with God. A covenant had both an interior bonding and an exterior binding quality. Steadfast love (hesed) was the basis of the covenant which created a sense of loyalty, justice, and high regard. Covenants were personal and caring and were greater than contracts for directing the family. Hebrew marriages were covenant marriages (Mal. 2:14). Hosea especially revealed the importance of steadfast love (Hos. 2:19–20).

Functions The family of the Old Testament had the purposes of reproduction, instruction, care giving, maintaining traditions, and conveying wisdom. The primary function, however, was the teaching of religion, thus providing guidelines and instruction which were central to Hebrew family well-being. They carefully guarded the family from outside influences. When the family moved from a rural to an urbanized culture, their traditions and values were threatened. Consequently, ancient customs were reaffirmed, and faith was used to undergird them.

New Testament The New Testament introduced major changes in understanding the family, and it provided new and creative ways to appreciate the nature of family and the nature of faith.

Structure As in the Old Testament the Greek words used to describe family did not refer exclusively to our understanding of the nuclear family. One word (patria) was used to identify lineage and descent from a specific ancestor (Luke 2:4; Acts 3:25; Eph. 3:15). Another term (oikos) meant a house or a building but could also refer to a lineage or clan much like the Old Testament word for household (1 Cor. 1:16). A similar term (oikia) also referred to a building (Matt. 7:24) but was used to describe a household including husband, wife, children, and others.

The New Testament household or family, especially the Christian family, probably had one husband and one wife, children, relatives, slaves, servants, and others who lived there for various reasons. The household codes of the New Testament outlined duties for the members including husband/wife, father/child, and master/slave (Eph. 5:21—6:4; Col. 3:18—4:1).

The importance of lineage in the New Testament shifted from a focus on the lineage from an ancestor to lineage from God. In Matthew, Jesus said, "call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven" (23:9). The focus of family structure and family lineage changed from the "earthly father" and was replaced by a lineage from "God the Father," accessible to anyone through Jesus Christ. Therefore, all who believed on Jesus became part of a broader family of God.

Relationships Jesus used the relationships of His own family as well as natural families to define the nature of God's relationships with His people (Matt. 7:9–10; 11:16–17; 21:28–32; Luke 11:7; 14:11–32). Jesus even gave greater importance to relationships within the family of God than to the natural family. He said, "whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother" (Matt. 12:50). Following Jesus often meant leaving one's family (Mark 1:16–20; Luke 9:59–60).

The primary relational dynamic Jesus and the New Testament taught was love (agape). This New Testament love expanded the Old Testament understanding of steadfast love (hesed) by developing an unconditional, accepting love known initially in the love of God (John 3:16; 1 Cor. 13). This love permeated and transformed the relationships of families and all persons.

Marriage in the New Testament was founded on a love bond experienced by both male and female in contrast to the arranged marriage of the Old Testament. Women were not to be considered property by men but rather were to be loved and nurtured (Eph. 5:25).

The roles of men and women were transformed by the love of Christ. The father was no longer the central figure of the family but was replaced by God the Father and faith in Jesus Christ. The authority of the male became like the sacrificial, servant authority of Jesus Christ (Eph. 5:25–33).

The role and status of a woman were not linked intrinsically to her function as a wife and mother. Her identity and personhood were discovered in her faith commitment to Jesus Christ and in doing the will of the Father. Therefore, women did not have to be married or have children to be important in the family of God (Gal. 3:28).

The marriage relationship was important in the New Testament. There was to be marriage between one man and one woman (Mark 10:6–8; Eph. 5:31). The relationship was to be permanent. Jesus addressed the issue of divorce because it was so commonly and easily exercised (for the man). Jesus believed that the love bond made the marriage vows sacred, and they were not to be broken (Mark 10:11–12; Luke 16:18). Jesus affirmed the value of marriage but did not view it as more important than the family of God.

The nature of the Christian marriage relationship, guided by Christlike love, called for both man and woman to give themselves voluntarily and sacrificially to each other (Eph. 5:21). This mutual love commitment was a radical departure from the Old Testament marriage model. The New Testament marriage union was based on an equal and mutual sharing guided by love (1 Cor. 7:4).

Children were given a place of high honor by Jesus (Mark 10:13–16). Having a child created an opportunity for parents to become co-creators with God in helping earthly children to become children of God (Rom. 9:8). Therefore, the focus of the parent/child relationship was on love, honor, and respect as well as discipline and instruction (Eph. 6:1–4).

Commitment The Old Testament concept of covenant became the foundation for the new covenant in Jesus Christ. Steadfast love was enhanced by Christlike love. Covenants and commitments, in family relationships and faith relationships, were deepened by the new covenant of love which was infused with grace and forgiveness. All relationships were guided by grace and the sacrificial love of Jesus Christ (1 John 3:16). Christian family relationships called for a commitment which was based on openness and compassion, forgiveness and understanding.

This image of family commitment was so significant that it was used by the early church to describe the relationship of Christ and the church (Eph. 5).

Function The function of the family in the New Testament was secondary to the primary purpose of the family of God. Obedience to Christ and doing God's will was the calling for everyone. This faith commitment, then, shaped the purpose and function of the family. The family was guided by Christlike love, and the purpose of the family was to give witness to the love of God and bring people to a saving relationship with God through Jesus Christ, thus creating the larger family of God.

See Father; Mother; Marriage; Sex; Woman; Children; Divorce. J. Michael Hester

FAMINE AND DROUGHT A famine is an extreme shortage of food, and a drought is an excessive dryness of land. The Bible reports or predicts the occurrence of several famines and droughts.

Causes of Famine Drought was the most common cause of famines mentioned in the Bible. Drought caused famines in the time of Abraham (Gen. 12:10), Isaac (Gen. 26:1), Joseph (Gen. 41:27), and the judges (Ruth 1:1). Drought and famine also plagued the Israelites in the days of David (2 Sam. 21:1), Elijah (1 Kings 18:2), Elisha (2 Kings 4:38), Haggai (Hag. 1:11), and Nehemiah (Neh. 5:3). At times the coming of droughts and famines was predicted by prophets (2 Kings 8:1; Isa. 3:1; Jer. 14:12; Acts 11:28). Other natural forces also caused famines: locusts, wind, hail, and mildew (Joel 1:4; Amos 4:9; Hag. 2:17). The Israelites also experienced famines caused by enemies. Occasionally oppressors destroyed or confiscated food (Deut. 28:33,51; Isa. 1:7). The siege of cities also resulted in famine, such as the siege of Samaria by Ben-hadad (2 Kings 6:24–25) and the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 25:2–3).

The famines which Israel experienced were often severe, some lasting for years (Gen. 12:10; 41:27; Jer. 14:1–6). During famines, starving people resorted to eating such things as wild vines, heads of animals, garbage, dung, and even human flesh (2 Kings 4:39; 6:25,28; Lam. 4:4–10).

Famine and Drought as the Judgment of God

God created the world as a good environment which would normally provide ample water and food for mankind (Gen. 1). However, the productiveness of the earth is related to people's obedience to God. For example, the sins of Adam, Eve, and Cain resulted in unfruitfulness of the earth (Gen. 3:17–18; 4:12). Israel's relationship with God also directly affected the fertility of the Promised Land. When the people obeyed God, the land was productive (Deut. 11:11–14). However, when they disobeyed, judgment came on the land by drought and famine (Lev. 26:23–26; Deut. 11:16–17; 1 Kings 8:35). Furthermore, the New Testament reports that famine will be a part of God's coming judgment of the earth in the last days (Matt. 24:7; Rev. 6:8).

While the Bible states that some famines and droughts are the judgment of God (2 Sam. 21:1; 1 Kings 17:1; 2 Kings 8:1; Jer 14:12; Ezek. 5:12; Amos 4:6), not all such disasters are connected to divine punishment (Gen. 12:10; 26:1; Ruth 1:1; Acts 11:28). When God did send drought and famine on His people, it was for the purpose of bringing them to repentance (1 Kings 8:35–36; Hos. 2:8–23; Amos 4:6–8). Moreover, the Old Testament contains promises that God will protect His faithful ones in times of famine (Job. 5:20,22; Pss. 33:18–19; 37:18–19; Prov. 10:3). See Benhadad; Jerusalem; Nebuchadnezzar; Samaria; Water.

Bob R. Ellis

FAN KJV term for a long wooden fork used to toss grain into the air so that the chaff is blown away. Shovels were also used for this purpose (Isa. 30:24). Modern translations render the underlying Hebrew and Greek terms shovel, winnowing fork, or winnowing shovel.

FARM, FARMING See Agriculture

Ox turning an ancient type of water pump used for irrigation in the Goshen area of Egypt.

A relief of a plowing scene from the Roman period.

FARMER See Occupations and Professions in the Bible; Agriculture.

FARTHING See Coins.

FASTING Refraining from eating food. The Bible describes three main forms of fasting: 1) The Normal Fast, involving the total abstinence of food. Luke 4:2 reveals that Jesus "did eat nothing." Afterwards "He was hungered." Jesus abstained from food but not from water. 2) In Acts 9:9 we read of an Absolute Fast where for three days He "neither did eat nor drink." The abstinence from both food and water seems to have lasted no more than three days (Ezra 10:6; Esther 4:16). [but see Ex. 34:28] 3) The Partial Fast—in Daniel 10:3 the emphasis is upon the restriction of diet rather than complete abstinence. The context implies that there were physical benefits resulting from this partial fast. However, this verse indicates that there was a revelation given to Daniel as a result of this time of fasting.

Young Israeli farmer plowing furrows behind his donkey-drawn wooden plow.

Arab farmer plowing his field with a simple double-yoked plow and team of two donkeys.

Fasting is the laying aside of food for a period of time when the believer is seeking to know God in a deeper experience. It is to be done as an act before God in the privacy of one's own pursuit of God (Ex. 34:28; 1 Sam. 7:6; 1 Kings 19:8; Matt. 6:17).

Fasting is to be done with the object of seeking to know God in a deeper experience (Isa. 58; Zech. 7:5). Fasting relates to a time of confession (Ps. 69:10). Fasting can be a time of seeking a deeper prayer experience and drawing near to God in prevailing prayer (Ezra 8:23; Joel 2:12). The early church often fasted in seeking God's will for leadership in the local church (Acts 13:2). When the early church wanted to know the mind of God, there was a time of prayer and fasting.

C. Robert Marsh

FATE That which must necessarily happen. The Old Testament speaks of death as the common fate of humankind (Pss. 49:12; 81:15; Eccl. 2:14; 3:19; 9:2,3). The Old Testament similarly speaks of violent death as the destiny of the wicked (Job 15:22; Isa. 65:12; Hos. 9:13). See Election and Predestination.

FATHER See Family; God.

FATHERLESS A person without a male parent, often rendered orphan by modern translations. Orphans are often mentioned with widows as representatives of the most helpless members of society (Ex. 22:22; Deut. 10:18; Ps. 146:9). In societies where the basic social unit was the clan headed by a father (the eldest male relative, perhaps a grandfather or uncle), those without a father or husband were social misfits without one to provide for their material needs and represent their interests in the court (Job 31:21). Life for the fatherless was harsh. Orphans were often forced to beg for food (Ps. 109:9–10). They suffered loss of their homes (Ps. 109:10), land rights (Prov. 23:10), and livestock (Job 24:3). The fatherless were subject to acts of violence (Job 22:9), were treated as property to be gambled for (6:27 TEV, NRSV, NAS, NIV), and were even murdered (Ps. 94:6).

God, however, has a special concern for orphans and widows (Deut. 10:18; Pss. 10:14–18; 146:9; Hos. 14:3) evidenced in the title "a father of the fatherless" (Ps. 68:5). Old Testament law provided for the material needs of orphans and widows who were to be fed from the third year's tithe (Deut. 14:28–29; 26:12–13), from sheaves left forgotten in the fields (24:19), and from fruit God commanded to be left on the trees and vines (24:20–21). Orphans and widows were to be included in the celebrations of the worshiping community (Deut. 16:11,14). God's people were repeatedly warned not to take advantage of orphans and widows (Ex. 22:22; Deut. 24:17; 27:19; Ps. 82:3; Isa. 1:17). In the New Testament, James defined worship acceptable to God as meeting the needs of orphans and widows (1:27).

God's exiled people were described as orphans without home or inheritance (Lam. 5:2–3). The Old Testament image of the orphan without a helper at the court perhaps forms the background for Jesus' promise that His disciples would not be left orphans (John 14:18, NAS, NIV, NRSV; "comfortless", KJV; "bereft", REB). They would not be defenseless since the Holy Spirit would act as their advocate (14:16). Paul described his painful separation from the Thessalonian Christians as being orphaned (1 Thess. 2:17, NRSV).

Chris Church

FATHER'S HOUSE A name given to extended family units in the Ancient Near East reflecting a social organization in which a dominant male headed the family. These units might be large (Jacob's house included 66 descendants when he entered Egypt, Gen. 46:26). A father's house could designate the clans within a tribe (Ex. 6:14–25) or even an entire tribe (Josh. 22:14). The common designations "house of Jacob" (Ex. 19:3; Amos 3:13), "house of Israel" (Ex. 40:38) and the unusual designation "house of Isaac" (Amos 7:16) all refer to the nation Israel in terms of a father's house.

During patriarchal times a marriage was expected to be within the house of one's father (Gen. 11:29; 20:12; 24:4,15,38,40; 29:10; Ex. 6:20; Num. 36:8–10). Some of these marriages within the clan were later prohibited (Lev. 18:9,12; 20:17,19). In patriarchal times married women were regarded as remaining part of their father's house (Gen. 31:14; compare 46:26 where the enumeration of Jacob's house does not include his sons' wives). In later times married women were regarded to have left their father's houses (Num. 30:3,16). Widows were expected to return to their fathers' houses (Gen. 38:11). Genesis 31:14 suggests that in patriarchal times married women might normally expect to share in their father's inheritance. Later law limited this right to cases in which there were no sons to inherit (Num. 27:8).

In John 2:16 "My father's house" is a designation for the Temple which was then equated with Christ's body (2:21). The reference to "My Father's house" with its many dwelling places (14:2) can be explained in two ways. House can be understood as a place or as a set of relationships, a household. Already in the Psalms the Temple is the house of God where the righteous hope to dwell (23:6; 27:4). It is a short step to the idea of heaven as God's dwelling where there is ample room for the disciples. If house is understood as household, the focus is on fellowship with God. In contrast to servants, a son abides in his father's house (John 8:35). As Son of God, Jesus enjoys unique fellowship with God. By believing in Christ, we are empowered to become children of God (1:12), members of God's household, and share in fellowship with the Father. The two meanings do not exclude each other. Both may be included in Jesus' promise in John 14:2.

Chris Church

FATHOM Measure of depth equalling six feet (Acts 27:28). See Weights and Measures.

FATLINGS, FATTED Generally a young animal put up to be fed for slaughter. Sometimes a general reference to the strongest or choice among a flock or herd is intended. In Pharoah's dream fat cows (Gen. 41:2,18) symbolized years of prosperity. Saul was tempted to spare the choice animals of the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:9). In Ezekiel 34:3,16,20 the fat sheep symbolize the prosperous leaders of Israel. As choice specimens, fattened animals made an appropriate offering to God (2 Sam. 6:13; Ps. 66:15; Amos 5:22). Fattened animals are often associated with banquets.

Fattened cattle formed part of the menu for the wedding banquet of the king's son in the parable in Matthew 22:4. In the parable of the loving father a son is welcomed home with a banquet of a fatted calf (Luke 15:23,27,30). Fattened animals were used as a symbol for slaughter. In the New Testament, James pictured the oppressive rich as fattening their hearts for a day of slaughter, perhaps a reference to God's judgment on them (5:5).

FAWN Young deer; term used in modern translations for KJV "hind" and "roe." See Animals.

FEAR A broad range of emotions that embrace both the secular and the religious worlds. Secular fear is the natural feeling of alarm caused by the expectation of imminent danger, pain, or disaster. Religious fear appears as the result of awe and reverence toward a supreme power.

Terminology The English word "fear" is used to translate several Hebrew and Greek words. In the Old Testament, the most common word used to express fear is yir'ah, which means "fear, "terror" (Isa. 7:25; Jonah 1:10,16). In the New Testament, the word used most often to express fear is phobos which means "fear," "dread," "terror"

(Matt. 28:4; Luke 21:26).

Secular Fear arises in the normal activities and relationships of life.

Human Fear Animals fear humans (Gen. 9:2), and humans fear the animals (Amos 3:8); individuals fear individuals (Gen. 26:7), and nations fear nations (2 Sam. 10:19). People are afraid of wars (Ex. 14:10), of their enemies (Deut. 2:4), and of subjugation (Deut. 7:18; 28:10). People are afraid of death (Gen. 32:11), of disaster (Zeph. 3:15–16), of sudden panic (Prov. 3:25), of being overtaken by adversity (Job 6:21), and of the unknown (Gen. 19:30). Fear can reflect the limitations of life (Eccl. 12:5) as well as the unforeseen consequences of actions (1 Sam. 3:15). Fear can be the regard the young owes to the aged (Job 32:6), the honor a child demonstrates toward parents (Lev. 19:3), the reverential respect of individuals toward their masters (1 Pet. 2:18), and to persons in positions of responsibilities (Rom. 13:7). Fear also can be the sense of concern for individuals (2 Cor. 11:3) as well as the respect for one's husband (1 Pet. 3:2).

Fear as consequence of sin Fear may come from a strong realization of sin and disobedience. Man and woman were afraid after their act of disobedience (Gen. 3:10). Abimelech was afraid when he realized that he had committed an offensive act by taking the wife of Abraham to be his wife (Gen. 20:8–9). This sense of estrangement and guilt that comes as consequence of sin produces in the heart of individuals the fear of the day of the Lord because they will appear before the judgment of God (Joel 2:1).

Freedom from fear Freedom from fear comes as individuals trust in the God who protects (Ps. 23:4) and helps them (Isa. 54:14). The New Testament teaches that perfect love casts out fear (1 John 4:18). Christians are no longer slaves of fear, for Christ has given them not a spirit of timidity or cowardice, but a spirit of power, of love, and of self-control (2 Tim. 1:7).

Religious Fear is the human response to the presence of God.

Fear of God A prominent element in Old Testament religion is the concept of the fear of God. Most often the sense of fear comes as individuals encounter the divine in the context of revelation. When God appears to a person, the person experiences the reality of God's holiness. This self-disclosure of God points to the vast distinction between humans and God, to the mysterious characteristic of God that at the same time attracts and repels. There is a mystery in divine holiness that causes individuals to become overwhelmed with a sense of awe and fear. They respond by falling down or kneeling in reverence and worship, confessing sin, and seeking God's will (Isa. 6).

God as a fearful God The God of Israel is an awe-producing God because of His majesty, His power, His works, His transcendence, and His holiness. Yahweh is a "great and terrible God" (Neh. 1:15); He is "fearful in praises, doing wonders" (Ex. 15:11); His name is "fearful" (Deut. 28:58) and "terrible" (Ps. 99:3). The fear of God comes as people experience God in a visible manifestation (Ex. 20:18), in dreams (Gen. 28:17), in visible form (Ex. 3:6), and in His work of salvation (Isa. 41:5). God's work, His power, majesty, and holiness evoke fear and demand acknowledgment. The fear of God is not to be understood as the dread that comes out of fear of punishment, but as the reverential regard and the awe that comes out of recognition and submission to the divine. It is the revelation of God's will to which the believer submits in obedience.

The basis for God's relationship with Israel was the covenant. The personal relationship that came out of the covenant transformed the relationship from a sense of terror to one of respect and reverence in which trust predominated. This fear which produces awe can be seen in the worship of Israel. The Israelites were exhorted to "serve the Lord with fear" (Ps. 2:11). Fear protected Israel from taking God for granted or from presuming on His grace. Fear called to covenant obedience.

Fear as obedience Deuteronomy sets out a relationship between the fear of God and the observance of the demands of the covenant. To fear the Lord is one of the ways by which Israel expresses its obedience and loyalty to Yahweh and to His divine requirements: "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?" (Deut. 10:12–13; compare 6:24–25; 10:20; 13:4). Fear becomes a demand that can be learned (Deut. 17:19). Fear of God was part of the religious life of every Israelite, where the acknowledgment of it required a specific behavior from each individual. Fear of God was a requirement demanded from every judge (Ex. 18:21). The kings of Israel should rule in the fear of the Lord (2 Sam. 23:3); even the messianic King would live in the fear of the Lord (Isa. 11:2). To fear God was the beginning of wisdom and thus of the pathway to true life (Prov. 1:7; 9:10; 15:33).

"Fear not" The expression "fear not" (also translated "do not fear" or "do not be afraid") is an invitation to confidence and trust. When used without religious connotation (15 times), "fear not" is an expression of comfort. These words come from an individual to another providing reassurance and encouragement (Gen. 50:21; Ruth 3:11; Ps. 49:16). When "fear not" is used in a religious context (60 times), the words are an invitation to trust in God. These words appear in the context of the fear and terror that follows divine revelation. God invites His people not to be afraid of Him (Gen. 15:1; 26:24); the angel of the Lord seeks to calm an individual before a divine message is communicated (Dan. 10:12,19; Luke 1:13,30); a person acting as a mediator of God invites the people to trust in God (Moses, Deut. 31:6; Joshua, Josh. 10:25).

The "God-fearers" The "God-fearers" were those who were faithful to God and obeyed His commandments (Job 1:1; Pss. 25:14; 33:18). Those who fear God are blessed (Ps. 112:1); they enjoy God's goodness (Ps. 34:9) and God's provision (Ps. 111:5). In the New Testament "God-fearers" became a technical term for uncircumcised Gentiles who worshiped in the Jewish synagogue.

Fear in the New Testament Some Christians tend to de-emphasize the fear of God in the New Testament by placing the love of God above the fear of God. There is indeed a greater emphasis on the love of God in the New Testament. However, the element of fear was part of the proclamation of the early church.

Paul admonished believers to work out their salvation "with fear and trembling" (Phil. 2:12). The early church grew in number as they lived "in the fear of the Lord" (Acts 9:31). The fear of God is related to the love of God. The revelation of God to people in the New Testament contains the element of God's mysterious otherness calling for reverent obedience. The New Testament church stands in awe and fear in the presence of a holy God, for fear is "the whole duty of man" (Eccl. 12:13). Claude F. Mariottini

FEAR OF ISAAC Name or title that Jacob used in referring to God (Gen 31:42; compare 31:53; 46:1). Evidently the patriarchs used various names to refer to God until He revealed His personal name to Moses (Ex 6:3). Some scholars translate the Hebrew expression "Kinsman of Isaac" or "Refuge of Isaac." See Patriarchs; God of the Fathers.

FEASTS See Festivals.

FELIX (Fē' lĭx) The procurator of Judea at the time Paul the apostle visited Jerusalem for the last time and was arrested there (Acts 23:24). Antonius Felix became procurator of Judea in A.D. 52, succeeding Cumanus. He remained in office until A.D. 60, when the emperor Nero recalled him. He is depicted in Acts as a man who listened with interest to Paul's defense but failed to make any decision with regard to the case or with regard to the personal implications of Paul's message. Rather he hoped Paul would pay him a bribe (Acts 24:26). Contemporary historians Tacitus and Josephus paint Felix as a brutal, incompetent politician who was finally replaced. Compare Acts 24:27. See Paul; Roman Empire.

FELLOES Term used by KJV, REB for the rim of a wheel (1 Kings 7:33).

FELLOWSHIP The bond of common purpose and devotion that binds Christians together and to Christ. "Fellowship" is the English translation of words from the Hebrew stem hbr and the Greek stem koin-. The Hebrew hbr was used to express ideas such as common or shared house (Prov. 21:9), "binding" or "joining" (Ex. 26:6; Eccl. 9:4), companion (Eccl. 4:10), and even a wife as a companion (Mal. 2:14). Haber was used for a member of a Pharisaic society. Pharisees tended to form very close associations with one another in social, religious, and even business affairs. A most important dimension in the life of these heberim was a sharing together in the study of Scripture and law, and table fellowship.

The Gospels record no sayings of Jesus in which He used the koin- stem to describe "fellowship" among disciples, though certainly the close association shared by Jesus and His followers laid the foundation for the church's post-Easter understanding of fellowship.

Koinonia was Paul's favorite word to describe a believer's relationship with the risen Lord and the benefits of salvation which come through Him. On the basis of faith believers have fellowship with the Son (1 Cor. 1:9). We share fellowship in the gospel (1 Cor. 9:23; Phil. 1:5). Paul probably meant that all believers participate together in the saving power and message of the good news. Believers also share together a fellowship with the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. 13:14), which the apostle understood as a most important bond for unity in the life of the church (Phil. 2:1–4).

The tendency of many Christians to refer to the Lord's Supper as "communion" is rooted in Paul's use of the term koinonia in the context of his descriptions of the Lord's Supper. He described the cup as "communion of the blood of Christ," and the bread as "communion" of the body of Christ (1 Cor. 10:16). Paul did not explain precisely how such "communion" takes place through the Supper. He emphatically believed the Supper tied participants closer to one another and to Christ. Such "communion" could not be shared with Christ and with other gods or supernatural beings. Thus Paul forbad his readers from partaking in pagan religious meals, which would result in sharing "fellowship" with evil, supernatural forces or demons (1 Cor. 10:19–21).

Immediately after Paul spoke of "fellowship" with Christ through participation in the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 10:16), he said, "since there is one bread, we who are many are one body" (1 Cor. 10:17 NAS). This illustrates clearly Paul's belief that fellowship with Christ was to issue into fellowship between believers. Once we grasp this, it is easy to understand why Paul was so angry over the mockery that the Corinthians were making of the Lord's Supper. While claiming to partake of this sacred meal, many Corinthian Christians ignored the needs of their brothers and sisters and actually created factions and divisions (1 Cor. 11:17–18), "for when the time comes to eat, each of you goes ahead with your own supper, and one goes hungry and another becomes drunk" (1 Cor. 11:21 NRSV). Because the "fellowship" among the Corinthians themselves was so perverted, Paul could go so far as to say "when you come together, it is not really to eat the Lord's supper" (1 Cor. 11:20 NRSV).

Koinonia with the Lord results not only in sharing His benefits (the gospel and the Holy Spirit), but also sharing His sufferings (Phil. 3:10; Col. 1:24). These texts express clearly just how intimate was Paul's perception of the close relationship between the believer and the Lord. The pattern of self-sacrifice and humility, demonstrated most profoundly through Jesus' suffering on the cross (Phil. 2:5–8), is to mark the current life of the disciple. Just as Jesus gave so completely of Himself for the sake of His people, so, too, are believers to give completely of themselves for the sake of the people of God (2 Cor. 4:7–12; Col. 1:24). The pattern of following Christ in suffering continues for the believer, in that just as Christ entered into glory following His suffering (Phil. 2:9–11), so, too, will the believer in the future share in the glory of Christ "if so be that we suffer with him" (Rom. 8:17; compare Phil. 3:10–11).

Paul believed that Christians were to share with one another what they had to offer to assist fellow believers. Paul used the koin- stem to refer to such sharing. One who has received the word ought to "share" it with others (Gal. 6:6). Though it is not translated "fellowship" in English versions, Paul actually used the term koinonia to denote the financial contribution which he was collecting from Gentile believers to take to Jerusalem for the relief of the saints who lived there (Rom. 15:26; 2 Cor. 8:4; 9:13). The reason he could refer to a financial gift as koinonia is explained by Romans 15:27: "If the Gentiles have come to share in their [the Jewish Christians'] spiritual blessings, they ought also to be of service to them in material things" (NRSV). In this case, each offered what they were able to offer to benefit others: Jewish Christians their spiritual blessings, Gentile Christians their material blessings. Such mutual sharing of one's blessings is a clear and profound expression of Christian fellowship.

Finally, for Paul, koinonia was a most appropriate term to describe the unity and bonding that exists between Christians by virtue of the fact that they share together in the grace of the gospel. When Paul wished to express the essential oneness of the apostolic leadership of the church he said concerning James, the Lord's brother, Peter, and John, that they "gave to me . . . the right hands of fellowship" (Gal. 2:9). When we realize that this expression of koinonia came on the heels of one of the most hotly debated issues in the early church, namely the status of Gentiles in the people of God (Gal. 2:1–10; Acts 15), we can see how powerful and all encompassing Paul's notion of Christian fellowship actually was.

Like Paul, John also affirmed that koinonia was an important aspect of the Christian pilgrimage. He affirmed emphatically that fellowship with God and the Son was to issue in fellowship with the other believers (1 John 1:3, 6–7).

See Lord's Supper; Holy Spirit.

Bradley Chance

FENCED CITY KJV term for a fortified or walled city. See Cities and Urban Life; Fortified Cities.

View from the inside of the outer defensive wall of the ancient city of Arad in Israel.

FERRET White European polecat mentioned by KJV in Leviticus 11:30. Other translations read, "gecko." See Animals in the Bible FERTILE CRESCENT refers to the crescent-shaped arc of alluvial land in the Near East stretching from the tip of the Persian Gulf to the southeastern corner of the Mediterranean Sea. The term was coined by James Henry Breasted in 1916 and does not occur in the Bible.

Conditions in the Fertile Crescent in antiquity were favorable for settled life, and the rise of civilization occurred along its river valleys. This band of land between the desert and the mountains was suitable for farming and was somewhat isolated by geographical barriers on all sides. The northeast is bordered by the Zagros Mountains, the north by the Taurus and Amanus ranges. On the west lies the Mediterranean Sea, and the concave southern limit is determined by the vast Syro-Arabian Desert. The Fertile Crescent is composed of Mesopotamia in the east and the Levant, or Palestine and Syria in the west. See Mesopotamia, Palestine.

Egypt was separated from Palestine by the Sinai, and thus is not a part of the Fertile Crescent. The Nile River, however, provided an ideal situation for the rise of early civilization parallel to that of Mesopotamia. Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

FERTILITY CULT A general term for religions marked by rites which reenact a myth accounting for the orderly change of the seasons and the earth's fruitfulness. Such myths often involve a great mother-goddess as a symbol of fertility and a male deity, usually her consort but sometimes a son, who like vegetation dies and returns to life again. In Mesopotamia the divine couple was Ishtar and Tammuz (who is mourned in Ezek. 8:14), in Egypt Isis and her son Osiris, in Asia Minor Cybele and Attis. In Syria the Ugaritic myths of the second millenium B.C. pictured Baal-Hadad, the storm god, as the dying and rising god. (A local manifestation of this god is mourned in Zech. 12:11; Syrian kings derived their names from this deity, 1 Kings 15:18; 2 Kings 6:24; 13:24). His wife was the goddess Anath. In the earliest Ugaritic myth Asherah, the great mother-goddess, was the consort of El, the chief god in the pantheon. As Baal replaced El as the major deity, he became associated with Asherah (Judg. 6:25–30; 1 Kings 18:19). Ashtoroth, the daughter of Asherah, is used as the Hebrew word for womb or the fruit of the womb (Deut. 7:13; 28:4,18,51).

Fertility cults attribute the fertility of the cropland and herds to the sexual relations of the divine couple. Sacral sexual intercourse by priests and priestesses or by cult prostitutes was an act of worship intended to emulate the gods and share in their powers of procreation or else an act of imitative magic by which the gods were compelled to preserve the earth's fertility (1 Kings 14:23; 15:12; Hos. 4:14). Transvestism (prohibited in Deut. 22:5) may have been part of a fertility rite like that practiced by the Hittites. Sacrifices of produce, livestock, and even children (2 Kings 17:31; 23:10) represented giving the god what was most precious in life in an attempt to restore order to the cosmos and ensure fertility.

Elijah's struggle with the priests of Baal and Asherah at Mount Carmel is the best known conflict between worship of Yahweh and a fertility cult (1 Kings 18:17–40). Under Ahab, Baalism had become the state religion (1 Kings 16:31). The account of the priests of Baal lacerating themselves (1 Kings 18:28) is illuminated by the Ugaritic myths where El gashes his arms, chest, and back at the news of Baal's death. The priests of Baal customarily reenacted this scene from the myth at plowing time. Both skin and earth were cut as a sign of mourning (prohibited by Deut. 14:1). Baal's resurrection came with the return of the rains. The Biblical narrative is clear that Yahweh, not Baal, is the Lord who withholds and gives rain (1 Kings 17:1; 18:20–45).

The Israelites' sacred calender celebrated the same seasons as their neighbors (barley harvest = feast of unleavened bread; wheat harvest = Pentecost; fruit harvest = booths). The Israelites interpreted these seasons in light of God's redemptive acts in their history. Israel recognized the one God as the one responsible for rain (1 Kings 18), grain, wine, oil, wool, and flax (Hos. 2:8–9). Israel conceived of the earth's fruitfulness in a way quite unlike that of her neighbors. Yahweh had no consort; thus fertility was not tied to Yahweh's return to life and sexual functioning. Rather, the ability of plants and animals to reproduce their own kind was rooted in creation (Gen. 1:11–12,22,28). The orderly progression of the seasons was not traced to a primordial battle but was rooted in God's promise to Noah (Gen. 8:22). The fertility of the land was ensured not by ritual reenactment of the sacred marriage but by obedience to the demands of the covenant (Deut. 28:1,3–4,11–12).

In the New Testament, Diana or Artemis of the Ephesians (Acts 19:35) was a many-breasted fertility goddess. Aphrodite was also associated with fertility. Her temple at Corinth was the home of cult prostitutes responsible for the city's reputation for immorality. (Compare 1 Cor. 6:15–20.) Many of the mystery religions which competed with Christianity in the early centuries of the church developed the myths of the older fertility cults. See Asherah; Ashtoroth; Baal; Canaan, History and Religion of; Dagon; Diana; Gods, Pagan; High Place; Prostitution; Tammuz; Ugarit.

Chris Church

FESTAL GARMENTS, FESTAL ROBES Translations used by modern translations for two Hebrew expressions. The Hebrew expressions underlying "festal garments" mean a change of clothing (Gen. 45:22; Judg. 14:12–13,19; 2 King 5:5,22–23); the term underlying "festal robes" means clean, pure, or white clothing (Isa. 3:22; Zech. 3:4). Modern translations are not consistent in translating the terms, translation depending on the context. In the Ancient Near East possession of sets of clothing was regarded as a sign of wealth. Common people would own few clothes. Thus a change of clothes might suggest clothes reserved for a special occasion as reflected in some translations (Judg. 14:12–13,19 NRSV, TEV; 2 King 5:5,22–23 TEV). The white garments of Isaiah 3:22 are likely fine linen robes. The reference in Zechariah 3:4 is either to the high priest's robes (perhaps the special robes reserved for the Day of Atonement, Zech. 3:9) which represent the restoration of the priesthood or a simple reference to clean robes as a symbol of Joshua's innocence of any charges (symbolized by the filthy rags).

FESTIVALS Regular religious celebrations remembering God's great acts of salvation in the history of His people. Traditionally called "feasts" in the English Bibles, these can conveniently be categorized according to frequency of celebration. Many of them were timed according to cycles of seven. The cycle of the week with its climax on the seventh day, provided the cyclical basis for much of Israel's worship: as the seventh day was observed, so was the seventh month (which contained four of the national festivals), and the seventh year, and the fiftieth year (the year of Jubilee), which followed seven cycles each of seven years. Not only were the festivals as a whole arranged with reference to the cycle of the week (Sabbath), two of them (the feast of unleavened bread and the feast of tabernacles) lasted for seven days each. Each began on the fifteenth of the month—at the end of two cycles of weeks and when the moon was full. Pentecost also was celebrated on the fifteenth of the month and began fifty days after the presentation of the firstfruits—the day following seven times seven weeks.

The Sabbath See Sabbath. The seventh day of each week was listed among the festivals (Lev. 23:1–3). It functioned as a reminder of the Lord's rest at the end of the creation week (Gen. 2:3) and also of the deliverance from slavery in Egypt (Deut. 5:12–25). The sabbath day was observed by strict rest from work from sunset until sunset (Ex. 20:8–11; Neh. 13:15–22). Each person was to remain in place and not engage in travel (Ex. 16:29; Lev. 23:3). Despite such restrictions even as kindling a fire (Ex. 35:3) or any work (Ex. 31:14; 35:2), the sabbath was a joyful time (Isa. 58:13–14).

The New Moon This festival was a monthly celebration characterized by special offerings, great in quantity and quality (Num. 28:11–15), and blowing of trumpets (Num. 10:10; Ps. 81:3). According to Amos 8:5, business ceased. The festivals of the new moon and sabbath are often mentioned together in the Old Testament (Isa. 1:13; 66:23; Ezek. 45:17; 46:1,3). This festival provided the occasion for King Saul to stage a state banquet and for the family of David to offer a special annual sacrifice (1 Sam. 20:5,6,24,29). David's arrangements for the Levites included service on the new moon (1 Chron. 23:31), and the ministry of the prophets was sometimes connected with this occasion (2 Kings 4:23; Isa. 1:13; Ezek. 46:1; Hag. 1:1). Ezekiel mentioned four times receiving a vision on the first day of the month (Ezek. 26:1; 29:17; 31:1; 32:1). This day (along with others) is included in prophetic denunciations of abuses of religious observances (Isa. 1:13, 14). The new moon of the seventh month apparently received special attention (Lev. 23:24; Num. 29:1–6; Ezra 3:6; Neh. 8:2). Although the Exile brought a temporary cessation (Hos. 2:11), the festival was resumed later (Neh. 10:33; Ezra 3:1–6). It was on the first day of the seventh month that Ezra read the law before the public assembly (Neh. 7:73*b*—8:2). For Paul, new moon festivals were viewed as only a shadow of better things to come (Col. 2:16–17; compare Isa. 66:23).

A Jewish mother and child celebrate the Jewish tradition of the lighting of the candles at Hanukkah.

A young modern Jewish boy receives his first phylactery during his Bar Mitzvah celebration.

Annual Festivals required the appearance of all males at the sanctuary (Ex. 34:23; Deut. 16:16). These occasions—called "feasts to the Lord," (Ex. 12:14; Lev. 23:39,41)—were times when free-will offerings were made (Deut. 16:16,17).

Passover The first of the three annual festivals was the Passover. It commemorated the final plague on Egypt when the firstborn of the Egyptians died and the Israelites were spared because of the blood smeared on their doorposts (Ex. 12:11,21,27,43,48). Passover took place on the fourteenth day (at evening) of the first month (Lev. 23:5). The animal (lamb or kid) to be slain was selected on the tenth day of the month (Ex. 12:3) and slaughtered on the fourteenth day and then eaten (Deut. 16:7). None of the animal was

The Jewish Calendar

Year	Sacred	1	2	3	4	5	6
	Civil	7	8	9	10	11	12
Month		Nison/Abib 30 days	Iyyar/Ziv 29 days	Sivan 30 days	Tammuz 29 days	Ab 30 days	Elul 29 days
English Months (nearly)		April	May	June	July	August	September
Festivals		1 New Moon 14 The Passover 15-21 Unleavened bread	1 New Moon 14 Second Passover (for those unable to keep first)	1 New Moon 6 Pentecost	1 New Moon 17 Fast. Taking of Jerusalem	1 New Moon 9 Fast. Destruction of temple	1 New Moon
Seasons and Productions		Spring rains (Deut. 11:14) Floods (Josh. 3:15) Barley ripe of Jericho	Harvest Barley Harvest (Ruth 1:22) Wheat Harvest Summer begins No rain from April to Sept. (1 Sam. 12:17)		Hot Season Heat increases	The streams dry up Heat intense Vintage (Lev. 26:5)	Heat intense (2 Kings 4:19) Grape harvest (Num. 13:23)

Note 1

The Jewish year is strictly lunar, being 12 lunations with an average of 29-1/2 days making 354 days in the year.

The Jewish sacred year begins with that new moon of spring which comes between our March 22 and April 25 in cycles of 19 years.

We can understand it best if we imagine our New Year's Day, which now comes on Jan. 1, without regard to the moon, varying each year with Easter, the time of the Passover, of the time of the full moon which, as a new moon had introduced the New Year two weeks before.

7 1	8 2	9 3	10 4	11 5	12 6	13 Leap year
Tishri/Ethanim 30 days	Marchesran/ Bul 29 days	Chislev 30 days	Tebeth 29 days	Shebat 30 days	Adar 29 days	Veadar/Adar Sheni
October	November	December	January	February	March	March/April
1 New Year Day of Blowing of Trumpet Day of Judgment and Memorial (Num. 29:1) 10 Day of Atonement (Lev. 16) 15 Booths 21 (Lev. 23:24) 22 Solemn Assembly	1 New Moon	1 New Moon 25 Dedication (John 10:22, 29)	1 New Moon 10 Fast. Siege of Jerusalem	1 New Moon	1 New Moon 13 Fast. of Esther 14-15 Purim	1 New Moon 13 Fast. of Esther 14-15 Purim
Seed time Former or early rains begin (Joel 2:23) Plowing and sowing begin	Rain continues Wheat and barley sown	Winter Winter begins Snow on mountains	Coldest month Hail and snow (Josh. 10:11)	Weather gradually warmer	Thunder and hail frequent Almond tree blossoms	Intercalary Month

Note 2 Hence the Jewish calendar contains a 13th month, Veadar or Adar Sheni, introduced 7 times in every 19 years, to render the average length of the year nearly correct, and to keep the seasons in the proper months.

Note 3 The Jewish day begins at sunset of the previous day.

to be left over on the following morning (Ex. 34:25). The uncircumcised and the hired servant were not permitted to eat the sacrifice (Ex. 12:45–49).

The Passover was also called the feast of unleavened bread (Ex. 23:15; Deut. 16:16) because only unleavened bread was eaten during the seven days immediately following Passover (Ex. 12:15–20; 13:6–8; Deut. 16:3–8). Unleavened bread reflected the fact that the people had no time to put leaven in their bread before their hasty departure from Egypt. It was also apparently connected to the barley harvest (Lev. 23:4–14).

During New Testament times large crowds gathered in Jerusalem to observe this annual celebration. Jesus was crucified during the Passover event. He and His disciples ate a Passover meal together on the eve of His death. During this meal Jesus said, "This is my body," and "this cup is the new testament in my blood" (Luke 22:7, 19–20). The New Testament identifies Christ with the Passover sacrifice: "For even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. 5:7). See Passover.

Feast of Weeks The second of the three annual festivals was Pentecost, also called the feast of weeks (Ex. 34:22; Deut. 16:10,16; 2 Chron. 8:13), the feast of harvest (Ex. 23:16), and the day of firstfruits (Num. 28:26; compare Ex. 23:16; 34:22; Lev. 23:17). It was celebrated seven complete weeks, or fifty days, after Passover (Lev. 23:15,16; Deut. 16:9); therefore, it was given the name Pentecost.

Essentially a harvest celebration, the term "weeks" was used of the period of grain harvest from the barley harvest to the wheat harvest, a period of about seven weeks. At this time, the Lord was credited as the source of rain and fertility (Jer. 5:24). It was called "day of firstfruits" (Num. 28:26) because it marked the beginning of the time in which people were to bring offerings of firstfruits. It was celebrated as a sabbath with rest from ordinary labors and the calling of a holy convocation (Lev. 23:21; Num. 28:26). It was a feast of joy and thanksgiving for the completion of the harvest season. The able-bodied men were to be present at the sanctuary, and a special sacrifice was offered (Lev. 23:15–22; Num. 28:26–31). According to Leviticus 23:10–11,16,17, two large loaves were waved before the Lord by the anointed priests. These were made of fine flour from the new wheat and baked with leaven. They were a "wave offering" for the people. They could not be eaten until after this ceremony (Lev. 23:14; Josh. 5:10–11), and none of this bread was placed on the altar because of the leaven content. Also two lambs were offered. The feast was concluded by the eating of communal meals to which the poor, the stranger, and the Levites were invited.

Later tradition associated the feast of weeks with the giving of the law at Sinai. It had been concluded by some that Exodus 19:1 indicated the law was delivered on the fiftieth day after the Exodus. Some thought that Deuteronomy 16:12 may have connected the Sinai event and the festival, but Scripture does not indicate any definite link between Sinai and Pentecost. In the New Testament the Holy Spirit came upon the disciples at Pentecost (Acts 2:1–4), at the festive time when Jews from different countries were in Jerusalem to celebrate this annual feast. See Pentecost.

The Day of Atonement The third annual festival came on the tenth day of the seventh month (Tishri-Sept./Oct.) and the fifth day before the feast of tabernacles (Lev. 16:1–34; Num. 29:7–11). According to Leviticus 23:27–28, four main elements comprise this most significant feast. First, it was to be a "holy convocation," drawing the focus of the people to the altar of divine mercy. The holy One of Israel called the people of Israel to gather in His presence and give their undivided attention to Him. Secondly, they were to "humble their souls" ("afflict your souls," Lev. 23:27 KJV). This was explained by later tradition to indicate fasting and repentance. Israel understood that this was a day for mourning over their sins. The seriousness of this requirement is reiterated in Leviticus 23:29, "If there is any person who will not humble himself on this same day, he shall be cut off from his people" (Lev. 23:29 NAS). Thirdly, offerings are central to the day of atonement. The Bible devotes an entire chapter (Lev. 16) to them; they are also listed in Numbers 29:7–11. In addition to these, when the day fell on a sabbath, the regular sabbath offerings were offered. The fourth and final element of the day involved the prohibition of labor. The day of atonement was a "sabbath of rest" (Lev. 23:32), and the Israelites were forbidden to do any work at all. If they disobeyed, they were liable to capital punishment (Lev. 23:30).

The center point of this feast involved the high priest entering the holy of holies. Before entering, the high priest first bathed his entire body, going beyond the mere washing of hands and feet as required for other occasions. This washing symbolized his desire for purification. Rather than donning his usual robe and colorful garments (described in Ex. 28 and Lev. 8), he was commanded to wear special garments of linen. Also, the high priest sacrificed a bullock as a sin offering for himself and for his house (Lev. 16:6). After filling his censer with live coals from the altar, he entered the holy of holies where he placed incense on the coals. Then he took some of the blood from the slain bullock and sprinkled it on the mercy seat ("atonement cover," Lev. 16:13 NIV) and also on the ground in front of the ark, providing atonement for the priesthood (Lev. 16:14–15). Next he sacrificed a male goat as a sin offering for the people. Some of this blood was then also taken into the holy of holies and sprinkled there on behalf of the people (Lev. 16:11–15). Then he took another goat, called the "scapegoat" (for "escape goat"), laid his hands on its head, confessed over it the sins of Israel, and then released it into the desert where it symbolically carried away the sins of the people (Lev. 16:8,10). The remains of the sacrificial bullock and male goat were taken outside the city and burned, and the day was concluded with additional sacrifices.

According to Hebrews 9—10, this ritual is a symbol of the atoning work of Christ, our great high Priest, who did not need to make any sacrifice for Himself but shed His own blood for our sins. As the high priest of the Old Testament entered the holy of holies with the blood of sacrificial animals, Jesus entered heaven itself to appear on our behalf in front of the Father (Heb. 9:11,12). Each year the high priest repeated his sin offerings for his own sin and the sins of the people, giving an annual reminder that perfect and permanent atonement had not yet been made; but Jesus, through His own blood, accomplished eternal redemption for His people (Heb. 9:12). Just as the sacrifice of the day of atonement was burned outside the camp of Israel, Jesus suffered outside the gate of Jerusalem so that He might redeem His people from sin (Heb. 13:11,12).

Feast of Tabernacles The fourth annual festival was the feast of tabernacles (2 Chron. 8:13; Ezra 3:4; Zech. 14:16), also called the feast of ingathering (Ex. 23:16; 34:22), the feast to the Lord (Lev. 23:39; Judg. 21:19). Sometimes it was simply called "the feast" (1 Kings 8:2; 2 Chron. 5:3; 7:8; Neh. 8:14; Isa. 30:29; Ezek. 45:23,25) because it was so well known. Its observance combined the ingathering of the labor of the field (Ex. 23:16), the fruit of the earth (Lev. 23:39), the ingathering of the threshingfloor and winepress (Deut. 16:13), and the dwelling in booths (or "tabernacles"), which were to be joyful reminders to Israel (Lev. 23:41; Deut. 16:14). The "booth" in Scripture is not an image of privation and misery, but of protection, preservation, and shelter from heat and storm (Pss. 27:5; 31:20; Isa. 4:6). The rejoicing community included family, servants, widows, orphans, Levites, and sojourners (Deut. 16:13–15).

The feast began on the fifteenth day of Tishri (the seventh month), which was five days after the day of atonement. It lasted for seven days (Lev. 23:36; Deut. 16:13; Ezek. 45:25). On the first day, booths were constructed of fresh branches of trees. Each participant had to collect twigs of myrtle, willow, and palm in the area of Jerusalem for construction of the booths (Neh. 8:13–18). Every Israelite was to live for seven days in these during the festival, in commemoration of when their fathers lived in such booths after their Exodus from Egypt (Lev. 23:40; Neh. 8:15). The dedication of Solomon's Temple took place at the feast (1 Kings 8:2).

After the return from Exile, Ezra read the law and led the people in acts of penitence during this feast (Neh. 8:13–18). Later, Josephus referred to it as the holiest and greatest of the Hebrew feasts. Later additions to the ritual included a libation of water drawn from the pool of Siloam (the probable background for Jesus' comments on "living water," John 7:37–39) and the lighting of huge Menorahs (candelabra) at the Court of the Women (the probable background for Jesus' statement, "I am the light of the world," John 8:12). The water and the "pillar of light" provided during the wilderness wandering (when the people dwelt in tabernacles) was temporary and in contrast to the continuing water and light claimed by Jesus during this feast which commemorated that wandering period.

Feast of Trumpets Modern Rosh Hashanah is traced back to the so-called "Feast of Trumpets," the sounding of the trumpets on the first day of the seventh month (Tishri) of the religious calendar year (Lev. 23:24; Num. 29:1). The trumpet referred to here was the shofar, a ram's horn. It was distinctive from the silver trumpets blown on the other new moons.

This day evolved into the second most holy day on the modern Jewish religious calendar. It begins the "ten days of awe" before the day of atonement. According to Lev. 23:24–27 the celebration consisted of the blowing of trumpets, a time of rest, and "an offering made by fire." The text itself says nothing specifically about a New Year's Day, and the term itself (rosh hashanah) is found only one time in Scripture (Ezek. 40:1) where it refers to the tenth day. The postexilic assembly on the first day of the seventh month, when Ezra read the law, was not referred to as a feast day (Neh. 8:2–3). The fact that the Old Testament contains two calendars—a civil and a religious one—further complicates our understanding of the origins of this holiday. Until modern times this day did not appear to be a major feast day. See New Year Festival.

Two feasts of postexilic origin are noted in Scripture—Purim and Hanukkah.

Purim Purim commemorating the deliverance of the Jews from genocide through the efforts of Esther (Esther 9:16–32) derives its name from the "lot" (pur) which Haman planned to cast in order to decide when he should carry into effect the decree issued by the king for the extermination of the Jews (Esther 9:24). In the apocryphal book of 2 Maccabees (15:36) it is called the day of Mordecai. It was celebrated on the fourteenth day of Adar (March) by those in villages and unwalled towns and on the fifteenth day by those in fortified cities (Esther 9:18,19). No mention of any religious observance is connected with the day; in later periods, the Book of Esther was read in the synagogue on this day. It became a time for rejoicing and distribution of food and presents.

Hanukkah The other postexilic holiday was Hanukkah, a festival which began on the twenty-fifth day of Kislev (Dec.) and lasted eight days. Josephus referred to it as the Feast of Lights because a candle was lighted each successive day until a total of eight was reached. The festival commemorates the victories of Judas Maccabeus in 167 B.C. At that time, when Temple worship was reinstituted, after an interruption of three years, a celebration of eight days took place. The modern celebration does not greatly affect the routine duties of everyday life. This feast is referred to in John 10:22, where it is called the feast of dedication.

Two festivals occurred less often than once a year; the sabbath year and the year of jubilee.

Sabbatic year Each seventh year Israel celebrated a sabbath year for its fields. This involved a rest for the land from all cultivation (Ex. 23:10,11; Lev. 25:2–7; Deut. 15:1–11; 31:10–13). Other names for this festival were sabbath of rest (Lev. 25:4), year of rest (Lev. 25:5), year of release (Deut. 15:9), and the seventh year (Deut. 15:9). The sabbatic year, like the year of jubilee, began on the first day of the month Tishri. This observance is attested by 1 Maccabees 6:49, 53 and Josephus. Laws governing this year of rest included the following: 1) the soil, vineyards, and olive orchards were to enjoy complete rest (Ex. 23:10,11: Lev. 25:4–5); 2) The spontaneous growth of the fields or trees (Isa. 37:30) was for the free use of the hireling, stranger, servants, and cattle (Ex. 23:10,11; Lev. 25:6–7). A fruitful harvest was promised for the sixth year (Lev. 25:20–22). 3) Debts were released for all persons, with the exception of foreigners (Deut. 15:1–4). Probably this law did not forbid voluntary payment of debts. Also no one was to oppress a poor man. 4) Finally, at the feast of tabernacles during this year, the law was to be read to the people in solemn assembly (Deut. 31:10–13).

Jewish tradition interpreted 2 Chronicles 36:21 to mean that the seventy years' captivity was intended to make up for not observing sabbatic years.

Year of Jubilee This was also called the year of liberty (Ezek. 46:17). Its relation to the sabbatic year and the general directions for its observance are found in Leviticus 25:8–16,23–55. Its bearing on lands dedicated to the Lord is given in Leviticus 27:16–25.

After the span of seven sabbaths of years, or seven times seven years (49 years), the trumpet was to sound throughout the land; and the year of jubilee was to be announced (Lev. 25:8–9).

The law states three respects in which the jubilee year was to be observed: 1) rest for the soil—no sowing, reaping, or gathering from the vine (Lev. 25:11); 2) reversion of landed property (Lev. 25:10–34; 27:16–24)—all property in fields and houses located in villages or unwalled towns, which the owner had been forced to sell through poverty and which had not been redeemed, was to revert without payment to its original owner or his lawful heirs. (Exceptions to this are noted in Lev. 25:29,30; 27:17–21.) 3) redemption of slaves—every Israelite, who through poverty had sold himself to another Israelite or to a foreigner settled in the land, if he had not been able to redeem himself or had not been redeemed by a kinsman, was to go free with his children (Lev. 25:39–41).

It appears that the year of jubilee was a time of such complete remission of all debts that it became a season of celebration of freedom and grace. In this year oppression was to cease, and every member of the covenant family was to find joy and satisfaction in the Lord of the covenant. God had redeemed His people from bondage in Egypt (Lev. 25:42), and none of them was again to be reduced to the status of a perennial slave. God's child was not to be oppressed (Lev. 25:43,46); and poverty could not, even at its worst, reduce an Israelite to a status less than that of a hired servant, a wage earner, and then only until the year of jubilee (Lev. 25:40).

After the institution of the year of jubilee laws (Lev. 25:8–34), the year is mentioned again in Numbers 36:4. No reference to the celebration of this festival is found in Scripture apart from the idealistic anticipation of Ezekiel 46:17, but the influence of such laws illuminate such passages as the conduct of Naboth and Ahab in 1 Kings 21:3–29; and the prophetic rebukes found in Isaiah 5:8 and Micah 2:2. Larry Walker

FESTUS (Fĕs' tŭs) The successor of Felix as procurator of Judea (Acts 24:27), He assumed this office at Nero's appointment in A.D. 60. He held it until his death in A.D. 62. Paul the apostle appealed to Porcius Festus for the opportunity of being tried before Caesar, and Festus granted that request. See Paul; Herod; Roman Empire.

FETTER Translation of several Hebrew and Greek terms refering to something that constrains, especially a shackle for the foot. Fetters were made of wood, bronze (Judg. 16:21; 2 Chron. 33:11), or iron (Ps. 149:8). Fetters worn on the feet were often joined by a rope or chain to hobble the prisoner (Mark 5:4). Fetters were painful to the feet (Ps. 105:18). Paul claimed that though he wore fetters, the word of God was not fettered (2 Tim. 2:9 REB, RSV).

FEVER An elevated body temperature or a disease accompanied by such symptoms. The "burning ague" (Lev. 26:16) is an acute fever marked by regular periods of fever, sweating, and then chills. Fever accompanying "consumption" or "wasting disease" (Deut. 28:22 REB) could refer to any number of diseases: malaria, typhoid, typhus, dysentery, chronic diahhrea, or cholera. The "extreme burning" of Deuteronomy 28:22 is understood by most modern translations as a reference to the weather ("fiery heat" RSV, NAS; "scorching wind" TEV) rather than to a fever. Jesus healed two persons afflicted with fevers—Peter's mother-in-law (Matt. 8:14; Mark 1:30; Luke 4:38) and an official's son (John 4:52). In Luke the healing was portrayed as an exorcism. In Acts 28:8 Paul healed Publius of a fever and dysentery ("bloody flux" KJV). See Diseases, Treatment of.

FIELD Unenclosed land. In the Hebrew definition of field, both the use of land (pasture, Gen. 29:2; 31:4; cropland, Gen. 37:7; 47:24; hunting ground, Gen. 27:3,5) and the terrain [mountaintops, Num. 21:20 (literal translation, "field of Moabi"); Judg. 9:32,36;] were insignificant. The crucial distinction is between what is enclosed and what is open. A field may be contrasted with a tent (Num. 19:14,16), a camp (Lev. 14:3,7), vineyards which were customarily enclosed (Ex. 22:5; Lev. 25:3–4), or with a walled city (Lev. 14:53; Deut. 28:3,16). Villages without walls were regarded as fields (Lev. 25:31). Fields were likewise distinguished from barren wasteland (Ezek. 33:27). Fields were marked with landmarks (Deut. 19:14).

The NRSV translated the Hebrew term shedemah, one of the words generally translated field, as vineyard at Deuteronomy 32:32. The REB rendered the term differently each place it was used (terraces, Deut. 32:32; slope, 2 Kings 23:4; vineyard, Isa. 16:8; field, Jer. 31:40; orchards, Hab. 3:17).

FIELD OF BLOOD See Akeldama.

FIERY SERPENT God used snakes of fiery appearance or burning bite to teach His people. The Hebrew word for burning or fiery is the same as for seraphim in Isaiah 6 but refers to different kinds of creatures. To punish the Israelites for complaining about their lot in the wilderness, God sent fiery serpents among them. As a result, many died. The serpents were natural residents of the wilderness (Deut. 8:15). Subsequently, God directed Moses to make a representation of a fiery serpent and place it on a pole. The brass serpent made by Moses became the means of healing for those who had been bitten by the fiery serpents but had not died. Jesus used this to point to His own fate of being lifted up on a cross (John 3:14). Compare John 12:32. See Numbers; Moses.

Isaiah used the fear of snakes to warn complacent Philistines that God would raise up a more fearful enemy who could be compared only to a serpent (saraph) which flew or darted (Isa. 14:29 NIV). Compare Isaiah 30:6.

FIG, FIGTREE See Plants in the Bible.

FIGURED STONE An idol of carved stone (NIV) in contrast to one of molten metal, associated with Canaanite worship (Lev. 26:1; Num. 33:52), according to modern translations. KJV reads, "image of stone" and "pictures." The same Hebrew term is used in Ezekiel 8:12 for idolatrous shrines decorated with base reliefs of gods in the form of animals (8:10; prohibited in Deut. 4:17–18). Various identifications of the animals have been suggested, beasts similar to the lions and serpent-dragons of the "Ishtar Gate" in Babylon, animals similar to those serving as mounts for the gods in stone carvings at Maltaya, Egyptian mortuary deities, and totem animals.

FIGUREHEAD An emblem on the prow of a ship (Acts 28:11 NIV, NRSV, NAS). The figure ("sign" KJV) in Acts is the Twin Brothers Castor and Pollow, sons of Zeus and Leda, identified with the constellation Gemini. Sight of the constellation was a good omen in bad weather. Thus the figurehead was something of a good luck charm.

FILIGREE Modern translation of ornamental work, especially of fine metal wire. KJV reads, "ouches"; REB, "rossettes." Gold filigree was used in the settings of precious stones (Ex. 28:11,20; 39:6,13) and as clasps (Ex. 28:13,25; 39:16,18) for clothing or jewelry. The design in Exodus was likely a rosette or simple floral pattern.

FILLETS Either metal bands binding the tops of pillars used in construction of the Tabernacle (Ex. 36:38; 38:10–12,17,19) or else rods connecting the pillars to one another (TEV). Jeremiah 52:21 uses a different Hebrew word to refer to a measuring line used to measure the circumference of a pillar.

FINERY Modern translation of Hebrew term for the luxuriousness of the jewelry and clothing worn by the society women of Jerusalem (Isa. 3:18). KJV reads "bravery"; NAS, "beauty." The Hebrew word describes the beauty or glory of Aaron's priestly clothes (Ex. 28:2), the glory of God's house (Isa. 60:7), battle field honor (Judg. 4:9), and the pompous (NAS) pride (NIV) of the Assyrian King (Isa. 10:12). Thus finery in itself is not bad, but prideful human attitudes concerning it soon became sinful.

FINGER OF GOD A picturesque expression of God at work. The finger of God writing the Ten Commandments illustrated God's giving the law without any mediation (Ex. 31:18; Deut. 9:10). Elsewhere the finger of God suggests God's power to bring plagues on Egypt (Ex. 8:19) and in making the heavens (Ps. 8:3). Jesus' statement "If I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you" (Luke 11:20) means that since Jesus cast out demons by the power of God, God's rule had become a reality among His hearers.

FINING POT KJV term for a crucible (NRSV, NIV) or smelting pot (REB), a vessel used to heat metal to a high temperature as part of the refining process (Prov. 17:3; 27:21).

FIR TREE KJV term for a tree most often identified with the aleppo pine (NIV, REB, TEV). Others have identified the tree with the juniper (NAS at Isa. 41:19 and 60:13 only) or cypress (NRSV, NAS elsewhere). See Plants in the Bible.

FIRE The product of burning which produces heat, light, and flame. One of the earliest human discoveries, probably first seen as a result of lightning. Humans soon discovered ways to use it and found it to be not only a very useful servant, but also a dreaded master. The invention of fire antedates history, but no nation has yet been discovered which did not know the use of fire. According to Greek mythology, Prometheus stole fire from Olympus, when Zeus denied it to immortal beings, and gave it to humans. For this crime he was punished by being chained to a rock in the wilderness of Scythia. The Bible does not explain the invention of fire. In the account of the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 15:17), one reads of a smoking furnace and a flaming torch. Fire has been from early times the object of man's worship. This worship among the Canaanites is frequently mentioned in Scripture with the adjoining prohibition for God's people to refrain from the abominable practice (Lev. 18:21; Deut. 12:31; 2 Chron. 28:3).

Fire is a consistent element in the relationship of God with His people, often being used as an instrument of His power, either in the way of approval or destruction. The Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 15:17), the appearance of the burning bush (Ex. 3:2), the pillar of fire by night to lead the children of Israel into the Promised Land (Ex. 13:21–22), and God's appearance in fire on Mt. Sinai (Ex. 19:18; 24:17), are well known illustrations of such. The appearance of Christ in John's vision (Rev. 1:14; 2:18), was with eyes "as a flame of fire,"and the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:3), was accompanied by "tongues like as of fire." Fire is used often as a symbol of holiness and often equates the idea of God's presence with God's holiness. God Himself is compared to fire not only to illustrate His holiness, but also to illustrate His anger against sin (Isa. 10:17; Heb. 12:29).

Our English word "purify" is a cognate of the main Greek word used in the New Testament for fire. As such, it denotes one of the main metaphors of the use of fire, namely as purification. God uses the fire of experience to test us (Job 23:10). Ultimately all of our works done on earth in our lifetime will be tested "as by fire" (1 Cor. 3:12–15).

In the context of biblical religion, fire was used to consume the burnt offerings and incense offerings. Fire was to be continually burning upon the altar as a visible sign of the continuous worship of God. If for some reason the fire was extinguished, according to the Talmud, it was to be rekindled only by friction. If fire was used for sacred purposes and obtained other than from the altar, it was called "strange fire" (Lev. 10:1,2), for which use Nadab and Abihu, two sons of Aaron, were punished immediately by divine execution.

The law prohibited any fire to be kindled on the sabbath, even for cooking purposes (Ex. 35:3). Anyone kindling a fire that caused damage to crops was compelled by law to make restitution (Ex. 22:6). Capital punishment was occasionally made even more shameful by burning the body of the criminal after death (Lev. 20:14; 21:9; 2 Kings 23:16).

Fire is also used to symbolize: God's people victorious over all enemies (Obad. 18); the word of God (Jer. 5:14); the Holy Spirit (Isa. 4:4; Acts 2:3); the zeal of the saints (Pss. 39:3; 119:139); of angels (Heb. 1:7); of lust (Prov. 6:27,28); of wickedness (Isa. 9:18); of the tongue (Jas. 3:6); and of judgment (Jer. 48:45).

The final destiny of all the enemies of God is the "lake of fire" (Rev. 19:20; 20:10). The earth will be consumed by fire (2 Pet. 3:7–12).

See Baptism of Fire; Molech; Lake of Fire.

C. Dale Hill

FIREPAN A utensil made of bronze (Ex. 27:3) or gold (1 Kings 7:50, KJV, "censers") used to carry live coals from the altar of burnt offering (Ex. 27:3; 38:3), as censers for burning incense (Num. 16:6,17), and as trays for collecting the burnt wicks from the tabernacle lamps (Ex. 25:38; 37:23; the "snuffdishes" of the KJV).

FIRKIN A unit of liquid measure (John 2:6). Firkin is an archaic English word that was used to translate a Greek term referring to a measure of approximately ten gallons. See Weights and Measures.

FIRMAMENT The great vault or expanse of sky that separates the upper and lower waters. The firmament was created by God on the second day to separate the "waters from the waters" (Gen. 1:6–7). One use of "heaven" in the Bible is to refer to the ceiling or canopy of the earth. Heaven in this sense is also referred to as the firmament or sky (Gen. 1:8). Into this expanse, God set the sun, moon, and stars (Gen. 1:14–18).

In Genesis 1:6 the firmament separates the mass of waters and divides them into layers. The firmament is mentioned nine times in Genesis, the Psalms, Ezekiel, and Daniel. It is described as bright, transparent like crystal, revealing the handiwork of God, and signifying His seat of power (Pss. 19:1; 150:1; Ezek. 1:22; Dan. 12:3).

Some scholars argue that the Hebrews had a primitive cosmology where the firmament was visualized as a rigid, solid dome—a celestial dam (Gen. 7:11; 2 Sam. 22:8; Job. 26:8; 37:18; Prov. 8:28; Mal. 3:10). Above the firmament flowed the heavenly waters. The firmament was punctuated by grilles or sluices, "windows of heaven" through which rain was released. Others argue that such interpretations are unsound, in that they confuse poetic and figurative language with literal prose. Others say Israel's inspired writers used language of experience and appearance rather than language of precise scientific description.

See Heavens. Paul Robertson

FIRST AND LAST See Alpha and Omega.

FIRSTBORN First son born to a couple and required to be specially dedicated to God. The firstborn son of newly married people was believed to represent the prime of human vigor (Gen. 49:3; Ps. 78:51). In memory of the death of Egypt's firstborn and the preservation of the firstborn of Israel, all the firstborn of Israel, both of man and beast, belonged to Yahweh (Ex. 13:2,15; compare 12:12–16). This meant that the people of Israel attached unusual value to the eldest son and assigned special privileges and responsibilities to him. He was presented to the Lord when he was a month old. Since he belonged to the Lord, it was necessary for the father to buy back the child from the priest at a redemption price not to exceed five shekels (Num. 18:16). The husband of several wives would have to redeem the firstborn of each.

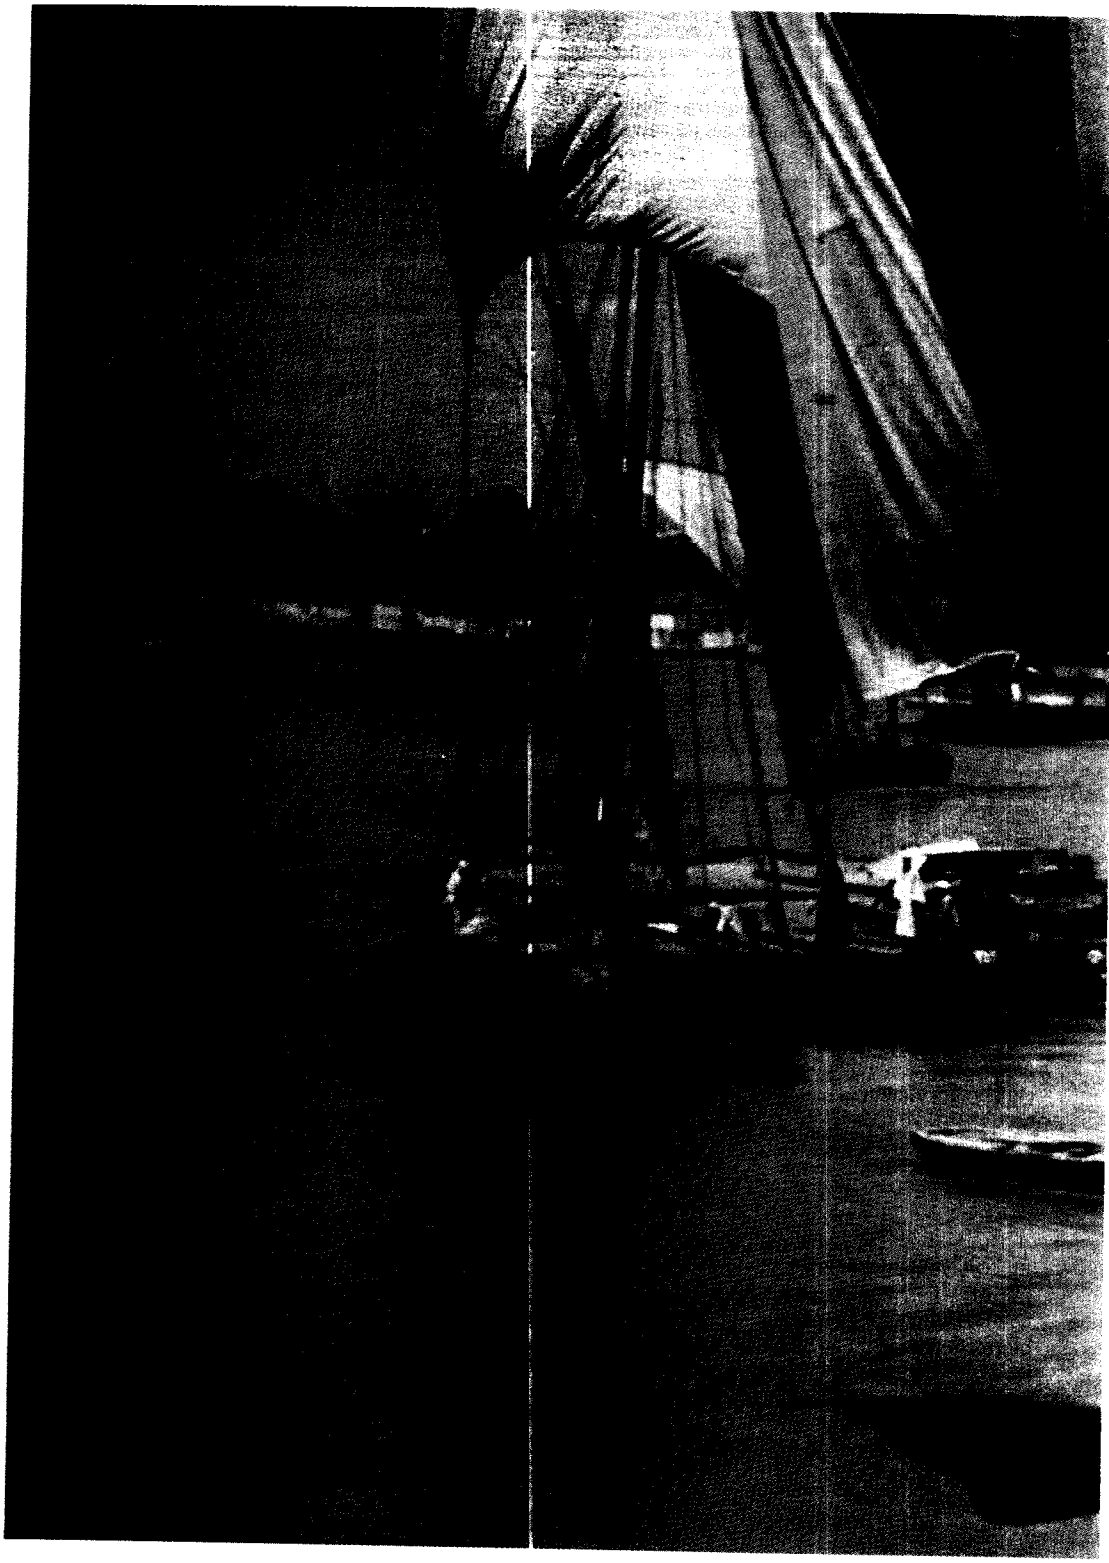
The birthright of a firstborn included a double portion of the estate and leadership of the family. As head of the house after his father's death, the eldest son customarily cared for his mother until her death, and he also provided for his sisters until their marriage. The firstborn might sell his rights as Esau did (Gen. 25:29–34) or forfeit them for misconduct as Reuben did because of incest (Gen. 35:22; 49:3,4).

The firstborn of a clean animal was brought into the sanctuary on the eighth day after birth (Ex. 22:30). If it were without blemish, it was sacrificed (Deut. 15:19; Num. 18:17). If it had a blemish, the priest to whom it was given could eat it as common food outside Jerusalem (Deut. 15:21–23), or it could be eaten at home by its owner. Apparently the firstborn of clean animals were not to be used for any work since they belonged to the Lord (Deut. 15:19).

The firstborn of an unclean animal had to be redeemed by an estimation of the priest, with the addition of one-fifth (Lev. 27:27; Num. 18:15). According to Exodus 13:13; 34:20, the firstborn of an ass was either ransomed by a sheep or lamb, or its neck had to be broken.

Figuratively, Israel was God's "firstborn" (Ex. 4:22; Jer. 31:9) and enjoyed priority status. God compared His relationship to Israel with the relationship of a father and his firstborn son. Within Israel, the tribe of Levi represented the firstborn of the nation in its worship ceremony (Num. 3:40–41; 8:18).

Christ is the "firstborn" of the Father (Heb. 1:6 NIV) by having preeminent position over others in relation to Him. He is also described as "firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. 8:29) and "firstborn of all creation" (Col. 1:15 NAS). Paul (Col. 1:18) and John (Rev. 1:5) refer to Christ as "firstborn from the dead"—the first to rise bodily from the grave and not die again.



Hebrews 12:23 refers to the "church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven." Christian believers, united with and as joint heirs with Christ, enjoy the status of "firstborn" in God's household. Larry Walker

FIRSTFRUITS The choice examples of a crop harvested first and dedicated to God. In accordance with Mosaic law, individual Israelites brought to the house of the Lord "the first (that is, "the best") of the firstfruits of thy land" (Ex. 23:19; 34:26), including grain, wine, and oil, which were used—except for the grain (Lev. 2:14–16)—for the support of the priests (Num. 18:12; Deut. 18:4). According to Deuteronomy 26:1–11, the offering was brought in a basket to the sanctuary for presentation. The Book of Proverbs promises prosperity to those who honor the Lord with the firstfruits (Prov. 3:9).

According to Leviticus 23:9–14, the first sheaf of the new crop of barley was presented as a wave offering before the Lord. This took place on the day after the Passover sabbath and was a public acknowledgment that all came from God and belonged to Him (Num. 28:26; compare Ex. 23:16; 34:22). Not only were the Israelites to be mindful that the land of Canaan was the Lord's possession and that they had only the rights of tenants (Lev. 25:23), but they were also to be aware that the fertility of Canaan's soil was not due to one of the Baals but rather to the Lord's gift of grace.

Israel was described as God's "firstfruits" (Jer. 2:3). Christ in His resurrection is described as the "firstfruits" of them that slept (1 Cor. 15:20,23). The Holy Spirit is spoken of as a "firstfruits" (Rom. 8:23), and believers are also spoken of as "a kind of firstfruits" (Jas. 1:18). The saved remnant within Israel is described as "firstfruits" (Rom. 11:16), as are the 144,000 of the tribulation period (Rev. 14:4). The first converts of an area were designated "firstfruits" (Rom. 16:5; 1 Cor. 16:15). In each case the emphasis was on special dedication and blessing. Larry Walker

Fishing boats on the Nile River in Egypt.

F

FIRST RAIN KJV term at Deuteronomy 11:14 for the early rain. See Rain.

FISH, FISHING Animals living in water and breathing through gills; the profession and/or practice of catching fish to supply a family or society's need for food. Fish abounded in the inland waters of Palestine, was well as in the Mediterranean.

Old Testament Fish are mentioned often in the Bible but not by the different kinds. Fish were a favorite food and a chief source of protein (Num. 11:5; Neh. 13:16). The law regarded all fish with fins and scales as clean. Water animals that did not have fins and scales were unclean (Lev. 11:9–12).

Methods of catching fish included angling with a hook (Job 41:1), harpoons and spears (Job 41:7), use of dragnets (John 21:8), and thrown hand nets (Matt. 4:18). Fish caught in the Mediterranean were brought to ports such as Tyre and Sidon. The Sea of Chinnereth or Galilee was also a fishing center. The fish were preserved in salt and brought to Jerusalem where they were sold at a specially named "Fish Gate" in the city. The strong currents of the Jordan River carried many fish to the Dead Sea where they died (Ezek. 47:7–11).

References to fishing as an occupation are rare in the Old Testament because, for the most part, in Old Testament times the Mediterranean coast was controlled by the Philistines and Phoenicians. The Israelites depended largely on foreign trade for their fish (Neh. 13:16). Two Old Testament texts (Song of Sol. 7:4; Isa. 19:10) speak of fishpools and fish ponds, possibly an indication of commercially raised fish or of fish farming.

The most famous Old Testament fish was the great fish of the Book of Jonah (Jonah 1:17), one God prepared especially for the occasion and one whose species the Old Testament does not indicate.

New Testament During New Testament times commercial fishing businesses were conducted on the Sea of Galilee by fishermen organized in guilds (Luke 5:7,11). Fishermen were hard workers, crude in manner, rough in speech and in their treatment of others (John 18:10). Fishermen owned their ships, took hirelings into their service, and sometimes joined to form companies (Mark 1:20; Luke 5:7).

A building stone from Ephesus carved with the figure of a fish.

Fish provided food for the common people (Matt. 14:17; 15:34). The risen Lord ate fish with the disciples in Jerusalem (Luke 24:42) and by the Sea of Galilee (John 21:13). The primary method of preparing fish was broiling (John 21:9). The most famous New Testament fish was the one used to pay the Temple tax for Jesus and Peter (Matt. 17:27).

Theological The Bible contains numerous figurative uses of fish and fishing. Human helplessness is compared to fish taken in a net (Eccl. 9:12; Hab. 1:14). Fish caught in a net symbolized God's judgment (Ps. 66:11; Ezek. 32:3). Jesus mentioned fishing when He called disciples to be witnesses (Matt. 4:18–19). Jesus compared the kingdom of heaven to a net thrown into the sea and loaded with fish of many varieties (Matt. 13:47).

In early Christian churches, the Greek word for fish (ichthus) came to be interpreted as a cipher for Jesus. The first letter of each of the Greek words for "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour" spell ichthus. We do not know when this cipher was first used; but once the identification was made, the fish became a standard Christian symbol. Gary Hardin

FISH GATE A north gate of the second quarter of Jerusalem (Zeph. 1:10) mentioned in connection with fortifications built by Manasseh (2 Chron. 33:14). The gate was rebuilt during the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 3:3; 12:39). The name is perhaps derived from the proximity of the gate to the fish market. (Compare Neh. 13:16–22.)

FISHHOOK A curved or bent device of bone or iron in biblical times used for catching or holding fish (Job 41:1–2; Isa. 19:8—KJV, "angle"; Matt. 17:27). Habakkuk described God's people as helpless fish who would be captured by hooks (1:15) and nets. Amos 4:2 refers to the practice of ancient conquerors of leading captives with hooks through their lips. Such was the fate of Manasseh according to one interpretation (2 Chron. 33:11, NAS, NIV, TEV).

FITCHES KJV term for two different plants. The first is black cummin (Isa. 28:25,27). Ezekiel 4:9 refers to either spelt, an inferior type of wheat (NAS, NIV, TEV), or else vetches (REB), a plant of the bean family. See Plants in the Bible.

FLAG KJV term for a water plant generally translated as reed (Ex. 2:3,5; Job 8:11) or rush (Isa. 19:6) by modern translations. See Plants in the Bible.

FLAGON A large, two handled jar for storing wine (Isa. 22:24 KJV; Ex. 25:29; 37:16; REB, NRSV). The Hebrew term ashishah translated as flagon by the KJV (2 Sam. 6:19; 1 Chron. 16:3; Song of Sol. 2:5; Hos. 3:1) refers to a cake of raisins, often used as offerings to idols.

Statue of an aged woman holding in her lap a flagon of wine.

FLAGSTAFF A pole on which a standard is displayed (Isa. 30:17). The same Hebrew term is translated mast elsewhere (Isa. 33:23; Ezek. 27:5). The REB used the translation mast at Isaiah 30:17 as well. The NAS preferred the translation flag for this text though the margin note, pole, can account for all occurrences of the term.

FLASK A general term translators use to describe vessels. It does not appear in KJV. The term refers to a small container of perfumed oil in 2 Kings 9:1–3. The same Hebrew word appears in 1 Sam. 10:1. At Jeremiah 19:1 (RSV) refers to an earthenware water jar or jug. The vessel perhaps had a narrow neck making it impossible to mend (19:10). This Hebrew word recurs in 1 Kings 14:3. At Matthew 25:4 small containers for lamp oil are meant. The Greek term appears only here in the New Testament. Luke 7:37 refers to a small alabaster container such as had been used for expensive perfumes for thousands of years.

FLAX The plant (Linum usitatissimum) used to make linen. The fibers of the flax stem are the most ancient of textile fibers. Flax was cultivated by the Egyptians before the Exodus (Ex. 9:31) and by the Canaanites before the Conquest (Josh. 2:6). The making of linen was a common household chore in Biblical times. Proverbs 31:13 described the virtuous wife as one who sought wool and flax. The linen making process involved pulling and drying flax stalks (often on rooftops, Josh. 2:6). The stalks were deseeded, soaked until the fibers were loosened (retted), and redried. A hackle, a comb or board with long teeth, was used to separate the outer fibers from the inner core. Further combing (carding) cleansed and ordered the fibers so that they might be spun into thread for weaving (Isa. 19:9). The remaining short, tangled fibers (the tow) were used to weave a course fabric or make twine (Judg. 16:9; Isa. 1:31).

Flax fibers were also used to make torches and lamp wicks. Isaiah 43:17 pictures armies as a wick which the Lord would extinguish. In Isaiah 42:3 the Servant of the Lord is one who will not quench a dimly burning wick. The picture suggests one who will help and comfort the powerless rather than bring harsh judgment. Matthew understood Jesus' ministry as the fulfillment of this Scripture (Matt. 12:20).

FLEA See Insects.

FLEET A group of ships. Solomon built a fleet of ships at Ezion-Geber with the help of Hiram of Tyre (1 Kings 9:26–27; 10:11,22). The KJV translated fleet as navy or navy of ships. Solomon's fleet was used for commercial rather than military purposes. See Ezion-Geber; Ships, Sailors, and Navigation.

FLESH The skin and/or meat of animals and humans used to represent human dedication to physical desires rather than to obedience to God.
Literal use It often refers to the muscular part of the body, both of humans (Gen. 2:21; Job 10:11) and animals (Deut. 14:8; 1 Cor. 15:39). Even dead, a person is still called flesh (1 Sam. 17:44) until the body returns as dust to the earth (Eccl. 12:7).
Food and Sacrifice The flesh of animals is used for food by humans (Gen. 9:3–4; 1 Sam. 2:13,15), while human flesh may be eaten by animals (Gen. 40:19; Rev. 19:17–18). The flesh of animals is used for sacrifice (Ex. 29:31).
Body The term "flesh" can denote the human body in its entirety—the part referring to the whole (Judg. 8:7; 1 Kings 21:27; Eph. 5:29; Heb. 9:13). It can also denote the opposite where the whole refers to the part, especially when referring to the sexual organs such as the circumcision of the flesh (Gen. 17:14; Gal. 6:13; Eph. 2:11; Phil. 3:3; Col. 2:13; compare Lev. 15:2, 3, 7, 19). It may signify a comprehensive sense whereby "all flesh" refers to all of humanity (Joel 2:28; Matt. 24:22) or including both the human and animal creation (Gen. 6:13, 17; 7:16; Lev. 17:14).

Relationship Adam said of Eve's creation that she is the "bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh" (Gen. 2:23; compare 29:14) denoting a kinship between the two, thus Adam and Eve were regarded as one flesh (Gen. 2:24; Matt. 19:5; 1 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 5:31). Jesus was related to David with reference to the flesh (Rom. 1:3).

Whole Person The term may denote the entire person and not just the physical aspects. It can refer to the outward expression of a person paralleling the inward action of the person as seen in Psalm 63:1 where the "soul thirsts" and the "flesh faints" NRSV and in Psalm 84:2 where the "heart and flesh sing for joy" (NRSV). Peter, quoting from Psalm 16, paralleled the flesh with the heart and soul (Acts 2:26–27). Paul spoke of his sufferings for Christ as his flesh suffering (Col. 1:24). Hence, the biblical view asserts a dualism of man but not in the Greek sense. Greek philosophers saw the soul, heart, or mind distinguished from and superior to the flesh. The biblical view sees the inward and outward aspects of man very closely tied together. Hence, the psalmist (Ps. 73:26) referring to his "flesh and heart" sees the person in its entirety. Paul's reference to the flesh denotes all of humanity when he stated that no flesh is justified by the works of the law (Rom. 3:20; Gal. 2:16).

Theological Significance Biblically, the flesh is viewed as the created and natural humanity. It is not automatically sinful, but it is weak, limited, and temporal. Such qualities make it vulnerable to sin. Adam and Eve were created as fleshly human beings. They succumbed to the temptations of Satan, who promised them that they would be like God, knowing good and evil (Gen. 3:5). Because of the limited perspective and the weakness of the flesh, Adam and Eve accepted Satan's lie. The weakness of the flesh is seen in the Garden of Gethsemane where Jesus found the disciples sleeping. He enjoined them to watch and pray lest they enter into temptation for "the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak" (Matt. 26:41; Mark 14:38). Here, the flesh was not sinful, but rather limited and weak due to fatigue, and easy to succumb to sleep.

In its weakness and limitation, the flesh tends to yield to the temptation of what seems good naturally. Since sin promises pleasure and fulfillment, the natural propensity is for the flesh to yield to sin's promises. Thus, doing what comes naturally is yielding to sin's will. This is contrary to God's will and commands. Those who follow the impulses of the flesh are governed by the flesh and are characterized as those who live "after the flesh" (Rom. 8:5). They are those who yield to sinful passions and produce works contrary to God and His law (Gal. 5:16–17, 19–21,23–24; compare 1 John 2:16; 1 Pet. 4:2; 2 Pet. 2:10). Being enslaved to the desires of the flesh (Eph. 2:3), they have the mindset of the flesh (Rom. 8:5–7). Hence, the natural person controlled by the flesh does not and cannot submit to God's will or please God (Rom. 8:7–8; 1 Cor. 2:14; compare Gen. 6:13). The limitation of the flesh appears clearly in the human inability to discern God's revelation of Himself (Matt. 16:17; Gal. 1:13–24). Only death succeeds in convincing those who live according to the flesh of the fleeting, temporal nature of the flesh (Rom. 6:23; 8:6,13). Flesh-driven people are the children of wrath (Eph. 2:3). They cannot inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9–10; Gal. 5:19–21; Eph. 2:11–12; 5:5).

Flesh is weak but not naturally sinful. Christ came in the "likeness" of sinful flesh (John 1:14; Rom. 8:3; Heb. 4:15) to redeem those who are in sinful flesh. That is, Christ became a flesh and blood person but did not give in to the desires of the flesh. Instead, perfect in life and death, He died to provide salvation for all other persons, since they do give in to fleshly desires. Those who trust in God's provision in Christ remain physically "in" the flesh but do not live "according to" the flesh (Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:22–24). They are characterized as those who are not in the flesh but in the Spirit (Rom. 8:9) because they are governed not by the flesh but by the Spirit (Rom. 8:6, 11–17). They are those who are led by the Spirit to put to death the deeds of the flesh, not the flesh itself (Rom. 8:13; Gal. 5:24). Believers must be careful not to be tricked into thinking that they have any obligation to the flesh and its sinful, selfish desires (Rom. 8:12–13; Gal. 3:3). The flesh serves as a base of operation for sin (Rom. 7:8, 11) and thus enslaves a person to sin (Rom. 6:15–23; 7:25). This does not imply that flesh is automatically sinful, but its history in Adam shows the weakness of flesh and its strong tendency to yield to the commands of sin.

In conclusion, the term "flesh" can be a neutral term referring to created humans and animals who are limited and weak, or it can refer to humans controlled by sin and its passions.

See Anthropology; Body. Harold W. Hoehner

FLESH AND SPIRIT Two important terms often contrasted with one another in referring to human existence. Bible readers often suppose that any mention of the word "flesh" is automatically in contrast with the concept of "spirit" and is, therefore, intrinsically evil. However, the early appearances of the word "flesh" in the Bible contrast with spirit only in the sense that the flesh is material substance, while the spirit is immaterial substance. The first mention of flesh occurs in Genesis 2:21, the account of the creation of woman from the side of man. The Bible simply records that God closed up Adam's flesh. Adam's own judgment in Genesis 2:23 was that this is now "bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh."

Thus Adam recognized that whatever he was, Eve was the same. Genesis 2:24 suggests that the man and his wife would become "one flesh," apparently indicating the sexual as well as the psychological union. All that God created in Genesis is called "very good." Therefore, it may be safely concluded that the concept of "flesh" as such is not an evil concept but a part of the artistry and design of God.

Nevertheless, it remains true that the Bible frequently contrasts flesh with spirit. Once our first parents had sinned, all subsequent offspring were born with a tendency toward evil that manifests itself particularly in the flesh. Hence, we are told in Mark 14:38 (NAS) that "the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." Thus, we are introduced to the fact that many of the temptations to which the human family is subject are those that relate to the flesh. We are, therefore, instructed not to fulfill "the lust of the flesh" (1 John 2:16). We are warned, in fact, that "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit" (Gal. 5:17). Perhaps the fifth chapter of Galatians, verses 16 and 17, focuses on the problem more decisively than any other verses. Paul wrote,

> "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

The walk of obedience to the Holy Spirit, who is enshrined in the human spirit of twiceborn men, is the only way to avoid allowing the flesh to rule. Essentially, the emphasis that Paul provides is not intended to suggest that the Spirit is good and the flesh is evil, but rather that the flesh should never rule the spiritual life of a man. Instead, the flesh must be subjugated and made useful to the spiritual purposes and goals of humanity.

Sometimes the Bible speaks of carnality. The word translated carnal, for example, in Romans 8:7, in which we are told that the "carnal mind" is enmity against God is a derivative of the Greek word for "flesh." Some Christians are carnal Christians (1 Cor. 3:1) meaning that, while they have been saved, they nevertheless are ruled more by their fleshly desires than by the Spirit.

See Anthropology; Flesh; Spirit. W. A. Criswell

FLESH HOOK A large fork used for handling large pieces of meat, especially at the sacrificial altar. Those in the tabernacle were of brass (Ex. 27:3; 38:3), those in the Temple of bronze (2 Chron. 4:16) or gold (1 Chron. 28:17).

FLESH POT A kettle used for cooking meat. The murmuring of the Israelites against Moses (Ex. 16:3) included the exaggerated claim that they customarily relaxed by the flesh pots in Egypt and had more than enough bread. In the Ancient Near East meat was not part of the common people's regular diet.

FLINT Flint translates three Hebrew terms which are applied loosely to any hard, compact rock or specifically to nearly opaque, cryptocrystaline varieties of quartz. Flint may be flaked to give a very sharp, hard edge. Flint tools, including scrapers, axheads, knives (Ex. 4:25; Josh. 5:2–3 REB, NIV, NAS, NRSV, TEV), arrow heads, sickle blades, and other tools were used from the earliest prehistoric times.

The hardness of flint is proverbial. God's miraculous provision for the Israelites in the wilderness is pictured as water (Deut. 8:15; Ps. 114:8) or oil (Deut. 32:13) flowing from flinty rock. God protected the prophet Ezekiel by making his forehead harder than flint (Ezek. 3:9). A face set like flint pictured the determination of the Servant of the Lord (Isa. 50:7; compare Luke 9:51). Zechariah 7:12 pictures the people's unwillingness to repent as hearts of flint.

FLOAT KJV translation of two Hebrew terms (1 Kings 5:9; 2 Chron. 2:16) rendered raft by modern speech translations. The pine and cedar logs for construction of the Temple were lashed together to form rafts which were floated down the coast.

FLOCK Sheep and goats under the care of a shepherd (Gen. 30:31–32). God' people are sometimes described as sheep without a shepherd (Num. 27:17; Ezek. 34:5,8; Matt. 9:36; Mark 6:34), that is, in need of leaders who would rule them justly and nurture them spiritually. God's people can be described as a flock shepherded by God (Ps. 100:3; Jer. 23:3; Ezek. 34:31) or by Christ, the "great Shepherd of the sheep" (Heb. 13:20; compare John 10:11; 1 Peter 5:4).

Flock of sheep in central Israel.

The unity of all Christians is pictured by the image of one flock composed of many folds (John 10:16). Flocks can refer to individual congregations under the care of a pastor (1 Peter 5:2–3).

Judgment is sometimes pictured as the sorting of a flock. In Ezekiel 34 the fat, strong sheep (the opressive leaders of Israel) are separated from the weak sheep that they victimized (34:16–17,20–21). In Matthew 25:32–46 sheep are separated from goats on the basis of concrete acts of love shown to the needy.

FLOGGING Punishment by repeated lashes or blows of a whip or rod(s). The Old Testament recognized flogging as a form of punishment (Deut. 25:1–3) though limiting it to 40 blows so that the neighbor who was punished would not be degraded. Children were disciplined with rods (Prov. 23:13–14). Floggings were sometimes inflicted unjustly (Prov. 17:26; Isa. 53:5).

Jesus warned His disciples that they would face flogging (Matt. 10:17; beatings, Mark 13:9) in the synagogue. Paul had believers flogged in his days as a persecutor of the church (Acts 22:19–20). The apostles were flogged by order of the Sanhedrin (Acts 5:40). Paul received the "forty lashes less one" at the hands of the synagogue five times (2 Cor. 11:24). Paul was also beaten with rods three times (11:25), perhaps at the hands of Gentile officials as at Philippi (Acts 16:22–23).

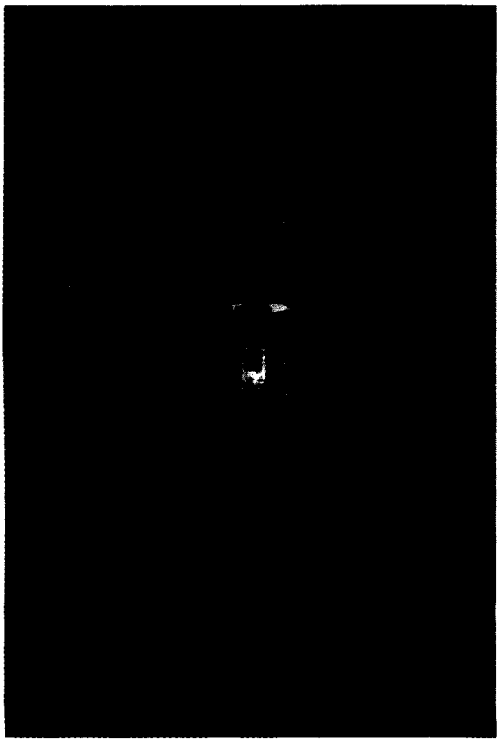
FLOOD A miraculous deluge of water God used to discipline His world made evil through human sin.

Its Structural Background The literary theme of a flood was a natural motif for the Sumerian and Akkadian peoples who resided between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers in a plain prone to flood. The oft-repeated flood experience found literary expression in a Sumerian flood story and in two or more Akkadian ones: the Atrahasis Epic and the Epic of Gilgamesh. The Akkadian and Hebrew stories parallel each other in the following ways: the naming of the hero (Utnapishtim/Noah), the divine announcement of a flood, instructions to build a ship, the inclusion of animals in the ship, the dispatch of birds, the sacrifice the hero offered after the waters subsided, and other related details.

It must be admitted that the identification of a flood that gave rise to the Sumero-Akkadian and Hebrew Flood accounts has proved illusive. In every geological or archaeological endeavor to use sedimentary deposits to develop a time frame for such a catastrophic deluge and all efforts to recover an ark have failed. Such scientific efforts have not proven the Flood narrative.

The drama of Israel's Flood story is the drama of God reacting to the habitual sin of His creatures. Scene after scene exhibits a disclosure of God, the moral nature of His acts, His self-consistent righteousness, His ever abiding love, His determined will to extricate humanity from its self-inflicted ruin, His determination never to see wrong as ultimately victorious, but to see the fulfilment of His purposes finally and fully.

To an ancient story form known widely in the Ancient Near East, the inspired Hebrew writer joined Israel's theological affirmation to form an educational means to teach the community of Israel the ways of Yahweh (Gen. 18:19).



Theological Proclamation of the Flood God took account of earth's wickedness, the persistent human bent toward evil, the corruption that filled the earth with injustice. Still, God did not overlook Noah. Self-consistency demanded justice equal to the wickedness and prompted a determination to blot out mankind. This was a matter of deep regret and sorrow, but the purpose invested in human creation was not to be thwarted. God announced His intentions to Noah and instructed him to build an enormous ark for himself, his family, and the lower orders—even for unclean, creeping things! The expansiveness of the ark was expressive of the greatness of God's love; the extension of safety to "every" type of fauna elaborates the wideness of His concern. The destruction of all people existing before the Flood indicated the abhorrence of evil. The rescue of the family of Noah shows God's yearning love to save. When Noah offered a sacrifice to Yahweh after the Flood, the act prompted God to exercise His concern for the new race. Accordingly, He vowed never to doom the world again despite the enormous, continuing evil of the human creatures, an evil inconsistent with all God made and intended. Rather than destroy, God affirmed the continuity of seasons without respite. Moreover, the narrative pictured the equal rights and opportunities for all members of the new race based on each person representing the image of God. Most notable of all was the covenant of continued earthly security for mankind and the rainbow as the symbol of that everlasting covenant.

If God saw the evil in the earth, He saw also the righteous Noah—blameless in his generation, one who walked with God. Noah had found grace in the eyes of God. Informed, instructed, provided for, covenanted with to become the head of a new race and blessed to be productive and to increase on earth, Noah was made the mediator of a world-encompassing covenant where the image of God would guarantee equality in society. Here the Flood account highlights a person's potential: to walk with God, to be blameless and righteous in a wicked world, to be a mediator of divine grace possible for all people, and to know that the future was safe and sure by the oath God had sworn.

FLOUR Fine-crushed and sifted grain used in making bread (Ex. 29:2; 1 Sam. 28:24), often translated as fine or choice flour. Typically meal, which was ground course from the whole kernels of grain together with the bran, was used to make bread (Lev. 2:16; 1 King 17:12). The first fruits cereal offering was of course grain since it represented the common table fare. Most often cereal offerings were of fine flour (Lev. 2:1,2,4,5,7), ground from the inner kernels of wheat only, the best part of the grain (Deut. 32:14). Fine flour was a luxury item (2 Kings 7:1; Ezek. 16:13; Rev. 18:13) such as might be baked as bread for an honored guest (Gen. 18:6; 1 Sam. 28:24).

An ancient flour mill in Capernaum.

FLOWERS Colorful blooms containing a plant's reproductive organs. Flowers grew abundantly during springtime in Palestine. Flowers grew mostly in open fields, since flower gardens as we now know them were not cultivated. See Garden. Flowers grew in crop fields and in groves of trees around houses. Numerous kinds of wild flowers could be found in the plains and mountains of Palestine. The words "flower" or "flowers" refer to (1) colorful blossoms, (2) towering plants, (3) open flowers, and (4) flourishing flowers. In Palestine the warm spring temperatures joined with the winter rains to produce beautiful, blooming plants and flowers.

(1) Almond blossoms (Gen. 43:11; Ex. 25:33–34; 37:19–20; Num. 17:8; Eccl. 12:5). This tree, a member of the rose family, had beautiful pink blossoms that the Israelites used as models for engravers to adorn the cups of the golden lampstand.

(2) Bulrush (Ex. 2:3; Job 8:11; Isa. 18:2; 35:7), sometimes is referred to as "flag," "papyrus" (NIV), "reed" (NAS), or "rush" (NEB). This tall, slender reedlike plant grew along the banks of the Nile River and provided the earliest known material for making paper and covering the frames of boats (Isa. 18:2).

Another type of ancient flour mill from the Roman period. The flour falls into the wooden box.

(3) Calamus leaves (Ex. 30:23; Song of Sol. 4:14; Isa. 43:24; Jer. 6:20; Ezek. 27:19). The leaves from this plant were a sweet-smelling cane or ginger grass. The leaves, when crushed, gave a much relished ginger smell. It was apparently imported from India for use in worship (Jer. 6:20). Several Hebrew expressions lie behind "calamus." The basic Hebrew term qaneh means, "cane." It is modified in Exodus 30:23 by the word for balsam, apparently referring to sweet cane or Cymbopogon. A similar plant may be meant by qaneh tob in Jeremiah 6:20, tob meaning either "good" or "perfumed." Elsewhere, qaneh occurs without modification and may refer to different types of cane. For example, in 1 Kings 14:15 the giant reed Arundo donax may be meant. Compare Job 40:21; Isaiah 19:6; 35:7.

(4) Camphire flowers (sometimes referred to as Henna) (Song of Sol. 1:14; 4:13; 7:11—see REB). The camphire was a small plant or shrub that bore beautiful cream-colored flowers that hung in clusters like grapes and were highly scented. It was used for orange dye.

(5) Caperberry flowers (Eccl. 12:5). The caperberry was a prickly shrub which produced lovely flowers and small, edible berries as it grew in rocks and walls. It was supposed to stimulate sexual desires and powers. KJV, NRSV, NIV, TEV translate the Hebrew term as "desire" in Ecclesiastes 12:5, but REB and NAS follow recent Hebrew dictionaries in translating, "caperberry."

Cyclamen, pictured here, is one of the flowers of Israel.

The blossoms and fruit of a pomegranate tree growing in Israel.

(6) Cockle flowers (Job 31:40) were the purplish red flowers of a noxious weed called the "cockle" or "darnel" (Lolium tenulentum). This plant grew abundantly in Palestinian grain fields. Its Hebrew name is spelled like the Hebrew word for "stink" and thus is translated "stinkweed" by NAS.

(7) Crocus (Song of Sol. 2:1; Isa. 35:1) was a spring flowering herb with a long yellow floral tube tinged with purple specks or stripes. It is sometimes translated as rose. Technically, it was probably the asphodel (REB).

(8) Fitch (Isa. 28:25–27) KJV calls this flower the "fitch," but the better designation is probably the nutmeg flower. This flower was a member of the buttercup family and grew wildly in most Mediterranean lands. The plant was about two feet high and had bright blue flowers. The pods of the plant were used like pepper. Technically the plant is probably dill (NRSV, NAS, REB) or more precisely black cummin (Nigella sativa). NIV translates, "caraway."

(9) Leek (Num. 11:5), a member of the lily family, was a bulbous biennial plant with broad leaves. The bases of the leaves were eaten as food. The bulbs of this plant were used as seasoning. Israel relished the memory of leeks (Allium porrum) from Egypt.

(10) Lily (1 Kings 7:19,22,26; 2 Chron. 4:5; Songs of Sol. 2:1,2,16; 5:13; 6:2,3; 7:2; Hos. 14:5). The term "lily" covered a wide range of flowers. The most common was Lilius candidum. The lily mentioned in Song of Solomon 5:13 refers to a rare variety of lily that had a bloom similar to a glowing flame. The "lily of the valley" (Song 2:1,2,16) is known as the Easter lily. The lily mentioned in Hosea 14:5 is more akin to an iris. The beautiful water lily or lotus was a favorite flower in Egypt and was used to decorate Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 7:19,22,26; 2 Chron. 4:5). The "lilies of the field" (Matt. 6:28; Luke 12:27) were probably numerous kinds of colorful spring flowers such as the crown anemone.

(11) Mandrake (Gen. 30:14–16; Song of Sol.7:13). The mandrake, a herb of the nightshade family, had a rosette of large leaves and mauve flowers during winter and fragrant and round yellow fruit during spring. The mandrake grew in fields and rough ground. It was considered to give sexual powers and probably can be identified as Atropa Mandragora, often used for medicine in ancient times.

(12) Mint (Matt. 23:23; Luke 11:42) was an aromatic plant with hairy leaves and dense white or pink flowers, probably jucande olens. Mint was used to flavor food. The Jews scattered it on the floors of houses and synagogues for its sweet smell.

(13) Myrtle branches (Neh. 8:15; Isa. 41:19; 55:13; Zech. 1:8–11). Myrtle bushes (Myrtus communis), which grew on Palestinian hillsides, had fragrant evergreen leaves and scented white flowers. The flowers on the myrtle branches were used as perfumes.

(14) Pomegranate blossoms (Ex 28:33, Num. 13:23; 1 Sam. 14:2; 1 Kings 7:18) from the pomegranate tree (Punica granatum) had dark green leaves with large orange-red blossoms. Decorators carved pomegranates on public buildings. The fruit symbolized fertility and was used to tan leather and for medicine.

(15) Rose (Song of Sol. 2:1; Isa. 35:1). Several varieties of roses could be found in Palestine. The rose was a member of the crocus family. Traditionally, what is considered a rose is not the flower mentioned in Scripture. The "rose" is more generally considered an asphodel. See Crocus above.

(16) Saffron (Song of Sol. 4:14). Saffron (Curcuma longa or Crocus sativas) is a species of crocus. In ancient times the petals of the saffron flower were used to perfume banquet halls. The type meant in Song of Solomon 4:14 may be an exotic plant imported from India.

Other Though not specifically mentioned by kind in the Bible, other varieties of flowers grew in Palestine. Appearing as early as January were the pink, white, and lilac blossoms of the cyclamen. Dominating many landscapes were the various shades of reds and pinks of the crown anemones, poppies, and mountain tulips. Some short-lived summer flowers were the yellow and white daisylike chrysanthemums.

Figurative Uses of "Flowers" The striking manner in which flowers burst into bloom for a few short weeks in spring and then faded into withered leaves was viewed as an illustration of the transient nature of human life (Job 14:2; Ps. 103:15; Isa. 40:6; 1 Pet. 1:24). The flowers of spring (Song of Sol. 2:12) signify renewal. The "fading flower" of Isaiah 28:1 represented the downfall of God's disobedient people. The "lilies of the field" (Matt. 6:28) grew unassumingly and without any outward signs of anxiety. If God takes care of the lilies, so God will take care of His children who need not worry uselessly. The phrase "flower of her age" (1 Cor. 7:36) described a girl reaching womanhood. The rich pass away just as quickly as the period of time for blooming flowers passes away (Jas. 1:10–11). Gary Hardin

Israel's Star of Bethlehem flower.

FLUTE See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

FLUX, BLOODY KJV term for dysentery (Acts 28:8). See Dysentery.

FODDER Feed for domestic animals. The Hebrew suggests a mixed feed, either of several grains (though barley was the common grain for livestock, Judg. 19:19; 1 Kings 4:28) or a mix of finely cut straw, barley, and beans formed into balls. Silage refers to fodder which has been moistened and allowed to ferment slightly (Isa. 30:24 NRSV). Fodder was salted to satisfy the animals' need for salt and to give a tastier feed.

FOOD When Jesus was Himself a guest at a meal, He referred to the two main meals of the day: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind" (Luke 14:12–13). There were only two main meals for the Jewish family. Breakfast was taken informally soon after getting up and normally consisted of a flat bread cake and a piece of cheese, dried fruit, or olives. Sometimes the bread was wrapped round the appetizer, and sometimes the bread was split open to make a bag where the morsels might be placed. To eat bread for a meal in such a way was so natural and normal that "eating bread" came to have the same meaning as "having a meal." "Give us this day our daily bread" is a request that God will meet our need for daily food (Matt. 6:11). It was quite usual for the men and boys to leave the house for their work, eating their breakfast as they went, while mother, daughters and the younger children were kept at home. There was no midday meal as such, although a rest may have been taken for a drink and a piece of fruit. When Ruth stopped with the reapers she ate parched corn moistened with wine (Ruth 2:14 NRSV).

While the men in the family were at work, the women and children would, among their daily activities, prepare for the evening meal. Water for cooking was collected by the older girls who drew it from the well or spring at the beginning of the day before it began to get hot, and the goats were milked too. Water collection was quite a serious business as well-water could be polluted by animal usage, and house run-off from mud roofs was not normally safe to drink. Water collected, the girls then went to the market to purchase food for the meal. Fresh vegetables were bought from traders who sat with their produce around them on the ground of the market place, and if needed, olive oil and seasoning. Some families collected bread from the village baker who owned a communal oven, returning the bread which each family had left as dough the night before (see Hosea 7:4–6). Other families got on with baking their own bread on their return home. The house had in the meantime been cleaned (Luke 11:25) and the washing done. Grain had been crushed in the handmill and the fire fanned so that it was hot enough for baking bread. After the midday rest, the evening meal was prepared on the fire; a vegetable or lentil stew was made in the large cooking pot, herbs and salt being used to add to the flavor. Only on special occasions such as a sacrifice or festival day was any meat added to the stew, and only on very rare occasions was the meat roasted or game or fish eaten. When the time came for the meal, the pot was placed on a rug on the floor (Gen. 18:8), the whole family sitting round. A blessing or thanksgiving was made and each membeer of the family used a piece of bread as a scoop to take up some of the contents of the pot because there was no cutlery. (Communal dipping into the pot made it essential that hands were washed before the meal). Later in history a table and benches sometimes replaced the rug on the ground (1 Kings 13:20), but the communal pot was still at the center. At the close of the meal, fruit would be eaten and everything washed down with wine.

Formal meals were always preceded by an invitation (which was politely refused as a matter of course). The host then insisted that people came until the invitations were accepted (Luke 14:16–24). When the guests arrived, their feet were washed by the most humble slaves, and their sandals were removed (John 13:3–11). This was to protect the carpeted floors from dirt as well as to make it more confortable to sit on one's heels. Their heads were anointed with olive oil scented with spices. The oil was rubbed into the hair (Luke 7:36–50). Drinking water was then provided. In large houses the special guest moved to the "top table" in a room with a raised floor and would sit on the right-hand side of the host. The second guest would sit on the host's left-hand side (see Luke 14:7–11; 20:46).

One did not so much "sit" at table as recline at table. Couches were drawn up to the tables, head towards the table and cushions provided so that guests could rest on their left arm and use the right to serve themselves from the table. Using this arrangement it was possible for the servants to continue to wash the feet (Luke 7:46), but to make conversation persons had to turn almost on their backs and literally be "on the bosom" of the person to the left (John 13:23–25). In the time of Jesus, the triclinium or couch arranged around three sides of a table, was the height of fashion. The open side was used by servants so that they had access to the tables to bring in or to take away dishes of food.

The meal started with a drink of wine diluted with honey. The main dinner which followed was of three courses, beautifully arranged on trays. There were no forks, so guests ate with their fingers except when soup, eggs, or shellfish were served. Then spoons were used. Finally there was a dessert of pastry and fruit. During the meal the host provided entertainment of music, dancing (individual, expressive dances), and readings from poetry and other literature. Such an occasion was an important local event, and people of humbler means were able to look in from the darkness outside (Luke 7:37). When the meal was completed, there was a long period devoted to talking. Stories were related, and gossip was shared. Such festivities were always the envy of poorer people who tried to copy them in their own way. Martha was probably trying to do something of this sort at Bethany when Jesus reminds her "but one thing is needful " (Luke 10:42).

Whether such meals were formal or informal, abundant or scant, there were always food laws which had to be observed. Only animals which chewed the cud and had divided hoofs, fish which had fins and scales, and birds which did not eat carrion could be eaten (Lev. 11:1–22), and the practice grew that soups should not be made with a mixture of vegetables (Deut. 9:9) and meat and milk dishes were not to be taken together (see Ex. 23:19). Ralph Gower

FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS A cause of controversy in the early church centering on what Christians were permitted to eat.

"Food offered to idols" is a translation of a single Greek word which has also been rendered "things offered unto idols" (KJV) and "meat sacrificed to idols" (NIV). The identification of the object of the offering by the term "idol" suggests that it was a name which originated outside first-century paganism. It reflects the perspective and conclusion of someone who spoke as a Jew or Christian.

Pagan sacrifices could be thought of as typically consisting of three portions. One small part would be used in the sacrificial ritual. A larger portion would be reserved for the use of the priests or other temple personnel. The largest part would be retained by the worshiper to be used in one of two ways. The one who offered the sacrifice sometimes used the remaining portion as the main course in a meal which might be served at or near the pagan temple. It is this type of religio-social event that stands behind the question raised by the letter (1 Cor. 7:1; 8:1) from the church at Corinth to Paul and consequently as the background for Paul's response in 1 Corinthians 8. The second method of disposing of the worshiper's portion would be to offer it for sale at the local marketplace. Meat that was sold in this fashion would be bought and then served as a part of a regular family meal. This situation is reflected in Paul's comments in 1 Cor. 10:23—11:1.

Robert Byrd

FOOL, FOOLISHNESS, AND FOLLY Translations of several uncomplimentary words which appear approximately 360 times throughout the Old and New Testaments to describe unwise and ungodly people. The words are especially predominant in the Wisdom Literature of the Old Testament. Persons who do not possess wisdom are called "fools"; their behavior is described as "folly." The picture which emerges from the biblical material is quite simple: folly is the opposite of wisdom, and a fool is the opposite of a wise person. Both wisdom and folly are depicted as philosophies or perspectives on life. The religious person chooses wisdom, whereas the non-religious person opts for folly. Wisdom leads to victory; folly to defeat. Wisdom belongs to those who fear God, and the "fear" of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom (Prov. 1:7). Wisdom is the essence of life. The foolish person is the one who is thoughtless, self-centered, and obviously indifferent to God.

Old Testament Usage Seven different Hebrew words are usually translated by the single English word, "folly." Some of the shades of meaning suggested by these various words include: a) deliberate sinfulness; b) simplemindedness; c) malicious simple-mindedness; and d) brutal or subhuman activity.

The fool may be the one who is aloof. He "foldeth his hands" (Eccl. 4:5 a). This aloofness is also described in terms of the farmers who "follow worthless pursuits" instead of tending to the farm (Prov. 12:11*b* NRSV).

In other passages the fool is described as the one who denies that God exists: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Ps. 14:1). Foolish behavior is also characterized by an inability to recognize the true character of God. Job chastised his wife for behaving as the foolish do when she denied the steadfast love of God (Job 2:10).

The simple-minded fool is encouraged to change in Proverbs 9:4–6. But the fool may be the one who is intentionally perverse. Nabal and Saul represent this kind of intentional and malicious folly toward David (1 Sam. 25:25; 26:21).

New Testament Usage The contrasting elements of wisdom and folly evident in the Old Testament were clearly in the mind of Paul when he asked, "hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" (1 Cor. 1:20*b).* However, in the New Testament, this polarity between wisdom and folly is not always stressed. In fact, it is possible that a certain kind of wisdom can actually be folly. In Matthew 7:26; 25:2,3; Romans 2:20 "folly" is used synonymously with "experiental wisdom." Wisdom based only on human intellect and experiences without considering God is folly.

In Matthew 23:17, folly is equated with blindness. The characteristics of folly include thoughtlessness, the pursuit of unbridled aspirations, and a life-style characterized by envy, greed, and pride.

Foolishness is also described in paradoxical terms in the New Testament. In 1 Corinthians 1—3, the incarnation is portrayed as "foolishness," but it is precisely this kind of perceived "foolishness" which is better than worldly wisdom. Our understanding of this paradoxical relationship affects the manner in which Christ is proclaimed (1 Cor. 1:18—2:5). We must rely on God's gift and power of proclamation not on human powers and wisdom. The writer of Matthew records Jesus stating that "whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire" (5:22*b).*

See Wisdom.

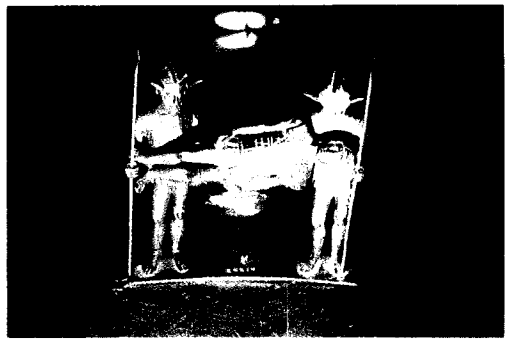
Kenneth Craig

FOOT A part of the human and animal body used for walking. In Scripture "foot" refers mainly to the human foot (Ex. 12:11; Acts 14:8). It may also be used of the feet of animals (Ezek. 1:7) or, anthropomorphically, of God's feet (Isa. 60:13). The "foot" as a measure of length does not appear in Hebrew or Greek, but some English versions give the equivalent in feet (Gen. 6:15, NIV; KJV "cubits").

In the ancient world with unpaved roads, feet easily became dirty and had to be washed often.

From earliest times, hosts offered to wash their guests' feet (Gen. 18:4), usually done by the lowest servant (John 13:3–14). High honor was paid by anointing another's feet (Deut. 33:24; Luke 7:46; John 12:3).



Because it was so easy to soil one's feet, to remove the shoes was a sign of getting rid of dirt and so indicated holiness in worship (Ex. 3:5). To shake the dust off one's feet meant total rejection of that place (Acts 13:51). For both the Israelites and the Romans, punishment might include binding the feet in stocks (Job 13:27; Acts 16:24). Often "feet" symbolize the whole person, since it is hard to act without using the feet ("refrained my feet from every evil way" means "kept myself from evil," Ps. 119:101; compare Luke 1:79; Acts 5:9; Rom. 3:15).

A perfume bottle in the shape of a sandaled foot from ca. 550 B.C. in Sicily.

Several biblical expressions contain "feet." "Put your feet upon the necks of these" suggested total victory over someone (Josh. 10:24). This was also implied by the phrase to put someone "under your feet" (Rom. 16:20; 1 Cor. 15:25). "To fall at someone's feet" showed humble submission, often when one had a request (1 Sam. 25:24; Luke 17:16). "To cover one's feet" was a euphemism for relieving oneself (1 Sam. 24:3). For one's foot "to slip" or "to be taken in a snare" meant calamity (Pss. 9:15; 66:9). "The feet of him that bringeth good tidings" meant their coming (Isa. 52:7). To sit "at the feet" meant to be a listener or disciple of someone (Acts 22:3) "Laid them down" at someone's feet suggested that the thing was a gift (Acts 4:35). Kendell Easley

FOOTMAN KJV translation of two unrelated Hebrew terms. The first refers to foot soldiers as distinguished from cavalry (2 Sam. 8:4), to soldiers in general (1 Sam. 4:10; 15:4), or to men of military age (Ex. 12:37). The second term refers to a runner who served in the honor guard which ran ahead of the king's chariot (1 Sam. 8:11; 2 Sam. 15:1), to the king's guards in general (1 Kings 14:27–28; 2 Kings 10:25), or to royal couriers (Esther 3:13,15).

Bronze statuette from the Roman period of two soldiers carrying a wounded comrade.

FOOTSTOOL A piece of furniture for resting the feet, especially for one seated on a throne (2 Chron. 9:18; Jas. 2:3). The footstool of Tutankhamin of Egypt was carved with pictures of his enemies. Other Pharaohs were portrayed with their feet on their enemies' heads. The footstool thus became a symbol for dominion. God is pictured as a king enthroned in heaven with the earth as His footstool (Isa. 66:1; Matt. 5:35). In Psalm 99:5 and Lamentations 2:1 it is difficult to determine with certainty whether God's footstool is the ark, the Temple, or Zion. (Compare Isa. 60:13; Ezek. 43:7.) Only 1 Chronicles 28:2 is an unambiguous reference to the ark as a resting place for God's feet.

In Psalm 110:1 God makes the Messianic King triumph over His enemies, who are then made his footstool. This text is quoted six times in the New Testament. It served as the basis for Jesus' riddle about David's son who is also his lord (Matt. 22:44; Mark 12:36; Luke 20:43). Elsewhere, the Scripture was applied to the ascension of Christ (Acts 2:34–35), the exaltation of Christ (Heb. 1:13), and the future victory of Christ (Heb. 10:13).

FOOTWASHING An act necessary for comfort and cleanliness for any who have traveled dusty Palestinian roads with feet shod in sandals. Customarily, a host provided guests with water for washing their own feet (Judg. 19:21; Luke 7:44, where the complaint was that Simon had not provided water). Footwashing was regarded as so lowly a task that it could not be required of a Hebrew slave. In this context the statement of John the Baptist that he was unworthy to untie the sandal (to wash the feet) of the One coming after him (Mark 1:7) indicates great humility. As a sign of exceptional love, a disciple might wash a master's feet (contrast John 13:13–14) or a wife volunteer to wash her husband's (Joseph and Asenath 20:1–5). The initiative of the woman who was a "sinner" in washing Jesus' feet (Luke 7:37–50) was more than expected hospitality. Hers was an act of great love which evidenced the forgiveness of her sins (7:47).

Jesus' washing of the disciples' feet (John 13:4–5) has both an ethical and symbolic sense. The ethical sense is emphasized in John 13:14–15 where Jesus presented Himself as the example of humble, loving service. (Compare Luke 22:27.) The command to do for each other what Christ had done for them ought not to be confined simply to washing feet. What Jesus did for the disciples was to lay down His life for them (John 15:13). Thus the ethical imperative calls for giving our lives in extravagant acts of selfless service. Footwashing is one expression of this. The footwashing in John occupies the place taken by the institution of the Lord's Supper in Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Like the Supper, the footwashing is an enacted sermon on the death of Christ. This symbolic sense is highlighted in the picture of Jesus' laying aside his garments and then taking them up (a picture of Christ's laying down and taking up his life, John 10:17–18), the note that the footwashing is necessary for the disciples to receive their inheritance ("part" 13:8), and the statement that it affects cleansing (13:10). Some interpreters see a connection with baptism (and the Eucharist) as sacraments of cleansing. Instead, the footwashing, like baptism and the Supper, bears witness to the same salvific event, the selfless giving of Christ in the humilitating death of the cross.

Washing the feet of other Christians was a qualification for service as a "widow" in the early church (1 Tim. 5:10). Footwashing is here representative of humble acts of service (TEV).

The ceremonial washing of feet is first attested by Augustine in connection with Easter baptism. The association of the rite with Maundy Thursday was fixed by the council of Toledo (694). The developed Catholic practice involves a priest washing the feet of twelve poor men. Martin Luther criticized ecclesiastical authorities who washed feet as an act of humility and then demanded greater humility in return. The Anabaptists practiced footwashing as a symbol of washing in the blood of Christ and to impress the example of Christ's deep humiliation. Footwashing was commonly practiced by Baptists in early America. Today the regular practice is confined to smaller Baptist bodies, Mennonites, and some others.

Chris Church

FORBEARANCE Specifically, a refraining from the enforcement of a punishment; generally, a synonymn for patience. Forbearance makes it possible to influence a ruler (Prov. 25:15 NAS; patience NIV, NRSV; patient persuasion TEV). Jeremiah prayed that God not take him way in His forbearance (15:15 NRSV), that is, that God not be so patient with Jeremiah's enemies as to allow them to destroy him. In Romans 2:4; 3:25 forbearance refers to God's patience expressed in God's willingness to hold back judgment for a time. God's forbearance does not mean that God condones sin, but that God gives opportunity for repentance. God is able to maintain God's reputation as a righteous judge in spite of God's overlooking the past sins of Israel and the present sins of those who place faith in Christ (3:26), because the cross was an effective sacrifice of atonement. God's forbearance is an opportunity for salvation (2 Pet. 3:15).

FORD A shallow place in a stream or river that permits crossing by foot. The Romans were the first to build bridges in Palestine. Before their time river crossings were generally limited to fords. Fords are mentioned in connection with three rivers in Palestine: the Arnon (literally "rushing torrent" Isa. 16:2), the Jabbok (Gen. 32:22), the Jordan. All three rivers have swift currents and offer few fording places. Fords were thus strategic points. To secure the fords meant success in battle (Judg. 3:28; 12:5,6); their loss meant defeat (Jer. 51:32).

FOREHEAD Part of the face above the eyes. Because it is so prominent, the appearance of the forehead often determines our opinion of the person.

The Emblem of Holiness was placed on Aaron's forehead (Ex. 28:38). This symbolized acceptance before the Lord. A mark was put upon the foreheads of those in Jerusalem who mourned for the wickedness of Jerusalem. They were spared in a time of terrible judgment (Ezek. 9:4).

The Bible indicates that a person's character can be determined by observing the forehead. A set forehead indicates opposition, defiance, and rebellion (Jer. 3:3). Hardness of the forehead indicates determination to persevere (Isa. 48:4; Ezekiel 3:8–9). It has been used as a representation of Satan (Rev. 13:16–17). The forehead is used as a very dishonorable word when read of the harlot's forehead (Jer. 3:3), indicating utter shamelessness. At the same time, it stands for courage as when God told Ezekiel that He had made the prophet's forehead harder than flint against the foreheads of the people (Ezek. 3:9).

In the apocalyptic literature of the New Testament the foreheads of the righteous were marked (Rev. 7:3; 9:4; 14:1; 22:4). The apocalyptic woman dressed in purple and scarlet had her name written on her forehead (Rev. 17:5).

See Face.

Gary Bonner

FOREIGNER See Stranger.

FOREKNOWLEDGE Awareness and anticipation of events before they occur. The words "foreknowledge" and "foreknow" are rarely used in the Bible, but the concept of God's foreknowledge is found throughout Scriptures. Other terms such as "election" and "predestination" are closely related to foreknowledge.

In the Bible, God alone has foreknowledge. Nothing is outside of His knowledge—past, present, or future. Nothing is hidden from Him, and only fools think they can hide their deeds from God (Pss. 10:11; 11:4–5; Prov. 15:11; Isa. 29:15–16). God knows completely the thoughts and doings of human beings (Ps. 139). Jesus taught that God has complete knowledge of human beings (Matt. 10:29–31), and the author of Hebrews wrote that "nothing in all creation is hidden from God's sight" (Heb. 4:13*a* NIV).

Foreknowledge of the Future God's foreknowledge encompasses future events. The perspective of faith can say that all that happens has been previously planned by God. Events of history are perceived in faith as the unfolding of God's eternal plans (Gen. 45:4–8; Isa. 14:24–27; 42:9; Jer. 50:45). The New Testament writers perceived in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus the outworking of God's eternal plans to save sinful humanity. Thus Paul proclaimed the gospel which God had promised beforehand through His prophets in the holy Scriptures (Rom. 1:2). The gospels similarly declare that those things which the prophets had said were now fulfilled in the life and death of Jesus (Matt. 1:22–23; 2:5–6:15; John 19:24). Acts 2:23 and 1 Peter 1:20 declare that the crucifixion of Christ was not a chance happening of history. It was according to the foreknowledge of God, according to His eternal plan.

Foreknowledge and God's Will In the Bible, God's foreknowledge of people is not primarily a reference to His intellect, but to His kind will by which He sets people apart to Himself. So Jeremiah heard God's word to him saying, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart; I appointed you as a prophet to the nations" (Jer. 1:5 NIV). Similarly, the apostle Paul perceived that God had "separated me from my mother's womb . . . that I might preach him among the heathen" (Gal. 1:15–16). God's foreknowledge must be understood in terms of personal relationship of God to His creation. To affirm God's foreknowledge is a statement of faith—that God's purpose existed before mankind's response to God (Ps. 139:16). The initiative lies with God.

In Romans Paul wrote that those whom God foreknows, He predestines to be conformed to the image of His Son; and those whom God predestines, He calls; and those whom He calls, He justifies; and those whom He justifies, He glorifies (8:29–30). In the same letter, Paul declared that God had not rejected the Jewish people whom He foreknew (Rom. 11:2).

Foreknowledge and Human Freedom Such statements raise the difficult theological question of human freedom. If God already knows in advance who will be saved or elected, does that not eliminate free human will? Does God predestine some people to salvation and others to damnation?

One major attempt to answer this question is associated with James Arminius (1560-1609) who argued, as did the pre-Augustinian church fathers, that God's foreknowledge is a prescient knowledge, that is, God knows in advance what a person's response will be, so He elects to salvation in advance those whom He knows will freely accept Christ. This Arminian view is called conditional predestination, since the predestination is conditioned on God's foreknowledge of the individual's acceptance or rejection of Christ.

Another major Christian tradition is the Augustine-Luther-Calvin tradition. This view claims that God's foreknowledge is not simply God's foreknowledge of faith. Rather, for God to foreknow means that His knowledge determines events. He predestines some to be saved, but not on the foreknowledge of how they will respond; rather in His foreknowledge He foreordains apart from any human response.

Both views are supported by texts from Scripture. While Romans 8:29–30 are key verses in any discussion of God's foreknowledge, it is perhaps more correct to interpret these verses in terms of the doctrine of assurance rather than of predestination. Paul's point in Romans 8:29–30 is not to discuss who is foreknown and predestined to be saved and who is not. This passage may naturally give rise to that question, but it does not lead to any one answer. The doctrine of predestination was developed in the reformed tradition in an attempt to solve problems raised by Paul's writings and by other biblical texts. Paul's concern in this passage was rather to assure the Christian readers that their security is based upon God's eternal purpose and not upon the Christian's initiative. Nothing, therefore, can separate them from God's love!

First Peter 1:20 also declares that the Christian readers in Asia Minor were chosen by God according to His foreknowledge. Directed to Christians experiencing persecution because of their faith in Jesus, 1 Peter's reference to the foreknowledge of God was intended to bring assurance that their existence is part of God's will and plan and that they have a sure and certain hope that is not tied to changing circumstances or events. Other such affirmations in the New Testament (Eph. 1:4,11–12; 2 Thess. 2:13; Rev. 17:8) should be read from the same faith perspective. The writers were not attempting to answer the question of whom God saves and whom He rejects, nor were they intending to limit free human choice. They were rather expressing the conviction and assurance of faith that the individual's salvation lies entirely and securely in God's hand and in God's eternal purpose.

See Knowledge; Election; Predestination.

Roger L. Omanson

FORERUNNER The Greek term prodromos (one who runs ahead) occurs only once in the New Testament (Heb. 6:20) where it serves as a designation for Christ. In secular Greek the term was frequent as a military term for advanced scouts or cavalry that prepared for a full assault. This sense is seen in the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament once (Wisdom of Solomon 12:8) where wasps were the forerunners of the armies of Israel. (Compare Ex. 23:28; Deut. 7:20; but also Joshua 24:12 where the hornets completed driving out the Amorite kings so that no Israelite assault was necessary.) Elsewhere in the Septuagint prodromos is used metaphorically for the first ripe fruit (Num. 13:20; Isa. 28:4). This usage suggests that the Christian hope of entering God's presence is guaranteed by the forerunner's already reaching this goal. (Compare the idea of Christ as first fruits of the dead, 1 Cor. 15:20,23.) A similar idea is expressed in the image of Christ as the pioneer of salvation (Heb. 2:10), the first of many children that God brings to glory through suffering. Significantly, Christ is forerunner for us. Having run ahead on the road of suffering, Christ became the source of salvation which makes our following possible (Heb. 5:8–10).

In English forerunner indicates one who precedes and indicates the approach of another. In this sense John the Baptist is termed the forerunner of Jesus, though the New Testament does not use this term of John. The Old Testament used the common image of advance agents sent ahead of a king to make arrangements for his travel to picture the mission of a prophetic messenger preparing the way for God's coming (Isa. 40:3; Ma. 3:1). The application of these texts to John by the New Testament writers (Matt. 11:10; Mark 1:2; Luke 1:76; 7:27) affirm that the coming of Jesus is the coming of God.

FORESAIL A small sail used to steer a vessel in strong wind (Acts 27:40). KJV refers to the "mainsail." Paul's ship likely had a large central mast with a long yard arm supporting the large, square mainsail and a smaller foremast, slopping forward like a bowsprit, which carried the foresail.

FORESKIN The loose fold of skin covering the glans of the penis which is removed in circumcision. Removal of the foreskin was a bodily reminder of God's covenant with Abraham (Gen. 17:11,14,23–25). In Deuteronomy 10:16 the "foreskin of the heart" is associated with stubbornness in disobedience. The difficult text in Habakkuk 2:16 is likely a scribal corruption of the word "stagger" involving the inversion of two letters. NRSV, TEV, and REB thus translate "stagger" together with the Dead Sea Scrolls and several ancient versions. The reading in the Masoretic text, "to show oneself to be uncircumcised," does not mean simple exposure (NIV, NAS), but to be recognized as one cut off from the covenant. See Covenant; Circumcision.

FOREST Large, naturally-wooded areas, characteristic of the central hill country, the Galilee, and the Bashan.

Large expanses of forest covered the majority of the hills in Palestine during the Old Testament period. Because of their locations on hilly, rocky soil, forests were considered unfarmable in early periods. After the Exodus, the inability of the Israelite tribes to conquer much of their inheritance forced them to develop new settlements and camps in the wooded hill country. Unable to rescue their portion from the hands of the Canaanites, the clans of Ephraim and Manasseh cleared the forests among the hills in their territory to provide room for settlement (Josh. 17:15–18). Forests also provided excellent staging areas for warfare, such as the rebellion of Absalom against David which ended with a battle in the forests of Ephraim (2 Sam. 18:6–8). The valuable cedars of Lebanon were imported from Tyre by Solomon for his extensive building projects in Jerusalem (1 Kings 5:8–10). Solomon's palace, "The house of the forest of Lebanon," was so named for its extensive use of these cedars (1 Kings 7:2). As the population expanded, forested areas were cut down, and terraced orchards took their place. Large portions of the forests around Jerusalem were destroyed during the Roman seige of the city in A.D. 70.

David Maltsberger

FOREST OF LEBANON, HOUSE OF See House of the Forest of Lebanon.

FORGE See Furnace.

FORGETFULNESS, LAND OF A name for Sheol, the abode of the dead, in Psalm 88:12. See Sheol.

FORGIVENESS An act of God's grace to forget forever and not hold people of faith accountable for sins they confess; to a lesser degree the gracious human act of not holding wrong acts against a person. Forgiveness has both divine and human dimensions. In the divine relationship, it is, first of all, the gracious act of God by which believers are put into a right relationship to God and transferred from spiritual death to spiritual life through the sacrifice of Jesus. It is also, in this divine dimension, the ongoing gift of God without which our lives as Christians would be "out of joint" and full of guilt. In terms of a human dimension, forgiveness is that act and attitude toward those who have wronged us which restores relationships and fellowship.

Everyone Needs Forgiveness The basic facts of the Bible are God's creative power and holiness, human rebellion, and the efforts of our merciful God to bring us back to an intended relationship of sonship and fellowship. The need of forgiveness is first seen in the third chapter of Genesis, as Adam and Eve willfully disobeyed God, choosing rather to satisfy their own self-will. The result was guilt (Gen. 3:8,10), separation from God, loss of fellowship (Gen. 3:8,23–24), and a life of hardship, anxiety, and death (Gen. 3:16–24) lived under the wrath of God. David expressed this terrible condition of the unforgiven sinner graphically in Psalm 51. He spoke of being unclean (v. 2,7,10), of being sinful by his very nature (v. 5), of his grief and sorrow at being separated from God (v. 8,11,12), and of his guilt (v. 14). Sinners cannot live rightly without God, and yet as a sinner a person is cut off from the holy God. Only through the mercy of God can one find peace and forgiveness.

Forgiveness in the Old Testament The primary means of obtaining forgiveness in the Old Testament is through the sacrificial system of the covenant relationship, which God established when He brought His people out of Egypt. The sacrificial system expressed the dynamics of the sinful human condition. The bringing of the sacrifice showed the sense of need; the laying of the hands on the living sacrifice symbolized identification of the person with the sacrifice, as did the releasing of the life of the animal through the sacrificial slaughter. Emphasis on an unblemished sacrifice stressed the holiness of God contrasted with human sinfulness. The forgiveness of God, channeled through the sacrificial offering, was an act of mercy freely bestowed by God, not purchased by the one bringing the offering.

An emphasis upon God's demand for a repentant heart as the basis for forgiveness, while not totally absent earlier (see Ps. 51), gained its full expression in the prophets (Isa. 1:10–18; Jer. 7:21–26; Hos. 6:6; Amos 5:21–27). This element does not negate but rather deepens the understanding of the sacrifice. The Old Testament sacrificial system could never give once-for-all forgiveness. It had to be repeated over and over (Heb. 10:1–4).

Forgiveness in the New Testament Jesus is the perfect and final Sacrifice through which God's forgiveness is mediated to every person (Rom. 3:25; Heb. 10:11–12). The connection of Jesus with forgiveness is seen in His own self-understanding. According to the Old Testament, only God could forgive sins; yet Jesus declared that He could do so, and He did (Mark 2:1–12; John 8:2–11). He saw His own death as the fulfillment of the Old Testament sacrificial system. At the Last Supper He spoke of His death as "my blood of the new testament [covenant]" (Mark 14:24). Jesus Himself is the unblemished Sacrifice (Isa. 53:3–7), offered once for all (Heb. 9:28) not by a human being, but by God Himself in Christ Jesus for the sins of mankind (Heb. 9:14; Rom. 3:25; Acts 13:38). Forgiveness through the sacrifice of Christ is available for everyone who truly repents (Luke 23:39–43; John 8:2–11).

The Sin Which is Unforgivable It is true that Jesus spoke of an unforgivable sin (Matt. 12:22–32; Mark 3:22–30; Luke 12:10). It is not a question of God's ability or desire to forgive, but rather a matter of human willingness to meet the conditions for forgiveness. The background of the saying was the controversy between Jesus and the religious leaders of His time. The Pharisees refused to see the merciful hand of God in the work of Jesus, and rather attributed His miracles to the power of Satan. For such who deliberately closed their minds to the work and invitation of God in Christ to draw near, repent, and receive forgiveness, there is no hope. But the fault lies with them, rather than with God.

Human Forgiveness in the New Testament As a part of His teaching about human need for forgiveness and the means of receiving it, Jesus spoke of the human dimension of forgiveness. A firm condition for the receiving of God's forgiveness is the willingness to forgive others. In the Lord's Prayer (Matt. 6:12; Luke 11:4) and the parable of the Unforgiving Servant (Matt. 18:12–35) Jesus clearly indicated such is the case: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. 6:15). The forgiven life is the forgiving life.

Human forgiveness reflects our experience and understanding of divine forgiveness. Love, not wooden rules, governs forgiveness (Matt. 18:21–22). Jesus powerfully demonstrated this teaching on the cross, as He asked for forgiveness for His executioners (Luke 23:34).

See Cross; Mercy; Redemption; Sin.

Earl C. Davis

FORK A pronged implement. Two types of forks are mentioned in Scripture, an implement used in the sacrificial cult (See Fleshhook) and a farm tool used to winnow grain (See Fan).

FORMER RAIN KJV term at Joel 2:23 for the early rain. See Rain.

FORNICATION (Fōr nĭ cā' tion) Various acts of sexual immorality, especially being a harlot or whore.

Old Testament Normally women are the subject of the Hebrew verb zanah, but in Numbers 25:1 men "began to commit whoredom." The clearest example is that of Tamar sitting on the roadway to entice Judah (Gen. 38:12–34). Such action was subject to criminal prosecution bringing the death penalty (Gen. 38:24; compare Lev. 21:9; Deut. 22:21). Fornication meant being unfaithful to a marriage commitment (Judg. 19:2).

Israel's neighbors practiced a fertility religion in which prostitution was part of the worship. This led naturally to describing worship of other gods as prostitution (Ex. 34:15–16; Judg. 8:27,33; Hos. 4:13). This concept is central for Hosea's preaching based on his experience with his unfaithful wife Gomer. Ezekiel also used this concept (Ezek. 16; 23) and extended it to include political treaties with foreign enemies (Ezek. 16:26, 28; 23:5).

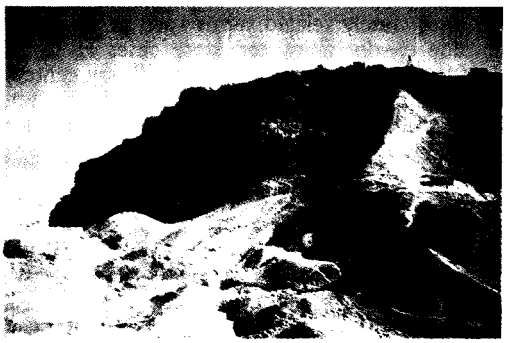
New Testament The New Testament also condemns prostitution. Here again prostitution played a central role in worship in places like Corinth and Athens. Greek philosophers could even distinguish the roles of prostitutes for pleasure, slave mistresses to give daily care to the master's body, and wives to produce legitimate children. Some Stoic philosophers reacted against such practices and condemned sex outside marriage. Many women used the situation to take slave lovers for themselves or become lesbians.

Jesus went against Jewish tradition and forgave prostitutes and opened the way for them to enter God's kingdom through faith (Matt. 21:31–32; compare Heb. 11:31; Jas. 2:25), though He still regarded fornication as evil (Mark 7:21).

Paul extended the use of the Greek term for fornication to cover all sinful sexual activity. He dealt with the problem particularly in writing the Corinthians who faced a society permeated with sexual religion and the sexual sins of a seaport. A believer must decide to be part of Christ's body or a prostitute's body (1 Cor. 6:12–20). The believer must flee sexual immorality and cleave to Christ, honoring Him with the physical body. Fornication is thus a result of sinful human nature (Gal. 5:19) and unsuitable for God's holy people (Eph. 5:3; 1 Thess. 4:3).

The Book of Revelation also says much about fornication, condemning those guilty to eternal punishment (Rev. 2:21–22). Revelation, as well as the prophets, extends the meaning of fornication to include political and religious unfaithfulness (Rev. 14:8; 17:2,4; 18:3; 19:2).

As a whole, the New Testament uses porneia, most often translated fornication, in at least four ways:



1. Voluntary sexual intercourse of an unmarried person with someone of the opposite sex (1 Cor. 7:2; 1 Thess. 4:3).

2. A synonym for adultery (Matt. 5:32; 19:9). See Adultery; Divorce.

3. Harlotry and prostitution (Rev. 2:14,20).

4. Various forms of unchastity (John 8:41; Acts 15:20; 1 Cor. 5:1). Gary Hardin

FORT, FORTIFICATION Walled structures built defense against enemy armies. Cities of the ancient world were fortified for defensive purposes as far back as archaeological records exist. The oldest fortifications in Israel are at Jericho, where a Neolithic stone tower and part of a wall have been dated to 7,000 B.C. No other examples exist until 3,000 B.C., the Chalcolithic Period (about 4,000-3,000 B.C.) being one of open villages without fortification. Beginning in the Early Bronze Age mudbrick walls, towers, and gates were built on stone foundations at Ai, Arad, Beth Yerah, Gezer, Jericho, Megiddo, and elsewhere. From this time until the Roman Period (the time of Christ), cities were almost always surrounded by walls. The stone foundations and those portions of wall above the ground which utilized stone construction were made of uncut field stone. In the time of Solomon, however, well-dressed ashlars (carefully trimmed limestone blocks) began to be used in the construction of unique fortification systems. These included casemate walls (that is, two parallel stone walls with dividing partitions connecting them) and huge six-chambered gates allowing easy entrance and exit for his chariots (a gate plan introduced much earlier by the Hyksos invaders, around 1700 B.C., who also used chariots). Similar, but smaller four-chambered gates were used later in the time of Ahab and Jeroboam II, attached to offsets-insets solid walls. A glacis was sometimes built against the outside wall for added protection against the battering ram. A glacis was a sloping embankment of beaten earth, clay, gravel and stones, sometimes covered with plaster. Examples of huge, dressed stone walls and gate towers of the Hellenistic/Roman Periods may be seen today at Samaria, Caesarea Maritima, and Tiberias. Citadels were often built on the acropolis of the enclosed city. John McRay

Masada, the site of a palace built by Herod the Great, provides its own natural fortification.

FORTIFIED CITIES The term "fortified city" (often "fenced city" or "defenced city" in the KJV) refers to a town with strong defenses, usually a massive wall structure and inner citadels or strongholds. In general the fortified city was a major military or administrative center for a region. Size was not so much the factor, though many of the fortified cities were large cities. Location was much more critical.

F

The Bible contains two lists of fortified cities, one for Naphtali (Josh. 19:35–38), and a list of cities Rehoboam fortified for Judah (2 Chron. 11:5–12). These two lists seem to include most of the walled cities within the tribal area.

Fortified cities served a strategic function. They could guard a major highway (as did Lachish and Hazor). They could protect mountain passes (Megiddo and Taanach). They could serve as border fortresses (Arad and Hazor). Surely troops would be garrisoned in a fortified city. At times of imminent danger, much of the populace from the surrounding area might find protection in a fortified city (Jer. 4:5; 8:14).

Other closely related terms used in the Bible include chariot cities and store cities (1 Kings 9:19). Chariot cities were major military centers where the chariot troops were garrisoned. Store cities probably served as central supply bases for the military. Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

FORTUNATUS A Corinthian Christian who together with Stephanus and Achaicus ministered to Paul at Ephesus (1 Cor. 16:17). The three perhaps brought Paul a letter from Chloe's household in Corinth. In view of their anticipated return to Corinth, they perhaps delivered First Corinthians as indicated in the superscription of the Textus Receptus.

FORTUNE See Destiny.

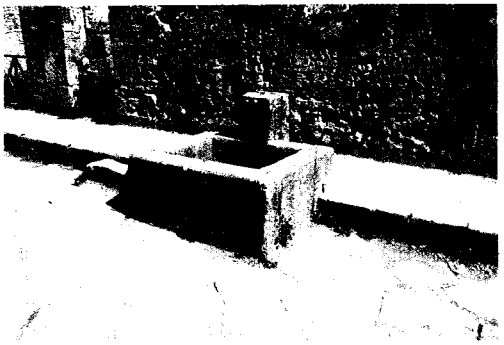
FORUM The open place of a market town or the town itself. The Appii Forum (Acts 28:15) or market town of Appius was located 43 miles to the southeast of Rome on the Appian Way.

FORUM OF APPIUS A station along the Appian Way where Paul and his companions were met by a group of believers from Rome (Acts 28:15). It was some 43 miles southeast of Rome. Paul was on the way to Rome to be tried before Caesar.

A panoramic view of the ruins of the forum of ancient Rome.



FOUNDATION That on which a building is built; the first layer of a structure that provides a stable base for the superstructure. Bedrock was the preferred foundation (Matt. 7:24). The best alternative was a solid platform of close-fitting cut stone (1 Kings 5:17). Modest homes had foundations of rough stone. Generally, building sites were leveled by filling in the foundation trenches with gravel or small stones. Often, the foundation is all that remains of ancient structures. The prohibition of laying a foundation for Jericho (Josh. 6:26) was a prohibition of rebuilding the city as a fortified site rather than of inhabiting the place. The splendor of the new Jerusalem is pictured in its foundation of precious stones (Isa. 54:11; Rev. 21:19).

The Old Testament pictured the earth (dry land) as resting on foundations (2 Sam. 22:16; Ps. 18:15; 82:5). God is pictured as a builder who marked out the foundations (Prov. 8:29) and set the stone (Ps. 104:5). The mountains (Deut. 32:22; Ps. 18:7) and the vault of the heavens (2 Sam. 22:8; Job 26:11) are also pictured as resting on foundations. God's great power is expressed in the images of the earth's foundations trembling (Isa. 24:18) or being exposed (2 Sam. 22:16) before the Almighty. "From the foundations of the earth" means from the time of creation (Isa. 40:21; Matt. 13:35; John 17:24).

Christ's teaching is compared to a rock solid foundation (Matt. 7:24; Luke 6:48). Foundation serves as a metaphor for the initial preaching of the Gospel (Rom. 15:20; Heb. 6:1–2 which outlines the foundational topics), for the apostles and prophets as the first generation of preachers (Eph. 2:20; compare Rev. 21:14,19); and for Christ as the content of preaching (1 Cor. 3:10–11).

The foundations of Psalms 11:3 are the foundations of life, security, community, justice, and religion. To lay a good foundation for the future (1 Tim. 6:19) is to be generous and ready to share. The foundation of 2 Timothy 2:19 is an enigma. The context suggests that God's foundation is the core of true believers known only to God. Other suggestions include Christ, God's work, the church, Christ's teaching, and God's eternal law. Chris Church

FOUNTAIN A spring of water flowing from a hole in the earth. The limestone rock of Palestine is especially suited for the formation of springs. In semi-arid country springs are highly prized as water sources and often determine the location of settlements. Thus the frequency of the Hebrew root En, meaning spring, in place names: En-dor (Josh. 17:11); En-eglaim (Ezek. 47:10); En-gannim (Josh. 15:34); En-gedi (15:62); En-haddah (19:21); En-hakkore (Judg. 15:19); En-hazor (Josh. 19:37); En-rimmon; (Neh 11:29); En-rogel and En-shemesh (Josh. 15:7); and En-tappuah (17:7). Enaim (Enam, Josh. 15:34) means "two springs." The goodness of Canaan was seen in its abundant water supply, "a land with flowing streams, with springs and underground waters welling up in valleys and hills" (Deut. 8:7 NRSV).

During the Roman period manmade fountains such as this one at Pompeii (first century A.D.) supplemented natural spring-fed fountains.

The Old Testament portrays the earth's dry land resting on foundations over the fountains of the deep (Gen. 7:11). The unleashing of these waters amounted to a return to the chaos before the creation (Gen. 1:1,9).

Provisions of spring water is an expression of God's providential care (Ps. 104:10). God's special concern for the poor and needy is pictured in terms of providing fountains and springs (Isa. 41:17–18). The blessedness of the endtime includes pictures of fountains flowing from the Temple (Ezek. 47:1–12; Joel 3:18), Jerusalem (Zech. 14:8), or the throne of God (Rev. 22:1–2) with amazing life-giving powers.

The metaphorical use of fountain for source is common. The teaching of the wise is a fountain (source) of life (Prov. 13:14; contrast 25:26).

Chris Church

Another manmade public fountain area at Hierapolis.

FOUNTAIN GATE A city gate at the southeast corner of the walls of ancient Jerusalem (Neh. 2:14; 3:15; 12:37), probably so named because people brought water from the En-rogel or Gihon springs into the city through this gate. The gate is possibly identical with the "gate between the two walls" (2 Kings 25:4; Jer. 39:4; 52:7).

FOWL See Birds.

FOWLER One who traps birds. All Biblical references are figurative. A variety of means are mentioned in Scripture: snares (Ps. 91:3; 124:7); traps (Ps. 141:9; Jer. 5:26–27); ropes (Job 18:10 KJV, "snare"); and nets (Hos. 7:12). God is praised as One who delivers from the fowler's snare (Ps. 91:3; 124:7), an image of the power of the wicked. Opposition to the prophet Hosea is pictured as a fowler's snare set in the Temple (Hos. 9:8). Hosea 7:12 pictures Israel as a dumb bird which God will catch with a net so the nation can be disciplined. Proverbs 6:1–2,5 pictures indebtedness as a snare to be avoided. Jesus warned that the day of God's coming judgment would be as unexpected as the closing of a trap (Luke 21:35).

FOX See Animals.

FRACTURE The breaking of a bone (Lev. 24:20, KJV "breach"). The law of retribution limited retaliation to "fracture for fracture."

FRAME Term used by modern translations to render a number of Hebrew terms. Frame refers to the "carrying frame" (NRSV) for the lamps and Tabernacle utensils (Num. 4:10,12; KJV, NAS "bars"; REB "poles"); to the rim that served as a brace for the legs of the table of the presence (Ex. 25:25,27; KJV "border"); to the frames for the side panels of the stands used to transport the Temple lavers (1 Kings 7:28–36; 2 Kings 16:17; KJV "ledge"); to the skeletal structure over which the Tabernacle curtains were spread (Ex. 26:15–29; 35:11; KJV, NAS "boards"); and to the casing of windows and doors (1 Kings 7:4–5). Frame is also used in reference to the human form (Job 41:12; Ps. 103:14; 139:15). Frame can be interpreted either as "how we are formed" (NIV) or

"what we are made of" (TEV). Frame is also used as a verb. The tongue's "framing words" is a picturesque expression for speech (Ps. 50:19). Most often frame means to plan or devise (Ps. 94:20) or to act on plans (Jer. 18:11).

FRANKINCENSE An ingredient used in making the perfume for the most holy place in the tabernacle (Ex. 30:34). It is a resinous substance derived from certain trees in the balsam family. Frankincense was one of the gifts presented to the child Jesus by the Magi (Matt. 2:11).

FREE WILL OFFERING A gift given at the impulse of the giver (Ex. 35:21–29; 36:3–7; Lev. 7:16). The distinctive mark of the free will offering was the "stirred hearts" and "willing spirits" of the givers. The Tabernacle was constructed using materials given as free will offerings (Ex. 35:29). The people's desire to give was so great that Moses was compelled to ask that no more gifts be given (Ex. 36:3–7). Free will offerings were traditionally given at Pentecost (Deut. 16:10). See Sacrifice and Offerings.

FREEDMEN, SYNAGOGUE OF THE A Greek-speaking synagogue in Jerusalem involved in instigating the dispute with Stephen (Acts 6:9; KJV "Synagogue of the Libertines"). The Greek syntax suggests two groups of disputants. The first consisted of the Synagogue of the Freedmen, composed of Cyrenians and Alexandrians (so NAS, TEV). It is possible that this first group has three parties, the freedmen (freed slaves), the Cyrenians, and Alexandrians. Some early versions have Libyans in place of "libertines," giving three groups of North African Jews. The second party in the dispute was composed of Greek-speaking Jews of Asia and Cilicia. These may have belonged to the Synagogue of the Freedmen as well (REB). Some have identified the freedmen as the descendants of Pompey's prisoners of war (63 B.C.).

FREEDOM The ability of a person or group to be and do what they want instead of being controlled by another. It is popular today to believe that the individual is or should be in full control of him or her self. Such an understanding is alien to the Bible, which never depicts the individual as having total command or freedom over self. In one sense the Scripture does affirm that we are in control of ourselves. We are able to choose our actions and attitudes, our responses to others and to God. In another sense, we cannot be and do what we want because we are not independent of others or God. We do not have the power to do what we want to, whether that be to fulfill the law, love others, or save ourselves. The Bible constantly affirms that the kind of freedom all persons have is the kind of freedom that slaves have.

Old Testament Teaching In the Old Testament, "freedom" is used to describe what God desires and grants to Hebrew slaves. According to the law, no person is to have complete mastery of another. Consequently, the Law stipulates that a person can only be used as a slave for six years. Even so, if they are mistreated during that time, they are to be released. Also, every fifty years, all slaves are to be freed, regardless of how many years of their slavery they have served (Ex. 21:2–11,26,27; Lev. 25:10; Deut. 15:12–18). In the example of the Exodus and the preaching of the prophets, whoever is oppressed is viewed as a slave, and God desires that the oppression stop.

Throughout the Old Testament, freedom is predominantly used to express control over the physical circumstances of life. By the time of the New Testament, it was widely recognized that no persons are free to such an extent that they have control of their physical circumstances. Even the rich are subject to war, drought, and other calamities. Nevertheless, an influential group called Stoics believed that anyone could still attain true freedom, because no person or force of nature can control the inner life. Thus, the individual is ultimately in control of self, though not of the environment.

New Testament Teaching In contrast to the Stoics, the New Testament recognizes that no one has such absolute control. Everyone is considered to be a slave in some sense. But being a slave in the first century world did not mean being without freedom.

Slaves during the New Testament era had much freedom of choice in daily affairs, and their decisions were not just trivial. They served in every position in society, including being the emperor's advisors and filling other government positions. They were allowed to conduct their own personal affairs, earn and save money for themselves, own property, and even own their own slaves. Just as Roman slaves usually had much control over their daily affairs, every time the New Testament commands us to do something, it implicitly affirms that we have control over our daily decisions.

Most slaves of the first century were slaves from birth. They were children of slaves, and they served their parents' owners. But few remained slaves for life. They were usually freed when their owners died, or after ten to twenty years of adult service to their owner. They also had the opportunity to buy their freedom if they could save or borrow the money their owner charged for freeing them. In fact, before the New Testament era was over, a large percentage of the free population of the Roman Empire had either been slaves at one time or had parents who were slaves. The New Testament depicts all persons as being in slavery—the slavery of sin (John 8:34; Rom. 3:9–12; 2 Pet. 2:19). Just as Roman slaves usually had the opportunity to gain their freedom, so all people have the opportunity to obtain release from bondage to sin by choosing to follow Christ (Rom. 6:12–14; 10:9–12). Though slaves, our free will is intact, and our decisions are real and meaningful.

The New Testament also affirms that we are not our own rulers. We do not have ultimate control of our lives. Just as we are not in control of our physical circumstances because nature or some other person is more powerful than ourselves, so we are not in full control of even our inner selves because the powers of sin and grace are stronger than ourselves (Rom. 7:15–25). Just as the slave's master determines the service that the slave is to perform, since the master is more powerful than the slave, so it is our master, not ourselves, who determines the general direction of our life (Rom. 6:16).

When we yield to sin as our master, sin uses the law to deceive us into thinking that we are so in control of ourselves that by our own works we can save ourselves by obeying the law. In reality, on our own we do not have the power, the freedom, to live righteously. Indeed, "I can will what is right, but I cannot do it." (Rom. 7:18 NRSV). So our attempts to fulfill the law by ourselves simply increase our pride, thus strengthening the control of sin over us. As we continue to live under the rule of sin, the daily choices we make become more and more consistently obedient to sinful purposes and lead to death.

If, however, we yield to grace, given through Jesus Christ, the Spirit has the power to lead us into life and truth (Rom. 6:19; Eph. 1:11–14). As we continue to live in Christ, He uses His power to mold us more and more into His image (2 Cor. 3:18; Phil. 1:6).

Since Jesus established His church, some people have always thought that we are no longer bound by the law but are "free" in Christ to act however we like. The Scriptures constantly remind us that following our every desire is not what freedom is. We are free from our former master, sin; but we are still servants. As servants of Christ, though we have the freedom to disobey our master, it is our responsibility to direct our actions to fulfill the purposes of Christ (Rom. 6:1,2,15,18,22; 1 Pet. 2:16).

Do we have freedom? Yes. Are we free? No. The Bible affirms that our choices are not determined; we make them ourselves. But it also demonstrates that we are not in total control of ourselves. We live under the ultimate control and direction of a power greater than ourselves. The comforting thing about this is that "in everything, . . . he (God) cooperates for good with those who love God" (Rom. 8:28 REB).

See Election, Slavery. Steve Arnold

FRIEND, FRIENDSHIP A close trusting relationship between two people. Nowhere does the Bible present a concise definition of "friend" or "friendship." Instead, both the Old and New Testaments present friendship in its different facets.

Two Hebrew root words, r'h and ahv, are used to describe friendship. R'h denotes an associate or companion, while ahv connotes the object of one's affection or devotion—a friend. Consequently, friendship may be simple association (Gen. 38:12; 2 Sam. 15:37) or loving companionship, the most recognizable example being that between David and Saul's son, Jonathan (1 Sam. 18:1,3; 20:17; 2 Sam. 1:26).

Friendship, however, was not limited to earthly associates. The Old Testament also affirms friendship between God and human persons. The relationship between God and Moses (Ex. 33:11) is likened to friendship because they conversed face to face. Both 2 Chronicles 20:7 and Isaiah 41:8 characterize Abraham as the friend of God. Friendship between God and His people is alluded to in Isaiah 5:1–7, the song of the vineyard. Proverbs features the most references to friendship, nearly all of them cautioning against dubious friendships or extolling the virtues of a true friend (14:20; 17:17–18; 18:24; 19:4,6; 22:11,24; 27:6,10,14).

In the New Testament, the predominant word for friend is philos. A derivative, philia, is often used for friendship. Jesus is described as the "friend of sinners" (Matt. 11:19). He called His disciples "friends" (Luke 12:4; John 15:13–15). The New Testament highlights the connection between friends and joy (Luke 15:6,9,29), as well as warning of the possibility of friends proving false (Luke 21:16). Echoing the Old Testament, James pointed to Abraham, the friend of God, as one whose example of active faith is to be followed (Jas. 2:23). James also warned against friendship with the world (Jas. 4:4).

Only in 3 John 14 is "friend" a self-designation for Christians. As a means of describing the relations between church members, friendship was overshadowed by the model of family relations, brotherhood and sisterhood (1 Tim. 5:1–3; 1 Pet. 1:22; 2:17).

See Body of Christ; David; Love; Neighbor; Jonathan. William J. Ireland, Jr.

FRIEND OF THE KING The title of a court official (1 Kings 4:5). The King's Friend was counselor and companion to the monarch. He functioned somewhat as a Secretary of State. Hushai evidently held this office in David's court; Zabud held it in Solomon's.

FRINGE Tassels of twisted cords fastened to the four corners of the outer garment, worn by observant Jews as a reminder of covenant obligations (Num. 15:38,39; Deut. 22:12; compare Zech. 8:23). The woman suffering from chronic hemorrhage touched the tassel of Jesus' cloak (Matt.

9:20, Luke 8:44). The English translations (with the exception of the NRSV) obscure this point by using different terms to translate the Greek kraspedon when it refers to Jesus' outer cloak (hem, KJV; fringe, NAS; edge; NIV, TEV; simply garment, RSV) and to the outer garment of the Pharisees (borders, KJV; tassels, NAS, NIV, TEV; fringe, RSV). Such translation contributes to a picture of a Jesus who was not really a Jew. Though Jesus observed the Old Testament requirement, He criticized those who wore excessively long tassels to call attention to their piety (Matt. 23:5).

FROG See Animals.

FRONTLETS Objects containing Scripture passages worn on the forehand and between the eyes, primarily at prayer times. Jews followed scriptural commands, literally, writing Exodus 13:1–10,11–16; Deuteronomy 6:4–9; 11:13–21 on small scrolls, placing these in leather containers and placing these on their forehead and left arm. See Exodus 13:9,16; Deuteronomy 6:8; 11:18.

By New Testament times, the frontlets were known as phylacteries (Matt. 23:5). Jewish men wore phylacteries during prayer times, except on the sabbath and feast days.

Phylacteries were bound with thongs to the forehead, though some phylacteries were worn on the upper arm so that when a person crossed his arms the Scriptures contained in the phylactery would be close to the heart.

Jesus condemned individuals who called attention to themselves by wearing larger than usual phylacteries (Matt. 23:5). Gary Hardin

A modern orthodox Jewish man praying at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem wearing his frontlet.

FRUIT The edible pulp surrounding the seed(s) of many plants.

Literal uses Various types of fruit are mentioned frequently in Scripture. Among the most common are grapes, figs, olives, pomegranates, and apples (perhaps to be identified with apricots or quince). Israel, in contrast to her neighbors, recognized the process by which trees reproduce by means of seeds carried in fruit to be a part of God's good plan at creation (Gen. 1:12,29). The continuing fruitfulness of Israel's trees was dependent on faithfulness to the covenant (Deut. 28:4,11,18). The first fruit to ripen was offered to God (Ex. 23:16; Neh. 10:35).

Figurative uses The fruit of the womb is a common expression for descendants (Gen. 30:2; Deut. 7:13; Ps. 127:3; Isa. 13:18). Fruit often indicates a thought close to our word results. The fruit of the Spirit is the results of the Spirit's workings in the lives of believers (Gal. 5:22–23). Similar is the use of fruit where we would speak of manifestations or expressions. The fruits of righteousness (Phil. 1:11; Jas. 3:18), of repentance (Matt. 3:8), of light (Eph. 5:9) are expressions of righteousness, repentance, and moral purity. Jesus cautioned that false prophets could be identified by the fruit they produced (Matt. 7:15–20), that is, by the qualities manifested in their lives. Jesus similarly warned of the necessity of bearing fruit that was compatible with citizenship in the kingdom of God (Matt. 21:43). Fruit sometimes has the sense of reward (Isa. 3:10; John 4:36; Phil. 4:17). Fruit is also used as a picture for Christian converts (Rom. 1:13; 1 Cor. 16:15).

FRYING PAN KJV term for the vessel used for cooking the cereal offering (Lev. 2:7; 7:9), simply pan in modern translations. A kettle for deep fat frying is perhaps intended.

FUEL Materials used to start and maintain a fire. Numerous types of fuel are mentioned in Scripture: wood (Isa. 44:14–16); charcoal (Jer. 36:22; John 18:18); shrubs (Ps. 120:4); thorn bushes (Eccl. 7:6; Nah. 1:10); grass (Matt. 6:30); weeds (Matt. 13:40); vines (Ezek. 15:4,6); branch trimmings (John 15:6); animal or even human dung (Ezek. 4:12); and the blood-stained clothing of fallen warriors (Isa. 9:5). Oil was used as a fuel for lamps (Matt. 25:3). Coal was not known to the Hebrews.

Fuel is frequently used figuratively as a symbol of total destruction. Disobedient Israel is portrayed as "fuel for the fire" (Isa. 9:19; Ezek. 15:6; 21:32). For Jesus, God's extravagant love evidenced in clothing grass destined to be burned as fuel with beautiful flowers illustrated even greater care for human beings (Matt. 6:30).

FULFILL The verb fulfill is used in three senses that merit special attention: an ethical sense of observing or meeting requirements; a prophetic sense of corresponding to what was promised, predicted, or foreshadowed; and a temporal sense related to the arrival of times ordained by God. The ethical sense of fulfill appears in the Old Testament only in connection with meeting the requirements of a vow (Lev. 22:21; Num. 15:3), never in connection with the law. In the New Testament Jesus submitted to John's baptism, identifying Himself with sinful people, in order "to fulfill all righteous" (Matt. 3:15), that is, to meet God's expectation for His life. Jesus described His mission not as coming "to abolish the law or the prophets" but "to fulfill" (Matt. 5:17). The New Testament repeatedly speaks of love as the fulfilling of the law (Rom. 13:8–10; Gal. 5:14; Jas. 2:8).

Fulfill is most common in Scripture in the prophetic sense of corresponding to what was promised, predicted, or foreshadowed. The fulfillment of prophecy in the life of Jesus is a major theme in Matthew's Gospel. Isaiah's prophecy (7:4) found fulfillment not only in Christ's virgin birth but also in His nature as "God with us" (Matt. 1:22–23; compare 28:20). Jesus' ministry in both word (Matt. 4:14–17) and deed (8:16–17) fulfilled Scripture (Isa. 9:1–2; 53:4). Jesus' command of secrecy (Matt. 12:16) and His habit of teaching in parables (13:35) likewise fulfilled Scripture (Isa. 42:1–3; Ps. 78:2), as did His humble entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:4–5; Zech. 9:9) and His arrest as a bandit (Matt. 26:56). At several points Jesus' life story gave new meaning to the history of Israel. Like Israel, Jesus was God's Son called out of Egypt (Matt. 2:15; Hos. 11:1). The suffering of Israel's mothers (Jer. 31:15) was echoed by the mothers of Bethlehem (Matt. 2:17–18). Both foreshadowed the fate of the Christ child who was spared only to die at a later time.

Luke and Acts are especially interested in Christ's suffering and later glorification as the fulfillment of the expectations of all the Old Testament, the law, prophets, and writings (Luke 24:25–26,44–47; Acts 3:18; 13:27–41) Jesus interpreted His journey to Jerusalem as a second "exodus" (Luke 9:31), an event that would result in freedom for God's people.

In John the failure of the people to recognize God at work in Jesus' signs or to accept Jesus' testimony was explained as fulfillment of Scripture (12:37–41; compare Mark 4:11–12). John also viewed details of the passion story as the fulfillment of Scripture (John 19:24,28; Pss. 22:18; 69:21). Typological fulfillment in which Jesus corresponded to Old Testament institutions is more common than correspondence to predictive prophecy. Jesus was "the lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (1:29), likely a reference to the Passover lamb (John 19:14). Like Bethel (Gen. 28:12) Jesus offered access between heaven and earth (1:51). At Cana Jesus' gift of wine corresponded to the blessings of God's future (John 2:1–11; Isa. 25:6; Joel 3:18; Amos 9:13; Zech. 9:17). Jesus' body which was to be destroyed and raised was identified with the Temple (John 2:19,21). In His being lifted up on the cross (John 3:14), Christ corresponded to the serpent Moses raised in the wilderness (Num. 21:9). In the same way, Christ in giving His life corresponded to the life-giving manna from heaven (John 6:31–32; Ex. 16:15). Often, time references in the Gospel of John suggest that Jesus gave new meaning to the celebrations of Israel (Passover, 2:13; 6:4; 11:55; Booths, 7:10; Dedication, 10:22).

Paul spoke of Christ as the One in whom "every one of God's promises is a 'yes' " (2 Cor. 1:20 NRSV). Like John, Paul made frequent use of typology. Christ was foreshadowed by Adam (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:22,45–49), by the rock in the wilderness (1 Cor. 10:4), and by the Passover lamb (1 Cor. 5:7).

Temporal phrases such as "the time is fulfilled" point to times ordained by God, for example, the time of Christ's ministry (Mark 1:15; Gal. 4:4; Eph. 1:10), the time of Gentile domination of Israel (Luke 21:24), or the time of the appearance of the lawless one (2 Thess. 2:6).

Chris Church

FULLER One who thickens and shrinks newly-shorn wool or newly-woven cloth; also one who washes or bleaches clothing. The Hebrew term comes from the root "to tread" and refers to the common method of cleansing clothing by treading them by foot. Cleansing was also done by beating clothing with sticks. The ancient Hebrews were not aquainted with bar soap. Clothing was cleansed in a solution of alkali obtained by burning wood to ash. Putrid urine was sometimes used in the process. Due to the foul smell, fullers worked outside the city gates. All the biblical references are metaphorical (Ps. 51:7; Jer. 2:22; 4:14; Mal. 3:2) and refer to cleansing from sin.

FULLER'S FIELD A site outside Jerusalem's walls, located near the conduit between the Gihon Spring and the upper pool (2 Kings 18:17; Isa. 7:3; 36:2). The road to the Fuller's Field was the scene of an encounter between Rabshakeh, agent of the king of Assyria, who stopped within hearing distance of those on the city walls, and the leaders of Jerusalem. See Rabshakeh.

FULLNESS Completeness or totality. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof" (Ps. 24:1). Scripture sees that nothing is really complete until it serves the purpose for which God has created it. Thus Ephesians 1:23 (NRSV) speaks of God as "him who fills all in all." He is the one who gives everything its ultimate significance and richness. This fullness is most clearly expressed in Jesus Christ (Col. 1:19; 2:9) from whom all true believers receive the divine life of fullness (John 1:16; 10:10). It is a life full of joy (John 15:11) and peace despite the fact of tribulations in this world (John 16:33).

See Eternal Life ; Pleroma.

Joe Baskin

FULLNESS OF TIME The traditional rendering of two similar Greek expressions in Galatians 4:4 and Ephesians 1:10. The first refers to a past event, the sending of Christ to redeem those born under the law. While the sending of God's Son encompasses the whole of Christ's incarnate ministry, the New Testament specifically relates the sending to Christ's death as a saving event (John 3:17; Rom. 8:3; 1 John 4:9–10). The sending of Christ in the fullness of time refers not so much to world conditions in the sense that the prevalence of Greek as a common spoken language, Roman roads, and the Roman enforced peace made the rapid spread of the gospel possible. Rather the emphasis is on God whose sending of Christ is not a "last ditch effort" but part of God's gracious plan from the beginning.

The reference to the fullness of time in Ephesians is more difficult. Some translations understand the time when all things are gathered together in Christ to lie in the future (NIV, TEV); others, in the past (REB). A major theme of Ephesians is that Christ has already broken down the dividing wall of hostility between Jew and Gentile (2:11–22, especially 2:14,21). Therefore, it seems likely that the crucial shift in time between the past with its hopelessness and hostility and the present age of reconciliation has already occurred.

Chris Church

FURNACE A device, generally of brick or stone, used to heat materials to high temperatures. In Biblical times furnaces were not used for central heating. Rather furnaces were used to smelt ore, melt metal for casting, heat metal for forging, fire pottery or bricks, and to make lime. The furnace of Daniel 3 was probably a large furnace used for smelting ore or for firing bricks. Biblical references to furnaces are mostly figurative for experiences of testing (of the Egyptian bondage, Deut. 4:20; 1 Kings 8:51; Jer. 11:4; of adversity, Isa. 48:10). God's stubbornly rebellious people are pictured as "rejected silver" (Jer. 6:30) and as dross, the waste product of the smelting process (Ezek. 22:17–22). Such pictures may form the background of the furnace of fire which symbolizes divine punishment (Matt. 13:42,50).

FURNACES, TOWER OF KJV and NAS designation (Neh. 3:11) for a tower designated "Tower of the Ovens" in other modern translations. The tower was adjacent to the "corner gate" located at the northwest angle in the second or middle wall of Jerusalem. The "Baker's Street" (Jer. 37:21) may have passed by this tower.

FURNITURE Equipment in a home used for rest, beautification, storage, and work space.

Sacred Furniture Biblical interest in furniture focuses on the sacred furnishings of the tabernacle and the Temple. We have in Exodus 25—27; 30; 37—38 a full description of the tabernacle with all its objects of furniture. Lovingly detailed accounts of the ark of the covenant, the altar of incense, and other furnishings are so clear that we can easily visualize and reconstruct them in the form of models. Likewise, 1 Kings 6–7 provides similar data about the Temple of Solomon. See Tabernacle; Temple.

Common Furniture But this is not the case regarding the furniture of the common people living out their daily lives in their tents and houses. The Bible occasionally refers to basic furniture items such as beds, chairs, etc. But we have virtually nothing about manufacturers, building materials, designs, or appearances.

Biblical terminology illustrates the problem. Old Testament Hebrew has no word equivalent to the English terms "furniture" or "furnishings." The Hebrew word kelî is so translated in passages such as Exodus 31:7, but in this very same context the very same word (kelî) is also rendered as "utensils," "articles," or "accessories." In fact, the word kelî is so fluid that it may refer to any humanly manufactured material object.

Similarly, the New Testament carries us no further, for it uses no word which could be translated as "furniture" in the English versions.

Sources of Data The Bible remains a source of data, however, at least to the degree that it refers to such items as beds and chairs. Beyond the Bible itself we must resort to artifacts recovered by archaeology. Palestine, however, does not enjoy the climate which would have saved wooden furnishings for study today. Only a few such objects have survived, and even these have greatly disintegrated over time. This being the case, we must resort to secondary artifacts such as written records, seals, sculpture, ivories, and tombs.

Individual Objects of Furniture Domestically, Israelite furniture reflected the simplicity of the ordinary household dwelling. Some Israelites preferred to live in tents (Jer. 35), preserving the traditions of nomadic and wilderness days. The furnishings of such a living place would have to be readily portable and as light as possible. Chests of some sort would be used when the family or clan was settled then double as carriage crates when on the move. A few simple rugs covered the ground floor. The tent itself and all its paraphernalia—pegs, ropes, interior curtains for separating the "rooms" inside—along with a few sleeping mats, might be all the "furniture" such a family owned. The same would apply to those living in small shelters.

A more permanent home would be furnished according to the family's relative wealth or poverty. Like the tent-dwellers mentioned above, a poorer family would own, at the minimum, simple bedding and kitchen equipment. Reed mats would be rolled out on the floor for resting and sleeping. In some cases these mats would have to serve as tables and chairs, as well, since real ones were probably beyond the means of poorer families. All homes needed interior lighting, of course, so even the poor would own, in all probability, several lamps, i.e., saucer-shaped bowls with a pinch in the rim for a wick fueled by a pool of olive oil; such a lamp often sat on a supporting stand. Wide-mouth jars for food and water were essential, as were also some sort of stone and clay oven, and a grinding mill for preparing grain. A few of these houses might also have stone or wooden benches, some covered with cloth or carpet material around the inner walls; but this was likely the exception among the poor rather than the rule. Since most homes of biblical days had few windows, they would also have had few—if any—curtains.

Even the homes of the comfortable and the wealthy would also seem all but bare in contrast to the homes of any socioeconomic class in a developed nation of the West today. Consider the home of the "wealthy woman" of Shunem (in lower northern Palestine about five miles east of Megiddo), found in 2 Kings 4:8–37. Because of her special concern for the prophet Elisha, she and her husband built "a small room on the roof" (4:10 NIV) of their house for him to use when he was passing through their vicinity. They furnished it with "a bed and a table, a chair and a lamp" (4:10 NIV), for which he was sincerely grateful.

Only a century later Amos (760-750 B.C.) condemned the decadent prosperity of the wealthy class in his day. He spoke of the mansions of Samaria (Amos 3:15; 5:11; 6:11) and their opulent beds and couches encrusted with ivory (3:12, 15; 6:4). By then the gap between the relatively poor and the relatively rich had grown to scandalous proportions, as evidenced by the quality of their furniture (compare Esther 1:6). It seems most likely that apart from the highly ornamented furniture mentioned in Amos, the household furniture of the vast majority of Israelites was merely functional, rather than aesthetic.

Furniture and Artifacts Archaeology has shed some (but not much) light on ancient Palestinian furniture. The excavation of ancient Jericho in the 1950s discovered a series of tombs containing both the skeletal remains of the dead and practical provisions to serve their needs in the afterlife. The pertinent finds date to about 1600 B.C. Furniture styles were slow to change, and the artifacts found at Jericho were probably like those used by the Israelites long after.

One body had been laid on a wooden bed consisting of a rectangular frame enclosing wooden crosspieces tenoned to the rails. The crosspieces and rails enclosed five panels of woven rush. The bed probably supported a mattress about six inches above the floor.

Beside the bed was a table measuring about fifty-eight inches by sixteen inches, supported by only three legs about ten inches above the floor. Each leg tenoned into a rounded corner extension below the underside of the table. Survivors left a wooden platter of mutton on the table.

Two cylinder seals from Tell es-Sa'idiyeh on the Jordan River and dated to about 750 B.C. show simple chairs in their impressions. One has a tall straight back and, apparently, a seat of woven rush. Further details are unclear. The other chair has a curved, ladder-back design with four cross-slats. Tony M. Martin

FURROW A narrow trench cut in the earth by a plow (1 Sam. 14:14; Job. 31:38; 39:10; Ps. 65:10; 129:3; Hos. 10:4; 12:11). The KJV rendered two Hebrew terms as furrow which are best translated otherwise. At Ezekiel 17:7,10 modern translations opt for bed (NAS, RSV), plot (NIV), or garden (TEV). At Hosea 10:10 modern translations understand a reference to two sins (iniquity, NRSV; guilt, NAS; sin, NIV, TEV; shameful deed, REB).

FUTURE HOPE The expectation of individuals after their death and of the world when God brings present world affairs to an end.

Future hope focuses upon the expectancy of the consummation of the individual's salvation at the close of the age. With the ushering in of the eternal order at the return of Christ, the believer's hope becomes experienced reality rather than anticipation of future experience (Rom. 8:24–25). This eschatological orientation of New Testament future hope grows out of the Old Testament prophetic anticipation of God's future deliverance (Ps. 40; 42:11; 62:5–6; Isa. 25:9; 40:31; 42:4; 51:5; Jer. 29:4–15; 31:17, 31–34; Ezek. 36–37; Mic. 7:7). See especially Paul's use of Isaiah 11:10 in Romans 15:12.

Old Testament Terms for Future Hope In the Hebrew Old Testament several terms are used to convey the idea of hope: qawah (to be stretched out towards, to long after, wait for [with God as object 26 times]), yahal (to wait, long [for God, 27 times]), hakah (to wait [for God, 7 times]) sabar

(to wait, hope [for God, 4 times]). The corresponding nouns are not commonly used; only nine times in reference to hope in God. Of the 146 uses of these verbs or nouns, only half have the thrust to spiritual reality rather than a nonreligious meaning. In these 73 religious uses the concept of hope is closely related to trust. God is the ground and frequent object of hope; "to hope in Yahweh," "to wait for Yahweh" are common expressions. Implicit to hoping in God is submission to His sovereign rule. Consequently, hope and fear of God are often expressed together (Pss. 33:18–20; 147:11; Prov. 23:17–18). To hope in God is to stand in awe of Him and His power with the confidence that God will faithfully perform His word. Thus hope becomes trust in the righteous character of Yahweh.

Between the Testaments In the interbiblical period the eschatological thrust of hope became prominent but also confusing with its differing expectations. This future hope was often directed toward the expectation of the Messiah and the restoration of the kingdom of Israel. With the emergence of numerous individuals making messianic claims, arousing the expectations of the people, but then collapsing into defeat and destruction, the future hope of Israel took on a pessimistic tone especially in rabbinical thought. Not before Israel achieved complete obedience to the law could God's kingdom be established.

This national uncertainty tended to create a personal uncertainty about what constitutes the required obedience for pleasing God, thus insuring the resurrection of the body and inclusion in that coming messianic kingdom. In contrast to this pessimistic view, one finds in Qumran a confident eschatological hope. However, this hope was only possible for the select few who were the elect of God. In Hellenistic Judaism, future hope was submerged into the Greek concept of the immortality of the soul, as Philo's writings illustrate.

Hope in the New Testament The writers in the New Testament express the concept of future hope primarily by the Greek word elpis and its cognates.

The use of hope in reference to the return of Christ is seen in Matthew 24:50 (also Luke 12:46) and in 2 Peter 3:12–14. In Jesus' teaching on watchfulness, failure to be expecting the return of the Son of man can cause disaster. In 2 Peter this expectation of the day of the Lord stands as the incentive to holy living. In both passages the element of uncertainty often associated with the Greek word has disappeared and is replaced with the sense of confidence based upon the promise of the Lord to come again.

Content of Future Hope The objects of the various Greek words relating to future hope provide insight into what constitutes this hope. Most basic is the expectancy of the return of Christ, described as the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 1:7) and as the coming of the day of God (parousian; 2 Pet. 3:12), or just simply as hope in our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Thess. 1:3; compare Luke 12:36; Phil. 3:20; Heb. 9:28). This expectancy constitutes a blessed hope and is defined as the manifestation of the glory of our great God and our Savior Jesus Christ (Tit. 2:13; compare Rom. 5:2; Col. 1:27). Accompanying this manifestation of Christ is the expectancy of a new heaven and a new earth (2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1); the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked (Acts 24:15); the revelation of the sons of God (Rom. 8:19); our adoption as sons which is defined as the redemption of our bodies (Rom. 8:23); the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ for life eternal (Jude 21); God's grace (1 Pet. 1:13). As Abraham awaited the Holy City, so the believer looks forward to it (Heb. 11:10). The hope of Israel in the promise of God is realized in the Christian hope of resurrection (Acts 26:6–8). These constitute the hope of life eternal long promised beforehand (Titus 1:2; 3:7), of salvation (1 Thess. 5:8) and of righteousness (Gal. 5:5).

The basis of this hope lies in God. In Him who is the Savior of all mankind one puts hope (1 Tim. 4:10; 5:5; Rom. 15:12; 1 Pet. 1:21), rather than in uncertain riches (1 Tim. 6:17); in His name is hope placed (Matt. 12:21), or in Christ (1 Cor. 15:19). This hope is linked closely to the gospel (Col. 1:23), to our calling into God's grace (Eph. 1:18; 4:4) and to faith and the presence of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:5). It is a dynamically living hope (1 Pet. 1:3) which motivates one to holy and righteous living (2 Pet. 3:14). As such it stands as member of the Christian triad of faith, hope, and love (1 Cor. 13:13; 1 Thess. 1:3; Col. 1:4–5).

See Hope; Day of the Lord; Return of Christ; Eternal Life; Salvation; Eschatology; Resurrection; Faith.

Lorin L. Cranford

The green farmland and citrus groves of central Israel.

GAAL (Gā′ ăl) Personal name meaning, "abhorrence," "neglect," or perhaps "dung-beetle." Man who usurped Abimelech's leadership in Shechem but met sudden defeat from Abimelech and left the city (Judg. 9:26–41). The early translations spell his name and that of his father in several different ways, showing perhaps that Israelites intentionally distorted his name to shame his reputation.

GAASH (Gā′ ăsh) Personal name meaning, "rising and falling noisily." A height in the hill country of Ephraim which cannot be located any more precisely. Joshua was buried there (Josh. 24:30). Hiddai, one of David's thirty military heroes, came from the brooks of Gaash (2 Sam. 23:30).

GABA (Gā′ bà) KJV spelling of Geba. See Geba.

GABBAI (Găb′ bā ī) Personal name traditionally interpreted as meaning, "tax collector." Member of tribe of Benjamin who settled in Jerusalem in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:8). Many modern commentators think copying errors have introduced the name into the text from an original Hebrew text meaning, "heroic men," though no existing Hebrew text has this reading.

GABBATHA (Găb′ bà thà) English transliteration of Greek transliteration of Aramaic place name meaning, "elevation." A platform in front of the praetorium or governor's palace in Jerusalem, where Pilate sat in judgment over Jesus (John 19:13), pronouncing the sentence to crucify Jesus. Before announcing the decision, however, Pilate introduced Jesus as King of the Jews, giving the Jewish leaders one last chance to confess their Messiah. The Greek name for the place was lithostrotos, or "stone pavement." The location is either the fortress Antonia or Herod's palace. Tourists see the Antonia site at the present Convent of the Sisters of Zion, but archaeologists have dated the pavement there later than Jesus' time.

Entrance to the Church of St. Gabriel in Nazareth.

GABRIEL (Gā′ brĭ ēl) Personal name meaning, "strong man of God." The heavenly messenger who interpreted to Daniel the meaning of the vision of the ram and the goat. He appears four times in the Bible, each time bringing to human beings a message from the Lord. Twice he appeared to Daniel (8:15–27; 9:20–27). In the New Testament he appeared to announce the births of John the Baptist (Luke 1:8–20) and Jesus (Luke 1:26–38). See Angels.

GAD (Găd) Personal name meaning, "good fortune." 1. The seventh son of Jacob and the progenitor of the tribe of Gad (Gen. 30:9–11). His mother was Leah's maid Zilpah. At the conclusion of the period of wilderness wandering, when the Israelites were preparing to occupy Canaan, the tribe of Gad requested permission, along with the tribe of Reuben and half the tribe of Manasseh, to settle east of the Jordan. Their reason was that they owned large numbers of livestock and the territory east of the Jordan was particularly suitable for raising livestock (Num. 32). This territory became known as Gad (Jer. 49:1). Though the exact limits of Gad's tribal territory are difficult to determine, the Gadites generally occupied land to the northeast of the Dead Sea (Josh. 13:24–28). See Tribes of Israel. 2. Syrian god known from inscriptions from Phoenicia and Palmyra and used in biblical names such as Baal-gad (Josh. 11:17) and Migdal-gad (Josh. 15:37). It also apparently is meant in Isaiah 65:11 where the prophet condemned the people for setting "a table for Fortune" (NAS; Hebrew, Gad). 3. Prophet who advised David as he fled from Saul (1 Sam. 22:5) and who brought God's options for punishment after David took a census of Israel (2 Sam. 24:11–14). Gad also brought David God's orders to build an altar, apparently on the site of the future Temple (2 Sam. 24:18–19). The Chronicler pointed his readers to records of David's reign by Gad (1 Chron. 29:29) and of Gad's assistance in showing David God's plan for Temple worship (2 Chron. 29:25).

GADARA (Găd′ à rà) Place name for home of Gadarenes used in TEV (Matt. 8:28). See Gadarenes.

GADARENE (Găd′ ȧ rēne) A resident of Gadara, one of the cities of Decapolis (Mark 5:1). In the New Testament, it is mentioned only in the Gospel accounts of the healing of the Gadarene man who was afflicted by demons (Matt. 8:28–34; Mark 5:1–17; Luke 8:26–37). The textual tradition in the Greek manuscripts of each of these passages shows confusion among Gadarenes, Gerasenes, and Gergesenes. Textual evidence appears to favor Gadarenes in Matthew, Gerasenes in Mark and Luke. Origen, an early church father, apparently introduced Gergesenes into the tradition. Gadarene, in the context, would have to refer to the larger area, not just the city of Gadara. Gergasenes points to the modern city of Kersa on the lake's edge. Gerasene comes from the city of Gerasa about 30 miles southeast of the lake. Early tradition may have confused the Hebrew or Aramaic spelling of Gedara and Gerasa or may have seen Gerasa as the dominant town in the area. Whatever the original name, Gentiles and their pigs dominated the area. It has been identified with modern Um Keis, approximately five miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee. The designation "country of the Gadarenes" evidently applied to an area that extended as far as the shore of Galilee.

GADDI (Găd′ dī) Personal name meaning, "my good fortune." Spy from the tribe of Manasseh sent by Moses to examine the land of Canaan prior to Israel's conquest (Num. 13:11).

GADDIEL (Găd′ dĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is my good fortune." Spy from tribe of Zebulun Moses sent to examine Canaan, the land to be conquered (Num. 13:10).

GADFLY A stinging insect (stinging fly, TEV), either a horsefly (Tabanidae, NAS) or a botfly (Oestridae). See Insects.

GADI (Gā′ dī) Personal name meaning, "my good fortune." A variant Hebrew spelling of Gaddi using same word as Gadite. Father of Menahem, king of Israel (752-742 B.C.) (2 Kings 15:14, 17).

GADITE (Găd′ īte) Member of tribe of Gad. See Gad.

GAHAM (Gā′ hăm) Personal name meaning, "flame." Son of Nahor, Abraham's brother, by his concubine Reumah (Gen. 22:24).

GAHAR (Gā′ här) Personal name meaning, "drought" or "small in spirit" or "red-faced." Clan head of family of Temple servants who returned from Babylonian captivity with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:47).

GAIUS (Gā′ iŭs) Greek form of Latin name Caius meaning, "I am glad, rejoice." 1. A Macedonian Christian who was one of Paul's traveling companions (Acts 19:29). Along with Aristarchus, he was seized during the riot in Ephesus incited by Demetrius the silversmith. 2. A Christian from Derbe who accompanied Paul the apostle into Asia (Acts 20:4). 3. Paul the apostle's host in Corinth (Rom. 16:23). According to 1 Corinthians 1:14, he was one of the individuals in Corinth whom Paul personally had baptized. 4. The Christian John loved and to whom he addressed 3 John (3 John 1).

GALAL (Gā′ lăl) Personal name meaning, "roll" or "turtle." 1. A Levite in among those who settled in Jerusalem after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:15). 2. Grandfather of Adda, a Levite who led in Nehemiah's thanksgiving (Neh. 11:17). He came up and settled in Jerusalem after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:16).

GALATIA (Gȧ lā′ tiȧ) Geographical name derived from Gaul because its inhabitants were Celts or Galli (Gauls). The original settlement was in central Asia Minor. See Asia Minor. King Nicomedes of Bithynia invited the Celtic warriors across the Bosporus River to help him fight his brother in 278 B.C. The invaders fought on their own capturing cities until stopped by Antiochus I in 275 B.C. They then occupied the northern part of Asia Minor, bounded on the north by Pontus and Bithynia, on the east by Tavium and Pessinus in the west. For the most part, true Galatians lived in open areas, leaving city occupation to their predecessors, the Phrygians. The true Galatians constantly switched sides in ongoing battles in the area. Finally, in 25 B.C. Rome made Galatia a province of the empire and extended its borders, adding Lycaonia, Isauria, and Pisidia with Ancyra serving as the governmental center. Various Roman rulers added and subtracted territory from the province, so its precise boundaries are difficult to draw. Paul visited Galatia (Acts 16:6; 18:23), though his precise route is not clear. Did he visit Phrygian-dominated cities or the true Galatians in the countryside? Was his letter addressed to the original territory in the north or to the Roman province with its southern additions? See Galatians. Compare 1 Corinthians 16:1; 2 Timothy 4:10, where some manuscripts have Gaul, and 1 Peter 1:1.

GALATIAN (Gȧ lā′ tian) Specifically, a member of the Celtic or Galli tribes which invaded and settled Galatia, but more generally any resident of the territory or province of Galatia. See Galatia.

GALATIANS, LETTER TO THE (Gȧ lā′ tians) Paul's letter to the church at Galatia defending his interpretation of the gospel of Christ. Paul's heated defense of justification by faith and freedom in the Spirit has endeared this epistle to all who hold such to be the living core of the Christian faith. From the time of Jesus the sufficiency of faith alone for salvation has been a major issue among Christians. The issue initially came to the forefront in Paul's day when Gentiles believed in Jesus Christ. Must the Gentiles become a part of the Jewish faith to be fully Christian? Certain Jewish Christians, called Judaizers, said that the Gentiles must also obey the law of Moses and be circumcized to be saved. Paul declared that the Gentiles' faith in Jesus, apart from the Jewish faith, was sufficient for salvation.

The churches of Galatia, to whom Paul wrote, were churches he himself founded (Gal. 1:8,9; 4:19). He preached the gospel to them the first time because of a physical problem (4:13). The nature of this ailment is not certain, but it did not hinder the Galatians from hearing Paul's preaching (4:14). In 4:13, the term "at first" normally meant "the former of two times," meaning Paul visited Galatia twice before he wrote the epistle, a factor important for determining the dating of the epistle and its destination. The readers were Gentiles converted from paganism (4:8; 5:2; 6:12), although there may have been Jewish Christians and proselytes in the church as well.

Paul did not specifically locate these churches, (4:2), with a resulting confusion. The place name "Galatia" belonged to a large province of the Roman Empire. The name was used earlier to designate the northern territory of the province inhabited by a particular people know as "Galatians." In Acts 13:14—14:24 (first missionary journey) Paul founded churches at Antioch of Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, cities in the southern part of the Roman province. Paul visited Lystra and Derbe again in Acts 16:1–6 (second missionary journey). In 16:6 Paul then went through the "region of Phrygia and Galatia," as he did also in 18:23 (third missionary journey). Does "Galatia" in Acts 16:6 and 18:23 refer to the southern portion of the Roman province, or does it indicate that Paul went north and founded churches in the territory of Galatia? Paul probably addressed his epistle to the churches in the southern part of the Roman province, for two reasons: 1) When describing churches founded by him, Paul normally used the titles of the Roman provinces in which the churches were located as in 2 Corinthians 9:2; 2) Acts specifically mentioned that Paul founded churches in the southern region, but was silent concerning churches in the north.

Determining the date Paul wrote the epistle involves reconciling Gal. 1:11— 2:14 with Acts. Paul mentioned two visits to Jerusalem (Gal. 1:18; 2:1), but Acts recorded five visits (Acts 9:26; 11:27 and 12:25; 15:4; 18:21; 21:17). Probably Galatians 1:18 and Acts 9:26 record Paul's first visit to Jerusalem after his conversion. Paul did not mention the Acts 11:30; 12:25 visit because he was concerned to relate only his contact with the twelve apostles. This second visit was with the elders, not the twelve. Acts 15:1–29 and Galatians 2:1–10 are both probably accounts of the Jerusalem Council. Though there are differences in the accounts (Paul made no reference in the epistle to the decree of Acts 15:23–29), the principal characters (Paul, Barnabas, Peter, James), and the main issue (whether faith in Jesus is sufficient for salvation or circumcision and obedience to the law of Moses were also necessary) in each account are the same. The council is usually dated A.D. 49 or 50. After the Council, Paul made his second visit to Galatia (Acts 16:1–6), matching the two visits he indicated in the epistle (Gal. 4:13). Then he moved on to Corinth (A.D. 51–52). It was perhaps from Corinth that he wrote the epistle.

Sometime after Paul's last visit (Acts 16:1–6), heretical teachers, who "distort the gospel" (Gal. 1:17 NAS) and trouble the churches (1:7; 5:10, 12), came among the Galatians. They were on the verge of leading the Galatians away from the truth of the gospel. These Judaizers were Jews who unquestionably claimed to be Christians and to faithfully preach the gospel. They taught that circumcision was necessary for salvation (5:2; 6:12–16), as was obedience to the law of Moses, even the observation of days, months, seasons, and years (4:10). They were acting out of false and selfish motives, those of personal ambition (4:17; 6:13) and offense at the cross of Christ (6:12). To lead the Galatians away from Paul's gospel, they sought to discredit him personally.

Paul gave such a fiery response to this disturbance because of the very real threat of a large-scale abandonment by the Galatians of the gospel. In 1:1–5 Paul gave greetings to the churches, but he omitted the statement of praise or thanksgiving which normally followed. Paul was too disturbed to give thanks or praise. Instead, in 1:6–9 Paul expressed distress at their fickle faith. The Galatians had received the one and true gospel but were turning away from it. Paul pronounced a curse on those who preached something different from the gospel he had preached to them.

The major portion of the epistle (1:10—6:10) can be divided into three parts. 1) 1:10—2:21 In this section Paul defended his qualifications as an apostle against the attacks of the Judaizers. He was called to be an apostle by God, and the gospel of grace he preached came from God, independent of the Jerusalem apostles (they even approved of it). Paul closed this section with the main theme of the epistle, a choice between faith in Christ and obedience to the law. Justification (a sinful person coming into a right relationship with God) came not by living bound to the law but by faith in Christ. Faith alone was sufficient for salvation. To be in Christ meant being free from the legal requirements of the law.

2) 3:1—5:12 This section is the major argument of the epistle, where the differences between Paul's gospel and the Judaizer's heresy came to full light. Paul supported his thesis of faith alone on three principles: the gift of the Spirit, the promise and faith of Abraham, and the curse of the law. The gift of the Spirit came to them through faith, not the law. Abraham received the promise and righteousness by faith 430 years before the law was given. People of faith were true children of Abraham and heirs of the promise. Because people did not keep the law when it came, they fell under its curse. The law could only condemn sinners. Christ removed the curse of the law. The law was given as an interim provision until Christ came. Now He has come, and the believer is free. To turn back to the law was to return to slavery. With the coming of Christ, faith and law had become mutually exclusive as ways to approach God.

3) 5:13—6:10 In this final section, Paul guarded against abuse of this freedom from the law. Christian freedom required the believer to walk by the Spirit, which was contrary to the desires and works of the flesh. Christian freedom must be tempered by Christian love.

Paul closed (6:11–18) again urging them not to yield to circumcision and all it represented.

Outline

I. The Players (1:1–5)
   A. Paul's credentials came not from humans but from the risen Christ (1:1).
   B. The churches of Galatia receive grace and peace (1:2).
   C. Christ gave Himself for our sins (1:3–5).

II. The Problem: The Nature of the Gospel (1:6–10)
   A. People who follow a different gospel desert God (1:6).
   B. People who advocate another gospel confuse the church (1:7).
   C. People who preach another gospel are condemned eternally (1:8–9).
   D. The minister of the true gospel pleases God, not people (1:10).

III. The Answer, Part I: Believers Are Justified Simply by Faith in Christ (1:11—5:12).
   A. Personal example proves faith is the only requirement to be right with God (1:11—2:21).
      1. The gospel comes from Christ, not people (1:11–24).
      2. The gospel of grace has apostolic endorsement (2:1–10).
      3. Whoever adds to the gospel of grace is a hypocrite (2:11–14).
      4. Faith in Christ saves, but legalism cannot save (2:15–21).
   B. To return to legalism is to accept slavery instead of sonship (3:1—5:12).
      1. Faith in the crucified Christ, not legalism, brings the indwelling Spirit (3:1–5).
      2. Abraham's inheritance comes through faith to both Jews and non-Jews (3:6–9).
      3. Christ has provided redemption for all who believe (3:10–14).
      4. Christ is the true heir of Abraham (3:15–16).
      5. The law cannot annul the justification by faith promised to Abraham (3:17–22).
      6. The law was used as a tutor to bring believers to Christ (3:23–25).
      7. Faith in and baptism into Christ make us one in Christ (3:26–29).
      8. The law acted as guardian until believers became full sons of God through Christ's redemption (4:1–7).
      9. Return to legalism from faith is a son's return to slavery (4:8–11).
      10. Zeal must be directed to the source of your joy—Christ (4:12–19).
      11. Interpretation of Scripture shows legalism leads to slavery, while Christ leads to the promised freedom of sons (4:20—5:1).
      12. Return to legalism is to fall away from the grace of Christ, which expresses itself in love (5:2–12).

IV. The Answer, Part 2: Believers Are Justified Simply by Faith in Christ to Serve Freely in the Spirit through Love (5:13—6:10).
   A. Scripture shows love fulfills the whole law (5:13–15).
   B. Life in the Spirit overcomes the weakness of the law (5:16–24).
   C. Believers should live and walk by the Spirit (5:25—6:10).

V. Conclusion: Boast Only that You Are New Creations in Christ (6:11–18).
   A. Summary (6:11–17)
      1. Legalism is not true to its own claims (6:11–13).
      2. Christ recreates us to meet God's claims (6:14–17).
   B. Farewell: May Christ's grace be with the Christian family (6:18). Bruce Warren

GALBANUM See Plants in the Bible.

GALEED (Găl′ ē ĕd) Place name meaning, "pile for witness." Place where Jacob and his father-in-law Laban made a formal agreement or covenant determining the boundary line between their peoples and agreeing not to harm one another (Gen. 31:43–52). The place was also called Sahadutah and Mizpah. The heap of stones marking Galeed was in Gilead, north of the Jabbok River. See Mizpah.

GALILEAN (Găl ĭ lē′ ăn) Person who lived in Galilee. Their speech distinguished them from Jews in Jerusalem and Judah, particularly their difficulty in distinguishing the sounds of the gutturals which are important in Hebrew and Aramaic. Peter's Galilean speech set him apart from the courtyard crowd during Jesus' trial (Mark 14:70; compare Acts 2:7). Jesus was identified as being from Galilee (Matt. 26:69). Pilate used this as an excuse to get Herod to hear Jesus' case (Luke 23:6–7). Galileans had a reputation for rebellion and disregard of Jewish law (Acts 5:37), so they could be regarded as sinners (Luke 13:2). Apparently, Pilate had killed some Galileans while they offered the Passover sacrifices in Jerusalem (Luke 13:1). On His return to Galilee from Judea and Samaria, Jesus received a warm welcome from the Galileans. This surprising statement is modified by the following story showing the welcome apparently depended on an expectation of miracles not on appreciation for who Jesus was or from faith in Him (John 4:43–54).

GALILEE (Găl′ ĭ lēē) Place name meaning, "circle" or "region." The northern part of Palestine above the hill country of Ephraim and the hill country of Judah (Josh. 20:7). The Septuagint or early Greek translation referred to a king of the nations of Galilee in Joshua 12:23, though the Hebrew reads, "Gilgal." Many scholars see the Greek as original (NRSV, REB). This would indicate a leader of a coalition of city-states whom Joshua defeated. Kedesh in Galilee was a city of refuge (Josh. 20:7) and a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:32). Solomon paid Hiram of Tyre twenty cities of Galilee for the building materials Hiram supplied for the Temple and royal palace (1 Kings 9:11), but the cities did not please Hiram, who called them Cabul, meaning, "like nothing" (1 Kings 9:12–13). Apparently, Galilee and Tyre bordered on each other. The cities may have been border villages whose ownership the two kings disputed. The Assyrians took the north under Tiglath-pileser in 733 (2 Kings 15:29) and divided it into three districts—the western coast or "the way of the sea" with capital at Dor, Galilee with capital at Megiddo, and beyond Jordan or Gilead (Isa. 9:1).

The term "Galilee" apparently was used prior to Israel's conquest, being mentioned in Egyptian records. It was used in Israel but not as a political designation. The tribes of Naphtali, Asher, Issachar, Zebulun, and Dan occupied the territory which covered approximately the forty-five-mile stretch between the Litani River in Lebanon and the Valley of Jezreel in Israel north to south and from the Mediterranean Sea to the Jordan River west to east.

In the time of Jesus' Galilee, Herod Antipas governed Galilee and Perea. Jesus devoted most of His earthly ministry to Galilee, being known as the Galilean (Matt. 26:69). After the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, Galilee became the major center of Judaism, the Mishnah and Talmud being collected and written there.

GALILEE, SEA OF (Găl′ ĭ lēē) Place name meaning, "circle." A freshwater lake nestled in the hills of northern Palestine. Its surface is nearly 700 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, some thirty miles to the west. The nearby hills of Galilee reach an altitude of 1,500 feet above sea level. To the east are the mountains of Gilead with peaks of more than 3,300 feet. To the north are the snow-covered Lebanon mountains. Fed chiefly by the Jordan River, which originates in the foothills of the Lebanon Mountains, the sea of Galilee is thirteen miles long north and south and eight miles wide at its greatest east-west distance. Because of its location, it is subject to sudden and violent storms which are usually of short duration.

Looking eastward over the Sea of Galilee.

Sea of Galilee with the boat landing at Capernaum in view.

In the Old Testament this sea is called Chinnereth. See Chinnereth. It is named only rarely, however, and all references but one relate to the Hebrew conquest of Palestine under Joshua. In New Testament times it was also called the "lake of Gennesaret." Luke referred to it by that name once (5:1); the Jewish historian Josephus always called it by that name, and so did the author of The Sea of Galilee as viewed from the northwest.

First Maccabees. Once John called it the "sea of Tiberias" (6:1).

In the first century the sea of Galilee was of major commercial significance. Most Galilean roads passed by it, and much travel to and from the east crossed the Jordan rift there. Fish was a major food in the area, and the fishing industry flourished because there was no other significant freshwater lake in the region. Capernaum, which played a major role in the ministry of Jesus, was a center of that industry. The other lake towns of importance were Bethsaida, which means "the fishing place", and Tiberias, a Gentile city constructed by Herod Antipas when Jesus was a young man. Roger Crook

GALL (herb) A bitter, poisonous herb (perhaps Citrullus colocynthis), the juice of which is thought to be the "hemlock" poison Socrates drank. Gall was frequently linked with wormwood (Deut. 29:18; Jer. 9:15; 23:15; Lam. 3:19; Amos 6:12) to denote bitterness and tragedy. Wormwood and gall were often associated with unfaithfulness to God, either as a picture of the unfaithful (Deut. 29:18) or as their punishment. Modern speech translations generally translate the Hebrew word for gall in light of the context of the passage (poisonous growth, Deut. 29:18 NRSV; poisonous water, Jer. 8:14; 9:5; 23:15 NRSV; poison, Amos 6:12 NRSV). Gall is still used at Lamentations 3:19. On the cross, Jesus was offered sour wine drugged with gall, perhaps opium, which He refused (Matt. 27:34; compare Ps. 69:21). Simon the magician was described as full of the gall of bitterness (Acts 8:23) because he wanted to prostitute the gift of the Holy Spirit.

GALL (of livers) Gall expressed by two different Hebrew words is used in three senses in connection with the liver: 1. as an organ, either the liver or the gallbladder, through which a sword might pass when one was run through (Job 20:25); 2. as bile, a sticky, yellow-greenish, alkaline fluid secreted by the liver, which might be poured out on the ground when one was disemboweled (Job 16:13); 3. in a figurative sense (Job 13:26) for bitterness (bitter things, NAS, NIV, NRSV; bitter charges, REB, TEV).

GALLERY An architectural feature of the Temple annex (Ezek. 41:15–16) and two buildings near the Temple (42:3,5). The English "gallery" is an ambiguous term referring to a number of features: a corridor (REB); a roofed walkway or colonade; an outdoor balcony or terrace. The meaning of the underlying Hebrew word is contested. Some suggest the meaning was passage way on the basis of similarities with Akkadian. Others suggest the term means slope or embankment. In this case the Temple measurements in 41:15–16 would refer to the base of the elevated inner court. English translators understand either a reference to interior corridors of the Temple annex or columned porches (contrast 42:6). The two buildings in chapter 42 were apparently constructed "stairstep" style with each floor smaller than the one beneath it. Here the gallery is perhaps the terrace formed by the flat roof of the floor below. Others have suggested the Hebrew refers to underlying rock formations that protruded into the structure.

GALLEY A long, narrow ship propelled mainly by oars. The galleys were used as warships (Isa. 33:21). Such vessels were designed to sail near the shore or on rivers. The image in Isaiah is of a Jerusalem free from the threat of invasion.

GALLIM (Găl′ lĭm) Place name meaning, "piles." Village near Anathoth in tribal territory of Benjamin. Saul gave his daughter Michal as wife to a citizen of Gallim after taking her away from David (1 Sam. 25:44; compare 2 Sam. 3:14–15). See Michal. Gallim lay on the road conquerors took from Bethel down to Jerusalem (Isa. 10:30). It may be modern khirbet Kakul, northwest of Anathoth or even further to the northwest just south of Ramah at khirbet Ercha.

GALLIO (Găl′ lĭ ō) Personal name of unknown meaning. The deputy or proconsul of Achaia headquartered in Corinth, where his judgment seat has been discovered. Certain Jews brought Paul before Gallio seeking to get Roman punishment of him. They charged that Paul advocated an unlawful religion (Acts 18:12–17). Gallio refused to involve himself in Jewish religious affairs, even ignoring the crowd's beating of Sosthenes, the ruler of the synagogue.

Gallio was the son of Marcus Annaeus Seneca, a Spanish orator and financier, and the elder brother of Seneca, the philosopher and tutor of Nero. Lucius Junius Gallio, a rich Roman, adopted Gallio, naming him Lucius Junius Gallio Annaeus. Gallio's name appears on an inscription at Delphi that refers to the 26th acclamation of Claudius as emperor. This places Gallio in office in Corinth between A.D. 51 and 53. He was apparently proconsul from May 1, 51, to May 1, 52, though dates a year later are possible. The date gives evidence from outside the Bible for the time Paul was in Corinth and founded the church there.

Finding the climate at Corinth unhealthy, Gallio apparently welcomed the opportunity to return to Rome, where he counselled Nero until he and Seneca joined a conspiracy against the emperor. First Seneca died; then Nero forced Gallio to commit suicide about A.D. 65. See Achaia; Corinth; 1 and 2 Corinthians; Paul; Roman Empire.

GALLON See Weights and Measures. Word used by modern translations to transfer Greek metretes into modern terminology. A metretes contained about nine gallons. Compare John 2:6. KJV reads firkins.

GALLOWS In English "gallows" refers to the platform on which a person was hanged. The Hebrew term translated "gallows" in Esther (2:23; 7:9–10; 9:25) is the word for tree. It is frequently suggested that tree should be understood as "stake" and that those executed by the Persians were impaled rather than hung. The earliest Greek translation understood the passage in this sense.

GAMAD (Gā′ măd) (NRSV, TEV) or GAMMAD (NIV, REB) Place name of uncertain meaning in Ezekiel 27:11. The early translations apparently read slightly a different Hebrew text with letters easily confused with those of Gamad and meaning, "watchers." Others interpreted it as "dwarf" or "pygmies." Others have pointed to a people called Kumudi from northern Syria listed in early Egyptian sources. They were apparently allies of Tyre in its fight against Babylon. See Gammadim(s).

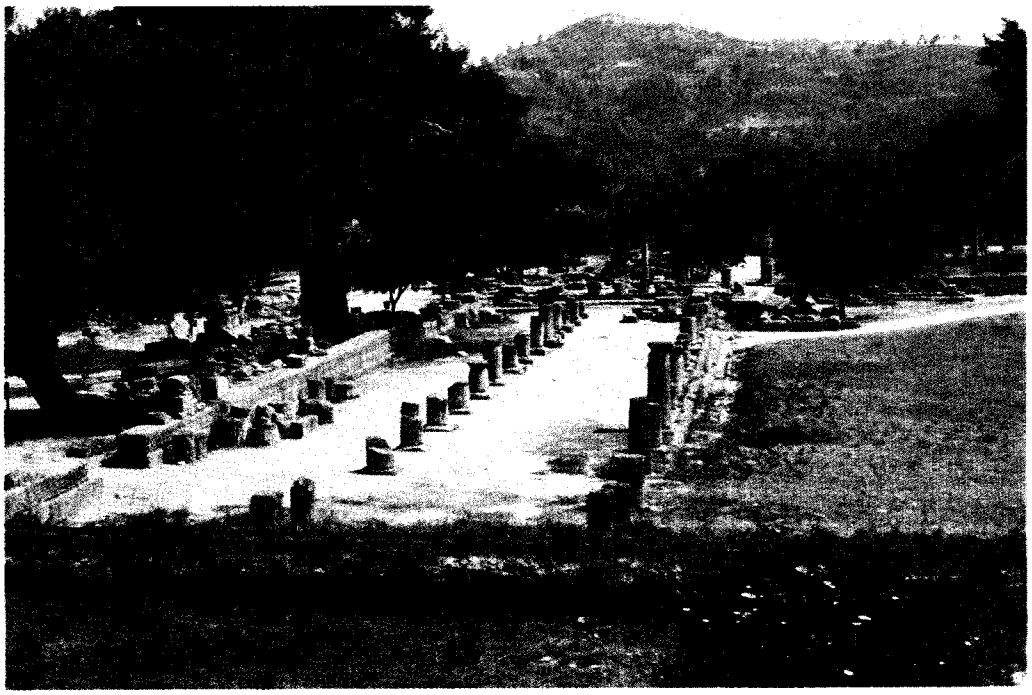
GAMALIEL (Gȧ mā′ lĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God rewards with good." 1. The son of Pedahzur; a leader of the tribe of Manasseh, who helped Moses take the census in the wilderness (Num. 1:10). Compare Numbers 7:54–59. 2. A highly regarded Pharisee who was a member of the Sanhedrin (Acts 5:34). He squelched a plan by the Sanhedrin to kill the apostles by reminding the members that interference with what the apostles were doing might prove to be opposition to God. If the work of the apostles were a purely human work, Gamaliel said, it would come to nothing anyway. According to Acts 22:3, this Gamaliel had been Paul's teacher. He was the grandson of the great Rabbi Hillel. He died about A.D. 52. 3. A leading Jewish rabbi in the late first and early second centuries A.D. He was the grandson of the Gamaliel mentioned in the Book of Acts. He is credited with many of the adaptations in Judaism necessitated by the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70.

The interior of the traditional site of the tomb of Gamaliel.

GAMES Although the Bible contains references

Mosaic of gladiators from the Roman period with the victor standing triumphantly over the fallen one.

to sports (2 Sam. 2:14–16) along with allusions to children's entertainment (Isa. 11:8; Zech. 8:5), it is silent as to the nature of these games. Archaeology provides the most valuable information on games and athletics in the ancient world. Drawings and paintings on tomb and palace walls, sculptures and reliefs, as well as numerous artifacts illustrate recreational activities.



Board Games Over 4000 years old, board games were common throughout the Middle East. Game pieces moved from one square to another according to certain rules which are still unknown. A throw of dice, knucklebones, or even heelbones (lots) determined play. In the Old Testament, lots decided things such as slave allotments (Nah. 3:10), apportionment of land (Josh. 18:6), and care of the Temple (Neh. 10:34; 1 Chron. 24:5). Their use of dice or "lots" gradually extended to gambling, then to simple table games. Soldiers cast lots for Jesus' garment at the crucifixion (John 19:24).

The oldest surviving game board was discovered in Egypt. Made of clay and divided into squares, it has eleven cone-shaped playing pieces, all dated before 4000 B.C. Another game commonly referred to as "hounds and jackals" was played throughout the Fertile Crescent (Tigris-Euphrates and Nile valleys with intervening land).

Playing pieces of varying designs as well as game boards of ivory and stone have been discovered at Samaria, Gezer, Megiddo, and other sites in Palestine. Excavations at Debir (tell beit Mirsim) in Southern Palestine unearthed a limestone board with ten glazed playing pieces and an ivory "die." Boards for a game called "fifty-eight holes" have been found at Megiddo and in Egypt and Mesopotamia as well.

Public Games The four Greek Panhellenic Games were the largest public sports contests in the Near East. Some believe that Paul was a spectator at the Isthmian Games (near Corinth), one of these international spectacles. It is evident that the apostle was familiar with athletics (Gal. 2:2; Phil. 3:13–14; 2 Tim. 2:5; 1 Cor. 9:25–27). Among the events were the pentathlon (long-jump, javelin and discus throws, running, and wrestling) and chariot races. All races were run on a long track or stadion with pylons at each end. Runners or charioteers rounded the pylons, racing back and forth instead of circling an oval track.

A training track for footracing at Olympia.

Children in present-day Jerusalem playing a game in the street on the Via Dolorosa.

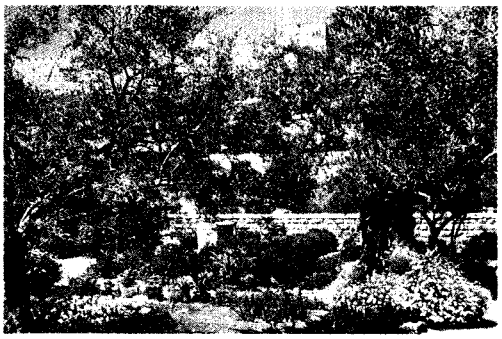
Athletes were rubbed with oil and participated without clothing. Competitive spirit was vigorous, and contests were governed by few rules. Prizes for winners of the Panhellenic Games were simple wreaths of olive, wild celery, laurel, and pine. At Rome, one could see basically these same events until wild beasts were introduced into the arena. Sometimes as many as ten thousand gladiators fought at the Roman games which might last for several weeks. Herod the Great built many amphitheaters in Palestine, including one near Jerusalem where men condemned to death fought with wild animals.

The process of hellenization (the forcing of Greek culture on the Jews) brought amphitheaters and gymnasia to Palestine. Orthodox Jews were repelled by nude athletes and games dedicated to Caesar. Trophies of ornamented wood were considered images and thus forbidden. Add to this the cruelty of the games, and it is understandable why devout Jews hated the games. Diane Cross

GAMMADIM(S) (Găm' mȧ dĭm) Citizens of Gamad. See Gamad.

GAMUL (Gā' mŭl) Personal name meaning, "receiver of good deeds." Head of one of the priestly divisions in the Temple under David and Solomon (1 Chron. 24:17).

GANGRENE The Greek gangraina (2 Tim. 2:17) can refer either to gangrene, a death of soft tissue resulting from problems with blood flow (NAS, NRSV, REB) or to an ulcer (canker, KJV; open sore, TEV). In 2 Timothy gangraina is used figuratively for false teachings which destroy people who accept them.



GARDEN In biblical times, an enclosed plot of ground on which flowers, vegetables, herbs, and fruit and nut trees were cultivated (Gen. 2:8; 1 Kings 21:2; Esther 1:5; Isa. 51:3; John 18:1–2).

Characteristics The primary Old Testament words for "garden" (gan and gannah) derive from a root meaning "to surround." Gardens were plots of ground enclosed or surrounded by walls or hedges. Some were large (Esther 1:5), the most prominent gardens being royal ones (2 Kings 25:4; Neh. 3:15; Jer. 39:4). Most gardens were situated close to the owner's residence (1 Kings 21:2). Occasionally a house might be located in the garden (2 Kings 9:27). An abundant supply of water was especially important (Gen. 13:10; Num. 24:6; Isa. 1:30; 58:11; Jer. 31:12). Gardeners were employed to tend the more substantial gardens, sowing seed and watering (Deut. 11:10; John 20:15). Orchards or small vineyards were sometimes called gardens.

A Roman courtyard and garden in the Villa of Menander at Pompeii.

The Garden of Gethsemane looking west toward the city wall of old Jerusalem.

Uses Obviously a garden provided food for its owner (Jer. 29:5,28; Amos 9:14), but it also served other aesthetic and utilitarian purposes. It was a place of beauty where plants were pleasing to the sight (Gen. 2:9). As a guarded and protected place (Song of Sol. 4:12), persons could retreat there for prayer (Matt. 26:36–46), for quiet or solitude (Esther 7:7), or even for bathing (Susanna 1:15). It provided a cool escape from the heat of the day (Gen. 3:8; Susanna 1:7). Friends could meet in gardens (John 18:1–2), or banquets could be served there (Esther 1:5). It thus was often associated with joy and gladness (Isa. 51:3). On the other hand, pagan sacrifices were sometimes offered in gardens (Isa. 65:3; 66:17); and gardens were used as burial sites (2 Kings 21:18,26; John 19:41–42).

Important Gardens The garden of Eden (Gen. 2:8; 3:23–24) was planted by God (2:8) and entrusted to Adam for cultivating and keeping (2:15). Following their sin, Adam and Eve were banished from the garden; but "Eden the garden of God" (Ezek. 28:13) continued as a symbol of blessing and bounty (Ezek. 36:35; Joel 2:3). The "king's garden" in Jerusalem was located near a gate to the city that provided unobserved exit or escape (2 Kings 25:4; Neh. 3:15; Jer. 39:4; 52:7). The "garden" (John 18:1) called Gethsemane (Matt. 26:36; Mark 14:32) was a place where Jesus often met with His disciples (John 18:2) and where He was betrayed and arrested.

Michael Fink

GAREB (Gā′ rĕb) Personal and place name meaning, "scabby." A member of David's personal army (2 Sam. 23:38). 2. Hill in Jerusalem marking point of city wall which Jeremiah promised would be rebuilt (Jer. 31:39).

GARLAND Garland translates in modern translations two Hebrew and one Greek term, all referring to wreaths worn on the head. Garlands symbolized instruction or the benefit of wisdom (Prov. 1:9; 4:9). In Isaiah 61:3,10 garlands form part of the bridegroom's wedding apparel. Israel's days of Exile, pictured as mourning, would give way to the celebration of God's salvation, pictured as a wedding. At Acts 14:13 the priest of Zeus brought Paul and Barnabas garlands. In Greek mythology the gods were frequently portrayed wearing garlands. Mistaking the apostles for Zeus and Hermes, the priest deemed garlands a suitable gift.

A sculpture of a garland around the altar of the pagan god Aesculapius at Pergamum.

GARLIC See Plants in the Bible.

GARMITE (Gär′ mīte) A title or designation meaning, "my bone" used for Keilah in the line of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:19). The Hebrew text and the exact meaning of Garmite are obscure.

GARNER KJV term for a barn, storehouse, or granary (Ps. 144:13; Joel 1:17; Matt, 3:12; Luke 3:17). To garner (Isa. 62:9, NAS, NRSV) means to gather (a crop) for storage. See Granary.

GARRISON A body of troops stationed for defense, often in the sense of occupying forces. In the tenth century B.C. the Philistines had garrisons deep in Jewish territory at Gibeath-elohim (1 Sam. 10:5), Geba (1 Sam. 13:3), and Bethlehem (2 Sam. 23:14). David, in turn, placed garrisons in Damascus (2 Sam. 8:6) and in Edom (2 Sam. 8:14) with the result that the natives became his servants, that is, they were subjugated and forced to pay tribute.

The KJV has garrisons at Ezekiel 26:11 where modern translations have a reference to pillars in honor of the gods of Tyre. The KJV of 2 Corinthians 11:32 mentions that the city of Damascus was guarded with a garrison. Modern versions simply note the city was guarded. The parallel in Acts 9:24 only mentions guards at the gate.

GASH In modern translations to cut the skin as a sign of mourning (Jer. 41:5; 47:5; 48:37) or in the worship of pagan dieties (1 Kings 18:28). See Fertility Cults.

GASHMU (Găsh′ mū) Aramaic form of Geshem used in Nehemiah 6:6. See Geshem.

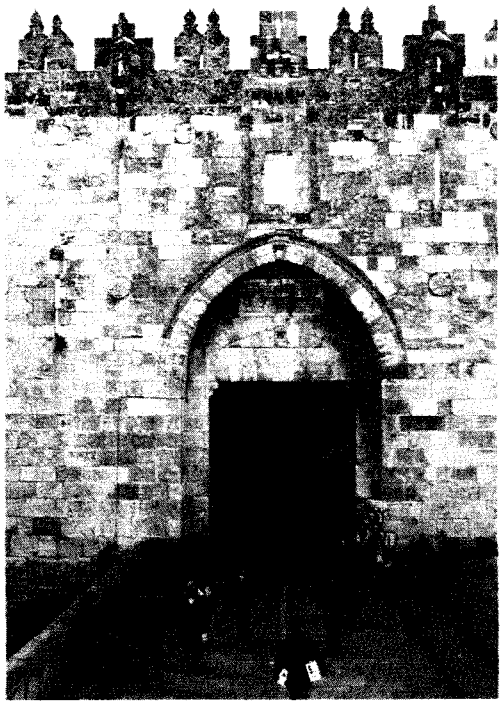
GATAM (Gā′ tăm) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:11). He headed a clan of Edomites (Gen. 36:16).

GATE BETWEEN THE TWO WALLS A city gate on the southeast side of Jerusalem, perhaps identical with the Fountain Gate. Zedekiah and his sons were captured by the Babylonians after escaping through this gate (2 Kings 25:4; Jer. 39:4; 52:7).

GATEKEEPER One who guards access to a place, either a city (2 Sam. 18:26; 2 Kings 7:10–11), a residence (John 18:17), the sacred precincts of the ark (1 Chron. 15:23–24), or the Temple (1 Chron. 23:5). KJV uses porter. Temple gatekeepers were charged with preventing anyone unclean from entering the Temple (2 Chron. 23:19) and with guarding the Temple treasuries and storehouses (1 Chron. 9:26; 26:20–22; Neh. 12:25).

The Joppa (modern Jaffa) Gate at Jerusalem.

The Dung Gate at Jerusalem was the entry to Jerusalem from the area of the Tyropoeon Valley.



GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE Jerusalem's many gates have varied in number and location with the changing size and orientation of its walls throughout its long history. Persons could enter through an important city gate on the west from Jaffa (Tel Aviv) Road, as they do today. On the east, entrance from the Kidron Valley was signed principally through the Sheep Gate (modern Stephen or Lion Gate) in New Testament times and by a recently found gate (Spring, 1986) south of the modern city walls in Old Testament times. This latter gate may date to the reign of Solomon, being similar to Solomonic gates found at Megiddo, Gezer, and Hazor. Entrance to the Temple itself was on its eastern side through the Beautiful gate (Acts 3:10), near the Golden Gate recently found beneath the city eastern wall. On the north, the principal gateway (Damascus Gate) opened onto the Damascus Road. Seven gates now allow entrance to the old city of Jerusalem. John McRay

GATH (Găth) Gath was one of the five cities that comprised the Philistine city-state system (1 Sam. 6:17). See Philistines. The inhabitants of Gath were referred to as the Gittites (1 Sam. 17:4; 2 Sam. 6:10–11). Because the Hebrew term gath/gat meant "winepress" and since vineyards and winepresses were widespread in the land, a number of towns in Palestine were named Gath. Usually the name was used with another name which helped distinguish one site from another, such as, Gath-Hepher, Gath-Rimmon and Moresheth-Gath.

Stephen's (or Lion's) Gate at Jerusalem.

The Damascus Gate at Jerusalem as seen from outside the old city walls.

By far the most frequently mentioned Gath in the Old Testament is Gath of the Philistines. In addition to Gath, the other towns of the Philistine city-state system were Ekron, Ashdod, Ashkelon and Gaza (1 Sam. 6:17). We may reasonably assume that Gath was the principal city among the five and served as the hub of the pentapolis.

Gath was strategically located for Philistine purposes. While we do not know the exact location, we do know the general area in which Gath was located. Based on information from the biblical accounts, Gath was located inland as opposed to the other Philistine towns which were on or near the coast. It was located in the Shephelah, that is, the band of foothills which lay between the coastal plain on the west and the central hill country on the east. Since the Israelites, at least during the period of the settlement, occupied the central hill country, Gath was in a position to protect Philistine territory from raids by the Israelites. At the same time it was convenient for the Philistines to initiate raids on Israelite communities from the city of Gath. Since a number of sites have been eliminated in recent years based on archaeological excavations, one of the most likely candidates for Philistine Gath is tell es-Safi, twelve miles east of Ashdod.

Panoramic view of the tel of ancient Gath.

A number of the highlights of Gath's history are reflected in the Old Testament. Prior to the coming of the Israelites, Gath was a Canaanite city occupied by the Anakim, a group known for their large stature (Josh. 11:21–22). During the conquest of Canaan, Joshua and the Israelites apparently did not take the sites of Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod (Josh. 11:22). We may assume that these towns were taken by the Philistines at this point.

Gath was one of the locations to which the Philistines took the ark (1 Sam. 5:8–9) and was the hometown of Goliath (1 Sam. 17:4) and Obed-edom (1 Chron. 13:13). One of the most interesting bits of information is that at one point while Saul was in pursuit of David, David found sanctuary with Achish, the king of Gath, and perhaps became a vassal of the Philistines (1 Sam. 27:1–7). Eventually David defeated the Philistines and made Gath an Israelite town (1 Chron. 18:1). Apparently Achish continued to be the king of Gath, perhaps as a vassal king, even during the reign of Solomon (1 Kings 2:39). During the period of the divided monarchy, Gath's history went through a series of changes. Rehoboam, the king for Judah (931-913 B.C.) fortified Gath and made it a fortress city of Judah (2 Chron. 11:5–12). Hazael, king of Syria (about 843-797 B.C.), beseiged the city and captured it (2 Kings 12:17). Shortly thereafter, the inhabitants of Gath apparently rebelled against Hazael and established to some degree their independence. Finally, Uzziah, king of Judah (792-740 B.C.), partially destroyed Gath and made it once again a part of the territory of Judah (2 Chron. 26:6). Around 711 B.C., Sargon II, the king of Assyria, conquered and perhaps destroyed the city. Apparently, at this point, Gath's history came to an end. This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that Gath is obviously omitted in the lists of Philistine sites mentioned by the prophets (Jer. 25:20; Amos 1:6–8; Zeph. 2:4; Zech. 9:5–6). LaMoine DeVries

GATH-HEPHER (Gath-hē′ phēr) Place name meaning, "winepress on the watering hole." A city on the eastern border of Zebulun's tribal allotment (Josh. 19:13). The prophet Jonah came from Gath-hepher (2 Kings 14:25). It is located at modern el-Meshed or nearby khirbet ez-Zurra, three miles northeast of Nazareth.

GATH-RIMMON (Găth-rĭm′ mon) Place name meaning, "winepress on the pomegranate tree." Town in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:45) and set aside for Levites (Josh. 21:24). It is usually located at tell Jerisheh on the Yarkon River in modern Tel Aviv, but some scholars locate it two miles to the northeast at tell Abu Zeitun. 1 Chronicles 6:69 lists Gath-rimmon in the tribe of Ephraim, but this is usually understood as a copyist's omission of a sentence at the beginning of verse 69. Gath-rimmon also appears in the Hebrew text of Joshua 21:25 though not in the earliest Greek translation or in the parallel in 1 Chronicles 6:70. Most scholars recognize that a copyist repeated Gath-rimmon from verse 24, the original reading probably being Ibleam. See Ibleam.

GAUZE, GARMENTS OF One of the fine items associated with Jerusalem socialites (Isa. 3:23, NRSV). The meaning of the underlying Hebrew is debated. The sense is either a gauze garment (NRSV; interpreted as a revealing garment, TEV; scarves of gauze, REB) or a mirror (hand mirror, NAS). The KJV has glasses in the sense of looking glasses. At this time a mirror would be a piece of polished metal. At Isaiah 8:1 the Hebrew word translated as gauze garment (or mirror) is translated as (writing) tablet.

A mythical figure wearing a gauze-thin garment of Roman style.

GAZA (Gā′ zà) Place name meaning, "strong." Philistine city on the coastal plain about three miles inland from the Mediterranean Sea. It was the southernmost town of the Philistine city-state system which also included Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath (1 Sam. 6:17).

While the site is especially associated with the Philistines, many other groups have inhabited it throughout history. That history extends from a period prior to the arrival of the Philistines, a period when the Avvim occupied the village (Deut. 2:23), on down to the present. The inhabitants of Gaza at times were referred to as the Gazites or Gazathites (Judg. 16:2).

Gaza's important role in ancient history was due to its strategic location on the major coastal plain highway which connected Egypt with the rest of the Ancient Near East. Because of its strategic location, Gaza witnessed the passage of numerous caravans and armies and often got caught in the middle of the political struggles of the Ancient Near East. This is reflected in a brief review of the highlights of Gaza's history. According to the records of Thutmose III, Thutmose captured Gaza on his first campaign to Palestine and made it a major Egyptian center. The Amarna Letters identify Gaza as the district headquarters for Egyptian holdings in southern Palestine. For Solomon, Gaza was the major center on the southern border of his kingdom which ran "from Tiphsah even to Azzah (Gaza)" (1 Kings 4:24).

Gaza was often affected by the political struggles and turnovers that took place during the Assyrian and Babylonian periods. Tiglath-pileser III collected tribute from Gaza during his military campaign against Israel and Syria about 734 B.C. Hezekiah "smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza" as he tried to re-establish Judah's independence (2 Kings 18:8) about 705-704 B.C. Sennacherib reinforced his control of Gaza as a vassal state as he invaded Judah in 701 B.C. Pharaoh Neco conquered Gaza about 609 B.C. and made it an Egyptian holding, but it remained in Egyptian hands for only a few years. Sometime after 605 B.C. the Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar conquered Gaza and made it a part of his empire. LaMoine DeVries

Bedouin woman from the area of Gaza.

GAZATHITE (Gā′ zȧth īte) KJV spelling of Gazite in Joshua 13:3. See Gazite.

GAZELLE See Animals.

Gold cup decorated with the raised figure of a gazelle from the Treasure of the Oxus.

GAZER (Gā′ zēr) KJV spelling of Gezer based on Hebrew accented form (2 Sam. 5:25; 1 Chron. 14:16). See Gezer.

GAZEZ (Gā′ zēz) Personal name meaning, "sheepshearing." Name both of Caleb's son and grandson (1 Chron. 2:46). As other names in the list represent cities in southern Judah occupied by the clan of Caleb, Gazez may also be a city, though nothing else is known about it.

GAZITE (Gā′ zīte) Citizen of Gaza. See Gaza.

GAZZAM (Găz′ zam) Personal name meaning, "caterpillar" or "bird of prey." Leader of a clan of Temple servants who returned from Babylonian captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:48).

GEAR The context of Acts 27:17 indicates that the Greek term underlying gear (RSV) refers to some type of nautical equipment or apparatus. The two interpretations most often given are "lowered the sail" (KJV, TEV) and "let out the (sea) anchor" (NAS, NIV, NRSV, REB). Some commentators suggest that the passage means that all the ship's gear (ropes, sails, yards, pulleys) was secured or stored below deck.

GEBA (Gē′ bȧ) Place name meaning, "hill," and variant Hebrew spelling of Gibeah, with which it is sometimes confused though the two represent different towns in the territory of Benjamin. Geba was given Benjamin (Josh. 18:24) but set aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:17). This is evidently the base camp for Saul and Jonathan in their fight with the Philistines (1 Sam. 13:16—14:18), though the Hebrew texts and modern translations confuse Geba and Gibeah here. King Asa of Judah

The southern site of Geba, modern Jeba, a few miles north of Jerusalem.

(910-869 B.C.) strengthened the city (1 Kings 15:22). In the days of King Josiah (640-609 B.C.) Geba apparently represented the northern border of Judah as opposed to the southern border in Beersheba (2 Kings 23:8). Isaiah described the ominous march of the Assyrian army coming through Geba on its way to Jerusalem (Isa. 10:29). For Zechariah (Zech. 14:10), Geba represented the northern border of a Judah to be flattened out into a plain dominated by God ruling on Mount Zion in Jerusalem. At some period Geba's inhabitants were forced to move to Manahath (1 Chron. 8:6), perhaps when the tribe of Benjamin first settled there or during the Exile. Exiles returned to Geba under Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:26). Some citizens of Geba lived in Michmash and other cities in Nehemiah's day, unless the Hebrew text is read differently (REB) to mean they lived in Geba as well as the other towns (Neh. 11:31). Levite singers lived there (Neh. 12:29).

Geba is variously located, some scholars going so far as to locate a southern Geba of Benjamin at Jeba across the wadi Suweinit from Michmash, about five and a half miles north of Jerusalem, and a northern Geba (Josh. 18:24) at khirbet et-Tell, seven miles north of Bethel. At neither of these places has archaeology yet shown evidence to correlate with the biblical materials.

GEBAL (Gē′ bal) Place name meaning, "mountain." 1. Seaport known to Greeks as Byblos whose help for Tyre Ezekiel described (Ezek. 27:9). Mentioned in Egyptian texts before 2,000 B.C. and in many Egyptian and Assyrian texts through the centuries, Gebal was located at modern Dschebel about 25 miles north of Beirut. It was the most famous of the Syrian ports. It belonged to land that remained for Joshua to conquer (Josh. 13:5). Stone masons from Gebal cut stones for Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 5:18). Archaeologists have discovered settlements here as early as 8,000 B.C. The fine sarcophagus of King Ahiram found there contained the earliest evidence we have of the Phoenician alphabet. About 900 B.C. Tyre replaced Gebal as the strongest city of Phoenicia. Still its fame for building ships and trading throughout the world continued.

2. A member of a coalition against Israel which the psalmist lamented (Ps. 83:7). It is the northern part of Arabia near Petra in the mountainous country south of the Dead Sea. The Genesis Apocryphon from the Dead Sea Scrolls also mentions it.

The ruins of the ancient seaport city of Byblos (Gebal), located in the modern country of Lebanon.

GEBALITE (Gē′ bă īte) Citizens of Gebal. See Gebal.

GEBER (Gē′ bēr) Personal name meaning, "young man" or "hero." Solomon's district governor for Gilead beyond the Jordan (1 Kings 4:19) was the son of Uri. He collected provisions to supply the royal court. The district governor over Ramoth-gilead was Ben-geber or the son of Geber. See Ben-geber.

GEBIM (Gē′ bĭm) Place name meaning, "water ditch." It lay on the line of march conquerors took against Jerusalem (Isa. 10:31). The exact site is not known, but it lay between tell el-Ful and Mount Scopus near Jerusalem.

GECKO See Animals, Reptiles.

GEDALIAH (Gĕd ă lī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has done great things." 1. The son of Ahikam who was appointed ruler of Judah by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 587 B.C. (2 Kings 25:22). Jerusalem had fallen to the Babylonians, and many of the residents of Judah had been deported. Ahikam, the father of Gedaliah, was an ally of the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. 26:24; 39:14), and Gedaliah may have been in sympathy with Jeremiah's political views. That could explain why Nebuchadnezzar selected Gedaliah to be governor. Gedaliah's time in office was brief. After only two months he was murdered by a group of fanatically zealous nationalists under the leadership of Ishmael (Jer. 40:1—41:18). 2. A royal official under King Zedekiah (597-586 B.C.) who was with the group that got the king's permission to imprison Jeremiah in a cistern (Jer. 38). 3. Temple singer and prophet who played the harp with his father Jeduthan and five brothers (1 Chron. 25:3). He headed one of the twenty-four divisions of Temple servants (1 Chron. 25:9).

An abbreviated form of the Hebrew name is given a priest with a foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:18) and the grandfather of the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph. 1:1).

GEDEON (Gĕd′ ė on) KJV transliteration of Greek for Gideon in Hebrews 11:32. See Gideon.

GEDER (Gē′ dēr) Place name meaning, "stone wall." City whose king Joshua killed (Josh. 12:13). The site is unknown and could be easily confused with several places called Beth-geder, Gederah, Gederoth, or Gederothaim. Some scholars believe a copyist confused this text with the preceding Gezer or miscopied a similar-appearing Gerar. First Chronicles 27:28 mentions an official from Geder, but the relationship of this Geder to that of Joshua 12 to the other cities mentioned above cannot be determined.

GEDERAH (Gė dē′ rah) Place name meaning, "sheepfold" or "stone wall." A village in the Shephalah or valley of Judah (Josh. 15:36). It is located at modern tell el-Judeireh north of Maraeshah and ten miles southeast of Lod. Villagers were noted for skill in making pottery, much of which was made for the king (1 Chron. 4:23). The home of one of David's soldiers (1 Chron. 12:4) apparently belongs in Benjamin (1 Chron. 12:2), but he may have been living in Judah before joining David at Ziklag. Otherwise, this is a different Gederah located at Jedireh near Gibeon. See Geder.

GEDERATHITE (Gė dē′ rą thīte) See Gederah.

GEDERITE (Gė′ dēr′ īte) Citizen of Geder. See Geder.

GEDEROTH (Gė dē′ rōth) Place name meaning, "walls." City in tribal allotment of Judah in the Shephelah or valley (Josh. 15:41). It may be an alternate spelling of Gederah or Qatra near Lachish. When the Philistines took Gederoth with other cities, King Ahaz (735-715 B.C.) sent to Assyria for help (2 Chron. 28:18). See Geder; Gederah.

GEDEROTHAIM (Gĕd′ ė rō thā′ īm) Place name meaning, "two walls" or common noun referring to sheepfolds (compare REB translation, namely both parts of Gederah). A town in the valley or Shephelah of Judah allotted to Judah (Josh. 15:36). The list contains fourteen cities without Gederothaim, causing several commentators to identify Gederothaim as a part of Gederah or as a copyist's duplication. See Gederah.

GEDOR (Gē′ dôr) Place name meaning, "wall." 1. Town in hill country of Judah allotted to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:58). It is located at khirbet Judur three miles north of Hebron and Beth-zur and west of Tekoa. The genealogy of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4 includes city names among the list of "sons." In verse 4, Penuel is the father or perhaps founder of the city. 2. In 1 Chronicles 4:18 Jered is the father of Gedor. Its location is disputed. See Socho; Zanoah. The Gedor in 1 Chronicles 4:39 probably represents an early copyist's change from Gerar, which is quite similar in appearance in Hebrew and appears in the earliest Greek translation. If Gedor is the original reading, its location in the tribal allotment of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:24) is not known. A Benjaminite from Gedor had two sons in David's wilderness army (1 Chron. 12:7). This could be a city in Benjamin of unknown location or one of other Gedors discussed above. A member of the tribe of Benjamin was named Gedor (1 Chron. 8:31). See Geder; Gederoth.

GEHARASHIM (Gē hä rā′ shĭm) Place name meaning "valley of the handcrafts workers." A member of the genealogy of Judah and Caleb in 1 Chronicles 4:14, a list which often includes place names. It is listed as a place where members of the tribe of Benjamin lived in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:35). This might indicate that descendants of Judah and Caleb had once occupied territory in Benjamin. It is apparently near Lod in Benjamin's allotment about 30 miles northwest of Jerusalem. See Charashim.

GEHAZI (Gē hā′ zī) Personal name meaning, "valley of vision" or "goggle-eyed." Servant of the prophet Elisha (2 Kings 4:12). The Bible portrays him as a man of questionable character. On one occasion he tried to force a grieving woman away from the prophet (2 Kings 4:27). Despite the prophet's commission, he could not restore a child to life (2 Kings 4:31). Later he tried to secure for himself the reward Elisha had refused from Naaman the Syrian and then lied to Elisha (2 Kings 5:20–25). For his duplicity with regard to Naaman, Gehazi was stricken with the disease of which Naaman had been cured. Gehazi did testify to the king of Elisha's good deeds and helped the widow get her lands restored (2 Kings 8:1–6). See Elisha.

GEHENNA (Gė hĕn′ nă) English transliteration of the Greek word that is a transliteration of the Hebrew place name meaning, "valley of whining" or "valley of lamentation" and came to be used in New Testament times as a word for hell. See Hinnom. The valley south of Jerusalem called the Valley of the son of Hinnom (Josh. 15:8; 18:16; 2 Chron. 33:6; Jer. 32:35) became the place of child sacrifice to foreign gods. In the period between the Old and New Testaments Jewish writing used the term to describe the hell of fire in the final judgment. In some writings but not in the Bible Gehenna was also seen as the place of temporary judgment for those waiting the final judgment.

View of the Valley of Gehenna (Hinnom Valley) looking northeast toward the new city of Jerusalem.

The New Testament uses Gehenna to speak of the place of final judgment. Jesus warned that those who called another, "Thou fool," faced the danger of the fire of Gehenna (Matt. 5:22). He taught it is better to destroy a part of one's body than to have one's whole body thrown into Gehenna (Matt. 5:29; 18:9; Mark 9:43,45,47). In Gehenna worms are constantly at work in a fiery environment that burns forever (Mark 9:48). Only God can commit people to Gehenna and so is the only One worthy of human fear (Matt. 10:28; Luke 12:5). Jesus condemned the Pharisees for making converts but then turning them into sons of Gehenna, that is, people destined for hell (Matt. 23:15). He scolded the Pharisees, warning they had no chance to escape Gehenna through their present practices (Matt. 23:33). For many people James warned that they could not control their tongues that Gehenna had set on fire (Jas. 3:6). See Hell.

GELILOTH (Gĕl′ ĭ lŏth) Place name meaning, "circles" or "regions." A border point north of Jerusalem in tribal allotment of Benjamin (Josh. 18:17). It appears to correspond to Gilgal in the description of Judah 15:7. See Gilgal.

GEM See Jewelry, Jewels, and Precious Stones; Minerals and Metals of the Bible.

GEMALLI (Gĕ măl′ lī) Personal name meaning, "my camel" or "camel driver." Spy who represented tribe of Dan in searching out the land of Canaan (Num. 13:12).

GEMARA A portion of the Talmud containing commentary on the Mishnah. See Mishnah. The word Gemara (Aramaic, "to learn") refers specifically to the discussions on the Mishna conducted in the rabbinic academies of ancient Palestine and Babylon. The Mishna and Gemara combined comprise the Talmud. Most of the Gemara is written in Aramaic. Two Gemaras exist, the Palestinian and the Babylonian.

GEMARIAH (Gĕm ă rī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has completed or carried out." 1. Messenger King Zedekiah (597-586 B.C.) sent to Babylon. He carried a letter from Jeremiah to the exiles (Jer. 29:3). 2. Son of Shaphan, the court scribe, who had a room in the Temple, where Baruch read from Jeremiah's sermons to the congregation (Jer. 36:10). Later, Gemariah sought to keep the king from burning Jeremiah's scroll (v. 25). See Shaphan.

GENEALOGIES (Gē nē ăl′ ō giēs) Records of family lineage that trace the descent of a person, family, or group from an ancestor.

Old Testament Genealogies are recorded in the Old Testament as early as Genesis 4. Various enrollments by family lineage are referenced at significant junctures in Old Testament history (Num. 1:19–49; Ezra 8). The writer of Chronicles offered abundant genealogical records (1 Chron. 1—9).

Genealogies occur in several different forms. A linear genealogy lists one person in each generation, usually father, son, grandson, etc. A segmented genealogy lists several people of at least the first generation and often of following generations, usually the sons of a father, the children of each son, the children in the next generation, etc. Descending genealogies begin with a parent and list the following generations. Ascending genealogies begin with the last member named and trace ancestry back through parent, grandparent, great grandparent, etc. to the original ancestor of the family, clan or nation. The linear genealogy seeks to show that the final person listed has a legitimate right to the position or honor the person occupies or claims. Such legitimation comes from the first ancestor listed or from the established family position. A segmented genealogy shows the relationship between the various individuals or groups named. Genealogies may serve family, political, or religious purposes. In their purposes of legitimation, genealogies describe not only kinship relationships but also geographical, social, economic, religious, and political relationships.

At least nine functions of genealogies may be described: 1. Demonstrate the relationships and the differences between Israel and other nations (Gen. 10); 2. Demonstrate the unity and coherence of Israel (Ex. 1:1–5) or of all nations (Gen. 10); 3. Build a historical bridge connecting Israel through periods of history for which few narratives are available (1 Chron. 1–9); 4. Reveal a pattern of cycles in world history (Matt. 1:1–17); 5. Describe military functions (Num. 1:5–16); 6. Show a person or group's right to an office or function (1 Chron. 6; 24–26); 7. Preserve the purity of the nation (see Ezra 10); 8. Assure a sense of national continuity and unity in a period of national despair (1 Chron. 5); 9. Show the movement of history toward God's goal (Gen. 4; 5; 11:10–32; 1 Chron. 1—9).

New Testament Matthew began his Gospel with a genealogy tracing Jesus' lineage from Abraham through David. Luke also included a genealogy reaching back to Adam and God (3:23–38). The relationship between these two records is not clear, though a respective focus on messiahship and salvation offered to all mankind is apparent.

Genealogies later came under question. Hebrews 7:3,6 assigns value to the fact that Melchizedek was a priest without genealogy—a fact that set him apart from the Jewish priesthood. Paul condemned a distorted use of genealogies in his later writings (1 Tim. 1:4; Titus 3:9), though the exact role such genealogies played is not certain. They perhaps were the source of disputes about authority and leadership in some churches.

Michael Fink

GENERAL With reference to Sisera (Judg. 4:7) and Joab (1 Chron. 27:34), a general (NRSV) is the highest ranking officer in command of an army. General, commander, and (chief) captain are used interchangeably for such an officer in English translations. KJV consistently translates "captain" or "chief captain."

GENERATION A period of time and its significant events comprising the lifespan of a person but also used to talk of a more indefinite timespan. Two Hebrew words are at times translated, "generation." The more significant of these is toledoth, derived from the Hebrew verb, "to bear children." Toledoth gives structure to the Book of Genesis (2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1,32; 11:10,27; 25:12,13,19; 36:1,9; 37:2). Thus creation, Adam, Noah, Noah's sons, Shem, Terah, Ishmael, the sons of Ishmael, Isaac, Esau, and Jacob each provide a generation and a structural unit in the Genesis narrative. In writing a narrative this way, Israel followed a pattern long used by Near Eastern neighbors, that of describing creation as a series of births. Israel, as so often under divine inspiration, radically changed the pattern. Israel's neighbors spoke of the birth of gods, such births representing at the same time a part of the universe, since the sun, the moon, the stars were all looked upon as gods. Israel simply spoke of the birth of creation by God's words and actions. This started a process by which human generations would endure as long as the creation generation endured. Each human generation lasts from the death of the father through the death of the son. This was the time when the son functioned as head of the larger Hebrew extended family. Often the aged patriarch presided over the active leadership of his sons as seen particularly in the cases of Isaac and Jacob. Human history in its simplest form of family history is then the way God tells His story of working with human beings to bless them and to accomplish His purposes for them. He works not only in miraculous, unique events; He works also in the continuing series of human births and deaths. Elsewhere toledoth appears in genealogical lists such as Exodus 6, Numbers 1, 1 Chronicles 1—9.

The Hebrew term dor is related to the word for circle and refers to the life circle of an individual, either from birth to death or from birth to the birth of the first child. It can have extended uses in metaphorical language. Dor occurs over 160 times in the Old Testament. A generation was a general term for those persons living at a particular time. A generation did not necessarily have a specific number of years. Genesis 15:13–16 apparently equates 400 years with four generations, thus 100 years per generation. Numbers 32:11–13 may reckon a generation as 60 years, it including people twenty and above and giving them forty more years to die. Or one may interpret this to mean a generation is the forty years of adulthood between ages 20 and 60. God promised Jehu his sons would rule to the fourth generation, apparently meaning four sons (2 Kings 10:30; 15:12). Jehu began ruling about 841 B.C., his first son Jehoahaz about 814 B.C. and the fourth generation Zechariah died about 752 B.C. The five generations ruled less than 90 years, while the four sons' generations ruled about 60 years. This is reducing a generation to a quite small number. After his tragedies Job lived 140 years and saw four generations (Job 42:16). This would make a generation about 35 years. Basically, generation is not a specific number of years but a more or less specific period of time. (Compare Job 8:8; Isa. 51:9.) The literal Hebrew expression "generation and generation" thus means through all generations or forever (Ps. 49:11). Similarly, "to your (his, their) generations" means forever (Num. 10:8).

The generations come and go (Eccl. 1:4). This should establish wisdom on which a present generation can draw (Deut. 32:7). A generation also represents those who can gather for worship, so that the gathered worship community forms a generation (Pss. 14:5; 24:6; 73:15). The generations of people change, but God has given His name Yahweh to be remembered through all generations (Ex. 3:15). He is the refuge for all generations (Ps. 90:1). The danger is that a generation will arise that does not know Yahweh (Judg. 2:10; compare Ps. 12). Thus one generation must tell God's acts and write them down for the next generation (Pss. 22:30–31; 102:18 NRSV; compare Ps. 79:13).

God's people must be taught faithfulness. God is faithful to a thousand generations by His very nature (Deut. 7:9). His salvation is available through the generations; that is forever (Isa. 51:8).

In the New Testament "generation" refers to a specific contemporary audience. Jesus often used the term to describe the evil nature of the people He addressed (Matt. 11:16; 12:39; Luke 17:25). The message of the New Testament can be summarized: "To him be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever" (Eph. 3:21 NRSV). Trent C. Butler

GENESIS First book of the Bible, providing a universal setting for God's revelation and introducing basic biblical teachings. Genesis moves in two parts: (1) universal creation, rebellion, punishment, and restoration; (2) God's choice of a particular family through whom He promises to bless the nations.

Contents The first eleven chapters of Genesis provide the universal setting for Israel's story. Taking up themes and motifs prominent in the literature of their neighbors, the inspired writer showed how only one God participated in creation of the whole world and in directing the fortunes of all its nations. The focus narrows from creation of the universe to creation of the first family (1:1—2:25). Trust in a wily serpent rather than in God brings sin into the world and shows God's judgment on sin. Thus human life is lived out in the suffering, pain, and frustration of the world we know (ch. 3). In that world God continues to condemn sin, bless faithfulness, and yet show grace to sinners (4:1–15). From the human perspective, great cultural achievements appear, but so does overwhelming human pride (4:16–24). Thus humans multiply their race as God commanded; they also look for a better life than that of pain and toil (4:25–5:32). Help comes, but only after further punishment. Through the flood, God eliminates all humanity except the family of Noah, then makes a covenant with that family never again to bring such punishment (6:1—9:17), but human sin continues on the individual and the societal levels, bringing necessary divine punishment of the nations at the tower of Babel (9:18–11:9). God thus establishes a plan to redeem and bless the humanity that persists in sin. He calls one man of faith—Abraham—and leads him to a new beginning in a new land. He gives His promises of land, nation, fame, and a mission of blessing for the nations. This works itself out in blessing nations that help Abraham and punishing those who do not. It climaxes in God's covenant with Abraham in which Abraham shows faithfulness in the sign of circumcision.

New generations led by Isaac and Jacob find God continuing to lead them, to call them to be His people, and to renew His promises to them. Human trickery and deception personified in Jacob do not alter God's determination to carry out His redemptive plan.

Thus is established the heritage of God's people in the triad of patriarchal fathers—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. God's promises and revelation to them became the foundation of Israel's religious experience and hope. See Creation; Flood; Sin; Humanity; Anthropology; Earth; Image of God; Abraham; Isaac; Jacob; Joseph; Adam and Eve; Noah; Names of God; God of the Fathers.

Critical Problems Critical scholars have raised many questions as they have sought reverently to study and understand the Book of Genesis. Comparison with other creation and flood stories, especially those coming from Sumeria, Babylon, and Assyria, have shown striking similarities to the biblical narrative. Why does the biblical account follow the same basic outline of other creation and flood narratives? Has one copied the other? Does God inspire a writer to react to other literature and write the authentic version? What role does oral tradition play in one nation learning of the literature of another nation? The least that can be said is that Israel's creation and flood narratives present a consistent picture of a sovereign God concerned with and in control of all nations. It shows a realistic picture of humanity in their great strengths and weaknesses. It has proven itself true through the centuries and millennia, whereas the other stories have become relics of a past civilization, recovered only by the accident of the archaeologists' spadework. See Creation; Flood.

Genesis has given rise to theories of the origin and compilation of the book and of the Pentateuch or first five books of the Bible. Do use of later names such as land of the Philistines (Gen. 21:32), closely resembling, almost duplicate stories (12:10–20; 20:1–18; 26:1–11), the use of different names for God (Yahweh in ch. 15; Elohim in ch. 17), the use of different facts (man made with woman in 1:27 but man made, then the animals, then woman in ch. 2) point to different authors of parts of the book, sources used by an author, or literary and theological techniques used to deliver the divine message?

In the 1960s many scholars thought they had reached agreement on the answers. The 1980s opened the questions anew with widely differing theories. The theories each try to explain how God produced and provided this book. The constant fact is that Genesis is both a classic piece of literature and the word of God inspired to teach His people about Him, His plan of redemption, and the nature of the world and people He created. See Pentateuch.

Teachings A brief article can merely list a few of the important teachings of Genesis. Human reflection upon the book from the point of its origin onward has not completely understood its theological richness and its call to covenant faithfulness and hope. God is Creator and Redeemer. He provided the best of all possible worlds for the best of all possible creatures, humanity created in His image. Human sin, inspired by a tempting part of the creation, brought divine judgment, resulting in the world of pain, labor, and frustration we now experience.

God is Judge and Savior. He takes human sin seriously but works constantly to form permanent relationships with people of faith. He calls people to follow and serve Him, promising them blessings suited for their needs and His purposes. God's judgment is limited by His covenant promises. God's salvation is limited only by human refusal to trust and believe. People of faith are not perfect. They deceive and connive, but they leave themselves open to God's leadership and become instruments of His plan.

God is universal sovereign and individual God. He created and directs the nations, blessing and cursing according to His purposes. He reveals Himself to, calls, enters into covenant with, and promises to bless individual people. Such work with individuals is part of His plan to bless nations.

Outline

I. The Nature of Human Life (1:1—11:9)
   - A. Humans are made in His image and are the climax of His creation (1:1–2:4).
   - B. Human nature has needs and limits (2:2–25).
   - C. Human sin brings alienation and punishment (3:1–24).
   - D. God punishes human pride and irresponsibility, yet His grace protects the sinner (4:1–15).
   - E. Human nature produces astonishing cultural achievements and deadly pride (4:16–24).
   - F. Humans respond to God, develop into a large society, but seek relief from their burdens (4:25–5:32).
   - G. God punishes sinful society but preserves a faithful remnant (6:1—8:22).
   - H. God renews His commission to the creature made in His image and makes a covenant not to repeat the disastrous punishment of the flood (9:1–17).
   - I. Sin and disrespect set the pattern for international relations (9:18—10:32).
   - J. Pride and failure to trust God and other people bring separation and loss of communication (11:1—9).

II. The Mission and Nature of God's Family (11:10—50:26)
   - A. The Lord has a redemptive plan for His world (11:10—25:18).
     1. God's family originated in a foreign land (11:10–32).
     2. The Lord calls people to Himself (12:1–9).
     3. God plagues the nations which misuse God's people (12:10–20).
     4. God renews His promises and blessings when His family blesses the nations (13:1—15:21).
     5. The promises depend on God's grace, not human cunning (16:1—17:27).
     6. God's faithful servant intercedes with God for the wicked nations (18:1—19:38).
     7. Even deception by God's servant can result in blessing to God-fearing nations (20:1–18).
     8. God fulfills His promises both to His family and to the nations (21:1–21).
     9. God's obedient servant wins recognition from the nations (21:22–34).
     10. God tests His servant and renews His promises to the faithful servant (22:1–24).
     11. God's people begin to own the land (23:1–20).

12. God proves His faithfulness for the next generation (24:1–67).
13. God cares for the Arabian tribes (25:1–18).

B. God works through human conflicts to protect His people and His land (25:19—36:43).
1. God works His purpose even in family conflicts (25:19–34).
2. God renews His promises because of obedience of the old generations (26:1–5).
3. God works through international conflict to preserve His people (26:6–35).
4. God directs and blesses His people and the nations despite their family disputes (27:1—33:20).
5. Human revenge and trickery accomplish nothing (34:1–31; compare 49:5–7).
6. Recommitment to God brings renewal of His covenant promises (35:1–15).
7. Death and sin do not mean the end of God's covenant people (35:16–29).
8. God's leadership is evident even in the history of neighboring nations (36:1–43).

C. God brings reconciliation even in exile in an enemy land (37:1—50:26).
1. Human jealousy brings hatred, separation, and grief (37:1–36).
2. God works out His purposes despite human sin, injustice, and conniving (38:1–30).
3. God's presence is the only blessing His servant needs (39:1–23).
4. God leads through hardship to blessing and responsibility (40:1—41:52).
5. God brings reconciliation through trial, confession, acceptance of responsibility, and forgiveness (41:53—45:28).
6. God leads and rules even in a foreign kingdom (46:1—47:31).
7. The patriarchal blessings belong to the tribes of Israel (48:1—49:33).
8. Israel must responsibly fulfill the charges of the patriarchs (50:1–14).
9. God renews His promises to a forgiving, faithful people (50:15–26).

Trent C. Butler

GENNESARET (Gĕn nĕs' ă rĕt) See Galilee, Sea of.

GENTILES (Gĕn' tīles) People who are not part of God's chosen family at birth and thus can be considered "pagans." Though not synonymous in English "Gentiles," "nations," "pagans," "heathens" are variants chosen by translators to render goyim in Hebrew and ethnoi in Greek. "Gentile" and "nation" suggest race or territory, while "pagans" and "heathen" suggest religion.

The doctrine of election in which Israel became a holy nation (Ex. 19:16; Lev. 19:2) among the nations by the covenant at Sinai draws attention to the fact that no other nation has such a God or such laws. The writer of Deuteronomy forbad communion with the nations (Deut. 7:3,6,16). The Old Testament noted the filthy ways (Ezra 6:21) and worship abominations (2 Kings 16:3) of the nations.

Affliction by other nations increased tension between Israel and the nations which gave rise to invoking curses on the nations in the Psalms (Pss. 9; 59; 137). The ultimate punishment of Israel for disobedience was being scattered among the nations.

According to the prophets, the nations were under God's control and were unconsciously being used (Isa. 10:5–7); but in turn would be punished (Isa. 10:12–16). Joel depicted the judgment of the nations who had abused Israel in the valley of Jehoshaphat (Joel 3:12–16).

Solomon's prayer of dedication made clear that the door was never closed to the foreigner who wished to serve the Lord (1 Kings 8:41–43), and prophetic words and some Psalms depict the nations gathering to worship the God of Jacob (Pss. 86:9; 102:15–17; Isa. 2:2–4; Zeph. 3:9–10). The Lord is the sole God of all peoples (Isa. 45:22–24). Israel's mission was to bring justice (Isa. 42:1) and light to the nations (Isa. 49:6).

Jesus' ministry is interpreted in the Gospels in terms of Old Testament expectations for the Gentiles. He was a light to the Gentiles (Matt. 4:16–17; Luke 2:32). Though Jesus directed His work to Jews (Matt. 15:24) and at first limited His disciples to them (Matt. 10:5), He threatened that the kingdom would be taken from the Jews and given to a nation bringing its fruits (Matt. 21:43). Though Jesus was crucified by Gentiles (Matt. 20:19), equal blame is placed on both Gentiles and Jews (Acts 4:27).

Following the resurrection of Jesus, the commission included "all nations" (Matt. 28:19). The judgment scene in Jesus' parable envisioned "all nations" gathered before the glorious throne (Matt. 25:31,32). The promises included all those afar off (Acts 2:39). At the house of Cornelius, the Spirit was poured out on the Gentiles (Acts 10:45; 11:1,18; 15:7). The apostolic gathering in Jerusalem, by the apostolic letter, freed Gentiles from obedience to the law (Acts 15:19; compare 21:19,21,25).

In the apostolic preaching the promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:3; 18:18) found fulfillment (Gal. 3:8). Though in times past the Gentiles had been without God (Eph. 2:12–22), God in Christ broke through all boundries. Paul, sent to preach among the Gentiles (Acts 9:15; 22:21; 26:17; Gal. 1:16; 2:9) was in perils (2 Cor. 11:26). When rejected in the synagogues, he turned to the Gentiles (Acts 13:46; 18:6; 28:28), understanding his work in the light of Old Testament predictions (Acts 13:47,48; Rom. 15:9–12). As the apostle to the Gentiles (Gal. 2:8,9), claiming that in Christ racial distinctions were obliterated (Gal. 3:28), Paul proclaimed an equal opportunity of salvation (Rom. 1:16; 9:24; Col. 3:11; compare Acts 26:20,23). Gentiles were the wild branches in the allegory grafted into the olive tree (Rom. 11:16–25).

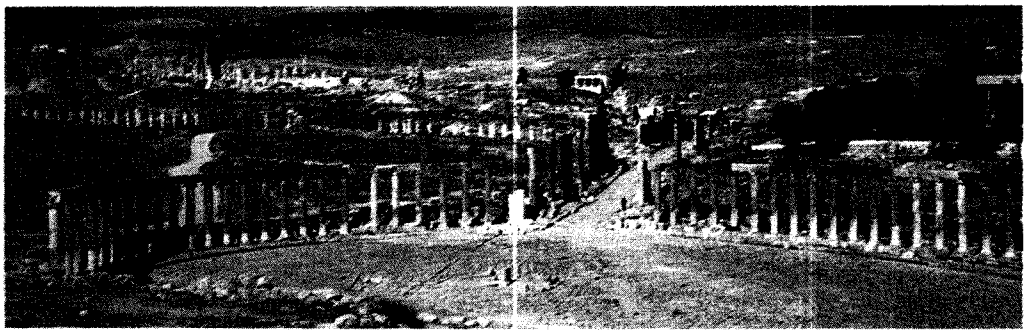
Paul experienced great resentment among the Jews because of the opportunity he was offering the Gentiles (2:15–16). Nevertheless, in New Testament thought, the church made up of Jew and Gentile was the holy nation, God's own people (1 Pet. 2:9).

The apocalypse with its shifting views, depicts a redeemed multitude of all nations (Rev. 5:9; 7:9), and the One who overcomes has power over the nations (Rev. 2:26), Babylon (Rev. 14:8; 18:2,23), the beast (Rev. 13:4), and the harlot (Rev. 17:15) are the deceivers of the nations. The devil is bound to deceive them no more (Rev. 20:3). All nations come to worship (Rev. 15:4) One born to rule with a rod of iron (Rev. 12:5). In the closing scenes of the book the nations walk in the light of the lamp of the Lamb; the glory of the nations is brought into the city (Rev. 21:23–24,26); the leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of the nations (Rev. 22:2). Jack P. Lewis

GENUBATH (Gĕ nū′ băth) Personal name meaning, "theft" or "foreign guest." Son of Hadad, king of Edom, and the sister of Tahpenes, the wife of Egypt's pharaoh (1 Kings 11:19–20). The name of the Egyptian pharaoh is not known. See Hadad.

GERA (Gē′ rà) Personal name meaning, "stranger," "alien," or "sojourner." 1. A son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). 2. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:3,5). Son of Ehud and clan head in Geba who was exiled to Manahath (1 Chron. 8:6–7). 3. The Father of Ehud (Judg. 3:15, see 1. above). 4. Father of Shimei, who cursed David (2 Sam. 16:5). See Shimei.

GERAH (Gē′ rah) The smallest biblical measure of weight equaling one-twentieth of a shekel. See Shekel; Weights and Measures. Archaeological discoveries show a gerah weighed about half a gram.



GERAR (Gē′ rär) Place name possibly meaning, "drag away." City located between Gaza and Beersheba. Abraham and Isaac made treaties with the king of Gerar (Gen. 20; 26). Gerar was on the border of Canaanite territory (Gen. 10;19). TEV reads Gerar with the earliest Greek translation of 1 Chronicles 4:39–40. Other translations follow the Hebrew reading Gedor. Gerar was the limit of Asa's pursuit of the defeated Ethiopians (2 Chron. 14:13–14). The site is possibly that of tell Abu Hureirah on the northwest side of Wadi Esh-Sheriah. Numerous potsherds from the Middle Bronze period (1800–1600 B.C.) indicate that the city flourished during the time of the patriarchs.

GERASA (Gĕr′ ȧ sȧ) Two places bear this name. One of them is referred to in the Bible; the other is not. See Gadarene.

The ruins of ancient Gerasa located in the modern country of Jordan.

The other Gerasa was located some twenty-six miles north of present-day Amman in Jordan. Its ruins are among the most excellently preserved in the Middle East. See Arabia.

The forum and colonnaded road of Gerasa (modern Jerash) as seen from the temple of Zeus.

GERASENES (Gĕr′ ă sēnes) Citizens of Gerasa. See Gerasa.

GERGESENES (Gĕr′ gĕ sēnes) KJV reading in Matthew 8:28. Modern translations read, "Gadarenes." See Gadarenes.

GERIZIM AND EBAL (Gĕr′ ĭ zĭm and Ē′ băl) Closely related place names meaning, "cut off ones" and "stripped one" or "baldy." Two mountains which form the sides of an important east-west pass in central Israel known as the valley of Shechem. Ancient Shechem lies at the east entrance of this valley, and modern Nablus stands in the narrow valley between the two mountains.

Gerizim (modern Jebel et-Tor) stands 2,849 feet above the Mediterranean and 700 feet above the valley. Ebal (modern Jebel Eslamiyeh) was located directly opposite Gerizim and is 2,950 feet above sea level. Both of the mountains are steep and rocky and perhaps gave reason to the probable meaning of Shechem: "shoulder(s)." The mountains, standing like two sentinels, could be fortified and assure control of this important valley.

When the Israelites conquered central Israel, Joshua carried out the directive given by Moses, and placed half of the tribes on Mount Gerizim to pronounce the blessing (Deut. 27:12) and the other half on Mount Ebal to pronounce the curses (Deut. 11:29; Josh. 8:30–35). Joshua built an altar on Ebal (Josh. 8:30).

Jotham proclaimed his famous kingship fable to the citizens of Shechem from Mount Gerizim (Judg. 9:7), thus using its sacred tradition to reinforce the authority of his message. After the Assyrians captured the Northern Kingdom, the mixed race of people began mixing pagan worship and worship of Yahweh (2 Kings 17:33).

Gerizim disappears from biblical history until after the Babylonian Exile and the Persian restoration. The Jewish historian Josephus reported that Alexander the Great gave permission to the Samaritans to build a temple on Mount Gerizim. Archaeologists think they have found remains of this temple, 66 x 66 feet and 30 feet high, built of uncut rocks without cement. Josephus also reported that John Hyrcanus destroyed the temple in 128 B.C. Archaeologists have also found remains of the temple to Zeus Hypsistos which Hadrian, the Roman emperor, built after A.D. 100. Over 1500 marble steps led to the pagan temple. The small Samaritan community continues to worship on Gerizim today, just as they did in Jesus' lifetime when He met the Samaritan woman drawing water from Jacob's well. She pointed to traditional worship on the mountain (John 4:20). See Samaritans. Jimmy Albright GERSHOM (Gĕr′ shŏm) Personal name meaning, "sojourner there," "expelled one," or "protected of the god Shom." 1. Firstborn son of Moses and Zipporah (Ex. 2:22). The inspired writer interpreted his name to mean "stranger" or "sojourner" from the Hebrew word ger, "sojourner." His birth became a further sign for Moses that he had done right in escaping Egypt, the birth occurring in Midian. Apparently Gershom was the son circumcised in the unusual ritual of Exodus 4:24–26 in which Zipporah delivered Moses when God sought to kill him. Thus Gershom represented protection for Moses. 2. A son of Levi and head of a clan of Levitic priests (1 Chron. 6:16–20,43,62,71; 15:7). First Chronicles 23:14 shows that Moses' sons had been incorporated into the line of Levites. Compare 1 Chronicles 26:24. 3. A man who accompanied Ezra on the return from Babylon to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:2). See Gershon; Levites; Moses.

GERSHOMITES (Gĕr′ sho mītes) NRSV term for "sons of Gershom." See Gershom.

GERSHON (Gĕr′ shŏn) Personal name meaning, "expelled" or "bell." Eldest son of Levi (Gen. 46:11). He was the progenitor of the Gershonites, who had specifically assigned responsibilities regarding the transporting of the tabernacle during the years of Israel's nomadic existence in the wilderness. Compare Exodus 6:16–17; Numbers 3:17–25; 4:22–41; 7:7; 10:17; 26:57; Joshua 21:6,27. First Chronicles often spells the name Gershom. See Gershom; Levi; Priests and Levites.

GERSHONITE (Gĕr′ shŏn īte) Descendant of Gershon. See Gershon.

GERUTH (Gē′ rüth) Part of a place name meaning, "hospitality" (Jer. 41:17) translated differently—KJV: "habitation of Chimham"; NAS, NRSV: "Geruth Chimham"; REB: "Kimham's holding." Fugitives stopped there near Bethlehem on their way to Egypt fleeing from Ishmael, who had killed Gedaliah, whom Babylon had appointed governor of Judah after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. It apparently designated an inn or lodging place near Bethlehem. It may have represented the first stop across the border from Judah into Egyptian-controlled territory.

GESHAM (Gĕsh′ ăm) Personal name with variant spellings perhaps meaning, "rain." Son of Jahdai (1 Chron. 2:47). Earliest translations give varying spellings, followed by modern translators. Thus NAS, NIV, NRSV, REB read, Geshan, which is the actual Hebrew spelling. The early Greek traditions read Gershom and Sogar. Many of the names in the list are towns associated with Caleb, so that Gesham (Geshan) may also be a town.

GESHAN (Gĕsh′ ăn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. See Gesham.

GESHEM (Gĕsh′ ĕm) Personal name meaning, "rain." Arabian ruler of Kedar who joined Sanballat and Tobiah in opposing Nehemiah's efforts to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 2:19; 6:1–19). His name appears on a silver vessel dedicated by his son Qainu to the goddess Han-Ilat at tell el-Maskhuta in Lower Egypt. An inscription found in Dedan also appears to describe extensive territories Geshem controlled. He was in name a vassal of Persia but apparently wielded great personal power with tribes in the Syrian desert, southern Palestine, the delta of Egypt, and northern Arabia. He may have hoped to gain further control in Palestine and certainly did not want a local power to threaten him there. In 6:6 a variant spelling of his name—Gashmu—appears.

GESHUR (Gē′ shûr) Place name perhaps meaning, "bridge." Small Aramean city-state between Bashan and Hermon. It served as a buffer between Israel and Aram. David married Maacah, daughter of the king of Geshur, who became mother of Absalom (1 Sam. 3:3), which caused the two lands to be on friendly terms. Absalom later retreated to his mother's homeland (2 Sam. 13:37–38). Nowhere do David's battle reports mention Geshur (2 Sam. 8; 10). Many scholars think Joshua 13:2 and 1 Sam 27:8 refer to a group of southern Philistine cities about which nothing else is known.

GESHURI (Gē shū′ rī) KJV spelling for Geshurites. See Geshur.

GESHURITE (Gĕsh′ ū rīte) Citizen of Geshur. See Geshur.

GESTURES Movements of either a part or part of the body to communicate one's thoughts and feelings. Gestures often may involve external objects such as the tearing of one's clothing (Joel 2:13) or the casting down of one's crown before God (Rev. 4:10). A gesture does not have to accompany verbal speech. Just a piercing look (Luke 22:61) is sufficient to communicate persuasively. In a certain sense all gestures are visual symbols.

Cultural-Corporal Gestures These are the most common to the everyday life and customs of the Ancient Near East.

Whole Body Gestures 1. Standing to pray indicates respect to God (1 Sam. 1:26; 1 Kings 8:22; Mark 11:25). 2. Sitting may communicate several things. David's sitting before the Lord indicated reverence, humility, and submission (2 Sam. 7:18), while the sitting down of Jesus at the right hand of God indicates finality and completion as well as power and authority. (Heb. 10:12). 3. Kneeling and bowing express honor, devotion, and submission in worship (1 Kings 19:18; Isa. 45:23; Rev. 4:10; 5:8) and reverence in prayer (1 Kings 8:54; 1 Kings 18:42; Dan. 6:10; Luke 22:41). 4. Weeping is not only a sign of sorrow (Job 16:16; Jer. 9:10; Luke 22:62; John 11:35), but also of happiness (Gen. 46:29). 5. Dancing shows joy (Ex. 15:20; Judg. 11:34) and celebration in praise (2 Sam. 6:16; Ps. 149:3). 6. Tearing of one's clothes and heaping of ashes upon one's head signify deep grief (2 Sam. 1:11; 13:19), shocking horror (Num. 14:6; Josh. 7:6), and sudden alarm (Matt. 26:65; Acts 14:14).

Head Gestures 1. Shaking one's head communicates scorn and reproach (Ps. 22:7; Lam. 2:15; Matt. 27:39; Mark 15:29). 2. Lifting one's head can indicate exaltation (Ps. 27:6), contempt (Ps. 83:2), and freedom (2 Kings 25:27). 3. Bowing of one's head shows reverence in worship and prayer (Gen. 24:26; Neh. 8:6).

Face Gestures 1. Eye gestures are numerous and quite expressive. Winking the eye may show mischief and deceit (Prov. 6:13), which also can lead to sorrow (Prov. 10:10). Wanton eyes are sensual eyes that deserve condemnation (Isa. 3:16). Jesus' looking at Peter at the point of his denial is an example of eyes showing both hurt and condemnation (Luke 22:61). The lifting up of one's eyelids expresses haughtiness and pride (Prov. 30:13). One's eyes can show anger (Mark 3:5). The eyes, when uplifted in prayer, signify not only respectful acknowledgment of God, but also devotion to Him (Mark 6:41; Luke 9:16). To fail to lift one's eyes up to God while praying indicates one's sense of unworthiness (Luke 18:13). Jesus' lifting up of His eyes upon the disciples shows His personal regard for them (Luke 6:20). 2. Mouth gestures also are plentiful in the Scriptures. To smile and laugh can mean more than just happiness and joy; it also can show goodwill (Job 29:24), scorn (Ps. 22:7; Mark 5:40; Luke 8:53) or even rebuke (Ps. 2:4). The shooting out of the lip communicates the idea of contempt (Ps. 22:7). Kissing is an act that expresses the warmth of a friendly greeting (Rom. 16:16; 1 Cor. 16:20), the affection of one for another (Song of Sol. 8:1), the sorrow of one who dearly cares for another (Ruth 1:14; Acts 20:37), the deceit of one who hides true intentions (Prov. 27:6; Matt. 26:48), the submission of the weak to the strong (Ps. 2:12), and the seduction of a foolish man by a loose woman (Prov. 7:5–23). Spitting is an emphatic way of showing contempt in order to shame another (Deut. 25:9; Isa. 50:6; Matt. 26:67; 27:30). 3. To incline one's ear is to give attention to another (Ps. 45:10; Jer. 7:26). 4. An obscure gesture is the putting of the branch to the nose. This pagan gesture is an offense to God and possibly has obscene connotations (Ezek. 8:17). 5. A hardened neck indicates stubbornness (Neh. 9:16; Prov. 29:1; Jer. 7:26), while an outstretched neck reveals haughtiness (Isa. 3:16).

Hand Gestures 1. The raising of hands in prayer is a gesture signifying one's request is unto God (Ps. 141:2; 1 Tim. 2:8). The raising of one's hands can also be a symbol of blessing (Lev. 9:22; Neh. 8:6; Luke 24:50), or it can be an act that gives emphasis to an oath (Deut. 32:40; Ezek. 20:5,15,23,28). 2. The covering of one's mouth with the hand signifies silence (Job 29:9). 3. The lifting up of one's hand or the shaking of one's fist means defiance (2 Sam. 18:28; Isa. 10:32; Zeph. 2:15). 4. The laying of a hand or hands on someone can mean violence (Gen. 37:22), or it can mean favor and blessing as on a son (Gen. 48:14) or in healing (Luke 4:40; Acts 28:8). The placing of hands on someone's head shows favor and blessing as in the acknowledgment of an office (Acts 6:6) or in the coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:17). The striking or shaking of hands indicates a guarantee or confirmation (Prov. 6:1; 17:18; 22:26), while the giving of one's hand to another is a sign of fellowship (2 Kings 10:15; Prov. 11:21). 5. To clap one's hands can mean either contempt (Job 27:23; Lam. 2:15; Nah. 3:19) or joy and celebration (2 Kings 11:12; Pss. 47:1; 98:8; Isa. 55:12). 6. The waving of one's hand can mean to beckon (Luke 5:7; John 13:24), to call for silence in order to speak (Acts 12:17; 13:16; 19:33), or to call on God for healing (2 Kings 5:11). 7. The dropping of hands shows weakness and despair (Isa. 35:3; Heb. 12:12). 8. A hand on one's head communicates grief (2 Sam. 13:19; Esther 6:12; Jer. 2:37). 9. The washing of one's hands in public declares one's innocence (Deut. 21:6–7; Matt. 27:24). 10. The pointing of a finger can show ill favor (Prov. 6:13) or accusation (Isa. 58:9). 11. The hand or arm outstretched is a sign of power and authority (Ex. 6:6). 12. To hug or embrace is to show warmth in greeting another (Gen. 33:4).

Feet Gestures 1. The placing of a foot upon one's enemy is a twofold gesture: it shows victory and dominance for the one standing and defeat and submission for the one downfallen and vanquished (Josh. 10:24; Ps. 110:1; 1 Cor. 15:25). 2. To shake the dust off of one's feet is a sign of contempt and separation (Matt. 10:14; Acts 13:51). 3. To wash the feet of another is to humble oneself as a servant (John 13:5–12). 4. The lifting of one's heel against another shows opposition (Ps. 41:9; John 13:18). 5. To cover one's feet is to relieve oneself with some degree of privacy (Judg. 3:24; 1 Sam. 24:3). 6. To uncover one's feet or to walk barefooted indicates grief or repentance (2 Sam. 15:30; Isa. 20:2). 7. The act of uncovering one's feet as in the case of Ruth with Boaz (Ruth 3:4) was an established practice indicating not only one's willingness to marry, but also the protection of the husband over his wife.

Religious-Ceremonial Gestures These are a more specialized category of gestures in which prescribed body movements take on a more clearly religious meaning than that found in the previous category.

Old Testament Sacrificial Gestures Two examples are sufficient to represent this limited category of gestures. 1. Within the instructions given by Moses concerning the Passover are the following words: "And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste: it is the Lord's passover" (Ex. 12:11). All of these actions symbolize urgency and readiness. This whole body gesture is one of the profound ways that God chose to emphasize the abruptness and costliness of their freedom from bondage.

2. Another whole body gesture with special emphasis upon the hands is the act of offering a burnt offering unto God. If the offering came from the herd it was to be a male without blemish, and it was to be offered at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation as a free will offering. "And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering. . . . And he shall kill the bullock before the Lord . . . " (Lev. 1:4–5). The offering of this sacrifice emphasized God's holiness (a male without blemish) and human sinfulness and separation (only as far as the altar could a sinful person enter into the court of the tabernacle). The act expressed the need for substitution and death (the killing of the animal) and mediation (the ministry of the priests). In an ideal sense the act of coming to the entrance of the tabernacle was a public testimony of confession and commitment. The offering of a sacrifice was the language of covenant acted out in prayerful imagery. The act of putting one's hand upon the head of the animal and killing it served as the focal point of the offering for the sinner.

New Testament Sacrificial Gestures The two ordinances of the church continue the sacrificial theme. Both ordinances testify to the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ. 1. The ordinance of baptism is a whole body gesture that expresses one's identification with Christ's atoning work: His death, burial, and resurrection. To be baptized (Matt. 28:19) is to testify publicly of one's total commitment to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. 2. The Lord's Supper (Matt. 26:26–30; 1 Cor. 11:23–29) also emphasizes one's identification with the sacrificial death of Christ. It is through the observance of the Lord's Supper that one testifies to a willingness to deny oneself, and take up the cross (Matt. 16:24) to follow Christ.

Prophetic-Symbolical Gestures Prophets dramatized their message with symbolic gestures. Here examples are limited to the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. The use of symbolical gestures by the prophets could range from the simple and obvious, such as Ezekiel's mock attack against a clay model of Jerusalem to symbolize God's impending judgment on the city (Ezek. 4:1–3) to the complex and theological, such as Jeremiah's purchase of a field (Jer. 32:1–44) to symbolize God's future restoration of the Southern Kingdom as its Kinsman (go' el) Redeemer.

In Isaiah 20:3, Isaiah "walked naked and barefoot three years" as a symbol of the humiliation that Egypt and Ethiopia were to know when Assyria conquered them. In Jeremiah 27:1–7, Jeremiah wore a yoke of wood around his neck as a symbol of the future domination of the Babylonians over Judah and her neighbors; therefore, Jeremiah's message was one of submission to Babylonian rule. Ezekiel more than any other was known for his use of prophetic-symbolic acts. His laying on his side for many days (Ezek. 4:4–8) indicated a year for each day of their iniquity and of their impending siege. His eating of scant rations (Ezek. 4:9–17), the cutting of his hair and its various consequences (Ezek. 5:1–17), and the setting of his face toward the mountains of Israel (Ezek. 6:1–7) were all symbolic gestures which showed the judgment of God that soon was to come upon his people. (See also Ezek. 12:1–28 for additional examples.) See Festivals; Ordinances; Prophets; Sacrifice and Offering; Symbol.

Gary A. Galeotti

GETHER (Gē' thĕr) Aramean tribal name of uncertain meaning. They are Semites, their original ancestor being the grandson of Shem and great grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:23). Nothing else is known of them.

GETHSEMANE (Gĕth sĕm' ȧ nē) Place name meaning, "olive press." Place where Jesus went after the Last Supper, a garden outside the city, across the Kidron on the Mount of Olives (Matt. 26:36–56; Mark 14:32–52; Luke 22:39–53; John 18:1–14). Here Jesus charged the disciples to "watch" as He prayed. Judas led the enemies of Looking toward the Garden of Gethsemane with the Church of All Nations in the center of the photo.

Jesus to Gethsemane where Jesus was arrested and taken away for trial. Here Jesus, the Son, showed He had learned obedience to the Father even in suffering (Heb. 5:7–9).

Gethsemane was probably a remote walled garden (Jesus "entered" and "went out") where Jesus went often for prayer, rest, and fellowship with His disciples.

See Mount of Olives; Kidron; Judas.

Wayne Dehoney

Inside the Garden of Gethsemane the olive trees and foliage provide a beautiful and tranquil scene.

GEUEL (Gė ū′ ēl) Personal name meaning, "pride of God." Spy from tribe of Gad Moses sent to inspect the land before conquering it (Num. 13:15).

GEZER (Gē′ zēr) Place name meaning, "isolated area." Major Canaanite city nineteen miles northwest of Jerusalem at tell Gezer on the edge of the foothills of Judah near the Shephelah, seven miles southeast of Ramleh. It provides a military post for the highway junction of the Via Maris and the road leading to the valley of Ajalon to Jerusalem, Jericho, and over the Jordan. A site of 30 acres, it was one of the largest and most important cities in Palestine from 1800 B.C. onwards, though occupation reaches back to 3500 B.C. Archaeologists have found important inscriptions here such as the Gezer calendar, one of, if not the, earliest (before 900 B.C.) examples of Hebrew writing known. Even earlier is an inscribed piece of broken pottery in the "Proto-Sinaitic" script. The largest stone structure in Palestine, a fifty-foot wide wall from about 1600 B.C. was found here. A high place or sanctuary with ten stone stele or masseboth demonstrates Canaanite worship practices about 1600 B.C. Some of these tower over nine feet high. Egyptian sources mention Gezer about 1410 B.C., as do the Amarna letters of 100 years later. Three different kings of Gezer wrote the Egyptian pharaoh. Merneptah's stele from about 1200 B.C. claims the pharaoh captured Gezer. Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria pictured the capture of Gezer about 734 B.C. in his palace at Nimrud.

Tel Gezer.

Joshua defeated the king of Gezer when he tried to aid the king of Lachish (Josh. 10:33). Gezer formed the boundary for Ephraim's tribal allotment (Josh. 16:3), but Israel did not control the city (Josh. 16:10; Judg. 1:29). Still, it was assigned as a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:21). David finally wrested control of it from the Philistines (2 Sam. 5:25; 1 Chron. 20:4). A few years later, Egypt's pharaoh captured the city from the Canaanites and gave it to Solomon as a wedding gift for Solomon's marriage with the pharaoh's daughter. Solomon rebuilt its walls (1 Kings 9:15–17). Between the Testaments, Gezer became known as Gazara.

GEZRITE (Gēz′ rīte) KJV spelling of name of people in 1 Samuel 27:8, where the Hebrew text tradition shows both Girzites (NIV, NAS, NRSV, TEV) and Gezrite. REB reads Gizrite. Gezrite or Gizrite would refer to inhabitants of Gezer, but Gezer is too far north for the Samuel context. We know nothing else of the Girzites. First Samuel 27:8 says they had lived in the southwestern edge of Palestine from time immemorial and that David raided them from his base at Ziklag.

GHOST The KJV uses ghost in two senses, for the human life force and for God's Holy Spirit. The KJV never uses ghost for the disembodied spirits of the dead. All eleven Old Testament references involve the phrase "give up the ghost" (for example, Gen. 25:8; 35:29) which means to cease breathing or simply to die. This phrase occurs eight times in the New Testament (Matt. 27:50; Acts 5:5; 12:23). The predominant New Testament use is for the Holy Spirit.

Modern translations use ghost (rather than spirit as the KJV) for the disembodied spirits of the dead. Jesus' disciples mistook Him for a ghost when He walked on water (Matt. 14:26; Mark 6:49) and when He appeared after the resurrection (Luke 24:37,39).

GIAH (Gī′ ah) Place name meaning, "bubbling." Place where David's general Joab confronted Abner, Saul's general, after Abner killed Joab's brother Asahel (2 Sam. 2:24). The earliest translations saw Giah as a common noun meaning, "valley." Its location near Gibeon is not known.

GIANTS Persons of unusual stature who often are reputed to possess great strength and power. Old Testament The earliest biblical reference to giants is to the nephilim born to the "daughters of men" and the "sons of God" (Gen. 6:1–4). Interpreters differ on the origin of these giants. Some understand the "sons of God" to be angelic beings who intermarried with human women (see Jude 6). Others view them as descendants of Seth who intermarried with the ungodly. Later descendants of the nephilim were called "the sons of Anak" (Num. 13:33) or Anakim (Deut. 2:11; 9:2). They inhabited the land of Canaan prior to Israel's conquest. Egyptian records testify to their presence as early as 2000 B.C. Similar races of giants had also inhabited Moab (Deut. 2:9–10) and Ammon (Deut. 2:19–20).

A second class of giants who inhabited pre-Israelite Palestine was the rephaim. Their last survivor was Og, king of Bashan (Deut. 3:11,13). A valley near Jerusalem (Josh. 15:8; 18:16) and part of the wooded country in the tribal territory of Ephraim (Josh. 17:15) retained their name.

The Old Testament also records cases of individual giants. The well-known Goliath (1 Sam. 17) was a Philistine champion. A family of giants from Gath were among the Philistine enemies slain by David and his followers (2 Sam. 21:16–22; 1 Chron. 20:4–8). Michael Fink GIBBAR (Gĭb′ bär) Personal name meaning, "young, powerful man." A man, ninety-five of whose descendants returned from Babylonian captivity with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:20). The corresponding list in Nehemiah 7:25 has Gibeon.

GIBBETHON (Gĭb′ bĕ thŏn) Place name meaning, "arched," "hill," or "mound." City in the tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:44) but assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:23). During the monarchy the Philistines controlled Gibbethon. Nadab of Israel (909-908 B.C.) besieged it. During the siege Baasha murdered Nadab and assumed the kingship (1 Kings 15:25–28). The Israelite army was encamped against Philistine Gibbethon when Zimri assumed rule by assassinating Elah, the son of Baasha (1 Kings 16:15–17). Gibbethon has been variously identified as tell el-Melat north of Ekron, and with Agir, two and a half miles west of tell el-Melat.

GIBEA (Gĭb′ ē ȧ) Personal name meaning, "hill." Son of Caleb by his concubine Maacah (1 Chron. 2:49). See Gibeah.

GIBEAH (Gĭb′ ē ȧh) Place name meaning, "a hill," closely related to names of Geba and Gibeon. Gibeah or Gibeath was the name of four different places in the Old Testament. 1. City in hill country of Judah allotted to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:57). This may be the home of King Abijah's wife Maacah (2 Chron. 13:2) and could be same as the place name presupposed in the list of Caleb's descendants (1 Chron. 2:49), a list including city names rather than personal names, perhaps indicating the clans who originally inhabited the cities. This Gibeah has usually been located at el-Jeba, seven and a half miles southwest of Bethlehem, but this is too far north to be connected with clans of Caleb. Otherwise, the location is not known.

2. A city closely connected with Phinehas, the high priest and grandson of Aaron. Phinehas buried his father Eleazar there (Josh. 24:33). Some try to locate this on a hill near Shechem or Bethel. Others would identify it with the levitical city of Geba in Joshua 21:17 in the territory of Benjamin. The Bible simply uses the general term "hill country of Ephraim." It could even be near Shiloh.

3. The ark was lodged on a hill (Hebrew, Gibeah) during the period between its return by the Philistines and David's initial effort to move it to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:4 KJV). The Hebrew word is probably not a proper noun (Hebrew writing not distinguishing proper names with capital letters as does English). The best translation may be "hill" (NAS, NIV, NRSV, REB; compare 1 Sam. 7:1–2). The hill here is apparently near Kiriath-jearim or Baalah. See Baalah; compare Joshua 15:9–11.

4. The most significant Gibeah was the city in the tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:28). A bloody civil war between Benjamin and the other Israelite tribes broke out when the men of Gibeah raped a traveling Levite's concubine (Judg. 19:1—21:25). Saul had close family connections to the city (1 Chron. 8:29–33 also connects them with the nearby and similar-sounding Gibeon; see Gibeon) and made it his capital after he became king (1 Sam. 10:5,26; 15:34; 23:19). If the "hill of God" (1 Sam. 10:5 KJV, NAS, REB) or "Gibeath-elohim" (NRSV) should be translated "Gibeah of God" (NIV) and equated with Gibeah of Saul, then the Philistines controlled the city prior to Saul gaining control. Apparently the Philistines built a fortress there which Saul took over, or Saul constructed his own royal complex, since archaeologists have uncovered a fortress from this period. After Saul's death, the city declined. Hosea and Isaiah referred to it during the eighth century B.C. (Isa. 10:29; Hos. 5:8; 9:9; 10:9). Isaiah shows it was on the natural path of march for an enemy army such as the Assyrians attacking Jerusalem from the north. Archaeologists have shown the city flourished once more after the destruction of Jerusalem and again in the Maccabean age.

Gibeah is located at tell el-Ful on a high ridge three and a half miles north of Jerusalem. See Benjamin; Geba; Saul. LeBron Matthews

GIBEATH (Gĭb′ ē ăth) Alternative Hebrew spelling for Gibeah (Josh. 18:28) preserved in KJV spelling. See Gibeah.

GIBEATH-ELOHIM (Gĭb′ ē ăth-ē lō′ hĭm) Place name meaning, "hill of God." See Geba; Gibeah.

GIBEATH-HAARALOTH (Gĭb′ ē ăth-hä ăr′ ā lōth) Place name meaning, "hill of foreskins." KJV translates the place name in Joshua 5:3, while modern translations transliterate it. Joshua used traditional flint stone knives rather than more modern metal ones to circumcise the Israelite generation about to conquer Canaan.

GIBEATHITE (Gĭb ē′ ā thīte) Citizen of Gibeah (1 Chron. 12:3). See Gibeah.

GIBEON (Gĭb′ ē ŏn) Place name meaning, "hill place." This "great city" (Josh. 10:2) played a significant role in Old Testament history—especially during the conquest of Canaan. Archaeology has demonstrated that the city was a thriving industrial area which made it a primary community in Canaan.

Background of the City Little was known of Gibeon's exact location until the twentieth century. Originally, the city was assigned to the tribe of Benjamin following Israel's victory in Canaan (Josh. 18:25) and made a city for Levites (Josh. 21:17). Beginning in 1956, excavations led by James B. Pritchard gave proof that the modern city of el-Jib was the site of ancient Gibeon. Lying eight miles northwest of Jerusalem, Gibeon was in an area of moderate climate, ample rainfall, with a wine-led economy. With an elevation of about 2400 feet Gibeon towered above most other cities, making it easily defended. Dating to about 3000 B.C., Gibeon served as the fortress city at the head of the valley of Ajalon which provided the principal access from the coastal plain into the hill country. Gibeon's power was strong as archaeology has found no sign of the city's destruction.

Role of the City in the Bible Forty-five Old Testament references are made to Gibeon. Its first major appearance in Israel's history involved the conquest of Canaan. The people of Gibeon concocted a deceptive strategy to protect themselves from the Israelites (Josh. 9). Pretending to be foreigners also, the Gibeonites made a treaty with Joshua. When Joshua later discovered the truth, he forced the Gibeonites to become water carriers and woodcutters for the Israelites. Honoring this covenant, Joshua led Israel against the armies of five kings who had attacked Gibeon. During these victories the Lord caused the sun and moon to stand still (Josh. 10; compare Isa. 28:21).

The pool at ancient Gibeon with a spiral staircase leading down to the water level.

By the time of David, Gibeon had become part of Israel's United Monarchy. Saul's family seems to have had some connections to Gibeon (1 Chron. 8:29–33; 9:35–39). See Gibeah. Following Saul's death a crucial meeting occurred in Gibeon involving Abner and Joab, the respective generals of Saul and David (2 Sam. 2:12–17). A "sporting" battle (v. 14) by the pool of Gibeon ensued in which the men of Joab proved to be victorious. Archaeologists have discovered a spiraling shaft and tunnel with circular stairway leading to water and providing the city a way to get water inside the city walls during enemy attacks. Gibeon also played host to part of Sheba's rebellion against David (2 Sam. 20:8–13). Joab pursued Amasa, a leader of the revolt, to the great stone in Gibeon where Joab left him "wallowing in his blood in the middle of the highway" (v. 12 NAS). Discovering that Saul had broken the covenant by killing some of the Gibeonites, David gave seven of Saul's male descendants to the people of Gibeon who then put the seven to death (2 Sam. 21:1–9). During one of the sacrifices Solomon made in Gibeon, the Lord appeared and granted the new king's request for wisdom (1 Kings 3:3–14; compare 9:2). Apparently Gibeon was Israel's major place of worship before Solomon built the Temple.

The next references to Gibeon took place about 600 B.C. Jeremiah spoke of the coming destruction of Jerusalem, contradicting Hananiah of Gibeon who predicted Nebuchadnezzar's doom (Jer. 28). Fleeing from justice, Ishmael, the murderer of the Babylonian-appointed "governor" Gedaliah, was overtaken at Gibeon (Jer. 41).

Final references to Gibeon highlighted the city's role in post-exilic Israel. The Gibeonites assisted in rebuilding Jerusalem's walls (Neh. 3:7). Nehemiah's list of the returning exiles also included an entry concerning the number of "the children of Gibeon" (7:25).

See Canaan; David; Joshua. Larry McGraw

GIBEONITE (Gĭb′ ē on īte) Citizen of Gibeon. See Gibeon.

GIBLITE (Gĭb′ līte) KJV spelling of Gibalites. See Gebal.

GIDDALTI (Gĭd dăl′ tī) Personal name meaning, "I brought from there" or "I made great, praised." Son of Heman to whom David gave the task of prophesying through playing musical instruments (1 Chron. 25:4). He became a leader of a clan of Temple musicians (1 Chron. 25:29).

GIDDEL (Gĭd′ dĕl) Personal name meaning, "he made great, praised." 1. The clan leader of a group of Temple servants who returned from the Babylonian captivity with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:47). 2. Original clan father of a group of royal servants who returned from the Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:56).

GIDEON (Gĭd ē on) Personal name meaning, "one who cuts to pieces." The fifth major judge of twelfth century Israel. He was also called Jerubbaal and was the son of Joash of the tribe of Manasseh. He judged for forty years (Judg. 6:11—8:35). See Jerubaal.

Gideon was given the task of delivering the Israelites from the Midianites and Amalekites, desert nomads who repeatedly raided the country. Their use of the camel allowed them to ride in, destroy crops, take plunder, and then escape back into the desert with such speed the Israelites could not catch them. Gideon was not a willing volunteer. Although he knew the will of God, twice he laid out the fleece in what seems an effort to avoid the will of God by imposing impossible conditions. God met his conditions both times and then set out the strategy that would guarantee victory for Israel.

To reduce their number, two tests were given to the 32,000 men in Gideon's army. This was done that Israel could not claim victory by any other means than continued dependence upon God. Those who were afraid and those who knelt down to get a drink of water were sent home. The remaining 300 were given pitchers, torches, and trumpets, and placed around the Midianite encampment. The strategy was one of terror: at Gideon's signal the pitchers were broken, the torches then became visible, and the trumpets sounded, giving the enemy the impression they were surrounded. They took flight, their leaders were killed, and the Midianite oppression was brought to an end.

The hero of faith (Hebrews 11:32) ended life on a sad note. He angrily punished Succoth and Penuel for not helping in his war against the Midianite kings (Judg. 8:1–17). He refused the people's offer to crown him king, testifying that only God was King (Judg. 8:22–23), but he ordered the people to give him their golden earrings, taken as war spoil from the Ishmaelites. He made a worship symbol, an ephod, out of it and led his people astray with it (Judg. 8:24–27). His family did not follow his God (Judg. 8:33).

See Camel; Judge; Midianites.

Darlene R. Gautsch

GIDEONI (Gĭd ē ō′ nī) Personal name meaning, "one who cuts down or cuts to pieces." Father of Abidan, a leader of the tribe of Benjamin during the encampment in the wilderness (Num. 1:11; 2:22; 7:60; 10:24).

GIDOM (Gī′ dŏm) Place name meaning, "cleared land." Place where tribes of Israel punished tribe of Benjamin by killing 2,000 of Benjamin's soldiers (Judg. 20:45) for grossly mistreating a traveling Levite and his concubine. REB follows some scholars in omitting Gidom. No one knows its exact location between Gibeah and Bethel.

GIFT, GIVING A favor or item bestowed on someone. Gifts were given on numerous occasions for a variety of purposes: as dowry for a wife (Gen. 34:12); as tribute to a military conqueror (2 Sam. 8:2); as bribes (Ex. 23:8; Prov. 17:8; Isa. 1:23); as rewards for faithful service and to insure future loyalty (Dan. 2:48); and as relief for the poor (Esth. 9:22). Since gifts might be required by custom, law, or force, modifiers are sometimes used to specify gifts given voluntarily: "willing" or freewill offerings or gifts (Ex. 35:29); free gift or "gift by grace" (Rom. 5:15–17; 6:23); bountiful gift not motivated by covetousness (2 Cor. 9:5).

Both Testaments witness to God as the giver of every good gift (1 Chron. 29:14; Jas. 1:17). Human life is God's gift (Job 1:21), as are all things necessary for physical life: the sun for light (Jer. 31:25); plants (Gen. 1:29) and animals for food (Gen. 9:3); water (Num. 21:16); clothing (Gen. 28:20); grass for herds (Deut. 11:15); seasonal rains for crops (Lev. 26:4); companionship of male and female (Gen. 2:18–24; compare 3:12); the ability to have children (Gen. 17:16); and sleep (Ps. 127:2). Various human abilities are likewise given by God: the ability to work (Deut. 8:18); artistic abilities (Ex. 31:6); the ability to acquire learning and master communication skills (Dan. 1:17). These gifts demonstrate God's general providence.

Scripture also witnesses to God's gifts as evidence of a special providence. In the Old Testament such gifts include: the Promised Land (Gen. 12:7)—including its successful conquest (Deut. 2:36), possessing its cities (Deut. 6:10), and its spoils (Deut. 20:14); the sabbath (Ex. 16:29); the promises (1 Kings 8:56); the covenants (2 Kings 17:15); the law (Ex. 24:12); and peace (Lev. 26:6). In the New Testament God's special providence is especially evident in the gift of God's Son (John 3:16) and of God's Holy Spirit (Luke 11:13).

The springs of Harod where Gideon divided his men for battle against the Midianites.

G

God makes relationship with Himself possible by giving His people wisdom (1 Kings 4:29), understanding (1 Kings 3:9), a new heart (1 Sam. 10:9), and a good Spirit to teach them (Neh. 9:20). The New Testament expresses these gifts as the power to become children of God (John 1:12), justification from sin (Rom. 3:24; 5:15–17); and eternal life (John 10:28; Rom. 6:23).

Both Testaments witness to God's gift of leadership to God's people as: priests (Num. 8:19; Zech. 3:7); Davidic kings (2 Chron. 13:5); deliverers (2 Kings 13:5); shepherds with Godlike hearts (Jer. 3:15); apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastor-teachers (Eph. 4:11–12). Paul spoke of God's giving the ministry of reconciliation (2 Cor. 5:18), authority for building up the church (2 Cor. 10:8), and grace for sharing the gospel with the Gentiles (Eph. 3:8). The New Testament also stresses God's gift of spiritual abilities to every believer (Rom. 12:6; 1 Cor. 12:4; 1 Pet. 4:10).

God's gifts should prompt the proper response from the recipients. This response includes not boasting (1 Cor. 4:7; Eph. 2:8); amazement at God's inexpressible goodness (2 Cor. 9:15); the using of gifts for the furtherance of Christ's kingdom (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6–11); and a life of good works (Eph. 2:10). Chris Church

GIFTS, SPIRITUAL See Spiritual Gifts.

GIHON (Gī′ hon) Place name meaning, "gushing fountain." The primary water supply for Jerusalem and one of the four rivers into which the river of Eden divided (Gen. 2:13). The river cannot be identified with any contemporary river.

During the Old Testament period the spring of Gihon was the primary water supply for the city of Jerusalem. The name comes from a Hebrew word meaning, "a bursting forth," and is descriptive of the spring which is located in the Kidron Valley. It does not produce a steady flow, but gushes out at irregular intervals, twice a day in the dry season to four or five times in the rainy season. Water issues from a crack sixteen feet long in the rock. At some point in the ancient past a wall was built at the eastern end of the crack, diverting water into a cave at the other end. In the Jebusite period before David a shaft went from the spring to a pool under the city. Water jugs were let down into the pool through another vertical shaft. This probably was the way Joab entered into the city and captured it for David (2 Sam. 5:8; 1 Chron. 11:6). During the early Israelite occupation, water was collected outside the city walls in an open basin called the "upper pool" (Isa. 7:3). An open aqueduct carried water from there to the "old pool" at the southern end of the city (Isa. 22:11; cf. Isa. 8:6). Along this conduit Isaiah confronted Ahaz (Isa. 7:3), and later Sennacherib's army demanded the city's surrender (2 Kings 18:17). Before Sennacherib's arrival, Hezekiah plugged the aqueduct and dug his famous water tunnel (2 Kings 20:20; 2 Chron. 32:30).

See Eden; Hezekiah; Jerusalem; Kidron Valley; Siloam; Water. LeBron Matthews

GILALAI (Gĭl′ ā laī) Personal name perhaps meaning, "rolled away." Temple musician who helped Nehemiah lead the thanksgiving service for the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:36).

GILBOA (Gĭl bō′ ā) Place name of uncertain meaning, perhaps, "hill country" or "bubbling fountain." Location of an Israelite encampment (1 Sam. 28:4). The Israelites under Saul were preparing to do battle against the Philistines. At Mount Gilboa in the distance.

Mount Gilboa Saul and his three sons were slain (1 Sam. 31:8). David sang a lament over the Gilboa tragedy (2 Sam. 1:17–27). Mount Gilboa has been identified with modern Jebel Fuqu'ah, on the eastern side of the Plain of Esdraelon. See Palestine; Saul.

GILEAD (Gĭl′ ē ăd) Place and personal name meaning, "raw" or "rugged." 1. The north-central section of the transjordanian highlands. The name may originally have applied to a very small area. The usage of the name then grew and could be applied in different contexts depending on present political situations. Compare Judg. 10:17; Hos. 6:8. It occupies the mountain slopes and tableland east of the Jordan, northeast of the Dead Sea. Gilead is bisected by the Jabbok River; in Old Testament times the kingdom of Ammon occupied its eastern fringe. It was often contested by other nations (Amos 1:3). Gilead extends about 50 miles from southern Heshbon not quite to the Yarmuk River in the north. Its east-west extent is about twenty miles.

Physically, Gilead is a rugged country; the Hebrew name Gil'ad may be translated "rugged." Some of its peaks reach over 3500 feet. It also has plains with grassland suitable for cattle, and in antiquity the northern half of the region particularly was heavily forested. The King Highway, an important international trade route, passed through Gilead. Gilead was an agriculturally significant region as well. It was famous especially for its flocks and herds, and also for the balm of Gilead, an aromatic and medicinal preparation, probably derived from the resin of a small balsam tree.

The rugged hill country of Gilead.

Many famous persons and events are associated with Gilead. The judges Jair and Jephthah (Judg. 11:1), Israel's King Jehu, and the prophet Elijah were all Gileadites. Jacob and Laban met at its northeastern border (Gen. 31:22–23). Jacob encountered the angel of God at Peniel in Gilead (Gen. 32:30). Saul's son Ish-bosheth (2 Sam. 2:8), David (2 Sam. 17:24), and Jesus all retreated to Gilead for a time. Old Testament cities of importance were Heshbon in the south, Rabbath-ammon on the eastern desert fringe, Jabesh-gilead, and Ramoth-gilead. Rabboth-ammon is the New Testament Philadelphia; Pella and Jerash (Gerasa) are other important New Testament cities.

2. Great grandson of Joseph and original clan leader in tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:28–32; 36:1). The clan was so strong it could be listed with Israel's tribes in Deborah's song (Judg. 5:17). They fought for recognition among other tribes (Judg. 12:4–7). Joseph Coleson

GILEADITE (Gĭl′ ē ăd īte) Citizen of Gilead. See Gilead.

GILGAL (Gĭl′ găl) Place name meaning, "circle," and probably referring to a circle of stones or a circular altar. Such a circle of stones could be found almost anywhere in Palestine and led easily to naming towns "Gilgal." The many references to Gilgal in the Old Testament cannot thus be definitely connected to the same town, since several different Gilgals may well have existed.

1. Gilgal is most closely associated with Joshua, but the number of Gilgals involved continues an unsolved question. After crossing the Jordan, Joshua established the first camp at Gilgal (Josh. 4:19). There Joshua took twelve stones from the bed of the river to set up a memorial for the miraculous crossing. Gilgal, the first foothold on Palestinian soil, became Israel's first worship place, where they were circumcised and observed the Passover. There God appeared to Joshua and affirmed his mission (Josh. 5). This Gilgal apparently became Israel's military base of operations (Josh. 9:6; 10:6; 14:6), though some scholars would identify this with a Gilgal farther north near Shechem. Joshua set up Gilgal as the border between Judah and Benjamin (Josh. 15:7; compare 18:17), though many Bible students think the border town must be south of the original camp. Ehud, the judge, passed Gilgal in his mission to slay the king of Moab (Judg. 3:19,26). David passed through Gilgal as he fled from Absalom (2 Sam. 19:15,40). This Gilgal is often located at modern khirbet Mefjir, a little more than a mile east of Jericho. Others would locate it at khirbet en-Nitleh, two miles southeast of Jericho.

Still others remain baffled at finding a location. The boundary town is often seen as khan el-Ahmar or 'Araq ed-Deir. The military camp is at times located at tell Jiljulieh east of Shechem but without archaeological support. This could be the same Gilgal of Deuteronomy 11:30, if Joshua's original town is not meant. Gilgal was also one of the three places where Samuel annually held circuit court (1 Sam. 7:16). This could be near tell Jiljulieh or at Joshua's first landing place near the Jordan. Saul was both crowned and rejected as king at Gilgal (1 Sam. 11:14–15; 13:14–15). Gilgal established itself as a major place of worship for Israel with ancient traditions. However, it also permitted worship associated with other gods and became the object of prophetic judgment (Hos. 4:15; Amos 4:4; 5:5).

2. Elijah and Elisha were associated closely with Gilgal. At one time Elisha made his headquarters there (2 Kings 4:38), where Elijah was taken up into heaven (2 Kings 2:1). This was apparently tell Jiljulieh about three miles southeast of Shiloh, though it could still be Joshua's original Gilgal.

3. Gilgal of the nations is mentioned as a royal city near Dor (Josh. 12:23). The earliest Greek translation reads this as "kings of the nations in Galilee," which many scholars think is the original reading, a copyist of the Hebrew text using the word "Gilgal" since it had become familiar in the earlier chapters of Joshua. If the Hebrew Gilgal is original, its location is not known.

See Beth-gilgal; Elisha; Joshua; Samuel; Saul.

Kenneth Craig

GILO (Gī′ lō) RSV, TEV spelling of Giloh to refer to Gilonite (2 Sam. 23:34). See Giloh.

GILOH (Gī′ lōh) Place name meaning, "uncovered" or "revealed." Town in tribal allotment of Judah in Judean hills (Josh. 15:51). David's counselor Ahithophel came from Giloh (2 Sam. 15:12). Some scholars locate it at khirbet Jala in the suburbs of Jerusalem, but most think Giloh was actually further south.

GILONITE (Gī′ lō nīte) Citizen of Giloh. See Giloh.

GIMZO (Gĭm′ zō) Place name of uncertain meaning. Town in the Shephelah or valley of Judah which the Philistines captured from King Ahaz of Judah (735-715 B.C.), leading him to ask Assyria for help and pay tribute to them (2 Chron. 28:18). It is located at Gimzu, about four miles east of Ramleh and three miles southeast of Lod.

GIN KJV term for a trap or snare. With the exception of Amos 3:5, all scriptural uses are figurative, either of the fate of the wicked (Job 18:9; Isa. 8:14) or of the schemes of the wicked (Pss. 140:5; 141:9). See Fowler.

GINATH (Gī′ năth) Place name or personal name meaning, "wall" or "enclosure." Father of Tibni, the favorite of half of Israel for kingship when Omri became king about 885 B.C. (1 Kings 16:21). See Tibni.

GINNETHO (Gĭn′ nė thō) KJV spelling in Nehemiah 12:4 of Levite who returned from Babylonian captivity with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. Hebrew texts have various spellings followed by modern translations: Ginnethon (NIV; REB); Ginnethoi (NAS, TEV, NRSV). This is apparently the same person listed as head of a clan of priests in 12:16. Probably the person who signed Nehemiah's covenant (10:6) belonged to the same family.

GINNETHOI (Gĭn′ nė thôi) See Ginnetho.

GINNETHON (Gĭn′ nė thŏn) See Ginnetho.

GIRDLE Several items of clothing in KJV: (1) an ornate sash worn by the officiating priests (Ex. 28:4,40) and by the wealthy of Jerusalem (Isa. 3:24); (2) a decorated band (NRSV), woven belt (TEV, NAS), or waistband (NIV, REB) for the high priest's ephod (Ex. 28:8,27,28); (3) a belt on which a sword or bow might be carried (1 Sam. 18:4; 2 Sam. 20:8; perhaps Isa. 5:27); a leather belt forming part of the proverbial garb of the prophets (2 Kings 1:8; Matt. 3:4); (4) an undergarment (Job 12:18; Jer. 13:1–11), often rendered waistcloth or loincloth.

To gird up one's loins means literally to tuck the loose ends of one's outer garment into one's belt. Loins were girded in preparation for running (1 Kings 18:46), for battle (Isa. 5:27), or for service for a master (Luke 12:35). The call to "gird up the loins of your minds" (1 Peter 1:13) means to be spiritually alert and prepared. See Cloth, Clothing.

GIRGASHITE (Gĭr′ gȧ shīte) Tribal name possibly meaning, "sojourner with a deity." One of the list of original tribal groups inhabiting Canaan, traced back to Canaan, son of Ham and grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:16). The Ugaritic texts from Ras Shamra also apparently mention them.

GIRGASITE (Gĭr′ gȧ sīte) KJV spelling for Girgashite in Genesis 10:16. See Girgashite.

GIRZITE (Gĭr′ zīte) See Gezrite.

GISHPA (Gĭsh′ pȧ) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Supervisor of Temple servants in days of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:21). It does not appear in the lists in Chronicles and Ezra, so some Bible students think the name is a copyist's change from Hasupha, which the Jews would pronounce similarly (Ezra 2:43; Neh. 7:46).

G

GISPA (Gĭs′ pȧ) KJV spelling of Gishpa. See Gishpa.

GITTAH-HEPHER (Gĭt′ tăh-hē′ phēr) KJV spelling for Gath-hepher (Josh. 19:13) based on a variant Hebrew spelling in the text. See Gath-hepher.

GITTAIM (Gĭt′ tā ĭm) Place name meaning, "two winepresses." City to which people of Beeroth fled after Israel entered Canaan. The Bible does not tell the precise time (2 Sam. 4:3). After the Exile, part of the tribe of Benjamin settled there (Neh. 11:33). This could be the same as the Gath of 1 Chronicles 7:21; 8:13, but that is not certain. The location is not certain, probably near Lydda and thus in Philistine territory at Rash Abu Hamid.

GITTITE (Gĭt′ tīte) A citizen of Gath.

GITTITH (Gĭt′ tĭth) A word of uncertain meaning used in the titles of Psalms 8; 81; 84. It may represent a musical instrument resembling a Spanish guitar, a musical tune, or a rite or ceremony as part of a festival.

GIZONITE (Gĭ′ zō nīte) Citizen of Gizah or Gizon, a place not otherwise mentioned. It may be modern beth-Giz southwest of Latrun. David had military leaders from there (1 Chron. 11:34), though Gizonite does not appear in the parallel in 2 Samuel 23:34. Some Greek manuscript evidence points to Guni as the original reading. See Guni. Some Bible students suggest the original reading was Gimzoni from Gimzo. See Gimzo.

GIZRITE (Gĭz′ rīte) Citizen of Gezer. REB reading in 1 Samuel 27:8 for Girzite. See Girzite.

GLAD TIDINGS KJV phrase for good news (Luke 1:19), a synonym for gospel as the news Jesus brought of God's kingdom (Luke 8:1; Acts 13:32; Rom. 10:15). See Gospel.

GLASS An amorphous substance, usually transparent or translucent. Glass is formed by a fusion of silicates (sometimes oxides of boron or phosphorus) with a flux and a stabilizer into a mass that cools to a rigid condition without crystallization.

Glass was known in the ancient world from about 2600 B.C. in Egypt. In Egypt and Phoenicia glass was opaque and was used chiefly to make ornamental objects—especially beads, jewelry, and small bottles. The value of glass in ancient times may be indicated in Job where the value of glass is equated with that of gold and is used in parallel with jewels (Job 28:17). The Egyptians and Phoenicians made small bottles for perfume by welding sticks of glass round a core of sand and clay built around a bar of metal. The core and bar were removed after the glass cooled.

Transparent glass was not made until New Testament times as a luxury item. During this period, Alexandria, Egypt, became world famous as a center for the production of glassware. Such items as beakers, bowls, flasks, goblets, and bottles were made from the transparent glass. Corinth became known for the production of glass after the time of Paul.

John probably had the transparent variety of glass in mind when he wrote Revelation. He described the walls and streets of the new Jerusalem being made of pure gold. The gold of the walls and streets was so pure, it was as clear as glass (Rev. 21:18,21).

Glass vase in the shape of a fish from Tel el-Amarna in Egypt.

John also described the sea as being like glass (Rev. 4:6; 15:2). Here the reference is probably not so much to transparency as to calmness. It has often been stated that the Israelites had a fear of the sea which always seemed to be in a state of chaos and tumult. The sea that John saw around the throne of God was not in a constant uproar; this sea was as smooth as glass.

The KJV uses glass in five other passages where a polished metal mirror is probably being referred to (Job 37:18; Isa. 3:23; 1 Cor. 13:12; 2 Cor. 3:18; Jas. 1:23). Glass was not used to make mirrors in biblical times. Phil Logan

GLAZE An oxide mixture (usually of silica and aluminum) applied to ceramic surfaces that renders them impervious to moisture and gives them a glossy appearance. Some modern translations (NIV, REB, NRSV, TEV) divide the consonants of the Hebrew text of Proverbs 26:23 differently than the KJV and find a reference to a glaze rather than to silver dross. The TEV gives the sense of the passage: "Insincere talk that hides what you are really thinking is like a fine glaze on a cheap clay pot." See Pottery.

GLEANING The process of gathering grain or produce left in a field by reapers or on a vine or tree by pickers. Mosaic law required leaving this portion so that the poor and aliens might have a means of earning a living (Lev. 19:9–10; 23:22; Deut. 24:19–21; compare Ruth 2). Isaiah compared the few grapes or olives left for gleaners to the small remnant of Israel God would leave when He judged them (Isa. 17:5–9). One day, however, God would again gather or glean His remnant one by one and return them to worship in Jerusalem (Isa. 27:12).

GLEDE KJV term for an unclean bird of prey (Deut. 14:13). The identity of the bird (Hebrew raah) is impossible to determine. The following suggestions have been offered: buzzard (NRSV); kite (REB); red kite (NIV, NAS). The Hebrew root suggests a bird with keen eyesight, for example a member of the hawk family. An easily-confused Hebrew word (daah) occurs in Leviticus 11:14 and in some manuscripts and early translations of Deuteronomy 14:13. The bird in question may be the red kite (Milvus milvus). See Birds.

GLISTERING STONES See Antimony.

GLORY The weighty importance and shining majesty which accompany God's presence. The basic meaning of the Hebrew word kabod is heavy in weight. (Compare 1 Sam. 4:18; Prov. 27:3.) Thus it can refer to a heavy burden (Ex. 18:18; Ps. 38:4; compare more idiomatic uses in Gen. 12:10; 47:4; Ex. 4:10; 7:14). On the other side, it can describe extreme good fortune or mass numbers, a use with many different English translations (compare Gen. 13:2; Ex. 12:38; Num. 20:20; 1 Kings 10:2).

The verb thus often comes to mean, "give weight to, honor" (Ex. 20:12; 1 Sam. 15:30; Ps. 15:4; Prov. 4:8; Isa. 3:5). Such honor which people give to one another is a recognition of the place of the honored person in the human community. A nation can have such honor or glory (Isa. 16:14; 17:3). This is not so much something someone bestows on another as a quality of importance which a person, group, or nation has and which another recognizes.

"To give glory" is to praise, to recognize the importance of another, the weight the other carries in the community. In the Psalms people give such glory to God, that is they recognize the essential nature of His Godness that gives Him importance and weight in relationship to the human worshiping community. (Compare Pss. 22:23; 86:12; Isa. 24:15.) Human praise to God can be false, not truly recognizing His importance (Isa. 29:13; compare 1 Sam. 2:30). At times God creates glory for Himself (Ex. 14:4, 17; Ezek. 28:22). As one confesses guilt and accepts rightful punishment, one is called upon to recognize the righteousness and justice of God and give Him glory (Josh. 7:19; 1 Sam. 6:5). God thus reveals His glory in His just dealings with humans. He also reveals it in the storms and events of nature (Ps. 29; compare Isa. 6). Glory is thus that side of God which humans recognize and to which humans respond in confession, worship, and praise. (Compare Isa. 58:8; 60:1.) Still, for the Old Testament, the greatest revelation of divine glory came on Sinai (Deut. 5:24). Yet such experiences are awesome and fearful (Deut. 5:25). Such revelation does not, however, reveal all of God, for no person can see the entirety of the divine glory, not even Moses (Ex. 33:17–23).

The New Testament uses doxa to express glory and limits the meaning to God's glory. In classical Greek doxa means opinion, conjecture, expectation, and then praise. New Testament carries forward the Old Testament meaning of divine power and majesty (Acts 7:2; Eph. 1:17; 2 Pet. 1:17). The New Testament extends this to Christ as having divine glory (Luke 9:32; John 1:14; 1 Cor. 2:8; 2 Thess. 2:14).

Divine glory means that humans do not seek glory for themselves (Matt. 6:2; John 5:44; 1 Thess. 2:6). They only look to receive praise and honor from Christ (Rom. 2:7; 5:2; 1 Thess. 2:19; Phil. 2:16).

GLOSSOLALIA Technical term for speaking in tongues (Greek glossa, tongue). See Tongues, Gift of.

GLUTTON One habitually given to greedy and voracious eating. Gluttony was associated with stubbornness, rebellion, disobedience, drunkenness, and wastefulness (Deut. 21:20). A more general meaning for the Hebrew term as a "good-for-nothing" (Prov. 28:7 TEV) is reflected in some translations: wastrel (Deut. 21:20 REB); profligate (Deut. 21:20 NIV; Prov. 28:7 REB); riotous (Prov. 28:7 KJV). When Jesus was accused of being a "glutton and wine-drinker" (Matt. 11:19; Luke 7:34), it was in this expanded sense of being one given to loose and excessive living. The Bible knows gluttony makes one sleepy and leads to not working and poverty (Prov. 23:21).

GNASHING OF TEETH Grating one's teeth together. In the Old Testament, gnashing of teeth was an expression of anger reserved for the wicked and for one's enemies (Job 16:9; Pss. 35:16; 37:12; Lam. 2:16). In the New Testament, gnashing of teeth is associated with the place of future punishment (for example, Matt. 8:12; 13:42,50). There the gnashing of teeth is perhaps an expression of the futility of the wicked before God's judgment or else a demonstration of their continuing refusal to repent and acknowledge the justness of God's judgment. (Compare Rev. 16:9, 11.) See Hell; Punishment, Everlasting.

GNAT See Insects.

GNOSTICISM (Gnŏs' tĭ cĭsm) Modern designation for certain religious and philosophical perspectives that existed prior to the establishment of Christianity and for the specific systems of belief, characterized by these ideas, which emerged in the second century and later. The term "gnosticism" is derived from the Greek word gnosis (knowledge) because secret knowledge was so crucial a doctrine in gnosticism.

Importance of Gnosticism The significance of gnosticism for students of Christianity has two dimensions: the first is its prominence in the history of the church, and the second is its importance for interpreting certain features of the New Testament. Gnosticism emerged in schools of thought within the church in the early second century and soon established itself as a way of understanding Christianity in all of the church's principal centers. The church was torn by the heated debates over the issues posed by gnosticism. By the end of the second century many of the Gnostics belonged to separate, alternative churches or belief systems viewed by the church as heretical. Gnosticism was thus a major threat to the early church; and the early church leaders, such as Irenaeus (died about 200), Tertullian (died about 220), and Hippolytus (died about 236), wrote voluminously against it. Many of the features of gnosticism were incorporated into the sect of the Manichees in the third century, and Manichaeism endured as an heretical threat to the church into the fourth century.

Gnosticism is also important for interpreting certain features of the New Testament. Irenaeus reported that one of the reasons John wrote his Gospel was to refute the views of Cerinthus, an early Gnostic. Over against the gnostic assertion that the true God would not enter our world, John stressed in his Gospel that Jesus was God's incarnate Son.

Heretical Gnostic Sects The Gnostics who broke away or were expelled from the church claimed to be the true Christians, and the early Christian writers who set themselves to refute their claims are the major source for descriptions of the heretical gnostic sects. Although wide variations existed among the many gnostic sects in the details of systems, certain major features were common to most of them—the separation of the god of creation from the god of redemption; the division of Christians into categories with one group being superior; the stress on secret teachings which only divine persons could comprehend; and the exaltation of knowledge over faith. The church rejected such teachings as heretical, but many people have continued to find attraction in varieties of these ideas.

Gnostics generally distinguished between an inferior god whom they felt was responsible for the creation and the superior god revealed in Jesus as the Redeemer. This was a logical belief for them because they opposed matter to thought in a radical way. Matter was seen as inferior, sin-causing, and always deteriorating; thought or knowledge distinguished persons from matter and animals and was imperishable, capable of revealing god, and the only channel of redemption. The gnostic Marcion thus rejected the Old Testament, pointing out that the lesser or subordinate god revealed in it dealt with matter, insisted on law rather than grace, and was responsible for our decaying, tragedy-filled world. The god who revealed himself in Jesus and through the additional secret teachings was, on the other hand, the absolute god, and was not incarnate in human flesh because the absolute god would not enter evil matter—Christ only seemed or appeared to be a person, but He was not.

Gnostics divided Christians into groups, usually the spiritual and the carnal. The spiritual Christians were in a special or higher class than the ordinary Christians because they had received, as the elect of the good deity, a divine spark or spiritual seed in their beings which allowed them to be redeemed. The spiritual Christians were the true Christians who belonged to the heavenly world which was the true one. This belief that the spiritual Christians did not really belong to this world resulted in some Gnostics seeking to withdraw from the world in asceticism. Other gnostic systems took an opposite turn into antinomianism (belief that moral law is not valid for a person or group). They claimed that the spiritual Christians were not responsible for what they did and could not really sin. Thus they could act in any way they pleased without fear of discipline.

Gnostics placed great stress on secret teachings or traditions. This secret knowledge was not a product of intellectual effort but was given by Jesus, the Redeemer from the true deity, either in a special revelation or through His apostles. The followers of the gnostic Valentinus claimed, for example, that Theodus, a friend of Paul's, had been the means of transmission of the secret data. The secret knowledge was superior to the revelation recorded in the New Testament and was an essential supplement to it because only this secret knowledge could awaken or bring to life the divine spark or seed within the elect. When one received the gnosis or true knowledge, one became aware of one's true identity with a divine inner self, was set free (saved) from the dominion of the inferior creator god, and was enabled to live as a true child of the absolute and superior deity. To be able to attain to one's true destiny as the true deity's child, one had to engage in specific secret rituals and in some instances to memorize the secret data which enabled one to pass through the network of powers of the inferior deity who sought to keep persons imprisoned. Salvation was thus seen by the gnostics in a cosmic rather than a moral context—to be saved was to be enabled to return to the one true deity beyond this world.

The Gnostics thought faith was inferior to knowledge. The true sons of the absolute deity were saved through knowledge rather than faith. This was the feature of the various systems that gave the movements its designation: they were the Gnostics, the knowers. Yet what this precise knowledge was is quite vague. It was more a perception of one's own existence that solved life's mysteries for the Gnostic than it was a body of doctrine. The knowledge through which salvation came could be enhanced by participation in rituals or through instruction, but ultimately it was a self-discovery each Gnostic had to experience.

Origins of the Gnostic Concepts Gnosticism would not have been a threat to the early church if it had not been quite persuasive in the first centuries of the Christian era, and the question of where such ideas came from and what human needs they met must be addressed.

The classic answer to the question of why gnosticism arose is that it represents the "radical Hellenizing of Christianity." In this view, gnosticism resulted from the attempt of early Christian thinkers to make Christianity understandable, acceptable, and respectable in a world almost totally permeated by Greek assumptions about the reality of the World.

This classic view of the heretical gnostic sects as distortions of Christianity by Hellenistic thought has much strength because it is easily demonstrated how the Gnostics could use New Testament texts, bending them to their purposes. In 1 Corinthians 3:1–4, for example, Paul chides the Corinthian Christians for being "people of the flesh" (NRSV) or carnal when they should be spiritual. This text could with ease be used as the foundation for supporting the Hellenistic idea of the superiority of certain persons in the Christian community.

The classic explanation does leave some problems unsolved, however. Little doubt exists that there are ideas, attitudes, and practices incorporated into many of the gnostic heresies that are found outside of Hellenistic thought and much earlier than the second century of the Christian era. In particular, the ultimate goal of the Gnostics—to return to the absolute deity beyond matter and to be in some sense absorbed into the deity—belongs to near eastern pre-Christian mystical thought and not primarily to the Hellenistic world.

Although the radical conclusions of some scholars regarding a highly developed pre-Christian gnosticism have been discounted, it does seem clear that there were many ideas, assumptions, and perceptions about deity, reality, and the relationships of persons to gods and the world that were incorporated into the gnostic sects from outside Hellenistic sources. Two literary discoveries have both inspired and tended to support this line of research—the Dead Sea Scrolls at Qumran in 1946 and the Nag Hammadi library in 1945 with many gnostic documents.

The value of the study of gnosticism for interpreting the New Testament is greatest from the point of view that there was a pre-Christian gnosticism which was not an organized religion but was more a general attitude among thoughtful persons that although ignorance abounded, one could through knowledge come to understand one's true identity and find union or relationship with the absolute deity. This way of conceiving of a pre-Christian gnosticism supplements the classic view by providing an explanation for the rapid and widespread development of so many diverse gnostic heretical sects so quickly. This view also offers an explanation of why the New Testament could so easily be exploited by gnostic sects. The early Christian preachers and writers, seeking to speak and write to be understood, used terms current in the first century world in the vague context of gnostic religious longings and gave them new meaning in the context of the incarnation, death, and resurrection of Jesus.

Harold S. Songer

GOAD A rod, generally about eight feet long, with a pointed end used to control oxen. During the time of the judges, the Israelites hired Philistine blacksmiths to "sharpen the goads" (1 Sam. 13:21), either by fashioning metal points for the pointed ends or making metal casings for the blunt end which might be used to knock dirt clods from the plow. Goads might be used as a weapon (Judg. 3:31). The sayings of the wise are "goads" that "prod" thought (Eccl. 12:11). God warned Paul not to "kick against the goads" (KJV pricks) by refusing to submit to the heavenly vision (Acts 26:14).

GOAH (Gō′ äh) Place name meaning, "low" (as a cow) or "bellow." A place, apparently on the west side of Jerusalem, where Jeremiah promised the walls would be restored after the Babylonian destruction (Jer. 31:39).

GOAT See Animals.

GOATH (Gō′ ăth) KJV and REB transliteration of Hebrew in Jeremiah 31:39 for Goah. See Goah.

GOATSKIN Hide of goats desert dwellers used for clothing (Heb. 11:37) and for containers for water (Gen. 21:14) and wine (Josh. 9:4). In Genesis 27:16 Rachel placed goatskin on Jacob's neck and arms as part of the plan to deceive Isaac into giving his blessing. See Animals in the Bible.

GOB (Gŏb) Place name meaning, "back" or "mountain crest." Site where David and his men fought two battles with the Philistines, killing Philistine giants (2 Sam. 21:18–19). The parallel passage (1 Chron. 20:4) names Gezer as the place. Some Hebrew manuscripts read Benob or "in Nob" as in verse 16. The Greek manuscripts presuppose either in Gath or in Gezer. The location of Gob is not known, though it appears to be a Philistine city.

GOBLET KJV term for a bowl-shaped drinking vessel without handles (Song of Sol. 7:2). In contemporary English a goblet is a drinking vessel with a foot and stem. Modern translations are divided over the reference in Song of Solomon: bowl (RSV, TEV), goblet (NAS, NIV, REB). The underlying Hebrew term is translated basin (Ex. 24:6) and bowls (Isa. 22:24) elsewhere.

GOD The personal Creator worthy of human worship because of His holy nature and His perfect love revealed in creating the universe, electing and redeeming His people, and providing eternal salvation through His Son Jesus Christ.

God is unique in nature. No person, object, or idea can be compared to God. Anything said about God must be based on His revelation of Himself to us. Anything said about God must be said in human terms, the only terms we have and understand. The reality of God is always much greater than human minds can understand or express.

God as the Bible's Primary Subject The Bible and history begin with God (Gen. 1:1). The last chapter of the Bible describes God as the "Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end" (Rev. 22:13 NRSV). All the way through Scripture God is primary. For Christians the primacy of God is reassuring, liberating, and instructive. It reassures us that God controls all existence. It liberates us to know the loving, redeeming God seeks to set us free. It instructs us to be able to look for signs of God throughout His universe.

God as Present with Us God is present in His world in a unique manner. He is never separated from any part of His creation. As spirit, God has the perfect capability of being present everywhere in the world at once.

The Bible speaks of God's presence in two major ways: in space and in relationships. Theologians used the term omnipresence, derived from Latin, to speak of God's presence everywhere in all the world's space. Moses experienced that presence on a wilderness mountain (Ex. 3); Isaiah, in the Jerusalem Temple (Isa. 6); and Paul, on an international highway (Acts 9). Most often the Bible speaks in terms of God being present in relationships. He called Israel to be His people (Ex. 19:3–6). He appeared to Elijah in a "still, small voice" (1 Kings 19:12). Most of all God appeared Person to person in the human flesh of His Son Jesus.

God as Mystery Revealed in Christ The personal presence of God in Jesus Christ is the central and normative source of knowledge about God. Christ is known today through the witness of inspired Scripture and through the personal witness of the Holy Spirit. Still, what is revealed is the mystery of Christ. Even as it is revealed, God's revelation in Jesus Christ remains mysterious (Rom. 16:25–26; Eph. 3:1–10; Col. 1:24–27; 4:2–4). Faith believes that what remains hidden in mystery is totally consistent with what is revealed in Christ.

Revelation of Christ in the form of Bible narrative allows us to describe God but not to define Him. Perhaps the closest we can come to a definition is that God is the holy Being who is love in servant form. This rises out of Bible statements: "the Lord our God is holy" (Ps. 99:9); "God is love" (1 John 4:8,16). These contain partial descriptions, not definitions. The norm for a definition comes in Jesus, who said, "but I am among you as one who serves" (Luke 22:27 NRSV). Thus Christian preaching echoes Paul: "we do not proclaim ourselves; we proclaim Jesus Christ as Lord; and ourselves as your slaves for Jesus' sake" (2 Cor. 4:5 NRSV).

God's Unique Nature God is the only God. He is not simply the greatest of many gods—He is the only true God. God is the living God. This separates Him from all other gods and idols, which are merely forms humans have created in the image of things God created (Isa. 41:22–24; 44:9–20; 46:1–2,6–7). "The Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king" (Jer. 10:10; compare 1 Thess. 1:9). Christians see this in Jesus, joining Peter in confessing, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16:16).

The living God is also Lord and Master. In English translations He is Lord in two ways. LORD spelled with small caps represents the Hebrew Yahweh, the personal name of God, by which He introduced Himself to Moses (Ex. 3:15; 6:3). See Names of God; Yahweh. Lord with lowercase letters represents the Hebrew 'adonai and the Greek kurios. See Lord. This refers to the master, the boss, the owner, the person with authority over another. As Lord, God is sovereign Ruler over all the earth; He is the Creator and Judge of all persons. Thus the Hebrew identifies God as "the Lord God (Yahweh), the God of Israel" (Ex. 34:23). He is "Lord of lords" (Deut. 10:17). The New Testament proclaims, "let all Israel be assured of this: God has made this Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36 NIV). Thus Jesus receives the same titles as the Father, leading to a doctrine of the Trinity.

God is holy. The most basic word we have to describe God is holy. This is the unique quality of God's existence that marks Him off as separate and distinct from all else. Holiness includes the ideas of righteousness and purity, but it is more. Holiness belongs to God alone. It sets Him above us in majesty, power, authority, righteousness, and love. Persons or objects can be said to be holy only by virture of being drawn into relationship with God. (Compare Isa. 5:16; 6:3; 1 Pet. 1:15–16.)

God is eternal. He has no beginning and no ending. All else begins and ends as an expression of the will of God, but God has always existed and will always continue to exist.

God is spirit. He is not material or physical as we are. As spirit, He does not have the limitations of material form. Spirit is the highest form of existence. It enables God to be with His people everywhere simultaneously. As spirit, God chose to humble Himself and take on the form of human flesh (Phil. 2:6–11).

God is love. "God is love itself" is the nearest humans can get to making a non-symbolic statement about God (1 John 4:8,16). His love is coordinated perfectly with His righteousness. God's love is always righteous, and His righteousness is always marked by love. Love is the primary motivation behind revelation (John 3:16). God's love is expressed as His mercy in forgiving sinners and in rescuing or blessing those who do not deserve His attention.

God is Father. The love of God finds supreme expression as Father. God is known in Scripture as Father in three separate senses that must not be confused: (1) He is Father of Jesus Christ in a unique sense—by incarnation (Matt. 11:25–27; Mark 14:36; Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6; 2 Pet. 1:17); (2) He is Father of believers—by adoption or redemption (Matt. 5:43–48; Luke 11:2, 13; Gal. 3:26); (3) He is Father of all persons—by creation (Ps. 68:5; Isa. 64:8; Mal. 2:10; Matt. 5:45; 1 Pet. 1:17).

God is intimate. He is not an impersonal force like gravity, exerting influence in some mechanical, automatic way. He has personal characteristics, just as we do. God is living, working in His world, and relating to His people. He is aware of what is going on, makes plans, and carries them out. He forms relationships and has purpose and will. He is a jealous God, taking himself seriously and insisting that others take Him seriously (Ex. 34:14; Nah. 1:2; 1 Cor. 10:22). He wants more than divided loyalty or indifference from His people.

Attributes of God God has distinctive qualities that summarize what He is like.

God's glory refers to the weight or influence He carries in the universe and to the overwhelming brillance when He appears to people (Ex. 16:7–10; Isa. 6:3; Eph. 1:12–17; Heb. 1:3). It is His presence in all His sovereign power, righteousness, and love. Sometimes the Bible describes the glory of God as a physical manifestation. Sometimes it is a spiritual perception as in a sense of tremendous awe before God.

God's wisdom is His perfect awareness of what is happening in all of His creation in any given moment. This includes His knowledge of the final outcome of His creation and of how He will work from beginning to ending of human history (Job 11:4–12; 28:1–28; Ps. 139; Rom. 11). It also includes His ability to know what is best for each and every one of His creatures. Sometimes this is called His omniscience.

God's power is His ability to accomplish His purposes and carry out His will in the world. He can do what needs to be done in any circumstance (Job 36:22–33; Isa. 40:10–31; Dan. 3:1–30; Matt. 19:16–26; 1 Cor. 1:18–25). This is sometimes called His omnipotence.

God's righteousness expresses itself in many ways (Ex. 2:23–25; Josh. 23:1–16; Ps. 71:14–21; Isa. 51:5–8; Acts 10:34–35; Rom. 3:5–26). He is the ultimate standard of right and wrong. He is faithful, constant, and unchanging in His character. He works for the right, seeking to extend righteousness and justice throughout the world. He defends the defenseless, helpless, victimized, and oppressed. He opposes evil through personal expressions of His wrath, anger, judgment, punishment, and jealousy. He sits in present and eternal judgment on those who do evil.

His attributes show that God is able to accomplish His will. Nothing can limit Him except limits He places on Himself.

God at Work in His World God is not an inert being far removed from the world. God is the personal God who cares about and works in the world He created. Creation was His first work but certainly not His last.

God works as Redeemer to save the sinful, rebellious human creatures and to renew His fallen creation. He makes salvation possible. His love makes Him a saving kind of God. He redeemed Israel in the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 1—15); through the prophets He promised a Messiah who would save His people, and in Jesus Christ provided that salvation (John 3:16). Redemption in Christ completes creation, carrying out the purposes of God and making final, complete salvation possible.

God works in history. The sovereign God exercises His lordship or ownership of the world by continuing to work in His world and through His people. God allows people the freedom to be themselves and make their own free choices but works within those choices to accomplish His eternal purposes. This is called God's providence. God has not predetermined all the events of human history; yet He continues to work in that history in ways we do not necessarily see or understand.

God works toward and in the end time to fulfill His eternal purposes. God will one day bring His purposes to fulfillment, bringing history to a close and ushering in eternity. The sovereign, absolute Lord will accomplish His will in His world.

God as Trinity Finally, God has revealed Himself as Father and Creator, as Son and Savior, and as Holy Spirit and Comforter. This has led the church to formulate the uniquely Christian doctrine of the Trinity. New Testament passages make statements about the work and person of each member of the Trinity to show that each is God; yet the Bible strongly affirms that God is one, not three (Matt. 28:19; John 16:5–11; Rom. 1:1–4; 1 Cor. 12:4–6; 2 Cor. 13:14; Eph. 4:4–6). The doctrine of the Trinity is a human attempt to explain this biblical evidence and revelation. It is an explicit formulation of the doctrine of God in harmony with the early Christian message that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself" (2 Cor. 5:19). It expresses the diversity of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit in the midst of the unity of God's being. See Christ; Holy Spirit; Trinity.

John W. Eddins, Jr. and J. Terry Young

GOD OF THE FATHERS A technical phrase used as a general designation of the God of the patriarchs. Some references to the formula within the biblical narratives speak of the "God of my [your, thy, his, their] father" (Gen. 31:5, 29; 43:23; 49:25; 50:17), without mention of a particular father. Other references include the name of a particular patriarch, as "the God of Abraham" (Gen. 31:53; 26:24; 28:13; 32:9), "the God of Isaac" (Gen. 28:13; 32:9; 46:1), or "the God of Nahor" (Gen. 31:53). Given the polytheistic environment of the time, originally the formula could refer to tribal or clan gods (Josh. 24:2, 14–15). Each of the patriarchs apparently had a special name for God: "Fear of Isaac" (Gen. 31:42), "Mighty One of Jacob" (Gen. 49:24).

The "burning bush" story (Ex. 3) identified the "God of the Fathers" with Yahweh.

The biblical witness consistently uses the formula to emphasize continuity between the God who is revealed to Moses and the God who guided the patriarchs, even by a different name. Likewise, in the Old Testament, "God of thy fathers" or "God of our fathers" functions to link the author's generation to the God of earlier generations, especially with reference to the promises to the patriarchs (Deut. 1:11, 21; 4:1; 6:3; 12:1; 26:7; 27:3). In contrast, abandonment of this historic connection is also emphasized (1 Chron. 12:17; 2 Chron. 20:33; 24:24; 29:5; 30:7; 36:15; Ezra 7:27). In the New Testament the formula is transformed to mark the continuity between historic Israel and Christianity. The God revealed in Jesus Christ is the same as the God revealed to the patriarchs (Matt. 22:32; Mark 12:26; Acts 3:13; 5:30; 7:32; 22:14).

See Names of God; Patriarchs; Yahweh.

Dixon Sutherland

GODHEAD A word used with reference to God when one speaks of God's divine nature or essence or of the three persons of the Trinity. See Trinity.

GODLESSNESS An attitude and style of life which excludes God from thought and ignores or deliberately violates God's laws. Romans 1:20–32 is a classic characterization of godlessness: the godless refuse to acknowledge God in spite of the evidence of creation (1:22), engage in willful idolatry (1:25), and practice a life-style unconstrained by divine limits (1:26–31). The godless not only have no fear of God's judgment but seek to involve others in their wickedness (1:32). "Godless myths and old wives' tales" (NIV) refers to speech that encourages an attitude and life-style of godlessness (1 Tim. 4:7; compare 6:20; 2 Tim. 2:16).

GODLINESS An attitude and style of life that acknowledges God's claims on human life and seeks to live in accordance with God's will. In pagan Greek sources eusebeia (godliness, piety) refers to worship of the gods and to respect for the representatives of institutions regarded as divinely ordained (parents, judges, the emperor). Eusebeia was sometimes distinguished from dikaiosyne (righteousness) as concerning one's relationship with the gods rather than with other persons.

Acts 3:12 contrasts "piety" with faith in the name of Jesus, the real source of healing. Acts uses the adjective godly to describe religiously observant Gentiles (10:2,7; 17:23).

Only 1, 2 Timothy, Titus, and 2 Peter use words with the euseb- root for Christian piety. Individuals can be trained in godliness (1 Tim. 4:7). Godly teaching (1 Tim. 6:3) is that which results in godly lives (Tit. 1:1). False teachers sought to make their godliness a source of financial gain (1 Tim. 6:5). When "godliness" appears in lists with other virtues, it perhaps retains its earlier sense of respect for God and divinely ordained institutions (1 Tim. 6:11; Titus 2:12; 2 Peter 1:3–7). The form of godliness lacking the power of godliness (2 Tim. 3:5) likely refers to professed godliness that failed to shape moral lives since the profession was not accompanied by a vital relationship with God.

GODS, PAGAN One of the great distinctives of Judeo-Christian religion is monotheism—the recognition and reverence of only one God. By contrast, pagan religions of the biblical world were polytheistic, worshiping many gods.

Old Testament Many pagan gods had their origin as gods of certain places such as cities or regions. In Old Testament times, such gods or a combination of gods became nationalistic symbols as their cities or regions struggled for political dominance. The names of Near Eastern kings thus frequently contained a national god's name. The kings of Israel and Judah, for example, often bore names which contained a shortened form of the Hebrew name of Yahweh: Jo-, Jeho-, or -iah. A by-product of the connection between gods and certain locales was the belief that a god's power was limited to certain regions. Thus, officials of the Syrian king advised a battle with Israel on the plains observing, "their gods are gods of the hills" (1 Kings 20:23). Israel, against the background of this common belief, struggled with the concept that God was the Lord over all aspects of creation.

Egyptian Gods Egyptian religion included a great number of gods. Many were personifications of the enduring natural forces in Egypt, such as the Sun (Re or Atum), sky (Nut), earth (Geb), and so on. Certain gods were associated with a particular place, such as Ptah of Memphis. Other gods, like Maat (truth and justice), Sekhmet (war and disease), and Bes (god of childbirth) ruled over aspects of life. Still others combined these categories so that Thoth was god of Hermopolis, the moon, and wisdom, while Hathor was goddess of Denderah, the sky, and love. Some of the gods were worshiped in animal form, such as the Apis bull which represented the god Ptah of Memphis.

The Osiris myth was popular with the common people and became the principle of divine kingship. See Egypt.

The position of certain deities was a factor of the political situation. The gods' names which dominate pharaohs' names in a dynasty show both the dominant city and its dominant god. Thus the god Amen, later called Amen-Re, became the chief god of the empire because of the position of Thebes. Under Amenhotep III, the successes of the empire led to internal power struggles between the powerful priesthood of Amen-Re and the throne. Amenhotep IV changed his name to Akhenaton and embarked on a revolutionary reform which promoted worship of the sun disc Aton above all other gods. The reforms of Akhenaton failed. His second successor made clear his loyalties to Amen-Re by changing his name from Tutankhaton to Tutankhamen and abandoning the new capital in favor of Thebes. The following dynasty, while promoting Amen-Re seems to have favored gods of the north. The names of the gods Seth of Avaris, Ra of Heliopolis, and Ptah of Memphis are evident in the Nineteenth Dynasty names Seti, Ramses, and Merneptah.

No Egyptian gods are mentioned in the Bible, and the complex Egyptian religion did not significantly influence the Hebrews. Some have tried to posit a relationship between the reforms of Akhenaton and the monotheism of Moses, but the differences between Atonism and the Mosaic view of God are far greater than the similarities.

Mesopotamian Gods The complex system of belief common throughout Mesopotamia included thousands of gods. The most important are reviewed here.

The patron deities of the oldest Sumerian cities became the high gods of the Mesopotamian pantheon. Anu, god of the heavens and patron of Uruk (biblical Erech; Gen. 10:10), did not play a very active role. Enlil of Nippur ruled over the earth. The god of Eridu, Ea, was lord of the underground waters and the god of craftsmen. The feared Nergal of Cutha was the god of plague and the underworld. Gods of other cities became prominent through political circumstance. Thus, the god and namesake of the original Assyrian capital, Ashur, rose in importance with the rise of that empire. Ninurta, god of war and hunting, was patron for the Assyrian capital Calah. After the political rise of Babylon, Marduk was considered the chief god and was given the epithet Bel (equivalent to the Canaanite term Baal), meaning "lord" (Isa. 46:1; Jer. 50:2; 51:44). The Enuma elish, or Babylonian Creation Epic, tells of a cosmic struggle in which, while other gods were powerless, Marduk slew Tiamat (the sea goddess, representative of chaos). From the blood of another slain god, Ea created mankind. Marduk's son Nabu (Nebo in Isa. 46:1), the god of nearby Borsippa and of scribes, became especially exalted in the neo-Babylonian period as seen in the name Nebuchadnezzar.

Several important gods were associated with heavenly bodies. Shamash was god of the sun and played a prominent role. The moon god Sin was revered in the cities of Ur and Haran, both associated with Abraham's origins (Gen. 11:31). Ishtar (the Canaanite Astarte/Ashtaroth) was goddess of the morning and evening star. In addition to her astral associations, Ishtar fulfilled a dual role as the goddess of war and the goddess of love and fertility. Temple prostitution was an important part of her cult and gave Uruk, the city of her older Sumerian equivalent, Inanna, a sordid reputation. Among the masses Ishtar was very popular and referred to as the "queen of heaven" (Jer. 7:18; 44:17–19). Closely connected with Ishtar was her consort, the spring vegetation god Tammuz. A myth tells of Tammuz' betrayal by Ishtar, his subsequent death, and descent into the underworld. This event was commemorated by an annual mourning for the god in the fourth month which fell during summer. Ezekiel lamented this pagan practice by certain women of Jerusalem (Ezek. 8:14). The death of Tammuz reflected and coincided with the annual wilting of spring vegetation in the Near East. Also associated with fertility was the storm god Adad, the Canaanite Hadad.

In addition to their cosmic nature, the gods were thought of as present in their image, or idol, and living in the temple as a king in his palace. The gilded wooden images were in human form, clothed in a variety of ritual garments, and provided with meals. On occasion the images were carried in ceremonial processions or to "visit" one another in different sanctuaries.

Canaanite Gods The gods of the Canaanites made the greatest impact on the Israelites. While many of these are related to Mesopotamian gods, Canaanite religion was not well understood until the discovery of religious texts in the 1920s at the Syrian city of Ugarit. See Canaan.

The chief god of the Canaanite pantheon was called El, the generic Semitic word for "god." El, however, was viewed as a grandfatherly, retiring god and did not play an active role. By far the most prominent role must be assigned to Baal around whom the Ugaritic myths revolve. These myths represent Baal as the storm god with power over rain, wind, and clouds, and thus over the fertility of the land. The cycle of the seasons is represented in the myths by Baal's struggle with Mot (literally, "death"), who represented drought and brought forth dry barren fields. During the dry season (summer) Baal was forced temporarily into the underworld by Mot, but his recurring return brought forth the rainy season (winter) and restored fertility to the land. In another myth, Baal defeated Yamm (literally "sea"), the god of chaos, in much the way that the Babylonian Marduk defeated Yam (literally, "sea"), the god of chaos.

In the Ugaritic myths, Baal's sister/consort Anat, goddess of war and love, assisted in his victories. Closely associated with Anat and more important in Palestine was another goddess of war/love, Astarte, the Mesopotamian Ishtar. Astarte (a Greek form of the name) appears in the Old Testament in the singular as "Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians" (1 Kings 11:5,33; 2 Kings 23:13) as well as in the plural form, Ashtaroth (Judge. 10:6, 1 Sam. 7:4; 12:10), representing local manifestations of the godess. As the female counterpart of Baal, Astarte/Ashtoreth seems to have been worshiped through sacred prostitution designed to promote fertility. Another goddess of fertility was Asherah, in the Ugaritic texts the wife of El. Worship of Asherah was apparently quite pronounced throughout Palestine (1 Kings 14:23 NIV). See Asherah.

The fertility aspects of the Canaanite gods was an inviting snare to the Israelites. New to farming and having just settled in Canaan after a generation of nomadic life in the desert, the Israelites were particularly tempted to serve the gods said to control the fertility of that land. A great deal of syncretism must have occurred, mixing elements of Baalism with worship of God. Indeed, Jeroboam's golden calves at Dan and Bethel may have been an attempt to identify Yahweh of Israel with the Baal of the Canaanite elements of the kingdom and to combine their traditions. Archaeological evidence of such syncretism can be seen in the recent discovery in the Sinai of a jar inscribed with prayer to "Yahweh of Samaria and his Asherah."

Various other deities of Palestine impacted the Old Testament story. The Arameans of Damascus (Syria) worshiped the generic Semitic storm god Hadad, frequently referred to by the epithet Rimmon (2 Ki. 5:18), meaning "thunder." Sometimes the names Hadad and Rimmon were coupled (Zech. 12:11). The god Dagon of the Philistines (Judg. 16:23) was apparently a Semitic god of grain mentioned in the Ugaritic texts as Dagan, the father of Baal. The Philistines worshiped Dagon in temples at Ashdod (1 Sam. 5:1–5) and Beth Shean (1 Chron. 10:10).

The national god of the Ammonites was called Molech (1 Kings 11:7). There are no vowels in Hebrew, so in ancient times Molech was written with the same consonants (MLK) as the Hebrew/Semitic word for king, melek. Thus, Molech may have served as a title ("the king"; compare Amos 1:15) for the Ammonite god much as Baal served as a title for the storm god. The pronunciation Molech comes from the substitution for the original vowels with those from the Hebrew word bosheth, "shame," and is an intentional insulting misvocalization. The alternate name Milcom (1 Kings 11:5; Jer. 49:1,3 TEV) is a corruption of a variant form meaning "their king." Worship of Molech involved human sacrifice, especially making one's children "pass through the fire" (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5; 2 Kings 23:10; Jer. 32:35). In Judah, this practice was conducted at Tophet in the Valley of Hinnom on the southwest side of Jerusalem (2 Chron. 28:3). Jephthah's reply to the Ammonites (Judg. 11:24) refers to Chemosh as their god. Chemosh, the national god of the Moabites (Num. 21:29; Jer. 48:46), thus may be identical to Molech although they are listed separately as abominations brought to Jerusalem by Solomon (1 Kings 11:7). Chemosh is mentioned prominently in the famous Moabite Stone. Mesha, king of Moab, probably offered up his son Chemosh (2 Kings 3:27). The Canaanite god Horon was evidently worshiped in the two cities of Bethhoron ("house of Horon"). Resheph (Hebrew for "flame" or "pestilence" Hab. 3:5) was a god of plague, equivalent to the Nergal of Mesopotamia.

New Testament The pagan gods of the New Testament world were the deities of the Greco-Roman pantheon and certain eastern gods whose myths gave rise to the mystery religions. The conquests of Alexander the Great of Macedon took the Greek culture throughout the Near East.

A few of the Greco-Roman gods are mentioned in the New Testament. At the head of the Greek pantheon was Zeus, the Roman Jupiter, god of the sky, originally the weather or storm god. With the syncretism of the Hellenistic period following Alexander the Great's conquests, Zeus was equated with the Semitic storm god Hadad. As the supreme Greek deity, however, Zeus was readily identified with the chief god of any region. Thus, when Antiochus IV attempted to force Hellenism on the Jews in 167 B.C., he transformed the Jewish Temple into a temple to Zeus. A huge altar to Zeus at Pergamum is probably the "Satan's throne" of Revelation 2:13. The messenger of the Greek gods was Hermes (Roman, Mercury). When the people of Lystra assumed Barnabas and Paul to be gods (Acts 14:8–18), they called Paul Hermes because he was the spokesman; and they identified Barnabas with Zeus or Jupiter. The oxen and garlands they brought forward were appropriate offerings for Zeus. Hermes was also the god of merchants and travelers. Artemis was the Greek goddess of the wildwood, of childbirth, and, consequently, of fertility. The great mother goddess of Asia Minor worshiped at Ephesus was identified with Artemis, the Roman Diana. Her temple at Ephesus was one of the seven wonders of the aancient world and an object of pilgrimages. Artemis of the Ephesians was depicted in statues at Ephesus with many breasts, perhaps inspired by a sacred stone (a meteorite?; Acts 19:35) kept in the temple. Paul's work in Ephesus resulted in an uproar incited by the silversmiths who sold souvenirs to the pilgrims (Acts 19:23–41).

Other Greco-Roman gods are not mentioned in the New Testament but formed an important part of Hellenistic culture. The most popular of the gods was Apollo, pictured in Greek art as the epitome of youthful, manly beauty. He served as the god of medicine, law, and shepherds. Aphrodite was the Greek goddess of sexual love and beauty. She was identified with the Semitic godddess Ishtar/Astarte and with the Roman Venus. Although not mentioned in the New Testament, a temple to Aphrodite at Corinth was said to employ a thousand cultic prostitutes and contributed to the city's reputation for immorality. Athena, namesake and patron of the city of Athens, was a virgin goddess connected with arts and crafts, fertility, and war. She was identified with the Roman Minerva. Hera, whose Roman equivalent was Juno, was the wife of Zeus and goddess of marriage, women, and motherhood. Also not mentioned is the important Poseidon, Neptune to the Romans, god of the sea, earthquakes, and—oddly—horses. The war god of Greece was Ares, equated with the Roman god Mars. Hephaistos, the Roman Vulcan, was god of fire and the patron of smiths. Hades, called by the Romans Pluto, was the Greek god of the underworld. His name became the Greek word used in the New Testament for the abode of the dead (Matt. 11:23; 16:18; Luke 10:15; 16:23; Acts 2:27,31; Rev. 1:18; 20:13–14).

Certain Greek gods became the centers of cults which were quite influential in New Testament times. Foremost among these is the cult of Demeter or the Eleusinian mysteries. Demeter was the Greek goddess of grain who, according to the myth, ceased to function when her daughter Persephone was abducted into the underworld by Hades. Persephone was eventually released to her mother but forced to spend a third of each year in the underworld, a cycle which reflected the annual growth cycle of grain. Secret rites of initiation into the cult took place annually at Eleusis. The Greek god of wine, intoxication, and fertility was Dionysus, the Roman Bacchus. His cult involved orgiastic feasts in which wild animals were torn apart alive and eaten raw, originally only by groups of women. Sick persons appealed to the popular god of healing, Asclepius, by visiting special sanctuaries in certain cities. See Fertility Cult; Mystery/Mystery Religions. Daniel C. Browning Jr.

GOG AND MAGOG (Gŏg and Mā′ gŏg) 1. In Ezekiel 38—39, Gog of the land of Magog is the leader of the forces of evil in an apocalyptic conflict against Yahweh. In Revelation 20:8, Gog and Magog appear together in parallel construction as forces fighting for Satan after his 1,000 year bondage. The identity of Gog and Magog has been the subject of an extraordinary amount of speculation. In general, however, attempts to relate these figures to modern individuals or states have been unconvincing.

Ezekiel's prophecy is apparently built on Jeremiah's sermons against a foe from the north (Jer. 4—6). Ezekiel's historical reference may have been Gyges, king of Lydia, who asked Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria, for help in 676 B.C. but then joined an Egyptian-led rebellion against Assyria about 665 B.C. His name became a symbol for the powerful, feared king of the north. Magog is apparently a Hebrew construction meaning, "place of Gog."

2. A descendant of the tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:6).

GOIIM (Gôi′ ĭm) Proper name meaning, "nation," particularly a "Gentile, foreign nation." 1. Land whose King Tidal joined the eastern coalition against a coalition from Sodom and Gomorrah. This action led to a war in which Abraham became involved (Gen. 14:1). To which nation the general term "Goiim" applies here is uncertain. Some would suggest the Hittites, since several Hittite kings between 1750 and 1200 B.C. were named Tudhaliya or Tidal. Others point to the Manda people, barbarian invaders who entered Mesopotamia about 2000 B.C. and had some association with Elamites. Goiim may mean a coalition of Hittite, Luvian, and/or other peoples. One Greek manuscript tradition points to Pamphylia, which means "rich in peoples." 2. Joshua 12:23 lists a king of Goiim in Gilgal as one Joshua conquered. The earliest Greek translation reads "king of goiim of Galilee," a reading many Bible students adopt since the immediate context refers to areas near Galilee and the copyist would easily write Gilgal since it plays such an important role in the early narratives of Joshua. Whatever the correct reading, we do not know the precise location or peoples referred to. 3. Isaiah 9:1 also refers to Galilee of the nations. This may represent the Hebrew way of referring to Assyria's governmental district which the Assyrians called Megiddo. Assyria controlled this region after its wars with Israel in 733 and in 722 B.C. 4. In Judges 4:2 Sisera's residence was in Harosheth of the Gentiles (KJV) or Harosheth-ha-goiim (NRSV). See Harosheth-hagoiim.

GOLAN (Gō' lăn) Place name meaning, "circle" or "enclosure." It was a city of refuge for people who unintentionally killed someone and was located in Bashan for the part of the tribe of Manasseh living east of the Jordan River (Deut. 4:43). It was also a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:27). It was located at modern Sahem el-Jolan on the eastern bank of the River el-Allan. See Cities of Refuge; Levitical Cities.

GOLD See Minerals and Metals.

GOLDEN CALF An image of a young bull, probably constructed of wood and overlaid with gold, which the Hebrews worshiped in the wilderness and in the Northern Kingdom of Israel.

Ancient Near Eastern Background and Biblical References Living bulls were important in the religion of some regions of ancient Egypt, and bull images appear in the art and religious texts of Mesopotamia, Asia Minor, Phoenicia, and Syria. The primary references to "golden calf" in the Bible are Exodus 32:1–8 and 1 Kings 12:25–33. The former passage records that the people summoned Aaron to make an image to go before them. The image was apparently intended to represent Yahweh, the Lord of Israel. The latter reference states that Jeroboam I constructed at Bethel and Dan two golden bulls, which were probably meant to represent the pedestals of God's throne. Interestingly, these passages are closely related to each other because they use the same terminology in the dedication of these images (Ex. 32:4; 1 Kings 12:28), and they both explore the sin of idolatry at crucial junctures in Israel's history.

Theological Significance These accounts demonstrate Israel's strong conviction that God cannot be lowered to the level of pictorial representation. God, as sovereign Lord, allows no physical image of Himself, and any human effort to create such an image invites His judgment.

See Aaron; Bethel; Bull; Dan; Exodus; Jeroboam I; Moses; Yahweh.

Robert William Prince, III

GOLDEN RULE The name usually given to the command of Jesus recorded in Matthew 7:12 and Luke 6:31—do to others as you would like them to do to you. The designation "Golden Rule" does not appear in the Bible, and its origin in English is difficult to trace. The principle of the Golden Rule can be found in many religions, but Jesus' wording of it was original and unique.

GOLDSMITH See Occupations, Professions in the Bible.

GOLGOTHA (Gŏl' gō thă) Place name transliterated from Aramaic and or Hebrew into Greek and then into English meaning, "skull." In Mark 15:22, the Hebrew name for the place where Jesus was crucified. The Latin equivalent is calvaria. Both words mean "skull." See Crucifixion; Calvary.

The hill of Golgotha, or Place of the Skull.

GOLIATH (Gō lī' ăth) In 1 Samuel 17:4, the huge Philistine champion who baited the Israelite army under Saul in the valley of Elah for forty days. He was slain by the youthful David. See Elhanan.

Azekah in the Valley of Elah where young David killed Goliath.

GOMER (Gō′ mēr) Personal name meaning, "complete, enough," or "burning coal." 1. Daughter of Diblaim and wife of Hosea the prophet (Hos. 1:3). She is described in Hosea 1:2 as "a wife of whoredoms." Various explanations have been offered for that designation. Some have maintained that she was a common prostitute. Others have maintained that she was a cultic prostitute in the service of Baal. Some have suggested she symbolized Israel's worship of many gods. Still others have believed she was an ordinary woman who became unfaithful after her marriage to Hosea. Her unfaithfulness to her husband became a sort of living parable of Israel's unfaithfulness to Yahweh. See Hosea. 2. Son of Japheth and grandson of Noah in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:2). He is apparently seen as representing the Cimmerians, an Indo-European people from southern Russia who settled in Cappadocia in Asia Minor. Assyrian sources show they threatened Assyria after 700 B.C. He was the father of Ashkenaz or the Scythians of Jeremiah 51:27 who displaced the Cimmerians from their home in Russia. Gomer was also the father of Riphath (or Diphath in 1 Chron. 1:6) and of Togarmah.

GOMORRAH (Go môr′ rah) See Sodom and Gomorrah.

GONG (KJV "brass") A loud percussion instrument, perhaps like a type of cymbal used in the Temple worship (1 Cor. 13:1). The Greek is literally, "noisy brass" referring to the metal from which the instrument was made.

GOOD In contrast to the Greek view of "the good" as an ideal, the biblical concept focuses on concrete experiences of what God has done and is doing in the lives of God's people. Scripture affirms that God is and does good (1 Chron. 16:34; Ps. 119:68). The goodness of God is experienced in the goodness of God's creative work (Gen. 1:31) and in God's saving acts (liberation of Israel from Egypt, Ex. 18:9; return of a remnant from captivity, Ezra 7:9; personal deliverance, Ps. 34:8; salvation, Phil. 1:6). God's goodness is extended to God's name (Ps. 52:9), God's promises (Jos. 21:45), God's commands (Ps. 119:39; Rom. 7:12), God's gifts (Jas. 1:17), and God's providential shaping of events (Gen. 50:20; Rom. 8:28). Though God alone is truly good (Ps. 14:1,3; Mark 10:18), Scripture repeatedly speaks of good persons who seek to live their lives in accordance with God's will. Christians have been saved in order to do good (Eph. 2:10; Col. 1:10) with the Holy Spirit's help.

GOODMAN KJV term for a husband or for the head of a household. At Proverbs 7:19 goodman renders the Hebrew ish, the usual word for man. KJV on occasion translates the Greek term oikodespotes (rendered "goodman" at Matt. 20:11; 24:43; Mark 14:14; Luke 22:11) as master of the house (Matt. 10:25) or householder (Matt. 13:27). Modern translations use equivalents such as landowner or owner of the house.

GOPHER WOOD In Genesis 6:14, the material out of which Noah was instructed to construct the ark. The etymology of the Hebrew word is unknown, and there is no certainty as to the type of wood to which it refers. Even the earliest translators were uncertain. See Ark.

GOSHEN (Gō′ shēn) 1. The phrase, "land of Goshen," appears in the general description of territory occupied by Joshua's forces (Josh. 10:41; 11:16). Apparently it refers to the hill country between Hebron and the Negev. Some believe the phrase refers to a country.

2. The "land of Goshen" may have been named after the city of Goshen located in the district of Debir (Josh. 15:51). Goshen may have been the chief city of the region at one time. The ancient city was either located at Tell el Dhahiriyeh, twelve miles southwest of Hebron or at a location further east.

3. Goshen is primarily recognized as an area in the northeast sector of the Nile Delta. It was occupied by the Hebrews from the time of Joseph until the Exodus.

Goshen is significant for biblical studies for four reasons. (1) The pharaoh assigned Goshen to Joseph's family when they entered Egypt (Gen. 47:6,11). The "Hebrew Sojourn" occurred there. (2) The territory lay on a route from Palestine to Egypt. (3) It may be possible to date Joseph's entrance to Egypt with the Hyksos control of the Delta. (4) Both the two cities which the Hebrews built, Rameses and Pithom, and the Hyksos capital at Zoan are key issues for settling on a date for the Exodus.

Gary D. Baldwin

GOSPEL is the English word used to translate the Greek word for "good news." Christians use the word to designate the message and story of God's saving activity through the life, ministry, death, and resurrection of God's unique Son Jesus.

Development in the Old Testament Bisar is the Hebrew verb which means "to proclaim good news." Unlike the English language, Hebrew is able to convey the subject of the proclamation in the verb's root; no direct object was needed with the verb bisar to make clear that the subject of an announcement was "good news." Originally, the word was used to describe the report of victory in battle (2 Sam. 4:10). Because the Israelites believed God was actively involved in their lives

G

The fertile land of Goshen in the delta country of northern Egypt.

(including battles and wars) bisar came to have a religious connotation. To proclaim the good news of Israel's success in battle was to proclaim God's triumph over God's enemies.

The transition from the use of bisar in a military setting to its use in a personal context is not difficult to envision. If Israel proclaimed good news when God delivered the nation from its enemies, individuals ought also to proclaim good news when God delivered them from personal distress (Ps. 40:10). The nation's victories in war and a person's individual salvation both called for the announcement of what God had done.

The Book of Isaiah marks the full religious development of the term within the Old Testament. By this time the word is most often used to describe the anticipated deliverance and salvation which would come from the hand of God when the long-awaited Messiah appeared to deliver Israel (Isa. 52:7). The military-political and personal connotations of the word were fully united in the hope of a Deliverer who would both triumph over the earthly enemies of God's people and usher in a new age of salvation.

Usage in the New Testament In the New Testament "gospel" has two shades of meaning: it is both the actual message on the lips of Jesus about the reign of God (Mark 1:14), and it is the story told about Jesus after His death and resurrection (Gal. 1:11–12). In each case "gospel" refers to the work which God alone initiates and completes. Inasmuch as God has chosen to bring about the world's reconciliation in this one particular way, there is only one gospel (Heb. 1:1–2). Furthermore, since God is the One working through the saving activity of Jesus, God is also the Author of the gospel (1 Thess. 2:13). The gospel is God's message to humankind (Rom. 15:16). Only God calls and commissions the messengers of this good news, and, in addition, only God gives the messengers the story they are to make known (Rom. 10:14–15; 1 John 1:5).

Therefore, the proclamation of the good news is the continuation of the work which God began in Jesus Christ. God's messengers are not merely telling about the history of salvation when they proclaim the good news; rather, they are an integral part of the work which continues through their efforts. The living Lord, Jesus Christ Himself, confronts listeners through the words of the messengers. To alter the message by adding extra requirements or by omitting crucial details is to pervert the gospel into a false message which ceases to have saving power (2 Cor. 11:3–4; Gal. 1:6–7).

The Message of the Gospel The most basic summary of Jesus' preaching appears in Mark 1:15. "The time is fulfilled," He said. "The kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."

The need for good news assumes a bad situation. The bad situation in which humans find themselves and the reason they need good news is that sin has entered each of their lives (John 8:7; Rom. 3:23). Sin is a power that controls them and shapes their destinies (Rom. 3:9; 6:22).

Because humans cannot overcome the power of sin by themselves, God has intervened on their behalf through Jesus. Jesus has come to seek out all persons so they may respond to God's grace (Luke 15:1–10; 19:10). God's grace, which Jesus bears within Himself (John 1:14), overcomes sin's power and offers forgiveness for individual sins (Mark 2:5; Rom. 6:14). See Grace.

While God offers grace freely to everyone, this grace is not effective in overcoming the power of sin in a person's life until that person accepts it (Matt. 19:20–22; John 1:12). Because Jesus bears God's grace in Himself, grace is accepted only by receiving him (John 14:9–12). The marks of having accepted Jesus are repentance (Luke 13:3) and a changed life (Matt. 3:8; 1 John 1:5–7).

The fact that forgiveness, freedom from sin, and a new life are possible is good news. Because all this is possible only through Jesus Christ, His message and His story are called the "gospel."

Development of Written Gospels Within the New Testament, the word euanggelion always refers to oral communication, never to a document or piece of literature. Not until the beginning of the second century and the writings of the "church fathers" do we find references to "gospels" in the plural, indicating written documents. How did this transition from a spoken message to written books take place?

Literacy was uncommon in the ancient world. Books and writing equipment were expensive and the education needed to use them was usually reserved for the rich alone. Consequently, many societies preserved and transmitted their national stories, traditions, and faith by word of mouth. These societies stressed the importance of telling and remembering their traditions from one generation to another. Such a system may seem fragile and unreliable by modern standards, but ancient societies trusted the methods and forms they developed to sustain the process.

In times of crisis (such as an invasion by a foreign nation), however, certain learned individuals would try to guarantee the preservation of their society's oral traditions by writing them down. They often wrote out of the fear of what would happen if their nation was defeated or destroyed and no one was left to transmit orally the living traditions to the next generation.

The gospels of the New Testament developed along a pattern similar to other ancient writings. For many years the stories and teachings of Jesus were communicated primarily by word of mouth. In addition to the fact of limited literacy, members of the early church believed Jesus would return soon, so they felt no urgency to write down His teachings for the future. Then, about thirty years after Jesus' ascension, three interrelated crises began to impinge upon the church. As a result of these crises, individuals responded to the leadership of God's Spirit to write down the teachings, stories, and message of Jesus into what we call the Gospels.

The first of these crises was persecution. The Emperor Nero initiated the first official persecution so he could use Christians as scapegoats for his own insane actions.

The second crisis involved the passing away of the generation of people who had actually seen Jesus in the flesh, heard His teachings, and witnessed His miracles. Some died in the persecutions and others simply aged enough to pass away from natural causes. The early church placed a high value on the experience of actually having seen and heard Jesus (Luke 1:2; 1 John 1:1). Therefore, the death of members of the original generation of Christians was viewed as a potential break in their linkage to the historical roots of their faith.

The third crises was the perceived delay in Christ's return to earth. Preaching recorded in the New Testament has a distinct sense of urgency about it. The apostles believed that Jesus would be returning any day and that it was imperative for them to give as many people as possible the opportunity to respond to Him. Their constant emphasis was to communicate the gospel today, not to preserve it for the future. As a longer and longer period of time passed after Jesus' ascension, the church became more and more concerned about preserving the message.

The Purposes of the Evangelists From approximately A.D. 60 until A.D. 90, four individuals responded to the inspiration of God by writing down the message of, and about, Jesus. As they did, these individuals surely held several goals in common. Responding to the crises around them, they wanted to preserve the gospel message in an accurate form for believers who would follow in future generations. In this sense the authors were each trying to produce a book for the Christian community. They wrote down the good news of Jesus to strengthen, to educate, and to encourage those who already accepted its message.

It is also clear that they intended to use a written form of the gospel as an additional tool for evangelism (John 20:30–31). The evangelists envisioned the written gospel as a vehicle to spread faith in Jesus Christ. In this sense, each evangelist was trying to produce a missionary book.

Understanding the missionary character of the four Gospels is an important factor in their study. The Gospel writers' primary interest was not to produce great works of literature, nor was their intention to write a biography in the modern sense of the word. Their principal objective was to convert individuals to faith in Christ. Thus, they wrote primarily to convince, not to record facts.

The primary intention of the evangelists determined the shape and content of the written Gospels. One may wish the Gospel writers had included additional information about Jesus' home life, His adolescence, or some other area of interest; but the Gospel writers were not led to believe that kind of data was crucial for faith. The evangelists structured their works to give the message maximum impact on the readers. They included material they felt was essential for the reader to know to be able to make a decision about Jesus' identity. All other concerns regarding form and content of the Gospels was secondary to the missionary objective.

While the teaching of the New Testament affirms that there is only one, true gospel, the books contained therein stand as testimony to the fact that the gospel is influenced by each personality which proclaims it. The church does not possess one account of the message of and work of Jesus which stands alone as the official record of His activity. Rather, the early church recognized the inspiration of four different accounts of the gospel. Each one was written from a slightly different perspective; each one had a different audience in mind; each one was designed to highlight the elements of the gospel which the author felt most important. The four Gospels witness both the divine inspiration of God and the individual, human personalities of their authors.

Out of several gospels and other accounts of the life of Jesus (Luke 1:1–2), God led the early church to choose four which He had inspired. See Matthew; Mark; Luke; John.

Rejected Gospels The early church perceived God's inspiration in the four Gospels of the Bible, yet several other books which presented themselves as gospels also circulated during the church's early history. These "gospels" were either inadequate Jewish interpretations of Jesus, or works heavily influenced by Gnostic heretics. All of the known rejected gospels were written much later than the four included in the New Testament, most commonly between A.D. 120 and 150. Among these works are The Gospel of the Ebionites, The Gospel According to the Hebrews, The Gospel According to the Egyptians, The Gospel of the Naassenes, The Gospel of Peter, and The Gospel of Thomas.

God did lead the church to preserve four gospels so that it could continue to preserve and proclaim the richness of the gospel message of salvation to the diverse peoples of the world in their diverse needs. P. Joel Snider

GOSPEL OF THOMAS See Apocrypha, New Testament; Gnosticism.

GOUGING THE EYES A cruel and degrading punishment sometimes inflicted on conquered peoples in biblical times. The Philistines put out Samson's eyes (Judg. 16:21). Nahash offered to make peace with the people of Gilead on the condition that he put out the right eye of every man in the city and thus bring disgrace upon all Israel (1 Sam. 11:2). After executing King Zedekiah's sons in his sight, the Babylonians put out his eyes (2 Kings 25:7). Scripture records such events as cruelty, not as examples to follow.

GOURD A hard-rinded, inedible fruit of the genera Lagenaria or Cucurbita. Gourd motifs were used in the ornamentation of the interior of the Temple (1 Kings 6:18, KJV knobs) and of the rim of the bronze sea (1 Kings 7:24). The gourd of Jonah 4:6–10 cannot be identified precisely. The KJV followed the earliest Greek translation with its rendering gourd. The Vulgate or early Latin translation understood the plant as ivy. Many modern translations simply refer to a plant (NAS, RSV, TEV) or bush (NRSV). The NIV renders the term "vine"; REB, "climbing gourd." Many interpreters think a castor oil plant (Ricinus Communis) is meant.

GOVERNMENT may be defined in two general ways, either in terms of the officials or the institutions. In reference to officials, government refers to the sovereign authority over a body of people. In reference to institutions, government refers to the customs, mores, laws, and institutions of a people.

Many standard definitions of civilization include the presence of a strong centralized government as a constitutive element. The rise of the first empires at the beginning of the Early Bronze Age is related in part to the rise of centralized governments. Centralized government was necessary for the building and maintaining of canals used for irrigation in Mesopotamia. It was also necessary for the development of a standing army. Extensive international trade required more centralized governmental power over the economic institutions.

In understanding the biblical conception of government, one must remember that biblical theology presents early Israel as a theocracy, having God as king and ruler (Judg. 8:22–23; 1 Sam. 8:7–9; Pss. 93—99; Rom. 13:1–4). Ultimate authority resides in God and God alone. Human government is, therefore, always limited and always intended to be within the framework of God's will. The best ruler will be the one who best carries out God's design for just rule.

Early Hebrew Patterns of Government An understanding of biblical patterns of government must begin with the Patriarchal period. During this time, the Hebrews had no centralized government. The major unit was the extended family or, on a larger basis, the tribe. The government was family based. The first unit of authority or government was the household or the father's house.

This unit of society corresponds best to our designation of the extended family and would often involve two or more generations living together. The oldest male was usually the head of the family, the patriarch. As such, he was the chief official of family and government. The next level of social organization was the clan, often designated by the Old Testament as the family (Hebrew mishpahah). The clan was composed of several related extended families. One individual might be designated as chief or head of each clan. The next larger social level was the tribe (Hebrew shevet), composed of several clans. A tribe might have a chief or even a prince as its leader. Finally, a group of tribes could be known as a people (Hebrew 'am). The tribe was the most frequent social unit mentioned apart from the household or extended family. We should not necessarily consider the tribe to be overly large, but more as rather small and isolated groups, especially before Saul and David.

It has been argued recently that the tribal and clan structures were based not on kinship, but on grouping for common defense. Thus a clan might be formed by two or three villages banding together and a tribe by two or three of the clan units. This would be true for the period after the conquest of Canaan. Thus many scholars would argue that in the Song of Deborah (Judg. 5) the warriors are related to their tribal territories more than their tribes as a kinship group.

It is usually assumed that the patriarchal society was nomadic or semi-nomadic. Following the pattern of modern nomadic tribes with a patriarchal organization, the Hebrew society was probably democratic. Tribal decisions would be made on the basis of discussion by all the adult men. Not all men had equal authority. The elders held a major source of authority during this period and later periods as well.

The elders for a clan were probably the heads of the households that comprised the clan. For a tribe, the elders would have been all the household heads, or selected elders from each clan. Thus the elders were the leaders of the local community. They had the responsibility to decide many of the everyday matters, religious and judicial. The elders were representatives of the community as a whole in religious and military matters. They often accompanied the leader. The elders could conclude a covenant (2 Sam. 5:3) or treaty on behalf of the people. The elders regularly dispensed justice at the city gate (Deut. 21:19). The elders continued to function well into the period of the monarchy as a governing body. See Elder.

Beginning with the Exodus, the Old Testament presents Israel as a people composed of numerous tribes but with one leader. Moses as leader was succeeded by Joshua, who was succeeded in turn by the judges. Although the depiction indicates a central leader, there is no indication of a centralized government. Granted, the leader has great authority; but the leader was not surrounded by the structure of a centralized government. A confederation of tribes was in existence during this period. In addition to the elder, Israel also had, following the period of Moses and Joshua, the office of judge. The judge was not primarily a judicial official, but rather a charismatic military leader. Typically, the judge would rally the forces of Israel and defeat an oppressing power. From the time of Moses, the office of judge had included the element of deciding cases (Deut. 1:16; 16:18–20; 17:8–9). Much more frequently, the emphasis was upon the military prowess of the judge (Judg. 3:7–11, 12–30; etc.). The book of 1 Samuel brings a change in the emphasis of the judge. The judge became a priestly official, as in the case of Eli and Samuel. Thus the term "judge" seems to have a broader meaning than just a judicial term. Certainly the judge seems to have been the chief official of the confederacy of tribes in that period prior to the monarchy. It may be that the term was not specific as to the type of leader—priestly, military, or judicial—but simply indicated the leader. Although there were some cases where one judge attempted to have his sons succeed him (as did both Eli and Samuel), the office was not regularly hereditary. Compare the problems of Abimelech (Judg. 8:22—9:56). In this respect particularly, the office of judge differed from that of king which followed.

Although the period of judges may have led to the development of the monarchy, the two are quite different. The judge still retained a tribal character. Although several tribes might join together to fight a common enemy under the leadership of a judge, judgeship carried no sense of the permanence, hereditary character, or royal court of the monarchy. The judge was just an extension of the tribal chief or leader carried to a somewhat larger realm of a leader for several combined tribes. In actual function, the judge seldom played a strong role in maintaining the people's religious traditions until Samuel (Judg. 2:10; 17:6; 21:25).

Government during the Monarchy With the rise of the monarchy, a totally new organizational pattern emerged. Not only did the king stand as a single ruler for all the people, as a sort of chief raised to a national level; but the king was also surrounded by a new structure. The king had his royal court to carry out his mandate. Alongside the older tribal and town leaders, the king had a new cadre of officials. His officials included military officers and a professional army alongside the old militia from the tribes. The nation was divided into administrative districts with administrators who stood alongside the old system of elders. A royal court and professional army required revenue, so a taxation system was developed with its attendant officials. Evidence for this taxation system is found in the Samaria ostraca, which record the receipt of taxes paid from various estates to the government. Similarly, the "lamelek" jar handles (which bear an inscription literally meaning, "for the king") indicate either taxation or produce of royal farms. Building projects required massive labor, and so the corvee or forced-labor contingents were organized. The old system of local government based on the city and the elder still existed, but a burgeoning bureaucracy developed parallel to the old system. The government also entered the international arena at this time, conducting warfare against international as well as local nations. It would negotiate treaties and alliances, trade and commercial agreements, and even arrange royal marriages. Surrounding the royal court were such officials as "the one who is over the house" a sort of Secretary of State or Prime Minister; the recorder who was a herald, press secretary, and chief of protocol combined; the chief scribe; counselors; priests; and prophets (1 Kings 4). In addition, many attendants would minister to the king. The king embodied the rule of the entire nation. As he and his officials were just and faithful in ruling, the nation prospered. As he and the officials were unjust, the nation suffered. Likewise, the unjust actions of lesser officials ultimately was the responsibility of the king. Thus the prophets accused the king of his actions and of the actions of those under him.

Government Under the Foreign Empires If the shift to a monarchy was the most revolutionary change in Israel's government, the collapse of the monarchy then marked the second most significant change. Self government and independence were lost. In all likelihood this change was felt more on the national level than on the local level. The elders continued to function as local leaders, but the royal officials were replaced by new imperial and military officials of the conquering power—first Assyria, then successively, Babylon, Persia, and Hellenistic and Roman states. Now the tax revenues went to the treasury of that foreign state, and a new legal system had to be obeyed alongside the Hebrew law. This is seen especially in the trial of Jesus which involved hearings before the religious court (at that time the highest Jewish court) and before the Roman authorities. The chief ruler became a local governor appointed by the foreign power as was Nehemiah, or even a foreigner as were the Roman procurators. When local kings were allowed to rule, it was only at the pleasure of the foreign power and under the watchful eye of foreign military.

Beginning with the post-exilic period, Jewish government fell more and more into priestly hands. The monarchy had ceased. The restructuring of society prevented too much power in political hands. The priesthood was strengthened and gradually assumed more and more of the judicial authority. Even the elders came to have an especially religious role as judicial officers. "Law" became virtually synonymous with the religious covenant, so that obeying the law meant keeping God's covenant. This affected every area of life. Such a conception was not necessarily new; it relates to the idea of God as king. The manner in which power was concentrated entirely in the sacred realm, as opposed to the secular, was new to the post-exilic and later periods. Since political power was not possible for the most part, power was consolidated where it could still be exercised, in the religious area. Religion was simply expanded to cover all of life.

In the New Testament we find Judea governed by a Herodian king appointed by the Roman government. Later direct Roman rule replaced the king. Religious authority still existed. The high priest and the priesthood exercised considerable authority, though it remained in name "religious" authority. The elders belonged to a formal body, the Sanhedrin, as also did certain priests. Just as in the case of the monarchy, two structures of authority existed side by side. Civil government now belonged basically to the foreign overlord, but religious power rested in the hands of the priests and Sanhedrin. Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

GOVERNOR (Gov'er nor) Generally an appointed civil official charged with the oversight of a designated territory.

The King James Version uses governor to translate a variety of Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek terms. These terms represent a wide range of meanings that encompass almost every form of leadership or oversight. For example governor is used of city and tribal leaders (Judg. 5:9; 1 Kings 22:26), rulers (Ps. 22:28), temple officials (Jer. 20:1), managers of households (John 2:8; Gal. 4:2), and even pilots of ships (Jas. 3:4). Recent versions of the Bible have translated the Hebrew word more specifically with words like ruler, leader, prince, commander, chief officer, master, manager, trustee, and ethnarch. This has allowed governor to be used to describe those officials serving under a rule who have administrative responsibility for assigned territories or projects. Generally the governor exercised both law enforcement and judicial functions as a representative of his superior.

Old Testament The most widely used term for governor in the Old Testament is the Accadian loanword pechah. This word first occurs in Ezra and Nehemiah as a title for Tattenai (KJV Tatnai), the Persian administrator of the province "beyond the River" (Ezra 5:3). Tattenai's response to Darius' decree (Ezra 6:13) is indicative of the governor's allegiance to the king and responsiveness to the king's command.

The title also is used of Sheshbazzar (Ezra 5:14) to describe his appointment as "governor of the Jews" (Ezra 6:7). Cyrus had commissioned him to rebuild the temple in Jerusalem at the end of the Babylonian exile. Nehemiah described his appointment by Artaxerxes I as "governor in the land of Judah" (Neh. 5:14). The prophet Haggai addressed his message to "Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah" (Hag. 1:1). Pechah is used of other leaders in the Old Testament as well (see 2 Kings 18:24; 20:24; Isa. 36:9).

New Testament The Greek word hēgemōn and its derivatives predominate in the New Testament occurrences of governor. The term often is used to describe Roman officials who exercised the tax and military authority of the emperor. Quirinius (Luke 2:2), Pontius Pilate (Luke 3:1; Matt. 27:2), Felix (Acts 23:24), and Porcius Festus (Acts 24:27) are specifically named. Joseph's rule in Egypt also is classified as that of a governor (Acts 7:10).

Because governors are sent by the king "to punish evildoers and for the praise of them that do well" (1 Pet. 2:13–14), believers are to submit to their authority. Sent out by Christ, however, Christians will be brought before governors and kings for judgment. Faithfulness in such situations will bear witness for His sake (Matt. 10:18).

Michael Fink

GOZAN (Gō′ zăn) Place name of uncertain meaning, possibly, "quarry." A Syrian city-state to which the Assyrians exiled many of the people from Israel after they defeated Israel in 732 (1 Chron. 5:26) and 722 (2 Kings 17:6; 18:11). Assyria had previously conquered Gozan (2 Kings 19:12). Gozan is probably located at modern tel Halaf in northwestern Mesopotamia on the southern bank of the River Khabur. Archaeology shows the city was built after 1000 B.C., though some Stone Age habitation is evidenced. The city included 150 acres with temples and government buildings. Excavators found documents with apparently Hebrew names, perhaps people deported by Assyria.

GRACE Undeserved acceptance and love received from another, especially the characteristic attitude of God in providing salvation for sinners. For Christians, the word "grace" is virtually synonymous with the gospel of God's gift of unmerited salvation in Jesus Christ. To express this, the New Testament writers used the Greek word charis, which had a long previous history in secular Greek. Related to the word for joy or pleasure, charis originally referred to something delightful or attractive in a person, something which brought pleasure to others. From this it came to have the idea of a favor or kindness done to another or of a gift which brought pleasure to another. Viewed from the standpoint of the recipient, it was used to refer to the thankfulness felt for a gift or favor. These meanings also appear in the biblical use of charis, but only in the New Testament does it come to have the familiar sense which "grace" bears for Christians.

Grace in the Old Testament No one word in the Hebrew Old Testament is equivalent to the New Testament use of charis for God's unmerited gift of salvation. The translators of the Greek Old Testament characteristically translated the Hebrew word chanan/chen as charis, and the King James Version likewise often translates this as "grace" or "favor" or "mercy." The Hebrew verb chanan occurs some 56 times in the Old Testament and refers to the kind turning of one person to another in an act of assistance, such as aid to the poor (Prov. 14:31). In the Psalms it is frequently used to call upon the gracious assistance of God in times of need (Pss. 4:1; 6:2; 25:16; 31:9; 86:3; 86:16; 123:3). In other instances God is said to make one attractive or favorable in the eyes of another (Gen. 39:21; Ex. 3:21; 11:3; 12:36). It is the latter meaning of "favor" which the noun chen especially conveys. Of its 70 occurrences in the Old Testament, 43 are in the stereotyped expression "to find favor/grace in the eyes/sight of another." Most commonly this expression refers to persons seeking or obtaining the favor of another (Jacob from Esau—Gen. 32:5; 33:8; Joseph from Potiphar—Gen. 39:14; Ruth from Boaz—Ruth 2:2,10; Esther from Ahasuerus—Esther 2:17). More rarely it refers to a person receiving God's special favor (Noah—Gen. 6:8; Moses—Ex. 33:12—19; Gideon—Judg. 6:17). In none of these instances, however, is there any emphasis on the recipient's lack of merit as in the New Testament concept of "grace." Closest to this idea are the few passages in the prophets which refer to God's gracious favor to Israel in delivering her from captivity and restoring the nation (Jer. 31:2; Zech. 4:7; 12:10).

Other Hebrew words convey the idea of God's grace, such as racham/rachamim ("mercy") and chesed ("steadfast covenant love"). These words are often combined with chen to refer to the one merciful, loving, gracious God (Ex. 34:6; Neh. 9:17; Pss. 86:15; 103:8; 145:8; Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2). Together they convey something of the New Testament sense of God's grace, but even then they lack the sense of this being an unmerited favor of God. To be sure, the idea that Israel did not deserve God's mercy and love is found in the Old Testament (Deut. 7:7–10; 9:4–6). God promised David that He would not remove His love from David's successor, even though the successor sinned (2 Sam. 7:14–16). The entire Book of Jonah deals with God's merciful concern to save the wicked Ninevites, and Hosea powerfully conveys God's undeserved mercy and grace with the image of the prophet's love for the faithless Gomer. God's grace shines forth clearly in the Exodus, where God delivered an undeserving people before they entered into His covenant.

Grace in the New Testament We owe our distinctly Christian understanding of grace to the apostle Paul. The Pauline epistles employ the word charis and its related forms twice as frequently as the rest of the New Testament writings combined. Paul sometimes employed the word with its more secular meanings. He urged his readers to make their speech "gracious" or "attractive" (Col. 4:6; Eph. 4:29), and referred to his visit to Corinth as a "grace" which would bring them pleasure (2 Cor. 1:15 NAS text note). The idea of gift also appears, especially in reference to his collection for the Jerusalem saints (1 Cor. 16:3; 2 Cor. 8:1,4,6,7,19). Often he used charis to mean thanks, as in the thanksgiving over a meal (1 Cor. 10:30) or in songs of praise (Col. 3:16). Frequently he employed the set expression "Thanks" ("charis be to God" (Rom. 6:17, 7:25; 1 Cor. 15:57; 2 Cor. 2:14; 8:16; 9:15; 1 Tim. 1:12; 2 Tim. 1:3). One wonders if for Paul this common Greek idiom did not carry a deeper nuance. It was precisely his experience of God's grace that led to his profound sense of thanksgiving.

Paul's sense of God's grace owed much to his experience of being turned from the persecutor of the church to Christ's missionary to the Gentiles (1 Cor. 15:9–10; 1 Tim. 1:12–14). So convinced was he that this was all God's doing and not of his own merit that he could describe his apostolic calling as coming even before his birth (Gal. 1:15). He was an apostle solely because of God's grace (Rom. 1:5), and his entire ministry and teaching were due to that divine grace (Rom. 12:3; 15:15; 1 Cor. 3:10; 2 Cor. 1:12; Gal. 2:9; Eph. 3:2,7,8).

Paul had too profound a sense of human sin to believe that a person could ever earn God's acceptance (Rom. 3:23). As a Pharisee, he had sought to do that by fulfilling the divine law. Now he had come to see that it was not a matter of earning God's acceptance but rather of coming to accept God's acceptance of him through Jesus Christ. So, he came to see a sharp antithesis between law and grace. Law is the way of self-help, of earning one's own salvation. Grace is God's way of salvation, totally unearned (Rom. 3:24; 4:4; 11:6; Eph. 2:8). Grace is appropriated by faith in what God has done in Christ (Rom. 4:16). God's grace comes to sinners, not to those who merit God's acceptance (Rom. 5:20–21). It is through Christ's atoning work on the cross that God's grace comes to us, setting us free from the bondage of sin (Rom. 3:24–31). Christ is the Representative who breaks the reign of sin and brings life and acceptance with God through divine grace (Rom. 5:15, 17). God's grace is so bound up with Christ that Paul could speak of the "grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 8:9; 2 Tim. 2:1). It was in the beloved Son that God's grace came supremely to mankind (1 Cor. 1:4; Eph. 1:6–7; compare 2 Tim. 1:9).

For Paul, grace is practically synonymous with the gospel. Grace brings salvation (Eph. 2:5, 8). Grace brings eternal life (Rom. 5:21; Titus 3:7). To share in the gospel is to be a partaker of grace (Phil. 1:7; Col. 1:6). In Christ Jesus, God's grace is open to all people (Titus 2:11; compare 2 Cor. 4:15); but the experience of God's grace is conditional upon human response. It can be rejected or accepted (2 Cor. 6:1; Gal. 1:6; 5:4).

From the human perspective, the divine grace is a power which undergirds the present life. God's grace abides in us (2 Cor. 9:14); we stand in it (Rom. 5:2). Our calling, our witness, our works are all based on the power of God's grace in our lives (2 Thess. 1:11–12). Paul sharply rejected any antinomian perversion of the gospel which failed to recognize that the true experience of God's grace changes one's life in the direction of righteousness (Rom. 6:1,14–15). Grace never gives freedom to sin. His own experience had shown him a new power of the divine grace active in his ministry in spite of his human weakness (2 Cor. 12:9). In fact, all who experience God's grace have gifts of that grace for ministry and service (Rom. 12:6; Eph. 4:7).

So pervasive was Paul's sense of God's grace that he always referred to it in the opening or closing of his letters. His usual salutation includes a wish for "grace" and "peace" upon his readers (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3). Here Paul played upon the normal word of salutation in Greek letters (chairein-joy). Charis has a similar sound, but a world of difference. For the Christian, a reminder of God's grace in their lives is the richest word of greeting and the fullest source of joy.

Surprisingly the word "grace" does not occur in Matthew or Mark. The concept is there, in Jesus' ministry to sinners and outcasts, in His healing ministry, and in such teachings as the parable of the laborers in the vineyard (Matt. 20:1–8). Luke, however, made extensive use of charis in both his writings. Sometimes he used it with basically secular meanings, such as "credit, benefit" (Luke 6:32–34 NAS), as "thanks" (Luke 17:9), or as attractiveness in speech (Luke 4:22). The familiar Old Testament idea of "favor" appears a number of times, sometimes referring to the favor of one human to another (Acts 2:47; 7:10; 24:27; 25:3,9; Luke 2:52), sometimes to God's favor bestowed on individuals (Luke 1:28,30; 2:40; Acts 7:46). Reminiscent of Paul are the references in Acts which refer to salvation or to the gospel as "grace" (Acts 11:23; 13:43; 18:27; 20:24,32). Particularly Pauline is the reference to salvation through the grace of the Lord Jesus in Acts 15:11. Also like Paul are those places where grace is described as an enabling power in the ministries of various Christians (Acts 4:33; 6:8 NAS; 14:26; 15:40).

Grace only occurs three times in John's Gospel, all in the prologue (ch. 1), and all in a sense reminiscent of Paul. Grace is equated with truth (1:14), its gift nature is emphasized (1:16), and it is set in antithesis to the law of Moses (1:17). In the remainder of the Johannine corpus, grace occurs only three times, all in benedictions (2 John 3; Rev. 1:4; 22:21). In the Johannine writings the idea of God's unmerited gift in Christ is very present, but conveyed by a different word—agape (love).

References to grace in the other New Testament writings do not extend beyond the meanings found in the Pauline epistles and Luke-Acts. Secular meanings of charis occur, such as "gratitude" (Heb. 12:28) and "credit" (1 Pet. 2:19–20 NAS). Grace is connected with God's mercy (Heb. 4:16) and with the atoning death of Christ (Heb. 2:9). It is virtually equated with the gospel (1 Pet. 5:10) and with salvation (1 Pet. 1:10,13). It is seen as a power which strengthens life (Heb. 13:9), undergirds those who are persecuted (1 Pet. 5:10), and grants gifts for Christian service (1 Pet. 4:10). God's grace can be spurned (Heb. 10:29; 12:14–15) or turned into a perverted gospel promising freedom from the law and thus freedom to sin without judgment (Jude 4). Above all, grace is the hallmark of the Christian experience and thus a frequent component in benedictions (Heb. 13:25; 1 Pet. 1:2; 2 Pet. 1:2).

See Mercy; Love; Justification. John Polhill

GRAFT To unite a scion (the detached, living portion of a plant which provides the leafy portion of a graft) with a stock (the part of the graft providing the roots). Olives were frequently caused to multiply by removing shoots from the base of a cultivated tree (compare Ps. 128:3) and grafting them onto the trunks of wild olive trees. Paul's illustration (Rom. 11:17–24) portrays the incomprehensible grace of God who does what no farmer would do—break off cultivated limbs (representing descendants of Israel) to graft in wild limbs (representing Gentile believers). The illustration also serves as a warning to believing Gentiles not to be proud and despise the contribution of Israelites who made their faith possible but to stand firm in faith.

A large grain silo at ancient Megiddo with a spiral access staircase leading down into it.

GRAIN A general term for the edible seed of cultivated grasses. Common grains in the biblical world included wheat (Gen. 30:14), spelt or emmer (REB vetches) (Ex. 9:32), barley (Ex. 9:31), and millet (Ezek. 4:9). The KJV normally renders grain as corn which means not maize (as in American usage) but any grain.

Various types of grains for planting on sale at an Arab market in old Jerusalem.

GRANARY A storage facility for threshed and winnowed grain. Archeological evidence indicates that granaries varied in size and format. Granary might refer simply to jars or bags of grain (Gen. 42:25), to plastered or unplastered pits, to silos (perhaps Luke 12:18), or even to large structures with numerous rooms (Hezekiah's storehouse, 2 Chron. 32:28, or those used by Joseph to store large amounts of grain, Gen. 41:49). Empty granaries was a sign of God's displeasure (Jer. 50:26; Joel 1:17). Gathering of grain into granaries was a picture of God's gathering of the righteous (Matt. 3:12; Luke 3:17). See Garner.

GRAPES See Plants in the Bible.

GRASS Herbage suitable for consumption by grazing animals (Job 6:5). English translations use grass to translate at least five Hebrew words.

1. Deshe appears to be a comprehensive term for things that sprout and turn green (Gen. 1:11), being translated grass (KJV), vegetation (NAS, Excavated grain storehouses (granaries) at the site of ancient Beersheba.

An Arab vineyard worker examining grapes on the vines in his field.

NRSV, NIV), all kinds of plants (TEV), or growing things (REB). With rain it forms green pastures (Ps. 23:2). See Isaiah 66:14; 2 Kings 19:26.

2. Dethe, the Aramaic equivalent of deshe, depicts the vegetation to be grazed in the field (Dan. 4:15,23).

3. Yereq refers to pale yellow, green, or gold plants: the green herbs animals eat (Gen. 1:30; 9:3; Num. 22:4); the green sprouts of trees (Ex. 10:15); God's judgment destroys the green things (Isa. 15:6). Yereq can modify deshe to emphasize the green color (2 Kings 19:26; Ps. 37:2; Isa. 37:2). The related term yaraq describes garden vegetables (Deut. 11:10; 1 Kings 21:2; Prov. 15:17).

4. Eseb are the annuals the early rains bring forth (Gen. 1:11,29) as contrasted with the perennials; thus they are the herbs of the field (Gen. 1:30; 2:5; 9:3). Humans depend on God to make grass grow (Ps. 104:14; Mic. 5:7; Zech. 10:1). Grass illustrates the brevity of human life (Ps. 102:4,11) but also the rich, flourishing growth (Ps. 72:16; 92:7) and the king's enriching flavor (Prov. 19:12).

5. Chatsir is a general term for wild grass growing on roofs (2 Kings 19:26), mountains (Ps. 147:8), and even resistantly hanging on by watering places during drought (1 Kings 18:5). Humans in their mortality can be compared to grass in contrast to God's word (Isa. 40:6–8; compare 51:12; Pss. 90:5; 103:15). The lily (Matt. 6:28) is later referred to as grass (v. 30).

G

GRASSHOPPER See Insects.

GRATE, GRATING A framework of crisscrossed bars. The grating of the tabernacle altar was made of bronze and held rings through which carrying poles could be inserted (Ex. 27:4–7; 35:16; 38:4,5,30; 39:39).

GRATITUDE See Thanksgiving.

GRAVE The pit or cave in which a dead body is buried. The variety of grave sites used by the Hebrews was determined by several factors: the circumstances of death, the surrounding terrain, and the time available for preparation and burial. The most usual grave was the shaft or trench. While the use of pits for collective burial sites is not mentioned in the Bible, several have been excavated in Palestine. Caves were often chosen as a convenient alternative to the cost and time involved in cutting a rock tomb. Because they offered both an abundance of caves and ideal locations for constructing rock hewn shafts, Palestinian hillsides were a common choice for grave sites.

The tomb cut out of rock was sometimes fashioned to serve as a multiple grave with separate chambers. Ledges were often constructed to hold individual family members; and when the tomb was full, the bones from previous burials were set aside to make more room. The bones were placed in jars or stone boxes called ossuaries, which resembled vessels used by the Romans to store ashes after cremation. Ossuaries sometimes held the bones of more than one person and were frequently marked with decorative or identifying designs. The entrances to tombs were secured either by hinged doorways or large flat stones which could be moved by rolling.

The most desirable grave site was the family tomb to which ample reference is made in the patriarchal narratives of Genesis. The Hebrews apparently envisioned a "shade" existence in death and preferred proximity to ancestors over solitude for the placement of their loved ones' remains.

While most graves were left unmarked, some were marked with trees (Gen. 35:8) or stone pillars. Second Samuel 18:18 anticipates the use of pillars, but this practice was never widespread in biblical times. The graves of the infamous dead were often marked with a pile of stones (Achan, Josh. 7:26; Absalom, 2 Sam. 18:17; the king of Ai and the five Canaanite kings, Josh. 8:29; 10:27). In New Testament times graves were whitewashed each spring so people could see them easily and avoid touching them to prevent ritual defilement during the Passover and Pentecost pilgrimages (Matt. 23:27; compare Luke 11:44).

Coffins were generally not used in ancient Palestine. The body was placed on a simple bier and transported to the grave site. While Canaanites often placed containers of food and water in their tombs, the Israelites largely avoided this custom.

Roman version of graves—tombs with niches (for jars containing cremated remains) like these at Pompeii.

In Hebrew thought graves were not simply places to deposit human remains. They were in a sense extensions of Sheol, the place of the dead. Since the realm of Sheol was threatening and since each grave was an individual expression of Sheol, the Israelites avoided burial sites when possible and treated them with circumspection. They performed purification rites when contact was unavoidable.

See Death; Eternal Life; Sheol. Joe Haag

GRAVEL Loose, rounded fragments of rock. One image of the suffering of conquered Zion was teeth broken by gravel (Lam. 3:16), perhaps the same as licking dust before the feet of the conqueror.

GRAVEN IMAGE See Idols.

GRAVING TOOL A sharp implement used to finish shaping the rough form of a statue cast from a mold (Ex. 32:4) or used for engraving tablets with writing (Jer. 17:1).

GRAY See Colors.

GREAT A title claimed by the Samaritan magician Simon (Acts 8:9–10). The title represents a claim to divine honors though the precise meaning of the title is unclear. Justin Martyr held that the Samaritans revered Simon as the highest god of the Canaanite pantheon. Others have argued that Simon claimed to be a lesser god who represented the power of the high god, such as Baal Zebul or Athena.

GREAT LIZARD See Animals.

GREAT OWL See Birds.

GREAT SEA Mediterranean Sea (Num. 34:6,7; Josh. 15:12). See Mediterranean Sea.

The Mediterranean Sea along the coastline near Caesarea Maritima.

Terracotta of woman with Grecian dress and hairstyle, dating from the second to first century B.C.

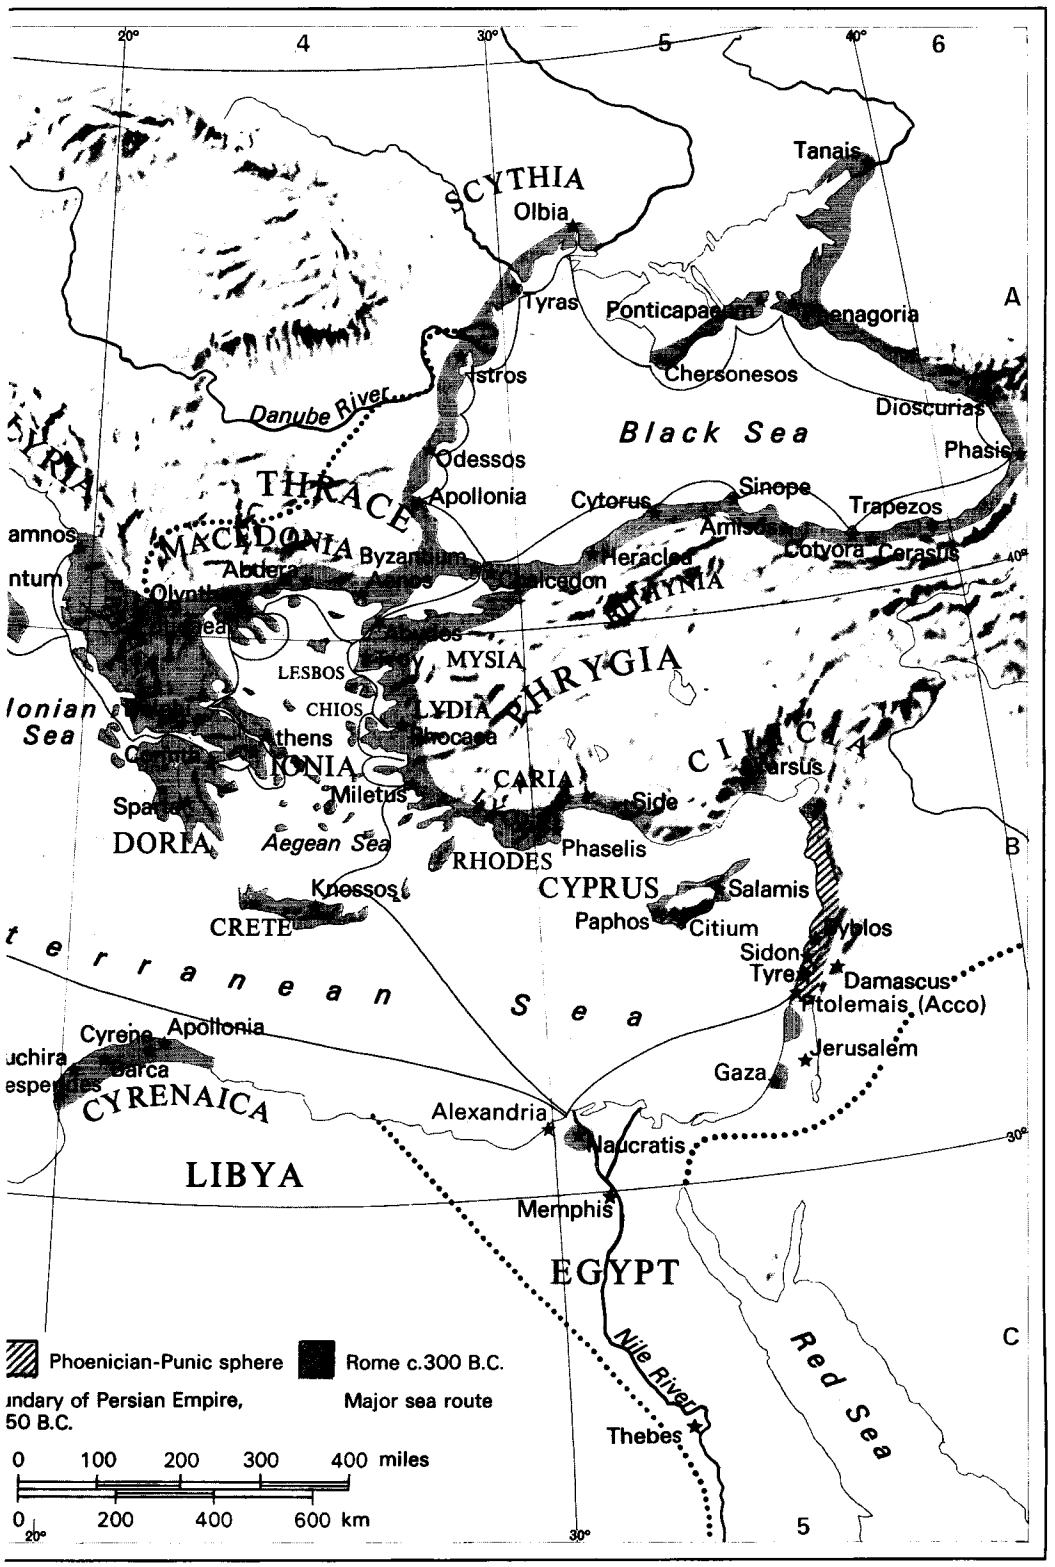
GRECIA (Grē′ cĭ à) KJV spelling of Greece in Daniel 8:21; 10:20; 11:2. See Greece.

GRECIAN (Grē′ cian) Proper adjective referring to things or to people with origins in Greece. In the New Testament this refers to Jews who had adopted the Greek culture and language. They formed a significant part of the early church and created problems because of prejudice within the church (Acts 6:1; 9:29).

GREECE (Grēēce) Located between the Italian Peninsula and Asia Minor, Greece itself is a peninsula with the Adriatic and Ionian Seas on the west and the Aegean Sea on the east. These seas, in turn, are a part of the larger Mediterranean Sea. Greece owes its rough terrain to the fact that it is the southern end of the central European mountain range. Another geographical feature is the numerous islands that lie in close proximity to the Greek mainland. The southernmost area, the Peloponnesus, is itself virtually an island, connected to the mainland by only a narrow neck of land known as the Isthmus of Corinth.

Its mountainous nature has played an important role in the development of the country. First of all, it has an unusually long shoreline for such a small area, resulting from the fact that there are numerous bays and inlets, giving it many natural harbors. Since its mountains were heavily forested in earlier times, shipbuilding and the sea trade developed. Secondly, the rough terrain discouraged a sense of unity among its people since communication between them was not easy. Finally, the land for agriculture, while fertile, was limited so that what was produced could not sustain a large population. Small grains, grapes, and olives were the main agricultural products while the mountains provided pastures for sheep and goats.

Historical Developments About the time of the great prophets in Israel (after 800 B.C.), city-states began to develop in Greece. The limited food supplies had forced Greeks to leave the homeland. As a result, colonies were established on the Mediterranean islands, Asia Minor, Sicily, Italy, and in the Black Sea area. Colonies provided the basis for trade; and trade, in turn, encouraged the growth of cities since the economy was not tied to agriculture.



The high-water mark for the city-states was 500-404 B.C. The dominant city-states of the period were Athens and Sparta. About 500-475 B.C. Athens beat off a threat from the Persians. There followed what is known as the Golden Age of Athens. Under its great leader—Pericles—art, architecture, and drama flourished. Peloponnesian city-states feared the power of Athens, however,

The Erechtheum with the Porch of the Maidens on the Acropolis of ancient Athens in Greece.

THE WORLD OF THE GREEKS
1
2
0°
10°
A
C CELTS
IBERIANS
ETRUSCANS
Adriatic
Massilia
Olbia
Alalia
Tharros
Carales
Tyrrhenian Sea
MAGNA GRAEC
Motya
Hippo Regius
Utica
Carthage
NUMIDIA
Hadrumetum
Thapsus
MELITA
Sabrata
Leptis
Alexander the Great EMPIRE OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT
Black Sea
Caspian Sea
Mediterranean Sea
Red Sea
ARABIA
Greek sphere
0 400 800 miles
0 400 800 km
Former Persian Empire
Alexander's Empire
Routes taken by Alexander's army
Cities founded by Alexander
3

© carta

20°
4
30°
5
40°
6
A
B
C SCYTHIA
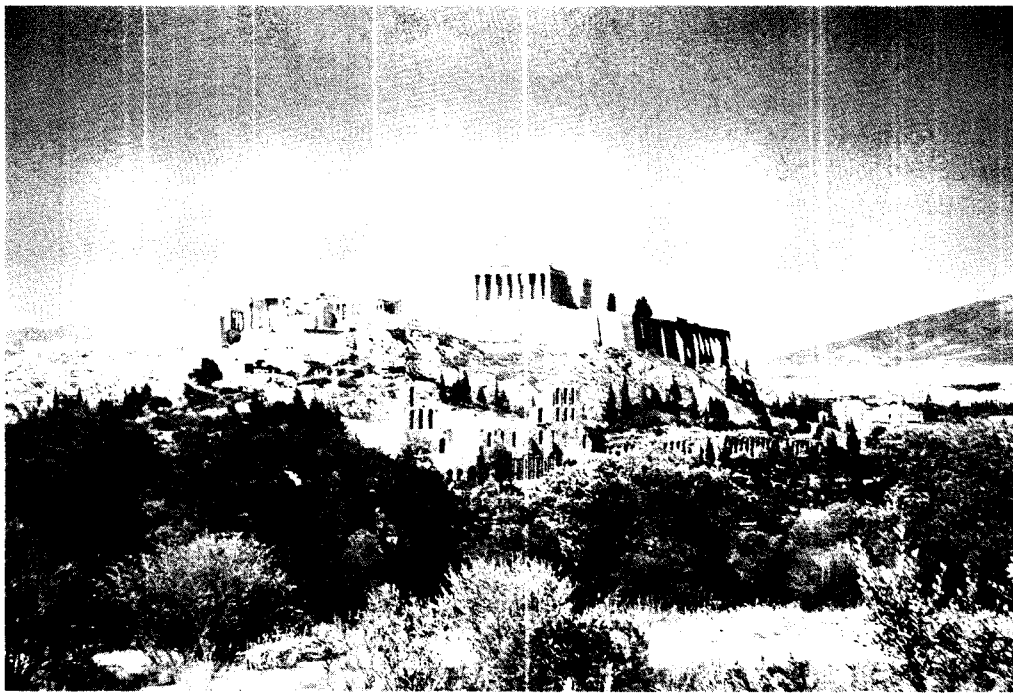
Olbia
Tanais
Tyras
Ponticapaeum
Chersonesos
Dioscurias
Phasis
Istros
Danube River
Black Sea
Odessos
THRACE
Apollonia
Cytorus
Sinope
Trapezos
Amisos
Cotyora
Cerasus
MACEDONIA
Abdera
Byzantium
Heraclea
BITHYNIA
Olynthus
MYSIA
LESBOS
PHRYGIA
CHIOS
LYDIA
Ionian Sea
Athens
IONIA
CILICIA
Tarsus
CARIA
Miletus
Side
Sparta
DORIA
Aegean Sea
RHODES
Phaselis
CYPRUS
Salamis
Knossos
CRETE
Paphos
Citium
Byblos
Sidon
Tyre
Damascus
Ptolemais (Acco)
Mediterranean Sea
Cyrene
Apollonia
Barca
Jerusalem
Gaza
CYRENAICA
Alexandria
Naucratis
LIBYA
Memphis
EGYPT
Nile River
Red Sea
Thebes
Phoenician-Punic sphere
Rome c.300 B.C.
Major sea route
0 100 200 300 400 miles
0 200 400 600 km

Relief of the myth of Telephus, son of Hercules, and his encounter with Achilles, a myth crucial to Greek history and culture.



and united under the leadership of Sparta to war against Athens. The defeat of Athens in 404 B.C. began a period of decline for the city-states.

About 350 B.C. Philip II came to the throne of Macedonia, a territory in what is now largely northern Greece. In the years that followed Philip brought all the Greek peninsula under his control, only to be assassinated in 336 B.C. He was succeeded by his twenty-year-old son, Alexander, whose schoolmaster had been the great philosopher, Aristotle.

Alexander was one of the most outstanding military and organizational geniuses of human history. By the time of his death in 323 B.C., he had conquered an empire that spanned the Middle East from Greece to the western reaches of India, as well as Syria-Palestine and Egypt. Wherever he went, he left colonies that became dispensers of Greek language and culture, known as Hellenism. When the Romans took over much of this territory two centuries later, they imposed their legal and military system. They, in turn, were conquered by Greek culture. Thus we speak of the Graeco-Roman culture. When Christianity arose, it had Greek, which many linguists call the most flexible language ever devised, as a vehicle to spread its concepts. Christian theologians in later centuries would wed Christian concepts with Greek philosophical methods and ideas to develop Christian theology.

Greece and the Bible Very few references to Greece appear in the Old Testament with most of them being found in the Book of Daniel (Dan. 8:21; 10:20; 11:2. See also Zech. 9:13). This is not true of the New Testament, however, especially as regards Paul's ministry. Some of his most fruitful work was done in Greek cities. Philippi, in Macedonia, was the first church founded by Paul on European soil (Acts 16). It would become Paul's special favorite among his churches and would be the recipient of his most intimate and loving letter, the Epistle to the Philippians. In the district of Thessaly, Paul founded two churches, Thessalonica and Berea (Acts 17:1–14). The Thessalonians also would be the recipients of Pauline letters, two of which are in the New Testament (1 and 2 Thessalonians). Just as Paul had problems while at Thessalonica (Acts 17:1–9), so he had problems explaining to the church about the return of the Lord.

The Acropolis at Athens, Greece.

Bible students have long debated about Paul's success or lack of it at Athens (Acts 17:16–33). While the worship of the Greek gods had declined, Paul's experience in the marketplace at Athens shows that it was not entirely dead. It was, however, the sense of the failure of the older religions that led to the rapid acceptance of the Christian religion throughout the Roman empire. Paul, however, did not win a large number of converts at Athens, but he did win some.

No city received more attention nor provoked more correspondence from Paul than Corinth. Located on the narrow isthmus that connects the Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece, Corinth was a brawling, sinful seaport town, the crossroads of the Mediterranean (Acts 18:1–17). Here Paul met two people who would be among his most valuable helpers, Priscilla and Aquila. He would be brought to trial; he would establish one of his most troublesome and controversial churches, and later he would write at least four letters to that church. Two survived to become a part of the New Testament.

The Greek influence on the New Testament and Christianity is immeasurable. Koine, the Greek of the streets, is the language of the New Testament. At least five New Testament books are written to churches in Greek cities (Philippians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Corinthians). All the other books in the New Testament are written in the Greek language. As the Christian gospel moved out into the the Mediterranean world, it had to communicate its values to people who were steeped in Greek culture and religion. Both gained from the relationship with people being transformed by the gospel and Christianity gaining a vehicle for its spread. John H. Tullock

GREED An excessive or reprehensible desire to acquire; covetousness. The greed of Eli's sons for the best part of the sacrifices disqualified them from the priesthood (1 Sam. 2:29). Hosea condemned priests who were greedy for the people's iniquity (4:8 NRSV), that is, greedy for the sin offerings.

Jesus warned against all types of greed (Luke 12:15; KJV covetousness). The Pauline standard for Christian ministry gave no pretext for greed (1 Thess. 2:5; 1 Tim 3:3,8). Greed marked the Gentile or pagan way of life (Eph. 4:19).

GREEK LANGUAGE The Greek language has had a long and illustrious history and continues to this day as a vital and viable language.

Like English, Greek is classified as a part of the Indo-European family of languages. It is a more highly inflected language than English. These inflections identify the uses and functions of the words in a sentence. The stems of Greek words are modified by the addition of prefixes, by the changing of the endings of words, and by the insertion of a letter or letters in the midst of words. In the hands of a skilled writer, the Greek language is able to communicate the nuances of philosophy and the deep emotional feelings of a Sophoclean tragedy.

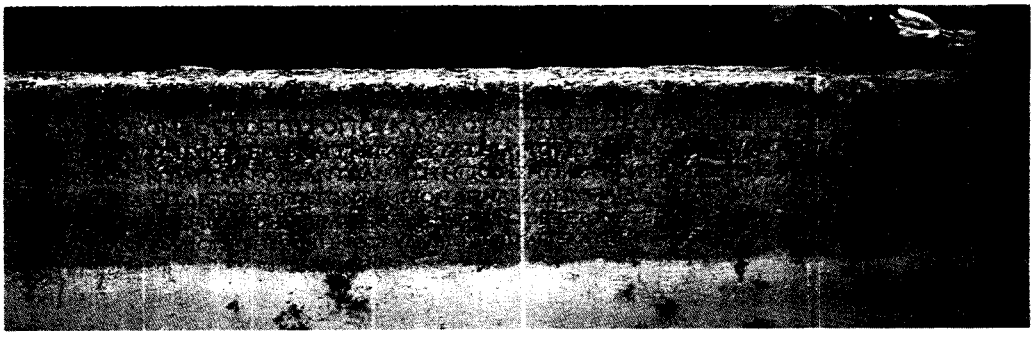
The origins of the Greek language are buried in antiquity. Its development centered in the Greek mainland and the coastal areas around the Aegean Sea. Prior to the time of Alexander the Great, there was no central form of government which held power over all Greek-speaking people. Their territory, for the most part, was comprised of a series of independent city-states. Because these city-states were relatively isolated a variety of Greek dialects developed. The major literary dialects were Attic, Ionic, Doric, and Aeolic. In time the Attic dialect became dominant. The less influential dialects did continue to be used in many parts of the land.

The extant literature which represents the earliest form of literary Greek begins with Homer and the Iliad and Odyssey. These epic poems reflect the richness of the language from ancient times. Homer used the Greek language to portray the heroic portions of humanity. On the other hand, Hesiod, who lived about a century later, left a different type of poetic literature. In his Works and Days, Hesiod pictured the daily human struggle to survive.

The Golden Age of Greece differs from the other periods in two ways. It spanned a relatively brief period of time, lasting less than a century. In addition, the literary brilliance of the period was limited primarily to the Attic Greek dialect and to Athens. Its influence, however, has been far reaching. The tragic and comic playwrights left an indelible imprint on the theater of succeeding generations. Similarly Plato, Aristotle, and other writers from the Golden Age of Greece have influenced modern philosophy, logic, ethics, and even science.

The Golden Age of Greece was followed by the Hellenistic Greek period. This period lasted from about 300 B.C. to A.D. 600. It was succeeded by the Byzantine period with its political and ecclesiastical separation between East and West.

Of all of the linguistic periods in the development of the Greek language, the Hellenistic period is of particular importance. During this time Greek became the universal language of the "known" world.



Although Rome was the dominant military and political force throughout Europe and Asia Minor during the Hellenistic period, Greek rather than Latin maintained its domination as the language of the people. Latin was the language of the Roman government; Greek was the language of the Empire, the lingua franca. Popularly, it has been referred to as koine Greek. The word "koine" is a transliteration of the Greek word which means "common." The word itself had reference to that which was everyday, that which was of ordinary people, that which was "vulgar" or common.

Biblical scholars have long known that the Greek of the New Testament is considerably different from the Greek of the Golden Age. The differences were explained by referring to the New Testament Greek as "Biblical Greek" or "Holy Ghost Greek." This implied that, although the roots of the New Testament were in the Greek language, its style and form differed sharply from the literary Attic Greek with which scholars were familiar.

Toward the close of the nineteenth century, archeologists began to find fragments of papyri, the "paper" of the ancient world. Much of this papyri was found in Egypt in the garbage heaps of some of the major cities. Adolph Deissmann, one of the important scholars of the day, realized that much of the Greek which he was finding in the papyri was similar to that found in the Greek New Testament. He published the results of his investigation in a work called Light from the Ancient East. This work along with that of others revolutionized biblical study. Scholars were able to demonstrate that the Greek found in the New Testament was the same as that found in other writings of the day. It was not some special dialect or Holy Ghost language. The New Testament was written in the universal language of the Empire.

The understanding of the New Testament has been enhanced by the discovery of secular texts which were written during the Hellenistic period. These texts include the papyri, pieces of broken pottery called "ostraca," inscriptions on monuments, as well as a number of formal works by such authors as Josephus, Epictetus, Philo, and Plutarch. A study of this material has revealed a wide variation in literary skills and style of the writers. They ranged from the semiliterate to the highly stylized. The latter attempted to imitate style and form of the Golden Age of Greece and were called Atticists. As should be expected, the literary style of the writers of the New Testament falls somewhere between these two extremes. Consequently, the average citizen who lived in Alexandria (Egypt), in Jerusalem, or in Rome could have easily understood the writings found in the Greek of the New Testament. W. Ray Ellis

Greek inscription on a sarcophagus at Thyatira containing the word "Thyatira" verifying the site's identity.

GREEN See Colors.

GREETING A salutation on meeting; an expression of good wishes at the opening (or in Hellenistic times times also the close) of a letter.

Among Semitic peoples the usual greeting was and is peace: "Peace be to you, and peace be to your house, and peace be to all that you have" (1 Sam. 25:5–6 NAS; compare Luke 10:5). The usual Greek greeting on meeting is charein, translated "hail" or "greeting" (Luke 1:28; Matt. 28:9). A kiss was frequently a part of such greeting (Gen. 29:13; Rom. 16:16; 1 Cor. 16:20; 2 Cor. 13:12; 1 Thess. 5:26; 1 Pet. 5:14). The command not to stop to exchange greetings (2 Kings 4:29; Luke 10:4) underlines the urgency of the commission given.

The opening greetings of ancient letters typically took the form: X (sender) to Y (addressee), greeting (Acts 15:23; 23:26; Jas. 1:1). A letter addressed to a social superior took the form: To Y (addressee) from X (sender), greeting (Ezra 4:17). James is the only New Testament book to begin with the normal Greek greeting charein.

Paul transformed the customary greeting charein into an opportunity for sharing the faith, substituting "grace [charis] to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2; Gal. 1:3; Eph. 1:2; Phil. 1:2; Tit. 1:4). In Paul's opening greeting these terms always occur in this order, witnessing to the truth that peace cannot be experienced apart from the prior experience of God's grace.

The greetings of Hellenistic letters typically contained a prayer for the health of the recipients. 3 John 2 provides the best New Testament example: "Beloved, I pray that all may go well with you and that you may be in good health, just as it is well with your soul" (NRSV). Paul greatly expanded his opening prayers. Most of his letters begin with a prayer of thanksgiving, usually for the recipients. Ephesians begins with a benediction rather than a prayer of thanksgiving (also 1 Peter 1:3–5; Rev. 1:4–6). In the Pauline corpus only Galatians lacks an opening prayer.

Hellenistic letters frequently included closing greetings. Most often these are "third person" greetings of the form X sends you greetings (by me) (1 Cor. 16:19–20; Col. 4:10–14) or send my greetings to Y (who is not directly addressed; e.g., Col. 4:15). Closing greetings often included a prayer or benediction. The simplest is "Grace be with you" (Col. 4:18; 1 Tim. 6:21; Titus 3:15; Heb. 13:25). Elsewhere the benediction is expanded (Rom. 16:25–27; 1 Cor. 16:23–24; Gal. 6:16; Eph. 6:23–24; Phil. 4:23). Some of the most familiar benedictions used in Christian worship come from such closing greetings: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost" (2 Cor. 13:14); "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep . . . make you perfect in every good work to do his will . . ." (Heb. 13:20–21); "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling . . . to the only wise God our Savior" (Jude 24–25). Chris Church

GRIEF AND MOURNING Practices and emotions associated with the experience of the death of a loved one or of other catastrophe or tragedy. The Bible tells us of life and death. When it mentions death, the Bible frequently relates the experience of the participants. So we are told of the mourning of Abraham for Sarah (Gen. 23:2). Jacob mourned for Joseph, thinking he was dead. "And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days . . . he refused to be comforted; and he said, For I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Thus his father wept for him" (Gen. 37:34–45). The Egyptians mourned for Jacob 70 days (Gen. 50:3). Leaders were mourned, often for 30 days: Aaron (Num. 20:29), Moses (Deut. 34:8), and Samuel (1 Sam. 25:1).

Mary and Martha wept over their brother Lazarus (John 11:31). After Jesus watched Mary and her friends weeping, we are told, "Jesus wept" (John 11:35).

Weeping was then, as now, the primary indication of grief. Tears are repeatedly mentioned, "My tears have been my meat day and night" (Ps. 42:3*a*).

The loud lamentation was also a feature of mourning. The Egyptians lifted up their voices, "There was a great cry in Egypt; for there was not a house where there was not one dead" (Ex. 12:30). Not only did the actual relatives mourn, but they hired professional mourners, "because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets" (Eccl. 12:5*b*). "Consider ye, and call for the mourning women" (Jer. 9:17). In this same verse they are also referred to as "cunning women," which suggests that there were certain techniques which these women practiced with unusual skill. Jesus went to Jairus's house to heal his daughter and "saw the minstrels and the people making a noise" (Matt. 9:23).

Yet another feature was personal disfigurement which was probably done to convince onlookers that the person was really grieving. Sometimes they tore their garments, "Reuben . . . rent his clothes" (Gen. 37:29). On others they wore sackcloth, "And David said . . . Rend your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, and mourn" (2 Sam. 3:31). The women wore black or somber material, "feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a women that had a long time mourned for the dead" (2 Sam. 14:2). Mourners covered their heads, "David . . . wept . . . and had his head covered, . . . and all people that was with him covered every man his head" (2 Sam. 15:30).

Job's friends came to help him, "So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great" (Job 2:13). From this and other statements we can learn ways in which we can minister to grief-stricken people:

1) Realize the gift of presence. Just calling and being there can be of value.

2) Do not overtalk the grieving person. Provide the awesome power of the listening ear.

3) Let them know it is alright for them to grieve. Even Jesus wept over the death of His friend Lazarus.

4) Be ready to minister to the griever for a long time. It sometimes takes as much as two years to work through a grief experience.

5) Tactfully remind the griever of Him who said, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (John 11:25), and invoke His blessing.

John W. Drakeford

GREYHOUND KJV translation of an obscure Hebrew term (Prov. 30:31). Modern translations read "strutting cock" or rooster.

GRIDDLE A flat surface on which food is cooked by dry heat (Lev. 2:5; 6:21; 7:9 modern translations; KJV, pan). In earlier days this would have been of stone. Later griddles were made of iron (Ezek. 4:3 where the same Hebrew word is often rendered plate).

GRISLED KJV term for dappled (spotted) grey.

GROVE In Genesis 21:33, a tree planted in Beersheba by Abraham. More than likely it was a tamarisk. The King James Version of the Bible also uses the word "grove" to translate the term "Asherah." See Asherah; Idols.

GUARD An individual or body of troops assigned to protect a person or thing. Guard translates numerous Hebrew and Greek terms. Tabbach (literally butcher or slaughterer) is a Hebrew term used only for officers of foreign kings (of Pharaoh, Gen. 37:36; 39:1; of Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings 25:8–20; Jer. 39:9–13). Two of the terms for guards are derived from the root shamar (to hedge about, guard, protect). The KJV often translated these terms by "watch" (Neh. 4:9; 7:3). The most common designation for the guards of the kings of Israel and Judah was "runners" (1 Sam. 22:17; 1 Kings 1:5; 14:27–28) from the use of such guards to escort the king's chariot. Modern translation frequently use the expression "court of the guard" where the KJV used "court of the prison" (Neh. 3:25; Jer. 32:2). Two terms for guard are used only one time. The first refers to the large guard gathered to defend the boy king Joash (2 Chron. 23:10). The second refers to God as the guard of His people (Zech. 9:8).

Three Greek nouns are translated as guard. Hypēretēs is used for those guarding the high priest's quarters (Matt. 26:58; Mark 14:54). Koustōdia (Matt. 27:66; 28:11) is a Latin loan word, suggesting that this guard was indeed a Roman guard. Philakē is used for stations of guards in Acts 12:10.

GUARDIAN An adult responsible for the person and property of a minor (2 Kings 10:1,5). The Greek term epitropos, translated guardian at Galatians 4:2 (KJV tutor), is a general word for a manager. Modern translations render the term as steward, foreman, or manager when it occurs elsewhere (Matt. 20:8; Luke 8:3). The basic thrust of Paul's message is clear: Before experiencing of God's grace in Christ, the believers' lives were lives of slavery (4:3,8). The guardian appears to be an image for the "elemental things of the world," that is, of celestial or demonic powers regarded as gods by pagan Gentiles. Paul earlier pictured the Jews as under the charge of the law (Gal. 3:22–25).

GUDGODAH (Gŭd gō' dah) Place name of uncertain meaning. A stop on the Israelites' wilderness journey (Deut. 10:7). It is apparently the same place as Hor-hagidgad (Num. 33:32). The location is uncertain with some scholars looking at the area near the wadi Chadachid.

GUEST One invited to a feast (1 Sam. 9:24; 2 Sam. 15:11). Jesus outraged those in Jericho by being a guest at the home of Zachaeus, a well-known sinner (Luke 19:7). Peter crossed racial barriers by welcoming the Gentile messengers sent by Cornelius as guests in his home (Acts 10:23).

Figurative uses of guest include Zephaniah 1:7 where consecrated guests are an image of invading armies the Lord invited to punish Judah. Jesus described His disciples as guests at a wedding feast who cannot mourn as long as He, the bridegroom, is with them (Matt. 9:15). God's salvation is pictured as a wedding hall full of guests who must have proper attire (Matt. 22:10–13).

GUEST ROOM or CHAMBER A single room where travelers could lodge. The guest room of Mark 14:14; Luke 22:11 was a room borrowed for the celebration of the Passover meal. The same Greek term is traditionally translated as inn at Luke 2:7.

GUILE Crafty or deceitful cunning; teachery; duplicity; deceit. Jacob dressed in his brother's clothes with the goatskins on his arms and neck is Scripture's best-known illustration of guile (Gen. 27:35; KJV, subtilty; modern translations, deceitfully). Jesus perhaps had this image of Jacob (Israel) in mind when pronouncing Nathanael "an Israelite indeed in whom is no guile" (John 1:47; compare John 1:51 with Gen. 28:12). First Peter 2:22 describes Christ as one without guile in His mouth. Paul encouraged Christians to be "guileless as to what is evil" (Rom. 16:19 NRSV; compare 1 Pet. 2:1), that is, innocent or naive when it comes to evil.

GUILT A sense of shame at personal wrongdoing. Guilt implies being responsible for an offense or a wrongdoing. It is a situation that exists because one has done something forbidden or failed to do something that was required. The source of the forbidden thing or omitted thing may be religious, legal, social, or personal. It may be a wrongdoing against something written or unwritten.

Guilt may be either a fact or a feeling. For example, a direct violation of law would make one guilty of violating that law. The guilt in this case would be present whether or not the person feels guilty. The condemnation may come from oneself, others, or from God. Or the condemnation might not occur at all. Nevertheless, the person is guilty because a real violation has taken place.

The Bible frequently contrasts those who are guilty with expressions that signify righteousness or just behavior. For example, Job insisted on his righteousness before the Lord (Job 27:1–6). His friends inisisted that he was wicked and therefore guilty (Job 22:5; 35:1–8). To be guilty can mean the same thing as to be wicked. In Psalm 1 it is assumed that the wicked, sinners, and scoffers are guilty of sin and that they will ultimately perish. When Pilate said that he found no guilt in Jesus, he meant that He was innocent of the charges brought against Him (Luke 23:14; John 19:4,6). There was no basis on which to charge Him.

Guilt is connected with sin in the Bible. Sin is basically against God or against God's law. It can mean rebellion against God, or a willful transgression. Sin can also mean to miss the mark.

The Hebrew writers generally did not distinguish between the act of sin and the guilt that came from the act. The various words used for sin in the Old Testament also expressed the idea of guilt. To sin, therefore, is to become guilty.

To connect sin and guilt is a way of saying that human beings are responsible before God for their actions. Paul, in the Book of Romans went to great lengths to show that all mankind is guilty before God (Rom. 1:18–20). If all have sinned (Rom. 3:23), then all are guilty and cut off from God. Something must be done to remove the guilt.

The Old Testament describes several things that could be done to remove guilt. Sinners could confess their sins and make restitution for the wrongs they had committed (Num. 5:6–10). Various sacrifices could be brought to the priests for a guilt offering (Lev. 5:6–7:38). Restitution, sacrifice, or ritual penalty had to be made for sin and guilt.

A new idea presents itself in passages like Isaiah 53: it is the idea that a righteous one can suffer for the guilt of others. One can bear the sin of many and intercede for their transgressions (Isa. 53:12). In the New Testament, Jesus fulfilled the role of the one suffering for the sins of many . . . "Christ died for the ungodly," and we are reconciled to God (Rom. 5:6–11; compare Eph. 1:7; Col. 1:19–20).

The idea of a sacrifice or offering for sin and guilt is picked up by other New Testament writers. Jesus was made a merciful High Priest to make propitiation for the sins of the people (Heb. (2:17). Twice 1 John says that Jesus is the propitiation for our sins (1 John 2:2; 4:10). This emphasis shows how seriously the Bible takes sin and guilt. Guilt has to be dealt with in an objective way. Guilt, according to these New Testament writers, requires the sacrifice of the Son of God. See Expiation and Propitiation.

Guilt is both corporate and individual in the Bible. The corporate aspect can be seen in 2 Chronicles 24:18. The king and officials of the nation abandoned God, and their guilt brought wrath on the nation. Ezra lamented the guilt that had come upon the people for their sins (Ezra 9:3–6). The individual nature of guilt can be seen in passages like Psalm 32. There the psalmist acknowledged his own transgression and asked for forgiveness from guilt (v. 5). Jeremiah in speaking of the New Covenant declared that all people would be held responsible for their own sins (Jer. 31:30).

As a feeling, "guilt" refers to the emotional aspects of a person's experience. An individual may feel himself or herself to be condemned or to have sinned. The feeling may bear little or no apparent relationship to the fact with which it is associated. In other words, one may feel guilty when there is no evidence to suggest a reason for guilt.

However, feeling is often a legitimate expression of guilt. The bitter lament Psalm 51 carries both an awareness of sin and deep feelings of remorse and repentance. Psalm 38 paints a picture of a suffering sinner weighed down with sin and guilt. Guilt is a burden (Ps. 38:4) that creates anxiety (Ps. 38:18).

Because human beings are so complex, it is often difficult to separate guilt feelings from real guilt. These guilt feelings must be taken seriously. If a person cannot resolve these guilt feelings before God, it may be wise to seek a counselor to help determine where the guilt feelings originate. Unresolved guilt can have a paralyzing effect on a person. Asking for and receiving forgiveness is one of the major ways that we can be absolved from guilt. God in His faithfulness has promised to forgive us from all iniquity (1 John 1:9)

See Atonement; Christ; Forgiveness; Reconciliation; Sin. D. Glenn Saul

GUILT OFFERING See Sacrifice and Offering.

GULF Term used by the KJV and REB for the gorge or pit separating the rich man's place of torment from Lazarus' place of comfort in the presence of Abraham (Luke 16:26).

GULL See Birds.

GUM A yellow to yellowish-brown product formed from the excretions of certain plants. Gum was an item of the Ishmaelites' caravan trade with Egypt (Gen. 37:25; KJV, spicery) and was regarded as one of the choice products of the land (Gen. 43:11). Some English translations focus on the nature of the substance (gum, NRSV; aromatic gum, NAS). Others focus on the use of the material (spices, KJV, NIV, TEV). Ladanum spice (Gen. 37:25, NAS margin) is the soft, dark resin of rock roses used in making perfume. Gum tragacanth (REB) is a resin used in the arts and in pharmacy.

GUNI (Gū′ nī) Personal name meaning, "black-winged partridge." 1. Son of Naphtali and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:24), thus head of the Gunite clan (Num. 26:48). 2. Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:15).

GUNITE (Gū′ nīte) Descendant of Guni and member of clan originated by Guni. See Guni.

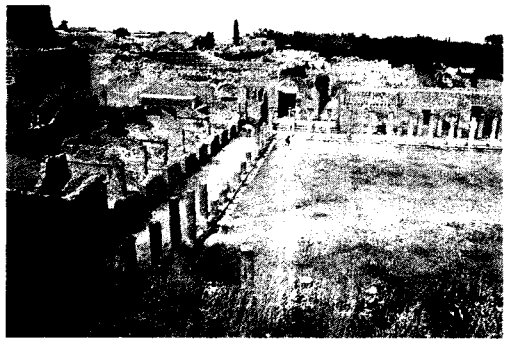
GUR (Gŭr) Place name meaning, "foreign sojourner" or "young animal." An unidentified mountain road near Ibleam where Jehu's men caught up with and mortally wounded Ahaziah, king of Judah (841 B.C.) (2 Kings 9:27).

GUR-BAAL (Gŭr-bā' ăl) Place name meaning, "foreign sojourner of Baal" or "young animal of Baal." An Arabian or bedouin city which God helped King Uzziah of Judah (792-740 B.C.) attack (2 Chron. 26:7). Greek manuscript evidence does not have Baal in the name. This would mean the city was Gur, also mentioned in the Amarna letters and situated east of Beersheba. Other scholars would identify the town with Jagur (Josh. 15:21).

GUTTER KJV translation of two Hebrew terms. That in Genesis 30:38,41 is rendered (drinking) troughs (NIV, REB, NRSV TEV) or runnels, a small stream (RSV). The term used at 2 Samuel 5:8 is rendered water shaft (NIV, NRSV) or water tunnel (NAS, TEV).

The ruins of Ezion-Geber showing a water gutter, or water shaft.

GYMNASIUM The Greek educational center. The word comes from a Greek word (gymnos) which means naked. In ancient Greece, the gymnasium was the center for physical and intellectual education for aristocratic adolescent boys. The gymnasium originated in Athens where the citizens sought the ideals espoused by Pericles that men should have wisdom without the loss of manly vigor. Physical education included wrestling, swimming, running, and use of the bow and sling, all in the nude. Intellectually, the boys were trained in reading, writing, mathematics, politics, philosophy, and music. As time passed, the gymnasiums became open to all citizens and were an integral part of all Greek cities.



During the second century B.C., when the Seleucids under Antiochus Epiphanes tried to convert the Jews to Greek culture, Jason, one of the Jewish high priests, built a gymnasium in Jerusalem. (See 1 Maccabees 1:14; 2 Maccabees 4:7.) Aristocratic Jewish young men began to frequent the gymnasium and to participate in Greek activities. The pious Jews were shocked at both their nudity, prohibited by Jews, and their practice of wearing the broad-brimmed Greek hats, associated with the worship of the Greek god Hermes. In addition some of the young men became ashamed of and tried to hide their circumcision. These practices were one of the causes for the Maccabean rebellion of 175 B.C.

A restored gymnasium at the ancient city of Sardis.

There is no mention of the gymnasium in the New Testament, but there are references to the activities associated with it. In 1 Timothy 4:8, the expression "bodily exercise" is from the word for gymnasium. Paul also used metaphors from the gymnasium in 1 Corinthians 9:24–27; Galatians 2:2; 5:7; Philippians 1:30; 2:16. No bad connotations are associated with the word in these passages. W. T. Edwards

The open area (palaestra) of the gymnasium at Pompeii, with the gladiators' rooms to the left.

View of the ornate carving of the ruins at Baalbek (Heliopolis) in Lebanon.

HAAHASHTARI (Hā' ā hăsh' tà rī) Personal and national name in Persian language meaning, "kingdom." Member of tribe of Judah and clan of Caleb (1 Chron. 4:6), the form of the word indicating as in many biblical genealogies a political group as well as the ancestor. Nothing else is known of the person or nation.

HABAIAH (Hà bā' iàh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh hides, keeps safe." Clan leader of exiled priests who returned from Babylon to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:61).

HABAKKUK (Hà' băk' kŭk) A prophet of the late seventh century B.C., contemporary to Jeremiah. One explanation has his name based on a root meaning "to embrace." The Greek Old Testament spelling "Hambakoum" suggests a root meaning "plant" or "vegetable."

The Times Judah had just experienced the exhilaration of the glorious days of Josiah, marked by freedom, prosperity, and a great religious revival. The Assyrians, once the scourge of the Middle East, were only a shadow of their former selves. In their place, however, stood the Babylonians. In the Book of Habakkuk, they are called the Chaldeans, so named for the region from which their rulers came. The Babylonian armies were led by the energetic Nebuchadnezzar, who was soon to succeed his father Nabopolassar as king.

Nineveh, Assyria's capital, fell in 612 B.C. The powerful poetry of Nahum celebrates its fall. In 609 B.C., disaster struck. King Josiah, attempting to block the Egyptians as they moved north along the Palestinian coast to aid Assyria, was killed at Megiddo in northern Palestine. In his place the Egyptians set up Josiah's son, Jehoiakim. Unlike his father, Jehoiakim was a petty tyrant. Over the next ten or eleven years, Jehoiakim tried to play the Babylonians off against the Egyptians until he finally exhausted the patience of Nebuchadnezzar. In 598, he laid siege to Jerusalem. That same year, Jehoiakim died, leaving his son, Jehoiachin, to become Nebuchadnezzar's prisoner when Jerusalem fell in 597 B.C. People from the upper classes and skilled workmen were also among those taken to Babylon as captives.

The Man Other than his work as a prophet, nothing for certain of a personal nature is known about Habakkuk. Tradition makes him a priest of the tribe of Levi. The apocryphal work Bel and the Dragon (vss. 33–39) tells a story about Habakkuk being taken to Babylon by an angel to feed Daniel while he was in the lions den.

The Book The Book of Habakkuk gives us the best picture of the prophet. After a brief statement identifying the prophet (1:1), the book falls into three distinct divisions:

A. The Prophet's Questions and the Lord's Answers (1:2—2:5)
B. Five Woes against Tyrants (2:6–20)
C. A Prayer of Habakkuk (3:1–19)

Of these three parts, only one, the woes (2:6–20) fits the traditional pattern of the prophets. The great prophets of the Lord saw themselves as spokesmen for the Lord to the people. In the first section (1:2—2:5) in what has been called "the beginning of speculation in Israel," Habakkuk spoke to the Lord for the people. He asked two questions, the responses to which give Habakkuk a unique niche in the prophetic canon. The first question, Why does violence rule where there should be justice (1:2–5) expressed the prophet's sense of dismay, either about conditions within his own land caused by Jehoiakim, or by the oppression of weak countries by stronger powers. In light of what follows, internal injustice seems to have been the object of his concern.

In response, the Lord told the prophet that He was at work sending the Chaldeans as the instrument of His judgment (1:5–11).

The prophet shrank from such an idea and posed another question: Lord, how can you use someone more sinful than we are to punish us? (1:12–17). When the answer was not forthcoming immediately, he took his stand in the watchtower to wait for it. It was worth the wait: "Behold, he whose soul is not upright in him shall fail, but the righteous shall live by his faith" (2:4 RSV). The term "faith" has more of the sense of faithfulness or conviction that results in action.

The woes (2:6–20), not unlike those of the other prophets, denounce various kinds of tyranny: plunder (2:6–8); becoming rich and famous by unjust means (2:9–11); building towns with blood (2:12–14); degrading one's neighbor (2:15–17); and idol worship (2:18–19). This section ends with a ringing affirmation of the sovereignty of the Lord.

The final section (3:1–19) is, in reality, a psalm, not unlike those found in the Book of Psalms. It is a magnificent hymn, extolling the Lord's triumph over His and His people's foes.

Habakkuk in History This book was a favorite of the people of the Dead Sea Scrolls. They interpreted the first two chapters as prophecy of their triumph over the Romans who were the overlords of Palestine at that time. Unfortunately, the Romans prevailed.

More important to us, however, is the influence this book had on the apostle Paul. Habakkuk's declaration that "the just (righteous) shall live by his faith" (2:4) was taken by Paul as a central element in his theology. As he did with many Old Testament passages, he used it with a slightly different emphasis. Through Paul, this passage came alive for an Augustinian monk named Martin Luther, setting off the Protestant Reformation, one of history's greatest religious upheavals. Thus a so-called "Minor" prophet had a major influence on those who followed him.

Outline

I. A Prophet Perplexed: Why Does God Permit Injustice? (1:1–17)
   A. Prophet's first protest: A cry for deliverance from violence and iniquity (1:1–4).
   B. God's first reply: The worst is yet to be (1:5–11).
   C. Prophet's second protest: How can a holy God use such a cruel instrument as this evil people? (1:12–17)

II. A Prophet Perceiving: The Righteous Shall Live by Faithfulness (2:1–20).
   A. God's second reply (2:1–5)
      1. Revelation comes to one prepared to wait (2:1).
      2. Revelation must be easy to understand (2:2).
      3. Revelation will prove true in God's time (2:3).
      4. Persistent faith—not pride, parties, nor plunder—is the distinguishing mark of the righteous (2:4–5).
   B. God taunts His materialistic enemy (2:6–20).
      1. First taunt song: Woe because of pride and ambition (2:6–8)
      2. Second taunt song: Woe because of arrogance and greed (2:9–11)
      3. Third taunt song: Woe because of cruelty (2:12–14)
      4. Fourth taunt song: Woe because of drunkenness (2:15–17)
      5. Fifth taunt song: Woe because of idolatry (2:18–19)
      6. Conclusion: A call for universal worship of the holy God (2:20)

III. A Prophet Praying and Praising: A Psalm of Confidence Is the Proper Response to Revelation (3:1–19).
   A. Prayer asks God to repeat His acts of deliverance (3:1–2).
   B. Prayer gains confidence by recounting the holy God's redeeming acts (3:3–15).
   C. Prayer responds in awesome fear and confident joy to God's history with His people (3:16–18).
   D. Prayer claims God's strength for present crisis (3:19). John H. Tullock

HABAZINIAH (Hăb′ ā zĭ nī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh inflated or caused to make merry." Grandfather of Jaazaniah, the Rechabite leader Jeremiah tested with wine (Jer. 35:3). See Jaazaniah.

HABAZZINIAH (Hăb ăz zĭ nī′ ah) Modern translations' spelling of Habaziniah.

HABERGEON A short coat of mail covering the neck and shoulder worn as defensive armor. The KJV uses harbergeon to translate three Hebrew words. The first (2 Chron. 26:14; Neh. 4:16) is translated coats of mail or armor, body armor, or breastplate by modern translations. Modern translations agree that the second term (Job 41:26) refers to an offensive weapon, the javelin. There is much uncertainty regarding the meaning of the third term (Ex. 28:32; 39:23). NAS, NRSV follow the KJV in retaining coat of mail. Other translations include: collar (NIV); garment (RSV); oversewn edge (REB following the earliest Greek translation). See Arms and Armor.

HABIRU (Hă bī′ rū) People mentioned in ancient texts written about 2000 to 1200 B.C. in Mesopotamia, Syria-Palestine, and Egypt. The word apparently means "outcast" or "renegade."

Identity of the Habiru Scholars have offered several theories attempting to identify these Habiru. Because the word sounds much like the name "Hebrew," some scholars thought it referred to ethnic Israel. Since it appears in texts written earlier than Abraham lived and since the Habiru seemed numerous during the patriarchal period, it does not appear to designate ethnic Hebrews. Most scholars treat the term as the name of a social class: outcasts or renegades. In letters written from Palestine to Amarna in Egypt, they appear as rebels attacking cities belonging to the pharaohs of the fourteenth century, and in one text they are further identified as former slaves who had revolted.

Relation to Hebrews If the Habiru are rebels and not an ethnic group, are they nevertheless somehow related to the Hebrews? Some scholars have said yes, seeing the Habiru as nomads who might have included the patriarchs to Joshua, or as peasants who revolted. The Bible, however, depicts the patriarchs, not as nomads, but as pastoralists (shepherds who settled beside other shepherds and farmers). Neither was Joshua a nomad, nor do the books of Joshua and Judges depict a revolt by peasants. About the only possible relationship is that the Hebrews might have included some Habiru from Egypt or Canaan. Paul Redditt

HABITATION Dwelling place; home; KJV translation of ten different Hebrew words. Habitation is used for the dwellings of humans (Ex. 35:3; Isa. 27:10) and of birds (Ps. 104:12). Of special interest are references to the habitation of God. God's habitation is designated as heaven (Deut. 26:15; 2 Chron. 30:27), the Temple (2 Chron. 29:6), or Jerusalem (Ps. 46:4). Jeremiah 50:7 pictures the Lord as the dwelling place of justice or "their true pasture" (NIV; compare Pss. 71:3; 91:9). Ephesians 2:22 speaks of believers as the "habitation of God through the Spirit." Revelation 18:2 announces the fall of "Babylon," which "is become the habitation of devils."

HABOR (Hā′ bôr) Akkadian river name. A major tributary of the Euphrates River. The Assyrians resettled many exiles from Israel there near Gozan when they captured the northern kingdom in 722 B.C. (2 Kings 17:6). See Gozan.

HACALIAH (Hăc ȧ lī' ah) Personal name meaning, "wait confidently on Yahweh." Father of Nehemiah. See Nehemiah.

HACHALIAH (Hăch ȧ lī' ah) KJV spelling of Hacaliah.

HACHMON (Hăch' mon) Clan name meaning, "wisdom." Original ancestor of an Israelite clan called the Hachmonites. Most translations transliterate the Hebrew clan name as Hachmoni, including the Hebrew ending "i" that indicates membership in the clan or English "ite." TEV translates Hachmon (1 Chron. 11:11). Jashobeam, leader of David's army, was either a Hachmonite (1 Chron. 11:11) or a Tachmonite (2 Sam. 23:8), a copyist having either added or subtracted a "t" in transmitting the clan name. Jehiel, another of David's advisors, also belonged to the clan (1 Chron. 27:32). See Jashobeam; Jehiel.

HACHMONI (Hăch' mō nī) See Hachmon.

HACHMONITE (Hăch' mō nīte) See Hachmon.

HACMONI (Hăc' mo nī) NIV spelling of Hachmoni.

HACMONITE (Hăc' mo nīte) NIV spelling of Hachmonite.

HADAD (Hā' dăd). Personal name meaning, "mighty." 1. An Edomite king (Gen. 36:35). The name Hadad was borne by several members of the royal household of Edom. 2. Hadad was also the name of the chief deity of the Ugaritic pantheon. This deity was identified as a storm-god. See Canaan; Ugarit.

HADAD-EZER (Hăd ăd-ē' zēr) Syrian royal name meaning, "Hadad (god) helps." City-state king of Zobah in Syria whom David defeated to establish his control over Syria (2 Sam. 8:3–13). Apparently, Hadar-ezer (2 Sam. 10:16) represents a copyist's change from Hadad-ezer in transmitting the text. Ammonites saw David was too strong for them and hired Syrian troops, including those of Hadad-ezer, to help them, but Joab, David's general, defeated them (2 Sam. 10:6–19). Hadad-ezer regrouped the Syrians but again met defeat. Some Bible students think the narrative in chapter 8 may be a summary looking forward to the fuller account in chapter 10 of the same event. Others think two separate battles are described.

First Kings 11:23 shows the troubled situation in Syria. Rezon revolted against Hadad-ezer (possibly the son of the one in 1 Sam. 8; 10 or the same king). Rezon then established a kingdom for himself in the Syrian city of Damascus. Syria was thus a group of small city-states fighting among themselves for domination.

HADAD-RIMMON (Hā' dăd-rĭm' mon) Names of two Syrian gods combined into one word. Zechariah 12:11 describes the tragedy of the day of the Lord, including weeping and mourning in the Valley of Megiddo for Jerusalem. Such mourning could be compared only to the "mourning of Hadad-rimmon," apparently a reference to pagan worship ceremonies, perhaps for a dying and rising god. The exact interpretation of the passage is difficult, Hadad-rimmon being mentioned nowhere else.

HADAR (Hā' dăr) Apparently a copyist's change of the name Hadad, a Syrian god, in Genesis 36:39 and in some manuscripts of Genesis 25:15. Translations differ on their readings, KJV reading Hadar in both cases. NIV, TEV read Hadad in both cases, while NAS, REB, NRSV retain Hadar in 36:39 but Hadad in 25:15. See Hadad. Parallel texts in 1 Chronicles read Hadad for both (1 Chron. 1:30, 50–51). A reverent copyist may not have wanted to introduce the name of the pagan god into Genesis.

HADAREZER (Hăd' ăr-ē' zēr) Copying change in some manuscripts for Hadad-ezer. See Hadadezer.

HADASHAH (Hȧ dăsh' ah) Town name meaning, "new." Town in tribal territory of Judah situated in vicinity of Lachish (Josh. 15:37).

HADASSAH (Hȧ dăs sah) Personal name meaning, "myrtle." In Esther 2:7, another name for Esther. It was either her original Hebrew name or a title that was given to her. In the former case, it would mean "myrtle"; in the latter case, "bride." See Esther.

HADATTAH (Hȧ dăt' tah) Place name meaning, "new." Part of name Hazor-hadattah (Josh. 15:25). The earliest Greek translations apparently read the Hebrew word for "their villages" that reappears in this section of Joshua instead of Hadattah. Some Bible students think Greek had the original reading. See Hazor-Hadattah.

HADES (Hā' dēs) the abode of the dead. In the King James Version of the Bible, the Greek word is generally translated "hell." It differs, however, from the term "Gehenna," which more precisely refers to hell. Hades is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew term "Sheol," which refers in general to the place of the dead. See Hell.

HADID (Hā' dĭd) Place name meaning, "fast" or "sharpened." Home of people returning from exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:33). Town is modern el-Hadite about three miles east of Lydda. Compare Nehemiah 11:34.

HADLAI (Hăd' lā ī) Personal name meaning, "quit" or "fat sack." Leader in tribe of Ephraim and father of Amasa (2 Chron. 28:12). See Amasa.

HADORAM (Hå dō' răm) Personal and tribal name perhaps meaning, "Hadad (god) is exalted."

1. Arabic tribe descended from Shem through Eber and thus distantly related to Hebrews according to the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:27). They lived in southern Arabia. 2. Son of Tou, city-state ruler in Hamath of Syria. Hadoram brought tribute to David after David had defeated Hadad-ezer of Zobah (1 Chron. 18:10). See Hadad-ezer.

3. "Taskmaster over the forced labor" (2 Chron. 10:18 NRSV) under Rehoboam, Solomon's son and successor as king of Judah. Rehoboam sent Hadoram to collect tribute from the Northern Kingdom immediately after they rebelled and refused to acknowledge Rehoboam as king. The children of Israel killed Hadoram. Thus they showed their contempt for Rehoboam's forced labor policies and made final the division between Israel and Judah, beginning the period of the divided monarchy.

HADRACH (Hā' drăch) City-state name of uncertain meaning. Zechariah 9:1 claims this Syrian city-state will become a part of God's territory, though the precise meaning of the verse is difficult to interpret. Assyrian inscriptions frequently mention Hatarikka or Hzrk as an opponent Tiglath-pileser III finally conquered and made part of his empire in 738 B.C. It was apparently the large mound tell Afis, 28 miles southwest of Aleppo, and served as capital of Luhuti, which was an ally of Hamath from 854 to 773.

HAELEPH (Hă ē' lĕph) Place name meaning, "the ox." KJV reads the initial "h" as the Hebrew definite article and thus has "Eleph." Some interpreters combine the preceding town name in Joshua 18:28 to read, "Zelah Haeleph" as one town, following early Greek manuscript evidence. Town in tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:28). The location is not known. See Zelah.

HAFT KJV term for the hilt or handle of a dagger (Judg. 3:22).

HAGAB (Hā' găb) Personal name meaning, "grasshopper" or "chamberlain." Clan of Temple servants who returned to Jerusalem from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:46). The name also occurs on an ostracon from Lachish.

HAGABA (Hăg' å bå) Clan of Temple servants who returned home from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:45).

HAGAR (Hā' gär) Personal name meaning, "stranger." The personal servant of Sarah, who was given as a concubine to Abraham and became the mother of Ishmael (Gen. 16:1–16; 21:8–21; 25:12; Gal. 4:24–25). Genesis 16:1–7 details the events of the initial conflict of Sarah with Hagar and the flight of Hagar. Verses 8–16 detail the visit of the messenger of Yahweh bringing the promise of a son to the mother in distress, encouraging Hagar to return to Sarah. These conflicts were related to the wife's and concubine's positions in the family and community. (Compare similar conflicts in Gen. 29—30.) Genesis 21:8–21 gives the story of the expulsion of Hagar and Ishmael and their miraculous deliverance. Pauline interpretation (Galatians) relates the superiority of a son born according to the Spirit over the son born according to the "flesh." In Galatians 4 Paul used the Hagar story to stand for slavery under the old covenant in contrast to freedom of the new covenant symbolized by Isaac. David M. Fleming

HAGARENE (Hăg' å rēne) KJV spelling in Psalm 83:6 for Hagarite. See Hagarite.

HAGARITE (Hăg' är īte) Name of nomadic tribe whom the tribe of Reuben defeated east of the Jordan River (1 Chron 5:10,19–20). Reuben won because they called on and trusted in God. The tribal name is apparently taken from Hagar, Sarah's maid and mother of Ishmael (Gen. 16). David's chief shepherd was a Hagarite (1 Chron. 27:31). The Psalmist asked God not to be silent when the Hagarites joined a coalition against God's people (Ps. 83:6). First Chronicles 11:38 names a Hagarite among David's military heroes, but some interpreters think that 1 Samuel 23:36 is evidence of an original Gadite, which would be written quite similar to Hagarite in Hebrew.

HAGERI (Hā' gēr ī) REB transliteration of Hebrew for Hagarite in 1 Chronicles 11:38. See Hagarite.

HAGGADAH, HALAKAH In Judaism, rabbinic teaching is divided into two categories: halakah and haggadah (also spelled aggadah). Both of these terms refer to the oral teaching of the rabbis. Halakah refers to the legal teachings that are considered authoritative for religious life. Haggadah refers to the remaining non-legal teachings.

Halakah according to the early rabbis goes back to oral law given to Moses at Sinai along with the written law (Torah) embodied in the Bible primarily found in the Pentateuch. Therefore, the halakah is considered as binding as the written Torah. Modern scholars recognize that the halakah is the means by which the written Torah is interpreted to each new generation. Halakah extends the Torah of Moses into every aspect of Jewish life including personal, social, national, and international relations.

Haggadah consists of a variety of amplifications of biblical texts primarily in the form of illustrative stories, parables or allegories, or, frequently, poetry. Many portions of the haggadah may go back to early Jewish synagogue preaching.

Much of early rabbinic halakah was eventually written down in the Mishnah (about 220 A.D.) and Talmud (about 360 A.D.) although it continues to be referred to as oral law even after these codifications. Likewise, haggadah was written down in various biblical commentaries as well as the Talmud.

These two types of rabbinic teaching are especially important as an aid in understanding Judaism at the time of Jesus and during the formation of the early church since some of these materials have their origin during the first century. Jesus probably referred to Pharisaic halakah (in part a precursor to rabbinic halakah) in Mark 7:1–23 and its parallel (Matt. 15:1–20). See Mishnah; Talmud; Pharisees; Torah.

Stephenson Humphries-Brooks

HAGGAI (Hăg′ gaî). Personal name of a sixth century prophet meaning, "festive" and of the book preserving his preaching. Compared to most of the writing prophets, we have very little information on the personal life of Haggai. Haggai has no genealogy.

The book consists of a series of addresses by Haggai together with the results of his work. The specific historical details presented makes possible exact dating of the book between the sixth and the ninth month of the year 520 B.C. The final form of the book may have been the work of someone other than the prophet who put the collection together.

When Cyrus took over Babylon in 538 B.C. and established the kingdom of Persia, the Hebrews came under a Persian governor. Permission was given for the exiles to return and restore their temples. After the death of Cyrus, and of his son Cambyses, Darius became ruler and continued the benevolent policies of Cyrus. Then Darius appointed Zerubbabel as governor with the specific responsibility of resuming work on the Temple, begun earlier by Shesh-bazzar. At first, it appears that Judah was part of the administrative district of Samaria, but the appointment of Zerubbabel may have represented a move in the direction of autonomy for Judah which became a reality in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah a few decades later.

Apparently the adjustments required of the returning exiles were so difficult that rebuilding their own homes and the Temple at the same time put a strain on their resources. They despaired of ever restoring the Temple to its former glory. Work on the Temple ceased. Haggai, along with Zechariah, helped Zerubbabel gain the support and help he needed from the returning exiles to carry out his assigned task. Haggai may have viewed the restoration of order by Darius and the appointment of Zerubbabel as a sign of the end of Gentile rule and preparation for the messianic kingdom.

The Book of Haggai is very important for several reasons. One is that he laid the foundations of later Judaism on which Christianity was to build. Another was the stress on the linking of worship and work, a characteristic feature of Jesus' teaching and of the New Testament in general. Also, he revived hope for the future in a dejected community. Finally, the book provides important historical data on the post-exilic period where information is scanty. Some scholars think he neglected the moral element, but he really stressed a return to the basics of worship and a close relationship between worship and work. Both are important.

The book consists of five short addresses and a description of the results of Haggai's efforts to persuade his people to resume work on the Temple. The recipients of Haggai's message included Zerubbabel and Joshua, the high priest. Haggai suggested how they should respond to the excuses people were making for not resuming work on the Temple (1:2). Haggai's answer was that if it was right for them to rebuild their own houses, it was also right for them to rebuild the Temple (1:3–4). Haggai noted that in rebuilding their own houses they had done well, but they were still not happy. His diagnosis was that they had neglected their spiritual lives. He said the way to correct their neglect was to rebuild the Temple (1:3–11). In response they resumed work on the Temple.

In the second speech, Haggai assured them of the Lord's presence and approval (1:13), and the Lord stirred the spirit of both leaders and people as they worked together (1:14–15).

In the third address, given to both the leaders and the people (2:1–2), Haggai asked the older members of the community to recall the glory of the former Temple and thus to stir the new generation to new enthusiasm. He promised that God would bring treasures from other nations to make the splendor of the new Temple even greater than the former one (2:6–9).

The fourth address (2:10–19) returns to the theme of the first address in linking worship, work, and the blessings of God. The point seems to be that carelessness in observing accepted rules reflected a lack of seriousness in their purpose. The results were that they robbed themselves of the full measure of God's blessing.

The final speech, delivered the same day as the previous one (2:20–23), was addressed only to Zerubbabel. It announced the imminent overthrow of the kingdoms of the world and the role that Zerubbabel would play in the triumphant victory of God's kingdom on earth.

Outline

I. God's People Must Reconsider Materialistic Priorities in Light of God's Call (1:1–15).
   A. Materialistic pride and greed must not cause procrastination in fulfilling God's priority tasks (1:1–4).
   B. God withholds blessing and fertility from a selfish people who do not glorify Him (1:5–11).
   C. Faithful leadership and God's presence can motivate God's people to carry out His priorities (1:12–15).

II. God's People Must Reconsider Priorities in Light of God's Promises and Power (2:1–9).
   A. Comparisons with past achievements may discourage God's people from doing God's work (2:1–3).
   B. Trust in God's promises and power to provide every need encourages His people to continue His work (2:4–9).

III. God's People Must Reconsider the Priority of a Pure Life (2:10–19).
   A. Impure people produce only more impurity (2:10–14).
   B. God does not bless an impure people who do not repent (2:15–17).
   C. God will bless His attentive people in the future (2:18–19).

IV. God's People Must Reconsider God's Power to Overcome Opposition (2:20–23).
   A. God will overcome all opposition (2:20–22).
   B. God will empower His chosen servant (2:23).

E. Earl Joiner

HAGGEDOLIM (Hăg' gĕ dō' lĭm) Personal name meaning, "the great ones." Zabdiel a leading priest was the son of Haggedolim (Neh. 11:14 KJV, "the great men"; TEV, "a leading family"). Bible students have suggested that haggedolim is probably not a Hebrew proper name and have interpreted it as a copyists' change of an unfamiliar name for a more familiar word or title, an honorary title for a leading family, or a title for the high priest.

HAGGERI (Hăg gē' rī) KJV transliteration of Hebrew for Hagarite in 1 Chronicles 11:38. See Hagarite.

HAGGI (Hăg' gī) Personal name meaning, "my festival," indicating birth on a holy day. Son of Gad and grandson of Jacob and thus original ancestor of clan of Haggites (Gen. 46:16; Num. 26:15).

HAGGIAH (Hăg gī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is my festival." A Levite in the line of Merari (1 Chron. 6:30).

HAGGITE (Hăg' gīte) Member of clan of Haggi. See Haggi.

HAGGITH (Hăg' gĭth) Personal name meaning, "festival." Wife of David and mother of Adonijah, who was born at Hebron (1 Sam. 3:4).

HAGIOGRAPHA Greek term meaning "holy writings" used as a designation for the third and final major division of the Hebrew Bible. In contrast to the first two divisions (the law and the prophets), "the writings" (Hebrew, Kethubim) are a miscellaneous collection. The hagiographa in their Hebrew order include: Psalms, Proverbs, and Job; the "five scrolls" (Megilloth) read at major festivals, namely, Song of Solomon, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther; Daniel; and Ezra-Nehemiah and Chronicles. These books were the last portion of the Hebrew Bible to be recognized as canonical. Luke 24:44 uses "psalms" as a designation for these writings.

HAGRI (Hăg' rī) Tribal or personal name probably referring to the Hagarites (1 Chron. 11:38) or a miscopying of "the Gaddite" from 2 Samuel 23:36. See Hagarite.

HAGRITE (Hăg' rīte) Alternate spelling for Hagarite in modern translations. See Hagarite.

HAHIROTH (Hă hī' rŏth) Reading of some manuscripts and translations for Pi-hahiroth in Numbers 33:8. See Pi-hahiroth.

HAI (Hā' ī) KJV reading for Ai in Genesis 12:8; 13:3. See Ai.

HAIL (GREETING) See Greeting.

HAIL (METEROLOGICAL) Precipitation in the form of small balls consisting of layers of ice and compact snow, regarded as a plague by biblical writers. Hailstones generally have a diameter of half an inch to one inch. Large hailstones can destroy crops (Ex. 9:25,31; Ps. 78:47; Hag. 2:17; Rev. 8:7) and kill livestock and persons caught in the open (Ex. 9:19,25; Josh. 10:11; Ps. 78:48). The Bible speaks of hail to speak of divine presence, action, and punishment.

HAIR The covering of the human head and of animals. Ordinarily human hair is meant in biblical references (Num. 6:5), though animal hair (wool) may be in mind (Matt. 3:4). Beautiful hair has always been desirable for both women and men (Song of Sol. 5:11). In Old Testament times both men and women wore their hair long. Both Samson and Absalom were greatly admired for their long locks (Judg. 16:13; 2 Sam. 14:25–26). In the New Testament era, men wore their hair much shorter than women did (1 Cor. 11:14–15).

Gray or white hair was a respected sign of age (Prov. 20:29). But baldness could be considered embarrassing or even humiliating (2 Kings 2:23; Ezek. 7:18). In Leviticus 13, which gives extensive instruction on the diagnosis of leprosy (probably including other skin diseases), the color of the hairs in an infected area of skin indicated whether the disease was present or had been cured. A cured leper was required to shave his entire body (Lev. 14:8–9).

Jewish men of the orthodox tradition are prohibited from cutting off the hair above their ears.

Hair among the Israelites required good care. Women usually wore their hair loose, but sometimes they braided it (2 Kings 9:30). New Testament writers cautioned against ostentation in women's hairstyles (1 Tim. 2:9; 1 Pet. 3:3). Hair that was anointed with oil symbolized blessing and joy (Ps. 23:5; Heb. 1:9). Some hosts provided oil to anoint honored guests (Luke 7:46). Mourning was indicated by disheveled, unkept hair (Josh. 7:6; 2 Sam. 14:2). Jesus told His followers not to follow the custom of the Pharisees, who refused to care for their hair while they were fasting (Matt. 6:17).

Israelite men trimmed their hair, but the law prohibited them from cutting off the hair above their ears (Lev. 19:27). This restriction probably originally forbade some pagan custom (Deut. 14:1–2), but orthodox Jews still wear long sidecurls. Those who took a Nazirite vow were forbidden from cutting their hair during the course of their vow, but afterward, their entire head was to be shaved (Num. 6:1–21; Acts 18:18; 21:24).

Because hairs are so many, they may symbolize the concept of being innumerable (Ps. 40:12). Because they seem so unimportant, they can stand for insignificant things (Luke 21:18).

Kendell Easley

Silver decorative bucket with scene of a servant combing the hair of her mistress.

HAKELDAMA (Hă kĕl′ dă mă) NAS, NRSV spelling for Aceldama or Akeldama (Acts 1:19). See Aceldama.

HAKILAH (Hă kī′ lah) NIV spelling of Hachilah. See Hachilah.

HAKKATAN (Hăk kă′ tăn) Personal name meaning, "the small one, the lesser." Father of the clan leader who accompanied Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:12).

HAKKORE (Hăk′ kō rē) TEV reading of En-hakkore (Judg. 15:19), translating En as spring. See En-hakkore.

HAKKOZ (Hăk′ kŏz) Personal and clan name meaning, "the thorn." 1. Clan leader in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8). See Coz. 2. Clan of priests (1 Chron. 24:10). Compare Nehemiah 3:4,21. In the time of Ezra and Nehemiah members of this clan could not prove their family roots, so they were not allowed to function as priests (Ezra 2:61). See Koz.

HAKUPHA (Hă kū′ phă) Personal name meaning, "bent." Original ancestor of clan of Temple servants (Ezra 2:51).

HALAH (Hā′ lah) City-state or region in northern Mesopotamia to which Assyrians exiled some leaders of the Northern Kingdom after capturing Samaria in 722 B.C. (2 Kings 17:6). Some Bible students think the original text of Obadiah 20 contained a promise for the captives in Halah. They read the Hebrew word for "host" as Halah. Halah may have been Hallahhu, northeast of Nineveh.

HALAK (Hā′ lăk) Place name meaning, "barren" or "naked." Mountain marking southern extent of Joshua's conquests (Josh. 11:17; 12:7). It is identified with jebel Halak, about 40 miles southwest of the Dead Sea in Edom.

HALF TRIBE Used to designate a segment of the tribe of Manasseh which received territory on both sides of the Jordan river. The term usually refers to that part of Manasseh dwelling to the east of the Jordan along with Reuben and Gad (Num. 32:33; Deut. 3:13; Josh 1:12; 4:12; 22:1). Those living west of the Jordan are sometimes called "the rest of the tribe of Manasseh" (Josh. 17:2 NRSV) or the "other half" (22:7). See Tribes of Israel.

HALF-SHEKEL TAX The Temple tax required annually of every Israelite twenty years of age and upwards (Ex. 30:13,15; 38:26). Such payment brought atonement, but atonement price was equal for all (30:15). At Matthew 17:24 this tax is called the didrachma ("the two drachma") tax. The coin in the fish's mouth was a stater, a coin worth four drachmas or the Temple tax for two (17:27). See Atonement.

HALHUL (Hăl' hŭl) Place name perhaps meaning, "circles." Town in hill country of Judah assigned to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:58). It is modern Halhul, four miles north of Hebron.

HALI (Hā' lī) Place name meaning, "jewel." Border town assigned to tribe of Asher (Josh. 19:25). It may be khirbet Ras Ali, north of Mount Carmel.

HALL A large, usually imposing building, often used for governmental functions; the chief room in such a structure. The NIV uses hall for the main room of the Temple (1 Kings 6:3,5,17,33). Other translations have house (KJV), nave (NAS, NRSV), or sanctuary (REB). Modern translations designate several of Solomon's building projects as halls. The Hall of Pillars (KJV porch of pillars) was part of the palace complex (1 Kings 7:6). It is unclear whether this hall was a separate building or the entrance to the House of the Forest of Lebanon or even the whole palace complex. The Hall of the Throne or Hall of Judgment (1 Kings 7:7; KJV porch) was the throne room where legal decisions were rendered. The king's hall of Esther 5:1 was, likewise, the audience chamber of the Persian king. Archeological research indicates that Ahasuerus' Hall of Pillars was 193 feet square. The hall's name stemmed from the 36 massive pillars supporting the roof.

Banqueting halls are frequently mentioned. The hall of 1 Samuel 9:22 (KJV parlour) was a chamber connected with the sanctuary where sacrificial meat was eaten. Belshazzar's banqueting hall (KJV banquet house) was the scene of the famous handwriting on the wall (Dan. 5:10). This room was likely the large throne room (50 by 160 feet) which has been excavated.

KJV used the term hall to translate the Greek term aule (Luke 22:55). Elsewhere KJV translated the term "palace" (for example Matt. 26:58; Mark 14:54; John 18:15). Modern translations use "courtyard." KJV also used hall for the praetorium or Roman governor's headquarters (Pilate's Matt. 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:28; Herod's Acts 23:35).

HALLEL A song of praise. The name derives from the Hebrew "Praise Thou." The singing of psalms of praise was a special duty of the Levites (2 Chron. 7:6; Ezra 3:11). The "Egyptian" Hallel (Pss. 113—118) was recited in homes as part of the Passover celebration (compare Ps. 114:1; Matt. 26:30). The "Great Hallel" was recited in the Temple as the Passover lambs were being slain and at Pentecost, Tabernacles, and Dedication. Scholars disagree as to the original extent of the "Great Hallel" with some limiting the Hallel to Psalm 136, some including Psalm 135, and still others including the "Songs of Ascents" (Pss. 120—134).

HALLELUJAH (Hăl lĕ lū jăh) Exclamation of praise that recurs frequently in the Book of Psalms meaning, "Praise Yahweh!" In particular, Psalms 146—150 sometimes are designated the Hallelujah Psalms. In the Psalms God is praised for His power, His wisdom, His blessings, and the liberation of His people. See Psalms.

HALLOHESH (Hăl lō' hĕsh) Personal name meaning, "the exorcist." Father of Shallum, who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall. He is called, "ruler of the half part of Jerusalem" (Neh. 3:12), apparently meaning he administered one of the outlying districts near Jerusalem. The same man or a man of the same name sealed his name to Nehemiah's covenant (Neh. 10:24).

HALLOW To make holy; to set apart for holy use; to revere. See Dedicate, Dedication; Holy; Sanctification.

HALT A term KJV sometimes uses as an alternate translation for lame (Matt. 18:8; Mark 9:45; Luke 14:21; John 5:3).

HAM (Hăm) Personal name meaning, "hot." Second of Noah's three sons (Gen 5:32). Following the Flood, he discovered Noah, his father, naked and drunken and reported it to Shem and Japheth (Gen. 9:20–29). When Noah learned of the incident, he pronounced a curse on Canaan the son of Ham. Ham became the original ancestor of the Cushites, the Egyptians, and the Canaanites (Gen. 10:6). See Noah.

HAMAN (Hā' man) Personal name meaning,

"magnificent." The Agagite who became prime minister under the Persian king Ahasuerus (Esther 3:1). He was a fierce enemy of the Jews, and he devised a plot to exterminate them. In particular, he had a gallows erected on which he hoped to hang Mordecai because Mordecai would not bow to him. Through the intervention of Esther, however, his scheme was unmasked; and he was hanged on the gallows he had designed for Mordecai the Jew. See Esther.

HAMATH (Hā′ măth) Place name meaning, "fortress" or "citadel." City-state located in the valley of the Orontes River, roughly 120 miles north of Damascus. Excavation indicates this mound was occupied as early as Neolithic times. Hieroglyphic inscriptions first discovered by J. L. Burckhardt in 1810 attest early Hittite influence in Hamath. Throughout much of its existence, Hamath functioned as the capital of an independent kingdom.

The southern boundary of Hamath served as the northern boundary of Israel during the reigns of Solomon (1 Kings 8:65; 2 Chron. 8:4) and Jeroboam II (2 Kings 14:25,28). The "entrance of Hamath" was treated as the northern border of Israel (Num. 34:8; Josh. 13:5; Ezek. 47:15–17,20; 48:1) and served as an accepted geographical expression (Num. 13:21; Judg. 3:3).

Toi, king of Hamath, sent his son to congratulate David after David defeated King Hadadezer of Zobah. Toi had frequently fought with Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8:9–10; 1 Chron. 18:3,9–10). See Toi. In 853 B.C. King Irhuleni of Hamath joined a coalition including Ben-hadad II of Damascus and Ahab of Israel which successfully thwarted the advance of Shalmaneser II of Assyria into northern Syria. In about 802 B.C. Adad-nirari III of Assyria crushed Damascus and levied a heavy tax upon it. During the following decades, the king of Hamath, probably named Zakir, waged a successful rivalry with Damascus. Hamath reached the zenith of its power between 800 and 750 B.C.

In 738 B.C. Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria exacted tribute from Hamath together with other states including Israel. Following the fall of Samaria in 722–721 B.C., Hamath was devastated in 720 B.C. by Sargon II of Assyria (Amos 6:2). Refugees from Samaria may have been exiled to Hamath by the Assyrians, while refugees from Hamath were brought to Samaria along with their god, Ashima (2 Kings 17:24,30; Isa. 11:11). From this time, Hamath's history seems to merge with that of Damascus (Jer. 49:23).

In the Hellenistic period, Antiochus IV changed its name to Epiphania. It was known by this name in the Graeco-Roman period, though the natives continued to call it Hamath (modern Ḥamah).

Max Rogers

HAMATH-ZOBAH (Hā′ măth-zō′ bah) Place name meaning, "hot place of Zobah." City Solomon captured in Syria (2 Chron. 8:3). Both Hamath and Zobah are cities in Syria that David controlled (2 Sam. 8). See Hamath; Zobah. Some interpreters see the combination here as the result of a damaged text available to the Chronicler. Others think the Chronicler reflects the Babylonian and Persian administrative system of his day including the two cities in one administrative district. Other think this was simply another name for Zobah. The Chronicler in distinction from 2 Samuel 8 also combines the two cities into "Zobah-hamath" (1 Chron. 18:3 REB, reflecting the literal Hebrew text).

HAMATHITE (Hā′ măth īte) Citizen of Hamath and originally descended from Canaan, son of Ham, son of Noah (Gen. 10:18). See Hamath.

HAMITES (Hăm′ ītes) NIV designation for descendants of Ham (1 Chron. 4:40–41). See Ham.

HAMMATH (Hăm′ măth) Place name meaning, "hot spot," probably due to hot spring, and personal name meaning, "hot one." 1. Fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:35); probably the same as the levitical town of Hammoth-dor (21:32). It may be located at tell Raqqat, just north of Tiberias. Others have tried to locate it at the famous hot springs of Hammam Tabiriyeh, south of Tiberias, but archaeologists have found no evidence of Iron Age occupation there. First Chronicles 6:76 reads "Hammon," apparently the same place, in listing the Levitical towns. 2. Original ancestor of Kenites and Rechabites (1 Chron. 2:55; KJV reads, "Hamath"; TEV, REB see a verbal construction meaning, "intermarried" or "connected by marriage."). The context and grammatical construction of the verse makes certain understanding impossible. Hammath could be the founder of the city Hammath.

HAMMEDATHA (Hăm mē dā′ thà) Personal name meaning, "given by the god." Father of Haman, the villain of the Book of Esther (Esther 3:1).

HAMMELECH (Hăm′ mē lĕch) According to KJV, personal name meaning, "the king" (Jer. 36:26; 38:6). Modern translations read, "son of the king."

HAMMER A striking tool. The earliest hammers were simply smooth or shaped stones. Beginning in the Bronze Age, stones were hallowed out to give a better grip or to receive a handle. Mallets of bone and wood were used (Judg. 5:26), though these have not normally been preserved. Hammers with metal heads were rare in Palestine, possibly because metal was reserved for tools needing a cutting edge.

Hammers were used in cutting stone (1 Kings

6:7), working common and precious metals (Isa. 41:7; 44:12), and for woodworking (Jer. 10:4). A hammer-like weapon was also used in battle (Jer. 51:20 "shatterer" NAS margin; Ezek. 9:2 "shattering weapon"). See Arms and Armor.

The hammer was a symbol of power. God's word is pictured as a hammer (Jer. 23:29). Babylon is mocked as a hammer whose strength has failed (Jer. 50:23). See Tools.

HAMMOLECHETH (Hăm mŏl' ĕ chĕth) Personal name meaning, "queen." Sister of Gilead in genealogy of Manasseh in the unparalleled list of 1 Chronicles 7:18. This spelling appears in TEV, NRSV, NAS. See Hammoleketh.

HAMMOLEKETH (Hăm mō' lĕ kĕth) KJV, NIV, REB spelling of Hammolecheth.

HAMMON (Hăm' mon) Place name meaning, "hot spot," probably from a hot spring. 1. Town in tribal allotment of Asher (Josh. 19:28). It may be modern Umm el-awamid near the Mediterranean coast in Lebanon about five miles northeast of Rosh ha-niqra. 2. See Hammath.

HAMMOTH-DOR (Hăm' moth-dôr) See Hammath.

HAMMUEL (Hăm' mū ĕl) Personal name meaning, "El is my father-in-law" or "God is hot with anger." Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:26).

HAMMURABI (Hăm mū rā' bī) King of Babylon about 1700 B.C. who issued a famous code of law. His name probably means, "Hammu (the god) is great." The name Hammurabi belongs to the family of Semitic, not Akkadian, personal names and began appearing in cuneiform texts about 2000 B.C. Two kings of Yamhad, who were contemporaries of the king of Babylon, bore the name. In addition, the name was borne by the king of Kurda and by an official from the Old Babylonian period. Prior to Hammurabi, the kings of Babylon had Akkadian names.

Kingdom Hammurabi was the sixth king of the First Dynasty of Babylon. He was the son of Sin-muballit and the father of Samsu-iluna. He ruled over Babylon for 42–43 years. Although we have more and better evidence for his reign than any other king of his dynasty, the precise years he ruled cannot be determined. Four positions are held. The ultra-high chronology holds 1900 B.C. for his first year of his reign. Probably, the most widely-held view is that his first year to rule was 1792 B.C. Others hold a middle chronology with 1728 B.C. as his first year. The low chronology places 1642 B.C. as the first year.

Although most scholars present Hammurabi as one of the great kings of his era, a recent scholar sees him as a minor king in comparison to his peers, pointing to the correspondence found at Mari as evidence. For the first ten years of Hammurabi's reign, Babylon appears to be subservient to Assyrian rule. Later, his serious rivals were Zimri-Lim of Mari, Rim-sin of Larsa, and Ibal-pi-El of Eshnunna along with his Elamite allies.

From his seventh to eleventh years he destroyed Malgum, attacked Rapiqum, warred against Emutbal, and captured both Isin and Uruk (Erech).

Despite an uneasy truce with Assyria and Eshnunna, Hammurabi spent the middle twenty years of his reign preoccupied with local affairs. Evidently, he was consolidating and organizing his kingdom. He built religious shrines, civic buildings, defensive walls, and canals during this period. The archives at Mari reveal about 140 letters sent between Babylon and Mari during this era. Four of the letters are addressed by Hammurabi to either the king or court officials at Mari.

In year 29 of his reign, he won a decisive victory over a coalition holding the east side of the Tigris River, which opened the way for him two years later to attain victory over Larsa and gain control of the southern cities. Change in the balance of power resulted. The last twelve years of his rule were uninterrupted warfare. In year 35 he dismantled Mari and Malgium. In year 38 he conquered Eshnunna. Yet these latter wars at best were an "offensive defensive" against the pressures of invading peoples. In the latter years he built walls along the Tigris and Euphrates and in year 43 fortified Sippar with an earthen wall. While the early years witnessed military and political expansion which was probably initiated by his father, Sin-muballit, the latter years saw the kingdom shrink.

Religion Scholars assign the famous staged-temple-tower or ziggurat "E-temen-an-ki" to his reign. The name means "The House of the Foundation Platform of Heaven and Earth." It was one of the seven wonders of the world. This giant structure may have influenced the biblical writer in his narrative of the Tower of Babel (Gen. 11:4–9). Hammurabi placed Marduk, a local deity, at the head of the Babylonian pantheon, where he remained for subsequent centuries.

Lawgiver In 1898 some fragments were published of cuneiform tablets from the library of Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria. These fragments were thought to be part of an old "book of Law" dating to the First Babylonian Dynasty. In December 1901 and January 1902 in the old royal city of Susa, a diorite stone measuring two and a quarter meters high and almost two meters in circumference was found. The stone was a relief of Hammurabi with 44 columns of ancient cuneiform writing. The stele proved to contain the collection of Hammurabi laws.

The stone was engraved late in Hammurabi's reign. It was probably set in the great Esagil Temple of Marduk in Babylon with copies sent to other centers. In 1160 B.C., following a successful raid on Babylon, the Elamite Shutruk-nahhunte carried it to Susa.

The relief of Hammurabi shows him receiving a sceptre and a ring from Shamash, the divine lawgiver. The sceptre and ring are symbols of justice and order. The stele begins by describing the king's divine call to "make justice to shine forth in the land, to destroy the evil and the wicked, that the strong might not oppress the weak . . . to give light to the land."

The diverse elements of the expanded kingdom demanded a precise definition of individual rights. The large economic dependence upon slavery and the overwhelming personal indebtedness provided the means and reason for developing a standard of law. By setting the wages for technical and agricultural laborers and by decreeing the release from debt or slavery, the king could control much of the life of the nation. This was done by a periodical "pronouncement of righteousness." This usually occurred in a king's first year of reign. In his first year, Hammurabi decreed the standard of law which would govern the economic and religious life of all Babylonians. This compares to the "reforms" of the Hebrew kings, who by restating allegiance to the Torah in their first year as king, "did the right in the eyes of the Lord" (2 Kings 18:3).

Hammurabi's laws probably date from his first year as king, but they were not compiled and edited until the conclusion of his reign.

Two hundred eighty-two paragraphs or judgments of Hammurabi remain. These are not comparable to modern codes. The cases are grouped by subjects, but rarely are they stated in terms of general application. The laws are primarily the king's verdicts regarding specific cases. Some of the cases are similar to the law codes of Lipit-Ishtar of Isin, Eshnunna, and the Hebrew laws. The code in general does not discuss religious affairs. Punishments include immersion in the river, "lex talionis," fines, restitution by labor or in kind, and death. Penalties varied according to the class of the offender. Three classes were recognized: freedman, state-dependent, and slave. The code covers the following subjects:

(1) Various offenses and crimes (¶ 1–25). These include false witness similar to Deuteronomy 5:20; 19:16–17; witchcraft, which is forbidden in Deuteronomy 18:10; Exodus 22:18; action against evil judges similar to Exodus 23:6–9; Leviticus 19:15; Deuteronomy 16:18–21. The death penalty was imposed for robbery or receipt of stolen merchandise from a palace or a temple. Hebrew law allowed for restoration for such offenses (Ex. 22:1; Lev. 6:2). The penalty for dereliction was death or thirty- or ten-fold restitution depending on the class of the accused. Hebrew law asked for double-restitution (Ex. 22:1–4,7). The death penalty was prescribed for kidnapping, theft of slaves, looting, and robbery.

(2) Property (¶ 26–99). Distinction was made between crown-tenants, fief holders, and tenant farmers. Much is stated about loans of either money or seeds against future crops. A farmer had four years to produce a fruit crop from trees before repaying his loan. In Hebrew law, the first-fruits of the fourth crop had to be dedicated to God.

(3) Commercial law (¶ 100–126). These laws regulated partnerships and agencies, sales, and transporting merchandise. These treat slaves and debtors more harshly than do the Hebrew laws.

(4) Marriage (¶ 127–161). These cases involve the rights of both parties, dowry settlements, bridal gifts, marriage offenses, and divorce. Adultery with a married woman, as in Hebrew law (Deut. 22:22), resulted in death for both individuals. Death was the punishment for rape as in Deuteronomy 22:25. An adulterous wife was sentenced to trial by ordeal in both codes (Num. 5:13–22). A husband captured abroad had his marriage protected. Likewise, this was the intent of Deuteronomy 24:5. The references to concubinage and the protection of the female from reduction to slavery or divorce, except for offenses against the first wife, shed light on patriarchal practices (Gen. 16:2,4; 21:8). Incest is prohibited by each.

(5) Firstborn. As in Hebrew law (Ex. 13:2; Deut. 21:15–17), the first-born had special rights.

(6) Adoption (¶ 185–194). Males could be granted sonship or disowned by oral pronouncements. Unruly, violent sons were corrected by cutting off the offending limb.

(7) Assault (¶ 195–208). Damage to persons and property were thoroughly discussed. Liabilities of builders and surgeons were especially noted. Hurting pregnant women was severely punished as in the Hebrew law (Ex. 21:22–25).

(8) Agricultural work and offenses (¶ 241–267). As in Exodus 21:28–32 the owners' responsibilities for gorings by oxen are discussed in great detail.

(9) Rates and wages (¶ 268–277). The differences between the conditions in early Israel and the urban communities of Babylon are evident in these paragraphs.

(10) Slaves (¶ 278–282). These paragraphs discuss the purchase and sale of slaves.

A particular genre of Ancient Near Eastern literature is known as the "law code." Nine separately identifiable law codes are known to have existed in the Old Testament era. Seven of them are in the form of cuneiform documents: Ur-Nammu, Lipit-Ishtar, Eshnunna, Hammurabi, Assyrian Laws, Hittite Laws, and Neo-Babylonian Laws. The other two that are comparable are found in the Bible (Ex. 21:1—22:16; Deut. 21—25). All nine are remarkably similar in form and content. All are casuistic in style, dealing with specific cases with an if . . . then form.

What is the purpose for such law codes? Some scholars believe they are more literary than legal. In this view their purpose was never legislative. They were "royal apologia." They were to lay before the public, posterity, future kings, and the gods, evidence of the king's execution of the divinely ordained mandates. Other scholars say that the codes are "scribal exercises." This views Hammurabi more as a scribe than as a judge. Thus, his work is theoretical literature designed to illustrate his wisdom. Others understand the law codes to be from a tradition similar to compiling lists of omens, medical prognoses, and other scientific treatises. The purpose of these series was to act as reference works for the royal judges in deciding difficult cases. This probably began as an oral tradition and gradually became a systematic written corpus.

Significance The Hammurabi code resembles Hebrew law in form, style, and general content. Thus some scholars believe the Hebrews were influenced by Hammurabi's code through the Canaanites among whom they settled.

Whatever the similarities, important differences are obvious. First, the Hammurabi code presupposes an aristocratic class system that did not prevail in Israel. Second, Israel could never have viewed the state as the custodian of the law. Third, Hebrew law is characterized by a more humane spirit. Fourth, Hebrew law maintains a high ethical emphasis. Fifth, the pervading religious fervor makes the Hebrew code unique. Sixth, Hebrew law is set within a covenant relationship.

Gary D. Baldwin

HAMON-GOG (Hā′ mŏn-gŏg) Place name meaning, "horde of Gog." Place where Ezekiel predicted burial of defeated army of Gog (Ezek. 39:11,15). Its location is not known. See Ezekiel; Gog; Hamonah.

HAMONAH (Hȧ mō′ nah) Place name meaning, "horde." Town in valley of Hamon-gog where Israel would bury the defeated army of God (Ezek. 39:16). The exact meaning and location of the city are not clear except that Ezekiel was determined that Israel would keep the land ritually pure in all circumstances. TEV, REB translate Hamonah as "nearby" or "great horde" and thus do not mention the city. See Ezekiel; Gog; Hamon-gog.

HAMOR (Hā′ môr) Personal name meaning, "donkey" or "ass." In Genesis 33:19, the father of Shechem. From the children of Hamor, Jacob purchased a parcel of land on which he erected an altar. Later the remains of Joseph, Jacob's son, were buried on this parcel of land (Josh. 24:32). Hamor and Shechem were killed by Simeon and Levi in an act of revenge for the outrage committed against Dinah (Gen. 34:25–26). Hamor was the original clan ancestor of the city of Shechem (Judg. 9:28).

HAMRAN (Hăm′ răn) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps, "vineyard." Member of family of Esau and Seir (1 Chron. 1:41). KJV spells the name, Amram. The parallel list has Hemdan (Gen. 36:26); NIV picks up Hemdan in 1 Chronicles along with some Hebrew and Greek manuscripts. Apparently early copyists misread similar Hebrew letters. See Hemdan.

HAMSTRING To cripple by cutting the leg tendons. Horses captured in war were frequently hamstrung (KJV, hough) (Josh. 11:6,9; 2 Sam. 8:4; 1 Chron. 18:4). The hamstringing of oxen (Gen. 49:6 modern translations) is an example of rash anger.

HAMUEL (Hăm′ ū ĕl) KJV spelling of Hammuel.

HAMUL (Hā′ mŭl) Personal name meaning, "pitied, spared" or "El is father-in-law" or "El is hot, angry." Son of Pharez and grandson of Judah (Gen. 46:12) and thus a clan leader in Judah (Num. 26:21).

HAMULITE (Hā′ mŭl īte) Member of clan of Hamul (Num. 26:21). See Hamul.

HAMUTAL (Hȧ mū′ tăl) Personal name meaning, "father-in-law or kindred of the dew." Mother of King Jehoahaz (2 Kings 23:31) and King Zedekiah (2 Kings 24:18) of Judah. See Jehoahaz; Zedekiah.

HANAMEEL (Hȧ năm′ ė ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is gracious." Uncle of Jeremiah from whom the prophet bought the field in Anathoth (Jer. 32:7–12). Jeremiah's act symbolized God's long-range plans to restore the people to the land after Exile.

HANAMEL (Hăn′ ȧ mĕl) Modern translation spelling of Hanameel. See Hanameel.

HANAN (Hā′ năn) Personal name meaning, "gracious." Personal name probably originally connected to divine name such as El, Yahweh, or Baal. 1. Clan or guild of prophets or priests living in the Temple. Jeremiah used their Temple chamber for his meeting with the Rechabites (Jer. 35:4). 2. Clan of Temple servants who returned to Jerusalem from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:46). 3. Man Nehemiah appointed as assistant Temple treasurer to receive and disperse tithes brought to care for the Levites (Neh. 13:13).

4. One of David's military heroes (1 Chron. 11:43). 5. Levite who instructed the people in the Lord's law while Ezra read it (Neh. 8:7). 6. Levite who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:10). 7. Another signer of Nehemiah's covenant (Neh. 10:22). 8. Another who signed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh. 10:26).

9. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:23). 10. Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:38).

HANANEEL (Hå năn' ē ĕl) KJV spelling of Hananel.

HANANEL (Hăn' å nĕl) Place name meaning, "God is gracious." Tower marking northern wall of Jerusalem. Jeremiah predicted its rebuilding in the day of the Lord to come (Jer. 31:38; compare Zech. 14:10). Nehemiah led the nation to rebuild the tower along with the rest of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:1; 12:39). It may well have been part of the earliest fortress protecting the Temple (Neh. 2:8; 7:2 NAS).

HANANI (Hå nā' nī) Personal name meaning, "my grace" or a shortened form of "Yahweh is gracious." 1. Father of prophet Jehu (1 Kings 16:1,7; 2 Chron. 19:2). 2. Man who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to protect the Jews from temptation to worship idols (Ezra 10:20). 3. Nehemiah's brother who reported the poor conditions in Jerusalem to him while Nehemiah was still in Persia (Neh. 1:2). Nehemiah placed him in charge of the military protection of the restored Jerusalem (Neh. 7:2). Some have tried to identify him with the Hunani mentioned in the Elephantine Papyri, but this is far from certain. 4. Priest musician at dedication of Jerusalem walls (Neh. 12:36). 5. Temple musician and descendant of Heman (1 Chron. 25:4). Some would equate him with 4. above 6. Original leader of one course of Temple musicians (1 Chron. 25:25). 7. Prophetic seer who condemned King Asa of Judah (910–869 B.C.) for paying tribute to King Ben-hadad of Damascus rather than relying on God (2 Chron. 16:7). Asa imprisoned Hanani (2 Chron. 16:10).

HANANIAH (Hăn å nī' ah) Personal name with two Hebrew spellings meaning, "Yah(weh) is gracious." 1. Prophet from Gibeon who opposed Jeremiah by promising immediate deliverance from Babylon. Jeremiah could combat this false prophecy only by telling the people to wait until they saw it fulfilled in history (Jer. 28:8–9). Jeremiah could not even oppose Hannaniah when he tried to embarrass Jeremiah by breaking the symbolic yoke Jeremiah was wearing (vv. 10–11). Only later did Jeremiah receive a countering word from God to oppose Hananiah (vv. 12–17). 2. Father of Zedekiah, a court official, in time of Jeremiah (Jer. 36:12). 3. Grandfather of captain of guard who arrested Jeremiah as he left Jerusalem (Jer. 37:13). 4. Jewish name of Daniel's friend Shadrach (Dan. 1:7). See Shadrach. 5. Son of Zerubbabel in the royal line of David (1 Chron. 3:19). See Zerubbabel 6. Clan head in tribe of Benjamin living in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 8:24). 7. Son of Heman among the priestly musicians in the Temple (1 Chron. 25:4). He may be the same as the head of a course of priests (v. 23), though the latter's name has a slightly variant spelling in Hebrew. 8. Military leader under King Uzziah of Judah (792–740 B.C.) (2 Chron. 26:11). 9. Man who followed Ezra's leadership and divorced his foreign wife to protect Judah from the temptatio to worship foreign gods (Ezra 10:28). 10. A member of the perfumers' guild who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:8 NAS). 11. Man who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:30). 12. Ruler of the Temple fortress under Nehemiah (Neh. 7:2 NAS). Nehemiah set him up as one of two administrators of Jerusalem because he was trustworthy and reverenced God more than other men. 13. Man who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law; perhaps the same as 12. above (Neh. 10:23). 14. A priest immediately after the time of return from Babylonian Exile (Neh. 12:12) when Joiakim was high priest. 15. Priest musician who helped Nehemiah celebrate the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:41).

HAND Part of the human body, namely the terminal part of the arm which enables a person to make and use tools and perform functions. The Greek and Hebrew words that are translated by the English word "hand" appear approximately 1800 times in the Bible. Of these occurrences to which "hand" is referred, the literal sense is intended some 500 times, and the figurative sense some 1300 times.

The references to "hand" in the Bible often encompassed the idea of parts of a hand. Thus, in Genesis 41:42, when Pharaoh took his signet ring "from his hand" and placed it "upon Joseph's hand," "hand" was used in the place of "finger." Likewise, in Ezekiel 23:42, hand was used to mean wrists: ". . . which put bracelets upon their hands." The context in which the word appears determines the meaning and usage of the word.

The largest number of figurative uses of "hand" relate to God. The "hand of God" or "in thine hand" is an idiom referring to the supreme and almighty power and authority of God (1 Chron. 29:12). In Isaiah 59:1, God's hand was described as mighty. Exodus 13:3–16 described God's deliverance of Israel from Egypt by His "strong hand." The creative work of God involved the use of His hands to make the heavens and the earth (Ps. 8:6; 95:5). God uses His hand to uphold and guide the righteous (Ps. 37:24; 139:10). Punishment and affliction come from the hand of God (Ex. 9:3; Deut. 2:15; Judg. 2:15; 1 Sam. 7:13; 12:15; Ruth 1:13).

The hand of God can be upon someone in either a good or bad sense. In a good sense, it meant to bring aid, while the negative connotation meant to hinder or distress (Amos 1:8).

The phrase "into someone's hand" was used figuratively to convey the idea of authority involving responsibility, care, or dominion over someone or something (Gen. 9:2). Examples of this concept include: Sarah's authority over Hagar (Gen. 16:6,9), Joseph's administration of Potiphar's house (Gen. 39:3–8), and the role of Moses and Aaron as leaders of Israel (Num. 33:1). Victory and deliverance were portrayed also by the use of this phrase. "Victory over someone" was conveyed by the phrase "delivered into hand of" (Gen. 49:8; Josh. 6:2), while deliverance was understood as "out of the hand of" (Ex. 3:8).

Functions of the hand were often used by biblical writers to identify certain uses of the word. Since a person takes possession of objects with the hand, the Biblical writers adapted "hand" to mean possession. A literal translation of Genesis 39:1 would include the statement that Potiphar brought Joseph "from the hand of the Ishmaelites." In 1 Kings 11:31, Jeroboam was told that the Lord was about to tear the kingdom "from the hand" of Solomon.

"To give the hand" meant that one had pledged or submitted to another, as in 2 Kings 10:15 and Ezra 10:19. Submission to the Lord is implied in 2 Chronicles 30:8, where "yield to" is literally, "give hand to."

"To stretch the hand" was used to convey two thoughts: attacking the enemy in battle (Josh. 8:19,26) and an intense desire for communion with God (Ps. 143:6).

Work or the action in which one is involved is expressed by the words "works of thy hand" (Deut. 2:7; 30:9). In 1 Samuel 23:16 Jonathan's helping David is literally, "he strengthened his hand in God," that is increased his faith and hope in God's help.

The Hebrew phrase "high hand" indicated willful rebellion against God (Num. 15:30; see Deut. 32:27) but also military power (Ex. 14:8; Mic. 5:9). A similar image is projected by the phrase "shaking the hand" (Isa. 10:32; 11:15). The movement of the hand was interpreted as a sign of contempt and displeasure, or lack of respect. When used in reference to God, it symbolized God's warning and punishment.

Hebrew "to fill the hand" expressed the consecration of a priest (Judg. 17:5) or a congregation's dedication (2 Chron. 29:31).

The word "hand" was used in a number of specialized ways. It came to mean "side," perhaps because of the location of the hands and arms on the body. A peculiar use was that of hand for "monument" (1 Sam. 15:12). The spreading of the hands denoted a large "space" (Gen. 34:21).

See Work; Worship; Laying on of Hands.

James Newell

HANDBAG See Bag 1.

HANDBREADTH An ancient measurement equal to the width of the hand at the base of the fingers (about three inches). Ezekiel's long cubit was six handbreaths, one more than the common cubit (Ezek. 40:5). In Psalm 39:5 "a few handbreadths" illustrates the shortness of life.

HANDKERCHIEF The Greek term soudarion is borrowed from a Latin term used for a table napkin or a handkerchief. The term derives from the Latin root for sweat, suggesting that a soudarion was a cloth for wiping sweat or a sweatband. Such a cloth is likely intended at Acts 19:12. The same Greek term is used for a cloth in which money was buried (Luke 19:20) and for the cloth used to cover the face of the dead (John 11:44; 20:7).

HANDLES (Literally hands) The thumb pieces or knobs of the bolt or latch of a door (Song of Sol. 5:5).

HANDMAIDEN See Maid.

HANDS, LAYING ON OF See Laying on of Hands.

HANDSTAVE A wooden staff used as a weapon by foot soldiers. KJV used handstave to translate a weapon at Ezekiel 39:9. The nature of the weapon is unclear though the weapon was made of wood (39:10). The NRSV renders the term handpike; NAS and NIV, war clubs; REB, throwing sticks. See Arms and Armor.

HANDWRITING See Writing.

HANES (Hā′ nēs) Egypt place name. City to which Israel sent ambassadors in time of Isaiah to seek military and economic help (Isa. 30:4). Isaiah condemned the government policy of seeking Egyptian help rather than trusting Yahweh. Hanes has often been located at Heracleopolis Magna in southern Egypt just north of the Nile Delta, modern Ahnas. This would be a natural parallel to northern Zoan or Tanis. See Zoan. A more likely identification, however, is Heracleopolis Parva, modern Hanes, almost directly east of Tanis and much more likely to be the goal of Judah's ambassador's than the distant southern Heracleopolis. Ashurbanipal of Egypt also mentions Hanes in listing Egyptian cities.

HANGING A method of ridiculing, shaming, and desecrating an enemy. Hanging was not regarded as a means of capital punishment according to biblical law, although it was practiced by the Egyptians (Gen. 40:19,22) and the Persians (Esther 7:9). The Israelites, after putting an enemy or criminal to death, might hang them on a gibbet or tree for public scorn as added degradation and warning (Gen. 40:19; Deut. 21:22; Josh. 8:29; 2 Sam. 4:12), but biblical law demanded that the corpses be taken down and buried the same day (Deut. 21:22, 23). Joshua 8:29; 10:26,27 record that the bodies of the kings of Ai and the kings of the Amorites were taken down and buried at sundown on the same day they were hanged. Contrast the undetermined length of exposure allowed by Pharaoh (Gen. 40:19), the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:10), and the Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:8–10). A hanged man was considered an insult to God (Gal. 3:13) and therefore defiled the land.

According to the first century Jewish historian, Josephus, all executed criminals were afterward hanged. The Mishna prescribes hanging only for those put to death by stoning. Some Bible students think hanging was prescribed only for blasphemers and idolaters.

Hanging oneself is mentioned only once in the Old Testament and once in the New Testament. Ahithophel, David's counselor, joined the conspiracy of Absalom, David's son (2 Sam. 15:31). Feeling his ploy for personal power evaporate, he set his house in order and hanged himself (2 Sam. 17:23). Judas, one of the twelve disciples of our Lord, in a desperate effort to resolve guilt and atone for the misdeed of betraying Jesus for thirty pieces of silver, went out into the night and hanged himself (Matt. 27:5). Acts 1:18 says he fell headlong and burst asunder, presumably as the rope broke. C. Dale Hill

HANIEL (Hăn′ ĭ ĕl) KJV variant spelling of Hanniel (1 Chron. 7:39). See Hanniel.

HANNAH (Hăn′ nah) Personal name meaning, "grace." One of the wives of Elkanah and mother of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:2). Because she had been barren for many years, she vowed to the Lord that if she should give birth to a son, she would dedicate the child to God (1 Sam. 1:11). Subsequently, she gave birth to the child Samuel. She fulfilled her vow by bringing her son to the sanctuary at Shiloh, where he served the Lord under the direction of Eli. Later on, Hannah had other sons and daughters. See Samuel.

HANNATHON (Hăn nā′ thŏn) Place name meaning, "grace." Town on northern border of tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:14). The El-Amarna tablets and the annals of Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria also mention it. It is probably present-day tell el-Badawiye, about six miles north of Nazareth.

HANNIEL (Hăn′ nĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is gracious." 1. Representative of tribe of Manasseh on council which helped Joshua and Eleazar divide the land among the tribes (Num. 34:23). 2. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:39).

HANOCH (Hā′ nŏch) Personal name with same Hebrew spelling as Enoch meaning, "dedicated" or "vassal." See Enoch. 1. Son of Reuben and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:9) and thus a clan leader in Israel (Ex. 6:14; Num. 26:5). 2. Son of Midian and grandson of Abraham and thus one of the Midianites (Gen. 25:4). See Midian.

HANOCHITE (Hā′ nŏch īte) Member of clan of Hanoch. See Hanoch.

HANUKKAH An eight-day festival that commemorated the cleansing and rededication of the Temple following the victories of Judas Maccabeus in 167/165 B.C. See Festivals.

HANUN (Hā′ nŭn) Personal name meaning, "blessed" or "favored." 1. King of Ammon whom David sought to honor and with whom he sought to renew the peace treaty. Hanun and his advisors misinterpreted David's act and treated David's messengers shamefully. David's military response brought victory over Ammon and Syria (2 Sam. 10). This set the stage for David's sinful relationship with Bathsheba. 2. Man who repaired the valley gate of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 3:13). See Jerusalem. 3. Another man who worked under Nehemiah to repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:30).

HAPHARAIM (Hăph à rā′ ĭm) Modern translations reading of KJV's Haphraim. See Haphraim.

HAPHRAIM (Hăph rā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "two holes" or "two wells." Town in tribal territory of Issachar (Josh. 19:19). It is modern et-Taiyibeh, about nine miles northwest of Bethshean.

HAPPIZZEZ (Hăp pĭz′ zĕz) Personal name meaning, "the shattered one." Leader of one course of the priests (1 Chron. 24:15) and thus the original ancestor for that priestly clan. KJV, REB spell the name Aphses.

HAR-HERES (Här-hē′ rēs) NRSV reading in Judges 1:35 for Mount Heres, NRSV transliterating har, Hebrew word for mountain. See Heres.

HAR-MAGEDON (Här-Mȧ gĕd′ ŏn) NAS, NRSV transliteration of Greek transliteration from Hebrew in Revelation 16:16 for place name other English translations transliterate as Armageddon. See Armageddon.

HARA (Hā′ rȧ) Place name of uncertain meaning. City or region in northern Mesopotamia where, according to 1 Chronicles 5:26, the Assyrians under Tiglath-pileser settled some of the exiles from east of the Jordan in the Northern Kingdom in 734 B.C. The name does not occur in the parallel passages (1 Kings 17:6; 18:11). The scribe copying Chronicles may have copied part of the Hebrew word for either Habor or for river a second time in a way later generations made into the name Hara. The accounts in 1 Kings place the exile to these cities in 722 B.C.

HARADAH (Hå rā′ dah) Place name meaning, "quaking" or "terror." Station in Israel's wilderness journey (Num. 33:24–25). It is probably modern el-Harada, over 50 miles south of Aqaba.

HARAN (Hā′ răn) Personal and place name meaning, "mountaineer" or "caravan route." Three men and an important city of northern Mesopotamia located on the Balikḥ River. 1. Terah's son and Lot's father (Gen. 11:26–29,31). 2. Son of Caleb's concubine (1 Chron. 2:46). 3. Son of Shimei and a Levite (1 Chron. 23:9). 4. The city became Abraham's home (Gen. 11:31–32; 12:4–5) and remained home for his relatives like Laban (Gen. 27:43). Jacob went there and married (Gen. 28:10; 29:4). In the eighth century Assyria conquered it (2 Kings 19:12; Isa. 37:12). It was a trade partner of Tyre (Ezek. 27:23). Through excavations begun in the 1950s, the city was determined to have been established by the middle of the third millenium and was occupied through the Assyro-Babylonian period until Islamic times. The city was also a major center of worship for the moon god Sin. Its name is spelled differently from that of the men in Hebrew. David M. Fleming HARAR (Hā′ rår) Geographical name perhaps related to Hebrew word for "mountain." The word appears in slightly difficult forms in its appearances in the Hebrew Bible. Three of David's military heroes are related to Harar (2 Sam. 23:11,33; 1 Chron. 11:34–35). Harar can either be a town, a region, a tribe, or a general reference to mountain country.

HARARITE (Hā′ rå rīte) Person from Harar. See Harar.

HARBEL (Här′ bĕl) TEV reading of place name in Numbers 34:11, usually translated Riblah but spelled in Hebrew with beginning "h," which can be the Hebrew definite article. See Riblah.

HARBONA (Här bō′ nå) Persian personal name perhaps meaning, "barren." A eunuch on the staff of King Ahasuerus of Persia (Esther 1:10; 7:9).

HARBONAH (Här bō′ năh) Alternate spelling of Harbona, based on Hebrew text's alteration between Hebrew and Aramaic spelling. See Harbona.

HARD SAYING Teaching difficult to understand or accept (John 6:60).

HARDNESS OF THE HEART A stubborn attitude that leads a person to reject God's will. The Bible speaks of the attitude both as stemming from the human heart and from God's action.

The Bible makes it clear that humans can resist God who respects the free human will. One of the most important ways of resisting God is for a person to "harden his heart." The analogy is to a rock or a millstone so that the individual has no feeling and is like a piece of stone.

When God's people were in captivity in Egypt, "Pharaoh hardened his heart" (Ex. 8:32) as he refused to let the Israelites go. One of the puzzling aspects of this hard heart is that in the next chapter in the contest between God and Pharaoh, "the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them" (Ex. 9:12).

The explanation of saying God hardened Pharaoh's heart seems to be that this is the way of punishment which comes as the consequence of his own initial self hardening. Pharaoh hardened his own heart and then became confirmed in his obstancy. Sin has become its own punishment. This makes more relevant the warning in the Psalms, "Harden not your heart" (Ps. 95:8).

In the New Testament Jesus took up the same theme as He warned His disciples, "Have ye your heart yet hardened?" (Mark 8:17). Hardening the heart was also seen as evidence of skepticism, "They considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened" (Mark 6:52).

God's people can have hardened hearts and begin to complain when God's ethical standards seem too high. Discussing the permanence of marriage and the concession that Moses made to the children of Israel, Jesus said, "For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept. But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female." (Mark 10:5–6). Even though the word was part of Scripture (Deut. 24:1), it was simply a concession to the hardness of the people's hearts.

Failure to hear the voice of God may come from a hardened heart (Prov. 28:14; 29:1).

Scottish people speak about falling in love as "having a soft heart," and God's people must constantly maintain a soft heart towards their Lord, ever remembering the exhortation of the writer of the Hebrews letter, "Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts" (Heb. 4:7).

John Drakeford

HARE A member of the rabbit family (Leporidae), especially those born with open eyes and fur. Hares were regarded as unclean (Lev. 11:6; Deut. 14:7). See Animals.

HAREPH (Hā′ rĕph) Personal name meaning,

"clever" or "reproach." Descendant of Caleb and thus member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:51).

HARETH (Hā′ rĕth) Place name meaning, "woodland." Forest where David went at advice of Gad, the prophet, as he hid from Saul (1 Sam. 22:5). It was in Judah, but the exact location is debated. Some students place it at khirbet Khoreisa two miles south of Ziph and about six miles southeast of Hebron. Others think it is near the village of Kharas near Keilah. For modern translations' spelling, see Hereth.

HARHAIAH (Här hâi ′ ah) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Member of goldsmiths' guild whose son helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:8).

HARHAS (Här′ hăs) Foreign name of uncertain meaning. Grandfather of the husband of Huldah, the prophet (2 Kings 22:14). Second Chronicles 34:22 spells the name Hasrah with other manuscript evidence pointing to Hasdah or Harham. Many Bible students think Hasrah is original.

HARHUR (Här′ hūr) Personal name meaning, "glow, burn," possibly describing fever of mother at birth. A Temple servant who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:51).

HARIM (Hā′ rĭm) Personal name meaning, "dedicated." 1. Clan leader from Bethlehem whose family returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:32). 2. Head of one course of priests appointed under David's leadership (1 Chron. 24:8; compare Ezra 2:39; Neh. 12:15). Some members of this clan agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce their foreign wives to protect the people from the temptation of false worship (Ezra 10:21). 3. Another Israelite clan with members having to divorce foreign wives under Ezra (Ezra 10:31). The clan name may have come from an original ancestor but more likely from the town of residence—Charim, eight miles northeast of Joppa. One of these clan members helped Nehemiah build the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:11). 4. Priest who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:5). 5. Clan leader who signed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh. 10:27).

HARIPH (Här′ ĭph) Personal name meaning, "sharp" or "fresh." 1. Israelite clan whose members accompanied Zerubbabel in returning from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:24). 2. Leader of people who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:19).

HARLOT A prostitute. The most famous harlot in the Bible is Rahab of Jericho, who saved the Israelite spies sent by Joshua to scout out the Promised Land (Josh. 2). Israel spared her and her family when they conquered and destroyed Jericho. She continued to dwell with the Israelites (Josh. 6:23–25). She is listed in the genealogy of Jesus (Matt. 1:5). Her action on behalf of the Israelite spies won her a place in the roll call of the faithful (Heb. 11:31; compare Jas. 2:25).

The Bible gives few details of the ways in which harlots like Rahab practiced their trade. Evidently, harlots might solicit along the roadside (Gen. 38:14–15). Brothels, which often served as taverns and inns, were also known in the Ancient Near East. Rahab's house may have been one (Josh. 2:1). It is possible that the prostitute had a distinctive mark on her forehead (Jer. 3:3) and breasts (Hos. 2:2). She might attract attention by her clothing, jewelry and make-up (Jer. 4:30; Ezek. 23:40; Rev. 17:4). Flattering with words (Prov. 2:16) and making sweet music (Isa. 23:16) might be used to lure or soothe a client. Her payment might be in money, or it could be in jewelry (Ezek. 23:42) or other items of value (Gen. 38:15–18; compare Luke 15:30).

Although harlots were considered socially inferior, they did have legal rights, as is evident from the incident recorded in 1 Kings 3:16–22.

See Fornication; Prostitution. Wilda W. Morris

HARMON (Här′ mon) Place name of uncertain meaning in Amos 4:3 as translated by NRSV, NAS, NIV. KJV reads, "palace," changing the first letter of the Hebrew word to a common Hebrew noun for royal fortresses. TEV does not translate the final Hebrew word, saying it is unclear. REB changes two Hebrew letters slightly to translate, "dunghill." The earliest Greek translation read, "Mount Rimmon." Some Bible students change the first letter slightly to read, "Mount Hermon." If Harmon, the unchanged Hebrew text, is read, we know nothing of the place meant. Whatever the precise reading of the original, Amos' intention was to describe the drastic fate waiting the sinful women of Samaria, a fate using terminology connected with slaughter of animals and exile.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS The arrangement of the gospels in parallel columns for the purpose of studying their similarities and differences. Andreas Osiander (1498–1552), a German Bible scholar of the Protestant Reformation, was the first person to use the phrase "harmony of the gospels" for a parallel organization of gospel texts which he designed. By choosing a musical term as a metaphor for his columnar arrangement, Osiander likened the total picture of Jesus supplied by all four gospels to the sound of several musical notes being played together in one chord. A harmony of the gospels may also be called a synopsis or a parallel of the gospels.

History of Harmonies While the term "harmony of the gospels" was not used until the sixteenth century, Bible scholars began efforts to compare and harmonize the four accounts of Jesus as early as the second century. At that time, Tatian, a Christian from Syria, compiled the four gospels into a single paraphrased narrative called the Diatessaron. All we know about Tatian's work is from references to it by other writers.

The Diatessaron represents one approach to harmonizing the gospels: the weaving together of material from the gospels to present one, continuous narrative of Jesus' life. Several biblical scholars in the past two hundred years have attempted similar works.

Few contemporary scholars give credence to attempts to "harmonize" either the texts or the information contained in the gospels into one, exhaustive record of Jesus. Rather, they recognize the differences and compare the variations between the gospels and use their findings as an aid for interpretation. The first great work in this second approach to harmonizing the gospels was done by Amonnius of Alexandria in the third century. Ammonius took the text of Matthew and wrote beside the text in parallel columns any passages from the other three gospels which corresponded to them. Consequently, Ammonius' work only showed the relationship between Matthew and the other three gospels. Any parallels which existed independently among the other three were ignored. In the fourth century, the church historian Eusebius developed a cross-reference system which provided a way to locate and study a passage which had parallels in any of the other gospels.

J. J. Griesbach, another German, made one of the most significant contributions to this field when he produced his Synopse, a parallel arrangement of the texts of the first three gospels, in 1776. Griesbach derived his title from the Greek word which means "to view at the same time," and, consequently gave Matthew, Mark, and Luke the designation "synoptic gospels" because of their similar perspective (in contrast to John) on the life of Jesus. Greisbach's work still serves as the basic model for scholars who make comparisons between the gospels in order to aid their interpretation of a given text.

Need for Comparative Study Even the most casual reading of the New Testament reveals the need and helpfulness of a comparative study of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Note the following:

1. Some of the material contained in one gospel is repeated almost word for word in one or both of the other gospels (the story of Jesus' disciples plucking grain on the sabbath, Mark 2:23–27, Matt. 12:1–8; Luke 6:1–5).

2. Some material, part of which appears vital to the record of Jesus' teaching, is included in only one gospel (the parable of the Prodigal Son, Luke 15:11–32).

How are these facts to be explained, and what help do their answers provide for understanding the gospels? A comparative study helps answer these questions.

The Synoptic Problem As noted above, scholars have long noted the particular similarities which abound between Matthew, Mark, and Luke. In all three gospels:

1) The appearance of John the Baptist, Jesus' baptism and temptation, and the initiation of Jesus' public ministry are linked together.

2) Jesus' ministry is confined to Galilee until He attended the Passover celebration in Jerusalem where He was crucified.

3) The story ends with His crucifixion and resurrection.

In addition to the rough similarity in their plots and similar points of view, the three gospels exhibit an undeniable interrelatedness with respect to actual content: Luke contains 50 per cent of the substance of Mark's verses, while Matthew contains a full 90 per cent of Mark. Yet, for all these similarities, the three gospels also possess significant differences. How does one explain these facts? Scholars have labeled the issues surrounding this question "the synoptic problem."

1. An Early Solution One of the earliest and most influential answers to the synoptic problem was offered by Augustine (A.D. 354–430). He decided that Matthew wrote first and that Mark produced his gospel by abridging what Matthew had written. Luke was thought to be dependent on both of them. Augustine's position was the orthodox view for over 1400 years.

2. Later Solutions During the 1800's, advances were made in archaeology and the study of ancient languages. New methods were introduced to biblical studies. These changes produced several fresh solutions to the synoptic problem.

The first "modern" solution focused on the hypothesis of a single, original gospel which is now lost to us. Some scholars believed it may have been an orally transmitted gospel which had become formalized through constant repetition, while others believed it was an actual document. In either case, those who believed this hypothesis assumed Matthew, Mark, and Luke individually selected material from this gospel as they wrote their accounts.

Other solutions to the problem centered on the belief that two documents were used by the gospel writers. Reversing the established view that Matthew was written first, proponents of the two document theory concluded that Mark was actually the first gospel and that the other two synoptic gospels were dependent upon Mark. Because of the similarities between teaching passages contained in both Matthew and Luke, these scholars also theorized that Matthew and Luke both had one other source, a collection of Jesus' teachings.

3. The Four Document Hypothesis In the early part of the twentieth century, B. H. Streeter, a British scholar, proposed the four document theory as a solution to the synoptic problem. Streeter agreed with the two document theory to a point, but thought it failed to go far enough in explaining the existence of material which was exclusive to either Matthew or Luke. Therefore, Streeter offered the hypothesis that the writers of the synoptic gospels used a total of four documents as sources for their works.

a. The Priority of Mark Like the proponents of the two document theory, Streeter believed Mark was written first and served as a source for both Matthew and Luke. Several facts led to this belief. First, all three gospels usually agree on the order in which they arrange their material. However, when they do disagree, Matthew and Mark frequently agree compared to Luke, or Luke and Mark will agree compared to Matthew. Matthew and Luke hardly ever agree compared to Mark. The same is true in word usage and sentence structure. Mark often agrees with Matthew or Luke against the other, but Matthew and Luke rarely agree against Mark. These two facts would indicate Mark was used by the other writers. A third piece of evidence indicating the priority of Mark is that statements in Mark which could offend or perplex readers are either omitted or presented in a less provocative form by the other two synoptics (compare Mark 4:38 with Matthew 8:25 and Luke 8:24). Streeter believed that when taken together, these three facts can only lead to the conclusion that Mark was written first and used by Matthew and Luke.

b. The Existence of "Q" Streeter also agreed with the proponents of the two document theory that Matthew and Luke used a common source other than Mark. German scholars gave this source the name "Q" from the German Quelle, which means "source." Its content can only be deduced by comparing passages common to Matthew and Luke but absent from Mark. Scholars agree that Q was primarily a collection of Jesus' teachings with little narrative and no mention of the crucifixion and resurrection. The most significant contribution of Q is the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5—7 and Luke 6:20–49).

c. The "M" Source Streeter believed Matthew had access to a body of material unknown to (or at least unused by) Mark and Luke. This source derives its name "M" from the initial for Matthew. Because Matthew's infancy story differs from Luke, it is considered part of the material contained in this source. M also contained many Old Testament proof texts related to Jesus' role as Messiah.

d. The "L" Source The fourth and final source in the four document hypothesis is believed to contain the material exclusive to Luke. This source contained at least an infancy story and many parables. The stories of the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son are a part of this "L" source.

The Place of Inspiration Many persons believe the discussion of "sources" used by the gospel writers impinges on the inspiration of the Scriptures. If Matthew, Mark and Luke used other documents to write their gospels, does God still have a place in their authorship? Careful thought will reveal that "sources" and inspiration are not mutually exclusive. Old Testament writers clearly show they used written sources (Josh. 10:13; 2 Sam. 1:18; 1 Kings 11:41; 2 Chron. 9:29).

Luke says, "Many have undertaken to draw up an account of the things that have been fulfilled among us, just as they were handed down to us by those who from the first were eyewitnesses and servants of the word. Therefore, since I myself have carefully investigated everything from the beginning, it seemed good also to me to write an orderly account for you . . . (Luke 1:1–3). Luke made an important admission in this statement: he indicated knowledge of other accounts of Jesus' life and message. No known theory of inspiration violates a person's humanity to the point of negating his or her memory. Therefore, the gospel authored by Luke would certainly have had something in common with the sources known to him. Additionally, no theory of inspiration states that the human authors of biblical material used information or words which, until the precise moment of writing, had been entirely unknown to the writer. To assume that inspiration cannot involve the process of helping a human being to recognize divine truth and to shape that truth into the specific message God wants communicated is to limit the abilities of God's Spirit. Inspiration of both Testaments included God's leading writers to proper sources and directing in the use of the sources.

Summary While most contemporary scholars hold to the four document theory (or a theory very similar to it), one must recognize any solution to the synoptic problem is a theory and not a proven fact. Many Bible students today are returning to the view Matthew was written first. It must be admitted that many of the answers we desire about the origins of the gospels are not available to us. Therefore, some modern questioners will find themselves extremely frustrated when they expect scientifically precise answers about documents, the original purpose of which was to be religiously reliable about the exciting good news from God through Jesus Christ. We can trust and obey the gospels without having the answer to every question about their origins and relationships.

P. Joel Snider

HARNEPHER (Här' nē phēr) Egyptian personal name meaning, "Horus (god) is good." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:36).

HARNESS KJV translation of a term meaning breastplate (1 Kings 22:34; 2 Chron. 18:33) or weapons (2 Chron. 9:24), where RSV translation myrrh and REB perfumes reflect a different Hebrew text, changed to weaponry in NRSV. See Arms and Armor.

HAROD (Hā′ rŏd) Place name meaning, "quake," "terror," or "intermittent spring." Place where God led Gideon to test his troops to reduce their numbers before fighting Midian (Judg. 7:1). It is modern ain Jalud near Gilboa, half way between Affulah and Beth Shean. It is about two miles east southeast of Jezreel. It was home for two of David's heroes (2 Sam. 23:25), though the parallel text in 1 Chronicles 11:27 reads, "Harorite," representing a copyist's confusion of two letters similar in appearance. The "fountain" of 1 Samuel 29:1 was probably Harod. Some Bible students see a reference to Judges 7:1 in Psalm 83:10 and make a slight change in the Hebrew text to read "Harod" instead of "En-dor." Compare REB.

HARODITE (hā′ rŏd īte) Citizen of Harod. See Harod.

HAROEH (Hȧ rō′ ĕh) Personal name meaning, "the seer." Descendant of Caleb in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:52). The same person is apparently called Reaiah in 1 Chronicles 4:2, an easy change to make in copying Hebrew and probably the original name. As other names in the list, this may represent a place name as well as a personal name.

HARORITE (Hā′ rō rīte) Copyist's spelling of Harodite (1 Chron. 11:27). See Harod.

HAROSHETH (Hȧ rō′ shĕth) Place name meaning, "forest land." First part of compound Hebrew place name Harosheth-hagoiim, meaning Harosheth of the Gentiles (KJV, REB, TEV) or nations. Home of Sisera, captain of the army of Jabin of Hazor (Judg. 4:2). He mustered his troops there and marched them to the river Kishon to face Barak and Deborah (v. 13). Barak chased the army back to Harosheth and killed them there (v. 16). It may be the same as Muhrashti of the Amarna letters. Its location is debated, some favoring tell el-Ama at the foot of Mount Carmel about nine miles south of Haifa near the Arab village of Haritiyeh. Others would see Haroseth as a common noun meaning, "woods" and locate it in the woods or forests of Galilee, using some evidence from the earliest Greek translation. This view would read Joshua 12:23, "king of Goiim in Galilee" (TEV, NRSV) and equate the king with the ruler of the Galilean forests.

HAROSHETH HAGGOYIM (Hȧ rō′ shĕth Hȧg goy′ ĭm) NIV spelling for Harosheth. See Harosheth.

HAROSHETH-HAGOIIM (Hȧ rō′ shĕth-hȧ gôi′ - ĭm) Full Hebrew name of Harosheth. See Harosheth.

HAROSHETH-HAGOYIM (Hȧ rō′ shĕth-hȧ goy′ - ĭm) NAS spelling of Harosheth. See Harosheth.

HARP See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

HARPOON A barbed (KJV) spear or javelin used in hunting large fish or whales, mentioned as an inadequate weapon for catching the sea monster Leviathan (Job. 41:7) and thus showing God's sovereignty over human inadequacy.

HARROW To pulverize and smooth the soil by means of a harrow, a cultivating implement with spikes, spring teeth, or disks. The modern harrow was unknown in ancient Egypt. The biblical references to harrowing or breaking clods (Job. 39:10; Isa. 28:24; Hos. 10:11) distinguish this process from plowing. Perhaps the dragging of branches to smooth the soil over seed is what is intended. The NIV replaced harrow with "till" (Job 39:10) and with "break up the ground" (Hos. 10:11).

Modern translations replace the harrow of the KJV with iron picks (NIV, NRSV); iron hoes (TEV), or sharp iron instruments (NAS) at 2 Samuel 12:31; 1 Chronicles 20:3. See Agriculture; Tools.

HARSHA (Här′ shȧ) Personal name meaning, "unable to talk, silent" or "magician, sorcerer." Clan of Temple servants who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:52). Tel-Harsha (Ezra 2:59 NAS) was one of the places where Jewish exiles lived in Babylon, so that the clan could have taken its name from the Babylonian home or given its name to the Babylonian home.

HART An adult male deer (Ps. 42:1; Isa. 35:6). See Animals.

HARUM (Hā′ rŭm) Personal name meaning, "the exalted." A member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8).

HARUMAPH (Hȧ rū′ măph) Personal name meaning, "split nose." Father of worker who helped Nehemiah rebuild the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:10).

HARUPHITE (Hȧ rū′ phīte) Clan or place name meaning, "early" or "reproach." Reading of early Hebrew scribes in 1 Chronicles 12:5. Written Hebrew text has Hariphites. Haruph is otherwise unknown. It could be a clan or a town from which Shephatiah came. Hariphite would refer to citizen or descendent of Hariph. See Hariph.

HARUZ (Hā′ rŭz) Personal name meaning, "gold" or "industrious." Maternal grandfather of Amon, king of Judah (642–640 B.C.). He was from Jotbah (2 Kings 21:19). The home may not be in Judah and thus represent foreign influence on the king. See Jotbah.

H

HARVEST The festive occasion for gathering the crops, usually marked by important religious festivals.

Among the more important crops grown were wheat, grapes, and olives. Other crops included barley, flax, and various vegetables and fruits. Crops that had been planted were harvested at various times. Olives were harvested between mid-September to mid-November by beating the trees with long sticks (Deut. 24:20; Isa. 17:6). Flax was gathered in the spring by cutting it off near the ground and then laying the stalks out to dry (Josh. 2:6). Barley was harvested from April to May; wheat from May to June; and summer fruits from August to September. The average harvesting period was set at a period of seven weeks (Lev. 23:15; Deut. 16:9).

All members of the family were expected to work during harvest (Prov. 10:5; 20:4). Significant events were connected with harvest times (Ex. 34:18–20; Deut. 16:13–16; Josh. 3:15; 1 Sam. 16:13). Harvest time became the occasion for joyful festivals (Ex. 34:22; Isa. 9:3). See Festivals.

Several laws governed the harvest. Part of the crop was not harvested (Lev. 19:9) out of concern for the poor. The firstfruits of the harvest were presented as an offering to God (Lev. 23:10).

The Old Testament provides several figurative uses of harvest. A destroyed harvest represented affliction (Job 5:5; Isa. 16:9). The "time of harvest" sometimes represented the day of destruction (Jer. 51:33; Joel 3:13). "The harvest is past" meant the appointed time was gone (Jer. 8:20).

Jesus spoke often of the harvest in connection with the harvesting of souls (Matt. 9:37; Mark 4:29; John 4:35). In the parable of the tares, Jesus related harvest to the end of the world (Matt. 13:30–39). The rhythm of harvest time (sowing and reaping) provided an illustration of a spiritual truth (Gal. 6:7–8). Gary Hardin

HARVEST, FEAST OF An alternate name for Pentecost or the Feast of Weeks (Ex. 23:16; 34:22). See Festivals; Pentecost.

HARVESTER See Occupations and Professions in the Bible.

HASADIAH (Hăs ȧ dī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is gracious." Son of Zerubbabel and descendant of David (1 Chron. 3:20). See Zerubbabel.

HASENUAH (Hăs ȩ nū' ah) KJV spelling of Hassenuah in 1 Chronicles 9:7. See Hassenuah.

HASHABIAH (Hăsh ȧ bī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has reckoned or imputed," appearing in longer and shorter Hebrew spellings. 1. Ancestor of Merari among the Levite leaders (1 Chron. 6:45). 2. Another member of the Merari priesthood (1 Chron. 9:14; Neh. 11:15). 3. Temple musician and Levite under David (1 Chron. 25:3) and leader of course of Levites (1 Chron. 25:19). 4. Family of Levites from Hebron given authority to carry out God's business in the service of the king west of the Jordan (1 Chron. 26:30). This shows the close connection between Temple and palace, religious and political activity in Israel. 5. Leader of the tribe of Levi possibly connected with taking the ill-fated census under David (1 Chron. 27:17). He may be identical with 4. above. 6. Levite leader under Josiah who provided animals for the Levites to celebrate Passover (2 Chron. 35:9). 7. Levite leader Ezra conscripted to return to Jerusalem with him from Babylonian Exile about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:19). He shared responsibility for transporting Temple treasures on the journey (vv. 24–30). Compare Nehemiah 12:24. 8. Israelite called to divorce his foreign wife to protect the people from tempation to false worship according to Greek manuscripts of Ezra 10:25 (NRSV). 9. Levite with administrative duties over city of Keilah who joined Nehemiah in repairing wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:17). He is probably the same one as the signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:11) and could be the same as both 7. and 8. above. 10. Ancestor of chief Levite in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:22). 11. Priest one generation after the return from Exile (Neh. 12:21).

HASHABNAH (Hȧ shăb' nah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "reckoning." Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:25).

HASHABNEIAH (Hăsh ȧb nēī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has imputed to me." 1. Father of man who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:10). 2. Levite who led worship in Nehemiah's covenant ceremony in which people reaffirmed their commitment to obey God (Neh. 9:5).

HASHABNIAH (Hăsh ȧb nī' ah) KJV spelling for Hashabneiah. See Hashabneiah.

HASHBADANA (Hăsh bȧ dā' na) KJV spelling of Hashbaddanah. See Hashbaddanah.

HASHBADDANAH (Hăsh băd dȧ' nah) Personal name of uncertain meaning. A member of the community leaders who stood with Ezra as he read the law to the people (Neh. 8:4). Some early translations provide evidence for a copyist having joined two names—Hashub and Baddanah into one. The precise function of these leaders is not stated.

HASHEM (Hā' shĕm) Personal name meaning, "the name." Father of some of David's heroes (1 Chron. 11:34) and said to be a Gizonite. See Gizonite. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:32 may preserve the original spelling—Jashen. See Jashen.

HASHMONAH (Hăsh mō' nah) Place name of uncertain meaning. A station in Israel's wilderness journey (Num. 33:29–30). Some Bible students identify it with Azmon (Num. 34:4). See Azmon.

HASHUB (Hăsh ŭb) KJV spelling of Hasshub in Nehemiah 3:11,23; 10:23; 11:15. See Hasshub.

HASHUBAH (Hå shū' bah) Personal name meaning, "highly treasured." Son of Zerubbabel in the royal line of David (1 Chron. 3:20).

HASHUM (Hā' shŭm) 1. Personal name meaning, "flat-nosed." Clan leader of group returning from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. Some clan members divorced their foreign wives under Ezra's leadership to rid the community of religious temptations (Ezra 10:33). 2. Community leader who stood with Ezra while he read the law to the people (Neh. 8:4). He also signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:18).

HASHUPHA KJV form of Hasupha.

HASIDEANS A militant, religious community active in the Maccabean revolt (begun 168 B.C.). The group's name derived from the Old Testament concept of the Hasidim, the "saints" or "faithful." The Pharisees and the Essenes likely derived from different streams of the Hasidean movement. See Intertestamental History and Literature; Jewish Parties.

HASMONEAN (Hăs mō nē' an) Name given to the dynasty that ruled ancient Judea for almost a century, from the Maccabean wars (that ended in approximately 145 B.C.) until Roman occupation of ancient Palestine, in 63 B.C. See Intertestamental History.

HASRAH (Hăs' rah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "lack." See Harhas.

HASSENAAH (Hăs sė nā' ah) Personal or place name perhaps meaning, "the hated one." Apparently the same name without h, the Hebrew definite article, appears as Senaah. A clan who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:35). Members of the clan helped Nehemiah rebuild the fish gate of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:3).

HASSENUAH (Hăs sė nū' ah) Personal name meaning, "the hated one." Leader in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 9:7). The name without the Hebrew article h appears in Nehemiah 11:9 as father of a leader in post-exilic Jerusalem from the tribe of Benjamin.

THE HASMONEAN DYNASTY

HASSHUB (Hăs' shŭb) Personal name meaning, "one to whom He has imputed or reckoned." 1. Man who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:23). He was apparently a Levite at the Temple (1 Chron. 9:14; Neh. 11:15). 2. Man who helped repair the bakers' ovens and apparently two parts of the wall, Nehemiah 3:23 describing the "other piece" or a "second section" (REB). He may be the one who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:23).

HASSOPHERETH (Hăs sō' phĕ rĕth) Personal name meaning, "the scribe" or "scribal office." Ezra 2:55 indicates it was either a family name of persons returning from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. or a guild of scribes who returned. The parallel passage (Neh. 7:57) omits h, the Hebrew article, from the name, possibly indicating a guild is indicated.

HASUPHA (Hă sū' phă) Personal name meaning, "quick." A clan returning with Zerubbabel from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:43).

HAT An article of clothing for the head (Dan. 3:21). The root word is similar to the Akkadian term for a helmet or cap. The NAS rendered the term cap; NIV, turban. See Cloth, Clothing.

HATACH (Hā' tăch) Personal name perhaps of Persian origin meaning, "runner." A eunuch serving King Ahasuerus in the Persian court whom the king assigned as Esther's servant (Esther 4:5–6). Esther assigned him to find why Mordecai was troubled, thus initiating Esther's appearances before the king to save her people.

HATE, HATRED A strong negative reaction, a feeling toward someone considered an enemy as well as loving someone less than another.

Hatred of Other People Hatred of other people is a common response in human relations. Conflict, jealousy, and envy often result in animosity, separation, revenge, and even murder (Gen. 26:27; 27:41; Judg. 11:7; 2 Sam. 13:15,22). Some Hebrew laws explicitly deal with hatred or favoritism (Deut. 19:11–13; 21:15–17; 22:13–21).

Hatred of other people is frequently condemned, and love toward enemies is encouraged (Lev. 19:17; Matt. 5:43–44). Hatred characterizes the old age and the sinful life (Gal. 5:19–21; Titus 3:3; 1 John 2:9,11). Although Jesus cited the attitude of hating enemies (Matt. 5:43), the Old Testament does not give an explicit command like this. The Dead Sea Scrolls, however, indicate that the Essenes at Qumran cultivated hatred for enemies, but they discouraged retaliation. Jesus stressed loving our enemies and doing good to those who hate us (Luke 6:27).

Believers can experience or practice hatred in certain contexts. For example, they are to hate whatever opposes God. Not a malicious attitude, this hate reflects agreement with God's opposition to evil (Pss. 97:10; 139:19–22; Prov. 8:13; 13:5; Amos 5:15). Although some of the psalms may sound vindictive, they leave punishment of the wicked to God's prerogative.

Jesus' disciples would have to hate their families to follow him (Luke 14:26). Hate here refers not to emotional hostility but to the conscious establishment of priorities. Hate means to love family less than one loves Jesus (Matt. 10:37). Similarly, one should hate personal life to gain eternal life (John 12:26).

Disciples can expect to be hated, just as Jesus was hated by the world (John 15:18–24; 17:14; 1 John 3:13). Hatred and persecution will also occur near the end of time (Matt. 24:9). Jesus encouraged His disciples to rejoice at this opposition (Luke 6:22–23).

Hatred of God People sometimes hate God (Ps. 68:1; 81:15) and His people. They are enemies of God who stubbornly rebel at His will and will be punished.

Divine Hatred Although God is love (1 John 4:8), some texts point to divine hatred. A holy, jealous God is displeased with human sin. For example. God hates pagan idolatry (Deut. 12:31) as well as hypocritical Hebrew worship (Isa. 1:14; Amos 5:21). God hates sin (Prov. 6:16–19; 8:13; Mal. 2:16), but He desires the sinner's repentance (Ezek. 18:32). Some texts imply God's hate is directed primarily to sinful actions rather than to sinful persons (Heb. 1:9; Rev. 2:6).

God's hate is not the vindictive, emotional hate often felt by human beings but is a strong moral reaction against sin. Divine hate is often closer to the sense of loving less. God hates Esau (Mal. 1:2–5; Rom. 9:13) stresses divine freedom in election, not an emotional reaction.

See Enemy; Love; Retaliation; Revenge; Wrath.

Warren McWilliams

HATHACH (Hā' thăch) Modern translations' spelling of Hatach. See Hatach.

HATHATH (Hā' thăth) Personal name meaning, "weakling." Son of Othniel in the family line of Caleb and the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:13).

HATIPHA (Hă tī' phă) Aramaic personal name meaning, "robbed." Clan who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:54).

HATITA (Hă tī' tă) Aramaic personal name meaning, "bored a hole" or "soft" or "festival." Clan of Temple gatekeepers who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zebrubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:42).

HATTIL (Hăt' tĭl) Personal name meaning, "talkative, babbling" or "long-eared." Clan of Temple servants who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Exra 2:57).

HATTUSH (Hăt' tŭsh) Personal name of uncertain meaning. 1. Man in David's royal line after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 3:22). He returned from Babylonian Exile with Ezra about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:2). His high place in the list may indicate that Ezra and his followers still placed hope in a Davidic monarch. 2. A priest who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:4). It is not impossible that this was the same as 1. above. 3. Priest who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Neh. 12:2). 4. Man who helped Nehemiah repair the Jerusalem walls (Neh. 3:10).

HAURAN (Hāūr' ăn) Geographical name of uncertain meaning. One of four or five provinces through which the Assyrians and their successors administered Syria. Its northern boundary was Damascus; eastern, the Jebel Druze; western, the Golan Heights; and Southern, the Yarmuk River. It was a battle ground among Assyria, Syria, Israel, Judah, and Egypt, appearing in Egyptian and Assyrian records. Ezekiel promised it would be in the restored Promised Land (Ezek. 47:16,18). The Maccabeans did control it for a time. The region was noted for its black basalt rocks, volcanoes, and rich harvests of grain.

HAVEN A place which offers safe anchorage for ships (Gen. 49:13; Ps. 107:30; Isa. 23:10 NRSV, NIV). See Fair Havens.

HAVILAH (Hăv' ĭ lah) Place name meaning, "sandy stretch." Biblical name for the sand-dominated region to the south covering what we call Arabia without necessarily designating a particular geographical or political area. The river from Eden is described as flowing "around the whole land of Havilah" (Gen. 2:11 NAS), a land noted for gold and other precious stones. The Table of Nations lists Havilah as a son of Cush or Ethiopia, showing Havilah's political ties (Gen. 10:7). Some Bible students think the name is preserved in modern Haulan in southwest Arabia. Havilah is also mentioned in the Table of Nations as a son of Joktan, the grandson of Shem (Gen. 10:29). The descendants of Ishmael, Abraham's son, lived in Havilah (Gen. 25:18). Saul defeated the Amalekites from "Havilah as you go to Shur, which is east of Egypt" (1 Sam. 15:7 NAS), a description whose meaning Bible students continue to debate. Some seek to change the Hebrew text slightly. Others look for a Havilah further north and west than Havilah is usually located. Others talk of the fluid boundaries of the area. Thus Havilah refers to an area or areas in Arabia, but the precise location is not known.

HAVOTH-JAIR (Hā' vŏth-Jā' ĭr) Place name meaning, "tents of Jair." Villages in Gilead east of the Jordan which Jair, son of Manasseh, captured (Num. 32:41). Deuteronomy 3:14 says Jair took the region of Argob and named Bashan after himself—Havoth-Jair. This passage equates land of Rephaim, Argod, Bashan, and Havoth-Jair. Compare Joshua 13:30; 1 Kings 4:13. Judges 10:3–4 concern Jair the Gileadite, a judge in Israel for 22 years. He "had thirty sons that rode on thirty ass colts, and they had thirty cities, which are called Havoth-Jair unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead." First Chronicles 2:18–23 describes the genealogy of Caleb and his father Hezron. In late life Hezron married the daughter of Machir, the father of Gilead. She bore Segub, the father of Jair, who had 23 towns in Gilead. "But Geshur and Aram took from them Havvoth-Jair, Kenath and its villages, sixty towns. All these were descendants of Machir, father of Gilead" (1 Chron. 2:23 NRSV). Apparently a group of villages east of the Jordan, perhaps varying in number at different times, were called Havoth-Jair. Israel laid claim to them and connected the name to that of different Israelite heroes at various time periods.

HAVVOTH-JAIR (Hāv' vŏth-Jā' ĭr) Modern translations' spelling of Havoth-Jair, following Hebrew text more literally. See Havoth-Jair.

HAWK See Birds.

HAZAEL (Hăz' ā ĕl) Personal name meaning, "El (a god) is seeing." A powerful and ruthless king of the Syrian city-state of Damascus during the last half of the eighth century B.C. While an officer of Ben-hadad, king of Syria, Hazael was sent to Elisha the prophet to inquire about the king's health (2 Kings 8:7–15). Elisha prophesied Hazael's future kingship and his cruel treatment of Israel. Hazael returned to his master, murdered him, and became king of Syria in 841 B.C. These events had also been forecast by the prophet Elijah (1 Kings 19:15–17). Soon after becoming king of Syria, Hazael joined in combat against both Ahaziah, king of Judah, and Joram, king of Israel (2 Kings 8:28–29; 9:14–15). He eventually extended his rule into both the Northern Kingdom of Israel (2 Kings 10:32–33; 13:1–9, 22) and the Southern Kingdom of Judah (2 Kings 12:17–18; 2 Chron. 24:23–24). He was prevented from capturing the holy city of Jerusalem only by being allowed to carry off everything that was portable and of value in the city and the Temple. The memory of Syria's ruthless power under Hazael was etched in Israel's memory. Half a century later, Amos used his name as a symbol of Syria's oppression that would be judged by God (Amos 1:4).

See Damascus; Syria. Daniel B. McGee

HAZAIAH (Hă zâ' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh sees." Member of tribe of Judah and ancestor of Jerusalem descendants in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:5).

HAZAR A Hebrew term meaning a court or enclosed space. Hazar is a common element in place names: Hazar-enan (Ezek. 47:17); Hazar-gaddah (Josh. 15:27); Hazar-shual (Josh. 15:28); Hazar-susah (Josh. 19:5). The place names perhaps recall the pitching of tents or building of homes in a circle for protection, resulting in an enclosed space. Alternately, settlements bearing the name Hazar were enclosed with walls or other defenses (compare Num. 13:28; Deut. 1:28). See Cities and Urban Life.

HAZAR-ADDAR (Hā' zär-ăd' där) Place name meaning, "threshing floor." Station on Israel's wilderness journey (Num. 34:4) near Kadesh, possibly ain Qedesh. See Addar; Kadesh.

HAZAR-ENAN (Hā' zär-ē' nan) Place name meaning, "encampment of springs." Site marking northeastern border of Promised Land (Num. 34:9–10; Ezek. 47:17). Its exact location is not known, but some locate it at Qaryatein about 70 miles east north east of Damascus.

HAZAR-ENON (Hā' zär-ē' nōn) Variant Hebrew spelling of Hazar-enan in Ezekiel 47:17 and reflected in NRSV. TEV calls the place Enon City. See Hazar-enan.

HAZAR-GADDAH (Hā' zär-găd' dah) Place name meaning, "village of good luck." Town in tribal territory of Judah of unknown location near Beersheba (Josh. 15:27).

HAZAR-HATTICON (Hā' zär-hăt' tĭ cŏn) Place name meaning, "middle village." Ezekiel named it as the border of the future Israel (47:16). Some Bible students think the original text read Hazor-enan as in 47:17; 48:1 (REB). The location is not known.

HAZAR-MAVETH (Hā' zär-mā' vĕth) Place name meaning, "encampment of death." Name in the Table of Nations for son of Joktan in the line of Eber and Shem (Gen. 10:26). It is the region of Hadramaut east of Yemen.

HAZAR-SHUAL (Hā' zär-shū' ăl) Place name meaning, "encampment of the foxes." Town near Beersheba in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:28) but allotted to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:3; 1 Chron. 4:28). Jews returning from Exile in Babylon lived there (Neh. 11:27). It may be modern khirbet el-Watan.

HAZAR-SUSAH (Hā' zär-sū' sah) Place name meaning, "encampment of a horse." Town in tribal allotment of Simeon (Josh. 19:5). As most towns of Simeon also appear in Judah's allotment (compare 19:1), many Bible students think this is another name for Sansannah in Joshua 15:31. Instead of the feminine form Susah, 1 Chronicles 4:31 has the plural form Susim. It may be located at Sabalat Abu Susein.

HAZAR-SUSIM (Hā' zär-sū' sĭm) See Hazar-susah.

HAZAZON-TAMAR (Hăz' ă zōn-tā' mär) Place name meaning, "grave dump with palms." Home of Amorites who fought eastern coalition led by Chedorlaomer (Gen. 14:7). Edom (NIV; TEV; NRSV; REB following one Hebrew manuscript; most manuscripts and early translations read, "Aram," meaning Syria, as read by NAS; KSV). captured the city and then attacked Jehoshaphat of Judah (873–848 B.C.), the text noting that Hazazon-tamar was another name for Engedi (2 Chron. 20:2). See Engedi. Some Bible students think Hazazon-tamar was actually located six miles north of Engedi at wadi Hasasa, while others point to Tamar in southern Judah, Kasr Ejuniyeh or ain Kusb, twenty miles southwest of the Dead Sea.

HAZEL KJV translation of a term meaning almond rather than hazelnut (Gen. 30:37).

HAZELELPONI (Hăz' ĕ lĕl pō' nī) Personal name meaning, "Overshadow my face." Daughter of Etam in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:3 NAS; NIV, TEV, REB, NRSV). KJV follows Hebrew text, which reads "these the father of Etam." Many Bible students think a copyist omitted something in Hebrew. They would restore the text to read, "these were the sons of Hareph: the father of Etam, ..." Since many of the other names in the list are names of towns (for example, Penuel, Bethlehem), Hazeleponi may also represent a town name. If so, its location is not known.

HAZER-HATTICON (Hā' zĕr-hăt' tĭ cŏn) NAS, NIV, NRSV spelling of Hazar-hatticon.

HAZERIM (Hă zē' rĭm) KJV interpretation and transliteration of Hebrew word meaning, "villages" or "hamlets" in Deuteronomy 2:23. Modern translations interpret as common noun meaning villages near Gaza. See Gaza.

HAZEROTH (Hă zē' rŏth) Place name meaning, "villages" or "encampments." Wilderness station on Israel's journey from Egypt (Num. 11:35). There Aaron and Miriam challenged Moses' sole authority, using his Cushite wife as an excuse (Num. 12). God punished Miriam with a hated skin disease. Deuteronomy 1:1 uses Hazeroth as one focal point to locate Moses' speech to Israel. Some geographers would locate it at moder ain Khadra, south of Ezion-geber. Some Bible students try to locate all the sites in Deuteronomy 1:1 near Moab. If they are right, the the Hazeroth mentioned there is different from the wilderness station.

HAZEZON-TAMAR (Hăz' ĕ zŏn-tā' mär) KJV spelling of Hazazon-tamar.

HAZIEL (Hā' zĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God saw." A leading Levite in the time of David (1 Chron. 23:9).

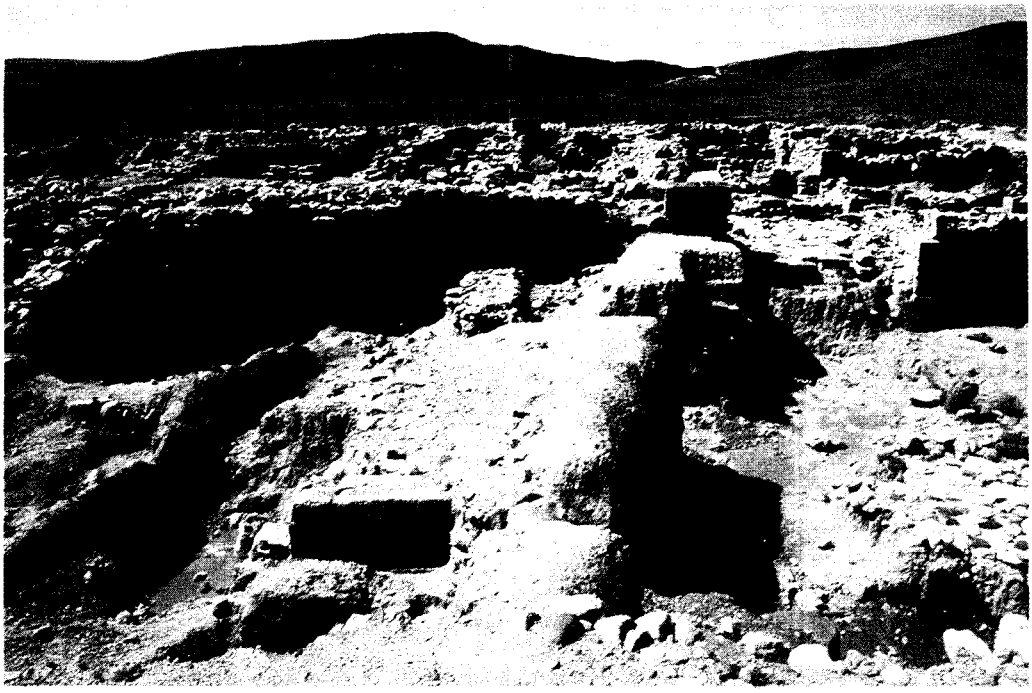
HAZO (Hā' zō) Abbreviated form of personal name Haziel meaning, "God saw." Son of Abraham's brother Nahor (Gen. 22:22). The twelve sons of Nahor apparently represented a closely-associated group of tribes. Some Bible students think Hazo represents the city of Hazu known from an Assyrian source and located at al-Hasa near the Arabian coast by Bahrein.

HAZOR (Hā' zôr) Place name meaning, "enclosed settlement." 1. Hazor was located in upper Galilee on the site now known as tell el-Qedah, ten miles north of the Sea of Galilee and five miles southwest of Lake Huleh.

The site of Hazor is composed of a 30-acre upper tell or mound rising 40 meters above the surrounding plain and a 175-acre lower enclosure which was well fortified. These dimensions make Hazor the largest city in ancient Canaan. Estimates set the population at its height at over 40,000.

The upper tell had twenty-one separate levels of occupation beginning between 2750 and 2500 B.C. and continuing down to the second century B.C. Canaanites occupied Hazor until Joshua destroyed it. The Israelites controlled it until 732 B.C. when the Assyrians captured the city. Hazor then served as a fortress for the various occupying powers until the time of the Maccabees.

The lower enclosure had five levels of occupation beginning about 1750 B.C. and continuing until Joshua destroyed it. It was never rebuilt.



Israelite storehouses dating from the ninth century B.C. at ancient Hazor in Israel.

Hazor's location was strategic both economically and militarily. It overlooked the Via Maris, the major overland trade route from Egypt to the north and east, and thus became a major trading center. It is mentioned extensively in both Egyptian and Mesopotamian records in conjunction with the other major trading cities of the day. Hazor also overlooked the Huleh Valley, a critical defense point against armies invading from the north.

Joshua 11:1–15; 12:19 relate how Jabin, king of Hazor, rallied the forces of the northern cities of Canaan against Joshua. Hazor was "the head of all those kingdoms" (Josh. 11:10), that is, it was the dominant city-state of the Canaanite kingdoms. Joshua defeated the Canaanite forces, slew the leaders, including Jabin, and burned the city of Hazor. Modern archaeology lends support to this biblical account. The size and location of the city of Hazor, as well as references to it in other ancient literature, would indicate that Hazor probably controlled a vast portion of Canaan. Yadin's excavation of Hazor indicated that the city was destroyed by fire in the second third of the thirteenth century B.C.

The next mention of Hazor in the Old Testament is troublesome. In Judges 4 we again find a Jabin as king of Canaan ruling from Hazor. His troops led by Sisera of Harosheth-hagoyim were routed by Deborah and Barak. Some Bible students see a discrepancy between this story and the story in Joshua, saying Jabin was killed generations earlier and Hazor destroyed and taken into Israelite control. The traditional solution to this discrepancy stresses that Jabin is referred to in the past tense—"who reigned in Hazor." Jabin was not alive at the time of the battle with Deborah, but Sisera had previously been commander of Jabin's forces. Hazor need not exist at this time as Sisera lived at Harosheth-hagoiim (location unknown.) A different solution on the basis of archaeological excavations claims the story concerning Jabin in Joshua is accurate. The city was destroyed by Joshua and was not rebuilt as a city until the time of Solomon. The most ancient account of the defeat of Sisera by Deborah and Barak appears in the poetic account of Judges 5, which mentions neither Jabin nor Hazor (compare 1 Sam. 12:9). This approach sees Judges 4 as a later account influenced by the story in Joshua. The straight biblical narrative seems to assume Joshua destroyed but did not occupy it, though it was allotted to Naphtali: (Josh. 19:36). The Canaanite dynasty of Jabin maintained or regained control with one or more kings named Jabin. First Kings 9:15 mentions that Solomon rebuilt the walls of Hazor, Megiddo and Gezer. Excavations have discovered conclusive evidence to support this short portion of Scripture. Two layers of Israelite occupation of Hazor between the destruction of the Canaanite city by Joshua and the rebuilding of the city by Solomon show merely semi-nomadic Israelite encampments, evidenced by tent or hut foundation rings, cooking pits, and storage pits. Apparently, no formal city or fortifications existed during the time of the Judges. The city was clearly rebuilt at the time of Solomon, evidenced by the characteristically Solomonic gate structures, that is, casemate walls and a six-chamber gatehouse (three on each side) with two square towers. Comparing the gates at Hazor with those at Gezer and Megiddo, Yadin found them to be identical in both design and dimension. The Solomonic city was much smaller than the Canaanite city. It only covered half of the upper tell.

Overview of the excavations at Tel el-Qedah (ancient Hazor) north of the Sea of Galilee.

Second Kings 15:29 records that Tiglath-pileser III, king of Assyria, captured Hazor and carried its people captive to Assyria. The evidence of this destruction is very great. No less than three feet of ashes and rubble cover the ruins left by this destruction. Prior to the Assyrian invasion, Hazor had been greatly enlarged and strengthened by King Ahab of Israel in anticipation of the attack. The city had grown to fill the entire upper tell. Its fortifications had been strengthened and enlarged, and a special water shaft and tunnel 40 meters deep was dug down to the water table to bring the water supply inside the city.

2. Town in tribal inheritance of Judah (Josh. 15:23), probably to be read with earliest Greek translation as Hazor-Ithnan. This may be modern el-Jebariyeh.

3. Town in southern part of tribal inheritance of Judah, probably to be read as Hazor-Hadattah (Josh. 15:25) with most modern translations. This may be modern el-Hudeira near the Dead Sea's southern end.

4. Town identified with Hezron (Josh. 15:25). See Hezron.

5. Town where part of tribe of Benjamin lived in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:33). This may be modern khirbet Hazzur four miles north northwest of Jerusalem.

6. Name of "kingdoms" that Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon threatened (Jer. 49:28–33). Apparently, small nomadic settlements of Arab tribes are meant. Such settlements would still have rich treasures the Babylonian king coveted.

John Brangenberg

HAZOR-HADDATTAH (Hā' zôr-hă dăt' tah) Place name meaning, "new Hazor." Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:25). Its location is not known.

HAZZEBAIM (Hăz zĕ bā' ĭm) See Pochereth-hazzebaim.

HAZZELELPONI (Hăz zĕ lĕl pō' nī) Modern translations' spelling of Hazelelponi.

HAZZOBEBAH (Hă zō bĕ' băh) The NIV rendering of the name of the son of Coz (or Kos) and grandson of Helah (1 Chron. 4:8). Other English translations use the feminine name Zobebah.

HE The fifth letter of the Hebrew alphabet; it carries the numerical value five. In Judaism he is used as an abbreviation for the divine name Yahweh (tetragrammaton). In some English versions he appears as a superscript to verses 33–40 of Psalm 119 each of which begin with this letter. See Hebrew Language; Writing.

HE ASS A male donkey. See Animals.

HEAD Literally, the uppermost part of the body considered to be the seat of life, but not the intellect and figuratively for first, top, or chief. The Jewish notion was that the heart was the center or seat of the intellect. "Head" meant the physical head of a person (Gen. 48:18; Mark 6:24) or of animals, such as a bull's head (Lev. 1:4). It was often used to represent the whole person (Acts 18:6). Achish made David "keeper of mine head," that is his bodyguard (1 Sam. 28:2).

"Head" was used frequently to refer to inanimate objects such as the summit of a mountain (Ex. 17:9), or the top of a building (Gen. 11:4). The word "head" often has the meaning of "source" or "beginning," that of rivers (Gen. 2:10), streets (Ezek. 16:25), or of periods of time (Judg. 7:19, translated here as "beginning").

In Psalms 118:22, "head of the corner" (cornerstone) refers metaphorically to a king delivered by God when others had given him up (compare Matt. 21:42; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7, where it is used in reference to the rejection of Christ). "Head" designated one in authority in the sense of the foremost person. It can mean leader, chief, or prince (Isa. 9:15), and it can have the idea of first in a series (1 Chron. 12:9). Israel was the "head" (translated "chief") nation, God's firstborn (Jer. 31:7). Damascus was the "head" (capital) of Syria (Isa. 7:8). A husband is the "head of the wife" (Eph. 5:23).

A distinctive theological use of the word "head" was seen in the New Testament concept of the "headship" of Christ. Christ is the "head" (kephalē) of His body the church; the church is His "bride" (Eph. 5:23–33). In His role as "head," Christ enables the church to grow, knits her into a unity, nourishes her by caring for each member, and gives her strength to build herself up in love (Eph. 4:15–16). Not only is Christ "head" of the church, but also He is "head" of the universe as a whole (Eph. 1:22) and of every might and power (Col. 2:10). The divine influences on the world result in a series: God is the "head" of Christ; Christ is the "head" of man; man is the "head" of the woman, and as such he is to love and care for his wife as Christ does His bride (1 Cor. 11:3). This theological use of the word may be an extension of the Old Testament use of the word "head" for the leader of the tribe or community or may be a reaction to early Gnostic tendencies. See Gnosticism.

Because the head was the seat of life, value was placed on it. Injury to it was a chief form of defeating an enemy (Ps. 68:21). As part of contemptuous insult, the soldiers struck Jesus' head with a reed and crowned Him with a crown of thorns (Mark 15:16–19). Decapitation was a further insult after the defeat. Herodias, through treachery and out of spite, had John the Baptist beheaded (Matt. 14:1–11). David cut off Goliath's head and brought it before Saul (1 Sam. 17:51). The Philistines cut off Saul's head (1 Sam. 31:9), and the sons of Rimmon cut off that of Ishbosheth (2 Sam. 4:7). Attested to in many inscriptions and portrayed on several monuments, it was common for the Babylonians, Assyrians, and the Egyptians to cut off the heads of their dead enemies slain in battle.

Conversely, blessing comes upon the head (Gen. 49:26); and, therefore, hands are laid on it (Gen. 48:17). Anointing the head with oil symbolized prosperity and joy (Ps. 23:5; Heb. 1:9). In the service for ordination of priests and dedication to priestly service, the head of the high priest was anointed with oil (Ex. 29:7; Lev. 16:32). Human sins were transferred to the animal of the sin offering by laying on of hands upon the head of the animal (Ex. 29:10,15,19).

The head is involved in several colloquial expressions. The Jew swore by his head (Matt. 5:36). Sadness or grief was shown by putting the hand on the head or putting ashes on it (2 Sam. 13:19). In other instances, grief was shown by shaving the head (Job 1:20). To "heap coals of fire upon his head" was to make one's enemy feel ashamed by returning his evil with good (Prov. 15:21–22; Rom. 12:20). Wagging the head expressed derision (Mark 15:29), but bowing the head was a sign of humility (Isa. 58:5). Finally, "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness" (Prov. 16:31).

Unidentified sculpture of a head from the Roman period in Israel.

Darlene R. Gautsch

HEAD OF THE CHURCH A title for Christ (Eph. 4:15; Col. 1:18). In Ephesians, the metaphor of Christ as head of His body, the church, is carefully developed. Headship includes the idea of Christ's authority (1:22; 5:23) and of the submission required of the church (5:24). More is in view than a statement of Christ's authority. The focus is on the character of Christ's relationship with the church. Unlike self-seeking human lords (Luke 22:25), Christ exercises His authority for the church (Eph. 1:22 NRSV, NIV), nourishing and caring for the church as one cares for one's own body (5:29). Christ's headship also points to the interrelationship of Christ and the church. The mystery of husband and wife becoming "one flesh" is applied to Christ and the church (5:31), which is "the fullness of him that filleth all in all" (1:23). In Colossians 1:18, the idea of Christ as head is again complex, including not only the idea of head as authority but of head as source (1:15–20). The church is called to follow its head and to rest secure in its relationsip with Him.

HEADBAND, HEADDRESS Headband refers to a head ornament, headdress to an ornamental head covering. Modern translations use headband to render an item of finery in Isaiah 3:18. KJV rendered the same term as caul, a loose-fitting, netted cap. KJV used headband to translate a different Hebrew term at Isaiah 3:20. Modern translations render this term sash. The same term is rendered attire (NAS, NRSV), wedding ribbons (REB), or wedding ornaments (NIV) at Jeremiah 2:32.

Modern translations use headdress for a third Hebrew term (Isa. 3:20; KJV, bonnet). Such a headdress was wound around the head like a turban (Ezek. 24:17). The same Hebrew term is used for the bridegroom's "garland" (Isa. 61:10) and for the linen turbans of the priests (Ezek. 44:18). See Cloth, Clothing.

HEADSTONE KJV term for a top stone (NAS) or capstone (NIV) at Zechariah 4:7. Zerubbabel's vision of a capstone quarried from the mountaintop was interpreted as an assurance that he would see the Temple completed (4:8–9). New Testament writers spoke of Christ as a stone rejected by the builders which has become the head of the corner (Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7). Here, head of the corner refers either to a capstone (coping), a keystone of an arch, or to a cornerstone. See Cornerstone.

HEALING, DIVINE God's work through instruments and ways He chooses to bring health to persons sick physically, emotionally, and spiritually. The Bible not only tells of people's spiritual status but is also concerned about their physical condition. This concern appears in the emphasis on healing, particularly in the ministry of Jesus and in the early church. Nearly one-fifth of the Gospels report Jesus' miracles and the discussions they occasioned. The gospels record fourteen distinct instances of physical and mental healing.

Jesus commissioned His disciples to continue His basic ministry, including healing (Matt. 10:5–10; Mark 6:7–13; Luke 9:1–6). In the Book of Acts the healing ministry continued.

Psychosomatic is a word which literally means "soul and body," referring to the close relationship of body and spirit. The soul affects the body, and the health of the soul may be an indication of the health of the body. In the Bible John wished for his friend Gaius, "above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth" (3 John 2).

Most Christians believe in healing through faith; but trying to decide what techniques are scriptural, decorous, and psychologically helpful confuses the believer. Jesus used different methods in His healing ministry. They included calling upon the faith of the person or bystanders to be healed, touching the sick person, praying, assuring forgiveness of sin, uttering commands, and using physical media. On several occasions the faith of the individual was an important factor in the healing. Speaking to the woman who was hemorrhaging Jesus said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole" (Mark 5:34; compare Matt. 9:29).

Headdresses and head coverings are still worn by the men and women of the Middle East.

The faith of other people became a factor. Jesus stated to the father of the sick boy that healing was possible if people had faith, and the man responded, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief" (Mark 9:23–24). When the centurion sought Jesus to ask for healing his servant, the Savior responded, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel. . . . And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour" (Matt. 8:10,13; compare Mark 2:5).

Christians are often confused about the ministry of healing, but these biblical teachings clearly appear:

1) The Bible clearly states that Jesus believed in healing of the body.

2) Jesus spoke of doctors in a positive way as He compared those in good health who have no need of a physician with those who do, (Matt. 9:12; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:31). God has often healed by the way He has led dedicated scientists into the discovery of body function.

3) The methods of healing Jesus used included prayer, laying on of hands, anointing with oil, and assurance of forgiveness of sins. The church continued to use these methods (Jas. 5:14–16).

4) Jesus did not use healing as a means of gaining attention but tried to keep the experience private. "Bless the Lord . . . who healeth all thy diseases" (Ps. 103:2–3). John W. Drakeford

HEALING, GIFT OF See Spiritual Gifts; Divine Healing.

HEALTH The condition of being sound in body, mind, or spirit; used especially for physical health. Neither Hebrew or Greek has a direct equivalent for our concept of health. Since a variety of terms are employed, English translations vary considerably in their use of the term health. The KJV has the most numerous references to health (17 times). Modern translations frequently replace health with other terms. The substitutions of the NRSV are typical. The most common substitution is healing for health (Prov. 3:8; 4:22; 12:18; 13:17; Isa. 58:8). Elsewhere the NRSV substituted well as a broader statement of well-being (Gen. 43:28; 2 Sam. 20:9) or help (Pss. 42:11; 43:5) and saving power (Ps. 67:2) as more specific instances of God's assistance. The NRSV substituted recovery for health at Jeremiah 33:6, though rendering the underlying Hebrew as health elsewhere (Jer. 8:22; 30:17) as in KJV. At Acts 27:34 the NRSV has "help you survive" in place of "for your health".

The health wish of 3 John 2 is typical of Hellenistic letters (Compare 2 Macc. 1:10; 3 Macc. 3:12; 7:1). The basic Greek concept of health is what is balanced. Thus the Greeks frequently used the adjective "healthy" (hygiēs) to mean rational or intelligible. The adjective is frequently translated sound in the New Testament (1 Tim. 1:10; 6:3; 2 Tim. 1:13; 4:3; Titus 1:9; 2:1,8).

See Diseases; Healing, Divine.

HEART The center of the physical, mental, and spiritual life of humans.

First, the word heart refers to the physical organ and is considered to be the center of the physical life. Eating and drinking are spoken of as strengthening the heart (Gen. 18:5; Judg. 19:5; Acts 14:17). As the center of physical life, the heart came to stand for the person as a whole.

The heart became the focus for all the vital functions of the body; including both intellectual and spiritual life. The heart and the intellect are closely connected, the heart being the seat of intelligence: "For this people's heart is waxed gross . . . lest at any time they should . . . understand with their heart, and should be converted" (Matt. 13:15). The heart is connected with thinking: As a person "thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7). To ponder something in one's heart means to consider it carefully (Luke 1:66; 2:19). "To set one's heart on" is the literal Hebrew that means to give attention to something, to worry about it (1 Sam. 9:20). To call to heart (mind) something means to remember something (Isa. 46:8). All of these are functions of the mind, but are connected with the heart in biblical language.

Closely related to the mind are acts of the will, acts resulting from a conscious or even a deliberate decision. Thus, 2 Corinthians 9:7: "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." Ananias contrived his deed of lying to the Holy Spirit in his heart (Acts 5:4). The conscious decision is made in the heart (Rom. 6:17). Connected to the will are human wishes and desires. Romans 1:24 describes how God gave them up "through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies."

Not only is the heart associated with the activities of the mind and the will, but it is also closely connected to the feelings and affections of a person. Emotions such as joy originate in the heart (Ps. 4:7; Isa 65:14). Other emotions are ascribed to the heart, especially in the Old Testament. Nabal's fear is described by the phrase: "his heart died within him" (1 Sam. 25:37; compare Ps. 143:4). Discouragement or despair is described by the phrase "heaviness in the heart" which makes it stoop (Prov. 12:25). Again, Ecclesiastes 2:20 says, "Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labor which I took under the sun." Another emotion connected with the heart is sorrow. John 16:6 says, "because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart." Proverbs 25:20, describes sorrow as having "an heavy heart." The heart is also the seat of the affection of love and its opposite, hate. In the Old Testament, for example, Israel is commanded: "You shall not hate your brother in your heart, but you shall reason with your neighbor, lest you bear sin because of him" (Lev. 19:17 RSV). A similar attitude, bitter jealousy, is described in James 3:14 as coming from the heart. On the other hand, love is based in the heart. The believer is commanded to love God "with all your heart" (Mark 12:30; compare Deut. 6:5). Paul taught that the purpose of God's command is love which comes from a "pure heart" (1 Tim. 1:5).

Finally, the heart is spoken of in Scripture as the center of the moral and spiritual life. The conscience, for instance, is associated with the heart. In fact, the Hebrew language had no word for conscience, so the word heart was often used to express this concept: "my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live" (Job 27:6). The Revised Standard Version translates the word for "heart" as "conscience" in 1 Samuel 25:31 (RSV). In the New Testament the heart is spoken of also as that which condemns us (1 John 3:19–21). All moral conditions from the highest to the lowest are said to center in the heart. Sometimes the heart is used to represent a person's true nature or character. Samson told Delilah "all his heart" (Judg. 16:17). This true nature is contrasted with the outward appearance: "man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks on the heart" (1 Sam. 16:7 RSV).

On the negative side, depravity is said to issue from the heart: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" (Jer. 17:9). Jesus said that out of the heart comes evil thoughts, murder, adultery, fornication, theft, false witness, slander (Matt. 15:19). In other words, defilement comes from within rather than from without.

Because the heart is at the root of the problem, this is the place where God does His work in the individual. For instance, the work of the law is "written in their hearts," and conscience is the proof of this (Rom. 2:15). The heart is the field where seed (the Word of God) is sown (Matt. 13:19; Luke 8:15). In addition to being the place where the natural laws of God are written, the heart is the place of renewal. Before Saul became king, God gave him a new heart (1 Sam. 10:9). God promised Israel that He would give them a new spirit within, take away their "stony heart" and give them a "heart of flesh" (Ezek. 11:19). Paul said that a person must believe in the heart to be saved, "for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness" (Rom. 10:10). (See also Mark 11:23; Heb. 3:12.)

Finally, the heart is the dwelling place of God. Two persons of the Trinity are said to reside in the heart of the believer. God has given us the "earnest of the Spirit in our hearts" (2 Cor. 1:22). Ephesians 3:17 expresses the desire that "Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." The love of God "is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Rom. 5:5).

Gerald Cowen

HEARTH A depression in a floor, sometimes bricked to retain heat (Jer. 36:23), used for cooking food (Isa. 30:14). KJV used hearth to translate four Hebrew terms. Modern translations retain hearth at Isaiah 30:14. Elsewhere modern translations substituted other terms: furnace (NRSV), oven (REB), or glowing embers (NIV) at Psalm 102:3; brazier (REB, NAS, NRSV) or firepot (NIV) at Jeremiah 36:22,23; blazing pot (NRSV), brazier (REB), or firepot (NAS, NIV) at Zechariah 12:6. The altar hearth of Ezekiel 43:15–16 refers to the upper part of the altar upon which the sacrifice was burnt (compare Lev. 6:9). See Cooking and Heating.

HEATH A shrubby, evergreen plant of the heather family, used by the KJV (Jer. 17:6; 48:6). Various translations have been offered: juniper (NAS); bush (NIV); shrub (NRSV, 17:6). At Jeremiah 40:8, the RSV and TEV follow Aquila's Greek translation in substituting wild ass for the plant name. The REB takes the Hebrew figuratively for one destitute. Arabic evidence points to the juniper (Juniperus oxycedrus and Juniperus phoenicea). See Plants in the Bible.

HEATHEN See Gentiles.

HEAVE OFFERING In Exodus 29:27–28, the portion of an offering or sacrifice that was set apart and reserved for Yahweh and for the priests. The priests were to eat their portions of the offerings of the people in a clear place. See Sacrifice and Offerings.

HEAVEN The part of God's creation above the earth and the waters including "air" and "space" and serving as home for God and His heavenly creatures. The Hebrew word shamayim is plural in form and was easily related by the common people to the word mayim, "waters." Biblical writers joined their contemporaries in describing the universe as it appeared to the human eye: heavens above, earth beneath, and waters around and beneath the earth. Heaven could be described as a partition God made to separate the rain-producing heavenly waters from the rivers, seas, and oceans below (Gen. 1:6–8). The heavenly lights—sun, moon, and stars—were installed into this partition (Gen. 1:14–18). This partition has windows or sluice gates with which God sends rain to irrigate or water the earth (Gen. 7:11). This heavenly partition God "stretched out" (Isa. 42:5; 44:24; Ps. 136:6; compare Ezek. 1:22–26; 10:1). The clouds serve a similar rain-producing function, so that KJV often translates the Hebrew word for "clouds" as "sky" (Deut. 33:26; Ps. 57:10; Isa. 45:8; Jer. 51:9; compare Ps. 36:6; 108:4).

Only God has the wisdom to "stretch out" the heaven" (Jer. 51:15). "Heaven" thus becomes the curtain of God's tent, separating His dwelling place from that of humanity on earth (Ps. 104:2; Isa. 40:22). Like a human dwelling, heaven can be described as resting on supporting pillars (Job 26:11) or on building foundations (2 Sam. 22:8; though the parallel in Ps. 18:7 applies the foundations to mountains). Just as He built the partition, so God can "rend" it or tear it apart (Isa. 64:1). Thus it does not seal God off from His creation and His people. English translations use "firmament" (KJV), "expanse" (NAS, NIV), "dome" (TEV, NRSV), or "vault" (REB) to translate the special Hebrew word describing what God created and named "Heaven" (Gen. 1:8).

Hebrew does not employ a term for "air" or "space" between heaven and earth. This is all part of heaven. Thus the Bible speaks of "birds of the heavens," though English translations often use "air" or "sky" (Deut. 4:17; Jer. 8:7; Lam. 4:19). Even Absalom hanging by his hair from a tree limb was "between heaven and earth" (2 Sam. 18:9; compare 1 Chron. 21:16; Ezek. 8:3). The heaven is the source for rain (Deut. 11:11; Ps. 148:4), dew (Gen. 27:28), frost (Job 38:29), snow (Isa. 55:10), fiery lightning (Gen. 19:24), dust (Deut. 28:24), and hail (Josh. 10:11). This is the language of human observation and description, but it is more. It is the language of faith describing God in action in and for His world (Jer. 14:22). Heaven is God's treasure chest, storing treasures such as the rain (Deut. 28:12), wind and lightning (Jer. 10:13), and snow and hail (Job 38:22). The miraculous manna came from God's heavenly storehouses for Israel in the wilderness (Ex. 16:11–15).

Heaven and earth thus comprehend the entire universe and all its constituents (Jer. 23:24), but God fills all these and more so that no one can hide from Him (compare 1 Kings 8:27–30; Isa. 66:1). Yet this One also lives in the humble, contrite heart (Isa. 57:15).

As God's dwelling place, heaven is not a divine haven where God can isolate Himself from earth. It is the divine workplace, where He sends blessings to His people (Deut. 26:15; Isa. 63:15) and punishment on His enemies (Ps. 2:4; 11:4–7). Heaven is a channel of communication between God and humans (Gen. 28:12; 2 Sam. 22:10; Neh. 9:13; Ps. 144:5).

As God's creation, the heavens praise Him and display His glory and His creativity (Ps. 19:1; 69:34) and righteousness (Ps. 50:6). Still, heaven remains a part of the created order. Unlike neighboring nations, Israel knew that heaven and the heavenly bodies were not gods and did not deserve worship (Ex. 20:4). It belonged to God (Deut. 10:14). Heaven stands as a symbol of power and unchanging, enduring existence (Ps. 89:29), but heaven is not eternal. The days come when heaven is no more (Job 14:12; Isa. 51:6). As God once spread out the heavenly tent, so He will wrap up the heavens like a scroll (Isa. 34:4). A new heaven and new earth will appear (Isa. 65:17; 66:22).

The Old Testament speaks of heaven to show the sovereignty of the Creator God and yet of the divine desire to communicate with and provide for the human creature. It holds out the tantalizing examples of men who left earth and were taken up to heaven (Gen. 5:24; 2 Kings 2:11).

New Testament In the New Testament, the primary Greek word translated "heaven" describes heaven as being above the earth, although no New Testament passage gives complete instructions regarding the location or geography of heaven. Other than Paul's reference to the three heavens (2 Cor. 12:2–4), the New Testament writers spoke of only one heaven.

The New Testament affirms that God created heaven (Acts 4:24), that heaven and earth stand under God's lordship (Matt. 11:25), and that heaven is the dwelling place of God (Matt. 6:9).

Jesus preached that the kingdom of heaven/God had dawned through His presence and ministry (Mark 1:15). By using the image of a messianic banquet, Jesus spoke of heavenly life as a time of joy, celebration, and fellowship with God (Matt. 26:29). Jesus taught that there would be no marrying or giving in marriage in heaven (Luke 20:34–36).

Christians should rejoice because their names are written in heaven (Luke 10:20). Jesus promised a heavenly home for His followers (John 14:2–3).

According to Paul, Christ is seated in heaven at the right hand of God (Eph. 1:20). Paul believed heaven is the future home of believers (2 Cor. 5:1–2). Paul referred to the hope of heaven as the hope of glory (Col. 1:27). The Holy Spirit is the pledge of the believer's participation in heaven (2 Cor. 5:5). Peter affirmed that heaven is the place where the believer's inheritance is kept with care until the revelation of the Messiah (1 Pet. 1:4).

The word "heaven" occurs more frequently in Revelation than in any other New Testament book. The Revelation addresses heaven from the standpoints of the struggle between good and evil and of God's rule from heaven. The most popular passage dealing with heaven is Revelation 21:1 to 22:5. In this passage, heaven is portrayed in three different images: (1) the tabernacle (21:1–8), (2) the city (21:9–27), and (3) the garden (22:1–5). The image of the tabernacle portrays heavenly life as perfect fellowship with God. The symbolism of the city portrays heavenly life as perfect protection. The image of the garden shows heavenly life as perfect provision.

Trent C. Butler and Gary Hardin

HEAVEN OF HEAVENS KJV designation rendered "highest heaven" by most modern translations (1 Kings 8:27; 2 Chron. 2:6; 6:18). According to an ancient understanding of the universe, above the canopy of the sky was a further canopy above which God dwelt. TEV understands "heavens of heavens" as "all (the vastness) of heaven".

HEAVENLY CITY, THE The fulfillment of the hopes of God's people for final salvation. To the ancient world cities represented ordered life, security from enemies, and material prosperity. See Cities and Urban Life. Hebrews says the city "has foundations;" its "architect and builder is God" (11:10 NAS); God has prepared it (11:16); and it is "the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem" (12:22). This city is the home to "an innumerable company of angels" (12:22), to the assembly of the firstborn (12:23; an image of believers redeemed by the death of Christ; compare Ex. 13:13–15), and to the righteous made perfect by God (12:23; perhaps the Old Testament saints). Some interpreters take these descriptions literally. The Christian goal is, however, not something that can be touched and sensed like Israel's Sinai experience (12:18). Indeed, believers have already come (12:22) to the heavenly Jerusalem, at least in part. Some interpreters thus take the Heavenly City as an image of the redeemed people of God whose "foundation" is the apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). The experience of the patriarchs whose hope lay beyond their earthly lives (Heb 11:13–16) points to a final fulfillment of salvation in heaven.

The Heavenly City of Revelation 21:9—22:7 has also been interpreted both literally and figuratively. One interpretation sees the Heavenly City suspended above the earth like a space platform. Others see an earthly city. Still others a city suspended in the air that later descends to earth. Others, pointing to the equation of the city as the bride of Christ (21:2,9), take the city as a symbol of the church. Whether understood as a literal city or as representing God's redeemed people experiencing their final salvation, the city is a place of fellowship with God (21:3,22), of God-ensured safety (21:4,25), and of God-given provision (22:1–2,5).

Chris Church

HEAVENS, NEW A technical, eschatological term referring to the final perfected state of the created universe. It often is connected with the concept of a new earth.

The promise of a re-creation of the heavens and earth arose because of human sin and God's subsequent curse (Gen. 3:17). The biblical hope for mankind is tied to the conviction that persons cannot be completely set free from the power of sin apart from the redemption of the created order—earth as well as the heavens. The idea of a renewed universe is found in many passages of the Bible (Isa. 51:16; Matt. 19:28; 24:29–31; 26:29; Mark 13:24–27,31; Acts 3:20–21; Rom. 8:19–23; 2 Cor. 5:17; Heb. 12:26–28; 2 Pet. 3:10–13). However, the phrase "new heavens" is found in only four passages (Isa. 65:17; 66:22; 2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1).

The nature of the "new heavens and earth" is variously described in the Bible. First, God is the cause of this new creation (Isa. 65:17; 66:22; Rev. 21:22). In Hebrews 12:28 the new heaven and earth are described as a "kingdom which cannot be moved." This new heaven and earth will last forever (Isa. 66:22). In 2 Peter 3:13 the new world is described as one "in which righteousness dwells" (NAS).

In Revelation, the nature of the new heaven and earth stands in marked contrast to the old heaven and earth. The Greek word translated "new" designates something which already exists, but now appears in a new way. The new world is the old world gloriously transformed. Purity (Rev. 21:27) and freedom from the wrath of God (Rev. 22:3) are marks of the new heaven and earth. Further, the new world is marked by perfect fellowship of the saints with one another and with God. God and His people dwell together in the new age (21:1,3).

Clearly, God will bring the new order into existence at the end of history. But, scholars disagree as to when this will occur within the events associated with the end times. Two main views are held. First, the new heavens and earth are created immediately after the second coming of Christ. Even among those within this camp there is disagreement. Some believe that the creation of the new heavens and earth will occur immediately after the "great white throne" judgment. Amillennialists generally hold to this theory. Some premillennialists associate the creation of the new heavens and earth with the beginning of the thousand year millennial reign of Christ. A second viewpoint commonly held by many premillennialists is that the new heaven and new earth are created at the end of the millennial reign of Christ.

See Angel; Creation; Eschatology; Heaven; Hell; Kingdom; New Jerusalem.

Paul E. Robertson

HEBER (Hē′ bĕr) Personal name meaning, "companion." 1. Grandson of Asher and great grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:17). He was the original clan ancestor of the Heberites (Num. 26:45). 2. Kenite related to family of Moses' wife (Judg. 4:11). His wife Jael killed Sisera, the Canaanite general, breaking a political alliance between Heber's clan and Jabin, Sisera's king (Judg. 4:17). This completed the great victory of Deborah and Barak over the Canaanites. 3. A member of the tribe of Judah in a Hebrew text (1 Chron. 4:18) which apparently lists two mothers of Heber, one an Egyptian. Commentators generally change the text or consider that some words have fallen out of the text as it was copied. Heber was the father of Socho and thus apparently recognized as founding ancestor of town of Socho. See Socho. 4. A member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:17). 5. A different Hebrew word lies behind Eber (1 Chron. 5:13; 8:22), which KJV spells Heber. See Eber. The Heber in Luke 3:35 (KJV) is the Eber of Genesis 11:15.

HEBERITE (Hĕb′ ĕr īte) See Heber.

HEBREW (Hē′ brēw) The language in which the canonical books of the Old Testament were written, except for the Aramaic sections in Ezra 4:8—6:18; 7:12–26; Daniel 2:4*b*—7:28; Jeremiah 10:11, and a few other words and phrases from Aramaic and other languages. The language is not called "Hebrew" in the Old Testament. Rather, it is known as "the language (literally, lip) of Canaan" (Isa. 19:18) or as "Judean" (NAS), that is the language of Judah (Neh. 13:24; Isa. 36:11). The word "Hebrew" for the language is first attested in the prologue to Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha. See Apocrypha. In the New Testament the references to the "Hebrew dialect" seem to be references to Aramaic.

Biblical or classical Hebrew belongs to the Northwest Semitic branch of Semitic languages which includes Ugaritic, Phoenician, Moabite, Edomite, and Ammonite. This linguistic group is referred to commonly as Canaanite, although some prefer not to call Ugaritic a Canaanite dialect.

Hebrew has an alphabet of twenty-two consonants. The texts were written right to left. The script was based on that of the Phoenicians, a circumstance which did not make it possible to represent or to distinguish clearly among all the consonantal sounds in current use in classical Hebrew.

The distinguishing characteristics of Hebrew are for the most part those shared by one or more of the other Semitic languages. Each root for verbs and nouns characteristically had three consonants, even in later periods when the use of four consonant roots was increased. Nouns are either masculine or feminine. They have singular, plural, or even dual forms, the dual being used for items normally found in pairs, such as eyes, ears, lips. While most nouns were derived from a verbal root, some were original nouns which gave rise to verbs (denominatives). The genitive relationship (usually expressed in English by "of") is expressed by the construct formation in which the word standing before the genitive is altered in form and pronunciation (if possible).

The Hebrew verb forms indicate person, number, and gender. There are seven verbal stems which serve to indicate types of action: simple action, active or passive; intensive action, active, passive, or reflexive; and causative action, active or passive. In classical Hebrew the isolated verb form did not indicate a tense, but rather complete or incomplete action. Thus verbs are often referred to as perfect or imperfect, there being no past, present, future, past perfect, present perfect, or future perfect. The tense can be determined only in context, and sometimes even that procedure produces uncertain results. Classical Hebrew is a verb oriented language rather than a noun oriented or abstract language. The usual word order of a sentence is verb, subject, modifiers, direct object. The language is quite concrete in expression. However, the relatively simple structure and syntax of classical Hebrew did not keep biblical writers from producing countless passages of unparalleled beauty and power.

While historical development took place in classical Hebrew from the eleventh century to the emergence of Mishnaic Hebrew, it does not seem possible to write the history of that development. It is generally agreed that the most archaic texts are poetic, such as Genesis 4:23–24; Exodus 15; Judges 5, although often it is difficult to decide what is archaic and what may be the result of an archaizing style. Books written toward the close of the Old Testament period, such as Ezra, Nehemiah, Chronicles, and Ecclesiastes, show the Hebrew language undergoing a number of significant changes due primarily to Aramaic influence. Most of the Hebrew Bible now shows a homogeneous style which was most likely due to scribes in the late pre-exilic period copying the older texts in the dialect of Jerusalem. Thus, to be able to date an extant text does not necessarily mean that one can date the material contained in the text. There is some evidence of dialectical variations in the Hebrew spoken in biblical times. For example there is the shibboleth-sibboleth incident in Judges 12:5–6. Some Bible students think many of the difficulties of the text of Hosea may be clarified by considering the Hebrew of that book as an example of northern or Israelite idiom.

Pottery handle from Lachish stamped with a Hebrew pottery seal containing a Hebrew inscription.

The growing number of Hebrew inscriptions dating from the pre-exilic age provides an important supplement to the study of classical Hebrew. These inscriptions were chiseled into stone, written on ostraca (broken pieces of pottery), or cut into seals or inscribed on jar handles and weights. Some of the most important inscriptional evidence includes the Gezer calendar (tenth century), the Hazor ostraca (ninth century), the Samaria ostraca (early eighth century), the Siloam inscription (late eighth century), Yavneh-yam ostracon (late seventh century), jar handles from Gibeon (late seventh century), the Lachish ostracon (early sixth century), and the Arad ostraca (late seventh and early sixth centuries). To these may be added the Moabite Stone (Stele of Mesha, ninth century) and the Ammonite stele (ninth century) which contain inscriptions in languages very similar to classical Hebrew. Several benefits may be gained from these and other inscriptions for the study of classical Hebrew. First, we now have available an adequate view of the development of Hebrew script and orthography from the tenth century to New Testament times. Second, it now appears that literacy was earlier and more widespread in Israel than was thought previously. Third, the addition of new words and personal names and the like have enriched our knowledge of classical Hebrew. And fourth, details of the texts add new data on matters of history, material culture, and religion.

Thomas Smothers

HEBREW (Hē′ brēw) A descendant of Eber. See Eber. It differentiates early Israelites from foreigners. After David founded the monarchy the term Hebrew seems to disappear from the Hebrew language. The designation apparently begins with Abraham (Gen. 14:13), showing that he belonged to an ethnic group distinct from the Amorites. It distinguished Joseph from the Egyptians and slaves of other ethnic identity (Gen. 39:14,17; 41:12; 43:32). Abraham's land has become the land of the Hebrews (Gen. 40:15), and his God, the God of the Hebrews (Ex. 5:3). Given the ethnic identity, special laws protected Hebrew slaves (Ex. 21:2; Deut. 15:12; compare Lev. 25:40–41; Jer. 34:8–22). After the death of Saul (1 Sam. 29), the term "Hebrew" does not appear in the historical books, pointing possibly to a distinction between Hebrew as an ethnic term and Israel and/or Judah as a religious and political term for the people of the covenant and of God's nation. See Habiru.

HEBREWS (Hē′ brēws) Nineteenth book of the New Testament, calling for faithfulness to Jesus, the perfect fulfillment of Old Testament institutions and hope.

Authorship Although Paul has traditionally been seen as the author of Hebrews, this is not a view commonly held by modern scholars. The style, vocabulary, form, content, and theology are unlike anything found in the letters of Paul. Besides this, the author describes himself as belonging to the second generation of Christians who were dependent on the eyewitnesses of the apostles (Heb. 2:3). Paul, who considered himself an eyewitness of the resurrection of Jesus (1 Cor. 15:8–11), would not describe himself in this way. Paul felt his experience with the risen Lord put him on a par with the other apostles.

Since the author is not named in the book itself, many have speculated as to who the author was. Luke, Clement of Rome, Priscilla, Barnabas, Apollos, or a Hellenist like Stephen have all been suggested. The early Church Father, Origen, was probably more correct when he said that only God knew who wrote Hebrews. Hebrews was not accepted as part of the New Testament canon in the Western church until after A.D. 367 when the Western church finally accepted the Eastern church's theory of Pauline authorship.

The Form of Hebrews Hebrews does not have the normal opening that the letters of Paul have. (Compare, for example, Rom. 1:1–7; 1 Cor. 1:1–3; 2 Cor. 1:1–2.) It does conclude like a normal letter (Heb. 13:20–25; see Letters in the Bible). Many have speculated that Hebrews was originally a sermon preached to a church in Rome (notice the reference to "hearing" and "teaching" in Heb. 5:11) and later sent to a church outside of Rome (Heb. 13:24), perhaps experiencing similar circumstances. In this case, Hebrews 1—12 would represent the original sermon, and Hebrews 13 would represent the brief note (Heb. 13:22) attached for the second congregation.

Date Many have pointed to the description of the Jewish sacrificial system in Hebrews 8—10 as evidence that Hebrews was written before the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. In actuality, the description of the sacrificial system describes the tabernacle—not the Temple—and comes from the pages of the Old Testament—not through observance of the Temple service.

Other evidence, however, does point to a time of writing before the destruction of the Temple. Hebrews 10:32–34 describes a time of persecution endured by the original recipients. The persecution seems to have only included the loss of property. These circumstances would fit the edict of Claudius in A.D. 49 banning Christians from the city of Rome. Many believers lost their property as a result. The author then warned of greater tests ahead, probably referring to the persecutions underway during the reign of Nero in A.D. 64. If this is true, the writing of Hebrews would be sometime during or just after A.D. 64.

Others see Hebrews 10:32–34 as a reference to the persecution of Nero and place the writing during a persecution assumed to have taken place during the reign of Domitian (A.D. 81–96). This seems less likely, as the severity of Nero's persecutions does not seem to be reflected in Hebrews. Hebrews 12:4 says that the readers had not experienced bloodshed. This confirms the experience of a milder form of persecution in the past (such as the one of Claudius in 49) but suggests the intensity of the persecution to come (such as the one of Nero in 64).

The Historical Situation Early Christians were often the objects of persecution. In the beginning Christians were persecuted by Jews as can be seen in Acts (for example, 4:17–18; 5:27–42; 7:54—8:1*a*). Herod Agrippa I executed James and had Peter imprisoned about A.D. 44 (Acts 12:1–5). Such persecution often resulted in the spread of the gospel (Acts 8:4–25; 11:19–26).

Revelation, 1 Peter, and possibly the Gospel of Mark were written in times of such persecution. See Persecution.

The recipients of Hebrews faced the possibility of persecution when the book was written. As was often true when Christians faced persecution, the temptation was to deny being Christians so as to avoid persecution. Some biblical scholars think the recipients of Hebrews had been converted to Christianity from Judaism and were tempted to return to their Jewish faith and the relative safety from persecution that being Jewish brought. Thus, the writer of Hebrews went to great length to demonstrate to the recipients that Jesus and the Christian faith were superior to the Jewish faith. Exactly what form of Judaism is in view in Hebrews is unsure. It included a reverence for angels, Moses, and the Levitical sacrificial system. Some feel that a form of Judaism similar to that found among the Essenes at Qumran is the most likely.

Others feel the recipients were Gentile Christians who were also tempted to deny their Christian faith to avoid persecution. The interest in the Old Testament cult is explained by the fact that the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the Hebrew Old Testament) was the Bible of the early Gentile church. The writer, in this case, was explaining the meaning of the sacrificial elements in the Old Testament for the new people of God. This same interest in the Old Testament elements of worship was strong in the second century Church Fathers, who were also Gentiles.

The Writer's Response Whether the recipients were Jewish or Gentile Christians, the writer saw a clear and present danger. The writer's response was to point to the superiority of Jesus.

Jesus is God's superior revelation (1:1–4); He is superior to the angels (1:5—2:18) and to Moses (3:1—4:13). Jesus is superior to the earthly high priest. He has a superior ministry that establishes a superior covenant that is able to bring to maturity those who have faith (4:14—10:31). As the author and finisher of the faith, Jesus is the superior model of faith (12:1–2).

Because of the superiority of Jesus, the writer exhorted the readers not to neglect such a great salvation (2:3). The readers should enter God's rest while it is still available (4:1–13); they should go on to maturity (6:1–8). Because Jesus' high priesthood is superior and because He has a superior ministry that establishes a superior covenant, the readers should draw near God's throne in confidence (10:19–25).

The writer of Hebrews also confronted directly the recipients' fear of suffering. He thought that God's children suffer because they are His children (12:7–8). Suffering functions as a discipline that leads God's children to maturity or perfection. Jesus was perfected in this way (2:10; 5:8) and was qualified to stand in God's presence in the heavenly sanctuary as High Priest (2:17–18; 5:9–10).

The readers could also be qualified to stand in God's presence by means of the discipline of suffering. God disciplines His children for their good, that they might share his holiness (12:10). Without holiness no one will see God—that is, stand in His presence (12:14). Suffering may seem harsh at the time, but "later it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness" to those who have been trained by suffering (12:11 NRSV). The "peaceful fruit of righteousness" is the peace that comes from having acquired the right and privilege to stand before God in confidence (see 10:19–25). Therefore, the writer exhorted the recipients to go to Jesus "outside the camp, bearing the disgrace he bore" (13:13 NIV).

The recipients were not alone in their suffering, however. Because Jesus has suffered as they were about to suffer and was tempted as they were being tempted, Jesus was able to help them (2:18; 4:15). Jesus could "sympathize" with the weakness that the recipients experienced when facing the prospects of suffering (4:15 NAS).

Thus, just as Jesus learned what it meant to be obedient to God through suffering (5:8), the readers were exhorted to exhibit the same kind of obedience in their suffering (10:36–39). "Shrinking back" from God in the face of suffering is a sin that God detests (3:12–19; 10:26–31). Jesus was tempted (2:18; 5:7) but did not sin (4:15). Because Jesus remained faithful and did not sin during the hour of His suffering, He became the "source of eternal salvation for all who obey him" (5:9 REB).

The writer also encouraged the recipients to remain faithful in the midst of suffering by giving them examples of others who were able to remain faithful (11:1–39). The writer reminded them of their own past faithfulness in suffering (10:32–39) and of the example of their former leaders (13:7). Those who remain obedient to God in the midst of suffering are able to do so by means of their faith, because "to have faith is to be sure of the things we hope for, to be certain of the things we cannot see" (11:1 TEV).

This is not to say, however, that the writer of Hebrews, felt that persons could, on the basis of their own obedience, qualify themselves to stand before God. Entrance before the throne of grace is permitted on the basis of the obedience and offering of Christ. Jesus is the one who sanctifies those who follow Him (2:11; 10:19–20; 13:12). To gain personal access to the throne of grace a person must obey (5:9). Just as Jesus learned what it meant to be obedient in suffering and was thereby brought to maturity, so, too, His brothers and sisters must be willing to demonstrate the same obedience.

Outline

I. Jesus Is God's Ultimate Revelation (1:1—2:4).
  A. Jesus, God in person, fulfills and surpasses the prophetic word (1:1–3).
  B. Jesus is superior to angels (1:4–14).
  C. Jesus provides salvation which we dare not ignore (2:1–4).

II. Jesus Is God's Son and Our Brother (2:5–18).
  A. The world is subjected to Jesus, the crucified Lord, who dies for us (2:5–9).
  B. Jesus is our brother and the Author of our salvation (2:10–13).
  C. Jesus died to conquer Satan and free us from the fear of death (2:14–15).
  D. Jesus, our High Priest, atoned for our sins and helps us overcome temptation (2:16–18).

III. Jesus Provides a Way of Faith that Assures and Perseveres (3:1—4:13).
  A. Believers must focus on Jesus, the High Priest, who is more faithful than Moses (3:1–6).
  B. Believers must be aware of the danger of disbelief (3:7–19).
  C. Believers must claim God's promised rest in faith (4:1–11).
  D. God, through His Word, is the only Judge (4:12–13).

IV. Jesus, the Sinless High Priest, Is the Only Source of Salvation (4:14—5:10).
  A. Through the sinless High Priest we can approach God in confidence (4:14–16).
  B. The obedient High Priest met all the qualifications and became the Source of eternal salvation (5:1–10).

V. Jesus, the Eternal High Priest, Calls His Followers to Christian Maturity (5:11—6:20).
  A. Believers need to mature in Christ (5:11—6:3).
  B. Believers must show their faith is genuine and persevere in Christ (6:4–12).
  C. God's faithful promises provide secure hope (6:13–20).

VI. Jesus, the Perfect Sacrifice, Is the Only Priest Believers Need (7:1—10:39).
  A. Jesus is the promised, permanent Priest who offers a better covenant and complete salvation (7:1–25).
  B. Jesus is the perfect Priest who meets our need (7:26–28).
  C. Jesus' ministry in the heavenly worship place is superior to all other priests (8:1–13).
  D. Jesus' sacrifice of His own blood provides eternal redemption from sin in a new covenant (9:1–22).
  E. Jesus' sacrifice was once for all and pointed to His return to bring eternal salvation (9:23–28).
  F. Jesus' sacrifice provided perfect forgiveness and made all other sacrifices unnecessary (10:1–18).
  G. Jesus' sacrifice calls for His followers to live faithfully, even under persecution (10:19–39).

VII. Jesus Inspires Us to a Life of Faith (11:1–40).
  A. Faith lays claim to the unseen realities of God and His purpose (11:1–7).
  B. Faith presses on even when some of God's promises remain unfulfilled (11:8–22).
  C. Faith risks everything for God and His purpose (11:23–31).
  D. Faith endures even when earthly deliverance does not come (11:32–40).

VIII. Jesus, the Perfect Example of Faith, Inspires Believers to Persevere (12:1–29).
  A. Jesus' example of suffering encourages perseverance in the face of difficulties (12:1–6).
  B. Suffering should be seen as the Father's discipline (12:7–13).
  C. To see Jesus, believers must live holy lives (12:14–17).
  D. Believers listen to God's warnings and worship in gratitude before the divine Judge (12:18–29).

IX. Jesus, the Unchanging Savior, Expects His Followers to Live a Life of Love (13:1–25).
  A. Christian love includes all people (13:1–3).
  B. Christian love leads to pure marriage (13:4).
  C. Christian love does not love money

(13:5–6).
D. Christian love imitates worthy leaders (13:7).
E. Christian love centers on the unchanging Christ (13:8).
F. Christian love does not follow strange teachings (13:9–10).
G. Christian love endures isolation and persecution (13:11–14).
H. Christian love praises God and shares with others (13:15–16).
I. Christian love obeys and prays for Christian leaders (13:17–19).
J. Christian love does God's will (13:20–21).

X. Conclusion (13:22–25) Phil Logan

HEBRON (Hē′ brŏn) Place name and personal name meaning "association" or "league." A major city in the hill country of Judah about nineteen miles south of Jerusalem and fifteen miles west of the Dead Sea. The region is over 3,000 feet above sea level. The surrounding area has an abundant water supply, and its rich soil is excellent for agriculture. According to archaeological research the site has been occupied almost continuously since about 3300 B.C.

After his separation from Lot, Abraham moved to Hebron. At that time the area was known as Mamre and was associated with the Amorites (Gen. 13:18; 14:13; 23:19). Abraham apparently remained at Mamre until after the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. When Sarah died, the place was called Kirjath-arba; and the population was predominantly Hittite (Gen. 23:2; Josh. 14:15; 15:54; Judg. 1:10). From them Abraham purchased a field with a burial plot inside a nearby cave. Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah were buried there (Gen. 23:19; 25:9; 35:29; 49:31; 50:13).

Four centuries later, when Moses sent the twelve spies into Canaan, the tribe of Anak lived in Hebron. According to Numbers 13:22 Hebron was "built" seven years prior to Zoan, the Egyptian city of Tanis. Archaeological evidence suggests that the reference was to Tanis' establishment as the Hyksos capital around 1725 B.C. and not its beginning. Indeed both cities already were inhabited long before 2000 B.C. Therefore, the date may indicate that it was rebuilt by the Hyksos at that time, or it may specify when Hebron became a Canaanite city. After the Israelite conquest of Canaan, Hebron was given to Caleb (Josh. 14:9–13). It also became a city of refuge (Josh. 20:7). Later, Samson put the gates of Gaza on a hill outside of Hebron (Judg. 16:3).

After the death of Saul, David settled in the city (2 Sam. 2:3) and made it his capital during the seven years he ruled only Judah (1 Kings 2:11). His son, Absalom, launched an abortive revolt against David from Hebron (2 Sam. 15:10). Between 922 and 915 B.C. Rehoboam fortified the city as a part of Judah's defense network (2 Chron. 11:5–10). According to inscriptions found on pottery fragments, royal pottery was made in the city between 800 and 700 B.C.

The mosque of the patriarchs at Hebron built over the traditional site of the Cave of Machpelah.

When the Babylonians destroyed Jerusalem in 587 B.C., the Edomites captured Hebron. It was not recaptured until Judas Maccabeus sacked the city in 164 B.C. Although Herod the Great erected pretentious structures there, no mention of the city is made in the New Testament. The city was raided by both Jewish revolutionaries and Roman legions in A.D. 68 during the Jewish Revolt.

Two individuals in the Old Testament also were named Hebron. The first was a Levite (Ex. 6:18; Num. 3:19; 1 Chron. 6:2,18; 23:12). The second is listetd in the Calebite genealogy (1 Chron. 2:42–43).

See City of Refuge; Machpelah; Mamre.

LeBron Matthews

HEBRONITE (Hē′ brŏn īte) Citizen of Hebron. See Hebron.

HEDGE A boundary formed by a dense row of usually thorny shrubs. In ancient Palestine hedges served to protect vineyards from damage by animals or intruders (Ps. 80:12–13; Isa. 5:5). To put a hedge around someone means to protect (Job 1:10). To hedge in means to hem in or obstruct (Job 3:23; Lam. 3:7; Hos. 2:6).

Stone fences on the island of Patmos with portions covered with thorny briars for added protection.

HEDGEHOG NAS, NRSV translation of the Hebrew quippod, a term of uncertain meaning (Isa. 14:23; 34:11; Zeph. 2:14). The term either refers to the hedgehog (or porcupine) or else to a type of bird. The decision of the NAS and RSV translators was based on the supposed Hebrew root qpd (meaning to roll up, which is what hedgehogs do when frightened) and on cognate Arabic and Syriac words referring to hedgehogs and porcupines. Other English versions follow the KJV in seeing a reference to a type of bird. Context favors a reference to a bird. Various identitites of the bird have been proposed: bittern, a nocturnal heron (KJV); owl, screech owl (NIV); owl (TEV); bustard, a game bird (REB). See Animals; Bittern.

HEEL, LIFTED HIS To lift one's heel against someone is to turn one's back and join rank with the enemies. Jesus applied the expression to Judas, who accepted Jesus' hospitality but then plotted His arrest (John 13:18).

HEGAI (Hē′ gâi) Persian name of unknown meaning. Eunuch in charge of King Ahasuerus' harem who befriended Esther (Esther 2:8–9,15).

HEGE (Hē′ gē) KJV spelling of Hegai in Esther 2:3 based on variant spelling in Hebrew text.

HEGLAM (Hĕg′ lam) NRSV interpretation of Hebrew text in 1 Chronicles 8:7, taking as a proper name giving a second name to Gera what other translations translate as "who deported them."

HEIFER A young cow, especially one that has not yet calved. Heifers were used for plowing (Deut. 21:3; Judg. 14:18) and for threshing grain (Hos. 10:11). Heifers were valued for milk (Isa. 7:21) and were used as sacrificial animals (1 Sam. 16:2). Heifers (or cows) were used in three different rites: to ratify a covenant (Gen. 15:9); to remove the guilt associated with a murder by an unknown person (Deut. 21:1–9); and to remove the uncleanness associated with contact with a corpse (Num. 19:1–10). The Hebrew term for the red "heifer" of Numbers 19 is the common term for cow.

Samson characterized scheming with his wife as "plowing with my heifer" (Judg. 14:18). One of David's wives (2 Sam. 3:5) was named Eglah (heifer). The heifer was used as a symbol for the splendor of Egypt (Jer. 46:20) and of Babylon (50:11). Hosea 10:11 pictures obedient Ephraim as a trained heifer. In contrast, disobedient Israel is a stubborn cow.

HELAH (Hē′ läh) Personal name meaning "jewelry for the neck." Wife of Ashur in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:5,7).

HELAM (Hē′ lam) Place name meaning "their army." The earliest Greek translation of Ezekiel 47:16 apparently locates it between Damascus and Hamath in Syria. First Maccabees 5:26 seems to indicate a place in the northern part of the territory east of the Jordan. Helam is the region, rather than a city, where David defeated the army of Hadadezer and thus gained control of Syria (2 Sam. 10:15–19).

HELBAH (Hĕl′ bah) Place name meaning "forest." City in tribal territory of Asher which Asher could not drive out (Judg. 1:31). Some have seen this as an inadvertant copying of Ahlab. Most identify Helbah with Mahalib, mentioned in Assyrian monuments. It is four miles northeast of Tyre. See Mahalab.

HELBON (Hĕl′ bŏn) Place name meaning "forest." City known for its trade in wine mentioned in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre (Ezek. 27:18). It is modern Halbun about eleven miles north of Damascus.

HELDAI (Hĕl′ dā ī) Personal name meaning, "mole." 1. Officer in charge of David's army for the twelfth month of the year (1 Chron. 27:15). He is apparently the same as Heled, David's military hero (1 Chron. 11:30), called Haleb in 2 Samuel 23:29. 2. Man who returned from Exile in Babylon, apparently with a gift of silver and gold, which God told Zechariah to take and have made into a crown for Joshua, the high priest (Zech. 6:10). Verse 14 calls him Helem, which probably represents a copying change. Some students think Heldai was a nickname and Helem the official name. The earliest Greek translation took the names in this verse as common nouns rather than as proper names, translating Heldai as "the rulers."

HELEB (Hē′ lĕb) Personal name meaning, "fat" or "the best." One of David's military heroes (2 Sam. 23:29), probably a copyist's change from Heled in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 11:30), Heled also appearing in many manuscripts of 2 Samuel. See Heldai.

HELECH (Hē′ lĕch) Transliteration of Hebrew noun in NRSV, NIV which KJV, TEV, NAS interpret as meaning "your army." REB interprets Helech with many modern Bible students and reference books to refer to Cilicia. The precise meaning in the context is not known. Ezekiel described the good days of Tyre as having its massive city walls protected by foreign soldiers, but the precise home of these soldiers is not certain (Ezek. 27:11).

HELED (Hē′ lĕd) Personal name meaning, "life." See Heldai; Heleb; Helem.

HELEK (Hē′ lĕk) Personal name meaning, "portion." Son of Gilead from the tribe of Manasseh and original clan ancestor of the Helekites (Num. 26:30). The clan received an allotment in the tribe's share of the Promised Land (Josh. 17:2).

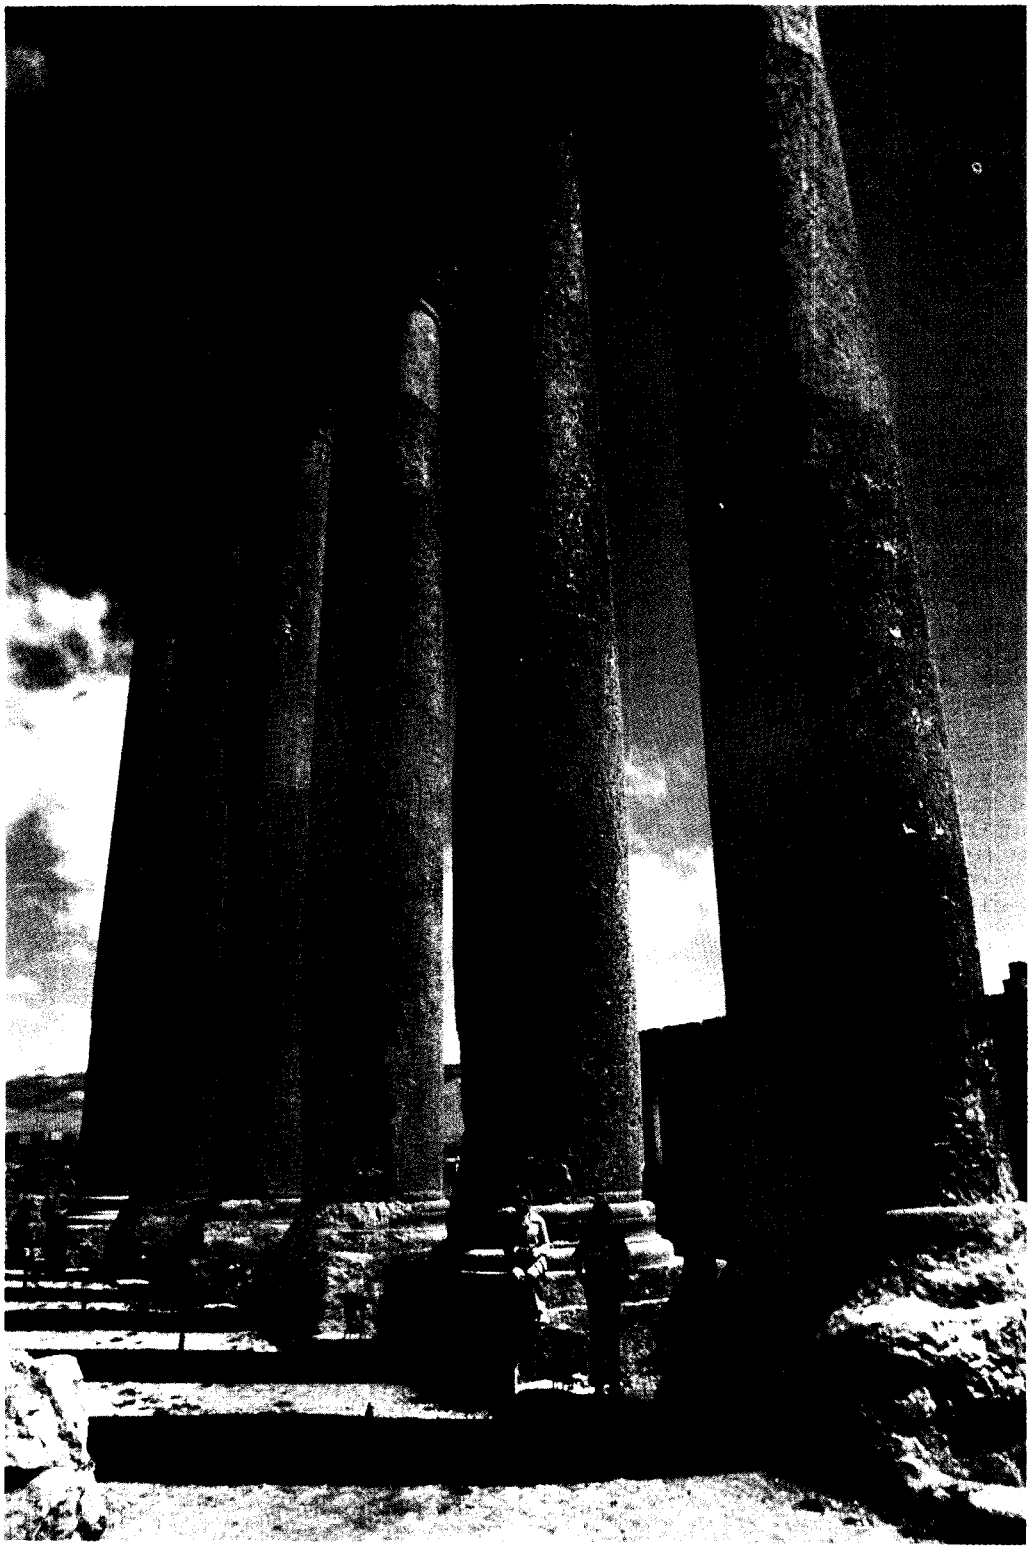
HELEKITE (Hē′ lĕk īte) Member of clan of Helek. See Helek.

HELEM (Hē′ lĕm) Personal name meaning, "beat, strike." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:35), probably the same name with a copying change as Hotham (v. 32). The same English spelling is derived from a different Hebrew word meaning, "power." The name appears in Zechariah 6:14 as a variant to Heldai in 6:10. See Heldai.

HELEPH (Hē′ lĕph) Place name meaning, "replacement settlement" or "settlement of reeds." Border city of the tribal allotment of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33). It is often identified with khirbet Arbathah just northeast of Mount Tabor, but some Bible students think this location is too far south. Others think Heleph represents the southern border of Naphtali.

HELEZ (Hē′ lĕz) Personal name perhaps meaning, "ready for battle." 1. David's military hero (2 Sam. 23:26) in charge of the army for the seventh month (1 Chron. 27:10). 2. Member of the family of Caleb and Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:39).

HELI (Hē′ lī) Hebrew personal name meaning, "high." The son of Matthat and father of Joseph, Jesus' earthly father (Luke 3:23–24). His relationship to Jesus is variously explained by Bible students in light of Matthew 1:16 which makes Joseph's father to be Jacob. He has been seen as the father of Joseph, a more remote ancestor of Joseph, or an ancestor of Mary. Either Jacob and Heli are variant names of the same person, "son of" means "descendant of" as in other genealogies, or Luke preserved the genealogy of Mary rather than of Joseph. A totally satisfactory answer to the question has not been found. The name probably represents a Greek form of the Hebrew Eli (NAS).



HELIOPOLIS (Hē lĭ ŏp′ o lĭs) 1. Greek name for Egyptian city of On, meaning "city of the sun" or Beth Shemesh in Hebrew. See On. 2. Ancient city located in the Beqaa Valley of Lebanon. Although its Greek designation is Heliopolis ("City of the Sun"), it is more widely known by the name Baalbek ("Lord of the Valley"). Baalbek was an important city in early times, but declined through both the Hellenistic period and the early part of the Roman era. During the days of the later

View of the magnificent architectural ruins at ancient Baalbek (Heliopolis).

Columns of the temple of Jupiter at Baalbek in Lebanon.

H

Roman Empire, its influence grew as a center for the cult worship of Jupiter, Mercury, and Venus (which was based upon an older cult worship of the Semitic gods Hadad, Atargatis, and Baal). Impressive ruins have been excavated at Baalbek including a temple to Jupiter, a temple to Baachus, and one to Venus.

HELKAI (Hĕl′ kā ī) Personal name meaning, "my portion." Priest when Joiakim was high priest one generation after the return from the Exile under Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:15).

HELKATH (Hĕl′ kăth) Place name meaning, "flat place." Border town in the tribal allotment of Asher (Josh. 19:25) given to the Levites (Josh. 21:31). It is called Hukok in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 6:75). It is either modern tell Qassis on the west bank of the Kishon River or tell tel-Harbaj just south of Acco.

HELKATH-HAZZURIM (Hĕl′ kăth-hăz zū′ rĭm) Place name meaning, "field of flint stones" or "field of battle." Site of "play" (2 Sam. 2:14) battle between young warriors of Saul and those of David leading to defeat of Ish-bosheth's army (2 Sam. 2:12–17). The somewhat obscure Hebrew play on words to name the field near Gibeon has led to numerous translation attempts. REB reads, "Field of Blades."

HELL The abode of the dead especially as a place of eternal punishment for unbelievers. Hell is an Anglo-Saxon word used to translate one Hebrew word and three Greek words in the King James Version of the Old and New Testaments. The Hebrew word that "hell" translated was Sheol. (Compare NAS). The word Sheol occurs sixty-five times in the Hebrew Bible. The King James Version translates thirty-one of the occurrences as "hell"; another thirty-one occurrences as "grave"; and three occurrences as "pit" (Num. 16:30,33; Job 17:16). The Revised Standard Version never uses "hell" to translate Sheol. It does use "grave" one time as a translation of Sheol (Song of Sol. 8:6). Sixty-four times it simply transliterates the word as Sheol. NAS always uses Sheol, while NIV intentionally avoids Sheol, using grave.

Sheol is a Hebrew word that has taken on the properties of a proper name. The Old Testament uses the word to refer to a place in the depths of the earth. The expressions "go down" or "brought down" are used twenty times in connection with Sheol. The "depths of Sheol" are mentioned six times (Deut. 32:22; Ps. 86:13; Prov. 9:18; 15:24; Isa. 7:11; 14:15). Four times Sheol is described as the fartherest point from heaven (Job 11:8; Ps. 139:8; Isa. 7:11; Amos 9:2). Often Sheol is parallel with the "pit" (Job 17:13–14; 33:18; Ps. 30:3; 88:3–4; Prov. 1:12; Isa. 14:15; 38:18; Ezek. 31:14–17). Nine times it is parallel with death (2 Sam. 22:6; Ps. 18:4–5; 49:14; 89:48; 116:3; Prov. 5:5; Isa. 28:15,18; Hos. 13:14; Hab. 2:5). Sheol is described in terms of overwhelming floods, water, or waves (Jonah 2:2–6). Sometimes, Sheol is pictured as a hunter setting snares for its victim, binding them with cords, snatching them from the land of the living (2 Sam 22:6; Job 24:19; Ps. 116:3); Sheol is a prison with bars, a place of no return (Job 7:9; 10:21; 16:22; 21:13; Ps. 49:14; Isa. 38:10). People could go to Sheol alive (Num. 16:30,33; Ps. 55:15; Prov. 1:12). With rare exceptions, such as Elijah (2 Kings 2:1–12), all people were believed to go to Sheol when they die (Job 3:11–19; Ps. 89:48).

The three Greek words often translated "hell" are hades, gehenna, and tartaroō. Hades was the name of the Greek god of the underworld and the name of the underworld itself. The Septuagint—the earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament—used hades to translate the Hebrew word Sheol. Whereas in the Old Testament, the distinction in the fates of the righteous and the wicked was not always clear, in the New Testament hades refers to a place of torment opposed to heaven as the place of Abraham's bosom (Luke 16:23; Acts 2:27,31). In Matt. 16:18 hades is not simply a place of the dead but represents the power of the underworld. Jesus said the gates of hades would not prevail against His church.

Gehenna is the Greek form of two Hebrew words ge hinnom meaning "valley of Hinnom." The term originally referred to a ravine on the south side of Jerusalem where pagan deities were worshiped (2 Kings 23:10; Jer. 7:32; 2 Chron. 28:3; 33:6). It became a garbage dump and a place of abomination where fire burned continuously (2 Kings 23;10; compare Matt. 18:9; Mark 9:43,45,47; Jas. 3:6). Gehenna became synonymous with "a place of burning."

One time the Greek word tartaroō "cast into hell" appears in the New Testament (2 Pet. 2:4). The word appears in classical Greek to refer to a subterranean region, doleful and dark, regarded by the ancient Greeks as the abode of the wicked dead. It was thought of as a place of punishment. In the sole use of the word in the New Testament it refers to the place of punishment for rebellious angels.

Punishment for sin is taught in the Old Testament, but it is mainly punishment in this life. The New Testament teaches the idea of punishment for sin before and after death. The expressions "the lake of fire" and "second death" indicate the awfulness of the fate of the impenitent. Some insist that the fire spoken of must be literal fire, so to interpret the language as figurative means to do away with the reality of future punishment. One can, however, maintain this position only if they see no reality expressed by a figure of speech. Jesus spoke of a place of punishment as "outer darkness" (Matt. 8:12; 22:13; 25:30). Can a place have both literal fire and literal darkness? What reason does one have for taking one expression as literal and not taking taking the other as literal? Literal fire would destroy a body cast into it.

Language about hell seeks to describe for humans the most awful punishment human language can describe to warn unbelievers before it is too late. Earthly experience would lead us to believe that the nature of punishment will fit the nature of the sin. Certainly, no one wants to suffer the punishment of hell, and through God's grace the way for all is open to avoid hell and know the blessings of eternal life through Christ. See Gehenna; Hades; Heaven; Salvation; Sheol.

Ralph L. Smith

HELLENISM The impact of Greek culture on the civilizations of the ancient world located in the Mediterranean basin. Aspects of Hellenism include professional contacts, mixed populations, adoption of Greek culture, religion and language, and the assimilation of Orientalized Greeks and Hellenized Orientals.

The history of contact of Greek-speaking peoples with the Eastern Mediterranean is long. Mycenaean pottery dating from before 1400 B.C. has been found on both sides of the Jordan. David employed mercenaries from Crete (2 Sam. 8:18).

Colossal statue of the Roman god Mars (Greek: Ares). Dual Graeco-Roman gods was a mark of Hellenism.

The Temple of Apollo at the international Hellenistic shrine of Delphi.

Contacts increased dramatically after Alexander the Great conquered Palestine in 332 or 331 B.C.

Koine Beginning about 300 B.C., Jews wrote in Greek both in the diaspora and in Palestine. The writer might be a Hellenized aristocrat, diplomat, mercenary, merchant, or any Jew living in a Greek-speaking area of the diaspora. Beginning about 200 B.C., Jewish worship was conducted in Greek in Egypt. The use of the Greek term synagogue (assembly) for a Jewish congregation or place of worship is a continuing witness to Hellenization. The ready acceptance of Greek by Egyptian Jews is evidenced by the surviving synagogue inscriptions from Ptolemaic Egypt, all of which are in Greek. The Zenon correspondence (259 B.C.) demonstrates that Greek was the language of state business in Palestine under the Ptolomies.

Greek Names By 300 B.C. Egyptian Jews were using adopted names derived from names of Greek gods: Apollonius; Artimidorus; Diosdotus (gift of Zeus); Dionysius; Heracleia; and Hermaios. Before 200 B.C. the author of the "Epistle" of Aristeas assumed that the majority of the elders who came to Alexandria from Jerusalem to translate the Hebrew Bible into Greek, producing eventually the Septuagint, would have had Greek names and access to Greek education. Greek names are found even among "conservative" Palestinian Jews before 100 B.C.

The envoys Judas Maccabee sent to Rome had Greek names: Eupolemus and Jason (1 Macc. 8:17; 2 Macc. 4:11). Both the envoys Jonathan Maccabee sent to Rome and Sparta and their fathers had Greek names: Numensius, son of Antiochus, and Antipater, son of Jason (1 Macc 12:16; 14:22).

Bilingual Palestine Part of the success of Jewish diplomatic missions to Rome and Sparta before 100 B.C. stemmed from the ability to speak and write proper koine Greek (2 Macc. 4:5–6; 14:4–5; 1 Macc. 8; 12:1; 14:16). The high social standing of Egyptian Jews in relation to native Egyptians hinged in large part on the Jewish adoption of the Greek language. (Compare Acts 21:37–38 where the commander of the Jerusalem cohort mistook Paul for an Egyptian agitator until he learned he spoke Greek.) Jesus, like most Galileans of His day, would have understood Greek. Jesus visited the Hellenistic cities of the Decapolis (Mark 5:20; 7:31). One of these cities, Gadara, was home to the famous Cynic philosopher Menippus and the "Syrian" epigrammatist Meleager (about 60 B.C.). Damascus was home to the well-known historian and peripatetic philosopher Nicholas.

Literature In contrast to the sparse Hebrew literature which has survived from the time before A.D. 100, a remarkably large body of Jewish literature has survived in Greek. The most important representative of this literature is the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Old Testament, which served as the Bible of the early church. Extensive works of both Philo and Josephus survive as well as numerous pseudepigrapha. Even the Qumran texts written in Hebrew witness the influence of Greek ideas.

Politics The polis (city-state with a Greek-type constitution) was one of the principle factors in the spread of Hellenism. The polis was composed of free citizens with some degree of political and economic autonomy. The polis made use of Greek forms of government: the boule (senate), the demos (citizens' assembly), and the archontes (elected rulers).

Bust of Demosthenes (384-322 B.C.), famous Greek philosopher absorbed into Graeco-Roman thought.

The Seleucid king Antiochus refounded Jerusalem as "Antioch" in Judea with the status of polis in 175 B.C. The Sanhedrin served as the city's boule; the Mosaic law, as its constitution. The Hellenized high priest Jason displaced his more conservative brother Onias III and functioned as archon. Jason constructed a gymnasium and introduced Greek secondary education, training the elite youths as ephebes or citizens in training. Jason was succeeded as high priest by the even more radical Hellenists: Menelaus, Lysimachus, and Simon. Resistance to Hellenism resulted in Antiocus' reducing Jerusalem's status to katoikia (garrison town), with Syrian troops stationed in the city in 169 or 168 B.C.

The Maccabean revolt was in part a class struggle of the pious poor who clung to the traditional ways and the aristocracy who embraced Hellenism as a means to get ahead. Though the Maccabees succeeded in gaining political autonomy for Palestine, they were unable to stem the tide of Hellenism. The new rulers (called Hasmoneans) grew increasingly Hellenized. Jonathan was recognized by the Seleucids as king and high priest (150 B.C.) becoming in effect a Seleucid official. The Maccabees opposed the religious syncretism of Hellenism but succumbed to the broader culture of Hellenism.

The following were founded or refounded as Hellenistic cities in Palestine by 200 B.C.: Philoteria on Gennesaret (Bet Yerah); Scythopolis (Beth Shean); Berenice (Pella); Arsinoe (Damascus); Philadelphia (Rabbat-Ammon); Heliopolis (Baalbek). Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) established Caesarea Maritima, Hebron, and Herodium. He began rebuilding of the Jerusalem Temple in Hellenistic style. Herod Antipas (4 B.C.–A.D. 39) founded Tiberias on the sea of Galilee. John's Gospel refers to the sea as "the Sea of Tiberias" (6:1; 21:1). Herod Philip raised Beth-saida to city-state status, renaming it Julias after the wife of Emperor Tiberias.

Religion/Philosophy Perhaps the most striking characteristic of the Hellenistic religion was its syncretism. The gods of the Middle East were identified with the ancient Greek and Roman gods. Hellenistic religion was characterized by a new emphasis on the individual. Religious fraternities dedicated to the worship of eastern gods offered individuals immortality. Hellenistic religion was also characterized by the public worship of the older gods of the city states and the new ruler cults. In the case of the ruler cult, the practice spread from east to west as rulers saw the unifying possibilities of a state religion.

Synagogue worship in contrast to Temple worship was purely verbal, consisting in prayer, singing, the reading of the law, and its interpretation. Such worship gave the appearance of being a philosophy to pagan Greeks. This identification of Judaism with philosophy was likewise encouraged by the strong ethical emphasis of Judaism. See Intertestamental History and Literature.

Chris Church

HELLENISTIC (Hĕl lẽ nĭs' tĭc) Word derived from Greek, hellas, the Greek name for Greece. It describes customs or features of the Greek culture. Hellenistic people are those speaking Greek and following Greek culture even though they are not necessarily Greek by race. In the New Testament differences arose in the early church between those Christians more closely tied to Hebrew and Jewish practices and culture and those identifying themselves more closely with Greek language and culture (Acts 6:1; 9:29).

Hellenistic tombs outside the west gate at Hierapolis.

HELLENISTS (Hĕl' lẽ nĭsts) See Hellenistic.

HELMET See Arms and Armor.

HELON (Hē' lŏn) Personal name meaning, "powerful." Father of the leader of the tribe of Zebulun under Moses (Num. 1:9).

HELP, HELPS In addition to the usual sense of assistance, the KJV used helps in two technical senses: for equipment used to secure a ship in storm (Acts 27:17) and for a gift of ministry (1 Cor. 12:28). Modern translations understand the "helps" of Acts 27 in various senses: ropes (NIV, TEV); supporting cables (NAS); tackle (REB); or generally as measures to undergird the ship (NRSV). The helps of 1 Corinthians refers to the ability to offer help or assistance. In the Septuagint, God is known as the help of those who lack strength and live in poverty (Sirach 11:12). It has been suggested that Paul refers to the ministry of the deacons who care for the poor and the sick. A general reference to all those who demonstrate love in their dealings with others is possible.

HELPER NAS translation of parakletos, a distinctive title for the Holy Spirit in the Gospel of John (14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7). Other versions translate the term "Comforter" (KJV), "Advocate" (REB), or "Counselor" (RSV, NIV). Because parakletos is difficult to translate with any single word, some interpreters opt for making "Paraclete" an English word and allowing the relevant Johannine passages to provide its meaning.

The Helper, who could not come until Jesus departed (John 16:7), functions as the abiding presence of Jesus among His disciples (John 14:16–18). Nearly everything said of the Helper is also said of Jesus in the Gospel, and the Helper actually comes as "another parakletos" (John 14:16), implying that Jesus had been the first (1 John 2:1).

Jesus described the role of the Helper primarily with verbs of speaking. The Helper would be sent by the Father to "teach" the disciples and to bring to remembrance all Jesus "said" to them (John 14:26; 16:14–15). Like Jesus, the Helper was "sent" to "bear witness" (John 15:26–27). The Helper's function in relation to the world involves "reproving" it concerning sin, righteousness, and judgment (John 16:8). The Helper would also "guide" Jesus' disciples into all truth by "speaking" what He hears and "showing" what is to come (John 16:13). By so doing He would "glorify" Jesus (John 16:14). See Advocate; Comforter; Counselor; Holy Spirit; Paraclete.

R. Robert Creech

HELPMEET KJV term for woman as a helper precisely adapted to man (Gen. 2:18). Modern translations supply various equivalents: a helper suitable for him (NAS, NIV); a helper as his partner (NRSV); a suitable companion for him (TEV). The noun translated helper or partner does not suggest subordination. Elsewhere the term is used of God as Helper (1 Chron. 12:18; Pss. 30:10; 54:4; 121:1) or of military allies (Jer. 47:4; Nah. 3:9). The adjective "meet" (translated suitable, comparable, or corresponding) stresses that woman, unlike the animals (Gen. 2:20), can be truly one with man (2:24), that is, enjoy full fellowship and partnership in humanity's God-given task (Gen. 1:27–28).

HELVE KJV term used for the handle of an ax (Deut. 19:5).

HEM The border of a cloth article doubled back and stitched down to prevent the cloth from unraveling. Biblical references to the "hem" of a garment refer more generally to its edge or border. The border of Aaron's high priestly robe was decorated with blue, purple, and scarlet pomegranates and gold bells (Ex. 28:31–35; 39:22–26). Sometimes the woof (the verticle filling threads in woven cloth) were left long to prevent unraveling. The result of these long threads was a fringed border. The fringe on the corners of their garments was to remind the Israelites of the law of God (Num. 15:38–39). The fringed "hem" of Jesus' garment conveyed healing power to those who in faith touched it (Matt. 9:20; 14:36; Mark 6:56; Luke 8:44).

HEMAM (Hē′ măm) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Descendant of Seir (Gen. 36:22). The parallel passage spells the name Homam (1 Chron. 1:39).

HEMAN (Hē′ măn) Personal name meaning, "faithful." 1. In Genesis 36:22, one of the sons of Lotan mentioned among the descendants of Esau. KJV renders the name Hemam. 2. In 1 Kings 4:31, a notable sage to whose wisdom that of Solomon is compared. 3. In 1 Chronicles 6:33, the son of Joel, a Kohathite. He was one of the Temple singers under David and Solomon. In 1 Chronicles 25:5, he is called a seer. Elsewhere in that chapter he is said to have prophesied using musical instruments. He may be the same as the Heman mentioned in 1 Kings 4:31. The psalm title attributes Psalm 88 to Heman.

HEMATH (Hē′ măth) KJV spelling of Hammath and Hamath. See Hammath; Hamath.

HEMDAN (Hĕm′ dăn) Personal name meaning, "beauty, charm." Descendant of Seir and thus an Edomite (Gen. 36:26). The parallel passage spells the name Hamran (1 Chron. 1:41 NAS).

HEMLOCK KJV translation of two Hebrew terms. Modern translations agree in translating that in Hosea 10:4 as poisonous weed(s). The term at Amos 6:12 is translated as bitterness (NAS margins, NIV); poison (REB), and wormwood (NRSV, NAS). See Gall.

HEMORRHAGE Heavy or uncontrollable bleeding. The KJV translates the underlying Hebrew and Greek terms as "issue of blood" (Lev. 12:7; Matt. 9:20) or "fountain of blood" (Mark 5:29). Modern translations render these terms as hemorrhage, flow, or discharge of blood. Mosaic law said any discharge of blood, whether associated with the birthing process (Lev. 12:7), with menstruation (Lev. 15:19), or continued bleeding (Lev. 15:25; Matt. 9:20), rendered a woman unclean. Those ritually unclean were separated from God (represented by the tabernacle, Lev. 15:31) and from the congregation of Israel (Num. 5:2). The woman suffering from a hemorrhage (Matt. 9:20; Mark 5:29; Luke 8:43–44) was thus a religious and social outcast who only dared approach Jesus from behind. Contrary to expectations, the woman did not give her uncleanness to Jesus. Rather Jesus' healing power made the woman clean.

HEMORRHOIDS A mass of dilated veins and swollen tissue in the vicinity of the anus. The KJV translators understood the affliction of Deuteronomy 28:27; 1 Samuel 5:6,9,12 as hemorrhoids (or emerods). Modern versions are divided in their understanding of the term in Deuteronomy. Some take a reference to tumors (NAS, NIV, REB). Others find a reference to sores (TEV) or ulcers (NRSV). Modern versions agree that the affliction of 1 Samuel was tumors, probably associated with bubonic plague.

HEN (FOWL) See Birds.

HEN (PERSON) Hebrew word for "grace, favor" used as either a proper name or a title (meaning "favored one") of Josiah son of Zephaniah (Zech. 6:14; compare 6:10) if the present Hebew text is original. The Syriac version (followed by the NRSV, REB, TEV) has the name Josiah in place of Hen in 6:14. The earliest Greek version understood the name as a title.

HENA (Hē′ nà) Place name of uncertain meaning. City Sennacherib, king of Assyria, captured prior to threatening Hezekiah and Jerusalem in 701 B.C. (2 Kings 18:34). Sennacherib used the historical example to brag and to persuade Hezekiah not to rely on God for protection against Sennacherib. Hena may be the same as Ana or Anat at the middle of the course of the Euphrates River.

HENADAD (Hĕn′ ȧ dăd) Personal name meaning, "grace of Hadad (the god)." Clan of Levites who supervised the rebuilding of the Temple under Zerubbabel after 537 B.C. (Ezra 3:9). Clan members also helped Nehemiah rebuild Jerusalem's walls (Neh. 3:18,24) and signed Nehemiah's covenant of obedience (Neh. 10:10).

HENNA See Plants in the Bible.

HENOCH (Hē′ nŏch) KJV spelling for Enoch (1 Chron. 1:3,33).

HEPHER (Hē′ phēr) Personal name meaning, "well" or "shame." 1. Original family ancestor in clan of Gilead and father of Zelophehad (Num. 26:28–37). He belonged to the tribe of Manasseh (Josh. 17:1–2). 2. A hero in David's wilderness army (1 Chron. 11:36). 3. Member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:6).

HEPHERITE (Hē′ phēr īte) Descendant of family of Hepher. See Hepher.

HEPHZIBAH (Hĕph′ zĭ bàh) Personal name meaning, "my delight is in her." 1. In 2 Kings 21:1, the mother of Manasseh, king of Judah. 2. In Isaiah 62:4, it is used as a symbolic name for Jerusalem. When Jerusalem is restored, she will no longer be forsaken and desolate; she will be called Hephzibah, for God's delight will be in her.

HERALD An official messenger. The herald of Daniel 3:4 was responsible for publicizing the king's law and the penalty of disobedience. Noah is described as a herald of righteousness (2 Pet. 2:5), that is, one who announced God's requirements. Paul was appointed as a herald or preacher of the gospel. First Timothy 2:5–7 outlines Paul's message as the uniqueness of God, Christ's unique role as mediator between God and humanity, and Christ's death as ransom. Second Timothy 1:9–11 outlines Paul's gospel as the good news that God has given grace by sending Christ who abolished death and brought life.

HERBS See Plants in the Bible.

HERBS, BITTER A salad of bitter herbs was eaten as part of the Passover observance (Ex. 12:8; Num. 9:11). Such a meal could be quickly prepared and was appropriate to commemorate Israel's hasty retreat from Egypt (Ex. 12:11). Later the bitter herbs were associated with the bitterness of Egyptian slavery (compare Ex. 1:14). Bitter herbs possibly included lettuce, chicory, eryngo, horseradish, and sowthistle. See Plants in the Bible.

HERD A number of animals kept together under human control. In biblical usage herd generally refers to cattle in contrast to flock which refers to sheep or goats. Herds were a source of meat and dairy products, of agricultural labor (1 Chron. 12:40; Isa. 46:1), and of sacrifices (Num. 7:3; Ps. 69:31; Isa. 66:3). Herds were regarded as a sign of wealth (Gen. 13:5; 32:7; 45:10). Cattle were generally kept in open pasture. Pen-fed beef was a luxury item (Amos 6:4; Hab. 3:17). See Cattle.

HERDSMAN One who cares for cattle in contrast to a shepherd who cares for sheep. Amos served as a herdsman before receiving his prophetic call (Amos 7:14). Herdsmen were sometimes included among high-ranking officials of ancient kings (1 Chron. 27:29; 28:1; compare Gen. 46:34). Herdsmen were sometimes paid from the products of the herd (1 Cor. 9:7).

HERES (Hē′ rēs) Place name meaning "sun." A mountain pass over which Gideon traveled in returning from his battle with the Midianites (Judg. 8:13). It is distinct from the more western Mount Heres in Judges 1:35, often identified with Beth-Shemesh ("house of the sun"). KJV translates 8:13 as "before the sun was up" as compared to NAS, "by the ascent of Heres." Location of Gideon's pass is not known, though some scholars now locate it as the Ascent of Horus which leads to tell Deir Alla east of the Jordan. Strong manuscript evidence reads "city of Heres" or Heliopolis in Isaiah 19:18 (compare REB, TEV, NRSV). See Heliopolis.

HERESH (Hē′ rĕsh) Personal name meaning, "unable to speak." Levite who lived near Jerusalem after the return from Exile about 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:15).

HERESY (Hĕr′ ĕ sȳ) An opinion or doctrine not in line with the accepted teaching of a church; the opposite of orthodoxy. Our English word is derived from a Greek word which has the basic idea of choice. In ancient classical Greek it was used predominantly to refer to the philosophical school to which one chose to belong. Later, it came to be associated with the teaching of philosophical schools.

The word had a similar usage in Jewish writings. Josephus, a Jewish historian of the first century from whom we learn much of what we know about the Judaism of New Testament times, used the word to refer to the various Jewish parties (or schools of thought) such as the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. Jewish rabbis employed the term in a bad sense applying it to groups who had separated from the main stream of Jewish teaching.

The word has several usages in the New Testament, but never has the technical sense of "heresy" as we understand it today. It may be classified as follows:

1. Most frequently, especially in Acts, it has the same meaning as Josephus. In Acts 5:17, 15:5; and 26:5, where it refers to the Pharisees and Sadducees, it simply means party or sect.

2. In Acts 24:14 and 28:22 it is used in a slightly derogatory sense, referring to Christians as they were viewed to be separatists or sectarians by the Jews. This usage conforms to that of the rabbis.

3. Paul used the term to refer to groups which threatened the harmonious relations of the church. In 1 Corinthians 11:19, where he was writing about the disgraceful way in which the Corinthians were observing the Lord's Supper, the word has to do with the outward manifestations of the factions he mentioned in verse 18. In Galatians 5:20, it is one of the works of the flesh and is in a grouping including strife, seditions, and envyings. It apparently has to do with people who choose to place their own desires above the fellowship of the church. Titus 3:10 speaks of a man who is a heretic. Since the context of the verse has to do with quarreling and dissensions, the idea in this passage seems to be that of a fractious person.

4. In 2 Peter 2:1 it comes closest to our meaning of the term. It clearly refers to false prophets who have denied the true teaching about Christ. Since the remainder of 2 Peter 2 refers to the immoral living of the false prophets, the word also refers to their decadent living. The reference to the heretic in Titus 3:10 may belong to this category since the verse mentions disputes about genealogies, a doctrinal matter.

It is clear that in the New Testament, the concept of heresy had more to do with fellowship within the church than with doctrinal teachings. While the writers of the New Testament were certainly concerned about false teachings, they apparently were just as disturbed by improper attitudes.

In the writings of Ignatius, a leader of the church in the early second century, the word takes on the technical meaning of a heresy. Most frequently in the writings of the early church fathers, the heresy about which they were concerned was Gnosticism, a teaching which denied that Jesus was fully human.

See Christology; Error; Gnosticism.

W. T. Edwards, Jr.

HERETH (Hē′ rĕth) Modern translation spelling of Hareth, place name meaning "cut in to." Forest in which David hid from Saul after settling his parents with the king of Moab (1 Sam. 22:5). Some identify it with Horesh (1 Sam. 23:15) located at khirbet Khoreisa two miles south of Ziph. Others place it at the village of Kharas near Keilah. From Hereth, David attacked the Philistines at Keilah (1 Sam. 23:1–5).

HERITAGE Legacy, inheritance, birthright. The Old Testament frequently refers to the promised land as Israel's heritage from God (Ex. 6:8; Pss. 16:6; 135:12). Children are regarded as a heritage from God (Ps. 127:3). The law and God's protective care are likewise called a heritage (Ps. 119:111; Isa. 54:17). Israel is called God's heritage (Ps. 94:5; Jer. 12:7; Joel 3:2). This image is applied to the church in 1 Peter 5:3 (compare NAS margin, allotment). Revelation 21:7 speaks of the water of life as the heritage of those martyrs who conquered through their faithfulness. See Inheritance.

HERMAS (Hēr′ màs) Personal name and name of Greek God. Christian to whom Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:14). His name, the variant spelling of the Greek god Hermes, may indicate he was a slave, since many slaves were named for gods. See Apostolic Fathers.

HERMENEUTICS See Bible, Hermeneutics, Bible, History of Interpretation.

HERMES (Hēr′ mēs) In Acts 14:12, the Greek deity for whom the superstitious people at Lystra took Paul. KJV uses the god's Latin name, Mercurius. Hermes was known as a messenger of the gods and was associated with eloquence. Paul's role as chief speaker made the Lystrans think of Hermes.

HERMETIC LITERATURE A body of writings composed in Greek in Egypt between 100 and 300 A.D. associated with the name "Hermes Trimegistos" (Thrice-great Hermes). The Hermetic literature is a diverse collection. Some of the texts are primarily astrological, magical, or alchemical. Others are primarily religious and philosophical texts. Some of the texts are monistic (viewing all reality as a unity) and pantheistic (seeing God present in everything that is). Others are dualistic (seeing God and the creation as separate).

The best-known Hermetic writing is the tractate titled Poimandres (perhaps from the Coptic for "knowledge of the sungod"). Poimandres offers to reveal to Hermes the secret nature of creation and God. According to the myth, God created the nous (mind, intelligence) which in turn created (physical) nature. God then created the anthropos, the original man. In the fall, this man united with nature to produce the seven androgynous persons who were the source of the human race. Thus each person consists of a body (from nature) which imprisons the soul (from God). Salvation from the body and deliverance from the oppressive fate of the stars was achieved by receiving knowledge of the nature of things. Reception of such knowledge is described as rebirth. By repressing the bodily senses, the faithful Hermetic hoped to ascend past the seven astral spheres and to reunite with God.

Marble head of Hermes dating from the first century B.C. to the first century A.D. from Dalmatia.

The Hermetic doctrine has similarities with gnostic teaching. The Hermetic writings unlike gnosticism did not regard nature as itself evil nor the direct agent of creation (demiurge) as the enemy of God. Some scholars have seen the influence of Hermetic doctrine in the Gospel of John (creation by the logos, rebirth). More likely, both John and the later Hermetics developed earlier Jewish and Greek ideas independently. See Gnosticm; John.

HERMOGENES (Hĕr mŏg' ĕ nēs) Personal name meaning, "born of Hermes." Follower who deserted Paul, apparently while he was in prison in Ephesus (2 Tim. 1:15). Paul's statement indicates acute disappointment in Hermogenes but does not say he became an apostate. Nothing else is known of him.

HERMON, MOUNT (Hĕr' mon) Place name meaning, "devoted mountain." Site of sanctuary of Baal and northern boundary of Israel. The name Hermon was called Sarion (Sirion) by the Sidonians (Phoenicians) (Deut. 3:9; Ps. 29:6) and Sanir (Senir) by the Amorites (Deut. 3:9). Both appellations signify "breast plate," evidently because of the mountain's rounded snow-covered tip, that gleaned and shone in the sunlight. The latter name appears twice in the Old Testament, seemingly as the name of a peak adjacent to Hermon (1 Chron. 5:23; Song of Sol. 4:8). It is also called Sion (Deut. 4:48), probably on account of its height. Once it is called "Hermons." KJV mistakenly renders this as "the Hermonites" (Ps. 42:6). This is probably a reference to the triple summits of the mountain.

The Hermon range is the southern spur of the Anti-lebanon chain of mountains which runs parallel to the Lebanon range being separated from it by the valley of Beqaa. Hermon, being 9,100 feet above sea level, is the highest mountain in Syria. It can be seen from as far away as the Dead Sea—120 miles. The range is approximately 28 miles in length and reaches a width of 15 miles. Its peak is covered with snow two-thirds of the year. Water from its melting snow flows into the rivers of the Hauran and provides the principal source for the Jordan River. Although Hermon receives about 60 inches of precipitation (dew, snow, rain) per year, practically no vegetation grows above the snow line, where there is an almost complete absence of soil. Below it, the mountain slopes are covered with trees and vineyards. Wolves, leopards, and Syrian bears live in its forests. The biblical record praises: the dew of Hermon (Ps. 133:3), its lions (Song of Sol. 4:8) and its cypresses (Ezek. 27:5).

The mount is significant for four reasons. (1) It was the northern border of the Amorite kingdom (Deut. 3:8; 4:48). (2) It marked the northern limits of Joshua's victorious campaigns (Josh. 11:17; 12:1; 13:5). (3) It has always been regarded as a sacred mountain. (4) Some scholars believe the transfiguration of Jesus occurred on Hermon. Gary Baldwin

Beautiful view of Mount Hermon from the ancient city-mound of Hazor in northern Galilee.

HERMONITE (Hĕr' mon īte) Resident of Mount Hermon, according to KJV translation of Psalm 42:6. See Hermon.

HERMONITES KJV translators understood the Hebrew plural "Hermans" (Ps. 42:6) to refer to the inhabitants of the slopes of Mount Hermon. Modern translations take the plural to refer to the three "peaks of Hermon" (NAS).

HEROD (Hĕr' od) The name given to the family ruling Palestine immediately before and to some degree during the first half of the first Christian century. Their family history was complex, and what information has come down has been frequently meager, conflicting, and difficult to harmonize. The chief sources are the references in the New Testament, the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus, and a few obscure references by Roman historians, such as Dio Cassius, Plutarch, and Strabo.

Overview of the excavations of Herod's Palace at Jerusalem as viewed from the Tower of David.

The most prominent family member and ruler was Herod, son of Antipater who had been appointed governor of Idumea by Alexandra Salome, the Maccabean queen who ruled Palestine 78–69 B.C. With the permission of the Romans, Antipater left his son Phasael as Prefect of Jerusalem and his second son, Herod, governor of Galilee. See Intertestamental History.

Other Herods named in the New Testament include the following:

Agrippa I, the son of Aristobulus and grandson of Herod. He ruled with the title of king from A.D. 41–44. Agrippa I ordered James the son of Zebedee killed with the sword and imprisoned Peter (Acts 12:1–23).

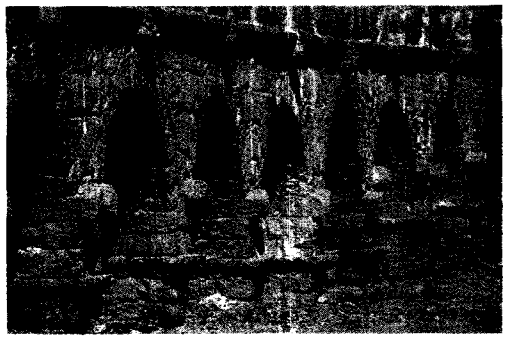
Agrippa II, the son of Agrippa I, heard Paul's defense (Acts 25:13–27; compare Acts 26:32). With his death the Herodian dynasty came to an end, in title as well as in fact.

Drusilla (Acts 24:24) was the third and youngest daughter of Agrippa I. She had been married briefly at age 14 to Azizus, king of Emessa, probably in the year 52. In 53 or 54 she was married to Felix, the Roman procurator.

Bernice was the sister of Drusilla and Agrippa II, and also his wife. Paul appeared before them in Acts 25.

Herod Philip was the son of Herod the Great and Cleopatra of Jerusalem (Luke 3:1). He built Caesarea Philippi and was governor of the Northeastern districts of Iturea, Gaulinitis, Trachonitis, and Decapolis. He was married to Salome, the daughter of Herodias.

A Herod Philip is mentioned in Mark 6:17 as the first husband of Herodias. In some places he is mentioned simply as Herod, or Herod II. Most scholars do not believe that he was the same person as the governor of the northeastern districts.



Herodias (Matt. 14:3) was the daughter of Aristobulus (son of Herod and Mariamne I) and Bernice, the daughter of Herod's sister, Salome. She was the second wife of Herod Antipas and called for the head of John the Baptist (Matt. 14:3–12; Mark 6:17–29; compare Luke 3:19–20).

Salome was the daughter of Herodias. She was married to Philip. After his death in 34, she married a relative Aristobulus, prince of Chalcis and had three children (Matt. 14:6–12; Mark 6:22–29).

Herod was a paradox. He was one of the most cruel rulers of all history. His reputation has been largely one of infamy. He seemed fiercely loyal to that which he did believe in. He did not hesitate to murder members of his own family when he deemed that they posed a threat to him. Yet marital unfaithfulness and drunkenness did not seem to be among his vices. Because of his effective administration, he virtually made Palestine what it was in the first Christian century. He has gone down in history as "the Great," yet that epithet can only be applied to him as his personality and accomplishments are compared to others of his family. Robert W. Stagg

HEROD'S PALACE The probable scene of Herod's interrogation and mockery of Jesus (Luke 23:6–12). The palace was located along the western wall of the upper city to the west of the people's assembly hall. The palace was surrounded by a 45 foot wall surmounted by ornamental towers at fixed intervals. The palace was renowned for its circular porticoes, fine gardens, and a banquet hall seating over 100 guests. The palace was destroyed in September of 70 A.D.

HERODIAN (Hē rō′ dĭ an) Member of an aristocratic Jewish group who favored the policies of Herod Antipas and thus supported the Roman government. Apparently they lived in Galilee, where Antipas ruled, and joined the Jerusalem religious authorities in opposing Jesus. They tried to trap Jesus into denying responsibility for Roman taxes (Matt. 22:15–22; Mark 12:13–17). Their plots began the road to Jesus' crucifixion (Mark 3:6). See Herod.

This aqueduct built by Herod the Great brought fresh water to Caesarea Maritima.

HERODIAS (Hē rō′ dĭ ăs) In Mark 6:17, the wife of Herod Antipas. She was the daughter of Aristobulus and Bernice. She was first married to the half brother of her father, identified in Mark 6:17 as Philip. By Philip she bore a daughter named Salome. Antipas, however, who was Philip's brother, divorced his own wife and wooed Herodias away from Philip. It was this gross marital misconduct that was denounced by John the Baptist. See Herod; John the Baptist.

HERODION (Hē rō′ dĭ on) Christian man to whom Paul the Apostle sent a greeting (Rom. 16:11). Paul referred to him as a kinsman. This probably means that he was of Jewish birth. His name suggests that he might have a member of the family of Herod. This possibility is strengthened by the fact that the name immediately preceding his is Aristobulus (Rom. 16:10). Herodion could have been one of those in the household of Aristobulus.

A view inside the Herodium, the magnificent fortress-palace built by Herod the Great.

HERODIUM A fortress-palace built by Herod the Great about four miles southeast of Bethlehem. Herod was buried there. The fortress, captured in A.D. 72, was one of the last strongholds of Jewish resistance in the war with Rome. The Herodium served as a supply depot in the unsuccessful revolt of A.D. 132–135.

The famous sillouette of the Herodium against the Israeli sky.

HERON Any of a family of wading birds with long necks and legs (Areidae), which were regarded as unclean (Lev. 11:19; Deut. 14:18). See Birds.

HESED (Hē′ sĕd) Personal name meaning "grace" or "covenant love." Father of one of Solomon's district governors (1 Kings 4:10 KJV). Modern translations transliterate ben (Hebrew "son of"). He brought provisions for the royal court one month a year from his district of Arubboth. See Arubboth.

HESHBON (Hĕsh′ bŏn) Place name meaning, "reckoning." City in Moab ruled by Sihon and captured by Moses (Num. 21:21–30). Ancient Heshbon, to be identified with present-day tell Hesban, was one of several ancient cities situated on the rolling and fertile plateau east of the Dead Sea and north of the Arnon River (present-day Wadi Mojib). Two of the other cities nearby, often mentioned by the biblical writers in connection with Heshbon, were Elealeh and Medeba (Medeba.) The agriculturally-productive region in which these cities were located was much disputed territory during Old Testament times. Generally it was regarded as part of Moab, as is assumed in Isaiah 15—16 and Jeremiah 48. Yet the Israelite tribes of Reuben and Gad ranged with their sheep in this region (Num. 32:3,37). The Israelites laid claim to it on the grounds that Moses had taken all of the territory as far south as the Arnon from Sihon, an Amorite king who ruled from Heshbon (Num. 21:21–31). Certain of the stronger Israelite kings (David, Omri, and Ahab) were able to control all of that area. Apparently, the Ammonites claimed the region as well, as implied by the exchange of messages between Jephthah and the Ammonite king related in Judges 11:12–28.

Heshbon was assigned to the tribe of Gad and designated as a Levitical city according to Joshua 13:27–28; 21:38–39. Song of Solomon 7:4, describing a maiden's beauty, proclaims "thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon." Herod the Great fortified the site, and it became a flourishing city (called Esbus) during late Roman times.

Excavations at tell Hesban, conducted between 1968 and 1978, produced occupational remains ranging from the beginning of the Iron Age (about 1200 B.C.) through medieval times. No evidence of pre-Iron Age occupation was discovered at the site. That is the period when King Sihon was supposed to have ruled from the city.

See Gad; Moab; Reuben; Sihon.

Maxwell Miller

HESHMON (Hĕsh′ mŏn) Place name meaning, "flat field." Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:27). Its location is not known.

HESLI (Hĕs′ lī) NAS spelling of Esli. See Esli.

HETH (Hĕth) Personal name of unknown meaning. Son of Canaan, great grandson of Noah, and original ancestor of the Hittites, some of the original inhabitants of Palestine (Gen. 10:15). See Hittites. Abraham bought his family burial ground from "sons of" or descendants of Heth (Gen. 23).

HETHLON (Hĕth′ lŏn) Place name of unknown meaning on the northern border of Israel's Promised Land, according to Ezekiel's vision (Ezek. 47:15). Some see the word as a scribe's Hebrew abbreviation for mountain of Lebanon. Others see it as another name or a scribal change for Lebohamath (Num. 34:8). Others would identify it as modern Heitela, northeast of Tripoli, two and a half miles south of Nahr el-Kebir. Ezekiel pointed to a road near this place, perhaps the important transportation road otherwise known as Eleutheros.

HEW To cut with blows from a heavy cutting instrument. The references to "hewers of wood" together with drawers of water (Josh. 9:21,23,27; Deut. 29:11) probably refer to those who gathered firewood. Such work was a despised task relegated to foreigners and slaves. The "hewers that cut timber" (2 Chron. 2:10; compare Jer. 46:22) were skilled lumberjacks. The "hewers of stone" (1 Kings 5:15) or "stonecutters" were royal servants mining rock from the mountains for royal building projects. Houses of "hewn stone" rather than rough stone were regarded as an extravagance (Amos 5:11).

H

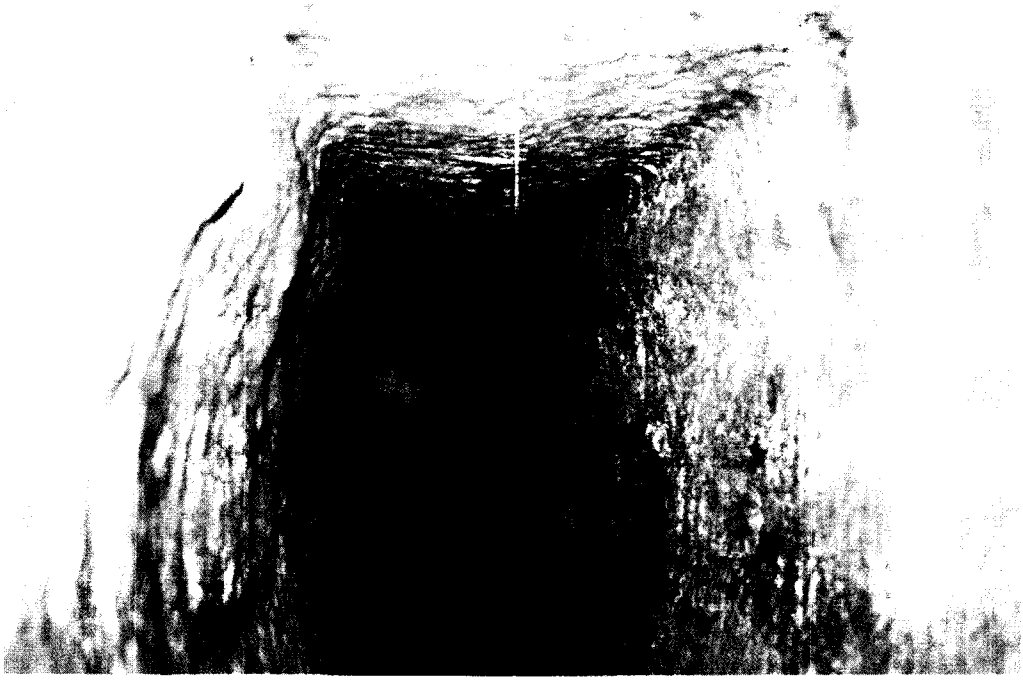
HEXATEUCH A modern designation for the first six books of the Old Testament viewed as a literary unity. The term was coined by source critics impressed with the supposed similarity of sources behind Joshua and the Pentateuch as well as the need for fulfillment of the promise of land to Abraham in the conquest of Cannan. More recent scholarship has evidenced a renewed appreciation of the canonical arrangement in which Joshua begins the "former prophets" or history of Israel from its entrance into the Promised Land until its departure with the Exile. Joshua forms something of a bridge linking the promises to the Patriarchs and the story of Moses with the later history of Israel.



HEZEKI (Hĕz' ĕ kī) KJV spelling of Hizki in descendants of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:17).

King Hezekiah's tunnel which brought water from the Spring of Gihon to the pool of Siloam.

HEZEKIAH Son and successor of Ahaz as king of Judah (716/15—687/86 B.C.) Hezekiah began his reign when he was twenty-five years old. At this time in history, the nation of Assyria had risen to power.

Hezekiah began his reign by bringing religous reform to Judah. Hezekiah was not willing to court the favor of the Assyrian kings. The Temple in Jerusalem was reopened. The idols were removed from the Temple. Temple vessels that had been desecrated during Ahaz's reign were sanctified for use in the Temple. The sacrifices were initiated with singing and the sounds of musical instruments. The tribes in the Northern Kingdom (Israel) had been subjected to Assyrian dominance. Hezekiah invited the Israelites to join in the celebration of the Passover in Jerusalem. Places of idol worship were destroyed. Hezekiah even destroyed the bronze serpent Moses had erected in the wilderness (Num. 21:4–9) so the people would not view the bronze serpent as an object of worship. Hezekiah organized the priests and Levites for the conducting of religious services. The tithe was reinstituted. Plans were made to observe the religious feasts called for in the Law.

In 711 B.C., just a few years after Hezekiah had become king, Sargon II of Assyria captured Ashdod. Hezekiah anticipated the time when he would have to confront Assyrian armies. Hezekiah fortified the city of Jerusalem and organized an army. Knowing that a source of water was crucial, Hezekiah constructed a tunnel through solid rock from the spring of Gihon to the Siloam pool. The city wall was extended to enclose this important source of water.

Isaiah warned Hezekiah not to become involved with Assyria (Isa. 20:1–6). The critical time for Hezekiah came in 705 B.C. when Sennacherib became king of Assyria. From Hezekiah, Sennacherib obtained a heavy tribute of silver and gold.

In 701 B.C., Hezekiah became seriously ill (Isa. 38:1–21). Isaiah warned the king to prepare for his approaching death, but Hezekiah prayed that God would intervene. God answered by promising Hezekiah fifteen more years of life and deliverance of Jerusalem from Assyria (Isa. 38:4–6).

In the meantime, Sennacherib had besieged Lachish. Aware that Hezekiah had trusted God for deliverance, Sennacherib sent messengers to the Jerusalem wall to urge the people to surrender. Sennacherib boasted of having conquered 46 walled cities and having taken 200,000 captives. Sennacherib's messengers taunted that God would not come to Judah's defense. Hezekiah, dressed in sackcloth and ashes, went to the Temple to pray. He also called for Isaiah, the prophet. Isaiah announced that Sennacherib would "hear a rumour" and return to his own land where he would die by the sword (2 Kings 19:7).

Hezekiah's faith and physical recovery brought him recognition from the surrounding nations (2 Chron. 32:33). The Babylonian leader, Merodachbaladan, even congratulated Hezekiah on his recovery. Hezekiah hosted this Babylonian leader at a reception, but Isaiah met this event with a warning that succeeding generations would be subjected to Babylonian captivity (Isa. 39:1–8).

Sennacherib destroyed the city of Babylon in 689 B.C. He then marched toward Egypt. Hoping to ward off any interference from Judah, Sennacherib sent letters to Hezekiah ordering him to surrender (Isa. 37:9–38). Hezekiah took the letters to the Temple and prayed for God's help. From Isaiah came the message that Sennacherib would not prevail. In fact, Sennacherib's army was destroyed in a miraculous way (2 Kings 19:35–37). In 681 B.C., Sennacherib was killed by two of his sons as had been predicted by Isaiah in 701 B.C. Hezekiah died in 687/86 B.C. Manasseh, his son, succeeded him, although Manasseh had become co-regent with Hezekiah about 696 B.C.

The Gospel of Matthew lists Hezekiah in the genealogy of Jesus (Matt. 1:9–10). Gary Hardin HEZION (Hē′ zī ŏn) Personal name meaning, "vision." Grandfather of King Ben-hadad of Damascus (1 Kings 15:18). His relationship to Rezon, founder of the Damascus dynasty, is not certain. Some think Hezion is a scribal change from Rezon in Hebrew. Others think both names have been changed from an original Hezron or Hazael. A more probable opinion is that Hezion is a personal name, while Rezon is a Syrian royal title or throne name. See Rezon.

HEZIR (Hē′ zīr) Personal name meaning, "wild pig." Ugaritic texts apparently show that the name came from the profession of herding swine. 1. Leader of one of the 24 courses of priests (1 Chron. 24:15). 2. A Levite who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:20).

HEZRAI (Hĕz′ rā ī) Personal name meaning, "his stalk" or "stem." KJV reading of name of David's military hero (2 Sam. 23:25) following an early scribal note on the Hebrew text. The written text and modern translations read Hezro with 1 Chronicles 11:37, where many early translations read Hezrai.

HEZRO (Hĕz′ rō) See Hezrai.

HEZRON (Hĕz′ rŏn) Personal and place name meaning, "camping place" or "reeds." 1. Son of Reuben, grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:9), and original clan ancestor of Hezronites (Num. 26:6). 2. Grandson of Judah, great grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:12), original clan ancestor of Hezronites (Num. 26:21) through whom David was born (Ruth 4:19). He was father of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:18) and of Segub (1 Chron. 2:21). The Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 2:24 can be interpreted and translated in different ways. KJV makes Hezron the father of Ashur (compare NAS, NRSV, NIV). Some Bible students follow the lead of the earliest translations, changing the Hebrew text somewhat so that Caleb is the father of Ashur, Ephratah being Caleb's wife (compare REB, TEV, RSV). Hezron's first son was Jerahmeel, original ancestor of the Jerahmeelites (1 Chron. 2:25).

HEZRONITE (Hĕz′ rŏn īte) Clan descended from Hezron both in tribe of Reuben and of Judah. See Hezron.

HIDDAI (Hĭd′ dā ī) Personal name, perhaps a short form for Hodai, meaning, "my majesty." One of David's military heroes (2 Sam. 23:30). The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:32 spells the name Hurai. He was from Gaash. See Gaash.

HIDDEKEL (Hĭd′ dė kĕl) Hebrew name for the third river flowing from the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:14). Most modern translations translate it as Tigris. This shows the dependence of the important areas of subsequent world history owed their fertility to God's original garden of creation. KJV also retains the transliteration for Tigris in Daniel 10:4. See Tigris.

HIEL (Hī′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God lives" or, following the Greek translation, a short form of Ahiel, "brother of God." Man from Bethel who rebuilt Jericho at the price of the life of two of his sons (1 Kings 16:34), fulfilling the divine curse Joshua issued when he destroyed Jericho (Josh. 7:26).

HIERAPOLIS (Hī ĕr ăp′ ō lĭs) Place name meaning, "sacred city." Site of early church where Epaphras worked (Col. 4:13). Nothing else is known of the church. The city was twelve miles northwest of Colossae and six miles north of Laodicea on the Lycus River a short way above its junction with the Meander River. It is now called Pambuck Kulasi. Its fame rested on textile and cloth dyeing industries. It began as a center for worship of the Phrygian mother goddess. A large Jewish community is evidenced by grave inscriptions and other literary remains.

Mineral deposits from the hot springs of Hierapolis used as a health spa during the Roman period.

The Roman west gate of Hierapolis with triple arches set between two defense towers (first century A.D.).

HIEROGLYPHICS Greek term meaning "sacred carvings," referring to the pictographic symbols used in ancient Egyptian writing. Normally hieroglyphs were carved in stone, though sometimes they were written with pen on papyrus. These picture-symbols consisted in both ideograms (representing an entire word or phrase) and phonograms (representing a consonant). A simplified cursive script (hieratic) was developed early. This was in turn simplified into the demotic script about 700 B.C.

Hieroglyphics on the wall of a partially restored temple at Saqqara, Egypt.

HIGGAION (Hĭg gā′ ĭŏn) Transliteration of Hebrew word meaning, "whispering" (Lam. 3:62 NAS) or "meditation" (Ps. 19:14) or musical sound a stringed instrument produces (Ps. 92:3). It appears as a worship notation with uncertain meaning in Psalm 9:16. It may mean to play quietly or to pause for meditation.

HIGH GATE, HIGHER GATE KJV designations for a gate of the Jerusalem Temple (2 Kings 15:35; 2 Chron. 23:20; 27:3). Most modern translations prefer the designation "Upper Gate". TEV reads "North Gate" or "Main Gate." Its location is not clear, possibly being the same as the Benjamin Gate. Parallel to 2 Chronicles 23:20, 2 Kings 11:19 uses "guard" or "herald" as the gate's name, probably reflecting a change of names through history. See Gates of Jerusalem.

HIGH HEAPS KJV translation of a Hebrew term which occurs only at Jeremiah 31:21. Modern translations render the term as guideposts (NAS, NIV, NRSV) or signpost (REB).

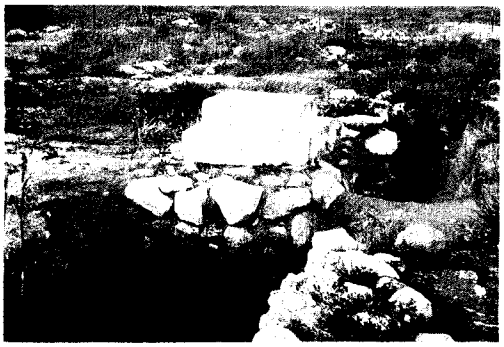
HIGH PLACE. An elevated site, usually found on the top of a mountain or hill; most high places were Canaanite places of pagan worship.



Heathen Worship at the High Place The average high place would have an altar (2 Kings 21:3; 2 Chron. 14:3), a carved wooden pole that depicted the female goddess of fertility (Asherah), a stone pillar symbolizing the male deity (2 Kings 3:2), other idols (2 Kings 17:29; 2 Chron. 33:19), and some type of building (1 Kings 12:31; 13:32; 16:32–33). At these places of worship the people sacrificed animals (at some high places children were sacrificed according to Jer. 7:31), burned incense to their gods, prayed, ate sacrificial meals, and were involved with male or female cultic prostitutes (2 Kings 17:8–12; 21:3–7; Hos. 4:11–14). Although most high places were part of the worship of Baal, the Ammonite god Molech and the Moabite god Chemosh were also worshiped at similar high places (1 Kings 11:5–8; 2 Kings 23:10). Scripture speaks negatively about these heathen places of worship; still they played a central role in the lives of most of the people who lived in Palestine before the land was defeated by Joshua. Archaeologists have discovered the remains of high places at Megiddo, Gezer, and numerous other sites.

God's Hatred of the High Places. When the Israelites came into the land of Canaan, they were ordered to destroy the high places of the people who lived in the land (Ex. 23:24; 34:13; Num. 33:52; Deut. 7:5; 12:3) lest the Israelites be tempted to worship the Canaanite false gods and accept their immoral behavior. The Israelites were to worship God at the tabernacle at Shiloh (Josh 18:1; 1 Sam. 1:3).

An exception to this practice existed in the years between the destruction of Shiloh by the Philistines and the construction of the Temple in Jerusalem by Solomon. During this short period Samuel worshiped inside a city (possibly Ramah) at a high place dedicated to the worship of the God of Israel (1 Sam. 9:12–25), and a group of prophets of God worshiped at the "hill of God" (1 Sam. 10:5, probably Gibeah or Gibeon). David and Solomon worshiped the God of Israel at the high place at Gibeon where the tabernacle and the altar of burnt offering were located (1 Chron. 16:1–4,37–40; 21:29; 2 Chron. 1:3–4,13).

The rock-cut altars of the high place at Petra in southern Jordan.

Stone fragments of what is probably an altar base (possibly Israelite) at the high place at Lachish.

False Worship at High Places in Judah After the Temple was constructed, the people were to worship God at this place which He had chosen (Deut. 12:1–14), but Solomon built high places for the gods of his foreign wives and even worshiped there himself (1 Kings 11:1–8). Because of the seriousness of this sin, God divided the nation by removing ten tribes from the kingdom of his son Rehoboam (1 Kings 11:9–13,29–38). Following this, each new king that ruled in the Southern Kingdom of Judah and in the Northern Kingdom of Israel was evaluated in the books of Kings and Chronicles according to what they did with the high places where false gods were worshiped.

False Worship at High Places in Israel When Jeroboam created the new kingdom of Israel after the death of Solomon, he put two golden calves at high places at Dan and Bethel (1 Kings 12:28–32). An unnamed man of God came to Bethel and pronounced God's curse on this high place (1 Kings 13:1–3), but the following kings of the Northern Kingdom of Israel followed in the ways of Jeroboam and did not remove the high places where the false gods were worshiped.

The Israelite prophets also condemned the high places of Moab (Isa. 15:2; 16:12), Judah (Jer. 7:30–31; 17:1–3; 19:3–5; 32:35), and Israel (Ezek. 6:3,6; 20:29–31; Hos. 10:8, Amos 7:9) because they were places of sin where false gods were worshiped.

See Asherah; False Gods; Golden Calves; Prostitution. Gary V. Smith

HIGH PRIEST Priest in charge of the Temple (or tabernacle) worship. A number of terms are used to refer to the high priest: the priest (Ex. 31:10); the anointed priest (Lev. 4:3); the priest who is chief among his brethren (Lev. 21:10); chief priest (2 Chron. 26:20); and high priest (2 Kings 12:10).

Responsibilities and Privileges The high priesthood was a hereditary office based on descent from Aaron (Ex. 29:29–30; Lev. 16:32). Normally, the high priest served for life (Num. 18:7; 25:11–13; 35:25,28; Neh. 12:10–11), though as early as Solomon's reign a high priest was dismissed for political reasons (1 Kings 2:27).

A special degree of holiness was required of the high priest (Lev. 10:6,9; 21:10–15). This meant he had to avoid defilement by contact with the dead, even in the case of his own parents and was forbidden to show any outward sign of mourning. He could not leave the sanctuary precincts. Such legislation identified the high priest as one totally dedicated to the Lord, always ritually pure and ready to serve the Lord.

If the high priest sinned, he brought guilt upon the whole people (Lev. 4:3). The sin offering for the high priest (Lev. 4:3–12) was identical to that required "if the whole congregation of Israel commits a sin" (4:13–21).

The consecretation of the high priest was an elaborate seven-day ritual involving special baths, putting on special garments, and anointing with oil and with blood (Ex. 29:1–37; Lev. 6:19–22; 8:5–35). The special garments of the high priest included (1) a blue robe with an ornate hem decorated with gold bells and embroidered pomegranates, (2) an ephod of fine linen with colorful embroidered work and shoulder straps bearing stones engraved with the names of the twelve tribes, (3) a breastplate with twelve precious stones engraved with the names of the twelve tribes, and (4) a linen turban with a gold plate inscribed "Holy to Yahweh" (Ex. 28:4–39; 39:1–31; Lev. 8:7–9). The engraved plate and the stones engraved with the tribal names highlight the role of the high priest as the holy representative of all Israel before the Lord (Ex. 28:12,29). In his "breastplate of judgment," the high priest kept the sacred lots, the Urim and Thummim, which were used to inquire of the Lord (Ex. 28:29–30; Num. 27:21). See Breastplate; Ephod; Lots; Urim and Thummim.

The high priest shared in general priestly duties. Only the high priest, however, was allowed to enter the holy of holies and then only on the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:1–25; for the details of the ritual, see Day of Atonement).

The death of the high priest marked the end of an epoch. One guilty of involuntary manslaughter was required to remain in a city of refuge until the death of the high priest (Num. 35:25, 28,32; Josh. 20:6). The expiatory death of the high priest removed blood guilt that would pollute the land (compare Num. 35:33).

History of the Office Some argue that the developed priesthood characterized by three divisions (high priest, priests, and Levites) was a late, possibly postexilic, development in the history of Israel's worship. Others take the Biblical texts at face value and accept Mosaic institution of the fully developed priesthood.

The term high priest occurs in only one brief passage in the Pentateuch (Num. 35:25,28,32), once in Joshua (Josh. 20:6 where the legislation of Num. 35 is enacted), and never in the Book of Judges. Aaron, Eliezar, and Phineas are typically called the priest. Neither Eli, Ahimelech, Abiathar, nor Zadok are called high or chief priest, though all four headed priestly families and are mentioned in connection with items usually associated with the high priest (the ark, the ephod, the Urim and Thummim: 1 Sam. 3:3; 4:4–11; 21:6,9; 2 Sam. 15:24–29).

Eleazar was charged with supervision of the Levites (Num. 3:32; compare 1 Chron. 9:20) and of the sanctuary apparatus (Num. 4:16). He figures in the narrative of Numbers 16 where the offering of incense is affirmed as the exclusive prerogative of the priests and in the red heifer ceremony (Num. 19). The account of Eleazar's donning Aaron's priestly robe (Num. 20:25–28; compare Deut. 10:6) provides Scripture's best report of high priestly succession. As chief priest Eleazar assisted Moses with the census (Num. 26). Eleazar served as an advisor to Moses (Num. 27:1) and to Joshua, consulting the Lord by means of the sacred lots. Such counsel formed the basis for the apportionment of the Promised Land among the tribes (Num. 34:17; Josh. 14:1; 17:4; 19:51; 21:1). One indication of the significance of Eleazar is that the Book of Joshua concludes with the death of this chief priest (24:33).

Phinehas, son of Eleazar, is best known for his zealous opposition to intermarriage with the Moabites and the concomitant idolatry (Num. 25:6–13). For his zeal Phinehas was granted a covenant of perpetual priesthood (Num. 25:13) and was reckoned as righteous (Ps. 106:30). Phinehas accompanied the sanctuary vessels in holy war (Num. 31:6). Part of his ministry before the ark involved consulting the Lord for battle counsel (Judg. 20:27–28). Phinehas served as the major figure in the resolution of the conflict over the "commemorative" altar the tribes east of the Jordan built (Josh. 22:13,31,32).

Aaron, Eleazar, and Phinehas appear in Biblical history as distinct personalities. Until Eli's appearance at end of the period of the judges, a puzzling silence surrounds the high priesthood. First Chronicles 6:1–15 offers a (partial?) list of seven high priests between Phinehas and Zadok, a contemporary of David and Solomon. Of these nothing is known except their names. Nor is Eli included among this list, though he functioned as the chief priest of the Shiloh sanctuary.

Eli is best known for his rearing of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:25–28; 3) and for his inability to control his own sons (1 Sam. 2:12–17,22–25; 3:13), which, in time, resulted in the forfeiture of the high priesthood by his line (1 Sam. 2:27–35). Following the death of Eli, the Shiloh priesthood apparently relocated to Nob. Saul suspected the priesthood of conspiracy with David and exterminated the priestly family of Ahimelech (1 Sam. 22:9–19). Only Abiathar escaped (22:20). When David moved the ark to Jerusalem, Abiathar and Zadok apparently officiated jointly as chief priests (2 Sam. 8:17; 15:24–29,35; 19:11), though Zadok already appears as the dominant figure in 2 Samuel. Solomon suspected Abiathar of conspiracy with his brother Adonijah and exiled him to his ancestral home (1 Kings 2:26–27). The high priesthood remained in the family of Zadok from the beginning of Solomon's reign (about 964 B.C.) until Menelaus bought the high priesthood (171 B.C.) in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes.

Azariah, the son of Zadok, was the first individual to be explicitly identified as the "high priest" (1 Kings 4:2). At times during the monarchy, individual high priests exercised major roles in the life of Judah. Jehoshabeath, wife of the high priest Jehoida (2 Chron. 22:11), saved the infant Joash from the murderous Athaliah. Six years later, Jehoida was the mastermind of the coup de'etat in which Joash was crowned king (2 Kings 11:4–17). A second Azariah was known for opposing King Uzziah's attempt to usurp the priests' right to offer incense (2 Chron. 26:17–18). The high priest Hilkiah discovered the "Book of the Law," perhaps the Book of Deuteronomy, which provided the incentive for King Josiah's reforms (2 Kings 22:8). Hilkiah removed all traces of Baal worship from the Jerusalem Temple (2 Kings 23:4).

In the early postexilic period, the high priest Joshua is presented as the equal of the Davidic governor Zerubabbel (Hag. 1:1,12,14; 2:2,4). Both high priest and governor shared in the rebuilding of the Temple (Ezra 3; 6:9–15; Hag. 1—2). Both are recognized as anointed leaders (Zech. 4:14; 6:9–15). A further indication of the heightened importance of the high priesthood in the postexilic period is the interest in succession lists of high priests (1 Chron. 6:1–15,50–53; 9:11; Ezra 7:1–5; Neh. 12:10–11), a new development in biblical literature.

In the period before the Maccabean revolt the high priesthood became increasingly political. Jason, a Hellenistic sympathizer, ousted his more conservative brother Onias III (2 Macc. 4:7–10,18–20). Jason was, in turn, ousted by the more radically Hellenistic Menelaus who offered the Seleucid rulers an even larger bribe to secure the office (2 Macc. 4:23–26). With Menelaus the high priesthood passed out of the legitimate Zadokite line.

The Maccabees combined the office of high priest with that of military commander or political leader. Alexander Balas, a contender for the Seleucid throne, appointed Jonathan Maccabee "high priest" and "king's friend" (1 Macc. 10:20). Simon Maccabee was, likewise, confirmed in his high priesthood and made a "friend" of the Seleucid King Demetrius II (1 Macc. 14:38). Temple and state were combined in the person of Simon who was both high priest and ethnarch (1 Macc. 15:1–2).

The Romans continued the practice of rewarding the high priesthood to political favorites. During the Roman period, Annas (high priest A.D. 6 to 15) was clearly the most powerful priestly figure. Even when deposed by the Romans, Annas succeeded in having five of his sons and a son-in-law, Joseph Caiaphas (high priest A.D. 18 to 36/37) appointed high priests. Some confusion has resulted from New Testament references to the joint high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas (Luke 3:2). The passage is perhaps best understood as an acknowledgment of Annas as the power behind his immediate successors. Another possibility is that Annas retained the title of respect on the grounds that the high priesthood was for life. Ananias, one of Annas' sons, was the high priest to whom Paul was brought in Acts 23:2; 24:1.

High Priest and Chief Priests The ordination rite for the high priest included the consecration of his sons as well (Ex. 29:8–9,20–21). A number of terms refer to leading priests other than the high priest: anointed priests (2 Macc. 1:10); chief priests (Ezra 8:29; 10:5; Neh. 12:7); senior priests (2 Kings 19:2; Isa. 37:2; Jer. 19:1). More specific titles are also found. Zephaniah was described as the "second priest" (2 Kings 25:18; Jer. 52:24). Pashur was the "chief officer in the house of the Lord" (Jer. 20:1).

Table of High Priests
Aaron (Ex. 28–29)
Eleazer (Num. 2:25–28; Deut. 10:6)
Phinehas (Josh. 22:13–32; Judg. 20:28)
Eli (1 Sam. 1:9; 2:11)
Ahimelech (1 Sam. 21:1–2; 22:11)
Abiathar (2 Sam. 20:25; 1 Kings 2:26–27)
Zadok (1 Kings 2:35; 1 Chron. 29:22)
Azariah (1 Kings 4:2)
Amariah (2 Chron. 19:11)
Jehoiada (2 Kings 11:9–10,15; 12:7,9,10)
Azariah (2 Chron. 26:20)
Urijah (2 Kings 16:10–16)
Hilkiah (2 Kings 22:10,12,14; 22:4,8; 23:4)
Seraiah (2 Kings 25:18)
Joshua (Hag. 1:1,12,14; 2:2,4; Ezra 3; Zech. 3:6–7; 4:14; 6:9–15)
Eliashib (Neh. 3:1,20)
Simon the Just (Sirach 50:1–21)
Onias III (1 Macc. 12:7; 2 Macc. 3:1)
Jason (2 Macc. 4:7–10,18–20; 4 Macc. 4:16)
Menelaus (2 Macc. 4:23–26)
Alcimus (1 Macc. 7:9)
Jonathan Maccabee (1 Macc. 10:20; 14:30)

Simon Maccabee (1 Macc. 14:20,23)
John Hyrcanus (1 Macc. 16:23–24)
Annas (Luke 3:2; John 18:14; Acts 4:6)
(Joseph) Caiaphas (Matt. 26:57; John 18:13)
Ananias (Acts 23:2; 24:1) Chris Church

HIGHEST A KJV designation for God (Luke 1:32,35,76; 6:35). Modern translations prefer "Most High" (NAS, NIV, NRSV) or "Most High God" (TEV). In the Old Testament, Most High often occurs as a designation for the God of Israel when Gentiles are in view (Gen. 14:18–22; Num. 24:16; and frequently in Daniel). In the intertestamental period, the Highest or Most High became the most common designation for the Jewish God, occurring about 120 times in the Apocrypha.

HIGHEST HEAVEN See Heaven of heavens.

HIGHWAY A road, especially an elevated road (Isa. 62:10). In addition to literal uses, there are figurative uses, especially in Isaiah. In Proverbs 15:19 the highway of the righteous is an image for their way of conduct. The highway of Isaiah 11:16 and 35:10 is an assurance that the exiles will have safe and speedy passage home. Isaiah 40:3 speaks of preparing a highway for the Lord. See Transportation and Travel; Palestine.

HILEN (Hī′ lĕn) Place name perhaps meaning, "power." City in tribal territory of Judah given to Levites (1 Chron. 6:58). The parallel passage (Josh. 21:15; compare 15:51) reads Holon. The Hebrew text in Chronicles actually reads "Hilez." Copying changes affected the various manuscript readings of this little-known town. See Holon, Levitical Cities.

HILKIAH (Hĭl kī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yah's portion." 1. Father of Amaziah (1 Chron. 6:45). He was a Levite who lived before the time of David the king. 2. Levite and Temple servant who lived during the time of David (1 Chron. 26:11). 3. Father of Eliakim, who was in charge of the household of King Hezekiah (2 Kings 18:18). 4. Father of Jeremiah the prophet (Jer. 1:1).

5. Father of Gemariah, who was an emissary from Zedekiah to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (Jer. 29:3). 6. High priest who aided in Josiah's reform movement (2 Kings 22:4). 7. Person who stood with Ezra the scribe at the reading of the law (Neh. 8:4). 8. Priest who was among the exiles that returned (Neh. 12:7).

HILL OF GOD (Hebrew Gibeath-elohim) Site of a Philistine garrison and of a place of worship. Here Saul met a band of ecstatic prophets and joined them in their frenzy (1 Sam. 10:5).

HILL OF THE FORESKINS (Hebrew Gibeath-haaraloth) Place near Gilgal where Joshua circumcised the Israelites born during the wilderness wandering (Josh. 5:3).

HILL, HILL COUNTRY Elevated land, usually distinguished as lower than a mountain or with a less distinct peak. Hills separating the Mediterranean coastal plain from the Jordan valley run the length of Palestine. The area to the east of the Jordan and the Dead Sea is likewise hill country. The common Hebrew terms for hill and hill country (Gibeah and Har) lack precise English equivalents, so a detailed knowledge of geography is required for proper translation. The RSV translated Gibeah as hill or hills 65 times. The RSV translated Har, the usual term for mountain, as hill 40 times and as hill country 92 times. The KJV and REB understood the Hebew Ophel as a fortress or citadel (2 Kings 5:24; Isa. 32:14; Mic. 4:8). Many English translations like NAS translated the term as hill. KJV uses tower, fort, and stronghold in the three passages.

HILLEL (Hĭl′ lĕl) Personal name meaning, "praise." 1. Father of the judge Abdon (Judg. 12:13). 2. An influential rabbi and Talmudic scholar who flourished just prior to the time of the ministry of Jesus. He and his colleague Shammai presided over the two most important rabbinic schools of their time. Hillel was the more liberal of the two, and his emphases have largely determined the direction taken by Judaism since his era.

HILT The handle of a sword or dagger (Judg. 3:22 NRSV and REB). Other translations prefer haft (KJV) or handle (NAS, NIV, TEV).

HIN (hĭn) Unit of liquid measure reckoned as one sixth of a bath (Ex. 29:40). It would have been approximately equivalent to a gallon. See Weights and Measures.

HIND A female deer; doe (Prov. 5:19). To make my feet like hinds' feet is a common expression (2 Sam. 22:34; Ps. 18:33; Hab. 3:19) of God's care in dangerous situations. See Animals.

HINGE A flexible device on which a door turns. Proverbs 26:14 compares a lazy person turning in bed to a door turning on its hinges. The meaning of the term translated hinges at 1 Kings 7:50 (KJV, NAS, TEV) is disputed. NIV, NRSV prefer the translation sockets on the grounds that ancient doors swung on doorpins set in sockets rather than on jointed hinges. REB translates, panels.

HINNOM, VALLEY OF (Hĭn′ nŏm) Place name of uncertain meaning; also called the valley of the son(s) of Hinnom. The valley lies in close proximity to Jerusalem (2 Kings 23:10), just south of the ancient city (Josh. 15:8). The valley had a somewhat unglamorous history during the Old Testament period. The worshipers of the pagan deities, Baal and Molech, practiced child sacrifice in the valley of Hinnom (2 Kings 23:10). The first specific mention of human sacrifice in Israel is in 2 Kings 16:3 and in Judah is in 2 Kings 17:17. The parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 28:3 indicates that the scene of the abomination was the valley of Hinnom.

The Hinnom (or Gehenna) Valley in Jerusalem, just south of the ancient city.

See Baal; Gehenna; Hell; Jerusalem; Molech.

Hugh Tobias

HIP The part of the body where the thigh and torso connect. Jacob's hip came out of socket when he wrestled with God at the Jabbok (Gen. 32:25). The Israelites commemorated this encounter by not eating the thigh muscle on the hip socket (Gen. 32:32). To strike an enemy "hip and thigh" (Judg. 15:8) is to attack him fiercely (TEV) or viciously (NIV). Belshazzar's fear at the handwriting on the wall (Dan. 5:6 NAS) was evidenced by his hip joint going slack.

HIPPOPOTAMUS A large, thick-skinned, amphibious, cud-chewing mammal of the family Hippopotamidae. The Hebrew behemoth (Job. 40:15–24) is sometimes understood as the hippopotamus (NAS, TEV margins). Others prefer to identify behemoth with the crocodile (REB), elephant (KJV margin), or with a mythical creature (TEV margin). Hippopotamus remains dating between 1200 and 300 B.C. have been found along the coastal plain near Tel Aviv. It is possible that the hippopotamus was also found in the Jordan River at this time, though archeological confirmation is lacking. See Behemoth.

HIRAH (Hī′ răh) Personal name of unknown meaning. A friend of Judah, the son of Jacob, whom Judah was visiting when he met Shuah, who bore three of his sons (Gen. 38:1–12). Hirah was from the Canaanite city of Adullam, about nine miles northwest of Hebron.

HIRAM (Hī′ răm) Personal name apparently meaning, "brother of the lofty one." 1. King of Tyre, associated with David and Solomon in building the Temple. He is called Hiram (Samuel and Kings) and Huram (Chronicles), but both names refer to the same individual. Other information about him comes from the ancient Jewish historian, Josephus.

Hiram was the son of Abibaal ("my father is Baal") and was nineteen years old when he succeeded his father as king of Tyre on the Phoenician coast, just north of Israel. He reigned some thirty-four years and is said to have died at age fifty-four, although the biblical references to him seem to necessitate a longer reign.

When he became king, he began to improve and to expand his kingdom. He raised banks at the eastern part of Tyre which enlarged the city, and he built a causeway to connect the city with the island temple of Jupiter Olympius in the harbor, after which he modernized the temple.

When David became king of Israel, Hiram sent congratulatory gifts to him, including men and materials to build a palace (2 Sam. 5:11). The friendship between the men grew and was evidenced by the commerce which developed between their two nations. The close relationship continued into Solomon's reign, and the two men made an agreement which resulted in the construction of the Temple in Jerusalem (1 Kings 5:1–12).

This relationship between Israel and Tyre was mutually beneficial. Jerusalem was inland and had the advantages of the overland trade routes. Tyre, as a major seaport, offered the advantages of sea trade. Hiram controlled the maritime trade during this time and was himself a respected world trader. His friendship with David and Solomon undoubtedly explains, at least in part, the prosperity and success of their reigns.

See David; Phoenicia; Solomon; Tyre.

2. Craftsman who did artistic metal work for Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 7:13–45). He lived in Tyre, his father's home town but had a widowed Jewish mother from the tribe of Naphtali.

Hugh Tobias

HIRELING A worker paid wages; a laborer; a hired hand. The work of hired laborers was generally difficult (Job 7:1–2). Mosaic law required paying workers at the close of the day so that they might provide for their families (Deut. 24:14–15). Workers were frequently exploited (Mal. 3:5; Jas. 5:4). John 10:12–13 contrasts the cowardice of a hired shepherd with an owner's self-sacrificing concern for his sheep.

HISS A sound made by forcing breath between the tongue and teeth in mockery or to ward off demons. In the Old Testament an army or nation hissed at their enemy's city or land that suffered defeat or disaster (Jer. 19:8). Most often the reference is to astonishment at the fate of Israel, Jerusalem, or the Temple lying in ruins (1 Kings 9:8; Jer. 18:16, 19:8; Lam. 2:15–16). Other nations and cities were also the objects of hissing: Edom (Jer. 49:17); Babylon (Jer. 50:13); Tyre (Ezek. 27:36); and Nineveh (Zeph. 2:15). Hissing was sometimes accommpanied by wagging the head, clapping hands, gnashing teeth (Lam. 2:15–16), and shaking the fist (Zeph. 2:15).

HISTORY The events which have already occurred and filled time for individuals and for political entities and provided meaning for life. The central importance the Bible places on history distinguishes it from other religions and philosophies of life. History in the Bible is the stage on which God related to people and in which God revealed His nature and purposes to people. It is through studying and understanding history's meaning and direction that Bible truths can be applied today.

Views of History Most human societies have pondered the meaning of events and the goal or direction of history. This has produced widely-differing viewpoints:

1. The chaotic view claims the human story has no purpose, pattern, or significance. No one controls history, and no one knows when, if, or how it will end.

2. The circular or cyclical view focuses on history repeating its patterns in cycles of various lengths or in a spherical pattern with some movement but as basically repetitious. Observation of natural seasons and life cycles advances such a theory, as seen in the Baal religion that tempted Israel. The Greeks described history as a "wheel of unending recurrences," thus a periodic repetition that saw growth and decay again and again. Not surprisingly, the cyclical view provided little ground for the hope that life has ultimate meaning.

3. The Bible's linear view of history gives history a beginning and an end as well as a purpose or direction. The Bible is uniquely tied to history. Christianity links Christian experience with God to certain historical occurrences. Scripture notes God's blessing for the ordering of the seasons (Gen. 8:20–22) and recognizes that apart from God the cycle may lead to a hopeless understanding of life (Eccl. 1:4). Old Testament saints recited their confession by recounting what God had done (Deut. 26:5–9). New Testament saints tell the good news of God's actions through Jesus: that Christ died, that He was buried, and that He rose.

4. A mechanistic view of history attempts to tell mankind's story while seeing humans as a product of nature and completely subject to outside influences. According to this view, the environment determines our history, making our freedom no more than an illusion.

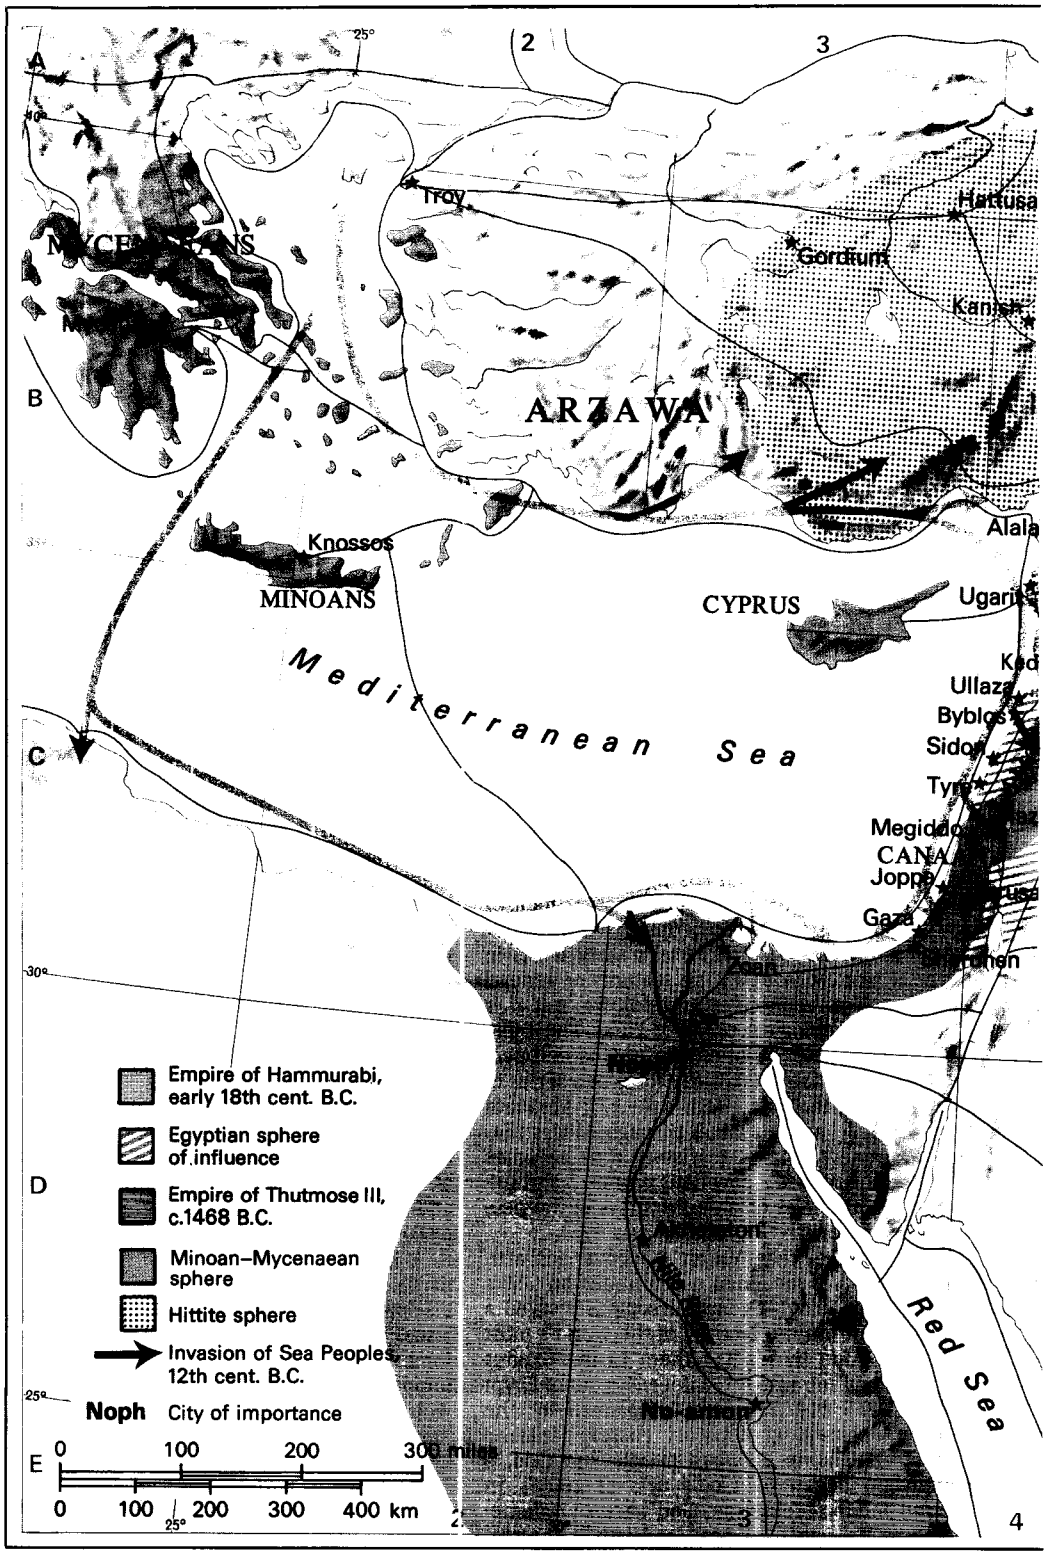
5. A progressive or developmental view of history consists of many varieties with a common belief that to understand the past one must trace the "history" of institutions and movements from their emergence at a simple stage to the culminating, complex stage. Understanding a topic "historically" is often explicitly identified with imposing a developmental scheme.

History in the Biblical Story The biblical narrative reveals the major characteristics of a biblical approach to history. The Bible tells history as a series of God's acts in which He interacts with people to reveal Himself and His saving will for them.

1. Creation and Fall Asserting that God is the Creator of the earth suggests that He is ultimately responsible for all of history and nature. God's power to speak the world into existence implies that the world is not divine or eternal.

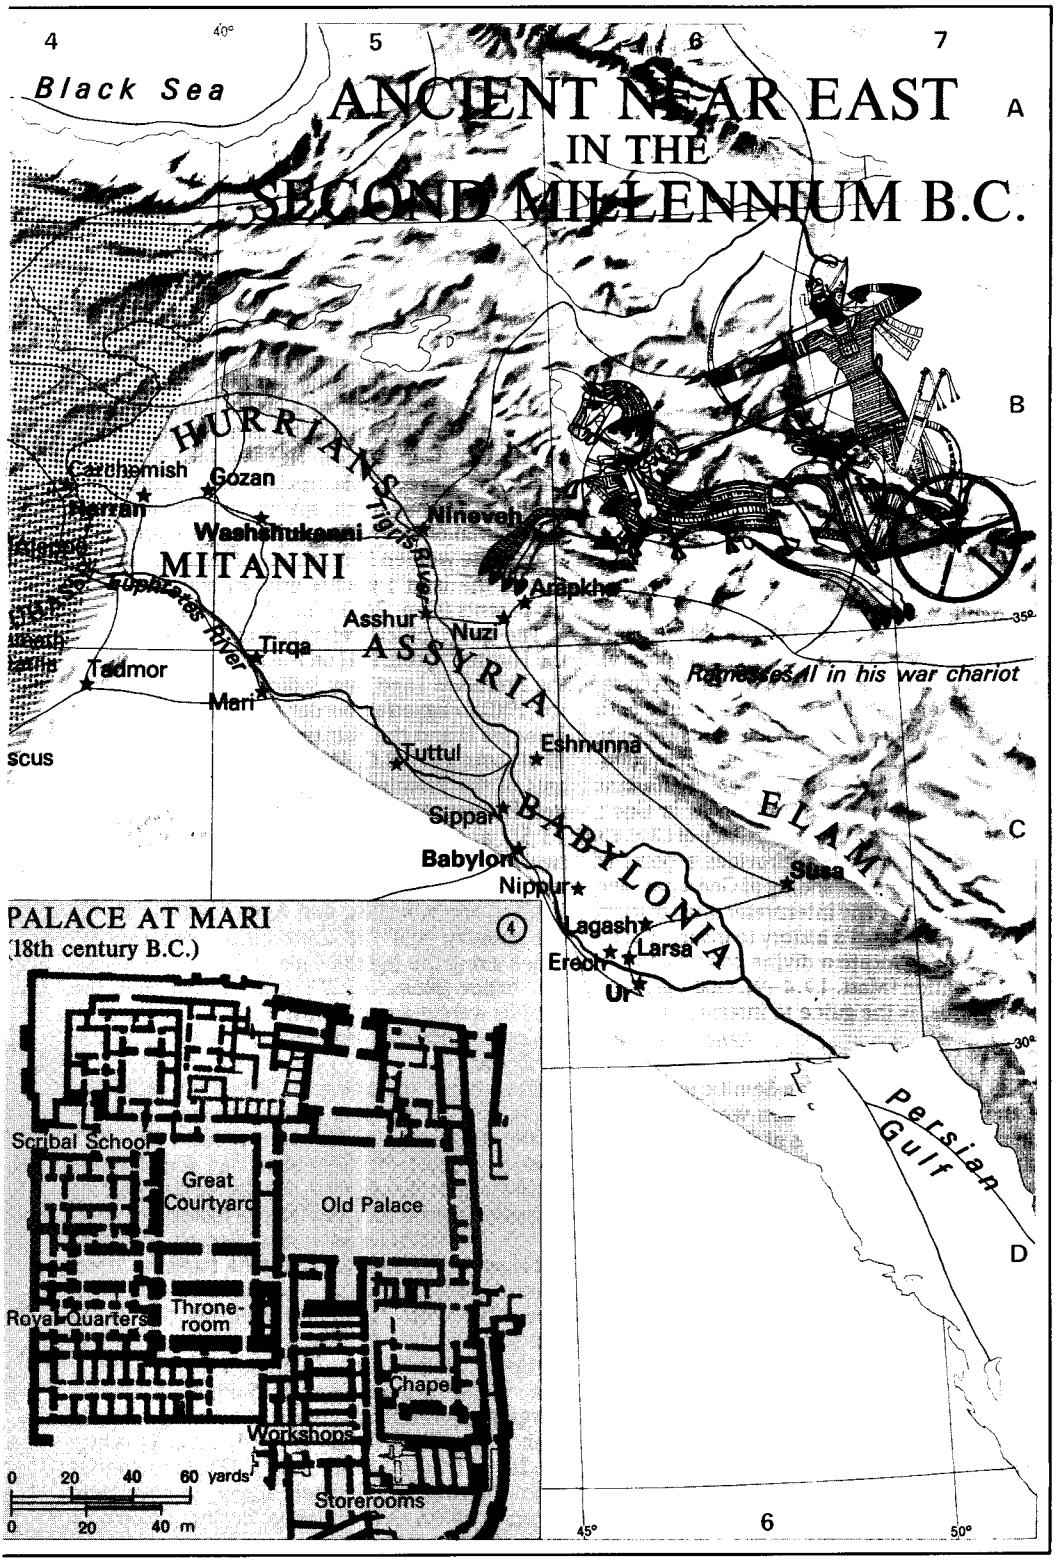
Creation also implies that God is free. He does not need creation but desired it and loves His creation. Because of the loving nature of God, His people have confidence that a future awaits mankind. In God's sovereign freedom He grants humans restricted freedom. This reality is crucial because the biblical narrative suggests that people mysteriously have a role in shaping history. Neither the Creator nor the environment has so determined history that human decisions and human actions make no difference. Rather, God remains in sovereign control of history even as He lets free human actions determine the course of individuals and nations. The Bible does not try to solve this mysterious interworking of God's sovereignty and human freedom.

The Fall is the story of humans' first prideful misuse of freedom (Gen. 1—3). Human freedom and sin are crucial to history's telling, for the Fall means that human freedom will often be used in ways which oppose the Creator's will. History thus becomes not only the story of human events but the story of response and interaction between God and sinful humans.



2. Covenant with Israel The spread of sin despite God's punishment and grace explains why God chose one people—Abraham's family. God diligently worked with this stubborn family. His selection was not out of favoritism. He intended and still intends to bless the whole world through His chosen people (Gen. 12:3; Acts 3:25–26). Thus the reader of biblical history comes to accept that the universal and eternal significance of God's work emerges from His work with an individual people or person. Biblical history focuses tightly upon this particular people, giving a selective view of their history. Israel's story is set in universal history, with all the features of general history such as economics and politics, but it is told from a theological point of view. The Bible concentrates on the relationship of God and people. This relationship takes the form of a series of covenants—with Noah (Gen. 9:9–17), Abraham (Gen. 15; 17), and all Israel through Moses (Ex. 19—24; renewed in 34). History thus becomes the unfolding of God's covenant promises and the covenant faithulness or unfaithfulness of the people. See Covenant.

3. The Exodus Redemption The covenant with Israel that Moses mediated was founded on God's act in history in which He miraculously saved a slave people from the tyranny of the world's most powerful nation by leading them in the Exodus across the sea and into the wilderness out of Egypt (Ex. 1:1—15:21). This set the pattern for the Bible's understanding of history. History centered on the relationship between people and God, a relationship begun by God's acts of grace—in creation and in redemption. God's acts of redemption show He wants the best for His human creatures and is willing to act on their behalf. History can be seen to have purpose and meaning because God has shown His intention to provide that meaning and purpose. God's acts of salvation thus pattern human moral action as response to the expectations of a saving, caring God.



The story of Israel derives from God's activity. History is the medium through which God chooses to reveal Himself. This distinctive historical dimension of Christianity needs to be stressed, especially when addressing more skeptical hearers. God reveals Himself by what He says as well as what He does. God's work is not left to mere human discernment but is entrusted to inspired prophetic interpretation. The inspired oral or written interpretation of history ensures the revelatory quality of God's enacted history.

4. The Incarnation also represents God's dramatic, invasive activity in history. His supreme Revelation (Heb. 1:1–4) became a historical Man (John 1:14; Gal. 4:4; Heb. 2:18, 4:15). God's becoming human affirmed His commitment to history as the place for His revelation. Jesus stands at the center of biblical history. His ministry inaugurates God's kingdom; His return will signal its consummation. Jesus' miracles and exorcisms are the delivering works of God which show that history is the place of spiritual warfare. The kingdom of God is breaking in through the person of Jesus (Matt. 12:28). The cross shows God's determination regarding history; the love displayed when Jesus bears our sins must be played out on the field of history. Mysteriously, God can sovereignly work His redemption even by using sinful men, such as those who crucified Jesus. Jesus' victory over sin, death, and evil on the cross, and the confirming resurrection, reveal that history will end, and it will end well.

5. The resurrection (assuming the life and death of Jesus) is the crucial point of defense of the historical validity of Christianity (1 Cor. 15:14). Evidence for the resurrection is significant: the empty tomb, the appearances (1 Cor. 15:5–8), the prophecy of the Scriptures and Jesus (Luke 24:25–27,44), and the ongoing witness of the church. The empty tomb provides an illustration of the relationship between historical evidence and faith. All four Gospel writers confess that the discovery of the empty tomb did not produce faith in a living Jesus. (John 20:8 presents the only partial exception.) These disciples were made full disciples only by a confrontation with the risen Jesus. The role of evidence is limited: an empty tomb does not a resurrection make. Evidence is important, however, because an occupied tomb would disprove the resurrection. So it is with most biblical evidence, accepting God's Word involves more than being convinced by the facts. The testimony of these eyewitnesses calls one to believe beyond mere evidence; they did not, however, ask one to believe against the evidence. The nature and historical reality of the resurrection is

A
B
C
D
E
2
3
4
25°
30°
Troy
Hattusa
Gordium
Kanish
ARZAWA
Alala
Knossos
MINOANS
CYPRUS
Ugarit
Ullaza
Byblos
Sidon
Tyre
Megiddo
CANA
Joppa
Gaza
Zeara
Red Sea
Empire of Hammurabi, early 18th cent. B.C.
Egyptian sphere of influence
Empire of Thutmose III, c.1468 B.C.
Minoan–Mycenaean sphere
Hittite sphere
Invasion of Sea Peoples, 12th cent. B.C.
Noph City of importance
0 100 200 300 miles
0 100 200 300 400 km

© carta

ANCIENT NEAR EAST
IN THE
SECOND MILLENNIUM B.C.
4
5
6
7
40°
A
B
C
D
Black Sea
HURRIANS
MITANNI
ASSYRIA
BABYLONIA
ELAM
Persian Gulf
Carchemish
Gozan
Harran
Washshukanni
Nineveh
Alalakh
Ashur
Nuzi
Arrapkha
Tigris River
Euphrates River
Tirqa
Tadmor
Mari
Tuttul
Eshnunna
Sippar
Babylon
Nippur
Lagash
Larsa
Erech
Ur
Susa
35°
30°
45°
50°
Ramesses II in his war chariot
PALACE AT MARI
(18th century B.C.)
4
Scribal School
Great Courtyard
Old Palace
Royal Quarters
Throne-room
Chapel Workshops
Storerooms
0 20 40 60 yards
0 20 40 m

crucial for history. Because of Christ's resurrection, believers may anticipate a historical and transforming resurrection for themselves (1 Cor. 15:42–44).

History for Jesus' followers will be marked by tension. Believers live between two decisive acts of God; they live between the partial realization of God's kingdom in Jesus' first coming and the final fulfillment of the kingdom when Christ will come again. Believers will suffer because they bear witness to the King the world does not acknowledge; they live by the principles of the kingdom (Matt. 5—7) the world does not acknowledge. Despite the inevitable suffering the church is sustained by the Holy Spirit. The church's history is the story of the Spirit's transforming, empowering, and equipping for mission.

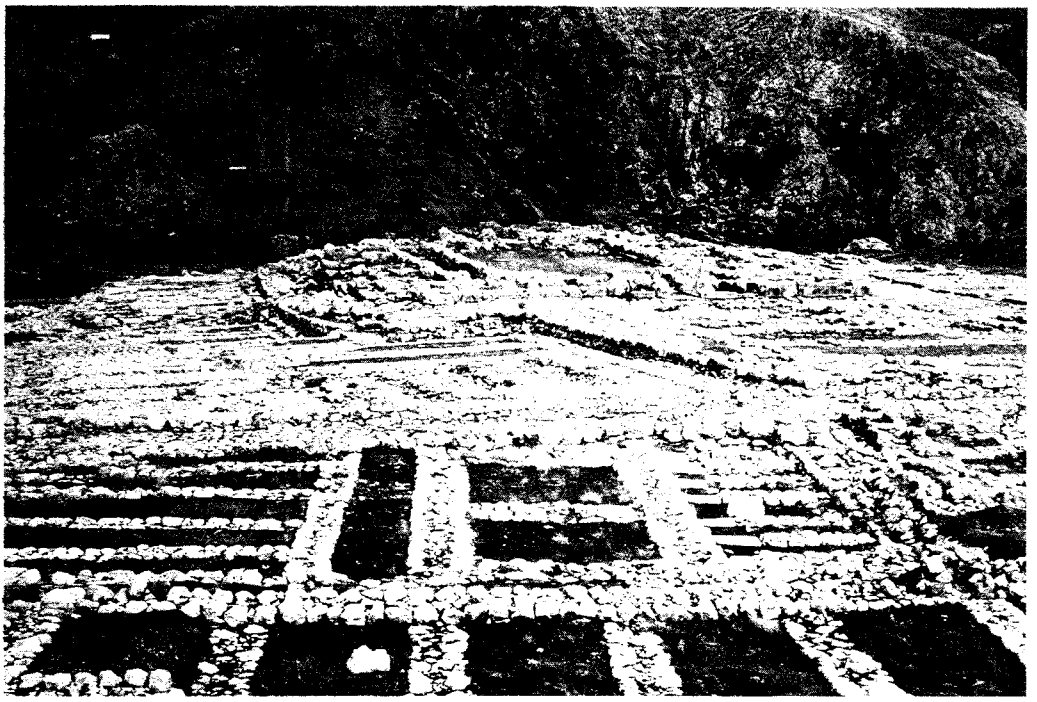
6. Christ's return will signal the end of world history and the full revelation of its meaning. The prophetic vision of God's final kingdom will be realized fully. History will close as the one family of faith is inducted to a qualitatively greater future and fellowship with God.

Hints for Historical Interpretation (1) Language, historical language included, is multi-purposeful. For example, biblical language often intends to report (about history) but it also seeks to evoke faith (John 20:21). Thus the biblical documents are valuable as historical reports, but their full comprehension demands faithful response. (2) Historians must acknowledge the Bible's openness to God's miraculous intervention. An experience of Christ's saving power in the present provides a point of comparison for an understanding of God's past and future saving acts. (3) The interpreter must discern the context within Israel's history to insure that he or she does not advocate a divine concession but God's full intention (Matt. 19:4–9). God's greatest revelation, Jesus, is the guide to interpretation.

Randy Hatchett

H

HITTITES AND HIVITES Non-Semitic minorities within the population of Canaan who frequently became involved in the affairs of the Israelites.



Hittite and Hivite peoples of Indo-European origin, identified within the population of Canaan (as "sons" of Canaan) in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:15,17), seemingly infiltrated from their cultural and political centers in the north and settled throughout Palestine. Although the history and culture of the Hittites is being clarified, a problem exists with the so-called "Hivites," a name of unknown origin without any extra-biblical references. That they were uncircumcised (Gen. 34:2,14) would suggest an Indo-European rather than Semitic origin. The more acceptable identification therefore would be with the biblical Horites (Hurrians) whose history and character are well-known from extra-biblical sources and consistent with role attributed to them in the biblical text. The Septuagint reading "Choraios" (Horite) for the Massoretic "Hivite" in Gen.34:2 and Josh. 9:7 suggests this identification (see Horites; Hurrians).

Hittites in the Bible Hittites appear among the ethnic groups living in urban enclaves or as individuals in Canaan interacting with the Israelites from patriarchal times to the end of the monarchy (Gen. 15:20; Deut. 7:1; Judg. 3:5). As a significant segment of the Canaan's population, these "children of Heth" permanently became identified as "sons" of Canaan (Gen. 10:15). In patriarchal times, the reference to King Tidal (in Hittite Tudhaliya II) in Gen. 14:1 is a possible link to early imperial Hatti. In Canaan, the Hittites established a claim on the southern hill country, especially the Hebron area. As a result, Abraham lived among this native population as a "stranger and a sojourner" (Gen. 23:4). He was forced to purchase the Cave of Machpelah from Ephron the Hittite as a family tomb, specifically for the immediate burial of Sarah (Gen. 23). Esau's marriage to two Hittite women ("daughters of Heth . . . daughters of the land") greatly grieved and displeased his parents (Gen. 26:34,35; 27:46).

The geographical reference to "all the land of the Hittites" (Josh.1:4) on the northern frontier of the Promised Land may indicate a recognition of the Hittite/Egyptian border treaty established by Rameses II and the Hittites under King Hattusilis III of about 1270 B.C. Moses' listing of the inhabitants of the Promised Land included the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Hivites, and Jebusites (Ex. 13:5), a situation that was confirmed by the twelve spies sent to explore the land. They reported that Amalekites occupied the Negev, the Hittites, the Jebusites, and Amorites lived in the hill country, and the Canaanites were concentrated along the Mediterranean coast and the Jordan Valley (Num. 13:29; Josh. 11:3); thus the Hittites were doomed to displacement by the infiltrating and invading Hebrews (Ex. 3:8,17; 23:23; 33:2; etc.).

Devastation and pressures from the west by the Phrygians and the Sea Peoples brought another Hittite population to Canaan about 1200 B.C. Ezekiel recalled that Jerusalem had Amorite and Hittite origins (Ezek. 16:3,45). David purchased a threshing floor from Araunah the Jebusite (2 Sam. 24:16–25) whose name may suggest a Hittite noble status ("arawanis" in Hittite meaning "freeman, noble"). Later, the account of David's illicit love affair with Bathsheba indicates that Uriah and possibly other Hittites were serving as mercenaries in David's army (2 Sam. 11:3,6; 23:39). The Hittite woman among Solomon's foreign wives was probably the result of a foreign alliance with a neo-Hittite king of north Syria (1 Kings 10:29—11:2; 2 Chron. 1:17). Hittites together with other foreign elements appear to have been conscripted to forced labor during Solomon's reign (1 Kings 9:20–21).

Languages of the Hittite World Records of the Ruins of the great temple at Boghaskoy, Turkey, the site of the ancient Hittite capital.

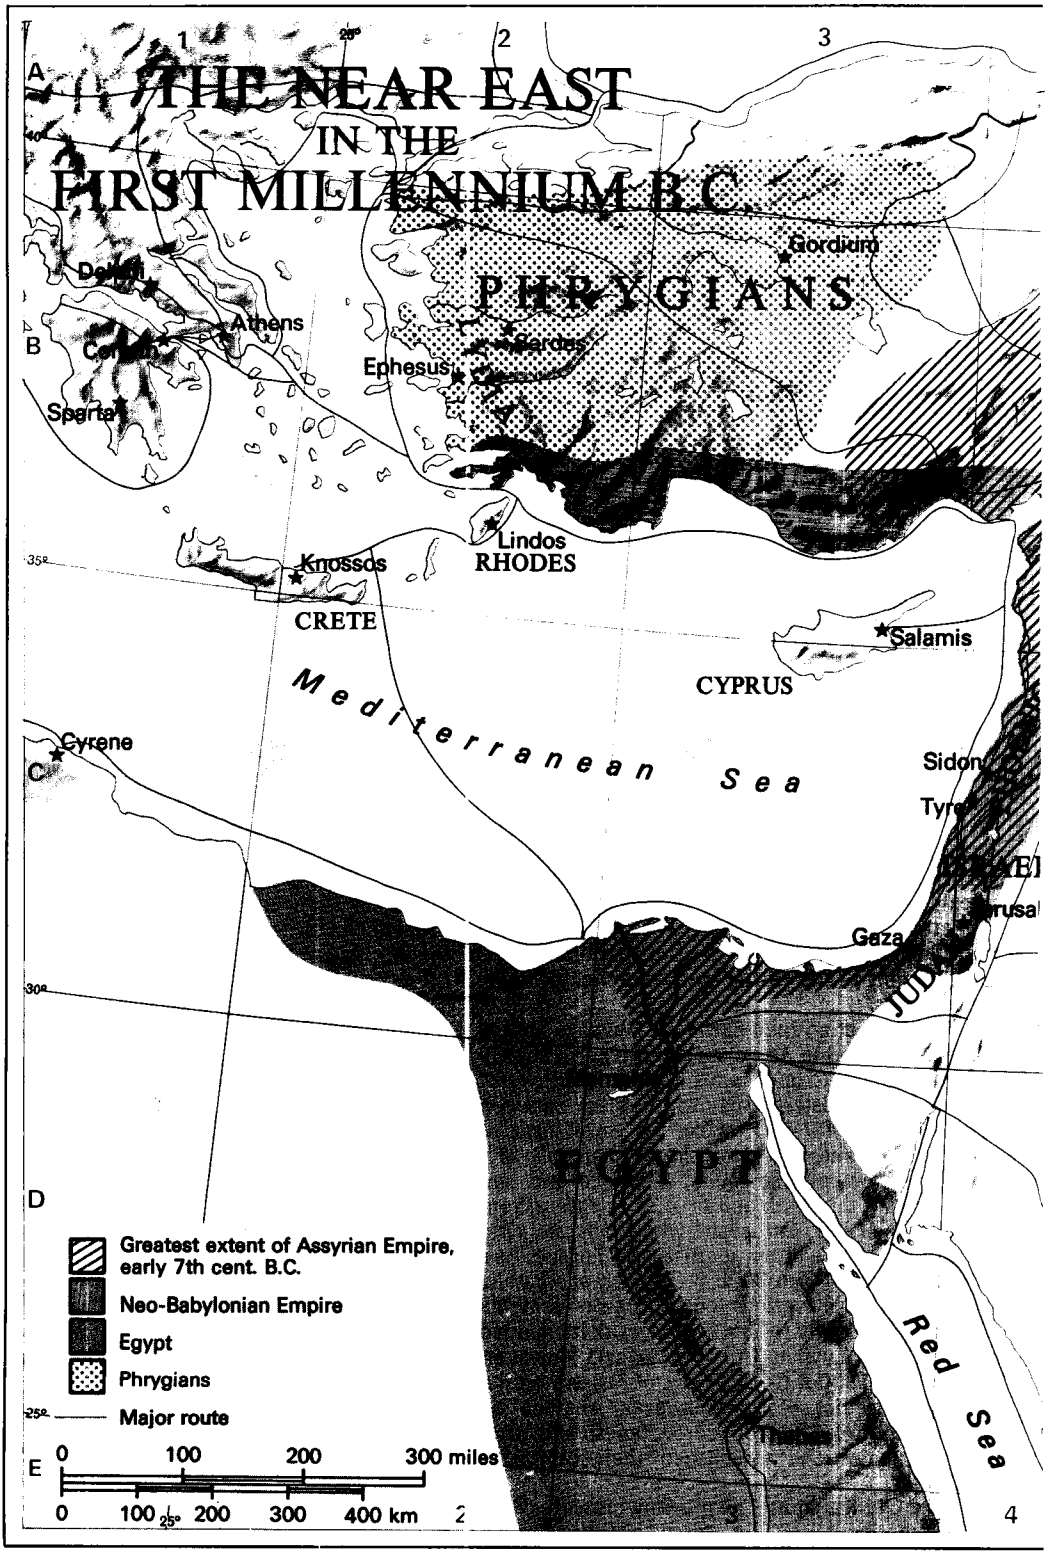
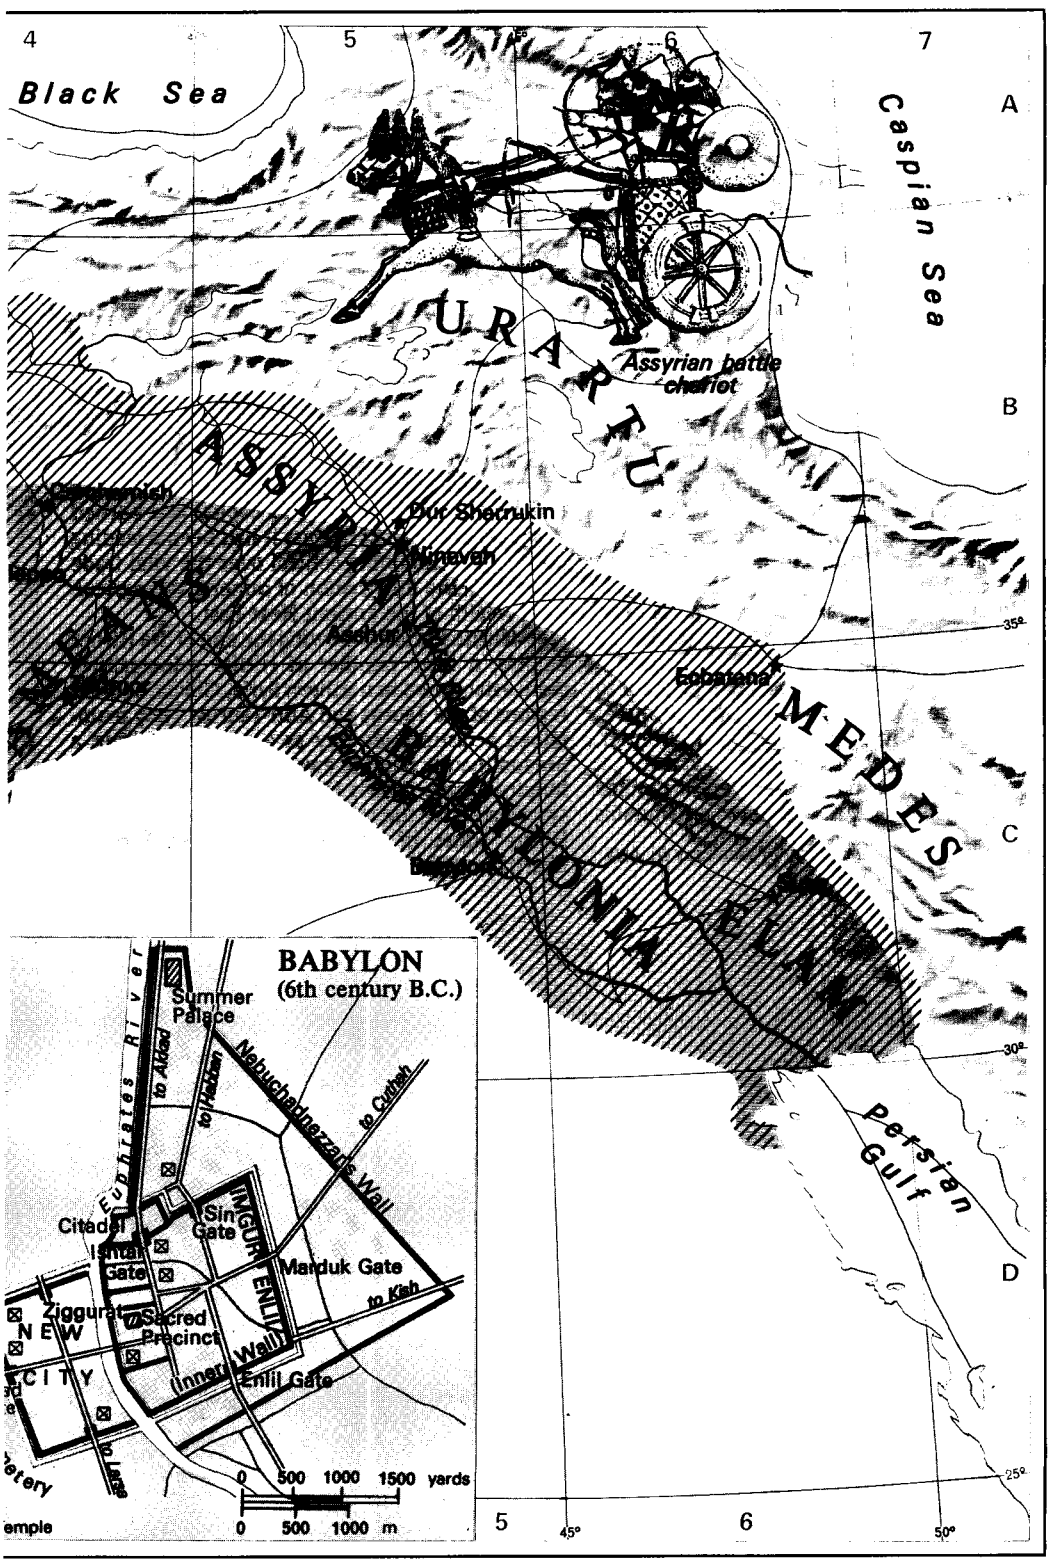
Assyrian trade colonies in the "Land of Hatti" suggest an earlier sub-stratum of linguistic and cultural development in the vicinity of Kanesh. This non-Indo-European language also found in texts from the Boghazkoy archives has been called "Hattic." It appears to have been at least one of the languages spoken in central Anatolia before the coming of the Hittite-Luwian branch of Indo-Europeans.



Speakers of an Indo-European language appear to have arrived in Anatolia from the north shortly before 4000 B.C. and gradually spread southward. These northwestern Anatolian settlers between 4000 and 3000 B.C. spoke an early form of Greek. The impression in Central Anatolia is of a generally peaceful spread of influence and language from the south and to a lesser extent from the west of Indo-Europeans whose ancestors recently had arrived from southeastern Europe. As a result from 3000 to 2000 B.C. much of Anatolia was occupied by various Indo-European elements who spoke closely related languages that included Hittite and Luwian (the Arzawans). However, soon after 1800 B.C., the kings of Kussara on the eastern frontier of Indo-European Anatolia assumed control. They conquered Kanesh and other central cities and established their capital at Hattusas.

Hittite Old Kingdom The growing pressure of the Hurrians about 1780 B.C. forced a Hittite consolidation and the eventual establishment of their fortress capital at Hattusas within the crescent of the Halys River. There, Hattusilis I quickly consolidated and expanded what is referred to as the Old Hittite Kingdom.



Hittite Empire The vitality of the Hurrian kingdom of Mitanni and the Egyptian military incursions into Syria under Thutmose III about 1450 B.C. stifled Hittite development until the death of the Egyptian pharaoh about 1436 B.C. Tudhaliyas I, the new Hittite king, relieved of Egyptian trib-

Hittite ornament portraying two stags standing on what may be an altar and encircled by a wreath.

THE NEAR EAST
IN THE
FIRST MILLENNIUM B.C.
Gordium
PHRYGIANS
Delphi
Athens
Sardes
Ephesus
Sparta
Lindos
RHODES
Knossos
CRETE
Salamis
CYPRUS
Mediterranean Sea
Cyrene
Sidon
Tyre
Gaza
EGYPT
Red Sea
Greatest extent of Assyrian Empire, early 7th cent. B.C.
Neo-Babylonian Empire
Egypt
Phrygians
Major route
0 100 200 300 miles
0 100 200 300 400 km

© carta

4
5
6
7
A
B
C
D
Black Sea
Caspian Sea
URARTU
Assyrian battle chariot
ASSYRIA
Dur Sharrukin
Nineveh
Ecbatana
MEDES
BABYLONIA
Persian Gulf
35°
30°
25°
45°
50°
BABYLON
(6th century B.C.)
Summer Palace
Euphrates River to Akkad to Hillah
Nebuchadnezzar's Wall to Cuthah
Citadel
Ishtar Gate
Sin Gate
IMGUR ENLIL
Marduk Gate to Kish
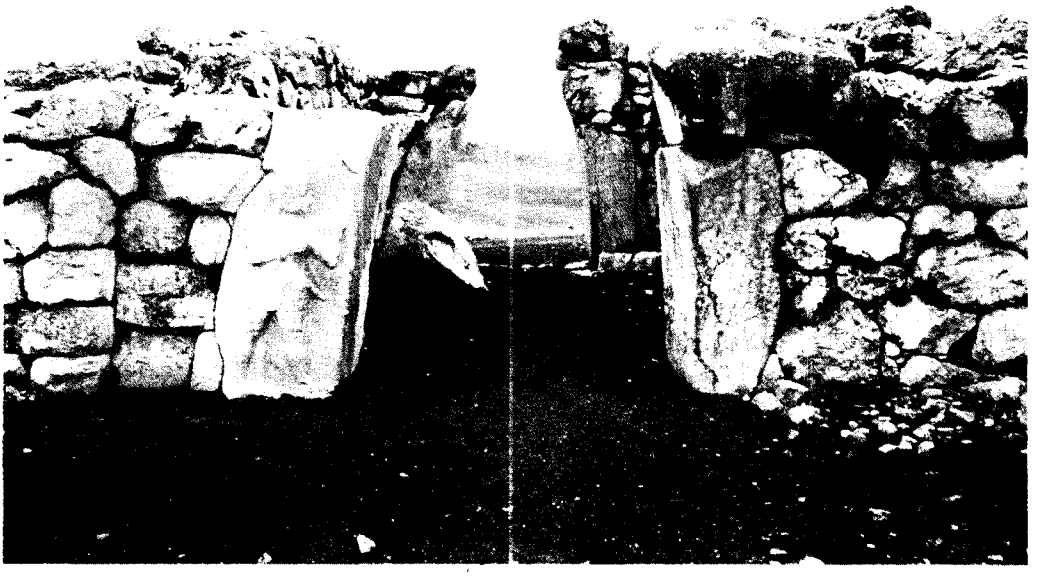
Ziggurat
Sacred Precinct
NEW CITY
Inner Wall
Enlil Gate
to Larsa
0 500 1000 1500 yards
0 500 1000 m

ute, defeated Aleppo and Mitanni and reclaimed control of the Mesopotamian trade route. During his reign other significant battles were won, but Hittite territories were besieged on all sides with the result that when Tudhaliyas died, the Hittite kingdom suffered a disastrous decline. About 1380 B.C. after a series of victories against Hittite enemies, Suppiluliumas gained the throne and moved southward against Mitanni. He soon claimed all territories west of the Euphrates. Following a treaty with Babylon and domination of Mitanni, he reorganized northern Syria to ensure Hittite supremacy and control of the trade routes of the region.



When Suppiluliumas died in 1334 B.C., his younger son Mursilis II followed with a very successful reign that included expansion in the west and preparation for the major confrontation that would come during his successor's reign. Muwatillis (about 1308–1285 B.C.) concentrated all the forces of the Hittite Empire in northern Syria to meet the challenge of Ramses II of Egypt at Kadesh. Although the battle in 1286 was indecisive, the subsequent treaty sixteen years later (1270 B.C.) in which Egypt conceded all territories north of Damascus to the Hittites would seem to suggest that the balance of power, for a time at least, favored the Hittites. On the eastern frontier, however, Mitanni became an Assyrian vassal.

Dangers on both east and west were magnified by an internal power struggle between Mursilis III, Muwatallis' son and successor, and his uncle Hattusilis, who ultimately exiled Mursilis and became king (about 1278). Western lands in Asia Minor were lost. Assyria continued its westward move and, in spite of the Egypt-Hittite treaty, reached the Euphrates and cut off Hittite copper supplies.

During the early reign of Tudhaliyas IV (1250–1220), the Hittites maintained control over the Syrian coast and invaded Cyprus for its copper mines. The Hittite treaty with Amurru, along the Syrian coast, prohibited trade with Assyria. The greater threat existed in new migrations from the west. Hittite lands were overrun and their capital destroyed by the hordes identified as "Sea Peoples," who, dislodged from their traditional homelands in the Greek-Aegean world, swept into Anatolia and the Levant (about 1200 B.C.). The Hittite empire was destroyed, and its capital was burned to the ground. For 250 years it had been a leading power by maintaining control over the vital trade routes and the distribution of mineral and agricultural wealth of the ancient Near East.

Neo-Hittite Period Following the end of the Hittite empire, a large number of Hittite principalities were established in northern Syria, Cilicia, and the regions of the Taurus and Anti-Taurus. They maintained a distinct identity as a minority within a predominantly Semitic environment for over four hundred years. When Urartu was defeated as Assyria's rival for the resources of Anatolia, the neo-Hittite states of northern Syria, now without Urartian support, could not withstand Assyrian pressure. By the end of 700 B.C. the Hittites had been absorbed into the Assyrian empire.

The King's Gate at the Hittite city of Hattusas in Asia Minor (modern Turkey).

Hittite relief showing the king Tudhaliya IV being protected by the god Sharruma (in the king's hand).

George L. Kelm

HIVITES A name that occurs twenty-five times in the Bible though not in texts outside the Bible. Hivites are found in Gibeon (Josh 9:7; 11:19), Shechem (Gen. 34:2), below Hermon in the land of Mizpah (Josh. 11:3), and in the Lebanon mountains (Judg. 3:3). Most frequently the name appears in the list of nations God would drive out of the land during the Israelite conquest (for example, Deut. 7:1).

Zibeon is identified as a Hivite (Gen. 36:2), but is listed among the Horites in Genesis 36:20,29. In addition, the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation reads "Horite" for "Hivite" in some texts (Gen. 34:2; Josh. 9:7). This may indicate an early linguistic confusion of "Horite" and "Hivite." It is unlikely that the two are identical, although the exact relationship is unclear. See Horites.

James C. Moyer

HIZKI (Hĭz' kī) Personal name meaning, "my strength" or a shortened form of "Yah is my strength." Modern translation spelling of Hezeki, a Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:17).

HIZKIAH (Hĭz kī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah is my strength." 1. Abbreviated form in Hebrew for Hezekiah and used as alternate spelling of the king's name (2 Kings 18; Prov. 25:1). The ancestor of Zephaniah, the prophet, may have been the same king (Zeph. 1:1). See Hezekiah; Zephaniah. 2. Apparently the Hebrew name of a clan which returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C., the Babylonian name being Ater (Neh. 7:21; parallel passage Ezra 2:16 in Hebrew has another variant spelling—Jehizkiah). Both Ater and Hizkijah appear, however, in the list of those who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:17). This would apparently represent men of the next generation. 3. A descendant of David living after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 3:23).

HIZKIJAH (Hĭz kī' jah) KJV spelling of Hizkiah in Nehemiah 10:17. Modern translations usually use Hezekiah. See Hizkiah.

HOARFROST, HOAR FROST KJV terms for frost from "hoar" (white) and "frost" (Ex. 16:14; Job 38:29; Ps. 147:16).

HOBAB (Hō' băb) Personal name meaning, "beloved" or "cunning." Father-in-law of Moses (Num. 10:29; Judg. 4:11). Some uncertainty exists concerning the identity of Moses' father-in-law. Jethro (Ex. 3:1; 18:2) and Reuel (Ex. 2:16) are also given as names for the father-in-law of the great lawgiver. Several explanations have been offered. Some say different groups within Israel handed down the story of Moses in oral tradition with different names for his father-in-law. Others say Reuel and Jethro were different names for the same person, while Hobab was the son of Reuel or Raguel (Num. 10:29) and thus the brother-in-law of Moses. Others say that the Hebrew term for father-in-law really has the more general meaning of "related by marriage." Moses urged Hobab to accompany the Israelites through the wilderness as a guide. See Moses; Jethro; Reuel.

HOBAH (Hō' bah) Place name probably meaning "guilt" in Hebrew but "land of reeds" in Akkadian. Town in Syria to which Abraham pursued the coalition of eastern kings, who kidnapped Lot (Gen. 14:15). Attempts to identify Hobah with Apum or Upe in the Amarna letters from Egypt have recently been questioned. The town or region must lie somewhere north of Damascus, but its precise location is not known. It symbolizes Abraham's ability to drive his enemies completely out of the land of promise.

HOBAIAH (Hō bā' iah) Personal name meaning, "Yah hides." Clan of priests in time of Zerrubbabel who did not have family records to prove their descent from pure priestly lines and were excluded from the priesthood (Ezra 2:61; Neh. 7:63). Some translations use Habaiah in one or both texts.

HOD (Hŏd) Personal name meaning, "majesty." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:37).

HODAIAH (Hō dā' iah) KJV, REB spelling of Hodaviah (1 Chron. 3:24) based on Hebrew text in which copyist has obviously transposed two letters and early scribes have noted proper reading in margin of text. See Hodaviah.

HODAVIAH (Hō dā vī' ah) Personal name meaning, "praise Yah." The longer form Hodaviahu appears in the scribal marginal note correcting the Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 3:24. See Hodaiah. 1. The final generation of the sons of David which the Chronicler listed (1 Chron. 3:24). He appears to have been born about 420 B.C. The listing of seven brothers may be a cryptic note of hope in the Davidic dynasty for the Jewish community after the Exile. 2. Original ancestor of clan in half-tribe of Manasseh living east of the Jordan (1 Chron. 5:24). The list leads to an explanation of Israel's loss of land east of the Jordan because of sin and idolatry. 3. A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 9:7). 4. A clan of Levites who returned to Judah under Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:40). He was kin to the leading priest Joshua or to a Levite with the same name (compare Ezra 2:2,36). Ezra 3:9 reads Judah instead of Hodaviah, probably a copyists' change from the less familiar to the more familiar word. Similarly, in Hebrew Nehemiah 7:43 has Hodevah, a copyist omitting one letter.

HODESH (Hō' dĕsh) Personal name meaning, "new moon." Wife of Shaharaim of tribe of Benjamin who bore children in Moab (1 Chron. 8:9).

HODEVAH (Hō' dė văh) Transliteration of Hebrew text in Nehemiah 7:43 for original Hodaviah. See Hodaviah.

HODIAH (Hō dī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah is majestic." 1. Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:19), though Hebrew text had led translators to interpret Hodiah as a wife (REB, KJV), the husband of Naham's sister (TEV), or the father (NAS, NIV, NRSV). Other scholars would assume copyists have changed the text from an original "sons of his wife the Jewess." 2. A Levite who helped Ezra explain the meaning of the Law to the people (Neh. 8:7; note KJV spelling, Hodijah) and had a leading part in Israel's confession of sin and worship (Neh. 9:5). He signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:10). Another Levite and a leader of the people with the same name also signed the covenant (Neh. 10:13,18).

HODIJAH (Hō dī' jah) KJV spelling of Hodiah. See Hodiah.

HOE A tool for loosening the soil and cutting out weeds around cultivated plants (Isa. 7:25; KJV, mattock). See Tools.

HOGLAH (Hŏg' lah) Personal name meaning, "partridge." Daughter of Zelophehad in tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:33). See Zelophehad. Her marriage to a son of her father's brothers helped ensure the family land inheritance remained within the tribe (Num. 36:11). See also Bethhoglah.

HOHAM (Hō' hăm) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps related to "unlucky." King of Hebron who joined forces with the king of Jerusalem to punish Gibeon for making an alliance with Joshua (Josh. 10:3). He was one of five kings shut in cave, used to show Israel's superiority over the kings by the symbol of Israel's captains putting their feet on the kings' necks, and then killed and hung on a tree (Josh. 10:15–26). Thus Joshua gained control of the south, destroying Hebron (10:36–37).

HOLD KJV term for a (fortified) place of refuge. Modern translations generally render the underlying Hebrew as stronghold (for example, Judg. 9:46,49; 1 Sam. 22:4; 2 Sam. 5:7). Occasionally other terms are used in place of hold: fortress (2 Sam. 24:7 NIV, NRSV); hill (Mic. 4:8 NRSV, perhaps in the sense of citadel); fortified cities (Hab. 1:10 NIV); refuge (Nah. 1:7 NIV). In Acts 4:3 to be put in the hold means to be put in custody (NRSV) or in jail (NIV). See Fort, Fortification.

HOLM TREE Small, holly-like, evergreen oak (Quercus ilex). The identity of the tree of Isaiah 44:14 is disputed: cypress (NAS, NIV); ilex (REB); holm oak or tree (NAS margin, NRSV); oak (TEV).

HOLON (Hō' lŏn) Place name meaning, "sandy spot." 1. Town in the hill country of Judah allotted to tribe of Judah and given as city for Levites (Josh. 15:51; 21:15). It may be modern khirbet Illin near Beth-zur. The parallel passage (1 Chron. 6:58) has Hilez or Hilen in different manuscripts. 2. City of Moab that Jeremiah condemned (Jer. 48:21). Its location is not known.

HOLY A characteristic unique to God's nature which becomes the goal for human moral character. The idea of "holy" is important for an understanding of God, of worship, and of the people of God in the Bible. Holy has four distinct meanings. First is "to be set apart." This applies to places where God is present, like the Temple and the tabernacle, and to things and persons related to those holy places or to God Himself. Next, it means to be "perfect, transcendent, or spiritually pure, evoking adoration and reverence." This applies primarily to God, but secondarily to saints or godly people. Next, it means something or someone who evokes "veneration or awe, being frightening beyond belief." This is clearly the application to God and is the primary meaning of "holy." It is continued in the last definition, "filled with superhuman and potential fatal power." This speaks of God, but also of places or things or persons which have been set apart by God's presence. A saint is a holy person. To be sanctified is to be made holy.

God is holy. Fire is the symbol of holy power. Jealousy, wrath, remoteness, cleanliness, glory, and majesty are related to it. He is unsearchable, incomprehensible, incomparable, great, wonderful, and exalted. His name is Holy.

Holiness is in tension with relational personhood. Holiness tends toward separation and uniqueness. Personhood determines relations and close communion. Holiness inspires awe and fear. Personhood inspires love and the wish to be near. Both are in the Bible as necessary ways to think of and experience God. Both are necessary if one is to avoid shallow, one-sided thinking about God. Neither holiness nor personhood alone can do justice to the biblical portrayal of God. Both in their mutual tension help capture a more adequate doctrine and experience of God.

The biblical view combines these. Leviticus 17—25 presents all laws to be kept so that persons may be holy as God is holy. Holiness in God is seen as moral perfection in Psalm 89:35. Holiness in believing Christians was attained through the cross and is to be preserved in clean and moral living. Holiness comes to imply the fullness and completeness of God and godliness in all its facets and meanings.

Thus "holy" defines the godness of God. It also defines places where God is present. For the holy God to be present among His people special holy places were set apart where God and people could safely come together. The tabernacle and Temple filled this purpose. Special restrictions on access were established for the safety of the worshipers. Rules of sacrifice and cleanliness helped them prepare for this contact. A special place, the holy of holies, was completely cut off from common access. Only the high priest could enter there, and then only once a year after special preparation.

Holy also applied to persons who were to meet God. The priests had to undergo special rites that sanctified and purified them for service in the Temple. God wanted all His people to share His presence. They had to be instructed in the character and actions what would accomplish that. The Holiness Code (Lev. 17—25) commands the people to obey God's laws in all parts of life in order to be "holy: for I the Lord your God am holy" (19:2). Here holiness is seen to include a moral character as well as cultic purity. Sin and disobedience works the opposite and has to be cleansed or atoned by sacrifice (Lev. 1—7; 16).

An understanding of holiness is needed for New Testament study to appreciate the cross and the results of God's work through the cross. The Gospels make clear that Jesus came to save His people from their sins (Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:31–35). The crucifixion is portrayed as Christ shedding His blood and giving His body for the remission of sins (Matt. 26:26–29; Mark 14:22–25; Luke 22:19–20). Faith in Christ is portrayed as acceptance of His full atonement for sin (1 John 2:2; 3:5; Rev. 5:9).

The Holy Spirit is the agent of holiness for the church and its leaders (Acts 1:8; 2:4; 5:32; 13:2–4). He keeps the church pure (Acts 5:1–11). He promotes holiness in its members (1 Cor. 6:19; 1 Thess. 4:7).

Christians are called to holy living (1 Cor. 1:2; 3:17). They are saints who lead godly, righteous lives. Being sanctified, or made holy, is a work of the Holy Spirit on the basis of Christ's atonement that calls for obedient submission from those who have been saved. Christians are holy because of their calling in Christ, because of His atonement for their sins, and because of the continual minis-

H

The Holy	The Personal
Cannot be comprehended rationally.	Understood in terms of relationships.
Sensed and protected against. Avoided in contact and sight.	One can receive, respond, accept, and love.
Sins must be expiated and purged.	Sins can be forgiven with fellowship restored.
Beyond time—yet claims sacred times.	Redemption shows will, action, goal.
Beyond space—yet claims sacred space.	Creator—creature.
Life-threatening—yet strangely necessary to life.	Father—child.
Repels—yet fascinates and draws.	Judge—sinner, rebel.
Always awesome, mysterious, unnerving.	Savior—needy suppliant.
Here one worships and submits.	Lord—servant.
Portrayed in the sacrificial system, in tabernacle, Temple, priesthood, and in the cross.	Here one believes, loves, serves.
	Portrayed in the incarnation and in the gift of the Holy Spirit, in Israel as the people of God, and in the church.

trations of the Holy Spirit. They are holy inasmuch as they receive and submit to these saving and sanctifying agents. John D. W. Watts

HOLY CITY Designation for Jerusalem (Neh. 11:1,18; Isa. 48:2; 52:1; Dan. 9:24; Matt. 4:5; 27:53; Rev. 11:2) and for the new, heavenly Jerusalem (Rev. 21:2,10; 22:19) because the holy God lived there. See Holy.

HOLY CONVOCATION See Festivals.

HOLY GHOST KJV designation for the Holy Spirit. See Holy Spirit.

HOLY OF HOLIES The innermost sanctuary of the Temple. Separated from the other parts of the Temple by a thick curtain, the holy of holies was specially associated with the presence of Yahweh. In the early years of the existence of the Temple the holy of holies contained the ark of the covenant. See Temple.

HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL In Isaiah 1:4, a designation for Yahweh. The title stresses God's nature as holy and His unique relationship to Israel. In the Old Testament, this designation is used especially in the Book of Isaiah. In the New Testament Jesus is referred to as the Holy One. See God; Holy.

HOLY PLACE The courts, the inner room, and the outer room of the tabernacle (Ex. 26:33). Later the expression was used in reference to the Temple and its environs. It was a holy place in the sense of being a place set apart for Yahweh. See Temple.

HOLY SPIRIT The mysterious third Person of the Trinity through whom God acts, reveals His will, empowers individuals, and discloses His personal presence in the Old and New Testament.

Old Testament The term "Holy Spirit" in the Old Testament is found only in Psalm 51:11; Isaiah 63:10–11. References to the spirit of God, however, are abundant. In one sense the Spirit of God is depicted as a mighty wind, Hebrew using the same word ruach for wind, breath, and spirit. During the time of the Exodus, God deployed this wind to part the sea thus enabling the Israelites to pass through safely and elude Pharaoh and his army (Ex. 14:21). God used this agent in two ways: as a destructive force that dries up the waters (Hos. 13:15), or as the power of God in gathering clouds to bring the refreshing rain (1 Kings 18:45). The spirit exercised control over the chaotic waters at the beginning of creation (Gen. 1:2; 8:1; Compare Ps. 33:6; Job 26:13). Of the eighty-seven times that the Spirit is described as wind, thirty-seven describe the wind as the agent of God, mostly baneful, and ever strong and intense. This property of the Spirit clearly reflects the power of God. An additional quality of the Spirit is that of mysteriousness. Psalm 104:3 demonstrates that the Spirit as wind is able to transport God on its wings to the outer limits of the earth. No one can tell where He has been or where He is going. Power and mystery state the nature of God.

God's Spirit can be expressed as an impersonal force, or it can manifest itself in individuals. The Old Testament has numerous examples when God inspired the prophets indirectly by the Spirit. The prime revelation of the Spirit in the Old Testament, in the personal sense, is by means of prophecy. Joseph's dreams are perceived to be divinely inspired (Gen. 41:38); King David, as a mouthpiece for God, proclaimed that "the Spirit of the Lord speaks" (2 Sam. 23:2); and Zechariah announced the word of the Lord to Zerubbabel, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit,' saith the Lord of Hosts" (Zech. 4:6). Much like the power of the wind, the Spirit equipped the heroes of Israel with extraordinary strength (Judg. 14:6). The judges are described as being Spirit-possessed individuals as in the case of Othniel (Judg. 3:10). Sometimes, The Spirit came upon individuals mightily, so as to alter their normal behavior (1 Sam. 10:16; 19:23–24).

The Spirit is also the ultimate origin of all mental and spiritual gifts, as it is in the underlying inspiration of the men of wisdom (Ex. 31:1–6; Isa. 11:2; Job 4:15; 32:8). Not only did the prophets benefit from the influence of the Spirit, but also the Spirit will be shed upon the people of God (Isa. 44:3) and upon all the people (Joel 2:28). Ezekiel and Isaiah express the idea of the Spirit more than any other Old Testament source. Many of Ezekiel's allusions to the Spirit are in regard to Israel's restoration in the future. The reception of the new Spirit, prophesied in Ezekiel and Jeremiah, is dependent upon repentance (Ezek. 18:31) and is associated with the creation of a new heart (Jer. 31:31–34). This prophetic foreshadowing, in light of the individual, sporadic, and temporary manifestation of the Spirit in the Old Testament, looked forward to a time when the Spirit of God would revitalize His chosen people, empower the Messiah, and be lavishly poured out on all humankind.

New Testament When John the Baptist burst on the scene proclaiming the advent of the kingdom of God, the spirit-inspired prophetic voice returned after a 400-year absence. Zechariah and Elizabeth, John's parents, were informed that their son will "be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb" (Luke 1:15). Similarly, the angel Gabriel visited Mary with the news that "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest will overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee will be called the Son of God" (1:35).

A watershed in biblical history occurred at the event of Jesus' baptism when He was anointed by the Spirit of God (3:22). The Holy Spirit was then responsible for thrusting Jesus out into the wilderness to undergo temptation (4:1–13). Luke has many more references to the Holy Spirit than do the other synoptic accounts. This can be accounted for by Luke's theological interests which are extended in the Acts of the Apostles, which has been rightly named "The Acts of the Holy Spirit" because of the prominence given to the Spirit.

All apostolic writers witnessed to the reality of the Spirit in the church; however, the apostle Paul, who wrote more than any other author, offers the most theological reflection on the subject. The main chapters to consult are Romans 8; 1 Corinthians 2; 12—14; 2 Corinthians 3; and Galatians 5.

Johannine theology is rich in its doctrine of the Spirit. In the Gospel of John, the Spirit possesses Christ (1:32–33); is indicative of the new birth (3:1–16); will come upon Jesus' departure (16:7–11); and will endow the believer after the resurrection (20:22). The Christian community is anointed by the Spirit (1 John 2:20); and the Spirit assures the believer of the indwelling presence of Jesus (1 John 3:24). In the prophetic Book of Revelation, John, in Old Testament fashion, depicted himself as a prophet inspired by the Spirit. See God. Paul Jackson

HOLY SPIRIT, SIN AGAINST THE Attributing the work of the Holy Spirit to the devil (Matt. 12:32; Mark 3:29; Luke 12:10). See Unpardonable Sin.

HOLY WEEK The week climaxing in Easter Sunday in which the church remembers the death and resurrection of Christ. As the observance of the Easter festival developed over the first few centuries, the week prior to Easter Sunday began to take on special significance for the early church. In the early centuries Easter Sunday celebrations included remembrance of both the crucifixion and the resurrection. By about 500, Good Friday came to be the focus of the remembrance of the crucifixion.

In a similar development Christians began to regard Thursday of Holy Week as a special time for participating in the Lord's Supper. The day came to be called "Maundy Thursday," a reference to Christ's giving a "new commandment" (John 13:34) to His disciples. The word "maundy" comes from the Latin word for "commandment." Usually the early Maundy Thursday observances included a ceremonial foot-washing, in imitation of Christ's washing the feet of the disciples (John 13:5–11). See Church Year. Fred A. Grissom HOMAGE Special honor, respect, or allegiance, such as that shown to a king; obeisance; reverence. Homage is most often paid to the king (1 Chron. 29:20 NAS, 2 Chron. 24:17 NIV) or to a high-ranking official (Gen. 43:28; Esther 3:2,5 NAS). Homage is sometimes paid to holy men (Samuel, 1 Sam. 28:14 NAS; Daniel, Dan. 2:46 NAS, NRSV). Homage is paid to God as the King of Israel (1 Chron. 29:20; Isa. 18:7 NAS). The Roman soldiers paid Christ mock homage before the crucifixion (Mark 15:19 NRSV).

HOMAN (Hō′ măm) Personal name perhaps meaning, "confusion." Hebrew text name for grandson of Seir (1 Chron. 1:39). The parallel passage reads Hemam (Gen. 36:22).

HOMER (Hō′ mĕr) A unit of dry measure (Lev 27:16). According to Ezekiel 45:11, it was equal to ten ephahs. In liquid measure this was ten baths. The actual volume represented by the term has been variously estimated between 3.8 and 6.6 bushels. It was the same volume as the cor (Ezek. 45:14). See Weights and Measures.

HOMOSEXUALITY Sexual preference for and sexual behavior between members of the same sex, considered to be an immoral life-style and behavior pattern throughout the biblical revelation. Only heterosexual preference and behavior patterns are approved in Scripture as conforming to God's plan in the creation of man and woman. Moreover, all sexual behavior is to take place in the context of marriage. Sex is considered good so long as it takes place within these parameters.

The Bible makes no distinction between what some today refer to as "homosexual orientation" and homosexual behavior. Homosexual desires or feelings are never mentioned as such in Scripture, but homosexual behavior is strongly condemned as a deviation from God's will for human beings. Therefore, it stands to reason that any homosexual inclination, feeling, or desire must be seriously dealt with as a potentially dangerous temptation much like those temptations of a heterosexual nature such as the desire to commit fornication or adultery.

Biblical references to homosexuality are relatively few. Genesis 19:1–11 tells the story of an attempted homosexual gang rape at the house of Lot by the wicked men of Sodom. Verse 5 mentions specifically the homosexual intentions of the men of Sodom ("to know" referring to having sex). Lot considers this behavior wicked (v. 7). Raping his daughters was considered the lesser of two evils (v. 8). This evil of Sodom is mentioned elsewhere (Jer. 23:14; Ezek. 16:49–50; 2 Pet. 2:6–10; Jude 7) in the strongest terms of condemnation. The term "sodomy" has its roots here. A similar story is found in Judges 19:22–30.

In the Holiness Code of Leviticus, homosexuality is considered an abomination (18:22), and such behavior was to be punished by death (20:13).

In the New Testament the early church also considered homosexuality as sinful behavior. Although Jesus never mentioned such behavior, probably because the problem never arose during His ministry among Jewish people, Paul clearly condemned homosexuality. Romans 1:26–27 considers homosexuality to be a sign of God's wrath upon blind sinfulness. Such behavior is considered a degrading passion, unnatural, an indecent act, and an error, even worthy of death (Rom. 1:32).

Some of the Corinthian Christians apparently had been homosexuals (1 Cor. 6:9–11). Having mentioned homosexuality, Paul stated that "such were some of you" (v. 11). Through faith in Christ they had been "washed," "sanctified," and "justified" (v. 11). Paul implied here that homosexual behavior is forgivable through the gospel and that any homosexual temptations should be resisted as seriously as those toward fornication or adultery (mentioned in v. 9). Paul also taught that homosexuality was contrary to "sound doctrine" (1 Tim. 1:10).

The Bible does not recognize homosexuality as biologically consitutional or hereditary (as a kind of third sex), but sees its roots in the sinful nature of man—a psychosocial, learned behavior, expressing rebellion against God and calling for redemption. Such persons are responsible for their behavior. This is a very complex psychological problem with many possible roots or causes, calling for both Christian compassion on the part of God's people as well as God's redemptive power through the gospel. The ministry of the church to homosexuals should include: conversion, counseling, education, and support-group relationships.

Guy Greenfield

HONESTY Fairness and straightforwardness of conduct. The KJV frequently used honesty or cognates where modern translations use other words: honorable/honorably (Rom. 13:13; Phil. 4:8; Heb. 13:18; 1 Pet. 2:12); noble (Luke 8:15; Rom. 12:17); dignity (1 Tim. 2:2); properly (1 Thess. 4:12). Men of "honest report" (Acts 6:3) are men of good standing (NRSV).

Someone in the right in a law case may be described as honest (Ex. 23:7 NIV). Isaiah lamented that "no one goes to law honestly" (59:4 NRSV). Honest or just balances, weights, and measures give fair and accurate measure (Lev. 19:36; Deut. 25:15; Prov. 16:11). Job 31:6 prays God's judgment to be weighed in an honest balance so God can know the person's integrity. Scripture often refers to honest or right speech (Job 6:25; Prov. 12:17; 16:13; 24:26). Those working on the Temple construction were known for their honest business dealings (2 Kings 12:15; 22:7).

Jacob claimed honesty (Gen. 30:33) but manipulated the breeding of Laban's flocks (30:37–43). Jacob's sons repeatedly assured Joseph of their honesty (Gen. 42:11,19,31,33,34), never guessing that their brother knew their deceptive natures all too well (37:31–33).

HONEY produced by bees providing a sweet food stuff for people to eat.

Old Testament During Bible times, honey appeared in three forms: (1) honey deposited from wild bees (Deut. 32:13), (2) honey from domesticated bees (one of the products "of the field" 2 Chron. 31:5), and (3) a syrup made from dates and grape juice (2 Kings 18:32). Honey served as a food stuff (Gen. 43:11) and as an item of trade (Ezek. 27:17).

Almost all references to honey in the Old Testament are to wild honey. Bees made their honeycombs and deposited their honey in holes in the ground (1 Sam. 14:25); under rocks or in crevices between rocks (Deut. 32:13); or in the carcasses of animals (Judges 14:8).

Honey was prohibited from being used in burnt offerings because it fermented easily (Lev. 2:11). Honey was rare enough to be considered a luxury item (Gen. 43:11; 1 Kings 14:3). Honey was so ample in Canaan that the land there was described as a land "flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3:8).

Bee keeping is not mentioned specifically in the Old Testament. In later times bee keeping was practiced by the Jews. The hives were of straw and wicker. Before removing the combs, the bee keeper stupefied the bees with fumes of charcoal and cow dung burnt in front of the hives.

The Lord's ordinances are "sweeter than honey" (Psa. 19:10). God's goodness to Jerusalem was expressed by the phrase "you ate honey" (Ezek. 16:13).

New Testament Honey is mentioned in three New Testament passages (Matt. 3:4; Mark 1:6; Rev. 10:9–10). In New Testament times, honey was viewed as a food eaten by lowly people (Matt. 3:4; Mark 1:6). Gary Hardin

HONOR See Shame and Honor

HOOD KJV term for one of the items of finery worn by the elite women of Jerusalem (Isa. 3:23). Modern translations render the underlying Hebrew as scarf (TEV), tiara (NIV), or turban (NAS, NRSV, REB). It represented a fine Oriental head covering.

HOOF A curved covering of horn protecting the front of or enclosing the digits of some mammals. According to Mosaic law, ritually clean animals are those which both chew the cud and have cloven (divided) hooves (Deut. 14:6–7).

HOOK A curved or bent device for catching, holding, or pulling. Some biblical uses, for example, hanging curtains (Ex. 26:32; 27:10) or fishing (Isa. 19:8; Job. 40:24; Hab. 1:15; Matt. 17:27), are familiar today. (KJV often uses angle.) Less familiar is the practice of ancient conquerors who led their captives by means of hooks or thongs put through their noses or jaws (2 Chron. 33:11; Ezek. 38:4; Amos 4:2).

HOOPOE Any of the Old World birds of the family Upupidae, having a plumed head crest and a long, slender, curved bill. The identity of the unclean bird of Leviticus 11:19 (Deut. 14:18) is disputed: lapwing (KJV); hoopoe (modern English translations); waterhen (earliest Greek); woodcock (Targum).

HOPE Trustful expectation, particularly with reference to the fulfillment of God's promises. Biblical hope is the anticipation of a favorable outcome under God's guidance. More specifically, hope is the confidence that what God has done for us in the past guarantees our participation in what God will do in the future. This contrasts to the world's definition of hope as "a feeling that what is wanted will happen."

The Ground and Object of Hope In the Old Testament, God alone is the ultimate ground and object of hope. Hope in God was generated by His might deeds in history. In fulfilling His promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3), He redeemed the Israelites from bondage in Egypt. He provided for their needs in the wilderness, formed them into a covenant community at Sinai, and led them into the successful occupation of Canaan. These acts provided a firm base for their confidence in God's continuing purpose for them. Even when Israel was unfaithful, hope was not lost. Because of God's faithfulness and mercy, those who returned to Him could count on His help (Mal. 3:6–7). This help included forgiveness (2 Chron. 7:14; Ps. 86:5) as well as deliverance from enemies. Thus, Jeremiah addressed God as the "hope of Israel, the saviour thereof in time of trouble" (Jer. 14:8; compare 14:22; 17:13).

A corollary of putting one's hope in God is refusing to place one's final confidence in the created order. All created things are weak, transient, and apt to fail. For this reason it is futile to vest ultimate hope in wealth (Ps. 49:6–12; 52:7; Prov. 11:28), houses (Isa. 32:17–18), princes (Ps. 146:3), empires and armies (Isa. 31:1–3; 2 Kings 18:19–24), or even the Jerusalem Temple (Jer. 7:1–7). God, and God only, is a rock that cannot be moved (Deut. 32:4,15,18; Pss. 18:2; 62:2; Isa. 26:4) and a refuge and fortress who provides ultimate security (Pss. 14:6, 61:3; 73:28; 91:9). An accurate summary of the Old Testament emphasis is found in Psalm 119:49–50.

A significant aspect of Old Testament hope was Israel's expectation of a messiah, that is, an anointed ruler from David's line. This expectation grew out of the promise that God would establish the throne of David forever (2 Sam. 7:14). The anointed ruler (messiah) would be God's agent to restore Israel's glory and rule the nations in peace and righteousness. For the most part, however, David's successors were disappointments. The direction of the nation was away from the ideal. Thus, people looked to the future for a son of David who would fulfill the divine promise.

The New Testament continues to speak of God as the source and object of hope. Paul wrote that it was the "God who raises the dead" on whom "we have set our hope" (2 Cor. 1:9–10 NIV). Furthermore, "we have fixed our hope on the living God, who is the Savior of all men" (1 Tim. 4:10 NAS). Peter reminded his readers that "your faith and hope are in God" (1 Peter 1:21 NAS). In the New Testament, as in the Old, God is the "God of hope" (Rom. 15:13).

For the early Christians, hope is also focused in Christ. He is called "our hope" (1 Tim. 1:1), and the hope of glory is identified with "Christ in you" (Col. 1:27). Images applied to God in the Old Testament are transferred to Christ in the New. He is the Savior (Luke 2:11; Acts 13:23; Titus 1:4; 3:6), the source of life (John 6:35), the rock on which hope is built (1 Pet. 2:4–7). He is the first and last (Rev. 1:17), the day-spring dispelling darkness and leading His people into eternal day (Rev. 22:5).

New Testament writers spoke of Christ as the object and ground of hope for two reasons. 1) He is the Messiah who has brought salvation by His life, death, and resurrection (Luke 24:46). God's promises are fulfilled in Him. "For in him every one of God's promises is a 'Yes' " (2 Cor. 1:20 NRSV). 2) They are aware of the unity between Father and Son. This is a unity of nature (John 1:1; Col. 1:19) as well as a unity in the work of redemption. Because "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself" (2 Cor. 5:19), hope in the Son is one with hope in the Father.

The Future of Hope While the New Testament affirms the sufficiency of Christ's redemptive work in the past, it also looks forward to His return in the future to complete God's purpose. Indeed, the major emphasis on hope in the New Testament centers on the second coming of Christ. The "blessed hope" of the Church is nothing less than "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13). See Future Hope.

The Assurance of Hope Christians live in hope for two basic reasons. The first reason is because of what God has done in Christ. Especially important is the emphasis the New Testament places on the resurrection by which Christ has defeated the power of sin and death. "By his great mercy he has given us a new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Peter 1:3 NRSV).

The second reason is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" (Rom. 8:16).

Given the assurance of hope, Christians live in the present with confidence and face the future with courage. They can also meet trials triumphantly because they know "that suffering produces perseverance; perseverance character; and character, hope" (Rom. 5:3–4 NIV). Such perseverance is not passive resignation; it is the confident endurance in the face of opposition. There is, therefore, a certitude in Christian hope which amounts to a qualitative difference from ordinary hope. Christian hope is the gift of God. "We have this hope as an anchor for the soul, firm and secure" (Heb. 6:19 NIV). Bert Dominy

HOPHNI AND PHINEHAS (Hŏph′ nī and Phin′ ė hăs) Personal names meaning, "tadpole" and "dark-skinned one" in Egyptian. In 1 Samuel 1:3, sons of Eli and priests at Shiloh. They were disreputable men who were contemptuous of sacred matters. They were slain in battle against the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:4). The news of their deaths and the loss of the Ark precipitated the death of their father Eli (1 Sam. 4:18). See Eli; Samuel.

HOPHRA (Hŏph′ rà) Egyptian divine name meaning, "the heart of Re endures." Egyptian pharaoh (589–569 B.C.). At the beginning of his reign he tried to drive the Babylonian army away from its siege of Jerusalem (Jer. 37:5). Apparently at that time Jeremiah mocked the Pharaoh, making a pun on his name, calling him a loud-voiced boaster ("King Bombast, the man who missed his opportunity" Jer. 46:17 REB). Jeremiah warned that the pharaoh would be handed over to his enemies, at the same time warning Jews living in Egypt that salvation history was reversed and they would be destroyed (Jer. 44:26–30). Hophra's death would be a sign to the Jews that Jeremiah's words were true. Hophra eventually lost his power in a revolt by his general Amasis in 569 B.C. Condemnation of Hophra showed Jeremiah's consistency in opposing any opposition to Babylon, whom God had chosen to punish His disobedient people. See Egypt.

HOR (Hôr) Place name, perhaps an ancient variant of Hebrew common noun, har, "mountain." 1. Place where Aaron, the high priest, died, fulfilling God's word that he would be punished for rebelling at the water of Meribah (Num. 20:22–29; 33:38–39). Moses installed Aaron's son Eleazar as high priest on the mountain. It was apparently a brief journey from Kadesh and lay near the coast of Edom (Num. 20:22–23). The traditional location at Jebel Harun above Petra is too far inside Edom and too far from Kadesh, though high (4800 feet) and impressive. Recently Bible students have pointed to Jebel Madurah, northeast of Kadesh on Edom's border. Deuteronomy 10:6 places Aaron's death at Mosera, an unknown site which may be under Mount Hor. Israel journeyed from Mount Hor to go around Edom (Num. 21:4; 33:41). 2. Mountain marking northern boundary of Promised Land (Num. 34:7–8). The location is unknown, though some would see Hor as a variant name for Mount Hermon.

HOR-HAGGIDGAD (Hôr-hăg gĭd′ găd) Place name perhaps meaning, "hill of crickets." Station on Israel's wilderness journey (Num. 33:32–33). It may be in the Wadi Geraphi, though no certain location is known. It appears to be a variant spelling of Gudgodah (Deut. 10:7).

HOR-HAGIDGAD (Hôr-hà gĭd′ găd) KJV spelling of Hor-Haggidgad.

HORAM (Hō′ răm) Personal name perhaps meaning, "high, exalted." King of Gezer whose attempt to deliver Lachish from Joshua resulted in his death and the annihilation of his army (Josh. 10:33), though his city remained a Canaanite stronghold (Josh. 16:10; compare 1 Kings 9:16).

HOREB An alternative name for Mount Sinai (Ex. 3:1–12; 17:6–7; Deut. 1:19; 5:2; 1 Kings 19:8). See Sinai, Mount.

HOREM (Hō′ rĕm) Place name meaning, "split rock" but sounding like the word for "war booty under the ban." City in tribal allotment of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38). Location is unknown.

HORESH (Hō′ rĕsh) Place name meaning, "forest," KJV interpreting the term as a common noun. As David hid there from Saul, Jonathan, Saul's son, came out to help him and made a covenant of mutual help (1 Sam. 23:15–18). The people of Ziph revealed David's hideout, but David still escaped. If a proper name, Horesh may be modern khirbet Khoreisa, two miles south of Ziph and six miles south of Hebron.

HORI (Hō′ rī) Personal name meaning "bleached," "lesser," or "Horite." 1. An Edomite descended from Seir (Gen. 36:22). 2. Father of the leader of tribe of Simeon under Moses in the wilderness (Num. 13:5).

HORIM (Hō′ rĭm) KJV spelling for Horites. See Horites.

HORITES (Hō′ rites) The pre-Edomite inhabitants of Mount Seir in the southern Transjordan.

The Hebrew word for Horites corresponds to the extrabiblical Hurrians, a non-Semitic people who migrated into the Fertile Crescent about 2000 B.C. The Hurrians created the Mitannian Empire in Mesopotamia about 1500 B.C. and later became an important element in the Canaanite population of Palestine. In locations where there is extrabiblical evidence for Hurrians, the Hebrew term Hivites appears (Gen. 34:2; Josh. 9:7; 11:3,19) as a designation for certain elements of the Canaanite population. The Septuagint (the ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament), however, substitutes Horites for Hivites in Genesis 34:2 and Joshua 9:7. Also, Zibeon, son of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:20), is identified as a Hivite in Genesis 36:2. For these reasons, many scholars equate both Horites and Hivites (the names are quite similar in Hebrew) with the extrabiblical Hurrians.

Nevertheless, the Hebrew text only mentions Horites in Mt. Seir where there is no record of Hurrians. Therefore, another suggestion holds that the biblical Horites were not Hurrians, but simply the original cave-dwelling (the Hebrew hor means "cave") population of Edom (Mt. Seir). The Hivites, according to this theory, should be identified with the extrabiblical Hurrians.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

HORMAH (Hôr' măh) Place name meaning, "split rock" or "cursed for destruction." City marking the limit of the Canaanite rout of the Israelites after the failed Israelite attempt to invade Canaan that followed the report of the twelve spies (Num. 14:45). Though the exact location of Hormah is not known, it was in the territory assigned to the tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:4). Some identify it with tell Masos about seven miles east of Beersheba. Excavations have shown settlement in about 1800 B.C. and again just before 1200 B.C. The latter settlement apparently lasted until the time of David (compare 1 Sam. 30:30). A small fortress was built some time after 700 B.C. and destroyed shortly after 600 B.C.

The site controlled the east-west road in the Beersheba Valley and the north-south road to Hebron. Israel gained brief victory there (Num. 21:3) after their earlier defeat (Num. 14:45; compare Deut. 1:44). The list of kings Joshua defeated includes Hormah (Josh. 12:14); the battle description says Judah and Simeon combined to take Hormah after Joshua's death (Judg. 1:1,17), the city earlier being called Zephath. See Zephath.

HORN Curved bone-like structures growing from the heads of animals such as deer or goats and vessels or instruments made from or shaped like such horns. In Scripture horn refers to trumpets, vessels, topographical features, and figurative symbols.

Old Testament The basic meaning of horns relate to animal horns (Gen. 22:13; Deut. 33:17; Dan. 8:5). Elephant tusks were also called horns (Ezek. 27:15). Horns are mentioned being used as trumpets (Josh. 6:5). Such instruments were perforated horns of the ram or the wild ox used to sound ceremonial or military signals. Priests sounded trumpets to call to worship. Trumpets later were made of silver. See Music. Horns also were used as vessels. Being hollow and easy to polish, horns were used to hold liquids for drinking or storage, including ceremonial anointing oil (1 Sam. 16:1). Horn-like projections were built onto the corners of the altar of burnt offerings in the Temple and in tabernacles (Ex. 27:2). The horns were smeared with the blood of the sacrifice, served as binding posts for the sacrifice, and were clung to for safety from punishment (1 Kings 2:28).

As a topographical feature, the peaks or summits of Palestinian hills were called horns (Isa. 51:1). Metaphorically, horn signified the strength and honor of people and brightness and rays. Such references are used in Scripture as emblems of power of God (Heb. 3:4) and other physical or spiritual entities. There is an apocalyptic use of the word in Dan. 7:7. Horns budding or sprouting is a figurative language indication of a sign of revival of a nation or power.

New Testament Christ is called "an horn of salvation" (Luke 1:69), which is a methaphorical use of the word signifying strength. Other figurative uses include the Lamb with seven horns mentioned in the Book of Revelation (Rev. 5:6); the beast with ten horns rising up out of the sea (Rev. 13:1); and the scarlet beast of the great prostitute also having ten horns (Rev. 17:3,7). Those references represent antichristian powers.

J. William Thompson

HORNED OWL Any species of owl having conspicuous tufts of feathers on the head. The NIV reckons the horned owl an unclean bird (Lev. 11:16; Deut. 14:15). The precise identity of the bird is unclear. Other possibilities include: desert owl (REB); owl (KJV); and ostrich (NAS, NRSV). See Birds in the Bible.

HORNED SNAKE A venomous viper (Cerastes cornutus) of the Near East having a horny protrusion above each eye. Dan is compared to a horned snake (Gen. 49:17 NAS, REB). See Animals, Reptiles.

HORNETS See Insects.

HORONAIM (Hŏr ō nā' ĭm) Place name meaning, "twin caves." Prominent town in Moab upon which Isaiah (15:5) and Jeremiah (48:3,5,34) pronounced laments, warning of coming destruction. It apparently lay in the southwestern part of Moab, but students of biblical geography debate its exact location. Suggestions include khirbet ad-Dubababout three miles west northwest of Majra; khirbet al-Maydan, west of modern Katrabba, and ed-Dayr, about two miles northwest of Rakin.

HORONITE (Hŏr′ ō nīte) Citizen of Beth-horon or of Horonaim. A description of Sanballat, who led opposition to Nehemiah (Neh. 2:10). To which of the two possible places Sanballat belonged, we do not know.

HORSE See Animals; Megiddo.

Relief of horses harnessed to and turning a mill, first century A.D.

HORSE GATE Gate on east side of city wall of Jerusalem near the Temple. Jeremiah promised its rebuilding (Jer. 31:40), and the priests under Nehemiah rebuilt it (Neh. 3:28).

HORSELEACH KJV term for a leech (Prov. 30:15).

HORSEMAN A rider on a horse. The plural frequently refers to a cavalry (Ex. 14:9–28; Josh. 24:6; 1 Sam. 8:11). This association of horsemen with armed forces perhaps sparked the use of the four riders of Revelation 6:2–8 as symbols of military conquest, war, economic injustice, and death and Hades.

HOSAH (Hō′ sah) Personal and place name perhaps meaning, "seeker of refuge." 1. Coastal city in tribal territory of Asher (Josh. 19:29), probably modern tell Rashidiyeh near Tyre and known in ancient Egyptian and Assyrian texts as Usu. Other biblical geographers would see the fortified city of Tyre as tell Rashidiyeh (Usu) and locate Hosah further from Tyre and the coast. 2. Gatekeeper of the sanctuary under David (1 Chron. 16:38). He belonged to the priestly clan of Merari (1 Chron. 26:10). He was in charge of the west gate (1 Chron. 26:16).

HOSANNA (Hō săn′ nà) Cry with which Jesus was greeted on the occasion of His triumphal entrance into Jerusalem (Mark 11:9). The words with which the Savior was welcomed by the multitude are drawn from Psalm 118:25–26. "Hosanna" is a Hebrew or Aramaic word that is best translated as a prayer: "Save now," or "Save, we beseech Thee." When the residents of Jerusalem, carrying palm branches, met Jesus and hailed Him as the One who comes in the name of the Lord, they included in their acclamation a plea for salvation. See Psalms; Triumphant Entry.

HOSEA (Hō sē′ à) Personal name meaning, "salvation." Title of the first book in the section of the Hebrew Bible called the Book of the Twelve, named after its prophetic hero. The small prophetic books that make up this section frequently are designated Minor Prophets. This title is not an assessment of worth, but a description of size as compared to Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. In Hebrew the name is the same as that of Joshua's original name (Num. 13:16; Deut. 32:44) and of the last king of Israel (2 Kings 17:1), who lived at the same time as the prophet. One of David's officers bore the name (1 Chron. 27:20) as did a clan chief in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 10:23). English translators have often chosen to spell the prophet's name Hosea to distinguish him from the others, whose names they spell, Hoshea.

The prophet's name "Hosea" appears in the Bible only at Hosea 1:1,2; Romans 9:25. Assyria's rise to power posed a constant threat to Israel's national existence. Hosea's name symbolized the pressing need for national deliverance. His message pointed the nation to the deliverer (Hos. 13:4).

The Book The two broad divisions of the Book of Hosea are: (1) Hosea's Marriage, Hosea 1—3; and (2) Hosea's Messages, Hosea 4—14. A pattern of judgment followed by hope recurs in each of the first three chapters. A similar pattern is discernible in the oracles of Hosea (Hos. 4—14), though the pattern is not balanced as neatly nor revealed as clearly. Certainly the book ends on a hopeful note (Hos. 14), but most of the oracles in chapters 4—13 are judgmental in nature. The dominant theme of the book is love (covenant fidelity), God's unrelenting love for His wayward people and Israel's unreliable love for God.

The Prophet Hosea is identified in the title verse (1:1) as a genuine prophet to whom "the word of the Lord" came. That phrase designates the source of his authority and describes his credentials. Not only are Hosea's oracles (Hos. 4—14) the word of the Lord to Israel, but so also are the materials dealing with his domestic problems (Hos. 1—3). Based on information gleaned from his book, Hosea was from the Northern Kingdom of Israel. His familiarity with place names, religious practices, and political conditions in Israel suggests that he was a native. In contrast, Amos, who ministered as a prophet in Israel shortly before Hosea's ministry there, was from Tekoa in Judah. Both prophets preached judgment, Amos with a lion's roar and Hosea with a broken heart.

Placement of Hosea's ministry in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah indicates that he was a contemporary of Isaiah. The title verse of Isaiah contains the same list of Judean kings. Jeroboam II is the only Israelite king named in the title to Hosea's book, in spite of the fact that internal evidence suggests that Hosea's ministry continued from the last days of Jeroboam II to near the end of the Northern Kingdom (approximately 750–725 B.C.).

Hosea's prophetic ministry included the period of Near Eastern history when Assyria emerged as a new world empire under the capable leadership of Tiglath-pileser III (745–727 B.C.). Hosea rebuked efforts at alliance with Assyria and Egypt as the means to national security. He witnessed the political chaos in Israel following the death of Jeroboam II. Four of the last six kings to sit on Israel's throne were assassinated. Hosea had the unenviable task of presiding over the death of his beloved nation, but he held out hope of national revival based on radical repentance (Hos. 14).

The Marriage Hosea's marriage and family life dominate chapters 1—3 and surface from time to time in the remainder of the book. References to Hosea's family serve as prophetic symbolism of God and His family Israel. God ordered Hosea to take a wife of harlotry and have children of harlotry "for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord" (Hos. 1:2). Primary interest is not in Hosea and his family, but in God and His family. How to interpret the prophet's marriage is not a settled issue. A few take the marriage to be an allegory. Some accept it as a literal marriage to a woman who became promiscuous after marriage. Most handle it as an actual marriage to a cult prostitute. Every interpreter must keep in mind the obvious intent of the material to serve as prophetic symbolism of God's relationship to Israel.

The Theology At the heart of Hosea's theology was the relationship between God and Israel. Yahweh alone was Israel's God. Israel was Yahweh's elect people. Hosea presented Yahweh as a faithful husband and Israel as an unfaithful wife. Hosea's stress is not upon righteousness and justice, as was the case with Amos, but the knowledge of God and loyal love. God's love for Israel would not permit Him to give up on them in spite of their lack of knowledge and infidelity. Hope for Israel's future lay in their repentance and God's forgiveness and love that made Him willing to restore their relationship.

Outline

I. God Loves His Unfaithful People (1:1—3:5).
  A. God's forgiveness has its limits (1:1–9).
  B. God promises a future reversal of His judgment upon His people (1:10—2:1).
  C. God works with His people to bring about reconciliation (2:2–15).
    1. God's legal actions call for His people's reform (2:2–5).
    2. God places obstacles in the path of His people to turn them back to God (2:6–8).
    3. God removes the bounty of His people to remind them that God is the Giver (2:9–13).
    4. God lures His people into the wilderness to open a door of hope (2:14–15).
  D. God initiates a new covenant with His people (2:16–23).
  E. God's love is the basis of future hope for His people (3:1–5).

II. Unfaithfulness Is the Basis of God's Controversy with His People (4:1—9:9).
  A. Unfaithful people break covenant commitments (4:1–3).
  B. Unfaithful ministers bring judgment on the people and on themselves (4:4–12*a*).
  C. An alien spirit dominates unfaithful people (4:12*b*–19).
  D. God chastises His unfaithful people (5:1–15).
    1. God disciplines unfaithful leaders (5:1–2).
    2. God disciplines because He knows His people fully (5:3).
    3. Pride prevents repentance and promotes stumbling (5:4–5).
    4. Extravagant giving is no substitute for lapses in living (5:6–7).
    5. God is the agent of punishment for His people (5:8–14).
    6. God seeks the return of His people through discipline (5:15).
  E. Surface repentance does not satisfy the sovereign God (6:1–3).
  F. Sharp judgment comes upon fleeting loyalty (6:4–5).
  G. Loyal love and personal knowledge of God meet His requirements (6:6).
  H. Covenant-breaking hinders restoration of God's people (6:7—7:2).
  I. Making leaders by power politics shuts God out of the process (7:3–7).
  J. Compromise leads to loss of strength and alienation from God (7:8–10).

K. Diplomatic duplicity interferes with God's redemptive activity (7:11–13).
L. Religious perversion ends in apostasy and bondage (7:14–16).
M. God's unfaithful people reap more than they sow (8:1—9:9).
1. The unfaithful disregard divine law (8:1–2).
2. The unfaithful reject God's goodness (8:3).
3. The unfaithful practice idolatory (8:4–6).
4. The unfaithful will reap foreign domination (8:7–10).
5. The unfaithful will reap religious and moral corruption (8:11–13*a*).
6. The unfaithful will reap national destruction (8:13*b*–14).
7. The unfaithful will reap exile in a foreign land (9:1–4).
8. The unfaithful will reap punishment for their sins (9:5–9).

III. God's Loyal Love Is the Only Basis for a Lasting Relationship with His People (9:10—14:9).
A. Without God's love His people perish (9:10–17).
B. Without reverence for God, His people have no future (10:1–8).
1. Ornate altars cannot hide deceitful hearts (10:1–2).
2. Bad leaders produce bad times (10:3–8).
C. Without righteousness God's people cannot experience God's unfailing love (10:9–15).
D. God's love for His people will not allow Him to give them up (11:1–11).
E. Covenant-making with alien powers is infidelity to God (11:12—12:1).
F. Judgment according to deeds is a universal principle (12:2–6).
G. Deception is repaid by destruction (12:7–14).
H. Rebellion against God leads to death (13:1–16).
I. Repentance results in restoration and life for God's people (14:1–9).

Billy K. Smith

HOSEN KJV term for hose or leggings (Dan. 3:21). The meaning of the underlying Aramaic term is disputed: leggings (NAS margin); robes (TEV); shirts (REB); trousers (NAS, NIV, NRSV); tunics (RSV).

HOSHAIAH (Hō shâi' iah) Personal name meaning, "Yah saved." 1. Father of Jewish leader who lead delegation requesting Jeremiah's prayer support (Jer. 42:1) and then rejected Jeremiah's word from God (Jer. 43:2). 2. Leader of Jewish group in celebration upon the completion of the Jerusalem wall under Nehemiah (Neh. 12:32).

HOSHAMA (Hŏsh' ȧ mȧ) Personal name, an abbreviated form of Jehoshama, "Yahweh heard." Descendant of David during the Exile (1 Chron. 3:18).

HOSHEA (Hō shē' ȧ) See Hosea.

HOSPITALITY To entertain or receive a stranger (sojourner) into one's home as an honored guest and to provide the guest with food, shelter, and protection. This was not merely an oriental custom or good manners but a sacred duty that everyone was expected to observe. Only the depraved would violate this obligation.

Hospitality probably grew out of the needs of nomadic life. Since public inns were rare, a traveler had to depend on the kindness of others and had a right to expect it. This practice was extended to every sojourner, even a runaway slave (Deut. 23:16–17) or one's arch enemy.

The Pentateuch contains specific commands for the Israelites to love the strangers as themselves (Lev. 19:33–34; Deut. 10:18–19), and to look after their welfare (Deut. 24:17–22). The reason for practicing hospitality was that the Israelites themselves were once strangers in the land of Egypt.

Some acts of hospitality were rewarded, the most notable of which was Rahab's (Josh. 6;22–25; Heb. 11:31; James 2:25). Breaches of hospitality were condemned and punished, such as those of Sodom (Gen. 19:1–11) and Gibeah (Judg. 19:10–25). The only exception was Jael who was praised for killing Sisera (Judg. 4:18–24).

Hospitality seemed to form the background of many details in the life of Jesus and the early church (Matt. 8:20; Luke 7:36; 9:2–5; 10:4–11). It was to be a characteristic of bishops and widows (1 Tim. 3:2; 5:10; Titus 1:8) and a duty of Christians (Rom. 12:13; 1 Pet. 4:9). It was a natural expression of brotherly love (Heb. 13:1–2; 1 Pet. 4:8–9) and a necessary tool of evangelism. Furthermore, one might even entertain angels or the Lord unawares (Heb. 13:2; Matt. 25:31–46). Lai Ling Elizabeth Ngan

HOST OF HEAVEN The army at God's command, composed of either heavenly bodies such as sun, moon, and stars or angels.

"Host" is basically a military term connected with fighting or waging a war. The most frequent use of the word is to designate a group of men organized for war. In this sense, the Hebrew word often refers to a human army (Gen. 21:22,32; Judg. 4:2,7; 9:29; 1 Sam. 12:9; 2 Sam. 3:23; Isa. 34:2; Jer. 51:3). The term can refer to an act of war, as in Numbers 1:3,20; Deuteronomy 24:5, and Joshua 22:12. An extended meaning of "hosts" is that it designates a length of time of hard service (Job 7:1; Isa. 40:2, Dan. 10:1). The term is used in the Book of Numbers to refer to the service of the Levites in the sanctuary.

The phrase "Host of Heaven" came into use because of the close connection between the realms of earth and heaven in ancient thought. The celestial bodies were thought to be organized in the same way as earthly military bodies. The sun, moon, and stars were regarded as the "host of heaven" (Gen. 2:1). The author of Psalms 33:6 stated that God created this host by His breath. God preserved the existence of the host of heaven (Isa. 40:26).

Old Testament writers warned Israel about the danger of worshiping the heavenly bodies (Deut. 4:19) and prescribed the death penalty for the crime of worshiping the sun, or the moon, or any of the "host of heaven" (Deut. 17:2–7). Unfortunately, Israel and Judah yielded to the temptation to worship the heavenly bodies from time to time, especially during the period of Assyrian and Babylonian influence (2 Kings 17:16–23; 21:3,5).

Manasseh, king of Judah (697 to 642 B.C.), built altars in Jerusalem for all the "host of heaven" (2 Kings 21:5). He attempted to merge the worship of other gods with the worship of Yahweh. Manasseh's efforts were reversed when Josiah came to the throne (2 Kings 23:7).

Another concept of the "host of heaven" is presented in passages similar to 1 Kings 22:19, in which the prophet Micaiah stated that he saw the Lord sitting on his throne ". . . and all the host of heaven standing by him. . . ." The people of Israel drew comparisons between their God and the gods of Canaan and Babylonia. Yahweh came to be understood as a king who presided over a heavenly council, composed of angelic servants, sometimes called "sons of God." This concept is reflected in the first two chapters of Job. See Angels; Council, Heavenly; Sons of God. James Newell

HOSTAGE A person held as security against rebellion or aggression. When King Joash of Israel defeated King Amaziah of Judah, he took hostages (2 Kings 14:14; 2 Chron. 25:24).

HOSTS, LORD OF See Lord of Hosts.

HOTHAM (Hō′ thăm) Personal name meaning, "seal" or "lock." 1. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:32). 2. Father of two warriors in David's army (1 Chron. 11:44). Their home was Aroer.

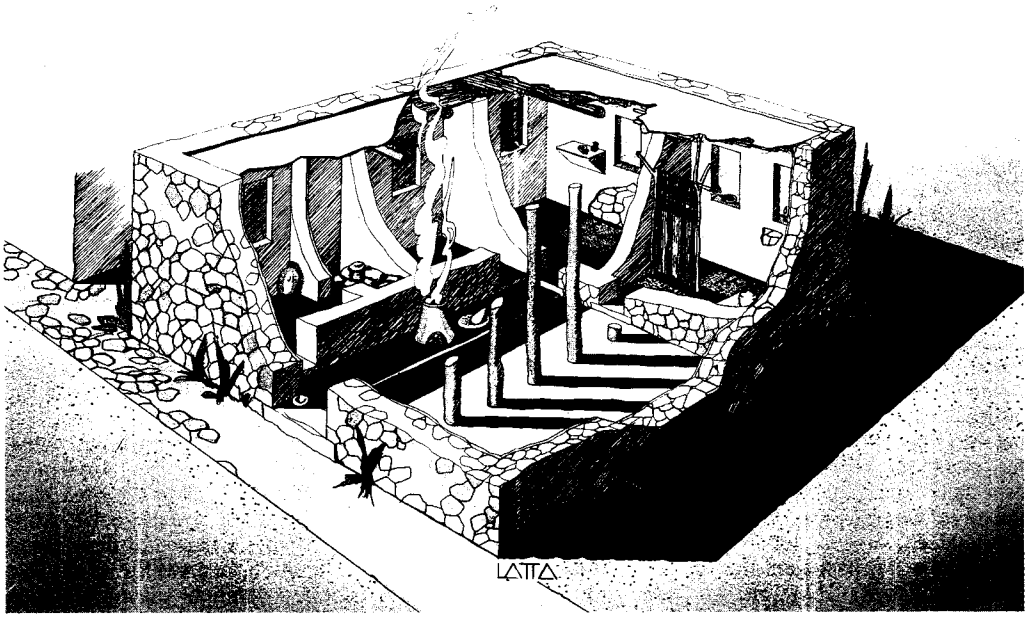
HOTHAN (Hō′ thăn) KJV spelling of Hotham in 1 Chronicles 11:44.

HOTHIR (Hō′ thīr) Personal name meaning, "he caused to be a remnant." Priestly musician in the clan of Heman under David (1 Chron. 25:4). He led the twenty-first course of Levites (1 Chron. 25:28).

HOUGH KJV term meaning to hamstring (Josh. 11:6,9; 2 Sam. 8:4; 1 Chron. 18:4). See Hamstring.

HOUND To harass continually (Job 19:28; Ps. 109:16; Ezek. 36:3 NIV).

HOUR An appointed time for meeting or for religious festival, a brief moment of time, one twelfth of the day or of the night, and in the Gospel of John the significant period of Jesus' saving mission on earth from His triumphal entry until His death and resurrection.



Biblical Hebrew has no word for hour, only an expression for an appointed meeting time (1 Sam. 9:24 RSV). The New Testament term hora can refer to a general time of day, a "late hour" (Matt. 14:15 NRSV), to a brief moment of time (Rev. 18:17; compare John 5:35), or to the time of an expected momentous event (Matt. 8:13; Mark 13:11). It also designates a period of time, somewhat flexible in duration, one twelfth of the daylight hours and one twelfth of the night, a day being divided into the two periods (or watches) of light and darkness beginning at sunrise, making the seventh hour (John 4:52) about one p.m.

Jesus' hour is a central theme in John's Gospel, creating an emotional uncertainty and expectancy and a theological understanding of the central importance of Jesus' death and resurrection. In John's Gospel, "hour" usually refers to the period from the triumphant entry (12:23) until the climactic death and resurrection.

The Johannine theme of Jesus' "hour" makes a significant theological contribution to the Gospel. As the reader encounters this motif repeatedly, a perspective on Jesus' death develops that is quite different from that gained in the other Gospels. Without trivializing the reality of Jesus' suffering and death, the Gospel of John presents that event as the "hour" of Jesus' "glory," the time of His "exaltation/lifting up." Jesus' death is the means by which eternal life is provided for the world (3:14–15; 6:51–53). From that hour on human distinctions no longer apply (4:21–24; 11:51–53; 12:20–23). The glory of Jesus' death is found both in what it enabled him to offer the world (6:51–53; 7:37–39) and in its being the means by which He returned to the Father (13:1). The accounts of the empty tomb and the appearances of the risen Jesus in 20:1–21:23 serve to underscore the glory of His "hour." See Glory; John; Time. R. Robert Creech

HOUSE A place where people live, usually in extended family units which can then be called a house.

Abraham left Mesopotamia where he lived in Reconstruction of an eighth-century B.C. Israelite house, showing rooms for sleeping on straw mats and for storage. The outer courtyard was used for food preparation, cooking, and to house small animals. Construction of houses did not change much over the centuries until the New Testament period. So, this was a typical pattern for the average home of the Old Testament period.

houses made of mud brick (compare Gen. 11:3) and became a tent dweller (Heb. 11:9). Tents were made of goat hair and were suitable to nomadic life. His descendants apparently lived in tents until the time of Joshua, when they captured Canaan and began to build houses like the Canaanites. In the lowlands of the Jordan Valley the houses were built of mud brick because stone was not readily available. This type of construction may still be seen in the refugee camps of modern Jericho. In the hill country field stones were used. Although slight differences existed in house construction over centuries of time, those which have been excavated manifest a similar style. The homes of the poor were small and modest, consisting of one to four rooms, usually, and almost always including a courtyard on the east of the house so that the prevailing westerly winds would blow the smoke away from the house. In this courtyard the family carried on most of its activity. Food was prepared here in an oven built of clay. Storage jars were kept here, and animals were often housed here. However, the house only met the essential needs of family life such as shelter, a place to prepare food, make clothing and pottery, care for animals, etc. Social life was normally conducted at the community well or spring, the city gate, the marketplace, or in the fields at work. Because of the heat in summer and the cold in the winter, houses were built with few, if any, windows. This also provided more protection from intruders, but it meant that the houses were dark and uninviting. The only escape from the dim, cramped interior of the house was the courtyard and especially the flat roof. Here, the women of the house could do many of their daily chores—the washing, weaving, drying of figs and dates, and even the cooking. It was a wonderful place to enjoy the cool breezes in the heat of the day and to sleep in the summer (Acts 10:9; compare 2 Kings 4:10). The roof was supported by beams laid across the tops of narrow rooms, which were then covered by brush and mud packed to a firm and smooth surface. The paralytic at Capernaum was let down to Jesus through a hole "dug out" of such a roof (Mark 2:4; it was covered with clay tiles—Luke 5:19). In the time of Moses, the Israelites were required to build a bannister around the roof to prevent falling off (Deut. 22:8).

Unlike the poor, wealthy families built larger houses which sometimes utilized cut stone. They furnished them with chairs, tables, and couches which could double as beds. The poor had neither the space nor money for furniture. They ate and slept on floor mats which could be rolled out for that purpose. Most floors consisted of beaten earth, although some were made of mud and lime plaster and occasionally even limestone slabs. The wealthy in the time of the New Testament were able to cover their floors with beautiful mosaics and adorn their plastered walls with lovely frescoes. By this time, many of the better homes, under Roman influence, included atria, which added to the concept of outdoor living already experienced in the courtyards and on the roofs. There is evidence that two story houses were built throughout biblical times, the upper floor being reached by outside stairs or ladders.

John McRay

HOUSE OF THE ARCHIVES See House of the Rolls.

HOUSE OF THE FOREST OF LEBANON A designation for a great hall Solomon constructed as part of his palace complex in Jerusalem (1 Kings 7:2–5), so called because of the extensive use of cedar for the pillars, beams, and roofing material. In this hall were stored 300 shields of gold and vessels of gold (1 Kings 10:17–21). See Hall.

HOUSE OF THE ROLLS The place mentioned in Ezra 6:1 where records of the king's decrees and actions were kept. The archives were kept sometimes in the royal treasury (Ezra 5:17) or perhaps in the Temple. Jeremiah's scroll (Jer. 36:20–26) and the scroll of the law (2 Kings 22:8–9) were probably kept in such an archive. The records pertaining to the reigns of the kings of Judah and Israel were probably also kept in archives of this kind. Genealogical records may have been stored in the archives (Ezra 4:15).

HOUSEHOLD The term "household" is descriptive of a wide variety of relationships in both the Old and New Testaments. The root word for household in the Old Testament is byt, which means literally, "house." Genesis 7:1 is an example of the use of the term "house" to refer simply to kinfolk, the members of one's own family. "Household" may also refer to a family's descendants as an organized body (Gen. 18:19; Deut. 25:9; 1 Kings 11:38). The Hebrew people as a nation or any of its tribes or clans may also be indicated by the term "household" (Ex. 19:3; 40:38; Isa. 8:17; Amos 3:13; 7:16). Paternal ancestry may be in view as well when a household is mentioned (Ex. 6:14; 12:3; Num. 1:2; Josh. 22:14). Finally, the term can be used to refer simply to household affairs: persons, property, belongings, etc. (Gen. 39:4; 1 Kings 4:6; 2 Kings 15:5; Isa. 22:15, 36:3).

In the New Testament, many derivatives of oikos (literally, "house") are used to refer to the members and affairs of a household. Consequently, the terms "house" and "household" are often used interchangeably in translation. The term may delineate an immediate family, as well as those employed in the service of that family (Matt. 13:57; 24:45; John 4:53; Acts 16:31). Descendants of a particular nation may also be described as a house or household as in Matthew 10:6 and Luke 1:27,69. "Household" or "house," moreover, may point to the property or the management of the affairs and belongings of a family or clan (Acts 7:10).

Cut-away reconstruction of a first-century A.D. Israelite house.

Next to the state, the household was the most important unit in the Greco-Roman world, largely because of its role as a guarantor of stability in society. If order prevailed in the household, so it would in the state. Just as the household was basic to society, so it was to Christianity. The life of the early church centered in houses or households (e.g. Acts 2:2,46; 12:12; Rom. 16:5,23; 1 Cor. 16:19). Household groups were the basic units that made up the church in any given locale.

Not only was the church composed of household groups, the household itself was often the focus of the church's evangelistic activity. Several texts mention the conversion of entire households: Acts 11:14; 16:15,31–34; 18:8. In the world in which the early church emerged, the household was organized around the head, and solidarity was expressed in a common religion. So it was that the faith of the head of the household was the faith of the entire household. Whenever the head of a household was converted and baptized, the remainder of his house usually followed suit as an expression of loyalty and religious unity. The motivation for conversion was at times social and not wholly individual, though in baptism each confessed Christ as Lord and showed forth His death and resurrection.

Household ideals also impacted the early church in significant ways. Household terms were used by the New Testament writers to express theological ideas. The church was referred to as the "household" of faith or of God (Gal. 6:10; Eph. 2:19). Household roles were appropriated by the Christian community: Christians were "servants" of God, and their leaders were "stewards" (1 Cor. 4:1; Titus 1:7; 1 Pet. 4:10). Because the household was so central to ancient society, much attention was given to delineating and clarifying the roles of the members of a household, be they family or servant. Standardized rules for behavior or domestic codes were developed in society, and these were adapted for use in the early church. Examples of lists of house rules or codes may be found in Colossians 3:18—4:1; Ephesians 5:21—6:9; 1 Peter 2:13—3:7.

See Marriage; Servant; Slave; Steward; Temple.

William J. Ireland, Jr.

HOWLING CREATURES The identity of the "howling creature" (NRSV) of Isaiah 13:21 is disputed. Suggestions include: the jackal (NIV); owl (NAS, KJV, TEV), porcupine (REB), and the laughing hyena. The precise identity of the creature is not so important as the complete desolation that its presence indicates.

HOZAI (Hō′ zā ī) Personal name meaning, "seer." NAS literal transliteration of Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 33:19 making Hozai a prophet who recorded the reign of King Manasseh. Most translations follow Greek and one Hebrew manuscript in seeing one letter omitted from Hebrew, thus reading, "records of the seers" (NIV).

HUB The central portion of a wheel to which spokes are attached (1 Kings 7:33).

HUBBAH (Hŭb′ bah) NIV, NRSV reading of Jehubbah (1 Chron. 7:34) transliterating literally the Hebrew text. Most translations follow the early scribes' marginal note and the early translations in a slight change of the first Hebrew letter. See Jehubbah.

HUKKOK (Hŭk′ kŏk) Place name meaning, "hewn out." 1. Town on border of tribal allotment of Naphtali between Mount Tabor and the border of Zebulun. It has traditionally been located at Yaquq northwest of the sea of Chinnereth, but that may be too far east. Recent proposals look at khirbet el-Jemeija, two miles west of Sakhmin (Josh. 19:34). 2. The same Hebrew word names a levitical city in the tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 6:75), but the parallel passage (Josh. 21:31) reads Helkath. See Helkath.

HUKOK (Hū′ kŏk) Variant English spelling of Hebrew Hukkok. See Hukkok.

HUL (Hŭl) Personal name meaning, "ring." A son of Aram, son of Shem, and grandson of Noah in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:23), thus the original ancestor of an Aramean or Syrian tribe. As often in genealogy lists, 1 Chronicles 1:17 omits the father Aram to emphasize the kinship with Shem.

HULDAH (Hŭl′ dah) Personal name meaning, "mole." Prophetess, the wife of Shallum (2 Kings 22:14). She was consulted after Josiah the king of Judah saw a copy of the Book of the Law found as preparations were being made to restore the Temple. She prophesied judgment for the nation but a peaceful death for Josiah the king. See Josiah.

HUMAN SACRIFICE The ritual slaying of one or more human beings to please a god. This was widely practiced by many cultures in antiquity. Although the frequency of the practice is difficult to determine, the fact is that such rituals were performed for various reasons. For example, both Egyptians and Sumerians before 2000 B.C. killed servants and possibly family members to bury them with deceased kings to allow those who had served or been near the official in life to accompany him to the realm of the dead. In Mesopotamia, and perhaps elsewhere, the remains of animals and humans offered as sacrifice were deposited within foundations to protect the building from evil powers, a practice possibly reflected in 1 Kings 16:34.

In the Old Testament, Jephthah sacrificed his daughter as a fulfillment of a vow, although the incident is clearly not normative (Judg. 11:30– 40). In the ninth century Mesha, king of Moab, offered his own son as a burnt offering presumably to Chemosh, national god of Moab, upon the walls of his capital while under seige by Israel and Judah (2 Kings 3:27). The event was so shocking that the seige was terminated. However, although Israelite law specifically forbade human sacrifice (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5), persistent references to the practice occur, especially between 800 and 500 B.C. Both Ahaz and Manasseh burned their sons as an offering in times of national peril (2 Kings 16:3; 21:6). The sacrifices were made in the valley of Hinnom which protected Jerusalem from the west and south. A portion of the valley bore the name Topheth, a name derived from the word for fireplace or hearth. Apparently Topheth was an open air cultic area where Molech sacrifices were offered. The term Molech occurs frequently in connection with human sacrifice. In the Bible and elsewhere Molech apparently was used in two ways: 1) as the name or a title of a god to whom sacrifice was made (see 1 Kings 11:7) and 2) as a specific type of sacrifice which involved the total consummation of a person, usually a child, by fire. Both usages of the term may be reflected in the Old Testament. Both Jeremiah and Ezekiel condemn such offerings as an abomination to God (Jer. 7:31–32; 19:5–6; Ezek. 16:20–21; 20:31). Josiah defiled Topheth as a part of his reformation so that "no one might burn his son or his daughter as an offering to Molech" (2 Kings 23:10 RSV).

These practices, foreign to the worship of Yahweh, must have been adopted by Israel from the surrounding peoples. Direct evidence for human sacrifice during the first millennium B.C. comes from two cultures with which Israel had contact: the Phoenician colony of Carthage and the Arameans. The Carthaginians sacrificed children to Kronos during periods of calamity caused by war, famine, or disease. Pits filled with bones of animals and children have been excavated at Carthage with inscribed stones indicating these were Molech sacrifices. The Arameans of Gozan in northwest Mesopotamia sacrificed humans to the god Hadad. Interestingly, the Sepharvites, a people from an area dominated by Arameans deported to Palestine in 721 B.C. by Sargon II, burned their children as offerings to Adrammelech and Anammelech (2 Kings 17:31). Yet the abomination of human sacrifice, stated Jeremiah, never entered the mind of Yahweh (Jer. 19:5).

See Molech. Tommy Brisco

HUMAN SOUL See Soul.

HUMANITY The characteristics which unite all persons despite their many individual differences and constitute them as God's "image."

Theologians have supposed that this "image" designates what is most essential to human nature. Many patristic, Catholic, and Protestant orthodox theologians have argued that the image was reason. Although Scripture depicts humans as thinking creatures, this definition was originally derived from Greek philosophy. More accurate is the suggestion that the image consists in humankind's lordship over and stewardship of creation, for this is the theme of the following verses (Gen. 1:28–31).

The best clue comes from frequent reference to Jesus as that image to which we are to be conformed (Rom. 8:29; 1 Cor. 15:49; 2 Cor. 3:18; 4:4). The most basic characteristics of Jesus' life were His dependence upon and devotion to His Father and His loving servanthood toward His fellow humans. This suggests that the essence of being human consists in a three-fold relationship: towards God as Lord, towards other humans as fellow servants, and towards creation as entrusted to our care. The second feature is confirmed by Genesis 1:27 which, as Karl Barth noticed, practically identifies being in God's image with being female and male. For in the interdependence between the sexes, the need, desire, and delight of humans for and in each other can be most vividly symbolized.

Theologians have often discussed whether individual humans are composed of just body and soul, or of body, soul, and spirit. Yet this question has been somewhat misguided. Scripture represents people not as individuals composed of parts, but as integrated, acting units intimately interrelated with others.

Investigation of the Bible's specific terminology generally substantiates its understanding of the image of God. The significance of human life is found primarily in relationships with others and with God.

Humanity under Sin Theologians often seek to determine sin's essence through careful analysis of Genesis 3. From this episode alone, sin can appear simply as the transgression of a divine command. However, the lengthy and varied narratives concerning Israel and Jesus yield fuller insight into sin. In the Old Testament, sin indeed involves breaking the commands of God's covenant. Yet this is rooted in turning away from the relationship which Yahweh initiated, and therefore from Yahweh Himself. Moreover, turning from Yahweh involves turning towards something else. This is usually the gods of the nations and the religious and social practices which they enforced.

Therefore, just as humans are not isolated individuals, so sin is not simply individual transgression. Sin is participation in attitudes, social behaviors, and religious commitments opposed to God. Just as humanity's image is manifested most fully in Jesus, so sin was revealed most clearly in the opposition to Him. Jesus was opposed by the collective power of the Roman state, Israel's religious establishment, and the demonic forces behind them. Individuals were involved by supporting, or by refusing to oppose, these collective forces.

In brief, just as God designed humans, made in His image, for positive relationships with others and with creation, rooted in dependence upon Him; so human sin is participation in distorted social and ecological relationships, rooted in commitments to other values and powers. Individual responsibility is involved, but it takes the form of turning from God towards something else.

Humanity Participating in Salvation The fullness of human potential cannot be determined from Genesis, but only from texts, primarily in the New Testament, which describe humans as moving towards final glorification.

Theologians have debated whether the will, apart from God's irresistable grace, is wholly bound to evil, or whether it can make some small movement toward God on its own. Through its many stories of people turning from God, Scripture insists that strong divine influence is needed to counteract sin; but Scripture may not provide a precise answer to the other side of the issue—humanity's ability to turn to God. The Bible does tells us the essential nature of freedom. It is not merely liberty to choose or not choose among various possibilities. Instead, true human freedom is initiated and empowered by the divine Spirit (2 Cor. 3:17; Gal. 4:6–7; 5:13,16; Rom. 8:2). It is not simply liberty to follow our own inclinations. It is the capacity to transform our drives and habits through the Spirit who raised Jesus bodily (Rom. 8:11). It is not simply liberty to attend to our interests. It is freedom to participate in and suffer with the Spirit's transforming work throughout all creation (Rom. 8:22–23). It is not freedom from involvement, but freedom for loving relationships with other people, the whole creation, and God.

Just as sin involves participation in perverted social and religious relationships, so fulfillment of human potential involves participation in healthy ones. Since our "bodies" are channels which relate us to creation, to others, and to God, so participation in Christ's body is the primary means by which health is restored. The "body of Christ" is no pale metaphor for an ecclesiastical organization. It is a living organism where each member participates in the joys and sufferings of the others (Rom. 12:4–8; 1 Cor. 12:12–26; Eph. 4:4–16). The church is not merely an organization for occasional worship, entertainment, or service. It is the primary community through which God wills that the relationships which constitute His image should be healed and through which the fullness which He desires for all humankind should be most clearly displayed.

See Image of God; Body; Soul; Spirit; Creation; Sin; Freedom; Spirit; Church; Body of Christ.

Thomas Finger

HUMANITY OF CHRIST See Incarnations; Jesus, Life and Ministry of; Christ, Christology.

HUMILIATION OF CHRIST See Jesus, Death and Resurrection; Kenosis.

HUMILITY A personal quality in which an individual shows dependence on God and respect for other persons.

Old Testament The Old Testament connects the quality of humility with Israel's lowly experience as slaves in Egypt—a poor, afflicted, and suffering people (Deut. 26:6). The Hebrew word translated as humility is similar to another Hebrew word meaning "to be afflicted." In Old Testament thought, humility was closely associated with individuals who were poor and afflicted (2 Sam. 22:28).

What God desires most is not outward sacrifices but a humble spirit (Psa. 51:17; Mic. 6:8). Such a humble spirit shows itself in several ways: (1) a recognition of one's sinfulness before a holy God (Isa. 6:5); (2) obedience to God (Deut. 8:2); and (3) submission to God (2 Kings 22:19; 2 Chron. 34:37).

The Old Testament promised blessings to those who were humble: (1) wisdom (Prov. 11:2); (2) good tidings (Isa. 61:1); and (3) honor (Prov. 15:33).

The experience of many kings indicated that those who humble themselves before God will be exalted (1 Kings 21:29; 2 Kings 22:19; 2 Chron. 32:26; 33:12;19). Those who do not humble themselves before God will be afflicted (2 Chron. 33:23; 36:12). The pathway to revival is the way of humility (2 Chron. 7:14).

New Testament Jesus Christ's life provides the best example of what it means to have humility (Matt. 11:29; 1 Cor. 4:21; Phil. 2:1–11). Jesus preached and taught often about the need for humility (Matt. 23:12; Mark 9:35; Luke 14:11; 18:14). He urged those who desired to live by Kingdom standards to practice humility (Matt. 18:1; 23:12).

The person with humility does not look down on others (Matt. 18:4; Luke 14:11). Humility in the New Testament is closely connected with the quality of "meekness" (Matt. 5:5). While God resists those who are proud, He provides grace for the humble (Jas. 4:6). Primary in the New Testament is the conviction that one who has humility will not be overly concerned about his or her prestige (Matt. 18:4; 23:12; Rom. 12:16; 2 Cor. 11:7).

Paul believed that quality relationships with other people, especially those who had erred spiritually, hinged on the presence of meekness or humility (1 Cor. 4:21; Gal. 6:1; 2 Tim. 2:25). The New Testament affirms, as does the Old Testament, that God will exalt those who are humble and bring low those who are proud (Luke 1:52; Jas 4:10; 1 Pet. 5:6). The Greek world abhored the quality of meekness or humility, but the Christian community believed these qualities were worthy (2 Cor. 10:18; Col. 3:12; Eph. 4:2).

Gary Hardin

HUMP The fleshy mound on the back of a camel where food is stored in the form of fat. Isaiah 30:6 refers to burdens carried on camels' humps ("bunches KJV).

HUMTAH (Hŭm' tah) Place name meaning, "lizards." Town in hill country of Judah in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:54). Its exact location is not known.

HUNCHBACK One with a humped (curved or crooked) back. According to the Holiness Code, a hunchback was excluded from priestly service though allowed to eat of the priests' holy food (Lev. 21:20). REB translates the unique Hebrew term, "misshapen brows."

HUNDRED, TOWER OF (KJV "Tower of Meah") A tower located on the north wall of Jerusalem which was restored by Nehemiah (Neh. 3:1; 12:39). The name perhaps refers to the height of the tower (100 cubits?), the number of its steps, or the number of troops in its garrison. It may have been part of the Temple fortress (Neh. 2:8).

HUNDREDS A division of 100 persons. Moses appointed leaders of hundreds to assist him in rendering legal decisions (Ex. 18:21,25). In Numbers 31:14 leaders of hundreds are commanders of forces of 100 men each. The Philistine (1 Sam. 29:2) and the Romans (see Centurion) also made use of divisions of 100. The seating of the crowd in groups of hundreds in Mark 6:40 is perhaps meant to recall Israel's wilderness division.

HUNDREDWEIGHT A unit of weight equal to 100 pounds (Rev. 16:21 REB, RSV). The underlying Greek means "about the weight of a talent" (KJV). Most modern translations equate the talent with 100 pounds (NAS, NIV, NRSV, TEV).

HUNGER A strong need or desire for food. Scripture contains haunting pictures of hunger. Isaiah 29:8 uses the image of a hungry person dreaming of eating only to awake hungry again. In Lamentations 4:9, those who fell by the sword are reckoned better off than those pierced by hunger. Hunger frequently takes on a theological significance. Exodus 16:3 recounts Israel's complaint that Moses led them from Egypt to kill them with hunger in the desert. God used this experience of hunger to humble the rebellious people and to teach them to hunger for His word (Deut. 8:3). Hunger was one penalty of disobedience of covenant obligations (Deut. 28:48; 32:24).

The cessation of hunger is frequently associated with God's salvation. Hannah anticipated God's reversing the fortunes of the hungry (1 Sam. 2:5; Compare Luke 6:21,25). Isaiah promised that those returning from Exile would not be plagued by hunger (49:10). Ezekiel pictured God as providing for the needs of God's sheep so there would be no hunger (34:29). Part of the blessedness of the redeemed of Revelation 7:16 is the end of their hunger.

In Matthew 5:6 Jesus spoke of those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, that is, those who earnestly desire to see God's will become a reality. In John 6:35 Jesus promised that anyone who came to Him would not hunger but would be satisfied.

HUNT/HUNTER To pursue game for food or pleasure. Hunting was an important supplementary food source, especially in the seminomadic stage of civilization. Genesis mentions several hunters by name, none of whom are Israelite ancestors (Nimrod, 10:9; Ishmael, 21:20; Esau, 25:27), perhaps suggesting that hunting was more characteristic of Israel's neighbors than of Israel. Hunting was, however, regulated by Mosaic law. The blood of captured game was to be poured out on the ground (Lev. 17:13). Deuteronomy 14:3–5 outlines what game was permitted as ritually clean food.

The tools of the hunter include bows and arrows (Gen. 21:20; 27:3), nets (Job 18:8; Ezek. 12:13), snares or pitfalls (Job 18:8), if the term does not refer to part of the net (NAS, NIV, REB); traps, snares, ropes (Job 18:9–10). Terror, the pit, and the trap of Isaiah 24:17–18 (also Jer. 48:43–44) perhaps allude to the Battue method of hunting whereby a group forms a cordon and beats over the earth, driving game into a confined area, pit, or net. Ancient Egyptian carvings depict such methods of hunting.

Hunting for pleasure was a popular pastime of ancient kings. The hunt is a popular motif in the art of the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Phoniceans. The Assyrian reliefs depicting Ashurbanipal's lion hunt are particularly well known. The Old Testament does not mention hunting as a pastime of the kings of Israel or Judah. Josephus did note Herod's love of the hunt.

Most often the hunt is used figuratively. A rare positive image is Jeremiah's picture of God's hunting the scattered exiles to return them to Israel (Jer. 16:16). Saul hunted David (1 Sam. 24:11). Matthew described the Pharisees' plotting "to entrap" Jesus (22:15), Luke their "lying in wait" for Him (11:54). The Pastorals speak of the devil's snare (1 Tim. 3:7; 2 Tim. 2:26). Ezekiel 13:17–23 pictures women practicing magical arts as fowlers ensnaring the people. In Micah 7:2 the unfaithful are portrayed as hunting each other with nets. The warning of Proverbs 6:5 is to save oneself (from evil) like the gazelle or roe flees the hunter. Chris Church

HUPHAM (Hū' phăm) Original ancestor of clan of Benjamin in the wilderness (Num. 26:39). Hupham may be the original reading behind Huppim in Genesis 46:21 and 1 Chronicles 7:12,15. Comparison of Genesis 46:21; Numbers 26:38; 1 Chronicles 7:6; 8:1–2 shows the difficulty in restoring precisely the names of Benjamin's sons. Similarly, the sons of Bela, Benjamin's son, are difficult to restore (Num. 26:39–40; 1 Chron. 7:7; 8:3–4). Part of the explanation may lie in the use of genealogies to claim membership in an important clan rather than to precisely reproduce family structures.

HUPHAMITE (Hū' phăm īte) Member of clan of Hupham in tribe of Benjamin.

HUPPAH (Hŭp' pah) Personal name meaning, "shelter" or "roof" or "bridal chamber." Leader of thirteenth course of priests under David (1 Chron. 24:13).

HUPPIM (Hŭp' pĭm) Personal name of unknown meaning. Son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). See Hupham.

HUR (Hûr) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "white one" or "Horite" or perhaps derived from the name of the Egyptian god "Horus." 1. Israelite leader who accompanied Moses and Aaron to the top of the mountain in the fight against the Amalekites. Hur helped Aaron hold Moses' hands up so Israel could prevail. In some way not explicitly stated, Moses' hands were the symbol of and instrument for God's power with Israel's army (Ex. 17:10–12). Hur and Aaron also represented Moses and settled any problems among the people while Moses ascended the mountain to receive God's instructions (Ex. 24:14). This same Hur was probably the grandfather of Bezaleel of the tribe of Judah, who was the artisan in charge of making the metal works for the tabernacle in the wilderness (Ex. 31:2). He was Caleb's son (1 Chron. 2:19). A genealogy of Hur appears both in 1 Chronciles 2:50 and 4:1. The text is difficult to decipher at times. Apparently, like the Table of Nations in Genesis 10, these texts show geographical and political relationships of the descendants of Caleb. 2. King of Midian whom Israel slew as they moved toward the Promised Land (Num. 31:8). Joshua 13:21 identifies the kings of Midian as vassals of Sihon (Num. 31). 3. District governor under Solomon over Mount Ephraim in charge of providing the royal table with provisions one month a year (1 Kings 4:8). His name may also be translated Ben-hur. 4. Administrator over half the district of Jerusalem under Nehemiah or father of the administrator (Neh. 3:9).

HURAI (Hū' rā ī) Variant reading in 1 Chronicles 11:32 for David's warrior Hiddai in the parallel passage (2 Sam. 23:30).

HURAM (Hū' răm) Personal name probably shortened from Ahuram meaning, "exalted brother." 1. Chronicler's spelling of Hiram, king of Tyre (2 Chron. 2). Also the Chronicler's form for Hiram, the artisan King Hiram sent to help with the metal work on the Temple (2 Chron. 2:13). See Hiram. 2. Descendant of Benjamin, often identified with Hupham of Numbers 26:39. See Hupham.

HURAMABI (Hū' răm-ă' bī) Personal name perhaps meaning, "my father is an exalted brother." NAS, NIV, NRSV name for Huram/Hiram, the skilled artisan Hiram, King of Tyre, sent Solomon to help build the Temple (2 Chron. 2:13). See Huram.

HURI (Hū' rī) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "white one," "linen maker," "Horite," or "my Horus" (Egyptian god). A member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14).

HURRIANS See Horites.

HUSBAND The male partner in a marriage. See Family; Household; Marriage.

HUSBANDMAN KJV term for one who tills the soil; a farmer. Husbandry refers to farming. Modern translations replace husbandman and husbandry with other terms. The substitutions of the RSV are typical; plowman (Isa. 61:5); farmer (2 Chron. 26:10; Jer. 14:4; 31:24; 51:23; Amos 5:16); tiller of the soil (Gen. 9:20; Joel 1:11). The KJV's "ye are God's husbandry" was rendered with "you are God's field." See Farmer; Agriculture; Occupations.

HUSHAH (Hū' shah) Personal and place name meaning, "hurry." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:4) listed along with Bethlehem and thus probably original ancestor of clan who lived in town of Hushah, perhaps modern Husan near Bethlehem. Some Bible students think that in the copying process the name was changed from an original Shuah (1 Chron. 4:11) through transposition of Hebrew letters. Two of David's soldiers came from Hushah: Sibbechai (2 Sam. 21:18) and Mebunnai (2 Sam. 23:27).

HUSHAI (Hū' shâi) Personal name meaning, "quick," "from Hushah," or "gift of brotherhood." The name could represent copying transposition from an original Shuah. See Hushah. This would designate his family as from Shuhu, the Syrian state in the central Euphrates region or a state in Edom or Arabia. The clan became a part of Israel as a clan of the tribe of Benjamin living in Archi southwest of Bethel (Josh. 16:2). Hushai was "David's friend" (2 Sam. 15:37), probably referring to an official government post as in Egypt, a close personal adviser somewhat like the secretary of state. As David escaped, leaving Jerusalem to his son Absalom, Hushai joined him, mourning (2 Sam. 15:32). David sent him back to deceive Absalom (2 Sam. 15:34; 16:16–19). His counsel to Absalom bought time for David to establish new headquarters and gather forces for new strategy (2 Sam. 17).

Solomon's commissioner in charge of collecting royal provisions in Asher was the son of Hushai, perhaps the same as "David's friend" (1 Kings 4:16).

HUSHAM (Hū′ shăm) Personal name, perhaps meaning, "large-nosed" or "with haste." One of the early kings of Edom (Gen. 36:34) from Teman.

HUSHATHITE (Hū′ shăth īte) Citizen of Hushah. See Hushah.

HUSHIM (Hū′ shĭm) Personal name meaning, "hurried ones." 1. Son of Dan and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:23). 2. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:12), though many Bible students think copying has caused omission of tribe of Dan in the list, Hushim here being the same as in Genesis 46:23. Dan's son is named Shuham in Numbers 26:42, perhaps resulting from a copying transposition of Hebrew letters. 3. Wife of Shaharaim of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:8) and mother of Abitub and Elpaal (1 Chron. 8:11). Apparently, her husband sent her away either for safety or as part of family problems before he went to Moab.

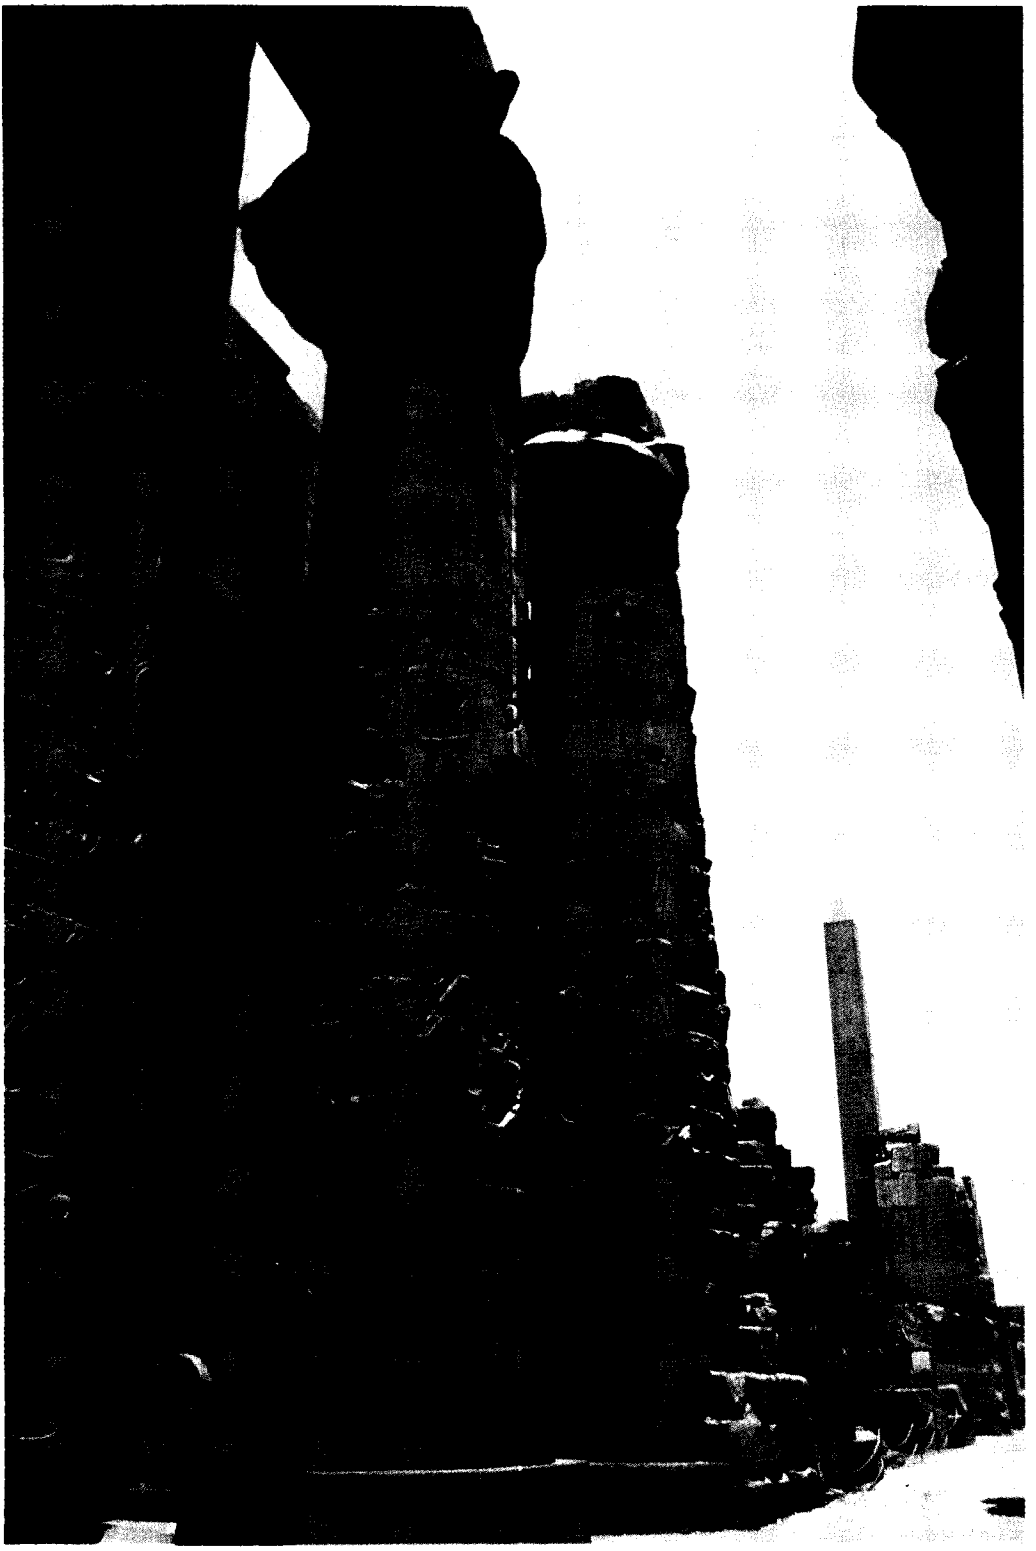
HUSHITES (Hū′ shītes) NIV translation of Hushim (1 Chron. 7:12), interpreting it as the name of a population group rather than as an individual.

HUSK The outer covering of a seed or fruit, usually either dry (as the carob) or membranous (as the grape) (Num. 6:4; 2 Kings 4:42, Luke 15:16). Modern translations replace husk with skins when referring to grapes (Num. 6:4). The term translated husk at 2 Kings 4:42 is a hapax legomena, a term used only once in Scripture. NAS, RSV follow the Latin Vulgate in rendering the term "sack." Other modern translations follow other ancient versions in omitting the term. Modern translations give "pods" or "bean pods" for husks at Luke 15:16. The pods of the Carob tree (Ceratonia siliqua) are probably intended (so NAS margin). The ripe pods are full of a dark, honeylike syrup. These are ground and used as an animal feed.

HUT Modern translations' rendering for a lean-to or temporary shelter; shack (Isa. 1:8; 24:20). The image of Isaiah 1:8 stresses the isolation of Jerusalem, the sole survivor of the cities of Judah (1:7–9). Isaiah 24:20 illustrates God's power in judgment in the picture of the earth's swaying like an unstable hut before the Lord.

HUZ (Hŭz) KJV spelling for Uz (Gen. 22:21). See Uz.

HUZZAB (Hŭz′ zăb) KJV transliteration of Hebrew word whose meaning in the context of Nahum 2:7 is not clear. KJV takes it as a city-state. Other translators take the word as a Hebrew verb meaning "fixed" (NAS) or "decreed" (NRSV, NIV). Others see a feminine noun: "train" of captives (REB), "queen" (TEV), "its mistress" (RSV). The verbal translation is probably correct, pointing to God's established plan announced through the prophet to defeat Assyria and its capital Nineveh. Otherwise, the term is describing Nineveh in figurative language, perhaps referring to deportation of dressed-up idols defeated in war.



HYACINTH A stone regarded as precious in ancient times. The hyacinth is sometimes identified with the sapphire (Rev. 9:17 NRSV, TEV) or turquoise (Ex. 28:19; Rev. 9:17; 21:20 REB; Ex. 28:19; Rev. 21:20 TEV). Others identify the hyacinth with zircon, a brown to greyish gem, or essonite, a yellow to brown garnet.

HYENA Any of a group of stockily-built, carnivorous mammals of the genus Hyaena, located zoologically between the felines and canines. Hyena feed on carrion and are knwon for their cowardess, cruelty, and disagreeable cry. All the scriptural references concern judgment on foreign nations (Babylon or Edom) which are left desolate (Isa. 13:22; 34:14; Jer. 50:39). KJV translated the term for hyena as "wild beasts of the islands." The REB identifies this animal with the jackal (so NAS Jer. 50:39). NAS uses wolves in Isaiah 34:14.

The Hebrew term for hyena is used as a man's name (Zibeon, Gen. 36:20) and as the name for a town (Zeboim, Neh. 11:34) and valley (1 Sam. 13:18) in the territory of Benjamin.

HYKSOS (Hŷk′ sōs) Racial name from the Greek form of an Egyptian word meaning "rulers of foreign lands" given to kings of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Dynasties of Egypt. The word, which does not appear in the Bible, was later misinterpreted by Josephus as meaning "shepherd kings."

With the decline of the Middle Kingdom of Egypt (about 2000–1786 B.C.) large numbers of Asiatics, mostly Semites like the Hebrew patri-archs, migrated into the Nile Delta of northern Egypt from Canaan. These probably came initially for reasons of economic distress, such as famine, as did Abraham (Gen. 12:10). Unlike Abraham, many groups stayed in Egypt as permanent settlers. Under the weak Thirteenth Dynasty, some Asiatics established local independent chiefdoms in the eastern Delta region. Eventually, one of these local rulers managed to consolidate the rule of northern Egypt as pharaoh, thus beginning the Fifteenth Dynasty. The Sixteenth Dynasty, perhaps contemporary with the Fifteenth, consisted of minor Asiatic kings. As these dynasties of pharaohs were not ethnic Egyptians, they were remembered by the native population as "Hyksos."

Hypostyle Hall of the Temple at Karnak, or Thebes, home of Egyptian dynasty who replaced the Hyksos.

While the Hyksos pharaohs ruled northern Egypt from Avaris in the eastern Delta, the native Egyptian Seventeenth Dynasty ruled southern Egypt from Thebes. This period is known as the Second Intermediate or Hyksos Period (about 1786–1540 B.C.). The status quo was maintained until war erupted between the Hyksos and the last two pharaohs of the Seventeenth Dynasty. About 1540 B.C., Ahmose I sacked Avaris and expelled the Hyksos. As the first pharaoh of a reunited Egypt, Ahmose I established the Eighteenth Dynasty and inaugurated the Egyptian New Kingdom or Empire.

Joseph's rise to power (Gen. 41:39–45) as pharaoh's second-in-command would have been far more likely under a Hyksos king. Joseph was related ethnically to the Semitic Hyksos rulers, while the native Egyptians regarded Semites with contempt. Ahmose I is very likely the pharaoh "who did not know Joseph" (Ex. 1:8 NRSV). If Joseph served a Hyksos pharaoh, an Egyptian king would not have "known" of him in a political or historical sense, nor would he have regarded him as significant in an ethnic sense.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

HYMENAEUS (Hī′ mĕ nāe′ ŭs) Personal name of the Greek god of marriage. Name of a fellow worker of Paul whose faith weakened and whose life-style changed, leading Paul to deliver him to Satan (1 Tim. 1:20). That probably means Paul led the church to dismiss Hymenaeus from the membership to purify the church, remove further temptation from the church, and to lead Hymenaeus to restored faith, repentance, and renewed church membership. Along with Philetus, Hymenaeus taught that the resurrection had already occurred (2 Tim. 2:17–18). See Gnosticism. Compare 1 Corinthians 5.

HYMENEUS (Hī mĕ nē′ ŭs) KJV spelling of Hymenaeus.

HYMN The generic term given to vocal praise in the Bible.

Old Testament Ceremonial religious singing is mentioned in the Old Testament in connection with important events, such as the songs in celebration of the Hebrews' passage through the Red Sea (Ex. 15:1–21), Deborah and Barak's triumph song after the defeat of the forces of Jabin, king of Hazor (Judg. 5:1–31), and the women's song at David's victorious return from battle with the Philistines (1 Sam. 18:6–7). Moses also gave the Israelites some of his last warnings in a great song (Deut. 32:1–43). The Book of Psalms is a hymn book. The hymns in it were written by different authors over a long period of time and used by the people of Israel in their worship. The collection of 150 psalms eventually was included in Hebrew Scripture. Hymn singing in the Jerusalem Temple was led by trained choirs, sometimes using instrumental accompaniment (2 Chron. 29:25–28). The people joined the choir in singing hymns in unison, responsively, and antiphonally.

Hymn is also the technical term for a specific literary type of material in Psalms. In this sense a hymn expresses the congregation's praise of God's greatness and majesty, usually addressing members of the congregation and inviting them to praise God. A hymn usually includes a call to the congregation to join in praise (Ps. 33:1–3), a list of reasons to praise God (Ps. 33:4–19), and a concluding call to praise or statement of trust (Ps. 33:20–22).

New Testament The Bible makes it clear that the singing of spiritual songs was a part of the early Christian church. Among the songs in the New Testament are several outstanding songs that have become a part of liturgical Christian worship: Luke 1:46–55, Mary's song—"The Magnificat"; Luke 1:68–79, Zacharias' prophetic song—"The Benedictus"; and Luke 2:29–32, Simeon's blessing of the infant Jesus and farewell—"The Nunc Dimittis." Numerous doxologies (Luke 2:14; 1 Tim. 1:17; 6:15–16; Rev. 4:8, for example) doubtless were used in corporate worship. Other passages in the New Testament give evidence of being quotations of hymns or fragments of hymns (Rom. 8:31–39; 1 Cor. 13; Eph. 1:3–14; Eph. 5:14; Phil. 2:5–11; 1 Tim. 3:16; 2 Tim. 2:11–13; Tit. 3:4–7). As for references to the word itself, the New Testament states that Jesus and His disciples sang a hymn at the end of the Last Supper (Matt. 26:30; Mark 14:26). Most Bible students think they sang part of Psalms 115–118, hymns known as the Hallel, which traditionally were sung after supper on the night of Passover. The division of Christian song into psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs (Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16) should not to be taken to mean that there were three distinct types or styles of vocal music in use in those days. The reference indicates that Christian song was used in worship, to instruct in the faith, and to express joy. In another New Testament reference, Acts 16:25, the mention of singing "praises" to God obviously means that Paul and Silas sang hymns in prison. The author of the Book of Hebrews stressed in 2:12 (a quotation of the messianic Ps. 22:22) that Jesus will declare His name to the church, that He will "sing praise," or hymns. J. William Thompson HYPOCRISY (Hĭ pŏc' rĭ sĭ) Pretense to being what one really is not, especially the pretense of being a better person than one really is. The word is based on the Greek hypokrisis, originally meaning to give an answer. A hypocrite in classical Greek could be an interpreter of dreams, an orator, a reciter of poetry, or an actor. Originally a neutral term, "hypocrite" gained the negative connotation of pretense, duplicity, or insincerity.

In the Bible the negative meaning prevails. Often hypocrisy refers to evil or sin in general, not pretense in particular. In the Old Testament, "hypocrite" was used by the King James Version whereas later translations (e.g. RSV, NIV) often use "godless" or "ungodly" (Job 8:13; 15:34–35; 17:8; Isa. 9:17; 33:14, etc.). This "godless" person was totally opposed to God or forgetful of God. The Hebrew word often translated "hypocrite" referred to pollution or corruption. Although the Hebrews were concerned about pretense or insincerity (Isa. 29:13; Jer. 12:2), there is no one Hebrew word exactly equivalent to "hypocrisy."

Hypocrisy in the narrower sense of playing a role is highlighted in the New Testament, especially in the teaching of Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels. Jesus criticized hypocrites for being pious in public (Matt. 6:2,5,16). They were more interested in human praise when they gave alms, prayed, and fasted than in God's reward. Hypocrites were also guilty of being judgmental of others' faults and ignoring their own (Matt. 7:1–5). Jesus often called the Pharisees hypocrites because of the conflict between their external actions and internal attitudes (Matt. 15:1–9). Their true attitudes would be revealed (Luke 12:1–3). The hypocrites could interpret the weather but not the signs of the times (Luke 12:56). They were more concerned about the rules for the sabbath than a woman's physical health (Luke 13:15). Luke noted that the religious leaders pretended to be sincere when they asked Jesus about paying tribute to Caesar (Luke 20:20). Probably the most famous discussion of hypocrisy is Matthew 23. The religious leaders did not practice what they preached (Matt. 23:3). Jesus compared them to dishes that were clean on the outside and dirty on the inside and to whitewashed tombs (Matt. 23:25–28).

Hypocrisy is a concern throughout the New Testament. Although the term does not occur, it was part of the sin of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1–11). Paul accused Peter of hypocrisy for refusing to eat with Gentile Christians in Antioch (Gal. 2:12–13). Paul warned Timothy about hypocritical false teachers (1 Tim. 4:2). Peter included hypocrisy as one of the attitudes Christians should avoid (1 Pet. 2:1).

Six times New Testament writers stress that sincerity (without hypocrisy, anupokritos) should characterize the Christian. Christian love (Rom. 12:9; 2 Cor. 6:6; 1 Pet. 1:22), faith (1 Tim. 1:5; 2 Tim. 1:5), and wisdom (Jas. 3:17) should be sincere.

See Lie; Pharisees; Sin; Truth.

Warren McWilliams

HYSSOP A small (about 27 inches), bushy plant, probably Origanum Maru L., the Syrian marjoram. Stalks of hyssop bear numerous, small, white flowers in bunches. Hyssop was thus well-suited for use as a "brush" to dab the lintels of Israelite homes with the blood of the Passover lambs (Ex. 12:22). The associations of hyssop with the events of the Exodus perhaps led to its use in other rites, the cleansing of lepers (Lev. 14:4,6,49,51–52) and the cleansing of those unclean from contact with a corpse (Num. 19:6,18; see Heifer, Red). Psalm 51:7 applies the well-known image of hyssop to spiritual cleansing from sin.

A branch of hyssop bore the sponge used to offer vinegar to Christ at His crucifixion (John 19:29; Matt. 27:48; Mark 15:36 mention a reed). Various attempts to resolve this tension have been offered. Most exegetes have attempted to harmonize the parallel accounts: (1) by suggesting that Christ was offered vinegar twice, once using a reed and once hyssop; (2) by suggesting both a reed and hyssop were simultaneously used to support the sponge; (3) by emending John's text to read "spike" which is more easily harmonized with reed; (4) by taking hyssop to refer to a plant other than marjoram which could be described as a reed, e.g., Sorghum vulgare. An alternative approach is concerned primarily with the question of why (theological significance) rather than the details of what. These interpreters stress that John intends to link Jesus' death with the Exodus event that marked liberation from Egyptian slavery and/or with the Old Testament cleansing rituals involving hyssop.

Hebrews 9:19 says the people were sprinkled with hyssop at the reading of the covenant. The account of Exodus 24:6–8 lacks this detail.

I

Outside close-up view of ruins of the Colosseum of Ancient Rome in Italy

I AM A shortened form of God's response to Moses' request for the name of the God of the patriarchs (Ex. 3:13–14). The fuller form of the name may be rendered "I am who I am," "I will be who I will be," or even "I cause to be what is." See YHWH. God's response is not a "name" that makes God an object of definition or limitation. Rather, it is an affirmation that God is always subject, always free to be and act as God wills. The earliest Greek rendering "I am the one who is" or "I am Being" has been especially significant in the development of theology.

Jesus' "I am" response in several New Testament passages suggests more than the simple identifying "I am he." The "I am" of Mark 6:50 means "I am Jesus and not a ghost," but suggests the divine "I am" who alone "tramples down the waves of the sea" (Job 9:8; Mark 6:48–49) and made the waves hush (Ps. 107:28–29; compare Mark 4:39). John 8:24 makes recognition that Jesus is the "I am" a matter of eternal life and death: "You will die in your sins unless you believe that I am." The Jews misunderstood, thinking it was a matter of identity ("Who are you?" 8:25). Recognition that Jesus is the "I am" who is one in word and action with His Father is possible only when Jesus has been lifted up on the cross/raised from the dead (8:28). That the Jews rightly understood Jesus' claim "before Abraham was, I am" (8:58) as a divine claim is evident from their picking up stones to throw at Him. The "I am" of John 18:5 again suggests more than "I am the man you are looking for." Rather, Jesus is the "I am" whose awesome presence forced the guard back and into a posture of reverence. Here Jesus was not the object of betrayal but the subject who won the release of His disciples (18:8). Though differing in form from the "I am" sayings, the references to the one "who is and who was and who is to come" (Rev. 1:4,8; 4:8; compare 11:17; 16:5) are similar in thought. In a context of intense hardship that called into question God's sovereignty, the writer of Revelation reaffirmed Israel's faith in the "I am" who is the subject of history and not its victim. Chris Church

A vase handle in the shape of a beautiful winged ibex.

IBEX A species of wild goat with large curved horns, native to high mountain areas. The ibex is included among clean game (Deut. 14:5). KJV's pygarg is a white-rumped antelope (compare "white-rumped deer" REB). The precise identity of the animal (whether goat or antelope) is uncertain.

IBHAR (Ĭb′ här) Personal name meaning, "he elected." Son born to David after he moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:15).

IBLEAM (Ĭb′ lė am) Place name meaning, "he swallowed the people." City in tribal territory of Issachar but given to tribe of Manasseh (Josh. 17:11). Many Bible students think Ibleam was the original reading for the Levite city in Joshua 21:25, where the Hebrew text now reads "Gath-rimmon," also read in verse 24. A copyist may have copied the name from verse 24 into verse 25. Some Greek manuscripts read Iebatha, perhaps a corruption of Ibleam. First Chronicles 6:70 reads Bileam, pointing to Ibleam as original. Other Greek manuscripts read Beth-Shean. Manasseh could not conquer Ibleam (Judg. 1:27). Jehu, in his coupe against Jehoram, king of Israel, also mortally wounded Ahaziah, king of Judah, near Ibleam (2 Kings 9:27). Many Bible students also read Ibleam as the place of attack in 2 Kings 15:10 (REB, TEV, RSV, but not NRSV). The Hebrew text either uses an Aramaic pronoun otherwise unknown in Hebrew meaning, "before"; or it refers to a place Kabal-am otherwise unknown. Some Greek manuscripts read Ibleam. Normal text procedure would see Ibleam as the easier reading adopted in view of 2 Kings 9:27 by a copyist or translator who did not understand the Hebrew text. Ibleam is modern bir Belalmeh about a mile southwest of Jenin.

IBNEIAH (Ĭb nêi′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah builds." Benjaminite who returned from Exile and settled in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 9:8).

IBNIJAH (Ĭb nī′ jah) Personal name meaning, "Yah builds," a variant spelling of Ibneiah. Ancestor in tribe of Benjamin of one of persons returning from Exile and living in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 9:8).

IBRI (Ĭb′ rī) Personal name meaning, "Hebrew." A Levite under King David (1 Chron. 24:27). See Habiru.

IBSAM (Ĭb′ săm) Personal name akin to balsam, meaning, "sweet smelling," in modern translations. KJV spelling is Jibsam. Member of tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:2).

IBZAN (Ĭb′ zăn) Personal name perhaps meaning, "quick, agile." Judge of Israel from Bethlehem who participated in royal practice of marrying children to foreigners (Judg. 12:8–10).

ICE Frozen water. Job's poetry has several references to ice. Ice is described as hard as stone (38:30). In picturesque language, ice is frozen by the "breath of God" (37:10). In an even bolder image, the Lord demanded to know "Out of whose womb came the ice? and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?" (38:29). Though lacking the knowledge of a meteorologist, the biblical writer saw clearly with wondering eyes that God was the ultimate source of weather phenomena. The Hebrew term translated ice is sometimes rendered cold or frost (Gen. 31:40; Jer. 36:30).

ICHABOD (Ĭch′ ă bŏd) Personal name meaning "where is the glory?" The son of Phinehas, Eli's son (1 Sam. 4:21). His birth seems to have been precipitated by the news of the death of his father and the capture of the ark of the covenant in battle against the Philistines. The mother of Ichabod died immediately after the child's birth. See Eli.

ICONIUM (Ī cō′ nĭ um) City of Asia Minor visited by Barnabas and Paul during the first missionary journey (Acts 13:51). Paul endured sufferings and persecution at Iconium (2 Tim. 3:11). Its location is that of the modern Turkish provincial capital Konya. Iconium was mentioned for the first time in the fourth century B.C. by the historian Xenophon. In New Testament times it was considered to be a part of the Roman province of Galatia. Evidently it has had a continuous existence since its founding. See Asia Minor.

IDALAH (Ĭd′ ă lah) Place name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "jackal" or "memorial." Town in tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:15), probably modern khirbet el-Hawarah south of Bethlehem in Zebulun, not to be confused with the more famous Bethlehem in Judah.

IDBASH (Ĭd′ băsh) Personal name meaning, "sweet as honey." Son of Etam in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:3), according to modern translations and earliest Greek translation. KJV follows Hebrew text in reading father rather than son of Etam.

IDDO (Ĭd′ dō) English spelling of four different Hebrew personal names. 1. Name of uncertain meaning. Person with authority in the exilic community during the Persian period to whom Ezra sent messengers to secure Levites to join him in the return to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:17). He apparently sent the needed Levites (vv. 19—20). 2. Personal name perhaps meaning, "his praise." Leader of the eastern half of tribe of Manasseh under David (1 Chron. 27:21). The written Hebrew text uses this name in Ezra 10:43 for a man with a foreign wife, but an early scribal note followed by English translations read Jadau. 3. Name perhaps meaning, "Yahweh adorns Himself." A prophet whose records the chronicler refers to for more information about Solomon and Jeroboam (2 Chron. 9:29), Rehoboam (2 Chron. 12:15), and Abijah (2 Chron. 13:22). The latter indicates he wrote a midrash (NAS, "annotations"), which may indicate a Jewish exposition of Scripture. As early as Josephus, Iddo had been identified with the nameless prophet who spoke against the altar of Bethel in 1 Kings 13. The Hebrew texts spell his name in different ways in the different occurrences. 4. Grandfather of Zechariah, the prophet (Zech. 1:1,7 with different Hebrew spellings). Ezra 5:1; 6:14 put Zechariah as Iddo's son, using "son" to mean descendant, as often in Hebrew. He is included among the priestly families in the early postexilic community (Neh. 12:4,16). 5. Father of Solomon's district supervisor who supplied the royal court provisions for one month a year in the area of Mahanaim (1 Kings 4:14). 6. A Levite (1 Chron. 6:21).

IDLE Not engaged in earning a living; depending on the labor and generosity of others for support. Scripture distinguishes between those unwilling to work who should not eat (2 Thess. 3:10) and those unable to earn a living (for example, "true" widows, 1 Tim. 5:9) for whom the community of faith is responsible. Hebrew wisdom literature frequently condemned idleness as the cause of hunger (Prov. 19:15), poverty (Prov. 10:4; 14:23), and inadequate housing (Eccl. 10:18). According to Hebrew wisdom, the ideal woman "eateth not the bread of idleness" (Prov. 31:27), but is an industrious, working woman who helps provide for the financial needs of her family (Prov. 31:16,24). In the New Testament, Paul called attention to his own example as a bi-vocational minister to encourage the Thessalonian Christians to be hard workers (2 Thess. 3:7–8). Though Scripture consistently condemns "willful" idleness, it is also aware of economic realities in which some who are willing workers stand idle because no one has hired them (Matt. 20:6–7). The biblical witness likewise does not trace all poverty to idleness. Some poverty results from the rich refusing to pay their poor day laborers (Lev. 19:13; Jer. 22:13; Jas. 5:4).

IDOL Physical or material image or form representing a reality or being considered divine and thus an object of worship. In the Bible various terms are used to refer to idols or idolatry: "image", either graven (carved) or cast, "statue," "abomination." Both Testaments condemn idols, but with idols the Old Testament expresses more concern than the New, probably reflecting the fact that the threat of idolatry was more pronounced for the people of the Old Testament.

The ancient Hebrews lived in a world filled with idols. Egyptians represented their deities in various human-animal forms. Similarly, the various Mesopotamian cultures used idol representations of their deities, as did the Hittites in ancient Asia Minor. More of a threat to Hebrew worship were the Canaanite Baal and Asherah fertility images, some of which are commonly found in excavations. Use of idols in worship continued to be commonplace in Greek and Roman religion.

One of the prominent distinguishing features of biblical religion is its ideal of imageless worship. Clearly expressed in the decalogue is the command: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image . . . thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them" (Ex. 20:4,5). This is usually interpreted to be a negative statement concerning idols but with positive implications toward the spiritual worship desired by God.

Idols were a problem of long standing. The first rebellion of the Hebrews centered around the golden calf made under Aaron's leadership in the wilderness (Ex. 32). The bronze serpent illustrates the Hebrews' propensity for idol worship. Moses set it up in the wilderness to allay a plague of serpents (Num. 21), but Israel retained it and made it an object of worship (2 Kings 18:4). Joshua called on the people to put away the gods their fathers had served in Mesopotamia and in Egypt (Josh. 24:14). Perhaps a misguided King Jeroboam intended to represent Yahweh by the gold calves set up in his temples at Bethel and Dan when he led the northern tribes to secede from the kingdom inherited by Rehoboam (1 Kings 12:28-33).

Probable Hittite idols, one of gold and the other of stone, found at Bogaskoy.

Biblical writers often denounced idolatry. None is more graphic and devastating than that in Isaiah 44:9–20. The idol is made by a workman but is powerless to sustain the workman to complete his task. Further, the idol begins as a leftover piece of a tree from which a person makes a god. He then worships no more than a block of wood.

Many scholars believe that the threat of idolatry was much less in the Jewish community after the Babylonian Exile and that it continued to be diminished though still present throughout New Testament times. The most noted problem in the New Testament concerns the propriety of eating meat which has previously been offered to an idol (1 Cor. 8—10). Paul seemingly broadened the scope of idolatry for Christianity when he identified covetousness with idolatry (Col. 3:5). See Food Offered to Idols; Gods, Pagan.

Bruce C. Cresson

IDOLATRY See Idol.

IDOLOMACY The practice of consulting images of household gods (teraphim) for advice (Ezek. 21:21; Zech. 10:2). Zechariah encouraged his contemporaries to pray to God since the teraphim were "utter nonsense."

IDUMEA Ĭd ū mē′ à) In Isaiah 34:5, a nation destined for judgment. "Idumea" is the term used in the Greek version of the Old Testament and in the writings of the Jewish historian Josephus for Edom. The region was southeast of the Dead Sea. The Herods came originally from Idumea. Crowds from Idumea followed Jesus early in His ministry (Mark 3:8). See Edom.

IEZER (Ī ē′ zēr) Personal name meaning, "where is help" or a short form of "my father is help." (Hebrew Abiezer, Josh. 17:2). Son of Gilead in tribe of Manasseh and original clan ancestor of Iezerites (Num. 26:30). KJV, REB spelling is Jeezer.

IEZERITES (Ī ē′ zēr ītes) See Iezer.

IGAL (Ī′ găl) Personal name meaning, "he redeems." 1. Spy representing tribe of Issachar whom Moses sent to investigate the land of Canaan (Num. 13:7). He voted with the majority that the land was too difficult for Israel to conquer. 2. One of David's heroic warriors, apparently a foreigner from Zobah (2 Sam. 23:36), though his name is spelled Joel, and he is the brother, not son, of Nathan in 1 Chronicles 11:38. 3. Descendant of David in the postexilic community (about 470 B.C.) and thus bearer of the messianic line and hope (1 Chron. 3:22), though the chronicler does not describe him in messianic terms here.

IGDALIAH (Ĭg dȧ lī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is great." Ancestor of the prophets whose chamber in the Temple Jeremiah used to test the Rechabites loyalty to their oath not to drink wine (Jer. 35:4). This is apparently evidence for professional prophets on the Temple staff. See Jeremiah; Rechabites.

IGEAL (Ī′ gē al) KJV spelling of Igal in 1 Chronicles 3:22. See Igal.

IGNORANCE Lack of knowledge or comprehension. Old Testament law distinguished between sins of ignorance or sin unintentionally (Lev. 4:2,13,14; Num. 15:24–29) and premeditated sins ("sin presumptuously" or with a high hand Num. 15:30–31). Sins committed in ignorance incur guilt (Lev. 4:13,22,27); however, the sacrificial system provided atonement for such sin (Lev. 4; 5:5–6). In contrast, "high-handed" or "presumptuous" sin is an affront to the Lord punishable by exclusion from the people of God. The Law provided no ritual cleansing for such sin (Num. 15:30–31). Common images for sins of ignorance include error (Lev. 5:18), straying (Ps. 119:10), and stumbling (Job 4:4). By extension these images can be applied to any sin. Thus Proverbs 19:27 warns against willful "erring" from words of divine counsel.

The New Testament speaks of past ignorance which God excuses. Such was the ignorance of those Jews who participated in crucifying Jesus (Acts 3:17; 13:27), of Paul who persecuted Christians (1 Tim. 1:13), and of Gentiles who did not recognize the true God (Acts 17:30). Though God "winks at" such past ignorance, He requires repentance (Acts 3:19; 17:30). Obedience characterizes lives of the converted just as ignorant desires characterize those without Christ (1 Pet. 1:14). The New Testament speaks of deliberate ignorance as well as "excusable" ignorance. Most often deliberate ignorance involves the stubborn refusal to acknowledge nature's witness to the powerful existence of God (Rom. 1:18–21; Eph. 4:18; 2 Pet. 3:5).

IIM (Ī′ ĭm) Place name meaning ruins. 1. Town on southern border of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:29). Its location is not known, and it does not appear in parallel lists in Joshua 19:3; 1 Chronicles 4:29. Many Bible students think a copyist copied parts of the following Ezem twice. 2. Used in Numbers 33:45 (KJV) as abbreviation for Iye-abarim. See Iye-abarim.

IJEABARIM (Ī jē ȧb′ ȧ rĭm) KJV spelling for Iye-abarim. See Iye-abarim.

IJON (Ī′ jŏn) Place name meaning, "ruin." Place in northern Israel captured by King Ben-Hadad of Damascus as a result of his agreement with King Asa of Judah (910–869 B.C.) to break the treaty between Damascus and Baasha, king of Israel (1 Kings 15:20). This forced Baasha to defend himself on the northern border and quit intruding on Judah's territory, giving Asa opportunity to strengthen his defenses (1 Kings 15:21–22). Tiglath-pileser conquered the city and carried many Israelites into captivity about 734 B.C. (2 Kings 15:29). Ijon is located near modern Marj Uyun between the rivers Litani and Hesbani at tell Dibbin.

IKKESH (Ĭk′ kĕsh) Personal name meaning, "perverted, false." Father of one of David's 30 heroes from Tekoa (2 Sam. 23:26).

ILAI (Ī′ lā ī) Personal name of uncertain meaning. One of David's military heroes (1 Chron. 11:29), apparently the same as Zalmon (2 Sam. 23:28), the different spelling resulting from a copyist's change.

ILLUMINATED To be spiritually or intellectually enlightened. Hebrews 10:32 refers to those who are knowledgeable of the saving message of the gospel. The same Greek term is rendered "enlightened" at Hebrews 6:4.

ILLUSTRATION See Imagery; Parables; Proverb; Wise Saying.

ILLYRICUM (Ĭl lĭr′ ī cŭm) Place name of uncertain meaning. A district in the Roman Empire between the Danube River and the Adriatic Sea. The Romans divided it into Dalmatia and Pannonia. It includes modern Yugoslavia and Albania. Illyricum represented the northeastern limits of Paul's missionary work as he wrote the Romans (Rom. 15:19), though the Bible nowhere mentions his work there. His work in Macedonia was only a few miles away, so he could easily have preached in or sent his associates to Illyricum. This does not mean he had covered all of Illyricum, only that he had introduced the gospel there in the dangerous limits of the empire. Paul had thus completed his missionary ministry of preaching the gospel and planting churches in the eastern end of the empire. Paul was now ready to preach in Rome and the western parts of the Roman Empire (Rom. 15:20–24).

IMAGE OF GOD A biblical description of the unique nature of human beings in their relationship to the Creator God.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness" (Gen. 1:26*b*). This passage contains a key to the understanding of humans and their nature. Scholars through the ages have sought to unravel the mystery of that statement. The psalmist asked, "What is man?" (Ps. 8:4). Philosophers, theologians, psychologists, and anthropologists have constantly explored that topic. All have realized that the human being "is fearfully and wonderfully made" (Ps. 139:14).

A Special Creation According to the Scriptures, humans are not an evolutionary accident but a special creation. Human beings were purposefully produced by God to fulfill a preordained role in His world. They have peculiar qualities that somehow reflect the nature of God Himself and set them apart and above all other created beings.

Image and Likeness Some Bible students have tried to make a distinction in the meaning of "image" and "likeness." Image has been considered the essential nature of humans as God's special creation, and likeness as reflecting this image in such qualities as goodness, grace, and love. They maintain that humankind in the Fall retained the image but lost the likeness. The two words, however, seem to identify the same divine act. The repetition represents the Hebrew literary style of parallelism used for emphasis. The Hebrew selem or image refers to a hewn or carved image (1 Sam. 6:5; 2 Kings 11:18) like a statue, which bears a strong physical resemblance to the person or thing it represents. The word likeness, demuth, means a facsimile. Compare 2 Kings 16:10, "fashion" or "pattern" (NAS), "sketch" (NIV, REB), "exact model" (TEV). Neither of the words imply that persons are divine. They were endowed with some of the characteristics of God. There is a likeness but not a sameness.

Persons as Body-Soul Many different views seek to explain the nature of the likeness. Genesis 2:7 says, "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." In creation God endowed persons with a spiritual aspect of life. This passage says that man became a soul, not that he had a soul. A person is both body and soul, or more accurately, body-soul. The Old Testament supports this holistic view of persons who are not segmented into parts known as body, soul, and spirit. Genesis 1:20 uses the Hebrew expression, nephesh chayah, "living soul" for "moving creature that has life," that is the animals. Compare 1:24; 9:10,16; Lev. 11:10.

Early theologians were greatly influenced by Greek philosophy in their interpretation of the image of God. The Greeks separated between the material and the spiritual. They saw an individual as a spirit being living in a physical body. This Greek dualism was the background out of which the early Christian theologians drew their understanding. The church fathers believed that the image of God resided in the soul or the spirit of each person.

Humankind as Persons Who are humans? The Bible portrays them as self-conscious, willful, innovative entities who, under God, preside over their environment. In other words, they are persons. God made each male and female a person in the likeness of His own personhood. Nothing else in all creation can be called a person. Personhood encompasses individuals in their entirety, body and spirit, as rational, loving, responsible, moral creatures.

Reflections of Personhood A man or woman is a person, as God is a Person. Such personal uniqueness is reflected in self-awareness and God-awareness. Human individuality is implied in personhood. God said "I am that I am" (Ex. 3:14). Persons also are separate entities with individual personalities, sets of values, inclinations, and responsibilities. Every human being is an original.

Humans created in God's image share His rational nature. People have the power to think, analyze, and reflect even upon abstract matters. They cannot be defined by or confined to material attributes. As God is spiritual (John 4:24), persons are spiritual. This spiritual kinship makes possible communication with God.

The Bible teaches that human beings have purpose. They have an instinctive need to be something and to do something. They have a responsible intuition and an inner call to duty. The human race has a unique sense of "oughtness." Humans are moral creatures. They can and do make moral judgments (Gen. 2:16–27). Persons have a censoring conscience which they may defy. They are choice makers; they can obey their highest instincts or follow their most morbid urges. A human is the only creature who can say no to God. Humans are autonomous persons. God endowed them with the freedom to govern their own lives.

This same autonomy makes possible fellowship with God. No person could have a meaningful relationship with a robot. Real fellowship can take place only between two authentic persons. God created "man" in His own image because He wanted a relationship with another sovereign person. See Body; Creation; Flesh; Humanity; Soul;

Vernon O. Elmore

IMAGE WORSHIP See Idol.

IMAGE, NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S 1. The figure in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan. 2:31–45); 2. a colossal figure Nebuchadnezzar erected on the plains of Dura (Dan. 3:1–18).

The interpretation of the statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream is debated. Nebuchadnezzar is clearly the head of gold (2:38). The identification of the other materials (silver, bronze, iron mixed with clay) with historical references is less clear. For convenience, interpreters may be classed broadly as historicists and dispensationalists.

Historicists have proposed various solutions to the enigmatic historical references. According to one interpretation, the various materials refer to the line of Neo-Babylonian kings which came to an end with the conquest of Cyrus who is identified as the divinely ordained rock (Dan. 2:45; compare Isa. 44:28; 45:1). Others see a succession of kingdoms rather than kings, for example, (1) Babylon, Media, Persia, and Greece or (2) Babylon, Medo-Persia, Alexander the Great, and Alexander's Hellenistic successors. Interpreters divide over whether to identify the kingdom that rules the world (2:39) with that of Cyrus who made this claim or with Alexander who in fact conquered much of the known world. The fourth "divided" kingdom (2:41) is frequently identified with the division of Alexander's empire by his generals. The mixing of iron and clay is possibly a reference to failed attempts to unite these kingdoms by marriage treaties (2:43). For these interpreters, the God-ordained stone is the Maccabees who secured Jewish independence and reinstituted Temple worship. Many historicists recognize that the Maccabees only partially fulfilled the hopes of the writer of Daniel and thus find the ultimate fulfillment in the kingdom established by Christ.

Dispensationalist interpreters identify the succession of kingdoms as Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. Rome is the empire divided into eastern and western halves and finally represented by a ten nation federation. The Roman period extends until the time of Christ who is the God-ordained Rock which ends the power of the Gentiles (Dan. 7; Luke 21:24; Rev. 16:19).

The charge of not worshipping the gods of Nebuchadnezzar leveled against the Jews (Dan. 3:12,14) suggests a statue of Bel-merodach, the patron deity of Babylon, though the statue was possibly of Nebuchadnezzar himself. Here religion is a political tool to unite various peoples into one empire. Readers in Maccabean and Roman times no doubt understood the statue against contemporary use of the divine ruler cult. Chris Church IMAGERY Figurative language. Scripture prefers to convey truths by pictoral representations rather than through abstract language. Scripture abounds in word-pictures for God, God's people, and their experience of salvation.

The challenge of theology ("talk about God") is to express truths about God in human language. Scripture itself witnesses the difficulty of this task, "To whom will you liken me, and make me equal, and compare me that we may be like" (Isa. 46:5). The living God is not to be equated with any one manageable image. Idolatry is essentially the attempt to reduce God to an image or label. The multiplicity of Old Testament literary images for God serves as a corrective of human attempts to box God in. Some images for God are inanimate: stone (Gen. 49:24); fortress (2 Sam. 22:2); fountain of living waters (Jer. 2:13). There is little danger of confusing God with such images. Other images of God are personal: father (Mal. 1:6); husband (Hos. 2:16); shepherd (Ps. 23:1); judge, lawgiver, and king (Isa. 33:22); teacher (Isa. 28:26); healer (Jer. 30:17); warrior (Ex. 15:1,3); farmer (Isa. 5:2–7). With such personal images, the danger of confusing "God is like" with "God is" is real. A challenging corrective is offered by the less familiar feminine images for God, for example, that of a mother bird sheltering her young (Ruth 2:12; Ps. 17:8). Also suggestive of a mother's tenderness are the images of carrying a child from birth (Isa. 46:3), teaching a child to walk (Hos. 11:3), child feeding (Hos. 11:4), and child rearing (Isa. 1:2).

In His parables, Jesus continued the Old Testament practice of using vivid images for God: a shepherd seeking one lost sheep (Luke 15:4–7); a woman seeking one lost coin (Luke 15:8–10); a father waiting patiently for the return of one son and taking the initiative to reconcile the other (Luke 15:11–32). Images are also used to teach who Jesus the Christ is: word (John 1:1); light (John 8:12); bread and wine (Matt. 26:26–29); vine (John 15:1); the way (John 14:6).

Imagery is also used to depict the people of God and their experience of salvation. The Old Testament pictures God's people as: a faithless wife (Jer. 3:20); a wild vine (Jer. 2:21); a wild donkey in heat (Jer. 2:24); God's beloved (Jer. 11:15); God's bride (Jer. 2:2); God's servant (Jer. 30:10); and God's son (Hos. 11:1). New Testament images include: light (Matt. 5:14); salt (Matt. 5:13); vine branches (John 15:5); a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17); God's temple (1 Cor. 3:16); and a royal priesthood (1 Pet. 2:9; compare Ex. 19:6). Images for salvation are drawn from all walks of life: the law courts (Rom. 7:3; Heb. 9:16–17); slave market (Titus 2:14); marketplace (1 Cor. 6:20; 7:23); and the family (Rom. 8:17,23). The multiplicity of images again witnesses the rich experience of God's people. See Anthropomorphism; Parables. Chris Church

IMAGERY, CHAMBER OF KJV phrase (Ezek. 8:12) understood as "room of his carved images" (NAS) or "shrine of his own idol" (NIV). The picture of the representatives of Israel worshiping idols within the Jerusalem Temple in Ezekiel's vision (8:3) symbolizes the people's unfaithfulness to God.

IMAGES See Idol.

IMAGINATION KJV term for thought as the prelude to action, frequently in the sense of plotting or devising evil; can also refer to stubbornness from the Hebrew words meaning formed or twisted. Imagination means evil plans (Prov. 6:18; Lam. 3:60–61). At Deuteronomy 31:21 and possibly Romans 1:21, imagination refers to the inclination to do evil. God opposes the imaginations of the proud (Luke 1:51; 2 Cor. 10:5). Imagination is also used in a neutral sense (1 Chron. 28:9). Most often, imagination means stubborness (Deut. 29:19; Jer. 3:17; 7:24; 9:14; 11:8; 13:10; 16:12; 18:12; 23:17). Modern translations use imagination less frequently. For example, the RSV used imagination only four times: for the inclination to do evil (Gen. 6:5; 8:21 NRSV reads, "inclination"); for the plans of the proud (Luke 1:51 NSRV reads "thoughts"); and in connection with the making of idols (Acts 17:29) where imagination may mean creativity or more likely a depraved mind. The NIV also used imagination four times: in reference to fabricating prophecy (Ezek. 13:2,17); and for evil plans (Isa. 65:2; 66:18).

IMITATE To mimic; to do what is seen to be done by another; sometimes it approximates, "be obedient." Paul's uses can be divided into three groups: (1) To call attention to a comparison even when no conscious mimicking is in mind. The Thessalonians shared suffering at the hands of their compatriots comparable to that experienced by the earliest Judean Christians (1 Thess. 2:14). First Thessalonians 1:6 perhaps belongs here. (2) To follow an example (Phil. 3:17; 2 Thess. 3:7,9 where Paul's example of self-support is in view). Obedience may also be in mind as references to tradition (2 Thess. 3:6) and command (3:10) demonstrate. (3) An equivalent to be obedient. Paul exhorted the Corinthians to follow him not primarily by following his personal example but by following his "ways in Christ" which he taught "everywhere in every church" (1 Cor. 4:16–17). The Corinthians were to follow Paul's example by heeding his counsel to do all for the glory of God without causing offense (1 Cor. 11:1; compare 10:23–33). In Ephesians 5:1 the command to be imitators is again linked with the previous series of commands, especially that of forgiveness (4:25–32). The image of children obedient to parents is common where the thought of imitation as obedience is primary (1 Cor. 4:14–16; Eph. 5:1).

Hebrews urges imitation of the faithfulness and patient endurance of those who inherited the promises (6:12) and the faithfulness of church leaders (13:7). The command of 3 John 11 is general, though specific examples of good (Demetrius) and bad (Diotrephes) are in view.

IMLA or IMLAH (Ĭm′ lah) Personal name meaning, "he fills," appearing in different spelling in Kings and Chronicles. Father of the prophet Micaiah (1 Kings 22:8). See Micaiah.

IMMANUEL (Im măn′ ū ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God with us." Name of son to be born in Isaiah's prophecy to King Ahaz (Isa. 7:14) and fulfilled in birth of Jesus (Matt. 1:22–23).

When King Ahaz refused to show his faith by asking God for a sign (Isa. 7:10–12), Isaiah gave him a sign of the birth of Immanuel, using the traditional form of a birth announcement (7:14; compare Gen. 16:11; Judg. 13:3,5). The Hebrew language apparently indicates that the prophet and king expected an immediate fulfillment. Recent study has pointed to Ahaz's wife as the woman expected to bear the child and show that God was still with the Davidic royal dynasty even in the midst of severe threat from Assyria. Such a sign would give hope to a king who trusted God but would be a constant threat to one who followed his own strategy. The double meaning of the Immanuel sign appears again in Isaiah 8:8. The Assyrian army would flood the land until Judah was up to its neck in trouble and could only cry out, "O Immanuel"; a cry confessing that God is with us in His destructive rage but at the same time a prayer, hoping for divine intervention. Isaiah followed this with a call to the nations to lose in battle because of Immanuel, God with us (8:10).

The Bible says nothing else about the effects of the Immanuel prophecy in the days of Isaiah and Ahaz. It does announce the great fulfillment in Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:22–23). Jesus' birth showed all humanity that God is faithful to fulfill His promises in ways far beyond human expectations; for Jesus was not just a sign of God with us. Jesus was God become flesh, God incarnate, God with us in Person.

IMMATERIALITY Not composed of matter. Acts 17:29 argues that "we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone." Rather "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

IMMER (Ĭm′ mēr) Personal name probably meaning, "lamb." 1. Father of Pashur, the priest and Temple administrator (Jer. 20:1). 2. A priest whose son Zadok helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem's walls (Neh. 3:29). Ancestor of priests who dwelt in Jerusalem after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 3. Leader of priestly division under David (1 Chron. 24:14). Son of Immer in other instances could mean, "descendant of Immer" and refer to this original priestly ancestor. Compare Ezra 2:37–38; 10:20; Nehemiah 7:40; 11:13.

IMMORALITY Any illicit sexual activity outside of marriage. Both in the Old Testament and in the New Testament the word has a figurative meaning as well, referring to idolatry or unfaithfulness to God.

In the Old Testament zanah regularly refers to wrongful heterosexual intercourse, primarily in regard to women (Judg. 19:2; Jer. 3:1; Hos. 4:13). The noun "harlot" or "whore" is derived from the same stem (Gen. 34:31; Josh. 2:1–3; Prov. 23:27; Hos. 4:13–14). In a figurative sense, zanah refers to Israel's unfaithfulness to God (2 Chron. 21:11; Isa. 1:21; Jer. 3:1–5; Ezek. 16:26–28). In addition, the sinfulness of Tyre (Isa. 23:17) and Nineveh (Nah. 3:4) are portrayed in this manner.

In Paul's letters, porneia and/or related words refer to an incestuous relationship (1 Cor. 5:1), sexual relations with a prostitute (1 Cor. 6:12–20), and various forms of unchastity both heterosexual and homosexual (Rom. 1:29; 1 Cor. 5:9–11; 6:9–11; 7:2; 2 Cor. 12:21; Eph. 5:3; 1 Thess. 4:3). Immorality is a sin against God (1 Cor. 3:16–17; 6:15–20; 1 Thess. 4:3–8). In the Gospels, the term, on occasion, is related to adultery (Matt. 5:32; 19:9) and in Revelation may refer to harlotry or prostitution (Rev. 2:14,20). The word "harlot" or "whore" is derived from the same root (Rev. 19:2). In Acts, the Apostolic Council requires that Gentiles avoid porneia (Acts 15:20,29). Porneia, and related words also have a figurative meaning of unfaithfulness to God (Matt. 12:39; John 8:41; Rev. 2:21; 9:21; 14:8; 19:2). See Adultery; Sex, Teaching on. Donald E. Cook

IMMORTALITY The quality or state of being exempt from death. In the true sense of the word, only God is immortal (1 Tim. 6:16; see 1 Tim. 1:17; 2 Tim. 1:10), for only God is living in the true sense of the word (see Life). Humans may be considered immortal only insofar as immortality is the gift of God. Paul points us in this direction. In Romans 2:7, Paul says, "To those who by patiently doing good seek for glory and honor and immortality, he will give eternal life" (NRSV). Paul also explained that the perishable nature of human life will put on the imperishable and that the mortal nature of human life will put on immortality. When that happens, the saying concerning victory over death will have been fulfilled (1 Cor. 15:53–55; see Isa. 25:8; Hos 13:14). As it is, humans in their earthly life are mortal; they are subject to death.

Thus, eternal life is not ours because we have the inherent power to live forever; eternal life and immortality are ours only because God chooses to give them to us. Most of the time, we are given immortality after death. Those who did escape death—Enoch (Gen. 5:24) and Elijah (2 Kings 2:10–11)—did so only by the power of God and not by some inherent power they had to live forever. See Eternal Life. Phil Logan

IMMUTABILITY OF GOD (Ĭm mū tă bĭl′ ĭ tȳ) The unchangeability of God; in biblical theology, a reference to God's unchanging commitment and faithfulness to the salvation of humanity.

Secular Philosophical Thought In secular thought, God's immutability connotes innate divine perfection and completeness. Since God is complete in and of Himself, relation to anything other than Himself is an addition to His completeness, an addition which is a philosophical impossibility. Since relationship requires change or response on the part of the beings in relationship, God, perfectly complete and completely perfect, cannot relate to that which is outside Himself. This kind of God, who is possessed by an immutability which prohibits relationship to His creation, is not the God portrayed by the Bible.

Biblical Teaching God, as the Scriptures portray Him, responds to the needs of His creation and, therefore, changes in the sense that He relates to what is not God. The biblical idea of immutability is couched in the constancy of God's self-revelation to humanity: He is holy (Josh. 24:19), jealous (Ex. 20:5), zealous, (Isa. 9:7), beneficent (Ps. 107); and righteous (Ex. 9:27). God expresses wrath, though He is "slow to anger" (Neh. 9:17). He expresses love (Prov. 3:12) in the election of His people for service (Hos. 11:1; Matt. 28:19–20; Eph. 1:4) and by sending His one and only Son as the Savior of the world (John 3:16; Rom. 5:8; 1 John 4:9–10). The God of the Bible is the constant, unchangeable God in His revelation and response to humanity. He gives His name as "I am that I am" (lit. "I will be what I will be," Ex. 3:14). He is the God who is and will be what He has already been in the past: "the Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. . . . this is my name for ever . . ." (Ex. 3:15).

The greatest religious significance of the unchanging God is His eternal stance of salvation toward His creation. He is eternally faithful to His people. He therefore repents of judgment when persons answer His call to obedience, as did the Ninevites in Jonah 3. The unchanging God of salvation is the eternal, free God who reveals Himself in the eternal Son (John 1:1,18). As such, he is the immutable God who comes to seek and save the lost (Mark 10:45), the God who is the same "yesterday, and to day, and for ever (Heb. 13:8). Walter D. Draughon III

IMNA (Ĭm′ nà) Personal name meaning, "he defends." A member of the tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:35). See Imnah.

IMNAH (Ĭm′ nàh) Personal name meaning, "he allots for" or "on the right hand, good fortune." 1. A son of Asher and original ancestor of the Imnites (Num. 26:44 KJV's Jimnah). 2. A Levite in the time of King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:14).

IMNITE (Ĭm′ nīte) See Imnah.

IMPEDIMENT IN SPEECH A disturbance of the vocal organs resulting in the inability to produce intelligible sounds (Mark 7:32). In Jesus' healing of a man who could "hardly talk" (NIV), the crowds recognized a fulfillment of Isaiah 35:5–6.

I

IMPERISHABLE Not subject to decay; everenduring. Imperishable (KJV, incorruption) describes the spiritual resurrection body which unlike the physical body is not subject to the decay associated with death (1 Cor. 15:42–54). Imperishable describes the everlasting reward of the saints (1 Cor. 9:25; 1 Pet. 1:23). One of the Greek terms translated imperishable is also rendered immortality (Rom. 2:7; 2 Tim. 1:10). The same term is used in reference to "undying" love in Ephesians 6:24 (KJV, "in sincerity").

IMPORTUNITY Troublesome urgency; excessive persistence. In Luke 11:8 importunity results in a favorable response to a midnight request for bread (KJV, RSV). Many modern translations read persistence (NAS, NIV, NRSV, REB). The literal meaning of the term is shamelessness (NEB; compare TEV: "not ashamed to keep on asking").

IMPOSITION OF HANDS See Laying on of Hands.

IMPOTENT Lacking power, strength, or vigor; helpless. Impotence in the KJV never refers to sexual inability. Modern translations replace impotent with other terms: cripple (Acts 4:9 NIV); disabled (John 5:3 NIV); invalid (John 5:3 NRSV); sick (John 5:3,7; Acts 4:9 NAS). Modern translations describe the man "impotent in his feet" (Acts 14:8) as one who could not use his feet (NRSV), without strength in his feet (NAS), or crippled (NIV). See Diseases.

IMPRECATION, IMPRECATORY PSALMS Act of invoking a curse. In the Imprecatory Psalms the author calls for God to bring misfortune and disaster upon the enemies (Pss. 5; 11; 17; 35; 55; 59; 69; 109; 137; 140). These Psalms are an embarrassment to many Christians who see them in tension with Jesus' teaching on love of enemies (Matt. 5:43–48). It is important to recall the theological principles that underlie such Psalms. These include: (1) the principle that vengeance belongs to God (Deut. 32:35; Ps. 94:1) that excludes personal retaliation and necessitates appeal to God to punish the wicked (compare Rom. 12:19); (2) the principle that God's righteousness demands judgment on the wicked (Pss. 5:6; 11:5–6); (3) the principle that God's covenant love for the people of God necessitates intervention on their part (Pss. 5:7; 59:10,16–17); and (4) the principle of prayer that believers trust God with all their thoughts and desires. See Blessing and Cursing.

IMPURITY See Clean, Cleanness.

IMPUTE, IMPUTATION Setting to someone's account or reckoning something to another person. God reckoned righteousness to believing Abraham (Gen. 15:16). This means that God credited to Abraham that which he did not have in himself (Rom. 4:3–5). This does not mean that God accepted Abraham's faith instead of righteousness as an accomplishment meriting justification. Rather, it means that God accepted Abraham because he trusted in God rather than trusting in something that he could do.

Similarly, drawing from Psalm 32:1–3, Paul stated that only God can forgive sin. Those who are forgiven are not regarded as wicked since the Lord does not impute to them their iniquity. Instead these are considered or reckoned as children of God (Rom. 4:7–8,11,23–24).

The imputation of righteousness lies at the heart of the biblical doctrine of salvation. This righteousness is seen in Christ who purchased redemption. God grants righteousness to those who have faith in Christ (Rom. 1:17; 3:21–26; 10:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; Phil. 3:9). This righteousness imputed or reckoned to believers is, strictly speaking, an alien righteousness. It is not the believer's own righteousness but God's righteousness imputed to the believer. So, as Luther said, believers are simultaneously righteous and sinful.

Not only is the imputation of God's righteousness to the believer taught in Scripture, but the Bible in some sense implies that Adam's sin was imputed to humankind (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:21–22). Likewise, it is taught that the sins of humanity were imputed to Jesus Christ (2 Cor. 5:21), although the exact nature of this divine imputation remains a mystery. The matter has been intensely debated in church history since the time of Augustine (A.D. 354–440). Nevertheless, for a consistent biblical witness, it must be maintained that in Adam God judged the whole human race guilty. Yet humankind has not merely been declared guilty; each human has acted out his or her guilt. More importantly, it is impossible for sinners to be righteous in God's sight apart from the gift of righteousness graciously granted to them in Christ through faith. David S. Dockery

IMRAH (Ĭm′ rah) Personal name meaning, "he is obstinate." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:36).

IMRI (Ĭm′ rī) Short form of personal name Amariah meaning, "Yah has spoken." 1. Ancestor of clan from tribe of Judah living in Jerusalem after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 9:4). 2. Father of Zaccur, who helped Nehemiah rebuild Jerusalem's wall (Neh. 3:2).

INCANTATIONS Chants used by magicians to control evil spirits and thus heal the sick or afflict enemies. No Palestinian incantations survive from the biblical period. Babylonian incantations had three parts, (1) an invocation of the names of the great gods, (2) identification of the spirit causing the illness, and (3) the call for the demon to leave. Compare Acts 19:13 where Jewish exorcists invoked the superior name of Jesus. Mosaic law prohibited the casting of spells (Deut. 18:11). The complaint that the wicked are like a snake immune to the cunning enchanter perhaps refers to the futility of incantations (Ps. 58:4–5). The Babylonians hoped to gain success and terrorize their enemies by means of incantations (Isa. 47:12). Isaiah warned their incantations would be of no avail (47:9). The tongue muttering wickedness perhaps refers to incantations (Isa. 59:3). The books of magic of Acts 19:19 were likely collections of incantations. See Blessing and Cursing; Imprecation; Magic.

INCARNATION (in cär nā′ tion) God's becoming human; the union of divinity and humanity in Jesus of Nazareth.

Definition of Doctrine Incarnation [Lat. incarnatio, being or taking flesh], while a biblical idea, is not a biblical term. Its Christian use derives from the Latin version of John 1:14 and appears repeatedly in Latin Christian authors from about A.D. 300 onward.

As a biblical teaching, incarnation refers to the affirmation that God, in one of the modes of His existence as Trinity and without in any way ceasing to be the one God, has revealed Himself to humanity for its salvation by becoming human. Jesus, the Man from Nazareth, is the incarnate Word or Son of God, the focus of the God-human encounter. As the God-Man, He mediates God to humans; as the Man-God, He represents humans to God. By faith-union with Him, men and women, as adopted children of God, participate in His filial relation to God as Father.

The Humanity of Jesus The angel of the Lord, in a prophecy of Jesus' birth, plainly stated the purpose of the incarnation: "[Mary] shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21; compare Luke 19:10; John 3:17; 1 Tim. 1:15). The liberation of humanity from everything that would prevent relationship with God as Father requires incarnation. The biblical materials related to incarnation, though not systematically arranged, portray Jesus as the One who accomplished the mission of salvation because He was the One in whom both full divinity and full humanity were present.

Jesus referred to Himself as a man (John 8:40), and the witnesses in the New Testament recognized Him as fully human. (For example, Peter, in his sermon at Pentecost, declared that Jesus is "a man approved of God among you . . . ," Acts 2:22). That the Word was made flesh is the crux of the central passage on incarnation in the New Testament (John 1:14). The respective genealogies of Jesus serve as testimonies to His natural human descent (Matt. 1:1–17; Luke 3:23–37). In addition, Jesus attributed to Himself such normal human elements as body and soul (Matt. 26:26,28,38). He grew and developed along the lines of normal human development (Luke 2:40). During His earthly ministry, Jesus displayed common physiological needs: He experienced fatigue (John 4:6); His body required sleep (Matt. 8:24), food (Matt. 4:2; 21:18), and water (John 19:28). Human emotional characteristics accompanied the physical ones: Jesus expressed joy (John 15:11) and sorrow (Matt. 26:37); He showed compassion (Matt. 9:36) and love (John 11:5); and He was moved to righteous indignation (Mark 3:5).

A proper understanding of the events preceding and including His death requires an affirmation of His full humanity. In the garden, He prayed for emotional and physical strength to face the critical hours which lay ahead. He perspired as one under great physical strain (Luke 22:43–44). He died a real death (Mark 15:37; John 19:30). When a spear was thrust into His side, both blood and water poured from His body (John 19:34). Jesus thought of Himself as human, and those who witnessed His birth, maturation, ministry, and death experienced Him as fully human.

Although Jesus was fully human in every sense of the word, His was a perfect humanity—distinct and unique. His miraculous conception highlights distinctiveness and originality of His humanity. Jesus was supernaturally conceived, being born of a virgin (Luke 1:26–35). To be sure, the Bible records other miraculous births such as those of Isaac (Gen. 21:1–2) and John the Baptist (Luke 1:57), but none attained to the miraculous heights of a human being supernaturally conceived and born of a virgin.

The New Testament also attests to the sinless character of Jesus. He, Himself, asked the question, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" (John 8:46). Paul declared, God "made him to be sin for us who knew no sin" (2 Cor. 5:21). The writer of Hebrews held that Christ was "without sin" (4:15). The New Testament presents Jesus as a man, fully human, and as a unique man, the ideal human.

The Deity of Jesus Paul, in a statement on the supremacy of Christ, asserted, "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell" (Col. 1:19; compare John 20:28; Titus 2:13). Jesus, was aware of His divine status (John 10:30; 12:44–45; 14:9). With the "I am" sayings, He equated Himself with the God who appeared to Moses in the burning bush (Ex. 3:14). The assertion of the New Testament is that Jesus was God (John 6:51; 10:7,11; 11:25; 14:6; 15:1; esp. 8:58).

The Bible affirms the preexistence of Jesus: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God" (John 1:1–2; see also John 1:15; 8:58; 17:5; Phil. 2:5–11). Jesus realized accomplishments and claimed authority ascribed only to divinity. He forgave sins (Matt. 9:6) and sent others to do His bidding, claiming all authority "in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:18–20). The central proclamation of the gospel is that He is the only way to eternal life, a status held by deity alone (John 3:36; 14:6; compare Acts 4:12; Rom. 10:9). The New Testament pictures Him as worthy of honor and worship due only to deity (John 5:23; Heb. 1:6; Phil. 2:10–11; Rev. 5:12). He is the Agent of creation (John 1:3) and the Mediator of providence (Col. 1:17; Heb. 1:3). He raised the dead (John 11:43–44), healed the sick (John 9:6), and vanquished demons (Mark 5:13). He will effect the final resurrection of humanity either to judgment or to life (Matt. 25:31–32; John 5:27–29).

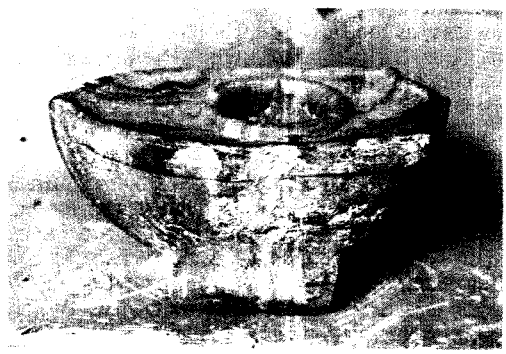
The titles ascribed to Jesus provide conclusive evidence for the New Testament's estimate of His person as God. Jesus is "Lord" (Phil 2:11), "Lord of lords" (1 Tim. 6:15), "the Lord of glory" (1 Cor. 2:8), "the mediator" (Heb. 12:24), and "who is over all, God blessed for ever" (Rom. 9:5). In addition, the New Testament repeatedly couples the name "God" with Jesus (John 1:18; 20:28; Acts 20:28; Rom. 9:5; 2 Thess. 1:12; Titus 2:13; Heb. 1:8; 2 Pet. 1:1; 1 John 5:20).

Formulation of the Doctrine The problems of the incarnation begins with John's assertion, "the Word was made flesh" (1:14). Clear expression of the relation of the Word to the flesh, of divinity to humanity within the person of Jesus became a matter of major concern during the first five centuries of the Christian era. The unsystematized affirmations of the New Testament were refined through controversy, a process which culminated in the ecumenical councils of Nicaea (A.D. 325), Constantinople (A.D. 381), Ephesus (A.D. 431), and Chalcedon (A.D. 451).

The Council of Nicaea marked the meeting of church representatives from throughout the Christian world. Its purpose was to settle the dispute over the teachings of Arius, a presbyter in the church of Alexandria. He taught a creature christology—that is, he denied the Son's eternal divinity. Against Arius, the council asserted that the Son was of one substance with the Father. Jesus was fully divine.

The Council of Constantinople met to clarify and refute the christology of Apollinarius, Bishop of Laodicea. Apollinarius insisted that Jesus was a heavenly man dissimilar to earthly men. If a human is body, soul, and spirit, the bishop asserted that Jesus was a body, soul, and Logos [lit. "word"], a man not having a human spirit, or mind. Against this doctrine, the council affirmed the full humanity of Christ.

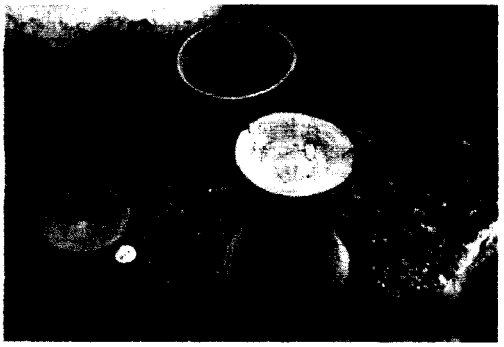


The Council of Ephesus considered the marriage christology of Nestorius, Bishop of Constantinople. He held that the union of the human and divine in Jesus was like the marriage of a husband and wife. As a result, the Council accused him of teaching that there were two separate persons in Christ.

The Council of Chalcedon was perhaps the most significant church council for Christianity. It met in debate over the teaching of Eutyches, a monk from Constantinople. He denied that Jesus had two natures. This reaction against the christology of Nestorius prompted the council to express the incarnation of Jesus in terms of one person with two natures—human and divine.

The mystery of the incarnation continues, and the statements of the first four councils of the Christian church preserve that mystery. Jesus, God incarnate, was one Person in two natures—fully divine and fully human. See Christ.

Walter D. Draughon III



INCENSE A mixture of aromatic spices prepared to be burned in connection with the offering of sacrifices (Ex. 25:6). The word is also used to refer to the smoke produced by the burning. In the King James Version of the Bible, two Hebrew words are translated "incense"; however, the two words are practically synonymous. The incense used in worship was to be prepared according to exacting specifications and was to be offered only by the high priest. According to Luke 1:8–20, Zacharias was burning incense in the Temple when he was visited by the angel Gabriel. See Sacrifice and Offerings.

Incense bowl from the island of Malta.

INCENSE ALTAR See Tabernacle; Temple.

INCEST Sexual intercourse between persons too closely related for normal marriage. The twofold theological rationale for the prohibition of incestuous unions is the divine claim "I am the LORD your God" (Lev. 18:2,4,6) and the note that such behavior characterized the Egyptians and Canaanites whom God judged (Lev. 18:3,24–25). Leviticus 18:6–16 prohibited unions between a man and his mother, stepmother, sister, half-sister, daughter-in-law, granddaughter, aunt (by blood or marriage), or sister-in-law. Leviticus 18:19 prohibited a man's involvement with a woman and her daughter or granddaughter. Leviticus 18:18 prohibited taking sisters as rival wives. Penalties for various forms of incest included childlessness (Lev. 20:20–21), exclusion from the covenant people (Lev. 18:29; 20:17–18; compare 1 Cor. 5:2,5), and death (Lev. 20:11,12,14). In patriarchal times marriage to a half sister (Gen. 20:12) and marriage to rival sisters (Gen. 29:21–30) were permissible, though such marriages proved troublesome to both Abraham and Jacob. Scriptural accounts of incest include Genesis 19:31–35; 35:22; and 2 Samuel 13.

Incense altar from the site of ancient Hazor.

INCH A unit of measure equal to a twelfth of a foot. Eighteen inches (Gen. 6:16 NIV, TEV) is the equivalent of a cubit. See Weights and Measures.

INCONTINENCY, INCONTINENT KJV term for the lack of self-control (1 Cor. 7:5). Incontinent (2 Tim. 3:3) means lacking self-control (NAS), profligate (NRSV), or even violent (TEV).

INCORRUPTIBLE, INCORRUPTION KJV terms meaning imperishable and an imperishable state. See Imperishable.

INCREASE Multiplication or growth. In the Old Testament, increase often refers to the reproduction of livestock and to the harvest (Lev. 26:3–4; Deut. 7:12–13). The promise of increase is contingent on Israel's fulfilling its covenant commitments. Increase is used figuratively for Israel as the firstfruits of God's increase (KJV) or harvest. Isaiah 9:7 promises the increase of the government and peace of the coming Messiah. Isaiah 29:19 promises an increase in joy (KJV; fresh joy, NRSV; compare 9:3). Isaiah 40:29 promises increased strength to the powerless.

The increase of the word of God (Acts 6:7) refers to the spread of the gospel message. Increase is used both for the numerical growth of the church (Acts 16:5) and for maturation (Eph. 4:16; Col. 2:19). Christian maturity is evidenced by an increase in love (1 Thess. 3:12; 4:10) and knowledge of God (Col. 1:10). Boasting in the results of one's work for God is without a basis since God gives the increase (1 Cor. 3:6, Col. 2:19).

INDEPENDENCE OF GOD The doctrine that God does not depend on another for His existence or for the free exercise of His divine perogatives. See Divine Freedom; I Am; Sovereignty of God.

INDIA The eastern boundary of the Persian Empire of Ahasuerus (Xeres) (Esther 1:1; 8:9). Biblical references to India refer to the Punjab, the area of Pakistan and northwest India drained by the Indus river and its tributaries. India was possibly a port of call for Solomon's fleet (1 Kings 10:22).

INDIA (Ĭn′ dĭ ȧ) Place name given to a Persian satrapy or province. India was the easternmost limit of the Persian Empire. The name India applies to the territory near the northwestern part of the Indus River, a territory Darius of Persia (522–486 B.C.) had conquered. In the Bible, only Esther mentions it to describe the size of the Persian Empire (1:1; 8:9). Trade between India and the biblical lands began before 2000 B.C., however.

INFANT BAPTISM Christening a baby by the church. Christian groups take varying stances on the practice and meaning of infant baptism. Those who emphasize a conscious faith response in the salvation process limit baptism to believers. Those who interpret baptism as the sign of God's new covenant reserve the rite for the children of believers (compare 1 Cor. 7:14). Those viewing baptism as a means by which God's grace becomes effective for salvation welcome all children.

Those favoring infant baptism raise the following arguments: (1) household baptisms likely included some infants (Acts 16:5,33; 18:8; 1 Cor. 1:16); (2) Jesus' welcome and blessing of children is a mandate to baptize infants (Mark 10:13–16); "hinder" is a technical term associated with baptism (Acts 8:36); (3) circumcision which prefigured baptism (Col. 2:11) included children (Gen. 17:12); (4) in the Old Testament children participated in ceremonies of covenant renewel (Deut. 29:10–13; Josh. 8:35; Joel 2:16).

Baptists and other adherents of believer's baptism raise the following arguments and counterarguments: (1) The New Testament prerequisite of baptism is faith (Acts 18:8) which is evidenced by confession (Rom. 10:9–10) and repentance (Acts 2:38); (2) infant baptism rests ultimately on the fear that infants are held accountable for organic sin; Baptists counter with a doctrine of an age of accountability at which conscious sin occurs (Gen. 8:21; Ps. 25:7; Jer. 3:25) and at which a conscious response to God is possible (1 Kings 18:12; Ps. 71:5,17); (3) household baptisms need not have included children; baptism is prefigured in the salvation of Noah and his exclusively adult household in the ark (1 Pet. 3:20–21); (4) Jesus' blessing of the children demonstates Christ's love for children; children are presented as an example to disciples rather than as disciples themselves (Matt. 18:2–4); (5) circumcision is an imperfect analogy to baptism; only males participated in circumcision, whereas in baptism there is "neither male nor female" (Gal. 3:28); the witness of the New Testament is that "what is born of the flesh is flesh" and that a spiritual birth is necessary to enter God's kingdom (John 3:5–6); it is not the Israel of the flesh that inherits the promises of God but those who are spiritual Israel by a faith commitment (Rom. 6–8; Gal. 6:16); (6) the responsibility of the faith community to its children is instruction in the way of the Lord (Deut. 4:9–10; 11:19; Prov. 22:6); participation in covenant renewel is educational for children. See Accountability, Age of, Baptism. Chris Church

INFANT SALVATION See Accountability, Age of; Salvation.

INFINITE Unlimited in extent of space, duration, and quantity. Though scripture does not use the term infinite to describe God, theologians have found the term a suitable summary of several attributes of God. God is not limited by space, (Ps. 139:7–8). God is not limited by time: God existed before the creation (Gen. 1:1); the ordering of time is part of God's creative activity (Gen. 1:5). Because God is spirit (John 4:24), God cannot be quantified like a material object. God is regarded as infinite in many other qualities: God's steadfast love endures forever (Ps. 100:5); God's knowledge extends to the fall of a single sparrow and the number of hairs on our heads (Matt. 10:29–30; compare Ps. 139:1–6); God is "the Almighty" (Gen. 17:1; Ex. 6:3).

INFIRMITY Disease, suffering, or sorrow. The KJV often used infirmity where modern translations have another term (e.g., weakness, diseases, sickness, menstruation, grief). Matthew saw in Jesus healings the fulfillment of the servant of the Lord who took our diseases (Matt. 8:17; Isa. 53:4). Romans 15:1 calls upon the strong (in conscience) to bear with the weaknesses (KJV infirmity) of those without strength. See Disease, Treatment of.

INFLAMMATION A response to cellular injury characterized by redness, infiltration of white blood cells, heat, and frequently pain. Inflammation was one of the curses upon those disobedient to the covenant (Deut. 28:22; compare Lev. 13:28).

INGATHERING, FEAST OF Alternate name for the Feast of Booths (Ex. 23:16; 34:12). See Festivals; Booths, Feast of.

INHERITANCE A legal transmission of property after death. The Hebrew Bible has no exclusive term for "inheritance." The words often translated "inherit" mean more generally "take possession." Only in context can they be taken to mean "inheritance." The Greek word in the New Testament does refer to the disposition of property after death, but its use in the New Testament often reflects the Old Testament background more than normal Greek useage.

In ancient Israel possessions were passed on to the living sons of a father, but the eldest son received a double portion (Deut. 21:17). Reuben lost preeminence because of incest with Bilhah (Gen. 35:22; 49:4; 1 Chron. 5:1), and Esau surrendered his birthright to Jacob (Gen. 25:29–34). These examples show that possession of this double portion was not absolute. Sons of concubines did not inherit unless adopted. Jacob's sons by the maidservants Bilhah and Zilpah (Gen. 30:3–13) inherited (Gen. 49) because those offspring were adopted by Rachel and Leah. Sarai promised to adopt the offspring of her maid Hagar when she gave Hagar to Abram (Gen. 16:2) but went back on that promise after Isaac's birth (Gen. 21:10).

Women were not to inherit from their fathers except in the absence of a son (Num. 27:1–11). Before this ruling from the Lord, if a man had no offspring, the inheritance went to his brothers, to his father's brothers, or to his next kinsman.

Because the Hebrew words did not necessarily presuppose a death, they could be used in reference to God's granting of the land to Israel (Josh. 1:15; Num. 36:2–4). Levites had no share of the land, and the Lord Himself was their "inheritance" (Num. 18:20–24; Deut. 10:9; 18:2; Josh. 13:33). Jeremiah used the concept of "inheritance" to refer to the restoration of Israel to the land from "the north" after the time of punishment (Jer. 3:18–19).

Israel is the "inheritance" of the Lord (Jer. 10:16). Psalm 79:1 speaks of Jerusalem and the Temple as God's "inheritance." In a broader sense, however, God can be said to "inherit" all nations (Ps. 82:8).

Anything given by God can be called an "inheritance." In Psalm 16:5 the pleasant conditions of the psalmist's life were his "inheritance" because he had chosen the Lord as his lot. In Psalm 119:111 God's testimonies are an "inheritance." In Job 27:13 "heritage" refers to God's punishment of the wicked. Proverbs 3:35 compares the honor the wise "inherit" with the disgrace of the fool.

In the New Testament "inheritance" can refer to property (Luke 12:13), but it most often refers to the rewards of discipleship: eternal life (Matt.

5:5; 19:29; Mark 10:29–30 and parallels; Titus 3:7), the kingdom (Matt. 25:34; Jas. 2:5; negatively 1 Cor. 6:9–10; 15:50), generally (Acts 20:32; Eph. 1:14,18; Rev. 21:7). Christ is the Heir par excellence (Matt. 21:38 and parallels; Heb. 1:2). Through Christ Christians can be heirs of God and "fellow heirs" with Christ (Rom. 8:17; compare Eph. 3:6). Only Hebrews makes explicit use of the idea of "inheritance" as requiring the death of the testator, Christ. A "will" requires a death to come into effect, so the death of Christ brings the new "covenant"/"will" into effect (Heb. 9:16–17). See Covenant; Land; Promise.

Fred L. Horton, Jr.

INIQUITY See Sin.

INJURY An act that hurts, damages, or causes loss; the result of such an act. Old Testament law provided two responses to injuries; retaliation in kind ("eye for eye, tooth for tooth" (Ex. 21:24) and compensation. For example, if the victim of an assault was confined to bed, the assailant was to pay the injured party for time lost from work as well as "health care" expenses to ensure recovery (Ex. 21:22). If an owner caused a slave to loose an eye or a tooth, the slave was to be freed as compensation for the loss (Ex. 21:26). Physical injuries excluded priests from service at the altar (Lev. 21:19). As part of the Hasmonean intrigue, Aristobulus had the ears of his uncle Hyrcanus II mutilated to disqualify him from priestly service (40 B.C.).

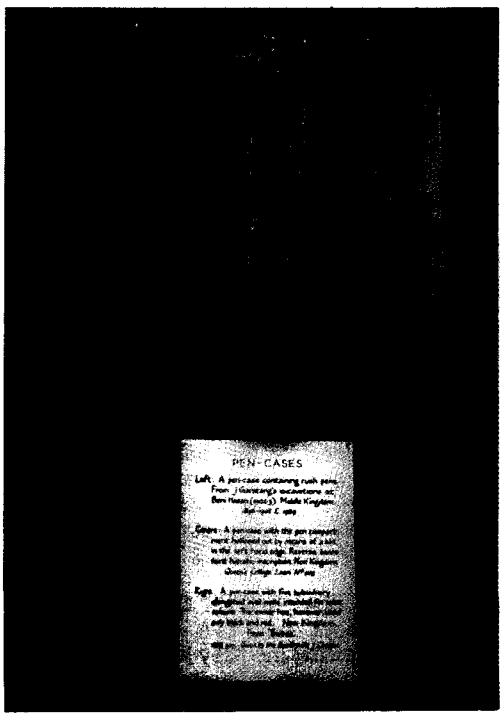
The extended use of the term is evidenced by Proverbs 8:36 where those who miss wisdom injure themselves and Romans 14:15 where Paul warned the Roman Christians not to injure other Christians for the sake of food (compare Gal. 4:12).

INK Writing fluid. Ink for writing on papyrus (a plant product) was made of soot or lampblack mixed with gum arabic (Jer. 36:18; 2 Cor. 3:3; 2 John 12; 3 John 13). Red ink was made by replacing lampblack with red iron oxide. Because such ink did not stick well to parchment (a leather product), another ink was made from nut galls mixed with iron sulphate.

INKHORN KJV term for a case in which ingredients for making ink were kept (Ezek. 9:2–3,11). A scribe customarily carried his inkhorn in his belt.

INLET A bay or recess in the shore of a sea or lake. When Deborah and Barak went to battle against Sisera, the tribe of Asher stayed at home "by his inlets" (landings NRSV, Judg. 5:17).

INN Different kinds of shelters or dwellings. In the Old Testament the Hebrew word translated "inn" or "lodging place" might refer to a camping place for an individual (Jer. 9:2), a family on a journey (Ex. 4:24), an entire caravan (Gen. 42:27; 43:21), or an army (Josh. 4:3,8). In these passages (with the possible exception of the reference in Jeremiah) the presence of a building is not implied. Often the reference is only to a convenient piece of ground near a spring. It is doubtful that inns in the sense of public inns with a building existed in Old Testament times.



By the time of Christ, the situation is quite different. Public inns existed in Greek times and throughout the Roman period. The Greek word for "inn" in the New Testament implies some type of stopping place for travelers. At times it refers to a public inn. Such an inn of the first century consisted primarily of a walled-in area with a well. A larger inn might have small rooms surrounding the court. People and animals stayed together.

Inns generally had a bad reputation. Travelers were subjected to discomfort and at times robbery or even death. The primary services that could be depended upon were water for the family and animals and a place to spread a pallet.

In addition to referring to a public inn, the same Greek word for "inn" at times refers simply to a guest room in a private home (Mark 14:14; Luke 22:11).

In Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary could find no room at the inn (Luke 2:7). This may have been a Pen cases from ancient Egypt with containers in the tops for ink.

I

guest room in a home or some kind of public inn. The reference in Luke 10:34 is clearly to a public place where the wounded could be fed and cared for by the innkeeper. See Hospitality; House.

Paul E. Robertson

INNER MAN; INWARD MAN The component of human personality responsive to the requirements of the law. According to Paul's understanding (Rom. 7:22–23), human personality has three components: (1) the inmost self where the law dwells; Paul equated this with reason (nous, vs. 23); the inmost self approximates the rabbinic yeser hatob (inclination to good); (2) the members or the flesh that is responsive to desire; the flesh approximates the rabbinic yeser harah (inclination to evil); and (3) the conscious I which is aware of both reason and desire. In rabbinic thought, the law served to tip the balance in favor of the good inclination. Paul, however, rejected this optimistic view of the law. Only the Spirit dwelling in the inner self can free the individual from the power of sin (Rom. 8:2; Eph. 3:16). The Pauline division of personality is reflected in Freud's threefold division, superego, id, and ego.

INNKEEPER One who serves as the host or hostess at an inn. The innkeeper of Luke 10:35 was responsible for providing food and medical care. A targum (early Aramaic Free translation) on Joshua 2:1 identifies Rahab as an innkeeper.

INNOCENCE, INNOCENCY The condition of not offending God; freedom from sin and guilt. In the Old Testament the adjective innocence is more common than the noun. Two roots are commonly translated innocent. The basic idea of the first is clean or free from (Ex. 23:7; 2 Kings 24:4); that of the second, righteousness (Gen. 20:4; Deut. 25:1; Job 9:15). Though the innocent are frequently mentioned, the biblical writers were well aware that only God can create a right heart and remove sin (Ps. 51:10; Jer. 24:7; 31:33–34).

In the New Testament four terms are used for innocent. The first means unmixed or pure (Matt. 10:16; Phil. 2:15); the second, free from (Matt. 27:4,24); the third, just, righteous, or upright (Matt. 23:35; Luke 23:47); and the fourth, clean or pure (Acts 18:6; 20:26). Innocence is always relative to some standard. Paul declared his innocence with respect to the demands of the law (Phil. 3:6). Only Christ, however, is absolutely pure (Rom. 3:9–18; 2 Cor. 5:21). Christ presents believers as holy and blameless before God (Col. 1:22; Eph. 5:27; 1 Cor. 1:8; 1 Thess. 5:23).

INNOCENTS, SLAUGHTER OF THE Herod's murder of all boys under two years of age as he attempted to destroy the Baby Jesus (Matt. 2:16–18). The Magi or wise men searched for the one born king of the Jews. Herod the Great saw a claimant to his throne. When the Magi failed to report back their finding of the Christ-child, Herod ordered the slaughter of all male children in Bethlehem two years of age or less. The Gospel writer cites this as fulfillment of the prophecy of Jeremiah 31:15.

This incident is not mentioned elsewhere in the New Testament. However, it can be found in ancient nonbiblical documents, such as the Protoevangelium of James, Infancy Gospel of Thomas, and Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew. These sources no doubt relied on the biblical Gospel for the record.

Flavius Josephus, our chief ancient source on Herod, is surprisingly silent on this episode. Nonetheless, an act of such ruthlessness on Herod's part is entirely in keeping with his character as reported by Josephus. For example, when lying near death Herod ordered that all the Jewish leaders be captured and slaughtered upon his death, thus assuring grief at his passing. Fortunately, that order was not carried out. See Apocrypha, New Testament; Herod; Josephus; Magi.

Larry McKinney

INQUIRE OF GOD Seek divine guidance, most often before battle (1 Sam. 23:2,4; 2 Sam. 5:19,23; 2 Kings 3:11; 2 Chron. 18:4,6–7), but in other situations as well. A variety of methods were employed to seek God's counsel: dreams (1 Sam. 28:6); priests with the ephod (1 Sam. 22:10; 23:9–13); prophets (2 Kings 3:11); and direct consultation. In the early history of Israel, priests were consulted for divine counsel (Judg. 18:14,17; 1 Sam. 22:10). The priests discerned God's will by the sacred lots, the Urim and Thummim (Num. 27:21; 1 Sam. 14:36–42). Since these lots apparently were kept in a pouch in the priest's ephod (Ex. 28:30), references to inquiring of the ephod likely refer to the lots (1 Sam. 23:9–13; 30:8). See Ephod; Lots; Urim and Thummim. Prophets sometimes used music as an aid to achieve an ecstatic state in which God's will could be discerned (2 Kings 3:15; 1 Sam. 10:5–6). Prophets frequently took the initiative to announce God's will when no consultation was requested. With the rise of the synagogue, direct inquiring by prayer became the primary means of ascertaining the divine will.

Not all methods of inquiring of God were looked upon with favor. The Danites consulted a Levite in charge of Micah's sanctuary (Judg. 18:5–6,14). The method used by the Levite to ascertain the divine will is not clear. The sanctuary contained an ephod (with lots?), a cast idol, and teraphim (household gods), any of which might have been consulted. Such shrines were regarded as one example of the evil that resulted when there was no king and "every man did what was right in his own eyes" (Judg. 17:6). Other methods of discerning God's will rejected by the biblical writiers include: consulting mediums, wizards, and necromancers (Deut. 18:10–11; 1 Sam. 28:3,7; Isa. 8:19); consulting teraphim (Judg. 17:5; 18:13–20; Hos. 3:4; Zech. 10:2); and consulting pagan dieties (Baal-zebub, 2 Kings 1:2–3,16; Malcham or Milcom, Zeph. 1:5). See Prophets, Prophecy; Necromancy; Teraphim; Milcom.

Chris Church

INSANITY Mental illness. See Diseases.

INSCRIPTION Words or letters carved, engraved, or printed on a surface (Mark 15:26; Luke 23:38; superscription, KJV). Pilate likely intended the inscription above the cross in a derogatory sense: "See the defeated King of the Jews." According to John 19:21, the Jewish leadership found the inscription offensive. The Gospel writers saw in Pilate's mockery the truth about Jesus who in His suffering and death fulfilled His messianic role.

INSECTS Air-breathing arthropods which make up the class Hexapoda. Representatives are found on land and in water. They have three distinct body parts: head, thorax, and abdomen as well as three pair of legs, one pair of antennae, and usually one or two pairs of wings. Fossil studies have shown that insects are among the most ancient of the animals. Their persistence demonstrates their ability to survive under the most difficult conditions. Today insects are the most widely distributed of all the animals. Though their numbers are limited in the polar regions, insects abound in the tropics and temperate regions. Their primary food is green plants, and they are found almost everywhere that a food source is available.

Hieroglyphic inscriptions on a temple wall at Karnak in Egypt.

Insects are characterized by their ability to move about. Stimuli such as food, temperature, humidity, and change of season may initiate movement. Not only are insects mobile, but they are also migratory. Migration is usually a seasonal phenomenon. Many insects, such as the monarch butterfly, have an annual migration similar to some birds.

Insects comprise the largest number of species in the animal kingdom, numbering in the millions. They are abundant in population, as well as in species. This is due, in part, to the fact that insects lay enormous numbers of eggs. The average number of eggs laid by an insect is from 100 to 150, though the queen termite can lay sixty eggs per second until several million are produced. The short life cycle of insects also contributes to their great numbers. Most mature within a year. Others such as the red mite, may have several generations in one season.

Some insects are characterized by specialized methods of reproducing. Polyembryony is a process by which hundreds of offspring can be produced from a single egg. Some species are able to reproduce with no mate, a function known as parthenogenesis.

Insects are among the most injurious of the classes of the animal kingdom. Most everything that man grows or manufactures is susceptible to the ravages of insects. Most insects feed on plants, causing much damage to agricultural products. Many attack man and other animals, as well as woodwork, wool, and clothing. Insects also transmit diseases such as malaria, the plague, and typhoid. However, some insects are beneficial, producing honey, wax, silk, pigments, and tannins. They are also a substantial food source for other animals, including man. Other insects are scavengers, helping to dispose of decaying flesh. The pollination of plants is another benefit provided by insects.

Insects occupy a prominent place among the animals named in the Bible. At least six orders are mentioned:

Hymenoptera: Ants, Bees, and Wasps These creatures generally have four wings. The female usually has a stinger as well as an ovipositor, or egg-laying organ, at the tip of the abdomen. Many of the species are social creatures.

1. Ants live in communities, sometimes as large as one-half million individuals. The nest is a maze of tunnels, showing much less planning than the nests of the wasps and bees. Young ants do not develop inside individual cells but are carried about in the nest. The workers are female, having neither wings nor the ability to reproduce. The queen and males have wings. Females are produced from fertilized eggs while males are born of unfertilized eggs. Ants are known to domesticate and enslave other insects, such as aphids and other ants. They also practice agriculture and conduct war on other ants.

The ant (Hebrew, nemalah) appears in the Bible only in the Book of Proverbs. Proverbs 6:6–8 praises her as the supreme example of industry. The ant's wisdom and ability to provide food though "a people not strong" is noted in Proverbs 30:25.

2. Bees have been domesticated for centuries. Herodotus, a Greek historian, wrote of how Egyptian beekeepers moved their hives according to the change of seasons. A beehive may contain 50,000 or more bees. Bees eat pollen and produce a wax which is used to build their combs and nests. A peculiar characteristic of bees and many of their relatives is their ability to determine the sex of their offspring. To do this, the queen bee stores in her body sperm received soon after she hatched. When she lays eggs, she releases one sperm cell for each egg she lays if females are needed. Males develop from eggs which have not been fertilized.

Bees (deborah) are mentioned several times in the Old Testament. They were noted for their antagonism, and armies were compared to swarms of bees (Deut. 1:44). The bee gained fame in the story of Samson, for he ate honey from the carcass of a lion and later tested the Philistines with a riddle concerning the incident (Judg. 14:5–18). The bee also is referred to in Psalm 118:12 and Isaiah 7:18.

3. Wasps and hornets (tsir'ah) are generally social creatures but to a lesser extent than bees and ants. They construct nests by scraping dead wood and making a pulp which is used to form paper. The nest, like that of the bee, is made up of individual cells in the shape of a hexagon. Hornets are found in the Old Testament. The Hebrew word may refer also to wasps and yellow jackets, but the precise Hebrew meaning is not known. "Hornet" comes from the earliest Greek translation. Some think the Hebrew word is a more general term for "terror" or "destruction." These insects are encountered in Exodus 23:28; Deuteronomy 7:20; and Joshua 24:12. They were recognized for their venomous stings and were God's instruments for driving Israel's enemies out of Canaan. The reference could be to the hornet as traditional symbol of Egypt or as a symbol of God's terrifying Israel's enemies. The emphasis is on God's powerful action to give Israel the land.

Lepidoptera: Butterflies and Moths This order is divided into two groups: moths which generally fly at night and butterflies which are day fliers. Moths usually have feathery antennae while butterflies have hairlike or "clubbed" ones. The adults feed primarily on nectar. Larvae are called caterpillars and are plant feeders. Both butterflies and moths are characterized by wings which are covered with powderlike, overlapping scales. They have a proboscis or tongue, which may be more than twice the length of the rest of the body. Some moths have mouth parts specialized for piercing fruit and even other animals. While butterfly pupae have no covering, moths spin cocoons.

Moths and their larvae (Hebrew, 'ash, sas; Greek, ses) were known for their destructive ability (Job 4:19; 13:28; 27:18; Ps. 39:11; Isa. 50:9; 51:8; Hos. 5:12; Matt. 6:19,20; Luke 12:33; Jas. 5:2). For people who had few possessions and no safe places for storage, moth infestation could be devastating.

Diptera: Flies and Gnats The majority of these insects have one pair of wings. The adults feed upon plant and animal juices. Many species are considered injurious, both to animals and plants. Some of these creatures suck blood, transmitting diseases in the process. However, many species of this order are beneficial.

1. Flies are household pests, but they are primarily associated with livestock stables. Breeding in manure, the female may lay 75–150 eggs in the course of a single laying. This process is repeated several times during her 20-day productive period. A fly may lay a total of 2,000 eggs. The eggs hatch in 24 hours, producing larvae known as maggots. The maggots are active for two to three weeks, feeding on decaying matter. Then follows a resting stage in which the transformation into an adult occurs. The life cycle of the fly is relatively short. An egg becomes an adult within 12 to 14 days. Adults may live one or two months during the summer, and longer in the winter.

The Hebrew word for fly, zebub, includes the common housefly as well as other species. As in modern times, flies were great pests for ancient peoples. When combined with poor sanitation and inadequate medical knowledge, flies could be a serious threat to health. The only clear references to this nuisance are found in Ecclesiastes 10:1; Isaiah 7:18. The "swarms" of Exodus 8:21–31 may have been flies. The text is not clear, since a different word is used. The KJV translators added "of flies" for clarification, indicated by italics. The same is true in Psalms 78:45; 105:31. Second Kings 1 names the god of Ekron Baal-zebub. Some interpret this name to mean "lord of the flies." If this interpretation is correct, flies may have been feared to the extent that the people worshiped a "fly-god," hoping to prevent infestation by the insects.

A cattle-biting fly, perhaps the gadfly (RSV, NIV) is found in Jeremiah 46:20. Due to the uncertain translation of the word, it also has been called a mosquito, as well as "destruction."

2. Gnats are another airborne nuisance. These insects are scarcely visible to the naked eye and leave bites which sting and burn. Some species fly at night, while others fly in the day, mainly in shaded woods. Others attack in bright sunlight. Some gnats do not bite, but swarm in dense clouds numbering perhaps a million. The larvae of some species live in water and provide a source of food for aquatic life. The Old Testament writers knew the gnat as kinnam or kinnim. As well as being pests, they also were known to be fragile creatures, as appears to be reflected in Isaiah 51:6 (RSV). Jesus used the figure of the gnat (kōnōps) to teach the scribes and Pharisees a lesson (Matt. 23:24). The use here simply highlights the small size of the gnat. Ancient people would strain liquids in order to remove gnats which had fallen into the open container. Jesus charged the "hypocrites" with giving attention to such details as tithing their herb gardens while neglecting more important matters.

The Egyptian plague of Exodus 8:16–18 perhaps should be understood as a plague of gnats or mosquitoes rather than lice. The Hebrew word used to describe the plague is identified by many scholars as pointing to the gnat. The same is true of the usage of the word in Psalms 105:31. Despite the uncertainty of the exact identification of the insect, the worth of the verses in question remains unaffected.

Siphonaptera: Fleas Fleas are parasites which are particularly fond of birds and mammals as hosts. These insects are quite small and wingless, having a body which is tall and thin. This body shape allows the flea to pass easily between hairs and feathers. The adult female lays eggs on the host or in its nest or bed. Adults suck blood, while the larvae live on decaying animal and vegetable material. Adults usually feed at least once per day if a source of food is nearby, though they have been known to live more than four months without food.

The flea (par'osh) was a plague for people and animals during the time of the early history of Israel. Fleas were recognized both for their bite and for their size. Their small and insignificant nature even led to the formulation of proverbs of jest. Two such comparisons are found in 1 Samuel 24:14; 26:20. In both instances David stressed the difference in stature between Saul and himself, avoiding a confrontation with the king. Some scholars interpret the plague which fell upon the Assyrians as one caused by fleas, similar to the Bubonic plague (Isa. 37:36–37).

Anoplura: Lice Lice are found in at least two varieties: chewing and sucking lice. The lice of the Bible are almost certainly sucking lice. Small, wingless insects, they are noted for short legs and antennae, laterally-flattened body, and specialized mouthparts. They have claws and are parasitic upon mammals. Both adults and larvae feed upon blood. They attach themselves to clothing, body hair, and bedding. Thus, they are passed easily from one person to another. Lice are also acknowledged as carriers of some serious diseases, such as typhus and trench fever.

Lice (kinnim) are mentioned in the KJV in two places. The Egyptian plague of Exodus 8:16–18 is one of dust becoming lice. Psalms 105:31 reminds the reader of the plagues upon Egypt. As stated above, both these occurrences of lice also could be understood as gnats or another biting insect.

Orthoptera: Grasshoppers and Locusts The flying members of this order normally have two pairs of wings. This group contains grasshoppers, locusts, katydids, crickets, roaches, and mantids. Grasshoppers are powerful fliers with narrow wings and slender bodies. They are known to fly fifteen miles per hour and have been found some 1200 miles at sea. Locusts and grasshoppers are perhaps the best-known insects of the Bible. This group was so prolific that the Bible contains approximately a dozen words which describe them. The numerous words may indicate different species or even different stages of development. Disagreement exists as to the translation of many instances of the words. Thus, the different species cannot be identified positively from the Hebrew words.

One form of the locust, indicated by the Hebrew word 'arbeh, has been called the migratory locust, or desert locust. It is remembered as the locust of the plague (Ex. 10:4–5). This type of locust invaded agricultural areas in immense numbers, so that they were said to "cover the face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth" (Ex. 10:5). The Egyptians had already suffered a hailstorm, only to have an infestation of insects that would "eat every tree which groweth for you." (Ex. 10:5). The destructive nature of this locust is highlighted again in Deuteronomy 28:38; 1 Kings 8:37; 2 Chronicles 6:28; Psalms 78:46; 105:34; Joel 1:4; 2:25. Many references point to the great numbers in which the swarms would come (Judg. 6:5; 7:12; Jer. 46:23; Nah. 3:15). Though the locust was a formidable enemy, it was not mighty in strength. This truth is reflected in Job 39:20; Psalm 109:23; Nahum 3:17. The locust is praised in Proverbs 30:27 for its ability to work in orderly fashion while having no leader. Not only was the 'arbeh destructive; it was also edible. Permission is given for its consumption in Leviticus 11:22.

The gazam is known as the palmerworm, certainly the caterpillar stage of one of the locust species (Joel 1:4; 2:25; Amos 4:9). Each of these citations recalls the destructive nature of the insect.

The haghabh generally is translated "grasshopper," but is called a locust in 2 Chronicles 7:13. This locust also was edible, as can be seen in Leviticus 11:22. It is mentioned in Ecclesiastes 12:5 as being a "burden." Two Old Testament verses recall the animal's small stature (Num. 13:33; Isa. 40:22).

The chasil is called a caterpillar and generally is mentioned in conjunction with "the locust." It has been suggested that the chasil was the second stage after the hatching of the locust egg. Others propose that it is the cockroach. Its voracious appetite is the subject of its biblical occurrences (1 Kings 8:37; 2 Chron. 6:28; Ps. 78:46; Isa. 33:4; Joel 1:4; 2:25).

The chargol is mentioned only in Leviticus 11:22 and is called a beetle in the KJV. It also was one of the edible varieties. Most scholars propose that it be understood as some species of locust, perhaps a katydid.

The solam is called "the bald locust" in Leviticus 11:22 and was also allowed for food.

The tselatsal has been called a katydid, cricket, mole cricket, and even a cicada. The KJV translates it "locust" in Deuteronomy 28:42, where it is one of the curses for disobedience. The great numbers of an infestation of this insect may be reflected in Isaiah 18:1. In that verse the land "shadowing with wings" reflects a group of Ethiopian ambassadors arriving in Jerusalem to enlist Judah's support in an anti-Assyrian alliance.

The yeleq is called the cankerworm in Joel 1:4; 2:25; Nahum 3:15,16. It is called the caterpillar (Ps. 105:34; Jer. 51:14) and the rough caterpillar (Jer. 51:27). It evidently was some form of locust larvae and was known to plague crops.

Akris is the New Testament word for locust. This insect was food for John the Baptist (Matt. 3:4; Mark 1:6). The locust also is used in Revelation 9:3,7 as an instrument of judgment.

Miscellaneous insects Worms Three Hebrew words and one Greek word are used to describe worms familiar to the biblical writers. The terms are rather vague and do not offer much help in identifying positively the insect in question. Tole'ah is used to describe maggot-like worms (Ex. 16:20; Is. 14:11). However, the same word is used to describe worms which probably were moth larvae (Deut. 28:39; Jon. 4:7). A scarlet dye was obtained from the insect, or perhaps its eggs (Ex. 25:4; Lev. 14:4). Other occurrences of this word include Job 25:6; Psalms 22:6; Isaiah 41:14; 66:24. Rimmah describes maggots in Exodus 16:24; Job. 7:5; 17:14; 21:26; 24:20; Isaiah 14:11. It is also used in a more general sense in Job. 25:6. These two Hebrew words are used together in Exodus 16; Job 25:6; Isaiah 14:11. Such usage demonstrates that the meanings of the words overlapped. This is understandable, for the exact identification of species was not the intent of the writers of the biblical materials. Zochel was viewed as a worm by the KJV translators in Micah 7:17, but in Deuteronomy 32:24 is translated "serpent," a translation modern translators use in both passages. In the New Testament, only skolex is used to describe a worm. In Mark 9:44,46,48 reference is made to Isaiah 66:24. A derivative of skolex vividly describes the fate of Herod (Acts 12:23).

Scale Insects appear in the Bible only in connection with the crimson dye extracted from them or from their eggs. In addition to the scarlet dye made from the worm named above, a coloring material was manufactured from a member of the order Rhynchota known for its red scales. These insects, of the genus Kermes, are pea-sized and of various colors. They generally are found on oak trees. At death, eggs are gathered from the females for the extraction of dye. The biblical references to these insects include 2 Chronicles 2:7, 14; 3:14. Some scholars identify the manna of Exodus 16; Numbers 11 as an excretion of scale insects, miraculously provided by God.

Insects are found often in the story of God's dealings with His people. These occurrences help the reader to understand the life of an ancient people. Insects are a part of the Bible because they were a part of life. Yet, the references to these small creatures do more than give information. From them the reader can learn much about God.

God's sovereignty is reflected in His use of hornets to accomplish His divine purpose of driving Israel's enemies out of Canaan. He also could chasten the chosen people with a locust if they should disobey. The absence of advanced methods of insect control reminds us of Israel's utter dependence upon God. The Lord would inspire His servants to use the lowly ant and locust as examples for mankind to follow. The wisdom writers would use even the disgusting fly larva to remind humanity of its mortal nature. Though insects often appear in a negative light within the Bible, its truth is enriched by their presence.

Ronald E. Bishop

INSPECTION GATE A Jerusalem city gate (Neh. 3:31 NAS, NIV). The KJV refers to the gate as the Miphkad Gate. The Hebrew word is related to that of Jeremiah 52:11, so some interpreters read, "prison tower" here. Others translate it as Muster Gate (NRSV, REB) and see it as a place where people drafted or conscripted into miltary service gathered. Some identify it with the Benjamin Gate. See Benjamin Gate.

INSPIRATION OF SCRIPTURE The actions of God leading to the writing, preservation, and collection of His words to His people into the Bible. The English word inspiration comes from the Latin word in spiro which mean "to breath in." Inspiration, then, is the influence of the Holy Spirit upon individuals for the purpose of producing an authoritative record of persons, teaching and events.

Sometimes the inspiration is declared explicitly in biblical assertions. Jeremiah began his prophecy by writing, "The word of the Lord came" (Jer. 1:2); throughout his book the formula is used to emphasize his experience of inspiration. At other times, the inspiration is evident in the pervading mood of the scriptural record. The Bible summarizes this by saying, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16). Often the inspiration is a revelation of that which goes beyond normal human cognitive and experiential knowledge. When this is true, then it is most obvious that the information is divinely inspired. Concerning this, the Bible says, "For no prophecy was ever made by an act of human will, but men moved by the Holy Spirit spoke from God" (2 Pet. 1:21 NAS).

As indicated in the biblical explanation, inspiration is a divine-human encounter whereby God reveals truth. It is a message from God and of God, as well as through persons and for persons. The Bible is divine in its inception. It is a record of God's self-disclosure as Truth and as the source of all truth. Its special revelation is a disclosure of truth that humans could not comprehend through ordinary thought process. Also the Bible is human in its mediation. God revealed Himself to persons He chose. They declared God's attitude toward, His relations with, and His purposes for His people and His world. Inspiration came in the experiences of real men and women with real personalities and problems. A climax to that divine-human encounter is the fact that the Scripture is focused on the divine-human person of Jesus Christ.

The evidences of divine inspiration are found internally in the record of God's revelation. Some biblical writers claimed they were verbally inspired. Repeatedly, the prophets have attested of this experience. Isaiah interjected into his report, "But I am the Lord thy God. . . . And I have put my words into thy mouth" (Isa. 51:15–16). Likewise, Jeremiah wrote, "And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth" (Jer. 1:9).

In addition to the specific statements in the Scriptures, an abundance of internal evidences show divine inspiration from its content in general. Although the Bible is a collection of books written by at least 40 writers over a period of about 1400 years, it has a unity of subject, structure, and spirit. It contains a consistent system of doctrinal and moral utterances. Its unparalleled treatment of certain themes such as the holy, the true, the good, and the future, are mysterious, authoritative, and practical. This witness of its inspiration is attested by countless thousands of testimonies from individuals who have been transformed by the reading of this Book.

Likewise, many external evidences point to divine inspiration of the Bible. The fact that the Bible is the most widely translated and circulated Book in the world is a testimony of God's providence. This is an amazing record because its early translators were killed, and many of its early readers were imprisoned. Although the Bible has been in existence for almost nineteen centuries, it is still relevant today. Both its quotations and its motifs are found in our literature, oratory, art, music, politics, law, and ethics.

The expressions of human inspiration are a part of the biblical record. Repeatedly, the biblical writers felt compelled to preface their remarks by identifying God as the sole source of their information. Ezekiel informs us that God had said to him, "You must speak my words to them, whether they listen or fail to listen, for they are rebellious" (Ezekiel 2:7 NIV). Luke affirmed that his inspiration was tied to his experience of researching the facts about Christ. He explained, "Therefore, since I myself have carefully investigated everything from the beginning, it seemed good also to me to write an orderly account for you, most excellent Theopilus" (Luke 1:3 NIV). Even more surprising is the fact that Paul identified his inspiration as a strong inner impression. With honesty, he said, "Now concerning virgins, I have no command of the Lord, but I give my opinion as one who by the Lord's mercy is trustworthy" (1 Cor. 7:25 NRSV). On other occasions, the inspiration came through dreams. Matthew wrote, "He had resolved on this, when an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, and said, 'Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary home with you to be your wife' " (Matt. 1:20 REB). At times the inspiration came through visions (Gen. 15:1; Num. 12:6; 1 Sam. 3:1, Isa. 1:1; Ezek. 1:1; Dan. 2:19; Obad. 1; Nah. 1:1; Hab. 2:2). Inspiration also came through historical situations. Paul's letter to the Corinthians is an example of this: "Now for the matters you wrote about" (1 Cor. 7:1 NIV).

These many different expressions of inspiration show that God is resourceful. His unlimited power has used a variety of techniques to reveal Himself and to communicate His message. Regardless of the method God used to inspire the individual writers, the result is the same. They wrote the Word of God. This is evident both in the content of each book and also in the preservation of all the books in the canon of the Bible.

The explanations of biblical inspiration are numerous. This is partly due to the fact that the Bible has no theory of inspiration. It simply affirms that the Bible is the inspired Word of God. Actually no theory of inspiration is necessary. For the Bible, like Jesus, must be accepted by faith as the inspired Word of God. When this is done, then the choice of a theory of inspiration is incidental.

According to the natural intuition theory, inspiration is but a higher development of that natural insight into truth which all persons possess to some degree. The biblical writers were inspired as other great genuises are inspired. This view is very subjective, making all works equally inspired, in spite of the fact that they may be contradictory. It makes the Bible a human, or natural book, rather than a supernatural Book.

By contrast, the mechanical dictation theory claims that God literally dictated the words of the Bible to the biblical writers. They were used as secretaries or passive instruments. The primary objection to the view is that it is not consistent with God's way of relating to persons. Also, it implies that all of the Bible should have the same literary style.

The general Christian theory of inspiration is simply that the illumination of the Holy Spirit is experienced by all believers. This is based on the truth that all believers experience the Spirit. Its weakness is that it overlooks the problem of opposing viewpoints among believers and that it reduces biblical writers to the level of all Christian interpretation and proclamation.

According to the partial inspiration theory, inspiration is limited to certain parts of the Bible. What the writers would have known naturally is not necessarily inspired. Likewise, incidental matters are not regarded as being inspired. This contradicts the statements of Scripture that all Scripture is inspired.

The levels of inspiration theory claims that God used different levels of control at different times in the process of inspiration. Sometimes God used superintendence. At other times, God used evaluation, direction, or suggestion. This view holds that particular passages of Scripture carry various degrees of inspiration. In such a theory, the level of inspiration may be rather arbitrary, based on human judgment not divine actions.

The infallible theory states that the Bible as a whole is without any errors because it is in its entirety the Word of God. Usually those who hold to this view are careful to distinguish between the original manuscripts and the present form of the Bible. However, some claim that this also applies to the current translations because the biblical writers never intended to mislead or deceive. Each of the differences that may be found in parallel passages are harmonized by some type of explanation.

The verbal inspiration theory states that the Holy Spirit inspired the biblical writers to choose the exact words to convey the message of God. As indicated previously, there are many passages of Scripture that support the idea of verbal inspiration. Nevertheless, some have discredited this view because it does not relate to the differences in the personalities of the biblical writers.

On the other hand, the dynamic inspiration theory suggests that the Holy Spirit had control over the process of inspiration, but He allowed the individuals to express their personalities in communicating God's message. Those who criticize this view do so on the basis that the view does not guarantee inerrancy in nonreligious matters.

There are elements of truth in all of the views, and there are also weaknesses in each of the theories. Therefore, some have attempted to splice together ideas from two or more of the theories to develop an eclectic theory. Such an approach is feasible because there is only a slight difference in some of the theories. This might be indicative of the fact that the whole process of developing a theory of inspiration is quite difficult. Phrasing a theory is really secondary to the more important fact that the Bible is the authoritative Word of God and to the calling of obeying that Word. The Bible, itself, takes this position because it has no theory of inspiration. Nevertheless, it emphatically declares itself to be the authoritative record of God's revelation. See Bible; Revelation, Doctrine of. Donald R. Potts

INSTANT Noun meaning a brief moment of time (Isa. 29:5; 30:15; Jer. 18:7–9) and adjective in KJV used in the sense of insistent, pressing, or urgent. For example, "they were instant" (Luke 23:23, KJV) means "they kept urgently demanding" (NRSV); "continuing instant in prayer" (Rom. 12:12, KJV) means "persevere in prayer" (NRSV) or "faithful in prayer" (NIV); "be instant" (2 Tim. 4:2, KJV) means "be persistent" (NRSV) or "be prepared" (NIV).

INSTRUCTION Teaching or exhortation on aspects of Christian life and thought directed to persons who have already made a faith commitment. Instruction (didache) is frequently distinguished from missionary preaching (kerygma). Matthew's Gospel says of Jesus, "He taught them as one having authority" (Matt. 7:29). The Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5—7) in particular is the rock-solid foundational teaching for Christian life (Matt. 7:24–27). Jesus Himself admonished His disciples to make disciples, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded" (Matt. 28:20).

The church of Jesus Christ, therefore, is a teacher, instructing men and women in Christian faith and discipleship. The faith which the church proclaims must be strengthened by the teaching of the gospel. Paul reminded the early Christians that one of the offices of the church was the pastor/teacher who worked "to equip God's people for work in his service, for the building up of the body of Christ" (Eph. 4:12 REB).

The church's teaching ministry has numerous dimensions: The church teaches about Jesus. The church presents the basic details of Jesus' life and ministry: His death, burial, and resurrection. It helps members understand the meaning of these events for all times. In the early church, the catechumens or learners were those given instruction in Christian faith prior to receiving baptism and full membership in the community of faith. Later church leaders such as Martin Luther and John Calvin wrote catechisms, books for instructing persons in faith and doctrine. The church is called to retell the story of Jesus in every generation. See Gospel; Kerygma; Jesus, Life and Ministry of.

The church teaches Christian spirituality. New Christians are not to remain "babes in Christ," but to increase in "grace, and in the knowledge" of the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 3:1–3; Heb. 5:13; 2 Pet. 3:18). Christian spirituality is the process of growing in faith. In its teaching ministry, the church guides Christians in the life of faith through prayer, Bible study, meditation, and spiritual reflection.

The church teaches Christian ethics. Those who follow Christ must be conformed to His image. The church instructs its members in faithfulness, morality, honesty, and integrity. Ethical instruction is not a new law but a way of life according to Christ's new commandment to love one another (John 13:34–35). Jesus is the ultimate moral teacher and example for the people of God. See Ethics in the Bible.

The church instructs in Christian doctrine. The church teaches the basic truths of the Christian faith. It guides Christians in understanding significant beliefs. It opens the Scriptures to determine those doctrinal ideals upon which the church is founded. It guides faithful Christians to maturity so that its members may not be "tossed to and fro, and carried about with by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness" (Eph. 4:14). All doctrinal instruction leads to Christ who is the final source of the Christian's faith. See Doctrine; Bible, Theology of.

A Teaching Evangel. As the church teaches, it also evangelizes. The teaching ministry of the church is another way in which the people of God declare their faith that others may know Christ and grow up in him. See Evangelism in the Bible.

Bill J. Leonard

INSTRUMENT KJV term for a tool, utensil (1 Chron. 28:14), weapon (Gen. 49:5; 1 Chron. 12:33,37), or musical instrument (1 Chron. 15:16; 16:42; 23:5). Modern translations generally reserve the term instrument for musical instrument.

INSULT To treat with insolence, indignity, or contempt. The term does not appear in the KJV but becomes increasingly frequent in more recent translations, such as the NIV, where it replaces such terms as abuse, mock, revile, reproach, or ridicule. According to Hebrew wisdom, the wise person ignores insults (Prov. 12:16). Proverbs 14:31 warns that oppression of the poor is an insult to God. God's prophets were sometimes the objects of insults (Jer. 20:7–8; 2 Kings 2:23). As God's ultimate representative, Jesus anticipated insults as part of His passion (Luke 18:32). The Synoptic Gospels relate these insults (Matt. 26:68; 27:29,40–44; Mark 14:65; 15:16–20,29–32; Luke 22:63–65; 23:11,35–39). By suffering insult, Christ became the model for Christians who experience insult (Rom. 15:3, quoting Ps. 69:9; 1 Pet. 3:9). Jesus blessed those who suffered insult for His sake (Matt. 5:11). Paul was content with insults which are a natural consequence of mission involvement (2 Cor. 12:10). Jesus warned that one insulting a brother was in danger of standing before the Sanhedrin, the Jewish supreme court (Matt. 5:22).

INSURRECTION Rebellion against an established government. By the time of Artaxerxes (464–423 B.C.), Jerusalem had a well-established reputation for insurrection (Ezra 4:19). Barabbas was charged with insurrection (Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19,25). The tribune in charge of Temple security confused Paul with an Egyptian insurrectionist (Acts 21:38). The insurrection of Acts 18:12 (KJV) is better rendered "united attack" (NRSV).

INTEGRITY The state of being complete or undivided. Terms which occur in parallel with integrity (Hebrew tom, tomim) suggest its shades of meaning: righteousness (Ps. 7:8); uprightness (Ps. 25:21); without wavering (Ps. 26:1 NRSV, NAS, NIV); blameless (Ps. 101:2 NRSV, Hebrew uses tom twice in verse, otherwise translated integrity). Several Old Testament characters are designated persons of integrity: Noah (Gen. 6:9); Abraham (Gen. 17:1); Jacob (Gen. 25:27); Job (Job 1:1,8; 2:3); and David (1 Kings 9:4). English translations frequently render the underlying Hebrew as perfect or blameless. Inclusion of Jacob is surprising since he is better known for his deceit (Gen. 27:5–27; 30:37–43; 33:13–17). English translators describe Jacob as a plain (KJV), peaceful (NAS), or quiet man (NRSV, NIV, REB).

In the New Testament, integrity occurs only at Titus 2:7 (NRSV, NIV, REB) in reference to teaching. The idea of singleness of heart or mind is frequent: Matthew 5:8; 6:22; James 1:7–8; 4:8.

INTERCESSION (Ĭn tĕr cĕs' sion) The act of intervening or mediating between differing parties; particularly the act of praying to God on behalf of another person.

Old Testament The heroes of Old Testament faith are in most cases heroes of intercessory prayer. Abraham asked God not to destroy Sodom in order to save his nephew Lot. He called on the righteous character of God, asking if God would "slay the righteous with the wicked" (Gen. 18:25). In so doing, Abraham acknowledged that he was not worthy to lay such claims before the holy God (v. 27). Abraham also interceded for Abimelech, fulfilling a prophetic function and bringing healing (Gen. 20:7,17).

Moses intervened between God and Pharaoh as he tried to get permission for the people to leave Egypt (for example, Ex. 8:8). At Sinai the people asked Moses to represent them before God since they feared to approach the awesome God (Ex. 20:19). After the people built the golden calf, Moses prayed for God's mercy, calling on God to remember His reputation among the nations and His promises to the patriarchs. As a result, God "repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people" (Ex. 32:11–14). Through intercessory prayer, Moses sought to make an atonement for sin, identifying himself so completely with the people that he asked to be blotted out of God's book if God would not forgive the people's sin (Ex. 32:30–34). Compare Deuteronomy 9:25.

In face of the people's idolatry, Samuel asked God to forgive them (1 Sam. 7:5). Even when he did not agree with the people, Samuel took their plea for a king to God (1 Sam. 8; compare ch. 12). When God rejected Saul, Samuel prayed in grief (1 Sam. 15:11). David interceded all night on behalf of his new-born baby, even knowning God had decreed the child's death because of David's sin (2 Sam. 12:14–18). After taking a census without God's direction, David asked God to punish him and not the innocent people (2 Sam. 24:17).

In dedicating the Temple, Solomon asked God to hear the prayers of the sinful people and forgive them (1 Kings 8; compare 3:3–14). Elijah accused God of bringing "evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son" (1 Kings 17:20) and prayed successfully that the child would live again. Compare 2 Kings 4:32–34. Hezekiah took Sennacherib's letter to the Temple and opened it before God, praying for deliverance from the Assyrians (Isa. 37:14–20).

Intercession formed an important part of the prophet's task. Amos prayed that God's word would not come to pass (Amos 7:5–6). Jeremiah responded to God's word of judgment on the nation with a plea for God not to be a stranger among them who could not save themselves (Jer. 14:7–9). Lamentations is filled with prayers for the nation. The priests had intercession as part of their job description (Joel 2:17). Compare 1 Samuel 2:25. The high priest's task was to make atonement for the people (Lev. 16).

The prophet looked to a day when people from all nations could come to the Temple and make intercession (Isa. 56:7). The prophetic hope centered in the Suffering Servant who would bear the sin of all people, making intercession for transgressors (Isa. 53:6,12).

Intercession was not always effective. God told Jeremiah to forsake the prophetic duty of intercession: "Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee" (Jer. 7:16). Even the great heroes of intercession would not succeed in such situations (Jer. 15:1; compare Ezek. 14:14). In the final analysis, even the most righteous of people need an intercessor with God (Job 9:32–35; 19:25; 23:1–17).

New Testament The New Testament teaches that intercession is expected of all believers (1 Tim. 2:1–3). Intercession for the sick is particularly important (Jas. 5:14). Paul in his letters constantly referred to his prayers for the readers, and Jesus set forth the supreme example of intercession (Luke 22:32; 23:34; John 17).

The Bible reveals that intercession is performed by the Holy Spirit, Christ, and Christians. Romans 8:26–27 shows that the Holy Spirit works to sustain the burdened believer, to intercede to carry even inexpressible prayers to God. Romans 8:34 offers the truth that the risen Christ will maintain His intercession for the believer, being the Mediator between God and humanity. God accepts a believer's prayers and praises through Christ's intercession. His death secured removal of sin; His resurrection bestowed life on those who believe in Him; His ascension brought exaltation to power in heaven and on earth. Now He intercedes for us at God's throne of grace. Hebrews 7:25 proclaims the complete deliverance that comes through salvation accomplished through Christ and notes that He is ever present in heaven to intercede for those who come to Him. See Prayer.

J. William Thompson and Trent C. Butler

INTEREST Sum of money a borrower pays for use of loaned capital. Mosaic law prohibited the charging of interest to fellow Israelites (Ex. 22:25; Lev. 25:36–37; Deut. 23:19). Interest could be charged to foreigners (Deut. 23:20). The motive in loaning without interest to fellow Israelites was to prevent the formation of a permanent underclass in Israel. Ezekiel regarded the charging of interest as a watershed act separating the righteous from those practicing abominations (Ezek. 18:8,13,17; 22:12). Nehemiah challenged neglect of the Mosaic prohibition which had resulted in dire poverty for some of the returned exiles (Neh. 5:6–13).

The "harsh" master who expects interest and reaps what he did not sow (Matt. 25:24,26–27; Luke 19:21–23) is hardly to be taken as a model for Christian business practice. Luke's parable in particular contains reminiscences of the hated Archelaus (Luke 19:12,14; compare Matt. 2:22). See Archelaus. Jesus stood firmly in the Old Testament tradition when He commanded His disciples to give freely to the needy who asked (Matt. 5:42; 10:8).

Many commentators feel compelled to defend the common, contemporary practice of charging interest. Any moral decision on the matter must carefully weigh rival claims: (1) that capital loaned at interest provides an opportunity for persons to escape poverty and (2) that the inability of both individuals and nations to pay interest on borrowed capital contributes to continued poverty. See Banking; Loan.

INTERMEDIATE STATE Condition in which the deceased exists between death and the resurrection or final judgment. The brief comments of the Bible about this subject have led to much difference of opinion.

Views Concerning the Intermediate State Some have understood the phrase "sleep in Jesus" (1 Thess. 4:14) to suggest that the soul is unconscious during this time. Martin Luther made statements which suggest that after death the righteous sleep without an awareness of the passage of time. Jesus awakens them at the resurrection. This interpretation seems to contradict Paul's conviction that after death he anticipated conscious fellowship with Christ (Phil. 1:23).

Others have emphasized the possibility of a second opportunity for receiving the gospel message during this intermediate period. An interpretation of 1 Peter 4:6 following this system would emphasize that the dead receive an opportunity to hear and respond to the gospel. This view overlooks the fact that the "dead" in 1 Peter 4:6 might be believers who had responded to the gospel while they were living but were now dead.

Biblical Insights about the Intermediate State Although the Bible does not provide detailed teaching concerning the intermediate state, it does provide teaching from which we can draw legitimate inferences. The conditions of the righteous and the unrighteous provide a lesson in contrasts.

Believers appear in a state of rest. This rest does not refer to inactivity but to the joy of achievement and accomplishment (Heb. 4:10; Rev. 14:13).

Several passages clearly indicate that believers are alive and conscious in the presence of God (Matt. 22:32; John 11:26). Paul expressed the hope of being with Christ in Philippians 1:23 and in 2 Corinthians 5:8. In Luke 23:43 Jesus assured the repentant thief that He would be with him in paradise. The term "paradise" comes from a Persian word which means "park" and is another way of referring to the blessedness of the presence of God. See Paradise.

Even though the believer enjoys life, rest, and the presence of God, there is still a sense of incompleteness. Paul centered his hope on the resurrection (Phil. 3:10–11).

The unbeliever is pictured during the intermediate state as separated from God. The separation involves a removal from the blessing of fellowship with God. In this condition God keeps the wicked in a state of punishment until the time of final judgment (2 Pet. 2:9).

The wicked also are seen as alive and conscious. Although the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:19–31) has many symbolic features, it clearly suggests a state of conscious existence for the wicked.

The term "Hades" is a general reference to the location of the dead between the time of physical death and resurrection. The King James Version has translated this term as "hell" or "grave." Sometimes the term is a general reference to the grave and may allow for the presence of even the righteous (Acts 2:27,31; 1 Cor. 15:55). On other occasions Hades refers to the place of the wicked dead (Luke 16:23; Rev. 20:14). See Hades; Hell; Resurrection. Thomas D. Lea

INTERPRETATION See Bible, Interpretation of.

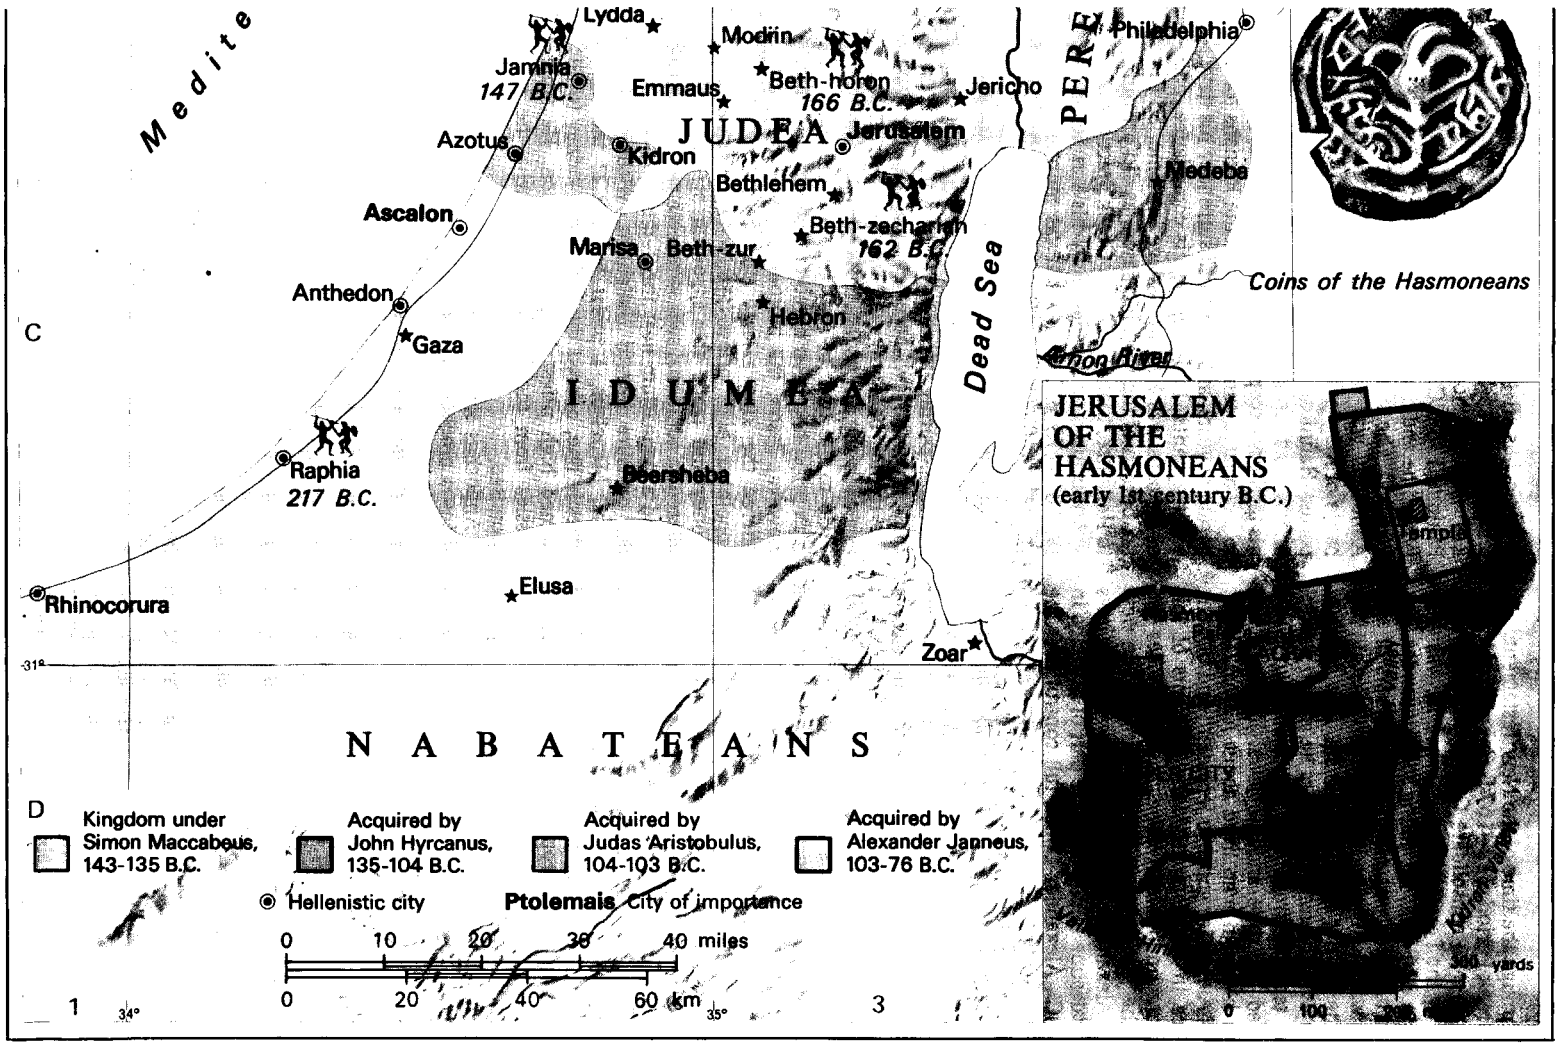
INTERTESTAMENTAL HISTORY & LITERATURE Events and writings originating after the final prophet mentioned in the Old Testament (Malachi, about 450 B.C.) and the birth of Christ (about 4 B.C.).



Shortly after 600 B.C., the Babylonians captured Jerusalem, destroyed the Temple, and took away many of the people as captives. After Cyrus overcame the Babylonian Empire, the Jews who desired were allowed to return. The Temple was rebuilt. Under the leadership of Nehemiah and Ezra, the Jewish religious community established itself, and the worship and life of the people continued. Here Old Testament history ends, and the Intertestamental Period begins.

The history of the Intertestamental Period can be divided into three sections: The Greek Period, 323 B.C. to 167 B.C.; the Period of Independence, 167–63 B.C.; and the Roman Period, 63

© carta

PALESTINE IN GRAECO-ROMAN TIMES

Lydda
Modiin
Philadelphia
Jamnia
147 B.C.
Emmaus
Beth-horon
166 B.C.
Jericho
PEREA
JUDEA
Jerusalem
Azotus
Kidron
Medeba
Bethlehem
Ascalon
Beth-zechariah
162 B.C.
Marisa
Beth-zur
Coins of the Hasmoneans
Anthedon
Hebron
C
Gaza
Dead Sea
IDUMEA
Raphia
217 B.C.
Beersheba
JERUSALEM
OF THE HASMONEANS
(early 1st century B.C.)
Temple
Rhinocorura
Elusa
Zoar
31°
NABATEANS
D
Kingdom under Simon Maccabeus, 143-135 B.C.
Acquired by John Hyrcanus, 135-104 B.C.
Acquired by Judas Aristobulus, 104-103 B.C.
Acquired by Alexander Janneus, 103-76 B.C.
Hellenistic city
Ptolemais City of importance
0 10 20 30 40 miles
0 20 40 60 km
1
34°
35°
3
0 100 200 yards

B.C. through the time of the New Testament.

The Greek Period, 323–167 B.C. Philip of Macedon sought to consolidate Greece so as to resist attack by the Persian Empire. When he was murdered in 336 B.C., his young son Alexander took up the task. He was only nineteen years of age, but he was highly gifted and educated. Within two years he set out to destroy Persia. In a series of battles over the next two years he gained control of the territory from Asia Minor to Egypt. This included Palestine and the Jews. Josephus, and Jewish historian who lived about A.D. 37–100, tells of Alexander going to Jerusalem and offering sacrifice in the Temple. Many elements of this story are undoubtedly false, but Alexander did treat the Jews well. When he founded the new city of Alexandria in Egypt, he moved many Jews from Palestine to populate one part of that city. In 331 B.C., Alexander gained full control over the Persian Empire.

Alexander's conquest had three major results. First, he sought to introduce Greek ideas and culture into the conquered territory. This is called Hellenization. He believed that the way to consolidate his empire was for the people to have a common way of life. However, he did not seek to change the religious practices of the Jews. Second, he founded Greek cities and colonies throughout the conquered territory. Third, he spread the Greek language into all of that region so that it became a universal language during the following centuries.

When Alexander died in 323 B.C., chaos resulted in his empire. Five of his prominent generals established themselves over different parts of his empire. Ptolemy chose the land of Egypt. Seleucus took control of Babylonia. Antigonus became ruler of Asia Minor and northern Syria. The other two ruled in Europe and did not have direct influence over events in Palestine.

From the beginning, Ptolemy and Antigonus struggled over the control of Palestine. The battle of Ipsus in 301 B.C. settled the matter for a century. In this battle, the other four generals fought against and killed Antigonus. Seleucus was given the territory of Antigonus, including Palestine. However, Ptolemy did not take part in the battle. Instead he took over control of Palestine. The result was that Palestine continued to be a point of contention between the Ptolemies and the Seleucids.

The Jews fared well under the Ptolemies. They had much self-rule. Their religious practices were not hampered. Greek customs gradually became more common among the people. During this period the translation of the Old Testament into Greek began during the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, 285–246 B.C. This translation is known as the Septuagint, often abbreviated LXX. The early Christians used the Septuagint and New Testament writers often quoted it.

Antiochus III (the Great), 223–187 B.C., attempted to take Palestine from the Ptolemies in 217 B.C. without success. At the battle of Panium, 198 B.C., however, he defeated Ptolemy IV, and he and his successors ruled Palestine until 167 B.C. The situation of the Jews changed after Antiochus was defeated by the Romans in the battle of Magnesia, 190 B.C. Antiochus had supported Hannibal of North Africa, Rome's hated enemy. As a result, Antiochus had to give up all of his territory except the province of Cilicia. He had to pay a large sum of money to the Romans for a period of years, and he had to surrender his navy and elephants. To guarantee his compliance, one of his sons was kept as hostage in Rome. So the tax burden of the Jews increased, as did pressure to Hellenize, that is, to adopt Greek practices.

Antiochus was succeeded by his son Seleucus IV, 187–175 B.C. When he was murdered, his younger brother became ruler. Antiochus IV, 175–163 B.C., was called Epiphanes ("manifest" or "splendid"), although some called him Epimenes ("mad"). He was the son who had been a hostage in Rome. During the early years of his reign, the situation of the Jews became worse. Part of it was due to their being divided. Some of their leaders, especially the priests, encouraged Hellenism.

Up to the time of Antiochus IV, the office of high priest had been hereditary and held for life. However, Jason, the brother of the high priest, offered the king a large sum of money to be appointed high priest. Antiochus needed the money and made the appointment. Jason also offered an additional sum to receive permission to build a gymnasium near the Temple. This shows the pressure toward Hellenism. Within a few years, Menelaus, a priest but not of the high priestly line, offered the king more money to be named high priest in place of Jason. He stole vessles from the Temple to pay what he had promised.

Antiochus sought to add Egypt to his territory. He was proclaimed king of Egypt; but when he returned the following year to take control of the land, the Romans confronted him, and told him to leave Egypt. Knowing the power of Rome, he returned home. When he reached Jerusalem, he found that Jason had driven Menelaus out of the city. He saw this as full revolt. He allowed his troops to kill many of the Jews and determined to put an end to the Jewish religion. He sacrificed a pig on the altar of the Temple. Parents were forbidden to circumcize their children, the sabbath was not to be observed, and all copies of the law were to be burned. It was a capital offense to be found with a copy of the law. The zeal of Antiochus to destroy Judaism was a major factor in its salvation.

Jewish Independence, 167–63 B.C. Resistance was passive at first; but when the Seleucids sent officers throughout the land to compel leading citizens to offer sacrifice to Zeus, open conflict flared. It broke out first at the village of Modein, about halfway between Jerusalem and Joppa. An aged priest named Mattathias was chosen to offer the sacrifice. He refused, but a young Jew volunteered to do it. This angered Mattathias, and he killed both the Jew and the officer. Then he fled to the hills with his five sons and others who supported his action. The revolt had begun.

Leadership fell to Judas, the third son of Mattathias. He was nicknamed Maccabeus, the hammerer. He probably received this title because of his success in battle. He was the ideal guerrilla leader. He fought successful battles against much larger forces. A group called the Hasidim made up the major part of his army. These men were devoutly committed to religious freedom. They were dedicated to obedience to the law and to the worship of God.

Antiochus IV was more concerned with affairs in the eastern part of his empire than with what was taking place in Palestine. Therefore, he did not commit many troops to the revolt at first. Judas was able to gain control of Jerusalem within three years. The Temple was cleansed and rededicated exactly three years after it had been polluted by the king, 164 B.C. (Dates through this period are uncertain and may be a year earlier than indicated.) This is still commemorated by the Jewish feast of Hannukah. The Hasidim had gained what they were seeking and left the army. Judas had larger goals in mind. He wanted political freedom. He rescued mistreated Jews from Galilee and Gilead and made a treaty of friendship and mutual support with Rome. In 160 B.C. at Elasa, with a force of eight hundred men, he fought a vastly superior Seleucid army and was killed.

Jonathan, another son of Mattathias, took the lead in the quest for independence. He was weak militarily. He was driven out of the cities and only gradually established himself in the countryside. Constant struggle engaged those seeking the Seleucid throne. The rivals offered him gifts to gain his support. In 152 B.C. he gave his support to Alexander Balas, who claimed to be the son of Antiochus IV. In return Jonathan was appointed high priest. For the first time, Jewish religious and civil rule were centered in one person. Jonathan was taken prisoner and killed in 143 B.C.

Simon, the last surviving son of Mattathias, ruled until he was murdered by his son-in-law in 134 B.C. He secured freedom from taxation for the Jews by 141 B.C. At last they had achieved political freedom. Simon was acclaimed by the people as their leader and high priest forever. The high priesthood was made hereditary with him and his descendants. The Hasmonean dynasty, named after an ancestor of Mattathias, had its beginning.

When Simon was murdered, his son John Hyrcanus became the high priest and civil ruler (134–104 B.C.). For a brief time the Seleucids exercised some power over the Jews, but Hyrcanus broke free and began to expand the territory of the Jews. In the north he destroyed the temple of the Samaritans on Mount Gerizim. He moved southeast and conquered the land of the Idumeans, the ancient kingdom of Edom. The residents were forced to emigrate or convert to Judaism. This had great significance for the Jews, for it was from this people that Herod the Great was to come.

The oldest son of Hyrcanus, Aristobulus I (104–103 B.C.), succeeded him. He had his mother and three brothers put in prison. One brother was allowed to remain free, but he was later murdered. He allowed his mother to starve to death in prison. He extended his rule to include part of the territory of Iturea, north of Galilee. He was the first to take the title of king.

Salome Alexandra was the wife of Aristobulus. When he died, she released his brothers from prison and married the oldest of them, Alexander Jannaeus. He became high priest and king (103–76 B.C.). He made many enemies by marrying the widow of his brother. The Old Testament stated that a high priest must marry a virgin (Lev. 21:14). He was an ambitious warrior and conducted campaigns by which he enlarged his kingdom to about the size of the kingdom of David. He used foreign soldiers because he could not trust Jews in his army. As high priest, he did not always follow prescribed ritual. On one occasion, the people reacted to his improper actions by throwing citrons at him. He allowed his soldiers to kill six thousand of them. At another time he had eight hundred of his enemies crucified. As they hung on the crosses, he had their wives and children brought out and slain before their eyes.

Alexandra succeeded her husband as ruler (76–67 B.C.). Of course, she could not serve as high priest, so the two functions were separated. Her oldest son, Hyrcanus II, became high priest. He was not ambitious. Her younger son, Aristobulus II, was just the opposite. He was waiting for his mother to die so he could become king and high priest.

When Salome died, civil war broke out and lasted until 63 B.C. Aristobulus easily defeated Hyrcanus, who was content to retire. This might have been the end of the story were it not for Antipater, an Idumean. He persuaded Hyrcanus to seek the help of the king of Nabatea to regain his position. Aristobulus was driven back to Jerusalem. At this point Rome arrived on the scene. Both Aristobulus and Hyrcanus appealed to Scaurus, the Roman general charged with the administration of Palestine. He sided with Aristobulus. When the Roman commander Pompey arrived later, both appealed to him. Aristobulus ended up trying to fight against the Romans. He was defeated and taken as a prisoner to Rome. The Romans took control over Palestine.

The Roman Period, 63 B.C.–A.D. 70 Under the Romans, the Jews paid heavy taxes; but their religious practices were not changed. Roman power was exercised through Antipater, who was named governor of Palestine. Hyrcanus was made high priest. The situation in Palestine was confused due to the efforts of Aristobulus and his sons to lead revolts against Rome. While Palestine was successively under the control of various Roman officials, Antipater was the stabilizing force. He had one son, Phasael, named governor of Judea, and a second son, Herod, made governor of Galilee. Herod sought to bring order to his area. He arrested Hezekiah, a Jewish robber or rebel, and had him executed. The Sanhedrin in Jerusalem summoned Herod to give an account of his action. He went, dressed in royal purple and with a bodyguard. The Sanhedrin could do nothing.

Antipater was murdered in 43 B.C. Antony became the Roman commander in the East in 42 B.C. In 40 B.C. the Parthians invaded Palestine and made Antigonus, the last surviving son of Aristobulus, king of Palestine. Hyrcanus was mutilated by having his ears cut or bitten off so he could not serve as high priest again. Phasael was captured and committed suicide in prison. Herod barely escaped with his family. He went to Rome to have his future brother-in-law, Aristobulus, made king, hoping to rule through him as his father had ruled through Antipater. However, the Roman Senate, at the urging of Antony and Octavian (Augustus), made Herod king (40 B.C.). It took him three years to drive the Parthians out of the country and establish his rule. He was king until his death in 4 B.C.

The years of Herod's rule were a time of turmoil for the Jewish people. He was an Idumean. Of course, his ancestors had been forced to convert to Judaism, but the people never accepted him. He was the representative of a foreign power. No matter how well he served Rome, he could never satisfy the Jews. Even his marriage to Mariamne, the granddaughter of Aristobulus II, gave no legitimacy to his rule in their sight. The most spectacular of his building achievements, the rebuilding of the Jerusalem Temple, did not win the loyalty of the Jews.

Herod had many problems which grew out of his jealousy and fears. He had Aristobulus, his brother-in-law, executed. Later Mariamne, her mother, and her two sons were killed. Just five days before his own death, Herod had his oldest son Antipater put to death. His relations with Rome were sometimes troubled due to the unsettled conditions in the empire. Herod was a strong supporter of Antony even though he could not tolerate Cleopatra with whom Antony had become enamored. When Antony was defeated by Octavian in 31 B.C., Herod went to Octavian and pledged his full support. This support was accepted. Herod proved himself an efficient administrator on behalf of Rome. He kept the peace among a people who were hard to rule. To be sure, he was a cruel and merciless man. Yet he was generous, using his own funds to feed the people during a time of famine. He never got over the execution of Mariamne, the wife he loved above all others. His grief led to mental and emotional problems.

During the reign of Herod, Jesus was born (Matt. 2:1–18; Luke 1:5). Herod was the king who ordered the execution of the male babies in Bethlehem (Matt. 2:16–18).

At his death, Herod left a will leaving his kingdom to three of his sons. Antipas was to be tetrarch ("ruler of a fourth") of Galilee and Perea (4 B.C.—A.D. 39). Philip was to be tetrarch of Gentile regions to the northeast of the Sea of Galilee (4 B.C.—A.D. 34). Archelaus was to be king of Judea and Samaria. Rome honored the will except that Archelaus was not given the title of king. He was ethnarch ("ruler of the people") of these two territories. He proved to be a poor ruler and was deposed in A.D. 6. His territories were placed under the direct rule of Roman procurators under the control of the governor of Syria.

Literature The Jews produced many writings during the Intertestamental Period. These writings can be divided into three groups. The Apocrypha are writings that were included, for the most part, in the Greek translation of the Old Testament, the Septuagint. They were translated into Latin and became a part of the Latin Vulgate, the authoritative Latin Bible. Some are historical books. First Maccabees is our chief source for the history of the period from Antiochus Epiphanes to John Hyrcanus. Other books are Wisdom Literature. Others can be classified as historical romances. One is apocalyptic, giving attention to the end of time and God's intervention in history. One writing is devotional in nature. See Apocrypha.

A second group of writings is the Pseudepigrapha. It is a larger collection than the Apocrypha, but there is no final agreement as to which writings should be included in it. Fifty-two writings are included in the two volumes, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, edited by James H. Charlesworth. These cover the range of Jewish throught from apocalyptic to wisdom to devotional. Their title indicates that they are attributed to noted people of ancient times, such as Adam, Abraham, Enoch, Ezra, and Baruch. For the most part they were written in the last centuries before the birth of Jesus, although some of them are from the first century A.D.

The final group of writings from this period are the Qumran scrolls, popularly known as the Dead Sea Scrolls. The first knowledge of these came with the discovery of manuscripts in a cave above the Dead Sea in 1947. During subsequent years, fragments of manuscripts have been found in at least eleven caves in the area. These writings include

Old Testament manuscripts, writings of the Qumran sect, and writings copied and used by the sect which came from other sources. These writings show us something of the life and beliefs of one group of Jews in the last two centuries before Jesus. See Apocrypha; Pseudepigrapha; Septuagint; Seleucids; Ptolemies; Herod the Great; Herod Antipas; Herod Philip; Archelaus; Temple; Dead Sea Scrolls; Hasmoneans. Clayton Harrop

INTESTINES The tubular part of the digestive tract between the stomach and anus (2 Sam. 20:10; Acts 1:18 NIV). See Bowels.

IOB (Ī′ ōb) Personal name of uncertain meaning but of different Hebrew spelling than the biblical sufferer Job, a difference not made in KJV. Son of Issachar, according to Genesis 46:13; but a copyist apparently omitted one Hebrew letter, the name appearing as Jashub in Samaritan Pentateuch and some Greek manuscripts of Genesis (followed by NRSV, NIV, TEV) and in Numbers 26:24; 1 Chronicles 7:1. See Jashub.

IOTA See Dot.

IPHDEIAH or IPHEDEIAH (Īph (ē) dêi′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah redeems." Member of tribe of Benjamin who lived in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 8:25).

IPHTAH (Īph′ tah) Place name meaning, "he opened." Town in tribal territory of Judah in the Shephelah (Josh. 15:43). It may be located at modern Terqumiyeh, halfway between Hebron and Beit Jibrin.

IPHTAHEL (Īph′ tah ĕl) Place name meaning, "God opens." Valley separating tribal territories of Zebulun and Asher (Josh. 19:14,27). It is modern wadi el-Melek.

IR (Îr) Personal name meaning, "city" or "donkey's calf." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:12). Some Bible students refer to Genesis 46:23 and think a copyist misread the name, writing Ir rather than an original Dan, which looks much like Ir in Hebrew (REB).

IRA (Ī′ rà) Personal name meaning, "city" or "donkey's colt." 1. Priest under David (2 Sam. 20:26). KJV and a few Bible students see "priest" here as a civil office rather than a religious one. Ira was apparently from Havoth-jair in Gilead (Num. 32:41), though some Bible students think he was from Kiriath-jearim (1 Sam. 7:1). Ira is not identified as a Levite, and his function is not related to those of Abiathar and Zadok, the official priests. Thus some have concluded that he served on David's private staff as a personal priest to the king. Similarly, David's sons served as priests (2 Sam. 8:18 NRSV, REB, TEV). 2. Two of David's military heroes were named Ira (2 Sam. 23:26,38). Ira from Tekoa was also an officer in charge of the sixth month's "national guard" army (1 Chron. 27:9).

IRAD (Ī′ răd) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Son of Enoch (Gen. 4:18).

IRAM (Ī′ răm) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Tribal leader in Edom (Gen. 36:43).

IRI (Ī′ rī) Personal name meaning, "my city" or "my donkey's colt." Leader in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:7).

IRIJAH (Ī rī′ jah) Personal name meaning, "Yah sees." Army captain who accused Jeremiah of treason and turned him over to the authorities for punishment (Jer. 37:13) about 586 B.C. Apparently Jeremiah was going to inspect the field he had bought in Anathoth (Jer. 32:9). Since he had been preaching about ultimate victory for Babylon over Jerusalem, Irijah thought Jeremiah was trying to escape Jerusalem and join the Babylonian army, then retreating from Jerusalem. The prophet's mission included suffering. Loyalty to God did not always mean loyalty to the government or protection from the government. Both Irijah and Jeremiah thought they were serving God. History proved Jeremiah correct.

IRNAHASH (Îr nā′ hăsh) Place name meaning, "city of the snake" or "city of bronze." Modern deir Nahhas about five and one half miles north of Lydda or khirbet Nahash on the northern end of the Arabah. First Chronicles 4:12 lists it as a personal name in the descendants of Judah, using the device of the "Table of Nations" (Gen. 10) and other passages of listing cities by original ancestors in the form of a genealogy.

IRON Metal that was basic material for weapons and tools in biblical period. The Iron Age began in Israel about 1200 B.C., though introduction of the metal into daily life occurred slowly. The Bible mentions iron in conjunction with Moses and with the Canaanite conquest, but at this time iron was rare and used mainly for jewelry. The availability of iron was a sign of the richness of the Promised Land (Deut. 8:9), and articles of iron were indications of wealth (Deut. 3:11; Josh. 6:19). Excavations of Israelite sites dating from the eleventh and twelfth centuries have uncovered rings, bracelets, and decorative daggers made of iron.

In early forging techniques iron was not much harder than other known metals and, unlike bronze and copper, it had to be worked while hot. As improved metalworking techniques became known, however, iron gradually became the preferred metal for tools such as plows, axes, and picks as well as for weapons such as spears and daggers. Iron chariots were a sign of great power in warfare (Josh. 17:18; Judg. 1:19; 4:3).

Older scholars taught that the Philistines held an iron monopoly over Israel. Increased availability of iron corresponds to the period of Philistia's collapse, and 1 Samuel records that the Philistines prevented smiths from working in Israel (1 Sam. 13:19–21). However, excavations in Philistia have uncovered no more iron implements than in Israelite cities. This suggests that the prohibition of smiths in Israel may refer to workers in bronze rather than iron or that for a period of history the Philistines had an economic and perhaps technological advantage, being able to control the iron industry.

Most likely, iron became common throughout the region due to disruption of sources of other metals and to increased trading to the north and over the sea. After 1000 B.C. iron became widely used. David emphasized the importance of taking metals as spoils of war, and he later used stockpiles of iron and bronze in preparation for building the Temple (1 Chron. 22:3).

Iron is frequently used symbolically in the Bible. Related to the hardness of iron it is used as a threat of judgment (Ps. 2:9; Rev. 2:27) or as a sign of strength (Isa. 48:4; Dan. 2:40). The imagery includes other aspects of ironworking: the furnace was a symbol of oppression (1 Kings 8:51), and the cauterizing effect of hot iron was used by Paul to describe those with no conscience (1 Tim. 4:2). See Arms and Armor; Minerals and Metals; Mining; Philistines. Tim Turnham

IRON (Ī′ rŏn) Place name meaning, "fearful." Town in tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38), sometimes spelled Yiron (RSV, TEV, NAS). It is modern Yarun in modern Lebanon a mile and a half north northwest of Baram, nine miles southwest of Lake Huleh, on the modern border between Israel and Lebanon.

IRONSMITH One who works with iron, either one who smelts ore or one who works cast pieces. Bazillai (2 Sam. 17:27–29; 19:31–39), whose name means "man of iron," perhaps served as David's ironsmith. Solomon appealed to Hiram, the king of Tyre, for a skilled ironsmith (2 Chron. 2:7). Ironsmiths were among those assisting with Jehoiada's Temple renovation (2 Chron. 24:12). The importance of smiths is highlighted by their inclusion in the classes singled out for deportation at the destruction of Jerusalem (2 Kings 24:14). Isaiah 44:12; 54:16 provide concise accounts of the ironsmith's work. See Occupations; Iron.

IRONY is a trope (figure of speech) in which the intended meaning is the opposite of that normally expressed by the words used. The technique is built upon the trajectories of aroused expectations and gratifications. It depends upon: (1) common vocabulary, (2) common cultural experience, and (3) common awareness of typical literary forms. Irony is normally used to express a disparity between what is actually so and what the object of the irony believes to be so. Since irony means the opposite or near opposite of what it seems to say, interpreters of the Bible need to be able to recognize it.

Uses of Irony in the Bible Irony may be the reason for individual word choice. In the Hebrew text of Job 1:5, Job offered sacrifices because he feared his children may have "blessed" (Hebrew text) God. The writer really meant "curse," as most translations render the Hebrew word, but he wrote "blessed" somewhat in the English sense of "blessed out." The euphemism seems to emphasize the extreme nature of the sin by using its exact opposite to describe it. At other times, the irony may require the entire statement. This is easily seen in Job's bitter retort in Job 12:2, "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you." Job was really saying that his so-called comforters were not as important or wise as they thought they were.

In addition to the ironic use of individual words or phrases, entire narratives can be structured around an irony of situation or fate. In the first case, the outcome of events seems contradictory to what could generally be expected and results in mocking the propriety of the apparent power structure. The second case is similar, but events have unexpected consequences when the actor brings about a result contrary to the original purpose. This usually involves the introduction of an imposter (or a false message), a debate between the ironist (critic of the imposter who wins), and a conclusion which vindicates the truth (or the ironist). Balaam's desire to be made wealthy at Israel's expense in Numbers 22—24 certainly ended up backfiring upon both the soothsayer and his Moabite patron, Balak. Instead of getting rich on Moabite gold by cursing Israel, he was thwarted by God and had to bless Israel and curse Moab. This is an irony of fate. In Daniel 2, the magicians were the imposters who claimed that no one could interpret the king's dream. Daniel was the ironist who taught them where wisdom arises (v. 20) and revealed the truth (v. 30). The impossible task was accomplished; the irony of situation was complete; and the power of God emphasized! This is the usual purpose of narrative irony in the Bible.

Bible students aware of the use of irony will recognize some of the humor in the Bible which exists at the expense of God's enemies. A study of comedy, rhetoric, and satire would also be helpful. Johnny L. Wilson heals." Town in tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:27). Location is not known.

IRPEEL (Ĭr′ pē ĕl) Place name meaning, "God

IRRIGATION Transportation of water by man-made means such as canals, dams, aqueducts, and cisterns.

Old Testament The dry climate of the Ancient Near East made the transportation of water, often across long distances, a necessity. Large canal systems crossed the lands of Egypt and Mesopotamia, providing the vast amounts of water necessary to support crops during the dry months of March to October. In Egypt, the second highest official, the vizier, oversaw the maintenance of canals and the allocation of water to the provinces. Joseph may have fulfilled this role during his service for Pharaoh. Water was drawn from the Nile River and offshoot irrigation canals by means of a hinged pole with a hanging bucket on the end. Egypt's canal system allowed agricultural use of the highly fertile desert lands that the annual flooding of the Nile did not cover. During the Exile of Judah in Babylon, canals as large as twenty-five yards wide and several miles long carried the waters of the Tigris and Euphrates to field and city. Commercial ships used these waterways to transport produce between outlying farms and major cities.

The irrigation of fields was not widely practiced in ancient Israel. Instead, farmers relied upon the winter rains to provide all the water necessary for crops during the coming year. Fields and gardens close to water sources may have used small irrigation channels, and some fields may have been watered by hand in particularly dry years. Runoff from the rains was collected and diverted through conduits to both communal and private cisterns for drinking water. In larger cities such as Gezer, Megiddo, Hazor, and Jerusalem engineers and workmen produced huge underground tunnel systems to provide the citizens with ample supplies of water. These tunnels maintained the cities needs in times of siege.

At the second cataract of the Nile River a scene of primitive irrigation with the use of manpower.

New Testament During Intertestamental and New Testament times massive Roman aqueducts were built to provide fresh water for the growing cities. A two-channeled canal ran fifteen miles from its source to the coastal city of Caesarea. Water for Jerusalem was carried northward through an elaborate series of canals and pools from the Bethlehem area. Along the Dead Sea, where rain seldom fell, communities with elaborate canals and catchponds thrived by capturing the runoff of rains that fell in the hill country and drained towards the Jordan Valley. Cities in the Negev developed an extensive network of dams to collect infrequent rains, allowing them to turn the desert into thriving orchards and wheat fields. David Maltsberger

Ancient water wheel used to irrigate farmland with water from the nearby Nile River.

IRSHEMESH (Ĭr shē′ mĕsh) Place name meaning, "city of the sun." Town in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:41) on the border of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:10, called Beth-shemesh or house of the sun). See Beth-shemesh.

IRU (Ī′ rū) Personal name meaning, "donkey's colt" or "they protect." Son of Caleb (1 Chron. 4:15). Many Bible students think the original text read Ir, a copyist joining the final u to the name when it should have been the first letter of the following word, meaning, "and."

ISAAC (Ī′ ṣāāc) Personal name meaning "laughter." Only son of Abraham by Sarah and a patriarch of the nation of Israel.

Old Testament Isaac was the child of a promise from God, born when Abraham was 100 years old and Sarah was 90 (Gen. 17:17; 21:5). Isaac means "he laughs" and reflects his parents' unbelieving laughter regarding the promise (Gen. 17:17–19; 18:11–15) as well as their joy in its fulfillment (Gen. 21:1–7). Sarah wanted Hagar and Ishmael banished. God directed Abraham to comply, saying that it would be through Isaac that his descendants would be reckoned (Gen. 21:8–13; compare Rom. 9:7). Abraham's test of faith was God's command to sacrifice Isaac (Gen. 22:1–19).

Isaac married Rebekah (Gen. 24), who bore him twin sons, Esau and Jacob (Gen. 25:21–28). Isaac passed her off as a sister at Gerar (as Abraham had done). He became quite prosperous, later moving to Beersheba (Gen. 26). Isaac was deceived into giving Jacob his blessing and priority over Esau (Gen. 27). Isaac died at Mamre near Hebron at the age of 180 and was buried by his sons (Gen. 35:27–29).

Though less significant than Abraham and Jacob, Isaac was revered as one of the Israelite patriarchs (Ex. 3:6; 1 Kings 18:36; Jer. 33:26). Amos used the name Isaac as a poetic expression for the nation of Israel (Amos 7:9,16).

New Testament In the New Testament Isaac appears in the genealogies of Jesus (Matt. 1:2; Luke 3:34), as one of the three great patriarchs (Matt. 8:11; Luke 13:28; Acts 3:13), and an example of faith (Heb. 11:20). Isaac's sacrifice by Abraham (Heb. 11:17–18; Jas. 2:21), in which he was obedient to the point of death, serves as a type looking forward to Christ and as an example for Christians. Paul reminded believers that "we, brethren, as Isaac, are the children of promise" (Gal. 4:28). Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

ISAIAH (Ī ṣai′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh saves." Prophet active in Judah about 740 to 701 B.C.

The Historical Background Isaiah's ministry spanned the period from his call vision (about 740 B.C.) until the last years of Hezekiah (716–687) or the early years of Manasseh (687–642). The prophet lived during the reigns of the Judean kings Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, and perhaps the first years of Manasseh. He was contemporary with the last four kings of Israel: Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah, and Hoshea. The tragic fall of Samaria to the Assyrian King Sargon II in 722 B.C. occurred during his ministry.

In northwest Mesopotamia, the energetic monarch Tiglath-pileser III (745–727) founded the mighty Assyrian Empire. A series of vigorous successors succeeded him: Shalmaneser V (726–722), Sargon II (721–705), Sennacherib (704–681), and Esarhaddon (680–669). With Ashurbanipal (668–627) the empire began to crumble and ultimately fell to the Babylonians in 612–609 under the command of Nabopolassar (625–585).

During this same period Egypt experienced a resurgence of power in the 25th Dynasty (about 716–663) and occasioned international intrigue among the Palestinian states to overthrow Assyria. The petty states of Palestine—Syria, Philistia, Moab, Edom, Ammon, Arabia, Tyre, Israel, and Judah—were ultimately conquered or made tributary to Assyria. With strong feelings of nationalism these states fomented rebellion and duplicity, a world of intrigue born of political and economic frustrations. In this era Isaiah exercised his prophetic ministry, a large part of which was politically involved with Judah and to a lesser extent Israel. He advocated policies of state in line with the religious creed of authentic prophetism.

Personal Life of Isaiah Isaiah, the son of Amoz, was born in Judah, no doubt in Jerusalem, about 760 B.C. He enjoyed a significant position in the contemporary society and had a close relationship with the reigning monarchs. His education is clearly evident in his superb writing that has gained him an eminence in Hebrew literature hardly surpassed by any other. He had a thorough grasp of political history and dared to voice unpopular minority views regarding the state and the economy. His knowledge of the religious heritage of Israel and his unique theological contributions inspire awe. He was alive to what was transpiring in the court, in the marketplace, in high society with its shallowness, and in the political frustrations of the nation.

Isaiah was called to be a prophet of Yahweh in striking visions which he experienced in the Temple about 740 B.C., the year that the aged Judean king Uzziah died (Isa. 6). The elements in that vision forecast the major themes of his preaching, particularly the transcendent nature of Yahweh, which may serve as a modern translation of Hebraic "holiness." God warned him that his ministry would meet with disappointment and meager results but also assured him that forgiveness would ever attend the penitent (Isa. 6:5–7; 1:19–20) and that the ultimate promises of God would be realized (Isa.6:13*d*).

The prophet was married and was the father of two sons whose names symbolized Isaiah's public preaching: Mahershalalhashbaz (= the spoil speeds; the prey hastes), a conviction that Assyria would invade Syria and Israel about 734 B.C., and Sherajashub (a remnant shall return), a name that publicized his belief in the survival and conversion of a faithful remnant in Israel (Isa.1:9; 7:3; 8:1,4; 10:20–23).

During the dark days when the Assyrians took over one Palestinian state after another, Isaiah firmly contended that the Judean monarchs ought to remain as neutral as possible, to refrain from rebellious acts, and to pay tribute. When the Israelites and Syrians jointly attacked Judah for refusing to join the anti-Assyrian coalition (Isa.7:1–9; 8:1–15), he deplored the dangerous policy of purchasing protection from the Assyrians. In 711 B.C. when the city of Ashdod rebelled against Assyria, Isaiah assumed the garb of a captive for three years calling on Hezekiah not to take the fatal step of joining the rebellion. No doubt he was instrumental in influencing Hezekiah to reject the seditious plot (Isa.20:1–6). That same resolute policy assured Isaiah that Jerusalem would not fall to Sennacherib in 701 B.C. despite the ominous outlook the Assyrian envoys forecast (Isa. 36—37). Isaiah soundly castigated Hezekiah for entertaining the seditious Babylonian princelet whose real purpose was to secure military aid for a rebellion in south Babylonia in an effort to overthrow Sennacherib (Isa. 39).

Literary and Theological Pronouncements Israel made no clear separation of church and state; accordingly most of the utterances of Isaiah are religious and political in character in spite of their literary diversity. Underlying his conceptual world was his inaugural vision: Yahweh was the ultimate King; His nature was infinite holiness or transcendence; His holiness manifested itself in righteousness (Isa. 5:16). Yahweh was the electing, endowing, forgiving God, possessing plans and purposes for His servant Israel by which they might secure the Abrahamic promise of world blessedness. The vision of Isaiah indicated the resistance this program would encounter but concluded with the certainty of its performance.

With this theological perspective Isaiah inveighed against the errant nation of Judah (Isa.1:2–9; 2:6–22; 3:1—4:1) even using the guise of a love song (5:1–7). He pronounced six "woes" on the immoral nation. His wrath also attacked Israel (Isa. 9:8–21; 28:1–29). Among other travesties, Judah was rebellious, evil, iniquitous, alienated, corrupters, a sick people, unfilial in attitude, purposeless in their excessive religiosity, idolaters, proud ones whose land was filled with esoteric charlatans, brass in their defection, thankless and unappreciative, drunkards, monoplists of real estate, wise in their own eyes, morally indiscriminate. The character of true religion was absent; they needed to desist from evil, to learn to do good, to seek justice, correct oppression, defend the fatherless, plead for the widow (Isa. 1:17).

Though the indictments were severe, Isaiah still held out the hope of forgiveness to the penitent (Isa.1:18–31) and pointed to days coming when God would establish peace (Isa. 2:1–4; 4:2–6). He promised the Messiah, the son of David, who would assume the chief role in the fulfillment of the Abrahamic-Davidic covenantal promises (Isa. 9:2–7; 11:1–9).

Isaiah is remembered for his magnificent conception of God. The thrice-repeated term "holy" is equivalent to holiness to the nth or infinite degree (6:3). Yahweh is Lord of all, King of the universe, the Lord of history who exhibits His character in righteousness, that is, in self-consistent acts of rightness (Isa. 5:16). The prophet criticized the vanity and meaninglessness of religion's pride. He demanded social and religious righteousness practiced in humility and faith. He strongly affirmed God's plans that would not lack fulfillment, announcing that the Assyrian king was but the instrument of God and accountable to Him. He stressed, too, the Day of Yahweh, a time when the presence of God would be readily discoverable in human history. Isaiah was certain that a faithful remnant would always carry on the divine mission (Shearjashub, Isa.1:9). The messianic hope was considered the blueprint of history fulfilled, the hope of humankind toward which all creation moves.

The Disciples of Isaiah During the ministry of Isaiah when the Judeans discounted his stern warnings, he ordered that his "testimony" and "teaching" be bound and sealed—no doubt in a scroll—and committed to his disciples until history proved his words true (Isa. 8:16). Most people did not accept Isaiah's message, but he had disciples who did. They formed the backbone of a prophetic party in Judah who preserved his writings, sustained his political and religious power so that he had access to the person of the king, and arranged the final form of his preaching in written form as can be seen by constant referral to the prophet in third person rather than first.

In Isaiah's time the great military power that threatened the Palestinian states was Assyria. In much of the book that now bears the name of Isaiah, the reigning power was Babylon, which did not rise to power until after 625 B.C., over 50 years after Isaiah's death. Some Bible students think that the writings that reflect the Babylonian period may be the work of the disciples of Isaiah, who projected his thought into the new and changed situation of the Babylonian world. Others would say in the Spirit Isaiah was projected supernaturally into the future, thus able to know even the name of Cyrus, King of Persia (44:28; 45:1).

The Prophetic Critique of Foreign Affairs Israel's prophets such as Amos, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Isaiah devoted considerable attention to political pronouncements regarding foreign nations. Those thus singled out included Babylon (Isa. 13—14), Moab (Is. 15—16), Damascus (Isa. 17:1–14), Ethiopia (Isa. 18), Egypt (Isa. 19—20), and Tyre (Isa. 23). The importance of these prophetic utterances are historical, though political and religious principles can be profitably drawn from them.

Every national capital hosted embassies of other friendly nations with their diplomatic staffs. Such visiting ambassadors were responsible to their home governments to report the relevant news. These prophetic speeches to the nations proved significant in that they represented a strong minority group feeling, the religious and political thought of a traditional Yahwistic block with strong backing from the right wing of the government. The speeches of Isaiah or his disciples would be relayed to the foreign capitals as a significant utterance on foreign affairs. They also informed God's people of His world plans, giving encouragement of final victory.

The "Little Apocalypse" (Isa. 24—27) Midway between prophetic prediction and apocalypticism are these four chapters. Apocalypticism is an expressive term which denotes the unveiling of the future. Portions of Ezekiel, Joel, and Daniel are written in this style marked by cosmological orientation, proximate pessimism, symbolism with few historical allusions, suprahistorical perspective—that is, the future was so bewildering and the events so vaguely perceived that the writer penned his forecast in the symbolic language of faith, pointing to a resolution of world history. In Isaiah 24—27 two opposing forces were pitted in conflict: they were presented as two cities. In the tension of history when the city of chaos triumphs, the city of God laments; when it suffers defeat, the city of God breaks forth into song. Some four hymns are in Isaiah 24—27. Ultimately, the kingdom of God is victorious with such blessing as the removal of national hatred, the overcoming of sorrow, the overcoming of death, the resurrection, in short, the resolution of history as the kingdom of God.

A Collection of Prophetic Oracles (Isa. 28—35) Since five in this series of prophecies commence with an introductory "woe," it suggests that much of this block of materials will be negative in its criticism. Thus in Isaiah 28 the inebriated aristocracy of Israel failed to discern the fading flower of their nation; and they were supported in their dereliction by the priests and prophets. Indeed, they mimicked sarcastically Isaiah's plain speech as childish prattle, to which he retorted that if they did not understand simple Hebrew, Yahweh would speak to them in Assyrian! Yet, those that trusted in God stood on a firm foundation, a foundation laid in righteousness and justice. It alone would stand (Isa. 28:16–22).

Isaiah 29—35 are largely directed to Judah; elements of severe censure are often followed by oracles of comfort. The Judeans were reproved for their rejection of the authentic voice of prophecy, their defiant atheism, their meaningless parade of religion, their rebellious plotting with the Egyptians, and their buildup of the military. Such passages as Isaiah 28:5–6; 29:5–8,17–24; 30:18–33; 31:4–9; 32:1–5,8,15–20; 33:2–6,17–24 contrast with these passages. The conclusion of this segment includes the juxtaposition of a negative oracle against Edom, here symbolic of evil, with a paradisiacal contrast involving Israel (Isa. 34—35). Much like the theme of Isaiah 24—27, it forecasted the ultimate fulfillment of divine purposes in history.

The Historical Appendage With the exception of Isaiah 38:9–21, an original thanksgiving song of Hezekiah after a severe illness, the rest of Isaiah 36—39 duplicates 2 Kings 18:13—20:19. A similar insertion of historical materials from the Book of Kings (2 Kings 24:18—25:30) concludes the Book of Jeremiah. (Jer. 52). It provides the reader of the prophet with an historical background for the understanding of the book.

The Book of Consolation (Isa. 40—55) Its Historical Background. The setting of these chapters is incontestably that of the later years of the Babylonian Exile when Cyrus (Isa. 44:28; 45:1) was beginning his conquests which would ultimately overthrow the Babylonian power (550 B.C.). The city of Jerusalem and its Temple had been destroyed by the Babylonians in 587 B.C., and a considerable segment of the upper classes had been forcibly exiled to Babylon. The writer hailed Cyrus as the shepherd of Yahweh who would build Jerusalem and set the exiles free (Isa. 44:26—45:1). For some forty years the Judeans had lived as hostages in a strange land; they were discouraged by the seeming unimprovable situation. Was it their unforgivable guilt; had God forgotten them? The stunning victory of Cyrus over the mighty Babylonian power (538 B.C.) and his decree of liberation for the Jewish exiles were events too joyous to recount. But what of the long, arduous journey through the desert with its multiplied dangers? The prophetic voice assured the exiles that God would prepare a level highway for their journey, provide for their sustenance, and lead them back to their homeland (Isa. 40). The exiles were assured of divine pardon, comforted in every major problem area, and promised the restoration of Zion and its Temple.

Its Literary Structure. The prophetic voice of chapters 40—55 affirmed the purpose of God in the dark days of the Babylonian Exile. Most of the chapters articulate the various theological affirmations designed to comfort, challenge, and advise the hostage people. However, arising from the messages of comfort and dialogue are four so-called Servant Songs (Isa. 42:1–4; 49:1–6; 50:4–9; and 52:13—53:12). These songs reiterate the role of Israel as the chosen servant of God, the nation that would evangelize all nations, whose endowment by the Spirit would provide the enablement for that mission and the concomitant suffering attendant the people of God addressing a sinful society, and the ultimate success of the divine mission by his faithful servants. There can be no doubt but that the authentic Israel was the servant the prophet had in mind (Isa. 49:3). While these songs unquestionably identify the Suffering Servant as the godly in Israel, they find their ultimate fulfillment in the life, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world. The cross-bearing Christian church (Gal. 6:14–16) carries on the Servant's mission.

The religious affirmation of Isaiah 40—55. The overwhelming majesty of these chapters have ever impressed the faithful with its sublime consolation. Against the gloom of Exile, the prophet portrayed the One Sovereign God, Creator, incomparable, unfailing, the Lord of history. What a sorry contrast was the Babylonian idolatry with its vaunted pretensions (Isa. 46—47).

The prophetic announcement disclosed the movement of God in history—the Exile was over. The Persians were about to take over the Babylonian power; they would be trustworthy and friendly to the exiles. The difficulties of the journey would be provided for by the God who programmed the Exodus and would once more duplicate that performance in the release of the exiles from Babylonian tyranny. It was Yahweh who had stirred up Cyrus, and through him His purpose would be secured. Assured of divine forgiveness and comforted in their grief, the exiles were exhorted to identify with their ancient role in the blessing of the earth's population through the dissemination of the religion through which the world would be blessed (Gen. 12:3). The Servant Songs were the blueprint for Israel's devotion and adherence—to love, to serve, to suffer, to teach the knowledge of God for the salvation of humankind.

The Concluding Prophetic Oracles (Isa. 56—66) Its Historical Setting. Here is a change of venue from Isaiah 40—55; no longer was Babylon the focus; Palestine was, with the Temple restored and sacrifice and worship being conducted. Many scholars place this collection sometime around 460 B.C. and attribute the diverse fields of interest, style, and religious affirmation to prophetic voices of this period addressing themselves to major issues of their day. Others think God transported the eighth century prophet into the fifth century setting.

Its Literary Structure. The subjects handled in this section include an oracle on sabbath keeping (Isa. 56:1–8), censure of civil and religious leaders (56:9—57:12), an analysis of the meaning of fasting (ch. 58), the dilemma of the unfulfilled divine promises (ch. 59), hopeful encouragement to be anticipated (chs. 60—64), the grievous sin of Judah and the blessedness of the righteous remnant (ch. 65), and brief fragments on a number of subjects (ch. 66).

Its Theological Affirmation. This portion of inspired Scripture contains some very remarkable and advanced concepts. It places the reader in the midst of a discordant community where the righteous struggle against their powerful opponents. It censures the moral depravity of rulers, of those who succumb to pagan practices, of those who practice external rites without true identification with their meaning. A most interesting affirmation regards foreigners and eunuchs (56:3–7), they would no longer be excluded from the Temple worship. This injected grace and hope into the law of Deuteronomy 23:1. Other choice verses praise humility (Isa. 66:1–2), announce the new heaven and the new earth (Isa. 66:22); and report the anointing by the Spirit (Isa. 61:1–4). This remarkable conclusion to the Book of Isaiah discloses the struggles and aspirations of the post-exilic community. Without it we should be impoverished in our knowledge of that period.

Outline

I. God Knows His Peoples' Sins But Calls Them Back to Himself (1:1—12:6).
   A. Though your sins are many, forgiveness is possible (1:1—5:30).
   B. People need God, but God also needs people to call His people (6:1–13).
   C. National leaders may refuse God's help (7:1—8:15).
   D. Waiting for God to act is part of serving Him (8:16–22).
   E. With God the future is bright (9:1–7).
   F. Fallen nations teach lessons (9:8—10:4).
   G. Pride destroys individuals and nations (10:5–19).
   H. God can do His work with a righteous few (10:20–23).
   I. Faith in God conquers fear of all else (10:24–34).
   J. An ideal age is a human dream, but a divine accomplishment (11:1–16).
   K. Anytime is the right time for thanksgiving (12:1–6).

II. God's Sovereignty Extends to All Nations Whether Acknowledged or Not (13:1—23:18).

A. God's judgment is real (13:1—21:17).
B. God's judgment is impartial (22:1—23:18).

III. God's Triumph Over Evil Means Deliverance for His People (24:1—27:13).
A. God's judgment time is a time of mourning and singing (24:1–23).
B. God's judgment time is a time of thanksgiving (25:1–12).
C. God's judgment time is a time of victory (26:1–27:13).

IV. God's People Must Be Different (28:1–39:8).
A. Tragedy strikes when leaders fail (28:1—29:4).
B. The power of God overshadows the power of nations (30:1—35:10).
C. A triumphant faith is a faith that will not let go (36:1—39:8).

V. God's Word for His Confused People (40:1—55:13).
A. God comes to His people when judgment has passed (40:1–31).
B. God holds His people by the hand (41:1–29).
C. Send the light of truth to those in darkness (42:1–25).
D. God alone is Savior of His people (43:1–28).
E. Homemade gods can never save (44:1–28).
F. God may use an unbeliever (45:1–25).
G. False gods make life's load heavier (46:1–13).
H. Ruin follows wickedness as night follows day (47:1–15).
I. Let the redeemed of the Lord proclaim it (48:1—52:15).
J. Healing comes to many through the suffering of One (53:1–12).
K. God keeps His promises (54:1–17).
L. God's finest invitation: Return to Me (55:1–13).

VI. God's Word to His Imperfect People (56:1—66:24).
A. Salvation is for all people (56:1–12).
B. Idolatry is an ever present temptation (57:1–21).
C. Worship and right living are inseparable (58:1–14).
D. Repentance brings reconciliation with God (59:1–21).
E. Light from God brings life (60:1—62:12).
F. Prayer brings God's help (63:1—65:25).
G. Judgment and deliverance are rights of God alone (66:1–24). Edward Dalglish

ISAIAH, MARTYRDOM OF A Jewish narrative elaborating the sins of Manasseh (2 Kings 21:16). The original was probably written in Hebrew or Aramaic and then translated into Greek in the pre-Christian era or perhaps in the first or early second century A.D. The narrative concerns Isaiah who makes predictions concerning the evil deeds of Manasseh. An evil priest offers Isaiah freedom if he will retract his prophecies of judgment. Empowered by God's Spirit, Isaiah resists and suffers martyrdom by being sawn in two. Hebrews 11:37 is a likely allusion to such a tradition of the faithfulness and martyrdom of Isaiah. Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and the Talmud are similarly aware of such a tradition. The familiarity of Origin (about A.D. 225) and IV Baruch (about A.D. 200) with details of the tradition suggests their dependence on the Martydom of Isaiah. See Pseudepigrapha.

ISCAH (Ĭs′ cah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "they look." Daughter of Haran and sister of Milcah (Nahor's wife) and Lot. Thus she was an intimate part of the ancestral family of Abraham (Gen. 11:29). Tradition has tried to make Iscah another name for Sarah or to say she was Lot's wife. No biblical information gives foundation for such late interpretations.

ISCARIOT (Ĭs cär′ ĭ ot) Personal name transliterated from Hebrew into Greek and meaning, "man of Kerioth"; or perhaps a name derived from Latin and meaning, "assassin" or "bandit." Surname of both the disciple Judas who betrayed Jesus (Mark 3:19) and of his father Simon (John 6:71). If bandit is the meaning of the name, Judas and his father may have been members of a patriotic party, the Zealots. "Man of Kerioth" is probably the meaning of the surname, referring to town of Kerioth. See Judas; Kerioth.

ISH-BOSHETH (Ĭsh-bō′ shĕth) Personal name meaning "man of shame." Son of Saul and his successor as king of Israel (2 Sam. 2:8). After Saul's death, Abner the commander of Saul's army proclaimed Ish-bosheth king. He reigned for two years. He was finally murdered by his own captains (2 Sam. 4:1–7). The name Ish-bosheth means "man of shame." Originally his name was Ish-baal (1 Chron. 8:33), which means "man of Baal." The repugnance with which Baal worship was regarded by the faithful in Israel frequently led to the substitution of the word for shame in the place of the name of the Canaanite deity. See Saul.

ISHBAH (Ĭsh′ bah) Personal name meaning, "he soothes." Member of tribe of Judah known as father of town of Eshtemoa (1 Chron. 4:17).

ISHBAK (Ĭsh′ băk) Personal name meaning, "come before, excel." Son of Abraham and Keturah (Gen. 25:2). May be the same as Yasbuq in Assyrian sources and refers to a tribal ancestor of a tribe in northern Syria.

ISHBIBENOB (Ĭsh′ bī bē nŏb) Personal name meaning, "inhabitant of Nob." See Nob. Philistine who tried to kill David in battle (2 Sam. 21:16–17). He is described literally as "who (was) among the children of the Raphah." Traditionally, this has been connected with the Rephaim and translated "giant" (KJV, TEV, NAS, REB, NRSV). NIV translates literally, "the descendants of Rapha." Some Bible students interpret this as being an elite group of warriors under a vow to the god Rapha. Or it may mean, "the men of the scimitar" or sword. Other Bible students use Greek manuscript evidence to replace the unusual name Ishbibenob with another—Dodo son of Joash—but this is a drastic solution. Another solution changes the text to read the name as a verb meaning, "they camped in Nob," leaving the soldier unnamed. The soldier Ishbibenob was killed by David's faithful soldier Abishai.

ISHHOD (Ĭsh′ hŏd) Personal name meaning, "man of vigor and vitality." Member of tribe of Manasseh east of the Jordan (1 Chron. 7:18).

ISHI (Ĭsh′ ī) Personal name meaning, "my deliverer or salvation." 1. Descendant of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:31). 2. Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20). 3. Father of military leaders of tribe of Simeon who successfully fought the Amalekites (1 Chron. 4:42). 4. Clan leader in tribe of Manasseh east of the Jordan (1 Chron. 5:24). 5. Transliteration of Hosea's wordplay between "my man" or "my husband" (Hebrew, ishi) and "my master" or "my lord" (Hebrew, baali) (Hos. 2:16 KJV, NAS). Hosea looked to the day when Israel would quit worshiping or even pronouncing the name of Baal and would be totally faithful to Yahweh as "her man" and "her master."

ISHIAH (Ĭsh ī′ ah) KJV spelling of Isshiah (I Chron. 7:3). See Isshiah.

ISHIJAH (Ĭsh ī′ jah) KJV, NIV spelling of Isshijah. See Isshijah.

ISHMA (Ĭsh′ mȧ) Short form of Ishmael meaning. "God hears." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:3).

ISHMAEL (Ĭsh′ mā el) Personal name meaning "God hears." Son of Abraham by the Egyptian concubine Hagar (Gen. 16:11). He became the progenitor of the Ishmaelite peoples. The description in Genesis 16:12 points to an unruly and misanthropic disposition. Ishmael and his mother were expelled from the camp of Abraham at the insistence of Sarah following the birth of Sarah's son Isaac. The boy was near death in the wilderness when the angel of God directed Hagar to a well. Genesis 21:20 explains that God was with Ishmael, and that he became an archer. See Abraham; Patriarchs.

ISHMAELITE (Ĭsh′ mā ĕl īte) Tribal name for descendants of Ishmael. According to Genesis 25:12–16, Ishmael was the father of twelve sons. The Ishmaelites were regarded as an ethnic group, generally referring to the nomadic tribes of northern Arabia. The Ishmaelites were not, however, exclusively associated with any geographic area. References to them in the Old Testament are relatively few. The people to whom Joseph was sold by his brothers are called Ishmaelites in Genesis 37:25. See Ishmael; Abraham.

ISHMAIAH (Ĭsh mâ′ ah) Long and short form of personal name meaning, "Yah(weh) hears." 1. Military hero from Gibeon in charge of David's select "thirty" warriors (1 Chron. 12:4), though he is not listed among the "thirty" in 2 Samuel 23 or 1 Chronicles 11. He does illustrate early support for David from Saul's tribe of Benjamin. 2. Head of tribe of Zebulun under David (1 Chron. 27:19).

ISHMERAI (Ĭsh′ mĕ râ) Short form of personal name meaning, "Yah protects." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:18).

ISHOD (Ī′ shŏd) KJV spelling of Ishhod. See Ishhod.

ISHPAH (Ĭsh′ pah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "baldhead." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:16).

ISHPAN (Ĭsh′ păn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:22).

ISHTAR A Mesopotamian goddess of fertility and war. In her role as goddess of fertility, Ishtar was associated with Tammuz, the god of vegetation. Ishtar was sometimes identified with the planet Venus and was designated "Mistress of Heaven" in the Amarna tablets. The goddess is perhaps the "Queen of heaven" of Jeremiah 7:18; 44:17–19,25; Ezekiel 8:14. See Fertility Cults; Astarte; Tammuz; Babylon.

ISHTOB (Ĭsh′ tŏb) Personal name meaning, "man of good" or "man of Tob." KJV follows early translations in interpreting this as a proper name (2 Sam. 10:6,8). The standard Hebrew manuscript apparently has two words, indicating a common noun phrase. Thus most modern translations read "men from Tob." A manuscript from the Dead Sea Scrolls has Ishtob as one word and thus as a proper name; but modern Bible students still generally follow the standard manuscript rather than the older Dead Sea Scroll. "Man of Tob" could also refer to the ruler of Tob. See Tob.

ISHUAH (Ĭsh′ ū ah) KJV spelling of Ishvah (Gen. 46:17). See Ishvah.

ISHUAI (Ĭsh′ ū ā̂i) KJV spelling of Ishvi in 1 Chronicles 7:30. See Ishvi.

ISHUI (Ĭsh′ ū ī) KJV spelling of Ishvi (Gen. 46:17). See Ishvi.

ISHVAH (Ĭsh′ vah) Personal name meaning, "he is equal" or "he satisfies." Son of Asher (Gen. 46:17). He is not named in Numbers 26:44, leading some scholars to think that a copyist duplicated the following name Ishvi with a minor variation. KJV read the text with different vowel points than the standard Hebrew manuscript, spelling the name Ishuah.

ISHVI (Ĭsh′ vī) Personal name meaning, "he is equal," "he satisfies," or "he rules." Son of Asher (Gen. 46:17) and original clan ancestor of Ishvites (Num. 26:44).

ISHVITE (Ĭsh′ vīte) See Ishvi.

ISHYO REB spelling of Ishui: (1 Sam. 14:49). See Ishui; Ishvi.

ISLAND Tract of land surrounded by water. Modern translations sometimes replace the island or isle of the KJV with the terms coast, coastline, or coastland (compare Gen. 10:5; Esther 10:1; Ps. 97:1; Isa. 11:11; Jer. 2:10). "Islands" frequently appears in parallel to peoples/nations (Isa. 41:1; 51:5; 66:19; Jer. 31:10) and to the earth (Isa. 42:4). Often the idea of distant peoples and places is stressed by the parallelism (Isa. 41:5; 49:1). The Hebrews were not a seafaring people and so easily equated the Mediterranean islands with the ends of the earth.

Scripture mentions many islands by name: Arvad (Ezek. 27:8,11) is an island two miles offshore from northern Phoenicia. Clauda or Cauda (NRSV) is a small island off Crete (Acts 27:16). Chios (Acts 20:15) is an island off the coast of Ionia. Coos or Cos (Acts 21:1 NIV) is an island 50 miles northwest of Rhodes. Crete (the Old Testament Caphtor, Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7) is an island 152 miles long located to the southeast of Greece (Titus 1:5, 12). Cyprus (home of the Old Testament Chittim, Jer. 2:10; Ezek. 27:6) is an island 75 miles long located toward the eastern end of the Mediterranean (Acts 4:36; 11:19–20 among others). Melita or Malta (NAS) is an island located 50 miles southwest of Sicily (Acts 27:39—28:10). Patmos is an island off the coast of Ionia west of Samos (Rev. 1:9). Rhodes is an island southwest of Asia Minor (Acts 21:1). Samos is an island located off the Ionian coast twelve miles southwest of Ephesus (Acts 20:15). Sardinia is a western Mediterranean island south of Corsica. Tyre (Ezek. 26:2) was a famous Phoenician island city.

ISMACHIAH (Ĭs mā̆ chī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh supports." Priest and administrator in the Temple under Cononiah and Shimei when Hezekiah was king of Judah (2 Chron. 31:13).

ISMAIAH (Ĭs mā′ iah) KJV spelling of Ishmaiah. See Ishmaiah.

ISMAKIAH (Ĭs mā̆ kī′ ah) NIV spelling of Ismachiah. See Ismachiah.

ISPAH (Ĭs′ pah) KJV spelling of Ishpah. See Ishpah.

ISRAEL (Ĭṣ′ rā ĕl) Name of Northern Kingdom after Jeroboam led the northern tribes to separate from the southern tribes and form a separate kingdom (1 Kings 12).

ISRAEL (Ĭṣ′ rā ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God strives," "God rules," "God heals," or "he strives against God." Name God gave Jacob after he wrestled with the divine messenger (Gen. 32:28). Afterwards, Jacob was a changed person, limping on a damaged thigh, with new food regulations, and with a new experience of God that influenced the way he lived. His twelve sons became known as the "sons of Israel," and the resulting nation became the nation of Israel. Thus Jacob's experience at the Jabbok became the foundation for the nation of God's chosen people.

ISRAEL, HISTORY OF Chronological Outline

The Preexilic Period
The Patriarchal Period	2000–1720*
The Egyptian Period	1720–1290
The Exodus and the Wilderness Sojourn	1290–1250
The Settlement	1250–1020
The United Monarchy	1020– 922
The Divided Monarchy	922– 587
The Kingdom of Israel	922– 721
The Kingdom of Judah	922– 587
The Babylonian Exile	597/587–539/538
The Postexilic Period
The Persian Period	539– 331
The Hellenistic Period	331– 168
The Maccabean Period	168– 63
The Roman Period	63–400 A.D.

*All dates will be assumed to be B.C. unless otherwise designated. The careful interpreter cautiously suggests a dating schema given the many uncertainties. This outline is one of several academically acceptable. See Chronology for dating alternatives to those used in this article.

THE PREEXILIC PERIOD

1. The Patriarchal and Egyptian Periods (Genesis 12—50) Israel's roots derive from the Mesopotamian Valley. Father Abraham was associated with Ur in the southern Mesopotamian Valley. About 2000, responding to a divine command, he began a journey with his tribe which took him initially from Ur to Haran. While at Haran, Abraham's father, Terah, died, and a brother, Nahor, decided to settle at Haran. Abraham and his wife, Sarah, however, traveled onward to Canaan, where ultimately they established their home. To them was born Isaac, the son of promise, who was married to Rebekah, granddaughter of Nahor. To Isaac and Rebekah were born Jacob and Esau. Jacob, having made his way back to the region of Haran, married both Leah and Rachel, daughters of Laban, the brother of Rebekah. To Jacob and his wives were born twelve sons, who, having migrated to Egypt, became the foundation for the twelve tribes and for fulfillment of the promises originally made to Abraham. It was these tribal descendents with whom Moses was associated in the Exodus from Egypt in 1290.

2. The Exodus and the Wilderness Sojourn (Exodus 1—24; 32—34; Numbers 10—14) Israel is a product of the Sinaitic experience, begun when God called the "renegade" Moses to return to Egypt and deliver His people. Moving from Goshen in Egypt through God's leadership in the miracle at the sea to the Sinai peninsula under Moses' leadership, the Hebrews at Sinai ratified a covenant with the God Yahweh (Ex. 24), and thus Israel as a landless people came into being.

For a period of eleven months they remained at Sinai. Traditionally, it is understood that the Torah was formulated during this period, although historical criticism postulates a longer period of development. Regardless, Israel departed Sinai as a covenant people who would continually struggle with God.

The wilderness experience is set at forty years, the designation often used to indicate a generation. Through this period the generation that departed Egypt died, Yahweh's judgment upon them because they refused to believe that the God of deliverance could also lead them into Canaan.

3. The Settlement (Joshua 1—24; Judges 1—16) Eventually, however, they entered Canaan via the tranjordanian area. Under the leadership of Joshua, they crossed the Jordan River and entered the "Promised Land" at Jericho. The Book of Joshua records the settlement of the Israelites into Canaan, first in mid-country, then in the south, and finally in the north. Joshua distributed the land among the tribes and renewed the Covenant (Josh. 24).

For a period of approximately two centuries, the Israelites were centrally joined as autonomous tribes around the ark of the covenant, a loose relationship centering in common worship commitments. Over them divinely designated Judges emerged, men like Gideon and Samson, and one woman, Deborah. Gradually, any sense of unity broke down until "every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judg. 21:25).

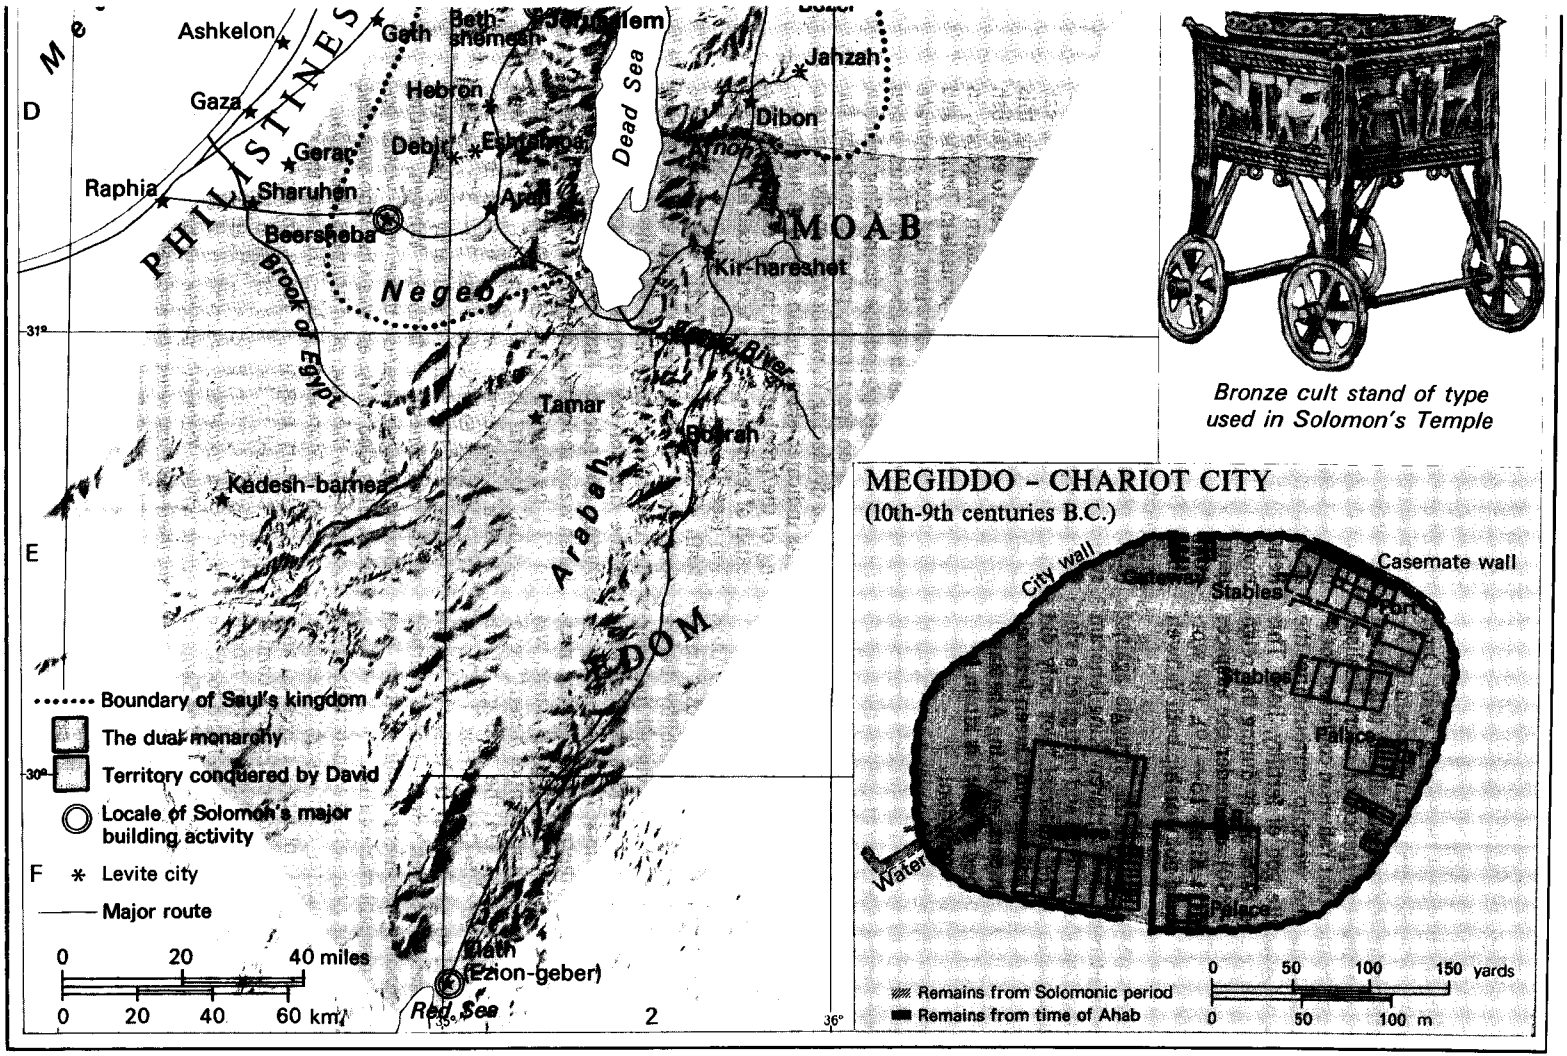
4. The United Monarchy (1 Samuel 1—3; 8—15; 2 Samuel 1—6; 9—20; 1 Kings 1—4; 6—8; 11) The period of the Judges presented problems for the Israelites, however, in that they could not assert centralized economic, political, or military strength in this disjointed condition. This situation, plus other factors such as the emergence of the Philistine threat, caused a clamoring for the establishment of kingship. Thus, about 1020, the Israelites moved politically into a monarchy.

Saul (1020–1000) was Israel's first king, although he often acted more as a Judge. Like the Judges, he understood himself designated by God to rule because of having received the Spirit of God. He fought valiantly against the Philistines, dying ultimately in the struggle. More importantly, he helped to pave the way for David, who fully lifted the nation into monarchical status.

David (1000–965) is credited with uniting the people, however tenuous that relationship (2 Sam. 5:4–5); and he lifted Israel to the full flower of monarchical establishment. Having united the north and the south, he established Jerusalem as the capital of the kingdom, contained the Philistines, expanded Israel's borders and her trade, and established a monarchical line that ruled in uninterrupted fashion, save one exception (Athaliah, 842–837), until the fall of Judah to Babylonia in 587.

David's son and successor was Solomon (965–922). Solomon inherited all that David had amassed, but he was able neither to build upon nor to maintain David's kingdom. He did temporarily intensify trade, but he is remembered primarily for building the Temple in Jerusalem. Nonetheless, when Solomon died, his legacy was a division in the kingdom, so that, henceforth, we speak of Israel in the north and Judah in the south.

5. The Divided Monarchy (1—2 Kings; Amos; Hosea; Isaiah 1—39; Micah; Jeremiah) The north was contextually tied into international politics more than was the south, in part because the primary east-west trade route traversed Israel at the Valley of Jezreel. Israel was both the larger country and the more populous area. Her involvement in the larger world of nations meant that Israel was destined to fall politically more quickly than Judah. Israel fell to Assyria in 721, while Judah was conquered by Babylonia initially in 597.



Israel emerged as a separate power under Jeroboam I (922–901 B.C.), the initial king over what became a rather turbulent nation. Nineteen kings ruled during the country's two centuries of existence, and coup attempts brought eight succession crises. Jeroboam is most remembered, however, for his establishment of rival shrines at Dan and Bethel (1 Kings 12). These shrines were in the form of bull images and were constructed as a

© carta

THE KINGDOM OF DAVID AND SOLOMON

King Ahiram of Byblos

Bronze cult stand of type used in Solomon's Temple

MEGIDDO - CHARIOT CITY

(10th-9th centuries B.C.)

conscious attempt to compete with Solomon's Temple in Jerusalem.

During the ninth century the Omride dynasty was established in Israel, beginning with Omri (876–869) and concluding with Jehoram (849–842). Perhaps the central issue during this period resulted from the emergence of overt Baalism with the clarification that Yahwism could not coexist with Baalism, the worship surrounding the indigenous Canaanite god of fertility, Baal. This issue was addressed particularly during the reign of King Ahab (869–850) and under the auspices of the prophet Elijah (1 Kings 18—19). The worshiper of Yahweh could not worship both Yahweh and Baal.

Jehu (842–815) took up the struggle against Baalism. He successfully overthrew King Jehoram (ending the Omride dynasty) and instigated a violent anti-Baalistic purge in Israel. Not only did Jehoram of Israel die; so, too, did Queen Jezebel, many of the Baal worshipers, and King Ahaziah of Judah, who just happened to visit his kin in Israel during the year of his coronation!

This struggle against Baalism was a key factor in the emergence of Israel and Judah's prophetic movement during the second half of the eighth century. During an approximate fifty-year period, two primary prophets spoke in the south—Isaiah (742–701) and Micah (724–701)—while two prophets spoke in the north—Amos (about 750) and Hosea (about 745).

Amos emphasized especially social justice (Amos 5:24). He was particularly concerned that Israel recognize her covenantal responsibility before God (Amos 3:1–2). He was convinced that judgment was inevitable for Israel. (See especially the five visions recorded in Amos 7—9).

Hosea, the only northern prophet whose message is recorded in a book bearing his name, was Israel's eighth-century proponent of ḥesed ("covenant fidelity") theology. On the analogy of his relationship with his wife Gomer (Hos. 1—3), he exhorted Israel to be faithful to Yahweh. While assuring Israel of Yahweh's love, Hosea warned her of impending judgment resulting from her abuse of the covenant relationship.

The dangers the prophets saw materialized for Israel in the first quarter of the eighth century. King Hoshea (732–721) of Israel staged an anti-Assyrian revolt in anticipation of Egypt's coming to Israel's defense. Instead, the Assyrian troops under Shalmaneser V came to Israel and took the area around Samaria quickly. A siege of Samaria lasted for three years. During the siege Shalmaneser V died. Sargon II assumed the Assyrian throne and felled Samaria in 721. As per Assyrian policy, large numbers of the people of Samaria were deported to an unknown area, while peoples from another conquered area were imported into Samaria (2 Kings 17). This policy was intended to break down nationalism and to prevent political uprisings. In Israel's case it ultimately precipitated the emergence of the hybrid people despised by the "pure" Jew. Later history designated these people as "Samaritans." The fall of Samaria in 721 marked the end of Israel as a part of the United Monarchy.

The death of Solomon in 922 marked the beginning of Judah as the separated Southern Kingdom also. Solomon left the throne in Judah to his son, Rehoboam (922–915). Rehoboam ruled over a more stable country than Israel in that a consistent line of Davidic rulers governed the country from 922 until 587, with the one exception noted. During the ninth century crisis in Israel precipitated by Jehu's revolt in 842, King Ahaziah (842) of Judah was killed. Ahaziah's death resulted in the usurpation of Judah's throne by the Queen Mother, Athaliah (842–837). Her five-year rule constituted the only non-Davidic break in the succession. More importantly, during this period a systematic attempt was made to establish Baalism also in Judah. The Southern Kingdom, in part because it housed the Jerusalem Temple and was thus the focus of Yahwism, did not embrace Baalism in the fashion of the north. Thus, when Yahwistic priests placed the young King Jehoash (837–800) on the throne, progress made by Baalism in displacing Yahwism was rapidly reversed.

As indicated above, Judah shared in the flowering of the prophetic spirit in the eighth century. Isaiah of Jerusalem, who experienced his commission (see Isa. 6) to be Yahweh's prophet at the death of King Uzziah (742), was a prophetic spokesman during three political crises. During the rule of King Ahaz (735–715), he spoke in 735 at the time of the Syro-Israelite crisis (Isa. 7). During the rule of King Hezekiah (715–687), Isaiah was a spokesman during two political crises. In 711 he warned against an Egyptian-led revolt against Assyria (Isa. 20), and in 701 he was Yahweh's spokesman when Sennacherib of Assyria laid siege to Jerusalem (Isa. 36—37; see also 2 Kings 18—19). Isaiah is primarily remembered as the proponent of faith in Yahweh, letting Yahweh struggle against those who would oppress. This God of Isaiah was One who was best described by the concept of holiness (Isa. 6:3).

Micah of Moresheth (724–701) was the other eighth-century prophet in Judah. In many ways, Micah seemed to lack the original spirit of the other eighth century prophets. Micah 6:1–8, however, is an excellent description of a courtroom scene where Yahweh's people are brought to trial for their constant rejection and transgression of the covenant. The climax to that passage, verse 8, is perhaps the best definition of eighth century prophetic religion available to the modern interpreter.

Israel having fallen in the eighth century, Judah continued into the seventh and early sixth centuries. The seventh century was both dismal and exalted. In the lengthy rule of Manasseh (687–

642), Judah jettisoned much of the concern for exclusive Yahwism. Yahwistic prophets were persecuted; Baalism was encouraged; activities associated with the Assyrian astrological rites were incorporated; and the practice of human sacrifice was revived. This was, indeed, a dark period in Judah's history.

Very soon after Manasseh, however, King Josiah (640–609) reversed the decline Manasseh had set in motion. Under Josiah, and at least as early as 621, the Deuteronomic Reformation was instituted. This reform movement had a dual focus. On the one hand, Josiah sought to take advantage of the weakened conditions of both the Mesopotamian and Egyptian powers to unite anew the Northern and Southern Kingdoms. This political aspiration was coupled with a religious fervor for combating Baalism. Even the mandate that all sacrificial worship take place in the Jerusalem Temple was partially motivated by his desire to prevent the use of Baalistic "high places" and to keep all sacrificial activity where it could be carefully monitored to prevent Baalistic assimilation. This reform had long-range repercussions on the development of Yahwism and Judaism, but the primary impetus for the reform was removed with Josiah's death in 609 as he fought against Pharaoh Necho of Egypt at Megiddo (2 Kings 23:29).

Following Josiah's death, the nation no longer had the leadership to sustain an effective reformation. Jehoiakim (609–598) waged a revolt against the nation's Babylonian overlordship. Before Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon arrived, however, Jehoiakim died, bringing his son Jehoiachin (598–597) to the throne. Thus, Jehoiachin was taken into Exile in 597 when Nebuchadrezzar conquered Jerusalem. In his place Nebuchadrezzar placed Zedekiah (597–587). His revolt against Babylon in 588 led to the ultimate fall of Jerusalem, including the razing of the Jerusalem Temple by Nebuchadrezzar in 587. Thus the kingdom of Judah was ended, and the Babylonian Exile (597/587–539/538) initiated.

The Babylonian Exile (Ezekiel, Isaiah 40—55)

The Babylonian Exile was initiated in 597 by the initial deportation of Jerusalemites to Babylon, with additional deportations in 587 and 582 (Jer. 52:15). This was a significant period in the life of the people, although relatively few persons were involved (4,600 according to Jer. 52:30). Basically, life was not completely unacceptable, because the people enjoyed a degree of social and economic freedom. Nonetheless, they were secluded from Jerusalem and the Temple and hardly desired to sing Yahweh's song in this strange land (Ps. 137).

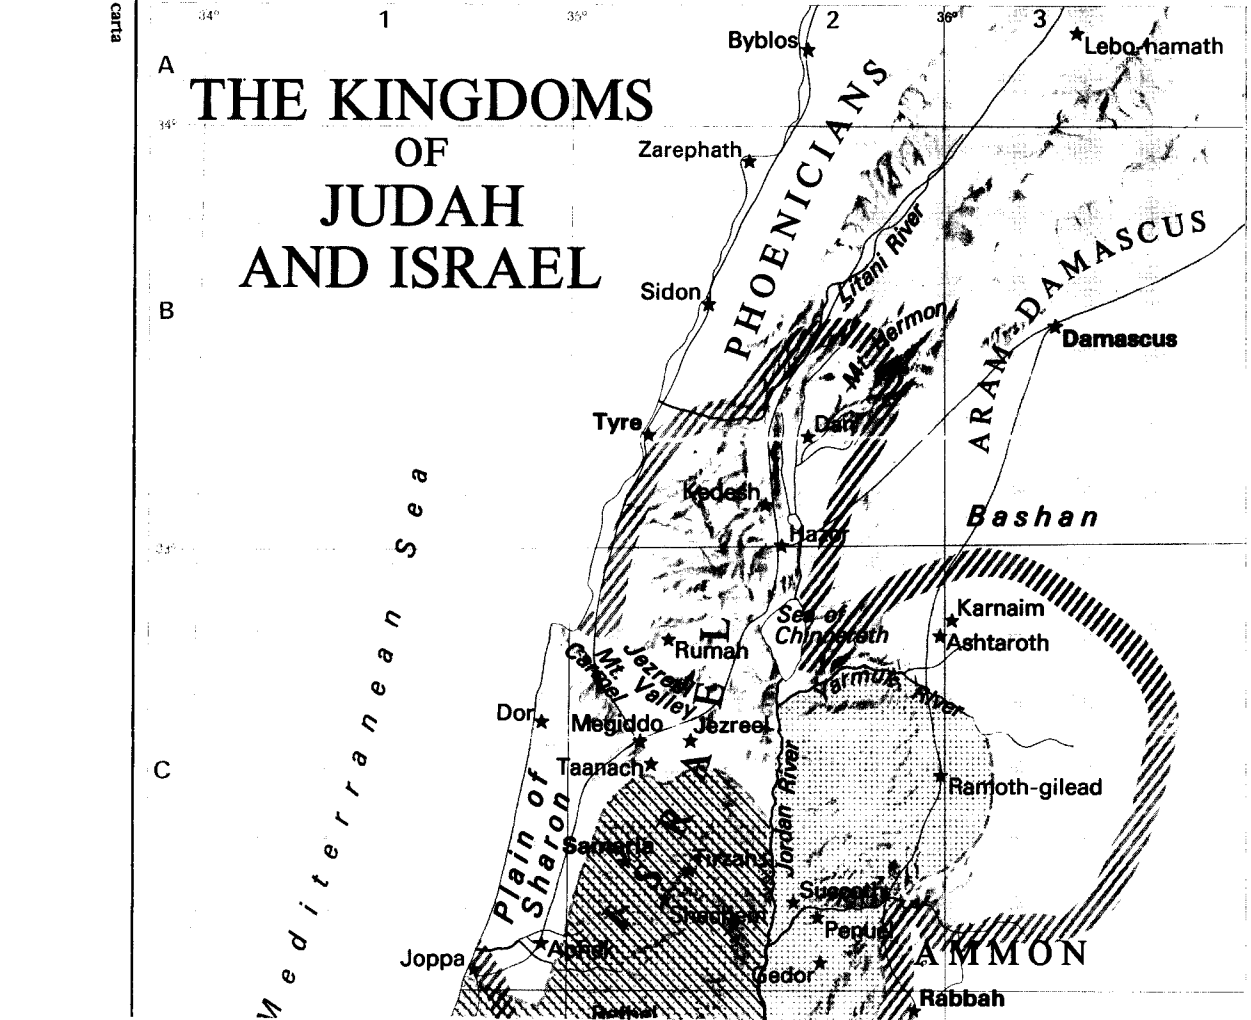
The Babylonian Exile, in spite of its relative brevity, was the benchmark in the religious development of the people. Most importantly, during and just following the Exile the Torah was drawn essentially into its present form. This provided the basis for the emergence of what authentically is Judaism and the Jews, "the people of the book." In addition, other literary products were formulated, including most of the written record associated with the preexilic prophets, the final editorial work on the Deuteronomic History (Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings), and the prophetic contributions of Ezekiel and the anonymous figure known as Deutero- or Second Isaiah.

Ezekiel was strongly nationalistic in his concerns, but nonetheless he made significant contributions. He increased the awareness that Yahweh has absolute mobility, that He was not geographically confined to Jerusalem (Ezek. 1—3). While his message is often quite cryptic, he encouraged hope in the future (Ezek. 33—39); and he suggested a type of "faith's" blueprint for a restored Jerusalem (Ezek. 40—48).

The prophecies of Isaiah 40—55 spoke to conditions near the end of the Babylonian Exile (about 540), preparing the people for a second Exodus (Isaiah 40) and impressing upon them their role as the servant people of Yahweh (Isa. 42:1–4; 49:1–6; 50:4–9; 52:13—53:12). These chapters in Isaiah provide the first undisputed literary evidence for monotheism in the Bible (Isa. 44:6; 45:5), a concept inevitably coupled with Yahweh's universality (Isa. 42:6; 45:22).

During the Exile an institution arose which was to have crucial influence on the future of Judaism, the synagogue. It was impossible to gather at the Temple in Jerusalem, so the synagogue became a social, educational, and religious center for the community. Importantly, the synagogue was never a place where sacrificial worship could be offered. Nonetheless, once Rome destroyed the rebuilt Temple in Jerusalem in A.D. 70, the synagogues preserved Judaism wherever Jews were settled.

THE POSTEXILIC PERIOD



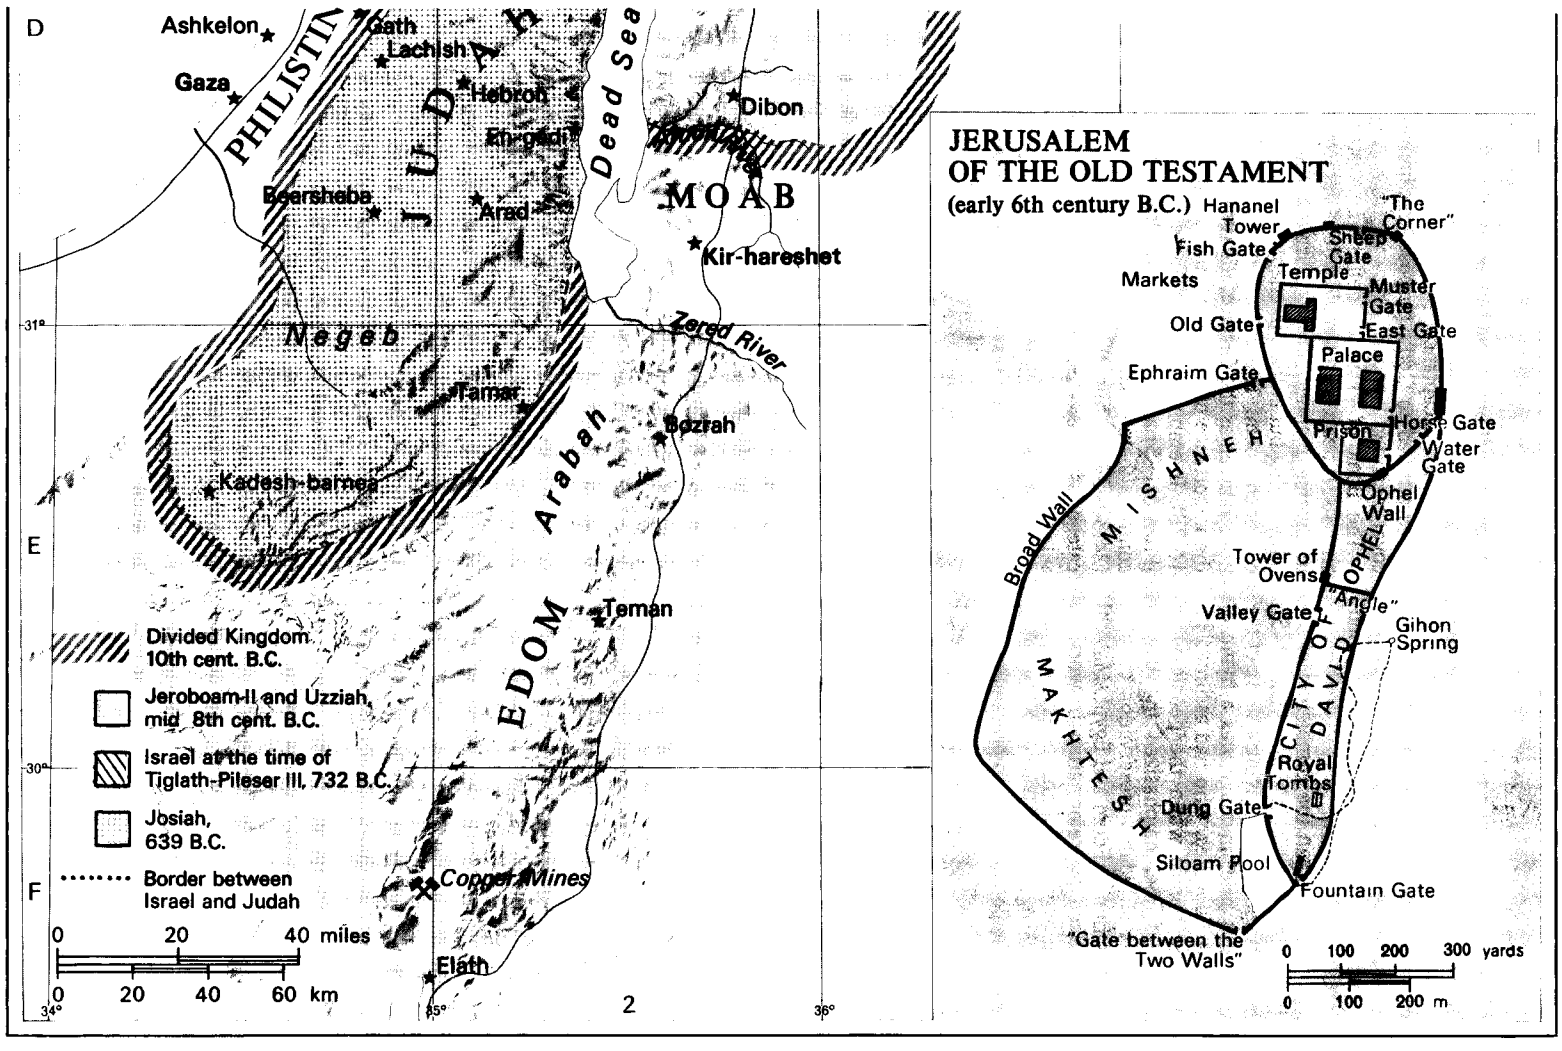
1. The Persian Period (Ezra 1; 5—6;9—10; Nehemiah 1—6; 8—9; 13; Haggai; Zechariah; Obadiah; Malachi; Job; Ecclesiastes; Proverbs; Ruth; Jonah; Esther) Judah's postexilic era began in late 539 with the entrance of the troops of Cyrus of Persia into Babylon. In early 538 Cyrus issued a decree (Ezra 1:2–4; 6:3–5) permitting the exiles to return home. Many did return under the leadership of Zerubbabel, a descendant of King Jehoiachin. Unfortunately, Zerubbabel mysteriously disappeared, probably because the Persians recognized the inherent dangers associated with some of the Jews thinking Zerubbabel to be the anticipated messiah (Hag. 2:20–23).

Immediately following their return to Jerusalem, work was begun on rebuilding the Temple. For various reasons, they accomplished little. Eventually, primarily under the influence of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, the Temple was rebuilt from 520 to 515; and the Temple worship reinstituted.

The city remained defenseless until Nehemiah

© carta

THE KINGDOMS OF JUDAH AND ISRAEL



Royal Judean seal-stamp

Seal of a high Judean official

D
E
F
Ashkelon
Gath
Lachish
Gaza
Hebron
Dibon
En-gedi
Dead Sea
PHILISTIA
JUDAH
MOAB
Beersheba
Arad
Kir-hareshet
Zered River
Negeb
Tamar
Bozrah
Arabah
Kadesh-barnea
EDOM
Teman
Copper Mines
Elath
Divided Kingdom 10th cent. B.C.
Jeroboam-II and Uzziah, mid 8th cent. B.C.
Israel at the time of Tiglath-Pileser III, 732 B.C.
Josiah, 639 B.C.
Border between Israel and Judah
0 20 40 miles
0 20 40 60 km
34°
35°
36°
31°
30°
2
JERUSALEM
OF THE OLD TESTAMENT
(early 6th century B.C.)
Hananel Tower
"The Corner"
Fish Gate
Sheep Gate
Markets
Temple
Muster Gate
Old Gate
East Gate
Palace
Ephraim Gate Prison
Horse Gate
Water Gate
MISHNEH
Broad Wall
Ophel Wall
OPHEL
Tower of Ovens
"Angle"
Valley Gate
Gihon Spring
CITY OF DAVID
MAKHTESH
Royal Tombs
Dung Gate
Siloam Pool
Fountain Gate
"Gate between the Two Walls"
0 100 200 300 yards
0 100 200 m

(appointed twice in 445 and 432 to be Persia's governor in Judea) rebuilt and repaired the walls around the city. About the same time Ezra, (our first indication of the scribal office, lawyer of the Torah), came to Jerusalem and impressed upon the people the importance of placing Torah at the center of community life, giving birth to the modern phenomenon of Judaism.

In the interval between the completion of the Temple (515) and Nehemiah's first visit (445), several prophets spoke, each giving a sense of the period. Obadiah's brief message was a hymn of hate against the Edomites, who had assumed Judah's lands and homes when the people were taken into Exile. Joel emphasized the day of Yahweh as a day of Judah's preservation coupled with the destruction of Edom and Egypt. Malachi addressed the need for reformation in worship, condemned the activities of the priesthood, denounced the intermarriage of Jews with non-Jews, and criticized the popular piety so prevalent in his day.

One of the most important literary movements of the postexilic period was that associated with Wisdom Literature, represented in the Bible by the Books of Job, Ecclesiastes, and Proverbs, plus some of the Psalms (1; 32; 34; 37; 49; 91; 112; 119; 128). This literature borrowed heavily from Israel's neighbors, as Proverbs 22:17—23:11, directed itself predominately to the youth (note the allegory on old age in Eccl. 12:1–8), and basically sought to enhance one's ability to live a healthy and productive life, recognizing that the fear of God served as the basis for such a life.

Job recounts the difficulties experienced by Job through loss of loved ones, deprivation of material goods, and an assault upon his physical health. Throughout his ordeal he remained firm in his conviction of God's ultimate sovereignty, although his restiveness with his inability to understand (theodicy, or understanding the ways of God) certainly belies his characterization as patient. Regardless, the Book of Job does not give the reason for the suffering of innocent individuals; rather, it affirms that, if one will be submissive to God even in the midst of suffering, then one may experience a meaningful relationship with God even in the direst of circumstances. In this sense, the book was a direct attack on the idea that suffering automatically results from wrongdoing and reward from right action, as Job's friends argued.

Ecclesiastes, or Koheleth, is a very different type of book. Essentially, the author portrayed a life which can only be characterized as meaningless (Eccl. 1:2, "vanity"). The concern is whether any avenue might be successfully pursued to give meaning to life. The routes of pleasure (Eccl. 2:1–11), wisdom (Eccl. 2:12–16), wealth (most of Eccl. 4:13—6:12), and religious vows (Eccl. 5:1–6) were tried, but all to no avail. The nearest suggestion of a meaningful existence is in Ecclesiastes 3:1–8 which suggests that, even though persons do not understand, they might find meaning by accepting the givenness of life. Perhaps through this acceptance, they might find themselves attuned to God's purpose and hence discover meaning.

The Book of Proverbs defies any systematic analysis. It deals with a multitude of subjects and in diverse manner, usually through the short, pithy saying but at least in chapter 31 through an extended poem. The subject orientation ranges from Yahweh as the Giver of life (Prov. 1:1–7) to the importance of controlling one's tongue (Prov. 16:28). It emphasizes watchfulness in business (Prov. 6:1–5) and in friendship (Prov. 18:24). It contrasts being industrious (6:6–11) and lazy (24:30–34). While the book defies outline or categories, it is wisdom in the unique Hebraic sense.

As Judaism developed, inevitably, debate rose as regards Yahweh's availability to the non-Jew. Literarily, the Books of Ruth and Jonah encouraged the Jews to embrace all humankind within the umbrella of their faith, while the Book of Esther, which supports the highly nationalistic festival of Purim, encouraged a narrow patriotism which affirmed Yahweh to be God for the Jews protecting them from foreign enemies. This conflict was continued into New Testament times (Acts 15).

2. The Hellenistic Period Philip of Macedon was murdered in 336. This brought Alexander, his nineteen-year-old son who had earlier been tutored by Aristotle and who would later be designated Alexander the Great, to Philip's throne. After two years spent in consolidating his power, Alexander crossed the Hellespont, beginning his bid for a unified Hellenistic Empire. Alexander was not quite 33 when he died unexpectedly in 323. By the time of his death, however, an indelible Hellenistic imprint had been left on the massive area he had conquered; assuredly Canaan sensed strongly this influence.

Partly as a result of this Hellenization process, approximately 300, the chronicler's history was formulated. The chronicler's work is composed of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. Unlike Samuel and Kings, Chronicles emphasizes the accomplishments of Judah and its Davidic kings. It ignored many events that did not suit its purpose, such as the David-Bethsheba story. The chronicler encouraged purity within the Jewish worship practices in the face of Alexander's Hellenization. Closely related, the chronicler focused upon the conflict between the supremacy of the Jerusalem cultus over that of the Samaritans. See Chronicles.

3. The Maccabean Period (Daniel 1—7; 12; Psalter) The apocalyptic era is usually understood to encompass the period from 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. During this period, the Jews were religiously and politically persecuted. To address this circumstance a highly symbolic, cryptic literature developed which promised the faithful community the hope of Yahweh's imminent intervention.

The emergence of the apocalyptic era coincided with events resultant to Alexander the Great's fourth-century conquest of Canaan. When Alexander died in 323, his massive kingdom was thrown into turmoil. Eventually, the control of Canaan was contested between two of his successor rulers, Seleucus and Ptolemy. Resultant to battles waged between 200 and 198, the Seleucid ruler, Antiochus III (223-187), gained control of Canaan. The significance of this transition in power became clear only with his successor, Antiochus IV (187–175), who attempted a systematic destruction of Judaism. His attempts to eradicate the faith precipitated an uprising led by a priest, Mattathias, and his four sons. One of these sons, Judas Maccabeus, was the military architect of the revolt and the individual whose name the revolt bears, the Maccabean Revolt.

The revolt was more successful than the Jews could have anticipated. On the twenty-fifth of Chislev, 165, Judas Maccabeus captured the Jerusalem Temple, purified it, and reinstituted the worship of Yahweh (the basis for the festival of Hanukkah). The Book of Daniel, clearly an apocalyptic book, focused on this era. See Daniel. By 142 the Jews were exempted from all Seleucid taxation, and in 129 all Seleucid soldiers were removed from the country. Once again, the Jews were totally free within the borders of their own country.

The Psalter was finally completed in this era, though many of the 150 poems are preexilic (as Psalm 29). Some are exilic (as Psalm 137); some, post-exilic (as Psalm 119). See Psalms. The Psalter, as the hymnbook of the second Temple, is particularly important for portraying the people as a worshiping community through her diverse historical eras and for enlightening the multitude of problems and situations she encountered.

4. The Roman Period True freedom had been achieved through the Maccabean Revolt, but unfortunately the Hasmonean rule was constantly beset by internal dissension. In addition, intermarriage of Jews with non-Jews in surrounding countries precipitated conflict. This unrest came to a climax in 63 when the constant turmoil, which now involved the governor of Idumaea and the Nabataean king, brought Pompey, the Roman general to Judea. Jerusalem fell; and the country, henceforth designated as the Roman province of Palestine, continued under Roman control until the fourth Christian century.

Jewish history beyond the Roman conquest would clearly fall within the postexilic rubric, and a rich history it is as one traces Jewish development. Nonetheless, the beginning of the Roman era is the outside limit for canonical Old Testament history and carries the thrust of this essay to its logical conclusion. See Alexander the Great; Apocalyptic Literature; Ark of the Covenant; Assyria; Baal/Baalism; Babylon; Canaan; Covenant; Egypt; Exodus; Israel; Judah; Judge; Maccabees; Monotheism; Moses; Philistines; Prophet (see also individual prophets); Psalms; Sinai; Synagogue; Temple; Torah; Wisdom Literature; Wise Man; Yahweh. Frank E. Eakin, Jr.

ISRAEL, SPIRITUAL The church, one gathering of all believers under the lordship of Christ as the continuation of God's work with Old Testament Israel. This is in contrast to most references in the Old Testament to religious or secular assemblies or to those in the New Testament that designate a local congregation of Christians, but never in any way mean a building.

Israel is the name given to the descendants of Jacob and to the grouping of people in the twelve tribes coming from Jacob's sons. In Old Testament times they constituted the people of God, for He chose them as His own for faithful service. Scripture is clear that Christ came to earth to establish His heavenly kingdom as a substitute for the Jewish kingdom that had failed (Matt. 21:43). Throughout the New Testament the church is spoken of as the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom is presented as an actual entity ruled by God, a spiritual acceptance of the rule of God, or Jesus Christ, the One fully in submission to God and a personification of the kingdom. Paul distinguished between genealogical Israelites and the true "Israel of God," God's people, those who believe the good news and receive the peace and mercy of God (Gal. 6:16). Spiritual Israel, the Christian church, has supplanted the Jews as the elect people of God (Rom. 9:6–13; 1 Pet. 2:9). Spiritual Israel includes Jews who believe in Jesus. Christians are divided as to the fate of Israel. This centers on interpretation of passages such as Romans 11:25–36; 2 Corinthians 3:16.

Such interpretations seek to understand the mystery of divine election which began with Israel and climaxed in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. The history of divine election includes Israel's disobedience by depending on human achievement rather than divine mercy which led to their rejection of Jesus, and will climax in the salvation of "all Israel" (Rom. 11:26). The point at which interpretations differ is the meaning of all Israel. Is spiritual Israel the church, Israel of all generations from Abraham to the end of time, Jews at the end of the ages, or the remnant of believing Jews included in the church or brought into the church in the last days? Many interpretations have been made. What is certain is that God in His grace of election opens the door to salvation by faith to all people regardless of the race or tradition out of which they come.

J. William Thompson and Trent C. Butler

ISRAELITE (Ĭs′ rā ĕl īte) Citizen of nation of Israel.

ISSACHAR (Ĭs′ sȧ *ch*ăr) Personal name meaning "man for hire" or "hireling." Ninth son of Jacob, the fifth borne by Leah (Gen. 30:18). He became the progenitor of the tribe of Issachar. Almost nothing is known about his personal history. The tribe of Issachar occupied territory in the northern part of Palestine, just southwest of the Sea of Galilee (Josh. 19:17–23). The tribe was not prominent in Israel's history. Tola, one of the so-called "minor" judges, was of the tribe of Issachar (Judg. 10:1–2). So was Baasha, the successor of Nadab as king of Israel (1 Kings 15:27). The city of Jezreel, which was an Israelite royal residence, was located in the territory of Issachar. See Tribes of Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period.

ISSARON Transliteration of Hebrew word meaning, "a tenth." A dry measure equal to one tenth of an ephah (Ex. 29:40; Lev. 14:10, 21; 23:13;17; 24:5; Num. 15:4) or about two quarts. KJV translates a tenth deal. See Weights and Measures; Ephah.

ISSHIAH (Ĭs shī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "let Yahweh forget." In Hebrew the name appears in a longer form in 1 Chronicles 12:6. 1. Leader in the tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:3). 2. Soldier from Saul's tribe of Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag while he hid from Saul (1 Chron. 12:6). 3. Member of the Kohath branch of Levites (1 Chron. 23:20; 24:24–25). 4. Descendant of Moses among the Levites (1 Chron. 24:21; compare 23:13–17).

ISSHIJAH (Ĭs shī′ jah) Personal name meaning, "let Yahweh forget." Same Hebrew name as Isshiah. Israelite who had married a foreign wife, threatening Israel's total allegiance to Yahweh in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:31).

ISSUE KJV term referring to offspring (Gen. 48:6; Isa. 22:24; Matt. 22:25; compare 2 Kings 20:18; Isa. 39:7) or to a bodily discharge. The KJV applied issue to male pathological discharges such as that associated with gonorrhea (Lev. 15:2–15), to normal menstruation (Lev. 15:19–24), and to female pathological discharges (Lev. 15:25–30; Matt. 9:20). Normal discharges resulted in ritual uncleanness for one day which was removed by simple washing. Pathological discharges resulted in uncleaness until seven days after the return to full health and required an atoning sacrifice. In Ezekiel 23:20 the seminal emission of stallions is one element in a graphic depiction of Judah's idolatry.

ISSUE OF BLOOD KJV phrase meaning hemorrhage (Matt. 9:20).

ISUAH (Ĭs′ ū ah) KJV spelling of Ishvah (1 Chron. 7:30). See Ishvah.

ISUI (Ĭs′ ū ī) KJV spelling for Ishvi in Genesis 46:17. See Ishvi.

ITALIAN COHORT Name of the archery unit of the Roman army to which the Gentile centurion Cornelius belonged (Acts. 10:1). KJV calls it the Italian band. Probably 1,000 men who had been mustered in Italy composed the unit. Little is known about this Italian Cohort. Extrabiblical evidence exists for the presence in Caesarea of a unit called Cohors II Italica after A.D. 69. That date, however, is too late for the events recorded in Acts 10. Perhaps the Cohors II actually was in Caesarea prior to A.D. 69. Or perhaps the Italian Cohort to which Cornelius belonged was a different unit. See Cornelius.

ITALY (Ĭt′ ȧ lȳ) The boot-shaped peninsula between Greece and Spain which extends from the Alps on the north to the Mediterranean Sea on the south. Its long narrow shape contributed to its ethnic diversity, with so many Greeks occupying the southern part that it was called "Great Temple of Serapis at the ancient port of Puteoli, where Paul disembarked on his journey to Rome.

Greece" by the citizens of Rome. Through the Punic Wars with Carthage (264–146 B.C.), the city of Rome extended its control over the whole country and eventually conquered the entire Mediterranean. The Roman Empire was created when Octavian became Augustus Caesar (27 B.C.) after the murder of Julius Caesar and of the demise of the Republic (44 B.C.). Italy is named in the New Testament in Acts 18:2; 27:1,6 and Hebrews 13:24. John McRay

ITCH A skin disorder characterized by an irritating sensation in the upper surface of the skin. The itch included among the curses on those unfaithful to the covenant (Deut. 28:27) was possibly eczema or prurigo. NIV, NRSV use itch to distinguish a minor skin disorder from leprosy (Lev. 13:30–37). The KJV termed this disorder "scall," a malady characterized by dry scales or scabs. Other translations rendered this disorder "infection" (NAS), "scale" (REB), or "sore" (TEV). It has been suggested that alopecia areata, which produces patches of baldness (compare Lev. 13:40–41), or ringworms are the cause of this disorder. Animals suffering from a skin disorder were unsuitable for sacrifice (Lev. 22:22). English translators divide over the nature of this disorder: eczema (NAS), itch (NRSV), scab (REB), scurvy (KJV), skin eruption (TEV). See Diseases, Treatment of.

ITHAI (Ĭ′ thā ī) Personal name perhaps meaning, "with me." A member of David's elite "Thirty" military heroes (2 Sam. 23:29).

ITHAMAR (Ĭth′ ȧ mär) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps, "island of palms," or "where is Tamar," or shortened form of "father of Tamar (palms)." Fourth son of Aaron the priest (Ex. 6:23). After the death of Nadab and Abihu, Ithamar and his surviving brother Eleazar rose to prominence. During the wilderness years Ithamar apparently was in charge of all the Levites (Ex. 38:21). Moses became angry when Ithamar and his brother did not eat part of an offering as commanded (Lev. 10:16). In addition, the house of Eli evidently was descended from Ithamar. See Aaron; Priests and Levites.

ITHIEL (Ĭth′ ĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "with me is God." 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin in the time of Nehemiah after the return from Exile (Neh. 11:7). 2. Person to whom Proverbs 30 is addressed, following standard Hebrew text (KJV, NAS, NIV). Many Bible students put spaces between different letters of the Hebrew text assuming an early copying change. Then the text would read, "God is not with me, God is not with me, and I am helpless" (TEV), or "I am weary, O God, I am weary, O God. How can I prevail?" (NRSV; compare REB).

ITHLAH (Ĭth′ lah) Place name perhaps meaning, "he hangs." Town in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:42). Its location is not known, but some students of Bible lands geography follow some Greek manuscripts identifying Ithlah with Shithlah or Shilta, about four miles northwest of Beth-horon.

ITHMAH (Ĭth′ mah) Personal name meaning, "orphan." Moabite soldier in David's army (1 Chron. 11:46).

ITHNAN (Ĭth′ năn) Place name meaning, "flowing constantly." Town on southern border of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:23). Its location is not known unless some Bible lands geographers are correct in combining Hazor-ithnan into one town, which may have been located at modern el-Jebariyeh on the wadi Umm Ethnan.

ITHRA (Ĭth′ rȧ) Personal name meaning, "remnant" or "abundance." He was the father of Amasa, and the general Absalom appointed to replace David's general Joab when he revolted against his father (2 Sam. 17:25). Ithra's wife, Abigail, was Joab's aunt. Ithra is called Jether in some Greek and Old Latin manuscripts as well as in 1 Kings 2:5,32; 1 Chronicles 2:17. Some modern translations thus read Jether in 2 Samuel 17:25 (TEV, NIV). One early Greek manuscript and 1 Chronicles 2:17 identify Ithra as an Ishmaelite rather than an Israelite, as the standard Hebrew text of 2 Samuel 17:25 reads. Many Bible students think Ishmaelite was the original reading in 2 Samuel, since it would be unusual and unnecessary to identify an Israelite (REB, TEV, NRSV).

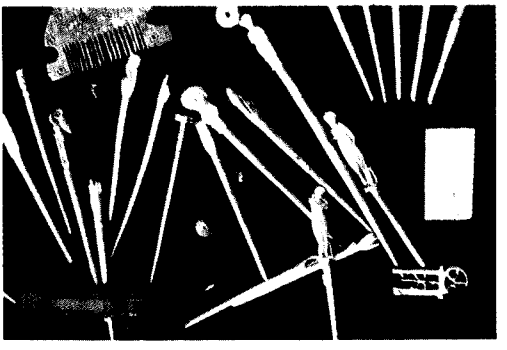
ITHRAN (Ĭth′ răn) Personal name meaning, "remnant" or "abundance." A Horite leader who lived in Edom (Gen. 36:26). 2. Leader in the tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:37). He may be the same as the similarly spelled Jether (1 Chron. 7:38).

ITHREAM (Ĭth′ rē ăm) Personal name meaning, "remnant of the people." David's son born in Hebron to Eglah, David's wife (2 Sam. 3:5).

ITHRITE (Ĭth′ rīte) Clan name meaning, "of Jether." Descendants of Jether or Jethro (Ex. 4:18) or a clan whose home was Kiriath-jearim (1 Chron. 2:53). The latter may have been Hivites (compare Josh. 9:7,17). Two of David's valiant "Thirty" warriors were Ithrites (2 Sam. 23:38).

ITTAH-KAZIN (Ĭt′ tȧh-kā′ zĭn) KJV spelling of Eth-kazin. See Eth-kazin.

ITTAI (Ĭt′ tā ī) Personal name meaning "with God." 1. Gittite (from Gath) soldier who demonstrated loyalty to David by accompanying the latter in flight from Jerusalem after the outbreak of a rebellion led by David's son Absalom (2 Sam. 15:19–22). Gittite means a resident of Gath. Thus, this man was a Philistine who had cast his lot with the Israelite David. Later, Ittai shared command of David's army with Joab and Abishai (2 Sam. 18:2). See David. 2. One of the "Thirty" of David's army (2 Sam. 23:29) and son of Ribai of Gibeah from the tribe of Benjamin. The Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 11:31 spells the name Ithai.



ITURAEA (Ĭt ū rāē′ ȧ) Place name meaning, "related to Jetur." Region over which Herod Philip was governor when John the Baptist began his public ministry (Luke 3:1). It was located northeast of Galilee between the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon mountains, though its precise boundaries are almost impossible to determine. Racially, the Ituraeans were of Ishmaelite stock; their origin probably should be traced to Jetur the son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:15). The earliest extant reference to the Ituraeans as a people dates from the second century B.C. Pompey conquered the territory for Rome about 50 B.C. Ituraea was eventually absorbed into other political districts, losing its distinct identity by the end of the first century A.D. See Herods; Geography.

ITUREA (Ĭt ū rē′ ȧ) Alternate spelling for Ituraea. See Ituraea.

IVAH (Ī′ vah) KJV spelling for Ivvah. See Ivvah.

IVORY is the English translation of the Hebrew word that means "tooth." Ivory was used for decoration on thrones, beds, houses, and the decks of ships (1 Kings 10:18; 22:39; 2 Chron. 9:17; Ps. 45:8; Ezek. 27:6,15; Amos 3:15; 6:4). Archaeologists in Palestine have unearthed numerous articles made of ivory: boxes, gaming boards, figurines, spoons, and combs.

Ivory toilet articles and hair ornaments.

First Kings 10:22 is cited by scholars as a possible explanation for the source of ivory in Palestine. Apparently, Solomon's ships returned with ivory as a part of their cargo. Sources outside the Old Testament indicate that elephants existed in northern Syria during the second millennium B.C. Elephants were hunted into extinction in northern Syria by 800 B.C.

The prophet Amos mentioned ivory as a token of luxury and wealth (Amos 3:15; 6:4). Lists of booty taken by victorious armies included ivory objects. Hezekiah was credited with giving Sennacherib tribute in 701 B.C. Sennacherib's account of the tribute included couches and chairs inlaid with ivory. Ivories have been found at Samaria that are thought to be from the time of Ahab, who reigned in Israel from about 869 to 850 B.C. James Newell

IVVAH (Ĭv′ vah) Alternate spelling for Avva. See Avva.

IYE-ABARIM (Ī yē-ăb′ ȧ rĭm) Place name meaning, "ruins of the crossings." Station in the wilderness wanderings (Num. 21:11) near Moab. It is apparently near mount Abarim. See Abarim. It is apparently abbreviated as Iim in Numbers 33:45 (KJV). Some Bible geographers locate it at khirbet Aii southwest of Kerak or modern Mahay, but this is far from certain.

IYIM (Ī′ yĭm) Modern translations spelling of Iim (Num. 33:45), a shortened form of Iye-abarim. See Iye-abarim.

IZEHAR (Ī′ zė här) KJV spelling of Izhar in Numbers 3:19. See Izhar.

IZEHARITE (Ĭz′ ė här īte) KJV spelling of Izharite. See Izharite.

IZHAR (Ĭz′ här) Personal name meaning, "olive oil" or "he sparkles." 1. Son of Kohath and grandson of Levi, thus original ancestor of a priestly clan (Ex. 6:18). He was father of Korah (Num. 16:1). See Korah. Compare 1 Chronicles 23:18. 2. The written Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 4:7 names Izhar as a member of the tribe of Judah but uses a different letter for "h," sometimes rendered "ch" in English. The resulting name is of uncertain meaning. An early Hebrew scribal note followed by the early Syriac and Latin translations makes the name Jezoar (KJV, REB) or Zohar (NIV).

IZHARITE (Ĭz′ här īte) Clan of Levites descended from Izhar. See Izhar.

IZLIAH (Ĭz lī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "long-lived" or "Yahweh delivers." Leader in tribe of Benjamin living in Jerusalem after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 8:18).

IZRAHIAH (Ĭz ră hī ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh shines forth." Member of tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:3). The same Hebrew name appears in Nehemiah 12:42 but is usually transliterated into English as Jezrahiah. See Jezrahiah.

IZRAHITE (Ĭz′ rȧ hīte) Clan name in 1 Chronicles 27:8 for which the text tradition gives several variants: Harorite (1 Chron. 11:27 KJV); Harodite (2 Sam. 23:25 KJV). Other Hebrew manuscripts read, "Zerahites." See Harodite.

IZRI (Ĭz′ rī) Clan leader of fourth course of Temple musicians (1 Chron. 25:11). He is probably the same as Zeri (25:3), the name change occurring in copying the text.

IZZIAH (Ĭz zī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah sprinkled." Priest who repented of marrying a foreign woman and thus tempting Israel with foreign gods in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:25).

Beautiful inlaid tile on the wall of the Moslem Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem.

J The sign for one of the principle sources critical scholars propose for the Pentateuch. The name derives from the personal name for God, Yahweh (German Jahveh), which characterizes this source. The source is thought to have originated in Judah earlier than the E source (about 900 B.C.). Recent research has raised radical questions about this source and theory even among critical scholars. See Pentateuch; Bible, History of Interpretation.

JAAKAN (Jā′ ā·kăn) Personal name meaning, "to be fast." Descendant of Esau and thus tribal ancestor of Edomites (1 Chron. 1:42; compare Gen. 36:27; Num. 33:31–32; Deut. 10:6). Different translations transliterate the name differently—Akan, Jakan. The Hebrew text of Genesis 36:27 omits the first letter of the name. See Bene-jaakan.

JAAKANITES (Jā′ ā·kā·nītes) NIV translation of Bene-jaakan in Deuteronomy 10:6. See Bene-jaakan.

JAAKOBAH (Jā′ ā·kō′ bah) Personal name meaning, "may He protect." Leader in tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36).

JAALA (Jā′ ā·lā) Personal name meaning, "female ibex." A member of Solomon's staff whose descendants joined Zerubbabel in returning from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:56; Neh. 7:58, which has an Aramaic ending rather than the Hebrew ending of the Ezra passage).

JAALAH (Jā′ ā·lah) Alternate Hebrew spelling of Jaala. See Jaala.

JAALAM (Jā′ ā·lăm) KJV, REB spelling of Jalam. See Jalam.

JAANAI (Jā′ ā·nâi) KJV, REB spelling of Janai. See Janai.

JAAR (Jā′ är) Place name meaning, "forest." Modern versions' transliteration of Hebrew in Psalm 132:6 (TEV reads, Jearim, a plural form.) KJV translates, "wood." Jaar is probably a poetic abbreviation for Kiriath-jearim. See Kiriath-jearim. The Psalm celebrates David's returning the ark to Jerusalem from its Philistine captivity (compare 1 Sam. 7:2; 2 Sam. 6; 1 Chron. 13:5).

JAARE-OREGIM (Jā′ ā·rē·ôr′ ē gīm) Personal name meaning, "forests of the weavers." Father of Elhanan from Bethlehem, who killed Goliath. See Elhanan. Many modern Bible scholars follow early Greek translations and 1 Chronicles 20:5 and omit Oregim (REB). Others interpret Oregim as a common noun, identifying Jair as a weaver (NIV translation note). This is partly based on 2 Samuel 23:24, where an Elhanan of Bethlehem is identified as the son of Dodo. Jaare may be an abbreviated form of Kiriath-jearim. See Kiriath-jearim.

JAARESHIAH (Jā′ ā·rē·shī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh plants." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:27).

JAASAU (Jā′ ā·sāū) KJV, REB spelling of Jaasu. See Jaasu.

JAASIEL (Jā·ăs′ ī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God makes." 1. Leader of tribe of Benjamin under David, apparently in charge of census in his tribe when David numbered the people (1 Chron. 27:21). His father Abner may be Saul's general who became David's general. 2. Army hero under David whose home town was Zobah (1 Chron. 11:47). See Mesobaite. KJV transliterates his name Jasiel.

JAASU (Jā′ ā·sū) Personal name meaning, "His product," a variant spelling of Jaasiel, which the earliest Hebrew copyists noted should be pronounced differently from the printed Hebrew text. An Israelite who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to ensure the religious purity of the nation (Ezra 11:37). See Jaasau.

JAAZANIAH (Jā·ăz·ā·nī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh hears." 1. Member of party led by Ishmael who opposed Gedaliah after the Babylonians made him governor over Judah following their destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. Jaazaniah may also have been in Ishmael's party that assassinated Gedaliah (2 Kings 25:23–25). His name has a slightly different spelling in Jeremiah 40:8. See Jezaniah. A signet seal found at tell en-Nasbeh dates from the same period and contains a depiction of a fighting cock. The seal inscription shows the seal belonged to Jaazaniah, the servant of the king. This is probably the same person and indicates he was on the king's staff, probably as an army captain. 2. One of the elders of Israel Ezekiel found worshiping idols in the Temple (Ezek. 8:11). His father Shaphan may have been the counselor of Josiah (2 Kings 22). If so, the son did not imitate the faithful father. 3. A government official whom Ezekiel accused with his associates of giving wicked advice. His name in Hebrew is an abbreviated form of Jaazaniah. 4. The same abbreviated Hebrew name belonged to a Rechabite whom Jeremiah used as an example of faithful obedience to God (Jer. 35:3). See Rechabite.

JAAZER (Jā′ ā·zēr) KJV spelling of Jazer (Num. 21:32; 32:35). See Jazer.

JAAZIAH (Jā·ā·zī ah) A Levitical priest in the time of David (1 Chron. 24:26). His name means, "Yahweh nourishes."

JAAZIEL (Jā·ā′ zī·ĕl) Variant form of Jaaziah, meaning, "God nourishes." Levite and Temple musician (1 Chron. 15:18), apparently appearing in a variant Hebrew spelling in 15:20 as one who played the psalter (1 Chron. 15:20) or harp (NRSV, NAS, TEV) or lute (REB), or lyre (NIV). See Aziel.

JABAL (Jā′ băl) Personal name meaning, "stream." Son of Lamech by Adah (Gen. 4:20). A descendant of Cain, he was the first nomad, the progenitor of tent dwellers and herdsmen.

JABBOK (Jăb′ bŏk) Place name meaning, "flowing." River near which Jacob wrestled through the night with God (Gen. 32:22). Its modern name is Nahr ez-Zerqa. It is a tributary of the Jordan, joining the larger river from the east about fifteen miles north of the Dead Sea. In biblical times various sections of its approximately 50-mile course served as the western boundary of Ammon, the boundary between the kingdoms of Sihon and Og, and a division in the territory of Gilead. The existence of numerous tells points to a dense population in the Jabbok Valley in ancient times. See Jacob.

JABESH (Jā′ bĕsh) Place name meaning, "dry." A shortened form of Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam. 11; 1 Sam. 31; 2 Kings 15:10,13). See Jabesh-gilead.

Panoramic view of the Jabbok River.

JABESH-GILEAD (Jā′ bĕsh-gĭl′ ė ăd) Place name meaning, "dry, rugged" or "dry place of Gilead." City whose residents, with the exception of four hundred virgins, were put to death by an army of Israelites (Judg. 21:8–12). The four hundred women who were spared became wives for the Benjaminites. While certainty is elusive, the area in which Jabesh-gilead probably was located is east of the Jordan River about twenty miles south of the Sea of Galilee. The story illustrates the drastic steps taken to preserve the unity of the twelve tribes of Israel.

Jabesh-gilead figured prominently in the history of Saul. His rescue of the people of Jabesh-gilead from Nahash the Ammonite marked the effective beginning of the Israelite monarchy (1 Sam. 11:1–11). Later, the men of Jabesh-gilead demonstrated the high regard in which they held Saul by retrieving the bodies of the slain king and his sons from the walls of Beth-shan (1 Sam. 31:11–13). David expressed thanks for the brave deed (2 Sam. 2:4–7), and eventually removed Saul's bones from Jabesh-gilead (2 Sam. 21:12).

JABEZ (Jā′ bĕz) Personal and place name meaning, "hollow, depression" or "he hurries." 1. Home of scribes whose location is not known (1 Chron. 2:55). 2. Pious Israelite who asked God for blessing and received it (1 Chron. 4:9–10). He illustrates the power of prayer.

JABIN (Jā′ bĭn) Personal name meaning, "he understands." King of Hazor (Josh. 11:1; Judg. 4; Ps. 83:10). Leader of northern coalition of kings who attacked Joshua at the water of Merom and met their death (compare Josh. 12:19–24). Jabin, king of Hazor, controlled the Israelites when they turned away from God at Ehud's death (Judg. 4:1–2). The biblical writer referred to him as "King of Canaan," a title representing his strong power in the northern part of the country, but a title kings of the other Canaanite city states probably would have strongly contested, since Canaan lacked political unity in that period. Jabin does not act in the story of Judges 4; rather Sisera, his general, represents him and is killed, leading to Jabin's loss of power. This Jabin must certainly be differentiated from the one Joshua fought, leading to the assumption by many scholars that a dynasty of kings in Hazor carried the name Jabin. Some have gone so far to identify him with Ibni-Adad, who appears in Near Eastern documents from Mari.

JABNEEL (Jăb′ nė ĕl) Place name meaning, "God builds." 1. Town marking northwestern boundary of tribal territory of Judah in land of Philistines (Josh. 15:11); modern Yibna. Uzziah took the town, called by the shortened Hebrew form Jabneh, from the Philistines (2 Chron. 26:6). Later the city was called Jamnia and became a center of scribal activity for the Jews. See Bible, Formation and Canon of. 2. Town in Naphtali's tribal territory (Josh. 19:33); modern tell en-Naam or khirbet Yemma, west-southwest of the Sea of Galilee and northeast of Mount Tabor.

JABNEH (Jāb′ nĕh) See Jabneel.

JACAN (Jā′ căn) Personal name of unknown meaning. A member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:13).

JACHAN (Jā′ chăn) KJV spelling of Jacan. See Jacan.

JACHIN (Jā′ chĭn) Personal name meaning, "Yah established." Son of Simeon and original ancestor of a clan in the tribe (Gen. 46:10; spelled Jarib in 1 Chron. 4:24). A priest who lived in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:10; compare 1 Chron. 9:10). This represented a priestly family connected to David's organization of the priesthood (1 Chron. 24:17).

JACHIN AND BOAZ (Jā′ chĭn and Bō′ ăz) Proper names meaning, "he establishes" and "agile." In 1 Kings 7:21, the names of two bronze pillars that stood on either side of the entrance to Solomon's Temple. They may have been 27 feet high and 6 feet in diameter with a 10 foot capital on top. Perhaps each word was the beginning of an inscription that was engraved on the respective pillars. Analogous pillars have been found in front of temples at Khorsabad, Tyre, Paphos, and other places. Their function appears to have been primarily ornamental, though some have suggested they may have been giant incense stands. It is possible that they took on some symbolic religious significance with the passage of time. See Temple.

JACHINITE (Jā′ chĭn·īte) Family in tribe of Simeon descended from Jachin (Num. 26:12). See Jachin.

JACINTH A semiprecious stone more nearly orange in color than the hyacinth. Some English translations give jacinth as a gem in the high priest's breastplate (Ex. 28:19, NAS, NIV, NRSV), the color of one of the riders' breastplates (Rev. 9:17 KJV), and the eleventh foundation stone of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20, KJV, NAS, NIV, NRSV). See Hyacinth; Minerals and Metals in the Bible.

JACKAL Golden jackal (Canis aureus), a yellow-coated, carnivorous mammal resembling the wolf but considerably smaller (34–37 inches, including a tail of about one foot) with a shorter tail and ears. KJV translated the term for jackal as either dragon (Isa. 13:22; Neh. 2:13) or sea monster (Lam. 4:3). Jackals are nocturnal. They hunt either alone, in pairs, or in packs. By hunting in packs, jackals have taken down large antelope. This reputation accounts for the horror of one abandoned to jackals (Ps. 44:19). Jackals eat small mammals, birds, fruits, vegetables, and carrion (compare Ps. 63:10). They are infamous for their distinctive. nighttime wailing (Job. 30:28–31; Mic. 1:8). Most biblical references associate jackals with desert ruins. For a city or nation to be made the haunt or lair of jackals is for it to be utterly destroyed (Isa. 13:22; 34:13; Jer. 9:11; 10:22; 49:33; 50:39; 51:37; Lam. 5:18; Mal. 1:3). See Dragon; Foxes; Animals.

JACKAL'S WELL Water source outside Jerusalem, accessible from the Valley Gate (Neh. 2:13, NIV, RSV). Other English translations designate this water source as the Dragon('s) fountain (TEV), spring (NRSV, REB), or well (KJV, NAS). The spring is possibly En-rogel or more likely a water source in the upper part of the Hinnom Valley. See Jerusalem; Jackal.

JACKDAW Black and grey bird (Corvus monedula) related to but smaller than the common crow (Isa. 34:11; Zeph. 2:14, NAS margin). The meaning of the Hebrew term is obscure. Other identifications include: cormorant; hawk; a species of owl; pelican; or wild bird. See Birds.

JACOB (Jā′ cob) Personal name built on the Hebrew noun for "heel" meaning, "he grasps the heel" or "he cheats, supplants" (Gen. 25:26; 27:36). Original ancestor of the nation of Israel and father of the twelve ancestors of the twelve tribes of Israel (Gen. 25:1—Ex. 1:5). He was the son of Isaac and Rebekah, younger twin brother of Esau, and husband of Leah and Rachel (Gen. 25:21–26; 29:21–30). God changed his name to Israel (Gen. 32:28; 49:2).

Texts from Ugarit and Assyria have persons named Jacob, but these are not Israelites. Their name is often connected with one of their gods, becoming Jacob-el or Jacob-baal. In such a form, it probably means "may El protect." The Old Testament knows only one Jacob. No one else received the patriarch's name.

Between the Testaments other Jews received the name Jacob; the one New Testament example is the father of Joseph and thus the earthly grandfather of Jesus (Matt. 1:16). Jacob stands as a strong witness that the God who made all the people of the earth also worked in Israel's history, calling the patriarchs to a destiny He would fulfill even when they least deserved it.

Jacob in Genesis Jacob's story occupies half the Book of Genesis. Living up to his name, Jacob bargained for Esau's birthright. See Birthright. Parental partiality fostered continuing hostility between Esau, the hunter beloved of his father, and Jacob, the quiet, settled, integrated person favored by his mother. The tensions between brothers seemed to threaten the fulfillment of the divine promise.

Esau's thoughtlessness lost him his birthright and allowed Jacob to have material superiority. Nevertheless, Isaac intended to bestow the blessing of the firstborn upon Esau. The oracle Rebekah received (25:23) probably encouraged her to counter Isaac's will and to gain the blessing for her favorite son by fraud. The blessing apparently conveyed the status of head of family apart from the status of heir. To his crass lies and deception, Jacob even approached blasphemy, using God's name to bolster his cause, "Because the Lord your God granted me success" (27:20 NRSV). The father's blindness deepened the pathos. The blind father pronounced the blessing he could never recall. Jacob became the bearer of God's promises and the inheritor of Canaan. Esau, too, received a blessing, but a lesser one. He must serve Jacob and live in the less fertile land of Edom, but his day would come (27:40). The split between brothers became permanent. Rebekah had to arrange for Jacob to flee to her home in Paddan-aram to escape Esau's wrath (27:46—28:1).

At age 40, Jacob fled his home to begin his life as an individual. Suddenly, a lonely night in Bethel, interrupted by a vision from God, brought reality home. Life had to include wrestling with God and assuming responsibility as the heir of God's promises to Abraham (28:10–22). Jacob made an oath, binding himself to God. Here is the center of Jacob's story; all else must be read in light of the Bethel experience.

In Aram with his mother's family, the deceiver Jacob met deception. Laban tricked him into marrying poor Leah, the elder daughter, before he got his beloved Rachel, the younger. Fourteen years he labored for his wives (29:1–30). Six more years of labor let Jacob return the deception and gain wealth at the expense of his father-in-law, who continued his deception, changing Jacob's wages ten times (31:7,41) Amid the family infighting, both men prospered financially, and Jacob's family grew. Eventually he had twelve children from four women (29:31—30:24).

Intense bargaining ensued when Jacob told Laban he wanted to follow God's call and return to the land of his birth. Supported by his wives, who claimed their father had cheated them of their dowry (31:15), Jacob departed while Laban and his sons were away in the hills shearing sheep. Starting two days later, Laban and his sons could not overtake Jacob until they reached Gilead, 400 miles from Haran.

Laban complained that he had not had an opportunity to bid farewell to his daughters with the accustomed feast. More importantly, he wanted to recover his stolen gods (31:30,32). These gods were small metal or terra-cotta figures of deities. See Terraphim. Without the images, his family lost the magical protection which he thought the gods provided from demons and disasters. Since no fault could be found in Jacob's conduct in Haran, all Laban could do was to suggest a covenant of friendship. Laban proposed the terms as (1) never ill-treating his daughters, (2) never marrying any other women, and (3) establishing the site of the covenant as a boundary neither would cross with evil intent. Jacob was now head of his own household. He was ready to climb to a higher plane of spiritual experience.

As Jacob approached the Promised Land, a band of angels met him at Mahanaim (32:1–2). They probably symbolized God's protection and encouragement as he headed southward to meet Esau for the first time in twenty years. Esau's seemingly hostile advance prompted a call for clear evidence of God's guarding. Shrewdly, Jacob sent an enormous gift to his brother and divided his retinue into two groups. Each group was large enough to defend itself or to escape if the other was attacked. To his scheme Jacob added prayer. He realized that it was ultimately God with whom he must deal. When all had crossed the Jabbok River, Jacob met One who wrestled with him until daybreak (ch. 32).

The two struggled without one gaining advantage, until the Opponent dislocated Jacob's hip. Jacob refused to release his Antagonist. Clinging to Him, he demanded a blessing. This would not be given until Jacob said his name. By telling it, Jacob acknowledged his defeat and admitted his character. The Opponent emphasized His superiority by renaming the patriarch. He became Israel, the one on whose behalf God strives. He named the place Peniel (face of God), because he had seen God face to face and his life had been spared (32:30).

Jacob's fear of meeting Esau proved groundless. Seemingly, Esau was content to forget the wrongs of the past and to share his life. As two contrary natures are unlikely to live long in harmony, Jacob chose the better course turning westward to the Promised Land. Esau headed to Seir to become the father of the Edomites. The twins did not meet again until their father's death (35:27–29).

From Succoth, Jacob traveled to Shechem, where he built an altar to God. The son of the city ruler raped Jacob's daughter, Dinah. Jacob's sons demanded that the Shechemites be circumcised before any intermarriages were permitted. The leading citizens followed the king in the request. They hoped to absorb the Hebrews' wealth and property into their own. While the men of Shechem were recovering from surgery and unable to defend themselves, Simeon and Levi killed them to avenge their sister. Jacob condemned their actions, but had to leave Shechem.

From Shechem, he returned to Bethel. Once again he received the patriarchal promises. Losses and grief characterized this period. The death of his mother's nurse (35:8; 24:59) was followed by the death of his beloved wife Rachel while giving birth to Benjamin at Ephrath (35:19; 48:7). About the same time Reuben forfeited the honor of being the eldest son by sexual misconduct (35:22). Finally, the death of Jacob's father, who had been robbed of companionship with both sons, brought Jacob and Esau together again at the family burial site in Hebron.

Although Chapters 37—50 revolve around Joseph, Jacob is still the central figure. The self-willed older sons come and go at his bidding.

Descent to Egypt When severe famine gripped Canaan, Jacob and his sons set out for Egypt. At Beer-sheba Jacob received further assurance of God's favor (46:1–4). Jacob dwelt in the land of Goshen until his death. Jacob bestowed the blessing not only upon his favorite son Joseph, but also upon Joseph's two oldest sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. He was finally laid to rest at Hebron in the cave Abraham had purchased (50:12–14).

Four New Testament passages recall events in his life. The woman at the well in Sychar declared to Jesus that Jacob provided the well (John 4:12). Stephen mentioned the famine and Jacob's journey to Egypt in the course of his defense before the Sanhedrin (Acts 7:8–16). Paul presented Jacob as an example of the sovereign choice of God and of the predestination of the elect (Rom. 9:10–13). The writer of Hebrews held up Jacob as one of the examples of active faith (Heb. 11:9,20–22).

Jacob's Character Throughout the narrative a persistent faith in the God of the fathers shines through. Jacob's life was a story of conflict. He always seemed to be running from someone or something—from Esau, from Laban, or from famine in Canaan. His life, like that of all Israelites, was a checkered history of rebellion and flight.

Jacob is no ideal. Jacob's better nature struggled with his sinful self. What raised Jacob above himself was his reverent, indestructible longing for the salvation of his God.

Jacob's Religion As the religion of Israel and thus the roots of Christianity claim to derive from the patriarchs, it is necessary to attempt to understand Jacob's spiritual life. See God of the Fathers.

Jacob's religion was consistent with the beliefs and practices of his fathers. He received instruction from Isaac concerning the history of Abraham, covenant, and the great promises. Jacob encountered God at Bethel at the moment of greatest need in his life. He was fleeing from home to distant unknown relatives. A secondhand religion would not do. Jacob's dream was his first-hand encounter with God. The threefold promise of land, descendants, and a blessing to all nations were personalized for him. Jacob saw in the vision the majesty and glory of God. At Bethel Jacob worshiped God and vowed to take Yahweh as his God.

At Peniel, Jacob wrestled face-to-face with God. He saw how weak he was before God. It taught him the value of continued prayer from one who is helpless. Jacob emerged from Peniel willing to let his life fall into God's control. He was wounded but victorious. God gave him a crippled body but a strengthened faith. It was a new Jacob—Israel—who hobbled off to meet Esau. He had learned obedience through suffering.

Theological Significance God did not chose Jacob because of what he was but because of what he could become. His life is a long history of discipline, chastisement, and purification by affliction. Not one of his misdeeds went unpunished. He sowed deception and reaped the same, first from Laban and then from his own sons.

Jacob's story is a story of conflict. The note of conflict is even heard before his birth (Gen. 25:22–23). However, in the midst of the all-too-human quarrels over family and fortune, God was at work protecting and prospering His blessed.

With the other patriarchs God acted directly, but with Jacob God seemed to be withdrawn at times. Yet, God was no less at work. He worked through unsavory situations and unworthy persons. Even in Jacob's web of conflict and tragedy, God's hand guided, though half-hidden.

Gary D. Baldwin

JACOB'S WELL A place in Samaria where Jesus stopped to rest as He traveled from Judea to Galilee (John 4:6). There He met and conversed with a Samaritan woman on the subject of living water. The Old Testament contains no reference to it. It was located near the Samaritan city of Sychar. The well currently shown as the scene of the encounter of Jesus with the Samaritan woman certainly is an ancient well and is generally accepted to be the place referred to in the Gospel. See Jacob; Sychar.

JADA (Jā′ dȧ) Personal name meaning, "he knew." Grandson of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:28,32).

JADAH (Jā′ dah) Abbreviated form of personal name Jehoaddah meaning, "Yah adorned." NIV translation based on early Greek and Hebrew manuscripts for Jarah. See Jarah.

JADDAI (Jăd′ dâi) Modern translations' spelling of Jadau based on textual notes by earliest Hebrew scribes. See Jadau.

JADDUA (Jăd′ dū ȧ) Personal name meaning, "well-known." 1. Levite who placed his seal on Nehemiah's covenant (Neh. 10:22). 2. A high priest, probably at the end of the Persian period when Alexander the Great approached Jerusalem about 333 B.C. (Neh. 12:11,22).

JADE See Jewelry, Jewels; Precious Stones; Minerals and Metals.

JADON (Jā′ dŏn) Short form of personal name

Well in the city of Sychar revered by tradition as Jacob's Well.

meaning, "Yah rules" or "to be frail." Man from Meronoth near Gibeon who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:7).

JADUA (jă dū ȧ) KJV form of the name of a returned Exile with a foreign wife (Ezra 10:43). Modern translations render the name Jaddai.

JAEL (Jā′ ēl) Personal name meaning, "mountain goat." Wife of Heber the Kenite (Judg. 4:17). She received the Canaanite leader Sisera as he fled following his defeat by the Israelites under Deborah and Barak. Jael assassinated Sisera. Her action is celebrated in the Song of Deborah (Judg. 5:24–27). See Deborah.

JAGUR (Jā′ gûr) Place name meaning, "pile of stones." Village on southeastern border of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:21). Its precise location is not known.

JAH (Jäh) Short form of divine name Yahweh in Psalm 68:4 (KJV) and in many proper names. See God; Yahweh.

JAHATH (Jā′ hăth) Personal name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "God will grab up." 1. Member of clan of Zorathites in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:2). 2. Great grandson of Levi (1 Chron. 6:20; compare v. 43). 3. A leader of the Levites in time of David (1 Chron. 23:10–11). 4. Levite in the line of Eliezer in the clan of Izhar (1 Chron. 24:22). 5. Levite overseer of Temple repair under King Josiah (2 Chron. 34:12).

JAHAZ (Jā′ hăz) Moabite place name perhaps meaning, "landsite." As they journeyed from the wilderness to the Promised Land, Israel defeated King Sihon there (Num. 21:23–24; Deut. 2:32–33; Judg. 11:20–21). Isaiah's oracle against Moab described the isolated city of Jahaz as hearing the mourning of Heshbon and Elealeh (Isa. 15:4). Jeremiah issued a similar warning (48:34; compare v. 21). The name also appears with the Hebrew locative ah ending, thus being spelled Jahaza or Jahazah. Jahzah is also a variant spelling. It became part of the tribal territory of Reuben (Josh. 13:18) and a city of the Levites (Josh. 21:36; compare 1 Chron. 6:78). On the Moabite stone, King Mesha of Moab claims an Israelite king (perhaps Jehu) built Jahaz and used it as a base in his unsuccessful fight against Mesha, Chemosh, the Moabite god driving the Israelites out. Mesha then annexed the city to Dibon. It has been variously located at Libb, six miles north of Dibon; Aleiyan; khirbet el-Medeiyineh; and khirbet Iskander, four miles north of Dibon, being the most popular suggestions.

JAHAZA (Jȧ hā′ zȧ) KJV alternate spelling for Jahaz. See Jahaz.

JAHAZAH An alternate KJV form of Jahaz (Josh. 21:36; Jer. 48:21). See Jahaz.

JAHAZIAH (Jā' hȧ zī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh looked." Person who opposed Ezra's plan to call for divorce in the mixed marriages (Ezra 10:15). Note the alternative interpretation of a difficult Hebrew text by KJV.

JAHAZIEL (Jȧ·hā' zī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "Yah looks." 1. Benjaminite military hero who supported David against Saul, also of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 12:4). 2. Priest whom David appointed to blow the trumpet before the ark (1 Chron. 16:6). 3. A Levite of the clan of Hebron (1 Chron. 23:19; 24:23). 4. A Levite and a son of Asaph who received the Spirit of the Lord and prophesied, promising victory for Jehoshaphat and his people (2 Chron. 20:14–19). 5. Clan leader who led 300 men among the exiles returning to Jerusalem with Ezra (Ezra 8:5).

JAHDAI (Jăh' dā ī) Personal name meaning, "Yah leads." A descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:47).

JAHDIEL (Jăh' dī ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God rejoices." Military hero and leader in the East Manasseh tribe (1 Chron. 5:24).

JAHDO (Jăh' dō) Personal name meaning, "his rejoicing." A member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14).

JAHLEEL (Jăh' lė ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God shows Himself to be friendly" or "he waits for God." A son of Zebulun and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:14) who became a clan leader in tribe of Zebulun (Num. 26:26).

JAHLEELITE (Jăh' lė ĕl īte) Clan in tribe of Zebulun (Num. 26:26).

JAHMAI (Jăh' mā ī) Personal name meaning, "He protects me." Grandson of Issachar, great grandson of Jacob, and clan leader in tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:2).

JAHWEH See Yahweh.

JAHZAH (Jăh' zah) Variant form of Jahaz. See Jahaz.

JAHZEEL (Jăh' zė ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God apportions." Son of Naphtali, grandson of Jacob, and clan leader in tribe of Naphtali (Gen. 46:24; Num. 26:48). Jahziel (1 Chron. 7:13) represents a variant spelling.

JAHZEELITE (Jăh' zė ĕl īte) Clan in tribe of Naphtali. See Jahzeel.

JAHZEIAH (Jăh zē' iah) Modern translation spelling of Jahaziah (Ezra 10:15). See Jahaziah.

JAHZERAH (Jăh' zĕ rah) Personal name of uncertain meaning, possibly "careful"; "crafty"; or "let him turn back." A priest (1 Chron. 9:12). A similar list in Nehemiah 11:13 lists Ahasai instead of Jahzerah.

JAHZIEL An alternate NIV form of Jahzeel (Gen. 46:24; 1 Chron. 7:13). See Jahzeel.

JAILER The keeper of a prison (Acts 16:23). See Prison, Prisoners.

JAIR (Jā' ĭr) Abbreviated place name meaning, "Jah shines forth." 1. Son of Manasseh who took possession of a number of villages in Gilead (Num. 32:41). See Manasseh. 2. A Gileadite who judged Israel for twenty-two years (Judg. 10:3–5). He was one of the so-called minor judges. His function probably was primarily judicial rather than military. He is described as having had thirty sons and thirty cities. At his death, he was buried in Camon. See Judges. 3. Father of Elhanan (1 Chron. 20:5), whose name comes from a different Hebrew word possibly meaning, "Jah protects." His name is Jaare-oregim in 2 Samuel 21:19, though some translators would read the text "Jair of Bethlehem" (REB). 4. A Benjamite who was the ancestor of Mordecai, Esther's guardian (Esther 2:5).

JAIRITE (Jā ĭr īte) Member of clan of Jair probably from Havvoth-jair, though possibly from Kiriath-jearim (1 Sam. 20:26). See Jair.

JAIRUS (Jâi' rŭs) Greek form of Hebrew personal name Jair meaning, "Jah will enlighten." Synagogue official who came to Jesus seeking healing for his twelve-year-old daughter (Mark 5:22). Before Jesus arrived at Jairus' house, however, the little girl died. Jesus reassured Jairus and entered the house with Peter, James, and John. Taking the girl by the hand, Jesus restored her to life, showing His power over death.

JAKAN (Jā' kan) Personal name perhaps meaning, "he was fast." Descendant of or clan inhabiting territory of Seir (1 Chron. 1:42 according to KJV and Hebrew spelling). The Chronicles list repeats that of Genesis 36:27 which reads, "Achan." Modern translations spell the name Akan or Jaakan here. (Compare Deut. 10:6; Num. 33:31–32). See Achan; Jaakan.

JAKEH A personal name meaning "prudent." Jakeh was the father or ancestor of Agur (Prov. 30:1).

JAKIM (Jā' kĭm) Personal name meaning, "He caused to stand." 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin living in Ajalon (1 Chron. 8:19). 2. Head of the twelfth division of priests (1 Chron. 24:12).

JAKIN (Jā′ kĭn) NIV spelling of Jachin. See Jachin.

JAKINITES (Jā′ kī nītes) NIV spelling of Jachinite. See Jachinite.

JALAM (Jā′ lam) Personal name meaning, "their ibex or mountain goat" or "he is hidden or dark." Son of Esau and grandson of Isaac (Gen. 36:5), a clan leader among the Edomites (Gen. 36:18). Some interpreters emend the Hebrew text of Psalm 55:19 to read, "Ishmael and Jalam, and the inhabitants of the east all together," but this is done without any textual support. KJV, REB spell the name Jaalam.

JALON (Jā′ lŏn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Member of tribe of Judah and son of otherwise unknown Ezra (1 Chron. 4:17).

JAMBRES (Jăm′ brēs) See Jannes.

JAMES (Jāmes) English form of Jacob, and the name of three men of the New Testament. See Jacob.

1. James, the son of Zebedee and brother of John (Matt. 4:21; 10:2; Mark 1:19; 3:17; Luke 5:10). As one of the twelve disciples (Acts 1:13), he, with Peter and John, formed Jesus' innermost circle of associates. These three were present when Jesus raised Jairus' daughter (Mark 5:37; Luke 8:51), witnessed the transfiguration (Matt. 17:1; Mark 9:2; Luke 9:28), and were summoned by Christ for support during His agony in Gethsemane (Matt. 26:36–37; Mark 14:32–34).

Perhaps because of James' and John's fiery fanaticism, evidenced as they sought to call down fire from heaven on the Samaritan village refusing to receive Jesus and the disciples (Luke 9:52–54), Jesus called the brothers "Boanerges" or "sons of thunder" (Mark 3:17). James' zeal was revealed in a more selfish manner as he and John (their mother, on their behalf, in Matt. 20:20–21) sought special positions of honor for the time of Christ's glory (Mark 10:35–40). They were promised, however, only a share in His suffering.

Indeed, James was the first of the twelve to be martyred (Acts 12:2). His execution (about A.D. 44), by order of King Herod Agrippa I of Judea, was part of a larger persecution in which Peter was arrested (Acts 12:1–3).

2. James, the son of Alphaeus, one of the twelve disciples (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13). He is not distinguished by name in any occasion reported in the Gospels or Acts.

He may be "James the younger," whose mother, Mary, was among the women at Jesus' crucifixion and tomb (Matt. 27:56; Mark 15:40; 16:1; Luke 24:10). In John 19:25, this Mary is called the wife of Cleophas, perhaps to be identified with Alphaeus. See Cleophas; Mary.

3. James, the brother of Jesus. Bible students debate the precise meaning of "the Lord's brother" (Gal. 1:19). Possibilities are the literal brother or stepbrother, a cousin, or intimate friend and associate. The literal meaning is to be preferred.

During the Lord's ministry, the brothers of Jesus (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3; 1 Cor. 9:5) were not believers (John 7:3–5; compare Matt. 12:46–50; Mark 3:31–35; Luke 8:19–21). Paul specifically mentioned a resurrection appearance by Jesus to James (1 Cor. 15:7). After the resurrection and ascension, the brothers are said to have been with the twelve and the other believers in Jerusalem (Acts 1:14).

Paul, seeking out Peter in Jerusalem after his conversion, reported "other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother" (Gal. 1:19). In time, James assumed the leadership of the Jerusalem church, originally held by Peter. Evidently, such was achieved not through a power struggle but by James' constancy with the church while Peter and other apostles traveled.

In a Jerusalem conference called regarding Paul's Gentile mission, James presided as spokesman for the Jerusalem church (Acts 15). See Apostolic Council.

James perceived his calling as to the "circumcised," that is, the Jews (Gal. 2:9), and is portrayed as loyal to Jewish tradition. He was, however, unwilling to make the law normative for all responding to God's new action in Christ.

The death of James reportedly was at the order of the high priest Ananus, and was either by stoning (according to Flavius Josephus, first century historian of the Jews) or by being cast down from the Temple tower (after Hegesippus, early Christian writer, quoted by the third-century Christian historian Eusebius). These accounts of James's death (about A.D. 66), are not confirmed in the New Testament. Joseph E. Glaze

JAMES, THE LETTER The Letter of James belongs to the section of the New Testament usually described as the "General Epistles." The letter is one of exhortation for practical Christianity. The author stated principles of conduct and then frequently provided poignant illustrations. The author's concerns were clearly more practical and less abstract than those of any other New Testament writer. No other New Testament book has received criticism to the extent encountered by this epistle.

Author Verse one of the letter identifies James as the "servant of God" and the author of the letter. Several possibilities for proper identification of this "James" include (1) James the brother of John and the son of Zebedee, (2) James the son of Alphaeus, one of the twelve apostles, or (3) James the half brother of Jesus, a younger son of Mary and of Joseph. Of the three, James the brother of the Lord is the most likely choice. See James 3.

Tradition of the early church fathers universally ascribes the letter to James, the pastor of the church in Jerusalem.

The general content of the letter is a call to holiness of life. This accords well with what is known of the life of James. Church tradition noted his exceptional piety, reporting that the knees of the saintly James were like those of a camel due to the unusual amounts of time spent on his knees before God. The author of the epistle was also steeped in the Old Testament outlook in general and in Judaism in particular.

On the other hand, James the brother of John, the son of Zebedee cannot be the author since he became an early martyr (Acts 12:1–2), his death almost certainly predating the writing of the Letter of James. Little is known of James the son of Alphaeus—too little to conjecture that he was involved in the writing of the epistle. Scholarly theories that later disciples of James gathered his teachings and published them in a Greek style too exalted for James are not necessary to explain the evidence.

Recipients Although some passages appear to address unbelievers (Jas. 5:1–6), the letter is addressed to "the twelve tribes in the Dispersion" (1:1 NRSV). Reference to the "twelve tribes" suggests that the recipients were Jews. Specifically, reference is made to the "Jews of the dispersion." This phrase recalled the scattering of the Jewish nation first in 722 B.C. when the Northern Kingdom of Israel fell to the Assyrian Empire and finally in 586 B.C. when the Southern Kingdom of Judah fell to the marauding Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar.

However, James clearly had a still more narrow focus. Apparently, James had in mind the "Christian" Jews of dispersion. This may be conjectured from James' identification of himself (1:1) as a servant of Jesus Christ as well as from references like having "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2:1).

Date Supposing an early date of writing may account for the peculiarity of the address. James' martyrdom by A.D. 66 provides us with the latest possible date of writing. Evidences of a very early date, such as the mention of those coming into the "assembly" (Greek, sunagogē), point to a time very early in Christian history, perhaps prior to the Jerusalem Conference in A.D. 49–50.

Though some Bible students date James after A.D. 60, many scholars are convinced that James is the first book of the New Testament to be written, some dating it as early as A.D. 48. As such, it provides the reader with a rather remarkable insight into the developing concerns of the church in its earliest era.

Occasion The letter was evidently the product of concerns on the part of early pastoral leadership about the ethical standards of early Christians. Therefore, the subject matter includes an analysis in chapter 1 of how to respond to temptation and trial (1:1–18). The necessity of "doing" the word as well as "hearing" the word is the focus of James 1:19–27. Treatment of the poor and the appropriate management of wealth are topics of concern in James 2:1–13 and 5:1–6. The waywardness of the tongue and the necessity of its taming are discussed in chapter 3. Conflicts and attitudes to other Christians is the subject of chapter 4. Appropriate responses to life's demands and pressures are suggested in chapter 5.

James' Contributions Some scholars have compared James to the Old Testament Book of Proverbs. In many respects the two are quite different. However, the comparison is valid from the perspective of ethical instruction. The theme of the book is that practical religion must manifest itself in works which are superior to those of the world. The essence of such works covers the areas of personal holiness and service to others, such as visiting "the fatherless and widows," and keeping onself "unspotted from the world" (1:27). These "works" further demand active resistance to the devil (4:7), submission to God (4:7), and even brokenhearted repentance for sins (4:9).

Patience in the wake of trials and temptations is the subject both of the introduction and of the conclusion of the epistle. Readers are to "count it all joy" when trials come (1:2) and expect reward for endurance of those trials (1:12). In James 5:7–11 James returns to the subject, citing both Job and the prophets as appropriate examples of patience in the midst of tribulation.

Questions and Challenges of James Two difficult and widely debated passages in James challenge Bible students. In 2:14–26, James argued that "faith if it hath not works is dead" (2:17). This apparent contradiction to the teaching of the apostle Paul has caused much consternation among some theologians. For example, Martin Luther referred to the book as "an epistle of straw" when compared with Paul's writings.

More careful exegesis has shown that the contradiction is apparent rather than real. James argued that a faith that is only a "confessing faith," such as that of the demons (2:19), is not a saving faith at all. The demons believed in God in the sense of "intellectual assent," but they were void of belief in the sense of "commitment." Orthodoxy of doctrine which does not produce a sanctified life-style is, in the final analysis, worthless.

In 5:13–18 James spoke of healing and its means. Actually, this passage only treats the subject of healing incidentally. The actual purpose of the discussion is to stress the effectiveness of the earnest prayer of a righteous man (5:15–16). This is illustrated by a reference to Elijah, whose prayers were sufficient alternately to shut up the heavens and then to open them (5:17–18).

Whatever else may be intended, clearly the prayer of faith "saves the sick." The anointing oil, whether medicinal, as some have argued, or symbolic, as others have held, is not the healing agent. God heals, when He chooses to heal (4:14), as a response to the fervent prayers of righteous men.

The Letter of James remains of lasting value and consequence to the Christian confronted by an increasingly secular world. Christ ought to make a difference in one's life. That is the theme and mandate of James.

Outline

I. Salutation (1:1)
II. True Religion Is Developed by Trials and Testing (1:2–15).
  A. Joy is the correct response to times of testing (1:2).
  B. The testing of faith can result in steadfastness which, when mature, enables us to be perfect, complete, and lacking in nothing (1:3–4).
  C. True wisdom comes from God and is available to those who ask in faith, not doubting (1:5–8).
  D. Wealth may be a test of faith, not a proof of faith (1:9–11).
  E. Perseverance under trial leads to blessing (1:12).
  F. Temptation comes from within, not from God, and is to be resisted (1:13–15).
III. True Religion Is Initiated by Faith (1:16—2:26).
  A. Salvation by faith is a gift from God, as are all good gifts (1:16–17).
  B. Salvation as an expression of God's will is related to God's Word (1:18–27).
    1. We are to receive God's Word (1:18–21).
    2. We are to do God's Word, not just hear it (1:22–25).
  C. Saving faith does not show favoritism but shows love to all (2:1–13).
  D. Saving faith issues in godly attitudes and actions (2:14–26).
IV. True Religion Is Guided by Wisdom (3:1–18).
  A. The wise person controls the tongue (3:1–12).
  B. Earthly wisdom is characterized by evil attitudes and actions (3:13–16).
  C. The wise person's life is characterized by moral behavior (3:17–18).
V. True Religion Is Demonstrated by Works (4:1—5:12).
  A. Avoid acting selfishly instead of asking God (4:1–3).
  B. Avoid being friendly with the world (4:4–5).
  C. Possess the proper attitude toward self—being humble, not proud or presumptuous (4:6–10).
  D. Avoid speaking against or judging other Christians (4:11–12).
  E. Avoid presuming on God's time (4:13–16).
  F. Do not fail to do what you know is right (4:17).
  G. Avoid depending on wealth (5:1–3).
  H. Avoid treating persons unjustly (5:4–6).
  I. Do not be impatient, for the Lord is coming (5:7–11).
  J. Do not take oaths (5:12).
VI. True Religion Is Expressed in Prayer (5:13–20).
  A. Prayer, including intercession, is a significant part of true religion (5:13–16).
    1. Prayer is a proper response to suffering and illness (5:13–14).
    2. Prayers are to be offered in faith, with right motives (5:15).
    3. Prayer includes confession of sins (5:16*a*).
  B. The righteousness of the person praying is related to the effectiveness of the prayer (5:16*b*).
  C. All humans can pray and be heard (5:17–18).
  D. Intercession for sinners is an important Christian responsibility (5:19–20).

Paige Patterson

JAMIN (Jā′ mĭn) Personal name meaning, "on the right" or "good luck." 1. Son of Simeon and grandson of Jacob, a clan leader in tribe of Simeon (Ex. 6:5; Num. 26:12). 2. Grandson of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:27). 3. A Levite who interpreted the law for the people as Ezra read it (Neh. 8:7). 4. A component of name Benjamin meaning "right hand."

JAMINITE (Jā′ mĭn īte) Member of clan headed by Jamin. See Jamin.

JAMLECH (Jām′ lĕch) Personal name meaning, "May He cause to be king" known in other Near Eastern cultures. Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:34).

JANAI (Jā′ nā ī) Personal name meaning, "May He answer me." Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:12).

JANGLING, VAIN KJV expression for idle talk (1 Tim. 1:6). Translation alternatives include: foolish (TEV), fruitless (NAS), or vain (RSV) discussion; meaningless talk (NIV, NRSV); and a wilderness of words (REB).

JANIM (Jā′ nĭm) Modern translation spelling of Janum following written Hebrew text (Josh. 15:53). See Janum.

JANNA (Jăn′ nà) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Ancestor of Jesus and head of final list of seven names before Jesus (Luke 3:24). Modern translations spell Jannai.

J

JANNAI (Jăn′ nâi) Modern translations' spelling of Janna. See Janna.

JANNES AND JAMBRES (Jăn′ nēs and Jăm′ brēs) Two opposers of Moses and Aaron (2 Tim. 3:8). Though the names do not appear in the Old Testament, rabbinic tradition identified Jannes and Jambres as being among those Egyptian magicians who sought to duplicate for Pharaoh the miracles performed by Moses (Ex. 7:11). The Damascus Document from the Qumran Sect describes the two as brothers raised up by Belial, the evil one. Eusebius of Caesarea described them as sacred scribes of Egypt. The Jewish tradition makes several mentions of them, but in the end they could not match God's power displayed through Moses.

JANOAH (Jå nō′ ah) Place name meaning, "he rests." 1. Town in tribal territory of Ephraim (Josh. 16:6–7). It is probably modern khirbet Janun about seven miles south of Nablus. KJV transliterates the Hebrew ah meaning "towards" and so spells Janohah here. 2. City in northern Israel that Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria (744–727 B.C.), captured from Pekah, king of Israel (752–732 B.C.), about 733 B.C. Its location is uncertain, suggestions including khirbet Janun; Janua, six miles south of Megiddo, and Janoah, nine miles east of Acco. Recently, interpreters have sought to establish a military pattern in the report and locate Janoah at khirbet Niha just south of Kefar Giladi on the road south from Abel-beth-Maacah.

JANOHAH (Jå nō′ hah) Variant spelling of Janoah. See Janoah.

JANUM (Jā′ nŭm) Place name of uncertain meaning, perhaps "slumbering." Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:53) near Hebron. The location is not known. KJV, NAS spelling follows vocalization by early Hebrew scribes. See Janim.

JAPHETH (Jā′ phĕth) Personal name meaning, "may he have space." One of Noah's three sons, either the youngest or next to youngest (Gen. 5:32). Genesis 10:2 identifies Japheth's sons as Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras. One of the titans of Greek mythology had a similar name. These names point to Japheth as having been the progenitor of the Indo-European peoples who lived to the north and west of Israel, farthest from Israel. Genesis 9:27 pronounces God's blessing on Japheth and his descendants, including living with Shem, thus getting to dwell in the land of promise, and being served by the Canaanites, thus sharing the position as God's people. Here is an early indication of non-Israelites having a share with God's people. See Noah; Table of Nations.

JAPHIA (Jå·phī′ å) Place and personal name meaning, "place situated high above" or "may He bring shining light." 1. Border town of tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:3). In the Amarna Letters, the Egyptian pharaoh required the town to supply forced laborers after Labayu of Shechem destroyed Shunem. It is modern Yafa, southwest of Nazareth. 2. King of Lachish who joined southern coalition against Joshua and met death by cave of Makkedah (Josh. 10:1–27,31–32). 3. Son born to David in Jerusalem by unnamed wife (2 Sam. 5:15).

JAPHLET (Jăph′ lĕt) Personal name meaning, "He rescues." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:32–33).

JAPHLETI (Jăph′ lēt ī) Place name according to KJV but name of tribal group—Japhletites—according to modern translations (Josh. 16:3). The clan's territory lay on border between Ephraim and Benjamin, though the clan apparently belonged to Asher. See Japhlet.

JAPHLETITE (Jăph′ lē tīte) See Japhleti.

JAPHO (Jā′ phō) KJV, TEV spelling for Joppa in Old Testament. See Joppa.

JAR See Pottery in Bible Times; Vessels and Utensils.

JARAH (Jā′ rah) Personal name meaning, "goat." Descendant of King Saul (1 Chron. 9:42), apparently the same as Jehoadah in 8:36, the words being spelled the same except for one similarly written letter in Hebrew. Compare 1 Chronicles 10:6.

JAREB (Jā′ rĕb) Personal name meaning, "the great one" or "he contends" (in court). Modern translations see the term as part of a Near Eastern expression "the great king" often applied to the king of Assyria, as in the Aramaic treaty inscriptions from Sefire and in the Assyrian equivalent in 2 Kings 18:19. Hosea accused Israel and Judah of turning to the "great king" of Assyria, probably Tiglath-pileser III (at least for Judah), to cure their ills rather than going to Yahweh, the great King of the universe and the Great Physician (Hos. 5:13). Hosea pronounced just punishment for Israel, their "calf-god" (REB) would be carried to Babylon as tribute to "the great king" (10:5–6).

JARED (Jā′ rĕd) Personal name meaning, "slave." 1. Father of Enoch (Gen. 5:15–20). 2.

Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:18; English translations usually spell the same Hebrew word Jered here rather than Jared).

JARESIAH (Jâr·e·sī′ ah) KJV spelling of Jaareshiah. See Jaareshiah.

JARHA (Jär′ hà) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Egyptian slave used by his master Sheshan to maintain the family line in clan of Jerahmeel and tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:34–35).

JARIB (Jā′ rĭb) Personal name meaning, "He contends against" or "is legal opponent of" (see Ps. 35:1; Isa. 49:25). 1. Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:24, but called Jachin in Num. 26:12). See Jachin. 2. A Levite who served as messenger for Ezra in his search for Levites to accompany him back to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:16). 3. Priest who pledged under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to remove the temptation to worship the foreigners' gods (Ezra 10:18).

JARMUTH (Jär′ mŭth) Place name meaning, "height" or "swelling in the ground." 1. City whose king joined southern coalition against Joshua and Gibeon (Josh. 10). Joshua "stored" the king in the cave of Makkedah before shaming him and slaying him (compare 12:11). It lay in the western "lowlands," the "foothills" (NIV) or Shephelah (REB) of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:33,35). It is identified with modern tell Jarmuth three miles southwest of Beth Shemesh and fifteen miles southwest of Jerusalem. An Amarna letter from tell el-Hesi mentions it. Brief excavations have shown Early Bronze and Stone Age remains but as yet nothing from the Late Bronze or Early Iron ages. In Nehemiah's time Jewish settlers lived there (Neh. 11:29). 2. A city of the Levites in the tribal territory of Issachar (Jos. 21:29; compare 19:21; 1 Chron. 6:58, both spelled differently and differing from 1. above; thus spelling of Remeth, Ramoth). This city may be located at modern Kaukab el-Hawa.

JAROAH (Jà rō′ ah) Personal name meaning, "smooth, gentle" or "shown mercy." Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14).

JASHAR, BOOK OF (Jā′sh′ ar) An ancient written collection of poetry quoted by Bible authors. See Books.

JASHEN (Jā′ shĕn) Personal name meaning, "sleepy." Member of David's elite military corps, the "thirty" or groups of threes perhaps (2 Sam. 23:32). First Chronicles 11:34 apparently spells the same name Hashem and calls him the Gizonite. See Gizonite.

JASHER (Jā′ shēr) KJV spelling of Jashar. See Jashar.

JASHOBEAM (Jà shō′ bė ăm) Personal name meaning, "the uncle (or people) will return." Warrior of Saul's tribe of Benjamin who supported David at Ziklag as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:6). He is listed first among the "chief of the mighty men whom David had" (1 Chron. 11:11). Some interpreters would say the text listed him as a Hachmonite, while others would see "a Hachmonite" as reference to a different individual. Second Samuel 23:8 spells the name Joshebbasshebeth (see modern translations), the last part of which represents the Hebrew word for shame, at times used by scribes instead of an original name containing the Canaanite god's name Baal, leading some interpreters to see the original name here as Yishbaal. Some Greek manuscripts actually read Ishbaal. In 2 Samuel 23:8, REB reads Ishbaal. KJV simply translates there: "that sat in the seat." Jashobeam commanded David's first course or division administering the kingdom for the first month of each year (1 Chron 27:2). Here Jashobeam is the son of Zabdiel, a descendant of Perez who belonged to the tribe of Judah. Elsewhere Jashobeam is a member of the clan of Hachmon. See Hachmonites.

JASHUB (Jā′ shŭb) Personal name meaning, "He turns to" or "He returns." The name is found in several Near Eastern cultures. 1. Clan leader in tribe of Issachar (Num. 26:24). Genesis 46:13 names him Job. 2. Man with foreign wife condemned by Ezra as bringing temptation to foreign worship into the community (Ezra 10:29). 3. Part of name of Isaiah's son (Isa. 7:3). See Shearjashub. 4. Some interpreters see a town named Jashub in Joshua 17:7, a border town of the tribe of Manasseh (REB). This would be modern Jasuf, eight miles south of Shechem.

JASHUBILEHEM (Jà shū′ bī-lē′ hĕm) Personal name meaning "Jashubites of bread" or "she returns for bread." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:22, NAS, KJV, NIV). Hebrew text has two words which modern interpreters read in different ways: but returned to Lehem (NRSV); then settled in Bethlehem (TEV).

JASHUBITE (Jā′ shŭb īte) Member of clan founded by Jashub. See Jashub.

JASIEL (Jās′ ĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God makes or acts." Military leader under David (1 Chron. 11:27 KJV). Modern translations spell name Jaasiel.

JASON (Jā′ son) Personal name often used by Jews as a substitute for Hebrew Joshua or Joseph and also used by Gentiles. 1. In Acts 17:5, Paul's host in Thessalonica. He was brought up on charges before the city officials when the angry Jewish mob were unable to find Paul (Acts 17:6– 7). The Jason mentioned in Romans 16:21 may have been the same person. He is identified as a Jew who joined Paul and others in greeting the Romans.

J

2. A Jewish high priest during the final years of Seleucid control of Palestine. His Greek name reflects the Hellenistic influence that increasingly permeated Jewish life during the period before the Maccabean revolt. See Intertestamental History.

JASPER Green chalcedony. Jasper commonly translates two Hebrew and one Greek term. The first term is used for the sixth stone in the headdress of the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13). The second term is used for a stone in the high priest's breastplate (Ex. 28:20; 39:13). This second term is rendered onyx at Ezekiel 28:13. The third term describes the face of the One seated on the throne (Rev. 4:3) and the glory of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:11,18,19). The NIV used jasper to translate an obscure Hebrew term at Job 28:18. Other translation options include: alabaster (REB), crystal (NAS, NRSV, TEV), and pearls (KJV). See Minerals and Metals.

JATHNIEL (Jăth′ nĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God gives." A Levite gatekeeper (1 Chron. 26:2).

JATTIR (Jăt′ tĭr) Place name meaning, "the remainder." Town in the hills of the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:48). David gave some of war booty from victory over Amalekites to Jattir (1 Sam. 30:27). Joshua reserved it for the Levites (Josh. 20:14). It was located near modern khirbet Attir about thirteen miles south southwest of Hebron and fourteen miles northeast of Beersheba.

JAVAN (Jā′ văn) Personal name meaning, "Greece." Son of Japheth (Gen. 10:2), and father of Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim (Gen. 10:4), thus the original ancestor of Greek peoples. Elsewhere in the Old Testament, the name Javan is used to denote Greece. See Greece; Table of Nations.

JAVELIN A light spear thrown as a weapon. See Weapons; Arms and Armor.

JAW Either of two boney structures that border the mouth and bear the teeth. The taking of captives in war is sometimes pictured using the images of animals led with bridles in their jaws (Isa. 30:28) or fish carried away with hooks in theirs (Ezek. 29:4; 38:4). According to one understanding of Hosea 11:4, God, pictured as a farmer, "lifts the yoke from their jaws," that is, looses the yoke so that the oxen might better feed.

JAZER (Jā′ zēr) Place name meaning, "May He help." Amorite city state Israel conquered while marching across the land east of the Jordan towards the Promised Land (Num. 21:32). The tribe of Gad rebuilt and settled Jazer (Num. 32:35; compare Josh. 13:25). Joshua assigned it to the Levites (Josh. 21:39). Isaiah pronounced judgment on Jazer while preaching against Moab (Isa. 16:8–9). Jeremiah echoed him (Jer. 48:32). David found outstanding leaders there (1 Chron. 26:32). It was also an important city in the period between the Testaments (1 Maccabbees 5:8). Interpreters debate Jazer's exact location. German archaeologists appear to favor tell el-Areme, while Israelis point to khirbet es-Sar about eight miles west of Amman. Others point to khirbet Jazzir about two miles south of es-Salt.

JAZIZ (Jā′ zĭz) Personal name meaning, "he goads." Chief shepherd under David. He was probably a foreigner. See Hagrite.

JEALOUSY Jealousy is used in three senses in Scripture; (1) as intolerance of rivalry or unfaithfulness; (2) as a disposition suspicious of rivalry or unfaithfulness; and (3) as hostility towards a rival or one believed to enjoy an advantage. Sense 3 approximates envy. God is jealous for His people Israel in sense 1, that is, God is intolerant of rival gods (Ex. 20:5; 34:14; Deut. 4:24; 5:9) One expression of God's jealousy for Israel is God's protection of His people from enemies. Thus Statuette of bearded Near Eastern warrior holding a spear, or javelin, from ca. 1500 B.C.

God's jealousy includes avenging Israel (Ezek. 36:6; 39:25; Nah. 1:2; Zech. 1:14; 8:2). Phineas is described as jealous with God's jealousy (Num. 25:11,13, sometimes translated zealous for God). Elijah is similarly characterized as jealous (or zealous) for God (1 Kings 19:10,14). In the New Testament Paul speaks of his divine jealousy for the Christians at Corinth (2 Cor. 11:2).

Numbers 5:11–30 concerns the process by which a husband suspicious of his wife's unfaithfulness might test her. Most often human jealousy involves hostility towards a rival. Joseph's brothers were jealous (Gen. 37:11) and thus sold their brother into slavery (Acts 7:9). In Acts 17:5 a jealous group among the Jews incited the crowd against Paul. Jealousy, like envy, is common in vice lists (Rom. 13:13; 2 Cor. 12:20; Gal. 5:20–21). Jealousy is regarded as worse than wrath or anger (Prov. 27:4). James regarded jealousy (or bitter envy) as characteristic of earthy, demonic wisdom (3:14) and as the source of all disorder and wickedness (3:16). See Envy.

JEALOUSY, CEREAL OFFERING OF See Jealousy, Ordeal of.

JEALOUSY, IMAGE OF The term for an idol in Ezekiel 8:3,5. The meaning is either that the idol evokes God's jealousy or that the idol is identified with Asherah, the goddess of passionate love. (Compare 2 Kings 21:7; 2 Chron. 33:7.) See Jealousy.

JEALOUSY, ORDEAL OF A test to determine guilt or innocence of a wife suspected of adultery but who had not been caught in the act (Num. 5:11–31). The ordeal consisted of two parts: a grain offering "of memorial bringing iniquity to remembrance" (5:15) and the "bitter water that causeth the curse" (5:18). See Bitter Water.

JEALOUSY, WATER OF See Bitter Water.

JEARIM (Jē′ ȧ-rĭm) Place name meaning, "forests" or "parks." Component of several Old Testament place names including Kiriath Jearim, Mount Jearim, Fields of Jearim, and the wood of 1 Samuel 14:26. See Kiriath Jearim; Chesalon.

JEATERAI (Jė ăt′ ĕ rȧî) Personal name of uncertain meaning. A Levite (1 Chron. 6:21) perhaps to be identified with Ethni (1 Chron. 6:41).

JEATHERAI (Jē ăth′ ĕ rȧî) Spelling for Jeaterai in many modern translations. See Jeaterai.

JEBERECHIAH (Jė bĕr ė·ch̲ī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh blesses." Father of Zechariah who served as witness for Isaiah (Isa. 8:2; compare 2 Kings 18:2).

JEBEREKIAH (Jē bĕr ė kī′ ah) NIV spelling of Jeberechiah. See Jeberechiah.

JEBUS (Jē′ bŭs) Place name meaning, "trodden under foot." Name of tribe originally occupying Jerusalem and then of city (Judg. 19:10; compare Josh. 18:29; 1 Chron. 11:4). The name Jebus does not occur outside the Bible. See Jerusalem; Jebusites.

JEBUSI (Jĕb′ ū sī) KJV reading (Josh. 18:16,28) for Jebusite. See Jebus; Jebusite.

JEBUSITES (Jĕb′ ū sītes) Clan who originally controlled Jerusalem before David conquered the city. In the list of the descendants of Noah (Gen. 10) the Jebusites are traced through the line of Ham and Canaan and are listed alongside other clans such as the Amorites and Girgashites. In Joshua 10, the king of Jerusalem, Adonizedek, is considered one of the five Amorite kings who fought against Joshua.

In the time of the Judges, Jerusalem was attacked and burned by the men of Judah (Judg. 1:8), but the Jebusites were not expelled. Centuries later David captured the city and made it his capital. David purchased a stone threshing-floor from a Jebusite named Araunah (2 Sam. 24:16–24), and this later became the site of Solomon's Temple. The remnants of the Jebusites became bondservants during Solomon's reign (1 Kings 9:20–21). Jebusite names appear to be Hurrian rather than Semitic. See Jerusalem.

M. Stephen Davis

JECAMIAH (Jĕc ȧ mī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah causes to stand." 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:41). 2. Son of King Jeconiah (Jehoiachin), the Judean king exiled by Babylon (1 Chron. 3:18). English translations sometimes spell these two names differently though they are the same Hebrew name.

JECHILIAH (Jĕch̲ ī lī′ ah) NAS spelling in 2 Chronicles 26:3 following written Hebrew text. Other English translations follow early scribal note, versions, 2 Kings 15:2, reading Jecoliah. See Jecoliah.

JECHOLIAH (Jĕch̲ ō lī′ ah) KJV spelling of Jecoliah in 2 Kings 15:2. See Jecoliah; Jechiliah.

JECHONIAH (Jĕch̲ ō nī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Jah establishes." Shortened form of Jehoiachin. See Jehoiachin.

JECONIAH (Jĕc ō nī′ ah) Alternate spelling of Jehoiachin. See Jehoiachin.

JECHONIAS (Jĕch̲ ō nī′ ȧs) KJV spelling of Jeconiah in Matthew 1:11–12. See Jeconiah.

J

JECOLIAH (Jĕc ō lī′ ah) Mother of Uzziah, king of Judah (2 Kings 15:2; 2 Chron. 26:3). See Jechiliah; Jecholiah.

JEDAIAH (Jė dâi′ ah) 1. Personal name meaning, "praise Yah" or "Yah has performed a merciful deed." Man who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:10) and a descendant of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:37). 2. Personal name meaning, "Yah knows." A priest or priests heading the second course or division of priests (1 Chron. 24:7), returned from Babylonian Exile (1 Chron. 9:10; compare Ezra 2:36; Neh. 7:39; 11:10; 12:6,7,19,21). The returning Exile may be same as one from whom the prophet Zechariah received gold and silver (Zech. 6:10,14). English translations usually spell the names the same though they represent two distinct Hebrew names.

JEDIAEL (Jė dī′ ā ĕl) Personal name meaning, "the one whom God knows." 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:6,10–11). 2. Military leader under David (1 Chron. 11:45). The same or a different warrior from the tribe of Manasseh joined David when he moved to Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:20). 3. A Levite and gatekeeper (1 Chron. 26:2).

JEDIDAH (Jė dī′ dah) Personal name meaning, "darling" or "beloved." Mother of Josiah king of Judah (2 Kings 22:1).

JEDIDIAH (Jĕ dĭ dī′ ah) Personal name or nickname meaning, "Yah's darling." A similar name meaning, "El's darling" appears in the Ugaritic materials. A name God told David to give to his son Solomon (2 Sam. 12:25). Despite David's sin with Bathsheba and the death of the child of their sinful relationship, God showed His love to their child Solomon, thus underlining God's forgiving nature and His continued commitment to David and his royal house.

JEDUTHUN (Jė dû′ thŭn) Personal name meaning, "praise." Prophetic musician and Levite in the service of King David (1 Chron. 25:1). The names Asaph and Heman appear along with that of Jeduthun as original ancestors of Temple musicians. In 1 Chronicles 15:17, however, Asaph and Heman are associated with Ethan, suggesting that Ethan and Jeduthun may be different names for the same person. If that is the case, Jeduthun would have been the son of Kushaiah and a member of the clan of Merari. Otherwise, nothing is known about Jeduthun's ancestry. In 1 Chronicles 25:1,3 he is said to have prophesied using musical instruments; and in 2 Chronicles 35:15 he is referred to as the king's seer, apparently working with Zadok at Gibeon (1 Chron. 16:37–42). Three of the Psalms (39; 62; 77) include his name in their titles. The exact nature of Jeduthun's relationship to these Psalms is uncertain. See Priests and Levites; Music; Psalms.

JEEZER (Jė ē′ zēr) Personal name meaning, "where is help?" or a shortened form of "my Valley of Jehoshaphat (or the Kidron Valley) in Jerusalem showing the Church of All Nations.

J

brother helps" or "my father helps." Original head of a clan in tribe of Gilead (Num. 26:30). Apparently, the same name is intended in Joshua 17:2 where Abiezer occurs, quite probably the original name. See Abiezer. Modern translations often use spelling Iezer.

JEEZERITE (Jē' ē' zēr·īte) Member of clan of Jeezer. See Jeezer.

JEGAR-SAHADUTHA (Jē' gär-sā hȧ dū' thȧ) Aramaic place name meaning, "stone marker." Aramaic equivalent of Galeed. See Galeed.

JEHALELEEL (Jē hȧ lē' lē ĕl) Personal name meaning, "he praises God" or "God shines forth." 1. Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:16). 2. Levite whose son helped King Hezekiah purify the Temple (2 Chron. 29:12). English translations are not always consistent in transliterating this Hebrew name in its two occurrences.

JEHALELEL KJV alternate form for Jehallelel at 2 Chronicles 29:12. See Jehallelel.

JEHALLELEL (Jē hăl' lē lĕl) Modern translation spelling of Jehaleleel. See Jehaleleel.

JEHATH (Jē' hăth) NIV spelling of Jahath (1 Chron. 6:20). See Jahath.

JEHAZIEL (Jē hăz' ī ĕl) TEV spelling of Jahaziel in 1 Chronicles 23:19; 24:23. See Jahaziel.

JEHDEIAH (Jĕh dē' iah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh rejoices." 1. A Levite listed outside the twenty-four courses of Levites (1 Chron. 24:20). 2. Keeper of the royal donkeys under David (1 Chron. 27:30). His home was Meronoth.

JEHEZEKEL (Jē hē' zē kĕl) Personal name meaning, "God strengthens." Same Hebrew spelling as prophet Ezekiel. Head of twentieth course of priests (1 Chron. 24:16).

JEHEZKEL (Jē hĕz' kĕl) NAS, NIV, TEV, REB spelling of Jehezekel. See Jehezekel.

JEHIAH (Jē hī' ah) Personal name meaning, "may he live, O Yah." Guard of the ark when David brought it up from Philistine territory (1 Chron. 15:24).

JEHIEL (Jē hī' ĕl) Personal name meaning, "Let him live, O God." 1. Apparently a variant name for Jehiah (1 Chron. 15:18; compare verse 24). See Jehiah. 2. Levite musician who played the lute before the ark (1 Chron. 15:20; 16:5). 3. A leading Levite (1 Chron. 23:8). 4. Levite in charge of treasury for God's house under David (1 Chron. 29:8; compare 26:20–22). 5. Guardian of the royal sons under David (1 Chron. 27:32). 6. Son of King Jehoshaphat slain by his brother King Jehoram when the latter ascended to the throne (2 Chron. 21:1–4). 7. Levite who helped purify the Temple under King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:14) according to ancient Bible translations and scribal note; the written Hebrew text has Jehuel. Later, under Hezekiah possibly the same Jehiel served as an overseer in the Temple (2 Chron. 31:13). 8. A leading priest under Josiah who distributed large offerings to the priests for their Passover offerings (2 Chron. 35:8). 9. Father of man who returned with Ezra to Jerusalem from Babylon (Ezra 8:9). 10. Father of man who proposed that men with foreign wives divorce them in order not to tempt others to worship foreign gods under Ezra (Ezra 10:1–4). 11. Priest who agreed to divorce his foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:21). 12. Layman who agreed to divorce his foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:26).

JEHIELI (Jē hī' ē lī) Member of clan founded by Jehiel (1 Chron. 26:21–22). See Jehiel.

JEHIELITE (Jē hī' ē' līte) NAS translation of Jehieli. See Jehieli.

JEHIZKIAH (Jē hĭz kī' ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh strengthens." 1. Variant Hebrew spelling of Hezekiah (2 Kings 20:10; Isa. 1:1; 1 Chron. 4:41; 2 Chron. 28:27—33:3). 2. Man of tribe of Ephraim who prevented people of Israel from bringing war prisoners from Judah into the city after Pekah of Israel defeated Ahaz of Judah about 733 B.C. (2 Chron. 28:12).

JEHOADAH (Jē hō' ȧ dah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "Yahweh is ornamentation." Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:36), the list showing a continued interest in lineage of Saul long after his death.

JEHOADDAH (Jē hō' ăd dah) Modern translations' spelling of Jehoadah. See Jehoadah.

JEHOADDAN (Jē hō ăd' dan) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is bliss." Mother of king Amaziah of Judah (2 Kings 14:2).

JEHOADDIN (Jē hō ăd' dĭn) Variant spelling of Jehoaddan in written Hebrew text of 2 Kings 14:2, where early Hebrew scribal note has Jehoaddan in agreement with 2 Chronicles 25:1. See Jehoaddan.

JEHOAHAZ (Jē hō ȧ hăz) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh grasps hold." Two kings of Judah and one king of Israel bore this name. 1. In 2 Chronicles 21:17, the son and successor of Jehoram as king of Judah (841 B.C.). He is more frequently referred to as Ahaziah. 2. In 2 Kings

J

10:35, the son and successor of Jehu as king of Israel (814–798 B.C.). His reign is summarized in 2 Kings 13. Although 2 Kings 13:1 states that he reigned for seventeen years, a comparison of verse 1 with verse 10 seems to point to a reign of fourteen years or a coregency with his son for about three years. 3. In 2 Kings 23:30, the son and successor of Josiah as king of Judah (609 B.C.). He is also known as Shallum.

See Israel; Chronology of the Biblical Period.

JEHOASH (Jė hō′ ăsh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh gave." Variant spelling of Joash. See Joash.

JEHOHANAN (Jē hō′ hā năn) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is gracious." 1. A priest in whose Temple quarters Ezra refreshed himself and mourned for the sin of the people in taking foreign wives (Ezra 10:6). This Jehohanan is sometimes equated with the high priest of Nehemiah 12:22–23 who is considered then to be a grandson of the high priest Eliashib and also to be the high priest mentioned in the Elephantine Papyri as serving about 411 B.C. Such evidence is then used to date the ministry of Ezra to about 398 B.C. rather than being in the time of Nehemiah. See Ezra. The relationships between the priestly Eliashibs and Jehohanans of Scripture are too unclear to make dating decisions on them. This Jehohanan may have been related to the Eliashib of Nehemiah 13:4 who was not a high priest but was closely connected to Temple chambers. 2. A layman with a foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:28). 3. Son of Tobiah, who opposed Nehemiah's work in Jerusalem (Neh. 6:18). Jehohanan's marriage to a prominent Jerusalem family gave Tobiah an information system concerning Jerusalem happenings. See Meshullam; Tobiah.

4. Head of a priestly family about 450 B.C. (Neh. 12:13). 5. Priest who helped Nehemiah celebrate completion of Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:42). 6. A Levite and gatekeeper (1 Chron. 26:3). 7. A military commander under King Jehoshaphat of Judah (2 Chron. 17:15). 8. Father of a military commander under Jehoiada, the high priest, in the assassination of Queen Athaliah and the installation of Joash as king of Judah about 835 B.C. 9. Father of military captain under King Pekah of Israel (2 Chron. 28:12).

JEHOIACHIN (Jė hoi′ ă chin) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh establishes." In 2 Kings 24:6, the son and successor of Jehoiakim as king of Judah. He was eighteen years old when he came to the throne late in 598 B.C., and he reigned for three months in Jerusalem before being taken into captivity by Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon. The prominence in the account of his reign of his mother Nehushta suggests that she may have wielded considerable influence during the time that her son was in office. Jehoiachin evidently was a throne name taken at the time of accession to the kingship. Jehoiachin's original name seems to have been Jeconiah or Coniah. He retained the title "king of Judah" even in Exile, but he never returned to Judah to exercise rule there. Nevertheless, he was ultimately released from prison by Evil-merodach of Babylon and accorded some honor in the land of his captivity (2 Kings 25:27–30). See Israel; Chronology of the Biblical Period.

JEHOIADA (Jė hoi′ ă dă) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh knows" or "Yahweh concerns Himself for." 1. Priest who led the coup in which Queen Athaliah, who had usurped the throne of Judah, was slain and Joash (Jehoash), the legitimate heir to the monarchy, was enthroned (2 Kings 11:4). At the time, Joash was a child of seven, and Jehoiada evidently acted as regent for a number of years. Jehoiada's role was positive and beneficial; he influenced the young king to restore the Temple. The death of Jehoiada marked a precipitous decline in the king's goodness and faithfulness to the Lord (2 Chron. 22—24). See Joash; Athaliah; Priests and Levites. 2. Father of Benaiah, David's military leader (2 Sam. 8:18) apparently from Kabzeel (2 Sam. 23:20). This Jehoiada was apparently a Levite and military leader for David at Hebron (2 Chron. 12:27). 3. Leading priest in the time of Jeremiah preceding Zephaniah (Jer. 29:25–26).

JEHOIAKIM (Jė hoi′ ă kĭm) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has caused to stand." Son of Josiah who succeeded Jehoahaz as king of Judah (609–597). Jehoiakim was a throne name given to him by Pharaoh Neco of Egypt, who deposed his brother Jehoahaz. His original name had been Eliakim (2 Kings 23:34). He and his predecessor on the throne were brothers, sons of Josiah. He reigned for eleven years. At the beginning of his reign, Judah was subject to Egypt. Probably in 605 B.C., however, Babylon defeated Egypt. Jehoiakim, who apparently had been content to be a vassal of Egypt, transferred his allegiance to Babylon, but rebelled after three years. At his death he was succeeded by his son Jehoiachin. See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period.

JEHOIARIB (Jė hoi′ ă rĭb) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh creates justice." 1. Priest who was one of first settlers to return to Jerusalem from Babylonian Exile about 538 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:10; compare Neh. 12:6). 2. Head of first course or division of priests (1 Chron. 24:7; compare Neh. 12:19). This listing follows Hebrew text. English translations are not always consistent in transliterating this name and its shortened form Joiarib. See Joiarib.

JEHONADAB (Jė hŏn′ ă dăb) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh incites" or "Yahweh offers Himself freely." Son of Rechab who supported Jehu in the latter's bloody purge of the house of Ahab (2 Kings 10:15). He was representative of a group of austere ultraconservatives known as the Rechabites. Jeremiah 35 relates a meeting between the prophet and Rechabites, who cited the teaching of their ancestor Jehonadab (who in Jeremiah is called Jonadab). In the context of that meeting, some of the precepts of the Rechabites are articulated. They are reminiscent of the regulations that governed the Nazirites. The Hebrew word rechab means "chariot," so some scholars think Jehonadab belonged to Israel's chariot forces. See Rechabites; Jehu.

JEHONATHAN (Jē hŏn′ ā than) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh gave." 1. Longer form of Jonathan often used in Hebrew text for Jonathan as in 1 Samuel 14:6,8. 2. Son of Abiathar, the priest (2 Sam. 15:27,36; 17:17,20). He helped King David learn Absalom's plans when Absalom drove his father from Jerusalem. 3. King David's nephew who slew a giant from Gath (2 Sam. 21:22). 4. Uncle of King David who served as royal counselor and scribe (1 Chron. 27:32). 5. Military leader under David (2 Sam. 23:32). 6. Supervisor of royal storehouses under David (1 Chron. 27:25). 7. Scribe whose house King Zedekiah transformed into prison where he jailed Jeremiah (Jer. 37:15), a place Jeremiah did not like (v. 20; 38:26). 8. Levite King Jehoshaphat sent to teach God's law in the cities of Judah (2 Chron. 17:8). 9. Head of a priestly family about 450 B.C. (Neh. 12:18). 10. Founder of priesthood at worship place in Dan (Judg. 18:30). Earliest Hebrew scribes noted that Jonathan was a descendant of Moses, but the present Hebrew text says Manasseh.

The Hebrew text is at times inconsistent in using the longer or shorter form of the name, and modern translators are as equally inconsistent. This article follows the Hebrew text. See Jonathan.

JEHORAM (Jē hō′ ram) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is exalted." Alternate form of Joram. See Joram.

JEHOSHABEATH (Jē hō shā′ bē ăth) Variant form of Jehosheba. See Jehosheba.

JEHOSHAPHAT (Jē hŏsh′ ā phăt) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh judged" or "Yahweh established the right." 1. Son and successor of Asa as king of Judah (1 Kings 15:24). He occupied the throne for twenty-five years (873–848 B.C.). The biblical record of his reign is contained in the final chapters of 1 Kings and in 2 Chronicles 17–20. He was an able ruler and a faithful worshiper of Yahweh (1 Kings 22:43). Nevertheless, he did one thing that ultimately proved to be disastrous: he made an alliance with Ahab, king of Israel. The immediate result was beneficial to both kingdoms. Years of conflict between them came to an end, and both kingdoms were strengthened. But, the alliance involved a marriage between Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram and Ahab's daughter Athaliah. Athaliah's influence in Judah finally proved to be horrific. See Athaliah; Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period; Micaiah.

2. Father of Jehu (2 Kings 9:2,14). 3. An official at David's court (2 Sam. 8:16), called the "recorder" or "secretary of state" (REB). The Hebrew term's root meaning is "remember." Some Bible students compare the office to the Egyptian court herald who reported events to the king and made public announcements. Others think the office maintained public records, while others speak of a foreign minister. As with many Hebrew offices, certainty is not possible. Jehoshaphat retained the office under Solomon (1 Kings 4:3). 4. Solomon's official in tribal territory of Issachar in charge of providing provisions for the royal court one month a year (1 Kings 4:17).

JEHOSHAPHAT, VALLEY OF (Jē hŏsh′ ā phăt) Place name meaning, "valley where Yahweh judged." Place to which the Lord summons the nations for judgment (Joel 3:2). No evidence exists that any valley actually bore this name in Joel's time. Since the fourth century A.D. the Kidron Valley has been known as the Valley of Jehoshaphat; but there is no reason for believing Joel was referring to the Kidron Valley. The reference in Joel probably is meant to be symbolic. Through Joel, God promised all nations will ultimately be called to God's place of judgment. See Joel.

JEHOSHEBA (Jē hŏsh′ ē bā) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is fullness or fortune." Sister of King Ahaziah who, after his death, took young Joash and protected him from Queen Athaliah so Athaliah could not have him killed as she did the other royal children (2 Kings 11:2). Her name is spelled Jehoshabeath in 2 Chronicles 22:11.

JEHOSHUA (Jē hŏsh′ ū ā) Variant KJV spelling for Joshua in Numbers 13:16. See Joshua.

JEHOVAH (Jē hō′ vah) English transliteration of Hebrew text's current reading of divine name Yahweh. Hebrew text, however, represents scribe's efforts to prevent people from pronouncing the divine name by combining consonants of Yahweh and vowels of Hebrew word adonai ("Lord") so readers would pronounce adonai rather than risk blasphemy by improperly pronouncing divine name. See God; Lord; Yahweh.

JEHOVAH-JIREH (Jē hō′ vah-jī rĕh) Place name meaning, "Yahweh will provide" (Gen. 22:14). The name Abraham gave to the place where the Lord provided a sacrifice in place of Isaac. Modern translations translate the place name whereas KJV transliterates it. See Jehovah.

JEHOVAH-NISSI (Jĕ hō' vah-nĭs' sī) Transliteration of place name meaning, "Yahweh is my banner." Name Moses gave to the altar he built after defeating the Amalekites (Ex. 17:15). Modern versions translate the name instead of following KJV in transliterating it. See Jehovah.

JEHOVAH-SHALOM (Jĕ hō' vah-shä lom) Place name meaning, "Yahweh is peace." Name Gideon gave to the altar he built at Ophrah (Judg. 6:24). Modern versions translate the name, while KJV transliterated it. See Jehovah.

JEHOVAH-SHAMMA (Jĕ hō' vah Shăm' ma) Transliteration of a Hebrew name (Ezek. 48:35, margin) meaning "The Lord is there" which is better transliterated YHWH-shammah (NAS margin). See Yahweh. The Jerusalem of Ezekiel's vision was known by this name. Compare Isaiah 60:19–20; Rev. 21:3.

JEHOVAH-TSIDKENU (Jĕ hō' vah tsĭd kĕ' nū) Hebrew name meaning "The Lord [is] our righteousness" (Jer. 23:6; 33:16, margin). See Yahweh. The name is applied to a future Davidic king who would lead his people to do what is right and thus bring peace (23:6) and to the restored city of Jerusalem (33:16). The name is possibly a play on the name of Zedekiah ("Righteous [is] the Lord") who reigned from 597 to 587 B.C..

JEHOZABAD (Jĕ hŏz' ā băd) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh bestowed." 1. One of conspirators who killed King Joash of Judah (2 Kings 12:21). 2. Porter or doorkeeper under King David (1 Chron. 26:4). 3. Military commander under King Jehoshaphat of Judah about 860 B.C. (2 Chron. 17:18). See Jozabad.

JEHOZADAK (Jĕ hŏz' ā dăk) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh deals righteously." 1. High priest at the time Nebuchadnezzar carried Judah into Babylonian Exile about 587 B.C. (1 Chron. 6:14–15). He was the father of Joshua, the high priest who returned from Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Hag. 1:1; Zech. 6:11). An abbreviated Hebrew form Jozadak also appears, and English translations are inconsistent in spelling the name. See Jozadak; Josedech.

JEHU (Jē hū) Personal name meaning, "Yah is He." Son of Jehoshaphat and king of Israel (841–814 B.C.). He was a commander of the army when Elisha the prophet sent one of the sons of the prophets to Ramoth-gilead to anoint him as king (2 Kings 9:1–10). Jehu embarked on a violent and bloody course that finally led him to the throne. Along the way, he was responsible for the deaths of Joram, king of Israel; Ahaziah, king of Judah; Jezebel, still powerful former queen of Israel, and some 70 surviving members of the household of Israel's late King Ahab. He used trickery to gather and destroy worshipers of Baal, so that Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel (2 Kings 10:28). Jehu established a strong dynasty in Israel. He and his descendants held the throne for approximately a century. See Israel, Chronology of Biblical Period; Elijah.

2. A prophet who proclaimed God's judgment on King Baasha of Israel (1 Kings 16:1–12). He warned King Jehoshaphat of Judah (2 Chron. 19:2) and recorded the acts of Jehoshaphat in a record to which the Chronicler referred his readers (2 Chron. 20:34).

3. Member of David's army at Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:3). His home was Anathoth, in the tribal territory of David's opponent Saul. 4. Leader of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:35).

JEHUBBAH (Jĕ hŭb' bah) Personal name perhaps meaning, "He has hidden." Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:34).

JEHUCAL (Jĕ hū' căl) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh proves to be mighty." Messenger King Zedekiah sent to ask Jeremiah to pray for him as he began to rule. Apparently, Zedekiah wanted blessing on his efforts to cooperate with Egypt against Babylon about 587 B.C. (Jer. 37:3). Jucal in 38:1 is probably a shortened form of the same name. See Jucal.

JEHUD (Jē' hŭd) Place name meaning, "praise." Town in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:45). It is located at modern Yehud about three miles south of Petah Tikvah and eight miles north of Joppa.

JEHUDI (Jĕ hū' dī) Personal name meaning, "Judean or Jewish." Messenger for Jewish leaders calling Baruch to read Jeremiah's preaching to them and then messenger of the king to get the scroll so the king could read it. Jehudi read the scroll to King Jehoiakim and then cut it up and threw it into the fire about 604 B.C. Still, God preserved His prophetic word (Jer. 36:11–32).

JEHUDIJAH (Jē' hū dī' jah) Personal name or proper adjective meaning, "Jewess or Judean woman." KJV transliteration from Hebrew which modern translations read as adjective, "Judean" or "Jewish." TEV reads, "from the tribe of Judah" (1 Chron. 4:18).

JEHUEL (Jĕ hū ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God proves Himself active and alive." Written Hebrew text of 2 Chronicles 29:14 followed by NRSV, TEV. Other translations read Jehiel, following early Hebrew scribes. Levite who helped cleanse the Temple under Hezekiah.

JEHUSH (Jē′ hŭsh) Variant spelling of Jeush. See Jeush.

JEIEL (Jē ī′ ĕl) Personal name possibly meaning, "God is strong" or "God heals." The early Hebrew scribes often used Hebrew vowel points in the text to indicate the name should be read as Jeiel where the written text indicated Jeuel (1 Chron. 9:35; 11:44; 2 Chron. 26:11; 29:13). The early translations point to similar early confusion at 1 Chronicles 9:5. This article will deal with both Jeiel and Jeuel, since all occurrences of Jeuel show early textual evidence of being read Jeiel. 1. Leader in the tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:7). 2. One of early members of tribe of Judah to return from Babylonian Exile (1 Chron. 9:6). 3. Leader of the tribe of Benjamin as they settled in Gibeon. He may have married a foreign woman (1 Chron. 9:35; compare 8:29). See Maachah. 4. Leader in David's army (1 Chron. 11:44). 5. A Levite and porter or gatekeeper under David (1 Chron. 15:18). 6. A Levite and harp player under David (1 Chron. 15:21). 7. A Levite who served as worship leader at the ark of the covenant under David (1 Chron. 16:5). The Hebrew text includes two Jeiels in this verse, and interpreters since the earliest translations have changed one or the other to a slightly different spelling. 8. Ancestor of Levite who prophesied under Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 20:14). 9. Royal scribe or secretary under King Uzziah (792–740 B.C.). He maintained the numbers of military personnel (2 Chron. 26:11). 10. Levite who helped Hezekiah purify the Temple (2 Chron. 29:13). 11. Officer among the Levites who provided them offerings to sacrifice at the Passover under Josiah about 622 B.C. (2 Chron. 35:9). 12. Man who went with Ezra from Babylon to Judah about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:13). 13. Man condemned for having foreign wife and thus tempting Israel to worship foreign gods under Ezra (Ezra 10:43).

JEKABZEEL (Jė kăb′ zē ĕl) Place name meaning, "God assembled." A city in southern Judah settled by members of the tribe of Judah after the Exile (Neh. 11:25). Jekabzeel was apparently south of the boundary of the Persian province of Judah, possibly at modern khirbet Gharreh or tell Ira. It is probably the same as Kabzeel, originally assigned to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:21) about halfway between tell Beersheba and tell Arad. See Kabzeel.

JEKAMEAM (Jĕ kā′ mĕ ăm) Personal name meaning, "the people deliver" or "the Kinsman saves." A priest set aside to work in God's house (1 Chron. 23:19; 24:23).

JEKAMIAH (Jĕ kā mī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah delivers." 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:41). 2. Son of King Jeconiah, also called Jehoiachin, of Judah about 597 B.C. (1 Chron. 3:18).

JEKUTHIEL (Jė kū′ thī ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God nourishes." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:18).

JEMIMA (Jĕ mī′ mā) or JEMIMAH (Jĕ mī′ mah) Personal name meaning, "turtle dove." Job's first daughter after God restored his fortunes (Job 43:14).

JEMUEL (Jė mū′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "day of God" or "sea of God." Son of Simeon, grandson of Jacob, and head of clan in Israel (Gen. 46:10; Ex. 6:15). Also called Nemuel (Num. 26:12; 1 Chron. 4:24).

JEPHTHAE (Jĕph′ thāē) KJV transliteration of Greek for Jephthah (Heb. 11:32). See Jephthah.

JEPHTHAH (Jĕph′ thah) Personal name meaning, "he will open." One of Israel's judges about 1100 B.C. (Judg. 11:1—12:7). A Gileadite, he was driven from his home because he was "the son of an harlot" (Judg. 11:1). He lived and raided in the land of Tob with a band of outlaws, becoming known as a "mighty warrior." When the Ammonites moved against Israel, Jephthah's people asked him to return and lead them. His victory over the Ammonites came about because of a vow he made to offer as a burnt offering the first living thing he saw upon his return from the battle. Although it was his daughter who greeted him, Jephthah did fulfill his vow. Considered as one of Yahweh's "chief" deliverers of his people (1 Sam. 12:11), Jephthah is hailed by the author of Hebrews as a hero of faith (Heb. 11:32).

See Judges; Ammon; Human Sacrifices.

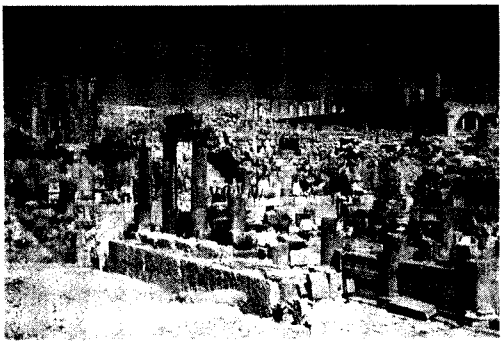
Darlene R. Gautsch

JEPHUNNEH (Jė phŭn′ nēh) Personal name meaning, "he will be turned" or "appeased." 1. Father of Caleb (Num. 13:6). See Caleb. 2. In 1 Chronicles 7:38, one of the sons of Jether in tribe of Asher.



JERAH (Jē′ rah) Personal name meaning, "moon" or "month." A descendant of Shem, son of Noah, in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:26). The moon was the chief god in South Arabia. Since the surrounding names in the list represent Arabian tribes, this probably indicates the relationship of Semitic tribes in Arabia to the Hebrews.

JERAHMEEL (Jė răh′ mē ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God shows compassion." 1. Son of Hezron (1 Chron. 2:9), brother of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:42), and original clan ancestor of Jerahmeelites (1 Sam. 27:10). See Jerahmeelites. 2. Son of Hammelech (Hebrew, "the king" and so translated by modern versions), who was one of a group whom King Jehoiakim sent to arrest Baruch and Jeremiah (Jer. 36:26); but the Lord showed He has more power than human rulers by hiding His faithful servants from the king. 3. A Levite in time of David (1 Chron. 24:29).

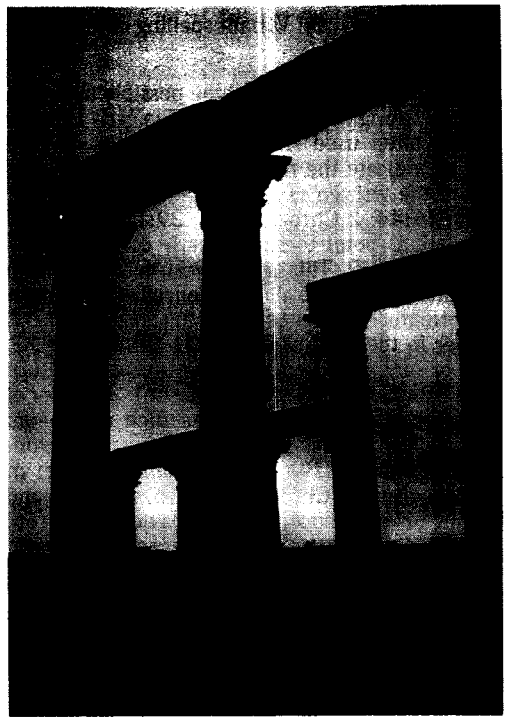
JERAHMEELITE (Jĕ răh′ mē ĕl īte) Member of clan of Jerahmeel which apparently lived south of Beersheba in the Negeb. While dwelling with the Philistines, David told them he was fighting in the territory of the Jerahmeelites (1 Sam. 27:10), making Achish, the Philistine king, think he was fighting against parts of Judah, while he actually fought the other groups in the south who opposed Judah—Geshurites, Gezrites, Amalekites (1 Sam. 27:8). He divided the spoils of war with the Jerahmeelites (1 Sam. 30:29).

JERASH (Jer ăsh) Modern Arabic name of Gerasa. See Gerasa.

The excavations of Gerasa showing the Corinthian columns flanking the streets and temples of the city.



JERBOA (Jĕr′ bō ă) Any of several species of leaping rodents having long hind legs and long tails of the family Dipodidae. The REB includes the jerboa among the unclean animals of Leviticus 11:29.

JERED (Jē′ rĕd) Alternate spelling used by English translations for Jared. See Jared.

JEREMAI (Jĕr′ ĕ mâi) Personal name, abbreviated form of Jeremoth or Jeremiah. Israelite condemned for foreign wife which Ezra said would lead Israel to worship foreign gods (Ezra 10:33).

JEREMIAH (Jĕr ĕ mī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "may Yahweh lift up," "throw," or "found."

1. The head of a clan of the tribe of Manasseh in East Jordan (1 Chron. 5:24). 2. Three soldiers of David's army at Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:4,10,13). 3. The father-in-law of King Josiah of Judah (640–609 B.C.) and grandfather of the Kings Jehoahaz [609 B.C.] (2 Kings 23:31) and Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.) (2 Kings 24:18; Jer. 52:1). 4. A representative of the sect of the Rechabites (Jer. 35:3). 5. Three priests or heads of priestly families in the times of Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Neh. 12:1,12) and Nehemiah about 455 B.C. (Neh. 10:2; 12:34).

Sunset at Jerash (ancient Gerasa).

Other persons by the name of Jeremiah are referred to in Hebrew inscriptions from Lachish and Arad about 700 B.C. and in a number of ancient Jewish seals. The Bible has a short form of the name seventeen times and a long form 121 times. Both forms are applied to the prophet. Inscriptions use the longer form.

6. Jeremiah, the prophet The Bible tells us more about personal experiences of Jeremiah than of any other prophet. We read that his father's name was Hilkiah, a priest from Anathoth (Jer. 1:1). He was called to be a prophet in the thirteenth year of King Josiah (627/6 B.C.) (Jer. 1:2). He was active under the Kings Jehoahaz-Shallum (609 B.C.) (22:11), Jehoiakim (609–587 B.C.) (Jer. 1:3; 22:18; 26:1; 35:1; 36:1, 9), Jehoiachin/Jeconiah/Coniah (597 B.C.) (22:24; 24:1; 27:20; 28:3; 29:2; 37:1), and Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.) (1:3; 21:1; 27:1–12; 28:1; 32:1; 34:2; 37—38; 39:4; 52:7). When Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians in 587 B.C., Jeremiah moved to Mizpah, the capital of Gedaliah, the newly appointed Jewish governor of the Babylonian province of Judah (40:5). When Gedaliah was assassinated (41:1), Jeremiah was deported to Egypt against his will by Jewish officers who had survived the catastrophes (42:1—43:7). In Egypt he continued to preach oracles against the Egyptians (43:8–13) and against his compatriots (44:1–30).

Jeremiah is depicted as living in constant friction with the authorities of his people, religious (priests 20:1–6; prophets 28:1; or both 26:1), political (kings ch. 21—22; 36—38), or all of them together (1:18–19; 2:26; 8:1), including Jewish leaders after the Babylonian invasion (42:1—43:13). Still his preaching emphasized a high respect for prophets whose warning words could have saved the people if they had listened (7:25; 26:4; 29:17–19; 35:13). He trusted in the promise of ideal future kings (23:5; 33:14–17). He recommended national surrender to the rule of the Babylonian Empire and called Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon's emperor and Judah's most hated enemy, the "servant of the Lord" (25:9; 27:6). He even incited his compatriots to desert to the enemy (21:8). He was accused of treason and convicted (37:11; 38:1–6), and yet the most aggressive oracles against Babylon are attributed to him (50—51). Enemies challenged his prophetic honesty and the inspiration of his message (43:1–3; 28:1; 29:24), and yet kings and nobles sought his advice (21:1; 37:3; 38:14; 42:1).

He constantly proclaimed God's judgment upon Judah and Jerusalem, and yet he was also a prophet of hope, proclaiming oracles of salvation, conditioned (3:22—4:2) or unconditioned (30—31; 32:36; 33:6; 34:4). God forbade him to intercede for his people (7:16; 11:14; 14:11; compare 15:1); yet he interceded (14:7–9,19–22). God ordered him to live without marriage and family (16:2). He had to stay away from the company of merrymakers (15:17) and from houses of feasting (16:8). He complained to and argued with God (12:1–17), complaining about the misery of his office (20:7–18). At the same time he sang hymns of praise to his God (20:13).

Jeremiah's call came in the thirteenth year of King Josiah, about 627/6 B.C. (1:2; 25:3; compare 36:2). Josiah remains however, the only Jewish king contemporary with Jeremiah to and about whom no word is spoken in the whole book. No concrete reference appears to any of the dramatic changes of national liberation and religious reformation within the last eighteen years of Josiah's reign (2 Kings 22:1—23:30). The words of the call narrative: "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, . . . I appointed you as a prophet to the nations" (1:5 NIV), may suggest that the date of Jeremiah's call and birth is one and the same. In this case his prophetic activity must have begun many years later, but again with uncertain date.

The Book of Jeremiah 1. Origin This second longest book of the Bible, next to the Psalms, is the only one of the Old Testament that tells us some details of its origin. According to Jeremiah 36:1–26, Baruch had written a first version at the dictation of Jeremiah. The scroll was read first in public, and then again for the state officials and for the king. King Jehoiakim burnt it piece by piece. Jeremiah therefore dictated a second and enlarged edition of the first book to Baruch (Jer. 36:32). Additional references to Jeremiah's own writing activity (Jer. 30:2; 51:60; compare 25:13) forbids the identification of the scroll of Jeremiah 36:32 with the present form of the biblical book.

2. Structure and Content The book may be subdivided into the following main sections:

I. Call narrative and Visions (1:1–19)
II. Prophecies and Visions (2:1—25:14)
III. Stories about Jeremiah (26:1—45:5)
IV. Oracles Against Foreign nations (25:15–38; 46:1—51:64)
V. Historical epilogue (52:1–34)
VI. Oracles on the restoration of Israel (30:1—31:40)

This structure is not based on chronology as seen above. Nor is it based on form. The so-called confessions of Jeremiah (11:18–23; 12:1–6; 15:10–21; 17:14–18; 18:19–23; 20:7–13,14–18) are scattered through chapters 11—20. Oracles of hope (chs. 30—31) interrupt the stories about Jeremiah (chs. 26—45). Words against kings (21:11—22:30) and against prophets (23:9–40) appear to be independent collections. The complex nature of the structure is further complicated by evidence from the earliest Greek translation. There the oracles against foreign nations are in a different order and appear immediately after 25:13 rather than at 46:1. This and other evidence suggests a long and complicated process of collection of the Jeremiah materials into a book. Traditional scholarly theories have tried to attribute poetic oracles to Jeremiah, stories about the prophet to Baruch, and prose sermons to a later editor who used the Book of Jeremiah to exemplify and teach the theology of the Book of Deuteronomy. Such theories are much too simplistic and must be discarded. Aside from the stories of the scroll's destruction, expansion, and recopying (ch. 36), we do not know all the processes through which God led to produce His inspired Book of Jeremiah.

3. Text of the Book The earliest Greek version of Jeremiah, dating back to pre-Christian centuries, is more than 12.5% shorter than the Hebrew text. Only a few longer sections are missing (33:14–26; 39:4–13). The Greek text rather uses less titles and epithets, and single words and verses are missing throughout the book. More than 2700 words of the Hebrew text do not have Greek equivalents. Fragments of Hebrew manuscripts from Qumran show that a longer and a shorter Hebrew text existed side-by-side in the time of Jesus. This confirms that the development of the Book of Jeremiah continued for centuries. Growing agreement among Jeremiah Bible students suggests that the shorter text represents an older stage of development.

4. The Message Theologically, the Book of Jeremiah stimulates the search for the will of God in moments when all the institutions and religious representatives normally in charge of administrat-ing His will are discredited. Neither the Davidic monarchy (Jer. 21:1—22:30), nor prophets and priests (Jer. 23:9–40), nor the cultic institutions of the Temple (Jer. 7:1–34; 26:1–9) could help the people to prevent impending calamities; nor could they detect that inconspicuous apostasy that mixes up the little aims of personal egoism (Jer. 2:29–37; 7:21–26; 28:1–17) with God's commission (Jer. 4:3). God's justice and righteousness cannot be usurped by His People. He can be a stumbling block even for His prophet (Jer. 12:1–6; 20:7–12). Execution of judgment and destruction is not God's delight. God himself suffers pain because of the alienation between Himself and His people (2:1–37). Better than the prophet was able to admit, the apostate members of God's people remembered a correct notion of the nature of God. He continued to be their Father, and His anger would not last forever (3:4,12–13). Conversion is possible (3:14,22; 4:1–2), but this is no consolation for the apostate generation. Contrary to the expectations of the religious and political authorities, Judah and Jerusalem would meet the cruel catastrophe. This was not God's last word. His faithfulness prevails and creates new hope where all hope is lost (chs. 30—33).

I. God Calls His Spokesman (1:1–19).
II. God's Spokesman Warns His People (2:1—6:30).
  A. God brings a lawsuit against His unfaithful people (2:1–37).
  B. God pleads with His faithless people to return (3:1—4:4).
  C. God threatens judgment through invasion (4:5—6:30).
III. Prophetic Theology Opposes Traditional Theology (7:1—11:17).
  A. A place of worship cannot save (7:1–15).
  B. A prophet cannot fulfill his traditional role for a people who foresake God (7:16–20).
  C. Obedience, not ritual, is the most important (7:21–28).
  D. False worship will have its terrible reward (7:29—8:13).
  E. Lamentation, not praise, is the appropriate worship in face of desolation and deceitfulness (8:14—9:22).
  F. Worship of images is folly in light of God's creative power (9:23—10:16).
  G. God threatens judgment through exile (10:17–25).
  H. A covenant brings disaster on God's people (11:1–17).
IV. Struggle with God Defines the Prophetic Role (11:18—20:18).
  A. Prophesying can be life-threatening (11:18—12:6).
  B. God laments His errant people (12:7–17).
  C. God's purpose is to punish pride and promote humility (13:1–27).
  D. God can reject and prohibit prayers for forgiveness (14:1—15:9).
  E. God's spokesman makes personal sacrifices because of God's calling (15:10—16:21).
  F. Trust in humans rather than God leads to destruction (17:1–11).
  G. God's spokesman must keep listening to God and preaching (17:12–27).
  H. God's spokesman centers his message on God's freedom, not on human expectations (18:1–23).
  I. God's message leads to persecution of His spokesman (19:1—20:6).
  J. God's spokesman struggles with God over the hostility of the people (20:7–18).
V. God's Spokesman Confronts Unfaithful Leaders (21:1—29:32).
  A. God's spokesman calls for sorrow and judgment based on the king's injustice (21:1—22:30).
  B. God's spokesman bases hope on future righteous leaders (23:1–8).
  C. God's spokesman must condemn those who preach lies (23:9–40).
  D. God's word of hope is based in faithful, suffering people, not in institutions (24:1—25:38).
  E. Prophetic hope lies in repentance, not in the Temple (26:1–6).
  F. A prophetic precedent protects the endangered prophet (26:7–24).
  G. God can condemn faithless leaders to serve enemies to fulfill His purpose (27:1–22).
  H. God's true prophet overcomes false prophecy through God's divine Word (28:1–17).
  I. Hope rests in dependence on God, not on popular prophecies or political power (29:1–32).
VI. God Promises Restoration (30:1—33:26).
  A. Restoration is based on God's promises in His preserved Word (30:1–24).
  B. Restoration is based on God's faithfulness (31:1–14).
  C. Restoration is based on God's mercy (31:15–26).
  D. Restoration is based on God's promises to establish a new covenant with His people (31:27–40).
  E. God's spokesman demonstrates his trust by a purchase of land (32:1–44).
  F. Restoration is based on God's promises to restore the nation and David's dynasty (33:1–26).
VII. God Protects His Spokesman (34:1—40:6).
  A. God promises punishment upon the privileged for their treachery to their slaves (34:1–22).

B. God commends the Rechabites for their faithfulness (35:1–19).
C. God protects His servants and His Word from a wicked ruler (36:1–32).
D. God protects His servant from a weak and foolish ruler (37:1—38:28).
E. Prophetic preaching proves true (39:1–10).
F. Even foreign leaders acknowledge prophetic authority (39:11–14).
G. God protects His servant during a national crisis (39:15—40:6).

VIII. God's Spokesman Warns Those Who Continue in Unfaithfulness (40:7—45:5).
A. Political intrigue offers no basis for hope (40:7—41:18).
B. Disobeying God's Word brings disaster, not hope, for the remnant (42:1—43:13).
C. Disobeying God's law of loyal worship brings disaster, not hope, for the remnant (44:1–14).
D. The people answer God's spokesman with continued defiance (44:15–19).
E. Jeremiah promises punishment for the people (44:20–30).
F. God promises His faithful servant his life despite desperate changes (45:1–5).

IX. God's Spokesman Warns the Nations (46:1—51:64).
A. God promises judgment upon Judah's pagan neighbors (46:1—49:39).
B. God promises perpetual desolation for the destroyer of His people (50:1—51:64).

X. Unfaithfulness Causes Destruction for God's People (52:1–34).

Hans Mallau

JEREMIAS (Jĕr ē mī′ ăs) KJV transliteration of Greek for Jeremiah (Matt. 16:14). See Jeremiah.

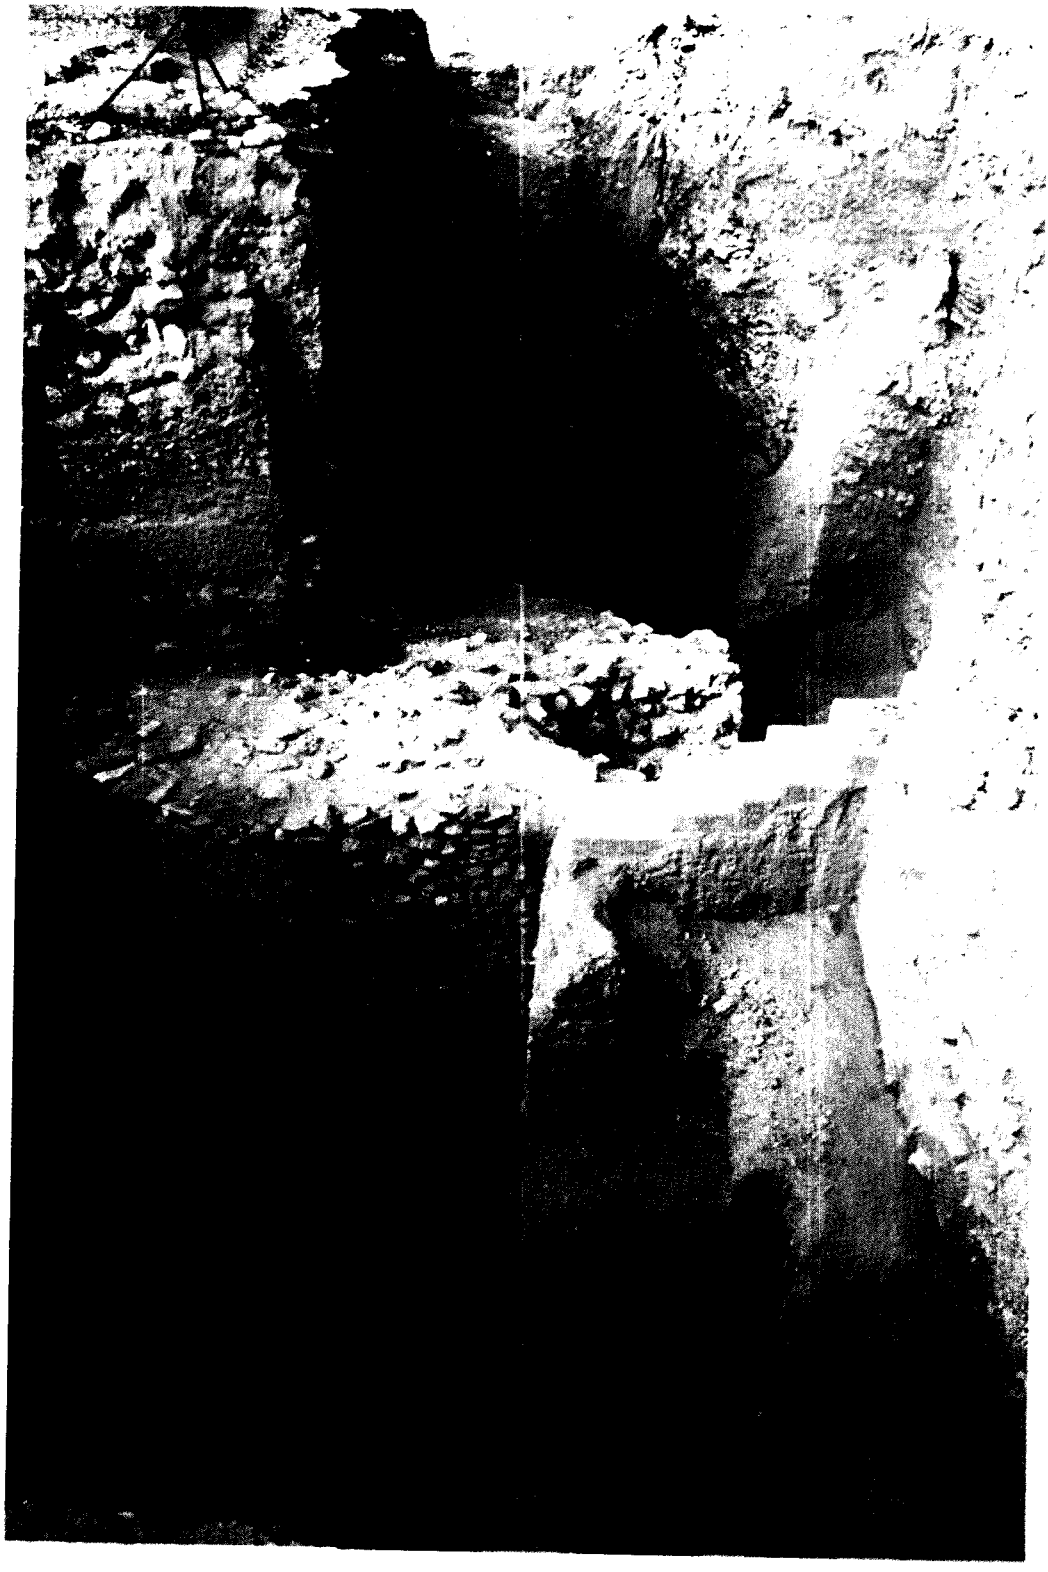
JEREMOTH (Jĕr′ ē mŏth) Personal name meaning, "swellings." 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:14), perhaps to be identified with Jeroham (8:27). 2. Two Israelites with foreign wives condemned by Ezra (Ezra 10:26–27). 3. Name written in Hebrew text of Israelite with foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:29). Early Hebrew scribes and earliest translators read "and Ramoth." 4. Descendant of Benjamin and leader in that tribe (1 Chron. 7:8). 5. Priest in days of David and Solomon (1 Chron. 23:23; spelled Jerimoth in 24:30). 6. Temple musician (1 Chron. 25:4, Jerimoth), possibly the same person as head of fifteenth division of priests (25:22). See Jerimoth.

JEREMY (Jĕr′ ē mȳ) KJV transliteration for Greek spelling of Jeremiah, the prophet (Matt. 2:17; 27:9). See Jeremiah.

JERIAH (Jē rī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh saw." Priest under David and Solomon (1 Chron. 23:19; 24:23).

JERIBAI (Jĕr ī′ bā ī) Personal name meaning, "he defended my case." Military leader under David (1 Chron. 11:46).

JERICHO (Jē rī′ chō) Place name meaning "moon." Apparently the oldest city in the world and the first city Israel conquered under Joshua. Jericho is situated in the lower Jordan Valley, which, according to Genesis 13:10, "was well watered everywhere like the garden of the Lord." The Old Testament town lies beneath tell es-Sultan near one of Palestine's strongest springs. New Testament Jericho, founded by Herod the Great, was about one and one half miles southward in the magnificent wadi Qelt. The spring, ain es-Sultan, issues some 30,000 cubit feet of water daily which falls about 160 feet in the first mile of its course down many channels to the Jordan River six miles away, irrigating about 2,500 acres.



In the foreground the tel of New Testament Jericho with the tel of Old Testament Jericho behind.

The combination of rich alluvial soil, the perennial spring, and constant sunshine made Jericho an attractive place for settlement. Only about 6.4 inches of rain fall there per year (mostly between November and February), and the average temperature for January is 59° F, while it is 88° F for August. Jericho is about 740 feet below sea level (accounting for its warm climate) but well above the Dead Sea eight miles southward which at 1,300 feet below sea level marks the earth's lowest point. Thus Jericho could be called "city of palms" (Deut. 34:3; Judg. 1:16; 3:3; 2 Chron. 28:15) and has plenty of palm trees today.

Jericho was an oasis situated in a hot plain,

Round Neolithic (New Stone Age) defense (or gate) tower at Old Testament Jericho, from ca. 7000 B.C.

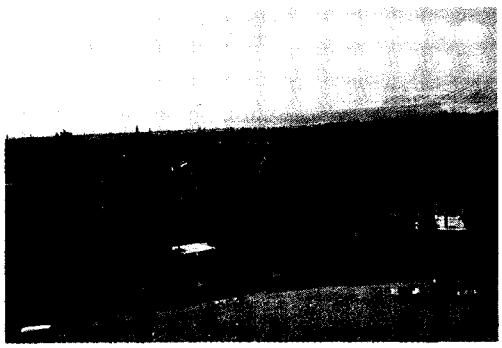
J

J

Modern Arab citrus and vegetable vendors in the city of Jericho.

living in its own world with no major settlement in sight, and lying between the two focal points of Jerusalem and Amman in the mountains to the west and east. It is mentioned in the Bible usually in association with some movement from one side of the Jordan to another—the Israelite invasion, when Ehud takes tribute to the Moabite king, when David sends envoys to the king of Ammon, when Elijah and Elisha cross the Jordan, or when Zedekiah attempts to escape the Babylonians.

In New Testament times Jericho was famous for its balm (an aromatic gum known for its medicinal qualities). This along with its being the winter capital made it a wealthy city. When Jesus was hosted by Zacchaeus (Luke 19:1–10), it was probably in one of Jericho's finest houses. Its sycamore trees were quite valuable. Such a city could expect to have its share of beggars, as the Gospels tell us (Matt. 20:29–34; Mark 10:46–52; Luke 18:35–43).



The archaeology of Jericho is closely associated with the name of Kathleen Kenyon, an Oxford University scholar who excavated there between 1952–1959. The earliest recognizable building on the site dates apparently (based on radiocarbon dating) from about 9250 B.C., a time marking the change from the Paleolithic to the Mesolithic period in Palestine. By 8,000 B.C. a walled town (the world's earliest) of about ten acres had been built. About 6000 B.C. pottery appeared in Jericho. About 4000 B.C. a period of abandonment began, but by 3300 B.C. Jericho was coming into her own again into what Kenyon calls the "Proto-Urban" age. Jericho came to have solid defense ramparts and walls. From about 2200–2000 B.C. the mound of Jericho was a campsite rather than a town, when some 346 excavated tombs show its occupants to be from various tribal units. From about 1400 to possibly slightly after 1300 B.C. Jericho was a small settlement. The town at Joshua's time was small and may have used some of its Inverted Corinthian column capital as found in situ in New Testament Jericho.

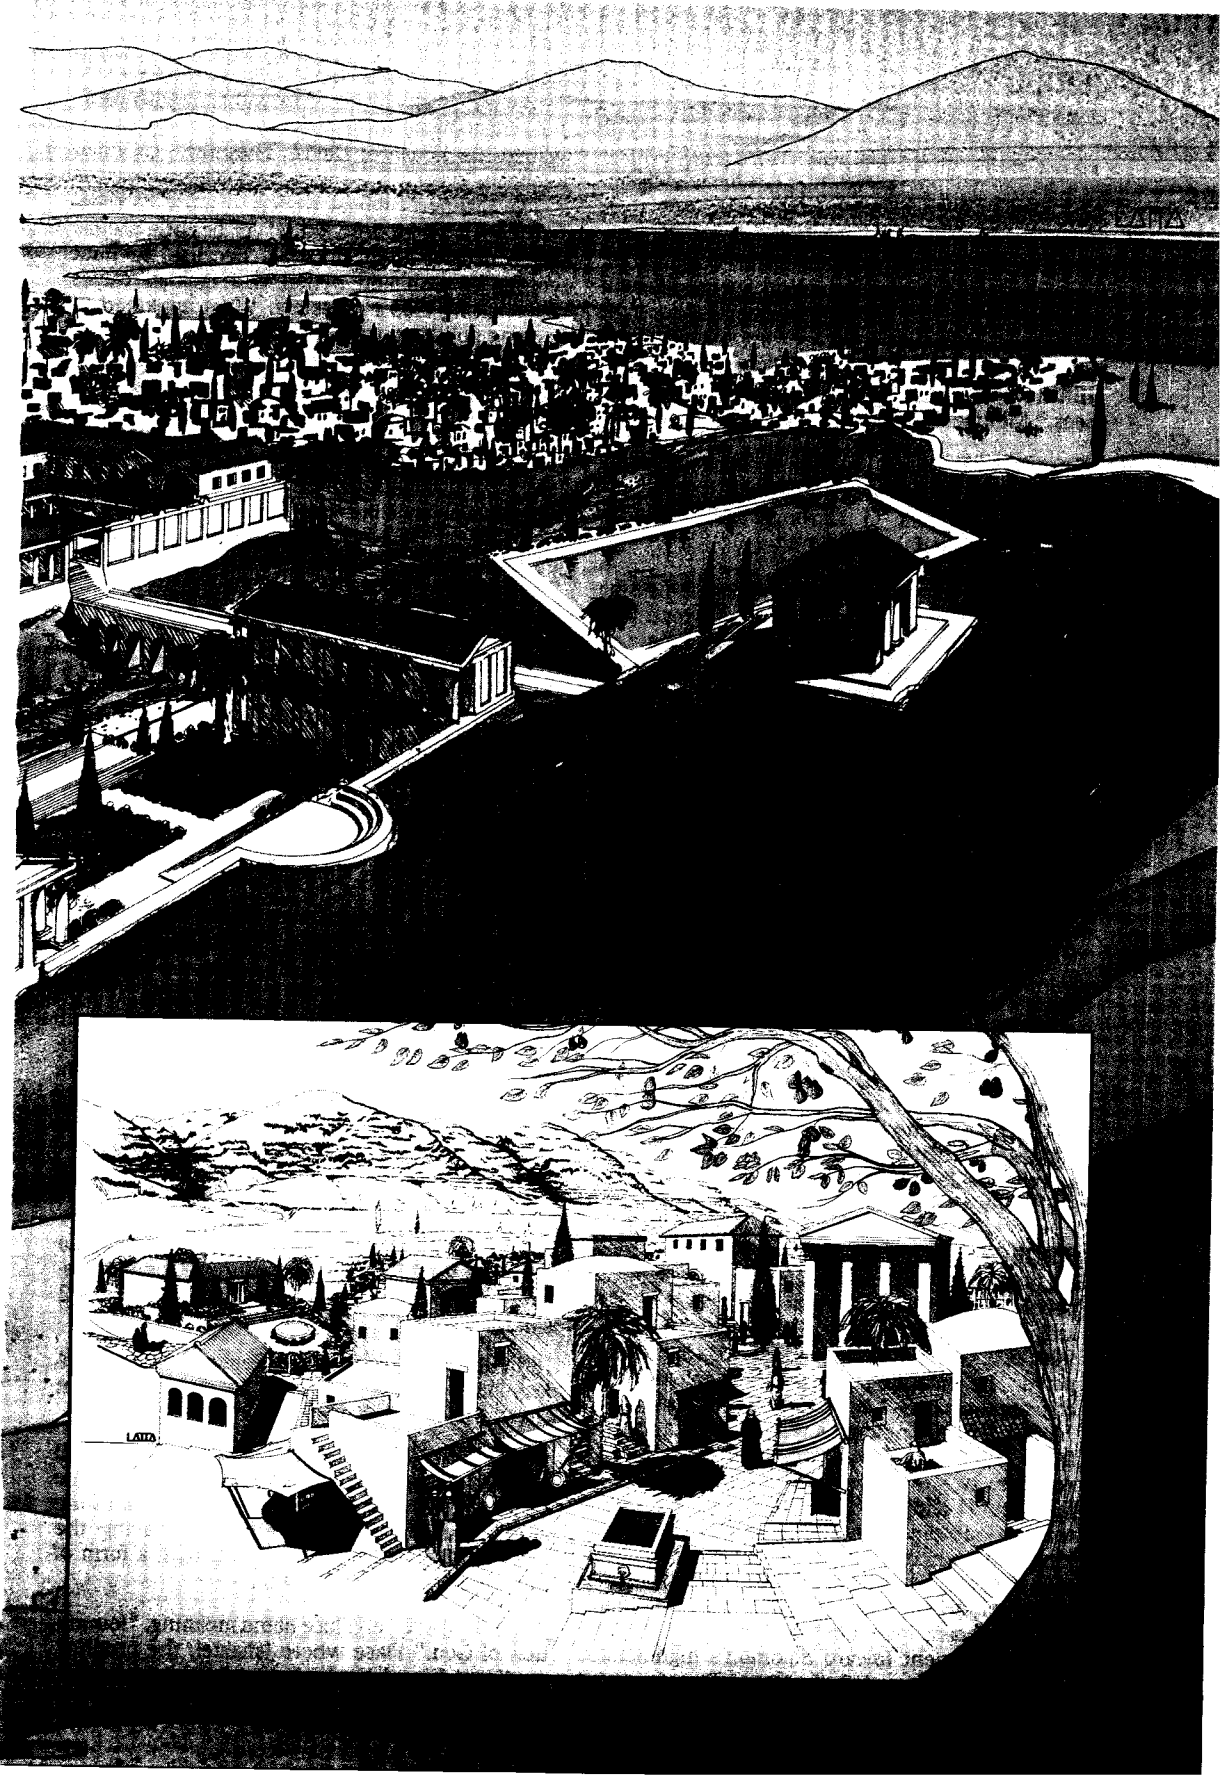
Step-trench cut into the tel of Old Testament Jericho to uncover the many levels of destruction.



View from atop the tel of New Testament Jericho showing the lush greenery of the oasis.

Reconstruction of Herod the Great's Winter Palace at Jericho. Situated at the mouth of the Wadi (dry creek) Kelt along the lower slope of the western rage of the Jordan valley, the palace had a commanding view of New Testament Jericho and the arid, fertile Jordan river valley.

earlier walls for its defenses. Thus more critical scholars underline the conflict between archaeological data and the biblical conquest narrative, while more conservative scholars have recently tried to redate the archaeological evidence or deny that tell es-Sultan is biblical Jericho without giving a satisfactory alternative. See Archaeology; Conquest; Joshua. Karen Joines

JERIEL (Jĕr' ĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God sees." Member of tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:2).

JERIJAH (Jĕ rī' jah) Personal name meaning, "Yah sees," a short form of Jeriah. Military hero of the Hebronite clan (1 Chron. 26:31), possibly identical with Jeriah. See Jeriah.

JERIMOTH (Jĕr' ĭ mŏth) Personal name possibly meaning, "fat belly." The name closely resembles Jeremoth, so that English translations are not consistent in following the Hebrew in spelling. The following represent spellings of the Hebrew text. See Jeremoth. 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:7). 2. Warrior of Saul's tribe Benjamin who joined David as he fled from Saul at Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:5). 3. Levite of the house of Mushi (1 Chron. 24:30; compare 23:23). 4. Temple musician under David and Solomon (1 Chron. 25:4; compare v. 22). 5. Leader of tribe of Naphtali under David (1 Chron. 27:19). 6. Son of David, whose daughter married King Rehoboam (931–913 B.C.), according to 2 Chronicles 11:18. Jerimoth does not appear in any list of David's sons. 7. An overseer of Temple treasury under Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:13).

JERIOTH (Jĕr' ĭ ŏth) Personal name meaning, "fearsome." Person related to Caleb, but the grammatical construction of Hebrew makes understanding of exact relationship difficult (1 Chron. 2:18): a second wife (KJV, NIV, NAS, NRSV); daughter (REB, TEV with many commentators).

JEROBOAM (Jĕr ō bō' ăm) Personal name possibly meaning, "he who contends for justice for the people" or "may the people multiply." 1. First king of the Northern Kingdom Israel about 926–909 B.C. Jeroboam had an interesting rise to power. He managed the laborers Solomon had conscripted for his huge building projects (1 Kings 11:28). During Solomon's reign Ahijah, a prophet from Shiloh, confronted Jeroboam, tore his own coat into twelve pieces, and gave ten of them to Jeroboam (1 Kings 11:29–39). Ahijah interpreted this as God's pledge that Jeroboam would become king over ten of the twelve tribes. Upon Solomon's death, Jeroboam learned that the tribes would assemble at Shechem to make Solomon's son Rehoboam their king. Seizing upon the people's resentment toward Solomon's high-handed policies, Jeroboam led the ten tribes to revolt against the house of David. They then crowned Jeroboam king.

The inspired biblical writers did not consider Jeroboam a good king. Rather he became the example of evil kings in Israel because he built temples in Dan and Bethel with golden calves representing God's presence. What appeared to be good politics diverted people from worshiping at Jerusalem, God's chosen place. All the following northern kings suffered the biblical writers' condemnation because they walked in the ways of Jeroboam, encouraging worship at Dan and Bethel (see for example 1 Kings 15:26,34; 16:19,31). Jeroboam also instituted new worship practices at his temples (1 Kings 12:25–33), intentionally making Israelite worship different from that in Jerusalem, though claiming to worship the same God with the same worship traditions. Prophetic warnings failed to move Jeroboam (1 Kings 13:1—14:20).

2. Powerful king of Israel in the dynasty of Jehu about 793–753 B.C. (2 Kings 14:23–29). He managed to restore prosperity and territory to a weak nation but continued the religious practices of Jeroboam I and thus met condemnation from the biblical writers. Jonah, Amos, and Hosea prophesied during his reign. Jeroboam basically restored the boundaries of David's empire, reaching even into Syria. M. Stephen Davis

JEROHAM (Jĕ rō' hăm) Personal name meaning, "he found mercy." 1. Father of Elkanah and grandfather of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:1; compare 1 Chron. 6:27,34). 2. Priest after the Exile (Neh. 11:12). 3. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:27, if proper reading is not Jeremoth as in v. 14; see Jeremoth). 4. Father of one of first men to return to Jerusalem after Babylonian Exile (1 Chron. 9:8). 5. Priest whose son was one of first to return to Jerusalem from Babylonian Exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 6. Father of two of David's military leaders from Saul's tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 12:7). 7. Father of leader of tribe of Dan under David (1 Chron. 27:22). 8. Father of captain who helped Jehoiada, the high priest, overthrow Queen Athaliah and install Joash as king about 835 B.C. (2 Chron. 23:1).

JERUBBAAL. (Jĕr ŭb bā' ăl) Personal name meaning, "Baal judges." Another name for Gideon (Judg. 6:32). See Gideon.

JERUBBESHETH (Jĕ rŭb' bĕ shĕth) Personal name meaning, "may shame judge" or "shame increases." A deliberate scribal corruption of the name Jerubbaal (2 Sam. 11:21), replacing the name of the Canaanite deity Baal with a form of the Hebrew word for "shame."

JERUEL (Jĕ rū' ĕl) Place name meaning, "foundation of God." Place where Jahaziel, the prophet, predicted King Jehoshaphat and his army would find the Ammonite and Moabite army. The exact location is not known. It was on the rugged descent southeast of Tekoa going to En-Gedi.

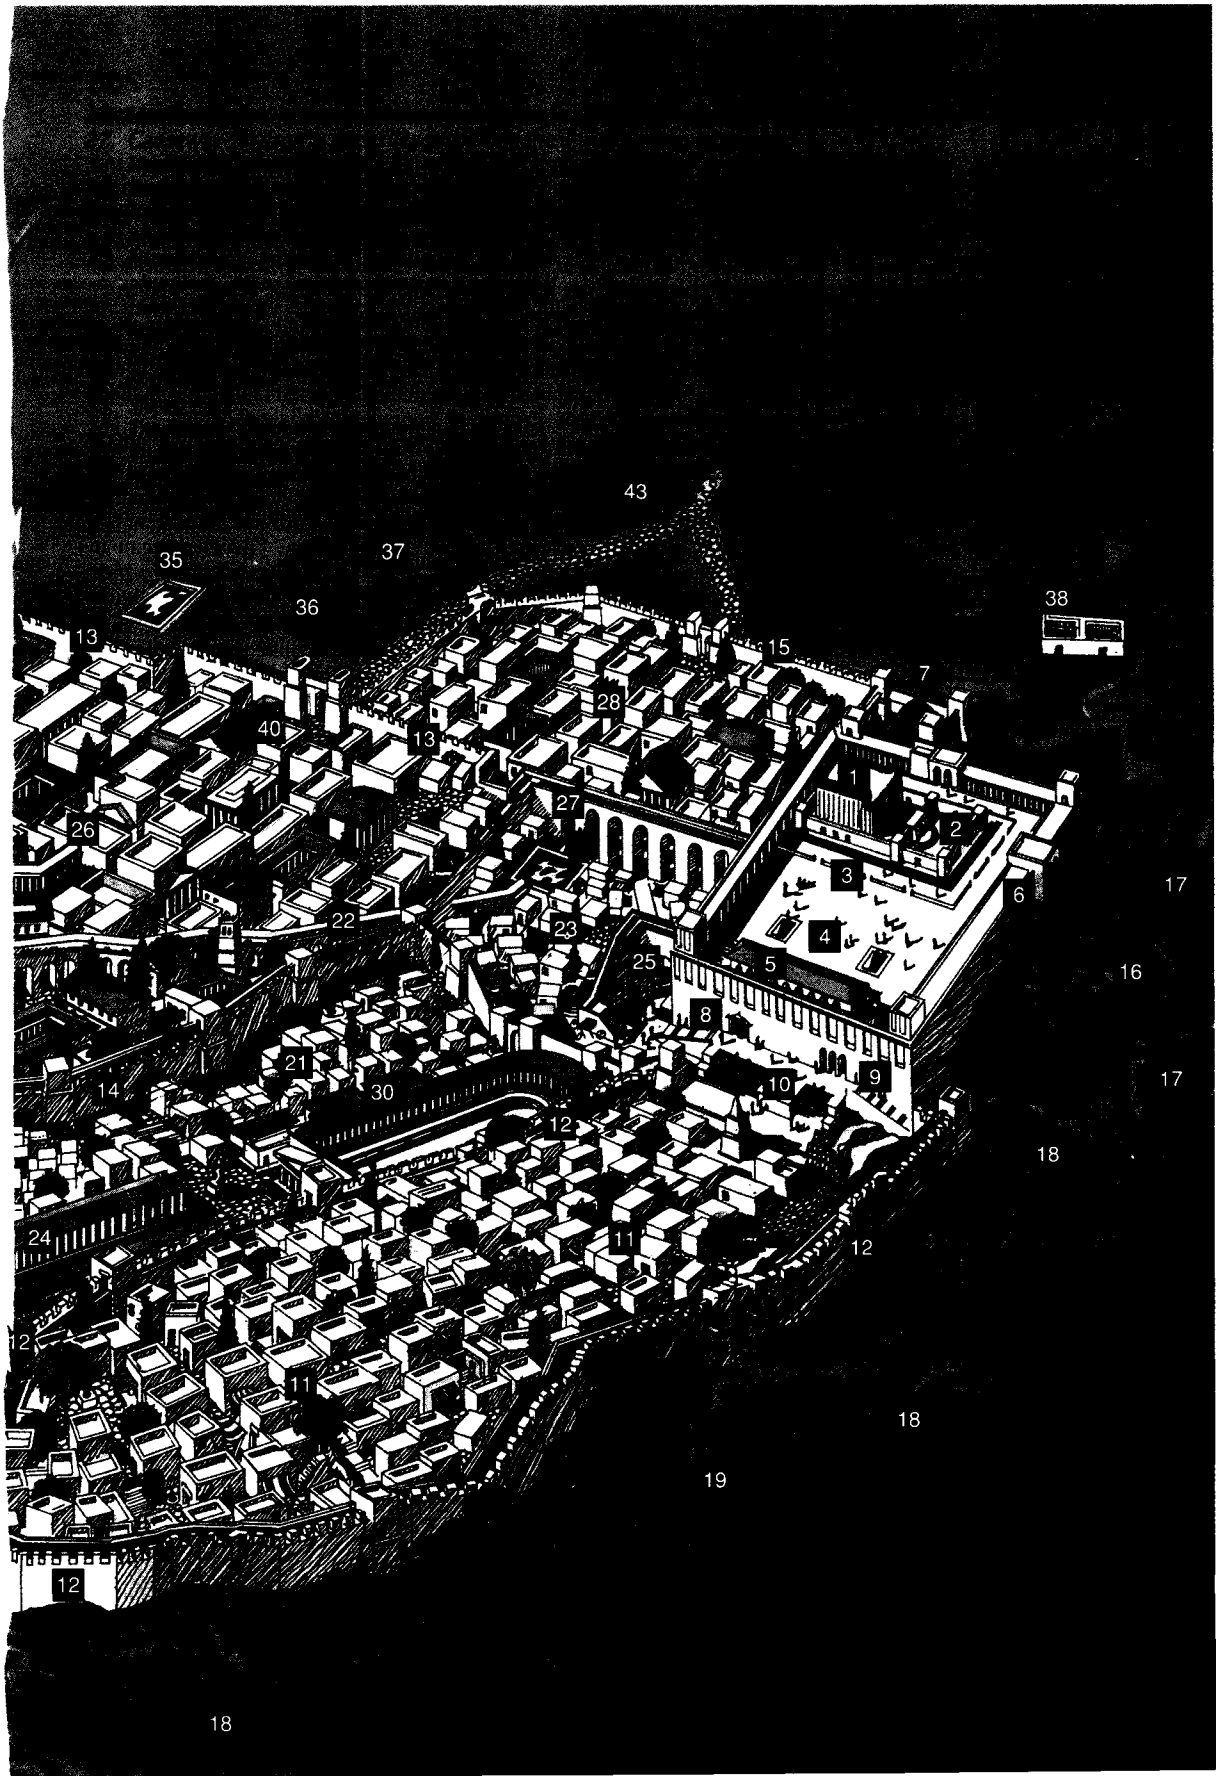
JERUSALEM (Jė rū' sâ lĕm) Place name meaning, "founded by (god) Shalem" and also known as Beth-Shalem or "House of Shalem." Chief city of Palestine, some 2500 feet above sea level and eighteen miles west of the northern end of the Dead Sea.



The name "Jerusalem" has a long and interesting history. The earliest recorded name of Jerusalem is Urushalim and means "foundation of Shalem," a Canaanite god of twilight. The Amarna letters in Palestine refer to Beth-Shalem about 1400 B.C. It is first mentioned in the Bible as Salem (Gen. 14:18). Later the author of Hebrews (7:2) interpreted "Salem" to mean "peace" because of its similarity to shalom. Jerusalem is also called Zion, Jebus, Mount Moriah, and the city of David. Sometimes "city of David" refers to the whole city, and sometimes, to the part that David built.

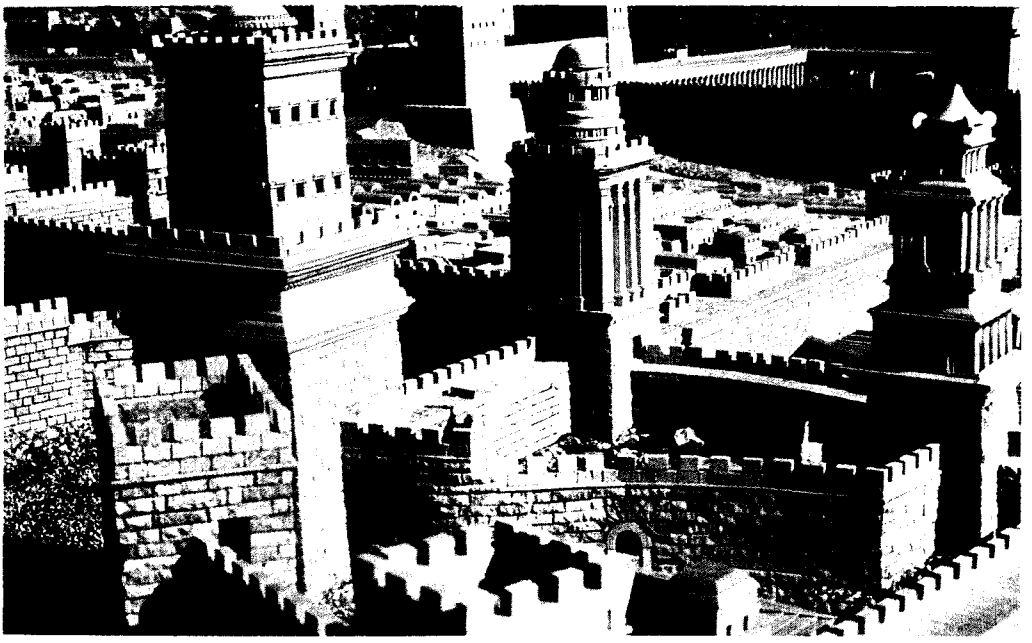
The physical characteristics of Jerusalem include mountains, springs, and valleys. Jerusalem is built on a mountain plateau and is surrounded

The Benjamin Mazar excavations along the south end of the Temple Mount at Jerusalem.

32
34
33
22
31
41
39
13
26
29
22
14
14
14
22
21
24
24
20
13
13
39
42

43
35
37
36
38
13
15
7
28
40
13
1
27
2
26
3
6
17
22
23
4
25
5
16
8
21
10
9
17
14
30
12
18
24
11
12
2
11
18
19
12
18

by mountains. Its main water source was the Gihon Spring at the foot of the hill of Zion. The plateau is related to three valleys—the Kidron on the east, the Hinnom on west and south, and the Tyropoeon which cuts into the lower part of the city dividing it into two unequal parts. The lower portion of the eastern part was the original fortress, built by prehistoric inhabitants.



All evidence indicates an early existence of the city. Jerusalem seems to have been inhabited by 3500 B.C., judging from pottery remains found on the hill of Zion. Written mention of Jerusalem may occur in the Ebla tablets (about 2500 B.C.), and certainly, in Egyptian sources (Execration Texts about 1900 B.C. and Amarna Letters). Archaeologists have discovered walls, a sanctuary, a royal palace, and a cemetery dated about 1750 B.C. About this time Abraham, returning from a victory, met Melchizedek, the king of Salem, received gifts from him, and blessed him (Gen. 14). Later Abraham was commanded to offer Isaac on one of the mountains in the land of Moriah (Gen. 22:2). Second Chronicles 3:1 understood Moriah to be where Solomon built the temple (2 Chron. 3:1) on the former threshingfloor of Araunah that David had purchased for an altar to God (2 Sam. 24:18). The Muslim mosque, the Dome of the Rock, stands in this area today.

Jerusalem became a Hebrew city under David. After the Hebrews entered Canaan under Joshua, the king of Jerusalem, Adoni-zedek fought them. He was defeated (Josh. 10), but Jerusalem was not taken. Later the men of Judah took Jerusalem and torched it (Judg. 1:8; compare 1:21). Apparently the Jebusites reclaimed it, since it had to be conquered by David almost two centuries later. The occupation of the city by the Jebusites accounts for its being referred to as Jebus (Judg. 19:10; 1 Chron. 11:4). See Jebusites.

Soon after being crowned king over all the tribes of Israel, David led his private forces in the capture of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:1–10) and made it his capital, a happy choice since it lay on the border between the northern and southern tribes. Zion, the name of the original fortress, now became synonymous with the city of David. The moving of the ark (2 Sam. 6) made Jerusalem the religious center of the nation. The city began to gather to itself those sacred associations which have made it so important. Here God made an everlasting covenant with the house of David (2 Sam. 7:16). Here Solomon built the Temple that David had wanted to build. It was understood to be a dwelling place for God (1 Kings 8:13), and the sacred ark, symbolizing His presence, was placed in the holy of holies. Other extensive building projects made Jerusalem a magnificent city.

To the Temple in Jerusalem the tribes came three times a year, so that "every one of them in Zion appeareth before God" (Ps. 84:7). The name "Zion" was often used to emphasize the religious significance of the city. One group of Psalms came to be known as "Psalms of Zion" (Pss. 46; 48; 76; 84; 87; 122; 132). The physical beauty of the city was extolled (Ps. 48), and its glorious buildings and walls were described (Ps. 87). To be a part of the festival processions there (Ps. 68:24–27) was a source of great joy (Ps. 149:3). Jerusalem, the dwelling place of both the earthly (Ps. 132) and the divine king (Ps. 5:2; 24:7), was where Israel came to appreciate and celebrate the kingship of God (Pss. 47; 93; 96—99), one of the central ideas of the entire Bible.

Model of first-century Jerusalem shows the three towers built by Herod to protect his palace.

J

The Moslem Dome of the Rock mosque built on the site of Solomon's Temple.

Jerusalem was threatened during the period of the divided kingdom. When the kingdom of Israel split at the death of Solomon, Jerusalem continued to be the capital of the Southern Kingdom. Egypt attacked it (1 Kings 14:25–26), as did Syria (2 Kings 12:17), and northern Israel (2 Kings 15:29; Isa. 7:1). Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.) had a 1750 foot tunnel dug out of solid rock to provide water from the Gihon Spring in time of seige (2 Kings 20:20). In 701 B.C. the Assyrian general Sennacherib destroyed most of the cities of Judah and shut up King Hezekiah "like a bird in a cage." The Assyrians would have destroyed Jerusalem had it not been miraculously spared (2 Kings 19:35). This deliverance, coupled with the covenant with the house of David, led some to the mistaken belief that Jerusalem could never be destroyed (Jer. 7:1–15). The true prophets of the Lord knew better. Both Micah (3:12) and Jeremiah (7:14) prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem for her unfaithfulness to God's covenant. The prophets also spoke of Jerusalem's exaltation in the "latter days" (Isa. 2:2–4). They said it would become the center to which all nations would come to learn of the true knowledge of God. This would lead them to "beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruninghooks." Isaiah 60:19 speaks of the time when the Lord will be for Jerusalem an everlasting light. The walls will be called salvation, and its gates praise. The Lord Himself will reign there (Isa. 24:23).

The Babylonians conquered Jerusalem in 598 B.C. taking 10,000 of the leading people into captivity. A further uprising led to the destruction of the city in 587 B.C. The loss was a painful blow to the exiles, but they kept memory of Zion alive deep in their hearts (Ps. 137:1–6). Actually, the Exile served to enhance the theological significance of Jerusalem. Its value was no longer dependent on its physical splendor. It became a religious symbol for the elect people of God, who centered hopes for the future upon it.

When Cyrus the Persian overran the Babylonians (539 B.C.), he encouraged the Jews to return to Jerusalem and rebuild the Temple (Ezra 1:1–4). The initial enthusiasm lagged, but Haggai and Zechariah finally motivated the people. The Temple was completed in 516 B.C. (Ezra 6:15). The city itself, however, stood unprotected until Nehemiah came to rebuild the walls. Under the influence of Ezra and Nehemiah, Jerusalem again became the living center of the Jewish faith. Worship in the restored Temple became more elaborate. Continued participation in the sacred traditions deepened the people's appreciation for Jerusalem,

The Wailing Wall, for centuries revered by Jews as the only remaining wall of the ancient Temple area.

J

the "city of our God" (Ps. 48:1).

The restoration of Jerusalem spoken of by the preexilic prophets had taken place (Jer. 29:10; 33:7–11), but only in part. The glorious vision of the exaltation of Zion (Mic. 4:1–8) and the transformation of Jerusalem (Ezek. 40—48) had not yet been fulfilled. This vision, along with the belief in the kingship of God and the coming of a Davidic messiah, continued to be cherished in the hearts of the faithful. Prophets like Zechariah painted new images concerning the future of Jerusalem (Zech. 14).

Jerusalem played an important role in apocalyptic circles of the intertestamental period. We read of a preexistent heavenly Jerusalem (Syriac Baruch 4:2) that will descend to earth at the end of the age (2 Esdras 10:27,54; 13:4–6), or, according to another conception, is the place in heaven where the righteous will eventually dwell (Slavonic Enoch 55:2). The new Jerusalem/Zion will be a place of great beauty (Tobit 13:16–17), ruled over by God Himself (Sibylline Oracles 3:787). The focus of the city is the new Temple (Tob. 13:10).

While Jewish writers pointed to future hope, Persians continued to rule Jerusalem until Alexander the Great took over in 333 B.C. The Jews finally won their freedom through the Maccabean Revolt (167–164 B.C.), but after a century of independence Jerusalem and the Jewish nation were annexed to the Roman Empire. See Intertestamental History and Literature.

A tomb, possibly dating from as early as the first century A.D., in the city of Jerusalem.

Herod the Great remodeled Jerusalem. The various conquests of Jerusalem had caused much damage. After Rome gained control, the client-king Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) rebuilt the city extensively. This energetic ruler constructed a theater, amphitheater, hippodrome, a new palace, fortified towers, and an aqueduct to bring water from the Bethlehem area. His outstanding building project was the Temple. Doubling the Temple area, Herod constructed a magnificent building of huge white stones, richly ornamented. Here Jews from all the world came for religious festivals, and here Jesus from Nazareth came to bring His message to the leaders of the Jewish nation. See Temple.

This Jerusalem in which Jesus walked was destroyed by the Roman general Titus in A.D. 70 after zealous Jews revolted against Rome. Not one stone of the Temple building remained standing on another, and widespread destruction engulfed the city. A second revolt in A.D. 135 (the Bar-Kochba Rebellion) resulted in Jews being excluded from the city. From that time until the founding of the modern state of Israel in 1948, the major role of Jerusalem in the Hebrew-Christian religion has been one of symbol, hope, and prophecy.

The modern city of Jerusalem—looking south through the Kidron Valley from Mount Scopus.

J

Jerusalem has great theological significance. All four Gospels relate that the central event of the Christian faith—the crucifixion-resurrection of Jesus—took place in Jerusalem. The most recent archaeological investigations indicate that the area now occupied by the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is almost certainly the place where these events occurred. The prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. 24; Mark 13; Luke 21), is mixed with prophecies concerning the coming of the Son of man at the end of the age when forsaken and desolated Jerusalem will welcome the returning Messiah (Matt. 23:39).

Several New Testament writers emphasize Jerusalem. John told us more than any other Gospel writer about Jesus' visits to Jerusalem during His public ministry, but it was Luke who emphasized Jerusalem most. Luke's opening announcement of the birth of John took place in Jerusalem. Jesus visited at age twelve. On the mount of transfiguration He spoke with Moses and Elijah of His departure (exodus) which He was to accomplish at Jerusalem. All of Luke's resurrection appearances took place in or near Jerusalem, and the disciples were instructed to stay there until the Day of Pentecost. Then the Spirit would come upon them and inaugurate the new age, beginning to undo the damage of Babel. Jerusalem is the center of the missionary activity of the church, which must extend to the end of the earth (Acts 1:8).

Paul, though sent out from Antioch, looked to Jerusalem as the center of the earthly church. He kept in contact with the Jerusalem church and brought them a significant offering towards the close of his ministry. He envisioned the "man of sin" who comes before the Day of the Lord as appearing in Jerusalem (2 Thess. 2:3–4). "Out of Zion" would come the deliverer who would enable "all Israel" to be saved after the full number of Gentiles had come in (Rom. 11:25–27). The present Jerusalem, however, still serves as the "mother" of those Jews in bondage to the law as contrasted to the "Jerusalem above" which is the mother of those persons who are set free in Christ (Gal. 4:24–31). The author of Hebrews described the heavenly Jerusalem on Mount Zion as the goal of the Christian pilgrimage (Heb. 11:10; 12:22).

Jerusalem figures in the final vision of Revelation. In Revelation the earthly Jerusalem appears for the last time after the thousand-year reign of Christ when the deceived nations, led by the temporarily loosed Satan, come against the beloved city and are destroyed by fire from heaven (Rev. 20:7–9). Finally, John saw the new Jerusalem descending from heaven to the new earth. This incomparably beautiful city is described in such a way that it is clear that the goal of the whole sweep of biblical revelation (the glory of the nations, the tree of life, a river of life, eternal vision of and communion with God) is fulfilled, and God reigns with His people forever and ever (Rev. 21–22:5). See Revelation. Joe R. Baskin

JERUSALEM COUNCIL See Apostolic Council.

JERUSHA (Jė rū′ shà) Personal name meaning, "one taken in possession." Mother of Jotham, king of Judah (2 Kings 15:33). She was the daughter of Zadok, possibly of the priestly line. In 2 Chronicles 27:1 her name appears in the form Jerushah. The name of her father suggests that she may have been from a Levitical family.

JERUSHAH (Jė rü′ shàh) Form of Jerusha in 2 Chronicles 27:1, a variant spelling with different final "silent" consonant in Hebrew. See Jerusha.

JESAIAH (Jė saî′ ah) Shortened form of Isaiah meaning, "Yah has saved." 1. Descendant of David in postexilic period (1 Chron. 3:21) and thus part of keeping messianic hope alive in Israel.

JESARELAH (Jēs à rē′ lah) NIV, NRSV spelling of Jesharelah (1 Chron. 25:14), a variant spelling of Asharelah (25:2). See Asharelah; Jesharelah.

JESHAIAH (Jė shaî′ ah) Variant English transliteration of Hebrew name Isaiah meaning, "Yahweh delivered." 1. Priest who used music to prophesy under David (1 Chron. 25:3). Apparently, they proclaimed God's will to the worshiping congregation. Leader of eighth course or division of priests (25:15). 2. Member of family of Levites with responsibility for treasury of God's house under David (1 Chron. 26:25).

JESHANAH (Jė shā′ nah) Place name meaning, "old city." City that King Abijah of Judah captured from Jeroboam of Israel about 910 B.C. (2 Chron. 13:19). It was located at modern Burj el-Isane four miles south of Shiloh and eight miles northeast of Mizpah. Some interpreters follow early translations and read Jeshanah in 1 Samuel 7:12.

JESHARELAH (Jēsh à rē′ lah) KJV, NAS, RSV transliteration of Hebrew name of leader of seventh division of Levites (1 Chron. 25:14). The Hebrew is more precisely transliterated Jesarelah and represents a variant Hebrew spelling or textual change from Asarelah (1 Chron. 25:2). Jesarelah in Hebrew is spelled like Israel with an additional final letter. See Jesarelah; Asarelah.

JESHEBEAB (Jĕ shĕ′ bē ăb) Personal name meaning, "the father remains alive" or "He brings the father back." Head of fourteenth division of priests (1 Chron. 24:13).

JESHER (Jē′ shĕr) Personal name meaning, "he sets right, establishes justice." Son of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:18).

JESHIMON (Jĕ shī′ mŏn) Place name meaning, "desert" or "wilderness." 1. Wilderness site near where David hid from Saul. It apparently belonged to the Ziphites, who reported David's location to Saul (1 Sam. 23:19; 26:1). It lay somewhere between Hebron and the Dead Sea. 2. Wilderness site east of the Jordan near Pisgah and Peor used to mark the places Israel passed under Moses on the way to conquer the Promised Land (Num. 21:20; 23:28). It may be another way to refer to the lower Jordan Valley. 3. The Hebrew word also appears as a common noun meaning desert (Deut. 32:10; Ps. 68:7; 78:40; 106:14; 107:4; Isa. 43:19–20). Some interpreters take all occurrences of the word as the common noun. See also Beth-jeshimoth; Jeshimoth.

JESHISHAI (Jĕ shī′ shâi) Personal name meaning, "advanced in years." Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14).

JESHOHAIAH (Jĕ shō hâi′ ah) Personal name of unknown meaning. Member of tribe Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36).

JESHUA (Jĕ shū′ à) Personal name spelled in Hebrew the same as Joshua and meaning, "Yahweh is salvation." 1. Leader of the ninth course of priests under David (1 Chron. 24:11, sometimes transliterated as Jeshuah). 2. Priest under Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.) who helped distribute food collected in tithes and offerings to the priests living in the Levitical cities outside Jerusalem (2 Chron. 31:15). 3. High priest taken into the Exile by King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 586 B.C. He returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2). Descendants of his family or of 1. above also returned (Ezra 2:36; compare 2:40). He led in rebuilding the altar and restoring sacrifice in Jerusalem (Ezra 3:2–6). They also began building the Temple but quit when strong opposition arose and appealed to King Artaxerxes (Ezra 3:8—4:24). Later correspondence led King Darius to recover Cyrus' proclamation authorizing the rebuilding of the Temple. This came after Jeshua followed the prophetic preaching of Zechariah and Haggai and renewed efforts to rebuild the Temple (Ezra 5:2—6:15; Hag. 1:1, 12—14; 2:4), finally finishing in 515 B.C. Still, some of his sons married foreign women and had to follow Ezra's teaching and divorce them (Ezra 10:18–19). Zechariah had a vision featuring Jeshua in which God announced the full cleansing of the high priest, preparing him to lead in the atonement rites for the people and pointing to the day when Messiah would come and provide complete and eternal atonement for God's people (Zech. 3). Jeshua was apparently one of the two anointed ones of Zechariah's vision (4:14; compare 6:12–13).

4. A clan related to the Pahath-moab or governor of Moab, some of whose members returned from Exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:6). 5. Father of Exer, the Jewish governor of the district of Mizpah under Persian rule (Neh. 3:19). 6. A Levite who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:9). 7. A clan of Levites in the postexilic community, probably having some connection with the clan of 1. 8. Name for conquest hero Joshua, son of Nun (Neh. 8:17). See Joshua.

9. Village in Judah where some Jews lived after returning from Exile (Neh. 11:26). It may be modern tell es-Sawi, northeast of Beersheba.

JESHUAH (Jĕ shū′ ah) KJV alternative for Jeshua at 1 Chronicles 24:11. See Jeshua; Joshua.

JESHURUN (Jĕ shū′ rŭn) Proper name meaning, "upright" or "straight." Poetic name for Israel (Deut. 32:15; 33:5,26; Isa. 44:2; compare Eccl. 37:25). It may represent a play on Jacob, the original Israel, known for deception. Jeshurun would show Israel had quit deceiving and become upright or straight in actions.

JESIAH (Jĕ sī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh forgets." Member of Saul's tribe of Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag as David fled before Saul (1 Chron. 12:6). Modern translations read, Isshiah. A shortened form in Hebrew appears at 1 Chronicles 23:20, a Levite; 7:3, leader in tribe of Issachar; 24:21, a Levite; 24:25, another Levite; Ezra 10:31, a man with a foreign wife. See Ishiah; Isshiah; Ishijah.

JESIMIEL (Jĕ sĭm′ ĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh places." Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36).

JESSE (Jĕs′ sē) Personal name meaning, "man" or "manly." Father of David the king (1 Sam. 16:1). He was a Judahite who lived in Bethlehem, the son of Obed and the grandson of Boaz and Ruth (1 Sam. 16:1; Ruth 4:17). He had eight sons, of whom David was the youngest, and two daughters. He is mentioned in the genealogies of Jesus in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke. See David.

JEST An act intended to provoke laughter; an utterance intended as mockery or humor. Thinking Lot was jesting about Sodom's imminent destruction, his sons-in-law remained in the city (Gen. 19:14). The jesters of Psalm 35:16 (NAS) are mockers. Isaiah 57:4 describes idolatry as making God the object of a jest (KJV sport). Ephesians 5:4 characterizes jesting or mocking speech as part of a pagan life-style.

JESUI (Jĕs' ū ī) KJV spelling of descendant of Asher (Num. 26:44), the same as Isui in Genesis 46:17. Modern translations spell both Ishvi. A son of Saul bears the same Hebrew name (1 Sam. 14:49), transliterated into English as Ishui (KJV), Ishvi (NAS, NRSV, NIV), or Ishyo (REB). See Ishvi.

JESUITE (Jĕs' ū īte) Member of clan founded by Jesui (Num. 26:44). See Jesui.

JESURUN (Jė sū' rŭn) KJV variant spelling of Jeshurun in Isaiah 44:2. See Jeshurun.

JESUS CHRIST (Jē' ṣŭs Chrīst) Greek form of Joshua and of title meaning, "Yahweh is salvation" and "the anointed one" or "Messiah." Proper name of the Savior of the world. The title "Christ" gathers all of the Old Testament prophetic hopes and infuses into them the meaning associated with the proper name Jesus, Man of Galilee—Man of sorrows. Jesus is the clearest picture of God the world has ever seen—that is the affirmation of believing hearts. In Jesus Christ are united the vertical of God's revelation and the horizontal of history's meaning. Christians see in this one proper name a conjunction of God and man.

The believers of the New Testament did not first "read" Jesus Christ chronologically. That is, they did not set down to construct a doctrine called Christology that would move from preexistence to parousia (final coming). Rather, they were caught up in the historical reality of what God was doing for them and all the world through Jesus Christ. Looking at the different episodes of the Christ event should show the New Testament understanding of Jesus, God's Christ.

Resurrection Jesus' resurrection grasped the early believers. The walk of the risen Christ with those burning hearts en route to Emmaus, the appearance of the risen Christ first to Mary Magdalene, the appearance and commissions of the risen Christ to His disciples—these things which no other experience can duplicate nor any other religious movement validate claimed the Christians' attention in an unforgetable way. People of the first century had seen people die before. None before or since had seen a person bring God's resurrection life to bear on this world's most pressing problem, death. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the center of the Christian gospel (1 Cor. 15).

The Death of Jesus Christ He who was raised on the first day of the week was the same as the One who had died three days earlier. His was not simply a natural death. It was a ritual murder carried out by the authorities of Rome, engineered by the religious leaders of that day, but made necessary by the sins of all who ever lived. Jesus was delivered up by His own people and put to death by a cruel political regime, but the earliest New Testament communities saw in this tragedy the determinate will of God (Acts 1—12). Paul connected Jesus' death to the sacrificial ideas of the Old Testament and saw in the giving of this life a vicarious act for all humankind. Jesus' death was a major stumbling block for Israel. How could God's Christ be "hung on a tree" and fall under the curse of the law (Gal. 3) when He did not deserve it.

Jesus as Doer of God's Mighty Works This One who was raised, the same One who died, had performed the miracles of God's kingdom in our time and space. John testified that in the doing of God's mighty works Jesus was the prophet sent from God (John 6:14). He healed all kinds of persons, a sign of God's ultimate healing. He raised some from the dead, a sign that He would bring God's resurrection life to all who would receive it. He cast out evil spirits as a preview of God's final shutting away of the evil one (Rev. 20). He was Lord over nature, indicating that by His power God was already beginning to create a new heaven and a new earth (Rev. 21:1). The spectacular impact of His mighty works reinforced and called to mind the power of His teachings.

Jesus' Teachings "Never man spake like this man" with such authority (John 7:46; compare Matt. 7:29). His teachings were about "the Father," what He wanted, what He was like, what He would do for His creation. Jesus' teachings required absolute obedience and love for God and the kingdom of God. He dared claim that the kingdom had begun in His ministry but would not be culminated until Christ's final coming. Until that coming, Christians were to live in the world by the ethical injunctions He gave (Matt. 5—7) and in the kind of love He had shown and commanded (John 14—16). To help earthly people understand heavenly things, He spoke in parables. These parables were from realistic, real-life settings. They were about the kingdom of God—what it was like, what was required to live in it, what was the meaning of life according to its teachings, what the kingdom promised. One of the promises of the kingdom was that the King would return and rule in it.

Jesus' Ultimate Coming Just as the first coming of Jesus Christ was according to prophecy, so the final coming of Christ is to be by divine promise and prediction. The earliest Christians expected Christ's coming immediately (1 Thess. 4). This must be the expectation of the churches in every age (Rev. 1—3). It was the same Jesus who ascended who will return (Acts 1). His return heralds the end and brings an end to the struggle of good and evil, the battle between the kingdoms of this world which must become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ (Rev. 11:15). In the meanwhile His followers must work to eat (2 Thess. 3). His followers must go and tell; His followers must unite the hope of eschatology and the life of ethics in a fashion that will share the gospel with all the world (Matt. 28:19–20). The time of His final coming is not a Christian's primary concern (Acts 1:5–6). Natural calamities, man-made tragedies, and great suffering will precede His coming (Matt. 13; Matt. 24—25). All of these will find His people faithful, even as He is to His promise—found faithful even as God was to God's promises in sending this Child of promise to the world.

The Birth of Jesus Christ The Gospels began in the heart of God and in the resurrection faith of the writers, but Matthew and Luke begin with the story of Jesus' birth. His conception was virginal. His advent was announced by angels. His actual birth occurred in a place and time that seemed to be no place and time for a baby to be born. Angels announced. Shepherds heard, came, and wondered. Magi came later to bring gifts. A wrathful and jealous King (Herod) killed many innocent children hoping to find the right one. The "right One" escaped to Egypt. Upon returning, He went to Nazareth, was reared in the home of the man Joseph, was taken to Jerusalem where His knowledge of His Father's business surprised and inconvenienced them all—the doctors and the parents. At birth He seemed destined for death. At baptism He was sealed to be a suffering Messiah. Those were times in which He and the Father were working things out, so that when ministry came Jesus could "work the works of him that sent me, while it is day" (John 9:4). But Bethlehem was not the beginning of the story.

Jesus' Preexistence Eternity began the story. If this one is the Son of God, then He must be tied on to the ancient people of God. He must be in the beginning . . . with God (John 1:1). Preexistence was not the first reflection of the early church about Jesus Christ, nor was it merely an afterthought. The purpose of Jesus' preexistence is to tie Him onto God and to what God had been doing through Israel. Matthew 1 established by His genealogy that Jesus is related to David, is related to Moses, is related to Abraham—one cannot be more integrally related to Israel than that. Luke 3 established by His genealogy that Jesus is vitally related to all humans. Jesus came from Mary; but ultimately He came from God via a lineage that extends back to Adam, who was the direct child of God. Paul spoke of the fully divine Son of God who came down from God, who redeems us, and who returns to God (Eph. 3). This heavenly Christ emptied Himself and became like us for our sake (Phil. 2). God determined, before the foundation of the world, that the redemption of the world would be accomplished through Jesus, the Lord of Glory (Eph. 1). John began a new Genesis with his bold assertion that "in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God" (John 1:1). This Word (Greek, logos) has become flesh (John 1:14) so that qualified witnesses can see, touch, and hear the revelation of God (1 John 1:1–4). It may have been in this way from resurrection to preexistence that early Christians stitched together, under the guidance of God, the story of Jesus. But His story lay also in His names, His titles, what He was called.

The Names and Titles of Jesus Jesus' own proper name is a Greek version of the Hebrew "Joshua," salvation is from Yahweh. His very name suggests His purpose. "He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21). This One is Immanuel, God with us (Isa. 7:14; Matt. 1:23). Mark began his brief Gospel in some manuscripts by introducing Jesus as the Son of God (Mark 1:1). Luke's shepherds knew Him as "a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11). John pulled out all the stops in his melodic introduction of Jesus Christ: the Word who made the world (1:1–3), the Life (1:4), the Light (1:5), the Glory of God (1:14), One full of grace and truth (1:17), the Son who makes the Father known (1:18). Paul addressed Him as "the Lord"—the earliest Christian confession was that Jesus (is) Lord. The lordship of Christ is tied to the reverence for the name of God and is an assessment of Jesus' worth as well as Paul's relationship to Him. Since Christ is Lord (kurios), Paul is servant (doulos). The Gospels herald the message of the Son of Man, He who was humbled, who suffered, who will come again. Hebrews cast Jesus in the role of priest, God's great and final High Priest, who both makes the sacrifice and is the sacrifice. Thomas, known for his doubting, should also be remembered for faith's greatest application about Christ: "My Lord and my God" (John 20:28). The metaphors of John's Gospel invite us to reflect on Jesus Christ, God's great necessity. John portrays Jesus as the Water of life (4:14); the Bread of life (6:41); the Light (8:12); the Door (10:7); the Good Shepherd (10:11); the Resurrection and the Life (11:25); the Way, the Truth, the Life (14:6).

Summary Christ is the way to God. His way of being in the world was a way of obedience, faithfulness, and service. The earliest Christians saw who He was in what He did. In the great deed of the cross they saw the salvation of the world. The inspired writers offered no physical descriptions of the earthly Jesus. The functional way the New Testament portrays Him is found in the statement that He was a man "who went about doing good" (Acts 10:38). The good that He did came into dramatic conflict with the evil all mankind has done. This conflict saw Him crucified, but a Roman soldier saw in this crucified One (the) Son of God (Mark 15:39). God did not "suffer thine Holy One to see corruption" (Acts 2:27). With the one shattering new act since creation, God raised Jesus from the dead. See Christ; Christology.

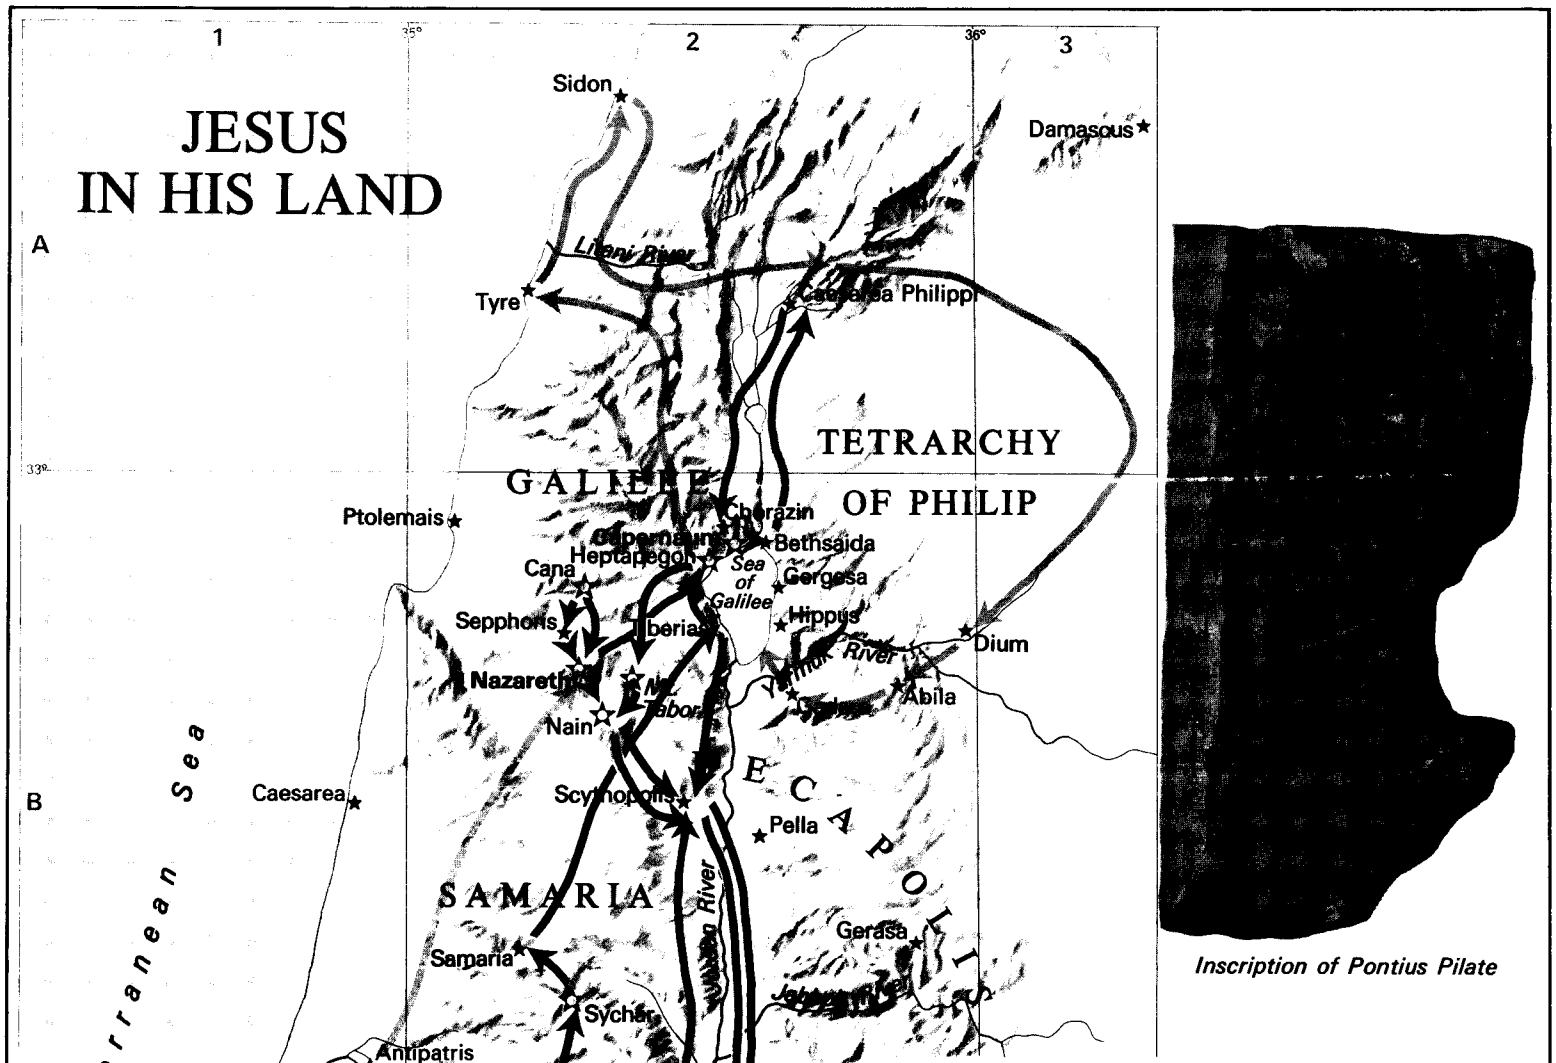
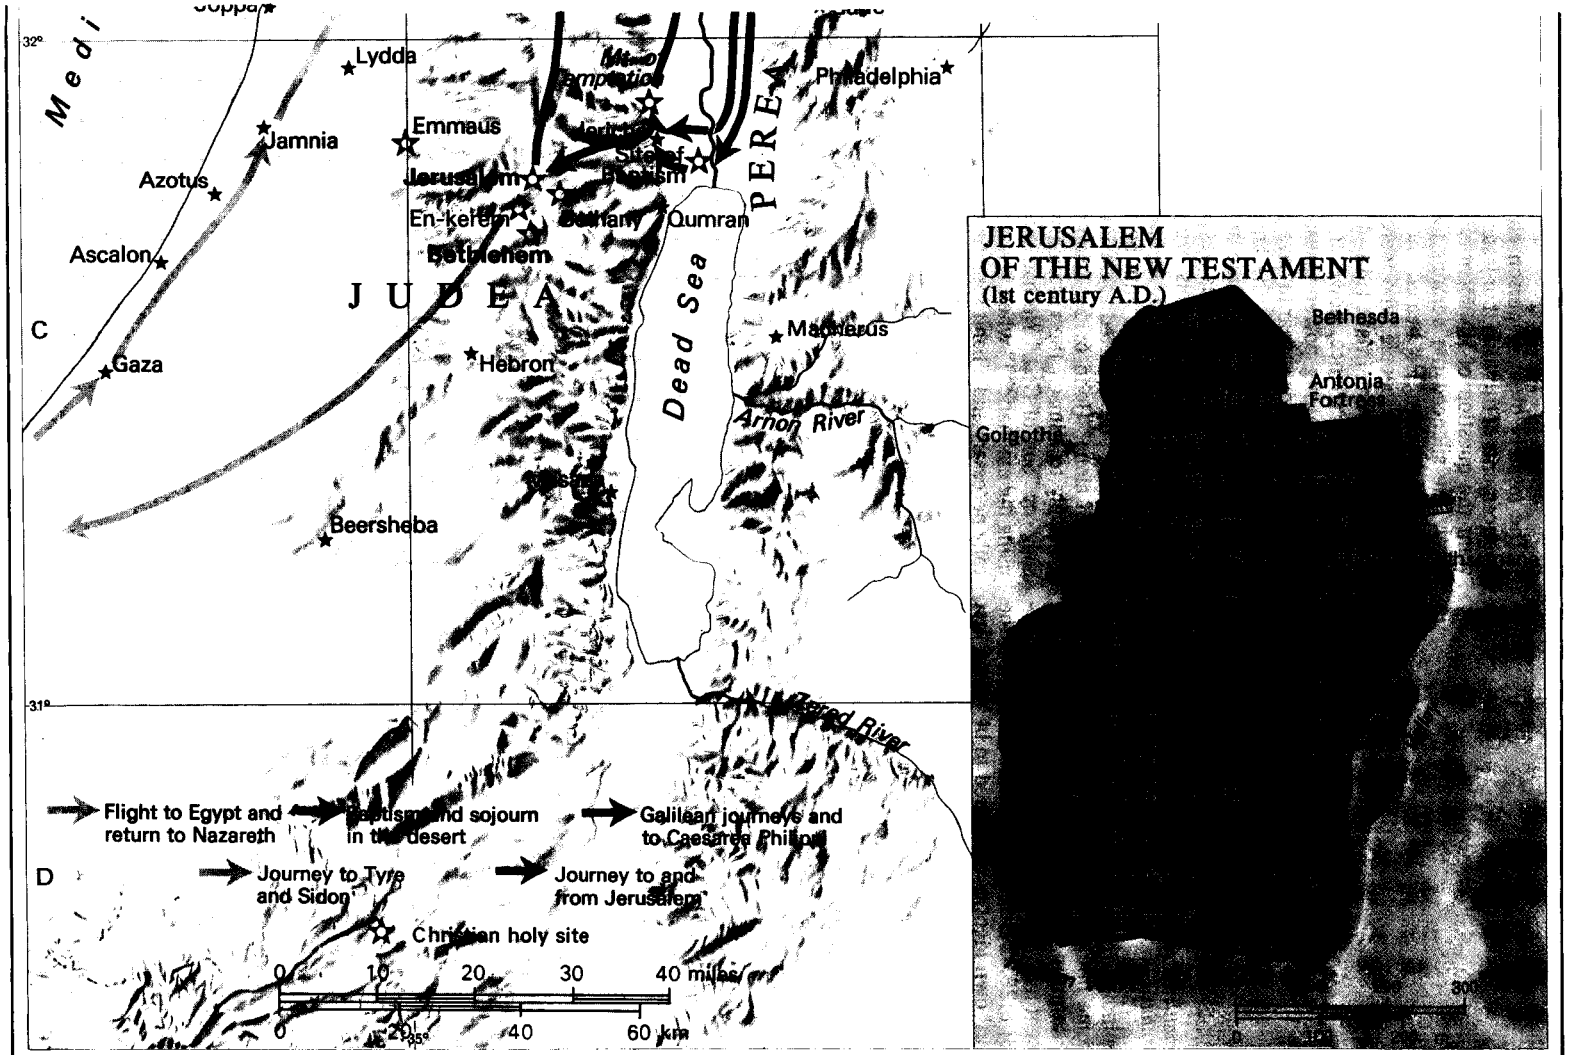
JESUS, LIFE AND MINISTRY OF (Jē' sŭs) The story of Jesus begins abruptly in the Gospel of Mark when He presented Himself at the Jordan River to the desert prophet John the Baptist as a candidate for baptism. All that is said about His origin is that He came to the river "from Nazareth" (Mark 1:9). "Jesus of Nazareth" was a designation that followed Him to the day of His death (John 19:19).

His Origins Matthew's Gospel demonstrates that although Nazareth was Jesus' home when He came to John for baptism, He was not born there. Rather, He was born (as the Jewish messiah must be) in Bethlehem, the "city of David," as a descendant of David's royal line (Matt. 1:1–17; 2:1–6). This Child born in Bethlehem ended up as an adult in Nazareth, described sarcastically by his enemies as a "Nazarene" (literally, "Nazarite" 2:23). The play on words seems intended to poke fun simultaneously at Jesus' obscure origins and at the stark contrast (in the eyes of many) between His supposed holiness (like the Nazirites of the Old Testament) and His practice of keeping company with sinners, prostitutes, and tax collectors (Mark 2:17). The Gospel of Luke supplies background information on John the Baptist, showing how the families of John and Jesus were related both by kinship and by circumstances (Luke 1:5–80). Luke added that Nazareth was the family home of Jesus' parents all along (Luke 1:26–27). Yet he confirmed Matthew's testimony that the family was of the line of David. Luke introduced the Roman census as the reason for their return to the ancestral city of Bethelehem just before Jesus' birth (Luke 2:1–7). More the biographer than either Mark or Matthew, Luke provided glimpses of Jesus as an eight-day-old infant (2:21–39), a boy of twelve years (2:40–52), and a man of 30 beginning His ministry (3:21–23). Only when this brief biographical sketch was complete did Luke append His genealogy (Luke 3:23–38), which confirms in passing Jesus' Davidic ancestry (Luke 3:31; compare 1:32–33), while emphasizing above all His solidarity with the entire human race in its descent from "Adam, which was the son of God" (Luke 3:38). The reflection on Jesus' baptism in the Gospel of John centers on John the Baptist's acknowledgement that Jesus "is preferred before me: for he was before me" (John 1:30; compare v. 15). This pronouncement allowed the Gospel writer to turn the story of Jesus' origins into a theological confession by tracing Jesus' existence back to the creation of the world and before (John 1:1–5). Despite His royal ancestry and despite His heavenly preexistence as the eternal Word and Son of God, Jesus was of humble origins humanly speaking and was viewed as such by the people of His day. When He taught in Nazareth, the townspeople asked, "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us?" (Mark 6:3; compare Luke 4:22). When He taught in Capernaum, they asked, "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?" (John 6:42). Though two Gospels, Matthew and Luke, tell of His mother Mary's miraculous conception and of Jesus' virgin birth, these matters were not public knowledge during His time on earth, for "Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart" (Luke 2:19; compare v. 51).



Jesus and the God of Israel Even after the momentous events associated with Jesus' baptism in the Jordan River—the descent of God's Spirit on Him like a dove and the voice from heaven announcing "Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Mark 1:10–11)—His identity as Son of God remained hidden from those around Him. We have no evidence that anyone except Jesus, and possibly John the Baptist, either heard the voice or saw the dove. Ironically, the first intimation after the baptism that He was more than simply "Jesus of Nazareth" came not from His family or friends nor from the religious leaders of Israel, but from the devil!

Twice the devil challenged him: "If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread" (Luke 4:3), and (on the pinnacle of the Temple in Jerusalem), "If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence" (Luke 4:9). Jesus made no attempt to defend or make use of His divine sonship but appealed instead to an authority to which any devout Jew of His day might have appealed—the holy Scriptures—and through them to the God of Israel. Citing three passages from Deuteronomy, Jesus called attention not to Himself, but to "the Lord thy God" (Luke 4:8; compare Mark 10:18; 12:29–30). Jesus apparently used this story out of His personal experience to teach His disciples that they too must "live . . . by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," (Matt. 4:4), must "not tempt the Lord your God" (Luke 4:12), and must "worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Luke 4:8).



Two things about this temptation story have a special bearing on the ministry of Jesus as a whole. First, the God-centered character of His message continued in the proclamation He began in Galilee when He returned home from the desert: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark 1;15; compare Matt. 4:17). Mark called this proclamation "the gospel of the kingdom of God" (Mark 1:14). John's Gospel presented Jesus

© carta

JESUS IN HIS LAND

Inscription of Pontius Pilate

Joppa
Lydda
Philadelphia
Emmaus
Jamnia
Azotus
Jerusalem
Mount of Olives
Bethany
Qumran
En-kerem
Ascalon
Bethlehem
JUDEA
PEREA
Dead Sea
Machaerus
Gaza
Hebron
Arnon River
Beersheba
Zered River
Flight to Egypt and return to Nazareth
Baptism and sojourn in the desert
Galilean journeys and to Caesarea Philippi
Journey to Tyre and Sidon
Journey to and from Jerusalem
Christian holy site
0 10 20 30 40 miles
0 20 40 60 km
C
D
JERUSALEM
OF THE NEW TESTAMENT
(1st century A.D.)
Bethesda
Antonia Fortress
Golgotha
300

The traditional site on the Jordan River where Jesus was baptized.

as reminding His hearers again and again that He had come not to glorify or proclaim Himself, but solely to make known "the Father," or "the One who sent me" (John 4:34; 5:19, 30; 6:38; 7:16–18,28; 8:28,42,50; 14:10,28). Second, the issue of Jesus' own identity continued to be raised first by the powers of evil. Just as the devil challenged Jesus in the desert as "Son of God," so in the course of His ministry the demons (or the demon-possessed) confronted Him with such words as "what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? . . . I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God" (Mark 1:24), or "What have I to do with thee Jesus, thou Son of the most high God?" (Mark 5:7).

The mystery of Jesus' person emerged in pronouncements of this kind, but Jesus seemed not to want the question of His identity raised prematurely. He silenced the demons (Mark 1:25,34; 3:12); and when He healed the sick, He frequently told the people who were cured not to speak of it to anyone (Mark 1:43–44; 7:36*a*). The more He urged silence, however, the faster the word of His healing power spread (Mark 1:45; 7:36*b*). The crowds appear to have concluded that He must be the Messiah, the anointed King of David's line expected to come and deliver the Jews from Roman rule. If Jesus was playing out the role of Messiah, the Gospels present Him as a strangely reluctant Messiah. At one point, when the crowds tried to "take Him by force to make Him a king, "he departed again into a mountain himself alone" (John 6:15). Seldom, if ever, did He apply to Himself the customary terms "Messiah" or "Son of God." He had instead a way of using the emphatic "I" when it was not grammatically necessary and a habit sometimes of referring to Himself indirectly and mysteriously as "Son of man." In the Aramaic language Jesus spoke, "Son of man" meant simply "a certain man," or "someone." Though He made no explicit messianic claims and avoided the ready-made titles of honor that the Jews customarily applied to the Messiah, Jesus spoke and acted with the authority of God Himself. He gave sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf; He enabled the lame to walk. When He touched the unclean, He made them clean. He even raised the dead to life. In teaching the 15th–16th century painting in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, showing the burial of Jesus.

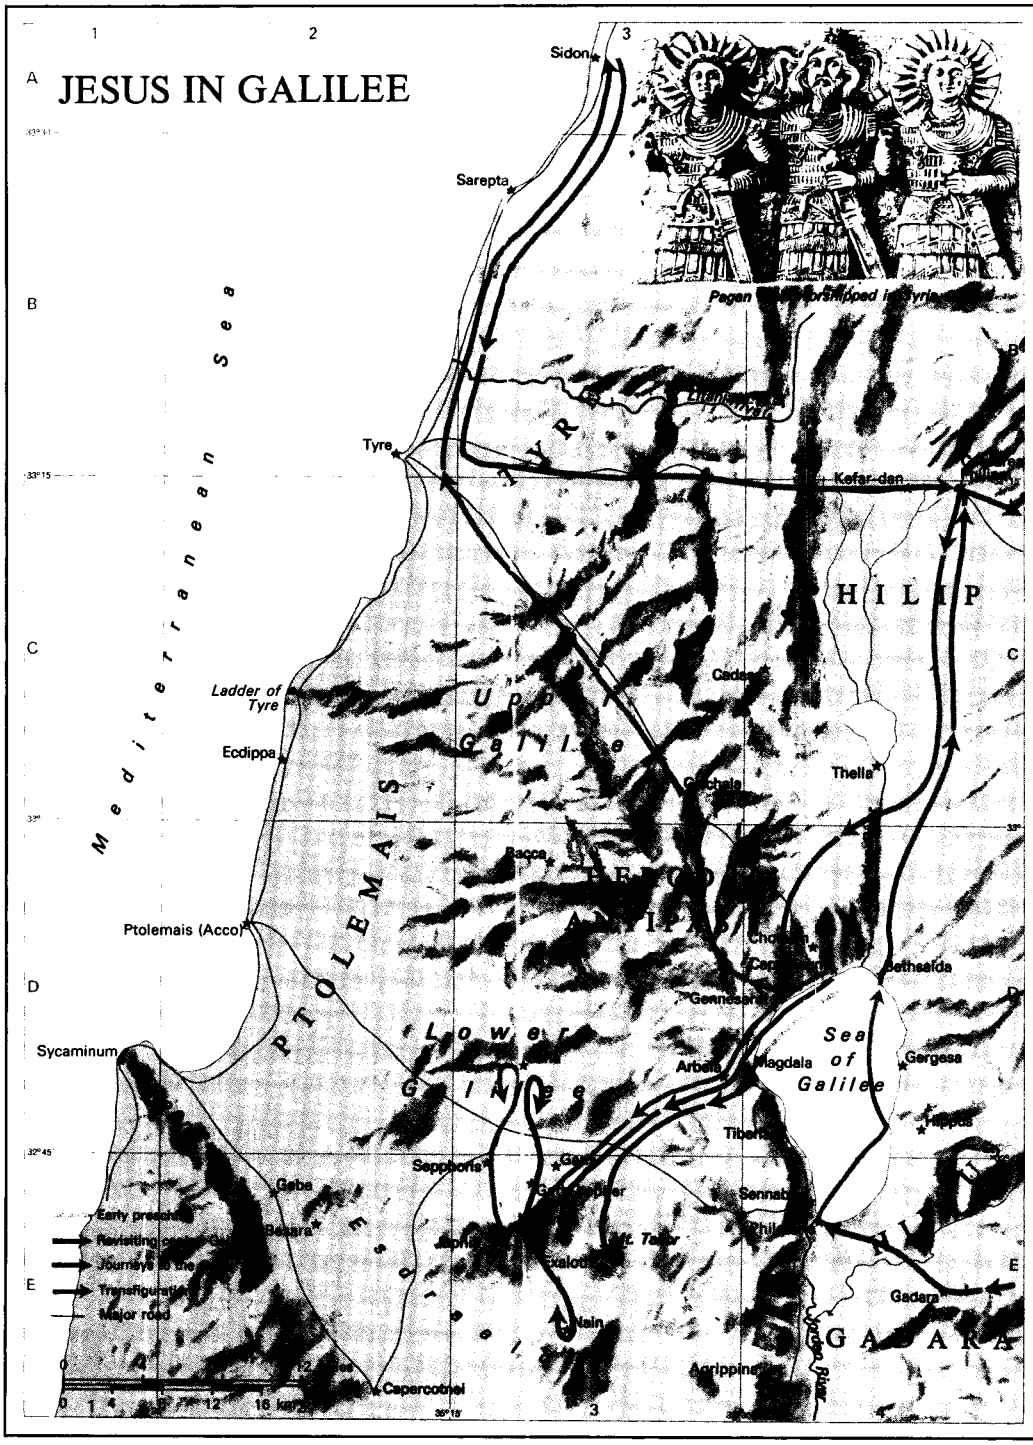
J

crowds that gathered around Him, He did not hesitate to say boldly, "Ye have heard that it was said . . . but I say unto you" (Matt 5:21–22, 27–28,31–32,33–34,38–39,43–44). So radical was He toward the accepted traditions that He found it necessary to state at the outset: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill" (Matt. 5:17).



Such speech and behavior inevitably raised questions about Jesus' identity. The crowds who heard Him "were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matt. 7:28–29). Despite His reluctance (or perhaps because of it), His following in the early days of His ministry was enormous. He had to get up before daylight to find time and a place for private prayer (Mark 1:35). So pressed was He by the crowds that He taught them on one occasion while standing in a boat offshore on the lake of Galilee (Mark 4:1). Once when a group of people desired healing for a paralyzed man, the huge mob around the house where Jesus was staying forced them to lower the man through a hole in the roof (Mark 2:4). Everyone needed what they knew Jesus had to give. There was no way He could meet all their needs at once.

Jesus' Mission Who were "the lost sheep" to whom Jesus was called to be the Shepherd? The apparent answer is that they were those who were not expected to benefit from the coming of the Messiah. Through their carelessness about the law, they had become the enemies of God; but God loved His enemies. Jesus' conviction was that both He and His disciples must love them, too (Matt. 5:38–48). Jesus was challenged on one occasion for enjoying table fellowship with social outcasts (known to the religious Jews as "sinners") in the house of Levi, the tax collector in Capernaum. He replied to criticism: "They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick; I came not to call the righteous, but sinners" (Mark 2:17). Another time, when the religious authorities murmured that "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them" (Luke 15:2), Jesus told three parables of God's inexhaustible love for those who are "lost" and of God's unbridled joy when the lost are found (the parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son; Luke 15:3–32). He claimed that God's joy at the recovery of all such sinners (tax collectors, prostitutes, shepherds, soldiers, and others despised by the pious in Israel) was greater than any joy "over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance" (Luke 15:7; compare vv. 25–32). Such an exuberant celebration of divine mercy, whether expressed in Jesus' actions or in the stories He told, must have seemed to religious leaders both in Galilee and Jerusalem a serious lowering of ancient ethical standards and a damaging compromise of the holiness of God.

We have little evidence that Jesus included non-Jews among the "sinners" to whom He was sent. Despite the reference in Luke 4:25–27 to Elijah and Elisha and their ministry to foreigners, Jesus explicitly denied that He was sent to Gentiles or Samaritans (Matt. 15:24; see 10:5–6). Yet the principle, "not to the righteous, but to sinners," made the extension of the good news of the kingdom of God to the Gentiles after Jesus' resurrection a natural one. Even during Jesus' lifetime, He responded to the initiatives of Gentiles seeking His help (Matt. 8:5–13; Luke 7:1–10; Mark 7:24–30; Matt 15:21–28), sometimes in such a way as to put Israel to shame (Matt. 8:10). Twice He traveled through Samaria (Luke 9:51–56; John 4:4); once He stayed in a Samaritan village for two days, calling a Samaritan woman and a number of other townspeople to faith (John 4:5–42), and once He made a Samaritan the hero of one of His parables (Luke 10:29–37).

None of this was calculated to win Him friends among the priests in Jerussalem or the Pharisees throughout Israel. He described visions that many would "come from east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness" (Matt. 8:11–12). He predicted that twelve uneducated Galileans would one day "sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28; compare Luke 22:28–29). He warned the religious leaders sternly that they were in danger of "blasphemy against the Spirit" by attributing the Spirit's ministry through Him to the power of the devil (Matt. 12:31). The whole affair was complicated by the concern of Jesus' relatives over his safety and sanity (Mark 3:21) and by His consequent affirmation of His disciples as a new family based on obedience to the will of God (Mark 3:31–35).

The so-called "Beel-zebub controversy," triggered by his healing and saving activity, set a grim precedent for Jesus' relationship with the Jerusalem authorities and made His eventual arrest, trial, and execution almost inevitable (Mark 3:20–35). From that time Jesus began to speak in parables to make the truth about God's kingdom clear to His followers while hiding it from those blind to its beauty and deaf to its call (Mark 4:10–12; notice that Jesus is first said to have spoken in parables in Mark 3:23, in immediate response to the charge of demon possession). He also began to intimate, sometimes in analogy or parable (Mark 10:38; Luke 12:49–50; John 3:14; 12:24,32) and sometimes in explicit language (Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:33–34), that He would be arrested and tried by the religious leadership in Jerusalem, die on the cross, and rise from the dead after three days. From the start He had defined His mission, at least in part, as that of the "Servant of the Lord" described in Isaiah 40—46 (see, for example the citation of Isa. 61:1–2 in Luke 4:18–19). As His

JESUS IN GALILEE
Sidon
Sarepta
Tyre
Kefar-dan Ladder of Tyre
Ecdippa
Ptolemais (Acco)
Sycaminum
Thella
Bethsaida
Gennesaret
Sea of Galilee
Gergesa
Arbela
Magdala
Tiberias
Sepphoris
Gaba
Gadara
Capercotnei
Hippos
Sennabris
Agrippina
Jordan River
Mediterranean Sea
PTOLEMAIS
Upper Galilee
Lower Galilee
HILP
GAULANITIS
Early preaching
Journeys of the Transfiguration
Major road
0 1 4 8 12 16 kms

© carta

ministry moved toward its completion, the vicarious suffering of the Servant (see Isa. 52:13—53:12) came into sharper and sharper focus for Jesus (see Mark 10:45; 12:24). He also saw Himself as the stricken Shepherd of Zechariah 13:7 (Mark 14:27) and, at the very end, in the role of the righteous Sufferer of the biblical Psalms (for example Mark 15:34; Luke 23:46; John 19:28). Before His arrest He dramatized for the disciples His impending death by sharing with them in the bread and the cup of the Passover with the explanation that the bread was His body to be broken for them and that the cup of wine was His blood to be shed for their salvation. Only His death could guarantee the coming of the kingdom He had proclaimed (Matt. 26:26–29; Mark 14:22–25; Luke 22:14–20; compare 1 Cor. 11:23–26).

His Death and Resurrection The Gospel accounts of Jesus' last days in Jerusalem correspond in broad outline to the predictions attributed to Him earlier. He seems to have come to Jerusalem for the last time in the knowledge that He would die there. Though He received a royal welcome from crowds who looked to Him as the long-expected Messiah (see Matt 21:9–11; Mark 11:9–10; John 12:13), no evidence points to this as the reason for His arrest. Rather His action in driving the money changers out of the Jerusalem Temple (Matt 21:12–16; Mark 11:15–17; compare John 2:13–22), as well as certain of His pronouncements about the Temple aroused the authorities to act decisively against Him.

During His last week in Jerusalem, Jesus had predicted the Temple's destruction (Matt. 24:1–2; Mark 13:1–2; Luke 21:5–6) and claimed that "I will destroy this Temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands" (Mark 14:58; compare Matt. 26:61). Jesus' intention to establish a new community as a "temple," or dwelling place of God (see Matt. 16:18; John 2:19; 1 Cor. 3:16–17) was perceived as a very real threat to the old community of Judaism and to the Temple that stood as its embodiment. On this basis He was arrested and charged as a deceiver of the people.

During a hearing before the Sanhedrin, or Jewish ruling council, Jesus spoke of Himself as "Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven" (Mark 14:62; compare Matt. 26:64, Luke 22:69). Though the high priest called this blasphemy and the Sanhedrin agreed that such behavior deserved death, the results of the hearing seem to have been inconclusive. If Jesus had been formally tried and convicted by the Sanhedrin, he would have been stoned to death like Stephen in Acts 7, or like the attempted stoning of the woman caught in adultery in a story reported in some manuscripts of John 8:1–11. For whatever reason, the high priest and his cohorts apparently found no formal charges they could make stick. If Jesus were stoned to death without a formal conviction, it would be murder, a sin the Ten Commandments forbid. (John 18:31 refers to what was forbidden to the Jews by their own law, not to what was forbidden by the Romans.) The Sanhedrin decided, therefore, to send Jesus to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, with charges against Him that the Romans would take seriously: "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying that he himself is Christ a King" (Luke 23:2). Jesus' execution is therefore attributable neither to the Jewish people as a whole nor to the Sanhedrin, but rather to a small group of priests who manipulated the Romans into doing what they were not able to accomplish within the framework of their law. Though Pilate pronounced Jesus innocent three times (Luke 23:4,14,22; compare John 18:38; 19:4,6), he was maneuvered into sentencing Jesus with the thinly veiled threat, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar" (John 19:12). Consequently, Jesus was crucified between two thieves, fulfilling His own prediction that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up" (John 3:14). Most of His disciples fled at His arrest; only a group of women and one disciple, called the disciple whom He loved, were present at the cross when He died (John 19:25–27; compare Matt. 27:55–56; Mark 15:40; Luke 23:49).

The story did not end with the death of Jesus. His body was placed in a new tomb that belonged to a secret disciple named Joseph of Arimathea (Luke 23:50–56; John 19:38–42). The Gospels agree that two days later, the morning after the sabbath, some of the women who had remained faithful to Jesus came to the tomb. They discovered the stone over the entrance to the tomb rolled away and the body of Jesus gone. According to Mark, a young man was there (16:5; tradition calls him an angel) and told the women to send word to the rest of the disciples to go and meet Jesus in Galilee, just as He had promised them (Mark 16:7; see 14:28). The most reliable manuscripts of Mark's Gospel end the story there, leaving the rest to the reader's imagination. According to Matthew, the young man's word was confirmed to the women by the risen Jesus Himself. When they brought word to the eleven disciples (the twelve minus Judas, the betrayer), the disciples went to a mountain in Galilee, where the risen Jesus appeared to them as a group. He commanded them to make more disciples, teaching and baptizing among the Gentiles (Matt. 28:16–20). According to Luke, the risen Jesus appeared to the gathered disciples already in Jerusalem on the same day He was raised and before that to two disciples walking to the neighboring town of Emmaus. According to John, there was an appearance in Jerusalem on Easter day to one of the women,

Parables of Jesus

PARABLE	OCCASION	LESSON TAUGHT	REFERENCES
1. The speck and the log	When reproving the Pharisees	Do not presume to judge others	Matt. 7:1-6; Luke 6:37-43
2. The two houses	Sermon on the Mount, at the close	The strength conferred by duty	Matt. 7:24-27; Luke 6:47-49
3. Children in the marketplace	Rejection by the Pharisees of John's baptism	Evil of a fault-finding disposition	Matt. 11:16; Luke 7:32
4. The two debtors	A Pharisee's self-righteous reflections	Love to Christ proportioned to grace received	Luke 7:41
5. The unclean spirit	The Scribes demand a miracle in the heavens	Hardening power of unbelief	Matt. 12:43-45; Luke 11:24-26
6. The rich man's meditation	Dispute of two brothers	Folly of reliance upon wealth	Luke 12:16
7. The barren fig tree	Tidings of the execution of certain Galileans	Danger in the unbelief of the Jewish people	Luke 13:6-9
8. The sower	Sermon on the seashore	Effects of preaching religious truth	Matt. 13:3-8; Mark 4:3-8; Luke 8:5-8
9. The tares	The same	The severance of good and evil	Matt. 13:24-30
10. The seed	The same	Power of truth	Mark 4:20
11. The grain of mustard seed	The same	Small beginnings and growth of Christ's kingdom	Matt. 13:31,32; Mark 4:31,32; Luke 13:19
12. The leaven	The same	Dissemination of the knowledge of Christ	Matt. 13:33; Luke 13:21
13. The lamp	To the disciples alone	Effect of good example	Matt. 5:15; Mark 4:21; Luke 8:16; 11:33
14. The dragnet	The same	Mixed character of the Church	Matt. 13:47,48
15. The hidden treasure	The same	Value of religion	Matt. 13:44
16. The pearl of great value	The same	The same	Matt. 13:45,46
17. The householder	The same	Varied methods of teaching truth	Matt. 13:52
18. The marriage	To the Pharisees, who censured the disciples	Joy in Christ's companionship	Matt. 9:15; Mark 2:19,20; Luke 5:34-35
19. The patched garment	The same	The propriety of adapting actions to circumstances	Matt. 9:16; Mark 2:21; Luke 5:36
20. The wine bottles	The same	The same	Matt. 9:17; Mark 2:22; Luke 5:37
21. The harvest	Spiritual wants of the Jewish people	Need of labor and prayer	Matt. 9:37; Luke 10:2
22. The opponent	Slowness of the people to believe	Need of prompt repentance	Matt. 5:25; Luke 12:58
23. Two insolvent debtors	Peter's question	Duty of forgiveness	Matt. 18:23-35

Parables of Jesus

PARABLE	OCCASION	LESSON TAUGHT	REFERENCES
24. The good Samaritan	The lawyer's question	The golden rule for all	Luke 10:30–37
25. The three loaves	Disciples ask lesson in prayer	Effect of importunity in prayer	Luke 11:5–8
26. The good shepherd	Pharisees reject testimony of miracle	Christ the only way to God	John 10:1–16
27. The narrow gate	The question, Are there few that can be saved?	Difficulty of repentance	Matt. 7:14; Luke 13:24
28. The guests	Eagerness to take high places	Chief places not to be usurped	Luke 14:7–11
29. The marriage supper	Self-righteous remark of a guest	Rejection of unbelievers	Matt. 22:2–9; Luke 14:16–23
30. The wedding clothes	Continuation of the same discourse	Necessity of purity	Matt. 22:10–14
31. The tower	Multitudes surrounding Christ	Need of deliberation	Luke 14:28–30
32. The king going to war	The same	The same	Luke 14:31
33. The lost sheep	Pharisees objected to his receiving the wicked	Christ's love for sinners	Matt. 18:12,13; Luke 15:4–7
34. The lost coin	The same	The same	Luke 15:8, 9
35. The prodigal son	The same	The same	Luke 15:11–32
36. The unjust steward	To the disciples	Prudence in using property	Luke 16:1–9
37. The rich man and Lazarus	Derision of the Pharisees	Salvation not connected with wealth	Luke 16:19–31
38. The importunate widow	Teaching the disciples	Perseverance in prayer	Luke 18:2–5
39. The Pharisee and tax-gatherer	Teaching the self-righteous	Humility in prayer	Luke 18:10–14
40. The slave's duty	The same	Man's obedience	Luke 17:7–10
41. Laborers in the vineyard	The same	The same further illustrated	Matt. 20:1–16
42. The talents	At the house of Zaccheus	Doom-of-unfaithful-followers	Matt. 25:14–30; Luke 19:11–27
43. The two sons	The chief priests demand his authority	Obedience better than words	Matt. 21:28
44. The wicked vine-growers	The same	Rejection of the Jewish people	Matt. 21:33–43; Mark 12:1–9; Luke 20:9–15
45. The fig tree	In prophesying the destruction of Jerusalem	Duty of watching for Christ's appearance	Matt. 24:32; Mark 13:28; Luke 21:29,30
46. The watching slave	The same	The same	Matt. 24:43; Luke 12:39
47. The man on a journey	The same	The same	Mark 13:34
48. Character of two slaves	The same	Danger of unfaithfulness	Matt. 24:45–51; Luke 12:42–46
49. The ten virgins	The same	Necessity of watchfulness	Matt. 25:1–12
50. The watching slaves	The same	The same	Luke 12:36–38
51. The vine and branches	At the Last Supper	Loss and gain	John 15:1–6

Miracles of Jesus

MIRACLE	BIBLE PASSAGE
Water Turned to Wine				John 2:1
Many Healings	Matt. 4:23	Mark 1:32
Healing of a Leper	Matt. 8:1	Mark 1:40	Luke 5:12
Healing of a Roman Centurion's Servant	Matt. 8:5		Luke 7:1
Healing of Peter's Mother-in-law	Matt. 8:14	Mark 1:29	Luke 4:38
Calming of the Storm at Sea	Matt. 8:23	Mark 4:35	Luke 8:22
Healing of the Wild Men of Gadara	Matt. 8:28	Mark 5:1	Luke 8:26
Healing of a Lame Man	Matt. 9:1	Mark 2:1	Luke 5:18
Healing of a Woman with a Hemorrhage	Matt. 9:20	Mark 5:25	Luke 8:43
Raising of Jairus' Daughter	Matt. 9:23	Mark 5:22	Luke 8:41
Healing of Two Blind Men	Matt. 9:27
Healing of a Demon-possessed Man	Matt. 9:32
Healing of a Man with a Withered Hand	Matt. 12:10	Mark 3:1	Luke 6:6
Feeding of 5,000 People	Matt. 14:15	Mark 6:35	Luke 9:12	John 6:1
Walking on the Sea	Matt. 14:22	Mark 6:47		John 6:16
Healing of the Syrophenician's Daughter	Matt. 15:21	Mark 7:24
Feeding of 4,000 People	Matt. 15:32	Mark 8:1
Healing of an Epileptic Boy	Matt. 17:14	Mark 9:14	Luke 9:37
Healing of Two Blind Men at Jericho	Matt. 20:30
Healing of a Man with an Unclean Spirit		Mark 1:23	Luke 4:33
Healing of a Deaf, Speechless Man		Mark 7:31
Healing of a Blind Man at Bethesda		Mark 8:22
Healing of Blind Bartimaeus		Mark 10:46	Luke 18:35
A Miraculous Catch of Fish			Luke 5:4	John 21:1
Raising of A Widow's Son			Luke 7:11
Healing of a Stooped Woman			Luke 13:11
Healing of a Man with the Dropsy			Luke 14:1
Healing of Ten Lepers			Luke 17:11
Healing of Malchus' Ear			Luke 22:50
Healing of a Royal Official's Son				John 4:46
Healing of a Lame Man at Bethesda				John 5:1
Healing of a Blind Man				John 9:1
Raising of Lazarus				John 11:38

Discourses of Jesus

WHERE DELIVERED	NATURE OR STYLE	TO WHOM ADDRESSED	THE LESSON TO BE LEARNED	REFERENCES
1. Jerusalem	Conversation	Nicodemus	We must be "born of water and the Spirit" to enter the kingdom	John 3:1-21
2. At Jacob's Well	Conversation	Samaritan Woman	"God is spirit" to be worshiped in spirit and truth	John 4:1-30
3. At Jacob's Well	Conversation	The Disciples	Our food is to do His will	John 4:31-38
4. Nazareth	Sermon	Worshipers	No prophet is welcomed in his own hometown	Luke 4:16-31
5. Mountain in Galilee	Sermon	The Disciples and the People	The Beatitudes; to let our light shine before men; Christians the light of the world; how to pray; benevolence and humility; heavenly and earthly treasures contrasted; golden rule	Matt. 5-7; Luke 6:17-49
6. Bethesda—A Pool	Conversation	The Jews	To hear Him and believe on Him, is to have everlasting life	John 5:1-47
7. Near Jerusalem	Conversation	The Pharisees	Works of necessity not wrong on the Sabbath	Matt. 12:1-14; Luke 6:1-11
8. Nain	Eulogy and Denunciation	The People	Greatness of the least in heaven; judged according to the light we have	Matt. 11:2-29; Luke 7:18-35
9. Capernaum	Conversation	The Pharisees	The unforgivable sin is to sin against the Holy Spirit	Mark 3:19-30; Matt. 12:22-45
10. Capernaum	Conversation	The Disciples	The providence of God; nearness of Christ to those who serve Him	Mark 6:6-13; Matt. 10:1-42
11. Capernaum	Conversation	A Messenger	Relationship of those doing His will	Matt. 12:46-50; Mark 3:31-35
12. Capernaum	Sermon	The Multitude	Christ as the bread of life	John 6:22-71
13. Capernaum	Criticism and Reproof	The Scribes and Pharisees	Not outward conditions, but that which proceeds from the heart defiles	Matt. 15:1-20; Mark 7:1-23
14. Capernaum	Example	The Disciples	Humility the mark of greatness; be not a stumbling block	Matt. 18:1-14; Mark 9:33-50
15. Temple—Jerusalem	Instruction	The Jews	Judge not according to outward appearance	John 7:11-40
16. Temple—Jerusalem	Instruction	The Jews	To follow Christ, is to walk in the light	John 8:12-59
17. Temple—Jerusalem	Instruction	The Pharisees	Christ the door; He knows His sheep; gives His life for them	John 10:1-21
18. Capernaum	Charge	The Seventy	Need for Christian service; not to despise Christ's ministers	Luke 10:1-24
19. Bethany	Instruction	The Disciples	The efficacy of earnest prayer	Luke 11:1-13
20. Bethany	Conversation	The People	Hear and keep God's will; the state of the backslider	Luke 11:14-36
21. House of Pharisee	Reproof	The Pharisees	The meaning of inward purity	Luke 11:37-54
22. Beyond Jordan	Exhortation	The Multitude	Beware of hypocrisy; covetousness; blasphemy; be watchful	Luke 12:1-21
23. Perea	Object Lesson	The Disciples	Watchfulness; the kingdom of God is of first importance	Luke 12:22-34
24. Jerusalem	Exhortation	The People	Death for life; way of eternal life	John 12:20-50
25. Jerusalem	Denunciation	The Pharisees	Avoid hypocrisy and pretense	Matt. 23:1-39
26. Mt. of Olives	Prophecy	The Disciples	Signs of the coming of the Son of man; beware of false prophets	Matt. 24:1-51; Mark 13:1-37; Luke 21:5-36
27. Jerusalem	Exhortation	The Disciples	The lesson of humility and service	John 13:1-20
28. Jerusalem	Exhortation	The Disciples	The proof of discipleship; that He will come again	John 14-16

Mary Magdalene, another on the same day to the gathered disciples, another week later (still in Jerusalem) to the same group plus Thomas, and a fourth appearance, at an unstated time, by the lake of Galilee, in which Jesus reenacted the initial call of the disciples by providing them miraculously with an enormous catch of fish. Luke adds in the Book of Acts that the appearances of the risen Jesus went on over a period of forty days in which He continued to instruct them about the kingdom of God. Whatever the precise order of the facts, the disciples' experience of the living Jesus transformed them from a scattered and cowardly band of disillusioned visionaries into the nucleus of a coherent movement able to challenge and change forever the Roman Empire within a few short decades.

Though the physical resurrection of Jesus cannot be proven, alternate "naturalistic" explanations of the disciples' experience and of the empty tomb require without exception more credulity than the traditional confession of the Christian church that on the third day He rose from the dead. The unanimous witness of the Gospels is that the story goes on. Mark does it with the promise that Jesus will bring together His scattered flock and lead them into Galilee (Mark 16:7). Matthew does it more explicitly with Jesus' concluding words, "And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). Luke does it with the entire Book of Acts, which traces the spread of the message of the kingdom of God and the risen Jesus from Jerusalem all the way to Rome. John does it with his vivid picture of the Holy Spirit being given to the disciples directly from the mouth of Jesus Himself (John 20:21–22). Each Gospel makes the point differently, but the point is always the same. The story of Jesus is not over; He continues to fulfill His mission wherever His name is confessed and His teaching is obeyed, and the faith of Christians is that He will do so until He comes again. J. Ramsey Michaels

JETHER (Jē′ thĕr) Personal name meaning, "remnant." 1. Son of the judge Gideon who refused his father's command to kill enemy military leaders (Judg. 8:20). 2. Father of Amasa, army leader under Judah (1 Kings 4:5,32), and descended from Ishmael (1 Chron. 2:17; compare 2 Sam. 17:25). See Ithra. 3. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:32). 4. Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:17). 5. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 8:38, called Ithran in 7:37). See Ithran.

JETHETH (Jē′ thĕth) Clan name in Edom of unknown meaning (Gen. 36:40).

JETHLAH (Jĕth′ lah) Place name meaning, "he or it hangs." Border town of tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:42). Its location is unknown. Modern translations transliterate the name Ithrah. See Ithrah.

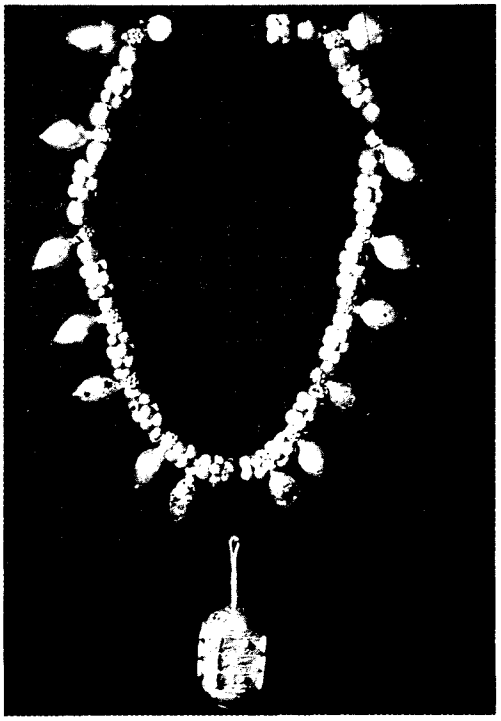
JETHRO (Jĕth′ rō) Personal name meaning, "excess" or "superiority." In Exodus 3:1, a priest of Midian and the father-in-law of Moses. Some variation exists in the Bible regarding the name of Moses' father-in-law. In Exodus 2:18, his name is Reuel. In Numbers 10:29 it is Hobab. The nature of the relationship of these names to one another is uncertain. Of particular interest is that Jethro was a Midianite priest. The deity whom he served is not explicitly identified; in Exodus 18:11, however, he declared Yahweh to be greater than all gods. One school of thought has discovered the origin of Israel's Yahwism in the ancient Midianite religion represented by Jethro. Such an origin is unlikely. Yahwistic faith probably is traceable at least as far back as Abraham. See Moses; Yahweh.

JETUR (Jē′ tŭr) Personal name perhaps meaning, "he set in courses or layers." A son of Ishmael and thus original ancestor of Arabian tribe or clan (Gen. 25:15). The clan was a part of the Hagerites, probably descendants of Hagar (1 Chron. 5:19), who fought the East Jordan tribes. See Hagrites. Israel's victory illustrated the conviction that trust in God brought victory in war. See Ituraea.

JEUEL (Jēu′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is strong" or "God heals." See Jeiel.

JEUSH (Jē′ ŭsh) Personal name meaning, "He helps." Hebrew is sometimes transliterated into English in different ways. See Jehush. 1. Son of Esau and thus head of tribe in Edom (Gen. 36:5,18). 2. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10; compare 8:39). 3. Levite under David (1 Chron. 23:10–11). 4. Son of King Rehoboam and grandson of Solomon (2 Chron. 11:19).

JEUZ (Jē′ ŭz) Personal name meaning, "He brought to safety." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:10).



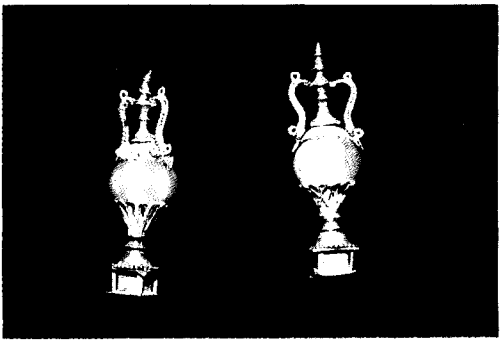
JEWELS, JEWELRY Jewels are stones valued for their beauty or scarcity. Most often they are cut and polished to enhance their appearance. Jewels have been more rare in archaeological finds in Palestine than in Egyptian, Greek, or Phoenician archaeological remains. There are two reasons for this. First, the land of Israel had no natural deposits of precious stones. Jewels (sometimes in the form of jewelry) were taken as booty during war (Num. 31:50), brought as gifts to the king (2 Chron. 9:1,9); or purchased from merchants (1 Kings 10:11; compare Rev. 18:11–12). Secondly, Israel and Judah were pawns in power struggles between its neighbors. The wealth accumulated by the king and Temple was carried off by conquerors (e.g. 1 Kings 14:25–28).

J

Jewels functioned as a medium of exchange in the Ancient Near East before the invention of money. In Israel, jewels were used primarily in relation to worship and the monarchy.

Worship First, jewels were a fitting contribution for a special offering (Ex. 35:22). Second, the high priest was garbed in fine clothing decorated with jewels (Ex. 28; 39). The ephod worn by the high priest had an onyx stone, set in gold filigree and engraved with the names of the tribes of Israel, on each shoulder. The breastplate of the high priest (also called the "breastplate of judgment," Ex. 28:15,29) was made of the finest cloth, interwoven with gold, into which were set two precious stones, in four rows of three each. On each stone was engraved the name of one of the twelve tribes. Thus, the twelve tribes were symbolically present whenever the high priest ministered before the Lord. The Hebrew words for some of these jewels can be translated with some degree of assurance; in other cases translators must guess what stone is intended. Since the ancients had no way to cut diamonds, they were not yet precious stones. The word translated "diamond" in Exodus 28:18; 39:11 probably does refer to a very hard stone, since it is based on a root word meaning "hammer, smite." Thus it is probably not what we call a diamond (so NIV, "emerald"; REB, "jade"; NRSV, "moonstone"). The high priest would have looked quite elegant when presiding in worship.

Gold Phrygian necklace dating from 1200–650 B.C. from Gordion.



Another example of Phrygian jewelry—an armlet with facing lioness heads (1200–650 B.C.).

The Monarchy Jewels were considered a fitting gift for kings. The Queen of Sheba brought them to Solomon (1 Kings 10:2,10). Jewels were used in royal crowns (2 Sam. 12:30), and probably royal garments (Ezek. 28:13). Jewels were a form of wealth which could be accumulated and easily kept in the royal treasury. The writer of Ecclesiastes considered such accumulation of royal wealth a matter of great vanity (Eccl. 2:4–11).

Unlike precious jewels, jewelry was widely used by ordinary people in the Ancient Near East. Archaeologists have demonstrated that men and women have adorned themselves with various kinds of jewelry almost from the earliest known times. Jewelry was known in the patriarchal period. Abraham's servant, when sent to find a bride for Isaac, put a nose ring and bracelets on Rebekah (Gen. 24:47) and gave her other gold and silver jewelry. The Israelites are said to have "despoiled" the Egyptians, by begging gold and silver jewelry of their neighbors in preparation for the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 3:22; 11:2–3). More Egyptian jewelry undoubtedly came into Israel through trade, as well as with the daughter of Pharaoh who married Solomon (1 Kings 3:1). At least 15 precious stones were mined in ancient Egypt. Egyptian metal workers were especially skilled in the art of making gold jewelry. The opulence of royal Egyptian jewelry has been demonstrated from archaeological finds, especially the tomb of Tutankhamen.

Gold Roman jewelry from the first century A.D.

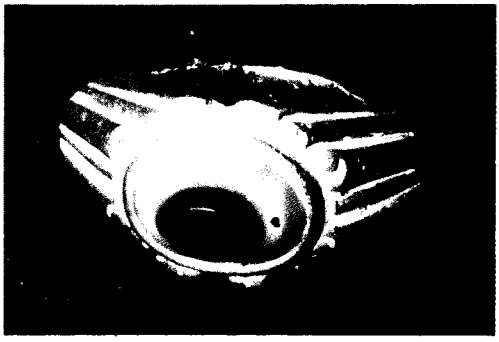
During the period of the monarchy, an ordinary man or woman might have had a few pieces of jewelry, something made of bronze or, if they could afford it, gold. Gold, which was used as a medium of exchange, was relatively plentiful, and could be made into a necklace, bracelet, or ring by a local craftsman. Royalty, of course, could wear more expensive jewelry set with precious stones.



Many kinds of jewelry are mentioned in the Old Testament. Not only women wore bracelets (Gen. 24:47); King Saul was wearing one when he died in battle (2 Sam. 1:10). Ankle bracelets might be worn (Isa. 3:16, 18). Such bracelets have been found on the leg bones of women buried in ancient Israel.

Necklaces and pendants were popular (Song of Sol. 1:10). A certain kind of gold necklace probably functioned as a symbol of authority. When Pharaoh appointed Joseph to high office, he put a gold chain around his neck (Gen. 41:42). Likewise, in the Book of Daniel, King Belshazzar proclaimed that whoever could interpret the mysterious writing on the wall should have a gold chain put around his neck and be made "the third ruler in the kingdom" (Dan. 5:7,29). The crescents mentioned in Isaiah 3:18, like those of Judges 8:21,26, which were worn by the kings of Midian, were probably moon-shaped pendants worn on chains. Gold crescent jewelry has been discovered by archaeologists. The crescent may have functioned as a royal insignia. The items referred to as chains, collars, or pendants (NRSV) (Isa. 3:19; Judg 8:26) were probably also worn around the neck, perhaps on cords.

Earrings were known in the patriarchal period. They may have had some religious significance (Gen. 35:4). Nose rings are mentioned in Genesis 24:22,30,47 (NIV) and Isaiah 3:21 (NIV). The same term, nezem, is used for both, so the references are often ambiguous (e.g. Num. 31:50; Prov. 25:12).

Good luck charms called "amulets" are not mentioned often in the Bible but have been widely found throughout Palestine in archaeological sites from all periods. Some represented gods and goddesses. Isaiah 3:20 may include a reference to amulets (see NRSV), though the translation is not sure. The earrings buried by Jacob under the oak near Schechem may have been amulets (Gen. 35:4). Such amulets were violations of the commandment not to make graven images (Ex. 20:4).

Gold ring inlaid with precious stone from the first century A.D.

The most important item of jewelry mentioned in the Old Testament is the signet ring. The signet was used to make an impression on clay or wax and thus to seal and authenticate documents. Generally the signet was a finely engraved semiprecious stone. A hole could be bored through the signet and it could be hung from a cord around the neck (Gen. 38:18), or it could be used as a setting for a ring or more elaborate necklace. Pharaoh gave Joseph his signet ring as a symbol of authority (Gen. 41:42). King Ahasuerus gave his signet ring first to Haman (Esther 3:10), then to Mordecai (Esther 8:2).

Jewelry was also used to decorate animals, at least by the wealthy. The camels of the Midianite kings slain by Gideon wore crescents and decorated collars around their necks (Judg. 8:21,26). The reference in Proverbs 11:22 to a ring in a swine's snout is metaphoric; one cannot draw conclusions from it concerning the use of decorative nose rings for animals. Amulets were sometimes worn by animals to ensure good fortune on a trip.

Isaiah 3:18–23 is sometimes interpreted as an attack on women's fashions and a denunciation of the uses of jewelry. The Hebrew terms used in the passage appear to refer rather to official insignia. Thus the passage is a condemnation of the misuse of wealth and power at the expense of the poor. In Ezekiel 16:8–13, the Lord is portrayed as a Bridegroom decking His bride, Jerusalem, with fine clothing and jewlry, including a nose ring, earrings, and a crown.

The New Testament does not make much mention of jewels and jewelry. Pearls were highly valued in New Testament time and thus a fitting metaphor for the kingdom of God (Matt. 13:45–46). James warned his readers not to discriminate on the basis of wealth, as indicated by the wearing of gold rings and fine clothing (Jas. 2:1–7). In 1 Timothy 2:9–10, women are reminded that the best adornment is not braids, gold, or pearls, but good deeds.

In Revelation 21:2, which echoes the imagery of Ezekiel 16:8–31, God is pictured as a Bridegroom whose bride, the new Jerusalem, is adorned with jewels. The walls of the new Jerusalem are pictured as built of jasper, adorned with twelve kinds of jewels. Each of the twelve gates is made of a single pearl. The gems of the holy city, like those in so much jewelry, are to be put in a setting of gold. The idea of rebuilding Jerusalem with jewels as building material reflects Isaiah 54:11–12. Unlike the old Jerusalem, the new Jerusalem—associated with the completion of the kingdom of God–will not be unfaithful.

See Minerals and Metals. Wilda W. Morris

JEWESS (jēw' ĕss) Female Jew. Timothy's mother was Jewish, but his father was not (Acts 16:1). Drusilla, the wife of Felix the Roman governor, was a Jewess (Acts 24:24).

JEWISH PARTIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

Judaism in New Testament times was diverse. We read of Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians. One man is called a Zealot. From other sources we learn of the Essenes.

Pharisees The Pharisees constituted the most important group. They appear in the Gospels as the opponents of Jesus. Paul claimed that he was a Pharisee before becoming a Christian (Phil. 3:5). They were the most numerous of the groups, although Josephus stated that they numbered only about six thousand. They controlled the synagogues and exercised great control over the general population.

No surviving writing gives us information about the origin of the Pharisees. The earliest reference to them is dated in the time of Jonathan (160–143 B.C.), where Josephus refers to Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. Their good relations with the rulers ended in the time of John Hyrcanus (134–104 B.C.). They came to power again when Salome Alexandra became queen (76 B.C.).

The name "Pharisee" means "the separated ones." It may mean that they separated themselves from the masses of the people or that they separated themselves to the study and interpretation of the law. It is usually assumed that they were the spiritual descendants of the Hasidim, the loyal fighters for religious freedom in the time of Judas Maccabeus. They appear to be responsible for the transformation of Judaism from a religion of sacrifice to one of law. They were the developers of the oral tradition, the teachers of the twofold law: written and oral. They saw the way to God as being through obedience to the law. They were the progressives of the day, willing to adopt new ideas and adapt the law to new situations.

The Pharisees were strongly monotheistic. They accepted all the Old Testament as authoritative. They affirmed the reality of angels and demons. They had a firm belief in life beyond the grave and a resurrection of the body. They were missionary, seeking the conversion of Gentiles (Matt. 23:15). They saw God as concerned with the life of a person without denying that the individual was responsible for how he or she lived. They had little interest in politics. The Pharisees opposed Jesus because He refused to accept the teachings of the oral law.

Sadducees The Sadducees were the aristocrats of the time. They were the party of the rich and the high priestly families. They were in charge of the Temple and its services. They claimed to be descendants of Zadok, high priest in the time of Solomon. However, the true derivation of their name is unknown. In all our literature, they stand in opposition to the Pharisees. They sought to conserve the beliefs and practices of the past. They opposed the oral law, accepting the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Old Testament, as the ultimate authority. The Sadducees were materialistic in their outlook. They did not believe in life after death or any reward or punishment beyond this life. They denied the existence of angels and demons. They did not believe that God was concerned with what people did. Rather people were totally free. They were politically oriented, supporters of ruling powers, whether Seleucids or Romans. They wanted nothing to threaten their position and wealth, so they strongly opposed Jesus.

Zealots The Zealots receive only brief mention in the New Testament. Simon, one of the disciples, is called Zealot (Luke 6:15). John 18:40 uses a word for Barabbas that Josephus used for Zealot. Josephus states that the Zealots began with Judas the Galilean seeking to lead a revolt over a census for taxation purposes (A.D. 6). He did not use the name Zealot until referring to events in A.D. 66, the beginning of the Jewish revolt against Rome. The Zealots were the extreme wing of the Pharisees. In contrast with the Pharisees, they believed that only God had the right to rule over the Jews. They were willing to fight and die for that belief. For them patriotism and religion were inseparable.

Herodians The Herodians are mentioned in only three places in the New Testament (Matt. 22:16; Mark 3:6; 12:13). In the earliest reference in Mark, they joined with the Pharisees in a plot to kill Jesus. The other two passages refer to the sending of Pharisees and Herodians to ask Jesus about paying taxes to Caesar. It is assumed that they were Jews who supported Herod Antipas or sought to have a descendant of Herod the Great given authority over Palestine. At this time Judea and Samaria were under Roman governors.

Essenes We know of the Essenes through the writings of Josephus and Philo, a Jewish philosopher in Alexandria, Egypt. They are not mentioned in the New Testament. More information about the Essenes has come to light since 1947 with the discovery of the manuscripts from the caves above the Dead Sea, commonly called the Dead Sea Scrolls. It is generally believed that the people of the Scrolls were closely related to the Essenes. They may have begun at about the same time as the Pharisees and Sadducees. The Essenes were an ascetic group, many of whom lived in the desert region of Qumran, near the Dead Sea. They took vows of celibacy and perpetuated their community by adopting male children. However, some Essenes did marry. When one joined the

Jewish Parties in the New Testament

DATES OF EXISTENCE	NAME	ORIGIN	SEGMENTS OF SOCIETY	BELIEFS	SELECTED BIBLICAL REFERENCES	ACTIVITIES
PHARISEES
Existed under Jonathan (160–143 B.C.) Declined in power under John Hyrcanus (134–104 B.C.) Began resurgence under Salome Alexandra (76 B.C.)	Pharisees = "the Separated Ones" with three possible meanings: (1) to their separating themselves from people (2) to their separating themselves to the study of the law ("dividing" or "separating" the truth) (3) to their separating themselves from pagan practices	Probably spiritual descendants of the Hasidim (religious freedom fighters of the time of Judas Maccabeus)	Most numerous of the Jewish parties (or sects) Probably descendants of the Hasidim—scribes and lawyers Members of the middle class—mostly businessmen (merchants and tradesmen)	Monotheistic Viewed entirety of the Old Testament (Torah, Prophets, and Writings) as authoritative Believed that the study of the law was true worship Accepted both the written and oral law More liberal in interpreting the law than were the Sadducees Quite concerned with the proper keeping of the Sabbath, tithing, and purification rituals Believed in life after death and the resurrection of the body (with divine retribution and reward) Believed in the reality of demons and angels Revered humanity and human equality Missionary-minded regarding the conversion of Gentiles Believed that individuals were responsible for how they lived	Matthew 3:7–10; 5:20; 9:14; 16:1,6–12; 22:15–22,34–46; 23:2–36 Mark 3:6; 7:3–5; 8:15; 12:13–17 Luke 6:7; 7:36–39; 11:37–44; 18:9–14 John 3:1; 9:13–16; 11:46–47; 12:19 Acts 23:6–10 Philippians 3:4b–6	Developers of oral tradition Taught that the way to God was through obedience to the law Changed Judaism from a religion of sacrifice to a religion of law Progressive thinkers regarding the adaptation of the law to new situations Opposed Jesus because He would not accept the teachings of the oral law as binding Established and controlled synagogues Exercised great control over general population Served as religious authorities for most Jews Took several ceremonies from the Temple to the home Emphasized ethical as opposed to theological action Legalistic and socially exclusive (shunned non-Pharisees as unclean) Tended to have a self-sufficient and haughty attitude
SADDUCEES
Probably began about 200 B.C. Demise occurred in A.D. 70 (with the destruction of the Temple)	Sadducees = Three possible translations: (1) "the Righteous Ones"—based on the Hebrew consonants for the word righteous (2) "ones who sympathize with Zadok," or "Zadokites"—based on their possible link to Zadok the high priest (3) "syndics," "judges," or "fiscal controllers"—based on the Greek word syndikoi	Unknown origin Claimed to be descendants of Zadok—high priest under David (see 2 Samuel 8:17; 15:24) and Solomon (see 1 Kings 1:34–35; 1 Chronicles 12:28) Had a possible link to Aaron Were probably formed into a group about 200 B.C. as the high priest's party	Aristocracy—the rich descendants of the high-priestly line (However, not all priests were Sadducees) Possibly descendants of the Hasmonean priesthood Probably not as refined as their economic position in life would suggest	Accepted only the Torah (Genesis through Deuteronomy—the written law of Moses) as authoritative Practiced literal interpretation of the law Rigidly conservative towards the law Stressed strict observance of the law Observed past beliefs and tradition Opposed oral law as obligatory or binding Believed in the absolute freedom of human will—that people could do as they wished without attention from God Denied divine providence Denied the concept of life after death and the resurrection of the body Denied the concept of reward and punishment after death Denied the existence of angels and demons Materialistic	2 Samuel 8:17; 15:24 1 Kings 1:34 1 Chronicles 12:26–28 Ezekiel 40:45–46; 43:19; 44:15–16 Matthew 3:7–10; 16:1,6–12; 22:23–34 Mark 12:18–27 Luke 20:27–40 John 11:47 Acts 4:1–2; 5:17–18; 23:6–10	In charge of the Temple and its services Politically active Exercised great political control through the Sanhedrin of which many were members Supported the ruling power and the status quo Leaned toward Hellenism (the spreading of Greek influence)—and were thus despised by the Jewish populace Opposed both the Pharisees and Jesus because these lived by a larger canon (The Pharisees and Jesus both considered more than only Genesis through Deuteronomy as authoritative.) Opposed Jesus specifically for fear their wealth/position would be threatened if they supported Him

ZEALOTS

Three possibilities for their beginning: (1) during the reign of Herod the Great (about 37 B.C.) (2) during the revolt against Rome (A.D. 6) (3) traced back to the Hassidim or the Maccabees (about 168 B.C.) Their certain demise occurred around A.D. 70–73 with Rome's conquering of Jerusalem.	Refers to their religious zeal Josephus used the term in referring to those involved in the Jewish revolt against Rome in A.D. 6—led by Judas of Galilee	(According to Josephus) The Zealots began with Judas (the Galilean), son of Ezekias, who led a revolt in A.D. 6 because of a census done for tax purposes.	The extreme wing of the Pharisees	Similar to the Pharisees with this exception: believed strongly that only God had the right to rule over the Jews. Patriotism and religion became inseparable. Believed that total obedience (supported by drastic physical measures) must be apparent before God would bring in the Messianic Age Were fanatical in their Jewish faith and in their devotion to the law—to the point of martyrdom	Matthew 10:4 Mark 3:18 Luke 6:15 Acts 1:13	Extremely opposed to Roman rule over Palestine Extremely opposed to peace with Rome Refused to pay taxes Demonstrated against the use of the Greek language in Palestine Engaged in terrorism against Rome and others with whom they disagreed politically [Sicarii (or Assassins) were an extremist Zealot group who carried out acts of terrorism against Rome.]

HERODIANS

Existed during the time of the Herodian dynasty (which began with Herod the Great in 37 B.C.) Uncertain demise	Based on their support of the Herodian rulers (Herod the Great or his dynasty)	Exact origin uncertain	Wealthy, politically influential Jews who supported Herod Antipas (or any descendant of Herod the Great) as ruler over Palestine (Judea and Samaria were under Roman governors at this time.)	Not a religious group—but a political one Membership was probably comprised of representatives of varied theological perspectives	Matthew 22:5–22 Mark 3:6; 8:15; 12:13–17	Supported Herod and the Herodian dynasty Accepted Hellenization Accepted foreign rule

ESSENES

Probably began during Maccabean times (about 168 B.C.)—around the same time as the Pharisees and the Sadducees began to form Uncertain demise—possibly in A.D. 68–70 with the collapse of Jerusalem	Unknown origin	Possibly developed as a reaction to the corrupt Sadducean priesthood Have been identified with various groups: Hasidim, Zealots, Greek influence, or Iranian influence	Scattered throughout the villages of Judea (possibly including the community of Qumran) (According to Philo and Josephus) About 4,000 in Palestinian Syria	Very strict ascetics Monastic: most took vow of celibacy (adopting male children in order to perpetuate the group), but some did marry (for the purpose of procreation) Rigidly adherent to the law (including a strict rendering of the ethical teachings) Considered other literature as authoritative (in addition to the Hebrew Scripture) Believed and lived as pacifists Rejected Temple worship and temple offerings as corrupted Believed in the immortality of the soul with no bodily resurrection Apocalyptically oriented	None	Devoted to the copying and studying of the manuscripts of the law Lived in a community sense with communal property Required a long probationary period and ritual baptisms of those wishing to join Were highly virtuous and righteous Were extremely self-disciplined Were diligent manual laborers Gave great importance to daily worship Upheld rigid Sabbath laws Maintained a non-Levitical priesthood Rejected worldly pleasures as evil Rejected matrimony—but did not forbid others to marry

Essenes, he gave all his possessions to the community. A three-year period of probation was required before full membership was granted. The Essenes devoted themselves to the study of the law. They went beyond the Pharisees in their rigid understanding of it. There is no evidence that either Jesus or John the Baptist had ever had any relation to Qumran. Jesus would have strongly opposed their understanding of the law.

The vast majority of the people were not a member of any of these parties, although they would have been most influenced by the Pharisees.

See Intertestamental History and Literature; Dead Sea Scrolls; Synagogue; Temple.

Clayton Harrop

JEWS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT The word Jew is derived ultimately from the tribe of Judah through Middle English Iewe, Old French Ieu, Latin Iudaeus, and Greek Ioudaios (compare the woman's name Judith, which originally meant "Jewess").

The Old Testament Era The Hebrew yehûdim meant originally descendants of the tribe of Judah and then those who inhabited the territories claimed by them (2 Kings 16:6; 25:25; Jer. 32:12). With the deportation and subsequent assimilation of the "Ten Lost Tribes" of the Northern Kingdom by the Assyrians after 722 B.C., the only Israelites to survive into the exilic period (with a few from the tribe of Benjamin, e.g. Mordecai, who is called a "Jew" in Esther 2:5) were those from Judah, hence the name Jews (Neh. 1:2). The corresponding Aramaic word is used in Daniel 3:8,12.

The Intertestamental Period The Greek name Ioudaios (plural Ioudaioi) was used for the Israelites in the Greek and Roman world. This is the name used in the treaty between Judas Maccabeus and the Romans, described in 1 Maccabees 8:23–32: "May all go well with the Romans and with the nation of the Jews. . . ."

Matthew, Mark, Luke The term Ioudaios occurs relatively rarely in the Synoptic Gospels, the first three Gospels which are closely parallel to each other. The word occurs but five times in Matthew, seven times in Mark, and five times in Luke, usually in the expression "King of the Jews" (12 of the total of 17). Of the remaining occurrences only Matthew 28:15 designates Jews as contrasted to Christian believers.

From Old Testament times faithful Jews have worn phylacteries on both forehead and arm as they pray.

John By contrast the word Ioudaios occurs 70 times in the Gospel of John. Some of these references are quite positive, especially in the dialogue between Jesus and the woman of Samaria (ch. 4). In v. 9 the woman says to Jesus, "thou, being a Jew," and in v. 22 Jesus says, "salvation is of the Jews." Many of the Jews believed in Jesus (8:31; 11:45; 12:11). Other references are neutral as in John 3:1, where Nicodemus is described as a ruler of the Jews.

The description of Jesus' opponents reveals a striking difference between the Synoptic Gosepls and John. Whereas the former names Jesus' enemies as scribes and Pharisees, high priests and Sadducees, the Gospel of John simply uses the general term "Jews." The term often implies Jewish authorities as in 7:13; 9:22; 19:38; 20:19.

The Jews impugned Jesus' birth and His sanity (8:48), and even alleged that He was demon possessed (8:52). The Jews questioned His statements about the Temple (2:20) and were scandalized at His claim to be the bread from heaven (6:41). They regarded His affirmations of equality with the Father as blasphemous and picked up stones to kill Him (5:18; 7:1; 10:31,33; 11:8).

The heightened use of the term "Jews" in John to serve as a general designation for those who denied that Jesus was the Christ may be explained by the fact that John's Gospel was composed at a later date than the Synoptics—after such events as the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 and the insertion of a curse upon the minim ("heretics," especially Christians) into the daily synagogue prayer in A.D. 80 had increased mutual hostilities between Jews and Christians.

Acts Paul was a Jew from Tarsus (Acts 21:39; 22:3). After his dramatic conversion on the road to Damascus, his fellow Jews sought to kill him (9:23). King Herod Agrippa I arrested Peter and killed the Apostle James, believing this would please the Jews (12:1–3).

Following his conviction that the gospel should be preached first to the Jews (Rom. 1:16), Paul on his missionary journeys began his preaching in the Jewish synagogues—at Salamis on Cyprus (Acts 13:5), at Iconium (14:1), at Thessalonica (17:1), at Athens (17:15–17), and at Corinth (18:1). Though he made some converts among the Jews, even converting the synagogue ruler at Corinth (18:8), and no doubt had success among the "god fearers" or proselytes who were interested in converting to Judaism (13:43; 17:4), the majority of the Jews reacted violently against Paul's message (13:50; 14:2; 17:5; 18:12). Paul therefore turned his efforts increasingly toward the Gentiles, the non-Jews.

Pauline Letters As the "apostle to the Gentiles," Paul argued against "Judaizers" that Gentile converts did not have to be circumcized, that is, become Jews first, before they became christians (Acts 15:1–5). His arguments were accepted by James and the church council at Jerusalem held about A.D. 49. Paul, who had been "an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee" (Phil. 3:5) and had been more zealous in his pursuit of Judaism than his peers (Gal. 1:13,14), came to the radical conclusion that a true Jew is not one who was physically descended from Abraham (compare John 8:31–41), adhered to the Torah or Law of Moses (Rom 2:17,28) and was circumcized. For Paul a true Jew is one who believes that Jesus is the Messiah or Christ (Gal. 3:26–29), relies on God's grace and not works of the law (Eph. 2:8,9), and has been circumcized in his heart by the Holy Spirit (Gal. 2:2–9; 5:6). In spite of his grief that most of his fellow Jews did not accept his message, Paul did not teach that God had abandoned the Jews but believed that God still has a plan for them (Rom. 9–11). [Note: the word Ioudaios is not found in any of the non-Pauline letters of the New Testament.)

Revelation The two references in the Book of Revelation are to the church at Smyrna (2:9) and the church at Philadelphia (3:9), where there were those who claimed to be Jews but who were denounced as the "synagogue of Satan" because they opposed Christians.

See Israel; Hebrews; Pharisees; Sadducees.

Edwin Yamauchi

JEZANIAH (Jĕ zā nī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh gave ear." 1. Army captain loyal to Gedaliah, the governor Babylon appointed over Judah immediately after Babylon destroyed Jerusalem and took the Jewish leaders into Exile about 586 B.C. (Jer. 40:8). Jezaniah was one of the captains who refused to believe Jeremiah's prophecy calling the people to remain in Judah. Rather, he helped carry Jeremiah into Egypt (Jer. 42—43). In 43:2 the name is Azariah, which may be the correct reading in 4:1 rather than Jezaniah. See Azariah.

JEZEBEL (Jĕz′ ĕ bĕl) Personal name meaning, "Where is the prince?" perhaps derived from Phoenician name meaning, "Baal is the prince." Wife of King Ahab of Israel (874–853 B.C.), who brought the worship of Baal from Sidon, where her father Ethbaal was king (1 Kings 16:31). Jezebel tried to destroy all God's prophets in Israel (1 Kings 18:4), while installing prophets of Baal and Asherah (1 Kings 18:19, modern translations) as part of the royal household. Elijah proved these prophets to be false on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18), bringing Jezebel's threat to kill Elijah (1 Kings 19:2). Elijah ran for his life to Beersheba.

When Ahab wanted Naboth's vineyard, Jezebel connived with the leaders of the city who falsely accused and convicted Naboth, stoning him to death. Elijah then prophesied Jezebel's death, she being the one who had "stirred up" Ahab to wickedness (1 Kings 21). She continued her evil influence as her son Joram ruled (2 Kings 9:22). Elisha anointed Jehu to replace Joram. Jehu assassinated Joram and then went to Jezreel after Jezebel. She tried to adorn herself and entice him, but her servants obeyed Jehu's call to throw her from the window to the street, where horses trod her in the ground (2 Kings 9:30–37).

Jezebel's name became so associated with wickedness that the false prophetess in the church at Thyatira was labeled, "Jezebel" (Rev. 2:20).

JEZER (Jĕ′ zĕr) Personal name meaning, "He formed." Son of Naphtali (Gen. 46:24) and founding ancestor of clan in that tribe (Num. 26:49). The name Izri (1 Chron. 25:11) means member of clan of Jezer, and Zeri (1 Chron. 25:3) is probably an abbreviated form of Izri.

JEZERITE (Jē′ zĕr īte) Member of clan of Jezer. See Jezer.

JEZIAH (Jĕ zī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah sprinkled." Israelite with foreign wife condemned by Ezra (Ezra 10:25). Modern translations transliterate the Hebrew as Izziah.

JEZIEL (Jē′ zī ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God sprinkled." Military leader from tribe of Benjamin, Saul's tribe, who joined David at Ziklag as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:3). The written Hebrew text has the name Jezuel, while the early Hebrew scribes noted the reading, Jeziel.

JEZLIAH (Jĕz lī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "long-lived." Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:18). Modern translations transliterate the name, Izliah.

JEZOAR (Jĕ zō′ ăr) Personal name perhaps meaning, "he was light-colored." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:7). The name in the Hebrew text is Jizhar or Izhar as read by modern translations. Early Hebrew scribes read it as "and Zohar" (NIV).

JEZRAHIAH (Jĕz rā hī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah shines forth." 1. Leader in tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:3; English transliteration is usually Israhiah). 2. Leader of Levite singers at Nehemiah's celebration of finishing the rebuilding of Jerusalem's wall (Neh. 12:42). REB transliterates Izrahiah.

JEZREEL (Jĕz′ rēēl), meaning "God sows", refers to a major valley, a northern city, a southern city, and the son of Hosea. 1. The Old Testament uses the name to refer to the entire valley of Jezreel which separates Galilee from Samaria, including the valley of Esdraelon. The valley was important militarily as a battle site for Deborah (Judg. 4—5), Gideon (Judg. 6—7), Saul (2 Sam. 4), Jehu (2 Kings 9—10), and Josiah (2 Kings 22). The geography of Palestine made Jezreel a major route for travel from north to south and from east to west. 2. The northern city of Jezreel, which guarded the corridor to Beth-shan, was the site of the royal residence of Omri and Ahab where the incident of Naboth's vineyard occurred (1 Kings 21).

The Valley of Jezreel (or Esdraelon, or Megiddo) as viewed from the top of the Megiddo tel.

3. David's wife Ahinoam was from the southern city of Jezreel which is located in the vicinity of Ziph (1 Sam. 25:43–44). 4. The prophet Hosea named his son Jezreel as a symbol to indicate the evil nature of the dynasty of Jehu which began with much bloodshed in Jezreel. The name also symbolized that God will sow seeds of prosperity after the destruction (Hos. 1:4,5; 1:10—2:1).

Robert Street

JEZREELITE (Jĕz′ rēēl īte) A citizen of or from the home town of Jezreel. See Jezreel.

JIBSAM (Jĭb′ săm) Personal name meaning, "he smells sweet." Early leader in tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:2). Modern translations often read Ibsam.

JIDLAPH (Jĭd′ lăph) Personal name meaning, "he cries or is sleepless." Son of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen. 22:22).

JIMNA(H) [Jĭm′ nà(h)] Proper name meaning, "he allotted." 1. Son of Asher, grandson of Jacob, and original ancestor of clan in tribe of Asher (Gen. 46:17; Num. 26:44). KJV spells the name Imnah in 1 Chronicles 7:30, as do modern translations in all occurrences. 2. A Levite under Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:14, spelled Imnah by English translations).

JIMNITE (Jĭm′ nīte) Member of clan of Jimnah. See Jimnah.

JIPHTAH (Jĭph′ tah) Place name meaning, "he opened or broke up." City in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:43). It may have been located at modern Terqumiyeh halfway between Hebron and Beit Jibrin. Most modern translations transliterate as "Iphtah." The personal name Jephthah has the same Hebrew spelling. See Jephthah.

JIPHTHAH-EL (Jĭph′ thah-ĕl) Place name meaning, "God opened." A valley marking the border of the tribal territories of Asher and Zebulun (Josh. 19:14,27). The modern name is wadi el-Melek. Modern translations transliterate Iphtah-el.

JOAB (Jō′ ăb) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is father." Military commander during most of David's reign. He was the oldest son of Zeruiah, the sister of David (2 Sam. 2:13; 1 Chron. 2:16). He was loyal to David and ruthless in achieving his objectives. After Saul's death, David was negotiating with Abner, Saul's military commander. Joab, whose brother had been slain in battle by Abner, deceived Abner and murdered him. David publicly lamented this assassination (2 Sam. 2—3).

Joab's exploits in the capture of Jerusalem led David to name him commander (1 Chron. 11:4–8). Joab successfully led David's armies against the Ammonites (2 Sam. 10). During this campaign David sent his infamous order to have Uriah, the husband of Bathsheba, killed (2 Sam. 11).

Joab was instrumental in the reconciliation of David and Absalom (2 Sam. 14). When Absalom led a rebellion, Joab remained loyal to David. Joab killed Absalom against the clear orders of David (2 Sam. 18:14). He also convinced David to end his obsessive grieving for Absalom (2 Sam. 19:4–8). Joab murdered Amasa, whom David had named commander (2 Sam. 20:10). He opposed David's plan for a census, but carried it out when ordered to do so (2 Sam. 24:1–9).

When David was dying, Joab supported Adonijah's claim to the throne (1 Kings 1). David named Solomon king and told him to avenge Abner and Amasa by killing Joab. Although Joab fled to the tabernacle for sanctuary, Solomon ordered Benaiah to kill Joab (1 Kings 2). Robert J. Dean

JOAH (Jō′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Jah is brother." 1. Scribe under King Hezekiah about 715–686 B.C. (2 Kings 18:18). He was one of the king's messengers to listen to the Assyrian Rab-shakeh and bring the message to the king. They did so in mourning (2 Kings 18:37). 2. Son of royal scribe under King Josiah (640–609 B.C.). He helped repair the Temple (2 Chron. 34:8). 3. A Levite (1 Chron. 6:21). 4. Member of family of Levites, who were porters or gatekeepers (1 Chron. 26:4). 5. Levite who helped cleanse the Temple under King Hezekiah about 715 B.C. (2 Chron. 29:12).

JOAHAZ (Jō′ ā hăz) A short form of Jehoahaz meaning, "Yahweh grasped." 1. See Jehoahaz (2 Kings 14:1; 2 Chron. 36:1–4). 2. Father of a scribe under Hezekiah about 715 B.C. (2 Chron. 34:8).

JOANAN (Jō ā′ nan) Greek transliteration of Hebrew name Johanan. See Johanan. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:27). KJV reads Joanna. Some interpreters think his father Rhesa does not represent a personal name but is a transliteration of the Aramaic word for prince, a title for Zerubbabel. Joanan would then be the Hananiah of 1 Chronicles 3:19.

JOANNA (Jō ăn′ nà) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh's gift." 1. In Luke 8:3, one of the women whom Jesus had healed and who ministered to Him out of their own private means. She was the wife of Herod's steward Chuza. Luke's Gospel, which gives particular prominence to women, also mentions her in 24:10. She was one of the women who came to Jesus' tomb on the Sunday following the crucifixion and reported to the eleven the message that He had risen. 2. In Luke 3:27, the son of Rhesa mentioned in the genealogy of Jesus. See Joanan.

JOASH (Jō′ ăsh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh gives." 1. In Judges 6:11, the father of Gideon. He was a member of the tribe of Manasseh who lived at Ophrah. 2. In 1 Chronicles 4:21–22, one of the sons of Shelah. 3. In 1 Chronicles 7:8, one of the sons of Becher. 4. In 1 Chronicles 12:3, one of David's warriors. He was a son of Shemaah the Gibeathite. 5. In 1 Chronicles 27:28, one of David's officers, who was in charge of the stores of oil. 6. In 1 Kings 22:26, a son of Ahab, the king of Israel, and one of those to whom Micaiah the prophet was handed over.

7. In 2 Kings 11:2, the infant son of King Ahaziah of Judah who survived the bloodbath carried out by Athaliah, the queen mother, following the murder of Ahaziah. Joash was hidden by Jehosheba his aunt for six years, at the end of which time he was popularly proclaimed as the legitimate ruler of Judah in a move instigated by Jehoiada. Athaliah was executed, and Joash took the throne at the age of seven. During the king's minority, Jehoiada, the priest, exercised a strong positive influence in both the civil and religious life of the nation. The death of Jehoiada, however, marked a notable decline in the quality of the rule of Joash. Finally, the king was assassinated as the result of a palace conspiracy. See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period; Athaliah; Jehoiada.

8. In 2 Kings 13:10, the son and successor of Jehoahaz as king of Israel. He ruled for sixteen years during the early part of the eighth century B.C. His visit to the dying prophet Elisha is described in 2 Kings 13:14–19. During the course of that visit, the prophet promised the king three victories over Syria. Subsequently, Joash enjoyed military success not only against Syria but also against neighboring Judah. He defeated Amaziah of Judah in battle at Beth-shemesh and actually entered Jerusalem and plundered the Temple. At his death he was succeeded on the throne by his son Jeroboam II. See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period. Gene Henderson

JOATHAM (Jō′ ā thăm) KJV transliteration of Greek for Jotham (Matt. 1:9). See Jotham.

JOB, THE BOOK OF (Jōb) Job apparently lived in the patriarchal or prepatriarchal days, for not only does he not mention the Law or the Exodus, but he is pictured as a wealthy nomad (Job 1:3; 42:12) who is still offering sacrifices himself (Job 1:5; 42:8). Undoubtedly, Job was a most respected man, for not only did the prophet Ezekiel refer to him as one of the greatest of Israel's ancestors (Ezek. 14:14), but even James used him as an excellent example of patient and persistent faith (Jas. 5:11).

The Book of Job presents many problems concerning the person, time, and nature of its composition. First, the text does not indicate in any way its author. The text never speaks of Job as its author, just its subject. Thus, many have concluded that Job was written by Elihu, one of the three friends, or simply some anonymous writer of that or some other age. Second, though most will agree that the character Job lived in patriarchal times, many believe that the book was written many years later. The dates of such a composition will vary from the time of Abraham to that of the Greek Empire. Third, to further complicate the issue, many believe that Job is a compilation of several different stories coming from several different ages. As one can readily see, the question of date and authorship is a very complex issue that cannot yet be settled with certainty; however, the fact that one cannot identify the human agent in no way means that the book if not inspired, for it is God's Word and is a unit as it now stands.

Job is a Perfect Illustration of True Faith. Through the years, many purposes have been suggested for the book. Perhaps the one that has been mentioned more often than any other is that of answering the question of why the righteous suffer. Certainly this question was prominent in Job's day, for ancient society believed that human suffering was the result of one's sin or at least a god's displeasure. Even the meaning of the name Job (the persecuted one) seems to support this suggestion, but that may not be all that is involved in the book. Another popular suggestion is that the book has been preserved to illustrate for us the nature of true faith both from the point of view of people and of God. For humans, it is trusting in God as the Creator and Sustainer of life even when all is not going well and when He is not visibly present to help us. From God's point of view, the story proves His faithfulness to His creatures despite their weaknesses and inability to understand what is happening. Another, and much less frequently suggested purpose, is that of a parable concerning the nation Israel. In this case, Job becomes the nation Israel. Though this approach is possible, it seems unlikely for most parables have some type of interpretation close by which helps to explain them. Thus, perhaps it is best just to take the book as an illustration of the nature of God and His justice in dealing with humankind, a justice people often cannot recognize and never fully understand.

Job Is Unique in World Literature. Though Job shows many similarities with other Ancient Near Eastern texts, none come near to Job's beauty and message. Because the three friends have Edomite backgrounds, some have speculated that Job may have been an Edomite and that the setting for the book may have been Edom. However, there is not enough Edomite material available at this point to make any conclusions. Others have seen similarities between Job and the Egyptian poems concerning "The Protest of the Eloquent Peasant" and "A Dispute Over Suicide" or the Babylonian poems of "The Babylonian Theodicy" and "I Will Praise the Lord of Wisdom." In each of these cases, what similarities exist seem minor, indeed, and deal more with the topic than its content or form. Still others have suggested that Job is written in the form of a court room trial. No doubt, many legal terms appear in the book; yet we still know too little about ancient legal procedure to make any such conclusions. Thus, it is best to simply take the book as a unique work depicting the life of one man and his efforts to understand his God and his own situation in life.

Job's Encounter with Life Brought Him Face to Face with God. The Book of Job is most frequently pictured as a drama with a prologue (1—2) and an epilogue (42:7–17) enclosing three cycles of poetic speeches between Job and his three friends (3—27), a beautiful wisdom poem from Job (28), Job's concluding remarks (29—31), the mysterious Elihu speeches (32—37), and God's whirlwind speeches (38:1—42:6).

The prologue describes the setting for the ensuing drama. Job was a very wealthy and religious man who seemed to have life under control (1:1–5). However, unknown to him, Satan challenged his righteousness. God allowed the challenge, but limited Satan's power to Job's possessions (1:6–12). In quick succession, Satan destroyed all of Job's possessions including even his children. However, Job did not blame God nor question His integrity (1:13–22). Satan then challenged God to let him attack Job's personal health. God agreed, but warned him not to kill Job (2:1–6). Without warning, a loathsome disease fell upon Job; yet he still refused to blame God (2:7–10). Job's friends were shocked and dismayed, but nevertheless came to encourage him and offer their help (2:11–13). To this point Job displayed a traditional faith accepting suffering as inevitable and patiently enduring it.

After the traditional time of mourning had passed, Job cried out wondering why he was ever born or allowed to reach maturity (3:1–26). Job's faith turned to a challenging, seeking faith, confronting God, demanding escape and explanation. In all the bitter questioning, faith lived, for Job turned only and always to God for answers. At this point, Job's friends could remain silent no longer and thus began to speak. The first to speak was Eliphaz who told Job that he must have sinned for God was surely punishing him. However, there was still hope if he would confess his sin and turn to God (4:1—5:27). Suffering did not have to endure always. Job was stunned and assured his friends that he was ready to meet God and work out any problem that he might have (6:1—7:21). Bildad added that if Job had not sinned it must have been his children, for obviously God was punishing him for some wrong. However, he, too, held out hope if Job would just confess (8:1–22). Job was deeply hurt and wondered aloud whether or not he could get a hearing before God (9:1—10:22). Zophar, the most brash of the friends, called upon God to meet with Job, for he was sure that when the two met, Job would see the error of his ways and repent (11:1–20). Job held to his integrity, but continued to seek an audience with God so that he could come to understand what was happening and why (12:1—14:22).

Job's friends were not satisfied, so Eliphaz spoke again and reminded him that all people (including Job) had sinned and needed to repent. Thus, if he would just repent, God would forgive him (15:1–35). Job realized that he was getting nowhere with his friends, so he called upon the rest of creation to witness to his integrity (16:1—17:16). Bildad reminded Job of the many proverbs which spoke of the fate of the wicked. In so doing, he was implying that what had happened to Job was the result of his sin (18:1–21). Job was becoming increasingly frustrated, for his friends and family seemed to have abandoned him; yet he was unwilling to give up on God. Thus, in a most beautiful way he affirmed that he would be vindicated, if not in this world, then in the world to come (19:1–29). Zophar was hurt, for he and his friends were being ignored, if not toally disagreed with. Thus, he declared that the wicked would suffer great pain and anguish and that all the forces of nature would turn against them. No doubt, Zophar included Job in this group (20:1–29). Job turned to Zophar and harshly said, "No"; for as he observed, sometimes the wicked did prosper. However, that did not mean that God was not in control or that He would not one day bring about real justice (21:1–34).

Though they listened to him patiently, Job's friends were also becoming increasingly frustrated. Thus, Eliphaz intensified his charge that Job's suffering was the result of his own sinfulness by listing the various sins of which he thought Job was guilty. Then he called upon Job to repent (22:1–30). By this time Job was in such pain that he all but ignored Elipaz's comments and cried out for relief (23:1—24:25). Bildad, not to be outdone, reminded Job again to consider the nature and character of God, for since He was not unjust, Job surely must have sinned (25:1–6). Job, in sarcastic tones, asked the friends where they got their wisdom and then pleaded with them to look to God for real understanding and faith (26:1—27:23). Apparently, at this point, the three friends, having exhausted their arguments, once again became silent.

Job then turned and reflected both upon the true nature of wisdom and his own place in existence. In one of the most beautiful descriptions of wisdom found in the entire Bible, Job concluded that real wisdom (or meaning to life) can only be found in a proper faith relationship with God ("the fear of the Lord") (28:1–28). Though Job knew this was true and though he sought to live a righteous life, he was still hurting and did not understand why. Thus, in a beautiful soliloquy he cried out unto God, reminding God of how he had lived faithfully in the past and had been respected for it (29:1–25), but now when he was suffering everyone had turned against him, and death seemed very near (30:1–31). Thus, Job issued a final plea for God to vindicate him (31:1–40). With this, Job's case was made. He paused to await an answer from God.

At this point, a young man named Elihu rose to speak. Though most of what he had to say had already been said, he gave four speeches, each of which sought to justify God's actions. First, Elihu contended that God speaks to all people, and thus, even though he was a young man, he had every right to speak and even had the understanding to do so (32:1—33:33). Second, he reiterated the view that God was just and thus what had happened to Job was well deserved (34:1–37). Third, he sought to show that God honored the righteous and condemned the prideful, just like He had Job (35:1–16). Fourth, he then pleaded with Job to accept what had happened to him as an expression of God's discipline and to humbly repent and seek His forgiveness (36:1—37:24). Finally, Elihu realized that Job really was not listening, and so he stopped speaking.

Suddenly, out of the midst of a whirlwind, God began to speak. Basically, God said two things. First, He described the marvels of creation and then asked Job if he could have done any better (38:1—40:2). Job quickly responded that he could not for he, too, was just a creature (40:3–5). Second, God described how He controlled the world and everything in it and then asked Job if he could do a better job (40:6—41:34). Job admitted that he could not and that he did not need to for now he had seen God and clearly realized that God had everything well under control (42:1–6).

God was apparently very pleased with Job and his responses. However, He rebuked the three friends and commanded that they ask Job to seek intercession for them (42:7–9). Then, God restored all Job's fortunes and even gave him more children (42:10–17). In the end Job found meaningful life, not in intellectual pursuits or even in himself, but in experiencing God and his faith relationship to Him.

Job's Message Is Still Relevant for Us Today. The Book of Job thus wrestles with issues all people eventually face. Such issues do not admit of easy answers. The different speakers in Job address the issues from different perspectives, forcing us to admit the complexity of the issue before we accept simple answers. Two important issues are the cause and effect of suffering and the justice and care of God. Job begins by accepting suffering as a part of human life to be endured through trust in God in good and bad times. He moves to questioning, facing the theological issues head on. He illustrates human frustration with problems for which we cannot find answers. Yet, he refuses to accept his wife's perspective of giving up on God and life. Rather, he constantly confronts God with cries for help and for answers. He shows faith can be more than simple acceptance. Faith can be struggling in the dark for answers, but struggling with God not with other people. Eliphaz notes that suffering will not last forever, especially not for the innocent. Bildad notes that Job's punishment is not as bad as it could have been; after all, his children died. Being alive means Job's sin is not unforgiveable and his suffering can be endured.

Zophar emphasizes Job's sin but notes that he could suffer even more. He should give God credit for mercy in not making him endure all the pain his sin deserves. Elihu pleaded for Job to listen to God's word in the experience, for his suffering should become a means of seeing God's will and God's way in the situation. This should lead Job to confess his sin and praise God. Job's complaint is that he cannot find God. He wants to present his case to God but cannot do so, for he is unequal to God. He cannot present his claims of innocence and get his name cleared and his body healed.

God's appearance shows that God cares, that He still controls the world, even a world with unexplainable suffering, and that His creative acts and the mysterious creatures He has created only prove that humans must live under God's control. The human mind cannot control all knowledge nor understand all situations. People must be content with a God who speaks to them. They cannot demand that God give all the answers we might want. God can be trusted in the worst of circumstances as well as in the best.

See Wisdom; Suffering; Faith.

Outline

I. Prologue: A Righteous Man Can Endure Injustice Without Sinning (1:1—2:10).
II. First Round: Will a Just God Answer a Righteous Sufferer's Questions? (2:11—14:22).
  A. Job: Why must a person be born to a life of suffering? (2:11—3:26).
  B. Eliphaz: Do not claim to be just, but seek the disciplining God, who is just (4:1—5:27).
  C. Job: Death is the only respite for a just person persecuted by God (6:1—7:21).
  D. Bildad: A just God does not punish the innocent (8:1–22).
  E. Job: Humans cannot win an argument in court against the Creator (9:1—10:22).
  F. Zophar: Feeble, ignorant humans must confess sins (11:1–20).
  G. Job: An intelligent person demands an answer from the all-powerful, all-knowing God, not from other humans (12:1—14:22).
III. Second Round: Does the Fate of the Wicked Prove the Mercy and Justice of God? (15:1—21:34).
  A. Eliphaz: Be quiet, admit your guilt, and accept your punishment (15:1–35).
  B. Job: Oh that an innocent person might plead my case with the merciless God (16:1—17:16).
  C. Bildad: Wise up and admit you are suffering the just fate of the wicked (18:1–21).
  D. Job: In a world without justice or friends, a just person must wait for a Redeemer to win his case (19:1–29).
  E. Zophar: Your short-lived prosperity shows you are a wicked oppressor (20:1–29).
  F. Job: Lying comforters do not help my struggle against the injustice of God (21:1–34).
IV. Third Round: Can the Innocent Sufferer Ever Know God's Ways and Will? (22:1—28:28).
  A. Eliphaz: You wicked sinner, return to Almighty God and be restored (22:1–30).
  B. Job: I cannot find God, but evidence shows He pays undue attention to me but gives no attention to the wicked (23:1—24:25).
  C. Bildad: No person can be righteous before the awesome God (25:1–6).
  D. Job: Neither your meaningless counsel nor God's faint word helps the innocent sufferer (26:1—27:23).
  E. Job: Humans cannot know wisdom; only God reveals its content: Fear the Lord (28:1–28).
V. Job's Summary: Let God Restore the Good Old Days or Answer My Complaint (29:1—31:40).
  A. In the good old days I had respect and integrity (29:1–25).
  B. Now men and God are cruel to me (30:1–31).
  C. In my innocence, I cry out for a hearing before God (31:1–40).
    1. I have not looked with lust on a maiden (31:1–4).
    2. I am not guilty of lying or deceit (31:5–8).
    3. I have not committed adultery (31:9–12).
    4. I have treated my servants fairly

(31:13–15).
5. I have been generous and kind to the poor and the disadvantaged (31:16–23).
6. I have not worshiped gold nor celestial bodies (31:24–28).
7. I have not rejoiced in others' ruin (31:29–30).
8. I have not refused hospitality to anyone (31:31–32).
9. I have nothing to hide, but I wish God would give me a written statement of charges (31:33–37).
10. I have not withheld payment for the laborers on my land (31:38–40).

VI. Elihu: An Angry Young Man Defends God (32:1—37:24).
- A. Elihu is angry with Job and with the friends (31:1–22).
- B. Elihu speaks to Job as a man; God speaks through dreams, visions, pain, and deliverance (33:1–33).
- C. God is just; Job speaks without knowledge (34:1–37).
- D. Is there any advantage in serving God? Human sin is no threat to God; human righteousness is no gift to Him (35:1–16).
- E. God is just, all-wise, mysterious, and sovereign over humans and nature (36:1—37:24).

VII. Dialogue: Prove Your Wisdom Is Sufficient to Contend with the Eternal Creator (38:1—42:6).
- A. God: Can you control the inanimate and animate creation? (38:1—39:30).
- B. Job: I am overwhelmed and powerless to answer (40:1–5).
- C. God: Will you condemn God to justify yourself? (40:6–9).
- D. God: Take charge of the universe. (40:10–14).
- E. Two inexplicable creatures illustrate God's unfathomable ways (40:15—41:34).
- F. Job: Seeing God, I confess His power and repent of sin (42:1–6).

VIII. Epilogue: Prayer Brings Reconciliation, Forgiveness, and Restoration (42:7–17).

Harry Hunt

JOBAB (Jō′ băb) Personal name perhaps meaning, "wilderness" or "arm oneself for battle." 1. Son of Joktan in Table of Nations lineage of Noah's son Shem (Gen. 10:29). He was thus the original ancestor of a Semite tribe, probably in southern Arabia. 2. Early king of Edom centered in Bozrah (Gen. 36:33). 3. King of city state of Madon who joined Jabin of Hazor in northern coalition against Joshua (Josh. 11:1). 4. Two members of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:9,18).

JOCHEBED (Jŏch′ ĕ bĕd) Personal name meaning, Yahweh's glory. In Exodus 6:20, the wife of Amram and the mother of Miriam, Aaron, and Moses. She was a member of the tribe of Levi. Her name includes the divine name Yahweh, evidence that the name Yahweh was known before the time of Moses. See Moses.

JODA (Jō′ dȧ) Greek transliteration of either Jehuda (thus, KJV Juda) or Joyada, a name known in Apocrypha (2 Esdras 22:10–11). An ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:26).

JOED (Jō′ ĕd) Personal name meaning, "Yah is witness." Member of tribe of Benjamin (Neh. 11:7).

JOEL (Jō′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "Yah is God." 1. Son of Samuel who became an evil judge, leading Israel's leaders to ask Samuel to give them a king, thus introducing kingship as a form of government for Israel. Samuel argued strongly against this, but to no avail (1 Sam. 8; compare 1 Chron. 6:33). 2. A Levite (1 Chron. 6:36). 3. Member(s) of tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:4,8). 4. Leader among the Levites under David (1 Chron. 15:7,11,18), who brought the ark of the covenant up to Jerusalem. Compare 1 Chronicles 23:8; 26:22 for Levites named Joel. 5. Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:35). 6. Leader of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:12). 7. Leader of tribe of Issachar (1 Chron. 7:3). 8. Military hero under David (1 Chron. 11:38; compare Igal in 2 Sam. 23:26). 9. Leader of the western half of the tribe of Manasseh under David (1 Chron. 27:20). 10. Levite who helped King Hezekiah cleanse the Temple about 715 B.C. (2 Chron. 29:12). 11. Israelite Ezra condemned for having a foreign wife who might lead nation to worship other gods (Ezra 10:43). 12. Leader of the people from tribe of Benjamin living in Jerusalem in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:9). 13. Prophet whose preaching ministry produced the Book of Joel. Personal information concerning the prophet is minimal, only that he was the son of Pethuel, about whom we know nothing. That the prophet lived in Jerusalem is probable because of his avid interest in the city, his repeated references to Zion, his call to the people to assemble for worship, and his interest in the Temple rituals and sacrifices.

His use of the popular formula, "The word of the Lord came," demonstrates his devotion as God's prophet. Distinguishing himself from the priests, he respectfully urged them to lead the people in repentance. As many as twenty references to and quotations from other prophets attest to his position in the prophetic ministry.

Containing only 70 verses, the Book of Joel is one of the shortest in the Old Testament, comprising only three chapters in our English translations. The first of two natural divisions, the earlier section (1:1—2:17) describes a terrible locust plague concluding with a plea for confession of sins. The second section (2:18—3:21), written in the form of a first-person response from God, proclaims hope for the repentant people coupled with judgment upon their enemies.

An unprecedented locust plague was symbolic of the coming day of the Lord. The insects, depicted in their four stages of development, moved through the land in successive swarms, utterly destroying everything in their path. Farmers were denied a harvest. Animals desperately roamed the wasteland groaning and perishing for lack of food. Drunkards cried out for a little taste of wine. Because priests could not find enough offerings for sacrifice, altars were empty. Drought and famine followed the locust infiltration. Vegetation was stripped; the weather was hot; water was scarce. All God's creation suffered because of the sinfulness of His people.

Priests were urged to call for fasting and prayer (2:15–17). Only God's grace could avert annihilation. Then, on the basis of their repentance, God answered that He would show pity and remove their plague (2:18–27).

As a result of their return to God, His people were promised the presence of God's Spirit among them. Locusts were used to tell about a greater day of the Lord in the future. Judgment was pronounced against Phoenicia and Philistia (3:4) and eventually upon all nations as they were judged by God in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, which literally means "The Lord judges" (3:2,12). Judah faced unparalleled prosperity, but Egypt and Edom (traditional enemies) could look for terrible punishment (3:18–19). The Lord triumphed over his enemies in order that all shall "know that I am the Lord Your God" (3:17; compare 2:27).

Opinions differ regarding the date of the book. Internal evidence makes it clear that the priests were in a position of strong authority; the Temple was standing; sacrifices were considered important; and certain foreign nations stood condemned. No mention was made of the world empires of Assyria or Babylonia. No reference was made to the Northern Kingdom of Israel; neither is the name of a king mentioned.

Two approximate dates generally are given as the possible times of the authorship of the book, either before the Exile around the time of the boy-king Joash (about 836–796 B.C.) or after the return from Exile (about 500–400 B.C.). The position of the book among the early prophets in the Hebrew canon is considered as evidence for an early date. Also, the omission of a king's name would be appropriate if a young boy such as Joash had not achieved maturity.

In favor of the late date, strong arguments are given. The returning exiles, comprising a small group in Jerusalem, centered their worship in the Temple. Sacrifices were important. Emphasis on ethical living, so characteristic of preexilic prophets such as Amos and Micah, was lacking. Idolatry and the high places were not mentioned, suggesting that they were no longer a serious problem. After the Exile, there would be no need for announcing the coming destruction of Assyria and Babylon. There would be no need to mention a king. Citation of the Grecian slave traffic (3:4–6) fits a late period. References to the scattering of the Israelites (3:2–6) would apply to an exilic period, and the use of the term "Israel" to refer to Judah (2:27; 3:2) would have been appropriate in postexilic times. In addition, the style and language reflects the period after the Exile when the prophetic emphasis was beginning to give way to the apocalyptic.

Some early theologians viewed the entire book as an allegory with the locusts representing four heathen nations that opposed God's people. Few scholars hold to such an interpretation today. Other biblical students have seen in the book primarily a prediction of future events and have related it to certain apocalyptic literature of the New Testament (Rev. 9:3–11). Most scholars, however, accept the description of the locust plague as a literal invasion which the prophet used as a point of reference to speak to the people of his own day about the coming day of the Lord, at the same time incorporating predictive elements concerning the messianic age.

Primary teachings of the Book of Joel are numerous. (1) The Creator and Redeemer God of all the universe is in complete control of nature and can use calamities to bring His people to repentance. (2) All of God's creation is interdependent. People, animals, and vegetation all suffer when people sin. (3) Whereas the Jews considered the day of the Lord as a time of punishment upon their enemies, Joel make it clear that although God controls the destinies of other nations, His people, with a responsibility to live in accordance with their relationship with Him, are not exempt from His vengeance. (4) The God of judgment also is a God of mercy who stands ready to redeem and restore when His people come before Him in repentance. (5) Of special significance is the forward look to a time when the Spirit of God would be present upon all people. All could become prophets, with no exclusions, no go-betweens, and all could know His salvation. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, proclaimed that the new day of Spirit-filled people had arrived as it had been announced earlier by the prophet Joel (Acts 2:17–21).

Outline

I. The Day of the LORD Calls for God's People to Respond (1:1—2:17).
   A. Witness to future generations (1:1–4).
   B. Mourn and grieve over the destruction (1:5–20).
   C. Sound the alarm because the day of the LORD is dreadful (2:1–11).

D. Repent inwardly because your gracious, patient God may have pity (2:12–14).
E. Assemble the congregation for mourning and repentance (2:15–17).

II. God Will Respond to His People's Mourning and Repentance (2:18–27).
A. God will have pity (2:18).
B. God will provide food needs and remove shame from His people (2:19).
C. God will defeat the enemy (2:20).
D. God will replace fear and shame with joy and praise (2:21–26).
E. God will cause His people to know and worship Him, and Him alone (2:27).

III. God Is Preparing a Great Day of Salvation (2:28—3:21).
A. God will pour out His Spirit to bring salvation to the remnant (2:28–32).
B. God will judge all nations (3:1–17).
C. God will bless His people (3:18–21).

A. O. Collins

JOELAH (Jō ē′ lah) Personal name meaning, "female mountain goat." Warrior from Saul's tribe of Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:7). Early manuscripts and translations give various forms of the name such as Jaalah and Azriel.

JOEZER (Jō ē′ zēr) Personal name meaning, "Yah is help." Warrior from Saul's tribe of Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:6).

JOGBEHAH (Jŏg′ bē hăh) Place name meaning, "height, little hill." City east of the Jordan where Gideon defeated Zeba and Zalmunna, kings of Midian (Judg. 8:11). Its location is modern khirbet el-Jubeihat twenty miles southeast of the Jordan and seven miles northwest of Amman. The tribe of Gad rebuilt it and settled it (Num. 32:35).

JOGLI (Jŏg′ lī) Personal name meaning, "He reveals." Father of Bukki, who represented tribe of Dan in distributing the Promised Land (Num. 34:22).

JOHA (Jō′ hà) Apparently a short form of the personal name Johanan meaning, "Yahweh is merciful." 1. Member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:16). 2. Military hero in David's army (1 Chron. 11:45).

JOHANAN (Jō hō′ nan) Short form of personal name Jehohanan meaning, "Yah is merciful." 1. Military leader among Jews who remained in Judah immediately after the Exile began in 586 B.C. (2 Kings 25:23). He led the effort against Ishmael, who had assassinated Gedaliah, the governor Babylon appointed over Judah. Johanan led the people into Egypt to escape Babylonian retaliation. He forced Jeremiah to go with them, refusing to follow Jeremiah's word from God (Jer. 40—43). 2. High priest about 411 B.C. known in the Elephantine papyri as Jehohanan but in Nehemiah 12:22–23 as Johanan. He was high priest at time Nehemiah's list of priests was compiled. Some interpreters would say that Jonathan (Neh. 12:11) is a copyist's error for Johanan, but this is not likely. Others would equate this Johanan with Jehohanan of Ezra 10:6 (note the KJV equation of names despite difference in Hebrew spelling), but Ezra does not indicate Jehohanan was high priest. See Jehohanan. 3. A high priest whom Josephus, the early Jewish historian, says murdered his brother named Jesus, perhaps under Artaxerxes III Ochus (358–338 B.C.). 4. Eldest son of Josiah (1 Chron. 3:15). We know nothing else of this royal son who for some reason did not become king. 5. A descendant of David in the postexilic period about 445 B.C. (1 Chron. 3:24). 6. High priest in the early period of Israel's monarchy (1 Chron 6:9–10). His son Azariah was high priest under Solomon (compare 1 Kings 4:2). 7. Member of Saul's tribe of Benjamin who joined David at Ziklag when he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:4). 8. Member of tribe of Gad who joined David at Ziklag, demonstrating the people east of the Jordan supported him (1 Chron. 12:12). 9. Man who led a group going with Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:12).

JOHANNAN (Jō hăn′ nan) TEV spelling of Johanan (1 Chron. 12:12). See Johanan.

JOHN (Jŏhn) Greek form of Hebrew name meaning, "Yahweh has been gracious." 1. John the Apostle, the son of Zebedee, the brother of James. Harmonizing Matthew 27:56 with Mark 15:40 suggests that John's mother was Salome. If she was also the sister of Jesus' mother (John 19:25), then John was Jesus' first cousin. This string of associations is so conjectural, though, that we cannot be sure of it. Because James is usually mentioned first when the two brothers are identified, some have also conjectured that John was the younger of the two.

The sons of Zebedee were among the first disciples called (Matt. 4:21–22; Mark 1:19–20). They were fishermen on the Sea of Galilee and probably lived in Capernaum. Their father was sufficiently prosperous to have "hired servants" (Mark 1:20), and Luke 5:10 states that James and John were "partners with Simon" Peter.

John is always mentioned in the first four in the lists of the twelve (Matt. 10:2; Mark 3:17; Luke 6:14; Acts 1:13). John is also among the "inner three" who were with Jesus on special occasions in the Synoptic Gospels: the raising of Jairus' daughter (Mark 5:37), the transfiguration (Mark 9:2), and the Garden of Gethsemane (Mark 14:32–33). Andrew joined these three when they asked Jesus about the signs of the coming destruction of Jerusalem (Mark 13:3).

The sons of Zebedee were given the surname Boanerges, "sons of thunder" (Mark 3:17). When a Samaritan village refused to receive Jesus, they asked, "Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them?" (Luke 9:54). The only words in the Synoptic Gospels attributed specifically to John are: "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name . . . and we forbad him, because he followeth not us" (Mark 9:38; Luke 9:49). On another occasion the two brothers asked to sit in places of honor, on Jesus' left and right in His glory (Mark 10:35–41; compare Matt. 20:20–24). On each of these occasions Jesus challenged or rebuked John. Luke 22:8, however, identifies Peter and John as the two disciples who were sent to prepare the Passover meal for Jesus and the disciples.

The apostle John appears three times in the Book of Acts, and each time he is with Peter (1:13; 3:1–11; 4:13,20; 8:14). After Peter healed the man, they were arrested, imprisoned, and then released. They were "unlearned and ignorant men" (Acts 4:13), but they answered their accusers boldly: "we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (Acts 4:20). Later, John and Peter were sent to Samaria to confirm the conversion of Samaritans (8:14).

Paul mentioned John only once: "James, Cephas [Simon Peter], and John, who seemed to be pillars" of the church agreed that Paul and Barnabas would go to the Gentiles, while they would work among the Jews (Gal. 2:9).

The Gospel of John does not mention James or John by name, and it contains only one reference to the sons of Zebedee (21:2). An unnamed disciple who with Andrew had been one of John the Baptist's disciples is mentioned in John 1:35, and an unnamed disciple helped Peter gain access to the house of the high priest in John 18:15–16. The disciple in these verses may have been the Beloved Disciple, who reclined with Jesus during the last supper (13:23–26), stood at the cross with Jesus' mother (19:25–27), ran with Peter to the empty tomb (20:2–10), and recognized the risen Lord after the great catch of fish (21:7). The need to clarify what Jesus had said about the death of the Beloved Disciple (21:20–23) probably indicates that the Beloved Disciple had died by the time the Gospel of John was put in final form by the editor who speaks in John 21:24–25 and attributes the Gospel to this Beloved Disciple.

Five books of the New Testament have been attributed to John the Apostle: the Gospel, three Epistles, and Revelation. In each case, the traditional view that the apostle was the author of these books can be traced to writers in the second century. Neither the Gospel nor the epistles identify their author by name. The author of Revelation identifies himself as "John" (1:1, 4, 9; 22:8) but does not claim to be the apostle. Much of the weight of the traditional view of the authorship of the Gospel rests on the testimony of Irenaeus, bishop of Lugdunum in Gaul (A.D. 130–200).

The origin of the attribution of the five writings to the apostle is difficult to trace. The strongest argument can probably be made for the traditional view of the authorship of Revelation. Its author claims to be "John," it is associated with Patmos and Ephesus, and in tone it fits the character of the apostle who was called "Boanerges." Justin Martyr, moreover, in the earliest testimony regarding the authorship of Revelation attributes it to John.

Internal evidence from the Gospel and Epistles provides many Bible students reasons to question the traditional view. The Gospel does not mention the "inner three" disciples as a group, nor does it refer to any of the events at which these three were present with Jesus: the raising of Jairus' daughter, the transfiguration, and the agony of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane. Clearly, the editor of the Gospel, who refers to himself in John 21:24–25, links the Gospel with the Beloved Disciple. The question is whether that disciple was John or some other apostle.

The author of the epistles identifies himself as "the elder" (2 John 1, 3 John 1), but never claims to be the apostle. Neither does the author of these epistles claim the authority to command the church to follow his instructions. Instead, he reasons with them and urges the church to abide in what it has received and what it has heard from the beginning.

In sum, a strong tradition linking the apostle John to the authorship of these five New Testament writings can be traced to the second century. Modern scholarship has raised questions about the credibility of this tradition, and discussion of these matters continues. Many would agree, however, that the strongest case can be made for the apostolic authorship of Revelation, followed in order by the Gospel and Epistles. Many Bible students continue to follow tradition and attribute all five books to the apostle.

Legends about the apostle continued to develop long after his death. According to tradition, John lived to an old age in Ephesus, where he preached love and fought heresy, especially the teachings of Cerinthus. The tomb of John was the site of a fourth-century church, over which Justinian built the splendid basilica of St. John. The ruins of this basilica are still visible in Ephesus today.

The Apocryphon of John is an early gnostic work that purports to contain a vision of the apostle John. Copies were found among the codices at Nag Hammadi. The work itself must go back at least to the second century because Irenaeus quoted from it.

The Acts of John is a third-century apocryphal writing which records miraculous events, John's journey to Rome, his exile on Patmos, accounts of several journeys, and a detailed account of John's death. In theology this work is Docetic, and it was eventually condemned by the Second Nicene Council in 787.

The apostle John also has a place in the martyrologies of the medieval church. A fifth-century writer, Philip of Side, and George the Sinner, of the ninth century, report that Papias (second century) wrote that James and John were killed by the Jews (Acts 12:2), but these reports are generally dismissed as fabrications based on interpretations of Mark 10:39.

See John, The Gospel of; John, The Letters of; Revelation of John.

2. John the Baptist, a prophet from a priestly family, who preached a message of repentance, announced the coming of the Messiah, baptized Jesus, and was beheaded by Herod Antipas.

Luke 1:5–80 records the birth of John the Baptist in terms similar to the birth of Isaac. Zechariah, John's father, was a priest from the division of Abijah. Elizabeth, his mother, was a descendant of Aaron. The angel Gabriel announced John's birth, while Zechariah was burning incense in the Temple. John would not drink wine or strong drink. He would be filled with the Holy Spirit, and as a prophet he would have the spirit and power of Elijah. His role would be to prepare the Lord's people for the coming of the Messiah.

Mark 1:3–4 records that John was in the wilderness until the time of his public ministry. There he ate locusts and wild honey. He wore the dress of a prophet, camel's hair and a leather girdle (Matt. 3:4; Mark 1:6; see 2 Kings 1:8). Because of his life in the wilderness, his priestly background, his preaching of repentance to Israel, and his practice of baptism, it is often suggested that John grew up among the Essenes at Qumran. This theory is attractive, but it cannot be confirmed. Neither can the origin of John's practice of baptizing be traced with certainty. Washings had long been part of Jewish piety, and by the time of John, Gentile converts to Judaism washed themselves as a form of ceremonial cleansing. The Essenes at Qumran practiced ritual washings and had an elaborate procedure for admission to the community. John's baptism may owe something to the Essene practices, but we cannot determine the extent of this influence.

According to Luke, John began his ministry around the Jordan River in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar (Luke 3:1–3), which must have been A.D. 26 or 27. John's preaching emphasized the coming judgment, the need for repentance, and the coming of the Messiah. Luke also emphasizes the ethical teachings of John: he called the multitudes a "generation of vipers" (Luke 3:7); one who had two coats should give one to a person who had none; tax collectors were warned to collect no more than their due; and soldiers were instructed to rob no one and be content with their wages" (Luke 3:10–14).

Jesus was baptized by John, a fact that all the evangelists except Mark attempted to explain. Matthew 3:15 explains that it was "to fulfill all righteousness." Luke recorded that John was thrown in prison before he said that Jesus also was baptized (3:20–21), and John told of the baptism of Jesus but only through the testimony of John the Baptist himself. Thus, the witness of John the Baptist to Jesus is featured, deflecting any possibility that later followers of the Baptist might argue that John was superior to Jesus (Matt. 3:11–12; Mark 1:7–8; Luke 3:15–17; John 1:15, 19–36).

Various sayings give us glimpses of John's ministry. His disciples practiced fasting (Mark 2:18), and he taught them to pray (Luke 11:1). John was vigorous in his attacks on Herod. In contrast to Herod's household he lived an austere existence (Matt. 11:7–9). Some criticized John for his ascetic life-style (Matt. 11:16–19), but Jesus praised John as the greatest of the prophets (Matt. 11:11). John's popularity with the people is reflected in Matthew 21:31–32; Mark 11:27–32; Luke 7:29–30; John 10:41.

In an account that parallels the New Testament closely, Josephus stated that Herod Antipas arrested John and subsequently executed him at Machaerus because "he feared that John's so extensive influence over the people might lead to an uprising." Many believed that the defeat of Herod's armies by the Nabateans was God's judgment on Herod for the death of John the Baptist. While John was in prison, he sent two of his disciples to inquire whether Jesus was the coming One (Matt. 11:2–3; Luke 7:18–23). John's death is recorded in detail in Mark 6:14–29.

According to the Gospel of John, the ministry of Jesus overlapped with that of John (3:22–24; contrast Mark 1:14), and some of Jesus' first disciples had also been disciples of John the Baptist (John 1:35–37). Jesus even identified John with the eschatological role of Elijah (Matt. 17:12–13; Mark 9:12–13).

John's movement did not stop with his death. Indeed, some believed that Jesus was John, raised from the dead (Mark 6:14–16; 8:28). Years later, a group of John's followers were found around Ephesus, among them the eloquent Apollos (Acts 18:24—19:7); and for centuries John's influence survived among the Mandeans, who claimed to perpetuate his teachings. See Baptism.

3. Relative of Annas, the high priest (Acts 4:6), unless manuscripts reading Jonathan are right.

4. John Mark. See Mark. R. Alan Culpepper

JOHN, THE GOSPEL OF According to tradition the fourth Gospel was written by John the apostle in Ephesus, toward the end of his life. Perhaps because it is so different from the Synoptic Gospels, Clement of Alexandria called it the "spiritual Gospel."

Since the beginning of the modern era, scholars have debated the authorship and historicity of this Gospel. The Gospel itself says only that it was written by the beloved disciple (21:20–24). Although this disciple is traditionally identified as the apostle John, the Gospel itself does not make this identification. See John 1.

Part of the enigma of John is its distinctiveness from the other three canonical Gospels. John does not tell of Jesus' birth in Bethlehem. Jesus tells no parables, and there is nothing like the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus heals no lepers, and demons are never mentioned. The kingdom of God, which is the primary theme of Jesus' preaching in the Synoptics, is scarcely mentioned in John. Instead of the short, pithy sayings that characterize Jesus' words in the Synoptics, one finds in John extended discourses. There is no list of the twelve disciples, and "the twelve" are mentioned only at the end of John 6 and once later (20:24). The bread and the wine are not mentioned at the last supper. Instead, Jesus washes the disciples' feet. There are also differences in chronology. In the Synoptics Jesus spends His entire ministry in and around Galilee and makes one trip to Jerusalem, just a week before His death. According to John, however, Jesus made four trips to Jerusalem (John 2:13; 5:1; 7:10; 12:12) and spent a significant part of His ministry in Judea.

The Gospel of John, therefore, gives a distinctive account of Jesus' "signs," His words, and His ministry. Parts of the Gospel are remarkably parallel to the synoptic accounts, but the distinctive elements should not be overlooked as one ponders its mystery and message.

A widely accepted theory holds that the Gospel makes use of an account of the signs Jesus performed. The first two of these are numbered (John 2:1–11; 4:46–54). At other points one can also see evidences of earlier stages in the Gospel's composition. In John 14:31 Jesus said, "Arise, let us go hence." The next three chapters, however, continue the farewell discourse. Only at 18:1 do we read the natural continuation of 14:31: "When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples." Many Bible students regard John 15—17 as a longer version of the discourse material contained in John 14. Similarly, the Gospel seems to reach its conclusion at the end of chapter 20. Jesus appeared to the disciples, comforted them, commissioned them, and consecrated them with the Holy Spirit. Thomas's doubt was overcome, and Thomas voiced the Gospel's climactic confession: "My Lord, and my God!" (20:28). Jesus pronounced a beatitude on all who would later believe, and the evangelist stated the purpose for which the Gospel was written (20:30–31). To many Bible students the end of John 20 appears to be the original ending of the Gospel. No ancient manuscript, however, lacks the last chapter, which these Bible students think was probably added shortly later by the final editor. Regardless of the whether material in the Gospel was added early or late in the process of composition, it all derived from the witness of the Beloved Disciple as his teachings were developed and used in the worship of the community that gathered around him. It is the inspired Word God has given us "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (20:31).

The earliest period of the history of John's community took place within a Jewish synagogue. The account of Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection, which makes frequent allusions to the Hebrew Scriptures, was probably shaped during this period. Other sections of the Gospel, such as the calling of the first disciples (1:35–51) may also reflect the preaching of this group at a time when they were appealing to fellow Jews.

As a result of their confession of Jesus as the Christ, these Christian Jews were expelled from the synagogue and persecuted by the Jewish community. The Gospel reflects conflict with the Jewish authorities both during the ministry of Jesus and at the time of the writing of the Gospel. By telling about the life of Jesus in such a way that later believers saw similarities with their own struggles, the Gospel's message took on greater significance for the Christian community. The expulsion from the synagogue is referred to in John 9:22; 12:42; and 16:2, and other passages speak of "fear of the Jews" (7:13; 20:19).

The Gospel was written after the separation from the synagogue to proclaim the gospel message that gave the Christian community its identity and purpose. The Gospel of John features episodes in which individuals are caught between Jesus' call for faith and the Jewish authorities' rejection of His claims (Nicodemus, John 3; the man at the Pool of Bethesda, John 5; the crowds in Galilee, John 6; and the man born blind, John 9). The purpose of the Gospel, therefore, was twofold: (1) to call believers to reaffirm their faith and move on to a more mature faith, and (2) to call the "secret believers" (12:42; 19:38) to confess Jesus as the Christ and join the Christian community.

Eventually, a dangerous belief that either denied or diminished the significance of the incarnation began to develop. Some Johannine Christians taught that Jesus was certainly the Christ, but they denied that the Christ had come "in flesh" (see 1 John 4:2–3; 2 John 7). Finally, the community was divided. See John, The Letters of.

We do not know what happened to the Johannine community after the writing of the epistles, but we may conjecture that the remnant that followed the elder was assimilated into the emerging church of the second century while the elder's opponents, with their Docetic Christology, probably found their way into the developing Gnostic groups.

The roots of the Johannine tradition reach back to the ministry of Jesus, and the Gospel stands on eyewitness testimony (19:34–35; 21:24–25). The composition of the Gospel, described above, probably stretched over several decades, with the Gospel reaching its present form around A.D. 90–100. Its place in the New Testament, following the other three Gospels, may reflect the memory that it was the last of the four Gospels.

The Gospel of John draws a portrait of Jesus as the divine Logos, the Christ, the Son of God. Its message is thoroughly Christological. Jesus has a dual role as Revealer and Redeemer. He came to reveal the Father and to take away "the sin of the world" (1:18, 29). As the Logos, Jesus continued God's creative and redemptive work, turning water to wine, creating eyes for a blind man, and breathing Holy Spirit into His disciples. As the Revealer, Jesus revealed that he and the Father were one (10:30), so those who saw Him (that is, received Him in faith) saw the Father (14:9). All that Jesus does and says points beyond and above to the knowledge of God. Through Jesus' revelation of the Father, which reaches its fulfillment in His death on the cross, Jesus delivers the world from sin. Sin is understood in the Gospel of John primarily as unbelief (16:9).

John contains a profound analysis of the experience of faith. The human condition apart from God is characterized in John as "the world," which is under the power of sin. Some never believe because they love the darkness and the glory of men rather than the glory of God. All who believe are called, drawn, and chosen by the Father (6:37, 44; 10:3, 27; 17:6). Some believe only because of Jesus' signs. The Gospel accepts this response as faith but calls believers on to faith that is based on Jesus' words and on the knowledge of God revealed in Jesus.

Those who believe in His name are born "from above" (3:3 NRSV). They are the "children of God" (1:12), whose life is sustained by living water and the bread of life. They live in community as His sheep (John 10), the branches of the true Vine (John 15). Jesus' disciples are to live "just as" he lived. The twin commands of the Johannine community were to have faith and to love one another (14:1; 13:34; 1 John 3:23). Those who believe already have eternal life, here and now (John 17:3). They have already crossed from death into life (5:24), and the judgment occurs in one's response to Jesus (3:19). John emphasized the present fulfillment of future expectations. Believers, however, will also be raised "at the last day" (6:39,40,44,54).

Outline

I. The Prologue (1:1–18)
II. Jesus Before the World (1:19—12:50)
  A. Calling Disciples (1:19—2:11)
  B. The Temple and Nicodemus (2:12—3:21)
  C. An interlude in Judea (3:22–36)
  D. The Samaritan woman and the nobleman (4:1–54)
  E. The man at the pool of Bethesda (5:1–47)
  F. Feeding the multitude (6:1–71)
  G. Confrontation in Jerusalem (7:1—8:59)
  H. The blind man and the shepherd's sheep (9:1—10:42)
  I. The raising of Lazarus (11:1–54)
  J. Preparations for the Passover (11:55—12:50)
III. Jesus with His Own (13:1—20:31)
  A. The Farewell Discourse (13:1—17:26)
    1. The footwashing (13:1–30)
    2. The Farewell Discourse: Part 1 (13:31—14:31)
    3. The Farewell Discourse: Part 2 (15:1—16:4)
    4. The Farewell Discourse: Part 3 (16:5—33)
    5. The high priestly prayer (17:1–26)
  B. The trial of Jesus (18:1—19:16*a*)
  C. The death of Jesus (19:16*b*–42)
  D. The resurrection of Jesus (20:1–29)
  E. Conclusion (20:30–31)
IV. Epilogue (21:1–25)

See John, The Letters of; John the Apostle; and Logos.

R. Alan Culpepper

JOHN, THE LETTERS OF Three New Testament books attributed to the apostle John. Knowledge and use of 1 John is attested from an early date in the writings of Papias (according to Eusebius), Polycarp, and Justin. It was regarded as the work of the apostle John by Irenaeus, Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and the Muratorian Canon.

Second and Third John were accepted as Scripture more slowly. Origen reported that their authenticity was questioned, and Eusebius placed them in the list of writings that were disputed, although "well-known and acknowledged by most."

The Johannine character of the three letters is universally recognized, but debate over their authorship continues. Some scholars regard the apostle John as the author of all three letters. Others, citing stylistic and theological differences between the Gospel and the Letters, contend that they were written by an elder in the Johannine community, who was not the evangelist. It is possible that the author of the letters was the final editor of the Gospel, the "I" who speaks in John 21:25. The author never identifies himself by name. Twice he claims the title "the elder" (2 John 1; 3 John 1), but he never calls himself an apostle.

Most scholars agree that the three letters were written by the same author and that they were written after the Gospel. A date of about A.D. 100 seems to be indicated, but both earlier and later dates have been proposed. Several factors support a date following the composition of the Gospel. First John 1:1–5 seems to imitate John 1:1–18. The polemic against "the Jews" that pervades much of the Gospel does not appear in the letters. Their concern was with difficulties within the Christian community. Whereas the Gospel was written "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God" (John 20:31), 1 John insists that one must confess that Jesus Christ has come in flesh (1 John 4:2). Second John 7 likewise identifies as deceivers those who do not confess "Jesus Christ come [having come or coming] in flesh." The letters are therefore concerned with correcting a false belief about Christ that was spreading in the churches.

From this emphasis on the incarnation, we may assume that the opponents held to the divinity of Christ but either denied or diminished the significance of His humanity. Their view may be an early form of Docetism, the heresy that emerged in the second century which claimed that Jesus only seemed to be human.

This false belief had already led to schism. First John 2:19 explains that those who had left the community never really belonged to it, or else they would have remained with it. First John 4:1 warns the church to test the spirits because "many false prophets are gone out into the world." These "opponents" of the elder's group are charged with not following the command to love one's fellow Christians. They apparently also claimed that they were free from sin (1 John 1:8, 10). Both groups held that believers have "passed from death unto life" (1 John 3:14), but the elder recognized the potential danger in this teaching and contended that the future coming of the Lord (1 John 3:2) requires that believers purify themselves and be righteous (1 John 3:3–7).

The Johannine letters, therefore, provide us with a window on an early Christian church, its problems, and its developing doctrine. First John seems to be a treatise written to the Johannine community. In contrast, 2 and 3 John are much briefer, about the length of a single sheet of papyrus, and they follow the conventional form of a personal letter.

J

First John is difficult to outline because its themes recur throughout the letter and because transitional verses may be placed either with the preceding or the following sections (2:28; 4:1–6). Outlines with varying numbers of divisions have been suggested for 1 John. The structure followed here is based on the repetition of the statement "God is" three times in the Epistle: "God is light" (1:5), "He is righteous" (2:29), and "God is love" (4:8). First John demands that these qualities must dominate the lives of believers.

As a way of refuting the false teaching that threatened the community, the elder quoted tenets of the opponents in 1 John 1:6,8,10; 2:4,6, and 9, and answered each point. He called those who remained to practice the command of love (2:3–11). The elder gave assurance to the community and warned the believers that they cannot practice love for one another and love for the world at the same time (2:15–17). "The world" here means all that is opposed to Christ. Dissension had already split the community, and the elder warned those who remained about the dangers of the false teaching (2:18–27).

One of the tests of faithfulness is righteousness (2:29). The opponents may have emphasized the present realization of the church's hope for the future, saying that the judgment was already past and Christians had already passed from death into life. The elder reasserted a more traditional eschatology (see 3:2). Hope for the future, however, carries with it the imperative of righteous, pure living. Christians cannot make sin a way of life (compare 3:6,9 with 1:8–10).

Another test of faithfulness is living by the command to love one another, which means sharing with those in need (3:11–24, especially v. 17). The false prophets, who had gone out from the community, denied the incarnation (4:1–6). The incarnation is crucial for Christian doctrine, however, because in Christ we find the love of God revealed (4:7–21). Love of God, however, requires that we love one another.

Those who have faith in Christ and love God keep His commands, and to them God gives eternal life (5:1–12). The water, the blood, and the Spirit all bear witness to Christ, His incarnation, and His death. Christians are to pray for one another, but there is sin that is "mortal" (5:16). By this the elder probably meant denying Christ, the one through whom sin is forgiven. Christ also keeps those who are "born of God." He is the only source of eternal life.

Outline

I. The Prologue: The Word of Life (1:1–4)
II. Light Among God's Children (1:5—2:27)
  A. The incompatibility of light and sin (1:5—2:2)
  B. Love as a test of knowledge (2:3–11)
  C. Conflict with the world (2:12–17)
  D. Conflict within the community (2:18–27)
III. Righteousness Among God's Children (2:28—4:6)
  A. The hope of the righteous (2:28—3:10)
  B. The love of the righteous (3:11–24)
  C. The two spirits (4:1–6)
IV. Love Among God's Children (4:7—5:12)
  A. The true nature of love (4:7–21)
  B. The true nature of faith (5:1–12)
V. The Epilogue (5:13–21)

Second John was written by the elder to a sister community to warn the church about the dangers of the false teaching that had already threatened the elder's church. The sequence of the writing of 1 and 2 John is conjectural, but they were probably written by the same author at about the same time. They share similar concerns, and in many places the same phrases appear in both letters.

The elder praised the sister church for following the truth and appealed for her to continue to show love. The elder apparently wanted to be sure that the sister church would continue in fellowship with his church. His real concern, however, was to warn "the elect lady" (v. 1) about those "who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh" (v. 7). Such deceivers and antichrists are not to be received by the church. These were apparently members of the same group referred to in 1 John 2:19 and 4:1–2.

Outline

I. The Salutation of Love for Those Who Know the Truth (1–2)
II. The Blessings of Grace, Mercy, and Peace (3)
III. Love Is the Identifying Mark for Christians (4–6).
IV. Believers Face Deceivers (7–11).
V. Personal Conclusion (12–13)

Third John is a personal letter from the elder to Gaius, who had been providing hospitality to fellow Christians and messengers from the elder's community. Diotrephes, however, refused to receive those sent by the elder. The elder charged that Diotrephes "loveth to have the preeminence among them" (v. 9), but Diotrephes' position is unclear. Some interpreters suggest that Diotrephes was an appointed leader or bishop of the church. Others conclude that Diotrephes had rejected the authority of the church's leaders, ambitiously asserting his own leadership. It may be that in an effort to prevent outsiders from spreading false teachings and dissension in the church he refused to receive any traveling prophets or teachers.

Gaius may or may not be a member of Diotrephes' church. The elder praised Gaius and commended Demetrius (who may have carried the letter) as a faithful witness. The letter closes with greetings from fellow Christians, who are called "the friends" (v. 14; see John 3:29; 11:11; 15:13–15).

See John the Apostle; John, the Gospel of.

Outline

I. The Address (1)
II. The Blessing of Good Health and Welfare for a Faithful Spiritual Leader (2–4)
III. Believers Should show Hospitality and Support for Visiting Believers (5–8).
IV. Pride, Gossiping, and Lack of Hospitality Bring Condemnation (9–10).
V. Imitate Good Leaders but Not Wicked Ones (11–12).
VI. Concluding Remarks (13–14).

R. Alan Culpepper

JOIADA (Joi′ ȧ dȧ) Short form of personal name Jehoiada meaning, "Yah knows." 1. Man who helped repair the old gate of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 3:6, KJV reads, Jehoiada). 2. High priest about 425 B.C. (Neh. 12:10–11,22). Ezra suspected one of his sons, who married Sanballat's daughter, of being a traitor (Neh. 13:28). See Sanballat. Such marriage of a high priest's family with a foreigner violated Jewish law (Lev. 21:14).

JOIAKIM (Joi′ ȧ kĭm) Short form of Jehoiakim meaning, "Yah has established, set up, delivered." Son of Jeshua and high priest of Israel about 510 B.C. (Neh. 12:10,12,26).

JOIARIB (Joi ȧ rĭb) Short form of Jehoiarib meaning, "Yah establishes justice." See Jehoiarib. 1. Member of group Ezra sent to get Levites to accompany him on return from Babylon to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:16). Many interpreters think Joiarib is a copyist's duplication of Jarib earlier in the verse. See Jarib. 2. Ancestor of member of tribe of Judah who lived in Jerusalem after the Exile (Neh. 11:5). 3. Father of priest who lived in Jerusalem after the Exile (Neh. 11:10). 4. Priest who returned to Jerusalem from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:6). 5. Leading priestly family after return from Exile (Neh. 12:19).

JOKDEAM (Jŏk′ dē ăm) Place name meaning, "the people burned." City in tribal territory of Judah, possibly modern khirbet Raqqa near Ziph (Josh. 15:56).

JOKIM (Jō′ kĭm) Short form of personal name Jehoiakim meaning, "Yah has established or delivered." An early member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:22).

JOKMEAM (Jŏk′ mē ăm) Place name meaning, "He establishes the people" or "the Kinsman establishes or delivers." A variant form of Jokneam. 1. Border city of fifth district of Solomon's kingdom (1 Kings 4:12; KJV reads Jokneam). Its location was probably tell Qaimun about eighteen miles south of Haifa on the northwestern corner of the Jezreel Valley. A fortress city, it protected the pass into the Plain of Sharon. It lay on the border, perhaps outside of the tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:11, spelled Jokneam) and was assigned the Levites (Josh. 21:34, spelled Jokneam). Joshua defeated its king whose kingdom was near Mount Carmel (Josh. 12:22, spelled Jokneam). Egyptian records of Thutmose III, Egyptian Pharaoh about 1504–1450 B.C., mentioned Jokmeam.

2. City of the Levites from tribe of Ephraim (1 Chron. 6:68), either omitted in list in Joshua 21:22 or to be equated with Kibzaim there. See Kibzaim. It may be located at tell es-Simadi or Qusen west of Shechem.

JOKNEAM (Jŏk' nē ăm) Alternate spelling of Jokmeam. See Jokmeam.

JOKSHAN (Jŏk' shăn) Personal name meaning, "trap, snare." Son of Abraham by Keturah and ancestor of Arabian tribes in wilderness east of Jordan (Gen. 25:2–3). He links the Jews and Arabs together as belonging to a common ancestor—Abraham.

JOKTAN (Jŏk' tăn) Personal name meaning, "watchful" or "he is small." Son of Eber in line from Shem in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:25–26). He was original ancestor of several tribes in the Arabian desert, particularly in Jemin. See Mesha; Sephar.

JOKTHEEL (Jŏk' thē ĕl) Place name meaning, "God nourishes" or "destroys." 1. Town in Shephelah or valley of tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:38). 2. King Amaziah captured Selah from Edom and renamed it Joktheel (2 Kings 14:7). It may be modern es-Sela northwest of Bozrah. See Selah.

JONA (Jō' na) Greek transliteration of Hebrew personal name Jonah meaning, "dove." Father of Simon Peter (John 1:42; compare 21:15–17).

JONADAB (Jŏn' ă dăb) Short form of personal name Jehonadab meaning, "Yah proves himself to be generous." 1. David's nephew who counseled Ammon how to take advantage of Tamar (2 Sam. 13). Jonadab also advised the sorrowing David that of his sons only Ammon was dead (vv. 32–33). 2. Form used at times for Jehonadab in Jeremiah 35. See Jehonadab.

JONAH (Jō' nah) Personal name meaning, "dove" and name of book of Bible preserving story of a part of prophet's ministry. The Book of Jonah is unique among the Minor Prophets in consisting of a short story about a prophet and in confining his message to a sentence (3:4).

The hero or rather anti-hero is mentioned in 2 Kings 14:23–29 as active in the reign of Jeroboam II (about 785–745 B.C.). His prediction of national expansion for the Northern Kingdom, evidently made early in the reign, expressed God's longing to save His people, wicked though they were. This theological background is important for the book.

A series of cumulative arguments suggest that the unknown author of the book be assigned to a comparatively late date, probably to the fifth century B.C., though many Bible students think the book came from about 750 B.C. Its Hebrew language is marked by Aramaic features, some of which can be paralleled only in Imperial Aramaic, current in the Persian period. There appear to be deliberate echoes of Jer. 18:7,8,11 (Jonah 3:8,10) and of the postexilic Joel 2:13,14 (Jonah 3:9; 4:2). The title "king of Nineveh" (3:6) seems to imply that the city was the capital of Assyria, which it became only at the end of the eighth century. The book appears to be loosely tied to history and presents later theological reflection.

Some have regarded the book as an allegory: Jonah then stands for Israel swallowed in Exile by the Babylonian sea monster (compare Jer. 51:34, 44). Yet God used the fish not to punish Jonah but to rescue him. Rather, the book is to be regarded as a satirical parable intended to criticize and correct its readers' attitudes (compare 2 Sam. 12:1–6; 14:1–11; Isa. 5:1–7). It builds on an earlier phenomenon, as the parable in Luke 19:11–27 builds on Archelaus' visit to Rome. The book's extraordinary features—the seemingly exaggerated size of Nineveh (3:3); Jonah's survival with a song in the fish's interior, digestive juices notwithstanding; and the suddenly appearing/disappearing plant (4:6,7)—are meant to rivet the hearers' attention and to enhance the purpose of the book. The fantastic debt in Matthew 18:24 may be compared. Jonah is presented as a caricature of Elijah, who obeyed God the first time (1 Kings 17:8–10; Jonah 1:1–3; 3:1–3) and had reason for despair (1 Kings 19:4; Jonah 4:3).

The two halves of the book have a dual focus, on pagans (1:4–16; 3:3*b*–10) and on the Israelite prophet (1:17—2:10; 4:1–11) in their respective relations to God. The portrayal of pagans in a positive light as sensitive and submissive to God's will recognizes their worth and potential in His sight. Jonah is shown to be inconsistent: after praising God for rescuing him from threat of death, he complained when God did the same for pagans. Two credal statements represent God as universal Creator (1:9) and as Preserver of the lives of pagans in an extension of His covenant grace (4:2; compare Ex. 34:6; Ps. 145:8,9,15, 16). He so loves the world: the book has a premissionary role in defining a theological truth, God's relation to the world outside the sheepfold of faith. Even the Assyrians' later destruction of Israel (2 Kings 17) and their tyrannical imperialism (2 Kings 18:22–24; Nah. 3:1–4, 19), which the book appears to presuppose, could not debar them from God's loving concern for their survival.

In the Gospels, especially at Matthew 12:40, Jonah's stay in the fish (1:17) is represented as a type of Jesus' brief confinement to the grave. Exegetically the fish is the means of God's rescue of the prophet from drowning. In Jewish exposition the incident was given a negative interpretation as a threat from which Jonah had to be saved. Jesus reflected this contemporary understanding: His concern was to teach about His mission rather than to exegete the book.

Outline

I. People with Bad Reputations Can Be Pious and Know God (1:1–16).

II. God Hears the Distress Calls of His People (1:17—2:10).
III. God in His Compassion Turns Away from Judgment When Any People Repent (3:1–10).
IV. God's People Should Mirror God's Compassion for All People (4:1–11). Leslie C. Allen

JONAM (Jō′ nam) Modern translation spelling of Jonan. See Jonan.

JONAN (Jō′ năn) Greek spelling of Hebrew personal name Jehohanan, meaning "Yahweh is gracious" (compare 1 Chron. 26:3). Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:30). Greek uses the "m" ending, while Hebrew has the "n." See Jonam.

JONAS (Jō′ năs) KJV spelling for Jonah in New Testament. See Jonah; Jona.

JONATH-ELEM-RECHOKIM (Jō′ năth-ē′ lĕm-rē chō′ kĭm) Transliteration of word in title of Psalm 56 (NAS, KJV). NIV reads, "to the tune of 'A Dove on Distant Oaks' " (compare REB, NRSV with Terebinths for oaks). This was probably the name of a tune to which the Psalm was sung.

JONATHAN (Jŏn′ ȧ than) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh gave." 1. A Levite who served as priest of Micah in Ephraim and later with tribe of Dan (Judg. 17—18). 2. Eldest son of King Saul; mother: Ahinroam; brothers: Abinadab, Malchishua and Ish-baal; sisters Merab and Michal; son Mephibosheth (Meribbaal).

Jonathan possessed courage, fidelity, and friendship. He led 1,000 soldiers to defeat the Philistines at Geba (Gibeah) (1 Sam. 13:2–3). Then Jonathan took only his armor-bearer to the rocky crags at Michmash and brought panic to the Philistines by killing twenty of them (1 Sam. 14:1–16). Saul discovered that Jonathan was missing, called for the ark of God, went to battle, and defeated the Philistines. Jonathan ate honey, unaware that Saul had forbidden the people to eat that day. Saul would have had Jonathan put to death, but the people spoke in praise of Jonathan and ransomed him from death (1 Sam. 14:27–46).

The next four accounts about Jonathan focus on his friendship with David. First, Jonathan formed a close friendship with David by giving him his robe, armor, sword, bow, and girdle (18:1–5). Second, Jonathan pleaded successfully with Saul to reinstate David (19:1–7). Third, Jonathan left Saul's table angrily to inform David that the king would never receive David again (20:1–42). Fourth, Jonathan held a final meeting with David at Horesh. They made covenant with one another as Jonathan acknowledged David as the next king (23:16–18).

The end of 1 Samuel reports the end of Saul and three of his sons, Jonathan, Abinadab, and Melchishua, at Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. 31:1–13). Their bodies were first hung on the wall of Beth-shan and later retrieved to Jabesh. Eventually, David had the bones buried in the land of Benjamin, in Zela in the tomb of Kish, Jonathan's grandfather (2 Sam. 21:12–14). See Saul; David; Mephibosheth.

3. Son of Abiathar the priest in service to David (2 Sam. 15:24; 17:17,20; 1 Kings 1:42–43).

4. An uncle of David who functioned as counselor and scribe in the royal court (1 Chron. 27:32).

5. Son of Shimea or Shimeah, David's brother; slew a Philistine giant (2 Sam. 21:21; 1 Chron. 20:7).

6. Son of Shammah; one of David's thirty mighty men (2 Sam. 23:32–33; 1 Chron. 11:34).

7. Son of Uzziah, a royal treasurer in reign of David; called Jehonathan in 1 Chronicle 27:25.

8. House of a scribe or secretary where Jeremiah was imprisoned (Jer. 37:15,20; 38:26).

9. Son of Kareah; "Johanan;" possibly same as 8. (Jer. 40:8).

10. Father of Ebed, a returned exile (Ezra 8:6; 1 Esdras 8:32).

11. Priest during high priesthood of Joiakim (Neh. 12:14).

12. Priest, son of Joiada (Neh. 12:11).

13. Priest, son of Shemaiah and father of Zechariah, in a group who played musical instruments (Neh. 12:35).

14. Son of Asahel who supported foreign marriages in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:15; 1 Esdras 9:14).

15. A descendant of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:32–33). Omer Hancock

JOPPA (Jŏp′ pȧ) Place name meaning "beautiful." Situated on the Mediterranean coast, Joppa is located some thirty-five miles northwest of Jerusalem. Excavations have revealed that the city dates back at least to 1650 B.C. Originally Joppa was situated on a rocky hill just over 100 feet high, a hill that juts slightly beyond the coastline to form a small cape. To the north stretches the Plain of Sharon, to the south the Plain of Philistia.

The Old Testament name for Joppa was Japho (or Jaffe or Yafo), the name the Israeli nation has chosen as the modern designation for the city. The Phoenician form of the term comes from the name Jafe, the daughter of Aeolus, god of the winds.

Joppa is the only natural harbor on the Mediterranean between ancient Ptolemais and Egypt, and its facilities in biblical days were far less than outstanding. Reefs forming a roughly semicircular breakwater approximately 300 feet off-shore made entrance from the south impossible. Entrance from the north was shallow and treacherous, but small vessels could navigate it.

The earliest historical reference to Joppa is found in inscriptions on the walls of the Temple of Karnak at Thebes (Luxor). Thutmose III, who ruled Egypt from 1490 to 1436 B.C., boasted of Modern produce vendors at a busy market in Tel Aviv (adjacent to ancient Joppa).

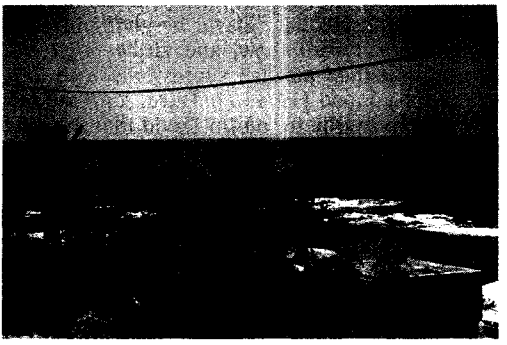
The traditional house of Simon the Tanner in Joppa where Peter received his famous vision from God.



his conquest of the cities of Palestine; Joppa is one of those named. The Amarna Letters mention Joppa twice, with observations about the beauty of her gardens and the skill of her workmen in leather, wood, and metal.

When Canaan was conquered, the tribe of Dan received Joppa; but it never came firmly into Hebrew hands. The Philistines took the city, but David recaptured it. Solomon developed it into the major port serving Jerusalem. To Joppa rafts of cedar logs were floated to be transported to Jerusalem for Solomon's splendid Temple (2 Chron. 2:16).

Phoenicia gained control of Joppa by the time of Jonah. As the prophet fled from God's call, he caught a ship at Joppa for his well-remembered voyage toward Tarshish (Jonah 1:3). In 701 B.C.

The ancient seaport of Joppa (Jaffa).

J

Sennacherib occupied the city; then, in turn, the Babylonians and the Persians. As it had been in Solomon's day, Joppa became the port that received cedar logs from Lebanon, now for the rebuilding of the Temple under the leadership of Zerubbabel.

In 164 B.C. more than 200 Jewish citizens of Joppa were treacherously drowned by angry non-Jews. In retaliation Judas Maccabeus raided the city, burned the harbor installations, torching the anchored ships as well (2 Maccabees 12:3–9). Joppa's history is linked with several notable names during the years of Roman control. Pompey conquered it in 63 B.C., joining it to the province of Syria. Antony later gave the city to Cleopatra of Egypt. Augustus Caesar added it to the kingdom of Herod the Great.

The New Testament records that Joppa was the home of Dorcas, a Christian woman known for her gracious and generous deeds. At her death the Christians of Joppa called for Simon Peter, who with the command "Tabitha, arise," restored her to life (Acts 9:36–41).

Simon Peter remained in Joppa at the home of Simon the Tanner. At noon, while Simon Peter waited for a meal to be prepared, he prayed on the flat roof of the tanner's house. In a trance Peter saw what seemed to be "a great sheet knit at the four corners" lowered before him and learned that the Gentile world was a fit audience for the gospel (Acts 10:9–16).

Joppa is now annexed to the modern city of Tel Aviv, forming a part of the southern section of the largest city of Israel. Industrial, shipping, and residential complexes have been developed on this ancient site. Timothy Trammell

JORAH (Jō′ rah) Personal name meaning, "early or autumn rain." Group leader of Babylonian exiles returning to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:18). The parallel list (Neh. 7:24) has Hariph instead of Jorah (compare Neh. 10:19). Many interpreters believe Hariph to be the original reading, though it is difficult to explain the change. See Hariph.

JORAI (Jō′ rā ī) Personal name perhaps meaning, "Yah has seen" or a short form of Joiarim, "Yah has exalted." Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:13).

JORAM (Jō′ ram) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is exalted." Name of a king of Israel (849–843 B.C.) and a king of Judah (850–843 B.C.) The possibility of confusion between them is aggravated by several factors. For one thing, both are also called Jehoram. For another, they were contemporary with one another. Finally, each reigned in proximity to a person named Ahaziah: Joram of Judah was succeeded on the throne by his son, whose name was Ahaziah; Joram of Israel came to the throne at the death of his brother, who was also named Ahaziah. The account of the reign of Joram (Jehoram) of Israel is found in 2 Kings 3. He led a coalition with Judah and Edom, advised by Elisha, to defeat Moab. The reign of Joram of Judah is treated in 2 Kings 8. He married the daughter of Ahab of Israel and brought Baal worship to Judah. Edom and Libnah gained independence from Judah in his reign. See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period.

JORDAN RIVER (Jôr′ dan) Place name meaning, "the descender." River forming geographical division separating eastern and western tribes of Israel. It is the longest and most important river of Palestine. It rises from the foot of Mount Hermon and flows into the Dead Sea. The Jordan Valley proper is a strip approximately 70 miles long between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea. The valley is divided by various rivers and wadis (small streams) into a number of geographically distinguishable sections. Due to the twists and turns of its course, the full length of the river is more than two hundred miles. Its headwaters lie more than a thousand feet above sea level, and its mouth nearly thirteen hundred feet below sea level. Through its descending course the river passes through a variety of climatic zones, as well as different types of terrain.

Four sources come together to form the Jordan River: Banias, el-Leddan, Hasbani, and Bareighit rivers. They all arise at the foothills of Mount Hermon. The Jordan then flows south through what can be described as three stages: (1) From the sources to Lake Huleh. The Jordan flows almost seven miles before it enters Lake Huleh. Within this distance, the river makes its way through areas of marsh consisting of reeds, bulrushes, and papyrus—the chief writing material for centuries. In this area, lions were seen in biblical times (Jer. 49:19). (2) Between Lake Huleh and the Sea of Galilee. On leaving Lake Huleh, the Jordan flows for about ten miles to the Sea of Galilee. In this short stretch, it descends to 696 feet below sea level. The river has carved a deep and winding course for itself through the center of the valley. Much of its course is characterized by rocky gorges. (3) From the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea. After leaving the Sea of Galilee the river passes through an especially fertile region. The length of this stretch is around sixty-five miles, but the river curves and twists for three times this distance. The breadth of the valley is from three to fourteen miles. The river drops 590 feet during this stretch.

The green waters of the Jordan River as it meanders through Israel.

Several major tributaries (e.g. Yarmuk, Jabbok), flow into the Jordan emptying almost as great an amount of water as the Jordan itself. The deltas of these streams are always fertile areas which widen the extent of land that can be cultivated in the valley. Many cities of antiquity were built close to the point of juncture of the tributaries and the main river.

The Jordan River and Jordan Valley played an important role in a number of memorable events from both the Old Testament and the New Testament. The first mention of the Jordan in the Bible occurs in the story of Abram and Lot. Lot, upon his separation from Abram, chose for himself "all the plain of Jordan" (Gen. 13:11). Jacob wrestled with his adversary at the ford of the Jabbok (Gen. 32:22–26). Under the leadership of Joshua, Israel crossed the Jordan "on dry ground" (Josh. 3:15–17). During the period of the judges and the early monarchy, the possession of the fords of the Jordan more than once meant the difference between defeat and victory. The Jordan was a strong line of defense, not to be easily forded. The Jordan River is also featured in the miracles of Elijah and Elisha.

The essential story of the Gospels begins at the Jordan River. It was there that John the Baptist came preaching the coming kingdom of heaven. The most important New Testament event relating to the Jordan is the baptism of Jesus, which was performed by John the Baptizer (Mark 1:9). The first part of Jesus' ministry was centered in and around the Sea of Galilee. The second part of His ministry followed as he pursued His course down the east side of the Jordan Valley. There He performed new miracles, and spoke to the multitudes in parables, especially those of the collection in Luke 12—18. See Sea of Galilee; Dead Sea; Mount Hermon. Philip Lee

The Jordan River which flows south from Mount Hermon through Israel, finally emptying into the Dead Sea.

JORIM (Jō′ rĭm) Personal name of unknown meaning. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:29).

JORKEAM (Jôr′ kē ăm) Personal name meaning, "the people is golden." Descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:44). This, like other names in the list, may represent a city as well as a person. Many interpreters read Jokdeam here, equating the city with the tribal city of Judah. The location of the city is not known. See Jokdeam; Jorkoam.

JORKOAM (Jôr′ kō ăm) KJV spelling of Jorkeam. See Jorkeam.

J

JOSABAD (Jŏs' ă băd) KJV spelling of Jozabad (1 Chron. 12:4). See Jozabad.

JOSAPHAT (Jŏs' ă phăt) KJV spelling of Jehoshaphat (Matt. 1:8). See Jehoshaphat.

JOSE (Jō' sē) KJV spelling of otherwise unknown ancestor of Jesus, representing Joshua in Hebrew and Jesus in Greek. Modern translations read Joshua (Luke 3:29).

JOSECH (Jō' sĕch) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:26). KJV reads Joseph.

JOSEDECH (Jŏs' ĕ dĕch) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh acts in righteousness." KJV spelling of short form of Jehozadak. See Jehozadak.

JOSEPH (Jō' sĕph) Personal name meaning, "adding." Name of several men in the Bible, most importantly a patriarch of the nation Israel and the foster father of Jesus.

Old Testament 1. Joseph in the Old Testament primarily refers to the patriarch, one of the sons of Israel. Joseph was the eleventh of twelve sons, the first by Jacob's favorite wife, Rachel. His name, "may he [the Lord] add," was a part of Rachel's prayer at his birth (Gen. 30:24).

As the child of Jacob's old age and Rachel's son, Joseph became the favorite and was given the famous "coat of many colors" (Gen. 37:3; "long robe with sleeves," NRSV, NEB; "richly ornamented robe" NIV) by his father. This and dreams which showed his rule over his family inspired the envy of his brothers, who sold Joseph to a caravan of Ishmaelites (Gen. 37).

Joseph was taken to Egypt where he became a trusted slave in the house of Potiphar, an official of the pharaoh. On false accusations of Potiphar's wife, Joseph was thrown in the royal prison, where he interpreted the dreams of two officials who had offended the pharaoh (Gen. 39—40). Eventually Joseph was brought to interpret some worrisome dreams for the pharaoh. Joseph predicted seven years of plenty followed by seven years of famine and recommended a program of preparation by storing grain. Pharaoh responded by making Joseph his second in command (Gen. 41:39–45).

With the famine, persons from other countries came to Egypt to buy food, including Joseph's brothers. They did not recognize him, but Joseph saw the fulfillment of his earlier dreams in which his brothers bowed down to him. After testing their character in various ways, Joseph revealed himself to them on their second visit (Gen. 42—45). Under Joseph's patronage, Jacob moved into Egypt (Gen. 46:1—47:12). Joseph died in Egypt but was embalmed and later buried in Shechem (Gen. 50:26; Ex. 13:19; Josh. 24:32).

That the influential Joseph (Gen. 47:13–26) is not known from Egyptian records would be expected if he served under a Hyksos pharaoh, as seems likely. See Hyksos. Later Egyptians tried to erase all evidence of that period. The pharaoh "who did not know Joseph" (Ex. 1:8, NRSV) did not "know" of him in a political or historical sense.

While in Egypt, Joseph became the father of two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim (Gen. 41:50–52), who were counted as sons of Jacob (48:5–6) and whose tribes dominated the northern nation of Israel. The name Joseph is used later in the Old Testament as a reference to the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh (Num. 1:32; 36:1,5; 1 Kings 11:28) or as a designation for the whole Northern Kingdom (Ps. 78:67; Ezek. 37:16,19; Amos 5:6,15; 6:6; Obad. 18; Zech. 10:6).

Four other men named Joseph are mentioned in the Old Testament: 2. the spy of the tribe of Issachar (Num. 13:7); 3. a Levite of the sons of Asaph (1 Chron. 25:2); 4. a contemporary of Ezra with a foreign wife (Ezra 10:42); and 5. a priest in the days of high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:14).

New Testament 6. Several Josephs are mentioned in the New Testament, the most important being the husband of Mary, mother of Jesus. He was a descendant of David, a carpenter by trade (Matt. 13:55), and regarded as the legal or foster father of Jesus (Matt. 1:16,20; Luke 2:4; 3:23; 4:22; John 1:45; 6:42). Upon learning of Mary's pregnancy, Joseph, being a righteous man, sought to put her away without public disgrace. His response to God's assurances in a dream further demonstrated his piety and character (Matt. 1:18–25). Joseph took Mary to his ancestral home, Bethlehem, was with her at Jesus' birth, and shared in the naming, circumcision, and dedication of the child (Luke 2:8–33). Directed through dreams, Joseph took his family to Egypt until it was safe to return to Nazareth (Matt. 2:13–23). As dedicated father, he was anxious with Mary at the disappearance of Jesus (Luke 2:41–48). Joseph does not appear later in the Gospels, and it is likely that he died prior to Jesus' public ministry.

7. Also important in the New Testament is Joseph of Arimathea, a rich member of the Sanhedrin and a righteous man who sought the kingdom of God (Matt. 27:57; Mark 15:43; Luke 23:50). After the crucifixion, Joseph, a secret disciple of Jesus, requested the body from Pilate and laid it in his own unused tomb (Matt. 27:57–60; Mark 15:43–46; Luke 23:50–53; John 19:38–42). Arimathea is probably the same as Ramathaim-zophim (1 Sam. 1:1) northwest of Jerusalem.

Two Josephs are mentioned in the genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:24,30). Another was a brother of Jesus, apparently named after His father (Matt. 13:55; KJV "Joses" as in Mark 6:3). It likely but uncertain that the brother of James (Matt. 27:56; Joses in Mark 15:40,47) is a different person. Joseph was also another name of both Barsabbas (Acts 1:23) and Barnabas (Acts 4:36).

Daniel C. Browning Jr.

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS (Jō sē′ phŭs, Flā′ vî ŭs) Early historian of Jewish life and our most important source for the history of the Jews in the Roman period. His four surviving works are The Jewish War (composed about A.D. 73), The Antiquities of the Jews (about A.D. 93), Life (an autobiographical appendix to The Antiquities), and Against Apion, penned shortly after The Antiquities. The date of Josephus' death is unknown but was probably after A.D. 100.

Following the conflict between Rome and the Jews of Palestine (A.D. 66–73), Flavius Josephus gave an account of the struggle in his seven books of The Jewish War, which include a prehistory reaching back to the second century B.C. Josephus came to Rome in 73 and lived in a house provided by Vespasian, who also gave him a yearly pension. The Antiquities, Life, and Against Apion were all written in Rome. In The Antiquities Josephus paraphrased the Septuagint (earliest Greek translation of the Bible) to tell the story of the Hebrews through the time of Cyrus and then employed other sources to complete the account through the first century. The account of the revolt against Rome is in many respects quite different in the The Antiquities than it is in the earlier War. Against Apion defends the Jews against charges of the grammarian Apion as well as against other common assaults on the antiquity and moral virtue of the Jews. Josephus' Life focuses primarily upon the six-month period in which he was commander of Jewish forces in the Galilee and refutes the charge made by Justus of Tiberias that Josephus had organized the revolt in the Galilee.

Fred L. Horton, Jr.

JOSES (Jō′ sēs) Personal name in Mark 6:3, one of the brothers of Jesus. In Matthew 13:55 KJV follows some Greek manuscripts in reading Joses for a brother of Jesus, but modern translations follow the earliest manuscripts in reading Joseph. Some Bible students see Joses as a dialectical pronunciation or a Greek substitute for the Hebrew Joseph. Compare Matthew 27:56. Mark 15:40 mentions another Joses, the brother of James the Less, whose mother's name was Mary. This latter Joses is mentioned as if he were a disciple of Jesus. Barnabas' original name was Joseph in the Greek of Acts 4:36. KJV reads this as Joses.

JOSHAH (Jō′ shah) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:34).

JOSHAPHAT (Jŏsh′ ă phăt) Short form of personal name Jehoshaphat meaning, "Yah judges." 1. Military hero under David (1 Chron. 11:43). 2. Priest who sounded the trumpet before the Ark of the Covenant as David brought it to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:24; KJV, Jehoshaphat).

JOSHAVIAH (Jō shā vī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah lets inhabit," probably a short form of Joshibiah. Military hero under David (1 Chron. 11:46). See Joshibiah.

JOSHBEKASHAH (Jŏsh bē kā′ shah) Personal name meaning, "to live in misfortune." A Levite musician from clan of Heman, the seer, under David (1 Chron. 25:4). He headed the seventeenth course or division of Temple musicians (1 Chron. 25:24).

JOSHEB-BASSEBETH (Jō′ shĕb-Băs shē′ bĕth) Personal name meaning, "dweller of shame" (2 Sam. 23:8). See Jashobeam.

JOSHIBIAH (Jō shī bī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah lets inhabit." Member of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:35).

JOSHUA (Jŏsh ū ă) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh delivered." 1. Leader of Israelites who first took control of Promised Land of Canaan. Joshua is one of the unsung heroes of the Old Testament. He, not Moses, led the people into the Promised Land. He was a person of such stature that he could succeed the incomparable Moses and compile a record of notable success (Josh. 24:31). The Hebrew variations of Joshua are Oshea (Num. 13:16); Hosea (Hos. 1:1). English versions differ in their transliteration of the Hebrew names. Its New Testament equivalent is Jesus.

Joshua was born in Egypt during the period of slavery. He was a member of Ephraim, the important tribe that later formed the heart of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. He first appeared during the battle with the Amalekites during the desert travels. He was Moses' general, who led the troops in the actual fighting while Aaron and Hur held up Moses' hands (Ex. 17:8–13).

Joshua was Moses's servant (Ex. 24:13). He was on the mountain when Moses received the Law (Ex. 32:17). He was also one of the twelve spies Moses sent to investigate Canaan (Num. 13:8). He and Caleb returned with a positive, minority report. Of all the adults alive at that time, only the two of them were allowed to live to enter the land of Canaan (Num. 14:28–30,38).

The Lord selected Joshua to be Moses' successor long before Moses' death (Num. 27:15–23; Deut. 31:14–15,23; 34:9). Joshua was a military leader, a political leader, and a spiritual leader. He was quiet and unassuming, but he was not buffaloed by his responsibilities or the task that lay before him. He was a battlefield genius, particularly in the areas of careful planning, strategy, and execution. He was a capable administrator for the nation, effective in maintaining harmony among people and groups. He was a spokesman to the people for the Lord. Though he did not receive the Law as Moses had, he communicated the Lord's will and the Lord's message much like Moses.

Joshua was at the helm of the nation during the conquest and the distribution and settlement of Canaan. He led in the covenant renewal at mount Ebal and Shechem (Josh. 8:30–35; 24:1–28). He was able to challenge his people by both word and example. His pattern is a hard one to better.

See Joshua, The Book of; Moses.

2. High priest of community who returned from Babylonian Exile in 538 B.C. See Jeshua 3.

Dan Gentry Kent

JOSHUA, THE BOOK OF The Book of Joshua is the sixth book of the English Old Testament. It is the first book of the second division of the Hebrew Old Testament, the Prophets. The book is named after its central character, Moses' successor, Joshua the son of Nun.

Authorship and Date The Former Prophets are all anonymous. That means that no author is mentioned in the book. Some Bible students think Joshua wrote the book except for the death reports (24:29–33); but the book gives no indication that Joshua had anything to do with writing the whole book, though he did write the laws on which the covenant renewal was based (Josh. 24:26).

It is also difficult to date the writing of books like this. Some Bible students suggest a time about a hundred years after Joshua's death, or at least by the time of the beginning of the monarchy. A date around 1045 B.C. would place it within the lifetime of Samuel, who was in a sense the last of the judges and the one who anointed the first two kings. Other Bible students think the Book of Joshua only reached its present form when the Former Prophets were collected together during the Exile.

The events of the book apparently took place in the last half of the thirteenth century, from about 1250 to 1200 B.C., though some would date the Exodus and the conquest earlier, in the middle of the fifteenth century.

Contents The Book of Joshua tells the story of a significant Bible event, the conquest of the land of Canaan. It tells this story in light of the theological themes of the Book of Deuteronomy, and thus the historical books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings are often spoken of as the Deuteronomic History.

The book has only two main parts, and an appendix:

I. The Conquest of the Land, 1—12.

II. The Settlement of the Land, 13—22.

III. Joshua's Farewell Addresses, 23—24.

The Book of Joshua standardizes the conquest stories to some extent. For example, the accounts are from the standpoint of the general who led the entire nation, whereas the Book of Judges is more from the standpoint of the foot soldier who did the actual fighting.

A surface reading of the Book of Joshua would give the impression that the invasion was complete and final. However, numerous passages (13:13; 15:63; 16:10; 17:12–13, 16–18) agree with the Book of Judges to show that it was up to the individual clans to root out the many pockets of Canaanite resistance still scattered throughout the land. The difference is between occupation and subjugation, the former in the Book of Joshua and the latter in the Book of Judges.

Through it all, the emphasis of the book is on the Lord's mighty acts. Joshua was rightly celebrated as an effective military leader. The people were generally obedient and courageous. However, the glory goes to God alone (3:10; 4:23–24; 6:16). He is the true hero of the book.

Nature of the Covenant in the Book of Joshua The Lord's covenant with His people was always more universalistic and inclusive than we usually realize. We see this clearly in the Book of Joshua. Rahab, the Canaanite prostitute, was accepted, along with her family, as a part of the covenant community (2:9–13; 6:22–23,25). It may well be that people related to the Hebrews who lived in the Shechem area voluntarily joined in their fellowship of faith (8:30–35). The people of Gibeon and its four-city league were accepted, and even became associated with Temple service (9:3–27). The covenant was not limited by race or nation; it was open to anyone of faith.

Holy War in the Book of Joshua The Hebrews did not divide life up into sacred and secular spheres as we do. To them all of life was holy, in the sense that it was lived under the direction of the Lord. They saw the Lord at work on behalf of His people in every area of life. Thus the soldiers were holy. They were under strict religious regulations. Religious ceremonies prepared them for battle (5:2–11).

The Lord received the credit for all victories. All of the spoils of battle belonged to Him (6:18–19). None was to be taken for personal use. This is related to the idea of cherem or ban. It might seem ruthless or even immoral by our modern Western standards, but it was a part of the world of that day. A certain city, for instance Jericho in chapter 6, was placed under the ban. It was devoted to destruction in the name of the Lord. Everything in it was to either be destroyed or else placed in the Lord's service in the tabernacle.

The ban was a common practice in the Semitic world and was also known among the Greeks. Some suggest that it served to control looting and that it offered an enemy encouragement to surrender without a struggle.

Moral Problems of the Book of Joshua The Book of Joshua is filled with war, conquest, and destruction. Its teaching is that the Lord allowed his people to conquer the land of Canaan, to take possession of the area He had promised to the patriarchs.

But why would the Lord allow one nation to attack and defeat another? Several factors need to be taken into consideration in studying a book that has so little of loving your enemy or turning the other cheek.

One must begin by admitting that Joshua lived centuries before Christ appeared to reveal the Father's will fully and completely. We should not expect to find completed Christian truth in a book written so long before Christ came.

The Hebrew people saw paganism as a poison. Pagan religious views were a spiritual infection that was both highly contagious and deadly. It could be controlled only by strict quarantine and eradication. Holy war became God's method in that setting to achieve this purpose. Holy war was not set up as an eternal example (compare Deut. 20:16).

One element in the explanation for the holy wars of Joshua is judgment on sin. The iniquity of the Amorites (Canaanites) was at last full (Gen. 15:16). The catch to this arrangement is that if the other nations could be judged for their sins, the Hebrew people could, too, and later were.

See Conquest; War; Joshua.

Outline

I. God Brought Victory to a People of the Book (1:1—12:24).
  A. To possess the promise, God's people must be faithful to the book (1:1–18).
  B. God uses unexpected persons to fulfill His promises (2:1–24).
  C. God exalts His leaders and proves His presence so all people may know Him (3:1—4:24).
  D. God's people must worship Him to prepare for the victories He promises (5:1–15).
  E. Divine power, not human might, provides victory for God's people (6:1–27).
  F. A disobedient people cannot expect God's victories (7:1–26).
  G. A repentant people receive a strategy for victory from God (8:1–35).
  H. Human cunning and disobedience cannot overcome the purposes of God (9:1–27).
  I. God fights for His people (10:1–43).
  J. God fulfills His promises, giving victory to an obedient people (11:1—12:24).

II. God Divides the Spoils of Victory According to the Needs of His People (13:1—21:45).
  A. The complete rest is still incomplete (13:1–7).
  B. History shows God's provision for His people (13:8–33).
  C. God rewards heroes of faith (14:1–15).
  D. God fulfilled His promise of land to His people (15:1—17:13).
  E. God provided for specific needs of His people (17:14–18).
  F. God called a hesitant people to action to receive the promised gift (18:1–10).
  G. God gave the land to an obedient people (18:11—19:48).
  H. God and His people rewarded their faithful leader (19:49–51).
  I. God decreed legal protection for the accused among His people (20:1–9).
  J. God provided for the needs of His priests (21:1–42).
  K. God fulfills all His promises (21:43–45).

III. God Calls His Victorious People to Unity in Worship and Devotion (22:1—24:33).
  A. God's rest, commandments, and blessing unify His people (22:1–6).
  B. Worship unifies God's people forever despite geographical barriers (22:7–34).
  C. Israel had to be faithful to God's direction or face the loss of His gifts (23:1–16).
  D. God calls His people to remember the history of God's faithfulness and choose to serve only Him (24:1–28).
  E. Faithful leaders keep a people faithful (24:29–33).

Dan Gentry Kent

JOSIAH (Jō sī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh heals." Judah's king from about 640–609 B.C. He succeeded his father Amon, an idolatrous king, who ruled for only two years before being murdered by his servants (2 Kings 21:19–23; 2 Chron. 33:21–24). Josiah became king at the age of eight due to wishes of "the people of the land" who put his father's assassins to death (2 Kings 21:24). Josiah's reign lasted for thirty-one years (2 Kings 22:1; 2 Chron. 34:1).

The Book of 2 Chronicles reveals much about the early years of Josiah. In his eighth year as king he began to seek the God of David (34:3). Josiah initiated a religious purge of Jerusalem, Judah, and surrounding areas during his twelfth year on the throne (34:3–7). This purge included tearing down the high places, the Asherah, and the altars to Baal. The high places were essentially Canaanite worship centers that had been taken over by Israel. The Asherah were cult objects associated with the worship of Baal, the fertility god of Canaan. See Asherah.

In his eighteenth year as king an unexpected event turned his energies in new directions. A "Book of the Law" was discovered while repairs were being made on the Temple. Hilkiah, the high priest, found the book and gave it to Shaphan, the scribe, who in turn read it to King Josiah. Upon hearing the message of the book, Josiah tore his clothes, a sign of repentance, and humbled himself before God. Josiah was assured that the promised destruction would not come in his time (2 Kings 22:8–20; 2 Chron. 34:15–28). The reading of this book prompted Josiah to instigate the most far-reaching religious reforms in Israel's history.

What was this "Book of the Law" and when was it written? Most scholars believe that this book included at least the core of our present Book of Deuteronomy, either chapters 5–26 or 12–26. A major thrust of the Book of Deuteronomy was to call the nation Israel to exclusive loyalty to Yahweh. Perhaps a thrust such as this inspired the Josianic revival.

The Bible is silent about the remaining years of Josiah until his death. On the international scene during those years Assyria's power was waning, and Babylon's was on the rise. Assyria had aligned itself with Egypt against Babylon. Pharoah Neco's troops were passing through territory north of Judah en route to join forces with Assyria. Josiah's army blocked the movement of Egyptian troops at Megiddo. In the battle that followed Josiah was mortally wounded (2 Kings 23:29). His body was taken to Jerusalem where he was buried. There was great mourning for him throughout the land (2 Chron. 35:24–25). Though only thirty-nine when he died, Josiah was remembered as Judah's greatest king (2 Kings 23:25):

> "Neither before nor after Josiah was there a king like him who turned to the Lord as he did—with all his heart and with all his soul and with all his strength, in accordance with the Law of Moses" (NIV).

See Jeremiah; Deuteronomy.

M. Stephen Davis

JOSIAS (Jō sī′ as) KJV transliteration of Greek form of Josiah (Matt. 1:10–11). See Josiah.

JOSIBIAH (Jŏ sĭ bī′ ah) KJV spelling of Joshibiah. See Joshibiah.

JOSIPHIAH (Jŏ sĭ phī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yah adds to," a longer form of Joseph. Leader of group of Babylonian exiles who returned to Jerusalem with Ezra (Ezra 8:10).

JOT See Dot.

JOTBAH (Jŏt′ bah) Place name meaning, "it is good." Home of Meshullemeth, the queen mother of King Amon of Judah about 642–640 B.C. (2 Kings 21:19). It was located at khirbet Gefat about nine miles north of Nazareth. Others would identify it with the closely related Hebrew name Jotbathah (Num. 33:34) and locate it at et-Taba twenty miles north of Akaba. See Jotbathah; Meshullemeth.

JOTBATHAH (Jŏt′ bȧ thah) Place name meaning, "good." Wilderness camping station the second stop before Ezion Geber for Israel in the wilderness (Num. 33:33). The context of Deuteronomy 10:7 indicates that at Jotbathah God set apart the Levites to carry the Ark of the Covenant and to do priestly service, though many interpreters would connect the address of verses 8–9 to 10:1, seeing the travel report in verses 6–7 as a historical parenthesis and not as the precise setting for verses 8ff. See Ezion Geber; Jotbah.

JOTHAM (Jō′ tham) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has shown Himself to be perfect." 1. In Judges 9:5, the youngest of Gideon's seventy sons. He survived the mass killing of Gideon's sons by Abimelech, their half brother, because he hid himself. Afterwards, when Abimelech had been hailed as king at Shechem, Jotham addressed a fable to the people of Shechem designed to mock the idea of Abimelech acting as a king. After he had told the fable and given its interpretation, Jotham fled for his life. See Judges.

2. In 2 Kings 15:32, the son and successor of Uzziah as king of Judah (750–732 B.C.). He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years. His mother's name was Jerusha. The sixteen-year period given for his reign may include the time that he acted as regent for his father Uzziah. Uzziah contracted leprosy during the final years of his reign and thus could not perform the functions required of royalty. Jotham evidently was an effective ruler. His reign was marked by building projects, material prosperity, and military successes. See Chronology.

JOY The happy state that results from knowing and serving God. A number of Greek and Hebrew words are used in the Bible to convey the ideas of joy and rejoicing. We have the same situation in English with such nearly synonymous words as joy, happiness, pleasure, delight, gladness, merriment, felicity, and enjoyment. The words joy and rejoice are the words used most often to translate the Hebrew and Greek words into English. Joy is found over 150 times in the Bible. If such words as "joyous" and "joyful" are included, the number comes to over 200. The verb rejoice appears well over 200 times.

Joy is the fruit of a right relation with God. It is not something people can create by their own efforts. The Bible distinguishes joy from pleasure. The Greek word for pleasure is the word from which we get our word hedonism, the philosophy of self-centered pleasure-seeking. Paul referred to false teachers as "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" (2 Tim. 3:4).

The Bible warns that self-indulgent pleasure-seeking does not lead to happiness and fulfillment. Ecclesiastes 2:1–11 records the sad testimony of one who sought to build his life on pleasure-seeking. The search left him empty and disillusioned. Proverbs 14:13 offers insight into this way of life, "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful." Cares, riches, and pleasures rob people of the possibility of fruitful living (Luke 8:14). Pleasure seeking often enslaves people in a vicious cycle of addiction (Tit. 3:3). The self-indulgent person, according to 1 Timothy 5:6, is dead while seeming still to be live.

Many people think that God is the great Kill-Joy. Nothing could be a bigger lie. God Himself knows joy, and He wants His people to know joy. Psalm 104:31 speaks of God Himself rejoicing in His creative works. Isaiah 65:18 speaks of God rejoicing over His redeemed people who will be to Him "a joy."

Luke 15 is the most famous biblical reference to God's joy. The Pharisees and scribes had criticized Jesus for receiving sinners and eating with them. Then Jesus told three parables—the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the loving father. The explicit theme of each parable is joy over one sinner who repents.

The joy of God came to focus in human history in Jesus Christ. The note of joy and exultation runs through the entire biblical account of the coming of Christ (Luke 1:14,44; Matt. 2:10). The most familiar passage is the angel's announcement of "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people" (Luke 2:10). Jesus spoke of His own joy and of the full joy He had come to bring to others (John 15:11; 17:13). He illustrated the kingdom of heaven by telling of the joy of a man who found treasure (Matt. 13:44). Zacchaeus was in a tree when Jesus called him, but he quickly climbed down and received Jesus joyfully (Luke 19:6). He had found life's ultimate treasure in Christ.

As Jesus' death approached, He told His followers that soon they would be like a woman in labor, whose sorrow would be turned into joy (John 16:20–22). Later they understood, when the dark sorrow of the cross gave way to the joy of the resurrection (Luke 24:41). Viewed from this perspective, eventually they came to see that the cross itself was necessary for the joy to become real (Heb. 12:2). Because of His victory and the promise of His abiding presence, the disciples could rejoice even after the Lord's ascension (Luke 24:52).

The Book of Acts tells how joy continued to characterize those who followed Jesus. After Philip preached in Samaria, the people believed and "there was great joy in that city" (Acts 8:8). After the work of Paul and Barnabas in Antioch of Pisidia, "the diciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 13:52). Paul and Barnabas reported such conversions to other believers, "and they caused great joy unto all the brethren" (Acts 15:3). After the conversion of the Philippian jailer, he "rejoiced, believing in God with all his house" (Acts 16:34).

Joy in the Christian life is in direct proportion as believers walk with the Lord. They can rejoice because they are in the Lord (Phil. 4:4). Joy is a fruit of a Spirit-led life (Gal. 5:22). Sin in a believer's life robs the person of joy (Ps. 51:8,12).

When a person walks with the Lord, the person can continue to rejoice even when troubles come. Jesus spoke of those who could rejoice even when persecuted and killed (Matt. 5:12). Paul wrote of rejoicing in suffering because of the final fruit that would result (Rom. 5:3–5). Both Peter and James also echoed the Lord's teachings about rejoicing in troubles (1 Pet. 1:6–8; Jas. 1:2).

Joy in the Lord enables people to enjoy all that God has given. They rejoice in family (Prov. 5:18), food (1 Tim. 4:4–5), celebrations (Deut. 16:13–15), fellowship (Phil. 4:1). They share with other believers the joys and sorrows of life: "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, weep with them that weep" (Rom. 12:15). Robert J. Dean

JOZABAD (Jŏz′ ā băd) Short form of personal name Jehozabad meaning, "Yah gave." 1. Person involved in assassination of King Joash about 782 B.C. (2 Kings 12:21, where Hebrew text says Jozabad, son of Shimeath and Jehozabad, son of Amaziah, but many Hebrew manuscripts read the first name of Jozachar). Second Chronicles 24:26 reads "Zabad son of Shimeath" and Jehozabad son of Shimrith." Copying changes have made it impossible to determine precisely the original names. Chronicles shows that because Joash killed the sons of Jehoiada the priest, his own servants paid him back. They even refused to give him royal burial in the kings' tombs. See Jehozabad; Joash.

2. Man from Gederah in tribe of Benjamin who joined David as he fled from King Saul (1 Chron. 12:4). 3. Two men of tribe of Manasseh who joined David at Ziklag as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:20). 4. Priest who promised Ezra he would divorce his foreign wife to prevent temptation of foreign worship from invading Israel (Ezra 10:22). 5. Priest who witnessed transfer of gold Ezra's party brought from Babylon to the Temple in Jerusalem (Ezra 8:33), though a Hebrew manuscript reads Jonadab here. 6. Levite with foreign wife Ezra condemned (Ezra 10:23). 7. Levite who helped the people understand God's law as Ezra read it (Neh. 8:7). 8. Levite in charge of external affairs of the Temple (Neh. 11:16). 9. A supervisor of Temple treasures under Hezekiah about 715 B.C. (2 Chron. 31:13). He helped give Levites animals to sacrifice at Passover (2 Chron. 35:9).

JOZACAR (Jō′ zā cär) NAS, NRSV, TEV spelling of Jozachar (2 Kings 12:21). See Jozachar.

JOZACHAR (Jŏz′ ā chär) Personal name meaning, "Yah thought of." KJV, REB reading of conspirator who helped kill King Joash about 782 B.C. (2 Kings 12:21) based on Hebrew manuscripts differing from the base manuscript normally used for the Hebrew text. See Jehozabad; Jozabad.

JOZADAK (Jŏz′ ă dăk) Short form of personal name Jehozadak meaning, "Yah acts in righteousness." Father of high priest Joshua (Ezra 3:2 among others). See Jehozadak.

JUBAL (Jū′ băl) Personal name meaning, "a ram," as a "ram's horn" used as a musical instrument. In Genesis 4:19–21, the son of Lamech and full brother of Jabal. He is associated with the invention of musical instruments.

JUCAL (Jū′ căl) Short form of Jehucal. See Jehucal.

JUDA (Jū′ dă) KJV spelling of Judah in New Testament. See Judah.

JUDAEA Alternate form of Judea used by the KJV (except in Ezra 5:8). See Judea.

JUDAH (Jū′ dah) Personal, tribal, and territorial name meaning, "Praise Yahweh," but may have originally been related to the mountain of Jehud. 1. In Genesis 29:35, the fourth son of Jacob and the progenitor of the tribe of Judah. His mother was Leah. Though Judah is prominent in the Genesis narratives, he seldom occupies center stage. Genesis 38 is an exception. It relates the seduction of Judah by his daughter-in-law Tamar. Their union resulted in the birth of Pharez and Zarah. Genesis 49:8–12 preserves the blessing of Judah by Jacob. Through Judah ran the genealogical line that led to Jesus.

2. The tribe of Judah occupied the strategically important territory just to the west of the Dead Sea. The city of Jerusalem was on the border between Judah and Benjamin. David was from the tribe of Judah. 3. When the kingdom was divided following the death of Solomon, the southern kingdom took the name Judah. See Judas; Geography; Tribes of Israel; Patriarchs; Israel.

4. The province set up by the Persian government to rule a conquered Judean kingdom (Neh. 5:14; Hag. 1:1). Judah formed one small province alongside Samaria, Galilee, and Idumea. All these reported to the Satrap of the Persian satrapy of Abarnaharah which encompassed the land west of the Euphrates River with its center in Damascus (Ezra 5:3,6; 6:6,13). The satrap reported to a higher official over Babylon and Abarnaharah with headquarters in Babylon. When Judah's exiles returned from Babylon, Zerubbabel was governor of Judah; Tattenai, satrap of Abarnaharah or Beyond the River; and Ushtannu, satrap of Babylon and Abarnaharah.

5. Priest whose sons helped Zerubbabel and Joshua begin work on restoring the Temple after 537 B.C. (Ezra 3:9; compare Neh. 12:8). 6. Levite whom Ezra condemned for having foreign wife who might tempt Israel to worship other gods (Ezra 10:23). 7. Member of tribe of Benjamin who lived in Jerusalem after the return from Exile and was second in command over the city (Neh. 11:9). He may be the official who joined Nehemiah in leading the celebration of the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:34). 8. Priestly musician who helped in Nehemiah's celebration (Neh. 12:36). 9. An obscure geographical reference in the description of the tribal borders of Naphtali (Josh. 19:34). The earliest Greek translators could not understand the reference and so did not translate it. (Compare TEV, NIV). Naphtali's territory does not touch that of the tribe of Judah. Some try to define Judah here as the sixty towns of Jair east of the Jordan (Josh. 13:30). Others translate Judah as "low-lying land" (REB). Some scholars try to make another place name such as Jehuda out of the reference. It may be that a copyist confused Jordan and Judah, which resemble one another in appearance in Hebrew writing, and miscopied Jordan as Judah and then copied Jordan. No sure solution exists to explain Judah in this text. 10. City of Judah (2 Chron. 25:28) is Jerusalem.

JUDAISM (Jū′ dā ĭsm) The religion and way of life of the people of Judah, the Jews. Paul contrasted his Christian calling from his previous life in Judaism (Gal. 1:13–14). Foreigners could convert to Judaism. See Proselytes; Jewish Parties in the New Testament.

JUDAS (Jū′ dăs) Greek transliteration of Hebrew personal name Judah meaning, "Praise Yahweh." The proper name Judas was very common in the time of Christ because it was not only the Greek form of one of the twelve patriarchs, but it was also made popular by the Jewish hero Judas Maccabaeus who led the nation in their fight for independence from Syria in 166 B.C. The New Testament mentions seven men named Judas. Most of them are only mentioned in passing. 1. One of Jesus' ancestors (Luke 3:30). 2. A brother of the Lord (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3).

Acts speaks of five others named Judas. 3. Judas of Galilee was one of those who led a revolt against the Romans and died as a result. The exact year of this revolt is uncertain, perhaps 6 A.D. (Acts 5:37). 4. After his experience on the road to Damascus Paul went to the house of a man named Judas who lived on Straight Street. Ananias found him there three days later. 5. Judas, surnamed Barsabas, was one of those chosen by the Church of Jerusalem to go with Paul and Barnabas to deliver the letter from James to the church at Antioch concerning the important matter of Gentile salvation (Acts 15:22).

6. Jesus' twelve disciples include two named Judas. The first is always listed after James the son of Alphaeus, and is called the brother of James (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). He appears to have been known also by the name Lebbaeus Thaddaeus (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18). His only recorded words are found in John 14:22.

7. The last of these was Judas Iscariot. All of the Gospels place him at the end of the list of disciples because of his role as betrayer. Iscariot is an Aramaic word which means "man of Kerioth", a town near Hebron. He was the only disciple from Judea. He acted as treasurer for the disciples but was known as a miser and a thief (John 12:5–6). He was present at the Last Supper, during which Jesus predicted his betrayal (Luke 22:21; Matt. 26:20–21). The price of the betrayal was 30 pieces of silver, which Judas returned to Jewish leaders; then he went out and hanged himself. He died in sorrow but without repentance. The money, which could not be returned to the treasury because it was blood money, was used to buy a potter's field in Judas' name (Matt. 27:3–10; compare Acts 1:18–19). Gerald Cowen

JUDAS ISCARIOT (Jū' das Ĭs căr' ĭ ŏt) Personal name meaning, "Judah from Kerioth." Betrayer of Jesus. See Judas.

JUDE, THE BOOK OF Letter of exhortation to those who are "called" (v.1) and "beloved" (vv. 3,17,20), to "contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (v. 3). Simultaneously, it is a direct attack against the opponents of the gospel. Following his negative description of the opponents, Jude concluded the letter by urging his readers to have attitudes and life-styles different from the opponents. Then he committed them to the Lord's safekeeping in one of the most beautiful benedictions in Holy Scripture (vv. 24–25).

The authorship of this little letter has traditionally been ascribed to Jude, the half-brother of Jesus (Mark 6:3). Although the letter says nothing directly about the date, origin, or destination of the letter, it is generally thought that the book was written later than A.D. 60 and earlier than A.D. 100. This is because the content of the faith is clearly fixed (v. 3) and the congregation is comprised of second-generation Christians (v. 17). The recipients were most likely Jewish-Christians in Syria, known to have been a likely place for the kind of heresy the letter addresses.

The hard-hitting attack denounces the demoralizing faction that has slipped into the congregation (vv. 4,12). They are arrogant in theology; they boast of visions and revile angelic beings (vv. 8–10). They are self-centered (vv. 4,8,15); they create divisions (vv. 16–19) and leave disappointment behind (v. 12).

Jude, by use of a creative interpretation of Old Testament examples (some found in noncanonical sources), responds with two sets of three exhortations. His first set of examples appeal to:

(1) the murmuring Israelites
(2) the fallen angels
(3) those in Sodom and Gomorrah.

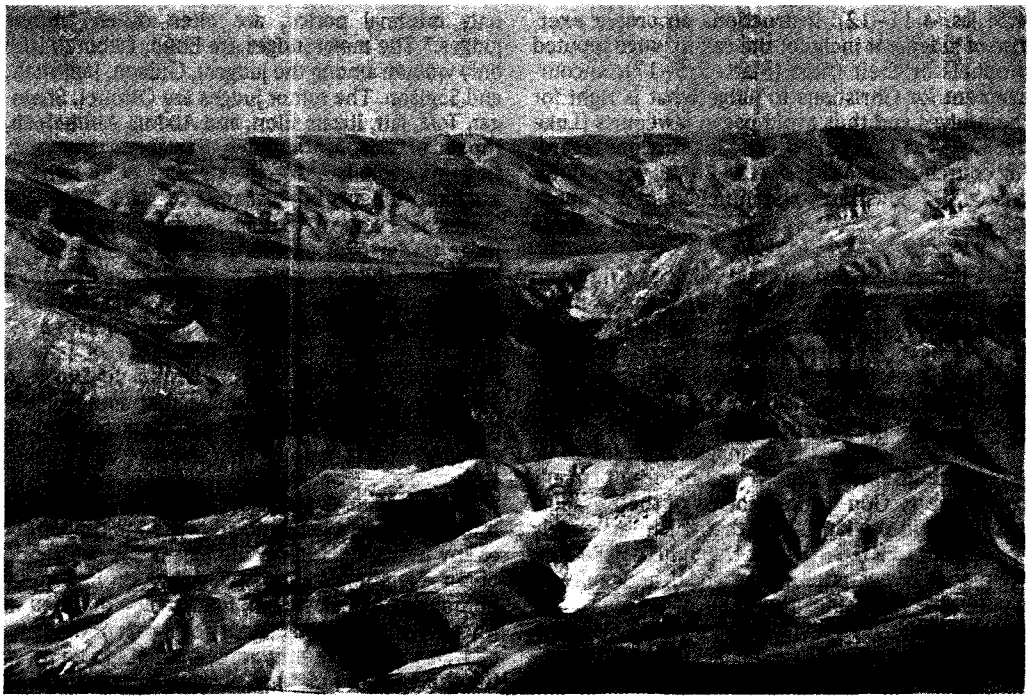
The second set appeals to:

(1) Cain
(2) Balaam (who in Rabbinic tradition is the father of the libertines)
(3) Korah (who challenged Moses' authority).

He tells the believers to:

(1) pray in the Spirit
(2) keep themselves in the love of God
(3) await the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Then he concludes by exhorting them to:



(1) show mercy
(2) snatch others from the brink of disaster
(3) avoid those who have fallen under false teaching.

Jude is a helpful book, for it reminds us that God alone can safely bring believers through the hazardous environment. While false teachers may reject Christ's authority, Jesus is our Savior and Lord now and forevermore.

Outline

I. Introduction (1–2)
II. An Appeal to Struggle for the Faith (3–4)
  A. Authentic Christians contend for the true faith (3).
  B. Pseudo-Christians live immoral lives and deny Christ (4).
III. The Certainty of Divine Judgment (5–7)
  A. Hebrew history shows the certainty of judgment (5).
  B. Fallen angels show the certainty of judgment (6).
  C. Immoral Sodom and Gomorrah show the certainty of judgment (7).
IV. A Description of Heretics (8–19)
  A. They defile the body (8*a*).
  B. They flaunt authority (8*b*–11).
  C. They practice immoralities (12–16).
  D. They follow ungodly lusts (17–19).
V. An Exhortation to the Faithful (20–23)
  A. Grow in the faith (20*a*).
  B. Pray in the Holy Spirit (20*b*).
  C. Remain in the love of God (21*a*).
  D. Anticipate the coming of Jesus (12*b*).
  E. Minister to erring Christians (22–23).
VI. Conclusion: Praise for the Only God and Savior (24–25) David S. Dockery

JUDEA (Jū dē' à) Place name meaning, "Jewish." In Ezra 5:8, the Aramaic designation of a province that varied in size with changing political circumstances, but always included the city of Jerusalem and the territory immediately surrounding it. The area, formerly called Judah, was first given the name Judea following the Babylonian Exile. During the Persian period, Judea occupied a very small area. Under the Maccabees, however, the territory was expanded in size and enjoyed a period of political independence. Herod the Great, appointed over roughly the same territory by Rome, had the title king of Judea. Judea, Samaria, and Galilee were generally considered, in Roman times, to be the three main geographical divisions of Palestine. See Geography; Rome; Roman Empire.

The Wilderness of Judea as viewed toward the Dead Sea (left center) from atop the Herodium.

JUDEAN (Jū dē′ an) Resident or citizen of Judah in one of its several national and geographical meanings. See Judah.

JUDGE (OFFICE) (1) An official with authority to administer justice by trying cases; (2) one who usurps the perogative of a judge; (3) a military deliverer in the period between Joshua and David (for this sense, see Judges, Book of). Moses served as the judge of Israel, both deciding between persons and teaching Israel God's statutes (Ex. 18:16). At Jethro's suggestion, Moses himself served as the people's advocate before God and their instructor in the law (18:19–20) and appointed subordinate judges to decide minor cases (18:21–23; Num. 11:16–17; Deut. 1:12–17; 16:18–20). Elders of a community frequently served as judges at the city gate (Deut. 22:15; 25:7; Ruth 4:1–9; Job 29:7–8). Difficult cases were referred to the priests or to the supreme judge (Deut. 17:8–13; compare Num. 5:12–31 for a case involving no witnesses). During the monarchy the king served as the supreme judge (2 Sam. 15:2–3) and appointed local judges (1 Chron. 23:4; 2 Chron. 19:5), along with an appeals process (2 Chron. 19:8–11). Following the Exile, Artaxerses gave the priest Ezra the authority to appoint judges in Judea (Ezra 7:25).

Complaints against judges are frequent in the Old Testament literature. Absalom took advantage of discontent with the legal system to instigate revolt (2 Sam. 15:4). Judges are accused of showing partiality (Prov. 24:23); of taking bribes (Isa. 61:8; Mic. 7:3; compare Ex. 23:2–9); of failing to defend the interest of the powerless (Isa. 10:2; Jer. 5:28). Zephaniah described the judges of Jerusalem as wolves on the prowl (3:3).

God is the ultimate Judge of all the earth (Gen. 18:25; Isa. 33:22; Jas. 4:12). As God's representative, Christ functions as judge as well (John 8:16; Jas. 5:9; 1 Pet. 4:5).

As is frequently the case with biblical truths, the Christian's role in exercising judgment on others is found in a tension between warnings to avoid judging others and admonitions concerning how best to judge others. Christians are forbidden to judge others when such judgment entails intolerance of another's sin coupled with blindness of one's own sin (Matt. 7:1–5; Luke 6:37; John 8:7; Rom. 2:1–4) or when human judgment impinges on God's prerogative as judge (Rom. 14:4; 1 Cor.

4:5; Jas. 4:11–12). Instructions on proper exercise of judgment include: the call to judge reputed prophets by their fruits (Matt. 7:5–17); encouragement for Christians to judge what is right for themselves and thus avoid pagan lawcourts (Luke 12:57–59; 1 Cor. 6:1–6); and instructions regarding church cases (Matt. 18:15–20). First Corinthians 5:3–5 illustrates the function of a church court. Chris Church

JUDGES, BOOK OF Second book of the group called the Former Prophets in the Hebrew Bible. In English Bible arrangement following the Greek Septuagint it is the second of the Historical Books. Judges relates important episodes in the period of Israel's settlement in Canaan between the death of Joshua and the advent of Samuel.

The Book of Judges is arranged according to its theological theme of the cyclical nature of Israel's obedience to God in the process of their gradual expansion in the land. This theme is most clearly spelled out in 2:16–19. Israel would forsake Yahweh and follow after other gods, and Yahweh would give them into the hand of an oppressor. Israel would cry out for deliverance, Yahweh would send a deliverer, and Israel would be obedient to Yahweh until the death of the deliverer, when the cycle would begin again.

The book of Judges may be outlined as follows:

I. Introduction (1:1—3:6)
  A. Judah's conquests and the land yet unconquered (1:1–36)
  B. Israel's cycles of apostasy (2:1—3:6)
II. Individual Judges (3:7—16:31)
  A. Othniel (3:7–11)
  B. Ehud delivers from Moab (3:12–30).
  C. Shamgar (3:31)
  D. Deborah (and Barak) deliver from the Canaanites (4:1—5:31).
  E. Gideon delivers from Midian (6:1—9:57).
  F. Tola and Jair (10:1–5)
  G. Jephthah delivers from Ammon (10:6—12:7).
  H. Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon (12:8–15)
  I. Samson begins the deliverance from the Philistines (13:1—16:31).
III. Illustrative Incidents (17:1—21:25)
  A. Idol worship and idol theft in Israel (17:1—18:31)
  B. The Levite's concubine and the near destruction of Benjamin (19:1—21:25).

The deliverers were called sophetim, "Judges." The term had a broader connotation than "judge" does today in the English-speaking world. A shophet, or "judge," was a military leader, civil administrator, and decider of cases at law, very likely acting as an appellate court. The Book of Judges records mostly the military exploits of five of the judges; because of this they are often called "major judges." The other judges, who receive only minimal notice, are often called "minor judges." The major judges are Ehud, Deborah (the only woman among the judges), Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson. The minor judges are Othniel, Shamgar, Tola, Jair, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon. Abimelech, the son of Gideon, attempted to establish the dynastic principle in Israel on the strength of his father's accomplishments but was unsuccessful.

It would appear that in no case was a single judge leader over all the tribes of Israel at once. Several of the narratives make a point of noting the absence of one or more tribes from the fighting forces under a judge (5:15–17; 8:1; 12:1). Also, in working out the chronology of Israel's occupation of the land from Joshua to David, a very strong case can be made that some of the judges were contemporaries, one leading one group of tribes while another led another group of tribes.

The last five chapters (17—21) of Judges record two separate incidents unrelated to the tenure of any individual judge. The first is the setting up of an illegitimate priesthood by an individual Ephraimite named Micah, followed by the theft of Micah's priest and his "gods" by a part of the tribe of Dan who were migrating from their territory (on the west of Judah) to the northern part of the Hula Valley in the extreme north of Israel. The second episode is even more reprehensible; it concerns the rape and murder at Gibeah in Benjamin of the concubine of a nameless Levite. The eleven tribes rallied to the Levite's call for justice; Benjamin defended the town of Gibeah, and civil war followed. Benjamin was annihilated, except for six hundred warriors. Facing the destruction of one tribe of the twelve, the eleven tribes devised a dubious way around their oath not to allow any of their daughters to marry into the tribe of Benjamin. The book closes with the author's assessment of the period, which has been illustrated particularly well by these two episodes, "In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes," (Judg. 21:25).

The Book of Judges presents a selective and theologically oriented account of the settlement of Israel in the land of Canaan in the centuries following the initial entry under Joshua. The campaigns under Joshua meant that the Canaanite population could not deny Israel entrance into the land. The pattern of settlement, as outlined in the Book of Judges, is confirmed by archaeological survey and excavation. Archaeology has revealed a pattern of many small, brand-new settlements in large areas of the Central Hill Country of Galilee, Samaria, and Judea. Also, the southern Negev, which has been sparsely or not at all inhabited by the Canaanite population, exhibits the same pattern. Gradually, over the course of several centuries, Israel became stronger; and the Canaanite peoples became absorbed into Israel, until, under David, Israel controlled all the land of Canaan and even beyond.

Some scholars have held that the Book of Judges reflects an Israelite version of the amphictyony, a group of six or twelve tribes organized around a central shrine. A comparison with Greek and Italian amphictyonies of the first millenium B.C. reveals very little similarity beyond the fact that Israel numbered twelve tribes.

The Hebrew text of Judges is among the best preserved of the Old Testament. The Song of Deborah (chapter 5) is recognized universally as one of the very earliest poems of the Bible.

Outline

I. Disobedience Causes Chaos (1:1—3:6).
  A. Partial obedience is disobedience (1:1–36).
  B. Disobedience exposes people to further temptation (2:1–5).
  C. Leaders who neglect God's covenant lead the people into punishment (2:6–15).
  D. Failure to heed God's leaders leads to defeat (2:16–23).
  E. God tests His people to see if they will obey (3:1–6).
II. Repentence Is the Only Hope of Deliverance (3:7—16:31).
  A. God listens to the agonized cries of His people (3:7–31).
  B. God uses women leaders to achieve His purpose for His people (4:1–24).
  C. A delivered people praised God for His gift of victory (5:1–31).
  D. God provided a prophet to correct His people (6:1–10).
  E. God called people even from insignificant families to deliver His people (6:11–24).
  F. God proved more powerful than Baal (6:25–32).
  G. God's Spirit gives power to God-called leaders (6:33–40).
  H. Divine power, not human numbers, provides victory for God's people (7:1–25).
  I. God is King and can rule His people without power groups, institutions, or symbols (8:1–35).
  J. God does not honor self-seeking leaders of His people (9:1–57).
  K. God's deliverance comes only to a confessing, repenting people (10:1–16).
  L. God uses leaders considered unworthy in human eyes (10:17—11:11).
  M. God honors leaders who learn the lessons of history (11:12–40).
  N. God does not honor power-seekers (12:1–15).
  O. God blesses families who honor Him (13:1–25).
  P. God can turn human trickery, treachery, and hatred to accomplish His purposes (14:1—15:20).
  Q. Unfaithful leaders cannot follow selfish lusts and expect God's blessing (16:1–21).
  R. God delivers His people by the prayers and efforts of His leader (16:22–31).
III. Chaos Is the Moral and Social Result of Disobedience (17:1—21:25).
  A. Leaderless people use unscrupulous means even in religion (17:1—18:31).
  B. Sexual crimes can lead to civil war (19:1—20:48).
  C. Worship can become a ruse (21:1–25).

Joseph Coleson

JUDGMENT DAY Time of God's punishment and refining of the evil in the world, especially of the final, history-ending time of eternal judgment. The expression "Day of Judgment" appears several times in the Bible as a frightful day of dread (Heb. 10:27) connected with the wrath of God (Heb. 12:29) and can only be overcome through mature faith in Christ (1 John 4:17–18; compare Rom. 8:33–34; 2 Tim. 4:8). Closely connected with the second coming of Christ (2 Thess. 1:7–10), it is a part of the end-time events connected with the close of human history.

Several biblical terms are closely related to the concept of the judgment day. These refer to the wrath of God, judgment, judging, condemn, punishment, penalty, vengeance, judgment seat, destruction, and ruin.

Old Testament Background The idea of the judgment day reaches back into the Old Testament concepts of divine judgment and the day of the Lord. See Day of the Lord. The wrath of God is poured out in judgment upon the nation of Israel (1 Chron. 27:24; 2 Chron. 24:18; 29:8; Amos 3:2; 5:18; Hos. 13:9–11) as well as her wicked rulers (1 Sam. 15; 2 Kings 23:26–27; 1 Chron. 13:10; 2 Chron. 19:2). Other individuals became the object of God's wrath: Moses (Ex. 4:14, 24; Deut. 1:37); Aaron (Deut. 9:20), Miriam (Num. 12:9), Nadab and Abihu (Lev. 10:1–2). Surrounding nations and their rulers became objects of God's wrath (Pss. 2:5,11; 110:5; Isa. 13:3,5,9,13; Jer. 50:13,15; 51:45; Ezek. 25:14; 30:15).

His wrath is fierce (Ex. 32:12; Ezra 10:14), is kindled like a fire (Ps. 106:40), and waxes hot like molten wax (Ex. 22:24; 32:10). A day of wrath was spoken of as a specific time in which God would act in temporal judgment (Job 21:30; Prov. 11:4; Ezek. 7:12; Zeph. 1:15,18). God's wrath came to be so closely identified with divine action in judgment that its character as an emotion in the being of God receded into the background.

Also significant is the concept of God as Judge rendering judgments. The Hebrew mishpat brings together the ideas of judging and ruling into a single concept focused in the authority of God as Sovereign over the nation of Israel and over creation. Thus He instituted divine law and renders righteous verdicts based upon it as well as enforcing its requirements (Gen. 18:25; Pss. 89:27; 96:10,13; 98:9). Associated with this is the promise of a day when God will exercise His judgments with awesome power in the Day of the Lord (Isa. 24—26). The eschatological interpretation of this day is most evident in Dan. 7:22,27; 12:1–3.

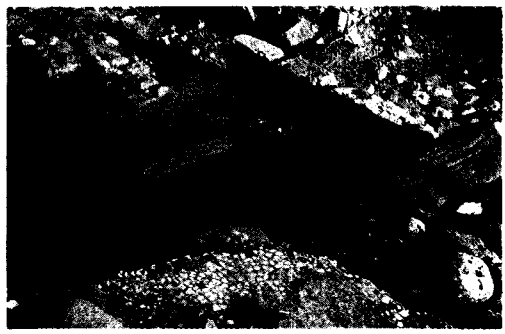
Intertestamental Period This orientation became more prominent in Jewish writings in the interbiblical period (Enoch 47:3; 90:2–27; 4 Ezra 7:33; 12; Baruch 24; Testament of Benjamin 10:6–8; Judith 16:17). Judgment Day follows the resurrection of the dead and determines the eternal destiny of the righteous (either Paradise in Heaven or on a renewed earth, or life in the heavenly Jerusalem or in the heavenly Garden of Eden come down to earth) and of the wicked (Gehenna or some other place of eternal punishment) based on their obedience/disobedience to the law of God. Both Jews and Gentiles are included. Also angels will be judged as well as humans (Jubilees 5:3–16; Enoch 10:6; 16:1; 19:1; 90:20–27). God is usually pictured as the Judge although sometimes the Messiah is charged with this responsibility (Enoch 45:3; 69:27–29).



New Testament Development The New Testament builds on the foundation of the Old Testament and utilizes the language and imagery of the Jewish writings to present the full revelational picture of Judgment Day. As in the Old Testament, divine judgment is both a present and a future reality. Jesus' first coming represents a divine judgment (John 3:19; 9:39; 12:31). Sinful humanity presently stands under divine condemnation (John 3:36) and experiences in part now the wrath of God (Rom. 1:18–32). The people of God are chastised for their waywardness (Heb. 12:4–11; Prov. 3:11–12), but that final divine verdict of judgment is yet to be carried out in a future day (1 John 4:17; John 5:24–29) by the Son of Man Himself (John 12:48; 5:22). Thus human activity in this life basically determines the verdict rendered in this future judgment.

In the great white throne judgment scene (Rev. 20:11–15), the basis of judgment is first from the book of life (vv. 12a,15) and then from the books of works (vv. 12b–14). One's relationship with Christ is that determiner of eternal destiny (John 3:36), but one's faithfulness to Christ is crucial to a genuine relationship with Christ (Jas. 2:14–26; Matt. 7:21–23; 1 John 2:3–6). Very similar in emphasis is the parable of the sheep and goats (Matt. 25:31–56). Pious deeds of devotion done to those in need stands as the distinguishing criterion between the sheep and the goats and settles their eternal destiny (v. 46). Paul's discussion in Romans 2:1–16 underscores that demand for obedient commitment to Christ as well. The concept of retribution for good and bad is also applied to believers (1 Cor. 3:12–15; 2 Cor. 5:10), but the specifics of rewards and punishments are not stated. However, the New Testament is absolutely clear in declaring the certainty of Judgment Day from which no one will escape (Acts 17:30–31). Thus comes the apostolic call to repentance and faith.

See Day of the Lord; Day of Christ; Second Coming; Last Things; Hell; Heaven.

Lorin L. Cranford

JUDGMENT SEAT In Matthew 27:19, the raised platform or bench occupied by Pontius Pilate while he was deliberating the accusations made against Jesus and the sentence he would pronounce in connection with Jesus' case. According to Acts 18:12, Paul the apostle was brought before the judgment seat in Corinth. In these two instances the judgment seat is to be understood in its ordinary literal sense. In Romans 14:10 and 2 Corinthians 5:10, the judgment seat of Christ is a theological concept. Those verses stress that individuals are accountable to the Lord for their lives and must one day face Him in judgment. See Cross, Crucifixion; Jesus; Jerusalem; Judgment Day.

Place in the gate of Iron Age Dan where it is thought a judge sat to hear cases.

JUDGMENT, HALL OF (1) One of Solomon's buildings (1 Kings 7:7). See Hall; (2) KJV expression for the praetorium (John 18:28). See Praetorium.

JUDGMENT, THE LAST See Judgment Day.

JUDGMENTS OF GOD See Judgment Day; Retribution, Divine; Eschatology.

JUDITH (Jū dĭth) Personal name meaning, "Jewess." 1. One of Esau's Hittite wives who caused grief for his parents because they feared the women would lead Esau away from his culture and his God (Gen. 26:33–34). 2. Heroine of Judith in the Apocrypha. A pious widow, she beguiled Holfernes, Nebuchadnezzar's general and delivered her people from him by cutting off his head. See Apocrypha.

JUG A large, deep, earthenware or glass container with a narrow mouth and handle. Neither KJV nor RSV use the term. NIV uses jug in three passages: a water jug (1 Sam. 26:11,12,16; KJV, bottle; NRSV, jar); an oil jug (1 Kings 17:12,14,16; KJV, RSV, cruse; NRSV, jug); and an unspecified container (Jer. 48:12; KJV, bottle; RSV, jar). The NAS uses jug in seven passages. At 1 Samuel 1:24; 10:3; 16:20; 25:18; 2 Samuel 16:1 the translation "skins" is preferable (NIV, NRSV). At Jeremiah 13:12 the RSV translation "jar" is preferred (NIV, skin). The KJV generally rendered the underlying Hebrew terms as bottle. See Pottery in Bible Times; Vessels and Utensils.

JULIA (Jū′ lĭ ȧ) Common Roman name. In Romans 16:15, a Christian woman to whom Paul the apostle extended a greeting. Her name suggests she may have had some association with the imperial household. She may have been sister or wife to Philologus and a slave of the emperor.

JULIUS (Jū′ lĭ ŭs) Common Roman personal name. In Acts 27:1, a centurion of the Augustan cohort assigned the responsibility of escorting Paul to Rome. Though Paul was his prisoner, Julius treated the apostle with kindness. He allowed Paul to go ashore at Sidon to visit with friends. Later, he saved the apostle's life by restraining the soldiers who wanted to kill Paul to keep him from escaping. See Paul; Centurion.

JULIUS CAESAR See Rome, Roman Empire.

JUNIA (Jū′ nĭ ȧ) See Junias.

JUNIAS (Jū′ nĭ ȧs) Roman personal name, possibly a shortened form of Junianus. In Romans 16:7, Paul extended greeting to a certain Junia, whom he referred to as his kinsman, his fellow prisoner, and an apostle. The form of the name is feminine. Nothing is known of this individual beyond what may be inferred from this verse. Some recent commentators see the person as a woman and possibly as the wife of Andronicus. See Andronicus; Apostle.

JUNIPER In 1 Kings 19:4, a tree under which Elijah the prophet rested as he fled the wrath of Jezebel. The same plant is mentioned in Job 30:4 and Psalm 120:4. The Hebrew word thus translated probably refers to a kind of shrub that grows in the Arabian deserts. Modern translations read "broom." See Broom Tree.

JUPITER (Jū′ pĭ tẽr) Latin name of Zeus, king of Greek gods. KJV translates Zeus as Jupiter (Acts 13:12–13). God worked through Paul to heal a crippled man at Lystra. The people responded by claiming the gods had come to earth. They named Barnabas, Zeus or Jupiter. The priest of Jupiter tried to offer sacrifices to them. Paul used the opportunity for evangelistic preaching. KJV also inserts Jupiter in Acts 19:35, referring to the image of Artemis or Diana, the goddess for whose worship Ephesus was famous. The Greek says the image fell from heaven (NRSV, NAS, REB, NIV, TEV). See Greece, Religion and Society of.

The Temple of Jupiter at Baalbek (Helipolis).

JUSHAB-HESED (Jū′ shăb-hē′ sĕd) Personal name meaning, "mercy is brought back." Royal son of Zerubbabel and descendant of David, thus a part of keeping messianic hope alive (1 Chron. 3:20). See Zerubbabel.

JUSTICE The order God seeks to reestablish in His creation where all people receive the benefits of life with Him. As love is for the New Testament, so justice is the central ethical idea of the Old Testament. The frequency of justice is sometimes missed by the reader due to a failure to realize the wide range of the Hebrew word mishpat, particularly in passages that deal with the material and social necessities of life.

J

Nature of justice Justice has two major aspects. First, it is the standard by which penalties are assigned for breaking the obligations of the soci ety. Second, justice is the standard by which the advantages of social life are handed out, including material goods, rights of participation, opportunities, and liberties. It is the standard for both punishment and benefits and thus can be spoken of as a plumb line. "I shall use justice as a plumb-line, and righteousness as a plummet" (Isa. 28.17, REB).

Often people think of justice in the Bible only in the first sense as God's wrath on evil. This aspect of justice indeed is present, such as the judgment mentioned in John 3:19. Often more vivid words like "wrath" are used to describe punitive justice (Rom. 1:18).

Justice in the Bible very frequently also deals with benefits. Cultures differ widely in determining the basis by which the benefits are to be justly distributed. For some it is by birth and nobility. For others the basis is might or ability or merit. Or it might simply be whatever is the law or whatever has been established by contracts. The Bible takes another possibility. Benefits are distributed according to need. Justice then is very close to love and grace. God "executes justice for the orphan and the widow, and . . . loves the strangers, providing them food and clothing" (Deut. 10:18, NRSV; compare Hos. 10:12; Isa. 30:18).

Various needy groups are the recipients of justice. These groups include widows, orphans, resident aliens (also called "sojourners" or "strangers"), wage earners, the poor, and prisoners, slaves, and the sick (Job 29:12–17; Ps. 146:7–9; Mal. 3:5). Each of these groups has specific needs which keep its members from being able to participate in aspects of the life of their community. Even life itself might be threatened. Justice involves meeting those needs. The forces which deprive people of what is basic for community life are condemned as oppression (Mic. 2:2; Eccl. 4:1). To oppress is to use power for one's own advantage in depriving others of their basic rights in the community (see Mark 12:40). To do justice is to correct that abuse and to meet those needs (Isa. 1:17). Injustice is depriving others of their basic needs or failing to correct matters when those rights are not met (Jer. 5:28; Job 29:12–17). Injustice is either a sin of commission or of omission.

The content of justice, the benefits which are to be distributed as basic rights in the community, can be identified by observing what is at stake in the passages in which "justice," "righteousness," and "judgment" occur. The needs which are met include land (Ezek. 45:6–9; compare Mic. 2:2; 4:4) and the means to produce from the land, such as draft animals and millstones (Deut. 22:1–4; 24:6). These productive concerns are basic to securing other essential needs and thus avoiding dependency; thus the millstone is called the "life" of the person (Deut. 24:6). Other needs are those essential for mere physical existence and well being: food (Deut. 10:18; Ps. 146:7), clothing (Deut. 24:13), and shelter (Ps. 68:6; Job 8:6). Job 22:5–9,23; 24:1–12 decries the injustice of depriving people of each one of these needs, which are material and economic. The equal protection of each person in civil and judicial procedures is represented in the demand for due process (Deut. 16:18–20). Freedom from bondage is comparable to not being "in hunger and thirst, in nakedness and lack of everything" (Deut. 28:48 NRSV).

Justice presupposes God's intention for people to be in community. When people had become poor and weak with respect to the rest of the community, they were to be strengthened so that they could continue to be effective members of the community—living with them and beside them (Lev. 25:35–36). Thus biblical justice restores people to community. By justice those who lacked the power and resources to participate in significant aspects of the community were to be strengthened so that they could. This concern in Leviticus 25 is illustrated by the provision of the year of Jubilee, in which at the end of the fifty year period land is restored to those who had lost it through sale or foreclosure of debts (v. 28). Thus they regained economic power and were brought back into the economic community. Similarly, interest on loans was prohibited (v. 36) as a process which pulled people down, endangering their position in the community.

These legal provisions express a further characteristic of justice. Justice delivers; it does not merely relieve the immediate needs of those in dire straits (Ps. 76:9; Isa. 45:8; 58:11; 62:1–2). Helping the needy means setting them back on their feet, giving a home, leading to prosperity, restoration, ending the oppression (Ps. 68:5–10; 10:15–16; compare 107; 113:7–9). Such thorough justice can be socially disruptive. In the Jubilee year as some receive back lands, others lose recently-acquired additional land. The advantage to some is a disadvantage to others. In some cases the two aspects of justice come together. In the act of restoration, those who were victims of justice receive benefits while their exploiters are punished (1 Sam 2:7–10; compare Luke 1:51–53; 6:20–26).

The source of justice As the sovereign Creator of the universe, God is just (Ps. 99:1–4; Gen. 18:25; Deut. 32:4; Jer. 9:24), particularly as the defender of all the oppressed of the earth (Pss. 76:9; 103:6; Jer. 49:11). Justice thus is universal (Ps. 9:7–9) and applies to each covenant or dispensation. Jesus affirmed for His day the centrality of the Old Testament demand for justice (Matt. 23:23). Justice is the work of the New Testament people of God (Jas. 1:27).

God's justice is not a distant external standard. It is the source of all human justice (Prov. 29:26; 2 Chron. 19:6,9). Justice is grace received and grace shared (2 Cor. 9:8–10).

The most prominent human agent of justice is the ruler. The king receives God's justice and is a channel for it (Ps. 72:1; compare Rom. 13:1–2,4). There is not a distinction between a personal, voluntary justice and a legal, public justice. The same caring for the needy groups of the society is demanded of the ruler (Ps. 72:4; Ezek. 34:4; Jer. 22:15–16). Such justice was also required of pagan rulers (Dan. 4:27; Prov. 31:8–9).

Justice is also a central demand on all people who bear the name of God. Its claim is so basic that without it other central demands and provisions of God are not acceptable to God. Justice is required to be present with the sacrificial system (Amos 5:21–24; Mic. 6:6–8; Isa. 1:11–17; Matt. 5:23–24), fasting (Isa. 58:1–10), tithing (Matt. 23:23), obedience to the other commandments (Matt. 19:16–21), or the presence of the Temple of God (Jer. 7:1–7).

Justice in salvation Apart from describing God's condemnation of sin, Paul used the language and meaning of justice to speak of personal salvation. "The righteousness of God" represents God in grace bringing into the community of God through faith in Christ those who had been outside of the people of God (particularly in Romans but compare also Eph. 2:12–13).

See Law; Government; Poverty; Righteousness; Welfare. Stephen Charles Mott

JUSTIFICATION Process by which an individual is brought into an unmerited, right relationship with a person, whether that relationship is established between people or with God.

Old Testament In its simplest form, the cardinal theme of Scripture could be described as God's relationship with His people. Justification is a term which explains how an individual enters into that relationship with God, contrasts the life of participants in that relationship with those outside, and outlines the obligations of that relationship. Justification is the remedy for the chief problem of sin which separates God and sinners.

God called Abraham and promised to make him into a great people (Gen. 12:1–3). Effectually, Abraham was called to counteract the sin of Adam. The only proper response to that call was faith. Although advanced in years, Abraham was promised a child Isaac, through whom innumerable descendants would emerge. Abraham's response to this promise is the crux of the whole idea of justification in the Old as well as in the New Testament. Genesis 15:6 captures this response: "Abram believed the Lord, and he credited it to him as righteousness" (NIV). Righteousness is not something Abraham possessed that prompted a reward from God. Quite to the contrary, a condition was fulfilled on the part of Abraham, and subsequently on the part of God. The Old Testament teaches that to be righteous is to fulfill the conditions of the covenant relationship. Therefore, to act righteously is to act in compliance with the covenant. The Hebrew word translated "credited" (or imputed or reckoned) originally described the important priestly task of endorsing the offerings presented to God (Lev. 7:18; 17:4; Num. 18:27). On the basis of this understanding, God accepted the response of Abraham's faith. This covenant was no mere abstraction. It was a term of relationship encompassed by the concrete, dynamic action of God. Similarly, righteousness is a term of relationship. The covenant establishes the terms of the relationship. A person who fulfills the terms of the covenant relationship is called righteous.

The search for the abstract noun "justification" in the Old Testament is fruitless. However, the verb, "to justify," is found occasionally, often in the passive "to be justified," pointing to some kind of agency involved in the action (see Job 11:2; 13:18; 25:4; Pss. 51:4; 143:2; Isa. 43:9,26; 45:25). All of these references clearly reveal the nature of justification: it is something that God does. The elemental sense in which the Old Testament employs the idea of "justifying" is best expressed in the phrase "proclaiming to be within the covenant relationship."

Ironically, God's chosen people Israel continually displayed a bent toward rebellion which can best be rendered, in covenantal language, as infidelity more than immorality. This is why the Hebrew prophets strongly decried Israel's proclivity to prostitute themselves with foreign gods. Hosea provides the best example of this infidelity because it was personified in his life. Hosea's personal experience in marriage served also as a parable of God's relationship with Israel. The names of his three children, Jezreel (God scatters), Lo-Ruhamah (not pitied), and Lo-Ammi (not my people) show the extent of the rebellion. God's perennial problem with Israel caused Him to act "justly," that is, He had to render a judgment or He would be characterized as a bad judge. This is how Hosea interpreted God's judgment upon sin and unfaithfulness to the covenant. The actions taken by God were not arbitrary; rather, they are to be seen as actions resulting directly from a major disruption in the covenantal bond. Balancing this view, the Hebrew conception of justice also included an important redemptive element. Even in the midst of Israel's rebellion, Hosea vividly portrayed God saying to them, "How can I give you up, Ephraim? How can I hand you over, Israel?" (Hos. 11:8*a* NIV). Justification always requires obedience on the part of God's people, but justification also always requires judgment and restoration on the part of God. Anything less would greatly diminish the meaning of the term "justification."

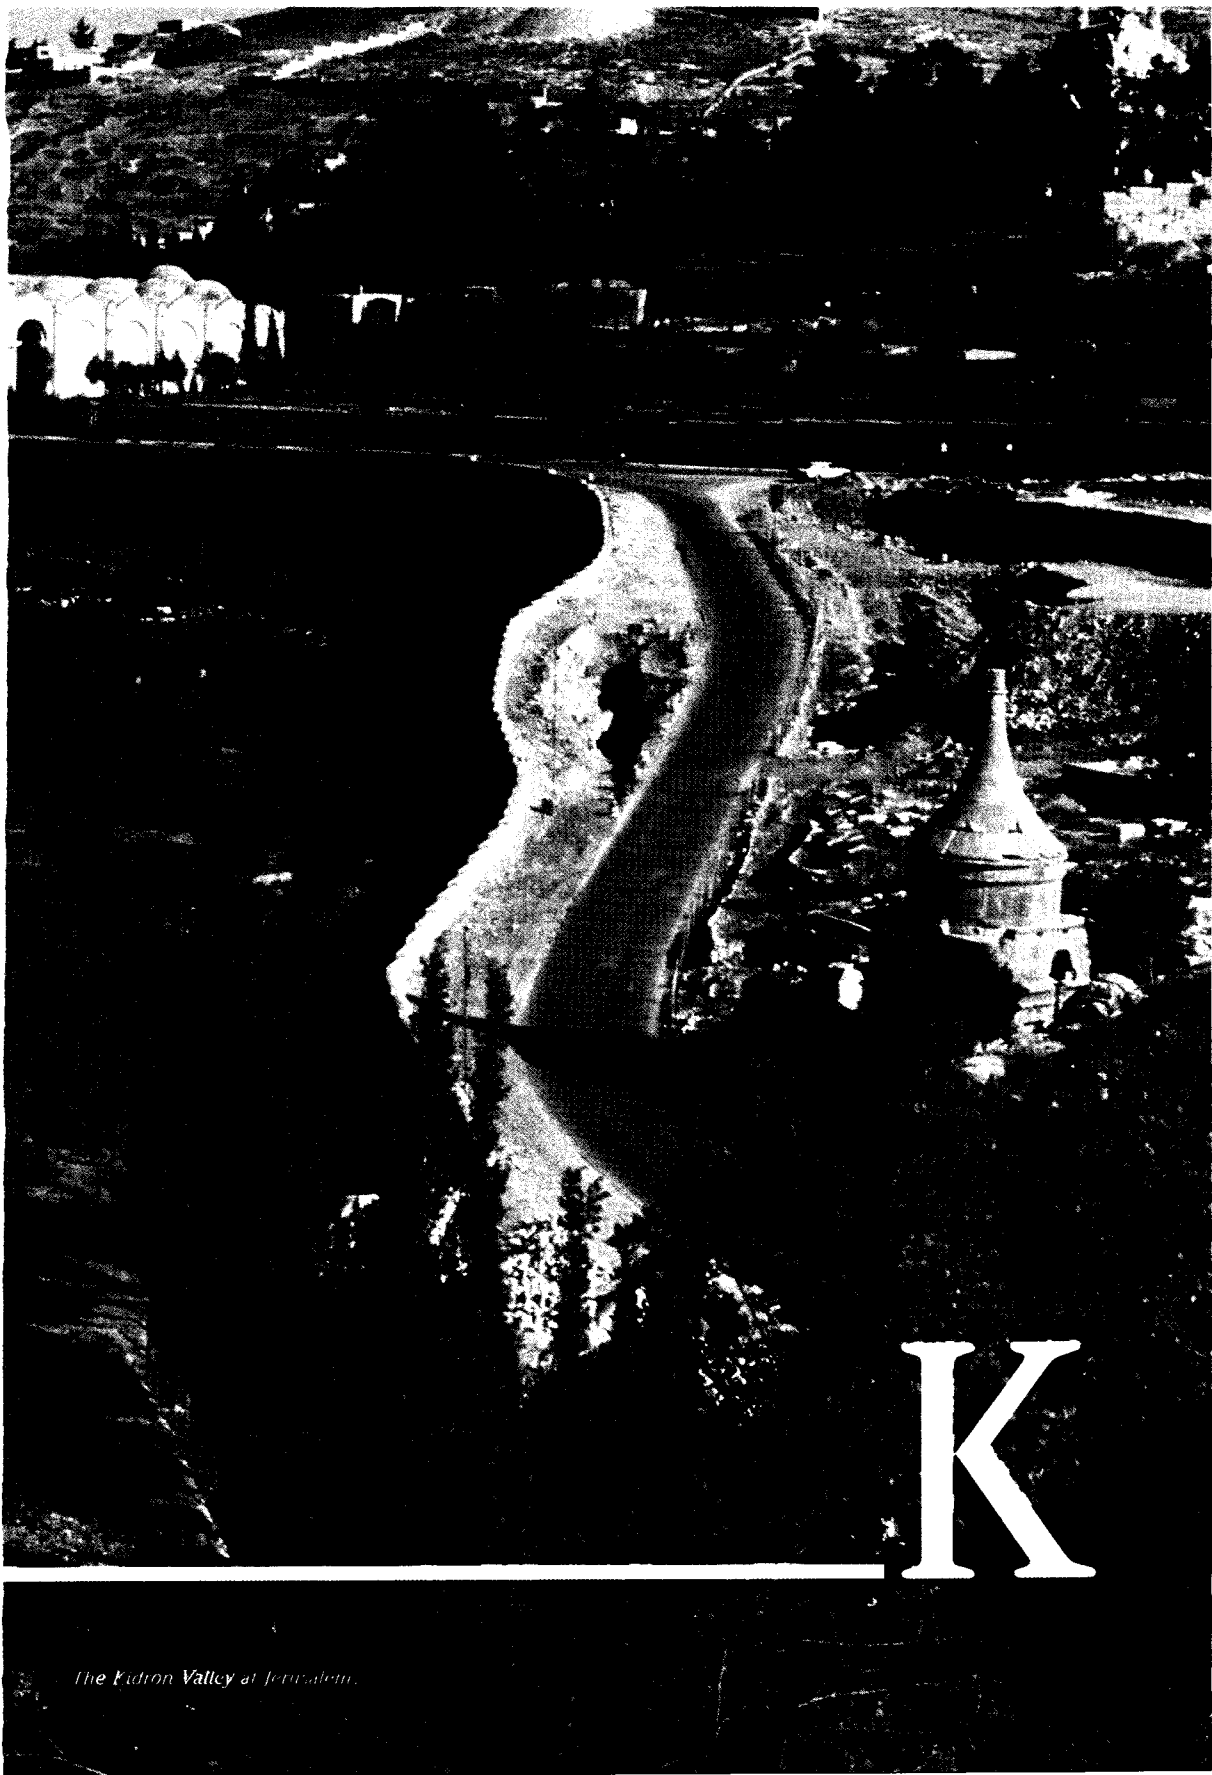
New Testament The New Testament's posture, with respect to the idea of justification, is also dependent on the concrete activity of God. The major difference is that, in the New Testament, God dealt with the sin of humankind by the highest and most intimate form of revelation, His Son Jesus Christ. The earliest Christians believed that they were "made right" with God through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ (Rom. 3:21–26; 4:18–25; 1 Cor. 1:30; 6:11; 1 Tim. 3:16; 1 Pet. 3:18). In his letter to the Romans, Paul conveyed the message that God did not consider sin lightly. Sin created a massive gulf between God and people. This gulf required a bridge to bring all of humanity into a right relationship with God. Theologians call God's bridge building "reconciliation." Reconciliation functions to bring humans "justification." The main character who effected this divine plan was Jesus Christ. Uniquely, His death on the cross made it possible for God and people to be reconciled (Rom. 5:10) and thus for humans to be justified.

Not found in the Old Testament, justification is almost as scarce in the New Testament, occurring only three times (Rom. 4:25; 5:16,18). The necessity of justification, however, is sufficiently expressed by Paul in Romans 5:12–21. Paul advanced this theme of sin and its effects no doubt with the story of Genesis 3 in mind. Paul described sin almost as a personal power controlling people, preventing them from obeying God, and leading them to death. No one is excluded from sin's domain. All people are in the deplorable state of being separated from God due to sin. All people desperately need deliverance. The redemptive activity of Christ provides the only avenue to a right relationship with God.

Justification does not encompass the whole salvation process; it does, however, mark that instantaneous point of entry or transformation which makes one "right with God." Christians are justified in the same way Abraham was, by faith (Rom. 4:16; 5:1). Human works do not achieve or earn acceptance by God. The exercise of faith alone ushers us into a right, unmerited relationship with God (Gal. 2:16; Titus 3:7). Biblically, the spiritual journey begins at the point of justification. This immediate act has far-reaching consequences. It establishes the future. God in the present moment announces the verdict He will pronounce on the day of final judgment. He declares that trusting faith in Jesus Christ puts people in the right with God, bringing eternal life now and forever.



Paul taught that faith in Jesus Christ is an obedient response which results from hearing the Gospel (Rom. 10:17). He drew a connection between the Christian's faith and the faith of Abraham. Abraham's faith in God can be seen as an exemplary foreshadowing which would find ultimate expression in every Christians' relationship to God through Jesus Christ.

Two related questions present themselves for consideration: (1) What is the relationship between faith and Old Testament law?, and (2) What is the relationship between faith and works? Paul found no room in his theology for an elitist righteousness. Special privileges were not administered by God in direct proportion to blood (nationality), brawn (strength), or brains (intellect). No justification within the law would allow anyone (Jew or not) to sidestep faith in Jesus Christ. Paul eliminated all doubt when he argued that being a Jew is neither a prerequisite (Rom. 4:1–25) nor a prerogative (9:1–33) for justification. The only stipulation, accessible to all, is faith.

Some confusion results when a comparison is made between faith and works. Paul is not the only adherent or spokesman for the doctrine of justification by faith. The apostle James, among others, taught this crucial doctrine also. However, premature appraisals of James 2:14–26 have caused some to see a contradiction in comparison with Paul's instruction. Nothing is further from the truth. The two writers merely expressed different concerns. James' idea of faith summarily eliminated all instances of imagined belief which had no observable or corresponding behavior. Paul's concept of faith emphasized a shift of focus from the world to Jesus Christ on the part of the believer. It was a reorientation which resulted in good works (see Rom. 12). By God's grace we are offered salvation, which we accept by faith. This faith results in a radical change of our natures (2 Cor. 5:17) in order that we might do good works. See Paul; James; Reconciliation; Faith; Eternal Life. Paul Jackson

JUSTUS (Jŭs' tŭs) Common Jewish personal name. 1. In Acts 1:23, the surname of Joseph Barsabbas, one of two men put forward to replace Judas Iscariot among the twelve. 2. A pious man, probably a Roman citizen, whose home joined the synagogue in Corinth (Acts 18:7). Paul left the synagogue and moved into the home of Titius Justus (KJV omits Titius following some Greek manuscripts). Some scholars equate him with Titus (following some Greek manuscripts), while more identify him with Gaius of Romans 16:23. Neither identification is more than a scholarly guess based on similarity of name. 3. Surname of a fellow minister with Paul (Col. 4:11).

JUTTAH (Jŭt' tah) Place name meaning, "spread out." Town in hill country of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:55) given to the Levites (Josh. 21:16). It may be located at modern Yatta, six miles southwest of Hebron.

K

The Kidron Valley at Jerusalem.

KAB (Kăb) A measure of volume mentioned only in 2 Kings 6:25. Descriptions in ancient sources indicate a kab would be slightly larger than a quart. See Weights and Measures.

KABZEEL (Kăb' zė ĕl) Place name meaning, "may God gather"; same as Jekabzeel in Nehemiah 11:25. Located in the southeast part of Judah near the border of Edom (Josh. 15:21). The home of Benaiah, an officer under David and Solomon (2 Sam. 23:20; 1 Chron. 11:22). One of the towns reoccupied by the Jews after the return from the Exile (Neh. 11:25).

KADESH (Kā' dĕsh) See Kadesh-Barnea.

KADESH-BARNEA (Kā' dĕsh-bär nē' ȧ) Place name meaning "consecrated." The site where the Hebrews stayed for most of thirty-eight years after leaving Mt. Sinai and before entering the Promised Land. The Old Testament locates it between the Wilderness of Paran and the Wilderness of Zin (Num. 13:3–21,26). Moses sent out the twelve spies into Canaan from Kadesh-Barnea (Num. 13:3–21,26) The Hebrews also attempted their abortive southern penetration into Canaan from there (Num. 13:26; 14:40–45). Kadesh-Barnea is mentioned as a site where Abraham fought the Amalekites (Gen. 14:7) and as the southern border of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:3).

The actual site of Kadesh-Barnea has been much debated, but the two most frequently mentioned sites are Ein-Qedeis and Ein el-Qudeirat. Both of these sites are in the northern part of the Sinai Peninsula, and both have a spring. Most scholars today accept Ein el-Qudeirat because of its abundance of water (the largest springs and oasis in northern Sinai). Ein el-Qudeirat is located on the crossroads of two major roads of antiquity—the road from Edom to Egypt and the road from the Red Sea to the Negev and southern Canaan, later southern Judah. The location on the road from Egypt to Edom would fit well the biblical context of Kadesh-Barnea as the oasis home for the Hebrews during the wilderness wandering period. Likewise, the location of Kadesh-Barnea along the north-south road may explain the rationale for attempting the invasion of Canaan at Arad, since Arad lay north of Kadesh-Barnea on that road.

Excavations of Ein el-Qudeirat have shown major fortresses dating from the period of Solomon to the fall of the monarchy (tenth century B.C. to sixth century B.C.), but no remains from the period of the wilderness wandering have been found to date. This raises the question about the identity of the site of Kadesh-Barnea. The site has not been fully excavated, however, and as yet no better alternative site has come to light. Joel F. Drinkard KADESH-MERIBAH (Kā' dĕsh-Mĕr' ĭ bäh) TEV transliteration of a phrase from the Hebrew text of Ezekiel 47:19. The name is translated in the KJV as "the waters of strife in Kadesh." (See Num.

Iron age fortress in the area of ancient Kadesh-Barnea.

20:2–13; Deut. 32:51; compare Ex. 17:1–7.) RSV has "Meribath-kadesh," and NIV has "Meribah Kadesh" at Deuteronomy 32:51; Ezekiel 47:19. NAS has "Meribah-kadesh" at Deuteronomy 32:51 and "Meribath-kadesh" at Ezekiel 47:19. TEV has "When you were at the waters of Meribah, near the town of Kadesh" at Deuteronomy 32:51. The same town as Kadesh-Barnea. See Kadesh-Barnea.

KADMIEL (Kăd' mĭ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is of old" or "God goes before." 1. Levite who returned from the Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel. A representative of the line of Hodaviah (Ezra 2:40; Neh. 7:43 has Hodevah), also known as the line of Judah (Ezra 3:9). Helped rebuild the Temple. 2. Levite who helped Ezra in the reaffirmation of the covenant after the return from the Exile (Neh. 9:4–5). 3. Levite who signed the covenant after the Exile (Neh. 10:9). The relationship between these persons is unclear. They may all represent the same person or be father and son.

KADMONITE (Kăd' mon īte) Name of a people meaning, "easterners." Tribe God promised (Gen. 15:19) Israel would disposses. They probably inhabited the Syro-Arabian desert between Palestine-Syria and the Euphrates—which is to say, areas to the east of Canaan. Their names often have Arabian associations. They may be related to the "children of the east" mentioned in Judges 6:33. The sons of the concubines of Abraham were sent to live in the "east country" (Kedem) away from Isaac (Gen. 25:6). Job (Job 1:3), the camel-riding Midianite kings (Judg. 8:10–12,21,26) and the wise men whose names have Arabian associations (1 Kings 4:30–31) are all described as sons of the east.

KAIN (Kai n) A tribe and place name meaning, "smith. 1. A clan mentioned in the fourth oracle of Balaam (Num. 24:22; KJV has Kenite). Adam and Eve's son Cain is spelled the same in Hebrew, and many scholars regard Cain as the ancestor of the Kenites. See Kenites. 2. A city southeast of Hebron in southern Judah (Josh. 15:57; KJV and NEB have Cain). Identified with khirbet Yaqin. According to Arabian tradition, Abraham watched the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah from a nearby hill. Kain was a settlement of the Kenites.

KAIWAN (Kai' wän) Babylonian god (Amos 5:26). KJV transliterates the name as Chiun. As is often the case when foreign gods were referred to, the original vowels of the name were probably replaced with the vowels of the Hebrew word for "abomination." See Chiun; Gods, Pagan; Sakkuth.

KALLAI (Kăl' lā ī) Personal name meaning, "swift" or "light." A chief priest who returned from Exile during the time of the high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:20).

KAMON (Kā' mŏn) City of Gilead where Jair, judge of Israel, was buried (Judg. 10:5; KJV has Camon). The precise location is unknown.

KANAH (Kā' nah) Place name meaning, "place of reeds." 1. The name of a brook that forms part of the boundary between Ephraim and Manasseh (Josh. 16:8; 17:9). Some of the cities of Manasseh, however, were south of the brook Kanah (Josh. 16:9). Identified by some with the modern wadi Qanah. 2. A city on the northern border of Asher (Josh. 19:28). Identified with modern Qana, about six miles southeast of Tyre. Not to be confused with Cana of the New Testament.

KAREAH (Kâ rē' ah) Personal name meaning, "bald." Father of Johanan and Jonathan during the time of Jeremiah (Jer. 40:8,13,15–16; 41:11,13–14,16; 42:1,8; 43:2,4–5; spelled Careah in 2 Kings 25:23, KJV).

KARKA (Kär' kâ) Place name meaning, "ground" or "floor." A city on the southern border of Judah (Josh. 15:3; KJV has Karkaa). Precise location unknown.

KARKAA (Kär kā' â) KJV spelling of Karka. See Karka.

KARKOR (Kär' kôr) Place name meaning "soft, level ground." A mountainous village in the eastern region of Gilead during the period of the judges. The exact site has not been located. Gideon and three hundred Israelite men conducted their second surprise attack on the Midianites at Karkor. According to Judges 8:10–11, Zebah and Zalmunna, two Midianite leaders, were encamped at Karkor with fifteen thousand troops when Gideon attacked and routed them.

KARNAIM (Kär nā ĭm) Place name meaning, "horns." A city in northern Transjordan. The same as Ashteroth-karnaim and Ashtaroth. Amos used the name of this city and that of Lo-Debar to make a word play (Amos 6:13). See Ashtaroth; Lo-Debar (for the details of the word play).

KARTAH (Kär' tah) Place name meaning, "city." Levitical city in the territory of Zebulun (Josh. 21:34). Location unknown. See Levitical Cities.

KARTAN (Kär' tăn) Place name meaning, "city." A Levitical city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 21:32). Also called Kiriathaim (1 Chron. 6:76). It was located near the Sea of Galilee. Usually identified with modern khirbet el-Qureiyeh. See Levitical Cities.

KATTAH (Kăt′ tah) NAS spelling of Kattath. See Kattath.

KATTATH (Kăt′ tăth) Place name meaning, "small." A town in the tribal territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:15). Probably the same as Kitron (Judg. 1:30). See Kitron.

KEBAR (Kē′ băr) NIV spelling of Chebar. See Chebar.

KEDAR (Kē′ dăr) Personal name meaning "mighty" or "swarthy" or "black." The second son of Ishmael and a grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:13; 1 Chron. 1:29).

The name occurs later in the Bible presumably as a reference to a tribe that took its name from Kedar. Little concrete information is known about the group, however. Apparently the descendants of Kedar occupied the area south of Palestine and east of Egypt (Gen. 25:18). They may best be described as nomadic, living in tents (Ps. 120:5; Song of Sol. 1:5) and raising sheep and goats (Isa. 60:7; Jer. 49:28–29,32), as well as camels, which they sold as far away as Tyre (Ezek. 27:21).

The Kedarites were led by princes (Ezek. 27:21) and were famous for their warriors, particularly their archers (Isa. 21:17). They evidently were of some importance during the time of Isaiah (Isa. 21:16). See Abraham; Ishmael.

Hugh Tobias

KEDEMAH (Kĕd′ ė mah) Personal and tribal name meaning, "eastward." The last son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:15; 1 Chron. 1:31). Probably head of an Arabian tribe of the same name. Probably considered among the Kadmonites. See Kadmonites.

KEDEMOTH (Kĕd′ ė mŏth) Place name meaning, "ancient places" or "eastern places." One of the Levitical cities in the tribal territory of Reuben assigned to the family of Merari (Josh. 13:18; 21:37; 1 Chron. 6:79). See Levitical Cities. From the wilderness nearby, Moses sent a delegation to Sihon, king of the Amorites, requesting passage through his country (Deut. 2:26). The city is associated with either Kasr ez-Za'feran or khirbet er Remeil. Both of these cities are in the same vicinity and were in existence in Abraham's day.

KEDESH (Kē′ dĕsh) Place name meaning, "sacred place" or "sanctuary." 1. A city in the southern part of Judah (Josh. 15:23). Probably the same as Kadesh-Barnea. See Kadesh-Barnea.

2. A Canaanite town in eastern Galilee defeated by Joshua (Josh. 12:22). The town was allotted to Naphtali (Josh. 19:32,37) and was called Kedesh in Naphtali (Judg. 4:6). It was also called Kedesh in Galilee and given to the Gershonite Levites as one of their cities (Josh. 20:7; 21:32). See Levitical Cities. Kedesh in Naphtali was the home of Barak (Judg. 4:6) and the place where Deborah and Barak gathered their forces for battle (Judg. 4:1–10). Heber the Kenite pitched his tent in the vicinity where Sisera met his death at the hands of Jael, Heber's wife (Judg. 4:21; 5:24–27). Kedesh in Naphtali was captured by Tiglath-pileser III during the reign of Pekah of Israel. The inhabitants were exiled to Assyria (2 Kings 15:29). Usually identified with modern khirbet Qedish, about two miles south of Tiberias.

3. A city in Issachar allotted to the Gershomite Levites (1 Chron. 6:72). The town is also called Kishon (Josh. 21:28 KJV; Kishion in other versions). It has been suggested that "Kedesh in Issachar" may have arisen from a misreading of "Kishon" for "Kedesh." The site is uncertain. Perhaps modern tell Abu Qudeis, about two miles southeast of Megiddo. Phil Logan

KEDESH IN NAPHTALI (Kē′ dĕsh in Năph′ tă lī) See Kedesh 2.

KEDESH-NAPHTALI (Kē′ dĕsh-năph′ tă lī) See Kedesh 2.

KEDORLAOMER (Kĕd ôr lā′ ō mēr) NIV spelling of Chedorlaomer. See Chedorlaomer.

KEHELATHAH (Kē hė lā′ thah) Place name meaning, "assembly." One of the desert camps of the Israelites during the wilderness wandering (Num. 33:22–23). Location unknown.

KEILAH (Kė ī′ lah) Personal and place name perhaps meaning, "fortress." 1. A descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 4:19). 2. A fortified city in the lowland plain (Shephelah) of the territory of Judah identified with modern khirbet Qila, about eight miles northwest of Hebron and eighteen miles southwest of Jerusalem. David rescued the city from a Philistine attack but later withdrew fearing the populace would hand him over to Saul (1 Sam. 23:1–13). The city was rebuilt by the returning exiles (Neh. 3:17–18). One of the traditional sites of the burial place of Habakkuk.

KELAIAH (Kė lâi′ ah) Personal name, perhaps meaning, "Yahweh has dishonored." One of the Levites who divorced his foreign wife during the time of Ezra. Also identified as Kelita (Ezra 10:23). See Kelita.

KELAL (Kē′ lăl) NIV spelling of Chelal. See Chelal.

KELITA (Kė lī′ tă) Personal name probably meaning, "crippled, dwarfed one," but perhaps also meaning, "adopted one." A Levite who assisted in interpreting the Law when it was read to the assembly of the people during the time of Ezra (Neh. 8:7) and who participated in the sealing of the covenant (Neh. 10:10). Kelita is perhaps a nickname for Kelaiah mentioned in Ezra 10:23. There, Kelaiah (that is, the dwarf) gave up his foreign wife in accordance with the instructions of Ezra.

K

KELUB (Kē′ lŭb) NIV spelling of Chelub. See Chelub.

KELUHI (Kĕ lü′ hī) NIV and REB spelling of Chelluh. See Chelluh.

KEMUEL (Kĕ mū′ ĕl) Personal name of uncertain meaning; perhaps meaning, "helper of God" or "assembly of God." 1. The father of Aram, and the son of Abraham's brother Nahor (Gen. 22:21). 2. The son of Shiphtan and representative of Ephraim in the division of Canaan among the tribes of Israel (Num. 34:24). 3. The father of Hashabiah, a Levite during the time of David (1 Chron. 27:17).

KENAANAH (Kĕ nā′ ȧ nah) NIV and REB spelling of Chenaanah. See Chenaanah.

KENAN (Kē′ năn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Grandson of Adam, son of Enosh, and father of Mahalaleel (Gen. 5:9–14; KJV has Cainan; 1 Chron. 1:2). Listed as Cainan among the ancestors of Jesus (Luke 3:37). See Enosh; Cainan.

KENANI (Kĕ nā′ nī) NIV and REB spelling of Chenani. See Chenani.

KENANIAH (Kĕ nȧ nī′ ah) NIV and REB spelling of Chenaniah. See Chenaniah.

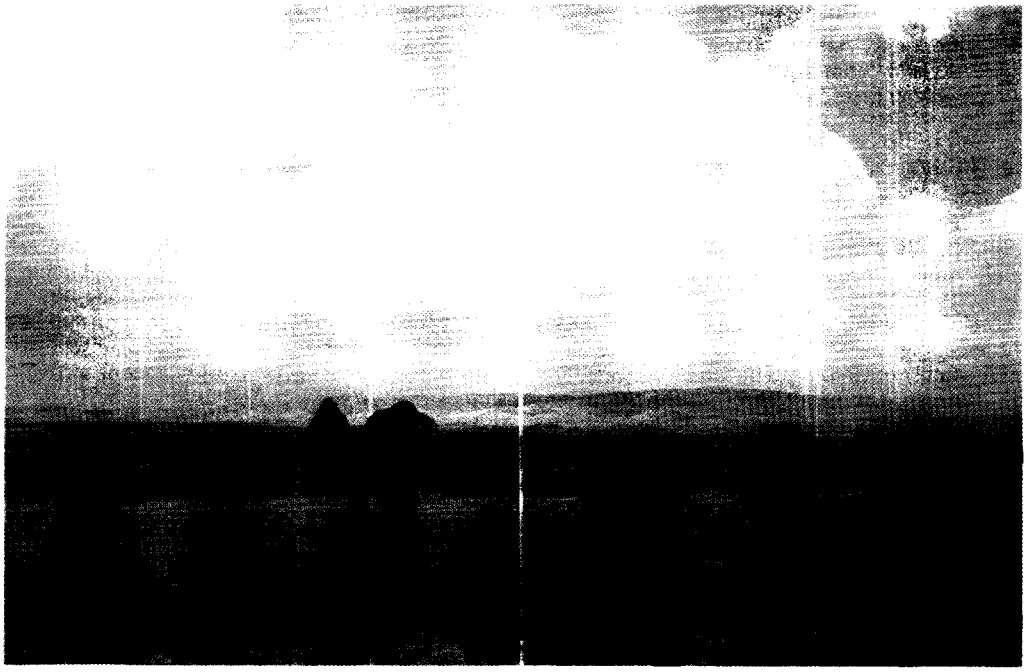
KENATH (Kē′ năth) Place name of uncertain meaning. A city in eastern Gilead taken by Nobah and given his name (Num. 32:42). The city was known as Kenath at a later time when it fell into the hands of Aram and Geshur (1 Chron. 2:23). The city is usually identified with the modern Qanawat in el-Hauran. Kenath was the easternmost city of the Decapolis. See Decapolis.

KENAZ (Kē′ năz) Personal name of unknown meaning. 1. Son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau, he was a clan chieftain of the Edomites (Gen. 35:11,15). 2. The father of Othniel, Israel's first-mentioned judge (Josh. 15:17; Judg. 1:3) and a brother to Caleb; also was the father of Seriah (1 Chron. 4:13). 3. A grandson of Caleb and son of Elah (1 Chron. 4:15). The Kenizzites are thought to be the people of Kenaz. Their land was promised to Abraham's offspring (Gen. 15:19). They were a nomadic people from the southeast who inhabited Hebron, Debir, and parts of the Negev. They are variously associated with Judah, Edom, and the Kenites. See Kenizzites.

KENEZITE (Kē′ nĕz īte) KJV spelling of Kenizzite. See Kenizzite.

KENITES (Kĕn′ ītes) Name of a tribe meaning, "smith." Nomadic tribe, probably of blacksmiths, whose land, along with that of the Kadmonites and Kenizzites God promised to Abraham (Gen. 15:19). Their home was the southeastern hill country of Judah. Balaam pronounced doom and captivity for them (Num. 24:21–22). Moses' father-in-law, Jethro, is called a "priest of Midian" (Ex. 3:1) and is described as a Kenite (Judg. 1:16). This association suggests a close relationship between the Kenites and Midianites. Some scholars have suggested that Moses learned about the worship of Yahweh through Kenite influence, but this theory has not been accepted by all scholars.

The Kenites lived among the Amalekites during the time of Saul. The Kenites "showed kindness" to Israel during the time of the Exodus (1 Sam. 15:6). The Chronicler includes the Kenite, Hemath, the father of the Rechabites, as one of the ancestors of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:55). No mention is made of the Kenites in the late history of Israel suggesting to many scholars that they disappeared or lost their identity shortly after 1000 B.C.



The word "Kenite" is probably related to an Aramaic word that means "smith." Some scholars think the traveling blacksmiths of the Middle Ages resembled the Kenites. This would account for their relations with different peoples. In addition to their nomadic character, the biblical evidence also indicates that the Kenites were never completely absorbed by another people but maintained a separate existence throughout their history.

See Moses; Jethro; Cain; Amalekites; Midianites.

KENIZZITE (Kĕn′ ĭz zīte) Clan name of uncertain meaning. Clan God promised Abraham the Israelites would dispossess (Gen. 15:19). The Kenizzites lived in the Negev, the southern desert region of Judah, before the conquest of the land by Joshua. The tribe of Judah absorbed some of the Kenizzites while Edom absorbed others. The Kenizzites were probably related to the Kenites from whom they would have learned the craft of metalworking (1 Chron. 4:13–14). They probably derived their name from Kenaz—a descendant of Esau (Gen. 36:11,15)—who is listed among the Edomite chieftains (Gen. 36:42). Jephunneh the Kenizzite may have married a woman of the tribe of Judah. Their son was Caleb (Num. 32:12; Josh. 14:6,14; 15:13).

KENOSIS (Kĕ nō′ sĭs) The act of Christ in emptying Himself of the form of God, taking on the form of a servant, and suffering death on a cross.

The biblical passage from which the theory of kenosis is derived is Philippians 2:6–11 (a passage considered by most modern scholars as an ancient hymn to Christ used in the early church). The kenotic theory of the incarnation takes its name from the Greek word, kenoō, used in verse 7 meaning "to make empty" (KJV translates the word "made himself of no reputation").

The Negev was home to the Kenizzites. Shown here is an area of the Negev between Arad and Beersheba.

According to the kenotic theory, when the Son of God was incarnated as Jesus of Nazareth, He "emptied himself" of some of His divine attributes (for example, omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence) and lived for a period on earth within the limitations of human existence. Jesus retained other divine attributes according to the theory (for example, holiness, love, and righteousness). Thus, while God is omnipotent (that is, all-powerful), Jesus' power while in the flesh was limited. While God is omniscient (that is, all-knowing), Jesus' knowledge was limited. Similarly, while God is omnipresent (that is, everywhere present), Jesus was limited with respect to space and distance. This theory is, then, an attempt to understand how Jesus could be both fully human and fully divine. This theory takes all of Jesus' human limitations with full seriousness without questioning the reality of His deity.

Two major criticisms of this theory must be noted. First, as was pointed out earlier, Philippians 2:6–11 is in all likelihood a hymn. As a hymn, it utilizes poetic language, which is highly figurative in nature. For example, when Isaiah (a poetic book) is read, one would not come away believing that mountains and hills have the ability to sing nor that the trees of the fields have the ability to clap their hands (55:12). The ancient and modern reader alike would understand that figurative language was being used and not intended to be taken literally. In like fashion, when Paul said that Christ emptied Himself in Philippians 2:5–11, he may have been saying that Jesus gave Himself sacrifically for the sake of others without intending to say anything about what attributes Christ gave up. One must decide if the language used here is literal or figurative.

Another criticism of the kenotic theory is that Paul's intention in using the hymn to Christ was for ethical rather than doctrinal purposes. That is to say, Paul was more intent on instructing the Philippians in how to live than in what to believe in this particular passage. The Philippians had exhibited selfishness and conceit in their relations with one another. Paul's exhortation to these Christians was to look not only to their own interests, but also to the interests of others (Phil. 2:3–4). The best example of selfless love and humility of which Paul was aware was the example of Jesus Christ. Therefore, Paul said to the Philippians, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2:5). Paul then quoted the hymn, which shows how Jesus gave of himself to the point of enduring death on a cross for the sake of others. Paul wanted the Philippian Christians to have the same attitude toward one another. Thus, if it was Paul's intention to give ethical rather than doctrinal instruction, some would say that to use this passage to speak primarily of doctrinal matters is a misuse of Scripture. See Christology; Incarnation.

James Simeon and Phil Logan

KEPHAR-AMMONI (Kē′ phär-Ăm′ mō nī) NIV and REB spelling of Chephar-Ammoni. See Chephar-Ammoni.

KEPHIRAH (Kė phī′ rah) NIV and REB spelling of Chephirah. See Chephirah.

KERAN (Kē′ ran) NIV spelling of Cheran. See Cheran.

KERCHIEFS KJV translation of the Hebrew word translated as veils in modern translations of Ezekiel 13:18,21. Ezekiel compares the kerchiefs or veils used by women who prophesied "out of their own minds" to nets used to catch birds. According to this comparison, the kerchiefs were like nets used to catch the souls of persons. God declared through Ezekiel that he would free His people from the snares these women set for them.

KERE-KETHIB (Kē rē′ -Kē thîb) Transliteration of Hebrew terms meaning, "read" and "written." The terms represent notations made in the margin of the Hebrew text by early scribes called Massoretes. In such cases the text has the written consonants of the traditional text, but the scribes have placed vowel points in the text indicating how the word should be read. In the margin of the text stands the consonants of the word to be read. An example is the perpetual kere involving God's personal name, where the Hebrew text contains the consonants yhwh with the vowels a, o, a from 'adonai, the Hebrew word for Lord in which i is actually a Hebrew consonant. The textual margin would read 'dni, the consonants of 'adonai. How such readings developed in the history of the text is not known. They may have been early attempts to correct a text known to be wrongly copied. They may have sought to make the text read in worship by the community conform to a standard written text. It may have been an attempt to record known differences between Hebrew texts at the time of the copyist. Some examples may have been theologically motivated, as the change in the divine name warned the reader not to pronounce the sacred name but to replace it with 'adonai or Lord.

KEREN-HAPPUCH (Kĕr′ ĕn-Hăp′ pŭch) Personal name meaning "painted-horn," that is, "cosmetic box." The youngest daughter born to Job after his restoration to prosperity (Job 42:14).

KERETHITES (Kĕr′ ė-thītes) NIV, REB spelling for Cherethites. See Cherethites.

KERIOTH (Kē′ rī-ŏth) Place name meaning, "cities." A fortified city of Moab (Jer. 48:24,41; Amos 2:2, KJV has Kirioth). Kerioth may be identical to Ar, the ancient capital of Moab, since Kerioth was treated as the capital of Moab by Amos (2:2). Judas, the disciple of Jesus, may have been from Kerioth. Many scholars take the designation "Iscariot" to be derived from the Hebrew meaning, "man of Kerioth." See Iscariot.

KERIOTH-HEZRON (Kē′ rī-ŏth-Hĕz′ rŏn) Place name representing one or perhaps two cities. KJV takes the Hebrew to refer to two cities in Joshua 15:25—thus, Kerioth and Hezron. Some scholars still follow this. If this is a reference to two cities, Kerioth would be identified with the Kerioth of Jeremiah 48:24; Amos 2:2 See Kerioth. Hezron would be identified with the city of Hazor mentioned in Joshua 15:23, a city in the south of Judah near Kadesh-barnea (Josh. 15:3). See Hazor. Many scholars, however, take Kerioth-Hezron to refer to a village of Judah in the Negev district of Beersheba and identify it with modern khirbet el-Qaryatein, about four miles south of Maon.

KERITH (Kē′ rĭth) NIV, REB spelling of Cherith. See Cherith.

KEROS (Kē′ rŏs) Personal name meaning, "bent." One of the Temple servants whose descendants returned from the Exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:44; Neh. 7:47).

KERUB (Kē′ rŭb) NIV, REB spelling of Cherub. See Cherub.

KERYGMA (Kė·ryg′ må) Transliteration of the Greek term which means both "the act of preaching" and "the content of the preaching." Preaching in the biblical sense is primarily the act of proclaiming the acts of God. It is more than the ability to speak in beautiful or eloquent words. This kind of preaching will not persuade anyone to become a disciple of Jesus. Preaching in the biblical sense is persuasive because it is done in the Spirit and with power (1 Cor. 2:4). God intervenes in the lives of the hearers through the act of preaching; the kingdom of God comes through the act of preaching (see Matt. 12:41; Luke 11:32). In the act of preaching the hope we have of eternal life is revealed (Titus 1:1–3).

The content of preaching in the New Testament centers on Jesus. According to Paul, some see the preaching of a crucified Savior as foolish; but for those who believe it means eternal life (1 Cor. 1:21). Of course, the preaching about Jesus concerns not only His death on a cross but also His resurrection (1 Cor. 15:12).

In modern times some scholars have attempted to determine the exact content of the preaching of the early church. One of the more prominent attempts analyzed the sermons of the apostles in Acts. According to this reconstruction, the preaching of the early church included the following elements: (1) the prophecies of the coming Messiah have been fulfilled, (2) the prophecies were fulfilled by the Davidic descent, ministry, death, and resurrection of Jesus, (3) Jesus has been exalted to God's right hand as the Head of the new Israel, (4) the Holy Spirit is the sign of Christ's present power and glory, (5) Christ will return, and (6) a call for repentance. See Gospel.

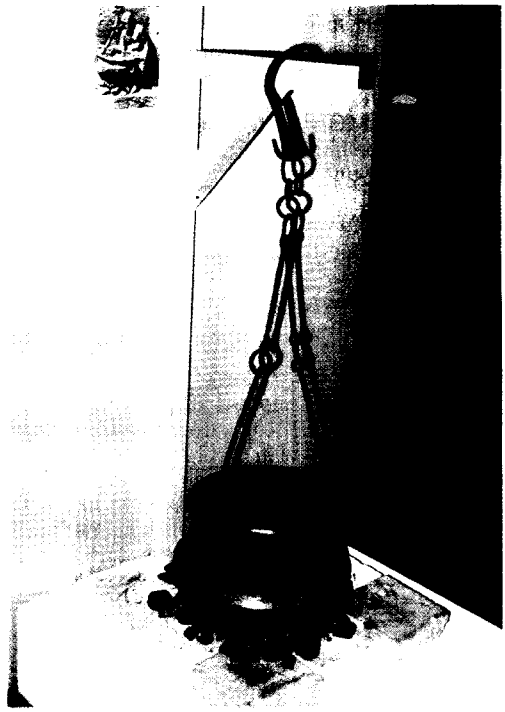
Phil Logan

KESALON (Kĕs' ă·lŏn) NIV, REB spelling of Chesalon. See Chesalon.

KESED (Kē' sĕd) NIV, REB spelling of Chesed. See Chesed; Kindness.

KESIL (Kē' sĭl) NIV, REB spelling of Chesil. See Chesil.

KESITAH (Kĕ sī' tăh) Transliteration of Hebrew meaning, "part, measure, piece of money." Jacob paid 100 kesitahs for land near Shechem (Gen. 33:19; compare Josh. 24:32). The earliest Greek translation translated kesitah as "lamb." (Compare REB). After God restored his fortunes, Job received a kesitah from each of his friends (Job 42:11).



KESULLOTH (Kĕ·sŭl' lŏth) NIV, REB spelling of Chesulloth. See Chesulloth.

KETHIB (Kĕ thîb') See Kere-Kethib.

KETTLE The translation of a Hebrew word for a vessel in which meat was prepared by the worshipers before being offered as a peace offering to God (1 Sam. 2:14). Hophni and Phinehas were not content with the priest's portion (1 Sam. 2:12–17; Lev. 7:14). They also reached into the worshipers' kettle with a fork to add to what was rightfully theirs. See Hophni and Phinehas; Sacrifice and Offering.

KETURAH (Kĕ·tū' rah) Personal name meaning "incense" or "the perfumed one." In Genesis 25:1 Keturah is called Abraham's wife, while 1 Chronicles 1:32 calls her a concubine. She was Abraham's second wife, apparently taken after Sarah's death.

Keturah bore six sons (daughters rarely are listed) to Abraham, the most notable being Midian. The list of Keturah's children substantiates the link between the Hebrews and the tribes which inhabited the areas east and southeast of Palestine. As children of a second wife, they were viewed as inferior to Isaac, Sarah's son.

Kettle, or pot, hanging over coals (from the Roman time period).

KEYS The authority Christ delegated to His disciples to proclaim forgiveness and pronounce judgment.

Old Testament The holder of the keys had the power to admit or deny entrance to the house of God (1 Chron. 9:22–27; Isa. 22:22). In late Judaism, this key imagery was extended to angelic beings and to God as keepers of the keys of heaven and hell.

New Testament In the New Testament, keys are used only figuratively as a symbol of authority, particularly the authority of Christ over the final destiny of persons. The risen Christ holds the key of David and controls access to the New Jerusalem (Rev. 3:7). By overcoming death, He has the keys to the world of the dead (Rev. 1:18).

In Matthew 16:18–19, Jesus delegated the power of the keys to His disciples, combining the imagery of keys with that of binding and loosing. When Peter confessed that Jesus was the Son of God, Jesus proclaimed that the gates of death would have no power over His church. The gates would not be able to resist the keys He was giving to Peter as a representative of the church. [See also Disciple's Study Bible, note on Matt. 16:18–19, pp. 1198–1199.]

With the other apostles, Peter also received the power of binding and loosing (Matt. 16:19; 18:18), a phrase used to describe the work of scribes who sought God's will through a study of Scripture and declared it through teaching and judging. The scribes could also exclude persons from the community (compare Matt. 18:15–17), but Christ denounced them for misusing their key (Luke 11:52) and blocking the entrance to the kingdom (Matt. 23:13). In their place, through the gift of the Spirit, the disciples received the authority to proclaim forgiveness and judgment (John 20:23). See Keys of the Kingdom.

Barbara J. Bruce

KEYS OF THE KINGDOM What Jesus entrusted to Peter in Matthew 16:19, whose interpretation has been the subject of much debate between Catholics and non-Catholics. Any solution must consider: (1) the role of Peter as a leading apostle, (2) Peter's confession of Jesus as the Christ, (3) Jesus' word play regarding the "rock" (petra) upon which He would build His church, (4) the meaning of "binding" and "loosing," and (5) parallel references to both "keys" and the other above-mentioned terms in biblical literature. (Compare Matt. 18:18; John 20:23; Rom. 9:32,33; Eph. 2:19–22; I Pet. 2:4–10; Rev. 1:18; 3:7–13). See Keys.

The phrase "keys of the kingdom" surely relates to the authority given to Peter to "bind" and "loose." This authority was delegated to Simon Peter but should not be understood as an arbitrary or even individual authority of Peter to save or condemn. Peter is a representative of the apostles, a fact observed from his frequent role as leader and spokesman. In Ephesians 2:20 it is not Peter but simply "the apostles and prophets" who are the foundation stone, with Christ Jesus the cornerstone. Moreover, in I Peter 2:4,5 (which possibly reflects Peter's own interpretation of Christ's words to him) Christians themselves are "stones" built upon Christ the "living stone."

Furthermore, the authority given to Peter/the apostles cannot be separated from the heavenly insight and confession that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. It is the revelation given to (and confessed by) Peter that called forth our Lord's blessing. Thus, we cannot overlook the confessional/theological component of Peter's apostolic authority. Peter's authority as an apostle was based upon his divinely given confession. Paul (like Jesus, Matt. 16:23) certainly felt free to criticize Peter when Simon's theology/behavior warranted correction (Gal. 2:6–14). Moreover, the authority to "bind" and "loose," the result of receiving "the keys of the kingdom," is a stewardship, a delegated authority from Christ (compare Matt. 16:19 with John 20:21–23 and Rev. 1:18; 3:7,8).

Finally, the related "key" passages in Scripture suggest that it is the preaching of the gospel that has been entrusted/delegated to the apostles. Though the gospel itself is certainly to be handed on (1 Tim. 6:20; 2 Tim. 2:2; 2 Pet. 1:12–16), Scripture nowhere suggests that the "power of the keys" was either a personal privilege or an ecclesiastical office that could be handed on by Peter or anyone else. Rather, it refers to the stewardship of the gospel (1 Cor. 3:10—4:1) entrusted to those historically unique eyewitnesses who as Christ's apostles could give authoritative testimony to the salvation that is found only in Him, a hope which could be confidently offered and promised ("on earth") as an already present gift ("in heaven") to those who confess Him. See Apostles, Disciples; Binding and Loosing.

Robert B. Sloan

KEZIA (Kē zī′ a) KJV spelling of Keziah. See Keziah.

KEZIAH (Kē·zī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "cassia" or "cinnammon." The second daughter born to Job after his property had been restored (Job 42:14).

KEZIB (Kē′ zīb) NIV, REB spelling of Chezib. See Chezib.

KEZIZ, VALLEY OF (Kē′ zīz) KJV translation of Emek-Keziz. See Emek-Keziz.

KIBROTH-HATTAAVAH (Kĭb′ rŏth-Hăt·tā′ å·vah) Place name meaning, "graves of craving, lust, gluttony." The first stopping place of the Israelites after they left Sinai (Num. 33:16). The Israelites craved meat, which the Lord gave them (Num. 11:31); but because they overindulged, an epidemic broke out, and many Israelites died. The dead were buried there, giving the place its name (Num. 11:34; Deut. 9:22; Ps. 78:30–31).

KIBZAIM (Kĭb′ zā·ĭm) Place name meaning, "double gathering" or "double heap." One of the Levitical cities in the tribal territory of Ephraim also designated as a city of refuge (Josh. 21:22). In a parallel list of cities in Chronicles, the name Jokmeam appears (1 Chron. 6:68). This is not to be confused with Jokmeam (or Jokneam) of 1 Kings 4:12. The reason for the appearance of Jokmean in 1 Chronicles is unexplained. See Levitical Cities; Cities of Refuge; Jokmeam; Jokneam.

KID Translation of one of several Hebrew words referring to a young goat. See Animals; Sacrifice and Offering.

KIDON (Kī′ don) NIV, REB spelling of Chidon. See Chidon.

KIDNAPPING The act of capturing and holding a person using unlawful force and fraud. In modern times, a person is usually kidnapped for the purpose of extorting ransom. In biblical times the usual purpose for kidnapping was to use or sell the person into slavery (see Gen. 37:28; 40:15). NIV, NRSV translate the corresponding Greek term as "slave traders" (1 Tim. 1:10). Kidnapping freeborn Israelites either to treat them as slaves or to sell them into slavery was punishable by death (Ex. 21:16; Deut. 24:7).

KIDNEY One of a pair of vertebrate organs lying in a mass of fatty tissue that excrete the waste products of metabolism. In the Bible, "kidney" is used both literally and figuratively. When the word is used figuratively of humans, KJV usually translates the term as "reins" (for example, Jer. 12:2; Rev. 2:23); NRSV uses "mind" (Rev. 2:23), "heart" (Job 19:27; Pss. 7:9; 16:7, 73:21; Jer. 12:2), "vitals" (Lam. 3:13), "soul" (Prov. 23:16), or "inward parts" (Ps. 139:13; but see Job 16:13).

The kidneys are often associated with the heart as constituting the center of human personality (Pss. 7:9; 26:2; Jer. 11:20; 17:10; 20:12; Rev. 2:23). Because the areas around the kidneys are sensitive, the Hebrews believed the kidneys were the seat of the emotions (see Job 19:27; Ps. 73:21; Prov. 23:16). The kidneys were also used figuratively as the source of the knowledge and understanding of the moral life (Ps. 16:7; Jer. 12:2).

When used literally of animals (except Isa. 34:6) the kidneys are mentioned in relation to sacrifice. The kidney, along with the fat surrounding it, were reserved for God as among the choicest parts of the animal (Ex. 29:13,22). Deuteronomy 32:14 (KJV) speaks of the best wheat as the "fat of kidneys" (see NRSV).

KIDRON VALLEY (Kĭd′ ron) Place name meaning "turbid, dusky, gloomy." The deep ravine beside Jerusalem separating the Temple Mount and the City of David on the west from the Mount of Olives on the east. The Spring of Gihon lies on the western slope. The Garden of Gethsemane would have been above the valley on the eastern side. Cemeteries have been located in this area since the Middle Bronze Age (before 1500 B.C.). David crossed the brook when he fled Jerusalem to escape from Absalom (2 Sam. 15:23). Solomon warned Shimei not to cross it or he would die (1 Kings 2:37). Here certain kings of Judah destroyed idols and other pagan objects removed from the Temple area (1 Kings 15:13; 2 Kings 23:4,6,12; 2 Chron. 29:16; 30:14). After the Last Supper, Jesus went through the Kidron Valley on his way to the Mount of Olives (John 18:1). See City of David; Jerusalem; Mount of Olives; Spring of Gihon; Valley of Hinnom.

Ricky L. Johnson

KILEAB (Kĭl′ ē·ab) NIV spelling of Chileab. See Chileab.

KILION (Kĭl′ ĭ·on) NIV spelling of Chilion. See Chilion.

KILMAD (Kĭl′ măd) NIV spelling of Chilmad. REB takes as common nouns, "all Media." See Chilmad.

KILN An oven, furnace, or heated enclosure used for processing a substance by burning, firing, or drying. The Hebrew word, tannur, is used to refer to both the oven used in the home for baking bread and the large pottery kiln. The "paved work of a sapphire stone" in Exodus 24:10 probably refers to a glazed tile out of a potter's kiln. It is possible that the part of the wall around Jerusalem known as the "Tower of the Ovens" (Neh. 3:11 REB) got its name from a potter's kiln. The term "brickkiln" is used in Nahum 3:14, but this should probably read "brick mold" (NRSV, NAS) or "brick work" (NIV, REB), as the bricks in Palestine were usually sun-dried. See Pottery in Bible Times.

The Kidron Valley in Jerusalem with the Greek Orthodox Church of St. Stephen in the background.

KIMHAM (Kĭm' hăm) NIV, REB spelling of Chimham. See Chimham.

KINAH (Kī' năh) Place name meaning, "lamentation." A city in the southeast of Judah near the boundary of Edom (Josh. 15:22). Perhaps a settlement of the Kenites. Usually identified with modern wadi el-Qeini, south of Hebron.

KINDNESS The steadfast love that maintains relationships through gracious aid in times of need.
Old Testament The principal word used to express kindness in the Old Testament (chesed) bears the connotation of a loyal love which manifests itself not in emotions but in actions. Originally, this loving kindness was considered an integral part of covenant relations. It was reciprocal and expected, a deed performed in return for a previous loyalty. Rahab expected kindness in return for her kindness to the spies (Josh. 2:12,14). Joseph expected kindness from the cupbearer in return for the interpretation of a dream (Gen. 40:14). In this sense, kindness was distinct from mercy or compassion which was more of an emotion and from grace which was not as closely associated with covenant keeping. In time, however, the concepts of kindness, mercy, and grace intermingled.

Kindness was shown in social relationships as the bond between host and guest (Gen. 19:19), ruler and subject (2 Sam. 16:17), or friends (1 Sam. 20:8). It was the faithfulness expected of a good person (Prov. 3:3). Primarily, kindness characterized the covenant relation between God and His people. God's faithful love accompanied the patriarchs and dwelt with those who kept His covenant (Gen. 24:27; Ex. 20:6). The Psalms developed this theme with thanksgiving for divine kindness and praise for its endurance (Pss. 86:5; 89:2,28; 100:5; 103:8,11,17; 106:1; 107:1; etc.; see especially Ps. 136). Slow to anger and abounding in love became a characteristic description of Israel's Lord, distinguishing His kindness from His wrath (Ex. 34:6; Num. 14:18; Neh. 9:17; Pss. 103:8; 145:8; Jonah 4:2; Joel 2:13).

Human response to the convenant with God, however, was bewailed by the prophets as a youthful loyalty that vanished like the morning dew (Jer. 2:2; Hos. 6:4). In this situation God's kindness always has an aspect of freedom (Ex. 33:19) and mingles with mercy and grace. It is an everlasting love which cannot be shaken (Isa. 54:8,10).
New Testament Although both love of humankind (Acts 28:2) and brotherly love (2 Pet. 1:7) are translated as kindness in the New Testament, the Greek word bearing the richest connotation is chrēstotēs. This word has a basic meaning of usefulness and is translated as goodness, gentleness, and kindness. Once again, actions are emphasized, especially God's gracious actions toward sinners (Titus 3:4; Rom. 11:22). The kindness God has shown us through Christ is equivalent to His grace and embodies the fullness of salvation (Eph. 2:7). When kindness is included in lists of human virtues, it can be understood as helpfulness to others prompted by an experience of God's redemptive love (2 Cor. 6:6; Gal. 5:22; Col. 3:12). Barbara J. Bruce KINE KJV plural of cow. See Animals.

KING, CHRIST AS The biblical teaching that Jesus of Nazareth fulfilled the Old Testament promises of a perfect King and reigns over His people and the universe. The Old Testament hope for the future included a vision of a new king like David, called the anointed one, or the Messiah in Hebrew (2 Sam. 7:16). The prophet Isaiah intensified the promises and pointed to the Messiah yet to come (see Pss. 45; 110). Daniel contains a vision of one to whom was given dominion, glory, and kingdom, one whom all peoples, nations, and languages would serve. His dominion is everlasting and shall never pass away. His kingdom shall never be destroyed (Dan. 7:13–14).

When Jesus Christ was born, His birth was announced in these categories. His earthly ministry then amplified these themes (Matt. 4:17; Luke 1:32–33). Similarly, John the Baptist proclaimed the presence of God's kingdom in the coming of Jesus (Matt. 3). The theme of Jesus as King, Ruler, or Lord dominates the New Testament from beginning to end. We find the culmination of this theme with the Lord seated on a throne, His enemies being made subject to Him and a new name given: "On his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS" (Rev. 19:16).

The question arises naturally, in what sense is Christ's kingship really operating in today's world? If He is king, how is it that the world is so little changed and His kingship so little acknowledged? Some would answer that Jesus' kingship is completely future. That fails to handle Christ's own statement that the kingdom of God is "in your midst" (Luke 17:21, NAS), "among you"

(NRSV), or "within you" (KJV, NIV). Christ's kingship is thus both present yet still future, already here and still yet to come, spiritual and universal.

The present kingship of Christ is His royal rule over His people (Col. 1:13,18). It is a spiritual realm established in the hearts and lives of believers. He administers His kingdom by spiritual means—the Word and the Spirit. Whenever believers follow the lordship of Christ, the Savior is exercising His ruling or kingly function. From this we understand that His kingship is more concerned with Jesus' reign than with the realm over which this takes place. When we pray, "your kingdom come" as we do in the Lord's prayer (Matt. 6:10), we have in mind this present rule of Christ the King.

Christ's kingship is also present today in the natural world. Christ is the one through whom all things came into being (John 1:3) and through whom all things are held together (Col. 1:17). He is in control of the natural universe as He demonstrated during His earthly ministry (Mark 4:35–41).

The Bible recognizes Jesus' present kingship and presents the kingship as a spiritual one (John 18:36). The crowd proclaimed Jesus King during His triumphal entry on Palm Sunday (John 12:12–19). We might say the door of heaven opened a bit so that for a brief moment His true kingship appeared to people on earth. He claimed that had the people kept silent on that historic occasion, the stones would have cried out to proclaim Him King.

In addition to Christ's present rule, His kingship will become fully evident in the future. We will see and understand this clearly when Jesus returns (Matt. 19:28). The future kingdom will be essentially the same as the present rule in the sense that men and women will acknowledge Christ's rule in their hearts. It will differ, however, in that His rule will be perfect and visible (1 Cor. 15:24–28). Once manifest, the future kingdom will endure forever. Christ will rule over all things in heaven and on earth. At this time God the Father will exalt Jesus, His Son, to the highest place of authority and honor. At the name of Jesus every knee will bow, in heaven and on earth and under the earth, and every tongue will confess that Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father (Phil. 2:9–11).

Jesus established His kingship through His sacrificial death as each of the gospels shows clearly. Pilate recognized more than he knew when he created the sign, King of the Jews, for the charge against Jesus. Jesus' kingship finds its highest exercise as He gives the blessings He secured for His people through His atoning work (Rom. 8:32; Eph. 1:3–11,20–22). Jesus will continue to reign as the second Person of the Trinity. His God/Man personhood will not cease. Jesus Christ, the King, will reign as the God-man and will forever exercise His power for the benefit of the redeemed and for the glory of His kingdom.

David S. Dockery

KING, KINGSHIP A male monarch of a major territorial unit; especially one whose position is hereditary and who rules for life. Kingship includes the position, office, and dignity of a king. Kings were of three basic kinds in the Ancient Near East: (1) kings of great nations often identified with a god (for example, in Assyria, Babylon, and Egypt); (2) kings from a military elite who had taken control of a local population by force (for example, Canaanite city kings); and (3) kings who arose from tribal or clan-oriented groups whose election to or inheritance of the kingship was determined in part by the people's will (for example, Israel, Edom, Moab, and Ammon).

Transition from Judges to Kings Before the establishment of the monarchy in Israel, no political, administrative, or military organization encompassed all of Israel. From the time of Joshua to the time of Saul, the judges led Israel. Their leadership was temporary and local in nature, their main function being to lead those parts of Israel threatened by some outside force until the threat was gone. Israel during this period was bound together more by their covenant with God than by government.

As Israel became more settled in Canaan, the old tribal institutions of leadership began to dissolve (see, for example, 1 Sam. 8:3). This decline of tribal leadership coupled with the threat of the Philistines to all tribes of Israel threatened the existence of Israel itself. Many in Israel began to feel a need for a permanent and national leadership as a way of dealing with the threat (see 1 Sam. 8:20; 10:1).

The first national leader was Saul. Saul was anointed as the nagid over Israel—as a national military leader—and not king in the technical sense. The Hebrew term for king is melek and is never used of Saul. Saul was a charismatic leader much in the mold of the judges. Israel remained a tribal league. Saul established no central government or bureaucracy, had no court or standing army, and his seat at Gibeah was a fortress and not a palace.

The significant thing about Saul's leadership is that for the first time after settlement in Canaan, Israel had a permanent national military leader. This was a very important step in the transition from the system of judges to the establishment of the monarchy.

David was also a figure much in the likeness of the judges with a charismatic personality. A prophet designated him king just as the judges and Saul had been designated before him.

David's leadership, however, represents the second stage in the transition. Unlike Saul, David was able to fuse the tribes of Israel together into a nation who owed allegiance to the crown, to establish and maintain a court, and to establish a standing army. What had been a loose union of twelve tribes became a complex empire centered around the person of David. Because of his charismatic personality, David was able to effect the union of the northern and southern tribes (something Saul was apparently unable to do). David captured Jerusalem; Jerusalem was literally the city of David. David made Jerusalem the religious and political center of Israel. The Canaanite population of Palestine was subject to the king. The foreign empire of Israel was won and held primarily by David's professional army. The subjugated lands paid tribute to David and not to the individual tribes.

During the latter days of David's reign the feeling was strong that the empire was so much David's doing and centered so much on David's person, that only a son of David could maintain what David had built. When David passed the power of the kingship along to his son, Solomon, the transition from the system of judges to that of monarchy was complete. The usual understanding of king is one whose position is hereditary and who rules for life. These conditions were met for the first time when Solomon inherited the throne from David.

Functions and Powers of the King The king functioned as military leader (1 Sam. 8:20; 15:4–5; 1 Kings 22:29–36; 2 Kings 3:6–12), supreme judge (2 Sam. 12:1–6; 14:4–8; 15:2; 1 Kings 3:16–28) and priest (1 Sam. 13:10; 14:35; 2 Sam. 6:13; 24:25; 1 Kings 3:4; 8:62–63; 9:25; 12:32; 13:1; 2 Kings 16:10–18).

Israel, unlike some nations surrounding it, placed limitations on the power of its kings. Some Israelites opposed having a king because of the excesses to which a king might go (1 Sam. 8:10–18). It was normal for the elders of the nation to make a covenant with the king (2 Sam. 5:3; 2 Kings 11:17) in which the rights and duties of the king were recorded and deposited in the sanctuary—possibly at the time of the anointment ceremony (1 Sam. 10:25). It was clearly understood that the king was not exempt from observing civil laws (see 1 Kings 21:4), nor was the king the absolute lord of life and death, a power David assumed in his murder of Uriah (2 Sam. 11; compare Ahab's murder of Naboth 1 Kings 21:14–18. See also 2 Kings 5:7; 6:26–33). The prophetic denunciation of certain kings demonstrates that they were subject to the law (2 Sam. 12:1–15; 1 Kings 21:17–24; compare Deut. 17:14–20).

The King's Court The officials at the king's court included the body guard (2 Sam. 8:18; 1 Kings 1:38; 2 Kings 11:4), captain of the host or general of the army (1 Sam. 14:50; 2 Sam. 8:16), recorder (2 Sam. 8:16; 1 Kings 4:3), secretary or scribe (2 Sam. 8:17; 2 Kings 18:18), chief administrator over the twelve district officers (1 Kings 4:5; compare vv. 7–19), steward of the palace household (1 Kings 4:6; 18:3; 2 Kings 18:18; Isa. 22:15), overseer of forced labor (2 Sam. 20:24; 1 Kings 4:6; 5:13–17; 11:28; compare modern translations for KJV tribute), friend of the king (2 Sam. 15:37; 1 Kings 4:5; 1 Chron. 27:33), counselor (2 Sam. 15:12), keeper of the wardrobe (2 Kings 22:14), officials in charge of the royal farms (1 Chron. 27:25–31), priests (2 Sam. 8:17; 20:25; 1 Kings 4:4), and prophets (1 Sam. 22:5; 2 Sam. 7:2; 12:25; 24:10–25).

To raise the necessary revenue to support a court of this size, Solomon introduced a system of taxation. Saul's court was simple and did not require extensive financial support (1 Sam. 22:6), while David depended on spoils of war (2 Sam. 8:1–14). Solomon divided the nation into twelve districts each of which would be responsible to support the court for one month out of the year (1 Kings 4:7–19,27–28).

Other revenue for the king's court included royal property (1 Chron. 27:25–31; 2 Chron. 26:10; 32:27–29) and forced labor (2 Sam. 20:24; 1 Kings 4:6; 11:28). Solomon also received revenue from a road toll on trade routes through Israel (1 Kings 10:15), trade in horses and chariots (1 Kings 10:28–29), a merchant fleet (1 Kings 9:26–28) and, according to archaeological evidence, possibly from copper mines.

God as King Israel's faith included the confession that God was its ultimate King. Some modern scholars see the covenant between God and Israel recorded in Joshua 24 as a royal covenant made between King and people (see also Ex. 15:18; 19:6; Num. 23:21; Deut. 33:5; Judg. 8:23; 1 Sam. 8:7; 12:12). Because God was seen as King, some in Israel saw the desire for an earthly king as a turning away from God (1 Sam. 8:7; Hosea 8:4). The earthly king derived his authority from God as the Lord's anointed (1 Sam. 16:6; 2 Sam. 1:14) or the Lord's captain or prince (1 Sam. 9:16; 10:1; 13:14). Many of the Psalms speak of God as King (for example, Pss. 24; 93; 95—98). See Kingdom of God.

Phil Logan

KINGDOM OF GOD God's kingly rule or sovereignty. The Old Testament contains no references to the kingdom of God. However, in the Old Testament God is spoken of as ruling (for example, Pss. 47:2; 103:19; Dan. 4:17,25–37). The Old Testament emphasis on God's sovereign power over all kings and kingdoms sets the stage for the New Testament teaching. Jesus made the kingdom of God central in His preaching. More than a hundred references to the kingdom appear in the gospels, many in Jesus' parables. See Parable.

The kingdom of God was the central image in Jesus' preaching as clearly seen in Mark 1:14–15, a summary of the preaching of Jesus. The kingdom of God is the heart of the summary.

In His parables Jesus spoke of the kingdom in many different ways. He said that the kingdom is like a farmer (Matt. 13:24), a seed (Matt. 13:31), a yeast (Matt. 13:33), a treasure (Matt. 13:44), a pearl merchant (Matt. 13:45), a fishnet (Matt. 13:47), an employer (Matt. 20:1), a king inviting people to a marriage feast (Matt. 22:2), and ten young women (Matt. 25:1). He spoke also of the glad tidings of the kingdom (Luke 8:1) and of the mystery of the kingdom of God (Mark 4:11).

Jesus spoke Aramaic; the gospel writers translated Jesus' sermons and parables into Greek. Mark, Luke, and John translated Jesus' words as "kingdom of God." Matthew sometimes used this phrase too, but often he preferred to translate Jesus' Aramaic words as "kingdom of heaven." The two phrases mean exactly the same thing, because they are translations of the same Aramaic words of Jesus. See Aramaic; Greek.

What did Jesus mean when he spoke of the kingdom of God? He meant, quite simply, the rule of God. The kingdom of God is the reign of God.

This is best understood if it is distinguished from what Jesus did not mean. He was not speaking of a geographical area such as the holy land or the Temple. He was not speaking of a political entity such as the nation of Israel or the Sanhedrin. He was not speaking of a group of people such as His disciples or the church.

Rather, the kingdom of God is God's ruling. It is the sovereign reign of God. This rule is independent of all geographical areas or political entities. It is true that the rule of God implies a people to be ruled, and Jesus called upon people to enter the kingdom. The kingdom itself should be distinguished from the people who enter it.

Jesus taught that the kingdom of God looks unimpressive, but it is going to grow into something tremendous. The kingdom is like a tiny mustard seed which grows into a bush large enough to provide shelter for God's creatures (Mark 4:30–32).

Jesus never said that people are to build the kingdom of God. On the contrary, the establishment of the kingdom is a work of God. God will reign, and people can contribute nothing to that reigning of God.

When will God establish his kingdom? In one sense, the kingdom will not come until some unspecified time in the future (see, for example, Matt. 25:1–46). There is a sense in which modern Christians may still look forward to the coming of the kingdom of God.

On the other hand, Jesus also said that there is a sense in which the kingdom of God had come in His own time. "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand" (Mark 1:15). He said in an even more explicit way: "But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you" (Luke 11:20).

So the kingdom of God was the rule of God which He extended over human lives through the ministry of Jesus; and it also is His rule which will be consummated or made complete in the future. See Eschatology; Future Hope.

Since people cannot build the kingdom of God, what response are they to make to Jesus' message about the kingdom? First, they can make the kingdom their priority and seek it ahead of everything else (Matt. 6:33). It is a pearl of such value that they should sell everything else they have in order to be able to purchase it (Matt. 13:44–46). Second, they can repent and believe the good news of the kingdom (Mark 1:14–15), and so enter the kingdom like little children (Mark 10:14). Third, they can pray for the rule of God to come soon: "Thy kingdom come" (Matt. 6:10; compare 1 Cor. 16:22). Finally, they can be ready when the kingdom does finally come (Matt. 25:1–46).

The Lord's Prayer contains three requests, as follows: "Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:9–10). These three phrases mean just about the same thing, and they tell us a lot about the kingdom of God. "Hallowed be thy name" means: "Let Your name be hallowed, or honored"; or, "bring all people to respect and reverence You." "Thy kingdom come" means; "extend Your rule over human lives." "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" means, "Extend Your rule over human lives here and now so that they will reverence and respect You." See Lord's Prayer.

In His preaching Jesus regularly invited people to enter the kingdom of God, that is, to open their lives to the ruling of God. It is important to notice whom He invited.

He invited everyone. That is the great surprise. He did not restrict the invitation to the respectable people, or the religious, or the wealthy or powerful (in Jesus' day wealth and power were often thought to be signs of God's blessing). Jesus included everyone without distinction. He spoke of God sending His servants out to highways and hedges to urge people to come in to the kingdom. He even said that it is more difficult for the rich to enter the kingdom than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle (Matt. 19:24). He said that the tax-collectors and prostitutes would go into the kingdom before the moral and religious people (Matt. 21:31). In brief, God is very gracious and loving toward all people, and His kingdom is offered to everyone.

After Jesus had returned to heaven, the apostles did not continue to make the kingdom the central theme of their preaching. Instead, they began to speak of eternal life, salvation, forgiveness, and other themes. In doing this, they were not deserting Jesus' concern for the kingdom of God. They were simply expressing the same idea in their way. To speak of salvation is to speak of the kingdom. We might express it as follows: God is graciously giving salvation as a free gift (extending His kingdom) to anyone who will receive it (enter the kingdom) through His Son Jesus Christ, and this salvation begins now (the kingdom is in the midst of you) and will be completed in the future (the kingdom will come like a thief in the night). As Paul put it, the kingdom of God is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit (Rom. 14:17). See Jesus; Christ; Salvation.

Fisher Humphreys

KINGS, 1 AND 2 The eleventh and twelfth books of the Christian Bible interpreting God's direction of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. Originally, 1 and 2 Kings were one book and formed a part of a larger history of Israel (see below). The first record of the division of the original work into two parts is in the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation, where 1 and 2 Kings were known as 3 and 4 Kingdoms (1 and 2 Samuel were known as 1 and 2 Kingdoms; 1 and 2 Samuel were themselves originally a single work). According to tradition, Jeremiah is the author of 1 and 2 Kings. The last recorded incident in 2 Kings is the release of Jehoiachin from prison by Evil-merodach in about 560 B.C. (2 Kings 25:27–30). While Jeremiah could have still been alive at that time and while there are certain similarities between the theology of the writer of the Books of Kings and Jeremiah, there is no way of knowing for sure who the author is. Most modern scholars do not accept Jeremiah as author. The Books of Kings do not indicate who the author was.

Part of a Larger History of Israel A common position held by many modern scholars is that 1 and 2 Kings are part of a longer history of Israel that begins with Joshua and goes through 2 Kings. Modern Bible scholars refer to this as the Deuteronomic history. The reason for this is that the reigns of the kings and many of the events in the history of Israel are evaluated according to norms set out in Deuteronomy. The Deuteronomic history was likely written shortly after the release of Jehoiachin in 560 B.C. in an attempt to explain to the Jews of the Exile why their nation had been overthrown by foreign powers even though they were the people of God. Many earlier sources were available for the final writer.

A Theological Interpretation of Israel's History This history was not written primarily for historical reasons, though the historical information contained in 1 and 2 Kings provides the basic information in reconstructing the history of the period. A reader need not look at 1 and 2 Kings long before one discovers that much of the information that could have been recorded about the events of Israel's history was not. The writer chose to tell us about some events but ignored others. The recorded events are those essential for understanding what happened to Israel (as well as for understanding how we should relate to God today).

For example, when the author of 1 Kings concludes the discussion of Solomon, we find these words: the rest of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wisdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?" (1 Kings 11:41; emphasis added). This clearly shows that the author did not give us an exhaustive history of Solomon detailing everything that went on during his reign. Only that which was important to the author's interpretation of Israel's history was included—the primary thing being the building of the Temple.

Similarly, when the reigns of other kings are described, only those things pertinent to the author's purpose are related. Many things which could have been told are not (see 1 Kings 14:19,29; 15:7,23,31; 16:5,14,20,27; 22:39,45; 2 Kings 1:18; 8:23; 10:34; 12:19; 13:8,12; 14:15,18,28; 15:6,11,15,21,26,31,36; 16:19; 20:20; 21:17,25; 23:28; 24:5).

A study of 1 and 2 Kings—as well as Joshua through 2 Samuel—indicates that the writer's intention was to evaluate Israel's history according to the principles given in the Book of Deuteronomy and in this way explain why the nation divided after the reign of Solomon and why both nations eventually fell victim to foreign invaders. Three concerns are evident in 1 and 2 Kings as the author makes this evaluation.

The Fulfillment of the Word of God The first concern of the author is to show that God's word will be fulfilled. Deuteronomy 28 is especially important here. Deuteronomy 28:1–14 describes the blessings that will belong to Israel if they obey God's commandments. Israel would have victory over its enemies (28:1,7,10) and would prosper in all its undertakings (28:3–6,8,11–12). Israel would be established as a people holy to God (28:9) and would "always be at the top and never at the bottom" when they obeyed the command of the Lord (28:13–14 REB).

This word of God's blessing was fulfilled in Israel's history. Especially noteworthy is their success in the conquest of the land under the leadership of Joshua. They were an obedient people, and God blessed their efforts with victory. They secured for themselves a land by the hand of God (see Josh. 11:23).

Deuteronomy 28:15–68 describes in graphic detail what would happen to Israel should they turn from obeying the commandment of the Lord. They would no longer prosper (28:15–19) and would be afflicted with all kinds of plagues, pestilence, and sickness (28:20–22,58–61). Rain would be withheld from their land (28:23–24). More significantly, they would be defeated by their enemies and suffer all the consequences of defeat (28:25–33,47–57). The most serious of those consequences would be that they would no longer be as numerous as the stars of the heavens (28:62–63; see Gen. 13:14–18; 15:1–6), and they would be lead into exile retracing the route of the Exodus (28:32,36–46,63–68).

God was faithful to fulfill the word of warning as well. When the people of Israel departed from God's commandment, they suffered defeat, reduction of their population, severe suffering, and exile. The Northern Kingdom of Isarel suffered defeat and exile at the hands of the Assyrians in 722 B.C. (2 Kings 17:1–41). Judah suffered a similar fate at the hands of the Babylonians between 597 and 586 B.C. (2 Kings 24:1—25:21).

God's promises came to the people not only in Deuteronomy. God's prophets continually proclaimed them to the people: Elijah (1 Kings 17—19; 21; 2 Kings 1), Elisha (2 Kings 2:1–25; 3:9–20; 4:1—8:15; 9:1–3; 13:14–21), Isaiah (2 Kings 19:1—20:19) and others. The people were without excuse. They had heard God's commandment to be faithful and His warnings of the accompanying blessings and curses.

Insistance on the Worship of the One True God in the Temple of Jerusalem The commandments found in Deuteronomy with which the author of 1 and 2 Kings was especially concerned were the commands that only God be worshiped and that God be worshiped in Jerusalem alone (Deut. 12—13). The reigns of the kings of Judah and Israel were evaluated on the basis of their adherence to these two commands.

Of the kings of Judah, only Hezekiah (2 Kings 18:3–7) and Josiah (2 Kings 22:2) were praised without reservation because they adhered to these two principles. Asa (1 Kings 15:11–14), Jehoshaphat (1 Kings 22:41–43), Jehoash (2 Kings 12:2–3), Azariah (2 Kings 15:3–4), and Jotham (2 Kings 15:34–35) were praised as having done what was right in the eyes of the Lord, but their praise is qualified with the addition that they allowed the worship of foreign gods to continue in Judah. All other kings of Judah are condemned as having done what was evil in the sight of the Lord.

Even Solomon was criticized. Although Solomon built the Temple where God was worshiped, he departed from the command of the Lord and worshiped foreign gods. This sin lead to the empire built by David being split in two at the death of Solomon (1 Kings 11:1—12:25; see 1 Kings 3:2–3).

The most notorious king of Judah was Manasseh (2 Kings 21:1–18). Manasseh negated the reforms of his father, Hezekiah, and actively promoted the worship of foreign gods. Manasseh even built altars to other gods within the Temple at Jerusalem where only God was to be worshiped. He sacrificed his own son, practiced soothsaying and augury, and dealt with mediums and wizards. Because of the sins of Manasseh and because he caused Israel to sin, the prophet delivered this word of God concerning Manasseh: "Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah that whosoever heareth of it, both of his ears will tingle" (2 Kings 21:12). The prophet went on to speak of the defeat and exile that would eventually come because of the sin of Manasseh (2 Kings 21:13–15; see 2 Kings 23:26–27; 24:1–7; compare 2 Kings 17:19–20).

All the kings of Israel are comdemned as having done what was evil in the sight of the Lord. Most of the responsibility for the sins of Israel is placed on Jeroboam, the first king of Israel (2 Kings 17:21–23; see 1 Kings 15:30).

One of Jeroboam's faults lay in instituting the worship in a place other than Jerusalem. After the two kingdoms split, Jeroboam could not maintain the integrity of his own kingdom and allow the people of the Northern Kingdom to worship at the Temple of Jerusalem, the capital of the Southern Kingdom. As a solution to his problem, Jeroboam established places of worship at Dan and Bethel (1 Kings 12:26–29).

To complicate matters, Jeroboam made two golden calves for the people to worship (1 Kings 12:28). Thus, Jeroboam violated two of the most important principles of Deuteronomy: the worship of God only and only in the Temple of Jerusalem (Deut. 12—13). To emphasize the fact that Jeroboam was responsible for Israel's sin and ultimate downfall, many of the subsequent kings of Israel are condemned because they did not depart from the sins of Jeroboam (1 Kings 15:34; 16:2,19,26,31; 22:52; 2 Kings 3:3; 10:29,31; 13:2,6,11; 14:24; 15:9,18,24).

Hope for the Future The very fact that the Books of Kings were written indicates that the writer saw that Israel, even though suffering in the Exile, could learn from their past and begin to live in a way more pleasing to God. He could see in Israel's distress evidence of God's continual desire that Israel turn from their sins and return to God as God's people. God had shown grace and mercy when they disobeyed in the wilderness and during the lapses of the time of the judges. God would certainly show them grace and mercy now. The blessings of Deuteronomy 28:1–14 could still be theirs.

This hope is illustrated in 2 Kings 25:27–30 with the release of Jehoiachin from prison. Perhaps the writer was encouraging the exiles with the possibility that God would bless them again and raise Israel above all peoples (Deut. 28:1) just as Jehoiachin was given preference above other prisoners in captivity (2 Kings 25:28).

Outline

1 Kings

I. God Works Out His Purposes Even Through Human Revenge and Treachery (1:1—2:46).

II. God Works Through the Wisdom He Gives His Humble Leader (3:1—7:51).

A. God honors His humble leader's request and equips him with divine wisdom (3:1–28).

B. God's leader administers his people wisely (4:1–34).
C. God's leader wisely follows divine directives to build a house of worship (5:1—7:51).
III. God Responds to the Worship and Sin of His People (8:1—11:43).
A. God fulfills His promise to His people and their leaders (8:1–21).
B. The incomparable God of heaven hears the prayers of His repentant people anywhere (8:22–53).
C. The faithful God leads His people to faithfulness and calls the nations to recognize His uniqueness (8:54–61).
D. God's people worship joyfully in His house (8:62–66).
E. God's favor is related to His people's obedience (9:1–9).
F. God blesses the efforts of His faithful leader (9:10—10:29).
G. A leader's unfaithfulness brings divine discipline on His people (11:1–43).
IV. Disobedience Brings Results (12:1—16:34).
A. A leader who refuses to be a servant loses his subjects (12:1–24).
B. False worship leads to doom for God's people and their leader (12:25—13:10).
C. God's prophets must obey God's voice (13:11–25).
D. Disobedience leads a nation to eternal ruin (13:26—14:20).
E. God is faithful to His promises even when a people disobey (14:21—15:8).
F. In the midst of disobedience God honors a faithful leader (15:9–24).
G. God fulfills His threats against evil leaders (15:25—16:34).
V. God Works in History Through His Prophetic Messengers (17:1—22:53).
A. God blesses and brings recognition to His faithful prophet (17:1–24).
B. Yahweh proves His claim to be the only God of Israel through His prophet (18:1–46).
C. God revives His depressed prophet and provides for His purposes to be worked out (19:1–21).
D. God uses a prophet to prove His lordship over history (20:1–30*a*).
E. God sends prophets to condemn His disobedient leaders (20:30*b*–43).
F. God uses His prophets to bring guilty leaders to repentance (21:1–29).
G. God speaks through His chosen prophet, not through those depending on human appointment and provisions (22:1–40).
H. God blesses the faithful but is angry at the disobedient (22:41–53).

2 Kings

1. Through His Prophets God Guides History and Reveals His Will (1:1—8:29).
A. God alone controls the fortunes of His people (1:1–18).
B. God provides spiritual leadership for His people (2:1–25).
C. The prophetic word from God controls history (3:1–27).
D. God's minister helps God's faithful people in their time of need (4:1–44).
E. God's mercy reaches across international lines (5:1–19*a*).
F. Greedy ministers cannot deceive God (5:19*b*–27).
G. God defeats the enemies of His people (6:1—7:20).
H. God does not forget His faithful people (8:1–6).
I. God controls the destiny of all nations (8:7–29).
II. God's Mercy Has Limits (9:1—17:41).
A. God keeps His threats against false worship but honors those who carry out His will (9:1—10:36).
B. God protects His chosen leader (11:1–21).
C. God's people support His house of worship (12:1–16).
D. God's offerings are not to be used for political purposes (12:17–21).
E. God's mercy and faithfulness protect even His disobedient people (13:1—14:29).
F. God works to punish a people who remain disobedient (15:1—16:20).
G. God brings an end to the nation that refuses to follow the prophetic word (17:1–41).
III. God Honors Righteous Rulers but Punishes a Sinful People (18:1—25:30).
A. God rewards those who trust in Him but punishes those who mock Him (18:1—19:37; compare to Isa. 36:1—37:38).
B. God hears the prayers of His faithful servant (20:1–11; compare to Isa. 38:1–22).
C. God knows the future of His people (20:12–21; compare to Isa. 39:1–8).
D. Rebellion against God brings divine rejection (21:1–26).
E. A righteous ruler can delay divine judgment (22:1–20).
F. A righteous ruler cannot avert judgment forever (23:1–30).
G. Deserved punishment comes to God's disobedient people (23:31—25:26).
H. God preserves hope for His people (25:27–30). Phil Logan

KING'S DALE See Shaveh, Valley of.

KING'S GARDEN A portion of Jerusalem containing the Pool of Shelah which was rebuilt by Shallum, ruler of the district of Mizpah (Neh. 3:15). See Siloam, Pool of.

KING'S HIGHWAY Major transportation route

K

east of the Jordan River. Literally "the way of the king," this highway has been in continuous use for over 3,000 years. It runs from Damascus to the Gulf of Aqabah and is the main caravan route for the Transjordan. It is mentioned in Numbers 20:17 and 21:22 as the route Moses and the Israelites would take through Edom and the land of Sihon. The Romans upgraded it during the reign of Trajan and renamed it Trajan's Road. The Arabic name is Tariq es-Sultani, which also means the way of the sultan or king.

KING'S POOL Probably the same as the Pool of Shelah, a reservoir in the king's garden in Jerusalem (Neh. 2:14). See King's Garden; Siloam, Pool of.

KING'S TREASURE HOUSE See House of the Rolls.

KING'S VALE See Shaveh, Valley of.

KING'S VALLEY See Shaveh, Valley of.

KINNERETH (Kĭn' nĕ·rĕth) NIV, REB spelling of Chinnereth. See Chinnereth.

KINSMAN Usually refers to a blood relative based on Israel's tribal nature. The most important relationship was that of the father to the oldest son.

Certain obligations were laid on the kinsman. In the case of an untimely death of a husband without a son, the law of levirate marriage becomes operative—that is, the husband's brother was obligated to raise up a male descendant for his deceased brother and thus perpetuate the deceased's name and inheritance. The living brother was the dead brother's goel—his redeemer (Gen. 38:8; Deut. 25:5–10; Ruth 3:9–12). See Levirate Law.

The kinsman was also the blood avenger. A wrong done to a single memeber of the family was considered a crime against the entire tribe or clan. The clan had an obligation, therefore, to punish the wrongdoer. In the case of a murder committed, the kinsman should seek vengeance. According to the imagery of ancient people, the blood of the murdered man cried up from the ground for vengeance and the cry was heard loudest by that member of the clan who stood nearest to the dead in kinship; therefore, the closest of kin followed through with the blood avenger responsibility (compare Gen. 4:1–16, especially v.10). See Vengeance.

The kinsman was also responsible to redeem the estate which his nearest relative might have sold because of poverty (Lev. 25:25; Ruth 4:4). It was the kinsman's responsibility also to ransom a kinsman who may have sold himself (Lev. 25:47–48).

The Old Testament book of Ruth is the most striking example of a kinsman who used his power and Jewish law to redeem. Boaz demonstrated one of the duties of the kinsman—that of marrying the widow of a deceased kinsman. A correlation is sometimes made between the redemption of Ruth by Boaz and the redemption of sinners by Christ. See Avenger; Cities of Refuge; Redeem, Redemption, Redeemer. Gary Bonner

KIOS (Kī' ŏs) NIV spelling of Chios. See Chios.

KIR (Kĭr) Place name meaning "wall." 1. A Moabite city mentioned in connection with Ar in Isaiah's prophesy against Moab (15:1). Many believe that Kir is the same as Kir-Hareseth, an ancient capital of Moab along with Ar. Located at Kerak about seventeen miles south of the Arnon and eleven miles east of the Dead Sea. See Kir Hareseth.

2. Kir is the Hebrew translation of the city name, Der (a word from Akkadian which also means "wall"). Kir was a Mesopotamian city east of the lower Tigris River (which is now identified with the modern Badrah) on the main road from Elam (Persia) to Babylon. During the Neo-Babylonian period (605–539 B.C.; see Babylon), Kir was the capital of the province of Gutium. The governor of this province joined Cyrus the Persian in the overthrow of the Babylonian empire in 539 B.C.

According to the Bible, Kir was the city from which Arameans migrated to Syria (Isa. 22:6). Their migration—like the migration of the Philistines from Caphtor—is spoken of in terms similar to that of the exodus of Israel from Egypt (Amos 9:7; see 1:5). When Tiglath-pileser III conquered the area during the reign of Ahaz (2 Kings 16:9), the descendants of the original immigrants to Syria were sent back to Kir (compare the aversion of the ancient Hebrews to being sent back to Egypt in Deut. 17:16; 28:68). Phil Logan

KIR-HARESETH (Kîr-Hâr' ĕ·sĕth) Place name meaning, "city of pottery." Known by various names in various texts and various versions of the Old Testament: Kir-Hareseth (2 Kings 3:25; Isa. 16:7), Kir-Haraseth (2 Kings 3:25 KJV), Kir-Heres ("new city"; Isa. 16:11; Jer. 48:31,36), and Kirharesh (Isa. 16:11 KJV). Perhaps also the same as Kir of Moab in Isaiah 15:1. See Kir 1.

During the reign of Jehoram of Israel, Mesha, king of Moab, rebelled against Israel (2 Kings 3:4–27). The kings of Judah (Jehoshaphat) and Edom joined Israel in the resulting war. The forces allied against Mesha crushed the rebellion, but they were unsuccessful in capturing Mesha. He took refuge in Kir-Hareseth—a well fortified and impregnable city. After Mesha tried unsuccessfully to break through the besiegers, he offered his son as a sacrifice upon the city walls. As a result, "there came a great wrath upon Israel"

(2 Kings 3:27 NRSV); and the allied forces withdrew, leaving Mesha alive in Kir-Hareseth (2 Kings 3:4–27). Apparently, the forces of Israel and Judah feared the power of the Moabite god, Chemosh, and gave up the victory that lay within their grasp. Jehoram and Jehoshaphat did not have faith that Yahweh would give them victory over the people of Chemosh.

The prophets would later correct this view. Isaiah (15:1; 16:7,11) and Jeremiah (48:31,36) prophesied that Kir-Hareseth was no match for the power of God. All human kingdoms are ultimately subject to God. Kir-Hareseth was destroyed by the Babylonians whom the prophets described as God's instrument of punishment (see Jer. 4:5–31; 6:1–8, 22–26; 25:1–14).

Kir-Hareseth is identified with modern khirbet Karnak, about 50 miles southeast of Jerusalem and 11 miles east of the Dead Sea. Phil Logan

KIR-HARESH (Kĭr-Hā′ resh) The KJV spelling of Kir-Hareseth in Isaiah 16:11. See Kir-Hareseth.

KIR-HERES (Kĭr-Hē′ rēs) Believed to be an alternate spelling of Kir-Hareseth found in Isaiah 16:11; Jeremiah 48:31,36. The Greek translation of the name in Isaiah 16:11 suggests that the translators of the Septuagint had a Hebrew text that read Kir-Hadesheth, a name meaning "New City," which was mistaken for Kir-Hareseth or Kir-Heres. In the context, Kir-Hares (for Kir-Hareseth) is likely the best reading (see Isaiah 16:7). The confusion between Kir-Hadesheth and Kir-Hareseth may be due to the similarity of the Hebrew "r" and "d". The name Kir-Hares may be explained by the loss of the final Hebrew letter "th" from Kir-Hareseth. See Kir-Hareseth.

KIR OF MOAB See Kir 1.

KIRIATH (Kĭr′ ĭ ath) Place name meaning, "city" in tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:28 NAS, NIV; KJV has Kirjath, an alternate spelling). The same as Kiriath-Jearim (see Josh. 18:28 NRSV, REB, TEV). See Kiriath-Jearim.

KIRIATHAIM (Kĭr ĭ ā thā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "double city" or "two cities." 1. A levitical city and city of refuge in the tribal territory of Naphtali (1 Chron. 6:76, KJV has Kirjathaim). In the parallel list in Joshua 21:32, Kartan stands in the place of Kiriathaim and is probably another name for the same city. See Levitical Cities; Cities of Refuge; Kartan. 2. A city taken from the Emim by Chedorlaomer (Gen. 14:5, Shaveh-Kiriathaim means, "the plain of Kiriathaim"). Later the Israelites took it from the Amorites and assigned it to the tribe of Reuben (Num. 32:37: Josh. 13:19). The Moabites controlled the city during the Exile (Jer. 48:1,23; Ezek. 25:9). Perhaps to be identified with el-Qereiyat, about five miles northwest of Dibon; however, no remains from before about 100 B.C. have been found on this site.

KIRIATH-ARBA (Kĭr′ ĭ ăth-Är′ bà) Place name meaning, "city of Arba" or "city of four." The ancient name for the city of Hebron (Josh. 15:54). It was the chief city in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:54) and was both a levitical city (Josh. 21:11) and a city of refuge (Josh. 20:7). Caleb captured the city for Israel (Josh. 15:13–14). Bible students dispute the origin of the name. According to some, Kiriath-Arba was originally named after Arba the Anakite hero (Josh. 14:15; see 15:13). Others point to the nearby cave of Machpelah where, according to Jewish tradition, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were buried—thus, "city of four." See Levitical Cities; Cities of Refuge; Hebron.

KIRIATH-ARIM (Kĭr ĭ ăth-Ā′ rĭm) An alternate spelling of Kiriath-Jearim in Ezra 2:25. See Kiriath-Jearim.

KIRIATH-BAAL (Kĭr′ ĭ ăth-Bā′ ăl) Place name meaning, "city of Baal." Another name for Kiriath-Jearim in Joshua 15:60; 18:14. See Kiriath-Jearim.

KIRIATH-HUZOTH (Kĭr′ ĭ ăth-Hū′ zŏth) Place name meaning, "city of streets." A city of Moab to which Balak took Balaam to offer a sacrifice (Num. 22:39). Some suggest a location near the Arnon River (see Num. 22:36) not far from Bamoth-Baal (see Num. 22:41 NIV). The precise location is unknown.

KIRIATH-JEARIM (Kĭr′ ĭ ăth-jē′ ă-rĭm) Place name meaning, "city of forests." Kiriath-jearim was located at modern Abu Gosh nine miles north of Jerusalem. It was on the border where Dan, Benjamin, and Judah joined before Dan began their migration northward (Josh. 15:9,60; 18:14–15). Dan's army camped there in their search for new territory (Judg. 18:12). After the Philistines returned the ark of the covenant, it was kept at Kiriath-jearim for a time (1 Sam. 6:21–7:2). David attempted to move the ark to Jerusalem from there, but because he did so improperly, God struck down Uzzah (2 Sam. 6:1–8). Among Kiriath-jearim's sons was Uriah, a faithful prophet and contemporary of Jeremiah. He was executed for prophesying against the king (Jer. 26:20–24).

The Romans built a fort over the ancient ruins to guard the main route from Jerusalem to the Mediterranean Sea. A garrison from the Tenth Legion was stationed there.

Kiriath-jearim is identified with Deir al-Azhar near the modern village of Qaryet el-Inab or Abu Gosh.

KIRIATH-SANNAH (Kĭr′ ĭ-ăth-Săn′ nah) Place name perhaps meaning, "city of bronze." Another name for the city of Debir, also known as Kiriath-Sepher ("city of a book") (Josh. 15:15–16,49). See Debir 2.

KIRIATH-SEPHER (Kĭr′ ĭ·ăth-Sē′ phĕr) Place name meaning, "city of book." Used in Joshua 15:15–16 as another name for Debir. Kiriath-Sannah is the same city (Josh. 15:49). See Debir 2.

KIRIOTH (Kĭr′ ĭ·ŏth) KJV spelling of Kerioth in Amos 2:2. See Kerioth.

KIRJATH (Kĭr′ jăth) KJV spelling of Kiriath, another name for Kiriath-Jearim. See Kiriath-Jearim.

KIRJATHAIM (Kĭr·jà·thă′ ĭm) KJV spelling of Kiriathaim. See Kiriathaim.

KIRJATH-ARBA (Kĭr′ jăth-Är′ bà) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Arba. See Kiriath-Arba.

KIRJATH-ARIM (Kĭr′ jăth-Ā′ rĭm) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Arim. See Kiriath-Arim.

KIRJATH-BAAL (Kĭr′ jăth-Bā′ ăl) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Baal. See Kiriath-Baal.

KIRJATH-HUZOTH (Kĭr′ jăth-Hū′ zŏth) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Huzoth. See Kiriath-Huzoth.

KIRJATH-JEARIM (Kĭr′ jăth-Jē′ ȧ·rĭm) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Jearim. See Kiriath-Jearim.

KIRJATH-SANNAH (Kĭr′ jăth-Săn′ nah) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Sannah. Kiriath-Sannah is another name for the city of Debir (Josh. 15:49) as is Kiriath-Sepher (Josh. 15:15–16). See Debir 2.

KIRJATH-SEPHER (Kĭr′ jăth-Sē′ phĕr) KJV spelling of Kiriath-Sepher. Kiriath-Sepher is another name for the city of Debir (Josh. 15:15–16) as is Kiriath-Sannah (Josh. 15:49). See Debir 2.

KISH (Kĭsh) Personal name of unknown meaning, perhaps "gift." 1. Father of Saul (1 Sam. 9:2). A man of the tribe of Benjamin who lived in Gibeah. He is said to have been the son of Abiel (1 Sam. 9:1) and the son of Ner (1 Chron. 8:33). Some think he was the grandson of Abiel and son of Ner. He was apparently a man of wealth, owning both asses and servants (1 Sam. 9:3). The description of Saul as being from the humblest family of the tribe of Benjamin is probably a good example of oriental modesty (1 Sam. 9:21). He was buried in Zela of Benjamin, where Saul and Jonathan were buried (2 Sam. 21:14).

2. A Benjaminite, the third son of Jeiel of Gibeon and Maacah (1 Chron. 8:29–30; 9:35–36). 3. The second son of Mahli who belonged to the Merari family of Levites. Kish's sons married his brother's daughters (1 Chron. 23:21–22). Kish's son, Jerahmeel, became the head of the family of Kish (1 Chron. 24:29). 4. Son of Abdi, also of the Merari family of Levites. He assisted in cleansing the Temple during the time of Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:12). 5. The Benjaminite ancestor of Mordecai (Esther 2:5).

KISHI (Kĭsh′ ī) Personal name possibly meaning, "gift." A Levite of the Merari family (1 Chron. 6:44) also called Kushaiah (1 Chron. 15:17). See Kushaiah.

KISHION (Kĭsh′ ĭ·ŏn) Place name meaning, "hard ground." A town in Issachar allotted to the Gershonite Levites (Josh. 21:28). A parallel list calls the town Kedesh (1 Chron. 6:72). It has been suggested that "Kedesh in Issachar" may have arisen from a misreading of "Kishon" for "Kedesh." The site is uncertain, perhaps modern tell Abu Qudeis, about two miles southeast of Megiddo. See Levitical Cities; Kedesh.

KISHON (Kī′ shŏn) Place name meaning "curving, winding." A small river which flows from east to west through the Valley of Jezreel. In the spring it achieves a width of about 65 feet and a length of 23 miles.

It was at the Kishon that Deborah and Barak defeated the Canaanite Sisera when his chariots became mired in the marshes (Judg. 4:7,13; 5:21). Later, the river was the place where Elijah brought the prophets of Baal to be executed following God's display and victory on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:40).

KISLEV (Kĭs′ lĕv) NIV, REB, TEV spelling of Chislev. See Chislev.

KISLON (Kĭṣ′ lŏn) NIV, REB spelling of Chislon. See Chislon.

KISLOTH-TABOR (Kĭs′ lŏth-Tā′ bôr) NIV, REB spelling of Chisloth-Tabor. See Chisloth-Tabor.

KISON (Kī′ sŏn) KJV spelling of Kishon in Psalm 83:9. See Kishon.

KISS Most often used of the touching of the lips to another person's lips, cheeks, shoulders, hands, or feet as a gesture of friendship, acceptance, respect, and reverence. The location of the kiss carried different meanings as Jesus made clear in the episode of the woman kissing his feet (Luke 7:36–50). With the exception of three occurrences (Prov. 7:13; Song of Sol. 1:2; 8:1) the term is used without any erotic overtones. Kiss translates two Hebrew words and three Greek words; the basic Hebrew term is found 32 times, and the basic Greek term is found seven times.

In the Old Testament close relatives kissed at greeting and departing with the connotation of acceptance most often in the foreground (Gen. 27:26–27; 29:11; 50:1; Ex. 18:7; 1 Sam. 10:1; Ruth 1:9). The term was further used of the gesture of reverence to idols (1 Kings 19:18; Hos. 13:2) as well as to the Lord (Ps. 2:12). A kiss of betrayal is also found (2 Sam. 20:9). The term "kiss" in the New Testament is used of Judas (Mark 14:44–45), of the father to the prodigal as a sign of acceptance and reconciliation (Luke 15:20), of the Ephesian elders to Paul as a sign of gratitude (Acts 20:37), of the woman who kissed the feet of Jesus (Luke 7:38), and of the "holy kiss" (1 Thess. 5:26; 1 Cor. 16:20; 2 Cor. 13:12; Rom. 16:16).

The holy kiss was widely practiced among the early Christians as a manner of greeting, a sign of acceptance, and an impartation of blessing. This custom could well have been used to express the unity of the Christian fellowship. The substitute kiss involved kissing the hand and waving it in the direction of the object to be kissed (Job 31:27). The kiss of betrayal from Judas does not belong to the category of the kiss of Joab to Amasa (2 Sam. 20:9), but was the sign of respect from pupil to master. Either the action of Judas did not accord with his inner feeling, or his action had other motivation than betrayal.

The kiss still survives in the Near Eastern culture as a sign of love, respect, and reverence.

G. Al Wright, Jr.

KITCHENS Place of meal preparation, particularly involving cooking. Ezekiel's vision of the Temple included four small courts at the corners of the Court of the Gentiles where the sacrifices that the common people were permitted to eat were boiled (Ezek. 46:24). KJV has "the place of them that boil." The sin, guilt, and cereal offerings were cooked in the kitchens within the priests' chambers to protect them from contact with persons who had not been consecrated (Ezek. 46:19–20). There is no mention in the Bible of separate rooms in homes where meals were prepared. See Cooking and Heating.

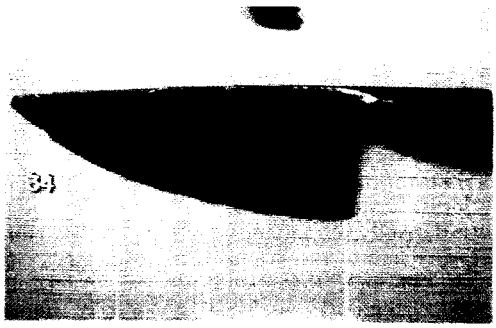
KITE Bird of prey, best described as a scavenger of the accipitridae family (hawk), the subfamily of milvinae of the genus milvus. Medium sized with red coloring. Found in the Bible at Leviticus 11:14; Deuteronomy 14:13; Isaiah 34:15. This bird was considered unclean and not for human consumption (Lev. 11:14). See Birds.

KITHLISH (Kĭth' lĭsh) KJV, REB spelling of Chitlish. See Chitlish.

KITLISH (Kĭt' lĭsh) NIV spelling of Chitlish. See Chitlish.

KITRON (Kĭt' rŏn) Place name of uncertain meaning. A city in the tribal territory of Zebulun from which the Israelites could not expel the Canaanites (Judg. 1:30). This city is probably the same as Kattath. See Kattath.

KITTIM (Kĭt' tĭm) Tribal name for the island of Cyprus, sometimes spelled Chittim. This name was derived from Kition, a city-state on the southeastern side of the island. Long associated with maritime lore, the island was ruled first by Greece, then the Assyrians, and finally, Rome. Genesis 10:4 traces the people's roots to Noah's son Japheth. Jeremiah and Ezekiel both mention it in their prophecies (Jer. 2:10; Ezek. 27:6; compare Isa. 23:1,12).



Kittim is used in intertestamental writings as denoting all of the land west of Cyprus. I Maccabees credits it as being the land of Alexander the Great (1:1; 8:5). The writer of Daniel understood it to be a part of the Roman Empire (11:30) used to threaten Antiochus Epipanes. The Dead Sea Scrolls contain several references to Kittim, the most notable being the defeat of her people (Romans) at the hands of God's people. See Cyprus.

KIYYUN (Kĭy' yŭn) NAS spelling of the word spelled Chiun in Amos 5:26 (KJV). Other versions translate the word as "Kaiwan." See Chiun; Kaiwan.

KNEAD, KNEADING BOWL The process of making bread dough by mixing flour, water, and oil along with a piece of the previous day's dough with the hands in a kneading bowl or trough. The mixture was allowed to stand in the bowl to rise and ferment (Ex. 12:34). Kneading the dough was usually the work of the woman (Gen. 18:6; 1 Sam. 28:24) but was performed on occasion by men (Hos. 7:4). The bowls could be made of wood, earthenware, or bronze and were the objects of either God's blessing or curse (Deut. 28:5,17; see Ex. 8:3).

KNEEL The common posture when requesting a blessing from one believed able to bestow the blessing. The Hebrew word for kneel comes from the same root as the word for bless. Kneeling is also considered a sign of reverence, obedience, or respect. Kneeling was the posture of prayer (Dan. 6:10; Acts 7:60; 9:40; 20:36; Eph. 3:14; compare 1 Kings 18:42), acknowledging a superior (2 Kings 1:13; Matt. 17:14; 27:29; Mark 1:40; 10:17; Luke 5:8), or worship of God (I Kings 8:54), Jesus (Phil. 2:10), or idols (1 Kings 19:18; Isa. 66:3 where blessing an idol refers to kneeling before an idol). See Blessing and Cursing.

KNIFE A small instrument made of flint, copper, bronze, or iron used mainly for domestic purposes. Joshua was ordered to make flint knives for the circumcision of Israelite males (Josh. 5:2–3). Since flint was not the common material used to make knives in the days of Joshua, the command to make the knives of flint probably reflects a very ancient practice of circumcision (see Gen. 17:11; Circumcision). Knives were used most commonly for killing and skinning animals and for killing sacrificial animals (see Lev. 7:2; 8:15,20,25; 9:8–15; 1 Sam. 9:24). Some Bible students think the pruning hooks of Isaiah 18:5 were curved knives. Others believe that the lances of the priests of Baal were pointed knives with which they cut themselves to gain Baal's attention (1 Kings 18:28). According to Ezra 1:9, the furnishings for the Temple included 29 knives (KJV, NRSV), but the meaning of the Hebrew term is uncertain as seen in modern translations: NIV, "silver pans"; REB, "vessels of various kinds"; RSV, "censers"; NAS, "duplicates."

Large, wide-bladed knife from the Roman time period.

KNOB An ornamental detail on the seven-branched lampstand in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:31–36, KJV's knop; RSV's capital; NRSV's calyx; NIV's buds). Some suggest that the knob was an imitation of the almond. The word may also refer to the capital of a column (Zeph. 2:14).

KNOP 1. KJV translation of a Hebrew word that the NRSV translates as gourd in 1 Kings 6:18; 7:24. This is a different Hebrew word from the one translated elsewhere as knob, knop, or capital. 2. Knop is also an archaic form of the word "knob." See Knob.

KNOWLEDGE Translation of several Hebrew and Greek words covering a wide range of meanings: intellectual understanding, personal experience, emotion, and personal relationship (including sexual intercourse, Gen. 4:1, etc.). Knowledge is attributed both to God and to human beings.

God's knowledge is said to be omniscient. He knows all things (Job 21:22; Ps. 139:1–18); His understanding is beyond measure (Ps. 147:5). He knows the thoughts of our minds and the secrets of our hearts (Ps. 44:21; 94:11). He knows past events (Gen. 30:22), present happenings (Job 31:4), and future events (Zech. 13:1; Luke 1:33).

The knowledge which God has of nations and human beings indicates that He has a personal interest—not merely an awareness—of people (Ps. 144:3). To be known by God may mean that a nation or individual is chosen by God to play a part in God's purposes in the world (Jer. 1:5; Amos 3:2; Gal. 4:9).

The Bible speaks often about human knowledge. Knowledge of God is the greatest knowledge (Prov. 9:10) and is the chief duty of mankind (Hos. 6:6). In the Old Testament, the Israelites know God through what He does for His people (Ex. 9:29; Lev. 23:43; Deut. 4:32–39; Ps. 9:10; 59:13; 78:16; Hos. 2:19–20). This knowledge of God is not simply theoretical or factual knowledge; it includes experiencing the reality of God in one's life (compare Phil. 3:10) and living one's life in a manner that shows a respect for the power and majesty of God (compare Jer. 22:15–16).

In the New Testament one knows God through a knowledge of Jesus Christ (John 8:19; Col. 2:2–3). The apostle Paul closely connected knowledge to faith. Knowledge gives direction, conviction, and assurance to faith (2 Cor. 4:14). Knowledge is a spiritual gift (1 Cor. 12:8) which can grow, increase, be filled, and abound (Phil. 1:9; Col. 1:9–10; 2 Cor. 8:7). It consists in having a better understanding of God's will in the ethical sense (Col. 1:9–10; Phil. 1:9), of knowing that God desires to save people (Eph. 1:8–9), and of having a deeper insight into God's will given in Christ (Eph. 1:17; 3:18–19).

But though Paul recognized the importance of knowledge, he also knew that it could be a divisive factor in churches such as at Rome and Corinth where some Christians claimed to be more spiritual because of their knowledge of spiritual matters (Rom. 14:1—15:6; 1 Cor. 8:1–13). Paul argued that knowledge puffs up but love builds up and that the knowledge exercised by the "strong" in faith could cause the "weak" in faith to go against their Christian conscience and lead to their spiritual ruin. Knowledge can be misused (1 Cor. 8). Love is more important than knowledge (1 Cor. 13), yet knowledge is still a gift, necessary for Christian teaching (1 Cor. 14:6) and for Christian growth toward a mature faith (1 Cor. 8:7; 2 Pet. 1:5–6; 3:18).

In the Gospel of John, knowledge is a key concept, although the noun "knowledge" itself never occurs in John's Gospel. John instead frequently uses the verbs "to know". Jesus and the Father have a mutual knowledge (John 10:14–15), and Jesus' knowledge of God is perfect (John 3:11; 4:22; 7:28–29, for example). Jesus brings to lost humankind the knowledge of God which is necessary for salvation (John 7:28–29; 8:19), but which mankind has distorted through sin (John 1:10). God's knowledge of Jesus consists of giving Jesus His mission and the power to perform it (John 10:18). Jesus' knowledge of the Father consists of His hearing God's word and obediently expressing it to the world.

Knowledge of God is closely related to faith, expressing the perception and understanding of faith. Full knowledge is possible only after Jesus' glorification, since the disciples sometimes failed to understand Jesus (John 4:32; 10:6; 12:16). In John, knowledge is expressed in Christian witness which may evoke belief in Jesus (John 1:7; 4:39; 12:17–18) and in love (John 17:26). Whereas Jesus' knowledge of the Father is direct, the disciples' knowledge of Jesus is indirect, qualified by believing. The Christian's knowledge of Jesus is the perception of Jesus as the revelation of God which leads to obedience to His word of love. So the Christian is caught up into God's mission of love to the world in order that the world may come to know and believe in Jesus as the revelation of the Father's love for the world.

Roger L. Omanson

KOA (Kō′ ȧ) National name of unknown meaning. Ezekiel 23:23 lists the names of several nations God will bring against Israel. Koa, like Shoa, has not been identified to everyone's satisfaction. Some identify Koa with the Guti people of Babylon, but this is disputed.

KOHATH (Kō′ hăth) Personal name of unknown meaning. The second son of Levi (Gen. 46:11) and father of Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel (Ex. 6:18) who became the heads of the Kohathite branch of the Levitical priesthood. Kohath went to Egypt with Levi (his father) and Jacob (his grandfather) (Gen. 46:11), had a sister named Jochebed (Ex. 6:20), and died at the age of 133 (Ex. 6:18). See Kohathites.

KOHATHITES (Kō′ hăth·īte) The descendants of Kohath, the son of Levi (Ex. 6:16; see Kohath). Since Kohath was the grandfather of Aaron, Moses, and Miriam (Ex. 6:20; Num. 26:59; see Amram), the Kohathites were considered the most important of the three major Levitical families (that is, Kohathites, Gershonites, and Merarites). The Kohathites were further divided into four branches according to the four sons of Kohath: Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel (Ex. 6:18; Num. 3:19; 1 Chron. 6:1–3,16,18,33,38; 23:6,12,13,18–20; 26:23).

The Kohathites were active throughout Israel's history. The Kohathites, along with the Gershonites and Merarites, were placed around the tabernacle and were charged with caring for and moving it. The Kohathites were to camp on the south side of the tabernacle and were responsible to care for and move the ark, table, lampstand, altars, vessels of the sanctuary, and the screen (Num. 3:29–31). The Kohathites could not touch these objects and could move them only after they had been properly prepared by Aaron and his sons. The result of attempting to move these objects without their first being fit with poles for carrying was death (Num. 4:15,17–20; 7:9; compare 1 Sam. 5—6; 2 Sam. 6:6–11).

After the conquest, Kohathites descended from Aaron received thirteen cities from the tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin (Josh. 21:4,9–19; 1 Chron. 6:54–60). The remaining Kohathites received ten cities from the tribes of Dan, Ephraim, and Manasseh (Josh. 21:5,20–26; 1 Chron. 6:61,66–70). One of the latter ten was Shechem, a city of refuge. See Levitical Cities; Cities of Refuge.

David appointed 120 Kohathites under the leadership of Uriel to bring the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:5). When Jehoshaphat sought deliverance from the Moabites and Ammonites, the Kohathites led the people in prayer and praise (2 Chron. 20:19). Mahath and Joel of the Kohathites helped in the purification of Israel's worship during the time of Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:12). During Josiah's religious reforms, two Kohathite priests (Zechariah and Meshullam) helped supervise the work (2 Chron. 34:12).

When the Israelites returned from the Exile, some of the Kohathites were placed in charge of preparing the show bread every sabbath (1 Chron. 9:32). See Levites; Gershonites; Merarites.

Phil Logan

KOHELETH (Kō·hĕl′ ĕth) The English transliteration of the Hebrew title of Ecclesiastes (also spelled Qoheleth). Koheleth is a Hebrew word that is translated as preacher (KJV, RSV, NAS), teacher (NIV, NRSV), speaker (REB), or philosopher (TEV) in Ecclesiastes 1:1.

KOLAIAH (Kō·lâî′ ah) Personal name meaning "voice of Yah." 1. Son of Maaseiah whose descendants lived in Jerusalem after the Exile (Neh. 11:7). 2. The father of the false prophet, Ahab (Jer. 29:21–23).

KOPH (Kōph) Nineteenth letter of Hebrew alphabet. See Qoph.

KOR (kōr) Dry measure equal to a homer or to about 6.3 imperial bushels, though estimates vary greatly. Those using the metric system have estimated a kor at between 220 and 450 liters. It apparently represented the load a donkey could carry on its back. Compare 1 Kings 4:22; 5:11; 2 Chronicles 2:9; 27:5; Ezekiel 45:14. The measure in Luke 16:7 apparently represents a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew kor. See Weights and Measures.

KORAH (Kō′ rah) Personal name meaning

"bald." 1. A son of Esau (Gen. 36:5,14; 1 Chron. 1:35) who became chief of a clan of Edom (Gen. 36:18).

2. A grandson of Esau, son of Eliphaz, and chief of a clan of Edom (Gen. 36:16; 1 Chron. 1:36).

3. A leader of rebellion against Moses and Aaron while Israel was camped in the wilderness of Paran (Num. 16). Korah, Dathan, and Abiram led a confederacy of 250 princes of the people against Aaron's claim to the priesthood and Moses' claim to authority in general. The rebels contended that the entire congregation was sanctified and therefore qualified to perform priestly functions. As punishment for their insubordination, God caused the earth to open and swallow the leaders and their property. A fire from the Lord consumed the 250 followers.

4. A Levite descended from Izhar, of the family of Kohath (Ex. 6:21; 1 Chron. 6:22,37), probably to be identified with 3. above. The sons of Korah and Asaph were the two most prominent groups of Temple singers (compare 2 Chron. 20:19). Many of the Psalms with the heading "A Psalm of the Sons of Korah" may have been taken from their hymnbook (Pss. 42; 44—49; 84—85; 87—88). In a later list of Temple singers the group of Heman replaced Korah and was joined by Asaph and Ethan as the three groups of Temple singers (1 Chron. 6:33–48). The members of the group of Korah were also gatekeepers (1 Chron. 9:19; 26:1,19) and bakers of sacrificial cakes (9:31).

5. A son of Hebron in the lineage of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:43). 6. Possibly a town in Judah near Hebron. The five Korahites who joined David at Ziklag may have been persons from this town (1 Chron. 12:6). However, since these five men are also identified as Benjamites (1 Chron. 12:2), they may have been from a town of this same name whose location has yet to be determined.

Mike Mitchell and Phil Logan

KORAHITES (Kôr' â·hītes) Descendants of Korah who belonged to the Kohathite Levites. The name is also spelled Korathites (Num. 26:58) and Korhites (KJV). See Kohathites; Korah.

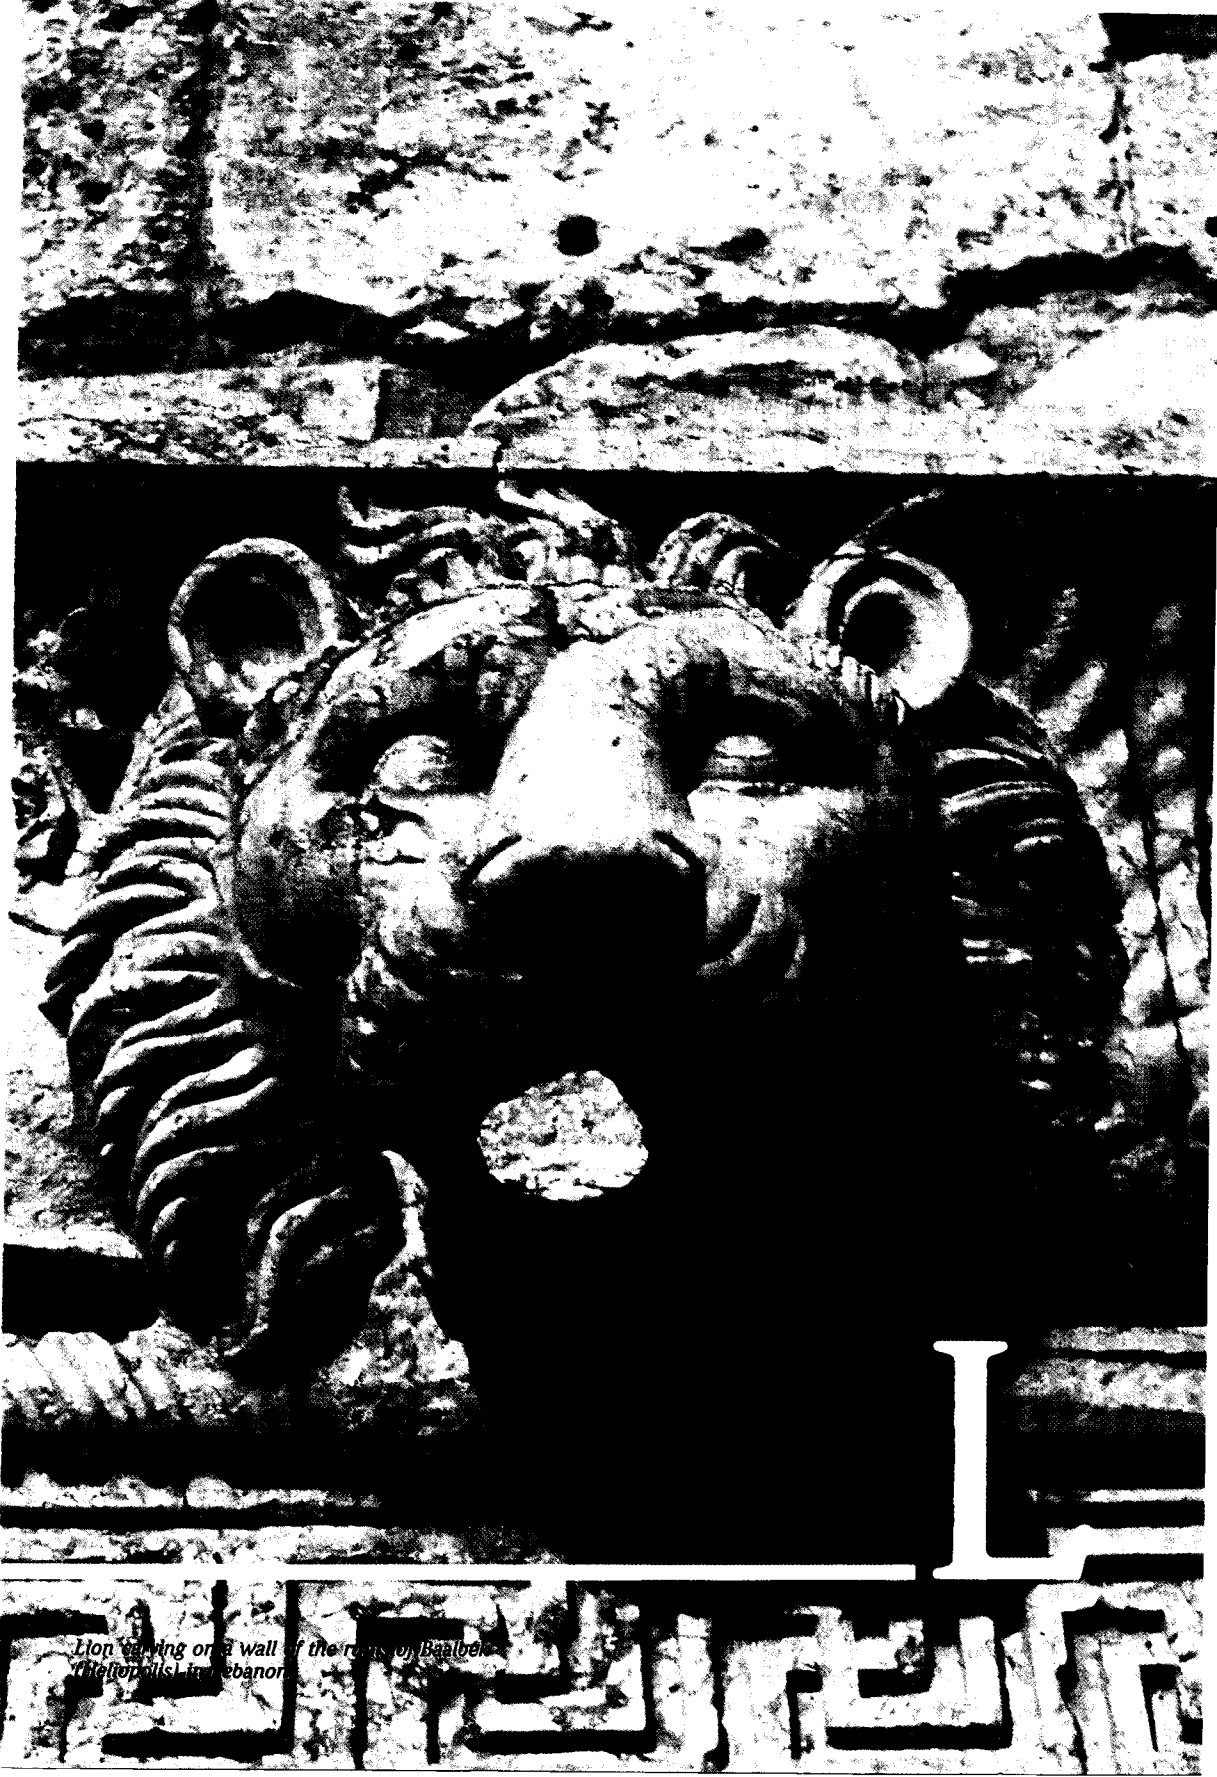
KORATHITE (Kō' răth·īte) Alternate spelling of Korahites. See Korahites.

KORAZIN (Kō·rā' zĭn) NIV spelling of Chorazin. See Chorazin.

KORHITES (Kôr' hīte) Alternate spelling of Korahites. See Korahites.

KORE (Kō' rè) Personal name meaning "one who proclaims." 1. Son of Ebiasaph, a Levite of the family of Korah and father of Shallum and Meshelemiah, gatekeepers at the tabernacle (1 Chron. 9:19; 26:1). 2. Son of Imnah, the Levite, keeper of the eastern gate, and appointed by Hezekiah to receive the freewill offerings and distribute them among the priests (2 Chron. 31:14). 3. A mistake transliteration in 1 Chronicles 26:19 (KJV). The name should be Korah (see modern versions).

KOUM (Koüm) NIV and TEV spelling of cumi. NAS has kum. All three represent the Aramaic word which means "arise" in Mark 5:41.



KOZ (Kŏz) Personal name meaning "thorn." 1. A member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8). He may have belonged to the priestly family of Hakkoz. 2. The KJV transliterates the name Hakkoz in Ezra 2:61; Nehemiah 3:4,21; 7:63 with "Koz," apparently taking Hak to be the Hebrew article, "the." The person in these passages is probably the same as the person in 1 Chronicles 24:10. See Hakkoz.

KUB (Kŭb) TEV spelling of Chub. See Chub; Libya.

KUE (Kü' ē) Believed by many to be an ancient name for Cilicia. The name occurs in 1 Kings 10:28 and 2 Chronicles 1:16. The Masoretes (the Hebrew scholars who added the vowels to the Hebrew text which had been written only with consonants) did not seem to understand the reference and added vowels to the consonants which gave the reading now found in the KJV—"linen yarn." By adding different vowels to the consonants of the Hebrew text, modern Bible students read "from Kue." If the Masoretes and the KJV are correct, then Solomon imported horses and linen yarn from Egypt. If the NRSV, NAS, NIV, REB, and TEV are correct (which in all likelihood they are), then Solomon imported horses from Egypt and Kue—that is, Cilicia in southeast Asia Minor (see NEB which has the spelling Coa). Many think, further, that the Hebrew word translated as "Egypt" (Mizraim) should be translated as "Musri," a country in Asia Minor near Cilicia. From Egypt, Solomon acquired chariots (1 Kings 10:29). Thus, Solomon acted as the middle man, putting horses with chariots and exporting them to other kingdoms. This proved to be a very lucrative arrangement for Solomon. See Cilicia; Mizraim; Musri; Solomon. Phil Logan

KUN (Kūn) TEV spelling of Cun or Chun. See Cun.

KUSHAIAH (Kū·shâi' ah) Personal name of unknown meaning. A Levite of the Merarite family listed as one of the sanctuary singers during the reign of David. His son Ethan was appointed as a chief assistant of Heman (1 Chron. 15:17). This same person is also listed under the name Kishi (1 Chron. 6:44).

Lion carving on a wall of the ruins of Baalbek (Heliopolis) in Lebanon

LAADAH (Lā' ȧ dah) Personal name meaning, "throat" or "double chin." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:21).

LAADAN (Lā' ȧ dan) Personal name meaning, "throat" or "double chin." 1. Member of tribe of Ephraim (1 Chron. 7:26) and ancestor of Joshua. 2. Original ancestor of clan of Levites and son of Gershon (1 Chron. 23:7–9; 26:21), though elsewhere Gershon's son is named Libni. See Libni. Some suggest that Laadan originally belonged to family of Libni, but his clan became more prominent and overshadowed that of Libni in later times.

LABAN (Lā' ban) Personal name meaning "white." 1. Rebekah's brother (Gen. 24:29) and father of Leah and Rachel (Gen. 29:16). Laban lived in the city of Nahor which was probably close to the metropolis of Haran. Laban is known primarily from Genesis 24; 29—31.

Laban was directly responsible for the betrothal of Rebekah to Isaac. After Abraham's steward related that he had come to find a wife for Isaac, Laban and his father give their permission for the marriage (Gen. 24: 50–51). Later, Jacob fled to his uncle Laban's house after stealing the blessing from Esau. Laban agreed to give his daughter, Rachel, as payment for Jacob's seven years of labor. However, Laban deceived Jacob making him marry the older daughter, Leah. After Jacob worked an additional seven years, Laban allowed him to marry Rachel (Gen. 29:15–30). See Jacob.

2. Town used to locate Moses' speeches in Deuteronomy (Deut. 1:1). It is sometimes identified with Libnah (Num. 33:20). See Libnah. Assyrian and Egyptian texts mention its location on Canaan's southern border perhaps near the brook of Egypt at Sheikh ez-Zuweid or the nearby tell Abu Seleimeh. See Rebekah; Jacob; Leah; Rachel.

Kenneth Craig

LABOR See Work, Theology of.

LACE An ornamental braid used as a trim. Blue or purple cords were used to fasten the high priest's breastpiece to the ephod (Ex. 28:28; 39:21) and the golden plate to his turban (Ex. 28:37; 39:31). The translation lace (KJV, RSV) is frequently replaced with cord (NAS, NIV, NRSV, TEV) or braid (REB). The underlying Hebrew term is used elsewhere for a belt or signet cord (Gen. 38:18), for the cords or tassels on the corners of garments (Num. 15:38), or for strands of fiber (Judg. 16:9).

LACHISH (Lā' chĭsh) Place name meaning "obstinate." An important Old Testament city located in the Shephelah ("lowlands") southwest of Jerusalem. It has usually been identified in modern times with the archaeological site called tell ed-Duweir. The same site has more recently come to be called tel Lachish. Lachish is also mentioned in ancient Egyptian, Assyrian and Babylonian records.

The earliest reference to Lachish is in the Amarna letters (about 1400 B.C). It was evidently one of the important Canaanite cities of the time. The Hebrew army under Joshua's command defeated the king of Lachish, killed him and conquered his city (Josh. 10:5, 23,32–33). Later, Lachish was apportioned to the Tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:39). The next Biblical reference to Lachish comes in 2 Chronicles 11:9, from the reign of Rehoboam who "fortified the city." Lachish was also the city of refuge for Amaziah who fled there from Jerusalem to escape a conspiracy against him (2 Kings 14:19; 2 Chron. 25:27).

Lachish is perhaps most well known for the story of its siege and conquest in 701 B.C. at the hands of the Assyrian King Sennacherib (2 Kings 18; 2 Chron. 32; Isa. 36). Two later brief references appear (Jer. 34:7; Neh. 11:30).

The archaeological excavations at Lachish have been extensive and rewarding. They have shown occupation at Lachish from about 4000 B.C. to the time of its conquest by the Persian Empire (539–333 B.C.). The rich and varied finds represent almost all of the periods, but the chief interest for the student of the Bible centers on the periods beginning with the time of the Hebrew invasion of Canaan. Impressive archaeological evidence shows the city was destroyed during the period of the conquest related in the Book of Joshua, but the archaeological evidence does not indicate who the destroyers were. Some scholars date the Lachish destruction layer as late as 1150 B.C. on the basis of a cartouche of Rameses III of Egypt.

The biblical account of Sennacherib's conquest of Lachish in 701 B.C. is supported and amplified by Assyrian records of King Sennacherib's campaign (2 Kings 18; 2 Chron. 32; Isa. 36). This was graphically recorded in a large and elaborate bas relief on the walls of the royal palace in Nineveh. Presently housed in the British museum in London, these carvings show Assyrian soldiers attacking the walled city, the city inhabitants defending their city, soldiers killing some of the defenders, families with possessions being led away captive, and the king on his throne reviewing the spoils taken from the city. A replica of this relief may be found in the library of The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, KY.

The "Lachish Letters"—a group of messages in ancient Hebrew inscribed with ink on pottery sherds dating to around 590 B.C.—are among the most significant finds from Lachish. They provide important linguistic and historical information about this period.

Bruce C. Cresson

The definitive line of a wall at Lachish running from the south northeast up to the high place.

LADAN (Lā′ dan) Modern translations' spelling of Laadan. See Laadan.

LADDER A series of steps used for ascent or descent. The Hebrew term may refer to steps carved out of rock or to steps constructed from wood, metal, stone, or even rope. The angels ascending and descending in Jacob's vision point to God's presence with Jacob (Gen. 28:12). Jesus' promise to Nathaniel points to Jesus as the one who incarnates God's presence (John 1:49–51).

LAEL (Lā′ ĕl) Personal name meaning "belonging to God." Levite leader in clan of Gershon (Num. 3:24).

LAHAD (Lā′ hăd) Personal name meaning "slow, lazybones." Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:2).

LAHAIROI Là hâiai′ roî oi) See Beer-Lahairoi.

LAHMAM (Lăh′ măm) Place name meaning "food" or "bread." Reading in many Hebrew manuscripts and early translations for Lahmas (Josh. 15:40). KJV, NRSV, TEV read Lahmam. Town in tribal territory of Judah near Lachish, possibly modern khirbet el-Lahm about two and a half miles south of Beth Gibrin.

LAHMAS (Lăh′ mas) Place name perhaps meaning "violence." Reading of basic Hebrew manuscript (Josh. 15:40) adopted by REB, NIV, NAS. Possibly, early scribes confused final letter with similar appearing final "m" in Hebrew. See Lahmam.

LAHMI (Lăh′ mī) Personal name meaning "my bread" or perhaps an abbreviated form of Bethlehemite. Brother of the giant Goliath. Elhanan the son of Jair killed him (1 Chron. 20:5). The parallel passage (2 Sam. 21:19) says Elhanan the Bethlehemite killed Goliath. Compare 1 Samuel 17. The Chronicler may have been using a text of Samuel which copyists had made difficult to read and have interpreted it to the best of his ability. Some interpreters think the present text of Samuel represents copyists' confusion with the Chronicler's text accurate. See Elhanan; Goliath.

LAISH (Lā′ ĭsh) Personal and place name meaning "Strong" or "lion." The KJV form of Laishah. 1. Father of Paltiel (Phalti in KJV) and father-in-law of Michal (King Saul's daughter) after she was given to David (1 Sam. 19:11–12; 25:44). Laish was from Gallim in Benjamin. 2. Originally a Canaanite city in northern Palestine known for its carefree existence (Judg. 18:7). It was spied out by the Danites as a place for their dwelling after the Philistines forced them from the coastal region. After finding it suitable, the Danites invaded Laish and renamed the city and area Dan. See Dan. 3. Town apparently in tribal territory of Benjamin whose troubles from Assyrian invasion Isaiah mentioned (Isa. 10:30). Its location is not known. Modern translations read Laishah.

LAISHAH (Lā′ ĭsh ah) Place name meaning "lioness" or "towards "Laish." City on military route from Bethel to Jerusalem which Isaiah warned of Assyrian army's approach (Isa. 10:30). It may be modern el-Esawijeh southwest of Anathoth or ras et-Tawil south of Geba. See Laish.

LAKE OF FIRE See Hell; Eschatology; Fire.

LAKE OF GENNESARET See Gennesaret, Lake of; Galilee, Sea of.

LAKKUM (Lăk′ kŭm) Transliteration of modern translations for Lakum. See Lakum.

LAKUM (Lā′ kŭm) Place name perhaps meaning "rising" or "fortification." Border town in tribal allotment of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33). It may be modern khirbet el-Mansurah near the southern end of the Sea of Galilee.

LAMA See Eli, Eli, Lama Sabachthani.

LAMB See Animals; Sheep; Lamb of God.

LAMB OF GOD John the Baptist identified Jesus as the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world (John 1:29,36). The meaning of this statement has been greatly discussed. Some regard "the Lamb of God" to be derived from an Aramaic phrase which could mean either "lamb of God" or "servant of God." John's testimony probably should be seen as a combination of both concepts. Acts 8:32–35 identifies Jesus as the servant of God whom Isaiah described as one "brought as a lamb to the slaughter" (Isa. 53:7), who "bare the sin of many" (Isa. 53:12), and who was an offering for sin (Isa. 53:10). The law for guilt offerings (Lev. 5:1—6:7) prescribed a lamb for atonement to be made before the Lord. Peter stressed this sacrificial motif when he described redemption accomplished with "the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Pet. 1:18). John's identification might also entail a reference to Jesus as the scapegoat sent into the wilderness on the Day of Atonement to bear the iniquities of the Israelites (Lev. 16) or to the Passover lamb (Ex. 12). Paul, in fact, referred to Christ as "our Passover" who has been sacrificed (1 Cor. 5:7). John 1:29, therefore, signifies the substitutionary, sacrificial suffering and death of Jesus, the Servant of God, by which redemption and forgiveness of sin are accomplished.

Revelation often refers to the exalted Christ as a

Lamb, but never as "the Lamb of God," nor with the same Greek word for "lamb" as used elsewhere in the New Testament. See Atonement; Christ, Christology; Passover; Redeem, Redemption, Redeemer; Sacrifice and Offering; Servant of the Lord. Barry Morgan

LAME, LAMENESS A physical condition in which walking is difficult or impossible. In the Old Testament, lame animals were not acceptable sacrifices (Deut. 15:21; Mal. 1:8,13). The lame were prohibited from serving as priests though they were allowed to eat from the priests' provisions (Lev. 21:18). The Jebusites boasted that their stronghold of Jerusalem was so impregnable that even the blind and lame would be able to turn back David's troops (2 Sam. 5:6 NRSV, NIV). A proverb excluding the blind and lame from "the house" (that is, the Temple) is traced to the assault on Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:8). In the New Testament, the healing of the lame forms an important part of Jesus' messianic work (Matt. 11:2–6; 15:29–31). By healing the lame in the Temple, Jesus restored these excluded ones to full participation in the worshiping community (Matt. 21:14). Acts tells of the early church continuing Jesus' healing ministry to the lame: Peter and John (Acts 3:2); Philip (8:7); Paul (14:8–10).

LAMECH (Lā' mĕch) Personal name meaning "powerful." 1. The son of Methuselah and father of Noah (Gen. 5:25–29). 2. A man with two wives, Adah and Zillah, whose sons are credited with the rise of the nomadic way of life, music, and metalworking. Lamech is blamed with beginning polygamy (or bigamy) and the increase of sinful pride in the earth (Gen. 4:19). The Song of Lamech (Gen. 4:23–24) is an ancient poem supporting unlimited revenge. Jesus may have had this in mind in teaching about unlimited forgiveness (Matt. 18:22). Mike Mitchell

LAMED (Lă mĕd) The twelth letter of the Hebrew alphabet used as a heading for Psalm 119:89–96. Each verse in this section of the Psalm begins with the letter lamed.

LAMENT See Grief and Mourning; Lamentations; Psalms.

LAMENTATIONS, BOOK OF (Lă mĕn tā' tions) Twenty-fifth book of Bible preserving mourning over the fall of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. Lamentations are elegies or mournful poems which lament some great loss. The biblical Book of Lamentations is made up of such poems. The book contains five poems, each one comprising a chapter. The first four chapters are in acrostic form, where successive verses begin with successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet with slight variations.

An ancient tradition, dating back to the earliest Greek translation (about 250 B.C.), claims that Jeremiah is the author of Lamentations. However, the Hebrew text of the book does not make that claim. Factors which favor authorship by Jeremiah are the antiquity of the tradition associating him with the book, the similarity in tone between Lamentations and portions of Jeremiah's book (Jer. 8—9;14—15), and a similar perspective in Lamentations and Jeremiah as to the cause of the fall of Jerusalem (for example, Lam. 1:2–18; 2:14; 4:13–17; Jer. 2:18; 14:7; 16:10–12; 23:11–40; 37:5–10).

Factors which militate against Jeremianic authorship are differences in phraseology between the two books and differences in viewpoints on several issues. Lamentations 1:21–22 and 3:59–66 appear to be incongruent with Jeremiah's conviction that the Babylonians were functioning as God's instrument of judgment (Jer. 20:4–5). Lamentations 4:17 suggests that the author was expecting help from the Egyptians, a perspective which Jeremiah strongly opposed (Jer. 37:5–10). The view of Zedekiah, Judah's last king, in Lamentations 4:20 is also quite different from that found regarding him in Jeremiah 24:8–10. The evidence tends to favor the opinion that Lamentations was written by someone other than Jeremiah; however, Jeremianic authorship is not impossible. In either case the author was surely an eyewitness of the fall of Jerusalem.

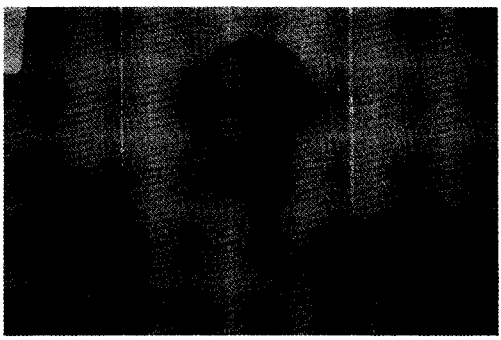
Lamentations 1 mourns the misery resulting from the destruction of Jerusalem and explains that the desolation was God's judgment for the nation's sin. Lamentations 2 continues the lament over the ruin wrought by divine anger and calls the people to prayer. While Lamentations 3 further extends the mourning over Jerusalem's destruction, it also declares that God's steadfast love gives reason to hope that He will extend mercy in the future. In light of that hope the author calls for repentance. Lamentations 4 vividly pictures the horrors of the siege and fall of Jerusalem and places part of the blame for the judgment on the immoral prophets and priests of the city. Lamentations 5 summarizes the calamitous situation and closes with a prayer for restoration.

Lamentations served the Judeans as an expression of their grief, an explanation for the destruction, and a call for repentance and hope. The book warns modern readers that an immoral nation stands in danger of God's awesome judgment and that the only hope for survival is submission to God.

Outline

I. The Appalling Price of Sin (1:1–22)
   A. Description of punishment for sins (1:1–17)
   B. Admission of sin (1:18–20)
   C. Cry for vengeance (1:21–22)
II. God Is the One Who Punishes Sin (2:1–22)
   A. God has done as He said (2:1–17).

B. Call the people to repent (2:18–19).
C. Call on the Lord to relent (2:20–22).



III. A Personal Cry to God (3:1–66)
A. I am suffering (3:1–18).
B. I cry to God in hope (3:19–21).
C. God will hear and help (3:22–33).
D. God knows our unacceptable actions (3:34–36).
E God punishes unforgiven sin (3:37–54).
F. God will hear, respond, and requite the enemy (3:55–66).

IV. A Graphic Portrayal of Suffering Caused by Sin (4:1–22)

V. A Plea to God (5:1–22)
A. Remember us, O God, (5:1–18).
B. Restore us, O God, (5:19–22).

Bob R. Ellis

LAMPS, LIGHTING, LAMPSTAND The system and articles used to illuminate homes in biblical times. Lamps are mentioned often in the Bible but seldom described. Archaeological excavations have provided numerous examples of these lighting implements used in ancient times, dating from before Abraham to after Christ. Lamps of the Old Testament period were made exclusively of pottery. These lamps were of the open-bowl design with a pinched spout to support the wick. Wicks were made generally of twisted flax (Isa. 42:3). Lamps burned olive oil almost exclusively (Ex. 25:6), though in later times oil from nuts, fish, and other sources were used. Lamps from the Bronze Age to the Hellenistic times were made on the pottery wheel, after which molds were made for the enclosed forms of the Greek and Roman periods (about 500 B.C. onward). For outdoor lighting, the torch (KJV lantern) was used (Judg. 7:16; John 18:3).

Three first-century B.C. pottery oil lamps.

A golden lampstand with three branches extending from either side of the central tier was placed in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:31–40). Each branch may have had a seven-spouted lamp (Zech. 4:2), as do some individual lamps found in Palestine. This seven-branched candelabra (menorah), supporting seven lamps, continued in prominence through the first and second Temple periods, and later became symbolic of the nation Israel. Surrounding nations also employed multitiered and multilegged lamps and lampstands.

A multi-spout Roman oil lamp with ring-shaped oil chamber, made in Italy (first century A.D.).

Lamps (lights) were used symbolically in the Old and New Testaments. Light depicted life in abundance, divine presence or life's direction versus death in darkness (compare Ps. 119:105; 1 John 1:5 with Job 18:5; Prov. 13:9). Jesus is depicted often in John as the light of the world (John 1:4–5,7–9; 3:19; 8:12; 9:5; 11:9–10; 12:35–36,46). Jesus' disciples are also described as the light of the world (Matt. 5:14–16). See Light, Light of the World. Dennis Cole

LANCE, LANCET A weapon consisting of a long shaft with a metal head; javelin; spear (Judg. 5:8, NEB: 1 Kings 18:28, NAS, RSV; Jer. 50:42, KJV). In modern English, a lancet is a two-edged surgical instrument. The KJV used lancet for a small lance (1 Kings 18:28). See Arms and Armor; Weapons.

LAND OF FORGETFULNESS Description of Sheol (Ps. 88:12). See Sheol.

LAND, GROUND The dust of the earth and by extension the soil of territory controlled by a farmer, a tribe, a nation, or God's entire created world.

In Semitic languages, the root meaning of land or ground is "red plowed land." This implies land with a high iron content or similar coloring agent.

The land or ground as a material substance played an important role in ancient Hebrew thought. In Genesis 2 God formed the male half of humankind from dust of the ground. God breathed into the man's nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living creature (Gen. 2:7). God is pictured as using dry, loose material on the surface of the ground from which He, like a potter, formed man. There is a play on words in the Hebrew text here: 'adam (the Hebrew word for "humankind") was made from 'adamah (the Hebrew word for "ground"). Every beast and every bird was also formed from the ground (Gen. 2:19)

After sin entered the Garden of Eden, God described death in terms of the basic elements from which Adam was created: Adam would work and eat "til thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). The creation accounts ("You are dust or ground") thus point to the close connection of person and body.

The bold statement that humankind was made from the dust of the ground must be balanced against the statement that humankind was created in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–27). The Bible indicates that humankind as unique creatures do survive death through resurrection (John 5:28–29; Phil. 1:21–24; 2 Cor. 5:1).

In the Old Testament, an altar was important in worshiping the Lord. Exodus 20:24–25 shows altars made of two materials—ground or earth (vs. 24) and stones (vs. 25). The stone altars were not to be hewn, that is cut with a tool. The passage seems to favor altars made of ground.

The surface of the ground must be tilled to produce food. In the beginning of Genesis 2, the writer pictured the earth with nothing growing, with no rain, and with no one to till the ground (Gen. 2:5). After the fall (Gen. 3), God sent Adam and Eve away from the garden. Adam was to till the ground from which he was taken (Gen. 3:23). Cain, the firstborn son of Adam and Eve, became a tiller of the ground (Gen. 4:2–10). His offering from the fruit of the ground was not accepted by the Lord, while Abel's offering of the firstling of his flock was accepted. Cain responded by murdering his brother. The ground that formerly produced for Cain now protested the blood of Abel that fell upon it (Gen. 4:10). As a punishment, God cursed the ground where Cain was concerned so that it would no longer produce for him (Gen. 4:12).

Note how intimately ground and people are connected. God is a vital part of this connection. If His people hearken to his commands, He will bless the ground which will then produce grain, wine, and oil. This contributes to their total well-being (Deut. 7:13).

Ground or land as property During the severe famine in Egypt, the Egyptians used all their money and sold all their cattle to Joseph for food (Gen. 47:13–17). The next year, when they needed more food but had no more money or cattle, they sold themselves and their lands to Joseph. Ten times this narrative designates their individual lands or grounds as 'adhamah (ground or land) (Gen. 47:18–23). In Genesis 47:20, the totality of their former lands that had been turned over to Pharaoh is called 'erets (meaning earth or land). In this crisis, the Egyptians lost their lands and their freedom. Note the close association between property and persons.

Ground with its produce as the sphere of living A series of blessings and curses is part of Deuteronomy 28:4,11,18,33,42,51. The people, their land, and the ground where they live will be affected by their obedience or disobedience. Faithfulness to God affects the very land where people live.

The importance of the concept of land for the ancient Hebrews is also seen in Job's final speech defending his integrity at the close of his dialogues with his three friends. He used as a witness his property and how he handled it. He said his land or ground would cry out if he did not rightly pay his workers or if, to increase his own lands, he had exploited or destroyed those who owned land around him (Job 31:38–40). The implication here is that the ground was fruitful because Job had been faithful to God and God had blessed his land (compare Deut. 28,4,11,18,33,42,51).

Qualities of Ground or Land Israel's land was a good land from which Israel could be removed because of disobedience (Josh. 23:13,15). Amos threatened Israel with exile to a polluted land (Amos 7:17). Israel's land was also called a fat or rich land when they came into it (Neh. 9:25). When Moses investigated the burning bush, he learned that the ground upon which he stood was ground of holiness (Ex. 3:5). The people of Judah in captivity in Babylon had difficulty singing their songs in a strange or foreign land (Ps. 137:4). These and many other qualities depend on circumstances that affect the land and the people.

Whole inhabited earth—a ground where people live This unusual universalizing of ground is found in two of the most important texts of the Old Testament. God told Abraham that all the families of the inhabited earth would be blessed in him (Gen. 12:3). This is enigmatic: God did not tell Abraham how they would be blessed. God said the same thing to Jacob (Gen. 28:14): Through what God did in Abraham's family, blessing would come to all families of the inhabited earth. On the other hand, God's punishment would also be over the whole inhabited earth. "In that day, that the Lord shall punish . . . and the kings of the earth (ground) upon earth (ground) (Isa. 24:21). In the New Testament, Revelation expands on this apocalyptic theme. All human families in the ground where they dwell determine their destiny in terms of what God did in Abraham's posterity—Christ.

A. Berkeley Mickelsen

LANDMARK A pillar or heap of stones serving as a boundary marker (Gen. 31:51–52). Some Babylonian and Egyptian examples are elaborately carved. Many ancient law codes (Babylonian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman) prohibited the removal of a landmark (Deut. 19:14; compare 27:17; Prov. 22:28). In Job 24:2, removal of a marker parallels theft. Proverbs 23:10 warns against removing markers to rob orphans. Hosea 5:10 condemns the ruthless rulers of Judah as like those who remove landmarks, that is, those who have no regard for justice or for the traditional law. Moving the landmark meant changing the traditional land allotments (compare Josh. 13—19) and cheating a poor landowner of what little land he owned.

LANE A narrow, constricted passageway. In English, lane evokes the image of a rural path between hedges or fences. The Greek Term is used for a city alley (Luke 14:21, KJV, NAS, NRSV; alley, NIV, REB, TEV). Compare Acts 9:11; 12:10 where the same Greek term is used.

LANGUAGE, CONFUSION OF See Babel; Pentecost.

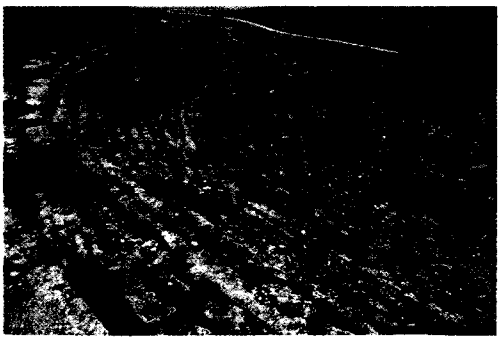
LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE The Old Testament was first written in Hebrew, with the exceptions of much of Ezra 4—7 and Daniel 2:4b—7:28, which appear in Aramaic. The New Testament was written in Greek, though Jesus and the early believers may have spoken Aramaic.

Characteristics of Hebrew Hebrew is a Semitic language related to Phoenician and the dialects of ancient Canaan. Semitic languages have the ability to convey abundant meaning through few words. Importance rests on the verb, which generally comes first in the sentence because action is the most significant element. Similarly, modifiers (such as adjectives) follow nouns, lending greater weight to the nouns. Typical word order for a sentence is: verb—subject—subject modifiers—object—object modifiers. Deviation from this order gives emphasis to the word which comes first.

Characteristics of Aramaic Aramaic is akin to Hebrew and shares a considerable vocabulary with it. It began as the language of Syria and was gradually adopted as the language of international communication. After about 600 B.C., it replaced Hebrew as the spoken language of Palestine. Hebrew then continued as the religious language of the Jews, but the Aramaic alphabet was borrowed for writing it.

Characteristics of Greek Greek belongs to the Indo-European language group. It spread throughout the Mediterranean world after about 335 B.C. with Alexander's conquests. The New Testament is written in a dialect called koinē (meaning "common) which was the dialect of the common person. New Testament Greek is heavily infused with Semitic thought modes, and many Aramaic words are found rendered with Greek letters (for example, talitha cumi, Mark 5:41; ephphatha, Mark 7:34; Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani, Mark 15:34; marana-tha, 1 Cor. 16:22). So also are such Latin words as "kenturion" (centurion) and "denarion" (denarius). Greek's accurateness of expression and widespread usage made it the ideal tongue for the early communication of the gospel. Paul no doubt knew all three biblical languages, and Latin as well. See Alphabet; Aramaic; Daniel, Book of; Ezra, Book of; Greek; Hebrew. Larry McKinney

LANTERN Portable container with transparent openings used to display and protect a light. The Greek term used at John 18:3 is of uncertain meaning, though some type of light is clearly intended. In John's ironic scene, the mob comes with "artificial" lights to arrest Jesus, "the light of the world" (John 8:12; 9:5; 11:9; 12:35–36,40).



LAODICEA (Lā ŏd ĭ cē′ ȧ) A city in southwest Asia Minor on an ancient highway running from Ephesus to Syria ten miles west of Colossae and six miles south of Hierapolis. Christian communities existed in all three cities (Col. 2:1; 4:13–16), though the one in Colossae is the best known. Paul wrote a letter to the Laodiceans (Col. 4:16) which has not survived, though some scholars have attempted to identify this missing letter with either of the Books of Ephesians or Philemon.

Laodicea was well known in the ancient world for its wealth. The extent of its wealth is illustrated by the fact that Laodicea was rebuilt without the financial help of Rome after the disastrous earthquake of A.D. 60. Laodicea earned its wealth in the textile industry in the production of black wool and in the banking industry. Laodicea was also known for its medical school which concocted a spice nard for the treatment of ears and an eyesalve. The major weakness of Laodicea was its lack of a water supply. This need was met by bringing water six miles north from Denizli through a system of stone pipes (another sign of Laodicea's wealth).

Laodicea is best known today to readers of Revelation where Jesus criticized Laodicea, using imagery drawn from its daily life (Rev. 3:14–22).

Exterior view of the archways in the top tier of one of the great theaters at ancient Laodicea.

An unexcavated Roman theater, the smaller of the two theaters at ancient Laodicea.

First, Jesus said Laodicea is neither cold (like the cold, pure waters of Colossae) nor hot (like the therapeutic hot springs of Hierapolis). Laodicea is lukewarm and provides neither refreshment for the spiritually weary nor healing for the spiritually sick (Rev. 3:15–16). Despite their apparent spiritual uselessness, the Laodiceans were claiming a spiritual wealth equal to their material wealth; and further, they were claiming to have acquired both by their own efforts. In reality, however, the Laodiceans, while they may have had material wealth, were spiritually poor, blind, and naked (Rev. 3:17)—an obvious reference to the textile and banking industry and medical school of Laodicea. According to Jesus, what the Laodiceans needed more than anything else was the true gold, white (not black) garments, and eyesalve that only Christ could give (Rev. 3:18). A true spiritual foundation is laid only in Christ, not human effort.

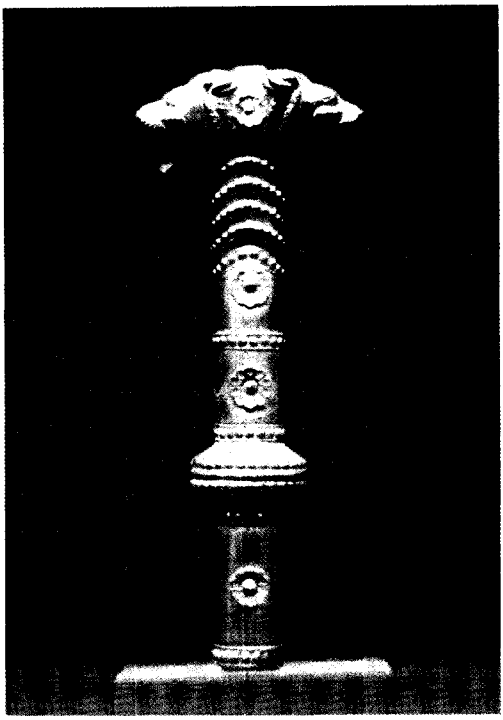
Archaeological remains of an early church located at Laodicea in Turkey.

The letter of the risen Christ to the church at Laodicea (Rev. 3:14–22) contains numerous allusions to conditions in the city. A five-mile-long aqueduct supplied the city with tepid water that served as an image for "lukewarm" Christianity (3:15–16). The Laodicean claim to be rich and prosperous reflects the self-reliant refusal of this city to accept Roman aid for rebuilding after an earthquake of about A.D. 60 (3:17). The charge that the Laodicean Christians were naked, blind, and in need of clothing and eyesalve (3:17–18) reflects the city's well-known school of opthalmology and its fine garments of raven-black wool of local sheep. Phil Logan

LAODICEAN (Lā ŏd ĭ cē′ an) Citizen of Laodicea. See Laodicea.

LAODICEANS, EPISTLE TO THE A short letter claiming Paul as its author. The letter was doubtless composed to fill in the gap suggested by Colossians 4:16. The date of writing is unknown. Jerome (340?–420) warned against this spurious work. Despite Jerome's protests, the letter was accepted as a genuine Pauline Epistle by Pope Gregory the Great (590–604). About one half of the Latin manuscripts of the Pauline Epistles produced between 500 and 1600 contain the Epistle to the Laodiceans. With the Reformation, the epistle quickly fell into disuse. The epistle was perhaps composed in Greek, though it survives only in Latin. Its 247 words are a patchwork of passages drawn from the authentic Pauline letters, chiefly Philippians, but also Galatians, 1 and 2 Corinthians, and 1 and 2 Timothy. There are also echoes of Matthew and 2 Peter.

LAP (Noun) (1) A loose panel or hanging flap in a garment; (2) the skirt of a robe; (3) the front part of the lower trunk and the upper part of the thighs of a seated person. Second Kings 4:39 uses lap in sense 1. This sense is also common in figurative passages concerning reward and retribution (Isa. 65:6,7; Jer. 32:18, NIV, NRSV). Sense 2 is perhaps intended at Nehemiah 5:13, though sense 1 is possible (so NIV, NRSV). KJV did not use lap in sense 3. Compare Judges 16:19 (NIV); Ruth 4:16 (NAS, NIV); 2 Kings 4:20 (NAS, NIV, RSV). The NIV frequently replaces bosom with lap (for example, Prov. 6:27; Eccl. 7:9).



LAP (Verb) To drink by licking up liquid with the tongue in the manner of a dog (Judg. 7:5–7). Gideon was to separate those who drank by cupping water in their hands and then lapping it up, still keeping watch, from those who knelt down to drink.

LAPIDOTH (Lă′ pĭ dŏth) Personal name meaning "lightnings." Deborah's husband (Judg. 4:4).

LAPIS LAZULI See Minerals and Metals.

LAPPIDOTH (Lăp′ pĭ dŏth) Transliteration in modern translations for Lapidoth. See Lapidoth.

LAPWING (Vanellus vanellus) A shore bird with a short bill and crest of feathers on its head. The lapwing is known for its irregular flapping flight and shrill cry. The KJV included the lapwing among the unclean birds (Lev. 11:19; Deut. 14:18). Modern translations generally identify the Hebrew term with the hoopoe.

A gold staff terminal decorated with lapis lazuli lion heads.

LARGE LAND See Broad Place.

LARGE PLACE See Broad Place.

LARGE ROOM See Broad Place.

LASCIVIOUSNESS KJV term for an unbridled expression of sexual urges (Mark 7:22; 2 Cor. 12:21; Gal. 5:19; Eph. 4:19; 1 Pet. 4:3; Jude 4). RSV translated the underlying Greek as licentiousness; the NAS, as sensuality. Other translations used a variety of terms: debauchery; indecency; lewdness; sexual sin.

LASEA (Lā sē′ ə) Place name of uncertain meaning. City on south coast of Crete (Acts 27:8).

LASHA (Lā′ shə) Place name of uncertain meaning. A point on the original border of Canaan (Gen. 10:19). The traditional location is at Kallirhoe east of the Dead Sea; others identify it with Nuhashe or Laash in northern Syria near Hamath. The exact meaning of the prepositions and the direction of the borders are not clear.

LASHARON (Lə shâ rŏn) Place name meaning, "belonging to Sharon." Listed as one of towns whose king Joshua killed in conquering Canaan (Josh. 12:18). The early Greek translators had great difficulty with the text, some Greek manuscripts omitting the verse altogether. L represents the Hebrew preposition "of, to, belonging to." Sharon is the name of the plain in which the preceding town Aphek in the list is located. The original Hebrew text may have indicated Aphek in Sharon to distinguish it from other Apheks. See Aphek.

LAST DAY, LAST TIME See Eschatology; Judgment Day.

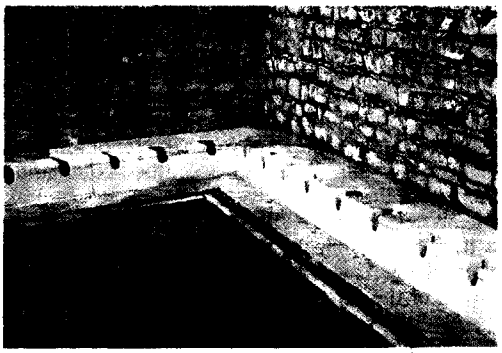
THE LAST SUPPER The last meal Jesus shared with His disciples before the crucifixion. All four Gospels link this meal with Jesus' sacrificial death. The first three Gospels picture Christ's death in the symbols of the broken bread ("This is my body which is given for you" Luke 22:19) and the outpoured wine ("This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins" Matt. 26:28). In John, footwashing replaces the "breaking of bread" as the picture of Christ's humble acceptance of His servant role (John 13:4–20), anticipating His death on the cross which made cleansing from sin and fellowship with Him possible (John 13:8,10). See Footwashing.

The supper not only anticipated Christ's death but also His victory over death in the promise of His drinking wine anew in the Father's kingdom (Matt. 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18; compare 1 Cor. 11:26). Also prominent in all four Gospels is Jesus' prediction of His betrayal by Judas (Matt. 26:21–24; Mark 14:18–21; Luke 22:21–22; John 13:21). According to the Synoptics, the Last Supper was the Passover meal (Matt. 26:17–19; Mark 14:12,16; Luke 22:7,13). In John, the last meal preceded the Passover celebration (John 13:1; John 18:28). In John, Jesus was crucified on the day of preparation at the time when lambs were slaughtered (John 19:14). The tension in the timing of Christ's death should not detract from the united New Testament witness that "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. 5:7). See Lord's Supper; Ordinances.

LATCHET KJV term for a leather thong or strap used to fasten sandals (Gen. 14:23; Isa. 5:27; Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16; John 1:27). According to the rabbis, untying sandals was a slave's task that could not be required of a disciple. John the Baptist thus claimed for himself a position lower than that of a slave before Jesus.



LATIN (Lă′ tĭn) Language of ancient Italy and the Roman Empire and thus one of languages in which the inscription over Christ's cross was written (John 19:20).

A stone slab inscribed with Latin found at Philippi.

LATIN See The Bible, Texts and Versions.

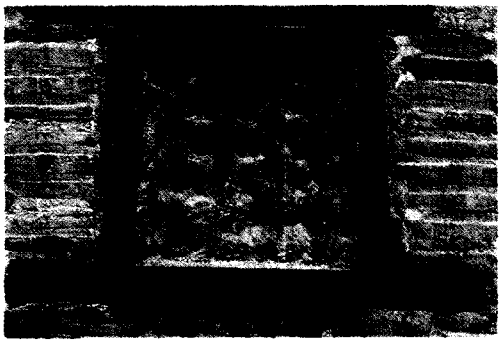
LATRINE A receptacle, generally a pit, used as a toilet (2 Kings 10:27; KJV draught house). Jehu demonstrated his utter contempt for Baal by ordering that his temple be destroyed and converted into a latrine.



The public latrine of ancient Ephesus.

LATTER DAYS See Eschatology; Judgment Day.

LATTICE A structure of crisscrossed strips. Lattices were used as window covering to allow some light to penetrate while keeping heat and rain to a minimum (Judg. 5:28; 2 Kings 1:2; Prov. 7:6, KJV casement; Song of Sol. 2:9). According to one interpretation, in Ezekiel's Temple vision the windows were latticed (Ezek. 41:16,26, NAS). Other translations describe the windows as covered. The NAS also spoke of the lattices of the doves (Isa. 60:8). Other translations use home (TEV), nests (NIV), dovecots (REB), or windows (KJV, NRSV).

An iron lattice over a window in ancient Pompeii dating from the first century A.D.

LAUGH To express joy or scorn with a chuckle or explosive sound. Laughter is central to the account of the birth of Isaac. Both Abraham (Gen. 17:17) and Sarah (18:12) laughed in contempt and disbelief at God's promise that Sarah would bear a son. The name Isaac (from the Hebrew word for laughter) served as a joyful reminder that the last laugh was on those slow to believe (Gen. 21:3,6). Laughter can serve as a sign of contempt (Gen. 38:23; 2 Chron. 30:10; Job. 22:19) or of confidence (Job 5:22; 39:18,22 NAS). References to God's laughing at the wicked demonstrate God's confident contempt (Pss. 2:4; 37:13; 59:8). Laughter is frequently contrasted with signs of mourning (Job 8:21; Ps. 126:2; Luke 6:21,25). Though Hebrew wisdom recognized a time to laugh as part of God's ordering of time (Eccl. 3:4), wisdom downplayed the value of laughter, associating it with fools (Prov. 29:9; Eccl. 7:4,6), calling it madness (Eccl. 2:2), and finding sorrow preferable (Eccl. 7:3).

LAUNDERER See Fuller; Occupations and Professions in the Bible.

LAUREL Garlands of leaves from the laurel or bay tree (Laurus nobilis) were used by the Greeks to honor the winners of the Pythian games. The leaves of the tree were also used for medicine and seasoning. In Psalm 37:35, the wicked are compared to a "green bay tree" (KJV). NAS, REB, and NIV refer to a tree in its native soil. NRSV and TEV find a reference to the towering cedars of Lebanon.

LAVER A large basin or bowl used in purification rites. The Old Testament describes the lavers used in the tabernacle and in Solomon's Temple. The bronze laver of the tabernacle was constructed from metal mirrors provided by the women who ministered at the tabernacle entrance (Ex. 38:8). The priests used the laver for washing their hands and feet before priestly service (Ex. 30:18; 40:30–31). Levites also used water from this laver to purify themselves (Num. 8:7). Solomon's Temple employed a large laver, the molten sea (1 Kings 7:23–26; 2 Chron. 4:2–5), and ten smaller lavers (1 Kings 7:38–39; 2 Chron. 4:6). The priests washed in the molten sea. The ten lavers were used for washing sacrifices (1 Chron. 4:6). See Sea, Molten; Temple.

LAW, ADMINISTRATION OF See Court System; Judges; Sanhedrin.

LAW, ROMAN See Roman Law.

LAW, TEN COMMANDMENTS, TORAH Law refers both to the revelation of the will of God in the Old Testament and to the later elaboration on the law referred to as the "traditions of the elders" in the New Testament (for example, Mark 7:5).

Law is one of the primary concepts in the Bible. The specific translation of the term law is varied. It may be used for a commandment, a word, a decree, a judgment, a custom, or a prohibition. The first five books of the Bible (the Pentateuch) are known as books of the Law because they are based on the commandments which God revealed to Moses.

The Hebrew term most frequently translated "law" in the Old Testament is torah, used more than 200 times. The central idea of torah is that of instruction received from a superior authority on how to live. Torah in the Old Testament came to mean the way of life for faithful Israelites. The Torah is more than just "laws"; it includes the story of God's dealing with humankind and with Israel.

The concept of torah is closely linked to that of covenant in the Old Testament. The covenant agreement between God and His people at Mount Sinai provided the foundation for all of Israel's laws. God, the deliverer of the Israelites from Egypt, set forth His instructions for His people. They were to obey God's laws because of what He had done for them in saving them from Egypt (Ex. 20:2). The laws found in Exodus, Deuteronomy, Numbers, and Leviticus cover all areas of community life. The Torah is a gift of God to His people. Obeying the Torah would result in His blessing (Ex. 19:5,6). Following the Law would provide for the health and wholeness of the covenant community. The Ten Commandments are a summary of the Law (Ex. 20:2–17; Deut. 5:6–21).

Later development in Israel's history gave an expanded meaning to torah. By New Testament times torah meant not only the Old Testament Scriptures (the written Law), but also the oral law (unwritten law) of Israel as well. The religious leaders developed in applying the written Law to new life situations. This oral law is sometimes referred to as "the tradition of the elders" in the New Testament (compare Matt. 15:2; Mark 7:5; Gal. 1:14).

Two kinds of laws can be found in the Old Testament. First are broad categorical laws which set forth general principles. These laws do not specify how they are to be enforced or what penalities are to be invoked. The Ten Commandments are representative of this kind of law. They are basic policy statements for life in a covenant community with God.

Second are case laws. These laws often begin with an "if" or a "when," usually deal with very specific situations. Many times they indicate a punishment for breaking the law (e.g., Ex. 21:2,3,4; 22:1,2,4,5,25).

The Ten Commandments are prohibitions (except for Commandments 4 and 5 in Ex. 20:8–11,12). These ten laws define negatively the heart of the covenant relationship between God and Israel. The first four Commandments are related to one's relationship with God. The next six Commandments have to do with human relationships. It is important to note that right relationships with others follow being rightly related to God. Being rightly related to God compels one towards right relationships to one's neighbors. Here one can see the wonderful balance that is maintained in the Law. Duties to God and to other human beings are not separated.

The Ten Commandments were not given only for the Hebrew people but are abiding laws for all people. Some of the laws of the Bible seem to apply only to specific times, places, and persons, but the Ten Commandments have an abiding quality about them. They convey duties for everyone and reveal to us the basic morality required by God. While the Ten Commandments have universal validity, they are truly significant only when persons are committed to the God behind them. What makes the Ten Commandments unique is the character of the God who gave them. Without God, the Commandments lose their distinctiveness.

Jesus certainly knew the Law and often referred to it. It is possible to say that Jesus was both a critic of the Law and a supporter of it. He was critical of the law if one means "the tradition of the elders" or the oral laws that had grown up around the written Law. The enemies of Jesus frequently accused Him of violating the Law. It is clear that keeping the letter of the Law had become more important to some of the Jews than the purpose behind the Law.

On several occasions Jesus set His own teachings over against those of the elders (Matt. 5:21—6:48). The Pharisees accused Jesus and His disciples of not following the law with regard to "unclean" things (Matt. 15:1–20), and they accused Him of eating with tax-gatherers and sinners (Matt. 9:11). Jesus' greatest conflict came over the sabbath. He rejected their interpretation of the sabbath Law and said that the Son of man is Lord of the sabbath (Matt. 12:8); that the sabbath was made for man and not man for the sabbath (Mark 2:27); and He taught that it was permissible to do good on the sabbath (Mark 3:4).

Jesus inaugurated a new era in which the Law as understood by the Jews of His day would no longer be the guiding principle for the kingdom of God (Luke 16:16). Nevertheless, Jesus claimed not to have come to destroy the Law, but to fulfill it (Matt. 5:17–20). That is, Jesus moved the understanding of the Law from its external, legalistic meaning to its spiritual one. Moving from outward observance to inward motivation and intention is Jesus' concern (Matt. 5:21,22,27,28). He pushes the Law out to its ultimate meaning (thus filling it full). In this sense Jesus affirmed the heart and the spirit of the Law. He moved to a deeper level of meaning, to the spirit behind the Law which God had intended from the beginning.

Jesus did not give us a new law. When Jesus was asked which commandment is the greatest, He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind " (Matt. 22:36,37). Jesus said the second commandment is like the first, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Matt. 22:39). Then He said, "On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets" (Matt. 22:40). Incredibly, Jesus summed up the whole Law and the teaching of the prophets with these two commandments. Behind all of the Law had stood these two great principles of love for God and neighbor. It is important for us to remember that love can never be adequately portrayed in rules or in teachings. It can be seen in the life, death, and resurrection of our Lord. The commandments to love had been there all along; Jesus simply emphasized them in a way that would forever change how we should look at them.

Paul had a lifelong struggle with the Law. By the term "law," Paul meant the Law of God as contained in the Old Testament. He also spoke of a kind of natural law which existed in human beings (Rom. 7:23,25). The "law of sin" meant conduct determined by sin. Paul also used law in this sense when he referred to the "law of faith"—that is, conduct determined by faith in God (Rom. 3:27–28).

Paul's attitude toward the Mosaic Law can be summarized under several main points. First of all, he recognized that the Law had been given for a good purpose; it was holy, just and good (Rom. 7:12,14; 1 Tim. 1:8). The demands of the Law were not evil, but had the effect of pointing out the sin of human beings (Rom. 7:7). Because of man's sinfulness, the Law became a curse instead of a blessing (Gal. 3:10–13).

Second, Paul believed the Law was given for a good purpose, but it could not save (Gal. 3:11; Rom. 3:20). If persons were to become children of God, it would be by means other than keeping the Law. The third theme we find in Paul is that Christ freed us from the requirements of the Law by His death and resurrection (Rom. 8:3,4). Therefore, Christ has become the end of the Law for Christians (Rom. 10:4), and it is faith that saves and not Law (Eph. 2:8,9).

Paul, like Jesus, saw the Law fulfilled in the command to love (Rom. 13:8; Gal. 5:13). Only with the aid of the Spirit of God can we meet the requirement to love which fulfills the Law (Gal. 5:16; Rom. 8). Paul saw the Law as no longer to be viewed legalistically. Nevertheless, it is still the revelation of God, and it helps us to understand the nature of our life in Christ (Rom. 8:3; 13:8–10; Gal. 3:24). D. Glenn Saul LAWGIVER One who gives a code of law to a people (Isa. 33:22; Jas. 4:12). The KJV used lawgiver seven times. Modern translations replace lawgiver with sceptor four times (Gen. 49:10; Num. 21:18; Pss. 60:7; 108:8). At Deuteronomy 33:21 modern translations replace lawgiver with commander (NRSV), leader (NIV), ruler (NAS, REB), or an equivalent. The remaining two cases (Isa. 33:22; Jas. 4:12) identify God as lawgiver. Contrary to popular opinion, Scripture never expressly identifies Moses as "lawgiver." The earliest Greek translation twice identified God as lawgiver (Ps. 9:21; 2 Esdras 7:89) and used the verb nomotheteō (to give law) with God as its subject seven times (Ex. 24:12; Pss. 24:8,12; 26:11; 83:7; 118:33,102). Once the Levitical priests are the subject (Deut. 17:10; compare Heb. 7:11). The closest Scripture comes to identifying Moses as lawgiver is the question of John 7:19 ("Did not Moses give you the law?"). The New Testament more often identifies Moses as the intermediary through whom the law was given (John 1:17; Gal. 3:19). The Epistle of Aristeas is unique among Hellenistic Jewish literature in expressly identifying Moses as the lawgiver (131,148,312).

Christ is sometimes regarded as the "second Moses" or "second lawgiver," though the New Testament does not expressly identify Him as such. Rather the New Testament designates Christ as the One who fulfills the law (Matt. 5:17) or is the end of the law (Rom. 10:4; compare 7:4–6; 8:3–4). Christ does however set a new standard for judgment (Matt. 5:21) and gives a new commandment (John 13:34; 14:15,21; 15:10,12; 1 John 2:3,4,7,8).

LAWLESS, LAWLESSNESS Term used by modern translations to describe people not restrained or controlled by law, especially God's law. As rebellion against God, sin is lawlessness (1 John 3:4; compare 2 Thess. 3:4). Those responsible for Christ's death are characterized as lawless (Acts 2:23) as are Gentiles in their idolatry (1 Pet. 4:3). The leader of the eschatological (end-time) rebellion is called the man of lawlessness (2 Thess. 2:3; compare 2:8). The lawless one is already at work but is presently restrained (2:6–7). The lawless one will be revealed before the return of Christ who will slay him with His breath (2:8).

LAWYER An authoritative interpreter of the Mosaic law. Characterization of the lawyers is especially harsh in Luke's Gospel: they rejected God's purpose for themselves by refusing John's baptism

(7:30); they burdened others without offering any relief (11:45–46); they not only refused God's offer of salvation but hindered others from accepting it (11:52); they refused to answer Jesus' question concerning the legality of sabbath healing (14:3). Lawyer is used in the general sense of a jurist at Titus 3:13.

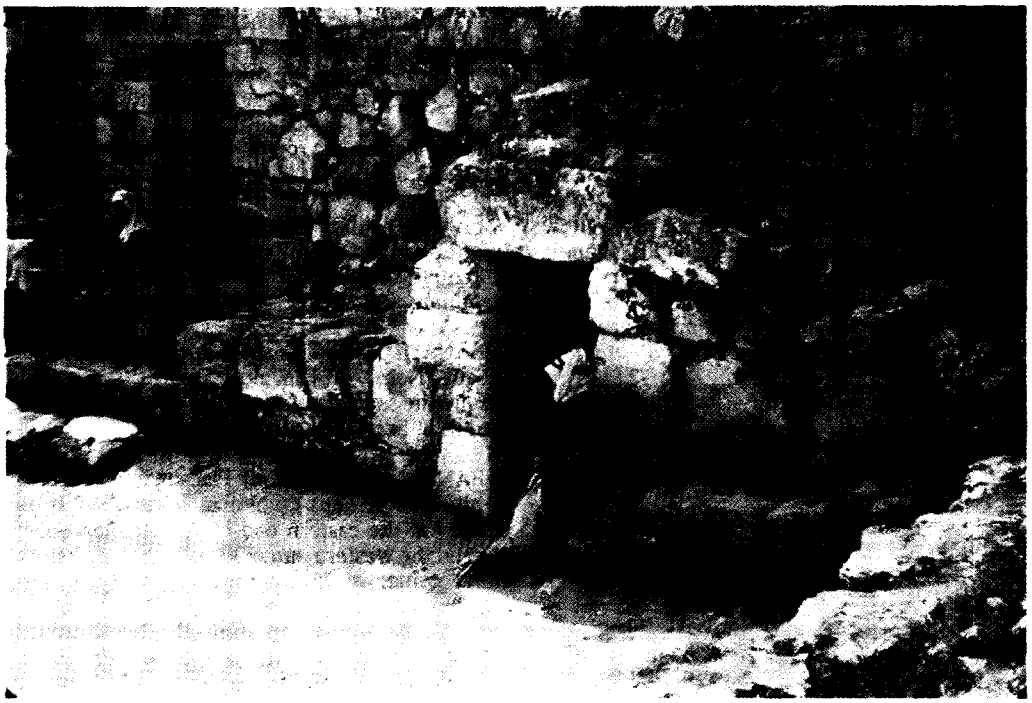
LAYING ON OF HANDS A ritual act wherein hands are placed on a person or animal in order to establish some spiritual communion.

Old Testament Laying on of hands is primarily associated in the Old Testament with the sacrifices prescribed in the Law. An Israelite making a burnt offering was to lay his hand on the animal's head that it might be an acceptable sacrifice for his atonement (Lev. 1:4; 8:18). Peace offerings (Lev. 3:2–13) and sin offerings (Lev. 4:4–33; 8:14) were made in the same way, as were the offering of the "ram of consecration" or ordination (Lev. 8:22) and the sin offering on the annual day of atonement (Lev. 16:21).

To lay hands on the sacrificial animal was a means of transferring one's iniquity to the animal (Lev. 16:22). Sins of the congregation were transferred by the elders (Lev. 4:15) or the high priest (Lev. 16:21) as the people's representatives. Later the king and princes acted on behalf of the nation (2 Chron. 29:20–24). When the Levites were presented to the Lord as a wave offering from the Israelites, the whole assembly laid hands on them (Num. 8:10). The sin of blasphemy was viewed as so severe that all who overheard one cursing the name of the Lord laid their hands on his head prior to stoning him to death (Lev. 24:14–16). While the primary texts convey little of the spiritual meaning of these rituals, later Old Testament texts emphasize the importance of "a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart" (Ps. 51:17).

The act of laying on of hands had other meanings in the Old Testament. Jacob ("Israel") blessed Ephraim and Manasseh by laying his hands on their heads (Gen. 48:13–20), and the psalmist celebrated the Lord's protection as a blessing bestowed by God's having "laid thine hand upon me" (Ps. 139:5). Job longed for someone who could arbitrate between himself and God by laying "his hand upon us both" (Job 9:33). Moses commissioned Joshua and transferred some of his authority to him by the laying on of hands (Num. 27:18–23; Deut. 34:9). Elisha laid his hands on King Joash's hands as a prophetic act signifying God's promise to provide Israel victory over Syria (2 Kings 13:16). In addition, the Old Testament frequently uses the image of laying hands on someone as an act of arrest, capture, or violence (Gen. 27:22; Ex. 22:11; 2 Chron. 23:15; Esther 2:21).

New Testament The most frequent usage of the expression in the New Testament relates to the arrest or capture of someone (Matt. 26:50; Mark 14:46; Luke 21:12; John 7:44; Acts 4:3; 12:1). In contrast, miraculous healing accompanied the laying on of hands. Jesus healed a blind man (Mark 8:23–25), the sick (Mark 6:5; Luke 4:40), and a woman with "a spirit of infirmity" (Luke 13:11–13) by laying hands on them. This seems to have been a characteristic means of healing (Mark 5:23), and Jesus' disciples continued the practice (Mark 16:18; Acts 9:12–17; 28:8). Some view healing by laying on of hands as an extension of the Old Testament blessing. A more explicit example of this is Jesus' laying hands on children to bless them (Mark 10:16; Matt. 19:13–15).



Acts introduces the dynamic but fluid practice of the early church. Acts 6 relates the selection of seven men who were put in charge of the daily service to the widows of the Jerusalem congregation. These men were chosen by the congregation, brought before the apostles, and, after prayer, had hands (whether the congregation's or the apostles' is unclear) laid on them. Fasting, prayer, and the laying on of hands also accompanied the appointment of Barnabas and Saul to their missionary endeavor (Acts 13:3). Peter and John laid hands on baptized believers in Samaria so they might receive the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:14–19). Paul did the same for some disciples at Ephesus who had been baptized into John the Baptist's baptism (Acts 19:6). These disciples began speaking in tongues and prophesying as evidence of the Holy Spirit.

In 1 and 2 Timothy Paul wrote of Timothy's having been given a spiritual gift by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the assembly of elders (1 Tim. 4:14). He also referred to a gift of God that was in Timothy through the laying on of Paul's hands (2 Tim. 1:6). Paul warned against laying hands on any one hastily (1 Tim. 5:22).

Hebrews classified laying on of hands among the elementary teachings that persons of maturity must leave behind (Heb. 6:2). Michael Fink

LAZARUS (Lăz′ ă rŭs) Personal name meaning "One whom God helps." 1. One of the principal characters in a parable Jesus told to warn the selfish rich that justice eventually will be done. Poor Lazarus sat outside the mansion of the nameless rich man to receive whatever food might fall from the banquet table (Luke 16:19–31). Because of his poverty, he lived in poor health, also. In death the roles of the two were reversed, with Lazarus residing comfortably in heaven and the rich man being tormented in hell. The rich man asked that Lazarus be allowed to relieve his thirst. This is refused because of the gulf fixed between heaven and hell. A second appeal came for Lazarus to go and warn the rich man's family so that they might not join him in hell. This was refused because they have had adequate warning already.

2. Lazarus (a shortened form of Eleazer) of Bethany was a personal friend of Jesus and the brother of Mary and Martha (John 11:1–3). Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead after he had been in the tomb for four days to show the glory of God. Lazarus was at the Passover celebration in Bethany six days later. He became a target for murder by the chief priests because of his celebrity. Some believe Lazarus to be the "disciple whom Jesus loved" based on John 11:3 and 21:20–22. He is not mentioned in the other Gospels, although Luke 10:38–42 names the sisters Mary and Martha. See Beloved Disciple. Mike Mitchell

The traditional site of the tomb of Lazarus in Bethany.

LAZINESS See Idle.

LEAD See Minerals and Metals.

LEADER See Prince of Life.

LEAF, LEAVES The foliage of plants or trees. Adam and Eve made their first clothes from leaves (Gen. 3:7). Leaves are frequently used to symbolize blessedness or cursedness. God's renewal of the earth following the flood was epitomized by an olive leaf (Gen. 8:11). God's providential care for the righteous is pictured by the image of a well-watered tree whose leaves do not wither (Ps. 1:3; compare Jer. 17:8). Ezekiel's vision of the new Jerusalem included trees whose leaves never wither and whose leaves have healing power (Ezek. 47:12; compare Rev. 22:2). Withered (Isa. 1:30), shaken (Isa. 33:9), fallen (Isa. 33:4), and faded (Isa. 64:4) leaves serve as images of judgment. A tree lacking fruit with withered leaves (Jer. 8:13) symbolizes a people found lacking when God judges (compare Matt. 21:19; Mark 11:13). Jesus used the appearance of fig leaves which herald the arrival of summer to illustrate the need to heed the signs of the end (Matt. 24:32; Mark 13:28).

LEAGUE KJV used league at Daniel 11:23 in the sense of an agreement (NIV), alliance (NAS, NEB, NRSV), or treaty (TEV).

LEAH (Lē′ ah) Personal name meaning "wild cow" or "gazelle." Older daughter of Laban (Gen. 29:16) and Jacob's first wife. Jacob had asked for the younger Rachel's hand but was tricked into marrying Leah. Thus was preserved the ancient Near Eastern tradition of the elder marrying first. Leah bore six sons to Jacob (Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun) and a daughter (Dinah). Her handmaid, Zilpah, bore two sons to Jacob (Gad, Asher), which by the law of that day were officially Leah's. When Jacob returned to Palestine from Padan-aram, Leah and her children were placed in front of Rachel and Joseph, evidently to absorb any violence from Esau, Jacob's brother. This is indicative of the less-favored status of Leah to Rachel. Leah died in Palestine and was buried in the cave at Machpelah, where lay the remains of Abraham, Isaac, and their wives.

LEANNOTH (Lē ŭn′ nŏth) Transliteration of Hebrew word in title of Psalm 88 possibly meaning "to sing" or "for the poor," "for the sick." It may be part of the title of a tune to which the Psalm was sung. The meaning remains obscure and uncertain.

LEATHER Animal skins tanned and prepared for human use. Elijah the prophet was recognized by his garment of haircloth and leather belt or girdle (2 Kings 1:8). The similar dress of John the Baptist marked him as a prophet (Matt. 3:4; Mark 1:6). Leather shoes are one of the gifts that symbolize God's lavish care for His beloved bride Jerusalem (Ezek. 16:10). See Goatskin; Skins.

A child's leather shoes from Roman Egypt.

LEAVEN (Lēa′ vĕn) A small portion of fermented dough used to ferment other dough and often symbolizing a corruptive influence. The common bread of Old Testament times was made with leaven. Such bread was acceptable as wave offerings for the priests and as loaves to accompany the peace offerings (Lev. 7:11–13; 23:17). However, bread made with leaven or honey, both associated with the process of fermentation and thus a source of corruption, was never to be used as offerings to be burned on the altar (Lev. 2:11–12). Unleavened bread was also prepared in times of haste (1 Sam. 18:24) and was required for the Feast of Unleavened Bread which was celebrated in conjunction with the Passover festival (Lev. 23:4–8). This unleavened bread, or bread of affliction, reminded the Israelites of their hasty departure from Egypt and warned them against corruptive influences (Ex. 12:14–20).

In the New Testament, leaven is a symbol of any evil influence which, if allowed to remain, can corrupt the body of believers. Jesus warned His disciples against the leaven of the Pharisees, their teaching and hypocrisy (Matt. 16:5–12; Luke 12:1). Paul urged the Corinthians to remove wickedness from their midst and become fresh dough, unleavened loaves of sincerity and truth (1 Cor. 5:6–13). Jesus also used leaven to illustrate the pervasive growth of the kingdom of God (Matt. 13:33). Barbara J. Bruce LEBANA (Lē bā′ nà) Personal name meaning "white" or "full moon." Original ancestor of clan of Temple servants (Ezra 2:45; Neh. 7:48). See Nethinim.

LEBANAH (Lē bā′ nah) Alternate spelling of Lebana (Neh. 7:48) in most English translations despite the same names in the Hebrew text. Compare REB. See Lebana.

LEBANON (Lĕb′ ȧ non) Place name meaning "white" or perhaps "white mountain." A small country at the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea and the western end of Asia. It has long been a world center of transportation and trade. The proper noun literally means the "White" (mountain), probably derived from the snow-capped Mount Hermon, also known as Sirion (Ps. 29:6). Hermon is often covered with snow, and its white crown offers a majestic and impressive view. The constant snow-coverage is contrasted with the fickleness and apostasy of Israel (Jer. 18).

Sandy beaches lie along its Mediterranean coast. Rugged mountains rise in the interior. The country itself is dominated by two mountain ridges, the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon mountains. Both ranges run parallel to the coast. The Lebanon range extends for about 105 miles along the coast, from modern-day Tripoli in the north to Tyre in the south.

The mountain ranges are about 6,230 feet high. Some summits reach a height of more than 11,000 feet: the highest peak is el-Qurnat el-Sawda (11,024 ft.). Between the higher parts of the range lie valleys and ravines.

The Holy Valley, which collects the water from the Mountain of the Cedars, is one of the most important valleys. It was in this region that the Maronites found refuge in the beginning of their history. This Holy Valley has retained its significance throughout the ages. Ain Qadisha (Spring of the Holy Valley) is highly revered. It gushes forth in the heart of a cedar forest and mountainside near Bsherrih. Another famous valley is the Valley of Adonis, through which the River of Adonis flows; and to where the pilgrimage of Adonis took place in the spring of the year. See Gods, Pagan.

In the Bible, Lebanon is celebrated in various capacities. It is frequently featured in the Old Testament, in a general way, as the northern boundary of Palestine (Deut.1:24; Josh.1:4), dividing it from Phoenicia and Syria. Its imposing rage was emblematic of natural strength and solidarity, therefore a perfect poetic foil to the majesty of God revealed in a thunderstorm so powerful that it "maketh them to skip like a calf" (Ps 29:6). It was a proverbially lush land, noted for its magnificent forests (Isa. 60:13), especially the "cedars of Lebanon" (Judg. 9:15; Isa. 2:13). For the tree-poor Palestinians, Lebanon's cedars symbolized the ultimate in natural wealth and beauty. The psalmist calls these ancient and beautiful cedars the "trees of the Lord . . . which He hath planted" (Ps. 104:16). It is said that some of the cedars remaining in Lebanon are at least 2,500 years old. They share with the famous redwoods of California the distinction of being the oldest living things on earth.

Cedars, as well as other woods of Lebanon, were used in great abundance in the construction of David's palace and Solomon's Temple and palace buildings (1 Kings 5:10–18; 7:2). Cedar was obtained also for the building of the second Temple or the Temple of Zerubbabel (Ezra 3:7).

The forests of Lebanon have been victims of human greed and irresponsibility. They were exploited by Egypt and Mesopotamia long before biblical times, and they continued to supply precious timber well into the Roman Era. Under the Ottoman Empire (A.D. 1516), the forest almost entirely disappeared. Today there is not much left of the cedar woods; almost all of them are gone. The olive tree also played an important part in ancient times and is still cultivated.

Tyre to which Ezekiel 27—28 is devoted, was one of the most famous cities of the ancient world. Along with the older port of Sidon, it was one of the centers of Phoenician civilization. See Phoenicia.

Many foreign powers have controlled the Phoenician city-states. They include, in order of rule, the Egyptians, Hittites, Assyrians, Babylonians, and Persians. In 332 B.C. Alexander the Great conquered Lebanon. The region came under the control of the Roman Empire in 64 B.C.

Philip Lee

LEBAOTH (Lė bā′ ōth) see Beth-Lebaoth.

LEBBEUS (Lĕb bē′ ŭs) Reading of some ancient Greek manuscripts for Thaddeus in Matthew 10:3 (KJV). Modern translations and interpreters follow earlier Greek manuscripts which read simply Thaddeus. See Thaddeus; Apostles.

LEB-KAMAI, LEB-QAMAI (Lēb-kā′ mī) Transliteration of Hebrew text. A code name for Babylon (Jer. 51:1, NAS, NIV, NRSV, REB, RSV margin; Kambul, NEB). The code employed is athbash, a code which replaces each letter of a word with a letter that stands as far from the end of the alphabet as the coded letter stands from the beginning (z=a; y=b). NAS marginal reading "the heart of those who are against me" arose when the Masoretes added vowels to the code.

LEBO-HAMATH (Lē′ bō-hā′ măth) Place name meaning "entrance to or to come to Hamath." KJV, RSV translate; other modern translations transliterate the Hebrew name. Many modern interpreters think Lebo-hamath was an independent city in the city-state dominated by Hamath in Syria. It could be Lebwe north of Baalbek or Labau east of the Jordan. If a definite city is not meant, Lebo-hamath would represent the territory bordering the northwestern part of the Orontes River. Lebwe is close to the Litani River about 43 miles north of Damascus. Whatever its precise location, Lebo-hamath represented the northern boundary of Canaan promised to Israel (Num. 13:21; compare Ezek. 48:1), not conquered by Joshua (Josh. 13:5; Judg. 3:3), controlled by David (1 Chron. 13:5) and Solomon (1 Kings 8:65), and restored to Israel by Jeroboam II about 793–753 B.C. (2 Kings 14:25; compare 13:25). Amos predicted complete defeat for Israel starting at Lebo-hamath (6:14).

LEBONAH (Lė bō′ nah) Place name meaning "the white one." Town used to locate annual feast site by Israel's elders as they sought wives for decimated tribe of Benjamin (Judg. 21:19). It is probably modern el-Lubban three miles northwest of Shiloh and was known for its fine grapes.

LECAH (Lē′ cah) Personal name meaning "go!" Apparently the original ancestor for whom a town in Judah was named (1 Chron. 4:21). Its location is not known.

LEECH A wormlike, blood-sucking parasite of the class Hirudinae which serves as an symbol of an insatiable appetite (Prov. 30:15; KJV, horseleach).

LEEKS (Lēēks) Either Allium porrum, a bulbous vegetable, or Tragonella foenumgraecum, a grass-like herb. An Egyptian food eaten by the Hebrews during their captivity. After a steady diet of manna in the wilderness, they were ready to return to slavery and the foods of servitude (Num. 11:5).

LEES Solid matter that settles out of wine during the fermentation process. In ancient Palestine, wine was allowed to remain on the lees to increase its strength and flavor. Such wine "on the lees" was much preferred to the newly fermented product. At Isaiah 25:6, a banquet of wine on the well-refined lees symbolizes God's people enjoying the best God can offer. Zephaniah 1:12 pictures the inhabitants of Jerusalem who did not believe God would act as wine resting on the lees. Compare Jeremiah 48:11. Since wine was normally strained before being drunk, the prophetic images point to a temporary respite. To drink dregs or lees is to endure the bitterness of judgment or punishment (Ps. 75:8).

LEFT See Directions (Geographical).

LEFT HAND The hand located on the same side of the body as the heart; generally the weaker of the two hands. The left hand is frequently associated with the less preferable of alternatives. Joseph protested against his eldest being blest with Jacob's left hand (Gen. 48:13–19). A fool's heart inclines to the left (Eccl. 10:2). The goats' place of judgment is at the left hand (Matt. 25:33,41). Ehud, the judge, took advantage of his left-handedness to assassinate Eglon, the king of Moab (Judg. 3:15–22). To not know one's right hand from one's left hand is to be ignorant of right and wrong (Jonah 4:11).

LEG The upper leg or thigh was regarded as one of the choicest parts of a sacrifice and was reserved for the priests (Lev. 7:32–34). The first term translated leg in Isaiah 47:2 (KJV) is also translated robe (NRSV) or shirt(s) (NAS, NIV, REB).

LEGION (Lē′ ǧīōn) In the New Testament a collection of demons (Mark 5:9,15; Luke 8:30) and the host of angels (Matt. 26:53). Behind this usage was the Roman military designation. The legions were the best soldiers in the army. At different times in Rome's history, the legion numbered between 4,500 and 6,000 soldiers. It was composed of differently skilled men: spearmen, commandos, skirmish specialists, calvary, and reserves. Originally, one had to be a property owner and Roman citizen to belong, but these requirements were waived depending on the need for troops. Mike Mitchell

LEHAB (Lē′ hăb) National name meaning, "flame." Singular of Lehabim. See Lahabim.

LEHABIM (Lē′ hā bĭm) See Lehab. "Sons" of Egypt in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:13). Lehabim probably represents an alternative spelling of Lubim, the people of Libya. See Lubim; Libya.

LEHABITES (Lē′ hā bītes) NIV spelling of Lehabim. See Lahabim.

LEHEM (Lē′ hĕm) Place name meaning "bread" or "food." NRSV reading (1 Chron. 4:22) based on evidence from early Latin and Greek translations. The name appears in a list of members of tribe of Judah. Hebrew reads Jashubi-lehem (KJV, NAS, NIV). REB, TEV emend the text to read, "came back to" or "settled in Bethlehem." See Jashubi-lehem.

LEHI (Lē′ hī) Place name meaning "chin" or "jawbone." City where Samson killed 1,000 Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey and where God provided water from the jawbone (Judg. 15). Many interpreters read 2 Samuel 23:11 as occurring at Lehi (TEV, NRSV, REB). The site was apparently in Judah near Beth-shemesh.

LEMUEL (Lĕm′ ū ĕl) Personal name meaning "devoted to God." A king who received words of wisdom from his mother concerning wine, women, and the legal rights of the weak and poor (Prov. 31:1–9). Exactly where his kingdom of Massa was is not known, although certain linguistic features in the text have led scholars to place it in north Arabia, possibly near Edom. This section of Proverbs apparently comes from a non-Israelite woman. See Proverbs.

LEND See Banking, Interest; Loan.

LENGTH, MEASURE OF See Weights and Measures.

LENT The English word lent (stems from an Anglo-Saxon word for "spring" and is related to the English word lengthen) refers to the penitential period preceding Easter. Early Christians felt that the magnitude of the Easter celebration called for special preparation. As early as the second century, many Christians observed several days of fasting as part of that preparation. Over the next few centuries, perhaps in remembrance of Jesus's fasting for forty days in the wilderness (Matt. 4:1–2), forty days became the accepted length of the Lenten season. Since, from the earliest years of Christianity, it had been considered inappropriate to fast on the day of the resurrection, Sundays were not counted in the forty days. Thus, the Wednesday 46 days before Easter came to be regarded as the beginning of Lent.

In the early centuries, the season before Easter was also the usual period of intense training for new Christians. During this period, the catechumens (those learning what it meant to be Christians) went through the final stages of preparation for baptism, which usually occurred at dawn on Easter Sunday. As the practice of infant baptism increased, the emphasis on Lent as a training period decreased. See Church Year. Fred A. Grissom

LENTILS See Plants in the Bible.

LEOPARD See Animals.

LEPER See Diseases.

LEPROSY (Lĕp′ rō sy) A generic term applied to a variety of skin disorders from psoriasis to true leprosy. Its symptoms ranged from white patches on the skin to running sores to the loss of digits on the fingers and toes.

For the Hebrews it was a dreaded malady which rendered its victims ceremonially unclean—that is, unfit to worship God (Lev. 13:3). Anyone who came in contact with a leper was also considered unclean. Therefore, lepers were isolated from the rest of the community so that the members of the community could maintain their status as worshipers. Other physical disorders or the flow of certain bodily fluids also rendered one unclean (see Lev. 12:1—14:32; 15:1–33). Even houses and garments could have "leprosy" and, thus, be unclean (Lev. 14:33–57).

Jesus did not consider this distinction between clean and unclean valid. A person's outward condition did not make one unclean; rather that which proceeds from the heart determines one's standing before God (Mark 7:1–23; compare Acts 10:9–16). Therefore, Jesus did not hesitate about touching lepers (Mark 1:40–45) and even commanded His disciples to cleanse lepers (Matt. 10:8). Jesus even made a leper the hero of one of His parables (Luke 16:19–31). See Diseases, Treatment of.

LESHEM (Lē′ shĕm) Place name meaning "lion." City tribe of Dan occupied (Josh. 19:47). An alternate Hebrew spelling of Laish. See Laish.

LETTER A written message sent as a means of communication between persons separated by distance. Letters in the Bible consist of two categories: (1) letters mentioned and sometimes found in Bible books and (2) books of the Bible that are themselves letters.

Old Testament One of the earliest biblical references to a letter was the letter that David wrote to Joab about Uriah (2 Sam. 11:14–15). Ironically, Uriah was the bearer of the letter that contained orders for his own death. This letter was typical of many in the Old Testament in its brevity and terseness. This can be accounted for by the fact that the letter was from king to subject; thus, many standard expressions of polite address have been omitted (compare Ezra 4:17; 5:7).

Jezebel sent letters in Ahab's name ordering Naboth's death. She sealed the letters with Ahab's seal (I Kings 21:8–11). The king of Syria sent Naaman to the king of Israel with a letter instructing that Naaman be cured of his leprosy (2 Kings 5:5–6). Jehu sent letters to the guardians of the sons of Ahab, ordering that the sons of Ahab be killed (2 Kings 10:1–7). King Hezekiah of Judah sent letters by couriers ordering that the Passover be kept (2 Chron. 30:1–6). The king of Assyria sent a threatening letter to Hezekiah (2 Kings 19:8–14). The king of Babylon sent Hezekiah letters and presents (2 Kings 20:12).

Jeremiah 29 contains a different kind of letter. The prophet Jeremiah wrote a pastoral letter to Jewish exiles in Babylon. Unable to be with the exiles, Jeremiah wrote words of exhortation and encouragement. The content, purpose, and tone of this letter foreshadowed the letters that became books of the New Testament and sound very much like the letters Paul, Peter, James, and John wrote.

The period of the restoration resulted in many letters. The Persian Empire must have been a fertile period for letter writing (See Israel, History of). These letters are mentioned in the books of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. See Ezra 4—6; Nehemiah 2; 6; Esther 3; 8; 9.

New Testament Letters are even more important in the New Testament. A number of references appear to letters within other Bible books. More than half of the books of the New Testament are letters.

The Book of Acts contains several letters and references to letters. When Saul went to Damascus to persecute believers, he went armed with letters from the high priest (Acts 9:1–2; 22:5). After the Jerusalem conference, a letter was written to inform the churches of the decision that had been reached. Men were selected to carry the letter and to explain it to the churches (Acts 15:22–23). (Compare also Acts 23:16–35; 28:21; 1 Cor. 16:3; 2 Cor. 3:1–2).

Archaeological finds have confirmed that letters were common. Many letters were written on papyrus for business and personal reasons. See Paper; Papyrus. These archaeological finds also show that the form of letters in the New Testament reflected the letters of that time.

The nature of Paul's work made letters an important means of communication. He traveled widely and established many churches. He spent part of his time imprisoned. He continued and expanded his ministry by writing letters. He wrote letters to places he had been and to places he hoped to visit. Paul's critics in Corinth accused Paul of being bolder in his letters than in his personal ministry. Paul denied the charge. He viewed his letters as consistent with what he would have said had he been there in person (2 Cor. 10:9–11).

Most of Paul's letters were addressed to churches. Even the letters addressed to individuals were designed to minister to churches. The so-called Pastoral Letters to Timothy and Titus were sent to men who were working with churches in given areas. Even the Letter to Philemon included the church in its greeting (Philem. 1–2).

The Roman Empire had a postal service, but it did not include personal letters. Paul's letters, therefore, were carried by messengers (see Phil. 2:25; Col. 4:7–8).

Most of Paul's letters were designed to be read to entire churches. Colossians 4:16 instructed the Colossian church to read the letter and to pass it along to the Laodicean church. The Colossians also were told to read the letter that Paul had written to the Laodiceans. Scholars disagree about the identity of the letter to the Laodiceans. Some say that it was the Letter to the Ephesians. Others feel that it was the Letter to Philemon. Or it may have been a letter that has not survived. Paul wrote other letters that have not survived. Perhaps two such letters are mentioned in 1 Corinthians 5:9 and 2 Corinthians 7:8.

Second Peter 3:15–16 mentions the difficulty some people had in understanding Paul's letters. This implies that Paul's letters were widely read. It also shows that some first-century readers had problems understanding all that Paul wrote.

The New Testament contains other letters. The two Letters of Peter and the Letter of Jude follow the familiar first-century form of letters.

The salutation is the only letter characteristic that has been postively identified in the Book of James. The content and approach of James is that of a wisdom writing. (See James; Wisdom and Wisemen). Hebrews on the other hand, begins like a sermon and ends like a letter. See Hebrews.

The three letters of John have some distinctives in style and format; only 2 and 3 John have the basic letter format. Their brevity parallels the vast majority of surviving Hellenistic letters.

Even the Book of Revelation has some characteristics of a letter. John sent it to the churches of Asia (Rev. 1:4). Chapters 2—3 contain letters to these churches from the risen Lord.

Robert J. Dean

LETTER FORM AND FUNCTION Letters may be divided into three parts: the opening, body, and close. Each part has typical conventions and its own basic function.

The basic function of the letter opening is to establish a relationship between the sender and the addresse. These parties are usually identified with the salutation formula "X to Y: Greetings" (Acts 15:23; 23:26; Jas. 1:1). In Paul's letters (and those influenced by his practice), the conventional greeting was transformed into a confession of faith: "Grace to you and peace from God our father, and the Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2). In secular Greek letters a wish (or prayer) for the recipient's good health often follows the salutation. Third John 2 is the sole New Testament example. Pauline letters typically replace the health wish with a prayer of thanks (Rom. 1:8–15; 1 Cor. 1:4–9; 2 Cor. 1:3–11) which frequently builds relationship by mention of partnership in the gospel (2 Cor. 1:6–7; Phil. 1:5–7; 1 Thess. 1:3). In Paul's letter to the Roman Christians (a church he did not found), Paul established relationship by laying claim to a mission to all Gentiles, including those at Rome (Rom. 1:5–6), and by anticipating gospel partnership (Rom. 1:11–12). Hellenistic letter openings also frequently mention correspondence received (See 1 Cor. 1:11). See Greeting.

The basic function of the letter body is communication. The body of a Hellenistic letter frequently began with a concise statement of the letter's primary theme, for example, the role of faith in salvation (Rom. 1:16–17), the problems of division in the church (1 Cor. 1:10), the impossibility of another "gospel" (Gal. 1:6). The communicative function of the body is underlined by the frequency of "disclosure" formulas: "We/I do not want you to be uninformed" (1 Cor. 10:1; 2 Cor. 1:8; 1 Thess. 4:13 NSRV); "I want you to know" (Gal. 1:11 NRSV; Phil. 1:12; Col. 2:1); "Do you not know?" (Rom. 6:3; 1 Cor. 3:16; 9:24 NRSV). Frequently, these disclosure formulas mark the beginning of a new paragraph. Another common transitional formula is "Concerning" (1 Cor. 7:1; 8:1; 12:1; 16:1; 1 Thess. 4:9,13; 2 Thess. 2:1). Letters may be distinguished according to the predominate purpose of the communication: letters of praise or blame, letters of exhortation and advice, or letters of mediation. Most New Testament letters are of a mixed type. New Testament examples of letters of censure or blame are found in Galatians (See 1:6; 3:1) and five of the letters to the churches in Asia Minor in Revelation 2—3 (excluding Smyrna and Philadelphia). Such letters are characterized by expressions of shock (Gal. 1:6), insulting address (Gal. 3:1), and the formulas "I have this against you" (Rev. 2:4,14,20 NRSV) and "I reprove and discipline" (Rev. 3:19 NRSV). The letters to the churches at Smyrna and Philadelphia serve as examples of letters of praise (Rev. 2:8–11; 3:7–13). Philemon serves as the New Testament example of a letter of mediation. (Paul interceded with Philemon on behalf of his runaway slave Onesimus). The letter of recommendation is the most common form of letter of mediation in secular letters. Recommendations are embedded in several of Paul's letters: of Phoebe (Rom. 16:1); of Timothy (1 Cor. 4:17; 16:10–11; Phil. 2:19–24); and of Epaphroditus (Phil. 2:25–30). Most New Testament letters are best characterized under the broad heading "letters of advice or exhortation." Second John serves as an excellent example of a letter offering specific advice (2 John 10–11). More often New Testament letters have broader paraenetic goals.

The letter close again highlights the relationship between the sender and addressees. Secular letters frequently concluded with an oath formula such as "I swear by the gods that I will . . ." Such formulas perhaps suggested James' concluding prohibition of oaths (5:12). A better New Testament parallel to the secular practice is Paul's calling God as witness (Rom. 1:9; Phil. 1:8). Secular letters also frequently closed with a health wish. This practice perhaps suggested James' topic of sickness (Jas. 5:13–16). Better parallels are again found in the Pauline letters in which a closing benediction (2 Cor. 13:13; Gal. 6:18; Eph. 6:23–24) expresses concern for the recipients' spiritual condition. Secular letters typically closed with the expression "farewell" (Acts 15:29). Chris Church

LETUSHIM (Lĕ tū′ shĭm) Tribal name meaning "smiths." Descendants of Abraham and Keturah (Gen. 25:3). See Keturah. Nothing else is known of this tribe. They do not appear in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 1:32).

LETUSHITES (Lĕ tū′ shītes) NIV spelling of Letushim. See Letushim.

LEUMMIM (Lĕ ŭm′ mĭm) Tribal name meaning "peoples." Descendants of Abraham and Keturah. See Keturah. Probably an Arabian tribe of which we know nothing. They do not appear in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 1:32).

LEUMONITES (Lĕ ŭm′ ō nītes) NIV spelling of Leummim. See Leummim.

LEVI (Lē′ vī) Personal name meaning "a joining." 1. Third son of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 29:34) and original ancestor of Israel's priests. He is characterized in Scripture as savage and merciless, avenging the rape of his sister, Dinah, by annihilating the male population of an entire city (Gen. 34:25–31). Later, Jacob spoke harshly of Levi rather than blessing him (Gen. 49:5–7). The tribe which bears his name also is characterized as instruments of wrath. After the people of Israel sinned in the wilderness by making the molten calf, Moses commanded the people of Levi to slaughter those who had participated in the debacle (Ex. 32:28). Levi's descendants became a tribe of priests. See Levites. 2. Name of two of Jesus' ancestors (Luke 3:24,29). 3. A tax collector in Capernaum who became a follower of Jesus (Mark 2:14). In the parallel account in the Gospel of Matthew the man's name is given as "Matthew" instead of "Levi" (9:9). The name of Levi appears in none of the lists of apostles.

LEVIATHAN (Lĕ vī′ ă than) Name of an ancient sea creature subdued by God meaning "coiled one." Leviathan appears in biblical and extrabiblical literature. A serpentine form is indicated in Isaiah 27:1 ("leviathan the piercing [KJV] serpent").

The sea creature is used interchangably with other mysterious creations of the divine. Again, Isaiah 27:1 refers to leviathan as "the dragon that is in the sea." The psalmist in 74:14 presents leviathan among the supernatural enemies of God dwelling in the sea with many heads. Job 3:8; 41:1–9 present the sea creature as too formidable a foe for a person to consider arousing. Yet, leviathan was created by God and subject to Him (Ps. 104:24–30).

Apocalyptic literature depicts leviathan as throwing off his fetters at the end of the present age, only to be defeated in a final conflict with the divine. See Apocalyptic. Ugaritic literature of Ras Shamra during the 1300s B.C. depicts the mythical Baal defeating the sea creature called Lotan (another linguistic form for Leviathan). The Hittites wrote of a struggle between the dragon Illuyankas and the mortal Hupasiyos. A cylinder seal found at Tel Asmar dated about 2350 B.C. shows two men fighting a seven-headed serpent.

Leviathan was seen in ancient legend as a sea monster engaged in primordial warfare with the gods. This creature represented chaos in a personified manner which any creator deity had to overcome in order to create. Leviathan was also seen as a threat to the orderliness of the universe and ultimately to be subdued at the end of time.

The ancient pagan myths concerning Leviathan were familiar to the Hebrews of the Old Testament. To what degree these myths of Leviathan influenced the Hebrews, if any, may never be known. Scripture used the name known to so many people and removed fear connected with it, showing God easily controlled Leviathan, who thus offered no threat to God's people. See Rahab; Creation. Steve Wyrick

LEVIRATE LAW, LEVIRATE MARRIAGE The legal provision requiring a dead man's brother (levirate) to marry his childless widow and father a son who would assume the dead man's name and inherit his portion of the Promised Land (Deut. 25:5–10). The practice is an important element in the story of Ruth (Ruth 2:20; 3:2,9–13; 4:1–11). The Sadduccees appealed to levirate law in asking Jesus a question about the resurrection (Matt. 22:23–33).

LEVITES (Lē′ vītes) The lowest of the three orders in Israel's priesthood. In the earliest biblical records, sacrifices were offered by the chief of a tribe, the head of a family (Gen. 12:7,8; 31:54) or possibly by a priest at a temple (Gen. 14:18). Originally, Israel's priests and Temple personnel were to be drawn from the firstborn of every family in Israel (Ex. 13:11–15). Later, God chose the tribe of Levi to carry out this responsibility for Israel (Num. 3:11–13). The tribe of Levi was appointed because it was the only tribe that stood with Moses against the people who worshiped the golden calf (Ex. 32:25–29; Deut. 10:6–9). The Levites were not given a tribal inheritance in the Promised Land (God was their inheritance) but were placed in 48 Levitical cities throughout the land (Num. 18:20; 35:1–8; Josh. 13:14,33. See Levitical Cities. The tithe of the rest of the nation was used to provide for the needs of the Levites (Num. 18:24–32). Since the Levites were dependent on the generosity of others, families were encouraged to invite the Levites (as well as widows, strangers, and orphans) to join them in their eating and their celebration of the joyous national feast (Deut. 12:12,18; 16:11,14). These factors point to the total dedication of the Levites to the work of the Lord rather than the earthly concerns of making a good living.

The tribe of Levi included at least three separate families: Gershon, Kohath and Merari (with the families of Moses and Aaron being treated somewhat separately from the rest of the family of Kohath). During the wilderness journey they were in charge of taking the tabernacle down, transporting it, setting it up and conducting worship at the tent where God dwelt (Num. 1:47–54; 3:14–39). In some passages (Deut. 17:9,18; 18:1; 24:8), the terms priest and Levite (or Levitical priests) seem identical, but in Exodus 28 and Levitcus 8—10 it is clear that only the family of Aaron fulfilled the priestly duties of offering sacrifices in the tabernacle. Because there appears to be a different way of handling the relationship between the priests and the Levites in these texts, interpreters differ in the way they understand the Levites. Although it is possible that the role of the Levites changed or that the distinction between the priests and Levites was not maintained in each period with equal strictness, the interpretation which maintains a general distinction between the priests and Levites seem to fit most texts.

The Levites were consecrated to God and given by God as a gift to Israel in order that they might perform the duties at the tabernacle (Ex. 29; Lev. 8). Their work made it possible for the people to come to the tabernacle and offer sacrifices for the atonement of sins. The Levites assisted the priests in their responsibilities (Num. 3:5–9; 16:9) by preparing grain offerings and the show bread, by purifying all the holy instruments used in the Temple, by singing praises to the Lord at the time of the morning and evening offerings, by assisting the priests with burnt offerings on sabbaths and feast days, and by being in charge of the Temple precinct and the chambers of the priests (1 Chron. 6:31–48; 23:1–13,24–32; 25:1–6; 2 Chron. 29:12–19). Because of their work, the holiness of the Temple was maintained; and the glory of the Lord dwelt among Israel. During David's reign, the Levites were integrated into the administration of the government, including the keeping of the gates, judges, craftsmen, muscians, and overseers of the royal treasury (1 Chron. 9:22–28; 23–26). In Jehoshaphat's time the Levites were involved with teaching the people the word of God (2 Chron. 17:7–9). This responsibility probably continued into the postexilic period of Ezra (Neh. 8:9–12). Gary Smith

LEVITICAL CITIES (Lĕ vĭt' ĭ cal) Residence and pasture lands provided the priestly tribe of Levi in lieu of a tribal inheritance. Because of their priestly duties, the tribe of Levi did not receive any part of the land of Canaan as an inheritance (Num. 18:20–24; 26:62; Deut. 10:9; 18:1,2; Josh. 18:7). To compensate them for this, they received the tithes of Israelites for their support (Num. 18:21), and 48 cities were allotted to them from the inheritance of the other tribes. On the average, four cities from each tribe were Levitical cities. The practice of setting cities aside in this manner was a common Ancient Near Eastern practice.

The Levites were not the sole possessors or occcupiers of these cities. They were simply allowed to live in them and have fields to pasture their herds. These cities did not cease to belong to the tribes within which they were located. Although six of the 48 were asylums for those guilty of manslaughter (Kedesh, Shechem, Hebron in Canaan, Bezer, Ramoth-Gilead, and Golan), Levitical cities and cities of refuge are not synonymous. See Cities of Refuge. The privilege of asylum was not extended to all 48 Levitical cities. The aim of having cities of refuge was to control blood revenge by making it possible for public justice to intervene between the slayer and the victim's avenger of blood. The cities of refuge were probably priestly cities containing important shrines. Cities of refuge also served as punitive dentention centers. The slayer was not permitted to leave until the death of the high priest. This was possibly interpeted as a vicarious expiation of life by life.

Levitical cities were a series of walled cities, apart from the lands surrounding them. Unwalled suburbs and fields outside the cities remained tribal property. The Levites could not sell any open plots of land.

The legal status of Levitical houses within these cities differed from ordinary property. To prevent the dispossession of Levites, it was ordained that they might at any time redeem houses in their own cities which they had been forced by need to sell. Moreover, such a house, if not redeemed, reverted to its original Levitical owner during the year of Jubilee. See Jubilee, Year of. Pastureland belonging to Levites could not be sold (Lev. 25:32–34).

Theological, political, and economic reasons led to establishing the cities. The cities formed bases of operation so that the Levites could better infiltrate each of the tribes to instruct them in God's covenant. Such bases would be most needed precisely where one finds them: in those areas least accessible to the central sanctuary. Obviously, there was also a political dimension. Certainly, the Levitical desire to secure Israel's loyalty to the Lord of the covenant would also imply a commitment to secure loyalty to the Lord's anointed, the king. There was a blending of covenant teaching and political involvement. The economic factor may have been the most significant. The list of cities describes the dispersion of the Levites who were not employed at the large sanctuaries, had no steady income, and who belonged, therefore, in the category of widows and orphans. The cities were established for men needing economic relief. Gary D. Baldwin

LEVITICUS (Lĕ vĭt ĭ cŭs) The third book of the Old Testament containing instructions for priests and worship. The title is borrowed from the Vulgate, the Latin translation of the Old Testament, and means the Levitical book. Such a title indicates that the book relates to worship, matters attended to by the Levitical priests.

The first section of Leviticus relates to the latter part of the Book of Exodus. Exodus 26—27 give the Lord's instruction for the building of the tabernacle, the place of worship during ancient Israel's sojourn in the wilderness. These instructions are carried out and the tabernacle accepted as an appropriate place of worship (Ex. 35—40). Exodus 28—29 recount the Lord's instructions for ordaining Aaron and his sons as priests. This ordination takes place in Levitcus 8—9. One of the primary tasks of the priests was to offer sacrifice at the tabernacle. Before beginning this practice, ancient Israel needed instruction on the offering of sacrifice. The Book of Leviticus begins at that point. Before listing the major types of sacrifice, we should consider its basic significance. A sacrifice is in part a gift to God, not as a way to earn God's favor but as a way to give thanks for God's gift of life. Sacrifice is also a means of facilitating communion between God and worshipers. Another important purpose of sacrifice is atonement, restoring the relationship between God and worshiper. In the offering of sacrifice, worshipers give of themselves to God. In the shedding of the blood of the sacrificial victim, the vital power of life is released (Lev. 17:11). God honors this act and gives life back to the worshiper. Thus sacrifice was important in the relationship between the ancient Israelite and God.

Leviticus lists five main types of sacrifice: (1) The whole burnt offering: a means of atonement that symbolizes the dedication of the whole life to God. The entire animal was burned on the altar (Lev. 1:3–17). (2) The cereal or grain offering; indication that everyday life is a gift from God, since grain constituted the everyday diet in ancient Israel (Lev. 2:1–16). (3) The peace, or shared, offering; the sacrifice of part of the animal and a communal meal from the remainder of the meat (Lev. 3:1–17). (4) The sin, or purification, offering; a sacrifice of repentance for sin which has broken human relations to God and has endangered the welfare of the community (Lev. 4:1—5:13). This sacrifice is for unwitting sin (Lev. 4:2,13,22,27). (5) The guilt offering: might also be called a compensation or reparation offering, for it calls for sacrifice and compensation to one who has been wronged. The guilty one repays that which has been taken plus 20 percent (Lev. 5:14—6:7).

Leviticus 6—7 provide further instruction on sacrifice for the priests, and Leviticus 8—10 describe the beginning of sacrifice at the tabernacle.

Leviticus 11—15 provide instruction on that which is clean and unclean. A person who comes into contact with an unclean object becomes unclean and is not allowed to participate in worship. Thus it is important to avoid contact with that which is unclean because worship was such a central life-giving event in the life of the community of God's people. These chapters describe various causes of uncleanness, including improper diet, childbirth, and various skin diseases. Leviticus 11 presents the famous dietary regulations, and Leviticus 12 describes uncleanness related to childbirth. Leviticus 13 gives instruction in determining uncleanness related to leprosy, and Leviticus 14 describes the way to cleanse leprosy. Leviticus 15 lists bodily discharges which cause one to be unclean.

Leviticus 16 describes the ritual of the Day of Atonement, a way of removing the impact of sin and uncleanness. First, the priest made sacrifice for himself so that he was prepared to do the same for the community. Then two goats were brought, and one chosen for sacrifice. It was offered as a purification offering, and the blood was used to cleanse the sanctuary of any sin and uncleanness. The priest then took the other goat, the scapegoat, and confessed the sin of the people with his hands over the goat, symbolically passing the sin of the people to the goat. Then the goat was taken into the wilderness, a significant symbol of the removal of the sin of the people. This central ritual assumed that ancient Israel would encounter sin and uncleanness. Since God is perfectly holy, the Lord could not dwell among sin and that which is unclean. This ritual then provided a means of removing sin and uncleanness so that God could continue to dwell among the people and be present in the sanctuary to give them life.

Leviticus 17—27 is the Holiness Code. This section gets its name from the frequent use of the phrase, "You shall be holy; for I the Lord Your God am holy." In the Old Testament, holiness means to be set apart; however, it does not indicate being set apart from the world in a separatistic way. The term is used of ancient Israel's being set apart to God. As God is holy—set apart, unique, different, distinct, "There is no other like God"—so ancient Israel as people of God was to be holy, different from other people, because they were people of God. These chapters then give instruction in how ancient Israel was to live a holy life. Leviticus 18 illustrates this. The chapter begins with a plea to live not as the Egyptians, whom ancient Israel had just left, nor as the Canaanites, whom ancient Israel would soon encounter, but as people of the Lord God. Then the chapter gives instruction in sexual conduct, particularly on forbidden sexual relations. Living according to such instruction would distinguish ancient Israel from other people in the land as people of the holy God. The conclusion of chapter 18 emphasizes this again in urging the people to be loyal to God. So holiness is not a means of removing the people from the world but of giving them a way to relate to the world as the people of God.

A number of the instructions in the Holiness Code relate to ethics and faithfulness to the Lord. Note the famous verse in Leviticus 19:18, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." There is also instruction on keeping the sabbath as a day of rest and worship. Each seventh year was to be a sabbath year for the land, to give it renewal and also as a sign that the land is not owned by ancient Israel but a gift from God. Each fiftieth year ($7 \times 7 + 1$) was a jubilee year in which all slaves were to be freed and property revert to its original owner. This again shows that people do not own other persons or property; they are rather stewards of such gifts from God. This practice shows that life is to be structured for the good of the community rather than isolated individuals.

These chapters also contain instructions on worship. Regular worship in the tabernacle was to include the constant burning of the lamp. This symbolized both the Lord's presence with the people and light as the first of God's creations. Also of importance in the tabernacle was the bread which symbolized the relationship between God and ancient Israel and reminded the people that God gives the gift of food. The Holiness Code also gives instruction on the special feasts. In the spring came Passover and unleavened bread, reminders of the Exodus from Egypt. The summer feast (Weeks and Pentecost) related to the harvest and celebrated the giving of the law. The fall festival included the Day of Atonement and the beginning of the new year. Also here was the Feast of Tabernacles, a harvest festival remembering the time in the wilderness.

The message of Leviticus begins with the fact that God is present with the people and continues with the notion that God is perfectly holy. This is why the book gives so much instruction on holiness and includes sacrifice as a means of removing the effects of sin and uncleanness so that this perfectly holy God can continue to dwell among and give life to the people. All of this instruction is a gift from God and helps the people understand how to live as God's covenant people. The book thus provides an important part of the story of God with the people, for it gives instruction on how to maintain and, when necessary, restore that relationship. The book seeks to explore further the instruction in Exodus 19:6, "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

The New Testament uses Leviticus to speak of the atoning sacrifice of Christ.

Outline

I. Offer Yourself in Praise and Adoration to God (1:1—7:38).
  A. Offer pleasing sacrifices (1:1—6:7).
    1. Offer burnt offerings (1:1–17).
    2. Offer cereal offerings (2:1–16).
    3. Offer peace offerings (3:1–17).
    4. Offer sin offerings (4:1–35).
    5. Offer guilt offerings (5:1—6:7).
  B. Give instructions to the priests who offer pleasing sacrifices (6:8—7:38).
    1. Give priestly instructions for burnt offerings (6:8–13).
    2. Give priestly instructions for cereal offerings (6:14–23).
    3. Give priestly instructions for sin offerings (6:24–30).
    4. Give priestly instructions for guilt offerings (7:1–10).
    5. Give priestly instructions for peace offerings (7:11–38).

II. Consecrate Priests to Mediate Between God and People. (8:1—10:20).
  A. Set apart priests who mediate (8:1–36).
  B. Sacrifice for the priests who mediate (9:1–24).
  C. Warn the priests who mediate (10:1–20).

III. Purify Yourself Before God (11:1—16:34).
  A. Eat clean animals; reject unclean animals (11:1–47).
  B. Purify mother and child after childbirth (12:1–8).
  C. Test for an infectious skin disease and remove the infected one from the camp (13:1–59).
  D. Restore the cleansed inhabitant to the community (14:1–32).
  E. Remove the threat of infection from the house (14:33–57).
  F. Cleanse unhealthiness within the community (15:1–33).
  G. Make atonement for the community (16:1–34).

IV. Present Yourself in Holiness Before God (17:1—26:46).
  A. Give attention to acceptable slaughter of beasts (17:1–16).
    1. Make proper sacrifices before the Lord (17:1–9).
    2. Sanctify life by refusing to eat blood (17:10–16).
  B. Follow the commandments of the Lord (18:1—20:27).
    1. Reject abominable sexual practices (18:1–23; 20:10–21).
    2. Warn concerning the danger of abominable practices (18:24–30).
    3. Reverence God in worship (19:1–8).
    4. Show love for your neighbor by righteous living (19:9–18).
    5. Observe proper practices in agriculture, slavery, sacrifices, and the body (19:19–29).
    6. Honor God through worship (19:30–31).
    7. Honor God through life (19:32–37).

8. Worship God alone; forsake other gods (20:1–8).
9. Honor father and mother (20:9).
10. Give diligence to obeying God (20:22–27).

C. Charge mediators to follow regulations which allow presence before God (21:1—24:23)
1. Present themselves holy before God (21:1–24).
2. Present holy gifts to God (22:1–33).
3. Lead worship at holy times (23:1–44).
4. Prepare the holy place (24:1–9).
5. Keep the congregation holy before God (24:10–23).

D. Present both land and people holy before God (25:1–55).
1. Observe the sabbath year (25:1–7).
2. Observe the jubilee year (25:8–22).
3. Care for the poor brother and his land (25:23–55).

E. Remember the blessings and curses concerning the covenant people (26:1–46).

V. Offer Proper Vows Before God (27:1–34).
A. Offer proper vows related to people (27:1–13).
B. Offer proper vows related to a house (27:14–15).
C. Offer proper vows related to fields (27:16–25).
D. Offer proper vows related to firstborn animals (27:26–27).
E. Keep your vows (27:28–34).

See Atonement; Covenant; Holiness, Holy; Purity, Purification; Sacrifice and Offering.

W. H. Bellinger, Jr.

LEVY To impose or collect by authority (Num. 31:28). The priests and Levites were supported in part by a levy of war gains.

LEWDNESS Lust; sexual unchastity; licentiousness. Lewdness sometimes refers to an especially heinous crime: brutal gang rape resulting in murder (Judg. 19:25–27); murder by priests (Hos. 6:9); any vicious crime (Acts 18:14). Most often lewdness is used figuratively for idolatry (Jer. 11:15; 13:27; Ezek. 16:43,58; 22:9; 23:21,27,29,35,48,49; 24:13; Hos. 2:10). Since the cults of many of Israel's neighboring peoples were fertility cults which employed sexual acts as part of worship, the application of lewdness to idolatry or unfaithfulness is easily understood. See Fertility Cults.

LIBATION The act of pouring liquid as a sacrifice to a god. See Sacrifice and Offering.

LIBERALITY NAS term for generosity or openhandedness (Rom. 12:8; 2 Cor. 8:2). The KJV used simplicity for the text of Romans 12:8 and liberality for 2 Corinthians 8:2. The precise meaning of the underlying Greek is a matter of interpretation. "Simplicity" can mean wholeheartedly, generously (NIV, NRSV), or openhanded (REB). "Simplicity" can also mean purely, without mixed motives or desire for selfish gain. See Stewardship.

LIBERTINE (Lĭb′ ĕr tīne) KJV transliteration of Greek for freedmen (Acts 6:9). See Freedmen, Synagogue of.

LIBERTY, LIBERATION Freedom from physical, political, and spiritual oppression. Throughout the Bible, one of God's primary purposes for His people is to free them from physical oppression and hardship and to liberate them from spiritual bondage. One of the dominant themes of the Old Testament is that Yahweh is the God who liberated the Israelites from their bondage in Egypt. In the New Testament, God is the one who liberates people from bondage to sin through Jesus Christ. Jesus showed in Luke 4:18–19 that these purposes extend to all those who are oppressed, not just those who call on His name. This liberation always comes from God, but He desires to use his people to accomplish these purposes. If they refuse, he will use other means. See Freedom.

Steve Arnold

LIBNAH (Lĭb′ nah) Place name meaning "white" or "storax tree." 1. Wilderness station east of the Jordan (Num. 33:20). Its location is not known; Umm Leben 66 miles south of Haradah has been suggested. See Haradah. 2. Town in the Shephelah of Judah that Joshua defeated (Josh. 10:29–30). Joshua allotted it to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:42) and separated it as a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:13). It illustrated western border rebellion against King Joram of Judah (853–841 B.C.) just as Edom represented rebellion in the east (2 Kings 8:22). It lay on the invasion route to Jerusalem followed by Sennacherib about 701 B.C. (2 Kings 19:8). The mother of Kings Jehoahaz (609 B.C.) and Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.) came from Libnah (2 Kings 23:31; 24:18). Debate rages concerning Libnah's location: tell es-Safi at the head of the Elah Valley appears too far north; tell Bornat just west of Lachish; tell el-Judeideh, usually identified as Moresheth-gath. Tell Bornat is the most popular candidate but far from certain.

LIBNI (Lĭb′ nī) Personal name meaning "white." 1. Original ancestor of clan of Levites (Ex. 6:17; Num. 3:21; 26:58). Compare Laadan (1 Chron. 23:7). 2. A Levite in clan of Merari (1 Chron. 6:29).

LIBNITE (Lĭb′ nīte) Member of clan of Libni. See Libni.

LIBRARY A systematically arranged collection of writings. A private library is one owned by an individual; a public library is one owned corpo-rately and open to use by many. A special library of official records is an archive. Many of the earliest libraries were archives housed in palaces or temples.

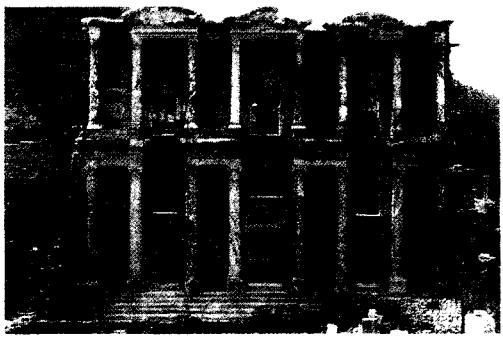
Though the Bible does not use the word library, it makes indirect allusions to collections of books. The Bible itself is a "library," and was called such in Latin—bibliotheca. It was probably not until about A.D. 300 that all 66 books were published in a single volume.



The Material and Form of Ancient Books The earliest writings, which were from Mesopotamia, were inscribed in cuneiform on clay tablets, which ranged in size from six-by-six-inches up to seven-by-thirteen inches. Longer historical texts would be placed on clay barrels or prisms. One omen series required 71 tablets for 8,000 lines. Each tablet when translated would be the equivalent of a few pages in English rather than a complete book.

Egypt provided the ancient world with its famous papyrus, made from the stalks of a reed plant. As this was imported into Greece through the Phoenician harbor of Byblos, the Greeks called a book biblos. The word Bible is derived from its plural ta biblia, "the books," and the Greek word for library bibliothēkē meant a container for such a book. Papyri sheets were normally written only on one side. They could be attached together to form long scrolls (an Egyptian royal papyrus could be over 100 feet long). Greek papyri rolls were generally shorter. The longer books of the New Testament, such as Matthew or Acts, would take a 30-foot scroll.

The Dead Sea Scrolls from Palestine were written on leather. The famous Isaiah Scroll is 23½ feet long; the newly published Temple Scroll was originally 28½ feet long. Late in 200's B.C., the city of Pergamum was supposedly forced by a shortage of papyrus to invent "parchment" (also called vellum), a specially treated animal skin which was stretched thin until it became translucent.

The Jews and pagan Greeks and Romans used both papyri and parchments in scroll form. Christians, perhaps as early as the first century, began to use the codex form, that is, the folding of several sheets of papyrus or parchment in a "book" form. This had several advantages. Both sides of the pages could be used; it was more compact; and above all one could more readily find Scripture references. Almost all of the early Christian Scriptures preserved in Egypt's dry climate are papyri codices.

The re-erected marble facade of the second century A.D. Library of Celsus at Ephesus.

When Paul was in prison in Rome, he requested "the books but especially the parchments" (2 Tim. 4:13). The books were probably scrolls of the Old Testament. On the other hand, the parchments were probably parchment codices, possibly of his notes and letters.

Archives and Libraries in the Old Testament Era Abraham came from Mesopotamia, which had a well-developed tradition of palace and temple archives/libraries. Since 1974 over 20,000 tablets have been found in the archives of Ebla in northern Syria from pre-Abrahamic times. See Ebla. Many of the 25,000 tablets from Mari (1700s B.C.) and of the 4,000 tablets from Nuzi (1400s B.C.) have helped to illuminate the backgrounds of Hebrew patriarchs. See Mari; Nuzi. Sumerian texts from among the 20,000 tablets at Nippur (before 1500 B.C.), and Akkadian texts from among the 20,000 tablets of Ashurbanipal's (about 668–629 B.C.) famous library at Nineveh have provided literary parallels to biblical stories such as the Gilgamesh Epic. See Sumer; Ashurbanipal; Archaeology. Texts written in five scripts and seven languages from the libraries of Ugarit shed important light on the literary and religious background of the Canaanites. See Ugarit, Ras Shamara.

Joseph and Moses (Acts 7:22) had access to the royal libraries of Egypt. The excavations of Amarna have uncovered a building with shelves for storing rolls and an inscription, "Place of the Records of the Palace of the King." Ramesses II (1290–1224 B.C.) had some 20,000 rolls, which no doubt included medical works like the Ebers Papyrus, literary works like The Shipwrecked Sailor, and magical texts like The Book of the Dead.

Solomon, who was famed as a prolific author (1 Kings 4:32), must have had an extensive library. It was probably at the palace archives that such documents as the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel (1 Kings 14:19) and of the Kings of Judah (1 Kings 14:29), were housed. Sacred texts were kept in the Temple (2 Kings 23:2).

We know from the Bible that Persian kings kept careful archives (Ezra 4:15; 5:17; 6:1). Ahasuerus (Xerxes) had a servant read from his chronicle one night as a cure for his insomnia (Esther 6:1).

In 1947 the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in jars in caves near Qumran. These were originally from the library of the Essene monastery. They included manuscripts of all of the Old Testament books except for Esther, works from the Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, and sectarian compositions such as The Manual of Discipline, The War Scroll, and The Temple Scroll. The excavators also recovered a table, a bench, and ink wells from the scriptorium, where the manuscripts were copied. See Dead Sea Scrolls.

Greek and Roman Libraries The tyrants of the 500s B.C., Peisistratus of Athens and Polycrates of Samos, were the first Greeks to gather libraries. Individuals such as Euripides, Plato, and Aristotle also had their own libraries. Alexander the Great took with him copies of Homer, of the Greek tragedians, and of various poets.

The first corporate Hellenistic library was conceived by Ptolemy I at Alexandria in Egypt, and then established by Demetrius of Phalerum (Athens) under Ptolemy II (285–247 B.C.). This became the greatest library in the ancient world, amassing up to 700,000 scrolls. The main building was in the palace area with a secondary collection near the Serapeum. Many of the first librarians were outstanding scholars and literary critics, such as Zenodotus of Ephesus, Apollonius of Rhodes, Callimachus the poet, and Eratosthenes the geographer. Callimachus compiled an annotated catalogue, the Pinakes, in 120 scrolls. It is possible that the learned Apollos (Acts 18:24) may have made use of this famous library.

The second largest Hellenistic library was established at Pergamum (Rev. 1:11) by Eumenes II (197–158 B.C.) The excavators have identified a building next to the temple of Athena as the library. Rows of holes evidently held shelves for the scrolls; stone inscriptions identified the busts of authors. Antony gave Cleopatra its 200,000 scrolls in 41 B.C.

By the first century B.C., wealthy Romans, such as Cicero and Lucullus, had well-stocked libraries in their villas. Satirists mocked those like Trimalchio, who acquired books but never read them. Some 1800 badly scorched papyri have been recovered from a wealthy man's library at Herculaneum, which was buried by volcanic mud from Vesuvius' eruption in A.D. 79.

Caesar was killed in 44 B.C. before he could erect Rome's first public library. This was built some time after 39 B.C. by Asinius Pollio. Augustus built three public libraries; Tiberius built another in the temple of Augustus. Most Roman libraries, such as Trajan's famous Biblioteca Ulpia, had both Greek and Latin collections.

The Use of Libraries The use of archives and libraries would be restricted, first of all, by literacy; and, secondly, in the case of temple or palace archives, to priests and scribes. At Alalakh (1700 B.C.) we have a record of only seven scribes out of a population of 3,000.

Though powerful individuals like the emperors could borrow books, most libraries did not permit books to circulate. An inscription from Athens reads: "No book shall be taken out, since we have sworn thus. [The library will be] open from the first hour (of daylight) until the sixth." See Paper; Writing. Edwin Yamauchi

LIBYA (Lĭb′ ŭ à) A large land area between Egypt and Tunisia. Libya's northern border is the Mediterranean Sea. The people who inhabited the territory in biblical days are referred to variously as Chub (Ezek. 30:5), Put (1 Chron. 1:8; Nah. 3:9), Phut (Gen. 10:6; Ezek. 27:10), and Libyans (Ezek. 30:5; 38:5; Acts 2:10). Most of our knowledge of Libya comes from Egyptian records which mention border wars and invasions. Pharaoh Shishak I (about 950 B.C.) is thought to have been a Libyan. He began a dynasty in Egypt which reigned for over 200 years. He supported Jeroboam I in establishing the kingdom of Israel in 922 B.C. (1 Kings 11:40; 14:25–28; 2 Chron. 12:1–12). Mike Mitchell

LIBYAN (Lĭb′ ŭ an) Person who comes from Libya. See Libya.

LICE See Insects.

LIEUTENANT KJV term for Persian officials of the rank of Satrap (Ezra 8:36; Esther 3:12; 8:9; 9:3). See Judea; Satrap.

LIFE A principle or force considered to underlie the distinctive quality of animate beings. What is living has movement; in death, all movement ceases. "Life" is used in the Bible to describe the animating force in both animals and humans (for example, Gen. 1:20; 2:7; 7:15). Living organisms grow and reproduce according to their kinds. Human life as bodily existence, the value of human life, and its transient nature is described (for example, Ex. 1:14; Pss. 17:14; 63:3; Jas. 4:14). This physical, bodily existence is subject to suffering, illness, toil, death, temptations, and sin (for example, Pss. 89:47; 103:14–16; 104:23; John 11:1–4,17–44; Rom. 5:12–21; 6:21–23; 8:18; 1 Cor. 7:5; 10:13; 2 Cor. 1:5–7; 11:23–29; 1 Tim. 6:9; Heb. 9:27; Jas. 5:10). "Life" as used in the Bible, however, has a much wider application than only to physical, bodily existence.

God's Unique Life Only God has life in the absolute sense. He is the living God (Deut. 5:26; Josh. 3:10; 1 Sam. 17:26; Matt. 16:16). All other life depends on God for its creation and maintenance (Gen. 2:7,19,21–22; Ps. 36:9; Acts 17:25; Rom. 4:17). God is spoken of as the God of life or as life giving (Num. 14:28; Deut. 32:40; Judg. 8:19; Ruth 3:13; 1 Sam. 14:39; 19:6; Jer. 5:2). In stark contrast to God, the idols are dead (Pss. 115:3–8; 135:15–18; Isa. 44:9–20; Jer. 10:8–10,14) as are those who depend on them for life (Pss. 115:8; 135:18).

L

In the same way that God is Creator by giving His breath or spirit to living creatures, so no possibility of life exists when God withholds His breath or spirit (Job 34:14–15; Ps. 104:29). Thus, God is Lord of both life and death (2 Cor. 1:9; Jas. 4:15). Life is something which only God can give (Pss. 36:9; 66:9; 139:13–14) and which only God can sustain (Job 33:4; Ps. 119:116; Isa. 38:16).

This being the case, every life is solely the possession of God. No one has a right to end a life (Ex. 20:13; Deut. 5:17; compare Gen. 4:10,19–24). Since life belongs to God, one must abstain from the consumption of blood, the vehicle of life (Gen. 9:4; Lev. 3:17; 17:10–14; Deut. 12:23–25). Thus, even animal life is valued by God as is evidenced by the fact that animal's blood was sacred to God.

Earthly existence, physical life The Bible summarizes the lives of many people. Often the biblical account includes a statement about their life-span, "These are the years of the life of Abraham which he lived—a hundred and seventy five years" (Gen. 25:7 AT. Following quotations marked AT are the author's own translation.). The Old Testament emphasizes quality of life. The person who finds wisdom is fortunate: "She [wisdom] is a tree of life to those who lay hold of her" (Prov. 3:18 NRSV). Wisdom affects how people live. Psalm 143 testifies to the dark moments of life. Then the psalmist prays for God to intervene: "For the sake of your name [person], oh Lord, revive my life; in your righteousness, bring my soul out of distress" (143:11 AT).

Jesus at His temptation quoted Deuteronomy 8:3: "A person shall not live by bread alone" (Matt. 4:4; Luke 4:4 AT). Rather each person must live "by every word that proceeds out through the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4 AT). Earthly life involves God.

Jesus warned that "one's life does not consist in the abundance of possessions" (Luke 12:15 NRSV). Yet many people see one's belongings as the criterion of success. Jesus healed people and raised some from the dead to relieve the harshness of life (compare Mark 5:23–45). Jesus brought wholeness into human, physical life.

Life as fellowship with God The Old Testament uses bold metaphors for fellowship with God: "For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light" (Ps. 36:9). We come to God to receive life. We walk in fellowship with God, and in His light we see life. Otherwise, we are devoid of life and cannot see. Even when we do come to God, we may depart from Him. Another psalmist pleaded for God's hand to be upon him: "Then we will not move away or backslide from you. Revive us with fullness of life and we will call upon your name" (Ps. 80:18 AT).

The proper response to life as the gift of God is to live life in service to God (Isa. 38:10–20) by obeying the Law (Lev. 18:5), doing God's will (Matt. 6:10; 7:21), and feeding in God's Word (Deut. 6:1–9; 8:3; 32:46–47; Matt. 4:4). Only that life which lives in obedience to God deserves to be called life in the true sense of the word (Deut. 30:15–20; Ezek. 3:16–21; 18:1–32).

The New Testament deepens this emphasis. Paul points out that Christians differ in terms of food they eat and days they celebrate (Rom. 14:1–6); these things are part of custom and tradition. All Christians are to make the Lord Jesus central and live so as to show that He is their purpose for living. "Not one of us lives for himself, and not one dies for himself; for if we live, we live for the Lord, or if we die, we die for the Lord; if therefore whether we live or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ died and lived again, that He might be Lord both of the dead and of the living" (Rom. 14:7–9 NAS). Such living demands fellowship with the Savior who is the purpose for living.

Paul wrote that we died with Christ and were raised together with Him (Col. 3:1–3) and that the lives of Christians (individually) have been hidden with Christ in God. When Christ (the Christians' life) comes a second time, we will be manifested with Him in glory (Col. 3:4). Our fellowship with Him now is dependent on our constantly seeking and thinking the things above (Col. 3:1,2). This is the new and transformed life.

Paul describes God's servants as an aroma for God among the people to whom they witness (2 Cor. 2:15). To those who are perishing, believers are a fragrance from death to death. To those who are being saved, they are a fragrance from life to life (2 Cor. 2:16). Those who reject the message continue on in death. Those who accept the message move from one level of life to another. The life that Christ initiates grows. Paul exclaimed: "Who is sufficient for these things?" (2 Cor. 2:16 NRSV).

Paul set forth his picture of life: The process of living for me, Christ; the act of death, gain (Phil. 1:21). When Christ is central, life has no boundaries.

Christ as the life, the One who imparts life. Old Testament believers identified life with God (Pss. 42:8; 27:1; 66:9). The "I am" sayings in the Gospel of John identify life with Jesus. "I am the bread of life" (John 6:35,48). "I came that they may have life (John 10:10 NRSV). "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25). "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (John 14:6). John states the purpose for his Gospel: "But these things have been written that you might believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, and because you are believing you might be having life in his name [i.e. person]" (John 20:31 AT). Since Jesus was God incarnate, He made genuine life a reality—not a distant prospect.

Life to Come, Life Beyond This Life The genuine life that comes from Jesus to those who obey God is true or eternal life. Just as physical life is the gift of God, so is eternal life (John 6:63; Rom. 6:23; 1 Cor. 15:45; Eph. 2:8–10). Eternal life, or true life, refers as much to the quality of life one has as to the quantity of life. According to the Bible, all people will have an endless duration of life either in the blessing of God's presence or in the damnation of God's absence (see, for example, Dan. 12:2; Matt. 25:31–46; John 5:28–29). The thing that distinguishes the life of these two groups of people is not its duration but its quality. Eternal life is of a quality like God's life. This kind of life is a true blessing (Luke 18:29–30; John 3:15–16; 6:40; 17:3; Rom. 2:7; 1 John 5:12). The quality of this life is marked by freedom from the power of sin to destroy, by holiness, and by a positive relation with God (Rom. 6:20–23). True life is not only something to be hoped for in the future; it is a present reality. Believers share in the life of God in this life (Luke 11:20; John 5:24; Rom. 6:4,11; 8:6; Col. 3:3; 1 John 3:14), but the believer does not fully experience true life until the resurrection when believers obtain the crown of life (Jas. 1:12; Rev. 2:10).

True life is offered to all, but it is received only by those who realize that the source of true life is what God has done in Jesus Christ and does not come from within the individual (John 6:63; Rom. 6:23; Eph. 2:8–10). Those who have true life as a gift are to conform themselves to the manner of life Jesus exhibited (Matt. 10:25; John 5:39–40; 1 Tim. 1:16). Christians are to lose themselves (Matt. 10:39; Rom. 6:2; 2 Cor. 5:15) and serve God in love (Matt. 25:31–46; Mark 10:17–45; Luke 10:25–37; Rom. 2:7; 14:7–8; 2 Cor. 5:15; Gal. 2:19). Just as food maintains physical life, service to God maintains true life (Matt. 4:4; John 6:27,32–58; Acts 7:38; 1 Cor. 9:14).

Eternal life is indestructible (1 Cor. 15:42–57; 1 Pet. 1:23), though threatened by the devil, the law, and death. The devil attempts to destroy this life (Matt. 10:28; Luke 12:4–5; 1 Pet. 5:8), but he is not able to harm it for God protects the believer (Rom. 8:7–39; Eph. 6:10–18). The law threatens this life by tempting people to believe that they can attain this life by their own efforts (Rom. 7:10, 13; 2 Cor. 3:4–6). Death is also an enemy of true life, but it is powerless to destroy the life that God gives (Pss. 9:13*b*–14; 23:4; 33:18–19; 89:48; 116:3–4,8–9; 118:18; Rom. 5:12–21; 6:9–10; 7:24—8:11, 35–39; 1 Cor. 15:51–57; Gal. 6:8; Titus 3:7).

Life beyond this life is not that of a "spirit" but that of a bodily resurrection. Paul highlighted both earthly existence and the life to come: "Godliness is profitable with respect to all things, because it has promise of life now and of the one about to be" (1 Tim. 4:8 AT). This "now" life is one of testing. James says those who pass this test "will receive the crown, i.e. life, which God promised to those loving Him" (Jas. 1:12). This future life is one of open fellowship with God (see Col. 3:4). See Eschatology; Eternal Life; Resurrection.

A. Berkley Mikelson and Phil Logan

LIFE, BOOK OF A heavenly document mentioned in Psalm 139:16 and further defined in the New Testament (Luke 10:20; Rev. 13:8). In it are recorded by God the names and deeds of righteous people. The main theological teaching behind the concept is predestination. Many works of apocalyptic literature not preserved in the Bible speak of a counterpart, a book of destruction. According to this literature one's name can be removed from the book of life for certain sins against God. The Bible speaks only of the Book of Life showing God's power to know His own.

LIFE, TREE OF See Tree of Life.

LIFT To raise or elevate. 1. Hands were lifted in pronouncing a blessing (Lev. 9:22). 2. In ancient times as now, an oath required raising one's hand (Gen. 14:22; Ex. 6:8, NAS margin; Deut. 32:40). 3. To lift a hand against someone is to attack or rebel against that one (2 Sam. 18:28; 20:21; 1 Kings 11:26–27). 4. To lift one's heel against someone is to deal treacherously (Ps. 41:9; John 13:18).

Several uses of lift must be viewed in light of the ancient requirement of prostrating oneself before a superior (Gen. 43:26; 1 Sam. 25:23). 5. To lift up someone's head is to accept the person (Gen. 40:13; Ps. 3:3) or even exalt the person (Ps. 27:6). 6. To lift up one's face is to appear bold and confident of acceptance (2 Sam. 2:22; Ezra 9:6). To lift up one's face may express a rejection of another's sovereignty (Judg. 8:28). The lifting of God's face or countenance is a sign of favor (Num. 6:26; Ps. 4:6). 7. To lift up one's eyes or heart is to be haughty or prideful (Deut. 8:14; 2 Kings 14:10; 19:22; 2 Chron. 25:19; Prov. 30:13; Isa. 37:23). 8. Eyes, hands, heart, and soul are frequently lifted up to God in fervent prayer (Pss. 25:1; 28:2; 63:4; 134:2; 141:2; Lam. 2:19; Dan. 4:34; 1 Tim. 2:8). 9. In John's Gospel, lifting up refers both to the lifting up of Jesus on the cross and to His exaltation (resurrection/ascension) (John 3:14; 8:28; 12:32,34).

LIGHT, LIGHT OF THE WORLD That which penetrates and dispells darkness. The concept of "light" appears numerous times in both the Old and New Testaments. God created light (Gen. 1:3). However, a careful reading of the Scriptures reveals that the physical entity that we call "light" is actually only the second form of light in the universe, since everywhere the Bible declares that God Himself is light. Psalm 27:1 says, "The Lord is my light." In Psalm 104:2, the psalmist testified of the Lord who "covered himself" in light. In John 8:12 Jesus, the God-man, said, "I am the light of the world." Such expressions make at least two things abundantly clear. First, the origin of light rests with God. Second, in some sense God Himself is the very essence of light. Such statements do not suppose that God is light and nothing more, but they do stress that God is the ultimate source of all knowing and understanding. To this end Psalm 119:105 informs us that God's Word is a "light" to one's path. Here the emphasis lies upon perception and understanding gained when darkness is dispelled and light revealed.

This last concept becomes even clearer in John 3:19; people love darkness better than light, because their deeds are evil. Such statements reveal that the character of light is to reveal and to provide understanding and purity, while the opposite of light or darkness is designed to obscure, to deceive, and to harbor impurity.

A small problem confronts the interpreter who discovers that Jesus said to His disciples in Matthew 5:14, "Ye are the light of the world." Yet in John 8:12, Jesus said, "I am the light of the world." What appears to be a contradiction is not one at all. The moon provides light for the earth just as the sun does. Yet, the actual source of light for both the sun and the moon is the sun. The moon only reflects the light of the sun. By the same token, Jesus, the God-man, is the source of all light. His disciples become reflectors in a darkened world, transmitting through their lives the true light of the eternal Son of God. See Lamps, Lighting, Lampstand. W. A. Criswell

LIGHTNING A flash of light resulting from a discharge of static electricity in the atmosphere. In the Old Testament, lightning is always associated with God. God is the Maker of lightning and thunder (Job 28:26; Jer. 10:13) which reveal God's power and majesty (Pss. 77:18; 97:4). Lightning and thunder frequently accompany a revelation of God (the giving of the law, Ex. 19:16; 20:18; Ezekiel's first vision, Ezek. 1:13–14). In poetic language God's voice is identified with the thunder (Job 37:3–5). Lightning also appears as God's weapon in those passages in which God is portrayed as a warrior (arrows: 2 Sam. 22:15; Pss. 18:14; 77:17; 144:6; fire: Ps. 97:3; Job 36:32). The New Testament both continues Old Testament associations and adds new uses. The Book of Revelation develops the association with power and majesty (4:5; 11:19) and with weapons/judgment (8:5; 16:18). Lightning serves as an illustration for Christ's clearly visible coming (Matt. 24:26–27) and of Satan's (sudden, catastrophic, visible?) fall (Luke 10:18).

LIGHTS, FEAST OF See Feasts.

LIGN ALOES KJV transliteration of the Vulgate (official Latin translation) reading at Numbers 24:6 (lignum aloes=wood of aloes). NAS, NIV, NRSV simply read aloes. The REB reflects the KJV tradition with the reading "aloe trees". See Aloe.

LIGURE KJV term for a gem usually identified with the jacinth which was regarded as precious in ancient times (Ex. 28:19). See Minerals and Metals.

LIKENESS Quality or state of being like; resemblance. Old Testament passages center around two truths: (1) that God is wholly other and cannot be properly compared to any likeness (Isa. 40:18) and (2) that humanity is created in the image and likeness of God (Gen. 1:26). The first truth forms the basis for the prohibition of making any graven images (Ex 20:4; Deut. 4:16–18; see Idols) and perhaps explains Ezekiel's reluctance to speak of elements in his vision in concrete terms (Ezek. 1:5,10,16,22,26,28). The likeness of God in humanity (Gen. 1:26) has been interpreted variously. Likeness has sometimes been distinguished from image, though the terms are best regarded as synonyms. See Image of God. Interpreters have identified the divine likeness with the ability to think rationally, to form relationships with other humans and with God, or with the exercise of dominion over creation (cf. Ps. 8:5–8). The divine likeness is sometimes thought to have been lost in the Fall, though its passing to Seth (Gen. 5:3) argues against the popular form of this argument. Though the likeness of God was not lost with Adam's sin, neither Adam nor subsequent humanity fulfilled God's purpose. God's purpose for humanity was fulfilled in Jesus Christ who is in a unique sense the likeness of God (2 Cor. 4:4; compare John 1:14,18; 14:9; Heb. 1:3). Paul's statement that Christ came "in the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom. 8:3) parallels "born in the likeness of men" (Phil. 2:7), testifying that the incarnate Christ was truly human. The Christian life is characterized as a new creation in the likeness of God (Eph. 4:24; compare 2 Cor. 4:4).

LIKHI (Lĭk' hī) Personal name meaning "taken." Member of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:19).

LILY In biblical usage, any of a number of distinctive flowers ranging from the lotus of the Nile (1 Kings 7:19) to wild field flowers in Palestine (Matt. 6:28). The lily was the inspiration for the rim of the molten sea in the Temple in Jerusalem (1 Kings 7:26; compare 1 Kings 7:19,22). The Song of Solomon uses it to beautify the writer's description of love (2:1; 4:5). See Flowers in the Bible.

LILY BLOSSOM See Lily Work.

LILY OF THE COVENANT, LILY OF THE TESTIMONY Translation of the Hebrew shushan eduth

Mosaic of lilies at the Tabgha Church by the Sea of Galilee in Israel.

in the title of Psalm 60, taken as a reference to the hymn tune (NAS margin, NIV, NRSV, REB). KJV, RSV simply transliterate the Hebrew.

LILY WORK Decorative work capping the two free-standing columns flanking the entrance to Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 7:19,22). These columns were likely inspired by Egyptian columns with a lotus motif. The brim of the molten sea was perhaps also inspired by the shape of the lotus blossom (1 Kings 7:26). See Temple.

LIME A white, caustic solid consisting primarily of calcium oxide obtained by heating limestone or shells to a high temperature. Mixed with water, lime was used as a plaster (Deut. 27:2,4). Burning someone's bones to lime amounts to complete annihilation (Isa. 33:12) and was regarded as an especially heinous crime (Amos 2:1).

LINE (1) A tool used for measuring length or distance; (2) a plumb line; (3) a cord; (4) a row. Sometimes the distance to be measured is relatively short (1 Kings 7:23). Elsewhere the line serves as a surveying tool for measuring a larger distance (Ps. 16:6; Isa. 34:17; Jer. 31:39; Zech. 1:16; 2:1–2). The surveying image is applied both to contexts where judgment (Amos 7:17) and restoration (Jer. 31:39; Zech 1:16; 2:1) are in view. In contrast, references to a plumb line refer to judgment (2 Kings 21:13; Isa. 34:11; Lam. 2:8) upon those who failed to meet God's high standards (Isa. 28:17). Line is used in the sense of a cord in story of Rahab and the spies (Josh. 2:18,21). Line can also refer to a row (of men, 2 Sam. 8:2; of writing, Isa. 28:10,13).

LINEAGE KJV and RSV term (Luke 2:4) meaning descent (compare NRSV) or family (NAS). See Geneologies.

LINEAR MEASURES See Weights and Measures.

LINEN The most common fabric used in the Ancient Near East. It was spun from the flax plant and bleached before being woven into clothing, bedding, curtains, and burial shrouds. The tabernacle curtains (Ex. 26:1) and the high priest's garments (Ex. 28:6) were of "fine linen"—cloth woven so finely that it cannot be distinguished from silk without the aid of magnification.

LINTEL A wooden crossbeam over a doorway. The lintel is most prominent in the celebration of the Passover. The people of Israel were to sprinkle the blood of the sacrificial lamb on the lintel and the doorposts as a sign to the death angel. Every household which had blood on the lintel would be spared the death of the firstborn (Ex. 12:22–23).

LINUS (Lī′ nŭs) Personal name possibly meaning "linen." Paul's companion who sent greetings to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:21). Early church tradition identified him as the first bishop of the church at Rome, but it is doubtful Rome had only one bishop or pastor that early in its history.

LION See Animals.

Lion statue in the Faustina Baths at Miletus.

LIPS Fleshy, muscular folds surrounding the mouth. In the Old Testament, lips frequently take the character of the whole person. There are flattering and lying lips (Pss. 12:2; 31:18); joyful lips (Ps. 63:5); righteous lips (Prov. 16:13); fearful lips (Hab. 3:16). Uncircumcised lips (Ex. 6:12) most likely refer to stammering lips or lack of fluency in speech (Ex. 4:10). Mourning is expressed in part by covering the upper lip with one's hand (Lev. 13:45).

LITTER A covered and curtained couch with shafts so that it can be carried by porters (Song of Sol. 3:7 NRSV, REB; Isa. 66:20, KJV, NAS, NRSV). The term used at Isaiah 60:20 perhaps refers to covered wagons (NIV, REB). The NIV takes the term at Song of Solomon 3:7 in this sense as well (carriage).

LITTLE OWL Any species of owl other than the great owl; included in the unclean birds of Leviticus 11:17. See Birds.

LIVER The large organ which secretes bile. According to the NAS, the lobe of the liver was offered to God with the other choice parts of the burnt offering (Lev. 3:4,10,15). Only the covering of the liver was offered according to the NIV (also KJV). NRSV understood the offering to consist of the appendage to the liver, likely the pancreas. The ancients examined livers to discern the future. The only scriptural mention of the practice concerns the king of Babylon (Ezek. 21:21). In Lamentations 2:11, the liver is likely regarded as the seat of emotions (liver, KJV, NAS margin; heart, NAS, NIV, RSV; bile, NRSV). Several references to glory (Gen. 49:6; Pss. 16:9; 57:8) are possibly expansions of an earlier reading liver (glory, NAS; soul, RSV; spirit, REB; tongue, NIV).

LIVING BEINGS, LIVING CREATURES Characters in Ezekiel's first vision (Ezek. 1:5,13–15,19–20,22; also 3:13; 10). The creatures are later identified as cherubim (10:20). The creatures numbered four. Each had a human form but with four faces. Perhaps the best interpretation views the creatures as a pictorial representation of the total sovereignty of God. Four creatures represent the four corners of the earth. The four faces represent four classes of creation: man=humanity; lion=king of wild beasts; ox=king of domestic beasts; eagle=king of the birds. Central to this interpretation is the One seated on the throne above all the creatures (1:26–28). The Book of Revelation develops a similar image to portray God's total sovereignty (Rev. 4:7–8).

LIZARD See Animals; Bittern.

LOAF, LOAVES OF BREAD See Bread.

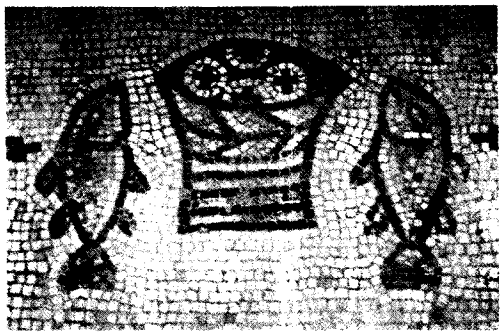
LO-AMMI (Lō-ăm′ mī) Symbolic personal name meaning "not my people." Son of Hosea the prophet whose name God gave to symbolize Israel's lost relationship with Him due to their sin and broken covenant (Hos. 1:9).

LOAN The grant of temporary use. Because of Israel's experience of deliverance from slavery, her moral code gave special care to marginal folk (Ex. 22:21–24; Deut. 10:19; Ps. 82:3–4; Prov. 31:8–9). Thus, loans were to be acts of generosity, not acts for profit at the poor's expense (Lev. 25:35–37). Furthermore because the earth was God's (Lev. 25:23; Deut. 10:14) and human possessions were gifts from God (Deut. 8:1–10), lending was sharing God's gifts.



Thus Old Testament forbade charging interest to fellow Israelites (Ex. 22:25; Lev. 25:35–38; Deut 23:19), for requesting loans indicated economic hardship. One might charge interest to sojourners (Deut. 23:20), though this arrangement was not meant to be exploitative (Ex. 22:21; Lev. 19:33–34; Deut. 10:19; Ezek. 22:7). Laws for collateral focused on protecting the debtor. The pledge must not threaten the debtor's dignity (Deut. 24:10–11), livelihood (Deut. 24:6), family (Job 24:1–3,9), or physical necessities (Ex. 22:26–27; Deut. 24:12–13). Compassionate lending was one measure of a righteous person (Ps. 15; Ezek. 18:5–9).

Years of release and the jubilee year (Ex. 23:10–11; Deut. 15:1–15; Lev. 25) provided a systematic means for addressing long-term economic hardship by returning family property, freeing slaves, and canceling debts. Deuteronomy 15:7–11 warns against scheming creditors who would refuse loans because a year of release was near; lending was to be an act of generosity (v. 10). As in most human communities, greed prevailed; and the prophets railed against the exploitation of the poor (e.g., Amos 2:6–8; 8:4), including violations of charging interest and abusing pledges (Ezek. 18:12–13; 22:12; Hab. 2:6–9; see Neh. 5:6–11). See Borrow, Borrowing; Coins; Ethics in the Bible; Jubilee, Year of; Justice; Law; Poor, Widows, Orphans, Levites; Sabbatical Year; Slavery; Stranger. David Nelson Duke

LOBE OF THE LIVER See Caul.

LOCK (1) A tuft, tress, or ringlet of hair; (2) a bolt used to secure a door. As a sign of their dedication to God, Nazarites were not permitted to cut their locks (Num. 6:5; Judg. 16:19). Priests were likewise prohibited from shaving their heads, though they could trim their hair (Ezek. 44:20). The Hebrew term which the KJV translated locks at Song of Solomon 4:1,3; 6:7; and Isaiah 47:2 is rendered veil by modern translations. In the Old Testament period, door locks were bolts with holes into which small iron or wooden pins would drop to secure the bolt (Neh. 3:3,6,13,15; Song of Sol. 5:5; compare Judg. 3:23–24). The bolt was generally seven to nine inches long for an interior door, fourteen inches to two feet for an outside door. The key had iron pegs corresponding to the position of the pins in the bolt and worked by forcing these pins up (Judg. 3:25).

Mosaic of loaves and fishes at the Tabgha church commemorating Jesus' feeding of the five thousand.

LOCUST (Lō' cŭst) An insect species of the order Orthoptera, family Acrididae. In the Middle East the locust periodically multiplies to astronomical numbers. As the swarm moves across the land, it devours all vegetation, high and low. The Hebrew Old Testament uses different words to describe the insect at its various stages of life, from egg to larvae to adult insect. Eaten in several ways (raw, boiled, roasted), the locust is an excellent source of protein (See Lev. 11:21–22, Mark 1:6).

The locust plague is used in the Bible as a symbol for what God's judgment will be like (Joel 2:1,11; Rev. 9:3,7; compare Ex. 10:3–20; Deut. 28:38). The image of the locust plague was also used to symbolize being overwhelmed by a large and powerful army (Judg. 6:5; Isa. 33:4; Jer. 46:23; 51:27; Joel 2:20; Nah. 3:15). Similar imagery is used in other Ancient Near Eastern literature.

LOD (Lōd) Place name of unknown meaning. Town later called Lydda eleven miles southeast of Joppa. Shemed or perhaps Elpaal of tribe of Benjamin is credited with building it (1 Chron. 8:12). Returning exiles settled there about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:33; Neh. 7:37; 11:35) at what appears as the westernmost postexilic settlement though probably outside the governing authority of Sanballat of Samaria and of Judah (Neh. 6:2). See Lydda.

LO-DEBAR (Lō-Dĕ bar) Place name variously spelled in Hebrew to mean "no word" or "to him a word" or "to speak." City which was home to Mephibosheth after his father Jonathan's death (2 Sam. 9:4,5) and to Machir who assisted David when he was fleeing Absalom (2 Sam. 17:27). The location of Lo-Debar is uncertain. The best suggestion is a city in Northern Transjordan near Mahanaim (2 Sam. 17:27), a city with well-established loyalties to the family of Saul (2 Sam. 2:8). Lo-Debar is perhaps identical with Debir in the territory of Gad (Josh 13:26). A less likely identification is Debir in the territory of Judah between Jerusalem and Jericho (Josh. 15:7).

The Hebrew text of Joshua 13:26 mentions the name of the city Lidebir near Mahanaim. This is usually translated "to Debir," but many see this as an alternate spelling of Lo-Debar. See Debir.

Lo-Debar is cryptically referred to in Amos 6:13. Prior to the delivery of this oracle, Lo-Debar and Karnaim had been recaptured by Jereboam II from the Arameans in a campaign blessed by God (2 Kings 14:25–28). Israel had taken the victory as an indication of its own strength and greatness, forgetting that God had brought them the victory. Amos took the consonants of the name Lo-Debar and added new vowels to make the name read "a thing of nought." Amos was reminding Israel that its true strength and greatness lie not in their military achievements but in God who had blessed their efforts; Amos was calling the Israelites back to faith in this God. Phil Logan LODGE In Biblical usage, a temporary resting place, for example, in a private home (Josh. 2:1; Acts 10:18), or a campground (Josh. 4:3,8; Isa. 10:29). The temporary stay might be prolonged as was the case of Paul in Rome (Acts 28:23,30). Jeremiah longed to escape to a wayfarer's desert lodge to avoid his people's sinfulness (Jer. 9:2). For the lodge in the cucumber field. See Hut.

LOFT KJV term for the upper room (NAS, NIV) or chamber (NRSV, compare REB) of a house (1 Kings 17:19). See Architecture; House; Upper Room.

LOG (1) A liquid measure (See Weights and Measures); (2) a section of a tree trunk. The Bible refers to splitting logs (Eccl. 10:9), to burning logs for cooking (Ezek. 24:10), and to felling logs to use in house construction (2 Kings 6:2,5). The timber which king Hiram of Tyre sent to Solomon was likely logs lashed together to form rafts (1 Kings 5:8–9). The "log" of Jesus' hyperbolic expression (Matt. 7:3–5; Luke 6:41–42) was a long, shaped piece of lumber (KJV, beam).

LOGIA (Lō gĭ' a) A Greek term applied to a collection of sayings. It comes from the same root as logos, a Greek word usually translated "word." (John 1:1,14; see Logos). The Church Fathers used "logia" to denote a collection of the sayings of Jesus. In his early Church history, Eusebius (about 260–about 340) quoted Papias (A.D. 100s) that Matthew compiled the "logia" in Hebrew. Apparently this is not the same as the Gospel of Matthew itself. Rather, the Hebrew logia were likely the sayings of Jesus contained in Matthew and Luke, but not in Mark.

Exactly when the "logia" might have achieved written form is a subject of debate. In addition to New Testament evidence, two modern discoveries show that "logia" existed in early Christian communities. Around 1900, remnants of an actual "logia" were unearthed near Oxyrhyncus, Egypt. Three papyrus fragments were found containing sayings ascribed to Jesus. They have been dated to the A.D. 200s, but are probably copies of an older collection. Each saying begins with "Jesus says." Some of them can be found in the Gospels, while others are known from the Church Fathers. In addition, two "logia" of a community with Gnostic tendencies were found in 1946 near Nag Hammadi, Egypt. Dating from between A.D. 300–400, they contain over 200 sayings attributed to Jesus.

L

The Gospels, as well as those New Testament sayings of Jesus found outside the Gospels (such as Acts 20:35), and the modern discoveries all demonstrate the early church's concern for preserving Jesus' sayings. The same concern can be seen today in our red-letter edition Bibles. See Gnosticism; Luke; Mark; Matthew; Nag Hammadi.

Larry McKinney

LOGOS (Lŏ′ gŏs) The Greek term ususally translated "word." In common usage it carried a variety of meanings: an account or reckoning, an argument, principle, reason, or thought. As an English suffix, it designates areas of study: theology, biology, physiology, psychology.

Among the Greek philosophers, especially the Stoics, logos came to mean the rational principle that gave order to the cosmos. It could therefore be equated with God. Human reason, in turn, derived from this universal logos. Philo of Alexandria used this concept in his efforts to interpret Jewish religion for those versed in Greek philosophy. In Philo's writings, logos was the mediating agency by which God created the world and by which revelation comes to God's people. The logos became a distinct entity, specifically the "word of God" active in creation and revelation.

In the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Old Testament, logos translates the word dabar, which could mean "word," "thing," or "event." In Hebrew thought, the dabar was dynamic and filled with a power that was transmitted to those who received it. The term was often used to designate God's communication to His people, as at the beginning of many of the writings of the prophets: "The word of the Lord came." The whole of the Law, or all of Scripture, could then be referred to as God's Word.

Toward the end of the Old Testament period Wisdom was increasingly personified as the Word of God that mediated between God and the world (see Prov. 8:22–31); Wisdom of Solomon 9:1–2). Wisdom (sophia) was preexistent, God's first creation, His instrument and agent in all the rest of creation. God became increasingly aloof in Jewish theology and dealt with His creation only through this subordinate being and through His angels.

In the New Testament logos is used both with common and with technical meanings. It is used for empty words (Eph. 5:6) and evil words (3 John 10), but it could also refer to the teachings of Jesus (Matt. 24:35). Jesus preached the word (Mark 2:2) or the word of God (Luke 5:1), and judgment would be determined by one's response to Jesus' words (Mark 8:38). The gospel, the message about Jesus, could then be called "the word" (1 Thess. 1:6; Luke 1:2; Titus 1:2–3) or "the word of God" (Acts 8:14; 1 Thess. 2:13). The word carries God's power to save (1 Cor. 1:18). Those who receive the word are called to be faithful to it (Titus 1:9) and to be "doers of the word" (Jas. 1:22).

In the Johannine writings Jesus himself is called the logos (John 1:1,14). Paul called Jesus the "wisdom of God" (1 Cor. 1:24) and spoke of His preexistence (Phil. 2:6; Col. 1:15–16); but only in the Johannine literature do we find the full development of an understanding of Jesus as the logos or wisdom of God that became incarnate. As the preexistent logos, the Son of God was the agent of creation. In contrast to earlier wisdom speculation, John affirmed that the logos was with God and was God. The logos was not created. Elsewhere in the Gospel of John, we find logos used with qualifiers such as "of God" (10:35), "of Jesus" (18:32), "my word" (8:43), or "his word" (8:55). Revelation 19:13 calls Jesus the "word of God," and 1 John 1:1 speaks of Him as "the word of life" (compare Heb. 1:2), but only in the prologue of the Gospel is logos used of Jesus in the absolute sense. Throughout John's Gospel Jesus spoke and acted as the incarnate logos, continuing God's creative and redemptive work. Hence, He could change water to wine, create eyes for a man born blind, and breathe the Spirit into His disciples (20:22).

John was probably dependent upon the developments in the use of logos that are evident in Jewish wisdom speculation and in Philo's writings, but John's distinctive contribution was the adoption of this concept to illuminate the identity and role of Jesus more fully. The Gospel of John declares that the logos of whom the philosophers and sages spoke had come in human form in Jesus of Nazareth. See Christ, Christology; Creation; Philo Judaeus; Prophets; Wisdom.

R. Alan Culpepper

LOINS The Hebrew and Greek terms refer to the hips and lower back. Loins are used in the literal sense of the body's midsection (Ex. 28:42; 2 Kings 1:8; Isa. 11:5; Jer. 13:1; Matt. 3:4). Tying up one's long, lower garments about one's waist or loins indicated readiness for travel (Ex. 12:11; 1 Kings 18:46; 2 Kings 9:1). In the New Testament, to gird up one's loins is used in the figurative sense of preparedness (Luke 12:35; Eph. 6:14; 1 Pet. 1:13). The Old Testament sometimes uses loins as the seat of physical strength (Nah. 2:1). Thus to make someone's loins shake or loosed is to render the person helpless (Ps. 69:23; Isa. 45:1). Scripture also uses the loins as a symbol of procreative powers (Gen. 35:11; 1 Kings 8:19; Acts 2:30; Heb. 7:5,10). Modern translations frequently hide the Hebrew expression "from his loins" behind the translation descendant.

LOIS (Lō′ ĭs) A personal name perhaps meaning "more desirable" or "better." The mother of Eunice and grandmother of Timothy (2 Tim. 1:5). Paul exalted Lois as a model of Christian faith and saw her as instrumental in nurturing her grandson in the faith. Her influence on Timothy cannot be overestimated.

LONG LOBE OF THE LIVER See Caul.

LONG-SUFFERING See Patience, Patient.

LOOKING GLASS KJV term for a (hand)mirror (Ex. 38:8). In biblical times mirrors were made of polished metal (molten mirror, Job. 37:18) which yielded a somewhat distorted image (1 Cor. 13:12). The women who ministered at the gate of the tabernacle donated their mirrors to be melted down for the bronze laver (Ex. 38:8). The KJV often refers to a mirror as a glass (Job 37:18; Isa. 3:23; 1 Cor. 13:12; Jas. 1:23). See Glass.

LOOM A frame used for interlacing sets of threads at right angles to form cloth. The weaving of cloth was an important industry in the ancient world. Thus it is surprising that there are so few references to the process in Scripture. In a humorous scene, Samson convinced Delilah that his strength would be sapped should someone weave his hair into a piece of cloth on a loom. While he slept, Delilah did just that but was surprised when he easily freed himself from the loom (Judg. 16:14). Here web refers to cloth on a loom. Isaiah compared his finished life with cloth which is cut off from the loom (Isa. 38:12). Job 7:6 compares the brevity of life to the speed of the weaver's shuttle, the devise used to quickly pass the woof thread between the threads of the warp. Frequent references to a spear like a weaver's beam (1 Sam. 17:7; 2 Sam. 21:19; 1 Chron. 11:23; 20:5) perhaps suggest a javelin with a cord attached so that it might be easily retrieved. In this case, the heddle rod, a rod attached to cords or wires and used to guide warp threads, is possibly in mind. Other interpreters prefer to see a reference to the great size of the spear. See Cloth, Clothing.

LOOPS The inner and outer coverings of the tabernacle were each made of two large curtains held together by 50 clasps which passed through curved sections of blue cord for the inner tent or of leather for the outer tent (Ex. 26:4–5,10–11; 36:11–12,17).

LORD (Lôrd) One who has power and exercises it responsibly. Lordship must include power to exercise control as well as possession of power within the boundaries of a well-defined system such as law. A despot is only a caricature of the legal term "Lord" or "ruler."

Humans as Lord The Hebrew word adon, "lord," is used more than 300 times in the Old Testament for a human's rule over another person. This is to be distinguished from baal (also "lord") in that adon represents a personal relationship of the subjection of one person to another, while baal designates the owner of things, including slaves and women. See Baal. At times persons would address someone of equal social status as "lord" out of respect

In the New Testament the Greek word kurios can designate both one who exercises rule over persons as well as the owner of goods. It is also used in respectful address to a father (Matt. 21:29–30) or to a ruler (Acts 25:26). In the era of the Roman caesars, the title kurios symbolized the caesar's position as absolute monarch. It did not mean that the caesar was a god. Kurios was not used in the cults devoted to the worship of the caesars. When the early Christians confessed Jesus as Lord, they protested against the religious claims of the state but not against the rulership of the caesar as such. On the other hand, the Jewish rebels denied the political authority of the caesar. Being exempt from the cult of the caesar, Jews could easily call the caesar, "lord." Christians had to dispute the caesar's claim to be lord when that claim was understood to mean the caesar was divine. See Emperor Worship.

God the Lord Nations around Israel often called their gods, "lord." We need to distinguish between the Near Eastern and Greek religions. At first the Greeks did not see themselves in a slave/lord relationship with their gods because they did not believe their gods were responsible for their creation. They could, indeed, call the gods "lord," but that was not characteristic. Instead, both they and their gods were subject to the same higher power—that is, fate. Thus the Greeks felt no personal responsibility before the gods. The divine manifested itself much more in the political governing structures. In the democracy the divine manifested itself in the law which the citizens served. In the monarchy the divine was embodied in the ruler; and, in the worship of the ruler the law (which lived in all citizens of Greece) was honored.

In the Near East the gods were lords of fate. Humans were thus responsible to the gods. Many gods were called "lord." Marduk, the national god of Babylon, was called Bel, another form of Baal (Isa. 46:1; Jer. 50:2; 51:44). From among humans, the king towered above and beyond all others. The god had transferred the administration of divine law to the king.

In the Old Testament, Lord usually describes the essence of Yahweh: His power over His people (Ex. 34:23; Isa. 1:24), over the entire earth (Josh.

3:13; Mic. 4:13), and over all gods (Deut. 10:17; Ps. 135:5). Thus adon could stand parallel to the personal name of God, Yahweh (Ex. 15:17): Yahweh is Lord; the Lord is Yahweh. Additional terms such as Sabbaoth (that is, Supreme Head and Commander of all the heavenly forces) underscored the absolute lordship of Yahweh (Isa. 3:1; 10:16,33). Many times adon or the special form adonai was used in direct address to God (439 times), attesting to the honor of God or His representative (2 Sam. 7:18–22,28–29; Josh. 5:14; Zech. 4:4). In time a formal designation, adonai jahweh ("the Lord Yahweh"), developed. This corresponded to the uniqueness of Yahweh; and, finally, Yahweh was referred to as adonai alone, especially in Isaiah, Psalms, and Lamentations. Israelites formed personal names with adonai (Adonijah, Adoniram) just as did their neighbors (Adoni-zedek, Josh. 10:1–3), since these peoples also addressed their gods as "lord."

The designation of Yahweh as adonai led to varied forms of conflict with Baal and his worshipers during the history of Israel: for example, prior to the conquest (Num. 25); during the time of the Judges (6:25–32); during the monarchy (1 Kings 18; 22:54; 2 Kings 3:2; 10:18–28). Even in Judah, worship of Baal proved a danger (2 Kings 11:18; 21:1–5). King Josiah's reform finally ended the conflict with Baal by destroying the worship places outside Jerusalem (2 Kings 23). The prophets Hosea, Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and Ezekiel spoke out against the hidden "Baalizing" of the religion of Yahweh. They claimed Israel went to worship Yahweh but did it in such a way they were actually worshiping Baal without naming his name. Yahweh was the supreme Lord over the world; but Baal's worshipers saw Baal as lord of at least a part of the world. He appeared and disappeared with the vegetation, being humiliated and defeated by other gods, even becoming weak, sick, and dying. See Gods, Pagan. These competing understandings could only mean alternatives and opposition. The revelation of God in the Old Testament, however, speaks against any such alternative or opposition, for Yahweh alone is Lord. He is Lord in His historical acts. Humans have no power over Him. He is Lord in His directions for life. Humans are to obey Him totally. He is the Lord who reveals Himself in His covenant, His law, and His faithfulness.

About 300 B.C. adonai became more frequently used than Yahweh. Thus the Books of Esther, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Solomon do not use the name Yahweh. The title "Lord" (adonai) was no longer an adjective modifying the divine name but was a substitute for the divine name: Yahweh. Origen reported that when Jews read the divine name Yahweh, they would pronounce it adonai, while non-Jews would pronounce it kurios.

In the Greek translation of the Old Testament (Septuagint), written before the time of Christ, "Yahweh" was written in Hebrew characters. In the Dead Sea Scrolls, the scribes out of awe for the divine name wrote it in ancient Hebrew script rather than their normal script. Later, Christian scribes replaced the Hebrew characters in the Greek Bible with kurios. Scribes transmitting the Hebrew Bible showed that Yahweh should not be pronounced but read as adonai by substituting the Hebrew vowels of adonai for those of Yahweh when writing the divine name. See Kere-Kethib. Later readers who did not know this history did not pronounce Yahweh; but neither did they pronounce adonai, as the scribes intended. Rather in the Middle Ages readers of the Hebrew Bible began pronouncing precisely what was written, the mixture of consonants from Yahweh and vowels from adonai, producing the pronunciation of Jehovah, a word that never existed for speakers of classic Hebrew.

In the majority of the books of the New Testament, also, Yahweh, or God was called Lord. That occurs above all in quotations from the Old Testament and in translating terms such as "angel," "way," "word," "day," "name," or "hand" of the Lord. In important passages kurios (Lord) appears in the sense of the Old Testament adonai as Creator of the world and Director of history (Matt. 9:38; 11:25; Acts 17:24; 1 Tim. 6:15; Book of Revelation). In this way Christians preserved and continued the Jewish understanding of God. Since the New Testament and early Christians also called Jesus "Lord," we have difficulty many times determining whether Jesus or God is meant by "Lord" (Matt. 24:42; Mark 5:19–20; Luke 1:76; Acts 10:14).

Jesus is Lord The two words Kurios Jesous composed the first Christian confession of faith (1 Cor. 12:3; Rom. 10:9). The decisive reason for transferring the divine title Lord to Jesus was His resurrection from the dead.

Before His resurrection, Jesus was addressed with the Jewish title of honor Rabbi ("teacher", Mark 9:5; 11:21, for example). Luke always, and Matthew usually, translated this title into Greek as kurios (Lord). According to Mark only once did a non-Jew address Jesus as Lord (Mark 7:28), but even that was simply a polite and courteous way of speaking (equivalent to our "sir"). Jesus was also addressed with the Aramaic mari ("lord", John 13:13). The resurrection changed the respectful student/teacher relationship of the disciples with Jesus into the believers' servant/Lord relationship. The designation of Jesus as Lord in the Gospels (esp. in Luke) is an indication of this shift in relationship. Paul said that God honored Jesus with the title of Lord as His response to Jesus' obedient suffering (Phil. 2:6–11). Jesus in the form of a Servant is the humbled One with the marks of the cross, before whom the entire world will bow down. Thus the Crucified One will experience an act of homage like that due God Himself (Isa. 45:23–24). His church already gives Him such homage. He has been seated at the right hand of God, which demonstrates the elevation of Jesus to the position of Ruler next to God Himself (Ps. 110:1; see Mark 12:35–37). Still, the New Testament does not go so far as to identify Jesus with God by calling Him, "abba" (that is, father; see Abba).

Jesus as the Messiah of Israel (Acts 2:36) was installed as Head of His church and Ruler of the cosmos by His resurrection (Col. 1:17; 2:6,10; Eph. 1:20–23). As such, the church prays for His return: "Come, our Lord" (or in Aramaic, maranatha, 1 Cor. 16:22; 11:26; Rev. 22:20). The cosmic lordship of Jesus still remains the lordship of God. Jesus will give the judged and redeemed world back to the Father (1 Cor. 15:28). The center of this lordship is the power of administration over all things human (Rom. 14:9).

The lordship of Jesus has ethical consequences. He makes the significance of all other powers of only relative importance (1 Cor. 8:5–6; Col. 2:15). The Christian believer is foundationally freed from being servant to any thing or person in the human world (1 Cor. 7:22–23). The believer devotes self to serve others, even the ones in power, as his or her lord in voluntary service (Mark 10:42–45). Speaking the word Lord or calling out to Jesus with the title "Lord" is not enough for salvation. Such calling must be accompanied by actions which correspond to the teachings of the resurrected, Crucified One and to His example (Matt. 7:21–22; John 13:14–15).

Already in Acts, "Lord" had become something like a summary of the Christian message. This expresses itself in a growing, more extensive formulation of the name of Jesus: "Lord Jesus," "the Lord Jesus," "the Lord Jesus Christ." In the introductions and conclusions of Paul's Epistles—as well as at significant places of the logical argument of the Epistles—the name is expressed in especially extensive formulations (Rom. 5:1; 8:39; 15:30; 1 Cor. 15:57). The objective fact of the lordship of Christ is supplemented by the subjective element of personal bonds to Christ through the possessive pronoun: "My/our Lord Jesus Christ." The "our" in "our Lord" includes all Christians; "your Lord" does not occur in the New Testament. Jesus Christ either joins people together, or He separates them, when they deny His right to be Lord (Rom. 16:18; 1 Cor. 1:2,10–13). The personal bond or union with Jesus and with one another is especially emphasized in the formula "in the Lord" or "in Christ." Here it is evident that Lord and Christ are, in the final analysis, interchangeable (1 Cor. 7:22; 2 Cor. 4:5). The Lord is Jesus, through whom God intervened in the activities of the world in order to bring salvation.

How can humans be convinced that the crucified Jesus from Nazareth is the Lord—that is, that in Him God acted in the way that the Bible says and in the way that the world needs? How can people be convinced that He is the Messiah of Israel and the Lord of all people, who comes near to all people as Friend and Brother? How does the Lord of the cosmos become our personal Lord in His church? This happens through the Holy Spirit. God has fully empowered the resurrected Jesus to send out this Spirit (Acts 2:33). Indeed, Paul could say that the Lord is the Spirit (1 Cor. 15:45; 2 Cor. 3:17). This does not signify a total identifying of Jesus with the Spirit of God (compare 2 Cor. 13:13), but it testifies to the inseparable unity of the lordship of God with the sending of Jesus and with the work of the Spirit. See Christ; God; Holy Spirit; Messiah; Jesus; Rabbi; Resurrection.

Christian Wolf

LORD IS MY BANNER, THE See Jehovah-Nissi.

LORD IS PEACE, THE See Jehovah-shalom.

LORD IS SHALOM, THE See Jehovah-shalom.

LORD IS THERE, THE See Jehovah-shamma.

LORD WILL PROVIDE, THE See Jehovah-jireh.

LORD'S DAY A designation for Sunday, the first day of the week, used only once in the New Testament (Rev. 1:10). The Greek word for "Lord's," however, is precisely the same as that used in the term for "Lord's Supper" (1 Cor. 11:20). In fact, the Didache, an early Christian manual for worship and instruction, links the two terms together, indicating that the Lord's Supper was observed each Lord's Day (14:1). Herein may lie the origin of the term. Because the first day of the week was the day on which the early Christians celebrated Lord's Supper, it became known as Lord's Day, the distinctively Christian day of worship.

The earliest account of a first-day worship experience is found in Acts 20:7–12. Here Paul joined the Christians of Troas on the evening of the first day of the week for the breaking of bread (probably a reference to the Lord's Supper). The actual day is somewhat uncertain. Evening of the first day could refer to Saturday evening (by Jewish reckoning) or to Sunday evening (by Roman reckoning). Since the incident involved Gentiles on Gentile soil, however, the probable reference is to Sunday night.

The importance of Sunday to first-century Christians is also intimated in 1 Corinthians 16:1–2. Giving instructions about a special relief offering he wanted to take to the Christians in Jerusalem, Paul suggested that the Corinthians should set aside their weekly contributions on the first day of the week. Paul probably mentioned this day because he knew that his readers routinely assembled on that day for worship and that would be the logical time for them to set aside their offering.

Two other second-century documents also shed light on the significance of Lord's Day for the early church. First, Ignatius in his Epistle to the Magnesians (about A.D. 110–117) stressed the importance of Lord's Day by contrasting the worship done on that day with that formerly observed on the Sabbath (9:1). Second, Justin Martyr (about A.D. 150) wrote the first extant Christian description of a worship service. He noted that the early Sunday morning service began with baptism, included Scripture readings, expository preaching, and prayer, and then concluded with the observance of the Lord's Supper (Apology 65–67).

First and second century Christian documents indicate that Sunday quickly became the standard day for Christian worship, but they do not explain how or why this change from Sabbath to Lord's Day came about. The most obvious reason, of course, was the resurrection of Jesus which took place on that first Lord's Day. Since the earliest collective experiences of the disciples with the risen Lord took place on Easter Sunday evening (Luke 24:36–49; John 20:19–23), one might naturally expect the disciples to gather at that same hour on subsequent Sundays to remember Him in the observance of the Supper. This pattern, perhaps, is reflected in the service at Troas in Acts 20.

The change in the time of worship from evening to morning, though, probably came about because of practical necessity. Writing to the emperor Trajan at the beginning of the second century, Pliny the Younger, governor of Bithynia, reported that in compliance with Trajan's edict against seditious assemblies, he had ordered that no group, including the Christians, could meet at night. Pliny then described an early morning service of the Christians. Forbidden to meet at night, they met for the observance of the Supper at the only other hour available to them on the first day of the week: early in the morning before they went to work. It is likely that the practice then spread throughout the empire wherever similar regulations against evening worship were in force.

Although some Jewish Christians probably also observed the sabbath, the early Christians saw Sunday as a day of joy and celebration, not a substitute for the sabbath. The use of the term "sabbath" to refer to Sunday did not become common until the English Puritans began to do so after A.D. 1500. Evidence from the early centuries clearly shows that Christians regarded Sunday as a day to rejoice in the new life brought by the resurrection. On other days Christians might fast and kneel when praying, but the joyous character of the Lord's day made those actions inappropriate on Sundays. Soon after Christianity became the religion of the Roman Empire. Sunday was officially declared a day of rest. See Didache; Lord's Supper; Sabbath; Worship.

Fred A. Grissom and Naymond Keathley

LORD'S PRAYER, THE Words Jesus used to teach His followers to pray. Three forms of the Lord's Prayer exist in early Christian literature—two in the New Testament (Matt. 6:9–13; Luke 11:2–4) and the other in the Didache 8:2, a noncanonical Christian writing of the early second-century from northern Syria. See Didache. Their similarities and differences may be seen if the three forms are set side-by-side.

Matthew	Luke	Didache
Our Father who art in heaven:	Father:	Our Father who art in heaven:
Hallowed be thy name;	Hallowed be thy name;	Hallowed be thy name;
Thy kingdom come;	Thy kingdom come;	Thy kingdom come;
Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.		Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our bread for the morrow;	Give us each day our bread for the morrow;	Give us this day our bread for the morrow
And forgive us our debts as we also have forgiven our debtors;	And forgive us our sins for we ourselves forgive every one who is indebted to us;	And forgive us our debt as we also forgive our debtors;
And cause us to go not into temptation, But deliver us from evil.	And cause us to go not into temptation.	And cause us to go not into temptation, But deliver us from evil For thine is the power and the glory for ever.

Three conclusions derive from such comparison. First, it is the same prayer in all three cases. Second, the Didache likely uses the form of the prayer found in Matthew. Third, Matthew's version is longer than that of Luke at three points: at the end of the address to God, at the end of the petitions related to God, and at the end of the petitions related to humans. Also, study of the Greek manuscripts shows that the doxology that appears at the end of the Matthean form in some translations is not original; the earliest form of the prayer with a doxology is Didache 8:2. It is likely that each Evangelist gave the prayer as it was generally used in his own church at the time.

Matthew and Luke used the Lord's Prayer in different ways in their Gospels. In Matthew the prayer appears in the Sermon on the Mount where Jesus spoke about a righteousness that exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees (5:20). It is located in a section that warns against practicing one's piety before men in order to be seen by them (6:1–18). Almsgiving, praying, and fasting are for God's eyes and ears. When praying one should not make a public display (6:5–6) nor heap up empty phrases, thinking that one will be heard for many words (6:7). Prayer should be private and brief. The Lord's Prayer serves as an example of how to pray briefly. It is seen as a substitute for the wrong kind of prayer.

In Luke the prayer comes in the midst of Jesus' journey to Jerusalem (9:51—19:46). In His behavior Jesus is an example of one who prays. His prayer life caused one of His disciples to ask for instruction in prayer, as John the Baptist had given his disciples. What follows (11:2–13) is a teaching on prayer in which the disciples are told what to pray for (11:2–4) and why to pray (11:5–13). Here the Lord's Prayer is a model of what to pray for. To pray in this way is a distinguishing mark of Jesus' disciples.

Although all three versions of the prayer exist only in Greek the thought pattern and expressions are Jewish. In the address, God is designated "Father" or "Our Father who who art in heaven." One Jewish prayer begins: "Forgive us, Our Father" (Eighteen Benedictions, 6). Rabbi Akiba (about A.D. 130) said: "Happy are you Israelites! Before whom are you purified, and who purifies you? Your Father in heaven" (Mishnah, Yoma, 8:9). The Ahaba Rabba (Great Love) prayer, which formed part or the morning worship in the Jerusalem Temple, began: "With great love hast thou loved us, O Lord, our God, with great and exceed ingly great forbearance hast thou ruled over us Our Father, our King, be gracious to us."

Three of the many languages of the Lord's Prayer in tile at the Church of the Lord's Prayer, Jerusalem.

The "Thou-petitions" are likewise Jewish in their thought and expression. The first two, "Hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come," echo the language of the Jewish prayer, the Kaddish. It begins: "Magnified and hallowed be his great name in the world . . . And may he establish his kingdom in your lifetime and in your days . . . quickly and soon." The third, "Your will be done," is similar to a prayer of Rabbi Eliezer (about A.D. 100): "Do thy will in heaven above and give peace to those who fear thee below" (Babylonian Talmud, Berakoth, 29b).

The "Us-petitions" are also Jewish in their idiom. The first, "Give us our bread," is akin to the first benediction of grace at mealtime. "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, king of the universe, who feedest the whole world with thy goodness . . . ; thou givest food to all flesh. . . . Through thy goodness food hath never failed us: O may it not fail us for ever and ever." The second, "Forgive us," echoes the Eighteen Benedictions, 6: "Forgive us, our Father, for we have sinned against thee; blot out our transgressions from before thine eyes. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who forgivest much." The accompanying phrase, "as we also have forgiven," reflects the Jewish teaching found in Sirach 28:2: "Forgive the wrong of your neighbor, and then your sins will be forgiven when you pray." The third petition, "Cause us to go not into temptation," is similar to a petition in the Jewish Morning and Evening Prayers. "Cause me to go not into the hands of sin, and not into the hands of transgression, and not into the hands of temptation, and not into the hand of dishonor."

